Domitzki v. American Linseed Co., 221 Ill. 161, 77 N. E. 428.

Time of objection.[66]—An objection to the status of the plaintiff must be raised by the pleadings and comes too late on the trial.[67] An objection that an instruction is oral must be made at the time the instruction is given.[68] An objection that matters treated as in issue were admitted comes too late after verdict.[69] Objections to arguments and remarks of counsel should be taken when the cause of objection arises.[70] Objections to the verdict should be taken when it is announced.[71] An objection to failure to follow the statutory course of procedure comes too late on a motion for a new trial.[72] Allowance of master's fees may be objected to after his report is allowed.[73]

Objections to evidence should be made when the evidence is offered,[74] and a ground of objection not urged at such time will not be considered.[75] So also, an objection to a question must be made before it is answered,[76] but when the question is unobjectionable and the objection to the answer is that it is unresponsive, an objection immediately after the answer is in time.[77] A motion to strike[78] may be made when the objection to the evidence first appears,[79] and if not made at this time it is too late.[80] The time of objection to depositions is sometimes controlled by statute.[81] Objection to the sufficiency of evidence comes too late on a motion for new trial.[82] Question as to the timeliness of an objection should be raised when the objection is made.[83] A request for peremptory instruction for the defendant may be made either at the close of plaintiff's evidence or at close of all the evidence.[84]

A motion for a new trial is ineffective to save questions where it is not filed in proper time.[85]

§ 5. Necessity of motion or request. In general.[86]—Errors correctible on motion below are not reviewable where no such motion was made,[87] and a motion or request is often necessary to invoke the action of the court so as to predicate error upon its failure to act.[88] Motion to open a default is a prerequisite to the consideration of the correctness of the default judgment.[89]

Motion for judgment or nonsuit, or direction of verdict.[90]—Where the plaintiff upon failure to make out his case fails to ask for a nonsuit, he cannot complain of a directed verdict against him.[91] A motion, a nonsuit, or for a directed verdict, is necessary to save any question as to the sufficiency of the evidence.[92]

Motion to strike out.[93]—A motion to strike[94] is necessary where evidence has been admitted without objection,[95] or where the grounds of objection do not appear until the evidence is in,[96] or even in some cases where the question has been objected to.[97] An objection to remarks of counsel must be followed by a motion to strike them out or to arrest the trial.[98]

Motion for new trial.[99]—Lack of uniformity in the practice in the several states precludes the formulation of any general doctrine as to the necessity of a new Atchison, etc., R. Co. [Kan.] 88 P. 54. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 306, defining "new trial," a motion for a new trial is not necessary unless an issue of fact has been fully determined by the verdict of a jury or its equivalent (Wagner v. Atchison, etc., R. Co. [Kan.] 85 P. 299), and hence such motion is not a prerequisite to the review of a decision sustaining a motion for judgment on the pleadings and plaintiff's opening statement (Id.) and sustaining an objection to the introduction of any evidence in the case (Id.). Gruble v. Ryus, 23 Kan. 195, and other cases disapproved. Id.

Michigan: Necessary as to sufficiency of evidence. Clarke v. Case, 144 Mich. 148, 13 Det. Leg. N. 193, 107 N. W. 893.

Missouri: Necessary as to granting change of venue. Coffey v. Carthage [Mo.] 98 S. W. 562. Not necessary as to ruling on demurrer. Crow v. Reliable Jewelry Co., 116 Mo. App. 124, 92 S. W. 742; Cape Girardeau & C. R. Co. v. Wingerter [Mo. App.] 101 S. W. 1113.

Nebraska: The necessity of a motion for a new trial was not dispensed with by Laws 1905, p. 657, c. 174. Carmack v. Erdenberger [Neb.] 110 N. W. 315. Necessary as to sufficiency of evidence. Kafka v. Union Stock Yards Co. [Neb.] 110 N. W. 672. Necessary as to refusal to strike averments from pleadings. Caproon v. Mitchell [Neb.] 110 N. W. 378. Not necessary where judgment is rendered on pleadings alone. First Nat. Bank v. Sutton Mercantile Co. [Neb.] 110 N. W. 306.

New Hampshire: Necessary as to inconsistency of verdicts in favor of one defendant and against the other. Hewett v. Woman's Hospital Aid Ass'n, 73 N. H. 556, 64 A. 190.

New Mexico: Unless motion for new trial is made in a jury case, no question proper to be presented to the lower court thereby can be reviewed on appeal. Henry v. Lincoln Lucky & Lee Min. Co. [N. M.] 85 P. 1043.

New York: Necessary as to sufficiency of evidence. Prager v. Schafuss, 99 N. Y. S. 840.

Rhode Island: Not necessary to review order granting nonsuit for insufficiency of evidence. Kebabian v. Adams Exp. Co., 27 R. I. 564, 65 A. 271.

South Dakota: Necessary as to findings of the motion is required, the grounds of objection [2] must be specifically stated therein,[3] and must be consistent.[4]

Request for instructions.[5]—As a general rule error cannot be predicated upon failure to give instructions in the absence of a request therefor.[6] This rule is peculiarly applicable to errors of omissions in the instructions given,[7] even when the referee. Nelson v. Lybeck [S. D.] 111 N. W. 546.

South Carolina: Necessary to save question as to general verdict in favor of all defendants though one had defaulted and his liability was admitted. Dantzler v. Cox [S. C.] 55 S. E. 774.

Tennessee: Assignments of error not specified as ground for motion for new trial as required by rule of lower court will not be considered on appeal. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Hatch [Tenn.] 94 S. W. 671. Necessary to review of giving of peremptory instruction. Seymour v. Southern R. Co. [Tenn.] 98 S. W. 174.

Texas: Not necessary to review of exclusion of evidence. McFadden v. Missouri, etc., R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 952, 92 S. W. 989. Not necessary to review of question as to instructions. Id. Not necessary where the case is tried before the court without a jury, and the judgment is excepted to. Foote & Co. v. Heisig [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 7, 94 S. W. 362. Not necessary in order to save the objection that the judgment does not conform to the verdict. Letot v. Peacock [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 345, 94 S. W. 1121. Assignments of error may be considered on appeal though embraced only in an amended motion for a new trial, filed more than two days after judgment, allowance of amendment being discretionary with court. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Green [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 133, 95 S. W. 694. Necessary to support assignment of error attacking a verdict on ground that certain essential fact was not proved. Riske v. Rotan Grocery Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 392, 93 S. W. 708. Necessary to raise objection that verdict was against weight of evidence and that it disclosed that jury was actuated by prejudice against appellant because he was negro. Friar v. Orange & N. W. R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 101 S. W. 274.

Wyoming: Necessary to review of any reason for new trial, though case tried by court. Rev. St. 1899, § 3748, as amended by Laws 1901, p. 69, c. 66, § 1. See, also, supreme court rule 13 [26 P. xii]. Todd v. Peterson, 13 Wyo. 513, 81 P. 878.

2. A specification of error that the verdict is contrary to the instructions presents nothing for review on appeal. Hogg v. Gammon [Ga.] 56 S. E. 404. See, also, Bowden v. Bowden, 125 Ga. 107, 53 S. E. 606.

3. Henley v. Brockman, 124 Ga. 1059, 53 S. E. 672. Ground of motion for new trial on account of admission of evidence must show what objection was urged at time evidence was admitted. Bowden v. Bowden, 125 Ga. 107, 53 S. E. 606. Assignment of error to fragmentary portion of a single sentence of charge held insufficient. Holland v. Williams, 126 Ga. 617, 55 S. E. 1023. That court erred in glving certain instruction described by number, insufficient where there is no such number. Kelly v. Wing Yung Benev. Ass'n, 2 Cal. App. 460, 84 P. 321. An assignment as a ground that court erred in giving instructions numbered from 1 to 15 "asked by respondents and given at their request" was sufficient assignment to giving instructions from 1 to 15 asked by respondent as modified by court, there being no other to which it could refer. Chicago & S. L. R. Co. v. Mines, 221 Ill. 448, 77 N. E. 898. That verdict is "contrary to law" is too general. Deitz v. Lensinger, 77 Ark. 274, 91 S. W. 755. Mistake in copying verdict into judgment not raised by specification that judgment was contrary to verdict and not supported thereby. Moore v. Woodson [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 116. Where the jury renders a general verdict with special findings, an assignment of error for a new trial that the evidence was contrary to law only preserves the question whether the evidence supports th verdict, and the court cannot consider the facts specialiy found. Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. v. Pritchard [Ind.] 79 N. E. 508. Assignment that the "judgment" is not sustained by sufficient evidence does not come within Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 568, providing that a new trial may be granted where "verdict or decision" is not sustained by sufficient evidence. Polk v. Johnson [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 1139. Insufficiency in specifications of insufficiency of evidence to sustain new trial will not prevent the question from being reviewed on appeal where such question is raised by exceptions to admission of evidence and to ruling denying motion for nonsuit. Southern Pac. R. Co. v. Lipman, 148 Cal. 480, 83 P. 445.

4. On exception to refusal to grant new trial on ground that verdict is without evidence to support it, that it is against the weight of the evidence and that it is excessive, only first ground will be considered. Sutton v. Catawba Power Co. [S. C.] 56 S. E. 966.

5. See 6 C. L. 1402.

6. Thomas v. Stickler, 29 Ky. L. R. 351, 93 S. W. 648; Packham v. Glendmeyer, 103 Md. 416, 63 A. 1048. Court need not instruct of its own motion, though one party asks no instructions and all asked by the other party were refused. Osgood v. Skinner, 111 Ill. App. 607. Error in refusing special instructions can not be considered where they do not purport on their face to have been asked by appellants or their counsel and are not signed by either and it does not otherwise appear that they were requested. Selman v. Gulf, etc., R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 101 S. W. 1030.

tion. But the failure to request instructions will not waive objection on account of substantive error in instructions given by the court's own motion,[13] or at the instance of the other party.[14]

Request for findings.[15]—Error cannot be predicated upon failure to make findings of fact when none were requested,[16] and the scope of review may otherwise be limited by the absence of findings or a request therefor.[17] So, also, on a trial by the court without a jury, a request for findings of law is necessary to save questions of law.[18] It is even held that voluntary findings may be ignored.[19] A proposition of law must be confined to questions of law exclusively and exclude all questions of fact.[20]

§ 6. Necessity of ruling.[21]—Questions not ruled on in the trial court will not be considered on appeal.[22] The ruling, furthermore, must be definite and positive.[23] A ruling on a former trial is insufficient.[24]

Where no declarations of law are asked or given, it will be presumed that the judgment was based on that theory of the case which authorized it. Farmers' Bank v. Barbee, 198 Mo. 465, 95 S. W. 225. Under Prac. Act, § 42 (Hurd's Rev. St. 1903, p. 1405, c. 110), where a case is tried before the court, questions of law not arising from rulings can only be preserved and presented to the supreme court by submission of written propositions of law, and the statute is applicable though the case is tried on an agreed statement of facts. Mutual Protective League v. McKee, 223 Ill. 364, 79 N. E. 25.

19. The trial court is not required to file conclusions of law and fact under Rev. St. 1895, art. 1333, unless requested, and if he voluntarily files them no assignments or exceptions are necessary to authorize an attack of the judgment for want of evidence. City of Houston v. Giving or refusal of special interrogatories must be excepted to. Bartz v. Chicago City R. Co., 116 Ill. App. 554.

Report of referee or master. Huntress v. Hanley [Mass.] 80 N. E. 946; Brown v. Rogers [S. C.] 56 S. E. 680; My Laundry Co. v. Schmeling [Wis.] 109 N. W. 540. Where a question of law is not excepted to before the assessor so as to be disclosed by his report, it cannot be considered on appeal. Hart v. Brierly [Mass.] 78 N. E. 307. Objection that referee was not authorized to report findings of fact held waived where trial before him was on theory that he was so authorized and no exception was filed in court. Mogenson v. Zubler [Colo.] 84 P. 981. On appeal only such questions will be considered as were presented by exceptions to report of master. Hutchinson v. Spoehr, 221 Ill. 312, 77 N. E. 580. Order allowing amendment of exceptions to an auditor's report after expiration of time for filing exceptions. Moss v. Chappell, 126 Ga. 196, 54 S. E. 968.

Findings of fact. Ironton Cross Tie Co. v. Evans [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 716, 109 N. W. 254; Hoeschler v. Bascom [Wash.] 87 P. 943; Bybee v. Bybee [Wash.] 87 P. 1122. In actions at law. Snuffer v. Karr, 197 Mo. 182, 94 S. W. 983. Where defendants did not except to overruling of their exceptions to court's findings nor make any point thereon in motion for new trial. Farmers' Bank of Polo v. Barbee, 198 Mo. 465, 95 S. W. 225. Direction of verdict. Banton v. Herrick, 101 Me. 134, 63 A. 671; Roberts, Johnson & Rand Shoe Co. v. Westinghouse Elec. & Mfg. Co. [C. C. A.] 143 F. 218. Refusal to direct verdict. Bills v. Stevens Co. [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 868, 109 N. W. 1059.

28. Form of verdict. Poston v. Ingraham [S. C.] 56 S. E. 780. An exception to the judgment entered is necessary where the cause was tried without a jury and error is not apparent on face of record as made up. Coppenbarger v. Scroggins & Co., 123 Ill. App. 599. There being no exception to the judgment, the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain it could not be considered. Spears v. Pechstein [Colo.] 84 P. 979. Refusal of plaintiff's motion for judgment on pleadings. Sartor v. Wells [Colo.] 89 P. 797. Under Code Pub. Gen. Laws, art. 5, § 36, the court must decree in accordance with the proof in absence of exceptions filed, and an objection that decree is not in accordance with prayer is unavailable. Gerting v. Wells, 103 Md. 624, 64 A. 298, 433. Refusal of new trial. Bills v. Stevens Co. [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 868, 109 N. W. 1059; Culver v. South Haven & E. R. Co., 144 Mich. 254, 13 Det. Leg. N. 185, 107 N. W. 908; Ginn v. Clark Coal Co., 143 Mich. 84, 12 Det. Leg. N. 1012, 106 N. W. 867; Hoodless v. Jernigan [Fla.] 41 So. 194. Failure to except to the overruling of a motion for a new trial is a waiver of error as to such ruling, and all alleged errors of law occurring at the trial for which a new trial might be granted. City of Enid v. Wigger, 15 Okl. 507, 85 P. 697. Refusal to set aside verdict and failure to except concludes the question unless upon application to lower court the party shows himself entitled to it on account of accident, mistake, or misfortune. Gendron v. St. Pierre, 73 N. H. 419, 62 A. 966. Denial of motion in arrest of judgment. Dunbar v. Central Vermont R. Co. [Vt.] 65 A. 528. Taxation of costs. Prestwood v. McGowin [Ala.] 41 So. 779.

29. On appeal from an order removing a trustee, all questions presented by the record are open to review, irrespective of exceptions. In re Thieriot, 102 N. Y. S. 952. Failure of facts found by court to sustain the judgment. Webb v. National Bank of Republic [C. C. A.] 146 F. 717. Where there is a statement of facts in the record, it is not necessary to take exceptions to findings of law and facts. Hahl v. Kellogg [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 30, 94 S. W. 389. Order sustaining demurrer. Merker v. Belleville Distillery Co., 122 Ill. App. 326. Where a case is submitted to the jury on the erroneous theory that the jury should render verdict against defendant notwithstanding they found for only the amount tendered and deposited in court, the appellate court is not limited by the fact appellant failed to except to the instruction where made a motion for a new trial on the ground that the verdict is contrary to law. Goldman v. Swartwout, 102 N. Y. S. 302. Denial of motion to set aside default held an "interlocutory order or decision finally determining the rights of the parties or some of them" within Code Civ. Proc. § 647, dispensing with necessity of exceptions. Roberts v. Wilson [Cal. App.] 84 P. 216.

30. Where party moves to dismiss, he need not except to subsequent instructions on a decisive issue as to which there is no evidence. Barrett v. Brewer [N. C.] 55 S. E. 414. Exceptions that the verdict is contrary to the evidence are superfluous, being covered by exception that verdict is contrary to the law (Bowden v. Bowden, 125 Ga. 107, 53 S. E. 606), and hence such an as-dispensed with by the rules or common practice of the trial court.[31] In some states specifications of error on a motion for a new trial cannot take the place of exceptions,[32] but in others the rule is otherwise.[33] Exceptions by the appellee are necessary to sustain cross assignments of error.[34]

Time of taking exceptions.[35]—Exceptions must be timely.[36]

§ 8. Form and sufficiency of objection.[37]—An objection must point out specifically the matter objected to[38] and the grounds of the objection.[39] All the signment as ground for a new trial presents nothing for the review of the appellate court (Hogg v. Gammon [Ga.] 56 S. E. 404).

31. Practice of deeming exceptions taken and incorporating them in bill of exceptions, though not actually taken. Odell v. Petty [S. D.] 104 N. W. 249. Rule that no objections will be sustained to remarks of counsel dispenses with necessity of exceptions to such remarks. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Washington [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 425, 92 S. W. 1054.

32. Geter v. Central Coal Co. [Ala.] 43 So. 367.

33. Southern Pine Lumber Co. v. Ward, 16 Okl. 131, 85 P. 459. On appeal from denial of new trial requested on grounds specified in Code Civ. Proc. § 999, such grounds may be considered though not made the basis of exceptions. Crane v. Barron, 100 N. Y. S. 937. In Minnesota, under Gen. Laws 1901, c. 113, p. 121, a definite and specific assignment in a motion for a new trial constitutes a sufficient exception, and such assignment need not be followed by an exception to the ruling thus assigned as error. Prizer-Painter Stove & Heater Co. v. Peaslee, 99 Minn. 275, 109 N. W. 232; Stitt v. Rat Portage Lumber Co., 98 Minn. 52, 107 N. W. 824. Either an exception or a motion for a new trial is necessary. Stitt v. Rat Portage Lumber Co., 98 Minn. 52, 107 N. W. 824. Dalby v. Lauritzen, 98 Minn. 75, 107 N. W. 826.

34. Jamison v. Alvarado Compress & Warehouse Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 1053. Where defendant did not except to findings, he could not have them reviewed on plaintiff's appeal. Matthews v. Fry [N. C.] 55 S. E. 787.

35. See 6 C. L. 1406.

36. In order to preserve error as ground for new trial, exception must be taken thereto before the ruling on the motion for a new trial, notwithstanding Acts 1903, p. 338, c. 193, § 1, providing that exceptions may be taken at any time during the term. Providence Washington Ins. Co. v. Wolf [Ind.] 80 N. E. 26. Under Act April 22, 1874, P. L. 109, exceptions must be filed within thirty days after notice of judgment. Wingert v. Teitrick, 31 Pa. Super. Ct. 187. An exception taken at the time the court announces its conclusions of law. is in time. Indianapolis Northern Trac. Co. v. Harbaugh [Ind. App.] 78 N. E. 80. Exceptions to evidence, remarks of judge, etc., must be taken at the time as required by Revisal 1905, § 554, subsec. 2, the exception provided for by § 554, subsec. 3, and § 591, being confined to exceptions to the charge. Alley v. Howell, 141 N. C. 113, 53 S. E. 821. Under Rev. Code Civ. Proc. § 257, exceptions to instructions must be taken before entry of final judgment. Mossteller v. Holborn [S. D.] 108 N. W. 13. Exception to refusal to put instructions in writing as required by Revisal 1905, § 356, may be set out for first time in case on appeal. Sawyer v. Roanoke R. & Lumber Co., 142 N. C. 162, 55 S. E. 84. Under Acts 1903, p. 338, c. 193, § 1, permitting exceptions to refusal of instructions to be taken at any time during the term and providing that the party excepting shall enter at the close of such exceptions a memorandum which shall be dated and signed, etc., failure to date renders the exceptions void. Inland Steel Co. v. Smith [Ind.] 80 N. E. 538. In the Federal courts exceptions to instructions must be taken before the jury retires (Klaw v. Life Pub. Co. [C. C. A.] 145 F. 184; Montana Min. Co. v. St. Louis Min. & Mill. Co. [C. C. A.] 147 F. 897), and this rule not changed by Rule 58 of circuit court for Montana, such rule being intended only to prevent a miscarriage of justice through enforcement of general rule (Montana Min. Co. v. St. Louis Min. & Mill. Co. [C. C. A.] 147 F. 897). Filing of exceptions to finding of facts and of a statement of facts held timely though not made within five days from filing of findings, where made within five days after findings were served on appellant. Mann v. Provident Life & Trust Co., 42 Wash. 581, 85 P. 56. Complaint could not be made on appeal that there was not time or opportunity to move against the report of a referee where last evidence was taken over eighteen months prior to date of filing report and attorneys were present at all the hearings, though findings and judgment were made and entered on same day report was filed. Lindstrom v. Hope Lumber Co. [Idaho] 88 P. 92. Exception to overruling of motion for verdict should be taken at the close of all the evidence. McQuiggan v. Ladd [Vt.] 64 A. 503.

37. See 6 C. L. 1407.

38. Brown v. Savings Bank, 28 App. D. C. 351; Brown v. Brown [S. C.] 54 S. E. 838. Question of excessiveness of verdict held sufficiently presented to trial court in motion for new trial. Williams v. Spokane Falls & N. R. Co. [Wash.] 87 P. 491.

39. Brown v. Savings Bank, 28 App. D. C. 351. Motion to dismiss an appeal on ground that "no sufficient bond was filed" is too general. Jackson v. Barrett [Idaho] 86 P. 270. Rule applicable to motion to dismiss. Clark v. Middleton [N. H.] 66 A. 115. Refusal to direct verdict will not be considered when motion specified no grounds. Wood v. Public Service Corp. [N. J. Law] 64 A. 980. Where appellant fails to point out particulars in which a hypothetical question is not warranted by the evidence, the appellate court will not be over diligent in searching them out. Bird v. Utica Gold Min. Co., 2 Cal. App. 674, 84 P. 256. Where counsel for an objector in a proceeding to confirm a special assessment conceded that grounds of objection which a party wishes to urge on appeal should be specified, for only those grounds urged below will be considered.[40] Technicalities must be observed in making technical objections.[41]

To evidence.[42]—Objections to evidence must designate the evidence objected to [43] and specifically point out the ground of objection,[44] general objections on ache has not read the legal objections filed but thinks they are a copy of the blanket form and is unable to state any reason in support of them, the court on appeal will not review the overruling of them. Lingle v. West Chicago Park Com'rs, 222 Ill. 384, 78 N. E. 794. Demurrer on grounds that several causes of action were improperly united and that complaint was ambiguous, unintelligible and uncertain, held not to specify the grounds upon which objections were taken as required by Mill's Ann. Code, § 51. Lacey v. Bentley [Colo.] 89 P. 789. Ground of demurrer that the declaration is too general and fails to set forth "specific acts of negligence," is itself so general that the appellate court will only consider whether there is any essential element missing. Jacksonville Elec. Co. v. Schmetzer [Fla.] 43 So. 85. Where both proper and improper charges are imposed as terms upon which a pleading may be amended, the pleader is not required to tender the proper charges in order to avail himself of the error on appeal. Williams v. Myer [Cal.] 89 P. 972.

40. See ante, § 2, Acquiescing in Error, subd. Change of Theory.

41. Where in motion to dismiss appeal the grounds were too general. Jackson v. Barrett [Idaho] 86 P. 270.

42. See 6 C. L. 1407.

43. Joint objection to several answers to several questions held insufficient. McCleskey v. Howell Cotton Co. [Ala.] 42 So. 67. Objection to evidence collectively is insufficient if any of the evidence is admissible. Martin v. Gainesville, 126 Ga. 677, 55 S. E. 499; General Hospital Soc. v. New Haven Rendering Co. [Conn.] 65 A. 1065; Horner v. Beasley [Md.] 65 A. 820; McCleskey v. Howell Cotton Co. [Ala.] 42 So. 67; Holman v. Clark [Ala.] 41 So. 765; Tuttle v. Moody & Son [Tex.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 161, 97 S. Joint objection to two questions is insufficient if either is proper. Theodore Land Co. v. Lyon [Ala.] 41 So. 682. General objection that an answer is not responsive is insufficient where the answer is responsive in part. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Whitehill [Md.] 64 A. 1033. Objection to whole of a certificate of commissioner of land office, a part being admissible. Winans v. McCabe [Tex. Civ. App.] 92 S. W. 817. Incompetency to testify as to transaction with deceaesd person not raised by general objection to competency, witness being competent for other purposes. Smith v. Humphreys [Md.] 66 A. 67. Objection to admission of ordinance must point out parts claimed to be inadmissable. Spaulding v. Edina [Mo. App.] 97 S. W. 546. Objection to question before it is completed is not sufficient as against an answer to whole question and not to part objected to. Redus v. Milner Coal & R. Co. [Ala.] 41 So. 634. Disobedience in toto of order for production of several kinds of evidence raises no question as to validity order as to a single kind. Hammond Packing Co. v. State [Ark.] 100 S. W. 407.

Objection to question stating that counsel did not see how it was competent is not a valid objection. Hasper v. Wietcamp [Ind.] 79 N. E. 191. General objection does not reach errors of form in question objected to. Jewell Belting Co. v. Hamilton Rubber Mfg. Co., 121 Ill. App. 13; Wabash R. Co. v. Johnson, 114 Ill. App. 545. Objection to evidence as tending to prejudice jury against defendant and as being irrelevant held too general. McQueen v. Bank of Edgemont [S. D.] 107 N. W. 208. Objection to written assignment of cause of action on ground that no predicate has been laid to authorize its admission is too indefinite. Pecos & N. T. R. Co. v. Evans-Snider-Buel Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 199, 93 S. W. 1024. Objection to introduction of record in proceedings to enforce a tax bill, that notice of sale was insufficient, held not to justify review of question of sufficiency of the notice because the middle initial of defendant in the tax suit was erroneous. Howard v. Brown, 197 Mo. 36, 95 S. W. 191. Objection "plaintiff objects to what occurred between witness and G's representatives" in an action against G, and L, witness being an agent of L held sufficient. Trammell v. Guffey Petroleum Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 492, 94 S. W. 104. Where objection is to substance and form, and after the question has been reworded, the objector interposes "the same objection, except as to form," the objection to the substance is sufficient. In re Small's Will, 103 N. Y. S. 706. An objection that it had not been shown that witness knew anything about the knowledge of her son as to the dangers of electricity held a sufficient challenge of the competency of the witness' evidence on the subject. Sneed v. Marysville Gas & Elec. Co. [Cal.] 87 P. 376. Objection "no proper foundation laid and incompetent," to expert testimony held too general. Chicago City R. Co. v. Foster, 226 Ill. 288 N. E. 762. To hypothetical question. Odegard v. North Wisconsin Lumber Co. [Wis.] 110 N. W. 809. Objection that hypothetical question does not contain correct statement of evidence is sufficiently specific in absence of request by court to make more specific. Frigstad v. Great Northern R. Co. [Minn.] 111 N. W. 838. An objection to the consideration of affidavits count of irrelevancy, immateriality, and incompetency, being insufficient unless the evidence is inadmissible on any ground or for any purpose whatever,[45] and a general objection in any case being held sufficient when and only when the evidence is wholly inadmissible for any purpose whatever;[46] but the mere fact that an objection is specific does not necessarily make it sufficient, since it may fail to reach the point desired to be saved,[47] and only the grounds properly specified below will be considered on appeal.[48] The rules applicable to objections to the admission of evidence also apply to motions to strike out evidence,[49] and to objections to the sufficiency of evidence.[50] failing to state the ground thereof is insufficient. Franklin Union No. 4 v. People, 121 Ill. App. 647. General objection to evidence is insufficient to raise the question of variance. Faulkner v. Birch, 120 Ill. App. 281. Objection to evidence on ground of variance without pointing out variance is insufficient. Landt v. McCullough, 121 Ill. App. 328.

45. Norfolk & W. R. Co. v Sutherland, 105 Va. 545, 54 S. E. 465; Davis v. Holy Terror Min. Co. [S. D.] 107 N. W. 374. Presumption is that court instructed as to legal tendency of evidence and the jury followed instruction. Haskell v. Manchester St. R. Co., 73 N. H. 587, 64 A. 186. An objection for incompetency is more general than an objection for irrelevancy, it not being necessary to specify wherein evidence is irrelevant, but the reason for incompetency must be pointed out. Stoner v. Royar [Mo.] 98 S. W. 601.

Objections held too general: "Incompetent." Renders v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 144 Mich. 387, 13 Det. Leg. N. 314, 108 N. W. 368. "Irrelevant." Armour & Co. v. Ross [S. C.] 55 S. E. 315. "Improper and immaterial." American Car & Foundry Co. v. Brinkman [C. C. A.] 146 F. 712. "Irrelevant and immaterial." McCabe v. Desnoyers [S. D.] 108 N. W. 341. "Incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, and does not tend to prove any issue in the case." Malott v. Central Trust Co. [Ind.] 79 N. E. 369. "It is not applicable to any issue in the case and does not tend to prove the earning capacity of decedent." Id. Objection for the invalidity does not raise question of remoteness. Dean v. Kansas City, etc., R. Co. [Mo.] 97 S. W. 910. "Immaterial and incompetent" does not go to competency of the witness Wilson v. Godkin, 142 Mich. 631, 12 Det. Leg. N. 849, 105 N. W. 1121. Objection to evidence as to injured eyesight that it was "immaterial and irrelevant" is too general to raise the point that such injury had not been pleaded. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Powers [Tex. Civ. App.] 101 S. W. 250. General objection to deeds admissible as ancient instruments is properly overruled notwithstanding they are not admissible as duly recorded deeds affecting the defense of limitations. Flack v. Braman [Tex. Civ. App.] 101 S. W. 537. General objection to admission of a copy of a will that it was incompetent, irrelevant, etc., did not present ground that will had not been admitted to probate. Samuel and Jessie Kenney Presbyterian Home v. Kenney [Wash.] 88 P. 108. General objection of incompetency, irrelevancy, and immateriality, is not sufficient to raise the question as to whether matter is subject to expert testimony and as to qualification of witness as an expert. Bundy v. Sierra Lumber Co. [Cal.] 87 P. 622. Objection to evidence of custom as immaterial does not raise question of generality or reasonableness of custom. Costilla County Bank v. Willis [Colo.] 85 P. 423.

46. Sufficient only where evidence is inadmissible for any purpose. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Rathneau, 225 Ill. 278, 80 N. E. 119. Sufficient where evidence wholly inadmissible. Spaulding v. Edina [Mo. App.] 97 S. W. 545. General objection held sufficient to a question whether a defendant in a personal injury action was insured against accidents to employe. Capital Const. Co. v. Holtzman, 27 App. D. C. 125.

47. Objection to competency of evidence does not reach competency of witness. Brown v. Brown [Neb.] 108 N. W. 180. An objection to competency of witness does not reach materiality of evidence. El Campo Rice Milling Co. v. Montgomery [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 269, 95 S. W. 1102. Competency of evidence is not raised by an objection on account of the time of its introduction. Van Camp v. Keokuk, 130 Iowa, 716, 107 N. W. 933. Objection that certain testimony was "an opinion" does not raise question of competency of witness to testify as an expert. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Warner. [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 530, 93 S. W. 489. Objection that witness did not see street car until it had crossed railroad did not reach admissibility of testimony as to whether it was custom for railroad trains to stop to let street cars cross. Northern Texas Tract. Co. v. Caldwell [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 869. Objection to question leading in form and substance and not predicated on any evidence in case does not reach competency of the question. Aurora, etc., R. Co. v. Gary, 123 Ill. App. 163. Objection in an action for money had and received through forged drafts, to monthly statement of drawee, showing payment, that drafts are not connected with case, it not appearing that they were paid to defendant, does not raise point as to propriety of method adopted to show payment. Clifford Banking Co. v. Donovan Commission Co., 195 Mo. 262, 94 S. W. 527.

48. See ante § 2, Acquiescing in Error, subd. Change of Theory.

49. Motion to strike must state grounds. Vicksburg R. & Light Co. v. Cameron [Miss.] 40 So. 822. Motion on general ground of immateriality, irrelevancy, and incompetency, is insufficient. Hamlin v. Hamlin, 102 N. Y. S. 571. No point saved by motion to exclude evidence a part of which is admissible. Wright v. Charbonneau, 122 Ill. App. 52; Schultz v. Ford Bros. [Iowa] 109 N. W. 614; Birmingham, R., Light & Power Co. v. Livingston, 144 Ala. 313, 39 So. 374; Davis v. Arnold, 143 Ala. 228, 39 So. 141. Motion to strike out evidence as irrelevant must

To exclusion of evidence.[51]—As a foundation for the predication of error upon the exclusion of evidence, an offer of proof must be made showing what the evidence is [52] and its purpose.[53] A collective offer will not sustain an objection if any of the evidence is inadmissible,[54] nor will an unrestricted offer sustain an objection if the evidence is inadmissible for any purpose,[55] and where the offer is for a specific purpose, the admissibility of the evidence for another purpose is not raised.[56] The offer must be to prove facts,[57] and an offer of an answer to a question must be responsive to the question.[58] An offer is ineffectual if there are no means of proof at hand.[59] point out irrelevant portion. Metz v. Willitts, 14 Wyo. 511, 85 P. 380. Where part of answer is responsive, general motion to strike out the answer is too broad. Pittsburg, etc., R. Co. v. Collins [Ind.] 80 N. E. 415. Motion to strike out several instruments as an entirety is properly overruled where any one is admissible. Hoodless v. Jernigan [Fla.] 41 So. 194. Motion to strike out or request for instruction to disregard evidence is too broad where any of the evidence covered by the motion on request is admissible. Porter v. Buckley [C. C. A.] 147 F. 140. Where opinion evidence is based partly on knowledge of facts and partly on hearsay evidence, motion to strike out the evidence is too broad. Colorado Farm & Live Stock Co. v. York [Colo.] 88 P. 181.

50. Motion for directed verdict based on insufficiency of evidence must point out wherein evidence is insufficient. Hanson v. Lindstrom [N. D.] 108 N. W. 798. In suit on a note defendant could not contend for first time on appeal that proof of ownership was not sufficient without explanation of plaintiff's indorsement on the note, where when note was introduced in evidence he objected only on the ground that complaint which set out the note did not state a cause of action. Gumaer v. Jackson [Colo.] 86 P. 885. In action by employe for injuries caused by defective machinery, requested instruction for directed verdict in favor of defendant preserves question as one of law whether there is any evidence fairly tending to show that plaintiff knew or had equal opportunity with appellant of knowing of defects. Elgin, etc., R. Co. v. Myers, 226 Ill. 358, 80 N. E. 897. Objection on account of irrelevancy goes only to admissibility, and not to weight or sufficiency. Metz v. Willitts, 14 Wyo. 511, 85 P. 380.

51. See 6 C. L. 1410.

52. Evansville & Princeton Trac. Co. v. Broermann [Ind. App.] 80 N. E. 972. Expected answer must be stated. Dunbar v. Central Vermont R. Co. [Vt.] 65 A. 528; Pond v. Pond's Estate [Vt.] 65 A. 97; Bowden v. Bowden, 125 Ga. 107, 53 S. E. 606; Thomas v. Robinson, 29 Ky. L. R. 769, 96 S. W. 459; Louisville & M. R. Co. v. Williamson, 29 Ky. L. R. 1165, 96 S. W. 1130; Brusseau v. Lower Brick Co. [Iowa] 110 N. W. 577; International Harvester Co. v. McKeever [S. D.] 109 N. W. 642; Baines v. Coos Bay, etc., Co. [Or.] 89 P. 371; Hager v. Donovan [Kan.] 88 P. 637; First Nat. Bank v. Carroll [Mont.] 88 P. 1012; Southern R. Co. v. Lester [C. C. A.] 151 F. 573. Offer to show pecuniary condition of plaintiff in assault case at time of assault too general when it did not appear whether plaintiff expected to prove whether he was rich or poor. McQuiggan v. Ladd [Vt.] 64 A. 503.

53. Purpose must be shown so as to show relevancy. Canada-Atlantic & Plant S. S. Co. v. Flanders [C. C. A.] 145 F. 875. Exclusion of incompetent testimony of isolated fact is not error in absence of offer to show its competency by the introduction of other evidence. Pier v. Speer [N. J. Err. & App.] 64 A. 161. An appellant, suing for services rendered which were to be paid for when certain sums were realized, cannot contend on appeal that a certain chancery record should have been received to show that such sums were not realized until within the statutory period of limitations before commencing suit, where the offer was general and it was not stated that it would show that specific fact. Boogher v. Roach, 25 App. D. C. 324. Where the court, in stopping a proposed line of inquiry, is under a misapprehension as to the purpose of inquiry, it is the duty of counsel to correct him by a statement of the questions desired to be asked or of the particular facts to be inquired about. Pickford v. Talbott, 28 App. D. C. 498.

54. Where a part of the evidence objected to is competent for another purpose, the offerer should separate the same and make an offer of proof. City of Chicago v. Saldman, 225 Ill. 625, 80 N. E. 349.

55. Unrestricted offer in behalf of all of defendants of evidence admissible as to only part of them will not sustain objection to its exclusion. Evans v. Scott [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 885, 97 S. W. 116.

56. Offer to prove that title was not in plaintiff did not include offer to prove title in defendant. Sanford v. Millikin, 144 Mich. 311, 13 Det. Leg. N. 171, 107 N. W. 884.

57. Offer to prove insolvency is an offer to prove a conclusion, and is properly rejected on objection to its competency, relevancy, and materiality, being made. Martin v. Hertz, 224 Ill. 84, 79 N. E. 558.

58. Tinkle v. Wallace [Ind.] 79 N. E. 355. Where answer of witness so far as it had proceeded was not responsive, objection to its exclusion was unavailable in absence of any showing as to what rest of answer would be. Packham v. Glendmeyer, 103 Md. 416, 63 A. 1048.

59. Rose v. Doe [Cal. App.] 89 P. 135.

60. Where after excluding a contract sued on as void the court allows plaintiff to amend his complaint but in so doing declares that the amendment does not alter its construction of the contract, plaintiff need not offer the contract a second time in order to base error on its exclusion. Mebius & Drescher Co. v. Mills [Cal.] 88

To instructions.[61]—An objection to an instruction as a whole will not reach particular defects therein,[62] nor will an objection to instructions in gross raise any question for review where some of the instructions were proper.[63]

To report of referees, etc.[64]—Objections to reports of referees must be specific.[65]

§ 9. Sufficiency of exception.[66]—An exception must point out specifically the error complained of,[67] must contain within themselves sufficient to show that the excepting party was aggrieved,[68] must be brought to the attention of the court and the opposing counsel,[69] and should not be in gross.[70]

An objection is not an exception,[71] but under some circumstances may be treated as such.[72]

P. 917. Failure to formally state what answer a witness was expected to make to an excluded question does not preclude a review where that fact was apparent from the previous questions and where the court excluded it on the same ground as the previous ones. Robinson v. Old Colony St. R. Co., 189 Mass. 594, 76 N. E. 190.

61. See 4 C. L. 1395.

62. General objection to instruction as to measure of damages will not reach error in including item not supported by evidence. Ft. Smith Light & Trac. Co. v. Carr [Ark.] 93 S. W. 990; Roberts-Johnson & Rand Shoe Co. v. Westinghouse Elec. & Mfg. Co. [C. C. A.] 143 F. 218. General objection to instruction as a whole held not to raise question that it erroneously imposed upon plaintiff the burden of showing notice to defendant of plaintiff's rights. Frazier v. Poindexter [Ark.] 95 S. W. 464. General objection to a charge on damages including a number of elements is not sufficient to raise the specific objection that it allows the infant to recover for loss of time because of the injury before maturity which compensation belonged to the parent. McDermott v. Severe, 202 U. S. 600, 50 Law. Ed. 1162.

63. Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Belknap [Ark.] 98 S. W. 366; Lindblom v. Fallet [C. C. A.] 145 F. 805.

64. See 6 C. L. 1410.

65. Kirby's Dig. §§ 6336, 6340. Walworth v. Birch [Ark.] 98 S. W. 717.

66. See 6 C. L. 1411.

67. Porter v. Buckley [C. C. A.] 147 F. 140; Montana Min. Co. v. St. Louis Min. & Mill. Co. [C. C. A.] 147 F. 897; Ex parte Miley, 73 S. C. 325, 53 S. E. 535. When tested by mere general exception a pleading will be liberally construed. Exception to answer because it pleaded damages which were too remote is general. Gorham v. Dallas, etc., R. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 365, 95 S. W. 551. General exception to ruling, granting appellee leave "to plead to the merits within twenty four hours upon payment of all costs," which does not point out whether objection is to substance of ruling, time granted, or condition imposed is insufficient. Brown v. Savings Bank, 28 App. D. C. 351. Exception that it was too late to obtain relief sought goes only to time of filing petition and raises no question as to sufficiency of the allegations. Smart v. Panther [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 448, 95 S. W. 679. Grounds of exception to admission of evidence must be stated. Matthews v. Targarona [Md.] 65 A. 60; Bussey v. Charleston & W. C. R. Co. [S. C.] 55 S. E. 163. Grounds of exception to exclusion of evidence must be stated. Hutchins v. Langley, 27 App. D. C. 234. Exception to rejection of evidence must show definitely what the evidence was that was offered, and is insufficient where it does not show which of several offers was intended to be presented to the court. Pier v. Speer [N. J. Err. & App.] 64 A. 161. Where appellant excepted to the refusal of the master to admit evidence as follows, setting out questions and answers which did not appear in the master's report, the admissibility of such evidence is not reviewable. Young v. Winkley, 191 Mass. 570, 78 N. E. 377. Where one wishes a master to report rejected evidence offered so as to review the ruling thereon, he must limit his request to the particular evidence and not ask generally that evidence relating to the issue be reported. Id. Credibility not raised by exception to admissibility or competency or to allowance of amendment. Trafton v. Osgood [N. H.] 65 A. 397. Exception to asking witness to produce receipt not sufficient where no exception was filed to testimony of witness or introduction of receipt. Gerting v. Wells, 103 Md. 624, 64 A. 298, 433. Exception must be taken to the particular question eliciting the objectionable testimony. Indianapolis St. R. Co. v. Marschke [Ind.] 77 N. E. 945.

68. Lenfest v. Robbins, 101 Me. 176, 63 A. 729.

69. Where remarks of counsel are replied to in kind and exceptions thereto are taken without the knowledge of the offending counsel, they do not constitute a ground for a new trial. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Granger [Tex Civ. App.] 100 S. W. 987.

70. General exception to a number of different rulings on a motion to reform pleading is unavailing unless all rulings are erroneous. Avery Mfg. Co. v. Lambertson [Kan.] 86 P. 456. Exception to overruling of separate demurrer to each paragraph of complaint is not exception in gross. Bessler v. Laughlin [Ind.] 79 N. E. 1033, rvg. [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 1047; City of Decatur v. McKean [Ind.] 78 N. E. 982; Whitesell v. Strikler [Ind.] 78 N. E. 845. Where several persons act separately but present but a single paper to the court and the court by a single action rules against all, the exceptions thereto as recorded by the clerk should be liberally construed so as to afford an appropriate exception to each exceptor. Id.

71. Eppstein v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 197 Mo. 720, 94 S. W. 967.

72. Where parties in superior court treated objections before master as exceptions, appellate court will so regard them

To instructions.[73]—Exceptions to instructions must designate the particular instruction or part thereof excepted to [74] and must state the grounds of exception.[75] On the other hand exceptions should not be taken to disconnected fragments of the charge.[76] It is sufficient, however, if the court understands the exception, though not in best form,[77] and an error appearing on the face of the record will be reviewed though exceptions to instructions be in gross.[78] Nor is it necessary to state the grounds of an exception to a distinct proposition of law contained in an instruction;[79] but it must designate the portion excepted to either by a recital of the language or the substance of such portion.[80]

The same general rules apply to exceptions to the refusal of instructions.[81]

To the findings and judgment.[82]—A general exception to the findings [83] or the although there is no order making objections exceptions. Otis v. Cottage Grove Mfg. Co., 121 Ill. App. 233.

73. See 6 C. L. 1411.

74. An exception to instructions in gross cannot be sustained if any of the instructions are correct. Jones v. Hoadley, 101 N. Y. S. 470; McDermott v. Severe, 25 App. D. C. 276; Zitske v. Grohn, 128 Wis. 159, 107 N. W. 20; Moore v. Lanier [Fla.] 42 So. 462; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Crosby [Fla.] 43 So. 318; Hasse v. Herring [Colo.] 85 P. 629; Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Morris [Ark.] 98 S. W. 363; Walnut Ridge Mercantile Co. v. Cohn [Ark.] 96 S. W. 413. Exception to instructions held to be in gross. Alexander v. Beekman Lumber Co. [Ark.] 95 S. W. 449; Montana Min. Co. v. St. Louis Min. & Mill. Co. [C C. A.] 147 F. 897; Foote v. Kelley, 126 Ga. 799, 55 S. E. 1045; Inland Steel Co. v. Smith [Ind.] 80 N. E. 538; Gibney v. Everson [Mass.] 77 N. E. 1155. Held doubtful whether numerous instructions were properly excepted to for failure to state the issues more clearly. Wallace v. Skinner [Wyo.] 88 P. 221. Ground in motion for new trial that court erred in giving five instructions referred to by number held in gross and unsustainable, at least one being correct. Wade v. Goza [Ark.] 96 S. W. 388. Where on plaintiff requesting a particular charge the court replies that it has so charged, it is equivalent to giving such charge though it had not in fact been given, and the exception of defendant, "I except to the charge" refers to the particular charge and not to the main charge. Schechwitz v. New York City R. Co., 103 N. Y. S. 781. Exception to "whatever court said" on certain subject in oral charge held insufficient. People v. Waters, 100 N. Y. S. 177.

Held sufficient: Several exception to each instruction orally taken is sufficient under the act of March 9, 1903, to bring such instructions up for review. Baltimore & O. S. R. Co. v. Kleespies [Ind. App.] 78 N. E. 252. A general exception to a series of instructions by number severally and to each and every one of them is sufficiently specific. Snyder v. Stribling [Okl.] 89 P. 222.

75. Township Com'rs of St. Andrews Parish v. Charleston Min. & Mfg. Co. [S. C.] 57 S. E. 201; Tucker v. Southern R. Co., [S. C.] 55 S. E. 154; Coney Island Co. v. Dennan [C. C. A.] 149 F. 687. Exception "for errors in the charge" held too general. Davis v. Wall, 142 N. C. 450, 55 S. E. 350. An exception to "your honor's instructions as to the measure of damages" is insufficient. Rowe v. Whatcom County R. & L. Co. [Wash.] 87 P. 921. Exception "to the failure to charge as requested, in so far as there may have been an omission to charge as requested and to the charge as given upon these points on those general requests" held too general to be noticed. White v. Lumiere North American Co. [Vt.] 64 A. 1121.

76. Indiana Fruit Co. v. Sandlin, 125 Ga. 222, 54 S. E. 65.

77. When court in refusing an instruction said there was nothing in case to justify it, an exception to the charge "as given in respect to said requests" was equivalent to an exception to the refusal to instruct upon such subject. Sias v. Consolidated Lighting Co. [Vt.] 64 A. 1104.

78. Error in instruction arising from construction of a contract set out in bill of exceptions. Alexander v. Beekman Lumber Co. [Ark.] 95 S. W. 449.

79. Smith v. Atlantic City R. Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 65 A. 1000; Jansen v. Goerke Co. [N. J. Law.] 65 A. 856; Van Blarcom v. Central R. Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 64 A. 111; Spears v. Du. Rant [S. C.] 56 S. E. 652.

80. Exception to "charge to the jury on the question of damages" held insufficient. Smith v. Atlantic City R. Co. [N J. Err. & App.] 65 A. 1000. Exception "to that portion of the court's charge which defines the effect of the automobile act of 1903" held too indefinite where court laid down numerous propositions as flowing from such act. Addis v. Rushmore [N. J. Err. & App.] 65 A. 1036.

81. Exception to refusal to give several instructions in gross cannot be sustained if any of the requests are bad. Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Belknap [Ark.] 98 S. W. 366; Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Morris [Ark.] 98 S. W. 363. When part of charge requested as whole was erroneous. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Still [Tex. Civ. App.] 100 S. W. 176. General exception to refusal to give any of several instructions is insufficient. McCabe & Steen Const. Co. v. Wilson [Okl.] 87 P. 320. Ruling on each instruction will be considered although bill of exceptions does not recite that they were separately requested where it appears that they were separately considered and marked "refused." Alabama Steel & Wire Co. v. Griffin [Ala.] 42 So. 1034.

82. See 6 C. L. 1412.

83. Webb v. National Bank of Republic [C. C. A.] 146 F. 717.

Held sufficiently specific; exception on ground that finding was not within pleadings, was not supported by competent evidence, and was based on inadmissible ex-judgment [84] is insufficient. Exceptions to the denial of a motion for a judgment on the general findings of fact and law on a trial without a jury present only the question whether the ruling was correct upon the whole evidence, aided by all the inferences which a jury would have been justified in drawing.[85] An exception to the report of a master [86] must be specific [87] and must set out the evidence necessary to the determination of the question involved.[88] An exception to a decree confirming such a report must likewise be specific.[89]

§ 10. Waiver of objections and exceptions taken.[90]—Objections and exceptions taken may be waived by withdrawal,[91] by failure to comply with statutory formalities,[92] by failure to take advantage of an opportunity to correct the error,[93] by compliance with ruling,[94] by failure to invoke a ruling on the objection or exception,[95] by answering over [96] and going to trial on the merits,[97] by the introduction of hibit, held sufficient. Kossuth County Bank v. Richardson [Iowa] 106 N. W. 923. A ground for a new trial that "said decision is not justified by the evidence and is contrary to law" is sufficient to raise question as sufficiency of findings of fact. Nye v. Karlow, 98 Minn. 81, 107 N. W. 733. Under Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 5055, providing that exceptions may be taken by a party by stating to the court when the ruling is made that he excepts to the same an exception to the court's finding of the amount of interest due on a note as follows: "Because the evidence is insufficient to support the finding and the same is contrary to the evidence," is sufficient to raise the question of the proper rate of interest the note bears after maturity. Bank v. Doherty, 42 Wash, 317, 84 P. 872. Exception to the verdict as contrary to the law is sufficient without specifying that it is contrary to the charge or to specified portion thereof. Bowden v. Bowden 125 Ga. 107, 53 S. E. 606.

84. Under Act May 11, 1901, P. L. 185, relating to appeals in settlement cases of municipal officers, exception to the judgment does not bring case up for review on either merits or for review of findings of fact and conclusions of law. Dunmore Borough School Dist. v. Wahlers, 28 Pa. Super Ct. 35.

85. Weight of evidence not presented. Delaware, etc., R. Co. v. Kutter [C. C. A.] 147 F. 51.

86. Where no objections to the draft of a master's report are filed and the exceptions to the report are not allowed by special order, chancery rule 31 is not complied with and nothing is saved for review. Huntress v. Handley [Mass.] 80 N. E. 946.

87. First Nat. Bank v. Trigg Co. [Va.] 56 S. E. 158; Brown v. Rogers [S. C.] 56 S. E. 680.

General exceptions held sufficient where report was on single fact. Thorn v. Thorn, 28 App. D. C. 120.

88. Certain amended exceptions held defective for referring to evidence not set out and not pointing out the place in the record where the evidence might be found. Moss v. Chappell, 126 Ga. 196, 54 S. E. 968.

89. Where decree confirmed report generally with certain exceptions, and a search of the record would have been necessary to ascertain which exceptions were sustained and which overruled. Baxter v. Camp [Ga.] 54 S. E. 1036.

90. See 6 C. L. 1413.

91. Cross complaint striken on motion but restored by consent. Hughes Bros. v. Hoover [Cal. App.] 84 P. 681. Where a party to consolidate causes withdraws his exceptions to an auditor's report, another party who has not taken an exception cannot complain. Gilbert v. Endowment Ass'n, 21 App. D. C. 344.

92. Under U. S. 939, failure to ask master to state his decision in admitting or rejecting evidence is waiver of the objection. Allen's Adm'rs v. Allen's Adm'rs [Vt.] 64 A. 1110.

93. Failure to reoffer evidence after such change of ruling as waived have let it in. Zeller v. Leiter, 99 N. Y. S. 624; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Conrad [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 209.

94. Amendment of plaintiff's pleading in conformity to court's holding on measure of damages held waiver of any error in such holding. Carle v. Oklahoma Woolen Mills, 16 Okl. 515, 86 P. 66.

95. Phillips v. Hazen [Iowa] 109 N. W. 1096. See ante, § 5, Necessity of Motion or Request; ante, § 6, Necessity of Ruling. An objection taken under advisement is waived if it is not thereafter renewed by a request for a ruling. Stitt v. Rat Portage Lumber Co., 98 Minn. 52, 107 N. W. 824. Exceptions to depositions are waived by failure to bring them to the attention of the trial court so as to obtain a ruling thereon. Fulton v. Messenger [W. Va.] 56 S. E. 830.

96. Answering after motion to strike amended petition for departure will be treated on appeal as waiving the departure where there is nothing to show that motion was overruled or an exception taken. Walker v. Wabash R. Co., 193 Mo. 453, 92 S. W. 83. Although defendant answers after the overruling of demurrer, sufficiency of complaint may be considered on appeal where motion in arrest of judgment is made on that ground. Clifford v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo.] 101 S. W. 44.

97. But see Woodward & Woodward v. Tri-State Mill. Co., 142 N. C. 100, 55 S. A defendant who proceeds with the trial waives right to urge error in the overruling of his motion for a nonsuit. Newell v. National Advertising Co. [Colo.] 89 P. 792. Emporium, 130 Iowa, 526, 107 N. W. 428. Where exception of no cause of action is tried with merits without objection on the part of defendant who obtains judgment on merits and no ruling is made on the exception, the exception will be considered waived where no amendment is asked by him on appeal. Doullut v. Smith, 117 La. 491, 41 So. 913. Objection to jurisdiction of court to convene at a certain place is not waived by going to trial, as where district court convened at place other than county seat to try contested election case involving trial of questions of fact. Bell v. Jarvis, 98 Minn. 109, 107 N. W. 547. Where a change of venue is refused for want of power, an objection to such ruling is not waived by insisting upon the court's passing upon merits of the application. Sanders v. German Fire Ins. Co., 126 Wis. 172, 105 N. W. 787.

98. Introducing evidence after refusal to take case from jury at close of plaintiff's evidence waives objection to refusal. Johnson v. Johnson [Md.] 65 A. 918; Riggs v. Turnbull [Md.] 66 A. 13; Williams & Davisson Co. v. Ferguson Cont. Co. [W. Va.] 55 S. E. 1011; Grooms v. Neff Harness Co. [Ark.] 96 S. W. 135; Nashville R. & L. Co. v. Henderson [Tenn.] 99 S. W. 700. Introducing evidence after reservation of ruling on motion for nonsuit for variance. Franklin v. Burris [Colo.] 84 P. 809. Objections and exceptions to evidence are waived by proof of same facts by one's own witnesses. Southern R. Co. v. Blanford's Adm'x, 105 Va. 373, 54 S. E. 1. Where over objection one who presented a note as a claim against an estate was permitted to testify as to its execution, etc., the fact that a partial payment on the part of decedent was brought out on cross-examination did not waive the right to object to the holder testifying as to such payment in an action against the surviving maker and the executor of the comaker. Crow v. Crow [Mo. App.] 100 S. W. 1123. Refusal to consider stipulation as proof of contested fact, though excepted to, cannot be assigned as error where both parties introduce evidence as to such fact and no objection or exception is taken to either such evidence or instructions pertaining thereto. Logan County Bank v. Beyer [Okl.] 87 P. 607.

Not waived: Objections to evidence are not waived by introduction of evidence to meet that erroneously admitted. Kelsey v. Continental Casualty Co. [Iowa] 108 N. W. 221; Metropolitan St. R. Co. v. Walsh, 197 Mo. 392, 94 S. W. 860. One does not waive an exception to exclusion of evidence by introducing other evidence of the same matters though court had rule that only one expert could testify on a side. Party did not waive exception to exclusion of testimony of deceased expert by introducing another expert. Wallach v. Manhattan El. R. Co., 105 App. Div. 422, 94 N. Y. S. 574. Where a certified transcript of a deed is erroneously excluded on the ground that the certificate of acknowledgment was insufficient and the offerer duly excepts, he does not lose the benefit of his exception by offering one of the grantors who testifies that she was not before the certifying officer. Middlebrooks v. Stephens [Ala.] 41 So. 735.

99. Where the defendant moves for a peremptory instruction of "not guilty," and, when this is overruled, submits instructions on the negligence of the plaintiff as a question of fact, he cannot afterwards insist that the plaintiff was negligent, as a matter of law. Chicago Union Traction Co. v. O'Donnell, 113 Ill. App. 259. Objections to the theory adopted by instructions are not waived by subsequently requesting an instruction based on the same theory but intended merely to present the case to the jury in the most favorable light possible under the theory adopted by the court. Trotter v. St. Louis & S. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 508.

1. See ante, § 5, Necessity of Motion or Request. Failure to object to similar evidence subsequently offered. Russell v. Deutschman [Tex. Civ. App.] 100 S. W. 1164. But see contra, Bjorkegren v. Kirk, 103 N. Y. S. 994. Rights of party who has taken proper exceptions to the admission of evidence are not lost by failing to except to charge submitting it to jury. Pierson v. Boston El. R. Co., 191 Mass. 223, 77 N. E. 769. While failure to move for a dismissal admits that there is evidence to go to the jury, it does not admit its admissibility and hence does not waive an objection and exception saved thereto. Bjorkegren v. Kirk, 103 N. Y. S. 994. An objection to question being overruled and exception taken, objection need not be renewed when question is renewed. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Williamson, 29 Ky. L. R. 1165, 96 S. W. 1130. Objection to refusal to direct verdict at close of plaintiff's evidence waived by failure to report at close of all evidence, defendant having introduced evidence. Nashville R. & L. Co. v. Henderson [Tenn.] 99 S. W. 700; Spencer v. State, 187 N. Y. 484, 80 N. E. 375. Failure to object to an instruction is not a waiver of objection and exception to a former similar instruction. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Lee [Va.] 55 S. E. 1. The benefit of exceptions to instructions may be lost by failure to move for a new trial or to except to the verdict or judgment, and where there was no motion for a new trial and no exception to the verdict or judgment, exceptions to instructions will not be considered where it does not appear that the verdict was controlled by the instructions excepted to. Cox v. Macon R. & L. Co., 126 Ga. 398, 55 S. E. 232. Where party duly objected and excepted to ruling allowing too many peremptory challenges, he does not waive the error by failing to move to discharge the jury and by accepting it without objection. Pendley v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 28 Ky. L. R. 1324, 92 S. W. 1. Objections to remarks of counsel need not be repeated when the remarks are repeated. Baxter v. Krainik, 126 Wis. 421, 105 N. W. 803.

Failure to repeat in motion for new trial objections and exceptions saved on the trial constitutes a waiver thereof. Chicago City R. Co. v. Smith, 226 Ill. 178, 80 N. E. 716; Spaulding v. Edina [Mo. App.] 97 S. W. 545; Hatfield v. Adams, 29 Ky. L. R. 880, 96 S. W. 583; Stainback v. Henderson [Ark.] 95 S. W. 786. Failure to repeat objection to evidence conditionally admitted waives objection. Henry v. Frohlichstein [Ala.] 43 So. 126.

waiver of a demurrer to a complaint precludes a consideration of its sufficiency,[2] but does not admit the sufficiency of the facts proven.[3] Exceptions to exclusion of evidence are not waived by an admission that the evidence, after such exclusion, is insufficient to establish the issue.[4]

§ 1. The school system in general.[5]—The Texas system of community schools was not repealed by the act of 1905 providing for a free school system for such counties as did not elect to continue under the former.[6]

§ 2. Right, privilege, and duty of attendance.[7]—A statute requiring attendance of children "between and including" the ages of seven and fifteen years does not apply to children who have passed the fifteenth year.[8] Under the New Hampshire compulsory attendance law, a person living at a distance from a school unreasonable for a child to walk is not required to convey children under his care to school either at his own expense or for a sum thought reasonable by the school board.[9]

Separate schools for races.[10]—The right of inhabitants of African descent, in Missouri, to the establishment of a separate school for their race as disclosed by a mere de facto officer's enumeration is not defeated by a subsequent, adverse, fraudulent, and collusive one taken by an officer de jure.[11] The Kentucky statute relating to the separation of the races in schools is a valid exercise of the police power in so far as it prohibits the maintenance of institutions for the joint instruction of white and negro pupils,[12] but in so far as it provides that private institutions may maintain distinct branches in a different locality "not less than twenty-five miles distant" for the education exclusively of one race or color, it is an unreasonable distance requirement.[13] Such invalid provision is, however, separable.[14] Whether children have been excluded from one school room and assigned to another on account of their color, in violation of statute is, on conflicting evidence, a jury question in mandamus to compel their admission to the room from which they were excluded.[15]

Vaccination of pupils.[16]—Statutes excluding unvaccinated children from the schools are generally held valid,[17] and enforceable regardless of the nonprevalence of smallpox in a particular locality, notwithstanding another section of the statute includes in its prohibitive features adults as well as children, vaccinated or not, where smallpox prevails.[18] In Pennsylvania the school directors have concurrent power with the boards of health of cities of the third class to make and enforce regulations to prevent the introduction and spread of contagious and infectious diseases.[19] The wrongful refusal of a school committee to admit unvaccinated children to the schools of Massachusetts does not render the town civilly liable therefor.[20]

Duty to furnish school facilities.[21]—A statute requiring under penalty the furnishing of adequate and suitable facilities, does not require transportation to be furnished for children living remote from the school.[22] In the absence of statute [23] there is no duty to furnish such transportation,[24] nor does a power to levy taxes for necessary school expenses authorize a tax for that purpose.[25] Removal into a school district must be primarily for the purpose of obtaining free school privilege to warrant a charge for tuition.[26] Mandamus and not injunction is the remedy for refusing admittance to a public school because of the failure of a pupil to comply with an alleged illegal requirement.[27]

State v. Barberton Board of Education, 7 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 608. The Pennsylvania act is not invalid as special legislation (Stull v. Reber [Pa.] 64 A. 419), nor repugnant to the constitutional provision requiring the maintenance of public schools where all children above six years of age may receive an education (Id.), nor as involving in its application trespass on the reserved rights of the individual beyond the reach of the police power from the fact that vaccination is the infliction of disease on the subject (Id.).

The mere allegation by a parent that the officers of a public school have passed an illegal regulation, which if enforced would work injury on his child, does not entitle him to injunction against the officers (Id.), but he must show injury or at least that injury is threatened (Id.).

Change of text books.—A change of text books cannot be validly made under the Iowa statutes unless the question is submitted to the electors on the order of the board of directors,[28] nor can the board acting individually confer on its secretary authority to submit the question.[29] An illegal change of text books when merely threatened will not be restrained, but the remedy is to await such illegal action and bring mandamus to compel admission of children who do not comply with the change.[30]

§ 3. School districts, sites, and schools.[31] Formation, alteration, consolidation, and dissolution of districts.[32]—Under the Kentucky statute providing for the establishment of graded school districts, the county court is without jurisdiction in the creation thereof to take in any part of a common school district unless the proposition is approved in writing on the petition therefor by a majority of its trustees,[33] and when such district has been established without their approval and railroad taxes collected on account of the new district, the common school district injured thereby has a cause of action for its proportion thereof, to have ascertained and determined the boundary between the two districts, and to compel the entry by the county superintendent of the boundary on his books and certification thereof to the railroads affected.[34] In the matter of establishing or refusing to establish a school district, the duties of the county superintendent, in Kentucky, are statutory [35] and purely administrative,[36] and in performing them he cannot be made to observe the personal interests of any individual or class but must look alone to the public interest.[37] Hence the act is not effected until so entered on the public official record as to notify the public that it is done.[38] A school district cannot be validly established by collusive proceeding in which the court, through the imposition of the parties, is led to issue a mandate requiring the assumed officers of the district to perform their duties.[39] A mere conditional promise of an officer whose administrative duty it is to establish new school districts cannot be made the basis of a claim that a district has been validly established when the statutory requisites for its establishment do not exist.[40] The legality of the organization of a school district cannot be collaterally attacked.[41] When a district has existed and been recognized for a long period of time, the notice required by law as a prerequisite to a valid organization will be presumed,[42] and also that the report of reviewers was filed at a term preceding that at which it was confirmed as required by statute.[43] The power to divide or consolidate districts authorizes the creation of a new district by so dividing the territory of an existing district as to create a new district out of a part of the territory of the old district.[44] A petition by two-thirds of the legal voters of territory to be formed into a new district by dividing an existing one gives jurisdiction under the Illinois statute to create the new district.[45] A court will not exercise its discretion to interfere with the setting aside of the organization of a school district the result of which would be to work an injustice.[46] While prior to the Nebraska act of 1879, providing for the issuing and payment of school district bonds, territory detached from a school district, which was indebted, might be held equitably liable to such district for its proportionate share of the debt,[47] such liability could not be enforced at the suit of the judgment creditor except on allegation and proof that there was insufficient property remaining in the original district liable to pay the existing debt.[48] When territory is detached from a school district, its liability for the debts of the district is determined by the laws then in force[49] and cannot be increased by subsequent legislation.[50] When assented to by the districts interested, the bonded indebtedness of a district from which a new one is formed may lawfully be assumed by the new district in consideration of the surrender to it of its undue proportion of real estate and school houses belonging to the old district.[51] A statute abolishing school districts generally must be read in connection with a prior statute continuing abolished districts so far as may be necessary for the enforcement of their rights and liabilities.[52] Where school districts have been abolished and their property vested in towns and an assessment of a tax provided as the only means of enforcing their liabilities, the school property formerly in the abolished districts cannot be reached by creditors,[53] nor does any liability of the town arise by implication, the statute providing only for voluntary assumption of their liabilities by towns.[54]

Establishment of high schools.[55]—Where a school district bound to furnish high school facilities votes to pay tuition so long as its pupils attending a high school continue attendance there, at the time of voting to contract with an academy for high school instruction, a parent's cause of action for tuition paid for continued attendance of his child at the high school does not depend on the validity of the vote.[56]

Sites.[57]—The Washington statute providing for the calling of a special meeting of voters to determine whether the district shall purchase a school house site does not require that polls shall be kept open for any particular time.[58] Hence a notice of such meeting is not invalidated by omitting to state the hours during which the polls will be kept open.[59] In Iowa the local boards of education have the right to select a new location for a school building on account of material changes in the conditions which led to the rejection of sites previously chosen,[60] and their finding that such changes have taken place casts the burden on one seeking to impeach their action.[61] The power of a board to adopt a site and award the contract for a building cannot be delegated,[62] and acts under a delegation cannot be sustained because they may in the future be ratified.[63] In Iowa the remedy of one aggrieved by the relocation of a school house site is by appeal and not injunction.[64]

changing the corporate name of the school commissioners of a township to that of trustees is valid.[66] The Oregon Code of Civil Procedure relating to service of notices does not apply to notices of school meetings,[67] and as the posting of such notices is a duty devolving on the clerk of the school board, an entry by him in the record of the time and place where posted is sufficient proof of posting in the absence of any statute requiring proof to be made in a particular manner.[68] Notice of meetings in substantial accord with statutory requirements is sufficient.[69] Ordinarily the question whether notice of a meeting was given is a question of fact.[70] The notice of a meeting must definitely fix the place,[71] and give the requisite information as to the business to be transacted.[72]

The board of education of Greater New York may, for the good of the service and in the interest of economy, abolish an unnecessary position or transfer the person holding it to another position.[73] Nor is a resolution formally abolishing the position,[74] nor a preferment of charges against the incumbent,[75] essential to the exercise of the power. A resident elector of a city and property owner and taxpayer therein having children who are pupils in its public schools may, in Wisconsin, in the name of the state, maintain ouster proceeedings against persons claiming title to the offices of board of school directors.[76] The Wisconsin law of 1905 placing the general management of schools of cities of the first class under the general management and control of a board of school directors is not invalid as special legislation[77] nor as an improper classification of cities,[78] but inasmuch as it confers on the circuit judges of the district wherein such cities are located the power to appoint the directors, it is repugnant to the constitutional provision requiring city officers to be elected or appointed by the authorities thereof.[79] The rule that the due performance of official duty will be presumed applies.[80] While ministerial duties of a board are delegable, an act to be done involving judgment or discretion is not.[81] Under a statute requiring a school board to carry into effect any instructions from an annual meeting of electors on matters within the control of the voters, when the board has determined on the erection of a school house and procured the vote of the annual meeting in favor of it, pursuant to law, the vote and not the record of it is binding on the district.[82] When no record of the proceedings of a school board is made, it may be proved by parol.[83] Records of school boards are not required to be conventionally or formally expressed when they show the action in fact taken.[84]

Selection of officers.[85]—The election of a superintendent whose term of office is to begin after the annual election of members of the committee electing him, in violation of a statute requiring the election to be at the first regular meeting succeeding the annual election of members of the committee, is void,[86] and a custom universally observed of electing the superintendent at any time during the year at the discretion of the committee does not validate it.[87] While one not receiving an appointment as clerk of a school district at a regular or special meeting of the board is not the clerk de jure,[88] yet, where the board for several years recognize him as clerk and adopt and profit by his official acts and knowingly permit others to deal with him as a legal officer, he is thereby constituted a de facto officer [89] and his acts will be deemed to have been authorized by the board.[90] Under the Nebraska statute giving the decisions of the state superintendent on disputed questions the force of law until reversed, his decision in favor of a claimant to a school office by virtue of election thereto, though erroneous, constitutes the claimant a de facto officer in the interim.[91] Where, by reason of changes in the law, officers cease to have a right to perform the functions of their office, they are nevertheless de facto officers.[92] Hence mandamus lies to compel them to turn over official documents and property held by them.[93] In some states the failure of trustees elect to qualify within a specified time entitles the county superintendent to fill the position by appointment.[94] The rule that title to office cannot be tried in injunction proceedings applies.[95]

Qualification of officers.[96]—The section of the Mississippi Code making ineligible as a trustee any one who is a trustee of a private or sectarian school or college in the same separate school district is not retroactive.[97]

Tenure of office.[98]

Salaries.[99]—The title of the Michigan statute creating a law department for the city of Detroit is sufficient to require the corporation counsel appointed thereunder to serve the city's board of education without other compensation than therein provided,[1] and though serving the board as to litigation to which the board could not of its own volition become a party nor be made a party thereto against its will, the corporation counsel is limited to the compensation provided by the act.[2] The

Smith v. Ritchie, 30 Ky. L. R. 339, 98 S. W. 330. salaries of janitors of Greater New York are determined by the board of education under the Greater New York charter and not by the labor law.[3]

Bonds.—The New York school law requiring bonds of town supervisors covering school moneys that may come into his hands from any source to be sued by the county treasurer does not apply to bonds given under the town law.[4]

Supervisory control of officers.—Trustees of school boards, though elected by common councils of civil cities, are not "officers and employes of the government of" a civil city within the Indiana statute giving city councils power to investigate the acts of such officers and employes,[5] nor are such boards "corporations" within the provision that the council may investigate the affairs of any corporation in which it may be interested.[6]

Offenses by officers.—An indictment of a school director for being interested in a contract for the sale of supplies to his district, under the Pennsylvania statute, is within the rule making it sufficient to charge substantially in the language of the statute creating the offense,[7] in the absence of application for a bill of particulars,[8] and as the gravamen of the offense is the being unlawfully interested in the contract,[9] an indictment therefor is not bad for duplicity merely because it charges defendant with being unlawfully interested in contracts for sales to more than one school house in his district.[10] A contract between a school director as an individual or as a member of a firm, and the school district, for the sale of supplies or materials by the former to the latter, is within the statute,[11] nor is a corrupt or dishonest intent or unfairness in the price charged or contracted for the supplies or materials an essential element of the offense.[12] An ambiguous receipt given by a teacher to a school director charged with having received a bribe from the teacher is within the rule permitting parol evidence in explanation of receipts.[13]

§ 5. Property and contracts.[14]—An exemption of school districts from taxation does not exempt them from special assessments.[15] When a city of a lower grade is raised to one of the fourth class, in Kentucky, a board of education created after the change is entitled to possession of the school property therein as against the trustees of a former graded school district.[16]

School lands.[17]—It is held in Illinois that title to land of a school district may be acquired by adverse possession on the theory that it is not "public property" within the rule exempting the state and its municipalities from the operation of the statutes of limitation.[18] The New Jersey statute enabling Atlantic City to purchase lands, the income of which is required by the constitution to be used for support of the free schools, is valid.[19] When school lands are by congress granted to a state to be held, appropriated, and disposed of for the purpose expressed in the grant, in such manner as the legislature of the state may provide, the legislature must act in subordination to the constitution of the state.[20] Hence, when that instrument has constituted the lands an endowment, an act of the legislature providing for the pledge of the proceeds of sales, leases, and licenses to cut timber on the lands as security for the payment of bonds issued for the erection of school buildings is void.[21] A school district empowered to borrow money and mortgage the real property of the district therefor may mortgage all or part of the property as deemed advisable by the school board.[22]

Validity of contracts in general.[23]—School officers may make such contracts as are essential to the exercise of their granted powers [24] and within the scope of their legal interests.[25] Valid statutory authority is essential to the borrowing of money,[26] but failure to observe formal statutory requirements rendering a note for money borrowed, and used by it unenforceable at law affords no ground for enjoining its payment at the suit of taxpayers.[27]

Manner of contracting.—A majority of a board acting independently of each other and not as a board, where not authorized by the board to act in the premises, cannot by signing a contract bind the board,[28] but such contract is not so far contrary to public policy [29] or fraudulent [30] as to be incapable of ratification, and as in other cases ratification thereof may be express [31] or implied.[32] The rule that contracts will be construed as understood and acted on by the parties applies,[33] as does the rule that no formal writing is required to take a contract out of the statute of frauds when required thereby to be in writing.[34] In Iowa the board of directors cannot contract for the purchase of text books without previously advertising for bids and adopting those for which contract of purchase is made.[35] Usually an award of a contract for school supplies must be made to the lowest responsible bidder,[36] but his responsibility cannot be determined without giving him notice and an opportunity to be heard.[37] On certiorari by the lowest bidder to review the action of a board for failure to obey a law requiring an award of a contract for supplies to the lowest responsible bidder, the burden is on the board to show its reason for passing over petitioner [38] or any other bidder whose bid is lower than that of the bidder who was awarded the contract,[39] and, when its award of a contract is set aside, costs should be awarded against it.[40]

Contractors' bonds.[41]—In Washington notice to a school board that materials have been furnished to a contractor of school work is essential to the right of a materialman having knowledge of the existence of the bond to recover thereon,[42] and the burden is on him to show that he had no knowledge of its existence, as an excuse for failure to give notice.[43]

Contracts for text books, etc.[44]—In South Carolina the state board of education is authorized to contract with publishers of text books for the maintenance of a central wholesale depository from which its agencies and county depositories may be supplied at a discount.[45] When the execution of a bond by a publisher of text books is by statute required as a prerequisite to the adoption of such publisher's books for use in the schools, the bond is supported by a sufficient consideration,[46] and such bonds being for the protection of the public, sureties cannot avail of execution before the wrong officer as a defense.[47] A bond to sell books at as low a price as elsewhere is broken by a contract to sell at a lower price in another state [48] books substantially the same,[49] nor is the prevalence of different conditions an excuse for failure to comply with the statute.[50] Several actions in different counties for different breaches of such bonds may be prosecuted at the same time prior to the rendition of a valid [51] judgment in one of them. A surety on such bond is not necessarily liable for breaches of the principal's contract prior to the execution of the bond,[53] and when the bond does not even by implication provide for liability for violations of the school laws prior to its execution, no such liability can be enforced,[54] but the usual rules of suretyship apply.[55] That books speedily became dilapidated is not sufficient to show breach of a bond to secure quality, but reasonable usage of the books must be shown.[56] Where the only remedy given by statute for the breach of a contract for furnishing text books is the collection of a penalty, a statute repealing the act but continuing all existing contracts executed under the old law leaves the penalty enforceable.[57]

Ratification of action of officers.[58]—The rule that a corporate authority may ratify and confirm any act or contract in its behalf or for its benefit which it might have lawfully done or made originally applies,[59] but after ratification of a contract by a majority vote of the board, with a full attendance, the rule that the action of a majority will not bind the district unless other members have been notified of the meeting or participate therein does not apply.[60] Acts of school boards beyond the power conferred on them by the legislature, but within the power of the legislature to confer may be validated by curative statutes when no vested or contract rights have intervened.[61]

§ 6. Funds, revenues, and taxes.[62]—The Tennessee act of 1897 to provide for the collection and disbursement of public school funds is valid,[63] and under it the school fund does not go into the county treasury.[64] It cannot be appropriated by the county authorities for any purpose,[65] nor is it subject to the warrant of the chairman of the county court,[66] and it is the only law of the state authorizing a suit in relation to the school fund[67] or authorizing counsel fees to be paid out of them.[68] Under that statute the state superintendent of public instruction is authorized to employ counsel to recover and collect school funds illegally disbursed[69] and to maintain actions in general in relation to school matters,[70] but on his refusal to act the school districts affected and their citizens, taxpayers, and scholastic population can maintain such action.[71] Where an attorney is employed to bring a suit in relation to the school fund by a body having no authority to make an express contract therefor, he can retain no part of a fee paid him for the services under an implied contract,[72] especially when the only officer having authority in the premises has no knowledge of the suit for the prosecution of which the attorney was illegally employed.[73]

Debt limit.[74]—Cities operating under special charters in Wisconsin have been relieved from the limitations of their charters as to the amount for which they may become indebted for the erection of high schools.[75] The question whether the indebtedness incurred in the building of a school house exceeds the limit allowed by law on the taxable property of the district for such purpose is to be determined from the assessment and not the minutes of the school meeting,[76] hence the failure of the record of the school meeting to disclose the fact is immaterial.[77]

Tuition and incidental fees.[78]—A school receiving pupils may maintain a suit in its own name for tuition under a statute giving a right of action therefor without prescribing who shall enforce its provisions.[79]

Levy and collection of taxes.[80]—A school district is a municipality to which the taxing power may be delegated.[81] A district indebted to the constitutional limit may nevertheless levy taxes for any lawful purpose within the limits fixed by the laws governing it.[82] for voting in aid of public schools,[83] but such elections are governed by the provisions making a majority in numbers and value controlling,[84] and though the latter contemplates that the voter shall be a property taxpayer at the date of the election, which can be shown only by an assessment,[85] where no assessment has been made for the current year, the assessment for the previous year must govern,[86] but when the assessment for the current year has been made, it necessarily determines who are taxpayers and the values to be voted,[87] nor do the statutory provisions relating to general elections apply in that state,[88] but the failure of property taxpayers voting at a special election to impose a tax for a school to specify on their ballots the property they wish to have counted as a part of their votes is fatal to the validity of the election,[89] nor are voting precincts in that state authorized to impose school taxes by special election.[90] While a levy of taxes by a school district for building purposes is illegal in Illinois unless the building has first been authorized by a vote of the people of the district, a vote authorizing the erection of a new building carries with it authority to levy taxes for the installation of a heating plant therein as part of the new building.[91] An election to vote on a proposition to levy a school tax, as well as a levy predicated thereon, is void under the Texas statutes unless the vote is for a specific tax.[92] The validity of an election under the North Carolina private act of 1905, creating a graded school district to include the town of Robersonville, does not depend on there having been a new registration of election.[93] Personal opportunity to participate in the proceedings which result in the imposition of a tax or to participate in the election of the officers levying the same is not essential to the liability of any particular taxpayer therefor in the absence of statute or constitutional provision giving him such right.[94] When the authority of a school board to levy a tax is derived from a vote at a preceding annual meeting, it is immaterial as affecting the liability of property on which it is assessed for the payment of the same whether the certification thereof was prior or subsequent to the incorporation of the property into the district.[95] In Iowa women are permitted to vote on a proposal to levy a tax for building a school house,[96] but save for sex they must have the same qualifications as men.[97] A statute requiring a voter to designate his vote on a proposal to levy a tax by writing the word "Yes" or "No" in an appropriate place on the ballot is directory only.[98] Mistakes of officials and not of electors in the conduct of an election will not defeat an election fairly held unless prejudice is shown,[99] especially where the ballots were prepared by officials of the school township and the mistake was theirs and not the mistake of the electors, none of who were shown to have been misled thereby.[1] In Iowa notice to electors of a proposal to vote a tax for building a school house when posted by the board's secretary in at least five public places for not less than ten days next preceding the day of the annual meeting of electors, was sufficient even prior to the repeal of the section of the Code requiring notices to be posted at the door of each school house and also at or near the last meeting place.[2] Residence as affecting the right to vote depends on the testimony not only as to residence but also as to intent.[3] It is true equally as to contests of elections to impose school taxes as to other election contests that courts of equity have not inherently and had not at common law jurisdiction to try them.[4] In Texas, when cities constituting independent school districts have voted to be under the control of a board of trustees rather than the city council, the trustees are vested with the absolute control and management of the schools therein,[5] and, when requisition is made by them on the council to levy a tax determined upon by them, the council cannot refuse to make the levy.[6] Under the California statutes relating to high schools it has been held that no vote of the district is necessary to authorize the levy of a tax for the purchase of a site,[7] that the levy of a tax for the construction and maintenance thereof before the acquirement of a suitable lot is valid,[8] that when a levy made is inadequate, a further levy may be made on a new additional estimate being filed with the board of supervisors of the county,[9] and that such statutes are not controlled by those relating to the common schools.[10] While a levy at the maximum rate in Illinois requires the use of the state board of equalization valuation in computation, a levy at less than the maximum requires a computation and extension of the tax on the valuation fixed by the county board of review of the general property and the corporate properties as assessed by the state board of equalization.[11] Certificates of levy of taxes by members of the board of education being amendable under the Illinois revenue act, the fact that they are not signed by a majority of the members of the board of education is not conclusive that they were not made and the tax levied by the acts and authority of the board,[12] and the requirement that they state that the levy was made either for educational or building purposes may be waived.[13] The estate of an infant is not liable for school taxes in a district wherein neither the infant nor his curator resides or has resided since their levy.[14] The Georgia statute of 1905 providing for the creation and operation of local tax district schools is valid [15] except as to those provisions of the act which authorize the imposition of an ad valorem tax only on property of taxpayers required by law to make return of their property to the county tax receiver,[16] and railroad property, though not specially mentioned in the act, is subject to the tax authorized thereby[17] in the assessment of which, by the county authorities, resort may be had to the returns made by the railroads affected to the comptroller general,[18] even though the act confers no express authority so to do,[19] or in the event such roads are in default with respect to their returns, the assessment laid on their property by the comptroller general may likewise be looked to and used by the county authorities in the collection of the tax,[20] and the tax collector is authorized to issue execution in the enforcement of the tax,[21] but the act is not retrospective in its operation.[22] The fact that a school district is organized subsequently to the date on which personalty is required to be listed for taxation does not render a levy made after its organization invalid as to personalty within the territory comprising the district at all times from and after the date it was required to be listed for taxation and which was not subjected to school taxes for that year in any other district.[23] Substantial compliance with statute authorizing the levy of a special tax for school purposes suffices to validate the proceedings,[24] especially when official action has been taken predicated on a compliance with the statute.[25] One objecting to a levy as informal has the burden of showing the informality.[26] A body claiming to act as a board of education only under a law which has been repealed cannot constitute a de facto board under an existing law so as to make their acts in levying taxes binding on the taxpayers.[27] On repeal of a special charter of a city and its reincorporation under a general law, a levy of taxes for school purposes thereafter made must conform to the general law on the subject,[28] nor can an amendment of an estimate be made to conform to a certificate required by an existing law when made by a body acting as a board of education only under a law that had been repealed.[29] It is within the power of a school district, under the Nebraska statute, by its electors and officers, to procure the opening of a road and to pay therefor by levying a tax for that purpose,[30] and neither the necessity therefor[31] nor the propriety of allowances made to property owners in the assessment of damages can be inquired into collaterally.[32]

In a proceeding to quiet title to land predicated on the invalidity of a sale thereof for taxes levied by a school district, no inquiry can be made into the qualifications of a de facto election board who officiated at the election pursuant to which the tax was levied.[33] Under the statutes of Wyoming the board of county commissioners has not sufficient interest in taxes voted by a school district to enable it to maintain injunction to restrain the county treasurer from paying taxes over to the district.[34] When school trustees act in the exercise of their duties merely in furnishing estimates of taxes which are to be levied by another body, injunction does not lie at the suit of a taxpayer to prevent them from acting even under a void election.[35] The averment of a bill to enjoin the levy of a special assessment for the erection of a school building that the trustees do not now, and never did, own any lot does not meet the contingency that they may have made provision for a lot.[36]

School bonds.[37]—It is held in Arkansas that a school district is not a municipality within the constitutional inhibition that no county, city, town, or municipality shall issue any interest bearing evidence of indebtedness.[38] A school district empowered to borrow money and issue evidences of indebtedness therefor has power to issue negotiable bonds with interest coupons attached.[39] Inhabitants of contiguous territory attached to a city for school purposes are not entitled to vote on the question of bonding a city to build a school house.[40] The issue of bonds to build a school house is a school matter on which women are entitled to vote in Wisconsin.[41] Spinsters who are taxpayers in a school district,[42] and widows who are such, or have children within school age, are in Kentucky entitled to vote on the question of taxing the district for school purposes.[43] Proceedings for election on bond issue need not specify the term or interest rate of the bonds when the statute fixes them,[44] nor show the amount further than that it is within the debt limit.[45] Canvass and return of votes at a school district election by the county commission are not required in Kentucky.[46] A ballot used at a district meeting referring to previous notices and resolutions on same subject-matter must be construed in connection therewith.[47] Hence a ballot omitting to state the limit of a proposed indebtedness is sufficient when the limit is disclosed in the notices and resolutions.[48] Mere discussion of consolidation of subdistricts without official action thereon does not warrant the assumption that a resolution submitting the question of raising funds for the building of a central school house did not truly express the purpose of the board so as to warrant a court of equity in declaring illegal action in favor of the building proposition at an annual meeting of electors and enjoining the issuance of bonds.[49]

Orders and warrants for payment of claims.[50]—It is held in Oregon that a board authorized to incur an indebtedness for the erection of a school building is not required to advertise at one time for subscriptions for the entire amount of the indebtedness.[51]

Apportionment of funds.[52]—The South Carolina act of 1904, denying to counties voting out dispensaries any portion of the surplus remaining of the dispensary school fund after the deficiency in the various school funds have been made up as required by law, is to that extent inconsistent with the principle of apportionment contemplated by the constitution and therefore void,[53] but the apportionment provision being separable from the rest of the act does not cause the whole act to fall.[54]

Appropriations.—In Kentucky the legislature is authorized to make appropriations for the benefit of the state normal schools without submitting the question to the voters.[55]

§ 7. Teachers and instruction.[56] Contracts of employment.[57]—When the employment of a teacher is within the power of the trustees of the district, their ratification of an invalid appointment binds the district.[58] A teacher's contract signed by another for her by her authority is valid.[59] Where a teacher's contract is entered into at a trustee's meeting, a subsequent statement of one of the trustees at the meeting not embodied in the contract or recorded in the minutes as to the time the school shall begin is no part of the contract,[60] and her failure to begin the school on the date specified in the contract because of a flood preventing her reaching the school house for three days after the school was due to begin did not authorize the employment of another teacher.[61] The Alabama act of 1903, giving the county board of education authority in certain cases to employ teachers, has no application to a district in which a school was established before its passage.[62] One holding a valid contract to teach a school may, as against another claiming to have a contract to teach the same school, maintain injunction to prevent interference with or molestation of him by the latter,[63] but, unless the validity of the plaintiff's contract is established, he is not entitled to injunction,[64] nor will injunction lie to restrain a teacher from teaching a school which she has been put in possession of by and under contract with de facto officers.[65]

Dismissal, suspension, and reassignment.[66]—A school board with general powers as to the employment of teachers may require a stipulation for dismissal in contracts of employment,[67] and notice of dismissal of a teacher may be given before the school begins under a contract providing for dismissal on a specified notice.[68] A teacher voluntarily resigning on becoming married[69] has no right to reinstatement merely because a regulation requiring resignations in such cases is subsequently declared illegal.[70] Where a contract for teaching recites that the teacher is, but does not require him to be, the holder of a license of a specified grade, it is not ground for rescission that prior to the beginning of the term, he passes examination and obtains a lower grade license.[71]

Breach of contract.[72]—A teacher discharged for just cause is entitled to pay only for services rendered, but if the discharge is without cause he is entitled to the agreed compensation for the term less what he has earned at other employment,[73] and evidence is admissible to explain failure to reduce the damage by obtaining other employment.[74] In such case the burden is on defendant to show that plaintiff could have lessened his damages by obtaining employment elsewhere.[75] In Washington an appeal to the county superintendent from a wrongful dismissal by a school board, involving the fitness of a teacher is a condition precedent to his right to sue for breach of contract.[76]

Salary.[77]—A statute prescribing a minimum salary for teachers does not prevent reduction of salaries in excess of the minimum,[78] and this is true notwithstanding the statute also confers the right to continuous employment on the person to whose salaries the reductions apply.[79] The Ohio law permitting teachers to draw pay for attendance at institute is not void for uncertainty in respect to those not under contract for employment at the time the institute is held.[80]

Offenses by teachers or applicants for teachers' licenses.—The Texas statute making the procurement or use by applicants for teachers' licenses of the questions previously prepared by the state superintendent of public instruction a penal offense is valid,[81] but it is essential to a conviction thereunder that the use shall have been fraudulent.[82]

§ 8. Control and discipline of scholars, and regulation of attendance.[83]—Under the statutes of Washington rules of a school board depriving members of school fraternities of all privileges of the schools except class attendance are valid notwithstanding the fraternity meetings are held at the homes of the members and membership therein is with the consent of parents.[84] Notice of expulsion or formal trial is not necessary under the Nebraska statute authorizing the expulsion of pupils for gross misdemeanors and persistent disobedience,[85] and the board may adopt any mode of procedure in obtaining information or evidence of conduct of the pupil which it deems best,[86] but, in an action to procure the reinstatement of a pupil that has been expelled, his misconduct can only be shown by witnesses cognizant of the facts.[87] Where a school board may proceed without notice or formal trial to suspend or expel a pupil, mandamus is the proper proceeding to review the action of the board.[88]

rests upon the board of public education and its sectional boards.[91] Though a board of education is not liable for the negligent acts of its subordinates,[92] the fact that the duty of repairing school rooms falls on subordinates does not exonerate the board from negligence in failing to close a school room dangerously out of repair, when the liability for negligence is established as the law of the case.[93] Conspiracy by a president of a school board to deprive a teacher of her position is not made out by proof that he acted in the line of his duty and in good faith on reports from fellow teachers in making an investigation which resulted in a demand for her resignation.[94]

§ 10. Decisions, rulings, and orders of school officers, and review of the same.[95]—At the suit of a citizen taxpayer or patron, courts will not interfere with the exercise by a board of education of its discretion unless such discretion is manifestly abused to the oppression of the complainant,[96] but the acts of a school board, whether ministerial or judicial, are vitiated by fraud participated in by it,[97] and will be set aside by a court of competent jurisdiction.[98] Remedy by appeal when provided is usually exclusive.[99] The remedy for action working a wrongful exclusion of pupils is ordinarily by mandamus to compel their admission, not by injunction.[1] In Colorado the county superintendent of schools has jurisdiction of an appeal from a district school board closing a district school earlier than customary in the district.[2] When the right of appeal is granted from decisions of local boards to higher officials, the jurisdiction of the latter is appellate only and no original action may be taken nor new conditions imposed,[3] and this rule applies to the decision of the state superintendent on appeal to him as well as to the decisions of the county superintendent.[4] When a school committee of a town is invested by statute with the general charge and superintendence of the schools of the town, a vote of the town assuming to interfere with the committee's decisions respecting the closing of schools and the disposition of pupils made in good faith by the committee is inoperative.[5] It has been held that while the county commissioners may, under the

Ohio statutes, step in and perform the ministerial duties of a township board of education which it has voluntarily or wilfully failed to perform, the county board cannot do so with reference to judicial duties of the township board.[6]

§ 11. Actions and litigation.[7]—The Kentucky statute permitting school boards of cities of the first class to sue to recover property escheated from alienage, failure of kindred, or other causes, is valid [8] and entitles such boards to sue for real estate held by corporations in such cities for more than five years in excess of their business requirements, and therefore escheated under the constitution of the state.[9] The rule that a simple averment as to the erroneous naming of an obligee in an instrument in a direct action thereon meets all reasonable requirements, without the necessity of a reformation, applies in an action on a school officer's bond even against sureties.[10] The Alabama Girls' Industrial school is a mere agency of the state,[11] hence an action against it is one against the state which is forbidden by the constitution,[12] and this inhibition applies as well to a cross bill in an equitable proceeding by it under which affirmative relief is sought as to a suit directly against it,[13] and since the government is not expressly or by necessary implication included in the constitutional grant of power to corporations generally to sue and be sued, that provision is not apposite,[14] nor is the objection waived by failure to raise the question of jurisdiction in the trial court.[15] The Nebraska statute making it the duty of the school treasurer to appear for and on behalf of the district does not require that he shall control the prosecution or defense of suits by or against school district officers suing or being sued in their official capacity where the district is not a party.[16] While the statute of limitations does not run against the trustees of a school district with respect to matters respecting strictly public rights any more than against the state or other municipal corporation, property held for the use of a particular school district is not subject to the exemption because not "public property" within the rule.[17] Interference with a school board in its control of the schools within its jurisdiction, by persons who unlawfully take possession of school houses in the board's subdistricts and unlawfully assume authority to teach school therein will be restrained.[18] Federal equity jurisdiction attaches to a suit by a bondholder of a school district to enforce the liability of the district after its dissolution by division into new districts under a statute providing for an equitable division of property of the old between the new districts.[19] When school officials while acting within the line of their duty bring on litigation against themselves individually, they are entitled to be indemnified by their municipality for expenses incurred in making defense.[20] The court may take cognizance of facts agreed to by school districts adversely interested and approve an adjustment of their affairs which the law permits and which they agree is justified or required by the undisputed facts without hearing testimony.[21]

§ 12. Libraries, reading rooms, and other auxiliary educational institutions.[22] A library dedicated to the use of an indefinite class of persons is a charity,[23] and hence its property cannot lawfully be seized and sold on execution even under a judgment in tort against it arising out of the negligence of its agents;[24] and though the judgment be allowed to be taken and the property levied on and sold on execution thereunder without the question of exemption being raised, it may nevertheless be recovered in a suit against the purchaser at the execution sale or those claiming under him.[25] The Indiana statute creating a library board to be appointed by the common council of civil cities of a certain population and investing the board with all the power concerning the particular subject-matter that the law permits to be exercised, including the levy of taxes, is valid.[26]

§ 13. Private schools.[27]—A university which is a private corporation, but organized for purely charitable purposes, is within the rule that charitable corporations are not liable for the negligent acts of their employes.[28] A voluntary conveyance of land in fee to trustees and their successors in trust, that they shall erect certain academies or seminaries thereon and a church for the use of members of a particular sect, creates an educational and religious trust,[29] and, on the failure of trustees, equity will enforce the same by the appointment of others on the application of a person authorized to bring the action.[30] Statutes authorizing churches themselves or their trustees to hold property conveyed to them for church purposes for their use by succession by church government or rules of discipline exercised by

26. In view of the provision of the Indiana constitution making it the duty of the legislature to encourage by all suitable means moral, intellectual, scientific, and agricultural improvement, it cannot be said to be an unlawful delegation of the power of taxation (School City of Marion v. Forest [Ind.] 78 N. E. 187), and, as no franchise or authority which such cities did not already possess is granted, no corporation is created by the act (Id.). Hence it is not within the constitutional inhibition that no corporation, other than banking, shall be created by special act. Id. While it is an exercise of a power specially granted to the legislature, it is not a local or special law within that particular inhibition but falls within the constitutional provision under which the question as to whether a general law can be made applicable to the whole state is one for the legislature. Id. Nor is it invalid because of a provision therein authorizing the council to appoint the trustees on petition of at least one hundred citizens and taxpayers, nor a delegation of legislative power (Id), nor does it grant any invidious privilege or deny any person equal protection of the laws or authorize petitioners to levy taxes (Id.).

A member of a church in whose favor an educational and religious trust is created is a beneficiary of the trust. Id.

them do not apply when the trust is in part educational.[31] The right to teach white and negro children in a private school at the same time and place is not a property right.[32] The provision of the Kentucky statute prohibiting the maintenance or operation of colleges, schools, or institutions, where the white and negro races are received as pupils for instruction, that private institutions may maintain district branches in a different locality "not less than twenty-five miles distant" for the education exclusively of one race or color,[33] is invalid, but being separable from the rest of the act its invalidity does not render the entire act a nullity.[34]

SCIRE FACIAS.[35]

Scire facias in the Federal courts is an original suit [36] in which the writ takes the place of the declaration, and its sufficiency must be determined by its averments alone.[37] While errors in the writ which are apparent from the record may be corrected by amendment,[38] there must be no material variance between the writ and the record,[39] which is admissible to establish the cause of action.[40] Defendants in a scire facias in the Federal district court, where more than twenty dollars is involved, are entitled to a jury trial of issues of fact.[41] While nonjurisdictional matters affecting the judgment on which the writ issued cannot be asserted as a defense,[42] want of jurisdiction in the court rendering it is available if apparent on the face of the record.[43] Two returns of nihil to successive writs of scire facias sur mortgage are equivalent to a return of scire feci.[44]

§ 1. Nature and elements of the tort.[52]—Seduction is the act of inducing a woman of previous chaste character,[53] by the use of arts, persuasions, wiles, and promises,[54] to submit to sexual intercourse.[55]

§ 2. Civil remedies and procedure.[56]—The common-law tort action is based upon loss of service and can be maintained only by one sustaining the relation of master and servant to the one seduced,[57] the woman having no cause of action in her own right except in unusual cases.[58]

Pleadings.[59]—An allegation that defendant "seduced" plaintiff is a sufficient averment of chastity.[60] Notice of the defense of unchastity is not required by the circuit court rules of Michigan.[61]

Evidence.[62]—Where intercourse is continued after the seduction, being induced by the same seductive promises, evidence of such subsequent acts and the birth of a child resulting therefrom is admissible.[63] Hearsay testimony is inadmissible.[64] Plaintiff must prove that she was unmarried at the time of the intercourse.[65] Strict proof of the date of the promise of marriage as alleged is not required.[66]

§ 3. The crime.[67]—The seduction of a virtuous [68] woman under a promise of marriage is a crime in most states. It is generlly held that the promise must have been absolute [69] and prosecutrix must have yielded in reliance thereon [70] though it is not necessary that sexual intercourse ensue immediately upon the promise.[71] A request by prosecutrix that defendant keep his promise and a refusal are not necessary.[72]

§ 4. Indictment and prosecution.[73]—An indictment in the language of the statute is usually sufficient.[74] Chastity at the time of intercourse must be alleged.[75]

Suspension of prosecution by marriage.[76]—Where an offer of marriage is made a defense, such offer must be kept open for acceptance until the time of trial.[77] A statute providing for the revival of a suspended prosecution upon wrongful abandonment is applicable only where the marriage was entered into for the purpose of defeating a prosecution already commenced,[78] and it is unconstitutional in those states where a speedy trial is guaranteed.[79]

Burden of proof and evidence.[80]—The state must prove all the essential elements beyond a reasonable doubt,[81] including reformation where prior illicit rela-

70. It is not necessary that defendant promise to marry on the express condition that prosecutrix submit to his embraces, but it is sufficient if the jury can infer to the exclusion of a reasonable doubt that the seduction was accomplished by reason of the promise. State v. Ring, 142 N. C. 596, 55 S. E. 194. Evidence held to show that prosecutrix submitted in reliance on defendant's promise of marriage and not to satisfy her own lustful desires. Id. 75. An indictment alleging that accused had sexual intercourse with prosecutrix, she "being then and there an unmarried female of previous chaste character," sufficiently alleges chastity at the time of seduction. State v. Sortviet [Minn.] 110 N. W. 100.

79. Acts 28th Leg. p. 221, c. 136, is violative of Const. art. 1, § 10, guarantying a speedy trial. Waldon v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 455, 98 S. W. 848. Also held not to make the abandonment seduction. Id.

80. See 6 C. L. 1440.

81. Promise of marriage held proven: Where the accused takes the witness stand and does not deny the promise of marriage testified to by the prosecutrix. State v. Slattery [N. J. Law] 65 A. 866. Positive testimony of prosecutrix as to the promise of tions are shown,[92] the question being one for the jury.[83] In many states prosecutrix must be corroborated both as to the promise of marriage and the act of intercourse,[84] but circumstantial corroboration is usually sufficient.[85]

Some states demand chastity in prosecutrix while others merely require a good repute in respect thereto, which distinction is material in determining the admissibility of evidence, since intimacy [88] and indecent familiarity with other men [87] may be shown in the former case, while specific acts of unchastity [88] and lewdness [89] are inadmissible in the latter. Though chastity is the issue, good repute is admissible in proof thereof,[90] especially after prosecutrix's character has been impeached.[91] A teacher's certificate reciting prosecutrix to be a person of good moral character is not admissible to show repute.[92]

The fact of a promise of marriage may be shown by circumstances,[93] but there seems to be a conflict as to the admissibility of declarations of prosecutrix to third persons in respect to such promise.[94]

Testimony of prosecutrix as to the inducements which caused her to yield,[95] and that at a certain time she determined to cease illicit relations and to lead a virtuous life thereafter,[96] is not objectionable as a mere conclusion.

Celibacy may be established by circumstances,[97] and such state being shown to marriage corroborated by statements of defendant to her brother-in-law that she was his intended wife, held sufficient to take the issue to the jury. Id.

82, 83. State v. Bennett [Iowa] 110 N. W. 150.

84. Proof of one does not furnish the corroboration of the other required by the statute. Russell v. State [Neb.] 110 N. W. 380. Under Kirby's Dig. § 2043, prosecutrix need only be corroborated as to promise of marriage and the act of intercourse. Lasater v. State, 77 Ark. 468, 94 S. W. 59. Where there was evidence of the birth of a child an instruction not to convict unless there was other evidence in corroboration of prosecutrix, connecting defendant with the offense is erroneous as not requiring corroboration both as to the promise of marriage and the act of intercourse. Woolley v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 605, 96 S. W. 27.

85. Corroborating circumstances must have the probative force of a disinterested witness. Russell v. State [Neb.] 110 N. W. 380. The corroboration required by Gen. St. 1901, § 2021 (Gen. St. 1905, § 2112), may be satisfied by proof that the parties were keeping company, conducted themselves as lovers, etc., its sufficiency being for the jury. State v. Waterman [Kan.] 88 P. 1074. Prosecutrix's testimony as to the promise of marriage is sufficiently corroborated where defendant admitted that he kept company with her "pretty regular," that he had had a quarrel with her about permitting another to accompany her home on a certain occasion, and by letters. Lasater v. State, 77 Ark. 468, 94 S. W. 59. While proof of birth of a child is evidence of seduction, it does not tend to connect defendant. State v. Dolan [Iowa] 109 N. W. 609. Instruction held misleading in that the jury might understand that sufficient corroboration might be found in the birth of the child and such other circumstances as they deemed corroborative. State v. Dolan [Iowa] 109 N. W. 609.

86. An instruction limiting its consideration to the discrediting of her claim that her child was the result of her alleged seduction and the improbability of her engagement to defendant held erroneous. State v. Dolan [Iowa] 109 N. W. 609.

87. The fact that prosecutrix permitted indecent liberties to be taken with her person, while evidence to be considered in passing upon her chastity, does not of itself constitute unchastity. State v. Whitley, 141 N. C. 823, 53 S. E. 820. Evidence that prosecutrix consented to have intercourse with a third person if not consummated is inadmissible. Knight v. State [Ala.] 41 So. 850.

Held admissible. State v. Whitley, 141 N. C. 823, 53 S. E. 820. Statements by prosecutrix to her aunt that defendant was going to marry her and had said he would do so as soon as he got out of the mess with the Davis girl are admissible in corroboration of prosecutrix's testimony as to the promise of marriage. SEQUESTRATION.

In Texas.[2]—A justice of the peace may not issue the writ before commencement of the suit.[3] A mere joint tort feasor need not be made a party defendant.[4] The application must describe the property sufficiently to enable the officer to identify it.[5] A transposition of defendant's initials in the writ is fatal, there being no personal service or appearance.[6] A bond in the form prescribed for cases in which personalty is levied on is insufficient as a replevy bond for realty,[7] and cannot be sustained as a common-law bond, the party seeking to enforce it not being in privity with the makers.[8] One who invokes the aid of a writ of sequestration has the burden of proving the facts essential to the rendition of the statutory judgment required in the proceeding.[9] The ownership of property being involved, plaintiff must recover on the strength of his own title,[10] and the burden of proving ownership is upon him.[11] Evidence that plaintiff had a mortgage on the property is admissible on the issue of malice in suing out the writ.[12] A judgment against a defendant who has replevied the property must state separately the value of each article replevied,[13] except where the property has been disposed of and cannot be returned,[14] and must run against the obligors in the replevy bond for the value of the property,[15] but a surety should not be held liable for costs.[16] If plaintiff fails to recover the property sued for, defendant is entitled to a judgment for its restoration to his possession or for its value if it cannot be returned.[17] A motion to quash auxiliary proceedings by sequestration may be filed and acted upon at any time before the case is disposed of.[18] On error to review the validity of a judgment against the sureties on the replevin bond, the court cannot consider facts transpiring subsequent to its rendition.[19]

Damages for wrongful sequestration.[20]

In Louisiana.[21]—In a possessory action the writ is maintained without reference to the ownership of the property.[22] The writ does not become functus officio when judgment in the cause is rendered or becomes executory,[23] but if maintained by that judgment it holds the property seized in order that the judgment may be executed.[24] A writ issued in a separate proceeding after an appeal from a judgment in a possessory action, but as ancillary to the defense therein, is not dissolved at the cost of defendant at whose instance it was issued by reason of the silence of the decree in the appellate court dismissing the action,[25] but if properly issued originally is thereby maintained at the cost of plaintiff.[26] Where a writ becomes necessary in aid of a defense and the action is dismissed on appeal and the writ maintained, the costs thereof should be taxed to plaintiff.[27]

The sheriff is entitled to a reasonable compensation for administering sequestered property.[28] When the parties leave the amount of the compensation to be fixed by the court without the taking of testimony, the court's decision will be deemed correct, no improper charges affirmatively appearing.[29]

SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM.

§ 1. Nature and Extent of Right in General (1875).
§ 2. To be Available as a Set-off or Counterclaim, a Demand Must, Ordinarily, Have Been a Vested and Subsisting Cause of Action at the Time of the Commencement of Plaintiff's Suit (1878).
§ 3. Demands Must Be Mutual, and the Parties Must Stand in the Same Right and Capacity (1878).
§ 4. To Admit of Set-off or Counterclaim the Main Action Must be Similar in Form and Remedy to That Required for the Other (1879).
§ 5. Pleading and Practice (1880).

§ 1. Nature and extent of right in general. Equitable set-off.[30]—Cross demands though arising out of disconnected transactions and lacking in mutuality may be enforced in equity by way of offset whenever necessary to prevent wrong and injustice.[31] Though one may not have an immediate right to an equitable set-off

31. Trustee's estate in suit for accounting held entitled to set off certain claims held against cestue que trust individually, for the reason that his claims cannot yet be enforced,[32] he may be entitled to a continuance of the main action to enable him to obtain a judgment thereon which can be set off.[33] Where an insolvent makes an assignment owing a debt due at the time, and also holding a claim not yet due against the creditor whom he so owes, the latter may offset his claim against that of the assignee.[34] A counterclaim of an equitable lien under an agreement by which plaintiff was to deliver property to defendant as security is good in an action of replevin though defendant wrongfully obtained possession of the property.[35] A mortgagor of personalty cannot have foreclosure enjoined in order to avail himself of set-off in equity when plaintiff is neither insolvent nor a nonresident.[36] Where neither a debtor nor his estate has been adjudicated insolvent, the question of actual insolvency cannot be litigated in Massachusetts in an action by his executor in order to enable defendant to assert an equitable set-off.[37] An equitable claim cannot be set off in a Federal court in an action at law.[38]

Statutory set-off and counterclaim.[39]—When the respective claims are liquidated, a counterclaim is available regardless of any agreement that it shall be.[40]

It is generally provided by statute, in effect, that a counterclaim or set-off must be either a cause of action arising out of the contract or transaction set forth in the complaint as the basis of plaintiff's claim,[41] or connected with the subject of the action,[42] or, in an action on contract, any other cause of action arising also on con-

the latter's estate being insolvent. Smith v. Perry, 197 Mo. 438, 95 S. W. 337. In suit to recover against purchaser of property wrongfully sold under a mortgage, the amount of the mortgage was properly deducted. Russell v. Deutschman [Tex. Civ. App.] 100 S. W. 1164.

41. In suit for rent of property, counterclaim for breach of warranty of certain machinery held not to arise out of transaction set forth in complaint. Harron v. Wilson, Lyon & Co. [Cal. App.] 88 P. 512. In suit for breach of contract to accept goods, a claim for money alleged to have been obtained by plaintiff by duress in that plaintiff had exacted it as a consideration for extending notes held not to arise from the transaction set forth in complaint. Lilienthal v. Bechtel Brew. Co., 102 N. Y. S. 1051. In an action for goods sold defendant may not counterclaim damages for a wrongful attachment of the goods in the action. Abernathy v. Myer-Bridges Coffee & Spice Co., 30 Ky. L. R. 844, 99 S. W. 942. But see this case in 30 Ky. L. R. 1236, 100 S. W. 862, where the counterclaim is sustained on the ground that plaintiff was a nonresident. Id. In suit for breach of contract to deliver cans, only so much of a note held against plaintiff could be counterclaimed as represented the price of cans delivered under the contract out of which the controversy arose. Californian Canneries Co. v. Pacific Sheet Metal Works, 144 F. 886. In suit on a contract permitting defendant to fill in a lot belonging to plaintiff, the violation of the contract by plaintiff in stopping the work was a proper subject of counterclaim. Johnston v. O'Shea, 118 Mo. App. 287, 94 S. W. 783. In suit to recover for stock handled by defendant, allegations that defendant had previously sold plaintiff part of the stock and that all the stock was to be sold by defendant who was to reimburse himself the amount owing by plaintiff, held a proper plea in reconvention, the same growing out of plaintiff's demand. McBurnett v. Lampkin [Tex. Civ. App.] 101 S. W. 864.

42. Counterclaim for breach of warranty did not show connection with subject of action for rent. Harron v. Wilson, Lyon & Co. [Cal. App.] 88 P. 512. In suit for pasturage of cattle, a claim for shortage in cattle sold defendant could not be set off where it did not arise out of, and was not incident to, or connected with, the pasturage of the cattle. Rev. St. 1895, art. 755. Gage v. Hunter [Tex. Civ. App.] 94 S. W. 1104. In suit by lessee against lessor for conversion of buildings, lessor could not counterclaim damages for lessee's failure to bore for oil as required tract and existing at the commencement of the action,[43] and that it must tend to diminish or defeat plaintiff's recovery.[44] In determining what constitutes a "transaction" and whether different claims arise therefrom, the court may take into account all the facts set up by both parties.[45] A partial failure of consideration due to innocent mistake in an inventory may be enforced by way of counterclaim in an action for the purchase price of an interest in a firm.[46] In a suit to enjoin a trespass, defendant may show that plaintiff's claim rests upon a disputed boundary line and have the true line determined,[47] and a plea for a specific performance is available as a counterclaim in an action by a purchaser to recover money paid based on the unmarketability of title.[48]

While independent torts may not be offset,[49] it is sufficient that there exists in the case an element of contract either express or implied,[50] and a counterclaim in contract is properly allowed if both causes of action arise out of the same transaction, whether plaintiff's action is in contract or in tort.[51]

Ordinarily, an independent, unliquidated, claim cannot be offset against a liquidated one,[52] but in Kentucky an unliquidated claim in tort may be used as a set-off against a non-resident,[53] and it has also been held that where the facts out of which an alleged set-off arises are such that an approximate amount only can be stated, by the lease. Duff v. Bailey, 29 Ky. L. R. 919, 96 S. W. 577. In suit for goods sold a wrongful attachment of the goods is not connected with the subject of the action. Abernathy v. Myer-Bridges Coffee & Spice Co., 30 Ky. L. R. 844, 99 S. W. 942. On rehearing in 30 Ky. L. R. 1236, 100 S. W. 862, the counterclaim in this case is sustained on the ground that plaintiff was a nonresident. Id. In replevin for a horse, an equitable lien resting in an agreement to deliver the horse to defendant as security is connected with the cause of action as required by Burn's Ann. St. 1901, § 353. Reardon v. Higgins [Ind. App.] 79 N. E. 208. Where in an action on a note defendant paid it in ignorance of an extension a claim for attorney's fees, also paid, held a proper counterclaim, so that the court had jurisdiction thereof, though the claim was below $500 and plaintiff resided in another county. Collins v. Kelsey [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 955, 97 S. W. 122. In suit for price of putting glass in show cases, defendant held entitled to counterclaim damages to the woodwork. Hutkoff v. Lauckhardt, 101 N. Y. S. 12. No objection that damage was slight. Id.

44. A counterclaim by an attorney sued for the value of insurance policies, the purchase of which by him was alleged to have inured to the benefit of plaintiffs, his clients, alleging that defendant also purchased certain deficiency judgments against plaintiffs, held not to tend to diminish or defeat plaintiffs' recovery as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 501. Nichols v. Riley, 103 N. Y. S. 554.

45. The attempt of two parties to divide coal in the ground according to a surface line difficult to determine is a "transaction" within Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 354, and where during such attempt each party inadvertently took an equal amount of coal from the land of the other and one sued to recover for the coal taken, the claim of the other for the coal taken from him arose out of the transaction set forth in the complaint and could be set off. Excelsior Clay Works v. De Camp [Ind. App.] 80 N. E. 981.

46. Resources and liabilities incorrectly stated. Steckbauer v. Leykom [Wis.] 110 N. W. 217.

47. Is in nature of a counterclaim arising out of transaction set out in complaint and connected with subject-matter of action. Hackett v. Kanne, 98 Minn. 240, 107 N. W. 1131.

48. Bloomgarden v. Hoffmann, 102 N. Y. S. 20. Where plaintiff appealed from a judgment requiring him to take the land but failed to give a bond as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1323, defendant could sell the land as therein provided without being guilty of contempt. Id.

49. Trespasses. Smith v. Alvord [Utah] 88 P. 16.

50. In suit to recover for coal deposits inadvertently removed, defendant could set off a claim for coal innocently taken by plaintiff. Excelsior Clay Works v. De Camp [Ind. App.] 80 N. E. 981.

51. Suit for fraudulent representations in sale of a horse and counterclaim for balance of price. Vandervort v. Mink, 113 App. Div. 601, 98 N. Y. S. 772.

52. A claim for damages for failure to deliver goods in pursuance of an executory contract of sale is a claim for unliquidated damages and is therefore not the subject of a set-off. Godkin v. Bailey [N. J. Err. & App.] 65 A. 1032. In an action for the price of goods, a claim for a certain number of sacks shortage in a previous sale at a certain price per sack and for certain sacks that were worthless held liquidated and capable of set-off. Harrington Lumber Co. v. Smith [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 110.

53. Claim for wrongful attachment of goods the price of which was sued for. Abernathy v. Myer-Bridges Coffee & Spice Co., 30 Ky. L. R. 1236, 100 S. W. 862.

it is no objection that a set-off is not of a certain liquidated amount.[54] Counterclaims are often recognized by the courts in order that the controversies between the parties may be disposed of in a single action and full justice be done to all concerned, though they may not fall strictly within the terms of any statute.[55]

Since a set-off does not attack plaintiff's claim,[56] it cannot be pleaded by a mortgagor in an affidavit of illegality to the foreclosure of the mortgage,[57] though recoupment may be so pleaded.[58]

Recoupment.[59]—To be available in recoupment, the matters alleged must be immediately connected with or arise out of the same contract or suit on which plaintiff relies.[60] When suit is brought to recover money paid on a contract because of defendant's failure to perform after a breach by plaintiff, the former may recover his damages for the breach by way of recoupment,[61] and this right is not affected by the fact that the contract had been assigned by defendant prior to the action.[62] A mortgagor may avail himself of recoupment in an affidavit of illegality to the foreclosure of the mortgage.[63] Recoupment, as distinguished from a set-off or counterclaim, is available only to reduce or defeat plaintiff's claim and cannot be made the basis of an independent judgment in favor of defendant.[64]

§ 2. To be available as a set-off or counterclaim, a demand must, ordinarily, have been a vested and subsisting cause of action at the time of the commencement of plaintiff's suit,[65] hence a tenant may not set off damages for breach of the covenant of quiet enjoyment, there having been no eviction when the action was brought.[66]

§ 3. Demands must be mutual,[67] and the parties must stand in the same right and capacity.[68]—A joint debt cannot be pleaded as set-off or counterclaim by one of two joint creditors in a suit by the debtor against such joint creditor alone on his individual debt,[69] but if several defendants are jointly and severally liable on an ob-

W. 166. Certain notes held not proper subjects of set-off against an action on another note, there being no mutuality between the claims thereon and plaintiff's claim. Hooker v. Forrester [Fla.] 43 So. 241. In suit against a payee of a note by an indorser for accommodation of both payee and maker, defendant cannot set off an indebtedness from plaintiff to the maker. Foster v. Balch [Conn.] 65 A. 574. Where executors accounted for money collected by a firm of attorneys though the money had not been returned to them, and subsequently the firm was dissolved, they could set off such money in a suit by one of the attorneys to recover the fees. Lupton v. Taylor [Ind. App.] 78 N. E. 689. In suit to recover certain fees, answer alleging that plaintiff as clerk had collected and failed to account for a judgment in defendant's favor held to state a valid set-off. Chenault v. Norton, 30 Ky. L. R. 875, 99 S. W. 899.

68. See 6 C. L. 1446.

69. Where husband was sued he could not counterclaim a debt due from plaintiff to ligation, any one of them may set off a claim existing solely in his favor though the action be joint in form.[70] In an action brought for the sole benefit of another, defendant may set off a claim against the beneficiary.[71] One not a party to a sealed contract of sale may not counterclaim damages for fraud in its execution in an action against him as indorser on notes given for the purchase price.[72] The claim of a surviving partner for his share of partnership funds in the hands of the widow of the deceased partner is a proper subject of set-off in an action by the widow against the surviving partner on a note, she being the sole representative of the deceased partner and having permitted the partnership affairs to be settled without accounting for the money.[73]

A claim against a decedent may be set up against his administrator if it could have been asserted against intestate in his lifetime.[74] A partnership demand cannot be set up as a counterclaim against an individual liability.[75]

The general rule is that an assignee of a non-negotiable chose in action takes subject to set-offs existing in favor of the debtor before notice of the assignment;[76] but in Texas it is held that where plaintiff assigns his cause of action for value after institution of suit but before answer, a claim against him cannot be set up against the assignee,[77] and a transferee of immatured negotiable paper also takes free from offsets,[78] unless he has knowledge of equities.[79]

§ 4. To admit of set-off or counterclaim the main action must be similar in form and remedy to that required for the other.[80]—A claim in tort will not liquidate one in contract[81] or vice versa,[82] unless both causes of action arise out of the same transaction;[83] but though replevin sounds in tort, a claim resting in contract

Code, § 1563 (31 St. L. 1424, c. 854). McGuire v. Gerstley, 26 App. D. C. 193.

82. In suit to recover money left with defendant by a decedent, an allegation that defendant had refused to pay the money to the executor held insufficient to stamp the action as one in conversion so as to defeat defendant's counterclaims on contract. Lange v. Schile, 101 N. Y. S. 1080. Complaint held to set out conversion of personalty so that a counterclaim could not be litigated in the suit under Code Civ. Proc. § 501, subd. 2, providing for counterclaim in actions on contract. McIntyre v. Smathers, 103 N. Y. S. 873.

83. Counterclaim in contract allowable in may be counterclaimed therein.[84] One who embodies a promissory note in an account with the maker and thereafter discharges the account by credits in his favor will not thereafter be heard to say that the credits cannot be offset against the note.[85] An indebtedness of the plaintiff to the defendant cannot be pleaded as a set-off or counterclaim in an action at law for conversion in a Federal court.[86]

§ 5. Pleading and practice.[87]—In a suit by an assignor, of a chose to the use of the assignee, the defendant has no right to have the assignee made a party for the purpose of setting up a counterclaim against him when the suit can be fully determined without his presence and without prejudice to any one.[88] If a transaction amounts to separate sales by partners of a portion of their interests in a firm, and suit is brought by one for the purchase price of the interest sold by him, the others need not be made parties to enable the purchaser to counterclaim a proportionate part of damages on account of innocent misrepresentations.[89] Defendant need not send plaintiff a statement and ask for credit as a condition precedent to the setting up of claims already due and payable.[90] A statute prohibiting the allowance of claims against persons of unsound mind until verified and proven does not preclude the setting up of unverified claims as a defense to a suit brought for an incompetent.[91]

To be available a set-off or counterclaim must be pleaded,[92] and its sufficiency will be determined without regard to other matters set out in the answer unless connected therewith by direct reference.[93] It must state facts sufficient to constitute a good cause of action if defendant had sued plaintiff independently.[94] Hence mere

91. Ky. St. 1903, § 2154. Action to quiet title and assertion by defendant of liens for claims held against incompetent. Sebree v. Johnson's Committee, 30 Ky. L. R. 681, 99 S. W. 340. In such case, however, the court will not allow the claims to be prosecuted to judgment until the making of the statutory affidavit. Id. Even if the objection had been tenable, the remedy was not by demurrer but by rule to show cause why the counterclaim should not be dismissed. Id.

92. Set-off. Meyer v. Johnson, 122 Ill. App. 87. In a suit by an army officer for extra pay, no deduction could be made for sums improvidently paid, the United States having filed no set-off or counterclaim. United States v. Mitchell, 27 S. Ct. 463. A tenant may prove that the landlord has violated the rent contract and reduce the rent by the damages sustained without filing other pleadings than the statutory affidavit. Smith v. Green [Ga.] 57 S. E. 98.

93. Counterclaim. Harron v. Wilson, Lyon & Co. [Cal. App.] 88 P. 512. Counterclaim held insufficient in itself. Clement v. Dowling, 147 F. 929. The fact that plaintiff is a nonresident need not be set out where it appears from the petition. Unliquidated claim for conversion could be set off on ground that plaintiff was a nonresident where this was shown by petition. Abernathy v. Myer-Bridges Coffee & Spice Co., 30 Ky. L. R. 1236, 100 S. Held sufficient: In suit for attorney's fees, set-off by executors, for money not turned over. Lupton v. Taylor [Ind. App.] 78 N. E. 689. Claim for partnership funds in plaintiff's hands. Schnell v. Schnell [Ind. App.] 80 N. E. 432. For work done and money paid. Belote & Son v. Wilcox [Ala.] 41 So. 673. Labor and services. Snowden v. Snowden, 29 Ky. L. R. 1112, 96 S. W. 922. For money paid to plaintiff's attorney. Ruzeoski v. Wilrodt [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 783, 94 S. W. 142. In suit by clients against an attorney for the value of insurance policies, the purchase of which by defendant was claimed to have inured to the benefit of plaintiffs, a counterclaim that defendant also purchased certain deficiency judgments against plaintiffs held to constitute a cause of action. Nichols v. Riley, 103 N. Y. S. 554.

Held insufficient: Breach of a special agreement by plaintiff who sued on a bond.

defensive matter will not avail.[95] It must also show that it arises out of the transaction set forth in the complaint,[96] or is connected with the subject of the action,[97] or if plaintiff's right arises on contract, a cause of action on contract,[98] and that the cause of action existed at the time of the commencement of plaintiff's action.[99] The joinder of several claims in one paragraph is not ground for demurrer if the facts constitute a valid set-off as to any one of the claims.[1] The practical result of separate and similar pleas filed by two defendants is the same as if they were joined in one.[2] A plea may be good as a set-off though insufficient as a recoupment,[3] and whether a pleading is an answer, a set-off, or a counterclaim will be determined from the facts stated,[4] regardless of what it may be styled;[5] but matters available only as a counterclaim or set-off are not sufficient as a mere defense.[6] A sham counterclaim in fraud of jurisdiction will be stricken.[7]

In Illinois a defendant may recover under a plea of set-off an affirmative judgment against plaintiff for damages, though unliquidated, in excess of plaintiff's demand, providing they arise out of the same contract or transaction as that on which plaintiff sues.[8] In order that a plaintiff may be precluded from contesting a counterclaim by his failure to serve a reply, the alleged counterclaim must be distinctly named as such in the answer.[9] Judgment for failure to answer a counterclaim is not authorized after entry of a formal denial by leave of court,[10] or when the complaint in itself constitutes a denial.[11] When an action is dismissed for want of ca-

Too vague and indefinite. McGuire v. Gerstley, 26 App. D. C. 193, afd. in 27 S. Ct. 332. That plaintiff had induced one of the principals to dissolve a partnership. Id. Counterclaim for duress. Lilienthal v. Bechtel Brewing Co., 102 N. Y. S. 1051. That ex-copartner had received firm mail. Bastable v. Carroll, 101 N. Y. S. 637. Claim under a will not set out. Schnell v. Schnell [Ind. Certain pleas of recoupment held subject to special demurrer for failure to state when a contract was made, etc., and that the damages were reasonably contemplated. Merrison-Trammell Brick Co. v. McWilliams [Ga.] 56 S. E. 306. A plea of recoupment being a cross action by defendant against plaintiff, its allegations as to damages must be as specific and certain as if made in a petition. Whitt v. Blount, 124 Ga. 171, 53 S. E. 205.

95. Counterclaim must be a "cause of action." In suit for waste, allegations setting up equitable title in defendant and asking that it be granted held not to state a counterclaim. Code Civ. Proc. § 691. Erbes v. Smith [Mont.] 88 P. 568. Plea of set-off held not demurrable as containing defense of "rescission and breach of warranty." Belote & Son v. Wilcox [Ala.] 41 So. 673.

96. In suit for rent of property, counterclaim for breach of warranty of certain machinery held not to show that it arose out of that transaction. Harron v. Wilson, Lyon & Co. [Cal. App.] 88 P. 512.

4. Pleading held a counterclaim. Excelsior Clay Works v. DeCamp [Ind. App.] 80 N. E. 981.

5. A pleading shown by its allegations to be a counterclaim will be treated as such though termed a "cross complaint." Reardon v. Higgins [Ind App.] 79 N. E. 208.

6. Though a claim for commissions could have been pleaded as a counterclaim, it was not good as a defense to an action on notes. Prosser v. Maxon, 100 N. Y. S. 815.

7. Claim that hogs killed by defendant had caused it damage to amount of $25 by destroying grass, filed to bring case into district court on appeal. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Bradfield [Okl.] 88 P. 1050.

8. In suit for medical services, defendant could recover such affirmative judgment if sustained by proof, and his rights were not limited merely to defeating plaintiff's claim in whole or in part. Holmes v. McKennon, 120 Ill. App. 320.

9. Where not so named defendant was not entitled to affirmative judgment. American Guild v. Damon, 186 N. Y. 360, 78 N. E. 1081.

10. Tillinghast, Styles Co. v. Providence Cotton Mills [N. C.] 55 S. E. 621.

11. Where in suit for failure to deliver goods, counterclaim was based on a denial that there was an absolute sale. Tillinghast, Styles Co. v. Providence Cotton Mills [N. C.] 55 S. E. 621.

pacity in plaintiff to sue, a counterclaim therein also falls,[12] and a statute preserving a counterclaim or set-off despite a voluntary dismissal does not apply,[13] neither will such a statute preclude plaintiff from dismissing a count in his petition.[14] Failure to set up a counterclaim or set-off is not a bar to a subsequent action thereon.[15]

Evidence.[16]—Defendant must prove the same facts that he would be required to prove had he brought an original action,[17] and the burden is on him to establish his set-off by a preponderance of the evidence.[18] The separate items of the set-off should be proven and not only a total sum.[19]

24. A statute is not unconstitutional as an attempted delegation of legislative authority because it provides for the finding by a court of whether a drainage system first adopted by drainage commissioners is practicable, conducive to public welfare, and will increase the value of lands for the purpose of public revenue. [Laws 1895, p. 287, c. 115, § 12] (State v. Superior Court for Skagit County, 42 Wash. 491, 85 P. 264), nor because it requires a jury to ascertain the damages and benefits to each tract of land and the value of the land to be taken. Did not impose upon court or jury the duty of making assessments where county auditor and commissioners were to take the necessary steps for the assessment and collection of the tax [Laws 1895, pp. 271-296, c. 115] (Id.). That § 5, Laws 1905, pp. 360-365, c. 175, amending the drainage law of 1895 and relating to the bonds of drainage commissioners, was unconstitutional because not included in the title of the act, did not affect the validity of the remaining sections relating to proceedings for the establishment of districts. Id. A city health ordinance requiring sewer connection with cess pools is not necessarily invalid. Ordnance held not in conflict with a statute denouncing certain uses of contents of cess pools. Logan v. Childs [Fla.] 41 So. 197. Court could not know judicially that it was

city power to prescribe the manner in which shall be exercised any privileges granted in the use of streets refers only to privileges already granted and does not authorize an original grant of the right to lay sewers in the streets.[25] An owner whose buildings are connected with the sewers of a sewer company and who has paid sewer rent therefor may question by certiorari the validity of an ordinance granting to a new company the right to take over the plant of the old one and the right to lay sewers in the streets and advancing the sewer rentals.[26] A corporation organized under the general corporation act of a state and not under the act for the creation of sewer companies is not authorized to lay sewers in the public streets of a city.[27] The state board of health of New Jersey has no power to enjoin an alleged pollution of potable waters by reason of the operation of a municipal sewer plant constructed and operated under and pursuant to the directions of the state sewerage commission.[28]

§ 2. General powers under the various statutes.—There is no right at common law to construct artificial drains over the lands of others.[29] Though a statute may be broad as to powers conferred on drainage commissioners and provide for a liberal construction, it will not be construed to confer upon them power to establish a district contemplating the destruction of a navigable meandered lake or the impairment of the navigability of a river.[30] A statute requiring a court to cause ditches and drains to be constructed along a railroad if the railway company fails to do so does not authorize the court to make an order upon the railway company to construct drains.[31] The county commissioners in Ohio have no power to convert a living stream of water into a county ditch,[32] nor to locate and establish a ditch in a township ditch until there has been a refusal by the township trustees to act.[33] Under the Indiana act of 1891 for the drainage of cities, a natural watercourse could be diverted so as to constitute either an "inlet" or an "outlet."[34]

§ 3. Independent organizations controlling drainage, reclamation, and sanitation.[35]—Drainage statutes commonly provide for the establishment of drainage, reclamation, or sanitation districts to which are intrusted the construction of drains and the reclamation of waste lands.[36]

unreasonable or oppressive. Id. Act April 23, 1903 (Kirby's Dig. §§ 1414-1450), for the establishment of drainage districts, is not unconstitutional because it does not limit the assessments on the lands to the value of benefits. Ritter v. Drainage Dist. No. 1 [Ark.] 94 S. W. 711. Acts 1906, p. 1, c. 1, empowering cities of the first class to construct a sewer system is not special legislation, though Louisville is the only city of the first class and the act uses the word "Louisville." Miller v. Louisville, 30 Ky. L. R. 664, 99 S. W. 284. That it provides for appointment of a commission to appoint officers and report what system would be most expedient does not contravene constitution providing that legislative boards shall be elected. Id. Is not a special act granting a charter to a corporation, though it provides that the commission shall constitute a corporation. Id. The invalidity of the portion of acts 1893, p. 102, creating a levee district which authorizes the taking of property without just compensation, does not invalidate the entire act. Porter v. 36. A proceeding under Rev. St. 1899, art. 3, c. 122, for the incorporation of a drainage

Organization and officers.[37]—On certiorari to review the proceedings of commissioners in organizing a district, error in including or excluding land from a graduated scale which the commissioners were authorized to make cannot be considered.[38] After a drainage district has elected officers, made surveys, condemned land, contracted for right of way, and levied special assessements for work, it is too late to question the legality of its organization by certiorari,[39] at least at the instance of persons who were active in the proceedings.[40] An order of court regular on its face establishing a levee district and containing the necessary jurisdictional recitals prima facie shows that the district was legally created.[41] The sustaining of objections to the confirmation of a special assessment by a drainage district for new work on the ground that no right of way has been obtained is not an adjudication that the proceedings establishing the old district were invalid where there is nothing in the record to indicate that such is the case.[42]

A drain commissioner is not an ordinary local officer but an officer exercising public functions on behalf of the state under its police powers,[43] and hence a statute authorizing the appointment of a commissioner pro tempore by the governor does not contravene the right of local self-government or violate a constitutional inhibition against the state engaging in works of internal improvement.[44] Ownership of land within a drainage district does not disqualify a person as a drainage commissioner[45] nor render the proceedings in which he participated void or subject to attack by a court of equity.[46] The Michigan statute disqualifying a highway commissioner does not apply to road commissioners.[47] Signers of the statutory petition for the appointment by the court of only one commissioner instead of three for a drainage district in Illinois may withdraw their names at any time before action taken on the petition,[48] and before that time and after withdrawal may likewise have their names reinstated.[49] A special drainage commissioner in Michigan is not required to file an oath of office.[50] The amendment to the Washington statute relating to the commissioners' bonds has been held unconstitutional.[51] Under a statute requiring the town clerk to keep a record of the proceedings of drainage commissioners, it is not essential that he should write out on the record with his own hand such proceedings.[52] Drainage commissioners may amend their records to conform to the facts,[53] even after the filing of a petition for quo warranto to determine the

50. Auditor General v. Bolt [Mich.] 111 N. W. 74.

51. The amendment to § 6, Laws 1895, c. 115, by Laws 1905, pp. 360-366, c. 176, changing the amount of the bonds to be given by drainage commissioners, is unconstitutional not having been expressed in the title (State v. Superior Court for Skagit County, 42 Wash. 491, 85 P. 264), and hence the bonds must still be $5,000 (Id.).

52. Sufficient, in quo warranto, that lead pencil notes were made at hearing and drainage district's attorney thereafter type wrote the minutes and had them pasted in the record at request of clerk. Hepler v. People, 226 Ill. 275, 80 N. E. 759.

53. If in proceedings to organize a drainage district the clerk errs in certifying the date on which he posted the notices of hearing of the petition, he may correct the validity of the organization of the drainage disrict,[54] and the record as so amended may be admitted in evidence at the trial.[55] The acts of drainage commissioners may be proven by parol when they act only as agents for private parties and not in their official capacity.[56] The acts of drainage commissioners de facto cannot be questioned by certiorari to review their proceedings for the establishment of a drainage system.[57] In proceedings under the Wisconsin law of 1898 for the establishment of drainage districts, an order appointing commissioners is not a final appealable order.[58]

Limits of districts and changes therein.[59]—Under the Drainage and Levee Act of Illinois, lands, whether dominant or servient, which are or will be benefited by the work of a drainage district, are subject to be attached thereto,[60] and benefits will be deemed to accrue if the effect of the connection of the lands with the drainage district is to decrease an overflow to which they are subject and lessen the period of submergence even though an overflow is not wholly prevented.[61] Territory included within the corporate limits of cities and villages may be included in a drainage district in that state, such territory not having been previously organized by the municipality for drainage purposes.[62] Power in commissioners to include all lands to be benefited includes power to include lands not described in the petition and to exclude lands therein described.[63] It is competent for the legislature to change the boundaries of a levee or drainage district.[64]

Combined systems.[65]—In Illinois an appeal in a proceeding to determine the amount of contribution to be made by a district which is benefited by the enlargement of the drains of another district is governed by the general statute relating to appeals from the county court.[66]

§ 4. Procedure in authorization and construction of sewers and drains.[67]—These proceedings being based entirely on statute must be in strict conformity thereto at least as to all substantial matters.[68] There being no common-law right to

68. Lager v. Sibley County Com'rs [Minn.] 110 N. W. 355. The town supervisors under the town ditch statute (Rev. St. 1898, §§ 1359-1371) constitute a special tribunal for administrative purposes not proceeding according to the course of the common law (Frazer v. Mulany [Wis.] 109 N. W. 139), and hence, as to all substantial matters, an exact compliance with the course of procedure prescribed is essential to jurisdiction (Id.). If they lose jurisdiction by failure to take any necessary step in the establishment of a drain, their proceedings are void and may be attacked collaterally or directly. Id.

construct drains over the lands of others,[69] the repeal of a statute authorizing the establishment of a ditch destroys pending causes not already merged in judgment, unless they fall within some saving provision contained in the repealing act.[70]

Due process of law; notice.[71]—Notice in substantial compliance with the statute,[72] and sufficient to constitute due process,[73] is essential,[74] though actual service is not always required.[75] Failure of the clerk to mail a notice in person is not fatal if the notice is otherwise sufficient.[76] The certificate of the clerk of drainage commissioners, if competent at all, is not the only evidence of the time and place he posted notices of a hearing on a petition for the establishment of a district.[77] A recital of notice in an order of court is at least prima facie evidence thereof.[78]

Petition or application.[79]—Jurisdiction to order the construction of a drain is acquired by the filing of a petition of the requisite number of landowners and an order of the drainage board establishing the drain after a hearing on the petition upon due notice to all concerned.[80] Where it appears that additional land will be taken for new work,[81] objecting landowners are entitled to have the petition, plans, and specifications, specify the character and location of the proposed work with sufficient definiteness to enable them to determine what land will be appropriated.[82] The petition presented to the court by the drainage commissioners under the Washington statute must submit a complete system with plans, specifications, and estimates of cost.[83] The failure of a petition to state the manner in which a repair is to be made is not fatal though it prays that the repair be made in the manner set

74. Failure to give notice of first hearing as required by Rev. St. 1898, § 1360, in proceedings before town supervisors, was fatal. Frazer v. Mulany [Wis.] 109 N. W. 139. forth.[84] The petition may be amended after submission to the court for the purpose of effecting a change in a system as originally proposed, if notice is given of the amendment and a hearing had on the amended petition.[85] The Ohio statute does not authorize the deepening, widening, or straightening of a watercourse by the county commissioners, upon petition of a mayor of a municipal corporation acting under resolutions in that behalf.[86] The bond to be filed under that statute to support a ditch improvement confers no jurisdiction upon the county commissioners unless signed by at least two sufficient sureties.[87] In some cities a petition for the construction of a sewer is not necessary when the ordinance therefor is passed by a two-thirds vote.[88]

Remonstrances.[89]—Indefinite provisions as to parties entitled to be heard before a board of commissioners in proceedings for the establishment of a drain should be liberally construed so as to effectuate the beneficial purposes of the statute.[90] Under the Minnesota statute the right to be heard in proceedings for the establishment of a county ditch is not confined to those who are strictly parties,[91] but extends to landowners with a well grounded claim for damages, though it may not certainly appear that such damages are recoverable at law.[92] Parties objecting to the construction or improvement of drains on the ground that no right of way has been obtained must show that some of their own property will be taken or damaged.[93] Where after an appeal from an order of a board, the establishment of a proposed ditch is prohibited by statute, the court may permit remonstrant to set up his rights under the new act.[94]

Report of viewers or commissioners.[95]—The failure of viewers to make any showing as to flood gates, waterways, crossings, etc., does not avoid the whole proceeding, it not being contended that substantial rights are affected.[96] An alteration of the termini of a ditch as fixed in the petition will not ordinarily render the proceeding invalid,[97] though neither the report nor the court's order shows the reason therefor,[98] but a statute authorizing a departure by the engineer when it shall appear to him expedient will be construed to authorize only a reasonable departure.[99] A statutory provision as to when the viewers shall file their report is not mandatory.[1]

1. That viewers should file report at least two weeks before next term of court. Driver v. Moore [Ark.] 98 S. W. 734.

The Delaware statute does not require that the report of ditch commissioners must be filed on the first day of the term of court.[2] When a report is inadvertently filed before it is completed, it will be remanded to the commissioners and the case continued until a subsequent term.[3] The court is not deprived of power to approve a proposed system merely because some other system may be more feasible.[4]

Order, ordinance, or resolution for work.[5]—The granting of a petition reciting that a drain is a public necessity and establishment of a drain as prayed for therein necessarily implies a finding that the drain is a necessity.[6] Whether an ordinance is reasonable depends on circumstances.[7] The fact that an ordinance relating to the construction of a sewer fixes the benefits to be assessed against abutters when such amount is to be determined by viewers does not render it wholly invalid.[8] Plans and specifications in conformity to which an ordinance provides for the construction of a sewer are a part of the ordinance.[9] Failure of an ordinance to set forth the thickness of sewer pipe is not fatal where this was stated in the specifications and there is no pretense that an inferior quality was used,[10] and the fact that the amount of masonry to be used is not specified is no defense to an action on the tax bill, it appearing that only an estimate could be made.[11]

Validity and performance of contracts.—These subjects are controlled largely by the general rules governing public contracts[12] and public works and improvements.[13] That the viewers filed their report in advance of the time fixed by the court and the letting of the contract en masse and without notice have been held not to affect its validity under the Arkansas statute.[14] Failure to perform within the stipulated time does not avoid but is only ground for avoiding a contract.[15] By statute in Minnesota a county may exact from the contractor a bond for the benefit of persons who may be damnified by the improper doing of the work.[16]

Defects and irregularities in general.—In the absence of prohibitory legislation, disqualification for the interest of a commissioner who participates in the establishment of a drain renders the proceeding voidable only.[17] Failure of a board to ascertain and embody in their order the amount of benefits to highways so that they may be charged to the town is immaterial unless it appears that a highway will be benefited;[18] but a statutory provision requiring a board of public works to determine the question of benefits to be derived from the construction of a proposed sewer and to proceed with the work only in case the benefits shall equal the estimated cost is jurisdictional and must be observed;[19] and the failure of town supervisors to file with the town clerk a final certificate showing the cost of the construction of a drain, a description of the several parcels of land benefited, and the amount assessed against each, and the order awarding damages to owners of land, as required by statute, is fatal to further jurisdiction.[20] When a petition is unnecessarily filed the work need not conform thereto.[21]

Waiver of irregularities.[22]—Disqualification for interest may be waived by acquiescence.[23] Objection to the constitutionality of a statute for not providing notice is waived as against one who was actually served, participated in the construction of a ditch, and paid tax instalments.[24]

Attack of proceedings.[25]—It is provided by statute in Michigan that, if no proceeding is brought by certiorari within a specified time to review drain proceedings, the legality of the drain may not thereafter be questioned in law or in equity,[26] and in that state the county drain commissioner must be made a party to any suit to set aside a drain tax or in any way attacking the validity of a proceeding.[27] Fatally defective proceedings may be enjoined in equity, there being no adequate remedy at law by appeal or certiorari.[28] An objection that a board did not secure a right of way before the establishment of a drain cannot be raised by collateral attack.[29]

Incidental remedies and review.—Prohibition lies when a court enjoins proceedings of a drainage board acting regularly and within its exclusive jurisdiction.[30] Mandamus and not appeal is the proper remedy on failure of a court to act upon a petition requesting it to cause ditches to be constructed along a railroad because the company has failed to provide them.[3]

An order refusing to confirm the commissioners' report and finding against the validity of the proceedings is appealable though the court refuses to dismiss the proceedings pending determination of the availability of some other system.[32] To authorize an appeal from the county commissioners in Indiana, in ditch proceedings, it is not necessary that a prayer for an appeal be entered on the order book of the commissioners.[33] The filing of an appeal bond with the auditor is jurisdictional to such appeal,[34] but failure to have the bond approved by the auditor is not ground for dismissal.[35] Only those who were parties to the judgment are necessary parties

§ 5. Compensation to property owners for lands taken or damaged.[42]—Failure to consider the question of damages renders the proceeding invalid.[43] Estoppel[44] or a waiver supported by a sufficient consideration will preclude a recovery of damages.[45]

For what allowed.[46]—An owner whose building is damaged by reason of the construction by a city of a sewer so close to its foundations as to cause it to settle is within the protection of a constitutional provision against the taking or damaging of private property without just compensation.[47]

Amount and ascertainment thereof.[48]—A drainage district organized under the Illinois Levee Act should proceed under the eminent domain act to condemn property for right of way and assess damages,[49] and not until the damages have been assessed by a jury in the condemnation proceeding and it has been determined that land not taken is not damaged may the drainage district commissioners assess benefits against such land.[50] The Nebraska statute makes no provision for offsetting benefits against damages in proceedings for assessing the cost of a ditch against the land benefited,[51] but when an action is brought to recover damages, special benefits to a particular tract in excess of that portion of the cost apportioned to it may be set off against consequential damages.[52]

Appeals.[53]—No formal complaint is necessary on appeal to the circuit court under the Indiana statute relative to levees and dikes.[54] An appeal from an assessment of damages due to the construction of a levee, it is not necessary to allege that the corporation constructing the levee was negligent.[55]

§ 6. Provision for cost. Bonds.[56]—Under the Iowa statute the boards of supervisors of two counties into which a drainage district extends may jointly determine the statutory method by which funds shall be raised to meet the expense apportioned to each county,[57] but they have no authority to require the contractors to purchase bonds to provide for preliminary expenses and rights of way,[58] and contracts containing such requirements may be avoided in the absence of estoppel.[59] A statute requiring a railroad company to bear the entire expense of rebuilding a bridge and culvert made necessary by a proposed improvement is not unconstitutional.[60]

Local assessmments[61] are treated more extensively elsewhere,[62] only decisions more or less peculiar to the subject in hand being here retained. Persons assessed for an extension should not have their contributions diverted to the payment of the cost of the original drain.[63]

Power to assess and property liable.[64]—A drainage district in Illinois has no power to levy assessments against a city for benefits to public streets without its consent.[65] The fact that a sewer is carried to a point on a stream where the public health will be as little affected as possible does not necessarily make it one for the protection of the public health in such sense as to prevent the imposition of special assessments.[66] A board of drainage commissioners exercises functions in their nature judicial in assessing benefits to land in a district established by it,[67] and when the board has acted regularly its decision is final in North Dakota, unless assailed for fraud or other equitable ground.[68] Property actually taken cannot be assessed for benefits.[69] A railway company paying a gross earnings tax in lieu of all other taxes and assessments is exempt from assessments for special benefits accruing by the construction of a public drain.[70] That title to land was originally derived from the government is not a valid objection to a drainage assessment.[71] On objection that property is being assessed which is not benefited, the court will not look critically into the amount of benefits,[72] and, if lands receive some benefit from an improvement, a tax will not be held invalid as having been imposed regardless of any benefit.[73] If lands directly benefited are fraudulently and arbitrarily omitted from an assesssment, and lands not benefited included, the action of the board is void.[74]

Procedure.[75]—The statute under which an improvement was made generally controls as to the manner of making assessments.[76] The Illinois act provides for notice by mail to nonresidents of the county.[77] The records of the board of directors of a levee district reciting that a meeting was had to revise and adjust assessments prima facie establishes such fact.[78] Property benefited may be assessed on a valuation basis.[79] When a statute imposes upon the viewers the duty of estimating the cost, damages, and benefits incident to the construction of a sewer, the city may not provide by ordinance, beforehand, the amount to be assessed as benefits and what shall be charged to the general fund,[80] and if it does so and the viewers do not exercise their independent judgment but simply adopt the exact amounts specified in the ordinance, their report should be set aside.[81]

Validity of assessment and objections thereto.—Jurisdiction having been acquired by the filing of a proper petition, matters pertaining to the qualification of officers, the conducting of the work, and the financial statement, though irregular, will not invalidate the tax,[82] neither will an assessment be void because the petition is subsequently lost.[83] The integrity of an assessment cannot be impeached by showing unauthorized representations by an officer of a district as to the amount,[84] and the fact that a village or its officers or agents have violated statutes prohibiting the pollution of streams by sewage is not ground for setting aside an assessment for the construction of the sewers.[85] Objections to the qualifications of persons appointed to assess benefits and damages must be made at the earliest opportunity.[86] One who asserts the excessiveness of an assessment has the burden of overcoming the prima facie fairness established by the return of the assessors.[87] The report of viewers fixing assessments and the order of the court confirming them establish prima facie the benefit to the land and the regularity, fairness and equality of the assessment,[88] and when landowners are given an opportunity to object and to appeal from an order of confirmation, they cannot question an assessment in proceedings to collect it.[89] In such proceeding the validity of a classification roll adopted on an unauthorized appeal may be questioned by landowners who took no appeal,[90] and an objection that the contract was let without notice may be raised, though objector had not first proceeded in equity to prevent execution of the work,[91] but the decision of commissioners that land was connected with ditches so as to render it liable to assessment cannot be impeached,[92] nor will the question of the legality of the organization of a drainage district be considered,[93] nor can mere irregularities be taken advantage of if the local authorities had jurisdiction.[94] If the petition, plans, and specifications for the new work are sufficient on their face to authorize an assessment for new work, the mere filing of objections does not throw the burden upon the district of establishing the validity of the proceeding.[95] Failure to observe a statutory provision requiring a board of public works to determine the benefits to be derived from an improvement and to proceed only in case the benefits shall equal the estimated cost renders an assessment void and unenforceable.[96]

Waiver or correction of irregularities.[97]

Review of assessment proceedings.[98]—Under the Illinois farm drainage act, parties who do not "appear and urge objections" are not entitled to appeal from the decision of drainage commissioners in the classification of land for assessment purposes.[99] On appeal from such decision, any change in the classification of lands objected to by parties who appeal cannot affect the classification of the lands not objected to and owned by parties who did not appeal.[1]

3. In giving judgment for levee assessments, chancery court should also have imposed the ten per cent. penalty as pro-

taxes are.[4] When a statute provides for a reassessment of invalid taxes, an owner may not restrain the collection of taxes against him on the ground of the unconstitutionality of the statute under which the proceedings were had in the absence of any showing that the taxes ought not to be reassessed;[5] and if a drainage board had jurisdiction, equity will not enjoin the collection of assessments after a ditch has been fully completed, though the board proceeded irregularly in matters pertaining to the construction of the drain.[6] One who is benefited by a sewer towards which he has contributed nothing is not entitled to an injunction restraining the collection of a special tax to pay the cost of construction.[7]

§ 7. Management and operation; duty to properly construct, maintain, and repair works, and provide drainage.[8]—A city cannot be required by mandatory injunction to extend a sewer and construct an outlet therefor below the intake of waterworks.[9] When outlying property is taken into a city, it is not responsible for failure to make new drainage improvements or to reconstruct existing drains,[10] but, if it undertakes to make any changes, it will be liable for negligence resulting in the overflow of adjacent property.[11] If a city in making an improvement collects surface water which would otherwise find an outlet without injury to property, it becomes its absolute duty both to provide and maintain an adequate outlet for such water.[12]

A municipality is not liable for mere defects in the original plan for a sewer or drain,[13] neither is it liable for the backing up of water due to an extension of a main sewer and the connection of subsidiary sewers where this is done by the municipal officers and not by the city itself through its governing bodies.[14] A city has no right, however, to build a sewer in such manner that it will deposit filth near private property,[15] and it may not permit the connection of private sewerage with its gutters along the streets so as to create a nuisance.[16]

cannot be interfered with by an adjacent property owner where the use of the sewer is restricted to surface or storm water;[17] but a landowner whose land is traversed by a creek may enjoin the city from discharging therein sewage as distinguished from surface water,[18] and need not wait until the threatened injury has resulted in material damage.[19] A village having an easement to discharge surface water through a ditch may not enhance the volume of water so as to materially increase the burden on the servient estate.[20]

A city is bound to exercise reasonable diligence to discover and remedy ordinary defects in its sewers,[21] and notice to it of nonrepair is not essential to the fixing of liability for damages.[22] A showing that a sewer broke and that premises were flooded in consequence thereof makes a prima facie case,[23] but mere breakage and damage is not conclusive.[24] Faulty connection of damaged premises with the sewer and the absence of proper check valves to prevent the backing of water is not a defense.[25] If a city adopts a drain as a part of an improvement, it will thereafter be required to keep it open.[26] So, also, if a portion of a drain is adopted by a city as a part of its drainage system, the city is liable for damages due to defects therein of which it is duly notified, regardless of who installed such portion;[27] and if a city substitutes an artificial drain for an adequate one originally on an owner's premises, it will be liable for the insufficiency of such artificial drain.[28] If a city permits a private drain to be maintained under a public sidewalk, it must exercise reasonable care to see that travel is not endangered,[29] but this does not require it to look after the concealed portions of the drain located in the private property.[30] The fact that a city connects its sewers with a natural channel does not impose upon it the liability of keeping such channel open to its mouth,[31] even though the adjacent landowners have converted it into an artificial culvert.[32] A city owes no duty to one fording a creek in a wagon to see that no hole is formed at the mouth of a sewer in the creek so that no accident will happen.[33] A city contractor who as part of his work completes and properly covers up drain pools is under no greater obligation as against the public to keep them covered than any other member of the community, though his work as a whole may not yet have been accepted.[34]

statute provided in such case rather than enter upon the land of others by verbal permission of a drain commissioner.[35] Under the Indiana statute providing that upon the failure of a landowner to clean his allotment of a public ditch the township trustee shall proceed to have the work done, neither the township nor the trustee is liable to the contractor who did the work.[36]

In actions for negligence in the maintenance of sewers or drains, limitations will ordinarily be reckoned back from date of suit rather than forward from the time the street or alley was completed.[37] The burden of proof is on plaintiff throughout the trial.[38]

§ 8. Private and combined drainage.[39]—By statute in Illinois, whenever drains have been constructed by mutual consent, none of the interested parties may thereafter fill up or interfere with them without the consent of all.[40] A general easement over the lands of another for drainage purposes does not limit the drainage to any particular drain or depression,[41] nor is the dominant owner bound to maintain the same level.[42] A landowner who consents to the establishment of a ditch and promises to pay a portion of the cost will be held liable therefor.[43] One who fails to make known to a purchaser his right to object to drainage through his land may be estopped thereafter to assert such right.[44] Statutes have been enacted in some states providing that landowners may drain their lands into natural watercourses without being liable in damages therefor.[45] One who by the relocation of a drain is given better drainage facilities than he formerly enjoyed is not entitled to a mandatory injunction to compel the restoration of the drain to its original position.[46]

keeping and caring for attached property is primarily against the plaintiff in attachment.[68] Since the adoption of the New York city consolidation act, devolving the duty of notifying jurors to attend a trial term of a court of record on the commissioner of jurors, a calendar fee cannot be exacted to include fees of the sheriff for such service.[69] In Illinois a sheriff is not entitled to commissions on the proceeds of a sale conducted by the judgment creditor himself which are credited on the judgment.[70] The provision of the Illinois fee and salaries statute, giving a constable $2.50 per day for attendance in the circuit court, refers to attendance on the sessions of the court;[71] hence, the compensation therein provided for is not applicable to services performed by a constable when appointed a special bailiff to secure a special venire on the disqualification of the sheriff.[72] Where the jailer is an elective officer and his allowances and fees are fixed by statute, the fiscal court can not substitute a salary in lieu thereof,[73] nor can the jailer, under guise of employment as janitor receive a salary for services which it is his duty to perform as ex officio superintendent of buildings and grounds without compensation;[74] but where special duties outside those of his office are imposed, fees therefor may be recovered.[75] Where the statute provides that "fees" collected for the sheriff's services shall belong to the county and form a fund from which the sheriff shall be paid a fixed "salary," fees directed to be paid by the county do not inure to the sheriff in addition to his salary, where designed to pay for services and not merely to reimburse.[76] For services not within those contemplated by the salary law he may retain the fees allowed,[77] as may an officer specially performing his duties.[78] Where on failure of criminal prosecutions before justices of the peace, constables' fees are payable out of the county treasury upon audit of the board of supervisors, the constable cannot recover from the county without first presenting his claim for fees to the board in proper form as required by the statute;[79] nor can he recover mileage and expenses taxed for unsuccessful attempts to serve warrants in prosecutions begun by him in bad faith without any reasonable expectation of apprehending the accused.[80] The proper construction of a statute allowing mileage, "to be charged one way only," for each mile actually and necessarily traveled in executing criminal process was left an open question by division of the judges of the supreme court of Arizona.[81] In the absence of statute to that effect, a county is not liable to the sheriff for the hire of deputies.[82] The Pennsylvania statute of 1901 does not change the rule obtaining in that state that as to subpoenas of the common pleas or quarter sessions served by a constable or private person the fees are to be taxed in accordance with the sheriff's fee bill,[83] but it supersedes the previous law on the subject as to the amount of the fee,[84] and applies as did the former law to the service of subpoenas ad testificandum.[85] The act covers the execution of a sentence committing a convict to the penitentiary or reformatory as well as an order committing a lunatic or feeble minded person to an asylum,[86] and entitles a sheriff to collect for mileage circular for services in removing persons to those institutions respectively at the rate of ten cents per mile,[87] and this applies to the execution of all cotemporaneous writs or orders of the court, civil or criminal, unless where both plaintiffs and defendants are the same,[88] and also to charge for reasonable help and expenses in making such deliveries in case of actual necessity for extra help,[89] but the reasonableness of an allowance for help and expense is for the jury.[90] The act, however, does not authorize a sheriff to charge $4 per day for deputies used in the transportation of prisoners.[91]

§ 4. Deputies, undersheriffs, and bailiffs.[92]—Absence from the records of the written evidence of appointment required by statute is sufficient to show that one who assumed to act as deputy sheriff had not been appointed as such,[93] and the fact that he signed the return as deputy is not sufficient to prove that he was a deputy de facto.[94] Disqualification of the sheriff extends to his deputy.[95] In Illinois there is no law by which constables can be required to serve in the circuit court.[96]

to make demand for attached property within a specified time after judgment is rendered in favor of the attaching creditor is fatal to the rights of the attaching creditor against the attaching officer under the attachment.[99] Hence in that state the failure of a sheriff to make demand within the time limited on an execution placed in his hands with directions to make demand on his predecessor who had made an attachment in the proceeding renders him liable for all damages caused thereby,[1] and the burden is on him to show affirmatively that demand was made when he interposes as a defense the fact of demand having been made, where the execution has been returned unsatisfied without indorsement of demand.[2] Remissness of a sheriff in answering pertinent inquiries concerning a levy which he has been directed by the inquirer to make is ground for denying recovery of costs by him on an unsuccessful motion to amerce him for failure to execute the process.[3] A sheriff is liable for property lost after seizure in replevin unless he shows that he disposed of it as the law directs and that the loss occurred without his negligence.[4] A sheriff is liable for injuries inflicted by his deputies while acting within their authority although the acts themselves be unlawful,[5] but is not liable where the deputies commit the wrong while acting beyond the scope of their authority.[6]

(§ 5) B. Failure to execute process or insufficient execution.[7]—An officer into whose hands an execution comes while property to which he is entitled to possession in his official capacity, otherwise subject to the writ, is in the possession of a third person, but on behalf of the officer, is liable to the judgment creditor for failure to apply the same in satisfaction of the writ;[8] and irregularities in the proceedings leading up to the issuance of the writ do not excuse the officer's default.[9] A sheriff is not liable to amercement for failure to levy on a specific sum of money previously received by a debtor when it is not shown that the money, if subject to levy, was still in hand or in a place of deposit where levy could have been made.[10] A proceeding by motion against the sheriff and his sureties under a statute providing a remedy for failure to levy execution is in the nature of an ordinary civil suit, the prosecution of which though malicious is not actionable.[11]

(§ 5) D. Failure to take security.[16]

(§ 5) E. Wrongful levy, sale or arrest.[17]—It is held in New York that a sheriff is protected by an order of a superior court discharging a prisoner, arrested on civil process, though the order is based on an irregularity warranting reversal, and is in fact subsequently reversed.[18] Writs fair on their face are no justification for levying on the property of persons not named therein.[19] Though a sale at a place different from that advertised is a misfeasance rendering an officer a trespasser ab initio, the rule of law cannot be invoked by a stranger to the writ under which the sale was made.[20] The execution of a forthcoming bond to gain possession of property levied on by an officer having no power to make the levy does not validate the levy [21] or estop the maker to question the validity of the levy.[22] Ordinarily a judgment establishing a claim of exemptions as to property seized is conclusive in an action for its wrongful seizure;[23] but a judgment of a justice of the peace when offered as a justification for seizure of property thereunder, it is held in Arkansas may be impeached by parol evidence.[24] Persons through whose influence in either an official [25] or private capacity [26] an officer wrongfully seizes property on execution are equally guilty with him of the conversion,[27] but unless they participate with him in the seizure they are not liable with him as joint trespassers.[28] Not only the sheriff who executed a writ in a county where it was on its face void but also a constable who sent it out of the proper county and directed the execution is liable.[29] A levying officer when sued for levying on and selling the property of the plaintiff as the property of another is not required to plead facts relied on by him to create an estoppel of the plaintiff.[30] In New Jersey the failure of a claimant to apply to have the right to the property tried within ten days after adjournment, pursuant to the small cause courts act, is fatal to the claimant's cause of action against the levying constable for wrongful sale,[31] nor does the fact that the goods levied on were in the plaintiff's possession and that the constable had not taken manual possession thereof at the time of the levy,[32] or that the notice was delivered to the officer on Sunday, relieve the plaintiff from this rule.[33] The interest of a mortgagor in mortgaged chattels in his possession may be levied on and sold without the levying officer incurring any liability to the mortgagee so long as possession is not taken from the mortgagor.[34] Where one claiming title to attached property by assignment from the debtor is made a co-defendant in the attachment suit and therein successfully litigates his claim, he is not thereby precluded from his action against the sheriff for the wrongful levy.[35] If the debtor's claims of exemption as to property seized under execution from a justice of the peace is denied by the justice but sustained on appeal without supersedeas, the sheriff who has in the meantime sold the property is liable to the debtor only for the surplus.[36] In a suit against the sheriff for conversion, the plaintiff cannot attack the legality of a statute enlarging the county for the purpose of showing that the levy in the annexed territory was unlawful.[37] A bond to a levying officer indemnifying him for seizing, keeping, or selling property which in his opinion belongs to the defendant in attachment cannot be sued on by the plaintiff in attachment under statutes referring only to actions to recover chattels levied on or damages resulting from levies or sale thereunder.[38]

(§ 5) F. Misappropriation of proceeds.[39]—If a constable sells to the execution creditor for more than the debt and costs, he must account for the surplus,[40] and where the statute requires him to return the surplus to the execution debtor, the latter or his assignee may sue therefor without previous demand.[41]

(§ 5) G. Rights of levying officers.[42]—An officer who has levied on property under lawful process has at common law the right to maintain an action for its recovery from one who unlawfully takes it from his possession,[43] and such action brought by an officer may be continued in the name of a successor,[44] even after the close of the successor's term.[45] Where personal property upon which a sheriff is instructed to levy is claimed by a third person, the officer is not bound to proceed unless furnished with ample indemnity;[46] and the claim by such third person need not be in writing as a prerequisite to his invocation of the rule.[47] A sheriff who is sued for seizing and selling exempt property is not bound to notify the sureties on his indemnifying bond under the statute,[48] but he may pay the judgment and sue on the bond for reimbursement.[49]

Although a bond to indemnify a sheriff against liability for seizure of property known to be exempt would be void as against public policy, a complaint in an action on the bond is not demurrable for that reason unless it shows on its face that the bond was given in furtherance of a collusion between the plaintiff in the writ and the sheriff to violate the exemption right. Under this statute sureties were held liable for an assault and battery committed by a constable while levying an execution, on one engaged in scheduling exempt property. Greenberg v. People, 225 Ill. 174, 80 N. E. 100. The sureties on a constable's official bond are liable for a nection is not meant a lawful act, but an act done by the officer in his official capacity, under and by virtue of his office.[52] An arrest by a sheriff under a warrant void on its face is not such an official act as will render his sureties liable therefor.[53] Where the sheriff is also public administrator and gives additional bond as such pursuant to statute, the sureties on his sheriff's bond are only secondarily liable for his defaults as administrator,[54] and one who is on the administration bond and is damnified by default can have no recourse against the sheriff's bond.[55] The rule that sureties on official bonds are estopped by recitals therein applies.[56] The liability of sureties for license moneys paid to the sheriff as collector is determined by the conditions fixing the county's title to the moneys, and not by the formal application for and issuance of licenses.[57] In Kentucky compensatory damages only are recoverable in an action on an officer's bond,[58] but this does not necessarily require the exclusion of evidence of malice.[59] When sued for money due the county, sureties on the sheriff's bond cannot set off the amount of outstanding non-negotiable county warrants, drawn in the sheriff's favor, without producing the warrants or showing them to be still held by the sheriff.[60] It has been held in Arkansas that the liability of sureties is limited to the penalty of the bond even though there be a plurality of breaches involving separate and distinct wrongs,[61] and in that state the separate liability of the principal cannot be enforced in an action on his bond.[62]

§ 1. Public control and regulation; extent of state jurisdiction.[65]—The sovereignty of a state extends to its vessels upon the high seas.[66]

Tonnage tax and light money.[67]—The Federal statutes provide for a tonnage tax of fifty cents a ton on vessels not of the United States which are entered in its ports from any foreign port.[68] A duty of fifty cents a ton, denominated light money, is levied on all vessels not of the United States which may enter the ports of the United States, except unregistered vessels owned by citizens of the United States and carrying a sea letter or other regular document proving them to be American property.[69]

§ 2. Nationality, registration, enrollment, and ownership.[70]—Vessels of the United States are such as are registered pursuant to the Federal statutes and those duly qualified to carry on the coasting trade or fisheries.[71] The status of a vessel so registered is not affected by the uses to which she may be put,[72] nor by the fact that her owner may be using her in violation of a state law and is subject to a penalty therefor.[73] She does not lose her status as a vessel of the United States while in the Detroit river.[74]

The owner of a vessel may maintain a suit in admiralty to recover possession thereof from one unlawfully withholding it.[75]

his neglect of duty will be deducted from the amount he would otherwise be entitled to recover.[79] Masters are not entitled to liens for their wages.[80] The master is not a fellow-servant of the officers and crew so as to preclude a recovery of damages for their death in a collision due to his negligence.[81]

The first officer is not chargeable with negligence because of improper navigation where he acts pursuant to the orders of the master.[82]

§ 4. Seamen. Shipping articles.[83]—A provision in the shipping articles that the crew shall make no claim for wages or provisions while the vessel is detained by ice prior to her departure on her contemplated voyage is reasonable and valid.[84]

Wages and subsistence.[85]—The Federal statutes provide that a seaman who has signed an agreement and is afterwards discharged before the commencement of the voyage or before one month's wages are earned, without just cause and without his consent, may recover one month's wages in addition to the amount actually earned by him.[86] Such an allowance has, by analogy, been made to an engineer wrongfully discharged at a distant port before the termination of the voyage, though he had served more than a month.[87] Every master or owner who, without sufficient cause, refuses to pay seamen their wages within the time prescribed by statute is made liable for one day's wages for each day's delay.[88] Payment of advance wages in violation of law does not render the contract of shipment void in the absence of a showing that it entered into the contract as one of the things agreed upon by the parties, either expressly or by implication.[89] A seaman wrongfully discharged before the termination of the voyage is ordinarily entitled to recover expenses incurred in returning to the port of shipment.[90] As in other cases, releases of claims for wages obtained through duress and which are without consideration are not binding.[91] The same is true of a release of a seaman's rights under a lay contract executed by him while intoxicated.[92] The owner of a whaling vessel who fails to make division of whalebone with a seaman according to the provisions of the contract under which he shipped, but sends it away to market, is liable to him for his proportionate share of its value.[93]

Punishment of seamen.[94]—Seamen and others may be discharged for incompetency or neglect of duty,[95] and forfeit their right to wages by desertion.[96] The court may refuse to consider evidence of offenses by seamen not entered in the official log.[97]

Care of injured seamen.[98]—The liability of the vessel and its owners for injuries to seamen is treated in a subsequent section.[99] The vessel and her owners are bound to furnish proper care and medical treatment for seamen injured in the service.[1] Whether the master is bound to put into the nearest port for that purpose depends upon the circumstances of each particular case, he being only required to exercise a reasonable judgment in the matter.[2] The obligation does not end with the voyage if there was not sufficient time and facilities for the vessel to have then done its duty,[3] nor is the right forfeited by reason of the fact that the injury was received through remissness or not unusual carelessness on the seaman's part, where he has not been guilty of gross negligence or willful neglect of orders.[4] The vessel is not, however, liable for expenditures made by others on his behalf which he is under no obligation to repay and which were made when the cure had been completed, at least so far as the ordinary medical means extend.[5]

§ 5. Mortgages, bottomry, maritime, and other liens on the vessel, craft, or cargo.[6]—The Federal statute requiring mortgages on vessels of the United States to be recorded in the office of the collector of customs where such vessel is enrolled supersedes as to such vessels the state law relating to the recording of mortgages.[7] Whether a contract amounts to a mortgage or a sale is a question of intention.[8] A court of admiralty has no jurisdiction to foreclose mortgages on vessels,[9] nor to afford relief to a mortgagee seeking to recover possession of property mortgaged to secure the payment of a nonmaritime debt,[10] but, when it has a fund to dispose of, it may entertain claims based on mortgages.[11] As in other cases a receiver may be appointed to take charge of a mortgaged vessel when the security is impaired.[12]

A bottomry bond is an obligation executed generally in a foreign port by the master of a vessel for advances to supply the necessities of a ship, together with such interest as may be agreed on, which creates a lien on the vessel enforceable in admiralty in case of her safe arrival in her port of destination, but is void and of no effect in case of her loss before arrival.[13] Such bond will bind the ship only when the supplies or repairs are actually necessary to the performance of a contemplated voyage,[14] and neither the master nor owners have funds or credits available to meet the wants of the vessel.[15] No provision in the charter of the vessel can change the maritime law in this regard or relieve the owners from any lien on the vessel.[16] Where the advances are made at a foreign port and the supplies are purchased and expenditures made by the master who executes the bond, and are necessary for a contemplated voyage, the necessity for credit is presumed, unless it is shown that the master had funds or the owners had sufficient credit, and that these facts were known to the lender.[17]

11. Jurisdiction to administer insurance money applicable to payment of maritime liens held not affected by fact that mortgagees also had claims against fund, or by their commencement of foreclosure suits in state court. The Conveyor, 147 F. 586. 12. Where all the parties interested in and having control over mortgaged property are personally present, the court may, in proper case, appoint a receiver to take charge of it though it is itself beyond the court's jurisdiction. Eureka Min., Smelting & Power Co. v. Lewiston Nav. Co. [Idaho] 86 P. 49. Removal of mortgaged vessel to different part of river held not to put it in greater danger of loss and destruction than before so as to authorize appointment of receiver to take charge of it, it appearing that it was in charge of competent master and crew. Id. Where mortgage on boat provides that mortgagor shall keep property insured, and that if he fails to do so mortgagee may do so and that all sums paid by mortgagee for insurance shall become part of mortgage debt and be secured by mortgags lien, failure of mortgagor to insure will not amount to such waste of security as to authorize appointment of receiver to take charge of property. Id. Where one takes mortgage on vessel plying on interstate stream in such manner as that its use in navigating such stream will necessarily take it outside of state, and mortgage provides that mortgagor shall not remove vessel beyond the limits of the United States, removal of vessel to another part of river and beyond jurisdiction of state held not such a violation of contract as to require appointment of receiver to take charge of it. Id. Where mortgage requires mortgagor to insure a boat, which it is understood is to ply on certain designated waters, his failure to do so because risk is so great on such waters that insurance cannot be obtained will not of itself warrant appointment of receiver. Id.

claims that are liens, either by virtue of the maritime law or state statutes, and which is actually used for that purpose, has a lien of equal standing with those so discharged.[21] A stockholder of the company owning the vessel is not thereby prevented from contracting with the company and acquiring a lien on such vessel;[22] but the fact that he is also treasurer of the company and, as such, the legal custodian of its funds, is strong but not conclusive evidence that he relied on his ability to pay himself out of such funds, and hence contracted on the personal credit of the company and not that of the vessel.[23]

Liens given by state statutes or the general maritime law have priority over mortgages.[24] Claims of seamen for wages are of the highest rank of maritime liens, taking preference over all other contract claims of the same relative duties [25] and over collision damages.[26] A salvage service, in raising and preserving a sunken vessel, has priority of lien over claims for wages earned and supplies furnished prior to the accident.[27]

Seamen having liens for wages on a vessel which is lost may resort to insurance money in the hands of the owners.[28] The distribution of insurance money among them and other lien holders may be made the subject of contract between the interested parties.[29]

The holder of a maritime lien who participates in a proceeding in a state court resulting in a sale of the vessel at his instance loses his lien, if not by estoppel, at least by laches.[30]

§ 6. Charter party.[31]—In construing a charter, when possible force should be given to every term and provision.[32] Proof of usage or custom is inadmissible to vary plain and unambiguous terms.[33] The consignee is not bound by provisions of the charter not made a part of the bill of lading.[34] Memoranda referring to the

33. Where charter of sailing vessel provided, "vessel to have turn in loading," held that it could not be modified by showing custom of port that all sailing vessels should be berthed in order in which they arrived, but that preference should be given to steamers requiring coal either for cargo or for bunker use. Harding v. Cargo, etc., of Coal, 147 F. 971.

34. Where bill of lading only obligated consignee to receive goods as unloaded and charter, inserted in the margin of the bill of lading but not referred to in the body of the bill, are no part of the contract, it not appearing when or how they were inserted.[35]

If the vessel be let so that there is a transfer or relinquishment to the charterer of the entire command, possession, and subsequent control, he will be treated as the owner for the voyage or particular event stipulated for,[36] and will be responsible for the acts and defaults of the master and crew in the navigation of the vessel.[37] But if the charter is merely an agreement or covenant for the use of the vessel or some designated part thereof, the general owner at the same time retaining command, possession, and control over its navigation, the contractor must be regarded as a contractor for a designated or specific service only, and the duties and responsibilities of the owner are not altered.[38] A provision that the owner agrees to hold the charterers free from liability for loss arising through the acts, neglect, or default of the master or crew precludes the recovery of freight where the ship is lost through negligent stranding.[39]

Contracts of affreightment commence from the loading of the vessel, and from the time when the cargo is delivered to the vessel each party is bound to the other for full performance.[40] The time when the vessel is to be delivered to the charterer,[41] and the duration of the charter and the ports to which the voyage may extend,[42] are questions of construction. The charterer is sometimes given the option not to discharge cargo, held that he was not bound by provisions of charter as to time for discharging or as to rate of demurrage, though bill provided "discharge and all other conditions as per charter," his liability for demurrage in such case, if any, being determined as usual by reference to the evidence as to whether he was guilty of unreasonable delay in taking them and actual damages resulting therefrom. 37. Since he, and not owner, has right to control their conduct. Hills v. Leeds, 149 F. 878. Burden of showing that owner did not provide efficient crew, as required by charter, is on charterer. Id. Owner not liable for shortage in delivery. Golcar S. S. Co. v. Tweedie Trading Co., 146 F. 563.

38. Hills v. Leeds, 149 F. 878. Charter held mere contract of affreightment so that charterer was not liable for acts and conduct of officers and crew in management of vessel. Multnomah County v. Willamette Towing Co. [Or.] 89 P. 389.

39. Burn Line v. U. S. & Australasia S. S. Co., 150 F. 423.

40. Leonard v. Bosch [N. J. Eq.] 64 A. 1001. Where charter provided that vessel guarantied insurance and that charterer was not obliged to begin loading until deposit of specified sum in guaranty of insurance had been made, held that, on the deposit being made and vessel loaded, charterers were bound to take risk of vessel for whole voyage and were therefore entitled to benefit of deposit as security for whole voyage, or at least until insurance for their benefit was effected by vessel owners. Id.

41. Agreement to keep vessels "a regular period apart as much as possible" held not an agreement to keep them apart for two or three weeks or for any stated period. Atlantic & M. G. S. S. Co. v. Guggenheim [C. C. A.] 147 F. 103, afg. 123 F. 330. In any event could be no recovery for breach where no damage was shown to have resulted, and vessels were kept at regular interval apart, ample time being allowed for loading of first before arrival of second. Statement in charter that vessel was then about to leave Boston held not an express warranty that it would reach port of loading at certain time. Id. Where charter provided that vessel should be tight, staunch, strong, and in every way fitted for voyage, and that she should proceed thereunder after completion of voyage on which she was then engaged, held that charterer was entitled to damages incurred by reason of delay due to making of repairs necessary to render vessel seaworthy after completion of her then voyage. Heller v. Pendleton, 148 F. 1014. Owner held not responsible for expenses incurred by respondent through delay in sending boat for cargo, the evidence not showing any definite agreement as to time, and respondent having accepted boat when tendered. Murray v. Jump Co., 148 F. 123.

42. Question whether charter authorized charterer to send vessel to certain ports held one of intention and one of fact not determinable on exception to cross-libel. Tweedie Trading Co. v. Glasgow Steam Shipping Co., 143 F 184. Charter construed and held that charterer, having used vessel for general trading under option to do so in charter was not entitled, without new to cancel if the vessel does not arrive at the port of loading on or before a specified date.[43] He cannot be compelled to exercise such an option prior to her arrival at such port.[44] The use of the word "about" in fixing the duration of a time charter authorizes the charterer to surrender the vessel some brief time before the expiration of the time agreed upon, which "underlap" is not permissible without it.[45] In respect to overlap, however, it operates merely as an embodiment in the charter of the rule of law that a time charter does not expire until the completion of the voyage on which the vessel is engaged when the term fixed therein ends.[46] It does not operate to enlarge or diminish the charter term except as demanded by reasonable business necessity, and has no relation to its normal expiration or the time of giving notice of its renewal.[47] The rule that the term of a time charter does not expire until the completion of the voyage on which the vessel is engaged when the date fixed arrives should not be extended beyond the requirements of the commercial necessity on which it is based.[48]

It is often provided that the vessel shall be loaded promptly[49] or as fast as she can receive the cargo,[50] or that she shall have her turn in loading.[51] What is prompt loading depends upon the facilities of the port and the existing climatic conditions.[52] Particular circumstances and exceptional conditions may operate to relieve the charterer from liability under his contract to have the cargo ready when the vessel is ready,[53] but they must be clearly proved in order to excuse delay, the burden being upon the charterer.[54] The vessel is ordinarily required to load to her full capacity.[55] So too, the owner may recover the full weight agreed upon where, through the fault of the charterer, only a part of the stipulated cargo is loaded.[56] agreement, to make voyage to west coast of South America, also provided for therein, which would require extension of time in excess of that fixed in charter. Walsh v. Tweedie Trading Co., 152 F. 276.

43. Provision held not affected by subsequent provision excepting dangers of the sea so as to extend canceling date where arrival was delayed by such dangers. Karran v. Peabody [C. C. A.] 145 F. 166.

44. Right not lost by refusal to exercise option at owner's request after such date when ship was at distant port and charterer had no means of knowing when she would arrive, though owner suffered damages by fall in charter rates in meantime. Karran v. Peabody [C. C. A. 145 F. 166. In any event owners held not entitled to extension where libel did not sufficiently allege that delay was so caused. Id.

45, 46. The Rygja, 149 F. 896.

47. The Rygja, 149 F. 896. Charter for a period of "about" six months provided that charterer might hire vessel for further period of "about" six months more provided he gave notice to that effect a month before expiration of first term, which he did. Held that whole engagement thereby became one for about twelve months, and owner was entitled to redelivery on completion of voyage upon which vessel was engaged at end of twelve months, and charterer could not extend term by claiming overlap at end of both six month periods. Id.

48. The Rygja, 149 F. 896.

49. Where charter provided that vessel was to have her turn in loading and was to be "loaded promptly," held that charterer was required to use normal capacity not only in loading her but also in loading vessels loaded ahead of her, on loading of which her prompt loading depended. Harding v. Cargo, etc., of Coal, 147 F. 971.

50. Where charter provided that coke was to he loaded on schooners "as fast as they can receive the same," held that charterer was liable for demurrage for delay due to failure to have sufficient coke on hand at port of loading. Atlantic etc., Co. v. Guggenheim [C. C. A.] 147 F. 103, afg. 123 F. 330. Defense that charterer was relieved of obligation to furnish cargo because of weather conditions held unsupported by proof and insufficient in law. Id.

51. Provision that vessel was to have "turn in loading" held to mean that she was entitled to be loaded in turn with other vessels in order of their arrival, so that she was not obliged to take her turn with any particular class of vessels. Harding v. Cargo etc. of Coal, 147 F. 971.

52. Vessel held not to have been loaded promptly as required by charter. Harding v. Cargo etc., Coal, 147 F. 971.

53. Harding v. Cargo, etc., of Coal, 147 F. 971.

54. Evidence held to show that vessel was not given her turn in loading as required by charter, and that contention of charterer that she could only be loaded at particular pier was without foundation. Harding v. Cargo, etc., of Coal, 147 F. 971.

55. Charterer held entitled to credit for shortage of cargo caried below carrying capacity of ship on voyages as to which there had been no settlement. Vacarrezza v. 567,000 Gallons of Molasses, 149 F. 792. Claim held foreclosed by payments and settlements of accounts at end of each voyage with full knowledge of facts. Id.

56. Evidence held to sustain finding that owners had not established claim for dead

The owner must provide proper fittings and equipment for the service in which the vessel is to be engaged,[57] and is generally required to furnish a vessel which is staunch, strong, and in every way fitted for the service.[58] A requirement that the vessel shall be in all respects seaworthy for the voyage she is about to undertake requires seaworthiness with respect to the storage of cargo as well as in hull and equipment,[59] but a warranty of seaworthiness does not imply a warranty of insurability at the usual rates.[60] A certificate from the charterer's marine surveyor that the vessel is in proper condition for the voyage is sometimes required.[61] The vessel is sometimes required to guaranty insurance at lowest regular rates[62] and freight based on ground that water on bar was not deep enough to enable vessel to take full cargo. Pendleton v. U. S. & Venezuela Co. [C. C. A.] 145 F. 508.

57. In absence of special agreement, vessel is required to supply herself with proper fittings for carriage of lawful cargo. Harloff v. Barber & Co., 150 F. 185. Asphalt held "lawful merchandise" in charters including the West Indies, so that where charter required vessel to be ready to receive cargo, and tight, staunch, strong, and in every way fitted for the service, and that she was to be employed in carrying lawful merchandise, it was duty of owner to prepare her to receive cargo of asphalt by lining her if necessary. Dene Shipping Co. v. Tweedie Trading Co. [C. C. A.] 143 F. 854, afg. 133 F. 589. Where master of vessel did not have her lined, as a result of which pressure squeezed asphalt in between battens so that part of it became permanently wedged behind them, reducing to that extent permanent capacity of vessel and rendering hold unfit for carriage of perishable cargo, and owner refused to remove it, held that charterer was entitled to offset against charter hire the cost of removing it and for time lost. Id. No distinction between time charters and voyage charters in this regard. Id. Evidence held not to establish custom that charterer should provide fittings for protection of ship against requirements of lawful cargo, custom shown being one requiring charterer to separate different kinds of cargo when necessary. Id. Question of duty to provide means for removal of cargo held only secondary one in the case. Id. Charterers held responsible for breaking of mast while being used as part of apparatus of derricks in loading unusually heavy cargo, they having assumed that mast was sufficient without making inspection or asking advice, and having rigged an unscientific and necessarily insufficient preventer, though master, who was under orders and direction of charterers, failed to object. British Maritime Trust Co. v. Munson, S. S. Line, 149 F. 533. Vessel's masts, rigging, and cargo appliances, being properly built and well fitted for lifting packages of from three to five tons, and usual and sufficient for her class and rating at Lloyds, and charter requiring her to furnish tackle necessary to handle cargo up to three tons in weight, held that she was "strong" within meaning of charter, and custom of charterers to use masts in loading cargo, not shown to have been known to owners, did not impose on latter duty of providing masts which would sustain loads of unusual weight and sustain strains far above computed working strength, alleged custom being unreasonable. Id. Charter provided that steamer should pay for stowage and that charterer should be in no way liable for improper stowage, and that charterer should furnish dunnage required when not on board. Held that shoring necessary for insurance purposes was disbursement necessary to make vessel seaworthy in that repect, and hence charterer was not liable for cost of same. Capuccio v. Barber & Co., 148 F. 473.

58. Covenant of fitness held not to require removal of stanchions supporting deck beams in order to facilitate loading, where this could not be done with safety unless other provision for support of beams was made, particularly where charter provided for deck load at request of master. Keyser & Co. v. Duit [C. C. A.] 150 F. 328.

59. Harloff v. Barber & Co., 150 F. 185. Evidence held to show that single line of shifting boards in centre of hold, properly secured, would have sufficiently protected cargo of flint boulders from movement, so that owners were chargeable with delay and extra expense incurred by charterers by reason of master's refusal to load until additional precautions had been taken. Id. Test of seaworthiness is whether vessel is reasonably fit to carry the cargo which she has undertaken to transport. Dene Shipping Co. v. Tweedie Trading Co. [C. C. A.] 143 F. 854, afg. 133 F. 589.

60. Refusal of insurance, while it may be considered as evidence of unseaworthiness, more or less convincing acording to the circumstances of the case, is never of itself conclusive evidence thereof, but is a fact to be considered in connection with evidence of actual condition of vessel. Moore & Co. v. Cornwall [C. C. A.] 144 F. 22, afg. 132 F. 868. Evidence held to show that condition of vessel was such as to comply with warranty. Id.

61. Provision requiring captain to furnish such a certificate, and that "should the vessel fail to pass a satisfactory survey, this charter to be void at charterers' option," held to contemplate an actual survey and not arbitrary decision of surveyor, and that surveyor was not justified in refusing certificate merely because she had been eight years on her metal, or because of her age, which was known to charterer when charter was made, and such refusal did not authorize exercise of option by charterer. Moore & Co. v. Cornwall [C. C. A.] 144 F. 22, afg. 132 F. 868. Evidence held to sustain finding that owners did nothing to prevent survey. Id.

62. Clauss in charter party "Vessel to guaranty insurance at lowest regular rates," held not to mean that vessel or owners were to make a deposit for that purpose.[63] The charterer is responsible for damages to the vessel due to the insufficiency of tackle furnished by him.[64]

The hire to be paid depends, of course, on the terms of the contract.[65] Provision is sometimes made for a pro rata return of hire in case the charterer is deprived of the use of the vessel by an accident due to any defect in her or her outfit,[66] or that hire shall cease in case of loss of time due to a deficiency of men or stores,[67] or to arrests and restraints of princes, rulers, and peoples.[68] The owner is generally given the right to withdraw the vessel from the service of the charterers on default in payment of hire at the time prescribed.[69] It is competent for a time charterer, by a provision in the charter, to pledge the freight to be secured by her during the term to secure the payment of the charter hire, and such a provision gives the owner an equitable lien in admiralty, as of the date of the charter, on any freight subsequently stipulated to be paid, and subrogates him to the lien of the charterer for the freight and the remedies of the charter to enforce its payment.[70] But a cargo owner who, on the issuance to it of a bill of lading, in good faith pays to the charterer a portion of the freight is protected in such payment as against a lien on subfreight reserved by the shipowner in the charter, of which the shipper had no knowledge or notice.[71] Cessor clauses are to be strictly construed,[72] and no lien created thereby can be enforced against the goods of a third party without a meritorious claim for liability against them or him, unless he is clearly shown to be privy to the contract.[73] A provision that vessels are to be kept at regular intervals apart is waived by accepting them when offered for loading and paying freight without objection.[74] to provide insurance for which they were to be paid at such rates, but that owners guarantied that insurance on cargo by its owners was procurable at such rates. Leonard v. Bosch [N. J. Eq.] 64 A. 1001.

63. Evidence in action by owners of cargo to recover deposit, made by vessel owners in lieu of insurance, held to require finding that both parties intended that deposit was to be made in pursuance of terms of charter and in execution of provision therein that charterers were not obliged to commence loading until deposit in guaranty of insurance had been made, and in order that cargo might be loaded and become subject to terms of charter, and that it was to be for benefit of cargo owners. Leonard v. Bosch [N. J. Eq.] 64 A. 1001. Deposit in lieu of insurance appearing to have been made by owners of vessel for benefit of charterers and to secure loading of vessel by charterers under charter party, held that latter were entitled to hold it for their benefit without regard to any mistake made by depositary or owners in addressing certificate of deposit or letters in relation thereto to another party. Id.

64. Where owner was required to maintain vessel in efficient state, furnish tackle to handle ordinary cargo up to three tons in weight, and to work winches day and night if required, and charterer was to furnish coals and all other charges not otherwise specified, held charterer's duty to make tackle, furnished by it for removal of heavy machinery, fast, so that it could be removed safely, and hence it was liable for damage to vessel due to breaking of a bolt therein while unloading package weighing seven tons. Bollman v. Tweedie Trading Co., 150 F. 434.

65. Charter held not to entitle charterer to deduction of one per cent from prepaid freight. Capuccio v. Barber & Co., 148 F. 473.

66. Evidence held insufficient to sustain burden of proof resting on charterer to show that accident occurred by reason of any defect in yacht or her outfit, charter providing for pro rata return of hire in such case if charterer was thereby deprived of use of yacht for more than 48 hours. Hills v. Leeds, 149 F. 878.

67. Charterer held entitled to deduction of hire during time vessel was detained at quarantine because of illness of crew, officials not allowing her to proceed until new crew was obtained. Tweedie Trading Co. v. Emery Co., 146 F. 618.

68. Detention in quarantine held covered by clause "arrests and restraints of princes, rulers, and peoples always mutually except," so that charterer was not liable for hire during period of such detention. Tweedie Trading Co. v. Emery Co., 146 F. 618.

69. Owner held entitled to exercise right of withdrawal. Wilhelmsen v. Tweedie Trading Co., 149 F. 928.

70. Larsen v. 150 Bales of Sisal Grass, 147 F. 783.

71. Shipowner cannot institute proceeding to enforce lien until there is default in payment of freight any more than charterer could. Libel dismissed. Larsen v. 150 Bales of Sisal Grass, 147 F. 783.

72. West Hartlepool Steam Nav. Co. v. 450 Tons of Kainit, 151 F. 886.

73. Consignee held not bound by provision in charter to which he was not privy, giving vessel lien on cargo for demurrage, etc. West Hartlepol Steam Nav. Co. v. 450 Tons of Kainit, 151 F. 886.

74. Atlantic & M. G. S. S. Co. v. Guggenheim [C. C. A.] 147 F. 103, afg. 123 F. 330.

The charterer is ordinarily required to pay running expenses [75] and port charges,[76] and to make good any alterations made by him in the structure of the vessel.[77] He is sometimes made liable for injuries to the vessel amounting to less than a specified sum.[78] Fittings affixed to a vessel at the instance of the charterer cannot be removed by the vendor on rescission of the contract of sale unless no material injury is thereby done to the ship,[79] nor is the shipowner liable in damages for their detention on refusal of the vendor to remove them on such terms, they being of little or no value to such owner, and the vessel having been damaged in their installation.[80] The vessel is generally required to furnish winches [81] and men to run them.[82] It is frequently provided that the owners shall dock the vessel at specified times.[83] The duty of the charterer to clean the vessel does not include the removal of any of its permanent structure.[84]

As in the case of any other bailee for hire, one hiring a boat is liable for any damage thereto resulting from his negligence,[85] and the same is true of the consignee of the cargo.[86]

75. Owner held entitled to recover amounts paid for running expenses which charter required charterer to pay. Hills v. Leeds, 149 F. 878.

76. Tallying held port charge. Golcar S. S. Co. v. Tweedie Trading Co., 146 F. 563.

77. Alteration in structure of steamship caused by holes made in deck plating by construction of derrick shoe by charterers held to have been made good, demand for entirely new plate being captious. British Maritime Trust Co. v. Munson S. S. Line, 149 F. 533.

78. Where charter provided that hirer was responsible for injury to yacht amounting to less than $100, and was to redeliver her to owner in same condition in which he received her, and evidence showed that propeller blades were bent when she was redelivered, held that owner was entitled to recover amount paid for repairs to propeller, being less than $100. Hills v. Leeds, 149 F. 878.

79. Cooking apparatus, galley fixtures, etc., on rescission of sale for fraud. Bramhall, Deane Co. v. International Mercantile Marine Co., 145 F. 678.

80. Bramhall, Deane Co. v. International Mercantile Marine Co., 145 F. 678.

81. Where charter required vessel to be fitted for service and to have steam winches which were to be at charterer's disposal, held that latter was entitled to allowance for delay in discharging due to fact that winches were out of order and to deficiency of steam to work them. Munson S. S. Line v. Miramar S. S. Co., 150 F. 437.

82. Where charter provided that steamer was to furnish men to work winches day and night if required, charterers to pay extra expenses of night work, held that charterer was liable for sums paid donkeymen for night work, etc. Capuccio v. Barber & Co., 148 F. 473. Under such a provision, vessel held to have assumed risk of any difficulty, not created by charterer, which might prevent use of her own crew for that purpose, and hence was liable for cost of winchmen whom it was necessary to hire because stevedores at certain ports refused to work when winches were run by members of crew. Golcar S. S. Co. v. Tweedie Trading Co., 146 F. 563. Charterers held entitled to set off any damages occasioned by drunkenness or incompetency of winchmen or crew. British Maritime Trust Co. v. Munson S. S. Line, 149 F. 533. Allegations that stevedores would not work on steamer with sailors running winches owing to risk of personal injury, that sailors were without experience in handling heavy cargo and were unfit to act as winchmen in unloading particular cargo; and that it was therefore necessary to employ skilled winchmen, held not supported by proof that stevedores would not work with sailors at winches so long as they could get winchmen belonging to their union. Id.

83. Charter provided for docking whenever charterer and master deemed necessary, but at least once in every six months, payment of hire to be suspended until she was again in proper state for service. Arrived in New York March 30, with cargo for that port and Boston, and went to latter port where she discharged cargo and then returned to New York where she was docked before being reloaded there. Time for docking expired April 13. Held that she returned to New York from Boston on charterer's time, and hire continued except for time actually consumed in docking in New York. Bollman v. Tweedie Trading Co., 150 F. 434. Under simillar provision, held that charterer was entitled to have vessel docked at end of six months after last previous docking, though latter took place prior to the making of the contract, and though it was not actually necessary, particularly in view of general custom. Munson S. S. Line v. Miramar S. S. Co., 150 F. 437. Owners held to have fully complied with charter as to docking, delivery of vessel for that purpose at place where she could not be docked and demand that she be returned there, where she was not wanted and which would have been waste of time, being unreasonable under circumstances, and owner was entitled to recover hire, except for time occupied in docking, and damages for breach of charter. Wilhelmsen v. Tweedie Trading Co., 149 F. 928.

84. Does not require him to remove asphalt which became wedged behind battens because of owner's failure to line hold so as to render vessel seaworthy for such cargo. Dene Shipping Co. v. Tweedie Trading Co. [C. C. A.] 143 F. 854, afg. 133 F. 589.

85. City held liable as bailee for injury to hired scow from floating ice while she was

Where the charter requires the charterer to furnish and pay for certain towage, he is liable to the owner for any injury to the vessel by reason of the negligence of those in charge of the tug performing towage service.[87]

The charterer of a vessel rendering salvage services is entitled to a share of the award, though the charter is not a demise of the vessel.[88]

A bond given to secure the performance of a charter which merely obligates the surety to pay damages in case of a breach is not maritime in character.[89]

The measure of damages for breach of a charter by the charterer is, the net earnings lost by the owner by reason thereof.[90] The owner is bound to use reasonable diligence in rechartering his vessel, and cannot claim damages if he fails to do so.[91]

§ 7. Navigation and collision. A. Rules for navigation and their operation in general.[92]—The liability of a vessel in rem for torts is not coextensive with the personal liability of the owner, but she is only liable for injuries for which she is herself in fault.[93] There can be no recovery or partial recovery of damages due to collision unless fault be affirmatively shown.[94] and there is no legal liability for a collision due to inevitable accident.[95] Errors of judgment in extremis will being removed to safer place on ground of negligence in leaving her in dangerous place. The Three Brothers [C. C. A.] 145 F. 177, afg. 134 F. 1001. Evidence held to show that, capsizing and sinking of pile driver while being towed by charterer was not due to her unseaworthiness but to improper towing, so that charterer was liable for resulting damages. Swenson v. Sanre & Triest Co., 145 F. 727. Findings that sinking of car float at float bridge of railroad company was due to fact that she was unseaworthy because of water in her hold, and that company was not negligent in manner of handling her or in failing to inspect her or measure water, it having no notice of her condition, held supported by evidence. Bush Co. v. Central R. [C. C. A.] 149 F. 734, afg. 130 F. 222.

86. Evidence held to show that injury to barge was due to fault of consignee of cargo in moving her at improper time and unduly exposing her to the effect of the tide. King v. Connabeer, 148 F. 136.

87. Charterer cannot relieve himself from liability by hiring tug. The Naos, 144 F. 292.

88. Charterer is entitled to exclusive use of chartered vessel and to money earned by her during existence of charter, and owner, not having parted with ownership, to remuneration for risk incurred while rendering service. The Arizonan [C. C. A.] 144 F. 81, rvg. 136 F. 1016. Award divided equally between charterer and owner of tug, where tug left tows and rendered services on day when charterer was entitled to her entire services. Id.

89. Admiralty court has no jurisdiction of action thereon against surety. Pacific Surety Co. v. Leatham & Smith Towing & Wrecking Co. [C. C. A.] 151 F. 440.

90. In determining question of damages sustained by shipowner through losing net earnings of vessel upon a voyage by reason of abandonment of charter by charterer, approximate accuracy is all that can be reasonably expected, since it depends upon various contingencies of navigation more or less speculative and incapable of being accurately ascertained. Venus Shipping Co. v. Wilson [C. C. A.] 152 F. 170. Where charterer refused to fulfill charter and new charter was subsequently made between same parties without prejudice to owner's rights to recover for breach of first, held that damages were properly awarded upon basis of difference between net earnings actually realized under second charter and those which would have been realized under first. Id. Average daily time made by vessel on voyage under second charter and time consumed in loading and unloading held properly used as basis for determining probable duration of employment of vessel under first charter if it had been fulfilled. Id. Conclusions of court as to probable net earnings under first charter approved except in minor particular. Id.

91. Moore & Co. v. Cornwall [C. C. A.] 144 F. 22, afg. 132 F. 868. Owner held not bound to accept offer made during lay days contracted for in charter notwithstanding receipt of notice of cancellation based on erroneous assumption of fact and erroneous construction of charter, which was not final or definite rejection of charter, particularly where offer required sending of vessel to another port. Id.

92. See 6 C. L. 1473.

93. The W. G. Mason [C. C. A.] 142 F. 913, rvg. 131 F. 632. Two tugs belonging to same owner were engaged to tow steamer, pilot tug taking initiative in directing movements of tow, but in other respects navigation of other tug being exclusively under control of her own master, each tug acting independently in doing her own part of the work. Held that other tug was not liable in rem for injury to tow due solely to fault of pilot tug. The W. G. Mason [C. C. A.] 142 F. 913.

94. As where evidence is so conflicting that it is impossible to determine to what direct and specific acts the accident is attributable. The Jumna [C. C. A.] 149 F. 171, afg. 140 F. 743.

95. Inevitable accident is an event which party charged with collision could not possibly have prevented by exercise of ordinary care, caution, and maritime skill. The Jumna [C. C. A.] 149 F. 171, afg. 140 F. 743.

not ordinarily be regarded as faults.[96] Faults which do not contribute to the collision are immaterial.[97] The mere fact that a vessel has an unlicensed pilot, though a violation of the statute, is not a contributory fault where his navigation is correct.[98] A burdened vessel guilty of a clear violaton of the rules in itself sufficient to account for the accident cannot escape liability by merely raising a doubt as to the conduct of the privileged vessel.[99] On an issue as to fault for a collision, the original occasion for a vessel being where it has a right to be is immaterial.[1]

Vessel owners are responsible for damages to a breakwater due to the negligence of the captain in running into the same.[2] Captains of vessels navigating the Great Lakes are required to keep themselves informed of changes going on from time to time in the different harbors which they are likely to be called upon to visit.[3]

Ordinarily entries in log books are not receivable in support of the party who makes them,[4] but where they are called for and made use of by the other party for the purpose of cross-examining the opposing witnesses, and the testimony so adduced is more intelligible by reference to them, they should be received.[5]

(§ 7) B. Lights, signals, and lookouts. Lights.[6]—Vessels must show the prescribed lights in the prescribed manner.[7]

Is not necessary that accident should be resut of vis major, but may be said to be inevitable where no negligence can be imputed to either vessel and no fault shown. Id. Though collision of tug with vessel lying at pier was primarily the result of the fainting of her wheelsman, held that she was nevertheless liable for resulting damage for failure to have lookout, it appearing that, had there been one, he could have prevented the accident. The Wilkesbarre, 151 F. 501. Plea that collision between moving tug with tow and stationary vessel was due to inevitable accident held not established by proof that former was forced against latter by floating ice, where it appeared that attention of lookout was directed elsewhere, and that properly stationed and attentive lookout could have seen ice in time to have avoided it. New York & Oriental S. S. Co. v. New York, etc., R. Co., 143 F. 991. Collision held due to inevitable accident or an inscrutable cause. The Jumna [C. C. A.] 149 F. 171. Collision between tugs held due to inevitable accident. The Luzerne, 148 F. 133.

Location of steamer's lookout held not to have contributed materially to collision even if improper. The Mary P. Mosquito, 145 F. 960. Failure of tow to exhibit regulation lights held not to have contributed to collision due to failure of approaching vessel to see that tug had tow, where proper towing lights on tug were not seen, though tug was nearer to approaching vessel than tow. The Nugent C. C. A.] 145 F. 31. Signals even if in violation of statute, held not a contributing cause of collision. The Lake Shore, 149 F. 855. Any error on part of tug in not reversing held not to amount to a legal fault. The Transit, 148 F. 138.

98. The Wrestler [C. C. A.] 144 F. 334.

99. Doubts to be resolved against burdened vessel under such circumstances. The Pocomoke, 150 F. 193.

1. On issue as to fault for collision between tug towing barges which had previously broken from moorings and ferryboat, held that any question as to who was to blame for barges going adrift was immaterial, since ferry was bound to have due regard to rules of navigation in respect to tug and barges without reference to original occasion for their being where they had a right to be. The City of Portsmouth [C. C. A.] 143 F. 856.

Lookouts.[11]—Every vessel is required to have a proper and efficient lookout.[12]

(§ 7) C. Steering and sailing rules.[13]—As a general rule vessels approaching each other head on, or nearly so, are required to pass port to port, but this does not apply where the courses of the vessels are so far on the starboard of each other as not to be considered as meeting head and head, in which case they are required to pass on the starboard side of each other.[14] When two sailing vessels are approaching each other so as to involve risk of collision, and both are running free with chor watch. The Job H. Jackson, 144 F. 896. Evidence held to show that there were lights on sunken dredge which were visible and should have been seen by tug which collided with her, and that collision was due to negligence of those on tug in failing to maintain a vigilant lookout. The Fin Mac Cool [C. C. A.] 147 F. 123. It is the duty both of the master of the tug and of those on board the tow to see that the lights required by law to be carried by the tow are in place and are lighted when under way at night, and both are liable for a collision resulting from a failure to carry such lights. The Eugene F. Moran, 143 F. 187.

Stern light of overtaken vessel held compliance with art. 10 of international rules, Act Aug. 19, 1890, c. 802, 26 St. L. 320. The John Bossert, 148 F. 903. Evidence held to sustain finding that schooner was in fault for failure to exhibit required stern light. The Kaiserin Maria Theresa [C. C. A.] 149 F. 97, rvg. 125 F. 145 on other grounds.

Flare up lights: Vessels may, if necessary to attract attention, show a flare up light in addition to those required by the rules to be carried, or use any detonating signal that cannot be taken for a distress signal. Int. Nav. Rules art. 12, Act Aug. 19, 1890, c. 802, 26 St. L. 325, 2 Fed. St. Ann. 158. Rule not being mandatory, failure to exhibit flare up light, and use of globe lamp instead, held not a fault, there being no way of knowing that vessel's lights were not seen and hence no reason for use of torch until collision was unavoidable. The Martha E. Wallace, 148 F. 94.

A.] 143 F. 942. Steamship and tug with carfloat held both in fault for negligence with respect to lookout duty. The Tugboat No. 6, 148 F. 1007. Barge in tow of tug held in fault for collision with schooner in that she kept no proper lookout, did not observe schooner's movements, and therefore made no attempt to change her wheel when collision was imminent, which would at least have lessened force of collision. The Nottingham [C. C. A.] 143 F. 942. Where attention of lookout stationed on cars on carfloat on side of tug was absorbed by necessity of keeping watch upon piers, held that another man should have been detailed to general duty, and tug was in fault. New York & O S. S. Co. v. New York, etc., R. Co., 143 F. 991. Persons navigating batteau in harbor held in fault for collision with tug and tow in failing to take proper care and caution to look out for and observe approach of other vessels lawfully in harbor. Carter v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co., 151 F. 531. Burdened vessel held solely in fault for failure to see lights of approaching vessel until too late. The Martha E. Wallace, 148 F. 94. Though collision of tug with vessel lying at pier was primarily due to the fainting of her wheelsman, which was an inevitable accident, held that she was nevertheless liable for resulting damage because of failure to have proper lookout, it appearing that, had there been one, he could have prevented accident. The Wilkesbarre, 151 F. 501.

14. Inland Rules, art. 18, Rule 1, 30 St. L. 100 2 Fed. St. Ann. 178. One of two steamers held solely in fault for collision for changing course when vessels were close together on mistaking signal of another vessel for that of meeting steamer, where vessels would have passed safely had both continued on original courses. The Atlantic City [C. C. A.] 143 F. 451, afg. 136 F. 996. Tug held in fault for collision with tug and tow for violation of Pilot Rule 1, requiring the vessels to pass port to port under circumstances. The C. C. Clarke, 146 F. 615. Steamer held in fault for collision with tug and floats for attempting to pass to right without consent of tug, the two vessels being on courses which would have enabled them to pass safely starboard to starboard. the wind on different sides, the one having the wind on the port side must keep out of the way of the other.[15] In case one is running free and the other is close hauled, the former must keep out of the way of the latter.[16] When a steam vessel and a sailing vessel are proceeding in such directions as to involve risks of collision, the former must keep out of the way of the latter.[17] When two steam vessels are crossing so as to involve risk of collision, the vessel which has the other on her own starboard side is required to keep out of the way.[18]

A vessel overtaking another is required to keep out of her way.[19] The rules applicable to the Great Lakes provide that, in all channels less than five hundred feet in width, no steam vessel shall pass another going in the same direction unless the 15. Int. Rules, art 17, Act. Aug. 19, 1890, 26 St. L. 326, 2 Fed. St. Ann. 161. Vessel held in fault for violating rule. The Charles A. Campbell, 142 F. 996.

16. International Rules, art. 17, Act Aug. 19, 1890, 26 St. L. 326, 2 Fed. St. Ann. 161. Schooner sailing free held in fault for collision in open sea with one close hauled for not making sufficient allowance for the yawing of the latter. The Metamora [C. C. A.] 144 F. 936. Vessel sailing free held solely in fault for failure to see lights of approaching vessel until just before collision, and in starboarding her helm to latter's red light. The Martha E. Wallace, 148 F. 94.

17. Art. 20 of rules applicable to rivers, harbors, etc. (30 St. L. 101, 2 Fed. St. Ann. 180). Tug with tows held in fault for collision between one of them and schooner for running too near side of channel and thus giving schooner but little chance to maneuver, and for not making an earlier discovery of schooner's lights and an earlier attempt to perform her duty of keeping out of her way. The Nottingham [C. C. A.] 143 F. 942. Steamer held in fault for not having sooner observed schooner's lights, and for maintaining speed and only slightly changing course after observing them. The Mary P. Mosquito, 145 F. 960. International Rules, art. 20, Act. Aug. 19, 1890, c. 802, 26 St. L. 327, 2 Fed. St. Ann. 162. Steamer held in fault for collision, it being her duty to avoid risk of collision as well as the collision. The Job H. Jackson, 144 F. 896. Tug held solely in fault for double collision. The Richmond, 143 F. 996. Tug with long tow held in fault for collision between one of the barges composing it and a schooner. The Gladys [C. C. A.] 144 F. 653, rvg. 135 F. 601.

18. Art. 19 of rules applicable to rivers, harbors, etc. (30 St. L. 101, 2 Fed. St. Ann. 180). Starboard hand rule held not to apply to case where, though tug and float were on starboard hand of steamer, tug had no definite course. The Tugboat No. 6, 148 F. 1007. Inspectors' rule 3, as amended Jan. 25, 1899, forbidding use of cross signals, applies only to vessels approaching each other from opposite directions, and does not cover vessels on crossing courses where one is burdened and other privileged. The Transfer No. 15 [C. C. A.] 145 F. 503. Tug having another on starboard hand after latter had crossed her bow held not in fault for failing to keep out of her way, latter having no course which could be depended on for purposes of avoiding her. The Transit, 148 F. 838.

Vessels held in fault for collision for violation of rule: Tug for collision between her tow and steamer. The Transfer No. 15 [C. C. A.] 145 F. 503. Tug for collision with tug and tow. The C. C. Clarke, 146 F. 615. Steamer for collision with launch. The Pocomoke, 150 F. 193. Tug for collision with tug and tow about to dock, in not reducing speed to steerage way only and turning toward other side of channel so as to put herself in position to navigate under starboard hand rule. The Transfer No. 10 [C. C. A.] 144 F. 676. Decree dismissing libel against ferryboat by tug for collision when vessels were on converging courses affirmed on ground either that evidence showed that vessels were on crossing courses and that tug having ferry on starboard hand was in fault for failure to permit her to pass ahead in accordance with her signals, and keeping on across her bow, or because evidence failed to sustain burden on libelant to show that ferry was overtaking vessel and that tug being ahead of her owed her no duty. The John McCullough [C. C. A.] 145 F. 501.

19. Inland Nav. Rules, art. 24, Act June 7, 1897, c. 4, 30 St. L. 101, 2 Fed. St. Ann. 180. The John McCullough [C. C. A.] 145 F. 501. Steamer held in fault for violating rule. The Sicilian Prince [C. C. A.] 144 F. 951, afg. 128 F. 133. International rules, art. 24, Act Aug. 19, 1890, c. 802, 26 St. L. 327, 2 Fed. St. Ann. 162. Evidence held to show that schooner approaching tug with tow was not an overtaking vessel. The Gladys [C. C. A.] 144 F. 653, rvg. 135 F. 601. Rule 5 of rules made by secretary of treasury for government of navigation in St. Mary's river does not invariably forbid steamer astern from passing one ahead if latter does not signify her assent and slacken speed, but if general conditions of navigation and relative speed of vessels are such that steamer astern can safely pass other, she is at liberty to do so, and cannot be deprived of privilege by neglect or contumely of steamer ahead. The North Star [C. C. A.] 151 F. 168, modifying, 140 F. 263. Rule recognizes privilege of vessel ahead to maintain speed, and duty of vessel astern to keep out of way until she has overtaken one ahead, but when vessel ahead has been overtaken and overtaking vessel is about to pass ahead, immediate danger which then arises requires former to forego privilege, and it is then, and not before, that rule 6 requires vessel ahead, after signifying her willingness by signals, to slacken to a slow rate of speed. Id. Overtaking steamer held solely in fault for collision, for maintaining unlawful rate of speed, and attempting to pass overtaken steamer at place where it was unlawful to do so, and in defiance of vessel ahead shall be disabled, or signify her willingness that the vessel astern may pass.[20] In narrow channels every steam vessel, when it is safe and practicable to do so, is required to keep to that side of the fairway or mid-channel which lies on the starboard side of such vessel.[21]

Every vessel directed by the rules to keep out of the way of another must, if the circumstances permit, avoid crossing ahead of her,[22] and must, on approaching her, if necessary, slacken speed or stop and reverse.[23] The privileged vessel is ordinarily required to keep her course and speed,[24] except that, under the international rules, when, in consequence of thick weather or other causes, she finds herself so close that collision cannot be avoided by the action of the burdened vessel alone, she must take such action as will best aid to avert a collision.[25]

In obeying and construing the rules, due regard is to be had to all dangers of her dissenting signals. Id. Overtaken vessel held not in fault for failure to answer first signal of overtaking vessel nor for dissenting from second passing signals of latter. Id.

20. Rule 25, Act Feb. 8, 1895, c. 64, 28 St. L. 649, 2 Fed. St. Ann. 172. Steamer held in fault for passing steam scow without signals or agreement in violation of rule and of inspectors' rule 6, as result of which she created current or suction causing scow to strike submerged timbers around bridge pier. Kelley Island Lime & Transp. Co. v. Cleveland, 144 F. 207.

21. Art. 25 of inland navigation rules (Act June 7, 1897, c. 4, 30 St. L. 101, 2 Fed. St. Ann. 180). Hudson river near Yonkers held narrow channel within meaning of rule. The Benjamin Franklin [C. C. A.] 145 F. 13, afg. 127 F. 457. Rule held applicable to main channel near Liberty Island in New York Harbor, and tug with car float in fault for its violation. La Bretagne, 148 F. 477. Rule held inapplicable where tug rounded to at entrance to let tide swing tow into creek where barges composing it were to be distributed, the manoeuver being necessary, and with proper precautions, the usual one for taking tows into creek, and vessel whose negligence caused damage was lying at dock and projecting far out across channel. The Overbrook [C. C. A.] 142 F. 950.

Vessels held in fault for violating rule: Tug. The Wrestler [C. C. A.] 144 F. 334. Steamer. The Sicilian Prince [C. C. A.] 144 F. 951, afg. 128 F. 133. Tug with tows, it appearing that it was safe and practical to obey it. The Benjamin Franklin [C. C. A.] 145 F. 13, afg. 127 F. 457. Tug for keeping to left hand side of channel without signifying by proper signals her intention to navigate contrary to rule. The Nugent [C. C. A.] 145 F. 31.

22. Art. 22 of sailing rules, Act Aug. 19, 1890, 26 St. L. 327, 2 Fed. St. Ann. 162. Vessel held in fault for violating rule. The Charles A. Campbell, 142 F. 996. Art. 22 of rules applicable to rivers, harbors, etc. (30 St. L. 101, 2 Fed. St. Ann. 180). Steamer held in fault for collision with launch. The Pocomoke, 150 F. 193. Ferryboat. The John H. Starin, 145 F. 723. Tug for collision between her tow and steamer for proceeding to cross bows of latter without first having, while at safe distance, obtained her assent. The Transfer No. 15 [C. C. A.] 145 F. 503. Tug for collision in channel between scows which she was towing and a schooner, evidence showing that she crossed bow of latter immediately before collision, though latter was privileged vessel. The John Fleming, 149 F. 904.

23. Art. 23 of rules applicable to rivers, harbors, etc. (30 St. L. 101, 2 Fed. St. Ann. 180). Ferryboat held in fault for violating rule. The John H. Starin, 145 F. 723. Steamer for collision with launch. The Pocomoke, 150 F. 193. International Rules, art. 23, Act Aug. 19, 1890, c. 802, 26 St. L. 327, 2 Fed. St. Ann. 162. Rule does not require burdened vessel to make this maneuver if by so doing it would increase, rather than lessen, chances of collision. The Job H. Jackson, 144 F. 896.

24. Art. 21 of rules applicable to rivers, harbors, etc. (30 St. L. 101, 2 Fed. St. Ann. 180). Evidence held insufficient to show that privileged schooner changed course so suddenly and to such a degree as to bring about collision. The John Flemming, 149 F. 904. Launch held not in fault for slowing down and reversing when collision was seen to be inevitable, with view of lessening danger by receiving glancing blow instead of direct one, maneuver being proper under circumstances. The Pocomoke, 150 F. 193.

Vessels held in fault for collision for violating rule. The John H. Starin, 145 F. 723; The Mary P. Mosquito, 145 F. 960; The Stamford, 148 F. 509. Privileged schooner held in fault for negligently taking a course which brought her on bell buoy rendering change of course necessary. The Nottingham [C. C. A.] 143 F. 942.

International rules, art. 21, Act Aug. 19, 1890, c. 802, 26 St. L. 327, 2 Fed. St. Ann. 162. Evidence held not to show that privileged vessel changed course or speed. The Job H. Jackson, 144 F. 896. Schooner close hauled held in fault for collision with one sailing free for allowing herself to fall off owing to fact that master was acting both as wheelsman and lookout, she not being able to show such constant vigilance as was necessary to sustain burden of showing that other vessel was solely in fault. The Metamora [C. C. A.] 144 F. 936.

25. Art. 21, as amended by Act May 28, 1894, c. 83, 28 St. L. 83, 2 Fed. St. Ann. 162. Privileged vessel held in fault for not holding herself against tide and permitting burdened vessel to pass, there being special circumstances warranting a departure from the general rule. The Transfer No. 10 [C. C. A.] 144 F. 676.

navigation or collision, and to any special circumstances which may render a departure therefrom necessary in order to avoid immediate danger.[26] There is no right of way when it is obvious that if adhered to it will result in danger of a collision,[27] and all vessels must stop and reverse or take such other steps as may be necessary when risk of collision becomes imminent.[28] A change of course on the part of the privileged vessel is not a fault when made to avoid a collision which in the best judgment of a competent navigator then seems otherwise unavoidable.[29] The supervising inspectors of steam vessels are authorized to establish such rules to be observed by steam vessels passing each other, not inconsistent with the statutes on the subject, as they may deem necessary for safety.[30] A vessel having the right under the steering and sailing rules to make a particular maneuver cannot be deprived of such right by any rule of the inspectors forbidding her to sound a signal which would indicate her intention to make such maneuver.[31]

The rules as to passing may be changed by mutual agreement, and such agreements when made must be complied with.[32] A vessel is not in fault for failure

26. International rules, art. 27, Act Aug. 19, 1890, c. 802, 26 St. L. 327, 2 Fed. St. Ann. 163. The North Star [C. C. A.] 151 F. 168, modifying, 140 F. 263. Held that there were special circumstances warranting departure from rule requiring privileged vessel to keep course and speed, and she was in fault for failure to hold herself against tide and allow tug and tow to pass. The Transfer No. 10 [C. C. A.] 144 F. 676. Privileged schooner held guilty of contributory fault in holding course when it became evident that such action could only result in collision. The Gladys [C. C. A.] 144 F. 653, rvg. 135 F. 601.

27. Both vessels held in fault for collision brought about by persistent efforts of each to pass ahead of other, though each believed she had right of way. The John H. Starin, 145 F. 723.

28. Tug with tows held in fault for collision with becalmned sloop yacht for not stopping at safe distance or proceeding with utmost caution instead of attempting to pass between yacht and another approaching vessel at full speed. The International [C. C. A.] 143 F. 468, afg. 125 F. 419. Tug held chargeable with contributory fault in not stopping and backing when it became apparent that other vessel was not complying with passing agreement, and that if she kept on collision would result. The Gladiator [C. C. A.] 144 F. 681, afg. 132 F. 876. Both steamer and transfer tug held in fault for proceeding when it became evident that there was a misunderstanding as to signals and for persisting in attempts until too late to avoid collision. The Transfer Tug No. 9, 148 F. 456. Privileged vessel held not in fault for failure to stop and reverse immediately upon discovering danger of collision, it being doubtful if vessels were then far apart enough to avoid it, and plain faults of other vessel being sufficient to account for collision. The C. C. Clarke, 146 F. 615. Rule 3 of board of supervising inspectors providing that if, when steamers are approaching each other, pilot of either fails to understand course or intention of other, he shall give several blasts of whistle, and, if vessels shall have approached within half a mile of each other, both shall be slowed to speed barely sufficient to give steerage way until proper signals have been given, answered, and understood, or until vessels have passed, held to apply only to vessels in narrow channels, or to vessels approaching head on, or nearly so, and not to vessels meeting in wide channel, where each vessel understood intention of other, and vessels would have passed starboard to starboard without risk of collision had both kept original courses, and hence one of two vessels in such situation was not in fault for keeping her course and speed. The Atlantic City [C. C. A.] 143 F. 451, afg. 136 F. 996.

29. Vessel held not in fault. The Charles A. Campbell, 142 F. 996; The Martha E. Wallace, 148 F. 94.

30. Regulations applicable to rivers, harbors, etc. (Act June 7, 1897, c. 4, § 2, 30 St. L. 102, 2 Fed. St. Ann. 181). The Transfer No. 15 [C. C. A.] 145 F. 503.

31. Power to make regulations is restricted to such as are not inconsistent with act conferring it. The Transfer No. 15 [C. C. A.] 145 F. 503.

32. Vessels held in fault for violating agreement: Tug. The Lowell M. Palmer [C. C. A.] 142 F. 937. Tug with car float. The Werdenfels, 150 F. 400. Steamer. Ohio Transp. Co. v. Davidson S. S. Co. [C. C. A.] 148 F. 185; The Transfer Tug No. 9, 148 F. 456. Collision between ferryboat and overtaking tug held due to change of course by former in violation of agreement that tug should pass to the right. The Wyoming, 145 F. 735. Tug held not in fault for collision by reason of fact that she was near shore instead of in center of stream as required by state statute, it appearing that she was proceeding in accordance with well recognized custom in order to safely pass bridge, and that meeting vessel expressly assented to passing in that manner, and that there was ample opportunity to so pass had not latter been navigated negligently. The Lowell M. Palmer [C. C. A.] 142 F. 937. Tug held in fault for allowing two whistle signal, blown to an overtaking vessel, to have full effect on approaching tug whose navigator supposed it was an assent to his own two whistles, and later changed her maneuver to one suitable under one whistle after it was too late for other tug to respond. The Wrestler [C. C. A.] 144 F. 334. Tug held solely in fault for collision with to assent to a starboard passing where in the exercise of proper precautions, the situation does not, at the time the signal is given, warrant such a maneuver on her part.[33]

Vessels have the right to assume that other vessels approaching them will exhibit proper lights,[34] and keep a proper lookout,[35] and will conform to the rules of navigation,[36] and to such passing agreements as may be made.[37]

Vessels should not assume unnecessary risks or venture into danger which can be easily avoided,[38] loiter in the track of other vessels,[39] or proceed at excessive speed in harbors or other places where other vessels are liable to be encountered.[40] Vessels navigating the East river are required to keep as near the center of the stream as possible,[41] and away from the ends of the piers.[42] A vessel backing across a channel, in the way of other vessels navigating it, is bound to exercise extreme care to notify the other vessels of her maneuver.[43] Steamers navigating in a fog are bound to reduce their speed to such rate as will enable them to stop in time to avoid a collision after an approaching vessel comes in sight, provided the latter is herself going at the moderate speed required by law.[44] Large vessels must exercise ferryboat though latter was burdened vessel under starboard hand rule, where rule was superseded by two blast agreement initiated by tug which gave ferryboat right to keep her course and speed and to cross tug's bow. The Edwin J. Berwind [C. C. A.] 144 F. 664. Evidence held to show making of such agreement. Id. Steamer held in fault in that master was not sufficiently attentive to signals, that he continued to swing to port after signal assenting to passing port to port was sounded, and that he managed vessel in euch a negligent manner as to cause collision. The Lake Shore, 149 F. 855. Tugs being accustomed to pass in adverse situations, held that their agreement as to manner of doing so when sufficient distance apart to give freedom of choice excluded excuses. The Luther C. Ward, 149 F. 787. Tug held not to have acted under duress in agreeing to passing signals in view of distance between two vessels. Id. Tug with tow agreeing to pass meeting tug starboard to starboard when two were one thouеand feet apart held solely in fault for collision of one of her tows with a dredge for failure to starboard helm promptly, it appearing that there was room enough for her to pass dredge safely had she done so. Id. Tug with car floats held in fault for agreeing to go to left and attempting to do so when her heading was such that passing to right might have been intended and which had effect of making approaching steamer believe that she so intended, especially in view of one blast signal to another vessel. The Transfer Tug No. 9, 148 F. 456.

33. Steam barge held not in fault. The Lake Shore, 149 F. 855.

34. Steamer removing lookouts to bridge, where they had unobstructed view, held not in fault for collision with schooner not exhibiting required stern light for failure to so reduce speed that she would have been able to avoid schooner after making her out. The Kaiserin Maria Theresa [C. C. A.] 149 F. 97, rvg. 125 F. 145.

35. Privileged vessel held to have right to assume that her lights would be seen by approaching vessel until nearly last minute. The Martha E. Wallace, 148 F. 94.

36. A vessel navigating broad river channels is not required to go at slow speed to avoid collision with another vessel which could only occur by a reckless disregard of the rules of navigation. The Atlantic City [C. C. A.] 143 F. 451, afg. 136 F. 996.

37. Tug held not in fault for failure to reverse sooner, she not being bound to anticipate that meeting vessel would not carry out passing agreement, and it appearing that she had sternway when collision occurred. The Lowell M. Palmer [C. C. A.] 142 F. 937.

38. Water boat coming out of pier held solely in fault for collision with schooner in tow of tug. The Golden Rod, 145 F. 840.

39. Steamship stopping to discharge pilot outside entrance of channel held not in fault for collision by reason of fact that she lay across track of inward bound vessels, nor for remaining there too long. The Kentucky, 148 F. 500.

40. Steamer held in fault for navigating in river at speed in excess of that fixed by state statute. The Transfer Tug No. 9, 148 F. 456.

41. Tug held in fault for navigating too near shore. The Dreamland, 149 F. 910.

42. Tug with tow held in fault for collision with batteau in harbor for keeping too close to ends of piers in view of rate of speed at which she was traveling. Carter v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co., 151 F. 531. Rule cannot be invoked by injured vessel which was also violating it. The Golden Rod, 145 F. 840. Tug held not in fault for being near ends of piers in view of short distance she had to traverse. The Transit, 148 F. 138.

43. Steamer held in fault for not sooner perceiving her danger and taking steps to avoid it. The Sicilian Prince [C. C. A.] 144 F. 951, afg. 128 F. 133. Vessel about to dock held in fault for throwing stern into stream without having stern lookout to determine whether lateral motion would interfere with navigation of other vessels. The Dreamland, 149 F. 910.

44. Steamer held in fault for collision because of excessive speed. The Kentucky, 148 F. 500. Steamer held in fault for collision with drifting lighter in Hudson River for failure to observe her, or for excessive speed if it was too foggy to have observed her proper and reasonable care to prevent injury to small craft by their displacement waves.[45]

Colliding vessels are required to stand by until it appears that assistance is not required.[46]

(§ 7) D. Vessls anchored, drifting, grounded.[47]—Moving vessels must ordinarily keep out of the way of those at rest.[48] It is unlawful to tie up or anchor vessels in navigable channels in such manner as to prevent or obstruct the passage of other vessels.[49] When, however, a vessel loses her motive power and cannot safely find a mooring place by the land, she is entitled to anchor where she is.[50] sooner, as claimed. The Etruria [C. C. A.] 147 F. 216, rvg. 139 F. 925.

45. Evidence held to show that small boat in tow of launch was sunk and cargo of launch injured by waves raised by wind owing to overloading and low freeboard, and not by displacement waves of passing tug. The Newcastle, 147 F. 534. Even though shifting of cargo of logs and listing of lighter was due to displacement waves caused by negligent navigation of steamer, held that it was not proximate cause of loss of logs which rolled from deck when she subsequently resumed unloading, but loss was due to negligence of those in charge of lighter in failing to take precautions to correct list before resuming unloading. The Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse [C. C. A.] 145 F. 623, rvg. 134 F. 1012. Steamer navigating New York Bay at high speed held liable for injury to barge. The Asbury Park [C. C. A.] 147 F. 194, rvg. 136 F. 269. Large steamer navigating New York Bay and harbor held liable for injuries to scows by swells, it appearing that dangerous swells were not produced by her when speed was reduced to reasonable degree. Ross v. Central R. R. of New Jersey, 146 F. 608. Where vessel was positively identified, discrepancies between evidence of libelant's witnesses and vessel's log as to time and direction in which vessel was going held not to prevent recovery. Id. Steamer held liable for injury to barge. The Asbury Park, 144 F. 553. Those operating steamer creating large waves sufficient to swamp or capsize smaller boat in passing held to owe latter duty of avoiding danger by ceasing normal operation and stopping propeller or paddle wheels until smaller boat had passed out of danger zone. Daniels v. Carney [Ala.] 42 So. 452.

46. Failure to comply with Act Sept. 4, 1890, c. 875, 26 St. 425, merely puts upon a vessel the burden of proving that she was not responsible for collision. The Luzerne, 148 F. 133. Tug held not in fault for failure to stand by and offer assistance to boat in tow of launch, under circumstances. The Newcastle, 147 F. 534.

48. Vessels in motion are required to keep out of the way of a vessel at anchor, if latter is without fault, unless it appears that collision was the result of inevitable accident, rule being that vessel in motion must exonerate herself from blame by showing that it was not in her power to prevent collision by adopting any practicable precautions. Ross v. Cornell Steamboat Co., 143 F. 166, afd. [C. C. A.] 149 F. 196. Tug held in fault for collision at night between her tow and dredge anchored at side of channel where she had been working during day, tug knowing position of dredge and having larger tow than she could properly handle. Id. Evidence held insufficient to show that notice claimed to have been given dredge to move was understood. Id. If moving vessel seeks to exonerate herself on ground that she was under domination and control of tug, and hence not responsible for her own navigation, she must prove as well as allege that fact. The Degama [C. C. A.] 150 F. 323. Evidence held insufficient to show irresponsibility. Id. Tug held in fault for collision between her tow and dredge working in channel, evidence showing that there was sufficient room to enable her to pass safely if properly navigated. The Overbrook, 149 F. 785. Collision between steamer and dredge at work in channel held due to negligence of captain of former in not using sufficient care under the circumstances, he not being excused by reason of fact that dredge had moved buoy, since he could have determined its original position by a known range and since accident would have taken place in any event by reason of his taking unnecessary risk in going too close to shore. The Park City, 144 F. 527. Tug held in fault for collision between tow and anchored yacht for failure to keep on other side of channel. The Margaret, 146 F. 1021. Sailing vessel held in fault for collision with anchored steamer showing proper lights. The Job H. Jackson, 144 F. 896. Where vessel had left her berth, her propeller was moving, her master was on pilot house, and signals were sounded by her to direct movements of other vessels, held that she could not be held to say in excuse of asserted negligence that she was not navigating. The Lake Shore, 149 F. 855.

49. Act March 3, 1899. Steamer held not to have been improperly anchored or to have obstructed channel. The Job H. Jackson, 144 F. 896. Tug held solely in fault for collision between tow and dredge, evidence showing that latter was anchored as near shore as was safe and that there was plenty of room in channel to have passed safely. The Wyomissing, 149 F. 241. Dredge held not to have negligently blocked channel after she had finished working, or to have been in fault for keeping dumper scow on channel side, which was most advantageous position for work in hand. The Overbrook, 149 F. 785. Dredge held in fault for collision with tow for anchoring in channel at night at place where navigation was dangerous. Ross v. Cornell Steamboat Co. [C. C. A.] 149 F. 196, afg. 143 F. 166. Tug held not in fault for collision between her tow and dredge at night, latter having needlessly obstructed channel by not going as close to shore as possible. after quitting work. The Wyomissing, 149 F. 238.

A vessel at anchor must exercise proper care to prevent the dragging of her anchor.[51] Vessels leaving slips must be careful to avoid injury to vessels lying at adjacent piers.[52]

Mutual care and accommodation is required of vessels lying at docks.[53] A vessel lying at a pier is bound to have her anchor out of the way of passing vessels whenever there is liability to collision or danger of interference with their movements.[54] Persons in charge of a vessel tied up at a pier or dock must exercise reasonable care to see that she does not break loose and injure other vessels.[55] Her fastenings should be secure and suitable to sufficiently hold her to the dock, in view of any flood or force which might reasonably be apprehended as likely to affect her,[56] and should be kept in such adjustment, between the vessel and the docks, as to prevent any undue strain from coming upon them in consequence of the lifting of the vessel by reason of the rising of the water.[57] A vessel drifting from her moorings and colliding with another will be held liable for the resulting damages unless she can show affirmatively that the drifting was the result of inevitable accident or a vis major, which human skill or precaution and a proper display of nautical skill could not have prevented.[58]

Vessels without motive power[59] and becalmed sailing vessels[60] should not be allowed to drift into the track of passing vessels.

50. Applies to small boat as well as to large vessel. Muller v. New York, etc., R. Co., 144 F. 241. Disabled launch held not in fault for collision because she anchored outside anchorage grounds and in track of other vessels. Id.

51. Evidence held to show that collision between schooner and barkentine, while both were lying at anchor, was due to fact that latter dragged her anchor so that she was solely in fault. The Clara Goodwin, 143 F. 172. Evidence held to sustain finding that collision between vessel discharging cargo into lighter and another anchored vessel belonging to same company was due to dragging of anchor by former during night, and that carrier was negligent in failing to discover that vessels had drawn so near together that there was risk of collision, and in not taking measures to avert it, so that carrier was liable for injury to cargo in lighter which was cast adrift to prevent it from being crushed between steamers, and struck on rudder of one of them and sank. Higgins v. Hamburg-American Packet Co. [C. C. A.] 145 F. 24.

52. Injury to canal boat forming part of a tow lying at a pier caused by collision with tug lying motionless alongside held due to fault of another tug with tow which, while leaving adjoining slip, pushed tail of other tow too hard in attempting to get it out of her way. The No. 32, 145 F. 737.

53. Lighter damaged by being squeezed between car float and adjoining pier in slip in basin while discharging cargo at wharf through steamship at adjoining wharf taking ground at low tide and listing over against float and pressing her against lighter, held in fault in taking and persisting in remaining in a dangerous berth after due warning by harbor master, and steamship held also in fault for bringing float to her side and forcing it into close proximity to lighter when she knew of danger. The Cuzco, 152 F. 283. Barge and canal boat discharging on opposite sides of narrow creek both held in fault for injury to former caused by the two sagging together in the night when the tide receded because they were left too close together, since probability of such an accident should have been foreseen. The W. C. Kirk, 143 F. 358.

54. Dredge lying at bulkhead at entrance of creek where barges were customarily distributed held in fault for sinking of barge by striking on her anchor which was unnecessarily allowed to hang in water over her side. The Overbrook [C. C. A.] 142 F. 950.

55. Standard is that of man of ordinary foresight and prudence to be determined by that which is usual and ordinary. Sharpsburg Sand Co. v. Monongahela River Consol. Coal & Coke Co., 145 F. 424. Respondent held to have exercised reasonable care in tying up and caring for barges so that he was not liable for injuries to sand boats which they struck after they broke loose, particularly where it appeared that they broke loose because they were struck by overturned boats floating down stream. Id.

56. Evidence held to show that fastenings of vessel tied up for winter were sufficient, if kept in proper adjustment, to repel force of any flood reasonably to be apprehended. The William E. Reis, 143 F. 1013.

57. Breaking loose of vessel in flood held due to negligence in failing to properly adjust lines, so that she was liable for injury to vessels with which she collided. The William E. Reis, 143 F. 1013.

58. The William E. Reis, 143 F. 1013.

59. Tug casting adrift, in Hudson River on foggy day, two lighters having neither motive power nor means of signaling, held in fault for collision between one of them and steamer. The Etruria [C. C. A.] 147 F. 216, rvg. 139 F. 925.

60. Sloop yacht held in fault for not anchoring near shore when wind failed. The International [C. C. A.] 143 F. 463, afg. 125 F. 419

(§ 7) E. Tugs and tows, pilot boats, fishing vessels, etc.[61]—The tug is not an insurer of the safety of the tow, but is only bound to exercise reasonable care, caution, and maritime skill under the circumstances.[62] She is bound to know the condition of the channels and other waters in which the service is to be performed [63] and the effect of the tide and current,[64] and it is her duty to see that the tow is properly made up,[65] not to start on the voyage when the weather conditions render

61. See 6 C. L. 1479.

62. Tug has burden of exercising reasonable skill and care in everything relating to undertaking, having due regard to extent of voyage, and any special hazards incident to seas to be traversed, which includes not only proper and safe navigation of tug, but furnishing of safe, sound, and suitable appliances and instrumentalities for service to be performed and proper make up of the tow preparatory to the voyage. The Britannia, 148 F. 495. Burden is on the tow to prove the negligence alleged. Tug held not liable, it appearing that master exercised reasonable care, caution, and maritime skill required. The Winnie [C. C. A.] 149 F. 725, rvg. 137 F. 166. Steamer undertaking to tow vessel to port undertakes to exercise reasonable skill and care in everything relating to work, including entrance to port, and lack of either charges her with liability for resulting damage. Gilchrist Transp. Co. v. Sicken [C. C. A.] 147 F. 470. Injury to barge by striking on pier at entrance to harbor held due solely to negligence of towing steamer. Id. Damage to lighter in tow by collision with schooner lying at wharf held due to negligence of tug in keeping too close to shore and not to collision with another tow. Philadelphia Transportation & Lighterage Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 151 F. 537. Steamer towing barge, which broke her propeller and cut barge loose allowing her to drift onto pier, held solely in fault for resulting damage for being outside of regular channel and where navigation was dangerous for vessels of her size. The Oceanica, 144 F. 301. Tug held solely in fault for capsizing of dredge in tow for excessive speed or want of care in view of weather conditions and construction of dredge, the tug being in full charge and control. Monongahela River Consol. Coal & Coke Co. v. O'Neil [C. C. A.] 144 F. 74. Damage to cargo of wheat by sinking of canal boat held not due to boat's unseaworthiness but to negligence of tug in pushing her into ice in slip and negligence of master of boat in requesting that this be done, so that cargo owner was entitled to recover damages from tug. Bradley v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 145 F. 569. Tug held in fault for loss of tow caused by running her on sunken wreck at night, evidence showing that light capable of burning twenty-four hours had been placed on wreck, that it had been filled late in afternoon, and that it was burning brightly two hours before accident and that there was no vigilant lookout on the tug. The Volunteer [C. C. A.] 149 F. 723. Owners of cargo of barge sunk by striking wreck held entitled to recover from tug on theory that there was a light on wreck which tug should have seen though they also proceeded against owners of wreck alleging that they were negligent gation was admitted by the tug. Id. Evidence held to show that barge did not strike in failing to maintain a light, which allebottom while being towed. The Asher J. Hudson, 145 F. 731.

63. Is liable for injuries to tow due to master's ignorance of a known obstruction to navigation. The Inca [C. C. A.] 148 F. 363. Evidence held to support finding that tug was solely in fault for sinking of tow in allowing her to ground on mound of rocks in river, which had been there for many years and was known to pilots generally, even though not known to tug's master, and also in method adopted to bring tow clear of obstruction. Id. Must also make known to tow any special hazard to be encountered, and, if she fails in her duty in these particulars and tows vessel into a special hazard, she is responsible for resulting injury regardless of care used in act of towing. The Naos, 144 F. 292. Master of tug held negligent in entering upon towage service at time when grounding was likely to occur owing to condition of tide, even though delay was caused by charterer. Id. Tug held in fault for injuries to tow caused by her striking on sunken wreck in channel, though buoy was unlighted. The E. L. Levy [C. C. A.] 144 F. 666, afg. 108 F. 435. Tug held not in fault for injury to tow caused by running onto submerged crib on which pier of railroad bridge rested, crib not being marked or protected in any way, master not knowing of its existence, and danger not being apparent. The Nonpariel, 149 F. 521. Tug held liable for damage to cargo of tow, it having failed to sustain burden of showing that grounding was due to unknown obstruction. The Resolute, 149 F. 1005.

64. Tug rounding to at entrance of creek in order to let tide swing tow into creek where barges composing it were to be distributed held in fault for collision between barge and dredge lying at bulkhead in failing to take proper precautions to prevent it, fact that master miscalculated force of wind and tide being no excuse. The Overbrook [C. C. A.] 142 F. 950. Tug held solely in fault for injury to tow by collision with jetty at mouth of creek, it being duty of master to know effect of tide and length of hawser necessary to enable him to safely take tow by jetty, and to so arrange tow as to enable him, under circumstances, to conduct barge safely through channel. The Potomac, 147 F. 293.

65. Tugs held liable for sinking of barge by ice due to her exposed position in tow. The Edwin Terry, 145 F. 837. Tug held in fault for failure to furnish safe and suitable hawser to perform contract of towage or to have extra hawsers. The Britannia, 148 F. 495. Tugs held liable for injury to tow by ice if due to absence of breast lines. The Edwin Terry, 145 F. 837. Evidence held to show that tow was made up in usual way so that liability could not be predicated on finding that it was made up in unusual way. The Winnie [C. C. A.] 149 F. 725, rvg. 137 F. 166.

it imprudent to do so,[66] or when she has not sufficient power to handle her under the existing conditions of wind and tide,[67] and to leave the tow in a place of safety,[68] but is not responsible for the loss of a tow due to her unseaworthiness [69] or to the perils of the sea,[70] nor, where the master of the tug, in accordance with the usual custom, undertakes to fasten the hawser on board her, for injuries resulting from her going adrift by reason of the insecurity of such fastening.[71] Where the tow is injured without any fault on her part and under a state of circumstances in which, if proper care is exercised, such misfortune does not ordinarily occur, the tug has the burden of proving the exercise of due care on her part.[72] The master of the tow is bound to use ordinary care to follow the tug, to obey her master, and to avoid injuries and obstructions.[73] The tow may be guilty of contributory fault in consenting to exposure to known or obvious danger.[74] The tug cannot by contract relieve itself from liability for its own negligence.[75] A suit in rem by the owner of a tug to recover for an injury to the former due to the negligence of the latter is a suit ex delicto and not ex contractu.[76]

A tug and her tow are to be regarded as a single vessel for purposes of naviga-

66. Tug held in fault for injury to tow by ice, risk being obvious on account of form of tow and heavy ice to be encountered. The Phoenix, 143 F. 350. Evidence held not to sustain allegations that injury to scow from ice was due to negligence of tug in performing towage service under conditions known to be dangerous, it having been undertaken at request of bailee. The Three Brothers [C. C. A.] 145 F. 177, afg. 134 F. 1001.

67. Evidence held to show that tug was amply able to perform towage service. The Three Brothers [C. C. A.] 145 F. 177, afg. 134 F. 1001. Tugs held liable for injuries due to steamer striking piers, it not being established by a preponderance of evidence that they had right to expect assistance of steam from steamer. The J. S. T. Stranahan, 151 F. 364.

68. Tug and its employer held liable for salvage allowed for rescuing scows which broke loose from pier where they had been negligently tied in violation of statute. The No. K. 1 [C. C. A.] 150 F. 111. Evidence held to sustain findings that it was customary for tugs to furnish barges in tow with anchors when necessary, and that tug was negligent in failing to furnish barge, left while other barges were being distributed, with anchor of sufficient size for its requirements, and hence it was responsible for resulting loss. The Flushing [C. C. A.] 145 F. 614, afg. 134 F. 757. Where tug, in accordance with custom, furnished tow with anchor and cable when it left her while distributing other barges, held that transaction was in effect a loan, and tug was not responsible for manner of its subsequent use. Id. Evidence held not to show negligence on part of tug in failing to take proper care of tow after latter was injured. The Three Brothers [C. C. A.] 145 F. 177, afg. 134 F. 1001. Tug held not in fault for abandoning leaking iron barge or in not sooner going to her rescue in view of belief of masters of both vessels that she had foundered. The Asher J. Hudson, 145 F. 731.

69. Sinking of barge held due to her unseaworthiness, which was not known to master and not apparent, and not to any fault on the part of the steamer towing her. Dady v. Bacon [C. C. A.] 149 F. 401, rvg. 133 F. 986. Evidence held to show that sinking of tow was due to unseaworthiness and not to any negligence on part of tug. The Oak, 148 F. 1005. Libelant held in fault for furnishing scows not sufficiently seaworthy for the voyage. The Britannia, 148 F. 495. Evidence held to support finding that bark was staunch and sound when offered for towage. The Inca [C. C. A.] 148 F. 363, afg. 130 F. 36. In any event, running onto mound of rock was not one of ordinary perils to be encountered on voyage. Id.

70. Loss of tow held not due to perils of sea. The Britannia, 148 F. 495.

71. Where master of canal boat on board her when towage service commenced undertook, in accordance with usual custom, to fasten hawser on board her, held that tug was not responsible for injury to her resulting from her going adrift by reason of insecure fastening. The Lyndhurst [C. C. A.] 147 F. 110. Master cannot be regarded as servant of tug in fastening hawser so as to make her responsible for his negligence. Id.

72. Where steamer was stranded on rocks while being towed through narrow channel, and it appeared that she promptly obeyed signals of tugs. The W. G. Mason [C. C. A.] 142 F. 913, rvg. 131 F. 632.

73. Barge in tow of steamer held not guilty of negligence in failing to throw off or cut tow line before barge struck pier or otherwise. Gilchrist Transp. Co. v. Sicken [C. C. A.] 147 F. 470.

74. The Phoenix, 143 F. 350. Master of tow is not chargeable with contributory negligence in acquiescing in her exposure to unnecessary peril unless he knows of such peril or it is very obvious. The Naos, 144 F. 292. Tow held not in fault, master not being cognizant of hazard and assuming no control over towing. Id.

75. Agreement that towage shall be at risk of tow does not relieve towing vessel from liability for injuries due to her negligence. The Oceanica, 144 F. 301.

76. The W. G. Mason [C. C. A.] 142 F. 913, rvg. 131 F. 632. May be maintained irrespective of any responsibility arising as a result of a breach of contract. The Oceanica, 144 F. 301.

tion with reference to other vessels.[77] The tug must have sufficient power to handle the tow under all ordinary conditions [78] and must signal it promptly when a change of course becomes necessary.[79] Tugs with long tows navigating in the track of other vessels will be held to the most extreme care in handling them.[80] Where the navigation of a vessel is under the sole direction of a tug, neither such vessel nor her owners are responsible for the faults or negligence of the tug.[81]

(§ 7) F. Sole or divided liability, and division of damages.[82]—Under the admiralty law, in case a collision is due to the fault of two or more vessels, the damages and costs will be divided equally between them.[83] A vessel paying the entire damage to the cargo of another vessel equally in fault may enforce contribution against the latter by a proceeding in admiralty for that purpose.[84]

(§ 7) G. Ascertainment and measure of damages.[85]—In collision cases where repairs are practicable, the measure of damages is the reasonable cost of restoring the injured vessel to the condition in which she was at the time the collision occurred.[86] In case of a total loss, it is her market value at the time and place of her loss.[87] A vessel whose fault causes injuries to another is not liable for such

77. Within meaning of rule requiring steam vessel to keep out of way of sailing vessel. The Gladys [C. C. A.] 144 F. 653, rvg. 135 F. 601.

78. Tugs held not chargeable with contributory fault for collision between ferryboat negligently navigated and tow in fog on ground that they had insufficient power to handle tow with proper dispatch, it appearing that they sounded proper fog signals, that it was clear when they started, that they had sufficient power to handle tow under ordinary conditions, and that they could not handle it faster because of unexpected combination of dense fog and adverse tide. The Chicago [C. C. A.] 146 F. 979, rvg. 134 F. 1013.

79. Tug held in fault for collision with becalmned sloop yacht. The International [C. C. A.] 143 F. 468, afg. 125 F. 419.

80. Tug with three barges on single line, whole being four thousand feet long. The Gladys [C. C. A.] 144 F. 653, rvg. 135 F. 601.

81. Where steamer was wholly in charge of tugs which had been lined to take her from her moorings, held that her owners were not liable for injuries to person on public pier, not a passenger, who was struck by hawser caused to sweep over pier by one of the tugs. International Mercantile Marine Co. v. Gaffney [C. C. A.] 143 F. 305. Evidence held to show that steamer was being moved by independent contractor without any exercise of control by defendant. Id. The test applied in passing upon the liability of a charterer who makes a contract with another to perform a towage service which the charterer is required by the charter to perform is whether or not the charterer assumes or reserves to himself any control over the means or instrumentalities to be employed by the contractor. Evidence held to show that charterer reserved and exercised such control, so that it was responsible for injuries to vessel due to her grounding while being towed, it appearing that charterer detained her until after it was safe to start owing to condition of tide. The Naos, 144 F. 292.

83. Damages for death due to collision between tug with tow and batteau divided, collision being result of combined negligence of those navigating both vessels. Carter v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co., 151 F. 531. Where two tugs and two scows towed by one of them were all in fault for collision, held that damages should be borne in equal shares by each vessel, there being a remedy over against the other for deficiency if value of any was insufficient to pay the amount decreed against it. The Eugene F. Moran, 143 F. 187.

84. Contract relations between such other vessel and her cargo have nothing to do with the case, and her liability is not affected by provisions in her bills of lading giving her benefit of insurance and requiring notice of claim to be given and suit to be brought within specified time. Erie R. Co. v. Erie & W. Transp. Co., 27 S. Ct. 246, rvg. 142 F. 9. Admiralty has jurisdiction of such a libel. Erie R. Co. v. Erie & W. Transp. Co., 27 S. Ct. 246. Former decree dividing damages to vessels, but refusing to divide it as to cargo because such question was not raised by pleadings, held not a bar to libel to compel contribution for cargo damage, right to a division of liability for damage to vessels and contingent claim to partial indemnity for payment of cargo damage being separable, and libelant not being bound to adopt procedure permitted by rule 59. 86. When vessel has been fully repaired and thereby made as serviceable as before, depreciated market value is not an element of damage. The Loch Trool, 150 F. 429. Owner held only entitled to reasonable cost of repairs, which resulted in vessels being restored to old classification, and in her at once resuming making of voyages in same trade as that in which she was formerly engaged. Id. Fair and reasonable cost of repairs to vessel injured in collision and not amount actually expended in making them may be recovered. The Umbria, 148 F. 283. Estimates may be resorted to to show that repair bill was not reasonable cost of repairs called for by survey which was substantially followed. Id. Allowance by commissioner approved. Id.

damages as might have been avoided by those in charge of the latter by the exercise of reasonable skill and diligence after the accident.[88] Demurrage may be allowed as an element of damage in proper cases.[89] The allowance of interest is discretionary.[90] Liability for death resulting from a collision is treated in a subsequent section.[91]

(§ 7) H. Common-law liability for negligent navigation.—At common law every navigating vessel owes to every other one the duty to observe due care so as to avoid inflicting wrong and injury upon it, and is liable in damages for injuries resulting from an intentional negligent violation thereof,[92] the rights of small craft being the same as those of large vessels in this regard.[93] As in other cases, to charge one with subsequent negligence there must exist a prior knowledge on his part of the peril of the persons injured.[94] The test of a master's liability for the torts of his servants is whether the injury was committed by his authority, expressly conferred or fairly inferred from the nature of the employment and the duties incident thereto.[95]

Tugs are liable for injuries due to negligent towage.[96] If one hires a seaworthy and competently manned tug to tow his vessel and surrenders the navigation thereof to her under such circumstances that no active duty is left for him to perform, the negligence of the tug is not imputable to him.[97] Vessel owners are liable for injuries to a bridge tender due to the negligence of those in charge of the navigation of the vessel.[98]

If a voyage is negligent, or such as reasonably prudent men, familiar with the conditions, would not have undertaken, and such negligence is the proximate cause

Mobila, 147 F. 882. May be determined from opinions and estimates of competent witness when no direct evidence. Id. Finding of commissioner as to value of vessel is entitled to great respect and will not be set aside unless it is made to appear that valuation is manifestly erroneous as against weight of evidence or that there was clear mistake in process by which conclusions were reached. 88. Case is not one of mutual fault authorizing division of damages. The Asbury Park [C. C. A.] 147 F. 194, rvg. 136 F. 269. Though steamer was in fault and responsible for damages to barge in tow caused by her displacement waves, held that she was not liable for the subsequent loss of barge and cargo through sinking due to failure of captain to keep her pumped out, or to notify tug of her condition. 94. In an action for damages for personal injuries resulting in drowning of plaintiff's intestate through negligence of defendant's servants in operation of his steamboat, whereby small boat in which intestate was riding was capsized by swell, count of complaint alleging failure to stop paddle wheels held demurable in failing to sufficiently allege that defendant's servants saw or should have seen small boat. Daniels v. Carney [Ala.] 42 So. 452.

95. In action to recover for death of plaintiff's intestate who was drowned by swamping of small boat alleged to have been caused by negligence of defendant's servants who were operating passing steamer, count of complaint held insufficient in failing to allege that servants were acting within scope and line of their authority, action being one for common-law liability. Daniels v. Carney [Ala.] 42 So. 452.

96. Held not negligent for those in charge of tugs towing caisson to do what was necessary to regulate course of tow in channel even if it subjected appliance to which hawser was attached to unusual strain, and captain had right to exercise his judgment in adopting method of proceeding with one tug before other with hawser attached to bow of caisson. Frederickson v. Central Wharf Towboat Co., 101 Me. 406, 64 A. 666.

97. May recover from defendant for collision due to negligence of his vessel though tug is also negligent. Instruction held erroneous. Rockland Lake Trap Rock Co. v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 101 N. Y. S. 222.

98. Evidence in action by bridge tender for damages for personal injuries caused by vessel in tow of defendant's tug striking draw held to show that vessels could have passed through draw in safety if they had been properly managed and had followed usual channel, and that accident was due to negligence of those in charge of tug. Stoker v. Hodge Fence & Lumber Co., 116 La. 926, 41 So. 211. Evidence held to show that plaintiff did not delay in opening bridge and not to sustain contention that he was closing instead of opening bridge at time of accident. Id.

of a collision with and damage to a bridge, all persons controlling or participating in such voyage are jointly and severally liable,[99] but if the voyage is not negligent and the accident is caused by negligence in navigation after it is begun, the party or parties so negligent are alone liable.[1]

Contributory negligence on the part of the injured person is ordinarily a defense,[2] but one is not relieved from liability for injury inflicted by him on another by reason of the fact that the latter negligently exposed himself to such danger, if, when that situation was or ought to have been apparent to him, he omitted such reasonable precautions as would, if exercised, have avoided the accident.[3] One cannot recover for injuries to a vessel while in tow which are due to the negligence of his own servants.[4] The occupants of a small boat have the right to assume that passing steamers will observe their duty toward her in avoiding the infliction of injury.[5]

Though the right of vessels to navigate navigable waters is paramount to the right to fish therein, it is not exclusive,[6] and the master of such a vessel may not unnecessarily, by his own negligence, force the two rights into conflict and then claim the benefit of the paramount one.[7] Hence, if persons in charge of a vessel see fish nets in time to avoid them without any appreciable interruption of the voyage, or if their presence is so obvious that such persons must have seen them if performing with ordinary care the duties of the position, the owners of the vessel are liable for damages resulting from running over them,[8] and this is true regardless of whether the owner of the nets had a right under the statute to place them where he did or whether, as to the shore owner, he was a trespasser.[9]

The admiralty rule that in collision cases the defendant cannot rely on a general denial but must set up by way of answer the circumstances relating to the collision has no application to an ordinary law action for negligence against those in charge of a vessel colliding with and injuring a bridge,[10] but in such case defendant may, under a general denial, show that the acts complained of were done by other persons for whose negligence he was not liable.[11]

The usual rules of evidence apply in actions at law for damages for injuries due to negligent navigation.[12]

99. Is no defense for one joint tort feasor that another person was also liable. Multnomah County v. Willamette Towing Co., [Or.] 89 P. 389. Testimony of manager of charterer that its officers had nothing to do with management of vessel which injured bridge held admissible, plaintiff having charged

§ 8. Carriage of passengers.[13]—A common carrier of passengers by water is not an insurer but is bound so far as it is capable by human care and foresight to carry them safely, and is responsible for all injuries to them resulting from even the slightest negligence on its part.[14] It must use the utmost care to accord passengers respectful treatment by its officers and servants,[15] and is liable for the willful torts of its own servants committed upon them during the voyage.[16] It is also bound to use ordinary care to avoid injury to one going upon its vessel upon its implied invitation and to give him a reasonable opportunity to depart, the measure of its duty in the latter particular depending upon the magnitude of the threatened injury.[17] The breaking or giving away of an instrumentality being used by and under the control of the carrier is prima facie proof of negligence and throws the burden on it to show the absence of negligence.[18] A vessel is liable for injuries received by a passenger as a result of his being compelled to come on deck in stormy weather to receive his food.[19] The Federal statutes provide a penalty, to be recovered by a person suing for the same, for the carrying on any steam vessel of a greater number of passengers than is stated in the certificate of inspection,[20] and make it a penal offense for the master of a vessel bringing immigrants into the United States from a foreign country to fail to provide tables and seats for the use of such passengers at regular meals.[21] A vessel will not, however, be held liable in damages to passengers for inconvenience due to overcrowding and a shortage of water which are the result of extraordinary conditions and for which the officers are not to blame.[22] Contributory negligence is ordinarily a defense in an action at law.[23] In admiralty it does not necessarily bar recovery but may result in a division of damages.[24]

The carrier is ordinarily liable to a passenger for the loss of his baggage unless caused by the act of God or the public enemy.[25] It may, however, by a special contract, limit its liability to a specified sum[26] provided such limitation is not unreasonable.[27] A limitation printed on a ticket, but not included or referred to in that part of it containing the agreement to transport and signed by the carrier's agent, is generally held to be a mere notice not binding on the passenger unless he is shown to have read it or to have had it called to his attention.[28] The giving of a

In action by mother as administratrix of minor son to recover damages for his death from falling off steamer on which he was passenger, instruction that she could not recover if she failed to use reasonable care for his protection, and failure in any way contributed to his loss, properly refused as covering any such negligence on her part, no matter how remote, and there being no evidence justifying finding that she was negligent. Id. Evidence held to sustain finding that plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence. Fowden v. Pacific Coast S. S. Co. [Cal.] 86 P. 178.

24. Passenger on ferry boat walking in place not designed for use of foot passengers, but where they were permitted to go, held negligent in failing to observe plainly visible coal hole into which he fell in daytime. The Lackawanna, 151 F. 499. Passenger awarded one-third of his damages, the failure of the boat to guard the hole or to warn passenger walking in unusual place being less deserving of condemnation than passenger's carelessness in going into easily discoverable danger. A.] 144 F. 781. Provision in margin of ticket, headed "notice," held not part of contract of carriage and not to relieve carrier from full liability, where passenger denied that she had read it or that anything had been said to her in regard to her baggage or its value. Smith v. North German Lloyd S. S. Co., 142 F. 1032, afd. [C. C. A.] 151 F. 222. Conditions exempting carrier from liability for loss through theft, etc., which were printed on back of ticket in small type, and which passenger did not read and which were not called to her attention, held no defense to specified notice of loss is sometimes made a condition precedent to the right of recovery.[29] The Federal statutes provide that if any shipper of gold or jewels or certain other enumerated valuables shall lade the same as freight or baggage on any vessel without giving written notice of the character and value thereof and having the same entered on the bill of lading therefor, the master and owner of such vessel shall not be liable as carriers thereof in any form and manner, and that they shall not be liable for any such goods beyond the value and according to the character thereof so notified and entered.[30] Such limitations have been held not to apply to extra baggage taken under a subsequent agreement and for the transporting of which additional compensation is paid.[31] The measure of damages for the loss of curios having no market value in the usually accepted sense is their value at the place of shipment as shown by experts.[32]

§ 9. Carriage of goods.[33]—In the absence of a valid limitation of liability in the contract of carriage, the carrier is ordinarily liable for any injury to or loss of goods intrusted to it for carriage not caused by the act of God or the public enemy.[34] A carrier cannot, however, be bound for goods not actually received for shipment even though the master of a vessel issues a bill of lading for them.[35] Proof that goods delivered to the carrier in good order were damaged when delivered to the consignee throws the burden on the former to show that it is not liable.[36] Bills of lading generally exempt the vessel from liability for loss due to the perils of the sea,[37] or to leakage of packages.[38] A limitation of the carrier's liability to the

36. Evidence held to support contention that goods delivered to carrier in good order were damaged when delivered to consignee at destination so that carrier was liable for such damage. United States Lace Curtain Mills Co. v. Oceanic Steam Nav. Co., 145 F. 701.

37. Where bill of lading provided that inflammable goods might be carried on deck and exempted carrier from liability for damages due to dangers of the seas, and evidence showed well defined, universal custom, known to plaintiff, to treat oil clothing as inflammable and to carry it on deck on that account, held that such custom became part of contract and carrier was not liable for loss of goods washed overboard while in transit. Tower Co. v. Southern Pac. Co. [Mass.] 80 N. E. 809. Evidence that plaintiff's oil clothing was difficult to ignite, and upon ignition did not burst into flame but only charred, held properly excluded, since even if combustion from extraneous causes was unlikely, still existed probability of ignition by spontaneous combustion. Damage to arsenic from leakage of oil stowed in same hold held due to perils of sea for which vessel was not liable, it appearing that method of stowing was usual one and that weather of great severity was encountered. The Langford, 143 F. 150. Where bill of lading exempted carrier from liability for damage due to act of God, dangers of the seas, sweating of cargo, etc., and carrier showed that vessel was absolutely seaworthy at every stage of voyage, that cargo was properly stowed, and the exercise of ample care during voyage to prevent entry of sea water, held that vessel was not liable for injury to cargo due either to heat and sweat, or entry of sea water, and consequent heat. The Folmina, 143 F. 636. Where it was proved that vessel was seaworthy at the inception of her voyage, that her hatches were well secured and her cargo well stowed, that pumps were efficient and properly worked, and that she invoice or declared value of the goods is valid,[39] but a limitation to a specified sum per package, which is not an agreed valuation thereof, is not.[40] A stipulation that no lien shall attach to any of the vessels engaged in the performance of the contract for any breach thereof, but that such lien is thereby expressly waived, is void as contrary to public policy, whether forbidden by the Harter act or not.[41] Going aground is not ipso facto negligence giving to parties having freight aboard a lien on the vessel.[42] The acceptance of goods from a vessel going aground before reaching her destination is a waiver of the consignee's right to have the voyage completed.[43]

In the absence of a charter party, the bill of lading delivered to the shipper is taken as the best evidence of the contract of carriage, or as a substitute for a regularly drawn charter party.[44] Parol evidence is inadmissible to show that an entire contract for the carriage of merchandise on several vessels never went into effect as to one of them because of the failure to fulfill some unexpressed condition precedent as to it.[45] The fact that an owner and shipper of property is doing business under a fictitious or trade name, and that the contract of affreightment was made in that name, does not preclude him from suing in his own name for damages to such property while in transit.[46] A failure to give notice of loss or damage within the time prescribed by the bill of lading is a matter of defense which can only be presented by answer.[47]

The carrier has a special property interest in the goods which he undertakes to transport, and may maintain an action against a wrongdoer to recover damages for their destruction or spoliation.[48] Payment of the loss by an insurer does not prevent a recovery by either the carrier or the shipper in such case.[49]

The Harter Act.[50]—Under the Harter Act the owners, agents, and charterers of a vessel, and the vessel itself, are exempted from liability for loss or damage to goods carried resulting from faults or errors in navigation or in the management of the vessel, provided the owner has exercised due diligence to make her in all respects seaworthy and properly manned, equipped, and supplied.[51] It is also made unlawful to insert in the bill of lading any provision exempting the vessel from encountered on voyage heavy seas of unusual violence adequate to strain her and cause her to take in unusual quantity of water, held that damage to cargo by water would be attributed to "dangers of the sea" for which ship was not liable under exception in bill of lading, in absence of showing by shipper that it could have been avoided by skill and diligence. Act held not to apply to question of liability of tug for damage to cargo of seaworthy tow due to tug's negligence where relation of tug was one of towage, though both tug and tow belonged to or were controlled by carrier transporting cargo. Bradley v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 145 F. 569.

liability from damages arising from negligence, fault, or failure in proper loading, stowage, custody, care, or proper delivery of merchandise or other property, and such provisions are declared to be void,[52] or to insert any provision whereby the obligation of the owners to exercise due diligence to properly equip, man, provision and outfit the vessel, and to make her seaworthy and capable of performing her intended voyage, or whereby the obligations of the master, officers, agents, or servants to carefully handle and stow her cargo, and to care for and properly deliver the same, shall in any wise be lessened, weakened, or avoided.[53]

§ 10. Freight and demurrage. Freight.[54]—The amount of freight recoverable depends of course on the terms of the contract.[55] The shipowner's lien for freight for the carriage of goods depends upon possession, and its preservation upon a continuance of possession,[56] and this is true though the lien is specifically provided for in the bill of lading.[57] A provision that the cargo is to be delivered to the person named, or his assigns, he or they paying the freight, is but a recognition or assertion of the owner's or master's right to retain the goods until his lien is satisfied, and imposes no obligation on him to insist on payment before delivery,[58] nor does it prevent him from waiving his lien by delivery before payment and subsequently holding the shipper for the freight.[59] In the absence of a special agreement to the contrary,[60] freight paid in advance is to be refunded if from any cause not attributable to the shipper the goods are not carried.[61] Charter hire and the liability of the vessel for dead freight are treated in a former section.[62]

52. Act Feb. 13, 1893, c. 105, § 1, 27 St. L. 445, 4 Fed. St. Ann. 854. Applies to vessels engaged in domestic commerce. The Tampico, 151 F. 689. Agreement "that no lien shall attach to any of the vessels employed in the performance of this contract for any breach thereof, but such lien is hereby expressly waived," held void and of no effect as to damages arising from negligence in proper custody and care of merchandise. Id. Act applies only to contracts between carrier and shipper and not to charter whereby ship is demised and charterer becomes owner pro hac vice, and does not prevent relieving of shipowner from liability for nondelivery of cargo in such case. Golcar S. S. Co. v. Tweedie Trading Co., 146 F. 663.

56. Lien ceases to be available when possession is lost. Portland Flouring Mills Co. v. Portland & Asiatic S. S. Co., 145 F. 687. Shipper of cargo became bound for freight as surety for consignees who were owners. Vessel was stranded and, with cargo, was abandoned by vessel owner to insurer. Part of cargo was salved and sold for price which included freight value and proceeds turned over to insurer. Insurer subsequently recovered freight from shipper, who thereupon sued carrier and insurer for amount thereof, claiming to be subrogated to carrier's lien for freight on cargo and proceeds, and that such proceeds were held subject to such lien. Held that carrier's lien was lost by abandonment of cargo to insurer, and hence could be no lien on proceeds and no right of subrogation thereto, and shipper had no claim to fund. Id. Where lien is expressly reserved in bill of lading, provision that freight shall be considered earned, steamer or goods lost or not lost, at any stage of the entire transit, does not prevent loss of lien by such abandonment. Id.

57. Stipulation "that the carrier shall have a lien on the goods for all freights, primages, and charges," does not affect or change nature of lien, or constitute a hypothecation whereby lien attaches and continues effective without reference to continuation of possession essential to ordinary lien for freight. Portland Flouring Mills Co. v. Portland & Asiatic S. S. Co., 145 F. 687.

58. Provision is for benefit of owner or master and not for that of the shipper or consignor. Portland Flouring Mills Co. v. Portland & Asiatic S. S. Co., 145 F. 687.

59. Portland Flouring Mills Co. v. Portland & Asiatic S. S. Co., 145 F. 687. Provision that freight was to be collected at point of destination and delivery held tantamount to a direction only to owner to collect it at destination, and not to impose upon him such an obligation to do so that failure would prevent him from looking to shipper for payment. Id. Rights, duties, and obligations of shipowner in this regard held not affected by fact that consignee was primarily liable for freight, and shipper was liable only as his surety. Id.

Demurrage.[63]—The vessel owner is ordinarily entitled to demurrage for inexcusable failure to give the vessel customary despatch as required by the charter.[64] He cannot, however, recover demurrage for a delay for which he is himself to blame.[65] Bills of lading sometimes provide that both the shipper and the consignee of goods shall be liable for demurrage for delay at the port of discharge.[66] The cargo may by contract remain subject to a lien for demurrage after the vessel has parted with possession thereof.[67] Demurrage may be allowed for unreasonable delay in making repairs.[68]

Demurrage will be allowed as an element of damage in collision cases only when profits have actually been, or may reasonably be supposed to have been, lost, and the amount of such profits has been proven with reasonable certainty.[69] In ascertaining whether earnings have been lost, the inquiry is not whether they could possibly have been made by the use of the vessel during the period for which the owner has been deprived of her use, but whether they would have been made,[70] which may be proved circumstantially and with a reasonable degree of certainty.[71]

§ 11. Pilotage, towage, wharfage.[72]—Members of the Virginia Pilot Association are not liable to a piloted vessel for the negligence of one of their number, whether they are regarded as partners or not.[73]

63. See 6 C. L. 1487.

64. Evidence held to support finding that owners had not established that vessel was not given customary despatch in unloading. Pendleton v. U. S. & Venezuela Co. [C. C. A.] 145 F. 508. In suit by vessel owner for demurrage based on alleged verbal charter, evidence held insufficient to establish that charterer agreed to give good dispatch in loading, or to render him liable for delay. Benedict v. Cargo of 6,086 Railroad Ties, 151 F. 366. Under charter providing for customary despatch in discharging, owners held entitled to recover demurrage from charterer for delay due to miscalculation of latter as to time required to discharge part of cargo at one dock in consequence of which she had to wait for berth at others. Leary v. Talbot, 151 F. 355.

65. Not where he could have secured quick discharge by taking boat to another place in yard. Murray v. Jump Co., 148 F. 123. Not for delay pending negotiations for security for freight where he could have put cargo ashore but refused to deliver it and thus secured himself for his charges. Id. Agents of steamers held not liable for demurrage for detention of derricks hired by shipper to transport cargo to steamers and by such agents to load same, it appearing that vessels received and stowed goods with reasonable skill and despatch, and that delay was due to manner in which cargo was loaded on derricks, and to fact that libelant furnished larger number of derricks than could be unloaded at once. Merritt & Chapman Derrick & Wrecking Co. v. Vogeman, 143 F. 142.

66. Bill of lading held to make shipper liable for demurrage for detention at port of discharge, though it also made consignee liable and gave lien therefor. Tweedie Trading Co. v. Pitch Pine Lumber Co., 146 F. 612. Even if only owner or consignee was liable, held that shipper was still liable where it consigned freight to itself and remained consignee until actual delivery, though it indorsed bill of lading to another. Id. Failure to enforce claim for demurrage against consignee or cargo at port of discharge, as had right to do under contract, held not to estop owner from subsequently collecting it from shipper. Id.

67. Part of cargo could not be unloaded by reason of consignee's inability to obtain lighters, and was returned to port of shipment after claim for demurrage had accrued under charter. Was there unloaded under agreement between master and charterer that it was to remain subject to lien for demurrage. In suit to enforce lien corporation, of which charterer was president and manager, appeared as claimant, and asserted ownership of property and that it had paid freight money to charterer under agreement whereby he was to transport property to destination, and that he wrongfully had bill of lading issued to himself as consignee. Neither ship owners nor master had knowledge of claimant's rights. Held that lien was valid whether charterer was regarded as holder of legal title or as general agent of claimant, the detention being due to default of agent and his knowledge of transaction being imputed to claimant. Plummer v. 200 Tons of Rails, 149 F. 887.

The essentials of a valid contract of towage are the same as those of any other contract.[74] Where towage services are accepted after notice that something more than towage will be demanded, the tug is entitled to other and higher remuneration than for ordinary towage service.[75] The distinction between towage and salvage is treated in a subsequent section.[76]

§ 12. Repairs, supplies, and like expenses.[77]—It is the duty of one repairing a vessel to release her from dry dock as soon as she is in a condition to float.[78] Where charges for docking and lay days are not fixed by the contract, the person making the repairs is only entitled to collect the customary rate in the harbor where the work is done.[79] Demurrage may be allowed for unreasonable delay in making repairs.[80] The laws of the state where the contract is made and is to be performed, and where the parties thereto reside, will govern in determining the rate of interest to be charged.[81] The construction of particular contracts for repairs will be found in the note.[82] A contract to pull a vessel, lodged in launching, to the owner's satisfaction, requires that the pulling shall be of such a character as to satisfy a reasonably prudent man in the light of the surrounding circumstances.[83] The contractor may in such case recover on a quantum meruit for additional services rendered in pulling the vessel after a pulling sufficient to comply with the terms of the contract.[84]

Liens for repairs and supplies.[85]—The general maritime law gives no lien for repairs or supplies furnished a vessel in its home port,[86] but a lien is frequently given by state statutes in such case,[87] which may be enforced by the admiralty courts, and by them alone when the proceeding is one in rem.[88] Liens created by bers, or to control or direct them in performance of their duties, even though their fees go into common fund and, after paying expenses, are distributed to members according to number of days they respectively have been on active list. Guy v. Donald, 27 S. Ct. 63, rvg. 127 F. 228.

82. Contract to prepare boiler of yacht for "dock trial, doing only such work as is absolutely necessary, not to exceed" a certain sum and to keep as much below it as possible, held not to require libelant to remedy inherent defects in boiler or to pay cost of replacing it with one of a different type, which was found necessary before yacht could be used. 88. States may create liens which they cannot themselves enforce. The Vigilant [C. C. A.] 151 F. 747. Such a lien created by statutes of Pennsylvania may be enforced by district court of district of New Jersey, sitting in admiralty, having possession of vessel, by a proceeding in rem. Id. Lien given by Ala. Code 1896, § 2758, for work done or material supplied by any person in state in and about the repairing, furnishing and supplying of any steamboat, is en-state statutes extend only to domestic vessels of the state.[89] Both under the general maritime law [90] and under state statutes,[91] a lien will not attach for repairs or supplies unless they are furnished on the credit of the vessel. Supplies or repairs furnished in a foreign port are presumed to have been furnished on the credit of the vessel unless the contrary is shown.[92] There seems to be some conflict of authority as to whether there is such a presumption where the state statutes give a lien for supplies and repairs furnished in a domestic port, or whether it must be shown that they were furnished expressly on the vessel's credit.[93] One furnishing repairs or supplies with knowledge that the person ordering them has no authority to bind the vessel,[94] or with knowledge that the vessel is being operated under a charter requiring the charterer to pay for them, or under circumstances which put him on inquiry as to the existence and terms of such charter,[95] is not entitled to a lien. Fact that owner of vessel which injured another vessel admitted his liability and agreed to pay for repairing her, pursuant to which her master appointed her to libelant for repairs, held not to raise an inference that repairs were made on personal credit of owner of other vessel rather than on credit of repaired vessel, even if libelant knew facts, and did not deprive libelant of lien in absence of further proof that he relied on such owner's personal credit. The Seefahrer, 143 F. 697. Contract between insurance company and libelant, with whom it had been dealing in regard to similar matters for many years, for raising vessel which had sunk in home port, held not to give libelant a lien, it having made no inquiry of the owner in regard to company's agency, no allusion having been made to credit of vessel, and there being no necessity for relying on credit of vessel, and it appearing that credit of insurance company was solely in view. The Paul L. Bleakley, 146 F. 570. Provision of policy as to abandonment, etc., held not to make insurance company owner's agent so as to give it power to pledge vessel under such circumstances. Id.

A.] 151 F. 8, afg. 145 F. 743. Evidence held to show that labor and material ordered by owner's representative were furnished upon credit of vessel, and that libelants did not know that owner had chartered boat, or turned over her possession under some conditional sale, and had no information as to any circumstances which would indicate necessity of further inquiry. 93. See 6 C. L. 1489, n. 32. Whether or not such a lien exists is to be determined solely by reference to the statute creating it, and without regard to the principles governing liens given by the general maritime law on foreign vessels under similar circumstances. The Vigilant [C. C. A.] 151 F. 747. Under Pa. Act June 24, 1895 (P. L. 251), supplies ordered by master, owner, or consignee, are presumed to be on the credit of the vessel unless the contrary is shown, and burden of showing an express repudiation of such a pledge, known to one who claims lien, rests on party undertaking to rebut its implication, it not being necessary to show that they were furnished expressly on credit of vessel. Id. See, also, The Golden Rod [C. C. A.] 151 F. 8.

94. One of two agents of parties joining in purchasing tug held to have no authority to bind vessel without concurrence of his coagent, so that persons making repairs at his instance with knowledge of the facts and without securing authority from coagent were not entitled to lien therefor. The Robert R. Kirkland, 143 F. 610.

95. When a question as to a maritime lien arises as to a vessel in possession of a purchaser under a conditional sale, she should be considered as though in possession pro hac vice of a charterer to whom the owner had temporarily turned her over. The Golden Rod [C. C. A.] 151 F. 6. One furnishing coal to yacht in possession of purchaser under contract of conditional sale requiring latter to pay for supplies held not entitled to lien where master did not order coal, and before it was furnished representatives of libelant were informed that yacht was under charter or had been bought on instalment plan, but made no effort to inform themselves as to terms of agreement. Id.

96. Even if person raising vessel under contract with insurance company had basis for lien, held that he had lost right to enforce it where he delayed attempt to do so until after owner's right to recover from insurer under policy was barred or had become doubtful by reason of limitation therein. The Paul L. Bleakley, 146 F. 570. As against a bona fide purchaser for value without notice, lien must be enforced within a reasonable time, what is a reasonable time depending upon the circumstances of each case. Extraordinary vigilance not neces-

Since contracts for the building of vessels or for furnishing labor and material in their construction are not maritime in character, and liens given upon them for labor and material so furnished are not maritime liens, state statutes creating such liens are valid, and liens so created may be enforced in state courts,[97] and this is true though the vessel engages in interstate commerce;[98] nor is the state court deprived of jurisdicton over proceedings to enforce such a lien by reason of the fact that the vessel may in the future become subject to superior maritime liens enforceable in a court of admiralty.[99]

§ 13. Salvage.[1]—A salvage service is a service which is voluntarily rendered to a vessel needing assistance, and is designed to relieve her from some distress or danger either present or to be reasonably apprehended.[2] If there is no actual or

Construction of state statutes: Code Pub. Gen. Laws, art. 63, § 46, construed and held that where proceedings to enforce lien are begun within two years from filing lien claim, lien does not expire at expiration of that time, but final judgment or decree may be rendered thereafter. Lucas v. Taylor [Md.] 66 A. 26. Under § 44, lien claim for installing electric light plant on vessel held in time when filed within six months from commencement of such installation, it not being necessary to file it within six months from commencement of construction of vessel. Amendment of bill and lien claim in suit to enforce lien, made by leave of court, held not ineffective because amended lien claim was not filed in clerk's office of superior court, defendant not having demurred to amended bill, etc., and only rights of parties to suit being affected thereby. Id. Where lien claim as originally filed described company for which vessel was being built as its owner and shipbuilding company as its "agents and contractors," held that court, in proceedings to enforce lien, had power to allow amendment describing latter company as its owner and builder and former as "now the owner," under Code Pub. Gen. Laws, art. 63, § 41. Id. Contention that Michigan statute did not apply because vessel was not to be used in navigating waters of state, and objection to enforcement of lien because vessel was in hands of bona fide purchaser, and because lien was not filed within prescribed time, held questions of state law upon which judgment of state court was final and conclusive on Federal supreme court. probable danger, and the employment is simply for the purpose of expediting the voyage, the service is a towage and not a salvage one.[3] If the vessel is in a position which requires towage service only, the mere fact that she has previously suffered injury does not make the service a salvage one, unless there is some circumstance of peril, immediate or reasonably to be apprehended, from which the vessel is relieved, or some hazard encountered, or unusual work done by the relieving vessel.[4] Salvage will not be allowed for services rendered under a contract requiring payment regardless of results,[5] nor for services rendered against the protest of the owner of master.[6]

The United States government, being liable to refund customs duties on imported merchandise destroyed while in the custody of the customs officers, has a direct pecuniary interest in goods on which such duties have been paid and which are saved from loss while on board a vessel and still in the custody of such officers, and the salvors are entitled to an award against it on the basis of the amount thus put at risk.[7]

The right to compensation as a joint or cosalvor exists only where the enterprise is one and the same, and the efforts of the second salvors are in connection with and continuation of those of the first.[8]

The amount to be awarded rests in the sound discretion of the court[9] and depends upon the circumstances of each particular case.[10] The danger to the salved

6. Evidence held to show that services of tug in pumping water into burning vessel were not needed, of which fact she had notice before she rendered them, but were detrimental, so that she was not entitled to salvage award. The Mannie Swan, 145 F. 747. Owner held to have ratified consent of captain to accept services of tug. The Banes [C. C. A.] 147 F. 192.

7. Salvors may found claim on assumption that secretary of treasury would have refunded duties as authorized by Rev. St. §§ 2984, 3689, though statute is in terms permissive only. United States v. Cornell Steamboat Co., 202 U. S. 184, 50 Law. Ed. 987, afg. 137 F. 455. Remedy in personam is not confined to legal owner of property saved, but extends to one having direct pecuniary interest therein. Id. Federal district court has jurisdiction of libel in personam to recover for such services under Tucker Act, Act March 3, 1887, c. 359, 24 St. 505, claim being one for unliquidated damages not sounding in tort. Id. Case is not one arising under revenue laws. Id.

10. Award should be sufficiently liberal to prove that courts are not unmindful of such services and to create and promote incentive to vessels and masters and crews to promptly and courageously assume risks to save life and property. The Peter White, 149 F. 594. Rule applies on Great Lakes. Id. Award reduced because libelant attached cargo and thereby caused loss to owners, though shipowner offered to give security for full amount of claim. The Banes [C. C. A.] 147 F. 192.

Awards in particular cases: One thousand six hundred dollars awarded tug for assisting vessel worth $42,000 with cargo, award being reduced because of subsequent attachment of cargo. The Banes [C. C. A.] 147 F. 192. Steamer worth with cargo $149,000 awarded $800 and expenses for services in attempting to release stranded steamer worth with cargo $127,400, service not being one of high merit. The I. W. Nicholas, 147 F. 793. Tug worth with tow about $140,000 awarded $1,000 for towing into port tug which sold for $5,600 at marshal's sale. The Chief, 147 F. 875. Four hundred and fifty dollars awarded tug for towing into port schooner which had grounded and was leaking. The Rebecca Shepherd, 148 F. 727. Award of $25 for towing steam vessel, which vessel,[11] the value of the two vessels,[12] the risk incurred,[13] the labor expended,[14] the effectiveness of the services rendered,[15] and the skill and promptitude displayed,[16] will be considered. A moity after the payment of expenses will ordinarily be allowed in case the salved vessel is a derelict.[17] The vessel rendering the service should also be reimbursed for expenses and losses actually incurred.[18] The fact that the master of a stranded vessel accepts the services of a tug under the mistaken belief that it belongs to a company usually employed for towage service by the owner is no reason for decreasing the amount of the award, where there is no false pretense on the part of the tug, and the truth is readily ascertainable.[19] The court will not encourage a tugboat to abandon a towage contract and expose her tow to great danger for the purpose of rendering salvage services to another vessel.[20] No rule can be laid down as to the duty of captains in such case, but they will be held to the exercise of good judgment under the circumstances.[21]

A portion of the award is generally divided among the officers and crew of the vessel rendering the service.[22]

The sum awarded is ordinarily required to be paid by the salved vessel and her cargo in proportion to their respective values.[23]

§ 14. Vessels or persons liable for loss and expense, and limitation of liability therefor.[24]—Liability as between the owner and a charterer for the acts of the master and crew is treated in a previous section.[25] Though vessels which are a part of the instrumentalities of the state government are not subject to seizure by procedings in rem in admiralty,[26] a municipal corporation is liable under the maritime law on a libel in personam for damages resulting from a collision due to the Tug worth $55,000 awarded $4,500 for pulling off shore stranded vessel, worth with cargo and freight pending, $800,000. The Devonian, 150 F. 831. negligence or fault of the master and officers of vessels employed by it in the performance of the duties for which it was created.[27]

Limitation of liability.[28]—The Federal statutes provide that the liability of the owner of any vessel for any embezzlement, loss, or destruction, by any person, of any property, goods, or merchandise, shipped or put aboard such vessel, or for any loss, damage, or injury by collision, or for any act, matter, or thing lost, damage, or forfeiture done, occasioned, or incurred, without the privity or knowledge of such owner, shall in no case exceed the amount or value of the interest of such owner in such vessel and her freight then pending,[29] and that whenever the whole value of the vessel and the freight for the voyage is not sufficient to compensate all persons suffering loss, it shall be divided pro rata among them, for which purpose appropriate proceeding may be had in any court.[30] The transfer of the owner of his interest in the vessel and freight to a trustee, to be appointed by any court of competent jurisdiction, is made a sufficient compliance with the statute.[31] The admiralty courts have exclusive jurisdiction of the question whether a vessel owner has a right

Port of Portland, a municipal corporation created to improve channel of rivers from Portland to sea with authority to employ men, etc., and to do all other necessary acts for that purpose, held liable under maritime law for damages resulting from collision due to negligence or fault of master and officers of tug and dredge, they being its servants for whose acts it is liable. United States v. Port of Portland, 147 F. 865.

29. Rev. St. § 4283, 4 Fed. St. Ann. 839. Purpose of act was to limit liability and not to destroy it, and where owners of two vessels, both in fault for collision, brought proceedings thereunder, and thereby enjoined representatives of passengers and crew, drowned by sinking of one of such vessels, from maintaining actions for damages for their deaths against other vessel in court and under statute of state to which they both belonged, they could maintain a claim therefor in proceedings in admiralty court. The Hamilton [C. C. A.] 146 F. 724, afg. 134 F. 95, 139 F. 906. Traveling derrick, which was essential to practicability of scow for purpose and object for which she was being used when accident occurred, held a part of her apparel, tackle, and furniture, and therefore liable to extent of appraised value for negligent act complained of. The Buffalo, 148 F. 331. Evidence in proceeding to limit liability for injury to passenger held insufficient to sustain burden resting on her to show that gangplank on which she fell was wet and slippery and in unfit condition as charged, and petitioner allowed to limit liability. In re Starin, 151 F. 274.

Privity or knowledge: Right of owner to limit his liability is dependent upon his want of complicity in acts causing disaster, and burden is upon him to show affirmatively that he has properly officered and equipped vessel for contemplated service. McGill v. Michigan S. S. Co. [C. C. A.] 144 F. 788, rvg. 133 F. 577. Owner held not entitled to limit liability for injuries to employes of an iron company by explosion of oil tank resulting from negligent acts of its superintending engineer, the evidence raising a strong presumption that he was incompetent to take charge of work involved in changing vessel to oil burner, and it not appearing that owner made any inquiry as to his competency. Id. Superintending engineer held not the alter ego of the shipowner. Id. Where owner has provided suitable person or persons as his agent to inspect or provide for the proper equipment of the vessel, he is not deprived of benefit of statute by proof of negligence of such agent, where he has had no notice or knowledge of such negligence or resultant defect. The Tommy [C. C. A.] 151 F. 570, rvg. 142 F. 1034. Owner of barges held not deprived of right to limit liability for death of employe because due to defective tongs used in unloading rails, which were borrowed from master of another barge than that on which they were used, it appearing that tongs were infrequently used and were not part of regular equipment of each barge, that it was customary to borrow them from other barges having them when needed, that owner had no notice of unfitness, and that his manager replaced unfit tongs when requested, and it not being shown that captains of barges on which tongs were used and from which they were borrowed, or either of them, were unfit to discharge their duties or that owner was negligent in employing them. 30. Rev. St. § 4284, 4 Fed. St. Ann. 849. Ohio Transp. Co. v. Davidson S. S. Co. [C. C. A.] 148 F. 185.

31. Rev St. § 4285, 4 Fed. St. Ann. 850. Statute gives owner absolute right to relieve himself from further liability by turning vessel and freight over to trustee, and, for purpose of determining nature and extent of right, is controlling over admiralty rule 59 authorizing appraisement and payment of amount into court, or giving of a stipulation to do so, in lieu of surrender. Ohio Transp. Co. v. Davidson S. S. Co. [C. C. A.] 148 F. 185. Hence owner, who acts promptly, may, before any order is made on an unaccepted appraisement, dismiss that part of his petition asking for an appraisement and, by amendment, ask for appointment of trustee to whom vessel may be transferred. Id. Fact that vessel has become less valuable by reason of higher insurance rates, greater cost of operation, and poor business, held not to deprive him of such right. Id.

to a limited liability in a particular case,[32] but the right may be interposed as a defense in an action in personam in a state court where there is only a single claim and hence no need of apportionment.[33] Matters of procedure under these statutes are treated elsewhere.[34]

§ 15. General average.[35]—The owner or master of a vessel is entitled to contribution from the owners of the cargo toward paying expenses incurred in saving the vessel and cargo from destruction by perils solely incident to navigation and unmixed with negligence on the part of the owner or the crew,[36] and has a lien on the cargo therefor which is generally enforced by requiring a deposit of money on an average bond from the respective owners before delivery of their goods.[37] The consignee cannot, however, be compelled to execute an average bond containing unreasonable terms.[38] The execution of a general average bond by the owner of a part of the cargo does not preclude him from setting up, in defense of liability thereon, that the wreck occurred because of the unseaworthiness or the negligence of the vessel owner, and is therefore not the subject of general average.[39] A final carrier is not bound to investigate, at his own risk the origin and validity of an apparently valid lien for general average asserted against property in transit by a previous carrier, provided it acts in good faith.[40]

§ 17. Marine insurance.[42]—The insurer is generally exempted from liability for loss due to unseaworthiness.[43] Where it appears that a vessel was seaworthy when the policy was issued, it will be presumed that it remained so until it sank, in the absence of evidence to the contrary.[44] So too, if the vessel is seaworthy at the commencement of the voyage and sinks or is lost from an unknown cause, it will be presumed that the loss was occasioned by an unavoidable peril of the sea.[45] Policies sometimes provide that there shall be no liability for loss or damage due to stranding unless caused by stress of weather.[46] Whether a liability policy issued to a tug covers expenses incurred by the tug in successfully defending itself against a claim of liability for the loss of barges in its charge depends on the terms of the policy.[47] A valued policy insuring against loss of freight ordinarily covers only freight actually at risk on the voyage.[48] A provision in the policy as to what shall constitute a constructive total loss is controlling.[49] An underwriter taking possession of the vessel for the purpose of repairing her must make such repairs as expeditioulsy as possible, and by delaying them beyond a reasonable time will be deemed to have forfeited his right to return her and to have constructively accepted an abandonment,[50] and this is equally true though the policy provides that the acts of the insurers is recovering, saving, and preserving the property insured in case of disaster shall not be considered a waiver or an acceptance of an abandonment.[51] An act done for the benefit of the property to whomsoever it may belong should not be construed against the party who thus seeks the common interest.[52] The sue and labor clause, while authorizing the insurer to have the vessel recovered and repaired without thereby defeating any defense it may have to any claim of the insured un-

47. Policy held not to cover such expenses. Munson v. Standard Marine Ins. Co., 145 F. 957. "Sue and labor" clause, if applicable to liability policy at all, held to apply only to defense and safeguard of vessels other than tug, and not to render company liable for such expenses. Id.

48. Valued policy insured against loss of freight "on board or not on board," "carried or not carried," and provided "full interest admitted, the policy being deemed sufficient proof of interest." Vessel was stranded and completion of voyage prevented. Part of freight was paid in advance and part of balance earned by forwarding a portion of cargo saved. Held that insured was not entitled to recover full amount of policy, but only such proportion thereof as actual loss of freight bore to freight which would have been earned had voyage been completed, actual loss being amount remaining after deducting amount prepaid and freight on cargo forwarded after stranding less cost of salving it. New York & Cuba Mail S. S. Co. v. Royal Exch. Assurance, 145 F. 713.

49. Where policy provided that there should be no abandonment as for a constructive total loss unless cost of necessary repairs required solely by the disaster, exclusive of cost of raising and rescuing vessel and taking her to dock, etc., should be equivalent to seventy-five per cent. of agreed value of vessel specified in policy, held that constructive total loss thereunder was such a loss as that repairs made necessary thereby, exclusive of cost of raising and rescuing vessel and taking her to dock, would be seventy-five per cent. of her value. Searles v. Western Assur. Co. [Miss.] 40 So. 866. Insured held not entitled to abandon vessel and recover as for constructive total loss where it appeared that to repair damage caused solely by disaster would cost less than twenty-five per cent. of agreed value. Id. Insured could not justify abandonment as for constructive total loss by showing that there were no facilities for raising vessel where disaster occurred and that it was therefore impossible for him to do so, and that nearest point where she could have been docked was four hundred miles away, and making this an element of damage, showing as to him she was worthless, particularly where, if this element was included, whole damage would not equal seventy-five per cent. of value. Id. Though insured was not compelled to make effort to save vessel before he could abandon and sue, held that he was bound to show existence of conditions warranting abandonment. Id. Fact that trial court stated that constructive total loss had to be proven, and that proof of total loss would not prove constructive total or partial loss, if error, held harmless in view of fact that evidence conclusively showed that, if plaintiff had any right to recover for total loss, it could only have been for constructive total loss, and that he declared for, and all his evidence was addressed to, constructive total loss. Id.

50. Hume v. Frenz [C. C. A.] 150 F. 502, rvg. 141 F. 481. Delay of insurers in making permanent repairs, permitting vessel to be sold for cost of such repairs, etc., held, under circumstances, a constructive acceptance of an abandonment, even though owner originally had no right to abandon. Id.

51. Hume v. Frenz [C. C. A.] 150 F. 502, rvg. 141 F. 481. Provision refers only to authorized acts and does not authorize taking posession by insurers for purpose of making partial repairs not amounting to indemnity. Id.

52. Act of insurers in sending agent to take charge of stranded vessel and to salve her if possible not to be construed against them on question of acceptance of abandonment, where it was agreed between them and owners that he was to go as agent for all concerned. Hume v. Frenz [C. C. A.] 150 F. 502, rvg. 141 F. 481.

der the policy, does not ordinarily require it to pursue such a course.[53] When a loss takes place for which an abandonment may be made the master remaining with the ship becomes the agent of those who retroactively become its owners in consequence of that event, and, when an abandonmnt is accepted by the underwriters, they are liable for his wages from the time of the loss to which it relates, though not made or accepted until long afterwards.[54] Where the policy provides that the insurance shall not inure to the benefit of any carrier and shall be void to the extent of any amount paid by or recoverable from any carrier, the insurer, on advancing to the insured the amount of his loss as a loan, and taking an assignment of his claim against the carrier, may recover thereon againt the latter, though the bill of lading provides that the carrier shall have the benefit of any insurance effected by the owner.[55] The admiralty law gives no maritime lien on a vessel for unpaid premiums on insurance thereon.[56] The acceptance of the balance of the premium after loss does not preclude the company from defending on the ground that no such loss has occurred as that sued for.[57]

Provisions as to notice and proof of loss must be substantially complied with.[58] Proof of loss is waived by a promise to pay, or admission of liability,[59] or by a denial of liability on other grounds.[60]

A provision requiring any action on the policy to be brought within a specified time after the loss occurs is valid if reasonable.[61] The complaint in an action at law on a policy should show the nature of the plaintiff's interest in the property,[62] and that the cause of the loss was a risk insured against.[63] An objection that a verdict for a sum which the insurer has absolutely promised to pay by way of compromise is excessive is untenable.[64] spection.[66] The liability of the vessel and its owners for injuries to passengers,[67] or for loss or damage to goods carried,[68] is treated in previous sections. The duty of officer to prevent the unauthorized landing of aliens is treated elsewhere.[69]

Liability in admiralty for personal injuries.[70]—A vessel is bound to use ordinary care to prevent injury to persons rightfully on board,[71] and one undertaking to furnish tackle for loading and discharging cargo must use reasonable care to furnish such as will meet the requirements placed upon it when used in the customary manner.[72] There is a presumption of negligence where an appliance breaks in ordinary use, and it appears that there has been no adequate inspection since it has been subjected to extraordinary strain.[73] A vessel owner agreeing to furnish a competent winchman is responsible for his defaults.[74] It is the duty of the vessel to warn inexperienced employes as to dangers of their employment which they do not know and appreciate.[75] One of two joint tort feasors may not defeat an action against himself by showing that the other was equally responsible for the injury complained of.[76] The vessel is not ordinarily liable for injuries due to the fault or negligence of fellow-servants,[77] provided such negligence is the sole cause of the injuries complained of.[78] The first officer is not chargeable with negligence because of improper navigation where he acts pursuant to the orders of the master.[79] Contributory negligence may preclude recovery[80] or be ground for a division of damages.[81] The faults of a vessel sunk in a collision cannot be imputed to her passen-

The Lyndhurst, 149 F. 900. Evidence held to require finding that chief officer was not notified of defective condition of runner. Id.

74. Evidence held to show that injury to stevedore was due solely to negligence of winchman furnished by barge in applying power to winch recklessly and violently, so that barge was liable for resulting damages. City of San Antonio [C. C. A.] 143 F. 955, afg. 135 F. 879.

75. Scow held liable to dock laborer, employed in reloading ore onto steamer, who was injured by traveling crane and derrick, for failure to notify him of the danger or to give such proper and suitable warning of forward movement of derrick and of its proximity to the place where he was at work as to reasonably safeguard and protect him, he being inexperienced. The Buffalo, 147 F. 304.

76. Where collision was due to negligence of both vessels, held no defense to action based on state statute against one of them for death of passengers and crew to show that other was also negligent. The Hamilton [C. C. A.] 146 F. 724, afg. 134 F. 95, 139 F. 906.

77. Vessel held not liable for injury to stevedore resulting from his falling through hatch when he stepped on hatch cover, he having been injured in course of progressive work, while using structure which his fellow laborers were engaged in perfecting, and to whose assistance he came. The Charles Tiberghien, 143 F. 676. Master, who was responsible for vessel's excessive speed which contributed to collision, held not fellow-servant of subordinate officers and crew acting under his orders. The Hamilton [C. C. A.] 146 F. 724, afg. 134 F. 95, 139 F. 906.

78. Defendant not relieved if he is himself at fault. The Hamilton [C. C. A.] 146 F. 724, afg. 134 F. 95, 139 F. 906.

79. Will not preclude recovery for his death where he was not personally negligent. The Hamilton [C. C. A.] 146 F. 724, afg. 134 F. 95, 139 F. 906.

80. Injury received by chief cook from falling through partially open hatch held due to his own negligence. The Cuzco, 148 F. 914. Tug held not liable for injuries to fireman who was scalded while attempting to tighten packing on valve by reason of turning screw wrong way, the machinery not being materially defective or out of repair. The Mars [C. C. A.] 149 F. 729, afg. 145 F. 446, 138 F. 941. Evidence held insufficient to show that death of port quarantine physician, resulting from his falling through open coal bunker hatch while ship was coaling, was due to negligence of ship's officers, they having warned him, etc. The Euxinia [C. C. A.] 150 F. 541, rvg. 136 F. 502, 144 F. 524.

81. Sailor injured by breaking of runner passing through eye of rope, whereby yard was hauled up, while riding down halyards gers and crew who were wholly free from blame.[82] The admiralty courts have no jurisdiction under the general maritime law of a proceedng in rem against a vessel for damages for death due to negligence, though they may enforce such liens if given by state statutes.[83] Awards of damages in particular cases will be found in the note.[84]

Common-law liability for injuries to persons employed on board vessels.[85]—As in other cases it is the duty of one employing another to work on board a vessel to provide for him a reasonably safe place in which to work[86] and to provide suitable machinery and appliances and to keep them in repair,[87] and he is liable for injuries proximately resulting from his failure to do so.[88] Where the evidence does not show that the thing which caused the injury was under the management or exclusive control of the defendant, negligence is not to be presumed from the accident itself.[89] The servant ordinarily assumes risks incident to his employment,[90] or which are known to him or so obvious that a person exercising ordinary care would have known of them.[91] Contributory negligence on the part or immediately after having done so, held guilty of negligence, that practice being forbidden as tending to put unnecessary strain on runner, and damages divided. The Lyndhurst, 149 F. 900.

82. Fact that vessel which was sunk in collision was also negligent held immaterial. The Hamilton [C. C. A.] 146 F. 724, afg. 134 F. 95, 139 F. 906.

83. Death of passenger. The Lotta, 150 F. 219. Where passengers and crew of vessel were drowned in collision for which both vessels were to blame, and owner commenced proceedings for limitation of liability, held that personal representatives could maintain claims for damages against other vessel in admiralty, the statutes of the state to which both vessels belonged giving a right of action for death due to negligence. The Hamilton [C. C. A.] 146 F. 724, afg. 134 F. 95, 139 F. 906. Where statute gave right of action to widow of deceased, held that, where claim filed stated that claimant was widow of deceased, fact that it also described her as executrix was immaterial and could be disregarded as merely descriptio personae. Id. Amendment so as to allege that petitioner claimed as widow held properly allowed. Id.

84. Award of damages for injury to stevedore through negligence of winchman furnished by barge held not excessive. City of San Antonio [C. C. A.] 143 F. 955, afg. 135 F. 879. Tug captain injured by falling through hatchway on schooner allowed $2,000, and expenses and wages lost. The Martha E. Wallace, 151 F. 353. Dock laborer awarded $6,000 for loss of arm while loading ore from barge onto steamer. The Buffalo, 147 F. 304. Awards made to representatives of passengers and crew drowned in collision approved. The Hamilton [C. C. A.] 146 F. 724, afg. 139 F. 906. Three thousand dollars damages awarded for death of young colored man in collision. Carter v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co., 151 F. 531.

85. See 6 C. L. 1493.

86. Vessel owner held negligent in putting fuel oil in tank during progress of work thereon, and at time when he knew that work remained to be done in drilling holes into tank, without warning men doing work of danger of an explosion. McGill v. Michigan S. S. Co. [C. C. A.] 144 F. 788, rvg. 133 F. 577. Such negligence held proximate cause of injury to workmen by explosion of tank, since officers should have foreseen that explosion was likely to occur through escape of gas through holes. Id.

87. International Mercantile Marine Co. v. Fleming [C. C. A.] 151 F. 203. Under N. Y. Laws 1902, p. 1748, c. 600, making a master responsible for negligence of his superintendent or foreman, and evidence, held that question whether negligence of foreman employed by owner of vessel to superintend discharge and reloading caused injury to longshoreman who fell through defective hatchway was for jury. Id. Contributory negligence of plaintiff held also for jury. Id.

88. Though negligence of workmen in drilling holes by candle light was contributing cause of explosion, held that negligence of owner was proximate cause since concurring act might have been foreseen and consequences provided against. McGill v. Michigan S. S. Co. [C. C. A.] 144 F. 788, rvg. 133 F. 577. Where negligence of master in failing to supply proper appliance is concurring cause, he is not relieved from liability because others may be liable also. International Mercantile Marine Co. v. Fleming [C. C. A.] 151 F. 203.

89. Owners of tow held responsible for strength of appliances thereon for adjusting hawser and for management of that end of the latter, owner of tug having no knowledge of the strength of such appliances and nothing to do with such management. Frederickson v. Central Wharf Towboat Co., 101 Me. 406, 64 A. 666.

90. One taking charge of a caisson which is to be towed. Frederickson v. Central Wharf Towboat Co., 101 Me. 406, 64 A. 666. Fact that one is zealous in the performance of his duty does not excuse him from taking precautions for his own safety. Id. Employe does not assume risk caused by master's negligence as one incident to his employment. Monongahela River Consol. C. & C. Co. v. Hardsaw [Ind. App.] 79 N. E. 1062.

91. Doctrine of assumed risk, depending as it does upon an implied contract between the parties, is not raised by showing that employe could have discovered defect of the person injured is ordinarily a defense.[92] The usual rules of pleading apply in actions for personal injuries.[93]

SLAVES.

A slave could not take or hold property either in his own name or through the medium of a trustee.[94]

The condition of peonage.[95]—A law authorizing a child under the control of the state to be bound out to service under proper instructions does not violate the constitutional provision against slavery and involuntary servitude.[96]

Slave marriages, their offspring, and inheritance.[97]—A customary marriage of slaves is voidable only and not void,[98] hence the issue thereof is legitimate if the marriage is not disaffirmed.[99] In Louisiana, however, customary marriages are not recognized,[1] and slave marriages, while binding in morals, produced no civil effects until ratified by continual cohabitation after emancipation or by acknowledgment as provided by statute.[2] Mere cohabitation of slaves as man and wife, with the consent of their master, did not constitute a valid marriage,[3] and the parties having separated while still in bondage, and never having cohabited after emancipation, their children were not legitimated.[4] Statutes were enacted in most if not all of the southern states legalizing the status of slaves who were living together as husband by an examination which he did not make, and, under circumstances, could not reasonably have made or been expected to make. Monongahela River Consol. C. & C. Co. v. Hardsaw [Ind. App.] 79 N. E. 1062. Allegation that plaintiff had no knowledge and was wholly ignorant of defect in barge, by reason of which he was injured, held to negative constructive as well as actual knowledge, and to repel idea of obvious risk. Id. Held error to impute to workman knowledge that space above crude oil in tank was filled with explosive combination of gas and air, and hence to hold that he was negligent in using lighted candle while drilling hole in tank. McGill v. Michigan S. S. Co. [C. C. A.] 144 F. 788, rvg. 133 F. 577.

92. Contributory negligence is not a matter of contract but of conduct, and is ordinarily a question of fact. Monongahela River Consol. C. & C. Co. v. Hardsaw [Ind. App.] 79 N. E. 1062. In action for damages for injuries to longshoreman received by falling through hatch, cover to which was too short, where it appeared that plaintiff assisted in putting on cover, held that exclusion of evidence to show that it was common practice of longshoremen to chock covers when otherwise too short was harmless, since, if plaintiff knew, or should have known, of defect, he was guilty of contributory negligence and assumed risk, irrespective of any omission to chock it, and if he did not know or was not chargeable with notice, omission was of no importance on issue of contributory negligence and assumption of risks, nor was evidence of any importance on issue whether accident was due to negligence of fellow-servants, since failure of master to supply proper appliance was contributing cause. International Mercantile Marine Co. v. Fleming [C. C. A.] 151 F. 203. In action for damages for injury to plaintiff resulting from his falling through hatchway negligently left open by defendant stevedores, question of plaintiff's contributory negligence held for the jury under the evidence. Doyle v. Eschen [Cal. App.] 89 P. 836. Plaintiff held negligent in standing unnecessarily within the bight of the line attached to tow of which he was in charge. Frederickson v. Central Wharf Towboat Co., 101 Me. 406, 64 A. 666. Painter injured by falling through uncovered hatch held guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. Jones v. Moran Bros. Co. [Wash.] 88 P. 626.

93. Variance between allegation that injury was caused by defect in "barge" and proof that defect was in a "boat" held immaterial. Monongahela River Consol. C. & C. Co. v. Hardsaw [Ind. App.] 79 N. E. 1062.

94. Evidence insufficient to show as a matter of law that beneficiary in deed of trust was a freed woman. Wright v. Nona Mills Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 620, 98 S. W. 917.

98, 99. Middleton v. Middleton, 221 Ill. 623, 77 N. E. 1123.

1. While the Louisiana Code of 1825 inferentially permitted the marriage of slaves with the consent of their masters, it did not dispense with the celebration of nuptials. Johnson's Heirs v. Raphael, 117 La. 967, 42 So. 470.

2. As provided by act of 1868. Johnson's Heirs v. Raphael, 117 La. 967, 42 So. 470.

and wife, though there had been no marriage.[5] A provision merely conferring on the issue of customary marriages of negroes the rights of legitimate children does not legalize the marriage of their parents.[6] A slave child not the issue of a customary marriage cannot inherit from his father under the Kentucky statute.[7]

SODOMY.[8]

Copulation per os is not within the Texas statute.[9] The crime may be charged in the words of statute.[10] The repulsive nature of the facts is not ground for unduly relaxing the rule against the statement of conclusions by witnesses.[11] Where it is claimed that the offense could not have been committed with an animal in the manner stated because of the height of the animal, profert of the animal in court is not proper,[12] but the proof should be made by a witness who had measured it.[13]

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

§ 1. Nature and Propriety of Remedy In General (1946).
§ 2. Subject-Matter of Enforceable Contract (1950).
§ 3. Requisites of Contract (1951).
A. Necessity of Contract (1951).
B. Mutuality of Contract (1953).
C. Definiteness of Contract (1954).
D. Legality and Fairness of Contract (1955).
E. Necessity of Written Contract (1956).
§ 4. Performance by Complainant (1957).
§ 5. Actions (1959). Jurisdiction (1959). Parties (1960). Defenses (1960). Pleading (1961). Evidence (1962). The Relief Granted (1962). Findings and Decree (1964). Appeal (1964). Costs (1964).

§ 1. Nature and propriety of remedy in general.[14]—Specific performance being a purely equitable remedy, the granting of relief is discretionary with the court,[15] and relief will be denied where the complainant has an adequate remedy at law,[16] or where specific enforcement would be harsh, inequitable, and unjust,[17]

5. Evidence held to show that a certain negress and not another, was living with deceased, a former slave, as his wife at the time of passage of the act of 1865 and its adoption in the constitution of 1869, providing that all persons who had not been married but who were then living together as husband and wife should be held in law as married. Haines v. Haines [Miss.] 43 So. 465.

6. Hence last provision of Act Ky. Feb. 14, 1866, had no extraterritorial effect. Middleton v. Middleton, 221 Ill. 623, 77 N. E. 1123.

11. Statement as to what accused was doing held a conclusion. Richardson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 220, 94 S. W. 1016.

12, 13. Richardson v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 220, 94 S. W. 1016.

14. See 6 C. L. 1498.

15. Though all the averments of the bill are admitted. Kott v. Giles, 27 App. D. C. 581. Where a contract for the sale of land is free from unfairness, overreaching, or overkeenness on plaintiff's part, the denial of relief is an abuse of discretion, the contract possessing the other essentials necessary to specific performance. Kirkpatrick v. Pease [Mo.] 101 S. W. 651.

16. Legal remedy adequate: The owner of a judgment has an adequate remedy at law against one agreeing to purchase same. Spotts v. Eisenhauer, 31 Pa. Super. Ct. 89. One appointed an exclusive agent under a contract has an adequate remedy at law upon its breach. Taussig v. Corbin [C. C. A.] 142 F. 660. Construction and maintenance of cross ways across railroad according to covenants not compelled where embarrassing to the railroad and of no utility to complainant, and complainant relegated to his action for damages. Johnson v. Ohio River R. Co. [W. Va.] 56 S. E. 200. Growing trees purchased with a view to severance do not constitute a landed estate of peculiar desire, and hence not appraisable in damages. Marthinson v. Kling, 150 F. 48. A failure to perform a contract to sell growing timber for a sum certain whereby the purchaser lost a resale for a higher sum certain is remediable in damages unless insolvency of the vendor is shown. Id. Legal remedy held adequate for breach of agreement to make deed effective after death in consideration of sup-or more hurtful to the rights of others in interest than its denial to the suitor,[18] or where any of the parties to the contract is incompetent,[19] or the contract was procured by fraud,[20] bad faith,[21] or misrepresentations[22] which were relied upon by the injured party,[23] but mere representations will not operate as a bar where the party acting on them had equal means of determining their truth.[24] The complainant may be required to do equity,[25] and he may be required to satisfy equities port during life. Nelson v. Lybeck [S. D.] 111 N. W. 546. Where a vendee in possession under a contract of sale is denied specific performance of the contract on the ground of the invalidity of the contract, the defendant is not entitled to a decree restoring possession to him, the remedy at law being adequate. Simpson v. Belcher [W. Va.] 56 S. E. 211. The parties to an agreement or award identifying a disputed boundary line have an adequate remedy at law. Orr v. Cox [W. Va.] 56 S. E. 522. Where a subcontractor agreed that upon a failure to complete the contract the contractor should have the right to use all tools and machinery used in connection therewith for the purpose of completing the work, upon a breach the latter had an adequate remedy at law and specific performance was refused. Lewman & Co. v. Ogden Bros., 143 Ala. 351, 42 So. 102. Upon a breach of an executory contract for the sale of a staple article of commerce, the parties have an adequate remedy at law. Block v. Shaw [Ark.] 95 S. W. 806. A vendee under a parol agreement to convey land whose only part performance was the payment of a portion of the purchase price has an adequate remedy at law. Titus v. Taylor [N. J. Eq.] 65 A. 1003. Agreement to permit plaintiff to build drain on defendant's land for benefit of plaintiff not specifically enforced, though plaintiff had incurred expense on the faith thereof. Robinson v. Luther [Iowa] 109 N. W. 775. It is only performance of a substantial part which will make remedy at law inadequate. About $100 paid on purchase price of $2,900 insufficient. Haffner v. Dobrinski [Okl.] 88 P. 1042.

Legal remedy inadequate: The remedy at law for the breach of a contract to transfer corporate stock of an unknown and unascertainable value is inadequate. Dennison v. Keasbey [Mo.] 98 S. W. 546. Under a contract to make a testamentary disposition of property in consideration of services in caring for the promisor during his life, the law furnishes no adequate remedy to compensate a breach. Berg v. Moreau [Mo.] 97 S. W. 901. Defendant contracted with a city to maintain a pump and engine of a certain capacity and horsepower as part of its waterworks system. Held upon a breach of the contract the city was without an adequate remedy at law. Hubbard City v. Bounds [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 304, 95 S. W. 69. Remedy at law for a refusal to convey land or any estate therein is inadequate. Wilhite v. Skelton [C. C. A.] 149 F. 67. Where after entering into a binding contract to purchase a waterworks a city refused to appoint appraisers provided for therein to determine its value based upon its productive worth, the waterworks company is without an adequate remedy at law. Castle Creek Water Co. v. Aspen [C. C. A.] 146 F. 8. The grantee under an oral contract to convey land has no adequate remedy at law. White v. Poole [N. H.] 65 A. 255. Legal remedy held inadequate for breach of contract by water company to sell its plant to municipality in view of statute forbidding municipality to erect an independent plant if option to sell was accepted by municipality. Revere Water Co. v. Winthrop [Mass.] 78 N. E. 497.

17. Shakespeare v. Caldwell Land & Lumber Co. [N. C.] 57 S. E. 213.

18. Where an allotment in kind of an aliquot portion of securities intended to be managed by a syndicate for promoting the interest of subscribing stockholders under a general plan for the reorganization of two railroads would disrupt the plan of reorganization and result in inequality between complainants and other shareholders, relief will be denied. Cella v. Brown [C. C. A.] 144 F. 742.

19. Detroit United R. Co. v. Smith, 144 Mich. 235, 13 Det. Leg. N. 228, 107 N. W. 922.

20. A fraudulent representation that only rights and privileges by law incident to a previous grant of coal under a certain tract had been conferred by that grant, whereas additional privileges had been conferred, is a bar. Cleavenger v. Sturm, 59 W. Va. 658, 53 S. E. 593. Where material fraudulent representations have been relied upon by the defendant, the contract will not be enforced though the resulting prejudice is slight. Id. A representation that only 27 or 28 acres of coal on a certain tract had been sold is a bar where plaintiff at the time knew that he had previously conveyed 40 acres of coal on such tract to a third person, though defendant could have determined the amount sold by an examination of the records. Id.

21. Refusal because cross complainant purchaser was agent and trustee for vendor and failed fully to disclose all facts. Jones v. Byrne, 149 F. 457.

22. Where at the time of entering into a settlement which was the basis of a contract to convey plaintiff falsely represented the situation to defendant, specific performance was refused irrespective of whether the misrepresentations were intentional or otherwise. Noecker v. Wallingford [Iowa] 111 N. W. 37. Misrepresentation by complainant's agent to defendants who were illiterate that the right to purchase under the contract expired in one year unless the land was paid for in full is a bar to the relief, the representation being relied upon and the land having been sold by defendants to a third person at the expiration of a year. Brock v. Tennis Coal Co., 29 Ky. L. R. 1283, 97 S. W. 46.

23. Crotty v. Effler [W. Va.] 54 S. E. 345.

24. Representation that 20 or 25 acres of a certain vein of coal in a certain tract remained unsold, though false, is not a bar where the boundaries of the amount sold were pointed out to defendant. Cleavenger v. Sturm, 59 W. Va. 658, 53 S. E. 593.

25. Where a wife did not join in a con-which have arisen in favor of defendant subsequent to the execution of the contract.[26] A husband may be required to perform a contract to convey land to his wife's children made in consideration of a transfer of land to him by the wife where to refuse relief would work a fraud upon her, although chancery may be without power to empower the wife to convey her real property by her separate deed.[27] The remedy is known to the civil law,[28] and where the damages upon breach of contract are inadequate, the court must award specific performance,[29] but where the parties have by contract liquidated their damages, the damages as liquidated will be deemed adequate.[30] Under the South Dakota statute it is presumed that a breach of a contract to convey cannot be adequately compensated by damages but the presumption is not conclusive.[31] A suit on a contract to devise [32] an action to enforce a contract to convey land,[33] or a bill for an injunction to restrain a defendant from violating his contract,[34] are in substance bills for specific performance. The remedy may be demanded by way of counterclaim in an action by the vendee to recover a portion of the purchase money paid,[35] or by cross bill or answer demanding affirmative relief,[36] or by mandatory injunction when applied to a covenant to maintain cross ways over or under a railroad,[37] and the fact that there is a similar statutory duty enforceable by mandamus does not oust the jurisdiction of equity.[38] Under the New Jersey statute the action lies to compel a railway company to perform its statutract to convey to complainant and subsequently joined with her husband in an agreement to convey to third persons who took with notice, a stipulated sum being agreed to be paid to the wife for her inchoate right of dower, complainant was required as a condition to relief to pay such sum to the wife, or, in case of her refusal to the persons to whom she conveyed, leaving her to her remedy at law as against them. Saldutti v. Flynn [N. J. Eq.] 65 A. 246. A vendee in possession may be required to pay interest on the purchase price though the contract did not provide for the payment of interest in order to offset the benefits derived from his possession. Pillsbury v. Streeter, Jr., Co. [N. D.] 107 N. W. 40. Where defendant agreed in consideration of employment to assign all inventions to plaintiff, the latter was required as a condition to the specific performance of the contract to reimburse defendant for all expenses in procuring the patents. Portland Iron Works v. Willett [Or.] 89 P. 421. Where conditions arise which were unforseen at the time of the execution of the contract, equity may apply the contract to the unexpected conditions and direct a modification as a condition to specific performance, Assignment of patents covering instruments not contemplated at the time contract was entered into. Wright v. Vocalion Organ Co. [C. C. A.] 148 F. 209.

26. Where agreement to lease did not contemplate the payment of a chattel mortgage by the lessee as a condition precedent to the execution of the lease, but before its execution the mortgage matured and was paid by the lessor, the delay in the execution of the lease being at the request of the lessee and the bill offering to pay the amount found due upon performance of the agreement, the lessee was required to pay the mortgage as a condition to relief. Mausert v. Christian Feigenspan, 68 N. J. Eq. 671, 63 A. 610, 64 A. 801.

27. Where the conveyance to the husband was executed, the unconstitutionality of a law empowering chancery to authorize the wife to convey by her separate deed is not a defense as he is not thereby deprived of his property without due process of law. Kittredge v. Kittredge [Vt.] 65 A. 89.

28. A contract to convey land will be specifically enforced. Girault v. Feucht, 117 La. 276, 41 So. 572; Lehman v. Rice [La.] 43 So. 639.

29. Girault v. Feucht, 117 La. 276, 41 So. 572.

30. Under the Louisiana Code, art. 2463, where a promise to sell is accompanied by the giving of earnest money, the contract cannot be specifically enforced, as either party may recede from it, the vendee by forfeiting the money paid, and the vendor by refunding double the amount received. Capo v. Bugdahl, 119 La. 992, 42 So. 478. The contrary rule is generally held elsewhere. See post, this section.

31. Rev. Civ. Code, § 2341. Nelson v. Lybeck [S. D.] 111 N. W. 546.

33. Though the parties term it an action for partition. Noecker v. Wallingford [Iowa] 111 N. W. 37. Complaint held to state facts constituting the action one for specific performance. White v. Sage [Cal.] 87 P. 193.

34. Lewman & Co. v. Ogden Bros., 143 Ala. 351, 42 So. 102. Equity will enforce by injunction covenants in a contract not to manufacture brick or sell fire clay to any one other than the complainant. Sand Co. v. Fire Brick & Clay Co., 124 Ill. App. 599.

35. Bloomgarden v. Hoffmann, 102 N. Y. S. 20.

36. Under the West Virginia Code an answer demanding affirmative relief has the same effect as a cross bill, and where defendant sets up a contract at variance with that alleged by plaintiff and establishes it, he is entitled to have it specifically performed. Garrett v. Goff [W. Va.] 56 S. E. 351.

37, 38. Johnson v. Ohio River R. Co. [W. Va.] 56 S. E. 200.

tory duty to maintain bridges over public highways,[39] and to compel the removal of abuttments in a public highway and the drainage of a cul-de-sac caused by the construction of a bridge over a highway, notwithstanding remedies by mandamus, ejectment, or indictment.[40] A bill cannot be maintained against one willing and able to perform,[41] nor to secure an advance performance of any part of the contract.[42] Where there is a dispute as to the balance due on a contract, the party seeking performance may file a bill for that purpose and submit the dispute to the court;[43] and where a stipulation for the appointment of appraisers to determine the price to be paid for land agreed to be conveyed is not a condition or an essence of the agreement, and the parties cannot be placed in statu quo by a refusal to grant relief, the court may determine the price itself and grant specific performance.[44] One owning land under a contract of sale who had agreed to convey to a third person cannot be compelled by such third person to bring an action for specific performance against his vendor,[45] but a constructive trust arising ex maleficio gives the cestui qui trust the right to enforce specific performance against the constructive trustee.[46] A provision for the payment of liquidated damages in the event of the breach of the contract by either party does not deprive the injured party of his remedy by specific performance.[47] Specific performance will not be decreed where the defendant is incapable of performing,[48] but where specific performance of the entire contract is impossible, performance of such portion of the contract as the defendant is capable of performing may be decreed.[49] Under the Codes the bill will not be dismissed, though it shows on its face that plaintiff has no cause of action because of defendant's inability to perform.[50] The right to relief may be waived[51] or barred by estoppel[52] or laches.[53] Spe-

39. Act held constitutional although it conferred upon the municipality a mandatory as distinguished from a preventive remedy. Borough of Metuchen v. Pennsylvania R. Co. [N. J. Eq.] 64 A. 484.

40. Borough of Metuchen v. Pennsylvania R. Co. [N. J. Eq.] 64 A. 484.

41. An agreement by an executrix to resign and to waive her right to commissions which she had frequently offered to perform. Spotts v. Eisenhauer, 31 Pa. Super. Ct. 89.

42. A lease with an option to purchase at its expiration cannot be specifically enforced as to the latter until the lease has expired. Collins v. Delaney Co. [N. J. Eq.] 64 A. 107.

43. Dispute as to whether land agreed to be conveyed should be paid for in cash or by the assumption of a trust deed thereon. Johnson v. Tribby, 27 App. D. C. 281.

44. Contract by a city to purchase a waterworks, the price to be paid to be determined by appraisers and to be based upon its productive worth, the city refused to apoint appraisers, held not a condition of the contract. Castle Creek Water Co. v. Aspen [C. C. A.] 146 F. 8.

45. Ferguson v. Kelley, 4 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 126.

46. Plaintiff orally agreed that the vendor should convey to defendants and that they should in turn give plaintiff a bond for a deed. Held to create a constructive trust enabling plaintiff to compel defendants to carry out their agreement. Peterson v. Hicks [Wash.] 86 P. 634. See, however, Capo v. Bugdahl, 117 La. 992, 42 So. 478.

47. Kettering v. Eastlack, 130 Iowa 498, 107 N. W. 177. Contract not to engage in a certain business in a certain place so long as the other party to the contract was engaged in the same business at that place. Harris v. Theus [Ala.] 43 So. 131.

48. It will be denied where the vendor does not own the land which he has agreed to convey, notwithstanding the fact that he could acquire title to it for a reasonable price. Public Service Corp. v. Hackensack Meadows Co. [N. J. Eq.] 64 A. 976. A prior valid contract to convey to other persons or the pendency of condemnation proceedings renders specific performance by the vendor impossible. Flattau v. Logan [N. J. Eq.] 65 A. 714. Undisputed evidence held to show that defendant did not own land in controversy. Sweeney Cattle Co. v. Erb [S. D.] 108 N. W. 32. Where the vendor is unable to make the deed called for by his contract, the vendee is not entitled to complete specific performance. Gregg v. Carey [Cal. App.] 88 P. 282. A contract to convey cannot be enforced as against one who has parted with his title. Halsell v. Renfrow, 202 U. S. 287, 50 Law. Ed. 1032. Evidence held insufficient to show that defendant was bona fide unable to convey an unincumbered title. Schreiber v. Elkin, 103 N. Y. S. 330.

49. Where specific performance of the entire contract cannot be had because of a deficiency in the amount of land agreed to be conveyed, the vendee may elect to have specific performance with abatement for the deficiency. Garrett v. Goff [W. Va.] 56 S. E. 351.

50. In New York the action will be transferred to the law calendar. Messenger v. Chambers, 103 N. Y. S. 1100.

51. Right to specific performance of an agreement to devise is not waived by failure cific performance may be had as against a third person to whom the property was conveyed with notice of complainant's equity,[54] and this rule obtains likewise in the civil law,[55] but the contract must create a charge upon the land.[56] Relief cannot be had against a subsequent bona fide purchaser,[57] and the question of notice is ordinarily a question of fact.[58]

§ 2. Subject-matter of enforceable contract.[59]—The contract must be of such a nature as to be capable of being specifically enforced,[60] hence contracts for continuing personal services will not be enforced;[61] and in the absence of an express negative covenant, equity will not aid the enforcement of such a contract by injunction,[62] and even where the covenant is express, injunctive aid will be granted only where the services are of such a peculiar or extraordinary nature that no adequate remedy at law can be had in the event of a breach.[63] An agreement to pay moneys received to object to probate of will which violates the agreement. Phalen v. U. S. Trust Co., 186 N. Y. 178, 78 N. E. 943.

52. Where a vendee under a contract to purchase refuses to make further payments and advises the vendor to find another purchaser and made no offer to complete his purchase until long after his notes for deferred payments fell due, he is estopped to demand specific performance, the vendor having sold the property to a third person in the meantime. Hyden v. Perkins, 30 Ky. L. R. 583, 99 S. W. 290.

53. A delay of ten years on the part of the complainant before tendering performance held to constitute laches. Stevens v. McChrystal [C. C. A.] 150 F. 85. An unexplained delay of three years to sue on contract to sell land held fatal laches. Sharp v. West, 150 F. 458. Long delay by vendee in possession, during which time value of property increased, held ground for denial. Free v. Little [Utah] 88 P. 407. Delay of several years in making any claim under the contract, during which time the land increased tenfold in value, and all burdens due to financial depression were carried by defendant, held to constitute laches though short of the statutory period of limitations. Stewart v. Yesler estate [Wash.] 89 P. 705. Where owing to lapse of time it would be impossible for plaintiff to perform or to place the parties in statu quo, relief will be denied Fielder v. Warner [Ark.] 95 S. W. 452. A delay of three years in enforcing an oral agreement to convey land held not to constitute laches where the delay was caused by an effort to exchange it for other land. White v. Poole [N. H.] 65 A. 255. Delay at the instance of the vendor is not laches, nor is a delay in bringing suit until seven or eight months after his death where no injury results. Lawson v. Mullinix [Md.] 64 A. 938. Defendant in possession is not guilty of laches by failing to demand a deed for several years where such a demand would have been unavailing. Detroit United R. Co. v. Smith, 144 Mich. 235, 13 Det. Leg. N. 228, 107 N. W. 922. Mere forbearance to begin an action for a period within the statute of limitations does not constitute laches where defendant has not been misled to his damage in the belief that his repudiation of the contract had been assented to. Harrison v. Rice [Neb.] 111 N. W. 594. Delay of nearly forty years in bringing an action for the specific performance of a contract to reconvey held not to constitute laches where all parties to the transaction believed a deed of reconveyance by the executor of the grantee to be valid. McAllen v. Raphael [Tex. Civ. App.] 96 S. W. 760. The fact that land enhanced in value during the delay does not bar relief where the delay is not chargeable to the party seeking it. East Jellico Coal Co. v. Carter, 30 Ky. L. R. 174, 97 S. W. 768.

54. Waddington v. Lane [Mo.] 100 S. W. 1139.

55. A recorded promise of sale will be enforced though prior to the execution of a deed thereunder the property is sold to a third person. Lehman v. Rice [La.] 43 So. 639.

56. Contract by an owner of land to sell a certain amount of hops to be grown thereon each year does not create an interest in the land which a subsequent purchaser with notice is bound to perform unless he assumes the contract. Bower v. Bowser [Or.] 88 P. 1104.

57. Halsell v. Renfrow, 202 U. S. 287, 50 Law. Ed. 1032. But he is not a bona fide purchaser unless he purchased for a valuable consideration and without notice of complainant's rights. Wilhite v. Skelton [C. C. A.] 149 F. 67.

58. Evidence held to show that third persons to whom land was conveyed took with notice of such facts as would put an ordinarily prudent person on inquiry regarding a prior sale. Waddington v. Lane [Mo.] 100 S. W. 1139.

59. See 6 C. L. 1501.

60. Contract to erect a building will not be specifically enforced. Braithwaite v. Henneberry, 124 Ill. App. 407.

61. Leonard v. Plum Bayou Levee Dist. Directors [Ark.] 94 S. W. 922. One appointed an exclusive agent for a certain defined territory cannot have the contract specifically enforced. Taussig v. Corbin [C. C. A.] 142 F. 660. Contract to act as saleswoman and demonstrator, injunction refused to restrain her from entering the service of another in violation of her contract. Gossard Co. v. Crosby [Iowa] 109 N. W. 483.

62. Gossard Co. v. Crosby [Iowa] 109 N. W. 483.

63. A breach of a contract to act as saleswoman and demonstrator of peculiar kind of corset will not be enjoined, it not appearing that exceptional talent was required to understand the corset nor why any woman of experiece and good address could not perform the services. Gossard Co. v. Crosby [Iowa] 109 N. W. 483.

on an annuity,[64] to convey an easement of right of way,[65] to convey a leasehold interest,[66] a trust,[67] or an option to buy specific property, will be specifically enforced.[68] Specific performance of a contract concerning chattels will not be decreed unless they have a peculiar value not subject to pecuniary compensation,[69] such as chattels having no ascertainable value,[70] but the mere fact that the property is adapted to certain use or work and is at a point where the work is to be done does not bring the contract within the exception.[71] A contract with a city to maintain pump and engine of a certain capacity and horsepower as part of a waterworks system will be specifically enforced.[72] A parol agreement to devise in consideration of support is enforceable,[73] and a contract in writing for the adoption of a child and to make him a legal heir may be specifically enforced,[74] though ineffective as a legal statutory adoption.[75] An agreement or award identifying a disputed boundary line is not a conveyance of land and will not be specifically enforced.[76]

§ 3. Requisites of contract. A. Necessity of contract.[77]—It is not essential that the contract be one which would support an action at law,[78] but the contract must be valid [79] and complete.[80] Hence an unaccepted offer,[81] or a contract with-

65. Burrell v. Middleton [N. J. Eq.] 65 A. 978.

66. A contract to convey a leashold interest in a mine will be specifically enforced. Wilhite v. Skelton [C. C. A.] 149 F. 67.

67. An obligation to pay an annuity imposed by the terms of a will, though the will provided that the payment thereof should not constitute a charge upon the real or personal property of the testator, was specifically enforced where those charged with its payment accepted benefits under the will. Spearman v. Foote, 126 Ill. App. 370.

68. Marthinson v. King, 150 F. 48.

69. Lewman & Co. v. Ogden Bros., 143 Ala. 351, 42 So. 102. Specific performance of an executory contract for the sale of cotton refused on the ground that it could at all times be bought in the market. Block v. Shaw [Ark.] 95 S. W. 806. For breach of contract relating to personalty, the remedy at law is ordinarily deemed adequate, but specific performance may in discretion be awarded. Denial sustained as to contract for sale of corporate stock. Butler v. Wright, 186 N. Y. 259, 78 N. E. 1002.

70. Contract for the transfer of corporate stock enforced when there was no way in which the value of the stock could be determined, none of it being on the market. Dennison v. Keasbey [Mo.] 98 S. W. 546.

71. A subcontractor agreed that upon a failure to complete the work the contractor should have the right to possession and use of all machinery and tools used in connection therewith for the purpose of completing the contract. Lewman & Co. v. Ogden Bros., 143 Ala. 351, 42 So. 102.

72. Hubbard City v. Bounds [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 304, 95 S. W. 69.

73. An agreement to devise was entered into between plaintiff's parents and the deceased owner in consideration that the former should support the latter. The agreement was performed by the former until their death and thereafter by plaintiff with the consent of decedent. Held plaintiff was entitled to specific performance against the heirs of decedent. Soper v. Galloway, 129 Iowa, 145, 105 N. W. 399.

74. A contract binding the foster parents to make the adopted child an equal heir with their own children may be specifically enforced against the estate of the deceased foster parent dying intestate. Pemberton v. Pemberton's Heirs [Neb.] 107 N. W. 996. Agreement to adopt which was fully executed by plaintiff and her parents. Anderson v. Anderson [Kan.] 88 P. 743.

75. Pemberton v. Pemberton's Heirs [Neb.] 107 N. W. 996. An agreement by a foster parent in consideration of the surrender of a child to him that the child shall have all rights of inheritance may be specifically enforced, though insufficient to constitute an instrument of adoption because not acknowledged and recorded. Chehak v. Battles [Iowa] 110 N. W. 330.

76. Orr v. Cox [W. Va.] 56 S. E. 522.

77. See 6 C. L. 1502.

78. Agreement by father to devise, made in consideration of son's marriage. Phalen v. U. S. Trust Co., 186 N. Y. 178, 78 N. E. 943.

79. Public contract requiring ratification by voters of action of selectmen invalid where there was a popular vote but no precedent action by the selectmen. Revere Water Co. v. Winthrop [Mass.] 78 N. E. 497. Contract entered into without legislative sanction between a town and a city whereby the latter as part of its sewer system through the town agreed to construct and operate a tidal chamber in a certain manner. The tidal chamber was constructed in another municipality and was so operated as to become a nuisance. Relief denied. Belleville Tp. v. Orange [N. J. Eq.] 62 A. 331. An agreement to convey made by a married man without his wife's assent cannot be specifically enforced, at least by one who knew of the marriage at the time of making the agreement. Free v. Little [Utah] 88 P. 407. Contract by an inventor in consideration of employment for a term of years an an increased salary, to assign inventions made during the term of employment is not contrary to public policy. Wright v. Vocalion Organ Co. [C. C. A.]

out consideration,[82] unless under seal,[83] will not be specifically enforced. A gift will not be specifically enforced unless the donee in reliance upon it places himself in a position where it would be inequitable to refuse relief.[84] The fact that the contract provides for the execution of a more formal contract does not render it unenforceable.[85] One not a party or privy to a contract cannot be compelled to carry it out,[86] nor can he maintain an action for its specific performance,[87] but a 148 F. 209. An unacknowledged contract to convey land by a married woman, being void, cannot be specifically enforced. Simpson v. Belcher [W. Va.] 56 S. E. 211. A contract closed between attorneys in fact whereby the principals who were not privies to the estate should co-operate in prosecuting their claims against an estate empowering the agents to that end and to receive and divide the shares recovered is hostile to the estate and not enforceable as a settlement between kin or heirs. Hall v. Hartford, 50 Misc. 133. 100 N. Y. S. 392.

80. An accepted option becomes a binding executory contract to sell. Watkins v. Robertson, 105 Va. 269, 54 S. E. 33. Undisputed evidence held to show no contract to convey land in controversy. Sweeney Cattle Co. v. Erb. [S. D.] 108 N. W. 32. An agreement merely to furnish "a warranty deed and clear title" is not a contract to sell and convey land and cannot be enforced as such. Kingsbury v. Cornelison, 122 Ill. App. 495. An abortive deed, when sufficient in other respects, may constitute a contract for the sale of land which will be specifically enforced. Kirkpatrick v. Pease [Mo.] 101 S. W. 651.

Evidence held insufficient to establish a contract to make a testamentary bequest. Ostrom v. De Yoe [Cal. App.] 87 P. 811; Killian v. Heinzerling, 47 Misc. 511, 95 N. Y. S. 969. An oral agreement to convey in consideration of support. Boam v. Greenman [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 985, 110 N. W. 508; Fowler v. De Lance [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 908, 110 N. W. 41. Consideration of clearing land. Fielder v. Warner [Ark.] 95 S. W. 452. An oral contract to execute a quitclaim deed and to release complainant from a claim for damages caused by destroying a spring by the construction of its railroad. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Chipps, 226 Ill. 584, 80 N. E. 1069. Evidence held to show merely a license and not a contract to convey. Detroit, P. & N. R. Co. v. Hartz [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 1086, 110 N. W. 1089.

Evidence held sufficient to establish a parol gift of land. Bevington v. Bevington [Iowa] 110 N. W. 840.

81. It must be one for the sale, not a mere continuing offer to sell. Exchange of telegrams concluding "Have accepted option," held mere offer. Pomeroy v. Newell, 102 N. Y. S. 1098. A written agreement to sell land by a warranty deed for $1,600, the agreement to be in force from its date to April 1st, is a mere offer of sale and unenforceable. Sprague v. Schotte [Or.] 87 P. 1046. An option does not become an executory contract for the sale of land until accepted in accordance with its provisions. Pollock v. Brookover [W. Va.] 53 S. E. 795. Evidence held not to show such assent to contract to support as would entitle to specific performance of agreement to convey in consideration of such support. Nelson v. Lybeck [S. D.] 111 N. W. 546. Acceptance coupled with conditions not good. Sharp v. West, 150 F. 458. A provision in a contract between a water company and a city that the city should have the option of purchasing the plant of the former by giving notice of its intention so to do one year prior to the expiration of the contract is a continuing irrevocable offer which is accepted and becomes a binding contract capable of being specifically enforced when the city gives such notice. Castle Creek Water Co. v. Aspen [C. C. A.] 146 F. 8. Where complainants refused to accept a general plan of reorganization of a railroad except upon conditions which defendants refused to concede, such reorganization did not create a trust in complainants' favor which they could enforce. Cella v. Brown [C. C. A.] 144 F. 742.

82. Where a physician agreed to educate a child in consideration of a release of a claim for damages by the mother for injuries caused at child birth, the evidence was held insufficient to show malpractice, and contract was held to be without consideration. Kirk v. Middlebrook [Mo.] 100 S. W. 450. Consideration sufficient, in contract to employ and pay wages and teach methods, and in return to receive inventions of employé during term of service. Mississippi Glass Co. v. Franzen [C. C. A.] 143 F. 501. A lease giving the lessee the option to purchase is based upon a sufficient consideration. Murphy v. Hussey, 117 La. 390, 41 So. 692. An agreement in writing to sell land by a warranty deed, for $1,600, the agreement to be in force during a certain time, held nonenforceable for lack of consideration. Sprague v. Schotte [Or.] 87 P. 1046. Agreement of father to devise, formally made, in contemplation of son's marriage, will be enforced. Phalen v. U. S. Trust Co., 186 N. Y. 178, 78 N. E. 943.

83. A consideration is necessary where the contract is under seal. Watkins v. Robertson, 105 Va. 269, 54 S. E. 33.

84. Improvements made by a donee held not to be of a sufficiently valuable character as to justify the specific execution of the gift. Young v. Crawford [Ark.] 100 S. W. 87.

85. Pelletreau v. Brennan, 113 App. Div. 806, 99 N. Y. S. 955.

86. An unauthorized contract to convey the interest of another cannot be enforced against the holder of such interest or his vendee. Contract by a life tenant to convey his estate and that of the remaindermen is not binding on the latter. Brustmann v. Motrie, 103 N. Y. S. 541. A contract entered into with an agent in behalf of his principal is not a contract with the agent and consequently specific performance cannot be had against him. Taussig v. Corbin [C. C. A.] 142 F. 660. Contract by a son that if plaintiff would take care of his invalid mother she should be entitled to a child's share of whatever was accumulated contract not under seal may be specifically enforced against an undisclosed principal.[88] A contract by an unauthorized agent cannot be enforced [89] unless ratified,[90] or the circumstances are such as to estop the principal from denying his authority.[91]

(§ 3) B. Mutuality of contract.[92]—A contract to be specifically enforceable must be mutually binding upon the parties to it,[93] and of such a character as to give either of the parties the right to its specific enforcement.[94] There must be mutuality of remedy,[95] but a provision giving the vendee the right to reject a defective title does not render it unenforceable.[96] It must bind each of the parties equally as to its duration.[97] A contract for the sale of land is not rendered unilateral merely because unsigned by the vendee,[98] and though unilateral in its inception, a contract may become mutually binding if executed in whole [99] or in part [1, 2] or if by the three during the life of the mother and son is not enforceable against the mother. Bunting v. Dobson, 125 Ga. 447, 54 S. E. 102. Defendant's son agreed to sell certain corporate stock to complainant which was owned by his mother and which she agreed to sell to him on terms at variance with his contract with complainant. Held the contract between complainant and defendant's son could not be enforced against defendant. Booth v. Dingley [Mich.] 14 Det. Leg. N. 80, 111 N. W. 851.

87. The vendee under an agreement to convey cannot maintain an action against one who agreed to convey to his vendor to compel the performance of his contract. Ferguson v. Kelley, 4 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 126.

88. Pelletreau v. Brennan, 113 App. Div. 806, 99 N. Y. S. 955.

89. Thompson v. Marshall [Neb.] 110 N. W. 1104. Evidence held sufficient to show authority of broker to enter into a contract for the sale of the land in controversy. Pierce v. Wheeler [Wash.] 87 P. 361. A contract to divide property established as firm property against an estate held not authorized by a power of attorney as alleged. Hall v. Hartford, 50 Misc. 133, 100 N. Y. S. 392.

90. Acceptance of benefits with knowledge of the fraud. Bennett v. Glaspell [N. D.] 107 N. W. 45. Contract entered into with officers of a corporation having ostensible authority held enforceable against the latter where part of consideration paid was retained until the election of a new board of directors. Davidson v. Cannabis Mfg. Co., 113 App. Div. 664, 99 N. Y. S. 1018. Evidence held to show a ratification of contract by a broker by acceptance of portion of the purchase price. Roberts v. Hilton Land Co. [Wash.] 88 P. 946.

91. Statement that a certain person was authorized to sell held to estop the principal from denying such person's authority. Gregg v. Carey [Cal. App.] 88 P. 282.

92. See 6 C. L. 1502.

93. An agreement which does not bind the vendee to purchase the property cannot be enforced. Kingsbury v. Cornelison, 122 Ill. App. 495. A contract for the sale of several tracts of land, including the homestead, not signed by the vendor's wife, is binding upon him except as to the homestead and hence is not void for lack of mutuality. Johnson v. Higgins [Neb.] 108 N. W. 168.

94. A contract to convey made by one without title cannot be enforced by him against the vendee and hence lacks mutuality. Public Service Corp. v. Hackensack Meadows Co. [N. J. Eq.] 64 A. 976.

95. As the principal under a contract appointing another an exclusive agent for a certain territory could not have the contract specifically enforced against the agent, the latter cannot invoke the remedy in case of a breach by the principal. Taussig v. Corbin [C. C. A.] 142 F. 660.

96. A provision in a contract giving the vendee the right to reject bad title is not a potestative condition which will render the contract unenforceable for want of mutuality. Girault v. Feucht, 117 La. 276, 41 So. 572.

97. Where defendant agreed to furnish sewerage service at a certain annual rental but plaintiff was at liberty to terminate the contract at any time, there was no mutuality of obligation necessary to sustain the action. Soloman v. Wilmington Sewerage Co., 142 N. C. 439, 55 S. E. 300. A contract which binds one of the parties indefinitely and gives the other the option of terminating it at will lacks mutuality in the sense that it will not be specifically enforced. Taussig v. Corbin [C. C. A.] 142 F. 660.

98. An option to buy real estate given for a valuable consideration does not lack mutuality of obligation merely because it is signed by only the vendor. Woodward v. Davidson, 150 F. 840. Under the New York statutes, a contract for the sale of land is not unilateral because not signed by the vendee, it being shown that he promised to take the property and to pay the consideration named. Boehly v. Mansing, 102 N. Y. S. 171. In Kentucky a contract for the sale of land signed by the vendor alone is binding and enforceable against both of the parties to it. East Jellico Coal Co. v. Carter, 30 Ky. L. R. 174, 97 S. W. 768.

99. Where the vendor has performed all conditions to be performed by him under the contract, the fact that the vendee could not have enforced the contract against him does not constitute a defense. Johnson v. Higgins [Neb.] 108 N. W. 168. Stipulation to secure resignation of directors of a corporation, the entire assets of which defendant agreed to purchase, where the resignations were secured before the action was brought. Kentucky Distilleries & Warehouse Co. v. Blanton [C. C. A.] 149 F. 31. The doctrine of nonenforceability in equity for lack of mutuality has no application to an executed contract. Mississippi Glass Co. v. Franzen [C. C. A.] 143 F. 501.

1, 2. A contract is not unenforceable for lack of mutuality because the purchaser is the defect rendering it unilateral is removed before rescission,[3] or by the filing of a bill for its specific performance.[4] Thus the holder of an option may specifically enforce it, though the vendor could not have done so, as by commencing the action he renders himself subject to the court's decree.[5] An option to purchase land may be specifically enforced.[6]

(§ 3) C. Definiteness of contract.[7]—The contract must be definite and certain in its terms,[8] in its description of the subject-matter,[9] as to the purchase price,[10] not obligated to pay the purchase price if he has in fact paid part of it and has repeatedly expressed his readiness to pay the balance and tenders it in court. Stevens v. Kittredge [Wash.] 87 P. 484. A contract to convey is not unilateral merely because, while the vendor agrees to sell, the vendee does not expressly agree to purchase where part of the purchase price is paid. Lawson v. Mullinix [Md.] 64 A. 938.

3. A contract to convey a homestead signed by the husband alone may be specifically enforced where the wife joins therein prior to a repudiation by the vendee on the ground that the wife had not joined. Kettering v. Eastlack, 130 Iowa, 498, 107 N. W. 177.

4. Where the vendee did not sign a contract to convey land and it was therefore not binding upon him, the subsequent institution of the action by him renders the obligation mutual. Western Timber Co. v. Kalama River Lumber Co., 42 Wash. 620, 85 P. 338.

5. Conner v. Clapp, 42 Wash. 642, 85 P. 342.

6. An option to purchase land upon the performance of certain conditions is not unenforceable for want of mutuality but is enforceable by either party within the time specified. Boston & W. St. R. Co. v. Rose [Mass.] 80 N. E. 498. An option to purchase at the expiration of a lease is enforceable though not binding on the optionee. Meyer v. Jenkins [Ark.] 96 S. W. 991. An accepted option creates a mutual contract which will be specifically enforced. Watkins v. Robertson, 105 Va. 269, 54 S. E. 33. A lease giving the lessee an option to purchase is not unenforceable as wanting mutuality. Murphy v. Hussey, 117 La. 390, 41 So. 692.

7. See 6 C. L. 1503.

8. Abortive deed sought to be enforced as a contract for the sale of land held sufficiently definite in its terms. Kirkpatrick v. Pease [Mo.] 101 S. W. 651. Where land was conveyed under an agreement to reconvey for the purpose of avoiding costs and charges by enabling the grantee to institute actions to settle the title, the agreement to reconvey if otherwise sufficient was not uncertain because of the indefiniteness of the costs and charges. McAlien v. Raphael [Tex. Civ. App.] 96 S. W. 760. Contract to convey undivided portion of a leasehold estate in land held definite. Wilhite v. Skelton [C. C. A.] 149 F. 67. Agreement to adopt held sufficiently definite and certain in its terms. Anderson v. Anderson [Kan.] 88 P. 743. Contract held definite on the question of deferred payments and security therefor. Libby v. Parry, 98 Minn. 366, 108 N. W. 299. A mere executory parol agreement by a father to purchase an unidentified house for his daughter is too indefinite. Baldridge v. George [Pa.] 65 A. 662. A contract mutually to aid each other in prosecuting claims against an estate and to divide the amounts recovered held too indefinite to enforce. Hall v. Hartford, 50 Misc. 133, 100 N. Y. S. 392. Parol agreement to convey held indefinite in that it was not apparent whether a gift in the present or in the future was intended, or whether the estate intended to be conveyed was in fee, for life, for a term of years, or at sufferance. Logue v. Langan [C. C. A.] 151 F. 455. Contract in regard to constructing improveing, and perfecting candy machines and to give the benefit of improvements and inventions was held to be too indefinite to enforce specifically as an agreement to assign patents for inventions. Hildreth v. Duff, 143 F. 139.

9. A contract to convey 47 different descriptions out of a total 57 marked on a plat is too indefinite where no specific tract could be identified as one of the 47 referred to in the agreement, no specific tracts having been agreed upon. Auer v. Mathews [Wis.] 108 N. W. 45. A description "Clinton & Joralemon street" is sufficient as the land intended can be identified by extrinsic evidence. Pelletrau v. Brennan, 113 App. Div. 806, 99 N. Y. S. 955. Where a contract described land as lot 16 on an official map in the vendor's office and the vendee took possession, there was sufficient data for a competent surveyor to locate the land and the description was sufficient. Guillaume v. K. S. D. Fruit Land Co. [Or.] 86 P. 883. A description which did not mention the state, county, district, or town in which the land was located held sufficient, the contract providing other means of identification. Crotty v. Effler [W. Va.] 54 S. E. 345. Description sufficient to admit parol proof to identify the land. Howison v. Bartlett [Ala.] 40 So. 757. Description of land as "the property and all improvements thereon situated in the square bounded by St. Louis, Toulouse, Rampart and Basin streets and known as 500 to 506 Basin street," held sufficient. Girault v. Feucht, 117 La. 276, 41 So. 572. Description sufficient which stated the names of owners of surrounding lands and described the land as consisting of various lots referred to by their numbers. Whiteside v. Winans, 29 Pa. Super. Ct. 244. Contract to convey a lot to be selected by defendant out of plaintiff's land held too indefinite as not giving dimensions of the lot or the quantity of land to be selected. Freeburgh v. Lamoureux [Wyo.] 85 P. 1054.

10. Contract fixing the price at a specified sum with the added value of improvements is sufficiently clear. Meyer v. Jenkins [Ark.] 96 S. W. 991. Contract held sufficiently definite as to the amount of the purchase price. Peirce v. Wheeler [Wash.] 87 P. 361. Contract reciting the receipt of its duration,[11] the quantity of the interest agreed to be conveyed,[12] and the manner of its performance,[13] but a contract is not indefinite because of a failure to fix a time for performance.[14] The test to determine whether a parol contract is sufficiently definite is the same as that applied to written contracts.[15]

(§ 3) D. Legality and fairness of contract.[18]—Equity will withhold relief where the contract is of such a character,[17] or the circumstances under which it was entered into are such as would render it unconscionable to enforce it,[18] or where the contract is illegal.[19] While mere inadequacy of consideration is not alone sufficient to render a contract unconscionable,[20] unless so gross as to amount to proof

$100 paid to bind the bargain which was to be considered and accepted as part of the purchase price which was $5,500 less commission, not too indefinite to be enforced, since the commission could be ascertained. Whittier v. Gormley [Cal. App.] 86 P. 726.

11. A contract to furnish sewerage service indefinite as to the length of time it should continue will not be specifically enforced. Soloman v. Wilmington Sewerage Co., 142 N. C. 439, 55 S. E. 300.

12. Agreement by a father to convey a quarter interest in a newspaper business to his son held too indefinite as not showing whether a quarter interest in the business was intended, the father not possessing a quarter interest, or a quarter of the father's interest. Sarasohn v. Kamaiky, 103 N. Y. S. 320.

13. Contract by a son that if plaintiff would care for his invalid mother she should be entitled to a child's share in the property accumulated by the three held too indefinite as not providing for the manner in which it should be performed by the son. Bunting v. Dobson, 125 Ga. 447, 54 S. E. 102.

14. Equity will require it to be consummated within a reasonable time. Sawson v. Mullinix [Md.] 64 A. 938. Under Civ. Code 1657, where no time for payment is fixed in a contract for the sale of land, the money is payable at the time of the delivery of the deed. Hence a contract failing to fix a time for payment is not indefinite. Whittier v. Gormley [Cal. App.] 86 P. 726.

15. It is sufficiently definite if it is reasonably certain from the contract itself and the acts of the parties thereunder what land was intended. White v. Poole [N. H.] 65 A. 255.

16. See 6 C. L. 1504.

17. Agreement by a father to convey practically his entire estate to one of his sons after his death, to the exclusion of the other children, without any apparent good reason, held unfair. Sarasohn v. Kamaiky, 103 N. Y. S. 320. Agreement by which purchaser on nominal payment takes possession and is to make no further payments for ten years except from the net profits of the land with no obligation on him to make it yield profits. Haffner v. Dobrinski [Okl.] 88 P. 1042. A contract to sell land with all timber remaining thereon at the end of four years for 50 cents an acre in return for a right to haul logs over complainant's land which was the only outlet is not unconscionable in this sense where the cleared land at that time had little or no value, though since then mineral discoveries have greatly enhanced its value. Cox v. Burgess, 29 Ky. L. R. 972, 96 S. W. 577. A contract mutually to prosecute their claims and divide between one who claimed a partnership in a business constituting part of an estate and one who had agreed with decedent to act as his daughter, in consideration of an agreement to devise the entire estate, held unconscionable on the part of the latter. Hall v. Hartford, 50 Misc. 133, 100 N. Y. S. 392.

18. Where complainants' agent withheld from a widow who agreed to purchase the estate of her deceased husband at a certain price, the fact that he held a large claim against the estate whereby she was induced to purchase at an excessive price, specific performance was refused on the ground that the contract was unconscionable. Van Norsdall v. Smith, 141 Mich. 355, 12 Det. Leg. N. 478, 104 N. W. 660. Where the unfairness of a contract results from old age, mental weakness, poverty, ignorance, inexperience, or sex, relief will be denied though the opposite party was free from any intent to take advantage, if the actual result is inequality. Starcher Bros. v. Duty [W. Va.] 56 S. E. 524. The natural inaccessibility of land is not chargeable as oppression to one who furnishes a right of access in return for a contract to purchase knowingly made. Cox v. Burgess, 29 Ky. L. R. 972, 96 S. W. 577.

19. Contract assigning plaintiff's interest in a lode claim to defendant who owned a placer claim covering the lode for the purpose of procuring a patent to the entire tract and reconveying plaintiff's interest in the lode to him held enforceable though the fee required by the government on a patent for a lode claim was $5 per acre and on a placer claim only $2.50, the government not objecting. Carter v. Gray [Ark.] 96 S. W. 377.

20. The mere fact that the property agreed to be sold for $3,825 was worth from $4,500 or $5,000, does not render the contract unconscionable. Lawson v. Mullinix [Md.] 64 A. 938. Mere inadequacy of consideration not accompanied by other elements of bad faith is insufficient unless so excessive as to furnish satisfactory evidence of fraud. Van Norsdall v. Smith, 141 Mich. 355, 12 Det. Leg. N. 478, 104 N. W. 660. The mere fact that one agreeing, in consideration of a promise to make a testamentary bequest, to live with and take care of another, was in poor and humble circumstances, and would be materially benefited by being provided with a home aside from the bequest, does not render the contract unconscionable. Berg v. Moreau [Mo.] 97 S. W. 901. The fact that land which defendant agreed to sell for $500 was worth $700 is not alone sufficient. Crotty v. Effler [W.

of fraud,[21] in connection with other circumstances it may render the contract unenforceable,[22] and where the consideration agreed upon was adequate at the time the contract was entered into, the fact that the land subsequently increases in value will not bar relief.[23]

(§ 3) E. Necessity of written contract.[24]—The contract must be in writing and executed as required by the statute of frauds,[25] but where an agreement has been in part performed,[26] so that to refuse relief would be to perpetrate a fraud upon the grantee,[27] the fact that the agreement was not in writing will not bar relief. The part performance necessary to take an oral agreement sought to be enforced out of the statute must be pursuant and referable to and in performance

Va.] 54 S. E. 345. Contract for the sale of land held not to be unconscionable because sold at a lower price than its estimated value, the real value being speculative and both parties having equal opportunities to determine what it was. Evans v. Evans, 196 Mo. 1, 93 S. W. 969. A contract to sell at $44 per acre land for which the vendor was subsequently offered $50 is not unconscionable. Kilpatrick v. Wiley, 197 Mo. 123, 95 S. W. 213.

21. An agreement to pay $900 for an absolutely worthless judgment will not be enforced. Spotts v. Eisenhauer, 31 Pa. Super. Ct. 89.

22. Vendor declared incompetent twenty days after making of contract and land worth $225 an acre more than agreed price. Knott v. Giles, 27 App. D. C. 581.

23. East Jellico Coal Co. v. Carter, 30 Ky. L. R. 174, 97 S. W. 768.

24. See 6 C. L. 1505.

25. An agreement to convey not signed by the vendee cannot be specifically enforced as against him. Kingsbury v. Cornelison, 122 Ill. App. 495. A mere draft of a lease unsigned by either of the parties to it does not satisfy the requirements of the statute so as to authorize specific performance. Clement v. Young Amusement Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 65 A. 185. An agreement to convey definite as to description, time, and consideration, and acknowledging the receipt of a partial payment thereon is a sufficient compliance with the statute of frauds, the only uncertainty being the medium of payment, whether in cash or by the assumption of a trust deed. Johnson v. Tribby, 27 App. D. C. 281.

26. Performance sufficient: Seven years' possession of land under a parol contract for the exchange of land coupled with valuable improvements made thereon with the knowledge and acquiescence of the grantor constitutes sufficient part performance. Evins v. Sandefur Julian Co. [Ark.] 98 S. W. 677. Part payment of the purchase money and taking possession in good faith with the knowledge of the vendor and making valuable improvements is a sufficient part performance. Sutherland v. Tainter [Okl.] 87 P. 900. Moving into the property and making improvements in the way of papering rooms and repairing buildings in sufficient part performance to satisfy the statute. Peterson v. Hicks [Wash.] 86 P. 634. A partition agreement partly in writing and partly by parol, actually executed by taking possession of the parts alloted, is enforceable and equity will require the parties to execute the necessary conveyances to vest each party with the title to his aliquot part. Jones v. Jones, 103 N. Y. S. 141. A parol gift of land will be enforced where the donee goes into possession and expends money in making permanent improvements. Bevington v. Bevington [Iowa] 110 N. W. 840. The statute is not a bar to the specific performance of an oral agreement to devise in consideration of support where complainant has gone into possession thereunder and performed all the conditions on his part to be performed, and this is true though the land is a homestead. Soper v. Galloway, 129 Iowa, 145, 105 N. W. 399. To prevent the statute being a bar to an oral contract, the vendee must show that he acted upon it by taking possession under its terms and that in reliance thereon he has made permanent and valuable improvements upon the land with his own funds with the knowledge of the vendor. Standard v. Standard, 223 Ill. 255, 79 N. E. 92. Part performance of an oral mutual contract to convey is sufficient where the conveyance to defendant has been executed and the vendees under defendant's contract have gone into possession. Kittredge v. Kittredge [Vt.] 65 A. 89.

Insufficient: Payment of part of the purchase price is not a sufficient part performance to warrant a decree. Titus v. Taylor [N. J. Eq.] 65 A. 1003. There was no part performance sufficient to take an oral agreement to convey out of the statute where all steps in that direction were disputed by a tenant in possession under an adverse claim as lessee. Halsell v. Renfrow, 202 U. S. 287, 50 Law. Ed. 1032. Part performance of a parol agreement by a father to purchase a house for his daughter is insufficient where the latter never went into possession except as a member of the family and never made any improvements thereon nor paid any portion of the purchase price. Baldridge v. George [Pa.] 65 A. 662.

27. Oral agreement by an uncle to convey land to a niece as an inducement to her to live near him. She fulfilled her part of the agreement but he died before conveying. Held that having so adequate a remedy at law, a refusal on the part of the executor to convey would operate as a fraud upon her. White v. Poole [N. H.] 65 A. 255. The statute of frauds is not a bar to the specific enforcement of an agreement to convey an easement of right of way where the agreement has been in part performed in such a manner as to render it a fraud upon the vendee to permit the vendor to avail himself of the statute. Burrell v. Middleton [N. J. Eq.] 65 A. 978. Where plaintiff's vendor was insolvent and defendant who held a of the contract,[28] and must be such as to leave the complainant without an adequate remedy at law.[29] Hence a mere collateral act disconnected therewith will not suffice though done in reliance thereon with the knowledge of defendant and incapable of monetary compensation.[30] Equity will enforce a parol gift of land if accompanied by possession where valuable improvements have been made by the donee on the strength of and in reliance upon the gift.[31] In Pennsylvania conveyance will not be decreed where so doing would reduce a deed to a mortgage, the defeasance being parol.[32] Under a statute requiring contracts for the sale of land to be in writing, an undisclosed principal cannot maintain the action where his relation to the written contract can be established only by parol evidence.[33] A parol contract admitted by the answer will be enforced to the extent of such admission, though within the statute of frauds where the statute is not pleaded.[34] In New York only the seller can raise the question of no written contract.[35]

§ 4. Performance by complainant.[36]—One seeking specific performance must show that he has performed[37] within the prescribed time,[38] unless performance

vendor's lien on the land verbally agreed with plaintiff that upon the payment to him by the vendor of the amount due on such lien he would release same, held upon making such payment to the vendor and the latter paying such sum plaintiff was entitled to specific performance of the agreement to release. McKinley v. Wilson [Tex. Civ. App.] 96 S. W. 112.

28. An uninterrupted continuation of possession by a tenant is not sufficient part performance of an oral renewal lease within the statute. Henry Jennings & Sons v. Miller [Or.] 85 P. 517. The performance on the part of the promisee under a parol contract to make a testamentary bequest must be referable alone to the contract sought to be enforced and must point to that contract and none other. Kirk v. Middlebrook [Mo.] 100 S. W. 450. Where after the foreclosure of a mortgage the mortgagor continued in possession under an oral contract to purchase, paid part of the purchase price and the taxes, and made improvements of the value of $25, part performance was sufficient. Phillips v. Jones [Ark.] 95 S. W. 164. Possession by a tenant is not such part performance as will take an oral contract to convey out of the statute unless the possession is clearly referable to the contract and not to the lease. Steger v. Kosch [Neb.] 108 N. W. 165, afd. on reargument [Neb.] 110 N. W. 983. Possession as a member of the father's family is insufficient part performance of an oral agreement by the former to convey to the son in consideration of support. Reel v. Reel, 59 W. Va. 106, 52 S. E. 1023. Where prior to taking possession under an oral unrestricted lease for ten years the lessor recedes therefrom and refuses to give other than a restricted lease for five years, the fact that the lessees entered into possession and made improvements claiming a lease for ten years does not entitle them to specific performance of the prior agreement on the ground of part performance. Czermak v. Wetzel, 100 N. Y. S. 167.

29. A contract within the statute of frauds will be specifically enforced on the ground of part performance, only when such partial performance has placed the complainant in a position where he is without an adequate remedy at law. Refused to compel performance of a contract to furnish telephone service though complainant had rendered services and contributed money toward the extension of the line in consideration of a contract for a definite period. Quinn v. Stark County Tel. Co., 122 Ill. App. 133.

30. Prior to the termination of its lease plaintiff secured an option for a lease on another building, but on securing an oral renewal of its lease with defendant for a period within the statute gave up its option with defendant's knowledge. Held insufficient to remove the bar of the statute. Henry Jennings & Sons v. Miller [Or.] 85 P. 617.

31. The making of improvements must be distinctly referable to the gift. Expenditure of $150 during an occupancy of seven years when consistent with the theory that it was made as a token of gratitude for being allowed to live on the land held not sufficient. Logue v. Langan [C. C. A.] 151 F. 455. Part performance sufficient to take a parol gift out of the statute must be such as to indicate an acceptance of the gift upon the terms on which it is alleged to have been made, and such as are fairly referable to no other understanding. Id.

32. Act June 8, 1881, P. L. 84, requires defeasances to be in writing at the time when the deed was made and to be signed, sealed, acknowledged, and delivered, and recorded to be effectual. Sterck v. Germantown Homestead Co., 27 Pa. Super. Ct. 336.

33. Contract for the sale of land signed by the owner and by one avowedly acting as agent for an undisclosed purchaser and therefore incurring no personal liability. Mertz v. Hubbard [Kan.] 88 P. 529.

34. Mausert v. Christian Feigenspan, 68 N. J. Eq. 671, 63 A. 610, 64 A. 801.

35. That land to be conveyed by the buyer as part consideration is not identified by the contract does not matter since only the seller can raise the question of no written contract. Pelletreau v. Brennan, 113 App. Div. 806, 99 N. Y. S. 955.

36. See 6 C. L. 1506.

37. Performance deemed sufficient, the conditions precedent in the contract having been waived. Kissack v. Bourke, 224 Ill. 352, 79 N. E. 619. Installation of a crossing will not be specifically compelled till complainant has according to the covenant des-was waived,[39] or defendant has by his conduct estopped himself from insisting upon performance,[40] or a failure to perform was due to the fault of the defendant;[41] but a failure to perform in time is not a bar unless time is of the essence of the contract.[42] Failure to complete the contract as to mere incidental terms will not bar relief.[43] Complainant must make a tender of performance of all conditions which under the contract he is to perform;[44] but plaintiff need not tender performance of conditions the time for the performance of which has not accrued,[45] ignated the place thereof. Johnson v. Ohio River R. Co. [W. Va.] 56 S. E. 200. Performance held sufficient under Rev. Codes 1899, § 4970, providing for relief from forfeiture by reason of failure to comply with provisions of contract upon making full compensation to the other party, except in case of a grossly negligent willful or fraudulent breach. Bennett v. Glaspell [N. D.] 107 N. W. 45. Performance by plaintiff under a contract to purchase hops and to make advances thereunder held sufficient. Livesley v. Johnston [Or.] 84 P. 1044. In consideration of defendants' promises to conduct a summer school at a certain place and to erect necessary buildings for that purpose, plaintiff agreed to convey certain land to them. Defendants conducted the school but erected no buildings whatever. Held they were not entitled to specific performance. Seven Mile Beach Co. v. Dollery [N. J. Err. & App.] 65 A. 991. Evidence held to show a failure to perform. Sire v. Long Acre Square Bldg. Co., 50 Misc. 29, 100 N. Y. S. 307. Contract to lease. Pittsburgh Amusement Co. v. Ferguson, 101 N. Y. S. 217. Agreement to assign a lease. Pratt v. Clark, 103 N. Y. S. 612, afg. 49 Misc. 146, 98 N. Y. S. 700.

38. Performance refused where time was made of the essence by agreement and gross laches in making required payments was shown. David Bradley & Co. v. Union Pac. R. Co. [Neb.] 107 N. W. 238. Under a lease giving the lessee an option to purchase within three years from a designated date time is of the essence of the agreement and a tender of performance one day after such time is too late Frey v. Camp [Iowa] 107 N. W. 1106. The optionee must accept within the time limited in the option. Pollock v. Brookover [W. Va.] 53 S. E. 795. Where the purchaser under an option contract abandoned it and failed to make payments called for, specific performance was refused. Hanschka v. Vodopich [S. D.] 108 N. W. 28.

39. Mere delay in paying the price may be excused where the right to forfeit the contract was not exercised and the fact that the land has increased in value does not prevent this. Nonpayment of installments when due or for nine years afterwards but possession retained and tender in full made before entry or forfeiture. Hairston v. Bescherer, 141 N. C. 205, 53 S. E. 845. A provision requiring the delivery of an abstract of title within ten days is waived by accepting an abstract delivered after the expiration of that period without objection. Kentucky Distilleries & Warehouse Co. v. Blanton [C. C. A.] 149 F. 31. Failure to perfect title within a specified time is waived where after the expiration of that time the vendee demands that title be perfected in a certain manner. Woodward v. McCollum [N. D.] 111 N. W. 623. Failure to furnish abstract showing title in complainant, evidence held insufficient to show a waiver by defendant. Lillienthal v. Bierkamp [Iowa] 110 N. W. 152.

40. Evidence held insufficient to estop defendant from demanding an abstract showing title in complainant. Lillienthal v. Bierkamp [Iowa] 110 N. W. 152.

41. Where a failure to pay the purchase price due on a contract was due to the fault of the vendor, the latter cannot complain. East Jellico Coal Co. v. Carter, 30 Ky. L. R. 174, 97 S. W. 768. Where the vendor failed to execute a deed and furnish an abstract, he could not contend that the vendee did not perform as soon as he should. Stevens v. Kittredge [Wash.] 87 P. 484.

42. When time is not of the essence of the contract, failure to tender performance within time named is not a defense. Where time is not made of the essence by an express stipulation, the time for performance is governed by equitable principles, and not by the time stipulated in the contract. Boston & W. St. R. Co. v. Rose [Mass.] 80 N. E. 498. Tender five days after time stipulated in contract. Id. Where time is not of the essence, the contract may be enforced after the prescribed time. Failure to pay purchase price within time limited. Libby v. Parry, 98 Minn. 366, 108 N. W. 299.

43. Where a survey was agreed upon as a means to ascertain the total sum to be paid, the price per acre being fixed, such survey is a mere incident and a failure to have the land surveyed does not render the contract incomplete. Howison v. Bartlett [Ala.] 40 So. 757.

44. Where a contract provided that complainant should pay interest on a certain incumbrance mentioned therein from the date of the contract, a tender of same is a condition precedent to relief by way of specific performance. Clark v. Jackson, 222 Ill. 13, 78 N. E. 6. Where a vendee suing for specific performance of a contract to convey deposits the purchase money in court and subsequently withdraws it, circumstances justifying such withdrawal must be shown. Guillaume v. K. S. D. Fruit Land Co. [Or.] 86 P. 883. The plaintiff need not tender amounts due on other obligations. Murphy v. Hussey, 117 La. 390, 41 So. 692. A tender of the price less amount due to pay off incumbrances is sufficient where the defendant denies liability under the contract. Id. A literal and precise tender is not a condition precedent to bringing suit as the legal effect of the bill is such that the complainant submits himself to perform fully. Tender of performance when at the time complainant had not a clear and unincumbered title. Kentucky Distilleries & Warehouse Co. v. Blanton [C. C. A.] 149 F. 31.

45. Where plaintiff agreed to pay a certain sum in cash and the balance as re-

nor where a tender would be useless.[46] An offer to perform made for the first time at the trial comes too late.[47] A tender made in good faith with ability to perform if declined excuses a formal tender.[48] A refused tender need not be deposited in court.[49] It is not essential that complainant should be capable of performing at the time of the execution of the contract if he is capable of doing so when the time for performance arrives,[50] and when time is not of the essence of an agreement or the delay has been the fault of the defendant and the contract is free from fraud, the complainant may clear away defects before final decree.[51] Where some of the conditions of a contract are disputed, the party seeking specific performance must perform those which are not disputed and stand ready to perform those which are whenever the dispute is lawfully determined.[52] The incorporators of a defunct corporation which had abandoned its contract are not entitled to specific performance by offering to form a new corporation to carry out the terms of such contract.[53] The vendor must have a merchantable title,[54] and he cannot enforce a contract under which he agreed to convey the land free and clear of all incumbrances where it is subject to restrictions as to its use amounting to an incumbrance.[55]

§ 5. Actions. Jurisdiction.[56]—Specific performance being a quasi proceeding in rem, the court may obtain jurisdiction over the property by publication against nonresident defendants,[57] but not over the person of such defendants for the purpose of entering a personal decree against them.[58] In Utah proceedings for specific quired by defendant's contract with the person from whom he purchased provided that further payment should be made within six months from its date, where suit is brought before the expiration of that period, tender of further payment is unnecessary. Peirce v. Wheeler [Wash.] 87 P. 361.

46. Where defendant repudiates a contract before tender can be made, tender is unnecessary. It is sufficient if complainant offers in his bill to bring the money into court. Sharp v. West, 150 F. 458. Where a portion of the purchase money was to be paid by commissions due the vendee for selling other land, a refusal to allow such commissions was tantamount to a refusal to carry out the contract and excused a tender of the balance of the purchase price. Guillaume v. K. S. D. Fruit Land Co. [Or.] 86 P. 883. Where the vendor notifies the vendee that he will not receive the money or convey, a tender of the money is not required as a condition of specific performance. Whiteside v. Winans, 29 Pa. Super. Ct. 244.

47. Defendant refused to execute a mortgage containing an objectionable clause, as not being in accordance with the contract. At the trial plaintiff offered to eliminate the clause from the mortgage. Held the offer was too late. Feist v. Block, 100 N. Y. S. 843.

48. Johnson v. Higgins [Neb.] 108 N. W. 168.

49. Murphy v. Hussey, 117 La. 390, 41 So. 692.

50. Contract to convey a homestead signed by the vendor but not signed by his wife. Johnson v. Higgins [Neb.] 108 N. W. 168.

51. Taxes and other liens which might be cleared up without difficulty. Kentucky Distilleries & Warehouse Co. v. Blanton [C. C. A.] 149 F. 31.

52. A vendee agreed to pay instalments of the purchase price and taxes and to defend adverse litigation. The title was questionable and a dispute arose as to which party should take proceedings to perfect it. The vendee thereupon failed to pay either the taxes or instalments agreed upon. Held that after the vendor had perfected the title and redeemed from the taxes, a tender of performance by the vendee was insufficient. Cook v. Dane [Wash.] 86 P. 947.

53. Seven Mile Beach Co. v. Dolley [N. J. Err. & App.] 66 A. 191.

54. Will not be enforced against a vendee where the title is doubtful and all parties interested are not before the court, although the court may believe that the vendor has a title which could not be overthrown. Relief denied on the ground of a reasonable doubt as to the vendor's title. Fisher v. Eggert [N. J. Eq.] 64 A. 957. Evidence held to show title in complainant although there was a mistake in the description of the land in the conveyance under which he acquired title. Newbold v. Condon [Md.] 64 A. 356. Complainant held to have a marketable title. Woodward v. McCollum [N. D.] 111 N. W. 623. Abstract furnished under contract held insufficient to show clear title in complainant. Clark v. Jackson, 222 Ill. 13, 78 N. E. 6.

55. Land subject to a restrictive covenant that it should not be used for an offensive business, nor for the deposit of any offensive substance, or to the annoyance of an owner of, or a resident on contiguous land. Goodrich v. Pratt, 100 N. Y. S. 187. Performance refused on the ground that a restrictive covenant as to the nature of the buildings to be erected on plaintiff's land rendered the marketability of the title doubtful. Altman v. McMillin, 100 N. Y. S. 970.

56. See 6 C. L. 1507.

57. Under the Virginia code in an action by the vendee for the specific performance of a contract to convey land, the court may obtain jurisdiction by publication against a nonresident executor of the vendor. Clem v. Given's Ex'r [Va.] 55 S. E. 567.

58. The only relief which can be granted performance of a contract by a decedent should be brought in the probate division of the district court having jurisdiction of the estate.[59] The fact that the apparent record owner of a lease is not before the court does not deprive it of jurisdiction where the court has jurisdiction over the real parties in interest.[60] Where the Federal court has jurisdiction over the person, the fact that a portion of the land affected is beyond its territorial jurisdiction is immaterial.[61]

Parties.[62]—As a rule only the parties to the contract are necessary parties in an action to enforce it,[63] except where an interest thereunder passes to a third person with notice of complainant's rights;[64] but it is held that all owners of the land against whom a decree for specific performance of a contract to convey is sought are necessary parties,[65] and one though not a party to the contract claiming an interest in its subject-matter may be made a party to the bill, for the purpose of barring him from asserting such interest,[66] but he is not a necessary party where he disclaims all interest under the contract.[67] A vendor is a necessary party though his agent had authority to execute a conveyance.[68] Undisclosed persons in interest are properly made parties.[69] Where defendant in an action at law demands specific performance as affirmative relief, it is incumbent upon him to bring in the necessary parties affected by that relief.[70] The court is powerless to grant relief in an action for specific performance against persons not parties of record.[71] Hence the failure to object to the nonjoiner of necessary parties is not a waiver of the defect.[72]

Defenses.[73]—The fact that by mistake the contract called for a general instead of a special warranty or quit claim deed is not a defense where the relief prayed for by the bill is in compliance with the contract as the parties intended it should be.[74] Where a vendee is willing to accept the vendor's title, the latter cannot set up as a defense to a bill a defect in his title.[75] The objection that an agreement to convey was not signed by the vendor's wife is available to heirs who have taken the lands is the disposition of property within the state. Clem v. Given's Ex'r [Va.] 55 S. E. 567.

60. Defendants, lessees, agreed to procure a renewal of a lease and to sublet to plaintiff. The renewal was procured but the lease taken in the name of a nonresident relative. Held the fact that the court did not obtain jurisdiction over the latter did not deprive it of power to enforce specific performance, defendants being the real parties in interest. Capps v. Frederick [Wash.] 86 P. 1128.

65. Relief cannot be granted against one owner only though he was agent and attorney in fact for the others. Arkadelphia Lumber Co. v. Mann [Ark.] 94 S. W. 46. Where a joint vendee died and certain of his heirs were by consent of all substituted for him, but the vendor refused to convey to such substituted heirs, held in an action for specific performance the vendor and other heirs of the deceased vendee were proper parties, substantial relief being sought against them. Jackson v. Jackson [Ga.] 56 S. E. 318.

66. The wife of a vendor may be made a party to the bill although she did not sign a contract to convey, where she claims the property is community property and the bill alleges she has no interest whatever therein, the object of the action being to estop her from asserting an interest. Woodward v. Davidson, 150 F. 840.

67. A third person with whom a vendee agreed to share as a partner in the proceeds of the crops to be raised thereon is not a necessary party plaintiff in an action to enforce the contract against the vendor. Bennett v. Glaspell [N. D.] 107 N. W. 45.

in question under an agreement assigning dower to the widow in other lands.[76] Refusal to perform on specific grounds is a waiver of all other grounds.[77]

Pleading.[78]—The bill,[79] or where relief is sought by answer, the answer,[80] must allege all facts essential to the relief sought. It should contain a sufficient statement of the contract sought to be enforced,[81] and should show the capacity of plaintiff [82] and defendant [83] to perform, and if for the specific performance of a parol contract must definitely and specifically allege its terms.[84] An allegation of an offer in writing and acceptance by defendant sufficiently avers delivery of the contract.[85] Averments of part performance to avoid the statute of frauds must distinctly show that such performance was referable to the very contract sued on.[86] Where the specific performance of a contract relating to chattels is sought, the exceptional facts authorizing such relief must be averred.[87] Laches need not be specially pleaded.[88] Allegations of equitable jurisdiction do not prevail over the bill as a whole showing that damages will be adequate relief,[89] and where a bill fails to state a cause of action for specific performance, a prayer for general relief will not cure a defect caused by the single specific prayer for specific performance.[90] A prayer for damages is properly inserted in the complaint,[91] and objection that the complaint failed to state the time for the performance of the contract should be made by a motion to make definite and certain,[92] but that the contract alleged is unconscionable is such a total failure to state a cause of action as may be raised by objection to any evidence under the bill.[93] Allegations not traversed are deemed admitted.[94] In Louisiana it is held that prescription obviating defects in plaintiff's title alleged in the Balkwill v. Spencer [Wash.] 88 P. 1029.

78. See 6 C. L. 1508.

79. A bill seeking to enforce a contract in which time is expressly stated to be of the essence, which admits that the contract was not performed on the complainant's part in time, is demurrable. Collins v. Delaney Co. [N. J. Eq.] 64 A. 107. The complaint must allege facts showing adequacy of consideration and that the contract was just and reasonable as to the defendant. White v. Sage [Cal.] 87 P. 193. Complaint held to state a cause of action for specific performance and not an action for damages for fraud, deceit, or failure to perform. Hopkins v. Baremore, 99 Minn. 413, 109 N. W. 831. Complaint held to state a cause of action for the specific performance of a contract to convey land. Robbins v. Porter [Idaho] 88 P. 86. Bond for title. Hardin v. Neal Loan & Banking Co., 125 Ga. 820, 54 S. E. 755.

81. Boston & W. St. R. Co. v. Rose [Mass.] 80 N. E. 498.

82. An averment in a bill that the complainant was ready, eager, and willing to perform, is a sufficient allegation of ability to perform. Kissack v. Bourke, 224 Ill. 352, 79 N. E. 619.

83. In an action for specific performance by a vendee, the bill must allege title in the vendor. Broder v. Gordon, 50 Misc. 282, 100 N. Y. S. 463. A complaint which alleges that the complainant was willing to accept the title which the defendant had need not allege that the defendant had a good and sufficient title at time demand was made for performance. Newell v. Lamping [Wash.] 88 P. 195.

93. Haffner v. Dobrinski [Okl.] 88 P. 1042.

94. Where defendant in his answer set up a contract varying from the one set up by plaintiff and demanded its specific per-answer need not be formally pleaded by way of reply.[95] Where a vendor agreed to convey land free from all incumbrances when at the time it was subject to a lease and the lessee refused to surrender, the vendee in an action for specific performance may require the vendor and the lessee to interplead.[96] A bill by mistake asking a general warranty deed may be amended so as to call for a special warranty or quit claim deed.[97]

Evidence.[98]—The burden is upon plaintiff to establish the contract,[99] its precise terms and certainty,[1] and the performance of conditions on his part to be performed.[2] Evidence tending to show that complainant is the owner of the land which is the subject of the action is admissible.[3] Where the complainant agreed to convey land free from all incumbrances, evidence that certain restrictive covenants to which the land was subject enhanced rather than depreciated its value is inadmissible.[4] Where damages are sought, the value of the land must be proved.[5] A parol contract within the statute of frauds must be proved by clear and unequivocal evidence.[6] A parol contract to make a will and performance thereunder must be proved by evidence so clear and cogent as to leave no reasonable doubt of its existence and compliance with its terms,[7] notwithstanding that equity would justify such a contract under the circumstances.[8] A parol contract to make a gift must be clearly and conclusively proved,[9] particularly when the relationship of the parties is close.[10]

The relief granted.[11]—In addition to specific performance the court may as ancillary relief cancel a deed in fraud of plaintiff,[12] order an accounting,[13] or declare formance as affirmative relief, the failure of the plaintiff to file a special replication thereto is an admission of its truth and entitles defendant to the relief prayed for. Garrett v. Goff [W. Va.] 56 S. E. 351.

4. Covenant not to use land for an offensive business or for the deposit of offensive substances, or to the annoyance of a resident on, or owner of, contiguous land. Goodrich v. Pratt, 100 N. Y. S. 187.

5. When the only evidence of the value of the land in question was the consideration expressed in a deed by the defendant to third parties on the day he refused to carry out the contract it was held sufficient on which to base the judgment for damages. Balkwill v. Spencer [Wash.] 88 P. 1029

6. Evidence held insufficient to show an agreement to convey land. Standard v. Standard, 223 Ill. 255, 79 N. E. 92. An oral agreement will be specifically enforced only when the evidence is clear and satisfactory as to all essentials to relief. Jones v. Patrick, 145 F. 440. Evidence held sufficient to show binding contract to convey in consideration of support which was fully performed by complainant. Beam v. Beam [Neb.] 109 N. W. 741. Evidence sufficient to establish an oral contract to convey which was fully performed by the complainant. Nealon v. McGargill [Neb.] 108 N. W. 170. A contract to convey inventions in consideration of employment must be clearly proved and its terms as to subject-matter, consideration, and all other essentials, must be specific and unambiguous. Portland Iron Works v. Willett [Or.] 89 P. 421.

7. Evidence held sufficient to show a parol contract to make a testamentary disposition of property in consideration of services. Berg v. Moreau [Mo.] 97 S. W. 901. To enforce a parol contract to make a will the existence of the contract, its terms and performance on the part of the promisee must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt. Kirk v. Middlebrook [Mo.] 100 S. W. 450.

8. Evidence held insufficient. Holt v. Tuite, 188 N. Y. 17, 80 N. E. 364.

9. Young v. Crawford [Ark.] 100 S. W. 87. Evidence held insufficient as being consistent with the theory that only an estate at sufferance was intended to be conveyed. Logue v. Langan [C. C. A.] 151 F. 455.

10. Evidence held insufficient to show a parol gift of land by a father to his son. Meadows v. Meadows [W. Va.] 53 S. E. 718.

11. See 6 C. L. 1509.

12. After the execution of an agreement to convey, the vendor wrongfully declared the contract terminated and conveyed to a a conveyance pendente lite a trust;[14] but ancillary relief will not be granted as against persons not parties to the action,[15] nor where the party would not have been entitled to such relief in an action brought for that purpose.[16] An injunction in aid of specific performance is merely ancillary and falls with that action.[17] Under the California Code a contract may be reformed and specifically enforced in the same action.[18] Where by reason of the facts plaintiff has not made out a case for specific performance, the bill may be retained to adjust any equities which may exist in plaintiff's favor,[19] but a judgment in the alternative is improper in the absence of a finding that defendant is incapable of performing;[20] and where the defendant renders himself incapable of performing by conveying the property to a third person the plaintiff is entitled to appropriate equitable relief in lieu of specific performance.[21] Damages may be awarded in lieu of specific performance;[22] but where the distinctive claim for equitable relief fails, the court will not take jurisdiction of the ancillary claim to damages.[23] Damages cannot be awarded save as incident to equitable relief.[24] Where it is admitted that complainant is not entitled third person who took with knowledge of complainant's equitable title. Johnson v. Tribby, 27 App. D. C. 281.

13. Where in an action to specifically enforce a contract to convey in consideration of support the complainant fails to establish the contract, he is entitled to an accounting for money spent in furnishing such support and for improvements placed on the property. Fowler v. De Lance [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 908, 110 N. W. 41.

14. Where a vendor who agreed to convey to three persons conveyed to the assignee of one of them pendente lite, the decree should adjudge that the grantee held the land in trust for the other two and should direct a conveyance of an undivided third to each. Ocean City Ass'n v. Cresswell [N. J. Err. & App.] 65 A. 454.

15. In an action for specific performance, plaintiff asked that a certain restrictive covenant be declared void. The relief was refused on the ground that all of the parties to the covenant were not parties to the action. Altman v. McMillin, 100 N. Y. S. 970.

16. Where specific performance of a contract to convey is denied a vendee in possession, the defendant is not entitled to have the contract canceled as a cloud on title, not being in possession. Simpson v. Belcher [W. Va.] 56 S. E. 211.

17. Lewman & Co. v. Ogden Bros., 143 Ala. 351, 42 So. 102. An injunction cannot be awarded as ancillary relief where specific performance is denied. Taussig v. Corbin [C. C. A.] 142 F. 660.

18. Messer v. Hibernia Sav. & Loan Soc. [Cal.] 84 P. 835.

19. Mutually abandoned contract to convey land, the vendor retaining a portion of the purchase price and conveying to a third person. Lese v. Lanson, 103 N. Y. S. 303.

20. Levy v. Knepper, 102 N. Y. S. 313.

21. Plaintiff is entitled to an alternative decree that defendant convey or refund the money paid or at least that defendant account for the second sale if made in bad faith toward plaintiff. Barnett v. Sussman, 102 N. Y. S. 287.

22. Hopkins v. Baremore, 99 Minn. 413, 109 N. W. 831. Damages in lieu of specific performance may be awarded by a court of equity, where such a course becomes necessary in order to do full justice between the parties and confers complete relief in one judicial proceeding; but in such a case the damages awarded will not include speculative or accidental profits, and will be limited to saving the parties from loss. Trustees Cincinnati Southern R. Co. v. Hooker, 7 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 357. Where the vendor is unable to make the conveyance called for by his contract, the vendee is entitled to recover as damages in lieu of specific performance the amount paid on the contract, and where payment of such amount was tendered, no interest will be allowed thereon. Gregg v. Carey [Cal. App.] 88 P. 282. Where the defendant during the pendency of the suit sells the property, equity will retain jurisdiction to award damages, the damages being such as could have been recovered in an action at law for the breach of the contract. Livesley v. Johnston [Or.] 84 P. 1044. Agreement by defendant to convey land not owned by it, evidence held to show bad faith sufficient to warrant the recovery of the market value of the property contracted to be conveyed as damages, under Civ. Code, § 3306. Messer v. Hibernia Sav. & Loan Soc. [Cal.] 84 P. 835. Where defendant by his own act renders performance impossible, the court will retain the action for the purpose of awarding plaintiff damages for the breach. Conveyance to a third person. Levy v. Knepper, 102 N. Y. S. 313.

23. Refused where vendee brought a bill for specific performance knowing that the vendor was without title. Public Service Corp. v. Hackensack Meadows Co. [N. J. Eq.] 64 A. 976. Where suit is brought for specific performance against a defendant who has no title, and his want of title was known to the plaintiff at the time of the bringing of the suit, the petition cannot be retained for assessment of damages. Ferguson v. Kelley, 4 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 126.

24. Not allowable for breach of covenant to maintain ways where no equity in respect to specific performance, it is proper for the court to refuse to retain the bill for the assessment of damages where it does not appear that complainant has been damaged by the refusal of defendant to perform.[25] In construing executory contracts of sale, courts will apply the liberal principles of equity rather than strict common-law rules.[26] Where the payment of part of the purchase price is admitted and complainant offers to pay the balance when ascertained, the matter will be referred for the purpose of determining such balance, if complainant is otherwise entitled to specific performance.[27] The contingent interest of a spouse not joining in a contract cannot be acquired by specific performance of the contract,[28] but the complainant may be protected against such interest by a provision in the decree permitting him to retain a fixed proportionate share of the purchase money.[29]

Findings and decree.[30]—In California where it is sought to enforce a contract to purchase land, the court must find the value of the land for the purpose of showing the adequacy of the consideration.[31] The decree should require the performance of the entire contract [32] in accordance with its terms [33] and must correspond with the findings.[34] A decree awarding plaintiff specific performance and providing that upon the failure or inability of defendant to perform plaintiff should be entitled to a certain sum as damages does not give the defendant the right to elect between the payment of damages and performance in specie.[35] A decree against a subsequent purchaser with notice should not require of him a higher deed of conveyance than that under which he holds.[36]

Appeal.—The New York statute, providing that the pendency of an appeal from a judgment in specific performance in favor of the owner of land shall not prevent him from disposing of the land unless a bond is filed by the appellant conditioned to pay damages caused by the appeal upon affirmance of the judgment, applies though specific performance was demanded by way of counterclaim in an action by the vendee to recover portion of the purchase price.[37]

Costs.—Where both parties are at fault neither is entitled to costs.[38]

D. Different State Courts (1969).

Conclusivenes of adjudication of fact are elsewhere treated,[39] as is the binding effect of previous decision on a subsequent review of the same case.[40]

§ 1. The doctrine and its application.[41]—The doctrine of stare decisis is a rule to preserve the law as settled by the decisions of a court having final jurisdiction of the questions,[42] and will not be departed from unless for grave necessity.[43] In construing statutes and the constitution, courts will adhere to their former decisions regardless of what the present opinion of the court may be as to their soundness,[44] and a decision holding a law to be unconstitutional is binding upon the court in determining the validity of a subsequent act of the same nature.[45] Former decisions will not be overruled unless they are clearly and manifestly erroneous or no longer adapted to the changed conditions of society,[46] or it is clear that they are not only legally indefensible but that it would be palpably wrong to permit them to stand,[47] and the evil resulting from the principle established by them is manifest,[48] but nothing short of an absolute conviction of the unsoundness of a previous decision will justify the court in overruling it,[49] and the fact that the present members of the court might have arrived at a different conclusion is not sufficient.[50] In Georgia a decision concurred in by all the judges of the court can be overruled only by an unanimous opinion of the entire bench.[51]

§ 2. Decisions and obiter dicta.[52]—To constitute a precedent a decision must be upon a question presented to the court under the issues and essential to the disposition of the cause,[53] and will be followed only when the state of the facts makes the same law applicable.[54] The words used in a decision must be liberally construed,[55] and general expressions must be taken in connection with the facts of the case in which they occur and they will not be extended to cases which are fairly subject to the operation of a different principle.[56] The refusal of the court of last resort to grant a writ of error to review a decision by a court of intermediate appellate jurisdiction elevates the decision of the latter to the dignity of final authority.[57] A decision that a law is unconstitutional based upon a stipulation as to facts does not render the law invalid but merely denies its efficacy as to the party who has admitted the existence of facts which in the opinion of the court renders the law unconstitutional.[58]

§ 3. Rules of property.[59]—Decisions which have become rules of property will not be overruled;[60] and contractual relations or valuable rights resting upon the strength of decisions by courts of last resort will not be disturbed where the facts are substantially the same as those upon which the former decisions were grounded,[61] but decisions are not binding precedents as to rights antecedently acquired,[62] and even though of persuasive force they will not be considered where the issues make that law immaterial.[63] Vested rights cannot accrue under a decision where such decision was overruled or modified prior to any action being taken thereunder.[64]

§ 4. Courts of different jurisdictions. A. Inferior and appellate [65]—Courts of intermediate appellate jurisdiction must follow the decisions of the court of last resort,[66] except in the case of a state court where a Federal question is involved,[67] and they are also bound by their own previous decisions except where they conflict with the opinion of the court of last resort,[68] but in Illinois it is held that a decision

59. See 6 C. L. 1512.

60. Hill v. Atlantic, etc., R. Co. [N. C.] 55 S. E. 854. A decision that a city held certain land dedicated to it for a public landing, as an owner and not as trustee, and as such could dispose of it in any way consistent with its charter, establishes a rule of property with respect to the rights of the city in such land regardless of the merits of the original controversy, though made in an action involving only a portion of the entire tract, and although a diversion of the land to a private purpose was not involved in the action. Union R. Co. v. Chickasaw Cooperage Co. [Tenn.] 95 S. W. 171. A decision that a city had a right to lease portions of a tract of land dedicated to it for the purpose of a public landing to individuals for a private purpose, when it was not required for public use, established a rule of property with respect to the validity of a subsequent lease of a portion of such tract. Id. An interpretation of a statute which has become a rule of property will be followed. 61. Diamond Plate Glass Co. v. Knote [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 954. Where contractual relations are entered into upon the strength of a decision of the supreme court, the rights of the parties thereto will not be disturbed although the decision relied upon was subsequently overruled. Right of a defendant to a partition proceeding acquiring an outstanding interest of one not a party to the action to set up such acquired interest against the plaintiff, where at the time of its acquisition under a decision of the supreme court he would not be estopped from setting it up. Hill v. Brown [N. C.] 56 S. E. 693.

62. North Western Sav. Bk. v. Centreville Station, 143 F. 81.

63. Estoppel to deny legality of bonds makes it immaterial whether according to the decisions they were legally issued. North Western Sav. Bk. v. Centreville, 143 F. 81.

64. Liability of city under a collusive default judgment on a void municipal warrant. State v. Tanner [Wash.] 88 P. 321. A party to a contract cannot escape liability through the medium of decisions rendered after the obligation was assumed, where such decisions were subsequently overruled by the supreme court, although at the time of their rendition the court from which they eminated had final jurisdiction. Diamond Plate Glass Co. v. Knote [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 954.

65. See 6 C. L. 1512.

66. Notwithstanding that the supreme court of the United States has held to the contrary, no Federal question being involved. Dunham v. Hastings Pav. Co., 103 N. Y. S. 480. The denial by the supreme court of a petition to transfer from the appellate court in effect approves the opinion of the appellate court in so far as it was challenged by the specific reasons assigned therein for a transfer and will be followed. New York, etc., R. Co. v. Martin [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 290. The circuit court of appeals is bound by the decisions of the United States supreme court as to matters of general law. Liability of carrier for injury to passenger, application of doctrine of res ipsa loquitur. Southern Pac. Co. v. Cavin [C. C. A.] 144 F. 348. Though decisions of the state court are numerous. (§ 4) B. Federal and state courts. When Federal courts follow state decisions.[72]—The Federal courts are bound by the decisions of the state courts of last resort as to matters of purely local law,[73] such as rules of property,[74] and the constructon and effect of conveyance between private parties,[75] though one court has used the word persuasive in this connection;[76] and by a principle analagous to that of res adjudicata will follow a decision in an action litigated to a final termination in the state courts,[77] but they are not bound where the determination of the general law is involved.[78] The construction placed upon a state constitution or law by the

69. Strauss v. Merchants' Loan & Trust Co., 119 Ill. App. 588.

70. Where after a contract for the drilling of a gas well had been entered into the appellate court, being then a court of final jurisdiction, decided that contracts of a like nature could be terminated by either party at the end of a year, which doctrine was thereafter overruled by the supreme court, there being no showing that any reliance had been placed upon the decision of the appellate court, it was held that the doctrine of stare decisis did not apply. Diamond Plate Glass Co. v. Knote [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 954.

71. Decision of the special term of the New York supreme court is not binding upon the appellate division of the same court. In re City of New York, 114 App. Div. 519, 100 N. Y. S. 140.

72. See 6 C. L. 1513.

73. Whether a law exempting from taxation was repealed by a subsequent law is a question upon which the decision of the state court is controlling, unless the exemption is irrepealable as impairing the obligation of a contract. Wicomico County Com'rs v. Bancroft, 27 S. Ct. 21. Whether grant of tide lands by a municipality under grant from the state was in excess of power, and whether such grant had been ratified and to what extent, and the legality of a title based upon an execution sals of same, are questions of local law, and a decision of the state court of last resort is binding on the Federal court. Southern Pac. Co. v. Western Pac. R. Co., 144 F. 160. Extent of an estoppel by judgment of dismissal is a matter of local law. Id. Federal courts will follow decisions of local state courts on questions of the substantive law of property and contracts. Estoppel in pais. South Penn Oil Co. v. Calf Creek O. & G. Co., 140 F. 507. Where after Federal court acquired jurisdiction over an action for damages for the wrongful termination of a contract a receiver was appointed by the stats court, which appointment under decisions of the state terminated all executory contracts without damage for the breach, held such decisions were binding upon the Federal court. Tennis Bros. Co. v. Wetzel & T. R. Co., 140 F. 193.

Action for breach of covenant of quiet enjoyment, question of whether eviction was by reason of act of holder of paramount title for which defendant was responsible is a question of property. Pabst Brewing Co. v. Thorley [C. C. A.] 145 F. 117. The law of the state on the subject of mortgages is a rule of property and the decisions of the state courts of last resort in the state where the mortgaged property is situated and where the controversy arose are binding upon the Federal courts. Haggart v. Wilczinski [C. C. A.] 143 F. 22. Rules of property established by the state court of last resort by its construction of the state constitution or laws must be followed by the Federal court where no question of right under the Federal constitution and laws and no question of general commercial law is involved. Right of a judgment creditor who redeems from a foreclosure sale of mortgaged coal in an open mine to the coal extracted therefrom during the period of redemption. Traer v. Fowler [C. C. A.] 144 F. 810.

75. Construction of an instrument as not conveying a portion of the vein beneath the surface and within the converging lines produced of the plaintiff's location, will be followed by the Federal court. East Cent. Eureka Min. Co. v. Central Eureka Min. Co., 27 S. Ct. 258.

76. Degree of care required at highways crossing street railroads. Milford & U. St. R. Co. v. Cline [C. C. A.] 150 F. 325.

77. Where an injunction to restrain a city from paying water rentals on the ground of the invalidity of the contract was denied by the state court on the ground that relief was barred by limitation, the court expressing the opinion that the city was without equity to raise the question of the invalidity of the contract, such decision will be followed in an action at law in the Federal court against the city to recover rentals under the contract. City of Defiance v. McGonigale [C. C. A.] 150 F. 689.

78. The validity and construction of a bond given by a contractor for public work is a question of general law. Kansas City Hydraulic Press Brick Co. v. National Surety Co., 149 F. 507. supreme court of the state is binding upon the Federal courts.[79] Thus the local decisions are binding as to what are the specific subjects to which an act applies when assailed as an attempted regulation of interstate commerce,[80] or as denying the equal protection of the law,[81] but they are not bound by the construction placed upon statutes merely declaratory of the general law,[82] nor by mere obiter dictum.[83] The construction placed upon a legislative grant and the boundaries located thereunder will be adopted by the Federal court,[84] as will also decisions establishing a rule of property under a treaty unless it is clear that the words of the treaty have been misinterpreted.[85] Where the state courts have not interpreted a local statute, the Federal courts may place such a construction upon it as they deem reasonable;[86] and where property rights vest prior to any decision of the state court construing the provisions of the constitution applicable thereto, the Federal courts will exercise an independent judgment irrespective of decisions of the state court subsequently rendered,[87] and where the original holder of such property rights was entitled to such a construction, his assignee is also.[88]

State courts are bound by the construction placed upon a Federal act by the supreme court of the United States,[91] and upon such questions state courts of intermediate appellate jurisdiction must follow the decisions of the national courts[92] even to the extent of refusing to follow decisions of their own state court of last resort to the contrary,[93] but they are not bound to follow the construction placed upon a local statute or constitution by the Federal courts.[94]

(§ 4) C. Different Federal courts.[95]—The decisions of the circuit court of appeals on the same state of facts will be followed by the circuit court of another circuit where there are no conflicting decisions,[96] but where the court of appeals of two circuits have arrived at a different conclusion on the same state of facts, the court making the earlier decision will adhere to its former ruling unless convinced that the later decision was correct.[97]

(§ 4) D. Different state courts.[98]—The decisions of courts in other states are not binding, but should be given weight, according as their reasoning appeals to the judgment of the court considering the question,[99] but, in construing a local statute, the opinions of courts of other states construing similar statutes are of very great weight in the absence of a different construction by the local courts.[1] The construcion placed upon the statute of a state by its own judicial tribunals will be followed by the courts of other states in determining the rights of parties under such statute,[2] even though it differs from the construction placed upon a similar act by the courts of the state in which the action is pending,[3] unless to do so would be to contravene its own policy and laws or effect injuriously the rights of its own citizens,[4] but they are not bound by the application of such decisions to the facts in the case.[5]

§ 1. Boundaries, jurisdiction and sovereignty. Boundaries.[6]—Where a navigable river dividing the territory of two states changes its course by gradual and imperceptible encroachment or recession, the state boundaries follow the shifting thread of the stream,[7] but boundaries are not affected by sudden changes in the course of the stream which do not destroy the identity of the territory affected.[8] Boundaries may be fixed by a commission, their action being ratified by the legislatures of the respective states and by act of congress.[9] A state has inherent power to determine the boundaries of its civil subdivisions,[10] and for this purpose may enter private property,[11] but it has no power in such case to destroy private property without making provision for compensation to the owner.[12]

Jurisdiction and sovereignty.[13]—The jurisdiction of a state is coextensive with its territorial limits,[14] and such jurisdiction is not necessarily divested by a concession of extraterritorial jurisdiction to another state.[15] The sovereignty of a state rests with its people,[16] except so far as it has been abridged by the Federal constitution,[17] or the constitution of the state itself.[18] The state constitution, however, is a self-imposed restriction, being itself merely the voice of the people speaking in their sovereign capacity,[19] and subject to this self-imposed restriction the sovereign people speak through the medium of the state legislature.[20] In the exercise of its sovereignty a state has the power and it is its duty to take all proper steps to protect the welfare of its people,[21] including the purity of the ballot.[22] Except for mere temporary purposes not involving an appropriation or destruction of property,[23] or in the exercise of its power of eminent domain,[24] a state has no right to enter and occupy land without the consent of the owner.[25] No right of the state or any instrumentalities of the government are involved in a Federal law regulating the liability of interstate carriers to their employes.[26]

26. Act June 11, 1906, 34 Stat. 232, c. 3073,

§ 3. Contracts.[28]—When a state contracts with a private person it will itself be treated as a private person,[29] and may be held liable as such.[30] So, also, when land is entered and used by the state with permission of the owner, there is an implied agreement on the part of the state to pay a fair value for such use and occupation.[31] Where a contract for public works admits of the construction placed thereon by the agents in charge of such works, such construction will be sustained by the courts.[32] A statute relative to an existing contract of the state but enacted subsequently thereto is not a part of the contract.[33] Prohibition does not lie to prevent the execution of an unauthorized contract by state agents.[34]

§ 4. Officers and employes.[35]—The ordinary meaning of "state officer" is a head of a state department, such as governor, secretary of the state, and the like.[36] Occupancy of executive mansion by the governor of a state as required by law is not a "perquisite of office or other compensation."[37] The legality of a commission or office created by the legislature cannot be tested by prohibition, which admits the legality of such commission or office.[38] The commission of a deputy runs only during the continuance of the term of the appointing officer,[39] and a mere acquiescence by subsequent incumbents in such commission is not sufficient to reinvest the deputy with authority.[40]

A state agent cannot take advantage of his agency in order to make additional profit for himself,[41] but an agency is not created by a contract whereby one agrees to manufacture volumes of state reports, the plates to belong to the state,[42] and while the contractor cannot use the materials entrusted to him for private gain,[43] he is not deprived of the right to publish such reports on his own account, the matter not being copyrighted.[44] Persons dealing with special agents or officers of the state are bound by the act of the legislature from which such agents or officers derive their authority,[45] and such persons have the burden of proving the authority of such officers or agents.[46] Unauthorized contracts by state officers can be ratified by the legislature,[47] but not by departmental or executive officers who are themselves

47. Resolution authorizing suit against state for price of military supplies held waiver of lack of authority of officers to without power to make the contract.[48] An unauthorized contract by a state officer is not within the Federal and state constitutional provisions relative to the impairment of contracts.[49] In the absence of special statutory provisions to that effect, a state is not liable for the torts of its officers or agents,[50] but the officers or agents will be liable where the acts are unauthorized, though under color of statutory authority, or where the attempted authorization is void.[51] Acts of administrative officers in the exercise of quasi judicial powers are as binding upon other tribunals as the adjudications of regularly constituted courts of justice.[52] The determination of a state officer of a matter within his discretion cannot be collaterally attacked.[53] Neither the state nor its officers can be compelled by the courts to perform its political obligations,[54] but violation of its contractual obligations may be restrained.[55]

The powers of the legislature are conferred by and dependent upon the state constitution.[56] The powers thus delegated may be summed up generally as the power to make laws,[57] and this power cannot be delegated,[58] but this restriction does not apply to merely ministerial duties[59] or the administration of the law when made,[60] and the agent or commission may be allowed more or less discretion in the performance of ministerial duties.[61] Where powers are conferred upon the two branches of the legislature jointly, neither can act independently,[62] and separate action in such case, being void, is not capable of ratification by the other branch.[63] A specific delegation of separate powers excludes all other powers except such as may be necessary to the exercise of those expressly granted,[64] the doctrine of inherent powers having no application to the separate branches of a legislature under a constitutional government.[65] One branch of the legislature has no inherent power by independent action to create an investigating committee for general legislative purposes,[66] or with power to sit and act after the close of the session,[67] but this power may be conferred by the legislature sitting as a whole,[68] and also the power to commit witnesses for contempt.[69] In any and every case the exercise of the powers conferred must be in conformity with the state constitution.[70] Since, therefore, the basic constitutional principle upon which a state is divided into political subdivisions is equality of representation,[71] the legislature must, in making such divisions, observe as clearly as possible the constitutional limitations as to population,[72] territory,[73] and time.[74] The courts, however, can consider only whether the legislature

Powers delegated by Federal government must likewise be exercised in conformity with the state constitution, where the delegation is to the legislature as a parliamentary body, and such was the character of Act Feb. 22, 1889, 25 Stat. 676, c. 180, admitting Montana into the Union and providing that lands therein granted for school purpose should be appropriated to such purposes in such manner as the state legislature should direct. State of Montana v. Rice, 27 S. Ct. 281.

71. Under Const. § 33, providing that representation districts must be as nearly equal in population as possible, and that not more than two counties shall be joined in one district, does not absolutely forbid the joining of more than two counties where this would be necessary in order to secure equality. Rayland v. Anderson, 30 Ky. L. R. 1199, 100 S. W. 865.

72. Under Const. 1894, art. 3, § 4, requiring an approximation of equality in population in senatorial districts, the minimum rights of counties entitled, according to census, to at least one senator, are determined by such enumeration, and such rights cannot be abridged by the legislature by joining to any one of them another smaller county where such a course is not absolutely required by geographical position and the constitutional requirements of compactness and contiguity. 73. Under Const. 1894, art. 3, § 4, requiring senatorial districts to be as compact as possible, a district comprising portion of a thickly built up city, with streets and blocks, and covering level ground, cannot be lawfully bounded by a rambling territory, including many streets and angles. has exercised a constitutional discretion in making such divisions;[75] and where the legislature is vested with exclusive power to determine the title to membership therein a member received as a legally elected member becomes such de facto and de jure.[76] An apportionment act remains in force until supplanted by a subsequent valid act.[77] Where the division of one county into two is declared unconstitutional, the integrity of the original county is restored.[78]

The power of the governor to call an extra session of the legislature[79] is not exhausted by a single exercise thereof.[80]

§ 5. Fiscal management.[81]—Constitutional limitations must be observed in contracting debts.[82] Constitutional inhibitions against using the money or credit of the state in aid of private undertakings do not prevent such assistance to educational institutions,[83] nor does a constitutional inhibition against the state's engaging in internal improvements relate to improvements by minor subdivisions of the state with their own funds and under their own management.[84] Matters pertaining to one department are governed by the statutory provisions relating to such department rather than those relating to another department.[85] A tax paying resident has such a special interest as to give him a status to maintain a suit to restrain the destruction of the state properties or unauthorized expenditures of state funds by state agents.[86]

Act June 8, 1905, p. 1068, No. 627, providing for the annexation of territory to city of Detroit, which provided that the annexation should not take place until April, 1906, and hence, construing the two statutes together, it was the intention of the legislature that the new act should not supplant the old until the annexation actually took place, and hence during the interval the electors of the detached territory were not disfranchised but their rights were to be determined under the old apportionment law. 90. A state is not bound to place the defendant in statu quo by restoring money received under an illegal contract as a condition to the right to maintain a suit to cancel such contract, since state officers have no power to draw money from state ex-suit.[91] Provision for suits against a state is sometimes made by the state constitution [92] or statutes,[93] but in the absence of such consent a state cannot be sued in its own courts,[94] and making the attorney general a party will not confer jurisdiction to decree a sale of state lands.[95] Even where the state itself institutes the suit, the defendant cannot be allowed affirmative relief.[96] Not every suit against a state officer is a suit against the state itself.[97] A suit against a state officer to restrain or direct his action in a matter intrusted to his official discretion and involving the pecuniary interests of the state is a suit against the state;[98] but where such a suit involves neither official discretion nor the pecuniary interests of the state, nor the violation of any positive statute indicative of the state's public policy, it is not such a suit against the state as cannot be maintained in the Federal courts [99] and such a suit may be maintained even where the pecuniary interest of the state is involved, if the act of the officer is merely ministerial.[1] A state's constitutional exemption is not destroyed by a constitutional provision that all corporations shall be subject to suit,[2] nor can a state agency, when sued in a matter involving the interests of the state, waive the state's exemption from suit.[3] The interstate commerce clause cannot be invoked in a suit against a state where, in order to pass upon the questions so raised, the court must proceed upon the theory that it had jurisdiction of the whole controversy.[4] Conditions attached to the consent to be sued [5] may render the ordinary rule of evidence inapplicable.[6] A suit against a state with its permission is not abated by the death of the plaintiff.[7] A judgment awarding the state affirmative relief in a suit against state officers should be in favor of the state.[8]

5. Plaintiff held not to have sustained suit under conditions as to proof imposed

Statutes of limitation do not run against the state in respect to public rights, unless the state is expressly included within the terms of the statute,[9] and the same prerogative of exemption extends to the state in its sovereign capacity as to all governmental matters,[10] but if the state becomes a partner with individuals or engages in business, it is divested of its sovereign character and is subject to such a statute.[11] The same rules extend to the municipal subdivisions of the state.[12] But limitations may be pleaded by the state,[13] and the running of limitations in favor of the state cannot be tolled by statute contrary to constitutional provisions.[14]

City of Buffalo v. State, 101 N. Y. S. 595. Under Rev. St. 1839 [1st Ed.] pt. 1, c. 9, tit. 5, art. 5, § 77, providing for auditing by state controller of claims on state lands for legal charges

§ 1. Enactment.[15]—Under most constitutions a law is valid without the signature of the governor unless vetoed by him within a certain number of days.[16] Under a constitutional provision that after a bill has passed both houses it shall be approved by the governor, a bill which has been signed by the governor after it has been passed by both houses but pending a motion to reconsider does not become a law.[17] When an act is changed by vote of the house from an amendment to a repeal, it must pass through all the stages of a new act.[18] Where a constitution provides for the establishment of courts by a two-thirds vote, an amendment to an act creating a court may be passed by a majority vote where it relates merely to procedure in such court.[19] A constitutional provision that no bill shall be passed unless it shall have been printed and placed in final form upon the desks of members at least three days prior to its final passage is sufficiently complied with where the bill as it originated in one house with all the amendments there made had been printed and placed on each member's desk for the requisite time.[20] A provision of the constitution requiring that bills shall be signed in the presence of the house and the fact of signing shall be entered on the journal is directory and a statement in the journal that the governor announced that he had signed a bill is a sufficient compliance therewith.[21] A constitutional requirment that amendments shall be printed before final vote does not apply to amendments recommended by a conference committee of the two houses.[22] Where the house refuses to concur in senate amendments, the subsequent adoption by the house of a conference report including certain of the amendments was a sufficient concurrence in these amendments.[23] A single branch of the legislature has no power of independent legislation.[24] Where the constitution provides that legislation is to go into effect ninety days after adjournment of the legislature, a statute in which it is provided that it is to take effect one year after passage takes effect one year after the expiration of the said ninety days.[25] Where an act relating to elections has been declared unconstitutional, mandamus will not lie to compel the printing of the act as provided in the last action thereof.[26]

Special sessions[27] are ordinarily authorized to consider such matters as are embraced in the proclamation by which the session was convoked.[28]

The journals.[29]—A legislative journal may be looked into to ascertain whether or not a law was properly enacted,[30] and courts will not hear evidence contrary to thereon and for payment of such claims out of state treasury, and Laws 1886, p. 710, c. 435, Laws 1894, p. 572, c. 317, providing that auditor shall be notified of assessments against state property for local purposes, a method was provided for legal consideration of claims against state lands for assessments for local improvements, so that such claims were not within exception of Const. art. 7, § 6, relative to claims not enforceable by any tribunal. 30. Where the constitution required that the ayes and nays be entered on the journal, a bill does not become a law where the journal does not show such a record. Palatine Ins. Co. v. Northern Pac. R. Co. [Mont.] 85 P. 1032. Where a statute is found incorporated in the Revised Statutes, it is prima facie a valid law, but the court may the record of the journal to sustain or defeat a statute,[31] but in Texas the journals cannot be looked to to invalidate an act properly signed and approved;[32] and in Tennessee a constitutional provision that bills shall be signed by the speakers in open session, which fact shall appear on the journal, is held to be directory only, and an act will not be declared void if the journal does not show the fact of such signing.[33] Where the journal shows the adoption by ayes and nays, the names of those voting being entered on the journal, of the report of a conference committee recommending amendments to the original bill and the adoption of the report but not recommending the passage of the act, this is a sufficient compliance with the constitution providing for an aye and nay vote on the final passage of an act and that amendments of the other house and conference reports must be adopted by aye and nay votes recorded on the journal.[34] An entry in the journal of the ayes only upon the passage of a measure is a sufficient compliance with the constitution requiring an entry of the ayes and nays for it shows that no nays were cast.[35] The silence of the journal upon acts necessary for the final passage of a bill does not conclusively show they were omitted and the courts will resolve all doubts in favor of the bill,[36] and doubtful and contradictory entries in a journal will not defeat a bill properly enrolled.[37]

Submission to popular vote[38] is not ordinarily deemed an unlawful delegation of legislative power.[39]

Presumptions and evidence as to passage.[40]—The legislative journal is conclusive as to the proper passage of an act,[41] but the presumption in favor of an enrolled bill as found on file in the secretary of state's office having the proper signatures is not overthrown by the silence of the legislative journals on that matter.[42] A compilation of statutes not having been authenticated or adopted by the legislature according to law does not form prima facie evidence of the due passage of statutes therein contained.[43] One questioning the validity of a law on the ground of non-compliance with statutory requirements must present proper evidence, and a stipulation of counsel agreeing that the mandates of the constitution were ignored in the passage of an act is not competent evidence.[44] Courts will not inquire into motives which prompted the official acts of the legislature.[45]

Publication.[46]—A mere affidavit of publication which does not set out the contents of the notice is insufficient under a constitution requiring a publication of the substance of the law and that an affidavit that notice has been given shall be exhibited to each house.[47]

§ 2. Special or local laws. In general.[48]—A statute which relates to persons or things as a class is a general law while a statute which relates to particular persons or things of a class is a special law.[49] Many state constitutions forbid the enactment of special legislation.[50] A special law valid under the existing constitution is not repealed by a constitution later adopted prohibiting special legislation.[51] The constitutional restriction applies to direct legislation, not to the incidental operation of statutes.[52] A validating act which appears to apply to special cases is unconstitutional.[53] A law which must be general to be constitutional cannot be given an unequal operation by an amendment.[54] A constitutional provision against the enactment of special laws for the granting of corporate powers applies to municipalities as well as to private corporations.[55] Some state constitutions require that notice of intention to introduce special legislation be published.[55a] In Arkansas it is held that the constitutional provision that no special legislation shall be enacted where a general law can be made applicable is merely cautionary to the legislature and is not enforceable by the courts.[56]

Classification.[57]—A law which applies to a particular class of persons or corporations, and operates generally and uniformly throughout the state, is not void as special legislation.[58] The rules for legitimate classification for general legislation are: (a) The classification must be based on substantial distinctions making one class really different from another;[59] (b) the classification must be germane to the purposes of the law;[60] (c) must not be based on existing circumstances only;[61] (d) must apply equally to members of the class;[62] (e) the character of the class must be so different from other situations as to reasonably suggest the necessity or propriety, having regard for the public good, of substantially different legislative treatment therefor from that required for such others.[63] The application of the principle of classification rests with the legislature and is not subject to judicial review.[64]

Based on population.[65]—The classification of cities by population for many purposes is natural and proper for a system adapted to a small town might not be suitable for a large one.[66] Classes may also be subdivided.[67] There may be but one city in a class if the classification is not colorable and the real purpose is not to limit its application to a single community.[68] If an act has a special provision for any city later coming within the classification, it may fall within the constitutional prohibition and be void.[69] A classificaton of cities by population in a single county is void.[70]

Other classifications.[71]—Some other grounds of classification of cities have been sustained. Thus cities on or near the ocean are capable of a general classification so that acts referring to them alone are not unconstitutional.[72] Where owing to the peculiar situation and conditions of commerce a city is in a class by itself, special legislation for such city is not void under a provision of the constitution.[73] Building and loan associations have a distinctive character warranting their being classed by themselves.[74]

Local option laws[75] are generally held not to be void as granting any special privileges.[76]

County and township affairs.[77]—Some constitutions prohibit special legislation regulating county or township affairs but particular legislation regulating municipal bond issues may still be valid,[78] and an act providing for the change of county seats and making provisions for all the counties according to their needs is not special.[79]

Municipalities.[80]—Some constitutions prohibit special legislation regulating the internal affairs of cities.[81]

68. Parker-Washington Co. v. Kansas City [Kan.] 85 P. 781; Kirch v. Louisville, 30 Ky. L. R. 1356, 101 S. W. 373. An act empowering cities of the first class to construct sewers, there being but one city in that class and that city being referred to by name, was sustained in Miller v. Louisville, 30 Ky. L. R. 664, 99 S. W. 284. If legislation is general in form and substance, it is not within the constitutional prohibition because it can apply only at the present to two cities and was passed for them. In re City of Pittsburg [Pa.] 66 A. 348.

69. P. L. 1892, p. 119; Gen. St. p. 500, § 202, providing for the government of cities of a certain class, but which is not effective in the event of cities of a smaller class subsequently coming within the first class, is special legislation and unconstitutional. Seymour v. Orange [N. J. Err. & App.] 65 A. 1033. An act providing for the government of cities of the second class but not to take effect as to any city coming into the class under the enumerations of 1905, until 1908, is not special city legislation which is required by Const. art. 12, § 2, to be accepted by mayors of the cities affected. Koster v. Coyne, 184 N. Y. 494, 77 N. E. 983.

70. Judges in cities of a certain size lying within a single township to be paid a salary. State v. Messerly, 198 Mo. 351, 95 S. W. 913.

71. See 6 C. L. 1528.

72. An act providing for the laying out of a street along the beach front. Johnson v. Ocean City [N. J. Law] 64 A. 987; Seaside Realty & Imp. Co. v. Atlantic City [N. J. Law] 64 A. 1081.

73. An act incorporating a grain elevator for the city of Superior. Globe El. Co. v. Andrew, 144 F. 871.

74. Nebraska Cent. Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Board of Equalization [Neb.] 111 N. W. 147.

76. Laws Or. 1905, pp. 41, 47, c. 2. State v. Richardson [Or.] 85 P. 225. Laws Or. 1905, pp. 41, 47, c. 2, § 10, requiring the county court in case a majority of the votes cast at any election be in favor of prohibition to declare such a result and make an order prohibiting the sale of liquor, does not contravene Const. art. 4, § 23, subd. 3, prohibiting the passage of special laws regulating the practice in courts of justice. Id.

77. See 6 C. L. 1529. Gen. Laws 29th Leg. p. 91, c. 64, regulating the storage of liquors in local option districts relates to every portion of the state which may adopt local option and is not void as a local act. Ex parte Massey [Tex. Cr. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 703, 92 S. W. 1083.

78. An act providing that boards of park commissioners may issue bonds for improvement purposes is not a special or local law regulating county and township affairs so as to be unconstitutional. Kucera v. West Chicago Park Com'rs, 221 Ill. 488, 77 N. E. 912.

79. Ex parte Owens [Ala.] 42 So. 676.

80. See 6 C. L. 1529.

81. An act conferring powers on cities located on or near the ocean to lay out parks is not contrary to this provision. Seaside Realty & Imp. Co. v. Atlantic City [N. J. Law] 64 A. 1081. An act by the legislature ratifying and confirming a contract between a city and a street railroad as to extension of tracks is a valid grant of power to the city authorities rather than a grant of a location prohibited by the constitution. Kuhn v. Knight, 101 N. Y. S. 1. Rev. Laws 1905, c. 101, p. 137, authorizing certain cities to issue bonds not special. City of Belleville v. Wells [Kan.] 88 P. 47.

Taxation.[82]—Legislatures may make classifications for the purpose of levying taxes,[83] but the operation of tax laws must be uniform within the class.[84]

Courts.[85]—Acts creating courts are usually upheld as general.[86]

Special privileges.[87]—Special privileges are void and will be presumed not to be intended.[88]

Police power.[89]—All matters which in any peculiar way affect the public health, comfort, or safety, may be the subject of special regulations.[90]

§ 3. Subjects and titles. In general.[91]—It is generally provided by state constitutions that a law shall embrace but one subject which must be expressed in its title.[92] The purpose of this provision is to prevent surreptitious legislation and to

82. See 4 C. L. 1525.

83. Pub. Acts 1883, p. 31, No. 39, as amended, providing for the incorporation and taxation of certain water companies, is not special legislation although other companies are incorporated not subject to such tax. Attorney General v. Arnott, 145 Mich. 416, 108 N. W. 646. Legislature may single out and make classifications for the purpose of levying occupation taxes. Producers' Oil Co. v. Stephens [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 157. A tax upon railroad and canal property is not void under the constitution as being a special law. Central R. Co. v. State Board of Assessors [N. J. Law] 65 A. 244. The taxation of railroads is not special. Georgia R. & Banking Co. v. Wright, 125 Ga. 589, 54 S. E. 52.

84. Rev. St. 1906, §§ 1343—1 to 1343—4 inclusive, and Rev. St. 1906, §§ 1343a, 1343b, relating to taxation, are general in their nature but void under the constitution as not uniform in operation. State v. Lewis, 74 Ohio St. 403, 78 N. E. 523.

85. See 6 C. L. 1530.

86. Kennedy v. Meara [Ga.] 56 S. E. 243. Creating juvenile courts in certain classes of cities is not special legislation. Mill v. Brown [Utah] 88 P. 609. Creation of different courts for different localities is not special legislation. Dahlsten v. Anderson, 99 Minn. 340, 109 N. W. 697. Acts 1901, p. 120, dividing the twenty-fifth judicial district into two divisions providing for judges, their salaries, and a change of venue, is not special. Coffey v. Carthage [Mo.] 98 S. W. 562. Revised Statutes, § 6454, giving the probate court in certain counties concurrent jurisdiction with the common pleas in all misdemeanors and proceedings to prevent crime, is not unconstitutional for lack of uniform operation. Oberer v. State, 8 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 93.

92. The matter of title and subject discussed. Wiemer v. Louisville Sinking Fund Com'rs, 30 Ky. L. R. 523, 99 S. W. 242.

Held to violate: The title to Laws 1901, p. 80, an act "creating a state board of health, defining its dutles, providing compensation and for the enforcement of regulations," does not embrace provisions in the body of the act creating county boards of health. Yegen v. Yellowstone County Com'rs [Mont.] 85 P. 740. Sess. Laws 1903, p. 290, c. 151, entitled "An act in relation to fees of state and county officers, etc.," which in fact imposes an ad valorem tax under the guise of a fee, is void. State v. Case, 39 Wash. 177, 81 P. 554. A provision for the filing of a mechanic's lien is in no way germane to the subject of an act creating a municipal corporation. Tommasi v. Bolger, 100 N. Y. S. 367. An act entitled to amend the municipal court act with reference to rules of court and appeals does not embrace a provision in the act itself for the removal of actions. Bonagur v. Orlandi, 101 N. Y. S. 115. The title "'An act relating to foreign corporations doing business in the State of Idaho" does not in any way suggest the subject and sole purpose of the act which was to relieve foreign corporations from the penalties incurred by the transaction of business in violation of constitution and statute. Katz v. Herrick [Idaho] 86 P. 873. The title "An act for the protection of builders" does not express the purpose of the act, which makes it a felony for one contracting to supply labor and materials to fraudulently collect money therefor on the ground that they have been paid for. Laws 1889-90, p. 128. State v. Clark [Wash.] 86 P. 1067. An act entitled "to provide for the salaries of the mayors of the state" actually provided for salaries of certain mayors only. Griffin v. Drennen [Ala.] 40 So. 1016. The title, an act to incorporate a certain railroad company is not sufficiently broad to cover a grant of land to such company by the legislature. Wade v. Atlantic Lumber Co. [Fla.] 41 So. 72. Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, p. 1075, c. 63, § 63, entitled "an act to provide fees for certain clerks" which in fact places a tax upon certain estates, is void. Cook County v. Fairbank, 222 Ill. 578, 78 N. E. 895. An act entitled "for the punishment of crimes against children" which creates a felony not before existing is void under the constitution. Milne v. People, 224 Ill. 125, 79 N. E. 631. An act entitled "to prohibit gambling on races" may not include wagers of every description. State v. Hayes [Tenn.] 93 S. W. 98. Revenue laws. Licenses imposed on occupations in addition to ad valorem taxes and a system of licenses on personal property are not sufficiently germane to be included in a statute whose title was expressly limited to one. Wiemer v. Louisville Sinking Fund Com'rs, 30 Ky. L. R. 523, 99 S. W. 242. Condemnation of property does not include changing the jurisdiction of courts. Franklin Turnpike Co. v. Long Distance Tel. & T. Co. [Tenn.] 99 S. W. 373. An amendment to a dispensary act did not in its title give notice that certain restrictions were to be removed. Croxton v. Truesdel [S. C.] 56 S. E. 45. Title did not show that right of appeal was taken away. Commonwealth v. Luckey, 31 Pa. Super. Ct. 441. An act entitled to restrict the combination of certain railroads provided as penalty a method of forfeiture of franchise different from the general law and such penalty was void for it was such a radical change and so important it should have been given in the title. State v. Cumberland & P. R. Co. [Md.] 66 A. 458. Duties imposed upon board of public works and also creating a separate governmental agency. Christmas v. Warfield [Md.] 66 A. 491.

Held Not to Violate. Validating acts: An act entitled to ratify and to confirm the constitution of the Seneca Nation of Indians which act does nothing more is constitutional. Jimeson v. Lehley, 101 N. Y. S. 215. An act entitled "an act to ratify certain contracts between the city of Buffalo and the B. Ry. Co., the C. St. Ry. Co. of Buffalo, and the W. S. St. Ry. Co., and carry the same into full force and effect, does not violate the constitutional provision that act contain one subject to be embraced in title. Smith v. Buffalo, 61 Misc. 244, 100 N. Y. S. 922. P. L. 1906, p. 685, validating certain acts of bridge construction, and contract was held to have but a single object, and between the body of the act and the title there existed no discrepancy. Bloomfield v. Middlesex County Chosen Freeholders [N. J. Law] 65 A. 890.

Property rights: Negotiable instruments law. Burden of proof. Gilley v. Harrell [Tenn.] 101 S. W. 424. Where an act provides for the descent of homestead and forbids its alienation by devise, there is but one subject for it all deals with the protection of the widow's interest. Saxon v. Rawls [Fla.] 41 So. 594. Act Mar. 21, 1904. An act to amend and re-enact an act entitled "An act concerning conveyances," which makes it unlawful for a clerk to record any deed unless it specifies the next immediate source of the grantor's title. McPherson v. Gordon, 29 Ky. L. R. 826, 1073, 96 S. W. 791.

Governmental and judicial: Setting out the boundaries of a city. Murphy v. Salem [Or.] 87 P. 532. Improvement of highways. Fout v. Frederick County Com'rs [Md.] 66 A. 487. An act defining powers of school trustees. Courtner v. Etheredge [Ala.] 43 So. 368. An act providing for free public schools. Felder v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 310, 97 S. W. 701. Collection and disbursement of school funds. State v. True [Tenn.] 95 S. W. 1028. Laws 1879, p. 234, an act to provide a general election law, the procedure relative to contested elections and the filling of vacancies in office. Dodson v. Bowlby [Neb.] 110 N. W. 698. The title "An act regulating state lands and the product of the same and to repeal certain acts" sufficiently complies with the statute that an act shall comprise but one subject which shall be expressed in the title. State v. Shevlin-Carpenter Co., 99 Minn. 158, 108 N. W. 935. Laws of 1905, p. 275, c. 163, entitled an act to create a state capitol commission for erecting a state capitol, properly included the providing of funds, for it was a natural, reasonable, and appropriate method of accomplishing the purpose of the act to erect a state capitol. Davenport v. Elrod [S. D.] 107 N. W. 833. Laws 1905, p. 68, c. 140, incorporating a certain class of cities and prescribing and regulating their powers and duties, is not void because it enacts that the treasurer of the county in which the only city of that class is located shall be ex officio treasurer of the city, for that is a detail connected with the subject expressed in the title. Cathers v. Hennings [Neb.] 107 N. W. 586. Act May 4, 1895. An act to provide for a law department for the city of Detroit. Tarsney v. Board of Education of Detroit [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 1021, 110 N. W. 1093. Act relating to attorney's liens. O'Connor v. St. Louis Transit Co., 198 Mo. 622, 97 S. W. 150. Acts 1901, p. 120, entitled an act in relation to the twenty-fifth judicial circuit dividing the court, providing judges and fixing salaries, properly contains a provision for change of venue. Coffey v. Carthage [Mo.] 98 S. W. 562. The grant of jurisdiction to police justices over violations of city ordinances and the regulation of procedure is not foreign to the object of an act providing for the appointment of police justices. Sharp v. Sweeney [N. J. Law] 65 A. 859. An act providing for temporary injunctions in such diverse matters as taxation, nuisances, and improvident public contracts, is not void as multifarious. Ch. 334, p. 550, Sess. Laws 1905. State v. Tibbits [Kan.] 85 P. 526.

Criminal: Describing the crime of stealing fowl and fixing the punishment. Diamond v. Comm., 30 Ky. L. R. 655, 99 S. W. 232. The title "An act to provide punishment for safe crackers" sufficiently expresses the subject of the act which provides that any person convicted of using an explosive about a safe, etc., shall be guilty of a larceny. State v. O'Day, 74 S. C. 448, 54 S. E. 607. Laws 1889, c. 20, p. 66. An act providing the mode of inflicting the punishment of death, the manner in which the same shall be carried into effect, and declaring any violations of the act to be a misdemeanor. State v. Pioneer Press Co. [Minn.] 110 N. W. 867.

Police regulations: An act regulating freight rates and providing for damages for loss or injury to goods relates to but one subject. Aycock-Little Co. v. Southern R. Co. [S. C.] 57 S. E. 27. Railroads required to maintain water closets in stations. Mis-fairly advise the people and legislature of the real nature of the legislation.[93] The courts have generally construed this provision liberally,[94] and in Ohio it is held to be directory and not mandatory and a court will not sit to inquire whether the provision has been complied with.[95] The title need not serve as an index to the souri, etc., R. Co. v. State [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 21, 97 S. W. 720. An act to prohibit traffic in nontransferable tickets, etc. Samuelson v. State [Tenn.] 95 S. W. 1012. Laws 1899, c. 17, § 13, p. 91 (148a 14, Comp. St. 1905). Listing of shares of loan associations. Nebraska Cent. Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Board of Equalization [Neb.] 111 N. W. 147. 21 St. at Large, p. 793, requiring numbers put upon cotton bales to be the same as put on bills and books, has a proper title. Parks v. Laurens Cotton Mills [S. C.] 56 S. E. 234. An act providing for the means to be used in paying laborers is broad enough to include the times at which they must be paid. Shortall v. Puget Sound Bridge & Dredging Co. [Wash.] 88 P. 212. An act creating the office of state inspector of coal mines providing for the proper ventilation of mines and appropriating money. Koppala v. State [Wyo.] 89 P. 576. Laws 1905, ch. 344, p. 598, "An act for the preservation, propagation, protection, taking, use and transportation of game, fish, and certain harmless birds and animals," embraces only one subject expressed in the title. State v. Tower Lumber Co. [Minn.] 110 N. W. 254. The title "Laws 1901, p. 198, c. 87, 'An act to provide for the organization and government of irrigation districts,'" is sufficiently comprehensive to include provisions for construction of ditches, condemnation of canals, issuance of bonds, and approval of proceedings by the court. Anderson v. Grand Valley Irr. Dist. [Colo.] 85 P. 313. "To regulate the catching and encourage the propagation of fish" includes provision against certain devices. Commonwealth v. Kenney, 32 Pa. Super. Ct. 544. "An act to provide against adulteration of food" embraces a provision as to the sale of adulterated foods. Commonwealth v. Arow, 32 Pa. Super. Ct. 1. Title "Act to prohibit railroad companies from permitting Johnson grass from going to seed on their right of way and fixing a penalty" sustains a provision for recovery of damages by persons injured. Doeppenschmidt v. International, etc., R. Co. [Tex.] 101 S. W. 1080.

Intoxicating liquors: Licensing liquor traffic. Brown-Foreman Co. v. Com., 30 Ky. L. R. 793, 101 S. W. 321. Local option law. Laws 1905, pp. 41, 47, c. 2. State v. Richardson [Or.] 85 P. 225. Title "an act to prohibit the sale of liquor on Sunday" is broad enough to include a penalty for keeping open on Sunday. Beauvoir Club v. State [Ala.] 42 So. 1040. The fact that an act contains two provisions one against the manufacture and the other against the disposition of liquor does not invalidate it as having two subjects. Chaney v. State [Ala.] 41 So. 172. An act relating to intoxicating liquors is broad enough to cover provisions for injunctions against its sale. State v. Thomas [Kan.] 86 P. 499. Acts 1895, p. 248, c. 127, entitled "an act to better regulate and restrain the sale of intoxicating liquors and providing for remonstrance against sale of same," is broad enough to include an amendment providing for blanket remonstrances against any license. Cain v. Allen [Ind.] 79 N. E. 201. An act to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors, etc., providing that the clerk of the district court shall not issue licenses, etc., the clerk being the proper officer of the law to issue licenses. Clark v. Tower [Md.] 65 A. 3. An act providing for the appointment of excise commissioners is within the purpose stated in the following title, "An act to regulate the sale of spirituous, vinous, malt, and brewed liquors, etc." Bumsted v. Henry [N. J. Law] 64 A. 475. An act entitled "to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors" is broad enough to cover a provision for the appointment of assistants to the attorney general to prosecute offenses against the statute. State v. Brooks [Kan.] 85 P. 1013.

Taxation: Taxation of railroads is a sufficient title. State v. Missouri, etc., R. Co. [Tex.] 100 S. W. 146. An act providing for a license fee is a sufficient title. Glover v. State, 126 Ga. 594, 55 S. E. 592. An act to provide for the levying and collection of local tax by counties for educational purposes. Georgia R. & Banking Co. v. Hutchinson, 125 Ga. 762, 54 S. E. 725. The title to an act to provide for the incorporation of certain organizations to supply water is sufficient to include a provision for the taxation of such corporations. Attorney General v. Arnott, 145 Mich. 416, 108 N. W. 646. Act March 15, 1906, relating to revenue and taxation containing a provision that no mortgage, etc., shall be received for record unless it contains the postoffice address of the party owning the evidence of indebtedness, also a provision that unless an assignment of security is of record the original holder is liable for taxes. Shrader v. Semonin, 29 Ky. L. R. 1089, 96 S. W. 904. Pub. Acts 1893, p. 354, No. 206, entitled an act to provide for the levy and collection of taxes and for the sale and conveyance of lands for taxes and for the inspection and disposition of lands bid off to the state and not redeemed or purchased, is not objectionable as containing a plurality of subjects. Reed v. Auditor General [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 711, 109 N. W. 275.

The charter of a city containing many different provisions may be accepted as a whole by the legislature after its approval by the people under the California constitution. In re Phahler [Cal.] 88 P. 270.

93. State v. German Sav. Bank, 103 Md. 196, 63 A. 481. An act relating to the payment of taxes by corporations was stated in its title to follow section 81a and be designated as section 81b. There was no section 81a and section 81 referred to a different subject. This title was so misleading as to render the act void. City of Baltimore v. Flack [Md.] 64 A. 702.

94. Fout v. Frederick County Com'rs [Md.] 66 A. 487; Aycock-Little v. Southern R. Co. [S. C.] 57 S. E. 27.

various provisions of the act.[96] It is sufficient if the title clearly expresses the general purpose of the law, to which all of its provisions are germane and incidental,[97] and it need not express the means or methods of carrying it into effect,[98] nor is it necessary in a statute covering a wide range of important subjects that the title should give notice to all parties whose interests may be affected.[99] An ungrammatical title is valid if its fair intent is an index of the contents of the act.[1] To render an act void something repugnant to the title must be contained therein.[2] A penalty clause may be embraced in an act without being designated in the title.[3] The title to an act retroactive in effect must necessarily be sufficient to give notice of its contents.[4] Where the title to an act does not sufficiently indicate the purpose of the act, such title becomes immaterial upon the adoption of the act into the code,[5] and, where an act embodying more than one subject is later embodied in the Code,[5] and becomes part of the law of the state, the contents of the original act are immaterial.[6] An act which does not refer in its title to a prior act but seeks to repeal such act,[7] or amend it, is void.[8] The test of the constitutionality of the title of a supplementary statute is whether or not it is germane to the subject of the original act.[9] The title of an amendatory act is sufficient if it recites the title or substance of the original act provided the amendment is germane and is embraced within the title of the original act.[10]

Partial invalidity.[11]—An entire act is not necessarily invalid because the title fails to give notice of some particular matter contained therein,[12] but so much as is expressed in the title may be valid,[13] while the remainder, if it can be separated without doing violence to the intention of the legislature, is rendered inoperative.[14] If the body of the act, however, is broader than the title of the act, it is unconstitutional.[15]

§ 4. Amendments and revisions. Amendments[16] must be germane to the subject of the original act.[17] Statutes may be amended by implication,[18] but the mere fact that some of the provisions of a statute are contained in a new act does not constitute the new act an amendment.[19] An independent act inconsistent with a provision of a prior act is not an amendment thereof but repeals the same by implication.[20] A statute seeking to amend a repealed statute is inoperative.[21] Some constitutions require that no act shall be amended unless the act as amended is published.[22] In such a case the substance only need be given.[23] It is not necessary for an amendatory act to specifically declare that the original act is hereby amended if the purpose to amend is made manifest by the fact that the portions intended to be affected are reenacted as amended.[24]

Reference to act amended.[25]—It is generally provided that an act cannot be amended by reference to its title only.[26] Some constitutions require that the act amended be set out in the amending statute,[27] in which case the constitutional requirement is held to be mandatory,[28] and others require that the act amended merely be described so that the purpose of the amending act is clear.[29] In Iowa the title to an amendment stating it to be an amendment of a certain section of the Code is sufficient.[30] An act independent in itself which impliedly affects prior acts is not an amending act required to state the act so amended.[31] Where the constitution provides that no act shall be amended, revised, or extended by reference to its title only, an act declaring certain prior acts to be in full force and effect is not an amendment but merely a recognition of the laws of the land and of their continued operation.[32]

Effect.[33]—An act and its amendments must be read together and viewed as one act,[34] and the amendment operates as to subsequent matters as though it had formed a part of the original statute.[35] An amendment should be so construed as to render it effective if possible.[36]

Identification.[37]—In amending an act and its amendments these amendments need not be referred to by the new amending act under a provision requiring amendatory acts to recite the title or substance of the act amended.[38]

construed if reasonably possible so as to render them valid,[48] and when the terms of a statute are ambiguous, they are to be given that construction which tends to effectuate the general purpose of their enactment.[49] Wherever power is granted by statute, everything necessary to make it effectual is supplied by the common law and by implication.[50] If statutes are susceptible of more than one construction, the court will adopt the meaning consonant with constitutionality,[51] and will declare an act unconstitutional only in the clearest case.[52] Any doubt as to the meaning of a statute is to be resolved in favor of the public.[53]

Intention to be reached.[54]—The fundamental rule in the construction of statutes is to ascertain the intention of the law makers,[55] Courts will not follow the letter of a statute when it leads away from the true intent and purpose of the legislature,[56] and every technical rule as to the construction or force of particular terms must yield to the clear expression of the paramount will of the legislative body.[57] Statutes are not to be overthrown on account of errors or omissions therein if the intention is clear,[58] nor will a statute be held of no effect because of indefiniteness unless it is impossible to determine the intent and purpose of the legislature.[59]

Whole act to be considered.[60]—The intention of the legislature is to be gathered from the entire body of the statute having in mind the object to be attained,[61] but where there is an irreconcilable conflict between different parts of the same act, the last in order of arrangement will control.[62] Rules of grammar and literal interpretation must yield to the plain intention of the legislature gathered from all the parts of the act.[63]

All language to be effectuated.[64]

Avoiding hardship or absurdity.[65]—When the meaning of a statute is doubtful, the consequences may be considered in its construction,[66] and a literal interpretation will not be given to words of an act if it would lead to absurdity or injustice and if a reasonable meaning can be obtained by the aid of any rule for judicial construction.[67] A statute is not, however, to be extended beyond its plain interpretation and construction to prevent injustice.[68]

Presumption of legislative knowledge of the law.[69]—The legislature is presumed to know the law and to intend to act within it,[70] but this presumption is controlled by the plain meaning of the language used.[71] original act is embodied in the Code without its title, such title cannot be used to construe the act.[76] In the United States circuit court it has been held that the title of an act is merely a formal part and cannot be so read into the act as to supply necessary and substantial parts thereof.[77]

Marginal notes.[78]

Legislative history.[79]—The history of legislation in its various stages may be considered in the interpretation of ambiguous statutes.[80] The intent of a Federal statute may be gathered from congressional debate of which the court can take judicial notice.[81]

Contemporaneous interpretation.[82]

Official construction.[83]—The uniform construction of a doubtful statute by officers charged with its execution should not be disregarded,[84] but such construction is not binding on the courts,[85] and will only be followed in those cases where the language of the statute is dubious,[86] and will not be adopted if plainly erroneous.[87]

Surrounding conditions.[88]—In construing a dubious statute the court will take judicial notice of the reasons for its passage and of surrounding conditions,[89] and of the circumstances under which the legislature must have known a statute would operate.[90]

Prior acts[91] on the same subject may be considered to ascertain legislative intent.[92] Acts of congress passed prior to a state law may properly be looked to to discover the meaning intended by the legislature in the use of words and phrases.[93]

Original act.[94]

Re-enactment statutes.[95]—Where a statute has been construed by the courts and the legislature re-enacts the same, it is presumed that the legislature adopts such construction,[96] but upon the passage of a new law, the courts are not bound by the construction of the former law.[97] Where a statute specially incorporating a society has been repealed, it is not re-enacted by an act making an appropriation for the benefit of such society. The principle that where a statute is incorporated in another the effect is the same as if the provisions of the former were re-enacted in the latter for all purposes of the latter statute has no application.[98]

Statutes adopted from other states[99] are presumed to have been enacted with reference to the previous construction there given them.[1] But the construction of the state from which the law was adopted will not be followed if it is a general law, substantially the same in several states, and construed differently by their courts, when the construction placed upon it by the court of the state from which it was adopted is opposed to the weight of authority or against the general policy of the laws of the adopting state.[2] A decision handed down since the adoption of a statute is not binding on the courts of the adopting state.[3] Where a statute of one state is similar to that of another, the construction given by the courts of the latter state will have great weight in the absence of different construction by the courts of the former state.[4]

State statutes in Federal courts.[5]—A Federal court should follow the construction of a state court in its interpretation of a legislative act.[6] But where rights have accrued before any interpretation by state courts, the Federal courts in adjudicating such rights are entitled to their own construction of state statutes.[7]

Enforcement.[8]

Laws in pari materia.[9]—Acts in pari materia should be construed together[10] although found in different sections,[11] and a subsequent statute upon the same subject-matter as a prior one may be considered to aid in the interpretation of such former statute.[12]

(§ 5) D. Words, punctuation, and grammar. Words.[16]—The words of a statute are to be construed in their popular, natural, and ordinary sense, unless upon their face it appears that they were not intended to bear that construction,[17] but the precise meaning will yield to the obvious purpose of the act.[18] A word or phrase repeated in a statute will bear the same meaning throughout, unless a different intention appears.[19] Where a general term is used in an act and also a special term, the latter does not limit and define the former, when the special term alone fully expresses the idea,[20] but where specific words are followed by general terms, the latter are to be construed as applicable to things of like character to those specified.[21]

Punctuation.[22]

Grammar.[23]—Grammatical rules may be applied in construction.[24] The grammatical errors will not defeat the operation of a statute.[25]

The proviso.[27]—A proviso is to be strictly construed and confined to what precedes it,[28] but the inference from the position of a proviso cannot overrule its plain intent.[29]

(§ 5) F. Mandatory or directory acts.[30]—Statutes mandatory in form are not necessarily so in effect.[31] Where a provision of a statute relates to some immaterial matter, where compliance is a matter of convenience rather than substance or where the directions of a statute are given with a view to the proper, orderly, and prompt conduct of business merely, the provision may generally be regarded as directory.[32] A mandatory act which does not provide for the raising of money for its execution necessarily carries with it the implied authority to incur the necessary expense.[33] An act directory in form is not invalid in so far as it relates to the future but it cannot decide what the law is or has been, for this is the province of the court.[34]

(§ 5) G. Strict or liberal constructions. Statutes changing the common law.[35] Statutes are not to be construed as changing the common law further than they by their terms expressly declare.[36] By statute in Utah, acts in derogation of the common law are to be liberally construed.[37]

Penal statutes.[38]—A penal statute should receive a strict construction and no act should be held a violation which does not fall within the fair import of its language,[39] but should still be construed reasonably in aid of the purposes of the act,[40] and not so strictly as to defeat the intention of the legislature.[41] Where a penalty is fixed to a remedial statute, the penalty is to be strictly construed while the remedial provisions are to be liberally construed.[42]

39. Under an act penalizing loaning money on chattel mortgage notes in which the sum is stated to be greater than that actually loaned, a bill of sale given to secure a loan will not be construed as a mortgage. Morin v. Newbury [Conn.] 65 A. 156. A chattel mortgage statute providing for forfeiture is in the nature of a penal statute and will be strictly construed, and in the following case it was held that the delivery of chattels by a mortgagor to the mortgagee is not a taking by the mortgagee as required by statute. Hammel v. Cairnes [Wis.] 107 N. W. 1089. Claims against municipalities. State v. Wallace [Me.] 66 A. 476.

40. The word "record" in a statute penalizing the destruction of records is not to be confined to its common-law meaning, but being a word in common use is to be accepted more liberally when such purpose is apparent. McInerney v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 143 F. 729. The word corporation in an act will not be construed to include joint stock companies. Commonwealth v. Adams Exp. Co., 29 Ky. L. R. 1280, 97 S. W. 386. Various other strict constructions.[43]—A delegation of power primarily vested in the legislature is to be strictly construed,[44] and so with statutes imposing restrictions upon the ordinary occupations of the people,[45] or imposing special burdens on the taxpayer.[46] An act in derogation of the rights and enjoyment of property must be strictly construed.[47]

Remedial statutes.[48]—A remedial clause in a statute calls for a liberal construction.[49] Where a statute imposes a duty where none existed before, the presumption is that the remedy provided for the breach of the duty is exclusive.[50]

Act permitting evidence of any number of violations of the liquor law upon trial under indictment for one offense does not apply to prosecution begun prior to its passage. Kittrell v. State [Miss.] 42 So. 609. Where an action was pending when Acts 1905, p. 757, c. 169, § 699, known as the public offense act, went into affect, the proceedings are not governed by that act. Stieler v. State [Ind.] 77 N. E. 1083. An employer's liability act which takes away the defence of contributory negligence will not be held to operate retroactively although within the letter of the law which provides that it apply to all actions thereafter brought which would include actions for injuries received prior to the enactment of the act, for such would render it unconstitutional. But the act creates a new right and a new obligation. Plummer v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 152 F. 206. A statute is not retrospective because a part of the requisites for its operation is drawn from a time antecedent to its passing. McDougald v. New York Life Ins. Co. [C. C. A.] 146 F. 674. The treaty with Cuba provided that it should go into effect the tenth day after the exchange of ratifications, but the court refused to construe the treaty retrospectively even though the ratifications had been exchanged some time before the statute was enacted. United States v. American Sugar Refining Co., 202 U. S. 563, 50 Law. Ed. 1149.

A tax law passed in a certain year is not retrospective so as to affect taxation for that year but is presumed to be passed in advance to affect the coming year. Georgia R. & Banking Co. v. Hutchinson, 125 Ga. 762, 54 S. E. 725. Acts Mar. 6, 1903, requiring plaintiff to refund taxes, etc., in a suit to set aside a tax deed, does not apply to tax deeds or sales of lands for taxes or to taxes paid prior to the act. spectively which relate merely to procedure [63] or operate to extend remedies for existing rights.[64]

Curative acts.[65]—A curative act will be given retrospective effect if it is intended to give effect to past acts which are ineffective because of neglect to comply with some legal requirement.[66]

§ 7. Repeal. A. In general.[67]—An unconstitutional act cannot repeal a prior act expressly or by implication.[68] A statute is not repealed by nonenforcement.[69] When a statute is amended by an act which after repeating the entire original act adds to it new provisions not in conflict and concludes with a repeal of all conflicting acts, the original act is not repealed but remains in force from the time of its original enactment.[70] Where a statute in force in that part of a state which is later ceded to the United States is after the cession repealed such repeal has no effect in the ceded territory.[71]

Effect on vested rights.[72]—Where a board of commissioners appointed by statute to equalize taxation fully performed their duties and made their determination, an act repealing the statute under which they were appointed does not affect an action to collect taxes as determined,[73] but a repeal of a right to levy taxes for revenue only destroyed all right to collect the same although due before the repeal took effect.[74] for sale of estates upon consent of all having vested rights, although there are contingent interests, is valid. Anderson v. Wilkins, 142 N. C. 154, 55 S. E. 272. A statute general in form dealing with rules of evidence in civil cases is applicable to all future cases whether the trial was pending or not at the time of its passage. St. 1905, p. 208, v. 288, report of the judge of the land court to be prima evidence. Woodvine v. Dean [Mass.] 79 N. E. 882.

Not retrospective: An amendment providing that shorthand notes of a trial may go on the record upon appeal is not retroactive so as to make such shorthand notes part of the record when filed prior to such amendment instead of the writing as previously required. Manaca v. Ionia Circuit Judge [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 919, 110 N. W. 75. Laws 1905, p. 185, c. 92, providing that particulars of the insufficiency of evidence need not be stated on motion for a new trial, does not apply to a bill of exceptions made prior to its enactment Martin v. Effect on penalties.[75]—The repeal of a penal statute at common law extinguished all penalties for offenses against its provisions,[76] but pending prosecutions are not affected by the repeal of statutes when executed by saving clauses.[77]

Effect on pending actions.[78]—The repeal of an act is a complete bar to further proceedings under it,[79] but pending proceedings may be excepted by a saving clause in the repealing act,[80] or by a general law that a repeal shall not affect any suit commenced prior to the taking effect of the repealing act,[81] but if it clearly appears from a repealing act that a general saving statute was not intended to apply, effect will be given such intention.[82]

Repeal of repealing statutes.[83]

(§ 7) B. Implied repeal. In general.[84]—Repeal by implication is not favored,[85] and where there are two acts on the same subject, the rule is to give effect to both if possible,[86] the very fact that no repealing clause is attached being worthy of consideration in determining the intention of the legislature,[87] but this rule does

This act was repealed pending hearing on the petition and the right of action was lost. Taylor v. Strayer [Ind.] 78 N. E. 236. Bill to restrain removal of a dead animal through the streets. Defendant filed a plea based on a statute authorizing such an act. Act repealed before final hearing and bill stood as though unanswered. Barnes v. Roy, 27 R. I. 534, 65 A. 277. "Curtis Law" (30 St. 495, c. 517), providing for the recovery for improvements on Indian lands repealed pending an action for such recovery. Sharrock v. Kreiger [Ind. T.] 98 S. W. 161. Where part of a judgment or decree rests on the authority of a statute repealed pending the action, as to such part, the judgment or decree is void. Sharrock v. Kreiger [Ind. T.] 98 S. W. 161. A repeal of a right to levy taxes for revenue only destroyed all right to collect the same although due before the repeal took effect (Wheeler v. Plumas County [Cal.] 87 P. 802), but where a board of commissioners appointed by statute to equalize taxation fully performed their duties and made their determination, an act repealing the statute under which they were appointed does not affect an action to collect taxes as determined (Foster v. not apply to a statute creating a new class of offenses.[88] In order that a repeal by implication may be given effect, the two statutes in question must be irreconcilable,[89] in which case the later statute will repeal the prior to the extent of the repugnancy,[90] but, it is not an absolute rule and it will not be allowed to defeat the purpose of the legislature as gathered from the context.[91] Where two acts are in express terms repugnant, if the later act covers the whole subject of the first and embraces new provisions, plainly showing that it was intended as a substitute, it will operate as a repeal,[92] and so where a later act is consistent with a former act, there may be an implied repeal of the former by way of revision.[93] Where a subsequent statute though not wholly repugnant prescribed the only rule governing certain cases, a prior statute is repealed by implication.[94] A later law which is merely a re-enactment of a former does not repeal an intermediate act which has qualified or limited the first one, but such intermediate act remains in force and qualifies the new act in the same manner as it did the first.[95] The re-enactment of only part of an act implies the repeal of the remainder.[96] Repeals by implication do not apply only in case of police regulations.[97]

In Georgia, a general law is not subject to repeal by a special or local law,[1] but a particular provision overcomes a general law on the same subject.[2] A general law, however, whose intention is to provide a harmonious system throughout the state will repeal prior special acts.[3] One section of an act cannot be divided into two parts one of which is special and the other general so as to have the special supersede the general.[4] And where two acts can be made to work together and each accomplish a different and independent result, a special law will not be affected by a subsequent general statute.[5]

STAY OF PROCEEDINGS.

Grounds for Stay (1999).
Power to Grant (2000).
Proceedings to Obtain a Stay (2000).
Effect of Stay (2000).
Waiver of Stay (2001).

Grounds for stay.[6]—The effect of supersedeas bond is treated elsewhere.[7] While matters existing anterior to the judgment cannot be made a ground for supersedeas of an execution on such judgment,[8] yet as to the proper matters arising subsequently, the writ is allowable.[9] Where actions relating to the same subject-matter are pending in courts of concurrent jurisdiction, the last brought will ordinarily be stayed till the determination of the first,[10] and the fact that there has been no seizure nor an actual taking of the res in possession under orders of the first court to acquire jurisdiction is not essential to constitute the pendency of the action, therein ground for staying the subsequent suit.[11] When the pendency of an action in another state between the same parties in relation to the same subject-matter is suggested, it is within the discretion of the court to stay proceedings to await the final disposition of the cause pending in the other state, though it is not ground for plea in abatement,[12] but the pendency of another action is not ground for a stay unless the proceedings relate to the same subject-matter,[13] nor does the pendency of review proceedings in a collateral matter act as a stay of the proceedings in the primary court.[14] The pendency of litigation affecting the title of property to be sold under order of court in proceedings under the court's control, which depreciates the value of the property, is ground for staying the sale.[15] When the power of a court of law to grant equitable relief by reformation is doubtful, an action at law in which a defense tendered depends on a reformation will be continued a reasonable time to enable the party to present his claim to reformation in a court of equity.[16] Willful disobedience of an order of court is ground for staying affirmative proceedings in a cause by the party in default, though he is absent from the state when the order is moved and entered.[17] Where an appeal bond is executed prior to the principal's effort to take advantage of the bankruptcy law, he is not entitled as matter of right to a stay of proceedings in the appealed cause pending the adjudication of the question of his discharge in bankruptcy.[18] Hence a perpetual stay of execution entered after judgment renders harmless a refusal to grant a stay at an earlier stage of the case.[19]

Power to grant.—When the pendency of litigation affecting the title of property to be sold under order of court in proceedings over which it has control depreciates the value of the property to be sold, a stay of the sale is within the power of the court after the adjournment of the term at which the decree establishing a lien and ordering sale in satisfaction thereof was entered.[20]

Proceedings to obtain a stay.[21]—A statutory provision that an injunction to stay proceedings on a judgment will not be granted in an action brought by the party seeking the injunction in any other court than that in which the judgment was rendered is limited in its application to judgments to which the persons seeking the injunction are parties.[22] In New York a motion for a new trial does not operate as a stay unless an order to that effect is procured and served.[23] Notice to the plaintiff is essential in NewYork to the validity of an order indefinitely staying the prosecution of an action,[24] and ordinarily can be obtained only on motion made within the district in which the action is triable.[25]

Effect of stay.[26]—Since a motion for a new trial does not in New York operate as a stay unless an order to that effect is procured and served, a stay granted at the close of a trial on denial of a motion for new trial, in connection with which no order for a stay was procured and served, does not render irregular a judgment rendered during the period covered by the stay.[27] An order of court staying sale of vehicle held not ground for stay of suit for infringement of Selden patent by a Mercedes vehicle (Electric Vehicle Co. v. Barney, 143 F. 551), but if the defendant were using a Ford, or if he were asking to have prosecution suspended until the decision of some prior suit against maker, seller, or user, of a Mercedes, the application would probably commend itself to the court (Id.).

The pendency of proceedings taken by writ of error to the supreme court of the United States to review the decision of a state court remanding a prisoner under indictment to the custody of a court of concurrent jurisdiction in habeas corpus proceedings does not stay proceedings in the court having jurisdiction of the indictment. property ordered by it to be sold pending the final disposition of other litigation is interlocutory and therefore not reviewable on appeal until finally disposed of in the trial court.[28]

Waiver of stay.[29]—A party entitled to enforce a stay of an appealed cause until costs previously awarded have been paid waives the stay by noticing the cause for argument.[30]

STEAM.[31]

One using steam power must exercise due care in the generation [32] and use thereof, and is liable for a wanton [33] injuring of a trespasser upon his property,[34] unless such party is guilty of contributory negligence.[35]

STENOGRAPHERS.[36]

In a civil action in Georgia a stenographer is entitled to compensation for taking notes under the direction of the court, though he does not transcribe the same [37] which includes the court's charge to the jury,[38] and judgment may be awarded therefor against the party liable without notice,[39] though an ex parte judgment cannot be rendered for transcriptions made at the request of such party.[40] The court will not compel a private stenographer to deliver a copy of his notes without being first compensated therefor.[41] By statute in Kentucky a stenographer is prohibited present during the production of evidence before the grand jury.[42] While mandamus may lie to compel a court to allow stenographer fees in the proper case,[43] it will not issue where the claim has been denied on its merits.[44]

Rules of court often regulate the making of stipulations [59] requiring them to be in writing [60] or entered of record.[61] Objections to unauthorized provisions or interlineations in stipulations are waived by retention thereof after discovery by the party adversely affected.[62]

Enforcement and effect.[63]—The rule that ignorance of the law does not excuse applies in obtaining relief from stipulations,[64] as does the rule that a party to an

63. See 6 C. L. 1555.

64. Ignorance of counsel in stipulating for time in which to perfect appeal as to the time when the terms of the appellate court are held is not ground for relief from the agreement cannot be relieved of its burdens while retaining its benefits,[65] but mistake furnishes ground for equitable relief, as in other cases.[66] The authority of a court to relieve a party from a stipulation is, however, the exercise of a judicial discretion which may not be invoked without cause shown.[67] A stipulation procured without fraud, after action has been taken thereunder by a party to his detriment, cannot be set aside without placing him in statu quo.[68] A stipulation making the decision in a subsequent suit determine the result of a prior one is a waiver of a party's right to object that the cause of action has been split by the two suits.[69] When error is predicated on the existence of a stipulation, the party asserting the error must show affirmatively that the stipulation actually existed.[70] One is estopped to assert the invalidity of the form of a motion after it has been acted on pursuant to the form required by stipulation.[71] A stipulation by the receiver of a corporation for entry of the corporation's appearance does not require the receiver to personally appear.[72] The principle that sustains the validity of a stipulation, after suit is begun, to submit the controversy to arbitration, applies to sustain a stipulation that the finding of surveyors in a boundary suit shall be entered on the judgment of the court.[73] An ultra vires stipulation may nevertheless be enforceable on the ground of estoppel.[74] A stipulation waiving liability of a principal wrongdoer is applicable also as a waiver of liability of those guilty of contributing to the wrong.[75] An order relieving from a stipulation is not appealable in New York.[76] By submitting a cause by agreement, on the evidence taken before a referee, a party waives his motion for judgment on the findings by the referee.[77] A stipulation submitting a cause, in which a preliminary restraining order had been issued to the court as a whole, "the pleadings, motions, orders and the evidence," includes the preliminary injunction order,[78] hence the court has power of its own motion to strike out such order.[79] A stipulation made in the course of a trial to meet a contingency arising therein does not apply on future trials in the absence of an express provision to that effect.[80] The construction of a written stipulation is for the trial court.[81]

Concessions of counsel as to irregularities in the passage of a statute will not influence the court in determining its constitutionality.[82] A stipulation that the court may render such judgment on the findings of the jury as the law authorizes adds nothing to and takes nothing from the power of the court to enter a judgment on the special verdict and the undisputed facts not in conflict therewith.[83] A stipulation showing the due execution and delivery of an instrument sued on obviates the necessity for other proof thereof.[84] Where a stipulation in a boundary suit leaves for determination the true boundary between certain surveys, evidence tending to show an agreed or recognized line is admissible.[85] When the illegality of a transaction is required by stipulation to be established to entitle a party to judgment, the court will give the stipulation a strict construction in favor of the adverse party.[86]

Town of Washburn v. Lee, 128 Wis. 312, 107 N. W. 649.

87. See 6 C. L. 1557.

88. Construction and ownership of a street railway to be leased to a company for revenue is a work of internal improvement which a city is prohibited by Const. art. 14, § 9, from engaging in. Bird v. Common Council of Detroit [Mich.] 111 N. W. 860.

89. Under Laws 1860, p. 16, providing that it shall be unlawful to lay a track on the streets of New York City except under such regulations as the legislature may provide, a corporation may not be organized under the Act of 1850 to operate a street railroad on such streets, nor could it be formed under such law without specifying its route in its articles. Webb v. Forty-Second St., etc., R. Co., 102 N. Y. S. 762. In such case where an attempt was made to organize under the earlier law, such organization could not be gated to municipal [90] or other local authorities [91] which has control of the highways and streets. If a franchise or license has not been acquired, a street railway company has no right to lay tracks in the street,[92] but an abutting owner may not restrain the construction of a street railroad in front of his premises on the ground that the company has not acquired a right to construct.[93]

The franchise can be granted only for a public purpose.[94] The statute granting the franchise must be constitutional,[95] and an ordinance by which it is granted must be legally enacted,[96] and where the grant rests upon conditions precedent, they must be complied with,[97] nor can privileges not authorized by the statute be granted.[98] validated nor a franchise acquired by an assignment to the corporation of a franchise given by Laws 1873, p. 1238, c. 825, nor could such railroad alter or change its course. Id.

90. Baltimore City Charter, §§ 8, 9, 37, relative to the granting of franchises by municipal authorities, does not apply to a franchise granted to a street railway company by acts of the legislature. Acts 1898, p. 999, c. 390. Dulaney v. United Rys. & Elec. Co. [Md.] 65 A. 45. Const. art. 3, § 18, prohibits local bills granting rights to lay railroad tracks. A contract between a city and a company provided that its provisions might be extended to any extension of the lines of the company. Laws 1892, p. 311, c. 15, provided that such contract was binding. Held to constitute a valid grant of power to city authorities and not the grant of a right to lay tracks. Kuhn v. Knight, 101 N. Y. S. 1. The legislature can authorize a company to lay its tracks and operate its lines in the streets of a city and may empower the municipality to grant such authority, and accompany the grant with such restrictions as may seem necessary to protect the public in the use of the highways. McKim v. Philadelphia [Pa.] 66 A. 340. The word "restrictions" in Pub. St. c. 113, § 7, authorizing the board of aldermen in towns to grant original locations to street railway companies subject to such restrictions as they deem public interests require, is equivalent to "conditions," and authorizes the board to impose limitations on the right to the enjoyment granted. Blodgett v. Worcester Consol. St. R. Co. [Mass.] 78 N. E. 222.

91. Local authorities of a village may grant a street railway franchise to rival companies if the routes are not the same. People v. Bauer, 103 N. Y. S. 1081.

92. Where a company laid tracks in the highway without obtaining authority as required by statute, the fact that township authorities did not object at the time does not estop the township from maintaining action to compel removal of the tracks. Bangor Tp. v. Bay City Trac. & Elec. Co. [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 999, 110 N. W. 490. Under the statutes of Michigan where tracks are laid in the highway without authority obtained from the township as required by statute, the township may maintain a bill in chancery to compel their removal as a nuisance. Id. Where a street railway company lays its tracks on a public highway without the consent of an abutting owner, and this is done wrongfully, but without malice, and there is a resultant permanent injury to the real estate, the extent of the damage caused thereby is to be measured by the resulting depreciation in the value of the property. In such a case no malice can be inferred from the mere wrongful laying of the tracks, where the act was committed before the relative rights of street railways and abutting owners had been adjudicated by the courts. Becker v. Lebanon & Meyerstown St. R. Co., 30 Pa. Super. Ct. 646.

93. Webb v. Forty-Second St., etc., R. Co., 102 N. Y. S. 762.

94. Under the laws of New York the board of estimate and apportionment has not power to grant to the owners of a department store the right to construct a private switch track in the street connecting their store with a street railway. Hatfield v. Strauss, 102 N. Y. S. 934. An abutting owner may enjoin such construction. Id.

95. The right given a street railway company to extend its lines under an agreement between a city and the railroad company, ratified by an act of the legislature, is not in violation of the article of the constitution providing that no private or local act shall be passed granting to any corporation or individual the right to lay down railroad tracks, though the right to construct such extension rests on such act. Smith v. Buffalo, 51 Misc. 244, 100 N. Y. S. 922.

96. Defects in a street railway franchise cannot be cured by an amendment to the granting ordinance, which merely sets forth the facts as to what was done in the matter of publication of notice before the bids were received for the construction of the line, and declares that the publication was sufficient to meet the requirements of the granting ordinance. Raynolds v. Cleveland, 8 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 278. An ordinance granting a franchise to maintain a certain track is not invalidated because only a small sum was paid for it, where no fraud is asserted and it is not claimed that it was not fixed by the prescribed board of estimates. Dulaney v. United Rys. & Elec. Co. [Md.] 65 A. 45.

97. The granting of the state railroad commissioner's certificate of convenience and necessity is not a prerequisite to the granting of a local franchise. People v. Bauer, 103 N. Y. S. 1081. Where the consent to use the streets required the company to give bond to be approved by highway commissioners, the company could not enjoin the granting of the right to another company without showing that the required bond had been given. South Shore Trac. Co. v. Brookhaven, 102 N. Y. S. 1074. Where no time was stated within which such bond must be filed, it must be filed within a reasonable time. Id. Where a company to which a conditional consent to construct

Statutes granting a franchise should be reasonably construed [99] and, when the franchise is granted according to a plat, should be construed in connection with the plat.[1] The term of the franchise rests in the ordinance by which it is granted.[2] A consolidation of various lines, the grants to which expire at different periods, does not operate as an extension of the life of such grants,[3] nor does the consent of the municipal authorities to such consolidation on condition that but one fare should be charged for a continuous ride.[4] Upon the termination of a street railway company's franchise, the title to the rails, poles, and other operating appliances in the streets, remains in the company operating the road.[5]

In some states it is required that a street railway franchise be sold at public auction.[6] This rule does not apply to an extension of the lines.[7] The consent of a tracks on the streets had been given had not complied with the conditions, it was not entitled to the aid of a court of equity to enforce a negative provision in such consents denying the right of the town to grant to another company the right to use the streets. Id. Under Heydecker's Gen. Laws, p. 3312, c. 39, § 93, providing that local authorities may make their consent to the construction of a track dependent on conditions requiring construction within a certain time, held that city authorities may impose a shorter term for construction and require a bond, and on failure to comply with such condition the right may be granted to another road. South Shore Traction Co. v. Brookhaven, 102 N. Y. S. 75. Where a company treated the conditional consent of an abutting owner to the construction of an elevated railway, as no consent, by including him in those who refused to consent, in their application to the board of commissioners it cannot thereafter, against his claim for damages, assert that he consented. Shaw v. New York El. R. Co. [N. Y.] 79 N. E. 984. Where a company circulated a paper to obtain consent of property owners for construction of an elevated railway, and an owner signed "I am in favor of the road over the center of the street but not over the sidewalk," held, if this was a consent it was qualified and not accepted as the company built the road over the walk. Id.

98. Exemption from obligation to pay the cost of paving of space between its tracks is not a privilege which can be transferred to a corporation organized under a law not containing such an exemption. Under Laws 1867, c. 254, as amended by Laws 1879, c. 503, a lessee railway company may purchase the lessor's capital stock in which case the latter's "estate, property, rights, privileges and franchises" shall vest in the lessee. Rochester R. Co. v. Rochester, 27 S. Ct. 469.

99. An ordinance granting a right to maintain a switch and also imposing a penalty for hindering or delaying traffic in the street should be construed to relate only to unreasonable delay or hindrance. Dulaney v. United R. & Elec. Co. [Md.] 65 A. 45. An ordinance granting a franchise to operate a street railway will be strictly construed. Cleveland Elec. R. Co. v. Cleveland, 27 S. Ct. 202.

1. An ordinance granting a franchise to construct a track on a certain street according to the plat on file in the office of the city engineer should be construed in accordance with the plat, to authorize the laying of a switch across a sidewalk, but to require the rails to be so laid as not to obstruct the flow of water into the gutter nor break the level of the foot pavement. Dulaney v. United Rys. & Elec. Co. [Md.] 65 A. 45.

2. An ordinance of the city of Des Moines, Iowa, granted an exclusive franchise for thirty years. At the time of the grant there was no statute specifically conferring on cities power to grant such franchises, but they were afterwards legalized. The franchise was recognized by the city for thirty years. Held the ordinance granted a franchise in perpetuity, exclusive for thirty years, and created a contract which the city could not impair. Des Moines City R. Co. v. Des Moines, 151 F. 854. An ordinance granting the right to construct a short extension to a named line and to lay a second track along such line to terminate with the expiration of the grant for the "main line" must be construed so far as the life of the grant is concerned to refer to the designated line and not to a separate and distinct line used in connection therewith. Cleveland Elec. R. Co. v. Cleveland, 27 S. Ct. 202. The franchise for an extension to terminate with the expiration of the grant for the main line must be taken to refer to the grant, as it then existed and must be measured by such existing grant and not by subsequent extensions. 6. Laws 1901, p. 1229, c. 494, § 93, providing that in cities of the first class, consent to operate a street railway must be sold at public auction, but that such provision should not apply to a contract between a certain city and the company operating a line on its streets applies in such city in any case where the contract referred to does not permit of an exception. Kuhn v. Knight, 101 N. Y. S. 1.

7. A road built by one of the parties to the "Milburn Agreement" in Buffalo held extension, and not a franchise to be sold at public auction. Smith v. Buffalo, 51 Misc. 244, 100 N. Y. S. 922. A contract between a city and its street railway corporations provided for the settlement of existing controversies, stipulated for one fare over its lines and confined its operations to lines built except that it might be extended to future extensions thereof, held to authorize city authorities to grant any extension of a line without sale of the franchise at public auction. Kuhn v. Knight, 101 N. Y. S. 1.

certain proportion of the abutting owners is usually a condition precedent to the granting of a franchise.[8] Provisions of the law as to notice must be complied with before municipal authorities can legally act upon an application to construct a street railroad.[9]

The franchise may not be alienated without the consent of the legislature.[10] The franchise may be forfeited because of failure to comply with the conditions upon which it was granted, or by its terms may become void by lapse of time,[11] but forfeiture will not be declared because of nonperformance of an impossible condition.[12] Where an ordinance authorizing the construction of a street railway requires it to be completed within a fixed time, but provides that where construction is enjoined the time during which the injunction was in effect shall not be included, such an injunction excuses performance within the required time.[13] An ordinance extending the duration of a franchise of a line of street railways does not extend the life of a separate and distinct line merely because the latter was permitted to run in connection with the former and to use part of its main line,[14] and a resolution changing the place of connection between such lines does not render one an extension of the other.[15]

Rights and duties under franchise.[16]—The exercise of rights under the franchise is subject to the exercise of the police power of the municipality.[17]

The regulation of street railways must be exercised by the authorities empowered by law.[18] The use of streets for street railway purposes involves a fran-

8. The consent of a municipality legally granted to the construction of a street railway along a street upon which the municipality is an abutting owner, may be counted in ascertaining whether a majority of the frontage has consented to the granting of the franchise. Emerson v. Forest City R. Co., 4 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 493; Id., 8 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 560. Laws 1901, p. 1229, c. 494, and Laws 1901, p. 1261, c. 508, relative to acquiring consent of property owners, are unconstitutional as private or local laws so far as they relate to companies whose charters have been forfeited by inaction prior to the enactment of the statutes. In re Brooklyn, etc., R. Co., 185 N. Y. 171, 77 N. E. 994.

9. Railroad act, § 92, requires local authorities to give notice before acting on an application to construct a street railroad and § 91 requires the consent of local authorities in whom control of streets to be occupied is vested when such authority is vested in other than the common council. Held that where a city charter placed the control of such streets in the park board, such board was bound to give the required notice before acting on the application, though the common council also gave notice. Smith v. Buffalo, 99 N. Y. S. 986.

10. A street railway company has no power to alienate its franchise without permission of the legislature. French v. Jones, 191 Mass. 522, 78 N. E. 118.

11. Railroad Laws (Laws 1890, § 99), applying only to street railroads and providing for forfeiture of rights and franchise if work is not commenced within one year, does not provide the only method by which a franchise may be forfeited; but Laws 1890, p. 1084, c. 565, providing that if a railroad corporation does within five years after certificate of incorporation is filed commence work, its corporate powers shall cease, also applies. In re Brooklyn, etc., R. Co., 185 N. Y. 171, 77 N. E. 994. Laws 1890, p. 1084, providing that if work is not commenced, etc., within five years after certificate of incorporation is filed, its corporate existence shall cease, applies to extensions constructed pursuant to a certificate of extension. 12. Where a street railway company obtained a franchise from a township to lay its tracks on a public road, with a provision that, when required by the township, it would remove its track from the side to the center of the road, after the road has been constructed, the township cannot declare a forfeiture of the franchise on refusal of the railway company to so move the track, where it was impossible, because the abutting owners on one side of the road would not consent. Millcreek Tp. v. Erie Rapid Transit St. R. Co. [Pa.] 64 A. 901.

17. In the absence of an express exemption, a traction company accepts its franchise subject to legislative control. Bloomington & Normal R. Elec. & Heating Co. v. Bloomington, 123 Ill. App. 639. Where a city granted a franchise to a street railway company, authorizing it to construct, maintain and operate a street surface railroad in the streets of the city, such franchise, though a contract between the city and street car company, is subject to the police power of the city to regulate the manner in which the street should be used. People v. Geneva, etc., Tract. Co., 112 App. Div. 581, 98 N. Y. S. 719.

chise.[19] Rights of a street railway company under its franchise are contract rights within the contract clause of the Federal constitution.[20] The franchise does not confer the right to erect structures in the street other than the tracks,[21] and when other structures are erected it is no answer to the company's obligation to remove it that the expense of procuring other property upon which to erect such structures would be great.[22] The right of the company to take up its tracks may be subject to contract conditions.[23] A street railway company authorized to use the streets has equal rights therein with abutting owners[24] and with other travelers,[25] but after the expiration of its franchise it has no rights in the streets.[26] A street railway company

§ 31, creating the government of the City of Wilmington, authorized the council to prescribe and regulate the use of highways, streets, squares, lanes, and alleys, in the city and to have and exercise control over the same. Act April 20, 1887 (18 Del. Laws, pp. 352, 355, c. 188), entitled "An act relating to the streets and sewers of the city of Wilmington," by sections 1, 4, provides that on and after July 1st, 1887, the "Mayor and council of Wilmington," a corporation, is hereby authorized through the agency of a board of directors of a street and sewer department hereby created, etc., to have entire jurisdiction to control within the limits of said city, the streets, squares, lanes, roads, or alleys, thereof, and that they shall have the same rights and powers and be vested with the same authority over the same streets etc., as are now held and exercised by the council. Act April 18, 1883 (17 Del. Laws, p. 408, c. 205), establishing a board of water commissioners, vested in such commissioners the power to regulate the use of the streets as to water. Act May 15, 1891 (19 Del. Laws, p. 438, c. 223), § 4, being the act providing for a municipal police commission for the city of Wilmington, provides in section 4 that in carrying out and affecting the purposes and objects of this act said board of commissioners shall stand in the same position as is now occupied by the mayor, and shall, after May 1st, 1891, be substituted for the mayor aforesaid with the same rights, powers, privileges, and authority, as were, before the passage of this act, and by any means whatsoever, vested in the mayor aforesaid. Held that the power to prescribe and regulate the use of streets was by said act of 1887 street and sewer commission, and that the council had no power to pass an ordinance prescribing and regulating the use of safety appliances called "fenders" on street cars. Bullock v. Wilmington City R. Co. [Del.] 64 A. 242. The word "rulings" in Rev. Laws, c. 112, § 100, conferring on the supreme judicial court jurisdiction to review rulings of railroad commissioners, construed in connection with other statutes, and held to apply to rulings of law only and not to findings on questions of fact. Paine v. Newton St. R. Co. [Mass.] 77 N. E. 1026.

19. The use of streets for street railway lines involves a franchise within Code tit. 21, c. 9, providing for a civil action by ordinary proceedings in the name of the state against any person unlawfully exercising a franchise. State v. Des Moines City R. Co. [Iowa] 109 N. W. 867.

20. A suit by a street railway company claiming to have a perpetual franchise to enjoin the city from impairing such contract by inforcing removal of its tracks is one arising under the Federal constitution regardless of the citizenship of the parties. Des Moines City R. Co., v. Des Moines, 151 F. 854. A resolution of a city council directing removal from the streets of the tracks of a street railway is a law of the state within the contract clause of the Federal constitution where the resolution was as effective as an ordinance would be. Id.

21. The granting of a street railroad franchise does not confer the right to erect a signal tower in the street, at least without showing that it could be made of practical use if located on private property. Williams v. Los Angeles R. Co. [Cal.] 89 P. 330.

22. Where a company placed a signal tower at the intersection of streets to the injury of a private owner, it was no answer to the company's obligation to condemn private property for the location of such tower that the expense of such proceeding would be great. Williams v. Los Angeles R. Co. [Cal.] 89 P. 330.

23. Where a company was under contract not to remove its tracks without the consent of the borough and the county reconstructed a bridge so that the tracks thereon did not align with those on the road and the company secretly took up its tracks to readjust them without obtaining the consent of the borough, held injunction at the suit of the company would not lie to enjoin the borough from preventing the company from taking up its tracks without obtaining its consent. Chester, etc., R. Co. v. Darby Borough [Pa.] 66 A. 357. In such case, however, the consent of the borough cannot be arbitrarily withheld, nor be burdened with further pecuniary obligations on the company. Id.

24. Where a street railway company is authorized to use the streets, it and adjoining owners have equal rights in the streets. Dulaney v. United Rys. & Elec. Co. [Md.] 65 A. 45.

25. See post, § 8.

26. Abutting owners may maintain an action in the nature of quo warranto under Code tit. 21, c. 9, against a street railway company using the streets after its franchise has expired. Such statute providing that a citizen having an interest may sue if the county attorney refuses to do so. State v. Des Moines City R. Co. [Iowa] 109 N. W. 867. After the franchise of a street railway company has expired, continued use of the streets constitutes the exercise of a power not conferred by law within Code tit. 21, c. 9, providing for a civil action against a corporation exercising powers not conferred by law. Id. Code tit. 21, c. 9, providing for an action against any person authorized to conduct express business over its lines may limit such business to a single express company if reasonable express facilities are thereby furnished the public.[27] An abutter seeking to enjoin the construction of a street railway in the streets as a public nuisance must allege facts showing special damage.[28] Liability for the cost of maintaining a flagman at an intersection with a steam railroad must be found in the authority by which it operates or other contract, or legislative duty.[29]

Rates, fares, and transfers.[30]—A franchise providing that the fare should not exceed the rate then charged applies to any line subsequently built or purchased,[31] but not to different lines operated by separate corporations,[32] nor is such a provision to be given effect beyond the evident intent of the legislative body.[33] A requirement as to the giving of transfers is one which council has a right to make, and is not rendered unreasonable by the fact that a company operating street railway lines intersecting the proposed line would be thereby placed at a disadvantage in the bidding.[34] The statutory duty to give transfers to any line "operated by it or under its control" applies only to lines whereof the operation is controlled, not to those whose corporate existence is controlled.[35] A franchise requiring the sale of family tickets unlawfully exercising a franchise, etc., applies to a street railway company occupying the streets after expiration of its franchise. Id.

27. Dulaney v. United Rys. & Elec. Co. [Md.] 65 A. 45. A railway company which did not limit its business to carrying passengers with ordinary hand luggage, but engages in hauling freight from one point on its line to another and from one town to another along its route is not a street railway. Spalding v. Macomb & W. I. R. Co., 225 Ill. 585, 80 N. E. 327.

28. Complaint held insufficient under Civ. Code, § 3493, which alleges as a conclusion that property rights will be irreparably injured, value diminished, free access impaired, and rental value decreased. City Store v. San Jose-Los Gatos Interurban R. Co. [Cal.] 88 P. 977. Where an elevated railway had acquired the right to operate its line, one who seeks to abate it as a public nuisance on the ground that more trains are being run must show special damage. Wolf v. Manhattan R. Co., 101 N. Y. S. 493. Evidence insufficient. Id. Where an elevated railway company had acquired its easements and paid the owners for light air and access, the increase in the number of cars run on the track does not give an abutting owner the right to recover damages. Id.

29. The requirement that a flagman be stationed at a railroad crossing can only be made where it is found that the crossing is dangerous to the public, and where a railroad company obtains the right to run its trains over a given street crossing than theretofore allowed by the ordinances of the municipality, on condition that a flagman be stationed there, the expense thus incurred cannot be thrown upon a traction company occupying the street, under an agreement whereby the traction company undertook as a condition of making the crossing, to pay all expenses which might be "lawfully required" by the municipality or the state, for maintaining a flagman at that crossing. Akron & Cuyahoga Falls Rapid Transit Co. v. Erie R. Co., 7 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 199. There are no rights vested in a steam road as an adjoining lot owner which would enable it to enforce a contract containing such a provision. Id. Moreover, the requirement as to a flagman having thus been obtained for the benefit of the steam road alone, there was no consideration moving to the traction company, and payment of the expense thus incurred cannot be enforced against the traction company. Under the statutes of New York providing that but one five cent fare shall be charged for continuous passage within the limits of a city and providing for transfers, held a company which operated a surface railway, which leases a steam elevated railway, may charge more than one fare where a passenger rides on both roads, as each road is operated under its respective charter, and such fact is not changed by changing the motive power from steam to electricity. People v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co. [N. Y.] 79 N. E. 838. In the absence of an ordinance requiring street railways to exchange transfers, neither § 2505 c. Rev. St. (91 Ohio Laws, p. 379), nor 91 Ohio Laws, p. 285, makes the power it confers upon urban and interurban companies to agree as to the use by the latter of so much of the tracks and property of the former as may be necessary to enable it to enter or pass through the municipality conditional upon an exchange of passes. Interurban R. & Terminal Co. v. Cincinnati, 75 Ohio St. 196, 79 N. E. 240.

Where a passenger engaged in conversation is carried beyond the transfer point and in endeavoring to reach his destination is finally refused a transfer, he is not making a "continuous trip" within a statute providing for one fare for a continuous trip. is not complied with by placing the tickets on sale at a store in the city, the passengers having the right to purchase such tickets on cars.[36]

§ 2. Property and acquirement thereof.[37]—The use of a street by a street railway company is a public servitude imposing no additional burden upon the abutter.[38] Where the company changes the grade of a highway for the construction of its road according to the locations granted by the municipality, it is not liable in damages to an abutting owner.[39] What is necessary to do in the way of perfecting corporate existence before a company is entitled to acquire a right of way depends on statute.[40]

§ 3. Taxes and license fees.[41]—An ordinance imposing a license fee upon cars operated within the limits of the municipality is valid.[42]

§ 4. Street railway corporations.[43]—The organization and corporate activities of street railway companies are governed by the general law of corporations.[44] In Massachusetts directors of a street railway company are liable for the debts of the corporation to the extent of the capital stock until it has all been paid in.[45]

38. Where a street railway company obtained from a borough the right to use a certain street, the borough reserving the right to grant the "common use" of such street to another company in common with the first company, and the street was broad enough to accommodate two parallel tracks, it was held that the borough could not require a later company, having permission to use the same street so to lay its tracks as to straddle the tracks of the other company. Commonwealth v. Bond, 214 Pa. 307, 63 A. 741. The damages paid when the street was built were for all time and for all public use fairly contemplated at the time the land was taken. Such inconveniences as are inseparable from the use by the public of a public way cannot be made the foundation of an action for damages. Parsons v. Waterville & O. St. R. Co., 101 Me. 173, 63 A. 728. The mere fact that the road was not located in the center of the highway, but along the side of the road where it worked a greater injury to the land owner, does not affect the rule as to damages or permit the owner to sue as for successive trespasses. Becker v. Lebanon & Meyerstown St. R. Co., 30 Pa. Super. Ct. 546.

39. Hyde v. Boston & W. St. R. Co. [Mass.] 80 N. E. 517. Rev. Laws, c. 48, § 7, and ch. 51, §§ 15, 16, authorizing a person aggrieved by the alteration of a highway to petition for the assessment of damages, affords no relief to an abutting owner injured by a change of grade made by a street railway in constructing its tracks according to plans and locations granted by a municipality. Id. The statute authorizing a town to permit a street railway in constructing its track to change the grade of a street without compensating abutting owners is not unconstitutional, because the owners were compensated when their land was condemned for the highway. Id. A company authorized by St. 1901, p. 388, c. 455, to construct its track largely outside the limits of highways which was empowered by a town to cross a highway below grade, without providing that abutting owners should be compensated, is not liable to an abuting owner either under St. 1906, p. 604, relative to liability of a street railway crossing a public way, or under Rev. Laws c. 112, § 44, authorizing street railway companies, without payment of any fee to open any road on which its line is located. Id.

40. Under Revisal 1905, § 1138, defining a street railway as one located between points in different municipalities lying near each other or between territory contiguous to the home municipality and providing against extension more than fifty miles from the home municipality, it is no objection to the right of a company to locate its right of way between two towns, that no part of its line has been constructed in any town. Fayetteville St. R. Co. v. Aberden & R. R. Co., 142 N. C. 423, 55 S. E. 345. Under Revisal 1905, § 1140, providing that persons associated shall constitute a corporation from the filing of the proper certificate, and § 1141 giving signers of the certificate temporary power to act as directors, it is no objection to the obtaining of a right of way that the stock of a street railway company has not been issued and no money paid thereon. Id. That the capital stock of a corporation has not been issued and no money paid thereon and no part of the road constructed are matters not open to collateral investigation in injunction proceedings to determine the right of such company to a right of way as against a rival railroad company. 45. Under Rev. Laws, c. 112, § 19, fixing liability on directors of a street railway corporation for all debts to the extent of the capital stock, until it has all been paid in and a certificate to such effect sworn to and filed, the remedy against the directors is in equity. Westinghouse Elec. & Mfg. Co. v. Reed [Mass.] 80 N. E. 621. In such case the filing of an untrue certificate with the secretary of state will not relieve the directors from liability. Id.

In a suit on such liability the corporation is not a necessary party,[46] nor are creditors required to first exhaust their remedy against the corporation.[47] Where one company purchases the capital stock of another, the doctrine that the capital stock is to be deemed a trust fund for the payment of debts does not apply to the property transferred.[48] A street railway company may lease its property where it is authorized to do so.[49] The nature of an instrument, whether a lease or other contract, is to be determined from its terms.[50] In Missouri the lessee company is not liable for the negligence of the lessee.[51] The rights of a purchaser of the property and franchises of a company may be subject to statutory conditions.[52] Contract rights of a company are governed by the general law of contracts.[53]

48. Where one company paid another an agreed price per share for the stock and received a conveyance of all its property and franchises without further consideration, the doctrine that the capital stock and property of a corporation is to be deemed a trust fund for the payments of debts, and when it has been divided among stockholders leaving debts unpaid the stockholders are bound to refund, does not apply to the property transferred but to the consideration paid. Hagemann v. Southern Elec. R. Co. [Mo.] 100 S. W. 1081. Under Ann. St. 1899, p. 393, § 1187, giving street railway companies power to purchase or sell to other corporations their property and franchises, a company which purchases from another and pays the consideration to the stockholders of the selling corporation is not liable for debts of the latter company which were not liens at the time of the transfer. Id.

49. An ordinance authorizing enumerated street railway companies and their successors to sell or lease their property and privileges to any of the enumerated companies, and authorizing the company acquiring the same to hold during the term of the ordinance, authorizes a purchaser to lease the same without special consent of the municipality notwithstanding Const. art. 12, § 20, forbidding transfer of such franchise without the consent of the municipality. 50. Contract by which one company leased its railway, etc., to another company, divesting the former of the use of its property for 40 years in consideration of a certain rental, construed and held not to establish the relation of principal and agent (Moorshead v. United R. Co., 119 Mo. App. 541, 96 S. W. 261), nor to make the two companies partners (Id), but such contract was held to constitute a lease (Id.; Moorshead v. United R. Co. [Mo.] 100 S. W. 611). Contract by which one company leased its property and franchises to another for an annual rental, construed and held not to require the former company to turn over to the lessee company rents paid by it to the lessor. Id.

51. Under Rev. St. 1899, § 1187, a company which leases its property and franchises to another company is not liable for negligence of the employes of the lessee resulting in injury to passenger. Moorshead v. United R. Co., 119 Mo. App. 541, 96 S. W. 261; Id. [Mo.] 100 S. W. 611.

52. Under Rev. Laws, c. 112, § 12, authorizing the receiver of a street railway company to sell its property under order of court, and § 13 providing that the purchaser shall within 60 days organize a corporation to hold, own, and operate the railway purchased or forfeit his rights, one who purchases the rails and tracks laid in the street is not required to organize a corporation and operate the road. French v. Jones, 191 Mass. 522, 78 N. E. 118. Where the purchaser of the tracks and rails of a street railway company failed to organize a corporation and operate the road within 60 days as required by Rev. Laws, c. 112, § 13, and thereby forfeited such right and the gross receipts were insufficient to pay operating expenses, such purchaser was under no duty to use the tracks so purchased for the operation of a railway. Id. Rails of a street railway company imbedded in the street remain personal property and are subject to disposition as such. Id.

53. A contract by which an electric interurban railway sold its plant and privileges construed and held to pass the right of the seller to have installed certain rotary motors purchased under conditional sale, but such contract had not been recorded as required by Comp. Laws 1897, § 6336. Hogan v. Detroit United R. Co. [Mich.] 111 N. W. 765.

55. See 6 C. L. 1564, n. 43 et seq.

56. Where a street railway company, in laying its track, failed to follow the exact line established by the borough, but the borough acquiesced in it for ten years, it constitutes a ratification and the borough cannot object where the railroad company follows the same line in relaying its tracks. Borough of Bridgewater v. Beaver Valley Trac. Co., 214 Pa. 343, 63 A. 796.

street, it is a taking of property without due process to grant another company a right to lay tracks in the same space.[57] A change or alteration of route is permitted by general railroad law of 1850 only for improvement of the line and not for the purpose of increasing revenues or changing its direction.[58] A company may be compelled by mandamus to change the location of its line where it is under legal obligation to do so.[59] Injunction will not lie to protect the located right of way from interference by another company which is seeking to acquire the same by purchase and condemnation, and whose engineers are surveying with a view to immediate occupation.[60]

Construction.[61]—A street railway company must keep a portion of the streets occupied by its tracks in repair,[62] and as a general rule it is made a condition of the franchise that the company pave the portion of the street upon which its tracks are laid[63] and keep such portion in repair.[64] This rule applies where the track is extended.[65] Where the street is paved by a municipality, it may recover the cost from

57. Where a street railway company is granted permission to lay its tracks in a street, allowing a later corporation to lay a part of its tracks on the tracks of the first company is an unconstitutional taking of the property of the first company. Commonwealth v. Bond, 214 Pa. 307, 63 A. 741.

58. Webb v. Forty-Second St., etc., R. Co., 102 N. Y. S. 762. The determination of the railroad commissioners in regard to the change of location of a street railroad is final. The omission of the clerk of the railroad commissioners, within five days after the filing of the certificate of their decision, to give notice of such determination to all parties of record, does not deprive the railroad corporation of its right to construct and operate its road, or make that a public nuisance which would otherwise be a lawful use of the street. Parsons v. Waterville & O. St. R. Co., 101 Me. 173, 63 A. 728.

59. Where a street railroad was under a legal obligation to change the location of its line on the demand of the city's board of public works preliminary to the improvement of the street, the city is entitled to compel such change by mandamus. People v. Geneva, etc., Trac. Co., 112 App. Div. 581, 98 N. Y. S. 719.

60. Fayetteville St. R. v. Aberdeen & R. R. Co., 142 N. C. 423, 55 S. E. 345.

61. See 6 C. L. 1564, n. 41 et seq.

62. The portions of streets occupied by a street railway company must be kept in good condition by it, though there is no express contract or statutory direction to that effect. City of Reading v. United Trac. Co. [Pa.] 64 A. 446. A street railway company is bound to keep its road bed in repair. City of Shreveport v. Nelson [La.] 43 So. 389. It must maintain its road bed. Id. A law requiring street railways to keep in repair a certain portion of the street imposes such duty irrespective of request or demand by local authorities. Schuster v. Forty-Second St. etc., R. Co., 102 N. Y. S. 1054. A street railway company required by statute to keep a certain portion of the street in repair owes no duty to travelers in respect to the repair of the street except the specific duty imposed by statute. Crotty v. Danbury [Conn.] 65 A. 147.

63. An ordinance granting a franchise which requires the company to pave the street eight feet wide for single track and sixteen feet for double track does not require the company to pave any portion of a street before it commences to lay its tracks, because until then it is not known how much it is required to pave. Uhlich's Estate v. Chicago, 224 Ill. 402, 79 N. E. 598. Repeal of § 7 did not terminate the obligation of the company to pave streets as imposed by a local grant previously made under the repealed statute. Blodgett v. Worcester Consol. St. R. Co. [Mass.] 78 N. E. 222. Section 7, Pub. St. c. 113, provides that the board of aldermen may grant an order for the location of a street railway "under such restrictions as they deem public interests require," and § 32 provides that a street railway shall keep in repair a certain portion of the paving of the streets. Held § 7 is supplementary to § 32 as conferring jurisdiction on the board of aldermen to impose conditions that the company shall pave to a greater width than prescribed by § 32. Id. An act requiring street railroads to stand the cost of paving and repairing that portion of the street occupied by their tracks is valid as within the power reserved by the state to alter or amend the charter of a street railroad company which required it to keep the street between its tracks with a space of two feet on each side of the tracks in good and sufficient repair. Fair Haven & W. R. Co. v. New Haven, 27 S. Ct. 74.

64. An order requiring a street railway company to lay and maintain paving in certain streets held not limited to paving only but included cost of subsequent maintenance. Blodgett v. Worcester Consol. St. R. Co. [Mass.] 78 N. E. 222.

65. A street railway company incorporated under Laws 1863, p. 603, c. 361, and authorized to construct an extension by an amendment to the original act. Held bound to pave and repair the streets where the extension was laid, though the amendatory act permitting the extension contained no provision rquiring them to pave. City of New York v. Harlem Bridge, etc., R. Co., 186 N. Y. 304, 78 N. E. 1072. Laws 1890, p. 1113, c. 565, § 98, requires street railway companies to keep in repair a strip of street two feet in width outside their tracks on each side thereof. City of Amsterdam v. Fonda, etc., R. Co., 101 N. Y. S. 694.

the company.[66] The obligation to pave requires the company to use the same material as is used in other portions of the street.[67] The fact that a company complies with an order requiring it to pave certain streets does not estop it to thereafter contest the legality of the order.[68] Before construction work is commenced, conditions precedent must be complied with.[69] In the construction of the track and appliances, the conditions prescribed must be adhered to[70] and improvements stipulated for in the contract must be made.[71] Suitable drainage facilities must be provided if required.[72] The track must be fenced if required.[73] The streets may not be imposed

66. Plaintiff city sued to recover from a street railway company the cost of repaving a part of the street. The evidence showed that after the 30 days' notice required by the ordinance the company failed to do the work. Held that it could not, without showing actual loss, defend on the ground that its obligation was only to repave its portion, while the city was repaving the rest, and the city did not repave until several months after the expiration of the notice, and that after the notice choice of three kinds of pavement was reduced to two. City of Reading v. Reading, etc., R. Co. [Pa.] 64 A. 335. In an action against a street railway company by a city to recover for paving a portion of a street with asphalt, the city must show that the repairs were necessary, that notice had been given by the city to the defendant to repair the tracks by paving them with asphalt, and that the repairing was reasonable, necessary, and proper. City of Reading v. United Trac. Co. [Pa.] 64 A. 446.

67. Under Laws 1871, p. 1436, c. 658, requiring the grantees of a franchise to pave the street, etc. Held where the town authorities determined that a street should be paved with granite block, the company's obligation required it to pave the space between the rails in the same manner, though it necessitated the laying of new pavement. City of New York v. Harlem Bridge etc., R. Co., 186 N. Y. 304, 78 N. E. 1072.

68. Blodgett v. Worcester Consol. St. R. Co. [Mass.] 78 N. E. 222.

69. An ordinance which requires street railway companies and other corporations holding fanchises to file an application for a permit before entering upon the streets, and also file epecifications as to the manner in which work is to be constructed, and fix the location and give bond to hold the city harmless for damages caused by the proposed work and giving the city council power to grant or refuse such permit, is not void as interfering with the franchise rights in the streets. State v. Frost [Neb.] 110 N. W. 986. The court will not presume that under such ordinance the council will abuse its discretion but will presume that the permit will be granted if conditions are met. Id.

70. When a trolley company has laid down its railway in the streets of a city and has obtained by petition from the governing body an ordinance granting such a right and fixing the route of the road and the places where the poles are to be located according to a map accompanying said petition, pursuant to the street railway act of April 21, 1896 (P. L. 1896, p. 329), it cannot afterwards lawfully place or erect its poles at places in the street different from those so designated. Moore v. Camden & T. R. Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 64 A. 116. If a trolley company locate one of said poles in the street at a place upon land not thus fixed and designated and without the authority of the owner of the fee thereof, it becomes a trespasser and the owner may have relief by an action of ejectment to recover possession of the land thus occupied by the pole, such possession to be afterwards held subject to the public ceasement. Id. A city charter provided that if any street in which a street surface railroad "is now or shall hereafter be operated" should be paved, repaired, or altered, etc., the board of public works should have power to require the railroad corporation operating such street surface railroad to change its grade and line to conform to such alteration or improvement in such manner as the board should designate at the expense of such railroad company. Held that such provision was not unconstitutional as an impairment of the contract rights of a street railroad operating its line on the north side of a street under a franchise acquired from the city, though the required change of location would necessitate a large expenditure on the part of the railroad company. People v. Geneva, etc., Trac. Co., 112 App. Div. 581, 98 N. Y. S. 719.

71. Where a railway company and a town agreed to build a bridge and necessary approaches, the question whether the company was to construct a sewer drop on the bridge was one of intent and was for the jury to determine. North Braddock Borough v. Monongahela St. R. Co. [Pa.] 66 A. 152. Where a street railway company is by its charter required to keep in repair a certain portion of the street and no reference is made to bridges as distinguished from streets, the bridges are a part of the "streets" and the company must repair them. Northern Cent. R. Co. v. United Rys. & Elec. Co. [Md.] 66 A. 444. Where a company agreed to build a bridge and approaches so that it would be a part of the street, and a sufficient surface could be obtained only by encroaching on private property or by building a retaining wall, the company was liable for the cost of constructing the retaining wall where it only built a part of it and the borough completed the work. North Braddock Borough v. Monongahela St. R. Co. [Pa.] 66 A. 152.

72. Where an ordinance required a street railway company, its successors and assigns, to construct and maintain openings and passages for water, a purchaser from the constructing company assumed the burden of complying with such ordinance, and was bound to see that they were constructed and kept open. Ft. Smith Light & Trac. Co. v. Soard [Ark.] 96 S. W. 121.

73. An interurban electric railway comwith a greater servitude than is authorized by the franchise.[74] The manner of constructing crossings is generally regulated by statute,[75] especially at intersections with steam railroads.[76]

A street railway company must exercise reasonable care in its use of the streets [77] and in the construction of its road,[78] and where it places obstructions therein must see that they are properly guarded,[79] but it is not liable for injuries sustained because of defects which it is under no obligation to remedy.[80] In the construction of elevated roads, care must be taken for the safety of persons using the street beneath,[81] pany authorized to operate a street railroad is within a statute requiring the track to be fenced where it runs through cultivated fields. Riggs v. St. Francois County R. Co., 120 Mo. App. 335, 96 S. W. 707. It is not relieved of such duty because its track is constructed on a public road. Id.

74. A borough, in a bill against a street railway company, charged that it was building a double track railway to the irreparable damage of the borough, and the answer admitted the construction of the double track but denied irreparable damage. Held that under the pleadings the court could not find as a fact that the alleged double track was in fact a turnout. Borough of Bridgewater v. Beaver Valley Trac. Co., 214 Pa. 343, 63 A. 796. A turnout in connection with a street car line is a short line of track having connection by means of switches with the main track, and an additional track in a borough cannot be considered a turnout, where, taken in connection with the original track and with a double track railway with which the two tracks connected at the limits of the borough, it constitutes an unbroken double track line. Id.

75. An interurban railroad for the operation of cars by electricity and by tractive friction is not within 97 Ohio Laws, p. 546, providing how crossings may be constructed. Commissioners of Ross County v. Scioto Valley Trac. Co., 75 Ohio St. 548, 80 N. E. 176.

76. The plenary power given city councils by Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, to regulate the crossing of streets by railroads, includes power to authorize a street railroad to cross a steam railroad, and such power is not taken away by Railroad and Warehouse Commission Act. 3 Stan. C. Ann. St. Ill. c. 114, par. 112. East St. Louis R. Co. v. Louisville & M. R. Co. [C. C. A.] 149 F. 159. Where after the granting of a charter containing such conditions a steam railway company became liable to the city to repair a bridge and did so, it became subrogated to the rights of the city against the street railway company. Northern Cent. R. Co. v. United Rys. & Elec. Co. [Md.] 66 A. 444. In Ohio a street railway company which has acquired the right to construct its track on a street cannot be enjoined by a steam railroad company from crossing its tracks at grade. Pennsylvania Co. v. Lake Erie, etc., R. Co., 146 F. 446. In Illinois authority given a railroad company to cross a street with its tracks does not confer exclusive rights, but the right is subordinate to the use of the street for street purposes, and the railroad company cannot enjoin a street railway company from crossing its tracks at grade on the ground that it will inconvenience it in the operation of trains. East St. Louis R. Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. [C. C. A.] 149 F. 159.

77. Where a street railway company makes an excavation in the street and leaves it open without signals, warning lights, or guards, and the driver of a vehicle drives into it, the company is liable. Evarts v. Santa Barbara Consol. R. Co. [Cal. App.] 86 P. 830.

78. The fact that a tile drain eight or nine feet below the foundation of a pillar supporting an elevated railway was broken by the settling of the pillar does not show that it was due to negligence of the company. Epstein v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co., 101 N. Y. S. 793. In an action for injuries to a fireman by striking a guy wire pole maintained by a street railway company as he was riding from the fire house to a fire on the fire wagon, the negligence of the plaintiff and the negligence of the defendant in placing the pole too near the driveway were held to be for the jury. Lambert v. Westchester Elec. R. Co., 100 N. Y. S. 665. Evidence insufficient to show that one who tripped on a frog alleged to have been negligently maintained was in the exercise of due care. Gilligan v. Boston El. R. Co. [Mass.] 80 N. E. 483.

79. Where a street railway having authority to use a street planted a trolley pole in the center of it, the pole being ten inches in diameter and standing on a base two and one half feet in diameter and about eighteen inches high, and no light on the pole, held the city was liable where a man was killed by his wagon being upset by striking the pole. McKim v. City of Philadelphia [Pa.] 66 A. 340. Where a witness described a pole which obstructed a street, its size, location, and conditions, his opinions as to whether it was dangerous was properly excluded. Id.

80. Where a street car company has authority to run its cars over the tracks of another company and is not required to repair the tracks or street, it is not liable where a pedestrian breaks his leg because of a defect in the track. Ross v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 101 N. Y. S. 932.

81. Whether an elevated railway did all that it could to prevent sparks from falling on pedestrians in the street is a question for the jury. Walsh v. Boston El. R. Co. [Mass.] 78 N. E. 451. Evidence sufficient to show negligence where a pedestrian on the street was injured by a piece of metal falling into his eye from an elevated railway, and it was known for several months prior to the accident that there was considerable trouble from sparks. Woodall v. Boston El. R. Co. [Mass.] 78 N. E. 446. Evidence sufficient to show negligence in failing to provide protection for persons using the surface of the street where a pedestrian was and appliances necessary to prevent materials from falling on them must be used.[82] The surface of the street is presumed safe for travel and a traveler thereon is not bound to wait until a train on an elevated road has passed or until no train is passing.[83] A pedestrian is not negligent as a matter of law in looking up as he passes under an elevated railway.[84]

§ 6. Injuries to passengers.[85]

§ 7. Injuries to employes.[86]

§ 8. Injuries to persons other than passengers or servants. A. General rules as to negligence and contributory negligence.[87]—Cars must be equipped as required by statute[88] and be operated on their established routes.[89] In the use of its electric motive power, care proportionate to its dangerous character must be exercised,[90] and ordinances regulating the operation of cars must be complied with.[91] As to all injured by a piece of metal falling into his eye from an elevated railroad. Id. Evidence sufficient to show that a piece of metal falling into a pedestrian's eye fell from the contact shoe on a train running on an elevated railroad. Id.

82. Where an appliance on an elevated railway is necessary for the protection of persons on the street below, the company should apply to the railroad commissioners for their approval of such appliance or put one in without such approval. Woodall v. Boston El. R. Co. [Mass.] 78 N. E. 446. Where an appliance could be used on an elevated railway to prevent sparks falling, it was the duty of the company to use it. It is not enough that the company does all it reasonably can to prevent sparks but it must do all it can, if it is impossible to prevent sparks, to see that no one is injured. Id. Under the Statutes of Massachusetts railroad commissioners are required to approve plans of an elevated railroad before it can be constructed and operated and their approval is conclusive on the right of the company to construct and operate the road, but it is bound to use reasonable care. Id. The certificate of the railroad commissioners is not within Rev. Laws, c. 111, § 20, providing that no advice of commissioners shall impair the obligations of railroads or relieve them from liability for negligence, but is a condition precedent without which an elevated railway company cannot construct or operate its road. Id. Where a pedestrian was injured by a piece of metal falling into his eye from an elevated railroad, a finding of the jury in response to a question whether the negligence was the result of failure to use a different contact shoe or failure to apply to the commissioners for approval of the contact plan, that it was the latter, was a finding that a pen was needed for the protection of pedestrians. Id.

88. It is negligence per se to fail to equip cars with fenders as required by ordinance. Ashley v. Kanawha Valley Trac. Co. [W. Va.] 55 S. E. 1016.

89. An ordinance providing that no change in the routing of cars should be made without consent of municipal authorities and that a car should not be turned from its established route except in case of unavoidable accident or when it was about to be turned into a car shed does not prohibit the diversion of a car from its route for the purpose of making up time which had been unavoidably lost. Dryden v. St. Louis Transit Co., 120 Mo. App. 424, 96 S. W. 1044. In such case there is no breach of the carrier's contract where it offers passengers transfers to other cars, though such transfers are refused. Id.

90. An electric railway company in its use of electricity in city streets must use due care and caution for the prevention of accident and for the protection of persons using such streets. Such care must always be in proportion to the danger of the surroundings and to the character of the appliances used. Wood v. Wilmington City R. Co. [Del.] 64 A. 246. For an electric railway company to permit its trolley wire at a point where its line crossed a railroad to sag several feet below the height of twenty-two feet above the railroad track, required by statute, whereby a brakeman on top of a freight train was injured, is negligence, making it liable for the injury. Smedley v. St. Louis & S. R. Co., 118 Mo. App. 103, 93 S. W. 295. Where a street railway company which maintained a grade crossing of a steam railroad failed to elevate its trolley wire in order to conform to the grade of the railroad and a brakeman was injured by coming in contact with it while passing under the same and there was evidence that the wires could have been elevated so as to be out of danger, the question of negligence was for the jury. Pittsburgh Rys. Co. v. Chapman [C. C. A.] 145 F. 886. In such case the steam railroad company and the street railway company are not joint tort feasors where the only act of negligence with which the former could be charged was omitting to warn the brakeman of the danger, or itself requiring the street railway company to raise the wire. Id.

91. Validity and interpretation of ordinances: An ordinance is valid which makes it unlawful for a street car to cross the tracks of a steam railroad until after the conductor goes across on foot and signals the motorman. Indianapolis Trac. & T. Co. v. Romans [Ind. App.] 79 N. E. 1068; Indianapolis Trac. & T. Co. v. Formes [Ind. App.] 80 N. E. 872. An ordinance requiring street car conductors to precede their cars over steam railroad crossings, and requiring cars to be stopped twenty feet from a crossing, persons in the street, a street car company owes the duty of taking all precautions for their safety dictated by reasonable prudence [92] and is liable for injuries resulting to them from its negligence,[93] unless the contributory negligence of the person injured was the proximate cause of the injury.[94] Contributory negligence of the does not require a car to be stopped between two steam railroad tracks which are about eighty feet apart. Bartholomaus v. Milwaukee El. R. & Light Co. [Wis.] 109 N. W. 143. Code 1896, § 3441, requiring trains to stop within one hundred feet of a crossing and not proceed until they have ascertained that the way is clear, applies to street railroads. Montgomery St. R. Co. v. Lewis [Ala.] 41 So. 736. Evidence sufficient to show that such statute had been violated. Id. A municipality may, within reasonable limits, regulate and prescribe the speed at which cars may be operated over its streets, and when it has done so by valid ordinance it is negligence per se to violate such ordinance. Ashley v. Kanawha Valley Trac. Co. [W. Va.] 55 S. E. 1016.

Violation as negligence: The operation of a car at a greater speed than that limited by law is negligence. Steinmann v. St. Louis Transit Co., 116 Mo. App. 673, 94 S. W. 799; Campbell v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 58; Peterson v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo.] 97 S. W. 860; Anniston El. & Gas Co. v. Elwell, 144 Ala. 317, 42 So. 46. The rate of speed may be negligent though within that limited by law. Beier v. St. Louis Transit Co., 197 Mo. 215, 94 S. W. 876.

92. Where a company is authorized by ordinance to operate its lines on a certain street, no inference arises that it was authorized to exclude the public from the street or operate its railway in such manner as to render the street unnecessarily dangerous. McKim v. Philadelphia [Pa.] 66 A. 340. That a street railroad company was authorized by the railroad commissioners to run cars before its track was finished and put in proper condition does not exempt the company from liability for injuries resulting from the imperfect conditon of the track, and where a horse, frightened by an approaching street car, would nevertheless have caused no injury but for the imperfect condition of the unfinished railroad track, the street railway company is liable for the injury even though there was no fault in the management of the car. Haynes v. Waterville & O. St. R., 101 Me. 335, 64 A. 614. The operation of a street railroad for other purposes than street traffic, before the railroad commissioners have granted a certificate of its safety for public travel, is not forbidden by Rev. St. c. 53, § 20. Parsons v. Waterville & O. St. R. Co., 101 Me. 173, 63 A. 728. Where a street car is obstructed by a coal wagon and the motorman leaves his car, and in attempting to start the horses of the wagon negligently injures the driver, the street railway company is not liable to the driver inasmuch as the motorman was acting outside the scope of his employment. Murphey v. Philadelphia Rapid Transit Co., 30 Pa. Super. Ct. 87. A public street is not to be regarded as a passenger station for the safety of which the company is responsible when persons alight from a car. Thompson v. Gardner, etc., R. Co. [Mass.] 78 N. E. 854.

Speed: It is negligence to operate cars at such a rate of speed as not to have them under control and be able to stop them readily at street intersections. Ashley v. Kanawha Valley Trac. Co. [W. Va.] 55 S. E. 1016. Whether running a car at twenty-five miles per hour in approaching a crossing in the nighttime was negligence held a question for the jury. Carey v. Metropolitan St. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 101 S. W. 1123. For the operatives of a street car to approach a street intersection at a speed of fifteen miles an hour is negligence. Clancy v. New York City R. Co., 100 N. Y. S. 1046. Where the view of a street crossing is obstructed, the motorman in charge of a car must approach it with caution. Mullin v. St. Louis Transit Co., 196 Mo. 572, 94 S. W. 288. A motorman operating a car at a high rate of speed at a crossing where, because of passing vehicles, his view is so obstructed that he cannot determine whether the way is clear. Hafner v. St. Louis Transit Co., 197 Mo. 196, 94 S. W. 291. That because of the frosty condition of the track the motorman was unable to control the car does not relieve the company where the motorman was aware of the danger of a collision for a sufficient length of time to have prevented it. Springfield Consolidated R. Co. v. Gregory, 122 Ill. App. 607. Cars must be run at a reasonable rate of speed and be equipped with signals and means of controlling it. Davis v. Durham Trac. Co., 141 N. C. 134, 53 S. E. 617. Where a car is being propelled along a busy street at from twenty to twenty-five miles an hour, ordinary care required the driver to exercise a high degree of vigilance to prevent accidents. Indianapolis Trac. & T. Co. v. Kidd [Ind.] 79 N. E. 347.

93. See, also, post, §§ 8 B, 8 C. Evidence sufficient to show that a collision was due to negligence of the company and that one injured was free from contributory negligence. San Antonio Trac. Co. v. Haines [Tex. Civ. App.] 100 S. W. 788. Evidence insufficient to show contributory negligence as a matter of law where a motorman was injured in a head-on collision with the car of another company, where the injured person had the right of way and was running slowly with headlight burning and the car with which he collided approached without headlight or signal. Cutler v. Grand Rapids, etc., R. Co. [Mich.] 14 Det. Leg. N. 7, 111 N. W. 191.

94. See, also, post §§ 8 B, 8 C. It is proper to instruct that contributory negligence in order to bar recovery must directly contribute to the accident and that though one injured was negligent, yet, if the company could by stopping the car in the shortest space possible have avoided the injury and failed to do so, it was liable. White v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. [Mo.] 101 S. W. 14. Though a car is run at a rate of speed in excess of the rate prescribed by ordinance, it is not liable where a person steps onto the track immediately in front of the car and such negligence was not the cause of the injury. Foreman v. Norfolk, Portsmouth & Newport News Co. [Va.] 56 S. E. 805. One person injured is no defense to the company if its negligence was willful.[95] What constitutes negligence or contributory negligence,[96] and whether negligence or contributory nelgigence exists,[97] are generally questions of fact. At common-law the rights of a traveler and a street car company in the street are equal,[98] but due to the fact that a car can be operated only on the portion of the street occupied by the tracks, it is generally held that [99] the rights of the public to use the track is subordinate to the right of the company,[1] but the company has no right to the exclusive use of injured cannot recover because of the violation of a speed ordinance unless it was the proximate cause of the injury and he was in the exercise of ordinary care. Campbell v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 58. An instruction that if the injury was caused by the negligence of the company and without the want of ordinary care on the part of the person injured he was entitled to recover is erroneous, because, if he failed to exercise ordinary care and such failure contributed to the injury, he could not recover. Wilkie v. Richmond Trac. Co., 105 Va. 290, 54 S. E. 43.

95. Contributory negligence is no defense if the company was guilty of wanton or willful misconduct. It may be guilty of such misconduct without actual intention to inflict injury. Birmingham R., Light & Power Co. v. Ryan [Ala.] 41 So. 616. Evidence sufficient to show willful negligence where a car approached a vehicle from the rear at an excessive rate of speed and it appeared that the motorman knew of the perilous position of the driver in ample time to have avoided the accident. Mayesville v. Metropolitan St. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 97 S. W. 612. Where one struck was guilty of contributory negligence; he must prove that the motorman was negligently indifferent to his safety and not guilty of a mere error of judgment. Bennett v. Metropolitan St. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 480. A verdict should be directed where the evidence shows contributory negligence and there is no evidence of wanton negligence on the part of the company. Sims v. St. Louis & S. R. Co., 116 Mo. App. 572, 92 S. W. 909.

96. Running cars at a speed in excess of the rate fixed by ordinance is evidence of negligence. Davis v. Durham Trac. Co., 141 N. C. 134, 53 S. E. 617. Evidence of negligence in running at an excessive rate of speed and in failing to give signals held for the jury. Cluff v. Pittsburg R. Co., 144 F. 710. Question of contributory negligence in one driving on the track held for the jury. Indianapolis St. R. Co. v. Marschke [Ind.] 77 N. E. 945. Question of contributory negligence held for the jury. McQuisten v. Detroit Citizens' St. R. Co. [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 939, 110 N. W. 118; Curran v. St. Paul City R. Co. [Minn.] 110 N. W. 259; Davis v. Durham Trac. Co., 141 N. C. 134, 53 S. E. 617. Questions of negligence and contributory negligence held for the jury where a car collided with a vehicle. Peterson v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo.] 97 S. W. 860. Question of negligence and contributory negligence held for the jury. Hengesbach v. Detroit United R. [Mich.] 14 Det. Leg. N. 35, 111 N. W. 345.

97. The question of contributory negligence is for the jury if reasonable minds may differ as to whether a person injured in a collision at a cross walk was negligent. Bauer v. North Jersey St. R. Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 65 A. 1037. Where an electric railway is under the control and management of a company and the accident is of such a character as to show that it could not have happened in the ordinary course of events under reasonably careful management, it affords some evidence, in the absence of any explanation, that the accident arose from the want of care, but if it is satisfactorily shown that the defect claimed to have caused the accident did not exist at the time of the accident, negligence would be rebutted. Wood v. Wilmington City R. Co. [Del.] 64 A. 246. Whether a car could have been stopped in time to avoid an injury held a question for the jury. Indianapolis St. R. Co. v. Hackney [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 1048. Questions of negligence and contributory negligence held for the jury where a pedestrian was killed at night. Goff v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo.] 98 S. W. 49. Where a driver was injured at a crossing. Boggs v. Pittsburg, etc., R. Co. [Pa.] 65 A. 535. Question of contributory negligence held for the jury where a pedestrian was injured while crossing the track at night. Armstrong v. Consol. Trac. Co. [Pa.] 66 A. 75. Evidence of contributory negligence held for the jury. Cluff v. Pittsburg R. Co., 144 F. 710. Evidence of contributory negligence held for the jury where a pedestrian was injured at a crossing where the view of the track was obstructed. Milford & U. St. R. Co. v. Cline [C. C. A.] 150 F. 325. Evidence of negligence and of contributory negligence held for the jury where a child was injured. Burns v. Worcester Consol. St. R. Co. [Mass.] 78 N. E. 740.

98. Each must use due care. McCarthy v. Consol. R. Co. [Conn.] 63 A. 725. A street railway company has an equal right with the public in the use of the street at street crossings. Neither has a right superior to the other. Ashley v. Kanawha Valley Trac. Co. [W. Va.] 55 S. E. 1016. A street railway company has no superior and predominant right to the use of the streets on which its tracks are laid over the rights of other users, except the right of way when required. Indianapolis Trac. & T. Co. v. Kidd [Ind.] 79 N. E. 347.

99. Persons using the street and cars have common rights in the use of the street, but, as the car must run on the track, other travelers must change their course and give way to the car to prevent collision. Davis v. Durham Trac. Co., 141 N. C. 134, 53 S. E. 617.

1. Barto v. Beaver Valley Trac. Co. [Pa.] 65 A. 792. Street railway companies and travelers have equal rights to the use of the street except that it is the duty of the traveler to get out of the way of cars and exercise ordinary care for his own safety. Indianapolis St. R. Co. v. Hackney [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 1043. Though street railways have no exclusive right to the use of the any portion of the street, and in the operation of its cars must use the degree of care required of a man of ordinary prudence under like circumstances.[2] In the operation of its cars on the company, it is only bound to exercise the care required of an ordinarily prudent man under similar circumstances to prevent injury to pedestrians,[3] or to fail to give proper warning of the approach of cars at street crossings[4] or railroad crossings.[5] A higher degree of care is required where a car is being operated on a crowded street,[6] or when it is approaching a street crossing,[7] than is required in sparsely settled communities. The duty of the motorman to keep a lookout for persons liable to be run over applies to the entire line of the street and not simply to crossings,[8] and the duty to check the speed of the car in order to avert a collision is not limited to the time of actual danger of collision but applies as soon as danger becomes apparent.[9] Street car operatives must anticipate the presence of persons in the street,[10] and on discovery of a traveler in a perilous position must exercise care to avoid injury to him,[11] but a conductor owes no duty to lookout for persons driving along the track in front of the car.[12] A motorman may presume that a person on the street will remain on the portion of the street not occupied by tracks, they have the right of way and it is the duty of other persons using the tracks to give way. Ford's Adm'r v. Paducah City R. Co., 30 Ky. L. R. 644, 99 S. W. 355. A street railway has the right of way and ordinarily it is the duty of other travelers to yield it to approaching cars. Daniels v. Bay City Trac. & El. Co., 143 Mich. 493, 13 Det. Leg. N. 15, 107 N. W. 94.

2. San Antonio Trac. Co. v. Kumpf [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 863. Instruction stating this rule held proper. Id. It has no exclusive right to the portion of the street upon which its tracks are laid. San Antonio Trac. Co. v. Haines [Tex. Civ. App.] 100 S. W. 788. An instruction that the company has a right to use its track does not mislead the jury to believe that such right is exclusive. Ford's Adm'r v. Paducah City R. Co., 30 Ky. L. R. 644, 99 S. W. 355.

3. Rubinovitch v. Boston El. R. Co. [Mass.] 77 N. E. 895. A motorman is not required to use the highest degree of care to avoid an injury to one crossing the street, but only ordinary care. Solomon v. New York City R. Co., 50 Misc. 557, 99 N. Y. S. 529. An instruction that it is the duty of an operator of a car to use "ordinary care" in its management to avoid injury to persons using the street is not bad for failure to require the exercise of "great care." Henderson v. Los Angeles Trac. Co. [Cal.] 89 P. 976. Conductor held not negligent in failing to warn a pedestrian alighting from the car of the existence of a gutter. Thompson v. Gardner, etc., R. Co. [Mass.] 78 N. E. 854. A statute making railroads responsible for all damages to property caused by the running of trains is not applicable to street railroads. Little Rock R. & Elec. Co. v. Neuman, 77 Ark. 599, 92 S. W. 864.

4. Ashley v. Kanawha Valley Trac. Co. [W. Va.] 55 S. E. 1016.

5. At crossings with steam railroads, a degree of care proportionate to the danger must be observed. It is negligence to run a car across the track of a steam railroad directly in front of an approaching train without effort to stop it and without first ascertaining whether the way was clear. Indianapolis Trac. & T. Co. v. Romans [Ind. App.] 79 N. E. 1068.

6. A street railway company must use greater care in crowded streets and at street crossings. Garrett v. People's R. Co. [Del.] 64 A. 254.

7. More care is required at street intersections than at other points, and it is negligence to run cars over crossings at an excessive or unusual rate of speed. Ashley v. Kanawha Valley Trac. Co. [W. Va.] 55 S. E. 1016.

8. Anniston Elec. & Gas Co. v. Elwell, 144 Ala. 317, 42 So. 45.

9. The duty of a motorman to check the speed of his car in order to avert collision is not limited to the time when the vehicle is on the track or in actual danger of collision, but applies as soon as he sees or should see a vehicle approaching the track with the apparent intention of crossing. Barrie v. St. Louis Transit Co., 119 Mo. App. 38, 96 S. W. 233.

10. One operating a car is bound to anticipate the presence of persons in the street. He must be watchful to see that the way is clear and regulate his speed accordingly and operate the car with due regard to the safety of persons using the street. Henderson v. Los Angeles Trac. Co. [Cal.] 89 P. 976.

11. It is the duty of a street railway company to avoid injury to a person on its track in a dangerous position and to stop its car, if there is time to do so, in the exercise of ordinary care, after the danger is or should have been observed. Indianapolis St. R. Co. v. Hackney [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 1048. Operators of cars must keep them under reasonable control and keep a diligent lookout for persons who are or may go upon the tracks, and if they see any person in danger use reasonable diligence to avoid injury to him. Birmingham R., Light & Power Co. v. Clarke [Ala.] 41 So. 829. Where a motorman can see that a horse is becoming frightened and is likely to back a buggy onto the track in front of the car, it is his duty to slacken speed or stop the car if necessary to avert collision. South Covington, etc., R. Co. v. Cleveland, 30 Ky. L. R. 1072, 100 S. W. 283.

12. Wallack v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo. App.] 100 S. W. 496.

the railway track, at least until he shows by his actions that he intends to cross.[13] In Missouri it is required by statute that street car operators keep a vigilant lookout for persons on or moving toward the tracks and when danger becomes apparent stop the car in the shortest time possible.[14]

"Last clear chance" doctrine.[15]—Under this doctrine contributory negligence of the person injured is no defense to the company if it was but an intervening cause of the injury and the company could have averted the accident after discovery of the perilous position of the traveler.[16] Whether the motorman had the last clear chance to avert the injury may be a question for the jury.[17]

13. Birmingham R., Light & Power Co. v. Clarke [Ala.] 41 So. 829. Rev. St. 1899, § 2864, providing that when a person shall die because of the negligence of any servant or employe running a car the corporation shall forfeit $5,000, applies to street railways. McQuade v. St. Louis & Suburban R. Co. [Mo.] 98 S. W. 552. This statute gives a cause of action whether the negligence complained of is common law or statutory. Id.

14. Peterson v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo.] 97 S. W. 860. An ordinance requiring a person in charge of a car to keep a vigilant watch, especially for children, and on the first appearance of danger stop the car in the shortest space possible, is valid, being merely a declaration of the common law. Deschner v. St. Louis & M. R. R. Co. [Mo.] 98 S. W. 737.

15. The "last clear chance" doctrine is applicable in an action for injuries resulting from a collision between a car and a vehicle. Indianapolis St. R. Co. v. Bolin [Ind. App.] 78 N. E. 210.

16. Kramm v. Stockton El. R. Co. [Cal. App.] 86 P. 738; Birmingham R., Light & Power Co. v. Ryan [Ala.] 41 So. 616; Northern Texas Trac. Co. v. Thompson [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 48, 95 S. W. 708; McQuade v. St. Louis & Suburban R. Co. [Mo.] 98 S. W. 552. Evidence sufficient to show that the motorman had the "last clear chance" to avoid the accident and failed to exercise the care required of him. Ft. Smith Light & Trac. Co. v. Barnes [Ark.] 96 S. W. 976; Abbott v. Kansas City El. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 97 S. W. 198; Indianapolis Trac. & T. Co. v. Kidd [Ind.] 79 N. E. 347; Richmond v. Metropolitan St. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 100 S. W. 54. Though one driving along the track is negligent, yet if the motorman could or should see him in time to avert collision and fails to exercise ordinary care, the company is liable. Recktenwald v. Metropolitan St. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 97 S. W. 557. Where it appeared that one injured drove onto the track when a car was seventy-five or one hundred feet distant, but the motorman admitted that he saw him, and it appeared that the car could have been stopped within fifteen or twenty feet, the court properly refused to nonsuit plaintiff. Wallack v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo. App.] 100 S. W. 496. Where one placed himself in a position of peril on the track, the company was liable where it failed to exercise ordinary care to prevent injury to him, though the negligence was not characterized as willful. White v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. [Mo.] 101 S. W. 14. Where one injured was guilty of contributory negligence, he cannot recover unless the motorman had the "last clear chance" to avoid the collision. Ft. Smith Light & Trac. Co. v. Flint [Ark.] 99 S. W. 79. It is not now the law of Ohio, if it ever was, that a railway company is liable for the injury of one who was guilty of contributory negligence, but whose peril was or might have been seen by the engineer or motorman in time to have prevented the accident. Northern Ohio Trac. Co. v. Drown, 7 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 549. Where a driver attempting to cross the track had his back to the approaching car and was unaware of any imminent danger, the doctrine of "last clear chance" cannot be invoked by the company. Philbin v. Denver City Tramway Co. [Colo.] 85 P. 630. Contributory negligence in attempting to cross in front of a car will bar recovery if the motorman did not actually see the person in time to stop the car, though he should have seen him in the exercise of ordinary care. Dallas Consol. El. St. R. Co. v. Conn [Tex. Civ. App.] 100 S. W. 1019. Contributory negligence in attempting to cross the track in front of a car will bar recovery if the motorman could not stop the car in time to avoid collision, though he could have stopped it if it had been equipped with proper appliances. Id. Where the plaintiff, a pedestrian injured while crossing a street car track, admitted that he was negligent but relied on the "last clear chance" rule, and the plaintiff testified that he did not slacken his pace or look to see if a car was approaching from the time he left the sidewalk until the moment the car struck him, and it appeared that the distance between the point where he turned to cross the street and the point where he attempted to cross the track was but a few feet, and there was no evidence that the gripman could by the exercise of due care and diligence have stopped the car in time to prevent the accident, it was held that plaintiff's contributory negligence defeated his right to recover. Boring v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 194 Mo. 541, 92 S. W. 655. If after the driver of a vehicle has driven within the zone of danger the motorman discovers his peril and fails to do all he can to avoid a collision, the driver's negligence would not be the proximate cause of his injury. If a traveler was guilty of contributory negligence, the company is liable only where willful or wanton negligence is shown, or it appears that they were negligent after the peril of the traveler was discovered. Birmingham R., Light & Power Co. v. Clarke [Ala.] 41 So. 829; Garth v. North Alabama Trac. Co. [Ala.] 42 So. 627. Failure of a motorman to use all means at his command to stop a car upon discovering one in a perilous position does not render the company liable unless the use of such means would have averted the collision. San Antonio Trac. Co. v. Kumpf [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 863. Instructions not conforming to this rule held erroneous. Id.

17. Whether a motorman had the last clear chance to avoid a collision held a

(§ 8) B. Travelers on highway. Injuries to pedestrians.[18]—A pedestrian in approaching and crossing a street car track must exercise the degree of care required of an ordinarily prudent person under the same circumstances.[19] He must stop and look[20] if the exercise of ordinary care demands such precautions,[21] but the high degree of care required of one about to cross a steam railroad does not apply.[22] A traveler approaching a track may assume that cars will be run thereon in obedience to speed ordinances and that persons in charge of the car will keep a vigilant watch and stop the car if danger becomes apparent,[23] and it is not negligence to attempt question for the jury. Cole v. Metropolitan St. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 97 S. W. 555.

18. See 6 C. L. 1567.

19. A pedestrian crossing a street upon which street cars run must exercise his powers of observation while in a place of safety to discover approaching cars which may put him in a place of danger. Hageman v. North Jersey St. R. Co. [N. J. Law] 65 A. 834. If obstacles obstruct the view of a pedestrian about to cross the track, reasonable prudence requires delay until such observation as is requisite has been made. Id. Ordinary care requires one to be reasonably observant of his condition and surroundings. Saylor v. Union Trac. Co. [Ind. App.] 81 N. E. 94. Mere inattention on the part of one crossing a track does not excuse the exercise of ordinary care. Id. Where, in an action against a street railroad for injuries to one struck by a car while crossing the track, it appeared from her evidence that she looked both ways for a car before leaving the curb, but then proceeded across the street without again looking, she failed to show freedom from contributory negligence. Solomon v. New York City R. Co., 60 Misc. 557, 99 N. Y. S. 529. Ordinary care is such care as an ordinarily prudent person would usually exercise under the same or similar circumstances. Henderson City R. Co. v. Lockett, 30 Ky. L. R. 321, 98 S. W. 303. The care required of a pedestrian approaching a crossing is governed in the Federal courts by the local decisions. Milford & U. St. R. Co. v. Cline [C. C. A.] 150 F. 325.

20. It is negligence barring recovery for one to attempt to cross a track without stopping to look or listen, where if he had done so he could have seen an approaching car. Hooks v. Huntsville R., Light & Power Co. [Ala.] 41 So. 273. Evidence sufficient to show contributory negligence as a matter of law where a pedestrian, familiar with the locality, was struck by a car on double tracks where he neither looked nor listened after he left the sidewalk. Blackwell v. Old Colony St. R. Co. [Mass.] 79 N. E. 335. Where a pedestrian while on the sidewalk sees a car approaching and starts to cross a curved track without again looking and is struck by a car, he is guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law, though there was another track which went straight ahead past the corner. Pittsburgh R. Co. v. Cluff [C. C. A.] 149 F. 732. Failure to look and listen is contributory negligence as a matter of law. Price v. Rhode Island Co. [R. I.] 66 A. 200. One who fails to look before crossing an electric railroad is guilty of contributory negligence and cannot recover where if he had looked he could have avoided the collision. Phillips v. Washington & R. R. Co. [Md.] 65 A. 422. It is contributory negligence to attempt to cross the track without looking where such precaution would disclose an approaching car in time to avoid accident. Sims v. St. Louis & S. R. Co., 116 Mo. App. 572, 92 S. W. 909. If a traveler without looking turns so suddenly onto the track that it is impossible to avoid collision, the company is not liable. Birmingham R., Light & Power Co. v. Clarke [Ala.] 41 So. 829. Evidence held to show plaintiff to be guilty of contributory negligence in failing to notice an approaching car before crossing a street, there being nothing to distract her or obstruct her view. Binder v. New York City R. Co., 99 N. Y. S. 835.

21. It is erroneous to charge that a person about to cross a track must look and listen, excluding every reason for conditions that might excuse such precautions. Saylor v. Union Trac. Co. [Ind. App.] 81 N. E. 94. One whose view is obstructed by passing vehicles is guilty of negligence in entering upon a track without looking or pausing until the obstruction has been removed. Plaintiff's intestate passed on to a track from behind a wagon which rendered him unable to see an approaching car without waiting for the wagon to pass so that he could ascertain whether a car was approaching. Held guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. Hafner v. St. Louis Transit Co., 197 Mo. 196, 94 S. W. 291. Evidence held insufficient to sustain a verdict for plaintiff on the ground of his failure to notice an approaching car before driving in on the track. Bang v. New York, etc., R. Co., 113 App. Div. 673, 99 N. Y. S. 946.

22. One about to cross a street railway track is not required to exercise the same degree of care as one about to cross a steam railroad. Perjue v. Citizens' Elec. Light & Gas Co. [Iowa] 109 N. W. 280. What constitutes ordinary care in crossing street railroads is widely different from what constitutes such care in crossing steam railroads. Kramm v. Stockton Elec. R. Co. [Cal. App.] 86 P. 738. The requirement to look and listen does not apply to street railroads. Niemyer v. Washington Water Power Co. [Wash.] 88 P. 103.

23. Peterson v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo.] 97 S. W. 860. Where at the time a person turned to cross a track the car was two hundred feet away, and at the time of the collision was running at an unusual if not unlawful speed, whether the person injured was negligent in failing to look a second time before driving onto the track was a question for the jury. Wider v. Detroit United R. Co. [Mich.] 111 N. W. 100. Where plaintiff stopped his horse and looked for a car where he could see for a distance of seventy-five to one hundred feet up the track, he was not guilty of negligence as a matter of law in failing to stop after pass-to cross in front of an approaching car if in so doing the degree of care required of a prudent person is exercised,[24] but it is negligence to attempt to cross in front of a car approaching rapidly and only a short distance off.[25] It is generally held that one who alights from a car and passes to the rear of it onto a parallel track without looking for a car approaching from the opposite direction is negligent,[26] but under ing obstructions intervening with the view where his horse's head would have been within only two feet nearest rail of the track upon which the car was traveling. Hebblethwaite v. Detroit United R. Co., 145 Mich. 13, 13 Det. Leg. N. 391, 108 N. W. 433.

24. Ashley v. Kanawha Valley Trac. Co. [W. Va.] 55 S. E. 1016. A pedestrian about to cross a street where he has seen two cars approaching rapidly from opposite directions, who passes behind one and undertakes to cross in front of the other, is not bound to anticipate negligence on the part of the motorman. But he is not absolved from the duty of exercising due care to avoid being struck by the advancing car. O'Brien v. St. Paul City R. Co., 98 Minn. 205, 108 N. W. 805. Evidence held to show contributory negligence as a matter of law. Id. One is not negligent in attempting to cross in front of a car which he sees approaching if in the exercise of common prudence he may reasonably think there is time to cross safely. McQuisten v. Detroit Citizens' St. R. Co. [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 939, 110 N. W. 118. One who attempts to cross in front of a car which is one hundred and twenty-five feet distant and he has but fifteen feet to go to be safe is not negligent as a matter of law. Duffy v. Interurban St. R. Co., 101 N. Y. S. 767. The mere fact that a traveler can see a car approaching by which he is struck does not show contributory negligence, as it must be so close and running at such speed that a prudent man would not attempt to cross in front of it. Saylor v. Union Trac. Co. [Ind. App.] 81 N. E. 94. Evidence that a car was three hundred feet away when plaintiff attempted to cross a street, that he thought he would have ample time to drive across, and would have had had the motorman performed his duty, is sufficient to justify the submission of the case to the jury. La Londe v. Trans St. Mary's Trac. Co., 145 Mich. 77, 13 Det. Leg. N. 376, 108 N. W. 365.

25. Evidence held to show contributory negligence as a matter of law where a pedestrian attempted to cross in front of a car approaching at six to nine miles per hour, seventy-five or one hundred feet distant. Healy v. United Trac. Co., 101 N. Y. S. 331. One who attempts to cross in front of a car which is approaching at a rather high rate of speed about one car length off is guilty of contributory negligence. Madden v. Boston El. R. Co. [Mass.] 80 N. E. 447. One who steps onto the track directly in front of an approaching car, where if he had looked he must have seen the car and appreciated his danger, is negligent as a matter of law. Wider v. Detroit United R. Co. [Mich.] 111 N. W. 100. Evidence sufficient to show contributory negligence where a pedestrian stepped on the track immediately in front of a car, though he testified that he did not see it. Stassen v. New York City R. Co., 102 N. Y. S. 468. Where the gong on an approaching car was sounded and the car made sufficient noise to be heard by a traveler before he attempted to cross the track, but notwithstanding he attempted to cross when the car was so close that collision could not be avoided, he was guilty of contributory negligence. Davis v. Durham Trac. Co., 141 N. C. 134, 53 S. E. 617. Where plaintiff, desiring to cross a street car track, immediately after the passing of a west-bound car, attempted to cross the track without waiting until the west-bound car had proceeded far enough to be out of his line of vision so that he could see a car approaching from the west on the opposite track by which his vehicle was struck, and he was injured before he had time to cross the track, he was guilty of contributory negligence. Rodgers v. St. Louis Transit Co., 117 Mo. App. 678, 92 S. W. 1154. Defendant's car was proceeding south in a thinly populated part of New York on a dark night at a speed of five or six miles an hour. Plaintiff's decedent appeared in front of the car either on the opposite track or between the two tracks driving some cows. As soon as he was seen the motorman, who was looking in his direction, attempted to stop the car and rang the bell, but deceased paid no attention to the bell. When the car was twenty feet from him, he attempted to cross the track on which the car was proceeding, and before the car could be stopped he was struck. Held insufficient to establish negligence on the part of the railway company. Beirne v. Union R. Co., 99 N. Y. S. 584. Where intestate deliberately stepped in front of defendant's street car when it was very close to him, running at a moderate speed, and after the gong had been sounded in due time, and the interval between his stepping on the track and the time he was struck was very brief, his negligence was part of a continuous transaction that terminated in his death and precluded a recovery. Davis v. People's R. Co. [Del.] 64 A. 70. Evidence sufficient to show contributory negligence where a woman about forty years of age and very deaf walked onto the track after she had looked and knew a car was coming, and her only excuse was that she thought she had time to cross and she kept listening but did not hear the gong. Ft. Smith Light & Trac. Co. v. Barnes [Ark.] 96 S. W. 976. Where before crossing a street plaintiff saw a car approaching at a distance of a block and a half and gave it no further attention but was struck by it when within a few feet of the opposite curb. The car was traveling at the rate of thirty miles per hour, the legal limit being twelve miles. Held the question of contributory negligence was properly left to the jury. Ward v. Marshalltown Light, Power & R. Co. [Iowa] 108 N. W. 323.

26. Evidence sufficient to show contributory negligence as a matter of law where a passenger alighting from a car where he was familiar with the surroundings went some circumstances the question of his negligence is one of fact.[27] Whether a person walking on the track is guilty of contributory negligence depends on the circumstances,[28] but the mere fact that he walks on the track is not contributory negligence,[29] and like rules apply to those working at or near track.[30] Operatives of cars behind the car and was struck by a car approaching from the opposite direction on the other track, which he could have seen half a mile off had he looked. Morice v. Milwaukee Elec. R. & Light Co. [Wis.] 109 N. W. 567. Evidence sufficient to show negligence where one alighted from a car within four or five feet of a rapidly approaching car on a parallel track operated by another company, where it appeared that he could have alighted safely on the other side. Foreman v. Norfolk, Portsmouth & Newport News Co. [Va.] 56 S. E. 805. Where a passenger alighting from a street car passed around the rear end of the car and was struck by a car coming in the opposite direction, he was guilty of contributory negligence, either in proceeding further than was necessary to observe the approaching car, or in failing to wait until the car from which he alighted had moved far enough for him to see whether another car was approaching. Hornstein v. United Rys. Co., 195 Mo. 440, 92 S. W. 884. A passenger on alighting from a street car passed behind the car and started to walk diagonally across an adjoining track, where he was struck by a car approaching from the opposite direction. Had he looked he could have seen the approaching car, which was a short distance from him and approaching rapidly. His waiting for a moment until the car had passed would have avoided the accident. Held that he was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. McGreevy v. New York City R. Co., 113 App. Div. 155, 98 N. Y. S. 1024.

27. Where plaintiff alighted from a car on the side next to a parallel track, looked and listened, and, on crossing, was struck by a car coming on that track, and there was evidence that the car came at high speed without lights and without warning, contributory negligence was held to be for the jury. Ft. Smith Light & Tract. Co. v. Carr [Ark.] 93 S. W. 990.

28. Evidence insufficient to show contributory negligence as a matter of law when a man 89 years old was struck by a car near a point where a steam railway was being operated, and the noise of the oncoming car was attributed to that agency rather than to the car. Peyue v. Citizens Elec. Light & Gas Co. [Iowa] 109 N. W. 280. Evidence insufficient to sustain a verdict for one injured at a crossing. Padower v. New York City R. Co., 103 N. Y. S. 953.

Evidence sufficient to show contributory negligence where a pedestrian was struck by a car about 8 o'clock at night, the car had a bright head light, and the injured person had good eyesight. Marguiles v. Interurban St. R. Co., 101 N. Y. S. 499. Where a man 78 years old and very deaf was struck by a car, evidence held to show contributory negligence where at the time he was walking on the track and the motorman after seeing him sounded the gong and did everything he could to stop the car. Adams v. Boston & N. St. R. Co., 191 Mass. 486, 78 N. E. 117. Where a person 78 years of age and very deaf walks on a car track, his lack of hearing makes it incumbent on him to be more alert in the use of his other senses. Id. Where one was killed while walking on the track, the fact that the walking was better there than on the highway is no excuse for walking there when he could have walked on the highway with safety. Id. Evidence sufficient to show contributory negligence where one was injured in a collision on a dark night. Skinner v. Tacoma R. & Power Co. [Wash.] 89 P. 488. Evidence sufficient to show contributory negligence and insufficient to show negligence as a matter of law where a pedestrian retreating from a mule which was frightened at the approach of a car ran into the side of the car. Crenshaw v. Asheville & B. St. R. & Transp. Co. [N. C.] 56 S. E. 945. Evidence held to show contributory negligence where a man 75 years old and partially deaf stood on the track several minutes before he was struck and did not keep watch for approaching cars. Bennett v. Metropolitan St. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 480. Evidence insufficient to show negligence on the part of a motorman where he did not know one standing on the track was deaf, and where he gave signals as soon as he discovered his peril and did all in his power to stop the car. Id. Evidence sufficient to show contributory negligence where one crossing the street to board a car could have seen the car that struck him if he had looked. Fitzgerald v. Boston El. R. Co. [Mass.] 80 N. E. 224. Where a pedestrian walking on the track had looked prior to stepping onto it and again after proceeding half a block, but was struck by a car traveling at a high rate of speed, in daylight, without giving warning signals, and the noise of running was deadened by the noise of another car running in the opposite direction, contributory negligence if any was but a remote cause of the accident and did not bar recovery. Indianapolis Tract. & T. Co. v. Kidd [Ind.] 79 N. E. 347. Where one attempting to cross a track was struck by a car which he intended to take and could have taken but one or two steps from the time he entered on the line of track and was caught in the space between the rails, he was guilty of contributory negligence. Crooks v. Pittsburg R. Co. [Pa.] 66 A. 142. Where a person sitting on the track was run over and killed under circumstances which seemed to justify a conclusion of negligence, evidence that deceased was subject to atacks of pleurisy which rendered her temporarily helpless was not subject to the objection that it based one presumption upon another. Electric R. Light & Ice Co. v. Brickell [Kan.] 85 P. 297.

29. It is not contributory negligence as a matter of law to walk on a street car track at night. Goff v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo.] 98 S. W. 49. When a street is covered with melting ice and snow except the space between the ralls, a pedestrian is entitled to walk on such space using ordinary care for her own safety, and was en-must anticipate the presence of persons on the street,[31] but may assume that they will exercise ordinary care for their own safety,[32] and that persons on or near the tracks will get out of the way when signals are given.[33] The questions of negligence and contributory negligence are ordinarily for the jury.[34] Ordinary care must be titled to assume that she would not be run into by a car approaching from the rear at an excessive speed in daylight on a straight track and giving no signals. Indianapolis Trac. & T. Co. v. Kidd [Ind.] 79 N. E. 347.

30. Evidence held to show contributory negligence of plaintiff in failing to get out of the way of a car, he being at the time kneeling on a strip 18 inches wide between defendant's tracks and a trench in which his coemployes were working holding a lighted lantern to enable them to see, and the fact that during the day motormen had sounded a gong on approaching the work did not excuse him, defendant having no notice that the work was resumed after quitting time in the evening. Bushay v. Ocean City Elec. R. Co. [N. J. Law] 64 A. 968.

31. It is the duty of the motorman in addition to operating his car to keep a lookout and observe the streets adjacent to the track to ascertain whether persons are approaching or about to approach it, and he must exercise special care in case of children. Glettler v. Sheboygan Light, Power & R. Co. [Wis.] 109 N. W. 973. When it is apparent that teams in front of the car are frightened and unmanageable, it is the duty of motorman to stop the car or reduce its speed. Evidence held to require submission to jury of question of motorman's negligence in failing to stop car or reduce its speed upon seeing the unmanageable condition of plaintiff's horse. Freyer v. Aurora, Elgin & C. R. Co., 123 Ill. App. 423. Upon descending a grade it is the duty of a motorman in charge of the car to keep it within control, though the speed of cars is not limited by law. White v. Wilmington City R. Co. [Del.] 63 A. 931. Evidence as to the amount of traffic on the street on which the collision occurred at the time of the accident is admissible. Id.

22. A motorman may properly assume that a traveler approaching a crossing, if far enough away to cross safely, will continue and cross in front of the car, and if not far enough away, upon warning by those in charge of the car, will stop and let the car pass first. Garrett v. People's R. Co. [Del.] 64 A. 254. A motorman who sees a person near the track or approaching it with nothing to indicate inability on his part to care for himself may assume that he will act as a prudent man should, and it is not incumbent on him to stop the car until he sees that such person is in danger. Duteau v. Seattle Elec. Co. [Wash.] 88 P. 755. A motorman in charge of a car has a right to presume that a pedestrian at a street crossing, whose view is partially obstructed by passing vehicles will look and see the approaching car and is not bound to anticipate that he will pass onto the track in front of the car. Hafner v. St. Louis Transit Co. 197 Mo. 196, 94 S. W. 291. If a motorman who sees a person on a trestle cannot reasonably anticipate that he will not probably leave the track in time to avoid injury, the company is not liable. Northern Texas Trac. Co. v. Mullins [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 433. Where all witnesses testified that the bell was rung prior to the collision, a statement of the plaintiff who was partially deaf and was not listening that he did not hear it was no evidence upon which to raise an issue. Bennett v. Metropolitan St. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 480. The fact that the gong on a standing car was struck as one was passing does not show negligence on the part of the company, indicating that the person injured was in a place of peril, so as to justify him in stepping onto the adjoining track without looking directly in front of an approaching car. Blackwell v. Old Colony St. R. Co. [Mass.] 79 N. E. 335.

33. A motorman may assume that a person walking near the track will get out of the way in time to avoid being struck when signals are given and need not take steps to stop the car until it was reasonably apparent that he would not. Ford's Adm'r v. Paducah City R. Co., 30 Ky. L. R. 644, 99 S. W. 355. Where the motorman of a street car saw a woman standing between the track and a wagon, at a place where there was ample room for the car to pass without injuring her, and when he was 25 feet distant she suddenly stepped on the track, whereupon he gave signals and made every effort to stop the car, it was held that he was not negligent, not having owed the duty of previously giving signals or checking the speed of his car. Lennon v. St. Louis & S. R. Co., 198 Mo. 514, 94 S. W. 975. Question of negligence of motorman in failing to get his car under such control as to avoid injury to a boy whose foot was caught in a space between the tracks, having seen the boys at a distance of from 300 to 400 feet, though he did not know that the boy was unable to leave the track until within 35 feet of him. McDermott v. Severe, 202 U. S. 600, 50 Law. Ed. 1162.

34. On conflicting evidence as to whether a person injured could have avoided a collision, the issue of his negligence is for the jury. Ft. Smith Light & Trac. Co. v. Flint [Ark.] 99 S. W. 79. Where a person is injured while crossing a street car track and testifies that he stopped, looked, and listened, before going on the track, and was struck by a car which he did not see because the lights were out and no headlight was burning, the question of his contributory negligence is for the jury. Cox v. Schuylkill Valley Trac. Co., 214 Pa. 223 63 A. 599. Whether the company was negligent in imposing on the motorman the duties of the conductor held a question for the jury. Glettler v. Sheboygan, Light, Power & R. Co. [Wis.] 109 N. W. 973. Questions of negligence and contributory negligence held for the jury where a pedestrian was killed while crossing the track. Kramm v. Stockton Elec. R. Co. [Cal. App.] 86 P. 738. Where a person crossing a street car track is run over by an electric car, whose lights have gone out, rapidly moving down a steep exercised to discover persons in a position of peril,[35] and, when one is discovered in such position, immediate steps must be taken to prevent injury to him.[36] The degree of care required for the protection of pedestrians applies as to persons working in the streets.[37] If the company fails to exercise the degree of care required of it, and such failure results in injury to a pedestrian, the company is liable.[38] A cusgrade, the question of the company's negligence is for the jury. Cox v. Schuylkill Valley Trac. Co., 214 Pa. 223, 63 A. 599. In an action for death caused by a collision between a street car and a vehicle, violation of a city ordinance as to the speed of cars is not negligence as a matter of law but presents a question for the jury. Oates v. Union R. Co., 27 R. I. 499, 63 A. 675.

35. Where a person lying on the track could have been readily seen for from 40 to 75 feet and the car was stopped within 30 feet after he was discovered, evidence sufficient to show that the motorman should have discovered him in time to have avoided injury to him. Goff v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo.] 98 S. W. 49. An instruction that if persons generally walked on the track at a point where an injury occurred it was the duty of the company to exercise reasonable care to discover their presence, and if in the exercise of reasonable care they fail to do so the company was liable, is bad because, if in the exercise of reasonable care they failed to discover plaintiff's presence, the company was not liable. Wilkie v. Richmond Trac. Co., 105 Va. 290, 54 S. E. 43.

36. Where in an action for the death of plaintiff's intestate in a collision with a street car, there was uncontradicted evidence by two of plaintiff's witnesses that the motorman, as soon as he saw intestate in a dangerous position, applied the brake and did all that he could to stop the car and avoid injuring intestate, there was no sufficient evidence of negligence, though it also appeared that the car was not stopped within a distance certain expert witnesses testified it could have been stopped. Davis v. People's R. Co. [Del.] 64 A. 70. When a car is moving at a lawful rate of speed and a traveler comes suddenly upon the track, the company is required only to exercise ordinary care to avoid injury, but if the car is moving at an excessive rate of speed, and signals cannot be given or appliances to stop the car be used by the exercise of ordinary care, the company is liable as it has brought about a condition which it cannot control. Davis v. Durham Trac. Co., 141 N. C. 134, 53 S. E. 617. Instructions in such case approved. Id. Whether a motorman could have stopped his car within 125 feet so as to have avoided an accident held a question of fact. Duffy v. Interurban St. R. Co., 101 N. Y. S. 767. Where a motorman running a car at a high rate of speed in a populous part of the city sees a pedestrian 140 feet away with his back towards the car, apparently oblivious to his danger, he must use all means at his command to warn him and get his car under control and stop if necessary to avoid collision. Saylor v. Union Trac. Co. [Ind. App.] 81 N. E. 94. A motorman who discovers a person on a trestle in a perilous position must use all means within his power consistent with the safety of others to avoid running him down. Northern Texas Trac. Co. v. Mullins [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 433.

37. Where one spreading gravel on the street stepped onto the track to let a street sprinkler pass, he was not negligent as a matter of law. Kramm v. Stockton Elec. R. Co. [Cal. App.] 86 P. 738. Question of contributory negligence held for the jury where one assisting an employe of the city in working on the street was struck by a car. O'Leary v. Haverhill & P. St. R. Co. [Mass.] 79 N. E. 733. Where it appeared that, while plaintiff was standing on the hub of his wagon, bending over and lifting out a heavy piece of marble, he was struck by a street car which was approaching at a high rate of speed, that no signal was given until the car was within a foot of the plaintiff, that no car had passed upon the track for 20 minutes and that, even if plaintiff at the time of getting on the wheel of the wagon had looked up the street he could not have seen the car by reason of the fact that it was then on a cross street, it could not be said as a matter of law that he was guilty of contributory negligence. Volosko v. Interurban St. R. Co., 113 App. Div. 747, 99 N. Y. S. 484. Where a lineman started to climb a crooked telegraph pole between tracks of a railway company after having seen a car approaching about 150 feet distant but relied on his foreman to stop the car, evidence held to show that he was not guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law where he was struck by the car when about half way up the pole. Ahearn v. Boston El. R. Co. [Mass.] 80 N. E. 217. Where a telegraph lineman was injured by being struck by a car while climbing a telegraph pole which slanted over the car track, evidence as to the custom of giving notice by men on the ground was admissible as bearing on the issue of his due care. Where a telegraph lineman was struck by a car while climbing a pole which slanted over the track, evidence that flags were stationed to give notice that there was dangerous construction going on was admissible to show surrounding conditions. Id.

38. It is proper to instruct that the company is liable where it fails to exercise due care to prevent injury to a person crossing the track. Indianapolis St. R. Co. v. Demaree [Ind. App.] 80 N. E. 687. A street car company is liable even to a trespasser where it fails to use ordinary care after his peril is discovered. Goff v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo.] 98 S. W. 49. A pedestrian walking on a street car track laid in the public highway is not a trespasser. Id. In an action for injuries to a pedestrian at a crossing, evidence that the motorman disregarded a sign adopted by the company requiring cars to be run slowly at crossings is evidence of negligence sufficient to warrant a verdict against the company. Hayward v. North Jersey St. R. Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 65 A. 737. Evidence sufficient to sustain a verdict in favor of a person struck tom to stop cars at street intersections to allow funeral processions to pass does not render the company guilty of negligence for a failure to observe it,[39] and though the driver of a vehicle in such a procession may rely upon such a custom if uniform and continuous, he has no right to do so as against the positive evidence of his senses that the custom will not be followed by an approaching car.[40] It must exercise such degree of care with respect to its appliances [41] and the speed with which cars are operated.[42] In the absence of statutory requirements, if a motorman has no occasion to foresee danger at a street crossing it is not negligence to maintain the usual rate of speed over the crossing.[43]

Children run over.[44]—A child of tender years is bound to exercise only such care as would be ordinary care for one of his age and discretion, to look and listen before crossing a street railway track.[45] If a child is sui juris it is required to exercise the degree of care reasonably to be expected from a child of its age and capacity.[46]

by a car while crossing the street. Indianapolis St. R. Co. v. Demaree [Ind. App.] 80 N. E. 687. Evidence sufficient to support a verdict for one who was struck by a car at a point where just before stepping onto the track the view was obstructed. Ring v. Nassau Elec. R. Co., 101 N. Y. S. 389. Evidence sufficient to show negligence. Northern Texas Trac. Co. v. Mullins [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 433. Evidence sufficient to sustain a finding that one killed by a car could have crossed safely if the car had been run at the rate of speed prescribed by ordinance. Powers v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo.] 100 S. W. 655. Where a pedestrian stopped, looked, and listened, before crossing a street railway track, this was held to be evidence of due care and sufficient to sustain a verdict for the plaintiff. Doyle v. Chester Trac. Co., 214 Pa. 382, 63 A. 604.

Evidence of negligence held insufficient to go to the jury where a pedestrian was struck by a piece of wood torn from a telephone pole by a runaway car. Small v. Pittsburg R. Co. [Pa.] 66 A. 76. The fact that a motorman did not continuously observe decedent while crossing the street, that he failed to give signals and did not more promptly apply brakes, does not show negligence in retaining an incompetent servant without proof of previous misconduct. Moran v. Milford & U. St. R. Co. [Mass.] 78 N. E. 736. Evidence that the gong was not rung that the velocity of the car exceeded the statutory speed, and that the motorman did not exercise ordinary care in observing the entire width of the street, held insufficient to show gross negligence within Rev. Laws, c. 111, § 267. Id. Where a pedestrian was run over by a car at night and while under the car it was moved so that she could not be gotten out, and when she was found was dead, evidence held insufficient to show negligence in moving the car. Healey v. United Trac. Co., 101 N. Y. S. 331.

39. White v. Wilmington City R. Co. [Del.] 63 A. 931.

40. White v. Wilmington City R. Co. [Del.] 63 A. 931. Evidence that it was customary for street cars to stop to permit of the passage of a funeral procession is admissible, though not pleaded as affecting the degree of diligence required of the driver of a yehicle in such procession. Id.

41. Evidence held to show negligence in failing to furnish proper lights on a car where one was injured while walking on the track at night. Wilkie v. Richmond Trac. Co., 105 Va. 290, 54 S. E. 43.

42. It is not error to submit to the jury whether a certain rate of speed is negligence, though no showing is made of any ordinance in the matter. What speed is usual or the extent of business carried on in such street. Metropolitan St. R. Co. v. Summers [Kan.] 89 P. 652. Where all witnesses agreed that a car was running at about half speed and could have been stopped within 10 or 12 feet, a charge of negligence with respect to the rate of speed is not sustained. Bennett v. Metropolitan St. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 480. Evidence that at the time of an accident the company was violating a speed ordinance is no evidence of negligence. Ford's Adm'r v. Paducah City R. Co., 30 Ky. L. R. 644, 99 S. W. 355.

43. Skinner v. Tacoma R. & Power Co. [Wash.] 89 P. 488.

44. See 6 C. L. 1570.

45. Instructions requiring ordinary care held properly modified so as to express the degree of care required of a child. Mullin v. St. Louis Transit Co., 196 Mo. 572, 94 S. W. 288.

46. In an action against a street railroad for injuries to a child, the child is to be held responsible only for such care as children of his age, experience, and discretion, ordinarily use under the same and similar circumstances. Wise v. St. Louis Transit Co., 198 Mo. 546, 95 S. W. 898. A child in the street is only required to exercise the degree of care a prudent person of his age would exercise under like conditions. Burns v. Worcester Consol. St. R. Co. [Mass.] 78 N. E. 740. Where a child under seven years of age attempts to cross in front of a car, failure to look is some evidence of negligence. Peterson v. Interurban St. R. Co., 103 N. Y. S. 8. A boy 11 years of age who attempts to cross within five or six feet of an approaching horse car proceeding at three miles per hour is guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. Bambace v. Interurban St. R. Co., 188 N. Y. 288, 80 N. E. 913. A girl 11 years of age who sees a car approaching about 80 feet distant and then walks leisurely across the track held guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. Hollan v. Boston El. R. Co., [Mass.] 80 N. E. 1. Evidence sufficient to show contributory negligence where a boy 11 years of age, familiar with

Street car operatives must exercise the degree of care required of them in regard to children,[47] and contributory negligence is no defense to the company if they had the last clear chance to avert the injury,[48] but if a child suddenly runs in front of a car so close that it cannot be stopped, the company is not liable.[49] Whether a child is sui juris,[50] whether it exercised the degree of care required,[51] and whether the company exercised the degree of care required of it, are generally held to be questions of fact.[52] The doctrine of imputed negligence [53] applies.[54]

(§ 8) C. Accidents to drivers or occupants of wagons.[55]—The rights of street railway companies and other users of the streets in the streets are equal and each the location, started across the street without looking immediately behind a car and was struck by a car coming from the opposite direction. Stackpole v. Boston El. R. Co. [Mass. 79 N. E. 740. Question as to whether a "lively, active, and energetic" child slightly over four years of age was guilty of contributory negligence held properly submitted to the jury. Sullivan v. Boston El. R. Co. [Mass.] 78 N. E. 382.

47. Where a child was struck at a crossing it was error not to embody in an instruction the duty of the motorman to keep a vigilent watch, especially for children approaching the track. Deschner v. St. Louis & M. R. R. Co. [Mo.] 98 S. W. 737. Where a motorman saw a child cross the track in front of the car in such a direction as would take it out of danger, he had a right to presume that it was not in danger and was not required to slacken the speed of the car unless from the actions of the child it was reasonably apparent that it intended to recross the track dangerously near the car. Hanley v. Ft. Dodge Light & Power Co. [Iowa] 107 N. W. 593. Evidence sufficient to show that a motorman was negligent where a boy was injured. Conner v. Pittsburg R. Co. [Pa.] 65 A. 1106. Question of contributory negligence of a child six years of age in failing to look before crossing a street railroad track held properly submitted to the jury. Mullin v. St. Louis Transit Co., 196 Mo. 572, 94 S. W. 288. Evidence sufficient to show that a motorman could have seen a child in time to avoid running into it. Glettler v. Sheboygan Light Power & R. Co. [Wis.] 109 N. W. 973. Where the gripman on a street railroad train saw a boy standing on the track 60 feet ahead, it was his duty to ring the bell and his failure to do so was negligence for which the company was liable. Butler v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 117 Mo. App. 354, 93 S. W. 877.

48. If a boy killed was on the track or approaching it so that the motorman should have seen him in time to have avoided the accident, there can be a recovery though the boy was negligent. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Edelen's Adm'x, 29 Ky. L. R. 1125, 96 S. W. 901. Where a motorman saw a child near the track 200 feet distant and could have stopped his car within 70 feet but made no effort to do so, a motion to direct a verdict is properly denied. Louisville R. Co. v. Walker, 29 Ky. L. R. 663, 94 S. W. 635.

49. If a boy standing about eight feet from the track suddenly runs in front of an approaching car so close in front of it that it cannot be stopped in time to avoid injury to him, the company is not liable. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Edelen's Adm'x, 29 Ky. L. R. 1125, 96 S. W. 901. Where a boy jumped suddenly from behind a covered wagon standing beside the track, and, starting to cross, was struck by a car, it was held that the mere proximity of the wagon to the track was no notice to the motorman that someone was behind it who might suddenly attempt to cross, and that instructions seeming to indicate that the boy had a right to cross as he did were erroneous. Cornelius v. South Covington, etc., R. Co., 29 Ky. L. R. 505, 93 S. W. 643. In a suit for damages on account of the wrongful death of a child who ran from the sidewalk in front of a street car, it is error to charge the jury without qualification that, "if you find from all the evidence that the motorman who had charge of the car which struck the plaintiff could, by the exercise of ordinary care, have seen the plaintiff and stopped the car, and that by reason of the failure to stop the car plaintiff was knocked down and injured, it would be such negligence on the part of the defendant as would enable the plaintiff to recover." Cincinnati Trac. Co. v. Simon, 8 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 515.

50. Where in an action against a street railroad for the death of a child three years and nine months old, run over by a car, the court left to the jury the question whether the child was sui juris, defendant was entitled to an instruction that if the child was sui juris he was bound to exercise such care and caution as was to be expected of a child of his age under the circumstances. Hirtenstein v. Interurban St. R. Co., 100 N. Y. S. 909.

51. Whether a boy 11 years old who waited for one car to pass and attempted to cross the track without looking and was struck by a car following was negligent was held a question for the jury. Deschner v. St. Louis & M. R. R. Co. [Mo.] 98 S. W. 737. Whether a boy of seven was guilty of contributory negligence in stopping on a car track without looking to see if a car was approaching is a question for the jury. Butler v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 117 Mo. App. 354, 93 S. W. 877.

52. Whether a motorman saw, or, by the exercise of due care, could have seen, a boy standing on the track, held to be a question for the jury. Wise v. Louis Transit Co., 198 Mo. 546, 95 S. W. 898.

53. See Negligence, 8 C. L. 1090.

54. Whether parents of a child about four years of age were guilty of negligence in a portion of the house whereby child found his way to the street held properly submitted to the jury. Sullivan v. Boston El. R. Co. [Mass.] 78 N. E. 382.

55. See 6 C. L. 1572.

must use them with due regard to the rights of the other,[56] and if injury results because of failure of the company to exercise the degree of care required of it, it is liable,[57] but the negligence must have been the proximate cause of the injury.[58] Whether a given rate of speed is negligence depends on the circumstances.[59] It is negligence as a matter of law to run a car at a rate of speed in excess of that fixed by ordinance.[60] It is sometimes provided that fire apparatus responding to an alarm has the right of way.[61] It is the duty of a motorman to keep a lookout for vehicles liable to get into a perilous position,[62] and if one is seen in such position to take im-

56. Olney v. Omaha etc., R. Co. [Neb.] 111 N. W. 784. Street railway companies and other travelers on the street are required to use the street at all times with just regard to the rights of the other. Indianapolis St. R. Co. v. Bolin [Ind. App.] 78 N. E. 210. The rights of travelers and of the railroad are co-ordinate so that each must exercise the same with due regard to the rights of the other and in a reasonable and careful manner. Weldon v. People's R. Co. [Del.] 65 A. 589. The respective rights of the public and of the railway company to use the streets must be exercised with due regard to the rights of each other and in such manner as not to unreasonably interfere therewith. Heidelbaugh v. People R. Co. [Del.] 65 A. 587. As between a car and a vehicle between crossings, a car has the preferential but not the exclusive right of way. Moore v. New York City R. Co., 102 N. Y. S. 636.

57. Evidence sufficient to sustain a verdict for one injured in a collision between a car and wagon. Klasson v. Interurban St. R. Co., 101 N. Y. S. 581. Evidence sufficient to sustain a verdict for one injured by a collision between a car and a wagon he was driving where before driving onto the track he saw a car a block away and when he was over the first track it was half a block off and the rear end of his wagon was struck. Salcinger v. Interurban St. R. Co., 101 N. Y. S. 804. A complaint alleging that the driver of a vehicle attempting to cross in front of a car approaching up a steep grade 150 feet distant was detained on the track because the rails were raised above the surface, and had the motorman exercised reasonable care he could have seen the wagon and stopped his car in time to have avoided the accident, states a cause of action. Philbin v. Denver City Tramway Co. [Colo.] 85 P. 630. In an action for injuries to a horse, evidence held sufficient to show that the motorman and conductor were employes of the company, acting within the scope of their employment, and that the car was operated by the company on a track owned by it. Indianapolis & N. W. Trac. Co. v. Henderson [Ind. App. 79 N. E. 539.

Evidence insufficient to show negligence: Evidence that, while plaintiff was driving across a street car track near a standing car, his horse and cart were struck by a car on the other track where there was nothing to obstruct the view of the cart from the car, was held insufficient to show negligence, justifying a recovery for injuries suffered by the plaintiff. Messing v. Wilmington City R. Co. [Del.] 64 A. 247. In an action against a street railroad for death occasioned by a collision between a street car and a wagon, evidence that prior to the collision the lights on the car were extinguished by the trolley pole leaving the wire, thereby divesting the car both of light and motive power, is not of itself sufficient to show negligence. Higgins v. St. Louis & S. R. Co., 197 Mo. 300, 95 S. W. 863.

58. Evidence insufficient to show that one was thrown from his wagon by reason of its being struck by a car. Gormley v. Forty-Second St. etc., R. Co., 101 N. Y. S. 583. Where one was injured by a collision with a car running at twenty-five to thirty miles per hour, where the lawful rate was eight miles per hour, and it appeared that the injury was sustained by the injured person's impact with the ground, it was error to charge that the company was not liable if the excessive rate of speed was not the proximate cause of the injury, because whatever additional injury was sustained was due to the negligence of the company. Bresee v. Los Angeles Trac. Co. [Cal.] 85 P. 152. The mere fact that a car is running at an unlawful rate of speed does not entitle one struck by it to recover if he was himself negligent. Harris v. Lincoln Trac. Co.]Neb.] 111 N. W. 580. Where a person injured knew a car was approaching, it was immaterial whether signals were given. Robinson v. Crosstown St. R. Co., 103 N. Y. S. 58. In an action against a street railway company for injuries to plaintiff's horse in collision with a street car, evidence held insufficient to establish plaintiff's claim that as he swung his horse around across the track in front of the approaching car, the car struck the rear wheel of his wagon and threw the horse to the ground, causing the injuries complained of. Thau v. New York City R. Co., 99 N. Y. S. 329.

59. In an action for death caused by a collision between a street car and a wagon, evidence that a car was going at a speed of from six to eight miles an hour is insufficient to show negligence, in the absence of evidence concerning the character of the place of the accident, the amount of travel on the streets there, and of the crossings. Higgins v. St. Louis & S. R. Co., 197 Mo. 300, 95 S. W. 863. It is negligence to run a car over a crossing without signals at twenty miles an hour. Cole v. Metropolitan St R. Co.. [Mo. App.] 97 S. W. 555.

60. Bresee v. Los Angeles Trac. Co. [Cal.] 85 P. 152.

61. Where a fireman was killed at a crossing, it was proper to admit evidence of an ordinance providing that fire apparatus responding to an alarm should have the right of way. McBride v. Des Moines City R. Co. [Iowa] 109 N. W. 618. Where one section of an ordinance provided that fire apparatus responding to an alarm should have the right of way and another section provided that cars should have right of way as to teams and vehicles, the former section controls as regards fire apparatus. Id.

62. In an action for injuries to a traveler mediate steps to get the car under control,[63] and if he does not and injury results, the company is liable,[64] even though the driver of the vehicle was guilty of contributory negligence.[65] The driver of a vehicle must exercise due care under the circumstances of the case,[66] and in some states he is required to look and listen;[67] but one crossing a street railway is not required to exercise the same degree of care as when crossing a steam railway.[68] A traveler may assume that a street car company will exercise ordinary care to prevent a collision with his vehicle,[69] that cars will not be run at a reckless rate of speed,[70] and is not negligent in attempting to cross in front of an approaching car if he has reasonable ground to believe that he can do so safely.[71] caused by a street car striking his wagon from the rear, an instruction that it was the motorman's duty to use care to look on each side of his car to see that no persons were about to get on the track, and that no conditions or circumstances presented themselves which would evidently compel pereons then in his view passing along the street to go on the track in front of the car, was erroneous, as imposing on defendant a greater burden than the law required. Metropolitan St. R. Co. v. Kirkpatrick [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 351, 94 S. W. 1092. An instruction requiring a motorman to keep a "vigilant watch" is proper at common law as well as under a city ordinance requiring it. Mertens v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 512.

63. When the motorman of a street car could have stopped his car and avoided a collision with plaintiff's wagon, if he had used reasonable care and kept a vigilant watch ahead on the first appearance of danger, plaintiff was entitled to recover for injuries sustained, notwithstanding his own contributory negligence. Rodgers v. St. Louis Transit Co., 117 Mo. App. 678, 92 S. W. 1154. When a motorman sees a person in peril from which he cannot extricate himself, he must so act as not to increase the danger and if he fails to do so and his failure results in injury, the company is liable. Indianapolis Trac. & T. Co. v. Smith [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 1140.

64. Whether a motorman had opportunity to prevent collision after discovering, a vehicle on the track held a question for the jury. Barrie v. St. Louis Transit Co., 119 Mo. App. 38, 96 S. W. 233. Whether a motorman could have avoided a collision with a vehicle after discovering, its danger held a question for the jury. Daniels v. Bay City Trac. & El. Co., 143 Mich. 493, 13 Det. Leg. N. 15, 107 N. W. 94.

65. Evidence that the driver of a wagon looked but saw no car and as he drove up the track a car struck his wagon, that the motorman saw him when the car was forty feet distant and when he saw the plaintiff was not going to get out of the way he reversed his car and did all that he could to stop it and if it had been equipped with sand appliances he could have stopped it in time, is sufficient to warrant a charge on discovered peril. Dallas Consol. Elec. St. R. Co. v. Com. [Tex. Civ. App.] 100 S. W. 1019. Where a car collided with an open grocery wagon, it was error to refuse to instruct that if the driver saw the car approaching the question of warning given by the motorman was unimportant. Kerin v. United Trac. Co., 102 N. Y. S. 423. One who negligently attempts to cross in front of an approaching car cannot recover unless those in charge of the car are guilty of willful and wanton negligence. Harris v. Lincoln Trac. Co. [Neb.] 111 N. W. 580.

66. One approaching a track with which he is familiar must avail himself of his knowledge of the locality and reasonable use of his senses to prevent accident. Weldon v. People's R. Co. [Del.] 65 A. 589.

67. Where the driver of a vehicle testifies that he did not look until his horse was stepping onto the track and then it was too late to avert a collision, he was guilty of contributory negligence in failing to look and listen before attempting to cross the track. Fechley v. Springfield Trac. Co., 119 Mo. App. 358, 96 S. W. 421. Where, in an action against an electric railway company, it appeared that the plaintiff, approaching a grade crossing driving a wagon, if he had looked, could have seen a fully lighted car approaching from a long distance, but failed to do so, a nonsuit was properly entered. Griffith v. West Chester St. R. Co., 214 Pa. 293, 63 A. 740. It is not enough to look when some distance away from the track, and then not to look again. The driver must look immediately before going on the track. A driver of a team is guilty of contributory negligence where he fails to look before going on street railway tracks at the intersection of two streets. Timler v. Philadelphia Rapid Transit Co., 214 Pa. 475, 63 A. 824.

68. Indianapolis St. R. Co. v. Taylor [Ind. App.] 80 N. E. 436.

69. Indianapolis St. R. Co. v. Bolin [Ind. App.] 78 N. E. 210. A driver of a truck who sees a car approaching at some distance may rely on the presumption that the motorman will use ordinary care to prevent collision. Littlefield v. New York City R. Co., 101 N. Y. S. 75.

70. One crossing a car track at night may assume that cars will not be run at a reckless rate of speed over crossings, without a headlight. Indianapolis St. R. Co. v. Taylor [Ind. App.] 80 N. E. 436.

71. The driver of a vehicle may proceed to cross a track in front of an approaching car only when he has reasonable ground to believe that he can do so in safety if both he and those in charge of the car act with reasonable regard to the rights of the other. Indianapolis St. R. Co. v. Bolin [Ind. App.] 78 N. E. 210. The driver of an ordinary vehicle is justified in proceeding to cross a street railway track in the face of an approaching car only when he has reasonable ground for believing that he can pass in safety when both he and those in charge of the car act with reasonable regard to the rights of each other. McCarthy

Whether one may assume that he has time to cross safely may be a question of fact.[72] The questions of negligence of the company and contributory negligence of the driver of a vehicle are generally held questions for the jury,[73] unless the evidence and circumstances show negligence as a matter of law.[74]

v. Consol. R. Co. [Conn.] 63 A. 725. In an action against a street railroad for injuries to plaintiff's horse in a collision between plaintiff's team and a car it appeared that, when plaintiff drove into the street in which the tracks were laid, the car was a block away, coming at a speed of fifteen miles an hour, and the team was moving four or five miles an hour; that plaintiff undertook to cross the track, and, when he saw that a collision was probable, turned his team sharply in the direction in which the car was going, held that these facts did not show contributory negligence. Clancy v. New York City R. Co., 100 N. Y. S. 1046. A driver of a vehicle has a right to cross the track between street crossings where he sees a car approaching up a steep grade at one hundred and fifty feet distant. Philbin v. Denver City Tramway Co. [Colo.] 85 P. 630. A complaint alleging that while the driver of a vehicle was attempting to cross in front of a car approaching up a steep grade one hundred and fifty feet distant, he was detained on the track because it was raised above the surface and had no reason to believe that his horse could not safely pull over, negatived any imputation of negligence of the driver on account of the raised track. Id. A driver of a vehicle who when within ten or fifteen feet of the track can see no car approaching for five hundred feet is not negligent in attempting to cross. Heitz v. Yonkers R. Co., 102 N. Y. S. 964. Evidence insufficient to show contributory negligence as a matter of law where one who attempted to cross saw the car approaching over two hundred feet away but misjudged its speed and it appeared that the car was running at about twenty miles an hour and run one hundred and forty feet after the collision. Indianapolis St. R. Co. v. Bolin [Ind. App.] 78 N. E. 210.

72. In an action for a collision between a vehicle and a car running at an excessive rate of speed, it was error to instruct that it was not negligence for the motorman to assume that a person would not attempt to cross the track so near to the car as to render collision probable, it being for the jury to determine whether a person might not assume that he could cross safely. Bresee v. Los Angeles Trac. Co. [Cal.] 85 P. 152.

73. Questions of negligence and of contributory negligence held for the jury where the driver of a vehicle was injured in a collision. Indianapolis Trac. & T. Co. v. Smith [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 1140. Questions of negligence and contributory negligence held for the jury where a collision occurred between a car and a wagon on a bright morning and evidence was conflicting as to speed of the car and whether the gong was sounded. Erb v. Boston El. R. Co., 191 Mass. 482, 78 N. E. 117. If a driver approaching a track checks his horse and at the same time the motorman applies the brakes and stops the car, and the driver urges on his horse and at the same instant the motorman releases his brakes, it is a question for the jury whether either was negligent. Weinberger v. North Jersey St. R. Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 64 A. 1059. Questions of negligence and contributory negligence held for the jury where a car collided with a wagon while the driver was unloading. James v. Interstate Consol. St. R. Co. [Mass.] 79 N. E. 264. Questions of negligence and contributory negligence held for the jury where a car collided with a vehicle. Green v. Haverhill & A. St. R. Co. [Mass.] 79 N. E. 735; Stubbs v. Boston & N. St. R. Co. [Mass.] 79 N. E. 795. Evidence as to negligence and contributory negligence held for the jury. Olney v. Omaha, etc., R. Co [Neb.] 111 N. W. 784.

Question of negligence held for the jury where the driver of a buggy collided with a car. Sturgeon v. Beaver Valley Trac. Co. [Pa.] 65 A. 757. Question of negligence held for the jury where a car collided with a wagon, injuring the driver. Mortimer v. Beaver Valley Trac. Co. [Pa.] 65 A. 758. Question of negligence held for the jury where a car collided with a buggy at night. Barto v. Beaver Valley Trac. Co. [Pa.] 65 A. 792. Question of negligence held for the jury where a car collided with a wagon at a crossing. Emmel v. Pittsburg Rys. Co. [Pa.] 65 A. 1083. Where it is charged that a car was being run at a high and dangerous rate of speed, which was the cause of the collision, the issue so tendered is for the jury to determine. Indianapolis St. R. Co. v. Bolin [Ind. App.] 78 N. E. 210. Question of negligence where a conductor who knew that a horse was on the street unattended, in failing to notify the motorman of such fact, held for the jury. Carey v. Milford & U. St. R. Co. [Mass.] 78 N. E. 1001. Whether the motorman saw the peril of one who was injured by his team taking fright at a car held for the jury. Folz v. Evansville Elec. R. Co. [Ind. App.] 80 N. E. 868. Question of negligence of the company held for the jury where a person before crossing looked and saw a car a block distant and driving at a slow trot, the car struck the rear of the wagon. Muller v. New York City R. Co., 101 N. Y. S. 98. Whether the motorman could have stopped the car in time to avoid accident after discovering a wagon on the track held a question for the jury. Cross v. St. Louis Transit Co., 120 Mo. App. 458, 97 S. W. 183. Question of negligence held for the jury where a car collided with a vehicle. White v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. [Mo.] 101 S. W. 14.

Question of contributory negligence in momentarily leaving a horse on the street unattended held for the jury. Carey v. Milford & U. St. R. Co. [Mass.] 78 N. E. 1001. Where in an action for a collision between a car and a vehicle, the driver of the latter testified that he was driving along the car track, in a covered wagon and before starting to cross he looked as far as he could around the cover, it was a question for the jury whether he should have stopped before driving onto the track. Stubbs v. Boston & N. St. R. Co. [Mass.] 79 N. E. 795. Evidence of contributory negligence held for the jury where one crossing the street in a buggy was struck by a car. Grogan v. Boston El. R. Co. [Mass.] 80 N. E. 485. Where the driver of a wagon was killed in a collision, the question of his contributory negligence was held for the jury. Chaput v. Haverhill, etc., R. Co. [Mass.] 80 N. E. 597. Where one about to drive across the track saw a car at some distance but did not look again, the question of his contributory negligence was for the jury. Muller v. New York City R. Co., 101 N. Y. S. 98. Question of contributory negligence in driving along the track held for the jury. Ciarcia v. Westchester Elec. R. Co., 102 N. Y. S. 428. Whether one was guilty of contributory negligence in not looking the moment he was about to drive onto the track is a question for the jury where he had looked shortly before and at the time it was difficult to distinguish the headlight on the car from other lights, and it was impossible to see a car for any great distance. Niemyer v. Washington Water Power Co. [Wash.] 88 P. 103. Question of contributory negligence held for the jury where a car collided with a vehicle. Carey v. Metropolitan St. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 101 S. W. 1123. When a driver approaches a track on which a car is running in his direction, if from the distance of the car and assuming that it is equipped with brakes and a man to apply them, he may reasonably determine that he has acquired a right to cross first, it is a question for the jury whether the facts justifying that determination are established, and whether the driver exercised reasonable judgment. Weinberger v. North Jersey St. R. Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 64 A. 1059.

74. It is contributory negligence for the driver of a vehicle to attempt to cross in front of an approaching car without looking. Birmingham R., Light & Power Co. v. Clarke [Ala.] 41 So. 829. One who drove onto the track knowing that a car was close behind him traveling at a high rate of speed, and that he could not get across in front of it is guilty of contributory negligence. Daniels v. Bay City Trac. & El. Co., 143 Mich. 493, 13 Det. Leg. N. 15, 107 N. W. 94. Where one riding in a carriage at the invitation of and being driven by another, does nothing to ascertain his danger or avoid injury to himself, he is guilty of contributory negligence. Fechley v. Springfield Trac. Co., 119 Mo. App. 358, 96 S. W. 421. Where plaintiff, riding in a closed laundry wagon, drove across a car track where he could have seen a car coming if he had looked, he is guilty of contributory negligence. Kannenberg v. Conestoga Trac. Co. [Pa.] 64 A. 680. In an action to recover for a collision between a street car and plaintiff's wagon, where the evidence shows that if plaintiff had continued on his course, he would have cleared the track before the car reached the point of crossing, but, having changed his mind, he attempted to back off, and that the motorman acted on the belief that he would succeed, and plaintiff acted on the same belief, there can be no recovery. Baicker v. People's St. R. Co. [Pa.] 64 A. 675. Where plaintiff, while standing with his cab three yards from a street car track, saw a car approaching at half speed, but turned and drove on the track, and was struck by the car, he cannot recover. Costello v. Forty-Second St., etc., R. Co., 50 Misc. 628, 98 N. Y. S. 648. Deceased, occupying a covered vehicle, with the side curtains on, and driving a gentle horse under perfect control, going at a moderate walk, approached a street railroad track at a point where, just before going on the track, she could have seen a car at a distance of more than five hundred and forty-one feet. Just as the horse had passed over the track, the buggy was struck by a car, and deceased was killed. Experiments showed that, before going on the track, the car was within the view of the deceased. A person some distance farther from the approaching car than deceased heard it, and there was undisputed evidence that the speed of the horse was not increased before or at the time the vehicle reached the track. Deceased had normal hearing and sight, and was a woman of at least ordinary intelligence. Held, that she was guilty of contributory negligence, as a matter of law. Walsh v. Fonda, etc., R. Co., 99 N. Y. S. 773. In an action for death from a collision between a street car and a wagon while crossing the track, where it appeared that the plaintiff could have seen the car if he had looked and heard it if he had listened, he was held guilty of contributory negligence. Higgins v. St. Louis & S. R. Co., 197 Mo. 300, 95 S. W. 863. Where a driver about to cross a track saw a car sixty-five feet distant and the motorman, though he must have seen the vehicle, approached at a high speed, held the motorman was negligent as he could have stopped the car in time to avoid the accident. Littlefield v. New York City R. Co., 101 N. Y. S. 75.

Evidence sufficient to show contributory negligence as a matter of law where a car collided with a vehicle. Harris v. Fitchburg & L. St. R. Co. [Mass.] 78 N. E. 773. Where a cart was injured in a collision, the owner of it was chargeable with the negligence of his driver. Weldon v. People's R. Co. [Del.] 65 A. 589. Where the driver of a vehicle about to cross the track drives so close to it as to be hit by an approaching car while turning into the space between the track and the curb in endeavoring to avoid the car, he is guilty of contributory negligence. McClelland v. Pittsburg Rys. Co. [Pa.] 66 A. 76. Evidence sufficient to show contributory negligence where one drove onto the track in front of an approaching car. Cole v. Metropolitan St. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 97 S. W. 555. Evidence sufficient to show contributory negligence where a car collided with a hose cart which was responding to a fire alarm. Wood v. New Orleans R. & Light Co., 117 La. 119, 41 So. 436. Evidence insufficient to show absence of contributory negligence where a car collided with an ice cream delivery wagon. Bernstein v. New York City R. Co., 102 N. Y. S. 799. Evidence sufficient to show contributory negligence where one without looking drove onto the track immediately behind a car and was struck by a car coming from the opposite direction on the other track. MacGuire v. New York City R. Co., 102 N. Y. S. 749. Evidence sufficient to show contributory negligence and freed from negligence where the driver of a truck attempted to cross in front of a car not twenty feet off and the motorman did all in his power to stop the car and avert the collision. Litzour v. New York City R. Co., 101 N. Y. S. 990. Evidence sufficient to show contributory negligence as a matter of law where one drove onto the track directly in front of an approaching car. Harris v. Lincoln Trac. Co. [Neb.] 111 N. W. 580.

Imputed negligence.[75]—The negligence of a driver of a vehicle cannot be imputed to a person riding in the vehicle.[76]

Driving on or near the tracks.[77]—The driver of a vehicle has a right to drive over the portion of the street occupied by the car tracks,[78] but he must be on the alert [79] and take steps to avert injury to himself when he becomes aware that a car is approaching.[80] He may assume that cars approaching from the rear will keep proper lookout and exercise ordinary care to prevent injury to him,[81] and will not be run at a negligent and reckless rate of speed.[82] A motorman may assume that one driv-

76. The negligence of the driver of a vehicle in which a boy sixteen years old is riding is not imputable to the boy. Peterson v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo.] 97 S. W. 860. Where a fireman was killed in a collision between a hose cart and car, the negligence of the driver of the cart was not imputable to him. McBride v. Des Moines City R. Co. [Iowa] 109 N. W. 618. Where one riding in a carriage with which a car collided is injured, the negligence of the driver is not imputable to him, though such driver was not a common carrier. Fechley v. Springfield Trac. Co., 119 Mo. App. 358, 96 S. W. 421.

77. See 6 C. L. 1575.

78. Where one was injured by the overturning of his sleigh on a ridge of snow between car tracks, and it appeared that he could only drive in the space occupied by the track and tipped while turning to let a car pass, he was not negligent as a matter of law in attempting to turn back so as to get on the other side of the street. McMahon v. Lynn & B. R. Co., 191 Mass. 295, 77 N. E. 826.

79. Evidence sufficient to show contributory negligence where one was driving on the track with his cap pulled down over his ears and knowing that a car might overtake him, and there was no necessity for his driving on the track. Abbott v. Kansas City El. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 97 S. W. 198.

80. Contributory negligence is not shown where one testified that he was driving close to the track because obstructions in the street forced him to do so, but that when he saw a car coming one hundred and fifty feet distant he immediately turned his horses and would have been safe in a moment's more time. Mertens v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 512. Plaintiff, the driver of a mail wagon, was injured by a street car striking the step of his wagon as the car rounded a curve. Plaintiff knew the rear end of the car would swing out and he stopped when the part of the car which struck the wagon was sixty-five feet distant. Plaintiff's horse was under complete control, and if plaintiff had pulled in closer to the curb, as he might have done, the accident would have been avoided. Held that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence precluding a recovery. Waters v. United Trac. Co., 99 N. Y. S. 763. Evidence insufficient to show negligence where a car ran into a vehicle which was being driven on the track in front of the car, which was seen by the driver, and other persons in the vehicle in time to get out of the way and warning was given by the car in time to have avoided the accident. Schneider v. Mobile Light & R. Co. [Ala.] 40 So. 761.

81. One driving along a street may presume that cars approaching from the rear will keep proper lookout and exercise ordinary care to prevent injury to him. Indianapolis St. R. Co. v. Marschke [Ind.] 77 N. E. 945. In an action for a collision between a vehicle and car, an instruction on contributory negligence that if the speed of the car was suddenly and without warning increased, so that the person injured could not by the exercise of ordinary care avoid the accident, he could not be guilty of contributory negligence, was proper. Indianapolis St. R. Co. v. Coyner [Ind. App.] 80 N. E. 168. A complaint alleging that, while one in the exercise of due care was driving along a street, a car was negligently run against the rear end of his wagon, is sufficient to show the duty owed the injured person by the company and its breach. Blue Ridge Light & Power Co. v. Tutwiler [Va.] 55 S. E. 539. A person driving along the street close to the track may assume that operatives of cars approaching from the rear will look out for his safety and avoid running into him. Mayes v. Metropolitan St. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 97 S. W. 612. Where it appeared that one driving along the track relied on hearing the gong and there was evidence that it was not sounded, an instruction that if plaintiff's peril was discovered by the motorman in time to have avoided the collision, and the plaintiff was free from negligence he could recover, was proper. Recktenwald v. Metropolitan St. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 97 S. W. 557. An instruction that it is the duty of a driver of a furniture van to use ordinary care to ascertain the approach of cars, and if he could have avoided the collision he could not recover though the motorman failed to give warning of the car's approach, was erroneous, as the driver was entitled to rely on the gong being sounded on the approach of a car and failure to look back was not such contributory negligence as precluded recovery. American Storage & Moving Co. v. St. Louis Transit Co., 120 Mo. App. 410, 97 S. W. 184.

82. Where a van was struck from the rear on a very dark night and it appeared that the only portion of the street on which it could travel was on the track, and it appeared that the car was traveling at a high rate of speed, it was held a question for the jury whether the rate of speed was dangerous and reckless. American Storage & Moving Co. v. St. Louis Transit Co., 120 Mo. App. 410, 97 S. W. 184. Where the evidence, in a suit for damages for injury to a team and carriage which had been struck by a street car, goes to show that the team was being driven parallel with the track and in the same direction the cars run, and to avoid another team which stood in the way was compelled to turn upon the track, when it

ing a vehicle on the track will get off in time to avoid being injured,[83] but if he sees a vehicle on the track or so near to it as to be in danger of injury and can stop the car in time to avoid collision without danger to the passengers and fails to do so, the company is liable.[84] Questions of negligence and contributory negligence are generally held to be of fact,[85] unless the evidence or circumstances show otherwise as a matter of law.[86]

was struck by a car coming up behind and running very rapidly, it is not error to refuse to direct a verdict for the defendant on the ground of negligence by the driver of the team. Northern Ohio Trac. Co. v. Drown, 7 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 549.

83. An instruction that a motorman might assume that a traveler would get off the track before a car could reach him, and that the motorman was not required to slacken speed until danger of collision was apparent, properly modified by adding, after "had a right to assume," "if he gave warning of the approach of the car." Recktenwald v. Metropolitan St. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 97 S. W. 557. A motorman is not required to stop his car until he is conscious that the driver of a preceding vehicle is heedless of his danger, but when he becomes conscious of such fact he is bound to exercise the highest degree of care. Schneider v. Mobile Light & R. Co. [Ala.] 40 So. 761. Where a car and the driver of a cart are approaching each other, each may assume that the other will act with reasonable prudence under the circumstances. Weldon v. People's R. Co. [Del.] 65 A. 589.

84. Instruction approved. White v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. [Mo.] 101 S. W. 14. Evidence held to show that the motorman was negligent where he ran into an unloaded lumber wagon, the reach of which protruded several feet to the rear, but the collision occurred under a strong gas light and the team was light gray. Mertens v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 512. A gripman who sees a vehicle being driven ahead of his car so close to the track that the car cannot pass, and it is apparent because of vehicles in the way that the driver cannot get away from the track, is negligent where he does not stop his car and avert accident where he has plenty of time to do so. Mayes v. Metropolitan St. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 97 S. W. 612. If a motorman sees or should see one driving along the track in time to avoid collision and fails to exercise ordinary care to avert accident, the company is liable. Winn v. Metropolitan St. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 97 S. W. 547. Under a complaint alleging that the motorman should have seen one driving along the track in time to have avoided collision by the exercise of ordinary care, the plaintiff may recover though the humanitarian doctrine is not applicable because plaintiff's peril was the result of his own negligence. Recktenwald v. Metropolitan St. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 97 S. W. 557. In an action against a street railway company for injuries to a traveler in a collision with a car, the testimony showed that the traveler's wagon was driven for a distance of six hundred feet near the track, and that the motorman could have seen the wagon for at least that distance before he collided with it. The car ran on a down grade at a speed of twenty-five miles an hour. Speed was not checked and no signal given. Held that the traveler, though guilty of contributory negligence, was entitled to recover because of the negligence of the company. Baxter v. St. Louis Transit Co., 198 Mo. 1. 95 S. W. 856. A complaint in an action for injuries sustained in a collision, alleging that because of a ditch beside the track plaintiff was required to drive on the track and the defendant's servants in charge of the car could have discovered his peril in time to avoid injury to him, but after discovering his position negligently ran the car at a dangerous rate of speed until the collision, is good when attacked on appeal. Indianapolis Trac. & T. Co. v. Smith [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 1140. Where because of a ditch by the side of the track a driver was compelled to drive on the car track and a motorman on a car approaching from the rear could have seen his perilous position in time to have avoided the collision, he was properly charged with the exercise of the highest degree of care. Id.

85. Evidence as to whether a motorman was negligent held for the jury. Winn v. Metropolitan St. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 97 S. W. 547. Whether it was contributory negligence to rely on hearing the gong and not looking out for an approaching car held for the jury. Id.

86. Evidence that while one was driving down a grade as a car approached slowly from the rear its wheels began to slip, and though the current was reversed and sand freely applied the car could not be stopped until it struck plaintiff's wagon, forced it into another wagon ahead, caused the pole to be broken and the plaintiff thrown out and injured, does not show negligence. Blue Ridge Light & Power Co. v. Tutwiler [Va.] 55 S. E. 539. Evidence held to show contributory negligence as a matter of law where one driving on the tracks knew that a car was approaching and turned off the track to let it pass, but before it did pass turned back onto the track. Robinson v. Crosstown St. R. Co., 103 N. Y. S. 58.

87. See 6 C. L. 1578.

88. Question of negligence held for the jury where one was injured by his team becoming frightened at a street car. Carger v. Macon R. & Light Co., 126 Ga. 626, 55 S. E. 914 Evidence insufficient to show negligence where a horse became frightened at a car and jumped onto the track where a collision ensued, there being ample space for the vehicle to pass and the car was not running at an unusual rate of speed. Moxley v. Southwest Missouri Elec. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 99 S. W. 763. Where plaintiff's horse was frightened by the customary noise made in starting a car equipped with compressed air for a motorman who sees or should see a frightened or unmanageable horse near the track in front of his car to fail to use every reasonable means to prevent a collision.[89] It is not negligence per se to leave a horse attached to a carriage in a street unhitched,[90] but may become negligence under some circumstances.[91]

(§ 8) D. Bicycle riders; automobiles; animals.[92]—The law governing the use of public streets by automobiles is the same as that governing the use of such streets by carriages or other ordinary vehicles.[93] The same rule applies as to bicycle rider,[94] and no recovery can be had unless negligence on the part of the company be shown.[95]

brakes, there was held to be no sufficient evidence of defendant's negligence. Hoag v. South Dover Marble Co., 50 Misc. 499, 100 N. Y. S. 639. Where a motorman sees or should eee a horse which is becoming frightened, he must do what he can to avert accident, but if he sees it too late to avoid injury, the company is not liable where the horse rears and alights immediately in front of the car. Olney v. Omaha, etc., R. Co. [Neb.] 111 N. W. 784. Where a horse was frightened by a car run with snow scrapers and ran in front of the car and was injured, evidence insufficient to show negligence on the part of the company. Moulton v. Lewiston, etc., R. Co. [Me.] 66 A. 388. Speed of car held pertinent on the question of negligence where a horse was frightened and in its frightened condition was followed by the car running at a high rate of speed. Applegate v. West Jersey & S. R. Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 65 A. 127. A complaint in an action by one injured by his team taking fright at a car which does not allege, except by way of recital, that the team would not have become unmanageable if the car had been stopped, nor that failure to stop was the proximate cause of the injury, etc., held demurrable. Folz v. Evansville Elec. R. Co. [Ind. App.] 80 N. E. 868.

89. Heidelbaugh v. People's R. Co. [Del.] 65 A. 587.

90. Moulton v. Lewiston, etc., R. Co. [Me.] 66 A. 388.

91. Where left in the street where there is a car line at a time when conditions are such that cars may be expected to run with snow scrapers, calculated to frighten horses. Moulton v. Lewiston, etc., R. Co. [Me.] 66 A. 388. In such case there can be no recovery where the horse becomes frightened, runs in front of the car, and is injured. Id.

92. See 6 C. L. 1578.

93. The driver of an automobile, approaching a street railway crossing, must use due care. He should have his automobile under control and should be on the lookout for approaching cars. Garrett v. People's R. Co. [Del.] 64 A. 254. A complaint alleging that while one was driving an automobile at night at a point where the highway took a sharp turn and the glare of the headlight on a car approaching at an unlawful rate of speed so blinded him that he could not see and no effort was made to stop the car, and in trying to get out of danger he ran into a trolley post and demolished his machine, states a cause of action for negligence. Garfield v. Hartford & S. St. R. Co. [Conn.] 65 A. 598; Bell v. Hartford & S. St. R. Co. [Conn.] 65 A. 600. Where deceased was killed while crossing a street railway track in an automobile driven by his employer, and there was no evidence that the deceased looked or took any precaution while the employer looked once when some distance away and did not look again until the automobile was on the track, it was held that a judgment for the plaintiff could be sustained. Ward v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 100 N. Y. S. 671.

94. The rights of a street car and a bicyclist at street crossings are equal. A bicyclist has a right to assume that a car will approach a crossing at proper speed and under proper control. Where a person riding a bicycle upon the street in the usual way reaches a point twenty feet from a street car track and sees a car approaching one hundred and fifty feet distant, his failure to stop and wait until the car passed is not contributory negligence as a matter of law. Brooks v. International R. Co., 112 App. Div. 555, 98 N. Y. S. 765. A bicycle rider approaching a car track at night is not bound to stop, alight from his wheel, and look intently for cars before attempting to cross. Indianapolis St. R. Co. v. Taylor [Ind. App.] 80 N. E. 436. Where a bicycle rider approaching a crossing at night saw a car go by and looked but did not see another one approaching without a headlight, and believing the noise he heard was made by the car just passed he attempted to cross and was struck, held he was not guilty of contributory negligence in failing to hear the car which struck him. Id. Where one riding a bicycle at night was struck by a car while crossing the street proof that the motorman stood in the front of the car and that no headlight was carried was sufficient to show that the motorman had notice that the car carried no headlight. Id.

95. Where one riding a bicycle within a foot or two of the track swerved suddenly onto the track without looking back and was immediately struck by a car following him, held the motorman was not guilty of negligence in failing to anticipate that the rider would attempt to cross and in failing to give warning or stop the car after he started to cross. Harbison v. Camden & Suburban R. Co. [N. J. Law] 65 A. 868. A bicycle rider riding along the street within a foot or two of the track who suddenly swerves onto the track without looking back and is struck by a car following him is guilty of contributory negligence. Id. Instruction held erroneous as withdrawing the issue of contributory negligence from the jury where a bicycle rider was struck by a car approaching from the rear. Romeo v. Union R. Co., 102 N. Y. S. 844. Where a bicycle rider was thrown from his wheel onto the track, an instruction that both he and the company had equal rights in the highway, except that the company had a preference right to the track and "consequently it was

Animals.[96]—No recovery can be had for animals killed, in the absence of negligence.[97] A motorman is under no duty to stop his car to avoid injury to a dog,[98] unless it is apparent to him that the dog is oblivious to his danger.[99] It is not contributory negligence to permit animals to run at large outside stock limits.[1]

§ 9. Damages, pleading and practice in injury cases.[2]—Whether a notice of claim is required depends on statute.[3]

Pleadings.[4]—Negligence,[5] or willfulness[6] of the defendant must be clearly al-plaintiff's duty to avoid being on the track or so close to it as to be in danger," did not charge that the bicyclist had no right to the street though he had been thrown there. Hall v. Washington Water Power Co. [Wash.] 89 P. 553. Evidence sufficient to sustain a verdict for the company where a bicycle rider was thrown from his wheel and injured by a car. Id. Instruction on willful negligence of a motoneer in running down a bicycle rider held correct. Rawitzer v. St. Paul City R. Co., 98 Minn. 294, 108 N. W. 271.

96. See 6 C. L. 1578.

97. In an action against a street railroad for killing a hog, the burden is on the plaintiff to show that the hog was killed through the negligence of the defendant, and there can be no recovery in the absence of evidence that the hog went on the track in front of the motorman in time for him to have stopped the car before striking it, had he seen it and used all the means in his power to that end. Little Rock R. & Elec. Co. v. Newman, 77 Ark. 599, 92 S. W. 864. In an action against a street railroad for the killing of a hog, it was proper to admit evidence that the motorman remarked at the time "that the hog jumped on the track right in front of the car." Id.

98. The motorman of a street car is under no duty to stop the car to avoid injuring a dog, unless there is something about the dog's action and movements, or inaction, to indicate that he is unable to get off the track or oblivious of the approach of the car, but otherwise the motorman is under the duty to use ordinary care to frighten the dog off or check or stop the car. Klein v. St. Louis Transit Co., 117 Mo. App. 691, 93 S. W. 281.

99. When dogs are engaged in fighting on the track apparently oblivious to danger, a motorman on discovering their peril must exercise reasonable care to avoid injuring them. Must give proper signals or check the speed of his car. Harper v. St. Paul City R. Co., 99 Minn. 253, 109 N. W. 227.

1. Permitting a cow to run at large outside "stock limits" is not contributory negligence. Little Rock Trac. & Elec. Co. v. Hicks [Ark.] 96 S. W. 385. It is not contributory negligence to allow a hog to run at large outside the "stock limit." Little Rock R. & Elec. Co. v. Newman [Ark.] 92 S. W. 864.

2. See 6 C. L. 1579.

3. Under Pub. St. c. 113, § 32, requiring street railway companies to repair the portion of the streets occupied by their tracks, and c. 52, § 19, providing that one injured because of a defect in a highway must give notice prior to suing, held where one was injured by his sleigh tipping on a ridge of snow between the tracks of a railway, the ridge having been thrown up by a snow plow, he was not required to give notice. McMahon v. Lynn & B. R. Co., 191 Mass. 295, 77 N. E. 826.

4. See 6 C. L. 1579.

5. A complaint alleging that the motorman negligently left his post as he approached a child standing near the track, and negligently waved at the child and so frightened it that it ran onto the track in front of the car, and was struck before the motorman could regain his position and stop the car, shows that the act of the motorman was within the scope of his employment. Wahl v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo.] 101 S. W. 1. An allegation that intestate was in a vehicle on a public highway on which defendant's cars were being operated near the intersection of another highway sufficiently shows the relation of the parties from which a duty to exercise care could be inferred. Birmingham R., Light & Power Co. v. Clarke [Ala.] 41 So. 829. Allegations that while one was driving in a populous part of a city across a car track his wheel caught and checked the horse while the car was about forty rods distant and that the collision was due to the motorman wantonly, recklessly, or intentionally, failing to use due care after he knew or should have discovered the peril, does not allege willful or reckless conduct. Anniston Elec. & Gas Co. v. Elwell, 144 Ala. 317, 42 So. 45. Such complaint, however, sufficiently alleges simple negligence. Id. An allegation that defendant's servant in charge of the car so negligently conducted himself as to run the car against a person is sufficient and not objectionable as a conclusion. Birmingham R., Light & Power Co. v. Ryan [Ala.] 41 So. 616. A complaint alleging that a car ran against a child and that he died by reason of and as a proximate result of the negligence of the company in or about the management of the car charges negligence. Birmingham R., Light & Power Co. v. Jones [Ala.] 41 So. 146. A complaint that a company in disregard of its duty to stop a car, by its agents in charge of the car, negligently ran the car against a horse, sufficiently charges the company with negligence. Indianapolis & N. W. Trac. Co. v. Henderson [Ind. App.] 79 N. E. 539. Where an automobile was injured in a sparsely settled district an allegation that a search light of the dimensions carried by the car was not permitted to be used in populous districts was properly expunged as irrelevant. Garfield v. Hartford & S. St. R. Co. [Conn.] 65 A. 598.

6. Willfulness or wantonness cannot be charged unless it is alleged that the motorman knew that the place where the accident occurred was one where persons passed so frequently that it was probable that persons would be on the track, or that the car was run at such speed that it could not be stopped after one was discovered, or that leged.[7] Allegations must not be repugnant[8] and there must not be a departure.[8] A causal connection between the negligence alleged and the injury must be apparent.[9] They are to be so construed as to give effect to the intent of the pleader.[10] Contributory negligence as a defense must be pleaded.[11] An allegation that defendant owned and operated a street railway is not denied by a general issue.[12]

Burden of proof and evidence.[13]—One suing for an injury alleged to have been negligently inflicted has the burden of proving negligence,[14] and that it was the proximate cause of the injury.[15] It is presumed where a pedestrian was killed that the motorman was guilty of willful misconduct after discovering his peril. Anniston Elec. & Gas Co. v. Elwell, 144 Ala. 317, 42 So. 45. A complaint alleging that the company's servants while running a car "recklessly and wantonly or intentionally" ran it against the wagon on which plaintiff was driving is not demurrable in that it is uncertain whether simple or wanton negligence is charged and that it joins disjunctively in the same count simple and wanton negligence. Garth v. North Alabama Trac. Co. [Ala.] 42 So. 627. A complaint alleging that after a motorman discovered a traveler's peril he wantonly and recklessly ran the car against his wagon, whereby he was injured, sounds in case and not in trespass. Anniston Elec. & Gas. Co. v. Elwell, 144 Ala. 317, 42 So. 45. A complaint alleging that the company wantonly caused or allowed a car to run against a child, thereby wantonly and negligently causing its death, charges an intentional wrong. Birmingham R. Light & Power Co. v. Jones [Ala.] 41 So. 146.

7. A complaint for injuries to a horse alleging that while it was being driven along the street it became frightened and ran on the track in clear view of the motorman who saw or should have seen it in time to stop the car, but in disregard of his duty he ran the car against the horse, held not vitiated because of alternative averments. Indianapolis & N. W. Trac. Co. v. Henderson [Ind. App.] 79 N. E. 539. A complaint in an action for injuries at a crossing alleging in one count that the pedestrian failed to keep a vigilant lookout and also that he failed to stop his car in the shortest space possible does not allege repugnant grounds of negligence. McQuade v. St. Louis & S. R. Co. [Mo.] 98 S. W. 552. Where a complaint alleges that a person was killed by negligence, first in excessive speed and second in not stopping the car when a stop was called for and could have been made, there was no such contradictions in the allegations as to require an election as to which allegation would be relied upon. White v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. [Mo.] 101 S. W. 14.

8. There is no departure between an original petition alleging that the rate of speed of a car was thirty miles an hour and an amendment alleging that it was in excess of twenty miles per hour. Carey v. Metropolitan St. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 101 S. W. 1123.

9. A complaint setting out a speed ordinance and alleging its violation held demurrable as not showing causal connection between such violation and the injury, nor why the person injured was on the track. Anniston Elec. & Gas Co. v. Elwell, 144 Ala. 317, 42 So. 45.

10. A complaint charging certain acts of negligence and that certain other acts constituting statutory negligence contributed to the injury, should be construed that such statutory negligence contributed to other negligence alleged. McQuade v. St. Louis & S. R. Co. [Mo.] 98 S. W. 552; Deschner v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. [Mo.] 98 S. W. 737.

11. In an action against a street railroad for injuries, contributory negligence must be pleaded by defendant. Wise v. St. Louis Transit Co., 198 Mo. 546, 95 S. W. 898. Plea setting up contributory negligence in failing to stop, look and listen is not demurrable, because not showing under what circumstances it is necessary to take all of such precautions. Garth v. North Alabama Trac. Co. [Ala.] 42 So. 627.

12. Can be reached only by special plea denying the fact. Chicago Union Trac. Co. v. Jerka [Ill.] 81 N. E. 7.

13. See 6 C. L. 1579.

14. Halloran v. Worcester Consol. St. R. Co. [Mass.] 78 N. E. 381; Heidelbaugh v. People's R. Co. [Del.] 65 A. 587. One whose vehicle is injured in a collision has the burden to prove negligence, the railway company the burden to prove contributory negligence. Indianapolis St. R. Co. v. Marschke [Ind.] 77 N. E. 945. Where a pedestrian was killed the burden is on the plaintiff to prove that deceased was in the exercise of due care. Adams v. Boston & N. St. R. Co., 191 Mass. 486, 78 N. E. 117. Evidence sufficient to show that the defendant, and not another street car company, was in possession of a line where a car jumped the track and collided with a wagon. Chicago Union Trac. Co. v. Jerka [Ill.] 81 N. E. 7. Where a witness testified that a collision occurred in a certain city describing the locality, it justified a finding that it occurred within the corporate limits. Anniston Elec. & Gas Co. v. Elwell, 144 Ala. 317, 42 So. 45. Where a motorman saw a pedestrian 50 or 60 feet ahead of the car where the track was slippery and there was a shrply descending grade, expert testimony that the car could have been stopped within such distance was not essential to recovery. Richmond v. Metropolitan St. R. Co. [Mo. App.] 100 S. W. 54. One who sued for an injury negligently inflicted is not bound to exclude all possibility of the accident having happened in some other way than alleged, but is only required to show by a preponderance of evidence that it happened in the manner alleged. Woodall v. Boston El. Ry. Co. [Mass.] 78 N. E. 446.

15. Where one's cart was injured in a collision he has the burden to prove that the railway company's negligence was the proximate cause of the injury. Weldon v. People's R. Co. [Del.] 65 A. 589. In an action against a street car company for the

he was in the exercise of ordinary care,[16] but where a person who goes upon the track without stopping to look and listen is killed, it is presumed that his conduct contributed to his death.[17] The usual rule as to testifying to a conclusion applies.[18] A speed ordinance is admissible on the question of negligence though violation thereof is not declared on.[19] Injuries other than that sued for may be shown to illustrate the force of the collision.[20] Fire department rules not known to the street car company are not admissible.[21] Habits of the driver of a vehicle are admissible on issue of contributory negligence.[22] The weight to be given testimony is for the jury to determine.[23] Within what distance a particular car can be stopped death of plaintiff's horse, alleged to have resulted from injuries sustained in a collision, it was necessary for the plaintiff, in the absence of a post mortem, to prove that the injuries inflicted were adequate to cause death, or if not adequate of themselves, that they afterwards resulted in a condition which was an adequate cause of death, and that nothing intervened, except the accident, to which the death could be attributed. It was error to charge that in the absence of evidence as to the cause of death there was a legal presumption that it occured from the accident. Nocera v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co., 113 App. Div. 419, 99 N. Y. S. 349. A finding that negligence of the company in imposing on the motorman the dutles of the conductor, and in not keeping a proper lookout, were the proximate causes of an injury, is proper as the company is liable in either case. Glettler v. Sheboygan Light, Power & R. Co. [Wis.] 109 N. W. 973.

16. Goff v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo.] 98 S. W. 49. It is presumed that one killed by a car exercised due care. Powers v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo.] 100 S. W. 655.

17. Birmingham R. Light & Power Co. v. Ryan [Ala.] 41 So. 616.

18. A witness may not testify that a motorman seemed to do all he could to stop the car as quickly as possible but should state what he did. Birmingham R. Light & Power Co. v. Randle [Ala.] 43 So. 355. A motorman is not entitled to testify whether he stopped the car as soon as he could but is required to state what he did, and whether that was all he could do. Id. Where a motorman testified that he first saw a person walking about three feet from the track, he was entitled to testify whether the car would have struck him at that distance in passing. Id. Testimony "that the motorman tried to stop the car" is objectionable as being a conclusion. San Antonio Trac. Co. v. Klumpf [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 863. Opinion evidence of conductor held inadmissible. Oates v. Union R. Co., 27 R. I. 499, 63 A. 675. Testimony of a witness that a car was running at the usual rate of speed, that cars traveled along that street, and that it was pretty good rate as it was down grade there, is competent. Little Rock R. & Elec. Co. v. Green [Ark.] 93 S. W. 752.

19. In an action for death caused by collision between a street car and a vehicle, evidence of a city ordinance as to the rate at which cars were permitted to be run is admissible, though violation of the ordinance was not declared on as a ground of action. Oates v. Union R. Co., 27 R. I. 499, 63 A. 675.

20. Where plaintiff was thrown from a van loaded with furniture in a collision, evidence of the injury to the furniture after the collision is admissible for the purpose of showing the force of the impact and inferentially the speed of the car. Moore v. Westchester El. R. Co., 100 N. Y. S. 610.

21. Where a fireman was killed in a collision between a hose wagon and a car, it is not admissible to show rules of the fire department intended for guidance of the members and issued only to them. McBride v. Des Moines City R. Co. [Iowa] 109 N. W. 618.

22. Where one was injured in a collision between a car and a vehicle driven by another, evidence of the habits of the driver and the injured persons knowledge thereof is admissible on the question of contributory negligence. Bresee v. Los Angeles Trac. Co. [Cal.] 85 P. 152. But in such case where it was not claimed that the accident was due to lack of control of the horses due to the manner of holding the reins, evidence of the driver's habit of driving with a loose rein was inadmissible. Id.

23. Testimony of a bystander that no bell was rung as a car approached a boy standing on the track is not devoid of probative value as against the testimony of those riding on the car that the bell was rung. Butler v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 117 Mo. App. 354, 93 S. W. 877. Where horses were killed, positive evidence of several witnesses that there was no signal light burning on the car is not to be set aside merely because the motorman swore to the contrary. Cross v. St. Louis Transit Co., 120 Mo. App. 458, 97 S. W. 183. Where one was struck at night by a car running at a high rate of speed without a head-light, his positive testimony that he looked for a car but did not see one is not so unreliable as to require its rejection, though other witnesses testified that they were able to see the car some distance away. Indianapolis St. R. Co. v. Taylor [Ind. App.] 80 N. E. 436. Where persons looking for a street car in the direction from which it is coming, declare that the car which is directly in their sight had no head-light burning and was in complete darkness, their evidence is not negative in distinction to positive evidence. Cox v. Schuylkill Valley Trac. Co., 214 Pa. 223, 63 A. 599. An answer to an interrogatory that the motorman because of deliberate and willful purpose on his part ran the car against the plaintiff is in conflict with the answer to another that the motorman did not see him. Indianapolis St. R. Co. v. Taylor [Ind. App.] 80 N. E. 436. In an action for damages for injuries sustained is a proper subject of expert testimony,[24] but what is a reasonably safe rate of speed for a car to be operated on a particular street is not.[25] A layman may give his opinion as to the rate of speed a car was running.[26]

by plaintiff's truck in a collision with one of defendant's cars, evidence that plaintiff looked for approaching cars before crossing a track held to be incredible, as a matter of law, as being in contradiction to matters of common knowledge. Golden v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 49 Misc. 521, 98 N. Y. S. 848.

24. A witness who is qualified to testify concerning the operation of cars may testify as to within what distance a particular car can be stopped. Birmingham R., Light & Power Co. v. Randle [Ala.] 43 So. 355. The court, in refusing to permit a witness showing familiarity with the stopping of electric cars and the conditions and circumstances influencing the stopping of the same to testify that at the time a street car collided with a traveler the motorman made a good stop, and as quick a stop as could be made at the time and place, did not abuse its discretion. Dallas Consol. Elec. St. R. Co. v. English [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 606, 93 S. W. 1096. It is proper to exclude testimony of a witness as to whether he knew within what distance one of defendant's cable cars when running at its usual rate of speed could be stopped, and, if so, to state within what distance it could be stopped without injury to the passengers, no showing having been made that witness was qualified to express an opinion thereon. Boring v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 194 Mo. 541, 92 S. W. 655.

25. What is a reasonably safe speed for a car to be operated on a particular street is not a proper subject for expert testimony. Ford's Adm'r v. Paducah City R. Co., 30 Ky. L. R. 644, 99 S. W. 355.

26. A witness may testify that he did not know how fast a car was running, but judging from the ordinary speed of cars, it was running at twenty miles per hour. Little Rock Trac. & Elec. Co. v. Hicks [Ark.] 96 S. W. 385.

27. See, also, Instructions, 8 C. L. 333.

28. Where there was no evidence that a traveler was injured because of failure to turn off the track when called to by the motorman, an instruction predicated on such theory was properly refused. Davis v. Durham Trac. Co., 141 N. C. 134, 53 S. E. 617. Under allegations characterizing as negligence, high speed and failure to sound the gong, and also charging negligence in running the car against plaintiff's buggy, an instruction submitting the last clear chance doctrine is not outside the issues. Indianapolis St. R. Co. v. Marschke [Ind.] 77 N. E. 945. It is error to instruct that the jury must consider whether the motorman was negligent in not stopping or checking the speed of the car, where there was no evidence as to his ability to do so under the evidence. McBride v. Des Moines City R. Co. [Iowa] 109 N. W. 618. Where a fireman was killed in a collision between a hose cart and car, it was proper to refuse an instruction that the instinct of self-preservation should not be considered where the attention of the jury was not in any manner called to such doctrine. McBride v. Des Moines City R. Co. [Iowa] 109 N. W. 618. Where a child was killed by being struck by a hand hold fastened to the side of a car, there was no error in refusing to instruct as to the duty to equip the car with fenders. Hanley v. Ft. Dodge Light & Power Co. [Iowa] 107 N. W. 523. Where there was no evidence that a car was not stopped in the shortest space possible, it was not error to nullify by instruction the effect of an ordinance providing that on the first appearance of danger the car should be stopped in the shortest space possible. Deschner v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. [Mo.] 98 S. W. 737. Where there was testimony that tho car pushed the wagon in which plaintiff was riding six or eight feet, and that after it stopped plaintiff alighted on his feet and at no time fell to the ground, and he testified that he was not hurt, the court should have instructed that he was not injured. Dallas Consol. Elec. St. R. Co. v. Conn [Tex. Civ. App.] 100 S. W. 1019. The error in submitting to the jury, in an action against a street railway company for injuries in a collision with a car, the issue of the incompetency of the motorman because of the absence of evidence on the question, is not prejudicial, where, in obeying the instructions, the jury found that he was negligent. Ft. Smith Light & Trac. Co. v. Carr [Ark.] 93 S. W. 990. An instruction which does not follow the description of willfullness alleged is erroneous. Garth v. North Alabama Trac. Co. [Ala.] 42 So. 627. Where it was for the jury to determine whether a motorman saw a person about to cross the street and whether failure thereafter to stop the car was willful negligence, it was error to charge that there was no evidence of willful intent to injure plaintiff. Id. An instruction that if a motorman saw the danger in time to avoid the injury and did nothing to reduce the speed of the car, he was negligent, is erroneous where there was no evidence to show that there was time to do anything. Id. Where there was evidence tending to show wantonness on the part of the motorman and instruction that if the motorman saw or should have seen the danger and failed to stop the car, such conduct was willful negligence, was erroneous as not stating to whom the danger became apparent, and in failing to postulate wanton conduct in failing to stop the car. Anniston Elec. & Gas Co. v. Elwell, 144 Ala. 317, 42 So. 45. An instruction hypothesizing failure of a motorman to do all that a reasonably prudent motorman would do under the circumstances to save the life of a child is erroneous where it fails to further hypothesize that such fact was the proximate cause of the injury. Birmingham R. Light & Power Co. v. Jones [Ala.] 41 So. 146. An instruction which is erroneous in that it fails to hypothesize that negligence was the proximate cause of the injury is cured by a subsequent instruction which does so. Id. A plea of contributory negligence in driving on the track in front of a car does not justify an instruction based on the theory that the vehicle was suddenly driven onto the track in front of an ap-

29. Where an injury occured because a car collided with a vehicle from the rear, it was proper to refuse to instruct that plaintiff must prove that the collision was caused directly and "solely" by defendant's negligence. Wallock v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo. App.] 100 S. W. 496. Instruction construed and held not erroneous as telling the jury that the company had an absolute right to run its cars at a certain rate of speed regardless of the circumstances. Masterson v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo.] 98 S. W. 504. Instruction held not erroneous as failing to submit that the act of a motorman which caused a child to run onto the track in front of a car was within the scope of his duties. Wahl v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo.] 101 S. W. 1. Instructions construed and held that one using ordinary care "at the time" did not limit the time at which the person injured was required to exercise ordinary care to the moment of the collision. Chicago City R. Co. v. Ryan, 225 Ill. 287, 80 N. E. 116. Instruction held not erroneous as charging that contributory negligence was no defense. Wallock v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo. App.] 100 S. W. 496. Where an ordinance, giving fire apparatus responding to a call the right of way, was admitted, it was not error to set it out in the instructions and inform the jury as to the legal effect of it. McBride v. Des Moines City R. Co. [Iowa] 109 N. W. 618. In an action for death caused by collision between a street car and a vehicle, the refusal to charge that the violation of the ordinance of the city does not excuse the deceased from exercising reasonable care was error, where the court had just charged that, if the car was being propelled at a greater rate of speed than the ordinance permitted, the company was guilty of negligence as a matter of law, and that, if by reason of such negligence the injury occurred, the plaintiff was entitled to recover. Oates v. Union R. Co., 27 R. I. 499, 63 A. 675. Where, in an action against a street railroad company for injuries, there was no claim or evidence that plaintiff was injured except by being struck by the car, but there was conflict as to whether the car was stopped as soon as possible after plaintiff was thrown on the fender, defendant was entitled to an instruction that, even if defendant was negligent in failing to stop as soon as possible after plaintiff was thrown on the fender, it was not liable because plaintiff was thus carried. Lawrence v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 99 N. Y. S. 735. Where the petition in an action for personal injuries did not allege that plaintiff received an injury to his neck, and the evidence showed such an injury, an instruction failing to limit recovery to the injuries claimed in the petition was erroneous. Dallas Consol. Elec. St. R. Co. v. English [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 606, 93 S. W. 1096. Instruction that a motorman was not required to anticipate that the driver of a vehicle would turn onto the track before he actually attempted to do so, etc., held not to cover a request that the motorman was entitled to presume that the driver of a vehicle would remain on the right side of the street until he gave some outward indication to the contrary. Birmingham R. Light & Power Co. v. Clarke [Ala.] 41 So. 829. Failure to instruct that if a child suddenly and unexpectedly attempted to cross the track, and such act was the proximate cause of the injury, is not error where the jury found that the motorman should have discovered the child in time to have avoided the injury. Glettler v. Sheboygan Light, Power & R. Co. [Wis.] 109 N. W. 973. An instruction that plaintiff must prove the material averments of his complaint is not prejudicial to defendant because including facts additional to those alleged. Indianapolis & N. W. Trac. Co. v. Henderson [Ind. App.] 79 N. E. 539. Where a pedestrian was injured in a collision and evidence showed that the car was standing still just before the collision, the company was not prejudiced by an instruction relative to the rate of speed at which cars might be operated in the exercise of due care. Indianapolis St. R. Co. v. Hackney [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 1048. An instruction that a traveler is not negligent as a matter of law in attempting to drive across the track, if he judged at the time this could be safely done, because of the distance of the car from the place of crossing, invades the province of the jury. Rubinovitch v. Boston El. R. Co. [Mass.] 77 N. E. 895. Instruction held not to be erroneous as rendering a street railroad responsible irrespective of the negligence of a third person which might have contributed to the accident. Steinman v. St. Louis Transit Co., 116 Mo. App. 673, 94 S. W. 799. Where the jury was instructed that if ordinary prudence demanded a signal, it was the motorman's duty to give such signal a failure to instruct as to what would be the consequence of a failure to signal, is not error where under defendant's instructions the burden was upon the plaintiff to prove enumerated alleged acts of negligence one of which was a failure to sound gong. Mullin v. St. Louis Transit Co., 196 Mo. 572, 94 S. W. 288. Where the petition predicates negligence upon excessive speed, failure to sound gong, or to keep the car under control, and the negligent, careless, and unskillful, operation of the car, an instruction eliminating the question of speed and a failure to signal does not take from the consideration of the jury all questions of negligence averred. Beier v. St. Louis Transit Co., 197 Mo. 215, 94 S. W. 876. Instruction on degree of care required by motorman in case of sudden peril caused by plaintiff unexpectedly driving on track sustained. Bloomington & Normal R. Elec. & Heating Co. v. Koss, 123 Ill. App. 497. Refusal of instruction as to degree of care required by plaintiff before driving on track held error. Bloomington & Normal R., Elec. & Heating Co. v. Koss, 123 Ill. App. 497.

30. An instruction that if a dog was licensed he had a right to be upon the public highway, is misleading, if not erroneous. Klein v. St. Louis Transit Co., 117 Mo. App. 691, 93 S. W. 281. On an issue as to whether a car was moving it was error to charge that the jury must find that the car was not moving or was moving at the rate of three or four miles per hour. Devlin v. New York City R. Co., 102 N. Y. S. 430. In an action for injuries received in a street car accident, a charge of court which dwells upon the subject of contributory negligence as an affirmative defense, when there was no such defense interposed, and is silent as to the burden of removing a suggestion of contributory negligence found in the plaintiff's own testimony, is so misleading as to require a reversal of the resulting verdict. Cincinnati Interurban Co. v. Haines, 8 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 77. While testimony as to speed of a car is always more or less unsatisfactory, yet when the testimony offered on that subject was the best obtainable and was worthy of consideration, the finding of a jury made with reference thereto and in the light of the surrounding circumstances should not be disturbed. Id. Instructions that whether or not a motorman was negligent depended on whether he acted as a reasonably prudent person would under the circumstances, and that if by reason of excitement or other reason he failed to do something that a prudent person would, he was negligent, while perhaps misleading, was not reversible error. Birmingham R., Light & Power Co. v. Ryan [Ala.] 41 So. 616. Where a request to charge "there must be positive proof that the car made an unusual noise" was supplemented by the court "or some other misconduct on the part of the defendant making them negligent," held not prejudicial as the jury will be deemed to have applied the instruction to the case in hand. Applegate v. West Jersey & S. R. Co. [N. J. Err. & App.] 65 A. 127. Instruction held not to give street cars carrying United States mails peculiar rights at street crossings. Tepper v. Boston El. R. Co. [Mass.] 78 N. E. 384.

31. Instruction that it is a motorman's duty to exercise reasonable dlligence to discover persons on or near the track in front of the car, and if he believes that such a person is unconscious of his danger, to use every reasonable effort to stop the car, and if he failed to do so, the company was liable, does not assume that the car could have been stopped. Indianapolis Trac. & T. Co. v. Smith [Ind. App.] 77 N. E. 1140. An instruction that the company is seeking to escape liability for injuries negligently inflicted by setting up contributory negligence assumes that there is a liability. Garth v. North Alabama Trac. Co. [Ala.] 42 So. 627. Where the evidence as to whether a car came in contact with a person injured was conflicting, it is error to assume that the car injured him. Id.

32. Where the evidence was substantially one way to the effect that there was time and space to stop a car after danger became apparent, an instruction assuming such fact is not erroneous. Deschner v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. [Mo.] 98 S. W. 737. Where, in an action for injuries through negligence, defendant moved to dismiss the complaint on the ground that plaintiff failed to show himself free from contributory negligence, that it affirmatively appeared that he was guilty of contributory negligence, and that no negligence had been made out against defendant, it was to be assumed that plaintiff's evidence was true, and he was entitled to the most favorable inference deducible from the evidence. Volosko v. Interurban St. R. Co., 113 App. Div. 747, 99 N. Y. S. 484.

33. In an action against a street railroad for injuries to one struck by a car while crossing a street, an instruction that if defendant's servant did not have the car under control, and the injuries were caused by defendant's negligence, plaintiff was entitled to recover, was erroneous as ignoring the question of contributory negligence. Solomon v. New York City R. Co., 50 Misc. 557, 99 N. Y. S. 529. It is erroneous to ignore the motorman's duty to slacken speed upon discovering a person in a position of danger, though he was guilty of contributory negligence. Powers v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo.] 100 S. W. 655. Instruction held not objectionable as leaving out of view the duty of the motorman. Masterson v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo.] 98 S. W. 504. Instructions held not erroneous as ignoring issues of speed and whether a pedestrian was killed by being dragged by the car after he was struck. Id. An instruction that a motorman should keep his car under such control as to be able to bring it to a safe stop before striking one crossing the street is erroneous as ignoring the suddenness with which such person come upon the track. Garth v. North Alabama Trac. Co. [Ala.] 42 So. 627. It is proper to refuse an instruction which ignores the duty of a motorman to keep a lookout for persons on the track. Birmingham R., Light & Power Co. v. Jones [Ala.] 41 So. 146. An instruction ignoring wanton and willful conduct is erroneous where evidence shows that a car was run at a high rate of speed over a populous crossing, without signals, and where it appeared that the motorman knew of the character of the place. Birmingham R. Light & Power Co. v. Ryan [Ala.] 41 So. 616. It is error to instruct that if a person injured saw the car at such a distance as to warrant an assumption that it was safe to cross, he was not negligent in failing to look again, as it authorizes the jury to ignore circumstances that intervened between the time he saw the car and the time of the collision. Marguiles v. Interurban St. R. Co., 101 N. Y. S. 499.

34. Where the court instructed that if a person injured was guilty of certain acts constituting contributory negligence, she could not recover, it was held not error to refuse to give another instruction relative to contributory negligence. South Covington & C. St. R. Co. v. Cleveland, 30 Ky. L. R. 1072, 100 S. W. 283.

35. Instruction as to ordinary care in an action for injuries to a child held not ground for complaint on the part of the plaintiff in that the jury might have been held to believe that the company discharged its duty toward the child by exercising the

SUBROGATION.

§ 1. Definition and Nature (2041).
§ 2. Right to Subrogation (2041).
§ 3. How Forfeited or Lost (2043).
§ 4. Remedies and Procedure (2043).

§ 1. Definition and nature.[51]—Subrogation is the substitution of another person in place of a claimant to whose rights he succeeds in relation to the claim, or an equitable assignment vesting one paying the debt of another with all the rights of the creditor thereto.[52]

§ 2. Right to subrogation.[53]—The general rule is that when two or more persons are each liable to a third and one of them ought to pay the amount rather than the other, and one of the latter does pay the indebtedness, he is thereupon subrogated so as to stand in the shoes of the creditor with all his rights, and remedies against the principal sureties and cosureties. It is generally and most frequently applied to cases where the person advancing money to pay the debt is a surety or secondarily liable,[54] or where one of several equally liable satisfies the entire claim,[55] and it subsists whether or not the obligation is satisfied of record, [56] but such person cannot be subrogated until a default actually takes place.[57] Thus when an insurer pays a loss occasioned by the tortious act of a third person, he is subrogated to the rights of the insured as against the tort feasor.[58] Subrogation is also applicable to cases where a party is compelled to pay the debt of a third person to protect some interest of his own,[59] or where he is induced to satisfy a preexisting lien through fraud or mistake,[60] but not where there is no interest to protest nor fraud nor mis-

the terms of its charter a street railway company becomes liable for the repair of streets and bridges and subsequently an intersecting steam railway company is also made responsible for the same act, the first company is not discharged from its obligation, but on the making of such repairs by the steam railway the latter is subrogated to the rights of the municipality to enforce payment of its pro rata portion from the street railway.[74] In Louisiana an agreement for subrogation to be enforced must be made at the time of the payment under which it is claimed.[75] In the absence of any agreement a materialman having a lien on premises destroyed by fire is not subrogated to the rights of the insured on the policy.[76] A creditor paying a receiver the amount of a debt owed by the estate is subrogated to the rights of the receiver in certain security held by him as well as the rights of the debtor on other property.[77] Where in an action in which the attorney for the plaintiff has a lien for 50 per cent of the amount to be recovered the defendant and plaintiff compromise the same with full knowledge of the attorney's claim with an agreement that the defendant shall pay the attorney, on payment of the lien by the defendant, he is subrogated to the attorneys rights against the plaintiff.[78] A creditor is subrogated to the surety's right to security given him by the principal for indemnification.[79]

§ 3. How forfeited or lost.[80]—Where the principal obligation is barred by statute of limitations, a surety may set that up as a defense against a surety subrogated thereto and suing thereon.[81] The right to subrogation may be barred by laches.[82]

§ 4. Remedies and procedure.[83]—The party subrogated may enforce all the remedies to which the creditor was entitled.[84] An individual who has paid money to the government as a surety acquires the same right of priority which belongs to the government, and it may be that the same priority extends to one who has satisfied a moral obligation to the government by responding as surety for a Federal officer or employe who has been guilty of misfeasance.[85] But the surety of a bank designated as the depository of the assets of a bankrupt which is required to give bond to the United States is not entitled to preference on the insolvency of the bank.[86] So where the creditor has attached property on the secured debt, and the holding security therefor is not entitled to be subrogated to such security, since the relation of a principal and surety does not exist. Id.

§ 1. Nature, Requirements, and Sufficiency as a Contract (2044).
§ 2. Rights and Liabilities Arising From Subscriptions (2044).
§ 3. Enforcement, Remedies, and Procedure (2045).

§ 1. Nature, requirements, and sufficiency as a contract.[90]—Gratuitous subscribers may withdraw at any time before the proposition has been accepted or acted upon,[91] and when the procuring of subscriptions to a certain amount is a condition to liability, one may withdraw at any time before such amount has been reached.[92] Notice of withdrawal may be sent to the person who procured the signatures and who still holds the paper regardless of whom he acted for.[93] One may not rescind a subscription to corporate stock on the ground of fraudulent representation after others have acted upon the faith of the subscription and the corporation has become insolvent.[94]

§ 2. Rights and liabilities arising from subscriptions.[95]—The contract will be construed with reference to the intent of the parties at the time,[96] and in addition to its phraseology, the court will consider the subject-matter, the inducement which influenced the subscription and the circumstances under which it was made.[97] An agreement to procure subscribers for a proposed undertaking implies an agreement that the subscribers shall be financially responsible.[98] Substantial compliance with conditions is all that is required.[99]

SUNDAY.

§ 1. Sunday as Dies Non Juridicus (2045).
§ 2. Violation of Sunday Laws as Defense to Actions (2045).
§ 3. Sunday Laws and Prosecutions for Their Violation (2045).

§ 1. Sunday as dies non juridicus.[6]—Receiving and entering a verdict on the minutes of the court may be done on Sunday.[7] And Sunday should be counted in computing time within which a petition should be filed.[8] A tax deed executed on Sunday if void does not merge and destroy the lien of the tax certificate.[9]

§ 2. Violation of Sunday laws as defense to actions.[10]—Contracts entered into on Sunday, in violation of a Sunday law, are illegal and cannot be enforced,[10a] and where the inception of a contract is void because it involves the unlawful doing of work on Sunday, the acceptance on another day in a foreign state where the contract might be valid is immaterial.[11] However, contracts made on Sunday and subsequently recognized on a subsequent secular day in such a manner as to amount to an absolutely new contract are then enforceable.[12] The fact, also, that a telegram was sent on Sunday, even if in violation of the Sunday laws making void a contract made on Sunday, is no defense to an action in tort for mental anguish for its wrongful transmission.[13] Dating the contract as of a secular day cannot work an estoppel on a party who knew that it was a Sunday one.[14]

§ 3. Sunday laws and prosecutions for their violation.[15]—An ordinance prohibiting the keeping open of barber shops on Sunday is constitutional when there is no attempt to discriminate or classify.[16] And such law is not invalid, as unreasonable, because it covers a period from twelve o'clock Saturday night into Monday morning.[17] If particular occupations "and others" be the subjects of regulation, the word "others" refers to others of like nature.[18] An exception that certain places may be kept open for certain purposes is strictly limited to those named.[19] What amounts to "keeping open" need not be "keeping wide open" or keeping open in the same manner and for the same purposes as on week days.[20] A city license cannot authorize the violation of a state Sunday law.[21] Selling liquors on Sunday in a city exclusively empowerd to regulate sale of liquor on Sunday cannot constitute a violation of a general law against selling "goods" on Sunday.[22] One engaged in farm work on Sunday, which is not work of necessity, is guilty of violation of the statute forbidding work except of necessity.[23] A state statute however prohibiting the running of freight trains on Sunday does not apply to those engaged in interstate commerce,[24] and an interstate railroad having but 30 miles in Georgia, is not a railroad over 30 miles long.[25] Beer served in a restaurant is merchandise according to the Texas Statute.[26] Religious belief and observance of another day as the Sabbath is no defense to a prosecution for keeping open workshops on Sunday, even though they may be closed to the public on that day.[27] A statute prohibiting the exposure of goods for sale on Sunday is not repealed by nonuser or by implication, and a prosecution under it will not be restrained because it is not enforced against others;[28] but a prosecution under a Sunday law, which is illegal and void because of conflicting with a general statute to the contrary, should be enjoined.[29] Where a portion of a municipal ordinance in respect to the keeping of open doors on the Sabbath was valid, a conviction of one guilty of violating this valid portion is sustainable, although certain other portions of the statute are invalid.[30]

30. Fichtnberg v. Atlanta, 126 Ga. 62, 54 S. E. 933.

§ 1. Nature, occasion, and propriety.[31]—A supplementary proceeding is an independent action in no way affecting the merits of the action in which the original judgment was rendered.[32] It is generally had before a judge or other officer having special authority, and is not instituted by or in the court in which the judgment was obtained.[33]

§ 2. Proceedings necessary on which to base remedy.[34]—In Kansas, an abstract of a judgment of a justice of the peace duly filed in the district court is a sufficient basis for the proceeding.[35] Execution must have been issued and returned unsatisfied.[36] An advertised sale may be abandoned on execution returned unsatisfied so as to authorize an examination, if the sale would be useless because of incumbrances.[37] The return of the sheriff of an execution unsatisfied is conclusive until impeached.[38]

§ 3. Application for examination of defendant and debtors. A. Affidavit and opposition to same.[39]—When a statute makes no provision for notice of an intended application, none is required,[40] and the debtor is not deprived of his constitutional rights because no notice is provided for.[41] In determining on what theory a complaint is based, the court will consider its leading allegations together with the other portions of the record.[42] It must be shown to the satisfaction of the judge that the debtor has property not subject to levy or which is so kept by him that it cannot be clearly identical or with ordinary diligence reached by execution.[43] An application stating that petitioner believes that defendant has property subject to execution and that he has conveyed his property in fraud of creditors is sufficient,[44] but an affidavit by the creditor's attorney based wholly on information and belief is fatally defective, neither the grounds of belief nor the sources of the information being stated,[45] and an allegation of demand and refusal to apply certain property to the satisfaction of the judgment is defective where it fails to show that the refusal was unjust, or whether the creditor's remedy by execution is inadequate.[46] An affidavit that the statements in the petition are true to the best of affiant's knowledge and belief is sufficient under the Missouri statute.[47] An affidavit in opposition to an order for defendant's examination, setting up a previous examination but not stating that defendant has now no property which should be applied on the judgment, is insufficient.[48]

(§ 3) B. Order and citation process or warrant.[49]—A defendant cannot be ordered to appear before the clerk of the court and be examined while there is a similar proceeding against him pending on appeal,[50] and when a statute prohibits a discontinuance or dismissal of examination proceedings except by order of the judge, failure to make such order is a valid objection to the making of another order for examination.[51] If there is danger of defendant's leaving the state and it appears that he has property which he unjustly refuses to apply to the satisfaction of the judgment, the judge has power to require him to give security for his appearance at the time designated for examination.[52] An order for the examination of a third person may not be served by the judgment creditor.[53] Witnesses must be cited by subpœna and not by order,[54] and under the New York statute the subpœna must be issued by the judge and not by plaintiff's attorney.[55] No appeal lies from an order for an examination in the absence of statute.[56]

§ 4. Procedure at and after examination.[57]—The judge has jurisdiction to determine whether that in which it is claimed the debtor has an interest is property available under the statute.[58] While the issue of the ownership of property claimed by third persons in good faith cannot be litigated in supplementary proceedings,[59] the court being only empowered to authorize the judgment creditor to institute an action to recover it and to forbid its transfer pending suit,[60] the mere fact that property is in the hands of others or that a colorable dispute as to ownership arises does not deprive the judge of power to proceed.[61] The character of the claim on which the judgment was rendered may be shown by parol,[62] but evidence altering or impeaching the original judgment is inadmissible.[63] The granting or denying of motions to adjourn the examination is discretionary with the judge.[64] In Kansas the probate judge acts as a subordinate officer of the court from which the execution issued,[65] and, in the supervision of the probate judge's action, such court exercises original rather than appellate jurisdiction.[66]

§ 5. Relief against defendant. A. Order for payment or delivery.[67]—If it is determined that the debtor has property which may be reached under the statute,[68] and which cannot be taken by execution, the magistrate in Massachusetts has power to direct an assignment to the creditor of the debtor's interest therein.[69] In Ohio, ten per cent of the earnings of the debtor may be subjected to the payment of a judgment for necessaries.[70] Property transferred by the debtor for value before entry of judgment cannot be reached.[71] Failure of the judgment debtor to appear and testify does not prevent the judge from making such order as the testimony produced will warrant.[72] Where a proper complaint is sustained by the evidence, it cannot be said that the decision of the court in ordering payment of the judgment is contrary to law.[73]

(§ 5) B. Receivership or other equitable relief.[74]—The appointment of a receiver is often authorized.[75] Under a statute providing that the property of the judgment debtor shall vest in the receiver, property held in a representative capacity does not vest in him in supplementary proceedings against executors.[76] If the order appointing a receiver vests the legal title to a chose in action in him, defendant may not thereafter sue on it,[77] and, if it be not so construed, a suit thereon by defendant may be barred by limitations.[78] The remedy by execution must be first exhausted before the receiver is entitled to subject the debtor's real estate to the payment of the judgment.[79] Where the validity of assignments of claims by the debtor is in doubt, the assignee will be enjoined from collecting judgments on them pending suit by the receiver to recover the judgments.[80] The question whether the receiver turned money over to plaintiff voluntarily or under promise that it be returned if necessary is one of fact determinable only in an action and not by motion after demand for its return.[81]

An injunction restraining the disposition of property, issued without notice or the giving of a bond, and naming no return day, is void, no emergency being shown.[82]

(§ 5) C. Contempt.[83]—An order to testify served only on the attorney of one who is not a party cannot be made the basis of a contempt proceeding.[84] On default of one who is cited to show cause why he should not be punished for violating an order for his examination, the court is not bound to adjudge him guilty of contempt without a hearing,[85] but may direct that he be brought before it.[86] The judge who takes a debtor's default may entertain a motion to open it, and on reargument may nullify his denial of the motion by opening the default.[87] The fact that an order to show cause why a default should not be opened is made returnable before the judge, who took the default "or one of the other justices" of the court,

SURETY OF THE PEACE.[89]

By statute in some states one convicted of an offense may be required to give bond to be of good behavior in the future;[90] but in the absence of such statute, security cannot be exacted to prevent habitual violations unless they disturb the peace or constitute a public nuisance.[91]

§ 3. The surety's liability.[98]—Where on the face of an obligation both parties are jointly bound, parol evidence may be admitted to show that the relation of principal and surety exists.[99] Thus a wife signing an obligation with her husband may show that she is in fact a surety.[1] Where by statute she cannot be a surety for her husband, she cannot estop herself by her action so as to become liable.[2] A creditor may elect to sue either the principal or the surety in the first instance [3] and cannot be compelled to choose either,[4] and generally, by an agreement inter se, joint debtors cannot fix their liability so as to bind the creditor,[5] but in Louisiana a surety has a right to have his cosureties included in the suit, and that he be sued for no more than his proportionate share.[6] A creditor need not reduce his claim to judgment to bind the surety.[7] The liability of the surety is that contemplated by the contract,[8] and it is generally held that this liability should be strictly construed,[9] but the liability of a fidelity company engaging in business for profit is not to be construed as in the case of voluntary sureties.[10] A surety for the purchaser at a judicial sale is bound by the order confirming sale although it changes the contract of suretyship.[11] The liability of the surety is limited by that of his principal,[12] and cannot exceed the amount stated in the bond.[13] And judgment against the principal is

City of New Haven v. Eastern Pav. Brick Co., 78 Conn. 689, 63 A. 517. A surety is not liable beyond the strict terms of his contract and bond. Smith v. Bowman [Utah] 88 P. 687. In a replevin bond the value of the property therein stated is conclusive as to the surety's liability in the absence of all other evi-binding as to the surety's liability,[14] or at least is evidence thereof.[15] The liability of a surety on an agent's or officer's bond extends to subsequent terms or not of office according to the evident intention of the parties as expressed therein,[16] and does not extend before or after the time agreed upon.[17] The sureties on the bond of a public official are answerable only for the faithful performance by him of the duties devolving upon him by law, and not for malfeasance in the performance of duties not thus devolving upon him,[18] and are estopped to deny the official capacity of the principal.[19] After the surety has received the full consideration for execution of an official bond, he cannot set up immaterial variances from the statutory requirements.[20]

§ 4. The surety's defenses. A. Legal defenses to surety's liability.[21]—A surety may set up as a defense the nonfulfillment of any condition precedent he may make to his liability, such as notice of default within a certain time,[22] or want of signature of the principal debtor [23] or other sureties.[24] However, if a surety waives exedence. Martin v. Hertz, 224 Ill. 84, 79 N. E. 558. The surety in a government contract, on the failure of his principal, is liable for the difference between the amount of the contract and the amount for which a new contract is made, and default of the second contractor does not increase his liability. Brown v. U. S. [C. C. A.] 152 F. 964. A surety on a statutory bond to discharge a mechanic's lien is not liable thereon unless the judgment declares the lien to be enforcible. Casey v. Connors Bros. Const. Co., 103 N. Y. S. 1103. A surety on bond against liens on a building contract is liable only for default of the principal in paying enforcible liens. Alcatraz Masonic Hall Ass'n v. U. S. A surety on a bond to the state for the construction of a public building is not liable for materials furnished, under a provision indemnifying the state against mechanics' liens, for no such lien will lie against a public building. Smith v. Bowman [Utah] 88 P. 687.

14. City of Philadelphia v. Pierson [Pa.] 66 A. 321.

15. Where sureties have notice of impending suit on a bond against the principal, the judgment obtained therein is prima facie evidence of the sureties' liability. Henry v. Heidmaier, 226 Ill. 152, 80 N. E. 705. In the absence of any allegation of collusion between the administrator and the next of kin, a surety is bound by the final decree and cannot open the same in a suit on the administrator's bond brought by such next of kin. In re Haight's Estate, 50 Misc. 238, 100 N. Y. S. 488. A judgment directing the appointment of a receiver to bring suit against the surety on an administrator's bond is not conclusive as to the liability of the surety. Preston v. American Surety Co. [Md.] 64 A. 292. As a general rule an auditor's settlement of a tax collector's account is admissible in evidence against the latter and his sureties (Commonwealth v. Carson, 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 437), and this rule is not changed though the settlement contains an item of charge for which the sureties are not liable (Id.), but in such case the jury should be instructed to disregard such item (Id.).

W. 360. A surety on the bond of a county depository is liable for loss or defalcations made subsequent and prior to the date of the execution of the bond. Henry County v. Salmon [Mo.] 100 S. W. 20. A surety on a cashier's bond, in the absence of any language in the bond itself, giving a different effect, is not liable beyond the term of office of such cashier, though the trustees of the bank in which he is employed may appoint him for an indefinite period. Wapello State Sav. Bank v. Colton [Iowa] 110 N. W. 450.

17. Where a payment by a tax collector is not identified in a settlement as belonging to any year, it will be presumed in a collateral proceeding in the absence of evidence that the item belonged to the year as to which the settlement was made. Commonwealth v. Carson, 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 437. A complaint against a surety for defalcation of an agent is demurrable unless it shows that the money was in such agent's hands when the fidelity bond was executed. 23. The failure of the principal to sign an application for an indemnity bond does not discharge the surety where the bond recites that it is given "in consideration of mutual covenants." Aetna Indemnity Co. v. Ryan, 103 N. Y. S. 756. The surety can testify that he had no intention of being bound unless the principal joined in the bond, cution by the principal of a bond which on its face is to be executed by both, the facts should be pleaded.[25] The surety may also set up that the obligation is void because of failure of consideration,[25a] and where a surety has been once discharged, he cannot be held on his new promise to pay the debt unless some new consideration be given therefor.[26] It is a good defense to the surety that there is an alteration on the face of a contract,[27] or that it is unenforceable because of the statute of limitations.[28]

(§ 4) B. Defenses based on extinguishment or absence of principal's liability.[29]—Where a creditor releases a principal, he also discharges the surety from all liability on the debt,[30] but a release or discharge of the principal by operation of law does not discharge the surety, and, therefore, bankruptcy of the principal is no defense to the surety.[31]

(§ 4) C. Defenses based on change of contract or increase of the risk.[32]—A surety has a right to stand on the strict terms of his agreement and any alteration thereof operates as a new contract to which he is not a party, and he is consequently discharged, and this is true though the surety sustains no injury and even though the change is for his benefit,[33] but not where the alteration is made with the con-where on the face the bond was not signed by all parties named therein. School Dist. No. 80 v. Lapping [Minn.] 110 N. W. 849. A bond executed by a surety only where the principal is named but does not sign it does not show on its face any obligation on the sureties. Id. Where a bond on its face provides for execution by a principal and sureties, it is void as to sureties, unless executed by the principal. Bjoin v. Anglim, 97 Minn. 526, 107 N. W. 558; Tully v. Cartwright [N. M.] 89 P. 309. In the absence of notice to the creditor of an agreement between the principal and surety that certain other parties should become cosureties, the surety has no defense thereon. Wollenberg v. Sykes [Or.] 89 P. 148. Where the name of a cosurety appearing on the face of a contract is lacking, failure to obtain his signature is a good defense thereto. Hendry v. Cartwright [N. M.] 89 P. 309.

Held not to be a material alteration: The removal of the plaintiff's business by the principal, from "B" to "C," when described as "K of B" in the obligation of suretyship, the words are construed as being merely descriptive. Rouss v. King, 74 S. C. 251, 54 S. E. 615. Where the building contractor for a city defaults, and the material man to sent of the surety.[34] The surety has also an additional ground for discharge from an altered contract on the ground that it increases his risk, and this is held to give complete defense, whether or not the alteration was for his benefit;[35] and overpayment is generally held to operate as a discharge since it increases the risk.[36] The contract, however, may in terms provide and clearly contemplate such alterations, and the surety is then deemed to have given his consent in advance to such change, or where the right to make alterations is reserved in the contract,[37] or where the defense of overpayment would be good, it is waived by the surety consenting thereto in the original contract.[38] A surety is not entitled to notice of default where there is no such provision in the contract;[39] but where a demand on the surety is a condition precedent to liability on the contract, failure to plead that such notice has been given does not preclude its being set up in evidence.[40]

principal.[41]—Since a promise on the part of the creditor to extend the time of payment of an obligation would prevent immediate enforcement thereof by the surety on his payment and subsequent subrogation to the rights of the creditor, from the time of the making of such a promise, a surety is discharged.[42] Such promise must be made without the consent of the surety,[43] and be a good defense in a suit brought by the creditor against the principal debtor,[44] and hence be supported by good and valuable consideration.[45] The receipt of interest after maturity not yet earned is usually held to be conclusive of such forbearance,[46] but it has been held that the mere payment and acceptance of interest on an overdue note does not discharge a surety unless it is shown that it is paid in advance, and operates as an extension of time.[47] The receipt of notes of the principal as collateral security does not operate as an extension of time where in fact no such extension is given.[48] Mere neglect to sue, however, is no defense to the surety, and does not operate as an extension of time.[49]

When the indorser of a check presented it to the drawee for certification which was made thereby discharging the indorser, and thereafter the indorser executed an instrument reciting that he consented to the extension of time of payment, held, the instrument not being based on a consideration did not create a liability against the indorser. Where a creditor has obtained the equity of redemption of mortgage security and applied the same to the principal indebtedness, the surety is released pro tanto, since he would be entitled to the same on the theory of subrogation. Crosby v. Woodbury [Colo.] 89 P. 34. Where a bank takes stock as collateral to a note, part of which stock is owned by the four makers, one of whom is principal and the others sureties, and part of the stock is owned by the principal, the lateral of the principal given to the creditor to secure the debt is merely the right accruing only after the debt is fully paid, to be subrogated to the right of the creditor in respect of the collateral.[52] A surety is entitled to have the security of the secured debt sold before resort to him, but failure to do so does not operate as a discharge.[53] A surety on a contractor's bond having a right to complete the building and become entitled to the reserve in the hands of the owner does not stand in the position of an assignee, but as an original party in a trilateral agreement.[54]

(§ 4) F. Defenses based on fraud or concealment by creditor of material facts.[55]—Before entering upon a contract it is the duty of the creditor or obligee to disclose all pertinent facts regarding the subject of the contract within his knowledge,[56] but such misrepresentations to operate as a discharge must be made before the execution of the contract of suretyship,[57] and in the absence of inquiry, the knowledge of such defect of the principal need not be communicated,[58] nor is negligence on the part of the employer or his agents in not discovering the faults of his servants sufficient to operate as a discharge.[59]

(§ 4) G. Other defenses.[60]—Where payments are made by the principal on the debt, failure to apply the same in payment discharges the surety pro tanto,[61] and where in a running account a payment has been credited on a certain debt thereby discharging the party, there can be no revivor of liability except by the consent of the surety.[62] Where a principal owing money to a bank has at the time of the maturity of the debt, more than enough to pay the same, and is permitted to draw the same out on check, the surety is thereby released.[63] The equitable rule as to the application of payments may be changed by agreement between the parties.[64] A failure to pay dividends on stock held as collateral to a note is in favor of the surety and should be credited on the debt, and is no ground for the discharge of the principal obligation.[65] Failure to sue at request in the absence of statute is no defense to the surety,[66] and negligent failure on the part of a creditor to sue the principal or to present the claim against him in the bankruptcy courts does not release the surety;[67] but in states where at the request or demand of the surety the creditor must sue, the surety is discharged by his failure to do so, but the surety has no right to demand that suit be brought against the principal unless the latter is in default,[68] and failure of the creditor to sue the principal at the request of the surety does not operate as a discharge when the creditor is not yet the owner of the claim or is not in a position to enforce the same,[69] nor where the principal has absconded and has no property.[70] The request to sue, however, must be plain and unambiguous.[71] The issuance of an unenforceable writ of execution by the creditor against the principal does not release the surety.[72] Where the payment of a note by the principal is set aside by the bankruptcy courts as a preference, the sureties thereon are not released.[73] Sureties on a redelivery bond in an action of replevin are not liable on a judgment of costs rendered against the defendants because of a continuance.[74]

Where a statute provides for suit by the creditor at the request of the surety, a notice that "P did not intend to pay until the courts say he will have to," is not such a notice as to come within the statute. Williams v. Ogg [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 940, 94 S. W. 420. Where a surety on a note, in answer to a letter from the owner of the note requesting payment, writes: "Please collect of Mr. Beers (the principal) all you can of this amount, and notify me and I will arrange for the balance," and the owner of the note answers, suggesting that the surety see the principal and secure himself against loss, and the surety immediately replies, saying "I will try and see Mr. Beers (the principal) soon, am very busy for a few days, and will report to you as soon as I can. Thanks for your suggestion," and nothing further is done by either party in reference to the matter, held, that that does not constitute a sufficient notice, according to the provisions of Rev. St. § 5833, to relieve the surety, because of the neglect of the owner to bring suit on said note for six years after such correspondence. Haskell v. Beers, 4 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 49.

of the latter before his debt becomes due.[81] Where a surety has agreed to defend on the principal obligation at the request of the principal, providing the latter would furnish the funds therefor, the surety cannot recover his expenses for such defense where the principal makes no request that he do so.[82]

§ 6. Security held by surety and rights therein.[83]—On payment of the indebtedness, a surety is entitled to share in the security deposited with the cosurety for his indemnification,[84] and a creditor is entitled to the security in the hands of a surety for the indemnification of the latter on the debt,[85] but generally a surety is not required to surrender any security given him by the principal as indemnity until his liability to pay is ended;[86] but a statute providing that creditors have the right to the security which the principal gives the surety as an indemnity applies only to cases where the indemnity is furnished by the principal and not where a stranger furnishes such indemnity.[87]

§ 7. Remedies and procedure.[88]—A surety is a proper, but not a necessary, party to a suit on an obligation,[89] and where a suit is brought against two or more joint makers on an obligation, other cosureties can be brought in and their rights determined in the original action.[90] Where a statute gives a right of appeal from the final decree to heirs, etc., and other persons interested, the surety on a guardian's bond has a right to appeal.[91]

§ 1. Nature and kinds, and power to tax.[92]—A tax is a charge or burden imposed by the state on persons or property, for the support of the government or for some specific purpose authorized by it.[93] It is not a debt,[94] nor has it any of the elements of a contractual obligation.[95]

The power to tax is an attribute of sovereignty[96] inherent in the legislative branch of the government[97] and subject to no limitations or restrictions beyond those set up in the fundamental law, or found in the structure of the government itself.[98]

Among the limitations which have been expressly incorporated in the written constitutions of the nation and of the various states may be mentioned the provisions of the Federal constitution guaranteeing the equal protection of the laws,[99] forbidding the deprivation of property without due process of law,[1] and denying to the

94. Carpenter v. Jones County, 130 Iowa 494, 107 N. W. 435. A tax is not a debt in the sense that it will be barred by a statute of limitations. Georgia R. & Banking Co. v. Wright, 124 Ga. 596, 53 S. E. 251. The distinguishing feature between a debt and a tax is that in case of the former there is an express or implied promise to pay, enforcible by ordinary remedies, and in case of the latter such element does not exist and such remedies are ordinarily not applicable. State v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. [Wis.] 108 N. W. 594.

95. A tax is an exaction of sovereignty and not something derived from an agreement. People v. Grout, 103 N. Y. S. 975. But see § 16, infra, where cases are cited to the view that license taxes are contractual in their character.

96. State v. Braxton County Ct. [W. Va.] 55 S. E. 382. The right to tax is not granted by the constitution but of necessity underlies it, because government could not exist or perform its functions without it. While it may be regulated and limited by the fundamental law, it exists independently of it as a necessary attribute of sovereignty. People v. Reardon, 184 N. Y. 431, 77 N. E. 970.

99. The Federal constitution is not violated in this respect by Kentucky statutes imposing a tax on distilled spirits in bonded warehouses. (Thompson v. Com., 29 Ky. L. R. 705, 94 S. W. 654), nor is N. Y. Laws 1905, p. 2059, taxing real estate mortgtges, invalid because made applicable only to mortgages recorded after a future date (People v. Ronner, 185 N. Y. 285, 77 N. E. 1061). See 6 C. L. 1602, n. 58.

states the right to tax objects of interstate commerce;[2] and provisions of state constitutions against unreasonable searches,[3] restricting the rate of taxation,[4] the purposes thereof,[5] and requiring uniformity and equality in the laying of taxes.[6]

There exist also several well defined implied limitations upon the taxing power. Thus the persons and property must be within the territorial jurisdiction of the taxing power[7] at the time of incurring the obligation for which the tax was levied.[8] The tax law must operate uniformly and equally throughout the entire taxing dis-

2. Standard Oil Co. v. Fredericksburg, 105 Va. 82, 52 S. E. 817. Interstate commerce is not unconstitutionally interfered with by N. Y. Laws 1896, c. 908, § 182, imposing a franchise tax on domestic railways. (People v. Miller, 202 U. S. 584, 50 Law. Ed. 1155), nor by N. Y. Laws 1905, c. 241, imposing a tax on transfers of corporate stock when applied only to a transfer made within the state (People v. Reardon, 184 N. Y. 431, 77 N. E. 970; Id., 27 S. Ct. 188), but Texas Sess. Laws 1905, p. 336, imposing a tax on the gross receipts of railroads from both state and interstate commerce, is unconstitutional as regulative of interstate commerce (Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. 6. Assessing real property at intervals longer than a year, although other classes of property are assessed annually, is not violative of the rule of uniformity. Worton v. Paducah, 29 Ky. L. R. 450, 93 S. W. 617. That property is liable to be taxed in a foreign country does not constitute double taxation, since the power of taxation conferred by the local constitution cannot be made to depend upon the operation of laws of a foreign jurisdiction. Tafel v. Lewis, 75 Ohio St. 182, 78 N. E. 1003. The taxation of mortgaged real estate and the loan secured by the mortgage is not double taxation. Glidden v. Newport [N. H.] 66 A. 117. See 6 C. Stat. 1906, § 1343 et seq., providing for tax inquisitors. State v. Lewis, 74 Ohio St. 403, 78 N. E. 523. A law that must have an equal operation to be constitutional cannot be given an unequal operation by an amendment or by an exception in a repealing statement. Either the subsequent statute or so much of it as would have that effect is void. Friend v. Levy [Ohio] 80 N. E. 1036. trict,[9] the tax must be for a public purpose,[10] and the public interest must be coextensive with the territory in which the tax is levied.[11]

Municipal corporations[12] have no inherent power of taxation,[13] and, since the power to tax is within the grant of legislative authority, there can be no delegation of that authority except to the extent to which it is necessary to carry out the ends for which such municipalities are organized.[14]

Construction of tax laws.[15]—It is not easy to give to the various provisions of the tax laws constructions which shall have the effect to make harmonious, complete, and readily applied revenue statutes. The general purpose of the laws must be of necessity kept in mind and given effect. Cases may arise where the broad right of the state must yield to the particular rights of the individual.[16] In the absence of an unmistakable declaration of the legislative will, a statute providing how taxes shall be assessed and collected is not to be given a retrospective operation either as against the tax payer or the government;[17] and where the legislature has passed an act providing for a new revenue system and has thereby changed the former methods of procedure relating to matters of taxation, the courts in construing its provisions are not bound by any administrative construction of the former revenue law.[18] Doubts as to whether a tax amounts to double taxation are always resolved in favor of sustaining the tax,[19] and the sufficiency of an affidavit in a proceeding for the inspection of a person's books to determine whether taxable property of another has been omitted must be judged by the rule that laws relating to taxation are liberally construed in favor of the taxing power.[20] Tax statutes should be given a prospective operation only, but where the legislature has provided a scheme of taxation for a public improvement which is thereafter found to be unjust and inequitable, the burden may be readjustd upon a new and more equitable basis of assessment.[21] classification.[22]—The legislature has power to classify persons,[23] property, tangible or intangible,[24] and occupations,[25] for the purpose of taxation and to impose different rates upon different classes,[26] or to tax certain kinds of property and not others.[27] It may also provide for different methods of assessment and collection of the taxes upon the different classes.[28] In the exercise of these powers the legislature is subject only to the limitations that the tax imposed must not discriminate in favor of one as against another of the same class,[29, 30] and that the methods prescribed must be consistent with natural justice.[31] The fact that only one person, firm or corporation, falls within a class upon which a license tax is imposed, does not of itself make the tax amenable to the charge of discrimination.[32]

(§ 2) B. The persons liable.[33]—As a general rule the person owning property at the time of the assessment is the person liable for the taxes thereon.[34] Legal disability does not relieve an owner from paying taxes.[35] Where land has become liable for taxes it remains so for that year, although subsequently acquired for purposes rendering it exempt.[36]

Vendor and vendee.[37]—As between a vendor and his vendee, taxes which have become a lien before the title passes are chargeable to the vendor,[38] but a purchaser of bank stock held to have taken them subject to the lien for taxes.[39]

Lessor and lessee.—A personal covenant in a lease that the lessee will pay the taxes assessed against the property of the lessor mentioned in the lease does not as between the taxing district and the lessee make the lessee the owner or taxpayer, and hence entitled to notice of proceedings by the owner to apportion taxes upon the leased property and other property of the lessor and owner.[40]

name of an agent is illegal where he was not in possession of the property at the time of the reassessment.[42]

Mortgagor and purchasers under mortgage sale.[43]—A person holding a mortgage upon real estate is under no obligation to pay the taxes upon such property unless there is some provision in the mortgage requiring him to do so.[44]

Trust property.[45]—Property transferred by a nonresident to a resident trust company in trust for investment is subject to taxation in the hands of the trust company,[46] and money deposited with one employed by parties to a land contract to pass on the sufficiency of a title is taxable to him.[47]

An assignee for the benefit of creditors is charged with the payment of taxes assessed both before and after the assignment.[48]

A life tenant [49] and not the remainderman, in the absence of statutory provisions, must pay taxes accruing during the continuance of such estate.[50]

Husband and wife.—The mere fact that the relation of husband and wife exists does not impose upon either spouse a legal or moral obligation to pay taxes upon real estate owned by the other.[51]

as the right to collect water rates,[63] or to use the streets of a city for the purpose of exercising corporate powers.[64]

Stocks.[65]—Shares of stock held by individual shareholders are the personal property of the holder and taxable as such.[66] This liability extends to the substantial, beneficial ownership,[67] but not to a pledge thereof.[68] The taxation of both shares and tangible property, being distinct values belonging to different persons, is not double taxation,[69] but a statute imposing a tax on the number of shares regardless of their value is invalid as against the rule of uniformity.[70] Stock once issued is and remains outstanding within the purview of the franchise tax act, although owned by the corporation issuing the same, until retired and canceled.[71]

Banks and trust companies.[72]—Under Federal law no taxes based on income licenses, or franchises, can be imposed on national banks by the state.[73] Real estate owned by a national bank must be assessed to the bank, but it must not be assessed at a higher percentage than other realty of the same class situated in the district where the tax is levied.[74] Capital stock must be assessed to each individual shareholder and not as a whole against the bank,[75] and must not be assessed at a greater rate than other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens,[76] and shares owned by nonresidents must be taxed in the city or town where the bank is located.[77] Moneys on deposit are subject to taxation [78] and are not relieved therefrom merely because it may appear that the funds have been checked against. Nor is good faith in issuing of the checks involved. The lien of the state attaches to the deposits on the tax day, unless it appears that prior thereto the checks were presented for payment, or that the bank by certification or otherwise irrevocably committed itself to the holder. In other words, where it appears that the money on deposit on tax day is still subject to the legal demand of the depositor, it is taxable, notwithstanding the fact that there may be checks outstanding against said fund.[79]

Corporate capital and other property.[80]—In a suit to compel the payment of back taxes by a railroad company, the practical construction given by the executive and legislative departments being adopted by the court, the company was held not liable for taxes on its capital stock and loans used without the state.[81] A bridge owned by a railroad and used as a part of its roadbed and tracks is assessable as a part of the road and not as a separate structure, though used as a toll bridge.[82]

Promissory notes owned by a corporation and distributed by it among its stockholders in lieu of dividends are nevertheless taxable to the corporation.[83] Where money is invested in raw material which is converted into a product and sold, such cash returns do not constitute "gross earnings."[84] A bridge company, owning a bridge exclusively leased to a street railway company, held not within the terms of the Michigan statute subjecting carrying companies to a specific tax.[85] Under the Nebraska statutes grain brokers are to be assessed on the average amount of capital invested during the previous year.[86] A provision in an ordinance granting a franchise to a telephone company that it should pay a certain sum on each box in use by it in lieu of all other taxes does not relieve the company from the payment of a general ad valorem tax, the constitution and statutes of the state prohibiting the city from exempting property from ad valorem taxation,[87] but such a provision will be taken as the measure of the charges which the city might impose on account of the use and occupation of its streets.[88]

Foreign corporations.[89]—Foreign corporations are subject to such taxes as the state may see fit to impose as a condition of doing business in the state.[90] Thus license taxes[91] are frequently imposed on foreign corporations engaged in business in the state[92] or employing capital therein.[93] A foreign corporation is not taxable on property in Massachusetts under the general laws unless the property falls within one of the exceptions specified in Rev. 25. Wilkens Co. v. Baltimore, 103 Md. 293, 63 A. 562. In the absence of a constitutional inhibition, the right to make reasonable exemptions from taxation rests with the legislature. Wallace v. Board of Equalization, 47 Or. 584, 86 P. 365. Exemption laws having been recognized in Ohio ever since the adoption of the present constitution, and long before, it has manifestly been the policy of the state to allow certain property to be exempted from taxation, and § 1038a, Rev. St., relating to deductions from the duplicate for destroyed or injured property must therefore be upheld as valid and reasonable, notwithstanding the constitutional provision as to the taxing of all property by a uniform rule according to its true value in money. State v. Wright, 8 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 366. Hay cropped by a tenant on shares with the landlord is exempt under Conn. Gen. St. 1902, § 2315, exempting produce of a farm while owned by the producer. Jackson v. Savage [Conn.] 64 A. 737. In Louisiana the manufacture of fertilizers and chemicals is exempt from parochial and municipal taxation. Planters' Fertilizer & Chemical Co. v. Orleans Assessors, 116 La. 667, 40 So. 1035. A statute exempting certain enumerated property of a householder is not uniform in the rate of assessment and taxation as between householders of the state and nonresidents, and is therefore in conflict with a constitutional provision requiring uniformity of taxation. Wallace v. Board of Equalization, 47 Or. 584, 86 P. 365.

31. A fraternal beneficiary association is not a charitable institution and exempt. Royal Highlanders v. State [Neb.] 108 N. W. 183. Where a benevolent society is authorized to hold property exempt to a given amount, all above that amount is taxable. Evangelical Baptist Benevolent & Missionary Soc. v. Boston [Mass.] 78 N. E. 407. Ill. Act. May 18, 1905 (Laws 1905, p. 357), providing for the exemption of money of fraternal societies, does not fall within the terms of art. 9, § 3, of the constitution, authorizing exemption of property held for charitable purposes. be permitted to extend, either in scope or duration, beyond what the terms of the concession clearly require.[34] Accordingly, when pecuniary gain is derived from the conduct of institutions otherwise entitled to exemptions, the exemption, at least pro tanto, ceases.[35] Exemption, being a favor, must be secured in the manner designated.[36] One cannot wait until sued for the tax to assert the exemption.[37]

Contracts of exemption.[38]—A law exempting property from taxation, coupled with an obligation to contribute to the public support other than by taxation in the ordinary sense, direct taxation of property in consideration of some privilege granted by the state within its power to grant, refuse, or prohibit, is valid, and creates a contract between the owner of the property and the state.[39] The repeal of an exemption granted an educational institution of its leased realty by its charter granted by special act does not violate the New York constitution forbidding the impairment of the obligation of contracts.[40] The Columbian Canal, being exempt from all but state taxes under a contract made by the state with the purchaser of such canal under Act December 24, 1890, the levy and collection of a county tax thereon was void.[41] The Tennessee Act of 1869 and that of 1899, exempting territory annexed to the city of Memphis from liability for existing debts of that city, did not create a contract which could not be impaired.[42] Section 10 of the Virginia act incorporating the Hampton Normal and Agricultural Institute did not constitute a contract between the state and the institute for the exemption of its property from taxation.[43]

County Board of Review, 223 Ill. 54, 79 N. E. 23. The agreement of a city in a sale of its gas plant to a light company to pay taxes assessed to such company is void as in conflict with a constitutional provision requiring all property not exempt by such constitution to be taxed. Board of Councilmen of Frankfort v. Capital Gas & Elec. Light Co., 29 Ky. L. R. 1114, 96 S. W. 870. Where there is a doubt as to whether a statute creates an exemption, it will be resolved in favor of the state and against the exemption. Wallace v. Board of Equalization, 47 Or. 584, 86 P. 365.

34. American Smelting & Refining Co. v. People, 34 Colo. 240, 82 P. 531. An exemption of the property of religious, charitable, and educational institutions from taxation does not extend to mutual insurance companies (Iowa Mut. Tornado Ins. Ass'n v. Gilbertson, 129 Iowa, 658, 106 N. W. 153), nor does an exemption of property from taxation affect the validity of a franchise or business tax levied thereon (Id.). A purchaser at a mortgage sale does not acquire the benefit of an exemption to which the mortgagor was entitled. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Wicomico County Com'rs, 103 Md. 277, 63 A. 678. An exemption from parochial and municipal taxation of the capital, machinery, and other property employed in the manufacture of articles of wood does not extend to a building or a part thereof, which is also used for the storage of other articles purchased for resale. Victoria Lumber Co. v. Rives, 115 La. 996, 40 So. 382. An exemption from a poll tax to those who have lost a hand or foot does not extend to one who has lost part of his fingers or whose foot is useless. Bigham v. Clubb [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 479, 95 S. W. 675. A statute exempting from taxation for a period of years a new manufacturing business has no application where a concern becomes part of a holding corporation and there is no discontinuance of the former company (Continental Tobacco Co. v. Louisville, 29 Ky. L. R. 616, 94 S. W. 11), or where the corporation is reorganized (Wicomico County Com'rs v. Bancroft, 27 S. Ct. 21). Under a statute exempting corporate stock from taxation where the corporation pays taxes on its corporate property and franchises, shares of stock in a foreign corporation paying taxes on real property in the state but not on its franchises or any of its personal property is not exempt from taxation. § 4. Place of taxation.[44]—Realty is taxed in the district where located.[45] If a single parcel is divided by a line between two or more tax districts, it is usually assessed in the district in which the owner resides,[46] or where the main buildings are located.[47] It is competent, however, for the legislature to give to property for the purpose of taxation any situs it sees fit,[48] subject only to the rule of uniformity, and to the limitation that there must be some appreciable relation between the municipality exacting the tax and the person upon whom the burden is cast.[49] Whether that relation does or does not exist in any given instance is so conclusively a legislative question that nothing short of capricious action will justify judicial interference.[50] Accordingly we find that personal property of a resident individual is usually taxed at the residence of the owner,[51] and that of a corporation at its principal place of business.[52] Personalty of a nonresident individual [53] or corporation [54] is usually taxed in the jurisdiction where it is employed.[55] Shares of stock in a corporation are assessable to the owner at his residence,[56] if a nonresident of the state then at the principal place of business of the corporation.[57] Notes given for money loaned have a taxable situs in the state of their origin though temporarily removed therefrom.[58] Commodities intended for shipment out of the state are taxable until they are actually launched on their way.[59] Where goods are shipped in the "original packages" and on arrival within the state such cases are opened and the smaller and separate packages are removed therefrom, the latter become liable to taxation within the state.[60] Vessels engaged in interstate commerce, but which have not by the manner of their use obtained an actual situs, are properly taxable at the domicile of the owner.[61] The rule that the domicile of the owner or the actual situs, and not the place of its enrollment, of a vessel engaged in coastwise trade, is the criterion by which to determine its situs for taxation, was not changed by the Act of June 26, 1884, § 21.[62]

§ 5. Assessment, rating, and valuation. A. Necessity for assessment.[63]—As an indispensable prerequisite to a valid tax there must have been a valid assessment of the property to be taxed.[64] At least two steps are necessary, first listing the persons and property, and second, estimating and fixing the value of the property.[65]

(§ 5) B. Assessing officers.[66]—The assessment must be made by the proper officers; it cannot be made by the court.[67] It is not necessary that all assessments be made through the same officials. It may be made by duly authorized officials or the state may make it directly by appropriate legislative action.[68] Whether particular property is to be assessed by state or local officers depends upon the terms of the statute applicable.[69] The acts of an assessor who has omitted to take the statutory oath are nevertheless those of a de facto officer and binding alike on the government and taxpayer.[70] The Wiconsin Act of 1901, p. 649, creating the office of county supervisor of assessments, is not violative of local self-government.[71] Mandamus lies to compel an assessment.[72]

(§ 5) C. Formal requisites. Notice.[73]—Notice and an opportunity to be heard is essential.[74] Evidence of another than the chief officer of a corporation that the corporation had no notice of an assessment is not sufficient,[75] and one to whom the owner of a private alley has given an easement of passage therefor may not object that the owner thereof was not given notice of assessment.[76]

Irregularities.[83]—Unintentional omissions or irregularities referable to mere error of judgment or inadvertance, and not shown to be prejudicial to the taxpayer, will not affect the validity of the tax. Thus, an unverified roll,[84] the omission of taxable property from the tax list,[85] or an incomplete assessment,[86] does not render an assessment void. A dual assessment, however, will invalidate the tax.[87] The legislature has power to legalize assessments and liens irregularly made.[88]

Lists by taxpayers.[89]—Taxpayers are very generally required to list and furnish to the assessing officers a statement of their taxable property,[90] and a penalty may be imposed for failure to comply with such a requirement.[91] That a taxpayer in good

Funds derived by an administrator from the sale of mortgaged premises, and deposited by him in bank preparatory to payment to the mortgagees, should be listed by the administrator for taxation, notwithstanding the entire amount will be required to satisfy the liens which have been established and ordered paid. faith supposed he was a nonresident and was so regarded by the assessors does not justify his omission to furnish lists.[92] One failing to list his debts is not entitled to their deduction from his credit.[93] The state board of assessors have no authority to assess a franchise tax upon a corporation which neglects or refuses to make the return required by statute in excess of the capital stock of such corporation actually issued and outstanding. They can only tax that which by law is taxable.[94] One who lists and returns his personal property in the assumed name of another is estopped to complain of any irregularity arising solely from that cause.[95] Where an agent or bailee refuses to disclose the name of the owner of property in his possession or under his control, it may be assessed to him in his own name.[96] Such an assessment will be set aside on the application of one whose conduct has made it necessary.[97] Where the agent of a married woman filed a tax list in her behalf in which she was represented as the sole owner of certain real estate, she was estopped to deny that the title was wholly in her.[98] The failure of the assessor or his assistant to make at last one visit to each precinct for the purpose of receiving tax returns as required by Florida Acts of 1895, p. 16, will not of itself vitiate an assessment,[99] and where a taxpayer fails to give in a list of his property and the same is valued by the assessor, the latter is not liable in the absence of corruption or malice for costs because of an erroneous assessment.[1] A taxpayer's sworn return of his property is presumed to be true.[2]

(§ 5) D. Valuation of taxable property. In general.[3]—In placing valuations upon property, local assessors may be required to follow a state assessment,[4] or state officers may be required to use valuations made by local authorities.[5] Where this is not the case assessors should exercise an independent judgment in placing valuations.[6] The regularity of statutes providing for the valuation of real estate at stated intervals of one or more years is upheld.[7] In the absence of statutory provis-

6. People v. Pulteney Assessors, 101 N. Y. S. 176. The amendment to Rev. St. § 2797, relating to plats of new towns or subdivisions presented to the county auditor for assessment, does not deprive the assessor of authority to assess and return the true valuation of each lot of a newly platted subdivision but merely prescribes the rule which governs him in making such valuation. Where it appears that the assessor acted within the scope of his authority in making his return as to the lots in such a subdivision, but did not equalize his valuations with those of adjacent lots and lands as made by the last decennial appraisement, the error is fundamental and not clerical, and the appeal of the property owner for redress should be to the annual board of city equalization. Davis v. Hamilton County Com'rs, 8 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 502. A direction given by a county auditor to an assessor as to the minimum aggregate valuation at which he shall return the lots of a new subdivision is without authority, and the return of the assessor may be corrected under the provisions of Rev. St. § 1038, in so far as the assessor was influenced in his valuations by the direction of the auditor, but where it is left to inference only as to whether the direction was followed by the assessor or served to influence his valuations, relief cannot be granted by the courts to the lot owners. ions, no deduction can be made in the taxation of credits for the indebtedness of the taxpayer.[8] In New York a deduction from the assessment of real property of a mortgage therefrom is unauthorized.[9] A taxpayer to be entitled to deduct his indebtedness must assert the right when he lists his credits.[10]

Valuation of corporate property, stock, and franchises.[11]—Methods of determining the taxable value of shares of stock assessed to the owners,[12] of the capital,[13] franchises,[14] or other property of corporations,[15] and methods of computing license or franchise taxes,[16] are treated in the notes. Where a railway runs through a state, or a considerable portion thereof, its value includes not only its roadbed, depot, grounds, rolling stock, and right of way, but its franchises and its corporate rights to operate the same, and hence its value for the purpose of taxation is most satisfactorily ascertained by regarding the whole system as a unit.[17]

The value of the real estate owned by banks and trust companies to be deducted in ascertaining the taxable value of their capital stock, surplus, and undivided profits, under the provisions of W. Va. The bridge of the Cincinnati Southern Railway, which spans the Ohio river, together with the viaduct or trestle leading up to it, constitutes, with the underlying ground, a part of the roadbed and is property necessary to the daily operation of the road, and there being no additional charge to shippers or passengers on account of the use of this bridge and viaduct, it should be taxed with the remainder of the road as a unit and "averaged" over the entire road. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Hynicka, 4 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 345. The sidetracks of the company, which are in daily use for the loading and unloading of freight, and ground purchased for the purpose of establishing a connection track with another railroad, do not constitute real estate, structures, or stationary, personal property to be "localized" for taxation, but should likewise be "averaged" for taxation over the entire road. Such being the status of railroad property of this character, the auditor cannot after having ascertained its value under Rev. St. § 2772, again tax it as omitted property, nor can he treat it as omitted property which has escaped taxation, nor would he be justified in again placing it on the duplicate on the ground that his action was in effect a revaluation or a correction of an undervaluation. 19. In Michigan no reassessment of rejected drain taxes can be made without au-recover such taxes cannot be maintained unless the statute has been substantially complied with.[20] The sufficiency of an affidavit in a proceeding for the inspection by the county assessor of a person's books to ascertain whether taxable property of another has been omitted must be judged by the rule that laws relating to taxation must receive a liberal construction.[21] The employment of a city attorney to collect arrearages of taxes, without any limitation as to time, is in law terminable at the will of either party.[22] The validity of and questions arising under tax ferreting contracts are given in the notes.[23]

In some states, notably Kentucky, provision is made by statute for the filing of statements of omitted property by revenue agents.[24] When such a statement is filed a summons is issued and the taxability of the property is determined in a legal proceeding. It is only where the question is not one of valuation but of omission that the court may take jurisdiction.[25] In such a proceeding, where the assessment lists are silent, parol proof may be heard to show what property was intended,[26] and the proceeding is tried de novo,[27] the sole question for consideration being whether the property is subject to assessment.[28] An appeal must be prosecuted within sixty days.[29]

Appeals.—In Mississippi the proper remedy of a revenue agent, where county board has disallowed certain assessments for back taxes, is an appeal from the order of the board.[30] The Colorado statute granting an appeal, because of an erroneous assessment, to the district court does not authorize an appeal from that court.[31] In West Virginia a writ of error does not lie to the supreme court from the decision of a circuit court on appeal from the action of assessing officers.[32]

§ 6. Equalization, correction, and review.[33]—Valuations by assessing officers, if legally and not arbitrarily made,[34] are presumptively correct,[35] and final unless an appeal is taken therefrom.[36] This appeal is in the first instance to a board usually constituted for that purpose.[37]

Under the Colorado statutes there is no implied authority in the board of county commissioners to contract for the discovery of omitted property. Chase v. Boulder County Com'rs [Colo.] 86 P. 1011. In Ohio the sections of the statutes relating to the placing on the tax duplicate of property improperly omitted therefrom, and the employment of tax inquisitors, etc., do not require of the county auditor as a part of the duties of his office that he shall make search for such omissions, and a necessity existed for the employment of a tax inquisitor for the performance of that work at the time the contract in issue in this case was entered into. The phrase "any omissions of property," found in Rev. St. § 1343—1, was intended to mean all omissions, past, present, and future, and the claim that this law does not authorize contracts with tax inquisitors which have a prospective operation is not tenable. 36. Lake City Elec. Light Co. v. McCrary

The powers and jurisdiction of county and state boards of equalization as well as the procedure to obtain relief through them [38] are controlled by statute.[39] While a state board of equalization may compel the reassessment of the whole property of a taxing district because assessed at substantially less than its true value,[40] it may not do so merely on a stipulation of facts to which the taxing district affected is not a party.[41] The objection that a member of the board of equalization is not a freeholder as required by statute cannot be made in an action to recover taxes paid.[42] Where members of a board of review hold over and are recognized as such by objecting taxpayers, their acts are valid as de facto officers.[43] Boards of review may be required by mandamus to perform their duties.[44] Adjourning without performing the duties incumbent upon them will not avail.[45]

Notice [46] to the taxpayer affected is usually required, and failure to give is not waived by his voluntary appearance after an increase is made;[47] but where the value of property, as returned by the assessor, as to an entire precinct is relatively too low, it may be raised by the board of equalization without notice previously given.[48]

Review by the courts.[49]—Application to a board of review or other tribunal provided by law is a condition precedent to the right of appeal to the courts,[50] hence, on an appeal, the cause must be tried on the questions raised by the complaint before such tribunal.[51] Where a taxpayer appeals from the action of the

38. Objections may be presented orally. Barz v. Board of Equalization [Iowa] 111 N. W. 41. A formal finding by a board of equalization is not necessary as a basis for its action in equalizing assessments between precincts. Lancaster County v. Whedon [Neb.] 108 N. W. 127. A board of equalization has jurisdiction to raise an assessment, though the person assessed has taken no appeal to the board (State Nat. Bank v. Memphis [Tenn.] 94 S. W. 606), but in Louisiana the police jury, sitting as a board of reviewers, has no authority to reduce assessments of its own motion in the absence of a contest by the taxpayer (Police Jury of Concordia Parish v. Campbell, 117 La. 75, 41 So. 358).

Lincoln County v. Chicago, etc. R. Co. [Neb.] 108 N. W. 178.

63. Limitation on rate held to apply to all taxes levied by county and not merely to levied must be correctly specified.[64] An excessive levy made for general purposes is illegal to the extent of the excess only.[65] Cases dealing with the extension of the tax will be found in the note.[66]

Mandamus[67] lies at the instance of directors of a school district to compel proper official body to issue certificate essential to extension of tax levied for school purposes,[68] and local officers may be compelled to levy a tax to pay a judgment on township bonds, although the corporate existence of the township has been abolished.[69]

The record[70] should show that each step required by law has been duly taken.[71]

§ 8. Payment and commutation.[72]—Taxes are payable in cash[73] and payment extinguishes the lien,[74] but payment to a duly authorized collector before the tax rolls have been delivered to him does not constitute a payment as against the state.[75] Good faith application to the proper officer for the purpose of paying taxes, but prevention through the fraud, mistake, or fault of such officer, is equivalent to a payment.[76] An occupant of land paying taxes thereon in the honest belief of ownership acquires no equitable claim to the land because of such payments,[77] but the payment of delinquent general taxes by a city to protect its lien for special taxes entitles it to an equitable lien on the lots.[78] Money paid by a taxpayer upon an illegal levy may be applied as a credit to him upon a new levy.[79] Payment may be proven by either direct or circumstantial evidence.[80] A tax receipt, however, like other receipts for money paid, is only prima facie evidence of payment and may be explained.[81] Under the present Kentucky constitution, a municipality has no power to compromise taxes.[82] The fact that pending an appeal from the action of a board of review in raising an assessment the property owner paid, and the city accepted, the amount due under the assessment as first made, does not estop the city from collecting the additional tax.[83] Assessment of one-half of a tract of land, owned in common by two or more persons, in the name of one tenant, and the residue in the name of his cotenant, does not invalidate or nullify the effect of payment of the taxes so assessed, though no partition of the land had been made.[84]

§ 9. Lien and priority.[85]—In the absence of statutory regulation, a tax becomes a lien from the moment it becomes a fixed and determined charge.[86] Where the incorporation of a railroad was authorized by statute and the taxes thereon were made a lien upon the railroad and its appurtenances, the lien was not defeated by the lapse of any less time than suffices to defeat a mortgage lien.[87] Tax liens take priority in the reverse order of other liens.[88] Thus, a title to land resting on a regularly conducted sale for taxes is paramount to the lien of a prior mortgage.[89] A title based on a later tax sale on an earlier tax lien may prevail over a tax title based on an earlier sale on an earlier lien,[90] but a second tax deed does not cut off title acquired under a former deed, both being to the same person,[91] and the fact that defendant's tax deed was of a later date than plaintiff's deed, based on a tax sale antedating the tax sale on which plaintiff's deed issued, did not vest defendant with a paramount title.[92] Where a prior tax sale has been adjudged void, the lien of the state for such taxes, interest, and penalties, becomes revived.[93]

§ 10. Relief from illegal taxes.[94]—In some states collection of a tax will not be enjoined.[95] Elsewhere the remedy by injunction is available, provided there are special circumstances bringing the case within some recognized head of equity jurisprudence.[96] But a court will not enjoin the collection of a tax upon the mere ground of illegality,[97] nor will a bill lie by a taxpayer in behalf of himself and other taxpayers to restrain the collection or to set aside the taxes of a municipality generally,[98] such party, if aggrieved by an error or irregularity in the assessment, being left to his appropriate remedy.[99] A person who has received the full benefit of a law subsequently found to be unconstitutional, and who was active in procuring its adoption, may be estopped from contesting the levy and collection of a tax to pay for such benefit,[1] but the estoppel will not be extended so as to conclude him as to acts not done strictly within the purview of the invalid law, nor from questioning the constitutionality of the law as to such matters as yet remain to be done under the law.[2] Where an increase was made in an assessment without notice to the taxpayer, injunction lies to restrain collection of tax.[3] Payment or tender of taxes justly due is a condition precedent to relief in a court of equity,[4] and it has been held that the state should be made a party.[5] The remedy by petition under the Florida statute is not coextensive with that afforded by a court of equity and is not available after the assessed property has been sold for taxes, and a certificate issued, or a tax deed executed, and the rights of third parties have intervened.[6]

Recovery back of payments.[7]—Illegal taxes paid under duress,[8] or under a sufficient protest,[9] may be recovered,[10] but taxes voluntarily [11] or mistakably [12] paid cannot be. Counties may not be sued to recover illegal taxes paid under protest, but, while the taxes remain in the hands of the collecting officer, a direct action against such officer may be maintained,[13] and the holder of a mortgage, paying taxes thereon to prevent a seizure, is entitled to recover the amount against the person assessed on an implied contract.[14] In a proceeding to recover a tax the taxpayer has the burden of establishing that all steps necessary to a valid assessment were not taken.[15] In an action by a village to recover payment made by it to a town of a tax levied on the property of the village, the court is not at liberty to consider whether the assessment was legal.[16]

statute to refund an illegal tax, interest follows without any express provision on the subject.[19] The Minnesota statute to the effect that taxes refunded upon a void tax judgment shall be included in the next delinquent tax sale is directory, not mandatory.[20] There is a presumption that in valuing the lots of a newly platted subdivision for the purpose of taxation the valuation returned by the assessor covers the lots only and not the land dedicated for street purposes, and without a showing to the contrary the subsequent allowance of a refunder on account of land embraced in the streets is erroneous.[21] Mandamus is a proper remedy to compel a refundment,[22] unless the claim is barred by the statute of limitations.[23]

§ 11. Collection. A. Collectors; their authority, rights, and liabilities.[24]—The appointment,[25] qualifications,[26] powers,[27] liabilities,[28] and compensation[29] of tax collectors are regulated by statute. Where a tax collector at the expiration of his term must account for all uncollected taxes, he may continue to collect such taxes though his term has expired.[30] That a tax collector's bond is taken in the name of the commissioners of the county and not in the name of the commonwealth does not avail the sureties.[31] Money received by a sheriff in excess of the legal amount belongs to the owner of the land in the hands of the sheriff, and hence the purchasers are not responsible for the sheriff's misappropriation thereof.[32]

(§ 11) B. Methods of collection in general.[33]—The form or method of collecting taxes is a matter entirely of legislative discretion.[34] Sometimes a summary method of collection is awarded, quite generally a lien is provided, in other cases an action of debt is given, and sometimes the right of prohibition of the exercise of corporate functions by injunction.[35] In general, however, two methods are provided: summary proceedings against the person[36] or property, actions at law to

The provisions of the Michigan tax law authorizing the foreclosure of the lien of the state and the sale of the property upon service by publication does not render the act unconstitutional. Toolan v. Longyear, 144 Mich. 55, 13 Det. Leg. N. 134, 107 N. W. 699. Under the Oklahoma statute (Willson's Stat. c. 75, § 101), it is made the duty of the treasurer to select the newspaper in which publication is to be made, and in making such selection he is not governed by any directions of the board of county commissioners. Board of Com'rs v. State Capital Co., 16 Okl. 625, 86 P. 518. Failure to indorse the "warning order" required by the laws of Arkansas as a preliminary step to bring in a nonresident by publication does not invalidate sale. Arbuckle v. Kelley, 144 F. 276. Compensadictions must be based upon an affidavit of nonresidence,[55] due certification,[56] or verification of such service of publication being made.[57]

The delinquent list[58] must contain the true name of the owner,[59] a correct description of the property,[60] the amount of the delinquent tax,[61] the years for which taxes are delinquent,[62] and be properly returned,[63] filed,[64] and recorded.[65]

Parties.—Suit on behalf of the state or municipality must be brought by the proper officer.[67] A receiver may be proceeded against for taxes,[68] and an action to recover taxes on shares of bank stock may be maintained against the bank without joining the stockholders.[69] Where the record owner was not named as defendant, no title passed on execution sale under the judgment rendered.[70]

Pleading.[71]—The complaint should properly describe the property.[72] Under the express provisions of Nebraska Comp. St. 1905, art. 9, ch. 77, the petition shall be taken to be prima facie evidence of the legality of the antecedent steps in the assessment of the property and that the taxes are delinquent.[73] A statutory requirement that an action by a county treasurer to recover personal taxes shall only be brought by the direction of the county board is waived by filing an answer and proceeding to trial without objection.[74]

57. In Colorado an affidavit of publication of notice of tax sale must show that copies of each issue of the paper containing the notice were delivered by carrier or mailed to each subscriber of the paper. Delivery to each subscriber in the county is insufficient. Lambert v. Shumway [Colo.] 85 P. 89. That affidavit of publication was insufficient does not avail an owner after the expiration of the period of limitation. Bandow v. Wolven [S. D.] 107 N. W. 204.

59. Foreclosure may be against the owner named on the rolls though deceased. Sherman v. Schomber [Wash.] 86 P. 569. Where the land is assessed to "Valentine Dollar, Assignee," and advertised for sale as belonging to "Valentine Dallen Association," the sale is void (Ropes v. Minshew [Fla.] 41 So. 538), and describing Joseph M. Meador survey as Judson M. Meador survey (Pfeuffer v. Bondies [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 6, 93 S. W. 221), and using initials for Christian name of owner, the record title giving full name is insufficient (Burkham v. Manewal, 195 Mo. 500, 94 S. W. 520); but where a sale of land for taxes was regular, except that the sheriff advertised the land as the property of "J. A. Bowers" instead of "J. A. Rogers," the sale was not void but voidable only (Moore v. Rogers [Tex.] 99 S. W. 1023).

60. Van Ostrand v. Cole [Wis.] 110 N. W. 891.

61. The amount due must be correctly stated. If it is overstated the proceedings are invalid. Hurd v. Melrose, 191 Mass. 576, 78 N. E. 302. A statement of the amount of taxes in a delinquent list in which the dollars are separated from the cents by the usual heavy ledger lines is legally sufficient (Stein v. Hanson, 99 Minn. 387, 109 N. W. 821), and the absence of a $ mark is not fatal (Carter v. Osborn [Cal.] 89 P. 608; Sawyer v. Wilson [Ark.] 99 S. W. 389; Bandow v. Wolven [S. D.] 107 N. W. 204).

62. A notice stating that certain lands are to be sold for the taxes of certain specified years "and previous years" does not comply with a requirement that the years for which taxes are due be specified. Drennen v. People, 222 Ill. 592, 78 N. E. 937.

63. Bigger v. Scouton, 30 Pa. Super. Ct. 503.

64. The filing of the published list of delinquent lands with the certificate of the publisher in the "office of the country clerk and ex officio clerk of the county court of said county" is not in compliance with a statute requiring it to be filed as part of the records of the county court. 72. Failure to give the name of a survey, abstract number, survey number, and number of acres, was not fatal, the description being otherwise sufficient and giving the book and page of a record where a plot could be found.. Haynes v. State [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 405. Certain portions of description held to be surplusage. Hayward v. O'Connor, 145 Mich. 52, 13 Det. Leg. N. 384, 108 N. W. 366.

Evidence.[75]—In an action to recover taxes the question of whether the owner was in good faith contemplating improvements is for the jury.[76] Where in an action to foreclose a certificate of delinquency the tax rolls reveal an irregular assessment of separate parcels, it is incumbent on the court to then and there determine what would have been proper apportionment of the tax, and this should be done by evidence as to the relative value of the parcels rather than by proving what the assessors did in arriving at the aggregate value of the group of parcels.[77] The assessment roll of a municipality held prima facie evidence of its right to recover.[78] Cases of the admissibility of evidence are given in the note.[79]

Judgment.[80]—Tax judgments are creatures of the law and have only such force and effect as the law accords to them.[81] A judgment foreclosing the state's lien is conclusive against all persons who are parties to the suit and served with citation, whether named in the judgment or not.[82] A judgment based upon assessment, irregular but not void, is valid,[83] and a decree is not void on its face because entered in vacation,[84] but a judgment showing on its face that it was against unknown owners is void.[85] A decree for sale cannot be assailed in a collateral proceeding,[86] but a judgment may be set aside for fraud.[87]

Execution.—A tax execution which omitted the direction to any particular officer was irregular but not void, and could be amended by adding a direction as provided by law.[88] In Georgia the tax collector of the county may enforce the collection of the tax authorized by Acts 1905, p. 46, by execution issued by himself.[89] Where a petition to recover taxes alleged a cause of action for the recovery of city taxes only, and the judgment was for taxes generally, an execution based on such judgment was void.[90]

Costs.[91]—If the action of the board of county commissioners in ordering separate suits results in oppression and palpable wrong, costs may be taxed.[92] Tennessee Acts Ext. Sess. 1891, p. 86, providing that when a bill to collect back taxes shall be dismissed on account of double assessment the assessor shall be liable for costs, does not provide an exclusive remedy relieving the county from liability.[93]

ice under the Kansas statutes, the answer filed in such proceeding held to be full and complete.[95]

(§ 11) D. Interest and penalties.[96]—Taxes, being mere statutory impositions, do not bear interest at common law,[97] and statutes relating to usury [98] and providing for interest on debts, contracts, and judgments, have no application.[99] Interest may be recovered on past due taxes,[1] but compound interest is not allowable.[2] Where a city charter itself creates a liability for interest on unpaid taxes, an ordinance is not necessary to make such provision operative.[3] The amount of penalties recoverable [4] and the mode of their recovery [5] are also matters of statutory regulation.[6]

§ 12. Sale for taxes. A. Prerequisites to sale.[7]—Since tax sales are made wholly under statutory authority, the provisions of the statute conferring such authority must be fully complied with,[8] and any substantial departure therefrom prejudicial to the owner will invalidate the sale.[9] A valid tax,[10] legally due and unpaid,[11] and enforceable against the particular land to be sold, is essential to a valid sale. In some states it is provided that the county clerk shall examine the delinquent lists, on which judgment has been rendered, on the day advertised for sale, and shall make a certificate which becomes the process for the sale of the delinquent lands.[12] These provisions are mandatory and a certificate made on any day other than the one required will render the sale void.[13] Due notice of the sale must be given.[14]

Under Oklahoma statutes, notice less than twenty-one days renders sale void. Cadman v. Smith, 15 Okl. 633, 85 P. 346. Posting a written notice in the United States mails is a sufficient compliance with Tex. St. 1897, art. 2366. Rogers v. Moore [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 668, 94 S. W. 113.

(§ 12) B. Conduct of sale.[15]—The sale should be at the time[16] and place,[17] and by the person,[18] and for the amount,[19] required by law. Only so much land should be sold as is necessary to realize the amount due,[20] and statutory provisions with respect to the sale of parcels as an entirety or in part must be strictly observed.[21] The certificate which usually accompanies a sale must have all the statutory requisites, among which is a correct description of the property,[22] such certificates being capable of assignment.[23] A certificate of delinquency issued by the county treasurer to a third person is valid though issued during the pendency of an action by the county to foreclose a lien obtained by it through the issuance of a general certificate to it prior thereto.[24] Where the statute providing for a certificate of sale has been repealed before a sale has taken place, the sale, if made for the correct amount, is not invalidated by a mistake in the amount named in the certificate.[25] Mere irregularities at a private sale do not affect the title of the purchaser.[26]

(§ 12) C. Return of sale and confirmation thereof.[27]—The return of the sale must properly describe the property sold[28] and contains such other recitals as may be required by law.[29] Mere irregularities in the report of sale do not, after confirmation, render the proceedings open to collateral attack.[30]

§ 13. Redemption.[31]—Statutory provisions for redemption cannot be made retroactive if the effect is to impose more onerous conditions of redemption than existed at time of sale.[32]

The owner of land,[33] or persons having an interest therein,[34] are usually given Wolven [S. D.] 107 N. W. 204). It is proper to include five cents due the clerk for furnishing copy of delinquent lists to printer and ten cents for attending sale and making record thereof (Brasch v. Western Tie & Timber Co. [Ark.] 97 S. W. 445), but inclusion of printer's fee for publishing notice of sale, he having failed to transmit affidavit of publication within six days as required by the then existing statute, held fatal to sale (Cole v. Van Ostrand [Wis.] 110 N. W. 884). A sale under a statute allowing twenty-four per cent is not affected by a subsequent statute providing a lower rate. Vogler v. Stark [Kan.] 89 P. 653.

Welsh [Mass.] 78 N. E. 408. The sale together of more than one separate and distinct tract, as two or more town lots in different blocks, or two or more tracts of land not contiguous, is void (Cross v. Herman [Kan.] 87 P. 686), and the sale of two or more tracts together which are adjoining and susceptible of being used as one tract may be void (Id.).

22. The omission of the government township and range held fatal. Paine v. Willson [C. C. A.] 146 F. 488, following Sheets v. Paine, 10 N. D. 103, 86 N. W. 117.

33. Where land has been assessed, and for the delinquent tax sold, in its entirety, the owner of an undivided interest therein may redeem such interest less than the whole upon payment of the proportionate amount. Garbanati v. Patterson [Colo.] 85 P. 845.

34. The administrator of an estate, the personal property of which is insufficient to the right to redeem from a tax sale, the manner of claiming and exercising the right,[35] and the time within which it must be exercised,[36] depending upon the statute. One seeking to redeem must reimburse the purchaser at the sale for the taxes paid,[37] together with the value of such improvements as have been made subsequent to the sale. The right to redeem is an interest in realty capable of sale and transfer.[38]

Notice of the expiration of the period of redemption[39] must usually be given before the purchaser at the sale is entitled to a deed[40] or to possession,[41] or before the owner's equity of redemption can be foreclosed.[42] Statutory requirements control as to the length of the notice,[43] the contents thereof,[44] the manner of notice, whether by personal service,[45] by publication,[46] or by mail,[47] together with the filing of proof of such service,[48] and the persons by whom and to whom[49] notice must be given.

§ 14. Tax titles. A. Who may acquire.[50]—One under the obligation to pay taxes cannot directly or indirectly purchase at a sale caused by his own default and thereby acquire title to the property sold. Thus a tenant in common cannot pur-pay the debts of the deceased, may redeem from a tax sale of the realty. Hogan v. Piggott [W. Va.] 56 S. E. 189. Redemption may likewise be by an heir of the deceased. City of Louisville v. Hughes, 30 Ky. L. R. 231, 97 S. W. 1096.

chase an outstanding title and refuse to permit his cotenant to share.[51] But this sale does not apply where the claimants are asserting hostile claims,[52] nor where the title claimed in common is a nullity.[53] A person holding a mortgage upon property may acquire title to the mortgaged premises by purchase at tax sale and obtaining tax deed therefor.[54] A wife, not being in possession or receiving the rents, and not being under any legal or moral obligation to pay taxes, may acquire title to land owned by the husband and others at a sale for taxes, provided such purchase be made in good faith and with her own money.[55] Where vendors of land, holding a vendor's lien thereon, thereafter purchase the same at a tax sale in order to protect the interests of themselves and their vendee, such purchase amounts but to a payment.[56]

(§ 14) B. Rights and estate acquired by purchaser at sale.[57]—A valid tax title cannot be acquired to lands which have never been the subject of taxation.[58] The purchaser at a tax sale acquires the interest sold [59] and owned by the parties to the action for the taxes at the time of the decree of sale.[60] A deed made by a tax purchaser between the date of the sale and the day he received his deed carries title.[61] Since assessing officers in the absence of notice to the contrary may look to the record of deeds to ascertain the owner of property, a purchaser under a judgment against the record owner, in the absence of notice that such person is not the true owner,[62] will be protected against the holder of an unrecorded deed from such apparent record owner,[63] but this rule is inapplicable where the deed from the apparent owner has been recorded and the book containing the record has been lost or destroyed by fire.[64] The sale itself transfers to the purchaser the lien of the state for taxes [65] which is paramount to all other liens,[66] but perfect title cannot be acquired until the period of redemption has expired.[67] The title conveyed under a tax sale is not derivative but a new title, and the purchaser, if his deed is valid, takes free from any incumbrance, claim, or equity, connected with the prior title.[68] A tax sale, in the absence of legislation to the contrary, is subject to the rule caveat emptor,[69] but the mere fact that the rule of caveat emptor applies to tax sales is not ground for not exercising in behalf of the purchaser the principles usually obtaining in equitable proceedings,[70] and where a tax sale is set aside because of irregularity, the purchaser is entitled to a lien on the land for the taxes with costs and interest,[71] and this right extends to the grantee of the tax purchaser.[72] A tax deed title void for want of jurisdictional defects cannot be validated by a legislative curative act.[73] In the absence of statute the burden is upon the holder of a tax deed to maintain his title by affirmatively showing that the provisions of law have been complied with,[74] but where in an action by the tax purchaser to quiet title the defendant fails to establish title, a judgment for plaintiff is justified though the tax deed is wholly insufficient.[75]

meets these requirements is at least prima facie,[81] and in some other states conclusive,[82] evidence of the regularity of the proceedings on which it is based,[83] and is prima facie evidence of title in the holder,[84] vesting a perfect title subject to be impeached only for actual fraud.[85] A presumption exists in favor of the validity of a tax deed as against a mere intruder.[86] Under the Michigan statutes the auditor general has power to cancel a deed although the owner took no steps to have the deed set aside within the six months allowed for notice of the sale.[87]

(§ 14) D. Remedies of original owner.[88]—The substantive rights of the owner of land sold for taxes are determined by the laws in force at the time adverse proceedings are taken,[89] and he cannot be divested of his title unless all statutory steps have been strictly complied with.[90] The remedies usually pursued by the original owner are actions at law to recover the property sold,[91] or suits in equity to cancel the tax sale and deed, or to remove clouds from title.[92] One bringing such a proceeding must show himself free from laches[93] and must allege and prove title in himself.[94] A sale under a judgment for taxes will be set aside for inadequacy of price so gross as to shock the moral sense.[95] The owner of land who seeks relief on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings will be required to pay the taxes justly due,[96] and to reimburse the purchaser for proper payments made by him in acquiring the tax title,[97] and pay the value of improvements made in good faith,[98] a tender of the amount to which the purchaser is entitled being necessary to relieve the owner of costs;[99] but if the proceedings resulting in a sale are absolutely void, reimbursement of the purchaser is not a condition precedent to relief,[1] although the holder of a void tax title is entitled to be reimbursed by the original owner for the taxes, with interest, paid subsequent to the acquisition of the tax title.[2] Where an excessive tax is levied, a mere tender of the valid portion and refusal of the treasurer to accept the tender will not relieve the land of the tax lien.[3] Where property is illegally sold for taxes, the owner may enjoin the execution of the deed to prevent a cloud upon the title.[4]

Limitations.[5]—Title by prescription under general limitation statutes is elsewhere treated.[6] There are, however, in many states special limitation statutes prescribing the period within which proceedings to test the validity of tax proceedings must be brought.[7] The enactment of these statutes is an act of sovereign power demanded by public policy, and when the time and opportunity allowed are reasonably sufficient, there can be no just cause of complaint that a debarred litigant is deprived of his property without due process of law.[8] Occupancy of possession by the owner of the tax title for the period prescribed gives title and bars an action by the owner,[9] even though the tax deed under which the land is claimed is in fact void,[10] if such deed is valid upon its face.[11] Such statutes begin to run only from the date of possession under the deed.[12] A valid assessment,[13] judgment,[14] and sale,[15] are essential to the acquisition of a valid title under these statutes. Being of a special character, they are applicable only in cases shown to be within their terms.[16] Where a tax deed has been filed for record for more than five years before it is attacked, all presumptions are in favor of the regularity of the prior tax proceedings.[17] To suspend the running of limitations so as to permit an attack on a judgment for taxes, there must have been not only fraud in obtaining the judgment but such concealment thereof as to prevent its ascertainment by the use of reasonable diligence.[18] The bringing of a petitory action does not interrupt the running of prescription under Art. 233 of the Louisiana Constitution of 1898.[19]

(§ 14) E. Acquisition of title by state and transfer thereof.[20]—Provision is usually made for the purchase and acquisition of title by the state or municipality where there is no other purchaser.[21] In the acquisition of such title,[22] and in the assignment thereof,[23] or in the sale of lands so acquired, statutory provisions must be closely followed,[24] but describing land by forties instead of as one description held not to invalidate deed.[25] Where one purchases the interest of the state in several separate pieces of land, they may be all included in one certificate.[26]

22. A sale to the state does not divest the owner of the legal title. Husbands v. Polivick, 29 Ky. L. R. 890, 96 S. W. 825.

23. Where, at a tax sale, land is bid in for the county, the omission of the deed to state the price is a defect which renders it invalid on its face, and which is not cured by a recital of the amount paid by an individual for an assignment of the certificate when there is no showing as to how much of this was due to subsequent taxes. Robidoux v. Munson [Kan.] 88 P. 1085.

24. To vest title to land in the state as a purchaser thereof at a tax sale, the same degree of strictness in compliance with the law relating to assessment, return of delinquency, and sale, is required as in the case of a valid sale to an individual. § 15. Inheritance and transfer taxes. A. Nature of and power to impose.[27]—Inheritance or succession taxes are very ancient and are said to have had their origin in the Roman law. They have long been in force in the European states, and in England and her colonies where they are known as "death duties."[28] The terms are used to describe a tax on the right of succession, whether by operation of law, will,[29] gift,[30] or grant. By the uniform current of decision in this country, inheritance taxes are not taxes upon property but upon the right to receive property,[31] and this right of succession is held to be a privilege granted by the state and not a right inherent in the individual. But in Wisconsin this proposition is challenged, the supreme court of that state holding that the right to demand that property pass by inheritance or will is an inherent right subject only to reasonable regulation by the legislature.[32] Constitutional requirements of equality and uniformity do not apply in the manner in which they are applicable to ad valorem property taxes.[33] Hence the state may grant the exemptions usually granted to certain institutions under the general tax laws,[34] may exempt from the operation of the law estates below a certain value while taxing others,[35] may classify the taxable estates according to value and apply thereto a graduated rate,[36] may discriminate between blood relatives and strangers to the blood,[37] or may make no distinction between them or between lineal and collateral descendants.[38] But an inheritance law that must have an equal operation to be constitutional cannot be given an unequal operation by an amendment or by an exception in a repealing statute.[39] The Louisiana inheritance tax law of 1904 was superseded by the Act of 1906, but was not repealed as to taxes due on successions not within the terms of the latter statute.[40] Statutes imposing inheritance taxes are construed strictly against the government and in favor of the taxpayer.[41]

(§ 15) B. Successions and transfers taxable, and place of taxation.[42]—As a rule all transfers by will, by conveyance to take effect upon the grantor's death, or made in contemplation of it,[43] or by operation of law upon the ancestor's death, are subject to the tax.[44] Exemptions are to be given a strict construction and will not be extended by inference or implication.[45] A contract between the beneficiaries in a will including a collateral legatee renouncing the provisions of the will and agreeing upon a division of the estate is valid and enforceable, though its effect is to deprive the state of a tax on the legacy to the collateral legatee.[46] Illustrations of the particular application of the inheritance tax laws of the various states are furnished by the notes.[47]

Powers of appointment.[48]—A statute providing that a disposition by the exercise of a power of appointment shall be subject to an inheritance tax in like manner as if a devolution had been by the will of the donee of the power does not deny process or impair the obligation of a contract.[49]

Place of taxation.[50]—Personal property transmitted by will is subject to the collateral inheritance tax at the place of the domicile of the decedent.[51] The transfer by will of a nonresident of property within the state is taxable. Thus, in New York, all bonds, money, and stocks of domestic corporations,[52] and passing as a part of the estate of a nonresident, are subject to the transfer tax.[53] Proceeds of an insurance policy paid to a foreign executor of the insured are not property within the state subject to a transfer tax.[54]

(§ 15) C. Accrual of tax.[55]—In the case of estates of present enjoyment, the tax accrues immediately upon the death of the testator,[56] and the right of the state to the tax is at once a vested right which cannot be surrendered by subsequent legislative act.[57] This is also the rule with reference to vested remainders.[58] A tax on a legacy which vests only upon the happening of some uncertain future event so that the true value thereof can not be presently ascertained accrues and becomes payable only when the beneficiary is entitled to possession or enjoyment thereof.[59]

(§ 15) D. Appraisal and collection.[60]—Only the amount actually received by a legatee should be considered in computing the tax.[61] Debts must be deducted from the aggregate value of the estate.[62] Where an inheritance consists in part of property which has previously borne its just proportion to taxes, and in part has not, the value subject to inheritance taxes is ascertained by deducting from the total value the property which has previously borne taxation.[63] In Wisconsin the county court, in fixing the fair cash value of corporate stock belonging to a decedent's estate, has no power to compel the corporation to produce its books and papers in court.[64] Cases dealing with the rate of the tax,[65] and the appraisal of corporate stock,[66] are treated in the notes.

§ 16. License taxes.[71]—A license is a grant of a special privilege to one or more persons not enjoyed by citizens generally, or at least not enjoyed by the class of citizens to which the licensee belongs.[72] For this privilege the state may impose a charge variously styled a license, privilege, or occupation tax.[73] These taxes are not taxes on property[74] but upon occupations or callings, and therefore constitutional provisions relating to property taxes have no application to taxes of this kind.[75] States have undoubted power to classify trades or occupations and to impose different taxes upon different classes, or to tax some while not taxing others,[76] and legislative discretion in the matter will not be reviewed by the courts provided a classification adopted is not wholly arbitrary and unreasonable.[77] License taxes however, must be given uniform operation.[78] The construction of license tax laws with reference to their applicability in particular instances,[79] and the basis for computing the amount of the tax,[80] is treated in the notes. There being no statute making an occupation tax a lien on property, injunction does not lie to restrain public officers from proceeding to a collection thereof.[81]

under the Indiana statute, collected by a county treasurer from delinquent taxpayers and paid into the treasurer's fund, belong to the county and not to the treasurer.[85] In California, graduated penalties on redemption of land sold for taxes are subject to apportionment between the state and county.[86] In New Jersey it is the duty of a borough collector, on or before the 22nd day of December in each year, out of the first money collected to pay to the county collector the state and county taxes required to be assessed in his taxing district.[87] Taxes levied and collected by a county to pay interest upon railroad aid bonds are held by the county treasurer for the benefit of the holder of the bonds and should be paid to the latter upon presentation of the proper coupons.[88] Taxpayers have a standing in court to restrain the unauthorized or illegal expenditure of funds in the possession of tax officers,[89] and money illegally disbursed may be recovered in a taxpayer's action, so called, on behalf of the town.[90] to construct a single line of poles and to place thereon any number of cross arms and wires.[98] Where pursuant to a valid statute a municipality grants permission to construct a line on the express condition that the system shall be completed before a certain date, failure of the company to complete the construction by such date justifies the municipality in removing the poles already erected,[99] if no estoppel or waiver has intervened;[1] and the fact that the company had given a bond conditioned to complete the work within the stipulated time is not a valid objection.[2] A deed to a water company of a right of way for the laying of water pipes "with" the right to erect a telephone or telegraph line or lines does not limit the use of the lines to business connected with the waterworks plant,[3] and a bona fide assignee is not bound by an oral agreement between the original parties that the use should be limited to such business.[4] A telephone company may abandon or relinquish its right under an ordinance by conduct showing an acceptance by it of a subsequent one.[5]

In the absence of statutory provisions expressly conferring the right of eminent domain upon foreign corporations, interstate comity does not require that this right be extended to a foreign telephone company,[6] and there is no inherent power vested in such company to condemn private property for purely local purposes and as a part of an interstate system.[7] The erection of poles and wires in streets in conformity with municipal consent and regulations is not in itself an additional burden for which a fee owner is entitled to compensation,[8] and hence unsightliness of the poles and noises ordinarily incidental to the lawful maintenance of the poles and wires and the conduct of the business do not constitute special injury for which damages can be recovered,[9] though appreciable interference with light, air, access, or drainage, is an additional burden.[10] The authorities are not uniform on the question whether a telephone line along a country highway is an additional burden so as to entitle abutting owners to compensation,[11] but even if an abutting owner on a highway is entitled to compensation for the cutting of trees in the construction of a telephone line, he is not entitled to enjoin the work until the same is paid.[12] The New York statute in relation to the erection of poles and wires on the Tonawanda Indian

Consideration.[15]

License fees and taxes.[16]—Municipal power to regulate the use of streets by telephone companies implies power to impose a money charge as a condition to such use.[17] So, also, a legislative grant of "entire control" of streets by a city includes power to impose rentals,[18] and such power is not nullified by a subsequent general statute granting to telegraph and telephone companies the right to maintain their lines in the streets of cities.[19]

Transfers, line contracts, leases, and mortgages.[20]—If a company accepts its franchise under agreement to permit other companies to use its poles for compensation to be mutually agreed upon or determined by a city officer in case the companies cannot agree, it is bound to agree on the compensation or accept the fair arbitrament of the officer,[21]

§ 2. Construction and maintenance of lines, and injuries thereby.[22]—The use of streets and alleys for poles and wires necessary to the operation of a telephone exchange is legal and proper,[23] but the exercise of the right to such use is subject to municipal regulation. Where, however, companies derive power directly from the state to construct and maintain fixtures for their lines "upon, over or under" public streets or highways,[24] power in cities or villages to regulate the erection of poles and stringing of wires "in, over or upon" the streets does not authorize the municipality to compel the placing of wires in conduits.[25] A grant which merely contemplates the construction of lines along highways does not authorize a company to construct them across abutting land.[26] Ejectment lies for stretching a wire over one's premises though the soil is not touched,[27] and prompt removal of the wire after suit is brought does not defeat the action.[28] A mandatory injunction will be granted to compel removal of poles unlawfully placed so near adjoining premises that the cross bars and wires project over them,[29] but a telephone line being a public utility, one may not forcibly remove it from his premises and thus destroy its usefulness.

13. unless it constitutes a nuisance, even though the company's right to maintain it there may have terminated.[30]

Companies are liable for damages to private property due to the negligent erection of poles[31] and for injuries resulting from unlawfully obstructing public streets or highways.[32] They are required, also, to exercise care commensurate with the dangers reasonably to be apprehended to guard against the destruction of property by fire[33] and against casualities due to charged wires.[34] The duty of ascertaining and remedying defects is the duty of the company itself so that if injury or death results from failure to observe it the company cannot escape liability by a plea that its agents or servants were negligent.[35] A telephone company is not liable for injuries received from a fallen wire owned and controlled by a city in consideration of the company's right to erect poles, though such wire was strung on a cross arm on the company's poles.[36]

To authorize a recovery, defendant's negligence must have been the proximate cause of the injury sustained,[37] and plaintiff must have been free from contributory

33. While a company is not required to guaranty the safety of its system under all possible conditions (Wells v. Northeastern Tel. Co., 101 Me. 371, 64 A. 648), it is bound to exercise that due and ordinary care which the present state of scientific knowledge and common observation of the nature and power of electricity and lightning would suggest as reasonably necessary for the protection of life and property along its line (Id.). If plaintiff's theory was correct that it was not safe to connect a guy wire with a barn, then evidence warranted finding that defendant did not exercise reasonable care in establishing its line. Id. negligence.[38] Pleadings[39] evidence,[40] and instructions,[41] are governed by the ordinary rules.

§ 3. Telegraph messages. A. Duty and care.[42]—Companies must exercise at least ordinary care in their efforts to promptly transmit and deliver messages;[43] and under statutes constituting telegraph companies common carriers, they are bound by the same obligations and restrictions as are placed around corporations of that character.[44] In Oklahoma they are held to the utmost diligence.[45] The duty of a company may also be affected by special agreement, since an operator has implied and apparent authority to contract with the sender to rush a message and deliver it as soon as possible,[46] but a mere promise by the agent that he will do all he can to get a message through is not a special contract to deliver in time.[47] Liability for negligence cannot be avoided by stipulations on the telegram blank.[48] The company may fix office hours provided they are reasonable.[49] establish a liability the person who agreed to transmit the message must have been defendant's agent,[51] but one who occupies the company's office and uses the telegraph instruments will be held as the company's agent when a telegram is received by him;[52] and a stipulation making an initial company the agent of the sender to forward the mesage over the lines of other companies does not preclude the sender from showing that the initial company or its agent was in fact the agent of a connecting company.[53] When liability is created by statute, it is no defense that the message was sent on Sunday.[54]

Transmission.[55]—A company owes a public duty to receive and transmit all proper messages presented to it with the necessary compensation.[56] If it receives a telegram for a point beyond its line, it must transmit it with reasonable promptness to the end of its own line and deliver it to the connecting line,[57] and will not be heard to excuse a failure to do so on the ground that the connecting line might have been negligent.[58] It should not accept a message which is libelous on its face, and is liable for the acts of its agents in this regard,[59] but malice and publication must be shown as in other cases of libel.[60] A statute requiring all telegraph companies doing business in the state to accept and transmit all messages tendered does not require a company doing only interstate business to acept an intrastate message.[61] Where a message is refused on one ground, the refusal cannot ordinarily be justified on a different ground.[62] The sender has the absolute right to select connecting routes.[63]

defense that the addressee was not at home at the time the message would have reached its destination had it been promptly transmitted,[66] and the fact that the company had surrendered its wires for the use of a railway company is no excuse for delay in transmitting a death message in the absence of any emergency especially where the sender was not apprised of it.[67] Whether a delay was due to causes beyond the company's control, may be a question for the jury.[68] Due care and skill must be exercised also in transmitting messages correctly,[69] and companies are liable for negligent mistakes causing delay.[70]

Delivery.[71]—It is the duty of a telegraph company to exercise ordinary care[72] to deliver messages within a reasonable time,[73] especially in the case of urgent messages,[74] and delay is not excused because of the operator's conflicting duties as railroad agent.[75] Failure to deliver within a reasonable time raises a presumption of negligence.[76] What is a reasonable time is ordinarily a question for the jury under all the circumstances.[77] If a message urgent on its face cannot be immediately delivered, it is the duty of the receiving agent to notify the sending agent that such is the case.[78] Where a message is received by a company out of office hours, it is not bound to deliver it before the next succeeding office hours,[79] but if a receiving agent accepts an urgent message out of office hours without notifying the sender that it cannot be delivered, the fact that it was received out of office hours is not an excuse for delay.[80] A company is required to use reasonable diligence to deliver to addressees within the territory embraced by the delivery limits of its receiving office,[81] hence the fact that a message is addressed to a particular place within such limits does not conclusively exonerate the company from delivering at other places therein.[82] Where the receiving office already has the sendee's address and can make delivery without difficulty, failure to do so is actionable negligence, though the sender, as agent of the sendee, fails to furnish a better address upon being wired by the receiving office to do so.[83] If the real name of the sender and his name as it appears on the message are idem sonans, the company must exercise ordinary care to deliver to the party intended.[84] A mistake in the initials of the sendee is no defense unless the mistake contributed to failure to deliver.[85] Whether a message was addressed to one's residence or to his office is a question of fact.[86] Where delivery is made by mail, the company is responsible for changing the name of the addressee.[87] A contract to deliver "towards" a certain place is too indefinite on which to base an action.[88]

The parties will be deemed to have contracted with reference to reasonable free delivery rules,[89] but if it is found that a vendee lives outside of free delivery limits, it is the duty of the company to demand additional compensation before it can refuse to deliver the message on that account,[90] provided the vendee lives within reasonable limits.[91] Though a company need not surrender a message unless extra charges are first paid,[92] it should not delay a delivery by wiring back to the sending office for such charges where the sendee lives near by, though out of free delivery limits;[93] and if the sender is told by the operator that there will be no extra charges for delivery, it is negligence to fail to deliver promptly because extra charges are not prepaid.[94] That an addressee lived beyond delivery limits is no excuse for non-delivery if by ordinary diligence the message could have been delivered within such limits,[95] or unless failure to deliver was occasioned thereby.[96] A statute requiring delivery of dispatches by messenger to persons residing within certain limits does not excuse failure to make any delivery at all to a well known conductor of a train in whose care a message was sent and to whom delivery could have been made without inconvenience, though neither the conductor nor the addressee resided within such limits.[97] Delivery must be made to the sendee if he can be found by the exercise of reasonable diligence,[98] or to his authorized agent if personal delivery cannot be made.[99]

Delivery to others for addressee.[1]—When a telegram is delivered for tranmission by an agent of the sender, the company is authorized to deliver a reply thereto to such agent.[2] If without direction the company delivers a message to a third person, such person becomes the company's agent.[3] Delivery to an eleven year old son of the sendee at play near home is as a matter of law no delivery.[4]

Where plaintiff was required to make a useless railroad trip, evidence of the regular fare, cost of sleeping car, etc., was inadmissible, plaintiff being entitled only to his actual expense. Salinger v. Western Union Tel. Co. [Iowa] 111 N. W. 820. Only nominal damages can be recovered for failure to deliver an acceptance of an offer to sell unless the acceptance would have created a contract (Cherokee Tanning Extract Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co. [N. C.] 55 S. E. 777), but if failure to deliver a telegram is the direct and proximate cause of delay in postponing a purchase whereby one is compelled later to pay an advanced price, damages are recoverable though there is no evidence that the offer would have been accepted (Lathan v. Western Union Tel. Co. [S. C.] 55 S. E. 134). Such evidence held admissible as showing intent and motive and as explanatory of delay. Id. Evidence held to show that a principal had sustained a loss of twenty-five cents per barrel on rice purchased by his agent above the market price because of delay in delivering to agent a telegram advising him to pay only $3 per barrel. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Houston Rice Mill Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 652, 93 S. W. 1084.

Negligence held proximate cause: Loss due to sale on lower market held proximate result of incorrect transmission. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Milton [Fla.] 43 So. 495. Where offer to sell was refused because of mistake in price in telegram, loss of sale was not too remote a consequence. Thorp v. Western Union Tel. Co., 118 Mo. App. 398, 94 S. W. 554. Failure to receive a message for transmission to a connecting line held proximate cause of injury where company did not know that a previous message had not been delivered and a subsequent message was duly received by sendee. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Simmons [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 349, 93 S. W. 686.

Held not proximate cause: Though company made a mistake in plaintiff's name in an order for "corn," plaintiff could not recover for failure to receive "corn whiskey" in absence of proof that sendee was deceived by the mistake, and understood that "corn" meant "corn whiskey." Newsome v. Western Union Tel. Co. [N. C.] 56 S. E. 863. Proof that plaintiff had previously purchased whiskey on credit from sendee insufficient. Id. Plaintiff's damages from selling soda in reliance on erroneous telegram quoting price held too remote. Champion Chem. Works v. Postal Telegraph-Cable Co., 123 Ill. App. 20. Probable profits on resale of goods which plaintiff claimed he could have bought held too conjectural. Bird v. Western Union Tel. Co. [S. C.] 56 S. E. 973. Where a proposal to buy was wrongfully transmitted, plaintiff could not recover on basis of a contract which might have been concluded had the offer been correctly transmitted, nor could he recover commissions which would have accrued in such event. Bass v. Postal Telegraph-Cable Co. [Ga.] 56 S. E. 465. Though useless condition of lines was due to defendant's negligence, or even if defendant's agent failed ties.[13] Notice of sickness charges the company with notice of the character of the sickness.[14] One must use reasonable care to avert or minimize the harmful consequences of the wrong.[15] Delay in the delivery of a mere advisory or cautionary commercial telegram may be actionable where it is shown that it would have been acted upon had it been promptly received.[16] Tolls are recoverable for a negligent delay though plaintiff may not be entitled to other damages,[17] but they cannot be recovered unless negligence is shown.[18]

Mental anguish.[19]—In a majority of states damages are not recoverable for mental anguish unaccompanied by physical injury,[20] and a statute rendering companies liable for delay to any person injured does not alter the rule.[21] The doc-to advise plaintiff of such condition, plaintiff could not recover if he had routed the message over a connecting telephone line, which also was useless until it was too late to send the message. Western Union Tel. Co. v. McDonald [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 136, 95 S. W. 691. Agent's silence as to condition of wires held not actionable unless sender was thereby prevented from taking more effective means to forward message. Id. Recovery not justified for expense of making an extra trip where it was not shown that such trip could have been prevented if agent had notified sender that message could not be delivered, as it was claimed the agent had promised to do. trine is, however, recognized in several states.[22] In Alabama one may recover for mental anguish if the action is on contract, and this though plaintiff's actual damages are nominal only;[23] but if the action is in tort, the anguish must be accompanied by injury to body or estate.[24] The relationship of father and child,[25] brother and sister,[26] or grandfather and grandson,[27] will sustain a recovery; but mental anguish is not presumed from the plaintiff's being prevented from attending the funeral of a brother-in-law.[28] Recovery may be had not only where the telegram announces the sickness or death of a near relative, but in all cases where mental suffering may be reasonably anticipated as the natural result of breach of the contract.[29]

In all cases it must appear that mental suffering actually existed[30] and was the direct and proximate result of defendant's negligence.[31] Hence one may not recover for not being present at a death bed or at a funeral unless he not only could but would have reached there but for such negligence.[32] Neither can there be a recovery for a mere continuation of mental suffering already existing,[33] though it

33. Error to refuse charge that plaintiff seems that this rule has not always been consistently adhered to.[34] The anguish must be such also as must be presumed to have been fairly within the contemplation of the parties,[35] in view of the notice which the company had when it accepted the telegram.[36] From this it follows that one not mentioned in a telegram or whose interest therein is not communicated to the company cannot recover substantial damages for mental anguish;[37] and one who is deprived of the privilege of attending at the death or funeral of a relative cannot ordinarily recover for not being could not recover if defendant's negligence merely caused continuation of anguish of plaintiff's wife because of his absence. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Craven [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 819, 95 S. W. 633.

34. Note: Defendant failed to deliver to plaintiff a telegram which would have allayed his anxiety over the whereabouts of his wife and children whom he had expected upon a certain train. Held (one judge dissenting), that the defendant was liable in damages for the plaintiff's mental suffering. Dayvis v. Western Union Tel. Co., 139 N. C. 79, 51 S. E. 898. This case helps to remove an objection that has often been interposed to the Texas rule, that it is not consistently applied by its adherents. 1 Mich. L. R. 525. The dissenting opinion in this case relied on Sparkman v. Western Union Tel. Co., 130 N. C. 447, 41 S. E. 881, which at least suggested that there could be no substantial recovery for a culpable failure to deliver a telegram which was meant merely to relieve mental anguish then already existing. Texas had also held that a continuation of mental anguish could not be measured; it was speculative as compared with mental suffering originally caused by failure to deliver a telegram. Rowell v. Western Union Tel. Co., 75 Tex. 26, 12 S. W. 534; Johnson v. Same, 14 Tex. Civ. App. 536, 38 S. W. 64. This is more than a restriction on the original doctrine, it is a contradiction of it. Sutherland Damages (3rd Ed.) § 975. For damages have been given again and again by the Texas courts for the negligent failure of a telegraph company to relieve mental anxiety about the serious illness or the death of a relative. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Cavin, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 152, 70 S. W. 229. And in Same v. Womack, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 607, damages were recovered by a father for the suffering he underwent, and which had gone unrelieved by a telegram that would have informed him of his son's whereabouts, facts similar to those in the present case. For North Carolina then, the present case restores the Texas rule in its full extent.—See 4 Mich. L. R. 245 76a.

35. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Hogue [Ark.] 94 S. W. 924. Damages recoverable only if company had notice of special circumstances causing the anguish. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Raines [Ark.] 94 S. W. 700. Where wife announced death of a daughter to husband in a foreign state, company was charged with knowledge that arrangements could have been made for keeping the body until the husband's arrival. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Simmons [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 349, 93 S. W. 686. Where message announced serious illness of a son and requested plaintiff to come, the length of time the body was kept after death and failure of father to accompany the body was in contemplation of the parties. Walker v. Western Union Tel. Co. [S. C.] 56 S. E. 38.

36. Telegram to third person "Tell M. B. to come at once. Her brother, Charley is dead," held to inform company of importance of prompt delivery. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Bell [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 491, 92 S. W. 1036. Mental anguish damages recoverable where agent was told of plaintiff's wish to get home that night so as to be with family. Toole v. Western Union Tel. Co. [S. C.] 57 S. E. 117. Telegram notifying plaintiff of death of her stepson and hour of funeral held not to notify merely of hour of interment, hence she was entitled to damages for not being with the remains before as well as at the interment. Harrison v. Western Union Tel. Co. [N. C.] 55 S. E. 435. Telegram to a doctor, "Operate tomorrow. Tell S. not home till Thursday," and information to agent that message was important, held not notice to company that physician's presence was desired at operation and that in his absence, operation would be postponed. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Raines [Ark.] 94 S. W. 700. Telegram that sender would arrive on evening train not notice that parties were to be married so as to justify recovery for mental suffering by sendee because message was not delivered. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Hogue [Ark.] 94 S. W. 924. Where telegram charged company with notice that plaintiff's wife was ill in child-birth, plaintiff could not recover for mental anguish of himself or wife resulting from inability to be present at burial of the infant (Western Union Tel. Co. v. Craven [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 819, 95 S. W. 633.), nor at its death unless death occured during parturition (Id.). In suit for delay in delivering a message announcing death of a son, evidence that trainmen left corpse on a platform in the rain was improper. Hancock v. Western Union Tel. Co., 142 N. C. 163, 55 S. E. 82. Where defendant failed to deliver a telegram intended to prevent plaintiff's wife from visiting in a town where there was small-pox, evidence that the supply of food for the baby was enough to last only one day was inadmissible to show plaintiff's mental anguish, there being nothing to connect the baby with the telegram. Mitchiner v. Western Union Tel. Co. [S. C.] 55 S. E. 222. Recovery could not be had for failure to attend a funeral at a place different from that from which the message was sent, telegram containing no reference to such place. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Ayers [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 904, 93 S. W. 199.

37. Evidence insufficient to charge defendant with knowledge that a son sent a message for his father or that the father might suffer mental anguish if telegram was delayed. Helms v. Western Union Tel. Co. [N. C.] 55 S. E. 831.

present to console other relatives.[38] Contributory negligence may also defeat the action.[39]

Only a fair recompense can be recovered for the anguish,[40] and the jury have no right to be guided by "their own feelings."[41] If a message is clearly for the benefit of two persons, the company is liable for the mental anguish of both.[42]

Exemplary damages[43] may be recovered for wanton or willful negligence,[44] but not otherwise.[45]

(§ 3) C. Procedure.[46]—The party who was to be served and who was damaged is authorized to sue,[47] but to justify a recovery in contract by an addressee, the sender must have acted as his agent or for his benefit.[48] A principal may maintain an action in his own name for breach of a contract made by his agent, though his name was not disclosed in sending the message.[49] In an action for delay in delivering a telegram, it is quite generally immaterial whether the form of the action is in contract or in tort.[50]

Stipulations requiring the presentation of claims within a reasonable number of days are valid and enforceable.[51] The operator will be held as the sender's

38. The mental anguish of plaintiff for not being with his mother at his father's funeral cannot be recovered for in the absence of notice to the company that it would probably result from delay. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Butler [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 704. Plaintiff could not recover because he could not be present with other relatives at the funeral of his brother. Buchanan v. Western Union Tel. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 100 S. W. 974. Plaintiff not entitled to recover for not being present to console his daughter at death of his wife. Arkansas & L. R. Co. v. Stroude [Ark.] 100 S. W. 760.

39. In suit for failure to deliver a message in time for addressee to attend a funeral, whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in not taking a certain train a few minutes after receipt of telegram held for court sitting as jury. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Salter [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 362, 95 S. W. 549. Evidence held to justify court's finding that plaintiff was not negligent in failing to take a train on another road. Id. Failure of an addressee upon receiving a delayed message to send a telegram requesting postponment of a funeral until her arrival held not negligence as matter of law where death occurred ten miles away from any railroad. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Hardison [Tex. Civ. App.] 101 S. W. 541.

40. Shepard v. Western Union Tel. Co. [N. C.] 55 S. E. 704. Amount of damages for anxiety of sick wife because husband did not arrive in response to a telegram held for jury. Gerock v. Western Union Tel. Co., 142 N. C. 22, 54 S. E. 782.

Not excessive: $2,000 for absence from mother's funeral. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Hardison [Tex. Civ. App.] 101 S. W. 541. $500 for not being with wife at her death and funeral. Arkansas & L. R. Co. v. Stroude [Ark.] 100 S. W. 760. $1,995 for father's being prevented from seeing son before latter's death. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Sloss [Tex. Civ. App.] 100 S. W. 354. $500 for absence of any one to meet plaintiff at train with corpse of child. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Long [Ala] 41 So. 965.

41. Instruction erroneous. Shepard v. Western Union Tel. Co. [N. C.] 55 S. E. 704.

42. Liable for suffering of both husband and wife due to refusal to accept message from wife to husband announcing death and sickness. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Simmons [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 349, 93 S. W. 686.

43. See 6 C. L. 1675.

44. Jury could infer wantonness from company's failure to repeat an unintelligible message on opportunity therefor being given. Walker v. Western Union Tel. Co. [S. C.] 56 S.E. 38. Changing name of addressee of commercial telegram and delivering it to a competitor held evidence of reckless disregard of plaintiff's rights. Lathan v. Western Union Tel. Co. [S. C.] 55 S. E. 134. Punitive damages recoverable for unexplained delay of twenty-two hours. Willis v. Western Union Tel. Co., 73 S. C. 379, 53 S. E. 639. Agent's laughing and giving offensive answers when asked about nondelivery of messages justifies punitive damages. Toale v. Western Union Tel. Co. [S. C.] 57 S. E. 117.

45. Murray v. Western Union Tel. Co., 74 S. C. 64, 54 S. E. 209. Punitive damages not awardable where agent in good faith made immediate efforts to locate plaintiff, though he telephoned the message instead of sending messenger. Key v. Western Union Tel. Co. [S. C.] 56 S. E. 962. Evidence held not to show willfulness in delaying transmission of a telegram. Mitchiner v. Western Union Tel. Co. [S. C.] 55 S. E. 222. No willfulness where message could not be sent part of the way by telephone because of defect in the line. Jones v. Western Union Tel. Co. [S. C.] 55 S. E. 318.

46. See 6 C. L. 1676.

47. Sendee could sue irrespective of whose agent sender was or whether latter had been instructed to send the message. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Cook [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 1131.

48. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Heathcoat [Ala.] 43 So. 117.

49. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Manker [Ala.] 41 So. 850.

50. Instruction that there was no evidence to show breach of contract held properly refused. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Lehman [Ind.] 66 A. 266.

51. Provision requiring presentation of agent in writing down a message for him so as to bind him by stipulations on the back of the blank;[52] and where a sender or his agent writes and signs a message on a blank furnished by the company, he will be bound by stipulations on the back of the blank requiring claims to be presented within a specified time,[53] and it is no excuse that the sender's agent was unable to read or write, no fraud being shown.[54] The claim presented must set forth fairly the nature and extent of the demand.[55] A stipulation requiring presentation of "claims" for damages is not satisfied by notice of the negligence on which the claim is based,[56] and there can be no recovery for items not included in the claim.[57] A provision limiting the time within which claims may be presented may be waived,[58] and such waiver may rest in parol.[59] A waiver by a general agent of the company is binding on it, notwithstanding secret limitations on his authority in this regard.[60]

The usual rules of pleading apply.[61] Mere conclusions [62] or inferences [63] should be avoided, the complainant must allege that plaintiff actually suffered damages,[64] and must set out facts from which it will be presumed that defendant contemplated the injury sued for.[65] An allegation that plaintiff is a feme sole is sufficient to show claims in writing within 60 days after filing of message. Thorp v. Western Union Tel. Co., 118 Mo. App. 398, 94 S. W. 554.

52. As to time for presentation of claims. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Prevatt [Ala.] 43 So. 106.

53, 54. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Prevatt [Ala.] 43 So. 106.

55. A letter to the company asking an explanation of the discourtesy of its agent is not a sufficient claim for damages for nondelivery of a message. Toale v. Western Union Tel. Co. [S. C.] 57 S. E. 117.

56. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Moxley [Ark.] 98 S. W. 112.

57. Letter complaining of negligence and asking refund of cost of message and expense of long conversation held not to include mental anguish. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Moxley [Ark.] 98 S. W. 112.

58. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Heathcoat [Ala.] 43 So. 117. Notice of claim within 60 days not waived because in response to a letter of addressee the company inquired as to what point message was sent from, date, etc. Eaker v. Western Union Tel. Co. [S. C.] 55 S. E. 129. Certain letters held not a waiver of stipulation that claims must be presented within 60 days. Toale v. Western Union Tel. Co. [S. C.] 57 S. E. 117.

59. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Heathcoat [Ala.] 43 So. 117. Evidence held to make question of waiver one for jury. Id.

60. Waiver of written presentation of claim. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Heathcoat [Ala.] 43 So. 117.

61. Complaint held to allege failure to transmit in order of time in which dispatch was received. Western Union Tel. Co. v. McClelland [Ind. App.] 78 N. E. 672. Did not proceed on inconsistent theories because it also alleged willfulness, discrimination, and negligence. Id. Petition held to show that defendant undertook to transmit a message. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Hidalgo [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 426. Plaintiff not required to plead evidence to support allegation that had message been promptly transmitted she could and would have arrived in time to attend a funeral. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Rowe [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 863, 98 S. W. 228. Charge that defendant's agent and operator agreed to rush message and liver it as soon as possible held to allege a contract in absence of special exception. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Cook [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 1131. Petition held to raise issue of diligence in transmission and delivery of a message. Id. Variance between petition alleging direction of message in care of Mrs. R. and proof showing care of Mrs. R. held immaterial. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Simmons [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 349, 93 S. W. 686.

62. If facts are alleged showing that a contract was made it is not necessary to also state that fact. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Rowe [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 863, 98 S. W. 228. Replication that defendant waived the 60 day stipulations held a mere conclusion. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Heathcoat [Ala.] 43 So. 117.

63. Petition insufficient to show that plaintiff's wife would have left on a certain train to attend a funeral if message had been promptly delivered. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Bell [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 491, 92 S. W. 1036.

64. Where plaintiff contracted to sell oats on the faith of an erroneous telegram representing that his offer to buy from another had been accepted, it was incumbent upon him to allege that he actually suffered damages because he was unable to fulfill his contract to sell. Bass v. Postal Telegraph Cable Co. [Ga.] 56 S. E. 465. Allegations insufficient. Id.

65. An allegation that the sender informed the agent of the circumstances requiring the speedy transmission of a message, though subject to special demurrer, is sufficient to admit proof of any information to the agent touching the urgency of the message. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Hidalgo [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 426. Complaint for delay in delivering telegram to have a conveyance ready for arrival of a corpse held to sufficiently show that it might have been expected that failure to deliver telegram would result in body remaining at station. Carter v. Western Union Tel. Co., 73 S. C. 430, 53 S. E. 539. Petition stating that sender who was plaintiff's brother told agent that sickness of plaintiff's wife caused that the damages are her separate property.[66] Defensive matter need not be set out in the complaint.[67]

The general principles of evidence determine its admissibility and sufficiency[68] on questions relating to agency,[69] notice to the company,[70] transmission,[71] delivery,[72] him to send for the doctor held sufficient to show notice to company of suffering of plaintiff's wife without alleging that company had notice that sender was plaintiff's agent. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Stubbs [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 210, 94 S. W. 1083.

66. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Rowe [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 863, 98 S. W. 228.

67. Defensive terms or conditions on the telegram form should be brought forward by plea. Objection that sendee could not introduce in evidence the message received by him but only the one filed by sender. Collins v. Western Union Tel. Co. [Ala.] 41 So. 160. That defendant contracted to deliver only within certain limits is matter of defense. Complaint not defective for failure to allege that plaintiff was within free delivery limits. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Whitson [Ala.] 41 So. 405. That a funeral would have been postponed despite delay in transmission and delivery of a message was matter of defense to be established by defendant. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Cook [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 1131.

68. Sending operator could read from transcript in a former trial to refresh memory and then state whether she had made a report of the message to the superintendent. Arkansas & L. R. Co. v. Stroude [Ark.] 100 S. W. 760. Error to allow company to read "relay copies" of message, since, if copies, better evidence was not accounted for, and if original records it was not shown by whom they were kept or that the records were kept correctly. Buchanan v. Western Union Tel. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 100 S. W. 974. A company may not excuse a delay by self-serving statements. Could not show on cross-examination that agent had told plaintiff that telegram had been sent to another town by mistake. Willis v. Western Union Tel. Co., 73 S. C. 379, 53 S. E. 639. Physician suing for loss of telephone service could not testify that certain persons had told him they had tried to reach him by phone to secure his services. Cumberland Tel. & T. Co. v. Hicks [Miss.] 42 So. 285. Proof that plaintiff received a message at 9:25 A. M. did not contradict his allegation that telegram was not delivered until after 8 A. M. Alexander v. Western Union Tel. Co., 141 N. C. 75, 53 S. E. 657. New trial for insufficiency of evidence in suit for failure to deliver a telegram as written held properly denied. Walker v. Western Union Tel. Co. [S. C.] 56 S. E. 38.

69. A sender may not testify that he delivered a message to the company for the benefit of the addressee. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Whitson [Ala.] 41 So. 405. Evidence that an eleven year old son had been mailing letters for sendee held inadmissible to show that he was the latter's agent to receive a telegram. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Whitson [Ala.] 41 So. 405. Testimony of plaintiff that she placed her claim for damages with F. and the latter's testimony that he orally presented the claim was admissible to show F's authority to represent plaintiff. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Heathcoat [Ala.] 43 So. 117. Evidence insufficient to show that person to whom message was telephoned was in fact defendant's agent. Planters' Cotton Oil Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 126 Ga. 621, 55 S. E. 495.

70. Notice to the agent of the purpose of a message may be shown by the terms of the message and by information given the agent by the sender. That a certain allegation in the complaint had been stricken did not prevent it. Jones v. Western Union Tel. Co. [S. C.] 55 S. E. 318. Where company knew a message was important, admission of evidence interpreting ciphers was not injurious to it. Western Union Tel. Co. v. McGown [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 117, 93 S. W. 710.

71. Service marks and other evidence held admissible on issue of whether a message had been transmitted. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. White Sewing Mach. Co. [Ark.] 93 S. W. 58. Where a railway company contended that it had received no message to stop a shipment, evidence held sufficient to sustain jury's finding to the contrary. Id. Evidence as to absence of a book containing the name of the point of destination on a connecting line held not prejudicial to defendant where agent knew to what point on its own line to send messages intended for points in the state of destination. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Simmons [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 349, 93 S. W. 686.

72. Not prejudicial error for plaintiff to show by several witnesses that they lived in town where message was received and that messenger made no inquiry of them about plaintiff. Arkansas & L. R. Co. v. Stroude [Ark.] 100 S. W. 760. Subsequent statement of messenger that he knew sendee but didn't know his initials held admissible. Id. Testimony of person with whom plaintiff boarded that plaintiff often received messages at her house held admissible to show that defendant had knowledge as to plaintiff's residence and might have delivered message within a reasonable time. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Manker [Ala.] 41 So. 850. Question why witness did not deliver message to his brother held objectionable as seeking to bring out motive. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Long [Ala.] 41 So. 965. Where it was claimed that delay in delivering a telegram was caused by its being mailed to addressee by erroneous name, evidence held a sufficient foundation for testimony of postmaster that he received an envelope addressed "Slater" instead of "Salter" and returned it to sender. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Salter [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 362, 95 S. W. 549. Sender could testify that if it had been reported to him that message could not be delivered because of a mistake in sendee's initials he would have had initials changed. Arkansas & L. R. Co. v. Stroude [Ark.] 100 S. W. 760. Evidence insufficient to rebut presumption of negligence from failure to deliver a message within a mental anguish,[73] willfulness,[74] and damages.[75] In the absence of any claim of variance, the message received by the sendee is admissible in an action by him without accounting for the one filed at the sending office.[76] A physician who is called by telegram may testify that had he received the message he would have gone at once.[77] It is for plaintiff to show that a free delivery rule is unreasonable.[78] If the contract provided for delivery only within free limits, a sendee who sues for nondelivery has the burden on the issue of whether his residence or place of business was within such limits.[79] Defendant is not required to rebut a presumption of negligence by a preponderance of evidence.[80] reasonable time. Carter v. Western Union Tel. Co., 141 N. C. 374, 54 S. E. 274.

73. The presumption of mental anguish resulting from a negligent delay in delivering a telegram announcing the death of a close relative does not preclude direct proof of such anguish. Shepard v. Western Union Tel. Co. [N. C.] 55 S. E. 704. Plaintiff could testify that he suffered mental anguish on account of his failure to receive an expected telegram as to condition of his mother. Willis v. Western Union Tel. Co., 73 S. C. 379, 53 S. E. 639. Testimony that witness was in the house when plaintiff received the telegram, "and saw her crying," was admissible to show mental anguish. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Manker [Ala.] 41 So. 850. Defendant having introduced evidence tending to rebut the presumption of affection existing between two brothers held error to exclude plaintiff's testimony as to grief he felt on hearing of his brother's burial and because he could not be present. Buchanan v. Western Union Tel. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 100 S. W. 974. Court properly permitted plaintiff to be asked what was the cause of his failure to be with his wife at her death. Arkansas & L. R. Co. v. Stroude [Ark.] 100 S. W. 760. Questions on relations existing between plaintiff and deceased mother not prejudicial as leading. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Hardison [Tex. Civ. App.] 101 S. W. 541. Question whether plaintiff could have come to see her brother if telegram had been delivered between certain dates held not to call for conclusion or mental operation. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Heathcoat [Ala.] 43 So. 117. Not error to refuse new trial for absence of evidence to show that plaintiff's wife was quarantined because of delay in delivering a telegram where complaint was broad enough to sustain recovery for mental anguish for any exposure to smallpox. Mitchiner v. Western Union Tel. Co. [S. C.] 55 S. E. 222. In an action for being deprived of seeing a father before his death, evidence that the father knew that plaintiff had been called and had expressed his anxiety to see and talk with plaintiff and that this was communicated to plaintiff is admissible on the question of damages. Whitten v. Western Union Tel. Co., 141 N. C. 361, 54 S. E. 289. It was not competent, however, for plaintiff to testify what he was told on his arrival that his father had said. Id. In an action for being prevented from attending the funeral of a brother-in-law, plaintiff may testify as to the intimacy of the relation which existed between him and deceased. That they were like brothers and very closely associated. Alexander v. Western Union Tel. Co., 141 N. C. 75, 53 S. E. 657.

74. Allegations and proof of other refusals to accept the same telegram for transmission held proper as showing a deliberate intent to refuse proper messages and disregard of sender's rights. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Simmons [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 349, 93 S. W. 686. Agent's language in refusing a telegram held relevant and proper to show motive. Id.

75. Where answer alleged that plaintiff did not use all means in his power to reduce the damages, evidence that he tried to telephone but could not was admissible. Walker v. Western Union Tel. Co. [S. C.] 56 S. E. 38. That before suit plaintiff had made a claim for only $25 for delay in delivering a message held admissible against interest subject to explanation. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Stubbs [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 210, 94 S. W. 1083. In suit for failure to deliver message that plaintiff's wife was ill in childbirth, plaintiff could show who lived with the wife at the time, their age, and capacity to assist her. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Craven [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 819, 95 S. W. 633.

76. Collins v. Western Union Tel. Co. [Ala.] 41 So. 160.

77. Carter v. Western Union Tel. Co., 141 N. C. 374, 54 S. E. 274.

78. In absence of evidence rebutting prima facie reasonableness of free delivery rule held error to submit question of reasonableness of rule. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Ayers [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 904, 93 S. W. 199.

79. It is for defendants, however, to set up the defense that such contract was made. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Whitson [Ala.] 41 So. 405.

80. Burden is on plaintiff to show negligence. Shepard v. Western Union Tel. Co. [N. C.] 55 S. E. 704.

81. Instruction that defendant was "compelled" to follow instructions of sender as to route held not to impose too high a duty. Western Union Tel. Co. v. McDonald [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 136, 95 S. W. 691. Instruction that company was "bound to receive, transmit, and deliver," messages, and must use "due care, promptness, and diligence," in transmitting messages, was inaccurate as to company's duty relative to transmission and delivery. Id. Held proper to refuse instruction relieving of liability if defendant's wires were busy regardless of character of business. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Cook [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 1131. Instruction held to properly eliminate allegation of complaint that plaintiff was prevented from consoling his daughter at the death of his wife. Arkansas & L. R. Co. v.

The application of other rules is shown in the note.[84] Where defendant would be liable if at all, only for plaintiff's mental anguish from failure to attend a funeral, Stroude [Ark.] 100 S. W. 760. Instruction authorizing recovery by husband for mental anguish for not being with wife at her death and burial held proper. Id. Requested charge properly refused as ignoring defendant's knowledge of plaintiff's whereabouts and failure to impart it to messenger. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Manker [Ala.] 41 So. 850. There being evidence tending to show that plaintiff's wife suffered mental anguish prior to time plaintiff could have arrived, had message been promptly delivered, held error to refuse to instruct for defendant if defendant's negligence merely caused continuation of such mental suffering. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Craven [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 819, 95 S. W. 633. Instruction that delivery of message to one person, which is addressed to another, would be a violation of the law, held properly refused, there being no question of willfully revealing the contents of a private telegram. Arkansas & L. R. Co. v. Stroude [Ark.] 100 S. W. 760. Charge that plaintiff's failure to use other means of communication would preclude a recovery held properly refused where no degree of diligence in using them could have entirely relieved him of anxiety. Willis v. Western Union Tel. Co., 73 S. C. 379, 53 S. E. 639.

82. Error to submit question of parol modification of stipulations on back of telegraph blank, such stipulations having nothing to do with issue. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Stubbs [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 210, 94 S. W. 1083. Instruction that it was the duty of defendant to have competent and diligent servants not erroneous for not being responsive to complaint where it was admitted that defendant was a carrier of news over its telegraph lines. Harrison v. Western Union Tel. Co. [S. C.] 55 S. E. 450.

83. In suit for refusal to transmit a telegram charge that jury could consider for what it was worth, evidence as to the prompt delivery of a subsequent message did not give undue prominence to such evidence. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Simmons [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 349, 93 S. W. 686. Not error not to submit question of whether an incorrect transmission was due to agencies over which defendant had no control, there being no evidence on the subject. Walker v. Western Union Tel. Co. [S. C.] 56 S. E. 38. Instruction on waiver of right to observe office hours held justified by the evidence. Harrison v. Western Union Tel. Co. [S. C.] 55 S. E. 450. Evidence held to justify instruction that defendant was bound to deliver messages with reasonable promptness, and if the agent of the company found the message in question in his office the morning after it was received and during office hours failed to deliver it promptly, the company would be responsible for resulting damages. Id. Instruction submitting question as to whether a certain person acted as the company's agent, and as to plaintiff's damage by reason of nondelivery of a telegram on Sunday morning, held justified by the evidence. Id. Not error to submit question of willfulness where evidence was offered on the subject. Id. Where uncontradicted evidence showed a most tender affection between plaintiff and his mother and that plaintiff suffered mental distress, held error to submit question whether plaintiff suffered at least some mental distress. Prewitt v. Southwestern Tel. & T. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 101 S. W. 812. Where undisputed evidence showed that plaintiff would have gone to his mother had he received the message, held error to submit this issue. Id. Instruction that if message had been delivered before a certain time a father could have been with his child "several hours while it was conscious," held not justified by the evidence. Western Union Tel. Co. v. De Andrea [Tex. Civ. App.] 100 S. W. 977. Error not cured but rather intensified by subsequent charges. Id. Words "several hours" meant an uncertain number of hours not less than two. Id. Evidence whether a message was addressed to plaintiff being conflicting, the question was properly submitted to the jury. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Wafford [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 984, 97 S. W. 324. Where sender of a telegraph message was led by the agent to believe that sendee would be communicated with by telephone as soon as by any means, the question of his contributory negligence in failing to resort to the mail or telegraph was not in the case. Prewitt v. Southwestern Tel. & T. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 101 S. W. 812.

84. Where counsel stated that he did not rely on telegram itself to charge defendant with notice, he could not complain of charge requiring other notice in order to hold defendant. Wolff v. Western Union Tel. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 420, 94 S. W. 1062 Charge, if construed otherwise than that defendant was not liable unless it had notice outside telegram, held harmful to defendant rather than to appellant. Id. Defendants tendered issue as to whether plaintiff by reasonable care could have attended a funeral after receipt of a message held properly refused, it having been covered by other submitted issues. Alexander v. Western Union Tel. Co., 141 N. C. 75, 53 S. E. 657. Objections to instructions and for failure to give other instructions in suit for erroneous transmission of a message considered and overruled. Walker v. Western Union Tel. Co. [S. C.] 56 S. E. 38. Requested instructions on rights of parties on account of mistake in sendee's initials held properly refused. Arkansas & L. R. Co. v. Stroude [Ark.] 100 S. W. 760. Where nondelivery was not due to a mistake in the initial of the sendee, held not error to refuse instruction that company was not obliged to deliver to sendee a message addressed to one of the same name but for the initials. Id. Requested charge that damages claimed were in contemplation of parties if jury found notice to company and certain other facts held objectionable as being on weight of the evidence. Wolff v. Western Union Tel. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 420, 94 S. W. 1062. Charge that plaintiff's exposure was the result of his own act held a charge on the facts. Toale v. Western Union Tel. Co. [S. C.] 57 S. E. 117.

the jury should be instructed that there can be no liability if plaintiff did not intend to attend the funeral.[85] Where the evidence, if true, leaves no doubt that an ordinary person would suffer mental anguish, it is not error to refuse to submit the question whether mental anguish would result to a person of ordinary strength and firmness.[86] The court should define to the jury what elements of damage may be considered.[87] If there is no evidence to sustain a recovery of punitive damages, the court should so charge.[88] It is for the jury to determine the weight of opinions as to the law of another state.[89]

Where a complaint alleges both willfulness and negligence and there is no proof of willfulness, a nonsuit should be granted as to that cause of action only leaving the question of negligence for the jury.[90] Stipulations on the back of the telegram not mentioned in the answer and to which the sender's attention was not called are not ground for a nonsuit.[91] Where there is some evidence to sustain plaintiff's action, a nonsuit[92] or verdict directed for defendant is properly refused.[93]

(§ 3) D. Penalties[94] are provided in many states for the negligence or discrimination of companies in the transmission or delivery of messages.[95] Willful wrongdoing is not essential to liability under the Indiana statute.[96] This statute requires prompt "delivery" as well as transmission.[97] A penalty is recoverable though the message was delivered orally to the agent and taken down by him in writing outside the office if he thereafter filed but failed to transmit it.[98] Where an unreasonable delay is shown, the burden is on the company to explain it and not on plaintiff to show the particulars wherein it existed.[99]

85. Roberts v. Western Union Tel. Co., 73 S. C. 520, 53 S. E. 985.

86. There being no evidence of peculiar apprehension or individual temperament. Roberts v. Western Union Tel. Co., 73 S. C. 520, 53 S. E. 985.

87. Instruction authorizing recovery to extent jury should believe plaintiff sustained loss from defendant's delay in delivering notification of shipment of cattle held erroneous but harmless where only actual damages were recovered. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Lehman [Md.] 66 A. 266. A charge on measure of damages should do more than simply instruct to find for plaintiff whatever may have been "due" him. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Stubbs [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 210, 94 S. W. 1083. Court having affirmatively instructed as to elements of damage jury should consider held not error not to charge that damages could not be allowed for natural grief suffered by plaintiff on account of her mother's death. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Hardison [Tex. Civ. App.] 101 S. W. 541. Not error to charge that jury could award such damages as they concluded resulted from defendant's delay in delivering a telegram where the court at length detailed the duty of the jury in regard to the facts in proof. Harrison v. Western Union Tel. Co. [S. C.] 55 S. E. 450.

91. Walker v. Western Union Tel. Co. [S. C.] 56 S. E. 38.

92. Refusal of nonsuit for delay in transmission held proper under the evidence. Mitchiner v. Western Union Tel. Co. [S. C.] 55 S. E. 222.

93. Directed verdict for defendant properly refused where evidence was conflicting on issues as to terms of contract and whether message could have been delivered without delay. Buchanan v. Western Union Tel. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 100 S. W. 974. Held error to direct verdict for defendant where there was evidence of prospective profits on a real estate deal and that message accepting offer was delayed. Lucas v. Western Tel. Co. [Iowa] 109 N. W. 191. Peremptory instruction for defendant held error where plaintiff submitted testimony tending to show that had message been promptly delivered he would and could have reached his father's home in time for funeral. Lawrence v. Western Union Tel. Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 95 S. W. 27.

94. See 6 C. L. 1676.

95. Company liable for penalty for discrimination under Burn's Ann. St. 1901, §§ 5511, 5512, where it charged excessive rate. Western Union Tel. Co. v. McClelland [Ind. App.] 78 N. E. 672.

99. Instruction imposing on plaintiff burden of showing that his message was sent

§ 4. Telephone service.[1]—A telephone company cannot refuse to continue to furnish telephone service on the ground that there is an amount due from complainant's wife for the use of another telephone.[2] A wrongful deprivation of telephone service renders the company liable not only for actual damages but also for inconvenience and annoyance.[3] Punitive damages are not allowable in the absence of willful or intentional wrong.[4] Discrimination is penalized by statute in some states.[5] One will not be permitted by strength of arms to enforce a supposed or actual right to free communication over a line of which another has control.[6]

§ 5. Quotations and ticker service.[7]

§ 6. Rates, tariffs, and rentals.[8] —Power in a municipality merely to regulate the erection of poles and wires does not include power to fix service rates,[9] and a company is not bound by rates so fixed even if it accepts its franchise subject to such conditions and for a time furnishes service accordingly.[10] A company may be compelled by mandatory injunction to render service at a reasonable rate.[11]

§ 7. Offenses.[12]—Double damages are provided in Arkansas for willful and intentional injury to lines.[13]

TENANTS IN COMMON AND JOINT TENANTS.

§ 3. Rights and Liabilities as to Third Persons (2121).

§ 1. Definitions and distinctions; creation of relation.[14]—Unity of time, title, interest, and possession, creates a joint tenancy.[15] When cotenants are husband and wife, an estate by the entirety arises, which unlike joint cotenants is not destructible by severance.[16] And such a tenancy is not destroyed by a subsequently enacted "married women's act," [17] or by conduct of the husband treating it as a tenancy in common.[18] Unity of possession alone is necessary to support a tenancy in

5. Acts 1885, p. 178, § 11, forbidding discriminations by telephone companies, construed, and held to impose a penalty not only for "requiring as a condition for furnishing facilities that they shall not be used in the business of the applicant" but for any other discrimination forbidden in the statute. Yancey v. Batesville Tel. Co. [Ark.] 99 S. W. 679. 13. Destruction of portion of telephone line by railroad company under mistaken belief that it was an unlawful obstruction did not justify imposition of double damages under Kirby's Dig. § 1899, penalizing "willful" and "intentional" injury to lines there being also evidence that the line was a hindrance to operation of road. 17. Act June 8, 1893 (P. L. 344), giving a married woman the same rights in her separate property as if unmarried, did not change an existing estate by entirety into one in common. Hetzel v. Lincoln [Pa.] 64 A. 866.

18. The fact that the husband executed a deed to the wife of his interest described as common,[19] and hence the destruction of any of the other unities of a joint tenancy changes the estate to one in common.[20] Likewise, community property undisposed of by a divorce decree is thereafter held in common.[21] Estates by the entirety [22] and joint tenancies [23] have been abolished in some states, while in others a tenancy in common will be presumed unless the creating instrument manifests a clear contrary intent.[24] A so called "cropper's contract" usually renders the parties to it tenants in common of the crop,[25] unless by statute the contract be deemed one of hire,[26] and, similarly, the owner of land and one cutting timber therefrom on shares are tenants in common of the timber cut.[27] Cotrustees are usually joint tenants of the trust property.[28]

§ 2. Rights and liabilities between tenants.[29]—The interest of a joint tenant at death passes to his cotenants by right of survivorship [30] which cannot be defeated by a devise,[31] but a surviving partner has no power to convey property held with the deceased as a tenant in common.[32] While a tenant in common cannot give complete title to any portion of the common property, his deed purporting to do so is only voidable and may become binding upon the cotenants by ratification [33] or es-

"the undivided one-half" does not render his interest subject to an outstanding judgment. Hetzel v. Lincoln [Pa.] 64 A. 866.

St. 1903, § 1707, providing that the unmarried infant children of a deceased homestead tenant shall have the right to jointly occupy the homestead with the widow, the children are joint tenants. Potter v. Redmon's Guardian, 29 Ky. L. R. 840, 96 S. W. 529. Where several lot owners desiring to oreate a common alley each grants to the others by warranty of title a strip along their respective lots, they are tenants in common of such alley. 22. Tenancy by the entirety has not existed in Wisconsin since 1878, and circumstances which would create such a tenancy prior thereto create a joint tenancy. Bassler v. Rewodlinski [Wis.] 109 N. W. 1032.

23. Rev. St. 1898, §§ 2068, 2069, abolish joint tenancies except as to husband and wife. Bassler v. Rewodlinski [Wis.] 109 N. W. 1032.

24. Under Code 2923, a conveyance of a cemetery lot to a father and son creates a tenancy in common, notwithstanding an ordinance providing that such lot shall be indivisible, such ordinance being merely for control and not to affect the estate. Anderson v. Acheson [Iowa] 110 N. W. 335. Under Code, § 683, providing that a joint interest is one owned by several persons in equal shares, acquired by a single transaction, when expressly declared to be a joint tenancy, and § 686, providing that an interest in favor of several persons in their own right is an interest in common unless declared in its creation to be a joint tenancy, a note and mortgage executed in favor of several persons is held by them as tenants in common. Conde v. Dreisam Gold Min. & Mill. Co. [Cal. App.] 86 P. 825.

25. A contract whereby one was to furnish land, teams, seed, and machinery, and the other the labor necessary to raise a crop which was to be divided equally between them, did not constitute them partners but tenants in common of the crop. Beaumont Rice Mills v. Bridges [Tex. Civ. App.] 101 S. W. 511.

26. A contract for raising a crop otherwise falling within Code 1896, § 2712, making it a contract of hire, is taken therefrom by a provision that the land owner and the laborer shall each furnish one-half of the fertilizer, and they are tenants in common of the crop under § 2760 (Hendricks v. Clemmons [Ala.] 41 So. 306), and hence neither the minor who furnished the labor nor his parents can recover as for services rendered (Id.).

28. LaForge v. Binns, 125 Ill. App. 527. Where a will gave certain property to designated persons with a request that they use it for a certain purpose, they took as trustees and joint tenants not as tenants in common. Rothschild v. Schiff, 188 N. Y. 327, 80 N. E. 1030. Upon the death of a trustee holding legal title to land, the title passes to his heirs as joint tenants. Cameron v. Hicks, 141 N. C. 21, 53 S. E. 728.

31. Right of survivorship takes precedence. Bassler v. Rewodlinski [Wis.] 109 N. W. 1032. Rev. 1878, § 2342, giving married women the right to sell and devise their separate property as if unmarried, does not enable a wife who is a joint tenant with her husband to devise her interest. Id.

32. Anderson v. Goodwin, 125 Ga. 663, 54 S. E. 679.

33. Held ratified by a partition agreement whereby the commissions were to exclude the tracts conveyed and partition the remaining land only. Currens v. Lauderdale [Tenn.] 101 S. W. 431.

NOTE. Assent by Cotenants: "Undoubtedly a conveyance of his interest in the common estate by a tenant in common by metes and bounds of part of the land is good and valid, if the other tenants in common assent thereto, or confirm or ratify such conveyance. Hartford, etc., Ore Co. v. Miller, 41 Conn. 112. Such conveyance becomes operative and passes the land to the grantee toppel.[34] A cotenant has no undivided interest in standing timber distinct from his interest in the land.[35] Cotenants may contract with each other,[36] and such contracts if made in good faith are binding upon third persons.[37] A tenant must so use the property as not to interfere with the mutual rights of his cotenants.[38]

Discharge of incumbrances, purchase of adverse titles, rights of cotenants.[39]—A semi-fiduciary relation exists among cotenants,[40] and one is presumed to act for all in discharging a lien upon the common property or in buying an outstanding title,[41] and the benefit thereof inures to his cotenants[42] if they elect within a reasonable time[43] to contribute their share of the costs,[44] unless they have repudiated the relation[45] or are estopped from claiming their rights.[46] This doctrine of in-

by metes and bounds if the other cotenants, before partition, confirm and ratify it, and after partition if that portion is allotted to the purchaser thereof, and in either case such deed will convey all of the interest of the grantor and will be binding on him and also on the grantee. Worthington v. Staunton, 16 W. Va. 209. Such assent need not be by deed and may be inferred from any act which shows an acquiescence in the title of the purchaser. Doubtless such assent would be inferred from a silence of thirty years, during which time the interests of the original cotenants have been conveyed to strangers. Goodwin v. Keney, 49 Conn. 563. If all the cotenants give conveyances at different times of the common property in specific parcels by metes and bounds to the same person, their several assent is implied, and the conveyances taken together constitute a valid title, and the same principle seems to apply if the several interests of the cotenants are taken at different times in execution or compulsory proceedings. Stevens v. Norfolk, 46 Conn. 227; Butler v. Wormer, 25 Mich. 53, 12 Am. Rep. 218."—From note to Kenoye v. Brown [Miss.] 100 Am. St. Rep. 651.

34. Where the cotenant acquiesces in the conveyance for over thirty years and permits the grantee to sell the land to innocent purchasers without objections and also excludes it from a partition of the interests of the cotenants selling his interests in the lands allotted to him, he is estopped. Currens v. Lauderdale [Tenn.] 101 S. W. 431.

35. Hence the purchaser gets only the timber on the portion of the common estate set off by partition to his vendor, although it is less than the proportional share of all the timber. Hunter v. Hodgson [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 110, 95 S. W. 637. He is protected in a partition by a judgment for the timber on the land awarded to his vendor. Id.

36. Where one makes improvements under an agreement with his cotenant to bear one-half of the expense, he may recover on the basis of cost and not on the fair market value of the improvement or what it is reasonably worth. Contaldi v. Errichetti [Conn.] 64 A. 211.

37. Cotenant making improvements waived right of lien both of himself and subcontractor. Westmoreland Guarantee Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Connor [Pa.] 65 A. 1089.

38. Cannot maintain injunction to restrain a lessee of his cotenant from entering upon the land. Country Club Land Ass'n v. Lohbauer [N. Y.] 79 N. E. 844. A tenant in common of a mining claim has no right to use a tunnel driven on the claim to convey ore from an outside claim. Laesch v. Morton [Colo.] 87 P. 1081.

39. See 6 C. L. 1688.

40. The rule inhibiting the assertion of an adverse tax title by one cotenant against another is based upon the relation of trust and confidence created between them by their community of interest. Hoyt v. Lightbody, 98 Minn. 189, 108 N. W. 843. Where the interest of one tenant in common is sold under execution, the purchasers cannot by dealings among themselves, as by partitions and conveyances in which they assumed to have complete title to the whole estate, affect the interest of their cotenant who had no notice. Roll v. Everett [N. J. Eq.] 65 A. 732. Where plaintiff and defendant purchased lands which were placed in third parties to secure purchase-money loans, they were tenants in common and plaintiff could not by notice on defendant to pay his share when due forfeit his interest, but defendant was entitled to a decree vesting him with an undivided interest upon payment to plaintiff of his share of the money. Anderson v. Snowden [Wash.] 87 P. 356.

41. Bought property at tax sale. Richards v. Richards, 31 Pa. Super. Ct. 509. Purchase of common property sold as an entirety for delinquent taxes by one cotenant amounts merely to the payment of taxes, and the purchaser has no additional right in the land except the right to contribution. Williams v. Clyatt [Fla.] 43 So. 441.

42. Puchase at sale for taxes assessed during the tenancy. Dahlem v. Abbott [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 894, 110 N. W. 47. Where several lot owners by mutual warranty deeds become tenants in common of an alley and one buys a part thereof through a foreclosure of a prior trust deed to one of the lots, such part inures to the benefit of his cotenants. Flat Top Grocery Co. v. Bailey [W. Va.] 57 S. E. 302.

43. Savage v. Bradley [Ala.] 43 So. 20. In ordinary cases in Alabama, cotenants must elect to contribute to a redemption by one from a mortgage foreclosure within two years, and a delay of ten years constitutes laches. Id.

44. Not entitled to benefits until such costs are contributed or tendered, and hence cannot secure a partition. Darcey v. Bayne [Md.] 66 A. 434.

45. Where a plaintiff repudiated the cotenancy existing with the defendant, if there was one, by instituting an action of trespass to try title, he cannot claim that a subsequently acquired title of the defendant inured to him because of such relation. Stubblefield v. Hanson [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 36, 94 S. W. 406.

46. The fact that a cotenant acquiesced in a plan by which the common property was to be bought at the tax sale for his daughters, which plan was never attempted urement, however, embraces only adverse titles [47] and is not applicable where the common title is a nullity or where the tenants are asserting hostile claims,[48] or, in a few states, where they claim interests under different instruments or acts,[49] and in Michigan, but not in Minnesota,[50] is limited to titles accruing through default of the purchasing tenant.[51] A statute permitting a cotenant to protect his interest by paying his portion of the tax does not enable him to destroy his cotenant's interest,[52] and to enable him to have exclusive benefit of the title purchased it must appear that it included only his interest.[53]

A tenant discharging an incumbrance acquires an equitable lien upon his cotenant's interests for their share of the costs,[54] but if he buys at foreclosure or purchases an adverse title, he holds the title subject to an equity in the others to become co-owners by contributing their portion of the purchase price,[55] and in either case notice must be given of the discharge or purchase before their rights can be cut off.[56]

Possession.[57]—Cotenants have a mutual right to a joint possession [58] of the entire common property,[59] and the forcible dispossession of one does not give him a right of action for the exclusive possession,[60] nor does the Missouri statute authorizing ejectment by one co-tenant against another upon proof of ouster alter the statutory provision that the defendant must be in possession.[61] One common tenant cannot sue another for possession till ouster.[62]

Adverse possession.[63]—The possession of a tenant in common inures to all [64] and is presumed to be according to title,[65] and hence it cannot become adverse until there has been an ouster of the other cotenants, or notice to them of the adverse of execution, does not estop him from claiming the benefit of a purchase by another cotenant. Richards v. Richards, 31 Pa. Super. Ct. 509.

59. An heir at law cannot assert a right of possession to a particular area of the ancestor's land in the possession of the adminstrator until it has vested in her in severalty by an agreement among the heirs or by a partition judgment (Haden v. Sims [Ga.] 56 S. E. 989), and a decree appointing partitioners to set off to her her share out of a certain tract, followed by an allotment, does not vest title in severalty where exceptions to the allotment remain undisposed of (Id.).

holding,[66] although it seems that if the fact of cotenancy is unknown to the others, his possession will be treated as that of a stranger.[67]

Where one cotenant conveys the whole estate and the grantee enters and holds possession thereunder, such occupancy is adverse,[68] if the possession is absolute,[69] and the acceptance of a deed from another cotenant thereafter is not a recognition of the cotenancy of a third.[70] Such effect, however, is not given to a sheriff's deed.[71] Possession pursuant to a partition agreement is not of itself adverse to cotenants not joining therein.[72]

Ouster [73] must be an actual exclusion or acts equivalent thereto in law.[74] Mere exclusive possession does not constitute an ouster,[75] but if it is pursuant to a mortgage or deed by one tenant to the entire property, it is sufficient,[76] though the deed shows that the grantee therein has only an undivided interest,[77] but such ouster does not start the Iowa statute of limitations so long as the grantee remains a nonresident, though in possession by a tenant.[78] Payment of taxes does not amount to an ouster.[79]

Quiet, peaceable, exclusive possession, without payment of rents for twenty or more years, raises a rebuttable [80] presumption of a prior ouster,[81] and it is imma-

It is the intention of the tenant in possession to hold the common property in severalty and exclusively as his own, with notice or knowledge to his cotenants of such intention, which constitutes disseisin. Oneal v. Stimson [W. Va.] 56 S. E. 889. An instruction that if the possession was such that those in the neighborhood and in a position to know what was going on appreciated that defendants had possession and claimed exclusive right to the whole property, held erroneous. Rich v. Victoria Copper Min. Co. [C. C. A.] 147 F. 380. Where a joint tenant through his agent attempts to sell his interest to his cotenant and the latter takes and holds exclusive possession for thirty-five years, the grantor acknowledging within four years after the sale that he had parted with all his interest, the vendee has an adverse title. Godsey v. Standifer [Ky.] 101 S. W. 921.

Evidence held insufficient to show ouster. Tabler v. Peverill [Cal. App.] 88 P. 994. The fact that a cotenant permitted the land to be pastured, it being wild, open land, that he employed one to look after it, nothing in particular being done, that he paid taxes for some years and bid off the land at tax sales on other years, held not to show an adverse title. Rich v. Victoria Copper Min. Co. [C. C. A.] 147 F. 380. Where the purchaser at a mortgage foreclosure of a mortgage covering the whole interest but executed only by one tenant in common, was taken to the land by the sheriff and told that he was given possession, did not constitute an ouster. Harriss v. Howard, 126 Ga. 325, 55 S. E. 59.

80. Where the inference of ouster arising terial that some of the cotenants are under disability if they claim under an ancestor who could have sued.[82]

Notice.[83] of adverse holding must be actual or the acts constituting the ouster must be of such unequivocal character as to be constructive notice.[84]

Rents, profits, and proceeds.[85]—A tenant using the common property or more than his share thereof must account to his cotenants,[86] though such user constitutes waste,[87] but he is entitled to credit for reasonable expenses incurred unless he is estopped by unconscionable conduct.[88] A joint tenant leasing the entire property is entitled to the rents subject to an accounting to the cotenants.[89]

Where a sale or exchange of property is made by one cotenant, the others may ratify and obtain the benefit thereof [90] by discharging their share of the affirmative obligations of the contract.[91]

Contribution.[92]—A tenant advancing money for the preservation of the common property is entitled to contribution from his cotenants and has a lien upon their interests for the same.[93] A cotenant in possession of a mine is not entitled to contribution for unsuccessful operation undertaken without the others' consent.[94] The right to contribution does not depend on the continuing enforceabiltiy of his obligation by the original creditor against the cotenant.[95] from 20 years or more of actual occupation by one tenant in common without payment of rents, etc., is contradicted by evidence of an alleged admission of the rights of the cotenants, the question of ouster is for the jury. Hamby v. Folsom [Ala.] 42 So. 548.

Courtner v. Etheredge [Ala.] 43 So. 368. Notice cannot be predicated upon theory that one tenant with the knowledge of the other makes occassional use of the premises for storage purposes and rents it for a nominal sum insufficient to pay taxes, especially where the occupying tenant is informed of the interest of the other and apparently acquiesces. 86. Used more than his share of the water of a stream. Roberts v. Claremont R. & Lighting Co. [N. H.] 66 A. 485. In an action for an accounting between joint owners of profits and expenses, the evidence examined and held to sustain the judgment. First Nat. Bank v. Krause [Neb.] 111 N. W. 382.

87. Notwithstanding that the taking of gas from the common property by a cotenant is waste for which he is liable by statute in West Virginia, he may be held to an accounting for the net proceeds. Dangerfield v. Caldwell [C. C. A.] 151 F. 554.

88. The right of a cotenant to credit for the reaonable expenses incurred in taking out gold from a mining claim is not affected by his inequitable conduct in denying his cotenant's title in violating his agreement not to work the mine, in refusing an accounting, or in making a false statement in his answer as to the amount of net profits. Dettering v. Nordstrom [C. C. A.] 148 F. 81.

89. Hence where a guardian of a minor joint tenant leases for the benefit of his ward and is not called upon to account to the other tenants, he is accountable to a subsequently appointed guardian for all the rent collected. Potter v. Redmon's Guardian, 29 Ky. L. R. 840, 96 S. W. 529.

90. Harris v. Umsted [Ark.] 96 S. W. 146.

91. Where a tenant in common agreed to trade for corporate stock at par value, the land being valued at $25 per acre, and his cotenant negotiated a trade on a valuation of $27.50 per acre by paying a bonus, the former can only share in the contract as made by paying his proportional share of the bonus. Spalding v. Lewis, 42 Wash. 528, 85 P. 255.

93. Richards v. Richards, 31 Pa. Super. Ct. 509. Where property is taxed and sold as belonging exclusively to one having only an undivided interest therein, the purchaser at most only becomes a cotenant of the other owners with an equitable lien on their interests for their share of the taxes. Niday v. Cochran [Tex. Civ. App.] 14 Tex. Ct. Rep. 334, 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 317, 93 S. W. 1027. See ante, "Discharge of Incumbrances," etc.

94. Where after a division of past profits the mine is closed down and later operated by one without the consent of the other, he is not entitled to contribution for expenses from the profits divided. Stickley v. Mulrooney [Colo.] 87 P. 547.

95. Querney v. Querney, 127 Ill. App. 75.

Agency.[98]—While there is no implied agency growing out of the relation,[97] a cotenant may be vested with authority to bind all by act of the parties,[98] and especially is it binding upon a cotenant who participates in the act.[99]

Conversion.[1]—While a joint owner converting common property is liable to his co-owners,[2] he is entitled to credit for converted property perishing in his possession without fault on his part.[3]

Trespass and waste.[4]—While as a general rule a tenant in common cannot maintain trespass quare clausum against his cotenant,[5] the action will lie where the acts amount to a destruction of the common property.[6]

Actions.[7]—As in equitable actions generally, a tenant seeking equitable relief must show that he has done equity.[8] In Illinois assumpsit will not lie to recover of a cotenant rents collected upon the common property.[9] Where an accounting is limited to the output of a mine, the defendant cannot offset expenses not connected therewith without appropriate pleadings.[10] A tenant seeking to offset expenses in an action for an accounting has the burden of establishing the same,[11] and, likewise, one asserting title by adverse possession must prove all the essential elements of such possession.[12] In an accounting for gold taken from a mine by a tenant through a lessee, evidence that such lease was fair and reasonable and a customary one is not admissible as showing the reasonable expense in mining the gold.[13]

The right and remedy of partition is treated in a separate article.[14] The right of partition is usually a concomitant of co-ownership,[15] but a minor female child upon marriage is not entitled to partition land set off to her and decedent's widow

12. A cotenant claiming by adverse possession has the burden of showing that its possession was accompanied by tortious and disloyal acts to his cotenant which were open, continuious, and notorious, so as to preclude all doubt as to the character of the holdings or the want of cotenants' knowledge that the same was adverse. H.] 66 A. 485. Under Laws 1898, pp. 644, 653, 660, §§ 26, 45, 46, a partition sale of lands held in common may be made though the interest of one is only a life estate partition being unpracticable. Campbell v. Cole [N. J. Eq.] 64 A. 461.

as a year's support.[16] "Improvements" as used in a statute authorizing them to be set off to the tenant making them do not include anything which constitutes waste.[17] Where a cotenant has assumed to convey a particular tract, a court of equity may require that another tenant's interest be set off from the remainder if it can be done without prejudice.[18] A contract between cotenants giving one more than half of the proceeds if the property is sold for a specified sum within a stated time does not entitle him to a major share upon partition after the time.[19]

§ 3. Rights and liabilities as to third persons.[20]—A third person whose money is appropriated to the payment of taxes by a tenant is not subrogated to such tenant's rights against his cotenants.[21] Adverse possession perfected as to one joint tenant is sufficient as to all.[22] A tenant in common cannot authorize the commission of waste.[23] In some states all tenants in common must join in action respecting the common property,[24] but, if maintainable by less, recovery is limited to the interests of those who are parties thereto.[25]

40. United States v. Macfarland, 28 App. D. C. 552. District will not be held to possess the power to revoke a license to engage in the plumbing and gas fitting business unless such power clearly appears (Id.), and it will not be implied from the power to regulate such trade, since the act of congress granting such power prescribes a penalty for violation of the rules which must be deemed exclusive (Id.).

41. But he has no power to make it a part of the United States so as to exempt goods imported from the United States from duties. Galban & Co. v. U. S. 40 Ct. Cl. 495.

42. While Porto Rico is not a "territory" of the United States within Rev. St. § 5278 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3597), relating to extraditions, such section was extended by Act of April 12, 1900 (31 Stat. c. 191, p. 80), making "the statutory laws of the U. TIME.[51]

Intervening Sundays[52] and holidays[53] are usually included, but it is held in Louisiana that Sunday is to be excluded from the five days allowed the governor within which to return a bill to the general assembly.[54] Where the last day falls on Sunday, it is usually excluded, but by statute in New York this rule does not apply to computation of a period of months;[55] and an act required to be done on a day certain is not excused because the day happens to be a half legal holiday.[56] Fractions of a day are not considered[57] except where priority of right in fact is involved,[58] and accordingly where time limited runs from an occurrence, the day thereof is included.[59] Where an act is required to be performed within a certain number of months[60] or years,[61] calendar months or years are intended, and performance on the calendar anniversary of the date from which the period runs it too late.[62] Solar time is meant in statutes fixing the lengths of terms of court in the absence of language showing a contrary intent,[63] and governs the length of terms even though a different system is in general use where the court sits.[64] "Several" when used to express time by the hour does not mean a fractional part of an hour, but an uncertain plurality of hours.[65]

of toll thereon.[68] Where a franchise is silent as to its duration, it will be construed as limited to the corporate life of the toll company.[69] A toll company may be specially authorized by statute to collect tolls on a road within a city's limits if kept in repair by the municipality.[70]

Abandonment and forfeiture.—The Kentucky statute providing for the forfeiture of corporate charters for abuses [71] should be liberally construed and applied only where the criminal laws are inefficient to correct the abuses and the company has disabled itself to serve the purpose for which it was created.[72] A suit in equity will lie in Oregon to cancel a lease for nonperformance of its covenants,[73] but a claim affecting its original validity cannot be joined therewith.[74]

Acquisiton by public.[75]—In an action against a county upon its contract of purchase of a toll road, evidence of what it would cost to construct it at the time it was taken is admissible to show its value.[76]

§ 2. Public aid and immunities.[77]—A turnpike road is a public highway.[78]

§ 3. Establishment, construction, location, and maintenance.[79]—Under the Kentucky statute making it a criminal offense for the officers of a toll company to fail to make a settlement with the county court during the month of July, an indictment must allege that defendant was an officer during the entire month [80] and failed to make a report during such time.[81]

Personal injuries.—A toll road or bridge company must keep its property in a 68. A contract which, after reciting that a certain road is a public burden, provides that the contracting toll company shall repair and maintain the same, construed as a lease under B. & C. Comp. §§ 4937-4950, and not as an agreement under §§ 5074-5077, relating to condemnation. Tillamook County v. Wilson River Road Co. [Or.] 89 P. 958.

69. Hence upon reorganization at the expiration of its charter it must secure a new franchise from the county board of supervisors before it can collect tolls for use of a bridge across a navigable stream. Rockwith v. State Road Bridge Co., 145 Mich. 455, 13 Det. Leg. N. 548, 108 N. W. 785.

70. Ky. St. 1903, § 4724, prohibiting such charges, is not applicable to the collection of tolls by the Newport L. & A. Turnpike Co. on such roads in the city of Newport, since by amendment to its charter it was given authority to contract with the city with reference to the use, improvement, etc., of its road within the city without impairing its right to collect tolls. Commonwealth v. Newport L. & A. Turnpike Co., 29 Ky. L. R. 1285, 97 S. W. 375.

71. A petition for the forfeiture of the charter of a turnpike company alleging that it had conveyed a part of its road to a railroad company, but which does not allege that such was not necessary for the safety of travelers or that the company has not secured in lieu thereof another and safer route, does not show abuse of corporate power. Commonwealth v. Newport, L. & A. Turnpike Co., 29 Ky. L. R. 1285, 97 S. W. 375. And a further allegation that the company collected toll within 500 yards of toll gate at a "suitable" obstruction in lieu of a gate was meaningless and charged no offense, it not being shown that toll was collected for a distance not traveled or twice collected for a distance traveled. Id.

73. Under B. & C. Comp. § 4946, authorizing "an action" to forfeit a lease of a public road for failure of lessee to comply with the conditions, authorizes a suit in equity to cancel since equity alone can grant the relief sought. Tillamook County v. Wilson River Road Co. [Or.] 89 P. 968.

76. Nelson County v. Bardstown & B. Turnpike Road Co., 30 Ky. L. R. 1258, 100 S. W. 1183. A verdict for $11,000 as the value of a road which has been paying 6 per cent interest on a valuation of $23,000 held not so insufficient as to authorize a reversal especially where it was the third trial. Id.

77. See 6 C. L. 1699.

78. Hence may be made the terminus of another public road (Derry Township Road, 30 Pa. Super. Ct. 538), and the mere fact that the revenue of the turnpike company may be lessened by the expense of a new toll gate does not prevent such use (Id.).

79. See 6 C. L. 1699.

80. An indictment alleging that "on the — day of July" defendant was an officer and did fail to make a report during July, etc., is insufficient, since he may not have been an officer during the entire month. Lyon v. Com. 29 Ky. L. R. 297, 92 S. W. 942.

81. Under Ky. St. 1903, § 4718, requiring the president and managers of toll bridges to make a full settlement in the county court "within the month of July," and indictment alleging that "on the — day of July" the defendants refused to make a full settlement, is insufficient as the report could be made any time during July. Commonwealth v. Houstonville & C. M. Turnpike Road Co., 29 Ky. L. R. 132, 92 S. W. 941.

reasonably safe condition for travel,[82] and is liable only for negligence in failing to do so.[83] It is not required to guard travelers against injuries inflicted by trespassing third persons.[84] As in tort actions generally its negligence must be the proximate cause of the injury,[85] and questions of negligence[86] and contributory negligence[87] are usually for the jury.

§ 4. Right of travel and tolls.[88]—One voluntarily leaving at an intermediate point rides through a tunnel within a statute authorizing the collection of tolls of persons riding through.[89] Where future tolls are pledged to the holders of construction bonds for the payment of the same as provided by statute, the state cannot thereafter decrease the tolls,[90] but such pledge of the "whole amount" of the tolls means the net and not the gross amount thereof.[91] A demand of excessive tolls does not authorize a traveler to force a passage by a breach of the peace.[92] Interest as a citizen alone is not sufficient to support an action to compel public authorities to use the fund arising from tolls to maintain a free bridge.[93]

Where an internal revenue tax is assessed and collected under a mistaken interpretation of the statute, a tort is not committed by the collector. Armour v. Roberts, 151 F. 846.

18. A person securing a sale of property under an erroneous order of court in an action prosecuted in good faith is not a tort feasor. The Eliza Lines [C. C. A.] 132 F. 242.

19. A railroad company can not be held liable for interfering with firemen about to lay hose across its track unless such interference is willful or due to a failure to use due care. American Sheet & Tin Plate Co. v. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. [C. C. A.] 143 F. 789. Held not liable in failing to stop sooner, there being nothing to apprise the crew of the fire and there being nothing to show that they heard or understood the signals of persons along the track. Id. Held no willful interference in running the train by instead of backing or cutting, it appearing that there was another train following and such action would have been accompanied with danger. 23. Joint tort feasors: Partners jointly securing an assignment of their copartner's interest by fraudulent conduct and representations. Goldsmith v. Koopman [C. C. A.] 152 F. 173. Where two railroads and a city jointly contributed to the detention of water which flooded plaintiff's land, they are joint tort feasors. Pickerill v. Louisville, 30 Ky. L. R. 1239, 100 S. W. 873. Where an injury resulted from the negligence of a smelting company in erecting a pipe across a railroad track and from the failure of the railroad company to warn plaintiff, a brakeman, of the danger, the smelting company and the railroad company are joint tort feasors. Consolidated Kansas City Smelting & Refining Co. v. Binkley [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 181. An allegation that "the Massee & Felton Lumber Co. and T. H. T. Sutton conspired and colluded together, and, acting for the mutual benefit of each * * * entered upon the lands of your petitioner * * * cut and carried away 204 trees," sufficiently declared against the defendants as joint tort feasors and is not demurrable for misjoinder of parties. Hancock v. Massee & Felton Lumber Co. [Ga.] 56 S. E. 1021.

Not joint tort feasors: A railway company negligently maintaining a trolley wire across a railroad track so low as to catch and throw brakeman from the top of a car and negligence of the railroad company in failing to give warning does not render them joint tort feasors. Pittsburgh Rys. Co. v. Chapman [C. C. A.] 145 F. 886. The giving of separate and independent indemnity bonds by execution and attacking creditors to the sheriff levying the writs, thereby ratifying his acts, does not render them joint tort feasors. Livesay v. First Nat. Bk. [Colo.] 86 P. 102. The joining in a joint answer by defendants charged with a joint liability has no weight as evidence of such liability. Id.

24. Strauhal v. Asiatic S. S. Co. [Or.] 85 P. 230. Civ. Code Prac. § 83. Pickerill v. Louisville, 30 Ky. L. R. 1239, 100 S. W. 873. Need not make all parties. Mangan v. Hudson River Tel. Co., 50 Misc. 388, 100 N. Y. S. 539. A complaint which alleges that plaintiff's intestate was killed in a collision caused by the negligence of a railroad company, its train dispatcher, and certain telegraph operators, who were made defendants, states a cause of action for a joint tort and they may be held answerable at common law and under Clark's Code (3d Ed.), § 267, subs. 2, 3 (Revisal 1905, § 469). Hough v. Southern R. Co. [N. C.] 57 S. E. 469.

25. Parmelee Co. v. Wheelock, 224 Ill. 194, 79 N. E. 652; Mangan v. Hudson River Tel.

ity may be jointly sued in such capacity and as an individual.[26] There must, however, be a community in the wrong.[27] While a tort feasor is always liable for his own acts,[28] he may sustain such a relation to another as to render him also liable.[29] At common law a wife is not liable for a tort committed in the presence of her husband.[30]

No right of contribution, direct or indirect,[31] exists among joint tort feasors for intentional and conscious wrongs,[32] but it is usually permitted in the case of passive negligence.[33]

Co., 60 Misc. 388, 100 N. Y. S. 539. The tort feasors cannot compiain of a joint action. Hough v. Southern R. Co. [N. C.] 57 S. E. 469. Miners dumping refuse into stream to the injury of lower riparian owners are each liable for the whole damage. Day v. Louisville Coal & Coke Co. [W. Va.] 53 S. E. 776. Electrical company and a telephone company jointly sued by a workman of the latter, the former for alleged negligence of stringing its wires too near a pole of the latter, and the telephone company for negligence in not furnishing plaintiff with a safe place to work. Drown v. New England Tel. & T. Co. [Vt.] 66 A. 801. A manufacturer of a dangerous substance who fails to label it and a retailer who sells the same with knowledge of its character without warning are jointly liable for a resulting injury. Clement v. Crosby & Co. [Mich.] 14 Det. Leg. N. 85, 111 N. W. 745. Evidence examined and held sufficient to show that the accident whereby decedent lost his life was caused by concurrent negligence of both defendants. Strauhal v. Asiatic S. S. Co. [Or.] 85 P. 230.

26. Sued as curator and as an individual for slander of title in maliciously inventoring plaintiff's property as a part of the succession. Williams' Heirs v. Zengel, 117 La. 599, 42 So. 153.

27. Where two or more persons act each for himself and independently of each other in a proceeding, the result of which may be injurious to another, they are not jointly liable for the acts of each other. Livesay v. First Nat. Bk. [Colo.] 86 P. 102. To make tort feasors liable jointly, there must be a community in the wrongdoing and the injury must be due to their joint work, but it is not necessary that they act together or in concert if their concurrent negligence causes the injury. Strauhal v. Asiatic S. S. Co. [Or.] 85 P. 230.

Community of wrong: Negligence in furnishing an unseaworthy barge and negligence in loading the same concurring to cause injury. Strauhal v. Asiatic S. S. Co. [Or.] 85 P. 230.

No community: Two parties acting independently appropriate separate and distinct parts of plaintiff's land. Millard v. Miller [Colo.] 88 P. 845.

28. Servant cutting timber under the direction of his master is not relieved. Baker v. Davis [Ga.] 57 S. E. 62.

29. Principal and agent: Walking delegate and labor union held joint tort feasors for a tort of the former. Wyeman v. Deady [Conn.] 65 A. 129. Where plaintiff was illegally seized and detained by defendants at their sanitarium, persons at whose request he was seized and detained are joint tort feasors though they did not contemplate or know that he was confined without legal commitment. Allen v. Ruland [Conn.] 65 A. 138. As between principal and agent, the latter is liable for a tort resulting solely from his negligence. Ayer & Lord Tie Co. v. Witherspoon's Adm'r, 30 Ky. L. R. 1067, 100 S. W. 259. See Agency, 7 C. L. 61.

Master and servant: A joint action lies against a master and his servant for a tort of the latter for which the former is liable (Mayberry v. Northern Pac. R. Co. [Minn.] 110 N. W. 356), and even if it be regarded as two causes of action, they may be joined in a single complaint under § 4154, Rev. Laws 1905, as growing out of the same transaction (Id.). A master liable only by virtue of the doctrine of respondeat superior for the tort of his servant cannot be jointly sued with him, and plaintiff must elect. French v. Central Const. Co., 8 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 425. See Master and Servant, 8 C. L. 840.

Partners: Members of a partnership held jointly and severally liable for a wrongful repledge of pledged property. Interurban Const. Co. v. Hayes, 191 Mo. 248, 89 S. W. 927.

See Partnership, 8 C. L. 1261.

30. Presumed to have resulted from coercion, and the rule still prevails in New Jersey. Emmons v. Stevans [N. J. Law] 64 A. 1014.

31. In an action for breach of contract to transfer certain corporate stock purchased of a third party, an answer alleging that a judgment had been recovered by such third party against defendant for fraud in the purchase to which plaintiff was a party, is irrelevant. Noval v. Haug, 48 Misc. 198, 96 N. Y. S. 708.

32. Noval v. Haug, 48 Misc. 198, 96 N. Y. S. 708; Goldsmith v. Koopman [C. C. A.] 152 F. 173. Where a smelting company negligently erected a pipe across a railroad track and the railroad company failed to warn its brakeman of the danger and he was injured, the companies were active joint tort feasors and hence no right of contribution exists. Consolidated Kansas City Smelting & Refining Co. v. Binkley [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 181.

33. Mayberry v. Northern Pac. R. Co. [Minn.] 110 N. W. 356. Railroad allowed to recover where it was passively negligent and its co-tort feasor was actively negligent. Southwestern Tel. & T. Co. v. Krause [Tex. Civ. App.] 92 S. W. 431. Injured through the concurrent negligence of a railroad company and a traction company resulting in a collision. Northern Texas Trac. Co. v. Caldwell [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 869. Where plaintiff and defendant are jointly liable for a wrongful death due to their concurrent omissions, and plaintiff pays a judgment under compulsion, he is entitled to contribution under Rev. St. 1899, § 2870 [Ann. St. 1906, p. 1654] (Eaton &

A release of one joint tort feasor releases all [34] if the releasee was liable in fact [35] and subject to suit,[36] unless the release stipulates to the contrary [37] or the parties in fact did not so intend.[38] A covenant not to sue one is no bar to a suit against another joint tort feasor.[39]

Full satisfaction by one tort feasor discharges all,[40] though by statute the wrong is made a liabiliy with statutory punitive damages.[41] A partial satisfaction inures to the benefit of all.[42] Rendition of judgment against one without satisfaction is no bar to a suit against another.[43]

§ 5. Pleading and procedure.[44]—In Florida contributory negligence of plaintiff in a personal tort action must be pleaded.[45] Death of plaintiff after judgment does not abate an action for personal torts.[46] Where distinct violations of duty are alleged, it is not necessary to establish all,[47] and though a conspiracy is charged, if the gist of the action is a tort which could be committed by one, a verdict may be returned against a single defendant.[48] A joint action against joint tort feasors may be severed at any stage of the proceedings.[49] Failure to prove a joint liability in a joint action is a fatal variance,[50] and likewise a joint judgment can only be sustained where the evidence makes a cause of action against each defendant.[51] Where wrongdoers may be sued severally, a judgment may be rendered Prince Co. v. Mississippi Valley Trust Co. [Mo. App.] 100 S. W. 551), though there was no concert of action, the negligence of each being omissions only (Id.).

35. Ryan v. Becker [Iowa] 111 N. W. 426. Especially where the release provides that it shall not release the other. El Paso & S. R. Co. v. Darr [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 145, 93 S. W. 166. In an action to cancel a judgment on the ground that a judgment rendered against a joint tort feasor has been satisfied, defendant may show by parol that the satisfied judgment was not rendered on the theory of compensation for the injury but was a compromise to save the judgment debtor the expense of a trip to the place of trial and that he was not in fact liable. Ryan v. Becker [Iowa] 111 N. W. 426.

36. Release of the commonwealth which was not subject to suit. Pickwick v. McCauliff [Mass.] 78 N. E. 730.

37. El Paso & S. R. Co. v. Darr [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 145, 93 S. W. 166; Morris v. North American Mercantile Agency Co., 103 N. Y. S. 761. Under Code 1896, §§ 1805, 1806, providing that releases shall be given effect according to the intention of the parties, a release of one joint tort feasor which recites that it is not intended as a satisfaction of the amount claimed, nor as a release of any claim against the other tort feasor, releases the latter only pro tanto. Home Tel. Co. v. Fields [Ala.] 43 So. 711.

38. Parol evidence is admissible to show the circumstances under which a release was given and to explain the intent. El Paso & S. R. Co. v. Darr [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 145, 93 S. W. 166.

40. Satisfaction by joint tort feasor. El Paso & S. R. Co. v. Darr [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 145, 93 S. W. 166. Where the officers of a corporation without authority applied corporate funds to the payment of private debts, and the corporation waives the tort and treats the claim as a debt against the officers, acceptance of money, notes, and other security, in payment of the debt, released the receiver of the funds from all liability. Security Warehousing Co. v. American Exch. Nat. Bk., 103 N. Y. S. 399.

Not joint tort feasors. McCoy v. Louisville & N. R. Co. [Ala.] 40 So. 106. Principal settled for the tort of his agent. Chicago Herald Co. v. Bryan, 195 Mo. 574, 92 S. W. 902.

41. McCoy v. Louisville & N. R. Co. [Ala.] 40 So. 106.

42. Where money is paid by one to secure a release from further obligations and as part payment for the injury, a wrongdoer sued thereafter is entitled to credit. El Paso & S. R. Co. v. Darr [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 145, 93 S. W. 166.

47. Sufficient if he proves enough to make a cause of action, i. e., a single negligence. Postal Tel. Cable Co. v. Likes, 225 Ill. 249, 80 N. E. 136.

48. In an action wherein it is alleged that defendant "did fraudulently, deceitfully, maliciously, and unlawfully conspire, combine," etc., to cheat and deprive plaintiff of her property, the tort working damage to plaintiff and not the conspiracy was the gist of the action. James v. Evans [C. C. A.] 149 F. 136.

against one alone in a joint action,[52] even after verdict finding a joint liability,[53] and the granting of a new trial as to one does not vacate the judgment as to the others,[54] unless only one final judgment can be rendered.[55] An action for a single tort cannot be split.[56] It is not error to permit one joint tort feasor who has announced his intention to abide by his motion for a peremptory instruction to cross-examine his codefendant's witness and to argue the evidence.[57] The fact that it does not appear that a releasee was a joint tort feasor with defendant does not render the release inadmissible.[58] Instructions relative to the liability of tort feasors must not assume disputed facts or be misleading.[59]

§ 1. Creation, organization, status, and boundaries.[60]—The word "town" is frequently used indiscriminately to denote a territorial subdivision of a county and a village or small city, hence its meaning is largely a question of legislative intent.[61] The word "municipality" has been construed to embrace townships.[62] The advisability of township organization is a legislative question which cannot be imposed upon the judiciary.[63] Where the constitution authorizes the legislature to enact a general statute under which counties may so organize "whenever a majority of voters, voting at any general election," shall so determine, a statute authorizing such

52. Defendant against whom rendered held not aggrieved. Ferguson v. Truax [Wis.] 110 N. W. 395. In an action of trespass committed by an attorney on behalf of the client under a void writ, the direction of a verdict in favor of the attorney does not prevent assessment of punitive damages against the client. Chicago Title & Trust Co. v. Core, 223 Ill. 58, 79 N. E. 108.

53. Plaintiff may take judgment against one and dismiss as to the other. Postal Tel. Cable Co. v. Likes, 225 Ill. 249, 80 N. E. 136.

54. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 578, providing that in an action against several tort feasors judgment may be rendered in favor of some and against others, the granting of a new trial as to one does not vacate the judgment as to the others. Fowden v. Pacific Coast S. S. Co. [Cal.] 86 P. 178.

55. An action against joint tort feasors being a single action in which there can be but one final judgment under Rev. St. 1895, art. 1337, the vacation of the judgment as to one vacates as to all. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Smith [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 171.

56. Where after obtaining a judgment for personal injuries it becomes necessary to amputate two more fingers, additional damages cannot be recovered. Painter v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. [N. C.] 57 S. E. 151.

57. He merely waived the right to have plaintiff's evidence alone considered against him and authorized a consideration of the evidence introduced by his codefendant. Postal Tel. Cable Co. v. Likes, 225 Ill. 249, 80 N. E. 136.

58. The objection goes to the effect to be given rather than its admissibility. Allen v. Ruland [Conn.] 65 A. 138.

59. An instruction that where the negligence of two unite in causing an accident by which another is injured is not objectionable in using the word "where" instead of "if" as assuming such negligence. Parmelee Co. v. Wheelock, 224 Ill. 194, 79 N. E. 652. Nor is it misleading in using the clause "where the negligence of two unite in causing" instead of "where two unite in negligently causing." Id.

61. "Town" as used in franchise to make and sell gas for the purpose of lighting the streets, buildings, manufactories, and other places situated in the "town of Millville and vicinity" held to mean the village of Millville and not the township. Millville Gas Light Co. v. Vineland Light & Power Co. [N. J. Eq.] 65 A. 504.

62. A municipality within Laws 29th Gen. Assem. 1902, p. 68, c. 108, Code Supp. 1902, § 2575, providing for the location of pest houses in case of controversies between municipalities. Hanson v. Cresco [Iowa] 109 N. W. 1109.

63. Laws 1905, p. 60, c. 21, § 775d, held to vest discretion in the court only in determining whether all the conditions precedent have been complied with and not in passing on the wisdom of the action and hence not unconstitutional. Nash v. Fries [Wis.] 108 N. W. 210.

action when "a majority voting on the question" so decide is unconstitutional,[64] and the fact that a majority of all the voters favored the organization does not render it valid.[65] A petition for resubmission of the question is not invalidated by a superfluous recital of facts justifying it,[66] nor an order of submission by unnecessary but correct directions as to matters regulated by statute,[67] and whether an election is held on the theory of an original submission or a resubmission, the real purpose will be effectuated if possible.[68] The phrase "as now constituted" as used in a consolidating act in respect to a matter to be acted upon by the constituent towns applies to the territorial limits of the old towns and not to the inhabitants.[69] In Ohio a newly created township by division is entitled to a porportional share of taxes levied but not collected at the time of the division.[70] A division of a township does not affect a franchise privilege coextensive therewith.[71]

§ 2. General powers and exercise thereof.[72]—A town is a quasi corporation with limited powers having only such as are expressly conferred or clearly implied therefrom.[73] Where a consolidating act provides that a town house shall be located at a particular place unless the old towns otherwise decide, a decision once made [74] renders the provision functus officio and the new town may thereafter locate the same,[75] and, if the statute does not prescribe the manner of taking such independent action, it is left to the reasonable discretion of the old towns acting together as a new town.[76] In New York a taxpayer can only interfere with official action where the acts are unauthorized or where fraud or bad faith amounting thereto is charged,[77] and where a taxpayer has voluntarily paid a tax levied for a particular purpose, he cannot restrain such use.[78]

64. Rev. St. 1879, § 7432 (State v. Munn [Mo.] 99 S. W. 1073), and Rev. St. 1889, § 8427, held violative of Const. art. 9, § 8 (State v. Gibson, 195 Mo. 251, 94 S. W. 513).

65. State v. Gibson, 195 Mo. 251, 94 S. W. 513.

66. A petition under Rev. St. 1889, § 8425c (Rev. St. 1899, § 10,226), for resubmission of the question of township organization, is not rendered invalid by recitals that the county had previously adopted township organization, that the revenues were insufficient to maintain such organization, and that the highways and bridges were becoming dilapidated. State v. Russell, 197 Mo. 633, 95 S. W. 870.

67. Directions as to the form of ballots. State v. Russell, 197 Mo. 633, 95 S. W. 870.

68. Election effectuated as an original submission under § 10,226, Rev. St. 1899, and not as a resubmission under Rev. St. 1899, § 10,317, though conducted on the theory of a resubmission, every thing essential to an original submission being done (State v. Russell, 197 Mo. 633, 95 S. W. 870), hence not material that the latter is unconstitutional (Id.).

69. Act 1861, providing that "whenever the new town of Skowhegan shall vote to build a town house, it shall be located on Skowhegan Island unless a majority of each town, as now constituted, shall otherwise decide." Anderson v. Parker, 101 Me. 416, 64 A. 771.

70. Rev. St. 1906, § 1377, providing "And in the case of division * * * of any township, the funds in the treasury * * * shall be apportioned * * * to the new township * * * to the extent the same were collected from the territory * * * established into the new township," held to include taxes levied but not collected at the time of division. Cooley v. State, 74 Ohio St. 252, 78 N. E. 369.

71. Act of 1871, dividing Hackensack township into three new townships, held not to affect the right of a gas company to lay pipes, etc., in the territory originally embraced in such township as authorized by its charter. Public Service Corp. v. De Grote [N. J. Eq.] 62 A. 65.

73. State v. Lake Sup'rs [Wis.] 109 N. W. 564.

74. To "consent to have" a town "hall" in a certain building is to "decide to build" a town "house" within Priv. & Sp. Laws 1861, p. 25, c. 34, providing that if the new town shall vote to build a town house, it shall be located at a particular place unless a majority of each constituent town shall decide otherwise. Anderson v. Parker, 101 Me. 416, 64 A. 771.

75. Anderson v. Parker, 101 Me. 416, 64 A. 771.

76. Action taken at a meeting called by the new town at which the inhabitants of the old towns voted separate as to the location of a town hall, held to fulfill Priv. & Sp. Laws 1861, p. 25, c. 34, locating it at a certain place unless a majority of the old towns decided otherwise. Anderson v. Parker, 101 Me. 416, 64 A. 771.

77. An action will lie under Laws 1892, p. 620, c. 301, to restrain the highway commissioners from granting a franchise to a public lighting company only in case of fraud or bad faith amounting to fraud. Craft v. Lent, 103 N. Y. S. 866. The fact that the commissioners might have sold the franchise for $1,000 to another company instead of granting it free does not show such bad faith. Id.

Town meetings.—Presumptions are indulged in favor of regularity of town meetings,[79] and they cannot be collaterally attacked.[80] Failure to swear the moderator does not affect the validity of the meeting.[81] In Illinois the meeting must be held at a single place,[82] and where the purpose of a special meeting is to authorize the borrowing of money for bridge purposes, the general election laws apply.[83] It is the duty of the inspectors of a town meeting to canvass the votes and of the clerk to announce and record the result,[84] and they may be compelled by mandamus to act.[85]

§ 3. Property.[86]

§ 4. Contracts.[87]—In Wisconsin a town cannot contract with an attorney by the year to prosecute and defend actions generally,[88] and the chairman of the town board can contract for the purchase of a road machine only upon petition of a majority of the taxpayers in a superintendent's district representing more than half the taxable property.[89] In Minnesota townships can only issue bonds for bridge purposes,[90] and bonds issued thereunder for road and bridge purposes are void unless saved by the curative act.[91] In Iowa township trustees are prohibited from becoming parties to any contract to furnish labor or materials to the township [92] and are criminally liable for so doing.[93] One who has enjoyed the full benefits of a contract

lett v. Austin & Western Co. [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 940, 110 N. W. 123. Payment of money already collected by a tax to raise money to pay off an instalment does not of itself affect a taxpayer's land and hence he is not entitled to an injunction on the ground that the act will create a lien or result in a tax being levied. Id.

79. Especially on collateral attack and where it appears from the clerk's record that the meeting was held on the proper day, that the moderator-elect presided, and that a resolution was read and adopted, it will be presumed that the meeting was held at the regular hour, that the resolution was carried by a majority of the electors present, and that the result was duly declared by the moderator. Parker v. People, 126 Ill. App. 538.

80. Regularity of the town meeting authorizing an action on behalf of the town sought to be impeached in the suit. Parker v. People, 126 Ill. App. 538.

81. Especially on collateral attack. Parker v. People, 126 Ill. App. 538.

82. Although a town is divided into three election precincts under par. 53, c. 139, Hurd's St. 1903, providing that "each town shall, for the purpose of town meetings, constitute an election precinct," town meeting must be held at a single place. Frantz v. Patterson, 123 Ill. App. 13.

83. Meeting not called at the time designated for or conducted in the manner of a general election. Frantz v. Patterson, 123 Ill. App. 13.

84. Laws 1890, p. 1218, c. 569, § 39, as renumbered by Laws 1897, p. 610, c. 481, and as amended by Laws 1899, p. 321, c. 168. People v. Armstrong, 101 N. Y. S. 712.

85. Where the meeting is adjourned without such canvass, mandamus will lie to compel the inspectors to convene, canvass the votes, and to the clerk to enter the result. People v. Armstrong, 101 N. Y. S. 712.

86. See 4 C. L. 1686.

87. See 6 C. L. 1710.

88. Held not authorized by Rev. St. 1898, § 773, authorizing it to make contracts necessary and convenient for the exercise of its corporate powers, in view of § 776 impliedly authorizing the electors to employ attorneys in particular suits only, the practical effect also being to create another town office. State v. Lake Sup'rs [Wis.] 109 N. W. 564.

89. The sufficiency of the petition under Laws 1899, p. 116, c. 83, § 2, is tested by the last assessment roll on file at the time of presentment to the clerk for certification, and not by the last roll on file at the time the petitioners signed. Pape v. Carlton [Wis.] 109 N. W. 968. The roll delivered to the clerk by the assessor under Wis. St. 1898, § 1064, is an assessment roll within the statute though subject to correction. Id.

90. Under Act March 7, 1867 (Gen. St. 1878, § 114, c. 10), a township can only issue bonds for bridge purposes, being so limited by the title of the act. Clagett v. Duluth Tp. [C. C. A.] 143 F. 824. And where bonds issued thereunder recite that they are issued for the purpose of constructing and repairing "roads and bridges," holders thereof take with notice of invalidity. Id.

91. A taxpayer's suit alleging invalidity of such bonds and restraining the town from paying the same questions their validity so as to take them out of the curative act of Laws 1903, p. 387, c. 267, although the bond holders were not a party thereto. Clagett v. Duluth Tp. [C. C. A.] 143 F. 824.

92. A contract with the road superintendent to furnish men and teams to perform labor for the township is a contract with the township within Code Supp. § 468a. State v. York [Iowa] 109 N. W. 122.

93. A violation of Code Supp. § 468a, is an indictable offense though it merely prohibits the trustees from becoming parties to township contracts for labor, in view of Code, § 4905, providing that where an act is prohibited and no penalty is prescribed it shall be a misdemeanor, and § 4906 providing the punishment for misdemeanors not otherwise fixed, the fact that § 468a was passed subsequent to the others being immaterial. State v. York [Iowa] 109 N. W. 122.

cannot deny the corporate power of the town to make it or the authority of the board executing the same.[94] The commissioners of highways may enter into a joint contract for the construction of a bridge over a boundary stream between two towns[95] if they have the funds;[96] and while they have no authority to contract for a bridge not abutting on highways,[97] the opening of such highways during construction cures the irregularity.[98] Such prematurity may also be waived by the towns.[99]

§ 5. Officers and employes.[1]—The size of the town committee in New Jersey is dependent upon population.[2] Adjournment of the annual meeting without an attempt to elect officers does not prevent their election at a subsequent meeting under the Vermont statute.[3] In some states one must possess the qualifications of a legal voter to be eligible to office,[4] and in determining such qualifications prior residence in territory made a part of a town is residence therein.[5] A town officer holding over has no right to vote at a town board meeting in the appointment of a successor.[6] A town warden by statute in Rhode Island possesses the powers of a justice of the peace.[7] The board of civil authority of a town in Vermont is not required to canvass and announce the vote of the license question,[8] especially in towns of less than four thousand.[9] Where a salary of a town officer is in full for all services required by law, no additional compensation can be had for official duties,[10] and, if paid, may be recovered,[11] though the disbursing officer has included such item in his accounts

95. Highway Law (Laws 1890, pp. 1201, 1202, c. 568, §§ 130-134). No action of the town board or of the electors is required. Colby v. Mt. Morris, 100 N. Y. S. 362.

96. If there are no funds the authority to build or repair rests entirely on the board of supervisors, who are authorized to contract and to borrow money for such purpose by County Law (Laws 1892, p. 1761, c. 686, §§ 68, 69). Colby v. Mt. Morris, 100 N. Y. S. 362.

97, 98. Colby v. Mt. Morris, 100 N. Y. S. 362.

99. Application of the towns to the board of supervisors for leave to construct the bridge and to borrow money, the issuing of bonds for such purpose and the acceptance of the bridge, held to waive all objections that the contract was premature. Colby v. Mt. Morris, 100 N. Y. S. 362.

2. Until a state census is promulgated as provided by law it is inoperative as a basis for determining the number of members of a township committee which may be elected under Act February 26, 1903 (P. L. 1903, p. 21). Buck v. Douglass [N. J. Law] 65 A. 848.

3. Is not a meeting within Vt. St. 2972, and hence under the provision that a failure to hold the annual meeting shall not prevent an election at a subsequent meeting applies. Jenney v. Alden [Vt.] 64 A. 609.

4. As to qualifications of electors for town elections, the town is one election district, so that one who has resided in the town for 30 days may vote without respect to the length of time he has been in any particular election district of the town, and under Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 139, art. 9, § 1, p. 2013, is eligible for the town office of road commissioner for the district of which he is a resident. People v. Markiewicz, 225 Ill. 563, 80 N. E. 256.

5. Attorney General v. McColeman, 144 Mich. 67, 13 Det. Leg. N. 143, 107 N. W. 869. Where, at the session passing an act disorganizing a township and making it a part of another, an act was passed which first took effect creating a new election district in the township annexed to, territory of the disorganized township not falling within the new election district became a part of the old, and hence there was no disfranchisement. Id.

6. Where a supervisor holds over, the office is vacant for the purpose of appointing a successor and on meeting of the town board to fill the vacancy under Laws 1890, c. 569, §§ 234, 232, added by Laws 1893, pp. 788, 789, c. 387 and § 65, as amended by Laws 1897, c. 481, p. 618, the supervisor has no vote. In re Smith, 49 Misc. 567, 100 N. Y. S. 179.

7. May issue warrant to the town sergeant to summon a town meeting to levy a tax. Rose v. McKie [C. C. A.] 145 F. 584.

8. No such duty imposed by Vt. St. §§ 2996, 2983, 2985. Page v. McClure [Vt.] 64 A. 451.

9. Vt. St. 130, as amended by Laws 1902, p. 4, No. 4, providing for the counting and marking of ballots voted under the Australian ballot system by the board of civil authorities, has no application to towns of less than 4,000 population. Page v. McClure [Vt.] 64 A. 451. Courts take judicial notice of the population of towns as shown by the last Federal census. Id.

10. Town clerk is not entitled to compensation for receiving, filing, and computing, the amounts of poor orders issued by the overseer of the poor for outdoor relief in addition to his regular salary (Annis v. McNulty, 51 Misc. 121, 100 N. Y. S. 951), nor for services rendered to the assessor in keeping track of the exchange of property, death of owner, etc., for if it be regarded as clerical services rendered to the board of assessors, it is a part of his duties, and if it be regarded as services rendered under employment, there was no authority for such employment (Id.).

11. Constitutes waste and injury to the funds of the town, within Laws 1887, p. 885, and it has been allowed.[12] A town supervisor in New York, paying claims not audited by the town board, is liable therefor,[13] and the fact that his accounts for receipts and disbursements is allowed is no defense.[14] A suit on a supervisor's bond given under Town Laws for failure to turn over local school funds may be prosecuted by his successor.[15] The use of the clerk's office by the assessor for exhibition of the assessment roll for inspection does not make the clerk custodian of the roll so as to entitle him to compensation.[16] Town highway commissioners employing counsel to oppose the laying out of a new highway are liable for his fees[17] with the right of reimbursement.[18] In matters not purely ministerial,[19] a board must act as such after due deliberation,[20] and hence notice and opportunity to attend must be given to all members.[21]

§ 6. Fiscal management.[22]—Authority to contract a debt carries an implied authority to appropriate money for its payment[23] and to levy a tax if necessary.[24] In Illinois there are two distinct codes of road and bridge taxes,[25] and the original certificate of levy of the highway commissioners under the labor system must be delivered to the supervisor and by him be submitted to the county board.[26] The tax should be extended upon the valuation of the state board of equalization and not upon the valuation of the county board of review.[27] The certificate of the commissioners to the board of town auditors and assessors for consent to levy in excess of the statutory limit must be in writing and state the contingency which requires the levy.[28] A levy of township taxes must state the purpose to which it is to be applied.[29] In New Jersey a town may impose a license fee upon truck peddlers for revenue.[30] The North Carolina act requiring county taxes collected upon railroad

c. 673, as amended by Laws 1892, p. 620, c. 301. Annis v. McNulty, 51 Misc. 121, 100 N. Y. S. 951.

12. Certification of the supervisor's account under Laws 1890, p. 1233, c. 569, § 161, including disbursements to the town clerk as additional compensation, is not an adjudication of the validity of the claims, but merely attests the correctness of the account. Annis v. McNulty, 51 Misc. 121, 100 N. Y. S. 951.

13. Laws 1892, p. 620, c. 301, § 1, held broad enough to include such defaults. Annis v. McNulty, 51 Misc. 121, 100 N. Y. S. 951.

19. Purchase of a road machine held a deliberate as distinct from a purely ministerial act. Austin Mfg. Co. v. Ayr, 31 Pa. Super Ct. 356. The issuing of a license in a particular case, the power to issue a license and the fee being fixed, being purely ministerial, may be issued by a deputed member of the township committee and it is not necessary for the committee to act upon the application by resolution. Buck v. Douglass [N. J. Law] 65 A. 848.

20. Austin Mfg. Co. v. Ayr, 31 Pa. Super. Ct. 356. In an action for the price of a road machine plaintiff makes a prima facie case by showing that they met and conferred with regard to the machine and, after inspecting it, agreed to accept it and did accept it and thereafter took possession, without express evidence that they discussed the matter and honestly considered the interests of the taxpayers. Id.

21. Two selectmen met and acted without notice to a third who was temporarily out of the town. Damon v. Walsh [Mass.] 80 N. E. 644. Rev. Laws, c. 8, § 4, cl. 5, providing that joint authority given to a board of public officers may be exercised by a majority, does not affect the requirement that all should be given notice and opportunity to act. 26. Road and bridge act, § 119 (Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 121), is not complied with by a filing of the original certificate of levy with the town clerk and the sending of a copy to the county clerk. Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. People, 226 Ill. 557, 80 N. E. 1059.

27. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. People, 225 Ill. 418, 80 N. E. 303.

28. Under § 14 of the road and bridge act (Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 121). Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. People, 226 Ill. 557, 80 N. E. 1059.

29. A levy of a certain sum as a tax for "town purposes" is insufficient as to designation of purpose and is invalid. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. People, 225 Ill. 418, 80 N. E. 303.

30. Act April 28, 1905 (P. L. 1905, p. 360), property in certain townships to be used therein until the sum expended equals the township's subscription to the road is valid [31] and enforceable by mandamus at the instance of taxpayers of such townships [32] without regard to lapse of time.[33] A statute requiring a particular tax to be invested as a sinking fund for the discharge of certain township bonds does not require that such taxes be used to reimburse the township, the bonds having been paid.[34] Where the future expense of maintaining a highway [35] is excessively burdensome upon the town in which it is located and other towns are "greatly" benefited thereby,[36] it may be apportioned upon application to the superior court.[37] Where a bridge is constructed over a boundary stream between two towns in New York, each is liable for its just and equitable portion of the expense,[38] and where the towns apply to the supervisors for leave to build and to borrow money therefor which leave is granted and exercised, the towns are concluded by the apportionment made by the supervisors.[39]

§ 7. Claims.[40]—With a few exceptions,[41] claims in New York must be verified as required by statute [42] and submitted to the town board of audit,[43] whose decision thereon has the conclusiveness of a judgment,[44] but where the power to fix the amount of the claim is vested in another body, the board must audit it as fixed.[45] The auditing of an officer's account including an item for services is not an auditing of the creditor's claim,[46] nor is the rejection of an attorney's claim at a town meeting held to authorize the imposition of fees therein enumerated for revenue. Buck v. Douglass [N. J. Law] 65 A. 848.

31. Laws 1893, p. 430, c. 448, § 1, as amended by Laws 1895, p. 182, c. 131, held not unconstitutional as violating the provision for uniformity and equality of taxation. Jones v. Stokes County Com'rs [N. C.] 55 S. E. 427.

34. Laws 1895, p. 182, c. 131, § 2. Jones v. Stokes County Com'rs [N. C.] 55 S. E. 427.

35. Future expenses and cost of maintenance of an existing highway may be apportioned under Pub. St. 1901, c. 73, § 4. O'Neil v. Walpole [N. H.] 66 A. 119.

36. A petition for apportionment under Pub. St. 1901, c. 73, § 4, must show that the towns sought to be charged are "greatly" benefited by the road. O'Neal v. Walpole [N. H.] 66 A. 119.

37. Application for apportionment should be filed with the superior court and by it referred to the county commissioners, but a filing with the commissioners will not invalidate the proceedings where a hearing is fully given before the proper tribunal. O'Neal v. Walpole [N. H.] 66 A. 119.

38. Under County Law (Laws 1892, p. 1761, c. 686, §§ 68, 69), the towns are not necessarily liable for equal amounts. Colby v. Mt. Morris, 100 N. Y. S. 362.

39. Colby v. Mt. Morris, 100 N. Y. S. 362. Consent of a village within the town is not necessary to the action of the supervisors in apportioning the cost, such consent under County Law (Laws 1892, p. 1762, c. 686, § 70), not being required until a tax is to be imposed. Id.

40. See 6 C. L. 1712.

41. The cost of a bridge over a boundary stream between two towns constructed under a joint contract by the highway commissioners need not be audited (Colby v. Mt. Morris, 100 N. Y. S. 362), the rule that an action cannot be maintained against a town upon a cause of action ex contractu of which the town board has jurisdiction to audit not applying (Id.); but on the acceptance of the bridge by the commissioners and supervisors and the approval thereof by the state engineer, the towns become jointly liable under the terms of the contract (Id.).

42. Where the verification failed to state that the account was correct and that the services charged therein were in fact rendered, as required by Laws 1890, p. 1235, c. 569, § 167, no legal audit could be made. People v. King, 101 N. Y. S. 782.

43. The fact that a purchase of furniture for the clerk's office under Town Law (Laws 1890, p. 1224, c. 569, § 85), is with the consent of the board and for a fixed price, does not relieve the claim from the necessity of being audited, since the act requires that it be audited as other claims. Peck v. Catskill, 104 N. Y. S. 540.

44. Where a claim is audited and allowed under Town Law (Laws 1890, p. 1211, c. 569, § 162, as amended by Laws 1897, p. 610, c. 481), the supervisors who have received money for the payment of the same cannot refuse to pay it on the ground that it is erroneous. In re Mefford, 99 N. Y. S. 400.

45. The duty of fixing the town clerk's compensation for services rendered at an election other than at a town meeting being upon the town board under Laws 1896, p. 906, c. 909, § 18, the board of audit cannot pass upon the reasonableness of the same, but must audit the same as fixed. People v. Sippell, 102 N. Y. S. 69.

46. The auditing and disallowing of the account of the fire warden including an account for services rendered by one in fighting a fire is not an auditing and disallowance of the creditor's claim, especially where it does not show that he had notice or that it was presented on his behalf. People v. King, 101 N. Y. S. 782.

a rejection of the commissioner's claim for reimbursement therefor after payment.[47] A majority vote at a town meeting cannot make an illegal charge binding upon the town as against dissenting taxpayers.[48] The statutory notice of place and personal injury is sufficient if ordinary men by the use of reasonable diligence are able to fix the location therefrom.[49] Towns of Rhode Island are not liable for debts of school districts abolished by Act of 1903, unless they voluntarily assume the same.[50] A town is not liable for costs of a suit against a town officer upon a contract which is personally binding upon him and not upon the town, though he has a right of reimbursement.[51]

§ 8. Actions by and against.[52]—The propriety of bringing suits is a legislative question,[53] and where the electors can authorize the institution of a suit in the first instance, they may ratify one commenced without authority.[54] A town may prosecute actions for the protection of its highways.[55] Town auditors have power to retain counsel to defend claim against the town.[56] Laches may be envoked against a town.[57] Questions of parties [58] and admissibility of evidence are largely controlled by general principles.[59] An injunction restraining the payment of certain bonds to which the bondholders are not parties, is no defense to a suit thereon.[60] Matters in abatement must be timely raised as in actions generally.[61] In the absence of

49. A notice describing the place of injury as "on the Great Neck Road, so called, near Hedden place, so called, in the town of Waterford," is sufficient where the cause of injury is stated as a low limb of a tree extending over the highway, under Gen. St. Conn. 1902, § 2020. Town of Waterford v. Elson [C. C. A.] 149 F. 91.

51. Employment of an attorney by the highway commissioners. McCoy v. McClarty, 104 N. Y. S. 80. A taxpayer signing a request to the highway commissioners to oppose the opening of a certain proposed road is not thereby estopped from objecting to the charging of the town with the costs of a suit against the commissioners by an attorney employed in opposing the road for his fees and of an appeal. 54. Electors of a town having authority under Rev. Laws 1905, § 625, subd. 3, to direct the institution of actions on behalf of the town, may ratify a suit commenced without due authority. Town of Partridge v. Ring, 99 Minn. 286, 109 N. W. 248.

55. A township may by injunction restrain a gas company from using its highways for piping where the company has no legislative authority to occupy them. Landis Tp. v. Millville Gas-Light Co. [N. J. Eq.] 65 A. 716. And it may also prevent it from using pipes already laid but not connected. Id.

56. Town Law (Laws 1890, p. 1236, c. 569, § 174), providing that the town auditors shall have the power of the town board in receiving, auditing and rejecting claims, authorizes the retaining of an attorney, since the town board had such power under § 180, subd. 7. 57. Herrold v. Union Tp., 31 Pa. Super. Ct. 43. Where a judgment is entered by default on a note given by the overseers of the poor and eight different overseers recognize its validity, making some payments thereon, a motion to open the judgment five years after rendition will be denied where the judgment is only voidable. Id.

58. Where a borough is given control of the sidewalks and curb lines and the remainder of the highway is left in the town, the latter is a proper codefendant in an action to determine whether a certain strip is a part of the highway. Pinney v. Winsted [Conn.] 66 A. 337. In an action to set aside audits made by the county board of supervisors of claims against a town, the claimants are necessary parties, and it is error to deny complainant's motion to bring them in. Armstrong v. Fitch, 113 App. Div. 317, 99 N. Y. S. 471.

59. Where on the issue of payment of a bond due for over forty years it appears that it had been in the hands of two officers of the township who had access to the records, evidence of what the officers did in connection with the bond is admissible as tending to show payment and that the bond had been taken from the possession of the township. Collier v. St. Charles Tp. [Mich.] 14 Det. Leg. N. 30, 111 N. W. 340. Evidence held sufficient to support a finding that the bond had been paid. Id.

§ 1. Definition, and words or symbols available.[69]—A trade mark must be adopted for the purpose of identifying the origin, or ownership of the article to which it is attached.[70] An arbitrary word, not descriptive, may become a trade name,[71] and it is not necessary that it be utterly devoid of aptitude,[72] and so may geometric figures or symbols,[73] or a particular size, shape, and surface appearance of loaf of bread not essential to its economical manufacture.[74] Although a monopoly cannot be obtained in the use of a geographical name, yet where such name applied to a certain commodity has acquired a secondary meaning it cannot be used to describe a competing commodity,[75] nor can a proper name which has acquired such meaning be used except in a manner which will inform the public that the article is not that made by the person originally using the name,[76] and an hotel keeper may acquire the exclusive right to use the name of a town in connection with the word "Inn" to designate his hotel.[77] Words merely descriptive,[78] unless used long enough to become identified with the business,[79] or a telephone number for a particular department, are not subjects of trade mark.[80] A right to a trade mark may be obtained in the title for a portion of a comic section of a newspaper,[81] but the artist who originated the pictures has no rights, in the absence of a copyright, which is infringed by the subsequent use of similar characters in different scenes and incidents.[82]

A man may use his own name in any reasonable, honest, and fair manner,[83] even though it may result in deceiving intending purchasers of articles manufactured under a similar name,[84] but cannot so use it as to suggest, except as the mere name may do so, that his product is that of a rival.[85] Prior fraud in the use of his name will not deprive a person of the right to use the name in good faith as a trade name.[86] A retiring partner or stockholder in a corporation whose name is part of the firm or corporate trade mark may use his own name in connection with a similar business conducted by him.[87] A corporation may stamp its goods with the initials of its name, although similar initials form part of a trade mark of another corporation,[88] but may not use the initials as part of a device similar to the latter's trade mark.[89]

§ 2. Acquisition, transfer, and abandonment.[90]—One manufacturing a commodity which is sold as the product of another acquires no rights in the name under which the latter sells it, which will be protected against infringement by a third person.[91] An assignment of all property for the benefit of creditors, except that exempt from execution, conveys to the assignee the trade name and trade mark of the assignor,[92] but a sale of business and good will by a corporation does not prevent stockholders and officers thereof from using their names to constitute a similar designation for a subsequent competing company.[93]

A partner who owned a trade mark when entering the firm has the exclusive right thereto when the firm is dissolved,[94] but right to a trade mark used to identify a patented article expires with the patent,[95] and a proper name used to describe a copyrighted work becomes public property when the copyright expires.[96] Use of a trade mark upon manufactured product does not deprive the owner of a particular trade name also applied to such product,[97] and acquiescence by a son in his father's joint use of a trade mark was not forfeiture of his right to register the same.[98] Sale by third persons of other brands under the name of a trade named brand does not constitute an abandonment of such trade name, if without the owner's knowledge,[99] and the trade mark right to a title to a portion of a comic section of a newspaper is not lost by publishing the portion for several issues on the fourth page of the section instead of in its accustomed place on the first page.[1] A trade mark right in the name of a place as applied to goods put up in a certain form of package is lost where the owner uses the same package for goods of the same nature manufactured in a different place.[2]

§ 3. Infringement and unfair competition.[3]—A trade mark gives the owner no right to sell the article in violation of a subsequent statute,[4] nor does it give a monopoly on the sale of goods other than those produced by the owner.[5] A name, device, or label, to constitute an infringement of another, must be so similar as to deceive persons of ordinary intelligence using ordinary caution.[6] Such imitation of devices and designs as tends to mislead prospective purchasers is unfair competition though no trade mark is infringed,[7] as is the use of advertising which will mislead purchasers as to the identity of competitors,[8] and innocent use of another's trade name gives the users no right to continue after discovering the infringement,[9] but fraud alone is not sufficient to constitute unfair competition.[10] One manufacturing goods in competition with another cannot use, in designating other non-competitive goods, a term in which the latter person has acquired a trade name,[11] and a manufacturer of parts of a machine made by another person and designated by a trade mark must stamp such parts with his own name.[12] It constitutes infringement to use a foreign company's trade name in a certain state, although the company is not authorized to do business in that state,[13] and a wholesaler, whose goods as sold by retailers bear a fraudulent trade mark, may be enjoined although he did not mislead the retailers.[14] The fact that defendant's efforts gave plaintiff's trade name its value gives the former no right to use a similar name in a competing business.[15]

§ 4. Remedies and procedure.[16]—One seeking equitable relief against infringement must have clean hands.[17]

The right to injunction may be lost by laches,[18] and release by stipulation of all claim against the principal infringer will estop complainant from seeking equitable relief against one who made the infringing packages for the latter.[19]

One who has commenced suit for unfair competition may send circulars to the trade, stating that fact, together with his claims.[20]

A bill to enjoin the use of a trade mark must contain an averment that the trade mark belongs to plaintiff,[21] and with the evidence must show wherein the articles resemble each other,[22] and when plaintiff is found to have no rights capable of infringement, injunction will not issue against a defendant who has not answered.[23] It is no defense to a suit for unfair competition, brought by one who prior to the suit has been using the trade mark under color of title, that he acquired such title through an unlawful contract.[24]

Although defendant has ceased the use of the infringing devices, plaintiff may have an injunction when he may reasonably anticipate a recurrence of the offense,[25] and the preliminary injunction prayed for should issue in order to preserve the status and until the final hearing.[26]

Where the infringement was without wrongful intent, an account of profits will not be taken [27] unless the infringement is continued after the bill for injunction is filed.[28] When the account of profits is taken, the infringer is liable for all gross profits on sales of infringing goods, although there was no actual deception.[29] Punitive damages cannot be awarded for infringement of a trade mark, although nom-

§ 5. Statutory registration, regulation, and protection.[32]—A pictorial representation of the arms and seal of a state which simulates such arms and seal, though containing additions and variations,[33] or one simulating the seal of the department of justice, or the Great Seal of the United States, is not entitled to registration,[34] nor is an ordinary family surname,[35] nor a device in which a particular color, unconnected with any symbol or design, is the essential feature,[36] nor words descriptive of character or quality of goods.[37] To come within the proviso of Act Cong. Feb. 20, 1905, § 5, that a mark used exclusively for ten years may be registered, the applicant must show compliance with every condition precedent.[38] An application for registration filed under the Act of 1881 and rejected by the commissioner of patents on appeal, prior to 1905, is not a pending application under Act Feb. 20, 1905, §§ 14, 24,[39] but is pending where the examiner has not filed a decision at the time the latter act was passed.[40] Such an application may be amended for the purpose of determining whether it is a pending application within the latter act.[41]

The commissioner of patents has no authority to say how much of the embellishments used in connection with a desired trade mark shall form a part thereof,[42] but deceptive matter upon the label may be ground for refusing registration of trade mark contained thereon.[43]

An interference proceeding is limited to a determination as to priority of adoption and use,[44] and the one whose evidence shows prior user is entitled to the registration.[45]

TRADE UNIONS.

§ 1. Nature of Trade Unions (2142).
§ 2. The Union and the Public (2143).
§ 3. The Union and Its Members (2145).

§ 1. Nature of trade unions.[51]—An act of congress making it a criminal offense for any interstate carrier to require its employes or persons seeking employment to enter into an agreement not to join or remain in a labor organization or to discriminate against union employes is unconstitutional;[52] and even if it were not does not give an incorporated labor union a right of action to enjoin the carrier from interfering with or intimidating its representatives who are neither employes or seeking employment but merely soliciting members among the employes of the carrier.[53] An association of employers for the purpose of securing stability in the building trades by securing an agreement from the employes to settle differences by arbitration instead of a sympathetic strike is lawful.[54] An unincorporated labor union not being a legal entity cannot be sued as such,[55] and in an action at law against a trade union upon objection being made, all of its members must be joined as defendants,[56] but in equity where the members are numerous, a number of members may be made parties defendant as representatives of the class.[57] Though a trade union may not be recognized as an entity separate from its members and cannot sue or be sued in its common name, an injunction may properly be directed against it which will bind all of its members who have knowledge of it,[58] but in such case the union is not subject to a fine for contempt.[59] Individual members of a labor union who are active participants in its management may be punished for a contempt committed by the organization.[60]

Union labels.—The right of a trade union to an exclusive property in a label is governed by statute in various states.[61] Under a statute protecting labels announcing that the articles to which they are attached were manufactured by the members of a union, such announcement must be made in clear and explicit language on the face of the label,[62] and a label defective in this respect cannot be remedied by proof that it was used with the intention of expressing the fact that such articles were manufactured by the members of the union and that the public so understood it.[63] Where a labor union adopts and registers a label and transmits it to subordinate unions, it adopts it for the purpose of designating the products of its members within the New York statute protecting such labels,[64] and though that act prohibits an assignment of the label, it does not prohibit a license to such subordinate bodies or branches to use it in a specified locality,[65] and an action for its infringement may be brought by such licensee,[66] though both the union adopting the label and its licensee may join as plaintiffs.[67] The Pennsylvania act for the protection of union labels has been held to be valid,[68] and under it the crime of selling goods containing a counterfeit label may be prosecuted in the county where the sale is consummated.[69] A label used by a union to denote that articles to which it is attached were manufactured by union labor is not a trade mark under the Connecticut statute.[70]

§ 2. The union and the public.[71]—Labor unions have the right to strike, so long as the strike is peaceable,[72] without respect to motive,[73] unless intent is made material by statute,[74] and an agreement to strike is not a conspiracy, neither the act itself nor the manner of doing it being unlawful.[75] They have the right to persuade others to join them,[76] but may not resort to intimidation for that purpose,[77]

72. A combination of unions and their members to strike and further to enforce the strike and if possible to bring employers to terms by preventing them from obtaining other workmen to replace the strikers is not unlawful when grounded upon the economic advancement of its members. Allis-Chalmers Co. v. Iron Molders' Union No. 125, 150 F. 155.

73. Booth v. Burgess [N. J. Eq.] 65 A. 226.

74. A strike for the purpose of boycotting a certain person's goods with intent to injure him in his business is unlawful under the Illinois statutes. Piano & Organ Workers' International Union v. Piano & Organ Supply Co., 124 Ill. App. 353.

75. Jetton-Dekle Lumber Co. v. Mather [Fla.] 43 So. 590.

76. To induce a man, by argument and by giving him money, to quit his work when he can do so without breaking a contract, there being no compulsion of any sort, no false charges against his employer, and no ill-feeling against his employer, is not unlawful persuasion. Iron Molders' Union v. Greenwald Co., 4 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 180. Peaceable persuasion to induce fellow workmen to leave their employment may be resorted to. Pope Motor Car Co. v. Keegan, 150 F. 148. Members of labor unions may for the purpose of strengthening their organization persuade and induce others in the same occupation to join their union, and as a means to that end refuse to allow their members to work in places where nonunion men are employed. Allis-Chalmers Co. v. Iron Molders' Union No. 125, 150 F. 155.

77. Persuasion must be by reason and not by threat or violence or intimidation. Pope Motor Car Co. v. Keegan 150 F. 148.

and for the purposes of such persuasion picketing is permissible so long as it is peaceable and not of such a character as to result in intimidation.[78] In considering the conduct of the persons charged with unlawful persuasion, the motives with which the person acted are immaterial, if it appears that such person was in the exercise of a clear legal right or in the performance of a duty.[79] Coercion may consist in a threat by word or act of an individual or by a combination of persons to do something unlawful, reasonably calculated to make the person threatened act or refrain from acting, in which case the nature of the act and the coercion determine the liability, or it may consist in a request or persuasion by or on behalf of a combination of persons resulting in coercion of the will from mere force of numbers, in which case liability is determined by the conspiracy or concerted action and the coercion.[80] The peaceable enforcement by a labor union of its rules by expelling members continuing to work in establishments employing nonunion labor will not be enjoined.[81] But while a peaceable boycott does not constitute a remediable wrong,[82] where the boycott is not voluntary but coercive, equity will restrain it.[83] A strike for the purpose of coercing a person with whom the union has no dispute is unlawful.[84] The members of a union may lawfully refuse to work unless other work germane to their particular line of employment is given to them,[85] hence a contract between a builder's association and a labor union as to certain ancillary lines of work is not invalid as against public policy, though it lessens the opportunity for independent contracting.[86] Strikers not shown to have participated in the acts of violence or intimidation sought to be enjoined will not be restrained even

78. It is unlawful for strikers to assemble in great numbers for the purpose of picketing or to establish many picketing stations in the same neighborhood. Pope Motor Car Co. v. Keegan 150 F. 148. Where peaceful picketing develops into strong, persistent, and organized persuasion, followed by hints of injury, veiled threats, abusive or offensive language, and occasional instances of assault and personal violence, the picketing ceases to be lawful and comes within the ban of an injunction prohibiting coercion and intimidation. Allis-Chalmers Co. v. Iron Molders' Union No. 125, 150 F. 155. Acts of pickets in carrying banners in front of complainant's place of business upon which were printed: "Unfair firm reduced wages of employes 50 cents per day. Please don't patronize," held unlawful and enjoined. Goldberg v. Stablemen's Union Local No. 8760 [Cal.] 86 P. 806. A combination or concert of action may render picketing unlawful as coercive without such a threat of harm as would be necessary to make intimidation by one illegal. Allis-Chalmers Co. v. Iron Molders' Union No. 125, 150 F. 155.

79. Iron Molders' Union v. Greenwald Co., 4 Ohio N. P. (N. S.) 161. Where the record shows that the acts of which the defendant strikers and their leaders have been found guilty consisted in peacefully enticing employes to leave their employment when not under contract to remain, and in giving them railroad tickets and money for traveling expenses to go to another city with their families, a finding that such conduct was unlawful persuasion and in contempt of a previous order of court which enjoined against unlawful persuasion will be reversed on the ground that the defendants were acting within their rights. 82. Booth v. Burgess [N. J. Eq.] 65 A. 226.

83. Where an employer declared an open shop and his employes struck a boycott directed toward coercing union employes of customers of plaintiff to refuse to handle his goods on penalty of being required to strike or be expelled from their unions, the boycott was held an infringement upon a free market and was enjoined. Booth v. Burgess [N. J. Eqq.] 65 A. 226. Notice reading "Organized Labor and Friends: Dont drink scab beer," naming various kinds of beer, among them complainant's calling it "unfair" and advising against its use as a protection to health, held to constitute a boycott which would be enjoined. Seattle Brewing & Malting Co. v. Hansen, 144 F. 1011.

84. Union men employed by a contractor cannot lawfully strike because he is constructing a building other than that upon which they are working, upon which certain work is being done by nonunion men employed by the owners of such building, the object being to indirectly coerce the owners to employ union men. Pickett v. Walsh [Mass.] 78 N. E. 753.

85. Bricklayers and masons may refuse to lay brick or stone unless also given the work of painting such brick or stone work, although compliance with their demands will destroy the painters' business and though the latter may be able to do the work more cheaply and with less liability to the contractor. Pickett v. Walsh [Mass.] 78 N. E. 753.

86. National Fireproofing Co. v. Mason Builders' Ass'n, 145 F. 260.

though they would not be harmed by the issuance of the injunction,[87] but in Illinois it is held that an injunction will not be refused merely because there is no evidence to connect a defendant with the acts charged where there is reasonable ground to fear his participation therein.[88]

The action of a trade union through its representative in procuring the discharge of a nonunion employe by threatening or intimidating his employer may be the basis for an action for damages against the union by the discharged employe,[89] and in such a case, to entitle the plaintiff to a joint verdict against the union and its representative, no further proof is required than that they were joint tort feasors in procuring his discharge by such means.[90] Punitive damages may be recovered,[91] and proof of malice other than that which the law might imply from the unlawful act proved is unnecessary.[92] A statute abolishing the crime of conspiracy as to labor disputes, if the act sought to be enjoined could lawfully have been done by an individual, does not deprive the court of the power to enjoin acts of pickets resulting in intimidation,[93] and if it did it would be unconstitutional as depriving a person of the right to acquire, possess, enjoy, and protect property.[94]

§ 3. The union and its members.[95]—Membership in a trade is itself a personal right[96] of which a member cannot be deprived or otherwise punished except in the manner provided for by the law,[97] unless he assents to the proceedings under which punishment was imposed.[98] A member of a trade union cannot be expelled therefrom for an offense which is not punishable by expulsion according to the by-laws and constitution of the union.[99] Failure of a member to appear on the day set for his trial does not give the union the right to sentence him to expulsion where the offense with which he is charged is not so punishable,[1] nor does the affirmance of an order of expulsion by a higher tribunal within the union on appeal validate the order.[2] By enumerating certain offenses for which the penalty of expulsion may be imposed, the right to inflict such penalty for any other offense is impliedly excluded.[3] Remedies provided for within the union must be exhausted before appeal to the courts for relief can be had.[4] Unions have a right to prescribe the lines of

Brennan v. United Hatters [N. J. Err. & App.] 65 A. 165.

98. Where the action of a vigilance committee in imposing a fine upon a member was void because of a failure to comply with the by-laws, an appeal to the union is not an assent to the jurisdiction of such committee. Brennan v. United Hatters [N. J. Err. & App.] 65 A. 165.

3. And a further provision that "for all other offenses" the penalty shall be a fine is a positive declaration that an unnamed offense is punishable by a fine only. Dingwall v. Amalgamated Ass'n [Cal. App.] 88 P. 597.

4. Where complainant appealed to a higher tribunal within the union from an order of a local union expelling him for refusal to pay a fine imposed, he is not entitled to an injunction restraining the local work which shall constitute their trade [5] and to refuse to admit to membership persons who do not possess all qualifications to the trade as prescribed by them.[6] The action of a trade union in procuring the discharge from his employment of one of its members because of his refusal to pay a fine unlawfully imposed by it is actionable,[7] and the fact that the union constituted a monopoly does not render such a member in pari delicto so as to deprive him of his right to damages.[8]

TREATIES.[10]

The United States may acquire territory by treaty,[11] and it is not essential that it contain technical words of conveyance,[12] or that the description be definite as to boundaries if sufficient for identification.[13] The Isle of Pines, however, did not become domestic territory under the treaty of peace with Spain but was merely held in trust for the inhabitants thereof.[14] An unauthorized treaty entered into by the executive department may be rendered valid by ratification.[15] Where the time fixed by a convention for the treaty to become operative is changed by a Senate amendment, the latter controls,[16] and where such amendment leaves it to congress to make the treaty effective, a congressional act in respect thereto is determinative of the question.[17] One voluntarily rendering services under a void contract of employ-union from informing his employer of his expulsion, the appeal being still pending and the fine not having been paid. Harris v. Detroit Typographical Union No. 18, 144 Mich. 422, 108 N. W. 362.

5. Stone masons and bricklayers may include pointing as part of their trade and declare that it shall not be considered a separate trade. Pickett v. Walsh [Mass.] 78 N. E. 753.

6. Bricklayers and stonemasons may refuse to allow pointers to join the union, though pointing is declared part of the trade where they do not possess other necessary qualifications. Pickett v. Walsh [Mass.] 78 N. E. 753.

7. Fine imposed and accused required to give up his place of employment for one year without a trial upon written charge and notice as required by the by-laws. Brennan v. United Hatters [N. J. Err. & App.] 65 A. 165.

8. All hat manufacturers in a certain district had agreed to employ none but union men, and upon being unlawfully deprived of membership in a union plaintiff was discharged pursuant to that agreement. Brennan v. United Hatters [N. J. Err. & App.] 65 A. 165.

TRESPASS.[22]

§ 1. Acts Constituting Trespass and Right of Action Therefor (2147). It is Trespass to the Person (2148). Right of Entry and Matters of Justification (2148). Parties in the Tort (2149).
§ 2. Actions (2150).
A. At Law (2150). Actual Possession or Title (2150). Joint Actions (2151). Pleading, Issues, and Proof (2151). Evidence (2152). Instructions and Jury Questions (2153). Verdict and Judgment (2153).
B. In Equity (2153).
§ 3. Damages and Penalties (2155). Punitive (2156). Multifold (2156).
§ 4. Criminal Liability (2156).
§ 5. Trespass to Try Title (2157).

§ 1. Acts constituting trespass and right of action therefor.[23]—Trespass to property is the unlawful invasion[24] of another's possessory rights therein,[25] and effect to the convention. United States v. American Sugar Refining Co., 202 U. S. 563, 50 Law. Ed. 1149.

S. Rev. Stat. §§ 5272, 5275, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, pp. 3595, 3596, and the manifest scope and object of the treaty. Johnson v. Browne, 205 U. S. 309, 51 Law. Ed. 816.

21. Johnson v. Browne, 205 U. S. 309, 51 Law. Ed. 816. Omission from the extradition treaty of July 12, 1889 (26 Stat. at L. 1508) of the words "or be punished" of the provision that the person extradited shall not be tried for any other offense than that for which he was surrendered, held not to repeal U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 5272, 5275, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, pp. 3595, 3596, prohibiting such punishment. Id.

24. If a city negligently permits a sewer vent to become closed causing water to back upon abutting property, it is liable in trespass. Herr v. Altoona, 31 Pa. Super. Ct. 375. Incidental injury resulting from a lawful use of adjoining property, in the absence of negligence, gives no cause of action (Thurmond v. Ash Grove White Lime Ass'n [Mo. App.] 102 S. W. 617), as where a railroad company in constructing a roadbed turned a stream aside and flooded plaintiff's land upon the giving way of the embankment (Gordon v. Ellenville & K. R. Co., 104 N. Y. S. 702). Evidence of negligence in blasting, creating vibrations, which loosened plaster on plaintiff's house and cistern, held to make a case for the jury. Thurmond v. Ash Grove White Lime Ass'n [Mo. App.] 102 S. W. 617.

25. Owner of realty is entitled to its possession undisturbed, and every entry thereon, at common law, constitutes trespass. Wood v. Snider [N. Y.] 79 N. E. 858. Evidence held sufficient to sustain a finding that plaintiff had failed to establish an exclusive right of possession against defendants. Country Club Land Ass'n v. Lohbauer [N. Y.] 79 N. E. 844.

Invasion of boundaries marked by the return of processioners after the same has been made the judgment of the superior court on protest thereto. Martin v. Patillo, 126 Ga. 436, 55 S. E. 240. Entry of a corporation having power to condemn before exercising the right (Ingleside Mfg. Co. v. Charleston Light & Water Co. [S. C.] 56 S. E. 664), as the entry and erection of telegraph poles by a telegraph company (Postal Telegraph Cable Co. v. Kuhnen [Ga.] 55 S. E. 967). Where defendant, claiming authority from the owner of the land on which plaintiff was conducting a refreshment stand, forcibly and unlawfully removed plaintiff's chattels from the land but exercised no further dominion, he is liable in trespass and not in conversion. Hammond v. Sullivan, 112 App. Div. 788, 99 N. Y. S. 472.

A petition construed as alleging a cause of action in trespass for taking away per-hence plaintiff must have possession [28] and it must be disturbed by defendant.[27] Generally title is only incidentally involved,[28] but it may be litigated in some states under appropriate pleadings.[29] Where the invasion is wrongful in itself, negligence,[30] force,[31] malice or good faith,[32] extent of the damage,[33] and the nature of the entry,[34] are not material to the rights of action. An inadvertant entry upon adjoining lands [35] by animals being driven along a public highway creates no common-law liability,[36] and the right of action generally for entry upon unenclosed lands has been limited by statute in many states.[37] Trespass lies to recover mesne profits accruing during the adverse possession of another,[38] and for the destruction of the estate.[39] Frequently the action of trespass may be waived and another remedy pursued.[40]

It is trespass to the person [41] to commit any assault or direct physical injury.[42]

Right of entry and matters of justification.[43]—No liability attaches for an entry under an easement [44] or license [45] voluntarily given [46] by one having authority to grant the same,[47] if the entry is for the licensed purpose [48] and the authority is not sonal property and not an action for malicious use of process. Gray v. Joiner [Ga.] 56 S. E. 752.

26. The attornment of plaintiff's tenant to the defendant without notice to plaintiff does not destroy plaintiff's posession. Buford v. Christian [Ala.] 42 So. 997. An owner not in possession cannot recover for mere entry (Thurmond v. Ash Grove White Lime Ass'n [Mo. App.] 102 S. W. 617), but he may recover for injury to the freehold (Id.). The gist of the action of trespass to personal property being the disturbance of possession, plaintiff is not bound to show that the legal title is in him or that it was not in any other person. Terry v. Williams [Ala.] 41 So. 804.

27. Where goods are loaded on cars by the shipper, the railroad company is not liable in trespass for shipping the same, even after notice. Nashville, etc., R. Co. v. Walley [Ala.] 41 So. 134.

28. Where plaintiff relies on possession alone in trespass before a justice, title to realty is not involved so as to require a transfer under 2 Mills' Ann. St. § 2630, to the district court. Patrick v. Brown [Colo.] 85 P. 325. Does not involve boundary or title though a plea of liberum tenementum is imposed, so that a writ of error will lie from the supreme court of appeals. Dickinson v. Mankin [W. Va.] 56 S. E. 824.

29. Boundary dispute. Fincannon v. Sudderth [N. C.] 57 S. E. 337. Where, in trespass for cutting trees brought by one against another claiming the adjoining land by adverse possession, the only dispute is as to the boundary, defendant's ownership to the entire tract is not in issue. Clay City Nat. Bk. v. Townsend, 30 Ky. L. R. 1219, 100 S. W. 1196.

30. Telephone company unlawfully cut a tree in front of plaintiff's premises. Betz v. Kansas City Home Tel. Co. [Mo. App.] 97 S. W. 207.

31. Where immediate possession of goods is obtained under a void writ to show cause why possession should not be given by threats, it is not material that force was not used in obtaining the keys. Chicago Title & Trust Co. v. Core, 223 Ill. 58, 79 N. E. 108.

32. Seizing property under an illegal process. Gray v. Joiner [Ga.] 56 S. E. 752.

33. Direct invasion is actionable without regard to actual damages, nominal being presumed. Whittaker v. Stangvick [Minn.] 111 N. W. 295.

34. Falling of shot on plaintiff's land from guns fired on a lake held trespass. Whittaker v. Stangvick [Minn.] 111 N. W. 295.

35. Exemption does not apply to lands not adjoining. Wood v. Snider [N. Y.] 79 N. E. 858.

36. Owner must immediately pursue and drive them back to the highway. Wood v. Snider [N. Y.] 79 N. E. 858.

37. Failure to fence renders the owner remediless under Laws 1890, p. 1224, c. 569, § 100, as amended by Laws 1892, p. 140, c. 92, and Laws 1890, p. 1225, c. 569, § 101, only for trespasses by cattle lawfully upon the adjoining property, and hence recovery may be had for cattle escaping from the highway onto the adjoining property and hence onto the property. Wood v. Snider [N. Y.] 79 N. E. 858. As to liability of owners of trespassing animals generally, see Animals, 7 C. L. 120.

38. Trespass, and not use and occupation (Carrigg v. Mechanics' Sav. Bank [Iowa] 111 N. W. 329), or assumpsit, is the proper remedy in favor of a successful ejectment plaintiff (Reilly v. Crown Petroleum Co., 213 Pa. 595, 63 A. 253).

39. Recovery in ejectment being limited by Code 1896, § 1555, to mesne profits, plaintiff may thereafter maintain trespass for the destruction of trees. Henry v. Davis [Ala.] 43 So. 122.

47. Right of entry and occupation from a stranger to the title is no defense. Remington v. State, 101 N. Y. S. 952. Railroad company has no power to grant the privi-

exceeded.[49] A power in a chattel mortgage to take possession upon default does not authorize a forcible taking.[50] A state may, in cases of exigency and overwhelming necessity,[51] and in the exercise of eminent domain,[52] invade private property without incurring a liability in trespass, nor is it liable for incidental and preliminary damages resulting in the prosecution of a public work,[53] nor can governmental acts be the subject of an action.[54] Where a trespass has been committed by its agents, a state cannot ratify the same and relieve them from their personal liability,[55] and the party injured is not limited by the New York Act of 1904 to a presentment of his claim to the court of claims.[56] The extending of the branches of a tree over the boundary line does not authorize the removal of the trunk standing wholly upon the owner's land.[57] An officer voluntarily acting[58] or exceeding his authority in executing a writ is liable ab initio,[59] unless the tort is waived.[60] The fact that one who actively directed a trespass was acting as an agent of another does not relieve him.[61] The right of one cotenant to maintain trespass against another is elsewhere treated.[62]

Parties in the tort.[63]—One whose act ordinarily and naturally causes a trespass is liable therefor,[64] though one advising a constable that he has a right to levy has lege of its right of way to a private telephone company. Pittock v. Telegraph Co., 31 Pa. Super. Ct. 589. A special plea by a telegraph company that plaintiff had granted trackage, etc., to a certain railroad, and permission from its successor to construct the line, held not to justify. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Dickens [Ala.] 41 So. 469.

48. Owner of land over which a railroad right of way passes may maintain trespass against a telephone company using the right of way. Pittock v. Tel. Co., 31 Pa. Super. Ct. 589.

49. In Maryland, one entering under authority to do particular acts becomes a trespasser ab initio if he exceeds his authority, and recovery may be had in quare clausum fregit. Haines' Exr's v. Haines [Md.] 64 A. 1044. Grant to a telephone company of the right to construct and maintain a line "over and along" a tract, "including necessary poles along the roads adjoining the track," held to give a right to construct along highways running through the tract and not across the land. Morrison v. American Tel. & T. Co., 101 N. Y. S. 140.

50. As breaking into a building to obtain the property. Gilliland v. Martin [Ala.] 42 So. 7.

51. Where a county line boundary dispute had existed for over a hundred years, though involving the jurisdiction of courts, the right of franchise, and the power of taxation, it presents no such exigency or necessity as to authorize an arbitrary invasion of private property in settling the dispute. Litchfield v. Pond, 186 N. Y. 66, 78 N. E. 719.

52. Laws 1902, p. 1125, c. 473, directing the state engineer to "locate, establish, and permanently mark on the ground" a boundary line between certain counties, held not to authorize the taking of private property by eminent domain. Litchfield v. Pond, 186 N. Y. 66, 78 N. E. 719. A statute authorizing the taking of property under eminent domain is no defense to a trespass committed prior thereto. Remington v. State, 101 N. Y. S. 952. See Eminent Domain, 7 C. L. 1276.

53. Litchfield v. Pond, 186 N. Y. 66, 78 N. E. 719. Cutting of a slash three and one-half miles in length and from five to twenty-five feet in width, as a permanent base line for the survey of a county line, held not a mere incidental and preliminary damage. Id. Injury to property from grading of street must be recovered in the statutory remedy. Herr v. Altoona 31 Pa. Super. Ct. 375. A city is not guilty of trespass in removing sidewalks in the laying of sewers. City of Chicago v. Noonan, 121 Ill. App. 185.

55. Litchfield v. Pond, 186 N. Y. 66, 78 N. E. 719. Laws 1903, p. 698, c. 348, providing for the making of surveys and performing of the work deemed necessary by the state engineer in locating a certain county boundary dispute and authorizing entry upon private lands and the performance of all acts necessary to complete the survey, subject to liability for all damages, held not retroactive. Id.

56. Where a state engineer and assistants threaten to commit an unjustifiable trespass in locating a county line, injunction will lie. Litchfield v. Pond, 186 N. Y. 66, 78 N. E. 719.

57. Morgan v. Langford, 126 Ga. 58, 54 S. E. 818.

58. Ministerial officers laying out a road without an order from the township board. Mulligan v. Martin [Mo. App.] 102 S. W. 59.

59. Where an officer under a writ to attach goods to the amount of $110 proceeded to a lunch room of the debtor, ordered the debtor and her agent out of the store, excluded customers, and locked the place, he is a trespasser. Walsh v. Brown [Mass.] 80 N. E. 465.

60. Where an officer commits trespass in levying an execution, the debtor does not waive the wrong by giving a bond to dissolve the writ. Walsh v. Brown [Mass.] 80 N. E. 465.

been held not liable for a wrongful levy.[65] An agent or servant who commits a trespass [66] and the master, if the act is within the limits of the servant's employment [67] or done under his express direction,[68] are liable therefor.

§ 2. Actions. A. At law.[69]—The procurement of an injunction does not deprive plaintiff of his right of action for damages accruing during the life thereof from the former trespass.[70] Where a trespass is a continuing one, recovery may be had for acts done on different days.[71] In Arkansas trespass cannot be maintained where there is a pending condemnation proceeding in which the same damages may be awarded.[72] While a life tenant cannot maintain trespass de bonis for the cutting and removing of trees,[73] he may bring quare clausum fregit.[74] A conveyance does not destroy an existing right of action for trespass to the property,[75] and the grantee cannot recover therefor.[76]

Trespass to realty is a local action and must generally be brought in the county where the land lies.[77]

The action must be brought within the statutory period of limitations,[78] and, where the trespass is of a permanent character,[79] a right of action for the entire damage arises at once.[80]

Cotenants should join in actions for trespass to the common property.[81]

Actual possession or title.[82]—Plaintiff must show actual possession [83] or title [84]

65. Stallings v. Gilbreath [Ala.] 41 So. 423.

66. Baker v. Davis [Ga.] 57 S. E. 62. One who commits a trespass for or on behalf of a corporation is himself liable therefor. Burns v. Horkan, 126 Ga. 161, 54 S. E. 946.

67. Although a master instructed his servants to cut trees of a certain size, he is liable for smaller trees cut, it not appearing that it was not necessary to cut them in the removal of the larger ones. Avery v. White [Conn.] 66 A. 517.

77. City of Baltimore v. Meredith's Ford & Jarrettsville Turnpike Co [Md.] 65 A. 35. Action must be so brought though defendant is a municipality. Id.

78. Action for trespass in Georgia is not barred if brought within four years. Burns v. Horkan, 126 Ga. 161, 54 S. E. 946. Trespass to real property within Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 4800, subd. 1, allowing actions to be brought within three years, is direct physical invasion, and not consequential injuries resulting from a change of grade. Denney v. Everett [Wash.] 89 P. 934. An action for trespass is not changed in character so as to render Code Civ. Proc. § 338, subd. 2, fixing the period of limitations for trespasses inapplicable, by a prayer for alternative injunctive relief. Williams v. Southern Pac. R. Co. [Cal.] 89 P. 599.

79. Construction of a railroad. Williams v. Southern Pac. R. Co. [Cal.] 89 P. 599.

80. Being permanent in character, the trespass is not regarded as a continuing one so as to authorize a recovery for damages accruing within the period of limitations without regard to the time of original entry. Williams v. Southern Pac. R. Co. [Cal.] 89 P. 599.

81. While tenants in common must join in actions for trespass, a nonjoinder can be taken advantage of only by plea in abatement or by way of apportionment of damages. Cummings & Co. v. Masterson [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 33, 93 S. W. 500.

82. See 6 C. L. 1723.

83. Patrick v. Brown [Colo.] 85 P. 325; Paraffine Oil Co. v. Berry [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 715, 93 S. W. 1089. Or constructive. Gordner v. Blades Lumber Co. [N. C.] 56 S. E. 695. Actual possession is good as against a trespasser who has no title and no prior possession or claim under one having such possession. Maxfield v. White River Lumber Co. [N. H.] 65 A. 832. A grantee under a void deed who goes upon the land and finds trespassers thereon cutting timber does not have actual possession. Gordner v. Blades Lumber Co. [N. C.] 56 S. E. 695.

84. A chain of title not originating in one shown to have had title does not, in the absence of twenty-one years of continuous possession thereunder, show title so as to give constructive possession. Gordner v. Blades Lumber Co. [N. C.] 56 S. E. 695. Evidence held insufficient to sustain a survey under which plaintiff claimed title. Kim-at the time of trespass,[85] proof of true ownership being required of a plaintiff out of possession by statute in Georgia.[86] Title may be shown by proof of a superior title from a common grantor.[87]

Joint actions.[88]—In quare clausum fregit, allegations of acts amounting to a a trespass vi et armis, which form a compentent part of the wrong, may be joined therewith.[89]

Pleading, issues, and proof.[90]—Counts in trespass de bonis asportatis substantially in the form of the Alabama statute are sufficient.[91] The property trespassed upon must be identified,[92] but the ownership thereof may be pleaded by implication.[93] All ultimate facts[94] must be pleaded, but not evidentiary facts.[95] Plaintiff need not attach an abstract of title to his petition.[96]

Matters of justification or excuse must be specificially pleaded,[97] but not facts which do not justify but go merely in mitigation of damages.[98] A license may be shown under the general issue on the issue of damages.[99] A plea of not guilty is generally held to put in issue plaintiff's title,[1] but the contrary rule seems to prevail in Texas.[2] Inconsistent defenses must not be alleged.[3] ball v. McKee [Cal.] 86 P. 1089. Evidence of the boundaries held so indefinite as to authorize a finding that defendant committed no trespass on plaintiff's land. Taylor v. Woolum, 30 Ky. L. R. 378, 98 S. W. 1006. Ownership and possession of a house on the land of another being shown, it will not be presumed that it was wrongfully located thereon so as to vest title in the land-owner. Jones v. Great Northern R. Co. [Minn.] 110 N. W. 260.

85. A grant from the state does not give constructive possession prior thereto. Gordner v. Blades Lumber Co. [N. C.] 56 S. E. 695. A judgment in ejectment only shows a right of possession in plaintiff as of the date of commencing the action, hence plaintiff cannot rely thereon as proof of right to possession prior thereto. Henry v. Davis [Ala.] 43 So. 122. Evidence that plaintiff made arrangements with a third party to hold the land for him as a tenant, but which does not fix the time of the year when made, or when possession was taken by the tenant, does not show actual possession at the time of trespass. Gordner v. Blades Lumber Co. [N. C.] 56 S. E. 695.

86. Civ. Code 1895, § 3877. Moore v. Vickers, 126 Ga. 42, 54 S. E. 814. Ownership of timber is not shown by proof that plaintiff and defendant's grantor were asserting independent title to the land upon which the timber was growing, and that as a compromise plaintiff conveyed the land to defendant's grantor reserving title to the timber, parties not claiming under the same grantor. Id.

87. Makes at least a prima facie case. Garbutt Lumber Co. v. Wall, 126 Ga. 172, 54 S. E. 944. Where plaintiff makes it affirmatively appear by his pleadings and proof that defendant claims title from one from whom plaintiff has a superior title, and further proves an act of trespass, it is error to grant a nonsuit. 92. A count of the complaint alleging that a trespass was committed on the property of plaintiff, "a description of which is hereto attached, marked 'Exhibit A' and made a part hereof, that portion of the same which lies adjacent to the road bed of the S. Railroad Company," sufficiently describes the property though it does not specify what portion of the premises was trespassed upon. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Dickens [Ala.] 41 So. 469.

93. Ownership of land in street pleaded by alleging ownership of abutting lot. Betz v. Kansas City Home Tel. Co. [Mo. App.] 97 S. W. 207.

94. Petition alleging that defendant has had exclusive possession and use of plaintiff's land for a stated time held to allege a cause of action, especially where the question was raised by motion to exclude all evidence. Simmonds v. Richards [Kan.] 86 P. 452.

95. Not necessary to plead the evidence by which plaintiff expects to prove that the trespass was on his land. McConahy v. Allegheny R. R. Co., 31 Pa. Super. Ct. 215. Plaintiff may show cancellation of title bond under which defendant claims without pleading the same. Asher v. Helton [Ky.] 101 S. W. 350.

96. Burns v. Horkan, 126 Ga. 161, 54 S. E. 946; James v. Saunders [Ga.] 56 S. E. 491. Civ. Code 1895, § 4927, has reference only to applications for injunction. Id. Hence error to dismiss an action for injunction and damages for failure to attach such abstract where plaintiff abandoned his claim for injunction. Id.

99. Chicago Title & Trust Co. v. Core, 223 Ill. 58, 79 N. E. 108.

1. Under the plea of not guilty in trespass quare clausum fregit, defendant may Preliminary statements that defendant is informed and believes plaintiff's complaint to be untrue do not vitiate a positive denial.[4]

If defendant pleads a prescriptive right in justification, plaintiff may reply by alleging acts in excess thereof.[5]

Plaintiff must prove all the material allegations of the complaint[6] including title to the land[7] and a trespass by defendant,[8] unless admitted by the answer.[9] In New York one may raise a presumption of ownership to unoccupied lands by showing an unbroken chain of title thereto for thirty years next preceding,[10] which can only be overcome by proof of ownership in another.[11] The burden of impeaching a license is on plaintiff.[12]

Evidence.[13]—The general rules of evidence respecting relevancy,[14] primary and secondary evidence,[15] opinion testimony,[16] res gestae,[17] and proof of value,[18] are applicable. Where the trespass is alleged to consist of acts in excess of a prescriptive right, evidence characterizing the trespass is admissible.[19] Trespasses subsequent to the filing of the petition cannot be shown.[20] Evidence of fraud impeaching an instrument under which defendant justifies is admissible.[21] Nonresponsive answers[22] may be stricken.

prove a freehold in himself. Dickinson v. Mankin [W. Va.] 56 S. E. 824.

2. Hence defendant cannot show an outstanding title. Paraffine Oil Co. v. Berry [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 715, 93 S. W. 1089.

3. Denied the cutting of the tree but alleged that if defendant did cut it, such action was necessary. Betz v. Kansas City Home Tel. Co. [Mo. App.] 97 S. W. 207.

4. An answer to plaintiff's allegations of ownership and trespass that defendant is advised, informed, and believes that plaintiff's complaint is not true, and therefore denies the same, is sufficient to raise the issue of ownership and trespass. Gordner v. Blades Lumber Co. [N. C.] 56 S. E. 695.

5. Especially under Pub. Gen. Laws, art. 75, § 24, subsec. 78. Haines' Ex'rs v. Haines [Md.] 64 A. 1044.

6. In trespass for the destruction of a wall alleged to stand upon the land of plaintiff, failure to so prove, the fact being put in issue, defeats recovery. Howie v. California Brewery Co. [Mont.] 88 P. 1007.

7. The only issue being the location of the boundary line between the parties' land, the burden is on plaintiff to show title to the property trespassed upon. Clark v. Case, 144 Mich. 148, 13 Det. Leg. N. 193, 107 N. W. 893.

8. Testimony of defendant that he never authorized any one to go upon plaintiff's land held insufficient to overcome the presumption that the wagons used in the trespass and bearing his name were in his employ, especially where his foreman was not called. Leubuscher v. Bailey, 102 N. Y. S. 756.

9. Where defendants answer by a joint plea of justification, neither can complain that he was not connected with the trespass. Asher v. Helton [Ky.] 101 S. W. 350.

10. One may claim the presumption of ownership afforded by Code Civ. Proc. § 960, although the original deed in his chain was not exact as to one boundary, where the land was of so little value as to render it improbable that all the land was not conveyed. Cravath v. Baylis, 113 App. Div. 666, 99 N. Y. S. 973.

11. Mere isolated acts of user held insufficient. Cravath v. Baylis, 113 App. Div. 666, 99 N. Y. S. 973.

12. Claimed to have been procured by fraud. Mason v. Postal Tel. Cable Co., 74 S. C. 557, 54 S. E. 763.

13. See 6 C. L. 1725.

14. In an action for cutting trees, evidence as to the size of trees cut on adjoining lots, of which defendant claimed plaintiff's lot was a part, and of what he paid the choppers, is inadmissible. Avery v. White [Conn.] 66 A. 517.

15. In trespass for taking away property under a void process, the plaintiff may testify as to the goods taken, but he cannot testify as to the contents of the paper under which it was taken. Gray v. Joiner [Ga.] 56 S. E. 752.

16. A surveyor cannot give his opinion as to a certain supposed monument found by him. Clark v. Case, 144 Mich. 148, 13 Det. Leg. N. 193, 107 N. W. 893.

17. Where, in trespass for taking of furniture, defendants claim plaintiff consented to the removal, evidence that she was sitting in one corner of the house crying at the time, is admissible as res gestae and on the issue of consent. Terry v. Williams [Ala.] 41 So. 804.

18. Where defendant's attorney, acting under a void writ, took possession of goods and inventoried the same, the inventory is admissible to show value. Chicago Title & Trust Co. v. Core, 223 Ill. 58, 79 N. E. 108. Where in trespass for cutting vines plaintiff has given evidence of their value and ornamental effect, defendant may introduce evidence to the same point. Martin v. Erwin [N. J. Law] 65 A. 888.

19. In trespass for widening a race under a prescriptive right to clean the same, evidence as to the uses to which the water was put and the manner in which the race was cleaned is admissible. Haines' Ex'rs v. Haines [Md.] 64 A. 1044.

20. Gulf & C. R. Co. v. Hartley [Miss.] 41 So. 382.

21. Evidence that plaintiff was induced by false representation to use the description in the deed, and which included the timber

Instructions and jury questions.[23]—Instructions should correctly submit the issues involved [24] but no others,[25] and must not be misleading,[26] or pretermit the consideration of material evidence.[27] Instructions need not be given as to matters not in issue,[28] or unsupported by evidence.[29] Where an act was unlawful, if committed at all, it is not error to use the word "unlawfully" without defining it.[30] A general instruction as to facts which the jury must find to authorize a verdict for plaintiff need not include a fact not in issue.[31]

Where defendant admits the act of alleged trespass by answer, he is not entitled to go to the jury thereon.[32] Questions of fact are usually for the jury.[33]

Verdict and judgment.[34]—In trespass the court may issue a mandate preventing future trespass, the order being conformable to the prayer and issues found.[35]

(§ 2) B. In equity.[36]—While the granting of an injunction to restrain trespass rests in the sound discretion of the court,[37] it will usually issue to restrain waste [38] or destruction of the estate,[39] to prevent a trespass which is continuing,[40]

cut. Goodwin v. Fall [Me.] 66 A. 727. Where defendants justify a taking of furniture under claim of ownership under a conditional sale contract, while plaintiff contends that the paper executed by her was to secure a loan on the furniture, evidence that defendants were pawnbrokers and dealers in secondhand furniture is admissible. Terry v. Williams [Ala.] 41 So. 804.

22. In trespass for the taking of goods, defendant was asked to state the circumstances under which he got the "stuff," an answer that he told a certain person to collect a debt secured by the property taken and to take possession under legal proceedings, was properly stricken as not responsive. Gilliland v. Martin [Ala.] 42 So. 7.

24. Defendant having denied that it appropriated any of plaintiff's land, an instruction so stating, but adding, "or if they have appropriated any of it, it is a very small amount," is erroneous (Postal Tel. Cable Co. v. Kuhnen [Ga.] 55 S. E. 967), and was not corrected by adding that defendant did not admit owing any damages (Id.).

25. Submitted question of license not raised. Howie v. California Brewing Co. [Mont.] 88 P. 1007. Where in trespass for removing a wall, the issue was whether it stood on plaintiff's land, an instruction authorizing a recovery for negligence in removing it, though it stood on defendant's lot, is erroneous. Id. An instruction as to the rights after condemnation is erroneous where there is no evidence of such a proceeding. Postal Tel. Cable Co. v. Kuhnen [Ga.] 55 S. E. 967.

26. A charge that if defendant erected its line along a public highway, plaintiff would have no right of recovery, "unless the right of way that he talks of, twenty feet wide, would reach over beyond the road," held misleading in that the jury might think that even if no entry was made on plaintiff's land, yet if some "right of way" which "he talks of" extended over the road, a recovery could be had. Postal Tel. Cable Co. v. Kuhnen [Ga.] 55 S. E. 967. A further charge that under the evidence it was for the jury to determine whether the defendant's right of way extended beyond the public highway, held erroneous for the same reason. Id.

27. Instruction on liability of a master for his servant's trespass held to pretermit consideration of evidence that defendant was present and also evidence that he participated. Gilliland v. Martin [Ala.] 42 So. 7. Pretermitted consideration of evidence of taking of goods not embraced in the mortgage under which defendant justified. Id.

28. Where, in trespass for cutting trees, defendant admitted that the cutting was done by his servants and no question was raised as to a master's liability for acts of his servants, nor as to the distinction between the relation of master and servant and employer and contractor, the court need not instruct in respect thereto. Avery v. White [Conn.] 66 A. 517.

29. Instructions as to adverse possession rightfully refused where defendant's acts were mere trespasses. Buford v. Christian [Ala.] 42 So. 997.

30. Betz v. Kansas City Home Tel. Co. [Mo. App.] 97 S. W. 207.

31. Rightful possession of plaintiff not disputed. Chicago Title & Trust Co. v. Core, 223 Ill. 58, 79 N. E. 108.

32. Cravath v. Baylis, 113 App. Div. 666, 99 N. Y. S. 973.

33. Evidence of acts by defendant in excess of his prescriptive right held to make a case for the jury. Haines' Ex'rs v. Haines [Md.] 64 A. 1044.

34. See 6 C. L. 1726.

35. In trespass for water cast from the roof of defendant's building onto plaintiff's court properly directed defendant to provide gutters and drains. Davis v. Smith [N. C.] 56 S. E. 940.

36. See 6 C. L. 1726.

37. Acts of complainant prior to and subsequent to the erection of a dam held to constitute an election to accept a money award for the damage caused by overflow and not to entitle him to an injunction. Andrus v. Berkshire Power Co. [C. C. A.] 147 F. 76.

38. Cutting down trees. Hatton v. Gregg [Cal. App.] 88 P. 594.

39. Where a plaintiff is in possession of property which the defendant claims by adverse title, and the defendant is threatening acts which will tend to the destruction of the estate, the prayer of the plaintiff for an injunction will be granted until such time as the defendant establishes his title by an action at law. Harding v. Perin, 8 Ohio C. C.

or which threatens to become permanent,[41] and to prevent a multiplicity of suits.[42] But petitioner must be without adequate remedy at law,[43] and threatened with irreparable injury.[44] Hence a mere technical trespass will not be enjoined.[45] Mere failure of petitioner to object to a trespass,[46] or the fact that it is of benefit to the public,[47] will not prevent its abatement. A widow may restrain a trespass upon lands in which she has an unassigned dower interest.[48]

Facts and not a mere conclusion that the threatened trespass will result in irreparable injury,[49] a multiplicity of suits,[50] or in the acquisition of an easement,[51] must be alleged.

Failure of defendant to answer does not authorize a decree against him where the answer of an intervenor states a complete defense.[52]

One claiming to be the true owner of the property may intervene.[53]

In an action to restrain trespass to realty, plaintiff has the burden [54] of showing title in himself,[55] but it is sufficient to prove a superior title from a common source.[56]

Where injunctive relief is granted of common law right, an accounting may be had as incident thereto,[57] but not where it is granted under the Florida statute.[58] Under appropriate pleadings, title may be adjudicated.[59]

(N. S.) 533. Where cotenants are about to proceed to cut timber in disregard of their mutual rights, an injunction is proper restraining such action until partition can be made. Baxter & Co. v. Camp, 126 Ga. 354, 54 S. E. 1036.

40. Martin v. Patillo, 126 Ga. 436, 55 S. E. 240. The maintenance and use of a telephone along a highway without the consent of the fee owner is a continuing trespass justifying an injunction. Burrall v. American Tel. & T. Co., 224 Ill. 266, 79 N. E. 705.

41. Construction of a roadbed and abutment for a bridge. McConahy v. Allegheny R. R. Co., 31 Pa. Super. Ct. 215.

42. To authorize an injunction on such ground in Florida, there must be several persons threatening to act and not one person threatening many trespasses. Cowan v. Skinner [Fla.] 42 So. 730.

43. Cowan v. Skinner [Fla.] 42 So. 730. Will not restrain a mere trespass in taking turpentine from trees when the trespass may be compensated at law. Id. An allegation in a bill to restrain trespass in taking turpentine "that almost the entire value of said lands consists in said pine trees and their product * * * that your orator * * * was induced to purchase such lands in order to get the product of said trees and that defendants * * * are destroying the value of said lands for the purpose for which they were acquired," does not show an inadequate remedy at law. Id.

44. Baker v. Davis [Ga.] 57 S. E. 62. Shooting of guns over a duck pass on plaintiff's land held to cause sufficient damage to sustain an injunction. Whittaker v. Stangvick [Minn.] 111 N. W. 295. Equity may, independent of statute, enjoin injury to or destruction of growing trees where their value and use as a part of the land is of a character as to result in irreparable injury to the owner in the use and enjoyment of the estate. Cowan v. Skinner [Fla.] 42 So. 730.

45. Trespasses upon uncultivated lands. Percy Summer Club v. Astle, 145 F. 53.

46. One failing to object to the construction of a telephone line along a highway of which he is the fee owner, is not estopped from invoking an injunction to abate it. Burrall v. American Tel. & T. Co., 224 Ill. 226, 79 N. E. 705.

47. Telephone line. Especially where defendant may resort to condemnation proceedings. Burrall v. American Tel. & T. Co., 224 Ill. 266, 79 N. E. 705.

48. Need not join the other tenants. Delaney v. Manshum [Mich.] 13 Det. Leg. N. 876, 109 N. W. 1051.

49. Petition examined and held insufficient to show irreparable injury because of failure to allege the nature of the threatened trespass. Bishop v. Owens [Cal. App.] 89 P. 844.

50. Allegations construed as a mere conclusion. Bishop v. Owens [Cal. App.] 89 P. 844.

51. Allegations held to constitute a mere legal conclusion. Bishop v. Owens [Cal. App.] 89 P. 844.

52. Intervenor asserted title in himself with authority to defendant to cut. Lemayne v. Anderson, 29 Ky. L. R. 1017, 96 S. W. 843.

53. And allege title in himself and license to defendant to commit the acts sought to be enjoined. Lemayne v. Anderson, 29 Ky. L. R. 1017, 96 S. W. 843.

54. Lemayne v. Anderson, 29 Ky. L. R. 1017, 96 S. W. 843.

55. Plaintiff must recover on the strength of his own title. Lemayne v. Anderson, 29 Ky. L. R. 1017, 96 S. W. 843. Deraignment under a patent to a large tract excepting lands previously conveyed is not proof of title unless the land is shown to be within the boundaries of the tract and not within the exceptions. Id.

56. Source of common grantor's title is immaterial and evidence in respect thereto is inadmissible. Corker v. Stafford, 125 Ga. 428, 54 S. E. 92.

57. Cowan v. Skinner [Fla.] 42 So. 730.

58. Would deny the defendant the right to a jury contrary to the constitution. Cowan v. Skinner [Fla.] 42 So. 730.

59. Pleadings with the amendments in a suit for an injunction and for damages for cutting timber, in view of the scope of the case, held to authorize an adjudication of title. Baxter v. Camp, 126 Ga. 354, 54 S. E. 1036.

Trial.—It is not an abuse of discretion to refuse to permit evidence to be withdrawn where the other party could and would introduce the same,[60] or to suggest that it was to the interest of a party to admit a contention of his adversary.[61]

§ 3. Damages and penalties.[62]—A technical trespass carries nominal damages.[63] Where growing trees are destroyed, the owner may sue for the value thereof [64] if they have a detached value,[65] or for the injury to the land.[66] In the former case, the detached value of the trees,[67] and, in the latter, the difference in the value of the land before and after the trespass [68] for the purpose for which it is being used,[69] is the measure of damages. Where trespass results in a permanent injury to realty, the diminution in the present value [70] of the entire tract [71] from the trespass sued for [72] is the criterion. Where a trespass may be abated, damages cannot be awarded for future maintenance.[73] One wrongfully withholding possession is liable for an agreed rent lost because of the owner's inability to give possession,[74] if the same is properly pleaded.[75] While plaintiff cannot recover for damages which he might have prevented by reasonable diligence,[76] defendant will not be heard to say that if plaintiff's house had been properly constructed the damages would have been lessened.[77] A prayer for damages in a specific amount does not limit the court thereto in North Carolina.[78]

Plaintiff must prove all facts necessary to authorize an assessment,[79] and the award must correspond to the damages shown.[80] Where a trespass is of a character

60. Deed. Berry v. Ritter Lumber Co., 141 N. C. 386, 54 S. E. 278.

61. That the land was within a certain grant. Berry v. Ritter Lumber Co., 141 N. C. 386, 54 S. E. 278.

62. See 6 C. L. 1727.

63. Postal Tel. Cable Co. v. Kuhnen [Ga.] 55 S. E. 967. Error to dismiss. Wing v. Seske [Iowa] 109 N. W. 717. Where a grantee in a conveyance of standing timber entered and removed the same after the expiration of the time limited, but no appreciable damage was done to the soil or to the grantor's possession, only nominal damages may be recovered in quare clausum fregit. Zimmerman Mfg. Co. v. Daffin [Ala.] 42 So. 858.

64. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Warnecke [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 746, 95 S. W. 600.

65. If trees have no detached value, action must be brought for injury to the realty. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Warnecke [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 746, 95 S. W. 600.

66, 67, 68. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Warnecke [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 746, 95 S. W. 600.

69. Tort feasor will not be heard to say that the land will produce as much revenue if put to a different use. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Warnecke [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 746, 95 S. W. 600.

70. In trespass for an entry and construction of a telephone line, the depreciation in the present value of the land and not a conjectural future value is the measure of damages. Mason v. Postal Tel. Cable Co., 74 S. C. 557, 54 S. E. 763.

71. Cutting a strip through a forest. Morrison v. American Tel. & T. Co., 101 N. Y. S. 140.

72. Error to permit plaintiff to testify to deterioration from trespasses after the filing of the petition. Gulf & C. R. Co. v. Hartley [Miss.] 41 So. 382.

73. Trespass for constructing a telephone line. Morrison v. American Tel. & T. Co., 101 N. Y. S. 140.

74. Broussard v. Hinds [Tex. Civ. App.] 101 S. W. 855.

75. An allegation that plaintiff entered into a contract of lease with a third party for a stated sum, which contract was lost by reason of defendants refusal to surrender possession, renders the contract admissible. Broussard v. Hinds [Tex. Civ. App.] 101 S. W. 855.

76. Plaintiff held not entitled to recover for discomfort in living for several weeks in a house the doors and windows of which had been wrongfully removed by defendant, where they could have been speedily replaced. Davis v. Poland [Me.] 66 A. 380.

77. Water cast from defendant's building onto plaintiff's. Davis v. Smith [N. C.] 56 S. E. 940.

78. Davis v. Wall, 142 N. C. 450, 55 S. E. 350.

79. Failed to show that the trees cut were on the part to which he succeeded in establishing title. Berry v. Ritter Lumber Co., 141 N. C. 386, 54 S. E. 278. In trespass for removing stone, proof of the amount that would be required to fill the hole held to sustain a finding that such amount was removed, in the absence of evidence by defendant as to the exact amount. Chesapeake Stone Co. v. Fossett, 30 Ky. L. R. 1175, 100 S. W. 825. In trespass for unlawfully removing a stock of goods which were subsequently returned, evidence as to the value of the goods when returned held too meager to require an instruction that the measure of damages was the difference in value of the goods when removed and when returned. Keroes v. Weaver, 27 App. D. C. 384.

80. Excessive: Where the only testimony was that the fence and chicken house injured was worth $125 and $30 respectively, and that of a carpenter that the injury could be repaired for $25, a verdict for $600 is excessive. Spencer v. San Francisco Brick Co. [Cal. App.] 89 P. 851.

to create an adverse title, a dismissal must be reversed though plaintiff is only entitled to nominal damages.[81]

Damages must be properly pleaded.[82]

Punitive.[83]—Statutes in some states prescribe the circumstances under which punitive damages may be awarded,[84] but in the absence thereof they are usually authorized when the trespass is wanton or malicious or accompanied by circumstances of aggravation.[85]

The petition must contain appropriate allegations.[86]

Multifold.[87]—The Kansas statute allowing treble damages for digging up and carrying away gravel, etc., is treble the injury to the gravel,[88] and multifold damages are not allowable for injuries to the land resulting from the use to which the gravel is thereafter put.[89]

§ 4. Criminal liability.[90]—In North Carolina, one wrongfully entering[91] upon the premises of another after notice and without a bona fide claim of right[92] is criminally liable though an injunction might not lie to restrain the act.[93] The fact that a tenant has not taken possession under his lease does not prevent him from giving notice under the South Carolina statute where his lease has started.[94]

As in other crimes, there must be a criminal intent.[95] A license legally terminated,[96] or a permission to a third person to enter,[97] is no defense.

81. Fenced in some of plaintiff's land with his own. Wing v. Seske [Iowa] 109 N. W. 717.

82. An allegation that defendant cut and removed trees from plaintiff's land "to his great damage" is sufficient to authorize recovery for the value of timber so cut together with damages for the injury done to the land in removing it therefrom. Davis v. Wall, 142 N. C. 450, 55 S. E. 350.

83. See 6 C. L. 1728.

84. Civ. Code, § 3294, authorizing punitive damages in case of fraud, oppression, or malice, does not authorize such damages for trespasses resulting from mere negligence. Spencer v. San Francisco Brick Co. [Cal. App.] 89 P. 851. And failure to repair after notice the damage done by such negligence does not constitute oppression thereunder. Id.

85. Sperry v. Seidel [Pa.] 66 A. 853; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Dickens [Ala.] 41 So. 469; Terry v. Williams [Ala.] 41 So. 804. Malice. Miller v. Rambo [N. J. Err. & App.] 64 A. 1053.

Punitive damages authorized: Where defendant's attorney in company with a United States marshal demanded immediate possession of a stock of goods under a writ to show cause why possession should not be given, and by threats of arrest obtained possession. Chicago Title & Trust Co. v. Core, 223 Ill. 58, 79 N. E. 108. In an action against a telegraph line for trespasses committed while repairing its line, there was evidence that it destroyed plaintiff's fence in several places and that it was unnecessary so to do. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Dickens [Ala.] 41 So. 469.

Not allowed: Evidence held to show no willful, reckless, or wanton negligence in the construction of a bulkhead, the giving way of which resulted in injury to plaintiff's property. Spencer v. San Francisco Brick Co. [Cal. App.] 89 P. 851.

86. Prayer alone insufficient. Board of Directors of St. Francis Levee Dist. v. Redditt [Ark.] 95 S. W. 482.

87. See 4 C. L. 1705.

88. Gen. St. 1901, 7862. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Grant [Kan.] 89 P. 658. Its value is determined as an appurtenance and not as a severed object. Id.

89. Injuries to the farm from the building of a dike not trebled. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Grant [Kan.] 89 P. 658.

90. See 6 C. L. 1729.

91. The right of entry conferred by Rev. 1905, § 2575, upon a railroad and logging company to lay out its road and building sites, does not authorize an entry for the purpose of construction. State v. Wells, 142 N. C. 590, 55 S. E. 210. Nor does § 2587, authorizing it to proceed with construction work after paying into court the amount of the appraisal by the commissioners, authorize such entry before payment. Id.

92. A conviction for willful trespass under Revisal 1905, § 3688, cannot stand where it appears that the question of an entry under a bona fide claim of right was not passed upon, there being some evidence in support thereof. State v. Wells, 142 N. C. 590, 55 S. E. 210. In a prosecution under Revisal 1905, § 3688, for unlawful entry after notice, the fact that defendant was acting under a superior who had been legal advised, that the railroad and logging company could proceed to construct its line before payment of the appraisement, held no justification. State v. Mallard [N. C.] 57 S. E. 351.

93. State v. Wells, 142 N. C. 590, 55 S. E. 210.

94. Where one leases lands for a calendar year and the landlord does nothing to prevent him from taking possession on January 1st, he then becomes a tenant within Cr. Code 1902, § 186, making an entry after notice from a tenant a misdemeanor, though he does not take possession until later. State v. Gay [S. C.] 56 S. E. 668.

95. The presumption of criminal intent from the act of trespass is rebutted where it appears that defendant merely cut a few trees over an obscure division line, and the prosecutor himself admits not knowing the exact boundary line and it appears that he had also crossed over the line in posting notices. Campbell v. State [Ga.] 56 S. E. 417.

An affidavit for trespass must identify the tract trespassed upon, but it need not specify the particular part thereof.[98] Indictment should allege that the entry was without the consent of the owner.[99]

Where defendant offered evidence that the road used was the only way to reach a certain place, it is not error to admit evidence in rebuttal thereof though it is immaterial.[1] In a prosecution for cutting and removing timber, evidence tending to connect defendant therewith is admissible.[2]

§ 5. Trespass to try title.[3]—A remainderman is a proper party,[4] but a wife having only a community interest is not a necessary party to an action against her husband,[5] though the property constitutes their homestead.[6]

Laches cannot be urged against the holder of the legal title,[7] nor against the heirs of a grantor by one claiming under a void alienation of land located under a donation warrant.[8]

Pleading and procedure.[9]—All ultimate facts essential to a complete cause of action or defense,[10] but not evidentiary facts,[11] must be pleaded. Petition must not assert inconsistent rights.[12] A plea of not guilty admits possession in defendant,[13] and a prior dispossession of plaintiff,[14] and under such plea, in an action by a county to recover school lands, defendant may show abandonment of location and estoppel to assert title.[15] Plaintiff need not specifically plead an erroneous forfeiture by the land commissioner of a sale of school lands under which he claims.[16] Coverture as a defense to a plea of limitations must be alleged.[17] A defendant seeking to re-

96. Where a contract employing a contractor to repair a dwelling is terminated in the manner specified therein, the contractor cannot justify thereunder in a prosecution for trespass after notice. Davis v. State [Ala.] 41 So. 681.

97. Cross v. State [Ala.] 41 So. 875. In a prosecution for trespass after warning in using a road over prosecutor's land, evidence that prosecutor agreed with another to leave the road open until his right to close it was determined is inadmissible, as it did not justify defendant's trespass after warning. Id.

98. An affidavit which alleges that accused entered on the lands of a person named as trustee, described as "N. W. 1-4, S. W. 1-4, N. 1-2, N. E. 1-4 and N. W. 1-4, S. E. 1-4, in section 13," etc., and cut timber growing thereon, is in conformity to the form prescribed by Code 1896, § 4600, as amended by Acts 1903, p. 283, and sufficiently describes the land, though it does not specify the 40 acre tract upon which it was committed. Mayhall v. State [Ala.] 41 So. 290.

99. Indictment under Acts 1897, p. 257, c. 106, charging a "malicious" entry, held sufficient as against an objection after verdict. Whinn v. State [Tenn.] 94 S. W. 674.

1. Cross v. State [Ala.] 41 So. 875.

2. Evidence that stumps of trees had been seen around where defendant's wagon had been seen, and that within a few feet of the wagon a tree had been cut into three stocks. Mayhall v. State [Ala.] 41 So. 290.

3. See 6 C. L. 1729.

6. Especially where the homestead character constituted no defense. Brown v. Humphrey [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 742, 95 S. W. '23.

7. Where upon the close of bankruptcy proceedings the legal title to undisposed of lands reverted to the bankrupt, defense of stale demands cannot be asserted by one claiming under a deed thereafter executed by the assignee. Hunter v. Hodgson [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 110, 95 S. W. 637.

8. Overby v. Johnston [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 766, 94 S. W. 131.

9. See 6 C. L. 1730.

10. An answer and cross bill alleging that plaintiff purchased the land under a foreclosure sale under a deed of trust executed by defendant, and by agreement plaintiff loaned to defendant the amount of the bid and took the deed from the trustee as security for the loan, held good as against a general demurrer. Delaney v. Campbell [Tex. Civ. App.] 97 S. W. 519.

11. Facts relied upon to show defendant's tenancy. Berry v. Jagoe [Tex. Civ. App.] 100 S. W. 815.

12. A petition alleging title under a deed to take effect upon the death of the grantor, and an oral contract whereby immediate possession was given, is not inconsistent, the contract not relating to title. McCurry v. McCurry [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 182, 95 S. W. 35.

13. Hence where defendant thereby admits possession of the entire tract sued for and the court finds that plaintiff's patent was prior to defendant's, it is error to render judgment for less than the whole tract. Earnest v. Lake [Tex. Civ. App.] 101 S. W. 479.

14. A special traverse is necessary to put in issue plaintiff's possession or right thereto. Cummings & Co. v. Masterson [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 33, 93 S. W. 500.

15. Lamar County v. Talley [Tex. Civ. App.] 94 S. W. 1069.

16. May prove without pleading. Bumpass v. McLendon [Tex. Civ. App.] 101 S. W. 491.

17. Proof without pleading does not ren-cover for improvements made in good faith must allege the basis of such faith,[18] and a demurrer stating that defendant's answer "shows no facts constituting good faith" is sufficient.[19]

Plaintiff must recover on the strength of his own title,[20] unless defendant is estopped to deny it.[21] Hence where he claims by gift,[22] or descent,[23] or under a particular grant[24] or deed,[25] he must show all facts necessary to vest title in him, though proof of prior possession makes a prima facie case against a mere trespasser.[26] A common source of title[27] excuses deraignment from the government,[28] but it does not preclude defendant from showing a title superior to the common source.[29] A deed introduced to show common source of title is limited to that purpose.[30] Plaintiff may recover on a title acquired pendente lite if such title was being asserted by its owner in the case.[31] The presumption of a grant from long der it available. Lawder v. Larkin [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 809, 94 S. W. 171.

18. General allegation of good faith is insufficient. Campbell v. McCaleb [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 129.

19. Not objectionable as not pointing out the facts desired. Campbell v. McCaleb [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 129.

20. Hence defendant may prove a superior outstanding title in defense. Mann v. Hossack [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 835, 96 S. W. 767.

Plaintiff has the burden of showing a superior title. Fellers v. McFatter [Tex. Civ. App.] 101 S. W. 1065. Must locate and identify the land as a part of his grant. McDonald v. Downs [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 892. Where defendants claim under the older title from the common source, plaintiff must break down such title. Stith v. Moore [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 462, 95 S. W. 587.

Under Rev. St. 1895, art. 5259, the location and survey of land by virtue of a bounty warrant gives sufficient title to authorize the maintenance of an action of trespass. Stubblefield v. Hanson [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 36, 94 S. W. 406. Where an administrator gives possession of land not included in his deed, heirs have sufficient title to recover the same though the unpaid debts of the insolvent estate exceed its value. Fowler v. Agnew [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 180, 95 S. W. 36. A tenant in common may recover as against one having no title at all (Hughes v. Wright [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 122, 97 S. W. 525), and hence where plaintiffs show their right to inherit a part through the paternal ancestors of the last owner, their right to recover is not defeated by failure to prove that his maternal kindred are extinct (Gorham v. Settegast [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 432, 98 S. W. 665).

21. Plaintiff need not prove title if defendant claims as his tenant. Berry v. Jagoe [Tex. Civ. App.] 100 S. W. 815.

22. Where defendant interposed a general denial to a petition alleging a parol gift followed by possession and valuable improvements, plaintiff must prove the gift together with the possession and improvements thereunder. Wallis v. Turner [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 92, 95 S. W. 61.

See Gifts, 7 C. L. 1878.

23. Gorham v. Settegast [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 432, 98 S. W. 665. Must show that his ancestor was the patentee in the grant under which he claims. Dorsey v. Olive Sternenberg & Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 860, 94 S. W. 413. Evidence held to require a finding that plaintiff's ancestor and not defendant's ancestor was the patentee. Id. See Descent and Distribution, 7 C. L. 1137.

24. Evidence held to authorize a finding that the survey of plaintiff's pre-emption was not included in a survey of defendant's tract. Warner v. Sapp [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 892, 97 S. W. 125.

25. Plaintiff and defendants claim under deeds executed on the same day by an assignee in bankruptcy. One deed was to one of the bankrupts and the other to his attorneys. Evidence held to sustain finding that the deed to the attorneys was only in the interest of the client. Beall v. Chatham [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 325, 94 S. W. 1086.

See Deeds of Conveyance, 7 C. L. 1103.

26. Merely a rule of evidence and the inference of ownership therefrom may be overcome by proof of outstanding title. Mann v. Hossack [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 835, 96 S. W. 767.

27. Where an adjoining owner purchased from a common vendor and each claims that his tract extends over that of the other, they claim under a common grantor. Young v. Trahan [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 956, 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 20, 97 S. W. 147. Defendants claiming as a purchaser at an execution sale under a judgment against O. S. Sutton, and plaintiffs claiming as heirs of Oliver Sutton, claim under a common source where the land sold was that of Oliver Sutton, though O. S. Sutton and Oliver Sutton are in fact different persons. Lutcher v. Allen [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 149, 95 S. W. 572.

28. Young v. Trahan [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 956, 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 20, 97 S. W. 147.

29. Stubblefield v. Hanson [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 36, 94 S. W. 406. An agreement by both parties that a certain person is a common source of title does not estop one from showing that the wife of such person had an equitable interest in one-half of the land, which he now asserts. Taylor v. Doom [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 172, 95 S. W. 4.

30. Hence introduction of a deed to defendant from the common source antedating plaintiff's deed does not prove superior title in defendant. Young v. Trahan [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 956, 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 20, 97 S. W. 147.

31. Where a defendant filed a cross action against all the plaintiffs and defend-peaceable possession is one of fact only.[32] Where a landlord in an action by the tenant to recover from a third person prays for possession for the use of the tenant, he is entitled to recover though the lease is void.[33]

Lack of jurisdiction in the land commissioner forfeiting a sale of school lands under which a party claims may be shown,[34] as may also an error in a grantee's name in a deed,[35] but a deed cannot be given effect according to the intention of the parties unless a mistake in pleading and reformation asked.[36] An agreement by the parties to abide by the result of another case involving the same issue is binding.[37]

The burden of establishing particular titles,[38] and evidence in proof thereof, as by adverse possession, deed,[39] descent,[40] acquisition from the public domain,[41] etc., are elsewhere treated. Evidence tending to show a conveyance material to the case is admissible,[42] subject to the general rules of materiality,[43] hearsay,[44] declarations and admissions.[45] A deed under which plaintiff asserts no interest is not admissible

33. Lechenger v. Merchants' Nat. Bank [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 620, 96 S. W. 638.

34. Need not cancel such forfeiture in an equitable action. Bumpass v. McLendon [Tex. Civ. App.] 101 S. W. 491.

35. Need not first reform the deed. Cobb v. Bryan [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 12, 97 S. W. 513. Error may be shown by parol. Id. Where a deed designated the grantee as the "Odd Fellows' Building & Savings Association," and in a subsequent proceeding to partition the defendant was named as the "Odd Fellows' Building & Exchange Association," testimony of the secretary of state that the records of his office show no such a corporation is admissible to show that the Odd Fellows' Building & Exchange Company of Texas was intended (Cobb v. Bryan [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 12, 97 S. W. 513), as is the testimony of the attorney for defendant in the partition proceeding that the latter corporation was the real defendant (Id.).

42. Both the agreement of plaintiff's grantor to convey to her and the conveyance are admissible to show title. Cobb v. Bryan [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 12, 97 S. W. 513. On the issue whether McKim had conveyed property to Ryan, proof of general notoriety of Ryan's claim to the land is admissible to show that McKim knew of the latter's claim. Carlisle v. Gibbs [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 405, 98 S. W. 192. Where a deed is admissible in evidence, recitals therein are also admissible as a part thereof. Sydnor v. Texas Sav. & Real Estate Inv. Ass'n [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 100, 94 S. W. 451.

43. Held immaterial: Consideration supporting an executed deed. Carlisle v. Gibbs [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 405, 98 S. W. 192. A deed prior to plaintiffs against which she is protected as a bona fide purchaser. Loring v. Jackson [Tex. Civ. App.] 95 S. W. 19. Homestead character of the land, the deed being sufficient to pass title in any event. Broom v. Herring [Tex. Civ. App.] 101 S. W. 1023. Plaintiff's incapacity to contract where defendant does not claim under any transaction with him. Stith v. Moore [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 462, 95 S. W. 587. On the issue whether McKim had conveyed certain land to Ryan, a statement by a third person in the presence of Ryan at the time Ryan made a deed to the land that such third person would like to get the property out of McKim's hands. Carlisle v. Gibbs [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 405, 98 S. W. 192. As is evidence that when a third person told the daughter of Ryan that he was going to sell the Ryan land and in response to her question as to what land stated that it was the land called the McKim gore, and that she replied that he had better let that land alone as he might get into trouble. Id.

44. Testimony of a witness that the children of a certain person told him that their mother claimed the land is hearsay and not admissible to prove title in her. Carlisle v. Gibbs [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 405, 98 S. W. 192.

45. Where an heir as independent executor of his ancestor executes a deed in which he acknowledges that the ancestor held the land conveyed thereby in trust for the person under whom the defendants claim, such deed is admissible as declarations against interest though not valid as a conveyance. Sydnor v. Texas Sav. & Real Estate Inv. Ass'n [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 100, 94 S. W. 451. Declarations of an ancestor as to the corners of his pre-emption are admissible against his heirs, the survey being in dispute. Warner v. Sapp [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 892, 97 S. W. 125. As are admissions in a pleading of the ancestor. Id. An answer by one McKim and Ryan in a suit that they owned and possessed the land under a certain certificate did not estop the heirs of McKim in trespass to try title against persons claiming under Ryan to limit him to a common source of title.[46] The statutory affidavit of forgery to put a party to proof of execution of a deed in his claim is not admissible on the fact.[47] A contract to sell found among the papers of the grantor is not admissible without proof of delivery,[48] nor is a deed from one not shown to have title or authority to execute the same.[49] One claiming under a sale by an assignee in bankruptcy may introduce the material parts of the proceedings without introducing all.[50] One offering evidence of a bona fide purchase to defeat a prior conveyance cannot object to rebuttal evidence on the ground that no issue was made by the pleadings in respect thereto.[51]

Instructions must not be misleading[52] or upon the weight of the evidence.[53] Instructions should be given upon issues duly raised by the evidence.[54]

A defendant who has made improvements in good faith[55] is entitled to the value thereof upon judgment in plaintiff's favor,[56] against which may be offset the value of the use and occupation and damages to the property.[57]

A judgment against several defendants for possession by plaintiff upon payment of a specific sum to each for improvements should specify the part in possession of each.[58] Where both parties claim the land as a part of their respective grants, failure of plaintiff to locate his grant does not authorize a judgment vesting title in defendant where it is not shown to be included in his grant.[59]

Where defendant puts in issue by his pleadings plaintiff's right to the entire tract and plaintiff recovers a part thereof, costs cannot be awarded to defendant as a successful party, though in fact the only dispute was as to the remainder.[60] from claiming the land, but was a circumstance to consider in determining whether Ryan had an interest. Carlisle v. Gibbs [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 405, 98 S. W. 192. Where an assignee in bankruptcy made two sales, one to a bankrupt and the other to his attorneys, on the same day, a report of the assignee to the court showing that the only consideration came from the bankrupt is not inadmissible as against the bankrupt's attorneys as a declaration of a vendor after sale, especially where the attorneys knew of the report and took no action in respect thereto. TRIAL.

§ 1. Joint and Separate Trials (2161).
§ 2. Course and Conduct of Trial (2162).
§ 3. Reception and Exclusion of Evidence (2164). The Order of Proof (2165). Timely Objection (2166). Cumulative Testimony (2166). Stipulations or Admissions (2166). Evidence Admissible for One Purpose Only (2166).
§ 4. Custody and Conduct of the Jury (2167). It is Largely Discretionary With the Trial Court What Papers Shall Be Taken Out by the Jury (2168). Allowance of a View (2168). View by Court (2168).

Scope of article.[61]—Many important and really distinct matters of trial procedure are given separate treatment in Current Law. Thus the law relating to dockets, calendars, and trial lists,[62] continuance and postponement,[63] argument of counsel and the right to open and close the same,[64] examination of witnesses,[65] making of objections and taking of exceptions,[66] trial by jury,[67] questions of law and fact,[68] instructions,[69] directing verdict and demurrer to evidence,[70] discontinuance, dismissal, and nonsuit,[71] verdicts and findings,[72] has been excluded from this article, which includes principally only such matters as do not readily lend themselves to such separate treatment. The subjects of evidence,[73] pleading,[74] and witnesses,[75] are also fully treated elsewhere. As to the hearing in equity, see article on Equity,[76] and for matters peculiar to criminal trials, see Indictment and Prosecution.[77]

§ 1. Joint and separate trials.[78]—Separate suits involving the same issues and affecting the same parties should be consolidated and tried together, if one trial will dispose of all the issues in both cases.[79] Under the common law, a court has no power over the objection of defendant and to his prejudice to consolidate two separate and distinct and improperly joined causes of action, the issues should be united by the plaintiff in one petition had he chosen to do so.[80] Several actions may frequently be tried jointly by agreement of parties.[81] Where a declaration contains two distinct and improperly joined causes of action, the issues should be tried before separate juries.[82] Where two defendants are properly joined in one

81. Beal-Doyle Dry Goods Co. v. Barton [Ark.] 97 S. W. 58. Where a defendant in a suit to quiet title files a separate suit for the same relief as to the same property against the plaintiff, and the two suits are consolidated by consent, the parties are in the same position as if defendant had filed a cross petition. Schallenberg v. Kroeger [Neb.] 110 N. W. 664.
82. Damages for taking for public use and damages for tortious use of premises pending the taking. Coyne v. Memphis [Tenn.] 102 S. W. 355. In South Carolina, where an action to partition property and stay waste and to set aside a deed for fraud is put on calendar 2 for trial and defendant sets up action, neither has a right to a separate trial.[83] In some code states it is the practice to try and determine the issues made by an equitable counterclaim before going to a trial of the legal issues on the main case.[84]

§ 2. Course and conduct of trial.[85]—The conduct of trials, generally, is vested largely in the discretion of the trial court.[86] It is the duty of parties and counsel having business before the court to be present during the term, and proceedings of which they had notice may be held in their absence and will not be set aside except in case of surprise or other good excuse.[87] The court also has power to place the witnesses who are to testify in a case under a rule and exclude them from the court room during the course of the trial.[88] Parties to an action should not be excluded from the court room, though they are also witnesses.[89] It is in the power of the court to prevent useless delays in the course of a trial,[90] and for this purpose it may reasonably limit the number of witnesses to be examined.[91] The reception of a verdict by the clerk in the absence of the judge, under stipulation of the parties, and in presence of counsel without objection, was an irregularity which the parties could and did thereby waive.[92] Selection of interpreter is committed to the sound discretion of the trial court.[93] It is improper to examine counsel under oath as to the interest of an insurance company in the defense.[94] title, the equity issue of fraud is properly tried first, and where the right to partition or to stay waste depends on the buyer's decision to set aside the deed for fraud, the issue of title should be tried before the other issues. DuBose v. Kell [S. C.] 56 S. E. 968.

In a suit by an insured against the insurer and an attorney who refuses to surrender policies, the issues made by their answers need not be tried separately. Citizens' Ins. Co. v. Herpolsheimer [Neb.] 109 N. W. 160.

84. If, in such case, the decree in equity renders unnecessary the trial of the legal issues, such decree is a final determination of the action. Cotton v. Butterfield [N. D.] 105 N. W. 236. A defendant cannot split a counterclaim so as to use a portion of it as a defense and leave the remainder as a separate cause of action. Palm's Adm'rs v. Howard [Ky.] 102 S. W. 267, 1199.

87. Flournoy v. Munson Bros. Co. [Fla.] 41 So. 398. Improper for court to try case out of its natural order without any order setting it for trial or notice to party or his attorney. Gardell v. Gardell [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 117, 94 S. W. 457. Absence of counsel during part of examination of jurors, but permission by the court to proceed with the examination when he arrived, does not show a refusal of opportunity for such examination. McFern v. Gardner [Mo. App.] 97 S. W. 972.

88. Though other witnesses have been excluded from the court room, it is discretionary with the court to allow the president of defendant company to remain and assist in managing the case, though he was also a witness. Warden v. Madisonville, etc., R. Co. [Ky.] 101 S. W. 914. In such case the court may exclude a physician, though summoned for the purpose of hearing the testimony and giving his opinion thereon. Atlantic & B. R. Co. v. Johnson [Ga.] 56 S. E. 482. Where a witness placed under the rule unintentionally violated it on account of deafness and remained in the court room without the knowledge of counsel, it is no abuse of discretion to permit him to testify, he having heard very little of the testimony. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Hugen [Tex. Civ. App.] 100 S. W. 1000.

89. But only the party excluded has a right to complain, and it is no error to refuse to order the party excluded to come into the court room at the instance of the opposing party. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Scarborough [Fla.] 42 So. 706.

90. State v. Caron [La.] 42 So. 960. The granting of delays in the course of the trial rests in discretion. Van Vlissingen v. Roth, 121 Ill. App. 600. The court is not bound to suspend the trial to enable a litigant to produce additional evidence. Zipperer v. Savannah [Ga.] 57 S. E. 311.

91. Limiting the number of witnesses as to damages to land, which was the principal issue, to four on each side, is held arbitrary and erroneous. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Aubuchon [Mo.] 97 S. W. 867. Party cannot object, for the first time on appeal, to the lower courts limiting the number of witnesses. Warden v. Madisonville, etc., R. Co. [Ky.] 101 S. W. 914. Where issues involve the amount of a bid at a public sale, where more than two hundred persons were present, it is not an abuse of discretion for the court to limit the number of witnesses to five. Austin v. Smith [Iowa] 109 N. W. 289.

92. Too late to repudiate stipulation on appeal. Dubuc v. Lazell, 182 N. Y. 482, 75 N. E. 401.

93. American Brake Shoe & F. Co. v. Jankus, 121 Ill. App. 267.

94. Not reversible error if such proceeding was not conducted in the jury's presence. Howard v. Beldenville Lumber Co. [Wis.] 108 N. W. 48.

Remarks and conduct of judge.[95]—It is highly improper for a judge in the jury's presence to comment on the evidence, make statements of fact, or discuss conclusions from facts proven.[96] Communication by the judge with the jury during their deliberations, contrary to statute, and without consent of parties, is reversible error.[97] When objections to testimony are persistently made, the judge may inform counsel what he considers is or is not proper evidence.[98] Though a court may take evidence to refresh its memory as to matters of judicial notice, it should not take testimony as to the regularity of the adoption of a constitutional amendment which is prima facie law, where the pleadings do not put such regularity in issue.[99] Where a judge is doubtful concerning his jurisdiction because of defective service of summons, he should not arbitrarily refuse to try the case but should call attention of counsel to the defects in order that they might be remedied.[1] An appellate court will not interfere because of misconduct of the trial judge or of counsel, unless from the whole situation it appears likely a different result would have been reached but for such misconduct.[2]

95. See 6 C. L. 1732.

96. McKissick v. Oregon Short Line R. Co. [Idaho] 89 P. 629. Sending jury back to reconsider an insufficient verdict without instructions that amount was for them to determine is reversible error. Douglas v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 104 N. Y. S. 452. Remarks directing attention of jury to supposed contradictiory statement of witness held error. Merritt v. Bush, 122 Ill. App. 189. It is error for the judge during the trial of a case and in the hearing of the jury to express or intimate an opinion as to what has or has not been proved. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Powell [Ga.] 56 S. E. 1006. Where plaintiff's physician testified that he hoped plaintiff would be able to walk with a cane, a remark by the court that "You expect what is probable, your hope may be very improbable" was not error as showing bias. Devlin v. New York City R. Co., 102 N. Y. S. 430. A statement by the court, after a question asked a witness, that "He cannot tell anything about it," is not error, where the question was objectionable. Lederman v. Rahaim, 102 N. Y. S. 526. Remarks by the court in the jury's presence, reflecting upon the credibility of an expert witness, are not prejudicial if his testimony is not applicable to the issue. Haddix v. State [Neb.] 107 N. W. 781. Where the question of exemplary damages is not submitted, it is error for the court to intimate that they may be found by informing the jury that fines imposed may be considered in mitigation of exemplary damages. Holland v. Williams, 126 Ga. 617, 55 S. E. 1023. A remark or the demeanor of the judge in the jury's presence as to the truthfulness of material testimony is reversible error. City of Newkirk v. Dimmers [Okl.] 87 P. 603. A remark by the trial judge in admitting evidence that plaintiff was not traveling for his health, etc., which was a fact defendant could not fail to infer, is not erroneous. Webb v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. [S. C.] 56 S. E. 954. Where counsel in argument correctly states the testimony of a witness, it is error for the court, on objection by opposing counsel, to remark that such was not the testimony. Rose v. Kansas City [Mo. App.] 102 S. W. 578. A statement by the court, in refusing a continuance, that counsel had stated he would be ready, is not prejudicial as leading the jury to believe counsel acted in bad faith. McFern v. Gardner [Mo. App.] 97 S. W. 972. Error to instruct or express opinion on the weight of the evidence. Thomson v. Kelly [Tex. Civ. App.] 16 Tex. Ct. Rep. 637, 97 S. W. 326. Remark by court that witness, in testifying that a person had a purpose in stating an untruth, made a very ugly insinuation, unless explained, is improper. Levels v. St. Louis & H. R. Co., 196 Mo. 606, 94 S. W. 275. Remarks of court in colloquy with counsel amounting to exclusion of evidence. Stroker v. St. Joseph, 117 Mo. App. 350, 93 S. W. 860. The court in rebuking counsel for prejudicial misconduct is warranted in saying, "That is not a remark you should make; it is improper language." Tingley v. Times Mirror Co. [Cal.] 89 P. 1097.

97. Holliday v. Sampson [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 232, 95 S. W. 643. It is reversible error for a judge, in the absence of counsel, to go to the doorway of the jury room and answer questions asked by the jury, as all proceedings should be conducted in open court. Hurst v. Webster Mfg. Co., 128 Wis. 342, 107 N. W. 666.

Held harmless: Admonition of judge to witness not in presence of jury held unprejudicial. Zink v. Lahart [N. D.] 110 N. W. 931. A plaintiff who has wholly failed to make out a case cannot claim to have been prejudiced by instructions or remarks of the court to the jury. Yates v. Huntsville Hoop & Heading Co. [Ala.] 39 So. 647. Remarks by the court in the jury's presence are rendered harmless by a proper peremptory charge. Wilson v. Johnson [Fla.] 41 So. 395. Remark of court in admitting testimony held harmless in view of charge. Leonard v. Gillette [Conn.] 66 A. 502. An erroneous expression of opinion by the court during the discussion of the admissibility of evidence is not ground for reversal, except in case of obvious prejudice, where the final ruling and instruction to the jury on the evidence are correct. McGowan v. Watertown [Wis.] 110 N. W. 402.

§ 3. Reception and exclusion of evidence.[3]—An offer of evidence which taken in its entirety fails to show a cause of action should be rejected.[4] After the competency of a witness has been already passed on, it is discretionary with the court to thereafter allow the question of his competency to be reopened.[5] The court may in its discretion exclude, of its own motion and without formal objection, evidence offered to contradict or discredit a witness but having no tendency to do so.[6] The rejection of testimony which is incompetent unless other evidence be supplied is not erroneous, in the absence of any offer to supply such deficiency.[7] Where the question does not disclose the matter sought to be elicited,[8] the court may require a specific[10] offer of proof, but the court may, instead of allowing counsel to state what he expects a witness to testify, cause the jury to retire and allow the witness to answer.[11] A party is not entitled as a matter of right to withdraw competent evidence voluntarily introduced by him which is favorable to his adversary.[12] If it appears to the court that a juror, for any cause, has failed to hear the evidence of a witness, such testimony should be required to be repeated, but the court is not bound on its own motion to require such repetition, unless it plainly appears that the evidence has not been heard by all the jurors.[13] Where improper evidence, which may be rendered admissible by amendment of the pleading, is admitted over objection, the court cannot thereafter disregard such evidence on the ground that its admission was error without notice to the party producing it.[14] The rule requiring a party to introduce the best evidence available is not rigid and inflexible but may, under proper circumstances, be relaxed.[15] A paper, to have the effect of evidence, must be formally offered and introduced.[16] An offer of proof in the absence of the witness is properly excluded.[17] It is improper to strike out all the evidence of a witness because of his failure to return to court and bring a certain memorandum book.[18] Where an instrument is excluded because void on its face, it is not material that it was offered out of order.[19] The refusal or permission of repetition of testimony is discretionary with the court, which if reasonably exercised is not error.[20]

Co. v. McVey [Tex. Civ. App.] 102 S. W. 172. After evidence has been closed for both sides, it is not erroneous to refuse to permit witnesses to testify concerning plaintiff's case in chief, where it does not appear that they were absent or ill, or that there was any surprise, accident, or mistake. Wilkie v. Richmond Trac. Co., 105 Va. 290, 54 S. E. 43. Where the testimony of an absent witness given on a former trial was read to the jury, but was open to attack because the foundation of unavoidable absence was not laid, it is proper to allow proof of such unavoidable evidence in rebuttal. Doyle v. St. Louis Transit Co. [Mo. App.] 101 S. W. 598. The court may in its discretion refuse to permit in rebuttal a deposition taken by the adverse party. Morehead's Trustee v. Anderson, 30 Ky. L. R. 1137, 100 S. W. 340. Plaintiff allowed to introduce evidence in rebuttal of theory advanced by defendant. Meyer Bros. Drug Co. v. Madden, Graham & Co. [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 723; Wells v. Gallagher, 144 Ala. 363, 39 So. 747. Though a plaintiff has testified to possessing considerable cash, and having considerable earning capacity at the time of his injury, it is proper to refuse, after the evidence is closed, proof that he made a pauper's affidavit at time of filing suit. St. Louis, S. W. R. Co. v. Johnson [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 813, 94 S. W. 162. Where defendant in action for personal injury applied certain tests as to whether plaintiff had curvature of the spine, plaintiff may in rebuttal require of an expert whether such tests were fair and proper. Rowe v. Whatcom County R. & Light Co. [Wash.] 87 P. 921. A party, who having summoned a witness, who was present throughout the trial, without calling him, cannot have the case reopened to introduce his testimony or have his deposition read in rebuttal, because of surprise when not introduced by his opponent. In re Dolbeer's Estate [Cal.] 86 P. 695. Though a witness for plaintiff has testified on direct examination to conversations with defendant on matter in controversy, yet if latter afterwards testifies to a defensive claim, to which the witness had not referred, the witness may be called in rebuttal to state that such claim was never mentioned in the conversations. Green v. Dodge [Vt.] 64 A. 499. Under Virginia Code, § 3367, after demurrer to evidence by defendant, plaintiff may read a deposition taken by the defendant and not before read, and the latter may introduce further evidence and renew demurrer. Pocahontas Collieries Co. v. Williams, 105 Va. 708, 54 S. E. 868.

24. Hock v. Magerstadt, 124 Ill. App. 140. A case should not be reopened for the introduction of further evidence which is merely cumulative. Kataoka v. Hanselman [Cal.] 89 P. 1082. May allow evidence during and after argument, and even after submission of case to jury. Wilson v. Johnson [Fla.] 41 So. 395. It is discretionary with the court to refuse to allow a plaintiff to testify after the case is closed for both sides and judgment rendered. Lewis v Helm [Colo.] 90 P. 97. Under California Code of Civ. Proc. § 607, it is proper to refuse to allow defendant to open case by introducing evidence in support of pleas in abatement and in bar. Watkins v. Glas [Cal. Cumulative testimony.[29]—Mere cumulative evidence may be excluded.[30] The admission of cumulative evidence in surrebuttal is within the trial court's discretion.[31]

Stipulations or admissions.[32]—While an extra judicial admission may be withdrawn before it is acted upon, it is still to be received as evidence of the fact admitted, and its withdrawal goes only to its weight.[33] It is not error to exclude evidence of facts which are admitted and hence not in issue.[34] Judicial stipulations do not exclude evidence on matters not included within their scope.[35] An admission by counsel in objecting to testimony that only a certain question arises gives the court the right to treat the case as proceeding on that theory alone.[36]

Evidence admissible for one purpose only.[37]—If evidence is competent for any purpose it should be admitted, and, if the opposing party desires its effect to be limited, he should ask an instruction for that purpose.[38] Pleadings offered in evi-discretion permit plaintiff to reopen case and submit further proof even after motion for nonsuit, and ruling will not be reviewed on appeal unless discretion has been abused Richardson v. Agnew [Wash.] 89 P. 404. The reopening of a case to allow evidence on a particular point does not compel the court to allow the introduction of evidence generally. Bridger v. Exchange Bk., 126 Ga. 821, 56 S. E. 97. It is no error to refuse to reopen a case after trial to receive additional evidence as to the commission of champerty when the letter offered as additional evidence was considered in evidence on the trial. Emerson v. McDonnell [Wis.] 107 N. W. 1037. Proper exercise of discretion for court to refuse to reopen case for admission of immaterial evidence. Potsdam Elec. Light & Power Co. v. Potsdam, 112 App. Div. 810, 99 N. Y. S. 551. Even after judgment, in a trial by the court without a jury, a party may be permitted in furtherance of justice to withdraw his rest and introduce additional evidence. Cochran v. Moriarity [Neb.] 111 N. W. 588. Also after refusal of nonsuit. Anderton v. Blais [R. I.] 65 A. 602. The court may allow a party to introduce additional evidence after resting his case if required in furtherance of justice, and no undue advantage is thereby acquired over the adverse party. 27. Irresponsive and improper answers to proper questions should be remedied by motion to strike out. Shaw v. New York El. R. Co. [N. Y.] 79 N. E. 984. Where in an answer "No sir; I did not have time," the words "no sir" were clearly responsive to the question, an indefinite motion to strike out should be overruled. Pittsburg, etc., R. Co. v. Collins [Ind.] 80 N. E. 415. Where a hypothetical question is admitted, with an understanding that missing elements would be supplied, a failure to supply those elements is waived by a failure to move that the answer be struck out. Flint & Walling Mfg. Co. v. Beckett [Ind.] 79 N. E. 503. The competency of evidence should be determined by the substance of the answer rather than by the form of the question. When the answer might or might not be competent, before excluding the question, the court should ask counsel what he expects to prove, or learn the answer from the witness in the absence of the jury. Hicks v. Hicks, 142 N. C. 231, 55 S. E. 106.

36. Murray v. Butte [Mont.] 88 P. 789. In action to recover penalty against telephone company for obstructing highway with poles proposition by plaintiff that if public use of highway was incommoded the statute was violated, and proposition by defendant that they were authorized to erect them so as not to interfere with proper use of highway, narrowed the issue to whether defendant so erected its poles as to interfere with the other proper uses of the highway. Interstate Independent Tel. & T. Co. v. Towanda, 221 Ill. 299, 77 N. E. 456. Admissions by one defendant, which the attorney making them stated and the court charged, were not to be taken as evidence against a joint defendant, do not constitute error as to the latter. § 4. Custody and conduct of the jury.[40]—In the absence of statute, it is discretionary with the court to permit the jury to separate during the recesses of a civil trial.[41] A new trial will not be granted for misconduct of jurors unless the circumstances raise a reasonable suspicion that the verdict was improperly influenced thereby.[42] Statements made in the presence of jurors and conversations with them, concerning the case on trial, which are not intended to and do not influence their decision, will not vitiate the verdict.[43] Litigants and their attorneys should refrain from seeking the companionship or courting the favor of jurors during the recesses of a trial, but unavoidably encounters without improper design are not ground for a new trial.[44] The court is not bound to order the retirement of the jury during an argument on the admissibility of evidence.[45]

P. 740; Washington-Times Co. v. Downey, 26 App. D. C. 258. Evidence which is admissible only for a particular purpose should be limited to that purpose by proper instructions. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Cherry [Tex. Civ. App.] 17 Tex. Ct. Rep. 29, 97 S. W. 712; Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Worcester [Tex. Civ. App.] 100 S. W. 990. Where evidence is admitted generally, without request that it be limited to the special purpose for which it was offered, a party cannot complain that it was not subsequently limited, and it is discretionary with the court either to submit or withhold such evidence. Paquette v. Prudential Ins. Co. [Mass.] 79 N. E. 250.

39. Especially where such pleadings are self-serving declarations. Breiner v. Nugent [Iowa] 111 N. W. 446. 42. Jurors drinking intoxicants in saloons during trial. Easterly v. Gater [Okl.] 87 P. 853. Judgment of lower court will not be disturbed for misconduct of a juror regarding which the evidence is conflicting. Dysart-Cook Mule Co. v. Reed, 114 Mo. App. 296, 89 S. W. 591. The mere fact that a juror, in the absence of a caution to the contrary, took notes of the testimony during the progress of the trial, does not constitute misconduct on his part and is not ground for a new trial. Palmer v. Cowie, 7 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 46. A statement of a fact not in dispute or material, made by a juror in the jury room, of his personal knowledge, is not misconduct requiring a new trial. Douglas v. Smith [Neb.] 106 N. W. 173. An affidavit that a juror was heard to refer to a witness as having gone into bankruptcy and left the state without showing that his evidence was rejected, fails to show misconduct of the jurors. Austin v. Smith [Iowa] 109 N. W. 289. That certain jurors casually saw the barn in dispute, in an action by the owner against the architects, was not ground for a new trial where they were not influenced. Dysart-Cook Mule Co. v. Reed, 114 Mo. App. 296, 89 S. W. 591. Affidavits charging misconduct of jury made solely on information and belief are valueless as evidence, and affidavits of jurors in reply cannot be deemed proof of misconduct except so far as affirmatively showing it. People v. Feld [Cal.] 86 P. 1100. Where the jury brings in a verdict for plaintiff in an action for breach of contract, without assessing any damage, it is proper for the court to instruct them to retire and assess the damages according to the charge. Woodbury v Winestine [Conn.] 64 A. 221. A new trial will not be granted an accused on the ground of misconduct of the jury in reading newspaper articles commenting adversely on him, unless it be shown that the articles came to the knowledge of the jurors. There is no presumption that newspaper accounts are read by the jury. People v. Feld [Cal.] 86 P. 1100: Though a juror know of a newspaper article commenting on his connection with the trial, it is not prejudicial error, in the absence of proof that he was influenced thereby. Id.

43. Meriwether v. Publishers: Knapp & Co., 120 Mo. App. 354, 97 S. W. 257. The presence of a person not a member of the jury in the jury box and also in the jury room during a temporary retirement is not ground for a mistrial, when it affirmatively appears that his presence was due to a mistake on his part, and no communication passed between him and any member of the jury. Southern R. Co. v. Brown, 126 Ga. 1, 54 S. E. 911. A verdict for defendant should be set aside where, during trial, the foreman was entertained by defendant's agent, and after the verdict several jurors were treated to liquor and thanked for what they had done by the agent. McGill Bros. v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. [S. C.] 55 S. E. 216.

44. It is not fatal error for a party to converse with and laugh at the jokes of jurors during recess in the absence of attempted or resulting influence. McGraw v. O'Neil [Mo. App.] 101 S. W. 132. It is imprudent and improper for counsel to drink with jurors during the course of a trial. But in the absence of attempted or resulting influence of the jurors by such means, mere drinking of counsel with the jurors is not reversible error, where opposing counsel knew of it without raising any objection until near end of trial. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Masterson, 29 Ky. L. R. 829, 96 S. W. 534. It is improper for the foreman of the jury to try to find out how the jury stood on a former trial of the case. Prewitt v. Southwestern Tel. & T. Co.]Tex. Civ. App.] 101 S. W. 812.

45. Illinois Central R. R. Co. v. White-

It is largely discretionary with the trial court what papers shall be taken out by the jury,[46] and they may be permitted to take the pleadings to their room,[47] and also written instructions.[48] The discretion of the court as to whether papers in evidence shall be taken out by the jury on retiring is not reviewable unless abused.[49] But an erroneous refusal to permit the jury to take proper papers to their room will be presumed by the appellate court to be prejudicial.[50] It is not error to refuse a request that each party give to jury memoranda of amounts claimed.[51]

Allowance of a view.[52]—In most states it is within the discretion of the court to permit a view,[53] but where a view of premises by the jury might aid them in determining a material question, it is error to overrule a motion therefor.[54]

View by court.[55]—It is erroneous for a judge in an injunction proceeding to inspect the premises in question without the consent of the parties, if such inspection forms part of the proceedings and affects his judgment.[56]

Where the court has stated the issues raised by the pleadings, it is not error to suggest to the jury that they read over the pleadings to see clearly what issues are raised. Franklin v. Atlanta & C. 48. Under the North Carolina statute providing that written instructions may be taken out by the jury on request of either party, it is proper to permit them to be taken out on request of one of jurors, and where some of them are omitted by oversight, without attention being called thereto, or exception at the time, such omission will be considered waived. Gaither v. Carpenter [N. C.] 55 S. E. 625. But a refusal to permit the jury to take the general charge to the jury room is not error, where the court was not requested to reduce the charge to writing, but did so for his own convenience and protection. Kauffman Brew Co. v. Betz, 8 Ohio C. C. (N. S.) 64.

49. Reports, checks, and weight cards of agent showing shortage, may be taken out by jury, if helpful in deciding question of embezzlement. Stone Mill. Co. v. McWilliams [Mo. App.] 98 S. W. 828. It is not error for the court to allow the jury to take to their room a volume of reported decisions containing mortality and annuity tables, with the caution that it was not before them for any other purpose, in the absence of request for instructions on the subject. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Taylor, 125 Ga. 454, 54 S. E. 622. Where it appeared after the jury had retired that certain models, which had not been placed in evidence, were in the jury room, the court immediately recalled the jury, and finding that they had already reached their verdict before obtaining the models, properly refused to set aside the verdict. This article does not treat of trust deeds, so called, given as security for a debt or, more accurately, security deeds with power of sale,[57] or of charitable gifts,[58] or the construction of the trust as violating the laws of perpetuities and accumulations.[59] Trustees of bankrupts[60] and of incompetents[61] are also treated elsewhere.

§ 1. Definitions and distinctions.[62]—A trust is a right of property, real or personal, held by one party for the benefit of another,[63] and must be distinguished from other fiduciary relations,[64] and from assignments for the benefit of creditors.[65]

There is implied in a trust two estates or interests, one equitable and one legal; one person as trustee holding legal title, while another is cestui que trust.[66] Though no particular formality is required in the creation of a trust, yet the transaction out of which it is claimed to arise must show a confidence reposed in another as distinguished from a legal right.[67] The elements of the various kinds of trusts will be specifically treated later.

§ 2. Express trusts. Nature and elements.[68]—In order to have a valid trust there must be a designated and certain trust fund,[69] a designated beneficiary[70] or purpose,[71] and herein a trust is to be distinguished from an absolute conveyance for certain purposes,[72] and hence it follows that the fact, that property given a corporation is to be devoted to the furtherance of the corporate purposes does not create a trust.[73] A trust will not, however, be declared void because of some future contingency which will render its object uncertain.[74] As a general rule, equity will not permit a trust to fail for want of a trustee.[75] While delivery of the subject-matter of the trust to the beneficiary is not essential,[76] still there must be an actual delivery or legal assignment to the trustee with the intention of passing title to the trustee as such,[77] though the passing of such title may be deferred trust and not an assignment for the benefit of creditors. Ives v. Sanguinetti [Ariz.] 85 P. 480. See Assignments for Benefit of Creditors, 7 C. L. 286.

66. Held no trust where on sale of land it was provided that on sale at increased price grantor was to have one third of increase. Allen v. Rees [Iowa] 110 N. W. 583. That one agreed to pay for land in necessaries furnished to the grantors during their lives up to a stated amount, any unpaid portion at their death going to their heirs in installment payments, held no trust. Maxwell v. Wood [Iowa] 111 N. W. 203.

67. Bateman v. Ward [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 933, 93 S. W. 508. Where defendant conveyed land to railroad company for plaintiff's benefit for which plaintiff agreed to pay certain sum as soon as railroad accepted proposition to build to certain town, held that further agreement that if plaintiff paid money and railroad failed to build line defendant would refund money, or make or cause to be made to plaintiff a deed to the land, did not create express trust in favor of plaintiff, but merely a legal right. Id. Deed in which grantors warranted title generally except as against dower interest of former owner's widow, which claim for dower grantee was required to procure without cost to grantors, held not to create trust in favor of widow or lien upon lot as security for value of lien dower interest. Where, in an action against defendant for an accounting as to moneys paid to him, to be used for the benefit of plaintiff, it is alleged that the moneys were to be used for purposes unknown to plaintiff, such allegation imports a gift rather than the creation of a trust. New York Life Ins. Co. v. Hamilton, 102 N. Y. S. 771. 77. Evidence that decedent while on his death bed delivered property to plaintiff with directions to give it to third person in case he died held insufficient to show express trust, since there was no present parting with title or intention to vest same immediately in trustee. Godard v. Conrad [Mo. App.] 101 S. W. 1108. Where an insurance policy is enclosed in an envelope and delivered with instructions not to open until something happened to the donor, being subject to recall, does not constitute a declaration of trust. until the happening of an event certain.[78] While a time for termination is not essential,[79] still neither a limitation of the term of the trust not conflicting with the law of perpetuities [80] nor a power of revocation [81] will affect its validity, nor will the fact that there is no limitation.[82] The absence of a power of revocation creates no presumption against the validity of the settlement.[83] That large discretionary powers are conferred on the trustee,[84] and that he is, under the terms of the will, relieved from giving a bond or accounting,[85] does not invalidate the trust. Like any other transaction, the creation of the trust must be free from fraud and it may be questioned in this regard, in the absence of ratification, at any time and by any one interested.[86] So long as one retains control over the property, he may fasten a trust upon it.[87]

An express trust is one created by agreement, and is one which defines and limits the uses and purposes to which certain property shall be devoted, and defines the duties of the trustee as to its control, arrangement, and disposition.[88] It follows that where a person accepts money or property to be used by him for the benefit of some other person or persons, or for the advancement of some lawful enterprise, such money or property constitutes an express trust.[89] While there must be some unequivocal act or declaration showing an intention to create a trust,[90] no particular form of words is necessary,[91] it being sufficient if the expressions used unequivocally show the intention to create a trust.[92] The use of the words "trust" or "trustee" is not essential.[93] The intention of the settler governs,[94] hence it is immaterial that the provisions of a will creating the trust follow an absolute devise of the estate to the beneficiaries.[95] If the settler, even if there be no valuable consideration, makes an explicit declaration of a trust, duly executed, with the intention of being obligatory upon him, equity will enforce such trust;[96] but if it be a mere agreement, without consideration, to execute an agreement declaratory of a trust, courts will not enforce it.[97] And this rule should apply with special force to a mere promise to execute an agreement out of which a trust relation might arise between the settler and the promise, when the promise is conditioned upon the promisee executing on his part a collateral obligation, which he refuses to do.[98] While as a general rule notice to the beneficiary is not essential to the validity of the trust,[99] still a mere declaration of trust by a voluntary settler, not communicated to the donee and assented to by him, is not sufficient to perfect a trust, especially where the settler retains possession and control over the property,[1] and in this regard notice to the parent of a minor is not notice to the latter.[2]

Validity of purpose.[3]—A trust may be created for any purpose not illegal which the settler may deem wise or expedient in order to carry out his intentions.[4] The validity of a trust is frequently to be determined by the laws of the state where it is to be administered.[5] A trust to pay an annuity is valid.[6]

Spendthrift trust.[7]—While ordinarily an active trust may be created as a protection to the beneficiary because of his inexperience, improvidence, or inabliity to manage his estate,[8] still a trust under which the beneficiary is entitled to the corpus of the estate whenever he wants it is void as to his creditors.[9] In the absence of words expressly creating a spendthrift trust, it must appear that the donor's intention will be frustrated by the subjection of the income to the claims of creditors.[10]

Establishment by parol and extrinsic evidence.[12]—In order to establish an express trust by parol the evidence must be full, clear, and convincing.[13]

Bank deposits in trust.[14]—Opening a bank account in trust for another not a fictitious person[15] will, when coupled with corroborating statements of the settler, often create a trust.[16] While not controlling, still failure of the depositor to give the beneficiary notice of the trust,[17] and the retention of the deposit book,[18] are facts to be considered as tending to show a lack of intention to create a trust.

21. Trust held intended to continue during lives of all or either of the beneficiaries, so that it did not terminate at the death of last of named trustees, though parts of deed may consider all the facts and circumstances surrounding its execution [22] and the construction placed upon it by the parties in interest.[23] It seems that the parties may by their practical construction of a doubtful instrument affect the creation or validity of a trust.[24] The general rule is well established that when property at a future date is to pass to a certain class of persons it will be distributed amongst the persons who compose such class at the date of distribution.[25] In construing a deed of trust conveying land in trust with a remainder interest to the life beneficiary's heirs, it will be assumed that the grantor knew that the lines of inheritance were governed by statute and subject to change at any time, and that he intended to throw the responsibility of selection of heirs on the law existing at the time of the death of the life beneficiary.[26] Where a trust is created in mixed property for the benefit of the "heirs at law" of a certain person, only those who would take the real estate if the ancestor were intestate can be considered "heirs at law."[27] In most states a legally adopted child of a deceased person will be deemed an heir of such person,[28]

Where deed conveyed land in trust for grantor for life, with remainder to her heirs if she died intestate, but subject to any disposition she might make by will or by deed in nature of a last will and testament, held that grantor had only life estate, with power of appointment, and no reversionary interest, and she and trustee could not convey fee. Fehr Brew. Co. v. Johnston, 30 Ky. L. R. 211, 97 S. W. 1107. Reservation of power of appointment by deed in nature of will, that is by deed in nature of gift to take effect at grantor's death, held not to authorize disappointment of remaindermen by deed not partaking of that nature. Id. Where a deed appropriated certain securities in trust to apply the income to designated objects during the grantor's life, and to other objects after his death, it should be construed as creating two independent, successive, and not concurrent, trusts; the invalidity of one having no effect on the other. Robb v. Washington & Jefferson College, 185 N. Y. 485, 78 N. E. 359. Children of decedent conveyed certain of his realty to widow in fee, and she executed deed therefor to one of them in trust for her benefit for life, with remainder in fee to children, issue of deceased children to take parent's share. Deed provided that property was not to be sold by trustee without written consent of life tenant and children. Held that intention was to limit right to veto sale to beneficial owners at time of contemplated sale, and that death of one of the children intestate leaving widow, but without issue, did not terminate power of sale, but sale with consent of survivors, to whom deceased child's interest descended, subject to widow's dower, and widow, passed good title. Easy Payment Property Co. v. Vonderheide, 29 Ky. L. R. 782, 96 S. W. 449. In any event, if trustee and four beneficiaries were regarded as joint donees of power of sale under trust deed, power being one coupled with an interest would survive to remaining donees on death of one of them. Id. Provision in deed of trust held to create relation of landlord and tenant between purchaser at sale under such deed and grantor, and to entitle latter to month's notice to surrender possession, it being presumed that, as owner, he was in possession at time of sale. Cushman v. Cushman, 102 N. Y. S. 258.

25. Gilliam v. Guaranty Trust Co., 186 N. Y. 127, 78 N. E. 697. A deed of trust conveyed land to a trustee in trust for a beneficiary named for life, "and after her decease to her heirs at law," held that the heirs at the time of the beneficiary's death, and not her heirs at the time of the execution of the deed, were entitled to the remainder. Id. In the absence of a plain intent to the contrary, a trust for the heirs at law of a testator will be construed as meaning those who are such at the decease of the life tenant. Gardner v. Skinner [Mass.] 80 N. E. 825. Where a trust was created for the benefit of one for life, and after her death, if she left a husband, to her appointee, and, in default of appointment, to the husband for life, and on his decease or on the life beneficiary's death, leaving no husband, in trust for her heirs at law, held the heirs should be determined as of the life beneficiary's death. but, the grantor being a third party, an adopted child is not an "heir" of the grantee.[29] Where the deed of trust contains two clauses repugnant to each other, the first prevails, and the grantor is not allowed by any subsequent part of the deed to restrict the grant made.[30]

Active and passive trusts.[31]—A trust is active when the interposition of the trustee is necessary to carry out its purpose with respect to immediate or remote beneficiaries.[32] A trust is passive when the trustee has no duty to perform, or when the trust serves no purpose, or none that would not be equally served without it.[33]

The instrument declaring or creating the trust and the sufficiency thereof.[34]—Except as controlled by the statute of frauds,[35] it is not necessary that the trust should be declared in any particular form, or that a writing should have been framed for the purpose of acknowledging the trust; but such a declaration may be found in letters, memoranda, or writings of the most informal nature, provided the object and nature of the trust appear with sufficient certainty therefrom.[36] A written, sealed declaration of trust is certainly sufficient.[37] That the trust is not to take effect until after the creator's death does not render it a testamentary disposition requiring an execution as such,[38] and this is true though the trust instrument contains a power of revocation.[39]

Lannes v. Fletcher [Tex.] 101 S. W. 1076. Trust to invest and reinvest, and to collect rents and profits, and pay income to certain persons, held an active trust. People v. Wells, 103 N. Y. S. 874. An instrument appointing an agent to receive all sums to which the person executing the instrument might thereafter become entitled as residuary legatee, and to invest and reinvest the same, creates an active, continuing, express trust. Anderson v. Fry, 102 N. Y. S. 112. Where claimants of conflicting locations of mining property, in order to adjust the controversy among themselves, conveyed to a designated trustee, under a written agreement specifying the proportion of the respective interests of the owners, with authority in the trustee to lease or sell the property upon the written request of two-thirds in value of the beneficial owners, held an active trust. Reed v. Munn [C. C. A.] 148 F. 737. Testamentary trust held not a dry one, since trustee was required to manage estate, pay taxes, etc., and had discretionary power, with written consent of beneficiary, to sell property only on condition that he reinvest proceeds. Adair v. Adair's Trustee, 30 Ky. L. R. 859, 99 S. W. 925. Testamentary trust to sell and dispose of property according to best interests of beneficiaries, etc., held an executory one, within meaning of Civ. Code 1895, § 3156, during lifetime of testator's wife, so that it did not become executed as to her by virtue of married woman's act, and she took no vested legal interest in property which she could convey by deed. Everett v. Jordan [Ala.] 43 So. 811. A will leaving property in trust to the widow, to be used by her until the testator's youngest child should become twenty-one years old, when it should be divided between the widow and children equally, creates a passive trust. Jacoby v. Jacoby, 188 N. Y. 124, 80 N. E. 676. Where beneficiary had equitable estate in fee with right to possession, trust held passive one. Morgan v. Morgan [W. Va.] 55 S. E. 389. Where land was conveyed to one "as trustee" with habendum to "his own use and behoof," held that grantee took legal and equitable title in fee, word "trustee" being surplusage, and his conveyance passed fee, though not signed as trustee. 37, 38, 39. Robb v. Washington & Jefferson College, 185 N. Y. 485, 78 N. E. 359.

Necessity of writing.[40]—An express trust in personalty need not be in writing,[41] and in a few states the same is true of realty, though in most states, in the absence of fraud or mistake,[42] an express trust in realty must be evidenced by a written instrument,[43] unless dispensed with by part performance.[44] There is a conflict as to whether a conveyance absolute in form may be shown by parol to be in trust.[45] Though express trust cannot be added to absolute deed of realty by parol evidence, it is good defense to suit to set aside conveyance as in fraud of creditors that land was conveyed to debtor by deed absolute, but with parol direction to hold same in trust for debtor's grantee.[46] Parol declarations, when competent for purpose of establishing a trust in realty conveyed, must clearly indicate an intention to attach to the legal title, at the time it passes to the grantee, a trust, the terms of which should be sufficiently definite to enable the court to enforce its execution.[47] If enforceable at all, an oral trust in land is only enforceable in equity.[48]

W. 613. Parol evidence is inadmissible to establish an express trust in land. So held where husband purchased land, taking title in his wife's name under the promise that it should be held for their joint benefit. There was no evidence of fraud. Kinley v. Kinley [Colo.] 86 P. 105. Where one paid his own money for land and took title in his own name under an agreement that he was to hold it for the use of another and later convey it to him, the agreement created an express trust which could not be proved by parol, but which to be valid must be executed in the same manner as deeds are executed. Krebs v. Lauser [Iowa] 110 N. W. 443. Parol evidence held inadmissible on behalf of forced heirs to show agreements whereby holder of legal title to realty held same in trust for their ancestor. Wells v. Wells, 116 La. 1065, 41 So. 316.

44. In order to justify enforcing an oral trust in lands where the statute of frauds is pleaded, the complainant must establish by clear proof that he took possession under the terms of the promise and made valuable and lasting improvements on the lands with his own means, relying upon the promise, with the knowledge of the promisor. Contemporaneous parol agreement made at time of execution and delivery of conveyance of realty, absolute upon its face, that vendee will hold property in trust for certain person, is not within statute of frauds, and, aside from rights of creditors of original vendor and innocent purchasers from vendee, vests in beneficiary of trust valid equitable title to property conveyed, which court of equity will enforce. Insurance Co. v. Waller [Tenn.] 95 S. W. 811.

That it cannot. In re Hall's Estate [Iowa] 110 N. W. 148. When a deed of conveyance is executed and delivered, the intention that the grantee is not to enjoy the beneficial estate, but that a trust is to result, must appear expressly or by implication from the terms of the deed, and no extrinsic evidence of the grantor's intention is admissible unless fraud or mistake is averred. Holton v. Holton [N. J. Eq.] 65 A. 481. If the deed recites a pecuniary consideration, though only nominal, that recitation raises a conclusive presumption of an intention that the grantee is to take the beneficial estate and destroys the possibility of a trust resulting to the grantor, and no extrinsic evidence will be admitted to show that there was in fact no consideration, unless fraud or mistake is shown. L. 84), which provides that a deed absolute on its face shall not be reduced to a mortgage except by a defeasance in writing signed, sealed, and delivered at the time, and recorded within sixty days, does not render void or ineffective an unrecorded declaration of trust executed by an absolute grantee to the grantor merely because one of the purposes of the trust was to sell some property and from the proceeds repay the trustee for certain advances. Linton v. Safe Deposit & Title Guaranty Co., 147 F. 824.

§ 3. Implied trusts.[50]—Words of desire or request are generally [51] but not always [52] deemed insufficient to create a trust. A specific trust is not to be lightly imposed upon mere words of recommendation and confidence, or which simply declare the motive for making the deed.[53]

§ 4. Constructive trusts. A. Trusts raised where property is held or obtained by fraud.[54]—A constructive trust is one not created by any words either expressly or impliedly evincing an intention to create a trust, but only by the construction and operation of equity in order to satisfy the demands of justice,[55] and are generally implied from fraud on the part of the alleged trustee.[56] Fraud in securing the Evidence held to support finding that sale of property held by one to whom plaintiff had conveyed his interest therein, under agreement that he should share in profits of sale thereof, to grantee's son was fraudulent, so that plaintiff was entitled to share in profits resulting from subsequent sale by grantee and his son. Chambers v. Thompson [Ark.] 100 S. W. 79. Payee of draft fraudulently issued by employe of bank held to hold proceeds under constructive trust for bank, where he was not shown to be bona fide holder. Clifford Banking Co. v. Donovan Commission Co., 195 Mo. 262, 94 S. W. 527. Evidence held to sustain finding that certain property was purchased by defendant at trustee's sale for joint benefit of himself and plaintiffs, so that latter were entitled to recover their respective interests therein. Haywood v. Scarborough [Tex. Civ. App.] 102 S. W. 469. Fact that money borrowed from plaintiffs and defendant, for which deed of trust was given as security, was applied by borrower to different purpose from that for which it was borrowed, held to afford no excuse for violation by defendant of agreement with plaintiff to purchase property at trustee's sale for benefit of all parties. Id. Purchase of land by plaintiff at public sale pursuant to agreement between himself and other joint owners thereof that he should bid therefor for benefit of all held to create a trust by operation of law for joint benefit of all enforceable against plaintiff at suit of all or any of the beneficiaries. Griffin v. Schlenk [Ky.] 102 S. W. 837. Where creditor became party to contract between heirs of decedent and certain other persons, whereby land of decedent was to be conveyed to certain person in trust to divide proceeds arising from its sale among heirs after paying certain deeds of trust and other claims of the estate, held that he could not, while such agreement was in force, by purchasing land at administrator's sale, destroy heirs' right under contract, but, as respected rights of parties to such contract, administrator's deed conveyed title to him in trust for purposes in that contract expressed, and he became trustee instead of trustee therein named. property is the essential element.[57] One who occupies a fiduciary relation to another in respect to business or property, and who by the use of the knowledge he obtains through that relation or by the betrayal of the confidence reposed in him under it, acquires a title or interest in the subject-matter of the transaction antagonistic to that of his correlate, thereby charges his title or interest with a constructive trust for the latter.[58] The test of such trust is the fiduciary relation and a betrayal of the confidence reposed or some breach of duty imposed under it.[59] It is essential that the alleged trustee consents to assume the relation, though in this connection debtor, where there is in the transaction an element of equity arising from fraud, confidential relation, refraining from bidding at sale, or from further protection of property from sale, gross inadequacy of purchase price, supplying by debtor of part of purchase money, or otherwise, such circumstances may be shown by parol and establish a trust. Patrick v. Kirkland [Fla.] 43 So. 969. Where lessees of land for turpentine purposes, upon being applied to for loan to prevent sale of land on execution, orally agreed with heirs of execution debtor that lessees would bid in land, and, upon repayment by heirs of purchase price with interest, would reconvey it to heirs and pay them usual rent for time during which they held it, and land was sold to lessees for inadequate price and profitably used by them and it was agreed that amount due as rent at time of sale should be credited on purchase price, held that trust in favor of heirs was thereby created, which equiy would enforce. 57. The violation of a parol promise made by a grantee to the grantor to hold land in trust or convey it to a person designated by the grantor does not create a constructive trust in the absence of fraud in procuring the conveyance. Crossman v. Keister, 223 Ill. 69, 79 N. E. 58. Breach of mere verbal promise to purchase land, both parties to have a half interest, held not to raise a constructive trust though claimant had money on deposit with defendant at the time latter purchased land in his own name, the defendant not using any of such funds. Scribner v. Meade [Ariz.] 85 P. 477. Where parties were unable to buy land for lack of money and one of the parties subsequently raised the money on his own note and bought the land, held no constructive trust. Davis v. Davis [Pa.] 65 A. 622. Possession and control of an estate by a surviving spouse with the consent of the executors, who render account therefor, does not though the possession is alleged to be wasteful and without right, render the widower a trustee de son tort. Partner purchasing land in own name and with his own funds, but in violation of a partnership agreement whereby land should belong to the partner, held to create a constructive trust. Koyer v. Willman [Cal.] 90 P. 135. Where on the settlement of partnership affairs on dissolution it is understood that the succeeding partners are to acquire the retiring member's interest in partnership land, and the legal title is not conveyed to them according to the agreement, the title to such interest rests in trust for their benefit. Kyle v. Carpenter [Wis.] 110 N. W. 187. Tenant investigating conditions as to taxes and lessor requesting him to pay same and deduct from rent the amount so paid, held a constructive trust arose where tenant took land in his own name at a purchase made at a tax sale and the lessor was entitled to have the land conveyed to him on payment of amount paid by lessor with interest. Frost v. Perfield [Wash.] 87 P. 117. Where a company executed an assignment of accounts and sold goods to a bank, providing the bank should collect the one and sell the other and apply the proceeds to the payment of the company's notes to the bank, and the president of the bank concealed from the bank such fact, and without authority of his codirectors took possession of the property and used the proceeds for other debts of the company of which he was a stockholder, he constituted himself a trustee de son tort for the bank. Huntington Nat. Bank v. Huntington Distilling Co., 152 F. 240. Complainant who falsely represented that he held an option for a part of a tract of land and agreed to take a part interest as compensation for turning the option over to the defendants held not entitled to recover of defendants who obtained the entire tract at the same price. Barrett v. Miller, 144 Mich. 454, 13 Det. Leg. N. 289, 108 N. W. 396. Webber v. Wannemaker [Colo.] 89 P. 780. To charge a person as trustee by reason of his purchase of land on the theory that when he purchased he was attorney at law for a party claiming the land in a suit involving it, it must appear that he was attorney during the pending of the suit as to such land. Bill held demurrable. Jackson v. Strader [W. Va.] 56 S. E. 177.

acquiescence and acceptance are, however, equivalent to consent.[60] One chargeable with a trust of this nature is a trustee de son tort,[61] wrongdoing being of the essence of the trust relation.[62] There is, however, an exception to the general rule stated in that an agent or trustee may lawfully buy the property of his principal or beneficiary at a judicial sale caused by a third party which he has no part in procuring and over which he has no control.[63] Where an express passive trust is obtained by undue influence, the beneficiary may elect to avoid the entire transaction and hold the trustee under a trust ex maleficio, or to affirm it and insist that the legal title vested in him.[64] Where one holds property from a parent as constructive trustee for other heirs, the fact that he, after the parent's death, agrees to take such property in full for all his interest in the parent's estate does not affect the trust,[65] nor does the fact that, the legal title being in the parent, the trustee inherits an undivided interest therein affect the case.[66]

(§ 4) B. Trusts by equitable construction in the absence of fraud.[67]—When necessary to prevent injustice, equity will construct a trust, though there be no fraud.[68] Equity will not aid one in perpetrating a fraud.[69] Money paid under a mistake of fact will be deemed impressed with a constructive trust.[70] Funds raised by special taxation are deemed impressed with a trust for the purposes of the tax.[71] Where property is conveyed inter vivos subject to a charge in favor of third parties, a corresponding constructive trust arises in favor of such third party.[72] A vendor in a contract of sale is, in equity, a trustee for the vendee from the time of the execution of the agreement,[73] as is also a grantee of the vendor who takes with notice of such contract.[74] Where a joint owner of property deeds the same to his co-owner voluntarily and without consideration, the latter holds the legal title to his co-owner's interest in trust for security of the purchase price.[75]

The title of a purchaser chargeable with a constructive trust is merely voidable at the option of the beneficiary.[78]

A constructive trust is not within the statute of frauds.[77]

A constructive trust is only available, either as a cause of action or defense, in equity.[78]

The proof to establish a constructive trust must be so clear, unequivocal, cogent, and compelling, as to exclude every reasonable doubt from the chancellor's mind.[79]

§ 5. Resulting trusts.[80]—The general rule is that where the purchase money is paid by one person and the legal title to the property is conveyed to another, a trust results in favor of the person furnishing the consideration,[81] and the rule applies to personalty as well as realty,[82] and the purchases made by one's ancestor, title never being conveyed to him.[83] The doctrine of resulting trusts is founded on a presumption of the parties arising from and shown by their acts at the time of the transaction.[84] Hence, where one claims a resulting trust in land held in another's name, it must appear by clear proof that the claimant's money went into the property, that the purchase was made by the claimant or for his account, and that the placing of the title in another was in violation of an agreement between the parties.[85] It is not, however, necessary that the party purchasing the land and taking title in his own name shall intend at the time to hold the equitable title for the other party.[86] A trust will not be raised in opposition to the declaration of the person who advances the money, or the obvious purpose and design of the transaction.[87] Where one buys property taking title as trustee for another and the statute of uses executes such trusts the law will raise a resulting trust in favor of the one advancing the consideration.[88] The trust is not within the statute of frauds.[89] In some states by statute, an agreement between the parties or fraud is essential to the existence of a resulting trust.[90] That the transaction was without fraud in its inception does not prevent its becoming fraudulent upon the subsequent refusal of the trustee to perform.[91]

Brink [Neb.] 110 N. W. 669. No trust, husband paying price and taking title to land bought at commissioner's sale, though deed was made in wife's name. Noel v. Fitzpatrick, 30 Ky. L. R. 1011, 100 S. W. 321. Where husband conveyed land to wife by warranty deed and thereafter the property is sold and his wife receives the consideration and takes a deed to other land and pays therefor by her check on funds, held no resulting trust in husband's favor in the lost land. Oliver v. Sample, 72 Kan. 582, 84 P. 138. Where husband purchased realty with money and proceeds of other personalty belonging to his wife, at time when common-law rule giving him title to all her personalty was in force, held that he would not be regarded as holding it in trust for her or her heirs in absence of clear proof of election on his part to waive his marital rights. Jones v. Jones

In order to create a resulting trust, the payment of the purchase price must have been made before or at the time of the purchase.[94] The common-law rule that a consideration is necessary in a deed of bargain and sale in order to prevent a resulting trust is abrogated by statutes declaring that all conveyances shall pass the fee unless a contrary intention is clearly expressed therein.[95]

Presumption of gift or advancement.[96]—In the absence of evidence to the contrary, where the purchase is under a legal, or in some cases even a moral, obligation to support the grantee named in the deed, equity raises the presumption that the purchase is intended as a gift or advancement,[97] but this presumption is not conclusive and may be overthrown.[98] This rule is only applied, however, where the deed is so taken to the knowledge of the owner of the land,[99] and the latter is sui juris.[1] The doctrine of advancement to an heir applies only in case of intestacy.[2]

Property purchased with trust funds,[3] or with funds held by one by reason of a fiduciary relation, may result,[4] but the mere fact that one loans money to another

Mere payment of money, subsequently, for lands or improvements thereon, creates no lien. Butterfield v. Butterfield, 79 Ark. 164, 95 S. W. 146. Transaction held mere loan. Id. In order to create resulting trust in lands, is not necessary that purchase money be paid on precise date of execution or delivery of deeds. Pearce v. Dyess [Tex. Civ. App.] 101 S. W. 549. Since deed does not take effect until delivery, payment of purchase money made upon such delivery, though at date subsequent to date of execution of deed, is part of original transaction of purchase, and such payment out of funds of another raises resulting trust in his favor. Id. If one contracts for purchase of land in his own name, intending to pay for it out of funds in his hands belonging to another, and at the time pays part of purchase money out of such funds and balance when deed is executed and delivered at a later date, the contract, payment, and execution and delivery of deeds constitute one entire original transaction and resulting trust arises. Lipp v. Fielder [N. J. Err. & App.] 66 A. 189. Where the title to real estate is in a wife, evidence that the funds for its purchase and improvement were furnished by the husband does not afford ground for declaring that she holds in trust for him and his heirs. § 6. The beneficiary.[8] Who may be.—The beneficial donee of property cannot take as a cestui que trust, if he is prohibited from taking the legal title to that property.[9]

His estate, rights, and interests.[10]—The beneficiary takes merely an equitable estate,[11] and the property being conveyed for the benefit of the beneficiary for life and giving him an absolute and unlimited power of disposition and sale, he holds an equitable estate in fee.[12] The interest of the beneficiary is limited by the terms of the instrument creating the trust,[13] and he takes subject to conditions therein stated.[14] In the absence of consent, the trustee of a resulting trust cannot impose any conditions upon the beneficiary's rights of alienation.[15] A provision that the net income from land is in any event to go to the cestui, with power to collect and without any discretionary control in the trustee, conveys to the cestui an equitable estate which, under the rule in Shelley's case, is an equitable fee with the power of appointment merged in the power of alienation.[16] While in most states the rule in Shelley's case has been abolished, there is even in those states some conflict as to whether or not the rule is still applicable to trusts in personal property, the general rule being that in the construction to be given to the trusts created by a settlement of personal property, whether executed voluntarily or upon valuable consideration, there is no inflexible rule of law requiring the application of the rule in Shelley's case but the court should ascertain and carry out the intention of the settlor or donor as expressed in the instrument itself.[17]

The statute of uses,[18] which is a part of the law of almost all states, operates to convey the legal as well as the equitable title to the beneficiary of a passive trust.[19]

Rights between beneficiaries.[20]

Income and principal.[21]—There would seem to be no conflict as to whether surplus earnings of a corporation that are not divided at the date of the trust deed belong to the corpus of the trust as a part of the capital or trust fund, or are income.[22] Dividends declared out of surplus earnings that have accrued since the date of the trust deed are income.[23] If the dividend or surplus is found, in whole or in part, to represent the natural growth and increase in the value of the corporate plant and business, whether the growth and increase took place before or after the trust was created, it is to that extent capital,[24] but if it is found to represent the excess of revenue remaining after the payment of dividends it will be regarded as capital.[25] The court in these transactions concerns itself with the substance of the transaction, and not the form in which the corporation has seen fit to clothe it.[26] As a general rule, cash dividends on corporate stock are regarded as income passing to the life tenant, while stock dividends are treated as capital inuring to the benefit of the remainderman.[27] The declaration of a stock dividend involves the creation and issue of new shares of stock.[28] It follows that a distribution of treasury stock must be treated as a cash dividend.[29] As between remaindermen and life tenants, distribution of assets among stockholders, by corporations in process of liquidation, after dissolution, is to be regarded as capital.[30]

Charges on income.[31]—As a general rule, premiums paid upon bonds are chargeable to the income,[32] but, where the trust estate consists of securities, the trustee cannot establish a sinking fund from the income and profits to provide for depreciation in the securities' values.[33] The cost of preserving unproductive property should be charged to the principal of the estate,[34] but permanent improvements increasing the rental value of the property should be paid out of the income.[35] Commisions for the sale of property should be paid from the income.[36] As a general rule the expense of accounting goes against the corpus of the trust estate.[37] Whether, upon the conversion of unproductive property into productive, life tenants are entitled to a sum equal to the income which should have been paid had the property been productive all the time depends upon the intent of the creator.[38] Where expenses chargeable against the income are by reason of the insufficiency of the income paid out of the capital, they should be made good out of the subsequent income.[39]

Rights of creditors, grantees, mortgagees, and assignees of beneficiary.[40]—Unless prohibited by statute,[41] by express provisions of the instrument creating the trust, or by implication from the nature of the trust,[42] the beneficiary is generally deemed to have an alienable,[43] mortgagable,[44] and, in some cases, a devisable[45] estate, and consequently one subject to seizure and sale under execution.[46] Except where the trustee is given a discretionary power to withhold all benefit from him,[47] the beneficiary's interest is generally liable for his debts,[48] even though the settlor it and buy in the property which was unproductive and involved actual expense for its preservation, such expense should be charged to the corpus of the estate. In re Pitney, 113 App. Div. 845, 99 N. Y. S. 588

43. Where deed creating trust gave wife an equitable estate in fee and right of possession, held that she had full power as incident to such estate to convey same by deed, in which her husband joined as provided by statute, without direction to or intervention of trustee, through deed provided that trustee should dispose of property at such time and in such manner as wife should direct in writing. Morgan v. Morgan [W. Va.] 55 S. E. 389. Deed made by wife and her second husband after death of first husband and trustee, conveying all their right, title, and interest in land, held to give grantee equitable estate in fee. Id.

provides otherwise.[49] Where the income of the estate is left for the support and benefit of the beneficiaries, creditors of the latter cannot reach it,[50] though, no valid directions as to accumulations being given, they may reach the surplus,[51] and this applies to an attorney's lien for recovering such surplus by action on behalf of the beneficiaries.[52] Where a beneficiary is entitled to so much of the income as is necessary for his support, and the trustees allow him an excessive amount, it would seem that unpaid balances thereof in the hands of the trustees, and which exceed the amounts necessary for the beneficiary's support, might be reached by his creditors.[53] In this connection, statutes relating to the income of realty are sometimes held applicable to trusts in personalty.[54] In some states, the right of a beneficiary to enforce the performance of a trust to receive the income of personal property, and to apply it to the use of any person, cannot be assigned.[55] A provision that the beneficiary should not sell property without the trustee's consent applies only to the beneficiary's power to sell his estate or interests,[56] and in such a case a deed by the trustee and beneficiary purporting to convey the fee is a valid deed of the beneficiary's interest.[57] The beneficiary taking an equitable estate in fee, grantee may compel the trustee to convey the legal title.[58] Where a spendthrift trust is terminated before the maturity of a note and mortgage given by the beneficiary on his interest, the note must be paid or the beneficiary must allow sufficient of the trust fund to be set aside to meet it at maturity.[59]

Liability of beneficiary for use of funds.—A life beneficiary wrongfully using and losing the trust funds is liable for the shortage thus created,[60] but having made good such shortage his liability ceases.[61]

Putnam v. Lincoln Safe Deposit Co., 104 N. Y. S. 4. Modifying 49 Misc. 578, 100 N. Y. S. 101.

61. Where the life beneficiary of a trust estate sold securities standing in her name, and the proceeds were used in the purchase of new securities, which are treated as part of the trust estate, and the life beneficiary gives a note on which her estate is charged to balance a shortage, the proceeds of the sale should not be considered a part of the

§ 7. The trustee. Judicial appointment.[62]—The appointment of trustees by the courts is "administering relief" within the meaning of statutes providing for the submission of controversies.[63]

Who may be trustee.[64]—It is sometimes held that the beneficiary of the trust may act as trustee.[65] A married woman may, in most states, act as a trustee,[66] and a husband may act as trustee for his wife.[67]

Who is trustee.—While equity will not permit a trust to fail for want of a trustee[68] still one being given the powers and duties of a trustee he will be so regarded though not specifically called a trustee.[69] The fact that the trustees under a will are also the executors thereof does not affect their character as trustees, the two offices being entirely separate.[70]

Death of trustee.—Upon the death of the trustee before the termination of the trust, the trust follows the legal title[71] subject to the power of the court to appoint a successor.[72]

Succession and judicial appointment of new trustee.[73]—Selection of a new or substituted trustee rests in the discretion of the courts[74] and is not subject to review on appeal.[75] In the absence of an exception the regularity of the proceedings cannot be reviewed on appeal.[76] In the absence of a provision for successorship, the entire estate devolves on the survivor of joint trustees.[77]

which should be guided by considerations of the welfare of the beneficiaries and of the trust estate.[82] A trustee will not be removed for every violation of duty or even breach of the trust, if the fund is in no danger of being lost.[83] There must be a clear necessity for interference to save trust property[84] though, except where resulting from a misconception of his duties,[85] a trustee refusing to act and thereby defeating the very object of the trust will be removed.[86] While mere absence from the state does not disqualify a trustee from acting,[87] still the fact of nonresidence being coupled with lack of interest and charges of excessive fees will warrant the removal of a trustee.[88]

§ 8. Establishment and administration of the trust. A. Nature of trustee's title and establishment of estate.[89]—The trustee of an active trust takes the legal title to the trust estate[90] during the life of the trust,[91] and this is true though the instrument creating the trust contains provisions for revocation.[92] This of course includes the right to possess and use the trust fund for the purposes thereof.[93] But though he has the legal title yet he has no leviable interest in the estate,[94] and the latter, upon the trustee becoming bankrupt, does not pass to his trustee.[95] Until repudiation brought home to the beneficiary the possession of the trustee[96] or his

96. Where trustee entered into possession of land without any other title than that conferred upon him by the deed creating the trust, held that he would be presumed to have taken possession as trustee by virtue of said deed, and not adversely to beneficiary, and that his possession could not become adverse to latter and her heirs without some unequivocal act brought to her knowledge, or knowledge of heirs after her death, show-wife[97] is not adverse to the beneficiary or trust estate. Where necessary for the protection of the estate the court may require the trustee to give security before receiving the estate.[98] The omission to name successors in a trust deed is without significance so far as sales by the original trustee are concerned, and should a new trustee be appointed, he can be empowered to carry out the purpose of the trust so far as is found necessary.[99]

A reconveyance to a trustee as such renders the property part of the trust estates.[1]

(§ 8) B. Discretion and general powers of trustees and judicial control.[2]—While a court of equity will not interfere with a trustee's exercise of discretionary powers unless he abuses such discretion,[3] still, even though the trustee be given almost unlimited discretion and though he be relieved from giving a bond or accounting, a court of equity has full power to prevent mismanagement and to correct any abuses of the trust,[4] and to see that the exercise of the discretion is such as to reasonably benefit the beneficiary and, in some cases, his creditors.[5] It follows that where the size of an annuity fund is left to the discretion of the trustees and the amount settled upon becomes larger than is necessary to produce the surviving annuities, equity can reduce it to a proper amount transferring the excess to the residuary fund.[6] In the exercise of discretionary powers the trustees may avail themselves of the judgment and wishes of the testator.[7] Though as a general rule where the administration of a trust is vested in several trustees, they must all cooperate in the exercise of the powers of their office, and cannot act separately or independently of each other, one may often act as agent for all, and there may be a ratification of the act of one by his associates.[8] Specific powers of trustees depend on the intent of the settlor as evidenced by the wording of the instruments creating the trust.[9]

Judicial instructions.[10]—Where the trustee applies for instructions as to the performance of his duties, acts which he has power to perform, the court will not ordinarily entertain jurisdiction unless some other equity is brought before the court to give a clear jurisdiction in the case.[11] He is not entitled to have the title to land established under the guise of asking for such instructions,[12] and where he is uncertain whether funds in his hands constitute income or principal, he should file an account and have the controverted questions raised by exceptions.[13] Until the determination of such question it is error for the court to order him to pay out such funds as either income or principal.[14]

(§ 8) C. Management of estate and investments.[15]—It is the duty of the trustee to exercise reasonable care in the management of the trust fund, and he is responsible for any loss resulting from his failure to do so.[16] He should protect the trust estate and where possible pay off prior liens out of the income,[17] and where necessary to protect the estate it will be presumed that he has done his duty in this regard.[18] Statutes and rules of law limiting the character of investments for trust funds have no application to a trust voluntarily created by a donor in prohibited investments.[19] The trustee has no right to speculate with trust property,[20] and a power to invest does not confer authority to continue a speculation commenced by the testator,[21] and the good faith of the trustee does not excuse such action.[22] Trustees who purchase land without authority take the title to the same as individuals though the deed runs to them as trustees.[23] It already appearing that the trustee entered into contract as trustee and for the benefit of the estate, the estate, and not the trustee individually, is bound thereby,[24] and such contract may be enforced in equity against such estates, though such estates are not legal entities.[25] Where trustee contracts as such it will be presumed that he is acting for the estate.[26] Additions to capital are subject to the terms of the trust the same as the original principal.[27] Mere discussion by trustees and apparent agreement of majority as to the exercise of discretionary powers is insufficient to constitute an execution of the trust.[28]

Estoppel of beneficiaries to question acts.[29]—The fact that no objections have been made to the trustee's disregard of the provisions of the trust will not justify the trustee in further disregarding the explicit directions of the will.[30]

(§ 8) D. Creation of charges, mortgage and lease of estate.[31]—A trustee stands upon a different footing from an executor or administrator as regards the transfer of securities.[32] Administration is no part of his duties; his office is to hold and safely keep the trust funds in accordance with the terms of the instrument creating the trust.[33] If he transfers or pledges securities, it must be in pursuance of an express authority contained in the trust itself,[34] or by virtue of an authority implied from the nature of said trust or the character of the securities in his hands.[35] It follows that one taking a pledge of securities from a trustee does so at his peril,[36] and the trustee's act being unauthorized and he failing to account for the proceeds, the pledgee may be compelled to reassign the securities to the trust estate.[37] Where the beneficiaries of an express trust expressly authorize the incurring of certain liabilities and agree to pay therein they are liable therefor and may be sued direct.[38]

Power to lease.[39]—A power to sell does not include a power to lease or license.[40]

Mortgages.[41]—Where a trust is created for the support and maintenance of the beneficiary the trustee has no power to assign or mortgage the trust estate in the absence of express authority authorizing him so to do.[42] A trustee being authorized to sell and dispose of trust property and reinvest the proceeds, he can give a mortgage for the purchase money or any part thereof,[43] but this does not authorize the giving of a second mortgage for the unpaid portion of the purchase price with accrued interest and other debts not effective as against the interest of the beneficiary.[44] Though a trustee has no power to mortgage the premises, still money paid the estate under a mortgage executed by him may, it seems, be recovered of the estate.[45]

26. Presumption that goods were purchased by defendant in his capacity as trustee arising from fact that he signed note given for purchase price as trustee held not overcome by his statement that at time goods were bought nothing was said about his buying them as trustee. Riggins v. Boyd Mfg. Co., 123 Ga. 232, 51 S. E. 434. Even if he could show undisclosed intention to buy part of goods for trust estate and part for himself individually, in order to relieve estate he was bound to show how much he bought for each, and what contract price was. (§ 8) E. Sale of property.[46]—The rights of the trustee to sell the property depends upon the intention of the settlor,[47] and hence a power of sale is implied where the manifest intent of the settlor requires that the property be sold in order to carry out the provisions of the will.[48] Where provision is made for the use of the income and property is received as income the trustee is authorized to sell the same.[49] So also a power to hold property invested and pay over income confers a power to sell.[50] Where the trust instrument indicates an intention that certain property shall he held and used to produce income during the lives of stated persons while other property might be sold after the expiration of a short period of time, the latter should be sold first to pay debts.[51] A power of sale vested in the trustee of a passive trust, executed by the statute of uses, is of no effect.[52] As to what constitutes a valid exercise of a power of sale largely depends upon the facts of the case.[53] While the trustees cannot delegate the power of sale to an agent it seems that they may by ratification validate a sale so made.[54] Trustees holding the legal title to land can only act jointly in making deeds or agreements for the sale thereof,[55] the consent or ratification of the majority being essential to the validity of the act.[56] In some states, where a married woman is trustee she may convey the property without her husband joining.[57] An illegal conveyance conveys no title,[58] but where a trustee is clothed with the legal title, and is not restrained by the terms of the trust, a conveyance by him, although in violation of the trust, carries the legal title and the beneficiaries must seek their remedy in equity.[59] And in a suit by heirs of the beneficiaries attacking the conveyance, the plaintigs have the burden of showing that the trustee violated the terms of his trust.[60] Where a sale of property is constructively fraudulent as to the beneficiaries,[61] a suit may be maintained if reason-

47. Where property is devised for certain purposes the fulfillment of which has become impossible or improbable and the trust instrument contemplates a right in the trustees to sell after the expiration of a certain time, it is proper for the court to allow the sale of such property after the expiration of the time. 61. Where a trustee under a will conveys trust property to another, and it is imme-ably brought,[62] to set the sale aside. Mere inadequacy of price is not in itself sufficient ground for vacating the sale.[63] One may become estopped to question the validity of the sale.[64] A court of chancery in a suit to set aside a sale has power to take an accounting between the parties and to fix the terms upon which relief is granted, though there be only a general prayer for relief and no prayer specifically asking for an accounting.[65] Deeds by trustees not delivered until their authority has expired by limitation are void.[66] Except where the power of sale is absolute,[67] confirmation by the court is generally required.[68]

Under the statutes of most states a sale may be ordered by the court on the application of all parties in interest,[69] and where beneficial to the parties the court may order that it be sold at private sale.[70] Such a sale is a judicial one, even though made prior to the obtaining of the order,[71] and hence the purchaser failing to comply therewith he may be ordered to show cause why the property should not be resold at his expense and risk.[72] In such case the decree ordering resale must be certain as to the amount to be paid and in this connection that is certain which can be made so.[73] Cases dealing with the evidence are shown below.[74]

diately reconveyed to him individually, the transaction is a constructive fraud, voidable at the election of the beneficiaries under the will. Chorrmann v. Bachmann, 104 N. Y. S. 151. Where a trustee under a will who was not bound to sell land devised for a trust fund at any specific time and there was no necessity for haste, sold the land at a time when he knew a contest of the will was impending, whereby the land sold for a grossly inadequate sum to purchasers who knew they were buying trust property and of the pending will contest, the sale was such a constructive fraud on the right of the cestuis que trustent named in the will as entitled them to have the same vacated. Beall v. Dingman [Ill.] 81 N. E. 366. Evidence in suit to set aside sale held sufficient to show that the purchasers knew at the time of the purchase of a proposed contest of the will, and that on account of such pending contest, it was an unfavorable time to sell the land. any overreaching, will place the parties in statu quo.[91] Transactions whereby the trustee acquires an interest in the trust estate are generally deemed constructively fraudulent as to the beneficiary,[92] and hence voidable by the latter,[93] but, being merely voidable, the transaction is deemed valid until the beneficiary elects to avoid it.[94] From this it follows that such a transaction may be ratified and when once ratified an action cannot be maintained by the beneficiary or his personal representatives to avoid it.[95] The presumption of fraud arising from a purchase of trust property by the trustee is an equitable presumption and is not available at law.[96] A trustee may purchase the trust property at a judicial sale brought about by a third party, which he has taken no part in procuring and over which he can have no control.[97] The sole holder of joint interests left in his exclusive control is bound to the underlying rule that neither directly nor indirectly, nor by any artifice whatever, can the beneficiary be deprived of his share in the net profits of the result of the working out the joint interests,[98] and where the common properties of the trustee and beneficiary have been dealt with together, the burden rests on the trustee to vindicate the transaction and the courts will scrutinize it with great severity.[99] Where a trustee conveys property as such to secure a personal obligation, his grantee acquires no title by which he can question the title of the cestuis que trustent.[1] A trustee using the trust funds for its own profit, he is liable for the legal rate of interest irrespective of the fact that he did not make that much,[2] and noninterference will not estop them to claim such interest.[3] A suit to recover profits arising out of a trust even though the trust has worked itself into cash, thus affording a covenant remedy at law.[4] Upon a recovery being awarded as against the trustee, interest should be added at a fair market rate.[5] As between trustees and cestuis que trustent, laches can hardly ever be said to afford a defense unless for the time when the facts are fully known and understood.[6] The action being based on fraud, limitations do not generally start to run until the discovery of the fraud.[7]

§ 12. Actions and controversies by and against trustees.[8]—In most states the trustee of an express trust may sue in his own name[9] without joining the beneficiaries, the suit in no way affecting the trustee's relation with the beneficiary.[10] A foreign trustee may sue without previous authority from the courts.[11] Trustees may be sued in their representative capacity for money received by them in that capacity under a contract for the sale of premises coming to them as part of the trust estate and to which they are unable to give good title,[12] but such rule does not authorize an action against them for damages on account of counsel fees, and the examination of title to property which, without having good title, they contracted to sell.[13] The general rules of pleading apply.[14] In a suit by the trustee the complaint should show the nature of the trust and that it is an active one.[15] A court of equity has inherent power, independent of statutory provisions, in the administration of a trust estate to make allowances therefrom to parties engaged in litigation in respect thereto when such litigation is beneficial to the fund,[16] but such allowances are made only to persons acting en autre droit for faithful discharge of their trusts.[17] Generally, in the absence of mismanagement or bad faith, costs are chargeable against the estate.[18]

§ 13. Compensation and expenses.[19]—The trustee is entitled to reasonable compensation for his services. The compensation of trustees is to be determined by the responsibility incurred and the service and labor performed, requiring the amount of the estate and the responsibility thereby imposed to be considered.[20] Trustees are generally entitled to commissions on the entire property passing through their hands, though statutes and circumstances frequently alter the rule.[21] In the case of a continuous trust the trustee, except in extraordinary circumstances or when the instrument whereby the trust is created so indicates, cannot diminish the fund which is to create the income during the life of the trust.[22] Hence, while fees for collecting and paying over the increase are a fit charge upon such increase and may properly be deducted from it,[23] still the compensation for the labor, care, and responsibility pertaining to the conservation of the capital itself are properly charged to it and can be deducted therefrom only on the termination of the trust or the particular trustee's relation to it.[24] Where real estate has increased in value above its assessment at the death of the testator by the natural growth of the city, testamentary trustees who received their regular commissions on the sale of the real estate are not entitled to additional compensation based on such increase.[25] In Pennsylvania a trustee is not entitled to commissions on the capitalized amount of a ground rent which is an incumbrance on the property and which is included in the price of the real estate sold out of which it is payable.[26] The court may, in its discretion, withhold compensation from the trustee for misconduct resulting in loss to the cestui que trust.[27]

Attorney's fees and expenses.[28]—Frequently the reasonable expenses of litigation are chargeable to the estate.[29] The trustee is entitled to reasonable counsel fees,[30] but in the absence of a special contract, counsel for a trustee cannot generally recover for services other than legal ones.[31] Other reasonable necessary expenses should be allowed.[32]

21. Where testamentary trustees sell real estate free from all incumbrances and receive the amount of a mortgage and pay it over to the mortgagee, they are entitled to commissions on all money passing through their hands. In re Brennan's Estate [Pa.] 64 A. 537. Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2730, 2802 and 3320, as amended in 1904, where trustees received securities in 1893 and accounted after the amendment, they were entitled to commission on the entire capital of the trust received. Robertson v. De Brulatour, 188 N. Y. 301, 80 N. E. 938. A trustee for the benefit of creditors, who purchased property on foreclosure sale for the benefit of such creditors, was entitled to be reimbursed what he had paid to acquire the property and not merely so much thereof as was required to satisfy the mortgage. Elsert v. Bower, 102 N. Y. S. 707. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 3320, as amended by Laws 1904, p. 1921, the value of unsold real estate held in trust cannot be considered in determining whether or not the trust fund exceeds $100,000 in value for the purpose of determining the trustee's commission. § 14. Accounting, distribution, and discharge.[33]—The right to an accounting is not an absolute one but is based on equitable principles.[34] Where a beneficiary of an annuity has been paid his annuities in full, he is not entitled to an accounting.[35] A trustee must account regardless of the regularity of his appointment.[36] Where trustees under a will sold real estate for part cash and part reservation of ground rent, there was no conversion of the real estate represented by the ground rent and the trustees must account for it as real estate and not as personalty.[37]

Jurisdiction of accounting and distribution.[38]—Where the trust is created before or at the time of the receipt of money by the trustee, an action at law for money had and received will not lie, and hence an equitable action for an accounting can be maintained.[39] The jurisdiction of specific count is largely regulated by statute [40] or former proceedings in the matter.[41] Lapse of time does not bar an action for accounting against the trustee of an active, continuing trust,[42] nor is the time for bringing such action affected by a void or fraudulent assignment of the fund to the trustee.[43]

Credits and charges.[44]—The trustee is chargeable with the entire estate less proper credits.[45] He must also account for all profits made.[46] Payments made with the beneficiary's consent may properly be allowed him.[47] Where business ploy agents, etc., including a particular trust company, held that services of such company should be paid for out of income of estate and not out of commission allowed trustee. Wilder v. Hast, 29 Ky. L. R. 1181, 96 S. W. 1106. Held that charge for fees of clerk of orphans' court for filing trustee's account should have been allowed. Mylin's Estate, 32 Pa. Super. Ct. 504.

Where mortgage was assigned to testamentary trustees which have interest at the rate of 5 per cent and they failed to record the assignment for three years, they cannot say that the investment was only at the rate of four and four-tenths per cent where there is no legal proof of a reduction in interest. In re Brennan's Estate [Pa.] 64 A. 537. Where an entire estate was put in trust, the income to be paid to the widow until remarriage, the trustees could not, on such remarriage, diminish the corpus of the estate by deducting therefrom money paid by the widow for the support of her daughter during the existence of the trust. 46. Where corporation was developed by means of loans made by the stockholders and a stockholder sold some of his stock to another, holding such stock as trustee, held on the corporate property being sold at a profit he must account for the profits in proportion to their respective holdings of the capital stock and not according to the amount of money invested in the enterprise, whether borrowed on the company's notes or paid for stock. Donner v. Donner [Pa.] 66 A. 147.

47. Payments made with the beneficiary's consent for goods bought by the beneficiary property is left in trust to continue the business, the trustee need not charge himself with the rent of the plant [48] and is entitled to credits for the customary expenses incurred in entertaining buyers, though unaccompanied by vouchers.[49] In such a case the trustee is not chargeable with a shrinkage in the business due to the beneficiary.[50]

Procedure and accounting.[51]—All parties having an interest in the fund are proper parties plaintiff in a suit for an accounting.[52] No one but the personal representative of the beneficiary, on the latter's death, is entitled to be joined in an action to compel a trustee ex maleficio to account.[53] The death of the beneficiary does not abate an action for an accounting if the trustee is still under the duty to collect and hold the trust fund until it can be paid over to those entitled to receive it.[54] A cause of action for money had and received and one for an accounting may be joined in one action.[55] A trustee accounting on the theory that enterprises engaged in by him were authorized by the trust agreement cannot, over objection, amend such account as to be liable on the theory that the enterprises were unlawful without proving such facts.[56]

Costs and appellate expenses.[57]—Where the proceedings show that the trust has been honestly administered, costs should be awarded the trustee out of the fund and directions given for his guidance in the future administration of the trust.[58]

Decree.[59]—The right to order a partial distribution of assets depends on the statutes of the various states.[60] In New York the decree of a surrogate is not conclusive on the parties in establishing a rule of law which will control in the later administration of the estate, but, if not appealed from, is a complete protection to the accounting trustee.[61]

An action for money had and received is a proper remedy by the cestui que trust against the trustee of an express trust only when the trust is fully executed and the amount settled, and nothing remains to be done but for the trustee to pay over the amount to the cestui que trust.[62]

Discharge; procedure and issues.—On the application of trustees to be discharged, they are not required to construe the will creating the trust so as to determine what shall become of the trust estate after the termination of the interests of the life beneficiary.[63] Where the same person is executor and also trustee, his final discharge as executor does not affect his status as trustee.[64]

§ 15. Establishment and enforcement of trust and remedies of beneficiary. A. Express trusts. Jurisdiction.[65]—Every beneficiary is entitled to the aid of a court of equity to avail himself of the benefit of the trust, and the forbearance of the trustee may not prejudice him.[66] A trust being contingent, suit to establish it cannot be maintained before the happening of the contingency.[67] Upon breach of the trust the proper remedy is by proceeding in equity to enforce the trust,[68] and the trustee may be compelled to carry out the trust agreement.[69] As a general rule, equity will not decree a forfeiture.[70] When deemed best for the interests of the beneficiaries, a court of equity has the power to take the trust funds into its hands for the administration thereof at any stage of a suit to enforce the trust.[71]

The district courts of Nebraska have jurisdiction in cases involving the ownership of property held in trust, though in the possession of and claimed by the administrator of the estate of a deceased person.[72]

Laches, limitations, and estoppel.[73]—Laches may be invoked against an express trust.[74] In a suit to enforce an express trust, equity does not follow the analogies of the statute of limitations.[75] Limitations do not run against the beneficiary of an express trust until repudiation brought to the knowledge of the beneficiary.[76] One may become estopped to assert the trust.[77]

93. A suit to enforce a constructive trust will prevent the beneficiary enforcing the trust. As a general rule the statute of limitations begins to run from the time of the discovery of the fraud or wrong.[94]

Procedure.—An action for money had and received will lie to reach money held under a constructive trust.[95]

Parties.—The beneficiary of a constructive trust may maintain an action to enforce the same in his own name.[96] The personal representative, next of kin, and heir at law of the beneficiary may, on the latter's death, join in suing to enforce the trust.[97]

Conditions precedent must be performed.[98] The general rule that he who asks the aid of equity must do equity applies.[99]

Evidence.[1]—General rules as to the admissibility of the evidence apply.[2] Within statutes governing the competency of witnesses there would seem to be a conflict as to whether or not the assertion of a trust against the personal representatives of a decedent is an assertion of a claim against his estate.[3] Burden is on claimant to show trust.[4]

Haywood v. Scarborough [Tex. Civ. App.] 102 S. W. 469. Especially where payment is prevented by trustee's repudiation of trust, and court has power to require them to contribute ratably. Id.

99. Held that if it should be shown that defendant had agreed to pay city amount due for taxes on plaintiff's land, which had previously been purchased by city at tax sale, and to procure from it a deed reconveying land to plaintiffs, but bad instead made payment and had land conveyed to himself, he would hold it in trust for plaintiffs, and they would be entitled to have title decreed in them on repaying him amount paid by him to city. Openshaw v. Rickmeyer [Tex. Civ. App.] 102 S. W. 467.

4. Where it appeared that a person other than person in whom legal title stood paid part of purchase money, held that burden was on latter to show that it was intention that he should take land absolutely, and not by way of resulting trust for former. Miller v. Saxton [S. C.] 55 S. E. 310.

7. See 6 C. L. 1766.

8. Object of bill being to enforce trust in favor of heirs in land conveyed to widow of one who had purchased it but had died before obtaining deed, held that matter was one which could only be set up in court of equity, and demurrer on ground of adequate remedy at law was properly overruled. Gentry v. Poteet, 59 W. Va. 408, 53 S. E. 787.

Laches, limitations, and estoppel.[9]—Laches will bar enforcement of the trust.[10] Limitations do not run until repudiation of the trust by the trustee.[11]

Pleading.[12]—The general rules of pleading apply.[13] The bill must aver the facts out of which the trust is claimed to have originated with distinctness and precision.[14]

§ 16. Following trust property.[15]—A court of equity will enforce a trust against all persons who with notice of the trust came into possession of the trust property, in the same manner and to the same effect as against the original trustee.[16] Hence where the true trustee gambles away trust funds, the beneficiary may recover the funds with interest of the one winning the same.[17] In the absence of notice, a trustee being allowed to deal in his own name, a sale by him passes all the rights of the beneficiaries.[18] Except where an attaching creditor has given credit in reliance upon the apparent ownership, the beneficiary's rights are paramount to those of an attaching creditor of the trustee of a resulting trust,[19] though this rule is of course somewhat affected by the operation of the recording act.[20] Where the trust

10. Forty-five years' delay held to constitute laches. Elliott v. Clark [Cal. App.] 89 P. 455. Heirs and those claiming under them held not guilty of laches in seeking to establish trust in their favor in land conveyed to widow of vendee who died before obtaining deed. Gentry v. Poteet, 59 W. Va. 408, 53 S. E. 787. Claim of beneficiary under alleged resulting trust held not barred by laches, where no attempt was made to show any settlement between him and trustee. Miller v. Saxton [S. C.] 55 S. E. 310.

Limitations against right of action in wife to have land deeded to husband declared to be held in trust for her, on theory that trust provision was omitted by mistake, held not to begin to run until his death, where, at time he acquired title, common-law rule giving husband seisin and right to possession of wife's land was in force. Smith v. Smith [Mo.] 100 S. W. 579. There must be an adverse holding by the trustee of a resulting trust to set the statute of limitations in operation in his favor against the beneficiary. Evidence held not to show adverse holdings. Miller v. Saxton [S. C.] 55 S. E. 310.

12. See 6 C. L. 1767.

13. In suit to establish resulting trust in favor of plaintiffs on theory that second husband of their mother invested proceeds of property belonging to community of their mother and deceased father, half of which belonged to them, in land in question, to which he took title in his own name, held that allegations of petition that mother and second husband continued to exercise care, custody, control, and management over all community property, and to exercise care and authority of parents over plaintiffs during their minority, were proper as matter of inducement as showing fiduciary relation of second husband. Pearce v. Dyess [Tex. Civ. App.] 101 S. W. 549. Held no inconsistency between allegations that second husband paid for land with community estate and took title in his own name, and allegation that he and his wife admitted that he held undivided half interest therein in trust for plaintiff. Id. Held unnecessary to allege that either husband or wife agreed to convey to plaintiffs any interest in land, since obligation to do so arose as matter of law. Id. Allegations of petition held sufficiently specific. Id.

14. Cross-bill by wife seeking to establish resulting trust in land conveyed by husband's mortgage to complainant, on theory that husband used her money in paying for land, held insufficient. Gilbreath v. Farrow [Ala.] 41 So. 1000. Allegations of bill to establish resulting trust held sufficiently definite. Patrick v. Kirkland [Fla.] 43 So. 969.

16. Thompson v. Bank of California [Cal. App.] 88 P. 987. Rule applied to bank collecting note with knowledge of interest of third party in funds. Id. All persons who knowingly take part or aid in committing a breach of trust are responsible for the money thus withdrawn from the trust estate and they may be compelled to replace the fund which they have been instrumental in diverting. Where funds raised by corporation for building purposes were checked out by president for his own use, the building committee authorizing it and the drawee of the check knowing the facts held the funds could be recovered of any or all of the above. Basshor Co. v. Carrington [Md.] 65 A. 360. One buying land with notice of the existence of the trust takes subject thereto. Atkins v. Atkins [Mass.] 80 N. E. 806. One converting payments made upon accounts given it for collection, the owner of the accounts may follow the funds into whosesoever hands they may be found. So held where employe collecting money took same. Morris v. North American Mercantile Agency Co., 103 N. Y. S. 761.

18. Where trustee of preferential right to purchase tide lands died and his heirs assigned all his rights in the premises to others, held the assignment passed all the beneficiaries' rights, subject to their right, however, to follow the trust property. Hotchkin v. Bussell [Wash.] 89 P. 183.

20. Recording act held not to affect case, trust not being created by writing. Waterman v. Buckingham [Conn.] 64 A. 212.

property has been segregated by the trustee from his personal estate, it is unnecessary for the beneficiaries of the trust on the trustee's death to present a claim against the trustee's estate in order to recover the fund.[21] In a suit to recover trust funds levied on by attaching creditors of the trustee, the trustee and beneficiaries may properly join as coplaintiffs.[22] The beneficiary by presenting a claim against the trustee's estate does not estop himself from recovering trust funds in the hands of a third party.[23] All persons interested in the object of the suit may join in suing for its recovery.[24]

Identification of fund.[25]—It is essential that the trust property can be identified in its altered or substituted form.[26] When trust money becomes so mixed up with the trustee's individual funds that it is impossible to trace and identify it as entering into some specific property, the trust ceases.[27] Identificaton of a trust fund is complete where moneys are found in the hands of a trustee who has mingled his own funds with the trust fund, and such moneys up to the amount of the trust fund will be deemed to belong thereto,[28] the total of such funds never going below the amount of the trust fund;[29] or where the trust fund has been mingled with the body of the trustee's estate and the trust fund, or any part of it, has been converted into other specific forms of property which can be discovered and followed;[30] or where the trust fund has been mingled with the funds of the trustee and has been invested, along with trust funds, in assets, then the trust fund is made a charge against the entire mass of the assets in the acquisition of which the trust fund, together with the other property of the trustee, was used,[31] except so far as the trustee may be able to distinguish what is his.[32] Where trust funds are mingled with those of the trustee on deposit in a bank and the depositor is depleted by certified checks in the favor of and retained by the trustee, but the bank account is brought above the amount of the trust fund prior to the transferring of such certified checks, held the trust could be enforced as a charge on the fund.[33] An investment once proven to exist will be presumed to continue as long as is usual with things of that nature.[34] The burden of showing that his property has been wrongfully mingled in a mass of the property of the wrongdoer is upon the owner, but when this is done the burden shifts to the wrongdoer and it is upon him to distinguish between his property and that of the innocent party.[35]

24. Where funds of a company are deposited as a trust fund to be used for a special purpose, the trustee under a trust deed which secured the payment of such funds could join with the receiver of the company owning the funds in a suit to compel the return of the money when paid out for an improper purpose. Basshor Co. v. Carrington [Md.] 65 A. 360.

26. Where trust funds were segregated by trustee and invested in certain securities, held sufficiently ear-marked to allow tracing. Kauffman v. Foster [Cal. App.] 86 P. 1108. A trust fund may be pursued by the beneficiary as long as the same can be identified into any land or other form of investment made by the trustee. Law raises implied trust in such property in his behalf. Newman v. Newman [W. Va.] 55 S. E. 377. Doctrine applies in every case of a trust relation and as well to moneys deposited in a bank, and to debt thereby created, as to every other description of property. Hutchinson v. National Bank of Commerce [Ala.] 41 So. 143. So held where county treasurer who was also cashier of bank deposited, without authority, in the bank funds derived from taxation, and the funds were used in making loans subsequently collected. Id. Where a life beneficiary of a trust estate and her husband, as trustee, had a joint bank account, and the proceeds of insurance of a building belonging to the beneficiary were placed to its credit and afterwards invested in corporate stock, but further sums were drawn from the joint account in excess of the amount of the insurance for the rebuilding of the place insured, held the stock should be treated as part of the trust estate in favor of the remaindermen. Putnam v. Lincoln Safe Deposit Co., 104 N. Y. S. 4, modifying 49 Misc. 578, 100 N. Y. S. 101.

Bona fide purchasers.[36]—In order to be protected as a bona fide purchaser, one must not have either actual or constructive notice.[37]

§ 17. Termination and abrogation of trust. Acts of the settlor.[38]—A voluntary settlement which has been fully executed without the reservation of any power of revocation cannot be revoked without proof of mental unsoundness, mistake, fraud, or undue influence.[39] A power of revocation is not inconsistent with the creation of a valid trust.[40] When the duration of the trust is expressly limited, the authority of the trustee expires according to the limitations.[41] The trust agreement may provide for the termination of the trust upon the happening or fulfillment of some condition.[42] A tentative trust is terminable at the pleasure of the settlor and beneficiary.[43]

35. Smith v. Mottley [C. C. A.] 150 F. 266. If a man mixes trust funds with his, the whole will be treated as trust property except so far as he may be able to distinguish what is his. Where trustee of money deposited in his own bank account which at all times exceeded the amount entrusted to him, held beneficiary could recover of trustee's trustee in bankruptcy. In re Royea's Estate, 143 F. 182. Where the relations of a trustee and life beneficiary were such that each must have been fully advised of all the acts and dealings of the other with relation to the trust estate, and there was a commingling by them of the trust moneys with their individual funds, and no rights of creditors or other equities of innocent third parties intervened, the burden of proof is on their representatives to show that property was purchased with the money of the life beneficiary and not with that of the estate. E. 377. Evidence held to show that vendee of real property had notice that the vendor held the legal title in trust for another. Latham v. Scribner [Wash.] 88 P. 203. Claim of notice of trust agreement on the part of an absolute grantee to subsequent creditors and purchasers is greatly weakened where it appears from successive bills of complaint that when the suit was first brought the facts sworn to failed to state sufficient grounds for relief and set out a claim inconsistent with that ultimately pleaded, as it should not be expected that subsequent purchasers and creditors should have notice of more or different facts than were known to the suitor when he swore to the first bill. Acts of the beneficiary.—An active trust cannot be terminated at the will of the beneficiary.[44] The trust cannot be terminated by consent where so to do might defeat its purpose.[45]

Acts of trustee.[46]—A passive trust may be terminated by the execution of a deed by the trustee to the beneficiary.[47] A resulting trust may be discharged by a deed to the beneficiary.[48]

The death of the trustee does not terminate the trust.[50]

The trustee[51] cannot terminate the trust by surrendering possession to the donor.[52]

Termination for failure or completion of purpose.[53]—It is sometimes broadly stated that a trust terminates when the purpose for which it has been created is fulfilled,[54] but not before,[55] and while courts will sometimes decree the termination of a trust where it is passive, or where the purposes of the trust have been accomplished, or where no good reason is shown why the trust should continue, if all the persons interested are sui juris and desire that the trust be terminated,[56] it will not be so done unless these conditions exist.[57] A direction to trustees to convey after the termination of a trust does not continue the legal estate in them and make them trustees of the persons to whom they are directed to convey.[58]

May v. Walter's Ex'rs, 30 Ky. L. R. 59, 97 S. W. 423. Where will gave property in trust for woman for life with remainder to her children, held that she and her children, who were all of age, could not have trust discharged and property distributed during her lifetime, though she was 60 years old, it being possible that she might have other children for whom remainder would open. § 1. Proprietary Rights (2207).
§ 2. Contracts (2207).
§ 3. Officers and Employes (2208).
§ 4. Claims (2209).
§ 5. Actions by and Against (2209).

Scope of title.—The powers of the United States nearly if not always depend upon questions of constitutional law.[2] They are further discussed in cases dealing with treaties,[3] territories and Federal possessions,[4] extradition,[5] and the like. Property rights in the public domain are also treated elsewhere.[6]

§ 1. Proprietary rights.[7]—While the United States may reclaim arid lands in the territories,[8] it cannot reclaim such lands in the states,[9] except as to lands owned by it.[10] It has undoubted power to construct railroads and canals in territory over which it has acquired exclusive jurisdiction by treaty.[11] During its military occupation of Cuba the United States occupied the position of a trustee of the island for the benefit of its inhabitants.[12]

§ 2. Contracts.[13]—A statute is valid which is in effect a contract whereby railroad companies in the District of Columbia are paid a sum of money to be raised by taxation of property in the district in consideration of the elimination of grade crossings and other expenditures by them, for the public benefit.[14] When officers of the United States are authorized by statute to issue what is in form commercial paper, and do issue it, the relations of the United States thereto are the same as those of individuals.[15] An assignment by a government contractor of an interest in a building contract cannot affect the rights of the United States or of laborers and materialmen.[16]

The will of congress as to the construction and effect of bonds executed to the United States cannot be defeated by considerations applicable to agreements improvidently made between individuals, nor by the practice of department officials to give such bonds a different construction.[17] The Federal statute of 1894 requiring a government contractor to give a bond conditional on proper performance and payment for labor and materials is broad enough to include within the protection of the bond one who supplies coal for hoisting or pumping engines used in the work.[18] One who takes charge of the work under an arrangement which simply amounts to an advancement of money with the right to superintend its disbursement is not protected,[19] and the bond will not protect materialmen if given in a case not contemplated by the statute.[20] The bond is in effect two separate instruments, one securing performance to the United States and the other payment for labor and materials,[21] and a variation of the contract which might relieve the surety from liability to the United States does not relieve it as against laborers and materialmen.[22] A materialman may not sue on the bond in the name of the United States unless some Federal statute authorizes it.[23] The action is controlled by the statute of limitations governing actions on account and not by that governing actions on contract.[24]

§ 3. Officers and employes.[25]—Though a departmental practice is not rendered valid by having been followed for a long period of time, yet due regard should be given to it where it has admittedly prevailed in proceedings of a judicial nature for a period of more than twenty-five years, even should there be a reasonable doubt as to the proper construction to be placed upon a statute.[26] While a power conferred by law upon executive officers of the government to make regulations in aid of the execution of a law or for the better administration of powers committed to them does not extend to making a violation of one of these regulations a criminal offense,[27] this rule does not apply in a prosecution of one for perjury consisting in making a false answer under oath to questions propounded in the application required by the civil service regulations.[28] The civil and criminal liability of public officers and employes is elsewhere discussed.[29]

§ 4. Claims.[30]—An act of congress providing for the determination of claims is not an admission that such claims are meritorious.[31] The Federal statute provides for disallowing in toto claims, vouchers, or accounts, relating to the Indian service knowingly presented by an officer and containing any material misrepresentation of fact.[32] This statute is penal in its nature and as to valid portions of an account is not enforceable as against the sureties on the bond of an Indian agent.[33] One may recover for the use and occupation of his private premises by the United States for military purposes, the government not claiming to own the property.[34] A bill setting forth a claim for the use and occupation of real estate by the military forces of the United States and referring the claim to the court of claims for adjudication is equivalent to a bill "for the payment of a claim against the United States." [35] Neither an owner of an Indian depredation claim nor his administrator has power to contract to pay for prosecuting the claim, an amount in excess of the fifteen per cent allowed for such purpose by the court of claims and the Indian Depredation Act.[36] A contract between an attorney and one having a claim against the United States whereby the attorney is given a lien for his fee upon any check which may be issued by the United States in settlement of the claim is not prohibited as an assignment of claims against the United States.[37]

§ 5. Actions by and against.[38]—Suits by the United States may be barred by limitations.[39] In suits involving the delinquency of a revenue officer or any person accountable for public money, a transcript from the books and proceedings in the treasury department certified as required by law is admissible[40] as prima facie,[41] though not conclusive evidence in favor of the government,[42] and it is no objection

Under Act March, 3, 1891, c. 559 (26 St. 1093), providing that suits by the United States to vacate patents theretofore issued must be brought within five years from the passage of the act, possession by the grantee is not necessary to the running of limitations (United States v. Chandler-Dunbar Water Power Co. [C. C. that it contains some items of debit or credit concerning which it is not competent evidence,[43] or that it contains unnecessary explanatory memoranda and evidence showing the grounds of rulings concerning rejected items.[44] The propriety of employing the attorney for a private party to assist in the prosecution of a suit by the United States in the public interest is addressed to the judgment and discretion of the attorney general,[45] and there would seem to be no sound objection to such employment if the object of the private party and that of the United States are the same.[46] In an action by the United States, defendant cannot recover an affirmative judgment on a set-off or counterclaim though a balance may be found in his favor,[47] nor can he insist that the government continue the action so as to enable him to extinguish any claim that may be established against him.[48]

The United States may not be sued without its consent [49] either by an individual or by a state,[50] and a suit against the United States cannot be maintained in the supreme court where a state is made plaintiff merely for the prosecution of a claim of a railway company.[51]

UNITED STATES MARSHALS AND COMMISSIONERS.[52]

The jurisdiction of a United States commissioner as ex officio probate judge to appoint guardians for incompetent persons is wholly statutory and it must appear that the essential provisions of the statute were complied with.[53] The act of April 20, 1904, relative to the offenses committed in the Hot Springs reservation in Arkansas, did not confer on any regular United States commissioner in that district or elsewhere jurisdiction to try any offenses,[54] but contemplated the creation of a new office of commissioner clothed with special jurisdiction.[55] A commissioner is not entitled to compensation for services rendered in connection with complaints in civil right's cases in which there was no arrest or examination,[56] nor can he be allowed fees for certifying complaints in such cases to himself as chief superivsor of elections.[57]

USES.[59]

The statute of uses executes passive trusts.[60] What constitutes active and passive trusts is treated elsewhere.[61] Where an express passive trust is obtained by undue influence, the beneficiary may elect to avoid the entire transaction and hold the trustee under a trust ex maleficio, or to affirm it and insist that the legal title vested in him.[62]

Passive trust for grantor during life, then to intended wife so long as she remained his widow and unmarried, then to trustee, held effective as a conveyance of a future estate to the wife for life or widowhood and a remainder in the trustee. Adams v. Bristol, 114 App. Div. 390, 100 N. Y. S. 145. Such estate in remainder held sufficiently limited on the precedent life estate of the wife under the provisions of § 29 of the statutes of uses and trusts (Vol. 2 Rev. St. [1st Ed.] pt. 2, c. 1, tit. 2, art. 1 § 10). Id. The statute of uses operates to convey the legal title to the beneficiary when it is no longer required to remain in the trustee to serve the purposes of the trust. Where holder of legal title in trust for use of mother for life with remainder in fee to daughter conveyed such estates to them, held that their grantee took full legal and equitable title, at least after death of mother, and did not hold title in trust, whether deed of trustee did or did not convey legal title. Smith v. Moore, 142 N. C. 277, 55 S. E. 275. Where deed created trust for benefit of married woman for life, with remainder in fee to her children in event that she predeceased her husband leaving children, held that, on happening of such contingency, her interest ceased, and, as purpose of trust was fully accomplished, use became executed and legal title vested in children. Cherry v. Cape Fear Power Co., 142 N. C. 404, 55 S. E. 287. The statute of uses will not execute a passive trust where the beneficiaries may include persons not in esse. 66. A note in the hands of one who had no knowledge that a bonus was taken for the loan is not tainted with usury (Ferguson v. Bien, 101 N. Y. S. 100), nor is a note reserving interest which at the time the note was made, the parties supposed was a lawful rate (Armijo v. Henry [N. M.] 89 P. 305). That the amount received by the debtor is less than the apparent principal, so that of the amount actually received be treated as the principal the transaction would be usurious, does not of itself establish usury unless the creditor when he received the interest knew it was usurious and had the purpose to take more than the lawful rate. Bennett v. Best, 142 N. C. 168, 55 S. E. 84.

67. Including days of grace in figuring interest on a non-negotiable note, by the use of an interest table which included days of grace, was held not to render the contract usurious. Sullins v. Farmers' Exch. Bk. [Okl.] 87 P. 857. When in calculating interest the amount charged is by mistake slightly greater than allowed by law, it is not usurious. Western Bank & Trust Co. v. Ogden [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 594, 93 S. W. 1102.

to collect the excessive rate, although under a belief of a right to do so, renders the transaction usurious[68] The contract will if possible be construed as reserving a valid rate, where it was drawn by the party asserting that it is usurious.[69]

There must be a loan or forbearance.[70]

The aggregate of the exactions must exceed the legal rate.[71]—The payment of interest on overdue interest coupons does not constitute usury,[72] and where the parties had settlements from time to time bringing in new items, and new obligations were given including interest on past due amounts, the transaction was not usurious.[73] A provision that the principal and "interest" shall become due on default in payment of any interest instalment contemplates that only accrued interest shall become due and is not usurious.[74]

Discounts, bonuses, commissions, and other deductions and charges.[75]—Payment of a commission by a borrower to a third person who procures the loan does not render the loan usurious,[76] nor does a payment of interest in advance;[77] but a conveyance made to the lender, to induce the loan on which the full legal rate of interest is charged, is usury,[78] as is a charge of interest on advances where a note given for the advances to be made had been already discounted.[79] Exacting building association rates and deferring payment of the money,[80] or providing in a policy loan for a surrender charge in case of default, is usury;[81] and the collection of interest in excess of the legal rate constitutes usury, although the contract provided for only the legal rate.[82] Where a transaction is not usurious on its face, but is claimed to be a device to cover up usury, the question is one of fact,[83] and the evidence of usury should be clear and satisfactory.[84]

68. Where a creditor collects compound interest, believing that he has a right to do so under the terms of the note, he is guilty of collecting usurious interest. Plyler v. McGee [S. C.] 57 S. E. 180.

69. The contract for payment of a certain sum at the end of three years with interest at the rate of fifteen per cent was construed to call for fifteen per cent interest at the end of three years and not for fifteen per cent per annum. Ayars v. O'Connor [Wash.] 88 P. 119.

83. A requirement by a life insurance company, making a loan at the highest lawful rate of interest, that the borrower take out a policy in the company on his life and assign the same as additional security for the loan was held to be not usurious as a matter of law. Virginia-Carolina Chem. Co. v. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc., 126 Ga. 50, 54 S. E. 929. Where the lender required a contract by which the borrower was to consign cotton to the lender to be sold by the latter on commission, it was held that if the lender was engaged in the business of a cotton factor the transaction would be legitimate, but if made to conceal an usurious design the contract would be usurious. Western Bank & Trust Co. v. Ogden [Tex. Civ. App.] 15 Tex. Ct. Rep. 594, 93 S. W. 1102. Where a building and loan association required a prospective borrower to subscribe for stock on which he was to

The parties may remove the taint of usury.[85]

Usury statutes.[86]—A statute imposing a penalty for the exacting of usury is a a valid exercise of the police power of a state,[87] but being penal should be strictly construed.[88] Usury laws must be of uniform operation, and must not deny equal protection of the laws, nor grant class privileges and immunities.[89] A statute changing the effect of usury is constitutional even as to contracts already made.[90] State banking laws prescribing rates of interest chargeable by banks govern loans by state banks as against general usury laws of the state.[91]

Conflict of laws.[92]—The law of the place where the loan is made governs its validity.[93] The Federal courts are governed by the state laws in proceedings for relief.[94]

pay a monthly sum in addition to the interest on the loan, and to immediately surrender the certificate of stock, and to sign a statement that the stock was withdrawn and the full withdrawal value received, a finding that the transaction was usurious was upheld. Guarantee Sav. Loan & Inv. Co. v. Mitchell [Tex. Civ. App.] 99 S. W. 156. A provision for a payment to a bank of a commission in addition to the maximum interest, as a consideration for its trouble in making the collections and keeping its accounts with the borrower, was held to be a legitimate charge, not making the transaction usurious. Citizens' Bank v. Murphy [Ark.] 102 S. W. 697. When in consideration for an additional loan of $12,500 a contract previously entered into for the sale of land for $2,000 was canceled, and a deed to the land executed for a consideration of $2,500, for which together with the amount of additional loan a mortgage and note were given, the transaction could not be held invalid as a matter of law in the absence of evidence of an intention to evade the usury laws. Morin v. Newbury [Conn.] 65 A. 156. A bill of sale, absolute in form, is not a mortgage within the meaning of a statute making void a chattel mortgage securing an usurious loan (Id.); but a penal statute limiting the rate of interest to "eight per centum per annum" on certain obligations, and providing in a subsequent paragraph that in contracts "twelve per centum" may be charged, was construed to mean twelve per centum per annum on contracts (Hemple v. Raymond [C. C. A.] 144 F. 796).

89. A statute authorizing certain associations to charge certain rates of interest, and prescribing a certain penalty for a violation of its provisions by such associations, and a different penalty against other persons who violate its provisions, is unconstitutional. Statute authorizing small loans in a certain county at a rate of interest in excess of the legal rate, by persons who procure a certificate from the clerk of the peace in such county, is not unconstitutional on the ground that it applies to the one county only; or on the ground that it discriminates against those making loans in amounts in excess of the sum named therein; or on the ground that a provision therein excepting banks and trust companies from its operation, it violates section 1 art. 14 of the amendment to the constitution of the United States, or on the ground that it violates said section by prohibiting the exaction of interest in excess of the rate named, whether said additional sum be in the form of interest, or for services rendered, or expenses incurred.
