I. DEFINITION.

Costs are certain allowances authorized by statute to reimburse the successful party for expenses incurred in prosecuting or defending an action or special proceeding. They are in the nature of incidental damages allowed to indemnify a party against the expense of successfully asserting his rights in court. The theory upon which they are allowed to a plaintiff is that the default of the defendant made it necessary to sue him, and to a defendant, that the plaintiff sued him without cause. Thus the party to blame pays costs to the party without fault.[1]

II. SOURCE OF RIGHT TO COSTS.

At common law costs were not recoverable eo nomine.[2] Costs can therefore be imposed and recovered only in cases where there is statutory authority therefor.[3] While the power to impose costs must ultimately be found in some statute, the legislature may nevertheless grant the power in general terms to the courts, which in turn may make rules or orders under which costs may be taxed and imposed;[4] but the courts cannot make such rules or orders and impose costs thereunder, unless the power to do so is expressly given them by statute.[5]

III. BY WHAT LAW GOVERNED.

A. In General. The laws of the state where the suit is tried and not the laws of the state where the contract in suit was made govern as to costs.[6] Where a statute provides rules in regard to costs applicable generally, and also rules for special cases, the rules applicable to costs generally have no application to special cases, as the opposite construction would render the provisions relating to special cases nugatory.[7]

B. In Federal Court — 1. In General. Prior to the act of Feb. 26, 1853,[8] the taxation of costs in the various districts conformed to the practice of the state in which the district was situated;[9] and since the enactment of this statute, the same rule applies as respects all items of costs not specially covered by the enactment.[10] As regards matters relating to costs comprehended by the statute mentioned the statutes in practice in the state are not binding.[11]

2. On Removal to Federal Court. In one circuit the rule is that after the removal of a cause into the federal court the party cannot on recovering judgment be allowed the costs prescribed by the state statutes up to the time of removal, unless such items are taxable under the federal statutes relating to costs.[12] In another circuit items of costs taxable under state laws, and accruing prior to the removal of a cause to a federal court, are taxable on final judgment

Suits in territorial courts.— It has been held that where the United States is the prevailing party in a suit in a territorial court costs are to be governed by this act of congress, and not by a territorial statute relating to costs. U. S. v. Small, 3 Wash. Terr. 478, 17 Pac. 739. It has also been held that the statute refers solely to a discharge of duties imposed by the laws of the United States, and is hence not applicable to cases in the territorial courts in which the United States is not a party, or of which the federal courts would not have exclusive jurisdiction if the territory were a state. Amendment of complaint.— Where a cause is removed from a state to a United States circuit court, and the plaintiff amends his complaint, he puts himself within a rule of practice of the circuit court, allowing a defendant in all cases to demand security for costs before answering, although the demand could not have been made in the state court where the action was commenced. Henning v. Western Union Tel. Co., 40 Fed. 658.

there, notwithstanding no provision is made for such items in the federal statutes.[13]

C. Statutes in Force at Termination of Action — 1. In General. The right to costs and the amount and items taxable are as a general rule governed by the statutes in force at the time of the termination of the action,[14] as the question of costs is one which is solely of statutory regulation and wholly dependent upon it.[15] A party has no vested right to costs at the commencement of an action.[16] It is competent for the legislature, at any time during the progress of a suit, to create an allowance for services not before provided for, and to increase or diminish or wholly abolish such allowance as existed at the time the suit was commenced.[17]

2. Effect of Saving Clauses. Where a statute relating to costs expressly excepts from its operation suits pending at the date it goes into effect, costs in such suits will be governed by the previous statutes relating to costs.[18] So where

But see Whitney v. Teichfuss, 11 Colo. 555, 19 Pac. 507, in which it was held that where a county by act of a certain date was changed from the third to the second class, the part of the costs of a suit in that county accruing after the date of the change should be taxed according to the rates for counties of the second class. This clearly implies that the prior law should govern as to costs accrued before the latter statute was enacted.

Settlement of cause before statute goes into effect.— A statute amending the charter of a city, by providing for the allowance of a certain amount as fixed costs on recovery in a designated class of actions, does not apply to an action settled by the parties out of court before the statute took effect, and such action cannot be continued to judgment for the benefit of plaintiff's attorney. Where an action is dismissed with costs by default prior to a certain date, the right to costs and the amount thereof are regulated by the provisions of the code previous to the act of that date. Huber v. Lockwood, 15 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 74. And where a complaint is dismissed and further proceedings stayed by order of court until the hearing of a motion for a new trial, the costs are to be taxed in accordance with the law in force at the time of the dismissal. Excepting causes now pending.— Where a statute abolishing attorney's costs provides that the act shall not apply to "causes now pending," the proviso includes a motion to tax costs made after the passage of the act, in an action begun prior thereto. The motion

a statute relating to costs provides in express terms that it shall apply to designated items of costs in suits previously commenced, the statute applies only to the items of costs designated, and all other costs in the case will be governed by the former statute.[19]

IV. HOW STATUTES REGULATING COSTS ARE CONSTRUED.[20]

In England it seems that statutes relating to costs were considered penal in their nature and to be strictly construed;[21] and this is the rule in a number of the states.[22]

V. RIGHT AS AFFECTED BY SUCCESS OR FAILURE OF PARTY.

A. In Actions at Law — 1. Right of Prevailing Party to Costs. It is a rule of almost universal application under the statutes relating to costs, that in actions at law the prevailing party in the action is entitled to costs unless there is some special statute which on the facts of the particular case takes it out of the operation of the general rule.[23] The rule is not affected by the fact that the unsuc-is merely incidental to the main cause, and not a new and independent proceeding. Bartless v. Beaufort, 47 S. C. 225, 25 S. E. 38.

Excepting existing liquidated contracts.— Where such statute provides that it shall not apply to "existing liquidated contracts," costs are taxable, under the former statute, in an action on a liquidated contract existing at the time of the passage of the latter act. McElwee v. Dickson, 55 S. C. 307, 33 S. E. 365.

cessful party defended in good faith and upon reasonable grounds,[24] by the fact that he was not permitted to cross-examine the witnesses,[25] or by the fact that the jury attempted to divide the costs equally between the parties.[26] Nor has the court discretionary power to refuse costs in an action at law, although the successful party obtains judgment by the interposition of an equitable defense.[27]

2. Where Each Party Successful in Part — a. In General. Unless there be statutory authorization therefor costs cannot be apportioned, although both parties be successful in part.[28] Therefore, in the absence of such statute, if the plaintiff recover judgment, although for only part of the relief demanded, he is entitled to costs, as in such cases he is regarded as the prevailing party.[29] There are, however, statutes which modify the rule to some extent in some jurisdictions.[30]

b. Where There Are Separate Issues or Causes of Action — (i) In Absence of Special Statutory Provision. In the absence of some special statutory provision for the apportionment of costs, where each party succeeds on one or more of the causes of actions, claims, or issues, it would seem that the plaintiff having obtained a judgment for a part of the relief prayed would as the "prevailing party" be entitled to such costs. It has been so held in a number of decisions.[31]

Thus in Iowa where a party is successful as to "part of his demand" and fails as to part, the court may apportion the costs (Andrews v. Zimmerman, 42 Iowa 708; Boone County v. Wilson, 41 Iowa 69); but the statute has been held not to apply to cases in which the cause of action is a single, indivisible claim, but only where the demand is composed of separate claims (Upson v. Fuller, 43 Iowa 409). A statute of Missouri providing for apportionment of costs between parties prevailing in part when considered in connection with many other provisions was held to apply to actions of contract only and not to actions ex delicto. (II) Under Special Statutory Provisions — (A) In General. In many jurisdictions statutes have been enacted which provide expressly or by implication for an apportionment of costs when each party is successful on one or more of several causes of actions or issues. Under a statute providing that where there are several causes of action in the same complaint, or several issues, each party has costs on issues decided in his favor, the costs of such issues as are decided against plaintiff should be taxed against him, and the costs of issues decided against defendant taxed against him,[32] and plaintiff is entitled to a separate judgment for costs against one of several defendants on separate issues made by him and found against him.[33] The costs accruing by reason of one cause of action decided against plaintiff may also be properly adjudged against him, under a statute entitling the prevailing party to all costs except as otherwise provided and authorizing the court on good cause to adjudge the costs otherwise.[34] So it has been held that each party may be permitted to tax costs on issues found in his favor, under a statute authorizing the courts in all actions triable before them to limit and allow such bills of costs as law and justice may require,[35] and where costs are made on an issue which was abandoned by the successful party, the court may apportion the costs under a statute authorizing an apportionment when plaintiff fails as to part of his demand.[36] Under a statute providing that each party shall recover costs upon the issues or claims on which he prevails, costs will be apportioned in an action on account where plaintiff prevails on one small item only of his entire account.[37] Under a statute providing that where there are two or more counts on distinct causes of action and a verdict is rendered for each of them on one or more thereof, each party shall recover his witnesses' costs on the trial of the counts on which the verdict is in his favor, plaintiff in an action of slander, who obtains judgment on one of two causes of action, is entitled as the prevailing party to the costs of the action and of all evidence introduced by him which is not specially applicable to the count on which defendant obtains a verdict, but not for that which is specially applicable to those counts, and defendant has costs for the evidence introduced by him which is specially applicable to the counts on which he prevails.[38]

(B) Statutory Requirement of Recovery by, or Verdict in Favor of, Defendant. Under a statute providing that where issues of fact are joined on several causes of action, if plaintiff recovers on one or more of the issues and defendant on the other or others each party is entitled to costs, the mere fact that defend-fendant was entitled to costs relating to those causes of action on which plaintiff fails to recover. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Cofer, 110 Ala. 491, 18 So. 110.

So under a similar statute providing that if plaintiff recovers on one or more issues, where two or more issues of fact are joined, and defendant on the others, each is entitled to costs against the other. Defendant is entitled to costs against plaintiff, on recovery of judgment against plaintiff on one or more of several causes of action, and plaintiff likewise has costs in respect to issues on which he has judgment. ant has defeated one or more of the causes of action does not entitle him to costs; there must be recovery in his favor, that is, an affirmative finding or verdict in his favor.[39] Therefore where there is a general verdict in plaintiff's favor and no verdict for defendant, the latter cannot be awarded costs, although he succeeded in defeating plaintiff upon one or more causes of action.[40] Defendant is not entitled to costs where plaintiff is nonsuited as to one or more causes of action[41] or the complaint dismissed as to one or more causes of action.[42] So under a statute providing that where there are two or more counts on distinct causes of action and a verdict is rendered for plaintiff on one or more and for the defendant on any of them, each party shall recover certain costs, defendant is not entitled to costs where plaintiff strikes out one count of his declaration in respect to which the jury have disagreed,[43] or where the court instruct the jury that defendant cannot recover on some counts, and the jury bring in a general verdict for plaintiff;[44] and the statute only applies where there is a verdict for plaintiff.[45]

(c) Statutory Requirement That Recovery or Verdict Be on Separate Causes of Action or Issues. Where the statutes make it a prerequisite to the apportionment of costs that the verdict for or recovery by the respective parties be on separate and distinct causes of action, separately stated, it must of course appear that the different counts were for distinct causes of action to render the statutes applicable.[46] The statutes are not operative where substantially the same cause of action is stated in different counts.[47] Perhaps as good a test as any for determining whether two causes of action are distinct and separate is whether a judgment on one would be a bar to a recovery on the other. If it would not the causes of action are within the purview of the statutes.[48] So these statutes have ing that in an action on several notes, against one of which the defense of usury is successfully maintained but against the others no defense is established, each party is entitled to costs.

What constitutes recovery by defendant.— It has been held that a defendant who defeats a cause of action on the ground that it is based on an invalid contract "recovers" within the meaning of the statute, the view being taken that this amounts to an affirmative finding that judgment should be entered for defendant upon such cause of action. What are separate and distinct causes of action illustrated.— The causes of action are not distinct and separate where the different counts were for separate sums payable by the no application where a single count in replevin covers several articles.[49] A similar statute providing that each party shall recover costs upon the issues or claims on which he shall prevail has been held to apply only where the issues and claims are distinct and to have no reference to the constituent parts of a single general issue or claim. It applies to those issues and claims made by the pleadings and not to those arising on the trial.[50]

(D) Effect of Improper Joinder of Defenses. Under a statute providing that if verdict shall be found on any issue joined in plaintiff's favor costs shall be allowed him, although on some other issue defendant is entitled to judgment, unless the court considers that defendant has probable cause to plead such matter which has so been found against him, where the general issue is improperly joined with another defense and found against defendant, he is not entitled to costs, although he prevail on the issue raised by the latter defense.[51]

c. Where Set-Off or Counter-Claim Filed. Where a set-off or counter-claim has been filed and allowed, wholly or in part, the party in whose favor final judgment is rendered will be entitled to costs in the absence of some special statutory provision changing the general rule which gives costs to the prevailing party. In other words plaintiff is entitled to costs if he has judgment for an amount in excess of the set-off or counter-claim allowed.[52] By parity of reasoning if the amount allowed as set-off or counter-claim exceeds the amount allowed on plaintiff's demand, defendant is entitled to costs.[53] If plaintiff fails he is not same covenant, which might have been included in one count (Bull v. Ketchum, 2 Den. (N. Y.) 188); or where in an action of slander the declaration contains two counts alleging the utterance of similar words at different times (Sayles v. Briggs, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 291); or in an action of trespass quare clausum fregit where all the evidence admissible in support of either count might be received on that on which plaintiff obtained a verdict (Elder v. Bemis, 2 Metc. (Mass.) 599); or in ejectment where in each count distinct portions of separate lots were claimed and in one count the entire premises were claimed (Martin v. Martin, 3 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 202); but counts for assault and battery, malicious prosecution, and false imprisonment are "not all for the same cause of action," under a statute giving both parties costs where each recovers on one or more issue counts, which are not all for the same cause of action (Frank v. Wayne Cir. Judge, 54 Mich. 241, 20 N. W. 35).

But compare Booth v. Cowan, 5 Sneed (Tenn.) 354, holding that where the demands of both plaintiff and defendant are allowed and judgment rendered for defendant for the excess in his favor, each party is entitled to costs incurred in establishing his demand, under a statute giving costs to the party in whose favor judgment is given.

Claims purchased since institution of suit. — Where the defendant sets up valid claims purchased since the institution of suit, the same may be adjudged as credits on the debt due plaintiff and the judgment rendered in favor of the party shown to be in debt to the other, but in no event should the defendant have judgment against the plaintiff for costs. Overby v. Wells, 54 S. W. 955, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 1316.

Rendition of general judgment for defendant.— In Massachusetts it has been held that entitled to costs merely because defendant fails to establish his counter-claim.[54] Where a counter-claim is pleaded presenting several issues, some of which are decided in plaintiff's favor and some against him, a case is presented for apportionment where a statute gives the court power to apportion costs between the parties.[55] So also where each party is successful on his claim.[56] And under such statute where a counter-claim is filed and the court finds the damages sustained by the parties to be equal the costs may be divided;[57] but where defendant admits plaintiff's claim, and by the verdict it is reduced by a counter-claim, the costs of the trial are properly taxed against defendant where they arose principally from a counter-claim which was denied him and there are no facts to enable the court to make an intelligent apportionment of the costs.[58] Where a statute gives the court power to apportion costs as it may see fit, costs incurred by defendant in procuring evidence to establish his set-off because of plaintiff's denial thereof are properly chargeable to plaintiff, although he recovers judgment on his demand.[59]

d. Time of Moving For Apportionment. After dismissal of the action and judgment for costs, there is no case in court and no motion for apportionment can be entertained.[60]

B. In Suits in Equity — 1. Discretion of Court. In courts of equitable jurisdiction it is a rule of universal application that the allowance of costs is within the court's discretion,[61] and that the action of the trial court cannot be reviewed if a general judgment for defendant is rendered in an action in which he has plead a declaration in set-off, neither party is entitled to costs as neither party has succeeded in proving his claim. Hartford v. Co-operative Mut. Homestead Co., 130 Mass. 447.

actions "costs" shall be in the discretion of the court has been held not to include disbursements.[67]

2. Right of Prevailing Party to Costs — a. General Rule. The general rule in suits in equity as well as in actions at law is that the prevailing party is entitled to costs,[68] and it will be applied unless the losing party can show that equity requires a different judgment.[69]

b. Application of Rule — (I) Where Suit Necessary to Protect or Enforce Right — (A) In General. The general rule that the successful party is entitled to costs applies ordinarily when the complainant is successful in a suit which is necessary to protect or enforce his rights.[70]

(B) Where Denial of Complainant's Rights Makes Suit Necessary. It applies where the defendant's denial of the complainant's rights makes it necessary for the latter to resort to a court of justice for the establishment of such rights and to be placed in a position to enjoy them.[71]

See 13 Cent. Dig. tit. "Costs," § 21.

Instance of abuse of discretion.— Where in an action for specific performance of a contract obtained by fraud, where a decree is entered for defendant on the merits, it is an abuse of discretion to tax costs against defendant. Kelly v. Central Pac. R. Co., 74 Cal. 565, 16 Pac. 390. (II) Where Defendant Makes Unreasonable or Unconscientious Defense. So it applies where defendant makes an unreasonable or unconscientious defense. Under these circumstances if the plaintiff is successful he is entitled to costs.[72]

(III) Groundless or Useless Suits or Proceedings. A complainant who brings a groundless suit[73] or makes a groundless application will be required to pay costs.[74] So also he will be chargeable with the costs of a useless litigation.[75]

(Tenn.) 139; Blevins v. Armstrong, 3 Hayw. (Tenn.) 135. And on a bill to enjoin a judgment for the price of land and to rescind the sale, complainant is not entitled to costs if he could have obtained the relief sought in another action pending at the time of commencing the injunction suit. Young v. McClung, 9 Gratt. (Va.) 336. So where complainant asks a court of equity to set off one judgment obtained in a court of law against another in the same court, and at the same time has a remedy by summary application to the court in which the judgments were rendered, the relief granted will be at complainant's cost. Gridley v. Garrison, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 647. It has also been held that where on setting aside a decree it appeared that the matter in controversy had previously been submitted to arbitrators, who had made an award differing little from the decree in the cause, and no reason appeared why the award might not have been set up as a bar complainant, although prevailing, should be denied costs. (III) Negligence or Misconduct of Successful Party. So if the suit is necessary only because of complainant's negligence or misconduct, he may be required to pay costs, although successful;[80] and the same is the case when he has been guilty of great laches in bringing suit and shows no excuse for his delay.[81] So where the complainant brings a suit to obtain relief, a part of which he knows he is not entitled to, the discretion of the court will be properly exercised in decreeing costs against him.[82] And if plaintiff unreasonably enforces an equitable right depriving defendant of the opportunity to satisfy the claim made against him without suit, the relief may be granted without costs or plaintiff be compelled to pay defendant's costs.[83] On the other hand defendant may be required to pay costs, although successful, when the complainant was misled into bringing suit by his misconduct.[84]

(IV) Scandalous Matter in Pleading. Scandalous matter in an answer is a ground for withholding costs from defendant, although he prevails in the suit.[85]

(V) Where Complainant Has Good Reason to Think Defendant Liable. Where it appears that complainant had good reason to think defendant liable, the court will not award costs against him, although unsuccessful, if defendant was in such a situation as to render it probable that he was liable on equitable principles.[86]

(VI) Pursuing More Expensive Remedy. Although the complainant succeeds in a suit, it may be a good cause for refusing him costs that he adopted a more expensive remedy than was necessary;[87] and under such circumstances he may even be charged with costs.[88]

(VII) Where Relief Is Conditioned on Payment of Money. Where the relief granted to complainant is conditioned on the repayment of money and the amount is paid without default, complainant is entitled to costs, but if default is made defendant is entitled to costs.[89]

(VIII) Right of Court to Apportion Costs — (A) In General. Courts of equity by virtue of the discretion universally vested in them by statute have power in a proper case to apportion the costs between the parties;[90] and their action in apportioning costs,[91] or in denying a motion for apportionment,[92] will not be disturbed unless it appears from the facts disclosed by the record that there was an abuse of discretion.

(B) Where Both Parties Successful in Part—(1) In General. In equity where both parties are successful in part the court may, it has been held, refuse to allow costs to either,[93] or apportion the costs between them as may in its discretion seem fit.[94]

(2) Where There Are Separate Issues or Causes of Action. In courts of equity where each party succeeds as to one or more of the causes of action or issues the allowance of costs is within the sound discretion of the court. In some jurisdictions, where each party succeeds as to part of the causes of action or issues, the practice is to deny costs to either as against the other.[95] So in others it has been held that costs may properly be apportioned between the parties,[96] and in another that the fact that a plaintiff succeeds on one ground and fails on another is not of itself sufficient reason for refusal to allow him costs in equity.[97]

(3) Where Cross Bill or Cross Complaint Is Filed. Where a cross bill, cross complaint, or reconventional demand is filed, and each party is cast, neither recovers costs, but must pay his own costs.[98] If each party obtains all the relief

he demanded costs may be equally divided under a statute authorizing the court to apportion costs as it may think just and advisable.[99] If the issues raised by the cross complaint fail in part only the costs attending the successful issues are taxable against defendants to the cross complaint, under a statute making each party liable for costs of the issues as to which he has failed.[1] If complainant obtains the relief asked and the court finds the charges of the cross bill not sustained it is error to tax the costs of the cross bill against him.[2] Where on a bill and cross bill complainant in the original bill mainly succeeded, although each party claimed more than he was entitled to, complainant in the original bill was allowed the costs therein, and neither party was allowed costs as to the other.[3] Where a cross bill is dismissed, but the court erroneously gives judgment in favor of the defendant for a small amount, it is proper to refuse him costs.[4]

Instances.— Thus where a purchaser had been suffered to hold possession three years, under a deed faulty by mistake, the court, on bill by the purchaser to stay an ejectment, and for a conveyance by the claimant, refused costs to either party (De Riemer v. Cantillon, 4 Johns. there has been a mistrial resulting from a submission of the case in accordance with their own stipulations.[7]

VI. RIGHT AS AFFECTED BY AMOUNT OF RECOVERY.

A. Introductory Statement. As is shown in another connection, it is an almost universal rule that the prevailing party in an action at law is entitled to costs in the absence of some special statutory provision to the contrary.[8]

B. Where Amount Recovered Is Within Jurisdiction of Lower Court — 1. In General. By virtue of statutory provisions in many jurisdictions, however, varying somewhat as to the character of actions enumerated, but usually confining their operation to actions for money, or actions for damages, or either, if the amount recovered is such that the suit would have been cognizable by a court of lower grade, plaintiff will not be entitled to costs;[9] and in some of these jurisdictions each party pays his own costs.[10] While in others plaintiff must pay defendant's costs.[11]

In Delaware a statute providing that if suit is brought on a cause of action cognizable before a justice in a higher court and plaintiff shall not recover fifty dollars besides costs he shall not recover costs, unless affidavit[12] has previously been filed that plaintiff has a just cause of action against defendant exceeding fifty dollars, is held not to apply to amicable actions but only to adversary actions.[13]

In Maine quarter costs only can be taxed for the plaintiff when it appears on the motion of judgment that the action should have been originally brought before a justice.[14]

In Missouri, where the plaintiff in an action on contract recovers an amount which, exclusive of interest and aside from reduction by set-off, is below the jurisdiction of the court, costs are adjudged against him. But if the court is of the opinion from the evidence that plaintiff when he brought the suit had reasonable grounds to believe himself entitled to a recovery within the jurisdiction of the court he will be allowed costs.[15]

In New Hampshire it has been held that if plaintiff, bringing his action in a court of record, had a reasonable expectation[16] of recovering an amount in excess of the jurisdiction of a justice, but recovers an amount within the justice's jurisdiction, he will nevertheless be entitled to full costs.[17]

In Pennsylvania where the plaintiff in an action for debt or damages in a court of record recovers an amount within the jurisdiction of a justice, he shall not recover costs, unless he made affidavit before obtaining process that he believes such debt or damages exceeded the jurisdiction of a justice.[18]

In Wisconsin if plaintiff does not recover one hundred dollars or more in actions on contract[19] or fifty dollars in actions of tort[20] he is not entitled to costs, but must pay defendant's costs.

2. Where Subject-Matter Not Cognizable by Lower Court. Nevertheless in the jurisdictions mentioned in the preceding section and in a few others, the rule seems to be well settled that if an action is brought in a higher court of which a lower court has not jurisdiction of the subject-matter, the plaintiff if he recovers judgment is entitled to costs, irrespective of the amount recovered.[21]

15. Hannan v. Shotwell, 55 Mo. 429.

The matter is one of discretion with the court; and not subject to any inflexible rule. Johnson v. Devlin, 31 Mo. 427.

16. If, however, he had no reasonable expectation of recovering a larger amount, the court will usually limit his costs to the amount recoverable before a justice (Church v. Clarke, 26 N. H. 366; Pickering v. Coleman, 12 N. H. 148; Barron v. Ashley, 4 N. H. 279); but to justify this limitation it must clearly appear that plaintiff had no such reasonable expectation (Bryant v. Bowen, 40 N. H. 157; Church v. Clarke, 26 N. The requirement of the statute must be strictly complied with both in respect to substance (Kelley v. Dodge Mfg. Co., 86 Pa. 3. WHERE JURISDICTION OF SUBJECT-MATTER IS CONCURRENT. So in some of these jurisdictions it is held that where a statute provides that if it shall appear that a justice had jurisdiction of an action and it was brought in another court plaintiff shall not recover costs, plaintiff commencing his action in another court cannot recover costs, although such court has concurrent jurisdiction with the justice's court.[22]

C. Where Amount Recovered Does Not Equal or Exceed Designated Sum. In some jurisdictions the right to recover costs seems to be based solely on the amount of recovery, irrespective of whether or not the cause was cognizable in a lower court. Thus in the United States circuit court in either legal or equitable actions, if plaintiff recover less than five hundred dollars, exclusive of costs, he is not entitled to costs;[23] but in a case where the court has discretion in the matter he may be taxed with defendant's costs.[24] If the plaintiff had a reasonable expectation of recovering more than that sum the court will not adjudge costs against him.[25]

In California, where in an action for money or damages plaintiff recovers less than three hundred dollars, he is not entitled to costs;[26] but on the other hand will not have to pay defendant's costs.[27]

In Indiana in actions "on money demands on contracts"[28] brought in the circuit or superior court, if plaintiff recovers less than fifty dollars, exclusive of

Proc. § 621, providing that if a justice of the peace has jurisdiction of the action and the same is brought in any other court, plaintiff shall not recover costs, but under a statute providing that in all actions founded upon debt or other contract if the plaintiff recover an amount which exclusive of interest is below the jurisdiction of the court, he shall pay costs, plaintiff who recovers less than one hundred dollars in the district court is nevertheless entitled to recover costs where the district and justices' courts have concurrent jurisdiction of actions of debt in sums less than one hundred dollars.

But where, in an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien, plaintiff recovers less than fifty dollars "on the account," no mention being made of the lien, the action is considered "on the account" and defendant is entitled to costs. costs, he recovers no costs and must pay defendant's costs.[29] So it has been held that where one paragraph of a complaint counts on a contract, and nothing appears in the record to show that the recovery was not based on that paragraph, a judgment against plaintiff for costs will be sustained where he recovered less than fifty dollars.[30]

In New Jersey if the plaintiff does not recover more than two hundred dollars in actions commenced in the supreme court he is not entitled to costs.[31]

In Oregon, in actions for the recovery of money or damages, defendant is entitled to costs where plaintiff fails to recover fifty dollars or more.[32]

D. Rules of Common Application Under Both Classes of Statutes — 1. Effect of Seeking Other Relief Than Money Judgment. Statutes providing that plaintiff shall not recover costs if the amount of his recovery does not equal or exceed a designated sum of money have no application, where the party asks and obtains other relief in addition to a money judgment. Under these circumstances he is entitled to costs irrespective of the amount of money recovered.[33] These statutes are fully operative, however, where a party asks but does not obtain judgment or other relief in addition to a money judgment.[34]

2. Effect of Allowance or Refusal of Set-Off or Counter-Claim — a. Where Allowance Reduces Recovery Below Amount Sufficient to Carry Costs. Where the statutes expressly except from their operation cases in which the amount recovered is reduced by set-off or counter-claim below the jurisdiction of the court in which suit is brought, or below the amount designated by statute as essential to authorize an award of costs to plaintiff or to exempt him from liability for defendant's costs, the plaintiff is of course entitled to costs where the amount recovered except for the allowance of a set-off or counter-claim would have been sufficient to carry costs.[35] In the absence of such express statutory exception the weight of authority is that the plaintiff will not be entitled to costs, although the amount recovered is reduced by set-off or counter-claim below the jurisdiction of the court, or below the amount made necessary by statute to entitle plaintiff to costs or to exempt him from liability for defendant's costs;[36] but in one state the contrary conclusion has been reached,[37] and in another the decisions on the questions are conflicting, some that where the amount is reduced by set-off below the amount necessary to authorize an award of costs to plaintiff he is nevertheless entitled to costs,[38] one that defendant is entitled to costs,[39] and another that neither party is entitled to costs.[40] So in one state it has been held (no statute being mentioned in the decision) that where defendant's reconventional demand was set off in the main action and a judgment recovered by plaintiff for a balance it included costs.[41] In another jurisdiction, under a statute providing that when a counter-claim or set-off is pleaded, the party recovering judgment shall also recover his costs, the costs abide the general result. The fact that defendant recovers something on his counter-claim does not authorize an award of costs against plaintiff or deprive him of the right to costs, unless the amount so recovered is in excess of plaintiff's recovery.[42] In another jurisdiction, under a statute providing that when a plaintiff on a suit originally brought in the circuit court recover less than five hundred dollars, he shall not recover costs but may be adjudged to pay costs, where plaintiff suing for over that amount recovers less because of the allowance of a counter-claim for breach of warranty each party must pay his own costs.[43]

b. Where Allowance Does Not Reduce Recovery Below Amount Sufficient to Carry Costs. If notwithstanding the allowance or partial allowance plaintiff recovers more than the amount necessary to authorize an allowance of costs to him, he is of course entitled to costs.[44]

c. Where Notwithstanding Disallowance Recovery Is Insufficient to Carry Costs. Where plaintiff fails to recover an amount necessary to carry costs, notwithstanding the failure of defendant to establish his counter-claim, costs will be denied him.[45]

d. Where Set-Off or Counter-Claim Allowed Equals or Exceeds Plaintiff's Demand. Where defendant recovers an amount equal to,[46] or in excess of, plaintiff's demand on his counter-claim, and judgment is rendered in his favor, he is entitled to costs.[47]

e. What Amounts to Set-Off or Counter-Claim.[48] Within the rules heretofore stated, the following have been held set-offs or counter-claims: In an action for the price of a machine a claim for injury resulting from plaintiff's failure to regulate it as agreed;[49] in an action on a note, given in payment for a chattel, an answer alleging breach of warranty consisting in defects known to plaintiff rendering the chattel less valuable by a designated amount than it otherwise would have been;[50] and a credit claimed by an agent for compensation for services in an action against him by his principal for a balance in his hands.[51] So where plaintiff and defendant dealt with each other agreeing that the article furnished on either side should be applied on the other in part payment, and that when the accounts were closed the balance should be paid in cash, and the accounts remained open and unsettled, and defendant who was in arrears never rendered any account of items or prices until after suit was brought, it was held that plaintiff could not be held in fault for not applying payments before their amount was furnished, and that the court properly treated the case as one of set-off instead of payment in determining the question of costs.[52] On the other hand it has been held that in an action for rent, the tenant's defense of untenantableness of the premises, failure to repair, and an agreement that the tenant might remove before the expiration of his term did not constitute a defense of set-off;[53] and in an action for labor and a designated amount of money advanced a denial of any request to pay the money was held not to constitute a counter-claim.[54]

f. Presumption As to Method of Reduction of Claim. Where defendant pleads both set-off and payment and the trial court gives judgment for plaintiff for costs on his recovery, of an amount insufficient of itself to carry costs, it will be presumed in support of the judgment that the claim was reduced by evidence of set-off instead of payment, unless the record shows the contrary.[55] Where a counter-claim was filed and plaintiff was awarded costs on a judgment for a sum not sufficient to carry costs, it will be presumed that the demand was reduced by the counter-claim.[56] Where by statute defendant is entitled to costs made in establishing a controverted set-off, and in an action on a note in which he pleads the general issue and set-off the jury find a general verdict for plaintiff on the note less a designated amount, he will not be allowed costs, as when the plea of set-off is successfully interposed, if the deduction might have been made either under evidence under the general issue or under the plea of set-off.[57] So where the only defense set up in assumpsit is a settlement and work subsequently done for plaintiff to a designated amount, and the court instructed the jury that if they found the settlement sustained they should throw out all matters on either side that entered into the balance one way or the other as to the items of the deal after the settlement, and the jury found a verdict for plaintiff for a sum insufficient to carry full costs, it was held that it could not be said that plaintiff was entitled to full costs on the ground that he established a claim for a sum sufficient to carry such costs which was reduced by set-off.[58]

3. Effect of Deduction Made Because of Usury. In a number of jurisdictions, by express statutory provision, if usury be proved in an action on contract and a deduction made from the amount claimed because thereof defendant recovers costs.[59] But in one of these jurisdictions the rule is limited at least to the extent that the amount recoverable must be reduced by proof of usury made by the defendant, and a voluntary indorsement of the amount of usurious interest taken or retained by the plaintiff before trial will not bring the case within the rule so as to entitle defendant to costs or deprive plaintiff of costs.[60] In another jurisdiction defendant recovers full costs if it be made to appear that usurious interest has been taken or reserved.[61] These statutes intend costs of the action and not merely costs incurred on the issue of usury.[62] A statute giving costs to defendant on proof of usurious interest under the general issue has been held not to apply to real actions such as writ of entry as on a mortgage.[63]

4. Effect of Deduction Made on Account of Payment. By special statutory provision in some jurisdictions, if plaintiff's demand is reduced by payment to an amount below the jurisdiction of the court in which the action is brought defendant is entitled to costs;[64] and the same is the rule under a statute giving costs to defendant where plaintiff's recovery is less than a certain sum.[65] So where statutes provide that plaintiff shall not recover costs, if his recovery not having been reduced by set-off or counter-claim is less than a designated amount, plaintiff is not entitled to costs, where the amount recovered is reduced by payment below the amount designated in the statute.[66] And under an act providing that if

Exception — Contract to pay debt of third person.— If plaintiff's demand exceeding one hundred dollars be reduced by evidence of a special contract to pay the debt of a third person he may recover costs. Manning v. Eaton, 7 Watts (Pa.) 346.

Where whole amount paid.— Plaintiff's right to costs on recovery of a money judgment for fifty dollars or more under the New York statute exists only where judgment is actually recovered for that amount, and he is not entitled to costs where the actions within the jurisdiction of a justice be commenced in any other court and plaintiff recovers less than a designated amount he shall not have his costs, if the recovery in such other court is reduced below the jurisdiction thereof by payments plaintiff is not entitled to costs.[67]

5. Determination of Amount For Purpose of Fixing Right to Costs. While the amount claimed determines what court has jurisdiction[68] the amount recovered is the basis for determining the question of costs.[69] Where there are several counts the recoveries on the different counts may be added to make up the sum necessary to entitle plaintiff to costs,[70] and where separate verdicts are rendered against defendants sued jointly, the separate sums awarded may be added to make up such amount,[71] unless the action is one in which the defendant could not properly be joined.[72] A sum awarded as costs by the jury cannot be added;[73] nor can interest accruing after verdict;[74] but where the jury find a verdict for a debt or damages and interest, plaintiff has been held entitled to costs if the two sums aggregate the amount necessary to carry costs.[75] If a consent judgment is entered for an amount sufficient to give costs to plaintiff, and the parties go to trial for the balance of plaintiff's claim, he will be entitled to costs, although the verdict is for less than the amount requisite to give plaintiff costs.[76]

E. Under Statutes Providing That Costs Shall Not Exceed Recovery. In most jurisdictions statutes exist which provide that in designated actions of tort the costs[77] awarded plaintiff shall not exceed the damages recovered.[78] The

Here in an action brought originally in the court of common pleas for use and occupation of two tenements, as to one of which plaintiff pleaded that he owed nothing and as to the other a tender of thirty dollars, the court instructed the jury that they were not to include in a verdict for plaintiff for the use and occupation of the second tenement the amount tendered, and they returned a general verdict for plaintiff for fifteen dollars on which judgment was rendered. It was held that plaintiff finally recovered more than twenty dollars, within the meaning of the statute, and was entitled to costs.

specific designation by the statutes of the actions in which costs are limited by the amount of damages recovered excludes all other actions from their operation.[79] According to some decisions statutes providing generally that in designated actions costs awarded plaintiff shall not exceed the damages recovered, if such damages be assessed at a sum less than or not exceeding a designated sum, do not authorize a judgment against plaintiff in defendant's favor for costs made by the latter,[80] or a judgment against plaintiff for the balance of the costs accruing in the case, although the recovery be less than, or not in excess of, the sum specified in the statute;[81] and where under such provisions plaintiff recovers a less amount of damages than the amount designated by the statute, the court will render judgment for him for a like sum in costs, notwithstanding the jury assessed the costs to defendant[82] or found a verdict for costs for plaintiff.[83] According to other decisions if plaintiff does not recover a sum in excess of that designated he is liable for all costs of suit except an amount equal to the damages recovered.[84] Where the trial court renders judgment for costs not exceeding the damages recovered, and the record does not show that the case was by the facts excepted from the operation of the statute, it will be presumed on appeal that such facts did not exist.[85]

VII. RIGHT AS AFFECTED BY CHARACTER OF ACTIONS, PROCEEDINGS, OR QUESTIONS INVOLVED.

A. Introductory Statement. As already shown the prevailing party in actions at law, whatever may be their character, is entitled to costs in the absence of some express statutory provision authorizing a different disposition of the question of costs.[86] So it has also been shown that in suits in equity the costs are in the discretion of the court, but will usually be awarded the prevailing party, unless the court considers that the circumstances are such as will authorize a departure from the general rule.[87] It has also been shown that in actions at law the general rule that the prevailing party is entitled to costs is subject to certain modifications and limitations imposed by statute which are dependent upon the amount recovered.[88] It is the purpose of this chapter to consider in what manner and to what extent, if any, the general rule that the prevailing party is entitled to costs is affected by the character of the action, proceedings, or questions involved.[89]

B. Actions Involving Questions of Title to Real Property — 1. In General. In most jurisdictions the statutes contain special provisions governing the right to costs where the determination of the action involves a consideration of the question of title to real property. These statutes vary somewhat in phraseology. In some jurisdictions the plaintiffs will be entitled to costs as of course, if the question of title arise on the pleadings or the trial judge certifies that title came in question on the trial.[90] Under other statutes the question must arise on the pleadings; it will not be sufficient that the judge certified that title came in question.[91] In another jurisdiction, to enable a party who recovers only a designated amount of damages in an action in the nature of trespass, quare clausum fregit to have costs, a judge must certify that the title to real estate was in fact concerned.[92] And in another jurisdiction there is a general provision that in actions for damages solely not arising out of contract if plaintiff do not recover a designated amount he shall recover no more costs than damages, except certain actions among which are actions wherein title to real property is involved.[93] Where a case is brought within the provision of these statutes the plaintiff is entitled to costs when successful, irrespective of the amount recovered.[94] It is immaterial that such amount was within the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace.[95] And other statutes providing that in actions no more costs than damages should be recovered if the damages recovered do not equal a designated amount,[96] or providing that defendant shall recover costs if in actions of costs a designated amount is not recovered,[97] have no application to cases of the character under consideration.

Most of the decisions arising under these statutes admit of a more specific classification than under a general treatise on "Costs" and will be found under their appropriate titles such as ASSAULT AND BATTERY; CRIMINAL CONVERSION; FALSE IMPRISONMENT; LIBEL AND SLANDER; MALICIOUS PROSECUTION; SEDUCTION; TRESPASS, etc.

79. Gorton v. U. S., etc., Steamship Co., 13 N. Y. Suppl. 653, 37 N. Y. St. 556, 20 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 196. Thus a provision that no more costs than damages can be recovered in an action of "slander or trespass, assault and battery" does not apply to actions of trover (Johnson v. Sims, 4 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 330) nor to actions of trespass quare clausum fregit (Williams v. Perkins, 1 Port. (Ala.) 471).

90. Under the New York statutes, if the question of title arises on the pleadings, no certificate of the judge is necessary to entitle plaintiff to costs. Kelly v. New York, etc., R. Co., 81 N. Y. 233. Under former statutes a certificate that the question of title arose on the pleadings was necessary. Lafarge v. Eames, 1 Wend. 99; Jackson v. Randall, 11 Johns. 405; Farrington v. Rennie, 2 Cai. 220.

In Pennsylvania it has been held that the statute 22 & 23 Car. II, c. 9, prohibiting plaintiff from recovering costs in an action of trespass quare clausum fregit unless the court certifies that the title of land comes in question is in force. Under this statute it has been held that no costs can be recovered where the record does not show that the title to land was the chief question or a judge does not so certify. Bowers v. Taylor, 3 Del. Co. 334. The statute has been held not to apply where the title is shown by the pleadings to be involved (Taylor v. Coppock, 1 Del. Co. 190), nor where costs are awarded in the verdict of the jury (Hinds v. Knox, 4 Serg. & R. 417). And it has been held that in trespass quare clausum fregit where the question of the entry of judgment is settled by the same judge who tries the cause a formal certificate of the judge that the title to land was chiefly in issue is not necessary. Knabb v. Kaufman, 1 Woodw. 325.

In Wisconsin it has been held that if the plaintiff recovers less than a designated amount and it does not appear from the pleadings or a certificate from the judge that title to land came in question the defendant gets costs. Wausau Boom Co. v. Plumer, 49 Wis. 112, 4 N. W. 1072.

2. Instances in Which Questions of Title Held to Be Involved. The question of title has been held to be involved in the following actions: Trespass for building a fence on plaintiff's land, where the question in dispute was the location of the true line;[98] trespass quare clausum fregit where there is a conflict of evidence as to the true location of the boundary line between the respective closes of the parties;[99] where the defense is that plaintiff was not the owner or possessor of the land,[1] or where the defendant sets up as a defense the right to maintain a surface-drain;[2] actions for trespass on land where the question is whether the locus in quo was highway or not,[3] where defendant justifies under an alleged right of way across the premises[4] or under a claim that at the time of the acts complained of the locus in quo was his soil and freehold and that he had a right of way over it,[5] where defendant disputes plaintiff's right of possession at the time of the acts complained of[6] or sets up title in himself,[7] or where the production of plaintiff's title is necessary to enable him to maintain the action;[8] trespass for disturbing plaintiff in his fishing on his own land to which defendant pleaded not guilty and set up title to the fishery;[9] ejectment for building a structure overlapping on plaintiff's land;[10] an action for overflowing land to the permanent injury of the soil and freehold;[11] a suit to enjoin a judgment for payment of purchase-money on the ground of failure of title;[12] an action of waste;[13] an action for obstructing a watercourse in which plaintiff's title is disclosed and the question of priority of rights discussed;[14] an action for obstructing a private way;[15] an action by a landowner for the value of fish taken from his private grounds and for exemplary damages allowed by statute for such act;[16] an action against an elevated railroad company for damages to land abutting on a street in which the road is constructed;[17] a proceeding to make real estate assets where defendants set up title to the land in controversy, which issue is found against them;[18] an action to recover the rental value and mesne profits of land on which defendant is charged to have entered wrongfully, where defendant alleged ownership in himself;[19] an action for breach of covenant of quiet enjoyment in which the complaint alleges that plaintiff had been evicted by the rightful owner who was entitled to possession and the answer denying such allegations;[20] a suit against a pewholder in a church for rent of the pew, the pew having been granted to such holder and his heirs by a church corporation;[21] an action in which defendant justifies entering on the premises and removing a building on the allegation that

3. Instances in Which Questions of Title Held Not to Be Involved. The question of title is not involved in the following actions: An action which actual possession is sufficient to maintain;[24] an action of trespass on land in which the justification is a license to do the acts complained of,[25] in which the issue is whether defendant having permission to enter for one purpose availed himself thereof for a different purpose,[26] in which plaintiff describes the land by metes and bounds and defendant admits plaintiff's ownership of the premises so described but denies that the alleged trespass is on such premises,[27] or in which plaintiff offers to show title, and the same is rendered unnecessary by defendant's admission of title;[28] an action for damages caused by defendant's obstructing a road to plaintiff's land, where there is no claim for any invasion of plaintiff's possession or for any injury to their freehold;[29] an action for breach of covenant of a lease, although title is alleged in the complaint and denied by defendant;[30] an action for assault and battery in which the answer states that immediately before the alleged assault plaintiff entered on defendant's close and that defendant removed him using no unnecessary force;[31] an action against an overseer of highways for diverting at a highway at which plaintiff owned the fee a stream of water from defendant's barn-yard and tearing away his watering-trough;[32] an action against the owner of adjoining premises for damages caused by smoke and dust emitted through pipes inserted by defendant in the wall separating the premises, where defendant admits title to the premises to be as plaintiff alleged, but alleges that the wall was a party-wall and that the holes in it had been in use more than twenty years;[33] or an action involving the question of defendant's right to enter on plaintiff's land in order to remove personal property.[34]

4. When Question of Title Considered to Be Raised by Pleadings. debtor;[36] in an action of trespass to land where liberum tenementum is pleaded;[37] where defendant's general denial of each and every allegation of the complaint fairly construed denies defendant's title;[38] where the answer sets up title in a third person;[39] where the defendant files with the general issue notice that he will show ownership in himself;[40] where there is an allegation that plaintiff is entitled to possession of the land and a denial of the same;[41] in an action for trespass on unoccupied lands where the general issue is pleaded;[42] in an action for injury to the freehold, since in such action it is necessary to allege and prove title;[43] in an action of trespass or case where from the complaint it appears that plaintiff relies on his title to establish a constructive possession without proving actual possession;[44] in an action of case for overflowing land where defendant pleads the general issue and a justification of a right of prescription;[45] in an action for assault and battery, where the replication alleges the trespass to have been committed in the public highway and the rejoinder claims that it was the public highway,[46] or where the defense was (1) general denial, (2) son assault demesne, or (3) justification in defense of defendant's real property;[47] in an action against a village for injury to plaintiff's property by constructing a sewer so as to throw its contents on plaintiff's property, in which the answer denies the complaint, alleges that the sewer is a natural watercourse long used by him and claims title adverse to plaintiff;[48] where a complaint alleges plaintiff's title in an easement in the bed of a street on which his premises abutted and that defendant had involved the easement without proceedings to condemn the same, and the answer denies any knowledge or information in the premises;[49] where the complaint alleges ownership and possession of land and an entry thereon by defendant and the taking of trees and shrubbery, and the answer alleges that defendant did the acts complained of under an agreement with plaintiff;[50] where a complaint alleges that plaintiff is the owner and in possession of certain land and that defendant carried a building therefrom and converted it to his own use, and the answer admits that defendant's sheriff levied upon and took the building into custody under an execution against plaintiff and denies all other allegations;[51] where a complaint contains three counts: (1) for labor and material furnished for a dwelling-house alleged to be owned by defendants; (2) for damages caused by entrance of defendants into the house before completion without plaintiff's consent; and (3) for lumber belonging to plaintiff taken by defendants but not used in the erection of the house, and the answer of one of the defendants contains a general denial;[52] or in an action for injury to real property where the complaint alleges plaintiff to be the owner of an undivided half of the premises, without alleging possession, and the answer denies this and alleges defendant to be the owner of an undivided half, and the reply admits defendant's title as pleaded.[53]

land where the allegation of title is admitted or not denied;[54] where the complaint alleges title in plaintiff, and the defendant merely pleads a general denial;[55] where the answer did not deny plaintiff's title but alleged that defendant committed the acts complained of by direction of the highway commissioner, who had proceeded to open a highway on the locus in quo and that defendant believed it to be a lawful highway;[56] where defendant claims title to part of the premises and as to the rest admits trespass and offers judgment, where plaintiff accepts the offer and admits defendant's title to that part of the premises claimed by him;[57] in an action of trespass quare clausum fregit where the complaint is in the usual form;[58] in an action for trespass for entering plaintiff's land and carrying off personal property affixed to a mill where damages are claimed for the value of the property and for injuries to the mill and premises, and the answer set up that defendant was the owner and in actual possession "of all the property described in the complaint or therein mentioned" and that he took away from the premises in a peaceable manner "all the property mentioned in the complaint";[59] in an action of covenant by a lessee against a lessor for breach of a covenant of title in the lessor, when the only plea is non est factum;[60] in an action for personal injuries in which it was alleged as a defense that plaintiff when injured was a trespasser;[61] in an action by a landlord against his tenant for injuries to the leased premises where the complaint alleges ownership;[62] in an action for diverting a stream of water from land of which plaintiff alleges he was the owner and possessor, and in which the answer denies each and every allegation;[63] where a complaint alleging that defendants as town assessors carelessly and unlawfully assessed to plaintiff a parcel of land in the town; that plaintiff was neither an inhabitant of the town nor owner of the land, and that in consequence of such assessment personal property of plaintiff was levied on and sold and the defendants put in a general demand of all matters in the complaint charging unlawful action on their part, but did not affirmatively allege any title in plaintiff in the land assessed;[64] or in an action against a railroad company for negligently starting a fire on plaintiff's land, where the defense is the exercise of due care and no claim of interest in the land is made.[65]

6. When Question of Title Considered to Arise on the Proceedings. A claim of title to real property arises on the proceedings when in an action of trespass quare clausum fregit defendant claims that the plaintiff had possession of the land or any right or title thereto and plaintiff introduced the conveyance constituting his claim of title in evidence.[66]

7. When Title Properly Certified to Have Come in Question. A certificate that title to real estate came in question at the trial is properly given where the complaint alleges ownership of certain premises and trespasses thereon by defendant and the answer is a general denial and the question of title is gone into at the trial;[67] the rule is otherwise, however, where the title to the real estate was in issue but not tried.[68]

8. Effect of Joining Causes of Action, One of Which Does Not Involve Title. Where several causes of action are joined, one of which does not involve a claim of title to real property, defendant is entitled to costs where he succeeds on the issue of title.[69] If plaintiff succeeds on such issue, he is entitled to costs, although he fail on a cause of action for the recovery of personal property;[70] and also where there is a general verdict in his favor.[71] The question of title is not in issue so as to entitle plaintiff to full costs, where the court decides that the cause of action involving question of title cannot be maintained and submits to the jury only the issue involved in the other cause of action.[72]

9. Effect of Defendant Establishing Title to Part of Land. Where defendant claims that the acts complained of were committed on land not belonging to plaintiff, and plaintiff succeeds in establishing that part of the locus in quo on which the acts were committed belonged to him he is entitled to costs.[73] Where, however, defendant sets up title to only a portion of the locus in quo, and establishes title thereto, and plaintiff recovers for the trespass only as to that part of the premises not affected by the plea of title, plaintiff does not recover costs but is chargeable with those of defendant.[74]

10. Where Title Involved in First but Not in Second Trial. Where in trespass quare clausum fregit title to real estate is drawn in question so as to entitle plaintiff to full costs, the fact that on a second trial the case is tried on other grounds not involving title will not defeat the right to such costs.[75]

11. Where Party Has Reason to Believe That Question of Title Will Be Raised. Where from the acts of a party[76] or the framing of his pleadings[77] his opponent has good reason to believe that title to real property will be involved and acts on that assumption he will if successful be entitled to recover costs as if title had been brought in question, although in fact it was not.

C. Amicable Actions. In amicable actions costs will ordinarily be refused both parties,[78] or divided equally between them.[79]

D. Special Proceedings. To authorize an allowance of costs in special proceedings,[80] some special statutory authorization is necessary. These proceedings is not entitled to motion costs unless they are allowed by the order of the court making it.[86]

b. Right of Prevailing Party to Costs — (I) General Rule. In Michigan it has been held that costs on motion are allowed of course, unless some special reason is shown why they should not be imposed.[87] In New Jersey it has been held that on setting aside an irregular proceeding, the party against whom it has been taken is not liable for costs; that in such case he demands a right and not a favor.[88] So in jurisdictions where costs are in the discretion of the court the party prevailing on a motion is ordinarily entitled to costs.[89]

(II) Exceptions and Limitations of Rule — (A) In General. But where costs are within the discretion of the court the successful party is not entitled to costs of motion where it is granted him as a favor.[90] If the motion is to be relieved from a default, movant may be charged with costs as a condition of obtaining the relief sought.[91] Although a motion be granted, costs will not be allowed where questions thereby arising are questions of first impression.[92] Nor will the successful party be entitled to costs where the decisions are conflicting in respect to the question involved.[93] Again where one party makes an application to the court in consequence of the declarations of the other party, although the application be dismissed, such other party shall pay the costs.[94]

(B) Effect of Unnecessary Matter in Moving Papers. The prevailing party in a motion will not be allowed costs where the papers on which the motion is based are unnecessarily voluminous and contain irrelevant matter.[95]

(C) Effect of Partial Success. If the moving party only obtains part of the relief asked for in his notice he should not be allowed costs.[96]

(D) Effect of Correction of Error Before Notice of Motion. Where the error in relation to which a motion is made is corrected before the papers for the motion were served, but after they had been prepared, the moving party will not be entitled to costs of motion.[97] Otherwise where the error is corrected after the notice of the motion.[98]

Costs of opposing motion. — It has been held that costs may be allowed a party for appearing at a general term and resisting a motion which should have been made at a special term (Donaldson v. Jackson, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 450); where the notice asks in the affirmative for two different modes of relief, one of which the moving party is entitled to (Smith v. Jones, 2 Code Rep. (N. been held that a party who appears to resist a motion is entitled to costs thereof where the moving party defaults.[99] In another jurisdiction it has been held that ordinarily notice of a motion which has been served cannot be withdrawn without paying the costs of the motion.[1]

d. Necessity For Demand For Costs. If a notice of a motion which is granted by default does not state that costs will be asked none can be granted;[2] and costs cannot be granted upon a default after a notice of motion which merely asks for general relief.[3]

e. What Costs Allowable — (I) In General. Where a party appears for the purposes of a motion only, it is only costs of the motion[4] which can properly be awarded.[5]

(II) Number of Bills of Costs Taxable. Where a motion in several causes is based on one set of papers and is successful only one bill of costs can be taxed;[6] and where a motion in several causes is resisted on one set of papers only one bill of costs can be taxed.[7] So costs of one motion only will be allowed where two or more separate motions contain substantially the same facts, and the same plaintiffs and attorneys.[8] If separate attorneys appear on a motion for different parties in the same action costs of one motion only will be allowed.[9] If there are several causes between the same plaintiff and different defendants and motions in each are made by defendants for judgment, as in case of nonsuit, and granted unless plaintiff pay costs, the costs of only one motion will be allowed where the attorneys were the same in each case.[10]

2. Motion to Compel Filing of Pleading. In one case it has been held that costs may be allowed on an ex parte motion to compel the filing of a pleading where the party omits to file it after notice requiring him to do so;[11] in another it was held that costs should not be allowed on an ex parte order directing defendant to file his answer.[12]

demurrer as frivolous;[13] but on sustaining a motion to strike out an amended petition from the file, it is erroneous to render judgment for costs against plaintiff as on a trial.[14] Costs will not be imposed on denial of a motion to strike out the answer where the plaintiff was right in serving the notice of motion.[15]

4. Motion For Change of Venue. Where it is expressly so provided by statute the person obtaining a change of venue must pay the costs of the motion;[16] but only such items are taxable as are provided for in the statute authorizing the taxation.[17] In the absence of any special statute relating to costs on change of venue, the costs abide the event of the suit and are taxable in the bill of the prevailing party.[18]

5. Motion For Continuance[19] — a. Who Liable For Costs. The taxation of costs on the granting of a continuance is regulated largely by statutes and rules of court. In some jurisdictions it has been held that costs of a continuance are properly taxed against the party whose act made the continuance necessary;[20] in one jurisdiction that where a party moving had good grounds for continuance his adversary cannot tax costs during the continuance;[21] and in another that costs resulting from a continuance granted on the application of a party must be taxed against the party applying for the continuance in any event.[22] Under a statute providing that continuances for providential cause shall not be charged to either party, where a continuance is granted because of the illness of counsel it was held that no costs should be imposed.[23] And it has been held that if a trial goes off because of the mistake of the judge or sheriff in making out the panel of a struck jury the plaintiff is not liable to costs.[24] A statute providing that certain costs may be required as a condition of granting a continuance applies to a continuance from one term to another as well as to a continuance to a later day in the same term.[25] Where a person has paid costs as a condition of obtaining a continuance such costs cannot be again taxed against him on a final judgment if his adversary is successful.[26]

Extent of rule.— So where the motion is denied the party moving, although eventually successful in the action, is not entitled to the costs of the motion (Gidney v. Spelman, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 525); and in one case it has been held that costs of opposing the motion will not be allowed unless the motion is denied, because the moving party's papers are defective (Sill v. Trumbull, 1 Cow. b. What Costs Allowed. Where costs are imposed on granting a continuance, only such costs as are by law taxable can be included.[27] Where an application is granted on condition that plaintiff indemnify defendant for costs in preparation for trial, the order, under the New York statutes, includes witness' fees paid, which are rendered ineffectual by the postponement, and also fees paid witnesses who did not attend court, where the latter cannot be recovered back.[28] The word "costs" in an order imposing costs, as a condition of a continuance, means only costs of the term and not costs of the action.[29]

6. Motions Subsequent to Judgment — a. Motion to Arrest Judgment. In perhaps the majority of jurisdictions the rule is that on arrest of judgment neither party is entitled to costs.[30] In some jurisdictions, however, it has been held that where the defendant prevails on a motion in an arrest of judgment because of a defective declaration, he is entitled to costs;[31] and it has been held that when judgment is arrested in a supreme court, the defendant is entitled to costs in that court and in the court below.[32] It has been held also that where judgment is arrested after verdict, and leave to amend a new trial is granted, costs are allowed to defendant from the time the case went to the jury.[33]

b. Motion to Set Aside Judgment — (i) In General. Costs on a motion to set aside a judgment are in some jurisdictions in the discretion of the court.[34]

The imposition of a gross sum as costs is improper, under a statute requiring, as a condition of an adjournment, that the adverse party be paid "a sum not exceeding $10 . . . , besides the fees of his witnesses, and other taxable disbursements already made and incurred, which are rendered ineffectual by the adjournment." Kennedy v. Wood, 54 Hun (N. Y.) 14, 7 N. Y. Suppl. 90, 26 N. Y. St. 34. Where a statute provides that plaintiff shall recover no more costs than the debt or damages, "except costs which may accrue from continuance at the request of the defendant," the court adds to the amount of costs equal to the debt, etc., the costs that accrue at any term in which the defendant appellee obtains a continuance, but not the costs of any subsequent term, as a consequence of such continuance. Reason of rule.— In a number of the cases the rule assigned for disallowing costs to the successful party on the motion in an arrest was that the error for which the judgment was arrested being apparent from the pleadings, he might have taken advantage thereof by demurrer, and that by failure to do so he had contributed to the costs of the proceedings. It has been held that where both parties are in the wrong each should pay his own costs on such a motion.[35]

(II) DEFAULT JUDGMENT. By an express statutory provision in California a default judgment can only be set aside on payment by the moving party of all costs accruing to his opponent to the time of service and filing of motion therefor.[36] In other jurisdictions, however, costs are within the discretion of the court.[37] Again it has been held that where a judgment is obtained by default, through a misapprehension of defendant's attorney, and it appears clearly that the plaintiff has no cause of action, and should have known, if he did not, that he had none when he commenced proceedings, the judgment should be set aside and plaintiff required to pay defendant costs of motion;[38] and where plaintiff whose proceedings subsequent to defendant's default and the entry of judgment were irregular refused to open the default on a suitable explanation and offer on the part of defendant, costs were awarded against plaintiff on defendant's motion to set aside default.[39] In an equitable action, in one jurisdiction, it was held that where a sole defendant resides out of the state and no foreign publication is ordered or notice given to him, costs on opening the decree at his instance should be ordered to abide the event of the suit;[40] and, in another, that, where a decree pro confesso was improperly entered, and an application was properly made by defendant to set it aside, he should not be taxed with the costs of the suit up to the time of the application when no blame attaches to him.[41]

c. Motion to Stay or Quash Execution. A party who is successful on a motion to stay an execution is entitled to costs of the proceedings,[42] so a party succeeding on a motion to quash an execution is entitled to costs.[43] Where a motion to set aside an execution is denied but both parties are in fault, each party should pay his own costs.[44]

d. Motion to Set Aside Sale. A successful party in a motion to set aside an execution sale is ordinarily entitled to costs.[45]

7. OTHER PROCEEDINGS SUBSEQUENT TO JUDGMENT. Where an issue is made up by leave of court to try whether a confession of judgment is fraudulent the party prevailing is entitled to his costs.[46] Where immediately on the rendition of a special verdict judgment was rendered by the trial court, it was held that there was no such "application for judgment upon a special verdict" as would entitle the successful party to costs under a statute providing for costs on such application.[47]

8. AMENDMENT OF PLEADINGS — a. allowed all costs up to the time of such amendment;[48] and the rule is held to apply to cases where the plaintiff is permitted to amend after a judgment in his favor has been reversed.[49]

(II) To Cure Variance. No costs will be allowed, because of an amendment to cure an immaterial variance;[50] but it has been held that an amendment to cure a material variance will be allowed on payment of defendant's costs from and after the time the objection for variance was made.[51]

(III) Amendments as of Course. Under a statute providing that any pleading may be once amended by the party of course, without costs and without prejudice to the proceedings already had, at any time before the period for answering expires, or at any time within twenty days after the service of the answer or demurrer thereto, a party may amend as of course within the time specified, notwithstanding a motion by his adversary in relation to such pleading within the period allowed for amendment.[52]

(IV) MATTER STRICKEN OUT BY COURT OF ITS OWN MOTION. Where the court of its own motion strikes matter out of an affidavit filed in a proceeding before a clerk no costs will be allowed the opposite party.[53]

(V) OTHER AMENDMENTS. Under a statute providing that an amendment may be permitted either with or without payment of costs, an order on a plaintiff to withdraw one of the items constituting a cause of action may be granted without imposing costs on plaintiff.[54] Where the defendant filed a general demurrer to the plaintiffs' writ and declaration, and the demurrer was sustained, and plaintiffs moved to amend their writ, which was allowed, and the defendant excepted to the allowance of an amendment, after which the defendant filed a general demurrer to the declaration, which was overruled, and the defendant excepted thereto, a statute providing that the plaintiff may amend upon the payment of costs from the time of filing a demurrer does not apply until after the decision on the defendant's exceptions by the law court.[55] Where the parties in replevin went to trial on the affidavit, no bill of particulars having been filed, and an appeal was perfected and depositions taken, and witnesses summoned for trial in the appellate court, and on the case being called, defendant for the first time raised the point that a bill of particulars should be filed, and the court thereupon ordered such bill, imposing on plaintiff as a condition of filing the same all costs to date, the condition was inequitable and should not have been imposed.[56] Where a plaintiff is permitted to amend by adding another defendant it is an abuse of discretion to tax defendant with costs of the motion.[57] Where the amendment of a bill causes no additional costs except the taking of one witness' evidence, with which plaintiff was charged, the costs accruing to the time of the amendment should not be taxed to plaintiff because of the amendment.[58] Where the plaintiff applies to amend a summons and complaint, after answer and before notice of trial, he must pay costs for proceedings before notice of trial, costs of resisting the motion to amend, and such disbursements as are chargeable by statute against the unsuccessful party.[59]

b. Plea or Answer — (I) IN GENERAL. Where an answer is amended so as to set up a defense calculated to defeat the entire action, it should be permitted only on payment of all the plaintiff's costs to the time of amendment.[60] So where a judgment for defendant has been reversed, defendant will be permitted to amend only on condition of paying plaintiff's costs to date and costs of motion.[61] An appeal from a refusal of a motion to amend the answer after time therefor had expired will be granted on payment of costs of motion and costs of appeal.[62] Where a demurrer to an amended answer was sustained and leave given to serve another amended answer, which was not acted on, and defendant afterward moved to be allowed to serve the second amended answer just as the cause was to be brought to trial, it was held that the motion should not have been granted except on payment of the taxable term fees and the filing and service of an affidavit of merits.[63]

Right to costs against party whose name is stricken out.— Where a writ is amended by striking out one of the plaintiffs' names on terms which have been complied with, de-

h. Payment of Costs as Condition Precedent to Amendment. Where an order requires a party to amend and directs him to pay costs, it has been held that the payment of the costs is not a condition precedent to the amendment;[71] but where judgment is rendered against a party on demurrer, with leave to withdraw the demurrer and plead, on payment of costs, he must it seems tender the costs before pleading.[72]

9. On Withdrawal of Pleadings. Withdrawal of answer by the defendant upon plaintiff's consent does not exempt him from paying costs up to that time.[73]

10. Rulings on Demurrer — a. Rules Peculiar to Certain Jurisdictions — (I) New York — (A) Demurrer to Complaint — (1) Right to Costs. Under the New York statutes[74] the right of the successful party to costs is absolute, where in a common-law action a demurrer to the complaint is sustained or overruled, unless an issue of fact remains undisposed of, in which case costs are in the discretion of the court and may be denied either party or awarded either absolutely or to abide the event;[75] and an order granting costs on overruling the demurrer should expressly provide for taxation before the clerk of the county in which the action is brought or before the judge designated in the order.[76]

(2) Amount Taxable. Where a demurrer to the complaint is overruled, with leave to answer on payment of costs, plaintiff's proceedings before notice of trial are not at all affected, and consequently costs for such proceedings should not be taxed; but the costs should be limited to proceedings after notice and before trial, and a fee for the trial of the issue of law.[77]

(B) Demurrer to Answer. Under the New York code an interlocutory judgment sustaining a demurrer to part of an answer may properly award costs to the successful party and provide for execution to collect the costs;[78] but he is not entitled to recover costs as on a litigation and disposition of all the issues, but only the amount prescribed by statute on the determination of the single issue involved.[79] Where a demurrer is interposed to the whole answer, and the defendant does not avail himself of the permission to plead anew, final judgment will be entered for full costs.[80] According to some decisions, where a demurrer to an answer is sustained with leave to answer over, the taxable costs are those incurred after notice of trial and before trial and the trial fee,[81] and no others. Others hold that the plaintiff is also entitled to the fee for proceedings before notice of trial.[82]

(II) Wisconsin. Under the Wisconsin statutes[83] it is competent for the court on ruling on a demurrer to require the unsuccessful party to pay costs, as a condition of pleading over;[84] but costs are not recoverable on an order overruling or sustaining a demurrer, except as a condition of answering or serving an amended pleading.[85]

(III) Other Jurisdictions.[86] Under the North Carolina statute[87] the complaint may be amended of course on the interposition of a demurrer, if this is done before the expiration of the time allowed for answering, but after the expiration of that time the defendant has a right to have his demurrer heard, and if the demurrer is sustained it is in the discretion of the judge to permit an amendment.[88] Under the South Carolina statutes, on overruling a demurrer to a complaint, the trial court may require the payment of all costs up to that time as a condition of leave to answer.[89] In Colorado the court may impose the payment of not less than five dollars or more than ten dollars into court for the use of the successful party as a condition for pleading over on the overruling of a demurrer.[90] In Connecticut where a statute provides that the plaintiff may amend his declaration during the first three days of the first term of the court without costs, and after that time in the discretion of the court as to payment of costs, and by rule of court amendments are to be allowed during the first term without costs, and after that time only on payment of costs, the matter of requiring costs on amendment made at the first term of the court still rests in the discretion of the court.[91]

b. Rules of General Application—(I) On Failure to Demur. In the absence of statutory provision to the contrary[92] failure of the defendant to demur when he should have done so does not bar his right to costs in the event of his success;[93] but he should not be allowed more costs than he would have gotten if the cause had been settled on demurrer.[94]

(II) On Demurrer Sustained in Part and Overruled in Part. It has been held that where a demurrer is sustained in part and overruled in part, neither party is entitled to costs as against the other.[95]

(III) Where Issue of Fact Remains Undisposed of. Where a statute authorizes an allowance of costs to the successful party on determining a demurrer, such allowance may be made, although an issue of fact remains undisposed of;[96] and under the New York statutes, the costs awarded include all the costs of the action, involving the trial of an issue of law, and an interlocutory judgment may be entered therefor.[97]

(IV) On Demurrer to Answer Carried Back to Complaint. Where a demurrer to an answer is carried back to the complaint, and plaintiff asks leave to amend, taxable costs of the demurrer on leave to amend fall on plaintiff.[98]

11. Issues Directed Out of Chancery. Where an issue is directed by a court of chancery to be tried by a jury the costs thereof are within the discretion of the court.[99]

12. Exceptions to Reports. On exceptions to a master's report the party who succeeds in a substantial particular is as a general rule entitled to costs.[1] If a single exception is taken to a commissioner's report and the chancery decision overruling it is affirmed on appeal, the party excepting is entitled to costs of special exception and appeal, under a decree in his favor "with costs."[2] If a party files exceptions to an account and fails to insist on it before the auditor appointed to hear them he is liable for the costs.[3]

And see Canon v. Ballard, 62 N. J. Eq. 383, 52 Atl. 352, holding, under a statute providing that if the demurrer to a bill be allowed the complainant shall pay costs, that if the demurrer to a bill for want of equity for multifariousness and non-joinder is sustained as to non-joinder only the demurring party is nevertheless entitled to costs. b. Right of Defendant to Costs — (i) Statement of Rule. As a general rule where the plaintiff voluntarily dismisses or discontinues his action the defendant is entitled to costs.[5] Thus it has been held that an action cannot be discontinued after defendant's appearance without payment of costs;[6] after the defendant has retained an attorney;[7] after answer;[8] after plea in abatement has been sustained;[9] after a plea of the statute of limitations;[10] after reversal on appeal;[11] or after judgment for defendant has been reduced to a nominal amount on appeal and a new trial granted.[12] And it has been held that plaintiff must pay costs on dismissal or discontinuance, where an opinion is given in a suit in equity, involving the merits of the cause, but not decisive of plaintiff's right to proceed further.[13] So where plaintiff discontinues his action because the writ is lost or not returned defendant is entitled to costs.[14] The rule has also been held to apply where the plaintiff moves to dismiss for want of jurisdiction.[15] Where plaintiff is permitted to discontinue only the defendants who oppose the discontinuance should be awarded costs.[16]

(ii) Limitations of Rule. It is within the discretion of the court to permit an action to be discontinued without payment of costs[17] or without payment of all accrued costs.[18] Thus it has been held that the cause may be discontinued the relief sought, it has been held that plaintiff is entitled to costs. Cicero Lumber Co. v. Cicero, 176 Ill. 9, 51 N. E. 758, 68 Am. St. Rep. 155, 42 L. R. A. 696.

18. National Wall Paper Co. v. Szerlip, 9 N. Y. App. Div. 206, 41 N. Y. Suppl. 376, 75 N. Y. St. 787. Thus where a referee allows the time for making his report to expire on the ground that he does not know how to decide the case, and plaintiff moves for leave to discontinue without payment of costs on affidavits showing a partial success on his part, he should be allowed to discontinue without costs of the prosecution and trial on payment of motion costs. Lochlin v. Casler, 52 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 228.

without payment of costs, if a rule therefor is entered before appearance of defendant;[19] where a suit is discontinued before the return-day and no costs have been incurred by defendant before receiving verbal notice of the discontinuance;[20] where the defendant interposes a plea of infancy;[21] where he has obtained a discharge under the insolvent laws,[22] or a discharge under an act giving relief in cases of imprisonment;[23] where written notice of discontinuance is given (under a statute expressly authorizing it);[24] where the defendant has been sentenced to the state prison;[25] or where a person has been made a party unnecessarily, and without his authority.[26] So it has been held that where complainant had reason to suppose that the conduct of defendant was fraudulent, until the circumstances were explained by his answer, the bill may be dismissed without costs;[27] and in special proceedings the court may permit a discontinuance without costs, being expressly empowered by statute to do so.[28]

(III) Effect of Counter-Claim or Set-Off. On a dismissal the defendant's right to costs is not affected by his having filed a counter-claim which was afterward withdrawn.[29] If a cause in which the defendant has filed a set-off is referred, and the cause is thereafter dismissed for failure of either party to take out a commission, defendant is not entitled to costs, both parties being equally in default.[30]

2. As to One of Several Defendants. Ordinarily the plaintiff will not be permitted to discontinue as to one of several defendants without paying him his costs;[31] but he will only have to pay the costs of the defendant as to whom the discontinuance is entered.[32] If, however, a defendant who has no interest in the subject-matter in controversy sets up a claim, and insists on a declaration of his rights, a dismissal as to him will be made without costs.[33] And the court may in a proper case permit plaintiff to discontinue as to one defendant without payment

Where one of several defendants only brought into court.— In a suit against several joint debtors, where one only is brought into court, and plaintiff proceeds under the statute as if all were brought in, and the one brought in succeeds in establishing a personal defense, although plaintiff's cause of action was fully proved, plaintiff is not entitled to discontinue, without costs, as to defendant brought into court, having proceeded to trial with a full knowledge of the defense, and put defendant to the expense of proving his infancy; but it would be otherwise if plaintiff had been surprised on the trial with such defense. of costs, where it is by statute vested with discretion in the matter.[34] When a suit has been discontinued as to some of the defendants costs caused by them cannot be taxed against the other defendants.[35]

3. What Amounts to Discontinuance.[36] An amendment of the summons and declaration, amounting to abandonment of the original action, and an election to prosecute a new one, amounts to a discontinuance;[37] and so does a "misentry" in a cause that had been pending several terms because of the loss of the writ.[38]

B. Dismissal on Motion of Defendant. Where a suit is dismissed on motion of defendant he will ordinarily be entitled to costs. It is so held where the cause is dismissed for failure to prosecute;[39] on the ground that the plaintiff, a feme sole, has married pending suit;[40] or for failure of plaintiff to serve a copy of the complaint on defendant when this is required by statute.[41] So where a person is unnecessarily made a party the suit will be dismissed as to him with costs.[42] And where a writ is quashed on motion of defendant for errors apparent on its face the defendant is entitled to costs as the prevailing party.[43] Where a suit is dismissed on defendant's motion because no plaintiff is named in the writ costs will not be awarded because there is no one against whom an execution for costs could issue.[44] So a defendant is not entitled to costs on quashing plaintiff's writ before appearance entered, under a statute giving costs only after appearances.[45]

C. Dismissal For Want of Jurisdiction. There is some conflict of authority as to the power of the trial court to award costs on the dismissal of an action for want of jurisdiction. In a considerable number of decisions it is held that no costs can be awarded.[46] A considerable number of decisions, however, some of discontinue, because a further prosecution is made impossible by act of law, as for instance by a repeal of the statute under which the action was brought,[51] or by the proclamation of emancipation, freeing the subject-matter of the suit,[52] no costs will be allowed the defendant, but each party must pay his own costs.

Limitation of rule — Several parties on either side.— The decisions do not seem to be entirely harmonious as to the rule to be fol-

a particular fund or are connected with a duty toward the party claiming them.[57] If the suit abates after judgment and pending an appeal the same rule applies — each party must bear his own costs incurred prior thereto.[58]

b. Right of Officers to Costs. In the absence of express statutory authorization, no judgment for costs can be rendered in favor of the officers of the court against the survivor, where suit abates by the death of one of the parties.[59]

2. By Marriage. Where an action by a feme sole abates because of her marriage during its pendency the defendant will be entitled to costs.[60]

I. Judgment by Confession. Where a judgment is rendered by confession or a decree rendered on appeal taken as confessed the party in whose favor the decree or judgment is rendered is entitled to costs as being the prevailing party.[61]

IX. Right as Affected by Tender of Money or Offer of Judgment.

A. Source of Right to Save Costs by Offering Judgment. The right to offer judgment for the purpose of saving costs is purely statutory, and such right can be exercised only in the courts designating it.[62]

B. Effect of Acceptance — 1. Of Tender — a. Made Before Suit. Where defendant pleads tender before suit brought and pays the money into court, and plaintiff accepts the tender, the money will be paid over to plaintiff and judgment rendered against him for costs;[63] but if the money is not brought into court, the judgment should be against defendant for the amount of the tender and the costs.[64]

b. Made After Suit. If the plaintiff accepts a tender made after suit brought, the defendant pays the costs up to that time,[65] but he is not liable for any further costs;[66] and the plaintiff is liable for costs only after acceptance.[67]

lowed where one of several parties on either side dies. Costs of appeal.— It has been held, under a statute providing that in all actions the attorney shall be allowed specific amounts for making and serving a case for appeal and for argument in the supreme court, where plaintiff in an action for tort on two appeals reverses the judgment of the lower court in defendant's favor, after which defendant dies, and the action abates, he is entitled to the costs of the appeals, although there be no final determination of the action. 2. Of Offer of Judgment. Under the Maine statute[68] defendant is entitled to costs from the time of the offer, and plaintiff is entitled to no costs thereafter, although the offer was not accepted until a subsequent term.[69] Under the Missouri statute[70] it has been held that if defendant confess the cause of action in a sum below the jurisdiction of the court, and the judgment be rendered on the confession, he shall not recover costs.[71] Under one New York statute[72] where, after the making of an offer of judgment, both parties notice the cause for trial, and thereafter, and within the time allowed, the plaintiff serves a written notice accepting the offer, the defendant is not entitled to costs after the service of the offer, and plaintiff is only entitled to costs accruing before notice of trial;[73] and under another statute giving defendant costs as of course, where the recovery is insufficient to entitle the plaintiff to costs, if plaintiff accepts an offer of judgment for a less amount than will entitle him to costs defendant is entitled to costs.[74]

C. Effect of Refusal — 1. Where Judgment Recovered More Favorable Than Tender or Offer. Where the plaintiff recovers a judgment more favorable than the judgment offered, or for a larger sum or more complete relief than is tendered, the tender or offer will not in any way affect the defendant's liability for costs;[75]

70. The Missouri statute provides that in any action defendant may, before the trial or judgment, serve on plaintiff an offer in writing to allow judgment to be taken against him for the sum or to the effect therein specified, and if plaintiff accept the offer and give notice thereof within ten days he may file the offer and an affidavit of notice or acceptance and judgment shall be entered accordingly. Lee v. Stern, 22 Mo. 575, 576, where the court said: "We conceive it would be evidently against the spirit of the act to make the plaintiff lose his costs by an acceptance of the offer of the defendants. Such a construction would little harmonize with its policy, as in many cases it might prevent a compromise."

72. The statute provides that defendant may before trial serve on plaintiff's attorney a written offer to allow judgment for a specified sum, and that if plaintiff within ten days afterward serves a written notice of acceptance, he may file the summons and the offer with proof of acceptance with the clerk, who may enter judgment accordingly. On appeal from justice.— Under a statute providing that on appeal from a judgment for money only either party may, within fifteen days after service of notice of appeal, serve a written offer to allow judgment to be entered in the appellate court in favor of either party for a specified sum, and that the party refusing to accept the offer shall be liable for costs of appeal, unless the recovery be more favorable than the sum offered, where plaintiff on appeal to the county court accepts an offer of judgment, it was improper to order an entry of judgment for the sum offered and stay the taxing of plaintiff's costs, as they should have been taxed and included in the judgment as an incident to his recovery. Hollenback v. Knapp, 42 Hun (N. Y.) 207.

74. Johnson v. Sagar, 10 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 552. But compare Moffett v. Deom, 8 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 85, where it was held that if the plaintiff accepts offer of judgment for less than an amount which would carry costs he is not entitled to costs, and that the defendant by making the offer waived right to costs.

Under a statute denying costs when suit is settled before judgment, and the sum actually due and admitted is insufficient to carry costs, costs will not be denied where plaintiff's right to recovery had been litigated for a year and a half, and after a referee's report against defendant, and on the eve of judgment, defendant offers to pay the damages assessed by the referee and leave plaintiff to pay costs. 2. Where Judgment Recovered Less Favorable Than Tender or Offer — a. In Case of Tender — (i) Made Before Suit. Where before suit brought[77] the defendant tenders to plaintiff the money or other relief to which he thinks he is entitled, and the plaintiff refuses to accept it, on failure to recover a more favorable judgment the plaintiff is not entitled to recover costs;[78] but on the other

On appeal from inferior court. — Where judgment is rendered for seventy dollars before a justice of the peace, and on appeal the circuit court adjudges that the plaintiff is entitled to recover fifty dollars tendered by defendant and the sum of twenty-two dollars, there is no reduction of the judgment of the justice, and the defendant is not entitled to costs. Taggart v. Ratts, 117 Ind. 138, 19 N. E. 763. It has been held that a statute providing that in suits before justices the defendant may tender to the plaintiff a judgment for the amount that he shall admit to be due, and if the plaintiff shall not accept the offer, and defendant shall appeal, plaintiff shall pay all costs of appeal on failure to recover a more favorable judgment, applies only to a case where the judgment is actually not greater on appeal, and not to a case where it ought not to have been greater. Instances. — In replevin, where a defendant before the retaking of his property, under an equitable defense, tenders the amount which he claims to be the only sum due plaintiff, and keeps the tender good, and a verdict is found in favor of plaintiff for a less sum than the tender, he is not entitled to costs. Archer v. Cole, 22 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 411. So a plaintiff obtaining a decree for specific performance, such as defendant had tendered prior to the commencement of a suit, is not entitled to recover costs. Sibert v. Kelly, 6 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 669.

On change of venue. — If a cause instituted before a justice is removed by change of venue to another district, the defendant may deposit with the constable of the latter court the amount of the tender made by him before suit, and entitle himself to costs if the judgment against him does not exceed the tender. Griffith v. Jackson, 45 Mo. App. 165.

Return to defendant of amount deposited. — Since in Missouri a party making a deposit divests himself of all title and his adversary is entitled to the money, regardless of the result of the action, a return to the defendant of the amount deposited by the officer, in whose custody it was placed, is unauthorized, and does not affect the tender nor divest the defendant of the right to judgment for costs on plaintiff's failure to recover judgment for a larger amount. Griffith v. Jackson, 45 Mo. App. 165.

Taking money from officer not authorized to hold it. — The fact that the defendant takes money deposited with the constable from the clerk of court, to whom without authority hand must pay defendant's costs.[79] This rule is not affected by the fact that costs may have been incurred preparatory to commencing suit, as costs are not incident to the action until it is actually pending.[80]

(II) Made After Suit. Where the defendant after suit brought makes tender of the amount of money or such other relief as he conceives the plaintiff is entitled to, the plaintiff is nevertheless entitled to recover costs up to the time of the tender, although he fail to recover a judgment more favorable than the tender,[81] but plaintiff recovers no other costs,[82] and must pay defendant's costs subsequent to tender.[83]

b. In Case of Offer of Judgment — (I) In General. Where an offer of judgment is refused by the plaintiff, and he fails to recover a more favorable judgment, he is nevertheless entitled to costs up to the time of the offer;[84] but the latter has transferred it, does not deprive him of the benefit of the tender, where he afterward returns the money so the plaintiff has the benefit of it. Voss v. McGuire, 26 Mo. App. 452.

Recovery of less favorable in court of appeals.— Where a judgment for plaintiff more favorable than the offer is affirmed at the general term, but modified by the court of appeals, so that it becomes less favorable, the court of appeals will award no costs to either party in that court, but the defendant is entitled to costs subsequent to the offer, including costs of the general term. court, which was for more than the offer, and the final judgment in the circuit, which was for less, there was an intermediate appeal, cannot, whatever be the result of that appeal, operate to render plaintiff any the less liable for all costs incurred by defendant subsequent to the offer.[90]

(III) What Costs Included. Where by the terms of a statute authorizing an extra allowance, such allowance cannot be made unless the party in whose favor it is claimed has recovered judgment, the costs to which defendant is entitled when plaintiff obtains a less favorable judgment will not include an extra allowance.[91] The word "costs," in statutes of the character under consideration, have been held to include disbursements.[92] A statute providing that plaintiff, recovering a judgment for less than what had been tendered, shall pay all "costs" which shall accrue on appeal, has been held to include defendant's attorney fee.[93]

D. What Is Essential to Make Tender Available — 1. In General. The offer must amount to a legal tender,[94] and be made according to the requirements of the statute authorizing it.[95] It must be absolute and unconditional.[96]

2. Necessity of Offering Costs and Interest. It should include costs up to the time of tender if made after suit brought.[97] It has been held that the party to whom a tender is made is not bound to inform the party making it of the costs that have accrued, if no inquiry is made regarding the same.[98] If the plaintiff is entitled to interest the tender must include interest.[99]

3. Necessity of Keeping Tender Good. The tender must be kept good;[1] and for this purpose it is the almost universal rule to require a deposit of the amount

The duty rests upon a party making a tender to have the money at all times where the tendered in court.[2] Unless this is done the money is not necessarily within the control of the plaintiff, who is entitled to it.[3]

4. Time of Making. Where a statute prescribes the time within which tender must be made it will be ineffectual if not made within the time prescribed.[4] In the absence, however, of any special statutory provision as to the time of making tender, a tender may be made at any time before suit brought.[5]

5. Necessity of Pleading. In order that a tender may be available to prevent costs it should be pleaded.[6] The plea should allege tender and payment into court of a specific sum, and should state with certainty when and under what circumstances such payment was made.[7]

E. What Is Essential to Make Offer of Judgment Available — 1. By Whom Made. The offer may be made by the defendant, his attorney of record, or his duly authorized agent.[8] Where there are several defendants, the decisions are not in harmony as to who must make the offer or the effect of an offer made by part of the defendants.[9]

A defendant is not estopped, in a plea of tender to the plaintiff's attorney before the entry of the action, to allege that the sum tendered was the amount of the debt claimed and costs, because the declaration contains two counts, one of which is for money had and received to a larger amount than the sum tendered. 9. In New York it is held that an offer of judgment by one of several defendants is not available, unless the cause is in such a situation in regard to other defendants than those making the offer that the plaintiff on filing the offer can immediately take judgment against all for the amount or to the effect specified (Bannerman v. Quackenbush, 17 Abb. N. Cas. 103, 9 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 108; Griffiths v. De Forest, 16 Abb. Pr. 292; Brusle v. Gilmer, 16 Abb. Pr. 292 note; Bridenbecker v. Mason, 16 How. Pr. 203); but that when an offer is made by one or more defendants, and the suit is so situated that the plaintiff on accepting it may enter judgment to the effect offered against all the parties jointly liable with those making the offer, the plaintiff must accept it, or proceed at his peril as to the future costs (La Forge v. Chilson, 3 Sandf. 752, Code Rep. N. S. 159).

In North Carolina it is held that if there are several defendants the offer must be made by all the defendants or their common attorney. Williamson v. Lock's Creek Canal Co., 84 N. C. 629.

In Ohio it is held that where an offer is made by one defendant, he is entitled to judgment for his costs from the time of such offer, if a more favorable judgment is not recovered. New York, etc., R. Co. v. Clark, 54 Ohio St. 509, 43 N. E. 1038. See also Harris v. Dailey, 16 Ind. 183, where it was held that where a suit was brought by the holder of a note, to whom the payee had assigned it without writing and according to statute, the assignor was joined as defendant to answer as to the assignment, his name

2. NECESSITY FOR WRITTEN OFFER. If the statute so require the offer must be in writing.[10]

3. CONTENTS. While the disregard of unessential technicalities will not vitiate the offer,[11] it must nevertheless be so distinctly made that there is no room for conflicting affidavits as to the fact of its having been made.[12] It should be for a definite sum,[13] and must not include items other than those sued on.[14] It should be an offer to allow judgment, and not to pay a specified amount if plaintiff "will dismiss the action."[15] It must, if required by statute, also tender costs;[16] and should include interest if interest be due.[17]

4. SIGNATURE, ACKNOWLEDGMENTS, AND AFFIDAVITS OF AUTHORITY. The offer must be signed by the defendant,[18] by his agent,[19] or by his attorney.[20] And if the statute requires an affidavit showing the attorney's authority to be annexed to the offer it will be a nullity without such affidavit.[21] No amendment of an offer defective in this respect can be made;[22] nor does the plaintiff waive the defect by refusing the offer and proceeding in the action.[23] If made by the defendant himself no acknowledgment is necessary.[24]

5. TIME OF MAKING. Under a statute providing that defendant may before trial serve a written offer of judgment on plaintiff, which plaintiff may "within ten days thereafter" accept, etc., an offer to be of any effect must be served at need not be noticed in an offer by the maker of the note to confess a judgment for a given sum, since the offer itself admitted the same and waived further proceedings.

Oral offer entered on docket.— It has been held that an oral answer of defendant, entered by a justice in his docket, that "defendant tenders judgment for six cents and costs up to date," is a sufficient compliance with a statute requiring a written offer of judgment. Williams v. Ready, 72 Wis. 408, 39 N. W. 779.

What amounts to offer in writing.— A writing duly signed by defendant's agent and read in presence of the parties to the plaintiffs by the agent, offering to allow plaintiffs to take judgment for a specified sum, and which is delivered to the justice, is an "offer in writing." least ten days before the action is reached for trial.[25] Where a statute relating to "confessions of judgment at any time before a trial" provides that if plaintiff shall not recover a more favorable judgment, defendant shall recover from plaintiff the costs occasioned subsequent to the offer, and another statute relative to confessions of judgment "before an action for the recovery of money" provides that if plaintiff shall afterward commence an action and not recover more than the amount so offered to be confessed, he shall pay all costs of the action, an offer made before suit brought is not good, as the pendency of an action is clearly contemplated.[26]

6. Notice, Service, Etc. An offer of judgment by defendant to be effective must in some way be brought to the notice of the opposite party.[27] What steps will be effective for this purpose must of course depend on the provisions of the statute authorizing the offer. If the statute requires service of the offer of judgment on the opposite party such service is necessary to give the offer effect,[28] unless waived.[29] If the statute requires the offer to be made in open court, on notice to the opposite party, this is a condition precedent to the effectiveness of the offer.[30] So where statutes provide that after suit brought the defendant may offer in court to confess judgment for part of the amount claimed, etc., or that the defendant may at any time before trial serve on the plaintiff or his attorney an offer to allow judgment against him, an offer not made in open court nor served on the plaintiff out of court is insufficient.[31]

Offer made after amendment.— Under a statute authorizing the referee "on the trial" of an issue of fact to allow amendments to pleadings, an amendment can be allowed only after commencement of the trial; and therefore an offer of judgment not made until after the allowance of an amendment is not made "before trial," so as to escape liability for further costs in case a more favorable judgment is not recovered. is not a more favorable judgment.[32] The amount of a judgment is not the only test of its favorableness.[33] The judgment and not the verdict determines the right to costs, where there has been an offer of judgment, because the court may disregard the verdict or reject it, or any portion of it.[34]

2. QUESTION HOW AFFECTED BY COMPUTATION OF INTEREST. Where a claim in suit is unliquidated no interest can be added to the sum offered, for the purpose of determining whether the judgment obtained is more favorable than that offered;[35] and in case of a claim which is not unliquidated the court, in determining whether the recovery is more favorable than the offer, will reject the interest which accrued between the time of the offer and the recovery of the judgment,[36] and will include interest computed only to the date of the offer.[37]

3. QUESTION HOW AFFECTED BY EXTINGUISHMENT OF SET-OFF OR COUNTER-CLAIM. Where upon a trial the plaintiff extinguishes a set-off or counter-claim of the defendant, which with the verdict obtained exceeds defendant's offer, plaintiff recovers a more favorable judgment and is entitled to costs.[38]

Setting up offset after suit brought.— As a general rule the defendant will not be permitted to throw costs on plaintiff by proof of an offset purchased after the time of the offer to compromise or by making payments after such offer. But where the demand in suit is the primary debt of another, and the plaintiff sues as assignee of the account without having become the owner of the entire account, and the person primarily liable pays off part of the account to the person originally entitled to it, and before the plaintiff had made payment to such person, such plaintiff is in no position to claim any exemption from the rule prescribed for taxing costs. Equitable actions.— A statute providing

H. Effect on Offer of Judgment of Amendment of Complaint. There seems to be some uncertainty as to the effect of an amendment of a complaint on an offer of judgment previously made. It has been held that where an amendment is permitted, which may have the effect of rendering the offer of no avail, for the purpose of preventing further costs, the court should at least permit an amendment of the offer to meet the new conditions presented by the amendment.[40] And again there are cases holding that an amendment, made after the time in which to accept the offer of judgment has passed, and which amendment does not materially change the issues, does not deprive the defendant of the benefit of his offer.[41]

I. Renewal of Offer of Judgment. Where an offer of judgment has not been accepted, the defendant may serve a second offer for a different amount before trial.[42] An offer duly made in an inferior court need not be repeated in an intermediate court, to which the cause has been taken on appeal.[43]

J. Fixing Time of Acceptance of Offer. By statutory provision defendant may be given the right to have the time fixed by the court within which plaintiff may accept his offer to be defaulted for a specified sum.[44]

K. Proof of Tender or Offer of Judgment. It seems that a tender or offer of judgment should be shown by the record and not proved by parol evidence.[45] that defendant may before trial serve on plaintiff's attorney a written offer to allow judgment for a sum specified with costs, and that if plaintiff does not accept the same, and fails to obtain a more favorable judgment, he cannot recover costs from the time of said offer, applies to equitable actions. Singleton v. Home Ins. Co., 121 N. Y. 644, 24 N. E. 1021, 31 N. Y. St. 906; Kiernan v. Agricultural Ins. Co., 3 N. Y. App. Div. 26, 37 N. Y. Suppl. 1070, 74 N. Y. Trespass.— An action of trespass quare clausum fregit is a personal action, within the meaning of a statute authorizing an offer of default in such actions for the purpose of giving defendant costs after the offer, in case plaintiff fails to recover a judgment more favorable than the offer. Boyd v. Cronan, 71 Me. 286. A trespass committed under a claim of right is not a "casual or involuntary trespass," within a statute which provides that on tendering sufficient amends therefor the trespasser, if afterward sued, may recover costs. Viall v. Carpenter, 16 Gray (Mass.) 285. So a tender after action brought for damages, occasioned by trespass on plaintiff's land, is not within a statute providing that any person "who may sue on any debt or demand payable in money" may tender to the "creditor" before an entry of an action at court, the amount of such debt or demand with interest and costs. Lawrence v. Gifford, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 366.

Assault and battery.— A statute precluding a plaintiff from recovering costs in an "action for the recovery of money only," accruing after an offer by defendant to allow judgment to be taken against him for a certain sum, if plaintiff fails to recover a larger sum, applies to a civil action for assault and battery. Clippenger v. Ingram, 17 Kan. 586.

Mortgages.— In a writ of entry on a mortgage, where defendant offered to be defaulted for the amount he admitted to be due, he was not entitled to costs, although the amount found due was less than plaintiff's original claim, under a statute giving such costs in actions founded on "judgments or contracts." Carson v. Walton, 51 Me. 382.

Unliquidated damages.— A statute providing that defendant may at any time before a jury is sworn, or a trial commenced, serve upon a plaintiff, or file with the justice, an offer in writing to allow judgment to be taken against him for the sum or to the effect therein specified, has been held to apply to actions for the recovery of unliquidated damages. The offer is not void because no time is fixed for acceptance. To the same effect see Woodcock v. McCormick, 55 Me. 532.

45. Seibert v. Kline, 1 Pa. St. 38, holding that a tender of the amount due plaintiff in an action in a justice's court, which tender was made in order to charge plaintiff with costs, cannot be shown by parol, but must

X. RIGHT AS AFFECTED BY TENDER BY COMPLAINANT IN EQUITABLE ACTION.

Where one seeking equitable relief and who is not entitled thereto, without first paying defendant money or giving him other relief, makes a sufficient [46] tender, and the defendant refuses it, making it necessary to bring suit, defendant may be required to pay the whole costs.[47]

XI. RIGHT AS AFFECTED BY ABSENCE OF DEMAND BEFORE SUIT.[48]

Where it is a person's duty within a reasonable time after receipt of money belonging to another to pay it over, no demand is necessary before suit brought against him to recover it in order to entitle plaintiff to costs, and this is so, although no trust relation exists between the parties.[49] Where, however, a statute expressly provides that a demand for money or other relief sought to be recovered be made before suit brought, as a condition of the recovery of costs, the plaintiff is not entitled to costs, although successful in the action, in the absence of such demand.[50] So in equitable actions in which costs are largely in the discretion of the court, it may take into consideration the want of such demand in determining costs,[51] and not only deny costs to plaintiff,[52] but require him to pay costs.[53] If, however, defendant admits in his answer that he would not have complied with the demand if it had been made, the want of demand cannot affect plaintiff's right to costs if successful.[54]

XII. RIGHT AS AFFECTED BY DISCLAIMER.[55]

A defendant having no interest in the subject-matter of the action, in order appear by the record of the justice. But see Bourda v. Jones, 110 Wis. 52, 85 N. W. 671, holding that where a statute authorizing an offer of judgment provides that it shall not be offered in evidence if not accepted or mentioned on the trial, the court may find that the judgment recovered was less than that offered, although the offer of judgment was not in evidence. And compare Jacobs v. Owen, 30 Oreg. 593, 48 Pac. 431, holding that where defendant alleged the tender and deposit in court of that part of the amount admitted to be due, a verdict in favor of plaintiff for that sum does not of itself show that the allegations of tender and deposit were found to be true, so as to entitle defendant to recover his costs without a special finding to that effect.

46. If money is tendered complainant should not recover costs on a judgment in his favor if he has failed to make the tender good by bringing the money into court. Galloway v. Barr, 12 Ohio 354; Dustin v. Newcomer, 8 Ohio 49. See also Sneed v. Town, 9 Ark. 535, where it was held that the plaintiff in equity must pay or bring into court all that he is in equity bound to pay before he can obtain the relief sought, and that the costs of the proceedings in equity up to the time of such payment will be decreed against him.

If the tender is insufficient the defendant, according to one decision, will be entitled to costs. Cree v. Lord, 25 Vt. 498. Another holds that if the failure to make the proper tender is not pleaded as a defense the costs must abide the result; but that if the defendant relies on the want of tender, and there is no unjustifiable resistance to taking a decree by the plaintiff, the court will require the plaintiff to pay the costs of the proceeding. XIII. RIGHT AS AFFECTED BY SETTLEMENT OF CAUSE OUT OF COURT.

A. Right of Plaintiff to Recover Costs — 1. Where No Agreement Made as to Costs — a. Jurisdictions in Which Plaintiff Is Held Entitled to Costs. In some jurisdictions the rule is that where a cause of action is extinguished by agreement of the parties, whether by payment, compromise, release, or otherwise, the plaintiff will be entitled to costs, in the absence of some agreement in relation to the disposition of costs.[62]

b. Jurisdictions in Which Plaintiff May or May Not Be Entitled to Costs — (i) When Costs Not Recoverable. In other jurisdictions it is held that where a cause of action is extinguished by agreement between the parties, whether by payment, settlement, release, or otherwise, no agreement being made as to costs, the plaintiff cannot recover costs.[63] This rule has been held to apply as well in equity as at law, although the question of costs be reserved for the decision of the chancellor;[64] and it has also been held to apply, whether the parties make the settlement themselves or submit it to others to make for them.[65]

(II) When Costs Recoverable. Where, however, payment is made to one not having authority to bind the plaintiff by receiving the same, without the knowledge or sanction of the plaintiff, the situation is as though a tender merely had been made, or the money had been paid into court, and there is no such acceptance as bars the right to costs.[66] It has also been held that the payment of a chattel mortgage by the mortgagor, during the progress of an action by the mortgagee against a trespasser for the conversion of the mortgaged property, does not deprive the mortgagee of his right to costs.[67] And in an action of debt on a bond, where it appeared that the condition was performed after the commencement of the action, so that on a hearing judgment is awarded for nominal damages only, plaintiff was held entitled to full costs.[68]

Parol undertaking to pay costs.— An agreement under seal containing no provision as to costs, which compromises a suit, does not prevent either party from setting up and proving a parol undertaking, that one of the costs,[71] is binding and enforceable. Where persons severally liable are united as defendants, but appear by different attorneys and answer separately, and, after issue joined and after the action has been noticed for trial, settle, and, as part of the terms of settlement, agree to pay plaintiff the legal costs of the action, plaintiff is entitled to only one bill of costs.[72]

B. Right of Defendant to Recover Costs. In a number of chancery decisions, it has been held that if the parties settle the cause, reserving the question of costs, the court will not hear the cause on the question of costs merely, and the defendant as well as the plaintiff must pay his own costs;[73] so in many other decisions it seems to be held without qualification that in the absence of any agreement as to costs the defendant is not entitled to recover any costs on a settlement of the cause of action.[74] On the other hand some decisions hold broadly that the defendant is entitled to costs on a settlement;[75] and other decisions hold that where defendant pleads payment, or some other method of extinguishment of a cause of action, and is successful, he will be entitled to costs.[76] Again it has been held that where the plaintiff makes costs by an ineffectual resistance to the execution of his agreement to discontinue defendant is entitled to costs.[77] So too it has been held that if the plaintiff fails to discontinue the action as soon as it is settled he is liable for subsequent costs.[78] It has also been held that where plaintiff settles a suit on a joint and several obligation against several defendants, who defend separately, some of them without the concurrence of the others, he is liable for costs to defendants with whom he did not settle.[79]

XIV. WHO ENTITLED TO COSTS.

A. Plaintiffs. Where suit is brought in the name of one person for the use of several, and the suit is successful, only one bill of costs can be allowed.[80] If there are several plaintiffs, some of whom are successful, they are entitled to a full bill of costs, less such charges as relate exclusively to the plaintiffs who have parties should pay the costs that had accrued. This does not contradict or vary the written agreement, but is distinct and independent of it. Morancy v. Quarles, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 9,788, 1 McLean 194.

failed.[81] If several defendants appear by separate attorneys and interpose separate defenses, and separate judgments may be rendered against each defendant, plaintiff, if successful, is entitled to as many bills of costs as there are defendants.[82] If a bill is brought to revive and execute a decree, representatives of complainant in the original bill who paid the costs allowed in the bill to revive and execute the decree are entitled to recover all costs to the exclusion of the other complainants.[83]

B. Persons Improperly or Unnecessarily Made Defendants. It has been held that if one who has no interest in the cause and against whom no relief can be given answers, the bill will be dismissed as to him with costs;[84] but it has been held that one who is unnecessarily made a party is not entitled to costs of making a defense where a defense is not necessary to protect his rights,[85] and where in a court of chancery parties are erroneously made by the court's own direction costs should not be given against complainant.[86]

C. Defendants Not Served With Process or Not Answering. A defendant who has not been served with process, and who has not appeared,[87] or a defendant who has not answered, is not entitled to costs.[88]

D. Where There Are Several Defendants — 1. Where All Defendants Are Successful — a. In Suits in Equity. In an equitable action the fact that several prevailing defendants plead separately, especially when they have the same solicitor, does not necessarily entitle them to separate costs; each case depends on its own facts.[89] It has been held in some cases that if there is no necessity for pleading separately only one bill of costs should be allowed,[90] while others hold that the allowance of separate bills of costs to defendants who might have joined in their defense depends on the apparent fairness of such action, and that if the filing of separate answers was in good faith separate bills of costs may be allowed.[91] If two defendants not joined in interest appear by different attorneys, put in separate answers, and both succeed, it is within the discretion of the court to allow costs to each defendant.[92]

b. In Actions At Law — (I) Rule in New York[93] — (A) Where Defendants Appear by Same Attorney. The general rule seems to be that only one bill of costs will be allowed where several defendants appear by the same attorney, whether they put in separate answers or not.[94] And such is the rule where defendants appear by separate attorneys who are partners,[95] or by separate attorneys, one of whom is the clerk of the other.[96]

(B) Where Defendants Appear by Different Attorneys. In actions at law where all of the defendants are successful, those who are not united in interest and who have appeared by separate attorneys, are entitled to costs as of course and as of right,[97] unless it be shown that the several appearances were in bad faith and for the purpose of increasing costs,[98] and the burden of showing this fact rests on the plaintiff.[99] It has also been held that if all the defendants in an action are successful, and have made separate defenses by separate attorneys, they will be entitled to separate bills of costs although united in interest, if there be nothing to show collusion or bad faith on the part of the defendants.[1]

(II) Rule in New Hampshire. In New Hampshire the rules governing the allowance of costs, where a number of defendants who are sued in one action are successful, seems to be the same, regardless of the character of the action.[2] If the defendants join in their plea they are entitled to only one bill of costs,[3] and they will ordinarily be entitled to but one bill of costs, although they sever in their

of costs in cases where all the defendants are successful is the same whether the action is one of contract or one of tort. Delaware, etc., R. Co. v. Burkard, 40 Hun (N. Y.) 625; Williams v. Cassady, 22 Hun (N. Y.) 180; Bridgeport F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Wilson, 20 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 511.

Y.) 89 (holding that where defendants are compelled by the nature of the case to answer separately and to establish by proof distinct and independent rights of action, by way of counter-claim against the plaintiff for which they recover distinct awards of damages, they are entitled to separate bills of costs).

Limitation of rule.— Where through plaintiff's neglect some months elapse between service of summons and complaint on one defendant and service thereof on the other, rendering two answers necessary, although they contain substantially the same defense, each defendant should be allowed costs before notice of trial and disbursements prior to issue being joined by service of the answer of the defendant last served. defense, if the same facts furnish the same defense to each.[4] If the defenses are different, separate costs may be allowed each defendant.[5]

(III) Rule in Other Jurisdictions — (A) In Actions on Contract. In a number of jurisdictions the following rules have been formulated with respect to allowance of costs where all the defendants are successful: If in an action of contract they make a joint defense, they are entitled to but one bill of costs;[6] if they make separate defenses, they are entitled to separate bills of costs where separate defenses were necessary;[7] if, however, they might and should have joined, they will be entitled to only one bill of costs, although pleading separately.[8]

(B) In Actions of Tort. Where the defendants in an action of tort join in their plea and are successful only one bill of costs will be allowed;[9] where, however, defendants plead severally and prevail the rule as to the allowance of costs is not uniform.[10]

2. Where Part of Defendants Are Successful — a. The English Doctrine. According to the English decisions prior to 8 & 9 Wm. III, c. 2, if one of several defendants was acquitted he was not entitled to costs, the word "defendants" in the statute being construed to mean only the case of a total acquittal of all the defendants.[11]

b. Rules in Alabama, California, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, and North Carolina. Under the statutes of Alabama, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Michigan, Mississippi, and North Carolina, if one or more of several defendants are successful, he or they are entitled to costs.[12] And under a

Cas. No. 3,423, which seems to be based on a misconception of Mason v. Waite, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 452.

10. In Maine and Massachusetts, if defendants in an action of tort plead severally and prevail, each is entitled to costs severally (Stilson v. Leeman, 75 Me. 412; O'Connell v. Bryant, 126 Mass. 232; George v. Reed, 104 Mass. 366; Davis v. Hastings, 8 Cush. And in the last-named state this doctrine applies, although the defendants appear by the same attorney (O'Connell v. Bryant, 126 Mass. 232), or unite in filing a bill of particulars. It is the plea that governs the judgment. Fales v. Stone, 9 Metc. (Mass.) 316.

In North Carolina, although defendants in tort sever, yet where there is but one judgment in their favor, as "that they go without day," they shall recover but one set of costs. McNamara v. Kerns, 24 N. C. 66. Compare Stockstill v. Shuford, 5 N. C. 39, which appears to hold otherwise.

In Vermont separate travel and allowance fees before a justice and travel and term fees in the county court may be taxed by two or more defendants in an action of tort, unless by joining in a plea in bar they so identify their interests as to make the success of each dependent upon that of the other. statute of California it has been held not an abuse of discretion to allow costs to such of the defendants as prevailed.[13] Under a Minnesota statute one of several defendants in an action of tort if successful is entitled to costs.[14]

e. Rules in Kansas, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New Jersey, and Texas. So without mentioning any statute, the courts of Kansas and Texas have held that where one defendant is successful the plaintiff must pay his costs.[15] In Massachusetts, where one or more of a number of defendants sued in tort are successful, it is the practice to allow him or them costs.[16] In New Hampshire if part of the defendants have been successful in an action of contract,[17] although they are entitled to costs, they will not be allowed several bills of costs where there was no separate pleading and the ground of defense was common to all those discharged.[18] In New Jersey it was held that one of two defendants in trespass, who was acquitted, was entitled to his costs, where it did not appear that there was reasonable ground for making him a defendant.[19]

d. Rules in New York and Pennsylvania. Under the statutes of New York[20] where in an action against two or more defendants the plaintiff is entitled to judgment against one or more but not against all of them, the successful defendant is not entitled to costs as of course.[21] Costs cannot be awarded him in any event, except where he is not united in interest with those against whom plaintiff recovers, and where they have made separate defenses by separate answers.[22] In Pennsylvania a statute providing that in enumerated actions, any one or more of several defendants who shall be acquitted shall recover costs, has been held to apply only to the actions so enumerated.[23]

Morris v. Robinson, 80 Ala. 291. In North Carolina, in trespass against six defendants, three of whom were acquitted, the proportion of defendant's witness' costs — one half — should be taxed against plaintiff, although the pleas were joint in form. e. Rules in Connecticut, South Carolina, Tennessee, Vermont, and Federal Courts. Under a statute of Connecticut,[24] where several of the defendants are successful, only one bill of costs will be allowed.[25] Under a statute of South Carolina it has been held that where a verdict has been found in favor of one joint defendant he is entitled to have his costs, but where the costs have been joint, as a joint appearance, plea, etc., he is only entitled to half costs.[26] Under a statute of Tennessee it has been held that where one of several joint defendants are acquitted, he may recover of plaintiff such costs only as accrued separately and properly on account of his being a defendant in the suit.[27] Under the statutes of Vermont it has been held that plaintiff may recover against one or more defendants, and the other defendants recover their costs whether the suit be on a contract in writing or not.[28] In the federal courts it has been held that where a bill is sustained with costs as against some defendants and dismissed with costs as to others, the latter are entitled not only to have taxed the items special to their defense, but also to have apportioned in their favor the items which were of a joint character.[29]

XV. WHO LIABLE FOR COSTS.

A. Liability of Each Party For Costs Made by Himself. In contemplation of law each party to a suit pays the costs made by him as they accrue in the progress of the suit;[30] and while in most jurisdictions this theory is ordinarily not carried into practice, each party is nevertheless primarily liable for costs made by himself to the officers or other persons rendering the services for which the costs were incurred,[31] unless, as seems to be the case in some jurisdictions, primary liability for costs made by the successful party is by statute imposed on the party cast.[32] In any event if costs cannot be made out of the party cast, the successful party may be compelled to pay costs made by himself.[33] This, however, is the limit of his liability. He cannot be compelled to pay the costs made by his unsuccessful adversary.[34]

B. Persons Not Parties to Suit. In many jurisdictions the rule is well settled that no judgment for costs can be rendered against a person who is not actually a party to the suit.[35]

C. Persons Suing For Their Own Benefit in Another's Name — 1. Rule Under New York Statute. Under the New York statute[36] a person who brings suit in the name of another for his own benefit is liable for costs if the defendant be successful.[37] Nevertheless the statute applies only when such person is chargeable with bringing the action.[38] It is not enough that had the suit succeeded the recovery would have been for his exclusive benefit,[39] or that he may have interferred in the action, if in truth he is not chargeable with having brought it.[40]

2. Rule Under Pennsylvania Statute. Under the Pennsylvania statute[41] one who merely takes an active part in carrying on a suit in the name of another is not liable to the plaintiff's witnesses for their daily pay and mileage without an express promise to pay. But he is liable without such promise, where he projects and institutes the suit in another's name and is the active agent in having it brought.[42]

In New Hampshire, in certain classes of cases, persons are allowed to come in and defend in the name of another person on giving bond to pay all costs made by such defense; but they do not become parties to the record, although their names be entered on the docket, but have leave to appear to defend not as parties, but in the name and behalf of the parties to the record. In such cases no judgment for costs can be rendered against them, but the remedy, if the plaintiff prevail, is on the bond that such persons are usually required to give. Winship v. Conner, 43 N. H. 167.

36. N. Y. Civ. Proc. § 3247, provides that where an action is brought in the name of another by a transferee of the cause of action, or by any other person who is beneficially interested therein, the transferee or other person so interested is liable for costs as if he was plaintiff.

Application and extent of the rule.— Thus the following persons are liable for costs if defeated: A judgment creditor procuring an action to be brought in the name of a receiver appointed in supplemental proceedings instituted by him, and for whose sole benefit the case is brought. A person who brings and prosecutes a suit in the name of another under an agreement with the nominal party to carry on the suit at his own expense and have a portion of the expected recovery. Giles v. Halbert, 12 N. Y. 32, 5 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 319. One who, either by himself or in conjunction with another, has retained an attorney to prosecute a suit. Whitney v. Cooper, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 629. A person suing in a corporate name in which he did business, it appearing after the suit was terminated that there was no such corporation and that such person was promoter of the suit. Metropolitan Addressing, etc., Co. v. Goodenough, 21 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 268. So it has been held that where a mortgagee holding a judgment of foreclosure defends the mortgagor's title in an action of ejectment without becoming a party, he is liable for subsequently accruing costs in the event of a judgment against defendant as being the real party in interest. Sand v. Church, 32 N. Y. App. Div. 139, 52 N. Y. Suppl. 854. And also that one bringing suit in the name of another is liable for costs recovered against the nominal plaintiff, although his interest in the demand prosecuted is only by way of mortgage or lien. Whitney v. Cooper, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 629. On the other hand where, after suit brought by A against B, the latter delivers claims to A's attorney with directions to apply the amount collected thereon to the satisfaction of A's claim, and the attorney, without A's knowledge or consent, brings suit on one of the claims and is defeated, A is not beneficially interested in such suit, and is not liable for the costs, within the meaning of the statute. Elliot v. Lewicky, 51 N. Y. Super. Ct. 51.

41. Section 2 of the act of April 23, 1829, provides that "the equitable plaintiff or person for whose use or benefit and at whose instance any action has been or may be prosecuted, whether named on the record or not, shall be liable to execution on judgment (for costs) against the legal plaintiff or plaintiffs: Provided, that where such equitable plaintiff or plaintiffs were not named on the record previous to judgment, his name shall be suggested on the record, supported by affidavit of his interest in the cause, before execution shall issue."

3. RULE IN ILLINOIS. Where a person prosecutes a suit in the name of another, he is bound to indemnify and protect him against the payment of costs.[43]

D. Persons Defending in Another's Name. As a general rule, it is apprehended, a person who for the protection of his own interest defends an action in the name of another will not be liable for costs;[44] but where a person not a defendant on the record, to whom a statute gives the opportunity of defending, avails himself of the opportunity by defending in the name of the party sued, he is liable for costs in case of failure, no matter what the form or nature of the action may be, provided the costs cannot be collected of the defendant of record.[45]

E. Persons Suing in Another's Name Without His Consent. Persons bringing suit for another without his authority are liable for costs and disbursements by defendant when the latter succeeds in the action;[46] and one who is made a party plaintiff without his knowledge or consent is not liable for costs.[47]

F. Assignees of Cause of Action — 1. INDEPENDENTLY OF STATUTE. In a number of decisions in which no statutory authority is mentioned,[48] and in others in which it is expressly declared that no statutory authority is necessary,[49] it is held that an assignee of a cause of action who sues in the name of the assignor shall if the action fail be liable for costs, and if the assignment is taken after suit brought, the assignee will be liable for costs already accrued as well as those which are made by himself. Other decisions hold that in such case the assignor will be liable for costs.[50]

Where the real owner and party in interest in suit is the use plaintiff, the objection to a quasi-corporation as legal plaintiff that there is no one responsible for the costs cannot be maintained. Washington Camp v. Funeral Ben. Assoc., 8 Pa. Dist. 198.

43. In order to obtain such protection the nominal party must apply to the court where the case is pending for an order on the beneficial plaintiff to indemnify him. Young v. Campbell, 9 Ill. 156; Buckmaster v. Beames, 8 Ill. 97; Keystone Mfg. Co. v. Watts, 100 Ill. App. 11.

Suppl. 854, where it was held that where one entitled to be made a party by defending in the name of another became liable for costs, the refusal of the nominal defendant to permit him to continue such defense or to take an appeal did not relieve him of such liability.

2. Under Statutory Provisions. By express statutory provision the assignee of a cause of action on which suit is brought may be made liable for costs if the action fails.[51] In jurisdictions where the assignee may be held liable for costs, the rule has no application if the assignment is made simply as collateral for the indebtedness;[52] and it has been held not to apply when the assignment is only of a part and not of the whole cause of action,[53] where the assignor remains the real party in interest,[54] or where a surety upon an undertaking given on obtaining an order of arrest applies to the court to set aside a default made by the plaintiff in that action, and to be permitted to prosecute, and who does prosecute, the action.[55]

G. Assignees of Judgment. The assignee of a judgment which is reversed on appeal is liable not only for costs accruing after the assignment, but also for all costs of the action.[56]

H. Beneficial or Use Plaintiffs. Where a person beneficially interested is made a party to the record eo nomine he is subject to the court's orders and judgment and may be required to pay costs.[57]

51. In New York the assignee of a cause of action, who brings suit in the name of his assignor, or continues a suit brought by his assignor in the latter's name, whether the assignment be made before or after suit brought, is liable for costs if the action fail (Code Civ. Proc. § 3247; Bliss v. Otis, 1 Den. 656; Whitney v. Cooper, 1 Hill 629; Giles v. Halbert, 12 N. Y. 32); and under this statute, if the assignment is made after suit brought, and the defendant is successful, the assignee will be liable for costs accruing both before and after the assignment (Genet v. Davenport, 58 N. Y. 607). It has been held that the New York statute applies only as against one prosecuting the action, and not against one defending it. Peetsch v. Quinn, 12 Misc. 61, 33 N. Y. Suppl. 87, 66 N. Y. Under a Kentucky statute providing that where the right of the plaintiff is transferred or assigned during the pendency of an action, the court may allow the person to whom the transfer or assignment is made to be substituted in the action, proper orders being made as to security for costs, it has been held that where a right of action is transferred, and the name of the assignee substituted for that of the plaintiff, and the order of substitution made without objection provides that the party substituted shall be responsible for all costs, past and future, this operates as a release of the original plaintiff for all costs. Where the judgment is reversed in part, and the costs of the appeal are adjudged against the appellee, the appellant in paying to the assignee the part as to which there is an affirmance is entitled to deduct the amount of these costs, and that too although the assignee was never substituted in the place of the assignor as a party to the cause (Mitchell v. White, 47 Mo. sons suing in a representative capacity from personal liability for costs has no application to actions unnecessarily brought by plaintiff in a representative capacity and which he should have brought in his individual capacity.[59]

J. Interveners. An intervener may be charged with costs of the intervention where he withdraws his plea at the trial,[60] where he fails to show that he has an actual interest in the subject-matter of the suit,[61] or where it appears that the intervention was not made in good faith[62] or was not necessary for the protection of the intervener's interests.[63] It has also been held that parties voluntarily coming into a suit as defendants before any costs had accrued but such as were necessary to the preparation and decision of the suit are liable to costs.[64] If the intervener is successful it has been held that he should be awarded costs caused by the contesting of his claim against the party making the contest.[65]

K. Substituted Parties. Upon the substitution of a new party in place of the original party to a suit, the substituted party may become responsible for all costs and the original party discharged.[66]

L. Where There Are Several Plaintiffs. Where several plaintiffs unite in bringing an action and are unsuccessful, the defendant is entitled to costs against all.[67] If the proceeding is to enforce separate and distinct claims and all are unsuccessful each is liable for a moiety of the costs and not pro rata according to the amount of their respective claims.[68] If two plaintiffs unite in an action [of ejectment] one count alleging title in one plaintiff and one in another, and a verdict is found in favor of one plaintiff and against another, the defendant is entitled to costs against the unsuccessful plaintiff.[69]

Apportionment of costs by part of plaintiffs defeated.—Where there are five plaintiffs in ejectment, three of whom are successful as to part of the items in suit, the two who fail are liable to pay the full bill of costs less such portions of the costs of the defense as relate exclusively to the prevailing plaintiffs, and the two plaintiffs so failing to recover are jointly liable for the whole costs, which the defendant is entitled to recover, although one abandons the prosecution sooner than the other. Hinman v. Booth, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 666. So when several plaintiffs sue jointly and severally for land and some of them recover and some do not, the court may order costs taxed against the plaintiffs who fail, to the

M. Where There Are Several Defendants — 1. Where Some of Defendants Are Successful. Where one of several joint defendants is successful the plaintiff is entitled to recover of the others the costs incurred in the joint defense or otherwise, except such as may be separated therefrom as having exclusive reference to the defendant who is discharged.[70] Where a statute provides that if plaintiff succeeds against part of defendants and not against others he shall recover costs only from the former, it is error to render judgment against the defendants cast for costs made by a co-defendant against whom no judgment could be rendered because he was a non-resident.[71] Under a statute requiring that all the obligors in a joint contract shall be sued together, including those who may have performed their part, in order that the latter may recover back what they have paid, in case it should be determined that they were not bound, the judgment for costs must be in solido, against those who have not performed their part.[72]

2. Where All Defendants Are Cast — a. In General. It has been held that on judgment for plaintiff against several defendants who make the same defense,[73] the costs will be decreed against them jointly and not apportioned among them.[74] Where separate judgments in one action are rendered against several persons liable for the same cause of action they are all liable up to the point of satisfaction and to reasonable costs in the prosecution of appropriate remedies.[75] If separate suits be brought against several defendants for a joint tort, the plaintiff may recover separately against each, but he can have but one satisfaction; and he may elect de melioribus damnis, and issue his execution therefor against one of them; and extent of their due proportion, according to the actual facts of the case, of the whole cost incurred. But the defendant has no right to have judgment against them, irrespective of what proportion of the cost they caused to be incurred, for a mere numerical proportion based on the number of shares in the land not recovered, as compared with the number recovered. 70. Sloan v. Parks, 2 Swan (Tenn.) 62. See also Boothe v. Cowan, 5 Sneed (Tenn.) 354. But see Johnson v. Miller, 93 Iowa 165, 61 N. W. 422, in which it was held that where seven persons are sued for a joint tort, and make a joint defense, and plaintiff recovers judgment against six only, these six must pay all the costs; that the costs cannot be apportioned so that they shall pay but six sevenths of the total costs, notwithstanding a statutory provision that where there are several defendants the costs shall be apportioned according to the several judgments rendered. It is not a case of separate judgments in favor of the plaintiff and against all of the defendants.

Discontinuance as to some and judgment by default as to others.—In an action against several defendants, where two are defaulted and the third pleads, and thereafter the plaintiff discontinues against the third and takes judgment against the other two, he is entitled to costs against the defaulted defendants only up to the time of the default. Matthews v. Vining, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 335. To the same effect is Howk v. Bishop, 10 Hun (N. Y.) 509.

Non prosequitur as to some, and others cast.— Where suit is brought to enforce a liability on a joint contract and non prosequitur is entered as to some, the remaining defendants who are cast are not liable for the costs of service on those as to whom non prosequitur was entered. Eames v. Stevens, 26 N. H. 117. Compare Hillman v. Newington, 57 Cal. 56, in which it was held that in an action to recover damages for the commission of a joint trespass it is proper as against the defendants to apportion costs recovered equally among the defendants.

74. Barret v. Foley, (N. J. Ch. 1889) 17 Atl. 687, holding this to be true, although part of the defendants are insolvent, thus throwing the burden of all the costs on the others. Compare Traughber v. Smelzer, 108 Tenn. 347, 67 S. W. 475, holding that where three defendants each claim an undivided third interest in property in suit, one third of the costs may properly be taxed against each of the parties on rendition of an adverse decision instead of the entire costs being jointly taxed against all.

As regards the amount of costs recoverable it has been held that separate judgments for full bills of costs against different defendants in the same trial or proceedings is erroneous. 75. Sherman v. Brett, 7 Wis. 139, holding also that there can be but one satisfaction.

the other defendants will be obliged to pay the costs of the suits against them respectively.[76]

b. Where One Defendant Suffers Default. Where two or more defendants are sued upon a joint liability and one of them defaults, all the defendants are equally liable for the whole costs, where those who make a defense are unsuccessful.[77]

c. Where Separate Defenses Are Unnecessarily Made. Where several defendants have a common defense and file separate answers, the court will in its discretion charge them with the costs occasioned thereby.[78]

3. Where One Defendant Tenders Separate Issues. Where one of several defendants tenders separate issues, all of which are found against him, there is no error in adjudging costs thereof against him personally.[79]

4. Where Defendants Sever in Their Pleadings. Where two defendants sever in their pleading it is improper on sustaining a demurrer to the plea of one of them to adjudge against him all costs in the suit expended up to that time.[80]

5. Defendants Subsequently Brought In. Where a person is brought in as defendant, he should not be charged with costs adjudged by a previous decree against a co-defendant[81] or for costs incurred before being brought into the case.[82]

XVI. LIABILITY OF FUND FOR PAYMENT OF COSTS.

A. In General. Where complainant is compelled to resort to a court of equity to obtain his rights in respect of a fund in controversy, and on an account being taken it appears that the defendants have not acted honestly or in obedience to the court's order, the costs will be charged against defendants' share of the fund.[83] So where a person is made a party to a creditor's bill to enable the complainant to obtain a debt due from him to the complainant's judgment debtor, which debt such person is ready and willing to pay, he is entitled to his costs out of the fund.[84]

B. Fund Created or Preserved For the Benefit of Several Persons. Courts of equity have power to charge funds realized from or preserved by liti-

One having paid, on being discharged from the damages, it was held that this discharged the other; but that plaintiff might collect his costs of each. Compare Ayer v. Ashmead, 31 Conn. 447, 83 Am. Dec. 154, holding (by a divided court) that if, while separate suits are pending against several joint trespassers, one suit is settled and the defendant therein discharged, although it was the intention of both parties that the discharge should affect only the cause of action against the defendant, and that it should not affect the plaintiff's right of recovery in the other suits, it will yet operate as a discharge of the entire cause of action against all, and there can be no recovery in the other suits either of nominal damages or of costs.

gation with the costs and expenses of such litigation,[85] but to authorize the exercise of this power the litigation in which the costs and expenses were incurred must have been in promotion of the interests of those eventually found to be entitled to the fund.[86]

C. Costs of Audit on Distribution of Fund. Ordinarily the costs of audit on distribution of a fund are payable from the fund.[87] Where a fund has been ordered into court by claimants acting in good faith and after proper inquiry and without intending to obstruct the progress of the cause the court will not be strict in imposing costs upon them when unsuccessful,[88] but may charge the fund with the costs of the audit.[89] Where, however, costs are unnecessarily caused, they should usually be paid by the party causing them.[90]

D. Charging Fund With Payment of Fees of Counsel or Officers of Court. In the United States supreme court it is said to be the settled rule never to allow counsel on either rule to be paid out of the fund in dispute.[91] In another jurisdiction it has been held that where funds realized from litigation are brought into court, courts of equity in the exercise of their authority may order the payment of the costs of their officers out of the fund realized through their labors and exertions before making distribution of the proceeds to the successful litigants.[92]

XVIII. WAIVER, RELEASE, OR LOSS OF RIGHT TO COSTS.

A. By Failure to Apply For Costs in Time. The right to costs may be waived by failure to file application for costs within the time required by statute.[96]

B. Failure to Perfect Judgment. A statute providing that judgment shall be entered without costs if the successful party in an action fails to enter and perfect it within sixty days after the finding of the court shall be filed does not apply to proceedings to condemn land, which are special proceedings,[97] nor to decisions rendered by the supreme court upon appeal from lower courts.[98] It applies, however, where the successful party fails to perfect judgment within the prescribed time after the confirmation of the referee's report,[99] and to cases terminating by the court ordering a nonsuit.[1]

Motion for new trial.— It has been held that a motion for a new trial operates as a stay within the meaning of a proviso, excepting from the operation of the statute, in cases in which there is a stay of proceedings after verdict. Steinhofel v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 92 Wis. 123, 65 N. W. 852.

So a stipulation "that either party may move for judgment at any general or special term of said court, on the verdict rendered herein, and that no advantage shall be taken by the other for the reason that the moving for judgment was postponed" operates as a waiver of the statutory limitation. affirmance without inserting costs, and the entry of the judgment is regular, notwithstanding costs were not included.[2]

D. By Taking Out Execution For Damages Only. Where a statute provides that on appeal from taxation of costs judgment shall be considered as rendered on the day when costs are finally taxed and allowed, except where a bond is given and judgment is given for plaintiff, and defendant appeals from the taxation of costs without giving bond, the taking out of execution by plaintiff for damages only, pending such appeal, defendant not having waived his appeal, operates as a waiver by plaintiff of his right to costs.[3]

E. By Failure to Claim Costs. A failure to claim costs on the part of one entitled thereto may under certain circumstances operate as a waiver of his right to costs.[4]

F. By Discharge in Bankruptcy. Inasmuch as costs are incident to a judgment a discharge in bankruptcy discharges the costs.[5]

G. By Release of One Defendant. A release of one of two defendants for costs does not affect the liability of the other defendant for costs.[6]

H. By Subsequent Change of Law Governing Costs. Where costs have been duly taxed, and no appeal has been taken, any subsequent change in the laws governing costs does not affect the right to the costs as taxed.[7]

XIX. STIPULATIONS IN REGARD TO COSTS.

A. Validity. A stipulation that costs in a proceeding should abide the event of the action is valid,[8] and so is an agreement waiving costs,[9] and that too although the case is one in which costs are in the discretion of the court.[10] Such stipulations are binding although verbal,[11] unless required by rule of court to be in writing.[12] Counsel of plaintiff of record may bind the use plaintiff by an agreement that he shall pay costs.[13]

4. If at the time of making a tender the debtor has no knowledge of the commencement of a suit, and the creditor does not inform him thereof or make claim of costs, but refuses to accept the amount tendered solely on account of its insufficiency to pay the debt, it may be regarded as a waiver of all claim for costs. Haskell v. Brewer, 11 Me. 258. So where a creditor who resided in another state commenced an action on book-account against his debtor in this state, and afterward saw the debtor in such other state, and demanded of him payment of the debt there, and threatened to commence a suit against him there unless he complied, and denied that the suit in this state was commenced by his direction or authority, and thereupon defendant paid the amount which plaintiff claimed, and plaintiff executed and delivered to him a receipt in full of accounts, it was held that these declarations of plaintiff were equivalent to an express waiver of his claim for costs in the suit in this state. Limitation of rule.— Where a statute expressly declares that costs shall not be allowed out of the estate of a decedent to an unsuccessful contestant of a will a stipulation that costs shall be so awarded is not enforceable (Matter of Keeler, 7 N. Y. Suppl. 199, 26 N. Y. St. 90, 18 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 30, 23 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 376), and notwithstanding a stipulation in foreclosure proceedings between plaintiff's solicitor and the solicitor of a party improperly joined to pay his costs, such costs are not chargeable on the surplus arising from the sale of the mortgaged premises (Nelson v. Mortgomery, 1 Edw. (N. Y.) 657).

B. Construction. The term "costs" as used in a stipulation for payment of costs includes only such costs as are ordinarily and legally taxable.[14]

C. Methods of Enforcement. Ordinarily, it is apprehended, where a stipulation has been made as to payment of costs, the court in which the action is pending will enter judgment for costs in accordance with the stipulation.[15]

XX. AMOUNT AND ITEMS ALLOWABLE.

A. Under Statutes Containing Fee Bill. Where a statute contains a fee bill enumerating items which may be recovered no other costs are taxable than those so enumerated.[16] The items allowed by the fee bill cannot be increased by agreement of the bar.[17]

B. Service of Process or Other Papers — 1. Source of Right to Tax. There can be no taxation as costs of charges for service of process or other papers in a cause in the absence of statutory authorization.[18]

2. Unnecessary Service. Where the service of process or papers is one which is not required by law compensation therefor cannot be taxed as costs.[19]

3. Invalid Service. Costs of publication of a notice, which is invalid because of defects therein, are not taxable.[20] So where writs issued on a judgment against defendant have been stayed by reason of defective service the officer's fees therefor are not taxable against defendant.[21]

4. Service by Other Than Authorized Officer. The decisions are conflicting as to the right of a party to tax as costs fees for mileage and service of process by a person other than an officer authorized by law to make service. In some jurisdictions it is well settled that a party himself serving his own subpœnas is entitled to fees and mileage for such service;[22] while in others a party is not enti-

Attorneys' fees in jurisdictions where such fees are not taxable as costs cannot be allowed under such a stipulation (McDonald v. Page, Wright (Ohio) 121); but in jurisdictions where attorneys' fees are taxable the term "all legal costs" has been held to include charges for travel and attendance and other items that inure to the benefit of the attorney as well as clerks', officers', and witness' fees (James v. Bligh, 11 Allen (Mass.) 4). A stipulation in an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien that designated persons shall fix the amount due each plaintiff and that on ascertainment judgment shall be entered for foreclosure of the liens sued on does not exclude the allowance for reasonable attorneys' fees provided by statute for this class of actions. Rapp v. Spring Valley Gold Co., 74 Cal. 532, 16 Pac. 325.

But in one case the court without assigning any reason denied a motion for judgment for costs and held that the remedy was by action on the agreement. Union Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Hopkins, 3 R. Effect of stipulation.— Costs beyond the statutory allowance cannot be awarded because of a stipulation (O'Keefe v. Shipherd, 23 Hun (N. tled to tax as costs for his own services in serving subpœnas.[23] There is also a conflict of authority as to the right to tax for services in serving subpœnas by private persons other than parties to the suit. In some jurisdictions it is held that no costs are taxable therefor.[24] In others the contrary view is taken;[25] while in one state it is held discretionary with the court whether or not it shall tax a reasonable compensation.[26] It has been held that charges for service by an officer other than the one authorized to make service are not taxable as costs.[27]

5. SERVICE IN ONE OF SEVERAL SUITS. Where witnesses are subpœnaed in but one of several suits depending upon the same title and defense, and but one suit is tried, service cannot be taxed in each case.[28]

6. NECESSITY FOR INDORSEMENT OF FEES ON WRIT OR PRECEPT. Where a statute provides that "all travelling fees and fees for the service of writs or precepts of which an officer is required to make a return, shall be indorsed on the writ or precept, or they shall not be allowed," charges for serving requisitions on towns, notices to parties, and for travel in serving them, and for service of summons on jurors drawn from such towns, are rightfully disallowed, where they are not indorsed on any precept.[29]

7. COMPUTATION OF MILEAGE. Mileage will be allowed only for the actual distance traveled,[30] although several subpœnas are served on the same travel,[31] and is to be calculated by the nearest traveled route.[32]

C. Fees of Officers of Court — 1. IN GENERAL. Costs taxable in a case ordinarily include fees of officers of the court.[33] Where the fee bill specifically designates the items for which charges can be made no others can be taxed as costs.[34] Costs of the officers of the court to which a cause is removed have been held taxable, although the cause is taken back to the court from which the removal was made and thereafter tried in a court to which the cause is again removed.[35]

2. REFEREES. Fees of referees are usually made taxable as costs by statute.[36]

The amount taxed must be that prescribed by statute, in the absence of a written agreement for a different compensation.[37] But a stipulation by the attorneys fixing referee's fees is "the consent of the parties," within a statute fixing such fees at a certain amount, unless a different rate is fixed "by the agreement of the parties . . . in writing." And, where such stipulation has been acted upon by the referee, and the amount of his fees as fixed has been paid by the successful party, the court has no power, when neither fraud nor collusion has been shown, to reduce the allowance.[38] So it has been held that where a party at the commencement of a reference stipulates with the opposite party to pay half the referee's fees the stipulation will be enforced,[39] and that an agreement by a party in a proceeding in open court to pay the expense of a reference in a certain event is enforceable on the occurrence of the event on which his liability depends.[40] If the agreement for other fees than those fixed by the statute is not in writing it is not enforceable.[41] A stipulation for fees of a referee in an action brought in a court having no power to appoint referees confers no right to include such a disbursement in the judgment.[42]

3. CLERKS. Although a statute provides for the taxation of clerk's fees for designated services, no fees can be taxed unless the services are actually performed,[43] and fees cannot be allowed for certifying papers which are not required by law to be certified.[44] Where an action removed from a state court is dismissed at defendant's costs in the federal court, a clerk's fee of a designated amount per

In special proceedings.— Under statutes making referee's fees taxable as costs in actions, and providing that costs may be allowed in the discretion of the court in special proceedings at the rate allowed for similar services in civil actions, claimants, on a reference to ascertain their rights to surplus money in a mortgage foreclosure, are entitled to referee's fees, such proceeding being a special proceeding. Elwell v. Robbins, 43 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 108. So a proceeding to compel a special guardian, appointed to sell the real estate of an infant, to account for and pay over moneys received by him as such guardian, not being a motion, but a special proceeding, the fees of a referee to whom a question of fact in the proceedings is referred may be allowed as costs. Spelman v. Terry, 74 N. Y. 448.

On setting aside default.— After a complaint in an action had been answered by defendant, plaintiff served an amended complaint, and defendant defaulted. Thereupon reference was had, and defendant's default was thereafter set aside on defendant's motion, and he was allowed to answer without any provisions being made for the referee's fees. It was held that in the final costs recovered by plaintiff such fees were properly taxed as disbursements in the case. Bowe v. Brown, 4 N. Y. St. 456.

Special proceedings.— Under a statute providing that in special proceedings costs may be allowed in the discretion of the court at the rate allowed for similar services in civil actions, on a reference to ascertain the right of claimants to surplus money in a foreclosure the claimants are entitled to clerk's fees in the proceedings. folio for copying into the final record the process and pleadings in the state court, together with the proceedings for removal sent up in the transcript, is properly taxed against defendant, under a statute providing that the clerk's fee for making any record shall be a designated amount per folio.[45] Although a case is dismissed by consent of parties, it is too late after the term is passed to object to an order dismissing at plaintiff's cost, although the order be incorrect, and the clerk's fees are a proper charge under such order.[46] Where a statute provides that a clerk shall not have fees for filing any paper issued by him he cannot tax costs for filing subpœnas and citations issued by him;[47] but he may tax costs for filing affidavits of witnesses showing their attendance, as such affidavits are not issued within the meaning of the statute.[48] Under a statute requiring a clerk to give a certificate of attendance on the affidavit of a witness, he can make only one charge therefor in taxing costs, taking the affidavit and giving the certificate being one act, and coming under the item in the schedule of fees allowing a fee for "administering an oath, with a certificate and seal."[49]

4. SHERIFFS. Sheriffs' fees are only taxable in accordance with the provisions of some statute;[50] nor can a greater amount be allowed for any particular services than prescribed by statute.[51] Where a sale on execution is illegal a sheriff's commissions are not taxable against defendant, but should be paid by plaintiff.[52] So where a demurrer to a complaint is overruled with leave to answer on payment of costs, plaintiff is not entitled to taxation of sheriff's fees on execution.[53] A clerk cannot insert in a bill of costs a charge for sheriff's commissions, if he himself has made no such charge in his return.[54]

5. REGISTERS. By analogy to justices' costs and those of arbitrators in case of appeal, and those of the supreme court on an affirmance of a judgment, the fees of a register, in an issue devisavit vel non, are taxable with the other costs accruing upon the trial in the common pleas and can be collected with them.[55]

6. MASTERS. Where a decree ordering an account is set aside with costs, master's fees paid by defendant for the accounting should be taxed against plaintiff.[56]

7. RECEIVERS. In one state it is held that where a person is enjoined from prosecuting his business and his property placed in the hands of a receiver, at plaintiff's instance, the compensation for the receiver's services is taxable as costs against the plaintiff if unsuccessful.[57] In another state it has been held that a court cannot, upon dismissing an action in which a receiver has been appointed, tax, as costs against plaintiff, expenses of running the business placed in the receiver's hands; that such items must be recovered, if at all, in an action for that purpose.[58] So in another it has been held that the amount of compensation and expenses allowed to the receiver, if a proper charge against an insolvent bank, is properly costs of suit, which should be paid in preference to the general creditors of the bank.[59] So in one state it has been held that where interveners asked for an appointment of a receiver, the fact that the consent is afterward filed and the receiver is appointed on such consent does not relieve them from paying the costs of the receivership.[60] In the federal courts it has been held that where a receiver is appointed at the instance of plaintiff, and the ultimate decision of the case upon appeal, reversing the decree below, is adverse to him, the receiver's commissions, paid out of the funds in his hands, will not be taxed as costs against plaintiff, his appointment being regular and properly made in the case.[61]

8. AUDITORS. Fees of auditors are ordinarily taxable as costs and payable by the losing party.[62]

9. ACCOUNTANTS. Where, pending a receivership, an investigation of the accounts of a corporation is conducted by an expert accountant retained and paid by certain creditors, which investigation results in the realization of a large sum for the receivership, the expense of the investigation will be charged against the fund, and the disbursements of the creditors in that behalf repaid to them out of it.[63]

D. Fees of Jurors. Fees of jurors, it is apprehended, are ordinarily taxable. Statutes allowing a certain amount per day to the jury are not unconstitutional.[64] Where a statute provides that a jury fee shall be taxed with the costs of each suit, as a special fund for the payment of jurors, a fee can only be taxed in such cases as are tried by jury.[65] But where a statute provides that if in a trial the jury for any cause is discharged without finding a verdict, plaintiff shall pay the jury fees, he must pay jury fees where a nonsuit is granted and the jury discharged.[66] Under a statute providing that where a special jury is summoned the losing party shall pay the additional costs, the costs of a special jury will be taxed to the losing party, although the regular panel be in attendance and on pay.[67] Under a statute allowing a jury fee of a designated amount to be taxed as a part of the costs, the entire amount may properly be taxed where but one case is tried on the same day, although the trial does not consume the whole of the day.[68]

2. EFFECT AND OPERATION OF STIPULATION. In jurisdictions where stipulations for the payment of attorney's fees are considered valid these fees are taxable as costs.[71] If the statute provides that before a fee shall be allowed an affidavit shall be filed with the original papers stating that the attorney has made no agreement with any one to divide the fees, the filing of such affidavit is a condition precedent to the allowance of the attorney's fee,[72] and should be filed with the original petition.[73] In no event will a larger amount than is actually expended be allowed, notwithstanding the provisions of the instrument in which the stipulation is made, where the statute so provides.[74] The amount and items recoverable as attorneys' fees must of course depend on the statutes or stipulations of parties authorizing their allowance.[75] A statute which prohibits the allowance of more than a designated amount in an action at law has no application to a suit in equity.[76]

3. RIGHT OF PERSON ACTING AS HIS OWN ATTORNEY TO FEES. A person who is not an attorney and conducts his own suit in person is not entitled to attorney's fees.[77]

There is a conflict of authority as to whether an attorney conducting a case in his own behalf is entitled to tax fees therefor as costs. Some decisions hold that he is not;[78] others, that he is entitled to the same taxable costs as if he had conducted the action as attorney for another;[79] and others, that he may tax attorney's fees as in other cases, except a retaining fee.[80]

4. Right to Fees in Several or Consolidated Actions. Where several actions to enforce separate claims are consolidated, an attorney's fee taxable against defendant should be taxed as if the actions were one;[81] but where several suits by the same plaintiff against different defendants are submitted to referees, who are to render a final award, an attorney's fee of a designated amount is allowable in each of the original cases, under a statute allowing such fees to be taxed in each case submitted to a referee.[82]

5. Number of Fees as Affected by Number of Defendants. Ordinarily, where one attorney acts in behalf of several defendants in the same suit, only one attorney's fee is taxable,[83] except where the interests of the several defendants are separate, and it is necessary to interpose separate answers.[84]

6. Amount Taxable. If a specific amount is prescribed by statute the court cannot allow a greater sum.[85] If the amount is not prescribed by statute, the court should exercise its discretion as to the amount to be allowed, and not be governed wholly by the opinions of attorneys as to the value of the service.[86]

7. Docket-Fees Under Federal Statute — a. Right to Fees. U. S. Rev. Stat. § 824, allows a docket-fee of twenty dollars on a trial before a jury in civil or criminal causes, or before referees, or on a final hearing in equity or admiralty. There is considerable difference of opinion as to what constitutes a final hearing within this provision. Some decisions hold that any order or determinaout any formal appearance by the attorney, plaintiff will on prevailing be entitled to tax attorney's fees where there has been an appearance by the attorney. Stewart v. New York Ct. C. Pl., 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 597.

tion resulting in a final disposition of the cause is a final hearing.[87] Others hold that there is a final hearing only when some question of law or fact has been submitted to the court requiring not formal action merely but consideration, that is, the submission of it to the court in such shape as the parties choose to give it, with a view to a determination whether plaintiff or libellant has made out the case stated by him in his bill or libel, on the ground for the permanent relief which his pleading seeks, on such proof as the parties place before the court.[88] The statute does not authorize taxation where on a trial by a jury the jury disagree,[89] where in an action at law a jury has been waived,[90] nor on a reference to a master in a suit in equity under an interlocutory order before a final hearing.[91] A proceeding in the supreme court under its original jurisdiction against a judge of an inferior court to obtain mandamus to compel him to proceed in the cause is a "civil cause" within the statute.[92] In a law case, where there is a final trial before a jury, the attorney's fee is always to be taxed, and it is for the court to determine who is the prevailing party.[93]

b. Number of Fees Taxable. According to some decisions where there are several trials of the same cause a docket-fee may be allowed for each trial.[94] This has been denied, however, in others.[95] In another it is held that it cannot be taxed more than once when a case has been twice heard, as for instance before and after appeal;[96] and in another that it cannot be taxed twice — first on final decree against the principal and afterward on another decree against the surety.[97] issue, as prescribed by statute, he has the action dismissed for want of prosecution.[99] There is considerable conflict of authority as to whether the fee is taxable on an interlocutory judgment on demurrer. Thus some decisions hold that where a demurrer to an answer is sustained plaintiff is entitled to costs for proceedings before notice of trial,[1] while more recent decisions hold the contrary.[2] So a number of decisions hold that where a demurrer to the complaint is overruled, with leave to defendant to answer on payment of costs, costs before notice of trial are not taxable;[3] and it has been held that costs before notice of trial are not taxable on overruling a demurrer to an answer.[4] Although an action has been tried more than once, the successful party is entitled to tax but one fee for proceedings before notice of trial.[5]

G. Fees For Proceedings After Notice of Trial and Before Trial. The fee for proceedings after notice of trial and before trial is taxable in favor of defendant, where plaintiff withdraws a juror and amends his complaint;[6] discontinues after defendant has noticed the cause for trial;[7] where the action is dismissed for want of prosecution after being noticed for trial;[8] on the overruling of a demurrer to the answer;[9] or where a demurrer to the whole complaint is sustained.[10] Plaintiff is entitled to the fee where a demurrer to the complaint is overruled with leave to defendant to answer on payment of costs;[11] where the terms for vacating a judgment and letting defendant in to defend require him to pay "all the costs of the hearing before the referee in this action, and of the proceedings subsequent thereto;"[12] or where a demurrer to the answer is sustained with permission to defendant to plead anew on payment of costs.[13] This fee, however, is not taxable in plaintiff's favor where defendant defaults, and the court simply takes proof to determine whether plaintiff is entitled to judgment, because notice of trial is neither necessary nor proper under these circumstances.[14] There is some conflict of opinion as to the number of fees to be allowed where there is more than one trial. Some decisions hold, without qualification, that only one fee can be taxed, although the case may for any reason have been tried more than once.[15] In other decisions it has been held that where the new trial results from a reversal of the judgment and an order granting the trial only one fee is taxable,[16] while others hold that where the new trial results from a disagreement of the jury two fees are taxable.[17] So in another it was held that where a cause placed on the short-cause calendar is sent back to the general term because the trial was not finished in one hour, and is thereafter tried in its regular order, the successful defendant is entitled to tax two fees for costs after notice of trial.[18]

H. Trial Fees — 1. In General. The statutes of some jurisdictions authorize fees of designated amounts[19] for the trial of an issue of law and for the trial of an issue of fact. A trial fee is only allowed where there is an issue[20] and a trial thereof.[21] The trial fee is taxable on an interlocutory judgment on demurrer.[22] Where there are issues of fact in an equity case, which are referred, the prevailing party is entitled to the fee for the trial of issues of fact, although the reference reserves all other questions.[23] The clerk has no right to exact a trial fee in advance of the trial day in anticipation of a trial, and as a condition precedent to putting the cause on the calendar.[24]

2. Number of Trial Fees Allowable. No matter how many trials of a case there may be, a trial fee is allowed for each trial.[25] It has been so held where the jury disagree on the first trial;[26] where a default judgment against plaintiff

19. Additional fee where trial lasts more than two days.—N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 3251, provides that if the trial of an issue of fact necessarily occupies more than two days, ten dollars in addition to the ordinary trial fee is allowable. A trial lasts more than two days where the case is on trial two days and plaintiff rests, and the complaint is dismissed on the third day. Mott v. Consumers Ice Co., 8 Daly (N. Y.) 244. So an additional allowance should be made where more than two days are necessarily occupied in completing the trial, including the preparation and submission of written points for argument, if that way of submission is agreed on. Mygatt v. Wilcox, 35 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 410. On the other hand, where a trial began in the afternoon of one day and the jury took the case at five P. M. on the next day and returned a verdict at ten A. M. on the following morning, the trial had not occupied more than two days within the meaning of the statute. Washburne v. Oliver, 62 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 482. But if a trial occupies more than two days, and two previous mistrials each occupy more than two days, an allowance for extra time should be made for the trial and for both mistrials. Hudson v. Erie R. Co., 57 N. Y. App. Div. 98, 68 N. Y. Suppl. 28. And the additional fee may be allowed on the hearing of an application before a referee occupying more than two days. is opened and a second trial had;[27] or where an inquest previously taken by plaintiff is opened and a second trial had.[28] So where actions are consolidated under a stipulation that one is to abide the event of the other, a successful party is entitled to a trial fee for each.[29]

3. WHAT AMOUNTS TO A TRIAL. A trial, within the statute, is had where a cause is at issue on issues of fact, and is regularly noticed for trial and placed on the calendar, and when reached in its order the complaint is dismissed for failure of plaintiff to appear;[30] where the cause is settled or discontinued by plaintiff;[31] where an inquest is taken on default to ascertain the amount of plaintiff's claim;[32] where a verdict is directed for plaintiff at circuit, subject to the opinion of the court at general term;[33] where in special proceedings the matter has been referred to a referee to take proof of the facts, and there has been a hearing before him, and a final order made on his report;[34] where a question of law arising upon the trial of an issue of fact is reserved for further consideration and decided as on a motion founded on the clerk's minutes;[35] where an action which has been placed on the short-cause calendar is sent back to the general calendar because the trial was not finished in one hour;[36] where plaintiff is given absolute judgment on the pleadings;[37] where an agreed case is argued;[38] where plaintiff at the trial obtains leave to withdraw a juror;[39] or where the complaint is dismissed on a trial instead of on special motion.[40] On the other hand it is held that there is no trial where a motion to dismiss the complaint is denied and the cause directed to go to the circuit for trial,[41] or where there is a reference to take an account or ascertain damages.[42] So it has been held that a motion for judgment on the pleadings,[43] an application for judgment on a pleading as frivolous, which is granted, but leave reserved the unsuccessful party to plead over,[44] a reference for the admeasurement of dower,[45] an application for judgment to a judge at chambers,[46] the taking of evidence by commissioners, for the purpose of determining the value of real estate in litigation,[47] a motion for extra allowance after plaintiff offers to discontinue the action and pay costs,[48] or the argument of a motion for new trial[49] is not a trial within the rule. It has also been held that there is no trial at the circuit where after impaneling the jury and examining the witnesses the cause is referred,[50] or where the cause is settled or discontinued while upon the day calendar and before it is reached for trial.[51]

I. Calendar Fees. Calendar fees are not taxable where the cause is not placed on the calendar;[52] and where a cause is transferred from an equity to a jury calendar, under a statute subsequently declared unconstitutional, calendar fees are not taxable, as the expenditure is without warrant of law, and therefore not a "necessary disbursement."[53]

J. Term Fees — 1. When Allowable. The amount designated by statute for allowance for a term fee is granted for terms during which a cause is necessarily on the calendar awaiting trial.[54] The cause, however, must be "necessarily" on the calendar, as this is expressly required by statute. It will be considered "necessarily" on the calendar when regularly and properly placed there.[55] The prevailing party is entitled to a term fee for terms during which the cause is held under advisement by the court.[56] The right to term fees is not affected by the fact that the court's business was such that it was apparent that the cause could not be reached,[57] nor will plaintiff's right to term fees be affected by the fact that plaintiff himself did not notice the case for trial where defendant had so noticed it.[58] Term fees are not allowable where the cause is for any reason improperly or not necessarily on the calendar;[59] where the cause is postponed at the request of the party asking term fees;[60] where no note of issue is filed for any term for which the cause is noticed for trial;[61] where parties refuse or neglect to try the cause at a term for which it is regularly noticed, although having the opportunity to do so;[62] or where plaintiff serves an amended complaint, destroying the old issues.[63] Where a cause before it is reached on the calendar after the circuit is referred by stipulation, the successful party is entitled to tax a term fee for that circuit, but not where the cause is referred without the consent of the opposite party.[64] Fees are not allowable for the term at which the cause is tried.[65]

2. NUMBER OF FEES TAXABLE. Where a statute or rule of court limits the number of term fees, a greater number than specified cannot be allowed.[66] Where a statute provides that the successful party in an action in the superior court shall be allowed but three term fees in any action, unless allowed by order of the court, and that if the case goes up two additional term fees may be allowed, as many term fees as there are terms may be allowed in the discretion of the court, where the case does not go up.[67]

K. Fees For Entering Judgment. Where a cause is discontinued, and no reason exists for entering a judgment, defendant is not entitled to costs for entering the judgment.[68] Otherwise where the judgment is actually entered.[69]

L. Evidence — 1. COPIES OF DEEDS AND OTHER PAPERS. Costs cannot be taxed for papers not needed in a cause;[70] for papers not actually used;[71] nor for papers which must be presumed to be in the possession of the party producing the copies;[72] and so in some jurisdictions it is held that the expense of copies of deeds and other documents produced at the trial is never taxable.[73] In other jurisdictions, meaning of the statute allowing fees therefor to be taxed as costs by the prevailing party.[84] Other decisions, without mentioning any statute, hold that the cost of copies of models, properly procured for use as a part of the evidence in the suit, may be allowed, but that the cost of other models or machines cannot.[85]

M. Witness' Fees — 1. Parties to Suit. The general rule is that a party testifying in his own behalf is not entitled to witness' fees, whether suing for himself[86] or in a representative capacity,[87] or testifying for another joined with him.[88] Some decisions modify the rule, to the extent that a party attending solely as a witness and examined as such is entitled to witness' fees.[89] So it has been held that a party who is examined by his opponent is entitled to witness' fees, although he would not have been if he had not been thus examined.[90]

2. Persons Interested in Suit. Costs may be taxed for fees of persons attending as witnesses in a suit in which they are interested, but in which they are not parties.[91]

3. Attorneys. Witness' fees are not taxable for the testimony of an attorney who testified merely to free himself from an imputation of neglect of duty.[92] It has even been held that an attorney is never entitled to fees as a witness.[93]

4. Witnesses Subpœnaed but Not Examined. There is considerable difference of opinion as to the right of a successful party to tax as costs against his adversary fees of witnesses subpœnaed but not examined. In one state the rule is that where a witness is summoned but not sworn or tendered to the opposite party, his fees are not taxable against the parties summoning him, although successful;[94] but if examined by the opposite party, the party summoning him will be entitled to tax his fees as costs if successful.[95] So some decisions apparently hold without qualification that fees of witnesses summoned but not called in behalf of the successful party are not taxable as costs against his adversary, but they are against the weight of authority.[96] In a number of decisions it is held that if the attendance is procured in good faith, and the cause is settled, continued, or disposed of in any summary manner, dispensing with the necessity for their use, the prevailing party may recover the costs of such witnesses.[97] So according to one line of decisions the fees of witnesses summoned but not examined are taxable, unless the opposite party show that they were not summoned in good faith, but for purposes of oppression.[98] An equally large number recognize the right of a party to tax the fees of such witnesses, but differ from those just cited, in that such fees will be allowed only on condition that the party show in some satisfactory manner, by affidavit or otherwise, that the witnesses were summoned in good faith and not with intent to oppress.[99]

5. Witnesses Not Subpœnaed or Living Beyond Reach of Subpœna. According to a number of decisions fees for mileage or attendance of witnesses who are not subpœnaed, or who cannot lawfully be subpœnaed because living beyond the reach of a subpœna, are not taxable in favor of the party at whose request they attend.[1] In a number of decisions, however, it has been held that the fees of witnesses who attend and testify, but who are not summoned, are taxable as costs by the party summoning them against the opposite party;[2] and in a very large number of cases the rule is broadly stated, without any qualification as to the necessity of being sworn or examined, that a party who attends court in good faith, without being summoned, or who lives beyond the reach of summons, is entitled to witness' fees therefor, and that the party requesting his attendance, if successful, is entitled to tax such fees as costs in the case.[3]

7. Witnesses Summoned by Both Parties. Witnesses summoned by both parties are only entitled to one compensation.[6]

8. Witnesses Attending in Several Suits. Fees may be taxed against the party cast for a witness, who is a party in another suit in the same court,[7] and for a witness attending as witness for another party in another suit at the same time.[8] So many decisions lay down the rule broadly that a witness who attends in several cases between the same parties,[9] or brought by the same plaintiff against several defendants,[10] or against the same defendant by several plaintiffs,[11] are entitled to fees in all.

10. Incompetent Witnesses. Fees of witnesses rejected as incompetent are not taxable as costs against the opposite party.[13]

11. Witnesses Whose Testimony Is Immaterial, Incompetent, and Irrelevant. Many decisions hold that a party cannot tax the fees of a witness whose testimony is rejected or stricken out as being immaterial, irrelevant, or incompetent,[14] and that too although the witness may have been subpœnaed in good faith.[15] On the other hand it has been held that the fact that the testimony of a witness is immaterial or inadmissible is no reason for not taxing his costs against the losing party if summoned in good faith.[16]

12. Expert Witnesses. Sums paid for compensation of expert witnesses beyond ordinary fees authorized by statute for witnesses generally are not taxable as costs.[17]

13. Witnesses of Unsuccessful Party. Fees of witnesses of the unsuccessful party should not be included in a judgment against him for costs.[18]

14. Number of Witnesses For Whom Costs Taxable — a. In General. The court may exercise its discretion as to the number of witnesses for which a prevailing party shall be allowed to tax costs.[19] The party is bound to exercise a proper discretion as to the number of witnesses. He cannot call an unlimited number and charge the expense on his opponent.[20] If he has called an unnecessary number he may be required, although successful, to pay the fees of so many of them as were not needed.[21] The court ordinarily will not interfere, however, unless there is a clear disparity between the end to be accomplished by the proof and the instruments for its accomplishment,[22] or unless there be evidence of oppression.[23]

b. Number of Witnesses Testifying to Single Fact. In a number of jurisdictions it is provided by statute that not more than a designated number of witnesses summoned by the successful party to prove a single fact can be taxed against the unsuccessful party.[24] A general provision that fees will not be allowed for more than two witnesses to the same fact has no application where the judgment for costs is against the party summoning the witnesses.[25]

15. Allowance Where Cause Not Set For Trial or Improperly Listed. Where the cause has not been set for trial,[26] or is improperly listed,[27] a party cannot tax as costs fees of witnesses for attendance, etc.

16. Allowance in Case of Continuance or Delay. It has been held that the successful party should be allowed witness' fees for attendance during the time the trial was delayed,[28] and additional traveling expenses resulting from a continuance, when caused by the fault of his opponent;[29] but if he himself caused the delay he should not be allowed witness' fees for attendance before the trial was put off,[30] nor additional mileage nor attendance where the cause is continued by mutual consent;[31] and an allowance of a continuance, on condition of paying defendant's costs in preparation for trial, includes witness' fees so paid by defendant.[32] legally due the witness;[33] and where he has paid some less than their legal fees and some more, the legal fees of all cannot be grouped together to make the sum equal to the amount paid to all.[34]

18. TIME FOR WHICH ATTENDANCE TAXED. Where a cause is tried on the first day of the term only one day's attendance will be allowed;[35] nor can fees be taxed for attendance of witnesses during the trial of the case after their discharge;[36] and the fact that the trial closed too late during the day for the witnesses to go home does not authorize the taxation of another day's attendance.[37] If the cause is set down for trial on a particular day, and the time is short and the witnesses live a considerable distance, the party may keep them in attendance; but if considerable time is to elapse before the trial and the witnesses are convenient, a charge for their attendance on days when they are not needed should not be allowed.[38] An order, seasonably made, that no action except a designated one will be tried after a particular day of the term, and the parties will not be allowed to tax fees for the attendance of witnesses in other actions after that day, precludes the taxation of costs for the subsequent attendance of witnesses, in all but the specified action.[39]

19. MILEAGE — a. For What Distance Allowed — (I) IN STATE COURTS. Mileage for travel outside the state is not taxable as costs in a civil cause in the state courts.[40] But the fact that a witness lives outside of the state does not deprive him of the right to mileage within the state,[41] which is to be taxed from the state line to the place of trial and return on the ordinary route from the witness' place of residence to the place of trial.[42]

farther than one hundred miles from the place of trial, and another allows subpœnas to be served in other districts in case the witness does not live farther than one hundred miles from the place of trial. In some circuits it is held that mileage for attendance of witnesses who have not been summoned, or who reside beyond the reach of summons, is not taxable.[43] These decisions, however, are against the weight of authority. Many decisions hold that the successful party is entitled to have costs taxed for the entire mileage of witnesses, regardless of the distance they come or the fact that they have come from outside of the district or state.[44] In other decisions mileage has under these circumstances been allowed, but is restricted to one hundred miles.[45]

b. How Distance Computed. Mileage should be computed by the usual and ordinary route of travel between the witness' place of residence and the place of holding court,[46] notwithstanding the witness pursued a longer route.[47] In computing mileage a fraction of a mile is to be considered as a whole mile.[48]

20. Necessity of Witness Demanding Fees. It has been held that fees for witnesses are not taxable as costs unless they require or apply for payment.[49]

21. Effect on Right of Taking Witness' Deposition. The fact that a witness' deposition has been taken and is on file is no objection to the allowance of the fees of such witness in the taxation of costs, if he attended and was examined in person.[50]

N. Depositions — 1. Right to Tax in General. In a proper case the expense of taking depositions is a proper item of costs to be allowed to the prevailing party.[51]

2. Depositions of Party or Person Interested in Suit. A party's deposition in his own behalf is not taxable as costs,[52] but if made by him to be used by his opponent it may be taxed.[53] The deposition of a person interested in a suit but not a party thereto is taxable as costs.[54]

3. Items Taxable — a. In General. Fees for copies of cross interrogatories as settled, for defendant, and to be served on complainant's solicitor,[55] drafting and copying depositions under a commission,[56] and postage paid on a commission to take testimony[57] have been held taxable. But costs on a rule to take depositions are not taxable, unless so provided by statute.[58] Nor is money paid to an agent for taking and bringing back a commission to and from another state taxable.[59]

b. Fees of Officers Taking Depositions. Fees of the officers taking depositions are proper items of allowance, whether taken in or out of the state.[60]

c. Witness' Fees. Witness' fees for attendance on the taking of depositions are taxable as costs.[61]

d. Attorney's Fees. In the absence of statutory authorization attorney's fees for taking depositions are not taxable as costs.[62] Under the act of congress of Feb. 26, 1853, a designated amount is taxable as fees for the attorney, solicitor, or proctor, for every deposition taken and admitted as evidence in a cause.[63] Such

What is a deposition within the rule.— Where objections to a deposition have been waived by allowing it to be used, it is a "deposition," within the statute mentioning the test. And a deposition is taken and admitted in evidence, within the statute where it was taken for use on motion for a pre-fees are allowed to the party as compensation for his attorney's services in and about the depositions, and are to be taxed in addition to the fees of commissioners who take the testimony.[64] The statute applies to cases at common law where the depositions are given in evidence at the trial, and to suits in equity where depositions are read at the hearing.[65] It also applies to depositions taken before notaries, under stipulation that they should be treated as if taken under the rule as to depositions taken before regularly appointed officers.[66] The fee designated is taxable for the deposition of each witness, although more than one deposition is returned in the same inclosure.[67] According to some decisions, where a deposition is taken in one cause, but by stipulation used in others, only one solicitor's fee is taxable, and that in the suit for which the deposition is originally taken.[68] Other decisions hold the contrary.[69]

e. Attendance of Party or Counsel. Attendance of the opposite party at the taking of deposition is not taxable unless authorized by statute.[70] Nor is such attendance taxable where there is a special remedy provided by statute for the recovery of expenses for travel and attendance.[71]

Refusal of witness to complete deposition. — Where a statute provides that if any party after giving notice to the adverse party neglects or refuses to take a deposition, the adverse party may be allowed as costs such amount as the court may deem equitable, etc., unless notified that the deposition will not be taken, the party giving the notice of the taking of the deposition is not liable to the adverse party for costs for neglecting to take it, where the witness attends and submits to an examination in part, but refuses to complete it, and neither party requests compulsion. If a commission is issued from a federal court to a person in another state, other than a circuit court commissioner, the statutory compensation of such commissioner for the same service is the measure of an allowance to such person. 4. EFFECT OF PROLIXITY. Where a deposition is unnecessarily prolix, the prevailing party cannot recover for the expenses incurred in the taking of so much thereof as was unnecessary,[73] and that portion may be properly taxed to such party.[74]

5. NECESSITY FOR CERTIFICATION OF ITEMS. The officer taking a deposition should certify each item of costs and transmit the evidence of services rendered to show the court that the services have been performed, and that the charges are such as the law allows.[75]

6. NECESSITY FOR FILING WITHIN REQUIRED TIME. The costs of taking depositions are not taxable when not filed within the time required by rule of court.[76]

7. NECESSITY FOR USE OF DEPOSITIONS AS GROUND OF ALLOWANCE. There is considerable conflict of opinion as to the necessity for the use of depositions at the trial as a basis for the allowance of costs made in procuring them. It has been held that if the deposition is rejected because the magistrate's certificate of notice to the opposite party is defective,[77] or because the witness was within the reach of a subpœna, and the party knew it,[78] it is not taxable as costs. So it has been held that if the witness whose deposition was taken attends the trial it is not taxable as costs.[79] On the other hand it has been held that where the deposition is taken in good faith, but the witness is produced by order of court and testifies at the trial, the deposition will nevertheless be taxable.[80] Again it has been held that the fact that the deposition is not used is no ground for not taxing it as costs, where it is rendered unnecessary by the act of the opposite party.[81]

Method of taxation under agreement.— A stipulation by the parties that the fees of a stenographer for taking the testimony may be taxed as costs operates as a submission to the court of the question of the amount allowable and waives the right to have the question determined by the jury. And where, on a stipulation that the court may tax the stenographer's fees as costs, the court of its own motion refers the question of the amount allowable to a referee, his findings are merely advisory, and the court may disregard them and enter an order on the evidence returned by the referee. view.[89] So some decisions hold that stenographer's minutes obtained for the purpose of properly preparing amendments to a case on appeal are taxable disbursements,[90] but this is denied in others.[91]

3. Under Other Provisions. A statute authorizing the taxation of stenographer's fees as costs "in every case" does not include garnishment proceedings.[92] Under a statute requiring the party ordering the reporter to transcribe testimony to pay therefor, the fees so paid are not recoverable as costs or disbursements.[93] Where one statute applicable to a particular court requires the stenographer to file a copy of his notes on order of court for the use of court and parties without charge, and another statute requires him to furnish such copy to the parties on payment of the statutory fees, a party who obtains a copy from the clerk without applying to the court for it, under the first provision, cannot tax the amount paid by him as costs.[94]

Y.) 93]) are special proceedings. But proceedings supplementary to execution (Seeley v. Black, 35 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 369), proceedings to set aside a judgment (Pitkin v. Cooley, 5 Hun (N. Y.) 48), or an application for an order taxing the fees of the applicant as a real-estate agent and appraiser in proceedings by the city of New York to acquire a site for a city hall (In re New York, 69 N. Y. Suppl. 178) are not special proceedings.

Under a statute providing that a decision in a special proceeding for review is for the

T. Consolidated Actions. In New York it has been held that a successful party cannot in a consolidated action tax the costs of an action which was discontinued before the consolidation;[4] and that after an order of consolidation of several actions the costs of only a single action are taxable,[5] at least unless the order reserves the right to tax the costs of the discontinued actions.[6] In Pennsylvania, where there are several actions between the same parties and they agree that a verdict and judgment in one of them shall determine all, and the same witnesses are summoned in each action, plaintiff will be allowed to tax costs for them only in the case that is tried.[7] In Texas, where after appeal by defendant from a justice's judgment for plaintiff, the latter commenced another suit in the county court on the same cause of action claiming that the justice had no jurisdiction of the former action, and the two suits are consolidated on defendant's motion, it was held that plaintiff was not entitled to costs in the justice's court judgment.[8]

U. Interlocutory Proceedings. The amount and items for the costs taxable on interlocutory proceedings is closely allied to the substantive right to or liability for costs on such proceedings.[9]

V. Disbursements — 1. In General. By the provisions of the statutes in some jurisdictions the successful party in an action is entitled to recover necessary disbursements made by him.[10] Under a statute providing that a party to whom costs are awarded in an action is entitled to include in his bill of costs all necessary disbursements made by him, the clerk has authority to tax disbursements, although the allowance be of costs only, since under the statute disbursements follow the allowance of costs;[11] but the right to recover such necessary disbursements is incident to the right to recover costs,[12] and a party, even purposes of costs to be deemed an action at issue on a question of law, an order vacating and setting aside an execution, levy, and sale thereunder, and ordering an alias execution to issue, is not a special proceeding, but a motion, costs of appeal from which are to be governed by a statute providing "costs may be allowed on an original motion, or on an appeal from an order, in the discretion of the court, not exceeding ten dollars." But where three actions by the same plaintiffs against the same defendants were tried together by a referee under a stipulation that "the evidence is to be taken as in one case and to be deemed to be taken in all of the cases so far as applicable," the fees of witnesses who were called and testified but once, but whose evidence was admissible in all the cases, should be taxed but once and apportioned among the actions. though he prevails in an action, if for any reason he is not entitled to costs, is not entitled to disbursements.[13]

2. Party's Attendance. In some states it has been held that a successful party is entitled to tax costs of his attendance.[14] It has also been held that a federal court, sitting in a state where attendance is taxable as costs, should allow the taxation of attendance as costs,[15] but that attendance of the successful party cannot be taxed in the federal court where not allowable in the state court.[16]

3. Party's Traveling Expenses. In one jurisdiction it has been held that traveling expenses of a party are not taxable as costs.[17] In others such expenses may be taxed as costs.[18] But the travel for which costs may be taxed must be within the limits of the state.[19]

Attendance at several terms.— Where an action is defaulted, plaintiff will be entitled to tax fees for attendance, as in defaulted actions, at each term while the action shall be necessarily continued. Carleton v. Gile, 29 N. H. 44. So when an action is continued from term to term under reference, the party recovering costs shall be allowed to tax his travel, at the term the rule is entered, and his attendance from the commencement of the term to the day on which the rule is so entered. At the term when the report is made he may tax his attendance until the report is accepted, recommitted, or discharged; and at each intermediate term he may tax one day's attendance. Hayward v. Richie, 7 Mass. 286.

On change of venue.— Under a statute awarding defendant sued in the wrong county, and who demands a change to the proper county, a reasonable compensation for his trouble and expense in attending in the wrong county, defendant is entitled to expense of attendance by attorney, although he did not attend in person. Number of terms for which travel taxable. — When an action is continued from term to term under reference, the party recovering costs shall be allowed to tax his travel, at the term when the rule is entered. At the term when the report is made he may tax his travel until the report is accepted, recommitted, or discharged; and at each intermediate term he may tax his travel. Hayward v. Richie, 7 Mass. 286. See also Carleton v. Gile, 29 N. H. 44, in which it was held that where an action is defaulted at the first term, plaintiff is entitled to tax for his travel at each term while the action shall be necessarily continued. So a statute giving the prevailing party an allowance for travel for each term during which the action is pending authorizes an allowance to the successful party for travel for each term a cause is before an auditor or under advisement by the court. 4. MAINTENANCE OF IMPRISONED DEBTOR. Where it is the duty of a creditor to provide for the maintenance of an imprisoned debtor, the expense so incurred can be recovered as costs on the execution.[20]

5. CARE OF PROPERTY. The decisions are not harmonious as to the right to tax as costs expenses incurred by an officer in taking care of property in his custody. In some decisions the right is denied.[21] In others, without mentioning any special statutory provision, such charges have been taxed as costs.[22] In others, the right has been held to be given by statute.[23] If the statute provides for an allowance for keeping property, of such a sum as the court may allow, an allowance by order of court is necessary to authorize the taxation thereof.[24] Nor can such charges be taxed unless the particular items are returned upon the process, where a statute requires this to be done.[25] So items for unauthorized services rendered in respect to attached property, which have never been filed or claimed as costs, are not recoverable in an action by plaintiff, to whom the claim has been assigned by the officer.[26]

6. TELEGRAPHIC DESPATCHES. Sums spent for telegraphic despatches may be taxed as costs where shown by affidavit to have been reasonably necessary.[27]

7. PROSPECTIVE COSTS. In a recent decision in New York it is held that where a demurrer to the complaint is overruled, with leave to answer on payment of costs, plaintiff cannot tax prospective charges for satisfaction piece, transcript, and filing;[28] and in an early decision in the chancery court it was held that only Stay after levy.— Under a statute providing that where an execution is stayed after a levy, the plaintiff shall be entitled to such additional compensation for his trouble and expenses in taking care of and preserving the property as the court or judge allow, auctioneer's or keeper's fees cannot be allowed the sheriff except where there has been a stay, and where the court has allowed them. McKeon v. Horsfall, 88 N. Y. 429.

Statute requiring officer to take charge of property.— Although the statute relating to sheriff's fees does not provide for compensation to him for the care of attached property, yet costs may be taxed against the attachment plaintiff for his reasonable expenditures in that respect, because the statutes require the officer to take care of the property attached. Morgan v. North Texas Nat. Bank, (Tex. Civ. App. 1896) 34 S. W. 138. But compare Cutter v. Howe, 122 Mass. 541, in which it was held, under a statute enumerating sheriff's fees, and making no provision for such allowance, that proof of a custom to include in the taxable costs of the action an officer's charges for custody of attached property is immaterial and cannot establish the right to have such charges so taxed.

Where a statute allows officers stated fees, and for "other" services such sums as are in proportion to the fees established by law, a sheriff may charge for taking and delivering property to plaintiff in replevin, but plaintiff cannot tax as costs charges for transporting it to him, nor for holding it until a bond is taken. such prospective disbursements are taxable as must necessarily be incurred for fees of officers fixed by law, and which can be ascertained.[29] In Iowa it has been held, under a statute allowing costs to the successful party, that he is entitled to accruing costs;[30] and in Washington it has been held that costs on an execution, being accruing costs, should not be taxed.[31] In Indiana a general judgment for costs carries costs afterward accruing, and even though a definite sum is specified in the entry it does not follow that there may be no further liability for costs.[32]

8. Commissions on Money Collected. The commissions of a sheriff or marshal upon money collected on an execution, and the commissions of the clerk of court when the sheriff is directed by law to pay the money in to him instead of to the party directly are part of the costs of the suit to be paid by the judgment debtor for which execution may issue.[33]

9. State Tax on Litigation. A taxation on litigation imposed by statute on the unsuccessful party in a civil action is a specific tax for revenue purposes, and not costs.[34]

10. Printing. In the absence of statute, rule of court, or agreement of parties authorizing it, the expense of printing any papers or documents used in a cause is not taxable as disbursements; as for instance briefs,[35] pleadings, or abstracts of pleadings;[36] evidence;[37] record or abstracts of record;[38] or referee's opinion and judgment.[39] These items, however, are taxable when so authorized.[40] So it has

Application of rule.— The statutory provision that "all costs accrued at the instance of the successful party which cannot be collected out of the other party, may be recovered, on motion, by the persons entitled to them, against the successful party" does not entitle the state to recover as costs against the successful party the litigation tax imposed on the unsuccessful party by statute. Matter of Clarke, 15 N. Y. Suppl. 867, 27 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 144.

Order of court.— Under a statute allowing the "expense of printing the papers for any hearing, when required, by a rule of the court," to be taxed as disbursements, an order of court that the report of a referee be printed is not a rule of the court and does not bring the expense within the provision. Scott v. Alexander, 27 S. C. 15, 2 S. E. 706.

40. In Pearman v. Gould, (N. J. Ch. 1887) 8 Atl. 285, it was held (no reason stated) that the complainant in a chancery suit is entitled to have the expense to him of printing testimony taken by defendant taxed in his bill of costs.

been held that, under a statute providing that whenever there shall appear a claim for official services rendered by any officer of a court and there do not appear to be any fees fixed by law as a compensation, the court, judge, or justice on application shall make an order specifically fixing the allowance for such claim; printers' fees for advertisements made by the sheriff may be collected as part of the costs in the case.[41]

11. COPIES OF PLEADINGS. Costs for copies of pleadings required by rule of court to be furnished are taxable.[42] But a statute making an allowance of twenty-five cents per folio for drawing all pleadings in an action, and twelve cents per folio "for engrossing or copying the same" does not authorize a charge for a copy to file, in addition to the engrossed copy and a copy to keep.[43]

W. Unnecessary Costs — 1. IN GENERAL. In actions at law the court has power in the exercise of its discretion to disallow to plaintiff any costs which he has caused unreasonably and unnecessarily to be accumulated. Statutes allowing costs to the prevailing party do not mean costs unnecessarily incurred.[44] Thus a party will not be allowed costs for unnecessary matter in pleadings, but the court will allow costs only for such part as is proper;[45] and where a party is unsuccessful he is taxable with the expense of a copy of the whole pleading served on the opposite party.[46] So where litigation is unnecessarily protracted for the purpose of vexation the court will award costs against the party so acting.[47] In equitable actions the court may apportion the costs and refuse to tax the whole amount against the unsuccessful party where the successful party has made unnecessary costs.[48]

2. SEPARATE ACTIONS AGAINST ONE DEFENDANT WHICH MIGHT HAVE BEEN JOINED. In a number of jurisdictions it is the rule, usually and perhaps always, because of some special statutory provision, that where separate actions are brought against the same defendant on claims which could have been united in one action, plaintiff will be entitled to recover costs of one action only.[49]

3. Several Actions Against Defendants Who Might Have Been Joined in One Action. A statute limiting the recovery of costs where two or more actions are brought for the same cause against persons who might have been joined in one action has been held to apply to separate actions for the same cause against a sheriff and his indemnitor.[50] According to some decisions where separate suits are brought against the maker and indorser of a note plaintiff is entitled to costs in both suits, although there can be but one satisfaction of the debt.[51] According to other decisions if judgment is rendered against one for debt and costs and the same is paid pending the action against the other plaintiff is not entitled to costs in the other action.[52] It has also been held that where maker and guarantor are sued separately costs are allowed in both suits,[53] and also where several actions are brought against each promisor in a joint and several note,[54] or against makers severally liable thereon.[55] It has further been held that where a judgment for damages and costs in an action of tort against one tort-feasor has been paid pending action against another, plaintiff is not entitled to a judgment for costs in the suit against such other,[56] but that where plaintiff prosecutes both actions to judgment before recovering satisfaction he is entitled to costs in both.[57]

4. Suits Based on Matters Proper as Defense, Set-Off, or Counter-Claim. Under a statute providing that if any defendant personally served with notice omit to set up a counter-claim arising out of the contract or transaction on which plaintiff bases his action he cannot afterward maintain an action against plaintiff

The rule has no application in the case of causes of action accruing at different times, where action is brought on them as they successively accrue (Ft. Wayne, etc., R. Co. v. Clark, 59 Ind. 191; Wade v. Musselman, 15 Ind. 77; Eames v. Black, 72 Me. 263. See also Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Perkins, 2 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 520), where the party has grounds of action for distinct trespasses which could not have been joined in one action (Dorrell v. Johnson, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 263), where a party has lien debts the enforcement of which requires separate suits against each piece of property (Bicknell v. Trickey, 34 Me. 273), to actions by a sheriff on replevin bonds given by a party whose goods were attached on several writs by several creditors (Morse v. Hodsdon, 5 Mass. 314), nor to a case where plaintiff on different days brings two actions before the same police court against the same defendant returnable on different days on demands which might have been joined in one suit and defendant is defaulted in both (Butler v. Shapleigh, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 303). So the rule has been held to apply to plaintiffs of record only. Perry v. Kennebunkport, 55 Me. 453, holding that where the indorsee of two negotiable notes of the same maker payable to different payees causes the notes to be sued at the same term in the names of the payees, plaintiff of record will be entitled to costs in each suit, although the indorsee indorses the writs as assignee. And a statute restricting costs to one action in several actions on contract between the same parties, causes of which accrued prior to the commencement of either, has been held not applicable to actions of debt under a penal statute. therefor except at his own cost, the facts bringing the case within the statute must be set up by answer to deprive plaintiff of costs.[58]

X. Extra Allowance — 1. Source of Right to Extra Allowance. No extra allowance can be granted in the absence of some special statutory authorization,[59] and where so authorized must be governed strictly by the statute.[60]

2. Nature and Object of Allowance. An extra allowance of costs is made by way of indemnity to the successful litigant for actual expenses necessarily or reasonably incurred beyond the taxable costs,[61] but it is to be computed upon costs incurred in the trial court alone.[62] The granting thereof is in the discretion of the court[63] and cannot be demanded as a legal right.[64]

3. Actions or Proceedings in Which Allowance Made — a. Difficult and Extraordinary Cases. Statutes in some states provide for an extra allowance where the cause is "difficult and extraordinary."[65] In determining what cases are within the statute no general rule can be adopted, but each case must be determined according to its own peculiar circumstances.[66] The case, however, must appear

Where it appeared that before the commencement of the action defendant had obtained judgment against plaintiff in a similar action from which plaintiff appealed but afterward satisfied the same, and plaintiff's cause of action accrued before the rendition of such judgment, it was held that for the purposes of this case the judgment was not vacated by the appeal, but that there had been a trial and adjudication contemplated by the statute in which plaintiff might have presented his claim against defendant and had it adjudicated and therefore plaintiff was not entitled to costs. Thus an action to restrain the levy of an illegal tax, in which there is much work in procuring evidence (People v. Westchester County, 15 N. Y. Suppl. 580, 39 N. Y. St. 798), an action on a large number of causes acquired by assignment from different persons, requiring an examination into the particular facts of each cause of action (Durant v. Abendroth, 1 N. Y. Suppl. 537, 16 N. Y. St. 263, 15 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 36), an action involving "more than ordinary labor and preparation by counsel" (National Lead Co. v. Dauchy, 22 Misc. (N. Y.) 372, 49 N. Y. Suppl. 379), an action to recover a large sum as damages for injuries to leased premises, in which a counter-claim is set up and the issues are litigated with great bitterness, and a large number of witnesses called (McCulloch v. Dobson, 15 N. Y. Suppl. 602, 39 N. Y. St. 907, 908), an action claiming large damages for disturbance of enjoyment of valuable to be difficult and extraordinary to authorize the allowance.[67] It must be beset with more than the ordinary difficulties of litigation, necessarily justifying or requiring more than ordinary expenditure of money or labor.[68] The better practice is to deny an extra allowance in all doubtful cases, and grant it only in those which are clearly within the statute.[69] An extra allowance should not be granted where plaintiff's own fault or misconduct has caused the case to be difficult and extraordinary,[70] or has misled defendant into interposing a defense,[71] or where an allowance would be inequitable.[72] Even though the case be difficult and extraordinary, the court is not bound at all events to make the allowance. It may exercise its discretion in this regard.[73]

b. Actions to Determine Claims to Real Property. Statutes authorizing an extra allowance in actions to determine claims to real property do not apply to actions to foreclose mechanics' liens,[74] to proceedings for apportionment of taxes and assessments on lands and for the sale thereof,[75] nor to actions by vendors to foreclose land contracts.[76]

c. "Litigated" Cases. A statute which provides that the prevailing party shall be allowed a percentage on the amount recovered in litigated cases, not to exceed a designated amount, does not apply to an alternative judgment in replevin for the return of the property or for its value.[77] premises by causing tenants to abandon them (Morrison v. Agate, 20 Hun (N. Y.) 23), a proceeding by a stock-holder of a bank to enjoin it from exercising its corporate rights and from making any payments or transferring any of its property (Conaughty v. Saratoga County Bank, 28 Hun (N. Y.) 373), and an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien (Horgan v. McKenzie, 17 N. Y. Suppl. 174, 43 N. Y. St. 131; Lawson v. Reilly, 13 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 290) are within the rule. But an action in which the only defense interposed is the statute of limitations, and which takes but a short time to try (Adams v. Stern, 29 Hun (N. Y.) 280), an action in which the only question tried was as to the right of plaintiff to recover on a contract of sale of chattels (Barnes v. Denslow, 9 N. Y. Suppl. 53, 30 N. Y. St. 315), an action in which the answer was stricken out as frivolous (Beers v. Squire, 1 Code Rep. (N. Y.) 84), and an action in which the trial lasted only a few hours, and there was nothing peculiar in the character of the cause, although the questions were somewhat complicated (Dexter v. Gardner, Code Rep. N. S. (N. Y.) 80) are not within the rule. So the mere fact that a considerable number of witnesses had been examined, and that the cause for that reason extended over a considerable period, does not bring it within the statute. Allowance on second trial.— An extra allowance of costs will be granted to a party on a new trial, although not difficult and extraordinary, where, although the same party was successful on the first trial, which was difficult and extraordinary, the judgment was reversed and a new trial ordered. d. Special Proceedings. The New York statutes do not authorize extra allowances in any special proceedings,[78] except certiorari to review an assessment.[79]

e. Actions to Procure an Adjudication Upon "An Instrument in Writing." A statute providing for an extra allowance in actions to procure an adjudication upon an instrument in writing applies to an action to enforce covenants of a lease,[80] and to an action to restrain defendant from violating a written agreement to sell only to plaintiffs articles made by a secret method, in which the construction and effect of the instrument arose incidentally.[81]

4. Persons Who May Be Awarded Allowance. Under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 3253, "any party" may be awarded an extra allowance in a proper case.[82] The court may order allowances to both parties, where each has been in part successful.[83] To entitle one to an allowance, however, he must have an interest in the subject-matter[84] and be successful in the suit.[85]

5. On What Allowance Computed — a. Amount of Recovery or Claim. The words "amount of recovery or claim," as contained in a statute providing for an additional allowance upon "the amount of the recovery or claim or subject-matter involved," mean that the recovery or claim shall be for money, the words, "subject-matter involved" being used to cover all other cases.[86] Where plaintiff recovers a money judgment, the basis of computation for an extra allowance is the amount recovered and not the amount claimed.[87] Where a specific sum is claimed, it furnishes the basis of computation, on which an extra allowance

b. Subject-Matter Involved — (i) Term Defined and Explained. The term "subject-matter involved," as contained in a statute providing for an additional allowance upon the "subject-matter involved," means the possession, ownership, or title to property or other valuable thing, which is to be determined by the result of the action.[90] It does not mean the property which may be either

(II) Necessity For Subject-Matter Having Money Value. To authorize an extra allowance it is essential that a pecuniary value may be predicated of the subject-matter.[92] Importance of the litigation in any other than its pecuniary aspect affords no basis for an allowance;[93] nor does the fact that a possible money value may accrue incidentally.[94]

(III) Necessity of Showing Money Value of Subject-Matter. It is also essential that the money value of the subject-matter be shown;[95] and it is

The subject-matter in controversy is not capable of a money valuation in an action brought merely for equitable relief, and not for money or property (Weeks v. Southwick, 12 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 170), or where nothing is involved beyond a mere intangible legal right (Johnson v. Shelter Island Grove, etc., Assoc., 47 Hun (N. Y.) 374), or ordinarily where the only relief asked is an injunction (Atlantic Dock Co. v. Libby, 45 N. Y. 499; Palmer v. De Witt, 42 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 466), as for instance to restrain the diversion of a stream (Godley v. Kerr Salt Co., 3 N. Y. App. Div. 17, 37 N. Y. Suppl. 988, 73 N. Y. St. 530), to enjoin a sale of stock (Smallwood v. Schwietering, 10 Misc. (N. Y.) 103, 31 N. Y. Suppl. 149, 63 N. Y. St. 514), to restrain proceedings to dispossess (Grissler v. Stuyvesant, 67 Barb. (N. Y.) 81), to restrain police commissioners from adjudicating title to office (Voorhis v. French, 47 N. Y. Super. Ct. 364), or to enjoin the completion of a pier and compel the removal of the part already built (People v. New York, etc., Ferry Co., 68 N. Y. 71). So there can be no basis for an extra allowance in an action to vacate an award (Hoffman v. De Graaf, 39 Hun (N. Y.) 648), to remove from office a corporate officer (People v. Giroux, 29 Hun (N. Y.) 248), to reform a contract (Heert v. Cruger, 14 Misc. (N. Y.) 508, 35 N. Y. Suppl. 1063, 70 N. Y. St. 688; Christopher, etc., R. Co. v. Twenty-Third St. R. Co., 20 N. Y. Suppl. 556, 48 N. Y. necessary that the money value of the subject-matter be shown by reasonably clear and satisfactory evidence.[96]

(iv) Determination of Value of Subject-Matter. It is for the court to determine the value of the subject-matter involved for the purpose of making additional allowance.[97]

c. Necessity For Interposition of Defense. It is a condition precedent to the granting of an extra allowance in a difficult and extraordinary case that a defense should have been interposed.[98]

d. Necessity of Final Judgment. In no case is a party entitled to an extra

Evidence held sufficient to show value.— An uncontradicted affidavit that plaintiff had spent fifty thousand dollars in advertising the articles on which he used the trade-mark in controversy is sufficient evidence of value. Munro v. Smith, 6 N. Y. Suppl. 426, 25 N. Y. St. 624, 23 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 275. So in an action to enjoin defendant from operating its railroad by electricity there is a basis for extra allowance where there is evidence as to the value to defendant of its right to run its cars by the method sought to be enjoined. Y Suppl. 763, 39 N. Y. St. 966]. In an action for damages to realty, where it appears that the property is worth one hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars, and plaintiff claims the damage amounts to that sum, there is sufficient evidence of value. Israel v. Metropolitan R. Co., 10 Misc. (N. Y.) 722, 31 N. Y. Suppl. 816, 64 N. Y. St. 638. And in an action of ouster, where the complaint demands that the alleged usurpers pay the fine of two thousand dollars imposed, there is a basis for an extra allowance. People v. Adams, 13 N. Y. Suppl. 714, 37 N. Y. St. 603, 20 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 195. For other cases in which the evidence was held sufficient to form a basis for extra allowance see Hanover F. Ins. Co. v. Germania F. Ins. Co., 138 N. Y. 252, 33 N. E. 1065, 52 N. Y. St. 334; Adams v. Arkenburgh, 106 N. Y. 615, 13 N. E. 615, 11 N. Y. St. 121; Hart v. Ogdensburg, etc., R. Co., 89 Hun (N. Y.) 316, 35 N. Y. Evidence held insufficient to show value.— A tax imposed on a franchise, which is the subject-matter involved, does not furnish sufficient evidence of the value thereof to authorize an extra allowance. People v. Ulster, etc., R. Co., 128 N. Y. 240, 28 N. E. 635, 40 N. Y. St. 280. So where the only proof of the value is the allegation that the action is brought to procure a judgment allowing plaintiff to redeem from forfeiture certain stock upon payment of the sums due thereon for unpaid assessments, and that the amount so due is fifteen thousand, two hundred and sixty-seven dollars, it is not error to refuse defendants an extra allowance. A trial is not necessary.— It is enough if the action has been terminated in such form that the successful party can lawfully claim payment of his costs, and enforce payment in any mode known to practice. Moulton v. Beecher, 11 Hun (N. Y.) 192; Coffin v. Coke, 4 Hun (N. Y.) 616; Mills v. Watson, 45 N. Y. Super. Ct. 591; Carter v. Clark, 2 Sweeny (N. Y.) 189.

allowance until a final judgment has been rendered and is ready for entry.[99] It is not designed to be given at any stage of the action, whenever the court might impose the payment of costs as a condition.[1] Nevertheless a judgment is final which disposes of the case then pending. It need not necessarily dispose finally of the cause of action between the parties so that no other action can be brought.[2]

e. Necessity of Right to Costs. An extra allowance cannot be granted to a party in whose favor no costs are taxable.[3]

f. Right as Affected by Tender or Offer of Judgment. Defendant in a proper case is entitled to an extra allowance where plaintiff recovers a less amount than is tendered by him.[4] The decisions are very conflicting as to the effect of an offer of judgment for a specified sum and costs when accepted. Some decisions hold that this bars all right to an extra allowance,[5] while others maintain the contrary view.[6] The decisions are also conflicting as to the effect of a settlement before judgment on the right to an extra allowance;[7] and it has been held that where defendant confesses judgment before plaintiff is entitled to a default judgment, plaintiff is not entitled to an allowance.[8]

g. Right as Affected by Entry of Judgment. The entry of judgment is not a waiver of the right to an extra allowance, although it cannot be granted after taxation and entry of costs.[9]

6. The Application — a. Where and to Whom Made. Application for extra allowance must be made before the court,[10] and ordinarily to the judge[11] trying the cause.[12] Thus a referee to whom the cause has been referred,[13] the court of appeals to which the cause has been appealed,[14] or the general term, before whom exceptions are heard in the first instance on a verdict found by the jury in the special term,[15] have no power to make an allowance.

b. Time of Application and Allowance. By express provision of a rule of court, allowance can be made only "before final costs are adjusted."[16] Accordingly application must be made before taxation of costs and entry of judgment in the trial court.[17] The practice in such cases is to make the motion for extra

Opening taxation of costs.— While application for additional allowance should be made before final costs are adjusted, the court may allowance immediately after the trial, without reference to further proceedings by either party.[18]

c. Notice of Application. The decisions as to the necessity for notice of application are not altogether harmonious. The weight of authority, however, is probably to the effect that notice is not necessary where the application is made immediately after trial.[19] And in some decisions it is held that if application is made at the same term notice is unnecessary.[20] In all other cases, however, notice is perhaps necessary.[21] Thus where the trial court directs a verdict for plaintiff, and orders that exceptions be heard in the first instance at general term, the proper practice is to apply on notice for an extra allowance where order for judgment for plaintiff is made.[22]

d. Hearing and Determination. The court may determine an application for an extra allowance on the facts disclosed at the trial or brought to its attention by affidavits;[23] and where the cause has been tried by a referee, it is the usual and better practice to require his certificate that the cause was difficult and extraordinary,[24] but this is not jurisdictional, and the absence of the certificate does not prevent the court from considering the motion.[25]

e. Judgment or Order. Where an extra allowance is granted, the sum allowed is inserted in the judgment-roll as part of the judgment,[26] is collectable by force of the judgment,[27] and no written order is necessary to authorize the insertion of the allowance in the judgment.[28]

7. Amount Allowed — a. In General. The statutes providing for an extra allowance designate the maximum percentage which may be allowed on the amount recovered or claimed or the value of the subject-matter involved. Of course the allowance can in no case exceed the percentage so designated,[29] and nevertheless set aside a taxation of costs upon a proper application for the purpose of allowing a motion for extra allowance to be made. Thompson v. St. Nicholas Nat. Bank, 54 Hun (N. Y.) 397, 7 N. Y. Suppl. 491, 27 N. Y. St. 186.

even though the amount allowed does not exceed the maximum percentage authorized by statute, it may nevertheless be excessive, and will be so considered if a much less amount would indemnify the party to whom the allowance is made,[30] or the trial occupies a short time.[31] Extra allowance granted to several defendants cannot exceed in the aggregate the maximum percentage specified in the statutes on the amount claimed or the subject-matter involved.[32]

b. Where Party Sues to Recover Share of Property or Fund. Where a party sues to recover a share in property, an allowance granted him must be computed on the value of the share which he recovers, not on the whole property.[33] Conversely, a person suing one of several insurers for his proportion of a loss can recover an extra allowance only on the basis of such proportion.[34]

c. Whether Interest Included. If in an action on contract a referee's report or verdict allows interest as part of the damages recoverable, an extra allowance should be based on interest as well as on principal.[35]

d. As Affected by Interposition of Counter-Claim or Set-Off. Where plaintiff establishes his claim and also defeats a counter-claim or set-off, he is entitled to have an allowance based on both;[36] unless the successful prosecution of the claim necessarily defeats the set-off or counter-claim[37] or it is stricken out before he is required to reply to it.[38] If the claim is not contested, except to the extent that it should be abated by the amount counter-claimed, plaintiff is not entitled to an allowance where the counter-claim is established.[39] If defendant obtains a judgment for a balance found due him, the allowance may be based on the amount claimed by plaintiff, and not on the amount of recovery.[40] If neither party is successful, plaintiff is not entitled to an allowance computed on the amount of the counter-claim,[41] and neither is defendant, when his conduct has been extremely vexatious.[42]

8. Number of Extra Allowances. The successful party is entitled to only one extra allowance, although the case may have been tried more than once. He is not entitled to an additional allowance taxed as costs on the first trial.[43]

9. Vacating Order For Allowance. Where the court making an extra allowance has jurisdiction, another judge cannot on motion set aside or reverse the decision.[44]

10. Review of Order For Allowance. In New York an order granting an allowance affects a substantial right, and is appealable both to the general term[45] and to the court of appeals.[46] But the extent of review in these two courts is different. The latter can never review the discretion of the trial court in making an allowance,[47] but may review its action when it has exceeded the limitations fixed by the statute authorizing extra allowances, either in exceeding the maximum amount provided for by statute or in making an allowance in a case not authorized by statute, for here a question of law is presented.[48] In the general term an award of an extra allowance is reviewable on the merits;[49] but the discretion of the trial court will not ordinarily be reviewed, unless abused.[50] If it is clear that this has been done the order will be reversed.[51] To obtain a review in the general term formal exceptions are unnecessary,[52] but the burden is on the appellant to show error, whether on appeal to the general term[53] or to the court of appeals.[54] All the facts bearing on the allowance should be presented.[55] In Florida an allowance is reviewable to ascertain whether the cause is one in which an allowance may be made and whether the sum allowed is within the statutory limit; but discretion in making the order or as to the amount allowed will not be interfered with unless it exceeds the statutory amount.[56]

Y. Increased Costs — 1. Introductory Statement. In a number of jurisdictions the statutes provide for the allowance of increased costs in designated cases.[57]

2. On Filing Insufficient Petition. A statute providing that where two petitions have been adjudged insufficient and a third has been filed, if the third is adjudged insufficient or the whole or some part is stricken out, the party filing such pleading shall pay treble costs and no further petition shall be filed, and that judgment shall be rendered applies to all civil actions, including proceedings to contest a will.[58]

3. Necessity of Applying For Increased Costs. A party entitled to double or treble costs must make application therefor or they will not be allowed.[59]

4. Necessity For Certificate of Allowance. A statute providing that where on the trial of an "action" any fact appears whereby a party is entitled to increased costs the judge or referee shall make a certificate stating the fact and that such certificate shall be the only competent evidence before the taxing officer does not apply to a special proceeding where the costs are discretionary.[60]

5. Effect of Plaintiff's Failure to Recover Amount Sufficient to Carry Costs. As defendant must recover judgment to entitle him to increased costs, he is not entitled to such costs when plaintiff recovers a sum so small as to entitle defendant to costs.[61]

6. Effect of Joining Person to Whom Increased Costs Cannot Be Given. Where suit is brought against two or more persons, one only of whom may be awarded increased costs under the statute, and they plead severally and are successful, the party to whom increased costs may be awarded will be entitled thereto and the other defendants to single costs.[62]

7. Effect of Reversal of Judgment. Where a defendant to whom a statute gives increased costs on recovery of judgment obtains a judgment which is subsequently reversed he is not entitled to increased costs.[63]

party entitled to double costs and the substitution of his representatives in his place do not affect the right to double costs.[64]

9. Method of Computation. The English method of computation of double costs was to add to single costs one-half their amount,[65] and such has been held the rule in some states of the United States.[66] In others, however, the English practice has not been adopted by statute or otherwise, and the rule is to tax single costs and multiply them by two.[67] As respects treble costs the practice is to tax single costs and multiply them by three.[68] Double costs when allowable are computed on the whole taxed bill, including disbursements.[69]

10. Form of Judgment. Where judgment is rendered for treble costs it is sufficient to state the aggregate sum "being treble the costs and charges of the plaintiff" without first stating the amount of the single costs and then the treble amount.[70]

Z. Interest on Costs. In the absence of statute authorizing it, interest on the costs awarded cannot as a general rule be allowed.[71] But a judgment for costs is a "judgment for money," within the meaning of a statute relating to interest, and bears interest from the date of the return of the verdict or finding of the court, until the same shall be satisfied.[72]

XXI. AWARD OF COSTS AND CERTIFICATE.

A. Necessity For Award. Whenever costs do not follow the judgment or decree as of course, but are within the discretion of the court, they must be specially awarded or no costs can be taxed.[73] If, however, costs follow the judgment as of course, no special award is necessary.[74]

B. Necessity For Certificate — 1. That Title to Real Estate Was Involved. In some jurisdictions to entitle a plaintiff to costs in case he recovers less than a designated amount it is necessary that the court shall certify that the title to real estate came in question.[75]

2. That a Greater Amount of Damages Should Have Been Allowed. In Alabama no more costs than damages are allowed in actions of tort, where the recovery is less than the sum designated in the statute, unless the court certifies that a larger amount of damages should have been allowed.[76]

3. That There Were Reasonable Grounds For Expecting Larger Recovery. A statute providing that if plaintiff shall not recover more than a designated amount he shall not recover costs unless the judge certifies that he had reasonable grounds to expect to recover more than that sum has been held to apply only to an action ex contractu. Such certificate is not necessary to carry costs in an action of damages to land by improper construction of a railroad.[77]

4. That Trespass Was Wilful and Malicious. In Pennsylvania in an action of trespass, if plaintiff recovers less than a designated amount, the court, in order to entitle plaintiff to costs, must certify that the trespass was wilful and malicious, and it has been held that the court will so certify where in an action of trespass quare clausum fregit, it appeared that the defendant continued the acts of trespass after being notified to quit.[78]

C. By Whom Costs Awarded — 1. In General. The award of costs is a judicial act and must be made by the court, unless the cause is referred.[79] The clerk who is merely an officer of court cannot award costs,[80] nor can auditors appointed to take and state accounts.[81] So a jury have no power to award costs.[82]

2. By What Court Awarded — a. In General. To authorize a court to award costs, there must be a statutory authority therefor, either express or implied.[83]

When authority implied.— Although there is no statute expressly authorizing the supreme court to render judgment for costs made in that court such power will be implied where a statute authorizes the clerk

The court before which a cause is tried must award costs. If the court before which the final determination of a case is heard does not award costs there is no authority elsewhere to adjudge costs.[84]

b. After Appeal. In New York, where the court of appeals affirms a judgment of the general term, reversing a judgment of the special term and ordering a new trial, and directs judgment absolute for plaintiffs, with costs, the costs awarded by the court of appeals are the costs of that court only, and the special term, after the remittitur has been filed, has power to award costs and an extra allowance in ordering final judgment.[85] In Maryland it has been held that where a cause is neither affirmed nor reversed, but is remanded in order that the proceedings may be so amended as to conform to the opinion within expressed, all the costs of the cause including those of the appeal remain subject to the final decree.[86]

3. By Referee. Where a cause is referred, referees are ordinarily empowered to award costs.[87] The report to be coextensive with the cause should embrace the question of costs as well as damages or other relief asked.[88] Statutes providing that no costs shall be awarded a successful party on the recovery of less than a designated amount do not apply to a case heard before a referee, where the statute authorizing such hearing provides that full costs shall be taxed on the report of the referee, irrespective of the amount of the recovery.[89] Where an action is tried by a referee, the irregularity of his report in the matter of costs cannot be questioned by the clerk in taxing costs. stands before the clerk as the mandate of the court, and until vacated and set aside on proper application to the court must be obeyed.[90]

D. Time of Application For an Award of Costs. Ordinarily no order for costs or disbursements should be made until a final judgment is recovered.[91] Rendering judgment for costs one year after the parties are out of court, on motion of plaintiff, without notice to the other parties, is erroneous;[92] but it has been held that the fact that an order for taxation for costs is made in vacation is no ground for interfering with the judgment if they were taxed to the proper party.[93] A justice of the peace after judgment on a verdict has authority to proceed on the same date to determine the costs and if necessary to hold the case open a reasonable time for that purpose.[94] If a final decree is silent as to costs they cannot afterward be ordered to be paid, unless there is a rehearing and the decree is opened for that purpose.[95]

E. Time of Making Certificate. If a certificate of designated facts necessary to entitle either party to costs is authorized to be made by the judge either before or after verdict, such certificate cannot be made after judgment.[96]

F. Requisites of Award — 1. In General. Interlocutory costs should be awarded by order and not by judgment,[97] and it has been held that an order allowing an amendment on condition of paying costs to date should fix a date for payment.[98]

2. Fixing Amount of Costs. Ordinarily an award of costs need not fix the amount. This is a ministerial act to be performed by the taxing officer.[99]

G. Operation and Effect — 1. OF AWARD. A judgment for costs includes all legal items of costs which have accrued,[3] but only such items as the party is by law entitled to recover.[4] It includes only the costs made by the party to whom they are awarded. He is not entitled to recover costs expended by his adversary.[5] It does not entitle the owner of the judgment to the costs of an appeal previously adjudged against him in the appellate court.[6] A general judgment for costs against a defendant includes only such costs as are incurred by plaintiff against such defendant. It does not include costs incurred by plaintiff against a co-defendant.[7] If a demurrer is overruled and by the order or judgment overruling the

2. Of Certificate. In any cause in which a certificate of the judge is necessary to entitle the person to costs a certificate given by the judge is conclusive upon the taxing officer.[9] If improperly granted the remedy is by motion to set it aside.[10]

H. Review and Correction of Award — 1. In Trial Court. If there are errors in the allowance of costs by the court, the remedy is by application for a modification of the order and not by an appeal from the taxation from the clerk in accordance with the order.[11] If it is sought to raise the question of the power of the court to award costs the proper method is by motion to strike them from the judgment, and if the power is found not to exist the judgment may be corrected by striking out the costs.[12] If a judgment for costs is void it may be set aside on motion if made in time.[13]

2. In Appellate Court — a. Right of Review — (I) Where Other Questions Than Costs Involved. Where the proper steps have been taken there is no doubt that an appellate court can review and correct errors in an award for costs if there are other questions also involved in the appeal.[14]

(II) Where No Questions Other Than Costs Involved — (A) In Equitable Actions. In courts of equity the general rule, except where changed by statute, is that an appeal does not lie for the correction of errors in respect to costs only.[15] Even though additional errors are assigned, the judgment will not against another defendant alone, and leaves open for future adjustment the costs between the other parties, it is error to subsequently charge another defendant with all the costs in the case. Williams v. Washington, 43 S. C. 355, 21 S. E. 259.

An exception to the rule has been recognized where the appeal presents a mere question of statutory regulation in respect to the allowance or denial of costs (Smith v. Donelson, 3 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 393; Crosby v. Stephan, 97 N. Y. 606. See also The City of Augusta, 80 Fed. 297, 25 C. C. So where one item included in the decree is for clerk's fees in making and certifying transcript on a former be reversed if the appeal can be sustained only on the ground of error in respect to costs.[16]

(B) In Actions at Law. In some jurisdictions appeal or error does not lie to correct a judgment merely on the ground of error in the award or refusal of costs.[17] In other jurisdictions it is held that the question of costs in legal actions and proceedings affect a substantial right and is reviewable whenever it is legitimately before the appellate court, unless the allowance of costs was discretionary.[18]

b. Methods of Obtaining Review. In equity suits the discretion of the court as to costs cannot be reviewed on motion, but only by an exception to the findings and an appeal from the judgment.[19]

c. Prerequisites of Review. To authorize a review of the action of the trial court in awarding or refusing to award costs, objection must be taken in the court below. Objections taken for the first time on appeal or error will not be considered.[20] So the party objecting to the award of costs should designate the

Where the costs incurred are trivial an appeal will not be tried on its merits for the purpose of determining the right to such costs. Thomas v. Craig, 60 Minn. 501, 62 N. W. 1133. See also State v. Horne, 119 N. C. 853, 26 S. E. 36, holding that where the subject-matter of the action has been destroyed by accident, compromise, or otherwise, the court will not try such case on the merits merely to determine which side should pay costs.

An order otherwise appealable is not the less so because it affects only costs. McGregor v. Comstock, 19 N. Y. 581.

In Alabama it has been held, without mentioning any special statutory authority, that where the successful party is improperly charged with costs, although he objected to such a judgment, the error is not a mere clerical mistake amendable on motion in the court rendering the judgment or in the supreme court at the costs of plaintiff in error, but is a ground for the reversal of the judgment. Beason v. Riddle, 11 Ala. 743.

In North Carolina where the question is whether a particular item is properly chargeable as costs (Morristown Mills Co. v. Lytle, 118 N. C. 837, 24 S. E. 530; Elliott v. Tyson, 117 N. Thus the point cannot be raised for the first time on appeal that the court erred in rendering judgment against appellant for costs (Beynon v. Brandywine, etc., Turnpike Co., 39 Ind. 129), that the judgment is against only some of the defendants for costs and not also against a co-defendant (Hill v. Smith, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 312, 25 S. W. 1079), that the court acted erroneously in respect to costs of motions made in the progress of the cause below (Churchill v. Rogers, Hard. (Ky.) 182), or that plaintiffs are debarred from recovering costs because they violated an injunction in bringing suit (Rabb v. Patterson, 42 S. C. 528, 20 S. E. 540, 46 Am. St. Rep. 743).

alleged error therein, by pointing out the items and amounts which are erroneous;[21] and a modification of a report of a referee as to the matter of costs in a case where the taxation of costs is a matter of discretion cannot be reviewed where none of the testimony before the referee is preserved in the record.[22] If a party seeks to have only such part of an order reviewed as awards costs, he must so state specifically in his notice of appeal.[23]

d. Determination. In the absence of an affirmative showing of error it will be presumed that the action of the court below with respect to costs is correct.[24] Where costs are in the discretion of the trial court the judgment in respect to costs will not ordinarily be reviewed.[25]

I. Ownership of Costs Awarded. A judgment for costs cannot be rendered in favor of any one but a party to the suit. Such a judgment cannot be rendered on motion in favor of the officers of the court.[26] In some jurisdictions a judgment for costs in favor of a party is his absolutely, whether or not he has actually advanced such costs.[27] In other jurisdictions as between the party obtaining judgment for costs and the officers of court, the latter are owners of the costs to the extent of the fees due for their services. The owner of the judgment is merely a trustee for the officers, who are the equitable and actual owners of the costs.[28] In some jurisdictions witnesses stand on the same footing as officers of

After remand by appellate court.— Where judgment has been entered in the circuit court for the damages found by the jury and costs, leaving a blank for the amount of the costs, and the cause is affirmed by the supreme court, and mandate issued in the court below, the costs are properly taxed in the court below and the amount inserted in the blank. Sizer v. Many, 16 How. (U. S.) 98, 14 L. ed. 861.

And see Pittsburg, etc., R. Co. v. Elwood, 79 Ind. 306), which as a general rule has not the power to tax costs (Bogar v. Walker, 89 Ill. App. 457; Beem v. Newaygo Cir. proceedings taken to obtain a retaxation in case of error.[36] A bill of costs taxed by the clerk has the authority of a judgment.[37]

C. Notice of Taxation — 1. Necessity. Ordinarily the statutes require notice of taxation to be served on the opposite party.[38] A judgment for costs without such notice is irregular. It is, however, subject to correction or modification by readjustment or retaxation.[39]

2. Requisites and Sufficiency — a. In General. If the statute prescribes personal service service by mail is invalid.[40] So the service will be held insufficient where the affidavit merely states that it was left "with a person then in charge" of the attorney's office, without giving his name or stating whether it was his clerk or whether the attorney himself was absent.[41] Taxation made after the day noticed has been held irregular if made without a new notice to the opposing attorney.[42]

b. By Whom Given. If the statute does not prescribe who shall give notice, it has been held that it may be given by the clerk of court.[43]

3. Time of Giving. The time of giving notice is usually a matter of statutory regulation.[44] The giving of notice before entry of judgment is a mere irregularity which does not render the notice invalid.[45]

4. Waiver of Defects. Irregularity in the notice will not be deemed waived by the appearance of defendant's counsel before the clerk, when made under protest on his part;[46] but where it appears from the record that on plaintiff's motion to set aside the taxation of costs defendants gave plaintiff notice that they consented to a retaxation at any time plaintiff might name, and offered to remit any items adjudged improper, and that plaintiff has failed to avail himself of such offer, the judgment will not be set aside on appeal for failure to give proper notice of such taxation.[47]

5. Who Entitled to Notice. A party who appears but makes no answer is entitled to notice of taxation,[48] and so is any person who is liable to pay costs,[49] although not a party to the action.[50]

D. Memorandum or Bill of Costs — 1. Necessity. Ordinarily a memorandum or bill of costs is required to be filed by the successful party;[51] and when it conforms to the requirements of the statute and is verified, it is prima facie evidence that the items specified are properly taxable, and the burden is upon the party disputing its correctness to show that it was improper.[52]

Where a defendant corporation asks to tax as costs fees and mileage of its officers summoned as witnesses in the case the affidavit the distance traveled if mileage is asked.[60] All statutory requirements,[61] such as a certificate that the witnesses were material and necessary,[62] a certificate of travel and attendance by the witness,[63] or a statement showing the residence of the witness,[64] must be observed. It need not be alleged in terms that the fees of the witnesses have been paid.[65] But if a party claims witness' fees for his attendance as a witness, his affidavit that he attended solely as a witness should be required in addition to any other proof, as no one but himself can swear positively that he was not attracted to the trial by his interest in the case.[66]

(III) Fees For Service of Process. To authorize recovery for service of subpœnas the names and number of the persons on whom the subpœnas were served should be given and the distance traveled by the officer who served them.[67]

(IV) Cost of Documents. Items for copies of documents cannot be allowed without an affidavit that they were necessarily used or obtained for use.[68]

(V) Fees of Referee. Where opposition is made on taxation of costs to the disbursements for referee's fees, the charge should be supported by an affidavit showing the number of days spent in the business of the reference and that they were so spent necessarily. The general affidavit of disbursements or a mere certificate by the referee to the number of sittings is not sufficient.[69]

verification of the disbursements,[70] showing that they were necessarily paid or incurred.[71] In some jurisdictions the attorney may make the verification.[72]

3. TIME OF FILING. The time of filing a memorandum or bill of costs is usually a matter of statutory regulation.[73] A cost bill filed before judgment is premature and will be stricken out.[74] Under the statutes of a number of jurisdictions failure to file the memorandum in the time prescribed by statute operates as a waiver of the rights to costs,[75] unless a good excuse is shown. The determination of what constitutes such excuse is within the discretion of the trial court.[76] Where a statute provides that the successful party shall file his memorandum within five days after the verdict or notice of the decision of the court, the fact that no notice of the decision is served on the successful party does not excuse him from filing his memorandum within five days after he has knowledge of the decision. Actual knowledge does away with the necessity of notice.[77] If the memorandum is pre-

It is not sufficient that the solicitor had actual knowledge of the decision, or that his clerk or representative was present at the announcement. The word "decision" as used in the statute will be construed to mean the finding of facts and conclusions of law, signed by the court and filed with the clerk as a basis of the judgment. sented to the clerk in time it will not be stricken out because the clerk without notice to the party did not file it because a former item of costs was unpaid.[78]

4. Amendment. Where the memorandum has been filed within the time limited, the court may on a proper showing allow it to be amended,[79] but such amendment will not be permitted unless mistake, inadvertence, or excusable neglect be shown.[80] If a bill of costs is filed which does not comply with the statute, and within the time allowed by law a second one is filed in proper form, costs are properly taxed under the second bill, the action of the court being equivalent to the allowance of an amendment.[81]

E. Objections to Taxation. On application for taxation the proofs presented by the applicant, although conforming with the requirements, are not conclusive, but may be opposed by proof on the part of the adverse party or person interested in reducing the amount of costs.[82] The mode of stating objections to taxation if not prescribed by statute is a matter of practice to be regulated by the court in which the objections originate.[83] Where notice of the objections must be given the opposite party, no other objections than those specified will be considered.[84]

F. Hearing and Determination — 1. Powers and Duties of Taxing Officer. The sole duty of the taxing officer in relation to the costs is to ascertain and determine which items of costs and disbursements the party presenting costs for adjustment is entitled to.[85] He has no power to decide whether any costs at all can be given,[86] and he can allow no items not claimed.[87] Whether the taxation is opposed or not he should satisfy himself that the items proposed for taxation are correct,[88] and that statutory requirements with regard to taxation are complied with;[89] and if he discovers illegal items,[90] or such as were unreasonably or unnecessarily incurred,[91] he should disallow them. He must decide questions of fact raised by conflicting affidavits.[92] If the statute require the costs of the parties to be taxed and entered on the record separately it is improper for him to enter up all the costs in one general fee bill.[93]

2. Evidence — a. In General. If items claimed are disputed the right thereto must be affirmatively shown by affidavit or otherwise to justify allowance.[94] If affidavits are presented showing that certain witnesses for whom fees were charged were not called or were not in attendance, such fees should be disallowed in the absence of proof that such witnesses were necessary or showing why they were not called.[95] In the absence of proof to the contrary the return of a constable on a subpœna is evidence of its service and of his right to fees for serving it.[96] Oral evidence has been held competent to contradict an affidavit of service of an offer of judgment, in a case where such offer is important in determining the right to costs.[97] If objection to taxation is based on the prolixity of the papers taxed, the objecting party should furnish the taxing officer with the means of deciding the question.[98]

b. Presumptions and Burden of Proof. Presumptions are in favor of the correctness of a cost bill, prepared in accordance with the statutory requirements, if not controverted,[99] except where it contains items which on their face appear to be incorrect.[1] If, however, the items are denied by affidavit, the burden of proof is on the party claiming the costs.[2] The fact that certain items appear from the taxation to be unpaid is no objection to their allowance, as it will be presumed that liability has been incurred therefor.[3]

G. Correction of Erroneous Taxation — 1. In Lower Court — a. Jurisdiction. Proceedings to retax must as a general rule be heard before the court of which the clerk who taxed the costs is an officer;[4] and it has been held that a motion for retaxation can only be entertained in open court and not by a judge at chambers or by a court commissioner.[5] If for any reason there remains an undecided question regarding costs after decision on appeal, the court by which the judgment is rendered is the court to determine it.[6]

b. Method of Obtaining Relief. The method of obtaining relief against erroneous taxation of costs is usually by motion to retax in the court where the judgment was rendered,[7] and not by appeal or error to a court of appellate jurisdiction in the first instance without having taken any step in the trial court to have the error corrected.[8] So relief against erroneous taxation cannot be had in any other action or proceeding than that in which the question of costs arose.[9] Erroneous taxation is not a ground to quash an execution,[10] to set aside a judgment in which the costs are inserted,[11] or to reverse the judgment.[12] Error in taxation of costs cannot be corrected in a proceeding by rule against the sheriff;[13] nor is an objection to confirmation of a sale decreed in the action in which the costs were awarded an appropriate remedy for correction of errors in the taxation thereof.[14] On a motion to retax the claim is not that the judgment should be reversed or modified but that the costs were improperly taxed by the clerk.[15]

c. Necessity For Motion to Retax. If a party is dissatisfied with the decision of the taxing officer upon particular items he must move for retaxation, although his adversary also moves for retaxation in respect to other items.[16] An agreement after judgment rendered to submit the question of the correctness of the taxation of costs to a judge and indorse the amount disallowed if any is for the benefit of defendant and it is for him to procure the revision.[17]

d. Notice of Motion to Retax. When a party desires a retaxation of costs he must give his adversary notice of the motion to retax.[18] A notice given immediately after the receipt of a copy of the bill of costs is in time.[19] The contents of the notice must be determined by the statutes and practice of the jurisdiction in which a retaxation is sought.[20]

e. Who Entitled to Object to Taxation. A witness who is not a party cannot appeal from a judgment or order retaxing costs,[21] and a party cannot object that

In California a notice of motion to retax costs not accompanied by affidavit specifying the grounds of objection, but stating that the items mentioned were not legally chargeable and were not necessary disbursements, is sufficient, since the statute providing for taxation of costs by the court does not specify what the notice shall contain. Senior v. Anderson, 130 Cal. 290, 62 Pac. 563.

In Massachusetts it has been held that where a party against whom costs were to be taxed notified the clerk that he desired to be present at the taxation, informing him that if any of certain items marked by him should be allowed an appeal to one of the judges would be insisted on, this was sufficient notice of his intention to appeal. a decree in his favor does not definitely fix the amount of the referee's fees, as he is not concerned in the interest of any one under the decree but himself.[22]

f. Time of Moving For Retaxation. In a number of jurisdictions it has been held that an application to retax may be made at a term subsequent to that at which judgment was rendered,[23] but in others the contrary rule obtains.[24] Where a statute requires a motion to retax to be made within ten days after judgment, and a judgment provides that costs should be taxed against defendant but left the amount blank, the motion will be in time if made within ten days after the insertion of the amount of costs.[25] It has been held too late to move for a retaxation after execution,[26] after the costs have become a part of the judgment which is affirmed on appeal,[27] or where the bill of costs was taxed by the clerk by order of the court and both parties had leave to file objections but both waived exceptions and the court confirmed the report.[28]

g. Requisites of Motion to Retax. The motion to retax must specially show in what respect the taxation is claimed to have been erroneous. It must point out the items objected to,[29] unless the items objected to are such as are not provided for by the fee bill,[30] and state the grounds of objection.[31] It has also been held that a motion made several years after judgment should state the time when the judgment was rendered and when the costs were first taxed.[32] Where there is a dispute as to what papers were used before the taxing officer, the moving party should obtain and present a certificate of the clerk showing fully what papers or records were used and should also produce to the court the original papers or certified copies thereof.[33] The notice may be oral in the absence of a statutory requirement that it be in writing.[34]

h. Grounds For Retaxation. A retaxation will not be granted except for good cause shown.[35]

i. Questions Considered. On proceedings to retax the original judgment awarding costs to the prevailing party can neither be attacked nor reviewed. The only questions that can be considered are the items or amounts to be taxed.[36] Objections to items of costs not made before the taxing officer will not be passed upon by the court,[37] except where no costs can be lawfully taxed.[38]

j. Evidence Considered. The hearing of such proceedings before the trial court is simply a revision of the case made before the taxing officer and not a trial de novo upon new objections or proofs.[39] Accordingly it has been held that no evidence other than that submitted to the taxing officer will be considered.[40] It is improper to use any other papers except so far as it may be necessary to show the action of the taxing officer,[41] or to ascertain whether there were any new facts by reason of which the court should order a readjustment before the clerk instead of correcting the error itself.[42]

k. Presumption and Burden of Proof. It will be presumed that the taxation was correct until the contrary is shown.[43] The burden is on the party objecting to show error in the taxation, unless error is apparent on the face of it.[44]

l. How Errors Corrected. In one jurisdiction it has been held that the retaxation should be made by the court. The case should not be remanded to the clerk for new action.[45] In another it has been held that where both parties have appeared at the hearing the court may direct that the taxation be set aside and that any judgment for such costs entered thereon be vacated.[46] In another it has been held that if after a cause has been referred back to the clerk for retaxation the clerk fills the blank in the judgment with the amount of costs originally taxed, the same is a nullity and may be erased and expunged from the judgment.[47] So in another it has been held that error of the clerk in entering a judgment for costs against defendant in the sum claimed in defendant's cost bill, before the determination of defendant's motion to tax costs, is cured by an order of court reducing the amount.[48]

m. Waiver of Right to Retaxation. The right to a retaxation of costs may be waived by laches.[49] The right has also been held to be waived by an appeal from the judgment,[50] by voluntary payment at the time of taking an appeal,[51] and by failure to move till after entry and satisfaction of judgment.[52] So where a refer-

Limitation of rule.— Defendant taxed costs and entered judgment without notice to plaintiff. The latter had notice of retaxation and opposed the taxation on the ground that they had not been awarded. The clerk took the matter under consideration and afterward taxed costs for defendant. Two days later plaintiff in order to be timely with his appeal, and not knowing that the clerk had awarded costs, gave notice of appeal from the judgment of nonsuit and costs. It was held that plaintiff did not thereby waive his objections to the taxation of costs. Le Roy v. Browne, 54 Hun (N. Y.) 884, 8 N. Y. Suppl. 82, 28 N. Y. St. 210.

51. Clague v. Hudgson, 16 Minn. 291.

52. Gaines v. Mensing, 64 Tex. 325. And see Burrows v. Butler, 38 Hun (N. Y.) 121, holding that where on taxation after notice an item of term fees is stricken out the moving party cannot have a retaxation in order to have the item included, that plaintiff by entering his judgment must be deemed to have accepted the decision of the clerk upon the taxation.

Where defendant moves for retaxation of costs claimed by plaintiff, agreeing to pay the damages and the costs due on retaxation, which agreement defendant accepts and the court retaxes the costs, striking out general

ence is granted on plaintiff's motion to allow the defendant the costs of the term, the latter cannot on appeal from the final taxation question the discretion of the court in disallowing such costs where he acquiesced therein until after trial.[53]

n. Waiver of Irregularities in Proceedings to Tax Costs. If sheriff's fees are not taxed in the county of the action as required by statute, and no objection is taken, it will be considered waived.[54] So where the question of the erroneous taxation of costs by the clerk is brought before the court on notice of appeal and the court on motion makes an order referring the same back to the clerk for taxation after a hearing and argument by the attorneys of the respective parties without any objection having been interposed by either party to such hearing, any irregularity in the proceeding is waived, and it cannot be objected that the matter came before the court irregularly upon mere notice of appeal to the presiding judge.[55] Where, after final judgment in the court below, there is no order for costs, no application can be made in the supreme court for such costs.[56]

o. Costs of Motion to Retax and of Opposing Application. If a party applying for retaxation does not succeed in obtaining a retaxation as to some of the items objected to, he will be charged with the costs of opposing his application;[57] but if he is successful he will ordinarily be entitled to the costs of the motion.[58] If, however, both parties are in fault, one in including improper items and the other in objecting to items properly taxed, each party will be charged with his own costs on the retaxation.[59] So where defendants having moved to retax the costs, plaintiff offered to deduct the sum claimed as excessive if defendants would withdraw their motion without costs of motion, which they refused to do, it is within the discretion of the court to deny costs of motion on deducting a smaller sum than that claimed.[60] Costs of motion for retaxation may be denied the moving party, although successful, where a part of the amount originally taxed against him was due to his own fault.[61] If a motion to retax is made after decree and costs as first taxed were paid in full and receipt given therefor, the cost of the motion cannot be included in the assessment of retaxed costs.[62]

2. In Appellate Court — a. Power of Appellate Court to Correct Errors in Taxation. An appellate court may in a proper case correct errors in the taxation of costs in the court below.[63]

b. Whether Appeal or Error Lies. In some jurisdictions it has been held that a writ of error and not an appeal is the proper proceeding to obtain a revision by items, plaintiff is bound by the agreement, and after payment of the judgment and costs less the items so struck out is not entitled to execution for such items. Bowen v. Weatherman, 2 Ida. 1184, 31 Pac. 814.

In South Carolina it is held that a statute which provides that "costs may be allowed on a motion in the discretion of the court or judge, not exceeding ten dollars" applies only to motions, and not to an appeal to the circuit judge from the decision of the clerk on the taxation of costs, in which latter case no such allowance should be made. a court of appellate jurisdiction of an erroneous taxation of costs.[64] In others it has been held that an appeal is the proper remedy.[65]

c. From What Appeal Taken. An error in respect to costs cannot be corrected on appeal from an order denying a new trial, as such error furnishes no ground for a new trial.[66] In some jurisdictions an appeal may be taken from an order made in relation to the motion to retax costs;[67] while in others this is denied and the appropriate remedy held to be to appeal from or bring error to the judgment.[68] In some jurisdictions, if the order is made before rendition and entry of final judgment, it can be reviewed only on appeal from the judgment, raising the question of the correctness of the taxation by a statement annexed to the judgment-roll.[69] If the order is made after rendition and entry of judgment an appeal lies from it.[70]

d. Prerequisites to Review and Correction in Appellate Court — (i) Presentation of Question in Lower Court. Objections based on alleged errors in the taxation of costs cannot be raised in an appellate court for the first time. To authorize a consideration of such objections they must be presented in the trial court by some appropriate method — ordinarily by a motion to retax,[71] a ruling

Signature of judge.— Illegality of taxing attorney's fees will not be determined on an appeal from the taxation where the record only contains a statement that only part of the costs allowed are witness' fees and part attorney's fees. the evidence, and the ruling on the motion.[81] It is not, however, rendered nugatory by the fact that it omits the technical statement that it contains all the evidence.[82]

e. Hearing and Determination. The appellate court will not in reviewing taxation of costs go into the merits of the case to ascertain whether judgment was given for the right party.[83] Regard will be had only to what ought not to be charged for or what is charged for at too high a rate.[84] If the nature of the questions involved in the suit is material upon the question of costs, the court may examine the evidence if the pleadings leave the nature of the questions involved in doubt.[85] The reviewing court may revise the whole taxation, deducting for the items that are too large or illegally embraced in the bill and adding whenever they are deficient. If upon the whole the amount of costs allowed is not greater than what defendant in error would have been entitled to upon a correct taxation, the judgment will not be reversed.[86]

H. Notice of Judgment Retaxing Costs. It has been held that plaintiffs in an action being constructively in court from the beginning of the action until complete satisfaction or discharge of the judgment rendered are not entitled to special notice of the judgment rendered on motion to retax.[87]

XXIII. SECURITY FOR COSTS.

A. Grounds For Requiring Security — 1. In General. In the United States the matter of requiring security for costs is one almost entirely of statutory provision and regulation.[89]

2. Non-Residence — a. As to State or County — (i) Statement of Rule. Originally in England foreigners were not required to give security for costs;[90]

but subsequently it became the settled practice to allow defendant to require security for costs where plaintiff was a foreigner, in default of which the suit was dismissed.[91] An examination of these decisions will show that they are not based on any statute or rule of court. In America also, in practically all jurisdictions, it is competent and customary to require a non-resident of the state to give security for costs, this being the usual ground for requiring security.[92] It is probably true that in most jurisdictions there is express statutory authorization for so doing, but notwithstanding this fact it may be asserted with confidence that the right to require security for costs from a non-resident suitor, whether in law or in equity, exists here as in England, without any statute or rule of court specially providing therefor; and that the statutes are merely declaratory of the common law.[93]

(II) Persons Within the Rule — (A) In General. A person will be deemed a non-resident who has no usual place of abode in the state at which process may be served,[94] or where his family is domiciled in another state, although he may have a place of business within the state;[95] and even though he may be

Person having office in New York city.— Under a statute requiring security for costs, if plaintiff resides without the state, or if the action be in the city court of New York, and he resides without the county, and a further provision making a plaintiff, who has a regular office for the transaction of business in person in the city of New York, a resident thereof, within the previous section, a non-actually within the jurisdiction,[96] or have property in the state,[97] he will be required to give security if he resides out of the state.

(B) Persons Leaving Jurisdiction After Commencement of Suit. While the rule seems to be otherwise in some jurisdictions,[98] the weight of authority is that a plaintiff who becomes a non-resident after commencement of the suit is within the rule requiring a non-resident plaintiff to give security for costs;[99] but to authorize the application of this doctrine there must be an actual removal from the jurisdiction,[1] and an intention to reside outside of it.[2]

(C) Persons Becoming Residents Pending Suit. It has been held that where a non-resident becomes a resident pending suit, the rule requiring security will be stricken out by leave of court.[3] Other decisions, however, have held that the practice requiring security from non-residents is in no way affected thereby,[4] especially where he has no property in the state and there is some doubt as to his having become a resident.[5]

(D) Where One of Several Plaintiffs Is a Resident. Where there are several plaintiffs in the action, one of whom is a resident, the rule does not apply,[6] and indeed this is true notwithstanding the fact that the resident plaintiff or plaintiffs be an insolvent person or persons.[7]

(E) Where Nominal or Use Plaintiff, or Both, Are Non-Residents. According to some decisions, security for costs may be required, although the non-resident plaintiff is merely a nominal plaintiff suing for the use of a resident, on the ground that he would be the person against whom the defendant would have to proceed for costs.[8] Other decisions hold that if the plaintiff is merely a nominal plaintiff he should not be required to give bond for costs if the use plaintiff is a resident.[9] By express statutory provision in some jurisdictions, if the beneficial plaintiff is a non-resident he must give security for costs;[10] and the same conclusion has been reached in other decisions, where no express statutory requirement to that effect was relied on or mentioned.[11] If both the nominal and use plaintiffs reside out of the state security for costs will be required.[12]

(F) Domestic and Foreign Corporations. A domestic corporation is not a non-resident within the rule, although it has no property within the state;[13] but a foreign corporation is and must give security for costs,[14] although having a place of business within the state,[15] and although it is entitled to receive a certificate to do business in the state, and is required to appoint an agent for service, on whom process may be served.[16]

A corporation is a "person" within a statute providing that the defendant may require security for costs, where in an action brought in the county court the plaintiff resides without the county. C. E. Sherin Special Agency v. Seaman, 49 N. Y. App. Div. 33, 63 N. Y. Suppl. 407.

On appeal from justice's court.— Where a statute requires a non-resident of the county to give security for costs in a justice's court, if the defendant does not ask that this be done, and the plaintiff recovers judgment, and the cause is appealed to a court in which security is only required when the plaintiff is a non-resident of the state, security for costs cannot be required in that court. "In all cases where it shall appear reasonable." — Under a statute authorizing the court to require security "in all cases where it shall appear to them reasonable," it may require security on the ground of inability to pay costs, but will not in general do so in the absence of circumstances of vexation and oppression. Feneley v. Mahoney, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 212.

"In case the court shall be satisfied" of inability to pay.— Under a statute providing that "in case the court shall be satisfied" that the plaintiff is unable to pay costs or is so unsettled as to endanger the officers in their legal demands, it may require security, the matter of requiring or refusing the security is solely in the discretion of the court. Ward v. Wilms, 16 Colo. 86, 27 Pac. 247; Knight v. Fisher, 15 Colo. 176, 25 Pac. 78; Papineau v. Belgarde, 81 Ill. 61; Clement v. Brown, 30 Ill. 43; Selby v. Hutchinson, 9 Ill. 319; Gesford v. Critzer, 7 Ill. 698. 5. CIRCUMSTANCES OF OPPRESSION AND VEXATION. Under a statute providing that the court may upon good cause shown order reasonable security for costs to be furnished, the court has authority to require security for costs where the plaintiff is pursuing his claim under circumstances of oppression or vexation.[26]

B. Who May Be Required to Give Security[27] — 1. DEFENDANTS. Under the American decisions,[28] it appears that in the absence of a statute[29] a defendant cannot be required to give security for costs in any event.[30]

2. INTERVENERS. If a third person applies and obtains leave to come in and defend or prosecute, he may be required to give security for costs;[31] and on the other hand the court, it has been held, has the inherent power to permit a person to intervene without giving security.[32] So, it has been held, under a statute which gives a person the absolute right to be brought in as defendant, security for costs cannot be required as a condition to the granting of such right.[33]

3. CORPORATIONS.[34] A statute requiring security from "persons" has been held not to require it from corporations.[35] A domestic corporation is required to give costs by a statute providing that if defendant shall at any time before answering file an affidavit stating that he has a good defense, in whole or in part, if he be a non-resident or a corporation, before any further proceedings in the case he shall give security for costs.[36] A proceeding by notice and motion by a company against a delinquent stock-holder is a suit within the statute requiring a corporation to give security for costs.[37] A statute requiring a foreign

28. There are no English cases, it seems, in which the defendant was required to give security for costs; and in one case it was held that the court would not require a non-resident defendant to give security for costs as a prerequisite of compelling the non-resident plaintiff to give defendant security for costs. Baxter v. Morgan, 2 Marsh. 80, 6 Taunt. 379, 16 Rev. Rep. 628, 1 E. C. L. 662.

29. Under a statute providing that the chancery court may when necessary require of either party sufficient security "for the costs of prosecution," the term "costs of prosecution" should be construed to apply to a defense, when it consists of affirmative counterclaims. Failure to require in a proper case.— The refusal of the circuit court to dismiss a suit commenced by a corporation without first giv-

4. Trustees in Bankruptcy. A statute authorizing the defendant to require a security for costs if the plaintiff is "the official assignee or official trustee of a debtor, or an assignee in bankruptcy, where the action is brought upon a cause of action arising before the assignment, the appointment of the trustee or the adjudication in bankruptcy" does not apply to an action brought by a trustee in bankruptcy to set aside transfers made by the bankrupt.[39]

C. Constitutionality of Statutes Requiring Security. Statutes requiring security for costs are not unconstitutional.[40]

D. Jurisdiction. Where the statutes designate the courts in which security can be required, no others than those so designated have authority to require security.[41] A judge of one court cannot make an order for security in a cause pending in another court.[42]

E. Application For Security — 1. Necessity For Application. Ordinarily it is apprehended, that an application for security for costs is necessary.[43]

2. Time of Making — a. Statement of Rule. The right of a defendant to demand security for costs may be waived by his own laches in making application therefor;[44] but the greatest lack of harmony exists among the decisions as to the ing security, as required, is available on appeal, and the cause will be remanded with directions to dismiss the suit. The Empire v. Alabama Coal Min. Co., 29 Ala. 698.

b. Limitations of Rule. Where sufficient excuse is shown for failure to make application for security within the proper time, the defendant will be entitled to an order requiring security,[50] but the burden is on him to show the facts constituting an excuse.[51]

3. Notice of Application. There is considerable diversity of holding as to the necessity of notice of application for security for costs, a part of which may perhaps be accounted for by the difference in the wording of the statutes. In some jurisdictions it is held that in cases where the right to security for costs is absolute no notice is necessary;[52] but that if it is within the court's discretion whether to require security notice is necessary;[53] and yet in another jurisdiction notice

Segal v. Cauldwell, 22 N. Y. App. Div. 95, 47 N. Y. Suppl. 839.

What is not a sufficient excuse.— An affidavit setting up that defendant filed his answer before making application for security for costs because the court was not in session for ex parte business, so that he could not secure an extension of time to answer, does not show facts relieving him from his failure to apply for security before answering, as the time to answer could be extended by any judge. has been held necessary, although there is no express requirement to that effect in the statute.[54] Where notice is expressly required, it is erroneous to make an order requiring security for costs without giving notice;[55] but if the order is complied with and no delay is occasioned it furnishes no ground for new trial[56] Notice to the plaintiff's attorney at law has been held sufficient.[57]

4. What the Application Must Show. An application for security should show the existence of the grounds for requiring it.[58] If there is any apparent delay in making the application, it should show when the existence of the grounds for security was brought to defendant's knowledge, that the court may determine whether he has used due diligence in making his application.[59] If a statute or rule of court requires an affidavit that there is a meritorious defense, or something equivalent thereto, this should be given,[60] but not otherwise.[61]

That plaintiff is unable to pay costs.— The affidavit of defendant that he is acquainted with plaintiff's financial condition, and that to the best of his knowledge and belief plaintiff is unable to pay the costs likely to accrue in the action, is sufficient, under a statute providing that defendant may file a motion to ask the court to dismiss the action or rule the plaintiff to give security on an affidavit that "the plaintiff is insolvent, or is not able to pay the costs likely to accrue in said case." Marsh v. Kinna, 2 Mont. 547.

That defendant is a non-resident.— An affidavit stating that defendant's attorney is informed by H, a personal friend of plaintiff, that plaintiff is a non-resident, but that H refuses to make affidavit thereto, makes out a prima facie case of non-residence. Mitchell v. Dick, 8 Misc. (N. Y.) 98, 28 N. Y. Suppl. 1003, 60 N. Y. St. 161. If defendant states positively that plaintiff is a non-resident, and that defendant has only recently learned such fact, this is sufficient, without stating the source of knowledge. Covering whole claim.— Under the rules of the court of one state the affidavit must be to the whole claim. Heller v. Dreifuss, 34 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 83. Under the statutes of another, an affidavit that the party has a good defense, in whole or in part, is sufficient. See D. M. V. Live Stock Ins. Co. v. Henderson, 38 Iowa 446.

How defense stated.— According to some decisions it is sufficient to allege generally that the defendant has a good defense, without setting out the facts constituting it. D. M. V. Live Stock Ins. Co. v. Henderson, 38 Iowa 446; Sheridan v. Cassidy, 1 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 134. In another (construing a statute expressly requiring it) the facts constituting the defense must be stated. Fidelity Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Simmons, 1 Pennew. (Del.) 474, 42 Atl. 367. And other decisions, without expressly so holding, seem to show that the facts constituting the defense should be stated. to overcome a prima facie case made by a party moving for a dismissal, if security be not given.[62] A motion for security based on non-residence should be denied where in the proceedings plaintiff is set up as a resident, and in all the papers it does not appear that he is not a resident.[63]

F. Order For Security. Before a party can be put in default and the cause dismissed for failure to file security for costs, there must be an order requiring security;[64] and it should be sufficiently clear and certain to apprise the party of what is required of him. If in substantial compliance with the statute or rule of court under which it is made it will be sufficient;[65] but a substantial compliance at least is necessary.[66] An order is not defeated or impaired by transfer of the cause of action and motion to substitute the transferee in plaintiff's stead, pending application for the order.[67] And it has been held that where a court has the power to require security independent of statute, a change in the situation of the parties, by repeal of a statute or modification thereof, cannot be urged as a reason for vacating the order in another court, to which the cause has been transferred.[68] Notice of an order should in general be given to the party affected thereby.[69] The successor of a judge who made an order for security cannot review or modify it after the time limited for compliance therewith has expired.[70] The order is Aider of defective order.— A note made by the judge on his docket, stating that the plaintiff is shown to be a non-resident, and that he give security for costs before the next term, or the cause be dismissed, is merely directory to the clerk, and from it he may complete his minutes, and it is not in itself a notice to the defendant of a requirement of security; but if the entry is perfected by being transferred to the minutes of the court in proper form it is a sufficient compliance with the statute. Claiborne v. Harris, 11 Ala. 647.

Waiver of irregularity.— Where it is merely customary and not required by statute that an order for security be in the alternative to file security within a designated time or show cause why it should not be required, irregularity, if any, in an order merely directing the giving of security, is waived if motion to set aside is not made. reviewable on appeal from a judgment dismissing the action for non-compliance therewith.[71]

G. Form and Requisites of Security — 1. In General. Numerous kinds of security for costs, such as bonds, undertakings, recognizances, indorsements, and deposits of money in court, are in use in the different jurisdictions, one or more of which will be accepted as security in each jurisdiction, according as the statute may provide. The form of security required is usually a matter of statutory regulation; but in the absence of such statute a bond will be sufficient,[72] and so will a deposit;[73] but there should be either a deposit or some enforceable obligation.[74] If the statute designates the security and provides that no other shall be regarded as sufficient the kind designated must be given.[75]

2. Bonds[76] — a. In General. If the form is prescribed by statute[77] it need not be in the precise words or form given. A bond in substantial compliance will be sufficient.[78]

b. Contents. The bond should contain the names of the parties to the suit,[79] unless indorsed on the back of the summons;[80] but it need not state the kind of action[81] or designate the obligee, unless the statute so requires.[82] It should expressly bind the executors and administrators.[83] It will be defective if the penalty named therein is for a less amount than required by statute;[84] but a larger penalty than designated by statute cannot be required.[85] In designating the costs intended to be secured, it should be as broad as the statute, and include all costs intended to be covered thereby.[86]

Instances of bond held sufficiently broad. — A bond for "the payment to defendant, the several officers of the court, and all others interested, of all costs which may be awarded to be paid" is a sufficient compliance with a statute requiring a bond "to pay, or cause to be paid, all the costs which may accrue in such action." Baggs v. Lanning, 1 Mo. 261.

c. Execution. In the absence of statute requiring it, the plaintiff himself need not join in the execution of the bond.[87] As regards the manner of execution it will be sufficient if the bond is subscribed by the obligors, although their names do not appear in the body of the obligation;[88] and a firm may sign a bond in the partnership name.[89] The bond must be sealed in the absence of statute dispensing with a seal;[90] but it need not be marked filed as of any term.[91]

d. Number Required. More than one bond can be required from a non-resident plaintiff as security for costs, although there are several defendants appearing separately.[92]

e. Amendment. Where a statute requires the giving of a bond before commencement of suit, it has been held that if the bond so given is defective it cannot be amended after suit brought.[93]

3. UNDERTAKINGS.[94] An undertaking, although not in compliance with the statute, will nevertheless be enforceable if good as a common-law obligation.[95] If the statute requires the signature of the surety to be witnessed by the clerk it will be bad unless so witnessed.[96] And the undertaking should likewise be approved by the clerk, if this is required by statute.[97]

4. RECOGNIZANCES.[98] A recognizance is good, although the party to whom bound is not named, if the parties to the suit are named and the person executing it agrees to be the security for costs.[99] A recognizance conditioned to pay any judgment the court may render in a case is not objectionable for containing no penalty.[1] A recognizance showing by the caption that it was taken in the proper county sufficiently shows that fact.[2] A recognizance if in substantial compliance with the statute is sufficient.[3]

5. INDORSEMENTS. It has been held in one state that an attorney having authority to commence suit is authorized to place the name of the plaintiff upon the writ as indorser;[4] in another, that he may do so if authorized in writing;[5] and in another, that he must have special authority in writing before he can indorse the name of a third person as security on a complaint.[6] It is insufficient to indorse the writ with the initials of the party. The surname should at least be given;[7] but the surname[8] or the surname and initials have been held sufficient.[9] So there being no statutory provision as to the form of the indorsement, an indorsement as follows has been held sufficient: "From the office of," and under these words the signature of the attorney.[10] The indorsement of a writ by a partnership in the partnership name is good.[11] If one of the plaintiffs is a nonresident and the other is not, an indorsement is sufficient if made by any party and in any form which would render it sufficient if both plaintiffs were citizens of the state.[12] Where the court orders a new indorsement of a writ in an action originally commenced in the common pleas, an indorsement on an office copy of an original writ filed in the supreme court is sufficient to bind the indorser without any indorsement of the original writ in the court below.[13]

6. DEPOSITS. If the kind of security is not designated by statute[14] a deposit of money may be given by way of security.[15] If a deposit is given as security the money should be deposited with the clerk,[16] and it has been held that it cannot be withdrawn before expiration of the time within which an appeal may be taken from the judgment for plaintiff.[17] A deposit made as security cannot be

Rep. 80; Edwards v. Middleton, 28 Tex. Civ. App. 316, 66 S. W. 570. But see Fenet v. Wilson, 3 Hill (S. appropriated to payment of costs awarded against plaintiff in a former action.[18] Where an order has been made for a deposit, the question whether the plaintiff has defaulted must be judicially determined before final judgment dismissing the action can be rendered.[19]

7. Qualification and Sufficiency of Sureties and Indorsers. The plaintiff's attorney may act as his surety,[20] unless prohibited by statute;[21] and a statute requiring "recognizance of some person other than the plaintiff" does not prevent the next friend from recognizing for the costs of an infant's suit.[22] A person non compos mentis cannot act as indorser of a writ for himself or another.[23] If required by statute the sureties should be residents of the county where suit is brought,[24] but not otherwise.[25] A statute requiring a "responsible person" as indorser means a person able to pay costs for which he may become liable.[26] Where objection to the qualification of sureties is made the burden is on the party giving the security to show its sufficiency.[27]

8. Number of Sureties Required. One surety is sufficient in a bond for costs, in the absence of statute providing to the contrary.[28]

9. Justification of Sureties. Justification of sureties for costs is unnecessary, unless they are excepted to.[29] Where justification is demanded and a bond in a designated penalty is required, each surety, it has been held, should justify in double the amount.[30]

H. Time of Giving Security — 1. Under Statutes Requiring Security Before Commencement of Suit — a. Where Indorsement of Writ or Petition Required. The statutes of some jurisdictions require an indorsement of the writ before service or of the petition before filing, by some responsible person as security for costs. Some courts hold that there is no discretionary power to permit this to be done at any subsequent period.[31] The majority of decisions, however, maintain the contrary view, and hold that it is not too late to give such security after service and return of the writ.[32]

b. Where Bond or Undertaking Required. In many jurisdictions statutes require bonds or undertakings to be filed before commencing suit, and some of these statutes provide that the cause may be dismissed on motion for non-compliance therewith, while others provide in effect that the cause may be dismissed on motion if the plaintiff fail to comply with an order thereafter made to give security within the time prescribed by order. Under some statutes it has been held that the defendant should never be permitted to file a bond after commencement of the action if motion to dismiss is made,[33] while the contrary conclusion has been reached under provisions nearly identical.[34] Under other provisions it has been held that plaintiff may be permitted to file bond after motion is made to dismiss for failure to give security at commencement of suit.[35] Again it has been held sufficient if bond be filed at any time before trial,[36] after verdict,[37] or at any time before trial, unless pleaded in abatement.[38] In one decision it has been held that security may be filed subsequent to the commencement of the suit without leave of court.[39]

2. Under Rule or Order Requiring Security. Where the plaintiff fails to comply with a rule or order requiring him to give security within a certain time, the court may permit him to file it after expiration thereof.[40] Some decisions hold

It has accordingly been held in one case that security may be filed before motion to set aside the writ is granted (Parks v. Goodwin, 1 Dougl. that the matter rests entirely in the discretion of the trial judge, and that his refusal to permit security to be given after the expiration of the time named in the order should not be reviewed;[41] but the undoubted weight of authority is that the penalty of dismissal should not be visited on the plaintiff merely for failure to file security within the designated time.[42] It has accordingly been held in some jurisdictions that security offered at any time before dismissal should be received;[43] in others, that security tendered before motion to dismiss, although after the expiration of the time allowed, should be received;[44] or that security may be given at any time before trial.[45] The removal of the cause from one court to another does not make any change in the time within which the plaintiff is required to obey a rule for security.[46]

3. How Time Computed. If a party is ordered to file a bond for costs on or before a certain day, he has the whole of the day named to comply with the order.[47] An order allowing certain days wherein to file security for costs means calendar days and not days of the term of court.[48]

2. OBJECTION FOR FAILURE TO FILE — a. Necessity For. Nevertheless the right to require security for costs may be waived[50] by failure to make the proper objection to plaintiff's failure to file security or by not making such objection in time.[51]

b. Time of Making. The decisions are not harmonious on this question, where the failure complained of is a non-compliance with the statute requiring security to be given at the time of commencing suit. Thus in one state it has been held that the objection should be plea in abatement at the return-term.[52] In other jurisdictions it has been held that the objection should be interposed at the earliest possible moment[53] or before taking any other steps in the cause.[54]

c. Methods of Raising. Where the statute prescribes the method by which the defendant may take advantage of the plaintiff's failure to give security for costs this method should be followed.[55] The most usual method is by motion to dismiss;[56] but in some jurisdictions the failure may be availed of by plea in abatement,[57] and in others by motion to stay proceedings.[58] Such failure, however, cannot be availed of by answer,[59] demurrer,[60] or by objection to admission of evidence.[61] If the ground for a motion is the failure of a non-resident plaintiff to give security, as required by statute, before commencing suit, the motion should be supported by affidavit, verifying the facts necessary to sustain the motion.[62]

Distinction between plea in abatement and motion to dismiss.— Under the statutes of some jurisdictions, where both remedies exist, the results of plea in abatement and a motion to dismiss differ in this respect, where the defendant moves to dismiss for failure to give security, the security may be given afterward, but not so when the matter is pleaded in abatement. So it has been held that an affidavit for dismissal for want of security for costs in an action by one for the use of another is fatally defective if it fails to aver the irresponsibility and non-residence of the use plaintiff. d. Notice of. If notice of the motion is required by statute, it should be given.[63]

3. Review of Order Dismissing Suit. Ordinarily the discretion of the court in dismissing a suit for failure to give security for costs will not be interfered with by the appellate court,[64] but where there has been a clear abuse of this discretion the appellate court will reverse.[65] It has been held that where a cause has been dismissed for want of security, the reasons for granting the motion should appear on the record,[66] that it may be seen that the case is within the statute.[67]

4. Proceedings to Compel Court to Dismiss Suit. Mandamus is the proper remedy to compel dismissal of a suit for want of security for costs.[68]

5. Reinstatement of Cause. The courts have power on good cause shown to reinstate a cause dismissed for failure to give security for costs;[69] but such action on the part of the court seems to be largely a matter of discretion,[70] and should not be exercised if there is any unnecessary delay in making the application.[71]

6. Effect on Judgment or Order of Failure to Give Security. The fact that security for costs was not given when required by statute or order of court does not invalidate the judgment;[72] nor does it affect an order made in the cause appointing a receiver to take charge of the property in controversy.[73]

J. Defective Security and Proceedings Thereon. No one can object that security given is defective who is not directly interested in the costs intended to be secured thereby.[74] The objection that the security given is defective may be taken by motion for additional security[75] or by motion to dismiss.[76] It has been held that where the security required is an indorsement of the writ, an objection to its sufficiency should be made at the first term;[77] and where the security is a bond it was said that the objection should be made at the earliest possible moment.[78]

Reason for rule.— An appeal is obviously an inadequate remedy, because the citizen is forced into litigation with a non-resident pending the further continuance of the suit and the appeal indemnity against the costs, which is the evil the statute intends to avoid. So it was held that a motion for nonsuit, on the ground that the prosecution bond was improperly executed, should be denied where plaintiff offered to perfect the bond.[79]

K. Additional Security — 1. Right of Plaintiff to Give. If there has been an attempt to comply with the law by giving security, but it is for any reason defective, the cause should not be dismissed, without giving the party an opportunity to give additional and sufficient security.[80]

2. Power to Require. In all cases where security may be required in the first instance, whether by virtue of some statutory provision or because considered to exist at common law, the court has power in a proper case, according to the weight of authority, to require additional security,[81] and in some jurisdictions special provision is made by statute for requiring additional security in certain cases.[82]

3. Under What Circumstances Required. To authorize an order requiring new security, it is essential that there shall have been a change in the circumstances of the case, of the parties, or of the sureties. The mere fact that the security was insufficient when taken will not authorize an order requiring new security.[83] It has been held a sufficient ground that the amount specified is insufficient[84] or that the surety dies pending suit,[85] becomes unable to pay costs,[86] or becomes insolvent.[87] So it has been held that where a writ which has been indorsed for Amendment of bond.— Where there is an error in the cost bond filed by a non-resident in the name of the obligee, the court may permit the obligor to amend the bond by inserting defendant's true name. Mandel v. Peet, 18 Ark. 236.

Amendment of recognizance.— Where no sum is mentioned in the minutes of a recognizance upon a writ, or where the name of the person recognized is omitted, the court has no power to amend the defect. But in a case where the sum in which the surety was bound was omitted in the minutes of the recognizance and the defendant pleaded the defect in abatement, and the court allowed an amendment, without rendering judgment on the plea, the defendant by not filing exceptions will be held to acquiesce in the amendment. Peck v. Smith, 3 Vt. 265.

H. 81, where it was held, under a statute requiring original writs to be indorsed "by the plaintiff, his agent, or attorney, being an inhabitant of the State; if the plaintiff is not an inhabitant of this State, by some responsible person who is an inhabitant," that the indorsement of a non-resident plaintiff, costs is lost and a new one filed the court may in its discretion require the new writ to be indorsed;[88] and that a new bond may be substituted for the original one, in order to render the original surety competent to justify.[89] A new bond will not be ordered because made payable to the officers of the court instead of to defendant, where the bond as executed is in strict conformity with the statute.[90] And where the plaintiff makes a deposit for security instead of giving an undertaking, as he is permitted to do by statute, he cannot be required to give any further security whatever under any circumstances;[91] and this is especially true where a statute provides that "it shall be in lien of all security for costs."[92]

4. Application For. The time of applying for additional security must depend largely on the circumstances of the particular case in which it is asked.[93] The application must show that new facts have arisen since the security was given, making additional security necessary;[94] and notice should be given to plaintiff.[95]

5. Review of Order Requiring or Refusing. An order requiring additional security for costs is largely a matter of discretion with the trial court and is not reviewable;[96] but the appellate court will nevertheless reverse an order granted on an insufficient affidavit.[97] If the trial court abuses its discretion in refusing to require additional security for costs the judgment rendered in plaintiff's favor will not be reversed therefor, as it is no longer of any importance that security should have been given.[98]

L. Vacation of Order For Security. The court requiring security for costs has the power to set aside the order;[99] but it has been held that a succeed-or that of his agent or attorney, is sufficient, without reference to their responsibility, and a new indorsement will not be ordered, although the indorser cannot answer for costs.

A statute providing that new security may be required "at any stage of the cause" does not apply to the retaking of a partnership account after modification of a final decree on appeal and remand. Paul v. Hill, 3 Tenn. Ch. 342.

Under a statute providing for additional security "at any time," it has been held that the application is in time if made at any time before judgment (Reck v. Phœnix Ins. Co., 18 N. Y. Wkly. 99. Moore v. Merritt, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 482.

Grounds to set aside.— Where an order to furnish new security is absolute, instead of giving the plaintiff the option to give new security or justify the old security, a party

ing judge[1] will not hear evidence to rescind his predecessor's order for security in cases of extreme hardship or gross fraud.[2] If an order for costs is dismissed at the instance of the party at whose request it was granted before the time has expired for compliance therewith, the cause should not be stricken from the docket because of such non-compliance.[3]

M. Liability of Surety or Indorser — 1. Basis of Liability. Ordinarily the surety or indorser is not liable for costs where the plaintiff is successful;[4] but the fact that the plaintiff is successful on the trial will not exonerate the surety from liability for costs, where the judgment in his favor is reversed.[5] Whether a person voluntarily becoming security in a case where security is not required by law can be held liable for costs is a question which has been ruled both ways.[6] A nonsuit renders the surety liable.[7]

2. Accrual of Liability. It has been held that liability does not accrue until rendition and entry of judgment for costs, and the statute of limitations does not begin to run until that date;[8] but where the form of security given is indorsement of the writ, it seems that liability is incurred at the time of indorsement.[9]

3. Extent of Liability[10] — a. For Costs Made in Trial Court. The amount and items of costs which may be recovered on the bond against the surety depend very largely on the wording of the bond and the statute under which it is given.[11]

But in a court of equity the chancellor may award costs against either party without regard to the result of the suit, and a surety is subject to the exercise of that power, whether his principal succeeds or not (Carren v. Breed, 2 Coldw. (Tenn.) 465); and although the bond provides that the complainant shall successfully prosecute the suit or pay all costs incident on failure thereof, the surety may be held liable for the costs, although his principal succeeds in the suit, if the costs are taxed to his principal (Allison v. Stephens, 2 Head (Tenn.) 251). Where a writ is indorsed before the enactment of a statute, lengthening the time within which action shall be commenced, but providing that the provisions therein contained are not to extend to any liability incurred before its passage, such statute has no application to the liability of such indorser. Oliver v. Blake, 24 Me. 353; Thomas v. Washburn, 24 Me. 228.

10. Joint liability.— Where persons sign their names to the following, "We acknowledge ourselves as security for the costs in this case," the contract is joint only, and not joint and several. Boswell v. Morton, 20 Ala. 235.

11. Effect of stipulation to which surety is not party.— Items of cost for which the surety is not ordinarily liable are not recoverable against him on a stipulation between the parties, to which he was not a party, that such items should be taxable as costs. Schawacker v. McLaughlin, (Mo. 1897) 40 S. W. 935.

State tax on litigation is not an item of costs and not included in the bond. In re State Tax Cases, 12 Lea (Tenn.) 744.

Ordinarily the bond only includes costs made by the defendant himself,[12] and not those made by the plaintiff;[13] but the surety may bind himself to pay all costs made in the cause of whatever nature, and he has been held so liable on some bonds.[14] If a designated amount is named in the bond, the amount recoverable of the surety is limited thereby.[15] If a cause is removed from a state to a federal court the indorsement covers costs made in both courts.[16] On removal of plaintiff pending suit the bond given should include costs that had accrued before removal.[17]

b. For Costs Made on Appeal, Etc. There is some diversity of opinion, due to some extent to the wording of the statutes, as to whether costs of appeal are items recoverable against a surety and indorser. In a considerable number of cases it has been held that costs made on appeal to an intermediate court are taxable.[18] So in others it has been held that costs made on appeal to the court of last resort are also recoverable against the surety or indorser;[19] but the contrary has been Nominal plaintiff.— A statute making the indorser of a writ liable for defendant's costs, in case of plaintiff's avoidance or inability to pay them, applies to an action brought by a nominal plaintiff for the benefit of a third person. Skillings v. Boyd, 10 Me. 43.

Application of sum provided for in bond to payment of plaintiff's witnesses.— The plaintiff's security for costs cannot by his own act apply the sum for which he is liable for the benefit of the plaintiff by paying his witnesses. The defendant has a right to such sum for his own witnesses and other costs, after satisfaction of the costs of the officers of the court. Locke v. McFalls, 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 674.

Bond making liable for costs made by defendant and plaintiff's witness' fees.— Under a statute providing that the surety shall be bound for the payment of all costs adjudged against the plaintiff and for the costs of the plaintiff's witnesses, whether the plaintiff obtain judgment or not, the extent of the surety's liability is for the costs which the defendant may recover against the plaintiff and for the costs of the latter's own witnesses, without regard to the character of the judgment rendered. held in numerous other cases.[20] So the costs accruing on a writ of certiorari[21] or on a writ of review[22] are not recoverable against a surety or indorser, being independent and original proceedings.

4. STEPS NECESSARY TO FIX LIABILITY. The plaintiff may recover costs from the surety without first paying them himself.[23] If the bond is conditioned that the plaintiff will pay on demand the costs awarded against him, such demand is necessary to render the surety liable.[24] There is some difference in the holdings as to the necessity of exhausting the remedy against a plaintiff in order to fix the liability of the surety. In a number of cases it is held that the surety is immediately liable on recovery of judgment for costs against his principal, and that proceedings to recover from him may be instituted without suing out execution on the judgment.[25] In others, however, an exhaustion of remedies against the principal is held necessary to fix the surety's liability,[26] and reasonable diligence must be used.[27] For this purpose it has been held that the execution should be sued out within a year from the time the judgment was rendered,[28] and that the return should show the inability or avoidance of the original plaintiff.[29] A return of non est investus made and dated before the return-day does not render the indorser liable;[30] and if the execution is delivered to an officer after the court has adjourned on the return-day, his return of non est investus will not charge the indorser.[31]

5. RELEASE. A court cannot release a surety for costs without the consent of the party for whose benefit he became surety.[32] So it has been held that the all costs that might be awarded to defendant").

surety is not released by a transfer of the cause by consent of the parties from a county court to a circuit court;[33] by the permanent removal of the plaintiff from the state pending suit;[34] by the mere changing of the issues in the pleadings;[35] by the death of the plaintiff during suit and the insolvency of his estate;[36] by moving for new security;[37] or by the giving of an additional bond.[38] So a surety is not released from the payment of costs already accrued by the plaintiffs taking the pauper oath,[39] or for costs thereafter accruing, where no motion is made for release.[40] Partial payment on a judgment does not entitle the sureties to pro rata abatement of their liability.[41] So on the death of a surety his estate is bound for costs accruing both before and after his death.[42] On the other hand the following facts are held sufficient to discharge the surety: Dismissal of the action;[43] the substitution of a new party plaintiff in lieu of the original one;[44] a submission to arbitration of the subject-matter of the suit.[45] So where plaintiff obtains judgment for a certain sum and costs, although the case is retained for future disposition of a counter-claim therein, and the claim is compromised and an agreement made that plaintiff pay costs, the surety is not liable therefor.[46]

6. Enforcement — a. By Summary Proceedings.[47] Some courts take the view that a surety by binding himself to pay the costs becomes a party to the record, and is as effectually bound by the judgment of the court as if he was a party to the suit,[48] and under some statutes or rules of court, judgment may be rendered against the surety or execution issued against him immediately on rendition of the judgment against the plaintiff.[49] So some statutes or rules of court expressly authorize the summary enforcement of the surety's liability by rule or motion in the original cause.[50] A motion or rule is necessary where this method of enforcement is prescribed by statute.[51] Some decisions hold that no notice of the motion is necessary;[52] but it should of course be given when expressly required by statute.[53] The motion should be made before the costs are taxed.[54] It has been said that on the motion every fact should appear of record necessary to insure a recovery,[55] that nothing will be taken by intendment.[56]

b. By Action on Bond — (I) Where Action Brought. It does not seem to be necessary to sue the surety in the court where the suit was brought.[57]

58. Higley v. Robinson, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 482.

(III) PARTIES. The proper parties to sue in an action on a bond depends largely on the form of the bond. If the bond is merely to pay the costs of the suit, no obligee being named, the defendant is entitled to sue thereon in his own name;[59] if made payable to one of defendants, suit must be brought in the name of the one designated for the benefit of the others;[60] if given to defendant and "all the officers" of a designated court,[61] or to defendant and the "clerk and marshal,"[62] it has been held that they should join with the defendant, and in their proper names, not in their official characters, as described in the bond. Where the defendant is made obligee in the bond, it has been held that the bond should be put in suit in his name only, for the benefit of all others entitled to fees or costs.[63] Where the bond is made payable to the officers of the court, one of them may sue thereon (the other refusing to join him) without making witnesses entitled to fees parties plaintiff.[64]

(IV) DECLARATION.[65] The petition, declaration, or complaint in an action on a bond for costs must show to whom the promise was made,[66] and allege the breach.[67] It should show that the plaintiff is liable for or has paid costs,[68] state the amount thereof,[69] and state that he has had judgment for them.[70]

(V) PLEAS AND DEFENSES. In an action on a bond it cannot be set up in defense that errors were made in the amount of costs taxed.[71] It is likewise no defense that the bond had not been approved.[72] An answer alleging that defendant had no knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to whether any costs had been adjudged to plaintiff has been held to set up a good defense.[73] The fact that the law, under which a suit in which costs were awarded is brought, was repealed pending the appeal of the action is a legal defense to the surety's liability for costs, which must be set up in an action to enforce such liability, and is not a ground for enjoining a judgment on the bond.[74] A plea of nul tiel record puts in issue only the existence of the record, and not the truth of its statement.[75]

show that liability for costs has accrued.[76] To show delivery of the bond evidence is admissible that the justice stated that it had been filed.[77] Where the amount of costs has been proved by competent evidence, which is uncontradicted, admission of incompetent evidence to show the amount is harmless error.[78]

(VII) JUDGMENT. Where a statute provides for issuance of execution jointly against the principal and surety, which is first to be collected out of the principal if it can be so made, and if not then out of the surety, the judgment is defective, when it omits to provide that the execution shall be first made out of the principal, and if this cannot be done then out of the surety.[79]

c. By Scire Facias[80] — (I) RIGHT TO MAINTAIN. A bond for costs is so far a record that it may be enforced by scire facias,[81] and in the absence of a statute providing some other remedy it is the proper,[82] and perhaps the only, remedy for enforcing the liability of an indorser of a writ for costs.[83]

(II) WHERE BROUGHT. Scire facias against the indorser of a writ to recover the costs of the original suit is local, and must be brought in the county and in the court where the record of the judgment in the suit in which costs were awarded remained.[84]

(III) ALLEGATIONS.[85] If the scire facias be on a bond, it should be described with particularity;[86] if on an indorsement of a writ it should be alleged that the writ was indorsed in the manner required by statute,[87] that the judgment was unsatisfied,[88] or that the principal was unable to pay costs.[89] It is not necessary to allege that the judgment against plaintiff in the original writ has not been reversed;[90] nor that on the avoidance of the plaintiff the indorser became liable, as such fact will be presumed as a matter of law.[91]

(IV) PLEAS AND DEFENSES. It is no defense for an indorser that a set-off was pleaded in the original action;[92] nor can he set up as a defense that there ought not to have been judgment against defendant in the original action,[93] or that there was irregularity in obtaining the judgment against his principal.[94] So under statutes which make the indorser liable without any issuance of execution against the principal debtor, it is no defense that insufficient efforts were made to collect the costs from the principal;[95] otherwise, under statutes where due diligence must be used to collect from the principal, in order to charge the indorser with liability.[96] If the scire facias is on a bond for costs, the execution can only be put in issue by non est factum, and not by nul tiel record.[97]

Sufficiency of allegations of indorsement.— It is not necessary to allege that the writ was indorsed before service, the allegation that it was indorsed importing an indorsement before service; or that the defendant in the scire facias indorsed as agent or attorney, because the statute having required that the original writ should be indorsed by the plaintiff, or by some agent or attorney, whoever indorsed, not being the plaintiff, is presumed to indorse as agent or attorney (McGee v. Barber, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 212); and neither should it be alleged that the writ was indorsed on the back thereof, as the word "Indorsed" imparts this fact (Hartwell v. Hemmenway, 7 Pick. (Mass.) 117).

(v) Evidence. Whether the principal has or has not avoided is a matter of record, arising from the return upon the execution, and if non est inventus be returned, this is conclusive evidence of the avoidance.[98] So a return showing that no property of the judgment debtor is to be found within the precinct of the officer executing the process is conclusive of that fact, but not of the inability of the judgment debtor, because the debtor may have property in other precincts.[99] And it has been held in accordance with these views that parol evidence is admissible, on the one side, and on the other, to show the ability or inability of the execution debtor, provided the same be not inconsistent with the return.[1] Arrest and release, under the poor debtors' act, on giving bond, is not prima facie evidence of inability, as the giving of bond may be only the means of extending time of payment.[2]

d. By Actions of Assumpsit and Case.[3] In one state it has been held that in the absence of any statute specially authorizing it an action of assumpsit will lie to enforce the liability of an indorser of an original writ for costs;[4] and in another, where scire facias was formerly considered the only remedy, an action on the case is now expressly authorized by statute.[5] Where the declaration in describing the suit in which defendant had become surety omitted the name of one of the defendants therein other than the declarant, this was held an immaterial variance.[6] The docket entry, together with an extended record of the original action, although stating that the defendant indorsed the writ, is not sufficient evidence of that fact. This must be determined by inspection of the writ itself, if it be found.[7] The return of the proper officer of an execution for costs that he has demanded payment from the indorser who neglected to pay the same, or to show personal property sufficient to satisfy the same, is by statute made conclusive evidence of the liability of the indorser.[8]

7. Right to Counter-Security. If in any case a surety is entitled to dismissal of a suit for failure of plaintiff to give him counter-security, the circumstances must be extraordinary, involving fraud or imposition, or the like.[9]

8. Right of Appeal. Although a surety on a prosecution bond is not a party in an action, yet, when he is made a party to the proceeding to tax the costs, he may appeal from an order allowing a motion to retax.[10]

XXIV. SUITS IN FORMA PAUPERIS.

A. Source and Grounds of Right to Sue. In the absence of special statutory authorization no one is entitled to sue as a poor person;[11] but when so authorized plaintiff may sue in forma pauperis if it appear that without such permission he will be unable to prosecute the action, and that he has a reasonably good chance to succeed.[12]

B. In What Actions Right Granted. The right to sue as a poor person extends both to actions at law and to suits in equity.[13]

C. To What Persons Right Granted. Unless the statutes restrict the right to residents, non-residents of the state may in a proper case sue in forma pauperis,[14] although a statute requires security from non-residents;[15] and it has been held that infants[16] and persons becoming insolvent after suit brought may have the benefit of the statute;[17] but one of several co-plaintiffs cannot sue as a poor person.[18]

D. Effect of Failure to Pay Costs of Former Suit. Liability for costs in a former action is not a ground for a refusal to permit plaintiff to prosecute a second action against the same defendant as a poor person, where it is so provided by statute,[19] or even in the absence of statute, unless the plaintiff's conduct appear to have been vexatious.[20]

E. Effect of Hiring Attorney on Contingent Fee. According to the weight of authority, if an attorney takes a cause on a contingent fee, the party will not be permitted to sue in forma pauperis.[21] Under such circumstances the attorney should be required to give security.[22]

F. Application For Leave to Sue — 1. Time of Making. Application for leave to sue in forma pauperis must be seasonably made, or it will be denied.[23] Under the English statutes the application to sue in forma pauperis in actions at law should be made at the commencement of the action and not afterward; but it has been said that the rule is otherwise in equity, where costs are discretionary.[24] In most of the states the statutes differ widely from the English statutes, and the rule under the latter furnishes no guidance for determining the time of application. In a number of jurisdictions the application may be made even after an order has been made or rule entered requiring security for costs;[25] and in another it has been held that the application may be made either before trial or at any stage of the trial.[26] It has been held too late to move after judgment,[27] or three years after issue joined, no excuse being shown for the delay.[28]

2. NOTICE. In one state it has been held that if an application is made after the defendant has appeared notice thereof is necessary;[29] but in another, where application may be made at any stage of the trial, notice is not necessary, a statute providing that notice of a motion made during trial shall not be required.[30]

3. REQUISITES. The application if in the form prescribed by statute will be sufficient.[31] Usually it is required to state the inability of the plaintiff to prosecute the action, unless permitted to sue in forma pauperis, and that the plaintiff has a reasonably good cause of action;[32] and the facts constituting the cause of action should be stated so that the court may decide upon its merits.[33] If the statute requires the application to state that applicant's attorney will prosecute without compensation, the application will be fatally defective if it fails to so state.[34]

4. HEARING AND DETERMINATION. Ordinarily the granting of leave to sue in forma pauperis is largely a matter of discretion with the court,[35] and leave should not be granted unless a clear case is made for its exercise.[36] In other words the grounds for granting the application must be clearly shown.[37] According to some decisions, where the affidavit is in compliance with the statute, a party is entitled to have the application granted unless it is contested;[38] but other decisions hold that in any event before leave will be granted there must be some kind of showing made to the court in support of the affidavit;[39] that before leave will be granted on presentation of the affidavit, the court may inquire into the facts and grant or refuse relief, according as it appears true or otherwise.[40] Where the former view prevails, the application should be contested by counter affidavits, and not by answer[41] or by motion to dismiss.[42]

Sufficiency of application to show inability to pay costs.—An affidavit is insufficient which only states that plaintiff has not the present means to prosecute the action, but does not state that he will be unable to get the requisite means. Kaufmann v. Manhattan R. Co., 68 N. Y. App. Div. 94, 74 N. Y. Suppl. 146. So a petition stating that petitioner is not worth one hundred dollars, and will be unable to prosecute his action unless allowed to sue as a poor person, and further stating that in case the petition is denied he desires additional time in which to furnish security, is insufficient. Berkman v. Wolf, 65 N. Y. App. Div. 79, 72 N. Y. Suppl. 661. And so is an affidavit that plaintiff has been asked to give one thousand dollars as security, and that "by reason of her poverty she is unable to give security for said costs," as it may be claimed that the inability has reference merely to the amount demanded. Woods v. Bailey, 111 Fed. 121. On the other hand an affidavit sufficiently shows inability which states that the plaintiff has made diligent effort to procure a surety, that several persons have refused to act as security when requested, and that she is poor and has no means wherewith to employ a surety company. Lewis v. Smith, 21 R. I. 324, 43 Atl. 542. And it has been held that an affidavit stating that plaintiff is unable to give security for all the costs, but that he cannot swear that he is unable to pay the costs as they accrue, that he has paid all the accrued costs except a small balance, to cover which he has made a deposit with the clerk, who has failed to give him the exact amount, is sufficient answer to a rule for costs. Sufficiency of application.— An application is insufficient which shows counsel's advice that petitioner has a good cause of action, but does not set forth facts sufficient to satisfy the court independent of this advice. Weinstein v. Frank, 56 N. Y. App. Div. 275, 67 N. Y. Suppl. 746; Lewis v. Smith, 21 R. I. 324, 43 Atl. 542. But it has been held that an application sufficiently states the nature of the cause of action where it alleges that the plaintiff has a cause of action, "as will more fully appear with reference to the complaint." McGillicuddy v. Kings County El. R. Co., 10 Misc. (N. Y.) 21, 30 N. Y. Suppl. 833, 62 N. Y. St. 648.

Poverty within the meaning of the statutes is sufficiently shown by evidence that the plaintiff owns no property, that the property assessed to him is his wife's, and that several persons to whom he has applied have refused to act as security (Walker v. Smith, (Miss. 1895) 19 So. 102); by evidence that an infant plaintiff cannot obtain a responsible person to act as next friend, and that he owns property not worth over fifty dollars (Wright v. McLarinan, 92 Ind. 103); or by evidence that plaintiff's property is so encumbered that he cannot mortgage or sell it, and cannot procure a surety (Meyer v. Weber, (Tex. Civ. App. 1897) 40 S. W. 627). On the other hand it is not sufficient to show that an infant has inherited no property and has none that was given him. Gallerstein v. Manhattan R. Co., 55 N. Y. Suppl. 444. So an application to prosecute an action for brokerage is denied where there is no evidence that plaintiff is an object of charity or that he cannot by proper exertions earn sufficient to pay the expense entitling him to a hearing. Zeimmer v. Schmalz, 1 N. Y. City Ct. 435. Nor is one entitled to sue as a poor person who is making twenty dollars a week and paying two hundred dollars a year rent. Wickelman v. A. B. Dick Co., 85 Fed. 851, 29 C. C. A. 436.

Insufficiency of evidence to rebut claim of poverty.— Evidence that the plaintiff is of sufficient physical ability to labor for and acquire means to prosecute or defend is not sufficient to show that he should not be allowed to sue as a poor person. Kerr v. State, 35 Ind. 288. So an averment in an application for leave to sue as a pauper that plaintiff is not worth one hundred dollars besides wearing apparel and furniture necessary for himself and family, and the subject-matter of the action is not contradicted by defendant's testimony that defendant resides with his family in an apartment of four or five rooms well furnished, and is regularly employed, making fifteen dollars a week. Who may make counter affidavits.— Where a statute provides that only the clerk in a court of record may contest an affidavit of inability to give security for costs, the contest is properly stricken out where he refuses to join. Weatherford, etc., R. Co. v. Duncan, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 479, 31 S. W. 562.

Counter affidavits are insufficient which merely set up an affirmative defense, and do not controvert the grounds of the application Kahn v. Singer Mfg. Co., 18 Misc. (N. Y.) 568, 42 N. Y. Suppl. 461.

Reply to counter affidavits.— Where the plaintiff states his cause of action in general terms and on information and belief, without stating the source of information and belief given, and the cause of action is denied by affidavits, to which he fails to reply, he should not be allowed to sue as a poor person. Saltzman v. Northrup, 18 Misc. (N. Y.) 353, 41 N. Y. Suppl. 547, 75 N. Y. St. 1047.

G. To What Court Order Granting Leave Extends. An order permitting one to sue as a pauper extends only to the court in which it is made.[43]

H. Costs Not Within Purview of Order. A person permitted to sue in forma pauperis may be charged with interlocutory costs for any irregularity in the proceedings on his part, for the expense of expunging scandalous and impertinent matter from any of his pleadings or proceedings, or for the costs of his contempts.[44]

I. Vacation of Order Granting Leave. For good cause shown[45] an order permitting plaintiff to sue in forma pauperis will be set aside, and when this is done, he will be liable for costs in the same manner as if it had never been made.[46] A distinct order, however, is necessary. It will not be inferred from the mere fact of a judgment being given for costs.[47] The right to have the order set aside may be barred by unnecessary delay in moving therefor,[48] especially where notice of the application is not given to plaintiff.[49] Where the discretion of the court has been fairly exercised in vacating an order its action will not be reviewed.[50]

J. Effect of Obtaining Leave on Eventual Liability For Costs. Under the English statute it seems that no judgment could be rendered against a poor person for costs, although unsuccessful;[51] but under the statutes of most states the right to sue as a poor person does not relieve him from liability for costs, in case he is defeated in the action.[52]

K. Right of Person Suing to Recover Costs. In the absence of statute prohibiting it,[53] it has been held that, although he paid no costs, a person suing in forma pauperis may recover costs if successful.[54]

XXV. COSTS ON APPEAL OR ERROR.

A. From Courts of Record — 1. Right to Costs — a. Source of Right. The right to costs of appeal or writ of error are dependent solely on statute. In the absence of special statutory authorization such costs cannot be allowed.[55]

43. If the cause is removed to another court leave must be obtained anew. Oakes v. High, 11 Misc. (N. Y.) 313, 32 N. Y. Suppl. 289, 65 N. Y. St. 497; Collett v. Frazier, 48 N. C. 398; Clark v. Dupree, 13 N. C. 411.

45. Grounds held sufficient.— It is a sufficient ground to set aside an order allowing a plaintiff to sue as a poor person that it appear that he made a false statement as to his property (Moyers v. Moyers, 11 Heisk. (Tenn.) 495), subsequently becomes able to give security (Dale v. Presnell, 119 N. C. 489, 26 S. E. 27; Clark v. Dupree, 13 N. b. By What Law Governed. The right to costs of appeal or error and the rate of compensation or items allowable are as a general rule governed by the statute in force at the time of the determination of the appeal or writ of error.[56] These statutes apply in case of actions commenced before their enactment[57] or pending at the time of their enactment;[58] in case the appeal is taken before the enactment but heard afterward;[59] or in case a writ of error is brought after the enactment on a judgment rendered prior thereto.[60] The rule does not apply, however, when the statute contains a saving clause in respect to actions commenced but not terminated before its enactment.[61]

c. Discretion of Court. The courts have no discretion in the matter of refusing or allowing costs, except such as may be expressly vested in them by statutory provisions.[62]

d. On Affirmance — (i) In General. As a general rule where a judgment or decree is affirmed, the appellee or defendant in error will be entitled to costs.[63]

Sustaining decree on other grounds.— The fact that the appellate court sustains a decree of the trial court on grounds other than those

Nevertheless there are numerous exceptions and limitations to this rule. Thus it has been held that no costs will be awarded, although the judgment is affirmed where the appellee or defendant in error makes default[64] or fails to file a brief on appeal;[65] where the decree below is made without appellant's knowledge or without an opportunity for him to be heard;[66] on affirmance in a doubtful case;[67] where the judgment is affirmed because the court is equally divided;[68] or where the judge a quo has given no reason for his decision as required by constitutional provision.[69] So it has been held that where appellee files an argument on the merits, but appellant files no argument, and the case is affirmed, appellant will not be entitled to costs.[70]

(II) Where Both Parties Appeal. In some jurisdictions it is held where both parties appeal and the judgment or decree is affirmed no costs will be allowed either party.[71] Again it has been held that the costs may be apportioned in the discretion of the court;[72] and that where both parties appeal and both are in fault the costs should be divided equally.[73]

(III) Where Error Complained of Has Been Cured by Amendment. There is some diversity in the practice as to allowance of costs where the judgment is affirmed after error has been cured by amendment.[74]

assigned by the latter court is not necessarily a reason for depriving appellee of costs on appeal, especially where the appellate court has not found it necessary to go to the extent of considering the reasons on which the court below decided the case. (iv) In Special Proceedings.[75] In New York, where an appeal is taken in special proceedings,[76] the costs on affirmance are in the discretion of the court.[77] In South Carolina where a decision of a court of inferior jurisdiction in a special proceeding is brought before the circuit court for review, such proceedings must for all purposes of costs be deemed an action at issue on a question of law, and costs thereon shall be awarded and collected as provided by law.[78]

e. On Reversal — (i) In Cases Reversed For Want of Jurisdiction. In the federal courts the general rule is to allow both costs of appeal and the costs made in the trial court on reversal for want of jurisdiction against the party who improperly invoked the jurisdiction of the court below and that too, whether or not he be the successful party on the appeal.[79] In the state courts there is a diversity of opinion. In some cases the costs of appeal or writ of error have been allowed.[80] On the other hand costs have been denied either party.[81]

Limitations and exceptions to rule. — The decisions are not altogether harmonious on the question under consideration. Thus in two cases in the circuit court of appeals (Tug River Coal, etc., Co. v. Brigel, 70 Fed. 647, 17 C. C. A. 367; Tug River Coal, etc., Co. v. Brigel, 67 Fed. 625, 14 C. C. A. 577), where it appeared that the appellant made no objection for want of jurisdiction in the court below, it was held that costs of appeal on reversal should be equally divided. So in Wetherby v. Stinson, 62 Fed. 173, 10 C. C. A. 243, the circuit court of appeals reversed the decree for want of jurisdiction below, and refused costs without stating any reason. And in Peper v. Fordyce, 119 U. S. 469, 7 S. Ct. 287, 30 L. ed. 435, it was held that "upon a reversal for want of jurisdiction in the circuit court, this court may make such order in respect to the costs of the appeal as justice and right shall seem to require."

Plaintiff in error was held entitled to "costs" in Brown v. Saltenstall, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 672, there being nothing in the opinion to show whether the court meant to allow costs of appeal only or to include costs of trial also.

authorization such court has not power to award costs of appeal or error.[82] Ordinarily, however, costs of appeal or error are by statute allowed the appellant or plaintiff in error on reversal;[83] and the fact that the party whose judgment is reversed is successful on the new trial will not entitle him to costs made by him on proceedings in error.[84] The court can make no exception on the ground of the appellee's poverty, unless vested by statute with discretion to do so.[85]

(b) Exceptions to Rule. There are, however, some exceptions to the rule stated.[86] Thus it has been held that if the reversal results in a mere change of

In Massachusetts, Maine, and Connecticut it has been held that no costs at all are allowed plaintiff in error when the judgment is reversed for error in law. Marble v. Snow, 14 Me. 195; Brown v. Chase, 4 Mass. 436; Smith v. Franklin, 1 Mass. 480; Berry v. Ripley, 1 Mass. 167; Howe v. Gregory, 1 Mass. 81. Co. Rep. 489), otherwise, however, in case a judgment or decree is reversed on appeal. See also Keller v. Schwartz, 137 Pa. 86. Where appellee in a chancery suit prevails on all points litigated, especially if to a greater extent than in the court below, but the decree is reversed in order to settle all the rights of the parties involved, as by an accounting of rents and profits, appellant should pay the costs in both courts. Davis v. Smith, 43 Vt. 269.

Where judgment is reversed because of iniquity in the transaction out of which the action arises, costs will not be awarded to plaintiff in error as an award for being successful in a defense based on his own turpi-form in the judgment the appellant will be required to pay the costs of appeal;[87] and the same is the case where the amount of the judgment is reduced by an infinitesimal sum.[88] So it has been held that costs will not be awarded on reversal of the judgment on the ground that the result in the trial court was in the nature of a mistrial;[89] where the defendant in error had lost the benefit of his exceptions from causes beyond his control;[90] where a judgment is reversed because based on no cause of action;[91] or where the error could have been corrected on motion in the trial court without appeal.[92]

(2) Rule That Costs Abide Event. In some states if the judgment is reversed on a writ of error the costs abide the event of a new trial if the suit is remanded,[93] and no costs are allowed where the judgment is reversed and no new trial awarded.[94]

(B) Costs Made in Lower Court—(1) Where Final Judgment Rendered on Appeal or Error. In many jurisdictions, if the whole merits of the case are fully and finally determined by the decision of the reviewing court, it will finally decide the controversy by giving such a judgment in favor of the plaintiff in error or appellant as should have been given in the court below and will award him his costs in that court;[95] but in these jurisdictions plaintiff in error or appellant is not entitled to costs in the court below, unless in addition to a reversal he obtains also by the decision of the court in error a final judgment in his favor.[96]

(2) WHERE CAUSE IS REMANDED FOR NEW TRIAL. In many jurisdictions if a judgment is reversed and remanded for new trial, cost of the former trial will abide the event of the suit.[97] In other jurisdictions this rule does not obtain.[98]

(III) ON APPEAL OF BOTH PARTIES. Where both parties appeal and the judgment is reversed on each appeal, each will pay one half of the costs of appeal.[99] If a judgment is reversed for errors injurious to plaintiff only costs will be taxed in favor of plaintiff on his appeal and no judgment for costs will be given defendant.[1]

On dismissal of one of two appeals from a judgment on two separate records presenting the same questions, costs will be allowed against appellant, although it was taken the determination of a new trial, because of a statute requiring appeals to be taken within a designated time after rendition of judgment, and a new trial is afterward granted by the trial court, although the appeal will be dismissed, appellant will be entitled to costs of appeal.[6] And where a controversy on an appeal is terminated by respondent without appellant's consent each party will pay his own costs on dismissal.[7]

(II) For Failure to Prosecute. As a general rule if the appeal or writ of error is dismissed for want of prosecution the appellant or plaintiff in error must pay the costs.[8]

(III) For Want of Jurisdiction. There is a sharp conflict of authority as to the power to award costs on dismissal of an appeal because the court for any reason is without jurisdiction thereof. In many decisions it is held that no costs can be awarded;[9] in others that no costs will be allowed where it is apparent on the face of the record that the court has no jurisdiction of the appeal.[10] Other decisions, some being based on special statutory provisions, hold that costs are allowable.[11] So there are decisions holding that costs of the motion to dismiss for from an abundance of caution and settled a doubtful question of practice, and the appellant is successful on either appeal. Abbey v. Wheeler, 170 N. Y. 122, 62 N. E. 1074 [reversing 58 N. Y. App. Div. 451, 69 N. Y. Suppl. 432].

Where an appeal to an intermediate court is dismissed and a motion for affirmance made, and the cause transferred to another intermediate court, to equalize business, and the court of last resort decides that the case is not transferable and directs the cause to be transferred to the first court, which thereafter denied motion for affirmance, the parties are not liable for costs in the court to which the cause was transferred, nor in the supreme court, because the transfer was taken without any motion on their part. vails in relation to the most important matters in controversy.[19] Again it has been held that if the appellee substantially prevails he will be entitled to costs of appeal.[20] On the other hand in many jurisdictions the costs are solely in the discretion of the court;[21] thus each party has been required to pay his own costs of appeal;[22] while in other cases in the same jurisdictions the appellee has been required to pay costs.[23] Again it has been held that appellant may be required to pay costs, when the error could have been corrected below,[24] or where all the main questions are decided against him.[25]

(B) Costs Made in Lower Court. Where a judgment or decree is reversed in part appellee is entitled to costs in the lower court.[26]

(III) Where Judgment Affirmed as to One Appellee and Reversed as to Another. Where a judgment or decree is affirmed as to one of several appellees and reversed as to the other or others, the successful appellee is entitled to costs of the appeal.[29] Where a judgment dismissing a complaint on the merits awards costs to the defendants, and on appeal it is affirmed as to one of them with costs of suit, reversed as to three others, and as to one, neither reversed nor affirmed, the two defendants are entitled to their costs as awarded by the court below.[30] Where on reversing a decree one of the appellees gets by the decision on appeal what was sought by his bill and denied by the court below, and another prevailed on appeal to the same extent that he prevailed in the court below, a third appellee as to whom the judgment is reversed pays to the appellant his costs.[31]

h. On Modification — (I) In General. In perhaps the majority of jurisdictions an appellant or plaintiff in error, who obtains a modification of a judgment in his favor, is entitled to costs of appeal.[32] The holdings, however, are not entirely uniform. Thus in some jurisdictions the appellee or respondent will be entitled to costs, although the judgment be modified, if he substantially succeed in the action;[33] and in another that no costs would be allowed either party under such circumstances.[34] In one jurisdiction by rule of court, if a judgment is modified and the judgment on appeal contains no directions as to costs, the appellant may be required to pay the costs of appeal;[35] and in another, although the judgment is modified in appellant's favor, he must still pay the costs of appeal, which by statute follow the judgment of course.[36]

(II) By Reduction of Amount of Recovery — (A) In General. Where the appellant succeeds in reducing the amount of the judgment he will in general be entitled to costs of appeal.[37]

(B) Where Part of Judgment Is Remitted. According to the weight of authority where on appeal or error appellee or defendant in error remits a portion of the amount recovered he will be required to pay the costs of the appeal or writ of error;[38] but the opposite conclusion seems to have been reached in some jurisdictions, where it is held that under such circumstances the appellee is entitled to costs of appeal.[39] Again it has been held that where a judgment was affirmed as to two thirds of the amount recovered on condition that appellee filed a remittitur for the other one third the costs of appeal should be apportioned, Vermont.— Scott v. Lans, 21 Vt. 507.

See 13 Cent. Dig. tit. "Costs," § 873.

Rule in Maine.— The decisions here do not seem harmonious. In Polleys v. Smith, 10 Me. 69, it was held that the provision in the act of 1821 that the prevailing party shall recover costs does not permit the costs after an appeal by defendant to be recovered by him in case he reduces the debt or damages recovered in the common pleas, but the costs both before and after the appeal must be awarded to plaintiff. In Brown v. Attwood, 7 Me. 356, it was held that Me. Stat. (1826), c. 347, § 4, giving appellant costs on his obtaining a reduction of the damages awarded against him, entitled a defendant to costs in the appellate court where he secured a reduction of the verdict rendered against him below, although the entry of judgment thereon was delayed by his motion for a new trial till the interest on the verdict made the judgment finally entered thereon larger than it was in the court below.

Rule in Washington.— It has been held that where a judgment is reduced by a very small amount, the judgment should not be reversed so as to charge the respondent with the costs of appeal. Belle City Mfg. Co. v. Kemp, 27 Wash. 111, 67 Pac. 580.

Where on review the appellant succeeds in reducing the judgment he is entitled to costs of the review in Maine and Massachusetts. Where stipulations for correction of errors on which the judgment appealed from is modified were made after the appeal was taken appellant is entitled to costs of appeal. Kelly v. Leachman, (Ida. 1895) 39 Pac. 1113.

Ilsley v. Knight, 1 Mass. 467.

Where cause is brought to hearing notwithstanding remittitur.— Where the judgment appealed from is excessive by reason of erroneous computation and in the supreme court the excess is remitted with appellant's consent, after which the case is nevertheless brought to hearing and the judgment affirmed, the appellee has costs of appeal. two thirds against appellant and one third against appellee;[40] and that costs of appeal should not be allowed either party when the judgment below was for too much, and plaintiff on discovering the error offered soon after the appeal to make the proper reduction.[41]

(c) Method of Computation. In estimating whether a judgment has been reduced on appeal or review interest accruing on the verdict must be excluded.[42]

(III) Where Both Parties Appeal. Where both parties appeal and each obtains a modification of the decree it is held in some jurisdictions that each pays his own costs of appeal;[43] in another that the appellee must pay costs in both courts;[44] in another that where the decree is modified as to the losing party costs will be denied both;[45] and in another that where both plaintiff and defendant except to the decision and defendant prevails on both exceptions, he is entitled to costs in the reviewing court, although a balance is found due plaintiff.[46]

(IV) Modification as to One of Several Appellants. Where a decree is affirmed as to one of two appellants, but modified as to the other, the latter is entitled to costs of appeal — half to be taxed to appellee and half to the other appellant.[47] And it has been held that where on appeal by several plaintiffs or defendants from a judgment it is modified as to some and affirmed as to the others, the respondent is entitled to costs against those as to whom it is affirmed and those as to whom it is modified are entitled to costs as against the respondent.[48]

held, however, that an appellant who first pleads prescription in the supreme court, the case being therefore remanded, must pay costs.[52]

(B) On Modification and Affirmance. Likewise where a judgment is modified so as to correct errors not brought to the attention of the court below which could, and probably would, have been corrected in that court, the appellant in some jurisdictions is denied costs;[53] and in others he must pay costs.[54] In other jurisdictions the practice does not seem to be uniform. The courts in some cases merely deny the costs to appellant,[55] and in other cases award costs against him.[56] If the appellant did not have an opportunity to correct the error in the trial court the costs will on modification of the judgment be imposed on the appellee.[57]

(II) Failure to Move For New Trial in Time. Where a motion for a new trial is overruled because not presented in the time and manner directed by the court, and an appeal is taken and the judgment reversed, the appellant will not be allowed his costs either on appeal or in the court below.[58]

(III) Delay in Filing Transcript. It has been held that where a transcript of the record was filed by defendant in error, after the term authorized by law for filing had expired, it will be stricken from the record at his costs.[59]

(IV) Errors Caused by Fault of Appellant. Where the appellant or his counsel is responsible for the errors complained of he will, although the cause be reversed, be responsible for costs of appeal.[60]

3. Who Entitled to Costs. to do so he is entitled to costs in the court below.[70] Where an issue tried between several defendants is wholly distinct, and bears no relation to the issue between the plaintiff and the defendants, a judgment on an appeal between the defendants upon their issue, to which plaintiff was a necessary respondent to maintain his judgment recovered on the main issue, which awards costs to "respondents," entitled the plaintiff and the responding defendant to their separate costs.[71]

4. SECURITY FOR COSTS OF APPEAL. Whether or not security for costs must be given by an appellant or plaintiff in error is a matter solely of statutory regulation.[72] In the absence of statute requiring such security it need not be given.[73] Statutes requiring non-residents to give security for costs before commencing an action are usually held to apply as well to appeals or writs of error taken or sued out by them.[74] It has been held that an application for rehearing after final judgment by a non-resident is within a statute requiring security for costs in actions commenced by or for the use of non-residents;[75] and the rule has been held to apply to use plaintiffs.[76] Where an appellant has moved from the state after an appeal he cannot be required to give security.[77]

5. PROSECUTION OF APPEAL OR WRIT OF ERROR IN FORMA PAUPERIS. To authorize the prosecution of appeal or writ of error in forma pauperis, express statutory authority is necessary.[78]

6. AWARD OF COSTS — a. Necessity For Award — (I) WHERE COSTS FOLLOW JUDGMENT. Where the law declares the right to costs to follow a favorable decision, it is not requisite to the prevailing party's right thereto that in the final determination costs should be in direct terms awarded. court the rule is otherwise. An award by the court is in such case a prerequisite to allowance of costs.[80] If a statute requires the court to assign a reason for the allowance of costs under designated circumstances, an award made without complying with the statute is erroneous.[81]

b. Time of Making Award.[82] Where an appeal is dismissed in vacation the court may award costs at the next term of court.[83] So it has been held that where judgment is affirmed on exceptions costs may be awarded after the court adjourns;[84] also that costs which are of such a character as to acquire allowance must be at the term at which the judgment is rendered and not after.[85]

c. Construction of Orders in Relation to Costs — (I) In General. The construction and effect of an order in relation to costs in a case on appeal in error must depend largely upon the phraseology of the order itself. Orders awarding costs in general terms,[86] allowing costs of the supreme court and of the court below,[87] that appellant recover of appellee all costs in its behalf expended,[88] that appellee pay all costs in the lower court and in the appellate court,[89] for judgment absolute against appellant without costs to either party,[90] reversing cause without costs,[91] for a new trial with costs to appellant to abide the event,[92] and for a new Instances.— Thus where a new trial is awarded on appeal, and the order is silent on the subject of costs, neither party is entitled to the costs of the appeal. Pennell v. Wilson, 5 Rob. (N. Y.) 674. So also costs are not matter of right on an appeal to the court of appeals from a decision of the supreme court on a common-law certiorari, directed to a tribunal or officer not being a court, and unless they are awarded by the court of appeals they should not be inserted in the judgment entered on the remittitur. People v. Smith, 13 Hun (N. Y.) 227.

Limitation of rule.— The rule stated in the text is subject to this limitation: Where there is a rule of the supreme court requiring the clerk to tax specified costs, unless for special reasons apparent upon the record it is otherwise ordered, the rule will be deemed an exercise of the court's discretion in awarding costs where they are discretionary, and unless the court otherwise directs the clerk is bound to allow the prevailing party the costs specified in the rule. 87. Under a statute of Michigan, providing that in case of reversal costs shall be in the discretion of the court if judgment is reversed, and costs of the supreme court and of the court below are allowed plaintiff in error, such allowance does not cover the costs of the former trials and reversals, but the latter must await the final judgment of the cause. Jeffery v. Hursh, 58 Mich. 246, 25 N. W. 176, 27 N. W. 7.

88. In Texas it is held that the usual entry in the appellate court that "appellants recover of appellee, all costs in its behalf expended" is equivalent to judgment for costs in both courts. Bonner v. Wiggins, 54 Tex. 149.

89. Brown v. Thompson, (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 31 S. W. 1087, where it was held in that state that judgment of the appellate court ordering that "appellees pay all costs both in the lower court and in this court" does not require appellees to pay the costs taxed against appellant on an interlocutory order in the court below when the order was not considered on appeal.

90. If the New York court of appeals affirms an order and orders judgment absolute against appellant "without costs to either party," this disposes of all the costs in the action either of the appeal or of the motion, and an insertion by respondent of costs in the judgment entered on the remittitur is irregular. Patten v. Stitt, 50 N. Y. 591.

91. Sander v. New York, etc., R. Co., 56 N. Y. App. Div. 273, 67 N. Y. Suppl. 809; Hurley v. Brown, 55 N. Y. App. Div. 8, 67 N. Y. Suppl. 279, holding that where the appellate division of the supreme court reverses a cause "without costs" only costs of the appeal are meant.

92. Where the general term of the city court affirms a judgment in favor of plain-

trial requiring as a condition the payment of all costs of the action after notice of trial[93] have been considered and received judicial interpretation by the courts. In the United States supreme court it has been held that the naming of the amount for which plaintiff is entitled to judgment in an order by the supreme court remanding a cause to the circuit court for further proceedings in accordance with the decree of the supreme court does not prevent the circuit court from including the costs of such suit in its decree, above the amount of the judgment stated in the order remanding the cause.[94]

(II) TERM "COSTS." In Louisiana, on a judgment on an appeal that judgment in the lower court be "affirmed with costs," the appellant pays costs of appeal as well as the other costs.[95] The words "with costs" in an order of reversal or affirmance in the New York court of appeals, in a case where the allowance of costs is discretionary, is construed to mean costs in the court of appeals only;[96] and the supreme court has no power to allow costs after such a disposition of the case.[97] The rule applies to orders as well as judgments.[98] Where, however, the prevailing party is entitled to costs as of course the words "with costs" in an order of reversal or affirmance in the court of appeals will be construed to mean all costs made in both the appellate court and the court below.[99] The words "with costs" in a judgment of the general term of the supreme court, reversing a judgment of the special term, has been construed to include costs of both courts.[1] In the United States supreme court a decree of reversal as to one tiff with costs, and the common pleas reverse the judgment and order a new trial with costs "to appellant" to abide the event, plaintiff (respondent) in case he succeeds on a new trial cannot tax the costs either of the city court general term or the common pleas general term. The affirmance "with costs," by the general term of an order of the special term in a special proceeding is an award of the costs of appeal, and constitutes a direc-

of several plaintiffs in error, "with costs," is interpreted to allow only the costs of the successful plaintiff in error.[2]

(III) TERM "COSTS TO ABIDE EVENT." There is considerable difference in the holdings of the New York courts with respect to the proper construction of the term "with costs to abide the event."[3] To this extent at least all of the decisions agree: Where the appellant obtains a judgment of reversal "with costs to abide the event" and is also successful on the new trial, he is entitled to the costs of both trials and of the appeal.[4] And where the respondent is successful on the new trial the decisions are fairly harmonious to the effect that he is entitled to costs of both trials.[5] The line of cleavage between the cases arises in respect to costs of appeal under such circumstances. The court of appeals in construing its own order has held that the respondent is also entitled to costs of appeal where it makes an order that "costs shall abide the event."[6] So in a number of departments of the general term of the supreme court and in the general terms of some of the other lower courts, it is held that orders made by them directing costs to abide the event will entitle the respondent to costs of appeal when he is successful on the new trial;[7] however, in other departments of the general term the contrary conclusion has been reached.[8] Where on appeal from a judgment

tion by the court that respondents recover costs "at the rates allowed for similar services in an action." Wood v. Board of Excise Com'rs, 9 Misc. (N. Y.) 507, 30 N. Y. Suppl. 344, 61 N. Y. St. 80.

Where separate appeals are taken by two persons from the same order and the same are never consolidated, but are tried together for convenience, and are dismissed "with costs," the order will be construed to give costs to appellee from each of the appellants. An order of the court of common pleas reversing a judgment of the general term of the city court and directing a new trial "with costs to appellant to abide the event" includes the cost of the appeals to the common pleas and to the general term of the city court and also the costs in the trial court, and where respondent prevails on the new trial the costs mentioned in the order of reversal cannot be taxed by him. of the county court the general term awards a new trial, costs to abide the event, the appellant if again unsuccessful recovers no costs of appeal.[9] Where a judgment recovered by the plaintiff is affirmed at the general term but reversed by the court of appeals "with costs of this court (the court of appeals) to abide the event of the action" and thereafter the judgment is upon reargument at the general term again affirmed, the plaintiff cannot include in his bill of costs the costs of the first appeal to the general term.[10]

7. Taxation — a. Power to Tax. Whether the court or clerk shall tax costs depends largely on the character of the costs to be allowed.[11] When costs are taxed by the clerk without any direction from the court, he must tax them in accordance with the general rules governing the subject of taxation.[12]

b. Application For Taxation. If the time within which an application for taxation or memorandum of costs must be filed is designated by statute it must be filed within that time.[13] If the statute requires verification the application or memorandum must be verified.[14] And it has been held that whether there is any statute or rule of court specifically regulating it or not it is irregular to tax costs without notice to the opposite party.[15] If one party wishes to have unnecessary costs taxed to his adversary and the record does not show who was responsible therefor, this point may be presented to the court by affidavit or other proof.[16]

c. Objections to Taxation. Objections to items of taxation should be filed within the time required by statute[17] or they will be waived.[18]

d. Correction of Erroneous Taxation — (i) In General. An erroneous taxation of costs may be corrected; but whether the proper remedy for the correction of an erroneous taxation of costs is an appeal,[19] a motion to correct,[20] a motion to Filing application after term at which judgment was rendered.—After affirmance on appeal a motion for a rehearing was denied the following term, and respondent did not file a cost bill till after the denial of such petition. It was held, under the rules providing that no mandate can issue until the motion for a rehearing is disposed of, that the bill was filed within a reasonable time, although not within the term at which the judgment was rendered. Richardson v. Orth, 40 Oreg. 252, 66 Pac. 925, 69 Pac. 455.

A statute requiring bills of costs to be filed within two days after decision has been held not to apply to cases on appeal in the supreme court. Gray v. Gray, 11 Cal. 341, "as decisions are made from time to time in vacation, attorneys residing out of this city could not file their memorandums of costs within the time limited."

On amendment obviating error.— Where the record in the circuit court after a writ of error is sued out is so amended as to remove the error of which complaint has been made, a motion by the plaintiff in error for judgment for costs comes too late after the amended record is filed. Such a motion should be interposed or terms should be insisted upon by plaintiff in error when the application is made to file the amended record, when it is discretionary with the court to require the payment of costs as a condition to the filing of the same. retax,[21] an application for a rehearing, or for a modification of the judgment,[22] or otherwise, seems to depend largely upon the stage of the proceeding as well as upon the attendant circumstances of the case.[23] Taxation of costs cannot be questioned collaterally in a suit on an appeal-bond.[24]

(II) Motion to Retax. A motion to retax must point out the specific items objected to.[25] And as a prerequisite to the rehearing on the question of taxation objections should first be taken before the taxing officer.[26] The questions as to costs of appeal should be made while the cause is before the supreme court, otherwise the court has no power in the matter.[27] A petition for rehearing in the matter of taxation cannot be filed after the expiration of the term.[28] On a motion to retax the supreme court will not review disputed questions of fact unless under very peculiar circumstances.[29]

8. Amount and Items Allowable — a. Papers Customarily Essential to Appeal — (I) In General. Ordinarily it seems the cost of the record is taxable on appeal;[30] but in some jurisdictions, by virtue of statute or rule of court, such is not the case.[31] When authorized by statute allowance may be made for drawing

40. What constitutes unnecessary matter. — Inserting pleadings in a bill of exceptions (Joliet, etc., R. Co. v. Jones, 20 Ill. 221), incorporating in the record affidavits of wit-

nesses claiming attendant's fees (Bennett v. People, 30 Ill. 389), inserting in the transcript the copy of the record of another case (Tahler v. Cord, 3 Ky. L. Rep. 760), inserting verbatim in a case certified copies of deposition taken pending suit (Corlies v. Cummings, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 154; Jackson v. Mather, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 584), including the whole testimony verbatim in the record (Richards v. Waupun, 59 Wis. 45, 17 N. W. 979), attaching as an appendix to the case the pleading in another case between the same parties (Pfister v. Milwaukee Electric R. Co., 83 Wis. 56, 53 N. W. 27), setting forth the testimony in the printed case in the form of questions and answers, thereby extending the evidence from two hundred and fifty-five pages when it could have been easily condensed into fifty pages (Southmayd v. Waterton F. Ins. Co., 47 Wis. 517, 2 N. W. 1137), including in the transcript on the second appeal in a chancery case the opinion on the former appeal (Lehman v. Dozier, 78 Ala. 235; Life Assoc. of America v. Neville, 72 Ala. 517; Lake v. Security Loan Assoc., 72 Ala. 207) are illustrations of unnecessary matter included. On the other hand it has been held that when questions of fact are sought to be reviewed by the appellate court it is not an unnecessary expense to have the whole evidence printed (Akerly v. Vilas, 23 Wis. 628); so where appellant has omitted to print some of the papers referred to in the order from which the appeal was taken respondent may tax in his bill of costs such disbursements as were rendered necessary in printing the omitted papers, but he will be restricted in printing to only those to which such reference was made (Stubbs v. Ripley, 7 N. Y. St. 478); and where appellant requested certain instructions, which were given, and excepted to portions of the court's charge, such instructions and the full charge were properly sent up on appeal, and a successful appellee who sent them up is not liable for the cost thereof, under rule twenty-two (Hancock v. Norfolk, etc., R. 44. Where two defendants appeal on the same set of papers and the judgment is affirmed as to one and reversed as to the other, but there is no proof that the successful defendant paid or incurred any part of the expense, and his appeal could have been just as effectively presented in a less expensive manner, no disbursements for printing or for stenographer's minutes will be taxed in his favor. 45. An appellee who has been successful in both the appellate and supreme courts is not entitled in the latter court to a taxation of the cost of an additional abstract, which he has been compelled to file in that court, where such abstract is the same one as he printed and filed in the appellate court, where he was appellant and for which he recovered costs in that court. 46. Where stenographer's minutes used by defendant in preparing a bill of exceptions had been procured and paid for by him on a former trial the expense should not be taxed of procuring or preparing such papers will not ordinarily be taxed for costs for their subsequent use. It has been held, however, that the fact that appellant in making up his printed case used part of the printed case prepared in a former appeal, but for the printing of which he never recovered any costs, will not prevent his recovering for the printing of the whole case when used on the subsequent appeal.[47] Where the record is printed in the circuit court and paid for by a receiver, under order of the court, from funds in his hands, and such printed record is used on appeal in the supreme court without further expense to the parties, the expense of printing the record, it has been held, should be taxed in favor of the party recovering the costs.[48]

(VI) Effect of Imperfect Preparation. Ordinarily if abstracts, transcripts, or other papers to be used on appeal are not prepared in accordance with the statutes or rules of court regulating them no costs will be allowed therefor.[49]

b. Costs of Printing — (I) In General. Statutory authority, express or implied, is necessary to authorize the allowance of costs for the printing of papers to be used on appeal.[50] In some jurisdictions it is permissible to tax, as costs, the expense of printing original abstracts;[51] in others, the expense of printing the case on appeal;[52] and in another, the expense of printing paper-books.[53] So in some jurisdictions the expense of printing the record seems to be permissible.[54]

Illustrations.— Thus where an abstract is so imperfectly drawn as to give the court little aid in examining the record no costs will be allowed therefor. Marseilles Land, etc., Co. v. Aldrich, 86 Ill. 504. So if a statute provides for the allowance of costs for the printing of abstracts costs will not be allowed for an abstract prepared in any other way. Cooper v. Stinson, 5 Minn. 522. And where abstracts do not contain marginal references to the pages of the record, as required by rule, no costs therefor will be allowed. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Creighton, 53 Ill. App. 45.

In New Mexico the costs for printing the transcript of the record on appeal are improperly taxed as costs when the amount in controversy does not exceed one thousand dollars. Givens v. Veeder, 9 N. M. 405, 54 Pac. 879.

Even in jurisdictions where the expense of printing is allowable the cost of unnecessary printing will be taxed against the party responsible therefor.[55]

(II) Briefs—(A) Right to Allowance For Printing. In the absence of some positive statutory authority there can be no allowance made for the expense of printing a brief.[56] Nevertheless an allowance for printing briefs is held to be authorized by statute in some jurisdictions. Thus this expense has been held allowable under statutes authorizing an allowance for disbursements made for the printing of papers where rules of court make printed briefs necessary;[57] but if such printing is not thus made necessary, no allowance will be made therefor.[58] Nor can costs be taxed where the brief does not contain the matter required by the rules.[59]

(B) Unnecessary or Irrelevant Matter. No allowance will be made for printing unnecessary matter in briefs.[60] Scurrilous and abusive matter will be stricken out and no costs allowed therefor.[61] And it has been held in one case that no cost will be allowed for a brief containing disrespectful language in reference to the trial court.[62]

(C) Unnecessary Briefs. So costs will not be allowed for the printing of an unnecessary brief.[63]

Additional brief — Failure to file in time. — Where a party files an additional brief after the time allowed, he should be required to pay the cost of printing, although it is not stricken from the files on motion of the appellant. Smith v. McFadden, 56 Iowa 482, 9 N. W. 350.

This rule, however, does not apply to the cost of printing respondent's brief on the merits, although the case was dismissed on

(D) Amount Allowable. In one jurisdiction where the expense of printing briefs is held taxable, as a disbursement, the rule is that only reasonable expense, not exceeding one dollar per page, should be allowed.[64] On appeal against several respondents appellant on prevailing against one cannot tax as a disbursement against him the cost of those parts of the brief which relate only to the controversy between appellant and the other respondents.[65]

(III) Additional, Amended, or Supplemental Abstracts — (A) In General. Where an additional abstract is necessary to properly present the questions involved because of omissions, inaccuracies, or mistakes in the abstracts furnished by the appellant, the cost of printing the additional abstract will be taxed against the appellant whether successful or not.[66] It has also been held that costs of an additional abstract will be taxed against appellant, although the facts contained therein are not material to the issues in the case, if they are material to other issues which would have been considered if the decision on the main issue had been different.[67]

(B) Unnecessary Abstracts. When an additional abstract by the appellee is unnecessary he must pay the costs of printing thereof.[68]

Where additional abstract is amended and no sufficient cause is shown for failure to incorporate in the additional abstract when prepared at first all the matter set out in the amendment costs will not be allowed for the amendment. So held in Bowman v. Western Fur Mfg. Co., 96 Iowa 188, 64 N. W. 775. But compare Haggard v. Petterson, 107 Iowa 417, 78 N. W. 53, holding that the fact that a supplement to appellee's amended abstract was not filed until after appellant's argument was made is no ground for taxing its costs to appellee, providing it is not superfluous and the matter therein contained is fairly material.

such matter are not taxable against the appellant,[69] and in one state at least the appellee will be chargeable with the costs of printing the whole abstract, although some of the matter therein contained is material and proper.[70]

(D) Effect of Laches in Serving Abstracts. Where an additional abstract is not filed within the time required by rule no costs therefor will be allowed.[71]

(E) Amount Recoverable. Amount recoverable for printing should be the usual rate recoverable for such work,[72] unless it appears that more has been paid and a greater liability incurred.[73] If, however, the rate for copies of cases on appeal is fixed by statute no greater amount can be allowed.[74] Where the appellant has paid a certain sum to the clerk for the transcript he cannot recover any larger amount than that paid.[75] If more copies of a case on appeal are printed than are required by rule or statute, the appellant will only be entitled to his disbursements for the expense of printing the requisite number of copies.[76]

c. Attorney's Fees — (I) In General. Attorney's fees on appeal are not allowable unless authorized by statute[77] or stipulation between the parties.[78] In some jurisdictions, however, the statutes are held to authorize allowance of attorney's fees on appeal.[79] Where the amount of the attorney's fee is fixed by stat-

Statutes held to authorize or not to authorize allowance.— In the federal courts a statute (U. S. Rev. Stat. (1878) § 824 [U. S. Comp. Stat. (1901) p. 632]) authorizing the allowance of a docket-fee of twenty dollars on a trial before a jury in all civil or criminal cases or on a final hearing in equity or admiralty authorizes the allowance of a docket-fee of twenty dollars to the prevailing party in an appeal to the circuit court of appeals. Shillito Co. v. McClung, 66 Fed. 22, 13 C. C. A. 284; Kansas City, etc., R. Co. v. McDonald, 60 Fed. 522, 9 C. C. A. 129. But the contrary conclusion has been reached in one of the territorial courts. Marks v. Culmer, 7 Utah 163, 25 Pac. 743. In another jurisdiction a statute provides that in the appellate court costs shall be recovered by the party substantially prevailing, and that in the court of appeals the court shall tax the costs of the prevailing party at thirty dollars, which in practice is treated as an attorney's fee. It was held in taxing costs on overruling a motion to dismiss an appeal that the court should include the thirty dollars. Workman v. Doran, 34 W. Va. 604, 12 S. E. 770. On the other hand a statute authorizing an appellate court to adjudge as costs in favor of the successful party a reasonable sum for expenses of abstract does ute the court cannot enlarge it.[80] If several causes are tried together and only one brief presented by the prevailing party only one attorney's fee will be allowed.[81]

(II) Fees For Arguments. In the absence of some special statutory provision no fees for argument of an appeal are allowable, but special provision is made therefor in some jurisdictions.[82] While of course nothing can be allowed where there is no argument of any character,[83] an oral argument is not necessary.[84] So it has been held that a provision allowing costs for argument also includes reargument,[85] especially where a reargument is ordered upon the application of the losing party.[86] And where a party takes separate appeals from the judgment against him and also from an order denying a motion for new trial, the respondent is entitled to tax the fee for argument, on affirmance of the order with costs, although he has taxed the same amount on the prior affirmance of the appeal from the judgment.[87] In one jurisdiction the statute extends to appeals from interlocutory orders;[88] and it has been held to apply to appeals in proceedings for contempt.[89] Where two defendants appeal and the judgment is affirmed as to one, but reversed as to the other, the successful defendant is entitled to his costs for the argument on appeal.[90] The court has no discretion to change the amount of the allowance as fixed by statute.[91] Where by stipulation it is agreed that the decision on one appeal and several similar cases brought by different plaintiffs against the same defendant, and appealed by the defendant, should stand as the decision in all, and the appeal in one of the cases is argued, the appellant in whose favor the decision was rendered is entitled to costs of argument in all the cases.[92]

d. Stenographer's Fees. Under the statutes and rules of court of some jurisdictions stenographer's fees for a copy of minutes or a transcript of the evidence are taxable as costs in the case if necessary for the purpose of an appeal;[93] but not include attorney's fees (Wilson v. Ruthrauff, 87 Mo. App. 226), and a statute providing that an attorney shall be entitled to three dollars for a suit prosecuted to judgment does not authorize an attorney's fee as part of the costs on appeal from an award of arbitrators, since an award when appealed from is not a judgment but an undetermined cause pending in court to be tried (Drake v. Parker, 1 Pa. Co. Ct. 675).

(Ky.) 293, holding that where a statute in chancery embraces various defendants deriving title under distinct claims, on a dismissal of the appeal, an attorney's fee should be taxed for each class of claims.

Where two appeals are taken from a judgment, and respondents file only one brief, and the judgment is reversed as to one appellant and affirmed as to the other, the cost of respondent's brief may properly be taxed to the appellant, against whom the judgment was affirmed. not otherwise.[94] Statutory authority for such allowance, either express or implied, is necessary.[95] So it has been held that in the absence of statutory authority fees paid a stenographer for taking dictation of briefs for the supreme court and typewriting the same are not taxable to the defeated party;[96] and that stenographer's fees in preparing affidavits in the appellate court cannot be allowed in an appeal of costs.[97] Stenographer's fees for preparing a petition for rehearing[98] or in preparing the case on appeal[99] will not be allowed where the clerical work might have been done by counsel.

e. Motion Costs — (I) In General. Where on reversal the supreme court directed that respondent should have costs of motion denied, but failed to fix the amount in taxing the costs, it is proper to award the customary allowance.[1] Where an appeal taken to the court of appeals is heard on a motion as authorized by statute, costs allowable are "general costs" and not "motion costs" only.[2]

(II) Motion to Dismiss Appeal. Ordinarily, on dismissal of an appeal or writ of error, the appellee or defendant in error is entitled to the costs of the motion;[3] and if the motion is overruled the court may award costs of motion against the moving party.[4] Costs of a successful motion by appellant to dismiss his appeal will not be allowed him, although appellee had refused appellant's offer to dismiss the appeal without costs to either party, the appeal having been dis-

4. Workman v. Doran, 34 W. Va. 604, 12 S. E. 770.

Although a motion to dismiss for want of a return is denied because the return was filed before the calling of the motion, the appellant will be adjudged to pay the costs of the motion, if he neglected to file it within the proper time, without sufficient excuse (Woodmansie v. Hollon, 16 Mich. 379; Babcock v. Twist, 16 Mich. 282); but where the party taking the appeal, on learning of the irregularity of the return, immediately takes such steps as he could to have the mistake rectified, the appeal cannot be dismissed on that ground and no costs will be awarded against him (Covell v. Mosely, 15 Mich. 514).

missed on the ground that the order from which it was taken was non-appealable, and the question of the appealability of same order being in doubt.[5]

f. Costs Before Argument. In New York statutes provide for the allowance of a designated amount as costs before argument in certain classes of appeals therein enumerated.[6]

g. Term Fees. On appeal to the New York court of appeals but one term fee can be charged for each calendar year that the cause is on the calendar, exclusive of the term at which the case is argued or disposed of;[7] and no term fee is allowable in any case before the appeal is properly on the calendar.[8] Under the Michigan statutes it has been held that the discretion of the circuit court on appeal from justices of the peace and court commissioners to allow costs, including term fees, cannot be overcome by a rule of court not to allow them in certain cases.[9]

h. Trial Fees. Where the statute authorizing a trial fee on appeal fixes the amount no greater amount than that so fixed can be allowed.[10]

i. Extra Allowance. The New York statute relating to extra allowance of costs is held to authorize such allowance only in a court of original jurisdiction. It gives the same by way of indemnity for the expense of the trial in such court.[11]

5. Porter v. Jones, 7 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 192.

6. N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 3251, subds. 4, 5. These provisions are held to authorize the allowance on an appeal from an order overruling a demurrer (Wright v. Flemming, 18 Hun (N. Y.) 360; Van Gelder v. Van Gelder, 13 Hun (N. Y.) 118), from an order granting or refusing a new trial (Cusick v. Adams, 47 Hun (N. Y.) 455; Jackett v. Judd, 18 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 385), or upon an application for judgment on a special verdict (Walsh v. Bowery Sav. Bank, 9 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 177). So a dismissal of an appeal from the supreme court with costs entitles the party to the sum fixed by statute as costs before argument (Peterson v. Dickel, 8 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 259); and where two defendants appeal and the judgment is confirmed as to one and reversed as to the other, the successful defendant is entitled to costs before argument (Kame v. Metropolitan El. R. Co., 15 Daly (N. Y.) 366, 7 N. Y. Suppl. 653, 28 N. Y. St. 399). Appeal to county court.— N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 3251, subd. 3, relating to costs, which provides that ten dollars shall be allowed "for each term of . . . a county court, not exceeding five, at which the cause is necessarily on the calendar," does not apply to a cause in the county court on appeal from a justice of the peace, where a new trial is not demanded in the appellate court. In such case costs are regulated by section 3067, which provides that on such appeals there shall be awarded "to the appellant, upon reversal, thirty dollars." Horning v. Smith County Ct., 11 N. Y. Suppl. 790, 19 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 142.

In Illinois it has been held that where a continuance is granted in the supreme court to enable the appellee to obtain an amendment of the record in the court below he will be required to pay the costs of that term. Shipley v. Spencer, 40 Ill. 105.

In Kansas it has been held that where defendant at the first term after taking his appeal to the district court obtained a continuance over another term he was properly taxed with the costs of the term. Hodgin v. Barton, 23 Kan. 740.

In Vermont it has been held that where plaintiffs appeal to the supreme court but do not appear defendants are entitled to the full term fee in the supreme court, as of an original entry, the proceedings in such court being in the nature of a writ of error. North Bank v. Wood, 11 Vt. 194.

Exceptions to rule.— There is an exception to the rule stated in the text in the case of an appeal from the surrogate's court. It is held that such an appeal is for all purposes of costs an action at issue on a question of law, and its determination constitutes a trial within the meaning of the section authorizing an extra allowance. Dupuy v. Wurts, 1 Hun

j. Number of Bills of Costs Allowable. In New York where an appeal is taken from a judgment and also an order denying a new trial, the successful party is only entitled to one bill of costs.[12] In Wisconsin, where separate appeals are taken from several orders when all might have been embraced in one appeal, appellant, if successful, will be entitled to costs of one appeal only.[13] In Connecticut, where two appeals are taken, one of which is unnecessary, no costs on appeal will be allowed, although the cause be reversed on one of the appeals.[14]

k. Other Items. Money paid to a surety company for becoming surety on an appeal-bond is not taxable as costs.[15] Nor is the expense of expressing briefs to

On reversal by the United States supreme court.— Where a decision of the supreme court sustained at general term and by the court of appeals is reversed by the supreme court of the United States and remanded to the subordinate court for further proceedings not inconsistent with the judgment, the mandate being silent as to costs, the subordinate court has power to grant costs and an additional allowance in the same manner as if the record had never been removed from its files. Limitation of rule.— It has been held that N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 3239, subd. 2, which denies to either party costs of an appeal from an order refusing a new trial, where an appeal is also taken from a judgment, relates only to new trials on the minutes and does not apply to a motion made on the ground of newly discovered evidence. In this case it was said that an appeal from an order denying a motion for new trial based on newly discovered evidence is an application independent of the trial itself and does not depend for its success upon the accuracy or inaccuracy of the judgment, while an appeal based upon an order denying a new trial on the minutes is embraced in the same notice as the appeal from the judgment and printed in the same book, under which circumstances there is consequently but one bill of expense. Streep v. McLoughlin, 36 Misc. (N. Y.) 165, 72 N. Y. Suppl. 1061.

Where appeals are taken from a judgment, from an independent order made after judgment denying a motion to vacate it, and from an independent order striking out a part of the answer, respondent, if successful, is entitled to the costs of three appeals. Where defendants jointly sued to recover a joint judgment from which an appeal is taken and the judgment is affirmed they will be deemed to have jointly succeeded on appeal, although appearing by different attorneys after the appeal was taken, and cannot recover separate bills of costs. Wilbur v. Wiltsey, 13 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 506. And see Fischer v. Langbein, 31 Hun (N. Y.) 272, holding that where two defendants answered separately and were allowed separate bills of costs, and on appeal the same counsel argued the case of each and judgment was affirmed "with costs of said appeal to the defendants" they could tax but one bill of costs.

Where several defendants who appeared by different attorneys and set up substantially the same defense succeeded in the action, and separate bills of costs were taxed, and the judgment was affirmed on appeal on one argument, they could only recover one bill of costs on appeal. De Lamater v. Carman, 2 Daly (N. Y.) 182.

Where there is but one set of papers, one argument, and one judgment there is but one appeal, and the successful party is entitled to but one bill of costs, notwithstanding the fact that the several appellants appeared by separate attorneys. There is in such case but one appeal. Everson v. Gehrman, 2 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 413.

the supreme court.[16] The expense of unnecessary notice of appeal should be taxed to appellant.[17] No appearance fee can be allowed without statutory authority.[18]

9. Increased Costs. By express statutory provision in some states double costs are allowed in cases under certain circumstances.[19] Statutes of this character have no application to cases coming up by appeal.[20] The statute of Massachusetts also allows double costs on a frivolous appeal,[21] or on frivolous exceptions;[22] and the question whether the exceptions are frivolous is for the court upon the bill of exceptions without other evidence or argument by either party.[23] The proper method of doubling costs is to tax the single costs and multiply them by two.[24]

10. Damages Awarded on Appeal or Error — a. In General. A decree for damages against an appellant cannot be rendered in any case in the absence of statutory authority therefor.[25] In a number of states, however, statutes have been enacted which authorize the award of damages in certain cases against the appellant when the judgment appealed from is affirmed;[26] in others damages may be awarded where the judgment is either affirmed or the appeal dismissed;[27] and in others where the judgment is affirmed or the appellant fails to prosecute his appeal.[28]

b. Damages Awarded For Frivolous Appeal — (i) In General. So in many jurisdictions statutes or rules of court (most of which are still in force) have been enacted authorizing the imposition of damages or a penalty upon a party appealing or suing out a writ of error in case such appeal or writ of error is frivolous or sued out for the purpose of delay. These statutes have been strictly enforced in a very large number of cases.[29] Nevertheless to put them into operation it

19. In Massachusetts where the judgment is affirmed on writ of error the plaintiff in error is entitled to double costs. Butler v. Fessenden, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 78.

Under a statute of New Jersey providing that if any person shall prosecute a writ of error to reverse a judgment given after verdict in any court of record, and the judgment shall be affirmed, he shall pay double costs, the plaintiff in error who is unsuccessful is not liable to double costs when the trial was before the judge alone without a jury (Shields v. Lozear, 34 N. J. L. 530), nor where error is brought upon a judgment by confession since by the express terms of the statutes double costs are liable only after verdict (Hastings v. Mayberry, 1 N. J. L. 35). It applies, however, on affirmance of a verdict rendered on exceptions to a referee's report. Paulison v. Halsey, 38 N. J. L. 488.

Practice in Illinois court of appeals.— The Illinois statute authorizing damages where an appeal is prosecuted only for delay is limited in its terms to the supreme court and was enacted before the creation of the appellate court. But under a statute providing that the process, practice, and pleadings in the appellate court shall be the same as is prescribed or which may hereafter be prescribed for the supreme court so far as applicable the appellate court has jurisdiction to award damages on an appeal taken for delay. Advice of counsel of appellant to appeal will not protect appellant from liability to damages for a frivolous appeal. Cauthen v. Barnesville Sav. Bank, 68 Ga. 287.

Effect of payment of judgment.— Where appellants fail to prosecute their appeal, manifestly taken for delay, a ten per cent of delay.[30] So damages will not be awarded as for delay where the record does not show that any judgment has been rendered by the trial court;[31] where counsel for the appellee has filed no answer;[32] nor where the judgment appealed from is without evidence to support it.[33]

(II) When Appeal Considered Frivolous— (A) In General. An appeal is frivolous when it is entirely without merit and entered merely to delay the creditor in the collection of his debt;[34] or when it is taken from an interlocutory order which is not appealable.[35] So it will be considered frivolous where it appears that counsel for appellant urged the successful party to take less than the amount of the judgment and stated that delay was all he wanted.[36] And the fact that a defendant, after pleading, absented himself from the trial, will be held to be corroborated by circumstances indicating that his appeal was frivolous.[37]

(B) When Error Is of Trivial Character. Where the error complained of is of a trivial character, or such as might have been easily corrected without resort to an appellate court, damages will be allowed, as for a frivolous appeal.[38]

(C) Absence of Grounds to Anticipate Reversal. So where there is an entire absence of any ground to anticipate a reversal damages will be allowed.[39]

(D) Where Elementary or Well-Settled Questions Involved. Damages will be awarded for a frivolous appeal when the questions raised have been theretofore decided or are of an elementary character.[40]

(III) WHERE APPEAL NOT CONSIDERED FRIVOLOUS—(A) In General. Damages will not be allowed as for a frivolous appeal where there is palpable error in the judgment.[41]

(B) Where Question Involved Debatable. So where the questions involved are fairly debatable, or the appellant may have reason to doubt the correctness of the judgment, no damages will be allowed.[42]

But compare Taylor v. Ketchum, 57 Wis. 41, 14 N. W. 873, holding that although appellee's case is clear and supported by testimony overwhelmingly preponderating, the statutory penalty given when an appeal is taken in bad faith or for delay will not be assessed where appellant's counsel seems to have had confidence in his case.

Instances, in general.— Where the error relied on to reverse a judgment was that the trial was by reference and that the reference was not authorized, and the record showed that the reference was duly made on appellant's own motion, judgment was affirmed with ten per cent damages. Bates v. Vischer, 2 Cal. 355. So an appeal prosecuted on the ground that the plaintiff and the defendant testifies to an opposite state of things has been held frivolous. Utz v. Hoerr, 20 Mo. App. 36. In an action for the conversion of a horse exceptions to the evidence will be overruled with double costs, where plaintiff proved that defendant obtained possession of plaintiff's horse by process against a third party with intention of fraudulently depriving plaintiff thereof, afterward taking it out of the commonwealth. Failure to make defense.— Defendant appealed from a judgment by default on notes amounting to fifteen hundred dollars. In his brief he claimed to have a good defense, but gave no reason why the defense was not made in the trial court, and more than the usual delays occurred before the judgment was made final. It was held a proper case for damages. Ewing v. Roote, 21 La. Ann. 683. But compare Gilmore v. Wright, 20 Ga. 198, holding that the failure on the part of the appellant to submit evidence to the jury in support of some legal defense is not of itself conclusive to show his appeal frivolous.

Where evidence sustains verdict.— Where an appeal is taken from a verdict which is fully sustained by the evidence damages may be awarded as for an appeal taken for delay. Mercier v. Mercier, 46 Ga. 643; Howland v. Rooke, 158 Mass. 590, 33 N. E. 652. See also Boyd v. Brisban, 11 Wend. (N. Ann. 218, holding that in cases involving questions of fact and in which the evidence does not fully concord no damages as for a frivolous appeal will be allowed.

(IV) Determination Whether Appeal Frivolous. Where damages are authorized in case of a frivolous appeal to a court of last resort, it is for the court to determine whether the appeal is frivolous;[43] and only the court or courts authorized by statute to impose damages have the power to do so.[44] The court should be satisfied that the appeal was frivolous before allowing damages.[45]

c. Effect of Failure to Prosecute. Where the appellant fails to prosecute the appeal the appellee may bring up the record, and on motion he will be allowed damages as for a frivolous appeal.[46]

d. Effect of Dismissal of Appeal. Whether or not damages will be awarded on the dismissal of appeal depends on the wording of the statute. In some jurisdictions it has been held that damages may be awarded on the dismissal of an appeal for want of prosecution under a statute providing for allowance of damages, when it shall appear that the appeal was taken for delay.[47] Under other statutes authorizing the award of damages on affirmance of a judgment a right to damages on dismissal of an appeal for want of prosecution has been denied.[48] In another jurisdiction it was held, under a statute authorizing an award of damages, if the court was satisfied by the record that the appeal was taken for delay only, that on dismissal for want of prosecution damages will not be allowed in the absence of some special showing that the appellee suffered injury.[49] Where an appeal is dismissed for want of jurisdiction it has been held that damages are allowable under a statute authorizing the allowance of damages on dismissal of an appeal,[50] and denied under a statute authorizing the award of damages where the judgment is confirmed[51] or affirmed.[52] Even though a statute authorizes an award of damages on the dismissal of an appeal damages will not be allowed on the dismissal of an appeal from a void judgment.[53] So it has been held under a statute authorizing the allowance of damages only where the judgment is confirmed that damages will not be allowed when a dismissal is insisted on or has been claimed by appellee.[54]

e. Effect of Failure to File Brief, Assign Errors, Etc. Any one or more of the following acts of omission on the part of the appellant, it has been held, will authorize an award of damages: Failure to file a brief or argument;[55] failure to assign error;[56] failure to file bill of exceptions;[57] or failure to file paper-books.[58] Under these circumstances the appeal will ordinarily be considered frivolous.[59]

appellee is not the real party in interest damages will not be awarded him on the affirmance of the judgment.[61]

g. Necessity For Money Judgment. Most of the statutes providing for the allowance of damages expressly require a money judgment, and of course under these statutes no damages can be allowed where the judgment is of any other character.[62] These statutes do not authorize the allowance of damages on appeals from judgments in claim cases,[63] from judgments of condemnation in trials of the right of property,[64] from a judgment in a proceeding to charge the wife's statutory separate estate with the payment of her husband's debts incurred for household supplies,[65] or from a decree cutting off appellant's equity of redemption in realty no personal judgment being rendered against him;[66] but where a person who has a judgment for the recovery of specific personal property may by virtue of statute take execution for the value of the property recovered if he elects to do so, such judgment will be considered a money judgment on the affirmance of which damages may be allowed.[67]

h. Necessity For Delay of Execution. Under some statutes damages will be awarded irrespective of whether or not the execution has been stayed;[68] but under most statutes it is believed a stay is prerequisite to the right to damages;[69] and in one jurisdiction it has been held that damages will not be allowed when the appellee has not suffered from delay.[70]

is frivolous or taken merely for delay, such damages will not be allowed;[71] and where the statute requires that the demand be made by answer no damages will be allowed unless the demand is so made.[72] So if a statute prescribes the time in which the application must be made damages will not be allowed unless the statute is complied with.[73] It has also been held on a motion to affirm a judgment that the bare statement that the appeal was not taken in good faith but for delay, without showing any facts from which the truth of such averment may be determined, is insufficient to support a recovery of damages sustained thereby;[74] and that on the dismissal of an appeal damages will not be allowed on respondent's ex parte affidavit that he has been informed and believes that the appeal is without merit.[75]

j. Opposing Demand For Damages. If an appeal appears to be frivolous, the mere oral assurance in argument of counsel that it was taken in good faith is insufficient to avoid the imposition of damages. Such assurance must find some support in the record.[76] Under a statute providing for the allowance of damages on affirmance of an appeal, unless a judge of the appellate court shall certify that in his opinion such cause was not taken up for delay, it has been held that the application must be made at the term at which the decision is rendered.[77]

k. Amount of Damages Allowed. Where the statute allows a certain per cent[78] on the judgment recovered below, the amount awarded as damages must be computed upon the judgment exclusive of costs,[79] and exclusive of interest on the judgment up to the time of affirmance;[80] and it must be computed only to the date of the final order of the reviewing court.[81] If no definite amount is fixed by statute the amount to be awarded is within the discretion of the court.[82] Under a statute allowing as damages a designated per cent interest on the original debt, the interest must be computed from the date of the execution and not of the original judgment.[83] If the judgment allow interest, the reviewing court will not allow by way of damages the full amount which in their discretion the statute authorizes them to award.[84] If the percentage which the statute authorizes to be awarded is very large the full amount of the penalty should not be imposed except in extreme cases.[85] Where a statute authorizes the allowance of "just damages for the delay" interest may be allowed pending a writ of error.[86]

l. Loss of Right to Damages. It has been held that appellee waived his right to damages where he asks an amendment of the judgment,[87] where he joins in the appeal,[88] or where before the time in which the appeal has expired he refuses an offer to pay the amount of the judgment.[89] If the judgment has been fully paid and satisfied before the appeal is taken no damages will be allowed.[90]

B. On Appeal From or Certiorari to Justice's Court — 1. Appeal From Justice's Court — a. Character of Statutes Governing Costs. Statutes relating to costs on appeal from justice's court are mandatory in their character, and no party, other than the one provided by law to pay costs, can be required to do so.[91]

b. Statutes Providing That Costs Shall Abide Event. In a number of jurisdictions statutes, some of which contain designated exceptions, provide that costs on appeal shall abide the event or follow the judgment. Under these statutes the party in whose favor the judgment is rendered on appeal, if not within these exceptions, is entitled to costs, whether the amount of the judgment is increased or reduced.[92] So where a party appeals from a judgment in favor of his adversary and obtains a judgment on appeal in his favor he will be entitled to costs.[93] On the other hand if plaintiff fails to recover before the justice and fails again on appeal, defendant is entitled to judgment for costs.[94]

c. Statutes Making Costs Discretionary With Appellate Court. In some jurisdictions costs are in the discretion of the appellate court.[95] In one jurisdiction on appeal from a justice's court the appellate court may award costs to either party, as it may deem advisable, in view of the particular circumstances of the case;[96] and in another, where a judgment is modified on appeal from a justice's court, the question of costs is in the discretion of the court.[97]

d. Right as Affected by Offer of Judgment. In a number of jurisdictions there are special statutory enactments which under certain circumstances make the right to costs on appeal from a justice's court depend on an offer of judgment. Under the Arkansas statute, if on appeal from the justice's court the appellee recovers any amount, although less than the amount appealed from, appellant must pay the costs, unless he shall have tendered as much or more than the amount recovered in the circuit court.[98] Under the Iowa statute, if the party against whom judgment is rendered appeals and desires to avoid the costs of appeal in case appellee recovers some amount, he must offer judgment for a certain amount with costs.[99] The New York statutes on this subject are involved and very difficult of construction; under these provisions, if neither party makes offer of judgment,[1] the party who recovers, whether the amount be larger or smaller than that recovered in the justice's court, is entitled to costs;[2] if the successful party recovers fifty dollars or more on appeal he is entitled to costs whether he made any offer of judgment or not;[3] but where he fails to recover fifty dollars, and makes no offer of judgment himself he is not entitled to costs, although he recovers a greater amount than the opposite party offered judgment for;[4] the only effect, so far as costs are concerned, of the statute relating to offers of judgment on appeals from justices' courts is to entitle the party making the offer to costs, if the recovery in the appellate court is less favorable to his adversary than the offer.[5] Under the Ohio statute, on a recovery by plaintiff in the court of common pleas, on appeal, of a sum not equal to that offered, it is error for the appellate court on proof of such offer to enter judgment against defendant for costs accrued after such offer.[6] Under a statute of Pennsylvania of a similar character, if the defendant offers a judgment for a certain sum and costs to the plaintiff, and on appeal the latter does not recover as much as the plaintiff by a justice in excess of his demand on defendant's default, the circuit judge may award costs against plaintiff on appeal. Mitchell v. Shuert, 16 Mich. 444.

e. Right as Affected by Reduction of Judgment. In Alabama, where the judgment is reduced on defendant's appeal, the court may award costs of appeal against either party according to the justice of the case.[9] In Colorado, Illinois, and Vermont, where a judgment is reduced on appeal, the court may award costs against the defendant for costs of appeal, although the judgment be reduced and its discretion in so doing is not reversible;[10] it may also require each party to pay a portion of the costs.[11] In the District of Columbia costs on appeal from a justice of the peace are within the discretion of the court, where the judgment is partially affirmed, and costs may be awarded the appellee on reduction of the amount of the judgment.[12] In Indiana if either party appeal and reduce the judgment against him five dollars or more he will be entitled to costs of appeal,[13] provided that he has appeared before the justice;[14] if, however, the defendant does not reduce the judgment five dollars or more on his appeal he is liable for full costs.[15] In Kentucky if the defendant succeeds in reducing the amount of the judgment the appellate court may adjudge or withhold from him his own costs, but cannot give judgment against him for plaintiff's costs.[16] In Minnesota if the defendant reduces the plaintiff's judgment by one half of its amount he is entitled to costs and disbursements, and in other cases the successful party is

What is not a reduction.— The judgment before a justice in a replevin suit was for return of the property and costs, and in the circuit court for return of the property and eight dollars damages. entitled to costs.[17] In New Jersey if a judgment for plaintiff is reduced on appeal by the defendant neither party is allowed costs of appeal, on the theory that the error was that of the justice;[18] if the plaintiff appeals from a judgment in his own favor and recovers the same amount or less, on appeal, each party must pay his own costs of appeal; if he recovers more he will be entitled to costs of appeal; but in neither case is the appellee entitled to costs of appeal, as he is not successful in reversing the judgment.[19] In Texas if the judgment is reduced on appeal, the appellant will be entitled to costs thereof, unless the court adjudge otherwise for good cause stated in the record,[20] which it is expressly empowered to do;[21] and it is accordingly erroneous to adjudge costs against appellant on reduction of the judgment where no cause is stated in the record for so doing.[22]

f. Right as Affected by Recovery of More Favorable Judgment. In Connecticut and Kentucky if the appellant obtains a more favorable judgment he is entitled to costs of appeal.[23] In Indiana if the plaintiff appeal from a judgment in his favor and does not recover at least five dollars more than the justice's judgment, the appellee has costs of appeal.[24] In Iowa and Pennsylvania if the plain-

A judgment was rendered for plaintiff and on appeal the judgment was reduced to the sum which defendant admitted to be due. It was held that defendant did not reduce the amount of recovery one half, and that plaintiff was entitled to costs and disbursements on appeal. For another case in which it was held that plaintiff's recovery was not reduced one half see Olson v. Rushfeldt, 81 Minn. 381, 84 N. W. 123.

Necessity of showing error.— To obtain the reversal in this court of a judgment on the ground that the judge of a district court erred when, on appeal from the clerk's taxation of costs and disbursements, he held that a defendant was not entitled to costs and disbursements, under Minn. Gen. Stat. (1894), § 5511, last clause, it must be clearly made to appear from the record that the amount originally recovered by the plaintiff was reduced more than one half on appeal to the district court, or that the defendant was the successful party on the only matter litigated in the action. Thompson v. Ferch, 78 Minn. 520, 81 N. W. 520.

Extent of rule.— The fact that the record contained sworn statements of the jurors that they intended to give a larger verdict does not alter the rule that the appellant is entitled to costs of appeal on reducing the judgment (Rogers v. Fox, (Tex. App. 1890) 16 S. W. 781); nor is his right to costs under these circumstances affected by the fact that defendant failed to make any defense in the justice's court (Gulf Coast, etc., R. tiff takes an appeal from a judgment in his favor and does not obtain a more favorable judgment he must pay the costs of appeal.[25] In Nebraska, where the statutes provide that if on appeal by plaintiff he shall not recover a larger sum than twenty dollars, he shall be adjudged to pay all costs in the district court, it is immaterial whether the judgment appealed from by plaintiff is for or against him.[26] In New Jersey, where a judgment for plaintiff is increased on defendant's appeal, the plaintiff has costs of appeal, although the amount of costs allowed in the justice's court is decreased.[27] In Washington the expression, "a more favorable judgment," used in the statute regulating the recovery of costs on appeal from a justice's court, means one that shows the judgment below was substantially wrong, not one more favorable by a few dollars or cents merely.[28]

g. Calculation of Amount of Judgment For Purposes of Awarding Costs. In a number of jurisdictions it is held that in determining whether a judgment on appeal from the justice's court is for a larger or smaller amount than that recovered in the justice's court, interest accruing on the justice's judgment pending appeal should not be included.[29] In other jurisdictions, however, the contrary view obtains.[30] A judgment on appeal will be considered more favorable, although for a less amount, where it is rendered so by the extinguishment of a counter-claim set up by amendment after the appeal was taken.[31] Where the plaintiff remits part of the judgment in the justice's court, the judgment will be regarded as standing at that sum at the time an appeal is taken from it, in determining for the purpose of fixing the liability for costs whether the judgment has been reduced on appeal.[32] So it has been held that attorney's fees stipulated for a note sued on and included in the judgment of the circuit court cannot be deducted before comparing it with the judgment appealed from to determine whether the latter has been reduced.[33]

h. Statutes Awarding Costs to Successful or Prevailing Party. In some jurisdictions costs are awarded to the prevailing or successful party on appeal. Under these statutes, if plaintiff recovers as much on appeal as he recovered in the justice's court, costs should not be allowed defendant, but should be awarded to plaintiff.[34] On the other hand it has been held that if plaintiff appeals and fails to recover a larger judgment he is not successful within the meaning of the statute and cannot recover costs.[35]

i. Statutes Providing For Costs on Remand For New Trial. In Indiana, where a new trial is granted, generally without any order in relation thereto, costs abide the event of the suit.[36] Under the statutes of Kansas and Ohio, where the appellate court reverses and retains the cause for final adjudication, it should enter up judgment against the defendant in error for costs accruing up to that time.[37] Where the cause is reversed and remanded to the justice for a new trial, the appellate court can only render judgment for costs of appeal. It cannot render judgment for either party for costs made in the justice's court.[38]

j. Specification of Errors in Notice of Appeal. A statement of the ground of appeal as being "because the verdict was contrary to the law and the evidence, in that the jury did not find for the defendant" is not a sufficient statement of the particulars complained of within the requirements of a statute providing that in the notice of the appeal appellant shall state in what particular he claims judgment should have been more favorable to him.[39]

k. Costs of Amendment After Taking Appeal. In one jurisdiction, where plaintiff has been permitted to amend, the court may make such award in relation to costs as may be just,[40] and this, it has been held, may be the costs of the amendment.[41] In another, where defendant is allowed on appeal to plead satisfaction puis darrein continuance, he may be subject to all previous costs, including those of trial.[42] And in another, where the judgment is reversed on defendant's appeal, the costs to abide the event, and on the second trial defendant objects to the sufficiency of the complaint, whereupon plaintiff is allowed to amend on payment of a specified sum as costs, he should also be required to pay the costs awarded on the appeal.[43]

l. Want of Jurisdiction of Justice. Where the appellate court on appeal by defendant from a justice's judgment abates the action for want of jurisdiction in the justice's court defendant is entitled to costs.[44]

m. Want of Jurisdiction of Appellate Court. On the dismissal of an appeal from a justice's court for want of jurisdiction the appellant is entitled to costs.[45]

2. CERTIORARI TO JUSTICE'S COURT. In Indiana, Tennessee, and Texas, the rule in relation to costs in cases removed on certiorari is the same as in cases taken up by appeal or writ of error.[46] In New Jersey it has been held that if the party removing a cause by certiorari sustains any one of his assignments he has prosecuted plaintiff on such an appeal recovers more or less, he is nevertheless the successful party, if he recovers judgment, and is entitled to costs. his writ to effect, and that if an award or execution be set aside for error and the principal judgment be affirmed to the end that it may be executed in the upper court, plaintiff in error shall not pay costs, nor shall defendant in error be entitled to sue on the certiorari bond.[47] In Pennsylvania, where a cause is reversed on certiorari, no judgment for costs is entered in the appellate court; costs follow the case back to the justice and abide the event of the suit,[48] and the right of recovery is made by statute to depend on the relative amount recovered or abated by the subsequent judgment.[49]

XXVI. COSTS ON AWARD OR REFUSAL OF NEW TRIAL.

A. Costs of Former Trial — 1. Right to Costs. Where a new trial is asked on the ground that the verdict is against the evidence,[50] on the ground of misbehavior or mistake on the part of the jury,[51] or on the ground of newly discovered evidence,[52] it is the practice in some jurisdictions to award it only on condition that the party moving therefor pay the costs of the former trial. Extent of application of statute.— This statute does not entitle the party removing the cause by certiorari to costs where a reversal is obtained on grounds fatal to the action, thereby precluding a subsequent trial. Hartman v. Bechtel, 1 Woodw. (Pa.) 140. So the statute is applicable only to cases where there is a judgment which may be compared with the preceding one as a final test of the merits, and it is consequently not applicable to the reversal of an execution. The theory on which the costs of the former trial are awarded against the party obtaining a new trial is that the party against whom the favor is granted shall be fully restored to all of his rights as they existed before the trial. Fleischman v. Yagel, 16 Misc. (N. Y.) 511, 38 N. Y. Suppl. 523, 74 N. Y. St. 43.

This rule has been held not to apply in case of the setting aside of a receiver's report as against the weight of evidence and ordering a new trial. It was held in such case that the court should exercise its discretion on the subject of costs with regard to the peculiar circumstances of each case. Wentworth v. Candee, 17 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 405.

In Wisconsin it has been held that a verdict wholly unsupported by evidence must be deemed to be perverse, and that the costs of the trial should not be charged to the party moving to set it aside. Becker v. Holm, 100 Wis. 281, 75 N. W. 999.

Error of judge.— The practice of requiring a party given a new trial for mistake or misbehavior to pay costs is not strictly applicable in case a new trial is granted because of error committed by the judge. O'Brien v. Long, 49 Hun (N. Y.) 80, 1 N. Y. Suppl. 695, 17 N. Y. St. 510. Costs should be made to abide the event (Williams v. Smith, 2 Cai. (N. Y.) 253. See also Smith v. New York City, 55 N. Y. App. Div. 90, 66 N. Y. Suppl. 1046) or refused absolutely (Randall v. Albany City Nat. Bank, 1 N. Y. St. 592).

Inadequate verdict.— Where a party obtains a new trial on the ground that the verdict is inadequate he must pay the costs of the former trial. Riegelman v. Brunnings, 36 N. Y. App. Div. 351, 56 N. Y. Suppl. 755; Brown v. Foster, 1 N. Y. App. Div. 578, 37 N. Y. Suppl. 502, 73 N. Y. St. 94.

In New Jersey it has been held that no costs should be awarded in such case. Burlington County v. Fennimore, 1 N. J. L. 293. See also Anonymous, 16 N. J. L. 496.

other jurisdictions, however, where a new trial is granted, costs of the former trial abide the event of the suit.[53]

2. ITEMS ALLOWABLE. In New York it has been held that an item allowable for proceedings subsequent to notice and before trial is allowable under an order for new trial which grants costs of the former trial,[54] and also disbursements for stenographer's minutes,[55] and a trial fee.[56] In Rhode Island it has been held that where a new trial is granted because of newly discovered evidence consisting of papers in defendant's possession which he had mislaid, and which are material only on a set-off pleaded by defendant, and plaintiff is a resident of another state, defendant will be required to pay plaintiff's costs and expenses in coming to attend the trial and returning home.[57] In Massachusetts it has been held that where judgment is arrested after verdict for plaintiff and leave to amend and a new trial granted, costs will be allowed defendant from the time the case went to the jury.[58]

3. METHODS OF ENFORCEMENT. In most jurisdictions where an order grants a new trial on payment of costs the payment of costs is not a condition precedent to the right to a new trial. Failure to pay costs within the time specified does not forfeit the right to a new trial.[59] In some jurisdictions, however, an order granting a new trial on payment of costs renders the payment thereof a condition precedent to the new trial.[60]

B. Costs of Motion — 1. RIGHT TO COSTS. Under the New York statutes the

In Vermont upon the granting of a new trial solely on the ground of the discovery of new and material evidence, the court will not tax costs against the adverse party from the commencement of the suit, but merely those costs which have accrued after the granting of the new trial. Rule in Alabama.— Where a new trial is costs of a motion for new trial are within the discretion of the court, whether the motion be made upon a "case," [61] or on the judge's minutes without a case.[62] In Montana the prevailing party is entitled to costs and disbursements of motion for new trial.[63] In North Carolina, where a new trial is granted on motion in the supreme court on the ground of newly discovered evidence, the costs in such court will ordinarily fall on the moving party.[64]

2. Necessity For Award. Where the costs of motion for a new trial are in the discretion of the court, no costs can be allowed unless the court exercises its discretion by awarding them.[65]

3. Items Allowable. Under the New York statutes, where a motion is not made on a case, "motion costs"—ten dollars—only are allowable.[66] Where a motion is made on a case[67] the same costs as are allowed on appeal is the measure of recovery of costs by the successful party.[68] In Minnesota where a bill of exceptions is prepared for and used on a motion for a new trial, which is granted, with costs of motion, the expense of preparing such bill is not taxable in the supreme court on an appeal from the order granting the new trial.[69] In Montana the granted on payment of costs within a specified time, no means being provided for compelling the payment thereof, the effect of the order is to leave it at the party's option to pay the costs within the prescribed time and get a new trial, or to fail to pay them within that time and fail to get a new trial. Ex p. Jones, 35 Ala. 706; Screws v. Upshaw, 34 Ala. 496. But an order granting a new trial on payment of costs within a specified time, accompanied by a direction for the issuance of an execution to enforce collection, amounts to an unconditional grant of a new trial. Ex p. Beavers, 34 Ala. 71.

Trial fee.—On a motion for new trial made on the judge's minutes the successful party is not entitled to a trial fee. Naugatuck Cutlery Co. v. Rowe, 5 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 142.

Where more than one fee allowable.—On hearing a motion at special term for a new trial, the justices without deciding it ordered a reargument before another justice by whom the motion was denied. It was held that the winning party was properly allowed two argument fees, as the reargument was not caused by any act or motion on his part. Guckenheimer v. Angevine, 16 Hun (N. Y.) 453.

67. What is motion on case.—A motion made upon a judge's minutes is not a motion on a case. Muller v. Higgins, 44 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 224. But where the moving parties ask for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence and for such other or further relief as may be just the motion is on a case. Davis v. Grand Rapids F. expense of a stenographer's transcript of the evidence in preparing a motion for a new trial is a necessary disbursement within the meaning of a statute, giving the prevailing party his costs and necessary disbursements.[70]

C. Construction of Orders. Where a motion for a new trial is granted "with costs to defendant to abide the event" plaintiff on succeeding on the new trial cannot tax the costs of such motion.[71] Where a plaintiff prepares a case for new trial which is granted "without costs to either party" and the order on appeal is affirmed "with costs" plaintiff is not entitled to costs for making and serving the case. The order of affirmance includes only the costs on appeal.[72] If on plaintiff's motion a new trial is granted "costs to abide the event," and the verdict in the second trial is for defendant, defendant is entitled to his costs of opposing the motion for new trial.[73]

XXVII. ENFORCEMENT OF PAYMENT OF COSTS.

A. By Action — 1. When Maintainable. In the absence of a special statute authorizing it, an independent action is not maintainable for the recovery or interlocutory costs. They are recoverable only by proceedings in the cause in which they are awarded.[74] But an action will lie on a judgment for costs rendered in another state or country.[75] It will also lie on a domestic judgment in jurisdictions where the right to bring an action on an ordinary judgment is not affected by the fact that the party also has a remedy by execution.[76] An action may also be maintained to recover costs where the court trying the cause refuses to enter a judgment for costs;[77] or where one who has sued before a trial justice, whose commission has expired, is denied a trial (in jurisdictions where costs are recoverable under such circumstances);[78] and also in proceedings in which the

In Louisiana, although the party defeated is liable for costs, which include the mileage and per diem of witnesses, he cannot be sued in a direct action by those not summoned by himself. The remedy is by execution at the instance of the party who controls the judgment, or of the officers of court, in cases provided by law. Smith v. Sleaveport, 10 La. Ann. 582.

party entitled to costs is expressly authorized by statute to maintain an action therefor.[79] So one who brings an action in the name of another is liable in assumpsit on an express promise to pay costs;[80] and a stranger to a suit who has entered into an agreement to pay costs is liable in an action therefor.[81]

2. Prerequisites to Action. No action will lie to recover costs before they have been taxed as such;[82] and if suit is brought against a stranger to the suit, on his agreement to pay costs, he is entitled to notice before suit brought of the amount taxed.[83]

3. Form of Action. Where suit is brought by a clerk of court for his fees against a plaintiff assumpsit lies.[84] So it has been held that assumpsit or debt will lie against one against whom a judgment for costs has been rendered in another state or country.[85] It has also been held that where the party cast has failed to pay all the costs, a bill in equity will lie to enforce the judgment for costs.[86]

4. Evidence. It has been held that a bill of fees taxed without notice to the party chargeable is not competent evidence in an action to recover them.[87] It has further been held that the correctness of the items of bills of costs will not be examined on the trial of a suit to recover them.[88]

B. By Attachment — 1. In Absence of Statute — a. In General. The courts of the United States may enforce by attachment the payment of costs due to the officers of the court.[89] In New Jersey it has been held that where the lessor of plaintiff in ejectment refuses to join in the consent rule, and is non-prossed, the remedy for collecting costs adjudged against the lessor is by attachment.[90] In North Carolina it has been held that the supreme court has no power to compel, by process of attachment, a defendant to pay a judgment against him for costs recovered by plaintiff in the supreme court.[91]

b. Interlocutory Costs. The ordinary method of enforcing the payment of interlocutory costs is by attachment, in the absence of some statutory prohibition or a statute authorizing a different method of recovery;[92] and such costs are not enforceable by execution.[93]

c. Costs on Final Judgment. A final judgment for costs is only recoverable by execution and not by attachment.[94]

2. Under Special Statutory Provisions. A statute[95] providing that "no person shall be arrested or imprisoned on any civil process issued out of any court . . . in any suit or proceeding instituted for the recovery of any money due upon any judgment or decree founded upon contract, or due upon any contract, express or implied, or for the recovery of any damages for the non-performance of any contract, excepting in proceeding, as for contempt, to enforce civil remedies, actions for fines or penalties, or on promises to marry, on moneys collected by any public officer, or for any misconduct or neglect in office, or in any professional employment" applies alike to judgments at law and to decrees in equity, and prohibits arrest in every case in an action upon contract which is not included in the exceptions.[96]

C. By Stay of Proceedings — 1. To Enforce Payment of Costs of Prior Action — a. In Absence of Statute or Under Statutes Declaratory of Common Law — (i) Introductory Statement. One of the methods of enforcing payment of costs awarded by a final judgment is by staying a second action based on the same cause of action. The practice originated in ejectment suits;[97] but the scope of the rule was subsequently enlarged, and now embraces all classes of actions.[98]

(II) Power of Court to Grant Stay — (A) In General. The court may and ordinarily will stay proceedings in a second action, legal or equitable, between the same parties for the same cause of action, until the costs of the first action are paid.[99] This is true irrespective of the manner in which the action terminates; as where plaintiff is nonsuited;[1] or where he dismisses or discontinues his action, or takes a voluntary nonsuit;[2] or the suit is dismissed for failure of the complaint to state a cause of action;[3] or where the complaint is dismissed for failure to pay the costs imposed on opening a default.[4] It also applies although the situation of the parties is reversed; in other words plaintiff in a second ejectment suit may be required to pay costs awarded against him as defendant in the first suit.[5]

(B) Exceptions and Limitations of Rule. The rule does not apply where the second suit is rendered necessary by the act of defendant himself,[6] as for instance by defendant's fraud or perjury in procuring a nonsuit;[7] where the cause of abatement is the death of the party;[8] or where the former suit was dismissed through the attorney's neglect;[9] or where plaintiff is in execution for costs.[10] So the rule is not enforceable in a justice's court;[11] and defendant, who has assigned the costs due him, is not entitled to a stay of proceedings to enforce payment.[12]

(III) Discretion of Court in Granting Stay. Unless expressly so provided by statute, the right to a stay of proceedings to compel payment of costs of a former suit is not an absolute one, but rests in the sound discretion of the court.[13] In some jurisdictions the view is taken that the discretion of the court in granting or refusing a stay is not reviewable;[14] in others an appeal lies from an order granting or refusing a motion for a stay.[15]

(IV) Presumptions on Application For Stay. For the purposes of the application to stay the proceedings the second action will be deemed vexatious until the inference be removed by some showing on the part of plaintiff; or in other words the burden is on plaintiff to show that the suit is not vexatious, if he desires to take himself outside of the operation of the rule.[16]

(V) Necessity For Termination of Former Suit. Ordinarily, to render the rule operative, it is essential that the former action shall have terminated, and that in such suit defendant is entitled to receive and plaintiff bound to pay costs.[17]

(VI) Necessity For Same Cause of Action in Both Suits. It is essential to the operation of the rule that the cause of action be the same in both suits;[18] and some decisions maintain that the causes of action must be identical.[19]

(VII) Operation of Rule as Affected by Question of Parties. The rule does not apply if the parties defendant are not the same as those in the first suit, and have no interest in the cause;[20] nor where plaintiff had no interest in the former suit.[21] The rule applies where the party plaintiff claims through or under plaintiff in the first action,[22] and notwithstanding there is an additional plaintiff[23] or defendant,[24] or one less defendant than in the first action.[25] It also applies, although the nominal parties are different, provided the real parties in interest are the same.[26]

(VIII) Operation of Rule as Affected by Bringing Suits in Different Courts—(A) Courts in Same State. It has never been doubted that the rule is in no way affected by the fact that the two actions are brought in different courts, provided the courts are of the same character, that is to say, both being

This does not necessarily mean that they shall be of that identical character necessary to constitute a bar to the second action. Illustrations.—Where A and B bring ejectment, and there is judgment against them for costs, although C afterward brings ejectment for a portion of the same premises under the same title, the court will not stay proceedings in the second suit until the costs of the first are paid. law or both being equity courts.[27] Many of the earlier decisions, however, take the view that a suit at law cannot be stayed to compel payment of costs in a former suit in equity based on the same cause of action or vice versa.[28]

(B) Courts of Different States. The rule has no application where the first suit is brought in another state or country.[29]

(IX) Operation of Rule as Affected by Suing In Forma Pauperis. The rule authorizing a stay of proceedings in a second action brought for the same cause between the same parties applies, although plaintiff sues in forma pauperis,[30] except where there is some special statutory provision to the contrary.[31]

(X) Requisites of Application — (A) In General. As the granting of the application is largely a matter of discretion, some evidence should be presented by the moving papers of the merits of defendant's position.[32]

(B) Time of Making. According to the earlier decisions an application for a stay of proceedings might be made at any time before trial,[33] or even after verdict,[34] but not after judgment,[35] unless in conjunction with a motion to vacate the judgment.[36] Such laxity of practice is not now permitted. The application comes too late when made after the second action has been called for trial,[37] or after pleading to the merits.[38] The application should be made at as early a period as is practicable, to prevent surprise and the unnecessary accumulation of costs.[39]

(XI) Opposing Application. Where an order was made to stay proceedings on defendant's affidavit, it was held proper to refuse to allow plaintiff to file a counter-affidavit after an unexplained delay of seventeen days.[40]

(XII) Order Granting Stay. The order granted should be that proceedings in the second suit be stayed until the costs of the first suit shall be paid, and to dismiss unless plaintiff shall pay such costs within a designated time.[41]

b. Under Special Statutory Provisions. Under a statute providing that two actions may be brought for the recovery of land, but that the costs of the first action be first paid, and the second action be brought within two years from the granting of a continuance in the first action, a second action after order of discontinuance in the first action cannot be brought, unless the costs of the first action be first paid.[42] Under a statute authorizing the court to impose reasonable costs upon denying a motion for a new trial, and to make their payment a condition precedent to further proceedings, the court may properly impose terms on denying such a motion.[43]

2. To Enforce Costs of Prior Appeal. The court may stay a second appeal until the costs of a former appeal are paid;[44] and on reversal of a judgment the trial court may stay further proceedings until the costs of the appeal are paid.[45]

3. To Enforce Payment of Interlocutory Costs — a. In Absence of Statutory Authorization. While the court may restrain parties from the prosecution of a second action for the same cause until the costs of the first suit are paid, a party will not be restrained in the prosecution of his suit until he pays the costs of an interlocutory order therein, unless there is some statute authorizing it.[46]

b. Under Special Statutory Authorization — (I) Where Costs Directed by Order to Be Paid — (A) Right to Stay. A New York statute[47] provides that where costs of a motion, or any other sum of money directed by an order to be paid, are not paid within the time fixed by the order, or, if no time is so fixed, within ten days after service of a copy of the order,[48] all proceedings on the part of the party required to pay them, except to review or vacate the order, are stayed without further direction of the court until the payment thereof; but the adverse party may at his election waive the stay of proceedings. vided for applies in case of a failure to pay costs imposed by the appellate division on an order denying a motion for reargument.[49] There is a conflict of authority as to whether the statute applies to costs of an appeal.[50] Some decisions hold that the statute has no application as regards the defensive rights of a party, but applies only to an "onward movement" in the action by such party.[51] It has also been held not to apply to any proceedings necessary to enable the party in default to review the order imposing costs by an appeal;[52] to a motion by plaintiff for leave to enter final judgment dismissing the complaint after an order sustaining a demurrer thereto has been affirmed on appeal;[53] nor to a motion to substitute a living for a deceased party, in order that proceedings in the action might be taken.[54]

(B) Waiver of Right to Stay. The stay provided for by the statute is waived by serving notice of trial or accepting such notice from the opposite party after the order granting costs is made;[55] by an appearance of the opposite party in an argument for further proceedings on their merits without objection to the non-payment of costs;[56] by giving notice to a receiver;[57] or by an agreement that the costs could be paid later, and by proceeding with the argument, and by an acceptance of the costs paid on the day of the agreement.[58] It is not waived by answering an amended complaint served before the stay became operative.[59]

(II) Where Costs Directed to Abide Event. The statute further provides that when an order directs that the costs of a motion abide the event of the action, they may be taxed as a part of the costs of the action, or set off against costs awarded to the adverse party, as the case may require. Under this clause non-payment of costs of a motion directed to abide the event does not operate as a stay of the action.[60]

D. By Execution — 1. Right to Execution For Costs — a. Costs Awarded on Final Judgment. A judgment for debt or damages and costs is an entirety. The costs follow as an incident the judgment for the debt or damages, and are collectable by execution in the same manner as the amount awarded for debt or damages.[61]

b. Interlocutory Costs. In the absence of special statutory authorization interlocutory costs are not recoverable by execution;[62] but in some states it has been held that after final judgment they may be properly included, by an order of court, in an execution issued for the costs of the action.[63] Under a statute authorizing issuance of execution where costs of a motion, directed by an order to be paid, are not paid within the time specified, costs of an appeal from an order are costs of a motion.[64] On the other hand costs allowed at the close of an examination in supplementary proceedings are not motion costs within the rule.[65] So an application for judgment on the pleadings is not a motion, within the statute.[66]

2. In Whose Favor Issued. In the absence of express statutory authority an execution for costs, it is apprehended, can only be issued by a party to the suit.[67] Officers of court have no right to issue an execution for their fees.[68] In some jurisdictions, however, it has been held that the officers and witnesses can issue execution in the name of the prevailing party for the collection of their costs.[69]

3. Against Whom Issued. Execution ordinarily issues against the unsuccessful party in the suit.[70] Unless there is statutory authority for so doing, an execution cannot issue against the successful party for costs, although they cannot be made out of the unsuccessful party.[71] But in a number of jurisdictions there are statutes providing under certain circumstances for execution against the successful party for costs, where the same cannot be made out of the unsuccessful party, against whom they have been awarded.[72] Under a statute giving to defendant, entitled to costs, an execution against an equitable plaintiff, a judgment for defendant for costs warrants the issue of execution against all the plaintiffs of record, legal as well as equitable.[73]

4. Prerequisites to Issuance. The rule seems to be well settled that before an execution can issue for the collection of costs there must be a judgment,[74]

or order of court,[75] awarding costs, and the amount legally ascertained by taxation.[76] No demand for costs is necessary before issuance of execution, unless so required by statute;[77] and where a statute authorizes the issuance of an execution against personal property for the collection of costs founded on an order of court, execution may issue without application to the court, on the expiration of the time prescribed for payment.[78] The decisions are conflicting as to whether execution for interlocutory costs may be issued without application to the court.[79]

Judgment for debt.—A judgment for defendant for his costs, whatever the form of action may be, is to be treated as a judgment for a debt, within the meaning of the provisions under consideration. Ex p. Thayer, 11 R. I. 160.

Time of arrest.—A statute providing that no arrest shall be made in a civil action after sunset, except by special authority of the magistrate making the certificate, applies only to arrests on motion process, and not to arrests on execution, as it expressly declares that the writ is not to be subject to the conditions and limitations imposed in the case of executions for debt or damages. In re Stone, 129 Mass. 156.

action "to recover a fine or penalty," or "an action upon contract, express or implied," within a statute authorizing body execution against the defendant in such case.[82]

6. Requisites of Execution. Costs being incident to the judgment must be included in the execution to insure collection.[83] It has been held, however, that an execution for costs generally, without stating the amount, is good, if the amount, items, and persons to whom costs are due are indorsed on the execution by the clerk.[84]

7. Setting Aside or Recalling Execution. An execution for costs not properly taxable may be set aside [85] or recalled.[86]

8. Stay of Execution. An execution is stayed by appeal [87] or writ of error;[88] but the fact that a motion to retax has never been decided does not stay it.[89]

9. Alias Writs. Although a portion of the costs have been omitted, another execution cannot issue after return of execution satisfied, without some judicial action to ascertain the costs, and an order made for their collection.[90]

E. By Fee Bill. Under the Illinois and Missouri statutes the officers of court are entitled, in the cases specified in the statutes, to collect their costs by the issuance of a fee bill.[91]

83. Bradley v. Clearfield, etc., Co., 8 Pa. Dist. 493, 22 Pa. Co. Ct. 526, in which it is held that this is true even if the costs are in controversy when the execution for collection of the debt and interest is issued.

If the execution creditor is erroneously described as an administrator in the execution, the description may be rejected as surplusage. Buswell v. Eaton, 76 Me. 392.

One execution against several defendants. — In trespass quare clausum fregit the two defendants severed in their pleas, and the jury assessed several damages against them. It was held that one execution should issue against both for costs only, and several executions for the several damages. Kempton v. Cook, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 305. So it has been held that process in the nature of a fieri facias issued against several defendants to collect the costs of the denial of a motion is regular, although one of the defendants died previous to making the motion. It is ground to quash an execution that the amount and items are not shown (Brainard v. Harrison, 53 Ala. 360), or that it has been issued after the time therefor has expired, the judgment not having been revived (Price v. Nesbitt, 37 Md. 618).

But where costs have been collected from the successful party, because they could not be made out of the unsuccessful party, an alias execution may thereafter be issued against him. Montgomery v. Montgomery, 20 Ala. 350.

Under the Illinois practice, whenever an alias writ issues, the costs attendant on the first writ are included with the additional costs in the second writ, and those of an alias, in like manner, in a pluries, if it issue. Therefore the alias and pluries cannot correspond with the original writ, and a variance between them in the amount of costs is not material. Bryan v. Smith, 3 Ill. 47.

The fact that an appeal has been taken does not deprive them of the right to issue a fee bill for fees earned in the case. State v. Emmerson, 74 Mo. 607. But a fee bill cannot issue against the unsuccessful party in a suit for the costs made by the successful party, and for which the latter has obtained judgment. Neal v. Blanchard, 32 Ill. 503. And a party to the cause has no right to issue a fee bill to collect costs on a judgment rendered in his favor. Eads v. Couse, 35 Ill. 534.

The officers of court are not entitled to an execution for their costs, as this is the process of the parties to the suit, who alone have the right to control it. Reddick v. Cloud, 7 Ill. 670; Hoover v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 115 Mo. 77, 21 S. W. 1076; Beedle v. Mead, 81 Mo. 297.

F. By Proceedings For Contempt. Where a judgment sets aside a conveyance and awards costs, it is enforceable by proceedings for contempt, under a statute providing that where a judgment is final and part of it cannot be enforced by execution the part which cannot be so enforced is enforceable by serving a copy of the judgment on the party cast, and in case he refuses or wilfully neglects to obey it by punishment for contempt.[92]

XXVIII. IN WHAT PAYMENT MADE.

Costs should be paid in money, and not in any kind of credit or representation of money.[93] Payment by check,[94] by draft,[95] by note,[96] or by charging them to counsel,[97] is not sufficient; and it has been held that payment should be made in coin or legal tender treasury notes.[98]

XXIX. RECOVERY BACK OF COSTS PAID.

A. Right to Recover Back Costs. Costs voluntarily paid cannot be recovered back, although the party paying them is not liable therefor.[99] The rule is Misconduct of attorney.— The institution of proceedings by one attorney from improper motive and without just grounds, to disbar another attorney, is "misconduct as such" attorney, within the meaning of a statute excepting such a case from the general provision abolishing imprisonment for non-payment of costs; and in case of the non-payment of costs so ordered to be paid an order and a precept in pursuance thereof may be properly granted and issued committing the attorney to the county jail until payment is made. In re Kelly, 62 N. Y. 198.

Special proceedings.—A statute providing that on non-payment upon demand of the costs awarded by a final order made in a special proceeding instituted by a state writ the person required to pay such costs may be punished for contempt of court is merely directory. The court will inflict such punishment only when in its discretion it is deemed proper to do so. People v. Masonic Guild, etc., Assoc., 18 N. Y. Suppl. 806, 22 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 74.

Surrogate's decree for costs.—A statute providing that in certain cases the decree of the surrogate's court, directing the "payment of money," or requiring the performance of any other act, may be enforced by proceedings for contempt, does not apply to decrees for the payment of "costs" only, and in respect to such decree the surrogate is subject to the general provisions of another statute, prohibiting imprisonment for non-payment of costs, except in the cases specified therein. In re Humfreville, 154 N. Y. 115, 47 N. E. 1086 [reversing 19 N. Y. App. Div. 381, 46 N. Y. Suppl. 439].

Under a statute providing that costs may be adjudged against a person beneficially interested in an action, but not a party thereto, and that he may be proceeded against for contempt on failure to pay the same, it has been held that a person so refusing to pay costs adjudged against him as assignee of plaintiff may be adjudged liable for contempt, without showing that such refusal impairs or prejudices any rights of defendant, and that he may be fined for the amount of such costs, to be paid to defendant's attorney. Acceptance of other medium.— Payment of costs in a prior suit to the officers and persons entitled thereto will be sufficient if accepted by such persons, although not made in money. Defendant cannot complain of the character of the payment, as he is thereby released from liability for such costs. Jordan v. Black, 1 Rob. (La.) 575. And under a statute making payment of costs a condition precedent to an appeal from an award, if the record recites the payment of costs, without showing that they were not paid in the manner required by law, extrinsic evidence will be admissible to show such fact. B. Methods of Recovery. There is some difference of opinion as to the method of recovering back costs for which the party paying them was not liable.[3]

XXX. SET-OFF OF COSTS.

A. In General. Costs in different suits, and recovered before different courts, between the same parties, may on motion be offset in a court of law[4] or equity.[5] cannot be recovered back, although the party paying them be eventually successful in the action. Tarpy v. Crutchfield, 38 Ind. 58. So costs paid into court to render a witness competent are absolutely paid, and are not recoverable. Clement v. Bixler, 3 Watts (Pa.) 248. And if a party pays costs not taxed in consideration of a discharge of a judgment and execution rendered against him he cannot recover back the money so paid. Chace v. May, Brayt. (Vt.) 25.

1. Davis v. Bell, 57 Miss. 320; Clinton v. Strong, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 370; Kennedy v. Hughey, 3 Watts (Pa.) 265; Hamilton v. Aslin, 3 Watts (Pa.) 222; Leonard v. Smith, 4 Pa. Dist. 249.

Illustrations.— Where plaintiff, to secure a remittitur, has paid the prothonotary's fees, the prothonotary having a lien on the record therefor, he may recover them again of defendant, because in so doing he is not a volunteer. Hamilton v. Aslin, 3 Watts (Pa.) 222; Leonard v. Smith, 4 Pa. Dist. 249. And if plaintiff retain a suit before a justice without any jurisdiction, and which comes into the court of common pleas by appeal, and is there referred to arbitrators, from whose award defendant appeals, and the cause is afterward dismissed for want of original jurisdiction, defendant may recover the costs which he paid on the appeal from the award. Under these circumstances plaintiff may be considered to have been compelled to pay his costs for the purpose of obtaining relief. Kennedy v. Hughey, 3 Watts (Pa.) 265. So where an attachment is unlawful the payment of costs to procure its release will not be voluntary. Hunter v. Penland, (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 32 S. W. 421.

Costs on reversal.—As the supreme court gives no costs on reversal of a judgment, if costs are levied on execution the court will order the money refunded. Smith v. Sharp, 5 Watts (Pa.) 292; Wright v. Small, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 204. But where in a civil case before a justice his costs were paid to him, and the case carried to the superior court, where his judgment was reversed, the costs could not be recovered from him. Abrams v. Ryan, 61 Ga. 597.

2. Fischer v. Burns, 30 N. Y. Suppl. 437, 61 N. Y. St. 476.

3. Thus some decisions hold that an independent action cannot be maintained to recover back such costs. Robinson v. Clarke, Smith (N. H.) 147; Allen v. Hickson, 6 N. J. L. 409; Onondaga v. Briggs, 2 Den. (N. Y.) 26. This would be trying in an action for money had and received, the merits of a judgment obtained in another suit. Robinson v. Clarke, Smith (N. H.) 147. So it has been held that where a collected judgment for costs is set aside, and a new trial had, resulting in a verdict in favor of the party paying the judgment, the proper mode of enforcing an order for restitution of the costs previously paid is by execution, as on a money judgment. O'Gara v. Kearney, 57 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 439. Another decision holds that where plaintiff by execution recovers costs to which he is not entitled, the court may by rule compel him to refund them, even after they have been distributed by the sheriff. Harris v. Fortune, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 125. On the other hand it has been held that where a suit is discontinued by plaintiff without any decision of the court costs exacted may be recovered back by suit against the officer. Thompson v. Doty, 72 Ind. 336; Clinton v. Strong, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 370. Again it has been held that a losing party against whom costs have been adjudged, and who has paid a witness of the successful party his taxed attendance, cannot, upon a retaxation of the costs, recover the payment from the witness, the right of action, if the correction were legally made, being against the successful party. Gray v. Alexander, 7 Humphr. (Tenn.) 16.

4. Conable v. Bucklin, 2 Aik. (Vt.) 221.

This is so, although one of the judgments be for costs only. Fitch v. Baldwin, Clarke (N. Y.) 426. Contra, Carleton v. Goldman, 5 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 153 note.

If in the same suit each party is awarded costs on different issues these costs may be offset against each other. Jordan v. Cummings, 43 N. H. 134. And where, on a recovery of a money demand by plaintiff, defendant is entitled to costs, the costs should be set off against plaintiff's recovery. Johnson v. Farrell, 10 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 384.

Judgment against two parties.— Where the granting of costs is discretionary, the court on giving them to a party may direct them to be set off upon a judgment held against him and another by the adverse party, although such joint judgment be not the subject of a legal set-off. Wheeler v. Heermans, 3 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 597.

5. Stuyvesant v. Davies, 3 Edw. (N. Y.) 537.

Necessity for liquidation of costs.— Costs will not be set off against a judgment in another suit unless liquidated at the time the right of set-off attached. Ainslie v. Boynton, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 258.

B. Interlocutory Costs. Motion costs awarded plaintiff should be set off against costs previously awarded in the same action to defendant against plaintiff, especially where the latter is insolvent;[6] and the court may set off interlocutory costs against the judgment finally rendered in an action.[7]

C. Effect of Lien of Attorney. According to the weight of authority, a set-off of costs will not be permitted where it interferes with an attorney's lien therefor.[8]

D. Costs of Appeal. If a judgment is modified on appeal, the costs of appeal may be set off against the successful party's judgment against the costs which he has recovered below.[9]

XXXI. COSTS IN CRIMINAL CASES.

A. Source of Right To, or Liability For, Costs. At common law costs as such were unknown.[10] As a consequence it is the rule as well in criminal as in civil cases that the recovery and allowance of costs rests entirely on statutory provisions — that no right to or liability for costs exists in the absence of statutory authorization.[11] In the language of the books, "It is indispensable for every claimant to be able to point to the statute which entitles him to receive what he claims;"[12] and the statutes must be strictly construed.[13]

6. Catlin v. Adirondack Co., 22 Hun (N. Y.) 493.

A party to whom costs have erroneously been awarded cannot complain that costs awarded the other party are offset against those awarded him. Cook v. Mills, 6 Allen (Mass.) 556.

7. Hoyt v. Godfrey, 3 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 118.

Costs awarded a party "to abide the event" are only collectable in case the party is ultimately successful, and in such case he is not entitled to offset such costs. Murphy v. Gold, etc., Tel. Co., 9 N. Y. Suppl. 28, 27 N. Y. St. 30, 18 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 43.

8. Hendrickson v. Brown, 39 N. J. L. 239; Ainslie v. Boynton, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 258; Naylor v. Lane, 5 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 149; Purchase v. Bellows, 16 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 105; Cooper v. Bigalow, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 206; Devoy v. Boyer, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 247. But see Hoyt v. Godfrey, 11 Daly (N. Y.) 278, holding that although an insolvent client agrees that his attorney shall have such costs as may be awarded, the court may order that interlocutory costs allowed the client be deducted from the judgment rendered against him, notwithstanding such agreement.

B. By What Law Governed. Statutes regulating the taxation and payment of costs have no application to cases in which judgment is rendered before their passage;[14] but, according to the weight of authority, if such statutes are in force at the time of rendition of judgment costs in such prosecution are regulated thereby, although enacted subsequently to the commencement of the prosecution,[15] or to the time the costs accrued.[16]

C. Constitutionality of Statutes. Statutes imposing liability for costs or designated items of costs, under circumstances prescribed by the statutes, on defendant,[17] on the prosecutor,[18] on the county,[19] or on the state[20] have been uniformly held constitutional.

D. Liability For Costs — 1. Liability of Defendant — a. Where One Defendant Is Tried — (I) On Acquittal. Defendant is not liable to pay costs on acquittal, unless it is so provided by the statute.[21] Under some statutes, when defendant is acquitted, he cannot be adjudged to pay costs in any prosecution, no matter what may be the grade.[22] In others he cannot be adjudged to pay costs on acquittal of a felony.[23] It has been held that so far as the recovery or imposition of costs is concerned the entry of a nolle prosequi,[24] or the dismissal of an appeal from a conviction in a justice's court taken to a court having no jurisdiction, is equivalent to an acquittal.[25]

Acquittal on appeal from justice.— Where by statute defendant is liable for certain costs, when a fine is imposed, and is acquitted on appeal from a sentence of the justice im-authorization the court has no power to award costs against defendant on conviction.[26] There are, however, in most jurisdictions statutes which in designated prosecutions authorize the imposition of costs on a defendant on conviction.[27]

(B) Effect of Death of Defendant Pending Appeal. In some jurisdictions it is held that where defendant dies pending an appeal from conviction this does not abate or destroy the judgment for costs.[28]

(C) Effect of Pardon. If a pardon is pleaded before conviction, on which defendant is discharged, this will bar a judgment against defendant for costs.[29]

b. Liability of Joint Defendants — (I) On Conviction of All. In some jurisdictions, where persons are jointly indicted and tried, and are convicted, each is liable to pay the whole amount of costs.[30] Nevertheless but one payment can be enforced;[31] and in the event of unequal payments contribution may be recovered one from another.[32] But where there is a severance and one pleads guilty and the other is convicted only the costs of the cause up to the severance are taxable against the one pleading guilty.[33]

(II) Where Some Defendants Are Acquitted. Where part of the defendants jointly indicted and tried are acquitted, the defendant or defend-posing a fine, he is not liable for such costs. Com. v. Bundy, 5 Gray (Mass.) 305. See also Gribble v. State, 3 Iowa 217.

ants convicted cannot be required to pay the costs of prosecution of those acquitted.[34]

2. Liability of Prosecutor — a. Grounds of Liability. Independently of statute the prosecutor is under no circumstance liable to pay any costs;[35] but in many jurisdictions he is by statute made liable for costs in designated classes of proceedings and under certain circumstances. Thus in a number of jurisdictions statutes have been enacted making the prosecutor liable for costs in certain proceedings when one or more of the following grounds designated by statute appear: When the prosecution is frivolous,[36] malicious,[37] without probable cause,[38] or is not required by the public interest.[39]

b. Prosecutions or Proceedings in Which Prosecutor Liable. Inasmuch as the prosecutor's liability is dependent solely on statute, the payment of costs cannot be imposed on him except in such proceedings or prosecutions as are designated by statute. In some jurisdictions the proceedings or prosecutions designated are all criminal actions;[40] in others misdemeanor cases;[41] in others trials on indictment or information, except in capital cases, and those in which imprisonment in the penitentiary is the sole punishment;[42] in others examining trials before com-

Statutes of Pennsylvania provide that in case of acquittals in prosecutions for misdemeanor the jury shall determine by their verdict whether the county or the prosecutor or defendant shall pay the costs; that in all cases of conviction of any crime all costs shall be paid by the party convicted; and that where two or more persons have committed an indictable offense, the names of all shall be included in one indictment, for which no more costs shall be allowed than if one only was contained therein. Under these statutes, where two are joined in an indictment for misdemeanor and only one is convicted, the jury have no power to order that the costs or any portion of them shall be paid by the county, the acquitted defendant, or the prosecutor. Failure of prosecution.— Under a statute making the prosecutor liable under certain circumstances in case of "an information or indictment" for a trespass or other misdemeanor, it has been held that a person on whose information a "presentment" is made is not liable for costs on failure of the prosecution. Com. v. Oliver, 3 Bibb (Ky.) 474.

In cases requiring indorsement of indictment.— Under Mo. Rev. Stat. § 1768, the prosecuting witness is made liable for the costs in the event of an acquittal only in cases "in which, by law, an indictment is required to be indorsed by a prosecutor." The instance in which such indorsement is required is that of indictment for any trespass against the person or property of another not

c. Who Are Liable as Prosecutors. Some decisions hold that married women may be prosecutors, and as such are liable for costs;[44] but this is denied in others.[45] An infant, it has been held, may be a prosecutor and liable for payment of costs.[46] On the other hand statutes authorizing the imposition of costs on prosecutors in certain cases have no application to prosecutions by a peace officer, whose duty requires him on information from others to commence prosecution;[47] nor to an officer making an arrest.[48] There is a conflict of authority as to whether a person who at the request of a prosecuting officer verifies by affidavit the information filed by the officer may become liable for costs as prosecutor.[49]

d. Requisites of Liability — (i) In General. It is of course necessary to fix the prosecutor's liability for costs that one or more of the grounds enumerated by statute should appear,[50] and there must be an express finding that such ground or grounds exist.[51] So where the statute requires the prosecutor to be named in the verdict, in order to fix his liability for costs, he cannot be required to pay costs where this is not done.[52] Under a statute authorizing the imposition of costs on the prosecutor under certain circumstances, when defendant is "acquitted by a jury," he cannot be ordered to pay costs on acquittal by a jury of six. The trial must have been by a jury of twelve.[53]

(ii) Marking Prosecutor's Name on Indictment. Where it is provided by statute that the prosecutor's name shall be marked on the indictment, no judgment can be rendered against him for costs if this be not done;[54] and the provision as to the time when this should be done must be strictly complied with.

If there be no statute authorizing it the court cannot, after indictment found and nolle prosequi entered, indorse a person as prosecutor upon the bill of indictment.[55]

(III) Acquittal, Nolle Prosequi, Etc. Where by statute the prosecutor's liability for costs is made to depend "on an acquittal" of defendant, an acquittal is of course necessary to fix such liability.[56] No liability thereunder for costs can be imposed on the prosecutor in case of a nolle prosequi,[57] where the indictment is quashed,[58] nor where the grand jury return a bill "Not a true bill."[59] But an acquittal will render the prosecutor liable notwithstanding the indictment did not set out any offense.[60] If the statute makes it a prerequisite of liability that there be a finding of want of probable cause, no liability attaches when the prosecution is dismissed on motion of the county attorney.[61] In the absence of statute authorizing it, costs cannot be imposed on the prosecutor on dismissal of the complaint for failure to state a cause of action,[62] or for failure of the prosecuting witness to appear.[63]

e. Conclusiveness of Court's Findings as to Prosecutor's Liability. In North Carolina where the court decides whether grounds exist for imposing costs on the prosecutor, its finding that the facts warrant the imposition is conclusive.[64]

f. Power to Set Aside Verdict For Costs. In jurisdictions where the jury determine the prosecutor's liability, the court may set aside that part of the verdict which places the costs upon the prosecutor if the facts warrant it.[65] In Co. Ct. 38).

55. State v. Hodson, 74 N. C. 151. See also State v. Crosset, 81 N. C. 579, in which it was held that the person prosecuting should be marked as such on the bill and sent to the grand jury, in default of which he would not be liable.

In North Carolina a statute provides that the court may determine who the prosecutor is at any stage of the proceedings, whether before or after indictment found or acquittal, if notice be given the person sought to be charged as prosecutor to show cause why he should not be made such of record. Under this statute notice must be given. State v. Sanders, 111 N. C. 700, 11 S. E. 320; State v. Hamilton, 106 N. C. 660, 10 S. E. 854. It need not be in writing (State v. Norwood, 84 N. C. 665), or in the presence of the party, when the motion to mark him as prosecutor is made, is sufficient notice (State v. Hamilton, 106 N. C. 660, 10 S. E. 854. See also State v. Norwood, 84 N. other jurisdictions it is considered that the court has no power to set aside a verdict against the prosecutor for costs.[66]

g. Grounds to Set Aside Verdict or Judgment For Costs. A verdict imposing costs on a person as prosecutor will be set aside, where there is no evidence submitted to show that he acted in that capacity;[67] where it appears that the prosecution was instituted in good faith;[68] where there was probable cause for the charge and no evidence of malice;[69] where the name of the prosecutor is not stated in the verdict, as required by statute;[70] or where the grand jury place costs on a person not marked on an indictment as prosecutor, and who has not appeared before them.[71] The court will not, however, disturb the action of the grand jury in requiring the prosecutor to pay costs, on the ground that defendant had previously been committed to trial by the court for the same charge;[72] nor will such action be disturbed on the mere affidavit of the prosecutor and without full knowledge of all the facts in the case.[73] So it has been held no ground to set aside a judgment for costs that the judgment was rendered in his absence.[74]

In Pennsylvania the county is liable where defendant is acquitted of a felony. Com. v. Benscoter, 7 Luz. Leg. Reg. 191; Zink v. Schuylkill County, 1 Leg. Chron. 191. Under the act of May 19, 1887, the county is primarily liable for costs of prosecution of a misdemeanor in courts of quarter sessions, whether defendant is convicted or acquitted. Defendant must be sentenced, and a verdict of guilty alone is not sufficient to fix the liability of the county for costs. Rice v. Schuylkill County, 14 Pa. Co. Ct. 541. In prosecutions for misdemeanors tried in other courts than quarter sessions courts, this statute does not apply, and by virtue of other provisions it is necessary, to render the county liable, that the jury shall find, as required by statute, that the county should pay the costs (York County Com'rs v. Jacobs, 3 Penr. & W. 365), and there must be a judgment on such verdict (Com. v. Tack, 3 Brewst. 532).

rado the county is liable in all prosecutions where defendant has been convicted and is unable to pay costs.[82] In Missouri the county is liable where defendant is sentenced to imprisonment in the county jail or to pay a fine, or both, and is unable to pay costs.[83] In Illinois and New Jersey it has been held that the statutes do not authorize the imposition of costs on the county on conviction of defendant.[84]

d. On Nolle Prosequi, Dismissal, Quashal, Etc. If under a statute liability of the county for costs attaches "on acquittal" the county is not liable on a nolle prosequi;[85] nor under such a statute is the county liable where the indictment is quashed;[86] where the prosecution is dismissed by the consent of the prosecutor and the district attorney with the court's approval;[87] nor where defendant dies before trial.[88] Under a statute providing that if any person is brought before a court on a charge of crime, and such charge shall appear to be unfounded, the costs shall be paid by the county, the county is liable for costs where nolle prosequi has been entered before bill found.[89] of an offense less than felony for want of sufficient evidence to convict or bind over, it is error to tax costs against the county, in view of the statute making the prosecuting witness liable under such circumstances.[91]

f. Where Grand Jury Ignore Bill. In Pennsylvania in all cases of felony, where the grand jury ignore the indictment, the county is liable for costs.[92] In cases of misdemeanor triable in the court of quarter sessions, the county is immediately liable where the indictment is ignored by the grand jury.[93] In prosecutions for misdemeanors in other courts, where the bill is returned "Ignoramus," and the prosecutor is ordered to pay costs and is sentenced to pay them, and is discharged according to law, payment not being made, the county is not liable to pay such costs.[94] In North Carolina the county cannot be taxed with fees of the officers of court where the grand jury return "Not a true bill."[95]

This is true, although a new prosecution is however, has no application to a case where a county voluntarily assumes jurisdiction of an offense committed in another county;[99] where the charge is taken to a court which is prohibited by the constitution from assuming jurisdiction;[1] where the statute regulating the question of costs is declared unconstitutional;[2] nor to cases where the county from which the charge is taken would not be liable for costs in any event.[3]

(II) Which County Is Primarily Liable. Under the statutes of many jurisdictions the county where a case is tried pays the costs, and has recourse for the amount so paid against the county from which the change was taken;[4] while in others the latter is liable to pay the costs in the first instance,[5] and if the former pays them it is a voluntary payment for which no recovery lies.[6]

4. Liability of State — a. Introductory Statement. In the absence of statute expressly so providing, the state is never liable for costs, whether defendant be acquitted or convicted.[7] It is of course competent for the legislature to subject the state to liability for costs under certain circumstances.[8] But the liability is strictissimi juris. It does not attach except in the special cases provided for, and cannot be enforced except in the particular manner prescribed.[9]

under circumstances therein enumerated. Thus some statutes require payment of costs by the state if defendant, although convicted, be insolvent.[10] Before any judgment can be rendered for costs, however, all the requirements of the statutes must be strictly complied with.[11] There must be an adjudication of defendant's insolvency or an execution issued and returned nulla bona, and such facts should appear of record.[12] And under a statute of this character the insolvency of the prosecutor, against whom costs have been awarded, is no ground to fasten costs on the state.[13]

c. On Acquittal of Defendant. In some jurisdictions the state is made liable for costs in case of acquittal under circumstances enumerated therein.[14] If the statute imposes liability in case of acquittal of a felony the state will be liable in case of acquittal of felony, although defendant is convicted of a misdemeanor on the same indictment;[15] but a statute making the state liable on acquittal does not impose any liability on a dismissal of the prosecution.[16] On the other hand under a statute of this character the state will be liable, on acquittal of defendant, although the prosecutor's name was not marked on the indictment, as required by statute.[17] A statute which makes the state liable for costs, when "defendant is discharged by the court or magistrate before indictment preferred or found," is intended to provide for costs, where defendant is discharged by the court or magistrate on his judicial responsibility, without reference to the action of the grand jury.[18]

d. Effect on Liability of Voluntary Payment by County. Where a county pays costs for which the state is liable, in felony cases, it cannot recover the costs so paid.[19]

5. Liability of United States. In the absence of statute expressly so providing, the United States is never liable for costs.[20]

6. Liability of Municipality. which the prosecution is had is invalid;[22] nor by the fact that defendant worked out his costs in the city's prison or on the city's streets, the labor being performed for the benefit of the city.[23] In some jurisdictions the prosecution under an ordinance is a civil action, and the matter of costs governed by statutes relating to costs in civil actions generally.[24] In a greater number of jurisdictions, however, the proceeding is considered criminal in its nature,[25] and statutes giving costs to the successful party in a civil action have no application.[26]

7. ALLOWANCE OUT OF FUNDS PROVIDED BY STATUTE. In some jurisdictions provision is made for the payment of certain items of cost under designated circumstances out of funds derived from fines or forfeitures or from the labor of convicts. These statutes are to be strictly construed. No items of cost will be allowed except such as are clearly within the meaning of the statute, and the circumstances designated by statute as a prerequisite to their allowance must appear.[27]

E. Amount and Items Recoverable — 1. AGAINST DEFENDANT — a. In General. Costs taxable against a defendant are the costs incurred in establishing guilt and not those made in connection with an accusation shown to be groundless.[28] Nor can he be held responsible for all the costs the prosecution sees fit to make. He is only liable for such costs as there was actual, apparent, or probable necessity for making.[29] Under express statutory authority, it has been held that the compensation of jurors is taxable as costs against defendant.[30] So costs incurred

Effect of reversal of conviction on appeal. — In jurisdictions where the proceeding is considered criminal, in an action to enforce a city ordinance, the appellate court should not adjudge costs against a city and award execution on reversal of the judgment of conviction. Centralia v. Nagele, 181 Ill. 151, 55 N. E. 128 [reversing 81 Ill. App. 334]. But in a jurisdiction where the proceeding is considered civil, if defendant is acquitted on appeal from a judgment of conviction in the police court or the district court, and judgment entered that he recover of the city his costs, and that execution issue therefor, such judgment, until reversed or modified, is a valid judgment and enforceable in defendant's name, although he had paid none of the costs. Under a statute providing for payment of witness' fees from the fine and forfeiture fund, fees of witnesses at preliminary examinations or applications for bail are not chargeable against the fund. Bilbro v. Drakeford, 78 Ala. 318. So where a prosecution commenced before a justice is removed into the circuit court, the justice is not an officer of court within the statute making fees only of officers of court payable out of the fine and forfeiture fund. McPherson v. Boykin, 76 Ala. 602. No costs are allowable out of the fund under a statute providing therefor, when defendant has been convicted and is insolvent, or when the state enters a nolle prosequi, or the indictment has been withdrawn, or the prosecution abated by the death of defendant. Bilbro v. Drakeford, 78 Ala. 318.

28. Biester v. State, (Nebr. 1902) 91 N. W. 416, holding that costs made by the state in a futile effort to prove that an assault was felonious cannot be taxed against defendant, although convicted of an assault and battery.

In determining what costs were actually, apparently, or probably necessary, the trial court is vested with a large discretion which will not be interfered with if fairly exercised. Biester v. State, (Nebr. 1902) 91 N. W. 416.

Upon a confession of judgment by defendant and his sureties for the fine and costs, it is not error for the court to refuse to enter an order on the docket at defendant's request to limit the confession as to the costs to such as had been incurred on behalf of the state; the judgment entry without such express limitation would include only the costs of the state, and any taxation by the clerk of the costs of defendant would be illegal. Yeldell v. State, 100 Ala. 26, 14 So. 570, 46 Am. St. Rep. 20.

30. Souther v. Com., 7 Gratt. (Va.) 673. Compare People v. Kennedy, 58 Mich. 372, 377, 25 N. W. 318, in which it was held that the per diem of jurors should not be included in the costs assessed against defendant convicted of a misdemeanor. The court said: "It would be monstrous to establish a practice of punishing persons convicted of misdemeanors for demanding what the Constitubefore a grand jury have been held taxable against him as costs of the prosecution.[31] But costs incurred in an unsuccessful attempt to arrest defendant are not taxable against him in the absence of statutory authorization,[32] nor are stenographer's fees taxable unless a statute permits.[33]

b. Witness' Fees. Under the statutes in some jurisdictions, in cases where defendant is liable to pay costs, the fees of his own witnesses are taxable against him.[34] So fees of witnesses for the prosecution are taxable in cases where defendant is liable for the costs of the prosecution,[35] that is to say, to a reasonable amount. Independently of any statutory regulation, if an unnecessarily large number of witnesses are summoned and examined, the fees of so many as are in excess of a reasonable number are not taxable against defendant.[36] The traveling expenses of a witness from another state have been held to be taxable.[37]

c. Costs of Continuance. Where the statute provides that the party granted a continuance shall pay the costs thereof, defendant will be liable therefor, although acquitted, when it was granted at his request.[38]

e. Costs of Other Proceedings or Prosecutions. On assessment of costs against defendant on conviction, costs of an entirely distinct prosecution for another offense in the same court,[40] or in a different court,[41] are not taxable against defendant. So the costs of a preliminary examination, on which defendant is discharged, are not taxable against defendant when he is afterward indicted and convicted on the same charge;[42] and the same rule applies where a person accused of a crime before a justice is recognized to appear in the circuit court and is convicted in that court.[43] On the same principle it has been held that if an indictment is quashed,[44] or dismissed for defects therein,[45] and on the trial of a second indictment for the same offense defendant is ordered to pay costs, the costs of the first indictment cannot be included.

f. Expense of Boarding Convict. Where the expense of boarding a convict is made a public charge on the county[46] or state,[47] it is not taxable as costs against defendant under any circumstances, nor is the expense of supporting a convict after he is sentenced to imprisonment and to pay part of the "costs."[46]

g. State Tax in Litigation. There are rulings both ways on the question whether a state tax on litigation is costs and chargeable against defendant as such.[49]

h. Costs of Appeal — (i) To Court of Last Resort. As is the case with costs made in a trial court, costs on appeal is a matter entirely of statutory regulation. In the absence of statute costs of an appeal taken to the court of last resort are not taxable against defendant, irrespective of the outcome of the appeal,[50] but on conviction[51] or on dismissal such costs are recoverable against him as are provided for.[52]

(ii) To Intermediate Court. On appeal, by complainant in a criminal prosecution before a justice, from a taxation of costs against him on dismissal of the complaint, the state and complainant alone are parties, and if the appeal is successful the costs thereof cannot be taxed against defendant.[53]

j. Where There Are Several Defendants. Where several persons are included in the same indictment, but one fee for the indictment and the capias can be taxed.[55]

2. Against Prosecutor. If the prosecutor is made liable on acquittal, he will be liable for costs of both courts, where defendant is acquitted on appeal from a justice's court.[56] He cannot, however, be taxed as prosecutor in the court of one county for the costs of a like prosecution in the court of another county.[57] A solicitor's fee is not chargeable against a prosecutor on acquittal, where by statute fees are only given solicitors "on conviction."[58]

3. Against County — a. In General. A county is not liable for fees of an officer executing process in the absence of statutory authorization. He takes the office cum onere,[59] and it is not liable for the expense incurred in an unsuccessful attempt to arrest a fugitive from justice who has taken refuge in another state.[60] A county, however, has been held liable, in the absence of a statute so providing, for board and lodging of a jury provided in pursuance of an order of court;[61] and for fees of a stenographer for making a transcript of the notes taken on the trial of a cause, when expressly provided by statute.[62] If the statute imposes certain conditions on the liability of the county for fees of witnesses in behalf of the state, no liability for the costs of these witnesses attaches, unless these conditions are complied with.[63]

b. Costs Made by Defendant — (I) In General. Ordinarily statutes imposing payment of costs on a county do not render it liable for costs made by defendant.[64]

(II) Witness' Fees. The liability of a county for payment of witness' fees and costs in defending a prosecution arises only by virtue of legislative enactment. It cannot arise by implication but must be by express statutory provision,[65] and even then liability only attaches when the conditions rendering it liable have been fully complied with.[66] In cases where the county is liable for defendant's witnesses' fees on acquittal of defendant, if he is convicted but obtains a new trial on appeal and is acquitted, the county is liable for the witnesses' fees for defendant in both cases.[67]

(III) Costs of Appeal. In the absence of special statutory authorization costs made on appeal by defendant in a criminal prosecution are not taxable

Provisions held not to impose liability.— A constitutional provision that the accused shall have the right to compulsory process to obtain witnesses in his favor in all criminal prosecutions does not make the county liable for fees of defendant's witnesses in misdemeanor cases, under statutes providing that each county shall pay witness' fees in state cases, and a further statute providing that in felonies and no other cases the witnesses for the accused shall receive the same pay as the state witnesses. Ex p. Henderson, 51 S. Stat. § 461, as amended, a county is liable for the per diem and mileage of witnesses for defendant in prosecutions for a felony, when defendant has been convicted and is unable to pay such fees, or where he is acquitted, only when there has been filed in the case the affidavits required by that section, and an order of court entered that such witnesses, not exceeding the number limited, be summoned, and paid their witness' fees from the county treasury. against the county, although the judgment of conviction be reversed by the appellate court.[68]

(IV) Fees and Expenses of Counsel Appointed to Defend Poor Person— (A) In Absence of Statutory Authorization. In a few jurisdictions the rule has been settled by repeated adjudications that the county is liable for services performed by counsel appointed by the court in defending a poor person charged with an offense in the absence of statutory authorization therefor,[69] on the theory that the power conferred by statute to appoint counsel to defend a poor person carries with it the power to make an allowance for the services.[70] The great weight of authority, however, is opposed to this view, the rule in most jurisdictions being directly to the contrary.[71] In these jurisdictions the rule is that without special statutory authority the county is not liable for such services,[72] nor even the expense incurred in the preparation and course of the trial.[73] This rule proceeds upon the theory that the law confers on attorneys rights and privileges and with them imposes duties and obligations to be reciprocally enjoyed and performed,[74] and that among them is the obligation to defend persons charged with crime when required by the court.[75]

(B) Under Statutes. In a number of jurisdictions special statutory authority exists for imposing on counties fees of attorneys appointed to defend indigent prisoners. Some of these statutes are limited to particular grades of crime, while others contain no such limitation.[76]

(c) How Attorney Appointed. There being no statutory authority therefor the supreme court has no power to appoint an attorney to defend an indigent prisoner at the expense of the county.[77] Where a change of venue is made the court to which the cause is removed may appoint an attorney to defend the prisoner and the county from which the cause is removed will be liable to the same extent as if the appointment had been made and the case tried in that county.[78]

(d) By Whom Compensation Fixed. In Ohio the amount of the compensation is to be fixed by the county commissioners whose decision in the matter is final.[79] In Michigan it is the duty of the presiding judge to fix the amount of compensation.[80] In Nebraska the claim for services must be presented in the trial court both for services in the trial court and on appeal.[81] In Wisconsin the trial court fixes the compensation for services whether rendered in the trial court or on appeal.[82]

(e) Amount Allowable. Under a statute providing that the amount allowed "shall in no case exceed fifteen dollars per day for each day actually occupied in such trial or proceeding," no allowance can be made for days spent out of court in preparation for trial.[83] Under a statute providing that where counsel is assigned in a capital case the court besides counsel fees may allow him his personal and incidental expenses, expenses for an interpreter, in order that counsel may understand his client and witnesses but not expenses for a daily transcript of the evidence, are allowable.[84]

(v) On Change of Venue — (a) In General. Where the county in which the trial is had pays the costs it can recover from the county from which the change was taken all items which the law requires a county to pay.[85] Liability, however, is limited to such items. Recovery cannot be had from the county from which the change was taken for any other items.[86]

(B) Specific Items. In jurisdictions where fees of attorneys appointed by court to defend a poor person are taxable against a county, the fees of an attorney appointed by the court of the county to which a cause is removed are taxable against the county from which the change of venue is taken.[87] So the expense of guarding the jail in the county to which the cause is removed is taxable,[88] and also the expense of boarding the jurors and fees of the bailiff who takes charge of them.[89] Fees of jurors are also taxable in some jurisdictions,[90] but in others they are not taxable.[91] Fees of the sheriff of the county to which the action has been removed are allowed in some jurisdictions,[92] but are not allowable in others.[93] Fees of defendant's witnesses have been held taxable if their evidence was material, although they attended without subpœnas.[94] On the other hand it has been held in some jurisdictions that the expense of hiring a building for court and jury rooms,[95] or the expenses incurred in securing a jury to try the case, are not recoverable as costs.[96] Nor is it permissible to include in the clerk's fees a charge of "judgment-roll," as a judgment-roll exists only in civil cases.[97]

4. Against State — a. In General. In cases where the state is liable for costs it will be liable for the fees of its own witnesses,[98] and if so provided by statute the sheriff's fee for taking a bail-bond is taxable to the state.[99] made by defendant, or of particular items so made.[1] A statute making the state liable under certain circumstances for costs "accrued on behalf of the state,"[2] or for "costs,"[3] has been held not to render the state liable for costs made by defendant. A statute providing for the payment of costs by the state on acquittal refers only to costs that have accrued at the trial and have not been already adjudged against either party, and a continuance fee paid by defendant cannot be recovered on acquittal.[4] The maintenance of a person while in jail is taxable against the state if there is statutory authority therefor.[5]

(II) Witness' Fees. The state is not liable for the costs of defendant's witnesses, in the absence of statutory or constitutional provisions making it so.[6]

(III) Fees of Attorney Appointed to Defend Poor Person. The state is not liable for compensation of an attorney appointed by the court to defend a poor person charged with a crime.[7]

ply with the statute at least substantially.[13] A bond "for all the costs which may accrue in said prosecution" covers proceedings on appeal.[14] If no liability on the bond attaches, unless the prosecution was without probable cause, no action will lie thereon, where the justice fails to make the entry of "Want of probable cause."[15] The failure of the prosecutor to give bond is not a matter of which defendant can complain,[16] at least after he has entered a plea of not guilty.[17]

2. By Defendant. In Illinois defendant cannot be required to advance costs before trial; if he does he can recover them back on acquittal.[18]

G. Judgment or Award of Costs. Ordinarily the costs in a criminal case abide and follow the final judgment.[19] A judgment for costs may be rendered against the prosecutor in his absence,[20] and the fact that in a justice's judgment the name of the prosecutor is not given will not render a judgment for costs against him void for uncertainty.[21]

H. Certificate. To make a county liable for costs it is necessary in some jurisdictions for the judge to make a certificate of the county's liability and transmit the same to the county court for allowance. The certificate is obligatory and conclusive as to the amount of costs and charges to be allowed,[22] unless the fees

13. Bonds held sufficient.— A bond "to prosecute the complaint with effect, or in default thereof to pay all lawful costs which may accrue therefrom," sufficiently complies with a statute requiring a bond "to prosecute such complaint to final judgment with effect, or in default thereof to pay the costs which may accrue thereon to the State, or to the person or persons accused." State v. Palmer, 15 R. I. 6, 22 Atl. 944. Com. v. Tack, 3 Brewst. (Pa.) 532. On a conviction of a felony, when no time is definitely fixed within which to tax costs and disbursements, judgment for costs must be entered in the judgment-lien docket within a reasonable time to entitle the state to a lien. 22. Ouachita County v. Sanders, 10 Ark. 467, holding further that to make the allowance of the costs imperative upon the county court, it must also be certified that defendant has been acquitted or has been convicted and that the costs cannot be made out of his property as one or the other of these facts is a prerequisite to the county's liability. The county court cannot allow a bill for costs on the certificate of the circuit court that it is just and that defendant has escaped.

In Wisconsin as the judge of the court in which a cause is tried on change of venue has exclusive cognizance of the taxation and allowance of costs by him, a taxation at a certain amount, "subject, however, to an investigation by the county board of the county liable therefor," is ineffectual and void. Waushara County v. Portage County, 83 Wis. 5, 52 N. W. 1135. The supreme court will not certify for services rendered in prosecuting the case therein, but it is the duty of the trial court to make such certificate upon notice to the district attorney and due proof of for services rendered are not fixed by law,[23] but is not conclusive of the county's liability.[24]

I. Right of Appeal. To entitle one to appeal from a judgment or order imposing costs on him in a criminal case, there must be some general or special statute authorizing it. Thus the prosecutor has no right of appeal unless there is some statutory authorization.[25] Some decisions hold that taxing him in a criminal action with costs is in the nature of a civil judgment or order, from which an appeal lies, under statutes authorizing appeals from civil judgments or orders.[26] In other decisions the view is maintained that a judgment awarding costs against the prosecutor is "in a criminal action," and that a statute authorizing an appeal from a judgment in a civil case has no application.[27]

J. Taxation. Costs in a criminal case must be taxed by the court in which the case is tried or by the clerk. If no application for taxation or cost bill is required by statute to be filed the taxation of costs will be valid, although none is filed.[28]

K. Correction of Erroneous Taxation — 1. In Trial Court. The proper procedure to obtain a correction of an erroneous taxation is by motion to retax in the court where the cause is pending[29] or by replevin of the fee bill.[30] Error

In Illinois it has been held that the right of the prosecutor to appeal from a judgment imposing costs on him is given by a statute providing that "defendant may appeal," etc. Berman v. People, 101 Ill. 322.

In Iowa an erroneous taxation of costs may be modified on appeal by the state, the view being taken that costs are merely incidental to the proceedings. State v. Belle, 92 Iowa 258, 60 N. W. 525; State v. Rainsbarger, 74 Iowa 539, 38 N. W. 403. See also State v. Speele, 112 Ga. 39, 37 S. E. 174, in which the state is held to have a right of appeal where the judgment against a prosecutor for costs is sought to be enforced only by execution against his property. An appeal also lies on behalf of the county. State v. Belle, 92 Iowa 258, 60 N. W. 525; State v. Rainsbarger, 74 Iowa 539, 38 N. W. 403. And a statute providing that either party may appeal, "the state in the same manner as defendant," allows an appeal by a prosecuting witness in the name of the state from a judgment imposing costs. State v. Roney, 37 Iowa 30.

In Kansas it has been held, under a statute allowing an appeal on "a question reserved by the state," that the district attorney, having excepted to an order relieving the prosecutor from the payment of costs and adjudging the county to pay the same, the state may appeal from the order. The party injured is entitled to relief in equity from the illegal and fraudulent taxation of a county clerk of the costs and disbursements in a criminal case.

in allowing items not properly taxable is not an excess of jurisdiction and certiorari will not lie to correct such error.[31] The motion should be made by the party or other person interested in obtaining a correction of the taxation.[32] The time of making a motion to correct errors in taxation is ordinarily a matter of statutory regulation.[33] On a motion to retax the merits of the verdict cannot be inquired into and evidence is not admissible to contradict the verdict or to show that it was rendered through prejudice or corruption.[34]

2. IN APPELLATE COURT — a. Prerequisites of Review. As a general rule objection to an improper taxation of costs is not available in an appellate court in the absence of a motion made in the trial court to retax the same,[35] and of a presentation of the question by assignments of error.[36] So no objection which is not raised by the motion to retax will be considered.[37]

b. Hearing and Determination. Error in the taxation of costs must be affirmatively shown by the record or it will be presumed that the motion to retax was properly overruled.[38] On appeal by a prosecutor from an order taxing him with costs, the court cannot review the findings of fact by the trial court upon which the prosecutor is taxed with costs.[39] Where the trial court erroneously apportions costs in a criminal prosecution and denies a motion to retax, the supreme court may on appeal correct the error by taxing all the costs to defendant.[40]

L. Methods of Enforcing Liability For Costs — 1. AGAINST DEFENDANT — a. As in Civil Actions. A judgment for costs against defendant may be enforced in the same manner as a judgment in a civil action, when there is statutory authority therefor.[41] To authorize the issuance of an execution for costs the Motion by sureties.— Where defendant confesses judgment for costs and the clerk in taxing costs includes costs not properly taxable against defendant, defendant's sureties may move to retax costs. Blankenship v. State, 105 Ala. 128, 17 So. 99.

33. Under a statute providing that if the judge of the county court, when a bill of costs certified by the trial judge and attorney-general is presented to him, and his warrant demanded for its payment, conceives that the costs are not chargeable to the county, he may defer issuance of the warrant until he has moved the court for a correction, such a motion is not filed too late after the bill of costs has been certified by the trial judge and attorney-general. Thus the ruling of the trial court on a motion to retax will not be reversed on appeal on the ground of excess of number of witnesses, in the absence of a showing for what purpose and at whose instance the witnesses were summoned. Murphy v. State, 71 Ala. 15. Nor will the appellate court presume from the mere fact that certain witnesses were summoned to prove a person's habit of intoxication, material to the issue, that the process of the court was abused. Fromer v. State, 49 Ind. 580. judgment must show the amount.[42] No execution for costs can issue while an appeal with stay of proceedings is pending.[43]

b. By Imprisonment. The decisions are not harmonious as to the power of the courts to imprison a convicted defendant for non-payment of costs, and this, it is apprehended, results from a difference of opinion as to whether costs imposed in a criminal case are a part of the punishment or nothing more than an ordinary debt. In a number of cases it has been held that the imprisonment of defendant for costs is unconstitutional, as being in violation of the clause prohibiting imprisonment for debt.[44] The weight of authority, however, is clearly to the contrary. While it is very generally held that defendant cannot be imprisoned for costs in the absence of express statutory authority therefor,[45] it is usually considered competent for the legislature to authorize the commitment of defendant to prison for the non-payment of costs, and statutes have been enacted in a number of states authorizing it.[46] But after one has been convicted and sentenced, and has complied with the sentence, he cannot be rearrested to compel payment of a bill of costs filed subsequent to his discharge.[47] To authorize a discharge there must be a strict compliance with the statutes prescribing the methods by which it may be obtained.[48]

Escape.— Where a defendant is ordered into custody on a conviction of an indictment until he shall pay the fine and costs imposed by the judgment, and is permitted by the sheriff to escape, this is no discharge of the judgment. State v. Simpson, 46 N. C. 80.

c. By Requiring Labor. In the absence of express statutory authorization a defendant cannot be made to work out costs at hard labor.[49] It is, however, competent for the legislature to impose hard labor on defendant for payment of costs, and this is done in a number of states.[50] Under these statutes, however, it is usually considered that defendant can be made to work out only the costs of prosecution and not the costs made by himself.[51] He cannot be required to work out the costs of maintenance in the county jail during the time between sentence and transfer to the workhouse.[52] So notwithstanding a statute of this character a convict pardoned during the time of imprisonment cannot be held in confinement to compel payment of costs.[53]

d. Under Statutes Imposing Lien on Defendant's Realty. In a number of jurisdictions statutes impose a lien for costs on defendant's realty in cases of conviction.[54] The time when the lien attaches depends of course on the wording of the statute;[55] and while these statutes do not divest the prisoner of the right to the possession and use of his property,[56] the lien necessarily supersedes any convey-

Form and sufficiency of judgment.—A judgment on conviction of defendant for a fine and costs is not invalid for failure to direct that defendant work it out. A judgment for fine and costs would be valid, and the court on application might amend by adding the direction required by statute. Murphy v. State, 38 Ark. 514. So a judgment directing defendant to perform hard labor for the county for a given period and also for "a sufficient length of time to pay all the costs and officers' fees in the case, not exceeding forty cents per day," has been held sufficiently certain in the absence of any objection in the trial court. McIntosh v. State, 52 Ala. 355. It has also been held that a judgment in the following form is sufficient: "That said defendant perform hard labor for the county for —— days, at 33 cents a day, to pay and satisfy the costs of this prosecution, but not to exceed eight months;" but the court said that it would greatly tend to prevent abuse if the judgment was made to express the amount of the costs and the number of days defendant is required to serve. At first, by the common law, no costs were awarded to either party, eo nomine. If the plaintiff failed to recover he was amerced pro falso clamore. If he recovered judgment, the defendant was in misericordia for his unjust detention of the plaintiff's debt, and was not therefore punished with the expensa litis under that title. But this being considered a great hardship, the Statute of Gloucester (6 Edw. I, c. 1) was passed, which gave costs in all cases when the plaintiff recovered damages. This was the origin of costs de incremento; for when the damages were found by the jury, the judges held themselves obliged to tax the moderate fees of counsel and attorneys that attended the cause."

A doubt is to be found in some books whether a fine can be levied of a cottage eo nomine. In practice, cottages are frequently mentioned in fines; and in West's Symboleography, part 2, fo. 7 b, it is said 'by the name of a messuage may pass a curtelage, a garden, an orchard, a dove-house, a shop, a mill, as parcel of a house. This word has no plural, and is used to denote either one or more counsel. It is by some supposed to be an abbreviation of "counsellor," but seems rather to be derived from the Norman French "conseil," which occurs as a distinct word, at an early period, in the sense of "pleader." Burrill L. Dict.

41. English L. Dict.

42. Burrill L. Dict. [citing 3 Bl. Comm. 26; 1 Kent Comm. 307].

In English practice.— The general name "counsel" in the practice of the courts is common to all barristers, whether they are at or within the bar; but a barrister simply is a junior counsel, and one who pleads from outside, or beyond the bar, from which fact is derived the term of "outer" or "utter" barrister; and further to distinguish them from Queen's counsel and serjeants-at-law, utter barristers wear a stuff or bombazine gown and short horse hair wig, in place of the silk gown and full bottom wig which is worn on certain occasions by the former. Queen's counsel are appointed by the Lord Chancellor from among the members of the junior bar of ten years' standing; in court they sit within the bar immediately in front of the utter barristers, to whom they act as "leaders" in any case in which both are engaged. Queen's counsel in the Chancery Division usually confine themselves to practicing in one court before a particular judge, and but rarely practice before any other; but in the courts of the Queen's Bench Division this custom is not adopted. 19 Am. L. Rev. 685.

In American practice.— "The division of advocates into attorneys and counsel has been adopted from the prevailing usage in the English courts. The business of the former is to carry on the practical and more mechanical parts of the suit, and of the latter to draft or review and correct the special pleadings, to manage the cause at the trial, and also during the whole course of the suit to apply established principles of law to the exigencies of the case. In the Supreme Court of the United States, the two degrees of attorney and counsel are kept separate, and no person is permitted to practise both as attorney and counsellor in that court. This was by a rule of ciated in the management of a particular cause, or who acts as the legal adviser in reference to any matter requiring legal knowledge and judgment;[43] one who assists his client with advice, and pleads for him in open court;[44] and sometimes, used in a broad sense, the term may include an attorney.[45] As a verb, to give advice to; to admonish; to propose to be done; to recommend.[46] (Counsel: Advice of, see CONTEMPT; CRIMINAL LAW; FALSE IMPRISONMENT; INJUNCTIONS; LIBEL AND SLANDER; MALICIOUS PROSECUTION. the court in February, 1790; and when, afterwards, in August, 1801, the court declared that counsellors might be admitted as attorneys, on taking the usual oath, this did not mean or imply, that if a counsellor was thus admitted as attorney, he could continue to act as counsellor. He must make his election between the two degrees." 1 Kent Comm. 307, 308. But he may now act in either capacity. Ex p. Garland, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 333, 375, 18 L. ed. 366. "In all the other courts of the United States, as well as in the courts of New York and the other states, the same person can be admitted to the two degrees of attorney and counsel, and exercise the powers of each." 1 Kent Comm. 307, 308.

43. Bouvier L. Dict. [quoted in State v. Russell, 83 Wis. 330, 332, 53 N. W. 441], where it is said: "It is generally used 'of counsel' in a particular case, to distinguish him from the attorney of record; or as the office means in the supreme court of the United States, and in the English practice, he is a counselor at law, in contradistinction as an attorney at law. The counselor conducts the trial and presents the law, while the attorney carries on the practical and formal parts of the suit. . . . In the states where these distinctions are disregarded, the one who acts as counsel, or of counsel, is supposed to have superior knowledge and experience in the law and ability to advise in the conduct of the causes. The counselor is a lawyer of the highest dignity."

"Counsel in the cause" as applied to attorneys who were witnesses and were not entitled to certain exceptions under a statute, but were entitled to witness' fees, see Abbott v. Johnson, 47 Wis. 239, 245, 2 N. W. 332.

Distinguished from "barrister" and "counselor."—"'Counsel' is not used as a title of office, like 'barrister' and 'serjeant' in England, and 'counsellor' in the United States, but as a general professional designation; and is particularly applied to a client's professional adviser or advocate (one or more) in a particular matter or suit, e. g. in the expressions 'a party's counsel,' and 'the counsel in a cause'; in which the use of the term 'counsellor' would in strictness be improper. To a certain extent, however, the terms are synonymous." Burrill L. Dict.

44. Burrill L. Dict.

45. Thus, where a statute provided that the interrogatories "shall be drawn and signed by the parties or their counsel in the cause," the court said: "But can we suppose the legislature intended to restrict the drawing of the interrogatories to the hand of the party, or of a counsellor of this court? And yet, if the objection is a valid one, it would be equally fatal, if it could be shown that the party had employed any clerk, attorney or scrivener, to draw the interrogatories, other than one who has his counsellor in the cause. Nor are we to suppose, that the legislature intended to use the word 'counsel' in this place, in that peculiar and restricted sense, in which it is used at Westminster Hall, in dictinction from attorney. In our courts, a man's attorney is usually his counsel; even though he is not a counsellor of this court." Ludlam v. Broderick, 15 N. J. L. 269, 271.

54. Gell v. Burgess, 18 L. J. C. P. 153, 155.

A count is sometimes considered as synonymous with a declaration, and this was its original signification in the law-French; but it is now most generally considered as a part of a declaration, wherein the plaintiff sets forth a distinct cause of action. And it frequently contains several counts, in which the plaintiff assigns different gravamens, so that if he fail in the proof of any, and substitute one only, he may still recover; and if one of his counts be good, and the others vicious, he may, by taking a verdict on the good count, avoid a reversal of the judgment. Cheetham v. Tillotson, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 430, 436. And see Gell v. Burgess, 18 L. J. C. P. 153, 155, where Maule, J., said: "A count formerly meant a declaration."

55. Burrill L. Dict.

A declaration now usually consists of several of these counts; being either statements of different causes of action; or of the same cause in different forms. Burrill L. Dict.

56. Burrill L. Dict. Thus the word is used when, in one finding by the grand jury, the essential parts of two or more separate indictments, for causes apparently distinct, are combined, the allegations for each being termed a count, and the whole an indictment. I. DEFINITIONS.

A. Counterfeit. As a noun, a counterfeit is a likeness or resemblance, intended to deceive, and to be taken for that which is original and genuine.[1] As a verb, to counterfeit is to make something falsely and fraudulently in imitation or the semblance of that which is true.[2]

B. Counterfeiter. In legal parlance a counterfeiter is one who unlawfully makes base coin in imitation of the true metal, or forges false currency, or any instrument of writing, bearing a likeness and similitude to that which is lawful and genuine, with an intention of deceiving and imposing upon mankind.[3]

C. Counterfeiting. A counterfeiting of coin is the making of false or spurious coin, to imitate — or, as the phrase commonly is, in the similitude of — the genuine.[4]

II. OFFENSES AND RESPONSIBILITY THEREFOR.

A. In General — 1. At Common Law. By the ancient common law making counterfeit coin of the realm was treason and subsequently a felony;[5] and passing,[6] having in possession with intent to pass as true and procuring with such intent,[7]

"An imitation of something made without lawful authority, and with a view to defraud by passing the false for the true." Rapalje & L. L. Dict.

"That which is made in imitation of something, but without lawful authority, or contrary to law, and with a view to defraud, by passing the false for the true." Burrill L. Dict.

The term "counterfeit," both by its etymology and common intendment, signifies the fabrication of a false image or representation. U. S. v. Marigold, 9 How. (U. S.) 560, 568, 13 L. ed. 257. It imports an imitation. State v. Calvin, R. M. Charlt. (Ga.) 151.

A counterfeit bill is one printed from a false plate, and not a bill printed legitimately or illegitimately, from the genuine plate. Kirby v. State, 1 Ohio St. 185. The expression, "shall counterfeit, or procure to be counterfeited, or assist in counterfeiting," as used in a statute, means the making or procuring to be made, or assisting to make a false and counterfeit bill, in imitation of a true bill, issued, etc. State v. Randall, 2 Aik. (Vt.) 89.

A counterfeit coin is one made in imitation of some genuine coin. U. S. v. Hopkins, 26 Fed. 443; U. S. v. Bogart, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,617, 9 Ben. 314. It is coin not genuine, but resembling or apparently intended to resemble or pass for genuine coin, including genuine coin prepared or altered so as to resemble or pass for coin of a higher denomination. Black L. Dict.; Rapalje & L. L. Dict.; Sweet L. Dict. Both the coin made and that in imitation of which it is made are said to be "counterfeited." State v. Griffin, 18 Vt. 198.

having possession of an instrument for counterfeiting current coin,[8] and procuring an instrument with intent to use in making foreign coin,[9] were misdemeanors. The passing in one state of a counterfeit note of a bank in another state,[10] and the making in one state of counterfeit bills current in another,[11] are punishable in the former as common-law misdemeanors. It has been held that having counterfeit in possession with intent to pass as true,[12] and uttering with such intent,[13] are not indictable as common-law offenses, on the ground that no act having been done, no "cheat" has been perpetrated. Passing a false note purporting to be that of a bank having no existence[14] or passing an unsigned bank-bill[15] is punishable as a common-law cheat.

2. UNDER UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION. Counterfeiting the securities of a foreign government is an offense against the "law of nations" within the meaning of section 1, article 8, of the constitution of the United States.[16] Passing is not an "infamous crime" within the meaning of the fifth amendment to the constitution prohibiting prosecutions of such crimes except upon indictment by a grand jury.[17]

B. Elements of Offenses — 1. In General — a. Subject-Matter Imitated or Altered — (I) In General. Counterfeiting refers usually to imitating coin or paper money, but gold dust, gold and silver bullion, etc.,[18] securities and obligations of the United States other than money,[19] trade-marks,[20] trade-union labels,[21] state warrants,[22] and certificates of indebtedness[23] are subjects of counterfeiting; a military land-warrant is not as "an indent or public security";[24] nor is a certificate of deposit of an insurance company, payable on demand to bearer, although circulating as money to some extent, as a bank-note.[25]

(II) Validity of Subject-Matter — (A) In General. If the original instrument is void on its face counterfeiting it is no offense.[26]

(B) Money Prohibited From Circulation or Not Current. Where the circulation of bills of banks of another state, generally or of specified denominations,

A draft signed by the president and cashier of the Bank of the United States was held not a subject of counterfeiting under a statute against uttering a false bill purporting to be issued by order of the president, directors, and company of the bank. U. S. v. Brewster, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 164, 8 L. ed. 645.

is prohibited by law, the passing of counterfeits of such bills is not punishable, such act not being with intent to defraud within the meaning of the law;[27] and where the law chartering a bank was held invalid it was held no offense to pass the counterfeit notes of such bank with intent to defraud the bank.[28] The California gold pieces, being made contrary to the provisions of the constitution of the United States giving to congress the sole power to coin money, cannot be "current by law or usage," although circulating to some extent as money, and the passing of counterfeits of them is no offense under a statute against passing coins so current.[29] So the head pistareen, a Spanish coin of one-fifth the value of the Spanish milled dollar, was held not a subject of counterfeiting as a coin current by law because not "a part" of the latter coin within the meaning of the statute making such coin "and parts thereof" current, the parts one half and one fourth in which the dollar of the United States is issued being meant by such statute.[30]

(c) Bills of Non-Existent Banks—(1) Banks Never Existing. It is not in general necessary that there be such a bank in existence as the note purports to be issued by to constitute the offense of passing counterfeit notes,[31] or of possessing them with intent to pass;[32] but under a statute against passing bills purporting to be issued by a bank when no such bank exists, passing counterfeit bills of a bank in existence is no offense.[33]

(2) Banks Out of Existence. It was held an offense to pass a counterfeit note of the Bank of the United States, bearing date while the bank was in existence, after the expiration of the bank's charter, notes of the bank being still receivable in payment of customs, in circulation to some extent, and former directors of the bank being liable upon them.[34] Possessing a note of a duly authorized state bank worthless through insolvency of the bank, with intent to pass it as a note of a national bank, was held an offense under the act of congress against possessing counterfeits of obligations and securities of the United States;[35] but the interpretation given to the statute[36] by this case is repudiated in later cases, and upon their authority such possession or the passing or using of such note is not an offense against the United States.[37]

(d) Bills With Fictitious Signatures. A note purporting to be signed by the proper officers of the Bank of the United States, but the names being in fact those of other persons, was held within a statute against uttering counterfeit notes purporting to be issued by the president and directors of the bank;[38] but uttering a bill signed with the name of a fictitious cashier was held not indictable as uttering a counterfeit bank-note.[39]

b. Intent. A fraudulent intent is necessary in general to constitute counterfeiting or the cognate offenses. In counterfeiting the intent to fraudulently pass or put in circulation must appear;[40] in passing there must be an intent to deceive or defraud;[41] in having in possession, an intent to pass or put in circulation, knowing it to be false;[42] and in possessing counterfeiting tools there must be a criminal intent.[43]

c. Similitude — (I) In General. The similitude or imitation necessary is that the counterfeit be so exact as to impose on persons of ordinary observation, using such caution as is ordinarily exercised by prudent men in the particular transaction in which they are engaged;[44] such a likeness as is calculated to deceive an honest and unsuspecting man of ordinary care and observation when dealing with a man supposed to be honest,[45] although it would not deceive an expert or one having particular experience;[46] but the counterfeit need be only such as to be prima facie fitted to pass as true.[47] In some statutory offenses against the currency, as photographing United States notes, etc., the similitude need not be such as to deceive.[48]

(II) In Bills. In bank-bills counterfeits must have the external appearance of the genuine, and merely containing the words and figures of the true, without other similitude, is not sufficient;[49] but vignettes may be different, if the resemblance on the whole is sufficient to impose on the public.[50] The similitude may exist, although the bank never issued any bill of the denomination of the false bill.[51]

(1901) p. 3671], against possessing counterfeit obligations and securities of the United States; but in the former case it was held that this section does not cover cases of counterfeiting in general, which fall under U. S. Rev. Stat. (1878) § 5114, and U. S. Rev. Stat. (1878) § 5431 [U. S. Comp. Stat. (1901) p. 3671], and that in prosecutions under the latter sections the intent to defraud must exist.

Confederate and state bank-notes.—In U. S. v. Kuhl, 85 Fed. 624, a prosecution under U. S. Rev. Stat. (1878) § 5430 [U. S. Comp. Stat. (1901) p. 3671], against possessing any obligation or security issued under authority of the United States with intent to sell or use the same, etc., it was held that a Confederate bank-note may have the similitude to a national bank-note and yet not be forged or counterfeited; that it is sufficient if such note, on the whole, bears a marked resemblance to the national currency; but in U. S. v. Pitts, 112 Fed. 522, and U. S. v. Conners, 111 Fed. 734, possession of worthless bills of an insolvent state bank was held not to be within said section, upon

(III) In Coin. A round blank, like smooth coin in circulation, from which the impression has been effaced by wear, may possess the necessary similitude.[52] It has been held that both sides must possess the likeness;[53] although where the face resembled the genuine, and the reverse did not, the intent of the maker that it pass as true was held to be the test.[54]

2. Particular Offenses — a. Alteration and Debasement. To remove an appreciable amount of the metal from a coin and plug the hole with base metal is an act of counterfeiting, but to so plug a hole made by a sharp instrument, so that no metal is removed, is not; and to pass a coin mutilated as first specified constitutes the offense of passing counterfeit, while to pass one mutilated as last specified does not.[55] To take a genuine note of an insolvent bank and merely alter the location of the bank from one place to another, there being a solvent bank of the same name in the latter place, constitutes the offense of counterfeiting; and pasting the name of the latter place over the former constitutes the offense, although by close examination it can be discerned.[56]

b. Counterfeiting. The offense of counterfeiting is complete, although the false coin be in an unfinished state, if it be so far finished or in such condition that it is calculated to deceive.[57] Brightening a piece of base metal by boiling in lye and rubbing with a cloth, thereby increasing the resemblance to the true coin and making it more readily acceptable as such, constitutes the offense;[58] as does changing, by plating or other process, inferior coins or base metal into resemblance of coin;[59] and, under a statute against "coloring" metal to make it resemble coin, to coat a sixpence with gold so that it resembles a half crown,[60] to immerse a silver alloy in a wash which eats away the base metal on the surface leaving it in the resemblance of true coin,[61] or to immerse a base metal in a fluid which so acts upon it that on being rubbed it will resemble the true coin,[62] constitutes the offense. Actual participation in making counterfeit is not necessary to the offense of counterfeiting.[63]

the authority and reasoning of U. S. v. Barrett, 111 Fed. 369, where it was held that the instrument in possession must in its inception have been intended to simulate some obligation or security of the United States; that possessing the general likeness that one form of paper money bears to another is not sufficient; and that a Confederate States note was not within the statute. It was held in U. S. v. Wilson, 44 Fed. 751, that a Confederate States note did not possess the necessary similitude to national currency to be within this section.

A bond issued by the United States Milling Company, and resembling a United States bond, but not purporting to be executed by any party, is not in the similitude of "any obligation or security of the United States." U. S. v. Sprague, 48 Fed. 828.

56. State v. Robinson, 16 N. J. L. 507. (Pa.) 214, holding that one who leases the house where counterfeiting is carried on, knowing that counterfeiting is conducted by others there, and knowing their guilty purpose facilitates the making by harboring them, commits the offense.

c. Having Possession of Counterfeit Money, Etc.—(i) What Constitutes Possession. To constitute possession the counterfeit need not be found on the person. It is sufficient if it is under the control of the accused;[64] and it may be hidden in some secret and distant place within his knowledge and control.[65] When two are together in passing counterfeit, and when arrested one has two pieces and the other more than three, the possession is joint, and both are guilty of the offense of having in possession more than three pieces;[66] and in general the personal possession of one is the personal possession of his accomplice;[67] and the offense of having possession may be committed jointly, although the actual possession is in one.[68]

(ii) Intent. Where a specific intent is made an ingredient of the offense by statute the existence of the statutory intent must be shown.[69] On the other hand where the statutory intent exists no other or further intent is essential.[70] Under some statutes having blank or unsigned bills with intent to fill them up is sufficient.[71]

(iii) Character of Money, Etc. Under a statute against having in possession "any blank or unfinished note in the form and similitude of any" note of a bank, it is not necessary that the blanks be genuine, unsigned notes;[72] and when a statute is against the possession of "counterfeit tokens of value, or what purports to be a counterfeit token of value," it is not necessary that the "token" be in the similitude of any issued.[73]

d. Making or Having in Possession Counterfeiting Tools, Etc.—(i) In General. As a rule joint operation of act and criminal intent, or criminal negligence, is necessary to constitute these offenses.[74] The possession is sufficient where the engraver of a plate had the police present at delivery and the arrest was then made.[75] The offense is committed if the instrument be adapted and designed to make only one side of a coin;[76] and the possession of a half mold is sufficient.[77] The offense of making a "mold impressed with the obverse side" of a coin is complete when the mold is made and a part only of the impression.[78] Possession of a press such as is used for coinage violates a statute against possession of an instrument with intent to make counterfeit "coin of the realm," although the specific intent be to use it to make counterfeit foreign pieces only.[79] Possession of a plate for making counterfeit national bank-notes is punishable, although such notes are not specifically mentioned in the statute, as they fall under the head of "obligations and securities of the United States";[80] and a statute against possessing a plate for making "bank-notes and bills" covers a plate for making Bank of England counterfeits, as it is not to be implied that foreign bank-notes would have been specifically mentioned had it been intended to include them.[81]

(II) What Are Tools, Etc. A press,[82] a mold, and a collar of iron with the inside grooved for milling edges[83] are "tools or instruments" for counterfeiting; and a galvanic battery is a "machine" for such purpose;[84] but a crucible is not within the meaning of the words "die, stamp, or other instrument or tool."[85] An instrument will be considered a puncheon for the making of counterfeit coin if it will impress a resemblance such as will impose on the world, whether it have on it the letters of the coin or not.[86]

e. Passing[87] and Uttering Counterfeit Money, Etc.— (I) In General— (A) What Constitutes Passing— (1) In General. To pass is to deliver as money or as a known substitute for money;[88] to put off in payment or exchange.[89] The offense is not complete until the counterfeit is accepted by the person to whom it is offered.[90]

(2) Selling.[91] Selling is not passing, the intent to defraud not existing;[92] but under some statutes this constitutes an offense.[93]

(3) Character of Money, Etc. Under a statute against passing "any coins, . . . whether in the resemblance of coins of the United States or of foreign countries, or of original design," it was held not an offense to pass an octagon metal having one side impressed with an Indian and the other with "One Quarter Dollar, Cal.," on the ground that the piece did not purport to be a coin within the legal meaning of the word.[94] But under a statute making it an offense to pass a coin made in violation of another statute prohibiting the counterfeiting of any coin "at the time current," it is an offense to pass a counterfeit coin not current at the time of passing if it was current when made.[95] So too uttering a counterfeit bank-bill constitutes the offense of uttering a "forged promissory note," the bill being no less a promissory note because issued by a bank,[96] and passing a counterfeit United States treasury note is punishable as the passing of a "forged moneyed obligation." [97] But where there is a statute against passing counterfeit bank-bills and another against passing forged promissory notes, with different terms of punishment, the legislature has evidenced an intent to distinguish and the rule is otherwise.[98]

(4) SCIENTER. While passing must of course be with knowledge that the money is counterfeit; yet one receiving counterfeit innocently and passing it after having reasonable grounds to infer it to be spurious commits the offense.[99] The offense is committed although one offers to take a note back if it is not good, if he then knows it to be spurious.[1]

(5) WHETHER PERSONAL PARTICIPATION NECESSARY. Passing counterfeit by an agent employed for that purpose is the same as passing it personally;[2] and procuring it to be passed by an ignorant servant boy is sufficient.[3] So too the offense of passing is committed by being present, aiding, and assisting the one who actually does the passing.[4]

(6) TIME OF COMMITTING OFFENSE. The offense is committed although done on Sunday, it being immaterial that the act constitutes another offense also.[5]

(B) What Constitutes Uttering—(1) IN GENERAL. To utter is to declare to be good with intent to pass;[6] to so assert, directly or indirectly, by word or action;[7] or to attempt to pass a spurious article, knowing it to be such, with intent to defraud.[8] Acceptance of the proffered counterfeit is not essential to the offense.[9]

(2) JOINT UTTERING. To constitute a joint uttering it is held that there must be a previous concert and presence together at the time of uttering;[10] that the test is whether the one was so near the other as to help him get rid of the counterfeit;[11] and that if two utterers, with a general community of purpose, go different ways and separately utter coin apart from each other, their utterings are not joint.[12] But when one of two in company utters counterfeit, and counterfeit is found on the other, both are guilty of the aggravated offense of uttering while having counterfeit in possession, if they act in concert and both know of the possession.[13]

(3) CHARACTER OF MONEY, ETC. The offense of having possession of or uttering counterfeit bank-notes is committed by having or uttering genuine notes which have been altered.[14] Although the alteration be by substituting 20 for 1 as the denominating numeral and erasing the word "one" in the body of the note so that the note reads as a promise to pay —— dollars, the note may nevertheless be in the similitude of a genuine note, as the word denoting the sum might be obliterated by wear or otherwise and the amount left designated by the numerals only; and uttering such a note constitutes the offense of uttering counterfeit.[15]

(II) GOLD DUST. To constitute the offense of passing counterfeit gold dust, etc., no definite amount of difference between the value of the true and the counterfeit is required; it is sufficient that the article is debased, and that the one uttering knows it and passes it as genuine.[16]

f. Photographing Currency. In the offense of photographing currency, under a United States statute, similitude [17] or intent to defraud not being elements of the offense, the size of the photograph is immaterial and it may be in miniature.[18]

g. Selling [19] or Exchanging Counterfeit Money. To constitute the offense of selling counterfeit money, an intent to defraud is not necessary;[20] and it is not necessary that one part with his whole interest for a consideration; a sale on credit, or a delivery on the understanding that the counterfeit will be returned in case it is not sold, is sufficient.[21] Exchanging counterfeit bank-notes as genuine for other notes does not constitute the offense of selling and bartering such notes.[22] The offense of offering to purchase counterfeit notes is not committed by offering to purchase genuine unsigned notes, although done in the supposition that they are counterfeit;[23] but selling as genuine violates a statute against selling counterfeit bank-notes, notwithstanding the purchaser's belief that they are genuine;[24] and such a statute is violated, although no notes of the denomination sold were ever issued.[25]

III. DEFENSES.

If a person be so intoxicated at the time of passing counterfeit that he actually did not know it to be so, this constitutes a full defense, as the crime consists in knowingly passing.[26]

C. L. 656, that if two go together to a shop and one enters and passes a counterfeit piece, the other remaining outside with other pieces in his possession, the uttering is joint, and both are also guilty of the offense of having possession of the counterfeit found on the second.

IV. JURISDICTION.

A. In General. The counterfeiting outside of a state of bank-bills current in that state is not punishable by the courts of the latter, but must be left to those of the state where the act was committed.[27] The possession of counterfeit bank-notes with intent to utter as true is not indictable in the United States courts without a statute expressly making it so.[28]

B. Of Federal and State Courts. It has been much mooted whether under the constitutional provision vesting in congress the power to "coin Money, regulate the Value thereof, and of foreign Coin," and to "provide for the Punishment of counterfeiting the Securities and current Coin of the United States,"[29] state laws against the various offenses relating to counterfeit currency are valid, and whether state courts have jurisdiction of these offenses. The great preponderance of authority is in favor of the affirmative of these propositions, and it may be considered as settled, both that such laws are valid and that the jurisdiction of the two classes of courts is concurrent.[30]

V. INDICTMENT OR INFORMATION.[31]

A. Prosecution by Information. Passing a counterfeit obligation of the United States may be prosecuted in the federal courts by information instead of indictment, it not being an "infamous crime" within the fifth amendment to the constitution of the United States,[32] and so as to passing counterfeit money generally.[33]

B. Requisites and Sufficiency in General. An indictment is sufficient in general if it includes the essential ingredients of the offense; if the offense is so stated that it cannot be misunderstood by the jury.[34] Under a state statute the offense should be charged as against the sovereignty of the state and not that of the United States.[35] If the offense is purely statutory the words "contrary to the form of the statute" must be used; it is otherwise if the offense was indictable at common law before the passing of the statute.[36]

C. Following Language of Statute — 1. In General. It is sufficient in general to charge the various offenses relating to counterfeiting in the language of the statute,[37] or in words which are its equivalent or more comprehensive.[38] It has been held, however, that if any essential element is omitted from the statute it must be included in the indictment.[39]

2. Matters Excepted From Statute. If a person "innocently, ignorantly, &c.," possessing notes is excepted by the enacting clause of a statute, the indictment must allege that the accused did not so keep them;[40] and where the statute is against possession without "lawful authority or excuse," the possession alleged must be so qualified.[41]

D. Description of Subject-Matter. The indictment must contain such a description of the counterfeit as to enable the accused to plead it as a bar to another prosecution for the same offense.[42] It is not necessary to allege of what material the counterfeit is made,[43] although it should be stated whether the coin counterfeited is gold or silver.[44] It is not necessary to give the number of a bill.[45] Under a statute including "bank-bills and promissory notes" it is sufficient to charge the passing of a counterfeit "bank-note," the words "bill" and "note" being synonymous.[46] A bill being copied into the indictment and purporting by its terms to be the note of a bank, it is not necessary to aver that it purports to be the note of any specified bank.[47]

E. Description of Tools For Counterfeiting. An indictment for having in possession tools for counterfeiting must describe the tools.[48]

F. Setting Out Copy — 1. In General. The indictment should give the tenor of a bill,[49] and should profess to do so,[50] unless the bill is destroyed by the accused, or other reason or excuse for not setting it out exists,[51] in which case the facts must be stated.[52] It is not sufficient to set out the "purport and effect;" an exact copy must be given.[53]

2. Material and Immaterial Parts, Indorsements, Etc. Material parts of the contract only need be set out in the indictment; ornamental devices, bill numbers, denominational figures, letters or words, marginal words, engravers' names, seals and recitals as to capital stock, etc., may be omitted therefrom;[54] as may

43. State v. Griffin, 18 Vt. 198.

44. Nicholson v. State, 18 Ala. 529, 54 Am. Dec. 168.

It is sufficient to describe counterfeit coin as in the similitude of "coin, currently passing in this state, called Spanish Dollars" (Fight v. State, 7 Ohio 180, 28 Am. Dec. 626), or as a dollar, without further description (Com. v. Stearns, 10 Metc. (Mass.) 256; Peek v. State, 2 Humphr. (Tenn.) 78; U. S. v. Otey, 31 Fed. 68, 12 Sawy. 416), or as "fifty-cent pieces" instead of "half dollars" as denominated on the coin (U. S. v. Burns, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,691, 5 McLean 23). So "Coinage of the United States" is the exact equivalent of "coins coined at the mint of the United States." U. S. v. Otey, 31 Fed. 68, 12 Sawy. 416. And in an indictment for having possession of a counterfeiting machine it is a sufficient description of the coin to be counterfeited to describe it merely as "coin current by law and usage." Bradford v. State, 3 Humphr. (Tenn.) 369. And charging that the accused "caused to be printed certain impressions in the likeness of . . . the face, except signatures" of Brazil treasury notes is sufficient under the act of May 16, 1884, the statute containing the words "obligation . . . or any part thereof, of any foreign government." U. S. v. White, 25 Fed. 716.

45. U. S. v. Bennett, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,572, 17 Blatchf. 357. But see State v. Calendine, 8 Iowa 288, holding that description by both number and letter is necessary, on the ground that it takes both to identify.

The number of bills included in the act charged, whether one or more, must be stated. U. S. v. Weikel, 8 Mont. 124, 19 Pac. 396; U. S. v. Fisler, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 15,105, 4 Biss. 59.

46. Brown v. Com., 8 Mass. 59; State v. Griffin, 18 Vt. 198.

47. U. S. v. Williams, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,706, 4 Biss. 302.

Nor in such case need a United States treasury note be referred to by that name, nor need it be charged to be made in the resemblance to the genuine, as these matters appear from the copy. U S. v. Trout, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,542, 4 Biss. 105.

48. Chamberlain v. State, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 573.

In case of a mold, an indictment will be bad for uncertainty unless it alleges the mold to be impressed with the stamp of a current coin (Reg. v. Richmond, 1 C. & K. 240, 1 Cox C. C. 9, 47 E. C. L. 240), and describing a die as "for the purpose of producing and impressing the stamp and similitude" of current coin is insufficient, as the instrument must be capable of producing such stamp and similitude (Com. v. Scott, 1 Rob. (Va.) 695).

49. Com. v. Bailey, 1 Mass. 62, 2 Am. Dec. 3; McMillen v. State, 5 Ohio 268; Hooper v. State, 8 Humphr. (Tenn.) 93. But see Bostick v. State, 34 Ala. 266; State v. Johnson, 3 Harr. (Del.) 561; Tomlinson v. People, 5 Park. Crim. (N. Y.) 313, holding that it is not necessary to give the tenor.

50. State v. Twitty, 9 N. C. 248.

51. U. S. v. Fisler, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 15,105, 4 Biss. 59.

52. Hooper v. State, 8 Humphr. (Tenn.) 93.

Alleging the bill to be in the possession of the accused is sufficient excuse. Armitage v. State, 13 Ind. 441.

53. State v. Atkins, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 458.

To omit the names of the president and cashier in the copy renders the indictment insufficient (Com. v. Clancy, 7 Allen (Mass.) 537), and pasting the counterfeited note in the indictment as part of it is probably insufficient (U. S. v. Fisler, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 15,105, 4 Biss. 59).

54. Arkansas.— Gabe v. State, 6 Ark. 519.

indorsements,[55] and certificates of registration required to be indorsed, or notices required by law to be put upon bills.[56] The word "tenor" does not imply setting out these, but only material parts of the contract and the face of the bill.[57]

3. ALTERED BILLS. In case of an altered bill it should be set out exactly as it was when uttered, with all changes and omissions then appearing.[58]

G. Particular Allegations — 1. IN GENERAL. It is not necessary to state that the bill set out is "for the payment of money," this being a matter of common knowledge, and the face of the bill so showing;[59] or, the charge being upon a "false, forged and counterfeited obligation of the United States," and a copy being set out, to allege that there is a genuine obligation authorized by law of which the counterfeit is in likeness;[60] or to state the value of the counterfeit money.[61] Under a statute against having in possession a specified number of counterfeits "at the same time," it is not sufficient to allege such possession on a specified day, but possession at the same time must be particularly alleged;[62] under one against advertising or aiding a "scheme to sell or exchange" counterfeit, both the existence of the scheme and the commission of the offense must be charged;[63] and under one against the fraudulent use of an instrument intended for counterfeiting it is not enough to charge fraudulent use generally, but the manner of using must be charged.[64]

2. INTENT TO DEFRAUD AND SCIENTER. Intent to defraud must in general be alleged,[65] although where there are no words in the statute making such intent essential to the offense this is held unnecessary.[66] Scienter must of course be alleged.[67]

3. NAME OF PERSON DEFRAUDED. In an indictment for uttering or passing counterfeit it is necessary to set out the name of the person to whom the counterfeit was, or was intended to be, passed,[68] or to set out the name of the person

60. U. S. v. Owens, 37 Fed. 112. In Tait v. State, 3 Yerg. (Tenn.) 449, an indictment for passing a counterfeit note giving its tenor as follows: "This note of seventy-five cents is payable to the bearer at the treasury of North Carolina, agreeably to the act of Assembly, . . . John Haywood, Public Treasurer," was held bad for not averring the existence of the act, and that by its terms the treasurer was bound to pay, without which no obligation to pay appeared.

66. Hess v. State, 5 Ohio 5, 22 Am. Dec. 767; U. S. v. Peters, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16,035, 2 Abb. 494. In State v. Calvin, R. M. Charlt. (Ga.) 151, and U. S. v. Otey, 31 Fed. 68, 12 Sawy. 416, it is held that if such intent be necessary to allege it is implied by and embraced in the words "falsely" or "falsely and fraudulently" used in averring the making of counterfeit.

67. People v. Stanton, 39 Cal. 698 (holding that alleging that the accused "wilfully, feloniously and knowingly" possessed counterfeit is sufficient); Sutton v. State, 9 Ohio 133 (holding that an allegation that the accused "secretly" kept instruments for counterfeiting sufficiently alleges it). See also Waller v. Com., 97 Ky. 509, 30 S. W. 1023, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 348; State v. Martin, 8 Wis. 352.

68. Buckley v. State, 2 Greene (Iowa) 162, holding that the name of the person to whom counterfeit money was passed should be set forth in the indictment with certainty unless the name of such person is unknown, and if so that fact should be stated.

whom it was intended to defraud, unless the name of such person is unknown, in which case the fact that the name is unknown should be stated.[69]

4. CURRENCY OF COIN. The indictment must in general allege the coin counterfeited to have been current at the time of the act charged,[70] especially whenever its circulation is made an ingredient of the offense by statute.[71] An allegation of currency under the laws of the United States being made, it is unnecessary to allege currency according to the law or custom of the state.[72]

5. INTENT TO PASS AS TRUE. In an indictment for counterfeiting or for having counterfeit in possession it should be alleged that the making[73] or having in possession[74] was with intent to pass as true. Passing or uttering must also be charged to have been done with such intent.[75]

6. INTENT TO PASS WITHIN COUNTY. Intent to pass within the county or state where the indictment is laid need not be charged, it being immaterial where the accused intended to pass the counterfeit.[76]

7. SIMILITUDE. It must be charged that the counterfeit is in the similitude of the genuine;[77] but a bill being set out it is not necessary to allege similitude to the genuine notes authorized by act of congress, as the court will take judicial notice both of the act and of issues under it.[78]

8. FELONIOUSNESS. It is not necessary to charge the act as "feloniously" done in such offenses as were misdemeanors at common law;[79] and where an indictment is good if according to the common law, the word may be omitted, although the offense has been raised by statute to the grade of felony.[80]

9. EXISTENCE AND INCORPORATION OF BANK. In an indictment relating to counterfeit bank-bills it is not necessary to allege the incorporation of the bank of which the false bill is a counterfeit.[81] It has also been held that it is not necessary in

If words implying an intent to defraud a particular person are not in the statute the person defrauded, or whom it was intended to defraud, need not be named. Gentry v. State, 6 Ga. 503; State v. Callendine, 8 Iowa 288; State v. Keneston, 59 N. H. 36; State v. Morton, 8 Wis. 352.

In Wilkinson v. State, 10 Ind. 372, it is questioned whether the intent to defraud must be toward the person to whom passed, or may not be toward a third person. In Brown v. Com., 2 Leigh (Va.) 769, naming a slave as the person to whom counterfeit was passed, with intent to defraud a bank, was held good.

Proof of allegation.— If the indictment alleges that the bank was "a corporation duly

H. Joinder of Counts. It is proper to include in an indictment several counts, each stating a separate offense, if all relate to the same transaction, in order to meet every possible contingency of the proof.[84] Each count, however, must be sufficient and complete in itself; one alleging facts essential to the offense only by reference to another count is bad.[85]

I. Repugnancy, Duplicity, and Uncertainty. The indictment for uttering, passing, or having in possession must not be repugnant,[86] duplicitous,[87] or authorized for that purpose," it is incumbent upon the state to prove the fact as alleged. State v. Newland, 7 Iowa 242, 71 Am. Dec. 444. See also State v. Pierce, 8 Iowa 231.

It is not repugnant to describe a bill as a treasury note when the copy set out shows it to be a United States note (U. S. v. Marcus, 53 Fed. 784), to describe as a promissory note when the copy shows a bank-bill (Com. v. Thomas, 10 Gray (Mass.) 483), to describe as "blanks in the form and similitude of bills" as unfinished bills may have similitude to finished ones (People v. Ah Sam, 41 Cal. 645), or to describe a note as that of the P. & M. Bank, this being the corporate name, while the tenor, as set out, was "The President, Directors & Co. of the P. & M. Bank" (State v. Calvin, R. M. Charlt. (Ga.) 151. See also State v. Harris, 27 N. C. 287; State v. Pitman, 1 Brev. (S. C.) 32, 2 Am. Dec. 645).

Repugnancy in statute.—A statute against uttering or publishing as true "any false, forged or counterfeit bill or note issued by order of the president, directors," etc., and "signed by the president, and countersigned by the cashier," is void for repugnancy, as such a note would necessarily be genuine. U. S. v. Cantril, 4 Cranch (U. S.) 167, 2 L. ed. 584. But a statute describing the offense in the words "who shall falsely and fraudulently make any counterfeit note" (State v. Calvin, R. M. Charlt. (Ga.) 151), a statute against counterfeiting any note "issued under authority," or "uttering such counterfeit note" (U. S. v. Howell, 11 Wall. (U. S.) 432, 20 L. ed. 195), and a statute against making "counterfeited" bills, although the word implies, strictly speaking, altered and not false bills (State v. Randall, 2 Aik. (Vt.) 89) are not repugnant.

87. An indictment is not bad for duplicity which charges the possession of "sundry" counterfeit bills which it sets out (Com. v. Thomas, 10 Gray (Mass.) 483), which charges an uttering and passing (McGregor v. State, 16 Ind. 9; Com. v. Hall, 4 Allen (Mass.) 305), which charges a making and having in possession (State v. Myers, 10 Iowa 448), which charges conjunctively the offense of "selling, exchanging or delivering" (State v. Fitzsimmons, 30 Mo. 236), which charges counterfeiting, causing and procuring the same and assisting in the same, although in a single count, the words of the statute being followed (Rasnick v. Com., 2 Va. Cas. 356), which charges, in different counts, making counterfeit, possession with intent to pass five or more pieces, and possessing with such intent less than five, all referring to the same uncertain in its material allegations.[88] Vice in these respects is fatal to its validity.

J. Variance. The proofs must correspond with the allegations of the indictment, and where unnecessary allegations are inserted they cannot be rejected as surplusage, but must be proved as alleged.[89]

VI. EVIDENCE.

A. Presumptions. While in prosecutions for counterfeiting there can be no presumption of guilty knowledge as matter of law, yet from the existence of facts there may be presumptions of fact.[90] Thus the making of counterfeit being proved, the intent to use it for an unlawful purpose will be presumed;[91] and the act of knowingly passing being proved, the conclusion of intent to defraud necessarily follows[92] or will be presumed.[93] So in a prosecution for counterfeiting bank-notes, proof that the notes mentioned in the indictment and others of like kind, together with plates and implements for making them, were found in the transaction (State v. McPherson, 9 Iowa 53), or which charges that the accused "forged or counterfeited" (Johnson v. State, 35 Ala. 370).

88. Jones v. State, 11 Ind. 357 (holding bad an indictment charging the accused with having in possession several counterfeits purporting to be genuine five-dollar bills of a certain bank "of which the following is a copy of one"); State v. Halder, 2 McCord (S. C.) 377, 13 Am. Dec. 738 (holding that an indictment is bad for uncertainty which omits the word "did" in charging that the accused "feloniously [did] utter and publish").

89. State v. Newland, 7 Iowa 242, 71 Am. Dec. 444; Clark v. Com., 16 B. Mon. (Ky.) 206; State v. Smith, 31 Mo. 120; Griffin v. State, 14 Ohio St. 55; State v. Aukrim, Tapp. (Ohio) 112.

possession of defendant constitutes prima facie evidence that defendant was the counterfeiter;[94] and the same is true in case of counterfeiting coin.[95]

B. Admissions. The passing of the counterfeit being proved, defendant's agency may then be shown by his own confession. This does not violate the rule that the corpus delicti cannot be proved by the confession of the accused.[96]

C. Proof of Scienter — 1. In General. Facts bearing directly or indirectly on the question of scienter or intent may generally be shown.[97]

2. Possession of Counterfeit — a. By Accused. In prosecutions for passing or uttering counterfeit it is competent to prove, as bearing on the questions of scienter or guilty knowledge and of guilty intent, that the accused had in his possession, at, before, or after the time of the commission of the act charged, other counterfeit of the same kind as, or similar to, that passed or uttered;[98] that he had previously uttered or passed other such counterfeit;[99] and that he had in

94. Spencer v. Com., 2 Leigh (Va.) 751.

Place of counterfeiting.— The fact that counterfeit bills with instruments for making them were found in the possession of the accused in a certain county is prima facie evidence that the counterfeiting was done in that county (Spencer v. Com., 2 Leigh (Va.) 751), and the counterfeiting of a bill being proved, possession in a certain county is sufficient to support the inference that they were made in that county (Johnson v. State, 35 Ala. 370).

96. U. S. v. Marcus, 53 Fed. 784.

Admissions of co-conspirator.— In a case of a conspiracy to make and utter counterfeit, the admissions of a co-conspirator were held admissible against a defendant upon proof that such defendant was a relative of others of the defendants, that he resided with one of them six weeks while counterfeit was being made, that he wrote a letter ordering the machine with which it was made, and that on the arrest of one of the defendants he wrote offering assistance in getting bail. Taylor v. U. S., 89 Fed. 954, 32 C. C. A. 449.

Statements of defendant made at the time of the commission of the act charged are admissible as part of the res gestæ. McCartney v. State, 3 Ind. 353, 56 Am. Dec. 510. And it may be shown that the accused made conflicting statements in accounting for his possession of counterfeit (Com. v. Starr, 4 Allen (Mass.) 301), or made no explanation of how he got it, nor any assertion of innocence (U. S. v. Kenneally, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,522, 5 Biss. 122).

97. Thus it is competent to show that the accused had, at about the time of the commission of the offense alleged, passed another note of the same kind which was thought to be counterfeit and which he took back (Martin v. Com., 2 Leigh (Va.) 745); that he had attempted to pass the same note at different times, and on its being challenged as false had declared it to be good (State v. Smith, 5 Day (Conn.) 175, 5 Am. Dec. 132); that a recipe was found on the person of the accused purporting to give ingredients of a compound suitable for counterfeiting which experts testify would be suitable for the purpose, the prosecution being for having possession of counterfeiting tools (Long v. State, 10 Tex. App. 186); and where several tools were found, that although each might be used for purposes other than counterfeiting there was no other business in which all could be used (U. S. v. Tarr, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,434, 4 Phila. (Pa.) 405, 18 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 214). Defendant may show how he received the counterfeit, or his good character. U. S. v. Kenneally, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,522, 5 Biss. 122. But in a prosecution for having counterfeit in possession it is not competent to show that the accused received from the post-office a letter containing counterfeit which was taken from him before being opened. Com. v. Edgerly, 10 Allen (Mass.) 184.

Hearsay evidence is inadmissible on the question of scienter. Thus it may not be shown that while the accused, upon his arrest, was yet in the custody of the officer, a bunch of counterfeit was handed to the officer with the statement that one in the company of the accused who was arrested with him had thrown it away on the way to prison. possession or had passed spurious notes, as distinguished from counterfeit.[1] The possession or passing so proved may be in another state,[2] or a long time prior,[3] the time elapsing being immaterial as a matter of law, but the inference of scienter being weaker as the lapse is longer.[4] The rule applies in case of altered bills,[5] in prosecutions for counterfeiting trade-marks,[6] and for having possession of counterfeit[7] or counterfeiting tools.[8] The fact of such possession may be proved, although the accused was prosecuted for the offense.[9] The proof necessary to rebut the presumption of unlawful intent on the part of one making counterfeit may be introduced by him, or it may be shown from the circumstances as disclosed by the state.[10]

b. By Third Persons, Confederates, Etc. It may be shown, as bearing on the question of scienter, that a third person, in the presence of the accused and for the benefit of both, passed counterfeit similar to that passed by the accused;[11] that such counterfeit was in the possession of a confederate;[12] that the accused was in the company of another at the time the latter passed such counterfeit, both before and after the act of the accused was committed;[13] or that other persons with whom the accused has been first connected in the general transaction had machines for counterfeiting in their possession.[14] It may be shown that the accused was in conversation with one who had passed other counterfeit bills of the same bank;[15] that on the same evening, in the same town, other counterfeit

In Goldsby's Case, 1 City Hall Rec. (N. was passed, although the person so passing it could only be identified with the accused in general appearance;[16] that defendant's wife at the time of his arrest delivered up a quantity of counterfeit;[17] or that defendant's wife, about the time of the act charged, in his absence, sold other counterfeit, and that he afterward had knowledge of and sanctioned such sale.[18]

3. CONCEALMENT OF COUNTERFEIT. It may be shown, on the question of scienter, that on his arrest the accused attempted to conceal the fact of possession of bills similar to those he is charged with uttering;[19] that he at such time swallowed,[20] or had just before concealed similar bills;[21] that similar bills were found hidden near a house in which he formerly lived;[22] or that before the alleged concealment the accused had seen persons who had seen him publicly whipped for counterfeiting on a former occasion.[23]

4. PREVIOUS OCCUPATION. It is competent to show, on the point of scienter, that the accused had been employed in the business of printing genuine bills;[24] and his previous statements that he had been engaged in passing or handling counterfeit,[25] or that he had endeavored to engage a person to procure counterfeit for him, asked him if he had got it, and declared that he intended to make the acquaintance of a counterfeiter, may be shown.[26]

D. Proof of Spuriousness — 1. IN GENERAL. The fact that bills are counterfeit may be proved by expert evidence. It is not necessary to produce an officer of the bank by which the bill purports to be issued.[27] Officers of other banks,[28] brokers and merchants who have habitually received the notes of the bank so long as to have become acquainted with them,[29] persons who have before seen the genuine bills of the bank and are skilled in the detection of counterfeit money,[30] or persons acquainted with the signatures of the officers of the bank[31] are competent. The testimony may be based not only on knowledge of the signatures to the bill, but also on that as to the paper, engraving, type, and general appearance.[32] Experts may testify as to bills being genuine without proof of the existence of a bank issuing bills, of which the bills in question purport to be.[33] A witness is not competent to testify upon the subject who has never seen a genuine bill of the bank, but whose knowledge is obtained wholly from printed descriptions and facsimiles.[34] A "Bank-Note Detector," that is, a pamphlet describing counterfeits, is not admissible to prove bills counterfeit.[35]

2. Production of Counterfeit. In prosecutions for counterfeiting it is incompetent to give evidence as to spuriousness until the counterfeit itself has been produced,[36] unless the prosecutor is unable to produce the counterfeit.[37] Production may be dispensed with and secondary evidence of spuriousness introduced on proof that defendant destroyed or mutilated the alleged counterfeit.[38] If the counterfeit is in the possession of the accused, secondary evidence on the subject will not be admitted except upon notice to defendant to produce, as in civil cases.[39] Defendant cannot be made to produce counterfeit and thus furnish evidence against himself.[40]

E. Weight and Sufficiency — 1. In General. All facts necessary to constitute the offense charged must be proved,[41] such as scienter,[42] circulation of the money counterfeited,[43] and the existence of a genuine bank-bill such as is charged to have been counterfeited.[44] Intent to defraud a particular person must be proved when alleged.[45] Where the statute grades the offense according to the number of counterfeits in possession, the evidence must show the number to support conviction of the higher offense.[46] It is not necessary to prove that the notes described in the indictment and the ones given in evidence are the same;[47] or that such genuine coin exists as the counterfeit purports to be in imitation

It has been held, however, that it may be proved that the money passed was counterfeit without producing it or accounting for its non-production (Kirk v. Com., 9 Leigh (Va.) 627), and, in proving scienter, that the money in possession may be proved to be counterfeit without producing it or giving notice to produce it, that other circumstances must appear to make such course error (McGregor v. State, 16 Ind. 9).

2. EXISTENCE OF BANK. Where the existence of a bank is necessary to be proved, proof of general reputation is sufficient;[50] and incorporation may be so proved.[51] It is not necessary to prove such facts by production of the articles of incorporation, or an authenticated copy,[52] or the "best evidence."[53]

3. INTENT. Intention to pass may be proved by circumstances, although possession must be established by positive testimony.[54]

4. TESTIMONY OF ACCOMPLICES. The evidence of an accomplice that he received the counterfeit from the accused, unsupported by corroborating evidence connecting him with it, is insufficient to sustain a conviction.[55]

Who are accomplices.— A detective (People v. Molins, 10 N. Y. Suppl. 130, 7 N. Y. Crim. 51), one who feigns to be an accomplice to secure evidence (People v. Farrell, 30 Cal. 316), or one who acts as an innocent agent after reporting to the government officers an order received for making counterfeiting tools and who is directed by them to fill the order (Reg. v. Banner, 2 Moody C. C. 309) is not an accomplice within the rule.

Sufficiency of corroboration.— It is not necessary, in a prosecution for having in possession with intent to pass, that the corroborating circumstances go to the fact of uttering. It is sufficient if there be such circumstances tending to establish the intent. People v. Davis, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 309.

Several notes being set out in an indictment for having counterfeit in possession a verdict of guilty may be rendered on the whole or a part;[63] and when there are several counts charging the accused with having counterfeit in possession and a verdict is rendered "guilty on the first count for having in possession counterfeit coin" the verdict is good as a general verdict.[64]

I. DEFINITION.

Originally the term "county" designated the district or portion of a country under the immediate government of a count or earl.[1] In modern use the word

1. 1 Bl. Comm. 116; Black L. Dict.; Bouvier L. Dict.

Origin and history.— "The idea of a government by means of counties, comes down from the remotest period of Anglo Saxon history. It was imported to the American colonies with the common law, and entered, naturally and of course, into the frame of all their colonial governments; from whence it passed, by easy transition and necessary consequence, into the governments of the States. Our constitutions do not expressly provide for the organization of the territory into counties. This division is taken for granted, The idea of counties underlies all American constitutions. They presuppose both the existence and necessity of counties, and starting from that foundation, proceed to base thereon frames of government, in which the counties act all efficient parts. The political power is composed of representatives from counties. Through them justice is administered, the revenue collected, and the local police rendered effective. Neither the courts of justice, nor the Executive of the State, can perform any important function, except in the tribunals, or through the offices of the counties." Eagle v. Beard, 33 Ark. 497, 502.

"An English county was not a corporation. It had no board or court which stood for the inhabitants and administered their local afdenotes a distinct portion of the country organized by itself for judicial[2] and political purposes.[3] It may denote either the territory marked off to form a county, or the citizens resident within such territory, taken collectively and considered as invested with political rights, or the county regarded as a municipal corporation possessing subordinate governmental powers, or an organized rural society invested with specific rights and duties.[4]

II. NATURE, STATUS, AND FUNCTIONS.

A. In General. Counties are not in any respect business corporations for private purposes;[5] nor are they organized exclusively for the common benefit of fairs. It had no power of taxation, and therefore had no corporate fund. It was merely a convenient division of the kingdom, comprising a number of quasi corporations, such as parishes, hundreds, or wapentakes, for judicial and representative purposes, in which the king, in his executive character, was represented by the vice-comes, or sheriff, on whom, in process of time, the civil administration was almost wholly devolved." Eastman v. Clackamas County, 32 Fed. 24, 29 [citing 1 Bl. Comm. 116, 339; Whart. L. Lex.].

2. A new county cannot be created for judicial purposes only. It is impossible from the very nature and incidents of a county organization, that it can exist alone for such purposes. If it be a county it must be embraced within the proper legal definition and description of what constitutes a county, and the judicial powers exercised within a county is but one incident attaching to a county organization. Opinion of Justices, 14 Fla. 320.

Other definitions are: "A mere local subdivision of a state, created by it without the request or consent of the people residing therein." Woods v. Colfax County, 10 Nebr. 552, 7 N. W. 269.

"An involuntary political and civil division of the Territory, created by statute to aid in the administration of governmental affairs, and possessed of a portion of the sovereignty." Per Burford, C. J., in Greer County v. Watson, 7 Okla. 174, 54 Pac. 441 [quoted in Territory v. Hopkins, 9 Okla. 133, 59 Pac. 976].

"The largest political division of the State having corporate powers." Cal. Pol. Code, § 3901.

"A municipal corporation created by law for public and political purposes and constitutes a part of the government of the State." Gooch v. Gregory, 65 N. C. 142, 143.

"A municipal corporation covering a certain portion or district of country, instituted as a department of the state for the purposes of the more convenient administration of justice, and the better government of the territory included." State v. Dudley, 1 Ohio St. 437, 452.

"A government within a government." James County v. Hamilton County, 89 Tenn. 237, 242, 14 S. W. 601.

"The United States are generally divided into counties. Counties are, in many of the states, divided into townships or towns. In the New England States, however, towns are the basis of all civil divisions, and the counties are rather to be considered as aggregates of towns, so far as their origin is concerned." Bouvier L. Dict.

4. Black L. Dict.

"City" may be included within the meaning of the term. O'Brien v. Vulcan Iron-Works, 7 Mo. App. 257, 259. See also 1 Md. Pub. Laws (1888), art. 1, § 11.

"County" and "people of the county" may be regarded as interchangeable or convertible terms. So too "the county" and the "commissioners of the county." St. Louis County Ct. v. Griswold, 58 Mo. 175. And see Carder v. Fayette County, 16 Ohio St. 353.

Includes "parish" or other equivalent subdivision.— In the Revised Statutes of the United States or in any act or resolution of congress the word "county" shall include a "parish" or any other equivalent subdivision of a state or territory. U. S. Rev. Stat. (1878) § 2 [U. S. Comp. Stat. (1901) p. 4].

5. They are territorial corporations or quasi-corporations created by the state as a means of exercising a portion of its political power by local administrations, on which are imposed a part of the sovereign's authority and duty to insure domestic tranquillity and promote the general welfare within the territorial limits to which they are assigned.

citizens and property holders within their respective limits. They are of a purely political character, constituting the machinery and essential agency by which free governments are upheld and through which for the most part their powers are exercised.[6] Their functions are wholly of a public nature.[7] Counties are subordinate agencies for the orderly government of the state within the scope of their authority; hence they are subject to the control and direction of the legislature in which chiefly the sovereignty of the state is represented and exercised.[8]

B. Corporate Capacity. Although counties are frequently called "public" as distinguished from "private" corporations,[9] and although there are a number of decisions holding that a county is a municipal corporation equally with cities and towns,[10] the weight of authority is to the effect that they are not municipal corporations,[11] that they are not corporations proper but at most merely quasi-corporations,[12] because not in terms declared by statute to be corporations, and

III. CREATION.

A. Power of Legislature — 1. In General. Legislative power over counties is supreme, except as restricted by the constitution, either in express terms or by necessary implication,[15] and the creation or establishment of a county which is the setting apart of certain territory to be in the future organized as a political community or a quasi-corporation for political purposes[16] is within the scope of such power,[17] where the territory from which the county is to be created is owned by the state;[18] but in exercising such power the legislature should inform itself of the existence of all the facts prerequisite to enable it to act.[19] It has been

Time or mode of exercising power discretionary with legislature.— The New York constitution gives to the legislature general power to erect new counties without restricting its discretion as to the time or mode of exercising such power. Rumsey v. People, 19 N. Y. 41.

Necessity for amendment to constitution.— In Florida "the territorial subdivisions of a judicial circuit are described as counties in the Constitution. The name is given to each subdivision, and the jurisdiction is necessarily limited to such named subdivisions. A new subdivision constituting a new county could not be the same as that named in the Constitution. It is not within the power of the Legislature to create a new and different county and extend to such new county the jurisdiction of the Circuit Court, as its jurisdiction can neither be enlarged nor diminished by the Legislature. It would require, therefore, an amendment of the Constitution to create a new county with 'all the rights and privileges of a county.'" Opinion of Justices, 14 Fla. 320, 322.

held, however, that the manner of informing itself as to the existence of the facts as to area, population, etc., prerequisite to enable it to create a proposed county and on what evidence, is for the legislature to determine, and when so determined will conclude all further inquiry by all other departments of the government.[20]

2. Constitutional Restriction Upon Power of Legislature — a. As to Area. State constitutions very frequently contain provisions as to the area of counties requiring that no new county shall contain less than a certain number of square miles, and prohibiting the reduction of any county below a certain amount,[21] or the taking of any territory from any county containing less than the prescribed area.[22] These provisions are not merely directory to the legislature but are mandatory.[23]

b. As to Population. Other limitations found in the constitutions of some states are to the effect that the proposed county must contain a certain population,[24] that in the creation thereof the population of no other county shall be reduced below the number required by the constitution,[25] and that no county con-

Lusher v. Scites, 4 W. Va. 11. Thus in Farquharson v. Yeargin, 24 Wash. 549, 64 Pac. 717, it was held that a bond issue by a county created from the territory of another county cannot be enjoined on the ground that the territory included in the new county did not contain two thousand inhabitants at the time of its creation, as required by Wash. Const. art. 11, § 3, since the passage and approval of the act creating such county is a legislative determination of the sufficiency of its population, although there is no finding to such effect in the act, and is conclusive.

taining less than a designated number of inhabitants shall thereby be reduced in area.[26] These provisions, it has been held, refer to population at the time of the erection of a new county, and the legislature in determining the question of population is not confined to the last state census.[27]

c. As to Election of County Officers. The election of county officers is not a prerequisite to the creation of a county, and by the terms of an act of the legislature creating it such county may become a body corporate and politic long before the officers to be elected could enter upon their duties.[28]

d. Consent of Inhabitants. The creation of counties being a matter of public convenience and governmental necessity,[29] whether they will assume their corporate powers and perform the duties and obligations imposed are questions as to which they have no choice, but their assumption is wholly involuntary,[30] and the power of the legislature to create is independent of the consent of the inhabitants of the proposed county.[31]

3. Validity and Construction of Statutes Creating Counties — a. In General. A county cannot be created by implication and intendment merely, and a statute passed apparently for the purpose of creating a county is invalid for such purpose when it fails to declare in express language the creation of such proposed county.[32] Statutes forming new counties are not to be construed with the same strictness which is to be observed in the construction of a grant or a contract between individuals affecting rights of property; but a more liberal rule should be adopted.[33]

b. Constitutionality. Although an act creating a new county may contain provisions for the appointment or election of officers in an unauthorized manner, this fact will not necessarily invalidate the rest of the act.[34] A state having through each of its coördinate branches of government repeatedly recognized a county as a county and legal subdivision of the state, is estopped, after the lapse of several years, from questioning the regularity of the passage of the act of the legislature creating such county.[35] The constitutionality of a law establishing a new county cannot be inquired into upon a motion to quash an indictment found in a court of such county.[36]

B. Boundaries — 1. Necessity For and Power to Fix. There cannot be a county without boundaries; and in organizing a county that which is first to be done is to define its boundaries and to make out the territorial extent and limit of the political subdivision to be designated by the name of the county.[37] A state legislature creating a county has the power to fix the boundary lines where it pleases, and for that purpose to adopt any description deemed proper to express its intention,[38] provided it locates the boundaries with reasonable certainty;[39] and an act of the legislature defining the boundary lines between counties may be operative to establish the boundary as indicated at once upon its passage, independent of the surveys.[40]

37. Opinion of Justices, 14 Fla. 320. In State v. Baker, 129 Mo. 482, 31 S. W. 924, it was held that under Mo. Const. (1875),

2. FIXED BY USAGE. Until reliable marks can be found to indicate where the statutory line between counties should be run, the safest guide will be the line as hitherto practically adopted by the people in the locality.[41]

3. EXTENT WHERE BOUNDED BY STREAM. Where a stream forms the boundary between two counties the line is usually held to be in the middle of such stream.[42] An artificial change in the course of a stream forming the boundary between counties which causes a new channel does not operate to change the legal boundary between the counties.[43]

4. EXTENT FIXED BY LOW-WATER MARK. The city and county of New York includes the whole of the rivers and harbors adjacent to the city, to actual low-water mark on the opposite shores as the same may be formed from time to time by docks, wharves, and other permanent erections.[44]

5. ESTABLISHMENT OR REËSTABLISHMENT — a. Legislative Provisions. county by an unauthorized survey may be ratified by a curative act of the legislature.[46]

b. Settlement by Commissioners. In some states provision is expressly made for the appointment of commissioners to settle the boundary line between counties.[47] All so appointed must unite in the execution of such duties.[48] They should cause the line of partition or such part thereof as shall be specified in or become necessary by their appointment to be run, surveyed, marked, and ascertained, and the survey certified under their hands to be recorded and filed in the proper office.[49] The duty of approval by a court of the report of county-line commissioners is judicial and not arbitrary or wilful.[50] Certiorari will lie to remove to the supreme court for review the proceedings of commissioners appointed to settle boundary lines between counties;[51] but the official certificates of the commissioners under their oath in the line of their duty are entitled to much weight as evidence, and only clear proof that they are wrong will justify the court in disturbing the report of the commissioners.[52]

Effect of withdrawal of commissioner.— Approval of a boundary commission report will not be withheld for lack of the signature of one commissioner who voluntarily withdrew from the commission shortly after it was organized, and thereafter refused to take any part in the work. Each county is entitled to its full representation on a boundary commission, but if either fail short through its own connivance or acquiescence, it can have no standing to be heard to complain of that which it encouraged and promoted. In re County Line Case, 6 Pa. Finality or conclusiveness of order approving or refusing to approve.—An order refusing approval of the report of the county-line commissioners on a boundary between two counties, pending consideration of exceptions by the court of the adjoining county, is interlocutory in its nature, and no appeal lies until final decree has been made. In re Huntingdon County Line, 8 Pa. c. Settlement by Surveyors. In other states the statutes provide for the establishment and determination of county boundaries by surveyors.[53] The usual method is by joint surveys made by surveyors respectively representing the counties; such surveyors are appointed by or act at the instance of designated county authorities; and provision is sometimes made for instructions from, or approval of the surveys by, certain officers or boards.[54] So it has been provided that a survey for this purpose may be made by some state officer,[55] such as the surveyor-general, on the application of the proper county authorities.[56]

d. Suits to Determine and Settle. In some states provision is expressly made by statute that in case the method of surveying and determining county boundaries is not satisfactory to either county suit may be brought in a court of competent jurisdiction to settle and determine such boundary.[57] In determining the territorial boundaries of counties maps of such territory made out and published by authority of law may properly be referred to as evidence on the question.[58] The testimony of parties running county lines, and those present and assisting therein, and of those present and seeing the line as it was run, is entitled to the greatest weight.[59] legislature fixing the boundaries of a county must yield to the evident intention of the legislature[61] as deduced from the whole act, taken together, giving due consideration to the title of the act and the situation of the territory to be affected,[62] and clerical errors may be corrected and the proper words substituted.[63]

b. Rules as to Monuments, Courses, and Lines.[64] In tracing county lines as defined by statutes the general rule applies that monuments[65] control courses, and a specific course will control a general course.[66] In an act fixing the boundaries of a county, a call for course yields to a call to run with the designated line, even if the line is unsurveyed, provided it is susceptible of definite location.[67]

7. Effect of Long Acquiescence. County lines are subject to the general rule that in the ascertainment of the location of ancient lines long acquiescence[68] of the parties interested in the location of a line at a particular place should have great, if not controlling, weight, where there are no existing marks or living witnesses to show original location, and the calls and traditions are themselves vague and indefinite.[69]

C. Alteration, Consolidation, and Division of Counties — 1. In General. Unless the constitution of the state otherwise provides, a state legislature has authority to extend or limit the boundaries of a county, enlarge or diminish its area, divide the same into two or more counties, or consolidate two or more counties into one.[70]

2. LIMITATIONS AND RESTRICTIONS UPON POWER OF LEGISLATURE[71] — a. As to Distance of County Line From Court-House. The constitution may provide that no line of a new county shall approach the court-house of an old county from which it may be taken nearer than a certain prescribed distance.[72]

b. New Counties to Be Composed of Contiguous Territory. It is sometimes provided that new counties created out of territory to be detached from a county already organized must be composed of contiguous territory, and leave the remaining part of the original county one contiguous portion of territory.[73]

c. Interference With Judicial or Legislative Districts — (I) In General. Although an act of the legislature dividing or abolishing a county and distributing its territory to other counties is void, if in conflict with constitutional provisions as to judicial and representative districts,[74] yet, while the same counties are left organized to fulfil the conditions of the senatorial and representative apportionments as counties, the boundaries may still be subject to alteration within the constitutional restrictions.[75]

The New York legislature has no power under the constitution to alter county lines by taking from one county and adding to another, but only to divide a county into two or more where the original county has grown too large for the convenience of the people. N. Y. Laws (1895), c. 934, incorporating a part of the county of Westchester into the city of New York, violates the provisions of the state constitution which recognize the existing counties, apportion members of the assembly to the several counties, and divide the state into senatorial districts, but provide that in the formation of a district no county shall be divided. Matter of McGinness, 13 Misc. (N. Y.) 714, 35 N. Y. Suppl. 820.

Under Ohio Const. art. 9, § 7, the state was divided into thirty-three senatorial districts. The counties of Washington and Morgan constitute the fourteenth district, the counties of Guernsey and Monroe the nineteenth. By the act of March, 1851, the county of Noble was created from these two districts. It was held that the act creating the latter county was not in violation of the constitution from the mere fact that a part of the citizens of the county thus created continued to vote and be represented in the senate in one of these districts and the rest in another. State v. Dudley, 1 Ohio St. 437.

be "hereafter" erected unless its population "shall" entitle it to a member refers to the population at the time of the erection of the new county, and in determining the question of population the legislature is not confined to the last state census.[76] An act purporting to create a new parish out of an existing parish, which will thereby increase the number of representatives beyond the maximum allowed by the constitution, is void.[77] So a law establishing a new county by which an old one was reduced below the ratio of representation has been held unconstitutional, notwithstanding a proviso that for the purposes of representation the inhabitants of the new county should continue to vote as in the old one until the population of the new county should entitle it to a representative.[78]

(iii) Effect of Prohibition Against Division of Counties in Creating Senatorial Districts. A constitutional prohibition that "no county shall be divided in creating senatorial districts" does not prevent the legislature from annexing part of a county in one senatorial district to another county in a different senatorial district; the former county not being divided for the purpose of creating a senatorial district.[79]

d. Submission of Question to Popular Vote. A usual provision of the various state constitutions is that the legislature shall not abolish, divide, consolidate, or annex territory to counties or change their boundaries without submitting the proposed act to the voters of the territory to be affected for their approval;[80] and that the proposed change must to become a law receive the majority vote of such

Submission of question of annexation of adjoining territory.— In People v. Nally, 49 Cal. 478, it was held that an act was constitutional which submitted to a popular vote of the electors of a county the question whether a portion of the territory of an adjoining county should be annexed to it and provided that if a majority of the votes were for annexation then the organization of the adjoining county should be abandoned and its territory be divided and annexed in part to the county in which the vote was taken and in part to another adjoining county. voters.[81] A state legislature has, however, the power to take measures to ascertain and definitely determine and mark a boundary of a county, where there is uncertainty as to where the line is, without submitting such question to the voters for approbation,[82] and in some states the constitutions do not prohibit the legislature from acting without a submission of the question to the voters.[83]

e. Presentation of Petition by Voters. Again it may be provided that upon the presentation to the secretary of state of a petition signed by a certain per cent of the residents and voters of an organized county, praying that certain territory be detached from adjoining unorganized counties, and also a petition signed by the residents and voters of the territory proposed to be attached to such organized county, the governor and state auditor shall meet and consider such petitions, and if they conform to law the governor shall issue his proclamation setting out the facts and declaring the territory described to be detached from the unorganized counties and attached to and incorporated within the organized county.[84]

3. Operation and Effect — a. In General. On the establishment of the boundaries of a new county formed by the division of another county, such new county becomes simply a political organization entitled to rights pertaining to similar organizations.[85] The creation of new counties by the division of old counties does no more than provide for the organization of such counties, and until the new county is actually organized and its officers qualified, the territory remains subject to the jurisdiction of the old county;[86] and the circumstances of the inclusion of the new county by name in another judicial district and of an act apportioning senators and representatives among several counties of the state have been held not to affect the rule.[87]

b. As to Territory Improperly Embraced Within New County. Territory improperly embraced within the lines of a new county formed from another county belongs to the new county until the old county in some proper proceeding asserts its right to have the line changed.[88]

c. On Application of Special Statutes. A special statute applicable to the territory of a certain county continues applicable to the part of such territory afterward set off for the formation of another county, in the absence of a repeal express or implied of such statute.[89]

d. Upon Original Judicial Districts. Until a county organized from portions of various other counties is annexed to some judicial district the inhabitants of such new county will be held to belong to their original counties for judicial purposes.[90]

e. Upon Attachment Sale. Where, after an attachment has been levied on land, the county is divided so as to include such land in a new county, such subsequent division will not divest the lien of the attachment or deprive the officers of the power to finish by a sale the process already begun.[91]

f. Inclusion of Former County-Seat Within New County. If in the formation of a new county by setting off a portion of an existing county the county-seat of the original county falls within the territory of the new county, it will not for that reason become the county-seat of such new county.[92]

g. Upon Officers of Original Counties. Where a new county is created by setting off for that purpose organized townships from existing counties, the supervisors and the other township officers of the townships detached to form the new county occupy the same relation to the latter as they previously held to the original counties;[93] but on the formation of a new county the county commissioners of any of the counties from which the new county is formed who reside within the limits of such new county cease to be commissioners of the old county unless they remove within the latter.[94] A mandamus against the police jury of a division of a parish may be enforced after a consolidation of the divisions of the same parish against the police jury of the parish thus formed.[95]

new county, done after the passage of the law and before the actual organization of the new county, are valid; and prima facie it is presumed in favor of the acts of the officers of the old county that the former organization continues until the new organization is proved. 4. Adjustment of Rights and Liabilities — a. On Creation of New County — (I) Power of Legislature to Apportion. On the creation of a new county from the territory of a contiguous county or counties, it is for the legislature to apportion between the new and old counties, in such manner as may seem just and equitable, the property rights and liabilities of the county or counties of which the new county formed a part;[97] and no part of such power is devolved upon the judicial department.[98]

Adoption of subsequent statute adjusting rights and liabilities.—After a county was divided by the legislature and new counties had been created it was subsequently enacted that the new counties should receive a certain portion of the money and the credits belonging to the old county and provided for the appointment of commissioners by the courts of sessions of the several counties to compute and adjust the amounts to be received by each county. These courts appointed commissioners who performed the duties of their appointment. It is held that although the last statute of the legislature was originally binding yet the several counties having provided to execute its provisions by their agents, the courts of sessions must be considered to have adopted the statute and to be bound thereby. of express legislative or constitutional provision as to rights and liabilities, the general rule is that the new county will be entirely freed of any of the burdens of the counties from which its territory was taken.[1] No liability attaches because of the former relations of the inhabitants of the respective counties.[2] The old county owns all the public property within its new limits; and is responsible for all debts contracted by it before the passage of the act of separation, and such debts it must pay without any right of contribution from the new county.[3]

(B) Under Constitutional Provisions Requiring Apportionment. It has been held that a constitutional provision that every county which shall be enlarged or created from territory taken from any other county or counties shall be liable for a just proportion of the existing debts and liabilities of the county or counties from which such territory shall be taken is not an enlargement or grant of power, but is restrictive of and a limitation upon the power which still remains with the legislature, and that the question of what, if any, proportion of the debts of the old should be paid by the new county, is with such body.[4]

(III) Liabilities Within Statutory Provisions. Within the meaning of statutes imposing on a new county proportional liability for the debts of the county or counties of which it was originally a part are debts, part of which are not due,[5] bonded indebtedness, such as bridge, railroad, court-house, jail, and other bonds,[6] interest on bonded indebtedness,[7] claims allowed by authority of parent counties, until adjudged illegal or set aside by a competent tribunal,[8] and judgments against parent counties.[9] On the other hand a contingent liability arising out of a breach of duty is not within the statutes;[10] nor is any other disputed claim, until judgment thereon has been recovered.[11]

Const. art. 9, § 1) has been held to be definite in its terms, leaving no room for construction and making it the imperative duty of the legislature to provide a method by which a new county may be forced to pay its proportionate part of the indebtedness of the old existing at the time of its creation. (iv) Property Within Statutory Provisions. The term "property" as used in acts apportioning liabilities and property upon the creation of new counties may, in the absence of a showing of a contrary intent, be held to include money as well as other assets.[12]

b. On Detachment of Territory From One County and Attachment to Another. In the absence of express provision to the contrary transferred territory loses all claim to share in the property belonging to the county from which it is taken,[13] and is relieved of the indebtedness resting upon the latter,[14] except in the case of debts contracted before the separation and which are a lien upon the detached territory;[15] but it incurs the liabilities and shares in the property of the county to which it is attached and is equally subject to assessment and taxation for that purpose.[16] Where a portion of the territory of one county is annexed to another, the county gaining territory neither acquires any rights nor comes under any obligations to the county losing it, unless the legislative act so provides.[17]

c. On Change of Boundaries. A law providing for a change of county boundaries is not invalid for failure of the legislature to provide for the apportionment of the indebtedness of the counties whose boundaries are sought to be changed thereunder, but it will be presumed that the legislature did not deem such provisions necessary.[18]

d. Computation and Determination of Amounts — (i) In General. It is for the legislature and not for the courts to determine how the property and debts shall be apportioned between the old county and the detached territory;[19] and when it has done so the courts cannot interfere.[20] And although the legislature old one, it was provided that the debt of the old county should be ascertained and apportioned by the district court. This was done, but there existed at the time an unascertained indebtedness from the old county to another county, and the court found that when the amount of such indebtedness was ascertained the new county would be liable for its portion thereof. It was held that the new county was liable for its portion of such indebtedness. Bingham County v. Bannock County, 5 Ida. 627, 51 Pac. 769.

may itself ascertain or determine what proportion of the existing liabilities of the original county or counties is to be paid by a new county created therefrom, and the apportionment of property, yet it is eminently proper and is the practice in many jurisdictions to remit such matters to the local authorities of the county.[21] The legislature may, however, by the act apportioning the property and indebtedness, provide for the appointment of a special board or commission to determine the value of the property and the amount of indebtedness to be assumed.[22] And it has been held that such adjustment should be made on just and equitable principles rather than according to technical rules of law.[23] The settlement made by such commissioners will not be disturbed in the absence of a showing of fraud or mistake,[24] but may be impeached upon such grounds.[25]

In California it is held that in creating new counties out of territory taken from counties already organized it is but just that the legislature should apportion the debts already accrued between the new and old counties in the ratio of the territory, population, taxable property, and benefits conferred on the respective counties or portions of counties affected by the change. People v. Alameda County, 26 Cal. 641.
The phrase "taxable property" as used in these provisions has been held to mean property liable to taxation, and property exempt by law from taxation, although appearing on the assessment, should not be estimated. Custer County v. Yellowstone County, 6 Mont. 39, 9 Pac. 586. Condition precedent.— In order, however, that an action may be maintained against a new county to recover its proportionate share of the indebtedness of the parent county, such amount must be ascertained in the manner prescribed by law, usually by the county court of the new county. Iowa County v. Green County, 1 Pinn. (Wis.) 518.
Limitation of action.—An action against a county to enforce a liability arising from an indebtedness of a former county charged upon counties, formerly a part of it, were liable over to it under statute, is entitled to make them parties defendant, and settle the entire controversy in the same action.[32] Where two counties contribute territory for the formation of a third, one of the two parent counties may sue the new county for an adjustment of liabilities between them without joining the other parent county.[33] Where a law provides for the payment of a share of taxes collected by one county to the treasurer of another county, a counter-claim in an action between the counties by the latter county is not demurrable on the ground that the cause of action accrued to the treasurer and not to the county, since the money if collected belongs to the county, and the latter is the real party in interest.[34]

(2) By Mandamus. In some jurisdictions where the county board or court of a new county is required to provide for the payment of its proportion of the debt of the parent county such action may be compelled by mandamus.[35]

(II) Of New County's Proportion of Assets. The legislature of a state may as incident to its power to create two counties out of one, and to direct the division of funds previously raised by levies on the inhabitants of both the counties in common, provide for enforcing payment thereof by suit after demand against those having the same in hand.[36] Where the act creating a new county provides that such new county shall receive certain taxes upon lands situated in such new county, and proceeds of tax-sales of lands so situated, it has been held that payment thereof may be compelled by mandamus.[37]

f. Appeal From County Tribunals.[38] The actions of county tribunals in adjusting their rights and liabilities are subject to appeal;[39] and on such appeal the whole matter is triable de novo.[40] the new county by the act creating it is upon a specialty created by the statute, and as no liability against the new county could arise from the original obligation alone, such obligation is but an element in the cause of action, the statute being the other and indispensable element; hence limitation against such action runs only from the creation of the new county, and not from the maturity of the original debt. Robertson v. Blaine County, 90 Fed. 63, 32 C. C. A. 512, 47 L. R. A. 459.

Venue of action.—A suit by a parent county to recover a portion of its indebtedness from other counties created therefrom is in some states authorized to be brought in the district court of either the old or new county. In proceedings to enforce the levy and collection of a tax to pay the bonds issued by a county, a portion of which was subsequently detached and formed into new counties with the provision that the new counties should compensate the original county according to the assessed valuation of the property in the detached territory, it is not necessary to make the new counties parties. Application for mandamus.— The application should, where the new county is composed of more than one county, be in behalf of all the old counties; or if made by one should show that separate action could be had with regard to its own claim without injustice to others, if there be others still unsettled; and the petition should show a demand for action and a refusal. D. Annexation or Attachment of Territory For Special Purposes — 1. IN GENERAL. Territory or unorganized counties are often attached by statute to another county for special purposes such as judicial, election, revenue, etc., and for such purposes are treated as constituting a part of the county to which they are attached.[41]

2. LIABILITY OF ATTACHED TERRITORY. The people of two counties attached for special purposes should alike enjoy the benefits and bear the burdens of the county administration.[42] And where an unorganized county is attached by statute to another county for revenue purposes, the authorities of the latter county are the proper persons to levy and collect taxes on property situated in such unorganized county for revenue purposes.[43] Where, however, an unorganized county, attached to another for the purpose of county government, is duly organized, the property within its limits is no longer subject to be taxed by the county to which it was attached. The taxes during the period of annexation should therefore be limited to defraying the ordinary expenses of county administration.[44]

E. Precincts or Divisions For Special Purposes — 1. CREATION. In some states the duty of dividing counties into precincts[45] or districts is imposed on the legislature by the constitution;[46] but such division may be, and is often delegated by the legislature to county officials, such as county courts, commissioners, and supervisors.[47]

2. PRECINCT BONDS — a. Issuance. Bonds may be issued by a county on behalf of a precinct thereof, where such issuance is authorized by law;[48] and such bonds, when issued by the proper officers of the county, are in legal effect bonds of the county, although voted by the inhabitants of the precinct.[49] The issuance of such bonds must be made in the manner[50] and for the purpose prescribed, and bonds issued for an unauthorized purpose are void.[51]

b. Proceedings to Enforce Payment. Although in some states the remedy provided by statute for enforcing the liability of a county on bonds issued by it in behalf of precincts of said county is by mandamus to compel the levy of a tax,[52] yet in the courts of the United States, even when sitting in a state whose statutes contain such a provision, an action at law will lie on such bonds against the county, and is the only remedy, and an action thereon should be brought against the county.[53]

F. Classification According to Population. In many states provision is made for the classification of counties according to their population.[54] The usual method of determining the population of a county for such classification is by the census taken by the United States.[55]

IV. GOVERNMENT AND OFFICERS OF COUNTIES.

A. Organization and Governmental Powers in General — 1. ORGANIZATION — a. Defined and Explained. The establishing of a county is the setting apart a certain territory to be in the future organized as a political community or quasi-corporation for political purposes; and the organizing of a county is the vesting in the people of such territory such corporate rights and powers.[56]

b. Method of Organization or Reorganization. Both the establishing and organizing of counties is, with some restrictions as to area, population, and assessable property,[57] left exclusively with the legislature of the state;[58] and until some act of the legislature authorizing it the people of a district have no right to act as an organized county.[59] The legislature need not, however, itself exercise this power, but may, and frequently does, delegate the same to officers or commissioners appointed for the purpose.[60] In some jurisdictions it is expressly provided that where an unorganized or disorganized county desires to be organized or reorganized, a memorial or petition expressing such desire and signed by a certain number of qualified voters or freeholders residing in such unorganized or disorganized county shall be presented to the governor,[61] or to the commissioners' court of the old county, where authority to organize is conferred upon such commissioners.[62]

c. Subsequent Recognition or Ratification of Defective Organization. Although the original organization of a county was illegal, without constitutional authority, or even fraudulent, such organization is a de facto one, which a subsequent recognition and confirmation by the legislature will render valid.[63] When a

The court will take judicial notice of what such population is according to the preceding census in ascertaining to what class a county may belong. Worcester Nat. Bank v. Cheney, 94 Ill. 430.

An "organized county" is a county which is organized in fact and has its lawful officers, legal machinery, and means for carrying out the powers and performing the duties pertaining to it as a quasi-corporation. State v. Honerud, 66 Minn. 32, 68 N. W. 323.

After county officers appointed by the governor qualify and enter on the discharge of their duties, an unorganized county becomes duly organized under Kan. Comp. "The organization of a county is so incident to its creation, and flows so naturally therefrom, that it partakes of the special proceeding which brings the county into existence to so great a degree, that it is difficult, if not impossible, to effect it without more or less of special legislation, in order to have the law applicable." d. Attack Upon Organization — (I) Collateral Attack. The validity of the organization of a county cannot be collaterally attacked.[65]

(II) Proceedings to Restrain or Vacate Organization. A court of equity may under the proper circumstances and upon a proper application[66] restrain commissioners of a county from organizing a county.[67] When, however, the county has been organized, the court of chancery has no power to abolish it or to restrain existing officers from executing their several functions.[68] So where a county organization has been obtained through falsehood and fraud, by the presentation of a false and fraudulent memorial, and by false and fraudulent census returns, the supreme court may, in an action in the nature of quo warranto[69] against the persons assuming to act as officers of such organization, inquire into

66. Parties complainant.— In accordance with the rule that when an injury is common to all, and results from the invasion of the right enjoyed by a party in common with the public, a private action cannot be maintained, a citizen, taxpayer, or qualified voter of an unorganized county has no such interest in its proposed organization as to enable him to maintain a suit to restrain or avoid such organization (Hughes v. Dubbs, 84 Tex. 502, 19 S. W. 684); nor can a citizen and taxpayer of a county from which a portion of territory has been taken for the purpose of establishing a new county file a bill to inquire into the validity of the act creating a new county, if it is so far organized as to have become a political organization of the state (Bridgenor v. Rodgers, 1 Coldw. (Tenn.) 259 [following Ford v. Farmer, 9 Humphr. (Tenn.) 152]).

67. As where the act creating the county is unconstitutional and void (Henry v. Steele, 28 Ark. 455; Ford v. Farmer, 9 Humphr. (Tenn.) 152; Bradley v. Com'rs, 2 Humphr. (Tenn.) 428, 37 Am. Injunctions generally see INJUNCTIONS.

Where such organization does not interfere with some individual right courts of equity have no jurisdiction to enjoin the proceedings of the officer of the county and vacate its organization. Henry v. Steele, 28 Ark. 455.

An action to perpetually enjoin the government of a state from organizing a county, on the grounds that the memorial upon which the census taker was appointed was insufficient, and that the returns made by the census taker were fraudulent and false, cannot be maintained, when it is shown that the charges of insufficiency and fraud have not been brought to the notice of the governor, who is invested with full power, and is specially enjoined by law to inquire into the truth of such charges before proceeding with the organization. Martin v. Lacy, 39 Kan. 703, 18 Pac. 951 [following Martin v. Ingham, 38 Kan. 641, 17 Pac. 162].

68. Ford v. Farmer, 9 Humphr. (Tenn.) 152.

69. The state by quo warranto proceedings is the only proper party to inquire into the right of county officers exercising their official functions in a disputed territory or to determine the number of square miles con-

such falsehood and fraud and declare the organization of the county illegal and void.[70]

2. DISORGANIZATION. A legislature has without doubt the power to abolish a county organization, and such power has at times been exercised.[71] So it has been held that the mere existence of a legislative act declaring organized a county previously established, and providing for the appointment of county officers, does not of itself make an organized county, and accordingly whenever for any cause a county in fact organized under such an act becomes depopulated organization is lost.[72]

3. LEGISLATIVE CONTROL OVER FUNDS OF COUNTIES. A county being a public corporation existing only for public purposes connected with the administration of a state government, its revenue is subject to the control of the legislature, and when the legislature directs the application of a revenue to a particular purpose, or its payment to any party, a duty is imposed and an obligation created upon the county.[73] Except as specially restricted the legislative power of appropriation of moneys raised is coextensive with the power of taxation, and the power of appropriation which the legislature can exercise over the revenues of a state for any purpose which it may regard as calculated to promote the public good it can exercise over the revenues of a county for any purpose connected with its present or past condition,[74] and this power is not affected by the fact that other counties may derive some benefit therefrom,[75] or by the fact that the fund when raised is to be expended free from the control of the county authorities.[76] It cannot, however, compel a county to pay the personal debt of one of its officers,[77] and in at least one jurisdiction it has been held that it cannot impose upon a county a liability which had no previous existence.[78]

4. UNIFORMITY OF COUNTY GOVERNMENTS. It is expressly provided by the constitution of many of the states that county governments established by the legislature shall be as nearly uniform throughout the state as may be practicable;[79] and

B. County-Seats — 1. Definition. A county-seat or county town is the chief town of a county, where the county buildings and courts are located and county business transacted.[82]

2. Location and Establishment — a. In General. The location and establishment of county-seats pertain to the legislative department of the state;[83] and such department may act directly, or as is the usual custom, through agents appointed by it for that purpose.[84] If the legislature acts directly in locating a county-seat, no judicial question can be made as to the propriety or validity of its action;[85] and if it acts through the medium of officers or agents, no judicial question can be made as to the propriety or validity of the acts of the officers or agents, unless the legislature makes special provision therefor, but redress must be had through the legislature.[86]

b. Selection of Temporary County-Seat. It being impossible to get the business of a county efficiently started without some place where it is temporarily centralized, this is sometimes done by requiring courts and other bodies to meet at some place named or appointed until a county-seat is established, and sometimes by naming some place directly as a temporary county-seat for all purposes, or by delegating such selection to agents.[87]

c. Donations to Obtain Location. Donations made to a county to obtain the location of a county-seat, either originally or as an inducement to its removal from any place are very common, and offers of such donations do not amount to a bribe, such as will invalidate an election held for the purpose of locating the county-seat.[88]

d. Submission of Location to Popular Vote. Although in the absence of a constitutional provision to the contrary, a state legislature has the power to locate a county-seat at any place in the county without submitting the question of such location to the votes of the electors,[89] the usual method of determining the location of a permanent county-seat is by the submission of the question to a popular vote of the electors of the county;[90] and the place receiving the majority of all

Power of commissioners to make a conditional selection.— Where commissioners are appointed to select and determine a site for a permanent county-seat, and are directed when they have selected a site to give notice thereof to other commissioners appointed by the same act for the purpose of acquiring title to the site selected, the commissioners for location may make a conditional selection; and if the condition be broken by the owner of the land selected as a site the commissioners may make a new selection. the votes cast at an election held for this purpose is to be the county-seat of the county.[91]

e. Site. A legislature has no power to establish a county-seat of a new county outside of the boundaries of the state.[92] Nevertheless agents appointed by it to select a county-seat are clothed with the sovereign power and discretion of the state, which discretion so far as it depends upon the exercise of their judgment, no court has a right to control unless they violate private rights.[93] A site selected for a county-seat is usually near the center of the county,[94] and in some states this is expressly required by statute.[95] In the selection of a county-seat the choice is not limited to existing cities or towns, but a site may be chosen for a new town and the county-seat located therein.[96]

f. Assailing Validity of Location. The question of the location of a county-seat cannot be tried in a collateral proceeding, but only on a direct proceeding for that purpose.[97] Where a county-seat has been located over ten years, during which time a majority of the electors of the county have on two occasions voted against removal, a taxpayer will be estopped from maintaining mandamus in behalf of himself and other taxpayers to have it changed to a place which he claims is the proper county-seat.[98]

3. Effect of Destruction of County or Change of County Lines. Whenever a county is destroyed by the legislature the county-seat thereof is also discontinued.[99] The county-seat of an old county need not be made the county-seat of a new county, or indeed of any county, new or old, in which such county-seat may be placed by a change of county lines, or by a creation of a new county, since if this were the case a county might by such change of county lines have two or more county-seats.[1]

The power to remove a county-seat is not temporarily exhausted or suspended by a single exercise, whether completed or commenced only. People v. Wands, 23 Mich. 385.

When a town has been recognized as the county-seat for a number of years, although the record of its selection is lost, proceedings to locate the county-seat elsewhere are proceedings to remove the county-seat and not merely to originally locate it, and they must therefore conform to the law concerning the removal of county-seats. Caruthers v. State, 67 Tex. 132, 2 S. W. 91.

Effect of removal by legislature for a specified time.— Where the county-seat of a county had been located at a particular place, and was afterward removed by an act of the territorial legislature to another place for the period of five years, after the lapse of such period it will not revert to the place where it was first located unless further legislation should intervene to locate it there, and at the expiration of that time there would be no established location of it. State v. Washington County, 2 Pinn. (Wis.) 552, 2 Chandl. (Wis.) 247.

Limitation on power of territorial legislature.— The location and changing of county-seats is a legislative function and is a rightful subject of territorial legislation within the provisions of the organic act of the territory, in the absence of any federal law upon the subject. But when congress legislates directly upon any subject for the government of the people of a territory, then it ceases to be a rightful subject of territorial legislation, and any law enacted by the legislature upon the same subject is void. (B) Imposition of Conditions by Legislature. A state legislature may if it sees fit impose certain conditions precedent to the removal of a county-seat;[7] such for instance as the raising of a specified sum of money to pay the expenses of removal, and to be applied to the erection of county buildings,[8] the conveyance to the county of certain land in the town of the proposed site,[9] or the turning over of the old county buildings to the committee appointed by the citizens of the new location.[10] It is also sometimes provided in acts relative to removal of county-seats that no relocation shall be made unless the county-seat shall be removed a certain distance.[11]

(C) Effect of Donation of Land. The power to remove is not abridged by the fact that in consideration of the location of the county-seat at a certain place its citizens have donated land or buildings for county purposes.[12]

b. Damages and Compensation For Removal. The establishment of a county-seat is an act of sovereignty at all times under the control of the sovereign power, and the change of such county-seat cannot give the right to an action of damages,[13] even though the citizens of the former location have made a donation of lands or money to obtain its location at such place.[14] The legislature may, however, make special provision for compensation for damages sustained by the owners of property by the removal of a county-seat,[15] or for the reconveyance of lands and buildings to the donors thereof, in proportion to their several donations;[16] and

Effect of establishment by special act.— The fact that a county-seat was originally established by a special act does not take such county outside the scope of the general law setting forth the proper proceedings for the removal of county-seats. Benton v. Nason, 26 Kan. 658.

7. In addition to the conditions imposed by a state constitution as precedent to the removal of a county-seat the legislature may impose a condition that after the vote is taken in favor of removal to a certain city such city shall place at the control of the county supervisors a specified sum of money. Right to land by donor on removal.— The acceptance by a county of a donation of land for a county-seat does not constitute a contract that the county will continue its county-seat thereon, and the removal of the county-seat therefrom will not entitle the donor to recover the land unless the donation was limited to that particular use or purpose. Gilmore v. Hayworth, 26 Tex. 89. If, however, land is granted upon condition that it shall be used for a particular purpose it will revert to the donor when it shall cease to be so used. Compensation in money or lots in new town.—An act authorizing the removal of a county-seat sometimes provides that compensation should be made to those citizens whose property may be injured by the removal in money or lots to be laid off in the new town. Hamrick v. Rouse, 17 Ga. 56; Blackwell v. Lawrence County, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 143.

Assessment of damages by commissioners. — Where an act of the legislature authorized certain commissioners to assess the damages which the owners of town property might sustain by the removal of a county-seat, it was held under the constitution of Georgia that such commissioners had no jurisdiction to try the question of title to land, that jurisdiction being vested in the superior court. where such provision is made for compensation or reconveyance the party injured by a failure to comply with such requirements has his remedy by a suit at law for a breach of contract,[17] or by a resort to a court of chancery for an order of conveyance.[18]

c. Proceedings For Removal — (I) PETITION — (A) In General. The usual method for commencing proceedings for the removal and relocation of a county-seat is by a petition,[19] the object of which is to save the public from the expense, loss of time, and excitement incident to an election, unless there is a reasonable probability that the required majority of electors will vote for the change.[20]

(B) Requisites of Petition. Such a petition must in its allegations follow closely the requirements of the statute authorizing it.[21] It must be signed by a resolution declared the location permanent; and afterward by vote changed the county-seat. The citizens then claimed from the county commissioners the right to retain possession of the buildings until the amount of money advanced for their erection was refunded with interest, which amount the commissioners agreed to pay without interest on the condition that the citizens release all claims. The release was made and county orders issued, but the board of commissioners being changed, a bill was filed to enjoin payment of orders on the new board. It was held that after the removal of a county-seat the county was morally obliged either to give up the property or make compensation, and that there was a sufficient consideration for the compromise. Age, place, and time of residence of each petitioner must be stated in the petition in Nebraska. Ayres v. Moan, 34 Nebr. 210, 51 N. W. 830, 15 L. R. A. 501.

Designation of name of precinct.— Where on a petition for an election to determine the removal of a county-seat, certain electors, in place of writing the name of their precincts in full after their signatures, have made ditto marks, signifying that their precinct is the same as that written above, such designation of the name of the precinct is sufficient. Wilson v. Bartlett, 7 Ida. 271, 62 Pac. 416.

Necessity for date of signature.— It will be sufficient if the petition complies with the designated proportion of the voters of the county,[22] must ask for a change of location,[23] and must be verified by affidavit.[24] Such petitions may be amended, however, so as to correct clerical errors and omissions, such for instance as the omission of the names of the officers before whom the affidavits were sworn to.[25]

(II) Remonstrance. At the meeting by the board upon a petition for the removal of a county-seat, a remonstrance against such removal may be presented to the board signed by those objecting thereto,[26] which remonstrance should be requirements, although it be undated and no proof is offered to show either when the petition was signed by any of the signers, or whether any of them were voters at the time it was signed. Doolittle v. Cabell County Ct., 28 W. Va. 158.

Number of signers must be greater than the number of remonstrants.— Loomis v. Bailey, 45 Iowa 400.

Registration is not necessary to enable a voter to sign a petition. Wilson v. Bartlett, 7 Ida. 271, 62 Pac. 416.

Several petitions in proper form signed in the aggregate by the proper number of voters of a county will be sufficient (McKinney v. Bradford County, 26 Fla. 267, 4 So. 855), even though such petitioners ask for removal to different places (Butler v. Mills, 61 Ark. 477, 33 S. W. 632).

Signer's ignorance of contents.— It is no excuse for one signing a petition for the removal of a county-seat to say after such petition has been acted upon that he did not know what such petition contained. If able to read, he must do so, unless prevented from so doing, or the circumstances must be such as to show the perpetration of fraud difficult of detection, or some other such circumstances as a court of equity will deem a sufficient excuse. Eggleston v. State, 37 Kan. 426, 15 Pac. 608.

Where signatures are procured by bribery or by offer of a bonus such names cannot be counted. Ayres v. Moan, 34 Nebr. 210, 51 N. W. 830, 15 L. R. A. 501.

Where the names of persons appear both upon a petition for the submission of the question of relocating the county-seat, and upon remonstrance against such submission, such names must be counted as those of remonstrance and not upon the petition. Duffees v. Sherman, 48 Iowa 287; Jamison v. Louisa County, 47 Iowa 388.

Withdrawal of signature.—A signer of a petition for the removal of a county-seat may withdraw his name from the petition at any time before final action by the county board thereon (Slingerland v. Norton, 59 Minn. 351, 61 N. W. 322; State v. Polk County, 88 Wis. 355, 60 N. W. 266; La Londe v. Barron County, 80 Wis. 380, 49 N. W. 960), and where before such final action signers of the petition request that their names be struck off such names cannot be counted as of the proportion of the voters required by statute to have signed the petition (State v. Eggleston, 34 Kan. 714, 10 Pac. 3).

23. McKinney v. Bradford County, 26 Fla. 267, 4 So. 855; Lanier v. Padgett, 18 Fla. 842; Doolittle v. Cabell County Ct., 28 W. Va. 158.

The omission to pray for a change of county-seat is not cured by a recital in the order calling the election that it appeared to the satisfaction of the board that the petition was "regular and in conformity to the statute," where such defect is apparent in the order. McKinney v. Bradford County, 26 Fla. 267, 4 So. 855.

Designation of proposed site.— It is a sufficient designation of the place to which the petitioners desire the county-seat removed when it was called a certain city or town, and there should be no designation of the particular locality in such city or town as the place where the county-seat is to be located, no matter how much of the land is covered by the boundaries of such city or town, or how sparsely portions of these boundaries may be populated. Doolittle v. Cabell County Ct., 28 W. Va. 158.

24. Stone v. Miller, 60 Iowa 243, 14 N. W. 781; Duffees v. Sherman, 48 Iowa 287.

Sufficient averment that signers were legal voters.— It is sufficient in an affidavit to such petition that the person procuring the signatures states that the signers "were" all legal voters of the county "at the time of signing," and it need not state that such persons "are" legal voters when the affidavit is made. Stone v. Miller, 60 Iowa 243, 14 N. W. 781.

Necessity and time of filing remonstrance. — A remonstrance against relocation of a county-seat cannot be first filed or offered in evidence on appeal from the decision of the county commissioners under the act of 1889, page 299, section 2, providing that every filer of any petition or remonstrance accompanied by proof of the qualifications of the signers and the genuineness of their signatures.[27]

(III) Hearing and Determination— (A) Jurisdiction. The removal of a county-seat being a matter of local concern,[28] boards of county commissioners or supervisors or county courts have jurisdiction to hear and determine applications for removal[29] upon presentation to them by petition in the proper manner,[30] at the proper time,[31] after due notice of such presentation has been given,[32] and after notice of a meeting of such commissioners has been published and posted where required by statute.[33] The decision of such tribunal as to the sufficiency of the petition is judicial, and is conclusive until set aside or reversed upon appeal, writ of error, certiorari, or other method provided for direct review.[34]

(B) Question Considered. Such county boards have the power in determining the question to pass upon the sufficiency of the petition, and the signatures thereto,[35] and their determination in respect to what signatures if any should be withdrawn is conclusive, at least in the absence of fraud.[36] So they may enter-shall be liable to action by the grand jury for the false filing of names, which is the only provision as to filing. Mode v. Beasley, 143 Ind. 306, 42 N. E. 727.

27. Loomis v. Bailey, 45 Iowa 400.

Withdrawal of signatures.— In Loomis v. Bailey, 45 Iowa 400, it was held that after a petition and remonstrance have been presented to a county board for the removal of a county-seat, such tribunal cannot entertain an application of persons signing a petition call a "re-petition" to have their names stricken from the remonstrance, and to be regarded as petitioners for the relocation of the county-seat.

tain remonstrances against removal, and hear evidence for or against relocation,[37] and they may require that the evidence introduced in opposition to the petition shall be in writing.[38] If the statute limits the character of evidence to affidavits accompanying the petition and remonstrance no other evidence can be considered.[39]

(IV) Submission of Question to Popular Vote—(A) Necessity For Submission. Although in the absence of constitutional prohibition to the contrary, the legislature having plenary control of the relocation of county-seats[40] may change the same without submitting the question of removal to a vote of the people;[41] yet in most if not all jurisdictions there are either constitutional prohibitions against the exercise of this power,[42] or it is provided for by general or special acts of the legislature that the question shall be submitted to the vote of the people;[43] and under these provisions there can be no removal without the affirmative vote of at least a majority of the inhabitants of the county in favor of such removal,[44] cast in the manner and at the time prescribed.[45]

(B) The Order. Upon the presentation of a petition in proper form, signed by the requisite number of voters, for the removal of a county-seat, it is the duty of the proper tribunal, usually the board of commissioners of a county, to order an election to determine the question of such removal.[46] It is not necessary that the order shall enumerate the places to be voted for. The voters may select any place whether noted in the order or not.[47]

(C) Notice of Election. Due notice should be given of the time, place, and purpose of an election to determine upon the question of removal of a county-seat;[48] but the election will not be invalidated where the people are actually notified thereof, merely for the reason that the notice does not in all particulars comply with the statutory requirements as to time and manner of giving it.[49]

(D) Votes — (1) NUMBER OF VOTES NECESSARY. If the constitution[50] prescribes the minimum number of votes which must be cast in the affirmative to authorize the removal of a county-seat the legislature may nevertheless require a larger number of affirmative votes than is so fixed;[51] but it cannot require a less number.[52] On the other hand where the constitution provides that a certain number of affirmative votes shall be sufficient to authorize a removal, the legislature has no power to enact a statute requiring a greater number.[53]

(2) QUALIFICATIONS OF VOTERS. The qualifications of voters for the removal of a county-seat may be regulated by a general or a special election statute;[54] but it has been held that the general registry laws of a state do not apply to an election for determining the removal of a county-seat.[55]

(3) DEPRIVATION OF RIGHT OF SUFFRAGE. The fact that some of the legal voters at an election for determining the removal of a county-seat are deprived of their right of suffrage does not render the election void.[56]

(E) Form of Submitting Proposition. There are several forms of submitting the proposition to remove a county-seat,[57] and the effect of the election depends upon the method prescribed for or employed in submitting the question to the voters.

North Dakota.— State v. Langlie, 5 N. D. 594, 67 N. W. 958, 32 L. R. A. 723.

See 13 Cent. Dig. tit. "Counties," § 40.

In Michigan it has been held that where a statute requires an election to determine a county-seat to be at the next general state election, such election cannot be rendered nugatory by any failure to give notice of the same, since everyone is bound to take notice of what the statute requires. Atty.-Gen. v. Iron County, 64 Mich. 607, 31 N. W. 539.

50. In the absence of constitutional restriction upon the power of the legislature, a removal of a county-seat may be authorized upon any vote great or small which such body may deem advisable. Alexander v. People, 7 Colo. 155, 2 Pac. 894.

In Illinois, in elections for the removal of a county-seat, when held at the same time with another election, the proposition for removal must be supported by the affirmative vote of the required proportion of those voting at the election, and not merely of those voting on the particular question of removal. People v. Wiant, 48 Ill. 263.

In Tennessee under a constitutional provision that the seat of justice of a county shall not be removed without the concurrence of two thirds of the qualified voters of the county, there must be an active concurrence and not a passive acquiescence, and therefore two thirds of the qualified voters must actually vote in favor of the removal. Braden v. Stumph, 16 Lea 581.

In West Virginia it is specially provided that it will be sufficient if the proposition for removal receives the affirmative vote of the required proportion of those voting upon the question of removal. Davis v. Brown, 46 W. Va. 716, 34 S. E. 839.

51. Vance v. Austell, 45 Ark. 400; Alexander v. People, 7 Colo. 155, 2 Pac. 894; State v. White, 162 Mo. 533, 63 S. W. 104.

The provision of a state constitution declaring that a plurality of votes cast at an election shall determine the result applies to general elections only, and an act of the legislature providing that in county-seat elections a majority of votes shall control is not in conflict with such constitutional provision, in the absence of any provision of the constitution regulating elections for the location of county-seats. State v. Padgett, 19 Fla. 518.

Necessity for provisions for cities holding charter election at different time from township meeting.—A law providing for the submission to electors of a county at the township meetings the question of removing the county-seat if applicable to cities at all is incomplete in failing to provide for a vote of the electors of such cities as hold charter elections at a different time from the township meeting. Atty.-Gen. v. St. Clair County, 11 Mich. 63.

55. Knox County v. Davis, 63 Ill. 405; Boren v. Smith, 47 Ill. 482.

56. Knox County v. Davis, 63 Ill. 405, where it is held that in such a case the restriction on the right of suffrage is a wrong to the elector deprived of his vote, for which he has a complete remedy against the judges of election.

57. In Florida the election contemplated by statute, regulating changes in county-seats, is an election at which the voters of the county may vote for any place within such county, and where an election ordered and given notice of is one between two particular designated places, it is contrary to the policy of the statute and illegal. State v. Baker County, 22 Fla. 29. See also Douglass v. Baker County, 23 Fla. 419, 2 So. 776.

In Alabama and Michigan where the legislature has the power to remove without the consent of the people, it may in ordering an election for such purpose limit the choice to

(F) Form and Requisites of Ballots. With regard to form and requisites of ballots upon an election for the removal of a county-seat it may be stated that it is only necessary that the ballots should indicate unmistakably the intention of the voters.[58]

(G) Canvass and Returns. After an election for the removal of a county-seat the votes cast are to be canvassed and the result determined, declared, and entered of record by the proper county authority, usually the county court,[59] the county board of commissioners,[60] or the county board of canvassers.[61] The decision of such boards in canvassing and determining the vote is conclusive[62] where no judicial review is provided by law.[63]

two designated places (State v. Crook, 126 Ala. 600, 28 So. 745; Ex p. Hill, 40 Ala. 121), or it may authorize the board of supervisors of the county, to designate a place to which the proposed removal is to be made, and submit such proposed location to the electors of the county (Peck v. Berrien County, 102 Mich. 346, 60 N. W. 985; People v. St. Clair, 15 Mich. 85). Specification of particular land to which the removal is proposed is unnecessary. Peck v. Berrien County, 102 Mich. 346, 60 N. W. 985.

In Missouri the method is by submitting the question of removal to the voters, and if the required number are in favor of the same the site is selected by commissioners appointed for the purpose. State v. White, 162 Mo. 533, 63 S. W. 104.

58. Hawes v. Miller, 56 Iowa 395, 9 N. W. 307.

Ballots were held sufficiently certain as to intent in the following cases: Blackshear v. Turner, 53 Ark. 533, 14 S. W. 897; Conley v. Fleming, 14 Kan. 381; Whitaker v. Dillard, 81 Tex. 359, 16 S. W. 1084.

Specification of different sites in same place.— Upon a vote to remove a county-seat to a place known as Grand Lake, votes cast for a location at "Grand Lake — West side," should be counted with the others, the exact site being matter for the board of commissioners to determine, if a majority of the votes favor a removal. People v. Grand County, 7 Colo. 190, 2 Pac. 912.

Where votes cast for different place in close proximity.— In elections held in sparsely populated counties votes cast for places within a short distance of each other should be counted together as being for the same location. Coleman v. People, 7 Colo. App. 243, 42 Pac. 1041. See also Smith v. Magourich, 44 Ga. 163, where it was held that where a minority of the ballots are cast in favor of the center of the county as a site, the majority being for other places which are contiguous to each other, the commissioners are not authorized to select the place situated at the center.

Limitation of power of county clerk.— Upon the question of relocating a county-seat, the law only authorizes the clerk of a county to canvass the votes cast upon the question of relocation, and certify the result without regard to other votes cast at the same election. He cannot give a certificate which will afford legal evidence that the county-seat has been changed in conformity with the requirements of the constitution. People v. Warfield, 20 Ill. 159.

Where the certificate required of the county clerk omitted to state the number of votes cast at the election, so that it might be seen whether the proposition had been carried or lost, the returns of the judges and clerks of election may be resorted to for the purpose of ascertaining that fact. The object of such an election will not be defeated for the want of such a statement in the certificate. People v. Wiant, 48 Ill. 263.

61. State v. Hardin County Judge, 13 Iowa 139; State v. Jones, 11 Iowa 11; State v. Fetter, 12 Wis. 566.

Canvass according to provisions of general law.—A statute authorizing an election to determine upon the removal of a county-seat is not inoperative for failure to make provision for canvassing board. The votes at such election are to be canvassed according to the provisions of the general election, and by a canvassing board provided by such general law. Wells v. Taylor, 5 Mont. 202, 3 Pac. 255.

63. Express provision is, however, made in some states for the review of such decision (Willeford v. State, 43 Ark. 62), and to compel a recanvass of such votes when necessary (State v. Hardin County Judge, 13 Iowa 139).

A writ of certiorari is not a writ of right, but the issuing of it is dependent on a sound judicial discretion, and a refusal of the circuit court to award it on a proper petition to review the proceedings of the county court in ascertaining and declaring the result of

(H) Operation and Effect of Election—(1) In General. The result of an election to determine the question of relocating a county-seat is decisive thereof until properly contested,[64] and when the result of such election is contested, or pending a suit to revise an election, the apparent result of which is to approve of a change of county-seats, the county affairs are to be transacted at the place prima facie selected by the election.[65]

(2) Removal of Records. Where the proper proportion of the votes cast at an election for the removal of a county-seat are in favor of such proposition the county records and documents should be removed to such new location as soon thereafter as practicable;[66] but an injunction may be granted to prevent removal of the records, where fraud or illegality in the election is alleged and the validity of the election tried in such proceedings.[67]

(I) Contest of Election—(1) In General. The right to contest an election being statutory, an election for the removal of a county-seat cannot be contested, unless such right is conferred in the act authorizing such election, or unless the provisions of the general election law give the right.[68] Statutes expressly authorizing such contest exist, however, in a number of the states.[69]

(2) Necessity For Direct Proceedings. In the absence of a jurisdictional question the validity of an election by which a county-seat is located can be contested only in a direct proceeding,[70] and alleged irregularities cannot be considered and determined collaterally.[71]

(3) Who May Contest. In some jurisdictions it has been held that an elector of a county has such an interest in the removal of a county-seat as will entitle him to contest an election for such removal.[72] In other states, however, it the vote on a relocation of a county-seat may be reviewed by writ of error issued by the supreme court of appeals. Welch v. Wetzel County Ct., 29 W. Va. 63, 1 S. E. 337.

In West Virginia citizens and taxpayers of a county have such an interest in the matter of the relocation of the county-seat that they may interpose proceedings in such matter, has been held that in the absence of express authorization, proceedings for contesting a county-seat election cannot be maintained by an elector of a county in his own name and on his own behalf.[73]

(4) EQUITABLE RELIEF. Where the law authorizing a county-seat election fails to provide any mode for contesting the election, a court of equity will take jurisdiction of a bill impeaching the election for illegally holding such election, or for unfairness in the conduct of the same, in order to relieve against fraud, and to carry out the intention of the law in submitting the question of removal to a vote of the county.[74]

(J) Second Election. When an election is held for the removal of a county-seat, and a majority of the electors vote in favor of retaining the old location, the county commissioners or supervisors may at any time upon the presentation of the proper petition therefor order a second election for the same purpose, and the number of elections which may be held is not restricted so long as the location of the county-seat is not changed.[75] In some jurisdictions it is expressly provided that when it is ascertained that no place has received a majority of all the votes cast at the county-seat election such result shall be proclaimed,[76] and the county court or county commissioners shall order a new election at which the balloting shall be confined to the two places having the highest number of votes at the first election.[77]

6. SELECTION, ERECTION, AND CHANGE OF LOCATION OF COUNTY BUILDINGS. express purpose.[79] And in the absence of limitations upon such power[80] a board of county commissioners having exclusive power over the property of the county may remove and designate new sites for county buildings,[81] within the limits prescribed for the county-seat.[82] In exercising such power want of discretion and sound judgment on the part of a county board will not warrant interference by the courts,[83] but an abuse of discretion amounting to fraud will do so.[84]

C. County Board — 1. Nature and Status — a. In General. Boards of county commissioners, or, as they are called in some states, supervisors, are officers of a county charged with a variety of administrative and executive duties, but principally with the management of the financial affairs of the county, its police regulations, and its corporate business.[85] Such boards have a perpetual existence, continued by members who succeed each other, and the body remains the same, notwithstanding a change in the individuals who compose it.[86]

istics of corporate acts and powers than those of mere trustees,[88] and as a quasi-corporation it is governed by the fundamental rules which the common law has provided for the better government of corporate bodies, and for the proper exercise of the corporate functions.[89] When exercising jurisdiction under a special power the supervisors must act strictly on the conditions under which such jurisdiction is given.[90]

2. Constitution of Board. In the absence of constitutional prohibition[91] a state legislature has the power to establish a board of supervisors in each county of the state, with such representation therein from the several townships, villages; and cities constituting the county as it may deem proper,[92] and it has the power to change the construction of such tribunal when it sees fit,[93] as for instance by increasing or decreasing the membership thereof, and that too notwithstanding a constitutional provision requiring the legislature to provide for the election of a board of commissioners.[94] And it may even abolish the board.[95]

3. Appointment, Qualification, and Tenure — a. Appointment or Election — (1) In General. Where a state constitution authorizes the legislature to provide for the creation of county boards without limiting such power or pointing out the manner of choosing such officers, the whole matter is left to the discretion of the legislature, and they may provide any method they may see fit for such choice.[96] Thus in some jurisdictions it is provided that members of county boards shall be chosen by the grand jury of the county.[97] In some states members of county boards are appointed by the governor,[98] by special commissioners,[99] or by the judge of the superior court where additional commissioners are required.[1] The most usual method, however, for choosing members of county boards is their election by the voters of the county;[2] and when one has been duly elected and has quali-

Election of a certain number of commissioners from each township.— The Pennsylvania act of April 15, 1834, providing that the election of three supervisors for each township of Luzerne county, was repealed by the act of March 4, 1842, providing for the election of two supervisors annually for each township of the county except the township of Falls. In re Clifton Tp., 4 C. Keating v. Marble, 39 Kan. 370, 18 Pac. 189.

changing population,[7] but in some jurisdictions it is provided that such changes shall not be made oftener than once in three years.[8] Where a county has been redistricted and the number of its commissioner districts increased, an entirely new board of county commissioners must be elected at the first ensuing election.[9]

(IV) Determination of Contested Election. The board of county supervisors has no authority to go behind the statutory certificate of election of a specified person as supervisor, and to determine his right to a seat in the board where the election thereto is contested. A question for judicial cognizance is presented.[10]

b. Eligibility. As has already been said a candidate for the office of county supervisor or commissioner must be a resident of the district for which he is elected at the time of election.[11] In some states it is expressly provided that no person holding any state, county, township, or city office shall be eligible to the office of county commissioner or supervisor;[12] but in other states the contrary rule obtains.[13] Again there may be a provision to the effect that no person who is an employer, officer, or stock-holder of any railroad in which the county owns stock shall be eligible to a position on the county board.[14]

c. Qualification — (I) Oath. County commissioners are officers, and as such are required to take an oath of office.[15]

Tuohy v. Chase, 30 Cal. 524.

The redistricting or change of the boundaries of commissioner districts is prospective in its operation as to elections of members of the board of county commissioners, and the office of a member elected for the regular term is not vacated by such redistricting or change of boundaries, where he still resides in the county, although in a different district. 11. See supra, IV, C, 3, a, (III).

Effect of removal from the district in which elected.— In Indiana it has been held that the statute providing that the election of one commissioner from each commissioner district does not require that a member of the board should continue to reside in the district of the county for which he was elected, and his removal into another district of the same county does not operate to vacate his office. Smith v. State, 24 Ind. 101. In Nebraska, however, where the statute provides that every civil office shall be vacant upon the incumbent "ceasing to be a resident of the state, district, county, township, precinct or ward in which the duties of his office are to be exercised, or for which he may have been elected," the office of a county commissioner who removes from a district in which he was elected before the expiration of his term thereby becomes vacant. d. Tenure and Holding Over. The duty of providing for the election of the members of county boards, and of fixing the commencement and duration of their terms of office, is usually left to the legislature,[18] subject, however, to the limitation that acts fixing such term shall not be in contravention of the constitutional provisions as to the terms of county officers generally.[19] A county commissioner is not divested of his office and may properly exercise the duties of such office

A supervisor does not, however, by failing to take the oath in the time prescribed by law vacate his office. Where no steps are taken to declare and fill the vacancy and the officer subsequently qualifies he holds the office. Smith v. Cronkhite, 8 Ind. 134.

Provision for retirement of one member yearly.— In some states the policy is that the term of county commissioners should be so regulated that one member of the board should retire each year, and it is provided that at the first election to choose the first board of commissioners of any county the person having the highest number of votes shall continue in office three years; the next highest two years; and the next highest thereafter one year; but when two or more persons have the same number of votes their term shall be determined by lot, and that annually thereafter one commissioner shall be elected. The term of office is applied to the office itself, and not to the person filling it, and it ends with the expiration of each period of three years regardless of the time when the officer commenced service in the term to which he was elected: "As the term of county commissioner is fixed by law in such a manner that it applies to the office and not to the person, no amount of confusion in the holding can change the term, which expires with the expiration of each period of three years, regardless of the time when the officer commenced service in the term to which he was elected. Time for questioning validity of statute.— The Ohio act of May 19, 1894, changing the commencement of the term of office of county commissioners, was, when passed, invalid by reason of the resulting vacancy from the first Monday in January to the third Monday of September in the years 1895, 1896, and 1897, to be filled by appointment and not by election. Such vacancies were filled by appointment without objection on the part of the state or any citizen, and no action was brought to test the validity of the statute, or to oust from office any one who was filling such vacancy, until more than a year after all such vacancies had expired. It was held that it was then too late to test the validity of the statute by proceedings in quo warranto, and that the term of office of each county commissioner now in office must be regarded and held to have commenced on the third Monday of September next after his election. until his successor has not only been elected but has qualified,[20] but after an incoming board has been commissioned, the old board is out of office and has no right to correct its own acts done while in office.[21] So where one is elected a county commissioner and duly qualified but dies before his term begins his predecessor cannot hold over.[22]

e. Resignation. It may be expressly provided that the resignation of a county commissioner must be tendered to the board of which he is a member, and that the vacancy must be filled by the commissioners.[23]

f. Removal. Members of a county board may be removed by proper proceedings for incompetency, misconduct, or neglect of official duty.[24] Express provision is made in some jurisdictions for summary proceedings to secure the removal of members of county boards, which proceedings are usually instituted by means of a written and verified information or complaint presented by any person,[25] or by a petition or upon the relation of citizens asking for such removal.[26] Provisions of this character have been held constitutional.[27] A statute giving exclusive juris-

4. Compensation — a. Right to and Amount of Compensation. In some states members of a county board in counties of a certain class are allowed a gross sum as an annual salary in full payment for all services rendered and travel performed by them in discharge of their duties.[29] So in some jurisdictions it is provided that in counties of a certain class, the pay of members of the board for their services including regular and special sessions shall not exceed a specified sum to each commissioner in any one year;[30] and in one jurisdiction this is the rule in respect to counties of all classes.[31] As a general rule, however, the compensation of members of county boards is a fixed sum per diem, together with mileage for each day actually employed in the discharge of the duties of their office.[32] Ordicounty,[46] and is clothed with authority to do whatever the corporate or political entity, the county, might do if capable of rational action, except in respect to matters, the cognizance of which is exclusively vested in some other officer or person. It is in an enlarged sense the representative and guardian of the county, having the management and control of its property and financial interests,[47] and having original and exclusive jurisdiction over all matters pertaining to county affairs,[48] and courts will not interfere with such boards in the lawful exercise of the jurisdiction committed to them by law, on the sole ground that their actions are characterized by lack of wisdom or sound discretion.[49]

some of these jurisdictions they are empowered to summon witnesses, but cannot punish a refusal to attend as for a contempt.[51] In others, however, it has been held that the board of commissioners of a county is not a court within the provisions of the constitution.[52]

c. Other Powers. Provisions are found in the statutes of various states conferring other powers in addition to those already enumerated; as for instance the power to legislate on local matters,[53] the right to supervise the conduct of county officers,[54] and to adopt such health regulations as may seem necessary.[55]

d. Statutory Limitation of Powers. A county board of supervisors or commissioners or a county court being created for special purposes can exercise only such powers as are conferred upon it by the constitution or statutes of the state,[56]

Ratification of individual contracts.—Since the county courts by W. Va. Code, c. 39, are made corporations for the purposes of contracting, etc., a contract by members of a county court as individuals, although within the power of the court, will not bind it unless notice to or knowledge by an individual member not shown to have been imparted to the board is not binding upon the latter.[60]

(II) Meetings—(A) Necessity For. It follows as a natural consequence of the rule that a county board can act only as a body, that such boards must in order to perform any official act be regularly convened either in a regular meeting, in a regular meeting adjourned, or in a special meeting properly called.[61]

(B) Time. The time for the regular meetings of county boards is often fixed by statute,[62] and the duration of their sessions is also sometimes so fixed.[63] Another statutory provision is to the effect that county boards must by ordinance provide for the holding of regular meetings.[64] In the absence of statutory provisions on the question, it is a usual custom of county boards to have stated days in each month for regular meetings;[65] and to hold special meetings at other times, when the public interest seems to demand.[66]

(C) Place. Provision is sometimes specially made as to the place of holding meetings of county boards,[67] and an order of the board made at another than the prescribed place without legal excuse is unauthorized and void.[68] to constitute a quorum for the transaction of official business is usually fixed by statute, and varies in the different jurisdictions. The usual rule would seem to be that a majority constitutes a quorum,[69] unless a greater number is expressly required by law.[70] In some states two thirds of all the members elected constitute a quorum.[71] Again there may be a provision to the effect that certain business shall not be transacted unless the full board be present and acting.[72] Such statutory requirements as to a quorum must be complied with in order that the acts of the board may be valid, and the record should show such fact.[73]

(E) Vote—(1) NUMBER. Ordinarily the majority of a quorum of the county board present can perform any act which a majority of the board could perform if all were present,[74] where all the members composing the quorum are competent to act upon the question before them.[75]

Any three of the board, including the president.— Martin v. Townsend, 32 Fla. 318, 13 So. 887.

Any three members of a county commissioner's court, including the county judge, shall constitute a quorum under Tex. (2) FORMALITY. Unless the statutory provision as to the manner in which a county board shall exercise its power is mandatory, an informal and irregular ballot upon a resolution will not vitiate the proceedings.[76]

(F) Adjournment. In the absence of any express provision to the contrary, when a county board is once lawfully convened, either in regular or special session, it may adjourn or take a recess to a subsequent day or from day to day until the business before it is finished.[77] Of course a limitation necessarily implied from this right of adjourning over is that a session cannot be extended beyond the commencement of the next session fixed by law.[78]

(G) Special Meetings — (1) IN GENERAL. In addition to the regular meetings of the county board special meetings may be called whenever the public interests require it.[79] The statutes of the various states usually prescribe the manner in which a special meeting of a county board shall be called, and where this is the case such manner must be followed, and a special meeting held without the observance of such statutory requirements will not be legal.[80]

A special meeting of a board of county commissioners, of which each commissioner has been duly notified, may be adjourned to a subsequent day by the members present, a majority of the entire board, and it would seem that less than a majority may do so. The members present at such meeting have actual notice of adjournment, and those not present are charged in law with notice thereof, and the adjourned meeting is but a continuation of the original one. Effect of statutory limitation of session.— In Arkansas it is held that where by statute the sessions of a county board are limited to a certain number of days, the board has no power to adjourn its sessions to another day beyond the specified number, and all the proceedings at such adjourned terms will be coram non judice and void. Grimmett v. Askew, 48 Ark. 151, 2 S. W. 707. In Minnesota, however, it has been held that such a statutory provision as to the duration of a session does not require that the session shall be continuous from day to day, nor deprive the board of the power to adjourn a session to a date more than the prescribed number of days from its commencement. Banning v. McManus, 51 Minn. 289, 53 N. W. 635, upon the ground that such statutory limitation on the length of sessions is merely directory, the manifest purpose being to limit the amount of compensation, or per diem of county commissioners.

Distinction between special and regular or adjourned terms.— According to Wightman v. Karsner, 20 Ala. 446, a special term is a term held at an unusual time for the transaction of some particular business, while by a regular or adjourned term is meant a term begun at the time appointed by law and continued at the discretion of the court to such time as it may appoint, consistent with law.

(2) WHO MAY CALL. In some jurisdictions express provision is made for the calling of special meetings of county boards by designated county officers,[81] who shall determine whether such special session is required by the public interests, and whether such an emergency exists as will justify a shorter notice than that usually required.[82] In other jurisdictions a special meeting may be called by the president or chairman of the board,[83] or by a majority of the board.[84]

Necessity for new notice of adjourned meeting.— Where county commissioners, after notice to all persons interested, view the route for a highway and adjourn to a certain time and place for the purpose of locating the way and assessing damages to individuals, it is not necessary to give notice of the time and place so appointed for the adjourned meeting. Com. v. Berkshire County, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 343.

Notice of a meeting of highway commissioners, for the purpose of viewing the route of a highway, signed "By order of the commissioners, A. B., chairman," is sufficient, notwithstanding the objection that it did not appear that the notice was issued at a meeting of three or more of the commissioners. Com. v. Berkshire County, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 343.

Nature and manner of notice and service is immaterial and unimportant, if pursuant to such notice the board actually meet at the time therein indicated in special session. Jussen v. Lake County, 95 Ind. 567; Wilson v. Hamilton County, 68 Ind. 507 [followed in State v. Pike County, 104 Ind. 123, 3 N. Oral notice given by the county auditor to the board of county commissioners of a special session is sufficient. Loesnitz v. Seelinger, 127 Ind. 422, 25 N. E. 1037, 26 N. E. 887; White v. Fleming, 114 Ind. 560, 16 N. E. 487.

Estoppel to deny sufficiency of notice.— Members of the board who are present at a special meeting and take part in business transacted are estopped to deny the suffi-

ing,[86] and if practicable must be personally served upon every member of the board;[87] but provision is also made in some states for notice by publication or by posting.[88]

(H) Powers at Special or Adjourned Meetings. There is some conflict of authority as to the powers which may be exercised by a county board at a special meeting, and this is due perhaps to the difference in the provisions of the statutes.[89] However, it cannot be doubted that no business can be transacted at a special meeting which is expressly required to be transacted at a regular meeting.[90] There is also a conflict of authority as to whether any other than special business can be transacted at a special meeting.[91] Ordinarily any business may be transacted at an adjourned meeting which might have been transacted at the meeting of which it is a continuation.[92]

(III) Delegation of Authority. The right of a county board to delegate ciency of the notice, although they protested against its sufficiency. Mitchell County v. Horton, 75 Iowa 271, 39 N. W. 394.

Remedy of member failing to receive notice. — A member of a county board, who by the wrongful act of his associates in failing to give him the proper notice, is excluded from being present at a meeting, cannot on that ground maintain an action to enjoin other officers from proceeding to fulfil authority conferred upon them by the proceedings of the board at such meeting. His remedy should be directly against the offending members. Ely v. Connolly, 7 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 8.

Notice in writing must be sent by the clerk to each of the members of the board. Goedgen v. Manitowoc County, 10 Fed. Cas. No. 5,501, 2 Biss. 328.

Presumption as to proper service.— Where the members of a county board meet in special session at the time and place specified in a summons issued by the auditor and given by him to a sheriff for service, such meeting will not be illegal, although the return of the sheriff showing service is not signed and omits to give the date of service. It will be presumed that the sheriff discharged his official duty according to law and duly served the summons on each member of the board. State v. Pike County, 104 Ind. 123, 3 N. E. 807.

89. Thus it has been held or said in a number of cases that as a general rule, in the absence of statutory provisions to the contrary, the board can transact at a special meeting only such business as is specified in the notice of the meeting. El Dorado County v. Reed, 11 Cal. 130; Vincennes v. Windman, 72 Ind. 218; Mitchell County v. Horton, 75 Iowa 271, 39 N. W. 394. W. 394), except in cases where from the nature of the business or the provisions of the law in regard to it the purpose or policy of the law or the rights of others require that it be done at a regular meeting (Mitchell County v. Horton, 75 Iowa 231, 39 N. W. 394). And see Vincennes v. Windman, 72 Ind. 218. See also Platter v. Elkhart County, 103 Ind. 360, 2 N. E. 544; Jussen v. Lake County, 95 Ind. 567.

its authority depends upon the nature of the duty to be performed. Powers involving the exercise of judgment and discretion are in the nature of public trusts and cannot be delegated to a committee or agent.[93] Duties which are purely ministerial and executive and not involving the exercise of discretion may be delegated by the board to a committee or to an agent, employee, or servant.[94]

(IV) RATIFICATION. If the county board has authority to order expenditures or the performance of services in behalf of the county, it may cure informalities or irregularities in the procedure for ordering the making of such expenditures or the performance of such services, by a subsequent ratification of the acts done in pursuance of the order and recognition of its liability therefor.[95]

they are so required to keep a regular record of their proceedings, they can speak only by such record.[97]

b. What Record Must Show — (I) Jurisdictional Facts. County boards are bodies with special and limited jurisdiction, and all facts necessary to give jurisdiction must affirmatively appear upon the record of their proceedings;[98] otherwise the presumption is against their jurisdiction.[99]

(II) Acts of Board — (A) In General. It is the usual rule that the action of county boards or county courts in order to be binding upon the county must be shown by the record of their proceedings.[1] It has been so held in respect to contracts made by them,[2] and agreements to pay claims barred by the statutes of Limitation of rule.— Where a county board has appointed a deputy and fixed his salary, and he has actually rendered the service, those facts may be proved, even if there is no record of the order in the minutes of the county board. Ragoss v. Cuming County, 36 Nebr. 375, 54 N. W. 683.

Record of subscription as to capital stock of railroad.— It constitutes no objection to a recovery upon a bond issued by the county to a railroad company that the record does not show that the county actually subscribed for the stock; such fact would not be of limitation.[3] Where, however, county boards are under that name authorized by statute to perform certain duties, in doing which they act as individuals and not judicially, no entry of their acts need be made upon the records of the board.[4] So it has been held that a county board, when acting as a corporation merely, need not enter its action of record to make it binding upon the county.[5]

(B) Ordinances. Although provision is expressly made for recording all laws or ordinances passed by a county board,[6] such recording has been held not to be essential to the validity of an ordinance.[7]

(C) Vote. The mere omission to record a vote actually had upon a certain question will not invalidate an act of the board taken in accordance with such vote.[8]

(D) Service of Notice of Meetings. Ordinarily proof of service of notice of a special meeting need not be spread upon the record if there is no provision requiring it, the presumption being that such meeting was legally convened.[9]

c. Form and Requisites. If the orders of the board of commissioners are right in substance, their form is of little consequence; they will not be rendered invalid by mere informalities.[10] The fact that the records or minutes are not duly signed will not render the proceedings void.[11] So it has been held that the omission of the clerk to add the seal of the board of supervisors to the record on the ordinance imposing a tax does not render the ordinance invalid.[12]

In Louisiana where an act of the legislature authorizes a parish to issue its bonds for a certain purpose, in such form and denomination as the police jury of the parish may prescribe, the police jury must specifically authorize the issue of such bonds, and in default of this action of the police jury all bonds issued under color of such act are invalid. Lisso v. Red River Parish, 29 La. Ann. 590. In State v. Police Jury, 32 La. Ann. 1022, it was held, however, that under La. Acts (1876), No. 80, requiring the board of audit to pass favorably upon a claim against the parish of Caddo before the police jury could issue bonds therefor, it is not necessary, in addition to such favorable report, that the police jury should also pass an ordinance before issuing bonds under the act.

d. Construction and Aider by Presumption. In passing judicially upon the records of county boards where authority appears or is implied by law, such records will be construed according to their intent and it will be assumed that the proceedings were rightfully had in the absence of all suggestion in the record to the contrary.[13] It will be presumed that the members of such board as public officers have done their duty;[14] that their meeting was properly convened and at the time designated by law;[15] that they acted in accordance with rules adopted for the transaction of their business;[16] and that a quorum of the board was present.[17] And where the record recites the adoption of a certain resolution without disclosing the majority, it will be presumed that such resolution received the necessary majority.[18]

e. Amendment or Alteration. County boards have authority to amend their records to accord with the facts,[19] at least where the rights of third persons have not intervened.[20] The power to make such corrections or alterations is to be exercised by the board alone,[21] upon application to them for that purpose.[22]

For example a record of the board is competent evidence of the allowance of a claim (Mosteller v. Mosteller, 40 Kan. 658, 20 Pac. 464), of the receipt of money (La Salle County v. Simmons, 10 Ill. 513), or of the passage of an ordinance (San Diego County v. Seifert, 97 Cal. 594, 32 Pac. 644). So a record reciting that an ordinance was passed is prima facie proof of that fact (San Diego County v. Seifert, 97 Cal. 594, 32 Pac. 644), and there are decisions to the effect that as a county board constitutes a judicial tribunal and is a court of record, the acts of such board can only be proved by the record.[25]

g. Parol Evidence to Prove Acts of Board.[26] It has been expressly held in some decisions that in accordance with the rule that the action of a county board must be shown by its record, where such record is required to be kept, oral testimony is inadmissible to prove the making of a contract with a county,[27] and that a party suing upon a contract made with the county and entered upon the minutes of the commissioners' court, cannot prove by parol additional stipulations adding to or varying the effect of the minute entry of such contract.[28] In some jurisdictions, however, the rule is that in the absence of a statute making the record of the proceedings of the board the only evidence thereof, a transaction by the board not entered upon its minutes may be proved by parol;[29] and there are numerous decisions to the effect that in the absence of a statutory requirement that a record must be made of a contract in order to render the same valid and binding, where a contract or agreement within their jurisdiction has been entered into by a county board, and has been executed, the same may be established by parol testimony, although there be no record in the minutes of the board.[30] and where it recites that personal notice of the time and meeting was given it is sufficient evidence of this fact in the absence of allegations and proof of the contrary (Stockton v. Powell, 29 Fla. 1, 10 So. 688, 15 L. R. A. 42).

A book kept in the clerk's office of the county commissioners under their direction respecting the affairs of the county, although not a public record, is yet prima facie evidence against the county of the facts stated therein. La Salle County v. Simmons, 10 Ill. 513.

Improperly certified copy of record.— The clerk of the board of county commissioners and not their chairman is the proper officer to attest copies of their records; and when an improperly certified copy of such a record has been admitted in evidence at a trial before a sheriff's jury, a production of a properly certified copy at the argument of a question of law in the supreme court will not cure the defect. Rich v. Lancaster R. Co., 114 Mass. 514.

The caption of the minutes of the meeting of the board of county supervisors, and not the orders made at the meeting, should show the organization of the board according to law; and where the orders only of such board, not made at the regular meeting, are introduced in evidence in the case, and there is no proof of notice given for a special meeting, it is presumed that the caption of the minutes, if produced, should show that such notice was given. Corburn v. Crittenden, 62 Miss. 125.

Unsigned record showing election.—In Weir v. State, 96 Ind. 311, the question was raised as to whether or not the record of a commissioners' court showing an election was without force for the reason that it was not signed. It is held that where the attack is a collateral one such record is not void, but supplies competent evidence of the action of the board.

If the exact amount received by such officer had been material and in controversy, the records of the county court would have been better evidence and could have been insisted upon.

9. Orders, Ordinances, Resolutions, and Decisions — a. In General. County boards proceed in the exercise of their powers by means of orders, ordinances, or resolutions passed by the required number of votes of the body and entered upon their records.[31]

b. Inclusion of More Than One Subject in Legislation. A constitutional provision that no private or local bill passed by the legislature shall embrace more than one subject is limited to acts of the legislature and does not apply to the legislation of a county board passed in the exercise of its powers of local legislation granted to it by the legislature.[32]

c. Attestation. In some states it is expressly provided that orders and ordinances of county boards must be duly signed and attested.[33]

d. Specification of Funds on Which Warrants Drawn. An order of a board of supervisors directing issuance of a warrant by the auditor need not specify on what fund it is to be drawn.[34]

e. Provision For Payment in Ordinances Creating Debt. In Louisiana police juries are prohibited from contracting debts without fully providing in the ordinance creating them the means of paying the principal and interest of the debt so created.[35]

f. Publication. The publication of an order or ordinance of a county board is sometimes expressly required by statute,[36] and in at least one jurisdiction the presented to the county board and has not been allowed, the party presenting the same will not be defeated in his right of action by the failure or refusal of the board to make a record of its action, but the presentation and refusal of such claim may be proved by parol. In New York publication of an act or resolution is only required where the proceedings are legislative in their character. Kingsley v. Bowman, 33 N. Y. App. Div. 1, 53 N. Y. Suppl. 426.

Distribution of papers containing publication.— Where an order of a county board affecting a town and attaching its territory to another town was passed in due form pursuant to a power conferred upon the board by Wis. Rev. Stat. c. 13, § 28, and was published as prescribed by section 30 of said chapter, it had the force of law, and the fact that the clerk of the board did not order a number of papers containing such publication sufficient to distribute one to each of the town clerks of the county, and did not so distribute them as provided by section 31 of the same chapter, does not destroy the legal effect of such order. The provisions of section 31 are held to be only directory, while names of members voting for or against a county ordinance must also be published.[37] It has also been held that the publication must be by order of the board, and that otherwise it will be of no effect;[38] and that a publication in the newspaper of the proceedings of the board in which an order appeared is not a sufficient publication.[39]

g. Reconsideration and Rescission — (I) In General. Where a county board or court exercises functions which are administrative or ministerial in their nature and which pertain to the ordinary county business, and the exercise of such functions is not restricted as to time and manner, it may modify or repeal its action;[40] but in no event has such court or board the power to set aside or modify a judicial decision or order made by it after rights have lawfully been acquired thereunder, unless authorized so to do by express statutory provision.[41] The same is the case after an appeal has been allowed,[42] or where some special statutory power is exercised, the time and mode of the exercise thereof being prescribed by statute.[43] A county board or court may, however, at the term or session at which such an order is made, revise or rescind it, provided this is done before any rights accrue thereunder,[44] but ordinarily they have no power to do such act subsequent to such term or session.[45]

(II) Limitation Upon Power. The power of a county board to reconsider, modify, or repeal its actions is subject to the limitation that such reconsideration, rescission, or change shall not affect or in any way prejudice any vested rights lawfully acquired under its previous action.[46] Where such previous action is in the nature of a contract which has been accepted by the other party, or upon the faith of which the latter has acted, it cannot be rescinded by the board[47]

(III) Making Rules as to Reconsideration. Under the general power to make reasonable rules and regulations for the government of its proceedings, a county board may adopt rules governing its reconsideration of former acts.[49]

(IV) Reviewing Acts of Prior Board. In the absence of express statutory authority a county board cannot review or reverse the act of a prior board performed within the scope of authority conferred by law.[50]

(V) Removal of Appointees. With regard to the power of a county board to rescind its action in appointing an officer it has been held that a board is not prohibited from rescinding or revoking such appointment at will.[51] According to other decisions, however, where a vacancy in the office, the term of which is fixed by statute, has been filled by a county board, the vacancy cannot be recreated by a resolution of the commissioners attempting to rescind their action,[52] and the board cannot remove at pleasure one whom they have appointed to fill the vacancy.[53]

h. Operation and Effect of Decisions — (I) In General. Ordinarily a decision of a county board in the exercise of its judicial discretion is conclusive and will not be controlled or reviewed, unless there is a clear abuse of such discretion,[54] or unless there is evidence of collusion or fraud.[55]

L. 531, 24 Atl. 343, a resolution by a board of freeholders to purchase land under the act of 1887 was set aside, the price agreed to be paid being so excessive as to show that the resolution was in fraud of the said act and not a legal exercise of the power conferred by it.

(II) On Successors. Where the commissioners of a county do public business according to the discretion confided to them new commissioners are bound by their acts.[56]

(III) Collateral Attack. Decisions, judgments, or orders of a county board, acting judicially in a proceeding in which they have jurisdiction, being conclusive as the judgments of a court of record,[57] cannot be collaterally attacked,[58] and are only reviewable upon appeal or other appropriate proceeding.[59] Where, however, a board or court exceeds its jurisdiction and makes an order without authority, such order being void is subject to collateral attack.[60]

(IV) Review Upon Mandamus. A writ of mandamus will not lie against a board of commissioners when acting in a judicial capacity to direct the performance of a judicial duty resting in the discretion of the board in any particular mode or to render any particular judgment.[61] Where, however, a board of commissioners refuses to act in a matter upon which it is their duty to take some action, the writ will issue to compel action, but will not dictate the kind of judgment to be rendered.[62]

(V) Appeal[63]—(A) In General. In the absence of statutory authorization of some character no appeal can be taken to a judicial tribunal from the decisions and orders of county boards;[64] but in most jurisdictions express statutory provision is made for the taking of appeals from such decisions and orders,[65] where ever, in rendering its decision the board acts in a purely ministerial or administrative capacity no appeal will lie.[69] So where the matter involves no question of legal right, but simply a matter for the exercise of the discretion of the board, an appeal from its action on such matter is not authorized.[70] And to give a court jurisdiction of an appeal from a county board it is essential that the board itself should have had jurisdiction of the matters in controversy.[71]

(B) To What Court Taken. The statutes authorizing an appeal from decisions of the county board usually prescribe the court to which the appeal shall be taken.[72]

(C) Time. So the time within which and the term to which such appeals are taken is ordinarily expressly prescribed by statute.[73]

(D) Parties. Although in the absence of statutory authorization an appeal from an order of a county board can be prosecuted only by one who is a party to the proceedings before the board,[74] the statutes of some jurisdictions provide that an appeal may be taken by any person who is aggrieved by any decision, judgment, or order of a county board,[75] whether he be a party to the record or not.[76]

(E) Notice of Appeal. In some jurisdictions the party appealing from a decision of a board of commissioners must notify the commissioners that the appeal is taken at least a designated number of days before the first day of the next term of the court appealed to.[77] Service of the notice may be accepted by writing thereon,[78] and defects therein are waived by appearance.[79] In other jurisdictions it is held that the members of a board of county commissioners are bound to take notice of an appeal from the commissioner's court, and a service of summons upon them is unnecessary.[80]

(F) Papers Necessary to Be Filed— (1) IN GENERAL. An appeal from an order of the county board is properly dismissed when there are no papers on file.[81]

(2) AFFIDAVIT. In at least one state it is expressly provided that if the person aggrieved by any decision of the county board is not a party to the proceeding he must in order to appeal file in the office of the county auditor his affidavit setting forth that he is interested in the matter decided, and that he is aggrieved by such decision, alleging explicitly the nature of his interest.[82]

The general rule is that on an appeal from an order or decision of the county board the cause shall be tried de novo upon the merits,[88] and upon issues formed and submitted to the jury;[89] and a judgment by default upon non-appearance of the board is unauthorized.[90]

(3) RIGHT TO OPEN AND CLOSE. On appeal from proceedings before a board of commissioners in reference to the location of a highway, where the remonstrance, having been amended in the circuit court, is for damages only, the remonstrant is entitled to open and close because he has the burden of the issue.[94]

(4) FINDINGS. Where the action of a county board of commissioners is set aside on appeal, the facts on which the finding of an abuse of discretion is based must be specifically found by the court, and an opinion stating that there has been an abuse of discretion is not sufficient.[95]

(H) Appeal From Judgment on Appeal. It has been held that under a statute giving an appeal or writ of error to any party to a judgment or decree of an inferior tribunal, error will lie at the suit of the one aggrieved by the decision of the circuit court upon an appeal from the decision of the county board.[96]

(VI) REVIEW ON CERTIORARI. The proceedings of a county board of supervisors so far as they are judicial are reviewable on certiorari, but when they are merely ministerial or legislative they cannot be so reviewed.[97]

10. EXAMINATION OF COMMISSIONERS' ACCOUNTS. Where the report of a committee appointed upon appeal to examine into the doings of county commissioners is required by statute to be made at the term of the district court next after their appointment, a subsequent acceptance of such report by the district court is irregular and void.[98] When the county auditors adjudge against the legality or honesty of an expenditure of county funds by the commissioners, they may surcharge the commissioners with the amount.[99]

b. Dealings With Member of Board. A contract between a board of supervisors and one of its members [2] for legal services to be rendered the board cannot be made the basis of a legal charge against the county.[3] It has been held, however, that while if a contract were intended to be made by a member of the county justices in their official capacity, such contract would be void, yet, when such justices sitting as a county court make a contract for work on county buildings such contract may be made with a member of the board as with a private person.[4]

C. 187, 189, where the court say: "In such a case, there will be no more objection to one of the justices becoming a party to the contract with the county, as a corporation, than there would be for a stockholder in a bank or rail-road company, making a contract with the bank or company. The individual members of the corporation, and the corporation itself, are distinct persons, and there is no incongruity, therefore, in their entering into contracts with each other."

A penal offense to contract with municipality.— A county board cannot, even upon the advice of the district attorney, settle a suit pending against it on a claim for rent arising out of a contract with its municipal judge to pay him a monthly rent for his office for a municipal court-room, the contract being prohibited by Wis. Rev. Stat. 1898, § 4549, making it a penal offense for any public officer to contract with the municipality and therefore absolutely void and not a sufficiently disputed matter with which the county board can deal. unless done wilfully, maliciously, or corruptly.[6] They cannot be held personally liable for errors of judgment.[7]

b. For Legislative Acts. The same reasons which exempt members of county boards or courts acting in a judicial capacity from liability to injured parties growing out of mistaken judgment, uninfluenced by malice or corruption, apply with equal force to such boards acting as legislative bodies in the case of honest mistake as to their powers.[8]

c. For Ministerial Acts. Members of county boards are liable for their ministerial acts of misfeasance or nonfeasance resulting in injury.[9] This liability exists at common law as well as under statutes.[10]

d. For Acts of Persons Appointed to Office. Boards of county commissioners while bound by their public duty to appoint to office persons of capacity and honesty are not, however, responsible for their delinquency in this particular to the sureties on the official bond of such appointee,[11] even though the latter was known to such board to have previously been a defaulter,[12] at least where the sureties make no inquiry of the board or any of its members in regard to the facts.[13]

Action for refusal of just claim.— Under Miss. Rev. board to recover illegal claims alleged to have been unlawfully allowed, the complaint must aver the nature of such claims in order that it may be determined whether the acts complained of are illegal.[15] The highest damages which will be allowed in the United States courts against county supervisors for non-performance of a duty to put a judgment on a tax-list, even though a mandamus shall have issued from such court, will not exceed an amount sufficient to cover fees and costs.[16]

13. Criminal Responsibility of Members — a. In General. In many of the states misconduct or malfeasance of the members of a county board or court in their official acts is by statute made an offense punishable on indictment or information;[17] and in some jurisdictions they may be indicted for wilful neglect in the discharge of their official duties.[18]

15. Hedges v. Dam, 72 Cal. 520, 14 Pac. 133, holding that a mere allegation that the members of a board "misappropriated, wrongfully, unlawfully and illegally allowed and paid out, large sums of money," and that the demands "were wrongfully, unlawfully and without authority of law allowed and ordered paid," states merely a legal conclusion and is insufficient as an allegation of a cause of action.

Failure to exercise authority.— Where a statute does not make it the imperative duty of the board of county commissioners to bring suit on the official bonds of officers, but provides that they may do so, it is left to their sound discretion whether they will bring such suit or not, and a plaintiff claiming under such statutory provisions should at least allege facts showing that the board negligently failed or wilfully refused to exercise their authority and the members had neglected to perform their duties as required by law. Bray v. Barnard, 109 N. C. 44, 13 S. E. 729.

Findings.— In an action against members of a county board for damages caused by the erection of a dam, the unlawful contract for which was let by such board, a finding that a certain defendant was a member of the board and took part in "the proceeding" under which the unlawful contract was awarded will not justify a judgment against him, since it does not necessarily follow therefrom that he favored the contract. b. Indictment[19] — (I) Description of Offense. The indictment must describe the offense and the facts constituting it.[20] It will be sufficient to state the offense in such a manner as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended.[21]

(II) Alleging Intent. With regard to the necessity for averring intent in an indictment against members of county boards, it may be stated that the usual rule prevails that in all cases where a statute creates an offense and mentions some intent as an element therein, the indictment must follow the statute and specify the intent.[22] If, however, the statute is silent concerning the intent, it would seem that there need be no allegation of intent in the indictment.[23]

(III) Alleging Time and Place. In an indictment against members of a county board for misfeasance in office, not only the facts and circumstances, but also the time and place which rendered the act unlawful, should be set out.[24]

c. Evidence. In accordance with the general rule, in a criminal proceeding against county commissioners for misconduct in office, it is error to permit the introduction of evidence other than that in support of the charges made in the indictment,[25] and there must be no variance between the charge in the indictment and the proof offered.[26]

The wrong which is prohibited by the statute is obtaining money not due and owing; the means whereby a wrong-doer gets it is in no way material as an element in the statutory misdemeanor. 2. Creation, Acquisition, and Tenure of Office — a. Creation, Existence, and Abolition of Offices — (i) In General. The power to create county offices, prescribe the duties, and fix the number thereof is as a general rule vested in the legislatures of the various states, and is to be exercised by them alone.[28] And county boards or courts have no power to create such offices,[29] unless there is special statutory authorization therefor;[30] and in any event they cannot exercise such power if there is a constitutional prohibition against it.[31] So also the legislature of a state may abolish or authorize the abolition of county offices not established by the constitution,[32] and the incumbent cannot retain his office for the balance of his term by virtue of a general statute providing that the repeal of a statute shall not affect any right which accrued under it, where the repealing statute provides that it shall go into effect on publication.[33]

Power of board to limit number of superintendents of the poor.— By the N. Y. Sess. Laws (1847), c. 498, which is constitutional, the legislature provided that the boards of supervisors might limit the number of county superintendents of the poor to one, and that when no resolution to that effect was passed the number should be three. If therefore a board of supervisors pass a resolution, under this statute, declaring that thereafter there shall be but one superintendent of the poor for the county (there being three at the time), they have no power thereafter, by resolution or otherwise, to declare that thereafter there shall be three such superintendents elected for the county. They have power only to reduce the number, none to increase it after it is reduced. Anticipation of future vacancy.— A board of supervisors cannot by its action either create a vacancy, nor by anticipation fill one which is to arise in future during the term of a newly elected board of supervisors, and the appointment of a district attorney by an outgoing board of supervisors to fill a vacancy in the office of district attorney before such vacancy arises is in excess of its power and void; and such vacancy is properly filled by a succeeding board of supervisors by another appointment made after the vacancy has arisen. cation of officers.[47] So also where a state passes from a government under military rule to a normal one under a written constitution, such constitution may[48] require the governor to appoint all county officers in the state within a certain period after the ratification of the constitution whose term of office shall continue until the legislature shall have provided by law for an election of such officers.[49] Another provision is to the effect that when any office shall become vacant the governor unless otherwise provided by law shall appoint a person to fill such vacancy until a successor has been duly elected or appointed and has qualified.[50]

(III) Time of Election or Appointment. The power to fix the times of holding such elections is usually vested by the constitution in the legislature of the state,[51] subject to limitations therein contained,[52] and where the time has been so fixed the provisions as to the time of election must be strictly complied with and elections held at any other than the prescribed time are unauthorized and void.[53] Where the power of appointing county officers is given to the county authorities, as for instance to the board, and the time of making such appointment is pre-

(Pa.) 141, it was held that as the Pennsylvania constitution provides that the people shall have at least three months' notice of a vacancy to be filled before any election can take place, and as the county of Lackawanna was not organized till within three months of the general election of 1878, an election of county officers for that county could not take place in 1878, although it could have taken place if the county had been organized over three months before an election. In Staude v. Board of Election Com'rs, 61 Cal. 313, it was held that the provisions of the California act of March 7, 1881, known as the "Hartson Act," directing elections of city and county officers in the even numbered years, apply to San Francisco as well as to other cities and counties. An election of such officers therefore must be held in November, 1882, notwithstanding that the "consolidation act" provides for elections in San Francisco in the odd numbered years.

The act provided for an election of county officers "at the annual township meeting to be held in April next." This must be construed to mean the April next after the law took effect; and in the absence of proof to the contrary individuals acting as county officers in October, 1860, must be presumed to have been elected in April, 1860, and not in April, 1859.

c. Eligibility. In some states the constitution expressly provides that county officers shall actually reside in their respective counties.[55] In others they are required to be qualified electors.[56] So it is sometimes provided that no county officer shall be eligible to his office for more than two consecutive terms.[57] Statutes of this character have been held to be prospective and not retrospective.[58] A statutory provision for the appointment of persons in the place of those failing to qualify does not even by implication negative the authority of county commissioners to reappoint a person who may have failed to qualify under a previous appointment.[59]

(II) Requisites. The bond should contain a penalty,[62] be executed by sufficient sureties,[63] and be duly signed and acknowledged.[64] Where proper in form and substance, signed and sealed by the officer and his sureties, and approved by the proper officer and filed in the office appointed by law, it is both executed and delivered.[65] Where the condition of the bond is in the language prescribed by statute it will be sufficient;[66] and although the form does not comply with the statutory requisites, it has been held sufficient if the bond is lawful in itself and intended to protect the public.[67]

(III) Filing. Although the time within which the bond of a county officer shall be filed is usually fixed by the statute requiring such bond,[68] yet the effect of the failure to file a sufficient bond within such time is not the same in all jurisdictions. the office.[70] In still other states it is held that the failure to give bond within the prescribed time is not of itself a forfeiture of office, but only a ground therefor,[71] and the subsequent approval of a bond filed at a later day is a waiver of the right to declare the office vacant.[72] Still another view entertained by the courts of some of the states is that statutory provisions requiring the giving of bonds within a prescribed time are merely directory,[73] and that the bond may be filed by the officer at any time before entering upon the duties of his office.[74]

(IV) Requirement of Additional Security. It is usually provided that all county officers who are compelled to give official bonds may be required, by the same authorities whose duty it is to take or approve such bonds, to give additional security or new bonds in their discretion whenever they deem it necessary,[75] and for a failure to comply therewith such authorities may declare a vacancy in office.[76] This power is usually vested in the county board,[77] but not always.[78] Where the statutes vest the boards with power to require new surety, they must exercise a sound and not an arbitrary discretion in determining the necessity for further security.[79]

(v) Approval of Bonds. The statutes of the various states requiring bonds to be given by county officers also as a rule prescribe their approval by some specified authority, such as the county court[80] or the county board.[81] It has been held that a statute requiring a county officer to give bond on or before a certain day next after his election, and that his bond shall be approved by the county commissioners, confers a power on such commissioners to approve of the bond before or at the first session thereafter.[82] County commissioners are impliedly at least required to act with reasonable promptness in passing upon the sufficiency of the sureties to the official bond of a county officer, when properly applied to for that purpose, and on their refusal so to do they may be compelled by mandamus to either approve or disapprove of the sufficiency of the sureties.[83] It seems that the officer or board upon whom the power is conferred to approve the bonds of county officers in exercising such power acts judicially.[84]

Terms of officers elected at special election. — An act organizing a new county, fixing a special day for the first election of county officers, and providing that they shall hold office for two years, and until their successors are elected and qualified, must be construed in connection with the general law requiring such officers to be elected on the same day throughout the state. Extension under constitutional amendment. — A county treasurer who was elected at the general election held in November, 1879, continued to hold the office until the 27th day of February, 1881, at which time he died. Under the constitution and law in force at the time of his election, the term for which he was elected would have expired on the first Monday of December, 1881. But the amendment of 1880 of section 8 of article 10 of the constitution of 1870, with the legislation in pursuance thereof, operated to extend the terms of office of the then present incumbents of the office of county treasurer, and of certain other county offices, until the first Monday of December, 1882. So the unexpired part of the term in this case was more than one year, and it was directed that a special election be ordered to fill the vacancy, it not being competent for it to be filled by appointment except when the unexpired portion of the term is less than one year. Applies only to regular term.— A provision that "all county officers shall hold their offices for the term of two years, and until their successors shall be qualified," applies only to the regular term of the office, and not to vacancies or exceptional cases. Hagerty v. Arnold, 13 Kan. 367.

Holding over for indefinite time.—A county treasurer being elected for three years, and until his successor is elected and qualified, may hold over for an indefinite period, if no successor be elected and qualified. State v. Spears, 1 Ind. 515.

In a newly organized county the county officers elected at the first election will hold their offices only until the next general election to be held thereafter, and until their successors shall be elected and qualified, although such first election may be held on the same day on which the general election in the state is held. Killion v. Herman, 43 Kan. 37, 22 Pac. 1026. Minn. Const. art. 4, § 4, requires county officers ordinarily to be elected by the people, and the legislature cannot provide for passing by a general election, and allowing appointed officers to hold over to the next succeeding election, unless there is some substantial reason therefor. But when a sparsely settled, unorganized county is first organized there may be such a reason in the fact that it will take nearly all of that time to organize the county government and get it into fair working order. Spencer v. Griffith, 74 Minn. 55, 76 N. W. 1018.

Effect of failure of reëlected officer to qualify.— In Wapello County v. Bigham, 10 Iowa 39, 74 Am. Dec. 370, it was held that where a treasurer was reëlected and continued in office during the second term without being qualified he did not legally hold over after the expiration of the time fixed for qualification but remained treasurer de facto only.

incumbent of the office has served the full period of years for which he is eligible under the constitution.[95]

(IV) Completion of Unexpired Terms. As a general rule county officers chosen either by election or appointment to fill a vacancy in a county office which is elective hold only for the unexpired term,[96] and until the next general election for such office;[97] but if the person appointed to fill the unexpired term has already been elected for the succeeding term he holds office for the unexpired term and the succeeding term also.[98] So where subsequent to the extension by special act of the term of a person elected to office he resigns, another who is appointed to fill the office holds for the balance of the term as extended.[99]

(V) Interpretation of Provisions as to Duration of Term. When the duration or term of an elective county office is a question of doubt or uncertainty that interpretation should be followed which limits such office to the shortest time.[1]

g. Abandonment of Office — (I) In General. The acceptance by a county officer of another office incompatible therewith operates as an abandonment of the county office.[2] And so under some statutes does a refusal to perform the duties of the office.[3] Where a county officer violates a provision prohibiting his absence ity of successor elect.— Under Nebr. Comp. Stat. c. 10, § 17, and c. 26, § 101, a county board is not authorized to declare vacant a county office, and make an appointment to fill such vacancy, because an officer elect is ineligible; but the incumbent of such office may qualify within ten days after it is ascertained that his successor elect is ineligible, and on qualifying as provided by law may hold over until a successor is elected and has qualified. Effect of failure to elect at subsequent election.— In Atty.-Gen. v. Trombly, 89 Mich. 50, 50 N. W. 744, it was held that where a person was appointed by the governor to fill a vacancy in a county office, the failure of the electors of the county to elect for such office at subsequent elections did not confirm such appointment for the unexpired term.

Extension of term into that of successor.— An appointment by the commissioners' court of Randolph county, after the passage of the act of Jan. 15, 1852, and before the passage of the subsequent act of the same session suspending the operation of the former act (Ala. Acts (1851–1852), p. 477), could not confer on the person appointed a right to hold the office of county treasurer beyond the next general election; and the fact that his immediate successor, elected in August, 1854, allowed him to retain the office until the expiration of three years from the time of his appointment does not confer on the latter the right to extend his term or office an equal length of time into the term of his successor. from the state for longer than a designated period and for no period without the consent of the board, his absence ipso facto creates a vacation and that too, although it was rendered necessary by ill health.[4] A statute providing for the filling of an office by appointment which has become vacant, by death, resignation, removal, or otherwise does not authorize the county court to declare vacant the office of one temporarily absent because of sickness.[5]

(II) By Removal From County. It is the usual rule that where a county officer removes from and ceases to reside in the county, he thereby abandons his office, and it may properly be declared vacant.[6] When so abandoned the officer cannot afterward resume such office.[7]

h. Removal and Suspension — (I) Power of Legislature to Provide For. Whenever the constitution has created an office and fixed its terms, and has also declared upon what grounds and in what mode an incumbent of such office may be removed before the expiration of his term, it is beyond the power of the legislature to remove such officer or suspend him from office for any other reason or by any other mode than the constitution itself has furnished;[8] but a county officer not being a state officer liable to impeachment, if the constitution is silent as to the cause and manner of his removal or suspension from office, the legislature has plenary power and can determine and provide what shall be causes for and the mode of removal or suspension from office,[9] and when they do so determine their commands must be enforced.[10]

(II) In Whom Authority Vested — (A) Power of Removal as Incident to Power of Appointment. Where the power of appointment of county officers or agents is conferred in general terms without restriction, the power of removal in the discretion and at the will of the appointing power is implied and always exists unless restrained and limited by some provision of the law.[11] This rule, however, applies only where the tenure is not fixed by law and the office is held at the pleasure of the appointing power.[12]

(B) Courts or Boards Vested With Power. In a number of jurisdictions power of removal is expressly given to county boards or county courts.[13]

(III) GROUNDS. The grounds upon which a county officer may be removed are fixed by statute and are not altogether uniform in the various states. The grounds usually designated, however, are nonfeasance or misfeasance and official misconduct or wilful maladministration in office.[14] Within the general descriptions the following have been held grounds for removal: Demand of illegal fees;[15] allowing the abstraction of ballots committed to the care of the officer;[16] wrongful removal by officer of the government quarter-section stones;[17] neglect to make returns or pay over money;[18] a deficiency found in the county funds by the examiners;[19] failure to file report and make a settlement as ordered by the board;[20] and failure to file a sufficient bond within the time allowed by law.[21] Where, as is the case in some states, power is given to county supervisors to remove from office for incompetency, improper conduct, or other cause satisfactory to the board, "other cause" must be construed to mean other kindred causes.[22] A county clerk not being responsible for the action of the county board, the fact that he signs an order upon a claim allowed by the board upon the acceptance of a written contract on file with the clerk without any special account or voucher being filed as prescribed by law, is not sufficient ground to forfeit his office or remove him in the absence of any testimony showing corruption on his part or any benefit thereby.[23]

(IV) PROCEEDINGS FOR REMOVAL. The supreme court can by mandamus compel a board of county supervisors to act upon a complaint against the county officers, but it can in no way control the judgment or legal discretion of such board.[24] A county board in proceedings to remove a county officer does not act election, or until otherwise provided by law, an appointee to such office acquires the vested right and is not removable except for cause amounting to a forfeiture of his office.

as an ordinary court, but as a public board authorized to use its own time and methods, subject to the condition that no one shall be removed without a trial upon specific charges, a reasonable notice thereof, and a full opportunity to be heard.[25] It has, however, been held that under special statutes applying to certain officers, and authorizing removal upon particular grounds, a county board may remove an officer or agent without charges, notice, or hearing.[26] A person has the right, in a proceeding to remove him from a county office, to present as many legal questions for decision by the county board as he may think necessary for his proper defense; but the board has the authority and right to decide such question either with or without argument, as it may deem proper.[27] An appeal from an order of removal acts as a supersedeas of the order, and therefore no vacancy exists during the pendency of the appeal.[28] services.[59] Under a statute allowing him a percentage of the aggregate amount of certain funds coming into his hands, it was held that he was entitled to commissions on such funds received from his predecessor.[60] Where he holds office for only a part of a year he is entitled to the statutory percentage on the amount collected, although it exceeds the proportionate amount of the maximum yearly compensation allowed.[61] Nor will the fact that the act of the auditor in issuing orders was unlawful,[62] or that the bonds, the moneys from the sale of which passed through his hands, were afterward shown to be void,[63] defeat his right to compensation.

(IV) Assistants and Deputies. In some jurisdictions the statutes either expressly or by implication authorize the payment of necessary assistants and deputies of certain county officials from the funds of the county.[64] In others deputies are to be paid by the principal out of the fees received by him in excess of the amount which he is to retain for himself, and the county is not liable for the salaries of such deputies.[65] And in others the officer is allowed a percentage for clerk hire and can pay the clerk whatever price is agreed upon, in which case the percentage is part of the officer's salary which he is entitled to receive, although he himself performs all the duties.[66] Again the manner of payment may depend upon the class of the county; deputies being provided for at a fixed salary payable from the county treasury in some classes, while in others the officer is allowed a fixed amount out of which he must pay all deputies as well as himself.[67] Where no provision is made for the employment of deputies and assistants, the latter must look exclusively to their employers for compensation, and such employer cannot look to the county for reimbursement.[68]

(v) Incidental Expenses of County Officers. In most jurisdictions it is held that a proper interpretation of the statutes authorizes the payment of necessary incidental expenses of the county officials, such as postage, stationery, mileage, and kindred expenditures from the county funds.[69] Nevertheless such expenses must be necessary and reasonable in cost,[70] and to warrant their allowance it has been held that there must be a full and complete statement thereof, accompanied by vouchers.[71]

75. In California the constitution prohibits the increase of compensation of any county of-office without increasing the compensation, or may diminish the amount thereof at its option.[76]

(II) By County Board. Even though the board has the original fixing of compensation, the increase of compensation of an officer during his term is forbidden by statute in some jurisdictions,[77] and in others either the increase or diminution in compensation during the term of office is prohibited by the organic law[78] or by statute.[79] In others the board may diminish the compensation during the term upon notice to the officer.[80]

f. Source of Payment. Under some statutes salary of designated officials is payable only out of the fees and emoluments of the office;[81] while under other statutes that of other officials is payable from the general fund in the treasury.[82]

g. Actions to Recover Compensation. If the county board or court refuses to appropriate enough to pay a county official the amount due him he has a right of action against the county.[83] To authorize the bringing of an action it is necessary that demand shall have been made and payment refused,[84] and in one jurisdiction it has been held that he cannot maintain an action before taking oath of office.[85]

But under a statute providing that where fees are due a county, and not collected during the fiscal year when they became due, they shall be collected by the officer to whose office the fees accrued, who shall be entitled to a certain per cent of the fees so collected, a county clerk has no right to collect delinquent fees after the expiration of his term of office, he having then ceased to be "the officer to whose office the fees accrued." Conveyance of land by county clerk as agent.— Where by statute the duties of the county agent for the sale of real estate belonging to the county have been devolved upon the clerk of the county commissioners' court, a conveyance of such real estate properly made in the name of the county, and signed "Stephen B. Suit on sheriff's bond on failure to account for taxes.—It is the duty of the county treasurer to receive payment of the county taxes from the sheriff, and to bring suit on his bond on his failure to account. If the county treasurer fails to bring suit the county commissioners are required to do so. State v. Clarke, 73 N. C. 255. The Kentucky act of March 9, 1868, creating the office of county treasurer of Franklin county, provided that no one but said treasurer might receive any money due or to become due to said county, although the sheriff might pay off claims against the county out of the county levy; that the sheriff should settle with the treasurer; and that the treasurer should bring suit against the sheriff if delinquent. It was held in Berry v. Com., 14 S. W. 589, 12 Ky. L. 16. The commissions allowed to county treasurers under Ga. Code, § 3703, viz., two and one-half per cent on all sums received and paid out up to ten thousand dollars and one and one-quarter per cent on all sums in excess of that amount, are to be computed upon their annual receipts and disbursements; hence the fact that these officers are required by section 508*a* to make returns to the grand juries of their respective counties at each term of the superior court does not authorize a county treasurer to strike a balance at every such term, charge two and one-half per cent on all sums received and paid up to ten thousand dollars, as shown by his account thus balanced, and then begin a new account and charge the same rate of commissions on amounts included in it up to ten thousand dollars, and in this manner realize that rate of commissions on amounts received and disbursed in the same year in excess of ten thousand dollars. Of Controllers.[32] All books, receipts, papers, and accounts kept by any county officer must be open to the inspection of the county controller who shall have power to examine the same at any time he may wish to do so,[33] and among his other duties a county controller is required to countersign warrants drawn by the sheriff on the county treasurer for the payment of a deputy sheriff, even though there has been no appropriation by councils.[34]

35. Haynes v. Blue Earth County, 65 Minn. 384, 67 N. W. 1005, holding, however, that Minn. Gen. Stat. (1894), § 831, which provides that the county surveyor shall execute all surveys which shall be ordered by any court, board of county commissioners, or town supervisors, does not authorize a county surveyor, whenever a county or town lets a contract for public improvements, the plans of which in his opinion necessitate the service of a surveyor or civil engineer, to do the work at the expense of the county or town, on his own motion.

Duty in unorganized counties.— In Texas Mexican R. Co. v. Locke, 63 Tex. 623, it was held that deputy surveyors in unorganized counties attached to surveying districts are but aids to the district surveyor as such; it was not the purpose of the legislature in providing for their appointment to make them independent of the district surveyor, nor does their appointment relieve him from the duty of making surveys in such unorganized counties.

to the general land-office,[36] to certify his plats, and cause them to be recorded in the general land-office,[37] and to furnish in reasonable time, when demanded, copies of all surveys not specially excepted in the land laws.[38] It is not, however, the duty of the county surveyor to furnish warrants to persons desiring to enter waste and vacant land, nor to make an entry for them, but merely to record their entry and survey their location.[39]

f. Of Deputies. As a general rule deputies of any officers heretofore mentioned may perform any purely ministerial duties of such officers,[40] when duly appointed and qualified;[41] but where a county officer is empowered to perform quasi-judicial duties, a deputy cannot perform such duties unless expressly authorized by statute.[42]

5. Accounting and Settlement — a. tlements with regard to taxes collected for the state as well as the county.[61] Provisions providing for such settlements must, however, be strictly followed,[62] and an auditor has no authority to settle with officers other than those designated by statute.[63]

c. Notice to Officer. Under the statutes of some states it would seem that notice must be given to an official, or if he be dead, to his executor, before settlement can be made;[64] and in any event notice to the official is necessary before judgment can be entered against him for the amount found due.[65]

d. Conclusiveness and Effect — (I) In General. County authorities in making settlements with the officials act ministerially rather than judicially, and their determination is no more conclusive than a settlement between private persons.[66]

(II) Upon County. Hence such settlement is not conclusive and binding on the county in case of fraud or mistake,[67] and may be successfully attacked on such grounds in a suit on the official's bond.[68] It has been held, however, that a settlement is binding on the county in case the only mistake made therein is one of law.[69]

(III) UPON OFFICIAL. Where an officer accepts an amount allowed him for services by the county board, he is precluded from afterward disputing the correctness of the amount allowed,[70] except as to items, the right to which was not in issue or included in the settlement.[71] In the absence of such acceptance, he is not concluded by the settlement if mistake or fraud is shown.[72] Nevertheless in the absence of fraud or mistake the settlement is conclusive.[73]

e. Medium of Payment on Settlement. While it has been held that a county official may make payment to his successor or the county upon a settlement with it in any medium of exchange which is recognized by the county as legal tender,[74] a county or the successor of the official can as a rule accept money only upon settlement with such official.[75]

f. Appeal From Settlement. Provision is made for appeal from the settlement with the tribunal or officer acting on behalf of the county, in some jurisdictions.[76] And such appeal may, under some statutes, be made by the taxpayers.[77] In other

Prima facie lands cannot be taken by a county ordinary as payment by a defaulting treasurer. It is necessary for the party acting on behalf of the county to show that it was necessary to take the land to save the debt, or that such land was taken for some specific public purpose for which the county authorities might purchase lands. Phipps v. Morrow, 49 Ga. 37.

The officer cannot discharge his liability to the county by payment in promissory notes, checks, drafts, or other paper, and if such paper comes into the hands or control of the county after the officer has defaulted and absconded, it will operate as a credit or set-off only so far as money has been received on them. 77. An affidavit that injustice will be done, as required by statute upon the intervention in a suit by the taxpayers of a county, need not accompany an appeal from a report of county auditors on settlement of an officer's account. Mansel's Appeal, 4 Pa. Dist. 487. But under this statute the court will not direct an issue to be tried by a jury, where the facts can be satisfactorily ascertained by the court. Morley's Appeal, 2 Pa. Co. Ct. 417.

jurisdictions no appeal will lie from orders of this nature.[78] And in any event an appeal can only be taken in the manner provided by statute.[79]

6. Personal Liability — a. For Breach of Duty Independent of Bond. A county officer is liable to the county independently of his bond for any breach of the duties imposed upon him by statute.[80]

b. For Acts of Predecessor. A county officer cannot be held liable for the wrongful act of his predecessor in office.[81]

c. To Public or to Individuals. The personal liability of a county officer depends not only upon the nature of the duty but also upon the person or body of persons in whom the corresponding right inheres. Where the duty is owing to the individual, as for instance in the case of filing mortgages, articles of incorporation, etc., the right inheres in the individual injured. If on the other hand the duty is owing to the public only, it is held that an individual has no right of action for a breach thereof, although the individual be specially injured thereby.[82]

d. For Acts of Deputy.[83] Where by statute an official is made liable for the
