Residence or citizenship does not affect the jurisdiction of the circuit court to entertain a suit for infringement of a copyright or to grant an injunction. Lederer v. Rankin, 90 Fed. 449. Compare Boucicault v. Hart, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1,692, 13 Blatchf. 47. But where the parties are citizens of the same state and the federal court has in an action for infringement determined that the copyright is invalid it has been decided that it has no jurisdiction to grant relief on other grounds. No. 1,117, 3 Dill. 367; Smith v. Union Pac. R. Co., 22 Fed. Cas. No. 13,121, 2 Dill. 278. So it was decided that such a court had jurisdiction in mandamus to compel the Union Pacific Railroad Company to operate its road as required by law (U. S. v. Union Pac. R. Co., 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,599, 2 Dill. 527, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,600, 3 Dill. 524); and jurisdiction exists of a suit for personal injuries against a railroad corporation as created (Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Cox, 145 U. S. 593, 12 S. Ct. 905, 36 L. ed. 829) and of a suit to restrain the collection of taxes on property claimed to be exempt under an act of congress (Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Carland, 5 Mont. 146, 3 Pac. 134).

National banks.— A federal court has jurisdiction of an action to enjoin the collection of a tax upon a national bank and the shares belonging to the stock-holders, where the tax is in violation of the constitution. Pittsburg Third Nat. Bank v. Mylin, 76 Fed. 385; Dakota Nat. Bank v. Swenson, 48 Fed. 626; Sioux Falls Nat. Bank v. Swenson, 48 Fed. 621. And it has been decided that an action by a national bank against its former officers for a loss occasioned by a negligent loaning of the bank's funds is within the jurisdiction of the circuit court (Abbott v. National Bank of Commerce, 20 Wash. 552, 56 Pac. 376; National Bank of Commerce v. Wade, 84 Fed. 10), but not an action for damages against the directors of a bank for inducing plaintiff by false representations in their reports to loan money to the bank, which is lost through the bank's insolvency (Bailey v. Mosher, 74 Fed. 15) or an action against the assignees of bank-stock, by the assignors, to recover payments the latter were compelled to make toward the bank's liabilities, owing to the fact that the transfer was not properly registered on the bank's books (Lessassier v. Kennedy, 123 U. S. 521, 8 S. Ct. 244, 31 L. ed. 262). Again, under the act of congress of Aug. 13, 1888, national banks are to be deemed citizens of the state in which located for the purposes of all suits by or against them. Ex p. Jones, 164 U. So also a federal court has jurisdiction of an action by a person injured by a breach of the marshal's bond (Adler v. Newcomb, 1 Fed. Cas. No. 83, 2 Dill. 45), irrespective of the citizenship of the parties (U. S. v. Davidson, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14,921, 1 Biss. 433; Wetmore v. Rice, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,468, 1 Biss. 237).

United States marshals.— A federal court has jurisdiction of a suit against a marshal for wrongfully taking possession of real estate (Front St. Cable R. Co. v. Drake, 65 Fed. 539), of an action where the validity and effect of process issued by a United States court is to be determined (Ellis v. Norton, 16 Fed. 4, 4 Woods 399), and of an action by a marshal to protect money in his hands as such (Henry v. Sowles, 28 Fed. 481).

Receivers of national banks.— A federal court has jurisdiction of an action brought by or against such an officer in his official capacity (McDonald v. State, 101 Fed. 171, 41 C. C. A. 278; Gilbert v. McNulta, 96 Fed. 83; Brown v. Smith, 88 Fed. 565; Snohomish County v. Puget Sound Nat. A. 369 [affirming 81 Fed. 805]; Short v. Hepburn, 75 Fed. 113, 21 C. C. A. 252) or the amount in controversy (Bowman v. Harris, 95 Fed. 917; Myers v. Hettinger, 94 Fed. 370, 37 C. C. A. 369 [affirming 81 Fed. 805]. Compare Smithson v. Hubbell, 81 Fed. 593; Thompson v. German Ins. Co., 76 Fed. 892). But where in an action by such a receiver jurisdiction of suits arising under the provisions of the United States revenue laws.[69]

2. SUFFICIENCY OF PLEADINGS. Where the jurisdiction of a circuit court is invoked on the ground that the suit is one "arising under the Constitution of the United States," it must appear from the declaration or bill that the question in dispute is one which really and substantially involves some right under such constitution or laws.[70] And jurisdiction cannot be conferred by setting forth in the bill or declaration the contention which will be made by defendant;[71] nor where the action is founded on an alleged breach of contract of license by defendant, by the jurisdiction depends solely on the official character of the plaintiff, and there is a sale and transfer by him of all his interest in the subject-matter of the litigation, it is decided that jurisdiction is lost. Jurisdiction exists in the circuit court of a suit against an internal revenue collector to recover taxes alleged to have been illegally collected (Louisville Sinking Fund Com'rs v. Buckner, 48 Fed. 533); and of a similar proceeding against a collector of customs (Philadelphia v. Diehl, 5 Wall. (U. S.) 720, 18 L. ed. 614; Schmeider v. Barney, 22 Fed. Cas. No. 12,462, 13 Blatchf. 37). And the district court has jurisdiction of actions for penalties and forfeitures under the customs and revenue laws (U. S. v. Mooney, 11 Fed. 476; Hall v. Warren, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 5,952, 2 McLean 332); and may discharge upon bail property in its custody which is proceeded against as forfeited (U. S. v. Three Hundred Barrels of Whiskey, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,510, 1 Ben. 15). But it has been decided that a federal court has no jurisdiction of an action to restrain the collection of internal revenue taxes (Miles v. Johnson, 59 Fed. 38; Roback v. Taylor, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11,877, 2 Bond 36. But see Georgia v. Atkins, 10 Fed. Cas. No. 5,350, 35 Ga. 315, 1 Abb. 22), and that no original jurisdiction is vested in a federal court of an action against a collector of internal revenue, except on the ground of diversity of citizenship, and where an amount sufficient to confer jurisdiction is involved, although the defendant may at his option remove any such action commenced in the state court to the federal court (Cincinnati Brewing Co. v. Bettman, 102 Fed. 16).

War-stamp tax.— Where the railroad commission of a state issued an order requiring an express company to pay the war-stamp tax, without any demand on the shipper for its payment, it was decided, in an action by the company to enjoin the enforcement of such order, that a construction of the act of congress imposing such tax was not necessarily involved, as the defendants had no legal interest in the matter which entitled them to demand such construction (Dinsmore v. Southern Express Co., 92 Fed. 714); it was, however, determined that a federal court had jurisdiction of a suit to determine the validity of the action of the state authorities, without regard to the citizenship of the parties (Dinsmore v. Southern Express Co., 92 Fed. 714); and it was decided in another case that the state courts had jurisdiction of a petition to compel an express company to receive and carry goods upon payment of the regular charges, where a controversy was involved as to whether the company or the shipper should pay the stamp tax (Atty.-Gen. v. American Express Co., 118 Mich. 682, 77 N. W. 317).

joining in the complaint a minor claim, imperfectly stated, for infringement of a patent.[72] And merely setting up a general right under a federal statute does not present a case within the first category of cases specified in the Revised Statutes[73] of "an authority exercised under the United States" where the validity of such statute is not involved.[74] But it has been decided that it is not necessary to show in the pleadings what particular clause of the constitution has been violated in order to confer jurisdiction of a suit as one arising under the constitution.[75] And diversity of citizenship need not appear in the pleadings where, from the allegations, it affirmatively appears that a federal question is directly involved.[76]

C. Jurisdiction Dependent on Citizenship, Residence, or Character of Parties — 1. In General — a. Cases Affecting Ambassadors, Public Ministers, or Consuls. Actions against officers.— An action in ejectment against a state officer is one of which the federal courts may have jurisdiction (Saranac Land, etc., Co. v. Roberts, 68 Fed. 521; Tindall v. Wesley, 65 Fed. 731, 13 C. C. A. 160), as is also a proceeding for contempt against a state officer in disobeying an order of a federal court (Ex p. Tyler, 149 U. S. 164, 13 S. Ct. 785, 37 L. ed. 689). But if a suit is nominally against such an officer, who has no interest, and the only matter in controversy is a right of the state, the latter will be considered as the real defendant, and the suit as one within the jurisdiction of the federal courts. And it has been decided that such a court may also by a mandatory decree compel the performance of a duty by a state officer.[85] Again a federal court is not deprived of jurisdiction of an action between private citizens from the mere fact that a state claims an interest in the subject in dispute.[86]

g. Where a Foreign Sovereign or a Nation Is a Party. Where a foreign sovereign or a nation is a party to an action the federal courts have jurisdiction of the same.[91]

2. Controversies Between Citizens of Different States — a. Citizenship in General — (I) Extent of Jurisdiction Generally. As there is no constitutional limitation upon the classes of cases involving controversies between citizens of different states to which the jurisdiction of the United States may be extended, congress may provide for the bringing, at the option of either party, all such controversies within the jurisdiction of the federal judiciary.[92] But it has been determined that no power is conferred upon the federal circuit court to administer common-law relief in a suit between citizens of the same state.[93]

(II) Diversity of Citizenship in General. Although a citizen of one state may generally be considered as a citizen of every other state, yet so far as jurisdiction of the federal courts is concerned a person can be a citizen of but one state, which is that of his domicile.[94] And in actions between citizens of different states one of the parties must be a citizen of the state where the suit is brought in order to give the circuit court jurisdiction of the same.[95] Again the test of jurisdiction is the citizenship of the parties at the time the action is commenced.[96]

(III) Necessary, Nominal, and Formal Parties. Where a person is a necessary and indispensable party to a controversy and cannot be subjected to the jurisdiction of the court it has been determined that the action cannot be sus-

Although a defendant files a disclaimer where the bill shows that he and the complainant are citizens of the same state, yet if such defendant is not dismissed the suit should be. Wetherby v. Stinson, 62 Fed. 173, 10 C. C. A. 243.

If any of the judgment creditors and persons interested who are made parties to the foreclosure of a mortgage are citizens of the same state as the complainants the federal court has no jurisdiction. Tug River Coal, etc., Co. v. Brigel, 67 Fed. 625, 14 C. C. A. 577.

In a suit to enjoin the institution of a boycott by certain trades-unions or assemblies and their members, no jurisdiction exists in the federal court as to individual defendants who are residents of the same state as the corporation bringing the suit. Oxley Stave Co. v. Coopers' International Union of North America, 72 Fed. 695.

In an action to foreclose a mortgage by citizens of one state against a corporation of another state, in which state there also reside other persons occupying similar positions to the plaintiffs but who cannot be made plaintiffs because of their citizenship, it has been decided that the court may, after ordering a sale, distribute the proceeds according to the rights of all. One of several defendants cannot file a cross bill against the others, all being citizens of the same state, as to matters not set up in the original bill, in which the original complainants have no interest. Putnam v. New Albany, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11,481, 4 Biss. 365.

One of several defendants, who is not a citizen of either the state in which the suit is brought and of which the other defendants are citizens, or that in which the complainant is a citizen but who is a citizen of a third state, will not, although he is served in the district in which the suit is brought, be subject to the jurisdiction of the court. Jenkins v. York Cliffs Imp. Co., 110 Fed. 807.

Severable action.—It has been decided that where citizens of one state bring an action against citizens of another state and also join as defendants persons who are citizens of the same state as the plaintiffs, if the cause of action is severable and distinct as to those parties defendant properly before the court so that substantial justice can be done as to them without affecting the other defendants, jurisdiction may be exercised as to the former. Boon v. Chiles, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 532, 8

the diversity of citizenship is to be determined by arranging the parties on one side or the other as their interests require.[5]

(B) No Service on or Appearance of One of Co-Defendants. Where there are parties in interest who have not been made defendants, a voluntary appearance and answer by them has been permitted.[6]

(VII) Persons Holding Legal or Equitable Interests or Occupying Fiduciary Relations. Where the legal right to sue exists in the plaintiff in a suit where jurisdiction depends on diversity of citizenship, the residence of those who may have an equitable interest in the claim or subject-matter in dispute will not be inquired into.[7] So the question of jurisdiction may be determined by the personal citizenship of an administrator or executor in an action by or against him without regard to the state in which he was appointed or the residence of the beneficiary for whom he acts.[8] And likewise in actions by or against a trustee the citizenship of such person controls.[9] So also it has been decided that the citizenship of a receiver determines the jurisdiction of the court in actions by or

Where no service and refusal to appear.— Where a bill is filed against several defendants, who are all residents of a state other than that where suit is brought and are necessary defendants, it has been determined that if some of them refuse to appear and no service is made upon them, no jurisdiction is required and the bill should be dismissed as to those who appear and move for a dismissal. An action by bondholders to foreclose a mortgage in their own name, where the mortgagor and trustee are citizens of the same state, cannot be maintained without showing against him.[10] But where an infant sues by his guardian or next friend, the jurisdiction of the court will be determined by the citizenship of the infant.[11] And in a suit by the curator or next friend of one who is non compos mentis, the citizenship of the latter will control.[12] Again in an action on a bond in the name of the governor of the state for the use of the person interested, jurisdiction may be determined by the citizenship of the one for whose use the suit is brought.[13]

(VIII) INTERVENERS AND SUBSTITUTED PARTIES. If jurisdiction of a federal court has completely attached it will not be affected by a subsequent change of parties.[14] But where jurisdiction of an action is dependent upon diverse citizenship it has been decided that jurisdiction of a petition of intervention will also be dependent on citizenship and will not be given by that of the original parties.[15] And where plaintiff and defendant are citizens of the same state it is declared that jurisdiction will not be conferred by the fact that a third party who is a citizen of another state intervenes.[16]

(IX) CORPORATIONS. The jurisdiction of the court, where it depends on diversity of citizenship, in an action where a corporation is a party, is not determined by the actual citizenship of the members,[17] since the stock-holders are conclusively presumed for the purposes of jurisdiction to be citizens of the state in

(XII) JOINDER OF OR DISMISSAL OF PARTIES. Where there are two or more joint plaintiffs each must be capable of suing in the federal courts in order to support the jurisdiction of such courts upon the ground of diverse citizenship, and for the purposes of jurisdiction a voluntary joinder will have the same effect as if they had been compelled to unite.[25] Again where it appears that the jurisdiction of the court will be ousted because of the citizenship of one of the parties to the action, and it appears that such party is not an indispensable one, the suit may be dismissed as to that party and the jurisdiction of the court retained as to the others.[26]

What are choses in action.— In the construction of these acts it has been decided that a contract is a chose in action, and that a suit cannot be maintained by an assignee thereof for specific performance unless it could have been maintained by the assignor (Plant Invest. Co. v. Jacksonville, etc., R. Co., 152 U. S. 71, 14 S. Ct. 483, 38 L. ed. 358; Shoecraft v. Bloxham, 124 U. S. 730, 8 S. Ct. 686, 31 L. ed. 574; Corbin v. Black Hawk County, 105 U. A. 267), and that a claim founded on a contract is a chose in action (Mexican Nat. R. Co. v. Davidson, 157 U. S. 201, 15 S. Ct. 563, 39 L. ed. 672; Jackson v. Pearson, 60 Fed. 113; Republic Iron Min. Co. v. Jones, 37 Fed. 721, 2 L. R. A. 746; Simons v. Ypsilanti Paper Co., 33 Fed. 193). Again there is no jurisdiction under such circumstances of a suit on an open account (Chase v. Sheldon Roller-Mills Co., 56 Fed. 625), or of a suit by an assignee of a right to an account of the proceeds of sales of mortgaged property (Wilkinson v. Wilkinson, 29 Fed. Such an act has been declared not to apply to the case of the assignment of a claim against a railroad company for overcharges in freight (Conn v. Chicago, etc., R. Cas. No. 1,592, 4 Wash. 482), to the conveyance of land (Briggs v. French, 4 Fed. Cas. No. 1,871, 2 Sumn. 251), to a bill in equity, by the purchaser of an interest of one partner, against the remaining partner for a division of the assets and an accounting (McNichol v. Phelps, 16 Fed. 8), to an action to recover damages for a trespass in entering upon lands and cutting down trees (Ambler v. Eppinger, 137 U. S.) 622, 14 L. ed. 1084), to a suit on a chose in action payable to bearer, where the instrument was made to a corporation (Barling v. Bank of British North America, 50 Fed. 260, 1 C. C. A. 510; Newgass v. New Orleans, 33 Fed. 196), to a suit by a creditor who has become subrogated to a right of his debtor (New Orleans v. Whitney, 138 U. S. 595, 11 S. Ct. 428, 34 L. ed. 1102), to a suit against a bank to recover for neglecting to protest drafts (Barney v. Globe Bank, 2 Fed. Cas. No. 1,031, 5 Blatchf. 107), or to a suit by national banks on assigned paper (Commercial Nat. Bank v. Simmons, 6 Fed. Cas. No. 3,062, 1 Flipp. 449).

Declaration should show that suit might have been prosecuted in the court if no as-suit, except upon foreign bills of exchange, to recover on any note or other chose in action, in favor of any assignee, or of any subsequent holder, if such instrument be payable to bearer, and be not made by any corporation, unless such suit might have been prosecuted in such court if no assignment or transfer had been made. And it has been decided that such acts were intended to prohibit suits in the federal courts by assignees of choses in action, unless the original assignor was entitled to maintain the suit, in all cases except suits on foreign bills of exchange, and except suits on promissory notes made payable to bearer and executed by a corporation.[30] So the assignee or indorsee of a note is precluded from bringing suit thereon except so far as the right may be conferred by statute.[31] And the federal courts have no jurisdiction of a suit by the assignee of a judgment to subject thereto property of the judgment debtor standing in the name of a third person, where the assignor and defendant are citizens of the same state.[32] So also it has been determined that a general assignee of the effects of an insolvent cannot sue in the federal courts if his assignor could not have done so.[33] Again it has been decided that where both plaintiff's assignor and defendant are aliens and no federal question is involved, jurisdiction will be declined of an action to recover on an insurance policy and to reform the same, as such action is one to recover the contents of a chose in action.[34] But actions upon bonds or coupons which are negotiable instruments may be maintained by the assignee or holder thereof in the federal courts where the necessary diversity of citizenship exists, although a suit could not have been prosecuted to recover thereon in such court if no assignment had been made.[35] So also it has been decided that actions on county or municipal warrants, which are negotiable, may be maintained in the federal courts by a non-resident of the state in which the county or city is situated, although the payees in the warrants were citizens of that state.[36] And it has likewise been decided that an assignee of a note, and of mortgage securing the same, may sue in the federal courts to foreclose the mortgage.[37]

Sufficiency of averments.— That a party is "of" or a "resident" of a particular state is not a sufficient averment of citizenship. Cooper v. Newell, 155 U. S. 532, 15 S. Ct. 355, 39 L. ed. 249; Horne v. George H. Hammond Co., 155 U. S. 393, 15 S. Ct. 167, 39 L. ed. 197; Wolfe v. Hartford L., etc., Ins. Co., 148 U. S. 389, 13 S. Ct. 602, 37 L. ed. 493; Denny v. Pironi, 141 U. S. 121, 11 S. Ct. 966, 35 L. ed. 657; Timmons v. Elyton Land Co., 139 U. S. 378, 11 S. Ct. 585, 35 L. ed. 195; Menard v. Goggan, 121 U. Nor is it sufficient to allege that defendant is "a citizen or a resident" of a certain state (Jackson v. Ashton, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 148, 8 L. ed. 898; Brown v. Keene, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 112, 8 L. ed. 885), that he is a resident of or lives at a certain place (Gale v. Southern Bldg., etc., Assoc., 117 Fed. 732), that he is an "inhabitant" (Allen B. Wrisley Co. v. George E. Rouse Soap Co., 90 Fed. 5, 32 C. C. A. 496), or that the citizenship of a party is unknown (Tug River Coal, etc., Co. v. Biegel, 67 Fed. 625, 14 C. C. A. 577). But it has been decided that citizenship of a party in a certain state is sufficiently alleged by an averment that he was a citizen of the United States naturalized in Louisiana and residing there (Gassies v. Ballon, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 761, 8 L. ed. 573), that he is a citizen of the southern district of Alabama (Berlin v. Jones, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1,343, 1 Woods 638. See also Edwards v. Nichols, 8 Fed. Cas. No. 4,296, 3 Day (Conn.) 16, Brunn. Col. No. 4,198, 16 Conn. 558 note), or that he is a citizen of the United States and an actual resident of a state named (Littell v. Erie R. Co., 105 Fed. 539).

(iv) In Actions to Which Aliens Are Parties. Where jurisdiction of a federal court is dependent on the alienage of one of the parties to the action, the fact that he is an alien is a necessary allegation;[45] and in addition to this the description of the parties should show the citizenship of the other party.[46]

(v) Amendment. Where the averments do not sufficiently show the diversity of citizenship necessary to sustain the jurisdiction of a federal court such defect may be cured by amendments.[47]

b. Manner of Making Objections.[48] Under the earlier practice in the federal courts the question of the citizenship of a party should be raised by a plea in abatement;[49] it has, however, been decided that this method of procedure is no longer necessary and that the court may and should upon its own motion stop the proceedings and dismiss the suit, if it appears that there is not the requisite diversity of citizenship.[50] Again the objection may be raised under any form of plea, answer, or demurrer which would have been open to defendant under a like proceeding in the state court.[51]

The fact that one of the complainants is a citizen of the state where the suit is brought is declared not to present a question of jurisdiction which would go to the whole case

c. Evidence. Proper averments in the pleadings as to the citizenship of the parties are prima facie sufficient,[52] and the citizenship alleged therein need not be proved unless specially denied by plea,[53] in which case the burden of proof is on the defendant.[54] But testimony in reference to the citizenship of the parties is only admissible in support of allegations properly made in the pleadings.[55]

D. Jurisdiction Dependent on Amount or Value in Controversy — 1. PRIMARY RULE. Primarily where a specified jurisdictional amount or value is required to give any federal court jurisdiction, such requirement is exclusive, and if the requisite amount or value exists said court has jurisdiction.[56]

2. GENERAL PRINCIPLES. The facts when made to appear of record should create a legal certainty that the amount involved does not give the court jurisdiction or the action cannot properly be dismissed.[57] The limitation as to amount refers to the sum in dispute and not to rights which are mere incidents.[58] And a subsequent act increasing the jurisdictional amount will not affect jurisdiction which has vested.[59]

3. GOVERNING FACTORS OR TEST — a. Generally. The test of jurisdiction may be the wrong done a corporation;[60] the amount claimed by a creditor against the judgment debtor, and not the value of property held by the debtor's alleged fraudulent assignee;[61] the value of a right;[62] the value of the right to be protected, or the extent of the injury to be prevented, as in injunction suits;[63] the and which can be raised on demurrer to the whole bill, but such bill may in some cases be dismissed as to that particular complainant. Nebraska City Nat. Bank v. Nebraska City Hydraulic Gaslight, etc., Co., 14 Fed. 763, 4 McCrary 319.

For example the value of a contract for public work sought to be enjoined and not the amount of the tax assessable against complainant in case of performance is the amount. Johnston v. Pittsburg, 106 Fed. 753. So the value of the trade-mark to be protected is the amount and not the damages sustained (Hennessy v. Herrmann, 89 Fed. 669. See Symonds v. Greene, 28 Fed. 834), or the value of a flume as an entirety, the destruction of which is asked to be enjoined, is the amount (Maffet v. Quine, 93 Fed. 347, 95 Fed. 199); and where the suit is to enjoin the construction of a sewer to the injury of mortgaged property, the value of the security impaired thereby gives jurisdiction, if said value is sufficient (Clapp v. Spokane, 53 Fed. 515). So the value of the right to operate a railroad is the matter in dispute and not that of the railroad itself where an injunction is sought to restrain its operation. Oleson v. Northern Pac. R. Amount of a tax in suits to enjoin their enforcement is the amount involved. Douglas Co. v. Stone, 110 Fed. 812; Linehan Railway Transfer Co. v. Pendergrass, 70 Fed. 1, 16 C. C. A. 585. In an action to recover a piece of land on which a railroad had located its depot, the value of the land to the railroad company, according to its present situation and use, is the value to be considered in determining whether the amount involved in the litigation is sufficient to confer jurisdiction on the federal courts. if the requisite jurisdictional facts are shown by the complaint it is sufficient;[80] and this applies to the allegations of a bill.[81] But the requisite jurisdictional facts must be shown[82] from the entire complaint;[83] and the averment must be certain,[84] although amendments may be allowed.[85] The use of the words "amount in dispute" instead of "matter in dispute" will not of itself be insufficient.[86] Again where the law gives no rule the plaintiff's demand must furnish one in determining the matter in dispute, although the amount of damages laid is not conclusive; but where the law does give the rule the legal cause of action and not the plaintiff's demand must be regarded.[87] The claim or demand of the plaintiff must, however, be made in good faith;[88] nor can the declaration on its face show bad faith and confer jurisdiction.[89] Nor for the mere purpose of conferring jurisdiction without reasonable foundation must the claim or demand be merely colorable,[90]

fictitious,[91] or excessive.[92] Nor can the petition ignore a credit to which the defendant is entitled by agreement and the right to which is undisputed.[93]

(II) Pleas, Answers, Denials, and Defenses; Recoupment, Set-Off, and Counter-Claim; Cross Bill. In the absence of a plea to the jurisdiction,[94] an amendment in a bill of damages in excess of the jurisdictional sum, although denied by answer, is sufficient, in the absence of proof, to confer jurisdiction.[95] And where there is a sufficient allegation of the amount in controversy, the court is not ousted of jurisdiction by the fact that there is a good defense apparent on the face of the bill which will reduce said demand below the jurisdictional requirement;[96] nor is a sufficient demand defeated, although it appears on the bill that a portion of the claim is barred by the statute of limitations.[97] Again set-off, counter-claim, or recoupment may or may not affect the jurisdictional amount, and this is true as to matters set up in a cross bill.[98]

d. Waiver or Concession. A waiver may arise by failure to object in the pleadings[99] or jurisdiction may be conferred by a concession that the value of plaintiff's rights in controversy is sufficient therefor.[1]

e. Evidence. In the absence of evidence showing the demand or claim of plaintiff to be colorable or fictitious, it will confer jurisdiction if sufficient;[2] and in ejectment the value of the property may be shown at the trial to bring the case within jurisdiction, where such value is not stated in the pleadings.[3]

E. Procedure and Conformity to State Practice — 1. In General — a. The Conformity Statute of 1872. By statute[6] it is provided that in the United States circuit and district courts the practice, pleadings, and forms and modes of proceeding in civil causes, other than equity and admiralty causes, in the circuit and district courts, must conform, as near as may be, to the practice, pleadings, and forms and modes of proceeding existing at the time in like causes in the courts of record of the state within which such circuit or district courts are held, any rule of court to the contrary notwithstanding.[7]

b. Condemnation Proceedings.[8] In condemnation proceedings substantial conformity with the practice of the state courts only is required.[9]

2. Rules of Court, Forms of Action and Course of Procedure — a. Rules of Court. Every court possesses the power to make its own rules of practice, unless forbidden by law,[34] and the Judiciary Act[35] vests this power in the courts of the United States; but such rules must not be repugnant to law,[36] and a rule may be established by a long course of practice without adoption in writing.[37] Again, notwithstanding the object of the conformity act[38] was to give suitors in the federal courts the advantages of legislative remedies in the respective states by establishing a general uniformity in federal and state proceedings, nevertheless a discretion as to such uniformity was vested in said courts to be exercised by adopting rules regulating their own practice from time to time as might be most convenient and necessary, having in view the prevention of delays and the advancement of justice.[39]

U. S. Rev. Stat. (1878) § 914 [U. S. Comp. Stat. (1901) p. 684] only adopts such rules of statutes practice as are not inconsistent with any other act of congress. Walker v. Collins, 50 Fed. 737, 1 C. C. A. 642.

Between the act of May 8, 1792 (1 U. S. Stat. at L. 275) and the act of June 1, 1872 (U. S. Rev. Stat. (1878) § 914 [U. S. Comp. Stat. (1901) p. 684]) federal courts might by general rules adopt their practice to exigencies and conditions of the times; the latter act, however, required conformity in pleadings, forms and modes of proceedings, etc., to practice of statute courts subject to acts of congress. Amy v. Watertown, 130 U. S. 301, 9 S. Ct. 530, 32 L. ed. 946.

Circuit courts may adopt a rule of practice of state courts of the district from which a case has been removed, although the circuit court of that district had never adopted such a rule. Lee County v. U. S., 7 Wall. (U. S.) 175, 19 L. ed. 162. And a rule of said court adopting the forms of pleading and practice in the state courts makes the forms of the state courts govern in common-law cases concerning which the supreme court has prescribed no rules. Teese v. Phelps, 23 Fed. Cas. No. 13,818, McAll. 17. But circuit court rules when inconsistent with supreme court rules cannot control the latter. U. S. Bank v. White, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 262, 8 L. ed. 938. Again circuit court rules as to return of writs and docketing suits are not abrogated hy the passage of a state statute providing differently. Ewing v. Burnham, 74 Fed. 384.

Supreme court.— Rules established by the supreme court pursuant to law have the force of law (Seymour v. Phillips, etc., Constr. Co., 21 Fed. Cas. No. 12,689, 7 Biss. 460); but they are rules of practice, and not of decision (The Selt, 21 Fed. Cas. No. 12,649, 3 Biss. 344). And rules for the government of said court and of subordinate courts are held to be unaffected by state legislation (Noonan v. Braley, 2 Black (U. S.) 499, 17 L. ed. 278); and said court may by rule regulate the manner of taking bail (Hudson v. Parker, 156 U. S. 277, 15 S. Ct. 450, 39 L. ed. 424).

Equity.— The supreme court has the power to prescribe the forms of writs and process and to regulate the whole practice in suits in equity in the circuit courts; hut any circuit court may, in any manner not inconsistent with any law of the United States or any rule prescribed hy the supreme court, regulate its own practice to advance justice. b. Forms of Action. The distinctions between law and equity are observed in the federal courts, notwithstanding state statutes relating either to the forms of procedure, to the joinder of legal and equitable causes of action, or to the litigation of matters of equity in an action at law; and the federal statute requiring conformity, etc., to state practice[40] does not render the adoption of such statutory provisions of the state necessary. The underlying, controlling, and constantly asserted principle being this, that the jurisdiction of a federal court of equity cannot be abridged by a state statute giving a remedy at law, even when such remedy is adequate and complete, there being no special ground for equitable interposition;[41] nor is the rule different because a suit has been removed from a state court.[42] The rule also precludes equitable defenses to actions at law.[43] The rule does not, however, prevent cognizance of remedies afforded by state courts.[44]

c. Course of Procedure — (i) General and Particular Rules. Whether a state mode of procedure must or will be followed or not in the federal court rests upon the nature and character of the remedy or cause of action, having in view the preceding principles and rules as well as the Revised Statutes of the United States,[45] and also the fact whether the state practice depends upon statute or is merely established by decision of the state supreme court as the proper mode

Ruling on rejection or admission of evidence is not reviewable either on writ of error or on appeal in equity under the rules of practice of the supreme court and of the circuit court of appeals, unless the record discloses the ruling and the taking of excep-

in trials at common law in the courts of the United States in all cases where they apply.[83]

b. Equity.[84] State laws do not constitute a rule of decision in the federal courts of equity.[85] Chancery may, however, administer an enlargement of equitable rights[86] and enforce and protect rights given by a state statute when such rights are properly the subject of an equity suit,[87] unless the same contravenes the distinction between law and equity in violation of the United States statutes.[88] And this is so, where such rights are peculiar to the law of the state where the federal courts are held.[89]

2. Decisions of State Courts as Authority — a. Generally.[95] Acts of a state court done in the exercise of its jurisdiction and not conflicting with the proper decrees and jurisdiction of the federal courts are valid and binding upon the latter.[96] Federal courts will also conform, on local laws, to the decisions of the state courts;[97] but this rule does not apply where the question raised is not one of local but of general law.[98]

b. Equity.[99] United States courts are not bound to follow the decisions of the state courts in cases depending upon the general principles of equity jurisprudence;[1] but such a decision sustaining a state statute, which is the basis of equity jurisdiction of a federal court, has been decided to be binding upon the latter.[2] It has also been determined that federal courts of equity as well as of law are bound to accept the exposition of law by the state courts governing the rights of parties.[3]

c. Criminal Law.[4] A decision by the judges of the highest state court, construing the state constitution, concludes the federal courts on habeas corpus, where the prisoner is not thereby deprived of any rights or privileges under the constitution of the United States.[5]

d. Construction of State Constitutions and Statutes — (i) Generally. The decision of the highest court of a state upon questions wholly of constitutional law arising under the constitution of that state binds the United States courts;[6]

When and where not applicable.— The rule established by the decisions of the supreme court, as to the effect of statutes of limitations in courts of equity, appears to be that in those states where the statutes of limitations are made applicable to suits in equity as well as to actions at law, where they embrace in terms the specific case, and in cases of concurrent jurisdiction, they are as obligatory, as such, upon the national courts of equity as they are upon the state court, and as they are in actions at law; and the courts of equity should act in obedience rather than upon analogy to them. But where they are not applicable to equity cases in the state courts, and there is not concurrent jurisdiction, and where the specific case is not covered in terms by the statute, then the time prescribed by the statute of limitations will ordinarily be applied by analogy, in accordance with the provisions most nearly analogous and applicable. f. Construction of Commercial or Other General Laws. If a question before the federal court depends upon principles of general jurisprudence, or rests upon general or general commercial law, the federal courts are not bound by state decisions;[26] but although such courts are not absolutely controlled by state decisions, yet they will give weight thereto if they are called upon to construe the general commercial law of a state upon a new question. They will also act upon principles of comity, to avoid conflict as far as possible, without sacrificing their own dignity, and in case of doubt may for the sake of harmony lean toward the views of the state court.[27]

g. Decision Without Judgment or Decree. A decision without judgment or decree has been decided to be binding upon the federal courts within the state.[28]

h. Inconsistent Decisions. The courts of the United States will follow the latest settled adjudications of the highest state court rather than the earlier ones, where there is any inconsistency between them, except in cases where rights have been acquired on the faith of the former ones, although it seems that they are not absolutely controlled even in such cases by the former decision. Nor are the federal courts necessarily bound to follow state decisions of an unsettled character, or adjudications which are but oscillations in the course of such judicial settlement, nor will they follow inconsistent state decisions at the sacrifice of justice and law.[29] If, however, the later state decision is under an amended statute radically departing from the prior one, the rule does not apply that federal courts will, in case of conflicting state decisions, follow the earlier one as to rights accruing thereunder.[30] Again if a state decision is rendered after the argument and before the decision in a federal court and appears to be in plain conflict with the weight of authority and distinctly inconsistent with previous decisions in said state the United States court of appeals is not bound to yield its own opinion thereto.[31] Nor need the federal court follow a state decision declaring a state law unconstitutional, where said decision is opposed to repeated decisions on other laws involving the same principle and to the unanimous decisions of courts of other states in analogous cases.[32]

In case of conflict between the federal and state decisions upon a question of commercial law, federal courts will follow a state court to avoid double payment by a party of the same debt, without the possibility of relief from the federal courts. Sonstiby v. Keeley, 7 Fed. 447, 2 McCrary 103.

If the law of a territory before its division continues in force in the several states carved therefrom, and is variously interpreted in such state, the federal court will adopt the interpretation of the highest court of the state in

i. Federal Decision Prior to State Decision. Inasmuch as it is within the peculiar province of state courts to determine the construction of their own constitutions and laws, the federal courts have at least, so it is decided, great reluctance in breaking the way in the exposition of such constitutions and statutes, and will not do so except when really necessary.[33] The courts of the United States have therefore for these and similar reasons[34] given precedence, upon questions of the above character, to the decisions of the highest courts of a state over their own prior decisions in conflict therewith,[35] although this rule does not include judgments of territorial courts in mere matters of procedure.[36] Nor will a state decision be followed where it will render invalid contract rights determined to be valid under a previous decision of the supreme court of the United States.[37] Nor in the administration of state laws between citizens of different states will the federal courts, in reviewing the judgment of the circuit court, be bound by the ruling of a state court made after the federal decision.[38] There are also other exceptions and decisions not in accord with the above general rule as to the preference given to state decisions.[39]

j. Postponement Pending Decision in State Court. The federal court will not on motion, it is decided, postpone the trial to await a state supreme court decision if it is not clear that the point involved will be determined in the latter suit, and it is uncertain when it will be decided, and this is so where there is doubt as to the mode of raising the question.[40]

In a proceeding begun in a state court to recover a legacy by a remedy given by the state statute, it will be held by the federal court to which it has been removed, in conformity to the decisions of the state courts, that a claim barred by the statute of limitations cannot be set off against such legacy. Wilson v. Smith, 117 Fed. 707.

State decision as to the prerequisites to the removal of a suit does not bind the federal court where the question is one of construction of a federal statute. Egan v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 53 Fed. 675.

Upon an action removed to a federal court because of a federal question, the state court judgment does not deprive the federal court of jurisdiction or remove consideration of the laws of the United States as elements of decision. Consolidated Wyoming Gold Min. Co. v. Champion Min. Co., 62 Fed. 945.

Where the action is one at law, although equitable relief might be granted if complaint were properly framed, and though the suit is governed by the practice of the trial court on the removal of the cause from the state court, wherein distinctions between law and equity are to some extent obliterated, yet in the federal court the cause must be determined by the principles of common law, notwithstanding plaintiff might have had relief in the state court. of final judgment;[95] to appeal;[96] and to exemptions from execution.[97] But a defense, under a state anti-trust act, is not available, although the right to rely thereon was not questioned in the state court.[98]

G. Supreme Court — 1. Original Jurisdiction and Procedure in Exercise Thereof — a. In General. The original jurisdiction which is conferred upon the supreme court is limited, and it is intended that it should be sparingly exercised and not extended by construction.[99] Nor in those cases where such jurisdiction is given can it be exercised in its appellate form.[1] Again the supreme court may assume the original jurisdiction conferred upon it without any act of congress regulating the mode and form in which it should be exercised.[2]

b. In Prize Cases. No original jurisdiction is conferred upon the supreme court in prize cases; it can only exercise appellate jurisdiction.[3]

c. In Actions in Which a State Is a Party.[4] The original jurisdiction conferred upon the supreme court of controversies between a state and citizens of another state[5] may be exercised by such court under the authority conferred by the constitution and existing acts of congress.[6] And such jurisdiction rests solely upon the character of the parties, and not upon the nature of the case;[7] and a state must be a party either nominally or substantially.[8]

Extent of jurisdiction.— The original jurisdiction of the supreme court does not embrace the determination of political questions. Louisiana v. Texas, 176 U. S. 1, 20 S. Ct. 251, 44 L. ed. 347. Nor does it extend to a suit brought by a state against a citizen of another state with whom is joined a citizen of the state bringing the action. California v. Southern Pac. Co., 157 U. S. 229, 15 S. Ct. 591, 39 L. ed. 683 [following Pennsylvania v. Quicksilver Min. Co., 10 Wall. (U. S.) 553, 19 L. ed. 998]. Nor can an original bill by one state against another be maintained as against a health officer of the latter state alone, on the theory that his conduct is in violation or in excess of a valid law of the state when there is no refusal of the state authorities to fulfil their duty in regard to a remedy. Louisiana v. Texas, 176 U. S. 1, 20 S. Ct. 251, 44 L. ed. 347. But a suit by a state to enjoin the erection of a bridge over a river is within the original jurisdiction of such court. Pennsylvania v. Wheeling, etc., Bridge Co., 9 How. (U. S.) 647, 13 L. ed. 294.

An original suit to determine a controversy as to a boundary line between states brought either by the United States or by a state against another state is within the jurisdiction of the supreme court. d. In Actions Affecting Consuls.[9] In actions affecting consuls, although the supreme court is given original jurisdiction it does not possess exclusive jurisdiction.[10]

e. Issuance of Writs — (I) HABEAS CORPUS.[11] The supreme court cannot isue any writ of habeas corpus except when necessary for the exercise of jurisdiction, original or appellate, which is given to it by the constitution or laws of the United States.[12]

(II) MANDAMUS.[13] By the judicial act power was conferred upon the supreme court to issue a mandamus to an inferior court to sign a bill of exceptions in a case tried before such court.[14] The discretion of the circuit court, however, cannot be controlled by the supreme court by a writ of mandamus;[15] nor can the latter court review by mandamus the judicial action of the circuit court of appeals in the exercise of its legitimate jurisdiction;[16] nor can it, on an application for such a writ, determine whether the power of a district judge in removing a clerk of the latter court has been abused or exercise in any way control over the appointment or removal of such clerk.[17] And it has no jurisdiction either original or appellate to issue a mandamus to persons holding office under the authority of the United States.[18]

(III) PROHIBITION.[19] Prohibition cannot be issued by the supreme court where there is no appellate power given by law or any special authority to issue the writ.[20]

f. Practice and Proceedings in Equity.[21] The supreme court will frame its proceedings in cases of original jurisdiction according to those which have been adopted in the English courts in similar cases, and the rules of court in chancery should govern in conducting the case to a final issue.[22]

g. Expiration of Term. Where an application for an order for the identification and restoration of the boundary line between two states was made in pursuance of a decree in respect to such line which gave permission to file the application during the term, but the consideration was postponed to the next term when the motion was denied, it was determined that another application at a subsequent term could not be entertained, as the power of the court ceased with the expiration of the term at which the motion was denied, the denial of the application, however, being without prejudice to the filing of a new bill or petition for the purpose stated.[23]

h. Dismissal For Want of Necessary Parties.[24] It has been determined that a case will be dismissed where there are absent parties who cannot be made parties to the suit without ousting the jurisdiction of the court.[25]

i. Process and Appearance.[26] In a suit by one state against another service of process of the court on the governor and attorney-general of the defendant state sixty days before the return-day of the process was declared to be sufficient.[27] Again in a action against a state the filing of a demurrer to the complainant's bill by the attorney-general of the state may be an appearance and compliance with an order giving such state leave to appear and answer the bill.[28] And it has been determined that where a defendant state appears and pleads voluntarily, she does not thereby conclude herself, but may on motion be allowed to withdraw her appearance.[29]

2. Appellate Jurisdiction and Procedure in General[30]— a. Source and Extent of — (i) In General. All appellate jurisdiction of the supreme court not expressly conferred is by implication denied by the judiciary act of 1789 which affirmatively described such jurisdiction.[31] And such powers as are given by the constitution are limited and regulated by acts of congress[32] and must be exercised

(II) A Pecuniary Limit. A pecuniary limit was not imposed by the act of congress of March 3, 1891, upon the appellate jurisdiction of the supreme court over appeals from a circuit or district court.[34]

(III) In Criminal Cases.[35] No general authority is conferred upon the supreme court to review on error or appeal any judgment rendered in a criminal case, whether it be in the circuit or district courts or in the supreme courts of the territories or the District of Columbia, and an intention to confer such jurisdiction should be expressed in explicit terms.[36]

(IV) In Prize Cases. The supreme court, prior to the passage of the act of March 3, 1863, had no appellate jurisdiction in prize cases except where they were removed to this court by appeal from the circuit court.[37]

(V) Habeas Corpus[38]—(A) In General. It was early determined by the supreme court that it had authority to issue the writ of habeas corpus ad subjiciendum where a person was in jail under the warrant or authority of any other court of the United States;[39] and in such a case the exercise of the appellate jurisdiction of this court is involved.[40] Again it is declared that the supreme court may in the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction, by the writ of habeas corpus aided by the writ of certiorari, revise the decision of the circuit court in all cases[41] where the latter court has in the exercise of its original jurisdiction

Limitations under act of 1789.—It has been declared, however, that the jurisdiction and power of the supreme court in respect to habeas corpus as limited by the judicature act of 1789 did not extend to cases of imprisonment after conviction under sentences of competent tribunals nor to prisoners in jail, unless in custody under or by color of authority of the United States or committed for trial before some court of the United States or required to be brought to court to testify. (B) Nature of Right of Appeal. In habeas corpus cases it has been decided that the right of appeal to the supreme court under the Revised Statutes[44] is absolute and is not dependent upon the discretion of the judge to allow or refuse.[45]

(C) May Be Referred to the Court by a Justice. Where a person under a conviction of the circuit court makes an application for discharge from imprisonment by habeas corpus, and the writ is returnable before a justice of the supreme court, such justice may refer it to the court for determination, as it is a case which involves its appellate jurisdiction.[46]

(D) Admission to Bail.[47] It was intended by congress that in case of a crime not capital it should be bailable of right before conviction, and any justice of the supreme court having power to allow the writ of error, to issue the citation, to take the security required by law, and to grant a supersedeas, has authority, incidental to this power, to order plaintiff to be admitted to bail independent of any rule of court on the subject.[48]

(VI) Mode of Bringing Case Before the Court—(A) In General. The supreme court will not take cognizance of a case which is not brought before it by regular process of law.[49] And under the judiciary act of 1789 any case which was removed to this court from the circuit court must have been removed by writ of error.[50] Under the act, however, of March, 1803, appeals were substituted in place of writs of error in certain cases,[51] the removal of causes, however, being subject to the same rules, regulations, and restrictions as controlled writs of error under the judiciary act of 1789, except that a citation was not required where the appeal was prayed at the same term in which the decree was announced.[52] Again under a more recent act which authorized suits against the United States, it has been determined that if the case is one at law it will be reviewed by the supreme court on a writ of error, but if the suit is in equity or admiralty that it will be reviewed on appeal.[53] Under a later act, however, it is decided that the review of a judgment of conviction of an infamous crime by appeal instead of by writ of error is not authorized by such act.[54]

(B) From Territorial Courts. The statute which provides that "the appellate jurisdiction of the supreme court of the United States over the judgments and decrees of territorial courts in cases of trial by jury shall be exercised by writ of error and in all other cases by appeal" is applicable alike to all territorial courts without regard to whether the distinction had been abolished between suits at law and in equity.[55]

(VII) TRANSFER OF CAUSE — (A) Proceedings For. The clerk of the circuit court where the judgment was rendered was given power by the acts of 1789 and of 1792 to issue a writ of error, and the judges of such court had power to sign the citation and approve the bond,[56] and under the act of 1838 the same power was conferred upon the clerk and judge of the supreme court of a territory;[57] but it was decided in an early case that on return of the writ the original citation subscribed by the judge should also be returned.[58]

(B) Proceedings in Lower Court After Transfer. After an appeal to the supreme court from a decree in the circuit court of which a review is sought, the latter court may take cognizance of a bill of review which is brought on a newly discovered state of facts and may permit such a bill to be filed as an amendment by adding new matter and parties to the original record, although it is declared that such procedure is not permissible where the bill is brought for an error apparent in the body of the decree.[59] And pending an appeal from the circuit court to the supreme court it has been decided that the circuit court may pass orders for the preservation of the property which is the subject of the litigation.[60]

(VIII) EFFECT OF CONSENT OF PARTIES. The jurisdiction of the supreme court to affirm or reverse a judgment of an inferior or state court is dependent upon the constitution and the acts of congress, and cannot be conferred by agreement of the parties alone.[61]

(IX) RECORD. There can be no review on a writ of error of an error in law which does not appear upon the record or by a bill of exceptions made part of the record.[62] And where on an appeal from the supreme court of a territory[63] no statement of the facts is presented in the record, and the record does not show whether the facts found were sufficient to sustain the judgment rendered, and there were no exceptions taken to the rulings in the admission or rejection of evidence, no question is presented to the court for review.[64]

(X) PREFERRING OR ADVANCING CAUSES. The supreme court will not advance for a hearing in preference to other suits on the calendar a cause which merely involves private interests.[65] By an act of congress, however,[66] it is provided that certain cases involving the revenue laws of a state may be given priority over other cases.[67] But in the case of a motion to advance a criminal

(xii) Determination and Disposition of Cause. The supreme court may dispose of all the questions in a case of which it has acquired jurisdiction on the ground that the constitutionality of a law of the United States is drawn in question;[71] but after it has once reviewed a case and has remanded it to the subordinate court only the proceedings subsequent to the mandate will be reviewed on a second appeal or writ of error.[72]

b. Effect of Act Creating Circuit Courts of Appeals Upon Review of Decisions of Other Courts — (I) In General. By the act of congress which established the circuit courts of appeals[77] jurisdiction of any direct appeal or writ of error from the circuit or district courts could not be entertained by the supreme court except in certain cases provided for in section 5 of such act, which included those of a conviction for a capital or otherwise infamous crime,[78] and certain designated cases in habeas corpus proceedings,[79] and except in those cases where the cause was pending at the date of the act and the appeal was allowed or the writ of error sued out prior to July 1, 1891.[80] And by this act the supreme court was deprived of its appellate jurisdiction in those cases where the jurisdiction of the federal courts depended upon diverse citizenship,[81] although as to pending cases and those in which the appeal or error should be allowed before July 1, 1891, jurisdiction was preserved.[82] And that part of the act in reference to interstate commerce which gave the interstate commerce commission a summary proceeding in the circuit court to enforce its orders was also repealed in respect to that part which allowed an appeal direct to the supreme court where the matter in dispute exceeded two thousand dollars, and under the repealing act appeal should be taken to the circuit court of appeals.[83] Again where the record does not show that certain questions were raised in the court below and rulings were asked thereon an assignment of errors cannot be availed of so as to import such questions in the cause and give jurisdiction to the supreme court under this act.[84]

(II) Constitutional Questions. Under the act creating circuit courts of appeals it was determined that a case which involved the constitutionality of a law of the United States[85] might be taken direct to the supreme court,

85. When appeal not authorized.— But under this act which permits an appeal to the supreme court where the case involves the construction or application of the constitution of the United States an appeal to the supreme court is not authorized in the case of a refusal of a circuit court to issue a writ of habeas corpus, on the theory that the court making the commitment was without jurisdiction and therefore the person was deprived of his liberty without due process of law, and that the construction of the constitution is involved. Ex p. Lennon, 150 U. S. 393, 14 S. Ct. 123, 37 L. ed. 1120. Nor is such an appeal authorized where the only contention is that the foreclosure decree which is sought to be set aside deprives the complainants of their property without due process of law because of fraud, irregularities, and jurisdictional defects. Carey v. Houston, etc., R. Co., 150 U. S. 170, 14 S. Ct. 63, 37 L. ed. 1041. And a party is not entitled to bring a case direct to the supreme court by reason of the fact that the circuit court directed the jury to return a verdict for the

although the appeal was taken after the act creating the former court took effect.[86]

(III) JURISDICTIONAL QUESTIONS. By the judiciary act of 1891 it was provided that on an appeal or writ of error under section 5 of that act, in any case in which the jurisdiction of the court is in issue, the question of jurisdiction alone shall be certified to the supreme court from the court below for decision.[87]

(IV) CONSTRUCTION OF TREATY.[88] The introduction of a treaty with a foreign state and an award merely as part of the history of the case in an action to recover a percentage of the award for services in procuring the same does not involve the validity or construction of the treaty so as to authorize a review by the supreme court.[89]

(V) COPYRIGHT CASES.[90] An appeal will not lie from the circuit court to the supreme court in a copyright case, which may be appealed from the circuit court of appeals, merely because the decree of such court affirming a decision of the circuit court has been made a decree of the latter court by the form of its entry.[91]

c. Review of Decisions — (I) OF CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS — (A) In General. A decree or a judgment of the circuit court of appeals is by the act of 1891 made final in many cases so that no appeal will lie therefrom to the supreme court;[92] as where the case was one dependent entirely upon the opposite parties to the suit or controversy being citizens of different states,[93] one arising under the revenue opposite party, and that he was thus deprived of his right of trial by the jury, and that therefore the construction or application of the constitution of the United States is involved. Treat Mfg. Co. v. Standard Steel, etc., Co., 157 U. S. 674, 15 S. Ct. 718, 39 L. ed. 853.

(1901) pp. 549, 550]), is not reviewable by the supreme court of the United States on writ of error, although the suit involves constitutional rights, and therefore might have been brought directly from the circuit court to the supreme court. Nor will a judgment of the circuit court of appeals be held final on such ground where it is claimed, and both courts dealt with the controversy on the assumption, that it turned on a construction of the laws of the United States. Florida Cent., etc., R. Co. v. Bell, 176 U. S. 321, 20 S. Ct. 399, 44 L. ed. 486 [reversing 87 Fed. 369, 31 C. C. A. 9].

laws[94] or under the patent laws,[95] or where the case is one in admiralty.[96] And where an action to recover damages for the infringement of a copyright is maintained wholly upon the right given by the common law and no right is claimed under the copyright laws of the United States, the supreme court cannot upon a writ of error review the action of the circuit court of appeals affirming a judgment of the circuit court rendered in such suit.[97] Nor will an appeal lie from a decree affirming an interlocutory order of the circuit court granting a temporary injunction.[98] But a decision is not final in this sense in case of an infamous crime.[99] Nor is a judgment of affirmance in an action against a receiver of a national bank, the action being one arising under the laws of the United States.[1] And where an application is made for a writ of error to review a judgment at law in the circuit court of appeals, a circuit judge in passing thereon must exercise the powers of that court.[2] And where a circuit court of appeals dismissed for want of jurisdiction a case in which its judgment is final its decision may be reviewed by the supreme court on certiorari.[3]

(B) Certification of Questions. The circuit court of appeals may certify a case to the supreme court for its opinion.[4]

(C) Certiorari. The judiciary act of 1891 conferred upon the supreme court power to review on a writ of certiorari judgments or decrees of the circuit court of appeals which are thereby made final.[5]

(II) OF CIRCUIT COURTS—(A) In General. In order to sustain a direct appeal to the supreme court from the circuit court under the act of 1891,[6] the question raised must be real and must present controversies which are substantial both from the nature of the principles invoked and the relation to them of the party by whom they are invoked.[7] And if a writ of error from the supreme court to a circuit court is taken while there is pending a prior writ to such court from the circuit court of appeals, that from the supreme court will be dismissed.[8]

Effect of.—Any action which might be taken by the circuit court of appeals in a case decided by it or which might be taken by the trial court in obedience to its mandate is by the award of a certiorari in such cause thereby suspended. (B) Where Jurisdiction Is Involved. There may be a direct appeal to the supreme court from a circuit court where the jurisdiction of the latter court is in issue;[9] but an appeal cannot be sustained on this ground where the question does not involve the jurisdiction of a circuit court as a federal court,[10] or where the decision is that the circuit court is unable to grant relief because of judgments by the state court.[11]

(C) Criminal Cases. A direct appeal to the supreme court is allowed in cases of conviction of a capital crime.[12]

(D) Construction or Application of the Constitution. A case may be taken directly to the supreme court where it involves the construction or application of the constitution of the United States.[13] And the jurisdiction of such court is not dependent on the question whether the right claimed under the constitution has been upheld or denied in the circuit court, nor is it limited to the constitutional question, but includes the entire case.[14]

Decisions as to right of appeal in such case. — The question whether regulations of the treasury department adopted by merely executive officers are to be regarded as having the force of law under the constitution involves its construction and application and is reviewable (Boske v. Comingore, 177 U. cuit court of appeals on the whole case the right of a defendant to a decision by the supreme court on direct appeal will be considered as waived.[16]

(F) Constitution or Law of a State in Contravention of Constitution of United States. The judiciary act of 1891[17] provided also for direct appeal to the supreme court in an action in which "the constitution or law of a state is claimed to be in contravention of the constitution of the United States."[18]

(III) Of District Courts. The supreme court has jurisdiction of an appeal from any final sentence and decree in prize cases without regard to the amount in dispute, and no certificate of the district judge as to the importance of the particular case is necessary.[19] Questions of jurisdiction are also reviewable in the supreme court by writ of error;[20] and likewise a conviction for a capital crime.[21] And an appeal, and not a writ of error, is authorized by the act of 1891[22] from a decision denying an application for a discharge upon a writ of habeas corpus where the construction of an extradition treaty is involved.[23]

(IV) Of Territorial Courts[24]—(A) Questions Reviewable. By the act of congress of 1885[25] it was provided that appeals might be taken to the supreme court of the United States from the territorial supreme courts in those cases in which the matter in dispute was money or some right ascertainable in money, provided the amount in controversy was in excess of a specific sum,[26] or in those

The decisions not reviewable under this provision include those where the issues involve the regularity of the tax, the sum of penalties due, and the extent of a lien given by the territorial law (Maricopa, etc., R. Co. v. Arizona, 156 U. S. 347, 15 S. Ct. 391, 39 L. ed. 447), or where the judgment involves merely the construction of an act of congress and the scope of the authority conferred on the territorial legislature (Linford v. Ellison, 155 U. S. 503, 15 S. Ct. 179, 39 L. ed. 239). And it has been decided that the validity of a statute is not involved within the meaning of this act so as to allow an appeal in the case of a proceeding which is in the nature of a quo warranto to determine the title to an office under a territorial statute which is declared to be void as in conflict with the organic act of the territory. In construing this act it has been determined that the clause "involving the constitutionality or validity of any legislation" should be read as preceded by a comma and as applying to both classes of cases previously enumerated and that the supreme court is limited to a determination of the constitutionality or validity of the legislation involved. Effect of transfer from territorial to state court.—That a case in which a judgment was rendered in a state court was transferred to such court from the territorial supreme court

(D) Scope and Extent of Review. Upon a review of a judgment in a case not tried by a jury and taken by appeal from the supreme court of a territory, the United States supreme court is restricted to an inquiry whether the findings of fact made by the court below support its judgment and to a review of exceptions duly taken to rulings on the admission or rejection of evidence.[32] And where there are no findings of fact the supreme court will assume that a judgment rendered by a territorial court on a trial without a jury was justified by the evidence.[33]

(V) Of Court of Claims. The supreme court in certain cases has jurisdiction of appeals from a judgment of the court of claims,[34] which can only be taken in the manner prescribed by the rules of the former court.[35] The judgment and from which a writ of error would have lain to the United States supreme court is no ground for a writ of error to the latter court from such judgment. Hamilton v. Kneeland, 1 Nev. 60; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Holmes, 155 U. S. 137, 15 S. Ct. 28, 39 L. ed. 99.

discretion of the court of claims in respect to the admissibility or sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict is absolute, and questions of this character cannot be reviewed by the supreme court.[36]

(VI) Of Military Tribunal. A military tribunal is not a court within the meaning of that word as used in the judiciary act of 1789,[37] and the supreme court has no jurisdiction to review by certiorari the proceedings of such a tribunal ordered by a general officer of the United States army, commanding a military department.[38]

(VII) Of State Courts—(A) Source and Extent of Power—(1) Constitutional and Statutory Provisions. It has been decided that the state courts are not within the application of the constitutional provision[39] conferring appellate jurisdiction upon the supreme court, and that such jurisdiction only extends to the inferior courts designated in the preceding section.[40] By the judiciary act of 1789,[41] however, the supreme court has appellate jurisdiction to review decisions of a state court of last resort in certain specified cases, which involve the validity or effect of the constitution, a statute or a treaty of, or authority exercised under, the United States;[42] and the appellate power which is conferred upon the supreme court by this provision is supported both by the letter and spirit of the constitution.[43]

(3) What Courts' Decisions Are Reviewable. The jurisdiction of the supreme court under this provision is limited to a review of the judgments of the highest court of a state in which a decision could be had.[47] The highest court, however, within the meaning of the act, may be a lower court whose judgment has by the laws of the state been made final in that class of cases.[48]

Judgment "contrary to law."— The ground assigned in a motion for a new trial, that the judgment is "contrary to law" is not of itself sufficient to authorize a review by the supreme court on a writ of error, where it does not appear from the record that any federal rights were asserted or in issue and necessarily determined. or claimed by either party thereunder.[54] And a decision of a state court which involves no federal question of law,[55] but a mere inference of fact from the evidence, is not subject to review by the supreme court on a writ of error;[56] nor is it any foundation for a writ of error that the jurisdiction of the state court was objected to on the untenable ground that exclusive jurisdiction of that class of cases was conferred on the federal courts.[57]

(2) PARTICULAR CLASSES OF DECISIONS REVIEWABLE — (a) IN GENERAL. The supreme court has been called upon, in the exercise of the power which it possesses to review the decisions of a state court, to review such decisions where it appeared that rights under a treaty were involved;[58] where it appeared that the constitutional amendment that no person shall be deprived, by a state, of his life or property without due process of law was involved;[59] where it appeared that

It is essential to the jurisdiction of the supreme court in such cases that it should appear from the record that the right was specifically claimed, or that it be distinctly deducible therefrom that there was a definite issue as to the possession of such right (Capital Nat. Bank v. Cadiz First Nat. Bank, 172 U. S 425, 19 S. Ct. 202, 43 L. ed. 502 [affirming 49 Nebr. 795, 69 N. W. 1151]. See also Zadig v. Baldwin, 166 U. S. 485, 17 S. proper effect as an estoppel does not present a federal question reviewable by the supreme court.[83]

(f) Cruel and Excessive Punishment. A decision of the highest court in New York state that the punishment of death by electricity, as provided by the law of such state,[84] is not a cruel and unusual punishment within the meaning of the constitution of that state,[85] is not a decision which is reviewable by the supreme court;[86] nor is the determination of its courts that the provision of its laws as to solitary confinement prior to execution[87] is not a punishment of this character reviewable;[88] and the supreme court will not interfere with the decision of a state court that a writ of habeas corpus will not lie in behalf of a convicted prisoner, who has been sentenced in excess of the maximum punishment fixed by the laws of the state.[89]

(g) Suit by Indian Tribe in State Court. No federal question is involved by a decision that where an Indian tribe has availed itself of the privilege, given by a statute of a state, to sue in its tribal name in the state courts, it is bound by the statutory limitation as to the time when the suit must be brought.[90]

(c) Procedure, Record, and Review — (1) Right of Review. Where a federal question is clearly raised a writ of error will not be dismissed merely because the claim by which it is presented is not well founded.[91] But no appeal will lie to the supreme court from a decision of a state court as to a federal statute where the decision is in accordance with the appellant's construction.[92] And a decision as to a right or an immunity claimed under a United States statute will not be reviewed unless the right or immunity is one in the plaintiff in error.[93]

(2) Federal Question Must Be Real and Not Fictitious. In order that the supreme court may have jurisdiction to review a judgment of a state court there must be a real and not a fictitious federal question involved.[94]

(3) Manner and Time of Raising Federal Question. It is essential to the jurisdiction of the supreme court to review a decision of a state court that a federal question should have been actually raised in the latter court,[95] and no jurisdiction exists where it was not raised until after final judgment and in the petition for the writ of error,[96] or in a petition for a rehearing after a judgment in the highest state court.[97] The supreme court may, however, on a writ of error review a question which is raised in the supreme court of a state and there decided on its merits, and not on the ground that it was not raised in the lower court;[98] and the supreme court will review a question, although it was not put in issue by the pleadings nor directly passed upon in the opinion, where it is apparent both from the pleadings and the record that the decision in the state court could not have been reached except by disposing of the federal question.[99]

action for a writ of error is not allowable as a matter of right, but its allowance is to be determined by the court from an examination of the record.[1]

(b) To What Court Directed. A writ of error should be directed to the court in which the decision was rendered.[2]

(c) Limitation of Time. It has been determined that a limitation by statute of a certain time within which writs of error to circuit and district courts must be brought applies also to state courts.[3]

(d) Effect of Writ of Error. By a writ of error the jurisdiction of the state courts is suspended until it is again restored by some act of the supreme court itself.[4]

bb. Limited by Record in Determining Jurisdiction. Nothing outside of the record can be taken into consideration in determining whether the supreme court has jurisdiction to review a decision of a state court.[8] If, however, the grounds of a decision given by the highest state court are not shown by the record of such court, the record of the proceedings of the inferior court may be considered in connection therewith in order to ascertain the grounds of such decision.[9] And the opinion of the highest court may be examined where by statute all decisions of such court are required to be in writing stating the grounds of the decision and to be recorded.[10]

cc. Dismissal For Failure to Show Jurisdiction. The supreme court will dismiss an appeal or writ of error where it does not appear from the record that a question of the nature required to give it jurisdiction was involved.[11]

(b) Effect of Assignment of Error. If the record fails to show that a federal question has been raised an assignment of errors cannot be availed of to import such a question into the cause.[12]

(c) Certificate of Presiding Justice. A certificate of the chief justice of the highest court of the state that a federal question was raised and determined is not of itself sufficient to give jurisdiction to the supreme court to review a decision on a writ of error,[13] although it may be considered for the purpose of rendering a federal question, which is raised on the record in general and indefinite terms, more certain and specific.[14]

(6) Decision of Question Other Than Federal Question. No jurisdiction exists in the supreme court to review a judgment of a state court, unless it is shown by the record either affirmatively or by fair implication that a federal question necessary to the determination of the cause is involved;[15] and a judgment of a state court will not be reviewed merely because a federal question may have been raised and decided, where it appears that the determination, not federal, was involved in such decision, which is sufficient in itself to sustain the judgment.[16]

(7) Scope and Extent of Review — (a) In General. Where a case is removed to the supreme court by a writ of error to the highest state court the former court is authorized to determine all questions as to its jurisdiction and as to the form of the writ, the parties, citation, and service or otherwise.[17] But the supreme court is confined on an appeal from the state court to an examination of the right, title, claim, or exemption set up by the party as depending on the construction of the law or treaty of the United States under which it is set up.[18]

(b) Questions of Law and of Fact. Questions of law as distinguished from questions of fact, so far as they are necessarily involved in the judgment of a state court against the validity of an authority claimed by the defendants under the United States, should be reviewed by the supreme court whether the questions depend on the United States constitution, laws, or treaties or on the local law, or on principles of general jurisprudence.[19] Questions of fact are not reviewable by the supreme court on a writ of error to a state court.[20]

(8) Determination and Disposition of Cause.[21] The supreme court may, where the statutes and practice of a state provide that an appellate court of such state may, on reviewing a judgment of the court below, render such a judgment as should have been rendered by that court, on reversing the decision of the appellate court, enter a judgment finally disposing of the case;[22] and it has been decided that the decision of the supreme court in a case brought before it from the state court will be the binding law of the case.[23] Again, where it appears that the assignments of error are frivolous[24] and the court is convinced that the

Act[32] extends to "all cases other than those provided for in the preceding section[33] of this act, unless otherwise provided by law."[34] The effect of this enactment was to distribute the entire appellate jurisdiction, and to vest in the circuit courts of appeals so much thereof as was not thereby vested in the supreme court, while the words, "unless otherwise provided by law," do not refer merely to prior laws, but were intended to guard against implied repeals.[35] Said appellate courts are also, in respect to the review of judgments by writs of error and bills of exceptions, controlled exclusively by the acts of congress and the rules and practice of the United States courts without regard to state statutes or practice.[36] And they cannot review judgments of a state supreme court.[37] Nor is the right to an appeal or writ of error an unqualified one, since there is an implied power and duty to refuse applications therefor in some cases.[38]

b. Jurisdictional Questions. Although an appeal does not lie to the federal circuit court of appeals, in cases in which the jurisdiction of the court below is alone in issue and the decision is upon that point,[39] nevertheless, if other questions are involved sufficient to confer jurisdiction upon said court, within the intent of the act of 1891, the fact that an issue as to the jurisdiction of the circuit court is also raised is not exclusive.[40] Nor does the fact that a question of jurisdiction of the circuit court is before the supreme court on a writ of error preclude the circuit court of appeals from entertaining a writ of error to review an order, made after entry of the judgment, denying a new trial claimed under a state statute.[41] Again the circuit court of appeals has power to reverse on a writ of error the judgment of the circuit court, if the record fails to show the requisite diversity of citizenship[42] or jurisdictional facts.[43] And it seems that a party may appeal at his election upon the question of jurisdiction alone to the supreme court, and he may take the whole case to the circuit court of appeals.[44]

c. Capital Crime — Infamous Crime. Appeals or writs of error may be taken from the district or circuit courts to the proper circuit court of appeal in cases of an infamous crime not capital.[45] The circuit court of appeals has no jurisdiction in a case of conviction of a capital crime, but the test of its jurisdiction is the penalty which may be and not that which actually is imposed. If the crime is punishable with death and there is a conviction, it is a case of conviction of a capital crime.[46]

Jurisdictional question must actually exist to deprive the circuit court of jurisdiction. It is not sufficient that there is a mere denial of the right of the plaintiff to the judgment entered in his favor, or that there is an allegation that the judgment is erroneous. d. Constitutional Questions. Although such constitutional questions as come clearly within the purview of section 5 of the act of 1891 are not within the jurisdiction of the federal circuit court of appeals,[47] it being also so decided, even though a consideration of other questions is involved,[48] still that court has assumed jurisdiction to decide the whole case in the first instance, where it is one of considerable importance, involving a constitutional question and its dismissal would cause a delay of years.[49] Nor is it sufficient to defeat the jurisdiction of said court that the constitutional question might have been raised by the defeated party,[50] or that a question as to the construction or application of the constitution of the United States arose incidentally in the trial of the action in the circuit court.[51] Nor is said appellate court prevented from assuming jurisdiction on the ground that the federal constitution is involved, where such claim would only arise in case the state statute was passed in violation of the state constitution, when it would be invalid without reference to the constitutional question raised.[52] Nor is said jurisdiction excluded by an issue whether due force and effect has been given to a judgment or decree of another state;[53] or by the fact that one of the defenses is the unconstitutionality of an ordinance, where such jurisdiction rests upon the question of diverse citizenship and not on any other ground.[54] Again it is decided that an appeal may be taken to the supreme court upon a constitutional question, and also one to the circuit court of appeals upon questions there appealable, for a party is not put to an election of remedies; but the latter court will continue the cause to await the decision of the supreme court.[55]

e. Patent, Revenue, and Admiralty Causes. Under the provisions of section 6 of the act of 1891 the circuit court of appeals has appellate jurisdiction in all cases arising under the patent laws,[56] and in cases under the revenue laws.[57]

Co., 168 U. S. 583, 18 S. Ct. 177, 42 L. ed. 589), or even though such appeal raises only the question of such jurisdiction (Lake Nat. Bank v. Wolfeborough Sav. Bank, 78 Fed. 517, 24 C. C. A. 195. But see supra, XII, H, 4, b. A jurisdictional question may, however, be left until the final decree below, so that the parties if they desire may take it direct to the supreme court (Carson v. Combe, 86 Fed. 202, 29 C. C. A. 660); or the circuit court of appeals may also, where the question is raised whether the cause is one of equitable cognizance, dissolve the injunction and dismiss the bill, said court being of opinion that equity has no jurisdiction (Green v. Mills, 69 Fed. 852, 16 C. C. A. 516, 30 L. R. A. 90). Again the action of the appellate court in discharging the receiver and restoring the property, even though erroneous, constitutes no ground for interference by the supreme court, by mandamus. American Constr. Co. v. Jacksonville, etc., R. Co., 148 U. S. 372, 13 S. Ct. 758, 37 L. ed. 486. Said circuit court of appeals may also affirm an order granting an injunction in one case, and an order refusing one in another, on substantially the same evidence, the matter being one of judicial discretion and not involving the exercise of exact legal judgment below. Société Anonyme, etc. v. Allen, 90 Fed. 815, 33 C. C. A. 282. Jurisdiction also exists in said court, in case of an appeal from an order granting an injunction, even though an amended bill raises a constitutional question. Stafford v. King, 90 Fed. 136, 32 C. C. A. 536. See supra, XII, H, 4, d.

Appeal will not lie from an order appointing a receiver, although it contains a mandatory direction, in the nature of an injunction, to deliver property to the receiver (Highland or continuing such injunction or appointing such receiver to the circuit court of appeals. If appeal is not taken within the prescribed statutory time it should be dismissed,[61] the only remedy in such case being by appeal after final decree. An appeal will not lie from an order denying a motion, thereafter made, to dissolve the injunction.[62]

6. Time For Appeal or Review. The judiciary act of 1891 limits the time within which appeals or writs of error shall be sued out, and this requirement is obligatory and said court has not jurisdiction where the enactment is not complied with.[63]

7. Proceedings For Appeal, Etc.—Power to Issue Writs. The jurisdiction of the circuit court of appeals as to the proceedings for appeal or writ of error for review, and as to the issuance of writs generally, as well as the power of its judges in the premises, is established and limited by the judiciary act of 1891, which must be complied with.[64] The sections, however, of said enactment are not infrequently interdependent or dependent upon other acts of congress.

Co., 81 Fed. 924, 27 C. C. A. 4); from an order dismissing an application to set aside an injunction (Heinze v. Butte, etc., Consol. Min. Co., 107 Fed. 165, 46 C. C. A. 219); from a decree refusing to dissolve, discharge, or vacate an injunction (Rowan v. Ide, 107 Fed. 161, 46 C. C. A. 214); from an order, in a cause involving questions of which said court would have no jurisdiction on an appeal from the final decree (Macon v. Georgia Packing Co., 60 Fed. 781, 9 C. C. A. 262); from a decree or order, in the case of the assembling of a prayer for an unnecessary injunction with a prayer for modification of a decree or order, when a direct appeal is unauthorized (Fidelity Ins., etc., Co. v. Dickson, 78 Fed. 205, 24 C. C. A. 60); from a harmless order dissolving an injunction, in order to decide a question of jurisdiction (Lake St. El. R. Co. v. Farmers' L. & T. Co., 77 Fed. 769, 23 C. C. A. 448); nor, after demurrer overruled, from an order allowing appellees to intervene and to move for a rehearing or review of all former orders, suspending and modifying certain orders relating to a receiver's acts, and requiring bonds of the original parties for compliance with further orders in regard to funds already paid them by the receiver (Jack v. State, 102 Fed. 210, 42 C. C. A. 267); nor where a federal constitutional question is involved (Dawson v. Columbia Ave. Saving-Fund, etc., Co., 102 Fed. 200, 42 C. C. A. 258; Indianapolis v. New York Cent. Trust Co., 83 Fed. 529, 27 C. C. A. 580 [dismissing appeal 82 Fed. 1]; Westerly v. Seamen's Friend Soc., 76 Fed. 467, 22 C. C. A. 278. See supra, XII, H, 4, d), although the case may involve other questions (Dawson v. Columbia Ave. Saving-Fund, etc., Co., 102 Fed. 200, 42 C. C. A. 258). Nor can said court, its jurisdiction being only appellate, vacate an order directing that an injunction theretofore ordered to be issued should not issue until further orders. North Bloomfield Gravel Min. Co. v. U. S., 83 Fed. 2, 27 C. C. A. 395.

Complainant should be allowed to waive his right to an injunction until the decree becomes final, so as to deprive defendant of an opportunity to appeal from the interlocutory decree, in a cause where a patent is sustained after a full hearing upon the merits, and the taking of an account would involve little labor and expense. Comp. Stat. (1901) p. 580], which are to issue writs of scire facias and all writs, not specifically provided for, necessary to the exercise of their respective jurisdictions and agreeable to the usages and principles of the law.

Effect is given to appeal by a certified copy of the order allowing the appeal, and of the assignment of errors and bond, together with

8. Jurisdiction as to Territorial Courts. Appeals and writs of error may be taken from the supreme courts of the several territories to the circuit courts of appeals;[65] but said appellate jurisdiction is limited to said supreme courts,[66] and does not extend to causes which are not between aliens and citizens of the United States or citizens of different states, or in causes not arising under the patent, revenue, or criminal laws, or to those not in admiralty,[67] although interlocutory orders appointing receivers are appealable.[68]

Although a state is divided into two geographical divisions yet if it comprises but one judicial district the grand and petit jurors on an indictment may be drawn from both divisions irrespective of where the crime is laid (Barrett v. U. S., 169 U. S. 218, 18 S. Ct. 327, 42 L. ed. 723), and an indictment found in the circuit court in one district may properly be remitted to the district where the crime is laid (Barrett v. U. S., 169 U. S. 231, 18 S. Ct. 332, 42 L. ed. 727).

b. "Justices" and "Judges." These words are defined by statute,[70] and provision is also made that certain judges shall hold the circuit court.[71] If a judge of the district court sits alone as circuit judge,[72] he has the same powers and jurisdiction as any other judge sitting in the same court.[73] And where a cause is otherwise within the act of congress, and two judges are on the bench, one alone may have jurisdiction if the other does not sit in the case, for the latter will then be deemed in law to be absent.[74] Again there may, by consent of the parties to a cause in equity, be a hearing outside of the district and final decision, by a circuit judge within his circuit, and a recital in the decree that the cause was heard in open court in the district concludes the parties.[75]

c. Special Sessions. The enactment providing for special sessions for criminal trials near the place of the offense[76] vests a legal discretion in the court.[77]

2. Rules of Procedure.[78] Circuit courts may make rules and orders as to practice, not inconsistent with any law of the United States, or with any rule prescribed by the supreme court.[79] And a circuit court, in exercising jurisdiction concurrent with the court of claims, is governed by its own rules of procedure, as to the time of granting new trials.[80] Nor if said court tries a case without a jury is it required to make special findings.[81]

3. Transfer of Causes.[82] The statute authorizing the transfer of causes from

Section 610 requires the attendance of justices of the supreme court every two years. Section 611 provides that judges of the circuit court may sit apart. Section 612 makes provision as to circuit courts held at the same time in different districts. Section 615 relates to the transfer of suits from one circuit to another. Section 613 provides as to causes certified back. Section 617 provides that justices may hold courts of other circuits on request. Section 618 relates to the non-allotment of a justice to a circuit.

method of procedure prescribed by a state for its own courts can deprive said circuit courts of original jurisdiction thereof.[88] And if the question is one of merits it cannot be treated as one of jurisdiction, and the case dismissed for want thereof.[89]

b. Specifically. Outside of the general provisions of the statute jurisdiction is also conferred upon said circuit courts in specifically enumerated cases,[90] including suits under impost, internal revenue, or postal laws;[91] suits for penalties;[92] suits under patent or copyright laws;[93] suits for the protection of rights secured by the constitution of the United States or by any law providing for equal rights of citizens,[94] which provision includes civil rights only;[95] and a suit on a bond for government work is one arising under the laws of the United States, where the matter in dispute exceeds two thousand dollars.[96]

c. Claims Against United States. The act of 1887[97] gave to the circuit courts concurrent jurisdiction over certain claims against the United States,[98] not sounding in tort,[99] and excepting claims theretofore rejected,[1] etc., and by the amendment of 1898[2] there was also excepted from such jurisdiction cases brought to recover fees, salary, or compensation for official services of officers, the effect of which was to deprive said court of jurisdiction to further proceed in such cases then pending therein, so that a judgment thereafter rendered in such a case was subject to reversal and dismissal on appeal.[3]

5. Power to Issue Writs and Process. Circuit courts have power to issue process to execute their own judgments and may issue mandamus to make an execution sale of corporate stock effective.[4] But if the power to issue an injunction in a specific case is derived solely from a statute, said court can exercise such power only within the terms of the enactment, nor is said statute retroactive in this respect.[5] And a substantially similar rule, as to conformity with statutory requirements, applies to allowance of a supersedeas.[6] Again if certiorari issues prematurely, and is therefore unauthorized by any statute, obedience thereto may be refused and the cause may proceed as if it had not issued.[7]

6. Review of Decisions. By the judiciary act of 1891[8] it is provided that no appellate jurisdiction shall be exercised or allowed by circuit courts.[9]

J. District Courts — 1. Creation, Constitution, and Organization — a. Judicial Districts. An act creating a division of a judicial district should sufficiently show a distribution of territorial jurisdiction between the two divisions, as against a prior enactment making the jurisdiction of district courts coextensive with the district.[10] And a division may not operate to abolish the original district, but merely affect its name and territorial jurisdiction, the organization of the original district not being changed, and its officers continuing in office charged with the same duties.[11] If, however, a district is divided into distinct districts and district courts established in each with all the essential features of courts as originally created, such courts are limited in their jurisdiction over proceedings in rem in admiralty to cases in which the res is situated within their territorial limits.[12]

b. Judges. The number and qualifications of district judges are regulated by statute.[13]

c. Terms and Sessions.[14] Acts of a court done at a session held in conformity with a repealed act and before the time appointed under the repealing act which divided the district are void.[15] And a court sitting in one division cannot, it is decided, make an order between terms of court of another division affect-

Business may be certified to the circuit court in case of the disability of a district judge.[19] If causes are transferred to a newly established court, under a statute depriving the district court of all jurisdiction, its power over a transferred cause is thereby terminated.[20]

4. Jurisdiction — a. Generally and Specifically. Under the statute[21] district courts have jurisdiction of: (1) All crimes and offenses cognizable under authority of the United States, committed within their respective districts, or upon the high seas, the punishment of which is not capital, except in the cases mentioned in section 5412 of the Revised Statutes; (2) piracy when no circuit court is held in the district of such court; (3) suits for penalties and forfeitures incurred under any law of the United States;[22] (4) all suits at common law brought by the United States or by any officer thereof authorized to sue;[23] (5) suits in equity to enforce internal revenue taxes;[24] (6) suits for penalties and damages for frauds against the United States; (7) suits under postal laws; (8) admiralty causes and seizures on land and on waters not within admiralty and maritime jurisdiction; also original and exclusive cognizance of all prizes except as provided by para-given jurisdiction to the district courts.[35] No other equity jurisdiction is conferred upon them.

K. Territorial and Provisional Courts — 1. Rules Deduced From Decisions as to Former Territories — a. Creation, Constitution, and Organization — (I) Character of Court.[36] Territorial district courts created by act of congress are statutory and not federal courts within the constitution of the United States;[37] and it has been decided that such courts were not of inferior,[38] but of general, jurisdiction;[39] while on the other hand their jurisdiction has been held to be special and limited.[40]

(II) Place For Holding Court.[41] The organic law and the acts of congress relative to a place of holding court may be such, when coupled with a lack of negative legislation by congress and an indirect ratification by it, as by an appropriation for expenses, that the law will, where there is jurisdiction of the subject-matter, presume everything in favor of a court held at a certain place and so sustain a conviction by virtue of the jurisdiction thereof.[42]

(III) Original Civil Jurisdiction.[43] The underlying governing principle of all the cases is that the original jurisdiction of a territorial court rests upon the constitution of the United States, the acts of congress, the organic law and the acts of the territorial legislature, and these are ordinarily construed with reference each to the other in determining the controlling law as to the extent of jurisdiction or the limitations thereon;[44] beyond this general rule the question of jurisdiction becomes one of specific construction and application to particular cases under special provisions of the law, of little value outside of the special case, except by possible analogy.

Cases arising under constitution and laws of United States.— The number of courts having jurisdiction of this class of cases may be limited by act of congress, or the statute may merely operate by construction as a designation of the courts which may exercise such jurisdiction instead of being regarded as creating them (Beery v. U. S., 2 Colo. 186); or the organic act may confer jurisdiction in such causes (U. S. v. Upham, 2 Mont. 113). Concurrent jurisdiction with the court of claims may by act of congress be vested in

b. Procedure and Rules of Practice[45] — (i) GENERALLY. Territorial legislatures may prescribe rules of practice in the territorial district courts, or where that is not done the courts themselves may adopt rules of practice in United States cases.[46] But the rules in equity, adopted by the supreme court of the United States, are determined to be binding on the territorial courts when acting as courts in chancery, in the absence of any local system of practice.[47]

(ii) TITLE OF COURT IN PLEADINGS. Although these courts are decided not to be entitled to be styled in pleadings as courts of the United States,[48] inaccuracy in giving title to them is not fatal.[49]

c. Appellate Jurisdiction.[50] Generally an appeal lies to the supreme court of a territory where expressly provided for by act of congress,[51] or in cases where one or more such enactments upon the subject allow such appeal by construction thereof.[52]

2. PRESENT TERRITORIES — a. Creation, Construction, and Organization — (i) CHARACTER OF COURT.[53] A county court having civil and criminal jurisdiction, whose judgments and decrees the supreme court has a right to review on appeal, is an inferior court under an act of congress vesting the judicial power of the territory in a supreme and such inferior courts as the legislative council may by law prescribe.[54]

(II) Indian Reservation Attached to County For Judicial Purposes.[55] If the organic act attaches certain Indian reservations to a county for judicial purposes, and a subsequent act requires the district court to be held at a certain place on said reservation, said acts should be construed together.[56]

(III) Original Civil Jurisdiction.[57] The same governing principles apply here as above stated.[58] The United States, in a strict sense, has and exercises sole and exclusive jurisdiction in the territories, and the jurisdiction exercised by the territorial government is an exercise of a portion of that belonging to the United States and exercised through its subordinate governmental agency, the territory,[59] the power of congress to make any needful laws for a territory, or any portion thereof, or for any particular class of its inhabitants not being open to question. Again the district courts organized under the United States statutes have concurrent jurisdiction in actions by receivers of national banks.[60] And under the act of 1863 the district court for the territory might administer revenue laws, but the enactment did not embrace proceedings under the confiscation act of 1862.[61] The power of the territorial supreme court, however, to issue writs of habeas corpus was not limited by implication by section 1912 of the United States Revised Statutes.[62] A proceeding by information, in the nature of quo warranto, to oust a usurper from office is also held to be within the jurisdiction of the district court.[63] The courts of the territory may also pass upon the constitutionality of the acts of its legislature.[64]

b. Procedure and Rules of Practice.[65] A territorial court may execute the powers conferred upon it by law to carry into effect its jurisdiction,[66] and conformity may be required with the procedure and practice provided by codes or statutes, which may be those of a state, adopted and of governing force in the territory.[67] But it is decided that none of the rules of the United States supreme court except the ninety-second apply to territorial courts.[68]

c. Appellate Jurisdiction.[69] Where an appeal is granted all proper exceptions brought into the record pursuant to law will be considered.[70] But a decision overruling a demurrer to plaintiff's evidence is not a final judgment from which an appeal lies.[71] Nor does an appeal lie direct to the supreme court from a probate court, where it is authorized by statute to be taken to the district court with a review of the proceedings of the latter in said supreme court.[72] A writ of prohibition is, however, held to be an exercise of appellate jurisdiction.[73] Again the amount in controversy is material in determining the right to appeal; it may, however, be connected with other factors, or it may when so connected be immaterial.[74]

d. Transfer of Causes. Congress has power to legislate as to appeals taken from disputed territory to a state court and also to provide for the transfer of causes from said disputed territory;[75] but a cause cannot be transferred from a territory to a federal court in a state except in conformity with the intent of the statute.[76]

The right of appeal may depend upon the amount in controversy as fixed by judgment where there is no question of counterclaim or set-off (Decker v. Williams, 73 Fed. 308, appeal from United States commissioners in Alaska acting as justices' courts); or such right may depend not only upon the amount in dispute, but may rest also upon the character of the subject-matter, as where there is a question of the legality of a tax, toll, or impost; and this, irrespective of the fact that a judgment was recovered in a sum less than the specified jurisdictional amount, no affirmative relief being asked (Phœnix Wholesale Meat Co. v. Moss, (Ariz. 1901) 64 Pac. 443). f. United States Courts in Indian Territory — (I) Jurisdiction Generally. Tribal courts in the territory were abolished by an act of congress of 1898, which also provided that all actions pending in said courts should be transferred to the United States courts in the territory, by filing with the clerk thereof the original papers.[78] But under the act of 1890[79] the latter courts had jurisdiction of an action on the bond of a postmaster of an office in the territory[80] and in matters of probate[81] they also had cognizance where citizens of the United States were creditors or distributees.[82]

(II) Place For Holding Court. The acts of congress of 1889 and of 1890[83] required, as construed together, at least two regular terms in each of the districts every year, and the judge might establish as many special terms as might be necessary for the despatch of the business of the court.[84]

(III) Appeals. Under the act of congress of 1895[85] appeals could be taken to the United States courts in Indian Territory from the final judgments of commissioners, acting as justices of the peace, in all cases, but the limitation of the jurisdictional amount in civil causes was exclusive.[86]

(IV) New Trials. A new trial could, under the act of congress of 1890, and the Arkansas statute thereby made applicable, be granted for newly discovered certain contingencies a transfer of causes by a district court "to the next circuit court in an adjoining state."

evidence in an action at law, by the United States court in the Indian Territory, after a final decision of the case in the supreme court of the United States.[87]

3. ADMISSION OF TERRITORY AS STATE — a. Effect in General. Upon the admission of a territory as a state, the territorial government, including the territorial courts established and organized under its laws, is extinguished,[88] notwithstanding any provision impliedly to the contrary in the state constitution, and so, even though there is no appointment of a district judge to the United States district court established therein.[89]

b. Transfer of Causes — (1) PRIMARY TEST OF JURISDICTION. The primary test as to the transfer of causes upon the admission of a territory as a state is whether pending suits[90] are of a federal or municipal character.[91] This being ascertained the law should provide as to the former that they should be transferred to and proceed in proper courts of the United States,[92] but all such as are not within the former, or are within the latter class, should go to the courts of the new state.[93] If, however, the federal and state courts have concurrent jurisdiction of pending causes, they may be transferred to either the state or federal courts by either party possessing that option under existing laws. As to federal courts inferior to the supreme court congressional legislation is necessary to enable them, after the admission of a state into the Union, to take jurisdiction of causes previously commenced in the territorial courts and not yet finally adjudged, and such legislation will be construed as far as possible consistently with its terms and with the constitution of the United States, so as to give effect to the apparent intention of congress to vest in the federal courts the jurisdiction of such cases, so far as they are of a federal character, either because of their arising under the laws of the Cas. No. 1,103, 4 Dill. 265); actions which might have been commenced originally in the federal court, but the record must show the requisite jurisdictional amount (Back v. Sierra Nevada Consol. Min. Co., 46 Fed. 673. Compare Johnson v. Bunker Hill, etc., Co., 46 Fed. 417).

93. Transfer to state courts.— If the federal character of the case does not appear of record the state court may proceed. Ames v. Colorado Cent. R. Co., 1 Fed. Cas. No. 324, 4 Dill. 251. But the state has no authority to enact that records of territorial courts of appeal shall become records of its own courts or to provide for proceedings based thereon. Hunt v. Palao, 4 How. (U. S.) 589, 11 L. ed. 1115. The concurrence of both federal and state governments is requisite to transfer the records. Inerarity v. Curtis, 4 Fla. 175. A transfer may, however, be made to the state court by concurrent action of its legislature and the sanction of congress. Carter v. Bennett, 4 Fla. 283. Again the supreme court of the state of Florida had not the power to award process to execute decrees of the territorial court. Inerarity v. Curtis, 4 Fla. 175. But see Beatty v. Ross, 1 Fla. 198; Stewart v. Preston, 1 Fla. 1, 44 Am. Dec. 621. But in some states certain state courts have been held to have taken the place of the terri-

United States or because of their being between citizens of different states.[94] Another rule has been asserted, and that is that the transfer of causes depends upon the judicial status of states, when the law was passed, with reference to judicial circuits and whether or not they were then attached to any circuit.[95]

(II) Federal Courts as Successors of Territorial Courts.[96] If the newly created federal courts are made successors of both the supreme and district courts of the territory, it is proper to allow the transfer to the circuit court of causes which were pending in the supreme court of the territory on appeal.[97]

(III) Causes Whereof Federal Courts Might Have Had Jurisdiction — Diversity of Citizenship. Where an act admitting a state authorizes the transfer to the newly created federal courts of the state of all causes pending in the territorial courts at the time of admission whereof such federal courts "might have had jurisdiction under the laws of the United States, had such courts existed at the time of the commencement of such cases," said provision was intended to designate cases of which those courts might have had jurisdiction under the laws of the United States had those courts, like the other circuit and district courts of the United States generally, existed at the time in question in a state in the Union, whose inhabitants consequently were citizens of that state.[98]

(IV) Request For Transfer. The requirement of a written request and the proviso that in the absence of such request the case should be proceeded with in the proper state court were intended to permit parties to proceed in the proper state court in all cases where such courts have concurrent jurisdiction, unless one of the parties invoked the jurisdiction of the federal courts in cases of a federal

Provision as to transfer of federal courts as successors, etc., does not authorize a cause which has been once transferred to a state court under the enabling act to be again transferred from the state court to a federal court. Bluebird Min. Co. v. Murray, 45 Fed. 388. But a cause pending in the territorial supreme court may be reviewed by the federal circuit court. U. S. v. Lynde, 44 Fed. 215. The provisions of the general statute regulating the removal of causes do not, however, apply to transfers made under the act admitting Montana to the Union. Strasburger v. Beecher, 44 Fed. 209. Again if the federal courts are created successors of the territorial courts as to all causes pending in the latter of which the former would have had jurisdiction had they been in existence when the suits were instituted, an admiralty case on appeal to the territorial supreme court but not docketed there on admission of the state must be transferred to the federal district court. Hamilton v. The Walla Walla, 44 Fed. 4. And within the same enabling act the circuit court for the district may punish as a contempt the violation of an injunction, granted by final decree of the territorial court, against interference with fishery privileges guaranteed the Indians by treaty with the United States. U. S. v. Taylor, 44 Fed. 2. But the district court of Arkansas is not the successor of the supreme court of that territory. U. S. v. Ta-wan-ga-ca, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,435, Hempst. 304.

98. In other words the requisite diversity of citizenship none the less exists because one of the parties was a citizen of the territory which became a state. Per Gray, J., in Koenigsberger v. Richmond Silver Min. Co., 158 U. S. 41, 49, 15 S. Ct. 751, 39 L. ed. 889 [cited in Washington, etc., R. Co. v. Cœur D'Alene R., etc., Co., 160 U. S. 77, 16 S. Ct. 231, 236, 40 L. ed. 355], who said: "This construction of the Act is in accord with all the reported decisions in the courts, Federal or state, held within the eighth circuit." And see Miller v. Sunde, 1 N. D. 1, 44 N. W. 301; Herman v. McKinney, 43 Fed. 689. It is supported by the judgment of the circuit court of appeals of the ninth circuit in Blackburn v. Wooding, 56 Fed. 545, 6 C. C. A. 6 [overruling Johnson v. Bunker Hill, etc., Co., 46 Fed. 417; Carson v. Donaldson, 45 Fed. 821; Nickerson v. Crook, 45 Fed. 658; Dunton v. Muth, 45 Fed. 390; Strasburger v. Beecher, 44 Fed. 209]. And the like construction seems to have been assumed to be the true one of the similar clause in the act of June 26, 1876, relating to Colorado. Ames v. Colorado Cent. R. Co., 1 Fed. Cas. No. 324, 4 Dill. 251.

character.[99] The required request should, however, be filed in the proper court,[1] and in time,[2] although the statute may fail to provide either as to the court or time.[3] But notice of application for transfer need not be given the adverse party where the statute does not require it,[4] and the facts necessary to give the federal court jurisdiction are properly shown in the petition for transfer or in affidavits accompanying it.[5]

(v) Effect of Transfer. If the request for transfer is made in conformity with the statutory requirements,[6] the state court is deprived of jurisdiction and that of the federal court becomes exclusive.[7]

(vi) Procedure on Transfer. After transfer the proper federal court may do all things that were left undone in the territorial court and may proceed as that court would have proceeded if it had retained the case,[8] and therefore it may affirm, modify, or reverse the judgment, and if necessary, try the case again.[9]

4. Provisional Courts. A provisional court established in conquered territory by the provisional governor of that state, under authority of the president of the United States, is not a state but a federal court, deriving its existence and all its powers from the federal government.[10]

L. Courts of District of Columbia — 1. In General. By the act of March 3, 1901, establishing a code of law for the government of the District of Columbia, judicial power was vested in certain courts;[11] and provision was made therein

99. Sargent v. Kindred, 49 Fed. 485.

1. Sargent v. Kindred, 49 Fed. 485, holding that the proper court in which to file a request is the court where the files and records of the case are found at the time the request is to be filed.

Judge of state court is not disqualified by the fact that he had been an attorney of record, as he exercises no judicial function and his order is merely formal. Strasburger v. Beecher, 44 Fed. 209.

5. Kenyon v. Knipe, 46 Fed. 309. And see Burke v. Bunker Hill, etc., Min., etc., Co., 46 Fed. 644, holding that if an action is commenced in territorial courts before admission it is not necessary to state jurisdictional facts sufficient to confer jurisdiction on a federal court, but such facts may be stated in a request for transfer or by affidavit, and such request, like a petition in a removal case, becomes upon filing and transfer thereafter a part of the record for determining the question of jurisdiction.

6. There may, however, be a waiver of the right to transfer notwithstanding the filing of a request, so that the state court will not be ousted of jurisdiction. Sargent v. Kindred, 5 N. D. 8, 63 N. W. 151, 49 Fed. 485.

No waiver if petition for transfer is filed in state supreme court before any action taken in the case by that court (Koenigsberger v. Richmond Silver Min. Co., 158 U. S. 41, 15 S. Ct. 751, 39 L. ed. 889; Carr v. Fife, 156 U. S. 494, 15 S. Ct. 427, 39 L. ed. 508), nor is the filing of a stipulation for continuance a waiver (Strasburger v. Beecher, 44 Fed. 209).

11. Judicial power is vested in superior and inferior courts. The former are the supreme court of the United States, the court of appeals of the District of Columbia, and the supreme court of the District of Colum-with respect to the laws which should remain in force after the establishment of the code.[12]

2. Supreme Court of United States. Any final judgment or decree of the court of appeals may be reëxamined, and affirmed, reversed, or modified by the supreme court of the United States, upon writ of error[13] or appeal,[14] in all cases in which the matter in dispute, exclusive of costs, shall exceed the sum of five thousand dollars,[15] in the same manner and under the same regulations as existed in cases of writs of error on judgments or appeals from decrees rendered in the supreme court of the District on February 9, 1893,[16] and also in cases, without regard to the sum or value of the matter in dispute, wherein is involved the validity of any patent or copyright,[17] or in which is drawn in question the validity of a treaty or statute of, or an authority exercised under, the United States.[18]

bia. The latter are justices of the peace and police courts. D. C. Code (1902), § 2.

Distinguished from territorial courts.—The superior courts of general jurisdiction of the district have been repeatedly held to be courts of the United States as distinguished from mere territorial courts. But where the question was what jurisdiction had been conferred on the court and how that jurisdiction was to be exercised, the court of appeals of the district declared that it was immaterial whether said courts belonged to the class of inferior courts provided for by the constitution, or to the class of territorial courts that congress might provide for and establish in the organization of territorial governments. U. S. v. Sampson, 19 App. Cas. (D. C.) 419. See Noerr v. Brewer, 1 MacArthur (D. C.) 507.

12. The common law, all British statutes in force in Maryland on Feb. 27, 1801, the principles of equity and admiralty, all general acts of congress not locally inapplicable in the District of Columbia, and all acts of congress by their terms applicable in the District of Columbia and to other places under the jurisdiction of the United States, in force at the date of the passage of the act of 1901, remain in force except in so far as the same are inconsistent with, or are replaced by, some provision of this code. D. C. Code (1902), § 1.

13. Writs of error are governed by the rules and regulations applicable to the circuit courts. Stanton v. Embrey, 93 U. S. 548, 23 L. ed. 983.

Writs of error under special circumstances as provided for in D. C. Rev. Stat. §§ 706, 847, will not be issued, the statutes being no longer in force. U. S. v. Wanamaker, 147 U. S. 149, 13 S. 14. Appeal lies to the supreme court of the United States in prize cases, not to the court of appeals of the District. U. S. v. Sampson, 19 App. Cas. (D. C.) 419.

The entire record is brought up on an appeal from a final decree of the general term of the supreme court of the District of Columbia. Spalding v. Mason, 161 U. S. 375, 16 S. Ct. 592, 40 L. ed. 738.

By the repeal by the act of March 3, 1897, of the act of Feb. 13, 1895, and the enactment that all proceedings pending under such act are to be vacated and that no judgment rendered in pursuance of such act shall be paid, the supreme court is precluded from taking jurisdiction of a judgment so rendered, although the application for the appeal was made and notice given before the statute was repealed. District of Columbia v. Eslin, 183 U. S. 62, 22 S. Ct. 17, 46 L. ed. 85.

15. Determination of amount.—On a contest of a will the amount of the estate which passes constitutes the matter in dispute, and not the interest of any one of the contestants. Overby v. Gordon, 177 U. S. 214, 20 S. Ct. 603, 44 L. ed. 741. And jurisdiction is not given by allegations of damages in excess of five thousand dollars caused by a levy on property not worth more than one thousand eight hundred dollars, and compelling the payment of a judgment of less than one hundred dollars where no facts are alleged which would justify exemplary damages. 17. The validity of a patent or copyright is not involved by a decree refusing to issue a mandamus to a commissioner of patents to register a trade-mark (U. S. v. Seymour, 153 U. S. 353, 14 S. Ct. 871, 38 L. ed. 742); or by a decree dismissing a bill under U. S. Rev. Stat. (1878) § 4915 [U. S. Comp. Stat. (1901) p. 3392], to procure an adjudication that complainant is entitled to the issuance of a patent for an invention. Durham v. Seymour, 161 U. S. 235, 16 S. Decree refusing mandamus to government officials see U. S. v. Seymour, 153 U. S. 353,

3. Court of Appeals of District of Columbia. The appellate jurisdiction of the court of appeals of the District of Columbia is regulated by the act of March 3, 1901,[19] including appeals from final orders, judgments, or decrees of the supreme court of the District of Columbia or any justice thereof,[20] and appeals from all interlocutory orders of the supreme court of the District of Columbia or by any justice thereof whereby the possession of property is changed or affected, such as orders for the appointment of receivers, granting injunctions, dissolving writs of attachment, and the like,[21] as well as appeals from the decisions of the commissioner of patents.[22] A writ of error may issue from this court in certain cases to the police court,[23] but certiorari will not issue to said court.[24] Such court also has power to issue all necessary and proper remedial and prerogative writs in aid of its appellate jurisdiction.[25]

14 S. Ct. 871, 38 L. ed. 742; U. S. v. Lynch, 137 U. S. 280, 11 S. Ct. 114, 34 L. ed. 700.

Certiorari and certification.— In any case heretofore made final in the court of appeals, it shall be competent for the supreme court of the United States to require, by certiorari or otherwise, any such case to be certified to said supreme court for its review and determination, with the same power and authority in the case as if it had been carried by appeal or writ of error to said supreme court. D. C. Code (1902), § 234.

19. D. C. Code (1902), § 226 et seq.

20. D. C. Code (1902), § 226.

Action of a trial court on a motion for a new trial is not appealable to court of appeals. West v. U. S., 20 App. Cas. (D. C.) 347.

An order in habeas corpus is final and appealable to the court of appeals when made by the supreme court of the District dismissing the petition on writ of capias ad satisfaciendum. Contello v. Palmer, 20 App. Cas. (D. C.) 210. See Matter of Taylor, 3 MacArthur (D. C.) 426.

From judgments of the supreme court on appeal from a justice of the peace an appeal did not lie under the act of Feb. 9, 1893. Ex p. Redmond, 3 App. Cas. (D. C.) 317. But under D. C. Code (1902), § 226, such an appeal is now allowed.

Appeal may be docketed and dismissed for default in filing transcript in time limited, whether appeal operates or not as a supersedeas. U. S. v. Alvey, 182 U. S. 456, 21 S. Ct. 876, 45 L. ed. 1180.

Cases pending in the supreme court in general term at the date of the act of Feb. 9, 1893, abolishing the appellate jurisdiction of the supreme court were to be determined by the court of appeals. Ambler v. Archer, 1 App. Cas. (D. C.) 94.

As to interlocutory decrees and review by general term see Spalding v. Mason, 161 U. S. 375, 16 S. Ct. 592, 40 L. ed. 738, decided in 1896.

22. D. C. Code (1902), § 228.

Appeal from the commissioner in a reissue case will be dismissed when not taken from the original order refusing the reissue, either of the supreme court of the district or to the court of appeals, within the limit prescribed by the rule of this court after the adoption of the act. In re Messinger, 12 App. Cas. (D. C.) 532.

Appeal will not lie from the ruling of the commissioner refusing a rehearing to an applicant for the reissue of a patent, or for refusing an application for leave to amend the claims of an original patent. In re Messinger, 12 App. Cas. (D. C.) 532.

Jurisdiction of appeals in interference cases was conferred upon the court of appeals by the act of 1893, in addition to the jurisdiction previously possessed by the supreme court of the District. Before this act appeals were only allowed in cases in which the commissioner had finally rejected an ex parte application and not in interference cases. The statute thus placed the two kinds of cases on an equality, and therefore the defeated party in an interference case could not maintain a suit in equity to review the commissioner's decision under U. S. Rev. Stat. (1878) § 4915 [U. S. Comp. Stat. (1901) p. 3392], until he had first taken an appeal to the court of appeals in the District. Smith v. Muller, 75 Fed. 612. The act of Feb. 9, 1893, is constitutional in giving the court of appeals jurisdiction of appeals from decisions of the commissioner of patents rejecting applications and in interference cases. U. S. v. Duell, 172 U. S. 576, 19 S. Ct. 286, 43 L. ed. 559 [affirming 10 App. Cas. (D. C.) 294].

The court cannot award costs or execute any judgment therefor in appeals from the commissioner. Wells v. Reynolds, 5 App. Cas. (D. C.) 20.

25. D. C. Code (1902), § 230.

Under the act of Feb. 9, 1893 (27 U. S. Stat. at L. 434) giving the court of appeals of the District of Columbia power to issue all necessary and proper remedial prerogative writs in aid of its appellate jurisdiction, the court has authority to issue the writ of certiorari as ancillary process in aid of its appellate jurisdiction, but no power to issue the original common-law writ of certiorari to remove to the court the proceedings in a criminal case

4. SUPREME COURT OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA — a. General Powers. The supreme court of the District of Columbia possesses the same powers and exercises the same jurisdiction as the circuit and district court of the United States, and is to be deemed a court of the United States, and also has and exercises all the jurisdiction possessed and exercised by the supreme court of the District of Columbia under the act approved March 3, 1863, creating that court, and at the date of the passage of the code of law in 1901.[26]

b. Power and Jurisdiction of Justices. The justices of the supreme court of the District of Columbia,[27] in addition to the powers and jurisdiction exercised by them as such, under the act of March 3, 1863, and of the date of the adoption of the code of 1901 severally possess the powers and exercise the jurisdiction possessed and exercised by the judges of the circuit and district courts of the United States.[28]

c. General and Special Terms — (I) GENERALLY. The supreme court of the district is required to hold general and special terms.[29]

(II) GENERAL TERM. The general term of the supreme court of the District of Columbia is required to be held by at least three justices,[30] and shall not hear any causes except certain causes pending at the time of the establishment of the code of 1901 and those under certain specified statutes.[31]

(III) SPECIAL TERM — (A) Constitution of Court. Each special term of the supreme court of the District of Columbia is required to be held by a single justice;[32] and the special terms shall be known respectively as the circuit court, the equity court, the criminal court, the probate court, and the district court of the United States.[33]

(B) Circuit Court. All common-law civil causes must be tried and determined in the circuit court, except as otherwise provided in the code,[34] and all pending in the police court. Sullivan v. District of Columbia, 19 App. Cas. (D. C.) 210.

26. D. C. Code (1902), § 61.

Has jurisdiction of a suit to enforce a mechanic's lien, although less than fifty dollars. Hellohan v. Young, 21 D. C. 183. It also has jurisdiction over a fund in the United States treasury if parties claiming it are before the court, provided no different provision is made by statute. McManus v. Standish, 1 Mackey (D. C.) 1473.

Jurisdiction of libel in prize cases under D. C. Rev. Stat. § 762, see U. S. v. Sampson, 19 App. Cas. (D. C.) 419.

Has no jurisdiction in actions involving less than fifty dollars, so as to allow the issuing of attachments. Singleton v. Frank, 21 D. C. 46. When no jurisdiction over foreign corporation see Dallas v. Atlantic, etc., R. Co., 2 MacArthur (D. C.) 146.

appeals from justices of the peace are also to be heard and determined in said circuit court.[35]

(c) Equity Court. The equity court has jurisdiction of all causes formerly cognizable in equity, and of all petitions for divorce, except where the relief sought is authorized to be given by the probate court only, and also the special powers otherwise provided.[36]

(d) Criminal Court. The trial of crimes and misdemeanors committed in the District must be had in the supreme court of the District holding a special term as a criminal court, except such misdemeanors as are within the jurisdiction of the police court, as to which said court has concurrent jurisdiction with said police court.[37]

(e) Probate Court. The special term of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, formerly known as the orphans' court, is now designated the probate court, and its powers and jurisdiction are specially provided for by the act of March 3, 1901.[38]

(f) District Court. The district court has and may exercise the same powers and jurisdiction as the other district courts of the United States, and such further special jurisdiction as may from time to time be conferred by congress, and of all proceedings instituted in exercise of the right of eminent domain.[39]

Extent of jurisdiction.—The orphans' court can enforce the distribution of the residue of a testator's estate remaining in the hands of his executrix. Sinnott v. Kenaday, 14 App. Cas. (D. C.) 1 [reversed in 179 U. S. 606, 21 S. Ct. 233, 45 L. ed. 339]. See Sinnott v. Kenaday, 12 App. Cas. (D. C.) 115. And a justice presiding in the supreme court of the District holding a special term for probate business, in the trial of issues framed under a caveat to a will of realty, may direct a verdict for the caveatees, where the caveators offer no testimony entitling them to go to a jury. Leach v. Burr, 17 App. Cas. (D. C.) 128, under the act of June 8, 1898. Again the authority of said court to order a reference of executor's accounts to the auditor is included in the right of this court to acquire information by any of the instrumentalities known to the practice, notwithstanding the legislation of Maryland that the statement of such account shall be made to the register of wills only. In re Wagner, MacArthur & M. (D. C.) 395. But said court has no jurisdiction to admit a will to probate as a devise of real estate. Campbell v. Porter, 162 U. S. 478, 16 S. Ct. 871, 40 L. ed. 1044. Nor upon the petition of a creditor of a decedent can it require money in the hands of a third person claimed as part of the assets to be paid into court, when the right to such fund is in controversy between the next of kin, and such third person claims an interest therein. Cook v. Speare, 13 App. Cas. (D. C.) 446. The jurisdiction of said court is also limited by Md. Acts (1798), c. 101. Cook v. Speare, 13 App. Cas. (D. C.) 446. Its power is also limited to the institution of suits and does not authorize suits against an executor or administrator. Vaughan v. Northrup, 15 Pet. (U. S.) 1, 10 L. ed. 639, under the act of June, 1822. Nor is an order of the orphans' court admitting a will of personalty to probate after a trial by jury of contested issues certified to the circuit court conclusive as to the realty when offered in evidence by the devisees in a subsequent action of ejectment between the same parties, as such court has no jurisdiction over the devise of real property. Perrey v. Sweeney, 11 App. Cas. (D. C.) 404. Again said orphans' court had no jurisdiction over conflicting powers of attorney. Richardson v. Cameron, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11,780*a*, 2 Hayw. & H. (D. C.) 155.

39. D. C. Code (1902), § 84.

The supreme court of the District of Columbia, sitting as a district court of the United States, has jurisdiction, under D. C. Rev. Stat. § 762, to take cognizance of a libel for the condemnation of prizes of war and to adjudicate the question of prize or no prize, having the same jurisdiction as a prize court as other district courts of the United States. U. S. v. Sampson, 19 App. Cas. (D. C.) 419.

(G) Power to Issue Writs.[40] The supreme court of the District may, in its appropriate special terms, issue writs of quo warranto, mandamus,[41] prohibition,[42] scire facias, certiorari, injunction, prohibitory and mandatory, ne exeat, and all other writs known in common-law and equity practice that may be necessary to the effective exercise of its jurisdiction. Any justice of said court may issue writs of habeas corpus to inquire into the cause of detention or to discharge on giving bail.[43]

5. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE. Justices of the peace have jurisdiction in civil cases; their jurisdiction is limited and is prescribed by the act of March 3, 1901.[44]

6. POLICE COURT. The police court has original criminal jurisdiction of certain crimes and offenses committed in the district; its jurisdiction is specially provided for by statute.[45]

7. TERMS AND SESSIONS. The supreme court of the district is a court of general jurisdiction, and its terms are fixed by law, of which the court of appeals will take notice;[46] but notwithstanding its terms are fixed by law, said court could, under a decision rendered in 1893, indefinitely extend a term up to and beyond the beginning of the succeeding term for the purpose of settling a bill of exceptions.[47]

M. Court of Claims — 1. JURISDICTION — a. Suits Against United States. Under the act of 1887[48] it was provided that the court of claims should have jurisdiction of all claims founded upon the constitution of the United States or any law of congress, except for pensions,[49] or upon any regulation of an executive department,[50] or upon any contract, express or implied, with the government of the United States, or for damages, liquidated or unliquidated,[51] not sounding in

S. 378, 26 L. ed. 167); also to an executive officer residing within the District, commanding him to perform a ministerial act required of him by law; but this power is strictly limited to the enforcement of ministerial duties not involving the necessity of taking proof (Cox v. U. S., 9 Wall. (U. S.) 298, 19 L. ed. 579. And see Kendall v. U. S., 12 Pet. (U. S.) 524, 9 L. ed. 1181, under the act of Feb. 27, 1801). Has no jurisdiction of petition by widow for mandamus to commissioner of general land-office to issue and deliver to her certificates of new location. U. S. v. Stockslager, 129 U. S. 470, 9 S. Grant of jurisdiction under the Tucker Act (24 U. S. Stat. at L. 505 [U. S. Comp. Stat. (1901) p. 752]) did not include cases for which specific jurisdiction had been provided by earlier enactments. But some consideration must have moved to the United States to constitute a cognizable contract for the payment of money, or the money must have been received charged with a duty of paying it over, or the claimant must have had a lawful right to it when it was received, as in case of money paid by mistake. Knote v. U. S., 95 U. S. 149, 24 L. ed. 442. Nor can said court direct what adjustment of salaries shall be made by the postmaster-general. Birdsong v. U. S., 34 Ct. Cl. 437. See Hopkins v. U. Nor does any implied contract exist to repay proceeds of property confiscated and sold by the Confederate government. Fawcett v. U. S., 25 Ct. Cl. 178. Nor will the court take cognizance of a contract, based on the statement of a commanding officer of a frontier post that he thought the government would pay a reasonable compensation for services. Legare v. U. S., 24 Ct. Cl. 513. Nor has it jurisdiction of an action to recover fees as a witness before a committee of congress, where there is no statute allowing the same nor any implied contract therefor. Lilley v. U. Claims arising under revenue laws.—Where a drawback is refused by the collector, acting under the instructions of the secretary of the treasury, such claim is founded on an act of congress and arises out of the implied contract of the United States to refund the duty. So an excess of tax paid is within the statute. U. S. v. Kaufman, 96 U. S. 567, 24 L. ed. 792. The court also has cognizance where the proper officer has determined a question, awarded an allowance, filed a certificate, and exhausted his jurisdiction, and the treasury has refused to carry out the award and pay (Kaufman v. U. S., 11 Ct. Cl. 659), and where money is deposited with a collector of internal revenue to be applied on a proposed compromise which is rejected by the government and the money applied to an assessment of taxes and penalties against the depositor, the court of claims has jurisdiction of an action to recover it back (Boughton v. U. S., 12 Ct. Cl. 330). Jurisdiction also exists where the secretary of the treasury has found the facts on which the claim was based, but, being in doubt as to the law, has declined to order payment. Ramsay v. U. S., 21 Ct. Cl. 443. Again a claim by an informer for his portion of a forfeiture or fine is one founded on a law of congress. Shelton v. U. S., 8 Ct. Cl. 487. See also In re Jayne, 28 Fed. 419. The United States supreme court decided, however, in 1868, that cases under the revenue laws are not within the jurisdiction of the court of claims (Nicholl v. U. S., 7 Wall. (U. S.) 122, 19 L. ed. 125. See also Shelton v. U. S., 8 Ct. Cl. 487; Doherty v. U. S., 6 Ct. Cl. 90), since a controversy under such laws is required to be determined by other tribunals and officers (Kaufman v. U. S., 11 Ct. Cl. 659. See also Campbell v. U. S., 12 Ct. Cl. 470; Turner v. U. S., 9 Ct. Cl. 367; Nicoll v. U. S., 7 Ct. Cl. 36).

Where a state is a party in an action for a demand, arising upon an act of congress, against the United States, the court of claims has jurisdiction. U. S. v. Louisiana, 123 U. S. 32, 8 S. b. Set-Off and Counter-Claims. The court of claims has jurisdiction of all set-offs, counter-claims, claims for damages, whether liquidated or unliquidated, or other demands whatsoever on the part of the government against any claimant in a suit against the government in said court.[55]

If the court is without jurisdiction of the claim a counter-claim pleaded falls with it. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., 34 Ct. Cl. 484.

The government may, as assignee of a judgment, set off the same against an award by congress, even though said award was assigned, if assigned before notice. Macauley v. U. S., 11 Ct. Cl. 693.

The government may plead as a set-off a release of an internal revenue tax on property, released by mistake of a treasury agent, but not on that retained by the agent. Roman v. U. S., 11 Ct. Cl. 761.

For proviso relating to suits by officers for fees see 30 U. S. Stat. at L. 494, repealing part of 24 U. S. Stat. at L. 505 [U. S. Comp. Stat. (1901) p. 753] does not apply to pending suits. Strong v. U. S., 93 Fed. 257. A commissioner of the circuit court is an officer, and where he has presented no account for his services to the proper court for approval, or to the attorney-general for examination, the court of claims has no jurisdiction. not against the District of Columbia are intended by section 1059 of the Revised Statutes.[56] Under the act of 1880,[57] however, which provided that no claim should be presented to or considered by the court of claims which was rejected by the board of audit, the fact that the amount of damages claimed before the court of claims is larger than that presented by the board of audit is of no importance where the contract relied on is the same.[58] Again this court had jurisdiction of a suit brought by the holder of an "improvement certificate" of indebtedness of the District.[59]

d. Relief of Disbursing Officers From Losses. The act of 1866[60] conferred jurisdiction on said court as to relief of certain disbursing officers from responsibility for losses sustained by capture or otherwise, while in the line of their duty, of government funds, vouchers, records, or papers in their charge, and for which they were responsible.[61]

e. Claims Referred by Congress or Executive Departments. Whenever a claim or matter is pending before any committee of the senate or house of representatives, or before either house of congress,[62] which involves the investigation and determination of facts, the committee or house may cause the same, with the vouchers, papers, proofs, and documents pertaining thereto, to be transmitted to the court of claims of the United States.[63] It has also been provided that congress may refer bills, except for a pension, providing for the payment of a claim against the United States, legal or equitable, or for a grant, gift, or bounty to any person, to be proceeded with as provided by the aforesaid act of 1883.[64]

A broader discretion was conferred for relief under 20 U. S. Stat. at L. 617, authorizing said court to relieve a certain army officer and his sureties from the consequences of a robbery of public funds in his custody. Reynolds v. U. S., 15 Ct. Cl. 314.

63. And the same shall there be proceeded in under such rules as the court may adopt. Said jurisdiction does not, however, extend to certain war claims or claims barred by law. 22 U. S. Stat. at L. 485 [U. S. Comp. Stat. (1901) p. 748].

64. 24 U. S. Stat. at L. 507 [U. S. Comp. Stat. (1901) p. 757] repealing all inconsistent laws or parts of laws.

Particular decisions.— If the claim is referred by act of congress, the court will not go behind the act to ascertain what relief was intended by it. U. S. v. Weil, 35 Ct. Cl. 42. Accompanying papers may be examined, however, to determine what claim is intended to be investigated, since this will not be determined from the letter of transmission. Cofer v. U. S., 30 Ct. Cl. 131. Where a committee transmits a pending bill said court is restricted to the relief claimed therein (Choteau v. U. S., 20 Ct. Cl. 250), and if a condition is imposed by the act so referring it, it must be complied with (St. Louis, etc., Transp. Co. v. U. S., 33 Ct. Cl. 251). Referring a claim does not, however, confer jurisdiction on said court, where jurisdiction is exclusive in another tribunal or officer. Boehm v. U. S., 21 Ct. Cl. 290. But the use of the word "claim" in a reference, under the Tucker Act (24 U. S. Stat. at L. 505 [U. S. Comp. Stat. (1901) p. 752]) will not divest it of jurisdiction if it appears that the reference was under the act and that a bill was pending in the house referring it. Dowdy v. U. S., 26 Ct. Cl. 220.

Under the Bowman Act the court has no jurisdiction of questions of law except as incident to the settlement of facts. Griffin v. U. S., 33 Ct. Cl. 228.

Special reference.— The jurisdiction conferred by a private act cannot be extended to one not named therein, claiming to be owner of the cause of action by anterior assignment. Atocha v. U. S., 6 Ct. Cl. 69. Again a claim for extra service is not ratified by a reference under an act to "determine and adjudge whether any, and if any, what amount is due said trustees for said extra service," even though it at the same time prescribes a rule for the measure of damages, and the extra service was rendered with the understanding

When a [any][65] claim or matter is [may be] pending, in any of the executive departments which may involve [involves] controverted questions of fact or law, the head of such department [with the consent of the claimant], may transmit the same, with the vouchers, papers, proofs, and documents pertaining thereto, to said court [of claims].[66]

f. Assigned Claims. The act establishing the court of claims[67] did not repeal that it was to be subject to the approval of congress. Roberts v. U. S., 6 Ct. Cl. 84.

Equities.— If the act remanding the case opens up the whole case and confers "equitable jurisdiction" to "render judgment for such amount as right and justice may demand" broader powers are conferred than existed when the case was before the court under its general jurisdiction. Inquiry should, however, be nevertheless conferred to the items of claims originally presented to the proper department. Murphy v. U. S., 35 Ct. Cl. 494. And under the Bowman Act the court may find the facts, in a claim transmitted to it wherein the petitioner seeks a reconveyance from the government of realty wrongfully conveyed to it, whereof he has the equitable title. Taylor v. U. S., 25 Ct. Cl. 75. Again where a claim for rent is referred, and a technical defense that claimant had no legal right as assignee to enforce the claim is waived by congress by joint resolution, which remands the case and also provides that if claimant is found to be the equitable owner of the lease and in justice and equity entitled to the rents the court should render judgment in his favor, the court may also entertain an action for all the rent, even that in addition to that included in claimant's first petition, but the terms of such joint resolution cannot be extended to other than the particular case. Cross v. U. S., 14 Wall. (U. S.) 479, 20 L. ed. 721. But an authorization to proceed as a court of equity to adjust accounts for work done and materials furnished in bridge construction does not confer equity jurisdiction of a claim for loss and damage from a charge made by the United States in the original plans. Harvey v. U. S., 13 Ct. Cl. 322. Nor is equity jurisdiction conferred to reform a contract by correcting a mistake therein under a reference of a claim "to be heard and determined according to law and justice." Braden v. U. S., 16 Ct. Cl. 389.

Head of department cannot transmit a claim unless it be one over which he then has jurisdiction, and which has not been finally disposed of (Cotton v. U. S., 29 Ct. Cl. 207); nor can the secretary of the interior delegate claims under Indian treaty stipulations for a final adjustment (Chickasaw Nation v. U. S., 22 Ct. Cl. 222); nor can the navy department transmit a claim over which it has itself no jurisdiction (Pitman v. U. S., 20 Ct. Cl. 253); nor can the head of a department transmit a claim if he is forbidden by law to pay the same (Hart v. U. S., 15 Ct. Cl. 414), and this applies to the postmaster-general (Chesapeake, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., 20 Ct. Cl. 49).

the act[68] intended to prevent frauds upon the treasury by avoiding all assignments of unliquidated claims against it.[69]

g. Claims Growing Out of Treaties. The jurisdiction of such court does not extend to any claim against the government not pending therein on Dec. 1, 1862, growing out of or dependent on any treaty stipulation entered into with foreign nations or with Indian tribes.[70]

h. Indian Depredation Claims. The act of 1891[71] provided that in addition to the jurisdiction then or thereafter conferred on the court of claims it could inquire into and finally adjudicate,[72] in the manner therein provided, all claims for property[73] of citizens of the United States[74] taken or destroyed by Indians in amity with the United States,[75] without just cause or provocation on the part of the owner or agent in charge, and not returned or paid for. Such jurisdiction also extended to cases which had been examined and allowed by the interior department and also to such cases as were authorized to be examined by the act of March 3, 1885, subject to certain limitations.[76]

All power over fees is transferred to the jurisdiction of the court, so that an attorney cannot waive an allowance by the court un-filing of material new evidence, the decision is final[77] and cannot be transmitted by the secretary of war to the court of claims;[78] nor can such court hear a cause decided adversely[79] to the claimant on investigation of the quartermaster-general, no additional evidence being offered;[80] nor where congress has directed the secretary[81] to pay a certain amount to vessel owners, can the court review the secretary's action in rejecting the claim of one and paying the amount to others.[82]

If the petition raises questions of importance affecting the interests of persons before the court it will not be dismissed on the court, under the Tucker Act, should not be too general and indefinite;[89] and compliance with a condition precedent should be alleged and proved.[90] Again distinct causes of action cannot be brought together, by proceedings subsequent to the bringing of the original action, without the consent of both parties.[91]

(II) Demurrer or Plea.[92] Objection to claimant's right to maintain his action should be raised by demurrer[93] or plea,[94] and where it goes to the jurisdiction then by plea thereto.[95]

(III) Amendments — Supplemental Claim. Amendments designed to present a cause as the parties may be supposed to have understood it will be allowed, but amendments to introduce new parties not in privity, to introduce a new cause of action, to enforce a penalty, or where the opposite party has been misled, or where an unfair advantage would result, will not be allowed.[96] An amended petition cannot be filed, where a claim has been referred by a committee of congress and dismissed for want of jurisdiction,[97] nor can an amended petition be filed, without submission to and specific leave from the court, where a case is ground that it shows no cause of action, but the real facts will be ascertained. Morrison v. U. S., 22 Ct. Cl. 206.

92. Set-off or counter-claim.— Defendants in an Indian depredation case, allowed by the secretary of the interior, may file a plea of set-off without electing to reopen the case. But, in such a suit by a firm, defendants' right to set up a counter-claim against one partner will not be considered on motion to strike from the files. Labadie v. U. S., 31 Ct. Cl. 436.

95. Pennsylvania Co. v. U. S., 7 Ct. Cl. 401.

An issue to the jurisdiction is raised by a plea traversing the allegations of the petition that the original owners of the claim have at all times borne true allegiance, and such plea will not be stricken out. Peirce v. U. S., 1 Ct. Cl. 195.

96. Thomas v. U. S., 15 Ct. Cl. 335.

But if the rightful claimant brings suit, but inadvertently neglects to describe her representative capacity, or to correctly allege a requisite ownership, and there is no conflict of interests between claimants, and the proper party is before the court in due time, amendments will be allowed accordingly. Thomas v. U. S., 15 Ct. Cl. 335.

Amendment should be allowed where the statute of limitations will bar a new action, and defendant raises no objection to the party claimant, but pleads to merits. Skelly v. U. S., 32 Ct. Cl. 227.

Consent to filing amendments may also be based upon acquiescence, without a formal agreement, and after delay by defendants to strike out amended petitions and when the statute of limitations would cut off part of the demands if a new suit were instituted, the court will on motion dismiss amendments, sever the causes of action, and treat the amended petitions as original petitions as of the time when each was filed, and the cases will proceed as distinct suits. Eager v. U. S., 33 Ct. Cl. 336.

97. Dunbar v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cl. 674.

remanded to the general docket with merely a general leave to amend.[98] Again a supplemental claim may be asserted, under the act of 1890, although it was not presented to the accounting officers until after payment of the original claim.[99]

e. Limitations — Claims Barred by Law. The United States cannot plead limitations without a law of congress authorizing it.[1] Under the act of 1863,[2] however, every claim against the United States cognizable by the court of claims is forever barred unless the statement of the claim be filed in the court, or transmitted to it, under the provisions of said act, within six years after the claim first accrues, except in cases of disability, which may be brought within three years after removal thereof.[3] The running of a statute of limitations may, however, be suspended in favor of the person legally entitled to prosecute a claim where it is presented by proper averments within the jurisdictional period, even though by a party who could not maintain an action thereon.[4] Again under the Bowman Act of 1883,[5] providing for the transmission of certain cases, the court has no jurisdiction of any claim against the United States which was barred by virtue of the provisions of any law thereof.[6] If the provisions of a statute requiring suit

Claim accrues from the time the demand arose (Kendall v. U. S., 107 U. S. 123, 2 S. Ct. 277, 27 L. ed. 437) or on the completion of a contract and its presentation to a department within six years (Curtis v. U. S., 34 Ct. Cl. 1).

Disability arising from connection with rebellion not excluded (Kendall v. U. S., 107 U. S. 123, 2 S. Ct. 277, 27 L. ed. 437); and rejection of a claim by a department does not postpone the right of action nor suspend the statute (Curtis v. U. S., 34 Ct. Cl. 1).

Statute does not apply if claims were such as the department might have examined and settled, although they were barred from consideration of the court on a voluntary petition of claimant (McClure v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cl. 18); nor does it apply to cases barred under the provisions of the act of July 5, 1884, providing that on the payment of certain enumerated claims receipts thereof by the claimants shall be a full and complete discharge thereof (Nutt v. U. S., 26 Ct. Cl. 15).

Claims are barred when res adjudicata in the executive department at the time of the passage of the act, it being also barred by the statute of limitations at said time. Neal v. U. S., 36 Ct. Cl. 49. And if a claim is transmitted by the executive department without authority, it will, if treated as voluntarily brought by the claimant, be subject to the bar of the statute of which the court is bound to take notice. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. U. S., 34 Ct. Cl. 484. It is held, however, that a committee of congress cannot invest the court with jurisdiction, even for the investigation of facts, of a claim barred at the time of passage of the statute (Balmer v. U. S., 26 Ct. Cl. 82); and this is true substantially as to a claim for unliquidated damages referred by congress (Dennis v. U. S., 23 Ct. Ct. 324), and likewise as to

to be brought within a specified time are jurisdictional and not in the nature of a statute of limitations they cannot be waived by the defendant nor overlooked by the court.[7]

f. Trial. The court determines the facts as well as the law;[8] but the court is not obliged to rule specifically on separate requests of counsel;[9] nor is a claim entitled to precedence under the Indian depredation act where it has neither been allowed nor approved.[10]

g. Reference. The court may in certain cases refer a cause to a special commissioner, and after due deliberation approve his report, and the judgment rendered will be that of the court and not that of the commissioner alone.[11]

h. Evidence and Taking Proof — (i) GENERALLY. The common-law rules of evidence govern the court of claims.[12] Under the statutes, however, special pro-

a claim barred at the time of its presentment to the department of state (Savage v. U. S., 23 Ct. Cl. 255), and also of a claim arising in 1864 and transmitted by the house in 1886 (Furlong v. U. S., 23 Ct. Cl. 32. See also Payne v. U. S., 22 Ct. Cl. 144). And see Belt v. U. S., 23 Ct. Cl. 317; Burwell v. U. S., 22 Ct. Cl. 92; Marshall v. U. S., 21 Ct. Cl. 307.

Statute does not bar a claim presented within six years, and which was never abandoned or formally rejected, and such claim may be properly referred to said court (New York v. U. S., 26 Ct. Cl. 467); and it is held that a claim may be referred on which a right of action in the court of claims is barred by the statute of limitations (Webb v. U. S., 20 Ct. Cl. 487); nor does the statute apply if the claims were such as the department might have examined and settled, although they were barred from consideration by the court on the voluntary petition of claimants (McClure v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cl. 18).

Limitation is not pleadable against a claim referred by the head of an executive department which was presented at the proper department within six years after accrual. U. S. v. New York, 160 U. S. 598, 16 S. Ct. 402, 40 L. ed. 551.

Patents.— Claims for the use of patented inventions are not barred although transmitted by congress after six years. Forehand v. U. S., 23 Ct. Cl. 477. visions have been made in certain cases as to evidence, witnesses, and taking proof,[13] and by the terms of the reference, letters and papers presented before congress, although not admissible under the ordinary rules of evidence, may be considered.[14] Again the evidence should be relevant,[15] and evidence of a material fact should be direct and sufficient.[16]

(II) Burden of Proof — Corroboration. The burden of proof may be cast upon the claimant by the general traverse;[17] and where citizenship goes to the jurisdiction, is preliminary and is questioned, the burden of proof rests upon the claimant.[18] So the facts upon which the relief sought is based must be shown by sufficient proof.[19] Again the evidence should not be that alone of one uncorroborated witness whose testimony is insufficient of itself.[20]

(III) Depositions. If by a rule of court certain requirements exist as to reading and signing of depositions, they must be complied with, or the court may suppress the same on its own motion;[21] and where a deposition fixes a jurisdictional fact, a second deposition inconsistent therewith on such point will be disregarded.[22]

(iv) AFFIDAVITS. Although the testimony of witnesses subjected to oral and cross-examination is ordinarily of a higher character than their ex parte affidavits it is not exclusively so.[23]

(v) VARIANCE. There is a variance where the allegation and proof as to a material fact differ substantially.[24]

i. Rules of Decision. Outside of such exception as may arise as to supreme court decisions governing the court of claims[25] no general rule is deducible as to rules of decision, since the law in this respect necessarily rests upon the various factors entering into specific cases in said court of claims, and is therefore ordinarily of no general value, except perhaps by analogy.[26]

j. Findings or Report — (i) GENERALLY. With the trial in the court of claims the rights of counsel over the findings of fact cease and those of the court begin.[27] If a finding is made in an action at law it determines all matters of fact,[28] and is final where there is any evidence of the fact, and no exception is taken.[29] The court may be required to state whether a particular item or charge of damage is included in its finding, and if so to what amount;[30] but a mass of immaterial details need not be included, neither party requesting it, although if on appeal a question of law is thereafter raised on the facts not included, the findings may include such omitted details.[31] If the suit is a proceeding in equity, a finding of the ultimate facts for the consideration of the supreme court is not required, as the whole record goes up.[32]

(II) French Spoliation Claims. The act of 1885[33] conferred jurisdiction on this court over certain claims to indemnity against the French government, arising out of illegal capture, etc., prior to September, 1800, but the findings[34] of that court were not conclusive and therefore did not estop the next of kin.[35]

(III) Indian Depredation Claims. If the facts found are equivalent to a finding that the trail on which claimant was traveling when his property was taken and carried away by Indians was a lawfully established trail permitted by the laws of the United States, it shows that he was not a trespasser, but was lawfully on the reservation at the time of the taking of his property.[36]

k. Judgment and Relief[37]—(I) Generally. The court of claims can properly render a judgment against the United States which is in duty bound to respond thereto.[38]

(II) Dismissal. If the court is equally divided as to the claimant's right to recover, in an action on a mail contract, the petition will be dismissed in order that he may take his appeal.[39]

(III) Default and Reopening. Where the attorney-general fails to file a plea, the claimant cannot have judgment by default, but must establish his claim by evidence.[40]

(IV) Ascertainment of Amounts Due From Officers, Etc. The court cannot under a petition in such a case, under the statute, go further than to adjudge that petitioner owes the government nothing and cannot render a money judgment in his favor.[41]

(V) Impressed or Captured Property — Apportionment. If a claim is referred for adjudication as to property taken[42] and impressed into the service of the United States, it is erroneous for the court to render judgment based on damages arising from mere detention and delay of the property.[43]

42. If property is captured, intermingled, sold, and the proceeds paid into the treasury in a common fund, judgment may be rendered in each case for a sum which bore the same proportion to the whole fund still on hand that the quantity of claimant's property did to the whole number represented by the fund. In re Intermingled Cotton Cases, 92 U. ascertain only the validity of the claim and its amount and the legal representatives of the parties entitled thereto.[44]

(B) Payment of Awards — Certification by Court. The act of 1899[45] providing that awards were not to be paid until certification to the secretary of the treasury as to the next of kin limits the authority of the court to such certification;[46] nor can it upon motion for a certificate consider the question of counterclaim.[47] Again the provision of the statute directing payment in pursuance of the findings of the court does not impart finality thereto, except as to the validity and amount of such claims.[48]

(VII) Indian Depredation Claims. Under the act of 1891[49] the court may enter judgment against the United States alone for the value of property destroyed or taken, where the tribe to which the depredations belong cannot be identified and such inability is stated.[50] If judgment is entered against a tribe[51] and the depredation was committed by a band thereof not in amity, the judgment will not be vacated, but will be made definite and certain by filing an additional finding of fact.[52] If the party electing to abide by the finding of the department has a prima facie right of recovery or defense, the award must stand, unless it is shown by the party reopening the case that it is erroneous in fact and law.[53]

(VIII) Equitable Relief. If equity powers are specifically conferred by statute[54] upon the court it may reform a contract and adjust the accounts of the parties thereunder.[55]

(IX) Reports or Judgment on Transmitted or Referred Claims. The acts of 1883[56] and of 1887[57] provide for a report of findings to the house committee, or heads of departments, without authorizing the court to render judgment.[58]

By section 13 of the act of 1887,[59] however, if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the court, upon the facts established, that it has jurisdiction to render judgment or decree thereon under existing law or under the provisions of said act, it must proceed so to do, giving to either party such further opportunity for hearing as in its judgment justice may require, and report its proceedings therein to either house of congress or to the department by which the same was referred to said court.[60] In addition to said enactment the terms of the reference may be such as to authorize the entry of judgment, or they may be so qualified that the court may omit the entry of judgment and report the facts to congress with its opinion.[61] Again if by the terms of a reference by congress the court is to pass on a claim and determine the amount due, it may allow extra compensation.[62]

(x) Whether Judgment Final. Judgments rendered prior to the reorganization of the court under the act of 1863[63] had not the final and conclusive character of judicial decrees, and said court could not under said act give effect to a decree in a case reported to congress and still pending there;[64] but a judgment rendered under the general jurisdiction of the court which stands unvacated and unreversed is a final judgment, although founded on an erroneous ruling of law.[65]

(xi) Bar or Conclusiveness of Judgment. The doctrine of res adjudicata is applicable to cases referred to the court of claims.[66] The United States is not, however, bound by judgments against a state in state courts for moneys expended by the state for the benefit of the United States.[67]

(xii) Payment. Where the statute provides that payment shall be a full discharge of claims against the government, the court of claims cannot afterward correct the amount of the judgment.[68] Nor can a claim be reëxamined by the court by virtue of a second reference where the claim is paid, since by such payment it becomes absolutely extinguished.[69] Acceptance of payment of a judg-

l. New Trial — (I) GROUNDS. Under section 1087 of the Revised Statutes the court may grant a new trial for any reason which by the rules of common law or chancery would furnish a sufficient ground.[72] The statute allowing a new trial in case "any fraud, wrong, or injustice[73] in the premises has been done to the United States" refers to matters of fact.[74]

(II) GRANTING APPLICATION[75] AND ITS EFFECT. The court may grant a new trial, on behalf of the United States,[76] if moved within two years[77] after final disposition of the suit,[78] and such power in the court is not taken away by affirmance of the judgment on appeal.[79] Upon a proper showing made on a motion for a new trial the court may remand the cause for reargument[80] or for further

74. A new trial cannot be granted by the court on the ground that the decision is shown by a later decision of the supreme court to have been erroneous. In re District of Columbia, 180 U. S. 250, 21 S. Ct. 357, 45 L. ed. 516.

80. If the court is equally divided and no judgment is announced, but the case is remanded for reargument, the fact that an equal number of the judges in the divided opinion file their decision that the motion be denied upon the merits does not decide the question involved nor deprive the court of jurisdiction to hear and determine the reargument. Ex p. United States, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 699, 21 L. ed. 507.

It constitutes no ground for a rehearing in a spoliation case, where the court has fixed the value of the vessel for the purposes of the decision, that the underwriter was bound to pay the full amount of the insurance, irrespective of the fact that the owners pur-

evidence.[81] The strict rules of the common law, which require a party seeking a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence to show that the absence of the evidence on the former trial was not the result of negligence, apply to cases under the Bowman Act.[82]

XIII. CONCURRENT AND CONFLICTING JURISDICTION.

A. Courts of Same State and Transfer of Causes — 1. EXCLUSIVE OR CONCURRENT JURISDICTION — a. Jurisdiction Conferred on One Court. Where jurisdiction over a particular subject-matter is conferred in express terms by the constitution of a state upon one court and not upon another, it will be presumed that it was the intention that the jurisdiction thus conferred should be exclusive.[83]

b. Power of Legislature to Confer Concurrent Jurisdiction. The legislature may confer upon a court jurisdiction concurrent with that of another court, where such act is a legitimate exercise of the power conferred upon the legislature, having regard also to such jurisdiction as may be conferred upon the latter court by the constitution of the state.[84] So if the jurisdiction conferred upon a court by the constitution is not exclusive, concurrent jurisdiction may be conferred upon another court.[85] If, however, the jurisdiction so conferred is exclusive an act of the legislature conferring the same jurisdiction upon another court will be unconstitutional.[86] And the legislature is not authorized to establish a court with a jurisdiction concurrent with that of another court by a constitutional provision that it may establish courts inferior to the latter court, with a limited jurisdiction.[87]

c. Effect on Court Previously Possessing Jurisdiction of Act Conferring Jurisdiction on Another Court. A court is not ousted of the jurisdiction which it possesses over a subject by a subsequent legislative enactment conferring jurisdiction on another court over the same subject, unless such an intention is plainly manifested either from the words of the statute or by a necessary implication therefrom.[88]

Effect of election.— If a party elects to bring his action in a particular court it will generally operate to confer exclusive jurisdiction on such court (Clement v. Story, 4 La. a county court,[97] a superior court,[98] or a supreme court[99] is exclusive or concurrent with that of another court.

h. Exclusive and Concurrent Jurisdiction Over Particular Matters. In actions concerning infants[1] or lunatics,[2] in actions involving real estate[3] or claims to escheated property,[4] in actions to abate a nuisance,[5] in actions to enforce mechanics' or vendors' liens,[6] in actions to recover penalties,[7] in proceedings to recover taxes and assessments,[8] in the issuance of writs of prohibition,[9] and in habeas corpus, quo warranto, and mandamus proceedings[10] recourse must be had to the constitutional and statutory provisions creating courts and conferring jurisdiction upon them to determine whether different courts have concurrent jurisdiction or whether the jurisdiction of one court is exclusive.

2. Scope and Effect of Proceedings in Another Court — a. Priority and Retention of Jurisdiction. Where two actions between the same parties, on the same subject, and to test the same rights, are brought in different courts having concurrent jurisdiction, the court which first acquires jurisdiction, its power being adequate to the administration of complete justice, retains its jurisdiction and may dispose of the whole controversy.[11] This rule has been applied to proceed-

3. Jurisdiction as to Prisoners Under Arrest, Commitment, or Sentence. Where a person is under prosecution or has been committed or sentenced by one court, no other court will upon application discharge such prisoner from arrest in the absence of authority conferred upon it to so act either expressly or by necessary implication.[19]

4. Jurisdiction as to Property in Custody of Another Court — a. In General. Where property is in the possession of, and subject to the jurisdiction of, one court another court of concurrent jurisdiction cannot interfere with the possession of the former.[20] This rule, however, only applies where the former court is in the actual or constructive possession of the property.[21] Nor does the rule oust the jurisdiction of all other courts to determine the same controversy, so far as they may rightfully do so, but only operates to protect the immediate possession of the first court.[22]

b. Replevin Against Officer Attaching Property. Where property has been wrongfully attached by an officer it is not necessary that an action of replevin to recover such property shall be brought in the court which issued the attachment.[23]

5. Jurisdiction as to Process, Judgment, or Records of Another Court — a. In General. Where a party chooses the remedies of one forum he cannot avail himself of, or call to his aid, those of another forum.[24] And the court from of a commissioner who has taken the same under a commission from the chancery court cannot be compelled by the circuit court in the absence of an order authorizing it from the former court. Smith v. Collins, 94 Ala. 394, 10 So. 334.

which process originally issues or the judge thereof has control of such process for every purpose.[25]

b. Process. Where mesne or final process is issued by a court of general jurisdiction, a court of another jurisdiction will not review or decide upon the regularity of such process.[26]

c. Judgments — (i) In General. In the absence of statutory authority, one court has no power to review the decree of another court.[27]

(ii) Enforcement. Resort should generally be had to the court in which a decree or judgment is obtained for the enforcement of the same,[28] although in some cases another court has been permitted to assume jurisdiction for this purpose.[29]

(iii) Satisfaction. Every court ordinarily has power to control its own process, and the satisfaction of its judgments, and no other court has any power in respect thereto.[30]

d. Execution — (i) Enforcement. A judge of a court has no jurisdiction to enforce by rule the performance of any duty imposed by statute upon the sheriff, such as the enforcement of an execution issued by another court, in a matter of which the former court has not acquired jurisdiction in some recognized mode of proceeding, unless expressly authorized by law to so act.[31]

King v. Nimick, 34 Pa. St. 297.

31. Gibbes v. Morrison, 39 S. C. 369, 17 S. E. 803.

(II) STAY. Under a statute which confers jurisdiction on the judges of the county courts concurrent with those of the circuit courts to issue writs of certiorari and supersedeas, a judge of the former court is not authorized to supersede an execution issued by a justice of the peace unless such action is ancillary to a certiorari to remove the cause from the justice for a trial de novo.[32]

(III) QUASHAL. Where an execution is issued by the court of one county to the sheriff of another county, a court of the latter county has no jurisdiction to quash the same.[33]

6. INJUNCTION OR PROHIBITION AGAINST PROCEEDINGS — a. In General. A court has no power to restrain a suit brought before another court which has complete jurisdiction thereof, and is able to afford adequate relief.[34] Such action may, however, be taken where the former court is unable because of want of jurisdiction to afford the relief sought.[35]

b. Enforcement of Judgment. The enforcement of a judgment rendered by one court will not be enjoined by another court of concurrent jurisdiction.[36] And a superior court will not enjoin the enforcement of a judgment rendered by an inferior court of competent jurisdiction unless some statute conferring jurisdiction upon the former court to so act is shown.[37]

c. Enforcement of Execution. One court cannot control the process of another court, and therefore cannot enjoin the levy of an execution issued on the judgment of another tribunal.[38]

d. Execution of Writ of Mandamus. If a peremptory writ of mandamus is issued by the highest court of a state or another court of competent jurisdiction, an inferior court has no power to stay the same.[39]

7. Vacating, Modifying, or Annulling Decisions — a. In General. Where a judgment or decree has been rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction it can only be reviewed by such methods as are provided by law, and no other court of concurrent jurisdiction has any power to modify, annul, or set aside such a judgment or decree.[40] Thus a judgment or decree of a probate court in respect to

Fraud.— Where a judgment is collusively obtained in a circuit court, upon proceedings instituted in the orphans' court, the latter court may entertain proceedings to set such judgment aside. Munnikhuysen v. Magraw, 57 Md. 172. So where authority is by statute conferred upon a county court to set aside a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace by default, when the party has been deprived of his day in court by fraud, accident, or mistake, the former court has the same power in examining those cases which come within the operation of the statute as it would have in examining its own proceedings. matters particularly within the jurisdiction of such court cannot be modified or annulled by an original proceeding in another court.[41]

b. Judgment Only Incidentally Involved. If the question of the nullity of a judgment is only incidentally involved in an action, such action may be brought before any court of competent jurisdiction.[42]

c. Order by One Department of Court. One department of a court may by order vacate an order previously made by another department of the same court authorizing the issuance of an execution.[43]

d. Judicial Sales. Where a sale has been made under the order of, and confirmed by, a court of competent jurisdiction, a proceeding for the annulment of such sale should be brought before the court issuing the order.[44]

e. Change of Venue. If a change of venue is granted to another court after a proceeding has been commenced to set aside a decree in the court which granted it, the action of the former court in setting aside the decree is valid.[45]

8. Transfer of Causes — a. In General — (i) Constitutionality of Statute Authorizing. As a general rule it is within the constitutional powers conferred upon the legislature of a state to provide by statute for the removal of causes from one court to another.[46]

(ii) Constitutional and Statutory Provisions Control. The question as to the courts from or to which a cause may be removed must be determined in each case from the particular constitutional or statutory provisions in respect thereto.[47] And this applies in determining what causes may be transferred from

An order may be unnecessary where by constitutional provision a court is abolished

(III) TIME OF MAKING APPLICATION. Until a defendant has appeared in a suit he cannot be heard on a motion to remove the cause.[62] And a motion for removal, made after verdict for defendant and before a motion for a new trial by plaintiff has been acted upon, should not be granted, although the statute in respect to the transfer of causes provides that "where any suit, . . . shall have remained pending in a county court more than one year without being determined, such court on motion of any party to such suit, . . . shall order it to be moved to the circuit court."[63]

(IV) TRANSFER OF PAPERS. Where an issue can be intelligently tried without the original petition a transfer of such petition as part of the papers in the case has been held unnecessary.[64]

c. Effect of Transfer and Proceedings Had Thereafter — (I) IN GENERAL. Where an order of removal of a cause from one court to another is made, the former court is thereby divested of jurisdiction and the jurisdiction of the latter court attaches and the cause proceeds as if originally instituted there.[65] The jurisdiction of the court to which a cause is transmitted may, however, cease by reason of the failure of a party to the action to comply with an order of such court, as a result of which there is no issue to try.[66]

(II) Improper Transfer. In case it appears that a cause has been erroneously transferred from one court to another, the one to which it has been so transferred should strike it from the docket.[67]

(III) Retransfer and Remanding. Where a cause which has been taken to the supreme court on the ground that it involved a constitutional point is transferred by that court to another, such transfer will be regarded as a decision that such a question was not involved.[68] The court, however, to which a cause has been removed should not send it back because it does not appear from the transcript of the record that it was transferred according to law.[69]

B. State Courts and United States Courts — 1. Exclusive or Concurrent Jurisdiction in General — a. State Courts. Generally, whenever a legal right arises and the state court is competent to administer justice, the right may be asserted in such court, although the federal court may have concurrent jurisdiction, unless the jurisdiction is limited by law to the federal courts,[70] or the state courts are expressly or by necessary implication excluded by statute.[71] There is this proviso, however, that the state courts must have competent jurisdiction in other respects.[72] Again it was held in an early case that where a right of action, given by a statute of the United States, is in advancement of a common-law right, existing independently of the legislation of congress, in pursuance of the powers delegated by the constitution of the United States, the concurrent jurisdiction of the state courts is not taken away.[73] State courts have therefore jurisdiction of a suit brought by a state against citizens of other states;[74] over controversies between citizens and aliens;[75] of an action by a foreign sovereign against a citizen of the state;[76] of actions by or against foreign consuls, in the absence of statutory

b. Federal Courts. Under the act of congress of 1875 the federal circuit courts were given concurrent jurisdiction with the state courts of all suits of a civil nature arising under the constitution and laws of the United States, irrespective of the citizenship of the parties, and this included jurisdiction over an action to recover premises, the title to which was acquired from the United States.[5] So the federal courts are the most appropriate forum in which to test the constitutionality of legislation by congress, even though the state courts have concurrent jurisdiction.[6] But the concurrent jurisdiction of the national government with that of the states, which it has in the exercise of its powers of sovereignty in every part of the United States, is distinct from that exclusive jurisdiction which it has by the constitution in the District of Columbia.[7] The federal circuit court as a court of equity has also concurrent jurisdiction with the state court, if the requisite jurisdictional facts exist, in all cases of fraud, excepting fraud in obtaining a will of real and personal estate.[8] Such courts have exclusive jurisdiction over causes arising under the interstate commerce act;[9] over certain matters relating to rights to patented inventions;[10] of matters and proceedings in bankruptcy under the federal bankruptcy or other laws so providing;[11] and over litigation arising out of the construction of a bridge over navigable waters as well as for the condemnation of property therefor.[12] The federal courts may also exercise jurisdiction in certain matters of assignments for the benefit of creditors or of insolvency,[13] of actions on bonds given in state courts,[14] and of certain suits relating to matters of the probate or the administration of decedents' estates.[15] But the jurisdiction of the federal courts is not exclusive, under a charter of a corporation declaring it capable of suing and being sued in such courts;[16] nor does an act of congress providing that federal courts shall have power to restrain the publication of manuscripts without the consent of the respective authors confer exclusive jurisdiction on such courts.[17]

c. Election of Tribunal. A claimant of property taken possession of by a receiver of a federal court submits himself to the jurisdiction of such court by filing a petition claiming such property in the suit in which the property was seized and cannot maintain a subsequent action to recover the property in a state court.[18] So plaintiff may by his acts in the state court waive his right to sue in the federal court.[19] But where parties, who are non-residents, have a right to file a cross bill in the state court, they are not bound to do so but may sue in the federal court.[20] In case the relief sought is in the main identical the state court may require the parties to elect between the two suits, although there are parties in the suit in the federal court who are not parties in the state court.[21]

2. Comity in General.[22] The exercise of jurisdiction by a federal court becomes one of discretion, where the only reason why it should not take cognizance of a cause rests on the ground of comity.[23] But comity between a state and federal

Federal courts have not jurisdiction concurrent with state courts over contests involving the removal of executors and the appointment of their successors (Burnside's Succession, 34 La. Ann. 728), or over the appointment of administrators, the confirmation of executors, or the probate of wills (Ball v. Tompkins, 41 Fed. 486). They cannot issue executory process against the property of an insolvent succession (Kennard v. Stanbrough, 9 Rob. (La.) 254; Collier v. Stanbrough, 6 Rob. (La.) 230); nor can they take cognizance of a bill by a citizen of another state against the administrator, to recover a share in the property, and to take the administration of the estate out of the state court, and they cannot make a decree of distribution, determining rights of citizens of the same state as between themselves (Byers v. McAuley, 149 U. court should not preclude the determination of a cause by the latter, where it has jurisdiction thereof and can speedily hear the same and give the desired relief, and such cause is one of great moment to the parties and the public;[24] nor does the rule of comity deprive the federal court of jurisdiction as against a plea of possession as receivers under an order of the state court, and that the accounting prayed for had been made and the subject-matter adjudicated;[25] nor does judicial comity require a federal court to allow the use of pleadings and papers in a pending suit, by a state court which has assumed jurisdiction of the same controversy.[26] But plaintiffs will be left to their remedy in the state court, where a temporary injunction is sought in the federal court merely as ancillary to such remedy and a decree rendered in the former court makes the acts sought to be enjoined a contempt if done.[27] There is also a rule of comity against rendering a decree that may practically destroy the effect of a supersedeas, and under this rule it is the duty of a state court to preserve an entire fund, pending an appeal or writ of error to the state court, where others in the United States supreme court are also claiming payment out of such fund.[28]

3. Jurisdiction as to Territory Ceded to United States. If the United States acquires territory by convention with another sovereign power, it has authority to enact laws for the protection and determination of property rights of the inhabitants of such territory in accordance with the terms of such treaty, and such laws, affecting title to real property within a state, must be construed by the United States courts;[29] and if property is ceded to the federal government the state court has no jurisdiction over it.[30]

4. Priority and Retention of Jurisdiction — a. Statement of Rule. Where a state and federal court have concurrent jurisdiction over the same parties or privies and the same subject-matter, the tribunal where jurisdiction first attaches retains it exclusively, and will be left to determine the controversy and to fully perform and exhaust its jurisdiction and to decide every issue or question properly arising in the case.[31] It therefore follows that such jurisdiction or right only so far as to render the decision of the other court subordinate thereto, and so, without regard to which judgment or decree is first rendered.[35] And where the statute makes the jurisdiction of the federal court exclusive in special proceedings it is limited to determining matters material to and directly connected with the judgment sought to be obtained, and does not necessarily extend to other questions growing out of the subject-matter as between different parties to the exclusion of the jurisdiction of other competent courts.[36] Again it has been held that the general rule as to the retention of jurisdiction does not apply where the parties and privies in the two suits are different,[37] and the relief sought is not the same,[38]

Limitations of rule.— Where a suit removed to a federal court has been dismissed without prejudice, and the amount is such that said court has not jurisdiction, plaintiff may sue in a state court. Adams Express Co. v. Schofield, 64 S. W. 903, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1120. And it is no defense that before the action in the state court was commenced a suit on the same cause of action was pending in a federal court, which suit was dismissed subsequently to the entry of judgment in the state court. Capwell v. Sipe, 51 Fed. 667. Nor is a transfer of a suit from one state court to another a bar to a subsequent suit in a federal court. Hyde v. Stone, 20 How. (U. S.) 170, 15 L. ed. 874. Nor is the dominion exercised in a former suit over the res revived by a proceeding in a state court to set aside a former decree, so as to exclude the jurisdiction of a federal court which has attached in the meantime. Boston Cent. Nat. Bank v. Hazard, 49 Fed. 293. Again where a federal court orders a receiver of a railroad lying wholly within a state to destroy the same the matter is of such importance as to require mature deliberation, and an application of the attorney-general to the state supreme court for leave to bring an action to enjoin such destruction will be granted and said destruction enjoined pending such action. Atty.-Gen. v. Frost, 113 Wis. 623, 88 N. W. 912, 89 N. W. 915. So where a federal court no longer has jurisdiction and plaintiff's rights were not adjudicated therein a state court may proceed. Adelbert College v. Toledo, etc., R. Co., 5 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 14. And federal courts may, to prevent injustice, take action, upon the mere suggestion of counsel, as to the condition of related litigation in the state courts, although the facts do not appear upon the record. Rice v. Sharpleigh Hardware Co., 85 Fed. 559.

Estates of decedents.— Notwithstanding prior proceedings in a state court and the laws of a state, a creditor of a deceased person, where the two resided in different states, may establish his debt in the federal court against decedent's representative. Kendall v. Creighton, 23 How. (U. S.) 90, 16 L. ed. 419. See also Chewett v. Moran, 17 Fed. 820. So an assessment against the estate of an owner of national bank-stock is enforceable in the federal court, although settlement proceedings are pending in a state court. Brown v. Ellis, 86 Fed. 357. And where the executor rejects such a claim the federal court may determine the liability. Zimmerman v. Carpenter, 84 Fed. 747. So, pending such settlement, a citizen of another state, who is a legatee under the will, may bring suit in a federal court against the resident executor and heirs to recover such legacy. Brendel v. Charch, 82 Fed. 262. It has been held, that the pendency of administration proceedings in the state probate court does not bar action in a federal court involving the same issues (Holton v. Guinn, 76 Fed. 96), unless it is distinctly shown that the probate court has possession of the res, as where a bill is brought to set aside an alleged fraudulent assignment under a will, and to enforce a distributee's rights in the estate (Briggs v. Stroud, 58 Fed. 717). Again a federal court has jurisdiction of a suit by aliens to establish their relationship to a decedent and their status as heirs, and to determine the validity of a will under which a citizen of the state claims the estate, notwithstanding the pendency of probate proceedings in the state court, and although there are other persons claiming an interest in the estate who are not parties. b. Persons Detained Under Process of State Courts. Subject to the exceptions hereinafter specified the rule just stated[48] applies to interference by federal courts in the case of persons detained under the process of a state court;[49] nor was it intended by congress that federal courts should by writs of habeas corpus obstruct the ordinary administration of the state criminal laws in the state tribunals.[50] Moreover state courts are equally with federal courts charged with Questions for state courts include the prosecution of a writ of error in criminal cases punishable with death (Kohl v. Lehlback, 160 U. S. 293, 16 S. Ct. 304, 40 L. ed. 432), the effect of a recognizance for appearance, and the meaning of the word "resides" in a clause of a statute relating to commitments (Whitten v. Tomlinson, 160 U. S. 231, 16 S. Ct. 297, 40 L. ed. 406), state constitutional provisions securing to criminals a public trial (Gut v. Minnesota, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 35, 19 L. ed. 573), and inquiries involving the legality of a detention for contempt which is a matter peculiarly within the exclusive ju-the duty of protecting the accused in the enjoyment of his rights under the constitution of the United States whenever those rights are involved in any suit pending before them.[51] It is also a general rule that a federal court will not review the proceedings of a state court on habeas corpus procured by a state prisoner, on the ground of a violation of his constitutional rights, where the petitioner's remedy in the state courts has not been exhausted, and the construction and effect of local statutes must be determined before it is clear that any constitutional right is involved, but will leave him to such remedy, and to a final appeal to the supreme court of the United States to determine any constitutional question raised and adversely determined by the state tribunals.[52] Again the general rule is that habeas corpus will not issue unless the court under whose warrant the petitioner is held is without jurisdiction and that it cannot be used to correct errors. Ordinarily the writ will not lie where there is a remedy by writ of error or appeal, but in rare exceptional cases it may be issued although such remedy exists.[53] These rules do not, however, preclude the right of federal courts to determine summarily by a writ of habeas corpus whether the alleged restraint of the liberty of a person in custody of a state court is in violation of the constitution,[54] or of a law or treaty of the United States,[55] and upon its being so found federal courts may restore such person to liberty.[56] Again the authority given by the statute[57] is not only a discretionary one, but is also one of great delicacy, and should not be exercised in any case where suitable relief can be had through the regular procedure of state tribunals.[58]

c. Persons Detained Under Indictment or Sentence of State Courts. That appeal from an order directing execution in a capital case does not of itself operate to stay execution does not render a statute unconstitutional under the laws of the United States, and a federal court will not interfere by habeas corpus based on the ground that the failure to stay will deprive the prisoner of the privilege to sue out a writ of error from the supreme court to review the final judgment to be entered by the state su-authorities of the state in which they stand charged with crime.[70] And a federal court will decline interposition in an extradition case by writ of habeas corpus, and will leave the question of the lawfulness of the prisoner's detention in the state in which he was indicted to be determined in the first instance by the state courts.[71]

e. Persons in Custody of Courts or Officers of National Government. The powers of the states to inquire by its courts or the judges thereof into the grounds upon which persons within their limits are restrained of their liberty and to discharge them if such restraint is illegal is subject to the exclusive and paramount authority of the national government to determine whether persons in the custody of its courts or officers are held in conformity with law.[72]

f. Federal Officers Detained by State Authorities. Federal circuit courts have power and authority to issue writs of habeas corpus on petition of one in custody for an act done in pursuance of a law of the United States, or on petition of one in custody in violation of the constitution or laws of the United States.[73] It has been determined that this rule applies to a federal officer generally,[74]

If the prisoner has been extradited and a writ of habeas corpus is sued out upon the ground that the extradition was in violation of the constitution and laws of the United States, it is discretionary with the circuit court to refuse to discharge him, where it is not an urgent case, involving either the authority and operations of the general government or the obligations of this country to, or its relations with, foreign nations, and state courts are also bound to protect the accused as to his rights under the federal constitution. Again where a prisoner, having escaped, has been forcibly seized by the governor demanding his extradition the federal court will not release the prisoner where the illegal mode in which he was brought from the state violated no right secured by the constitution or laws of the United States, but solely concerned that state, which might bring the parties abducting him to justice. receivers for such association have been appointed by the United States circuit court.[90] And where the subject-matter of a receivership in a federal court has been disposed of, it is proper to issue an order of sale where a judgment has been obtained in a state court foreclosing a tax lien.[91] So a suit may be brought by a mortgagee in a state court for the purpose of establishing his mortgage rights in property, notwithstanding a receiver has been appointed in a federal court for the grantee of the mortgagor.[92] A state court will not, however, interfere with the jurisdiction of a circuit court over a receiver and questions which grow out of the administration of an insolvent bank's assets.[93] And the rights of a receiver of a corporation who has been appointed by a federal court will not be affected by a subsequent judgment in a state court forfeiting the charter of such corporation.[94]

(II) In State Courts. Where a receiver has been lawfully appointed by a state court and is in possession of the property, his possession will not be interfered with by proceedings or process from a federal court.[95] If, however, the property of an insolvent corporation is once in the possession of a federal court, in proceedings instituted by the corporate creditors, its jurisdiction will not be divested by the dissolution of the corporation and the appointment of a receiver in a state court.[96] And a federal court will not be prevented from entertaining jurisdiction of a suit to set aside conveyances, as void against judgment creditors, by the fact that a receiver has been appointed in the state court.[97]

(III) ACTIONS AGAINST RECEIVERS APPOINTED BY ANOTHER COURT. Where a state court has jurisdiction of the parties and the subject-matter it may entertain a suit against a receiver appointed by a federal court for the purpose of recovering a money judgment.[98] And a federal court of one state will not refuse to entertain garnishment against a receiver appointed by a court of equity of another state, although he is exempt from said proceeding in the latter state, where the petition is properly presented by citizens within the jurisdiction of the former court, and no objection to jurisdiction exists on other grounds.[99] Where, however, the state court appointing a receiver of an insolvent's property, refuses to permit him to be made a party defendant to certain actions, the federal courts have no jurisdiction to entertain such an action.[1]

(IV) ACTIONS BY RECEIVERS IN FEDERAL COURTS. A receiver appointed by a state court may in some cases bring an action in the federal court affecting the receivership property.[2] If, however, the former court refuses to permit a receiver appointed by it, of an insolvent corporation, to sue the officers for fraudulent misappropriation of its property, jurisdiction of the suit will not be entertained by a federal court.[3]

(V) POSSESSION BY RECEIVER. After property has come into the possession of a receiver appointed by a federal court, such possession cannot be interfered with by subsequent process from a state court;[4] nor can a federal court interfere

7. Jurisdiction as to Process or Judgment[6] of Other Court — a. Of Federal Court Over That of State Court. A federal court may take jurisdiction of a suit on a judgment rendered in a state court;[7] give equitable relief under a state statute, upon a judgment and execution in a state court, where property has been fraudulently conveyed to defeat creditors;[8] may relieve against a title fraudulently obtained in a state court, by enjoining the assertion of such title;[9] or may in a proper case dissolve an ex parte preliminary injunction which has been granted in a state court before removal of a cause therefrom.[10] It has, however, no power to vacate, modify, or annul a judgment rendered by a state court of competent jurisdiction;[11] or to allow an amendment of an execution where the state supreme court has refused to allow such amendment.[12] It has also been held that it has no jurisdiction to set aside a judicial sale made by a state court.[13]

b. By Federal Court Against Those of State Court. It is a general rule that a federal court has no power to enjoin proceedings in a state court.[22] Thus the enforcement of a judgment rendered by a state court having jurisdiction of the controversy cannot be enjoined by a federal court.[23] So the latter court cannot enjoin the enforcement of quarantine regulations of a state;[24] an action of trespass against a federal officer for seizing the property of a stranger to the writ;[25] criminal proceedings in a state court;[26] the receipt of property by a person as directed by a state court;[27] the acts of receivers appointed by a state court;[28] or the removal of a city officer by the municipal authorities.[29] Exceptions to the rule, however, exist where action by the federal court may be necessary to render effective a decree of such court,[30] or where such court has been vested with priority of jurisdiction over the subject-matter and the parties, and in order to protect its jurisdiction it is necessary to enjoin the proceeding in the state court.[31] It has also been held that a federal court may enjoin proceedings before a body which is not legally a court;[32] prevent a plaintiff from making an unfair use of the processes of courts of law to deprive complainants of rights which, under the facts alleged in the bill, the state court cannot adequately protect;[33] or prevent a person from being subjected to a multiplicity of suits.[34]

C. Courts of Different States or Countries — 1. Comity. Comity does not require that it should be assumed by the courts of one state that those of another state are more competent to determine a case and do justice between the parties than are the courts of the state to whose jurisdiction the actor in the suit has voluntarily submitted it.[35] So a court of one state in construing an act of congress as to its effect on a contract made in another state is not compelled to follow the construction which the court of the latter state has placed on such act.[36] And where the person or property of a non-resident is within the jurisdiction of a state court, it may retain such jurisdiction for the purpose of administering justice to its own citizens.[37] Again a contract may be enforced by the courts of a state, where it was legal in the state in which it was made and was to be performed, provided it is not dangerous, inconvenient, immoral, or contrary to public policy to so enforce it.[38] And it has been held that a court may exercise a jurisdiction which is ancillary to that of a court of another state, where an attempt is made by a litigant by trick or fraud to avoid service of process in the latter court which is that of his place of residence.[39] But a court of one state is not authorized, by the comity between states, to collate advancements made by an intestate, who had resided and died in another state, to his children therein.[40] So where a liability is created only by the statutes of a state, the question of its enforcement is not one of comity but of the power of the courts of the forum.[41]

2. Constitutionality of Statute of Another State. The doctrine has been affirmed in Massachusetts that the supreme judicial court of that state may, when necessary to the decision of a cause within its jurisdiction, determine the question whether a statute of another state violates the constitution of that state.[42]

3. Scope and Effect of Other Proceedings. Where proceedings are pending in a state court the rule generally prevails that a court of another state will not entertain jurisdiction of another proceeding between the same parties, and involving the same subject-matter, where the former court has complete jurisdiction.[43] This rule is declared to rest entirely on the comity between the courts of different states.[44]

4. Persons Under Arrest. Where a person is held in one state under a requisition from the governor of another state a court of the former state may compel the production of the body of the prisoner before it and inquire into the cause of the detention.[45]

5. Property in Custody of Court. The rights of a court of one state as to the control of property which has come into its possession and over which it has jurisdiction will be recognized by courts of other states, and such possession will not be interfered with by the latter.[46]

6. Enforcing Judgment of Court of Another State. A state court may take jurisdiction of proceedings for the purpose of enforcing a judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction of another state.[47]

7. Injunction Against Proceedings. A state court may enjoin a party within its jurisdiction from prosecuting an action in a court of another state.[48] It has, however, been held that after a suit has been commenced in a state court a court of another state will not enjoin the prosecution of the same.[49]

8. Receivers. Upon the principles of interstate comity, a receiver of a railroad corporation appointed in one state may be allowed to institute proceedings in another state to obtain possession of the rolling-stock, although such stock has been attached in the former state by a creditor of the corporation.[50] But where mortgages on land in a state are sent to a domestic receiver by a foreign receiver of a foreign corporation, the courts of such state will have jurisdiction of the proceeds in the absence of any agreement or condition for collection.[51] Again where a person is appointed receiver in actions in courts of several states, in each of which states the corporation was incorporated, relief may be obtained against the receiver in one of such states without conflicting with the jurisdiction of the others.[52]

9. Obtaining Leave of Court to Sue. A statutory or code provision that no action shall be brought after final judgment in foreclosure to recover any part of the mortgage debt without leave of the court in which foreclosure was had does not apply to an action to recover a balance due after foreclosure of a mortgage in the court of another state on land situated in the latter state.[53]

D. Different United States Courts — 1. In General. Where several actions are instituted in different United States courts of concurrent jurisdiction between the same parties or their privies, and which invoke the same subject-matter, that court which first acquires sufficient jurisdiction of the parties and the cause of action should dispose of the controversy.[54] And where in such proceedings in a federal court of one state a decree of foreclosure rendered in a federal court of another state is ratified, with a reservation by the former court of certain rights as to the distribution of funds and the priority of liens, such court may determine the priority of claims filed therein on a judgment recovered in such state over the lien of the mortgage.[55]

2. Recovery of Interest on Judgment of Another Court. Where a judgment has been rendered in a court of claims, interest thereon cannot be recovered in the United Sates circuit court, the question being incidental to the original suit and one for the former court to determine.[56]

3. Where Receiver Has Been Appointed. The possession by a receiver of the property involved in a suit, where he has been appointed by a federal court, cannot be interfered with by another federal court of coördinate jurisdiction.[57] Where, however, a claim is made by a citizen of a state in the federal court for such state against an insolvent corporation, which is in the hands of a receiver appointed by

E. Civil Courts and Courts-Martial. Although no supervisory or correcting power is possessed by civil courts, by the writ of habeas corpus, over the proceedings of a court-martial, yet by means of this writ they may in all cases inquire into the jurisdiction of such court and may discharge a person from sentence, if it appears that he was not amenable to its jurisdiction.[59] A military tribunal, however, while proceeding regularly in the exercise of its jurisdiction to try a person for alleged desertion from the army, cannot be interfered with by the civil courts,[60] nor can such courts be availed of in a habeas corpus proceeding by one who is legally in custody awaiting trial by court-martial.[61]

"Cove lands."— A conveyance of "cove lands" contained the descriptive words "now or heretofore flowed by tide-water." A large tract of land had formerly been a part of the cove, and was still called "cove lands" but the tide had ceased to flow thereon because of the filling by the city. The court said: "Hence 'cove-lands,' according to the explanation of the deed, was to cover land that was then flowed by the tide and land which had been a part of the cove and was still traceable as such, and which had not been already made the subject of legal grant or appropriation." I. DEFINITION.

An action of covenant is a remedy recognized by law for the recovery of damages for the breach of a covenant or contract under seal.[1]

II. ORIGIN AND HISTORY.

This action is said to have descended from the ancient writ breve de conventione.[2] Primarily its purpose seemed to be to enforce the specific performance of the covenant broken,[3] although if the breach was such that performance could not be enforced, or defendant continued refractory, damages occasioned thereby in proportion to the injury sustained were accorded the plaintiff.[4] It was also by virtue of this action that fines were collected at common law.[5] Likewise it was the ancient remedy of a lessee, if ejected, against his lessor to recover the term and damages, or if the term had expired, or the ouster had been committed by a stranger claiming paramount title, then to recover damages only.[6] Its use as a real action, except in conveyancing, early disappeared, however, but as a personal action ex contractu it has been brought down to the present time.[7]

III. NATURE AND SCOPE OF REMEDY.

A. Distinguished From Other Actions. Where there is a sum certain due on an instrument under seal, covenant is usually spoken of and considered as a

The Pennsylvania court in its earlier procedure attempted by a modification of the action of covenant to use this action as a remedy for a failure to convey lands, but the result was unsatisfactory, and the court was forced to acknowledge that as a substitute for an equitable remedy it was bungling and inadequate, and that a recourse to equity should be encouraged. And for the end of this supposed difference, the fine, or finalis concordia (final agreement) is made, whereby the deforciant (now called the cognizor) acknowledges the tenements to be the right of the plaintiff." concurrent remedy with debt.[8] Since generally speaking it lies only on a sealed instrument,[9] while assumpsit lies only on an unsealed one,[10] it is never concurrent with that remedy.[11] Where the damages are unliquidated, or where the covenant is for the performance of something, or for a payment other than money, covenant alone is the proper remedy.[12] And while the rule is otherwise, yet there are certain instances in which a party may elect between covenant and case.[13]

13. The true distinction seems to be that where the covenant creates the liability no action can be maintained except upon the instrument, but if there is a legal liability independent of the covenant, the remedy may be sought either upon the instrument or by an appropriate action for the wrong. Luckey v. Rowzee, 1 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 295.

Distinguished from account.— While theoretically the actions of covenant and account have different provinces, they may practically overreach each other at some points (Addams v. Tutton, 39 Pa. St. 447); and it would therefore seem that the mere fact that an action of account can be maintained would not defeat the action of covenant if the parties had entered into mutual stipulations and agreements (Hall v. Stewart, 12 Pa. St. 211). See also, generally, Election of Remedies.

law recognized as a sealed instrument.[16] Nor will the fact that the instrument in conclusion states that it is signed and sealed justify an action of covenant thereon if it does not in law constitute a specialty.[17]

b. Exceptions to Rule — (I) IN ABSENCE OF STATUTE. An exception to the above rule, founded on the custom of London and other particular places, existed at common law, the action in such cases being maintainable in the absence of a seal;[18] so too it could be maintained on an unsealed instrument where defendant derived title under a grant or patent from the crown.[19] In this country it has been held that the action could be maintained against the grantee in an instrument who had recognized and accepted the same, although it be signed and sealed by the grantor only;[20] but the decided weight of authority is to the contrary.[21]

(II) BY VIRTUE OF STATUTE. The statutes in some states having abolished the distinction between sealed and unsealed instruments the action may in such jurisdictions be maintained upon any writing operating as a deed,[22] or on which

Extent of exception.— In those jurisdictions where the exceptions to the general rule have been the farthest extended, it is nevertheless held that the exceptions did not embrace mere personal contracts by which no estate in land passed. Harrison v. Vreeland, 38 N. J. L. 366.

Reason for exception.— The supposition that a grantee who has taken an estate by a deed poll may be compelled to perform the conditions of the grant by an action of covenant instead of an action of debt or assumpsit seems to have its root in the cases cited in Coke Litt. 331*a*. That the grantee is bound and may be compelled to perform the conditions in some sort of action is admitted (see COVENANTS), but the cases cited by Coke were actions of debt, and are not authority for the proposition that covenant can be maintained, that author merely saying that an action would lie, and not that the technical action of covenant was available. See Hocking County v. Spencer, 7 Ohio 149, Pt. II; Maule v. Weaver, 7 Pa. St. 329; Johnson v. Muzzy, 45 Vt. 419, 12 Am. Rep. 214.

debt or assumpsit might have been maintained before the abolition of such distinction.[23]

c. Application of Rule — Binding on Defendant Only. The rule that the instrument must be sealed applies only to the execution by the defendant; the fact that the execution by the plaintiff may be so defective that he can be proceeded against only in assumpsit is immaterial.[24]

2. Nature of Promise or Agreement — a. In General. The form or nature of the instrument is entirely immaterial. So long as it is a writing under seal and contains an agreement or obligation the action will lie.[25]

b. May Be Implied. While a binding agreement or obligation is of course necessary to support this action,[26] it is not essential that the covenant be an express one; it is sufficient if the words used are such that the law will imply an agreement.[27]

c. Conditions of Bonds. Covenant may be maintained upon a condition of a bond provided such condition, as is often the case, contains in itself, either expressly or impliedly, an agreement at law;[28] but it will not lie for the breach of words in an instrument, constituting mere matter of defeasance where, by the performance of some collateral act, the bond might become void.[29] Where the

this action if he has not strictly performed his part of the agreement,[37] except where such performance is prevented by defendant.[38]

IV. BY WHAT LAW GOVERNED.

As the remedy by which an agreement may be enforced is determined by the lex fori,[39] it follows that covenant will not lie on an instrument which is not by the law of the forum in which the action is brought a specialty, although it would be considered as under seal in the place where it was made.[40]

V. JURISDICTION[41] AND VENUE.[42]

In the absence of a statute regulating the place in which actions shall be brought,[43] the action of covenant, when founded on privity of contract, is transitory and may be brought as a transitory action; but when founded on privity of estate the action is local.[44]

VI. LIMITATION OF ACTION.[45]

Unless barred by the statute of limitations the action may be brought at any time.[46]

VII. PARTIES.[47]

A. Rule — Necessity of Privity. Generally speaking the action of covenant will lie only between those parties between whom exists a privity of contract or estate,[48] and who have executed the instrument declared on;[49] and where the covenant is joint[50] all the parties thereto must be joined.[51] In the application of this rule it has been universally held that where the covenant runs with the land the action may be maintained by the assignee thereof;[52] where the covenant is inter partes it would seem that no matter for whose benefit it may have been made the action must be brought in the name of the parties to the instrument or their legal representatives,[53] although the opposite has also been held.[54] And while it generally lies against one's executor,[55] the rule is otherwise where it is to be performed by the testator in person.[56]

51. Hays v. Lasater, 3 Ark. 565.

B. Effect of Partnership Relations. Where there is a valid and subsisting covenant existing between the parties, the mere fact that there is a relation of partnership also existing between them does not preclude a resort to this remedy for a breach of such covenant.[57] This has been held to be true, although there may be accounts between the parties which would require unraveling in a court of equity.[58]

VIII. PLEADINGS.[59]

A. Declaration — 1. In General. The declaration in an action of covenant must show with whom the defendant covenanted,[60] and aver the amount of damages claimed;[61] the instrument need not, however, be declared on in hæc verba,[62]

See also Van Rensselaer v. Hays, 19 N. Y. 68, 75 Am. Dec. 278, which decision, however, was held to rest upon the statute, although the court says that there was at least reasonable ground to affirm that a party claiming by a devise or assignment from a party in whose favor rent was reserved could maintain covenant therefor at common law.

Actions to recover rent generally see LANDLORD AND TENANT.

What constitutes a covenant running with the land see COVENANTS.

Covenant as substitute for warrantia chartæ.— It was the rule in England that a party who had conveyed away an estate with a covenant of warranty which ran with the land could not sustain a warrantia chartæ, but that it must be brought by the last grantee, and each grantee must vouch his warrantor to the end of the chain of title. As the remedy by warrantia chartæ is not used in this country, it has been held that the action of covenant lies in its stead against a remote grantor. Birney v. Hann, 3 A. K. Marsh. and where there has been a mistake in the wording of the instrument the declaration may be drawn according to the actual agreement of the parties.[63]

2. AVERMENT OF BREACH. It is necessary that the declaration allege with certainty a breach of the covenant declared on;[64] and where the declaration is sufficient as to some and insufficient as to other breaches, the plaintiff may recover for those sufficiently assigned.[65] Generally speaking such breaches may be assigned in the words of the instrument,[66] if such general assignment necessarily amounts to a breach.[67]

3. AVERMENT OF PERFORMANCE OF CONDITIONS PRECEDENT. If the liability of the defendant depends upon the performance of a prior covenant or condition on the part of the plaintiff, performance, or a tender of performance of such condition, must be averred;[68] but defendant need not aver the performance of other acts which he is not legally bound to perform.[69]

4. AVERMENT OF SEALING. The declaration must also allege that defendant entered into and sealed the covenant declared on.[70] It is not sufficient to allege that he made his covenant,[71] or that he executed a writing setting it forth in hæc

63. Gower v. Sterner, 2 Whart. (Pa.) 75.

Sufficiency.— According to the general rules of pleading, the declaration of the plaintiff in covenant states a good cause of action where it declares upon the instrument according to its legal operation and assigns breaches substantially in the words of the covenant (Withers v. Pricket, Litt. Sel. Cas. (Ky.) 192); and where the covenant is set forth with sufficient certainty to prevent any reasonable mistake as to the ground of action, inconsistent and immaterial allegations may be rejected as surplusage (Hearn v. Cole, 1 Dow 459).

Conclusion.— The usual conclusion in a declaration of covenant is "that the defendant (though often requested to do so), hath not kept his said covenant, but hath broken the same," and then demands damages. But this conclusion is merely formal and not necessary to the legality of the declaration. Outtons v. Dulin, 72 Md. 536, 542, 20 Atl. 134.

verba, concluding with "sealed and delivered," etc., and the name of the covenantor, with the letters L. S., nowhere else alleging that the instrument was sealed.[72]

B. Pleas — 1. Necessity of Special Pleas. Inasmuch as there is no one plea which would put in issue every material allegation in the declaration in covenant, there is strictly speaking no plea which can be termed the general issue;[73] hence generally speaking the defendant must plead specially the performance of the covenant,[74] or excuse of performance,[75] or matters in discharge thereof.[76] And while to constitute a good plea he must confess and avoid or traverse all the allegations in the declaration,[77] the part not answered being admitted,[78] a plea as broad as the declaration and responsive to it is sufficient.[79]

2. Non Est Factum. A plea of non est factum has, however, been considered of the nature of a general issue to the extent that special matters of defense may be subjoined thereto, where such matters could be subjoined to the general issue.[80] The plea itself puts in issue only the execution of the covenant in a lawful manner;[81] hence defendant may under this plea show that his agent by whom the deed was executed had no power so to do,[82] but he cannot question the power of the plaintiff to enter into the covenant,[83] nor can the question of title to land arise under such plea in an action between a lessor and lessee.[84]

3. Non Infregit Conventionem. The plea of non infregit conventionem, which puts in issue the breach assigned,[85] when properly supported by evidence, is a good plea.[86] Such plea would not, however, be proper where the breach of the covenant is assigned in the negative.[87]

IX. Issues, Proof,[88] and Variance.

A. In General. In an action of covenant the evidence must be responsive to the pleadings and conform to the declaration and instrument declared on;[89] the lands were encumbered by a mortgage, would be bad for duplicity. Camp v. Morse, 5 Den. (N. Y.) 161.

A plea of leave and license is not a good plea to an action of covenant. McDonald v. Great Western R. Co., 21 U. C. Q. B. 223 [citing Dobson v. Espie, 2 H. & N. 79].

Pennsylvania procedure.— In Pennsylvania the courts allow a plea of performance without leave, etc. This plan was peculiar to Pennsylvania, and is unknown in England. Its purpose is to save the trouble of special pleading, inasmuch as it gives the defendant every advantage which he could derive from resorting to the particular and technical labor of forming special pleas. See 14 Cent. Dig. tit. "Covenant, Action of," § 18.

Procedure on variance.— Where there is a variance between the covenant as made and as declared upon, the defendant must, in order to have the benefit of it, crave oyer and demurrer. Steele v. McKinnie, 5 Yerg. (Tenn.) 449.

What constitutes a variance see Ross v. Parker, 1 B. & C. 358, 2 D. R. 662, 8 E. C. L. 153; Mayelston v. Palmerston, 2 C. & P. 474, M. & M. 6, 12 E. C. L. 684; Price v. Birch, 1 Dowl. P. C. N. S. 720, 11 L. J. C. P. 193, 4 M. & G. 1, 43 E. C. L. 1; Hennessey v. Weir, 11 U. C. C. P. 179.

hence any evidence of an alteration or variation of the covenant by parol would be inadmissible.[90]

B. Burden of Proof. Inasmuch as the plaintiffs must prove the damages occasioned by the breach of the covenant, the right to open and close the argument lies with them;[91] and as a covenant not only implies, but generally expresses, a consideration, the burden would be upon a party pleading no consideration in an action of covenant to sustain his plea.[92]

X. TRIAL.[93]

A. Right to Demand Oyer. Although the plaintiff in his declaration may claim damages for certain breaches of the covenant only, the defendant may nevertheless demand oyer and have the whole instrument read.[94]

B. Effect of Default. The default by defendant in an action of covenant admits all the traversable averments in the declaration, and leaves nothing to be done but the ascertainment and assessment of the damages.[95]

XI. VERDICT[96] AND JUDGMENT.[97]

A. Form and Requisites. Where a part of the breaches are defectively assigned in the declaration, a general verdict or judgment is erroneous;[98] nor will the verdict cure a declaration so defective as to recite no cause of action;[99] but mere technical informality in a judgment in an action of covenant will not invalidate it.[1]

B. Amount Recoverable and Ascertainment Thereof. The amount recoverable as damages is the equivalent of the injury or loss occasioned by the breach or breaches,[2] which have been sufficiently alleged in the declaration,[3] and Sufficiency of evidence.— It is prima facie sufficient for plaintiff to prove the execution of the covenant by the defendant, and he need not produce or prove the counterpart; it being incumbent upon the defendant if he wished to show that he sealed and delivered it only on condition that the plaintiff seal and deliver the counterpart, to introduce proof to that effect. I. REQUISITES AND VALIDITY.

A. Express Covenants — 1. Nature and Essentials — a. In General — Definition. As a noun,[1] a covenant has been defined to be an agreement[2] between two or more parties, reduced to writing[3] and executed by a sealing[4] and delivery thereof; whereby some of the parties named therein engage, or one of them engages with the other, or others, or some of them, therein also named, that some act[5] hath or hath not already been done; or for the performance or non-perform-

The terms "indenture" and "covenant," although usually found in deeds, have not a technical meaning. An instrument may be indented, whether under seal or not, and the practice has in fact become obsolete. Magee v. Fisher, 8 Ala. 320, 322.

As a verb, to covenant means "to agree, to contract, to enter into an agreement, compact, or contract." Richardson Dict. [quoted in Hayne v. Cummings, 16 C. B. N. S. 421, 426, 10 Jur. N. S. 773, 10 L. T. Rep. N. S. 341, 111 E. C. L. 421].

2. Every covenant implies an agreement. Reade v. Bullocke, Dyer 57*a*.

3. Must be in writing. Petty v. Church of Christ. 70 Ind. 290.

4. If the seal affixed is not that of the party who substantially makes the promise, and who is to be charged by it, the promise remains, and is not changed into a contract of a higher nature. Cram v. Bangor House, 12 Me. 354.

ance of some specified duty;[6] an agreement between two or more persons, by an instrument under seal, to do or not to do some particular thing;[7] a contract of a special nature;[8] a contract under seal, made by the parties, in which they mutually state what is to be performed by each;[9] a promise under seal.[10] In common parlance, however, the term is applied to any agreement whether under seal or not.[11] An express covenant is a covenant explicitly stated in words.[12] Any words that amount to or import an agreement, being under seal, are sufficient to constitute a covenant. No precise or technical language is required by law.[13] A

"A covenant then being an agreement, it is plain that in legal as also in common parlance, there must be at least two parties to it; or, it cannot be regarded as an agreement or covenant in any sense. And it would seem to be equally plain that no such covenant can be deemed perfect, unless the names of the parties are set forth or made known by it in some way; for without this it does not appear, that there are parties to it; quod non apparet, non est, seems to be the rule in this respect; and without parties, it is obvious that there can be no agreement or covenant." b. Acceptance of Deed Containing Covenants on Part of Grantee.[22] The acceptance of a deed, whether poll or inter partes, containing a covenant on the part of the grantee is equivalent to an agreement on his part to perform the same, and it is immaterial that the deed is not signed by him. As to the nature of his liability, however, whether as upon an express covenant,[23] or as upon an implied undertaking,[24] the courts are utterly at variance.

B. Implied Covenants — 1. In General. An implied covenant has been defined to be such a covenant as is inferred or imputed in law from the words used.[25] While no covenant of title will be implied from the fact of the conveyance of land,[26] nor, independently of statute, and with the exception of the words

"Implied covenants depend for their existence on the intendment and construction of law. There are some words which do not of themselves import an express covenant; yet, being made use of in certain contracts, have a similar operation and are called covenants in law, and are as effectually binding on the parties as if expressed in the most unequivocal terms. There may be implied covenants in a deed in which there are express covenants, but there can be none contradictory to or inconsistent with or repugnant to express covenants." Hambly v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., 21 Fed. 541, 552 [citing Randel v. Chesapeake Canal, 1 Harr. (Del.) 233, 270; Platt Cov. 40].

L. 402, it is said: "But, after the intention and meaning of the parties is once ascertained, after the agreement is once inferred from the words employed in the instrument, all difficulty which has been encountered in arriving at such meaning is to be entirely disregarded; the legal effect and operation of the covenant, whether framed in express terms, that is whether it be an express covenant, or whether the covenant be matter of inference and argument, is precisely the same; and an implied covenant, in this sense of the term, differs nothing in its operation or legal consequences from an express covenant."

"Grant" and "convey."— A conveyance in fee simple containing the words "grant" and "convey" implies a covenant that at the date of the conveyance the land was free from encumbrances. Cruger v. Ginnuth, 3 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 24.

The words "convey and warrant" in a deed for the conveyance of lands are to be deemed and held as a covenant by the grantor that the premises conveyed were at the execution of such conveyance free from all encumbrances (Dalton v. Taliaferro, 101 Ill. App. 592), and also for quiet enjoyment (Jackson v. Green, 112 Ind. 341, 14 N. E. 89; Dehority v. Wright, 101 Ind. 382; Worley v. Hineman, 6 Ind. App. 240, 33 N. E. 260). They have the force of the special covenants of warranty that are usually contained in common-law deeds. Keiper v. Klein, 51 Ind. 316; Kent v. Cantrall, 44 Ind. 452; Carver v. Louthain, 38 Ind. 530.

"Bargained and sold."— Under N. M. Comp. Laws (1884), § 2750, the words "bargained and sold," or words to the same effect, unless restricted in express terms, amount to a covenant of seizin, and against encumbrances made or suffered by the grantor or the person claiming under him. Douglass v. Lewis, 131 U. S. 75, 9 S. Ct. 634, 33 L. ed. 53 [affirming 3 N. M. 345, 9 Pac. 377].

General warranty.—In South Carolina, since the act of 1795, a deed of general warranty has been "interpreted to embrace all the covenants used in conveyances of land prior to that time, viz., that the vendor is seized in fee; that he has a right to convey; that the vendee shall quietly enjoy; and that free from all encumbrances; and also it seems for further assurances." Lessly v. Bowie, 27 S. C. 193, 197, 3 S. E. 199. See also Evans v. McLucas, 12 S. C. 56; Jeter v. Glenn, 9 Rich. (S. C.) 374.

By the words "I warrant the title against all persons whomsoever" (Iowa Code (1897), § 2958) is understood a covenant warranting not less against all manner of defect of title than against all encumbrances existing at the date of the deed. Funk v. Creswell, 5 Iowa 62. They imply all the usual covenants in a deed of conveyance in fee simple. Van Wagner v. Van Nostrand, 19 Iowa 422.

"Grant."— Under Cal. Civ. Code, § 1113, subd. 1, the use of the word "grant" in any conveyance of an estate of inheritance or fee simple implies a covenant that previous to the time of the execution of the conveyance the grantor has not conveyed the same estate, or any right, title, or interest therein, to any person other than the grantee. Lyles v. Perrin, 134 Cal. 417, 66 Pac. 472.

The word "suffered," as used in the statutory construction of conveyances, necessarily implies that the covenant is not confined to the voluntary acts of the grantor. Thus it will extend to and include a tax for a municipal improvement assessed on the land during his title thereto. Shaffer v. Greer, 87 Pa. St. 370.

Applicable to contracts to convey.— The covenants raised by the words "grant, bargain, and sell," by force of the statute of May 28, 1715, are not applicable alone to deeds executed, but extend to articles of agreement in derogation of the common law, must be strictly construed,[32] and consequently, in order to constitute the statutory covenants, the words of the statute must be strictly followed. The use of less than all of the words implying the covenants is insufficient.[33]

b. Abolition of Implied Covenants. It is sometimes provided by statute that no covenant shall be implied in a conveyance, whether the conveyance contains any special covenant or not.[34]

3. From Language of Express Covenants. Covenants may be implied from the language of express covenants in order to effectuate their clear intention and to give them their full and beneficial operation.[35]

4. From Recitals. While a covenant, when expressed by way of recital, may be as obligatory as if expressed in the formal part of the agreement,[36] the sounder view seems to be that no covenants of title can be implied from a recital.[37]

Recital in a deed, when equivalent to a covenant.— In some cases it has been held that a mere recital in a deed may amount to a covenant. Hale v. Finch, 104 U. S. 261, 26 L. ed. 732 [citing Severn's Case, 1 Leon. 122]. In Great Northern R. Co. v. Harrison, 12 C. B. 576, 609, 16 Jur. 565, 22 L. J. C. P. 49, 74 E. C. L. 576, it is said, by Parke, B.: "Whenever the court can collect from the instrument an engagement on the one side to do or not to do something, it amounts to a covenant, whether it is in the recital or in any other part of the instrument." In Farrall v. Hilditch, 5 C. B. N. S. 840, 854, 5 Jur. N. S. 962, 28 L. J. C. P. 221, 7 Wkly. Rep. 409, 94 E. C. L. 840, Williams, J., said: "On the other hand, it is plain that the court ought to be cautious in spelling a covenant out of a recital of a deed; because that is not the part of a deed in which covenants are usually expressed. The proper office of a recital, said Lord Mansfield in Moore v. Magrath, Cowp. 9, like that of a preamble of an act of parliament, is, to serve as a key to what comes afterwards."

J., dissenting) misapprehended the ground upon which Procter v. Johnson, 1 Bulstr. 2, Yelv. 175, was decided, a mistake also fallen into by Lord Eldon in Browning v. Wright, 2 B. & P. 13, 25, 5 Rev. Rep. 521]; Delmer v. McCabe, 14 Ir. C. L. 377 [cited in Rawle Cov. § 280 note]. But see Severn's Case, 1 Leon. 122.

True ground of decision in Procter v. Johnson.— In Procter v. Johnson, 1 Bulstr. 2, Yelv. 175, A and B were joint tenants for years of a mill; A assigned all his interest to C without the assent of B and died. B afterward by indenture reciting the lease, and that it came to him by survivorship, "granted the residue of the term" to J. S. and covenanted for quiet enjoyment of it, notwithstanding any act done by him. B also gave the purchaser a bond conditioned to perform the covenants, "grants," articles, and agreements in the assignment; and the purchaser having been evicted by C, of the moiety assigned to him by A, brought an action on the bond and obtained judgment. The decision of the court according to the report of the case is placed most expressly

5. From Description of Premises. No covenant will be implied from matter contained in a deed merely descriptive of the premises conveyed.[38] And as a general rule the statement of the quantity of land conveyed in the deed is merely matter of description, and implies no covenant that the land contains the quantity stated, unless clearly so expressed;[39] but where an intention is clearly manifest to regard the quantity stated as an essential element of the contract,[40] as upon a sale of land in gross for a sum certain upon a statement of the quantity,[41] or where land conveyed is described by metes and bounds, and includes land which the grantor did not own,[42] a covenant that the land contains the stipulated quantity will be implied.[43] Again the conveyance of land described as bounded upon an existing street or way creates an implied covenant that such way or street exists,[44] and that the purchaser shall have the use of it,[45] but not that it is of the width and distinctly upon the force of the word "grant," in the deed of assignment, which by the court was held to amount to a warranty of title, and that the recital was merely explanatory of the subject-matter of the grant, showing the extent of it; that it was the residue of the "whole term," and not an undivided moiety of it that was granted. "It seems material to refer the case of Procter v. Johnson, 1 Bulstr. 2, Yelv. 175, to the true ground of the decision, because if the case turned solely on the recital, it might perhaps be thought that a general recital in a conveyance of the inheritance of an estate that the vendor is seized in fee would amount to a general warranty and would not be controlled by the limited covenants for the title — a proposition which certainly cannot be supported." set out in the conveyance,[46] or that the street has been actually opened and put into condition for use, but only that it has been laid out.[47] Still less will it impose on the grantor any obligation to grade and construct it at his own expense.[48] It has also been decided that the descriptive words as to the street or way, particularly if the deed refers to an accompanying plan of lots or streets, are not to be understood merely as signifying that the street in question is coextensive with the lot conveyed, but that its extent, direction, and termini are to be such as are delineated on the plan or otherwise indicated by the deed.[49] But if land be conveyed as bounded on a street and the grantor has no interest in the adjacent land so described, this does not amount to an implied covenant that there is such a street legally laid out.[50]

6. Reservations. Where a reservation in a deed cannot be construed as an exception,[51] as where the thing reserved is not a part of that previously granted, it will be construed as an implied covenant on the part of the grantee.[52]

7. Conditions. As conditions subsequent tend to destroy estates, they are not favored in law, and if it is reasonably doubtful whether a provision in a conveyance was intended as a condition subsequent or a covenant, the breach of which may be compensated in damages, it will be held to be the latter.[53]

whole, which should be such as to support, rather than defeat, the instrument. Except in the case of covenants of forfeiture,[57] or of statutory covenants implied from the use of particular words,[58] covenants will be most strongly construed against the covenantor.[59] Technical words will be construed as they are understood by scientific men and mechanics acquainted with the business in regard to which the covenant is made.[60]

4. Collateral and Auxiliary Covenants. A collateral covenant is one made in connection with a thing granted, but which does not relate immediately thereto, and does not run with the land.[65] An auxiliary covenant is what the term implies, one in aid or support of the principal covenant, although not immediately connected therewith.[66]

5. Alternative and Disjunctive Covenants. Covenants are alternative[67] or disjunctive[68] in the proper legal sense of the term, when they give an election to the party bound by them to perform one or the other of the acts to which they relate, and by the fulfilment of one covenant to discharge himself wholly from the performance of the other.[69] Such covenants are to be construed according to the manifest intent of the parties.[70]

6. Dependent or Independent Covenants.[71] The question whether covenants are to be held dependent[72] on, or independent[73] of, each other, is to be determined by the intention and meaning of the parties as it appears in the instrument and Warranty of title.—Although under N. C. Code, § 1334, as judicially construed, a warranty of title to land is treated as a personal contract, an action of covenant can be maintained thereon only where the party could have vouched in an action real; and where a deed contains a warranty to the grantee but not to his assigns, since such assigns could not have vouched the grantor in an action real, they can neither maintain an action on such covenant, nor defend under it against the grantor. Smith v. Ingram, 130 N. C. 100, 40 S. E. 984, 61 L. R. A. 878.

Collateral covenants have been defined as such as are beneficial to the lessor, without regard to his continuing the owner of the estate. Such covenants do not pass to the assignee. Vernon v. Smith, 5 B. & Ald. 1, 17, 24 Rev. Rep. 257, 7 E. C. L. 13.

Enforcement in equity.— A collateral covenant restraining the assignment of an agreement will not be enforced in equity, where it appears in the contract that such restraint is but an incident to the objects of the principal covenants, which have been substantially performed. Grigg v. Landis, 21 N. J. Eq. 494.

66. Bouvier L. Dict.

Collateral and auxiliary covenants also differ in the extent of the covenantor's liability. On a collateral covenant he is liable, although the conveyance is void (Wade v. Merwin, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 280; Gaskell v. King, 11 East 165, 10 Rev. Rep. 462; Kerrison v. Cole, 8 East 231; Mouys v. Leake, 8 T. R. 411); but it is otherwise in the case of an auxiliary covenant; all dependent covenants share the fate of the principal covenant (Guppy v. Jennings, 1 Anstr. 256; Kerrison v. Cole, 8 East 231; Northcote v. Underhill, 1 Salk. 199).

67. Covenants alternative constitute a species of covenants which arise, "in the proper legal sense of the term, when they give an election to the party bound by them to perform one or other of the acts to which they relate, and by the fulfilment of one covenant to discharge himself, wholly, from the performance of the other." Harmony v. Bingham, 1 Duer (N. Y.) 209, 230.

One of the means of discovering such intention has been laid down by Lord Ellenborough to be this, "that where mutual covenants go to the whole of the consideration on both sides, they are mutual conditions, the one precedent to the other; but where the covenants go only to a part, there a remedy lies on the covenant to recover damages for the breach of it; but it is not a condition precedent." Covenants will be construed as dependent where the act of each party is to be done at the same time. Powell v. Dayton, etc., R. Co., 12 Oreg. 488, 8 Pac. 544.

The question as to whether covenants are dependent or independent only arises where the non-performance of one covenant is pleaded directly or peremptorily to an action upon another; it does not arise where the breach of one is offered as a set-off against the breach of the other. On the other hand, where the covenants are dependent on each other, the rule is otherwise.[76]

7. PARTIES TO COVENANTS[77] — a. In General. While a clearly manifested intention to the contrary will always control, there is a strong presumption that a grantor intends to bind himself, even though he covenants only for his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns.[78] So too persons acting in a fiduciary capacity are held personally bound by their covenants,[79] even though expressly made in such capacity, on the ground that where a party contracts in the right of another, having no authority to bind his principal, he is to be held personally liable, as otherwise the covenantee would have no remedy for a breach of the contract.

b. Joint or Several Covenants — (i) As to Covenantors. As to covenantors, they may covenant jointly or severally, or jointly and severally, and it seems that they may be bound severally, although their interests are joint.[80] It is a general presumption of law, when two or more persons undertake an obligation, that they undertake jointly. Words of severance are necessary to overcome this primary presumption.[81] As a general rule the question as to whether the liability incurred is joint or several, or joint and several, is to be determined by looking at the words of the instrument;[82] and according to some courts at them alone — the subject-matter of the contract and the interests of the parties assuming the liability being regarded by them as having nothing to do with the question.[83] On the other hand it is held that where from the subject-matter of the covenants it is the evident intent of the parties that they should be taken distributively, they may be so taken, although there are no words of severalty.[84]

c. Limitation by Other Covenants[97] — (I) In General. In all cases where several covenants are contained in a deed, the courts endeavor to ascertain the intention of the parties from an attentive consideration of the whole deed, and construe the covenants, either as independent of or as restrictive of each other, according to such apparent intention.[98]

(II) Express Covenants Control Inconsistent, Implied Covenants — (A) In General. Express covenants, whether general or limited, override and control inconsistent, implied covenants.[99] Where, however, there is no inconsistency between the express and the implied covenants effect will be given to both.[1]

(B) Covenants Implied by Statute. In the case of statutory covenants implied from the use of particular words, there is a conflict of authority as to the effect of express covenants upon them. On the one hand, on the ground that such covenants are only intended to operate when the parties themselves have omitted to insert covenants, it is held that they are limited by the terms of the express covenants,[2] some cases going to the extent of holding that they do not even arise when ports to convey the right, title, and interest of the grantor to the land described instead of conveying the land itself, a general covenant of warranty will be limited to that right or interest. express covenants are inserted.[3] On the other hand, it is held that the implied covenants are not qualified or restrained by those which are expressed.[4] Where the statutory and express covenants are not inconsistent, or are independent of each other, the courts will give effect to both.[5]

(III) Restrictive Words in First of Covenants Having Same Object. Restrictive words inserted in the first of several covenants having the same object will be construed as extending to all the covenants, although they are distinct.[6]

(IV) First General Covenant Not Limited by Subsequent Restrictive Covenant. Where the first covenant is general, a subsequent limited covenant will not restrict the generality of the preceding covenant, unless an express intention to do so appear or the covenants be inconsistent, unless there appear something to connect the general covenant with the restrictive covenant, or unless there are words in the covenant itself amounting to a qualification.[7]

10. Duration of Personal Covenants.[10] A personal covenant may be unlimited in duration,[11] but the death of the covenantee will determine the covenantor's liability.[12]

11. Release or Discharge of Personal Covenants. Liability on a personal covenant can only be discharged by the covenantee,[13] and at common law this could be done, before breach, only by an instrument under seal;[14] after breach an agreement or transaction that would operate as an accord and satisfaction in ordinary cases may be pleaded in discharge.[15] This technical distinction has, however, been to a considerable extent modified, and it has been repeatedly held that whenever the breach complained of has been superinduced by the action or agreement of the plaintiff, and the matter is properly availed of in defense, he will not be allowed to recover on the technical breach thus produced.[16] A personal covenant may also be discharged by an act of law which renders its performance impossible.[17]

B. Covenants of Title — 1. In General — a. Necessity. As has been previously stated,[18] covenants of title are never implied. Consequently, in the absence of fraud or mistake,[19] if a deed contains no covenants of title, all questions of title are at the risk of the grantee. If the title fail, he is without remedy, either at law or in equity, against the grantor.[20]

b. Usual Covenants of Title[21] — (i) England.[22] The covenants usually entered into in England by a vendor seized in fee are that he is seized in fee; that he has power to convey; for quiet enjoyment by the purchaser, his heirs, and assigns; that the estate is free from encumbrances; and for further assurance.[23]

Where an estate is decreed to be sold for payment of debts and no surplus remains, the court will not require the heir to covenant any further than his own acts, and the same rule applies as to devisee. But where the surplus is considerable the heir must covenant that neither he nor his immediate ancestor, and in the case of the devisee, that neither he nor his devisor, have done any act to encumber. Loyd v. Griffith, 3 Atk. 264, 26 Eng. Reprint 954.

Where the vendor claims immediately under the person who bought the estate there he need not covenant any further back than from that person, for the buyer has the benefit of the covenants in the conveyance to that person at the time he purchased. Loyd v. Griffith, 3 Atk. 264, 26 Eng. Reprint 954.

Heirs.— According to the usual course upon the conveyance of an estate derived by descent, the covenants are against the acts of the ancestor from whom it descended and the acts of the party conveying, and if there should have been an immediate heir, supposed to be dead, it is reasonable that the covenants should extend to his acts. Tenants for life.— If settled estates are sold under a power to sell them with the consent of the tenant for life, he must covenant for the title. The vice-chancellor said that he apprehended that where the only persons who were immediately interested in the estates were tenants for life, it was the usual course to make them covenant for the title; that the tenants for life in this case stood in the same situation as if there had been a power to sell the estates with their consent; in which case it would be a matter of course for them to enter into the covenants. In re London Bridge Acts, 13 Sim. 176, 36 Eng. A contract for a good and sufficient warranty deed is not a contract to convey a good title, the words "good and sufficient" relating only to the validity of the deed to pass the vendor's title. Tinney v. Ashley, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 546, 26 Am. Dec. 620; Aiken v. Sandford, 5 Mass. 494.

A covenant to convey by a "warranty deed" is complied with by the tender of a deed containing the common covenant of warranty, that is, for quiet enjoyment. The term does not include a deed with a covenant against encumbrances. Wilsey v. Dennis, 44 Barb. (N. Y.) 354.

A quitclaim deed is all that a purchaser can claim under a contract to convey with good title. Kyle v. Kavanagh, 103 Mass. 356, 4 Am. Rep. 560.

A question of fact.— What are the usual covenants in a given case is a question of fact to be determined by a jury (Bennett v. Womack, 7 B. & C. 627, 14 E. C. L. 283, 3 C. & P. 96, 14 E. C. L. 468, 6 L. J. K. B. O. S. 175, 1 M. & R. 644, 31 Rev. Rep. 270), or to be referred to a master (Wilson v. Wood, 17 N. J. Eq. 216, 88 Am. Dec. 231 [citing Henderson v. Hay, 3 Bro. Presumption from unusual covenant.— The refusal of a vendor to take upon himself the ordinary liability, as where he gives only a special warranty, although a general warranty is usual, must be regarded as sufficient, unless satisfactorily explained, to put every one of ordinary prudence upon inquiry as to the source and validity of the title thus brought under suspicion (Lowry v. Brown, 1 Coldw. In Louisiana a buyer who acquires under a clause of non-warranty, having at the time knowledge of the danger of eviction, is held by implication from those facts to purchase at his risk and peril, and cannot therefore sue for restitution of the price. In some jurisdictions, however, it is held that where the encumbrance does not affect the title, but only the physical condition of the property, as in the case of an open notorious easement, of which it is the servient tenement, the purchaser must be presumed to have seen it, and to have fixed his price with reference to the actual condition of the land at the time, and that such encumbrance is no breach of the covenant;[30] and the same is true of easements and servitudes imposed by law.[31] But other courts do not recognize this distinction, and hold any existing easement or servitude a breach of the covenant.[32] Manifestly there is no breach where the grantee knowingly assumes the encumbrance.[33]

d. Effect of Covenants as Merging Previous Representations. One important effect of covenants of title has been held to be that representations made to the purchaser by the vendor as to the title or possession of the land are merged in the covenants of the deed subsequently made.[34] These decisions are, however, contrary to the decided weight of authorities, which hold that if the representations are known to be false when made, and have produced damage to the opposite party, the subsequent consummation of the agreement will not shield the grantor, whether there are covenants in the deed or not.[35] Undoubtedly, when the false and fraudulent representations relate to some matter collateral to the title of the property, and the right of possession which follows its acquisition, such as the location, quantity, quality, and the condition of the land, the privileges connected with it, or the rents and profits derived therefrom, in such cases they may be ground for an action for damages.[36]

By vendor out of possession.— Such representations by the vendor, as to his having title to the premises sold, may also be the ground of action where he is not in possession, and has neither color nor claim of title under any instrument purporting to convey the premises, or any judgment establishing his right to them. Andrus v. St. Louis Smelting, etc., Co., 130 U. S. 643, 9 S. Ct. 645, 32 L. ed. 1054. Thus, in Wardell v. Fosdick, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 325, 7 Am. Dec. 383, an action for deceit was sustained against the vendor of land which had no actual existence, the court holding that in such case the purchaser might treat the deed as a nullity. The land not being in existence there could be no possession, and of course no eviction, and consequently no remedy upon the covenants, and the purchaser would be remediless if he could not maintain the action.

element of title,[38] it later came to be looked upon as synonymous with title itself, and consequently the covenant of seizin was considered a covenant for title.[39] In some of the United States, however, it is construed as a covenant of actual, as contradistinguished from legal, seizin, and it is held that it is not necessary that the covenantor should have a seizin under an indefeasible title. A seizin in fact is sufficient, whether the covenantor gained it by his own disseizin, or whether he was in under a disseizor. In the view of the courts of such states he was sufficiently seized and had full right to convey, if, at the time he executed the deed, he had exclusive possession of the premises, claiming the same by a title adverse to the true owner.[40] As a corollary it follows that in these jurisdictions the cove-

3. COVENANT OF RIGHT TO CONVEY.[43] The covenant of good right to convey imports only that the grantor had a right to convey, and does not imply that he had possession.[44] But in those states which have adopted the doctrine of actual seizin this covenant does not imply a warranty of absolute title, but only of actual seizin and possession.[45]

on the estate conveyed, whereby the same may be defeated, wholly or in part, whether the claims or liens be uncertain and contingent or otherwise.[48] Where, however, the covenant is coupled with and supplemental to the covenant for quiet enjoyment — as is usually the case in England[49] — or the covenant of warranty, it is said to become to all intents and for all purposes a covenant in futuro,[50] although the more reasonable view would seem to be that in its operation it is no more than a covenant against encumbrances, in præsenti, joined with a covenant of quiet enjoyment, or covenant of warranty, in futuro.[51] What will constitute a covenant against encumbrances, as well as its scope, is a question of construction, to be determined by the intention of the parties as manifested by the deed.[52] In this connection a distinction is to be observed between a covenant that the land is free from encumbrances, and one that the purchaser shall enjoy the premises free from encumbrance. In the latter case the covenant is not broken, notwithstanding the existence of encumbrances, so long as undisturbed possession is enjoyed.[53]

The covenant for quiet enjoyment is an assurance against the consequences of a defective title and of any disturbance thereupon.[54] In its operation and effect it is practically identical with the covenant of warranty, and extends to all lawful, outstanding, adverse claims upon the premises conveyed.[55] This covenant is to be construed according to the true intention of the parties to the deed.[56]

Its object is to give full effect and operation to the estate and interest conveyed by the deed (Zabriskie v. Baudendistel, (N. J. Ch. 1890) 20 Atl. 163), but it cannot enlarge that estate or interest (Uhl v. Ohio River R. Co., 51 W. Va. 106, 41 S. E. 340).

There is an element of mutuality in this covenant. Cochran v. Pascault, 54 Md. 1.

A release of a mortgage is a further assurance. Colby v. Osgood, 29 Barb. (N. Y.) 339.

The mode of procedure is dependent upon the form of the covenant. Thus where the covenant was "to make such assurance as his counsel should advise," it was held that if the covenantee himself devised the assurance, and made it, the covenantor was not bound to perform it and that it was a good plea that concilium non dedit advisamentum (Bennet's Case, Cro. Eliz. 9. See also Lamb's Case, 5 Coke 23*b*; Rosewel's Case, 5 Coke 19*b*; Cro. Eliz. 297); but where the covenant is to execute a deed to the satisfaction of the covenantee's counsel, the covenantor must tender the deed (Baker v. Bulstrode, 2 Danv. 39, 3 Keb. 273, 2 Lev. 95, 1 Mod. 104, T. Raym. 232, 1 Vent. 255). In the ordinary course of business the draft of the intended assurance is sent to the seller for his perusal, and to enable him to take counsel's advice upon it (Sugden Vend. (8th Am. ed.) 614), and if the assurance is to be made at the cost of the covenantee, he is bound to tender it before he can call upon the covenantor to make the assurance (Heron v. Treyne, 2 Ld. Raym. 750. See also Hallings v. Connard, Cro. Eliz. 517).

The covenantee must give notice of the assurance, specifying its nature (Miller v. Parsons, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 336), for otherwise the covenantor would not know his counsel or their advice (Bennet's Case, Cro. Eliz. 9). On the other hand, if the particular assurance is not ascertained, the covenantor must give the covenantee notice what assurance he will make. Heron v. Treyne, 2 Ld. Raym. 750.

Advice of counsel.— In Bennet's Case, Cro. Eliz. 9, it was held that the covenantee is not only to show the covenantor the assurance that he is to make, but is to permit him to read it, and to go to his own counsel to consider it; and the covenantor is to have convenient time after the assurance shown him to perfect it. Compare Manser's Case, 2 Coke 3*a*. See also Andrews v. Eddon, And. 122; Wotton v. Cooke, Dyer 337*b*. And see Symms v. Smith, Cro. Car. 299.

Requisites of act.— The act required to be done must be necessary (Warn v. Bickford, 9 Price 43. See also Gwynn v. Thomas, 2 Gill & J. (Md.) 420); it must be lawful (Heath v. Crealock, L. R. 10 Ch. 22, 44 L. J. Ch. 157, 31 L. T. Rep. N. S. 650. See also Johnson v. Nott, 1 Vern. Ch. 271); it must be reasonable (Pet's Case, 1 Leon. 304); and the request must be made within a time in which the act is possible of performance (Nash v. Ashton, Skin. 42, T. Jones 195). The assurance must be reasonably devised and must not differ from the nature and purport of the original bargain. Miller v. Parsons, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 336.

Removal of encumbrances.— Under a covenant for further assurance a purchaser may of course require the removal of a judgment or other encumbrances. Sugden Vend. (8th Am. ed.) 613 [citing King v. Jones, 1 Marsh. 107, 5 Taunt. 427, 15 Rev. Rep. 533, 1 E. C. L. 219; Stock v. Aylward, 8 Ir. Ch. 429]. See also Zabriskie v. Baudendistel, (N. J. Ch. 1890) 20 Atl. 163. This proposition must, however, be limited to those cases in which the covenants for title are not limited or restrained either by the acts of the vendor or by the particular estate conveyed. Where the other covenants are limited to the acts of the vendor, or restrained by any particular estate, the purchaser will have no right under the covenant for further assurance to require the conveyance of any other estate, or the removal of an encumbrance not created by the vendor. Rawle Cov. §§ 104, 105 [citing Armstrong v. Darby, 26 Mo. 517; Colby v. Osgood, 29 Barb. (N. Y.) 339; Davis v. Tollemache, 2 Jur. N. S. 1181, explaining Taylor v. Dabar, 1 Ch. Cas. 274, 2 Ch. Cas. 212; Smith v. Baker, 1 Y. & Coll. Ch. 223, 20 Eng. Ch. 223, and criticizing Sugden Vend. (14th ed. (8th Am. ed.) 612)]. See also Uhl v. Ohio River R. Co., 51 W. Va. 106, 41 S. E. 340, where it is said that the covenant applies only to the estate granted.

The statutory covenant for further assurance implied in the words "grant, bargain, and sell," embraces such encumbrances only as the vendor has control of. Armstrong v. Darby, 26 Mo. 517.

Duplicate of conveyance.— Under a covenant of further assurance it seems that the purchaser may require a duplicate of his con-vendee, and operates as well to secure the performance of all acts necessary for supplying any defect in the former as to remove all objections to the sufficiency and security of the latter. No technical words are required to create this covenant.[59]

7. Covenant of Warranty[60] — a. In General. The covenant of warranty in general use throughout the United States, although in the same language as the common-law warranty, is entirely distinct therefrom both in nature and effect. Warranty[61] was in its nature essentially real, and was only applicable to estates of veyance. Napper v. Allington, 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 166, 21 Eng. Reprint 962.

Production of deeds.— If a vendor retains the title-deeds, and covenants for further assurance only, the purchaser may under that covenant compel him to enter into a covenant for the production of the deeds. A covenant that if the grantors obtain title from the United States they will convey the same to the grantees by deed of general warranty is a covenant for further assurance, entitling the grantees to a conveyance of the legal title when the contingency happens (Lamb v. Burbank, 14 Fed. Cas. No. 8,012, 1 Sawy. 227), but it does not cover the acquisition of the title of the United States from any intermediate party (Davenport v. Lamb, 13 Wall. (U. "Warrant was a technical term, having its own peculiar signification, and without the use of which, the contract, imported by that term, could not be created, unless in cases in which the law implied the contract. Co. Litt. 384, a. The import of the word, when applied to freehold estates, was 'that the warrantor would, upon voucher, or by judgment in a writ of warrantia chartæ, yield other lands and tenements to the value of those that shall be evicted by a former title.' Ibid. 365, a, and 366, a. The contract to warrant had the same effect in all respects, as if the party had contracted in the terms of this definition, if such a contract were allowed, and the specific execution of it could be enforced. Co. Litt. 366, a; Ibid. 389, a. Such a contract was not permitted in relation to any interest, other than freehold, because no other interest could be claimed in a real action; and voucher lay in none but real actions, except in cases of wardship. Co. Litt. 101, b. The writ of warrantia chartæ also lay only for a tenant of the freehold, and was only used when voucher did not lie, because the tenant was not impleaded, or because he was impleaded in an action in which it was the policy of the law to prohibit delay, and therefore forbid the voucher; and it lay in such cases, only because the voucher did not lie. Vin. Abr. tit. Warr. Char. D. It was then supplementary to, and in lieu of, voucher. If the word warrant was applied to chattel interests or personal property, it operated as a personal covenant for the title, not because such was its strict technical meaning, but because, although improperly used, (as it could not have its technical effect, and the parties intended that it should have some effect), it must have that of a personal covenant, or none. This recovery in value, could only be had upon voucher or warrantia chartæ, its substitute, and only in lands or tenements; and if the warrantor had no lands or tenements at the time of his entering into warranty, (that is, freehold, and then only when the disturbance was by an estate of freehold; although it seems that in order to prevent a failure of justice it might be construed as a personal covenant, where it could not operate as a covenant real. On the other hand the covenant of warranty[62] is, in its nature, altogether personal, and appearing on the voucher, and taking upon himself to warrant by defending the suit,) or, at the time of suing out the writ of warrantia chartæ; or, if the tenant failed to vouch, or to sue out his warrantia chartæ before he was evicted, he was wholly without remedy upon his warranty. Bac. Abr. tit. Warranty, M.; a proof, that it had in no case the effect of a personal covenant. There is, however, one case mentioned in Coke Littleton, 102, b, in which the warrantor might be personally responsible in some form. But, if he was, it was on account of his wrong in voluntarily defeating the effect of his warranty, by alienating the lands which he had specially bound to warranty." "The term warrant, as applied to real estate in that country [England], having obtained a technical and legal signification derived from feudal principles; I do not perceive the necessity, so far as regards the remedy or form of action, of understanding the term in the same sense, when used here. If effect is given to such a covenant by action to recover damages, as on a warranty of things personal, I apprehend no principle of law will be violated. Such a construction will, no doubt, correspond with the intention of the parties; while the ancient remedy is inconsistent with what must be supposed to be the intent." Townsend v. Morris, 6 Cow. Distinguished from common-law warranty. — See Bricker v. Bricker, 11 Ohio St. 240.

Whenever there is a departure from the form of real warranty as found in the books, from which to infer a change of contract, it must be considered a personal covenant, whether executors are named or not, and although the heirs are named. Tabb v. Binford, 4 Leigh (Va.) 132, 26 Am. Dec. 317.

The addition of the word "defend" has been held to differentiate the covenant of warranty from warranty, and to render the former personal, or rather of a double character, the word "warrant" being construed technically, so as to bind the warrantor to compensate in lands or tenements of equal value, upon voucher, or warrantia chartæ; the word "defend" being construed as making a personal covenant equivalent to a covenant for quiet enjoyment. Stout v. Jackson, 2 Rand. (Va.) 132 [citing Williamson v. Codrington, 1 Ves. 511, 27 Eng. Reprint 1174;

is an assurance that the grantee and his heirs and assigns shall not be deprived of the possession by force of a paramount title; it runs with the land, and passes with the fee to any subsequent grantee of the same title. In effect it is to all intents and purposes identical with the covenant for quiet enjoyment,[63] although the distinction has been drawn that the latter is to defend the possession merely, while the covenant of warranty is in addition an undertaking to defend the land and the estate in it.[64] On the other hand it has been said that under the covenant for quiet enjoyment, as sometimes expressed, a recovery may be had where it would be denied under the covenant of warranty.[65] As with the other covenants of title, no technical words are indispensable to a covenant of warranty.[66]

b. General Warranty. The obligation in a general warranty of title is not that the covenantor is the true owner, or that he is seized in fee, with the right to convey, but that he will defend and protect the covenantee against the rightful claims of all persons thereafter asserted.[67]

c. Special Warranty. A covenant of warranty is special when it applies only to certain persons or claims to which its operation is limited or restricted, its usual form being a warranty against the grantor and all persons claiming by, through, or under him.[68] It is well settled that such a covenant only refers to the existing title or interest granted, and does not bar the covenantor from claiming the same premises against his own covenantee or grantee by title acquired subsequent to the making of his own deed.[69]

C. Covenants as to Use of Real Property — 1. In General. Covenants restraining the use of real property, although not favored,[70] will nevertheless be enforced by the courts, where the intention of the parties is clear in their creation, and the restrictions or limitations are confined within reasonable bounds;[71] but where there has been such a change in conditions as to defeat the object and purpose of the covenant, and to render it inequitable to deprive the covenantor of the privilege of using his property as the new conditions require, equity will not enforce specific performance.[72] In construing such covenants effect is to be given

Where a grantor conveys with "warranty" only, the covenant will be regarded as a "general warranty," since a covenant in a deed must be construed most strongly against the grantor. Allen v. Yeater, 17 W. Va. 128.

Liability of devisees.— Under a conveyance containing only special warranties, the responsibility of the grantor's devisees is dependent upon and limited by the covenants contained in the conveyances, by which he was not to be answerable for any losses which might occur from the assertion of a title superior to his own. Gittings v. Worthington, 67 Md. 139, 9 Atl. 228.

Such a covenant cannot be extended to a general covenant of warranty against all persons; and the rule is that a party has no remedy on the ground of a mere failure of title, if he has taken no covenants to secure the title, and there is no fraud in the transaction. to the intention of the parties, as shown by the language of the instrument, considered in connection with the circumstances surrounding the transaction, and the object had in view by the parties;[73] but all doubts must be resolved in favor of natural rights and a free use of property, and against restrictions.[74]

2. Enforcement in Equity. Covenants restraining the use of real property afford an instance of that class of cases in which equity will charge the conscience of a grantee of land with an agreement relating to the land, although the agreement neither creates an easement nor runs with the land. The jurisdiction is not confined to cases in which an action at law can be maintained, and such covenants, although not binding at law, will be enforced in equity, provided the person into whose hands the land passes has taken it with notice of the covenants.[75] It must be shown, however, that the use of the land by such person for the purposes covenanted against will materially injure the premises for the benefit of which the covenant was made,[76] and that it relates to or concerns the land, or its use or enjoyment.[77] And the tendency of the later decisions, both in England and in the United States, is, it seems, to restrict rather than to extend this equitable doctrine.[78] In the absence of notice, a personal covenant imposing a burden will adhere exclusively to the covenantor, unless a privity of estate or tenure subsisted

"Reason and justice seem to prescribe that, at least as a general rule, where a man, by gift or purchase, acquires property from another, with knowledge of a previous contract, lawfully and for valuable consideration made by him with a third person, to use and employ the property for a particular purpose in a specified manner, the acquirer shall not, to the material damage of the third person, in opposition to the contract and inconsistently with it, use and employ the property in a manner not allowable to the giver or seller." In Spencer's Case, 5 Coke 16*a*, 1 Smith Lead. Cas. 174, Spencer demised a house and lot to S for years. S covenanted for himself, his executors, and administrators, that he, his executors, administrators, or assigns, would build a brick wall on part of the land de-

however, so much depend on whether it is to be performed on the land itself, as on whether it tends directly or necessarily to enhance its value or render it more beneficial and convenient to those by whom it is owned or occupied, for if this be the case every successive assignee of the land will be entitled to enforce the covenant.[83]

(II) Necessity of Privity of Estate. A covenant which may run with the land can do so only when there is a subsisting privity of estate between the covenantor and the covenantee,[84] that is, when the land itself, or some estate or mised. S assigned the term to J, and J to Clark. Spencer sued Clark for a breach of the covenant to build the wall. The court by the first resolve held that a covenant only bound the assignee when it was concerning a thing in esse, parcel of the demise, not when it related to a wall to be built. By the second resolve, they held that if the covenant had bound the "assigns" by express words, it would have bound the assignee, although it was for a thing to be newly made, as it was to be upon the thing demised; but that if the covenant was for a thing to be done collateral to the land, and did not touch or concern the thing demised, in any sort, as if it were to build a house upon other lands of the lessor, the assignee should not be charged, although the covenant was for the covenantor and "his assigns." The two principles thus settled have always been acknowledged as law: that the assignee when not named is not bound by a covenant, except it relates to a thing in esse at the time; and that when named, he is not bound by a covenant collateral to the land, but only for things to be done on or concerning the land.

Incidental covenants in a contract to convey, which are not merged in the conveyance, do not pass to the second vendee as covenants running with the land. Colvin v. Schell, 1 Grant (Pa.) 226.

Estates by estoppel.— Under the authority of an early decision (Noke v. Awder, Cro. Eliz. 436), it has been supposed that covenants would not run with estates created by estoppel (Carvick v. Blagrave, 1 B. & B. 531, 4 Moore C. P. 303, 5 E. C. L. 783; Whitton v. Peacock, 2 Bing. N. Cas. 411, 5 L. J. C. P. 124, 2 Scott 630, 29 E. C. L. 595); but it has since been held that covenants will run with such estates (Cuthbertson v. Irving, 4 H. & N. 742, 5 Jur. N. S. 740, 28 L. J. Exch. 306. See also Rennie v. Robinson, 1 Bing. 147, 1 L. J. C. P. O. S. 30, 7 Moore C. P. 539, 25 Rev. Rep. 604, 8 E. C. L. 446; Palmer v. Ekins, 2 Ld. Raym. 1550; Gouldsworth v. Knights, 12 L. J. Exch. 282, 11 M. & W. 337). And see ESTOPPEL.

Statutory provisions.— N. D. Rev. Codes §§ 3784–3787, which declare what covenants in grants of real property run with the land, and designate a number of such covenants by name, do not confine covenants which run with the land to those specifically named; but such covenants as by reason of their character are within the meaning of said sections also run with the land. The maxim transit terra cum onere presupposes a transfer of the land, and when that actually takes place, it forms the medium of a privity between the assignees. Mygatt v. Coe, 124 N. Y. 212, 26 N. E. 611, 11 L. R. A. 646.

estate between the contracting parties, the assignee will not be bound by, nor have the benefit of, any covenants between the contracting parties, although they may relate to the land he takes by assignment or purchase from one of the parties to the contract. In such a case the covenants are personal and collateral to the land. On the other hand, if there is a privity of estate, a covenant which may run with the land will pass as an incident to a subsequent conveyance. But if any estate passes, so as to create privity, it is sufficient to carry the covenants;[85] and the decided weight of authority is to the effect that covenants run with incorporeal as well as with corporeal hereditaments.[86]

The legal possession of land, although the lowest interest or title that a person can have, is an estate therein, capable of being conveyed, and when conveyed, creates a sufficient privity of estate between the grantor and grantee to carry the covenants of warranty and quiet enjoyment through successive conveyances to a remote grantee. A wife's inchoate right of dower is a mere chose in action, and hence a covenant of warranty in a deed from her husband, which she has signed to release her dower interest, is not a covenant by her running with the land, so as to make her liable for a breach thereof. (III) Covenant For Heirs and Assigns. An heir or assign when not named is not bound by a covenant, except where it relates to a thing in esse at the time; and when named he is not bound by a covenant collateral to the land, but only for things to be done on or concerning the land.[87]

(IV) Effect of Agreement of Parties. The contracting parties may, by the express terms of their contract, provide that the covenant shall not run with the land; although if nothing was said about it it would so run. But however clearly and strongly expressed may be the intent and agreement of the parties that the covenant shall run with the land, yet if it be of such a character that the law does not permit it to be attached, it cannot be attached by agreement of the parties, and the assignee will take the estate clear of any such covenant.[88]

Necessity of privity.— Whatever confusion may exist in the cases with reference to the use of the words "heirs and assigns," it is clear that they cannot dispense with some privity of estate in order to carry the covenant with the land, and it has never been held that a covenant which, in its nature or otherwise, is personal, is made to run with the land by the mere employment of the words. Mygatt v. Coe, 147 N. Y. 456, 42 N. E. 17.

The failure to include the word "assigns" in a deed is not controlling if it can reasonably be inferred from the language of the instrument that the parties intended that the covenant should run with the land. (v) Effect of Apportionment. While it is true as a general principle of law that covenants are not apportionable, yet covenants which run with the land are nevertheless apportionable because the land itself is apportionable.[89]

(vi) What Law Governs. Covenants which run with the land are to be governed and construed by the same law as the granting part of the deed — that is, by the lex loci rei sitæ.[90]

b. Covenants of Title — (i) In General. Of the covenants usually contained in a conveyance of land some run with the land and some do not.[91]

(ii) Covenant of Seizin. In England and Canada the covenant of seizin as well as all other covenants of title runs with the land.[92] In the United States a large majority of the courts have held that the covenant of seizin, if broken at all, is broken as soon as made, and consequently cannot run with the land nor pass to an assignee;[93] in a few jurisdictions, however, the contrary view has been

89. A covenant running with the land would be of very little value, if it ceased to run whenever the land was divided, whether by act of law or by the act of the owner. Dickinson v. Hoomes, 8 Gratt. (Va.) 353 [citing Kane v. Sanger, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 89; Astor v. Miller, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 68; Van Horne v. Crain, 1 Paige (N. Y.) 455]. (8th Am. ed.) 598. Contra, 3 Preston Abstr. 56, 58 [cited in Rawle Cov. § 214*a*].

90. Dalton v. Taliaferro, 101 Ill. App. 592, because such covenants cannot be separated from the land and transferred without it, but go with it as annexed to the estate, and bind the parties in respect to the privity of estate. See also supra, II, A, 2.

91. Those which are broken, if at all, at the instant of their being made, such as the covenant of seizin, of right to convey, or against encumbrances, do not run with the land; while those which may be broken afterward, such as the covenant of warranty, for quiet enjoyment, or for further assurance, do run with the land. But even the latter, when broken, cease to run with the land from the time they are broken; for a broken covenant is a mere chose in action, which by the common law is not assignable; being no longer inherent in the land, which alone gives the covenant its assignable quality. Per Moncure, J., in Dickinson v. Hoomes, 8 Gratt. (Va.) 353, 395.

The rule criticized.— "To the determination in Kingdon v. Nottle, 1 M. & S. 355, 14 Rev. Rep. 462, there is a sound objection. It is opposed to principles, uniformly, and for centuries, established in Westminster-Hall. It was said by Lord Ellenborough, in the case alluded to, that 'if the executor could recover nominal damages, it would preclude the heir, who is the party actually damnified, from recovering at all!' The force of this reasoning depends entirely on the assertion that the heir is 'the party actually damnified'; and if this is an incorrect position, the argument wholly fails. Now, it is not true, that the heir is the party damnified. The damage arises entirely by the breach of the covenant in the life-time of the testator: and the testator is the only person, who receives damage. Thus were all the determinations before the last mentioned decision. To this effect was Lewes v. Ridge, Cro. Eliz. 863; Lucy v. Levington, 2 Lev. 26, 1 Vent. 175, and the law as laid down in Comyns Digest (tit. Covenant, B. 3); and not a case or Dictum was there to the contrary. Indeed, the admission of Lord Ellenborough, that the covenant was broken in the life-time of the testator, most conclusively shews, that the heir was not damnified. His own damage must result from his title to the land, and not from the covenant broken, to which he was no party." Mitchell v. Warner, 5 Conn. 497, 505.

will run with the land, and bind remote assignees of the covenantor.[12] Such a covenant cannot, however, be created by parol agreement,[13] nor, it has been held, by a stipulation in a deed poll.[14]

e. Covenants as to Use of Property. Covenants as to the use of property will run with the land, where they concern the land or estate conveyed and there is the necessary privity of estate between the covenantor and the covenantee. The benefit of the covenant runs with the land for the benefit of which it is entered into; its burden runs with the land out of which the easement or quasi-easement is granted, or upon which the restriction is imposed.[15] In that not uncommon class of cases in which the owner of a tract or block sells lots with covenants as to their use, or as to the sale and use of the remaining lots, such covenants inure to the benefit of all subsequent purchasers of the remaining lots, and create rights in the 633, 53 L. T. Rep. N. S. 543, 33 Wkly. Rep. 807.

There is, however, another class of covenants in which either one or both of the above-stated requisites is lacking, but which will nevertheless be enforced in equity, not because they run with the land, but for equitable reasons, and in spite of the fact that they do not run, and are not enforceable at law. Repeated failures clearly to distinguish the two classes have caused great confusion and much apparent conflict in the adjudged cases. See supra, II, C; and infra, II, D, 1, e. 2. Duration of Real Covenants.[22] A warranty in a deed is coextensive with the estate to which it is annexed, and when the estate ceases the warranty ceases.[23] But an estate is determined only when it expires by its own limitations; and consequently, when the estate is in fee and the covenants run with the land, they may be sued on by the covenantee or his assignees whenever they are evicted by a title paramount.[24] In the case of covenants restricting the use of property, their duration, whether for a limited or unlimited period, is said to depend upon the intention of the parties as expressed in the written instrument.[25]

3. Release or Discharge From Liability[26] — a. In General. In England, and in a few cases in the United States, it is held that a covenant which runs with the land can only be released by an instrument of as high a nature as the deed containing it;[27] but the preponderance of authority in the latter country is to the effect that such a covenant may be released either by matter in pais or by parol.[28] In order that a release may bind a subsequent assignee it must have been made

Contra, under Md. Stat. (1829), c. 51, as to covenant for quiet enjoyment. Dakin v. Pomeroy, 9 Gill 1.

A grantee from his cotenants may maintain an action for the benefit of lands held by them as tenants in common by a railroad where a covenant runs with the land conveyed for the benefit of adjacent lands of the grantor, as in the case of covenants restricting the use of property, subsequent assignees of the grantor may maintain an action for the breach thereof against the original covenantor, his heirs, or assigns.[39] Such a covenant is enforceable only by the covenantee or his assignee,[40] and in the absence of a covenant on the part of the grantor to exact a similar covenant from purchasers of other lots, a prior purchaser who gives restrictive covenants as to the use of the property purchased by him cannot enforce similar covenants given by purchasers of adjacent lands.[41]

(II) One Who Has Parted With Title. Where land has been conveyed with real covenants and has passed by subsequent conveyances through the hands of various covenantees, the last covenantee or assignee in whose possession the land is when the covenant is broken can as a rule alone sue for breach of covenant, and he has a right of action against any or all of the prior covenantors.[42] If, however, by the nature and terms of the assignment, the assignor is bound to indemnify the assignee, he may sue in his own name,[43] and the same is true where

(IV) ASSIGNEE TAKING CONVEYANCE AFTER BREACH. The preponderating weight of American authority is to the effect that the assignee of a real covenant cannot maintain an action for its breach which has accrued before the assignment, such breach being a chose in action not running with the land.[46] A few of the United States, however, follow the English doctrine,[47] and hold that even such

Equitable relief.— Where the owner in fee of land gives his bond for conveyance with warranty, and after the vendee has paid most of the purchase-price, and the vendor has become insolvent, a holder of the paramount title recovers the land, the right of recourse which the vendor has against his grantor will in equity vest in the vendee. covenants as are technically broken upon the execution and delivery of the deed may be sued on by a remote assignee where the substantial damage occurs during his tenure.[48] Obviously if the eviction or actual damage has occurred prior to the assignment, the doctrine of continuing breach is inapplicable, and the assignee acquires no right of action.[49]

(v) Owner of Part of Tract. A covenant that runs with the land is divisible into as many parts or interests as the land itself may be divided into by subsequent successive conveyances, and the grantee of each parcel or interest may as to the same maintain suit upon such covenant against the original covenantor or his legal representatives.[50]

Mutual covenants between the grantor and grantees of several city lots that neither will erect obnoxious buildings on the tract owned by the grantor or any portion thereof conveyed by him are for the mutual benefit of all purchasers of lots belonging to the tract; and upon a breach the owner of any lot, whether by direct grant or by subsequent assignment, may maintain an action therefor. d. Privity of Estate Between Covenantee and Grantee. In order that a covenant may run with the land so as to give a right of action against the covenantor to the alienee of the covenantee, a privity of estate must subsist between them. Mere privity of contract is insufficient, and some estate to which the covenant may attach should as a rule have passed from the covenantor to the covenantee;[57] although it has been held in Illinois and Vermont that if the covenantee takes possession of and conveys the land to another a sufficient privity is established between himself and his grantee to give the latter a right of action against the

"The general doctrine is, that the assignee, by reason of the privity of estate, is entitled to the benefit of all covenants running with the land (Spencer's Case, 5 Coke 16*a*, 1 Smith Lead. Cas. 174). But it has been held that when that estate is determined, the covenants cease to be assignable. Being merely accessories of the estate, they cannot pass by a deed that, for want of an estate upon which to operate, is ineffectual as a conveyance." Moore v. Merrill, 17 N. H. 75, 81, 43 Am. Dec. 593.

Privity of contract.— A judgment creditor of a vendee, who has a covenant against encumbrances, cannot call the vendor in warranty and require the latter to make his covenant good — there being no privity of contract between the parties. Hardy v. Pecot, 104 La. 136, 28 So. 936.

covenantor, even though he had neither title nor possession at the time of the execution of his covenant.[58]

e. Heirs and Devisees. The heirs or devisees of a covenantee are entitled to enforce covenants running with the land,[59] unless an evident intention be manifested to confine them to the covenantee,[60] or unless the covenant has been broken in the lifetime of the decedent.[61]

5. Persons Liable on Real Covenants — a. Covenantors. Unless personal responsibility is expressly or by reason of the nature of the transaction impliedly excluded,[62] not only the original, but every intermediate covenantor is liable to the holder of a real covenant at the time of breach. The holder, however, can have only one satisfaction.[63]

b. Grantees. Where a covenant imposing burdens upon, or restricting the use of land, runs with the land, the grantee of the covenantor is bound thereby, and may be sued for its breach;[64] and even where the covenant does not technically attach to or concern the land, and consequently does not run with the title, it may be enforced in equity against a grantee with notice.[65] But an assignee is liable only for such breaches of covenant as occur while he is assignee.[66]

c. Heirs. At common law there must have been a concurrence of two circumstances to render an heir liable on his ancestor's covenant: (1) The terms of the covenant must have specially provided for its performance by the heir, and (2) the heir must have had assets by descent from the covenantor to answer the claim, and he was bound only to the extent of such assets.[67] In the United States the general rule is that an heir is liable upon the covenant of his ancestor, if the damages cannot be made out of the executor or administrator.[68]

d. Devisees. At common law a devisee was not bound by his testator's covenants,[69] but at the present day devisees are liable in the same manner as heirs, that is, to the extent of the property reaching their hands.[70]

ance of the covenant by the covenantor has been prevented by the act of the covenantee himself.[72]

2. Notice of Breach and Demand of Performance. Notice of breach and demand of performance are not required of the covenantee in order to entitle him to an action against the covenantor upon breach of his covenant,[73] unless the event upon which the action accrues is mainly or exclusively within the knowledge of the covenantee,[74] or unless performance is impossible without his coöperation,[75] or unless it is fixed at an indefinite future time,[76] or unless by the terms of the instrument itself a demand of performance is required.[77]

3. Sufficiency of Performance. The true intent of the parties as shown by the instrument itself, viewed in connection with the circumstances surrounding its execution, determines the sufficiency of the performance of a covenant.[78] As a general rule, however, a substantial and reasonable performance of the covenant is sufficient;[79] and if the covenant be once properly performed, the covenantor is absolved from liability, although the performance may be defeated or rendered unavailing by matter subsequent.[80]

4. Time of Performance. Where no time is limited for the performance of the act covenanted to be done it must be performed within a reasonable time.[81]

5. Breach. A covenant may be broken by the falsity of alleged facts covenanted to be true,[82] by the failure to perform an act covenanted to be performed,[83]

title set up against his grantee in a suit by the latter, as well as to make defense to a suit against his grantee.[88]

2. NECESSITY. It is not essential to a right of action against his covenantor that the covenantee should give him notice to come in and defend the title for which he has covenanted.[89]

3. FORM AND SUFFICIENCY. In order to conclude the covenantor, the notice given by the covenantee should be unequivocal, certain, and explicit.[90] No particular form of notice is required,[91] and the weight of authority is to the effect that it need not be written, or of record.[92] But where the notice does not appear of record, the question whether it has been actually given becomes a matter in pais for the determination of the jury.[93]

4. Time of Notice. In cases within the summary jurisdiction, notice ought if practicable to be given at or before the return-day of the process. In cases within the general jurisdiction notice at any time before the expiration of the rule to plead would seem to be in time.[94]

5. Effect on Liability. A covenantor to whom due notice has been given to come in and defend an action against his covenantee involving the title of the land conveyed, and in which judgment is rendered adversely to the covenantee, is in a subsequent action on his covenant concluded by such judgment and is estopped to deny its regularity and justice.[95]

He ought, therefore, to have a reasonable time to prepare for it, and the time which the law allows to a defendant, furnishes, perhaps, the safest rule. In the first class of cases, however, the process might be served on the last hour of the last day before the return. . . . In those cases, notice within a reasonable time afterwards, would be all that could be expected. So, where the warrantee had entered an appearance, and put in his plea to the merits, I should think notice, even after the continuance, if the warrantor had sufficient time to prepare evidence for the trial, would be sufficient." Notice of appeal.—A notice of the pendency of a suit against the covenantee, given for the first time after an adverse judgment, advising the covenantor that the covenantee is about to appeal from the judgment against him, is not sufficient to charge the covenantor with costs. Statement of rule.— "The warrantor of the title, as between him and his warrantee, or those claiming under the latter, shall not be permitted to gainsay the propriety and the justice of the recovery of the land from the warrantee, under an adverse title alleged to be paramount to that of the warrantee, where the warrantor has been a party himself to the ejectment in which the recovery is had, or has had notice of the action being brought from the warrantee, in time to enable him to defend, if he pleases. The warrantor is estopped by the recovery in such case from denying that it was under a better title the recovery was had, than that which he passed to his warrantee." Ives v. Niles, 5 Watts (Pa.) 323, 325.

Effect on duty of covenantee.— The covenantee is not bound to defend, after notice to the covenantor and refusal on his part to defend. Jackson v. Marsh, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 44.

Vouching in an immediate warrantor does not impair the covenantee's claim against the original warrantor on his covenant. Crooker v. Jewell, 29 Me. 527.

Negligence of vendee.— The vendor is only liable on his warranty for causes anterior to the sale, and if the vendee should be evicted without calling him in warranty, and he can be broken as soon as made, and may be sued on at any time, and a recovery had, without alleging an eviction or an interruption in the title.[96]

2. Covenant of Seizin — a. In General. As has been previously stated,[97] the covenant of seizin is a covenant in præsenti, and is broken the moment it is made, if the covenantor is not then seized of the land attempted to be conveyed — a right of action immediately accruing to the grantee.[98]

A "paper writing" from the grantor to another, amounting to nothing more than a pretext for a lawsuit, in which the grantee's title is not disturbed, is no breach of a covenant in a deed to such grantee that the premises are free and clear from all former grants, bargains, and sales. Rittmaster v. Richner, 14 Colo. App. 361, 60 Pac. 189.

Conveyance by grantee of minor.— A deed by a minor conveys to his grantee a valid title, and the covenants in such grantee's deed to others are not broken until the minor thereafter disaffirms the deed. Pritchett v. Redick, 62 Nebr. 296, 86 N. W. 1091 [citing Troxell v. Stevens, 57 Nebr. 329, 77 N. W. 781].

Conveyance by metes and bounds.— Where a grantee of land, under a deed describing the premises by metes and bounds, was evicted from a portion of the house standing over the line, it was held no breach of the covenants. Burke v. Nichols, 2 Keyes (N. Y.) 670.

Subsequent failure of title.— The rule that a grantor of land with covenants of title is not liable for a failure of title subsequently accruing does not apply to a case in which the grantor in a deed, which was insufficiently acknowledged and unrecorded, subsequently made a conveyance to another grantee which defeated the first deed. Hamilton v. Doolittle, 37 Ill. 473.

The mere existence of an equitable title in another, by virtue of a parol agreement to convey, is not a breach of any of the usual covenants in a deed conveying the legal title. Wilson v. Irish, 57 Iowa 184, 6 N. W. 591, 10 N. W. 343. Contra, Dugger v. Oglesby, 99 Ill. 405, to the effect that the usual covenants extend to equitable as well as legal claims.

Where one of two administrators covenanted that a certain slave "belongs to him, and that the sole right of the said slave is in him as the administrator of A," it was held no breach of the covenant that the title to the slave was in the two administrators. Cowles v. Rowland, 47 N. C. 219.

b. Sufficiency of Seizin to Support Covenant. In some jurisdictions it is held that the actual seizin of the grantor, whether he gained it by his own disseizin, or whether he was in under a disseizor, is sufficient to support his covenant of seizin, irrespective of his having an indefeasible title.[99] In a majority of the jurisdictions, however, a seizin in fact alone is insufficient to support the covenant. To this end there must be a transfer of the title — the right — as well as the actual possession;[1] and a possession adverse to the grantor at the time of his conveyance

A subsequent conveyance by defendant's grantor is not a breach. Vorhis v. Forsythe, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 17,004, 4 Biss. 409.

Any absolute deed may be assailed by parol evidence to show that it was intended for a mortgage, but proof that defendant's grantor asserts that his deed to defendant was in fact a mortgage is insufficient to make out even a prima facie case for the plaintiff in an action for breach of contract of seizin. The plaintiff must not only establish that the claim is made, but also that the deed was in fact so intended. Wilson v. Parshall, 129 N. Y. 233, 29 N. E. 297 [affirming 4 Silv. Supreme 374, 7 N. is, independently of champerty and maintenance,[2] a breach of his covenant of seizin, no matter how good his right and title.[3]

c. Encumbrances. It is a general rule that the covenant of seizin is not broken by the existence of an encumbrance or easement which does not affect the technical seizin of the covenantee;[4] as for example an inchoate or contingent right of dower,[5] an outstanding judgment against the covenantor,[6] a lease,[7] a mortgage,[8] a railroad right of way,[9] a street or highway,[10] or a right to erect a wall on the granted premises.[11]

4. Covenant Against Encumbrances — a. In General. As usually expressed in England — that is in connection with the covenant for quiet enjoyment — the covenant against encumbrances is a covenant of indemnity, and is only broken upon an actual interruption, claim, or demand against the covenantee.[21] As usually expressed in the United States, that is, that the premises are free and clear of all encumbrances, the covenant is a covenant in præsenti, and if not true is broken as soon as made.[22] If, however, the covenant is clearly one of indemnity against future disturbance, no breach will occur until such disturbance, although the encumbrance was in existence at the time of the conveyance.[23] An encumbrance, within the meaning of the covenant, embraces every right to or interest in the land, diminishing the value of the estate, but not inconsistent with the transfer of the fee.[24]

b. Dower. The weight of authority is to the effect that the covenant against encumbrances is broken by the existence of a right of dower in the land conveyed, although at the time of the conveyance the right may be inchoate and contingent.[25]

c. Leases. An outstanding lease is an encumbrance, within the meaning of the covenant against encumbrances in a deed of conveyance of the land.[26]

It is true that it is no estate or interest, but only a possibility. But it is a possibility which may give the wife an estate, by the happening of a contingent event, the death of her husband, without any new act to be done, or new right to be acquired. . . . But we think no general rule can be laid down, to determine absolutely whether such inchoate right of dower is an incumbrance; it must depend on many and various circumstances and considerations."

(III) Private Ways. The existence and use of a private right of way over granted premises, to which they were subject at the time of the conveyance, is a breach of the covenant of warranty.[44]

(IV) Railroad Rights of Way. The existence of a railroad right of way over the land conveyed is a breach of the covenant against encumbrances in the deed of conveyance.[45]

(V) Water Rights. The existence of outstanding water rights which prevent a grantee's full enjoyment of the premises conveyed is as a rule a breach of the covenant against encumbrances in the deed of conveyance.[46]

Stipulations as to nuisances.— Where a mortgage provided that "no part of the premises conveyed are to be used for any trade, business, or purpose that will prove a nuisance to the owners of the adjoining premises." but did not inhibit any particular trade, calling, or purpose, it was held that the provision was not such a covenant as amounted to an encumbrance, since the law inhibits such a use as that described, and no force is added to the inhibition by the insertion of the provision in the instrument. In re Covenant, 2 N. Y. City Ct. 396.

The right of an adjoiner to cut away overlapping parts of a house does not constitute a breach of a covenant against encumbrances in a conveyance of the house by its owner to a third person, where the right to such projection and its use do not belong to the vendor, and is not included in the description of the premises in the deed. But grantees are not deprived of the right to recover on the covenant against encumbrances because they have not been able to redeem their land by paying off the encumbrances, where they have exhausted their defenses in the courts.[52]

1. Assumption by Grantee. The covenant against encumbrances does not extend to an encumbrance which the covenantee has either expressly or impliedly assumed to remove.[53] Such an assumption by the covenantee may be shown by an agreement to take the deed subject to the encumbrance as part of the consideration for the land,[54] by an express exclusion of the encumbrance from the operation of the covenant,[55] by the receipt from the covenantor of money wherewith to discharge the encumbrance,[56] or by a reconveyance in trust or by mortgage with full covenants.[57] Where, however, the assumption is limited in amount to a specified sum, and the encumbrance is of a greater amount, the covenant against encumbrances is broken to the extent of the excess.[58]

for the plaintiff to show that he has been prevented from taking possession or has been evicted by a person having a lawful and paramount title existing at the time of the defendant's covenant, as the covenant for quiet enjoyment applies only to the acts of those claiming title at the time it is entered into.

b. Acts of Covenantor. The covenant for quiet enjoyment extends to all acts of the covenantor, whether tortious or not, if committed under color of title.[60] If, however, the disturbance or entry is without claim of title the covenant is not broken.[61]

c. Acts of Trespassers. To constitute a breach of a full and absolute covenant for quiet enjoyment against all persons, there must be a union of acts of disturbance and lawful title. A possession or disturbance by a mere intruder is not sufficient.[62]

d. Outstanding Lease. Occupancy by a tenant of property sold with a covenant for quiet enjoyment, where the fact of occupancy and the title of the tenant are known to the purchaser at the time of sale, is not a breach of the covenant

Partial eviction of undivided interest.— In an action for breach of covenant for quiet enjoyment, plaintiff cannot recover as for an eviction from the whole of certain lands on proof that one claiming under a paramount title had recovered in ejectment an undivided half interest therein, as such recovery is not a constructive recovery of the other half interest for his cotenants. for quiet enjoyment, and if no special contract is made with reference thereto[63] the occupant becomes tenant to the purchaser.[64]

e. Dower. Where dower is claimed and assigned, or the value thereof assessed, a covenant for quiet enjoyment contained in a conveyance of the land is broken.[65] But an inchoate right of dower in the premises is not a breach of the covenant.[66]

f. Mortgages. A covenant for quiet enjoyment is broken by the eviction of the grantee by reason of the enforcement of a mortgage executed by the grantor prior to the conveyance.[67]

g. Easement. The existence and exercise of an easement in the premises conveyed is a breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment contained in the deed of conveyance.[68]

h. Eviction. While it has been repeatedly said that the covenant for quiet enjoyment is broken only by eviction,[69] the true rule, and that which is most consonant to the form of the covenant as usually expressed, is that any actual disturbance of the possession, equivalent to an eviction, by one having a lawful and paramount title at the time of its execution, is a breach of the covenant.[70] A failure to obtain possession, as well as a disturbance of, or eviction from, the possession is, according to the weight of authority, within the meaning of the covenant.[71] If, however, the grantee enters and remains in undisturbed possession of the land, the fact that the title is in a third person does not constitute a breach.[72]

6. Covenant For Further Assurance. The covenant for further assurance is technically broken by the failure or neglect of the covenantor to make such other and further assurance of the title conveyed as the terms of the covenant require, or as may be reasonably demanded by the covenantee.[73] A substantial breach of the covenant, however, only occurs upon a disturbance or eviction, actual or constructive, of the covenantee.[74]

b. Subsequent Acts of Covenantor. An eviction of the covenantee by reason of a paramount title derived from the covenantor subsequently to his conveyance with covenant of warranty[76] is a breach of the warrant.

c. Laches of Covenantee. A covenantee cannot recover any damages which could have been prevented or avoided by reasonable diligence on his part, and he owes it to the covenantor so to conduct himself as to make the damages as little as possible.[77]

d. Unsuccessful Attack of Third Person. A covenantor is not liable to the covenantee for damages sustained by the latter by reason of an unsuccessful attack upon his title by a third person.[78]

e. Wrongful Acts of Strangers. In an action upon a covenant of warranty in a deed, the covenantor is not bound to defend the title conveyed by him against a mere trespasser who has no title.[79]

Title dependent on contingency.— Where the validity of a conveyance was dependent upon the contingency of proof of the grantor's title, subsequently to be made, it was held that there was a breach of covenant of warranty, for which the grantee was entitled to damages as if the failure of the title had been absolute. Shorthill v. Ferguson, 44 Iowa 249.

Title vested in covenantee.—Covenants only extend to a title existing in a third person which may defeat the estate granted by the covenantor, and not to a title already vested in the covenantee. Horrigan v. Rice, 39 Minn. 49, 38 N. W. 765.

76. The failure of the covenantee to record his deed, whereby a subsequent grantee of the covenantor is enabled to evict him by first recording the later deed, is no defense to an action for breach of the covenant of warranty contained in the earlier deed. Extent and limits of rule.— Thus a covenant of warranty is not broken by the fact that a third person is in possession of the land at the time of the execution of the deed and afterward acquires a title to land by force of the statute of limitations; the laches of the covenantee in not sooner recovering the possession precludes his recovery on the covenant. Claflin v. Case, 53 Kan. 560, 36 Pac. 1062; Rindskopf v. Farmers' L. & T. Co., 58 Barb. (N. Y.) 36; Phelps v. Sawyer, 1 Aik. (Vt.) 150. Compare Winslow v. McCall, 32 Barb. (N. Y.) 241. Similarly the fact that if a grantee who has been dispossessed had taken possession at the time of the conveyance to him, he would have acquired title by adverse possession, does not relieve his grantor from liability to him on his warranty of title. Graham v. Dyer, 29 S. W. 346, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 541. But a judgment in ejectment against the grantee, and an abandonment of the premises, is a breach of the covenant, although the land was vacant when the action was brought, and the grantee did not urge that fact as an objection to the form of action brought to try the title. g. Encumbrances — (I) In General. The eviction of a grantee by reason of an encumbrance resting on the land at the time of its conveyance is a breach of the covenant of warranty in the deed,[81] unless, knowing of its existence at the time of the execution of the deed, he has agreed to discharge it.[82]

(II) Dower. The eviction of a grantee under a paramount right of dower is a breach of the covenant of warranty in the deed to him;[83] but until assertion, the mere existence of a right of dower is no breach of the covenant.[84]

(III) Leases. The eviction of a grantee of land conveyed with covenant of warranty by reason of an unexpired lease upon the premises, is a breach of the covenant.[85]

Damages for obstructing way.— If a grantee be mulcted in damages for obstructing a prescriptive right of way over the land held by a third party, he may recover over from his grantor. Bridger v. Pierson, 1 Lans. (N. Y.) 481.

Recovery of right.— A covenant in a deed of general warranty is broken upon a recovery by a stranger of a permanent use of a part of the land as a private passageway. Butt v. Riffe, 78 Ky. 352.

The maintenance of gates at the end of a way excludes the presumption that the way was dedicated to the public, under Ill. Rev. Stat. c. 30, § 10, providing that no covenant of warranty shall be considered broken by the existence of a highway on the land conveyed, unless otherwise particularly specified in the deed. St. Rep. 421]. Compare Schmisseur v. Penn, 47 Ill. App. 278.

92. On the one hand it is held that the existence of an easement or right of way of a railroad, which excludes the owner from the beneficial use and enjoyment of the land affected thereby, constitutes such an encumbrance as will support an action, even though the grantee knew of its existence at the time he received the conveyance. h. Exercise of Right of Eminent Domain. A covenantee cannot maintain an action upon the covenant of warranty in his deed, against the covenantor, in consequence of the exercise of the right of eminent domain by the government.[93]

i. Failure of Title to Appurtenances. Appurtenances are within the meaning of the covenant of warranty, and a failure of title thereto is a breach of the covenant.[94]

j. Description of Premises. An eviction caused by a mistake in a mere matter of description of the land conveyed is not a breach of a covenant of warranty contained in the deed,[95] unless such erroneous description is of the essence of the contract.[96]

k. Building Restrictions. The existence of building restrictions upon land conveyed with a covenant of warranty is, upon enforcement, a breach of the covenant.[97]

l. Paramount Title or Right. In order to constitute a breach of the covenant of warranty, the title or right to which a covenantee yields must be not only paramount to his own, but paramount to that of any one else.[98]

m. Eviction — (I) Necessity — (A) In General. To constitute a breach of the covenant of warranty an eviction or equivalent disturbance by title paramount must occur.[99]

On the other hand it is held that one who purchases land will be presumed to take with notice of railroads or other highways in use over it, and their existence will not constitute a breach of the covenant of warranty. Brown v. Young, 69 Iowa 625, 29 N. W. 941 [unnoticed in Flynn v. White Breast Coal, etc., Co., 72 Iowa 738, 32 N. W. 471]; Milwaukee, etc., R. Co. v. Strange, 63 Wis. 178, 23 N. W. 432.

93. Real estate is held subject to the right of eminent domain, and a purchaser always takes his title subject to that right.

An alternative judgment or decree does not constitute an eviction. Thus the entry of a decree in the alternative, unless he pay, etc., is not an eviction (Kirkendall v. Keogh, 2 Ill. App. 492); nor is a judgment establishing a superior outstanding title, and ordering the holder thereof to be given possession on payment of a sum found to be the value of betterments, or should he fail to do so, establishing the title in the disseizor on his paying the value of the land, until the demandant has paid the sum stated and taken possession (Hall v. Pierson, 1 Tex. covenantee himself[11] or his tenant,[12] is the purchaser at the foreclosure sale. So too where, upon condition broken, the mortgagee may enter, such entry by him will constitute a sufficient constructive eviction to enable the covenantee to sue for breach of covenant.[13]

(H) Levy of Execution Against Covenantor. The levy of an execution against the covenantor on lands conveyed with covenant of warranty is such an eviction of the covenantee as to entitle him to an action on the covenant.[14]

(I) Exercise of Easement or Other Right. The assertion and exercise of an easement or other paramount right in premises conveyed with a covenant of warranty constitutes an eviction within the covenant.[15]

(J) Public Lands. Where the title to land attempted to be conveyed is in the public, there is such a hostile possession as amounts to an eviction the instant the deed is made.[16] A fortiori a sale of land by the government is such an assertion of paramount title as to constitute an eviction of persons in possession under defective titles.[17]

8. Covenants as to Use of Property. While covenants restraining the free use and enjoyment of property are not favored,[18] yet such as are reasonable will be enforced, and any use in contravention of the terms and objects of such covenants will constitute a breach, for which relief may be obtained either in equity or by an action at law.[19]

IV. ACTIONS FOR BREACH.

A. Rights of Action Generally — 1. NATURE AND FORM OF REMEDY. The most usual form of remedy for breach of covenant is an action of covenant, in which damages are sought and recovered in proportion to the injury sustained by the covenantee, although where the covenant is for the payment of a sum certain, debt is a concurrent remedy. For matters peculiarly within its jurisdiction, such as suits for specific performance, for injunction, or for relief against forfeitures, recourse must be had to equity.[20]

Trespass or assumpsit.—Where covenantees failed to record their deed, and lost the land to a later purchaser at an execution sale, who recorded the sheriff's deed and a quit-claim deed from the covenantor, it was held that as such subsequent conveyance was not a breach of the covenant of warranty, the remedy of the covenantees, if any, was an action for damages actually sustained, or as the case might be for money paid to the use of their grantor. 2. WHAT LAW GOVERNS. A conveyance, as to its operation, is local, and determinable only where the land lies which is pretended to be conveyed by it; but respecting the consideration paid and the personal contracts collateral to the title, for the assurance of the purchaser the lex loci contractus governs.[21]

3. GROUNDS OF ACTION GENERALLY. Whatever constitutes a breach of a covenant is a ground of action thereon,[22] although until the covenantee has suffered actual loss, he can recover only nominal damages.[23] But while each breach is itself a separate and distinct ground of action,[24] yet it is proper, as avoiding a multiplicity of suits, to unite in one action claims for breaches occurring at different times.[25] In case of covenants running with the land, the last grantee is upon breach entitled to an action against the covenantor, and need not allege nor prove that the intermediate assignees have kept their covenants.[26]

4. CONDITIONS PRECEDENT — a. Demand of Performance. A demand of performance is not in general a condition precedent[27] to an action on a covenant if the covenantor have notice that the contingency has arisen upon which the covenant is to be performed.[28]

b. Performance of Mutual Concurrent Covenants. In cases of mutual concurrent covenants, where the acts to be done are simultaneous, neither party can maintain an action for a failure on the part of the other without showing a performance or a tender of performance on his own part.[29]

c. Payment of Purchase-Money. Payment of the purchase-money is not a condition precedent to a right of action for breach of the covenant of warranty.[30]

d. Payment of Encumbrance by Covenantee. A purchaser cannot avail himself of a breach of the covenant against encumbrances, either by action or by set-off, without proving that the sum paid by him to remove the encumbrance was either actually due, or else that he had notified the vendor, requiring him to remove the deed, and not by an action on the covenants. Broadway v. Buxton, 43 Conn. 282.

the encumbrance within a specified time;[31] but on breach of an absolute covenant by the grantor to pay and satisfy an outstanding judgment, the covenantee may recover the amount of the judgment, although he has neither paid nor been called upon to pay anything on account thereof.[32]

e. Reformation of Deed. An action for breach of covenant of seizin in a deed cannot be maintained before the reformation of the deed, if the description is so defective that it can convey no title.[33]

f. Exhaustion of Remedies by Covenantee. A covenantee against whom a judgment has been rendered in an action of trespass is not bound, before suing on his covenant of warranty, to bring ejectment against the plaintiffs in the trespass suit, unless his grantor pays the judgment, or tenders security for the expenses of the ejectment suit.[34]

g. Waiver of Condition. A person entitled to avail himself of a condition precedent, who waives it by proceeding to fulfil on his part, cannot plead it in bar of an action on the covenant for negligent performance on his part.[35]

upon privity of estate, as in case of an action by an assignee of an estate conveyed with covenants running with the land, against the covenantor, it was local.[40] Statutes have, however, been enacted in several of the states regulating such actions.[41]

7. LIMITATIONS AND ACCRUAL OF ACTION. The limitation of actions for breach of covenant is governed by the lex fori.[42] Short of the statutory period of limitation, an action for the breach of a covenant is not barred by reason of the fact that notes, for the payment of which the instrument was executed, are barred.[43] The right of action for a breach of covenant accrues at the time of breach, from which time the statute begins to run, and not from the time of the execution of the covenant.[44] In the case of covenants of title which are broken as soon as made, if broken at all, the right of action accrues immediately upon their execution,[45] except in those jurisdictions in which, notwithstanding their immediate technical breach, they are held to run with the land until an actual and substantial breach.[46] Upon covenants which run with the land, the right of action accrues upon breach, whether that occurs at the time of the execution of the deed or subsequently.[47]

B. Defenses — 1. In General. In actions founded upon covenants broken it has been held that the defendants could not set up by way of defense a bond of indemnity given by the vendor to the vendee,[48] a promise of the vendee not to use the deed against the vendor,[49] ignorance of law,[50] the covenantor's own wrongful acts or neglect,[51] the existence of an older encumbrance,[52] the existence of a previous judgment in favor of the covenantor against the evictor,[53] the failure of Recovery for technical breach.—Where land conveyed by deed covenanting against encumbrances was subject to a lien at the time of conveyance, an immediate recovery by the grantee of nominal damages for the breach of such covenant would not have barred an action for substantial damages when the lien was asserted, and hence limitations did not begin to run until the assertion of the lien. 48. A bond taken by the vendee of encumbered land, from the vendor, to indemnify him against the encumbrance, will not be considered a compensation or satisfaction for a breach of the covenants of warranty in the deed. Andrews v. McCoy, 8 Ala. 920, 42 Am. Dec. 669.

49. That the vendee promised never to use the deed against the vendor is no defense to an action upon the covenants in the deed. Holley v. Younge, 27 Ala. 203.

50. The fact that a covenantor did not know that the existence of a railroad right of way over the land conveyed would constitute a breach of his covenant against encumbrances is no defense to an action against him on such covenant. Gerald v. Elley, 45 Iowa 322.

51. A party cannot excuse a breach of covenant by his own wrongful acts or neglect. Booth v. Cleveland Rolling Mill Co., 74 N. Y. 15.

52. The existence of an older unpaid encumbrance is no defense to an action upon a covenant against encumbrances on account of a junior encumbrance paid off by the covenantee. Dehority v. Wright, 101 Ind. 382.

53. In an action for breach of warranty, the fact that there has been a former judgment in favor of the covenantor in an action between him and the evictor of the covenantee the covenantee to appeal from an adverse decision,[54] the failure of the grantee to object until eviction,[55] the failure of the plaintiff to perform a collateral agreement,[56] the failure to vouch the covenantor,[57] the purchase of the premises at a foreclosure sale,[58] the refusal of the covenantee to buy in the title or compromise with the holder of such title,[59] the want of actual possession in the covenantee,[60] that plaintiff allowed the premises to deteriorate,[61] or that the covenantor was not the real grantor;[62] but fraud or false representations[63] or a mistake of fact[64] may constitute a valid defense. So too it has been held that it is a good defense in an action for breach of covenant that the plaintiff has yielded to an invalid and constitutes no defense to the action for the breach of warranty, where that judgment has been pleaded in the action between the covenantee and his evictor. Louisville Public Warehouse Co. v. James, 56 S. W. 19, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 1726.

54. The failure of a covenantee to appeal from an adverse decision is no defense to an action brought by him for breach of a covenant of warranty by reason of such decision. Butler v. Watts, 13 La. Ann. 390.

55. That a grantee has taken possession under his deed, and has made no complaint as to the quantity of land conveyed until suit brought against him, is no defense to an action upon the covenant of warranty in his deed, brought by him upon eviction. Walterhouse v. Garrard, 70 Ind. 400.

56. In an action for breach of an implied covenant against encumbrances, that the plaintiff failed to perform his agreement as to the satisfaction of a deficiency judgment against one of the defendants is immaterial, where no damage was suffered thereby. Holzbeier v. Hayes, 133 Cal. 456, 65 Pac. 968.

57. For a breach of a covenant of title by reason of an eviction under a paramount title, it is no excuse that the covenantor had no notice of the suit on the paramount title. Winters v. Earl, (N. J. Sup. 1899) 43 Atl. 671.

58. That the plaintiff caused the property to be bid in at a foreclosure sale, under a prior mortgage, at a very cheap rate, and had the deed made to himself, is no answer to an action for breach of the covenant against encumbrances. Eckhardt v. Neracher, 4 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 324, 1 Clev. L. Rep. 313.

That the defendant has bid in the land at the foreclosure sale and thus perfected his title is no defense to an action against him on his covenant against encumbrances. Stow v. Gilbert, 4 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 528, 2 Clev. L. Rep. 321.

59. The refusal of the plaintiff to buy in the paramount title or encumbrance, even when offered on moderate terms, or to compromise with the holder of such title, is no defense to his action for breach of covenant. Miller v. Halsey, 14 N. J. L. 48; Clarke v. McAnulty, 3 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 364; Seibert v. Bergman, (Tex. Civ. App. 1898) 44 S. W. 872.

60. The want of actual possession in the covenantee is no bar to an action for breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment. Miller v. Halsey, 14 N. J. L. 48.

Adverse possession by third person.— It is no defense to an action for breach of warranty that the sale was a nullity because the land belonged to another person. New Orleans v. Whitney, 138 U. S. 595, 11 S. Ct. 428, 34 L. ed. 1102, construing La. Civ. Code, art. 2452.

61. That plaintiff has allowed the premises to deteriorate is no bar to an action for breach of covenant. Miller v. Halsey, 14 N. J. L. 48.

Use of timber by plaintiffs.— It is no defense to an action for breach of warranty that the plaintiff used the timber on the land before he was dispossessed. Seibert v. Bergman, (Tex. Civ. App. 1898) 44 S. W. 872.

62. In an action for breach of a covenant of warranty, an agreement between the defendant and his grantor, that on resale by defendant to plaintiff defendant should convey with general warranty to plaintiff, to whom, it is claimed, defendant's grantor, and not the defendant, sold the land, is no defense, in the absence of fraud on the part of the plaintiff. Brady v. Peck, 99 Ky. 42, 34 S. W. 906, 35 S. W. 623, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 1356, where it was also held that where the defendant claims the purchase-price was paid to another, and not to him, the fact that the land conveyed was not worth the purchase-price is no defense to an action to recover back the price on failure of title.

63. Fraud or false representations on the part of a covenantee, by reason of which the covenantor is induced to execute the covenant, may be set up in defense of an action thereon. Scott v. Stetler, 128 Ind. 385, 27 N. E. 721. But see Grant v. Grant, 56 Me. 573.

64. Mistake of fact.— In an action for breach of a covenant not to infringe a patent right, stated in the covenant to be the property of the plaintiff, the defendant may show that the patent right did not in fact belong to the plaintiff, and that he made the covenant under the mistaken belief that it did. Rich v. Atwater, 16 Conn. 409.

Mistake in a description of the premises conveyed is no defense to an action for breach of covenant (Wright v. Nipple, 92 Ind. 310; Lambert v. Estes, 99 Mo. 604, 13 S. W. 284; Delap v. Taber, 16 Wis. 654. But see Stewart v. Hadley, 55 Mo. 235); but the deed inferior claim,[65] or that against the grantor's wishes he has yielded to a claim which was being contested by the grantor, it not appearing that the proceedings must necessarily have resulted adversely.[66] Again in an action on a covenant the defendant may plead an attachment execution against the plaintiff, which has been served on himself as garnishee, although such plea be neither in abatement nor in bar of the action, for the purpose of qualifying the judgment according to the facts.[67]

2. Other Breaches. The breach of another distinct covenant in the same agreement is no defense to an action for breach of covenant;[68] and in an action for breach of a covenant restricting the use of property, the complainant's right to enforce such covenant is not affected by acquiescence in the violation of another covenant, nor by another lot owner's violation of a like covenant, so long as the covenant is of any value to him.[69]

3. Subsequent Perfection of Title. If prior to the eviction of the grantee a grantor of land with covenant of warranty purchases an outstanding title, it inures to his own benefit in discharge of his covenant;[70] but where a grantor purchases a paramount title after the eviction of his grantee, such title does not inure to his grantee by way of estoppel, without his consent, so as to defeat his right to sue for breach of covenant and to recover damages; nor can the grantor avail himself of it in mitigation of damages.[71]

An irregularity in proceedings to foreclose a mortgage cannot be shown in defense to an action for breach of a covenant against encumbrances by reason of such mortgage, the covenantee not being a party to the proceedings. De Forest v. Leete, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 122.

Fraud and collusion.— It is a defense to an action for breach of covenant of warranty that through fraud and collusion between plaintiff and another the land in question, when found subsequent to plaintiff's purchase to be public land, was entered as a homestead for the use of plaintiff, and that his eviction therefrom was only pretended. Frix v. Miller, 115 Ala. 476, 22 So. 146, 67 Am. St. Rep. 57.

Breach by complainant.—In Buck v. Adams, 45 N. J. Eq. 552, 17 Atl. 961, in which it was held that the fact that complainants have added a portico to their buildings, beyond the line allowed by a covenant that certain lands should not be built on, is no excuse for the building of a pavilion on said land; the defendants alleging that it was understood at the time of the execution of the conveyance that such portico might be erected.

Breach by grantor.— Where the porches, and in some instances, the bow windows, of all the houses built on several of a block of lots, conveyed subject to a restriction not to build within thirty feet of the front line, were built within such distance, the building of a house on one of the lots by the grantor of the other lots so that the bow window and porch thereof will extend over said line cannot be enjoined. Covenant to convey with good title.— In an action for breach of a covenant to convey

4. Want of Consideration. The weight of authority is to the effect that independently of statute want or failure of, or fraud in, the consideration of an instrument is no defense to an action on a covenant contained therein.[72] It has been held, however, that while natural love and affection between near relatives is a sufficient consideration to support a deed, yet it will not render obligatory a mere covenant or promise.[73]

5. Equities Between Original Parties. The covenants in a deed are unaffected in the hands of an assignee by equities existing between the original parties.[74]

C. Parties — 1. In General. A covenant in a deed cannot be sued upon by a person who is not a party to the deed, but the suit must be brought in the name of the person with whom the covenant is made,[75] or in case of covenants for title in the name of the holder of the legal title at the time of breach,[76] except land by good title, the question whether a tender of title was made before or after the commencement of the action is immaterial, where it appears that the title tendered was insufficient. Clark v. Redman, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 379.

Action by remote grantee.— The fact that a grantee paid nothing for his land does not affect his right to recover from a remote grantor for breach of warranty of title. Beasley v. Phillips, 20 Ind. App. 182, 50 N. E. 488.

Collusion between plaintiff and defendant. — There can be no recovery on the covenants in a deed which defendant gave plaintiff without consideration, for the purpose of establishing adverse possession under color of title, both parties knowing that the defendant had no title. Glenn v. Mathews, 44 Tex. 400.

Consideration measure of damages.—Under a statute providing that the measure of damages in an action for breach of warranty shall be the consideration received by the grantor, no recovery can be had for a breach of warranty in a voluntary conveyance. Ex p. Hardin, 34 S. C. 377, 13 S. E. 615, 27 Am. St. Rep. 820, 13 L. R. A. 723.

Failure of consideration.— Where a warranty deed expressed the usual money consideration, the grantor could not urge, as a defense to the action of the vendee's purchaser on the covenant of seizin, that the consideration consisted of horses which his grantee warranted to be sound, and that there had been a breach of such warranty. Randall v. Macbeth, 81 Minn. 376, 84 N. W. 119, 83 Am. St. Rep. 387.

In New York the statute relative to evidence in certain cases puts the defense to actions upon sealed and unsealed instruments, in respect to want of consideration, on the same footing, except as relates to the form of pleading. Tallmadge v. Wallis, 25 Wend. 107.

Where party to covenant has not executed. — A covenantee in an ordinary indenture, who is a party to it, may sue the covenantor who executed it, although he himself has not executed it, notwithstanding there may be cross covenants on the part of the covenantee, which are stated in the deed to be the consideration for the covenants on the part of the covenantor. A cestui que trust is not a necessary party to an action for the breach of a covenant running with the land, the legal estate being vested in the trustee. Keteltas v. Penfold, 4 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 122.

A covenant with one for benefit of another should be sued on in the name of the covenantee, or if he be dead of his legal repre-

where by statute the action is to be brought in the name of the real party in interest.[77]

2. JOINDER. The criterion by which the propriety of the joinder or the non-joinder of parties to a covenant in an action for breaches is to be ascertained is the nature of the interest of the covenantees. If the interest is several, the action may be several; if joint, it must be joint; and the terms or language of the covenant do not control that principle.[78] As to defendants the rule is, independently of statute, that where the liability is joint all the defendants must be joined;[79] where several, the action must be several; and where joint and several, the action must be against all or one.[80]

A grantee who has conveyed his estate, without having been damnified, cannot join with his co-grantee in a suit against their grantor on his covenants. Allen v. Little, 36 Me. 170.

Covenantees and tenants.—In an action for breach of a covenant to maintain switch connections with the covenantees' land, it is proper for the covenantees to join as parties plaintiff the tenants of the land which was benefited by the covenant. Pittsburg, etc., R. Co. v. Reno, 22 Ill. App. 470 [affirmed in 123 Ill. 273, 14 N. E. 195].

Grantee of part of land not benefited.— Where a plaintiff agreed to furnish the defendants water-power to run their mill situated on a certain lot, and thereafter defendants sold a part of the lot having no connection with the power, it was held that their grantee was not a necessary party to a cross-action against the plaintiff for damages for breach of the covenant. Moline Water Power Co. v. Waters, 10 Ill. App. 159.

Tenants in common, holding under the same deed as grantees, have several freeholds, and are not obliged to join in an action against their grantor for breach of covenants of warranty in his deed. D. Pleading[81] — 1. Declaration, Complaint, Petition, or Statement — a. In General. The declaration, complaint, petition, or statement in an action for breach of covenant must clearly show that the covenant is broken,[82] and must in all cases state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action;[83] although a failure to do so may be cured by the plea of the covenantor,[84] or by the verdict.[85] It must set forth at least in substance a sufficiency of the contents of the deed to show the covenant sued on,[86] and must show that the contract was under seal,[87] and was delivered,[88] and should usually make profert thereof, or Death of joint covenantor.—Where two entered into a covenant and one died before suit, it is error to sue both, and a subsequent abatement of the writ as to the deceased obligor will not render the writ good. Rowan v. Woodward, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 140.

Where plaintiff relies on a paramount title without eviction, defendant cannot object that the petition does not show the owner and his title, nor offer to reconvey the full unencumbered title acquired from defendant, when it alleges that a patent was issued to a certain third person long before the location on the same land of the certificate under which defendant claims; that defendant knew, and plaintiff was ignorant, of the existence of such prior grant when the conveyance was made to plaintiff; that defendant never had title in fee to the land so conveyed; and that plaintiff has never sold or encumbered the land. offer some excuse for the omission.[89] It is not necessary to state the consideration of the defendant's covenant,[90] unless the performance of it constituted a condition precedent, in which case performance must be averred;[91] and only so much of the deed and covenant should be set forth as is essential to the cause of action,[92] and each may be stated according to the legal effect,[93] although it is more usual to declare in the words of the deed;[94] the breach also may be in the negative of the covenant generally, or according to the legal effect, and sometimes in the alternative;[95] and several breaches may be assigned at common law.[96] Damages, being the object of the suit, should be laid sufficient to cover the real amount.[97]

b. Averments as to Parties. In an action for breach of covenant it must be averred with whom the covenant was made,[98] although where an action is by an assignee of the covenant, it is not necessary that he should be described as "assignee."[99] Where all the covenantees do not join, and a sufficient excuse is not alleged for the omission, the declaration is demurrable.[1] A declaration, both as the effect that an averment that a deed was given implies that it was accepted by the grantee.

Misrecital of covenant.— In declaring in covenant, if profert be made of the deed, and the covenant be misrecited, the defendant cannot demur specially, alleging the misrecital as the cause of demurrer, without first craving oyer of the deed, and setting it out in hæc verba, so as to make it a part of the record. Killian v. Herndon, 4 Rich. (S. C.) 196.

Mutilated instrument.— An instrument which one of the parties thereto has mutilated, by tearing off his seal, should not be declared on as a deed with profert, but the facts should be stated as an excuse for not making profert. Powers v. Ware, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 451.

Profert of certified copy.— In a declaration of covenant, contained in a recorded conveyance of land, the plaintiff may make profert of a certified copy without the original. Clark v. Nixon, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 36.

heirs and devisees, without showing in particular how they were heirs, and without setting out the will, is not bad on general demurrer;[2] but where the action is against one as heir of the covenantor, the plaintiff must allege the special facts on which his right to recover depends.[3]

c. Performance of Condition Precedent. In an action for breach of covenant, the plaintiff must allege the performance on his part or a tender of performance, or excuse for non-performance, of a condition precedent, if any there be, at the the place and within the time required.[4] Where the condition precedent involves a question of law, the quo modo must be pointed out; but where it is a mere question of fact, a general averment of performance is proper.[5]

Contra.— Wineman v. Hughson, 44 Ill. App. 22 (to the effect that where the declaration avers that, by "indenture," defendant covenanted, etc., it is not necessary to allege a sealing); Jones v. Davis, 22 Wis. 421 (to the effect that in an action for breach of covenant an allegation that a party made a deed includes an averment that he signed, sealed, and stamped it).

e. Anticipating and Negativing Defenses. In an action for breach of covenant matters of defense need not be anticipated and negatived.[7]

f. Allegation of Demand of Performance. Where a special request is necessary to impose upon defendant the liability on his covenant, such request must be averred,[8] but not otherwise.[9]

g. Duplicity, Joinder, and Repugnance. Several breaches of the same covenant cannot be assigned in the same count,[10] but distinct breaches of several covenants may be.[11] On the other hand if two counts of a declaration be for the same cause of action, on the same covenant, and one count be good, the declaration is good on general demurrer;[12] but a count against covenantors in their own right cannot be joined with one against them in their representative capacity, and such a defect is not cured by verdict.[13]

h. Assignment of Breach — (i) In General. It is sufficient as a rule to assign a breach of a covenant according to its legal effect, or in words which contain its sense and substance;[14] but the assignment must conform to the covenant

(IV) ALLEGATION OF NOTICE TO DEFEND. It is not necessary, in an action for breach of covenant, to aver that the covenantor had notice of the suit by which the covenantee was evicted.[21]

(V) DESCRIPTION OF PARAMOUNT CLAIM. As has been previously stated, it is unnecessary, in an action for breach of the covenants of seizin and of good right to convey, to do more than merely negative the words of the covenant.[22] An assignment of a breach of the covenant against encumbrances must, however, set out the particular encumbrance relied on,[23] and connect the title of the defendant therewith,[24] although it is not necessary to set it forth more than substantially.[25] The same is true in an action for breach of the covenant of warranty

Limited covenant.— In an action of covenant broken on a quitclaim deed, containing only a covenant against encumbrances arising from or under the grantors, the declaration must aver the encumbrances complained of to have so arisen, or it will be bad on demurrer. Mayo v. Babcock, 40 Me. 142.

24. Kellogg v. Robinson, 6 Vt. 276, 27 Am. Dec. 550, to the effect that a declaration on a covenant against encumbrances, setting forth an encumbrance created by an ancient deed, is bad on demurrer if it does not connect the defendant's title with such deed.

or for quiet enjoyment, in which it is sufficient if an eviction under a lawful and paramount title is clearly alleged, without entering into a particular description of such title.[26]

i. Amendment. A declaration counting upon one or more covenants may be amended by adding a count on another covenant.[27] So too a petition in an action for breach of warranty of title to land, which claims as the measure of the plaintiff's damages the value of the property to which title has failed, is amendable so as to make the damages claimed the purchase-price of the property.[28]

2. Subsequent Pleadings — a. Plea or Answer — (i) In General. Pleas and answers in actions for breach of covenant are governed by the same rules that regulate pleadings in actions generally.[29] Where the declaration or complaint

If the facts alleged show an actual encumbrance on the property at the date of the deed the complaint is sufficient. Sheetz v. Longlois, 69 Ind. 491. See also Brenen v. Kelly, 30 Misc. (N. Y.) 46, 61 N. Y. Suppl. 695.

An averment that the paramount title was in fee simple is sufficient. Wilson v. Peelle, 78 Ind. 384.

If the covenantor have notice of the eviction suit, the declaration need not state that the recovery was by an elder and a better title. Swenk v. Stout, 2 Yeates (Pa.) 470.

It is not indispensably necessary to aver that a recovery constituting a breach of the covenant of warranty was by elder and better title. It is sufficient if it be averred to be by an elder and independent title which has prevailed. Williams v. Wetherbee, 1 Aik. (Vt.) 233. See also Smith v. McCampbell, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 100.

It is not necessary to aver that the title to the land has been tried. To aver an eviction by paramount title is sufficient, and the superiority of the title will be tried in the action on the covenant. Patton v. Kennedy, 1 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 389, 10 Am. Dec. 744.

Abandonment of joint plea.— To a declaration upon a covenant executed on the dissolution of a partnership between plaintiff and defendants, where the defendants joined issue upon a joint plea to the merits, a subsequent plea, puis darrein continuance, by one of the defendants, was an abandonment by him of the former joint plea to the merits which would afterward stand as the several plea of the other defendant, to the same effect as if he had pleaded alone. Wheelock v. Rice, 1 Dougl. (Mich.) 267.

Affidavit of defense.— An action on a covenant, whereby the plaintiff and defendant agreed to exchange certain properties, all the sets out particularly the facts constituting the breach, and the assignment shows a breach sufficient in law, the defendant must either confess and avoid or traverse the breach thus set out;[30] but where several breaches are assigned in an action, the defendant may plead to a part and demur to a part.[31] Except in the case of an ill-assigned breach, which need not be answered,[32] the plea or answer must be responsive to, and coextensive with, the whole declaration.[33] And a plea to the whole action must be good as to each breach.[34] Conversely immaterial and irrelevant allegations will be stricken out;[35] and the same is true of frivolous pleas.[36]

(II) Plea by Way of Traverse. In covenant there never was strictly speaking any plea of general issue, for the plea of non est factum only put the deed in issue, every material averment besides that of execution being admitted;[37]

arrearages for taxes and water-rents to be paid up to a certain days, in which the breach assigned was the failure to pay certain water-rents, is not within the affidavit of defense law. Allen v. Patton, 1 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 614.

Amendment.— In an action for breach of covenant, the defendant may amend his plea by filing a bill in equity to reform the deed containing the covenant. McShane v. Main, 62 N. H. 4.

Conclusion.— The same plea cannot conclude indifferently to the country or with a verification. If it is a plea by way of traverse, it must conclude to the country; if by way of confession and avoidance, it must conclude with a verification. Wolfe v. Norris, 2 Speers (S. C.) 322.

A plea in an action on a covenant in the alternative showing performance of one part will be sufficient without a plea affording an answer to the other. Harmon v. Crook, 2 Yerg. (Tenn.) 127.

In an action on mutual covenants, where the plaintiff avers tender of performance on his part, the defendant must take issue on such averment, and cannot plead plaintiff's non-performance in bar. Traver v. Halsted, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 66. Similarly where a declaration alleges performance on the part of the plaintiff and a failure of performance on the part of the defendant, a plea that the plaintiff has not performed and carried out his covenant as he agreed to do, and did not perform the work therein mentioned in a faithful and workmanlike manner, is bad on demurrer, in that it does not allege the respects wherein the performance was insufficient. Abandonment or non-performance by plaintiff.— Under the plea of non est factum, neither a mutual abandonment of the covenant nor the non-performance by the plaintiff of conditions precedent can be proved. Laraway v. Perkins, 10 N. Y. 371.

Illegality of consideration may be shown under the plea of non est factum. Dale v. Roosevelt, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 307.

Mutual mistake.— That all parties executing a deed did so by mistake, in consequence of the scrivener's having so drawn it that the covenants were inverted, is a good defense under the plea of non est factum. Gove v. Wooster, Lalor (N. Y.) 30.

In Illinois non est factum may be interand a plea of non infregit conventionem was bad on demurrer, although it would be aided after verdict.[38] As a consequence all matters of defense should be specially pleaded.[39]

(III) Plea by Way of Confession and Avoidance—(A) In General. Pleas by way of confession and avoidance must confess the truth of the allegations which they purport to answer, and must explicitly state all facts necessary to constitute a lawful avoidance coextensive with the confession.[40]

posed without verification. Longley v. Norwall, 2 Ill. 389.

In Ohio, by statute, non est factum is a plea of the general issue in covenant, to which a notice of set-off may be appended. Granger v. Granger, 6 Ohio 35.

Variance.— Under the plea of non est factum, the defendant may on the trial avail himself of a variance in the statement of the deed, either in respect of a misstatement, or of the omission of a covenant, qualifying the contract (Treat v. Brush, 11 Mo. 310; Tempany v. Burnand, 4 Campb. 20; Howell v. Richards, 11 East 633, 11 Rev. Rep. 287; Pitt v. Green, 9 East 188); and this although the defendant has admitted the due execution of the deed (Goldie v. Shuttleworth, 1 Camph. 70); and if the plaintiff omit to state a condition precedent, the defendant may crave oyer and set out the deed and demur (Snell v. Snell, 4 B. & C. 741, 7 D. & R. 294, 4 L. J. K. B. O. S. 44, 10 E. C. L. 782). But if instead of demurring he pleads non est factum, he cannot object that there is a variance (Dorr v. Fenno, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 521; Henry v. Cleland, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 400).

How pleaded.— The plea of non infregit conventionem is not a general issue, but must be pleaded in bar. Phelps v. Sawyer, 1 Aik. (Vt.) 150.

In covenant upon a warranty, in which one of the breaches assigned is that the defendant was not seized of a good estate in fee, etc., the plea of non infregit conventionem, etc., although it presents an informal issue, is still sufficient for the court to enter judgment on. Bender v. Fromberger, 4 Dall. (Pa.) 436, 1 L. ed. 898.

The plea admits the deed, but denies the breaches, and puts in issue all such matters as show that the covenant is not broken or that defendant was never under any obligation to fulfil the covenant declared on. Roosevelt v. Fulton, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 71.

Where a breach is assigned in the negative, non infregit conventionem is not an issuable plea. Boone v. Eyre, 2 W. Bl. 1312, 1 H. Bl. 273, note a. See also Hodgson v. East India Co., 8 T. R. 278.

Accord and satisfaction is a good plea to an action for a breach of covenant against encumbrances (Jenkins v. Hopkins, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 543); but a plea that the defendant was surety in the covenant sued on, and that judgment had been rendered against his principal, and execution issued and levied on property, without any allegation of satisfaction, is not a good plea (Botts v. Fitzpatrick, 5 B. Mon. (Ky.) 397).

De son tort.— A plea setting forth that if plaintiff had been damnified it was of his own wrong, and through his own act, means, and default, without specifying what act or wrong, is bad on demurrer. Harmony v. Bingham, 12 N. Y. 99, 62 Am. Dec. 142.

Failure of consideration.— In an action on a covenant of warranty in a deed, an answer alleging failure of consideration is sufficient. Thomas v. Hamilton, 71 Ind. 277.

Fraudulent misrepresentations.— A special plea alleging that the deed on which plaintiff relies was procured by fraudulent misrepresentations should set forth the facts or special circumstances of the fraud with sufficient precision and certainty to apprise the plaintiff of the character of the defense intended to be maintained, and to enable the court to decide whether the matter relied on constitutes a valid claim to equitable relief. Burtners v. Keran, 24 Gratt. (Va.) 42.

Non-performance of condition by plaintiff. — Defendant cannot plead generally that there is in the covenant a condition precedent to be performed by plaintiff before he can maintain his action, but he must set out specially the condition, with the time and manner at and in which it was to be performed, and aver that he is ready and willing to perform his part of the covenant. McLaughlin v. Hutchins, 3 Ark. 207.

Pleading proviso or exception.— Where a contract is subject to a proviso or exception, the defendant must plead the proviso or exception in order to avail himself thereof, if

(B) Covenants Performed. Where all the covenants are in the affirmative, covenants performed, or a tender of performance, may be pleaded.[41] If, however, the covenantor does not stipulate to do anything, but only warrants a fact to exist at the time of making the warranty, covenants performed is not an issuable plea.[42] So too where the plaintiff assigns particular breaches, the defendant should not plead general performance, but should plead separately to each breach.[43] The plea admits the covenant as set out in the declaration,[44] and that the adverse party it is not contained in the body of the covenant itself, but in a separate clause of the contract. Consolidated Coal Co. v. Mexico Fire-Brick Co., 66 Mo. App. 296.

When a covenant is in the alternative, it is no answer, in an action thereon, to render an excuse for not performing one part of the alternative. Harmon v. Crook, 2 Yerg. (Tenn.) 127.

41. Bailey v. Rogers, 1 Me. 186; Taylor v. Browder, 1 Ohio St. 225; Johnson v. Clay, 1 Moore C. P. 200, 7 Taunt. 486, 2 E. C. L. 459.

How pleaded.— Performance pleaded otherwise than in the terms of the covenant is bad, even on general demurrer. Scudamore v. Stratton, 1 B. & P. 455.

Negative covenant.— General performance, without averring how performed, cannot be pleaded to a negative covenant (Hogencamp v. Ackerman, 24 N. J. L. 133); but the mere occurrence of negative words does not make the covenant negative, if they are in affirmance of a preceding affirmative; or if the whole clause taken together is essentially affirmative (Bailey v. Rogers, 1 Me. 186).

Performance of conditions.— "The general rule as to the mode of pleading the performance of conditions of covenants is that the party must not plead generally that he performed a covenant or condition, but must show specially the time, place, and manner of performance, and even though the subject to be performed should consist of several different acts, yet he must show the performance of each." Norfolk, etc., R. Co. v. Suffolk Lumber Co., 92 Va. 413, 437, 23 S. E. 737 [quoting 4 Minor Inst. (3d ed.) 1202]. See also Dickinson v. Burr, 7 Ark. 34.

Tender.— Buckmaster v. Grundy, 2 Ill. 310 (to the effect that a plea of readiness to perform, without averring an offer of performance, is bad); Harris v. Campbell, 4 Dana (Ky.) 586 (to the effect that in an action on a covenant that another person will fulfil his agreement to pay, etc., a plea that such person did tender according to his agreement is good, without repeating the tender). Compare McCormick v. Crall, 6 Watts (Pa.) 207, to the effect that under the plea of covenants performed a tender before suit brought may be given in evidence.

Conclusion.—When, in an action on a covenant, a material breach is averred in the declaration, a plea denying the charge and alleging general performance should conclude to the country. Star Brick Co. v. Ridsdale, 34 N. J. L. 428. See also Overton v. Crabb, 4 Hayw. (Tenn.) 109.

Defect cured by verdict.— See McCoy v. Martin, 4 Dana (Ky.) 580.

Double and inconsistent plea.— A plea alleging performance on the part of the defendant and non-performance by the plaintiff of any part of his covenants, although his covenants were conditions precedent, is both double and inconsistent. Witter v. McNiel, 4 Ill. 433.

Leave to withdraw.— The court will give the defendant leave to withdraw the plea of covenants performed, and to file a special plea, if it appear to be a plea to the merits and not decidedly bad, leaving the plaintiff to his demurrer. Gill v. Patten, 10 Fed. Cas. No. 5,427, 1 Cranch C. C. 114.

Covenants performed, "with leave," etc.— In Pennsylvania, under the plea of "covenants performed," with leave to give in evidence everything that amounts to a legal defense, the defendant may prove any matter that he has performed his agreement.[45] It can only be supported by evidence which shows that the defendant has performed his covenant, and not by evidence excusing his non-performance thereof.[46] But where it appears on the face of the covenant as set out in the declaration that the defendant is not personally bound, he may take advantage of it after verdict on a plea of covenants performed.[47]

b. Demurrer. The general rules of pleading governing demurrers in actions generally are applicable in actions for breach of covenant.[48]

c. Replication. When the plea has introduced new matter, and the plaintiff does not demur, the replication must then either insist that the defendant could not so plead by showing matter of estoppel,[49] or traverse or deny the truth of the matter alleged in the plea, either in whole or in part;[50] or confess and avoid the plea;[51] or in case of an evasive plea newly assign the cause of action.[52] The replication must in all cases conform to the declaration,[53] but if a replication is good as to either of the breaches assigned in the declaration and answered by the plea, it will be upheld on demurrer.[54] might have pleaded, without giving notice of such matter, unless called for. Webster v. Warren, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,339, 2 Wash. 456.

The addition of "absque hoc," etc., to the plea of "covenants performed," in an action upon mutual covenants, will put the plaintiff to proof of performance on his part. Morton v. Hammon, 8 Pa. St. 270. Such a plea is a negative plea, at least, the words "absque hoc," or "without this," introducing a negative after an affirmative inducement (Smith v. Frazer, 53 Pa. St. 226); but it does not put in issue the execution of the instrument declared on (Farmers', etc., Turnpike Co. v. McCullough, 25 Pa. St. 303).

Where a declaration alleges full performance by plaintiff, evidence is admissible that plaintiff was prevented from performing by defendants, as an excuse for non-performance tantamount to performance. Huntingdon, etc., R. Co. v. McGovern, 29 Pa. St. 78.

52. See, generally, PLEADING.

53. Departure.— Where the declaration on a covenant alleges an agreement by plaintiff to give defendant good title on a certain day, and averred performance, and the replication alleges reasons why title was not given, there is a departure. Burk v. Bear, 3 Pa. L. J. Rep. 355, 5 Pa. L. J. 304.

d. Rejoinder. The rules of pleading applicable to the plea in actions for breach of covenant are applicable, except in respect to singleness of issue, to the rejoinder. It must, however, support and not depart from the plea.[55]

3. Issues, Proof, and Variance — a. Issues and Proof. As in other actions the proof in actions for breach of covenant must be confined to the issues made by the pleadings.[56] Under the general issue, so called, that is, a general denial of liability on the covenant, the defendant may introduce in evidence special facts showing that he is not liable,[57] and whatever may be shown under such issue should not be pleaded specially.[58] Where the facts alleged in a declaration may constitute a breach of either of several covenants, the plaintiff is not, upon such a case being shown, required to elect upon which covenant he will seek a recovery.[59] But on the other hand, where two counts of a declaration are contradictory, a recovery cannot be had under both, since the cause of action set out in one would constitute a complete defense to that set out in the other.[60]

b. Variance. A material variance between the allegations and the proof in actions for breach of covenant is fatal.[61]

Fraud in the covenantor's failure to convey may be proved under a general averment of non-performance of a covenant to convey land. Goff v. Hawks, 5 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 341.

In an action on the covenant of warranty it is not necessary to prove a technical eviction, but the action may be maintained, if the plaintiff proves that the premises were in the actual possession of another under paramount title at the date of conveyance. Nor will the recital in the deed that "immediate possession is delivered," and the failure to allege an eviction, estop the covenantee from denying that he got possession. Sheffey v. Gardiner, 79 Va. 313. See also Shell v. Evans, 7 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 501, 6 Ohio N. P. 230. And see Burton v. Reeds, 20 Ind. 87.

Production of deed.— In an action for a breach of the covenants in a deed of conveyance, any plea in bar negativing the breach assigned admits the conveyance and the covenants declared on, and the deed need not be produced in evidence. Marston v. Hobbs, 2 Mass. 433, 3 Am. Dec. 61.

Proof of execution.— In an action on a covenant of warranty contained in a deed not recorded, it is not necessary to prove the execution of the deed unless the defendant puts the execution of the deed in issue. Patton v. Kennedy, 1 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 389, 10 Am. Dec. 744.

Proof of measures to complete title.— Where the issue joined is on the title of the defendant, the plaintiff need not show that he took any measures to complete the title that he purchased of the defendant. Clarke v. McAnulty, 3 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 364.

Proof of title.— After alleging that defendant took title to land in trust for a partnership of which plaintiff was a member, an allegation that plaintiff had acquired title and is now owner is sufficient to admit proof of his title from the firm. Rogers v. Golson, (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 31 S. W. 200.

To sustain an action for breach of a covenant for quiet enjoyment it is necessary for the plaintiff to prove that he was evicted by a person who had a lawful and paramount title existing before or at the time of the defendant's covenant, as the covenant for quiet enjoyment applies only to the acts of those claiming title and to rights existing at the time it is entered into. E. Evidence[62] — 1. Presumptions and Burden of Proof — a. Presumptions. From long-continued possession of the premises in controversy,[63] from long-continued, peaceable, notorious, adverse, and uninterrupted enjoyment of an easement,[64] or from the purchase of a paramount title by the plaintiff,[65] there are certain presumptions which may arise. So also as to the consideration for a covenant,[66] as to the surrender of the premises,[67] as to notice of entry,[68] and as to the possession of uncultivated land[69] the law may raise certain presumptions.

b. Burden of Proof. As in other actions, so in actions for breach of covenant, the burden of proof rests upon the party holding the affirmative of the issue,[70] who is in most instances the plaintiff.[71] The form of the pleadings may, how-

Immaterial variances.— If a declaration alleges a covenant to have been made by the defendant, his heirs, executors, and administrators, the variance is not material, although the covenant does not mention heirs. Jordan v. Cooper, 3 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 564. So too in an action on a covenant against encumbrances, where the breach assigned is an outstanding tax, and a sale therefor, a variance between the description of the premises contained in the deed and that contained in the assessment roll is immaterial, provided the land is accurately described in each, although by different words. Mitchell v. Pillsbury, 5 Wis. 407.

The special breach assigned in an action for breach of covenant of warranty must be proved. Walker v. Kirshner, 2 Kan. App. 371, 42 Pac. 596.

Words of agreement.— If the consideration of a covenant is set forth in the declaration in the words of the agreement containing the covenant there can be no variance. Smith v. Edmunds, 16 Vt. 687.

62. See, generally, Evidence.

63. Arising from long-continued possession. — Where the plaintiff and his grantors have been in possession of the premises in controversy for a long period of time, and he is then evicted by a third person, such long-continued possession raises a conclusive presumption that he was not evicted by title paramount. Knapp v. Marlboro, 34 Vt. 235.

64. After long-continued, peaceable, notorious, adverse, continuous, and uninterrupted enjoyment of an easement, the law will presume such a contract as to constitute a covenant running with the land. Lucas v. Smithfield, etc., Turnpike Co., 36 W. Va. 427, 15 S. E. 182.

65. Arising from purchase of paramount title.—Where, in a suit brought for breach of warranty, it appears that the plaintiff had been in possession for five years under a deed containing a warranty of title, and was then evicted by the holder of a paramount title, and that within a year after such eviction he bought in such paramount title, it will be presumed that the mesne profits accruing during such five years were a part of the consideration for the purchase. Harding v. Larkin, 41 Ill. 413.

66. As to consideration.— Where, in a suit for breach of covenant, it appears that the grantor first executed a quitclaim deed, and afterward, at the request of the grantee, who had taken possession under the quitclaim deed, the grantor gave a warranty deed, it will not be presumed that the covenant was without consideration. Bowne v. Wolcott, 1 N. D. 415, 48 N. W. 336.

67. As to surrender.— Where there is a judgment of eviction, and the premises are unoccupied by the plaintiff or his tenant, and are vacant, the jury are authorized to presume that he has surrendered them to the rightful owner. Burton v. Reeds, 20 Ind. 87 [citing Fowler v. Poling, 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 165; Greenvault v. Davis, 4 Hill (N. Y.) 643; Williams v. Wetherbee, 1 Aik. (Vt.) 233; Drury v. Shumway, 1 D. Chipm. (Vt.) 110, 1 Am. Dec. 729].

68. As to notice of entry.— Where the plaintiff in an action has averred and proved that an entry was made to evict him under paramount title, it is unnecessary to prove that notice of the entry was given by the one entering to the plaintiff, since it will be presumed that he had knowledge of such entry before action brought. Burrage v. Smith, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 56.

69. As to possession of uncultivated land. —Although there may be no evidence that the possession of uncultivated land was in the vendor, who sells by courses and distances, in an action by the vendee on his warranty, it will be presumed that the same possession was given which usually follows a conveyance of such land. Steiner v. Baughman, 12 Pa. St. 106.

70. Right to open and close.— In covenant upon an issue, the party who holds the affirmative of the issue has the right to open and close the argument to the jury. Beall v. Newton, 2 Fed. Cas. No. 1,164, 1 Cranch C. C. 404.

ever, cast the burden upon the defendant.[72] Thus, by pleading title in himself at the execution of a deed containing a covenant of seizin, or probably of good right to convey, the defendant, under the common-law system of pleading, assumes the burden of proving such title.[73] But in some of the code states the reasons that gave rise to the common-law rule are held to be inapplicable, and the burden is on the plaintiff to show wherein the defendant's title was defective.[74] And in all cases where the plaintiff has voluntarily yielded without suit to an outstanding title or claim, the burden is upon him to show that such outstanding title or claim was in fact paramount;[75] and the same is true where the plaintiff

In Pennsylvania the usual mode of putting a plaintiff to proof of performance [of mutual covenants] is by the addition of absque hoc, etc., to the plea of covenants performed. Martin v. Hammon, 8 Pa. St. 270. This is a negative plea in part at least. It is what is usually denominated a special technical traverse, the words "absque hoc," or "without this," introducing a negation after an affirmative inducement. Smith v. Frazier, 53 Pa. St. 226. The affirmative plea under such circumstances is pregnant with a negative and casts the proof of the breach on the plaintiff. Stewart v. Bedell, 79 Pa. St. 336.

72. See Kane v. Sanger, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 89, where it was held that where non est factum is the only plea in an action for breach of covenant for quiet enjoyment, no question arises as to the eviction, and that if notice is given with such plea, the defendant, upon denying the eviction, must prove that there was none.

Contra.— See Wilford v. Rose, 2 Root (Conn.) 14, where it was held that the plaintiff must show not only that the defendant was not seized, but who was. This seems, however, to have been due to the form in which the declaration was drawn.

The reason of the rule is fairly enough pointed out in Mecklen v. Blake, 16 Wis. 102, 103, in which the court says: "The general rule is familiar to every lawyer that the burden of proving any fact lies upon the party who substantially asserts the affirmative of the issue." 2. ADMISSIBILITY IN GENERAL — a. Relevant and Material Facts. Evidence which has a legitimate tendency to satisfy the jury that the covenant was or was not broken, or which may be material upon the question of damages, is admissible, and its exclusion is error.[77] Evidence that is immaterial or irrelevant as to either of these questions is of course inadmissible.[78]

b. Res Gestæ. All the circumstances surrounding and explanatory of the transaction between the parties may be given in evidence as part of the res gestæ.[79]

c. Documentary Evidence. Unless admitted by the pleadings,[80] the instrument containing the covenant alleged to have been broken is always admissible in evidence;[81] and it is immaterial that it may in its terms vary in some measure from

Parol or extrinsic evidence is not admissible to contradict, vary, or materially affect a covenant,[84] although it may be received to show fraud or mutual mistake in the original execution of the instrument,[85] or to explain a patent ambiguity.[86] So too performance[87] or eviction[88] may be shown by parol, as may any collateral or incidental matters;[89] and in some jurisdictions it is held permissible to show by parol evidence that land was taken subject to a known encumbrance,[90] or that the covenantee agreed, as part of the see Prestwood v. McGowin, 128 Ala. 277, 29 So. 386, 86 Am. St. Rep. 136, where it was held that in an action for breach of covenants of seizin and of warranty, a deed containing such covenants is not admissible in evidence when a part of the plaintiffs in the case are not entitled to sue on the covenants, and are not grantees or parties in the deed.

Option agreement.— A deed having been executed pursuant to an agreement by the landowner, by which he gave a railroad company the option of buying the privilege of diverting the channel of a stream, the option agreement reciting that it was given with the understanding that the passage under the bridge in question should not be interfered with, in an action by the landowner against the railroad company for the breach of the covenant of the deed to keep the passage open, the option agreement is admissible to show the consideration for the deed, since the provision of the option agreement as to the maintenance in the passageway was not merged in the deed. Evidence in support of covenant.— In an action for breach of warranty, it appeared that on the sale of land by defendant to plaintiff defendant gave plaintiff a separate instrument, agreeing that if the land was not worth a consideration equal to the sum stated in the deed he would make it worth such sum. Defendant claimed and testified that such instrument was executed and made after the completion of the sale, and not as a part of it. It was held that evidence was admissible to show defendant's declarations made to plaintiff, prior to the sale, as to the value of the land conveyed by him, and of his intention to execute such a warranty. consideration, to assume and pay off certain encumbrances.[91] It has also been held that the deed of a former owner is admissible to show the manner in which an encumbrance or easement originated.[92]

3. JUDGMENT AS EVIDENCE OF EVICTION OR PARAMOUNT TITLE — a. Admissibility. A judgment adverse to the covenantee or one claiming under him in favor of the owner of the paramount title or right is admissible in an action by him against the covenantor for breach of his covenant to show the fact of eviction, and it is immaterial upon the question of admissibility whether the covenantor had notice of such suit or not.[93]

b. Conclusiveness — (i) IN GENERAL. A judgment against the covenantee, or one claiming under him, whether the suit be by or against him,[94] is prima facie evidence, in an action against the covenantor for breach of his covenant, of a paramount title or right in another.[95]

In Missouri ejectment is a mere possessory action, and a judgment therein confers no title upon the successful party. Difference in value.— The measure of damages for the breach of a covenant or condition subsequent, containing a restriction as to building lines, or the character and cost of buildings to be erected on the granted premises, is the difference in the value of plain-absolute,[4] or where the performance of the covenant has become impossible by reason of the total destruction of the subject-matter of the contract, damages should be given as for a total breach.[5] In cases of breach of real covenants, however, it has been held that the value of the land at the time of the covenant broken,[6] or at the date of the deed,[7] is to be taken as the measure of damage. The vendor, if guilty of no fraud, can be compelled to refund only the amount paid by the vendee for a better title;[8] but the right to damages extends to the whole subject-matter injured.[9]

b. Aggravation and Mitigation of Damages. In an action on a covenant, plaintiff's damages may be reduced by showing that defendant has been injured, and to what extent, by plaintiff's omission to perform his stipulations contained in the same covenant.[10] And where the grantor acquires title, even after the grantee has commenced his action for the breach of covenant, if before the damages are assessed, it can be shown, not in bar of the action, but in mitigation of damages.[11]

c. Nominal Damages. While plaintiff is, upon showing a breach, entitled to at least nominal damages,[12] yet these are all that he may recover, except upon proof of actual injury or expense.[13]

d. Recovery of Purchase-Money With Interest and Costs. In actions for breach of covenants real, the usual measure of damages, in the absence of fraud, is the purchase-money paid, with interest, and costs of suit.[14]

Permanent injury.— When a covenant is of such a nature that there can be but one breach and one recovery, the jury are not limited, in assessing the damages in an action on the breach, to the time when the suit was instituted, but may award damages for such permanent injury as they may find plaintiff has sustained. Jacobs v. Davis, 34 Md. 204.

Where the breach is a continuing one, the damages recovered will not be presumed to have been given as compensation for non-performance of the covenant during all future time, so as to bar all future suits. Crain v. Beech, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 120.

for the proper measure of damages in case of a partial eviction. Thus it has been stated that the damages should bear the same proportion to the whole purchase-money that the value of the part to which the title has failed bears to the price of the whole premises.[15] Again the value of the land from the date of sale with interest has been held the measure.[16] So too it has been held that when a deed passes an estate of value, although not that covenanted for, it is to be considered in measuring damages.[17]

f. On Agreement of Purchase to Assume Indebtedness. Where a purchaser of property agrees to assume and save the vendor harmless from certain outstanding indebtedness against him, the measure of damages, in an action by the vendor upon a breach of such covenant, will be the full amount of the debt, the payment of which the covenantor assumed.[18]

g. Where Grantor Purchases Outstanding Title. Where land is sold on credit, and the grantee is ejected by one holding a paramount title, which is subsequently purchased by the grantor for the benefit of such grantee, the grantee is entitled to recover for the time he was deprived of the land, and the rate of interest agreed to be paid is presumptively a fair equivalent for the use of the land.[19]

h. In Successive Actions. The measure of damages against successive covenantors, in actions for the same breach of the same covenant, is the same in all.[20]

i. Conflict of Laws. In an action for a breach of covenant of seizin, the Hoot v. Spade, 20 Ind. 326 (holding that the rule is not affected by the fact that the lot was, with the vendor's knowledge, purchased for a particular purpose, and that the failure of title to a portion of it renders it useless for this purpose); Doyle v. Brundred, 189 Pa. St. 113, 41 Atl. 1107.

Enhancement disregarded.— Where a strip thirty feet wide was taken from the front of the lot purchased in opening a street, the jury should be instructed, in an action by the purchaser on the vendor's covenant of warranty, that they should consider the entire tract, including the strip taken, to be of the value of four thousand five hundred dollars, the consideration paid, and disregarding all enhancement of the property from the widening of the street, should determine from the evidence how much less the remainder of the tract, after the strip taken had been opened as a street, was worth, than the whole tract was worth, including the strip, and without the street being opened, this difference, with interest from the time the city took possession, being the proper measure of recovery. Louisville Public Warehouse Co. v. James, 56 S. W. 19, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 1726.

Upon a sale of a patent right for two counties, to one of which the vendor has no title, the vendee's damages are such proportion of the whole price paid as the value of the county to which title fails bears to the price of both. Moorehead v. Davis, 92 Ind. 303.

In Texas the rule is stated to be the proportion which the value of the premises from which plaintiff has been evicted bears to the whole premises, and cost and expenses, subject to the same qualifications and conditions applicable in cases of total eviction. Webb v. Brown, 2 Tex. Unrep. Cas. 36. Compare Chestnut v. Chism, 20 Tex. Civ. App. 23, 48 S. W. 549, in which it was held that an instruction as to the measure of damages for a failure of title to a portion of the land conveyed, as "such sum as the value of the land lost bears to the whole land described in the deed," was properly refused for its omission to refer to the price as a standard to which the ratio should be applied.

16. Bonta v. Miller, 1 Litt. (Ky.) 250, holding that on a contract to pay whatever may appear to be just, and the value of as much of the land sold as may be recovered by an adversary suit, the value of the land at the date of the contract with interest is the measure of damages.

rule of damages in the state in which the action is brought will govern, although the land lies in another state.[21]

j. Personal Covenants. On the breach of a personal covenant, the damages recoverable are a sum sufficient to put plaintiff in the position in which he would have stood if the covenant had been kept,[22] a distinction being drawn between cases of mere contracts of indemnity on the one side, and cases resting upon the express agreement of defendant with plaintiff to pay a debt for which plaintiff or his property is bound, on the other.[23]

2. Covenant of Seizin — a. General Rule. The value of the land at the time of sale is almost universally held to be the criterion by which damages are to be adjudged.[24]

b. Aggravation and Mitigation of Damages. The measure of damages for breach of a covenant of seizin is the consideration paid and interest thereon, less any benefit, direct or indirect, taken under the deed;[25] and the subsequent acquirement of title by the grantor may be considered in mitigation.[26] So too a perfection of title by a decree of court may be shown in mitigation.[27]

c. Nominal Damages. A covenantee who has never been disturbed in his possession is entitled only to nominal damages for a technical breach of the covenant of seizin in his deed.[28]

21. Nichols v. Walter, 8 Mass. 243. See also Looney v. Reeves, 5 Kan. App. 279, 48 Pac. 606, holding that in an action in one state on the covenants of warranty in a deed executed therein, for a failure of title to real estate situated in another, the measure of recovery is governed by the laws of the former.

Mutual mistake.—Where the covenantor by mistake included in his deed a parcel of land which he did not own, and the parties to the deed did not understand it to be conveyed at the time of executing the deed, it was held that the covenantee, in an action of covenant, assigning as a breach that the covenantor was not seized of such parcel, was entitled only to nominal damages. the value of that land.[31] The fact that the grantee has been compelled to pay his own grantee a larger sum on a covenant of warranty will not enlarge his claim for damages.[32] The rule of damages as stated does not apply where a vendor has sold lands to which he has not a perfect title, he undertaking to complete and make perfect the title.[33]

f. Loss of Part of Tract. Where the breach is only as to an aliquot and undivided part of the land attempted to be conveyed, the damages are in proportion to the whole consideration paid as that aliquot part of the land is to the whole thereof.[34]

g. Fraudulent Representations as to Title to Land. The measure of damages for breach of the usual covenants of a deed is the purchase-money and interest; but where the vendee is induced to purchase by the fraudulent representations of the vendor as to his title, he may, upon eviction by a better title, recover of his vendor all the damages naturally resulting from the fraud, although the land was conveyed by deed with warranty. 3. Covenant of Right to Convey. In an action for breach of the covenant of right to convey, the general rule as to the measure of damages is the consideration paid by the grantee and the interest thereon.[36] If no consideration was actually paid by the grantee to the grantor, the measure has been held to be the value of the land, with interest from the date of the deed.[37] Upon a merely technical breach the damages are nominal;[38] and where the breach is only as to an undivided part of the lands, the damages are such part of the whole consideration as the undivided part is to the whole land attempted to be conveyed.[39]

4. Covenant Against Encumbrances — a. General Rule. Being a covenant of indemnity, the general rule for the measure of damages in an action for its breach by reason of an encumbrance existing upon the property sold, at the time of the sale, is the loss actually sustained by the covenantee with interest.[40] Damages, costs, and expenses, when given as a penalty for breach of covenant, mean the necessary, natural, and proximate damages resulting from such non-performance,

L. 323, to the effect that where a party, by a settlement made on his marriage, conveyed estates upon certain trusts, and covenanted with the trustees to pay off encumbrances on the estates, on his failing to do so the trustees were entitled to recover the whole value of the encumbrances, although no special damage was laid or proved.

Canada.— See Connell v. Boulton, 2 U. C. L. J. N. S. 240, in which it was held that plaintiff was entitled to recover the whole amount due upon an outstanding mortgage, although it exceeded the purchase-money and interest, and the mortgage included other lands sufficient in value to satisfy it.

See 14 Cent. Dig. tit. "Covenants," § 238.

Levy of execution.— The measure of damages, where the levy of an execution is the encumbrance, is the sum at which the land was appraised, with interest from the time of the eviction. Barrett v. Porter, 14 Mass. 143.

Outstanding lease.— Where a tenant holds a lease upon the property conveyed, the grantee of such property is entitled to damages to the full rental value for the time he was kept out of possession, without deduction of the value of the crops turned over by the tenant under the terms of the lease. Edwards v. Clark, 83 Mich. 246, 47 N. W. 112, 10 L. R. A. 659. See also Clark v. Fisher, 54 Kan. 403, 38 Pac. 493; Porter v. Bradley, 7 R. I. 538. Compare Fritz v. Pusey, 31 Minn. 368, 18 N. W. 94, in which it was held that in the absence of any special circumstances the value of the use of the premises for the time during which the grantee has been deprived of such use is the measure.

Resale by grantee.— A grantee of land cannot recover, as damages for the breach of the grantor's covenant against encumbrances consisting of the existence of an inchoate right of dower in the premises, a sum paid by himself to an auctioneer for selling them to a person who refused to complete the purchase on discovering the encumbrance. Harrington v. Murphy, 109 Mass. 299.

and not some remote, accidental, or special injury to the party to whom the right of action accrues.[41] Merely speculative damages will not be given;[42] and the diminished value of an estate, in consequence of an encumbrance upon it, is not the measure of damages unless the estate was purchased by the grantee for the purpose of making a resale, and that fact was communicated to or known by the grantor.[43]

b. Nominal Damages. In an action for breach of a covenant against encumbrances, if the encumbrance has inflicted no actual injury on plaintiff and he has paid nothing toward removing or extinguishing it he can only recover nominal damages.[44] Where the encumbrance is removed by the grantor, without expense or trouble to the grantee, the latter can recover only nominal damages.[45]

c. Purchase or Extinguishment of Encumbrance. In an action for breach of the covenant against encumbrances, if plaintiff has purchased or extinguished the outstanding encumbrance, he is entitled to recover with interest[46] the reasonable price which he has fairly and necessarily paid for it,[47] provided it does not exceed

Where land is deeded for a nominal consideration, with a view to its improvement by the grantee, and the consequent benefit to the grantor's adjoining property, the measure of damages for breach of a covenant against encumbrances is not the nominal consideration named in the deed, but the amount actually paid by the grantee to protect himself against the encumbrance, not to exceed the then value of the premises. resulting from the existence of an easement thereon is as a rule the measure of damages in an action for the breach of the covenant against encumbrances.[54] Where the easement has been extinguished, the measure of damages is the injury sustained between the date of the deed and the removal of the encumbrance, together with the expenses incident to such removal.[55] On the other hand the fact that an easement is perpetual may properly be taken into consideration in assessing the damages.[56]

5. Covenant For Further Assurance. The damages for the refusal to execute a further assurance are only nominal, unless plaintiff prove actual damages sustained by reason of such refusal.[57] Where actual injury is shown the covenantee is entitled to full compensatory damages.[58]

6. Covenants of Warranty and For Quiet Enjoyment — a. In General. Being covenants of indemnity compensation is the usual measure of damages upon the breach of a covenant of warranty or for quiet enjoyment.[59] Upon a partial breach the diminished value of the tract[60] and the value of the estate or interest lost[61] has each been held the measure; and where the eviction is by a mortgagee,

Actual damage.—Where a covenant against encumbrances is broken by an easement over the land for a railroad right of way, the damage arising from its breach ought to be the actual damage sustained by the purchaser. Whiteside v. Magruder, 75 Mo. App. 364.

Nominal damages.— The existence of an easement created by a covenant between lot owners that they will not build nearer than eight feet from the street is so slight an injury, if any, to the premises, that only nominal damages will be given on account of it in an action for a breach of the covenant against encumbrances. Greene v. Creighton, 7 R. I. 1.

Costs and expenses.— If a grantee of land, under a deed containing covenants of warranty against encumbrances, is defeated in a suit against him for interfering with an easement which a third party claims on the land, he may recover of his warrantor not only the damage he has sustained in consequence of the breach of the covenant, but also such costs and expenses as he has fairly and in good faith incurred in attempting to maintain and defend the title. Personal injuries.— A warranty for quiet enjoyment extends only to the damages involved in an eviction. Personal injuries from an assault and battery, committed to eject the tenant, are not recoverable as due by the covenant. Jones v. Worley, 21 La. Ann. 404.

the amount of the mortgage debt and interest, if that do not exceed the full value of the estate, should be taken.[62] The value of the tract is to be taken as of the date of the covenant.[63] In all cases the law in force at the date of the contract governs in the determination of the measure of damages.[64]

b. Aggravation and Mitigation of Damages. It may be shown in mitigation of damages that before trial the vendor perfected the title;[65] that the vendee, holding under a tax-title, has received from the holder of the paramount title all the taxes paid by himself and his vendor;[66] that a mortgage made by the grantee is outstanding at the time of suit;[67] or that by reason of a subsequent suit the premises have been restored to the grantee.[68] On the other hand incorporeal rights pertaining to the land may be taken into consideration in assessing the damages upon an eviction.[69]

c. Nominal Damages. Where a grantee has undisturbed possession and has been subject to no inconvenience or expense by reason of a defect in the title conveyed, he is entitled to recover only nominal damages in an action for a breach of the covenant of warranty or for quiet enjoyment.[70] So too where the loss has resulted either from the covenantee's laches or from breach of his contract substantial damages cannot be recovered;[71] and where nothing has been paid as the price of the land only nominal damages can be recovered.[72]

d. Purchase of Outstanding Title. Where the covenantee has purchased the outstanding title, his damages for the breach of his vendor's covenant of warranty or for quiet enjoyment will be limited to the amount necessarily paid by him for that purpose, with interest from the date of eviction, including the incidental expenses and reasonable compensation for his trouble, not exceeding in all the purchase-price and interest.[73] Where the grantee extinguishes the paramount title for a nominal consideration, he can recover on the warranty only the amount of such consideration, with a reasonable compensation for expenses to which he may have been put in extinguishing it.[74]

Limitation of civil-law rule.—Although the general rule of the Roman Digest is that the purchaser must be indemnified to the extent of the interest which he had in not being evicted, there was a reasonable limitation to this rule, to wit, that where the agreement had for its object a certain amount, as in sales, leases, etc., the damage should not exceed the subject-matter of the contract. fraud of the covenantor, it has been held that he is entitled to recover the highest value of the land at any time between his purchase and the commencement of his suit.[83] In either case interest and necessary costs and expenses are recoverable.[84]

g. Recovery of Consideration Expressed or Agreed Upon. Where the parties have mutually agreed upon the value of the land, or upon the value of the consideration given and received, such valuation is to be taken as correct, and is the proper measure of damages in an action for breach of the covenant of warranty or for quiet enjoyment.[85] Similarly it has been held that where a vendee is delayed in obtaining possession by reason of an outstanding lease, the measure of damages is the fair rental value for the lost time, of which the rent agreed to be paid by the tenant is prima facie evidence.[86]

h. Loss of Part of Tract. Fictitious valuation.— Where the original purchaser of land conveyed it under a general covenant of warranty, and the grantee covenanted specially to pay the first vendor the purchase-price, the consideration being certain shares of stock put in at a fictitious valuation, the measure of damages, in an action by the second vendee for breach of warranty, is the agreed value of the stock, with interest from the date of eviction. McGuffey v. Humes, 85 Tenn. 26, 1 S. W. 506.

Liquidated damages.—Where the consideration expressed in the deed is £20 per hundred acres, but by covenant between the parties it is stipulated that £10 per hundred should be refunded in case the land should be lost, the latter figure is the measure of damages. Handley v. Chambers, 4 Bibb (Ky.) 7.

Penalty.—A covenant, in case of eviction, to pay double the purchase-money and all damages entitles the covenantee to his purchase-money and interest only, the agreement to restore double the consideration being looked upon as a penalty merely. Nesbit v. Brown, 16 N. C. 30.

Where natural affection was in fact the inducement, but a money consideration was stated in the deed, the latter should be taken as the grantor's valuation and determine the sum to be recovered. Hanson v. Buckner, 4 Dana (Ky.) 251, 29 Am. Dec. 401.

Loss of undivided moiety.— Where the grantor executed a warranty deed of a certain piece of land, of which he owned only one equal, undivided moiety, it was held, in an action by the grantee for breach of covenant, that the measure of damages should be one half of the consideration paid for the land, with interest. Downer v. Smith, 38 Vt. 464.

On recovery of dower.— The liability of the estate of a grantor upon a covenant of warranty in a deed, where a claim of dower has been established by the widow of the grantor against his grantee, is that proportion of one third of the amount paid which the value of the widow's life-estate in the assignment costs.[88] The value of the part lost with interest has also been said to be the proper measure of damages,[89] as has the actual damage resulting from the eviction — not exceeding the consideration paid — interest, and expenses of suit.[90] Where land is sold by the acre or front foot, the purchase-price per acre or front foot of the part lost is the measure of damages.[91]

7. Interest, Rent, Improvements, Taxes, and Enhancement — a. Interest. The general rule, in actions for breach of covenants, is, upon a recovery by the covenantee, to allow interest upon the consideration paid,[92] or upon the value of the property to which the title has failed.[93] But where the covenantee has had possession of the property and derived benefit therefrom, he is entitled to interest on the purchase-money only for such period before eviction as he is liable to pay, or has paid the true owner for mesne profits.[94] In such a case, however, he is entitled to interest from the time of eviction,[95] irrespective of whether the rents and profits which he has enjoyed are more or less than the interest on the purchase-money.[96] On the other hand if he has received no benefit from the land the interest is to be computed from the date of the conveyance;[97] and in a few cases this has been held to be the rule under all circumstances;[98] while in others it is held that the interest should be computed from the date of the grantee's final payment.[99] Payments of interest on deferred payments of the consideration are recoverable as part of the consideration,[1] but interest on the costs in the eviction suit is not recoverable.[2]

Diminution in value of portion retained.— In James v. Louisville Public Warehouse Co., 64 S. W. 966, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1216, it was held that for breach of warranty of title to a city lot on account of the taking, by the city, of a part of the lot to widen the street, under a right thereto acquired prior to the purchase, the measure of damages is not merely the value of the strip taken, but the diminution in value of the entire lot by the taking, and by the grading of the street in a reasonable manner, disregarding all enhancement in value by the widening of the street, and also damages resulting from the negligent manner of constructing the street. But see Haynie v. American Trust Invest. Co., (Tenn. Ch. App. 1896) 39 S. W. 860, in which it was held that the plaintiff could recover nothing for the diminution in value of the remaining portions of the lots conveyed to him, occasioned hy a deficiency in the frontage.

b. Rents and Profits. As a general rule rents and profits cannot be considered in mitigation of damages, in an action by the covenantee for breach of covenant,[3] unless the covenantor has paid them to the rightful owner of the premises.[4] Where, however, the grantee reconveys, or tenders a reconveyance, and sues for the purchase-money and interest, he must account to the grantee for the rents and profits.[5] On the other hand it has been held that a covenantee may recover for the depreciation in the rental value of his land by reason of the failure of the covenantor to perform a collateral covenant;[6] and in Louisiana he can recover the value of the fruits and revenues which he has been compelled to return to the true owner.[7]

c. Improvements. In a large majority of the United States the value of improvements made by the grantee is not considered as an element of damage,[8] but upon a loss of a part of the land, upon which there were improvements at the time of conveyance, the damages cannot be confined to the land lost alone, without reference to such improvements.[9] Conversely the covenantor is entitled to an allowance for his improvements from the successful claimant,[10] and where the covenantee has recovered from the paramount owner the value of such improvements, the covenantor is entitled to credit to that extent in an action for breach of his covenant.[11] So too the covenantor can set off the damage sustained by the

W. 1073, to the effect that where possession is surrendered complainant is entitled to recover the value of improvements put on the land by him, only so far as they have enhanced the rental or usable value of the life-estate.

Improvements after commencement of eviction suit.— In an action of warranty, the vendor will not be held liable for improvements, by the vendee, of the land after the commencement of a suit to evict him, when it is not shown that the improvements increased the value of the land or benefited the warrantor. Coleman v. Ballard, 13 La. Ann. 512.

The cost of ordinary repairs necessary for the enjoyment and cultivation of the property cannot be claimed by the vendee, who is entitled only to the increased value from the improvements. So a vendee, with notice of the encumbrance by which he is evicted, and who has paid but a small portion of the price, cannot recover for a gin-house, outhouses, fences, and repairs to a dwelling-house. Such expenses are but necessary to the cultivation of the land, and no portion of them can be recovered from the vendor who has not shared in the revenues. Williams v. Booker, 12 Rob. In an action for breach of covenant of seizin and right to convey, the measure of damages was held to be the value of the tract to which the title had failed at the time of purchase, including the improvements thereon. But see McDunn v. Des Moines, 39 Iowa 286, where after a purchase of real estate with covenants of warranty, a part was adjudged to belong to the city at the time of the sale, for use as a street. d. Taxes. Taxes paid by a covenantee or his grantee are not recoverable in an action against the covenantor for breach of his covenant;[13] nor can a covenantor deduct the amount of taxes paid by him out of the sum recoverable by the covenantee or those claiming under him,[14] unless the covenantee has upon eviction recovered such taxes from the paramount owner.[15]

e. Enhancement. The enhanced value of the property cannot be taken into consideration in assessing damages for a breach of covenant.[16]

8. Costs and Expenses of Litigation — a. In General. In Louisiana the cases are in irreconcilable conflict. Thus it has been held that the party evicted from real estate cannot recover the difference between the cost of the improvements made by him and the enhanced value of the soil (Sarpy v. New Orleans, 14 La. Ann. 311); that the purchaser in case of eviction can recover from his vendor only such increase in the value of the property as the parties had in contemplation at the time of the sale (Weber v. Coussy, 12 La. Ann. 534; Bissell v. Erwin, 13 La. 143, 15 La. 94); that the purchaser is not entitled to recover on eviction the increased value of the land at the time of eviction (Quillin v. Yair, 10 La. Ann. 259); that where a slave, sold before the new code, evicted the vendee in an action of freedom, the vendor in good faith was liable only for the price, and not the value of the slave's children born after the sale and also declared free. (Edwards v. Martin, 19 La. 284); that under the old code, the vendee could recover the increased value at the eviction, although he had not contributed thereto (Durnford's Succession, 11 Roh. (La.) 183); that the increased value at the time of eviction as compared with the value at the time of sale is not necessarily the standard of damages, the new code having repealed the old code, which seemed to carry the warrantor's responsibility to that length (Webb v. Gorman, 14 La. 38); that under La. Civ. Code, p. 354, art. 57, the increased value at the time of eviction above the price was recoverable, although the buyer had not contributed thereto (Fletcher v. Cavelier, 10 La. 116; Morris v. Abat, 9 La. 552); that the vendee recovers the loss by eviction, namely, the value of the property at that time, and any sums paid for fruit, revenues, and costs (Elliott v. Labarre, 3 La. 541, construing La. Civ. Code, p. 2485).

covenantee has been notified not to defend by his immediate grantor, who acknowledges liability on his covenants, costs and expenses cannot be recovered by the covenantee in an action against a remote grantor.[18] Costs of an unsuccessful appeal, unless taken at the vendor's request, are not recoverable;[19] nor can a plaintiff recover the costs paid by him in a suit brought against him by his grantee on his covenant.[20]

Counsel fees should be estimated upon the basis of the amount which the attorney could have recovered, and not the actual amount paid to him by the plaintiff, nor the amount testified to by experts. Charman v. Tatum, 54 N. Y. App. Div. 61, 66 N. Y. Suppl. 275. But see Swartz v. Ballou, 47 Iowa 188, 29 Am. Rep. 470, to the effect that before plaintiff can recover his counsel fees, he must included in the taxed costs are not allowed,[22] and in those jurisdictions in which the general expenses and costs of litigation are denied, attorney's fees are of course not recoverable.[23] Where allowed the attorney's fees must have been incurred in a proceeding directly and necessarily affecting the title of the covenantor,[24] and concerning land included in the covenant;[25] nor can a covenantee against whom a judgment has been rendered in favor of his grantee on his covenants recover his attorney's fees in such suit, in an action against his own covenantor for the same breach.[26] So too counsel fees in the action against the covenantor are not recoverable.[27]

c. Effect on Liability of Notice to Defend. In many cases the liability of the covenantor for the costs and expenses of litigation incurred by the covenantee in defending or asserting his title is made to depend upon whether the covenantor has been notified of the pendency of the action. If he has been notified he is held liable;[28] if he has not he is not liable,[29] unless in case of the absence of the warrantor or of fraud.[30] On the other hand it has been held that he is not liable, although notice has been given;[31] and also that he is liable, although no notice has been given.[32] Counsel fees incurred by the covenantee, after notice to the covenantor and the assumption of the defense by him, are not recoverable in an action on the covenants;[33] and the same is true where the covenantor, although show that he has paid, or is under obligation to pay, some specific amount. He cannot recover on proof as to what would be a reasonable fee for such services. And see Cullity v. Dorffel, 18 Wash. 122, 50 Pac. 932, to the effect that to entitle plaintiff, as damages, to recover fees for his attorneys in the action in which he was ousted it must be shown that the fees have been paid.

9. Pleading and Evidence — a. Pleading — (I) Declaration, Petition, or Complaint. In an action for breach of covenant, special or consequential, damages must be pleaded to be recoverable;[35] but where more damages are claimed than plaintiff is entitled to, his claim should be reduced to what he may lawfully claim, and his entire demand should not be dismissed.[36] In case of the assignment of two or more distinct breaches, for one of which plaintiff has no cause of action, it is error to assess entire damages.[37]

(II) Plea or Answer — (A) In General. In an action for damages for breach of covenant, the amount of the damages laid is not traversable matter, and defendant need not deny it.[38]

(B) Covenants Performed. Payments made by the covenantor to the covenantee, on account of the breach, may be given in evidence in mitigation of damages under the plea of covenants performed, although if relied on in bar they should be specially pleaded.[39]

b. Evidence — (I) Admissibility — (A) In General. As has been previously stated[40] any evidence which is relevant and material upon the question of damages is admissible;[41] but where the evidence offered does not directly tend to show the damages under the established rules as to their measure, or raises collateral and irrelevant questions, it should be rejected.[42]

Enhanced value by reason of encumbrance. — In a suit for breach of covenant against encumbrances by reason of a right of way by a railroad, evidence of the enhanced value of

(B) Value of Part of Tract Lost. In an action for breach of covenant by reason of the loss of part of the land conveyed, defendant may prove the proportionate value of the part lost;[43] and also in mitigation of damages that nothing was in fact paid for such part, that it was included in the deed by mistake, and that it was understood at the time by both parties not to belong to the grantor.[44] On the other hand it is competent for plaintiff to show that the part lost had a peculiar value for certain purposes.[45]

(C) Cost of Outstanding Title or Encumbrance. Upon the assessment of damages, in an action for breach of covenant, it is competent to prove the price paid by plaintiff for an outstanding title, or to remove an encumbrance,[46] although it has been held that such evidence is inadmissible for the purpose of reducing plaintiff's recovery.[47] Where the grantee has, as a part of the consideration, agreed to pay a certain sum toward the removal of an encumbrance not excepted from the covenant, and subsequently pays off the encumbrance, before its maturity, for a greater sum, he is entitled to recover the amount so paid less the amount assumed by him.[48]

(D) Value of Land Subject to Restriction Upon Power of Alienation. In an action for breach of covenant of title in a deed containing a condition restricting the power of alienation, evidence as to the value of the land subject to such restrictions is admissible on the question of damage.[49]

(II) Conclusiveness of Recital of Consideration. In an action by a covenantee against his covenantor for breach of covenant, the consideration expressed in the deed is only prima facie evidence of the true consideration, the land by reason of the railroad, or of privileges accorded by the railroad, is inadmissible. Kellogg v. Malin, 62 Mo. 429.

Judgment against intermediate covenantor. — In case of successive conveyances with a covenant against encumbrances, and a breach of covenant by reason of a permanent easement, the record of a judgment against an intermediate covenantor is inadmissible on the question of damages in an action by him against his covenantor for the same breach. Myers v. Munson, 65 Iowa 423, 21 N. W. 759.

Loss of sale by reason of encumbrance. — In an action for breach of covenant of seizin by virtue of an alleged encroachment of the buildings on the adjoining premises, evidence that plaintiff had made a contract to sell the premises, and that the purchaser refused to accept on account of such encroachment, is not admissible, as plaintiff's damages, if anything, are the difference in value between the buildings with and without the encroachment. Stearn v. Hesdorfer, 9 Misc. (N. Y.) 134, 29 N. Y. Suppl. 281.

which may be shown by parol or extrinsic evidence, where the true consideration paid is the measure of damages.[50] Where, however, the action is by a grantee of the covenantee against the covenantor, the latter cannot show that the consideration actually paid for the land was less than the sum expressed in the deed,[51] and where the actual consideration is such that it cannot be estimated in money, the consideration expressed in the deed is conclusive.[52] The consideration in the deed from the covenantee to his grantee is not even prima facie evidence, in an action by the latter against the covenantor.[53]

In an action for breach of covenant, the verdict and findings, while coextensive with the issues,[56] must be confined to the evidence in the case,[57] and where the action is against the heirs of a covenantor should be in solido.[58] A general verdict cannot be sustained where any one of the breaches assigned in the declaration or complaint is substantially defective,[59] and is unsupported by proof of a partial breach.[60] Similarly a judgment for general damages must be supported by a finding of the amount of such damages.[61] A finding which necessarily includes another upon an essential issue is good.[62]

3. JUDGMENT[63] — a. In General. Where an action is brought on the covenant of seizin, and also that of warranty, the plaintiff will at his election be allowed to take judgment on either;[64] and where a defendant tenders nominal damages, the plaintiff does not waive his right to a judgment by going to the jury on the defense of title in the defendant by adverse possession, where he has demurred to the defendant's case on the evidence;[65] nor does the defendant waive his right to appear and tender evidence at the assessment of damages by suffering a judgment by default.[66]

b. Upon Establishment of Mistake in Deed. Where the defendant proves that the land to which title has failed was included in the deed by mistake, and that the plaintiff knew that the defendant did not own the land nor intend to convey it, the deed should either be corrected on application of the defendant,[67] or a judgment entered for him which should give the plaintiff the option to keep the land actually purchased, on condition of abandoning his claim for damages, or to reconvey with special warranty only against encumbrances by himself or others claiming under him.[68]

c. Where Covenantor Is Sued Jointly With, or Impleaded By, Covenantee. Where both the covenantor and covenantee are joined in an action to try title to the land conveyed, and judgment is recovered against them, the covenantee is entitled to judgment in the same action against the covenantor.[69] So too it has been held that where, upon eviction under a paramount title, the grantee of a covenantee sues him for breach of his covenant of warranty, and the latter causes his covenantor to be impleaded, he is entitled to judgment for the consideration paid by him with interest, although no judgment is recovered against him.[70]

d. In Action Against Estate of Deceased Covenantor. In an action against the administrator, widow, and heirs of a covenantor, the judgment should be against them in solido, with an order as to the administrator quando acciderint.[71] Where it does not appear in what capacity the defendant holds the decedent's estate, whether as executor or devisee, it is error to award judgment against him in both capacities.[72]

4. EXECUTION.[73] In case of a recovery on a covenant of seizin in a deed in which there are other covenants which run with the land, the plaintiff should be required to give a release of those covenants before he is allowed to take out execution;[74] and where the plaintiff has conveyed the land, the court will order a stay of execution until he shall have lodged a discharge or quitclaim deed from his grantee.[75] In the absence of fraud a capias ad satisfaciendum will not issue on a judgment for breach of covenant in those jurisdictions in which arrest has been abolished in actions ex contractu.[76]

error in civil cases generally obtain in actions for breach of covenant. As in other cases error must be affirmatively shown by the record;[78] an objection not interposed below will not be considered by the higher court;[79] harmless error is no ground for reversal;[80] and a verdict which does substantial justice between the parties,[81] or a finding of fact which is sustained by the evidence,[82] will not be disturbed.

6. Effect of Recovery on Title to Property. While it is clear that the covenantee should not be allowed to retain the land and also recover back his consideration with interest,[83] there is a considerable conflict of opinion as to just what effect a recovery, in an action at law for a total breach of covenant, will have upon the title. Thus it has been held that the title revests in the covenantor;[84] that the recovery operates as an estoppel of the covenantee afterward to set up the deed as a conveyance of land against the grantor;[85] and that the covenantor is entitled to a reconveyance free from any encumbrances created by the covenantee or those claiming under him.[86] Similarly where permanent damages are awarded for breach of a covenant restricting the use of property, it is proper to require the delivery to the defendant of a release from such covenant.[87] In case of a partial breach, if the covenantee sues without an offer to rescind, he can only recover to the extent of the breach, the sale and conveyance remaining in force as to the part to which there is no failure of title.[88]

Used in a statute against gaming.— Where a statute in relation to gaming provided that if the person losing did not within three months next after losing "really and truly, without covin or collusion, sue and with effect prosecute for the money or other thing" lost, any person might sue for and recover treble the value of the money, etc., lost, for himself and the town, etc., the court said: "This review of the statutes convinces us that the 'covin or collusion' intended is covin or collusion between the person who lost and the person who won. The intention was to provide against a covinous or collusive suit by the loser against the winner. If within three months the loser really and bona fide, without covin or collusion, sues for what had been lost, and thereafter prosecutes that suit with effect, no cause of action accrues to any other person; but it must be a real, bona fide suit, to be prosecuted with effect, or not a covinous or collusive one." Compared with "renew" and "extend."— Where the constitution provided that "no corporate body shall be hereafter created, renewed, or extended," etc., the court said: "To create a charter, is to make one which never existed before. To renew a charter, is to give a new existence to one which has been forfeited, or which has lost its vitality by lapse of time. To extend a charter, is to give one which now exists greater or longer time to operate in than that to which it was originally limited. I do not say that these words have no other meaning in the English language. They are not entirely free from ambiguity. Their signification, like that of other words, must depend much on the context. But the definitions here given are consistent with the sense in which they are, if not always, at least very often used, both in popular and legal phraseology; and to understand them so here is no violation of the 'jus et norma loquendi.' The language is, 'No corporate body shall be hereafter created, renewed, or extended.' Though an increase of privileges might be, in some sense, extending a charter, it can hardly be said that a corporate body is extended in any other way than by prolonging its entire existence." As used in a statute.— In Thomas v. State, 14 Tex. App. 70, 72, the court said: "We construe the words 'credible person,' as used in the article quoted, to mean 'a competent as well as a credible witness.' Such has been the construction of the word 'credible' by our Supreme Court in the case of attesting witnesses to a will, and the reasons given for so holding in that case apply with equal force here. Nixon v. Armstrong, 38 Tex. 296."

"Credible disinterested person," etc.— Where a statute required that the truth of the allegations contained in a petition for a change of venue were to be supported by the affidavit of some "credible disinterested person," and a subsequent act required "two respectable witnesses," the court said: "The term 'respectable,' used in this last act, we understand to be equivalent to the phrase, 'credible disinterested,' as used in the act of 1835, and they are each synonymous with the word 'competent.' To this last epithet, the law has affixed a definite idea, and a respectable or disinterested witness, means a competent witness." Freleigh v. State, 8 Mo. 606. 611.

Distinguished from "truthful man."— In considering the character of affidavits necessary to support a change of venue it was said: "A person may be a truthful man in the ordinary acceptation of the term, and still not be a credible person in matters of this nature, involving information, feelings, prejudice, and the like." 7. "Guarantee" or "surety" contracts are policies of insurance. In Tebbets v. New York Mercantile Credit Guarantee Co., 73 Fed. 95, 97, 19 C. C. A. 281, the court said: "Corporations entering into contracts like the one at bar may call themselves 'guarantee' or 'surety' companies, but their business is in all essential particulars that of insurers, who, upon careful calculation of the risks of such business, and with such restrictions of their liability as may seem to them sufficient to make it safe, undertake to assure persons against loss, in return for premiums sufficiently high to make such business commercially profitable. Their contracts are, in fact, policies of insurance, and should be treated as such."

"Insurance against mercantile losses is a new branch of the business of underwriting, and but few cases dealing with policies of that character have as yet found their way into the courts. The necessarily nice adjustments of the respective proportions of loss to be borne by insurer and insured, the somewhat intricate provisions which are required in order to make such business successful, and the lack of experience in formulating the stipulations to be entered into by both the parties to such a contract, having naturally tended to make the forms of policy crude and difficult of interpretation." Purpose of indemnity.— In People v. Mercantile Credit Guarantee Co., 166 N. Y. 416, 420, 60 N. E. 24, the court, in speaking of the character of a policy of credit insurance, said: "The purpose was to indemnify the claimants from loss by insolvency of such debtors as had made a general assignment for the benefit of creditors."

"The scheme of indemnity includes two classes of losses. The one, an initial loss, which must be borne by the indemnified; the other, a loss in excess of the initial loss, which must be borne by the indemnitor. Both kinds of losses are such as result from the insolvency of the debtors who owe the indemnified." Strouse v. American Credit Indemnity Co., 91 Md. 244, 259, 46 Atl. 328, 1063.

The insolvency designated is the usual, legally defined insolvency — which is an inability of the debtor to pay his debts as they fall due in the ordinary course of business, and this is dependent neither upon a formal adjudication nor on an actual insufficiency of assets to meet liabilities. Strouse v. American Credit Indemnity Co., 91 Md. 244, 260, 46 Atl. 328, 1063 [citing Castleberg v. Wheeler, 68 Md. 266, 277, 12 Atl. 3]. And see People v. Mercantile Credit Co., 166 N. Y. 416, 423, 60 N. E. 24, where it is said: "A general assignment within the meaning of the policy may be for the benefit of a single creditor or all. It may be in the form prescribed by state statutes or an assignment at the common law. The form of the transaction is not so material as the result when it operates to divest the debtor of sustantially his entire property and closes out his business. Such a transfer means insolvency within the fair scope of the indemnity."

"Creditors or other persons."— In Twell v. Twell, 6 Mont. 19, 28, 9 Pac. 537, the court said: "Our statute, by the use of the words 'creditors or other persons,' embraces others than those who are strictly creditors. Even the word 'creditors' does not receive a strict definition, for a party who is not, strictly speaking, a creditor, may stand in the equity of a creditor, and have an interest that may be defrauded."

"In the use of the terms 'indebtedness' and 'creditor,' as used in this deed, we must presume that the parties used them in their broadest sense, as intending to embrace such obligations as might be legally imposed upon the obligee by the law, without reference to their more restricted meaning." ment by judicial process;[48] a person having claims that are recognized and admitted, or such as have been ascertained and established by the judgment of a competent court, and not those that have been disputed or rejected.[49] Again the term has been applied to one whose claim accrued from a contract in existence at the time a fraudulent and voluntary conveyance is made, within the meaning of the statute of frauds.[50] (Creditor:[51] Account Stated, see Account Stated. 48. Bishop v. Redmond, 83 Ind. 157, 158 [quoted in De Ruiter v. De Ruiter, 28 Ind. App. 9, 62 N. E. 100, 91 Am. St. Rep. 107], where it is said: "The word 'creditor,' as used by law writers, judges and legislators, has a broader meaning than that ascribed to it by the appellants. The word means more than the holder of a debt; it means one having a legal right to damages, capable of enforcement by judicial process. Thus, one against whom slanderous words are uttered is, in legal contemplation, a creditor from the time of their utterance. So, a breach of a promise to marry, constitutes the person to whom the promise is made a creditor from the time of the breach. So, too, a right to maintain a prosecution for the support of a bastard child invests the person in whose favor the right exists, with the character of a creditor." But see Champion v. Buckingham, 165 Mass. 76, 79, 42 N. E. 498, where it is said: "We are not aware of any case which holds that the word 'creditor' means under all circumstances a person having an obligation against another which is capable of legal enforcement."

"Creditor" does not include a party who has an action pending for injuries to the person "in the legal definition of that word" (Grafton v. Union Ferry Co., 19 N. Y.
