C. Essential and Distinguishing Characteristics or Features — 1. Certainty of Sum Due — a. Rule. A distinguishing feature of this action is that it lies only for the recovery of a sum certain, or readily reducible to a certainty from fixed data or agreement,[15] as distinguished from unliquidated or unascertained damages.[16]

b. Limitation of Rule. The authorities are not fully agreed as to the exact limitation of the expression "sum certain," when used with reference to the action of debt.[17] It is not at present, nor even under the strictness of the common-law proceedure was it, essential that the sum be ascertained at the time the action was brought;[18] and it is no objection to the maintenance of the action that the amount may depend upon the finding of a jury.[19] If the contract of the parties provides a specific mode and rule of payment, or if its terms furnish the means of ascertaining the exact amount due for specific articles or services, debt will lie.[20] Thus it will lie upon an obligation to pay a specific sum in goods at

An ancient exception to the rule that debt and assumpsit were concurrent remedies is cited in Comyns Dig. tit. "Debt." It is that they were not concurrent for the recovery of interest on money due upon a loan. This arose from the fact that before the case of Cooke v. Whorwood, 2 Saund. 337, a party who brought assumpsit upon an agreement to pay a stipulated sum by instalments, after the first failure, was entitled to the whole sum in damages; hence until this decision the only difference between the two forms of action in such a case was that debt could not be brought until after the last instalment was due; while assumpsit might be brought after the first failure, and recovery be had for the whole, as in neither form could a second action be maintained on the one contract. 17. No small amount of confusion regarding the use of this action has been perhaps produced by the employment of such terms as "eo nomine," "in numero," and "unliquidated damages." It is at the present time well settled that although a specific sum must be demanded in the declaration, a less amount may be recovered; and that the action is maintainable in cases where goods, wares, and merchandise have been sold and delivered, or work and labor performed, where the law implies a promise and gives the consideration as executed, although the damages are necessarily unliquidated. By "eo nomine" and "in numero" it is only meant that a specific sum is sought to be recovered which is improperly detained, and that the action does not sound in damages as does the action of assumpsit. The words "unliquidated damages" mean such damages as are sustained by the non-performance of an executory contract which cannot be considered as a money demand; the amount of which depends upon such a variety of considerations and circumstances that its determination is exceedingly difficult. stipulated prices,[21] and in some instances it has been maintained for services rendered or goods delivered where there was no express contract as to the amount of consideration.[22] But it is also said that where the sum must be ascertained by resorting to extraneous evidence by the tribunal before which the suit is brought the action cannot be maintained;[23] and if the action be brought upon specialties the instrument itself must with clearness and certainty fix the quantum of the debt or furnish such data as will infallibly lead to an ascertainment thereof.[24]

2. MEDIUM OF PAYMENT — a. Rule. Another distinguishing feature of debt is that it lies on an obligation which is payable in money only.[25]

b. Application of Rule — (i) OBLIGATIONS PAYABLE IN BANK-NOTES. While by common consent bank-notes or state paper may circulate and answer the purpose of money, it is nevertheless subject to fluctuations and change in value, and hence debt will not lie on an obligation payable in the same.[26]

No. 11,553, where it is said: "If a specific sum of money is stipulated to be paid in a definite quantity of a collateral article of fluctuating value, then it is clear that no debt, in a legal sense, results, but in case of a breach by the failure to deliver, a jury must be impaneled to inquire of damages, which cannot be ascertained except by a resort to extrinsic evidence. Thus, if a farmer gives his bond or note for the payment of one thousand dollars, by a given day, in one thousand bushels of wheat, and there is a breach, the loss of the creditor is not necessarily one thousand dollars, but more or less, according to the market price of the wheat on the day of the breach, and at the place of delivery. Here, debt will not lie, but assumpsit or covenant only, according to the nature of the contract." See also Dungan v. Henderlite, 21 Gratt. (Va.) 149.

24. Hale v. Hall, 2 Brev. (S. C.) 316.

What constitutes stipulated damages.— Where a party agreed that he would pay to the plaintiff one thousand dollars in case he set up and carried on a tailoring business in a certain town, such sum, upon the doing or happening of this contingency, is as much due and payable as if it had been payable upon the accrual of a fixed time, or the happening of any other event; and debt is maintainable therefor. (II) Where Medium of Payment Is Optional. An obligation so conditioned that it may be discharged by a payment of money or by the delivery of some other article or articles of sufficient value at or before the expiration of a certain time at the option of the obligor is, after the expiration of such option, one for money only, and may be enforced by the action of debt.[27] And where the obligation is payable in merchandise or articles at a fixed price, it has been held that there is an implied contract that if such articles are not delivered on the day set the debt should be paid in money; and that the action of debt would be maintainable therefor.[28] So too on a parity of reasoning, after an option to discharge the obligation in money has passed or has not been availed of, debt would not lie for the payment in collateral articles provided for in the condition of a contract.[29]

D. Grounds of Action — 1. In General. Generally speaking it is immaterial whether the obligation arose by contract or by operation of common or statute law, in what manner the obligation was incurred, or by what the obligation is evidenced; if it possesses the essential requisites of a foundation for this action debt will lie.[30]

3. Specialties.[33] Debt as a rule lies on specialties[34] whenever they contain an acknowledgment of debt[35] or an express promise to pay a particular sum.[36] Thus debt lies on a mortgage containing an express covenant to pay a certain amount[37]

At common law debts, for which an action of debt may be brought, may be classed under four general heads: (1) Judgments obtained in a court of record on a suit; (2) specialties acknowledged to be entered or record, as a recognizance, statutes merchant, or staple, or such like; (3) specialties indented, or not indented; and (4) contracts, without specialties, either express or implied. It has been held that debt lies on an award of arbitrators where the submission contained a condition that judgment rendered on the report should be final (Day v. Hooper, 51 Me. 178; 3 Cyc. 778); on a policy of insurance, although it be not under seal (Flanagan v. Camden Mut. No. 3,015*a*, Hempst. 279); upon an account stated (Somerville v. Grim, 17 W. Va. 803); upon an open account (Dillingham v. Skein, 7 Fed. Cas. No. 3,912*a*, Hempst. 181); or to recover a reward offered for the apprehension and conviction of a criminal, although assumpsit is the remedy more generally employed (Furman v. Parke, 21 N. J. L. 310). So too debt has been held to be an appropriate remedy to recover damages for injury to (Genung v. Vigo County, 5 Blackf. 37. The text in Chitty Pl. 124, where it is laid down that debt lies on a mortgage deed, or expressly acknowledging a certain sum to be due;[38] but these attributes are essential, and the action cannot be maintained upon a mortgage in the form commonly executed in this country.[39]

4. MATTERS OF RECORD. Generally speaking this action may be maintained upon matters of record[40] or decrees or orders having the force and effect thereof. Thus it lies on a recognizance[41] or a judgment.[42] So debt will lie to recover of a sum decreed as alimony.[43] And in some jurisdictions debt is the only remedy to recover costs awarded in certain actions.[44]

5. COLLATERAL UNDERTAKINGS. From the fact that in the origin of the action of debt the debtor was usually the party who received the consideration, and alone owed the debt, the doctrine was enunciated and came to prevail that debt was inapplicable as a remedy in case of a breach of promise to pay money primarily due from a third party;[45] and our courts, being unwilling to extend its common-law limits in this regard, have usually held that it does not lie on collateral undertakings.[46]

has no application to the usual mortgage which is executed in this country, but refers to mortgages as they exist in England, which contain, after the proviso, an express covenant by the mortgagor for the payment of the mortgage money. The question of whether or no debt would lie on a judgment within a year and a day at common law is discussed in Kingsland v. Forrest, 18 Ala. 519, 52 Am. Dec. 232, where the conclusion reached was that the question was a rather mooted one, but that by the decided weight of American authority it would so lie, and that it was clearly maintainable at common law after the expiration of such time. See, generally, JUDGMENTS.

The reason for inference that debt does not lie on a judgment.— Inasmuch as in personal suits actions of debt upon a judgment have been discountenanced by the courts as being vexatious and oppressive, by harassing defendant with the costs of two actions instead of one, because of this discontinuance, a supposition existed at one time that it did not so lie; but the court, in Denison v. Williams, 4 Conn. 402, after a thorough discussion of the subject, clearly showed that the "right" to bring the action could not be denied.

7. Debts Payable in Instalments.[48] Where the obligation consists of an entire sum, payable in instalments, debt will not lie for any particular instalment until all become due;[49] but where a bond conditioned to be paid by instalments is given, and a penalty is also attached thereto, debt will lie for the penalty upon a default in payment of the condition.[50]

8. Interest Before Maturity of Debt. It has been held that debt does not lie for the recovery of interest payable at certain intervals before the debt itself becomes due.[51]

9 Statutory Penalties or Obligations — a. In Absence of Specific Remedy. Where a statute creates a duty or imposes an obligation upon a person to pay money, or gives a plaintiff a right to a penalty or specific damages, without specifically providing a remedy for the recovery of such money, it is universally conceded that debt is an appropriate remedy.[52]

b. Where Remedy Is Provided. Where a statutory remedy is given for the enforcement of a common-law liability, such remedy is usually held to be cumu-

51. Lyall v. London, 8 U. C. C. P. 365, 369, where the court said: "[If] I find no authority for holding that interest on a debt certain, contracted to be paid at fixed days, before the debt itself is to fall due, can be treated as becoming a separate and distinct debt, payable on each of such days, and recoverable in an action of debt, though I confess I cannot frame to my own mind a satisfactory and convincing reason why it should not; I suppose that it must be, that it is one contract to pay one sum, with interest, and that there can only be one action of debt on one contract, and the interest is regarded as inseparably connected with the debt, though payable from time to time before the debt falls due. It cannot be as damages; first, because it is an actual term of the contract. Secondly, because there can be no damages for detaining until the debt itself has become payable and is unpaid. But why the agreement to pay a sum certain, or capable of being made certain by computation, half-yearly, until another sum is paid on a distant fixed day, is not to me so clear. Still it is not the practice to treat interest, although expressly reserved by the terms of the contract, and payable at fixed days before the principal becomes due, as forming an independent item and debt certain on each of those days, for which an action of debt could be maintained. If it were so, then the plaintiff would be entitled to claim interest upon each such sum by way of damages for its detention, which would in effect be the recovery of compound interest, which it is not the practice of courts of law to allow." Compare Sparks v. Garrigues, 1 Binn. lative only,[53] and debt may be maintained at the option of plaintiff;[54] but where the statute creates the right or liability as well as prescribes the mode of enforcement, such remedy will be held to be exclusive, and debt will not lie.[55]

10. TORTS — a. In General. It is essential that the ground of action be of a contractual nature; debt will not, in the absence of statute,[56] lie where the cause of action grows out of a tort,[57] although in some jurisdictions the tort may be waived and debt maintained.[58]

b. Escape. While debt did not lie at common law against an officer for the escape of a prisoner,[59] this remedy was by statute extended to an escape upon execution,[60] which change has been generally recognized and the remedy applied in this country;[61] but its application has been denied for an escape on mesne process.[62]

C. Defendant — 1. In General. So too the personnel of the party defendant is usually immaterial.[66]

2. Executors and Administrators.[67] At common law debt would not lie against an executor or an administrator where the testator could have waged his law,[68] but as this defense has never been allowed by our courts, it follows that the action will generally be held to lie against such parties in this country;[69] and even when the rule was otherwise, the executor could waive the benefit thereof, and if instead of demurring he entered a plea he could not take advantage of the objection to arrest judgment.[70]

It is brought in the debit as well as detinet, when sued by one of the original contracting parties who personally gave the credit, against the other who personally incurred the debt, or against his heirs, if they are bound to the payment; as by the obligee against the obligor, the landlord against the tenant, etc. But if it be brought by or against an executor for debt due to or from the testator, this not being his own debt, shall be sued for in the detinet only." technical to enable defendant to determine the style of action.[76] And while it would perhaps be more conformable to the rules of good pleading to state the debt as a sum certain in the writ,[77] in most jurisdictions a failure so to do is not fatal.[78] In other jurisdictions the debt must be demanded therein as a particular sum.[79]

B. Declaration[80] — 1. In General. While a declaration in debt is sufficient if it declare on the instrument according to its legal effect,[81] it should nevertheless state any inducement necessary to explain the contract, aver that defendant agreed to pay,[82] and show an interest of plaintiff in the cause of action.[83] If the obligation has been assigned, the declaration must show that payment has not been made to the assignor.[84] If the liability of defendant is conditional upon the performance of acts by plaintiff, a performance of such conditions or a tender thereof must be alleged.[85] But as the action is contractual and not local, it is unnecessary when brought for use and occupation to allege the location of the premises or the particulars of the demise.[86]

2. Must Distinguish Form of Action. A declaration in debt must be sufficiently technical to distinguish the form of action.[87]

87. Thus in debt on a recognizance, a declaration which sets forth the facts in a manner appropriate to a declaration in scire facias would be bad. State v. Folsom, 26 Me. 209. So too a count declaring that defendant "undertook and promised to pay" would be assumpsit and not debt. McGinnity v. Laguereme, 10 Ill. 101; Cruikshank v. Brown, 10 Ill. 75; Metcalf v. Robinson, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 9,497, 2 McLean 363; Brill v. Neele, 3 B. & Ald. 208, 5 E. C. L. 127; Dalton v. Smith, 2 Smith K. B. 618 [cited in Metcalf v. Robinson, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 9,497, 2 McLean 363]; but a count upon a contract, itself creating the liability to pay, which possesses all the attributes of a count in debt, commencing and concluding as such, will not be regarded as a count in assumpsit

3. When Dependent on Statute. If the action is brought on a statute, all the facts necessary to the incurring of the liability or penalty must be alleged.[88]

4. Averment of Breach. A declaration in debt on a writing obligatory should aver the breach in the words of the contract, or in terms co-extensive therewith;[89] and where the ground of action is a recognizance[90] to prosecute an appeal, it should aver that the breach appears of record.[91]

5. Averment of Sum Due — a. Rule. It is essential that the declaration declare for a sum certain,[92] with sufficient precision and consistency to enable the court to render final judgment thereon on demurrer or default.[93]

b. Application of Rule — (i) In General. Where the ground of action is a judgment for a certain sum which may be discharged by payment of a less amount, declaration may be for the lesser sum;[94] and where the obligation is to pay money, with the privilege to pay in some other medium, on or before a certain day, it is unnecessary to take any notice of such privilege in the declaration.[95]

(ii) Statement of Sum in Quæritur. It is not, however, necessary that the sum mentioned in the quæritur or commencement of the declaration should correspond to the aggregate of the amounts set forth in the different counts[96] merely because "promise" is used instead of "agreed." Smith v. Webb, 16 Ill. 105; Cruikshank v. Brown, 10 Ill. 75 [citing Bishop v. Young, 2 B. & P. 78]; National Exch. Bank v. Abell, 63 Me. 346. See also Payne v. Smith, 12 N. H. 34.

The recognition of the distinction is material inasmuch as its disregard would be a hardship upon defendant, since what would be a good defense to one action might not be to the other, as for instance in some jurisdictions the statute of limitations of five years could be pleaded if the action were assumpsit, but would constitute no defense if the action were debt. McGinnity v. Laguerenne, 10 Ill. 101.

When the word "promised" is used as descriptive of the instrument sued upon, and not by way of averment to show the liability of defendant to pay, it is very clear that the declaration will be sufficient as a pleading in debt. McGinnity v. Laguerenne, 10 Ill. 101.

Whitecraft v. Vanderver, 12 Ill. 235; Donohoe v. Chappell, 4 Mo. 34 (holding that in debt for a trespass upon land, brought by virtue of the statute of that state, a written statement showing that the land was located in the state of Missouri and describing it was essential); Miller v. Stoy, 5 N. J. L. 476.

Where it clearly appears that the declaration is founded on the statute, it need not necessarily be alleged that the acts complained of and creating the liability were done contrary to the form thereof. Whitecraft v. Vanderver, 12 Ill. 235.

89. Green v. Thornton, 7 Ark. 383.

An averment is not too broad which alleges that defendant has not paid plaintiff "or any other person whomsoever." Pike v. Fraser, 17 Ark. 597.

Sufficient averment of actio accrevit.— Where the declaration, after stating that the executor had received a legacy and certain assets, alleges that he assented to and promised to pay the same, whereby he became liable to plaintiffs to pay said legacy, such averment is equivalent to saying that a right of action had accrued; at least this is true after verdict. Payne v. Smith, 12 N. H. 34.

90. Filing.— As a recognizance does not strictly speaking become a debt of record until it is filed or recorded in the court in which it is returnable an averment of such filing is necessary. People v. Van Eps, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 387.

Whether or not the occasion for taking the recognizance should be stated in the declaration does not seem to be fully settled. See State v. Stevens, Smith (N. H.) 251.

England.— Lord v. Houstoun, 11 East 62; McQuillin v. Cox, 1 H. Bl. 249.

See 15 Cent. Dig. tit. "Debt, Action of," § 27.

In England it is the practice to state a sum certain in the quæritur in the court of common pleas, because in that court the commencement of the suit is by a writ, and that part of the declaration has reference to it; but in the king's bench, where the proceedings are by bill, the rule is different, and it is there held that no sum whatever need be stated in the beginning of the dec-

of the declaration, although it seems that it is perfectly regular and proper that it should do so.[97]

(III) PRINCIPAL AND INTEREST IN AGGREGATE. A declaration in debt should not claim the principal and interest in an aggregate sum,[98] or interest as a part of the debt when no interest is allowable,[99] although it would seem that a claim of interest might be rejected as surplusage, there being a specific sum demanded;[1] and where interest has accrued it may be demanded in the declaration if not included as a part of the debt due.[2]

6. FOR RECOVERY OF RENT. The declaration in an action of debt for rent in arrear need not declare upon the deed, but will be sufficient if it states the substance of the demise.[3]

7. WHEN AGAINST EXECUTOR OR ADMINISTRATOR.[4] Where the action is against an executor or administrator, the declaration should at common law be in the detinet only, unless defendant has by devastavit or otherwise rendered himself personally responsible.[5]

8. JOINDER OF COUNTS. Counts in debt cannot be joined with counts in assumpsit;[6] but counts in debt on simple contracts may be joined with counts in debt on a specialty.[7]

C. Profert. Where debt is brought on a writing, profert thereof must be made before judgment can be taken by default;[8] if brought on articles of agreement for the price of land, such articles should be set out;[9] if brought on a judgment, the instrument itself or a regular certified copy must be produced.[10] If the proceedings have been regulated by statute, a compliance therewith with regard to profert is sufficient.[11] laration, and that if one is erroneously inserted it is superfluous and may be rejected. Cozine v. Tousey, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 46 [citing Lord v. Houstoun, 11 East 62].

97. People v. Van Eps, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 387.

98. Butler v. Limerick, Minor (Ala.) 115. In this case the amount of the interest until the maturity of the note was added by the plaintiff to the principal, and included in his writ and declaration as part of the debt in numero. The judgment was rendered for the whole amount and interest from the maturity of the note on that sum. Thus interest on interest was demanded by the writ and declaration, which of course is not allowable.

See Gardner v. Henry, 5 Coldw. (Tenn.) 458, holding that in debt on a domestic judgment rendered by a justice of the peace in Tennessee, profert of the original or of an exemplified copy was unnecessary.

If on a probate bond it is sufficient to make profert of a duly authenticated copy. Judge v. Merrill, 6 N. H. 256.

11. Rawlings v. Paty, 23 Ark. 204, holding that in a petition in debt, under the statute,

D. Bill of Particulars. In the absence of statute no bill of particulars is necessary.[12]

E. Pleas — 1. Necessity of. In an action of debt, if no plea is offered by defendant it is error to submit the cause to the court[13] or jury,[14] as upon issue joined.

2. Form of. It is also essential that the plea be adapted to the form of action.[15]

3. Special or Particular Pleas — a. Nil Debet[16] — (i) On Simple Contract. The plea of nil debet in debt on all simple contracts is the general issue, and of course constitutes a sufficient plea.[17]

(ii) On Specialty. With regard to a domestic judgment or other specialty, a matter of record, or any instrument raised by statute to the status of a sealed instrument, the rule is otherwise. On all such instruments nil debet is improper,[18] even though extrinsic facts be alleged;[19] but it is the duty of plaintiff to demur thereto, and if he joins issue such plea cannot be treated as a nullity.[20] This rule is limited in its application by another familiar rule, often, however, much more difficult of application, that where the specialty is merely an inducement to the action, while its foundation depends upon other extrinsic matters of fact, then nil debet may be pleaded.[21]

by an administrator, profert of the letters of administration was unnecessary. See also Bostwick v. Fleming, 2 Ark. 462.

12. For the reason that the declaration must set out the nature of the obligation with sufficient thoroughness to apprise defendant of the essential facts relied on as constituting the liability, and to enable him to formulate his defense. Williams v. Williams, 11 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 393, holding that the statute of that state requiring a bill of particulars to be filed applied only to actions of assumpsit, and that no bill was necessary in an action of debt.

(III) Judgment of Sister State. Since by national enactments the judgment of a court in any one of the states shall be accorded the same faith and credit in other states as in the one wherein it was rendered,[22] it follows that as a rule nil debet is not a good plea in debt on the judgment of another state.[23] But where it is clearly shown, or the courts from the nature of the case conceive that such judgment or decree would not be considered a verity or matter of record in the state where rendered, nil debet is proper.[24] Again inasmuch as a judgment is not entitled to full faith and credit when obtained by fraud, or when there was no jurisdiction of the parties or of the subject-matter, it is clear that a party must be allowed these defenses by a plea of some nature, and the courts do not require him to plead them specially, but admit such defenses under nil debet.[25]

b. Non Est Factum.[26] Non est factum is appropriate in an action on a specialty only,[27] and puts in issue only the lawful execution of the instrument sued on,[28] unless the instrument is not set out on oyer, but is pleaded according to its supposed legal effect, in which case not only the execution but its proper construction as well is put in issue.[29]

c. Nul Tiel Record.[30] The plea of nul tiel record is the general issue where debt is brought on a domestic judgment or other specialty importing a verity.[31]

A plea that no such record is on file or exhibited is insufficient, and cannot be consid-

As the issue presented thereby is the existence of the record which in the absence of statute is to be determined by the court,[32] this plea ought not to conclude with an issue to the country.[33]

4. SUFFICIENCY OF PLEA. Defendant need not plead acts or facts necessarily implied from facts admitted or constituting matters of record;[34] and where the action is on a specialty for money, a plea of conditions performed is equivalent to a plea of payment.[35] The plea must, however, tender a material issue,[36] and offer a denial going to the merits of the action.[37]

5. VERIFICATION. Verification by defendant of a plea of nil debet when the action is on a note or bond is usually necessary to put in issue the execution of the instrument.[38] So too non est factum should be sworn to;[39] but as a rule verification of nul tiel record is unnecessary.[40]

F. Replication.[41] As a plea of payment completely answers the declaration in an action of debt, a replication thereto is necessary.[42] So too if plaintiff relies upon the appearance of defendant in an action in which a judgment was rendered against him as constituting notice of its rendition, he must so reply to defendant's plea of want of notice;[43] and a reply to a plea of performance should assign a particular breach.[44]

G. Demurrer. Mere matters of form in a declaration of debt must be taken advantage of by special demurrer,[45] but a judgment on which the action of debt is brought does not thereby become a part of the record, in the sense that defendant may demur for defects therein.[46]

ered as a plea of nul tiel record. Egan v. Tewksbury, 32 Ark. 43.

Form of replication to plea of limitation.— A replication in an action of debt, to a plea of limitations, that defendant did, within sixteen years before the action was brought, "undertake and promise to pay," while a sufficient reply in an action of assumpsit, is not good in debt; the proper form being to reply that the cause of action did not accrue to plaintiff within sixteen years anterior to the commencement of the action. H. Amendments. In this action the general rule that no amendment introducing a new cause of action will be allowed applies.[47] So too it is proper for the court to refuse an amendment which would operate as a hardship or a surprise.[48] But it is held that the court may upon certain terms or conditions allow an amendment of a declaration on a recognizance which had set forth the facts in a manner appropriate to a declaration in scire facias.[49]

VI. Issues and Proof.

A. In General. An objection to the jurisdiction of the person may be taken under nul tiel record;[50] and under a general plea of payment parol admissions of partial payments are admissible.[51] Under non est factum[52] it has been held that proof that the deed or bond was delivered as an escrow[53] or that it was obtained by fraud[54] may be shown, although it is not permissible under this plea to show a failure of consideration.[55]

B. Matters Admissible Under General Issue. Generally speaking all evidence tending to show that the plaintiff never had any cause of action or that he has none at the commencement of the suit may be given under nil debet;[56] although want of consideration may also be pleaded specially if defendant so desires.[57]

C. Variance. The declaration and writ must correspond.[58] When plaintiff declares on a judgment or matter of record he must take care that the instrument offered in evidence corresponds in amount and date to his declaration; any variance changing the legal tenor and effect thereof is fatal.[59] But a record showing the writ in a former suit to have been directed to the coroner, while the declaration alleged it to have been directed to the sheriff, is an immaterial variance;[60] and as the amount stated in the writ[61] or quæritur[62] is immaterial,[63] a variance therefrom in the declaration would likewise be immaterial; but it is otherwise in a jurisdiction where the same must be stated with certainty in the writs.[64]

VII. EVIDENCE.[65]

A. Burden of Proof. On a plea of non est factum the burden of proof is on plaintiff,[66] while on a plea of payment the burden is on defendant.[67]

B. Admissibility. In debt on simple contract any writing containing evidence pertinent to the issue is admissible;[68] but the record of a judgment is not itself evidence to support the money counts in debt.[69]

C. Sufficiency. On the general issue plaintiff must of course prove all material facts on which his claim is founded;[70] and where the liability arises by virtue of statute or depends upon a compliance with statutory provisions evidence showing due compliance must be offered.[71]

VIII. TRIAL.[72]

This action, although brought upon a penal statute, is nevertheless a civil one, and the jury may be returned to a second consideration of the cause, under a practice allowing such procedure in civil cases only.[73] While final judgment may be rendered on demurrer, default, or nil dicit,[74] the whole and not a part only of the issue must be tried,[75] and judgment cannot be rendered while a material plea remains untried or undisposed of;[76] and final judgment by default or upon nil

IX. VERDICT[78] AND JUDGMENT.[79]

A. Form — 1. In General — a. Verdict. The verdict must correspond to the issue presented[80] and dispose of the whole defense[81] upon which issue has been joined;[82] and if for plaintiff, the verdict must be for a certain sum.[83]

b. Judgment — (I) In General.[84] The judgment should be responsive to the writ,[85] and for the same nature of speeie as that in whieh the debt was demandable.[86] But the judgment will be referred to the pleadings, and will be assumed to correspond therewith;[87] and it has been held not to be fatal that the judgment is entered up in the form of a judgment in assumpsit, if it is for the proper amount.[88]

(II) Against Joint Defendants. If the aetion is against joint defendants the judgment must be against all,[89] and for the same amount against eaeh.[90]

Caldwell v. Richmond, 64 Ill. 30; Toles v. Cole, 11 Ill. 562; Austin v. State, 11 Ill. 452. This procedure is an anomaly resulting from statutory innovations, upon common-law principles; and is the usual course in actions of debt for penalties. At common law the whole penalty was recovered and execution issued for the whole amount; courts of chancery first interposed to relieve defendant at law, and to restrict the recovery to the amount of the injury actually sustained; and by 8 & 9 Wm. III, c. 11, § 8, actions for debt for penalties were so modified that the debt was commuted by the damages actually sustained. Harrison v. Park, 1 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 170.

damages,[91] and that it would be error to render a judgment for damages in the aggregate;[92] nor could the court amend a verdict by adding the amount of the penalty of a bond as the debt,[93] although if the finding is for a part only of the debt due, such specification need not be made, as it will all be considered debt.[94] In other jurisdictions this has been considered more of a technical nicety than as a matter of substance,[95] and the courts have refused to reverse for this irregularity.[96]

B. Amount of Recovery[97] — 1. In General. It is a well settled and established rule of practice that plaintiff in debt cannot recover beyond the amount of damages claimed in the declaration,[98] although it is at present well settled that he may recover a less sum[99] unless he is suing for a penalty or forfeiture, the amount of which is rendered fixed and certain by statute, in which case he should recover the entire sum,[1] but no more.[2] If, however, too large an amount

Blackstone explained.— In 3 Blackstone Comm. 154, the author, in discussing the action of debt, says: "For the debt is one single cause of action, fixed and determined; and which, therefore, if the proof varies from the claim, cannot be looked upon as the same contract whereof the performance is sued for. If, therefore, I bring an action of debt for 30*l.*, I am not at liberty to prove a debt of 20*l.* and recover a verdict thereon; any more than if I bring an action of detinue for a horse, I can thereby recover an ox." If that learned writer, when thus laying down the proposition that plaintiff must prove the whole debt he claims or he can recover nothing, merely meant to say that where a special contract was laid in the declaration it must be proved as laid, and that when debt is brought on a written instrument, the contract produced in evidence must correspond in all respects with that stated in the declaration, his doctrine was of course clearly correct; but if he meant to say that in every case where debt is brought on a simple contract, plaintiff must prove the whole debt as claimed by the declaration or he can recover nothing, it is conceived that he is opposed by not only every modern decision but by the ancient ones as well. is awarded, plaintiff may cure the verdict by remitting the excess and taking judgment for the amount claimed.[3]

2. ALLOWANCE OF INTEREST.[4] Where the statute has limited the liability of an officer for an escape to the amount of the debt and damages, interest is not recoverable;[5] nor is interest recoverable in debt for rent.[6] When properly recoverable, if it is not specifically claimed as such in the declaration,[7] or not allowable as such under the count employed,[8] interest should be awarded as damages for the detention of the debt; and when allowed as such the judgment must clearly show the exact amount on which interest was intended to be awarded.[9]

DEBT BY SIMPLE CONTRACT. A debt where the contract upon which the obligation arises is neither ascertained by matter of record, nor yet by deed or special instrument, but by mere oral evidence, the most simple of any, or by notes unsealed, which are capable of more easy proof, and (therefore only) better than a verbal promise.[1] (See DEBT; and, generally, DEBT, ACTION OF.)

DEBT BY SPECIALTY. A debt whereby a sum of money becomes, or is acknowledged to be, due by deed or instrument under seal.[2] (See DEBT; and, generally, DEBT, ACTION OF.)

"The word 'debtor,' in its broad sense, implies liability, and if our exemption statute is taken as having been enacted with the view that the words 'creditor' and 'debtor' were to be understood, although not used, then, in view of the purpose and spirit of the law, they should be given their broadest meaning." "Decided," or "took part in the decision" as applied to the participation of a judge in the disposition of a case see Corning v. Slosson, 16 N. Y. 294, 296.

Applied to an election contest.— Where a statute provided that "the person holding the certificate of election may give bond, qualify and take the office . . . and exercise the duties thereof until the contest shall be decided, and if the contest be decided against him, the court . . . shall make an order for him to give up the office to the successful party in the contest," the court said: "If the contest is 'decided' whenever final judgment is rendered by the circuit court, then, according to the very terms of the section under review, the right of the certificate holder to exercise the duties of the office only lasts 'until the contest be decided,' provided it 'be decided against him.'" Distinguished from "opinion."— "A decision of the Court is its judgment, the opinion is the reasons given for that judgment." Houston v. Williams, 13 Cal. 24, 27, 73 Am. Dec. 565 [quoted in Craig v. Bennent, 158 Ind. 9, 13, 62 N. E. 273; Adams v. Yazoo, etc., R. Co., 77 Miss. 194, 304, 24 So. 200, 317, 28 So. 956]. But see Pierce v. State, 109 Ind. 535, 10 N. E. 302, holding that an exception to the "opinion" of the court in overruling a motion for a new trial instead of to its "decision," which is more technically accurate, is sufficient to present the question for review.

Distinguished from "ruling" see State v. O'Brien, 18 Mont. 1, 5, 43 Pac. 1091, 44 Pac. 399.

Distinguished from "verdict."— "The terms 'verdict' or 'decision,' as used in the statute, have reference to the finding upon the facts, the term 'verdict' signifying the finding by the jury, and the term 'decision' the finding by the court. The judgment or decree is not the decision, but follows, and is based upon the verdict of the jury or the decision of the court." Evansville, etc., R. Co. v. Maddux, 134 Ind. 571, 573, 33 N. E. 345, 34 N. E. 511. And see Marshall v. Golden Fleece Gold, etc., Min. Co., 16 Nev. 156, 172, where it is said: "It has been decided by the supreme court of California, and, we think, correctly, that the terms 'verdict and decision,' as used in the statute, are appositional; and that what is predicted of one, is, also, of the other."

Synonymous with "ascertainment and liquidation."— In U. S. v. Cousinery, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14,878, 7 Ben. 251, the court said: "The 14th section of the act of 1864 [relative to customs duties], uses the phrase 'decision of the collector of customs,' and the phrase 'ascertainment and liquidation of the duties by the proper officers of the customs,' as synonymous phrases." And see U. S. v. Beebe, 117 Fed. 670, 679, where the court, in speaking of a customs administrative act, said: "The 'ascertainment and liquidation of duties' is plainly a 'decision' within the meaning of the section."

Synonymous with "judgment."—Where a statute provided that an application for a new trial must be made at the term at which the verdict, report, or decision is rendered,

But see Wolfley v. McPherson, 61 Kan. 492, 494, 59 Pac. 1054, where a statute provided that "appeals shall be allowed from the decision of the probate court to the district court," etc., and the court said: "The word 'decision' used in this statute is one of broader signification than judgment. It is generic in meaning and includes rulings of the probate court, whether technically termed orders or judgments." And see Buckeye Pipe Line Co. v. Fee, 62 Ohio St. 543, 555, 57 N. E. 446, 78 Am. St. Rep. 743, where it is said: "It is true that in an abstract sense there is a shade of difference between the import of the word 'decision' and the word 'judgment.'"

"Written decision."— Where a statute defines the findings and conclusions of the court as a "written decision," and concludes with the provision that "judgment upon the decision shall be entered accordingly," the court said: "This 'written decision,' is something which must precede the judgment, and upon which it is entered, as upon the verdict of a jury." Applied to an application for a new trial.— Where a statute provided that "the application for a new trial must be made at term at which the verdict or decision is rendered," the court said: "The term 'decision,' as used in the above statute is clearly used in the sense of finding upon the facts, where the cause is tried by the court." Blackstone says: "Statutes also are either declaratory of the common law, or remedial of some defects therein. Declaratory, where the old custom of the kingdom is almost fallen into disuse, or become disputable; in which case the parliament has thought proper, in perpetuum rei testimonium (as a lasting testimony of the thing), and for avoiding all doubts and difficulties, to declare what the common law is and ever hath been." 1 Blackstone Comm. 86.

69. Used in act of parliament.— In Utterson v. Vernon, 3 T. R. 539, 546, 4 T. R. 570, 1 Rev. Rep. 767, Lord Kenyon, C. J., said:

announce clearly some opinion or resolution;[70] to make known, to assert to others, to show forth.[71] In pleading, to set forth in a formal writing, served when an action according to the common law has been commenced, the cause of action and claim of recovery which plaintiff alleges against defendant.[72]

DECLARED.[73] Exhibited or published.[74]

DECLARE THE LAW. A term used in reference to the duty of a judge to charge the law arising upon the evidence.[75] (See, generally, CRIMINAL LAW; TRIAL.)

DECLINATION. In Scotch law, a plea to the jurisdiction, on the ground that the judge is interested in the suit.[76]

DECLINE. In Scotch practice, to object to.[77]

"It is to be observed that the word 'declare' is always inserted in acts of parliament with great caution."

Used in a commitment.—In Vintners' Co. v. Clerke, 5 Mod. 151, 162, under the sixth exception it is said: "That the word 'concetiret' being insensible, it is therefore void; it was said, that the following word 'declararet' hath a certain signification, and is more comprehensive than 'consentiret' if it had been right, because a man may consent to a thing, and never declare his consent openly; but when he makes a declaration thereof, he does both."

"Declare" to a witness.— In Remsen v. Brinkerhoff, 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 325, 336, 37 Am. Dec. 251 [cited in Lane v. Lane, 95 N. Y. 494, 498], the court said: "All usage shows that 'to declare' to a witness that the instrument subscribed was the testator's will, must mean 'to make it at the time distinctly known to him by some assertion, or by clear assent in words or signs."

"Declare within the year,"—Where a statute relative to practice required plaintiff to give notice of the declaration within a year after the service of the writ, Parke, B., said: "We are all of opinion that, according to the true meaning of the words 'declare within the year,' the plaintiff must have either delivered his declaration within the year, or, having filed it, must have given notice to the defendant within that time. In short, the term to 'declare' means either the delivery of the declaration itself, or the giving notice of it, so that a plaintiff does not declare until he informs the defendant of the cause of action." Eadon v. Roberts, 9 Exch. 226, 229.

The use of the word "declare" in the oath of a surveyor of highways is synonymous with to "promise" required by the statute. Bassett v. Denn, 17 N. J. L. 432, 433.

Y. 494, 498], where it is said: "And this in any manner, either by words or by acts, in writing, or by signs. Thus. in our English Bible, we read, 'Declare ye among the heathen, publish, conceal not;' an example at once and an explanation; the same idea being enforced and illustrated after the usage of the Hebrew parallelisms, in other words. So again of declaration by signs or other indications, it is said: 'Ye are manifestly declared to be the epistle of God.'"

Applied to profits of any contract with a company.— Where one of the articles of association of a company provided that the office of a director should be vacated if he should contract or participate in the profits of any contract with the company . . . without declaring his interest, etc., the court said: "It must be observed that the words of the article are not 'to declare that he has an interest,' but to 'declare his interest,' which seem to involve not merely the declaration of the existence of an interest but the nature of that interest." Thus, where the party assaulted was a man about fifty years old, disabled by rheumatism to such an extent that he was compelled to carry his arm in an unnatural position, and in such a manner as to render it almost if not entirely useless to him in a personal difficulty, it was held that, whilst his condition might not come technically within the meaning of the word decrepit as defined by Mr. Webster, yet it might with propriety be said that it fell in the measure of that word as used in common acceptation."

I. DEFINITION AND NATURE.

A. Of Common-Law Dedication — 1. IN GENERAL. Dedication (unknown to the civil law)[1] is a common-law method of creating public easements.[2] The doctrine of dedication rests upon public convenience and has been sanctioned by the experience of ages;[3] it is based upon public policy and good faith, in that while securing to the public only such rights as it has honestly enjoyed or learned to depend on, it takes from the landowner nothing that he did not intend to give.[4] While the doctrine of dedication is based upon good faith and is thus analogous to the doctine of estoppel, and while many decisions refer to dedication as operating on the principle of an estoppel,[5] the technical requirements of an estoppel need not exist to make a good dedication, and the true view seems to be that

According to Senator Furman, a dedication, in the New York court of errors, is,

"an act by which the owner of the fee gives to the public an easement in his land." See Post v. Pearsall, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 425, 444. This definition does not convey fully to the mind the legal import of the word. Where one being the owner of lands consents, either expressly or by his actions, that it may be used by the public for any particular purpose, it is a dedication. Macon v. Franklin, 12 Ga. 239, 244.

"A dedication of land for public purposes is simply a devotion of it, or of an easement in it, to such purposes by the owner, manifested by some clear declaration of the fact." Grogan v. Hayward, 4 Fed. 161, 163, 6 Sawy. 498. "A dedication of property to public use occurs when the owner abandons the use, occupancy, and control of such property to the public." Lamar County v. Clements, 49 Tex. 347, 355.

"In its technical legal sense dedication is the appropriation of land for a public use." Benn v. Hatcher, 81 Va. 25, 29, 59 Am. Rep. 645 [quoted in Patrick v. Kalamazoo Y. M. C. A., 120 Mich. 185, 191, 79 N. W. 208].

Estoppel in general see ESTOPPEL.

Estoppel often operates to prevent denial of dedication (Sussman v. San Luis Obispo County, 126 Cal. 536, 59 Pac. 24; Whittaker v. Deadwood, 12 S. D. 523, 81 N. W. 910; Ashland v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 105 Wis. 398, 80 N. W. 1101) just as one may be estopped from setting up dedication (see Hanger v. Des Moines, 109 Iowa 480, 80 N. W. 549). It must be remembered that it is not every statement referring to a public use that creates an estoppel. Cerf v. Pfleging, 94 Cal.

dedication is a common-law doctrine of itself based upon analogous principles.[6] There are cases, however, in which a dedication may properly arise through a technical estoppel.[7] So where the owner in dealing with an individual instead of binding himself by an estoppel in pais binds himself by an express or implied covenant in a deed, the public may accept the public use called for in the deed, and a dedication may become effective on the doctrine of covenant or grant.[8] The elementary distinction between these cases and the true dedication is that the estoppel or covenant is merely an offer as to the public and there is no dedication to the public until the public accepts.[9]

2. DISTINGUISHED FROM GRANT OR PRESCRIPTION. A dedication, although often spoken of as operating by way of grant,[10] differs from a grant in the very material particular that there need not be a grantee in esse at the time of the dedication to give it effect.[11] An appropriation or dedication of property to public uses is an exception to the general rule requiring a particular grantee.[12] It is not essential that the right of use should be vested in a corporate body.[13] The public, it has been said, is an ever existing grantee capable of taking dedications for public uses, and its interests are a sufficient consideration to support them.[14] If there is a common-law dedication of land to public use prior to the existence of a municipal corporation, then upon such corporation being organized and including such land within its limits the use of the land in trust for the public at once vests in it.[15] So the doctrine of prescription has been said not to strictly apply to public easements.[16] But dedication may be implied from facts and

7. Thus through his representations to some individual that he has abandoned his land to a public use, intended to be relied upon, and relied upon by that individual, the owner is bound, and being so bound to the individual to dedicate his land to a public use, he gives the public an option to accept the use. Such acceptance may be made by the public at any time while the estoppel lasts, and the dedication may thus become effective. Barney v. Lincoln Park, 203 Ill. 397, 67 N. E. 801.

16. The doctrine of prescription as applicable to public easements does not seem to be recognized in England at all. The origin of easements from immemorial user is founded on custom. "And, upon referring to the several authorities which have been cited in support of the validity of such a prescription, it will be found that the claim by the inhabitants, quâ inhabitants, to any easement, wherever it has been allowed, has been invariably vested on the ground of custom, not on that of prescription. A custom which has existed from time immemorial without inter-circumstances,[17] and just as the doctrine of dedication grew up upon the foundation of public policy, so the doctrine of public easements by presumptive dedication or prescription has a legitimate foundation and is generally recognized, although there is some conflict of opinion on the question.[18]

3. Easements Created by Dedication Distinguished From Private Easements. Public easements differ from private easements in that there is no dominant tenement, and they are therefore in gross;[19] and the incidents of public easements, largely owing to the intervention of the state or of municipalities or other public authorities representing the public, differ in important respects from the incidents of private easements.[20]

B. Of Statutory Dedication — 1. In General. Just as statutes commonly define how a person may deed his lands to legal persons, so in many states statutes provide how lands may be on the records dedicated to the public.[21] Such statutes usually provide that where an owner has had his land surveyed, platted, and acknowledged, and has recorded the plat, then such parts as the plat shows he intended to dedicate as streets, parks, etc., shall be as fully beyond his control as if he had deeded them to a legal person for the uses mentioned,[22] and this is called a statutory dedication.[23] Such statutes are constitutional.[24] When a statutory dedication has been duly made, contemporaneous or subsequent acts of the dedicator will be referred to such statutory dedication and not raise against him a presumption of a wider common-law dedication.[25]

2. Effect of Statutes on Power to Make Common-Law Dedication. It is well settled that statutes providing means whereby lands may be dedicated to public ruption within a certain place, and which is certain and reasonable in itself, obtains the force of a law, and is, in effect, the common law within that place to which it extends, though contrary to the general law of the realm. In the case of a custom, therefore, it is unnecessary to look out for its origin: but, in the case of prescription, which founds itself upon the presumption of a grant that has been lost by process of time, no prescription can have had a legal origin where no grant could have been made to support it." Lockwood v. Wood, 6 Q. B. 31, 50, 64, 8 Jur. 543, 13 L. J. Q. B. 365, 51 E. C. L. 31, 50. Mr. Justice Story in Beatty v. Kurtz, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 566, 7 L. ed. 521, after showing how the appropriation of a lot to the use of the "Lutheran Church," there being no such church, and therefore no grantee, could not take effect as a grant express or presumed, supports it as a dedication to public and pious uses. 17. See infra, V, C, 5.

18. See infra, VII, D, 4. "The adjudged cases, with respect to highways by dedication or by prescription, are not, in all points, susceptible of being reconciled. Some deny that highways can be established by prescription, and affirm that they can be established in two ways only: First, under the statute; and, second, by dedication. Other cases hold that highways may derive a lawful existence from long continued use by the public under a claim of right. The cases differ as to the effect of long user by the public. Some hold that, if continued for the period which, under the statute of limitations, would bar the right of the owner of land to recover the same, this is conclusive evidence against the owner, of an intent to dedicate for a highway the land so used. The period fixed by the statute of limitation is applied to such cases by way of analogy. Others hold that user, even for such a period, does not conclude the right of the owner, who may, nevertheless, show that he did not intend to dedicate and rebut, if he can, any presumption of such an intent derived from mere use by the public. Many of the authorities make the effect of user by the public, depend largely upon the character of the land and of the country in or through which the highway is situate." 22. Ill. Rev. St. (1879) c. 109, is a fair illustration. It is there provided that a person who desires to lay out a town shall have the land surveyed and a plat made showing streets, squares, etc., and what parts of the land he wishes to dedicate to public uses or to the uses of corporations or individuals. It is also provided that after such a plat has been prepared and is acknowledged and recorded title shall vest in the parts donated on the plat, and that the title to any parts dedicated to public use shall be vested in the municipal corporation, if any, in trust for the purposes declared. uses do not prevent such uses being created by dedication as at common law.[26] They merely provide a new mode by which the dedicator's intention to grant or convey his land may be carried into effect,[27] and there may be a statutory dedication by some of the owners and a common-law dedication by others.[28] Nevertheless the statutes in no way enlarge either expressly or by implication the class of cases where an easement may be created in favor of the public by common-law dedication.[29]

3. Defective Statutory Dedication When Operative as Common-Law Dedication. An incomplete or defective statutory dedication will, when accepted by the public or when rights are acquired under it by third persons, operate as a common-law dedication.[30] Thus a town plat, although not acknowledged, may operate as a common-law dedication,[31] and the same is the case in respect to a plat which is not recorded,[32] or in respect to a plat which has not been signed.[33] But where a map of a city addition was not sufficient to constitute a statutory dedication of the streets thereon, the fact that a map showed certain lines along certain property

Creation of highways.— In Massachusetts the statutes provide that no way opened and dedicated to the public use which has not become a public way shall be chargeable upon a city or town as a highway or townway unless the same is laid out and established by such city or town in the manner therein prescribed, and requires highways and townways to be kept in repair at the expense of the town, city, or place in which they are situated. Nevertheless where a recorded plat does not correspond with the survey of the premises, the fact that the plat indicates the existence of a street which is intended by the survey does not constitute a common-law dedication in the street, where the intent to dedicate on the part of the landowner and its use by the public are claimed as the street, without other evidence, was insufficient to constitute a common-law dedication.[34]

II. Capacity of Dedicator.[35]

A. In General. There are few cases in which the question of capacity to dedicate has been raised. There seems to be no valid reason why the same rules as to capacity which apply to grants should not apply to dedications, so that as a general rule it may be said that no dedication can be established as the act of a person incapable of making a grant.[36]

B. Corporation. A corporation which owns and deals with land can make dedications within its powers.[37] Just how far a corporation is bound by the declarations of its officers depends upon the circumstances of each particular case,[38] but where a use is opened by an officer of a corporation and is enjoyed by the public the assent of the corporation will be presumed.[39]

III. Title or Interest of Dedicator.

A. In General. As it is essential that to be valid a dedication must create a use unlimited as to the time of its duration,[40] and as it is the very essence of a dedication that the owner of the land has consented to abandon it,[41] it is a necessary conclusion that no one except the owner of an unlimited estate or an estate in fee simple can make a dedication of land.[42] Nevertheless mere defects of title or the non-concurrence of mere formal interests will not defeat a dedication.[43] And any person, no matter how small his interest in the land and even if he has no interest, may estop himself from denying a dedication of it.[44] Generally in establishing a dedication the title of the dedicator as well as the act of dedication must be proved.[45]

B. Holder of Fee-Simple Title. When the dedication is made by one who at the time holds the fee-simple title to the land, no question as to its validity on the ground of title can arise.[46] But a dedication made before the dedicator acquires his title is not good[47] unless he ratifies it after acquiring title,[48] or unless he has some kind of equitable title in or equitable right to the land,[49] this rule differing from the rule in the case of grants.[50] And no dedication can be made by one who has parted with his title.[51]

C. Holder of Equitable Interest or Title. While a purpose to dedicate, declared before the acquisition of title, is at most an offer to dedicate in the future and may be abandoned or withdrawn, and is not binding unless repeated or ratified after title acquired,[52] it has been held sufficient if the dedicator at the time of the declaration has an equitable title or an equitable right which he is perfecting;[53] and this question has often arisen in the case of government lands. While a mere occupier of government lands cannot dedicate them,[54] one who is perfecting his title can.[55]

D. Holders of Interests Differing as to Time of Enjoyment or Amount of Interest. If land belongs to several persons who have estates and interests in it, differing as to time of enjoyment or amount of interest, there can be no dedication except with the consent of them all.[56] But if one does not own the whole bed of a street he may dedicate his half.[57]

E. Effect of Judgments and Other Liens. If a judgment has attached to the land it cannot be defeated by dedication,[58] but a judgment attaching after the dedication is a lien subject thereto.[59]

So intimately connected is the law of dedication with the law of highways that in old English digests the subject of Dedication is a subtitle under the title Ways. See 9 Jacob Fisher Dig. col. 13426.

61. There are three English cases generally referred to as the first English cases recognizing the law of dedication. Rex v. Hudson, 2 Str. 909 (where the chief justice held that leaving a way open for four years from 1728 to 1732 would not be long enough "to amount to a gift of it to the public"); Lade v. Shepherd, 2 Str. 1004 (where defendant had put a bridge from his property across a ditch to and on an alleged road, the court said simply: "It is certainly a dedication to the public, so far as the public has occasion for it, which is only for a right of passage; but it never was understood to be a transfer of the absolute property in the soil"); Rugby Charity v. Merryweather, 11 East 376 note a, 10 Rev. Rep. 528 (where the court said: "All that time [about eight years] they permitted the public at large to gradually extended to all kinds of public easements, such as squares, parks, wharves, etc.,[62] and has been held to include even privileges of a semi-public character, such as those in churches and cemeteries.[63] A dedication may indeed be made for any use of a nature which the general public can enjoy,[64] but the doctrine has no application to uses the public cannot enjoy.[65] Under miscellaneous public uses for which land may be dedicated, some of which might perhaps be classified under subsequent heads, may be mentioned a "college green,"[66] a "training ground,"[67] a "mews,"[68] a "resort for air and exercise,"[69] a "lake,"[70] a "ford over a stream,"[71] a "stream for public use,"[72] as for example, to be turned into a

In a great case, which was much contested, six years was held sufficient"). This last case was affirmed in the case of Bateman v. Bluch, 18 Q. B. 870, 17 Jur. 386, 21 L. J. Q. B. 406, 83 E. C. L. 870, 14 Eng. L. & Eq. 69, 72, where Lord Campbell says: "There may be a large square with only one entrance to it, and if the owner allows the public to use it without restriction for a great many years, he cannot afterwards turn round and say they were all trespassers." Dovaston v. Payne, 2 H. Bl. 527, 3 Rev. Rep. 497, 2 Smith Lead. Cas. 1388, is annotated as the leading English case.

The supreme court of the United States in its early history recognized the doctrine of dedication as a common-law doctrine, and referred to the above early English cases, as will be seen in the following quotation: "The land, therefore, must have passed out of the donors, if at all, without a grantee, by way of public appropriation or dedication to pious uses. In this respect it would form an exception to the generality of the rule, that to make a grant valid there must be a person in esse capable of taking it. . . . Nor is this a novel doctrine in the common law. In the familiar case where a man lays out a public street or highway, there is, strictly speaking, no grantee of the easement, but it takes effect by way of grant or dedication, to public uses." public canal,[73] a "spring,"[74] a "camp-meeting ground,"[75] and a right to have land unbuilt upon for the purpose of light, air, and a view of the sea.[76] Apparently sewers may be dedicated to public use;[77] but the dedication of a street does not carry the private sewer pipes laid in it.[78]

B. Religious and Pious Uses. Whether, because recognized under 43 Eliz. c. 4,[79] or under the general principles of equity relating to charitable uses;[80] or because in a civilized community a religious use is in its very nature a public use,[81] it has invariably been held that land may be dedicated to pious or religious uses,[82] without a grantee in being to take,[83] and although the proposed beneficiaries were a limited class of the public.[84] Thus land may be dedicated for churches,[85] burial-grounds,[86] cemeteries,[87] or tombs,[88] even though limited to the use of a particular sect.[89]

C. Highways, Streets, and Alleys. Highways, streets, and alleys may be dedicated to the public.[90] So a road or street which is a mere cul de sac may be dedicated to the public use in the same manner as a thoroughfare,[91] although this seems to have been doubted formerly.[92] So the dedication of a street generally carries with it the right to a sidewalk,[93] and the dedication of a footway may carry with it a bordering carriage-drive.[94] Special ways may be dedicated, such as a path along a canal,[95] a footway over a railroad bridge,[96] or a path along the surface of a sea wall, erected to protect the neighboring lands from the waters.[97] There is practically no difference in the rules applicable to a street and to an alley;[98] and the principles governing the dedication are the same whether the dedication be of a country road or a city street; but the weight of facts like public user,[99] non-inclosure,[1] as evidence of dedication, is much greater in the case of a city street where lots are small and land valuable, than in the country where land is in the state of nature, is held in great tracts, or is not inhabited.[2]

D. Squares, Parks, and Public Commons. The full applicability of the doctrine of dedication to parks and public squares and commons is now generally recognized,[3] and where land is dedicated for a public square without any specific designation of the uses to which it can be put, it will be presumed to have been dedicated for such appropriate uses as would under user and custom be deemed to have been fairly in contemplation at the time of the dedication.[4] A dedication of a square for public buildings can only be used for that purpose — no other use will be permitted.[5] And where a public square is dedicated to be used for the erection of a designated kind of building no other kind of building can be erected thereon.[6] Where the use of a block on a plat is not designated but the declarations of the proprietor made at the time of the dedication show that it should remain an open public square public buildings cannot be placed thereon.[7] So it has been held that a city cannot run streets through a public square.[8]

E. Schools and Educational Uses. Dedications for school or educational uses, although not very common, are generally recognized, partly because such uses are public uses, but generally under statutes.[9]

F. Railroad Tracks, Depots, and Crossings. A railroad company, although a quasi-public corporation, cannot take by dedication except under statutes allowing dedications to individuals and corporations.[10] It may, however, acquire rights of way and rights for its depots by statutory dedication.[11] In some cases analogous rights have been held to have been acquired by railroads through estoppel.[12] Railroads, however, can make dedications, and it is well settled that they can dedicate to the public the right of crossing their tracks.[13] When evidence of its intent to dedicate consists of its planking a way over the tracks the width of the crossing is limited to the planking.[14] The fact that a railroad has dedicated a crossing does not interfere with its right to lay an additional track.[15]

"In the litigation arising in towns on the Mississippi and Ohio rivers, questions relating to the dedication and use of the river bank or front as a landing for the convenience of river commerce have been considered and decided on the theory that a dedication of such ground to public use implies and vests in the public a right to use the same as a highway, quay, landing, or levee, without any grantee being named or in existence; and that the legislature, as the representative of the general public, may regulate such use, and promote the same by the improvement of the premises, directly or through the agency of the corporation within whose limits the same are situated. And when, as in this case, the dedication is unconditionally made to a public use, as a levee or landing-place, no formal acceptance of the same is necessary; nor does the existence or continuance of the easement depend on the extent of the use or improvement of the premises, or that they are used or improved at all; and it is even doubtful if the same can be lost by the adverse in a case of this kind arise from the different rules as to the ownership of the soil along navigable and non-navigable rivers.[17] The establishment of a wharf or landing-place which is used by the public is perfectly consistent with private ownership, and there is no such presumption from so doing of the owner's intent to dedicate.[18] The right to use a landing-place for depositing articles, such as wood and the like, is one of the uses which cannot be claimed for the general public,[19] and a claim of a right to deposit fertilizers or other offensive materials would be doubly bad because unreasonable.[20]

H. Bridges. Some bridges have the characteristics of piers or wharves and such bridges may be dedicated under principles applicable to wharves.[21] But as a rule bridges are parts of ways and are so regarded.[22] Public bridges are thus a part of public highways and may be dedicated just as highways may be dedicated.[23] A bridge may be built and dedicated to the public use at once,[24] or a private bridge may become a public bridge by dedication.[25] A bridge is still a public bridge, although the use of it by the public be limited to certain times or certain emergencies.[26] Usually the rights and liabilities which arise out of bridges are the same as those which arise out of highways and streets.[27] cation is not a mode of conferring a private property right in land.[30] Not only must the use be intended for the whole public, but it must be a use which the whole public might possibly enjoy.[31] Everyone could use a highway, and its legitimate use by one person would not interfere with the use of it by others; but if one person deposited his goods in a particular place no one else could use that place; and so it has been held that the right to deposit wood or other goods cannot be a public use;[32] and the right to deposit manure is doubly objectionable because offensive and unreasonable.[33] For analogous reasons a right to fish in private waters cannot be created by dedication,[34] nor can the right of fishermen to build huts during the fishing season on shore near fishing grounds.[35] So the right to float logs down a stream in time of flood and thus endanger dams and riparian property cannot be a public use, because such right would be given to some to the damage of others.[36] Moreover a public use is a free use, so that a use dependent upon the payment of toll, like a toll-bridge,[37] or upon the payment of an annual rent, like a way, cannot be claimed by dedication.[38] Then the use must be a permanent one, and no use subject to expiration by limitation of time,[39] or by revocation,[40] can be dedicated at common law.

V. The Act of Dedication.

A. Introductory Statement. The act of dedication may be one act complete in itself as when contained in a deed,[41] or it may be equivocal, like opening a road without expressly stating for whose use;[42] or it may be negative or permissive, like suffering or permitting without objection a public user;[43] still it is always in the nature of an offer, because to be complete it must be actually or constructively accepted.[44] But whatever the nature of the act or acts relied on to create a dedication may be, it is the universal rule that the intention to dedicate (animus dedicandi) must also exist.[45] And the mere intention is not enough as there must be acts[46] accompanied by declarations of intention to dedicate, a mere declaration of future intent is not sufficient,[47] or the acts must themselves be such that intention may be inferred.[48] The act of dedication need not be based upon any consideration.[49] Nor is any particular form necessary.[50]

B. Necessity of Intent to Dedicate. In order to constitute a valid dedication there must be an intention on the part of the owner to devote his property to the public use,[51] and the intention must be clearly and unequivocally manifested.[52] Nevertheless the intention to which courts give heed is not an intention hidden in the mind of the landowner, but an intention manifested by his acts.[53]

C. Form of Dedication at Common Law — 1. In General. No particular form is necessary to the validity of a common-law dedication and it need not be in writing,[54] as the statute of frauds has no application to the doctrine of dedication.[55] All that is necessary to the validity of a dedication is the assent and intent of the owner to appropriate it to public use,[56] and any act or acts clearly manifesting an intent to dedicate is sufficient.[57] Dedications have been established in every conceivable way by which the intent of the dedicator could be evinced.[58]

2. Oral Dedication. As already shown no writing is necessary to the validity of a dedication.[59] Express dedications may be made orally, when the use is inaugurated,[60] or while it is being enjoyed,[61] and may consist of declarations made directly to the public.[62] So a dedication may arise from statements made by the dedicator to individuals who rely upon them and acquire easements by estoppel or otherwise,[63] for it is a well-settled rule that where an individual acquires the right to have land subjected to a public use or easement the public may avail itself of this right.[64]

3. Dedication by Deed. Although a deed to the public cannot take effect as such, because of the absence of a legal grantee, it may, if it be the declaration of a use, take effect as a common-law dedication.[65] A dedication may also be made by a deed from the dedicator to an individual, in which the dedicator declares that a part of his land is subject to a public use;[66] the grantee by such a deed acquires an easement by grant or covenant, express or implied,[67] but the deed constitutes at the same time an offer to the public of the use declared which the public can by acceptance render binding.[68]

4. Dedication by Other Writing. So express written dedications may be made by less formal writings than deeds, such as an agreement to allow a way if another is closed;[69] or a petition to have a way opened over one's land if acted on by the authorities,[70] unless others have failed to sign the petition and no action is taken thereon.[71] So an express dedication may be contained in a will.[72] But a mere agreement to dedicate on demand does not constitute a dedication,[73] and a recorded return of a surveyor stating that part of a lot is given to a town for a public landing does not import dedication.[74]

5. Implied Dedication — a. In General. Implied or presumptive dedications are of two kinds. One kind includes dedications arising by estoppel.[75] Again, although what constitutes a dedication is a question of law,[76] whether a dedication has been made is essentially a question of fact, and a fact which may be established by indirect evidence,[77] as no formalities in making a dedication are essential.[78] Therefore the dedications which may be truly said to be implied are those

75. See supra, I, A, 1. In such cases the party is estopped or precluded from going into the question as to whether or not there has been a valid dedication of the public use in question. It therefore makes no difference whether the essentials of a valid dedication do exist; inquiry is precluded by estoppel; and whether or not it is precluded depends upon the principles of estoppel, and not upon the doctrine of dedication. Thus no dedication can be implied if the grantor does not own the bed of a street referred to, because such ownership is essential to valid dedication. Baltimore v. Northern Cent. R. Co., 88 Md. 427, 41 Atl. 911. But he might under similar circumstances be estopped from denying a dedication. Territory v. Deegan, 3 Mont. 82. which depend upon various circumstances or upon indirect evidence. The questions arising in this class of cases are for the most part mere questions of evidence and are considered under that head.[79]

b. By Acquiescence in User by Public. Long acquiescence in user by the public may under certain circumstances operate as a dedication of land to the public use.[80]

c. By Sale of Land With Reference to Map or Plat. Where the owner of real property lays out a town upon it, and divides the land into lots and blocks, intersected by streets and alleys, and sells any of the lots with reference to such plan, or where he sells with reference to the map of a town or city, in which his land is so laid off, he thereby dedicates the streets and alleys to the use of the public,[81]

Leasing land with reference to plat.— A coal company by staking out a town site upon its land, building houses, improving streets, and leasing residence and business sites is estopped to deny the dedication of the use of the streets to the public. Sales with reference to unopened streets.— The general rule stated in the text is, according to some decisions, subject to limitations. Thus where a street is laid out through municipal action without the concurrence of the owner of the land or any action on his part, and the street has not been opened, a conveyance describing the land conveyed as bounded on such street does not amount to a dedication to the public of the street. St. Rep. 618. Contra, Sherer v. Jasper, 93 Ala. 530, 9 So. 584. Such also seems to be the rule laid down by a number of decisions in case of conveyances with reference to unopened streets, although platted by the owner himself (Linton v. Guillotte, 10 Rob. (La.) 357; Matter of New York, 73 N. Y. App. Div. 394, 77 N. Y. Suppl. 31; Matter of Eleventh Ave., 49 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 208. And see In re Eleventh Ave., 81 N. Y. 436); but this is denied by other decisions (Fulton v. Dover, 8 Houst. (Del.) 78, 6 Del. Ch. 1, 6 Atl. 633, 12 Atl. 394, 31 Atl. 974; Zearing v. Raber, 74 Ill. 409; Matter of Twenty-Ninth St., 1 Hill (N. Y.) 139; McKenna v. Lancaster Dist., Harp. (S. Conveyances including space designated as street.— Where lots sold are not bounded by, but so described as to actually include, a space that might constitute part of a street extended, it must appear that there was a dedication by the proprietor, and that it was accepted and recognized by the municipality in order to divest subsequent purchasers of the title and possession. Sandford v. Covington, 14 S. W. 497, 12 Ky. L. Rep. 450.

Subsequent change of location.— Where the owners of land platted it and laid out blocks and streets including a street, and afterward by four separate conveyances recognized a subsequent plat by the city engineer showing a changed location of the street, and made no objection to the public use of the street as so changed there was a dedication of the street, not only as originally platted, but as changed by the second plat. wise[83] that the mention of the street was solely for purposes of description and not as a dedication thereof. On the same principle the owner will be held to have dedicated to the public use such pieces of land as are marked on the plat or map as squares, courts, or parks.[84] The reason is that the grantor by making such a conveyance is estopped, as well in reference to the public as to his grantees, from denying the existence of the easement.[85] Nevertheless the mere laying out of a town and making a plat of it without selling any of the lots will not, in the absence of a statute, constitute a dedication of the streets;[86] and it has also been held essential that the sales be shown to have been rendered effectual by conveyances.[87] According to the great weight of authority a dedication made as hereinbefore described is irrevocable and the dedicator is forever concluded from

"The mere laying out of a town upon a man's own land, and by his own private act, and the making and recording of a plan of the town, may not, and as we suppose, do not of themselves, conclude him to any extent. The land, notwithstanding these acts, is still his own, and neither any other individual nor the public, have any right to interfere with such use of it as any man may lawfully make of his own. Though he has laid out a town upon the land and upon paper, he is not bound to sell the lots or to make or authorize the making of a town in fact. If he never disposes of a lot or lots, as part of the town, no one has any interest in the town as such, or any right growing out of his acts in relation to it." Rowan v. Portland, 8 B. Mon. exercising any authority or setting up any title to the same,[88] and that too, although there has been no formal acceptance by the public authorities.[89] Nor is the irrevocable character of the dedication affected by the fact that the property is not at once subjected to the uses designed.[90] There are, however, decisions which hold that the mere making of sales of lots with reference to a map does not constitute an irrevocable dedication to the public, but amounts to a mere offer of dedication which may be withdrawn at any time before acceptance by the public authority,[91] that the platting and sale of lots constitute a dedication of the streets and alleys delineated upon the plat only as between the grantors and purchasers from them.[92]

D. Form and Requisites of Statutory Dedications. A statutory dedication is not effective as such unless in making it the provisions of the statute are complied with. The plat or map by which the land is dedicated must conform with the statute in all of its substantial requirements.[93] It must sufficiently describe and designate the land proposed to be dedicated.[94] A plat not showing the location of the platted lands is ineffectual as a statutory dedication.[95] It is not necessary, however, that there should be any certificate or statement upon the plat to whom and for what purpose the easement is created.[96] So it must be certified in the manner required by statute or it does not operate as a dedication or conveyance of the fee.[97] It must be acknowledged in the manner required by the

In such case, the rights of the lot owners in such easement in and over the ground laid off on the plat as ways, will have no tendency to establish the title of the public to such ways as public streets.

statute.[98] If a statute requires acknowledgment before a designated officer an acknowledgment before any other officer will be insufficient,[99] but if no particular officer is named any person who may take an acknowledgment is competent.[1] So if the statute provides for acknowledgment without defining the kind, acknowledgment need not necessarily be such as is required for a deed.[2] If acknowledgment by the owner is required acknowledgment by his agent will invalidate the dedication.[3] If indorsement by the auditor of his approval of a plat is required the absence of such approval will invalidate the dedication.[4] It must be recorded as provided by statute.[5] If recorded in the wrong place it will be fatal to the operation of the dedication as a statutory dedication.[6] It has been held, however, that defects in a plat may be cured by a subsequent plat or deed,[7] or by reference to the original city plat, where it renders certain the meaning of the plat used in making the dedication [8] or by statute.[9]

E. Conditions and Limitations Imposed by Dedicator — 1. THE GENERAL RULE. It is well settled that in dedicating land to the public the dedicator may impose such reasonable conditions, restrictions, and limitations as he may see fit,[10] and in order to vest the easement in the dedicatee the terms of the dedication must be strictly complied with.[11] Nevertheless the dedicator may waive any conditions, restrictions or limitations imposed by him.[12] If he desires to avoid his

2. Applications of Rule. In applying the general rule that the dedicator may impose reasonable conditions and restrictions on making a dedication of his property, it is of course competent for him to limit the use of his property to a specified use or purpose.[14] So the owner may make his dedication conditional on the making and maintenance of improvements on the property dedicated.[15] So he may reserve a right of way for a railroad track over the property dedicated.[16] He may reserve all private rights in land under water originally appurtenant to the estate,[17] or the right to plow up and temporarily interfere with the use of a highway.[18] He may prescribe the width and extent of the highway[19] or reserve to himself a strip of land between two streets, and the use made by him of the land so reserved at the time of the dedication will not deprive him or his assigns of the right to apply it afterward to other uses.[20] He may limit the use of a highway to certain purposes.[21]

3. Limitations of Rule — a. In General. There are, however, certain limitations on the dedicator's right in this regard. Thus he cannot attach to the dedication any conditions or limitations inconsistent with the legal character of the dedication,[22] or which take the property dedicated from the control of the public authorities,[23] or which are against public policy,[24] and the dedication will take effect regardless of such condition, which will be construed as void,[25] and of course it is not competent for the dedicator to impose conditions after acceptance.[26]

b. Limiting Use as to Persons. It is one of the essentials of a dedication that it be made to the public. The dedicator cannot as a general rule make a valid dedication to any private person or to any limited number of persons.[27] Nevertheless it has been held that pious, religious, and educational uses may be made for a limited class of the public.[28] And it has also been held that statutory dedications may be made to individuals and corporations as well as to the public for any purpose authorized by the statute.[29]

c. Limiting Use as to Time. A dedication cannot be limited as to the time of its duration.[30]

VI. THE ACCEPTANCE.

A. Necessity of Acceptance — 1. General Rule. Considering a dedication as the voluntary transfer of an interest in land, it partakes both of the nature of a grant[31] and of a gift,[32] and is governed by the fundamental principles which control grants and gifts. Hence a dedication, like a contract, consists of an offer

United States.— Davenport v. Buffington,

2. EXCEPTIONS TO RULE — a. Statutory Dedication. In a number of jurisdictions, where a dedication is made in compliance with the statutes relating to the subject, no acceptance is necessary to complete the dedication.[35] Accordingly after such a dedication has been made ejectment will lie against the dedicator to recover possession of the land dedicated,[36] and in a number of cases it has been held that the burden devolves upon the municipality to keep the streets or alleys dedicated in repair,[37] and that it will be liable for personal injuries resulting from its neglect to do so.[38] In other jurisdictions, however, as is the case with common law dedications, an acceptance is necessary to complete a statutory dedication,[39] and if there is no acceptance within a reasonable time, the dedicator may revoke his offer and take possession of the land dedicated.[40]

b. Deed to Individual Calling For Public Use. According to the great weight of authority, if the owner of land has laid it off into blocks and lots with streets and alleys intersecting it and sells lots with reference to a map or plat in which the land is so laid off, or where there is a city map in which the land is so laid off, and he sells lots with reference to such map, he will be held to have made an irrevocable dedication of the designed streets and alleys. So far as he is concerned no acceptance is necessary to bind him[41] other than the mere purchase of his lots which some courts have construed as an acceptance on the part of the public.[42] However well settled this may be, it is equally well settled that in the absence of acceptance by some formal act on the part of the properly constituted authorities, or by their repairing or improving the land dedicated, or by user by the general public, no duty of improving or keeping in repair the land dedicated or liability for injuries caused by failure to do so is imposed on the public.[43]

B. Time of Acceptance. In order that rights may be claimed under an offer of dedication it must be accepted within a reasonable time,[44] and by parity of reasoning a reasonable time must be allowed in which to accept.[45] While a dedication and acceptance may both concur on a single day,[46] immediate acceptance is not necessary.[47] Dedications may be made in præsenti to be accepted by the public in futuro.[48] What constitutes a reasonable time must be largely governed by the circumstances of each case,[49] and as a general rule acceptance will be in time if made at such time as the public interest may require.[50] So in many cases it has been said that the acceptance will be in time if made at any time before revocation.[51] On the other hand acceptance is of course too late if

Statement of rule.— "Dedications of private property to the public enjoyment must always be considered with reference to the use to which the thing is to be appropriated. . . . It may be years before the convenience of the public, or of those who live upon adjacent lots, on account of the paucity of population, requires that they should be formally taken in charge by the municipal authorities. Such dedication of streets in a growing town must have such an interpretation as will comport with the common understanding. The proprietor of the ground ought to be held as proclaiming and offering to the public to change his property from rural to urban, to sell it in small parcels with reference to streets and squares. Because the neighborhood is not rapidly settled up, and years may elapse before the city undertakes to work and grade the streets, or before the necessity arises, the city should not, by such non-user, be held to have relinquished the easement and abandoned its acceptance of the dedication." Briel v. Natchez, 48 Miss. 423, 436.

Application of rule.— Where land in a city was dedicated to public use for a street but it was rough and hilly, and was needed and used by the public but little for thirty years, when the city proceeded to grade it, it was held that the delay in improving it did not cause it to revert to the dedicator. Shea v. Ottumwa, 67 Iowa 39, 24 N. W. 582. So failure to use a portion of land dedicated for city purposes is not an abandonment where at the time the dedication was made the city was a small village and it was contemplated that many years would elapse before all the land would be used. Hardy v. Memphis, 10 Heisk. (Tenn.) 127. And it is not necessary to an acceptance of an offer to dedicate land for a street that every street, or all of any street, should be forthwith opened and used when platted. made after revocation.[52] An acceptance is also too late where the dedicator has or those claiming under him have occupied and used the land dedicated for a long period of time.[53]

C. Form and Sufficiency of Acceptance — 1. In General. Ordinarily, in the absence of any statutory provision to the contrary, no formality is necessary to a valid acceptance.[54]

2. Acceptance by the General Public — a. Sufficiency to Bind Dedicator. An offer of dedication, to bind the dedicator, need not be accepted by the city or county or other public authorities, but may be accepted by the general public[55] — to deny this would be to deny the whole doctrine of dedication.[56] The general public accepts by entering upon the land and enjoying the privileges offered — or briefly, by user.[57] Except when user is relied on to raise a presumption of dedication the duration of the user is wholly immaterial. It is not necessary that such user should continue any definite length of time,[58] or that so long as the persons enjoying it have done so as members of the general public and not as neigh-

Application of rule.— Thus the failure to take any steps to accept a dedicated street for twenty-one years, during which time the dedicator sold the locus in quo which was adversely occupied by the vendee for twenty years, bars any right of the public to the street. Hayward v. Manzer, 70 Cal. 476, 13 Pac. 141. So a village by allowing a period of twenty-three years to elapse without accepting the offer of dedication made by the filing of a plat insufficiently acknowledged, during which time grantees of the person making the plat have erected fences and occupied the land designated as a street, loses whatever right it might have had to an easement in the land so occupied. Illustration.— Where owners of land in a city graded a street, built a sidewalk, had telegraph poles strung along it, and a hotel was being erected fronting on the street, which had been extensively used as such for two or three years, such facts show an acceptance of the owner's implied dedication of the street, without proof of the formal acceptance by the city, or that it had ever caused it to be worked as a street. Hammond v. Maher, 30 Ind. App. 286, 65 N. E. 1055.

A city may at any time adopt an easement dedicated to the general public, but it cannot be made to do so. Smith v. San Luis Obispo, 95 Cal. 463, 30 Pac. 591; Hoboken Land, etc., Co. v. Hoboken, 36 N. J. L. 540.

56. The decisions that the general public can be dedicatee would be meaningless if a legal person had to accept the dedication. In Atty.-Gen. v. Abbott, 154 Mass. 323, 28 N. E. 346, 13 L. R. A. 251, it was strongly argued that the general public could not accept a general dedication at all, as it would thus acquire rights without liabilities; but this contention was overruled, it being held that an easement so accepted was vested in the general public, and otherwise the rights and liabilities of the owner of the ground continued.

bors[59] or licensees,[60] or otherwise in their individual capacity,[61] they should be of any defined number.[62] While no dedication will be presumed from user alone unless the user has been so long and so general that the public convenience would be materially affected by its interruption,[63] no such requirement applies strictly as to the user which constitutes the acceptance of a dedication otherwise established,[64] it being only necessary that those who would naturally be expected to enjoy it do, or have done so, at their pleasure and convenience.

b. Sufficiency to Bind Public Authorities For Care and Maintenance — (i) In General. Although the rule is almost unquestioned that user by the general public will not, in addition to binding the dedicator and consummating the dedication, bind the public authorities so that they will be responsible for its care and maintenance, this subject has presented difficulties and has caused confusion. The general rule is that the public by user cannot so accept as to bind the municipality.[65] The liability of cities, counties, commissioners, etc., for the condition

"Neither upon precedent nor principle is the contention true that mere user by the public, for any length of time, without any act of the city, of land can impress upon it the character of a street and thereby cast upon the city the duty to keep it in repair or of the public streets, etc., is elsewhere[66] fully discussed, and here it need only be siad that such liability on the part of the public authorities can exist only in four cases: (1) Where the easement has been duly condemned or established by them,[67] (2) where the easement has been accepted by the state or by them expressly or by implication;[68] (3) where the easement has been established by long public user, on the doctrine of prescription;[69] and (4) where the easement is sought under some special statute to be established by proof of public user.[70]

(II) User For Prescriptive Period. It is stated by some authorities that "long public user" of the privilege in question may be an acceptance binding on the public authorities.[71] In England prior to the Highway Act mere public user was held sufficient for this purpose;[72] but there are few cases in America in which this doctrine has been accepted.[73] Some cases which seem to accept it are cases in which the liability of the municipality for the condition of the easement has not been involved, such as cases against individuals for obstructing a highway,[74] which cases do not involve the liability of the public authorities. The liability make it liable for failure to do so." Downend v. Kansas City, 156 Mo. 60, 74, 56 S. W. 902, 51 L. R. A. 170.

Iowa.— It was held that public user ought to apply in cases against the municipality, but in this case there was both public user and repairs made by the public authorities. It is said that the wants and convenience of the public must control and the public authorities, if they wish to avoid liabilities, ought to take proper action to refuse to accept and thus protect themselves. Evidence of repairs made subsequently to the accident were admitted as evidence of prior acceptance. Manderschid v. Dubuque, 29 Iowa 73, 4 Am. Rep. 196, decided by a divided court. In subsequent cases it is assumed that a public highway may exist by dedication or prescription, and may be shown by user in either case, but these were cases of an obstruction by an individual not involving municipal liability. Abandonment of toll-bridge and user by public.— Two bridge cases, one in Illinois (Marseilles v. Howland, 124 Ill. 547, 16 N. E. 883), and one in New York (Requa v. Rochester, 45 N. Y. 129, 6 Am. Rep. 52), hold that where a toll-bridge has been abandoned to the public and used by the public the public authorities are bound to take care of it. Against a presumption from the wants and convenience of the public that the authorities have accepted the dedication referred to in Manderschid v. Dubuque, 29 Iowa 73, 4 Am. Rep. 196, it is said that there is no presumption of such acceptance from the beneficial nature of the use, because such acceptance would impose a burden. Willey v. People, 36 Ill. App. 609.

of a municipality in cases where by dedication it has acquired the fee does not depend upon public user.[75] What is meant by long public user is not always defined and this has led in some cases to misunderstandings. Properly long public user means such user as has established an easement by prescription.[76] A like effect from any other user is negatived by the many decisions which hold that the general public cannot accept a dedication so as to bind the public authorities;[77] and prescriptive user is a kind of user which has been actually applied in authorities referring to long user[78] and is a kind of user from which it may properly be presumed that an easement was laid out by proceedings the records of which have been lost.[79] In some courts such effect is denied even to prescriptive user.[80]

(III) Effect of Special Statutory Provisions. Some statutes expressly provide that easements which have been used by the general public for a certain number of years shall be public easements just as if laid out by the public authorities.[81] In determining therefore in any state the effect of general user the statutes of the state must be referred to, it being the general rule that even such statutes do not affect in any way the binding effect upon the dedicator of an acceptance by the general public.[82]

3. Acceptance by Legislature. Inasmuch as the general public in any state is primarily represented by the legislature of the state it follows that the legislature of any state expressly or by referring in the statute to a public use existing may accept such use in behalf of the general public or municipality[83] just

80. "The mere use by the public does not constitute the way a street or highway so as to cast the burden of keeping it in repair on the public authorities. As between the owner of the land and the public, prescriptive use or public use for longer than ten years bars the owner's right to close it up or to deny the use as a way. But the public acquire no right by such use to demand that the city shall keep it in repair, for the power to lay out, open and establish streets is vested by the organic law of the cities in Missouri, at least, in the city as a political subdivision of the State, and can only be exercised by the officers and in the manner specified in the charter of the city. Our government is a democracy, but a representative democracy. The people have themselves vested the power in certain city officers to acquire streets, but the people have not reserved to themselves, nor has such power been delegated to them, the power to acquire streets by user, nor by user to cast the burden of maintenance upon the city. The owner of the land may be barred by limitation, or estopped by acts in pais from claiming that the way belongs to him, but the city is not barred or estopped into accepting that as a public street which the officers authorized by its charter to speak on that subject, have never accepted or treated as a street." By orders and ordinances.—An order of the common council that "all streets . . . which have been dedicated by the owners thereof . . . are hereby accepted and declared to be public streets" is a sufficient acceptance of streets which have been dedicated by duly recorded deeds, without specifying them by name. Eureka v. Armstrong, 83 Cal. 623, 625, 22 Pac. 928, 23 Pac. 1085. But an ordinance by the city council declaring that certain land alleged to have been dedicated by the owner for a street, "be, and the same is hereby dedicated and set apart to public use as a public street" without referring to the owner or his alleged dedication is not an acceptance thereof. People v. Reed, 81 Cal. 70, 22 Pac. 474, 15 Am. St. Rep. 22. So it has been held that an ordinance of a city, general in its terms, accepting an addition thereto, is not tantamount to an act of its council approving and fixing the line of the sidewalk of a street marked by the dedicator in the plat of such addition. To have such effect, more than a general acceptance must be shown. It must clearly appear that the council intended to make the line indicated the line of division between the street and sidewalk. A statute of Iowa providing that no street or alley hereafter dedicated to the public use shall be under the use or control of the city council unless the dedication shall be accepted and confirmed by an ordinance especially passed for such purposes has been held not to prevent an acceptance by other acts than the adoption of a formal ordinance. Keokuk v. Cosgrove, 116 Iowa 189, 89 N. W. 983; Burlington, etc., R. Co. v. Columbus Junction, 104 Iowa 110, 73 N. W. 501; Taraldson v. Lime Springs, 92 Iowa 187, 60 N. W. 658; Byerly v. Anamosa, 79 Iowa 204, 44 N. W. 359, in which case it was held that where a city by ordinance has acquired a street to be improved and sidewalks to be constructed thereon and it has been used for many years as one of the principal thoroughfares of the city, the city is liable for any injuries resulting from its negligence in caring for it, although it has never accepted the street by special ordinance, in accordance with the statute. This case distinguishes Laughlin v. Washington, 63 Iowa 652, 19 N. W. 819, in which it was held that the reference of the matter of such a dedication by a city council to a committee to ascertain if the necessary requirements have been fulfilled, a report by them favorable to the acceptance, and an acceptance of the report of the committee by the council does not constitute an acceptance of the streets and alleys dedicated. In referring to this case, the court in Byerly v. Anamosa, 79 Iowa 204, 208, 44 N. W. 359, said: "There was no recognition of the existence, but only some uncompleted action of the city, begun with a view of determining whether the dedication of the street should be accepted."

Under the charter of a city of Michigan, requiring all resolutions or the council to be adopted by a vote of a majority thereof, a resolution accepting the dedication of a street which receives the affirmative votes of less than a majority of the council does not constitute a valid acceptance thereof. Gregory v. Ann Arbor, 127 Mich. 454, 86 N. W. 1013.

Under the Ohio act of 1852 an acceptance of a street by implication, passing ordinances for its improvement, is insufficient. tions will not be admissible, however, after the dedication has become irrevocable by acceptance.[18] So the declarations to be admissible must have been made by the owner while owner,[19] and must have been made by himself[20] or by his authority.[21]

(II) Acts of Dedicator. Acts of the owner are always competent on the question of intent to dedicate.[22] Thus the fact that the owner of land makes improvements upon his land which are in their nature public, as for instance fencing land and leaving a way through it,[23] laying out a road and allowing the public to use it,[24] constructing a sidewalk,[25] and making a canal through property for general use[26] are competent evidence on the question of dedication, and so is evidence of his erecting a hedge along an alleged way,[27] erecting a building fronting on a way with windows opening on it,[28] or extending a public street by filling in a bay.[29] On the other hand acts tending to show a continued dominion over his property, as where he erects a fence or gate across a road, alleged to be dedicated,[30] or keeps a building upon the property alleged to be dedicated,[31] incloses the land claimed to be dedicated,[32] puts up a sign or notice that the road is private property,[33] makes a conveyance of the premises about the time of the alleged dedication,[34] occupies the property[35] or pays taxes on it,[36] marks strips in a plat made by him as a "depot,"[37] makes conveyances reciting that the property claimed to be dedicated shall be kept open for the benefit of adjoining owners,[38] or objects to the use of his property by the public[39] are competent as tending to negative the intention to dedicate.

(III) Reputation. The intent to dedicate cannot be proved by witnesses who would testify as to what they or the public thought about the use and its creation.[40]

b. To Show Extent and Purpose of Dedication. When nothing appears in the act of dedication to indicate for what particular use the donation of land is made to the public, parol evidence is admissible to define and limit any purpose for which it was in fact devoted.[41]

c. To Show Acceptance. As has already been shown, acceptance by the general public can be proved only indirectly or by user,[42] while acceptance by the public authorities can be proved by legislative or municipal acts or by municipal user and recognition.[43] Acceptance of a dedication by the public cannot be shown by approving the declaration of citizens or inhabitants that they considered the property in question to be a public square.[44]

42. See supra, VI, C, 2.

43. See supra, VI, C, 4. and statutes of states,[46] records of courts,[47] ordinances and resolutions of municipalities,[48] resolutions and votes of corporations,[49] deeds, although in themselves insufficient to constitute a dedication,[50] maps and plats of all kinds,[51] agreements,[52] signs and notices,[53] circulars and advertisements,[54] and every conceivable kind of written or printed matter may be involved and found referred to in cases on dedication.[55] Writings may in themselves negative the intention to dedicate streets referred to,[56] and several deeds may make up one transaction and all be taken together.[57]

B. Burden of Proof. The burden of proof to establish a dedication is generally upon the party setting it up.[58] Thus if the city is seeking to establish a public use and take from another the possession of property the burden is upon the city to establish the dedication.[59] If on the other hand a dedication is set up, as in the case of trespass, as a defense, it must be proved by defendant.[60] The establishment of certain facts may, however, raise certain presumptions and shift the burden of proof.[61]

C. Presumptions. There is no presumption in favor of a dedication,[62] except perhaps in the case of ways of necessity.[63] There is a presumption in favor of the creation of an easement as against the vesting of a fee,[64] of public as against private easements,[65] and of a thoroughfare as against a cul de sac.[66] If the acts of dedication are proved,[67] or are presumed from user,[68] there is a presumption that the acts were the acts of a fully competent owner, unless the title or capacity is the gist of the dispute.[69] A user is presumed permissive and not adverse,[70] and proof of license never raises a presumption of an intent to dedicate.[71] There is a presumption of acceptance if the use is beneficial;[72] and a presumption against the dedicator that acceptance of a part is acceptance of the whole.[73] Lost records raise no presumption of a dedication,[74] nor do defective legal proceedings to establish ways.[75] An alteration in a plat is presumed to have been made before filing.[76] All such presumptions are rebuttable.[77] No presumption will arise which is inconsistent with the pleadings.[78]

D. Weight and Sufficiency — 1. In General. The ordinary rules of evidence in general apply to the proof of dedication.[79] In criminal suits, as in cases of indictments for obstructing ways, the dedication must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt,[80] but in civil cases a preponderance of evidence is sufficient.[81] Dedications being an exceptional and peculiar mode of passing title to interests in land,[82] the proof must usually be strict, cogent, and convincing and the acts proved must not be consistent with any construction other than that of a dedication.[83] A number of facts all consistent, although slight in weight, are sufficient to establish a dedication;[84] but evidence which is entirely inconclusive and contradictory must fail.[85] There seem to be some cases in which stricter proof is required than in others; for example stronger evidence is necessary to establish a local or timber road than to establish a thoroughfare between towns;[86] to establish acceptance to bind the municipal authorities than to establish acceptance to bind the dedicator;[87] to establish intent in case of a dedication for school purposes than in one where the dedicator may himself receive some benefit.[88]

2. Acts of Dedicator. A single act to be relied on as a dedication must be unequivocal,[89] but may be sufficient.[90] The mere failure to fence in one's land and thus prevent passage over it is of little weight to establish a dedication or an intent to dedicate.[91] So the opening of private ways is not sufficient evidence of intent to dedicate.[92] Placing and maintaining a gate across a road is not conclusive evidence of an intention not to dedicate the road to public use,[93] and is not inconsistent with an intention to so dedicate it.[94] But where the owners of land adjacent to a municipality lay it out into lots and make and file a map showing a street on a strip in which appears the word "reserved" an intent not to dedicate the strip is shown.[95] Intention to dedicate is not proved by evidence that the landowner left a strip of land vacant outside his fence.[96] Nor does the passive permission by the owner of lands to the use of them by the public sufficiently show an intent to dedicate them to such use,[97] even though continued for fifteen years.[98] So merely building one's house back of the building line is alone no evidence of intent to dedicate the strip left as part of the street.[99] And it has been held that evidence that a railroad company purchased land for the purpose of dedicating it to public use as a street, tore down the fences around it, and threw it open to public use does not prove such a dedication of it as to render the dedication irrevocable.[1] Where a map is insufficient to constitute a statutory dedication of the streets thereon, the fact that it showed certain lines along certain property claimed as the street without other evidence is insufficient to show an intent to dedicate.[2]

3. WRITINGS. Writings claimed to operate as a dedication may be conclusive upon the dedicator, as when he makes a statutory dedication[3] or a deed;[4] or upon the dedicatee, as when a statute or an ordinance accepts a dedication.[5] Or they may be simply evidence of intent or of acceptance.[6] Whether, when a dedication is implied from a deed, the presumption is conclusive or the deed is to be taken along with other evidence, is a question that raises some difficulties.[7] Where the grantee in a deed claims that through an implied covenant he acquired by the deed the right to have land open to public use, it is clear that no evidence can be offered to explain or vary the deed except in the case of a latent

6. As where a landowner puts up a sign "private way" (Durgin v. Lowell, 3 Allen (Mass.) 398; Daniels v. Almy, 18 R. I. 244, 27 Atl. 330); or a city passes a resolution to repair a certain street (Kennedy v. Cumberland, 65 Md. 514, 9 Atl. 234, 57 Am. Rep. 346).

7. "Where a party sells property lying within the limits of a city, and in the conveyance, bounds such property by streets designated as such in the conveyance, or on a map made by the city, or by the owner of the property, such sale implies, necessarily, a covenant that the purchaser shall have the use of such streets." Moale v. Baltimore, 5 Md. 314, 321, 61 Am. Dec. 276. The court proceeds on page 323 to decide that where a deed as above had been executed, the vendor had created an "easement or right of way, not only in [the grantee], . . . but in the public." This was a case where the street was being opened by condemnation, and no user or acceptance appeared. And yet the parties to the deed could have rescinded the implied covenant and thus destroyed the public right of user. Hall v. Baltimore, 56 Md. 187. In these cases the public's rights seem to depend upon the grantee's rights, until by acceptance the public has acquired rights of its own. Where the deed creates such an easement in the grantee it seems conclusive against the grantor, but where the deed does not in itself create such an easement it is not conclusive against the public. See Rich-

ambiguity.[8] Likewise where a statutory dedication is claimed the legal effect of the paper is solely a matter of law.[9] But where the question is raised by a person not as a party to the deed, who claims a common-law dedication and exhibits a deed to another as evidence of the dedicator's offer to create, or intention to recognize, a public use, then the dedication is purely a question of fact, in reaching which all other relevant circumstances may be considered without infringing the rule against varying writings by oral testimony.[10] The true rule therefore seems to be that where a deed is only one of the circumstances surrounding an implied dedication, all the other circumstances may be considered together with the deed, and the implication, if any, is an implication of fact.[11] Although an estoppel by deed including an implied covenant can operate only in favor of the grantee or his privies in estate,[12] and although an estoppel in pais can operate only when representations have been made to a legal person who has so relied upon them that it would be inequitable to allow them to be withdrawn,[13] the cases are so full of general references to "estoppel," that they seem almost to recognize that an estoppel can arise in favor of the general public, or that the general public can avail itself of an estoppel in favor of a legal person.[14] There are cases in which proof of the existence of a way on old maps and documents and its long user is said to establish a way by dedication,[15] but such a way may with equal propriety base its existence upon a presumed grant[16] or statutory establishment.[17]

4. USER — a. User For Prescriptive Period. A considerable number of decisions lay down the rule that user of land by the public for the prescriptive period of twenty years is sufficient of itself to create the presumption of a dedication or grant to the public,[18] but in order that the presumption may arise, the use must

10. This rule is analogous to the rule that where a contract is entirely in writing its meaning and effect is a question of law, but where it is made up partly by writing and partly by parol, its meaning and effect is a question of fact to be submitted to the jury in a jury case. See Edwards, etc., Co. v. Jasper County, 117 Iowa 365, 90 N. W. 1006, 94 Am. St. Rep. 301; Roberts v. Bonaparte, 73 Md. 191, 20 Atl. 918, 10 L. R. A. 689; Bolckow v. Seymour, 17 C. B. N. S. 107. But where the evidence consists of several documents the question seems to be one of law for the court, as where deeds called to "Payson street," and other streets "as mentioned on Poppleton's plat." The court said: "Standing by itself, without any other proof respecting its character, the intent to dedicate would be held to be patent on the face of the deed and conclusive of the question." But the court held that there was no dedication intended because this deed with another deed made out a case of partition. Baltimore v. White, 62 Md. 362, 369. The intention to dedicate may be shown by an agreement made by the grantee with the grantor that part of the land granted should be used as a highway, although in effect the deed is thus varied. be adverse — that is to say, under some claim of right, real or pretended,[19] and it must be exclusive,[20] with the owner's knowledge and acquiescence,[21] continuous and uninterrupted,[22] and exist for at least twenty years — the prescriptive period.[23] Other decisions, however, hold that user alone however long continued vests no right in the public.[24]

In Illinois it has been held that a continuous and uninterrupted use of a highway by the public for more than twenty years creates a prescriptive right to the use of the road. No mention of dedication was made in the case so holding. Lewiston v. Proctor, 27 Ill. 414. For Illinois cases basing a presumption of dedication on adverse user for the period prescribed by statute as necessary to bar an action for the recovery of real estate see infra, VII, D, 4, b.

In Maine the acquisition of public easements by dedication is distinguished from acquisition by dedication, but the same general result is reached in holding that in order to acquire a right of way by prescription the user must be adverse and continue at least twenty years. Mayberry v. Standish, 56 Me. 342.

In Massachusetts a highway may be proved by long and continued use and enjoyment by the public, upon the ground that a conclusive presumption arises from such use that it has been originally laid out or established by competent authority (Com. v. Coupe, 128 Mass. 63; Com. v. Belding, 13 Metc. 10; Folger v. Worth, 19 Pick. 108; Sprague v. Waite, 17 Pick. 309; Stedman v. Southbridge, 17 Pick. 162; Reed v. Northfield, 13 Pick. 94, 23 Am. Dec. 662; Com. v. Low, 3 Pick. 408; Com. v. Newbury, 2 Pick. 51), but the view is taken that ways by prescription and ways by dedication rest upon entirely different principles. The first is established upon evidence of user by the public, adverse and continuous for a period of twenty years or more; from which use arises a presumption of a reservation or grant, and the acceptance thereof, or that it has been laid out by the proper authorities, of which no record exists. The second is created by the permission or gift of the owner, and, upon the acceptance of such gift by the public authorities, it becomes a way and the owner cannot withdraw his dedication. Com. v. Coupe, 128 Mass. 63. It has also been declared that a public townway can be established only in the manner prescribed by statute, laying out by the selectmen, and a record of the establishment of such way cannot be presumed from user for any length of time. Com. v. Low, 3 Pick. 408; Com. v. Newberry, 2 Pick. 51. There are, however, decisions which seem to sanction the doctrine that a townway may under certain circumstances be proved by prescription, or by the presumption arising from user. See Com. v. Belding, 13 Metc. 10; Stedman v. Southbridge, 17 Pick. 162.

In England it has been held that dedication may be presumed from uninterrupted enjoyment for great length of time. Reg. v. East Mark, 11 Q. B. 877, 3 Cox C. C. 60, 12 Jur. 332, 17 L. J. Q. B. 177, 63 E. C. L. 877; Rex v. Lloyd, 1 Campb. 260, 10 Rev. Rep. 674. It has been held, however, that user is merely evidence of intent to dedicate, and that a single act of interruption by the owner is of much more weight upon a question of intention than many acts of enjoyment. 24. Thus in Louisiana, where there is a special statute on the subject providing that "discontinuous servitudes whether apparent or not, can be established only by a title," and that "immemorial possession itself is not sufficient to acquire them," mere user by the public of a road no matter how long continued does not establish any right in the public to the road. b. User For Period Prescribed by Statute as Bar to Real Action. A large class of cases hold that user by the public of land for a period equal to that prescribed by the statutes of limitation as a bar to actions for the recovery of land raises the presumption of a dedication or grant to the public.[25] The presumption so raised has in a number of cases been held conclusive to establish absolutely a right to an easement in the public.[26] Nevertheless to create any title in the public the use must be adverse and under a claim of right.[27] It must also be

In Delaware it is held that the public do not acquire an easement in land by user for the prescriptive period but that such user is evidence of dedication. State v. Reybold, 5 Harr. (Del.) 484.

In North Carolina there are decisions to the effect that in addition to user for the prescriptive period the proper public authorities must have exerted control over the land for that period State v. Fisher, 117 N. C. 733, 23 S. E. 158; Kennedy v. Williams, 87 N. C. 6; Boyden v. Achenbach, 79 N. C. 539. And see State v. Purify, 86 N. C. 681. These decisions it will be noticed are in conflict with earlier North Carolina decisions set out supra, note 18, in this section. "The continuous use by the people living in the neighborhood or in the State for a period of even sixty years does not deprive the owner of his right to resume control, nor does it devolve upon the properly constituted authorities of the county or the town, as the case may be, the duty with the incidental expense to the public of its reparation." State v. Fisher, 117 N. C. 733, 739, 23 S. E. 158.

In Virginia it has been held that where no public or private interests have been acquired upon the faith of the dedication, the mere user by the public of the supposed street or alley, although long continued, should be regarded as a mere license, revocable at the pleasure of the owner; unless there be evidence of an express dedication; or unless, in connection with such long-continued user, the way has been by the proper town authority recognized as a street, so as to give notice that a claim to it as an easement was asserted. exclusive,[28] with the knowledge and acquiescence of the owner, or so open and notorious that he will be charged with notice of the use,[29] continuous and uninterrupted,[30] and for a period at least equal to that which by statute is a bar to the recovery of real estate.[31]

c. User Under Special Statutes Relating to Highways. In a number of jurisdictions there are statutes specially providing for the acquisition and creation of public highways by user. As the decisions under these different statutes have not always been harmonious, each statute and the decisions arising thereunder will be considered separately. The Indiana[32] and New York[33] statutes provide that "all public highways which have been or may hereafter be used as such shall be deemed public highways." Under the Michigan statute providing that all roads not recorded which have been used as public highways ten years or more or which may hereafter be laid out and not recorded and which shall have been used ten years or more, shall be deemed public highways, it has been held that roads

"The theory of the law is, where proof of devotion rests upon user, that the essential intention existed at the beginning of the use, and continued through the whole period necessary to evince a conclusive dereliction, and thus the user for the whole time of limitation must necessarily be of right; therefore, user by mere license, which is subject at any time to revocation, will afford no foundation from which to presume the gift." Wood v. Hurd, 34 N. J. L. 87, 91.

32. Under the Indiana statute twenty years' adverse user by the public vests in it an absolute right to the highway of which the owner cannot divest the public. And this it is said is not because an intent to dedicate is conclusively presumed, but because the statute of limitations has divested all the owner's right by destroying his remedy. Marion v. Skillman, 127 Ind. 130, 26 N. E. 676, 11 L. R. A. 55.

It is the twenty years' use of a road that makes it a public highway regardless of its origin, and it is immaterial whether the use is with the consent or over the objections of the adjoining land-owners. Strong v. Makeever, 102 Ind. 578, 1 N. E. 502, 4 N. E. 11 [disapproving Greene County v. Huff, 91 Ind. 333].

33. Under the New York statute, the provisions of which are identical with those of Indiana, it is held that proof of user alone for twenty years is insufficient to show a road to be a public highway. The use must be associated with some act showing it to be a right independent of the will of the owner. The road must either be kept in repair or taken charge of by the public authorities. Lewis v. New York, etc., R. Co., 123 N. Y. 496, 26 N. E. 357; Speir v. Utrecht, 121 N. Y. 420, 24 N. E. 692; People v. Osborn, 84 Hun (N. Y.) 441, 32 N. Y. Suppl. 358;

may become public highways by mere user,[34] that highways so acquired are based upon an implied dedication by the owner,[35] and that user for this statutory period conclusively establishes dedication.[36] Under the New Hampshire statute providing that a highway used as such for public travel over it, other than travel to and from a toll-bridge or ferry, for twenty years, is a legal highway, adverse user of land by the public for twenty years is conclusive evidence of the right to so use the highway, not only as against the landowner but also as against the city or town to be charged with its maintenance or repair.[37] Under the Wisconsin statute which provides that "all roads not recorded which shall have been used as public highways twenty years or more and roads not recorded which shall hereafter be used ten years or more shall be deemed public highways," it has been held that a continuous and uninterrupted use of land as a highway during the period limited in the statute must be presumed, in the absence of proof to the contrary, to have been under claim of right and to create a prescriptive right in favor of the public,[38] and in the absence of an intent to dedicate the public acquires no rights by user for less than the statutory period.[39]

d. User For Such Length of Time That Interruption Would Affect Private Rights and Public Convenience. Where land has been used continuously by the public with the owner's acquiescence for such a length of time that private rights and the public convenience and accommodation will be materially affected by an interruption of the enjoyment a dedication will be presumed.[40] Under these cir-

Rule based on estoppel.— "This doctrine rests on the intelligible, rational, and wholesome principle of the common law, that, wherever a person has made representations, or pursued a line of conduct, with a view to lead or induce others to adopt a particular course of action, and such representations or conduct have produced that effect, they shall be held to be binding and conclusive against him, and he shall not afterwards be permitted to retract or repudiate them, to the injury of those who have been induced thus to act." cumstances no specific length of user is necessary to constitute a valid dedication.[41] It is not necessary that the use should be for the term of years necessary to presume a grant, but may be for a less term.[42] But the length of time of enjoyment is a fact for the jury to consider as tending to prove an actual dedication and an acceptance by the public.[43]

e. Public User of Private Way. Where the proprietor of land constructs a road over it for his own convenience, the mere user thereof by the public, by sufferance of the proprietor, no matter how long continued, will not show a dedication of the way to the public use or vest any right in the public to the way.[44] This is especially true where the intent not to dedicate is evinced by the maintenance of gates across the way,[45] and the proprietor can prohibit the use at any time or discontinue it altogether at his pleasure.[46] So where the owner of land grants a pri-

In applying this doctrine, it has been uniformly held that a way constructed merely to provide convenient access to the owner's place of business, as for instance to a railroad depot (Williams v. New York, etc., R. Co., 39 Conn. 509) or to a wharf (Lewis v. Portland, 25 Oreg. 133, 35 Pac. 256, 42 Am. St. Rep. 772, 22 L. R. A. 736; Irwin v. Dixion, 9 How. (U. S.) 10, 13 L. ed. 25) or to a store (Morse v. Ranno, 32 Vt. 600) does not become a public way from user by the public in going to and from such place of business. "A license by a business man to enter his premises, extended to the public to attract custom, and as an auxiliary to the promotion of such business, cannot be construed to be a dedication however long continued." Gage v. Mobile, etc., R. Co., 84 Ala. 224, 226, 4 So. 415. So also in applying the general rule it has been held that where adjoining landowners agree to reserve an alley between their premises for their own use, the fact that the same for years is open to the public use and that in several conveyances it is described as an alley will not make it a public easement (Illinois Ins. Co. v. Littlefield, 67 Ill. 368), and that the leaving a lane open through one's farm to accommodate his own premises and his neighbors' cannot be construed as anything more than a mere license revocable at any time (Coberly v. Butler, 63 Mo. App. 556; Jackson v. State, 6 Coldw. (Tenn.) 532).

"A different doctrine would have a tendency to destroy all neighborhood accommodation in the way of travel; for if it were once understood that a man, by allowing his neighbor to pass through his farm without objection over the passway which he used himself, would thereby, after the lapse of twenty or thirty years, confer a right on him to require the passway to be kept open for his benefit and enjoyment, a prohibition against all such travel would immediately ensue." vate right of way over his land to neighboring owners, the mere fact that it is used without objection by others going to and from their own lands does not establish a dedication.[47]

f. User of Uninclosed Wild Land. A distinction is very generally observed between the claim of a way through inclosed and cultivated land and of a way over uninclosed woodland.[48] It is very generally held that user by the public of uninclosed wild lands, no matter for how long a period it may be continued, raises no presumption of dedication and confers no right in the public as against the proprietor of the land.[49]

g. Necessity of User by General Public. While the uninterrupted use and enjoyment of land as a road or way by a limited number of persons for a sufficient length of time may establish a private right of way, it is manifest that no public easement would arise from such user.[50] In order to acquire a public easement the user must be by the public at large.[51]

h. Necessity of User Along Definite Line. In order that user by the public may create a way by dedication or prescription the travel must be confined to a definite and specific line.[52] No public easement can be acquired where the line of travel varies to a considerable extent,[53] or where the owner of the land himself frequently changes the position of the road or pass-way,[54] which fact itself

See 15 Cent. Dig. tit. "Dedication," § 24.

In Connecticut in case of uninclosed and uncultivated land, dedication by the owners can be found upon mere user of the road by the public; but the fact that land over which a way by dedication is claimed is uninclosed woodland ought greatly to weaken and often to overcome the presumption of an intention to dedicate to be derived from the use. Ely v. Parsons, 55 Conn. 83, 10 Atl. 499.

The mere failure to manifest an objection under such circumstances "does not authorize an inference that the mind of the owner consents. The inference in that case is that the proprietor did not understand that the land was being appropriated for the permanent use of the public as a highway." Wilson v. Hull, 7 Utah 90, 92, 24 Pac. 799.

"When the way passes over woodland, those who travel over it commit no trespass, (at least not until after notice to desist,) and subjects the owner to no loss or inconvenience. To prohibit them would be considered churlish; and would be ineffectual, unless a constant watch was kept to prevent them. And to require the owner to secure his land against an adverse claim, by a use not actionable, of a way over it, would to that extent, exclude his property from the protection of the law." creates the presumption that no right was claimed by others.[55] Nevertheless slight deviations in the line of travel leaving the road substantially the same will not destroy the rights of the public.[56]

E. Province of Court and Jury — 1. Questions For Court. It is the province of the court to instruct the jury what facts are relevant and what facts if believed by them would constitute a valid dedication,[57] and if the facts are undisputed it is for the court to decide whether there has been a dedication.[58] So where a statutory dedication is claimed it is for the court to construe the same and determine whether there has been a sufficient compliance with the statutes.[59] It is also for the court to construe and determine the effect of deeds, by which it is claimed a dedication must be made.[60]

2. Questions For Jury. The decisions very generally lay down the rule that the question whether an easement has been created by dedication is a question of fact to be submitted to and passed upon by the jury and not a mere question of law to be decided by the court,[61] provided of course the facts are not in dis-

Where the plat is not executed pursuant to the statute, but is used merely to show an intent to dedicate along with other facts and circumstances, it is not for the court to determine the force and effect of the plat, but the whole question should be left to the jury, by analogy to the rule that if a contract be shown partly by writing and partly by parol the entire question must go before the jury. The questions of the intention of the landowner, of the significance of his conduct in the premises, and of the public acceptance are addressed in a rather unusual degree to pute,[62] that is to say, the question of intent[63] the fact of dedication,[64] and the acceptance[65] are questions of fact to be decided by the jury. There are, however, cases which declare that the question whether dedication has or has not been made is a mixed question of law and fact to be found by the jury under directions of the court on consideration of all the circumstances of the case, and this is perhaps a more accurate statement of the rule.[66] It is also for the jury to determine the territorial limit and boundaries of the property dedicated.[67]

VIII. Operation and Effect of Dedication.

A. Construction of Dedication. In all cases the dedication must be understood and construed with reference to the objects and purposes for which it was made,[68] and effect given to the dedication to the full extent intended by the grantors.[69] Where a dedication is made by two instruments (a recorded public act and a map) they may be considered and examined together in order to determine the completeness and sufficiency of the dedication.[70] In determining whether property has been dedicated a plat of the town as originally laid out and recorded will prevail over a plat recorded and adopted by the legislature since the beginning of an action to determine the question.[71] Where a dedication is made by a plat the plat will prevail over a certificate annexed thereto in determining the location of the property.[72] If in making the dedication the dedicator uses words which have a well defined meaning, he is precluded, as is the dedicatee, by the meaning of such words.[73]

B. Right or Title Acquired — 1. Under Common-Law Dedication. Where the owner of property makes a common-law dedication, the ultimate fee remains unaffected thereby.[74] The effect of a common-law dedication is not to deprive a party of title to his land but to estop him while the dedication continues in force the plain common sense of a jury, to their knowledge of human nature, and their observation of the way things are ordinarily done. Morse v. Zeize, 34 Minn. 35, 24 N. W. 287.

uses intended by the dedication.[81] Under other statutes it has been held that the fee does not vest in the municipality, which takes a mere easement as in the case of common-law dedications,[82] and it has been held that, although a statute provides that the acknowledgment and recording of town plats as therein described shall operate as a conveyance in fee simple, the owner, in the absence of express prohibition in the statute, may reserve the fee in himself, and if the public authorities are not satisfied with the offer they may reject it.[83]

C. Territorial Extent and Limits of Dedication — 1. In General. If a street is dedicated by the platting of land into blocks and lots intersected by streets and the sale of lots with reference to the plat, the width of the street is that fixed by the plat or map, and the failure to open and improve the street for its whole width does not operate as an abandonment of the part not opened and improved.[84] So if a highway of a definite width has been commenced by an actual and recorded location by proceedings not strictly conformable to law the public after twenty years' user is entitled to a way of the width originally laid out, although the part traveled during that time may not have been so wide,[85] and where a public street becomes such by dedication followed by an acceptance by use, the location of the street as delineated by the stakes which were set in the act of dedication according to which the street was opened and used determines the lines of the dedication.[86] But where the right to a highway depends solely upon user by the public, its width and the extent of the servitude imposed on the land are measured and determined by the character and extent of the user, for the easement cannot upon principle or authority be broader than the user.[87] This does not mean, however, that the public will be confined to the precise portion of the soil on which the wheels of passing vehicles may run — commonly called the instanee by the vaeation of the plat or the entire and permanent disuse of the street by the publie and abutting lot owners.

"track."[88] In respect to length a conveyance of lots as bounding on a street laid out over the grantor's land on a public or private plat but not opened operates as a dedication of only so much of the land occupied by the street in either direction as will enable the grantee to reach some other opened or unopened public way.[89] If a dedicated street terminates on a river or other navigable body of water, the city may build a wharf at its termination,[90] and if by act of the dedicator the length of the street is increased by made land the extension also becomes subject to the easement;[91] but where the river-bed in front of a street by legislative authority is filled in and the land so made sold by the state, the street terminates at the high-water mark and the made land is not affected by the dedication.[92] If land on a navigable river is platted with a street parallel thereto a strip of land between the street and the river not embraced in the plat will not be considered as dedicated to the public use.[93]

2. As Affected by Accretion. Where land bounded by a watercourse is dedicated to the public use, all accretions to the land so dedicated become subject to the same easement and are held by the same tenure.[94]

D. Rights of Dedicator — 1. Right to Revoke Dedication. As already shown the effect of acceptance may be twofold: (1) If made by or on behalf of the general public it completes the dedication and binds the dedicator; and (2) if made by or on behalf of the municipality it not only binds the dedicator but also binds the municipality to its responsibilities.[95] As also shown a dedicator may be bound without acceptance (1) by a statutory dedication, owing to the terms of the statute; and (2) by a deed, owing to covenants, express or implied, therein contained.[96] Unless bound as above, the act of the dedicator is a mere offer which he may revoke either expressly or by implication if not accepted within a reasonable time.[97] By statute also in some states statutory dedications may be revoked or changed if no private rights are thus affected, and no rights used by the public or uses accepted and laid out by the municipality are impaired,[98] otherwise not only no private dedicator can take back his property,[99] but the same rule applies to the nation, state, and municipality.[1] Within the above rules non-user does not give the right to revoke.[2] Nor does a mistake[3] nor the failure or disappointment in the plans or expectations under which the dedicator acted.[4] But if there has been no acceptance, and the party is bound by statute, covenant, or estoppel, the dedicator may revoke with the consent of those whose private rights are affected.[5] This happens through reuniting the title, as when a dedicator having deeded a lot calling to a street deeds the street to the same person,[6] but even then it can happen only if other rights have not intervened.[7] If conditions precedent are to be performed the right of revocation continues till performance,[8] unless this is waived and the offer thus made absolute.[9] If a change in the offer is made before acceptance the same act is a revocation and a new offer of dedication.[10] By the death of the dedicator the offer is revoked by implication,[11] and likewise by his conveying the property dedicated.[12] But a dedication which is revocable can be revoked in whole or in part.[13]

2. Right of User. At common law as the dedicator retains the fee and the full right of enjoyment so far as this does not interfere with the dedicated use,[14]

Dedicator has mere naked legal title coupled with the possibility that use may be-

he still has his full rights in the soil, owning the minerals,[15] the gravel,[16] and his sewer pipes,[17] although laid after dedication.[18] On the surface he may pasture his cattle, gather the crops or fruits,[19] and even store his goods[20] or plow up the ground,[21] if these rights were reserved by him on making the dedication. He may also build over an alley or highway if this does not interfere with its use,[22] and the fact that the dedicated street abuts against his wharf does not destroy his right to collect wharfage.[23] The principles applicable in this respect to highways and strictly public uses are somewhat different from those applicable to quasi-public uses, like religious or educational uses, and even at common law it seems that a dedicator will have no rights at all while the use continues in property dedicated for such uses as a school or a graveyard.[24] The dedicator cannot do anything which would interfere with the reasonable use of the public for the purpose dedicated, as by turning a stream into the highway to relieve his own land of the water.[25] A railroad dedicating highways, but on the plat reserving a strip for its right of way as crossed by a highway, dedicates the crossing and cannot obstruct it with its depot;[26] on the other hand a railroad which so dedicates a crossing is not thereby prevented from adding an additional track on its way.[27] If by statutory dedication the fee has passed from the dedicator he has nothing (other than that which he may reserve),[28] but he has at most a future estate contingent upon the fees determining and reverting,[29] and no present right.[30]

3. Rights in Case of Condemnation of Dedicated Property. If the fee subject to the easement be taken by the state, municipality, or other corporation under the right of eminent domain, the owner of the fee, while he may have to pay benefits,[31] can be awarded nominal damages only, if the use be not changed.[32] It is very common for cities to condemn and open public streets after they have been dedicated for the public use, and so long as the use is not changed the dedi-

come impossible and his right of possession be restored. Mahoning County Com'rs v. Young, 59 Fed. 96, 8 C. C. A. 27.

The owner parts with this use only, for if the road shall be vacated by the public, he resumes the exclusive possession of the ground; and while it is used as a highway, he is entitled to the timber and grass which may grow upon the surface, and to all minerals which may be found below it. cator is not substantially injured.[33] The state or municipality has, however, no right to change the use without awarding compensation not only to the persons enjoying the use but to the owner of the fee upon which the use is an easement.[34]

The general rules as to the title taken by bona fide purchasers without notice apply when the encumbrance is a dedication to the public use.[43] Usually, however, the state of the property[44] or the records constitute notice by which the purchaser is bound, whether his knowledge of the easement be actual or not.[45]

F. Rights of the Public — 1. RIGHT OF USER. The general public, that is to say any and every one, has the right to use dedicated property to the full extent to which such easements are commonly used, unless there are reservations.[46] The public, however, takes the property as it is when dedicated, subject to the inconveniences and risks, and while ordinary obstructions can be removed and a way made smooth and clear,[47] no one has any rights against a dedicator on account of the condition of the property when dedicated.[48] Where there is a dedication of a public street across a railroad right of way, the public takes subordinate to the rights of the railroad company.[49]

2. RIGHTS IN SOIL. Members of the general public have no rights in the soil of dedicated land, and cannot remove coal, stone, or gravel therefrom.[50]

G. Rights of Municipality — 1. TO REGULATE AND DEFINE USE. The legislature or the municipality acting under legislative authority can apply the dedi-

So, where there is an apparent dedication of land for public use, the purchaser of the legal title could not defeat the right of the public. . . . It is reasonably certain that the Homestead Bank and Life Insurance Company dedicated the land to the public, and that a number of persons purchased lots expecting to enjoy the resulting advantage. However, nothing in the plan, or in the course of title or on the ground, was a warning to Ormsby Phillips of such dedication, and therefore he acquired a good title." cated property to all public and beneficial purposes consistent with the terms and purpose of the dedication and regulate the public user.[51] Within the limits of the purposes and uses for which the dedication is made its authority to regulate the use is unlimited.[52] It may also define the use where the property is dedicated for public purposes generally without specifying any particular use.[53]

2. To Enforce and Preserve Use. The municipality through its proper officers may maintain suits to enforce and preserve the use for which the property was dedicated.[54]

H. Rights of Creditors — 1. Ordinary Debts. Property dedicated to the public use, just as it cannot be alienated,[55] so it cannot be seized or sold for the debts of any person or corporation.[56] This is true of both common-law[57] and statutory dedications.[58] In the case of a cemetery company which had a remaining substantial interest in certain dedicated cemetery lots, although the point was made that its interest in these lots should be liable for its debts subject to the public uses declared, this was denied.[59] At common law ecclesiastical property could not be seized for debt.[60] In modern times the law relating to religious societies is somewhat complicated, and whether or not their property, which is in a sense dedicated to public use, can be alienated, mortgaged, or seized for debt involves special consideration.[61]

2. Taxes, Assessments, Etc. The liability of property dedicated to public uses to be taxed for general or local purposes, which liability is generally denied, is considered under other titles, as the fact that the public use was created by dedication does not affect the question.[62]

IX. ABANDONMENT.

A. What Constitutes — 1. In General. An abandonment may be said to occur, when the use for which the property is dedicated becomes impossible of execution or where the object of the use for which the property is dedicated wholly fails.[63] Merely collecting taxes on land dedicated is not an abandonment of the use,[64] and misuser does not constitute abandonment.[65]

2. Non-User — a. Before Acceptance. As already shown the general public can accept a dedication only by user, and one of the ways in which the state or municipality may accept is also by using or assuming jurisdiction over the subject of the dedication. Such acceptance must be within a reasonable time after the offer of the dedication, so that non-user may avoid a dedication as non-acceptance. But when the dedicator is bound otherwise by statute, by deed, or by estoppel the user may begin at any time. In a sense therefore there may be abandonment by non-user before acceptance.[66]

b. After Acceptance. After acceptance, or if acceptance be unnecessary, the effect of non-user raises questions of considerable difficulty. The non-user may be of three kinds. It may be a mere negative non-user accompanied by no acts showing intention of never using, and not complicated by actual user by some private party, which non-user all the authorities agree has no effect upon the rights of the public;[67] and the public may begin the user or the municipality may open

City property.— If a city is abandoned and the property reverts to the condition of a farm this will work an abandonment of the streets. Bayard v. Hargrove, 45 Ga. 342.

So where land is dedicated for a burying-ground, whether by a common-law dedication under which the fee remains in the owner, or pursuant to a statute under which the fee is vested for the county in trust for the purposes named only, the abandonment of the land as a burying-ground restores the former owner to his right of possession. Mahoning County Com'rs v. Young, 59 Fed. 96, 8 C. C. A. 27. And an abandonment also occurs where a graveyard has entirely disappeared, leaving no traces of burial lots, tombstones, or graves. Campbell v. Kansas City, 102 Mo. 326, 13 S. W. 897, 10 L. R. A. 593.

Where the owner of urban property, who has laid it off into lots, with streets, avenues, etc., sells such lots with reference to the plat, or with reference to a city plat which he adopts, his acts amount, as between him and the purchasers, to a dedication of the designated streets, avenues, and alleys to the public; but so far as the city is concerned, such acts amount to a mere offer of dedication, which may be withdrawn at any time prior to acceptance by the authorities of the city. for public use at any time if the dedication is complete and the dedicator is bound by acceptance, by statute, by deed, or by estoppel.[68] And it may be a non-user under circumstances showing no intention of ever using, because of the unfitness of the subject of the dedication, or because of its inutility to the public, and such non-user constitutes abandonment.[69] Again the non-user may be, as in cases where the subject of the dedication is openly held by a private party by inclosure, such as would be compatible in the case of private property with title in another by adverse possession.[70] It also may be of importance whether the non-user begins after user or whether there never has been any user at all, the implication of an intent to abandon in the former case being perhaps the stronger.[71]

3. SUBSTITUTION OF USE. Where the offer of an owner to change the location of a road or street over his property is accepted, this amounts to a dedication of the ground accepted for the new road or street and operates as a substitute of the new way for the old,[72] and where an owner of land adjacent to a highway encroaches upon or closes it and gives the public another way it will become a public highway by dedication on acceptance by the public.[73] So if travel diverges from a portion of a highway across one's land and the owner acquiesces in the user of the land taken to form the new portion of the highway he will be deemed to have dedicated it.[74]

B. Effect of Abandonment. Where the donees of dedicated lands fail or refuse to accept the dedication, the land reverts to the grantor as the title has never passed out of him.[75] In case of an abandonment after acceptance also the rights of the public therein fail and a reversion takes place, as the dedication has spent its force when the use ceases.[76] If land is dedicated for school purposes,[77] for a court-house,[78] for other public buildings,[79] for a park,[80] or for cemeteries or burial purposes,[81] the property so abandoned reverts to the dedicator or his heirs, and this is true whether the dedication is statutory or at common law.[82] In the case of streets or highways a different question is presented. As a general rule, where the dedication is made by map or plat dividing land into lots, streets, and alleys, and sales of lots are made with reference to such streets, the land included in the streets on vacation or abandonment thereof reverts to the owners of lots abutting thereon, the owners on each side acquiring title to one half of the width of the street,[83] unless the grantor in express terms reserved the right to himself in his deed conveying the lots or in his act of dedication.[84] So where a highway is laid out wholly on a person's land running along its margin and he conveys the land bounding it on the highway, the grantee is entitled to the whole of the land in the highway when it is abandoned.[85] Where, however, the owner of a strip of land conveys it by deed to a village in trust for the benefit of the inhabitants thereof, to be held and maintained for public streets only, the title to the land reverts to the owner on abandonment.[86]

In Illinois, on the abandonment of the streets, the property in the streets in case of statutory dedication will revert to the dedicator and not to the abutting lot owners as such. A conveyance of a lot abutting a street so dedicated does not carry title to the center of the street, but only to the street. Matthiessen, etc., Zinc Co. v. La Salle, 117 Ill. 411, 2 N. X. MISUSER OR DIVERSION.

A. Necessity of User For Purposes Specified in Dedication — 1. GENERAL RULE. If a dedication be made for a specific or defined purpose, neither the legislature, the municipality, nor the general public has any power to use the property for any other purpose than the one designated.[87] This can only be done under the right of eminent domain.[88] "Nothing can be clearer than that if a grant is made for a specific, limited, and defined purpose, the subject of the grant cannot be used for another."[89]

2. LIMITATIONS OF RULE — a. Change by Consent of All Parties Interested. In case all parties interested give their consent, the use for which the property is dedicated may perhaps be changed or destroyed;[90] but inasmuch as there are three parties interested in every dedication — the dedicator and his representative, the general public, and the property-owners with special interest, such as owners of lots abutting on streets,[91] no one of them without the consent of the others can change or destroy the use.[92]

b. Where Fee Is Vested in Municipality. Some decisions recognize a limitation of the general rule in respect to diversion or misuser and hold that if the fee of dedicated property is vested in the municipality by absolute deed, it may, if authorized by the legislature, discontinue the use, and apply the dedicated property to such purposes as it may see fit.[93]

B. What Constitutes Misuser or Diversion. Applying the general doctrine governing misuser it has been held that dedicated property cannot be sold,[94]

even though the proceeds be applied to other public purposes.[95] Nor can property dedicated for a public purpose be treated as private property of the municipality.[96] So property donated for a graveyard cannot be used for a park,[97] nor property dedicated for a church for a graveyard,[98] nor property dedicated for a park for a school-house.[99] So a jail or cesspool cannot be erected on property dedicated for a court-house,[1] and a "landing" cannot be obstructed by buildings.[2] So buildings,[3] water-tanks,[4] or scales[5] cannot be set up on a street, nor can a wall be allowed to encroach thereon,[6] nor can a steam railway be constructed upon land dedicated for a street.[7] And so it has been held that a railway cannot be constructed across land dedicated for a private square.[8] So an agreement giving an individual the exclusive privilege of maintaining and renting chairs in the public parks of a city, under which chairs were substituted by him for park benches located under the trees in the park compelling the public to hire the chairs or sit in the sun, is illegal and in derogation of public rights.[9]

C. What Does Not Constitute Misuser or Diversion. While as before stated there can be no diversion of the use for which the property is dedicated,[10] it may be put to all customary uses within the definition of the use.[11] All public dedications must be considered with reference to the uses for which they were made.[12] For instance telephone poles may be erected along a street;[13] sewers may be constructed under the soil of the street[14] and also water mains.[15] An electric railway may be constructed along a street,[16] provided the use does not occupy the street to the exclusion of ordinary travel.[17] If property is dedicated for a common, the building of a wharf thereon is not a diversion of the use.[18] So if property is dedicated for a public park, inclosure thereof and the planting of trees on the land so dedicated is not a diversion;[19] nor is the erection of a monument on a public square.[20] So the erection of a market-house on a public square in an incorporated town on which it was marked as it appeared on the map of the town "market" is not necessarily inconsistent with the purposes of the original dedication of the square,[21] and if land be dedicated for the "great square" of a town, a court-house can be erected thereon, if this is a customary use of such great squares.[22] If land is dedicated for burial and other purposes, user for other purposes than burial is permissible.[23]

D. Effect of Misuser or Diversion. As already shown misuser or diversion of the property to uses not contemplated in the dedication does not operate as an abandonment nor cause a reversion.[24] The only effect is that the misuser may be prevented and punished in appropriate proceedings.[25]

XI. ADVERSE POSSESSION.

It is generally recognized that "nullus tempus occurrit regi" and that no one can obtain title to property dedicated to public uses by adverse possession. The general public cannot lose or forfeit its rights by the neglect of its representatives or the unlawful acts of individuals.[26] But in some states by statute and in some by construction the rule prevails that public uses may be lost like private titles by adverse possession.[27]

XII. CONDEMNATION PROCEEDINGS.

The state, directly or through delegated powers, may take for a public use property dedicated to the public use, allowing compensation to the parties damaged thereby.[28]

XIII. PROCEEDINGS TO ENFORCE AND PRESERVE USE.

A. Who May Maintain — 1. The Dedicator and His Representatives. The dedicator, whether the dedication be statutory or at common law, has such an interest in the property dedicated as entitles him to enforce the uses for which the dedication was made and to prevent a diversion therefrom,[29] whether against the dedicatee[30] or some third person who is interfering with the use of the property for the purposes for which it was dedicated,[31] or against both acting in conjunction.[32] And in case of his death his representatives succeed to his rights.[33] The dedicator at common law retains the fee and has a right to enforce the specified use.[34] In the case of statutory dedications he has likewise the right to enforce the trusts.[35] If he is dead his heirs and devisees succeed to his rights at the time of his death,[36] and his grantees succeed to his rights expressly or by implication as abutting owners.[37] Parties to whom he has sold land covenanting for a public use have rights to sue upon the covenants,[38] and have besides a special interest in the maintenance of the public use.[39]

2. Persons Whose Rights of Property May Be Affected by Misuser. erty fronting on or adjacent to a public park or square have such special property interests as entitle them to maintain a suit for the enforcement and preservation of the use of the property as such,[41] and the same is the case with owners of lots abutting on streets.[42] So upon the application of members of a class interested in property devoted to religious or charitable purposes, such uses will be protected and upheld by the proper courts.[43]

3. Persons Without Special Property Interests to Be Affected by Misuser. According to some decisions the inhabitants of a town or city have such an interest in the use of the dedicated property, although not having any special property interests to be affected by a diversion of the use, that they may maintain a suit to enforce or preserve the use.[44] Other decisions, however, maintain the opposite view.[45]

4. Municipalities. The municipality in which the land dedicated is situated, as trustee for the public, may maintain proceedings to enforce and preserve the use.[46] Thus where lands are dedicated to the use of the inhabitants of a city or incorporated village for a public square, a bill may be filed in the name of the corporation to restrain the erection of a nuisance thereon or to protect the equitable right of the corporators to the use of the public square as such,[47] and it may maintain ejectment to recover possession of the dedicated property from any one wrongfully withholding it.[48]

5. JOINDER OF PARTIES HAVING DIFFERENT INTERESTS. The municipality and citizens thereof having property rights which may be injuriously affected by diversion or misuser of the dedicated property may join in a proceeding to enforce or preserve the use,[49] and it has been held that one who merely owns a lot in a village may join with the village in a bill to prevent any obstruction of the use of land dedicated for a public park.[50]

B. Who May Be Sued. Any person who obstructs a public use may be sued.[51]

C. Procedure and Pleadings. Outside of the questions relating to the proper parties to suits involving dedication, there are no special rules of procedure or of pleadings. The allegation of a private use may be supported by proof of a public use, as the latter includes the former;[52] but the allegation of rights as one of the general public will not support proof of rights as covenantee.[53] In setting up a dedication in pleadings it seems that it is not sufficient to allege merely the fact of dedication, but that the manner of dedication must be alleged and the facts upon which the claim of a dedication is based.[54]

A deed ex vi termini means a writing sealed and delivered. Hammond v. Alexander, 1 Bibb (Ky.) 333 [citing Worley v. Mourning, 1 Bibb (Ky.) 254].

To constitute a deed, the party executing it must accompany the acts of signing, sealing, and delivering, with the intention of making a deed. Hyman v. Moore, 48 N. C. 416, 418.

Coke says: "This word (deed) in the understanding of the common law is an instrument written in parchment or paper, whereunto ten things are necessarily incident: viz., First, writing. Secondly, in parchment or paper. Thirdly, a person able to contract. Fourthly, by a sufficient name. Fifthly, a person able to be contracted with. Sixthly, by a sufficient name. Seventhly, a thing to be contracted for. Eighthly, apt words required by law. Ninthly, sealing. And tenthly, delivery. A deed cannot be written upon wood, leather, cloath, or the like, but only upon parchment or paper, for the writing upon them can be least vitiated, altered, or corrupted." Coke Litt. 35*b*.

estate is transferred from one person to another.[22] A deed has also been defined by statute as every instrument in writing, by which any real estate or interest therein is created, aliened, mortgaged, or assigned, or by which the title to any real estate may be affected in law or equity, except last wills, and leases for one year or for a less time.[23] As a verb, to deed is to convey.[24]

2. DISTINGUISHED FROM OTHER INSTRUMENTS — a. Assignment. At common law an assignment differs from a deed in that it does not signify an instrument under seal.[25]

b. Title Bond. There is a difference between a deed for land and a title bond for land. The former is the evidence of an executed or consummated contract, the latter is the evidence of an executory contract.[26]

c. Will. If the instrument passes a present interest, although the right to its possession and enjoyment may not occur till some future time, it is a deed or contract; but if the instrument does not pass an interest or right till the death of the maker it is a will or testamentary paper.[27] The question is to be determined by the intention of the parties derived from the whole instrument.[28]

B. Deed Indented or Indenture. A deed indented or an indenture is a deed executed or purporting to be executed in parts, between two or more parties,

C. Deed Poll. A deed poll is a deed of one part or executed by one party only, instead of between parties and in two or more parts.[30]

II. PARTICULAR MODES OF CONVEYANCE.

A. In General. Conveyances are divided by Blackstone[31] into those at common law and those under the statute of uses. The former are original and primary,[32] or derivative and secondary.[33] Original conveyances are feoffment,[34] gift,[35] grant,[36] lease,[37] exchange,[38] and partition.[39] Derivative conveyances are

29. Burrill L. Dict.

"An indenture, in the language of the law, is a deed, that is, a writing sealed and delivered." Overseers of Poor v. Amwell Tp., 6 N. J. L. 169, 175. It is "a writing containing a conveyance, bargain, contract, covenants or agreements between two or more." Bowen v. Beck, 94 N. Y. 86, 89, 46 Am. Rep. 124 [quoting Coke Litt. 231*a*].

It takes its name from its being indented, or cut, on the top, or on the side, either by a waving line or a line of indenture, instar dentium, so as to fit or aptly join its counterpart, from which it is supposed to have been separated. Overseers of Poor v. Amwell Tp., 6 N. J. L. 169. The practice is now obsolete. Ratcliff v. Trimble, 12 B. Mon. (Ky.) 32.

30. Burrill L. Dict.

Distinguished from an indenture by having the edge of the parchment or paper on which it is written cut even (or polled, as it was anciently termed), that is, in a straight line, or plain, without being indented. This distinction, however, although once peculiar and essential, has in modern times become of comparative insignificance, in consequence of the disuse of the formality of indenting the other description of deeds. Burrill L. Dict. [citing Coke Litt. 229*a*].

A deed poll properly is made in the first person, and commences with that formula of address to all mankind so common in ancient written instruments: "Know all men," etc., that I, etc., have given," etc. Burrill L. Dict.

An instrument, in form an indenture, executed by one party only, if it contains the requisite clauses to pass the property described, will operate as a deed poll. Esson v. Tarbell, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 407.

31. 2 Blackstone Comm. 309–340.

32. Original or primary conveyances are those by means whereof the benefit or estate is created or first arises. 2 Blackstone Comm. 309.

33. Derivative or secondary conveyances are those whereby the benefit or estate originally created is enlarged, transferred, or extinguished. 2 Blackstone Comm. 309.

34. Feoffment or grant.— A feoffment, feoffamentum, is a substantive derived from the verb, to enfeoff, feoffare or infeudare, to give one a fend; and therefore feoffment is properly donatio feudi. It may properly be defined as the gift of any corporeal hereditament to another. He that so gives or enfeoffs is called the feoffor, and the person enfeoffed is called the feoffee. Although it may be performed by the word "enfeoff" or "grant," yet the aptest word of feoffment is "do or dedi." 2 Blackstone Comm. 310–317.

35. Gifts or donations.— Gift, donatio, is properly applied to the creation of an estate tail. It differs in nothing from a feoffment, but in the nature of the estate passing by it; for the operative words of conveyance in this case are do or dedi; and gifts in tail are imperfect without livery of seizin. 2 Blackstone Comm. 317.

36. Grants or concessions are the regular method by the common law of transferring the property of incorporeal hereditaments, or such things whereof no livery can be had. For which reason all corporeal hereditaments, as lands and houses, are said to lie in livery, incorporeal hereditaments passing merely by delivery of the deed. It differs but little from a feoffment, except in the subject-matter; for the operative words therein commonly used are dedi et concessi, "have given and granted." 2 Blackstone Comm. 317.

37. A lease is properly a conveyance of any lands or tenements made for life, for years, or at will, but always for a less time than the lessor hath in the premises, for if it be for the whole interest it is more properly an assignment than a lease. The usual words of operation in it are "demise, grant, and to farm let"; demisi, concessi, et ad firmam traditi. The consideration is usually rent or other annual recompense. 2 Blackstone Comm. 318–323.

Distinguished from "conveyance."— "A lease may be in a sense a conveyance, but such is not the commonly accepted nor the accurate meaning of the term. When we say premises are leased we generally mean that the use of them is transferred; and by the term conveyed that the title is deeded." Perkins v. Morse, 78 Me. 17, 18, 2 Atl. 130, 57 Am. Rep. 780. See also Hutchinson v. Bramhall, 42 N. J. Eq. 372, 7 Atl. 873.

38. An exchange is a mutual grant of equal interests, the one in consideration of the other. The word "exchange" is so individually requisite and appropriated by law to this case that it cannot be supplied by any other word or expressed by any consideration. But no livery of seizin is necessary. Hartwell v. De Vault, 159 Ill. 325, 42 N. E. 789; Anderson L. Dict.; 2 Blackstone Comm. 323.

39. A partition is where two or more joint tenants, coparceners, or tenants in common agree to divide the lands so held among them release,[40] confirmation,[41] surrender,[42] assignment,[43] and defeasance.[44] Other species of conveyances are a covenant to stand seized to uses;[45] bargain and sale, introduced by statute;[46] and lease and release.[47]

B. Feoffment. A deed will not operate as a feoffment where there is a want of seizin;[48] and the terms of an instrument in writing must clearly show that it was to operate as a conveyance, and where it does not and is for the exchange of lands, it will not operate by way of feoffment to pass a life-estate to one of the parties.[49] A deed, however, which is defective as a feoffment for want of proof of livery of seizin, may operate as a covenant to stand seized to uses.[50]

C. Covenant to Stand Seized. A covenant to stand seized to uses is an effectual mode of conveying lands, and by it a freehold may be conveyed to commence in futuro.[51] There must, however, be a consideration of blood or marin severalty, each taking a distinct part. Anderson L. Dict.; 2 Blackstone Comm. 323.

40. Releases are a discharge or a conveyance of a man's right in lands or tenements to another who hath some former estate in possession. The words generally used therein are "remised, released, and forever quitclaimed." Releases may operate by way of enlarging an estate; by way of passing an estate; by way of passing a right; and by way of entry and feoffment. Anderson L. Dict.; 2 Blackstone Comm. 324, 325.

41. A confirmation is of a nature nearly allied to a release. It is a conveyance of an estate or right in esse whereby a voidable estate is made sure and unavoidable, or whereby a particular estate is increased; and the words of making it are these, "have given, granted, ratified, approved, and confirmed." Anderson L. Dict.; 2 Blackstone Comm. 325, 326. See also 8 Cyc. 566.

42. A surrender is of a nature directly opposite to a release; for as that operates by the greater estate descending upon the less a surrender is the falling of a less estate into the greater. It is defined as a yielding up of an estate for life or years to him that hath the immediate reversion or remainder. The words used are "hath surrendered, granted, and yielded up." There is no occasion for livery of seizin. 2 Blackstone Comm. 326, 365. See also Welcome v. Hess, 90 Cal. 507, 27 Pac. 369, 25 Am. St. Rep. 145; Churchill v. Lammers, 60 Mo. App. 244; Buck v. Lewis, 46 Mo. App. 227.

43. An assignment is properly a transfer or making over to another of the right one has in any estate for life or years. It differs from a lease in that the whole property is parted with by an assignment. Anderson L. Dict.; 2 Blackstone Comm. 327.

44. A defeasance is a collateral deed, made at the same time with a feoffment or other conveyance, containing certain conditions, upon the performance of which the estate then created may be defeated or totally undone. Mortgages were formerly so made. Anderson L. Dict.; 2 Blackstone Comm. 327.

45. Covenant to stand seized to uses, is where "a man, seized of lands, in consideration of blood or marriage, covenants that he will stand seized of the land to the use of his wife, child, or kinsman, for life, in tail, or in fee." Anderson L. Dict.; 2 Blackstone Comm. 338.

46. Bargain and sale is a kind of real contract whereby the bargainor for some pecuniary consideration bargains and sells, that is, contracts to convey, the land to the bargainee, and becomes by such a bargain a trustee for, or seized to the use of, the bargainee; and then when the statute of uses completes the purchase, the bargain vests the use and the statute vests the possession. Anderson L. Dict.; 2 Blackstone Comm. 338. See also 5 Cyc. 615.

47. Lease and release was a species of conveyance invented for the purpose of transferring a fee. It supplied the place of livery of seizin and amounted to a feoffment. It was a bargain and sale upon some pecuniary consideration for one year made by the tenant of the freehold to the lessee or bargainee. This without any enrolment made the bargainor stand seized to the use of the bargainee, and vested in him the use of the term for a year, and then the statute immediately annexed the possession. He therefore being in possession was capable of receiving a release of the freehold or reversion and the next day a release was granted. Anderson L. Dict.; 2 Blackstone Comm. 339.

riage to support such a covenant.[52] It is not necessary to express any consideration;[53] and where there are both a money consideration and a relation of blood such a covenant may be raised[54] in equity.[55] There may also be a limitation over to one, in a deed of gift to another, which will be valid as a covenant to stand seized to the use of the former.[56]

D. Bargain and Sale. Any writing that sufficiently identifies the parties, describes the land, acknowledges a sale in fee of the vendor's right for a valuable consideration, and is signed and sealed by the grantor and duly attested is held to be a good deed of bargain and sale.[57] And the deed will be none the less valid because the words used[58] are those of quitclaim and release.[59] The deed may, however, be insufficient as one of bargain and sale because of the consideration, although it may operate as a covenant to stand seized under the statute of uses.[60]

52. Rollins v. Riley, 44 N. H. 9.

Such a covenant is raised by a conveyance in the form of a deed from a husband to a wife, even though it embraces personalty (Watson v. Watson, 24 S. C. 228, 58 Am. Rep. 247); by a conveyance to a son, operating as a covenant to stand seized to the grantor during his life and after his death to the use of his wife for life (Jackson v. Swart, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 85); by a conveyance to a son to operate to the use of the grantee (Sasser v. Blyth, 2 N. C. 259; Slade v. Smith, 2 N. C. 248) during life and for his children after his death (Borden v. Thomas, 28 N. C. 209); by a conveyance to children operating to their use (Barry v. Shelby, 4 Hayw. (Tenn.) 229); by a conveyance to a cousin (Dinkins v. Samuel, 10 Rich. (S. C.) 66); and a deed between two brothers that on the death of either the survivor should be his heir and take and enjoy his property is such a covenant (Fisher v. Streckler, 10 Pa. St. 348, 51 Am. Dec. 488). So an agreement by deed reciting that lands were purchased jointly "for promoting the joint interest of the parties by securing to them the timber on such land to be sawed into plank" will operate as a covenant on the part of each, to stand seized to the use of the other, or the individual use of the interest in the growing timber. Blackburn v. Baker, 1 Ala. 173.

Where a grantor for a good consideration conveys realty covenanting to hold it to the grantee, but recites that the grantee is not to interrupt the grantor's possession during his life, such recital is a covenant by the grantor for himself and his heirs to stand seized to the use of the grantee and his heirs on his death. A deed conveying for a certain consideration all the grantor's title and interest in the premises described, and covenanting to have and to hold such premises unto the grantee, his heirs and assigns forever, and signed by the grantor and attested by witnesses, is a good bargain and sale of the land. Sanders v. Hartzog, 6 S. C. 479.

A mortgagee in fee of lands executed a deed, granting and transferring his interest and estate in the mortgage and in the mortgaged premises to A, and making A his attorney to collect the mortgage debt, in the mortgagee's name, to A's own use, but not otherwise assigning in terms the said debt. It was held that the instrument was a deed of bargain and sale of the mortgaged premises, which passed the use to A, and that the statute of uses transferred to A the possession. Givan v. Tout, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 210.

58. Nelson v. Davis, 35 Ind. 474, holding that where the habendum was "unto them, the said B. and C., as trustees for the said D., and for her sole and proper benefit and behoof, and for no other purpose whatever, during the natural life of the said D., and at her death to descend to the children of the said D., if any she have, and if not, to her assigns forever," the instrument was a deed of bargain and sale.

Where, under a statute, the common mode of assurance is a deed of bargain and sale operating under the statute of uses, the words "bargains and sells unto the sole and separate use" of the grantee will mean in equity "bargains and sells unto" the grantee and to the only "proper use and behoof of" the said grantee. Pascault v. Cochran, 34 Fed. 358.

59. Holland v. Rogers, 33 Ark. 251 [citing Witter v. Biscoe, 13 Ark. 422].

E. Lease and Release. At common law a deed of release was operative only when made to a party in actual possession of the land,[61] a prior estate in possession in the releasee being necessary for a release to take effect.[62] But a release will be operative where there is a sufficient possession[63] or a constructive one.[64] And where such a deed is a substantive mode of conveyance the title will be transferred, notwithstanding an adverse possession at the time of execution.[65] But although neither the releasor nor releasee was in possession at the time of the release, it may operate as a confirmation of the first grantee's title;[66] or if made for a valuable consideration to one not in possession it may be construed to be any lawful conveyance by which the estate might pass.[67] Again the words "grant, bargain, sell, and convey" operate not merely to release but to transfer any interest which the grantor had in the granted premises at the date of the deed.[68] If, however, a deed cannot operate as a feoffment for want of seizin, it cannot operate as a release to enlarge the estate, for want of an estate in law in the releasee at the time of the execution of the deed.[69]

F. Quitclaim. Whether a deed is a quitclaim depends largely upon the words used, but it may be inferred, not only from the terms of the deed, but from the adequacy of the price given, and other circumstances showing the purpose of the instrument; and it is not to be determined by the mere omission of the covenant of general warranty of title.[70]

Hamblet v. Francis, 4 Mass. 75. And where one hired a parcel of marsh, mowed it and removed the hay, but exercised no other act of possession, a deed of release will be operative. Thacher v. Cobb, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 423.

A deed is a quitclaim where it employs the word "quitclaim" in connection with the words "bargain," "sell," etc., and expressly limits its granting effect to the "right, title, interest, estate, claim, and demand" of the grantor. Derrick v. Brown, 66 Ala. 162. A deed is also only a quitclaim which recites that the grantors grant, bargain, and sell unto the grantee all their "right, title, claim and interest in and to the following described land," etc., and that they do, for themselves and their "heirs and assigns, warrant and defend the same unto the said" grantee. Reynolds v. Shaver, 59 Ark. 299, 27 S. W. 78, 43 Am. St. Rep. 36. So a deed which contains the words "bargain and sell" is a quitclaim, where it conveys all the grantor's right, title, and interest in the property and not the land itself. Wightman v. Spofford, 56 Iowa 145, 8 N. W. 680. It is also a quitclaim where in the granting part the printed words, "forever a certain piece of land lying and being" were stricken out, and the words "all my right, title, and interest in and unto" were written in lieu thereof, the habendum being "the above granted and bargained premises." Cummings v. Dearborn, 56 Vt. 441.

A deed is not a quitclaim, but one of bargain and sale, where it declared that the grantor did thereby "alien, release, grant, bargain, sell and convey" to the grantee, his heirs and assigns, the "undivided one-half of all and singular the lands lying and being in the State of Oregon, granted or intended to be granted to the state of Oregon by the act of Congress," "to have and to hold all and singular the lands and premises hereby conveyed," and "all the right, title and interest" of the grantor therein. Ct. 465, 37 L. ed. 362. So a deed is an absolute conveyance and not a quitclaim, where by it the grantor assumes to "sell, alienate, convey, and quitclaim . . . the following described tract of land." Abernathy v. Stone, 81 Tex. 430, 16 S. W. 1102. Again a deed is not a mere quitclaim which contains the words "do hereby sell and convey unto" (Sibley v. Bullis, 40 Iowa 429); nor where it contains the words "have bargained, sold and quitclaimed, and by these presents do bargain, sell and quitclaim" "all our right, title and interest, estate, claim and demand, both at law and in equity, and as well in possession as in expectancy" (Wilson v. Irish, 62 Iowa 260, 266, 17 N. W. 511); nor where certain land is demised, released, and quitclaimed to a specified person, his heirs and assigns, containing a covenant that the land is free from all encumbrances made or suffered by him, and that he will warrant the same to the grantee, his heirs and assigns, against the claims and demands of all persons claiming by, through, or under the grantor but against none others (Bourque v. Chappell, 2 N. Brunsw. Eq. 187). From the language "'Do by these presents sell, convey, remise, release, and quit claim unto [etc.]' . . . we think it quite clear that the parties intended by this instrument to convey the land itself, and that it is not simply a quit claim deed." Garrett v. Christopher, 74 Tex. 453, 454, 12 S. W. 67, 15 Am. St. Rep. 850. And a deed is not strictly a quitclaim where the words "bargain, sell, and quitclaim" are used. Touchard v. Crow, 20 Cal. 150, 81 Am. Dec. 108.

III. REQUISITES AND VALIDITY.

A. In General. The requisites or essentials of a deed are: (1) Competent or proper parties;[71] (2) a proper subject-matter;[72] (3) a good and sufficient consideration;[73] (4) a written or printed form;[74] (5) sufficient and legal words;[75] (6) reading, if desired, before the execution;[76] (7) execution,[77] signing,[78] sealing,[79] and attestation;[80] (8) delivery.[81]

B. By What Law Governed. The law of the place in which the land is situate governs the transfer of the land;[82] but a deed will convey land in one state, although executed in another, according to the law of the state where made.[82]

The word "quitclaim" is of equivalent meaning with the term "release." Hill v. Dyer, 3 Me. 441, 445.

Deed from trustees will be valid, although grantors were not trustees in the year on which the deed was given, but became such the grantees, under a release and quitclaim, will take nothing where the grantor has no interest which he can convey.[89] Under a statute, however, so permitting, an after-acquired title may be conveyed, by a conveyance so executed as to have passed the grantor's estate when it was executed, had he then held the title.[90]

b. Seizin.[91] It is decided in several cases that one out of possession or actually disseized can convey no title to a stranger,[92] although the party making the conveyance has title.[93] Such a conveyance has, however, been decided to be good[94] as against the parties to it, whatever may be its operation as to third persons.[95] So a person having the seizin in law, but never the actual possession, can convey the same by lease and release, if no person has the actual possession at the time of the conveyance,[96] and the disseizin may be purged by entry so as to give operation to the deed.[97] So if the grantee is in possession, or the disseizor abandons his possession, and the grantee enters, a good title passes.[98] Again, although the grantor has been ousted, if the grantee was entitled to the conveyance under a prior contract with the grantor, the deed is valid.[99] It has also been decided in Maine that prior to the Revised Statutes a disseizor could make no valid title.[1]

Jackson v. Cadwell, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 622.

Conveyance is without consideration where plaintiff's wife, with intent to deceive him, promised to be a dutiful wife and requested that certain property be deeded to her, and stated that he might put the consideration at a certain sum which would show his interest in it, and relying upon her promises he deeded the property to her without other consideration. Basye v. Basye, 152 Ind. 172, 52 N. E. 797.

Although no consideration is expressed in a deed settling land in the wife's family, the estate will pass where the conveyance is made by a husband and wife, of her land, to trustees, by which deed an estate for life is given to their use during their joint lives, and then to such person as they should appoint. Ware v. Cary, 2 Call (Va.) 263.

because it wants a money consideration,[42] for it may exist as an exchange, a donation, or a pledge.[43] And a deed may be good for a special purpose, although for a nominal consideration and in trust.[44] Nor is actual payment[45] of a nominal consideration expressed in a deed essential.[46] Again deeds placed by the registration laws upon the footing of feoffments require no consideration to support them.[47]

3. SUFFICIENCY AND ADEQUACY IN GENERAL. Any valuable consideration, however small, will support a conveyance of land,[48] for the consideration need not equal the value of the property, especially where no creditor's rights are affected.[49] And where, as compared with the actual value of the property or interest received, the consideration is adequate, the deed will stand, whether such consideration be merely a valuable one,[50] or a valuable one coupled with pecuniary advances;[51] but it is decided that a meritorious consideration, as distinguished from a valuable one, is not sufficient to support the covenants of a deed.[52]

United States.— Holmes v. Holmes, 12 Fed. Cas. No. 6,638, 1 Abb. 525, 1 Sawy. 99; Walker v. Derby, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 17,068, 5 Biss. 134.

After grantor's death the transaction cannot be impeached for inadequacy of consideration, where there was no fraud or undue influence and the grantor had fixed the consideration. Keagle v. Pessell, 91 Mich. 618, 52 N. W. 58.

Inadequacy must be established as of the date of the contract. Pennybacker v. Laidley, 33 W. Va. 624, 11 S. E. 39.

In determining adequacy the value of property at the time of its conveyance and not at the time of the trial should be ascertained, where the action is to cancel the deed on the ground of fraud, false representations, and inadequacy. Wells v. Houston, 23 Tex. Civ. App. 629, 57 S. W. 584.

Possible litigation over the title of the grantor will be considered. Fagan v. Schultz, 73 Ill. 529.

That one tenant in common on a resale of his share obtained an increased price for it does not prove inadequacy of consideration, where a tenant for life of the undivided moiety purchased from the tenants in common their whole interest, including the reversion for a certain sum, and there was no evidence that the entire interest would have sold for more than that sum. Hamblin v. Bishop, 41 Fed. 74.

That the property was worth only two thirds of the price paid therefor is no ground for setting aside the sale, where the vendee, who was twenty-eight years old, examined the property before purchasing, and there was no evidence of fraud or undue influence, and the vendor offered to release him before the bargain was consummated but he refused to be released. Martinez v. Moll, 46 Fed. 724.

The case is not within the rule which sets aside an executed contract with an heir for mere inadequacy of price, where the vendor was not an heir expectant, but had a vested estate in half the land, and the remainder after a life-estate in the other half. Davidson v. Little, 22 Pa. St. 245, 60 Am. Dec. 81.

The sale will be set aside where the inadequacy, coupled with other circumstances of a suspicious nature, afford a vehement presumption of fraud (Wormack v. Rogers, 9 Ga. 60); where there are false representations and the consideration is grossly inadequate (Benter v. Patch, 7 Mackey (D. C.) 590); where the grantor was very old and feeble and survived but a few days, and the money consideration was not paid in the manner agreed, and the other consideration was that of support to be rendered (Collins v. Collins, 45 N. J. Eq. 813, 15 Atl. 849, 18 Atl. 860); where the grantor was eighty-two years old and he was induced while sick to convey land for half its value, taking unsecured notes in payment (Williams v. Longman, (Iowa 1899) 78 N. W. 198); or where there was a verbal promise to discharge a mortgage which the grantor was not obligated to pay, and a further verbal promise made by the grantee, who was executor under his father's will, that his stepmother might remain in the homestead during the rest of her life (Lamb v. Lamb, (N. J. Ch. 1892) 23 Atl. 1009).

Where there is inequality in the condition of the parties, a deed will be set aside for inadequacy of consideration. George v. Richardson, Gilm. (Va.) 320.

Extent and limits of rule.— Where it does not appear that the grantor expected any other consideration than the amount of one dollar, which was tendered, he cannot have it set aside for want of consideration. Rendleman v. Rendleman, 156 Ill. 568, 41 N. E. 223. If, however, the consideration given valid or meritorious consideration, will not be enforced in equity against the promisor or grantor or his personal representatives or subsequent voluntary grantees; and a fortiori it will not be enforced against subsequent grantees for a valuable consideration.[58]

6. Effect of Failure of Consideration. Failure of consideration is insufficient in law to avoid a specialty;[59] nor can failure to pay a nominal consideration be shown to avoid a deed;[60] nor is a party entitled to have his deed set aside and canceled simply because he has not received the full consideration.[61] The failure of consideration may, however, be governed by circumstances which will justify setting aside a deed.[62]

does not confer even an equitable right thereto upon the grantor, and the grantee knew the character thereof, the deed is without consideration. Austin v. Felton, 41 Fed. 161. So where the rights of third parties intervene the deed may be invalid for want of consideration or it may be shown as evidence of fraud. Howard v. Turner, 125 N. C. 107, 34 S. E. 229. Nor will anything pass under a deed without consideration where the grantor had previously executed and delivered a deed of the property to another. Stephenson v. Deuel, 125 Cal. 656, 58 Pac. 258. And a deed may be canceled upon a showing by the grantor, a married woman, that it is not authorized by statute and is without consideration, as where she transfers her separate estate to satisfy an obligation which she is under no legal duty to pay to one who is liable therefor. Vincent v. Walker, 93 Ala. 165, 9 So. 382. Again if the consideration is the transfer of property, which transfer the law prohibits, the conveyance will be set aside as being entirely without consideration. Steele v. Richardson, 24 Ark. 365.

In a court of common law want of consideration cannot be shown in avoidance of a deed. Taylor v. King, 6 Munf. (Va.) 358, 8 Am. Dec. 746.

Failure to deliver property agreed upon as a consideration does not invalidate the deed, but merely furnishes the grantor a right of action for the value of such consideration. Lake v. Gray, 35 Iowa 459.

The mere fact that an old woman who had deeded her home to her children on one occasion was dissatisfied with food furnished her when sick did not show a failure of consideration of the deed to give her kind treatment, care, and attention. Chadd v. Moser, 25 Utah 369, 71 Pac. 870.

Nor will a deed be set aside because all the money that the grantee agreed to pay in cash was not paid when the deed was made, where such present payment was waived. Wood v. Stedwell, 91 Iowa 224, 59 N. W. 28. Even though it is stipulated in the deed that it shall be void unless the purchase-money is paid at the specified time, the grantor is the only person who can take advantage thereof, and he may waive his right. Dougal v. Fryer, 3 Mo. 40, 22 Am. Dec. 458.

If, however, performance is not made a condition subsequent, a failure to perform on the part of the grantee will not warrant a cancellation. Downing v. Rademacher, (Cal. 1900) 62 Pac. 1055. Nor is it warranted by a mere breach of the grantee's promise constituting the consideration. Brand v. Power, 110 Ga. 522, 36 S. E. 53.

Deeds have been set aside for a failure to perform services constituting the consideration (Pironi v. Corrigan, 47 N. J. Eq. 135, 20 Atl. 218); for a failure of certain parties to join in a conveyance, under a proviso that all should join (Donnelly v. Rafferty, 172 Pa. St. 587, 33 Atl. 754); for a failure to obtain other conveyances where the understanding was that the deed should not vest ownership until such other conveyances were obtained, and it also appears that the purpose for

7. Effect of Seal. Although a seal imports a consideration,[63] it is decided that a seal is not conclusive evidence thereof,[64] and also that a conveyance under seal must to be valid show a consideration.[65] Nevertheless it is also determined that a deed under seal is valid between the parties without any actual consideration.[66]

Title to real estate cannot be transferred by parol. Crowell v. Maughs, 7 Ill. 419, 43 Am. Dec. 62.

Writing is necessary to convey a freehold or estate in fee (McCabe v. Hunter, 7 Mo. 355; Kneller v. Lang, 63 Hun (N. Y.) 48, 17 N. Y. Suppl. 443 [affirmed in 137 N. Y. 589, 33 N. E. 555]; Jackson v. Wendell, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 355; Jackson v. Wood, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 73); to pass an estate for life, even as against the grantor and his heirs (Stewart v. Clark, 13 Metc. (Mass.) 79); or to pass any interest or estate in land greater than an estate at will (Whitney v. Swett, 22 N. H. 10, 53 Am. Dec. 228). And a sale of growing timber to be removed is held to be such an interest as requires a writing. Olmstead v. Niles, 7 N. H. 522. But see Sterling v. Baldwin, 42 Vt. 306. A proper conveyance in writing according to the state laws is also necessary to pass the legal title to lands. Morris v. Harmer, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 554, 8 L. ed. 781. So a writing is one of the requisites to a valid conveyance of lands in Kentucky under a decision in 1832. Sicard v. Davis, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 124, 8 L. ed. 342. Again a man's handing to his wife his patent for a certain piece of land, with the intention that she shall take title thereby, is not a conveyance in law. Taylor v. Irwin, 20 Fed. 615.

Deed is necessary to transfer land held under a descriptive warrant and payment of purchase-money (Woods v. Lane, 2 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 53); and the right or title to a freehold estate cannot be transferred, released, or barred, but by deed (Miller v. Graham, 1 Brev. (S. C.) 448).

The object of the statute was to exclude all oral evidence as to contracts for the sale of land; and therefore any contract sought to be enforced must be proved by writing only. Brown Leg. Max. (7th Am. ed. 1875) 888.

69. 2 Blackstone Comm. 297.

Lands could be conveyed without a writing before 1816 under a Missouri decision (Moss v. Anderson, 7 Mo. 337); and evidence of the sale of a possessory interest in realty need not be by deed (Clark v. Gellerson, 20 Me. 18). So a corporation may transfer its equitable title to land to one of its officers who then holds the legal title, without execution of a written instrument, so as to vest such officer with a title superior to that vested in an attorney under a subsequent contract with the corporation authorizing him to sue such officer for the land and agreeing to give him half the land recovered. Tempel v. Dodge, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 42, 31 S. W. 686.

Legal title could not be acquired by parol before the statute of frauds. Lindsley v. Coats, 1 Ohio 243.

Parol release cannot prevail against a deed. Perry v. Clymore, 3 McCord (S. C.) 245.

A parol agreement to contribute land if others will erect a school passes a good title to those erecting it, and they are trustees, subject to the supervision of the courts. Martin v. McCord, 5 Watts (Pa.) 493, 30 Am. Dec. 342.

Under the Mexican law in vogue in California before its acquisition by the United State a parol sale of realty fully executed was valid as between the parties and passed the title. Cook v. Frink, 44 Cal. 331. But the requirement of that law that sales of real estate must be made before an escribano, or the judge of the first instance, was never in force in that state, although by custom there must have been a deed containing the names of the parties, the thing sold, the date of the transfer, and the price paid. Hayes v. Bona, 7 Cal. 153.

Under the Spanish law a deed was not necessary to convey the legal title. Any in-

2. Formal Requisites — Sufficient and Legal Words. Although there are certain formal parts [70] usual to deeds, yet it is not absolutely necessary that a deed should contain all these parts, it being sufficient that the matter written should be legally and orderly set forth, by words which clearly specify the agreement and meaning of the parties and bind them.[71] Nor is any prescribed form essential to the validity of a deed;[72] and a deed informally drawn will convey the fee.[73] Nor need the nature of the estate which the grantor had be set out.[74] So a defective deed will operate to convey as a release the fee to a grantee in possession to the exclusion of a subsequent grantee of the same land.[75] And a statutory provision as to what shall constitute a good deed does not imply that it cannot otherwise be made.[76] The preceding rules, however, do not preclude the necessity of using words of conveyance,[77] which are apt and proper,[78] expressive of an intention of the parties to be bound,[79] and sufficient to show an intention to convey.[80]

3. Premises — a. Generally. The premises may be used to set forth the names and number of the parties, the recitals explaining the operation of the deed and strument showing the intention of the grantor, whether under seal or not, was sufficient. Long v. Stapp, 49 Mo. 506. And title would pass under a parol assignment. Langlois v. Crawford, 59 Mo. 456.

70. Formal parts of a deed are the premises; the habendum; the tenendum; the reddendum; the clause of warranty; the cujus rei testimonium, comprehending the sealing; the date; and lastly the his testibus. Bacon Abr. tit. "Feoffment."

Deed may be good although it has no formal parts. Comyns Dig. tit. "Fait."

Any words, where the statute so permits, indicating an intention to transfer the estate, interest, or claims of the grantor will be a sufficient conveyance, whether they be such as are generally used in a deed of feoffment, of bargain and sale, or of release, irrespective of the fact of the possession of the grantor or the grantee, or of the statute of uses. Field v. Columbet, 9 Fed. Cas. No. 4,764, 4 Sawy. 523.

But an instrument, while not a deed so as to pass the legal title because not purporting to presently convey the title, but binding the obligor to make a deed on demand of the obligee, passes the equitable title, it being shown on its face that the obligor had already sold the land to the obligee, and that the consideration for it had been paid. b. Designation and Description of Parties — (i) Generally. Generally a deed is invalid which omits the names of either the grantor or the grantee;[82] and if a deed designates a person incapable of taking, it is void for want of a grantee.[83] Moreover the grantee should not be a fictitious person,[84] but a conveyance to and by a person under an assumed name is effectual to pass title.[85] If the deed in its entirety distinguishes the grantee from the rest of the world it is sufficient.[86] Nor is it indispensable that the name of the grantor[87] or that of the grantee be inserted in the premises,[88] or in the granting clause,[89] where such name appears in other parts of the deed,[90] or can be sufficiently and certainly ascer-

Y. Civ. Proc. 413). Again, where there is no grantee named in the granting part, the party named in the habendum

tained or supplied therefrom.[91] The description, however, should not be such as that the deed will be void for uncertainty,[92] although a latent ambiguity may be explained by parol.[93] The rule also applies that a false description in a deed, when there is enough otherwise to show the intention, will be treated as surplusage.[94] Again, if it can be ascertained from the deed who is intended, the deed is not vitiated by a mistake in setting out the name,[95] in describing the place of residence of the parties,[96] or in using the word "with" instead of "to" before the grantee's name.[97] And if names are idem sonans the insertion of one name for another is immaterial.[98] The omission of a middle name is also unimportant, as the law knows but one christian name in a conveyance;[99] and a grant may stand, even though the name of baptism is not given,[1] or the christian or surname is omitted.[2] Nor does an abbreviation in the grantee's name necessarily invalidate may take, and where the grantor is named as the grantee, the same rule applies as if no grantee were named in the premises. Irwin v. Longworth, 20 Ohio 581.

Where a deed, although containing the name of the person who paid the price and with whom the covenants were made, did not express the name of any grantee, and the habendum was to the "grantor" and his heirs and assigns forever, and the covenantee had entered and held possession several years, and afterward conveyed the land in fee, nothing passed by it. A deed is not void for uncertainty when it can be shown who is intended and that the grantees are parties capable of taking (Hogg v. Odom, Dudley (Ga.) 185); or where the grantee is so described that he may be made certain or discovered by proof aliunde (Wood v. Boyd, 28 Ark. 75); or where in the granting part the grantor is also named as grantee and the deed describes the grantor as the "party of the first part," and the grantee as the "party of the second part," with an habendum clause to the party of the second part (Irwin v. Longworth, 20 Ohio 581); or where in connection with the word "heirs" the word "grandchildren" shows that the former word is to be taken in the popular and not in its technical sense (Huss v. Stephens, 51 Pa. the conveyanee.[3] And a varianee in attaching a word to a name which is no part thereof will not vitiate, where it raises no doubt of the identity of the person and is readily accounted for.[4]

(II) Variance Between Signature and Description in Body of Deed. A deed signed and acknowledged by persons not named therein as grantors is not their deed;[5] and if it is signed and sealed by two only, one of whom is described in the instrument as grantor, it is the deed of that one only.[6] A deed signed by a part of those named in it is good as to those signing it.[7] And if one having the legal title gives a deed purporting to be exeeuted by his grantors, but it is in faet signed by third persons, the grantee acquires no legal title.[8] If the variance is between the name written in the body of the deed and the signature, or between sueh name so written and that signed, or in the acknowledgment, it may be generally stated that the deed is not vitiated if it sufficiently appears that the same person is intended,[9] especially where the error in deseription is clearly a blunder of the eonveyaneer.[10]

been held that, so long as creditors and bona fide purchasers are not defrauded, any words signifying an intention to sell or give land will pass the title.[25] If a specific purpose is intended, comprehending a beneficial use and enjoyment, words which describe that purpose will be sufficient.[26]

f. Description of Property[27]— (i) Sufficiency in General. Courts are not inclined to insist upon that accuracy of description in deeds inter partes as is required in sheriff's deeds or other transfers of property in invitum.[28] A deed, however, to be operative must contain some description or designation of the land intended to be conveyed.[29] A conveyance is also presumed to be made with reference to the state or condition of the premises at the time, and if the description is sufficient when made no subsequent change in conditions can invalidate it.[30]

(ii) General Rules and Principles. The want of a description of the subject-matter, so as to denote upon the instrument what it is in particular, or of a reference to something else which will render it certain, is a defect which makes the deed wholly inoperative.[31] A conveyance is also void if the description therein is too vague and uncertain;[32] but to have this effect the ambiguity must

If the deed makes clear what is granted it is not void for uncertainty. Pearse v. Owens, 3 N. C. 234.

That landmarks have become so obliterated by the lapse of time that the land cannot be located does not make a deed void for uncertainty. Nixon v. Porter, 34 Miss. 697, 69 Am. Dec. 408.

Uncertainty in starting-point.—A deed may be void for uncertainty in the place of the beginning of the boundaries (Pry v. Pry, 109 Ill. 466; Mann v. Taylor, 49 N. C. 272, 69 Am. Dec. 750); but a valid deed may be made without stating any natural object as being the beginning of its first line, if there be a boundary at the termination thereof (Wilson v. Inloes, 6 Gill (Md.) 121). The description will, however, be sufficient if such starting-point can be reasonably identified (Douthit v. Robinson, 55 Tex. 69) or ascertained from the entire description (Holston v. Needles, 115 Ill. 461, 5 N. E. 530; Chiniquy v. Chicago Catholic Bishop, 41 Ill. 148) or established by extrinsic evidence (Allen v. Sallinger, 108 N. C. 159, 12 S. E. 896); and in case of doubtful initial points, if one only will fit the description so as to cover the land that one will be sufficient (Wilkins v. Tourtellott, 28 Kan. 825).

Where only "a stake" fixes the beginning and all the corners, the deed is invalid. Barker v. Southern R. Co., 125 N. C. 596, 34 S. E. 701, 74 Am. St. Rep. 658.

appear on the face of the instrument.[33] The office of a description, however, is not to identify the land but to afford the means of identification, and when this is done it is sufficient.[34] Generally therefore any description is sufficient by which the identity of the premises can be established.[35] A conveyance is also good, if the description can be made certain within the terms of the instrument,[36] for the maxim, id certum est quod certum reddi potest, applies.[37] Extrinsic facts pointed out in the description may also be resorted to to ascertain the land conveyed,[38] and the property may be identified by extrinsic evidence, as in the case of records of the county where the land is situate.[39] Again where all the particulars in a description are essential, the description in the deed must agree with every particular or nothing will pass; but where they are not all essential, and it does not so agree, yet if there is sufficient to identify the estate granted the deed will be good.[40] If part of the description is proven inconsistent on being applied to the premises it does not vitiate the deed, the interest being apparent.[41]

(III) Manner of Designation. The property intended to be conveyed may be designated by the descriptive name of the tract[42] by which it is generally known,[43] or well known,[44] or can be identified,[45] or where there is no other tract

Description is insufficient or the deed is void, where it fails to specify the portion or tract out of which the land is to be taken (Hanna v. Palmer, 194 Ill. 41, 61 N. E. 1051, 56 L. R. determined that the granting part of a deed is not avoided by a defect in the exception.[69]

(VII) Reference to Other Instruments or Records, Maps, and Plats. It is not necessary that the description of the land be contained in the body of the deed. It is sufficient if it refers for identification to some other instrument or document, but the description must be contained in the instrument or its reference, express or implied, with such certainty that the locality of the land can be ascertained.[70] This rule applies generally to other deeds sufficiently identified;[71] a mortgage;[72] a sheriff's deed;[73] a patent;[74] recorded deeds;[75] government records;[76] records of the surveyors and of the general land-office;[77] an entry made in an entry-taker's office on a certain date and bearing a certain number;[78] and to a will.[79] The rule has also been held to apply to maps and plats,[80] including Illustrations.— If the land is so described that it can be ascertained, it will pass by deed, although some part of the description is false (Scofield v. Lockwood, 35 Conn. 425), and if an alternative clause is bad for vagueness, it will not vitiate the deed if the description is good without it (Wright v. Cochran, 3 Greene (Iowa) 507). So where a repugnant call by the other descriptive terms clearly appears to have been made by mistake the conveyance is not void. Glenn v. Malony, 4 Iowa 314. Nor is a true and certain description in a grant invalidated by the insertion of a falsity in the description, when by rejecting the erroneous part the conveyance can be supported according to the intention of the parties. Abbott v. Pike, 33 Me. 204. Nor will a deed be avoided because some particulars of the description are false or inconsistent, if it is sufficient to identify the premises. Wing v. Burgis, 14 Me. 111. And if the description is sufficiently certain as to the estate to be conveyed it will pass the estate, although it does not agree with the particulars of the description. Bosworth v. Sturtevant, 2 Cush. (Mass.) 392. So the fact that one of the lines if followed would not conform with the other boundaries so as to describe the land conveyed does not render the deed insufficient. Hoban v. Cable, 102 Mich. 206, 60 N. W. 466. And where a deed correctly describes the boundaries on three sides, the misnomer of a street on the fourth side is immaterial. Lochte v. Austin, 69 Miss. 271, 13 So. 838. Nor does a manifestly erroneous evidence.[98] A deed may therefore be valid and effective as to the portion of land properly described, although other portions are improperly designated.[99] But if the error is such that it does not come within these rules, and the property cannot be located or identified by following out the description, or if it is palpably inapplicable or designates no ascertainable land the deed will be void.[1]

(x) Clerical Errors. A clerical error in the description of the land will not vitiate the deed where the intent of the parties can be ascertained with certainty from the instrument when considered in connection with the situation of the parties and of the subject-matter.[2]

(xi) Blanks.[3] If lines, courses, and boundaries are left blank, there is such vagueness and uncertainty that the conveyance will be inoperative.[4] But a deed may be sufficiently specific to designate the subject-matter of a certificate purported to be conveyed, although the abstract and patent numbers and the volume are left blank where the recitals of the certificate subsequently issued supply sufficient to designate what was intended.[5]

4. Habendum and Tenendum. The office of the habendum, "to have," is properly to determine what estate or interest is granted by the deed; although this may be and sometimes is performed in the premises, in which case the habendum may lessen, enlarge, explain, or qualify, but not totally contradict or be repugnant to the estate granted in the premises. The tenendum, "to hold," is of little use.[6] statement of a monument defeat the conveyance, when the remaining description is sufficiently certain to locate the land. Benton v. McIntire, 64 N. H. 598, 15 Atl. 413. Erroneous mention of an incident in the history of the title to a piece of land is to be held to have no force as against the mention of metes, bounds, courses, distances, and visible monuments, when the question is whether the deed is sufficient in form to convey the land intended. Illustrations.— A deed is insufficient when it so misdescribes the land that after hearing parol proof to help out the description and rejecting the starting-point as given therein it is still a matter of conjecture where the land is located. Cunningham v. Thornton, 28 Ill. App. 58. And if property to which the grantor had no title is described without ambiguity in the granting clause, and further designated as "being the same premises formerly conveyed by" a certain other deed, which described property of the grantors, the deed is void. Cassidy v. Charlestown Five Cents Sav. Bank, 149 Mass. 325, 21 N. E. 372. And although a deed is not void upon its face, it is so when taken in connection with the fact that the particular lot fronted more than the specified feet on the street designated, and no particular part of it was known "as the property of said" J. Bernstein v. Humes, 71 Ala. 260. A conveyance is also void which describes the land as "the S. ½ of the N. E. ¼ of the S. E. ½ of section 19." Pry v. Pry, 109 Ill. 466.

Habendum is that part which declares and limits the use of the thing conveyed. Stockton v. Martin, 2 Bay (S. C.) 471.

Tenendum was sometimes formerly used to signify the tenure by which the estate granted was to be holden. 2 Blackstone Comm. 299.

When the premises in a deed are merely descriptive and mention no particular estate, a habendum clause, "to have and to hold," to a certain person and his heirs is good. Berry v. Billings, 44 Me. 416, 69 Am. Dec. 107.

This part of the deed may convey a fee-simple estate,[7] or the legal title as against trespassers.[8]

5. Terms and Conditions. The terms upon which the grant is made are: First the reddendum or reservation by which the grantor creates or reserves some new thing to himself out of what he has before granted; and secondly the condition or clause of contingency, on the happening of which the estate granted may be defeated.[9] A person cannot, however, by way of reservation, secure to himself a title in or to real estate of which he was not seized at the time of making the conveyance;[10] and a parol reservation of a life-estate by the grantor in an absolute conveyance constitutes him a tenant at will so long as he continues in possession.[11] Again a conveyance of land which is greater in extent than that reserved will not operate as a selection, where such reservation gives the right of selection and location.[12] If the estate is upon condition that the property shall revert to the grantor whenever it shall cease to be used for a particular purpose it is a determinable fee.[13]

6. Warranty and Covenants.[14] Under the clause of warranty the grantor, for himself and his heirs, warrants and secures to the grantee the estate granted. After the warranty covenants or conventions usually follow, which are clauses of agreement contained in a deed whereby either party may stipulate for the truth of certain facts, or may bind himself to perform or give something to the other.[15] A conveyance or assurance is, however, good without a warranty or personal covenants.[16]

7. Conclusion. The conclusion mentions the execution and date of the deed, either expressly or by reference to some day or year theretofore given. A deed is good, however, without a date, as it constitutes no part of the substance of a deed, and this is true as to a false or impossible date, where the real date when the deed was given or delivered can be proven, and a deed takes effect from delivery.[17] A blank may also be filled in for the date after execution without

8. Rector v. Erath Cattle Co., 18 Tex. Civ. App. 412, 413, 45 S. constituting such an alteration as will avoid the instrument.[18] If no blank is left for the date at the time of execution, it is immaterial that the deed was in fact executed on a day prior to the date which the instrument purports to bear.[19] So where some of the parties sign a notarial deed prior to the notary, the real date is that of the notary's signing it.[20] Nor is a deed vitiated by its bearing a date anterior to a patent of the same land.[21]

G. Execution[22] — 1. Mode and Requisites in General — a. Necessity of Execution. A conveyance deed should be executed in the name of the grantors.[23] It is not, however, essential to the validity of a deed that all the parties should execute it on the same day.[24] And such an instrument, although it purports to be made by several parties, but is executed by only a part of the grantors named therein, may be binding as to those who have executed it,[25] unless it appears that it was intended to be jointly executed.[26] Again, although a deed may be imperfectly executed, it may be good as a contract to convey so as to create an equitable estate in the purchaser.[27]

b. Execution in Blank. A deed executed in blank is void.[28] It has, however, been decided that a deed signed in blank but filled up when delivered is valid.[29]

c. Ratification of Defective Deed. A voidable deed may be rendered effectual by confirming the same prior to the intervention of the rights of third parties.[30] And an instrument which is void by reason of defective execution may be subsequently ratified by the grantor, subject, however, to certain limitations as to the manner of ratification.[31] Again, although a deed, executed in one state, of land

No. 11,822, 4 Biss. 445), by a subsequent deed confirming the prior one (Simmons v. McKissick, 6 Humphr. (Tenn.) 259. See Gouverneur v. Titus, 6 Paige (N. Y.) 347; Stokes v. Acklen, (Tenn. Ch. C.) 431), or by an authorization under seal to a third party to complete and deliver the instrument, which he does (Ingram v. Little, 14 Ga. 173, 58 Am. Dec. 549). But mere subsequent assent of the grantor is not sufficient to render a deed binding which is insufficient under the statute of frauds to convey lands. Wallace v. McCollough, 1 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 426. See Branham v. San José, 24 Cal. 585. It is not necessary, however, that an instrument which acknowledges or ratifies a deed previously made should be of the same formality as the deed situated in another state, may not be valid in the former state because the execution is defective under its laws, yet the instrument will be valid if subsequently duly executed under the laws of the state in which the land is located.[32]

d. Curative Acts. Defective execution of a deed may be cured by statutory enactment.[33]

2. SIGNATURES — a. Of Grantor — (I) In General. An instrument purporting to be a deed cannot be given effect as such where it is not signed by the grantors,[34] although it may not be essential to the validity of a deed that it be subscribed at the end thereof.[35] And an indenture of two parts, one part only being signed by one party, is good as against him.[36] Again a signing by mark may be sufficient.[37] And as between the parties and their heirs and assigns, a deed under private signature, acknowledged, has the same credit as an authentic act.[38]

(II) Erroneous Signature. The fact that a party's name is misspelled in the signature to a deed will not enable him to avoid the instrument where its execution by him is shown.[39] This is also true where he has signed by a wrong name.[40]

(III) Signing of Grantor's Name by Third Person. It is not essential to the validity of a deed that the grantor should actually affix his signature thereto with his own hand, but the deed will be binding upon him if the signature is affixed by another in the presence and at the request of the grantor.[41] And a deed will be binding upon a person as grantor, although his name was itself or that there should be more than one witness thereto by reason of the deed requiring two. Hadden v. Larned, 87 Ga. 634, 13 S. E. 806.

A deed ratifying a former defective deed will not affect a title acquired under a deed to a third person between the date of the original deed and that of the ratification. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Reed, 80 Fed. 234, 25 C. C. A. 389. And a confirmation of a deed, although it may be ineffective to validate such deed, may by its terms operate as a present conveyance. b. Of Grantee. Where a deed by which property is conveyed to the grantee, and which purports to be inter partes, is accepted by him the fact that it is signed and sealed by the grantor only will not render it void for want of mutuality, but it will be construed as the deed of both parties.[43]

c. Of Witnesses. A person who is unable to write may, by making his proper mark so as to identify himself with the transaction, become a competent attesting witness.[44] And the fact that a deed is not subscribed by the witness in the proper place may not invalidate the instrument, provided that it appears from the face of the deed that he subscribed it as an attesting witness.[45] And a difference in the middle initial of the name of the subscribing witness and that of the person by whom its execution is proved will be immaterial, where the one signing the instrument and the one proving it are identified as the same person.[46]

Where, however, the scroll was not recognized the instrument would be construed as a deed where the grantor had acknowledged the same in court as his deed for the purpose of where it is apparent from the terms of the instrument that it is his seal.[55] Again it may be sufficient to constitute an instrument a deed that a seal is affixed thereto, although the affixing of the same is not mentioned therein.[56] But a mere recital in an instrument that it is sealed, no seal or scroll, however, being affixed thereto, is not sufficient.[57]

attestation as to one of several grantors is not aided by a proper attestation as to the others.[63]

b. Competency of Witnesses. Where a statute provides that a deed shall be attested by a certain number of competent witnesses such statute will be construed as requiring an attestation by witnesses who are competent at the time.[64] It has, however, been held that in case a deed is attested by an incompetent witness, either through mistake or fraud, the defect may be supplied by a court of equity.[65]

c. Number of Witnesses. If it is provided by statute that a deed of land shall be executed in the presence of two or more witnesses it is essential to the validity of such an instrument that it be attested in the manner prescribed.[66]

One witness only may be sufficient if so provided by law. Kentucky Bank v. Jones,

But, although a deed may by reason of defective attestation fail to pass a legal title, yet it may operate to vest an equitable title in the grantee.[67]

d. Necessity of Request by Grantor. While a statute providing that a deed shall be proved by attesting witnesses imports that they must sign at the request of the grantor,[68] yet an attestation may be sufficient where persons, although not expressly requested by the grantor, write their names as witnesses in the presence and with the knowledge of both grantor and grantee and the deed is delivered to and accepted by the latter.[69] A person has no right, however, to make himself a subscribing witness in the absence of any request or knowledge on the part of the grantor, and after he has refused to acknowledge the deed.[70]

e. Presence of Witness. It is not necessary that the parties to a deed sign the same in the presence of the attesting witnesses, it being a sufficient execution if the former acknowledge the instrument in the presence of the latter.[71] Proof of execution, however, is insufficient where it does not appear that the grantor either signed or acknowledged the deed in the presence of the witnesses.[72]

5. Revenue Stamps — a. In General. A stamp is not essential to the validity of a deed delivered after the repeal of a stamp act, although the instrument was executed before such repeal.[73] And where a deed was made within the Confederate lines during the Civil war it was held not to be void for want of a stamp required by the United States laws.[74] Again the fact that a Mexican title document was written on unstamped paper is not fatal to its validity.[75]

b. Amount of. Where the amount of stamps required by the act is proportioned to the amount of the consideration money, the act will be complied with by affixing stamps according to the sum named in the deed, although the real consideration is such sum in gold which is worth more than the legal tender notes.[76]

c. Failure to Affix. The affixing of a revenue stamp to a deed is not essential to the validity of such an instrument.[77] operative and have binding effect from the time of its date, delivery is dispensed with.[82]

b. Sufficiency — (i) In General. A sufficient delivery takes place where a magistrate or notary who has drawn up the deed hands over the same to the grantee in the grantor's presence.[83] And a delivery by an attorney who has drawn up the deed may be sufficient.[84] Again, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, a deed will be held to have been signed and delivered where it was duly acknowledged.[85]

(ii) Delivery to Minor. The minority of a person to whom a deed is delivered does not of itself render the delivery ineffectual.[86]

(iii) Deposit in Post-Office. Depositing a deed directed to the grantee in the post-office has been declared to be a sufficient delivery.[87]

c. Intention as Affecting. The question of the delivery of a deed is generally one of intention of the parties, and it is essential to a valid delivery that there should be some act or declaration from which an intention to deliver may be inferred.[88] A formal delivery, however, is not essential;[89] nor are express words necessary.[90] Nor is a manual delivery of the instrument to the grantee required,[91] it being sufficient if it is apparent either from the words or acts of the grantor that it was his intention to treat the deed as his and to make a delivery of the same.[92]

d. Retention of Control or Possession by Grantor[93]—(i) In General. It is a general rule subject to certain exceptions herein given that a delivery of a deed to be valid must be such as deprives the grantor of the possession[94] and of the control of the instrument.[95] It has, however, been held that where a deed was intended to be considered as delivered it will not, as between the grantor and the grantee, be invalid for want of delivery, because of the fact that it remains in Illustrations.— This rule has been applied where a deed intended as a testamentary disposition of his property was retained in the grantor's possession (Patterson v. Snell, 67 Me. 559; Stilwell v. Hubbard, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 44); where it was found in the same envelope with the grantor's will (Miller v. Murfield, 79 Iowa 64, 44 N. W. 540); where it was placed in a trunk to which the grantor had access (Chadwick v. Webber, 3 Me. 141, 14 Am. Dec. 222; Hall v. Barnett, 71 Miss. 37, 14 So. 732; Duraind's Appeal, 116 Pa. St. 93, 8 Atl. 922); where it was deposited in a box with other papers of the grantor in a bank (Walls v. Ritter, 180 Ill. 616, 54 N. E. 565; Davis v. Williams, 57 Miss. 843); where it was put in a sealed envelope and deposited in a bank by the grantor in his name (Stout v. Stout, 28 Ind. App. 502, 63 N. E. 250); and where it was placed in a drawer in which other papers of the grantor, together with the grantor's possession.[96] Likewise there may be a sufficient delivery where the grantor by his acts or words expresses an intention to deliver the instrument and there is nothing to qualify the delivery.[97]

(II) Return of Deed by Grantee. The fact that after a deed has been delivered by the grantor to the grantee the latter returns it to the former merely for the performance of some act in connection therewith does not negative the previous delivery or operate as a surrender of the title thereby acquired.[98]

e. Possession by Grantee.[99] It does not necessarily follow from the fact that the grantee has possession of the deed that there has been a delivery of the instrument, for it may have come into his hands without any intent on the part of the grantor to make a delivery.[1] A delivery, however, by the recording officer, after it has been recorded, under the direction of the grantor is sufficient.[2] And there may be a good delivery where the grantee takes possession of the instrument in the presence, and without objection on the part, of the grantor,[3] or where it was left on the grantee's table by the grantor.[4] And the presumption of delivery arising from the possession of a deed by the grantee, into whose hands it has been placed without condition, is not overcome by statements made by the grantor, some time before the execution of the same, to the effect that he

the will, were kept (Lang v. Smith, 37 W. Va. 725, 17 S. E. 213).

98. Delivery is complete, although a deed is returned to have the signature of the wife of one of the grantors attached and a misdescription corrected (Hargrave v. Melbourne, 86 Ala. 270, 5 So. 285), to obtain a wife's relinquishment of dower (Brooks v. Isbell, 22 Ark. 488), to have the deed recorded (Austin v. Fendall, 2 MacArthur (D. Placing with other papers both of the grantor and the grantee, after delivery to the latter, coupled with the fact that it could not be found until after the death of the grantor, when it was discovered among other papers of both parties, does not affect the prior delivery. Reed v. Smith, 125 Cal. 491, 58 Pac. 139.

99. Presumptions arising from possession by grantee see infra, V, A, 7, f.

1. There is no delivery where the grantee takes possession of the deed as agent of the grantor for a special purpose (Dietz v. Farish, 44 N. Y. Super. Ct. 190), where it is delivered for the purpose of examination (Comer v. Baldwin, 16 Minn. 172; Graves v. Dudley, 20 N. Y. 76; Curry v. Colburn, 99 Wis. 319, 74 N. W. 778, 67 Am. St. Rep. 860. See Gould v. Wise, 97 Cal. 532, 32 Pac. 576, 33 Pac. 323; Lee v. Richmond, 90 Iowa 695, 57 N. W. 613), where he takes possession of it without the consent of the grantor (Lundy v. Mason, 174 Ill. 505, 51 N. E. 614; Major v. Todd, 84 Mich. 85, 47 N. W. 841), or where it is procured by force or fraud (Sauter v. Dollman, 46 Minn. 504, 49 N. W. 258).

When estopped to deny delivery.— Where the deed was deposited in a safe-deposit box to which both parties had access, and the grantee abstracted the instrument and used it to procure a loan on the property, the grantor was held estopped to deny delivery. intended making a deed to the grantee which was to be returned and destroyed upon the happening of a certain contingency.[5]

f. Conditional Delivery. A deed cannot be delivered as an escrow to the grantee,[6] and a delivery which purports to be such will operate as an absolute one.[7] This rule, however, applies only to those deeds which are upon their face complete contracts requiring nothing but delivery to make them perfect, and does not apply to those which upon their face import that something besides delivery is necessary to be done in order to make them complete.[8]

g. Time of Delivery.[9] It is generally essential to the validity of a deed that it should be delivered during the lifetime of the grantor.[10] But the validity of a deed cannot be objected to on the ground that it was not delivered until after it was recorded.[11] Nor can the creditor of a grantor object on the ground that a deed was not delivered until some time after it was executed, where it was taken

An exception to the rule has been held to exist where a deed is delivered to a third person with instructions to deliver the same to the grantee, to whom the deed is not given, however, until after the grantor's death (Colyer v. Hyden, 94 Ky. 180, 21 S. W. 868, 15 Ky. L. Rep. 101; Sneathen v. Sneathen, 104 Mo. 201, 16 S. W. 497, 24 Am. St. Rep. 326), and where one of several tenants in eommon, by whom a deed of land, for whieh the consideration has been fully paid, has been executed, dies, and the instrument is delivered by the other tenant or one to whom it has been intrusted for that purpose (Holt's Appeal, 98 Pa. St. 257). And a delivery of a deed has been held binding upon the heir of the grantor where with the consent of and under an agreement with the former a deed delivered as an escrow is after the grantor's death delivered to the grantee. by the grantee for a valuable consideration, in satisfaction of a bona fide debt, and in ignorance of his indebtedness to others.[12]

h. Co-Grantors and Co-Grantees. Where a deed is delivered to one of two or more co-grantees it will operate as a delivery to all.[13] And a delivery by the husband of a deed, executed by him and his wife, may operate as a delivery by the wife also.[14] But a delivery by a wife of a joint deed of gift by her and her husband of a homestead, the title to which is in her, has been held not to affect his right in the homestead where it was intended that there should be no delivery until after the death of both and she acted without his knowledge or consent in making the delivery.[15] And a delivery is incomplete where made by some of the parties only to a deed, which shows on its face that it was intended to be jointly executed so that all should be bound by its covenants.[16]

i. Ratification. A delivery of a deed to a stranger will be good where the grantee ratifies it.[17] And although a delivery is not authorized by the grantor, yet he may by subsequent conduct or acts ratify the same.[18] So a deed not valid to pass title may become valid by redelivery.[19] It has, however, been held that where a deed was void for want of delivery it cannot be validated by a subsequent deed given for that purpose.[20]

j. Questions For Jury. It is ordinarily a question of fact for the jury to determine whether there has been a delivery of a deed.[21]

2. Delivery to Third Person — a. General Rule. It is not necessary that a delivery of a deed should be made to the grantee himself, but it will be sufficient if it is delivered to a third person for the use of the grantee.[22] Such a delivery, the instrument to any one, there is no delivery to the grantee, and it is immaterial that he did deliver the instrument to the latter.[30] And the question of whether there has been a delivery may depend upon whether the scrivener acts as agent of the grantee or the grantor.[31] Again where a deed is executed in blank and given to an attorney merely to fill up there is no delivery of the instrument to the grantee where the former writes an acknowledgment thereon and delivers it.[32]

d. Conditional Delivery. Where a deed is given to a third person to hold until the performance of some act by the grantee or the happening of some contingency it does not operate as a delivery to the grantee.[33]

e. Delivery to Agent of Grantee. A delivery of a deed to a person having authority to receive the same in behalf of the grantee will be a sufficient delivery.[34]

f. Loss or Destruction of Deed After Delivery. The loss of a deed while in the possession of a third party to whom it has been delivered for the use of the grantee will not operate to defeat the delivery to the latter.[35] Nor can the title of a grantee under such a delivery be affected by a destruction of the deed while in the hands of a third party or before it is given to the grantee.[36]

g. Questions For Jury. It is a question for the jury to determine whether a grantor intended, in leaving the deed with his attorney, to deliver such deed to the grantee.[37]

b. Knowledge or Assent of Grantee. The fact that a person has executed and recorded a deed, where it is done without the knowledge or assent of the grantee, will not of itself operate as a delivery to the latter.[41] Nor will the mere delivery of such an instrument for the purpose of having it recorded, if done without the knowledge of the grantee, constitute a delivery to him.[42]

c. Retention by Grantor of Possession. The mere recording of a deed which the grantor thereafter retains in his possession does not, in the absence of other circumstances showing an intention by such act to deliver the instrument to the grantee, operate as a delivery to him.[43] of a deed implies its acceptance by the grantee, in the absence of fraud, artifice, or imposition.[48]

b. Where Delivered to Third Person. A delivery of a deed to a third person for the grantee's use will operate as a good delivery to the grantee where it is assented to or ratified by him.[49]

c. Where Delivered For Record or Recorded. The recording of a deed will not of itself constitute a delivery to the grantee in the absence of an acceptance by him of the instrument;[50] but if subsequently accepted the deed will be valid.[51] The same rule applies to the delivery of a deed for record.[52]

d. Mode and Sufficiency of. An acceptance of a deed need not be by formal or express words to that effect, but may be by acts, conduct, or words of the parties showing an intention to accept.[53] So there may be an acceptance by the retention of the deed by the grantee;[54] by an assertion of title by him;[55] by his conveyance of the property;[56] by acts of ownership generally in respect to the property;[57] or by bringing a suit on the deed.[58] And, although a deed does not actually pass from grantor to grantee, yet if there are words showing delivery and acceptance this may be sufficient.[59] But an acceptance after the death of the grantor is ineffectual to pass title.[60]

e. Effect of. A grantor is bound by a deed which has been delivered and accepted, although it was to have been signed by the grantee in order to bind the latter to the performance of certain stipulations therein.[61] And where a grantee accepts a deed delivered to a stranger for the former's benefit the acceptance relates back to the time of the original delivery, provided no rights of third persons are involved.[62] Again a grantee who has accepted a deed on the understanding that it is to be subsequently executed by the grantor's wife cannot be heard to say, on its execution by her, that he never accepted it.[63] And it has been held that a refusal of one of several grantees to assent to the conveyance does not operate to vest the whole property in the others, but that his share remains in the grantor.[64]

6. OPERATION AND EFFECT — a. In General. A deed becomes operative from the time of delivery to the grantee, and its operation cannot be affected by proof of any agreement in conflict with the plain terms of the instrument.[65] But the rights of third parties acquired before actual delivery to the grantee cannot be prejudiced by giving effect to an instrument transferring property even though recorded.[66]

b. On Grantor. A grantor cannot by any act subsequent to the delivery of his deed invalidate, alter, or affect the instrument.[67]

c. On Grantee. The title of the grantee becomes perfect upon delivery to, and acceptance by, him of the deed.[68]

d. On Delivery of Property. The execution and delivery of a deed by which the title and right of possession is transferred to the grantee is generally regarded as equivalent to livery of seizin and to give possession of the property conveyed.[69]

I. Amendment or Correction of Deed by Subsequent Instrument. Where there is no fraud and the rights of third parties have not intervened, and equity could have reformed the deed, it may be amended by a subsequent instrument so as to effectuate the intention of the parties.[70] This general rule applies to a mistake in the description,[71] and to a deed executed and antedated to replace a destroyed instrument, even though done without the grantee's knowledge.[72] In such case the grantee may be compelled to receive the new deed;[73] and the subsequent deed will operate as a confirmation[74] or as a deed of bargain and sale.[75] Nor is a new consideration necessary as against the vendor.[76] Such new deed may, however, constitute a single instrument and operate as a destruction of the original conveyance by consent.[77] But a subsequent deed will not operate as a confirmation of a deed which is void for uncertainty,[78] or for want of delivery, or through mistake in reciting the grantee's name.[79] And as against third parties an alleged defective deed can only be cured by a bill in equity, and not by a confirmation, assuming to relate back to the original deed.[80] If, however, a corrected deed is made pursuant to a decree, and no new rights are thereby affected, it will relate back to the date of the first conveyance.[81]

which case it may be avoided.[3] But so long as a grantor acquiesces in a deed executed by him while intoxicated it cannot be impeached by third persons on this ground.[4]

e. Deaf and Dumb Grantor. Want of capacity to execute a deed is not predicable upon the mere fact that a person has been deaf and dumb from his nativity.[5]

f. Forged Deeds. No title passes by a deed which is forged, as against one who did not participate in, or who had no knowledge of, the forgery.[6]

2. Mistake[7] — a. In General. Where a deed is executed under a mistake as to the rights of the parties a court of equity will set it aside.[8] But if a deed has been entered into in good faith by the parties thereto it will not be set aside because of a mistake of fact, where each party possessed equal information or equal means of acquiring the same.[9]

b. As to Property Conveyed — (i) Identity of. A court of equity may grant relief in the case of a misdescription of the property conveyed by rectifying the error.[10] It has, however, been held that equity will not interfere except between the original parties or those claiming under them in privity.[11] And the grantor and those claiming under him are estopped in a court of law from asserting that one tract of land was by mistake conveyed by the deed instead of another, the instrument being clear and definite upon its face.[12]

(ii) Amount of. A deed may be annulled and the sale rescinded where there appears to have been a mutual mistake as to the amount of property conveyed.[13] But where the fact is equally unknown to both parties or where each

Ignorance of fact is no ground for setting aside such an instrument (Abbott v. Dermott, 34 Ga. 227), nor a mistake in a computation of interest on bonds forming the consideration thereof (McElfatrick v. Hicks, 21 Pa. St. 402).

A mistake must be a mutual one or induced by fraud in order to obtain relief in equity. A petition to set aside a deed which merely alleges a mistake on the part of one of the parties does not state a cause of action. Benn v. Pritchett, 163 Mo. 560, 63 S. W. 1103. But see Werner v. Rawson, 89 Ga. 619, 15 S. E. 813, where it is held that while a court of equity will not reform a deed unless the mistake is a mutual one, yet it may rescind a deed in the case of a mistake of fact material to one party only.

A deed of so many acres "or more" may, although it appears that a slight excess of the has equal information in respect thereto or where it is doubtful that they have acted in good faith equity will not interfere.[14]

(III) Value of. A material mistake of fact as to the value of the property conveyed may be a ground for setting a conveyance aside.[15]

c. As to Title or Interest of Grantor. A deed may be set aside where there has been a mutual mistake as to the title or interest of the grantor in the property conveyed.[16]

d. As to Contents or Provisions of Deed. Where a voluntary conveyance is executed by a person, and by reason of a material mistake therein the instrument is not that which the grantor intended to execute, it may be set aside by a court of equity.[17] So relief in equity may be granted where a conveyance in fee has been obtained either by fraud or mistake, from one who believed he was executing a conveyance for life.[18] But where a trust deed accomplishes in a general way the objects which seem to have been desired, and there is no evidence that the instructions of the grantor were not followed, a bill to set the instrument aside, on the ground that it did not conform to the grantor's directions, will be dismissed.[19] Nor is it sufficient ground to set aside a deed that it is ineffectual to convey title as to part of the lands described therein, the grantee having accepted such deed, but neglected to examine it.[20] And it is not conclusive that the wife's name was inserted in a deed as grantee by mistake from the mere fact that her husband paid most of the purchase-money.[21]

e. Signing in Ignorance of Contents. A party cannot avoid a deed executed by him on the ground that he signed the same in ignorance of its contents, where number named was contemplated, be set aside where it appears that the number of acres is so greatly in excess of that named as to have materially affected the contract, unless it appears that the hazard or gain or loss was intentional and entered into the contract. O'Connell v. Duke, 29 Tex. 299, 94 Am. Dec. 282. See also Read v. Cramer, 2 N. J. Eq. 277, 34 Am. Dec. 204.

A slight clerical error as to the number of acres conveyed will not be a ground for annulling a deed, where it appears that such error is corrected by reference to another deed in which the boundaries are correctly described. Brown v. Holyoke, 53 Me. 9. Nor will an alleged mistake in the representation as to the boundaries of the land conveyed be a ground for rescinding the sale, where the price was reduced by the grantor in order to settle a dispute as to its boundaries. McCormick v. Jones, 22 S. W. 881, 15 Ky. L. Rep. 215.

Where land is sold in gross, a court of equity will not in the absence of fraud allow an abatement for a deficiency, or compensation for an excess, but may set aside the deed where the deficiency or excess is the result of a mutual mistake. Hansford v. Chesapeake Coal Co., 22 W. Va. 70.

But there can be no relief in equity where land is sold without a warranty under a mistaken belief of title in the grantor, the real fact being equally unknown to both parties and each having equal means of information, and there being no fraud. this is due to his own carelessness or negligence.[22] And one who is illiterate and unable to read cannot avoid a deed on this ground where he did not require that it be read to him.[23]

f. Mistake of Law. It is a general rule that a court of equity will not grant relief against a deed on the ground merely of a mistake of law[24] in the absence of fraud, imposition, or undue influence.[25] But where a mistake was induced and encouraged by the grantee and the grantor parted with his property for an inadequate consideration relief may be obtained.[26] And a court of equity may grant relief in the case of a deed which is executed to carry out an agreement and by reason of mistake as to its legal effect fails to conform to or effectuate such agreement.[27]

only fraud, however, which can be pleaded at law is that which goes to the execution of the deed.[30] So a deed cannot be set aside on the ground of fraud in procuring the same in the absence of proof of acts or representations of the grantees or of their agents which were deceptive and false.[31] Again such relief will not be granted unless the party seeking it was injured by the representations.[32] Applying these principles, fraudulent misrepresentation or concealment of material facts in respect to the title to the property conveyed,[33] its situation,[34] character,[35] quantity,[36] or value, whether the act is that of the grantor[37] or the

c. Suppressio Veri. Whenever suppressio veri or suggestio falsi occurs, and more especially both together, they afford sufficient ground to set aside any release or conveyance.[43]

d. Intention as Affecting. If a material misrepresentation is made, upon the faith of which a party relies and acts, it will be ground for setting a deed aside without regard to whether the party making such representation knew it to be true or false.[44]

e. Mental Weakness and Old Age. Mental weakness on the part of the grantor, where coupled with fraud or fraudulent misrepresentation on the part of the grantee, is a sufficient ground for setting aside the instrument.[45] It is not necessary that such weakness amount to an entire incompetency to contract, provided it appears that it was taken advantage of to procure a conveyance by fraud.[46]

This rule applies where ample opportunity to examine the property is afforded the parties (Miller v. Craig, 36 Ill. 109); where the grantee assisted in the survey and could easily have ascertained the number of acres (Wier v. Johns, 14 Colo. 493, 24 Pac. 262); where the vendee relied on the statements of one who negotiated the purchase for him (Walker v. Casgrain, 101 Mich. 604, 60 N. W. 291); where the grantee fraudulently represented that the property had been sold for taxes, that the title was worthless, and that there were no buildings on the land, and the true value of the land could have been discovered by the grantor by inquiry or inspection (Carlton v. Rockport Ice Co., 78 Me. 49, 2 Atl. 676); and where one had full opportunity to examine the goods in exchange for which he conveyed the land (Adams v. Pardue, (Tex. Civ. App. 1896) 36 S. W. 1015).

The rule that if one has not used means at his hands to learn the truth he cannot have relief has been held of no avail to a defendant where plaintiff was at a disadvantage in the transaction (Stack v. Nolte, 29 Wash. 188, 69 Pac. 753) or where the grantor lived in a distant state and had no immediate means of learning the truth (Matlack v. Shaffer, 51 Kan. 208, 32 Pac. 890, 37 Am. St. Rep. 270).

Mere passive silence has been distinguished from active concealment, it having been held that the former, without fraudulent purpose and in the absence of some confidential and fiduciary relation, is no ground for setting aside a deed. f. Of One of Several Grantees. Fraud of one of several grantees in a deed whereby the instrument is procured will render it void as to the others, although without the privity of the latter.[47]

g. Of Persons Occupying Confidential Relations to Grantor. Where one occupying a confidential relation to another takes advantage of this relation and by fraud, fraudulent misrepresentation, or concealment procures the execution of a deed by the latter the instrument may be set aside.[48] This is true in the case of a deed so procured by the confidential adviser of the grantor in business affairs;[49] or by his agent,[50] attorney,[51] physician,[52] or priest.[53] And this principle also applies where the execution of a deed has been so procured by the husband,[54] the wife,[55] the parent,[56] the child,[57] the brother,[58] the brother-in-law,[59] the son-in-law,[60] the stepfather,[61] the uncle,[62] or the nephew[63] of the grantor. however, prima facie procured by fraud from the fact that the parties are near relatives.[64] Nor does friendship between the parties create such a presumption, although it may be considered in connection with other facts and circumstances in determining whether the instrument was induced by fraud.[65]

h. Of Third Person. An action to rescind a deed will not be sustained merely because of fraudulent representations by a third party who did not act under the authority of defendants,[66] and in which they neither participated nor had notice.[67] If, however, the grantee is a party to the fraud the deed may be set aside.[68]

i. As to Future Events or Actions. The violation of a parol contemporaneous agreement inconsistent with the terms of a deed will be no ground for setting the instrument aside where no trick or device to deceive or mislead the grantor into executing the same has been shown.[69] It has, however, been held that where there is an intent to create a belief that it was as a fact the intention to do a certain act and the representation in respect thereto was understood as asserting that fact a charge of fraud may be based thereon,[70] unless it appears that the consideration for the deed was valuable and adequate.[71] And where a person standing in a fiduciary or confidential relation to another procures a deed from the latter, there being either an inadequate or an entire want of consideration, the grantee promising to perform some act, his failure to perform the act will be a constructive fraud,[72] and a deed so procured may be set aside, the confidence of the party having been abused.[73]

j. Representations of Opinion or Law. An expression of opinion, in the absence of any other facts or circumstances showing fraud, although made to induce the execution of a deed, will be no ground for cancellation.[74] Nor will a misrepresentation as to the legal effect of a deed amount to fraud of which a court of equity will take cognizance.[75]

If executed in good faith and no improper use is contemplated by the parties a deed will not be set aside as fraudulent because third parties have made an improper use of the instrument. Smith v. Espy, 9 N. J. Eq. 160.

When deed may be set aside.— A deed executed by a married woman to a creditor of her husband on the latter's false representation that if such conveyance were made the creditor would advance sufficient money to save him from financial ruin may be set aside, although the creditor did not participate in the fraud (Sistare v. Heckscher, 15 N. Y. Suppl. 737 [affirmed in 18 N. Y. Suppl. 475]), as may also a conveyance purporting to be in consideration of love and affection for the grantees, who are children of the grantor's husband by a former marriage, where by misrepresentation on the part of the husband the wife was induced to make the conveyance (Trippe v. Trippe, 29 Ala. 637).

Although mere ignorance of law is generally no ground for avoiding a deed, yet if it is coupled with other elements going to mis-

k. Rights of Grantee as Against Creditors of Grantor. A deed which is executed for a valuable and adequate consideration, the grantee having no knowledge of any fraudulent intent on the part of the grantor, will be upheld against the creditors of the grantor, however fraudulent his purpose.[76]

4. Duress — a. In General. A deed will be void in equity where given under duress.[77] A deed, however, is not necessarily void because given under restraint, but it must appear that the restraint was illegal.[78]

b. Of Wife by Husband. A deed executed by a wife under the coercive influence of her husband will be void.[79] Duress, however, must be clearly proved.[80] And, although a deed may have been executed by a wife under coercion, yet she may be bound thereby where there are subsequent acts on her part showing acquiescence therein.[81] Again a grantee cannot, in the absence of any fraud, inadequacy of price, or notice on his part be held responsible for intimidation by the husband of the grantor.[82]

c. Duress of Goods. Duress of goods of the grantor may be sufficient to render the deed void.[83]

d. Threats. A threat may constitute duress.[84] But in order to avoid a deed on the ground of duress per minas the threat should be such as to strike with fear a person of common firmness and constancy of mind.[85]

e. Suits or Threats to Sue. A threat to sue on a good cause of action does not constitute such duress as will avoid a deed.[86]

84. Harshaw v. Dobson, 67 N. C. 203, where it was held that a threat of a judge to send a person to jail if he did not accept Confederate money in payment, and execute the conveyance, constituted such duress as rendered the deed void.

f. Violence or Threat Thereof. A threat to inflict some physical injury upon a person if a deed is not executed may be sufficient to avoid a deed executed in fear thereof.[87]

g. Imprisonment, Criminal Prosecution, or Threat Thereof. The restraint must be unlawful to constitute duress by imprisonment.[88] And a deed executed under pressure of a threat of lawful arrest of a person justly amenable to criminal prosecution is not executed under duress.[89] But a conveyance of land made by a wife under the influence of threats of a criminal prosecution against her husband if she refuse to do so may be avoided by her where the grantee received the deed with actual knowledge of such threats, although taking no active part therein.[90]

5. Undue Influence and Confidential Relations — a. In General. A deed will be void where procured by undue influence.[91] The undue influence, however, must be such as to overbear the will of the grantor to the extent of preventing voluntary action on his part,[92] fair argument and persuasion alone not amounting such appointment do not amount to duress sufficient to avoid the deed, unless it appears that a state of insanity has been produced thereby. Brower v. Callender, 105 Ill. 88.

Threats made a considerable time prior to the execution of a deed do not amount to such duress as will avoid the instrument, the grantor in the meantime having had disinterested advice. Rendleman v. Rendleman, 156 Ill. 568, 41 N. E. 223.

The execution of a deed under duress is not shown by the fact that the grantor had been severely whipped by a mob and driven from the county, it appearing that the grantee was not in any way implicated in the outrage and that he paid the price asked. Talley v. Robinson, 22 Gratt. (Va.) 888.

An agreement not to prosecute a husband for embezzlement of the funds of a bank if the wife will execute a deed, followed by the advice and urging of her husband and brother, who did not represent the bank, that she execute the same, is held not to amount to duress, although the consideration might have been the compounding of a felony. Compton v. Bunker Hill Bank, 96 Ill. 301, 36 Am. Rep. 147.

A deed may be canceled where executed by a wife to procure the release of her husband from a criminal prosecution which has been commenced against him on a false charge and for the purpose of inducing her to execute the deed, it being also represented to her that he committed the offense. Treadwell v. Torbert, 122 Ala. 297, 25 So. 216. to undue influence.[93] So personal solicitation by a child for a conveyance, especially where the other children have received similar deeds,[94] or mere improper influence will not be sufficient where they do not amount to fraud.[95] Again it must appear that the undue influence was exercised at the time the act referred to was done.[96]

b. Mental Weakness of Grantor. If there is reason to believe that influence has been acquired over a person of weak mind the transaction will be carefully scrutinized in equity.[97] And wherever, as a result of age, sickness, or other cause, there is a great weakness of mind, not amounting to total incapacity, in a person executing a conveyance, and it appears that there was either no consideration therefor or a grossly inadequate one, the conveyance may be set aside by a court of equity upon a proper and seasonable application made either by the injured party or his representatives or heirs.[98] But the mere fact that a person is weak-

Consideration of support, although sufficient in some cases to sustain a deed where there is no evidence of undue influence minded, provided there is not an entire want of capacity, will not avoid a deed by him to one in whom he had great confidence, where it appears that it was executed without solicitation and that the grantor was in no way unduly influenced.[99]

e. Last Sickness of Grantor. Undue influence will not be presumed from the mere fact that a deed was executed by the grantor while in his last sickness.[1] But where the grantor's will power has become weakened from severe or long continued sickness and he is unable to resist importunities and influences brought to bear, so that the conveyance is not his free and voluntary act, it will be void as executed under undue influence.[2]

d. Influence by Third Person. Where a deed is procured by undue influence it may be set aside without regard to whether the influence was exercised by the grantee or a third person, where no valuable consideration has been paid therefor.[3]

e. Influence Obtained by Immoral Conduct. A deed may be set aside where it is procured as the result of an influence obtained by the use of unlawful means or immoral conduct.[4]

f. Particular Confidential Relations. It is not a sufficient ground to set aside a deed that there existed at the time of its execution a mutual confidence in business relations and a general friendship justified by the past relations of the parties, where it does not appear that the consideration was inadequate,[5] or that there was undue influence over, or want of capacity on the part of, the grantor.[6] Nor does the mere fact that the grantee was the medical adviser of the grantor

Although want of independent advice may be a ground for setting aside a deed to an attorney, agent, or trustee, in those cases where the parties are seeking to obtain some advantage for themselves, yet if the deed is one not for their benefit or at their solicitation, but in trust for a benevolent or charitable use it will be sufficient that the grantor had ample opportunity to obtain such advice, and fully comprehend the nature of the act, and that it was voluntary. at the time the deed was executed show undue influence.[7] And no trust or confidential relation between the parties is created by the relation of a boarder in the family of the grantee so as to affect the validity of a deed by the former to the latter.[8] But if a person occupying a confidential relation to another, whether as guardian, agent, or otherwise, avails himself of his information and exercises his influence, acquired by virtue of such relation, to procure a conveyance from the other without an adequate consideration it may be set aside.[9] So equitable relief may be obtained where a deed has been procured under such circumstances by a spiritual adviser,[10] attorney or solicitor,[11] or one who possesses the confidence of the grantor by reason of their business relations,[12] such as agent and confidential adviser.[13]

g. Deeds to Relatives — (i) In General. The influence which a grantee may have exercised over a grantor by reason of their being relatives does not of itself invalidate a deed;[14] and in such a case where a voluntary conveyance is understandingly made by the grantor it may be sustained,[15] although at the time he was in a weak physical condition.[16] Nor will a deed which the grantor knowingly and intentionally executed be set aside merely because of such influence as the grantee may have had over him by reason of the partiality or special affection[17] of the latter for the former, as in the case of a favorite child or nephew,[18] or the devotion and affection of a grantor for a brother,[19] unless it appears that there has been an abuse of the confidence reposed.[20] Nor will arguments addressed by a child to a parent or appeals to the latter's conviction of right-doing constitute undue influence;[21] nor the fact that a parent executes a deed with reluctance and after repeated urging, he being in full possession of his faculties;[22] nor an inequality in the division of the grantor's property among his children.[23] But if a party takes advantage of the confidence which another has reposed in him and of his influence over such person, and by deception or improper influence induces him to part with his property without an adequate consideration, relief may be obtained in equity.[24]

A deed may be set aside where so procured (Frizzell v. Reed, 77 Ga. 724; Thornton v. Ogden, 32 N. J. Eq. 723; Case v. Case, 49 Hun (N. Y.) 83, 1 N. Y. Want of independent advice.— A deed procured from a mother of advanced age by her son for whom she had great affection, which was not intended to take effect until her death, may be set aside where it contained no power of revocation or reservation of a life-estate and was executed by her without any independent advice as to the effect thereof. Martling v. Martling, 47 N. J. Eq. 122, 20 Atl. 41.

Where expectation of future support is the only consideration shown for a deed to a sister, it has been held that, in view of the grantor's capacity having been somewhat affected and of the relationship of the parties, and the fact that the grantor has parted with his property on an understanding, unenforceable under a code provision, that an agreement not to be performed within a year shall be invalid unless in writing, the conveyance should be set aside as secured by fraud and undue influence. this rule applies in the case of a deed to one standing in loco parentis.[26] Direct proof that undue influence was used is unnecessary where its exercise may be inferred.[27]

(III) To Husband or Wife. If a deed to a husband or wife has been procured by undue influence it may be set aside.[28] A deed, however, to a husband or wife will be sustained where it appears that the transaction was entirely consistent with honesty and good faith and that no advantage was taken of the grantor,[29] who was of sound mind and capable of contracting,[30] and acted understandingly in making it.[31]

6. Illegality — a. In General. A deed is void where founded on an illegal consideration, as in the case of a conveyance given to procure future cohabitation.[32] So a conveyance by a married man induced by the fraudulent representations of the grantee that she would marry him on his securing a divorce and that the conveyance was necessary to stop her children's opposition will be set aside.[33] And a conveyance is held to be founded upon a valid consideration, where given in satisfaction of illegal claims taken up by the grantee at the request of the grantor.[34]

b. Collusive Divorce. Although an agreement for divorce is collusive, yet a conveyance executed by a father to his children for their support in pursuance of an agreement to that effect entered into in connection with the proceedings will not be rendered invalid.[35]

Illustrations.— Undue influence by a husband is not shown by a conveyance to him by his wife pursuant to an agreement that he should devise his estate to her so that the survivor should have the whole. Sparks v. Sparks, 94 N. C. 527. So a threat of the wife that she will leave her husband, who is intemperate and ignorant, if he does not deed his property to her, where it also appears that he had been afraid to do so lest she should turn him out of doors, is not sufficient to show that a deed in trust for himself and her was executed under undue influence or duress. c. Compounding Felony. The fact that the consideration of a deed is an agreement to compound a felony is held not to invalidate the instrument.[36]

7. Effect of Invalidity — a. In General. A deed is voidable only and not absolutely void by reason of the fact that the grantor was non compos mentis at the time of its execution,[37] the conveyance being made before an inquisition and finding of lunacy.[38] So a deed procured by fraud is voidable only;[39] and the same is true of a deed procured under duress.[40] Where a deed is voidable merely it may be disaffirmed either by entry on the land, by a written notice of disaffirmance, by a subsequent conveyance, or by any other act equally declaratory of such an intention.[41]

b. Bona Fide Purchaser. In those jurisdictions where the rule prevails that a deed procured by fraud is only voidable, a subsequent bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration without notice is not affected by such fraud.[42] But where the deed is regarded as absolutely void it is held that even such a purchaser can obtain no title.[43] And no title can be obtained even by an innocent party under a deed which is forged.[44]

c. Partial Invalidity. A deed which is void in part because of fraud will be void as to the whole.[45]

8. Ratification of Voidable Deed — a. In General. Where a deed is void it cannot be ratified by subsequent acts or declarations of the grantor.[46] But a deed which is voidable merely for temporary want of capacity may be ratified when capacity has been restored.[47] And voidable deeds generally may be ratified by a

An intention to ratify, coupled with knowledge of the character of the deed and the fact that it is voidable, is essential to constitute acts of a grantor, after the removal continued acquiescence in the conveyance for a considerable period of time,[48] whereby a party may be estopped from attacking the validity of the instrument;[49] by a reference to and confirmation of the deed in a valid will;[50] by the voluntary execution of another deed to the grantee to induce the purchase of personal property on the premises;[51] by an agreement with a subsequent grantee to relinquish all claim to the property conveyed;[52] by subsequent contracts in respect to the property;[53] or by acts, words, or conduct generally evidencing an intention to ratify.[54]

b. Effect of. A deed cannot be attacked on the ground that it was executed under undue influence where the grantor has, after removal for a considerable period of time from the operation of the alleged influence, ratified the instrument.[55]

9. Contesting Validity, Cancellation,[56] and Rescission — a. In General. If a deed is made by one seized in fee and having a perfect right to convey, other persons cannot question its efficacy in giving title to the grantee, except upon the ground that they are creditors of, or bona fide purchasers from, the grantor, or are holders under such purchasers or have authority from them.[57] And if the deed is a voluntary one, without consideration, it can only be avoided by someone having equities against it.[58] The defrauded party or someone claiming under him is the only person who can take advantage of the invalidity of a fraudulent conveyance.[59] Again one cannot have a deed set aside for duress who is not injured thereby.[60] Nor can the heir of the grantor impeach the adequacy of the consideration of the deed by the ancestor.[61]

of law arises that a deed is valid, and its invalidity can only be shown by extrinsic proof, as in the case of a forgery, an action will lie to compel the surrender and cancellation of the instrument.[63] But want or inadequacy of consideration by itself is no ground for setting aside a deed,[64] or a subsequent partial failure of consideration,[65] although it may be considered in connection with other circumstances.[66] And in an action to set aside a deed the grantor is not estopped by the fact that he had previously brought a suit for the price, where at the time he had no knowledge of facts entitling him to rescind.[67] An action to cancel a deed may, however, be barred by laches on the part of plaintiff.[68]

(II) Failure of Title. If a deed contains no covenants, the grantee cannot, in the absence of fraud or mistake of fact, recover back the consideration paid, because of the failure of title, although the deed accepted by the grantee is that of a third person, instead of that of the vendor, as had been previously stipulated.[69] But if there is a covenant of general warranty and there is a failure of title as to a material part of the land, so that the purchaser does not obtain the substantial inducement to his contract of purchase, a court of equity will cancel and annul such deed upon the prayer of the purchaser and place the parties in statu quo.[70] A mere or slight defect of title, however, is not a ground of rescission.[71] So the acceptance of a deed of an undivided interest with knowledge of such failure of title as exists precludes a rescission.[72] And although the purchaser who contracts for a good and perfect title has a right to insist upon the relinquishment of the potential rights of the wife of the vendor in the lands, yet if he accepts a deed without such relinquishment, he cannot on that account insist upon a cancellation.[73] If, however, there is a failure of title to the whole or at least to a very large portion of the land, and a clear case for relief is made out, rescission will be granted in case of an exchange of lands, the party whose title so failed being insolvent.[74] Again complainant is entitled to a cancellation of the contract of purchase and the deed, where by mistake land is conveyed to him by defendant, to a portion of which land the latter had no title.[75]

(III) Conditions Precedent. In order to rescind the parties must be placed as far as possible in statu quo, that is there must be a return or an offer to return the consideration,[76] or that which represents or evidences it, as in case of a con-

Forged mortgage.— Nothing passes to a mortgagee by the execution and recording of a forged mortgage by an heir at law except the instrument relates back to the date of its execution ;[93] and where a deed is first recorded by the grantor and subsequently delivered to the grantee the latter takes the deed and its registration with the same effect thenceforward as if recorded by him at the date of delivery.[94] No other title which the grantee possesses independent of the deed is relinquished by him by recording the deed.[95] And it has been decided that the registration of the title papers of the vendor is no notice to the purchaser of the condition of the vendor's title.[96]

C. Instruments Entitled to Record. D. Constitutional and Statutory Provisions — 1. In General. Registry acts of a state have been declared to be remedial, and it has been decided that they should be liberally and beneficially construed,[1] and that they do not operate extraterritorially.[2] And an act which provides that all deeds shall be good and valid where witnessed by two or more persons and recorded will not by implication be construed as declaring that all deeds not so witnessed and recorded shall be void.[3]

2. Curative Acts. Defects in the acknowledgment and registration of deeds may be remedied by curative or enabling acts.[4] And a statute of this character should be liberally construed.[5]

3. Remedy to Compel Registration. Where a complete remedy to compel the recording of deeds and other instruments in the possession of an adverse party in

Where, however, a statute provided for the registration of copies of registered deeds and was intended only as a temporary act to be limited to then existing registrations, it should not be extended so as to permit of the registration of copies of subsequently registered deeds. Rogers v. Campbell, 6 Humphr. (Tenn.) 540. And where the recording of a deed executed outside the state was not au-interest is provided by statute it has been decided that such remedy is exclusive and that a suit will not lie in equity to compel such recording.[6]

E. Place — 1. In General. A deed may be properly recorded in the county in which the land lies.[7] But where the grantees live in different counties it has been held that a registration of the deed in a county where only one resides is insufficient under a statute which provides that a deed of land may be registered in the county in which the proprietor resides.[8] Again the division by statute of a county into two court districts and the establishment in the second district of district clerk's offices will not operate to allow a recording of deeds in the latter district, where the prior law in respect to the recording of deeds in such county is neither expressly nor by implication repealed by such statute.[9]

2. Property in Two or More Counties. In the absence of a regulating statute[10] it has been determined that a deed of land located partly in two or more counties should be recorded in each county.[11]

3. Creation of New County. A deed is properly recorded in the county in which the land lies, and the fact that a statute provides that a conveyance of land shall be so registered does not require that a deed once properly recorded shall, where the land lies in another county as a result of a subsequent change of boundaries, be again recorded in the county in which it may happen to lie as a result of such change.[12] And where a new county has not been organized but remains attached to another county a deed of land which lies in the new county is properly recorded in the county to which it is attached.[13]

F. Time. A great lapse of time between the execution of a deed and the recording of the same without any explanatory circumstances may exhibit such a gross irregularity as to show that it was not a properly recorded deed.[14] And thorized prior to a certain act admitting such deeds to record it has been decided that records of such deeds before the law was passed were not thereby legalized. Townsend v. Downer, 27 Vt. 119.

is incorrectly recorded the party claiming under it is not concluded thereby, but may introduce in evidence the original deed, or if lost, parol evidence of its contents.[19] But a deed, although actually transcribed on the record, is not recorded where there has been no proper proof of its execution as required by law.[20] And a court cannot make a valid registry of a deed in any other manner than that prescribed by statute.[21] Again where a deed is delivered to the clerk of one district of a county or to his deputy without instructions this is prima facie a delivery for record in such district.[22] And where a deed has been properly recorded the title of the grantee is not affected by the destruction of the record of the deed.[23]

V. CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION.

A. General Rules of Construction — 1. Application to Deeds in General — a. What Law Governs. The law of the state where the land is situated governs the construction of a deed.[24] It is decided, however, that the law of the place of execution controls,[25] and determines the construction of a deed containing a covenant of seizin[26] or a covenant of warranty,[27] or whether the terms used in a

Re-registration and its effect.— Where a statute requires that the judge of the court before whose clerk an acknowledgment was made shall certify to the official character of that clerk and a registration is ineffectual because of the want of such certification, a re-registration with the proper certificate will take effect as to the grantor's creditors from the date such amended deed is noted for registration and does not relate back. 50. What constitutes a present conveyance and not an executory contract.— An instrument in the form of a general warranty deed is not converted into a contract for a deed by words binding the grantors to convey "at some time as soon as said deed could be made." Rust v. Goff, 94 Mo. 511, 7 S. W. 418. And a deed, signed, sealed, acknowledged, delivered, and recorded, is an executed contract, although the agreement for services, which constituted part of the consideration, is a continuing contract during the lives of the grantor and his wife. Perry v. Scott, 51 Pa. St. 119. So the fact that the consideration is to be paid in the future does not prevent an agreement for the sale of land from constituting an executed conveyance passing present title. Bortz v. Bortz, 48 Pa. St. 382, 86 Am. Dec. 603. And where possession is taken under "articles of agreement" to convey, and the operative words are those of present grant, and there is neither by expression nor implication any agreement or necessity of future assurance, the instrument is a present conveyance of title. Garver v. McNulty, 39 Pa. St. 473. Again the intention should be clearly manifest to make an instrument an executory contract, by a covenant of further assurance. Ogden v. Brown, 33 Pa. St. 247. And a conveyance of "one-sixth part of the said tract, or so much thereof as may be recovered in this suit" is a present conveyance and not executory. Gray v. Packer, 4 Watts & S. (Pa.) 17. So an instrument which contains all the requisites of a conveyance of land will be none the less such a deed because it partakes of the nature of a contract of sale. American Emigrant Co. v. Clark, 62 Iowa 182, 17 N. W. 483; Williams v. Paine, 169 U. S. 55, 18 S. Ct. 279, 42 L. ed. 658. And if a deed conveys an entire interest, and an added stipulation obligating the grantors to make a full and bona fide title, the latter clause does not make the instrument a mere executory agreement to convey a title. McCoy v. Pease, 17 Tex. Civ. App. 303, 42 S. W. 659. There is also an absolute conveyance of an equal undivided interest in lands where apt words of conveyance are used, based upon a consideration expressed and the land is described, although there is a proviso "that said league of land shall be divided equally, according to quality and quantity, . . . as soon as possible" (Henderson v. Beaton, 1 Tex. Unrep. Cas. 17, 22); and a title is conveyed under words of bargain and sale with a further site formalities, the use or non-use of apt and proper words of conveyance, the use or non-use or the lack of necessity for the use of expressions of future or further assurance, the scope and subject-matter of the instrument, coupled with the object or purpose evidently to be accomplished, as manifested or deducible by a reasonable interpretation of the instrument itself in its entirety, or as aided by contemporaneous agreements which are properly within the rules of construc-promise to make another conveyance when the patent to the land issues (Owen v. New York, etc., Land Co., 11 Tex. Civ. App. 284, 32 S. W. 189). Again a deed in the usual form of a deed of bargain and sale is a conveyance executed, even though the grantor covenants "to make a patent" which can only mean to obtain one and deliver it. Willis v. Bucher, 30 Fed. Cas. No. 17,769, 3 Wash. 369.

What constitutes an executory contract and not a present conveyance.— Where the entire instrument and a contemporaneous agreement show that a title bond was intended, there is no conveyance in præsenti (Chapman v. Glassell, 13 Ala. 50, 48 Am. Dec. 41); and only such a bond or agreement to convey exists where such intent is evidenced by construing all the provisions of the instrument together (Kelly v. Dooling, 23 Ark. 582). So where an "instrument in writing" refers to a certain agreement, on performance of which a general warranty deed was to be made, there is not a present conveyance. Ellis v. Jeans, 7 Cal. 409. A deed defective in some formal requisite is also in equity an executory contract for sale. Dickinson v. Glenney, 27 Conn. 104. And an agreement in consideration of intended marriage relating to payment of moneys to a trustee and for conveyance will be executory until such payment. Imlay v. Huntington, 20 Conn. 146. So a bond to convey upon payment of a fixed sum within a certain time and a lease for that time do not vest title in the obligee of the bond. Daua v. Petersham, 107 Mass. 598. The rule further applies in determining that an instrument is not of a testamentary character, nor a deed, but merely an executory agreement to give property for maintenance. Dreisbach v. Serfass, 126 Pa. St. 32, 17 Atl. 513, 3 L. R. A. 836. Again, words of present assurance, "doth and hath by these presents granted, bargained, sold, and for ever quit claim," etc., do not make an instrument other than an executory contract, where it contains no words of inheritance, is without formal acknowledgment, and no present consideration is given, but only one to be performed in future. Stewart v. Lang, 37 Pa. St. 201, 78 Am. Dec. 414. So an instrument under seal, signed and acknowledged by one of the parties, and which "grants, bargains, and sells in consideration of" a specified sum "all estate real and personal received from his father," and which also agrees to execute a more perfect instrument "to-morrow at G," etc., does not pass title (Dawson v. McGill, 4 Whart. (Pa.) 230); and an instrument is a bond for a title, which, although it is signed and sealed, specifies a consideration and bargains and sells a designated part of the land, yet the maker binds himself, his heirs or assigns, to give "a deed in fee simple as soon as I or they can do it according to law" (Wallace v. Wilcox, 27 Tex. 60). So, even though the purchase-money is paid, only an executory obligation exists and no title is vested by an instrument in the form of a deed, which, although recorded, identifies no particular tract, but contemplates the surveying off and designation of the boundaries as soon as practicable, and the execution of another deed is necessary, upon request, the sale to be made good or damages to be paid on default. Glasscock v. Nelson, 26 Tex. 150. Merely a bond for a title also exists, where the grantor, although reciting that he has "sold and delivered" certain acres out of an unpatented survey, yet there is no habendum, reddendum, or warranty, and the maker binds himself to give a good warranty deed (Peterson v. McCauley, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 25 S. W. 826); and where two instruments are executed, one subsequent to the other, the latter being evidently the fulfilment of the first, such first instrument will be held merely an executory contract, where the transactions show that it was so intended (Mineral Development Co. v. James, 97 Va. 403, 34 S. E. 37).

A mere proviso, after the premises, relating to the adjustment of boundaries so as to cover a deficiency or exclude an excess of land, is, when it is sufficiently certain, an actual conveyance of a deficiency. Richards v. Mercer, 1 Leigh (Va.) 125.

A writing granting a right of access to a well forever, and which does not indicate that the parties contemplate any further assurance, and which is signed and sealed, is a present grant of a right to use the well. Warren v. Syme, 7 W. Va. 474.

A purported conveyance not by deed may operate as an agreement, where it stipulates not to disturb the party intended to have the premises. Rex v. Ridgwell, 6 B. & C. 665, 9 D. & R. 678, 5 L. J. M. C. O. S. 67, 13 E. C. L. 300. If, however, the conveyance is upon a condition precedent, the performance thereof determines the passing of the title. Atherton v. Johnson, 2 N. H. 31.

Indorsement on land-office certificate is an agreement to convey, where it states that the holder has sold "the within described land" to another. Sayward v. Gardner, 5 Wash. 247, 31 Pac. 761, 33 Pac. 389.

Instrument is a deed absolutely, as well as a bond for a title, which states that one party has granted, bargained, and sold all his interest in certain land, and it contains no covenant for title at a future time, and also binds the grantor in a penalty to remain within the jurisdiction where the land is situate for a tion, are ordinarily the determinating factors. Attending circumstances should, however, be also considered where the intention, as gathered from the instrument, is doubtful; and particular words and phrases are not the test, as against the intention, in determining whether an informal agreement is a conveyance of land or merely an agreement.[51]

d. Construction in Favor of Validity. An instrument intended to operate as a deed should so operate if not legally impossible for it to do so.[52]

e. Liberal Construction. Subject to the rule just stated, that the intention of the parties should be effectuated, a liberal construction is given to inartificial deeds, that is, to deeds inartificially and unteehnically drawn.[53]

f. Entire Instrument to Be Considered — (i) General Rule. The intent must primarily be gathered from a fair consideration of the entire instrument and the language employed therein,[54] and should be consistent with the terms of the deed,[55] including its scope and the subjeet-matter.[56]

(ii) Expressed Meaning Plain. If the expressed meaning is plain on the faee of the instrument it will eontrol.[57]

51. Kenrick v. Smick, 7 Watts & S. (Pa.) 41.

Although words of absolute transfer are used, a deed will be construed as an instrument to convey, if such is the intention of the parties, as shown by taking the whole instrument together and the circumstances under which it was executed. Sherman v. Dill, 4 Yeates (Pa.) 295, 2 Am. Dec. 408; Neave v. Jenkins, 2 Yeates (Pa.) 107; Stouffer v. Coleman, 1 Yeates (Pa.) 393.

The construction is favored which tends to unite the seizin with the apparent title of record. Farnum v. Peterson, 111 Mass. 148.

If a deed or any portion of it cannot operate in one form, it shall operate in that which by law will effectuate the intention of the parties. Richardson v. Palmer, 38 N. H. 212. And see Goodtitle v. Bailey, Cowp. 597.

(III) Effect Given to Every Part. This last stated rule should also be applied so as to give effect and meaning to every part of the deed,[58] each clause being considered separately and being governed by the intent deducible from the entire instrument,[59] and separate parts being viewed in the light of other parts,[60] if the same can be done consistently with the rules of law.[61]

(IV) Written and Printed Parts. The written and printed parts of a deed are equally binding,[62] but if they are inconsistent the former will control the latter.[63]

(V) Punctuation. To solve an ambiguity not created thereby the punctuation may be considered,[64] or it may be resorted to to settle the meaning after all other means fail;[65] but it will not be permitted to affect the construction as against the apparent intent.[66]

(VI) Clauses and Words in General — (A) Some Meaning to Be Given. Some meaning should be given to every clause, word,[67] and expression,[68] if it can reasonably be done,[69] and it is not inconsistent with the general intent of the whole instrument,[70] so that the deed may operate, if by law it may, according to the intention of the parties.[71]

(B) Reasonable, Usual, and Grammatical Sense. The construction must be reasonable and agreeable to common understanding,[72] and words must receive that interpretation given them by the common usage of mankind, having in view the circumstances of their use and the context;[73] that is, unless the words employed visions (Barnes v. Haybarger, 53 N. C. 76), and even though a particular expression may be inconsistent with the general intent a court of equity will give effect to the latter (Arundell v. Arundell, Coop. t. Brough. 139, 2 L. J. Ch. 77, 1 Myl. & K. 316, 7 Eng. Ch. 316).

are technical,[74] they must be construed in their plain, natural,[75] grammatical,[76] established, definite,[77] usual,[78] obvious and ordinary meaning, in the absence of ambiguity,[79] where a rational exposition can be given consistent with fair interpretation of the language employed; for, although an absurd clause, which is distinct, obvious, and express, must prevail, yet a literal interpretation will be abandoned where it leads to a capricious and irrational result, if such rational exposition can be followed.[80]

(c) Verbal Arrangement, Informalities, Inaccuracies, and Technicalities — (1) In General. Verbal arrangement may in certain cases be disregarded;[81] nor should informality, in a deed of bargain and sale,[82] or inaccuracy of language be allowed to defeat the manifest intent.[83] Although technically accurate terms must be considered,[84] yet technical rules of construction yield to the manifest intention of the parties,[85] as does the correct technical sense of descriptive words;[86] and technical words of limitation may be so qualified by the context as to make them conform to the grantor's intention.[87]

(2) Supplying Omissions. The rule is that the court cannot by supplying and interpolating words, even though they may be pertinent and necessary, make an instrument for the parties which they themselves have failed to make.[88]

An exception to or qualification of this

(3) Spelling. Inaccuracies in spelling will be deemed immaterial,[89] or will be corrected so that the construction may be in accord with the obvious intent.[90]

(4). Transposition of Words. While words cannot be transposed merely to give efficacy to a deed, nor a provision relative to one subject be taken therefrom and applied to another subject in order to give a different meaning to the instrument,[91] nor words of a clause be transposed unless inconsistent with, absurd, or repugnant to the rest of the deed;[92] nevertheless, if what was intended clearly appears from an examination of the entire instrument, and apt and proper words are used to effectuate such intention, the instrument will not be defeated merely because of verbal arrangement or position, but the words may be transposed and read in their proper places in order to give them effect and thus carry out the clear intent and purpose even though badly expressed.[93]

(D) Restraint of General Words. Where words are contradictory those which are more general will be restrained by those more specific and particular.[94] So if words are general, and not express and precise, they will be restrained according to the subject-matter or person to which they relate,[95] and generally the express mention of one thing in a grant implies the exclusion of another.[96]

g. Extrinsic Circumstances. For the purpose of enabling it to ascertain the intention of the parties and to construe the deed,[97] but not in a manner inconsistent with the words used so as to add to or detract from or alter the intent,[98] the court will place itself as nearly as possible in the position of the parties when the instrument was executed,[99] and will consider the origin and sources of its deri-rule may, however, exist in certain cases, as where there has clearly been an inadvertent omission of a necessary word as a complement. Seamnon v. Sawyer, 4 Me. 429. Recital as to other deed not produced.— It is no objection to the admission of a later deed that it was given to supply a defect in a prior deed, where plaintiff is shown to be the sole heir thereunder; and the recital does not detract from the force of the later deed where, if a prior deed was valid, plaintiff had title through it, and if not, then the later deed transferred it. 27. Thus it has been held that recitals are not evidence of the contents of a deed (Kelly v. Power, 2 Ball & B. 236); nor of the existence of a release so as to bind the vendee, of land covered thereby, to pay the purchase-money (Smith v. Webster, 2 Watts (Pa.) 478); nor that the land had before been granted (Crump v. Thompson, 31 N. C. 491); nor as to the ownership and boundaries of land against one claiming a right of way over adjoining lands (Pettingill v. Porter, 8 Allen (Mass.) 1, 85 Am. Dec. 671); nor as to heirship (Ross v. Loomis, 64 Iowa 432, 20 N. W. 749; Costello v. Burke, 63 Iowa 361, 19 N. W. 247; Jones v. Sherman, 56 Miss. 559; Watson v. Gregg, 10 Watts (Pa.) 289, 36 Am. Dec. 176; Hovey v. Long, 33 N. Brunsw. 462); nor that one is a widow and heir (Soukup v. Union Invest. Co., 84 Iowa 448, 51 N. W. 167, 35 Am. St. Rep. 317); and a recital that the grantor is a corporation does not prove its corporate existence as against one claiming through another source of title (Sonoma County Water Co. v. Lynch, 50 Cal. 503).

Recital in unregistered instruments cannot affect title. Rutledge v. McLean, 12 U. C. Q. B. 205.

ing under them, to privies in blood, in estate, and in law.[28] But it is determined that recitals work no estoppel against the grantee where they are immaterial[29] or are in a deed poll.[30] And although one who has entered under a deed, but who did not execute it, is not concluded by a recital therein,[31] yet it is decided that the execution does not determine who are concluded or estopped, but the test is the intention, gathered from construing the instrument, and whether or not all have intended the statement to be true, or it is the statement of one party only.[32]

(iii) Effect as to Third Persons. The above general rule is limited in its operation to the persons therein specified, and it does not include strangers or third parties or those not claiming under the deed.[33]

Although denied in an answer by defendant who claimed through a party who executed the deed, a recital may be taken to be true. Whatman v. Gibson, 2 Jur. 273, 7 L. J. Ch. 160, 9 Sim. 196.

Recital of an agreement in a deed is equivalent to an agreement made by the deed. Commonwealth Bank v. Vance, 4 Litt. (Ky.) 168.

Recital that land had become the property of D does not conclude the grantor as to the fee, and if there is a further recital that D's estate had been divested by the grantor's entry after breach of condition, one claiming under D, but not under the deed, is not estopped to deny its recital by having availed himself of the first as evidence of D's estate. Stoever v. Whitman, 6 Binn. (Pa.) 416.

There are also other exceptions to or qualifications of the general rule. Thus a party to a deed is not estopped by recitals in anterior deeds, although the title is derived through them (Doe v. Shelton, 3 A. & E. 265, 1 Harr. & W. 287, 4 L. J. K. B. 167, 4 N. & M. 857, 30 E. C. L. 137. But see Lawlor v. Murchison, 4 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 284, as to erroneous recital in prior deed), unless the recital is also contained in the subsequent deed (Gwyn v. North Canal Nav. Co., L. R. 3 Exch. 209, 37 L. J. Exch. 122, 18 L. T. Rep. N. S. 688, 16 Wkly. Rep. 1209. See Thompson v. Bennett, 22 U. C. C. P. 393. Compare Farr v. Sheriffe, 4 Hare 512, 10 Jur. 630, 15 L. J. Ch. 89, 30 Eng. Ch. 512). Again no strict estoppel exists, under a deed of settlement, in favor of the transferee of a mortgage which is not within the scope of the settlement (Williams v. Pinckney, 67 L. J. Ch. 34, 77 L. T. Rep. N. S. 700 [affirming 66 L. J. Ch. 551]); nor does a recital that a deed issued to a certain person control as to the identity of the grantee (Billings v. Kankakee Coal Co., 67 Ill. 489). And a recital contrary to fact, introduced by mistake of fact, does not estop a party in equity to controvert the same. Brooke v. Haymes, L. R. 6 Eq. 25. Nor is there an estoppel against a party or grantee, where the action is wholly collateral to the deed. Ex p. Morgan, 2 Ch. D. 72, 45 L. J. Bankr. 36, 34 L. T. Rep. N. S. 329, 24 Wkly. Rule as to third parties applies to recitals of authority of persons making the deed (Mordecai v. Beal, 8 Port. (Ala.) 529); to one claiming under title wholly independent of parties or privies (Lamar v. Turner, 48 Ga. 329); to recitals in a deed placed on record (Stumpf v. Osterhage, 94 Ill. 115); to an adversary claimant (Smith v. Shackleford, 9 Dana (Ky.) 452); to a vendor's deed as against judgment creditors (Buchanan v. Kimes, 2 Baxt. (Tenn.) 275); to a recital that the grantees are the only heirs, as against other heirs (Mariposa Land, etc., Co. v. Silliman, (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 32 S. W. 843. See also Dixon v. Monroe, 112 Ga. 158, 37 S. E. 180); and to a recital that deed was made in pursuance of a contract of sale of the premises with a person of whom the grantee was assignee, and as such entitled to the conveyance, and such recital does not operate as constructive notice, so as to require a mortgagee in good faith to examine the contract or assignment for latent defects in the title or latent equities

b. Of Consideration — (i) In General. A consideration for a deed is implied[34] from the words "sold," etc., in the recital,[35] and a bargain and sale deed is good, although it does not express that the consideration money has been paid.[36] A deed is also valid in law, whether the consideration has been actually paid or not, where there is a recital of its payment.[37] Nor does a false statement of the consideration operate as a nullification.[38]

(ii) As Evidence. The recital of a consideration is prima facie proof[39] of the payment of a valuable one;[40] and if the consideration is expressed in dollars that amount will be presumed to be the agreed value of the property and the actual consideration until rebutted by evidence.[41] In the absence of evidence to the contrary the expressed consideration will be held to be the true and only one.[42] The ownership of the money paid may also be evidenced by the recital.[43] The recital of the consideration is, however, only prima facie evidence.[44] So

Where, however, a purchaser at a sheriff's sale obtains a certificate and assigns it to secure a loan and the assignee procures the deed in which the assignment was copied, to himself from the sheriff, and sells the land, the vendee takes it with notice of recitals in the assignment, and of the assignor's equity of redemption. while the acknowledgment of payment or of the receipt of the consideration or purchase-money is prima facie proof of such fact,[45] it is only prima facie evidence,[46] and is open to explanation and may be disproved[47] by clear and convincing evidence.[48] And it is also decided that an acknowledgment by the bargainor in a deed that he has received the consideration money is a bar in a court of law to any action for the recovery thereof.[49]

(III) Effect as to Third Persons. The recital of a consideration is not prima facie evidence of payment, where the deed is attacked as fraudulent as against creditors of the grantor.[50] Nor, it is decided, is the acknowledgment of a receipt in a deed of payment any evidence thereof as against strangers to the instrument.[51]

Contract and deed should be construed together when the deed recites that the contract is to be made a part thereof, and provides that it shall conform in all respects to the contract. Chapman v. Lee, 47 Ala. 143.

If the deed is not so incorporated by reference the instruments will not be construed together (Miller v. Scolfield, 12 Conn. 335), especially where the statute requires such reference to a defeasance (Kingsley v. Holbrook, 45 N. H. 313, 86 Am. Dec. 173). But see Robbins v. Webb, 68 Ala. 393, where the instruments are parts of the same transaction.

thereof,[59] and to orders or judgments;[60] but it has been determined that this is not necessarily so.[61]

b. Indorsements or Memoranda. An indorsement or memorandum upon the deed should, when so made as to constitute a part thereof, be read into the body of the deed and construed with the same in its entirety in ascertaining the parties' intention.[62] It is decided, however, that indorsements on the back of a deed are no part thereof,[63] and that a memorandum on the back of a transfer of title to a third party is not evidence of title without proof of execution and delivery.[64]

c. Merger of Previous Agreements. As a general rule a deed made in full execution of a contract of sale of land merges the provisions of the contract therein, and this rule extends to and includes all prior negotiations and agreements leading up to the execution of the deed,[65] all prior purposes, stipulaagreement" does not incorporate the agreement so that covenants therein contained will run with the land. Close v. Burlington, etc., R. Co., 64 Iowa 149, 19 N. W. 886.

St. 331, 34 Atl. 52); where the covenant is to indemnify the vendee against all costs, charges, damages, etc., and the vendee retains possession of the contract and it is not contained in the deed (Cox v. Henry, 32 Pa. St. 18); where the grantee absolutely agreed to assume and pay the taxes (Sage v. Truslow, 88 N. Y. 240, 14 N. Y. Wkly. Dig. 77 [affirming 11 N. Y. Wkly. Dig. 211]); where the agreement is to refund the purchase-money if the title fails, and the deed contains no warranty of title (Close v. Zell, 141 Pa. St. 390, 21 Atl. 770, 23 Am. St. Rep. 296); where there is a guaranty of title, and a subsequent conveyance contains only a special warranty (Drinker v. Byers, 2 Penr. & W. (Pa.) 528); where the promise by the lessor who conveyed to the lessee is to indemnify the latter for the improvements if the title failed (Richardson v. Gosser, 26 Pa. St. 335); where the contract provides for the increase dor's[71] or a purchaser's covenants necessarily merged or discharged;[72] and a parol agreement may be suspended by the subsequently executed instrument.[73] The question of merger has also been declared to be one of construction, to be gathered from a consideration of the entire contents of the instruments,[74] and the agreement upon which the deed is founded may be admissible or referred to to explain an uncertainty[75] or ambiguity in the latter.[76] But one claiming under other representations and agreements than those embodied in the deed must make out his case by clear and certain proofs.[77] Again the general rule is subject to the further limitation, qualification, or exception that there has been no fraud or relievable mistake,[78] no misconception of the deed by either party,[79] and no intent to the contrary.[80]

4. Repugnant or Conflicting Parts — a. Intention of Parties.[81] The strictness of the ancient rule as to repugnancy in deeds is much relaxed,[82] so that in this as in other cases of construction if clauses or parts are conflicting or repugnant the intention is gathered from the whole instrument[83] instead of from particular clauses,[84] and if it is the clear intent of the grantor that apparently inconsistent provisions shall all stand it will be given that effect if possible.[85] Again a clause should not be construed as repugnant to the grant and therefore void so as to defeat the manifest intention of the parties.[86]

b. Consistency Between Parts. In case of repugnancy all the parts of a deed should be made to harmonize if practicable upon a construction of the whole instrument.[87] If both parts of a deed may well stand together consistently with or rebate of the purchase-money in proportion to any excess or deficiency in the quantity of land (Witbeck v. Waine, 16 N. Y. 532); where the deed is of one tract, and the grantor under an executory contract agreed to convey two tracts (Brown v. Moorhead, 8 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 569); and where there is a prior parol warranty of the quality of the land so as to preclude a recovery of damages for breach (Saville v. Chalmers, 76 Iowa 325, 41 N. W. 30).

the rules of law, they will be construed to have that effect rather than be held repugnant.[88]

c. Rejection of Inconsistent Parts or Words. Generally whatever is inconsistent with the real intention of the parties as ascertained from the language of the whole instrument may be rejected as superfluous,[89] as false or mistaken,[90] or repugnant, provided no rule of law be violated thereby,[91] so as to give effect to the deed according to the intent.[92] But although words may be rejected which are repugnant to other parts of the deed and to the general intention of the parties,[93] nevertheless no word is to be rejected, unless there cannot be given a rational construction to the instrument with the words as they are found.[94]

d. Control of Subsequent by Earlier Clauses or Words. If two clauses are so repugnant that they cannot stand the first will be sustained and the latter rejected;[95] and this rule applies where such subsequent clause would defeat the grant; but it does not prevail where there is room for construction,[96] where reconcilement is possible,[97] or where the inconsistency between clauses is so great as to avoid the deed for uncertainty,[98] nor will the rule be extended to a case of repugnancy between parts of the same clause.[99] Again subsequent words of doubtful import will not be so construed as to contradict preceding words.[1]

the estate granted in the premises;[2] and if the habendum is repugnant to the grant the former will be controlled by the manifest intent and terms of the latter, where the purpose thereof can be clearly ascertained from the premises, and the premises contain proper words of limitation.[3] Repugnant words must also yield to the purpose of the grant when the latter is clearly ascertainable from the premises of the deed, although such words stand first in the grant.[4]

f. Granting, Habendum, and Subsequent Clauses. The covenants cannot control the premises, although they may be important and sometimes decisive, and may appropriately be considered[5] by the court when a question arises as to grant will not qualify a conveyance. Ex p. Durfee, 14 R. I. 47.

2. 2 Blackstone Comm. 298. See also Hafner v. Irwin, 20 N. C. 433, 34 Am. Dec. 390; Mowry v. Bradley, 11 R. I. 370, declaring that the habendum may be rejected when irreconcilably in conflict, etc.

Components of rule.— The habendum limits the certainty of the estate (Berry v. Billings, 44 Me. 416, 69 Am. Dec. 107); restrains, limits, or enlarges the estate in the granting clause (Barnett v. Barnett, 104 Cal. 298, 37 Pac. 1049); or it may enlarge or diminish the grant when so worded as to show a clear intention so to do (Corbin v. Healy, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 514; Sumner v. Williams, 8 Mass. 162, 5 Am. Dec. 83; Wolverton v. Haupt, 3 Walk. (Pa.) 46); or operate as a limitation, although the granting clause is not made subject thereto (Chicago Lumbering Co. v. Powell, 120 Mich. 51, 78 N. W. 1022); or limit and confine the words of the grant, to ascertain the commencement and duration of the estate (Mitchell v. Wilson, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 9,672, 5 Cranch C. C. 242); or enlarge, qualify, expound, or vary the estate (Moss v. Sheldon, 3 Watts & S. (Pa.) 160; Lehigh Coal, etc., Co. v. Gluck, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. 662; Haupt v. Wolverton, 2 Chest. Co. Rep. (Pa.) 398); may explain, limit, or qualify the premises, but may not contradict (Halifax Cong. Soc. v. Stark, 34 Vt. 243); may often qualify the premises but may not contradict the estate granted (Edwards v. Beall, 75 Ind. 401); and any limitation in said habendum, designed to abridge or lessen the estate in favor of a party not named in the premises, will be treated as repugnant and inoperative (Adams v. Dunklee, 19 Vt. 382).

Nothing in the habendum should be construed to extend the meaning of terms used in the premises, or that part which precedes the habendum, at least if the language employed can be reconciled with the body of the deed. Smith v. Pollard, 19 Vt. 272.

Rule that the habendum cannot divest the estate in fee does not apply where the former vests the grantee with a life-estate and the granting clause conveys and warrants the described land without pretending to define the nature and character of the estate granted, nor in such case is there any repugnancy. General words in the habendum cannot control special words of limitation in the grant or premises. Hunter v. Patterson, 142 Mo. 310, 44 S. W. 250.

Habendum should control if the provisions of the deed are inconsistent, some indicating a power of absolute disposal, which only can be had by the holder of the fee, and others creating a remainder, which supposes a life-estate. Green v. Sutton, 50 Mo. 186.

Habendum will be controlled by the granting clause (Farquharson v. Eichelberger, 15 Md. 63. See Ratcliffe v. Marrs, 87 Ky. 26, 7 S. W. 395, 8 S. W. 876, 10 Ky. L. Dec. 390); or by the preamble and premises, if conflicting or inconsistent, especially when in itself inconsistent (Caulk v. Fox, 13 Fla. 148).

When they are repugnant it is decided that the habendum controls the granting clause. Baskett v. Sellars, 93 Ky. 2, 19 S. W. 9, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 909; Bodine v. Arthur, 91 Ky. 53, 14 S. If, however, the granting clause mentions no estate, the habendum then becomes efficient to declare the intention, and will rebut any implication which would otherwise arise through the omission in this respect in the granting clause. Riggin v. Love, 72 Ill. 553.

Covenants generally can only extend to the estate granted, and there must be something very peculiar in their terms to warrant such a construction of them as to enlarge the estate granted in the premises. Corbin v. Healy, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 514. See Mills v. Catlin, 22 Vt. 98.

Where a life-estate only is mentioned in the premises and the habendum, it cannot be enlarged into a fee either by a warranty in what is granted for the purpose of aiding the construction to be given to the instrument.[6]

g. Reference to Recitals to Aid Construction. The granting portion of a deed passing all the estate cannot be diminished by a mere recital in the description;[7] nor can a general recital control the plain words of the granting part,[8] although general terms in a grant may be limited and restrained by a recital stating the object of the grant.[9] A recital in the premises may also be referred to in ascertaining the motives and reasons upon which the deed is founded.[10] Again immaterial and irrelevant recitals in an appointment and conveyance, if not repugnant, inconsistent, or illegal, cannot have the effect to render nugatory the provisions which are material and pertinent.[11]

5. Construction as to Parties — a. In General. That one party is a natural person and the other a corporation gives no signification whatever to the legal merits.[12]

b. Grantors. In determining who is intended as grantor, or whether a deed is executed in a representative or official capacity or not, resort may be had to those parts of the instrument describing the party and also to the manner of signing, sealing, acknowledgment, certification, and attestation, to proof of identity where necessary, to the purpose and intent of the grant and of the parties,[13] and to fee or by a covenant for quiet enjoyment to the grantor and his heirs. Snell v. Young, 25 N. C. 379.

6. Mills v. Catlin, 22 Vt. 98.

Technical words it is decided, however, in the granting and habendum clauses importing a fee, must yield to a clause, following the covenant of general warranty, limiting the interest of the grantor to a life-estate. Atkins v. Baker, 112 Ky. 877, 66 S. W. 1023, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 2224.

13. See cases cited infra, this note.

Attorneys and agents.— A conveyance by an attorney as such, who had a power coupled with an interest "either in the land or the proceeds of a sale thereof," passes complete title as showing an election to take in the proceeds of the sale (Little v. Weatherford, 63 Tex. 638); and a deed which appears on its face to have been executed in the name of the owner of the land, and for her by her attorney in fact, although not in approved form, is her deed and not an independent deed of the attorney in fact (Donovan v. Welch, 11 N. D. 113, 90 N. W. 262). Substantially the same conclusion was reached in Bigelow v. Livingston, 28 Minn. 57, 9 N. W. 31. If a deed appears to be the personal one of the grantor, his signing "agent" after his signature and seal is superfluous and does not show that the title was vested in any other than the grantor (Fisher v. Cid Copper Min. Co., 94 N. C. 397); and one may by a conveyance as agent pass as completely as if in his own name whatever title in law or equity he may have which his creditors could subject to the payment of their claims (Whitehead v. Cramer, 9 La. Ann. 216).

Deed is that of a person purporting to act as an agent where it is made by him and he is so named as the grantor, and it contains personal covenants of warranty on his part and is signed and sealed by him in his own name. Snow v. Orleans, 126 Mass. 453.

Identity.— It will be presumed that the grantor acquired a new name by marriage without proof of identity (Dowdy v. McArthur, 94 Ga. 577, 21 S. E. 148); and even in case of a variance between the names in the body of the deed and the signatures, the identity of the persons will be presumed until rebutted, where the deed has been properly acknowledged (Lyon v. Kain, 36 Ill. 362). Again the certificate of acknowledgment may remove the doubt and establish identity, where such doubt is raised by a middle initial being added to or omitted from a name. Blomberg v. Montgomery, 69 Minn. 149, 72 N. W. 56.

If names are not in the body or the granting clause, but appear in the subscription, the interest of such parties is not conveyed where there is nothing in the deed to indicate their intention to become grantors. Johnson v. Goff, 116 Ala. 648, 22 So. 995.

Parties are individually bound where they sign and seal deeds with their own name and seals, even though described as a collective other referred-to instruments.[14] A deed made by commissioners may also pass a testator's inchoate title, it being a legal one, where the commissioners' authority is derived from a competent court.[15]

c. Grantees — (i) Intention.[16] The intention of the parties is material in determining who are the grantees.[17] But the grantor cannot, in the absence of fraud or mistake, aver that he intended to convey to a person other than the grantee named in the deed.[18]

(ii) Extrinsic Evidence.[19] A resort to extrinsic facts and circumstances may become necessary, and is proper, in order to ascertain the individual intended, where the description is merely imperfect and capable of different applications; but a distinction is declared to exist between such a case and one where the description is inherently uncertain and indeterminate, for in this latter instance extrinsic evidence is inadmissible to make the conveyance effectual in favor of any particular person.[20] body, but not as a corporate one. Cullen v. Nickerson, 10 U. C. C. P. 549.

Representative or official capacity.— Rule applies to a deed of individuals in their official capacity as county commissioners (Bestor v. Powell, 7 Ill. 119); to a deed by school trustees where the intention clearly was to convey the land and to do so as trustees and officers of the corporation, even though only the equitable title passed (Hemstreet v. Burdick, 90 Ill. 444); to a deed by "A. B., Executor," and signed by him in the same form (Babcock v. Collins, 60 Minn. 73, 61 N. W. 1020, 51 Am. St. Rep. 503); to a conveyance in the form of deed from a grantor individually except that to his signature he adds the word "administrator"; and such conveyance will be admissible as an administrator's deed, when it appears everywhere in the record that the grantor was the administrator of the estate to which the land belonged, and on the face of the conveyance that the land was conveyed as land of the estate by him as administrator (Cohea v. Johnson, 69 Miss. 46, 13 So. 40); and to a deed executed by one in his own name, but showing that he acted as attorney for another, provided he had authority to make a proper deed (Rogers v. Frost, 14 Tex. 267).

Where husband and wife are named at the commencement of a deed as party of the first part and afterward the parties of the first part are named as grantors, the instrument is the deed of both husband and wife. Thornton v. National Exch. Bank, 71 Mo. 221. And where in a deed by a husband and wife she joins with him in the words of conveyaneing, acknowledges the joint receipt of the purchase-money, and joins in the covenant of warranty, the presumption therefrom, if any, is that the title was a joint one, and not that she joined merely to release her dower and homestead. (III) Omission of Names, or Insertion of Additional or Different Names. The grantee may be ascertained from other parts of the deed where no party is named in the granting part, and it is also decided that no one can take an immediate and present estate who is not named as a grantee in the premises or granting part provided any one is there named.[21] If the grantor intends the habendum to operate as an addendum or proviso to the conveyancing clause it will control where an additional name is inserted in the former clause.[22] But where the whole estate is granted to one person in the premises and limited to another in the habendum the latter is repugnant and void.[23]

(IV) Child or Children, Issue or Heirs.[24] "Children" may mean legitimate children,[25] also grandchildren.[26] Nor is an unborn child, although shortly expected, or a child born after execution but before delivery of a deed to a named person and his brothers and sisters embraced therein, even though before the birth there are no brothers or sisters.[27] And a limitation to lawful issue of certain persons, and to the grantor's brothers in case of the grantee's death leaving no issue, includes issue and children living at the death of the grantee.[28] Again, where there is nothing indicating that "children" is used in the sense of "heirs" it will not be so construed;[29] and in determining whether heirs are included, the premises, granting, and habendum clauses will be construed where they are at variance.[30]

description, there is no ambiguity, nothing to explain by evidence and no room for construction; and the rule falsa demonstratio non nocet applies, and the court cannot reject the portion of the description as to the residence of such person and apply the description to a person in another state. (v) Designation of a Class. A designation of a class may include a single party of that class[31] or the individuals composing it.[32]

(vi) Designation of Partners. If the firm-name is given and it consists of the surnames of the several partners it will vest the legal title in them,[33] and generally if members of a partnership are designated with sufficient certainty under a firm-name they will take, but a general or an abbreviated term such as "company," "Co." or "Bro." is held to be insufficient.[34]

(vii) Corporations. Misnomer of a corporation in a grant does not destroy or defeat it.[35] It is sufficient if the name be expressed in sense and substance, although not in the precise words.[36]

(viii) Unincorporated Associations. It is determined that a conveyance to an unincorporated association which goes into possession under the deed passes a title which vests in the company subsequently incorporated.[37]

(ix) Particular Persons and Associates. A grant to a certain named person and associates vests an estate only in the person named[38] in the absence of anything to show that there existed at any time any associates of his in the title, that he was connected with any person or persons therein, or that there was any limitation of his power to convey or any purpose for inserting or referring to associates.[39]

Heirs are entitled even though there is a variance in the ancestor's name, where his identity is clearly proven. Leland v. Eckert, 81 Tex. 226, 16 S. W. 897.

Question of identity is not raised by a difference of one letter in the spelling of the ancestor's name in certificates of land introduced by heirs to show title, but which did not change the pronunciation of said name. Lemberg v. Cabaniss, 75 Tex. 228, 12 S. W. 844.

34. Thus "P. H. & Son" sufficiently designates the son (Hoffman v. Porter, 12 Fed. Cas. No. 6,577, 2 Brock. 156); and where the designation is "A. B. & Company," A and B who are well-known members will take, and although the other partners could not take as grantees under the general term "company," A and B could hold in trust for themselves and associates (Beaman v. Whitney, 20 Me. 413). So when the deed is to T. Barnett & Bro., the entire legal estate is vested in T, subject to an equitable suit by the brother to reform the deed by naming him as grantee on proof of identity, but in the meantime T could convey a good legal title. Barnett v. Lachman, 12 Nev. 361. Again a deed to certain designated partners "& Co." only transfers the legal title to those named and not to the partners constituting the "Co." (Gossett v. Kent, 19 Ark. 602; Winter v. Stock, 29 Cal. 407, 89 Am. Dec. 57; Arthur v. Weston, 22 Mo. 378) and a deed by the partners named will pass a valid title (Winter v. Stock, 29 Cal. 407, 89 Am. Dec. 57).

Unincorporated associations taking as copartners see infra, V, A, 5, c, (VIII).

35. The grant itself will be examined to ascertain the true name, and it may be averred and proved that the corporation was intended, and all the circumstances surrounding its execution may be considered. The courts have also in such cases been liberal in correcting inaccuracies and misnomers, so as not to frustrate the object, if identity is manifest. Such person can convey good title even though he holds for himself and as trustee for others. Ennis v. Brown, 1 N. Y. App. Div. 22, 36 N. Y. Suppl. 737.

(x) Representative or Official Capacity. Words designating the representative or official capacity of the grantee may be only descriptio personæ and will be construed accordingly, unless it can be inferred to the contrary from the instrument,[40] especially where there is an absence of all proof tending to show the existence of a trust estate and there is none created by the deed.[41] But such words may not be descriptive merely and the grantee may take the title, not in his individual capacity, but in the capacity designated.[42] The word "trustees" may, however, be also regarded as mere surplusage except as a descriptio personarum.[43] Generally, however, in determining whether the grantee takes individually, or as administrator or trustee, the court will also consider the phraseology of the deed and the application or non-application of statutes,[44] or the absence of a statute or of words preventing the vesting of the legal interest,[45] or the absence of all circumstances showing that something was to be done by the trustee,[46] or it will read the entire deed according to its terms and in the light of surrounding and recited facts,[47] or in connection with the trustee's declarations or

40. It seems to be well settled that where the name of any person is followed simply by his title or name of office without any other statement that he is acting in the capacity indicated by the words which follow his name, such words are merely descriptio personæ, and the person is bound or charged individually only as the case may be. This rule applies to conveyances and the title vests in the grantee individually and not as trustee for the person or corporation indicated by the words which follow the name, and unless it can be inferred from the instrument that they are acting or take title officially, the words will be held to be inserted by way of description and will not affect their rights as grantees. Pfeiffer v. Rheinfrank, 2 N. Y. App. Div. 574, 37 N. Y. Suppl. 1076, per Rumsey, J. See Barrett v. Cochran, 11 S. C. 29, declaring that in that case "trustee" appended to name might be regarded as mere descriptio personæ.

Rule applies to an "administrator" (Innerarity v. Kennedy, 2 Stew. (Ala.) 156; Jackson v. Roberts, 95 Ky. 410, 25 S. W. 879, 15 Ky. L. Rep. 831; Richardson v. McLemore, 60 Miss. 315), to trustees (Cairns v. Hay, 21 N. J. L. 174; Kanenbley v. Volkenberg, 70 N. Y. App. Div. 97, 75 N. Y. Suppl. 8; Towar v. Hale, 46 Barb. (N. Y.) 361; Van Schaick v. Lese, 31 Misc. (N. Y.) 610, 66 N. Y. Suppl. 64), to a deed in trust to an incorporated association (Hart v. Seymour, 147 Ill. 598, 35 N. E. 246), and to a "guardian" (Hannen v. Ewait, 18 Pa. St. 9).

41. Kanenbley v. Volkenberg, 70 N. Y. App. Div. 97, 75 N. Y. Suppl. 8.

42. Johnson v. Calnan, 19 Colo. 168, 34 Pac. 905, 41 Am. St. Rep. 224. See Brown v. Combs, 29 N. J. L. 36, where the deed was to B, trustee, etc., and the court said that whether these words of addition, trustee, etc., were meant to express a trust or were merely descriptive of the person of the grantee, they imported no grant to the beneficiary, it being clear upon the face of the deed that the grant was to B and not to him in trust.

43. Hart v. Seymour, 147 Ill. 598, 35 N. E. 246. Again, if the addition of the word "trustee" should be regarded as sufficient to create a trust, it would be no evidence of the previous existence of a trust, especially where the words used imply that no such estate was held by the trustee. Barrett v. Cochran, 11 S. C. 29.

If there is no person in existence with authority or capacity to take as beneficiaries, under a deed to persons as trustees, the title may be vested in them individually. Robie v. Sedgwick, 35 Barb. (N. Y.) 319.

44. Within this rule a conveyance to an administrator "in trust for the absolute use and benefit of the estate and those interested therein" does not make him a mere naked and dry trustee, nor are the heirs vested with such a title as will enable them to maintain ejectment against a purchaser at a sale by the administrator de bonis non under order of the probate court. Pittman v. Corniff, 52 Ala. 83 [following You v. Flinn, 34 Ala. 409].

45. Deed to M, administrator, and his successors and assigns forever, no express trust appearing, and the grant being coupled with no restrictions, vests the legal interest in M as the only grantee capable of taking, and he can convey the legal title unless restrained by statute, and the legal holder or trustee is the only one that can pass title. Such a case differs from that of a naked trustee for the use of another. Little v. Lesia, 5 Mich. 119.

46. Rule applies where there was a deed of land in fee to one of the solicitors of a state by name and the recital was that he bought for the state and there was an absence of all circumstances such as something to be done by the trustee and the like sufficient to retain the title in the trustee the legal title will be vested in the state. Lamars v. Simpson, 1 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 71, 42 Am. Dec. 345.

47. A deed in trust to a certain person should not be construed as primarily a deed for the purpose of dedication of a highway where there is nothing in it, whether read according to its terms or in connection with the surrounding facts, to show such dedication, and where the deed, read in the light of surrounding and recited facts, is a deed in fee in certain lands which had already been dedicated. Guthrie v. New Haven, 31 Conn. 308.

admissions,[48] or the fact that his signature is as an individual,[49] or of the beneficiary's acts controverting a trust,[50] or it will apply the rules of construction as to ascertaining the intention, reconciling repugnant parts if possible so as to support the instrument, and will give effect to technical words, having in view also the relative force and effect of the habendum and other clauses and rejecting the habendum or reconciling it with other clauses according to the law.[51] But a trust is not annexed in favor of the wife, nor can it grow out of a recital of the inducement to the making of a deed, where the title is directly transmitted, and upon a consideration received from the husband to him alone.[52] A grantee of lands may, however, by the same conveyance, take an undivided portion in his own right and another portion as trustee.[53]

(xi) Questions For Court or Jury. Although the court should decide who holds title where it rests upon the legal effect of the deed,[54] yet the court may instruct the jury that the legal title vests in a certain person or not, and leave it to them to decide as a fact who is entitled, where the identity of such person is in issue.[55]

B. Property Conveyed — 1. Mode of Determining in General — a. Intent of Parties. The intention of the parties as apparent in a deed should generally control in determining the property conveyed thereby.[56] But if the intent is

48. If named trustee acknowledges the trust and that he holds the title for another's benefit, and such beneficiary actually exists, even though unnamed in the deed, this is sufficient, and a judgment and levy against such trustee individually are a lien only on his personal interest in the property. Boardman v. Willard, 73 Iowa 20, 34 N. W. 487.

Illustrations.—The descriptive words "heirs of her body" cannot control the force of the words in the granting part of the deed "unto the said party of the second part, her heirs and assigns." The latter words determine to whom the land is conveyed and import the transfer to such party of a fee-simple estate, nor can peculiar language of the habendum destroy the effect of those words and make another the grantee, and where such habendum and the description provides that the party of the "second part" holds through one as her "trustee and agent," they do not control the construction of the deed in this respect, and no estate being conveyed to him he cannot hold for the use of another. Baulos v. Ash, 19 Ill. 187. If the deed names the grantees as "trustees of" a designated person, but no trust is created, and the habendum is to them, "their successors and assigns," this does not show that the conveyance was to them as trustees and not as individuals. Kanenbley v. Volkenberg, 70 N. Y. App. Div. 97, 75 N. Y. Suppl. 8. Again within the rule that the habendum may be rejected when clearly and irreconcilably repugnant to the premises, but that a construction should be adopted which renders both consistent, a legal estate may vest in trustees and not in partners named as tenants in common. Mowry v. Bradley, 11 R. I. 370. Descriptions should be construed liberally according to the intent of the parties. Peck v. Mallams, 10 N. Y. 509.

Language used in a particular sense should be so construed as to accord with the intention of the parties. Treat v. Strickland, 23 Me. 234.

Where to give effect to the boundaries mentioned in a deed would be to defeat the evident intent of the parties they will not be not apparent from the deed resort may be had to the general rules of construction.[57]

b. Construction Aided by Acts of Parties. Where the words used in the description in a deed are uncertain or ambiguous and the parties have by their acts given a practical construction thereto the construction so put upon the deed by them may be resorted to, to aid in ascertaining their intention.[58]

c. Entire Description Should Be Considered. The entire description in a deed should be considered in determining the identity of the land conveyed.[59] Clauses inserted in a deed should be regarded as inserted for a purpose and should be given a meaning that will aid the description. Every part of a deed ought if possible to take effect and every word to operate.[60]

d. Inconsistent Recitals. If recitals in a deed are inconsistent or repugnant the first recital does not necessarily prevail over the latter,[61] but the whole language of the deed is to be construed together in order that the true construction may be ascertained.[62] In such a case the court will look into the surrounding facts and will adopt that construction which is the most definite and certain and which will carry out the evident intention of the parties.[63] And if the land conveyed is sufficiently identified by certain parts of the description an impossible or senseless course should be disregarded, and the deed sustained.[64]

e. Ambiguous Description. Where the description of the property intended to be conveyed is ambiguous the identity of such property must be gathered from the intention of the parties as shown by the instrument itself and the accompanying circumstances such as those surrounding and connected with the parties and the land at the time.[65] Words may if necessary be qualified by intendment and particular clauses and provisions qualified, transferred, or rejected in order to ascertain the intention.[66]

to in a deed as bounding the land conveyed the former land becomes a monument which will control distances.[72] And where a patent or grant conveys a tract of land by metes and bounds, the land under water, which is within the bounds of the grant as described, will pass.[73] Again where two parcels of land are of the same description and the grantor had title to but one parcel, a deed using the common description will be construed as applying to the parcel in which he had an interest.[74]

b. Land on Side of Street or Bank of River. A conveyance of land bounded by a street will carry the fee to the center of the street, where such fee is in the grantor unless a contrary intention is shown.[75] So a deed of several blocks of land which are separated by streets as laid out by the grantor will convey the title to such streets the same as if they had been expressly mentioned.[76] Again it has been determined that where property is conveyed as bounded by a river it will be presumed that the parties intended the bed of the river ad medium filum to pass by the conveyance.[77]

rather than the latter.[90] A particular description may, however, yield to a general description where the former is defective;[91] where the grant is made certain under the general description and is less than under the particular;[92] or where there is a clear intent to have the general control.[93] Again a reference to another deed may control over a particular description,[94] although such a reference may be construed as a help to trace title and not as enlarging the grant.[95]

f. Recitals in Habendum and Covenants. Description of lot by number of such lot in a survey or plan is sufficient to make the survey a part of the deed (Dolde v. Vodicka, 49 Mo. 98; Richardson v. McKeesport, 18 Pa. Super. Ct. 199), and may control in determining the identity of the property conveyed (Baltimore Bldg., etc., Assoc. v. Bethel, 120 N. C. 344, 27 S. E. 29). And where a patent grants a lot by number or letter only a description used by the crown lands department in framing the patent is admissible in evidence for the purpose of determining the metes and bounds of such lot. Kenny v. Caldwell, 21 Ont. App. 110 [affirmed in 24 Can. Supreme Ct. 699]. But where there is a particular description by metes and bounds and the map number given conflicts therewith, the lot must be located according to the particular description. Hale v. Swift, 63 S. W. 288, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 497.

of the land conveyed.[8] And where a plat is referred to in a description in a deed it may be used to identify the land conveyed, although it does not conform to the statute.[9] So a reference to a plat "as recorded" refers to the original plat which was duly filed for record and not to an erroneous transcript therefrom.[10] And although a map in a deed is not expressly referred to therein it may be treated as a part of the description when it was evidently intended to be so treated.[11] But a plan only becomes a part of the deed where the grant is made according to such plan distinctly and certainly designated by the deed, and where a certain plan is so designated another plan cannot be referred to.[12]

h. Subsequent Description Limiting Prior One. A general description will not be limited by a particular one where the latter follows in the sense of reiteration or affirmation.[13] And where by the granting clause in a deed a certain lot and block in a town is designated as the property intended to be conveyed an intent to convey the whole lot will be presumed, although the description is followed by metes and bounds embracing an area less than the lot.[14] Such a rule has also been

j. Quantity of Interest Conveyed — (i) In General. Where a part interest in property is conveyed the intention of the parties should if possible be ascertained and given effect.[27] So where an intent is clear from the whole deed to convey the entire interest of the grantor the instrument should be so construed as to effectuate such intent.[28] Again in such cases the rules apply that where the description is of a doubtful character the instrument should be construed against the grantor;[29] that a general clause which is clear is not limited by subsequent words,[30] or by subsequent reference to other deeds;[31] and that a particular recital which is clear and explicit will not be enlarged by subsequent general words.[32] A clearly expressed intent, however, to make an exception or reservation in a deed will be given effect,[33] although if there is any uncertainty or ambiguity in the language used the grantee should have the benefit of the doubt or the ambiguity.[34] Again where the grantor conveys all his "right, title and interest" and he holds title in trust for certain heirs, the deed will be construed as conveying only his actual interest and not his interest as indicated by the records.[35]

(II) All of Property of Grantor. The question as to what property passes by a deed may be controlled by a general clause conveying all of the grantor's property.[36] The construction of a description with such a clause therein is dependent upon the intention of the parties, and where it appears from the entire deed that it was the manifest intention to convey all of the property of the grantor a construction consistent therewith will be given.[37] In construing a clause of this character the rule applies that the language is to be construed against the grantor.[38]

(III) After-Acquired Title or Property. Where the language is clear and unambiguous and there is no intention apparent from the instrument to convey after-acquired property or title the deed will not be construed as a conveyance thereof.[39]

A general clause will not pass personal property given by the grantor to a third party prior to the conveyance (Norment v. Parks, 71 N. C. 227), an interest in land previously conveyed (Foster v. Harris, 10 Pa. St. 457); land conveyed by a deed ineffectual to pass the interest of one of the grantors (Drane v. Gregory, 3 B. Mon. (Ky.) 619), or leaseholds (Hopkinson v. Lusk, 34 Beav. 215, 10 Jur. N. S. 288, 10 L. T. Rep. N. S. 122, 12 Wkly. Rep. 392).

A deed or a mortgage which conveys all right or claim to land in a certain town which the grantor now has will not include a mere possibility of a reversion in the future, the grantor at the time having no right or claim to such land and the words in their natural import not being broad enough to include the same. (iv) Part of Fractional Section. To identify land granted by United States patents resort may be had to the plat and field-notes of the government survey, as in the case of a deed of half of a fractional section.[40]

(v) Description of Land as Part of Large Tract. A conveyance of one half of a lot is to be construed as a conveyance of one half in quantity.[41] And where one who owns an undivided interest in a tract of land executes a deed which purports to convey all of his interest in and to a certain number of acres or part of such tract, it will operate as a conveyance, not of the part or quantity designated, but of an undivided interest therein.[42]

(vi) Conveyance of Undivided Interest and Other Land. Where a deed conveys a moiety or undivided part of a piece of land and then proceeds with a description of other land without express words showing an intention to convey all the latter described land, the words of limitation used in describing the first-mentioned parcel will be construed as also applying to the latter.[43]

k. Particular Words and Terms — (i) In General. Words or terms in a description of a deed should ordinarily be construed according to their general sense,[44] although a word is not in all cases to be so construed where a different construed as conveying only the real estate owned by the grantor at the date of its execution which he continued to own when it took effect, and did not convey after-acquired realty. Libby v. Thornton, 64 Me. 479. So a conveyance of "all my interest and title that I have or may have" in certain land will not pass an interest subsequently inherited by the grantor. sense is indicated by the context,[45] or in the light of the circumstances surrounding the execution of the deed,[46] or where a different meaning has been given by convention, in which case a construction in acccordance therewith should be given.[47]

(II) More or Less. Where land is described in a deed by sectional subdivisions or by metes and bounds the words "more or less" when used in connection with such description are construed as used for the purpose of proximately designating the quantity of land within such subdivision or boundaries and not as referring to the state of the title to such land.[48] Where, however, such words are used in connection with a description in which the number of acres conveyed is stated the recital of quantity is a matter of description;[49] and the use of the words "more or less" has been construed as meaning that the parties run the risk of gain or loss in respect to quantity.[50] Ordinarily, however, such words should be restricted to an allowance for slight or immaterial variations,[51] and cannot be construed to enlarge the boundaries mentioned in the deed.[52] Again these words will not control the quantity stated in the description when it appears that the grantee accepted the deed on the express representations of the grantor that they contained a certain number of acres.[53]

3. Appurtenances,[54] Incidents, and Rights Passing With Deed — a. Appurtenances in General. It is a general rule that upon the conveyance of property the law implies a grant of all the incidents rightfully belonging to it at the time of conveyance and which are essential to the full and perfect enjoyment of the property.[55]

And a similar rule obtains in the case of property which is reserved or excepted in a deed.[56]

b. Land as an Appurtenance — (i) In General. Land does not as a general rule pass under a conveyance as an appurtenance to land.[57] It may so pass, however, where such appears to have been the intention of the parties.[58] And the word "appurtenances" may when construed in connection with the nature and subject of the thing granted be sufficient to pass title to land as an appurtenance thereto.[59]

(ii) Land Underneath or Contiguous to Building. A conveyance of a

Application of rule.— Running water will pass with a conveyance of land (Canham v. Fisk, 2 Cromp. & J. 126, 1 L. J. Exch. 61, 2 Tyrw. 155), or an easement in the nature of an agreement not to build on adjoining property (Hills v. Miller, 3 Paige (N. Y.) 254, 24 Am. Dec. 218), as may the use and enjoyment of an alley adjoining the property (Murphey v. Harker, 115 Ga. 77, 41 S. E. 585), the right of subjacent and adjacent support in a conveyance of land to a railway company for the purposes of the railroad (Caledonian R. Co. v. Sprat, 2 Jur. N. S. 623, 2 Macq. H. L. 449, 4 Wkly. Rep. 659), the grantor's interest in an irrigating ditch over the land for the construction of which he gave permission in consideration of the use of sufficient water to irrigate his land (Sloan v. Glancy, 19 Mont. 70, 47 Pac. 334), and the right to conduct water from springs on the grantor's land (Spencer v. Kilmer, 151 N. Y. 390, 45 N. E. 865). And pipes and meters put in by a realty company to make its lots available for residence purposes are appurtenant to the lots and pass to the purchasers thereof. Mulrooney v. O'Bear, 80 Mo. App. 471. So a sale of a gas plant carries the franchise to use the streets for mains and pipes which are a necessary appurtenance to the business of the company (Lawrence v. Hennessy, 165 Mo. 659, 65 S. W. 717); the right to use a switch track passes by a conveyance of a stone quarry (Kamer v. Bryant, 103 Ky. 723, 46 S. W. 14, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 340), a deed of fixtures on land conveys the right to operate them in the manner they had theretofore been operated (Dietz v. Mission Transfer Co., 95 Cal. 92, 30 Pac. 380), fixtures pass by the grant of a house (Hare v. Horton, 5 B. & Ad. 715, 3 L. J. K. B. 41, 2 N. & M. 428, 27 E. C. L. 302); and personalty may in some cases pass as an appurtenance (Merrill v. Wyman, 80 Me. 491, 15 Atl. 58; Farrar v. Stackpole, 6 Me. 154, 19 Am. Dec. 201); but not where wholly disconnected with the premises (Scheidt v. Belz, 4 Ill. App. 431. See also Ottumwa Woolen Mill Co. v. Hawley, 44 Iowa 57, 24 Am. Rep. 719). So a vault under a street is not such an appurtenance to the building as to pass by a mere conveyance of the latter. Coster v. Peters, 5 Rob. (N. Y.) 192. And a right not connected with the enjoyment or use of a lot cannot be annexed to the land so as to become an appurtenant thereto. Linthicum v. Ray, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 241, 19 L. ed. 657. Again the words together "with all ways, thereto belonging, or in anywise appertaining" will not pass a way not strictly appurtenant. Barlow v. Rhodes, 1 Cromp. & M. 439, 2 L. J. Exch. 91, 3 Tyrw. 280. So a spring of water which the owner of lands acquired by deed in adjoining lands does not pass by a conveyance of his lands which does not mention the spring or appurtenances, his estate in the spring being a fee and not an easement. Howard v. Britton, 67 N. H. 484, 41 Atl. 269. And an easement not in existence when a conveyance was made and which was not mentioned therein does not pass. Peters v. Worth, 164 Mo. 431, 64 S. d. Rights of Action and Claims in General. An absolute warranty deed from the vendor in a land contract will operate as an assignment of all his rights in the land and will include a statutory remedy against persons holding land contrary to the covenants of executory contracts of purchase to the grantees, and in a proceeding by the grantee to enforce such remedy the deed is competent evidence.[73]

4. Questions For Court and Jury. Where, in an endeavor to ascertain the intention of the parties in respect to the property conveyed, extrinsic evidence is resorted to for the purpose of explaining the description, the question as to the identity of the property becomes one for the jury.[74] So where the description is uncertain or ambiguous it may be a question for the jury to determine what property was intended to be conveyed,[75] or what to be reserved.[76] And it is a matter of fact for the jury to determine whether particular land is or is not within the description in a deed,[77] or whether a particular survey was referred to.[78] But where there is a clear and unambiguous description in a deed the court will construe the terms used.[79]

are omitted. Again it has been decided that words of inheritance are not essential to pass the absolute estate of a grantor in personal property,[86] or in a grant to the government.[87] And the fee will pass in a deed to a corporation, although the word "successors" is omitted.[88]

(II) Words Giving Power of Disposition. Where a deed confers upon the grantee an absolute power[89] of disposition of the property conveyed it will operate as a conveyance of the fee.[90] So an absolute estate will be vested in a grantee by a trust deed reserving a life-estate and then to such persons as the grantee may appoint or in default of such appointment by him then to him in fee.[91]

(III) Location of Words of Inheritance. Although words of inheritance are essential to the conveyance of a fee and they are not inserted in the granting clause of a deed, yet if the entire deed shows an intent to convey a fee and such words are inserted elsewhere they may be connected with the granting clause.[92]

And a grantee will take an estate in fee where such an estate is given in the premises of the deed, although the word "heirs" is omitted in the habendum.[93]

b. Conditional Estates in General.[94] A contingency may be created by any expression or words which clearly import that the vesting or continuance of an estate depends on a certain or supposed contingency.[95] A qualified, base, or determinable fee is created by a deed of land to be used for a specified purpose with a provision that it shall revert to the grantor if such use is discontinued.[96] And a fee on condition subsequent may also be conveyed by a deed which provides that the land shall revert to the grantor unless used for purposes specified;[97] or that it shall revert upon the payment of a certain sum to the grantee,[98] if buildings are erected thereon in a specified manner,[99] or if the grantee shall die without children surviving.[1] Again a deed to one for life with remainder to another and the lawful heirs of her body with power of appointment in case she dies childless or unmarried is construed as creating in the one entitled to the remainder a conditional fee.[2]

c. Estates Tail.[3] In many states statutory provisions have been passed in regard to estates tail. So under some statutes a deed to a person and the heirs of the grantee's body which under the common law would create an estate in fee tail is construed as conveying to the grantee an estate for life,[4] and under others an estate in fee simple.[5]

d. Life-Estates[6]—(i) Words Creating. Words of inheritance are only essential to create an estate greater than a life-estate.[7] A conveyance therefore by a tenant by curtesy initiate, without words of inheritance, which would give the grantee an estate for his life if the former were seized in fee, will confer an estate for the life of the grantor.[8] So the words "bargained and sold" are operative to pass an estate for life.[9] Again a conveyance of land to the grantor's wife for the life of the grantor "and at his death to revert and reinvest in fee simple to his heirs at law or devisees, should he leave a will," is construed as passing only a life-estate.[10] And where personal property is given to one and his issue or the heirs of his body with limitation over in the event of his dying without issue or heirs of his body, the first taker has an estate for life only.[11]

(ii) Grant of Income or Usufruct. A grant of an income in, or the beneficial use of, land will create an estate in the land itself.[12]

(iii) Remainder Depending on Issue Surviving Grantee. Where land is conveyed to a person and his heirs or if he dies without issue then to another, and he dies without issue, a warranty deed by him in his lifetime will only convey the estate which terminated at his death.[13] And under a statute in

A life-estate may be created by a deed which provides that on the death of the grantee the property shall go to her children, but which contains no express covenants with respect to the grantee's heirs at law (Loring v. Eliot, 16 Gray (Mass.) 568), by a deed which recites that a certain person is to have his support off the land during his natural life (Myers v. Cullum, 152 Ind. 700, 51 N. E. 918), by a deed of a tract of land to one for the use and benefit of such person during his natural life and to his children and their heirs and assigns (Burnett v. Summerlin, 110 Ga. 349, 35 S. E. 655), by a deed to one to have and to hold during his natural life and then to be divided among specified persons in a certain proportion (Palmer Oil, etc., Co. v. Blodgett, 60 Kan. 712, 57 Pac. 947. See Simonton v. White, 93 Tex. 165, 53 S. W. 339, 77 Am. W. 979, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 226), by a conveyance of a life-estate to one and at his death the property to go to his heirs and assigns (German Nat. Bank v. Waring, 37 S. W. 64, 18 Ky. L. Rep. 438), or at his death to the children then living and the heirs of any who may be dead (Polk v. Gunther, 107 Tenn. 16, 64 S. W. 25), or at his death to his son and his heirs or assigns forever (Temple v. Wright, 93 Va. 338, 26 S. E. 844), or after his demise to a third party, his heirs and assigns (Bates v. Virolet, 33 N. Y. App. Div. 436, 53 N. Y. Suppl. 893). And see Clay v. Clay, 72 S. W. 810, 24 Ky. L. Even where it is provided by statute that if it be the intention of the grantor to pass any less estate than an estate of inheritance, it shall be so expressed in the deed, such an intention is sufficiently expressed by a proviso in a deed, after the granting clause, that the grantee shall take only a life-estate with remainder in fee to others, unless the remainder is one to which the rule in Shelley's case applies. e. Remainder[16] and Reversions[17] — (i) Who May Take Remainder. One who is not technically a party to an indenture may take thereby an estate in remainder.[18]

(ii) Vested Remainders. Where a remainder is limited to take effect in possession, if ever, upon the determination of a particular estate and the latter estate is to determine by an event which must unavoidably happen by the efflux of time, the remainder will be vested in interest as soon as the remainder-man is in esse and ascertained, provided such remainder depends upon no other event or contingency and nothing but the death of the remainder-man before the determination of the particular estate will prevent the remainder from vesting in possession.[19] So a vested remainder exists where property is deeded to a person for life with remainder to another at the death of the one holding the life-interest,[20] as where property is conveyed to one for life with remainder to his children.[21]

A deed reserving a life-interest in the grantor, with remainder after the death of the grantor and the grantee to the grantee's children, but in default of such children then living or in esse, then to descend to designated persons, creates a contingent remainder in the children. Benson v. Edwards, (Tenn. Ch. App. 1901) 61 S. W. 1034.

An equitable estate for life is given to one to whom the rents and profits are to be paid during her life under a deed of land which creates a trust for that purpose and provides that at her death the property is to go to such children as shall survive her. Wood v. Mather, 38 Barb. (N. Y.) 473.

children as may reach a certain age;[24] to another in the event that the latter survives the person holding the life-interest;[25] to one in the event that the person having the life-interest dies leaving no children or representatives of children;[26] or to a trustee[27] to be held by him during the life of another to whom he is to pay the rents of the land and upon the death of such other person to sell the property and divide the proceeds equally among the children of the grantor.[28] So it has been decided that a contingent remainder is created by a deed to one for life with the remainder to the heirs of his body, since it could not be known who would answer this description until the death of the life-tenant.[29]

(iv) Vested and Contingent Remainder in Same Property. Although a covenant which creates a vested and contingent remainder in the same property is declared to be unusual, yet it is decided that there is no principle of law to prevent it.[30]

(v) Presumption Against Creation of Cross Remainders. It is only by express limitation that cross remainders in a deed can be given, as they can never be implied.[31]

(vi) Division Per Stirpes. Where it is provided in a deed that the remainder shall be divided per stirpes, the children of one of the immediate issue, still living, do not participate in the division;[32] and where one of two or

Where land is to revert to the grantor and his heirs in case the grantee dies without children, and the grantor died, after the decease of the grantor, without any children, it is held that the land will vest in those who were heirs of the grantor at the decease of the grantee and not in those who were heirs at the grantor's decease. (VII) Reversions. A reversion is held to apply to an estate which remains in the grantor and his heirs and to which the right of possession arises upon the determination by its own limitation of an outstanding particular estate, or an estate for life or years, and not to apply to a right to possession arising from a breach of condition.[34]

2. Construction of Particular Deeds — a. In General — (I) Application of General Rules. In determining the construction of clauses in a deed creating estates, the intention of the parties should be ascertained and be carried into effect if possible without violating any rule of law.[35] And the court will lean to a construction speedily vesting the estate.[36]

been determined that the statute of uses and trusts does not forbid future contingent limitations of real estate in favor of expected issue from a son or a daughter.[40] Again there may be a conveyance by the same deed of a reversionary estate in fee and a particular estate for life or years.[41]

(B) Effect of Attempt to Create Invalid Future Estate. In case of an invalid limitation over, the precedent estate will stand unaffected by the void limitation, the estate becoming vested in the first taker, according to the terms on which it was devised or granted.[42]

(III) Estate in Trees and Timber. A grant of the use of the timber on certain land will convey only an incorporeal right to use it and not the timber itself or the soil.[43] And a conveyance of standing timber with a stipulation that the grantee shall have the right for or until a certain time to enter and remove the same will operate as a sale of so much timber as the grantee may remove during the time designated.[44] But an estate in inheritance is created by a grant to one, his heirs and assigns, of all timber standing and growing in a close forever with the right at any time to enter and remove the same.[45]

(IV) Conveyance of Portion of Building. Under a grant of a certain room or portion of a building with no stipulation as to rebuilding in case of fire or other casualty, if the identity and existence of the room or portion is extinguished by the destruction of the building by fire, and there is nothing upon which the conveyance can operate the rights of the grantee will be terminated.[46]

Conveyance by a father to a son of an interest in a dwelling with a recital that the

b. Interest Created Dependent on Form of Conveyance — (i) In General. The general rule is that a deed will pass whatever interest or estate the grantor may have unless it shows an intention to convey a less estate.[47] And it has been held that a deed of bargain and sale will, without the aid of a statute of uses, transfer both the legal and equitable estates.[48] So it is decided that a general warranty deed conveys the right to retain the title to secure the unpaid purchase-money due from a prior recorded title bond purchaser of an undivided interest in such property and will operate as a transfer of such unpaid purchase-money to the grantee.[49] Again, although the words "legal representatives" are ordinarily understood to mean executors or administrators, yet such words may by their association with other words be construed to mean heirs at law.[50]

(ii) Deed of Release[51] or Quitclaim — (a) In General. Title to property may be as effectually transferred by a quitclaim deed as by a grant or bargain and sale;[52] and such a deed will convey whatever title or estate the grantor may have in the land at the time it is given.[53] But where quitclaim deeds were merely intended to effect a partition, the parties cannot use them against each

Where in a deed which describes the estate conveyed as "reversions and remainder," an intention is apparent to transmit whatever interest the grantor had in the lands, and the deed is ancient and there is no evidence that any particular estate ever existed, the deed will be construed as a conveyance of the fee, the grantor holding such interest at the time. (III) Conveyance of All Right, Title, and Interest. A conveyance of all of the grantor's right, title, and interest in and to certain described property will be construed as a conveyance of all of his estate in such property, and the whole estate will vest in the grantee.[60]

(IV) Conveyance of Undivided Interests. Where one deeds a certain number of acres out of, or a certain part of, a tract of land without any description of the land conveyed so that it can be identified the grantee takes an undivided interest in the land proportionate to the part conveyed,[61] and becomes by such deed a tenant in common.[62]

v. Butler, 63 Tex. 210 (holding that a quitclaim deed by one of all his interest in a community estate as his father's heir will not convey the interest inherited from his mother). And compare Kennedy v. Farley, 82 Hun (N. Y.) 227, 31 N. Y. Suppl. 274.

A statutory provision that a deed which purports to "convey and warrant" the premises described shall be effective "to transfer all the right, title, claim, and possession of the grantor" is construed as applying, only when an intent to convey a less estate is not actually expressed in the deed. Hart v. Gardner, 74 Miss. 153, 20 So. 877.

Operating only as quitclaim.— A deed, however, of all the grantor's "right, title, claim, and interest" with a recital therein that the grantor forever quitclaims all his claim and interest in the land described is to be construed as a quitclaim deed. Shepard v. Hunsacker, 1 Tex. Unrep. Cas. 578. And it has also been decided that where one who sells a tract of land sells also his "entire interest" in all improvements on adjacent public land, he only gives to the vendee a quitclaim deed of his interest in such improvements. A deed by a tenant in common of a number of acres in common in a tract, which is less than his whole share, has been held to operate as a conveyance of a proportionate share, the whole number of acres in the tract being ascertained. Great Falls Co. v. Worster, 15 N. H. 412.

A deed reserving to the grantor the improvement of half of the premises with necessary wood for family use during his life and that of his wife will pass one moiety to the use of the grantee and his heirs and the other to the use of the grantor and his wife for their lives with remainder in fee to the grantee and his heirs. Emery v. Chase, 5 Me. 232.

If the grantee may elect, under the terms of the deed to him, out of what part of the tract he will take the part or quantity conveyed to him he thereby acquires an equity to such part or quantity to be designated by him, and until he has so designated he has no title to any specific tract. Dull v. Blum, 68 Tex. 299, 4 S. W. 489.

Where a conveyance is made to partners jointly of real estate upon which they, holding unequal interests, have foreclosed a mortgage and bid in the property, and their respective interests are not designated in the conveyance, it has been decided that a deed by the executor of the one holding the greater interest will pass the legal title to one-half the land and the equitable title to the additional interest held by the testator. Conveyance to one grantee of the western half and to another of the eastern half of a tract of land does not make them tenants in common, where by the deed to one of them the specific part conveyed to him can be located by finding the adjacent boundaries called for in the deed to him. Ricks v. Pope, 129 N. C. 52, 39 S. E. 638.

(v) Conveyance in Form of Lease. An instrument in the form of a lease may operate as a conveyance in fee.[63]

(vi) Grant of Right of Occupancy. A deed of gift to one with a provision that another shall have the right to occupy the premises and to receive the rents, issues, and profits of the land will give to the latter a legal title entitling him to possession.[64]

c. Interest Acquired Where Grantor Has Distinct Title or Interests — (i) In General. Where a grantor possesses distinct interests in the property described and there is nothing in the deed to indicate that his entire interest was not conveyed, but on the other hand an intention to convey whatever interest he had in the property may be gathered from the instrument, it should be construed in accordance with that intention.[65] Again the right of a grantee is declared to be co-extensive with that of the grantor,[66] and it is decided that where the latter under a will had a right in equity to contribution from his co-devisees for the value of the land devised to and granted by him, such equity passes to his grantee.[67] But a court cannot give to a deed a more extended operation than the legal import of the words authorize.[68]

(ii) Deed Given in Representative or Official Capacity — (a) In General. Generally speaking deeds executed by persons in their official or representative capacities will pass title to the property and bind those whom they represent in the same manner as if the deeds had been made, executed, and delivered by the latter.[69] And the legal estate of a trustee will not pass by a deed which purports only to convey all the right, title, and interest of the cestui que trust therein.[70]

(B) By Personal Representatives.[71] The personal rights of the administrator to land of a decedent will not pass by a deed by him upon a sale of such land under order of a probate court,[72] such deed operating only to convey the interest of the decedent.[73] A conveyance, however, of land by one both as executrix and individually, with a warranty in both capacities, will pass both her individual and representative interest;[74] but if a conveyance is executed by her, as administratrix or executrix, of land, pursuant to a sale under order of court, it has been determined that she is not thereby precluded from claiming dower.[75]

d. Deed Purporting to Convey Estate Other Than Grantor Possesses — (1) Validity and Effect in General. A deed which purports to convey a greater estate than the grantor has will be void only as to the excess, and will be construed as a conveyance of that which it was in his power to convey.[76] And

A deed executed by one who enters into covenants in several distinct capacities, where he has authority so to do, will convey the estate of those he represents in the same manner as if a separate deed had been given by him in each capacity. Lithgow v. Kavenagh, 9 Mass. 161.

If a second mortgagee, who is also a co-assignee in bankruptcy, makes a quitclaim deed of the property to a third person, such third person takes only the rights of the second mortgagee, and the equity of redemption remains in the assignee in bankruptcy. Ritchie v. Williams, 11 Mass. 50. So where a deed executed by one who has the legal title purports to convey the land, the grantor will be estopped to deny that the title passes, although he professes to execute the deed as administrator of one who possessed no title and of whose estate he has no legal administration. where the interest of a tenant in common in land is conveyed by a deed which purports to convey the entire interest therein, and a subsequent conveyance by metes and bounds of portions of such tract is made by that grantee to others by deeds purporting to convey the entire interest, it is decided that the latter will take proportionate shares of the individual interest of the original tenant in common.[77] But a conveyance by one who is only heir apparent to the property conveyed is held to pass no title.[78]

(II) Conveyance of Contingent, Expectant, or Defeasible Estate. One who is the owner of an expectant or contingent estate may by an absolute conveyance pass such interest to the grantee.[79] Again where the estate of the grantor is defeasible by his death without heirs of his body, his grantee will only be vested with a defeasible estate which is terminated by the death of the grantor without such heirs.[80]

A warranty in fee by one who has only a life-estate in the land conveyed, which by the terms of the deed to him is to go "to the heirs of his body" after his death, or if he dies without heirs then to another, will not bar or rebut the claim of an heir who took by purchase and not by descent. Moore v. Parker, 34 N. C. 123.

This rule is declared to apply alike to equitable and to legal estates.[83] But it has been decided that it operates simply upon the words of inheritance and does not affect the rules for determining the quantity of the estate conveyed, whether a fee simple or a fee tail.[84]

b. Meaning and Effect of Use of Word "Heirs" — (i) In General. The word "heirs" without explanatory or qualifying words is generally construed as a word of limitation, and a deed of property to a person specified and his heirs will be construed as conveying the fee to such person.[85] An exception exists,

In a deed to a daughter for life and then to the grantor's own right heirs in case of her death without children, it has been held that those "heirs" were to be ascertained at the donor's death and not at the donee's. Harris v. McLaran, 30 Miss. 533.

A deed to a grantee for life with remainder to husband and in case of his death before the death of his wife then to his heirs at law operates to create a life-estate in the wife, with remainder in the husband in fee. Riggin v. Love, 72 Ill. 553. See Pratt v. McCawley, 20 Pa. St. 264.

A marriage settlement of property upon a wife for life, the remainder to the husband for life, and the remainder to the heirs general of the husband has been construed as giving the husband a vested remainder in fee. Varner v. Boynton, 46 Ga. 508.

A quitclaim deed to grantors by grantees to whom a life-estate was granted with remainder to the heirs of one of the grantees

however, where a grantor annexes words of explanation to the word "heirs" indicating that he meant to use the term in a qualified sense, as descriptio personarum or as a particular designation of certain individuals, and that they and not the ancestor were to be the points or termini from which the succession to the estate were to emanate or take its start, in which case the word may be treated as a term of purchase and not of limitation.[86] So the word "heirs" may be construed as meaning children, where an intention to that effect is clearly shown by the instrument.[87] And "heirs" of the grantor and his wife may be construed to mean the issue of the grantor and his wife and not the heirs of each.[88]

(n) Particular Limitation to Heirs—(A) In Grant to One For Life. The rule that the word "heirs" is to be construed as a word of limitation applies in the case of a grant to one for life and then to his heirs, and the fee will vest in the first grantee,[89] except so far as the application of this rule may be modified

The grant of a right to the use of land is in the nature of an easement or franchise, and the use of the word "heirs" in a grant of such a right to a person and his heirs will not convey the fee, althougn the enjoyment of such right may require the permanent and exclusive use of the land out of which it is granted. Munro v. Meech, 94 Mich. 596, 54 N. W. 290. Such a grant of a railroad right of way does not convey the fee. Jones v. Van Bochove, 103 Mich. 98, 61 N. W. 342. (B) To Heirs of Grantee's Body — (1) In General. The technical words "heirs of the body" of the grantor are presumed to be nsed technically unless the contrary appears on the face of the instrument.[92] And where such words or equivalent ones are nsed in a grant to one and such heirs they will be construed as words of limitation and will pass the fee to the first-named grantee,[93] unless it appears from the instrument that they were used as words of description to designate certain persons, in which case they will be construed as words of purchase and not of limitation.[94] In some cases, however, it has been decided that a fee-conditional estate in the first grantee is created by such a deed,[95] which becomes a fee absolute after issne are born.[96] Again deeds of this character have been constrned as creating estates tail,[97] which by statute in some states are converted into a fee simple.[98] And by statute such a deed may be construed as giving a life-estate to the grantee with remainder in fee to the children.[99]

(2) In Grant to One For Life. A grant to one for life with limitation to the "heirs of his body" is construed as vesting a fee simple in the grantee,[1] although the use of other words in connection therewith may have the effect of creating a life-estate only,[2] with a valid remainder in such heirs.[3] with a remainder to the children.[11] In some cases, however, it has been determined that in a deed to a mother and her children the children in esse take jointly with her[12] or as tenants in common.[13]

(II) In Grant to One For Life. A deed conveying a life-estate to one and providing that the property shall upon the termination of such estate go to his children will operate as a conveyance of the life-estate to the first-named grantee[14] with vested remainder to the children.[15] It has, however, been decided that a deed to a person of property during his life and to children, naming them, their heirs and assigns, confers upon the children jointly with the first-named grantee a present and immediate right of property.[16]

Under a Michigan statute after-born children do not take by a deed conveying a life-estate to a person, to the children if her body, to her heirs and executors, and to the assigns of herself and her children. Downing v. Birney, 117 Mich. 675, 76 N. W. 125.

d. Limitation to Issue of Grantee's Body. The word "issue" as used in a deed is ordinarily to be construed as a word of purchase and not of limitation.[20]

e. Conveyance to Grantee and His "Representatives." Although the term "legal representatives" in its commonly accepted sense means "administrator" or "executor," yet it may be construed as meaning "heirs," "descendants," or "next of kin," where it is apparent from the instrument that it was used in this sense.[21]

f. Reference to Statutes of Descent. Where a deed of gift to one contains a clause that should the grantee die without wife or child surviving him then the land shall pass according to the statutes of descent and distribution in force, it has been determined that his surviving brothers and sisters will in such a case take by purchase under the deed and not by descent or inheritance from him.[22]

g. Deed to Several Grantees — (i) In General. Where a deed is executed to two or more grantees without designating the proportions in which they will take, the law presumes them equally interested and they will hold in equal shares.[23] Such a deed is construed as creating a tenancy in common.[24] And it has been provided by statute in some states that such a construction shall be given[25] unless an estate by joint tenancy is either expressly given or it clearly appears from the instrument that it was intended to be created.[26] But a deed to

An estate tail was held to be given to a husband by a deed to him and his wife of land during their lives; then to the issue of the husband, their heirs and assigns, and in default of issue by the husband, then to his right heirs, their heirs and assigns forever. 26. A joint tenancy may, however, be created by a deed to two or more persons by express words to that effect. Fladung v. Rose, 58 Md. 13.

An estate in joint tenancy is held to be created by a deed to A, B, and C, "doing business as A., B. & Co., their heirs and assigns." Lauffer v. Cavett, 87 Pa. St. 479.

An estate in joint tenancy is created within such a statute by the use of the words "joint tenants" in the appropriate places without the use of the negative, "and not an estate of tenancy in common" or its equivalent (Coudert v. Earl, 45 N. J. Eq. 654, 18 Atl.

a person and the heirs of her body conveying land to them, their heirs and assigns, is construed as creating a joint estate in the grantee and her children, where the creation of an estate tail is forbidden by statute.[27]

(n) Estate to Survivor. A deed of land to two persons may operate as a deed of an estate for life with remainder in fee to the survivor.[28] But where by statute the interests of deceased joint tenants do not go to the survivor, but are distributable among his or her heirs, and a life-interest only is conveyed to them, on the death of one of the grantees the joint tenancy is severed to the extent of his interest, which reverts to the grantor.[29]

h. Repugnant or Conflicting Terms Designating Parties.[30] All the language of a grant should be considered and effect given to it unless so repugnant or meaningless that it cannot be done, in which case the repugnant or meaningless portion may be rejected.[31] So the habendum cannot stand with the premises where so repugnant thereto as to be irreconcilable.[32] The habendum may, how-

No intention to create a joint tenancy is shown by a deed to the grantor's sons, "to have and to hold against all claim or claims whatever and singular, the title, interest and claim in and unto" said sons. Nicholson v. Caress, 45 Ind. 479.

27. Combs v. Eversole, 64 S. W. 524, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 932.

28. Such an estate is created by a deed providing that the property shall absolutely vest in the survivor (Bartholomew v. Muzzy, 61 Conn. 387, 23 Atl. 604, 29 Am. St. Rep. 206) by a deed to a man and his wife and "the survivor of them, in her or his own right" (Mittel v. Karl, 133 Ill. 65, 24 N. E. 553, 8 L. R. A. 655) by a deed by one to his wife, survivor to himself (McKee v. Marshall, 5 S. W. 415, 9 Ky. L. Rep. 461) or by a deed to two persons and to the survivor of them, his heirs and assigns (Ewing v. Savary, 3 Bibb (Ky.) 235; Schulz v. Brahl, 116 Mich. 603, 74 N. W. 1012. See Lewis v. Baldwin, 11 Ohio 352).

A deed to two grantees to hold during their joint lives and the life of the survivor and at the death of the survivor to their joint issue in fee simple gives an estate to the grantees for their joint lives and the life of the survivor, and the estate vests in the joint issue of the grantees in fee simple as purchasers. Stephenson v. Hagan, 15 B. Mon. (Ky.) 282. See Price v. Price, 5 Ala. 578.

Where limitations of the wife's estate in a deed to a husband and wife are all dependent on the wife surviving the husband, and he survives her, the next of kin of the wife cannot come in under the deed. McBride v. Williams, 57 N. C. 268. Where, however, property is conveyed to a man and his wife, their heirs and assigns, in consideration of a sum paid by them in her right to have and to hold to them in her right, her heirs and assigns to their use and behoof forever, and the wife dies leaving her husband and a son surviving it is decided that the husband takes a life-estate and the fee vests in the son. A limitation to heirs general following a limitation to issue of the body will not prevent the word "issue" from operating to raise an estate tail. Zabriskie v. Wood, 23 N. J. Eq. 541.

Where it is the manifest intention to convey the land to one in his representative capacity as guardian, the use of the word "heirs" instead of "successors" in the printed part of the deed should not control or qualify the other parts of the instrument. Walker v. Colby Wringer Co., 14 Fed. 517.

Words "her heirs" in the habendum may be construed to mean "their heirs," where the clause grants the realty to one and her children "her heirs" and assigns, thus making the first-named grantee and her children tenants in common. Sease v. Sease, 64 S. C. 216, 41 S. E. 898.

W. 61, construing a deed conveying by its granting clause property to children in trust for the sole benefit of their mother, with the habendum, "in trust for her and themselves," meaning children named as trustees, as giving the mother a fee-simple estate.

Omission of word "heirs" in the habendum will not prevent the grantee taking an estate in fee, where such an estate is given in the

4. Repugnant and Conflicting Parts Designating Estate Created[34] — a. In General. The interest intended to be conveyed is generally to be determined from the granting clause, which will prevail over the introductory statement,[35] a subsequent provision,[36] the habendum,[37] or a warranty or covenant.[38]

b. Grant of Particular Estates as Controlling Subsequent Clauses or Limitations. Where by the granting clause in a deed an absolute fee simple conveyance is made, a subsequent clause showing an intention to grant a less estate will not as a general rule control,[39] although in some cases it has been determined that if there is a clear intention apparent from the whole instrument to grant a less

37. Express terms creating a life-estate will not be controlled by words of inheritance in the habendum (Hodges v. Fleetwood, 102 N. C. 122, 9 S. E. 640) or by the use of the words "shall descend" to (Doren v. Gillum, 136 Ind. 134, 35 N. E. 1101).

Where it is provided by statute that the granting clause and habendum of a deed must be reconciled if possible a deed will be construed as conveying a life-estate where the premises provide that the grantors "hereby grant, sell, and convey" certain land with a habendum to have and to hold for and during the term of his natural life and at his decease the same to descend to his children in equal shares, naming the children. Provision for holding the land in trust for the grantee will not prevent title from vesting at once. Annis v. Wilson, 15 Colo. 236, 25 Pac. 304.

Reference to other instruments.— The alienating force of a deed will not be restricted by reference to an executory contract with a third party respecting the land, where such reference is for the purpose of more particularly describing the premises. Grant v. De Lamori, (Cal. 1887) 14 Pac. 314. But where immediately following the description by metes and bounds there is the clause "and estate, the deed should be construed in accordance with that intention.[40] So it has been determined that no use for the benefit of the grantor is created by a conveyance granting an estate which vests at once but which reserves a life-estate to the grantor;[41] that where an absolute conveyance is made to a grantee a subsequent limitation over will be rejected as repugnant to the granting clause;[42] and that a limitation of the right to use may if repugnant to the grant be rejected.[43]

5. Conditions and Restrictions as Affecting Estate Created — a. In General. In the application of the general rule relating to the construction of conditions and restrictions[44] it has been decided that a deed with a clause therein in the meaning hereby to convey to the said grantee the same premises and title as conveyed to me by" deed it is held that an equity of redemption only is conveyed, this being the same title conveyed to the grantor. Bates v. Foster, 59 Me. 157, 8 Am. Rep. 406.

Statements in certificate to a deed cannot limit the express words purporting to convey the fee. Garrett v. Weinberg, 48 S. C. 28, 26 S. E. 3.

The statutory meaning of the words "grant, bargain, and sell" is not restricted by the addition of the word "release" immediately after such words. Altringer v. Capeheart, 68 Mo. 441.

Where a sheriff makes a conveyance, upon an execution sale of real estate, of "all the right, title, and interest of" one thereto it has been decided that the words in the description "being a leasehold unexpired" do not limit the extent of the previous terms of conveyance or except out any interest conveyed thereby. Dodge v. Walley, 22 Cal. 224, 83 Am. Dec. 61.

Where a trust unlimited in time is declared in the granting clause with a qualification at the close of the description of the premises limiting the duration of the trust, the latter clause will be construed as a limitation of the general words first employed. Parker v. Murch, 64 Me. 54.

40. Caldwell v. Hammons, 40 Ga. 342; Henderson v. Mack, 82 Ky. 379, 6 Ky. L. Rep. 313; Higgins v. Wasgatt, 34 Me. 305; Bean v. Kenmuir, 86 Mo. 666; Hayden v. Stinson, 24 Mo. 182. So where words in a deed which if taken alone would convey a fee are followed by words showing an intention to create a life-estate, a construction in accordance with that intention may be given, where it is provided by statute that the first of two repugnant clauses shall prevail, but that the intention shall if possible be ascertained. Bray v. McGinty, 94 Ga. 192, 21 S. E. 284. See also Thurmond v. Thurmond, 88 Ga. 182, 14 S. E. 198. Again, although from the premises of a deed and the application of technical rules of construction, the instrument may be construed as creating a vested remainder in the grantor's children, yet if a contrary intention clearly appears from a consideration of the deed as a whole, including a power of disposition, which is inconsistent with the existence of such remainder, it has been determined that a construction in accordance with such intention should be given. Hardy v. Clarkson, 87 Mo. 171. And see Stockbridge v. Stockbridge, 99 Mass. 244.

A limitation, although not in the granting part, is sufficient where it is provided by statute that every conveyance of real estate shall pass all the interest of the grantor unless a different intent appears by express terms or by necessary implication. Montgomery v. Sturdivant, 41 Cal. 290.

A limitation during widowhood in the habendum has been held to control over a granting clause giving a fee in a deed of settlement by a husband on his wife. Whitby v. Duffy, 135 Pa. St. 620, 19 Atl. 1065. See Wolverton v. Haupt, 2 Chest. Co. Rep. (Pa.) 573.

nature of a condition may when construed with the other terms of the instrument operate as a conveyance of an estate with a conditional limitation annexed,[45] as where the fee passes subject to be defeated by a condition subsequent.[46] Or the condition or restriction may when construed with the other language employed in the deed be inoperative and an absolute title or estate will pass free from any conditional limitation.[47]

b. Provision For Determination on Default of Issue. A deed with a clause therein providing for a determination of the estate granted on default of issue will operate as a conveyance of the fee subject to be divested by such default.[48] And it has been decided that where a deed provides that on default of issue the property shall go to the heirs of the grantor an estate in reversion in the grantor is created.[49]

Provision for grantor's support.— In this connection courts have been frequently called upon to construe deeds, in which there is a provision that the grantee shall support the grantor during the life of the latter, which have been variously construed as conveying a life-estate to the grantee who takes a fee simple on the grantor's death (Paddock v. Wallace, 117 Mass. 99; Lashley v. Souder, (N. J. Ch. 1892) 24 Atl. 919) as passing the whole estate subject to the lien imposed in the deed for such support (Christman v. Christ, 4 Pennyp. (Pa.) 291), or as charging the land with the provision therefor in favor of the grantors an estate in such case being reserved in them (Ringrose v. Ringrose, 170 Pa. St. 593, 33 Atl. 129). But a provision of this character is construed as giving the grantor no legal estate subject to execution, it not appearing that he had ever entered for condition broken. Gunn v. Butler, 18 Pick. then to another, conveys a life-estate to the grantee on condition, remainder to such other.[50] Again a clause in a deed as to the use which shall be made of the land conveyed may operate as a conveyance of an easement and not of the fee,[51] as creating a trust,[52] or as giving the grantor a reversionary interest.[53] But a fee will pass by a deed containing a clause or recital which is merely declaratory of the use contemplated of the land where the other parts of the deed operate as a conveyance of the fee.[54]

d. Restrictions as to Alienation. Where an estate in fee simple is granted to a person by proper and sufficient words, a clause in the deed which is in restraint of alienation is void and will be rejected.[55]

6. Reservations and Exceptions as Affecting Estate Created — a. In General. The nature of an estate created may be dependent on an exception or reservation[56] in the deed, the construction and operation of which must be determined from the entire instrument, taking into consideration the object and purposes of such reservation and exception. So a fee may be granted by a deed reserving to the grantor some right or estate in the property,[57] and the estate conveyed may be subject to a life-estate,[58] or an estate in the nature of a qualified fee.[59] Or a tenancy in common may be created by a reservation in a deed[60] or by an exception.[61] Again a deed of bargain and sale may be employed to convey an estate and reserve or confer a power of appointment, on the execution of which the deed will vest the estate in the appointee.[62] But a reservation which is repugnant to the estate granted and an illegal restraint on the power of alienation is void, as where in a conveyance in fee there is a reservation of a preëmptive right of purchase by the grantor in every case of sale by the grantee and of a right to a portion of the purchase-money on each sale.[63] And a reservation of a right to devise by will, which is a right which the grantor may exercise or not at his pleasure, is not a special power in trust which equity will enforce.[64]

A conveyance for valuable consideration, conditioned that the grantor and his wife shall have the use and possession of the property for life may, it is decided, be construed as a conveyance with a condition subsequent

D. Reservations and Exceptions — 1. Definitions and Distinguishing Characteristics. A reservation is a clause in a deed whereby the grantor reserves some new thing to himself[70] out of that which he granted before.[71] It differs from an exception which is ever of part of the thing granted and of a thing in that the grantee shall permit such use, or an agreement to convey the use after the grantor's death or a covenant to stand seized to the use of the grantor for life, then of his wife, and the remainder to the grantee, and may be enforced in equity. Sherman v. Dodge, 28 Vt. 26.

Grantor and his wife hold a life-estate by entirety under a deed by them reserving such estate to them and on the death of the husband the widow becomes sole tenant for life. Jones v. Potter, 89 N. C. 220. See Reynolds v. McFarland, 11 S. W. 202, 10 Ky. L. Rep. 932.

Extent and limits of rule.—A deed executed in trust for the grantor for life, with remainder to his appointees by will, or to his heirs if he makes no appointment, is held, as to the remainder limited to the heirs, to give an executed fee in the taker for life, under the rule in Shelley's case, subject to be divested by the exercise of the power of appointment. Brown v. Renshaw, 57 Md. 67. But a conveyance by a grantor of the real and personal estate which he may leave at his death with a reservation to himself of the free control and disposal of it during his lifetime will not have the effect of a present conveyance of the property, it referring expressly to what he may leave at his death and is void as a conveyance. Roth v. Michalis, 125 Ill. 325, 17 N. E. 809. And where a grantor conveyed property upon condition that the grantee outlive him with the habendum to her and her heirs subject to the condition aforesaid, and there is a reservation in the deed to the grantor of the full and complete control over the property during his life and the right to enjoy the rents, issues, and profits thereof, nothing passed by the deed in case the grantee dies before the grantor (Earle v. Dawes, 3 Md. Ch. 230), although upon the happening of the contingency named an estate in fee simple passes to the grantee (Abbott v. Holway, 72 Me. 298. Compare Du Bois' Appeal, 121 Pa. St. 368, 15 Atl. 641).

A clause is an exception when "reserving" the use of a way then in existence (State v. Wilson, 42 Me. 9); when reserving a right of way "as now used," there being a then existing right of way (Bridger v. Pierson, 45 N. Y. 601 [reversing 1 Lans. 481]); when "saving and excepting therefrom" fifteen feet square "as a way to" the grantor's cellar (Mount v. Hambley, 22 Misc. (N. Y.) 454, 50 N. Y. E. 476); when "saving and excepting to my wife and myself, and our legitimate descendants, the use and privilege . . . [of certain premises] which we now enjoy and possess" (Jones v. De Lassus, 84 Mo. 541); when "reserving" the right of building a dam together with the right of flowage, and "also reserving" an acre of ground at the east end of the dam and the grantor owned both sides of the river (Smith v. Furbish, 68 N. H. 123, 44 Atl. 398, 47 L. R. A. 226); when "saving and reserving nevertheless, out of the several water lots and soil under water, . . . so much of the same as will be necessary to make" certain streets, which the grantee covenanted to make and maintain at his own expense, and that the same should remain public highways (Langdon v. New York, 6 Abb. E. 63); when "excepting the reservation" out of the grant, of certain fruit trees and the land on which they stand," "also, so much of the second growth of ash timber, as I shall need for my own personal use" (Randall v. Randall, 59 Me. 338); where a smaller tract is "reserved" out of two larger tracts, by metes and bounds (Watkins v. Tucker, 84

thing granted that would otherwise pass.[73] A reservation or exception must be something out of the estate granted.[74] The terms "reservation" and "exception" are often used interchangeably, and the technical meaning will give way to the manifest intent, even though the technical term to the contrary be used.[75]

2. CREATION AND NATURE — a. In General. To create a reservation apt words are necessary;[76] and neither an exception nor a reservation will be held to have been created, where apt words are not used therefor, and there appears to be no reason why apt words should not have been used if such was the intention of the parties.[77] So even the words "saving and reserving" will not except mines and minerals, where it is admitted that the deed must be construed as an exercise of the power of appointment, and the suggested reservation is to those exercising Tex. 428, 19 S. W. 570); when four acres in a square farm is reserved out of a larger lot (Hay v. Storrs, Wright (Ohio) 711); when it reserves certain rooms in a house to a third party who owns them (Bartlett v. Barrows, 22 R. I. 642, 49 Atl. 31); when land on which there are two houses, one of which had been assigned as dower, is conveyed with one dwelling-house thereon "reserving" the house occupied by the widow (Kimball v. Withington, 141 Mass. 376, 6 N. E. 759); where the "grantor corporation excepts and reserves to itself all of the buildings," etc., "standing on the granted lands" (Washington Mills Emery Mfg. Co. v. Commercial F. Ins. Co., 13 Fed. 646); when "excepting and forever reserving the graveyard on the lands hereby conveyed at all times hereafter to enter thereon without hindrance or denial" (Mannerback v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 16 Pa. Super. Ct. 622); and when "saving and reserving nevertheless, for his own use the coal contained" in certain land "together with free ingress and egress, by wagon-road to haul coal therefrom as wanted" (Whitaker v. Brown, 46 Pa. St. 197). A reservation may also constitute an exception, if land referred to therein is located with sufficient certainty to show that an exception operates upon it. Apt words are necessary to convey separate interests. Kincaid v. McGowan, 88 Ky. 91, 4 S. W. 802, 9 Ky. L. Rep. 987, 13 L. R. A. 289.

Creation of reservation.— A covenant does not reserve a life-estate when it would thereby defeat the deed (Howell v. Howell, 29 N. C. 496), although a life-estate is reserved by an expression that the grantor "holds the life interest" (Hurst v. Hurst, 7 W. Va. 289). And where the granted tract is near to the lands of both grantor and grantee, and in the deed between the description and the habendum is inserted the words "the said land is to be common and unoccupied," they will take effect as a reservation. Gay v. Walker, 36 Me. 54, 58 Am. Dec. 734. But there is no reservation of rents by a covenant to defend against the lawful claims of all except "said lessees and assigns" (Gale v. Edwards, 52 Me. 363); nor is there any reservation of an outstanding title where the words neither expressly nor by fair interpretation recognize such title (Holman v. Holman, 66 Barb. (N. Y.) 215). And where the subject-matter of the claimed reservation does not exist there is no reservation of any estate. Pierce v. Gardner, 83 Pa. St. 211.

Creation of exception.— In case a dower interest is set off it may be excepted by the words "subject to" the widow's "dower which has been set off" (Meserve v. Meserve, 19 N. H. 240), and a recital that "all lands not heretofore sold" are included constitutes an exception (King v. Wells, 94 N. C. 344). So the following is a good exception: "Furthermore, this deed is not to interfere or in the least conflict with or include any part or parcel of one hundred and twenty acres heretofore deeded to [one of the grantors by the grantee]. . . . But the right to said [grantor] . . . as aforesaid holds good, and the one hundred and twenty acres is yet held and owned by . . . [said grantor] in and out of said one hundred and ninety acres." Cravens v. White, 73 Tex. 577, 11 S. W. 543, 15 Am. St. Rep. 803. But a stipulation in a deed by town trustees that the grantor "shall allow all people to pass and repass, to fish, fowl and hunt," etc., on the granted premises is not an exception. Parsons v. Miller, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 561. And if a clause is evidently inserted merely for the purpose of identifying the land conveyed it is not an exception. Choate v. Johns, (Tex. Sup. 1890) 15 S. W. 106.

If the words "excepting and prohibiting" constitute but a naked prohibition they will be void. Craig v. Wells, 11 N. Y. 315.

such power who were not the legal owners of the fee in the land conveyed.[78] There are, however, many covenants which operate as a reservation, although they are not strictly and technically such. The true rule is said to be that where words taken according to their technical meaning do not create a legal reservation and are notwithstanding construed to amount to a reservation, it is always done with a view to advance the intent of the parties, but not to defeat or destroy it. And words not technically amounting to a reservation are not to be so construed, unless to effectuate a manifest intention.[79]

b. Implied Reservations. The law will not reserve anything out of a grant in favor of the grantor, except in a case of necessity.[80]

c. Severance of Estates. An owner may convey the surface estate in fee and reserve an estate in fee in minerals or any particular species of them, but this severance of each estate is subject to the laws of descent, of devise, and of conveyance.[81]

3. Validity — a. In General. An exception or reservation is void where there is nothing for either to operate upon, or where the grantor had no interest or estate in the thing excepted.[82]

b. Reservations. It is competent for the vendor to convey the fee to the vendee and reserve certain rights to himself, his heirs and assigns.[83] And a reservation may be valid where it is not prohibited by either the letter or the policy of the law.[84] A reservation may also be of a power and not of an estate, and therefore lawful.[85] But a reservation should not be contradictory,[86] repugnant to the grant,[87] incompatible with a gift,[88] as large or as broad as the grant itself,[89] or indefinite or uncertain.[90] Again a reservation "of all claim or right of action" against an elevated railroad for damages to the property conveyed by the road in the past, present, or future does not deprive a subsequent owner of the right to sue to recover damages suffered after he has acquired title.[91]

c. Exceptions. An exception is void which is of a thing or right which the grantor does not own;[92] or which is of an estate or interest which has never been in the grantor, although it is otherwise where the ownership thereof is in the grantor.[93] Again an exception should not be repugnant to or inconsistent with the grant or it will be void.[94]

d. Power to Mortgage. A reservation of a power to mortgage is valid.[95]

4. Construction and Operation — a. In General. A reservation is to be construed more strictly than a grant.[96] The nature of the reservation is, however, very material.[97]

b. As Against Grantor. The rule applicable to deeds of construction against the grantor and in favor of the grantee[98] applies to reservations and exceptions expressed in a doubtful manner.[99]

c. As to Strangers. Although a reservation is ineffectual to create title in a stranger, it may when so intended operate as an exception to the grant.[1] Generally, however, all reservations, unless otherwise expressed, operate in favor of the grantor, but a grantor may by reservation preserve the rights of others in the premises, such as the lessees or tenants, or existing rights of third persons, provided such rights are at the time subsisting.[2] And a reservation may be made to the grantor when valuable rights are secured to him, although others may be benefited.[3]

d. Tenants in Common or Cotenants. Although a reservation is void where it is of the interest of a tenant in common in the mines in and upon the lands granted, in a conveyance by him of his estate,[4] yet cotenants may convey their shares to one or several, and a person owning an undivided interest in lands may except and reserve to himself that part of the oils, minerals, and gas which was his property, but he cannot except the entire thing or interest.[5]

e. Intention. A reasonable construction should be given to a reservation or exception according to the intention of the parties, ascertained from the entire instrument. walks;[11] of rights, estates, or interests generally;[12] of a right of way;[13] of a life-estate;[14] of dower;[15] and of taxes.[16] It is not enough, however, that one should make out a possible intention favorable to his view, but he must show a reasonable certainty that the intention is such as he suggests.[17] Again the rule that the habendum clause is void when totally repugnant to the granting clause will not be so rigidly applied as to defeat the intention of the parties, when ascertained by looking at every part of the instrument, and this applies to a reservation or exception.[18]

f. Repugnancy. If the granting clause is of the grantor's whole estate in the premises and the exception following reserves a certain interest there is such a repugnancy as that the grantor is estopped to claim such interest.[19] But a reservation of the right to sell and reinvest the proceeds for the benefit of the grantees is not so repugnant as to prevent the grantor from conveying the entire estate to the survivor of the grantees.[20]

g. Property — (i) Generally. A construction which shows what is conveyed will be adopted in preference to one which leads to some indefinite, unascertained deduction.[21] So where separate buildings are commonly known by one designation which answers the description in the exception they will all be embraced therein.[22]

(ii) General and Particular Description. A reservation or exception is to be taken as part of the premises granted and not of lands not included in the general description.[23] And if to a general description is added a specification

Reservation of less estate.— Although a deed for a valuable consideration conveys land, to have and to hold all the right, title, and interest, to the grantee, and his heirs and assigns forever, the grantor may nevertheless reserve a less estate to himself and there is no such repugnancy as to make such reservation inoperative. of the precise thing intended, or it is shown that the thing answers to such specifications, the general designation will be construed in conformity therewith.[24]

(III) Certainty and Uncertainty of Description. An exception should describe the property with sufficient certainty. Uncertainty or vagueness of description renders a reservation void unless there is something in the exception, deed, or evidence whereby it can be made sufficiently certain.[25] Uncertainty of location can, however, in a proper case be cured by the grantor's election within a reasonable time, followed by acts in pais.[26]

(IV) Lands Previously Conveyed. A recital that land previously conveyed is reserved does not nullify the reservation, but should be considered as referring merely to the grantor's interest after exception of the tract specified, and it is an admission of the grantor which may be explained or rebutted.[27] But if an exception is of lots "heretofore sold" such lots will not pass, although they have not been sold, as the recital will be rejected.[28]

(V) Timber, Trees, and the Like. A reservation of timber is an interest in land if an immediate severance is not contemplated; otherwise the same is personalty.[29] But a reservation of all the wood then standing cannot operate upon an estate which had never been in the grantor.[30] Again a reservation of a certain description of timber trees continues the property in such trees in the grantor, while they remain, with the right in so much of the soil as is necessary to sustain them.[31]

(vi) Streets. The title of the fee of a street does not pass under a deed where it is expressly reserved by words equivalent to a reservation of all the grantor's title thereto.[32] A vendee is also bound by the provisions of his own deed where it expressly excludes any interest in the fee of streets. Nor can his rights be enlarged by reservations in his vendor's dedication of adjoining property for a public street, and a party holding under the grantee takes subject to the reservation.[33]

(vii) Right of Way. Under the early decisions a right of way could not in strictness be made the subject of an exception or reservation, it being neither parcel of nor issuing out of the thing granted.[34] An exception may, however, be of the fee of a right of way and not merely an exception of an easement.[35]

(viii) Rights or Privileges. A reservation in a deed of a right or privilege should be construed in the same way as a grant by the owner of the soil of a similar right or privilege.[36] So a conveyance excepting and reserving a certain liberty may operate not as a reservation properly so called but as a new grant of the liberty mentioned.[37] A reservation may also be inoperative until the exercise of the right reserved.[38] Again if a certain part of a tract is reserved, and the deed further recites that the grantor conveys all his right, etc., to any part of the

If a conveyance is per se a dedication of the use of a street as a street, the grantee has the right to its use as soon as the conveyance is made, and an easement is thereby attached to the land; and although there is a reservation which amounts to a covenant to permit an obstruction to remain there indefinitely, yet the right acquired under former deeds to have the obstruction removed is unimpaired. If the saving clause of a deed is limited to streets laid out it will be necessary to inquire whether there was a legal street in existence at the time of the grant. But where the reservation is of streets that might then or thereafter "be assigned, designated or laid out" it will cover the land reserved, where it was assigned and designated, if not laid out according to law; nor in such case is the reservation void for uncertainty, the boundaries having been thereby fixed with sufficient certainty to locate the street. tract, such recital will be considered as referring merely to the grantor's interest remaining over the land excepted.[39]

(IX) Life-Estate. A life-estate may be created by an express reservation following a clause habendum et tenendum of all the right, title, and interest to the grantee, his heirs and assigns, forever.[40] And an owner of a certain interest in real and personal estate, reserved in trust for the life of an annuitant, may convey his interest subject to the annuity and all charges even though not all of them are specified.[41] A reservation may also be construed as a covenant to stand seized of the reversion to the use of another, the life-estate remaining in the grantor.[42]

(X) Dower. If land is conveyed excepting an interest in unassigned dower, the exception covers the fee in the land afterward assigned for dower.[43]

(XI) Legal Encumbrances. If the exception is of a legal encumbrance only the property passes.[44]

h. Implied Rights and Limitations. A reservation must be so construed as to give a practical right and not so as to render it worthless or unavailing.[45] A grant carries by implication as incidental thereto whatever is necessary to the reasonable enjoyment of the thing granted, and this applies to a reservation.[46] But the court will not import into a reservation of a right of way for a certain purpose a condition or covenant, or limit the purpose thereof contrary to the ascertained intent.[47] land of which it is a part, where it is a mere personal reservation or license in favor of the owner as for example the right to mow and cultivate a strip of land.[50]

j. Reservations of Use or Possession. It is competent for the grantor to reserve the possession of land to himself for a determinate or indefinite period.[51] This rule applies to a reservation of the use or of the possession or of support for life, and such reservation will save such incidents and rights, and be subject to such restrictions as the rules of construction applicable to the subject-matter and to the language employed in the particular case will warrant.[52] Again the use may be limited to a specific purpose,[53] to a certain locality,[54] or the right to possession may be a fluctuating one.[55] The right to "occupy" is also equivalent to the right to "possess," [56] and carries with it such implied incidents as are necessary to the proper and lawful exercise of the rights reserved,[57] or which are within the purpose and intent of the reservation.[58]

k. Termination, Loss, or Relinquishment. Although a reservation of a right limited in its duration will ordinarily remain in force for the period specified,[59] yet it must be exercised within the time designated or it will be waived,[60] especially where the privilege is purely personal and dies with the grantor.[61] So an exception may be limited to the joint lives of a husband and wife and to that of the survivor.[62] And a grant of a life-estate, with a reservation of possession for the purpose of performing certain covenants, will be terminated by a judgment in an action for breach of those covenants.[63] But a life-estate in a father, reserved in a conveyance to a son, is not terminated by the surrender without writing of the control of the premises to the son.[64] And if a certain building is reserved it means the then existing building and not one subsequently erected.[65] So if the character of the right, interest, or privilege and the terms of the reservation or exception are such as to operate, expressly or by construction, as a limitation upon the time within which such right, interest, or privilege must be exercised it will be limited accordingly. This rule embraces a limitation to the grantor's life;[66] to a certain number of years;[67] to a given time;[68] to a reasonable time;[69] after notice;[70] or to a time dependent upon present or future conditions.[71] Again a specified period of time may be fixed precluding the exercise of the right before its expiration, or thereafter except upon conditions.[72]

E. Conditions and Restrictions — 1. Creation and Nature — a. In General. Apt and appropriate words must be used, or a right of reëntry be reserved, to create a condition in a grant.[73] Technical words are, however, unnecessary, to make a condition precedent or subsequent, if a clear intent on the part of the grantor or of the parties appears.[74] A condition may also be created by the habendum;[75] or, where there is nothing to the contrary in the instrument, by a writing duly executed on the back of the deed.[76] On the other hand the expression of a "condition" does not necessarily create one[77] when contrary to the intention of the parties.[78] And if land is deeded for a specific use or purpose,[79] or it is deeded in consideration of its use for a certain purpose, or in consideration of the doing of a certain act, and there is nothing to show that a condition was intended, none will be created, either precedent or subsequent.[80] But this rule does not apply in cases where the intent on the part of the parties to create a condition is deducible.[81]

b. Distinguishing Characteristics — (i) In General. There is a distinction between the creation of a condition and a direction to do a certain act;[82] and between a reservation and an executory covenant.[83] There is also a distinction between a condition that defeats an estate but requires a reëntry and a limitation which determines an estate ipso facto without entry.[84]

(ii) Condition Precedent or Subsequent. There are no technical or precise words to distinguish a condition precedent from a condition subsequent, as the same words may create either, according to the rules of construction and the intent of the party who creates it, or of the parties to the instrument.[85]

(iii) Condition or Covenant. Covenants and conditions may be created by the same words but forfeitures are not favored.[86] Courts are therefore more favorably inclined to holding that the language used constitutes a covenant rather than a condition which will forfeit the grant.[87] This rule is especially applicable

where the words used are in the form of a covenant pure and simple, and there are no words of proviso, or condition, or provision for reëntry in the deed.[88] The rule will not, however, control, over the settled legal significance of the language employed, especially where the meaning is so plain as to leave no room for construction.[89] And if the language imports a condition merely, and there are no words importing an agreement, it is not enforceable as a covenant.[90] So where a condition subsequent is created by apt and appropriate words the language will not be construed as a restriction merely or as a personal covenant.[91]

(iv) Condition, Reservation, or Restriction. If a clause can only have effect by considering it as a condition subsequent it will be so construed and will not be held to be a reservation.[92] A stipulation will also be construed as a condition and not as a reservation, where the effect of construing it as the latter would make the reservation repugnant and the grant void.[93]

2. Validity of Conditions — a. Generally. A clause reserving the right of reëntry is not necessary to the validity of a condition.[94] So a condition may be valid which reserves a provisional right not repugnant to the grant, to take possession,[95] or which reserves the right or power to revoke the deed.[96] A deed may also provide for the maintenance of the grantor;[97] and a deed of gift may provide for after-born children.[98] But a condition in a common-law conveyance for the benefit of a stranger to the deed is void.[99] And a conveyance in præsenti, reserving the control to the grantor for life, and which is a shift to evade the statute of wills restraining the testamentary power of parents is void.[1] It has also been held that some estate on which the condition can take effect should remain in the Provisions are mere restrictions and not conditions where one of several conveyances upon which the title depended stipulated that no building should be erected within ten feet of a certain street; another recited that it was on condition that no building should ever be erected within said distance of said street; and another that the premises were sold subject to the condition that no building should ever be erected thereon within ten feet of said street. grantor.[2] And where the statute so requires the condition should evince some intention of actual or pecuniary benefit to the grantor, otherwise it will be merely nominal and should be disregarded.[3] Again if a proviso is incomplete and meaningless it will be inoperative.[4] A proviso is also void which is inconsistent with or repugnant to the grant or title.[5] Again an abandonment in perpetuity to the vendees excludes the validity of a condition that they shall use the land under certain restrictions.[6]

b. Conditions Subsequent. Conditions subsequent are in general good whenever they are not impossible to be performed at the time, or made so afterward by the act of God or of the grantor; and when they are not contrary to law nor repugnant to the deed itself.[7]

Rule does not embrace conditions not repugnant to an estate granted, nor against public policy, nor as a perpetuity (Hunt v. Wright, 47 N. H. 396, 93 Am. Dec. 451); reasonable restrictions, as that the grantee shall not convey before complying with certain stipulations as to improvements (Grigg v. Landis, 21 N. J. (N. Y.) 107); a conveyance to B in fee, conditioned that B is not to sell during the grantor's natural life unless the grantor sells his land, and if B dies before the grantor B is to leave the land to his wife (McWilliams v. Nisly, 2 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 507, 7 Am. Va. 474). And a constitutional provision prohibiting certain restraints on alienation reserved in any grant of land and abolishing feudal tenures does not embrace as a violation thereof a deed to a cemetery association that the grantee pay forty dollars for each lot sold as a burial-place and three dollars for each grave opening, no lot to be sold for less than eighty dollars, and on breach by the grantee of any covenants of the deed all lots without interment to revert to the grantor. obvious intent of the grant, and if a proviso is nowhere stated to be a binding condition it will not be so held. If, however, there is only one construction which will give full effect to all the words of the instrument, it will be followed.[24] Again, conditions should not be totally repugnant to or in conflict with prior parts of the deed.[25] A prior condition may, however, be controlled by a later one where any other construction would be insensible.[26] And the intention of the parties may control conditional words,[27] even to the extent of affecting their ordinary meaning.[28] So all conditions and provisos should be taken together and construed in pari materia,[29] having in view the manifest intent of the instrument,[30] based upon all the clauses of the deed so as to harmonize the entire deed with the granting clause.[31] Again words of reservation or conditions in a conveyance in præsenti may operate respectively to the full extent of their terms and still be in consonance with each other.[32] Different instruments, contemporaneously executed, should be construed together, when necessary, and be treated as one;[33] although a recited agreement should not be so indefinite as to be unenforceable, nor should the condition therein be one which is merely collateral to the grant.[34] Again where the condition upon which the grantor predicates the reversion does not occur the estate will vest in fee.[35]

b. Conditions Precedent. Conditions precedent are such as must happen or be performed before an estate can vest or be discharged. They must be strictly, literally, and punctually performed.[36] The estate will vest, however, upon strict and punctual performance, where there are express words to that effect, or where it is the intention, deducible from the entire instrument, to create a condition precedent.[37] But the time or manner of payment of the purchase-money may be fixed without creating a condition precedent, or such a condition may be raised according to the intent relative to payment.[38]

c. Conditions Subsequent — (I) Generally. Conditions subsequent working a forfeiture of the estate conveyed should be strictly construed,[39] as such conditions are not favored in law,[40] and are to be taken most strongly against the grantor to prevent such forfeiture.[41] So an estate is not created on condition subsequent, unless the terms will admit of no other construction, where the deed by its terms expressly provides a lien in case of the grantee's default.[42]

(II) Test of Conditions Subsequent — (A) Rules. Conditions subsequent are raised only by apt and sufficient words, which must not only be such as of themselves import a condition, but they must be so connected with the grant in the deed as to qualify or restrain it.[43] In other words in order that a clause or if all that is granted is an easement for a particular purpose, such as the right to locate and construct a railroad, and the language of the deed does not purport to convey a fee, condition or otherwise, no land whatever is conveyed until the act intended is performed. E. 604, 55 L. R. A. 513. See also Dunlap v. Mobley, 71 Ala. 102), where a lien is expressly reserved on the property (Sheppard v. Thomas, 26 Ark. 617). But if a lien is retained to secure payment, such lien reserved proclaims the nature of the contract for conveyance and announces the terms and conditions upon which the title, legal and equitable, is to become perfect, and until that stipulation is discharged and that condition fulfilled there is no absolute investiture of the title. Conditions subsequent exist where a city vacates an alley on condition that defendant will build on it in a certain time an opera-house of certain dimensions, although equity will not divest the title because the building is not of the required dimensions (Marshalltown v. Forney, 61 Iowa 578, 16 N. W. 740); where land is conveyed for use solely for a cotton press with a provision for reversion (Houston, etc., R. Co. v. Ennis-Culvert Compress Co., 23 Tex. Civ. App. 441, 56 S. W. 367); where a royal grant reserved a quit-rent in fee, requiring certain improvements to be made, and providing that for failure to clear, etc., and to pay rent the estate should determine (Sneed v. Ward, 5 Dana (Ky.) 187); where there is a grant of a township proviso shall constitute a condition subsequent, the intention of the parties must be clearly expressed in some words importing that the estate is to depend upon a contingency provided for.[44] This intention must, however, be gathered from the entire instrument and the contract must be construed according to its terms, especially where there are express words used.[45] But these rules do not necessitate the use of express words to constitute a condition subsequent, nor need there be any express power in the writings to make reëntry for condition broken.[46] Again a condition subsequent is one operating on an estate already created and vested and rendering it liable to be defeated.[47] All that remains in the grantor is the possi-

on condition that the grantee settle a certain number of families thereon within a specified time (Chapman v. Pingree, 67 Me. 198); where the words are "providing they [the grantees] fence the land and keep it in repair" (Hooper v. Cummings, 45 Me. 359); where the reservation is for public use in a grant to the state (Porter v. Griswold, 6 Me. 430); where after the grantor's death the grantee is to pay a certain sum to a third person (Weinreich v. Weinreich, 18 Mo. App. 364); where the condition provides that a raceway be made in conformity with the act incorporating the grantor, otherwise to revert; also for the erection of a bridge across the raceway, for a convenient landing-place, for the erection and maintenance of a fence, and for the use of the raceway for watering cattle and to take ice therefrom (Woodruff v. Trenton Water-Power Co., 10 N. J. Eq. 489); where a deed by the trustees of a town stipulates that the grantee "shall allow all people to pass and repass, to fish, fowl and hunt," etc. (Parsons v. Miller, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 561); where the condition was that the grant should be void in case it should at any time afterward appear that the grantee was not seized of an estate in fee simple of adjoining lands (Towle v. Smith, 2 Rob. (N. Y.) 489); where the condition is against the sale of spirituous liquors on the premises (Jeffery v. Graham, 61 Tex. 481); where words subsequent to the grant and description are expressive of a condition subsequent followed by the words "together with all and singular the hereditaments and appurtenances," etc., followed by the habendum (Lawe v. Hyde, 39 Wis. 345); or where the condition is that on failure to comply with the conditions of a certain bond the estate shall cease, etc., coupled with a provision for reëntry, etc. (Rogan v. Walker, 1 Wis. 527). But there is not a condition subsequent where a grant, for a consideration, is made to a trustee on trust that he "shall at all times permit all the white religious societies of christians and the members of such societies to use the land as a common burying ground and for no other purpose." Brown v. Caldwell, 23 W. Va. 187, 48 Am. Rep. 376. See also Methodist Protestant Church v. Laws, 7 Ohio Cir. Ct. 211.

Conditions subsequent will not be implied from the fact that the consideration for the deed was merely nominal, where it does not appear that the use of the property for the purpose specified in the deed was a matter specially advantageous to the grantor. Olcott v. Gabert, 86 Tex. 121, 23 S. W. 985.

44. Baker v. Mott, 78 Hun (N. Y.) 141, 28 N. Y. Suppl. 968 [affirmed in 152 N. Y. 637, 46 N. E. 1144].

If from the nature of the acts to be performed by the grantee and the time required for their performance it is evidently the intention of the parties that the estate shall be held and enjoyed upon condition that the grantee perform the acts specified (Downing v. Rademacher, 133 Cal. 220, 65 Pac. 385, 85 Am. St. Rep. 160), or it is evident that the clauses in question were inserted with a view to defeat a title previously vested, on the happening of a certain contingency named in the deed, the estate is upon condition (Hihn v. Peck, 30 Cal. 280).

Where there are express words in a deed which of themselves make a condition subsequent, there is no use of a clause reserving a right of reëntry for breach thereof in order to enable the grantor to avail himself of a forfeiture. Adams v. Ore Knob Copper Co., 7 Fed. 634, 4 Hughes 589.

47. Brown v. State, 5 Colo. 496; Memphis, etc., R. Co. v. Neighbors, 51 Miss. 412.

In a conveyance upon a condition subsequent the estate vests immediately upon the execution and delivery of the deed and the condition has no effect to limit the title until it becomes operative to defeat it (Shattuck v. Hastings, 99 Mass. 23; Rollins v. Riley, 44 N. H. 9. See also Sheppard v. Thomas, 26 Ark. 617), that is, the vested estate is subject to be revested in the grantor by non-performance of the condition, and ordinarily the grantor must reënter after condition broken in order that the estate may revest in him (Rollins v. Riley, 44 N. H. 9).

If the conveyance does not depend upon the performance of the act the title will pass in præsenti. Cayton v. Walker, 10 Cal. 450. And where the grantee as part of the consideration is to pay a mortgage or assume the grantor's indebtedness thereunder, this is not a condition on the breach of which the title will revest in the grantor, but vests the title absolutely in the grantee and creates the relation of debtor as to the grantor's creditor. Martin v. Splivalo, 69 Cal. 611, 11 Pac. 484.

bility of reverter or right of entry on condition broken. The estate will remain defeasible until the condition be performed, destroyed, or barred by the statute of limitations, or by estoppel.[48] And if the act or condition required does not necessarily precede the vesting of the estate, but may accompany or follow it, and if the act may as well be done after as before the vesting of the estate, or if from the nature of the act to be performed, and the time required for its performance, it is evidently the intention of the parties that the estate shall vest, and the grantee performs the act after taking possession then the condition is subsequent.[49] Again a condition, the breach of which is good ground in equity for canceling the conveyance of which it is a part, will be held to be a condition subsequent, unless there is something in the instrument showing a contrary intent.[50]

(B) Extent of Operation of Rules. A condition subsequent may provide for the use and occupation of the property by the grantee, for maintenance, for an annuity, or other periodical payments;[51] for the payment of the grantor's debts or for saving him harmless therefrom;[52] for the use of the property for relig-

51. A condition subsequent may be one which provides for the use and occupation of the property, during life, by the grantors, or by the grantor (Suisun Bank v. Stark, 106 Cal. 202, 39 Pac. 531; Hefner v. Yount, 8 Blackf. App. 94; Drew v. Baldwin, 48 Wis. 529, 4 N. W. 576). And a grantor has a lien on land for an annuity rather than a right to claim a forfeiture for non-payment of the annuity, where the consideration of a deed is the payment of an annuity to the grantor during life. Gallaher v. Herbert, 117 Ill. 160, 7 N. E. 511. But a conveyance by parents to a son, reserving a life-estate, and stating that the son "is to pay the taxes on said land" and has to support the "grantors during their natural lifetime and at their death" such son "shall have possession" is not a deed on condition subsequent. Studdard v. Wells, 120 Mo. 25, 25 S. W. 201. Nor is a condition annexed to an estate by way of defeasance, where the consideration of the deed is certain profits and advantages, contained in a bond of even date, which provided that the bargainer was to be supported for life by the bargainee, to which was added a nota bene to the effect that the land was not to be sold or disposed of. Hart v. Dougherty, 51 N. C. 86. And a provision in a deed to a daughter of the grantor, in consideration of her agreement to support him, that she shall be prohibited from transferring the land does not apply after her father's death. City v. Wood, 15 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 94. Again, where the condition was for the support of the grantors, and on the failure of the grantee to do so the deed to be void and the premises to revert, it was decided that the condition involved a forfeiture on failure of the grantee to perform, which was intended as security in the nature of a penalty for nonperformance. e. Persons Bound to Perform Condition. The agreements or conditions of a deed bind one who accepts the deed;[77] a purchaser from the grantor, with notice;[78] and any assignee or grantee of the grantee in whom the estate on condition is vested.[79] Again if a testator takes title charged with notice of and subject to a restriction those who succeed to his title cannot be heard to complain thereof.[80] But stipulations to be performed by the grantee are not obligatory unless he accepts the conveyance.[81] And if the conveyance to the grantee, of the original grantee, fails to mention the condition such subsequent grantee is not obligated.[82] Again where by force of a statute a fee vests in the remainder-man he takes the land discharged of the obligation of the condition imposed upon the life-tenant.[83] And if the grantor's obligation is limited to the immediate grantee's occupancy it ceases on determination of such occupancy.[84] It has also been held that a vendee is not affected by a condition by which his vendor held the land, as to a matter to be performed by the parties subsequent to its execution.[85] Nor is a grantee bound after he conveys the land to others where the condition is limited as to performance to the owners.[86]

f. Conditions Personal or Running With the Land — (i) General Principles and Rules. A condition subsequent is attached to the title and runs with it as against a subsequent grantee with actual or constructive notice.[87] Courts look to the purpose contemplated, and intention will prevail, if ascertainable and not in violation of law and equity.[88] The whole instrument as well as the particular clause relied on must also be considered.[89] A condition so intended will be annexed to the transferred estate, in form and substance, so as to burden it with the consequences of its violation, particularly where the condition is perfect in itself,[90] or where the language employed is an integral part of the deed itself limiting the extent and nature of the grant.[91] On the other hand if the language used shows personal obligations and no intent to create real servitudes it will be construed accordingly.[92] Again a compensation for an injury in the nature of a

trespass cannot pass with the land as such damages are personal and do not run with the land.[93]

(II) As to Heirs and Assigns Named or Not Named. Where a condition as to the use of the land is a condition subsequent it runs with the land until broken and binds the grantee and his assigns,[94] especially where by a natural interpretation of the words used such condition is attached to the estate conveyed.[95] So where the condition is to erect a church it follows the estate, even though the heirs and assigns are not mentioned.[96]

(III) Maintenance or Payment of Annuity. Where such is the intention a provision for maintenance[97] or payment of an annuity will constitute a lien or charge upon the land.[98] So a condition for support is not a personal one and the grantee may alienate the estate and transfer the charge.[99] A distinction exists, however, between a condition which is intended as a lien or charge on the land itself and a mere contract for personal service; thus where the stipulation is the principal part of the contract it will become a personal charge on the grantee.[1] So where land is conveyed by deed poll with a reservation or provision that the grantee shall perform a certain service for the benefit of the grantor, and the grantee accepts the deed he is bound to perform the service; but the contract, whether express or implied, is a mere personal contract of the party liable and no lien is imposed upon the estate by way of security for performance.[2]

4. Performance or Breach — a. Generally. Words of a condition should not, in determining whether or not there is a performance or breach thereof, be given a meaning inconsistent with the manifest intention and purpose of the donor.[3]

And a person insisting upon a forfeiture must bring himself clearly within the terms of the condition.[4]

b. Condition Precedent. Although performance of a condition precedent is a prerequisite to obtaining the title,[5] yet if a condition is construed as a covenant or as a condition precedent, substantial performance, bona fide according to the intention of the parties, having in view the surrounding circumstances, is sufficient.[6]

c. Grant to Woman For Life or Widowhood. A grant to a woman for life or widowhood is terminated by her marriage, as a deed, since the statute of uses, is not to be construed by the same rules of interpretation as applied before that time.[7]

d. Where One of Two Conditions Is Personal to Grantor. In case there are two conditions, one of which is personal to the grantor and is for his protection merely, and ceases to operate at his death, neglect or refusal to perform the one which remains after such death creates a forfeiture in favor of the heirs, but during the grantor's life both contingencies must happen to constitute a breach.[8]

e. Time For Performance — (i) Conditions Precedent Generally. Generally the time for performance of a condition precedent cannot be enlarged by parol so that an action can be maintained on the deed.[9] So where a condition of payment is precedent to the vesting of the estate, and time is made an essential part of the contract, no estate can vest or pass until there is a performance on the day named.[10]

(ii) Where Grantor Has Received Substantial Benefits. If property is deeded in consideration of its use for a particular purpose and it may fairly be presumed that the grantor has received substantial benefits from the conveyance in accordance with the purpose thereof, his property having been enhanced in value by the conveyance, there is such a substantial compliance, as that a discontinuance of the use many years thereafter will not constitute a forfeiture based on a failure of consideration.[11]

(iii) Where Time Is Specified — (a) Generally. If the time within which the act may be performed is specified in the instrument of conveyance it may be done at any time within that period.[12] And the land will be free from the con-

Where restrictions, conditions, or limitations are so carefully, clearly, and explicitly stated as to shut out all doubt of their import, they will as against general expressions constitute the superior controlling words in determining whether or not the act done constitutes a breach. dition after a certain date where it appears that there is to be no reversion after such date.[13]

(B) Acts Commenced in Furtherance of Condition. If the act to be done within the condition has been carried on in good faith, it is sufficient, even though the thing to be done has not been fully completed within the time specified.[14] So performance commenced in good faith in furtherance of the act contemplated brings the principal thing to be done within the time limited.[15]

(C) Where Conditional Acts Are Based on Doing of Other Acts. If the conditional act is to be done within a certain time after the doing of a certain act by the grantor, such time does not commence to run until the grantor has done the act specified.[16]

(D) Acts to Be Done Upon Grantor's Request. The owner in fee, who has granted a portion of certain lands with certain rights and privileges in and to the remaining adjacent lands of the grantor if the grantee upon the grantor's request performs certain acts within a specified time, may without making such request grant the remaining lands to another.[17]

18. Union College v. New York, 65 N. Y. App. Div. 553, 73 N. Y. Suppl. 51, where a neglect for twenty-five years was held a breach in the absence of any reason for such inaction. See also Adams v. Ore Knob Copper Co., 7 Fed. 634, 4 Hughes 589, holding that in case the grantors derive no benefit in consideration of the grant, but only upon performance of the condition, it is the duty of the grantees to perform a condition subsequent in a reasonable time. But see Brown

(v) Unreasonable Delay. Where the performance is expressly to be within a reasonable time, the lapse of time may be such, coupled with the character of the act to be performed, that the court will take judicial notice that it is unreasonable, unless some sufficient explanation is given.[19] Again the period of non-performance may of itself be of so long duration as to constitute a breach.[20]

(vi) Where Obligation Is Continuous. If the obligation of the grantees is continuous and they fail to perform, or having commenced performance and discontinued and failed to resume in a reasonable time the estate will be forfeited by the breach or non-performance of the condition subsequent.[21]

f. Maintenance or Annuity — (i) Generally. In determining whether a stipulation for support has been broken the court will consider all the circumstances of the case, and the condition and situation of the parties;[22] or the jury may determine whether or not there has been a substantial compliance with the condition.[23] A substantial compliance is sufficient to prevent a forfeiture of a condition for support.[24]

(ii) What Constitutes a Breach. There is a breach of a condition for maintenance and support where there is an entire failure[25] or refusal to perform by the grantee,[26] or by his heirs;[27] where there is non-performance by the grantee;[28] where there is an abandonment of the contract by both parties;[29] or where there is an abandonment of the property by the grantee.[30] But the conveyance will not be set aside where the grantor leaves the premises without fault on the grantee's part and the latter is ready to perform.[31] Nor will there be a breach where the grantor refuses to live any longer with the grantee and fails to request the latter to furnish maintenance, or at least to give notice of need thereof.[32]

v. State, 5 Colo. 496, holding that if a deed is silent as to the time of performance of an act as a condition subsequent the court will not imply a condition as to reasonable time, and make to that extent a contract for the parties, but will hold that the grantor was willing to leave such time of commencement or completion of performance to the grantee.

Again a condition for the payment of an annuity is not broken so long as the annuity is not in arrears.[33]

(III) Personal Performance by Grantee. The presumption is that personal performance of the obligation is required of the grantee, where an aged parent conveys his property to his son on condition of support for life, either by the payment of money or property in specific amounts, or for support generally.[34]

(IV) Survivor of One of Two Grantors. Where such is the intent the grantees will be obligated to support the survivor after the death of the other grantor.[35]

(V) Breach as to Part of Conditions. There is a breach where there is a failure by the grantee to comply with one of the essential parts of the condition.[36]

(VI) Place of Furnishing Support. If there is no express direction where or how the support should be furnished the person entitled to receive it is held to have a right to require it to be furnished at any place he may select, if it can be supplied there without needless or unreasonable expense.[37]

g. Use or Improvement of Property — (I) Generally. If land is merely granted for a particular use, without words of forfeiture or reëntry upon discontinuance, such discontinuance will not operate as a defeasance.[38] And a condition to keep a certain part of a building in reasonable repair, without a covenant to rebuild, has reference only to the existing building.[39]

(II) Cessation or Abandonment of Use, Non-User, and Misuser. It is a general rule that the estate of the grantee continues for so long as he continues to use the property for the purpose specified and the condition is violated when he ceases such use,[40] or abandons the purpose contemplated.[41] But cessation of use is impliedly at least distinguished from mere non-user. The latter does not constitute a forfeiture. Misuser may, however, so operate.[42]

(III) Different or Inconsistent Use. There is a breach when the premises are used for another and entirely different purpose than that specified or manifestly intended,[43] especially where such use is continuous for a long time, as distinguished from a mere temporary or occasional use.[44] There must, however, be an essential diversion, contrary to the terms of the grant and the intention of the grantor, to work a forfeiture.[45] A use which is not inconsistent with the purpose expressed or clearly intended does not constitute a breach.[46]

(IV) Intentional Neglect or Wilful Disregard. When maintenance or use is part of the condition, there must be such neglect to maintain as to indicate an intention not to comply, in order to constitute a breach of condition. It must be shown that the spirit and purpose of the condition have been wilfully disregarded by the grantee to establish such breach as will authorize a reëntry by the grantor.[47]

(V) Suspension of Use. Where the use is merely defined, a suspension of the use for a time does not ipso facto work a forfeiture.[48]

(vi) Performance For a Time and Subsequent Discontinuance. If the purposes for which the conditional grant was made are fulfilled by performance for some period of time, a discontinuance thereafter is not necessarily a breach.[49] A substantial compliance extending over a long period of time is sufficient.[50]

(vii) Divisible Conditions. There may be a forfeiture under one clause of a condition and the rights still be preserved as to the grantee, where he has fulfilled the requirements of another clause of such condition.[51]

(viii) Breach as to One of Two Parcels of Land. A breach of condition as to one of two parcels granted does not work a forfeiture of the other, where the condition as to the former has no application to the latter parcel, the condition relating thereto having been performed.[52]

(ix) Placing Grantee In Statu Quo. The fact that the grantee cannot be placed in statu quo is an important factor in determining the question of forfeiture.[53]

(x) Distance As Essential Factor. In determining whether or not there is a breach of the condition, distance as to location is an essential factor,[54] especially when expressly so stipulated.[55]

(xi) Main and Incidental Purpose. If one of the provisions is subordinate and incidental to the main object of the grant and there is a failure by non-performance as to the main object the incidental part also fails.[56]

Profits of the land may be indirectly applied to a purpose in furtherance of the use intended, although not strictly within the letter of the condition or use. Chapin v. Winchester School Dist. No. 2, 35 N. H. 445, holding that application of the profits of land to making and repairing a school-house denced by the terms of the grant, may be such as to authorize a sale of the lands by the grantee, and the condition in case of sale will not be broken until the new grantee uses the premises for a purpose other than that specified.[58] Nor will a disposition of the land for other purposes made with the consent of the cestui que trust operate as a forfeiture.[59] So a forfeiture is not occasioned by the conveyance of land, by a minority of the grantee corporation, for another use, where the subsequent grantee never took possession, but reconveyed the premises to such corporation, and they were again used for the purpose contemplated and specified.[60] And a conveyance may be made under sanction of a state statute of a part of the premises.[61]

(XIV) SALE OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS. An unauthorized sale of intoxicating liquors by a third person, without the fault or negligence of the grantee, will not work a forfeiture of a condition prohibiting such sales on the premises granted, especially where the grantor has suffered no injury; but a public sale by a tenant, with the assent of the grantee, or with his knowledge and without reasonable diligence to prevent it, operates as a breach.[62]

h. Conditions Relating to Sale. If a provision as to the sale of property, dependent upon the payment of the purchase-price, is a condition precedent and it is not performed at the time specified the grantor's title does not pass.[63] An attempt to alien the land will also operate as a breach of an express condition not to do so and will vest the estate in the person to whom it is to revert upon a breach.[64] And where the intent of the condition requires performance in full to does not work a forfeiture, although not strictly an application of the profits to teaching the arts of reading, writing, and arithmetic as conditioned.

If the contract as to the use intended is merged in the deed, and the title thereunder becomes absolute in the grantee, there is no breach, even though the grantee afterward sells a part of the land. Scantlin v. Garvin, 46 Ind. 262.

Where a subsequent grantee, under a sale by legal process of a railroad franchise, carries out the purpose upon which the grant was conditioned, the grantor is not entitled to a reconveyance as for an abandonment, even though the land is conditioned to revert on abandonment. Where the terms of the grant are such that the grantor is precluded from inquiring into the validity of a conveyance by the grantee, no forfeiture is incurred by the new grantee as long as the latter fulfils the condition. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Covington, 2 Bush (Ky.) 526.

A breach of a condition, as to railroad use, is not occasioned by a transfer, under authority of an act of the legislature, to another company. Southard v. New Jersey Cent. R. Co., 26 N. J. L. 13.

Where the grantee corporation is dissolved by an act of the legislature and the grantee's conditional right is surrendered to another corporate body, which continues the public use on which the condition rests, the land will not revert. Tifft v. Buffalo, 82 N. Y. 204, where the grant was originally to a turnpike corporation for the purposes of a road, and the surrender was made to a city in which the road was situated and the latter maintained it as a public highway.

61. Alexandria, etc., R. Co. v. Chew, 27 Gratt. (Va.) 547, holding that where a turnpike corporation conveys, under state law, a part of a strip, granted for perpetual use as a public highway, the remainder of the strip being used for a road, no forfeiture is created.

Where the prohibition is limited, by a town being "legally" incorporated and the sanction of sales by a local election, sales made thereafter do not constitute a breach, even though made after a decree of dissolution of the township corporation on the ground that it embraced agricultural lands. Where the restraint is upon the conveyance of property within a limited period it will be presumed that it was intended to prevent the transfer in the ordinary manner and by the

the extent of the terms imposed it must be fulfilled.[65] But if the property is to revert if sold, a sale thereof for the grantee's debts under order of court is not a breach.[66]

i. Sufficiency of Performance — (i) Generally. A condition is satisfied if the acts necessary to performance are done within the terms of the grant or condition, having in view the purpose and character of the conditional act and the grantee's intent in performing the same.[67]

(ii) What Satisfies Term "Children." One child is within the meaning of the word "children" in the condition of a deed and satisfies the condition that the land should revert if the grantee should die without "children" living.[68]

j. Excuse For Non-Performance or Breach — (i) Generally. The grantor's acts may be such as to excuse performance within the time stipulated.[69] So a recognition of the grantee's title after the happening of the event on which the forfeiture is based is an important factor in determining whether there is a reversion under a covenant therefor.[70] Again the existence of war and conseusual and proper instruments employed for that purpose, and a bond for a deed will not produce that result nor operate as a breach of the condition. Voris v. Renshaw, 49 Ill. 425.

65. Frost v. Frost, 63 Me. 399, holding that if the intent is that the grantee of an undivided half of the property shall sell the whole estate or reconvey within a time specified, on being reimbursed for a proportionate part of the cost of improvements he will not be entitled to be reimbursed until he sells the whole estate.

An express provision that the property may be sold may nevertheless be dependent upon compliance with the terms of the conveyance or condition. Nelson v. Solomon, 112 Ga. 188, 37 S. E. 404.

66. Woodworth v. Payne, 74 N. Y. 196, 30 Am. Rep. 298.

67. Performance is sufficient when within the meaning of the grant as to time and place (Knight v. Alabama Midland R. Co., 101 Ala. 407, 13 So. 260); where there is a performance within the time specified of a condition to locate a navy-yard and a depot and appropriate the premises to that purpose (Murdock v. Memphis, 7 Coldw. (Tenn.) 483); where the character of a railroad station to be erected is not specified and a structure is erected which in its character and management was like most stations on the road (Caldwell v. East Broad Top R., etc., Co., 169 Pa. St. 99, 32 Atl. 85); where a railroad corporation, grantee, commenced work, became insolvent, thereafter sold its road to another company which located, constructed, and operated its road over the granted premises and in part over the original grantee's location and the road as so located was operated within the time specified and until the second company was consolidated with defendant (Morrill v. Wabash, etc., R. Co., 96 Mo. 174, 9 S. W. 657); and where there is an independent covenant and the preliminary conditions have been complied with in good faith and the deed made, even though the grantee afterward failed to complete performance (Hone v. Woodruff, 1 Minn. 418). And where the deed has been accepted and the act stipulated has been done the grantee is obligated. Miuor v. Deland, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 266.

Performance is not sufficient where the vendee was to discharge the vendor's floating debt by certain methods of payment and the vendee made a partial payment in that way by cash and bonds to one of the vendor's creditors and directors, with the approval of the vendor's president, and his consent that the creditor might appropriate the sum to his own use, the directors of the company taking no action (Tennessee, etc., R. Co. v. East Alabama R. Co., 73 Ala. 426); or where a bond was given to convey a certain interest in lands in consideration that a railroad be extended to a certain place within a certain time and the road was extended and afterward the deed was given reciting its execution in compliance with the bond (Northrup v. Mollett, 35 S. W. 268, 18 Ky. L. Rep. 89).

69. Smith v. American Crystal Monument Co., 29 Ind. App. 308, 62 N. E. 1013 (holding that if the grantor's acts prevent performance within the time stipulated the grantee's delay will not operate as a breach); Baker v. Oneonta W. C. T. U., 57 N. Y. App. Div. 290, 67 N. Y. Suppl. 949 (holding that where performance is commenced within the time specified but is prevented by the grantor's subsequent acts and unwarranted claims of title the grantee's title is not defeated).

The grantee, after non-performance, cannot set up the possession of the grantor as a refusal to put him in possession, thereby preventing performance, where the former did not desire possession, and in such case the grantor's possession will be presumed to be merely to enforce forfeiture. O'Brien v. Wagner, 94 Mo. 93, 7 S. W. 19, 4 Am. St. Rep. 362.

A wife's declarations and acts, without her husband's knowledge and consent, cannot affect his title and revest the estate in the grantor. Murphy v. Hubert, 16 Pa. St. 50.

70. Robinson v. Ingram, 126 N. C. 327, 35 S. E. 612, where the grantor lived a number of years after the breach, receiving the supquent conditions preventing performance may constitute a valid excuse.[71] But outlays upon the estate by the conditional grantee, even though by way of consideration to relieve it from encumbrances, will not prevent a forfeiture for breach of the condition.[72] Nor is performance of a condition excused because the grantee is a municipal corporation, where such grantee's right to do the act is incidental to the powers expressly granted or essential to carry out the objects of the corporation.[73] Nor, where a deed of partition reserves a strip of land on either side of a street, with mutual covenants and conditions not to erect buildings thereon, is it any excuse for a breach that there were violations on the opposite side of the street.[74] So the minority of the heirs of the grantee does not excuse them from performance.[75]

(II) Impossibility of Performance—(A) Generally. A condition in a deed, whether precedent or subsequent, is not binding after the party imposing it has rendered its performance impossible or unnecessary.[76] And if before a reasonable time has elapsed within which to comply with the condition, the grantee has been prevented by an act of God from complying with the same no forfeiture takes place.[77]

(B) Maintenance or Support. The grantor's irritability, ill-temper, or unseemly conduct may be such as to render performance impossible, and in such case if the grantee has otherwise so performed his part of the conditions as to constitute a substantial compliance there is no forfeiture.[78] On the other hand there will be a breach of the condition and a forfeiture where the acts of the grantee, in essential matters and as distinguished from mere casual or unimportant omissions, are those of habitual, persistent unkindness, abuse, mistreatment or ill-treatment, unfilial and undutiful conduct or cold neglect, or even a failure to give a quiet, comfortable, and respectable home, or other acts rendering life intolerable, or otherwise making the purpose of the grant impossible of realization.[79]

79. The grantor's acts are a breach where his unkindness and ill-treatment compel his parents to leave and no accident, misfortune, or unseen event of any kind prevents performance (Oard v. Oard, 59 Ill. 46); where he wholly neglected to perform, and even abuses and ill-treats his parents (Frazier v. Miller, 16 Ill. 48); where there is unfilial and undutiful treatment of parents and cold neglect (Rowell v. Jewett, 69 Me. 293); where the grantee did not and could not give the grantor a quiet, comfortable, and respectable home (Humphrey v. West, 40 Mich. 597); where there is mistreatment of such a character as to render the grantor's life with the grantees intolerable (Alford v. Alford, 1 Tex. (c) Prohibition or Operation of Law. As a general rule no breach or forfeiture is occasioned by non-performance of a condition subsequent necessitated through prohibition or operation of law.[80]

k. Effect of Performance or Breach — (i) Effect Generally of Performance. If the condition has been complied with and the grantee's title perfected, the grantor is without any interest in the property, and cannot complain of its abandonment and the intrusion of a trespasser.[81]

(ii) Effect Generally of Breach. Where a fee simple is vested in the grantee on a condition subsequent it is subject to be defeated by a neglect or refusal to perform the condition.[82] And generally the non-performance or breach of such a condition entitles the grantor to claim a forfeiture or possession of the land, or the grant will be voidable, when such is the intent of the deed;[83] or the terms of the grant may be such as, upon a breach or neglect or refusal to perform, to give the grantor a right to reënter,[84] be reinvested with the title,[85] and to hold the land free of any right of the grantee therein.[86] In order, however, that the title shall revert, even though it is so stipulated, the act constituting the breach bitual, or in some material respect inconsistent with the reasonable expectation and comfort of the grantor in view of his situation. A mere casual omission not very important or injurious should not be necessarily deemed a forfeiture. 83. Thus whenever a breach of a condition subsequent, which runs with the land, is committed the grantor is at liberty to claim a forfeiture. O'Brien v. Wetterell, 14 Kan. 616. And if the act done is within the meaning of the express words upon the doing of which the estate is to revert the grantors will be entitled to possession. Lafayette, etc., Gravel Road Co. v. Vanclain, 92 Ind. 153. So an estate on condition subsequent may be divested by a subsequent deed to another where there is an express agreement to that effect. Byrne v. Marshall, 44 Ala. 355. And the estate is forfeited on a conveyance by the grantee to another with knowledge of an agreement which is in substance a condition subsequent. Wilson v. Wilson, 86 Ind. 472. So if the act to be performed is a part of the consideration and a bond is given for the performance the estate is forfeited by a failure to perform and constitutes a proper subject for the interference of chancery. Leach v. Leach, 4 Ind. 628, 58 Am. Dec. 642. And a deed containing a clause "provided always, and this deed is on the express condition" that a certain act be done, makes the deed voidable by the grantor on breach thereof. Hammond v. Port Royal, etc., R. Co., 15 S. C. 10. But non-performance alone does not divest the title of the grantee, although it entitles the grantor's heirs to maintain ejectment. must be one within the terms of the condition.[87] The tender of an additional sum will, however, operate to discharge the condition where upon breach such payment may under the stipulation be made and an absolute title pass.[88]

(III) Ipso Facto Determination of Estate. A breach of a condition subsequent in a deed does not ipso facto operate to determine and revest the estate, but the same remains in the grantee subject to be defeated only by some sufficient act at the election of the grantor or his heirs.[89] So a provision that the title shall revert is not self-executing where the title passes absolutely by the deed, and the clause is only a covenant.[90] Again, where a purchase is made under color of lawful authority and at a time when the law was presumptively valid it must be regarded as having been lawfully made, and the fact that the law is subsequently declared unconstitutional, thereby preventing performance, does not ipso facto revest title in the grantor under a condition to that effect, the failure to perform merely making the deed voidable.[91]

(IV) Effect of Breach as to Maintenance or Annuity. An estate is forfeited upon non-performance of a condition subsequent for life support, even though the grantee be a feme covert;[92] and the legal title becomes revested upon breach by the grantee and lawful reëntry by the grantor.[93] Again upon failure of the grantee to perform a condition for the payment of an annuity and the doing of other acts the estate of the grantee fails and revests in the grantor to the extent of the interest granted and on his death passes to the persons entitled.[94]

5. Release or Waiver of Condition or of Forfeiture — a. Who May Release or Waive. Ordinarily the grantor alone can release the condition imposed by his deed.[95] And one who makes a grant of land on condition precedent may waive compliance therewith so long as he holds the reversion, but when the reversionary

The breach of conditions subsequent, which are not followed by a limitation over to a third person, do not ipso facto work a forfeiture of the freehold to which they are annexed, but only vests in the grantor or his heirs, who are in privity of blood with him, a right of action, which cannot be transferred to a stranger. interest is conveyed, his right to waive such compliance ceases.[96] Again the grantee may waive a condition imposed for his benefit.[97]

b. When Implied as to Condition Precedent. A waiver of performance of a condition precedent is implied where the party entitled to performance prevents the fulfilment of the condition or absolutely refuses performance; but a mere assertion of inability or that the party will refuse is insufficient.[98]

c. By Agreement, Acts, or Inconsistent Conduct. If the terms of the deed so provide, there will be no reversion for non-performance of a condition after a certain time, and in such case on expiration of the time the estate will be freed from the condition.[99] A condition may also be waived or a forfeiture saved not only by express agreement,[1] but also by acts[2] showing an intention to continue the estate in the grantee,[3] or to voluntarily forego the benefits of the condition,[4] especially where the grantor's declarations, conduct, or failure to act, when he ought to act, have been at variance or inconsistent with his right to enforce a forfeiture[5] or have so continued for a long period of time.[6]

Annuity, although payable in money, can be discharged by payment, otherwise by subsequent mutual stipulation and consent, and if the grantor after he has parted with the property agrees to take in lieu of the annuity stipulated the rents and profits and also in fact receives them, this constitutes a discharge of the annuity as to each year in which payment is received in this manner. Denham v. Walker, 93 Ga. 497, 21 S. E. 102.

it does not appear that the grantee understood that there was a waiver, or that he relied thereon in proceeding to do the act claimed to operate as a forfeiture.[8]

e. By Acceptance of Performance. There is a waiver where there is an acceptance of performance after condition broken or after forfeiture,[9] or until the grantor has become revested of the estate by some proper act.[10]

f. Failure to Demand or Assert Right. A waiver may result from a failure to demand performance;[11] or to enter for condition broken;[12] or where the grantor, although he is entitled to a reasonable time after the breach to claim a forfeiture,[13] does not make such claim for several years;[14] or neglects for many years to bring an action to enforce the agreement;[15] or where, having an election so to do, he fails to claim a defeasance during his lifetime.[16] And if the grantor is in possession at the time of condition broken he waives the forfeiture if he makes no express claim to hold for condition broken.[17]

g. Effect of Waiver. After a forfeiture is once waived the grantor can never take advantage of it.[18] It has been held, however, that although the grantor

(N. Y.) 125; Maginnis v. Knickerbocker Ice Co., 112 Wis. 385, 88 N. W. 300 (holding that mere silence will not operate as a waiver, in case of an intentional breach of a condition, although the grantee incurs expense which would operate to his prejudice, if the grantor were thereafter permitted to insist on the forfeiture); Adams v. Ore Knob Copper Co., 7 Fed. 634, 4 Hughes 589.

There is no waiver where the grantor executed a deed subject to a mortgage to secure bonds for raising funds to erect buildings on the premises for a certain use and the grantor acquiesces for two years in the delay to execute the mortgage. Haslett Park Assoc. v. Haslett, 101 Mich. 315, 59 N. W. 601. Nor will a forfeiture be declared in equity for a technical failure to comply with a condition when for a number of years no objection is made. Hurto v. Grant, 90 Iowa 414, 57 N. W. 899.

But silence on one side and conduct in good faith relying thereon on the other, whereby such other will be damaged if the act relied on is not binding, constitutes a waiver, and the grantor will lose the benefit of a condition that the land revert on non-performance by conduct rendering it inequitable for him to insist on the forfeiture as stipulated. Maginnis v. Knickerbocker Ice Co., 112 Wis. 385, 88 N. W. 300.

8. Howe v. Lowell, 171 Mass. 575, 51 N. E. 536, holding that there is no waiver where the grantor does nothing actually to induce the grantee to do the act relied on as a forfeiture, even though he makes no objections thereto and subsequently deeds other land to the same grantee, incidentally recognizing the claimed right of the grantee, but it does not appear that the grantee understood that there was a waiver or relied thereon in proceeding to do the said act of forfeiture.

9. There is a waiver where the sum due on an annuity is accepted after forfeiture (Chalker v. Chalker, 1 Conn. 79, 6 Am. Dec. 206); where the grantor left the premises for a time because of an alleged breach but returned and accepted further support (Dunklee v. Hooper, 69 Vt. 65, 37 Atl. 225. See also Norton v. Perkins, 67 Vt. 203, 31 Atl. 148); and where the condition was not to sell any separate parcel without first offering it to the grantor and the latter accepts a mortgage from the grantee, containing a power of sale, and assigns the same (Wheeler v. Dunning, 33 Hun (N. Y.) 205). See also Grigg v. Landis, 21 N. J. Eq. 494.

There is no waiver where the condition is to cultivate land, render half the produce, and pay certain sums of money, etc., and after condition broken, the grantor orders the grantee to quit the premises but accepts the produce (Frost v. Butler, 7 Me. 225, 22 Am. Dec. 199); or by receiving, after forfeiture, the amount due on the note of a third person, passed to him as the consideration of the conveyance (Lawrence v. Gifford, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 366).

A condition which is rightfully waived and

unjustifiably prevents performance by his acts the fee is not thereby vested unconditionally in the grantee, but the condition should be performed within a reasonable time thereafter.[19]

6. Enforcement of Forfeiture — a. Remedy in General. The grantor may be entitled only to a forfeiture of the estate;[20] or he may institute a proceeding to recover the thing granted;[21] or sue for partial failure of consideration;[22] or in assumpsit for non-performance by the grantee of the duties specified as the condition;[23] or have a writ of entry;[24] or bring an action for damages;[25] or of covenant;[26] or of ejectment;[27] or of trespass to try title.[28] And upon failure to perform a condition for maintenance the grantor may have the amount of his maintenance determined and declared a lien upon the premises and if not paid have the premises sold.[29] A recovery for breach of a condition may also be had even though the deed also recites a money consideration.[30] The necessity, however, of a court proceeding, as a prerequisite to a forfeiture, may depend upon whether there is a grant of the fee or of an easement.[31] But a condition which creates a charge on the annual rents and profits, but not on the land itself, cannot be enforced by a sale of the corpus of the property.[32]

b. Public Grant. In the case of a public grant the right of the government to repossess itself of the estate granted may be asserted through judicial proceedings, or by some legislative act showing an assertion of ownership on account of the breach of the condition upon which the original grant was made.[33]

c. Equitable Relief — (i) In General. A decree for specific performance is not a proper remedy for breach of a condition as to railroad use.[34] Nor will equity lend its aid to enforce a penalty or forfeiture and to divest an estate for breach of a condition subsequent.[35] But relief may be had in equity when the extinguished is gone forever and cannot be revived. McWhorter v. Hetzell, 124 Ind. 129, 24 N. E. 743; Merrifield v. Cobleigh, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 178.

Equity will not compel grantors to join in the appointment of appraisers under a deed conditioned for school use and on breach if "the grantees shall knowingly persist therein, the grantees forfeit the right herein conveyed, upon the grantor paying to them the appraised value of such buildings" and providing a method for appraising the value of such buildings. Warner v. Bennett, 31 Conn. 468. And if by reason of the nature of the remedy at law is not full and complete.[36] So the circumstances may justify restoring the consideration with interest from demand, instead of enforcing the conditional deed.[37]

(II) Maintenance or Support. If the grantees, in conveyances conditioned for maintenance or support, so neglect or refuse to fulfil the condition that there is a breach thereof, equity has jurisdiction to rescind the contract, cancel or set aside the deed, compel a reconveyance, or otherwise restore the consideration to the grantor.[38] So equity will restore the grantor to his ownership of the property and cancel all records that might otherwise be used to his prejudice.[39] And the court will not only annul the conveyance and conditional agreement but will also do equity between the parties as to rents and improvements;[40] or the grantor may have his title quieted,[41] or other equitable relief will be granted,[42] especially so where the grantee's promises have been fraudulently made and the deed executed in reliance thereon.[43]

entry, demand, or notice.[48] And reëntry is unnecessary where the grantor or his heirs retain possession,[49] but such party must manifest an intent to hold possession.[50]

(III) Denial. A mere constructive possession of the grantee, such as accompanies the legal title, ought not to be deemed a denial of the grantor's right to enter. Some act must be done by the grantee which is tantamount to his disavowal of his obligation to perform the condition.[51]

(IV) Time. If a time is fixed for performing a condition subsequent an entry should not be made before the expiration thereof.[52] And if it be expressly provided that entry may be made within a specified time after breach and notice given, such time will run from the giving of a new notice where the breach still continues.[53] But if one has dispensed with the condition he cannot afterward enter for a subsequent breach.[54]

Entry is sufficient where, money being unpaid according to condition, the grantor notifies the grantee that the condition is broken and orders him to quit the premises (Frost v. Butler, 7 Me. 225, 22 Am. Dec. 199); or where the grantor went on the land with two witnesses and there notified the grantee that possession would be taken for the breach (Jenks v. Walton, 64 Me. 97. See also Rowell v. Jewett, 69 Me. 293). In the case of a private grant an entry by the grantor, or any act equivalent thereto showing a purpose to take advantage of the breach of the condition subsequent, and to reclaim the estate forfeited by such breach, is all that is required. So where A conveys to B an estate on condition, and at the same time B mortgages to A, who on the non-payment of the mortgage debt at maturity enters for foreclosure, and while so in possession a breach of condition in the deed to B occurs, this is not sufficient without further notice to absolutely divest B's estate. grant upon condition, freed from any subsequent lien, encumbrance, or limitation.[57] And one who reënters for breach of a condition may invoke judicial remedies relying generally upon his title to the same as if no disturbance thereof had occurred by reason of the grant on condition.[58]

e. Demand For Performance or Notice of Forfeiture. As a general rule no demand for performance of a condition subsequent is necessary.[59] If, however, there is an evident waiver of performance by the immediate grantor of the party seeking to enforce the forfeiture, a demand must be made before the right of reëntry exists.[60] It has also been held that demand for performance of a condition subsequent is a prerequisite to forfeiture of the estate;[61] or it must be made in the alternative;[62] or a reasonable notice must be given or a request made to the grantee.[63] A demand may also be equivalent to entry;[64] and it may limit the time up to which damages may be recovered.[65]

f. Damages, Rents and Profits, and Value of Use. If plaintiff in an action for possession has a judgment of title in him, the damages incidental under his demand for continuing to hold the realty after the bringing of the action to the time of trial, include the rents and profits and value of the use and occupation of the land.[66]

Upon breach of the condition the estate reverts as a legal right, and if the grantor enters to claim a forfeiture the estate reverts to all intents and purposes. Rowell v. Jewett, 71 Me. 408. If it is stipulated that the land shall revert upon breach, and there is a breach and reëntry or acts done equivalent thereto, for the purpose of reclaiming the land, in the absence of any equity preventing the legal effect of such facts, the title to such property will thereby become revested in such person as absolutely as it was before such conveyance was made. If the condition is one of indemnity to another by the grantee the grantor may, upon its non-performance by the grantee, satisfy the indemnity and immediately, without a demand on the latter for reimbursement, enter on the land, and the estate thereupon vests in him and cannot thereafter be divested by a tender of performance by the grantee. Exception to rule.— Although a demand such as the law requires for possession is equivalent to a reëntry, yet where the time for performance is limited and made of the essence of the contract, and there is therefore nothing to be determined by the demand and all is determined by the lapse of time and a failure to perform, a demand for performance can subserve no useful purpose. agreement, or undertaking on the grantee's part, or it should contain such terms as have a certain legal operation from which a covenant would necessarily arise.[67] And where an agreement limiting the use of granted premises is a covenant and not a condition its violation creates no forfeiture.[68]

b. Validity. Negative easements or conditions, or limitations restricting the use of property, if not unlawful in character, will be upheld.[69] But restrictions on the use of real estate, where not for the benefit of some individual or of the public, are contrary to public policy and void.[70]

c. Equitable Easement or Servitude. If a restriction and limitation upon the use and enjoyment of a certain portion of the premises granted is intended for the benefit of other lots, it creates to the extent of such restriction an implied equitable servitude on the lot granted in favor of the other lots and the equitable easement attaches to each and every lot so conveyed, so that the equitable rights and burdens of each lot are mutual and reciprocal.[71]

d. Construction. In construing covenants or restrictions as to the use of property the circumstances and conditions surrounding the parties and property must be considered as well as the manifest objects of the grant or restriction.[72] So the intent of the parties and the object of the deed or restriction should govern, giving the instrument a just and fair interpretation.[73] If enough appears in the deed to show the grantor's general intent that the deeds should contain restrictions

Limitation of distance within which a railroad can be constructed "from the east line of my grist-mill" will refer to a distance computed from the east line of an easterly mill, where the grantor owns two mills, and by construing the term "grist-mill" it will be applicable to either one of the two. Hutchinson v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 37 Wis. 582.

Prohibition of offensive or dangerous trade or business does not prevent the grantee from constructing a temporary railroad over land, although the use contemplated thereby may be a nuisance. Bohusack v. McDonald, 26 Misc. (N. Y.) 493, 56 N. Y. Suppl. 347. So a prohibition of "nauseous or offensive trade" or of a purpose "which shall tend to disturb the quiet or comfort of the neighborhood" is not violated by the sale of groceries and provisions. Tobey v. Moore, 130 Mass. 448.

in favor of different lots against certain uses of the premises it is immaterial that such restrictions are differently expressed in different deeds.[74] The construction will also be most favorable to the grantee.[75] Nor will a restriction be enlarged or extended by construction.[76] Again a clause will be construed in its entirety as a limitation upon the use of property for a limited period of time, if by such construction all the clauses of the instrument may be made consistent.[77]

e. Persons Bound. When it appears by a fair interpretation of the words of a grant that it was the intent of the parties to create or reserve a right, in the nature of a servitude or easement in the property granted, for the benefit of other land owned by the grantor, and originally forming with the land conveyed one parcel, such right will be deemed appurtenant to the land of the grantor and binding on that conveyed to the grantee, and the right and burden thus created will respectively pass to and be binding on all subsequent grantees of the respective lots of land.[78] In such case each purchaser, taking a deed of a parcel of land subject to an equitable easement or servitude in other lots of the same tract, takes the estate burdened with a like servitude in favor of all the lots.[79] So a perpetual restriction under a recorded deed as to a street building line will bind purchasers from the grantee, even though their deeds contain no reference thereto, since such record operates as a constructive notice of the provisions of the deed.[80]

Illustrations.— A right which is not personal to the owners, but which is a covenant running with the land, cannot be extended to objects not contemplated and which do not fall within the original design of the parties. Jamison v. McCredy, 5 Watts & S. (Pa.) 129. And if the express terms of a conveyance fix the only manner in which the principal use for which property is held can be frustrated or changed to other uses consistent with such principal use, it can be diverted only in the manner specified. Calvert v. Pewee Valley, 25 S. W. 5, 15 Ky. L. Rep. 644. So in the absence of a clear intent to the contrary a forfeiture will be limited to the lot to which the building restriction applies and on which the act is done constituting the forfeiture, even though the lots are conveyed by one deed and adjoin each other as a single tract. Quatman v. McCray, 128 Cal. 285, 60 Pac. 855. f. Persons Benefited. In case an equitable easement is imposed upon each and all the parcels of land sold under a general scheme, so that the equitable rights and burdens are mutual and reciprocal, each lot owner is entitled to the enjoyment of the easement.[81] A building restriction may also be imposed by oral agreement and mutual conditional deeds between all the owners of land for their mutual benefit which will be obligatory upon each and all.[82]

g. Naming Person Benefited. When a negative easement is created by deed showing clearly the character of the act which the grantee is to abstain from doing and identifying the lot to which his own is made servient, it is unnecessary either to name the person, who is to be immediately benefited by the clause, or to insert words of limitation, or of inheritance, to have his rights pass to his heirs or assigns, nor are such words necessary to enable the grantee of that estate with its appurtenances to maintain the right as against those into whose hands the servient estate may fall.[83]

h. Light and Air. A prohibition as to a building line does not preclude the interruption of the access of light and air to the grantor's windows.[84]

i. Height of Building. If parties intend to prescribe a definite and fixed height beyond which a building is never to be increased it should be so plainly stated.[85] But the condition and character of the property at the time of the grant, coupled with the express language of the restriction, may be an important factor in determining the height of the erection.[86]

j. Building or Street Line. A restriction as to a building line will be held to intend only that the wall of the building should be on the line and will not prohibit the erection of a stoop, porch, or platform along it unless they project an unreasonable distance as compared with like structures or unless they unreasonably obstruct light and air,[87] or unless they are in violation of the intent of the 81. Eckhart v. Irons, 128 Ill. 568, 20 N. E. 687.

Grantees of platted lots under a common form of deed with like restrictions are each entitled to the benefit thereof. Hopkins v. Smith, 162 Mass. 444, 38 N. E. 1122.

A condition in a deed to a lot sold from a larger tract as to the buildings to be erected thereon inures to the benefit of a subsequent purchaser from the grantor of another part of the tract, even though such purchaser is not a party to the deed in which the condition first appears. Roberts v. Porter, 100 Ky. 130, 37 S. W. 485, 18 Ky. L. Rep. 650. But this rule does not apply where the deeds are not those executed by a common grantor to different purchasers and made mutually and reciprocally binding upon each, and the subsequent grantee of another part of the tract was clearly ignorant of the restrictions imposed, and it was not intended to subject any one of the lots into which the parcel might be subsequently divided to a restriction in its use for the benefit of others of such lots, and the language used does not authorize such a meaning or operation of the condition. prohibition and the deed.[88] The term "equidistant" from a certain line does not, however, require the front of the buildings to be on a uniform line.[89] And if a building line has relation to a street it means the then existing street and not a street as altered by public authority.[90] But the enjoyment of the property according to its true lines will no longer be restricted, where it is the evident intent and design of the provision that whenever the grantee should find it necessary, either by reason of the decaying condition of his house or its unfitness for the locality, to erect in its stead a more substantial structure suitable for the business purposes of that part of the city he might do so.[91]

k. Dwelling-House. In the absence of an intent in the grant that only segregated private residences may be erected, flats or apartment houses can be built under a provision restricting the use of the property to residence purposes only.[92]

Projections or erections not within inhibition.— Where deeds provide for bay-windows and circular or octagon fronts, and restrict them by limiting the length of the base of their trapezoids, and in a separate provision allow "porticoes and other usual projections" without restriction, and for a long time all parties have assumed that it was not intended to prohibit the building of porticoes, etc., close to bay-windows, and octagon and circular fronts, it will be held that the latter projections may be built, without regard to whether the base of their trapezoids overlap the porticoes and other usual projections. Atty.-Gen. v. Algonquin Club, 153 Mass. 447, 27 N. E. 2, 11 L. R. A. 500. E. 854); a basement story surrounded by a balcony within the space prohibited, even though such projections were usual in Europe; also two or more bay-windows close together so that the bases of their respective trapezoids would, contrary to the express terms of the deed, interlap, and the length of the base of each taken together would be greater, while the post of the bases of each which did not overlap would be less than the distance limited in the deed (Atty.-Gen. v. Algonquin Club, 153 Mass. 447, 27 N. E. 2, 11 L. R. A. 500); a roof extended within the inhibited line so as to cover a piazza, supported by posts within said line and to contain a dormer window by which a room in the second story is extended beyond the line (Bagnall v. Davies, 140 Mass. 76, 2 N. E. 786); a rectangular addition to the front projecting over the line and a building in the rear erected contrary to prohibitions as to the front line and the erection of buildings in the rear (Sanborn v. Rice, 129 Mass. 387); a structure within the reserved space three and one-half feet high, extending from the wall of the house to the line of the street, the top of which was covered with turf, and the interior used for coal-bins (Atty.-Gen. v. Gardiner, 117 Mass. 492); a projection of the whole front wall, except less than two feet at each end, into the reserved space, in the form of a bay running up the whole height of the house, with a foundation, roof, and windows, although such projections had been usual in the city for some years, and the grantor afterward conveyed lots in the same locality allowing such projections (Linzee v. Mixer, 101 Mass. 512); and a roofed porch, built on brick foundations and permanently attached to the whole front width of the house, although uninclosed (Ogontz Land, etc., Co. v. Johnson, 168 Pa. l. Threatened Violation. Acts must not be attempted which threaten a violation of a limitation in the nature of an equitable easement appurtenant to adjoining property, unless it is shown that such acts will not result in a breach of such limitation.[93]

m. Enforcement — (i) Generally. Building restrictions in deeds of platted lots under a general scheme for improvement will be enforced even though certain lots of the plot have been sold without such restrictions.[94]

(ii) By and Against Whom Enforceable. Restrictions as to the use of property may be enforced by the original proprietors who have an interest to be prejudiced;[95] by the commonwealth against one of its grantees;[96] by an owner of adjoining premises where the restriction is intended for his benefit;[97] by each grantee of a parcel, who is entitled to the benefit of the provision,[98] or the owners of other lots unfavorably affected by a violation of the restrictions;[99] against the grantee or his assigns with notice;[1] and by a subsequent purchaser from the grantee with notice, unless it is clear that the remainder of the tract will not be damaged by a violation of the restriction.[2] So an adjoining lot owner who is a subsequent purchaser may enforce a restriction where it is for his benefit to do so.[3] If, however, a building restriction is inserted to prevent an obstruction of the grantor's view, it is personal to him and is not appurtenant to the land so as to entitle his grantee to enforce the same against others.[4]

4. Clapp v. Wilder, 176 Mass. 332, 57 N. E. 692, 50 L. R. A. 120.

A prior purchaser of a lot from the original owner of the tract cannot enforce a restriction imposed by the latter on a lot subsequently conveyed, unless in the prior deed there was a grant of a right in the residue of the land retained by the vendor, or a stipulation that the restrictions put on the lot sold by the prior deed should also be imposed on the remaining property when sales should be made to subsequent purchasers, or other indications that all the lots were sold as part of a uniform building scheme. Roberts v. Scull, 58 N. J. Eq. 396, 43 Atl. 583.

(III) In Equity. Equity has power to enforce valid restrictions, as to buildings or concerning the use of the property, in favor of those entitled to the benefit thereof and will prevent a violation of the same in a proper case by injunction or other adequate relief.[5] Dependent correlative restrictions,[6] and provisions which are valid restrictions may be enforced in equity, although unlimited as to time.[7] Equity will not, however, as a rule, enforce a restriction, where, by the acts of the grantor or of those who derived title under him, the property, and that in the vicinage, has so changed its character and environment and in the uses to which it may be put[8] as to make it unfit or unprofitable for use if the restriction be enforced, or where to grant the relief would be a great hardship upon the owner and of no benefit to complainant, or where complainant has waived or abandoned the restriction.[9]

If deeds containing building-line restrictions in no way refer to any general plan nor contain any reciprocal covenant, and the owner abandons his idea of making the land high-class residence property, and other lots are conveyed without such restrictions, they are for the benefit of the grantor personally, and cannot be enforced by the grantees who had built in accordance with the restrictions. In order to restrict one's neighbor from maintaining a private stable on his own land, it is not enough that the original owner of both parcels of land and of many others had prepared a plan which stated that none of the land should be used as a stable, it appearing that many lots were sold without the restriction, and that at public sales of both plaintiff's and defendant's lots it was announced that the restriction would not be enforced, defendant's deed containing the restriction, and plaintiff not knowing of the announcement. Equity will not relieve.— Where the restriction does not appear to have been inserted for the benefit of adjoining messuages it will not be enforced in equity at the suit of a subsequent grantee thereof by a deed containing no express mention of the restriction. Badger v. Boardman, 16 Gray (Mass.) 559. Nor will courts of equity enforce a forfeiture, where the restriction is waived or abandoned by subsequent conduct of the party in changing the condition of the property so that the general scheme on which the restriction is based becomes impossible of fulfilment and the restriction is thereby rendered inapplicable in its true intent and meaning. Duncan v. Central Pass. R. Co., 85 Ky. 525, 4 S. W. 228, 9 Ky. L. Rep. 92. So a bill cannot be maintained by grantees of a common grantor against another grantee to restrain the latter from violating the restriction, where it does not appear that the condition had been annexed to the original grant for the purpose of rendering the occupation of the estate more beneficial when it should be divided into

n. Release and Termination. A restriction can be released only by the assent of all the grantees of platted lots for whose benefit such restriction was imposed.[10] So where building restrictions are upon lands in the hands of certain persons and are conveyed by them subject to such restrictions, releases of other lands do not put an end to the restrictions and do not affect them, although it is provided that they shall be inserted in all deeds thereafter made by the grantor of other lots.[11] But a general release by the covenantee of all his right, title, etc., relieves the estate of a condition not to build in a particular manner.[12]

o. Waiver. Where the grantee, without objection, or inquiry as to his intent on the part of the grantor who has knowledge of the facts, expends large sums of money in placing valuable and lasting improvements upon the land, such conduct of the grantor operates as a waiver of any forfeiture of a building restriction which might otherwise arise from such grantee's acts.[13]

F. Loss or Relinquishment of Rights — 1. Revocation, Subsequent Conveyance, or Other Acts of Grantor. If a deed has vested the property or estate in the grantee, it cannot without his consent[14] be divested and the title reinvested in the grantor by a revocation by the latter;[15] or by the subsequent declarations[16] or acts of the grantors in relation to the title;[17] or, subject to certain exceptions,[18] by a subsequent conveyance to a third person.[19] And when a deed conveys lands

And the erection of a projection over an inhibited building line will not be restrained in favor of one owner of a lot against another where the former had erected a similar structure, although it did not extend as much over the line as that of the latter, and the evidence is conflicting upon the point whether the structure in question was a bay or not and so excepted from the restriction. for such uses as are set out in a will, it is not revocable if no power of revocation is reserved.[20] So a deed of the remainder in trust for indemnity and distribution is irrevocable;[21] and an absolute gift chargeable on real estate subject to the grantor's life support is not revocable during his life nor dependent upon his death.[22] Nor does a subsequently made void will of the grantor invalidate a deed;[23] nor is the grant of an annuity revoked by the insanity of the grantor.[24] But if there is no delivery of a deed the grantor may revoke or destroy it;[25] and a deed in the nature of a will, or a donatio causa mortis is revocable at the grantor's option.[26]

2. Mutilation, Destruction, or Alteration of Deed — a. By Grantor. Title cannot be divested and reinvested in the grantor by an erasure of his signature after the grantee's death;[27] by the erasure of the grantee's name after his death;[28] by a mutilation while in the possession of one holding it for the grantee;[29] or by a suppression[30] or destruction of the deed by the grantor[31] or his executors,[32] unless the grantee's claims would amount to a fraud.[33] Nor after a deed has been delivered and recorded has the grantor any right to alter it, as nothing that he can do can change the effect of the instrument.[34] So the grantor who conveys certain interests in lands does not have the power to thereafter change such interests without the grantee's consent.[35]

b. By Grantee. After a deed has passed the title to the grantee it has performed its office as an instrument of conveyance, and its continued existence is not necessary to the continuance of title in the grantee, and the estate remains in him until it has passed to another by some mode of conveyance recognized by law.[36] Therefore the destruction of a deed of conveyance by or at the instance

If a deed provides for rescission within a time certain and that the estate shall thereupon revert the title will revest upon a parol unrecorded deed from a husband in trust for his wife without his assent has no effect upon the title vested in the wife.[47] But if an unrecorded deed is canceled by the consent of the parties thereto it may operate to restore the estate to the grantor, if the rights of third parties have not intervened.[48] Again acts of the grantor and grantee, coupled with facts of release and acquiescence in claims of right, may be such as to evidence a rescission under a deed providing therefor within a specified time.[49] And a valid deed will operate to rescind a deed declaring an illegal trust.[50]

4. Redelivery of Deed to Grantor. A subsequent surrender or redelivery to the grantor of a deed which has been executed and delivered will not revest the title in the grantor,[51] notwithstanding an agreement between the parties to

Exceptions to and qualifications of rule.— No title, legal or equitable, remains in the grantee, where a paper not under seal and unregistered has been surrendered by the alleged grantee to the grantor. Waugh v. Blevins, 68 N. C. 167. And only the equitable and not the legal title passes under an unregistered deed, and the contract may be rescinded by the parties by the redelivery of the deed and the return of the consideration. Davis v. Inscoe, 84 N. C. 396. So the surrender of an unregistered deed restores the legal title to the vendor as between the parties, where no intervening interests have attached. Fortune v. Watkins, 94 N. C. 304; Austin v. King, 91 N. C. 286. But see Brown v. Hartman, 57 Nebr. 341, 77 N. W. 776. And the rule, that where the grantor obtains possession of the deed by delivery or with the grantee's consent, with a view to its cancellation, the grantee cannot recover the property is limited to cases between the parties to the deed or those standing in the same relation to each other. Thompson v. Thompson, 9 Ind. 323, 68 Am. Dec. 638. So redelivery with intent to abandon and revest title will reseind.[52] Nor will the grantor's subsequent custody of the deed defeat its operation.[53] An equitable interest may, however, be created in the grantor, by redelivery which will operate as a defense to a suit by the grantee to establish title.[54]

5. INDORSEMENT ON DEED. Although an indorsement on the deed may as between the parties operate as a cancellation it will not divest the grantee's title, as against a judgment lien,[55] or constitute a reconveyance[56] of the legal title[57] unless sealed and acknowledged.[58] But an indorsement may be such as to indicate an agreement enforceable in equity as intended.[59]

6. LOSS OF DEED. The title of the first grantee is not impaired by the loss of a deed before it is recorded, and the conveyance of the land by the grantor to another with full notice of the original conveyance.[60]

7. RECONVEYANCE. A promise to reconvey may be enforced and the reconveyance will effectually divest the grantee's title and estop him from claiming under the original deed.[61] A reconveyance is, however, held to be necessary to revest a title conveyed to and vested in the grantee;[62] although a transaction may be such as to have the effect in equity of a reconveyance.[63] A reconveyance from one who took no title under his deed will not prejudice his grantor's prior title.[64]

have that effect, on the principle of estoppel, and a third person cannot claim that a redelivery to a married woman of a deed to her with the intention of abandoning it and revesting the title did not have that effect, because of the law requiring her land to be conveyed by deed with privy examination. VII. EVIDENCE.[72]

A. Presumptions and Burden of Proof — 1. In General. The burden of proof is on a plaintiff, who seeks to set aside a deed on the ground that it was intended as a gift causa mortis, to prove such fact.[73] And where a party intervenes in an action to compel the execution of a conveyance in place of one lost, raising an issue as to the ownership of the land by claiming title in himself, he has the burden of showing such title.[74]

2. Execution — a. Generally. A party claiming under a deed has the burden of showing that the deed was properly executed.[75] So one who asserts that deeds were executed as escrows must show that fact.[76] And it has been decided that one who seeks to avoid a conveyance on the ground that the deed is void because not duly stamped or the stamp not canceled as provided by law, such omission being with intent to defraud the government, must allege and prove such fraudulent intent.[77] Conveyances between private individuals may in some cases be presumed in favor of one who has proved a right to the enjoyment of the property and whose possession is consistent with the conveyance to be presumed, especially if possession without such conveyance would have been unlawful.[78] So deeds and grants may be presumed from lapse of time.[79] And evidence that a person by a recorded deed conveyed a right of way over the land is admissible on the issue of the existence of a deed of such land to him.[80] And where one holds under a deed he is presumed to have it in his possession and to have knowledge of its existence and preservation or destruction if it is destroyed.[81] Again a presumption may arise that a deed given with a stipulation that it should not be recorded until after the grantor's death was recalled and canceled on the execution of a subsequent conveyance.[82] Prima facie evidence of the sealing and delivery of a deed exists upon proof of the handwriting of the instrument together with the fact of its possession by the grantee.[83] A deed which appears to have been duly acknowledged needs no further proof of execution.[84] Again it has been decided that a copy of a deed recorded is prima facie evidence of its execution,[85] which is pre-

b. Attestation. It will be presumed that a deed was attested at the time of its execution, where it appears to have been duly attested and acknowledged.[88]

c. Seal. Where there is no indication from the record of a deed that a seal was affixed thereto it will be presumed that there was none;[89] but although the copy of a deed as recorded contains no seal, yet if there is a recital in the attestation clause that the instrument is signed and sealed it will be presumed that the original deed was sealed.[90] And the presence of a seal on a deed raises the presumption that it was there when the instrument was signed.[91] deed and asserts that it is a forgery the burden of proof is on the party claiming under the instrument to show its genuineness.[93] A presumption that a deed was forged arises where it is shown by certificates from the executive department that a person purporting to have signed the deed as a witness in the official capacity of justice of the peace was not in commission in the county where such deed purports to have been made, at the date of its execution.[94]

3. EXISTENCE. One who undertakes to prove the existence of a deed in the past must first show such circumstances as will evidence the fact of its existence, next the loss or destruction, and then the contents.[95]

4. NATURE AND EXTENT OF INTEREST OR ESTATE CONVEYED. It is a presumption of law that one conveying by a general warranty deed holds the original grant,[96] such a deed being also prima facie evidence of good title in the grantee,[97] who is presumed to enter claiming according to his deed.[98] The presumption also arises in the case of a deed which grants and conveys a fee simple that the land was at the date of the conveyance free from encumbrance.[99] And it is presumed that a grantor intends to convey everything necessary for the reasonable enjoyment of the thing granted so far as it is in his possession.[1] And a conveyance by one who has both an interest in his own right and a power will be presumed to be of the interest in the absence of any evidence to the contrary.[2] So a deed by a sheriff is prima facie a conveyance of the title of defendant.[3] Again where property which is a part of the community estate is conveyed by a father to his children it will be presumed to have been in discharge of the interest of the children in such estate to the extent of the value of that conveyed.[4] And where a conveyance of land is made to two persons jointly, the presumption arises, in the absence of proof to the contrary, that each one paid his proportion of the purchase-money.[5]

And the burden of proof rests on one alleging that a transaction was but a testamentary gift to show such fact, where the deeds purport a conveyance in præsenti.[6] And likewise one who alleges that a deed absolute on its face was a conveyance in trust has the burden of proving such allegation.[7] So where grantors seek to avoid a deed in part the burden rests on them to show that a conveyance was intended of less land than was in fact conveyed.[8]

5. Identity of Parties. At law real property is supposed to belong to the person or persons in whose name the title appears to stand by a conveyance;[9] and the identity of the person may be presumed from the identity of the name of a grantor or grantee.[10] So where the identity of the grantor in a deed with the owner of the land is sufficiently stated in the body of a deed it will not after a lapse of time be presumed that the deed is not that of the owner.[11] Again a recital in a deed of persons as heirs of another may be received as evidence of such fact.[12]

6. Identity of Land. Where the terms of a deed describing the property claimed are uncertain in themselves but refer to other facts and circumstances to determine their meaning, the party claiming under the deed has the burden of showing such facts and circumstances.[13] And the question whether the land in controversy is included by a deed which does not show on its face whether it includes or relates to such land is one of fact for the jury and the party is not required to locate on the ground the calls of the deed before it is admitted.[14] So where a conveyance of a tract of land excepts parcels before conveyed to others it is decided that one claiming under such conveyance in a controversy for the land, under adverse, conflicting claims must show that the land in contest is not

embraced in the exceptions.[15] And although it is a presumption of law that when a parcel of real property is divided by the owner who conveys a portion, the parties contract with reference to the physical condition of the property at that time, yet such presumption may be repelled by the terms of the grant or actual knowledge on the part of the contracting parties of facts which negative any deduction to be drawn from the apparent condition.[16]

7. Delivery and Registration — a. Delivery in General. Unless delivery of a deed is stated to be in escrow it will be presumed to have been absolute.[17] But it is presumed that a deed was not delivered before acknowledgment.[18] And the delivery of a deed need not be proved by positive testimony, but may be inferred from circumstances,[19] or from acts and declarations of the parties constituting parts of the res gestæ and which show such an intention.[20] So proof of the execution of a deed is prima facie evidence of its delivery,[21] but not conclusive;[22] and delivery to a person designated by the vendee is prima facie proof of delivery to the latter.[23] Again the presumption in favor of the delivery of a deed of settlement is declared to be stronger than in the case of a bargain and sale.[24] And where a deed is in favor of an infant a greater presumption in favor of its delivery arises than in the case of an adult.[25]

b. Burden of Proof. The burden of proof of the delivery of a deed rests on him who alleges it.[26] But a grantor in order to defeat a deed executed in the presence of the parties must, it is decided, show clearly that there was neither a Date is prima facie evidence of the time title passed to the grantee. Ellsworth v. New Jersey Cent. R. Co., 34 N. J. L. 93.

Delivery by recording will be presumed to have been at the date of deed under Cal. Civ. Code, § 1055, providing that "a grant duly executed is presumed to have been delivered at its date." Ward v. Dougherty, 75 Cal. 240, 17 Pac. 193, 7 Am. St. Rep. 151.

Forged deed.— No presumption in the case of a forged deed arises as to delivery at its date or at any other time. Remington Paper Co. v. O'Dougherty, 81 N. Y. 474. And it is error for a court to charge that an ancient deed, which is alleged to have been forged, is presumed to be genuine if coming from the proper custody. Beaumont Pasture Co. v. Preston, 65 Tex. 448.

If an intention that a deed shall operate from the execution thereof is apparent on its face a delivery to a third person to be afterward delivered to the parties will not be presumed to be merely as an escrow. Hosley v. Holmes, 27 Mich. 416.

it has been decided that where the date of a deed is prior to that of the acknowledgment, the presumption as to delivery on the day of date does not apply.[31]

d. Acceptance. The execution, acknowledgment, and delivery of a deed to the grantee raises the presumption of an acceptance of the instrument by him.[32] Actual receipt, however, of a deed by the grantee is not essential to an acceptance by him, but a constructive delivery may be established by whatever affords a presumption of his acceptance thereof.[33] So the acceptance by a grantee of a deed which has been executed for his benefit may be presumed.[34] And it is decided that the presumption of acceptance by the grantee is conclusive where he Execution and registration are only prima facie evidence of delivery, throwing the burden of proving the contrary intent on the grantor. Thompson v. Jones, 1 Head (Tenn.) 574.

The recording of a deed is prima facie evidence of delivery (Allen v. Hughes, 106 Ga. 775, 32 S. E. 927; Valter v. Blavka, 195 Ill. 610, 63 N. E. 499; Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Dunn, 22 Ind. W. 416, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 257; Mannix v. Riordan, 75 N. Y. App. Div. 135, 77 N. Y. Suppl. 357). And where a deed imposes on the grantee an obligation to pay an existing encumbrance the recording does not afford even prima facie evidence of delivery. Thompson v. Dearborn, 107 Ill. 87.

A delivery is not to be inferred for the purpose of avoiding a contract of insurance on the ground that the property was vested in another than the insured where the only evidence of delivery is the fact that it is on acceptance.[41] And the delivery of a deed for record, by one who has executed and acknowledged it, with unqualified instructions to record the same, will raise the presumption in the absence of any rebutting circumstance that the grantor intends to part with his title.[42] Again the assent of the grantor will be presumed to the delivery of a deed for record unless a dissent be shown.[43]

h. Presumptions as to Registration. Deeds will be presumed to be filed for record in the order in which they are handed to the recorder, as it is his duty to do,[44] and to have been recorded in the proper county.[45] So a presumption arises that a deed was recorded in full on the same day on which it was entered in the general index.[46] And it will be presumed that a copy of a deed is correct and that the deed was properly recorded where it appears that the original is lost and that the copy is taken from the recorder's books, there being no other office of registration but his.[47]

8. Consideration — a. In General. A deed is prima facie evidence of a good consideration[48] and of what the consideration was upon which it was record and it appears that since the execution of the deed the parties have dealt with the property the same as if no conveyance had been made. Walsh v. Vermont Mut. F. Ins. Co., 54 Vt. 351.

A registered deed which has been lost will be presumed to have been delivered. Powers v. Russell, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 69.

As against third parties and grantor's creditors recording is not conclusive as to delivery. Bullitt v. Taylor, 34 Miss. 708, 69 Am. Dec. 412.

Deed should come from hands of grantee or someone claiming under or through him in order that recording should be evidence of delivery. Barr v. Schroeder, 32 Cal. 609.

Subsequent recording of a deed which the grantee has refused to accept raises no presumption of delivery. Gaither v. Gibson, 61 N. C. 530.

The words "signed, sealed, and delivered" and the recording of a deed have been held no evidence of delivery. Hill v. McNichol, 80 Me. 209, 13 Atl. 883.

The time of filing a deed for record is by no principle of law prima facie the time of delivery. Bull v. Griswold, 19 Ill. 631.

Where a grantee has obtained a deed surreptitiously and placed it on record, nothing will give it vitality except either an explicit ratification of the instrument, or such an acquiescence, after a knowledge of the facts, as would raise a presumption of express ratification. Hadlock v. Hadlock, 22 Ill. 384.

44. Brookfield v. Goodrich, 32 Ill. 363, where two deeds of trust on the same property were handed to the recorder on the same day, one immediately after the other.

46. Oconto Co. v. Jerrard, 46 Wis. 317, 50 N. W. 591, holding that this presumption is not rebutted by evidence of a subsequent register of the same county that it is his habit to record the deeds in full before making entries in the index book.

But a deed will not be presumed to have been recorded in the time required by law where there is no evidence offered and no indorsement on the deed to show when it was recorded, but the burden of proof is held to be on the party claiming under it to show that it was recorded in due time. Budd v. Brooke, 3 Gill (Md.) 198, 43 Am. Dec. 321. But see Smith v. Steele, 3 Harr. & M. (Md.) 103, where it is decided that the jury may presume such fact from evidence of long possession under the deed.

47. Wilson v. Smith, 5 Yerg. (Tenn.) 379.

Upon the question whether the registry of a deed of ancient date was authorized by any law so that the registry may be evidence of the original deed it has been decided that the law will always incline to give effect to such proceedings if possible, on the ground that a presumption in their favor that at the time they were regarded as valid arises from the fact of their having been taken, and the court will presume that the proceedings were justified by some law which then existed. Brown v. Edson, 23 Vt. 435.

Tenn. Code, § 2084, providing that deeds registered for twenty years shall be presumed to have been registered on lawful authority is construed as applying only to deeds executed by the grantor himself. The consideration of a lost deed need not be proved where a suit is brought to require the heir of a deceased grantor to execute a executed.[49] And the burden of proof where the consideration of a deed is attacked is on the person attacking the same.[50] But the presumption that payment of the purchase-money has been made may be rebutted where nothing touching the consideration or such payment is shown by the deed.[51]

b. Sufficiency. A conveyance founded on a consideration of blood and marriage is presumed valid.[52] But where a deed which purports to be founded on a valuable consideration is impeached by showing that no such consideration was paid, it cannot be sustained by showing that the consideration was natural love and affection.[53]

9. Validity and Invalidity — a. In General — (i) Presumptions. Misrepresentation and deception in obtaining a conveyance may be implied from the accompanying circumstances and the fact that it was obtained for nothing.[54] But

Clerical mistakes.— Where a deed purports to have been acknowledged on the day of its date, a discrepancy caused by an indorsement of a certificate of record, making it appear to have been recorded prior to such date, is not to be considered of itself as a suspicious circumstance but is to be regarded in order that a deed should be prima facie void by reason of a confidential relation between the grantor and the grantee, such relation should exist before the transaction in which the deed is made.[55] And one who has executed a deed will be presumed to have known its contents until the contrary is shown.[56] Again where the evidence necessary to establish the validity of a deed is furnished by its enrolment, the prima facie case made by it may be repelled.[57]

(II) Burden of Proof. Where a deed regular upon its face is attacked as invalid the burden of proof rests on the person making such attack to establish the invalidity.[58] Again the relationship of the parties or the circumstances surrounding the execution of the deed may be such as to throw upon the grantee the burden of showing that the grantor knew and understood the character and effect of the instrument,[59] to show the fairness of the transaction,[60] or that the conveyance was not procured by fraud, artifice, or other undue means.[61]

as a clerical mistake. Munroe v. Eastman, 31 Mich. 283.

Undue influence may be presumed where a mother obtained a conveyance from a daughter who relied implicitly in her, took no independent advice, was wholly unacquainted with business forms, was unable by reason of ill-health and necessary training to earn her own living, and where no money consideration was paid. White v. Ross, 160 Ill. 56, 43 N. E. 336. So it may be presumed where the grantor and the grantee are living in unlawful cohabitation and there is no proof of a valid consideration. Leighton v. Orr, 44 Iowa 679. But see Hewitt's Appeal, 55 Md. 509, holding the presumption to be rebutted by a subsequent marriage. b. Capacity of Grantor. It is presumed that the grantor in a deed was competent to execute the same at the time of its execution,[62] and the burden of proving incompetency is on the person alleging it.[63] But where it appears that the grantor was afflicted with insanity prior to the execution of a deed, the burden is on the grantee to show that it was executed in a lucid interval.[64]

c. Right of Grantor to Convey. Proof of peaceable possession of premises is prima facie evidence of right to convey.[65] And in the absence of other evidence a deed purporting to convey real estate raises the presumption that the grantor had sufficient seizin to convey the estate and operates to vest the seizin in the grantee.[66] But no presumption of title in the grantee is raised [67] by a conveyance by one not connected with the title and not in possession of the land.[68]

d. Regularity. It may be presumed that a deed was seasonably recorded where possession of the land has been held under it;[69] that it was valid at the date of its execution;[70] that all blanks in the deed were filled before signing it;[71] and that a revenue stamp was affixed to a deed properly recorded, although the record thereof does not show such stamp.[72] So the recording is prima facie evidence of its

The fact that one of the parties is old, and the father of and living with the grantee, does not raise a presumption of inequality between them, so as to impose on the latter the burden of proving affirmatively that no fraud was practised, or undue influence used, and that all was fair, open, voluntary, and well understood. validity.[73] Again it will be presumed that a deed was executed in accordance with the formalities required by law where it has been lost and its loss and the contents thereof proved.[74]

10. Performance or Breach of Conditions. Where a deed is executed and delivered to a person as an escrow to be delivered to another on the performance of a certain condition, possession of the deed by the grantee is prima facie evidence that the condition has been performed.[75] But where a deed provides that a certain act shall be performed by the grantee and a question arises between him and the grantor as to the performance thereof, the burden rests on the grantee to show that he has performed such act.[76]

B. Admissibility of Evidence — 1. Execution, Existence, and Identity — a. In General. The execution and existence of a deed may be proved by the record,[77] by the subscribing witness,[78] by recitals in a subsequent deed,[79] by proof of the maker's signature,[80] or by circumstantial evidence.[81] But the fact that a person's title to land was submitted to attorneys and declared good by them is not admissible to show that such person had a deed to the land from a certain person.[82]

b. Where Another Signs Grantor's Name. Upon the issue whether a grantor directed another to subscribe his name to a deed evidence is admissible that a short time before the execution thereof the grantor directed the deed to be prepared and intended to execute it.[83]

But where a conveyance is plain, to a certain person, and no fraud in the execution is shown or no latent ambiguity exists as to the true grantee, explanatory evidence to show

dence aliunde the deed is admissible. And recitals in a deed may be admissible for the purpose of identification of a party.[86]

d. Identity of Land. While express language in a deed as to the property conveyed cannot be controlled in a court of law by extrinsic evidence as to intent[87] such evidence may sometimes be resorted to to identify the premises conveyed;[88] and when extrinsic evidence has been admitted to aid a description the court will exhaust all means of ascertaining the meaning and application of the instrument.[89]

e. Identity of Interest. Evidence as to the grantor's title at the time of the grant is admissible in construing such grant.[90] And a deed, although imperfectly executed by an attorney as the deed of his principal, may be admitted in evidence in aid of the grantee's entry to show the extent of his claim of title.[91] Again, although it is presumed that a right to buildings attached to the soil passes with a conveyance in fee, yet such presumption may be overcome by proof that the grantor had no right to convey the buildings.[92] And where a person holds different interests in land the consideration may afford evidence as to which was intended to be conveyed.[93]

2. Delivery. Unless the delivery of a deed is stated to be in escrow it will be considered absolute.[94] The delivery need not be proved in the acknowledgment,[95] but may be proved either expressly or by circumstances.[96] A mere inten-that by mistake the name of the grantee was inserted in place of another who was intended as grantee is not admissible. Crawford v. Spencer, 8 Cush. (Mass.) 418. See Pitts v. Brown, 49 Vt. 86, 24 Am. Rep. 114.

Evidence of different spelling by the same family of the family name is admissible on question of personal identity. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Stealey, 66 Tex. 468, 1 S. W. 186.

Notes and resolutions of the general assembly and the acts of their committees cannot be referred to for a description of the premises intended to be conveyed by an agent of the general assembly, unless they are referred to in a deed for that purpose. Kenyon v. Nichols, 1 R. I. 411.

88. Where the description in a deed is uncertain reference may in some cases be had to a prior deed to determine the identity of the land. A deed to a part of a tract of land which has not been particularly located on the plats in the cause may be read in evidence where the whole tract has been located and united in the same person. Hall v. Gittings, 2 Harr. & J. (Md.) 380.

Articles of agreement in pursuance of which a deed was executed may be admitted to show the intent of the parties, where there is an ambiguity as to the quantity of land conveyed arising from a conflict between the calls and the courses and distances. Koch v. Dunke, 90 Pa. St. 264. See Bell v. Woodward, 46 N. H. 315.

Parol evidence generally see Evidence.

The grantee of a piece of land described in his deed as a town lot may establish his title by other evidence, although the grantor has failed to make and record a plat as required by statute. Bowman v. Wettig, 39 Ill. 416.

But see Treadwell v. Bulkley, 4 Day (Conn.) 395, 4 Am. Dec. 225, where it was decided that where there is no designation in a deed of the proportions in which several grantees take evidence is not admissible of the consideration paid by each to show a right of any one to hold more than an equal share.

tion, however, to deliver a deed affords no proof that the intended act was done.[97] Nor is hearsay evidence admissible to show delivery.[98] Again a grantor may testify that he never parted with a deed with the intent that it should become operative.[99]

3. REGISTRATION. An abstract of title is not admissible to prove the registration of a deed offered in evidence under a statute which provides that such an abstract may be admitted on affidavit that the original deed is lost or destroyed.[1]

4. VALIDITY AND INVALIDITY — a. In General. In an action to cancel a deed[2] evidence may be admitted of want of authority in the officer who purported to have adjudged the probate and registration thereof,[3] or of the fact that the instrument is forged.[4] But an unsigned memorandum on the margin of a deed is not admissible for the purpose of affecting its validity.[5]

b. Consideration. Where the question arises whether a money consideration was paid[6] evidence is admissible of the business transactions and financial condition of the parties about the time of execution as tending to show whether such a payment was in fact made.[7]

c. Capacity and Incapacity. In determining whether a person alleged to be mentally incompetent or insane had sufficient ability to execute a particular act

A third person may prove a delivery not made in the presence of an attesting witness. Gaskill v. King, 34 N. C. 211.

Acts of the grantor inconsistent with a presumption of delivery may be shown as weighing against such presumption. Buckley v. Carlton, 4 Fed. Cas. No. 2,093, 6 McLean 125.

Evidence showing delivery.— On the question of delivery of a deed the record thereof (Scaray v. Eldridge, 63 Ind. 44), the fact of possession by the grantees (McFall v. McFall, 136 Ind. 622, 36 N. E. 517), a recital in a deed (Gragg v. Learned, 109 Mass. 167), a vote of a school-district, which was the grantee, in the presence of the grantor, showing assent on his part (Waller v. Eleventh School Dist., 22 Conn. 326), evidence that the deed was executed and left with the magistrate before whom it was acknowledged and was taken away by a brother of the grantee for him (Arrison v. Harmstead, 2 Pa. St. 191), or evidence as to what took place between the parties at the time of alleged delivery and acceptance and of their subsequent conduct (Dikeman v. Arnold, 78 Mich. 455, 44 N. Where the question is whether a deed was delivered without authority by the grantor's agent acting in fraudulent collusion with the grantee, evidence is admissible of offers communicated by the agent to the grantor as coming from the grantee and of instructions which were given to such agent by the grantor in regard to delivery. Adams v. Kenney, 59 N. H. 133.

Where a deed was delivered to a third person by the grantor, testimony of the former as to whether he would have delivered the deed to whomsoever he understood or believed to be entitled to it under the grantor's instructions is held inadmissible to show the grantor's intention. Riviere v. Wilkens, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 454, 72 S. W. 608.

2. Where an action is brought to cancel a deed from plaintiff to his son which is alleged to have been executed by mistake evidence is admissible of the extent and value of the land as tending to show that the grantor would never have conveyed so much, reserving none for himself. Miller v. Miller, 89 N. C. 209. And in an action to vacate deeds of a testatrix to part of her children as leaving one child unprovided for contrary to the provisions of the will, evidence is held admissible of a suit against testatrix's husband as an insolvent debtor as showing a motive for their execution. the inquiry should be, what degree of mental capacity is essential to the proper execution of such act, and then whether the party possessed such capacity.[8] And although upon the question of capacity a judgment as to the status of a person may be admissible, yet in order to be conclusive against those not parties to it, it should be in a proceeding the sole end and aim of which is to determine such status and which simply determines it.[9]

d. Undue Influence. Upon the question of undue influence in procuring a deed statements made by the grantor;[10] proceedings de lunatico subsequent to the execution of the deed;[11] letters written by the grantee showing his estimate of the grantor's mental condition;[12] the fact that the grantor was of a feeble understanding;[13] circumstances of the grantor's family, the kind of influence which the members thereof had over him, their feelings toward each other and of the grantor's intentions as to what they should receive from him;[14] and any impressions left on the mind of the witness from a conversation with the grantor on a certain occasion as to the grantor's being rational or irrational, are admissible.[15] But evidence is not admissible of facts not so connected with the execution of the deed as to be relevant.[16]

e. Fraud and Misrepresentation. Where fraud is alleged, it is proper, to sustain such charge, to consider the whole circumstances of the case and the relations of the parties.[17] But a presumption of fraud arising from the exorbitant

Ability to transact ordinary business affairs may be shown. Ring v. Lawless, 190 Ill. 520, 60 N. E. 881.

Harsh treatment of the grantor by the husband of the grantee subsequent to the execution of a deed is inadmissible in an action to set aside a deed on the sole ground of mental incapacity. Beville v. Jones, 74 Tex. 148, 11 S. W. 1128.

Mental condition prior or subsequent to the execution of the deed is admissible on the question of competency. Williams v. Sapieha, (Tex. Civ. App. 1901) 62 S. W. 72.

Previous statements as to disposition of property are admissible. Anderson v. Carter, 165 N. Y. 624, 59 N. E. 1118 [affirming 24 N. Y. App. Div. 462, 49 N. Y. Suppl. 255]. See also Howe v. Howe, 99 Mass. 88, evidence of prior declarations.

For the purpose of showing collusion between the grantee and the agent of the grantor evidence is admissible of knowledge by the grantee of the intent of such agent to defraud his principal. Stiles v. Giddens, 21 Tex. 783.

price demanded for the land may be repelled by evidence of the actual price paid.[18]

f. Confirmation of Defective Deed. Where the description in a deed is impeached by the vendor as conveying in excess of the amount bargained for, the one claiming thereunder may show that he had paid in full for all the land conveyed thereby and that the deed has been confirmed by the vendor.[19]

5. Performance or Breach of Condition. Wherever conditions or limitations are clear and explicit so as to shut out all doubt as to their import, parol evidence is inadmissible to show the intention of the grantor in respect thereto;[20] but where the construction of a reservation is ambiguous or not explainable by the context, the construction by the parties themselves as proved by the manner in which they exercised their rights is legal evidence.[21] And evidence tending to show that the condition was inserted for a dishonest or illegal purpose, such as the creation of a monopoly in trade in the grantor, is held admissible.[22] So evidence which tends to show a waiver of the condition of a deed may be admitted.[23] Again for the purpose of showing that the conditions of a deed have not been complied with evidence may be admissible of the making of a subsequent deed.[24]

C. Weight and Sufficiency — 1. Execution, Existence, and Identity — a. In General. Subject of course to general rules of evidence,[25] the weight and sufficiency of evidence to show the execution or existence of a deed must depend upon the particular circumstances of each case.[26]

b. Execution. Proof of the final execution of a deed should show that it was signed, sealed, and delivered by the authority of the grantor as his deed.[27] Slight

In an action by a distributee against an administrator to set aside a deed to the latter on the ground of fraud it may be shown that the execution of a similar deed by another distributee was procured by the administrator by similar misrepresentations and concealment. d. Identity of Land. The land should be sufficiently distinguished from other tracts[30] and be shown to be that described in the deed[31] by relevant plats, surveys, patents, deeds, or such other documentary evidence as may be necessary and admissible, aided when requisite by the testimony of witnesses competent to testify to relevant and admissible facts of identity.[32] The question of identity may, however, rest upon the construction of the deed.[33]

e. Identity of Interest. An admission in a deed of buildings that they stand on the land of the grantee is conclusive evidence that the grantor recognizes the title of the grantee to the land.[34] And a recital in a deed may in some cases be sufficiently descriptive of the interest conveyed.[35] But the acceptance of a quitclaim or even warranty deed is not in fact or in theory an admission that the grantee does not already have the superior title.[36] And the mere production of a recorded deed, with no evidence of possession, is insufficient to establish a prima facie title.[37]

f. Prior Existence of Deed. The proof of a deed which has been lost should show that the instrument was properly executed and the evidence of the contents should be clear and certain.[38] And although the production of the most direct evidence of a deed may not be required where there has been a facie evidence that they were the same person, but the question is for the jury. See Liddon v. Hodnett, 22 Fla. 442.

St. 220, holding, however, that a recital in a deed is insufficient in the absence of the deed referred to in said recital to establish title in a defendant as against a purchaser at a sale under execution against the husband who had never claimed under said deed to himself and wife.

A recital in a deed that it was made in pursuance of a resolution of the county board is not per se evidence of the existence of such resolution. Ward v. Necedah Lumber Co., 70 Wis. 445, 35 N. W. 929. Compare Bemis v. Weege, 67 Wis. 435, 30 N. W. 938.

Execution and contents are sufficiently proved where the grantor testifies that he made a deed, to whom it was made, and when, the consideration, whether the deed was a warranty or quitclaim, and what property was conveyed by it. Perry v. Burton, 111 Ill. 138.

The manner of execution should be shown, a mere statement that such a deed was made not being sufficient proof of existence. Lampe v. Kennedy, 56 Wis. 249, 14 N. W. 43.

The written acknowledgment of the grantor has been held sufficient evidence of the execution of a deed which has been accidentally burned. Fearn v. Taylor, 4 Bibb (Ky.) 363.

Usual high degree of proof is not required, of the due execution and delivery of a lost deed, where a party claims title through a grantee after the parties are dead or cannot be found, and several years have elapsed without the grantor or any one through him claiming any interest in the property. Scott v. Crouch, 24 Utah 377, 67 Pac. 1068.

Where the subscribing witnesses reside in another state it has been decided that a lost deed is sufficiently proved by the depositions of persons residing in the same state as such witnesses, proving the signatures of the maker of the deed and of such witnesses. great lapse of time, yet the evidence should be no less satisfactory than of a recent transaction.[39]

g. Possession by Grantee. Such presumption as may arise in favor of the grantee by reason of his possession of the land for a long time may be rebutted by proof of his declarations adverse to his interest.[40]

h. Reconveyance. Adverse oral admissions of the grantee are not sufficient to establish a reconveyance where such admissions are purely casual, and there was an opportunity for a deed to have been executed, which, if it had been executed, would probably have been recorded.[41]

2. Delivery — a. In General. Whether there has been a delivery of a deed should, as between the grantor and the grantee, be determined by a fair preponderance of evidence; but where third persons' rights have intervened, the proof of non-delivery should be clear and positive, and in many cases the doctrine of estoppel precludes the grantor.[42] Delivery may, however, be sufficiently proven

There is no sufficient evidence of delivery: Where the testimony is conflicting and the grantee's acts are not consistent with her claim to the deed (Pillow v. King, 55 Ark. 633, 18 S. W. 764); where there is an affidavit of a subscribing witness that he saw the feoffer "assign" the deed (Doe v. Roe, 29 Ga. 45); where upon an exchange of land the complainant laid his deed upon a table and took the exchange deed, but objected to its form and contents and demanded a return of his own deed (McDonald v. Minnick, 147 Ill. 651, 35 N. A. 313); where the deed was signed and left on a table in the absence of the donee (Hughes v. Easten, 4 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 572, 20 Am. Dec. 230); and where the only fact is that a deed was executed in the presence of witnesses (Parrott v. Avery, 159 Mass. 594, 35 N. E. 94, 38 Am. St. Rep. 465, 22 L. R. A. 153). by the direct testimony of one who saw it made;[43] or of the grantors that they executed the deed.[44] It may also be proven by the concurrent acts of the parties recognizing a transfer of the title.[45]

b. Acceptanee. Even though there is no evidence that the grantee ever declared his acceptance[46] the proof thereof is sufficient where it shows that the entire course of conduct of the grantee indicates such acceptance,[47] or where there is an intelligent assent.[48] If, however, the acts of the grantee clearly manifest an intention not to accept, they will have that effect;[49] and the mere reception and retention of a deed of gift is not conclusive,[50] although a long retention of a conveyance may be.[51] Again acceptance may be established by the introduction in evidence of a recorded deed by the grantee named therein.[52]

e. Deposit With Third Person. A valid delivery may be sufficiently established by evidence of the deposit of the deed with a third person for the grantee with the intent that it should so operate.[53]

If a deed is executed on the condition that an advancement be canceled, but it does not appear what the grantor did with the deed or what became of it except that it was seen at the grantee's house, and on the death of the grantee the advancement had not been canceled, and it was taken out of the grantor's share of the estate, it was held that the evidence was not sufficient to establish a delivery. proven[61] by testimony of a single witness[62] or of the grantor,[63] and if the evidence shows that deeds were intended to have a present effect it will be so held.[64]

h. Question For Court or Jury. What amounts to a final delivery and acceptance of a deed is a question of law,[65] as is also the weight of uncorroborated evidence.[66] But whether facts exist which constitute a delivery is a question for the jury,[67] to be determined, under a proper charge of the court,[68] from all the evidence on that point,[69] where there is conflicting testimony.[70] The rule applies to acceptance[71] or dissent of the grantee,[72] and likewise to the question of the time of delivery.[73]

i. Disputable Presumptions. Certain presumptions as to the delivery of a deed are disputable and may be overcome by relevant and admissible evidence, but the sufficiency of such evidence is, however, peculiar to the particular case in which it is given, or the particular purpose for which it is offered. This general rule applies to presumptions arising from possession of the deed;[74] as to the time of delivery;[75] from the word "delivered" in the certificate of acknowledgment;[76] from acknowledgment, acceptance, and registration;[77] or

3. CONSIDERATION. In case of conflicting evidence as to the consideration the parties' written agreement will be the most reliable evidence.[80] The instrument may, however, be aided by circumstances surrounding the transaction,[81] and if the evidence is insufficient to prove a consideration none will be found.[82] The amount named in the deed is also prima facie evidence of the sum agreed to be paid.[83] If the evidence is sufficient to require the submission of the issue of the true consideration paid and the court fails to do so the judgment will be reversed.[84]

times.[88] And if a person is legally compos mentis evidence that he is of weak understanding is not sufficient to overturn the deed in the absence of fraud.[89] Nor is the old age of the grantor of itself sufficient evidence of incapacity;[90] nor is mere physical infirmity,[91] although accompanied by some weakness of mind.[92] But the unreasonableness or injustice of the transaction may be such as to show want of capacity.[93] So inadequacy of price, although insufficient of itself to justify setting aside a deed, is a circumstance to be considered as bearing on this question.[94] A disposition, however, of property by a deed in accordance with previous intentions tends to show capacity.[95] Again the evidence of an officer taking the acknowledgment to a deed or of witnesses present at the time of its execution is entitled to peculiar weight in considering the grantor's competency.[96]

rule as a matter of law that a deed was not recorded in due time where such fact appears from an official indorsement thereon and there is no evidence contravening it.[4] But where a grantor was found to be mentally incompetent at the date of the execution of a deed which was delivered several days thereafter it has been decided that it is a question of fact whether he was in the same mental condition when it was delivered.[5]

5. Performance or Breach of Condition. Where there is a clear preponderance of evidence that a deed was a conditional one and that the title has never passed by reason of the failure of the grantee to perform the condition, a plaintiff in an action to quiet title to land under such deed is not entitled to a decree in his favor.[6] Where, however, it appears that it was the intention of the grantor to part with the whole term in a chattel it has been declared that the court will lay hold of any slight circumstance to give effect to that intention, in order to prevent a reverter.[7]

8. Russell v. Russell, 14 Ch. D. 471, 479.

Applied to a member of a mutual insurance society.— In Russell v. Russell, 14 Ch. D. 471, 478 [citing Wood v. Woad, L. R. 9 Exch. 190], Jessel, M. R., in speaking of "a rule which allowed a committee of a mutual insurance society to expel a member, . . . [on] the ground . . . 'that if the committee shall at any time deem the conduct of any member suspicious,'" etc., said: "I have to say a word as to the use of the word 'deem.' That word has more than one meaning, but one of its meanings is to adjudge or decide. In fact, the old word 'deemster' or 'dempster' was the name for judge. To 'deem' at one time meant to decide judicially. Consequently, taking that meaning, what they had to do was to 'deem' that the member's conduct was suspicious, and such as made him unworthy. That was in fact a decision not merely depending upon opinion, but depending on inquiry."

9. U. S. v. Doherty, 27 Fed. 730, 735 [citing Worcester Dict.].

Applied to an assessment on real property. — Where the resolution of a common council directed an assessment upon "the property deemed benefited," the court said: "The use of the word 'deem,' in the connection in which it appears, must be construed to mean a direction to investigate, consider, and determine, from which they may pronounce a proper judgment." Broezel v. Buffalo, 2 Silv. Supreme (N. Y.) 375, 6 N. Y. Suppl. 723, 726.

Applied under customs administrative acts. — Where a statute provided that "the decision of the appraiser . . . shall be final and conclusive as to the dutiable value of such merchandise, . . . unless the collector shall deem the appraisement of the merchandise too low," etc., the court said: "The word 'deem,' used in this connection, necessarily involves the exercise of discretion on the part of the collector." U. S. v. Loeb, 99 Fed. 723, 733. And where a statute authorized the appraisers of merchandise "to examine any person on oath touching any matter or thing which they may deem material in ascertain-

DEEMED. Judged, determined;[10] considered or judged.[11]

DEEPEN. To make deep or deeper.[12]

DE ESCHAETA. Writ of escheat.[13] (See Escheat.)

DE ESTOVERIIS HABENDIS. A writ which lay for a woman divorced a mensa et thoro to recover her alimony or estovers.[14] (See, generally, Divorce.)

DE EXCOMMUNICATO CAPIENDO. A writ commanding the sheriff to arrest one who was excommunicated, and imprison him till he should become reconciled to the church.[15]

DE EXCOMMUNICATO RECAPIENDO. Writ for retaking an excommunicated person, where he had been liberated from prison without making satisfaction to the church, or giving security for that purpose.[16]

DE EXECUTIONE JUDICII. A writ directed to a sheriff or bailiff, commanding him to do execution upon a judgment.[17]

DE EXEMPLIFICATIONE. A writ granted for the exemplification of an original.[18]

DEFACING. Impairing or effacing; blotting out; erasing; obliterating; canceling.[19] (Defacing: Brands of Animals, see Animals. Landmark, see Boundaries. Records, see Records.)

DE FACTO. In law as well as elsewhere, of fact; from, arising out of, or

ing the value," of commodities the court said that the provision "necessarily implies that the inquiry be limited . . . [to subjects which] the appraiser must 'deem' the inquiry material. To deem, here, means to judge; to determine upon consideration." U. S. v. Doherty, 27 Fed. 730, 734.

10. As used in a statute relative to customs duties which declared that "a person who shall offer or expose for sale, any of the articles named . . . shall be deemed the manufacturer thereof." See Cardinel v. Smith, 5 Fed. Cas. No. 2,395, Deady 197, where it is said: "And when it is enacted that the vendor of an article shall for any purpose, 'be deemed the manufacturer thereof,' for such purpose, he is to be absolutely considered such manufacturer."

When used in connection with a legacy.— Where a statute provided that "a legacy made to a creditor shall not be deemed to be in compensation of the debt, nor a legacy made to a servant in compensation of his wages," the court said: "The word 'deemed' used in the article simply means that no interpretation unfavorable to the creditor shall be placed upon the testament by the fact alone of the legacy to the creditor." Jackson's Succession, 47 La. Ann. 1089, 1091, 17 So. 598.

When, by statute, certain acts are "deemed" to be a crime of a particular nature, they are such crime, and not a semblance of it, nor a mere fanciful approximation to or designation of the offense. Com. v. Pratt, 132 Mass. 246, 247.

DEFAMATORY.[34] Containing defamation; calumnious; slanderous; libelous; injurious to reputation.[35] (See Libel and Slander.)

DEFAMER. One who is guilty of the offence of defamation.[36] (See Libel and Slander.)

DEFAULT.[37] Omission, neglect or failure;[38] a failure or omission to do something required;[39] something wrongful, some omission to do that which ought to have been done by one of the parties;[40] non-performance of duty;[41] a failure in the performance or fulfillment of an obligation; neglect or omission of a legal requirement; a wrong action; fault; transgression;[42] not doing what is reasonable under the circumstances — not doing something which a person ought to do, having regard to the relations he occupies toward the other persons interested.[43] In practice the non-appearance of a plaintiff or defendant at court within the time prescribed by law to prosecute his claim or make his defense;[44] a failure to appear and contest a point of law or fact by presentation of counter argument or proof;[45] non-appearance.[46] (Default: In Payment of — Interest on Note, see Commercial Paper; Mortgage, see Chattel Mortgages; Mortgages. In Performance of — Contract, see Contracts; Covenant, see Covenants; Duty, see Negligence. Judgment by, see Judgments. Of Issue, see Default of Issue.)

36. English L. Dict.

37. "Default is a purely relative term, just like negligence." In re Young, etc., Contract, 31 Ch. D. 168, 174, 50 J. P. 245, 54 L. J. Ch. 1144, 53 L. T. Rep. N. S. 837, 34 Wkly. An expansive word.— In Doe v. Dacre, 1 B. & P. 250, 258, Eyre, C. J., said: "I do not know a larger or looser word than 'default.' Abstracted from other words, what does it mean? In the expressions 'judgment by default,' and 'a juror making default,' we understand it differently. In its largest and most general sense, it seems to mean, failing."

Compared with "miscarriage" see Gansey v. Orr, 173 Mo. 532, 544, 73 S. W. 477.

The word "does not necessarily imply culpability; it as often signifies only failure." Dime Sav. Inst. v. Hoboken, 42 N. J. L. 283, 288. But see In re Woods, etc., Contract, [1898] 2 Ch. 211, 67 L. J. Ch. 476, 480, 78 L. T. Rep. N. S. 665, 46 Wkly. Rep. 643, where it is said: "[The word] implies an element of wrong — an element over and above mere failure to perform, not necessarily involving any dishonesty."

38. Burrill L. Dict. [quoted in Page v. Sutton, 29 Ark. 304, 306].

Applied under a charter-party.— Where a charter-party stipulated that the charterers should be answerable only for detention which might result from their default, the court said: "To what extent does this provision modify their obligation? There is in the use of the word 'default' no necessary imputation of negligence. As used in such an instrument, it can mean only the nonperformance of contract duty,— a failure upon the part of one of the contracting parties to do that which he had contracted to do. The most that can be claimed for its effect is that it excludes liability of the charterers for delay in loading or discharging, if the delay result from a sudden or unforeseen interruption or prevention of the act itself of loading or discharging, not occurring through the connivance or fault of the charterers." DEFAULTER. One who makes the default; who fails to perform a public duty; who fails to account for public money intrusted to his care; a delinquent;[47] one whose peculations have brought him within the cognizance of the law, to the extent, at least, of excluding him from a public trust.[48] (See DEFAULT; and, generally, OFFICERS.)

DEFAULT OF ISSUE. An indefinite failure of issue.[49] (See, generally, DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION; TRUSTS; WILLS.)

DEFEASANCE.[50] A collateral deed, made at the same time with a feoffment, or other conveyance, containing certain conditions, upon the performance of which the estate then created may be defeated or totally undone;[51] an instrument which avoids or defeats the force or operation of some other deed;[52] a condition defeating the title of the grantee;[53] something which defeats the operation of a deed or document.[54] (Defeasance: In Bill of Sale, see CHATTEL MORTGAGES; SALES. DEFEASIBLE. Capable of defeating, destroying, or impairing.[55] (See DEFEASANCE.)

47. Webster Dict. [quoted in Walter v. Erdman, 4 Pa. Super. Ct. 348, 354].

Applied to a public officer.— In State v. Kountz, 12 Mo. App. 511, 513, it is said: "When the term defaulter is employed to explain a disqualification for holding a public office, but one meaning can attach to it in the minds of all persons of ordinary intelligence, who have a common familiarity with the English language and its most popular idioms. No one will naturally connect it with a mere delinquency as to minor social obligations, or the payment of ordinary debts. The universal application of the word in that connection is matter for judicial notice."

50. "The word is derived from the French, defaire, to defeat or undo." Shaw v. Erskine, 43 Me. 371, 373.

Applied to a bill of sale.— Where a bill of sale contained a provision for the maintenance or defeasance of the security, Day, J., said: "It appears to me that the expression 'defeasance' can only mean the putting an end to the existence of the security by the realisation of the value of the goods for the benefit of the mortgagees." J., in speaking of a bill of sale which contained a stipulation "for the maintenance or defeasance of the security," said: "It is evident, . . . that 'defeasance' here cannot be taken in its strict sense. In my opinion the word here points to some condition to be performed which puts an end to the security, as, for instance, a condition as to redemption. It means a condition defeating the title of the grantee, a matter with which the stipulation here has nothing to do."]

55. English L. Dict.

DEFEASIBLE FEE. One where the devisee becomes invested with the fee-simple title, subject to be divested upon the happening of some contingency provided by the will.[56] (See Estates.)

DEFEASIBLE TITLE. One that is capable of being annulled or made void — not one that is already void, or an absolute nullity.[57]

DEFEAT. As a noun, frustration; a rendering null and void. As a verb, to resist with success.[58]

DEFECT.[59] A want or absence of something necessary[60] for completeness or perfection;[61] a lack or absence of something essential to completeness.[62] It includes the idea of a fault or want of perfection.[63] (Defect: In Attachment Proceedings, see Attachment. In Bridge, see Bridges. In Drain or Sewer, see Drains; Municipal Corporations. In Highway, see Municipal Corporations; Streets and Highways. In Indictment, see Indictments and Informations. 58. Webster Dict. [quoted in Walker v. Sayers, 5 Bush (Ky.) 579, 582, distinguishing "defeat" from "hinder"].

"Defeat" or "obstruct" actions.— Where a statute provided that if any persons, etc., should abscond, or conceal themselves to "defeat or obstruct" any persons who have title, from maintaining any actions, etc., and a defense to the action was that the acts of the sureties in inducing the payee of the note in question not to sue until after seven years had expired, amounted to a hindrance or obstruction to the suit, the court said: "The words 'defeat or obstruct,' as used in the act, signify the performance of some act on the part of the sureties, which will amount to a prevention or hindrance of a suit in opposition to the will and rights of the creditor, such as he cannot with reasonable diligence overcome. The terms import resistance and obstruction to his rights, and unless the acts complained of are, in point of fact, such as would hinder and prevent him from bringing the suit, notwithstanding his desire to do so, they cannot properly be said 'to defeat or obstruct' such suit." Colmean v. Walker, 3 Metc. (Ky.) 65, 68, 77 Am. Dec. 163.

59. "Any defect whatever" as used in a contract in reference to the sale of a vessel see Taylor v. Bullen, 5 Exch. 779, 785, 20 L. J. Exch. 21.

Applied to public ways.—"The words 'any defect in the condition of any bridge, street, sidewalk, or thoroughfare,' refer to defects in such public ways or structures as such, and with regard to their usefulness and safety for the purposes of travel." Pye v. Mankato, 38 Minn. 536, 537, 38 N. W. 621.

Applied to ways, works or machinery.— Where a statute rendered an employer liable for injury to an employee, "by reason of any defect in the condition of the ways, works or machinery connected with or used in the business of the employer," the court said: "An unsuitableness of ways, works, or machinery for work intended to be done and actually done by means of them, is a defect within the meaning of [the statute]." 63. Bliven v. Sioux City, 85 Iowa 346, 351, 52 N. W. 246, where the defect under consideration was a defect in a sidewalk.

64. State v. Lavalley, 9 Mo. 834, 836, where the court said: "The words 'defective' and 'insufficient,' although differing somewhat in signification, are frequently used indifferently by the Legislature as meaning the same thing; and as applied to recognizances, there can scarcely be said to be any distinction in fact."

DEFEND. To contest and endeavor to defeat a claim or demand made against one in a court of justice.[65]

DEFENDANT. A party sued in a personal action.[66]

DEFENSE.[67] In its legal sense, the term signifies not a justification, protection or guard, which is now its popular signification,[68] but merely an opposing or denial of the truth or validity of the complaint;[69] a general assertion that the plaintiff has no ground of action,[70] which is afterward extended and maintained in the plea;[71] a full answer to the whole or to some part of plaintiff's demand;[72]

65. Black L. Dict. [quoted in Boehmer v. Big Rock Irr. Dist., 117 Cal. 19, 28, 48 Pac. 908].

Applied in a treaty.— Where a treaty between the United States and the kingdom of Italy provided that consuls-general "may have recourse to the authorities of the respective countries within their respective districts, whether federal or local, judicial or executive, in order to defend the rights and interests of their countrymen," the court said: "The term 'defend,' as used, is to be given the broadest meaning, and includes the power to maintain affirmatively the rights of the consul's countrymen, and our local as well as federal judiciary must, in obedience to the treaty, recognize such rights." Matter of Tartaglio, 12 Misc. (N. Y.) 245, 246, 33 N. Y. Suppl. 1121, an application for distributive shares of decedent's widow and children.

66. Bouvier L. Dict.

67. "The word 'defence' is a term of art. It comes from the Norman French, and was used in common law pleading in the sense merely of denial." Cullen v. Woolverton, 65 N. J. L. 279, 283, 47 Atl. 626; U. S. v. Ordway, 30 Fed. 30, 32 [citing 1 Chitty Pl. 462; Rapalje & L. L. Dict.].

Distinguished from "answer" or "demurrer."— In Strauss v. Union Cent. L. Ins. Co., 33 Misc. (N. Y.) 571, 572, 67 N. Y. Suppl. 931, the court said: "The courts do not seem to have interpreted the word 'defence' in section 3253 in the scientific and accurate sense which it has and always has had in pleading. They interpret it, strangely enough, to mean 'answer,' or even 'demurrer,' which it does not mean and never meant. They do not even interpret it to mean the contest or opposition which a defendant makes on a trial, and which laymen call a defence, for an allowance is habitually allowed, in the first and second judicial departments, at least, where the complaint is dismissed for the plaintiff's default, or a judgment is taken against the defendant on his default, when the cause is reached for trial."

Distinguished from "counter-claim."— In Haywood v. Seeber, 61 Iowa 574, 576, 16 N. W. 727 [quoted in Yarger v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 78 Iowa 650, 651, 43 N. W. 469] the court said: "A defense denies the right of recovery, and shows that plaintiffs never had a cause of action, or that it has been discharged, as by payment. A counter-claim is not a defense." See also Naylor v. Smith, 63 N. J. L. 596, 598, 44 Atl. 649; Lafond v. Lassere, 26 Misc. (N. Y.) 77, 78, 46 N. Y. Distinguished from "denial."— "There can be no denial of the complaint or of any part of it in a 'defence.' A 'denial' and a 'defence' are distinct and separate parts of an answer." Burkett v. Bennett, 35 Misc. (N. Y.) 318, 319, 71 N. Y. Suppl. 144. See also Flack v. O'Brien, 19 Misc. (N. Y.) 399, 400, 43 N. Y. Suppl. 854, where it is said: "A denial is not a 'defense' at all, and may not be so designated. A 'defense' consists of an affirmative statement of new matter only." And see Soper v. St. Regis Paper Co., 38 Misc. (N. Y.) 294, 297, 77 N. Y. Suppl. 896; Green v. Brown, 22 Misc. (N. Y.) 279, 280, 49 N. Y. Suppl. 163.

that which is offered and alleged by the party proceeded against in an action or suit as a reason in law or fact why the plaintiff should not recover or establish what he seeks; what is put forward to defeat an action.[73] In a less technical sense the word is used as well in legal as in popular language, to signify, not a clause or form in pleading, but the subject of the plea.[74] (Defense: Affidavit of, see PLEADING. To Action, see ACTIONS. To Crime, see CRIMINAL LAW.)

DEFENSE AU FOND EN DROIT. In French and Canadian law, a DEMURRER,[75] q. v.

DEFENSE AU FOND EN FAIT. In French and Canadian law, the general issue.[76]

DEFENSE TO AN ACTION. A right possessed by the defendant, arising out of the facts alleged in his pleadings, which either partially or wholly defeats the plaintiff's claim.[77]

DEFENSIVE WAR. In the law of nations, a war commenced or carried on in defence or for the protection of national rights.[78]

DEFERRED LIFE ANNUITIES. Annuities for the life of the purchaser, but not commencing until a date subsequent to the date of buying them, so that if the purchaser die before that date, the purchase-money is lost.[79]

DEFERRED PAYMENTS. Payments postponed, or not made when due.[80]

DEFERRED STOCK. See CORPORATIONS.

81. Century Dict.

Applied to adverse possession.— In Williams v. McGee, 1 Mill (S. C.) 85, 91 [citing Ballantine Lim. 23], the court, in speaking of acts necessary to gain a title by adverse possession, said: "The case is, 'If a cottage is built in defiance of the lord, and quiet possession has been had for twenty years, it is within the statute.' . . . By defiance, is meant, of course, a possession unequivocally adverse."

"Deficiency upon the mortgage debt."— Goldsmith v. Brown, 35 Barb. (N. Y.) 484, 492.

Applied to municipal taxation.— Where a municipal charter provided that "the trustees shall have power, whenever there shall be any excess of money in any one fund raised by tax, to apply any such excess to supply any deficiency that may exist in any other fund," the court said: "The only reasonable construction to be given the word 'deficiency,' as used in section 9 of title 7, is that it arises where the tax imposed has not resulted in raising the amount authorized to be raised by the board of trustees." Matter of Plattsburgh, 27 N. Y. App. Div. 353, 360, 50 N. Y. Suppl. 356.

85. Applied to liability of sureties.— In Mutual Loan, etc., Assoc. v. Price, 19 Fla. 127, 137, the court, in speaking of the liability of sureties for a deficit in an officer's accounts, said: "We do not think the term deficit necessarily or ordinarily implies misapplication. . . . Now the term 'deficit' may not only indicate an amount wanting, as shown by the books, to balance the officer's account, but the fact may be that such amount had been then misappropriated by the officer and evidence showing the true state of facts is admissible."

89. Century Dict.

90. Synonymous with "declare."— Where a statute enacted that "it shall be lawful for this Legislature, . . . to define the privileges, immunities, and powers to be held, enjoyed, and exercised by the council and assembly," etc., Lord Cranworth said: "Now, looking at the context, we cannot entertain the least doubt that (though it is, perhaps, carelessly employed) the word 'define' means, in this section, nothing more than 'declare.'" Dill v. Murphy, 10 Jur. N. S. 549, 10 L. T. Rep. N. S. 170, 1 Moore P. C. N. S. 487, 12 Wkly. Rep. 491, 493, 15 Eng. Reprint 784.

"Power to define" distinguished from "power to grant," etc.— In Styles v. Tyler, 64 Conn. 432, 452, 30 Atl. 165, the court, in speaking of a constitutional provision, for the establishment of courts, that "the powers and jurisdiction of which courts shall be defined by law," said: "A power to define is different from a power to grant or apportion; and however far the meaning of the word 'define' might be extended when the context clearly calls for extension, it is certain that when used with reference to a jurisdiction substantially described, its meaning must be confined to fixing limits for the exercise of such jurisdiction, and cannot be extended to an alteration of its character." See also In re Fourth Judicial Dist., 4 Wyo. 133, 147, 32 Pac. 850.

"Known" and "defined" watercourses.— In Los Angeles v. Pomeroy, 124 Cal. 597, 634, 57 Pac. 585, Beatty, C. J., in speaking of watercourses whose channels are known or defined, said: "'Defined' means a contracted and bounded channel, though the course of the stream may be undefined by human knowledge; and the word 'known' refers to knowledge of the course of the stream by reasonable inference." See also Medano Ditch Co. v. Adams, 29 Colo. 317, 326, 68 Pac. 431 (where the court, in speaking of under-ground currents of water, said: "The channels and existence of such streams, though not visible, are 'defined' and 'known' within the meaning of the law when their course and flow are determinable by reasonable inference"); Miller v. Black Rock Springs Imp. Co., 99 Va. 747, 757, 40 S. E. 27, 86 Am. St. Rep. 924 (where the court, in speaking of subterranean waters flowing in defined or known channels, said: "'Defined' means a contracted and bounded channel, although the course of the stream may be undefined by human knowledge. 'Known' means the knowledge, by reasonable inference, from existing and observed facts in the natural or pre-existing condition of the surface of the ground. 'Known' in this rule of law, is not synonymous with 'visible,' nor is it restricted to knowledge derived from exposure of the channel by excavation"); Huber v. Merkel, 117 Wis. 355, 360, 94 N. W. 354, 62 L. R. A. 589 (where the court, in speaking of a stream with a defined "channel," said: "The word 'defined' here means a contracted and bounded channel").

92. Century Dict. [quoted in Boyd Pav., etc., Co. v. Ward, 85 Fed. 27, 35, 28 C. C. A. 667].

Applied to punishment for piracy.— In U. S. v. Smith, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 153, 160, 5 L. ed. 57, Story, J., in speaking of the power of congress "to define and punish piracy and felonies committed on the high seas, and offenses against the law of nations," said: "To define piracies, in the sense of the constitution, is merely to enumerate the crimes which shall constitute piracy; and this may be done either by a reference to crimes having a technical name, and determinate extent, or by enumerating the acts in detail, upon which the punishment is inflicted."

"Defining" results of an election.— In Higgins v. State, 64 Md. 419, 420, 1 Atl. 876, where a statute provided that the results of an election should be returned to certain judges who were invested with the duty of defining certain districts, etc., in which the sale of spirituous liquors should be prohibited, the court said: "The word 'defining,' as here used, we must read as synonymous with specifying or designating, and thus simply requiring the Judges to particularize in the proclamation the districts or district casting a majority of votes in favor of the law."

DEFINITE. Having fixed limits; bounded with precision; determinate.[95] (Definite: Failure of Issue, see WILLS.)

DEFINITELY. In a definite manner.[96]

DEFINITION. An explanation of the signification of a word, or of what a word is understood to express.[97]

DEFINITIVE. That which finally and completely ends and settles a controversy.[98]

DEFLORATION. Seduction or debauching; the act by which a woman is deprived of her virginity.[99] (See, generally, RAPE; SEDUCTION.)

"Definitively condemned."—Where an international convention provided that "Property captured, and not yet definitely condemned, or which may be captured before the exchange of ratifications . . . shall be mutually restored," the court said: "The terms used in the treaty seem to apply to the actual condition of the property, and to direct a restoration of that which is still in controversy between the parties. On any other construction, the word definitive would be rendered useless and inoperative. Vessels are seldom if ever condemned, but by a final sentence. An interlocutory order for a sale is not a condemnation. A stipulation, then, for the restoration of vessels not yet condemned would, on this construction, comprehend as many cases as a stipulation for the restoration of such as are not yet definitively condemned." U. S. v. The Peggy, 1 Cranch (U. S.) 103, 109, 2 L. ed. 49.

97. Webster Dict. [quoted in Taylor v. Palmer, 31 Cal. 666, 687].

"Definitions differ in their character according to the nature of the thing to be defined. Words denoting real substances existing in nature, or any of the ordinary acts of the mind, are all to be explained and defined by stating the facts and circumstances that usually accompany or follow such things or acts. The word is made intelligible only by a description, by the enumeration of the attributes or circumstances in which it agrees or differs with other things of qualities somewhat similar. Thus, a name conveying an idea generalized from many individuals is defined and explained by describing the qualities ordinarily found in such individuals. It is so in the definitions of natural objects, which are rather descriptions than definitions. It is often so in the definition of moral actions. But it is never so as to words or phrases denoting any artificial and purely technical conceptions: ideas framed by the mind itself, and not otherwise found in nature. Such words or ideas are susceptible of a strict definition." Warner v. Beers, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 103, 141.

"Definitive and certain sum of money."—Where a duty was imposed by statute, as follows: "Bond, &c., given as a security for the payment of any definitive and certain sum of money not exceeding £50, £1, &c., &c.," Parke, B., said: "I construe those words to mean the sum ascertained by the bond itself, — in other words, the principal sum. It is true, at the time of the execution of the bond in this case a sum was due for interest, which was ascertainable: but the amount of interest is not mentioned in the bond, and must depend on the time when it is paid. I think the words 'definitive and certain sum' refer to the principal money secured by the bond, which is to bear interest, and not to interest, whether bygone or subsequent;" Alderson, B., said: "Interest does not fall within the meaning of a 'definitive and certain sum of money' secured by the bond; it is only the amount of damage for the detention of the principal." Parker v. Smark, 9 Dowl. P. C. 211, 10 L. J. Exch. 200, 7 M. & W. 590, 592.

"Definitive publication."—Where a statute in relation to charitable trusts gave a right to appeal to two inhabitants within three months after "definitive publication" of the order of the Charity Commissioners, etc., the master of the rolls said: "The words 'definitive publication of any order of the board,' contained in section 8, must mean the very last time that the Charity Commissioners are expected to have the notice affixed to the church-doors. The Court is bound to attach some meaning to the word 'definitive,' and I think it means the last — the final and complete publication of the order." Ex p. Nicholls, 34 L. J. Ch. 169, 173.

DEFORCE. To withhold lands or tenements from the rightful owner.[1]

DEFORCEMENT.[2] The holding of any lands or tenements to which another has right;[3] any species of wrong whatsoever whereby he that has the right to the freehold is kept out of possession;[4] a wrongful withholding of lands from the right owner, or in case of dower, a denial of the widow's right;[5] a privation of the freehold, where the entry of the present tenant or possession was originally lawful, but his detainer has now become unlawful.[6]

DEFRAUD. To deprive of some right,[7] interest, or property by deceitful devices; to withhold from wrongfully; to injure by embezzlement; to cheat;[8] to overreach;[9] to withhold from another that which is justly due to him, or to deprive him of a right by deception or artifice;[10] to deprive of a right by withholding from another, by indirection or device, that which he has a right to claim or obtain;[11] to deprive of something dishonestly.[12] (See, generally, FRAUD.)

DEFUNCT. Deceased; a deceased person.[13]

DELEGATED POWER. An authority which one person transfers to another.[45]

DELEGATION. The act of making or commissioning a delegate.[46] In the civil law the term denotes the change of one debtor for another, when he who is indebted substitutes a third person who obligates himself in his stead to the creditor.[47] (Delegation: Of Power, see DELEGATION OF POWER.)

DELEGATION OF POWER.[48] The transfer of authority by one person to another.[49] (Delegation of Power: By Agent, see PRINCIPAL AND AGENT. By Arbitrator, see ARBITRATION AND AWARD. 'Delegation is not made but by the consent both of the debtor who delegates another in his place of the person who is delegated, and of the creditor who accepts the delegation, and who contents himself with the new debtor.'"

48. A term which does not imply a parting with powers by the person who grants the delegation, but points rather to the conferring of an authority to do things which otherwise that person would have to do himself. Huth v. Clarke, 25 Q. B. D. 391, 395, 59 L. J. M. C. 120, 63 L. T. Rep. N. S. 348, 38 Wkly. Rep. 655.

"There is a distinction between a delegation of power for public, and for private purposes. Where the power is delegated for a mere private purpose, all the persons (if more than one) upon whom the authority is conferred must unite and concur in the exercise. Applied to pollution of streams.— Where a statute prohibited any person from throwing or depositing, any dye-stuff, coal-tar, lime or other deleterious substance, into or upon any rivers, lakes, ponds, streams, etc., the court said: "By the language of the section it is manifest that it was the intention of the legislature that the acts prohibited must be such as to be deleterious in fact; that is, destructive of the life of fish. The adjective 'deleterious,' as used at the close of the prohibitory clause, has the effect, and we think such was the intention of the legislature in using the same, to limit and qualify the meaning of the previous general words of the paragraph." 51. Wharton L. Lex.

Applied to mines.— Where a statute confirmed to the tenants their customary estates of inheritance, "saving always all mines and minerals, of what kind and nature soever, quarries and delfs of flag slate or stone," the court said: "The words 'quarries and delfs of flag slate or stone' appear to be used to describe open workings, and the specified substances got by such workings, as distinguished from mines properly so called, and mineral substances usually got by underground works. The word 'delfs' probably means open pits or diggings." Atty.-Gen. v. Mylchreest, 48 L. J. P. C. 36, 44.

DELIBERATE.[53] As an adjective, premeditated;[54] formed with deliberation, in contradistinction to a sudden, rash act;[55] not sudden or rash, carefully considering the probable consequences of a step;[56] an act done after reflecting and weighing the matter well.[57] As a verb, to weigh in the mind; to consider and examine the reasons for and against; to consider maturely; to reflect upon;[58] to reflect, with a view to make a choice.[59]

DELIBERATE CONVICTION. A fixed opinion.[60]

DELIBERATELY.[61] Done in a cool state of the blood,[62] and not in sudden passion engendered by a lawful or some just cause of provocation;[63] done from a formed design and fixed purpose, and not in what the law calls a heat of passion;[64] with cool purpose;[65] with cool, considered purpose;[66] thought of beforehand;[67] with careful consideration or deliberation; with full intent; not hastily or carelessly.[68]

DELIBERATE USE OF A DEADLY WEAPON. An intentional use, a use that is the result of a resolution, purpose or design, formed in the mind and reflected upon and not done in self-defense.[69]

"Deliberating upon the accusation against the defendant."— Where a statute provided that "a motion to set aside an indictment or information shall be based on one or more of the following causes, . . . Because that some person not authorized by law was present when the grand jury were deliberating upon the accusation against the defendant" and, "that the attorney representing the State may come before the grand jury at any time, except when they are discussing the propriety of finding a bill of indictment," the court said: "We apprehend that 'discussing the propriety of finding a bill of indictment,' and 'deliberating upon the accusation against the defendant,' mean the same thing." 71. Compared with "premeditation."— In State v. Kotovsky, 74 Mo. 247, 249, the court said that "deliberation" and "premeditation" "are of the same character of mental operations, differing only in degree. . . . Deliberation is but prolonged premeditation. In other words, in law, deliberation is premeditation, in a cool state of the blood, or, where there has been heat of passion, it is premeditation continued beyond the period within which there has been time for the blood to cool, in the given case. . . . Premeditation has been defined . . . as 'thought of beforehand, for any length of time, however short.' Deliberation is also premeditation, but is something more. It is not only to think of beforehand, which may be but for an instant, but the inclination to do the act is considered, weighed, pondered upon, for such a length of time after a provocation is given, as the jury may find was sufficient for the blood to cool. One in 'a heat of passion' may premeditate without deliberating. Deliberation is only exercised in a 'cool state of the blood,' while premeditation may be, either in that state of the blood, or in 'heat of passion.'" See also the following cases:

Compared with "sufficient legal provocation."— In State v. Smith, 10 Rich. (S. C.) 341, 347, the court said: "In the report which has been laid before us, . . . 'deliberation' and 'sufficient legal provocation' are, respectively made to characterize murder and manslaughter; and using the terms in a strict technical sense, this is correct. But deliberation must be understood to mean, not slowness and composure as distinguished from suddenness and excitement, but freedom from the temporary phrenzy, excited by sufficient legal provocation, as distinguished from that phrenzy which the law allows to moderate its rigor in pity to human frailty. A voluntary act, which is without sufficient legal provocation, is deliberate, no matter how sudden or how furious it may be."

language of an indecent . . . character, or calculated by the terms or manner, or style of display and obviously intended to reflect injuriously upon the character or conduct of another," etc., the court said: "If the terms covered only 'writing' and 'printing,' of the character described, his acts would not be embraced. They cover, however, 'delineations' of this character, also. This term signifies representations expressed otherwise than by language,— as by the use of figures, drawings, colors, etc. If the fact that a dunning letter is contained in an envelope may be expressed by a figure or other sign impressed upon it, of a character recognized as conveying such expression, by those who may see it, such figure or sign is a 'delineation' within the meaning of the statute." Applied to a letter of indemnity.— Where a letter in reference to a merchant stated that "he will stand in need of your aid and indulgence, which if you render him, (in case of his failure or delinquency,) we will indemnify you," etc., O'Neall, J., in a dissenting opinion, said: "What is meant by the terms 'failure or delinquency?' It is true, in legal parlance, the neglect of any duty may be a failure, and the commission of any fault a delinquency; but, as I said in the outset, the defendants were merchants speaking to merchants; and their words must have their usual interpretation among them. The word 'failure,' applied to a merchant or mercantile concern, means an inability to pay his or their debts, from insolvency.— I take it, then, that the word 'failure' must be regarded as synonymous with 'insolvency.' 'Delinquency' cannot mean, when applied to a merchant, anything less than that he has proved to be dishonest, and attempted to evade the payment of his debts." Boyce v. Ewart, Rice (S. C.) 126, 139.

"Incorrigibility and delinquency are two different offences. One has in it the elements of continuous disobedience of parental commands, viciousness and general bad conduct. The other may be, and often is, a single offence, 'the violating of any law of this state or any city or borough ordinance.'" In re Shelton, 11 Pa. Dist. 155, 156.

Delinquent debtor.— Where a statute provided that "the books and papers of such delinquent debtor shall at all times be subject to the inspection and examination of any creditor," the court said: "The words debtor and delinquent debtor were in this section used as synonymous with the word assignor." Delinquent tax.— In Chauncey v. Wass, 35 Minn. 1, 14, 25 N. W. 457, 30 N. W. 826, Gilfillan, C. J., in speaking of a delinquent tax, said: "The statute most pointedly provides for a trial and judgment on a tax which cannot be called legally delinquent at the time the action is commenced. Delinquency necessarily includes present obligation to pay. It is the neglect of that obligation."

83. Owing's Case, 1 Bland (Md.) 370, 386, 17 Am. Dec. 311 [quoted in Clark v. Ellis, 9 Oreg. 128, 141], where it is said: "This happens most perfectly in dreams. But what is commonly called delirium, is always preceded or attended by a feverish and highly diseased state of the body. The patient in delirium is wholly unconscious of surrounding objects; or conceives them to be different from what they really are. His thoughts seem to drift about; wildering and tossing amidst distracted dreams. And his observations, when he makes any, as often happens, are wild and incoherent; or, from excess of pain, he sinks into a low muttering, or silent and death-like stupor."

Applied to crops.— Where a contract required the lessee of a farm to "deliver" the lessor's portion of the crops in specified places, the court said: "To deliver to the plaintiff one-sixth part of the crops, means something more than to deposit the whole crop in the specified place. The plaintiff's portion must be secured." Manwell v. Manwell, 14 Vt. 14, 23. Used in action of replevin.— Where a statute provided that "if the defendant in replevin or possessor, shall claim property in the thing whereof deliverance is sought, and the sheriff, . . . having due notice, shall nevertheless proceed to make deliverance and dispossess such defendant thereof," etc., the court said: "Without stopping to inquire into the strict philological meaning of the term deliverance, whether it means to deliver to, as the defendant contends, or, as the plaintiff insists, 'to liberate,' 'to set free,' 'to deliver from,' the connection in which it stands, appears to me to leave no reasonable doubt of the sense in which it was used by the legislature in the section in question. The sheriff shall not proceed to make deliverance and dispossess the defendant. There is no ambiguity or doubt as to the meaning of the latter expression. It is a thing which both parties must join. The minds of both parties must concur."

Origin and application of the term.— "'Delsarte' was the name of a French artist (1811 to 1871) who became celebrated for his theory of the method of exercise for developing bodily grace and strength and the power of dramatic expression. The general system or theory has become so well known that the word 'Delsartian,' as denoting the system, has since become a recognized generic or descriptive word of the English language." 5. Compared with insanity.— In Smith v. Tebbitt, L. R. 1 P. 398, 401, 36 L. J. P. 97, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 841, 16 Wkly. Rep. 18 [quoted in State v. Pike, 49 N. H. 399, 432, 6 Am. Rep. 533], it is said: "What is to be the proof of disease? What is to be the test, if there be a test, of morbid and mental action? The existence of mental 'delusions,' it would perhaps be answered. But this only postpones the question in place of answering it. For what is a mental 'delusion'? How is it to be defined so as to constitute a test, universally applicable, of mental disorder or disease? The word is not a very fortunate one. In common parlance, a man may be said to be under a 'delusion,' when he only labours under a mistake. The 'delusion' intended is, of course, something very different. To say that a 'morbid' or an 'insane delusion' is meant, is to beg the question, for the 'delusion' to be sought is to be the test of insanity; and to say that an insane or morbid delusion is the test of insanity or disease, does not advance the inquiry." And see Dew v. Clark, 2 Add. Eccl. 102 [quoted in Stanton v. Wetherwax, 16 Barb. (N. Y.) 259, 262], where it is said: "The true test of the absence or presence of insanity I take to be the absence or presence of what, used in a certain sense of it, is comprisable in a single term, namely delusion. Whenever the patient once conceives something extravagant to exist, which has still no existence whatever but in his own heated imagination; and whenever, at the same time, having once so conceived, he is incapable of being, or at least of being permanently reasoned out of that conception, such a patient is said to be under a delusion, in a peculiar half technical sense of the term; and the absence or presence of delusion so understood forms, in my judgment, the only true test or criterion of absent or present insanity. In short I look upon delusion, in this sense of it, and insanity to be almost, if not altogether, convertible terms." See also the following cases:

Synonymous with prejudices, etc.—In Boyd v. Eby, 8 Watts (Pa.) 66, 72, it is said: "It seems to me that the court below fell into an error in drawing a distinction between the insane delusion itself and the impressions or prejudices occasioned by such delusion, and in supposing that the former might cease and the latter continue. They are to my mind the same thing, or rather, the presence of absurd prejudices, of groundless antipathies, of silly and chimerical hatreds, originating in acknowledged insanity, is the only evidence we can have of the existence of the delusion. The term delusion refers to the state of mind; impression, to the results of that state of mind; but when the results are gone, we can well assert that the delusion is gone."

"Claim or demand."— In Van Frachen v. Ft. Howard, 88 Wis. 570, 572, 60 N. W. 1062 [quoted in Pulitzer v. New York, 48 N. Y. App. Div. 6, 11, 62 N. Y. Suppl. 587], a statute provided that no action should be maintained against a city "upon any claim or demand of whatsoever nature, other than a city bond or order, unless such person shall have first presented such claim or demand to the common council of the city." It was held that the words "of whatsoever nature" expanded the meaning of the term "claim or demand" to such an extent as to make it

DEMANDANT. The plaintiff or party suing in a real action.[21]

DEMAND IN RECONVENTION. In the law of Louisiana a word equivalent to the term "counterclaim."[22]

DEMANDS DUE. In the commercial and popular acceptation of the words, debts presently payable.[23]

DE MEDIETATE LINGUÆ. Of half-tongue; i. e. half of one tongue or language, and half of another.[24]

DE MELIORIBUS DAMNIS. Of or for the better damages.[25]

DEMENTED. Of unsound mind.[26] (See, generally, Insane Persons.)

DEMENTIA.[27] In medical jurisprudence, that form of insanity which is characterized by mental weakness and decrepitude, and by total inability to reason,[28] where the mental derangement is accompanied with a general derangement of the faculties;[29] an extremely low condition of the mental function; profound

27. Defined by Sir Matthew Hale.— In Cornwell v. State, Mart. & Y. (Tenn.) 147, 156, it is said: "The good and the great, the humane yet firm, Sir Matthew Hale, in his history of the Pleas of the Crown, divides madness, (dementia) into three kinds,— idiocy, accidental or adventitious madness, and drunkenness. 'The second species, when it amounts to a total alienation of the mind, or perfect madness, excuses from the guilt of felony and treason. And further, persons afflicted with accidental madness, whether temporary (as in the case of lunacy) or continued, if they are totally deprived of the use of reason, cannot be guilty ordinarily of capital offences; for they have not the use of understanding, and act not as reasonable creatures, but their actions are, in effect, in the condition of brutes. The third sort of madness is that which is dementia affectata, namely, drunkenness. This vice doth deprive man of the use of reason, and puts many men into a perfect but temporary frenzy; but by the laws of England such a person shall have no privilege by this voluntarily contracted madness, but shall have the same judgment as if he were in his right senses."

It is a common form of insanity, and presents itself in an infinite variety of ways, seldom exhibiting itself in any two cases exactly in the same manner. Hall v. Unger, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 5,949, 4 Sawy. 672, 677.

28. Pyott v. Pyott, 90 Ill. App. 210, 221, where it is said: "In the case of old men it is called senile dementia, and it indicates the breaking down of the mental powers in advance of the bodily decay; the mind dwells only in the past and the thoughts succeed one another without any obvious association." See also Owings' Case, 1 Bland (Md.) 370, 390, 17 Am. Dec. 311, where it is said that though physicians do not regard it as being in itself a disorder or the effect of disease, 'the law considers it not only as a species of insanity, from which there is no hope of recovery, but as one which always becomes worse as age advances."

29. Hall v. Unger, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 5,949, 2 Abb. 507, 511, 4 Sawy. 672, where it is said: "It is characterized by forgetfulness, inability to follow any train of thought, by indifference to passing events. 'In dementia,' general mental incapacity;[30] a state of enfeeblement of the mind or impairment of the mind;[31] where the person afflicted is rendered incapable of reasoning, in consequence of functional disorder of the brain, not congenital, or born with the person;[32] a term indicating an impaired state of the mental powers, a feebleness of mind caused by disease, and not accompanied by delusion or uncontrollable impulse.[33] (Dementia: As Affecting — Capacity to Make Will, see Wills; Responsibility For Crime, see Criminal Law.)

DEMESNE. See Estates.

DEMIJOHN. A glass vessel with a large body and a small neck, enclosed in wicker-work.[35]

DEMI-MARK. In old English practice, half a mark; a sum of money of the value of six shillings and eight pence.[36]

DE MINIMIS NON CURAT LEX. A maxim meaning "The law cares not for small things."[37]

says Ray, a celebrated writer on medical jurisprudence, 'the mind is susceptible of only feeble and transitory impressions, and manifests but little reflection even upon these. They come and go without leaving any trace of their presence behind them. The attention is incapable of more than a momentary effort, one idea succeeding another with but little connection or coherence. The mind has lost the power of comparison, and abstract ideas are utterly beyond its grasp. The memory is peculiarly weak; events the most recent and most nearly connected with the individual being rapidly forgotten. The language of the demented is not only incoherent, but they are much inclined to repeat insulated words and phrases without the slightest meaning.'"

36. The tender of which was formerly necessary in a writ of right; the effect of such tender being to put the demandant, in the first instance, upon proof of the seisin as stated in his count, that is, to prove that the seisin was in the king's reign there stated. DE MINIS. Writ of threats.[39]

DEMI-OFFICIAL. Partly official or authorized, having color of official right.[40]

DEMISE.[41] As a noun, a lease for a term of years;[42] a conveyance in fee, for life or for years;[43] the conveyance or transfer of an estate, either in fee, for life or for years, most commonly the latter.[44] As a verb, to lease for a term of years.[45] (See, generally, Deeds; Landlord and Tenant.)

DEMISE AND REDEMISE. In conveyancing, where there are mutual leases made from one to another on each side, of the same land, or something out of it.[46] (See, generally, Deeds; Landlord and Tenant.)

DEMISSION. A bringing down; lowering; a relinquishment; the laying down of an office.[47]

DE MITTENDO TENOREM RECORDI. A writ to send the tenor of a record, or to exemplify it under the great seal.[48]

DEMITTERE. In old conveyancing, to transfer; to demise or lease.[49] Also, to send away, or part with.[50]

DEMITTERE PER BALIUM. To discharge by or on bail.[51]

DEMOBILIZATION. In military law, the dismissal of an army or body of troops from active service.[52]

41. Coke says: "The word 'demise' . . . 'is applied to an estate either in fee simple, fee tail, or for a term of life, and so commonly is taken in many writs.'" 12 Coke Inst. 483 [quoted in Krider v. Lafferty, Whart. (Pa.) 303, 315].

Applied to a vessel.— In Bramble v. Culmer, 78 Fed. 497, 501, 24 C. C. A. 182, the court said: "When a ship is let to another for a period of time, and the owner during that time has nothing whatever to do with the appointment of her officers and crew, or with the working or management of her, that is called a 'demise' or 'letting' of the ship." See also Baumvoll Manufacture, etc. v. Gilchrest, [1892] 1 Q. B. 253, 258.

Compared with "let."— In Hemphill v. Eckfeldt, 5 Whart. (Pa.) 274, 278, the court said: "Now, the word let in the lease before us, implying, according to Johnson's Dictionary, concession, and also a grant to a tenant, is the proper equivalent of the word concessi, or demisi; the English word demise, though improperly used as a synonyme, strictly denoting a posthumous grant and no more."

Apt words in a lease.— In Krider v. Lafferty, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 303, 315 [citing 2 Blackstone Comm. 317, 318; Coke Litt. 456; Sheppard Touchst. 266]; the court said: "The usual words of operation, and as it is said, most apt in a lease, are 'demise, grant, and to farm let.'" See also Voorhees v. Amsterdam Presb. Church, 5 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 58, 71, where it is said: "The words of conveyance appropriate in a lease are 'demise, lease, and to farm it.' Distinguished from mathematical demonstration. Where a statute provided "The law does not require demonstration; that is, such a degree of proof as, excluding possibility of error, produces absolute certainty; because such proof is rarely possible," McFarland, J., said: "The legislature must be held as stating, or trying to state, in section 1826, the general difference between a mathematical, or strictly scientific, demonstration, and the kind of proof usually obtainable in judicial trials. They did not intend to use the words in that relation as synonymous with proof beyond a reasonable doubt." Treadwell v. Whittier, 80 Cal. 574, 603, 22 Pac. 266, 13 Am. St. Rep. 175, 5 L. R. A. 498. Rep. 33, where it is said: "Those are days beyond the lay days, but during which the amount that he has to pay for the use of the ship is a fixed sum, not necessarily what it costs the owner to keep his ship, but a fixed sum, which is usually about what it is supposed it costs the owner to keep the ship. This stipulation also is in favour of the charterer, because instead of being involved in a dispute as to what he would have to pay for the days during which the ship is kept idle, a sum is fixed, and he knows what he has to pay if he keeps the ship beyond the lay days. Those are the 'demurrage days.' If he keeps the ship beyond the lay days, when he pays nothing, and only the number of demurrage days, he pays a fixed sum for demurrage. If he keeps the ship after that, it is a question of damages, and he does not know what he has to pay until the question is settled by a tribunal or by agreement."

A 'defense' consists of an affirmative statement of new matter only. A denial raises an issue upon the whole complaint, or upon some part of it. When such issue has been raised, or if it be not raised, but the complaint be allowed to stand as true, new matter constituting a defense may be set up." See also Green v. Brown, 22 Misc. (N. Not even a novice in pleading should plead a 'denial' as a 'defence.' In an answer 'denials' are pleaded, if there be any, and then comes 'defences.' Denization is a new privilege conferred upon the alien, but not having, like the phrase natural born or native, any relation to the fact of birth or to its time, operates only from the date of its reception."

93. Fries' Case, 9 Fed. Cas. No. 5,126, 3 Dall. 515, where it is said: "And under the royal government such a power might undoubtedly have been exercised. This power of denization is a kind of partial naturalization, giving some, but not all of the privileges of a natural born subject. He may take lands by purchase or devise, but cannot inherit. The issue of a denizen born before denization cannot inherit; but if born after may, the ancestor having been able to communicate to him inheritable blood." 96. Used with "number" in an indictment. — Where an indictment charged that defendants "feloniously took and carried away sundry United States treasury-notes, or national-bank bills, the number and denomination of which are to the grand jury unknown," the court said: "What is the meaning, the proper interpretation, of the words, 'number' and 'denomination?' If the word had been numbers, in the plural, we would be inclined to hold it referred to the serial numbers on the bills. Being in the singular number, it must be construed as expressing or relating to the number of bills alleged to have been stolen; not the numbers on the bills. The word denomination explains itself. It refers to the value or number of dollars the several bills represented; as, the denomination of five dollars, the denomination of ten dollars, etc." Duvall v. State, 63 Ala. 12, 17.

A mechanical profession.—In Maxon v. Perrott, 17 Mich. 332, 337, 97 Am. Dec. 191, the court said: "A dentist, in one sense, is a professional man, but in another sense his calling is mainly mechanical, and the tools which he employs are used in mechanical operations. Indeed, dentistry was formerly purely mechanical, and instruction in it scarcely went beyond manual dexterity in the use of tools, and a knowledge of the human system generally, and of the diseases which might affect the teeth and render an operation important, was by no means considered necessary. Of late, however, as the physiology of the human system has become better understood, and the relations of its various parts and their mutual dependence are more clearly recognized, dentistry has made great progress as a science, and its practitioners claim, with much justice, to be classed among the learned professions."

18. "Department or service."— Where a statute in relation to master and servant recited: "Provided nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to make employes . . . fellow servants with other employes engaged in any other department or service," the court said: "The words 'department or service' as here used merely mean a subdivision of business, as running a train, clearing away a wreck, repairing a track, etc." Gulf, etc., R. The business belonging to the post-office, is in a department of the post-office; a person employed in that business, is a person employed in a department of the post-office. If, then, the carrying of the mail be a part of the business of the post-office, it would seem that the person who carries it, is a person employed in a department of the general post-office."

Used in this sense in the United States, where each department is charged with a specific class of duties, and comprises an organized staff of officials; e. g., the department of state, department of war, etc. Black L. Dict.

Applied to municipal service.— Where a statute conferred upon the city council the power to provide for the employment of such clerks, and other persons in any of the departments of the city government as the exigencies of the public service may demand, the court said: "The word 'departments' is not used here in a technical sense. Wherever, in any branch or portion of the city government, services are necessary for which provision has not been made, the want may be supplied by the authority of that section. The purpose of the legislature was to enable the city council to see that the city government should be provided with the necessary facilities for the efficient transaction and conduct of its business." Distinguished from "sailed."— In Union Ins. Co. v. Tysen, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 118, 126, the court in speaking of a vessel "at sea" said: "This vessel had sailed within the case of Bond v. Nutt (Cowp. 601, 607). Lord Mansfield there mentions a ship as having commenced her voyage, though she had barely begun to sail, and was stopped by an embargo. Departure is a word of different meaning. It imports an effectually leaving of the place behind. If the vessel be detained or driven back, though she may have sailed, there is no departure."

DEPENDENCE. The state of deriving existence, support or direction from another; the state of being subject to the power and operation of extraneous force.[25]

DEPENDENCY.[26] A territory distinct from the country in which the supreme sovereign power resides, but belonging rightfully to it, and subject to the laws and regulations which the sovereign may think proper to prescribe.[27] As used in a statute relating to the sale of intoxicating liquors, any building used for the common purposes of an inn and situated within its curtilage.[28] (See STATES; TERRITORIES.)

25. "As dependence is the natural condition of childhood; the dependence of life upon solar heat." Duval v. Hunt, 34 Fla. 85, 125, 15 So. 876.

Applied to dependent relatives.—In American Nat. Bank v. Cruger, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 17, 24, 71 S. W. 784, the court, in speaking of the obligation of an aunt toward her nephews and nieces whom she had largely supported, said: "Having undertaken to rear, train and nurture them, and having contributed largely to their support and maintenance, undoubtedly, there rested upon her a moral obligation to continue so to do, as long as they were in a state of dependence; and the word dependence, as here used, is not restricted to support and maintenance — food and clothing. It is intended to include moral and mental training, and that care and nurture which would be prompted by the feelings of affection which the testimony indicates existed between this aunt and the children of her unfortunate sister."

26. Distinguished from "colony."— In U. S. v. Nancy, 27 Fed Cas. No. 15,854, 3 Wash. 281, 287, the court, in speaking of a dependency, said: "It is not a colony, because it is not settled by the citizens of the sovereign, or mother state; but it is lawfully acquired or held, and the people are as much subjects of the state which has thus obtained it, as if they had been born in the principal state, and had emigrated to the dependent territory. The usual ways by which such acquisitions are made, are by purchase, or by conquest in war. The first, being made with the consent of the sovereign, is permanent and indefeasible; but the latter is subject to uncertainty, and liable to restoration to the sovereign, from whom it was taken, unless confirmed by a treaty of peace, or unless it be voluntarily relinquished by such sovereign. When so confirmed, or relinquished, and not before, it seems to be, in the true sense of the word, a dependency; that is, it is durably incorporated into the dominions of the conqueror, and becomes a part of his territory, as to government and national right." See also 7 Cyc. 399 note 19.

Distinguished from "possession."— Where an act of congress (Act of March 1, 1809) prohibited certain importation into the United States, of any goods, &c., wherever grown or manufactured, from any port or place situated in Great Britain, or France, or in any of the colonies, or dependencies, the court said: "The precise meaning of the word 'dependency,' as it is used by congress, in the law under consideration, cannot be ascertained with any degree of certainty. . . . The introduction of the words 'actual possession,' into the act of March 1, 1809, and the omission of them in that of May 1, 1810, afford strong evidence, that congress did not consider a dependency, as synonymous with a possession; but, on the contrary, the difference was so material, as to induce congress to sanction a trade with the former, which had been previously interdicted with both. As soon as this distinction is established, the mind of a legal man is irresistibly led to annex to the one, the idea of possession, accompanied by title, in opposition to a mere naked possession, obtained either by force, and against right, or rightfully acquired, and wrongfully withheld from the legal sovereign; and this, the court is strongly inclined to think, is the true definition of a dependency." Used in reference to benevolent societies.— In Alexander v. Parker, 144 Ill. 355, 366, 33 N. E. 183, 19 L. R. Dependence for favor, or for affection, or for companionship, or as servants, or retainers, is excluded. Deposit of ship's papers with consul.— Where a statute required masters of vessels to deposit their ship's papers with the consul on their arrival in a foreign port, the court said: "The term 'deposit,' carries with it the idea of something more than the mere delivery of the papers to the consul, for inspection, to be redelivered in a few hours. This word is not usually employed, except when the thing is intended reward, and to be returned when he shall require it;[46] a bailment of goods, to be kept by the bailee without reward, and delivered according to the object or purpose of the original trust;[47] the delivery of a thing for custody, to be redelivered on demand, without compensation;[48] a thing delivered to a person for gratuitous safe keeping;[49] a temporary disposition of money for safe-keeping;[50] that which is placed anywhere for safe keeping, especially a sum of money left with a bank or broker, subject to order;[51] that which is placed in any one's hands for safe keeping; something entrusted to the care of another, specially a sum of money left with a bank or banker, subject to order.[52] As defined by statute, an act by which a person receives the thing of another person, with the obligation to keep it and to return it in kind;[53] when chattels are delivered by one person to another to keep for the use of the bailor.[54] In banking, a sum of money left with a bank for safe-keeping, subject to order, and payable, not in the specific money deposited, but in an equal sum.[55] (Deposit: As Security For — Costs, see Costs; Rent, see

Distinguished from "expose."— Where a statute provided that "a person who wilfully and maliciously . . . exposes a poisonous substance, with intent that the same should be taken by such [domestic] animal, shall be punished," &c., and an indictment contained the word "deposit" instead of "expose" the court said: "The word 'deposit' is not equivalent to the word 'expose.' They are not synonymous. They not only do not mean the same thing, but are often, perhaps generally, used to express opposite ideas. Things are often deposited so as not to be exposed, and for that purpose. One word scarcely suggests the other." State v. Pratt, 54 Vt. 484, 486.

Distinguished from "mandate."—In Thompson v. Woodruff, 7 Coldw. (Tenn.) 401, 407, the court said: "The distinction between deposit and mandate is this: In the case of deposit, the principal object of the parties is the custody of the thing, and the service and labor are merely accessorial. In the case of a mandate, the labor and services are the principal objects of the parties, and the thing is merely accessorial."

"Receive on deposit."— Where a statute rendered it unlawful "to buy or sell, barter or exchange, or receive on deposit, any cotton in the seed or ginned, . . . between the hours of sunset of any one day and sunrise of another," the court said: "The term 'receive on deposit' is used in the act in connection with sale, barter and exchange, and as a step to their accomplishment. The Legislature must be understood to have meant 'to receive on deposit' with a view to sell, and as a step taken to put the article on the market. In short, the term 'sale' must be construed to include every thing necessary to its consummation, the offer to sell being the initial move, a deposit for sale is an offer to sell." Deposit of money or "mutuum."— In Payne v. Gardiner, 29 N. Y. 146, 168, Mullin, J., said: "A deposit of money with a bank or private person is what is known in the civil law as a mutuum or irregular deposit — the distinction between the two kinds of deposit not being recognised by the common law. When money is borrowed, and no time of payment is fixed by the contract of loan, the debt, as already stated, is instantly due, and an action may be brought, without demand — the bringing of the action being a sufficient demand to entitle the lender to recover." "A deposit of money with a bank or private person is not, therefore, the deposit of the civil law, nor is it what in that law was designated by the term mutuum, which was a loan of property for consumption, and to be returned in kind, and without interest or compensation for the use; but it is what Pothier calls an irregular deposit, which differed from a mutuum in this, that the latter has principally in view the benefit of the receiver, the former the benefit of the bailor. In cases of mutuum, the party borrowing was not held to pay interest upon the money lent; but in cases of irregular deposit, interest was due by the depositary, both ex nudo pacto and ex mora. This distinction between the two classes of deposit, as to interest, is not recognised by our law; the depositary being liable in each for interest, in the event of a breach of duty."

"Originally, a deposit of money was made by placing a sum of money in gold or silver with a bank or other depositary, to be returned, when called for, in the same identical coin, and without interest, the depositor paying the depositary a compensation for his care." Curtis v. Leavitt, 15 N. Y. 9, 166.

I. DEFINITION.

A depositary is the bailee in a contract of depositum, which is a bare, naked bailment of goods delivered by one man to another to be kept for the use of the bailor[1] and to be restored to him either upon demand or otherwise in accordance with the terms upon which the deposit was made.[2]

II. ELEMENTS OF DEPOSIT.

A. Contract of Bailment — 1. In General. To create a valid deposit the bailee must assent to the delivery of the property to him and accept its custody and care; a deposit may be created only by contract.[3] The contract need not, however, be express. It may be implied from circumstances.[4]

2. Legality. Where a deposit is made for an illegal purpose, it has been held that there is no liability to return it or responsibility for negligence in its care.[5]

B. Delivery of Res. To constitute a deposit there must be a delivery of the res to the depositary.[6]

Other definitions are: "The party receiving a deposit; one with whom anything is lodged in trust, as 'depository' is the place where it is put." Black L. Dict. 357.

The person who receives from another the possession of personal property to be retained for the depositor or a third person. N. D. Civ. Code (1899), § 4001; S. D. Civ. Code (1903), § 1353.

Depositarius, in the Latin of the jurists, is "one who receives a deposit; a trustee, depositary." Ulpian Dig. xvi, 3, fr. 1, 7, §§ 2, 36.

A depositary is not a trustee, as a trustee is given title and active management of the res while a depositary has at best only a special property. Thompson v. Whitaker Iron Co., 41 W. Va. 574, 23 S. E. 795.

C. Obligation to Return Res — 1. In General. There must be an obligation on the part of the depositary to restore the res either in specie or in kind upon demand of the depositor or otherwise in accordance with the terms of the deposit.[7]

2. Return in Kind — a. General Rule. As a rule one to whom property is delivered is not a depositary unless he assumes an obligation to return the identical thing delivered to him.[8]

b. Exceptions. To this rule, however, there are important exceptions. A warehouseman with whom a marketable commodity is deposited for safe-keeping until the depositor shall elect to dispose of the same may be regarded as a deposi-

Deposit in name of another.— If a person deposits his own money in bank to the credit of another, the latter consenting simply as an accommodation to the former and having no control over the fund other than to draw it out when the depositor shall direct, the person in whose name the deposit is made is not liable for its safe-keeping, and if the bank fails the depositor must bear the loss. Dustin v. Hodgen, 38 Ill. 352. See, however, Gilbert v. Gilman, 17 Rev. Lég. 124, 132, where it was held that a deposit of money in bank in the name of the government by a contractor as security for performance of the contract is at the risk of the government.

Grant of storage room.— A person who merely grants storage room for the property of another, whether gratuitously or for a reward, without assuming expressly or impliedly any duty of care in respect of the property, is not liable to the owner if the property is carried off or injured by a trespasser, although such theft or injury might have been prevented by the slightest care on his part. He is no bailee, because delivery is essential to a bailment. Sherman v. Commercial Printing Co., 29 Mo. App. 31. And see Peers v. Sampson, 4 D. & R. 636, 2 L. J. K. B. O. S. 212, 16 E. C. L. 216.

Unauthorized deposit.— A person is liable for money deposited with his clerk if it afterward comes to his use and possession. Dougherty v. Vanderpool, 35 Miss. 165. However a depositary is not ordinarily responsible for a theft committed by or from his servants or agents, where they had no authority to receive the property. Lyons First Nat. Bank v. Ocean Nat. Bank, 60 N. Y. 278, 19 Am. Rep. 181; Doncy v. Hastings, 23 Wis. 475.

Executory agreement of deposit.— An agreement to make or to receive a gratuitous deposit is not a contract, since it is without consideration, and it may therefore be disregarded or retracted by either party so long as it remains purely executory; and the death of either party before performance is entered upon operates a revocation. Farrow v. Bragg, 30 Ala. 261.

7. Whatley v. Austin, 1 Rob. (La.) 21.

Agent or broker and depositary distinguished.— An agent for the disbursement of funds confided to him by his principal is not a depositary, since it is of the essence of a deposit that the depositary shall be bound to keep the thing deposited and restore it in kind to the depositor. Longbottom v. Babcock, 9 La. 44. And see Vandersmith v. Washmein, 1 Harr. & G. (Md.) 4. So when a customer confides a sum of money to a broker, to be employed in the purchase of a commodity, the relation of debtor and creditor arises between them, and not that of depositary and depositor. Consequently if the broker deposits the sum in a bank to his credit and the fund is seized on execution against him the customer is not entitled to the fund as against the creditor. Stetson v. Gurney, 17 La. 162.

Deposit for third person.— The fact that the res is payable to a third person does not alter the character of the bailment as a deposit. Bushnell v. Chautauqua County Nat. Bank, 74 N. Y. 290.

Privilege of loan.— The fact that a depositary of money is given the privilege of using it if he needs it does not render the transaction a loan ab initio. It becomes such only on the depositary's availing himself of the privilege. Carlyon v. Fitzhenry, 2 Ariz. 266, 15 Pac. 273.

8. Hathaway v. Brady, 26 Cal. 581; Lopes v. Brito, 7 Hawaii 679; Geist v. Pollock, 58 Ill. App. 429; Bloodworth v. Jacobs, 2 La. Ann. 24.

Mutuary and depositary distinguished. A loan of goods to be consumed and returned in kind is a contract not of depositum but of mutuum. One important respect in which a mutuary or bailee in a contract of mutuum differs from a depositary is that he is not, while a depositary is, obliged to return the specific thing bailed. Derrick v. Baker, 9 Port. (Ala.) 362; Andrews v. Worcester, etc., R. Co., 159 Mass. 64, 33 N. E. 1109; 2 Kent Comm. 573; Story Bailm. §§ 47, 228.

Mutuum as sale.— By the Roman law the contract of mutuum passed the right of property in the goods loaned, and their value only was to be returned. Story Bailm. §§ 47, 283; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 56, §§ 5, 792. This is true by the common law also, which regards a loan of goods for consumption as a sale. Schouler Bailm. § 6. See also Lonergan v. Stewart, 55 Ill. 44; Seymour v. Brown, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 44; Chase v. Washburn, 1 Ohio St. 244, 59 Am. Dec. 623. See also infra note 9.

tary, although he does not agree to keep the property intact or to return it in specie, but agrees only to return its equivalent in amount, kind, and quality.[9] So a deposit of money in a bank is generally termed a contract of deposit, although the fund is not to be kept intact but may be returned in equivalent legal tender. A deposit of money in a bank is said to be either general or special.[10] Certain forms of special deposit are true contracts of deposit, since in these the identical fund deposited must be returned.[11] A general deposit, however, creates the relation of debtor and creditor between the parties,[12] since the bank need not return the identical fund, but may discharge its obligation by returning its equivalent in any legal tender. For this reason general deposits are sometimes termed imperfect or irregular deposits.[13]

D. Safe-Keeping of Res. The principal object of the deposit must be the safe-keeping of the res.[14]

Dec. 488; being cases of a deposit of grain in an elevator.

Option to sell or to buy.— The transaction is a bailment, although the depositor is given an option to sell the property to the warehouseman (Lyon v. Lenon, 106 Ind. 567, 7 N. E. 311; O'Neal v. Stone, 79 Mo. App. 279); but if the warehouseman is given an option to buy the property the transaction is a sale (Lyon v. Lenon, 106 Ind. 567, 7 N. E. 311; O'Neal v. Stone, 79 Mo. App. 279; Chase v. Washburn, 1 Ohio St. 244, 59 Am. Dec. 623. See, however, Colton v. Wise, 7 Ill. App. 395; Knight v. Piella, 111 Mich. 9, 69 N. W. 92, 66 Am. St. Rep. 375, both cases holding that a delivery of goods to one who is given an option to buy them creates a bailment).

Deposit of grain may be a sale where that was the intention of the parties. Johnston v. Browne, 37 Iowa 200; Reherd v. Clem, 86 Va. 374, 10 S. E. 504.

13. State v. Clark, 4 Ind. 315. Although the distinction formerly existing between a perfect and imperfect deposit is abrogated by La. Civ. Code, art. 2934, which recognizes as the only real deposit a thing received to be preserved in kind without the power of using it and to be restored identically, yet persons are at liberty by their contracts or course of dealing to create irregular deposits, which between themselves are inviolate and prevent the effects which the law in the absence of any contract or course of dealing would have upon their respective rights. Bloodworth v. Jacobs, 2 La. Ann. 24.

Mutuum and general deposit distinguished. A general deposit of money with a bank or a private person is not the deposit of the Roman law, nor is it what in that law was designated by the term "mutuum," which was a loan of property for consumption, to be returned in kind and without interest or compensation for the use; but it is what Pothier calls an "irregular deposit," which differs from a mutuum in this — that the latter has principally in view the benefit of the receiver, the former the benefit of the bailor. Payne v. Gardiner, 29 N. Y. 146; Story Bailm. 61.

14. Thibaud v. Thibaud, 1 La. 493. Thus where a customer confides cash to a factor to be expended by him in taking the goods to market and disposing of them, the balance to be accounted for on his return, it does not constitute a depositum, since a contract of deposit is essentially intended for the safety of the thing deposited. Thompson v. Scales, 11 La. 560.

General deposit.— This is equally true of a general deposit. While in such a case the safe-keeping of the identical res is not intended, yet the preservation and return of its equivalent in amount, kind, and quality is the main object of the deposit. See supra, II, C, 2, b.

Mandatary and depositary distinguished. A mandatary is the bailee in a contract of mandatum, which is a bailment of goods in regard to which the bailee engages to do some act without reward (Richardson v. Futrell, 42 Miss. 525; Lampley v. Scott, 24 Miss. 528; 2 Kent Comm. 569, 570); as where one takes goods for the purpose of repairing them (Russell v. Koehler, 66 Ill. 459) or for manufacture (Gleason v. Beers, 59 Vt. 581, 10 Atl. 86, 59 Am. Rep. 757; Brown v. Hitchcock, 28 Vt. 452). "Mandates and deposits closely resemble each other; the distinction being that in mandates the care and service are the principal, and the custody the accessory, while in deposits the custody is the principal thing, and the care and service are merely accessory." Black L. Dict. See also BAILMENTS, 5 Cyc. 164; Jones Bailm. 53; Story Bailm. §§ 5, 140. "The depositary

E. Gratuitous Custody. Strictly speaking it is an element of the contract of depositum that the bailee shall receive and keep the property for the bailor's benefit gratuitously;[15] but certain forms of bailment are commonly spoken of as deposits, although the bailee is to receive compensation for holding the property.[16]

F. Benefit to Bailor. A contract of depositum is commonly classified as one for the benefit of the bailor alone.[17] The benefit of the bailor is indeed the main purpose of the contract, but the fact that the bailee incidentally derives a benefit from the transaction does not detract from its character as a deposit. This is true of a case where the depositary is to be compensated for his trouble.[18] It is true also in those cases where the depositary has the right to use the res during the continuance of the bailment.[19] Nor is the bailment deprived of its character as a deposit because it is made for the benefit of a third person.[20]

III. Depositaries of Private Property.

A. Creation of Deposit — 1. In General. The relationship of depositor and depositary is created where personal property is delivered by one person to another upon an express or implied agreement of the latter, with or without compensation, safely to keep and return it in specie or to return it in kind, upon demand of the depositor or otherwise in accordance with the terms of the contract of deposit.[21]

2. Time of Creation. The deposit is complete upon delivery of the res to the depositary.[22]

3. Character of Deposit. The character of any particular deposit is to be determined by the contract between the parties.[23] In case the contract leaves it is charged with keeping the goods only, and the mandatory with doing something with or about them." Montgomery v. Evans, 8 Ga. 178, 181.

17. Schouler Bailm. § 14.

Loan and deposit distinguished. A loan is usually made at the request and for the benefit of the borrower (Payne v. Gardiner, 29 N. Y. 146, 167); but its character as such is not altered by the fact that compensation is to be made to the lender (Payne v. Gardiner, supra. See, however, Templeman v. Gibbs, 86 Tex. 358, 24 S. W. 792) or by the fact that the borrower assumes the expense of the care of the res (Bennett v. O'Brien, 37 Ill. 250). A deposit may of course be changed to a loan, as where money is delivered as a special deposit and an agreement is afterward made that the depositor shall lend, and the depositary shall borrow, the money. Howard v. Roeben, 33 Cal. 399; Chiles v. Garrison, 32 Mo. 475.

Mutuum and deposit distinguished. A mutuum or loan for consumption has principally in view the benefit of the bailee, a deposit the benefit of the bailor. Payne v. Gardiner, 29 N. Y. 146; Story Bailm. 61.

A gratuitous deposit is created by an agreement under which the depositor places a slave in the possession of the depositary "to take care of him, keep him until called for, and pay nothing for his hire" (Farrow v. Bragg, 30 Ala. 261); by a pretended sale with agreement to return the property (King v. Cressap, 22 La. Ann. 211); by receiving property with permission to use it, if the depositary does not avail himself of the permission (Caldwell v. Hall, 60 Miss. 330, 44 Am. Rep. 410); or by leaving property on another's premises with his consent without agreement as to compensation (Burk v. Dempster, 34 Nebr. 426, 51 N. W. 976). The fact that the treasurer of an association serving without compensation has an official position and designation and has given bond does not make him any more than a gratuitous depositary of the funds intrusted to him in that position. Hibernia Bldg. Assoc. v. McGrath, 154 Pa. St. 296, 36 Atl. 377, 35 Am. St. Rep. 828.

22. Dale v. See, 51 N. J. L. 378, 18 Atl. 306, 14 Am. St. Rep. 688, 5 L. R. A. 583, holding that stipulations subsequent to delivery are consequently ineffeient unless assented to.

23. Wright v. Paine, 62 Ala. 340, 34 Am. Rep. 24 (where it was held that an instrument acknowledging a deposit for "safe-keeping" of a certain amount of gold coin which the depositary is to "return whenever called for" is a special deposit calling for return in specie); Moses v. Taylor, 6 Mackey (D. C.) 255 (where an agreement for the "safe return of said bonds" was held to imply the return in doubt, the character of the depositary's business is of weight in determining the nature of the deposit.[24]

B. Rights of Depositary — 1. Against Depositor — a. Possession of Res. Ordinarily the depositary has the right to retain the res until the depositor demands its return,[25] but not after demand,[26] unless by the terms of the contract of deposit he is given the right to retain the res for a prescribed time.[27]

b. Use of Res.[28] The depositary may use the res so far as its use is contemplated by the parties or is beneficial to the deposit,[29] but not otherwise.[30] If the depositary was given the right to use the property the presumption is, in the absence of evidence on the point, that he was to pay for its use.[31]

c. Compensation. Strictly speaking a depositary is a bailee who accepts the gratuitous custody of the res, and therefore he is not entitled to compensation. By modern usage, however, the term is given a broader meaning and may include those who by contract express or implied are to be compensated for taking charge of the res where its safe-keeping is the main object of the bailment.[32]

d. Lien. In the absence of agreement or custom a depositary has no lien for storage,[33] but he may have a lien for labor bestowed upon the res.[34]

e. Set-Off. A depositary has ordinarily no right to set off personal credits in discharge of his obligation as depositary.[35]

f. Jus Disponendi. A depositary has at most only a special property right in the res,[36] and as against the depositor he cannot dispose of it either absolutely or of the identical bonds); Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Guilmartin, 88 Ga. 797, 15 S. E. 831, 17 L. R. A. 322 (holding that the question whether a deposit is gratuitous is not to be determined by transactions, however numerous, between the depositary and third persons having no relation to the case); Rankin v. Craft, 1 Heisk. (Tenn.) 711 (holding that a note or due-bill given by the recipient of money, whereby he promised to pay the amount in currency on demand, conclusively showed that the transaction created a debt and not a mere deposit).

Obligation to pay interest see infra, note 29.

Co., 31 Iowa 583 (holding that common carriers are presumed in the absence of evidence to be depositaries for hire of property delivered to them in the course of business); Swartz v. Hauser, 10 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 434 (where it was held that a bailment with a broker is presumably not gratuitous). So also a delivery to forwarders in the usual course of business with instructions to forward implies a bailment not gratuitous. Wright v. Paine, 62 Ala. 340, 34 Am. Implied right.— The right to use the res may be implied from circumstances. Farrow v. Bragg, 30 Ala. 261. conditionally by sale or otherwise and so defeat the rights of the depositor as general owner of the property.[37]

2. Against Third Persons. At common law the depositary was practically an insurer of the property bailed and therefore was allowed an action against a third person for loss of or injury to or detention of the thing deposited;[38] and in some states the action is still allowed.[39] In other jurisdictions the depositary's right of action is made to depend upon the question whether he is himself responsible to the depositor for the injury complained of.[40] However in replevin by a depositary against one who has taken the goods from his possession, title in a third person other than the depositor is a good defense.[41] A depositary cannot enforce notes deposited with him to indemnify sureties of the depositor.[42]

C. Duties and Liabilities of Depositary — 1. To Depositor — a. To Care For Res — (i) During Bailment — (A) Measure of Care — (1) General Rule. All bailees are bound to care for the property in their hands; the degree of care required of them depends, in the absence of a contract prescribing the measure of care,[43] on whether the bailment is for the benefit of the bailor alone, the benefit of the bailee alone, or their mutual benefit.[44] A gratuitous depositary is bound to exercise only slight care and is answerable in case of loss of or injury to the property only where it occurs through his gross negligence.[45] If, however, the own and a loss of the whole occurs,[50] or if he deals with it in any way not contemplated by the terms of the deposit,[51] he is liable.

(b) Depreciation in Value. A depositary is not liable for a depreciation in the value of the property occurring without fault on his part,[52] as for instance a depreciation occurring through reasonable wear and tear as fairly contemplated by the contract.[53]

(3) Tests of Care and Negligence. A gratuitous depositary is liable only for gross negligence,[54] which has been defined as the omission of that care which even the most inattentive and thoughtless persons never fail to take of their own concerns.[55] Applying this test, it would seem that a gratuitous depositary is not liable for loss or injury unless he has failed to exercise only that care which persons of less than common prudence usually bestow on their own property,[56] or, as it is sometimes stated, that a gratuitous depositary is responsible only for such gross negligence as is equivalent to fraud.[57] However in many cases it is said

Negligence and gross negligence.— The line drawn between the liability of a gratuitous depositary and one having an interest in the deposit is shadowy. In both cases it is frequently said that the depositary is liable for a lack of that prudence which responsible men exercise in regard to their own property. See cases cited infra, note 58. There seems to be a definite distinction, however, in those cases where the depositary is held responsible only in cases where his negligence is so gross as to amount to fraud. See cases cited infra, note 57. The distinction between "negligence" and "gross negligence" has been discountenanced in some cases. Mariner v. Smith, 5 Heisk. (Tenn.) 203; Willson v. Brett, 12 L. J. Exch. 264, 11 M. & W. 113; where it was said that they are "the same thing, with the addition of a vituperative epithet." that the test of the care required of a gratuitous depositary is that care which persons of ordinary prudence in his situation and business usually exercise in the keeping of like property of their own.[58] In any event the question whether the depositary has exercised the requisite care must be considered in view of the character, value, and situation of the property, and the bearing of surrounding circumstances on its security.[59]

(4) Proximate Cause of Loss. Negligence on the part of a depositary does not render him liable for a loss, unless it was the proximate cause of the loss.[60]

(5) Care Required of Employees of Depositary. The same rules apply where the servants or agents of the depositary have the custody of the property, as where he personally has possession of it.[61]

(B) Exemption From Liability. A depositary other than a common carrier[62] may contract for exemption from his common-law liability for damages caused by his negligence.[63] A stipulation limiting the depositary's common-law liability need not be express but may be implied from circumstances. Thus the question of due care is governed by the known business habits of the depositary;[64] and he is not responsible for a loss resulting from any manner of caring for the property[65] or for any use of it[66] which was contemplated by the parties.

(II) After Termination of Bailment—(A) After Demand For Res. After the depositor has demanded a return of the res, the depositary holds the

(iv) Place of Delivery. Ordinarily, it seems, the depositary may return the res to the depositor at the place of deposit,[75] unless the contract of deposit expressly or impliedly prescribes a different place.[76]

(v) Manner of Delivery. The depositary must restore the res in the manner contemplated by the parties; otherwise he is liable for resulting loss or injury, although he exercises due care in the delivery.[77]

c. To Return Increase. The depositary must, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary, return not only the actual thing deposited but also all increase which has accrued thereto during the term of the deposit.[78]

2. To Third Persons — a. To Beneficiary of Deposit. If a third person is named as beneficiary in the contract of deposit, the depositary is bound to deliver the res to him.[79]

b. To True Owner. In the absence of an order by the depositor,[80] the depositary is not bound to deliver the res to the true owner, if the deposit was not made in his name,[81] unless he has asserted his claim by judicial proceedings.[82] If, however, the depositor was the agent of the owner, the property may be delivered to the principal.[83]

3. To Public. The depositary is bound so to care for the deposit that the public shall receive no injury therefrom.[84]

D. Rights of Depositor — 1. In General. The depositor retains the title to the property deposited,[85] and he may take it not only from the depositary,[86] but from persons in possession claiming under the depositary as vendees or otherwise.[87] The depositor may, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary, withdraw the res at any time, even before the execution of the purpose of the deposit.[88] If a third person converts the property the depositary may recover its proceeds,[89] and if a third person injures the property the depositor may recover from him in damages.[90]

2. Right of Action Against Depositary — a. Demand as a Prerequisite[91] — (i) Necessity. The depositor must make a proper demand for the return of the res before bringing suit against the depositary,[92] except where the depositary has Deposit creating debt.— Where a deposit of money merely creates a debt payable on demand, no demand is necessary, the demand made by the suit being sufficient. Moore v. Fitzpatrick, 7 Baxt. (Tenn.) 350.

Sufficiency of demand.— Under Cal. Civ. Code, § 1823, providing that a depositary shall not be bound for the delivery of a deposit until demand made, a demand by an administrator on a depositary for the effects of his decedent, coupled with a statement that he holds a paper calling for a certain sum of money, is a sufficient demand for the money. put it out of his power to return the property,[93] either by an actual conversion of it to his own use[94] or by a negligent injury to it.[95]

(II) TIME. The demand must be made within a reasonable time after the deposit is made.[96]

(III) PLACE. The demand need not be made at the place of delivery, but may be made wherever the depositary can be found.[97]

b. Refusal as a Prerequisite. Unless the depositary refuses to comply with a proper demand for the res, no right of action accrues in favor of the depositor.[98] Silence of the depositary in the face of a proper demand is equivalent to a refusal.[99] If the demand is made under circumstances not contemplated by the terms of the deposit, the depositary may refuse to deliver, but in so doing he should specify the ground of his refusal, as an unqualified refusal is a denial of the bailment and renders the depositary liable to immediate suit.[1]

c. Form of Action.[2] The depositor may sue in tort for a wrongful detention or misuse of the property,[3] or he may bring his action sounding in contract for a refusal to redeliver.[4]

d. Parties.[5] In an action for the res by the person for whom the deposit was made, the depositary is entitled to have the depositor made a party.[6] If the depositary is a married woman her husband should not be joined in an action against her for injury to the res.[7]

e. Pleading.[8] In a suit to recover the res the declaration or bill should allege the performance of all conditions precedent to the delivery of the deposit,[9] and that depositary was duly notified thereof;[10] but it need not allege that the depositary's compensation was tendered him,[11] that the depositary had the property in his possession when the demand was made,[12] or that the depositor was the owner of the res; nor need the vocation of the depositary be alleged.[13]

f. Defenses — (i) Laches and Limitations.[14] The statute of limitations will not run in favor of a depositary during the continuance of an admitted deposit,[15] but the assertion of an adverse claim by the depositary sets the statute in motion.[16] So the statute will run from the death of either of the parties to a deposit at pleasure.[17] The statute commences to run when the depositor makes demand for the res and the depositary neglects or refuses to deliver it,[18] and not until that time,[19] provided that the demand be made within a reasonable time after the deposit was made.[20]

Agreement to pay for property.— Where the depositary fails to return the deposit and agrees to pay for it the bailment is converted into a sale and assumpsit will lie. Parker v. Tiffany, 52 Ill. 286.

But in the latter case there must be some limitation to the right of making a demand. . . . A demand must be made within a reasonable time; otherwise the claim is considered stale, and no relief will be granted in a court of equity. What is to be considered a reasonable time for this purpose does not appear to be settled by any precise rule. It must depend on circumstances. If no cause for delay can be shown, it would seem reasonable to require the demand to be made within the time limited by the statute for bringing the action. There is the same reason for hastening the demand, that there is for hastening the commencement of the action; and in both cases the same presumptions arise from delay."

(II) Want of Title in Depositor — (A) General Rule. A depositary who seeks to keep the res for himself or to escape liability for converting it to his own use or for injuries done to it is estopped to assert that at the time the deposit was made the depositor was without title to the property.[21] In such a case the pre-existing title affords no defense to the depositor's action, whether it rests in the depositary himself[22] or in a third person.[23] In an action to recover the res, either by the depositor or by the person for whose benefit the deposit was made, the depositary has no right to plead a defense for a person not a party to the suit,[24] except by his authority.[25]

(B) Exceptions. Title in a third person is a defense, however, if the depositary has restored the res to him,[26] or if he has demanded it.[27] And the depositary

Brown v. Thayer, 12 Gray (Mass.) 1. So if money is deposited with one person to be delivered to another upon a third person expressing his satisfaction with certain documents, the depositary cannot defend an action for the res by the beneficiary on the ground that the expression of satisfaction by the third person was in fraud of the depositor's rights. (Pa.) 418, 427, 37 Am. But it would be repugnant to every principle of honesty to say, that after the right owner has demanded the goods of the bailee, the latter shall not be permitted, in an action brought against him by the bailor for the goods, to defend against his claim, by showing, clearly and conclusively that the plaintiff acquired the possession of the goods either fraudulently, tortiously, or feloniously, without having obtained any right thereto"); Hardman v. Willcock, 9 Bing. 382 note, 23 E. C. L. 626.

Remedies of depositary.— If an adverse claim is made to the res, the depositary may require the depositor and the claimant to interplead (Powell v. Robinson, 76 Ala. 423; Mulcahy v. Devlin, 2 N. Y. City Ct. 218 [appeal dismissed in 103 N. Y. 646]); or he may refuse the claimant's demand and await an action by him; and on action being brought he may notify the depositor and require him to defend the suit, in which case the depositor will be bound by the judgment rendered, whether he appear and demay show that since the deposit was made the depositor has parted with his title either to a third person [28] or to the depositary himself.[29]

g. Damages [30] — (i) In General. In an action for damages for loss of the res the depositor must prove its value.[31] If the res cannot be returned the depositor is entitled to its money value [32] at the time of the demand,[33] together with any charges for hire due him under the contract of deposit.[34] In case of a wrongful sale by the depositary the depositor may claim the proceeds as damages.[35]

(ii) Interest. A depositary is not liable for interest on money deposited [36] in the absence of agreement, unless he has used the money as his own [37] or has mingled it with his own,[38] or unless he has refused to return it on demand,[39] in which case the depositor is entitled to interest from the date of the demand.[40]

h. Burden of Proof. In an action against the depositary, the burden is on the depositor to prove the bailment,[41] and a failure or refusal to return the property on demand.[42] A depositor suing for the return of specific property must be able to identify it.[43] In an action for conversion the depositor must prove a conversion.[44] If a failure or refusal to return the property on demand is shown it becomes incumbent upon the depositary to explain the same.[45] If he shows fend or not; but if he is not notified and does not appear his rights will not be affected by the judgment (Powell v. Robinson, 76 Ala. 423).

explanatory circumstances in defense, the burden reverts to the depositor to prove negligence on the part of the depositary.[46] If the depositary alleges paramount title in a third person the burden is on him to prove that fact.[47]

i. Evidence.[48] The usual rules of evidence apply in actions by depositor against depositary.[49]

j. Questions of Law and of Fact. The character of the depositary's relationship to the depositor is a question for the jury.[50] The degree of care required of a depositary is a question for the court,[51] but the question whether the depositary has in fact exercised the necessary degree of care is for the jury.[52]

F. Termination of Deposit — 1. By Return of Res. The deposit is terminated by a return of the res to the depositor pursuant to the terms of the deposit.[57]

2. By Demand and Refusal. The bailment is terminated where the depositor demands the property and the depositary refuses to deliver it.[58]

3. By Wrongful Sale of Res. The bailment is terminated if the depositary wrongfully sells the res.[59]

4. By Notice to Remove Res. The bailment is terminated where the depositary notifies the depositor to remove the res and the latter fails to do so within a reasonable time.[60]

5. By New Contract. The contract of deposit may be terminated by subsequent agreement whereby the res becomes the property of the depositary[61] or whereby the res is to be held by him by way of pledge.[62]

6. By Death of Party. Under some circumstances the death of one of the parties may put an end to the bailment.[63]

IV. Depositaries of Public Moneys.[64]

A. Definition. A depositary of public moneys is one designated by law to whom public officials may or shall confide the custody of public funds.[65]

B. Character of Depositary — 1. As Public Officer. A depositary of public funds is not strictly speaking a public officer, but is a mere custodian. One striking difference between the two is that public officers are forbidden to make personal use of money in their care while depositaries usually have that privilege.[66]

But no one would therefore rationally call either the Old United States bank, or the state banks so used as depositories, public officers of the United States. . . . It is clear, therefore, that they are not public officers, as understood by the general assembly which created the depositories. It follows that these depositories are instruments or agencies sui generis and sui juris, standing on their own law"); Brown v. Wyandotte County, 58 Kan. 672, 674, 50 Pac. 888 (where the court says: "There is no similarity between a bank acting as a depository of public funds and the class of officers mentioned [public fiscal officers]. 2. As Public Debtor. The ordinary deposit of public money in a depositary bank is in substance and legal effect a loan and not a bailment, and creates the relation of debtor and creditor between the depositary and the government,[67] not between the depositary and the officer who deposits the money,[68] although the depositary has been held a quasi-trustee.[69]

W. 815, where, on the question of whether the liability of sureties on the depositary's bond was to be governed by the rule applying to public or to private persons, the court said: "While the bank may not have been a 'public officer,' in the popular sense of that term, yet in the matter of the county money deposited with it, it was performing public duties, or duties to the public, and pro hac vice was a public officer." See also Hennepin County v. State Bank, 64 Minn. 180, 184, 66 N. W. 143, where it is said: "Depositaries of county funds, under the statute, are quasi-public officers. The identical moneys deposited are not required to be returned. Obviously the bank receiving them had the right to use and control the money as its own. It could loan the funds for the purpose of earning the money with which to pay the stipulated interest due the state. A deposit of state funds, under the provisions of the law, amounts to a loan or investment of the funds so deposited. . . . The decisions are quite uniform to the effect that where money deposited in a bank is passed generally to the credit of the depositor, the relation of debtor and creditor is thereby created, and the transaction, although called a 'deposit,' is nevertheless in substance and legal effect a loan, and this though it is payable on demand"); South Bend First Nat. Public officer a bailee and not a debtor.— In many cases language has been used to the effect that a public officer receiving public money in the course of the duties of his office is as to that money a debtor and not a bailee and that the title to the money is in him and not in the state. Who may appoint.— Where the statute is silent as to the appointing power, and provides for the deposit of money by a county treasurer "in bank under and by direction of the proper legal authority," the county board and not the county treasurer is "the proper legal authority" entitled to designate the depositary, as it has general supervision of

2. Mode of Appointment. In the absence of statute requiring it, sealed proposals from banks competing for the appointment as depositary are not a prerequisite of the appointment.[71]

3. Eligibility of Depositary. The depositary must satisfy the requirements of the statute as to its eligibility.[72]

4. Security For Deposit — a. In General. A depositary of public funds is commonly required by statute to furnish security for the deposit. Where the statute expressly specifies the character of the security, the depositing officer has no power to accept any other in lieu of that prescribed;[73] but the depositary may be required by the proper officer to furnish security in addition to that provided for in the statute unless the statute prohibits it.[74]

b. Bond[75] — (i) In General. The statutes generally provide for the execution of a bond by the depositary as security for the funds deposited.[76]

(ii) Form and Requisites — (a) General Rule. The form of a depositary's bond is usually governed by statute. A bond will be considered valid if it is in substantial compliance with the statute,[77] although containing technical defects either in the shape of an erroneous description of the obligee[78] or of the funds secured by it.[79]

the finances and property of the county. State v. Owen, 41 Nebr. 651, 59 N. W. 886.

Repeal of power.— A statute providing for the placing of public funds with public depositaries is not repealed by an act compelling city treasurers to account for interest on public funds in their custody, as the first statute applies to funds deposited and the later refers to cases where a depositary has not been designated. People v. Gibler, 78 Ill. App. 193.

Power to prefer one of several designated depositaries.— A board which has power merely to appoint a certain number of depositaries cannot require the officer whose duty it is to deposit the money to prefer one of the designated depositaries over another. It will not be presumed that he would have accepted the security for the unlawful purpose, and the court will compel its delivery to the assignee in insolvency, especially where it does not appear that the bond does not amply secure the deposits actually made.

(B) Execution and Delivery. A bond is not invalid because it was executed before the appointment of the depositary, where it was executed in view of the appointment.[80] Failure to attach the stamps required by the United States revenue law does not invalidate the bond. Ordinarily an obligor on the bond cannot show that he thought he was signing some other paper, or that others would sign the bond with him. Where one of the obligors delivers the bond to an attorney of a party in interest, and he holds it for some months and then delivers it to the obligee, it is a sufficient delivery.[81]

(C) Consideration. If the bond is under seal it imports a consideration. Apart from this a deposit of money in reliance on the bond furnishes an actual consideration for it.[82]

(D) Ultra Vires. If a bank is threatened with insolvency it is not ultra vires for it to give a bond to induce deposits.[83]

(E) Approval. A depositary's bond is not binding until approved by the proper authority,[84] but the approval of the majority of the officials named in the statute is sufficient where all have acted or been notified of the contemplated action.[85]

(III) Deposits Secured[86] — (A) Past and Future Deposits. A depositary's bond usually covers deposits made before as well as after its execution.[87] funds will cover funds collected on state taxes and deposited by the county treasurer in the depositary's bank, the court saying: "These funds in the treasurer's hands, the proceeds of other than county taxes, must, in our judgment, be regarded as belonging to the county until they are actually paid over to the state, municipality or persons for whom they were collected. The county is responsible for their safe-keeping, and if it is not the absolute owner it holds as trustee for the benefit of the real owners."

87. Brown v. Wyandotte County, 58 Kan. 672, 675, 50 Pac. 888, where the bond was conditioned "to pay any and all deposits of the county which may be deposited with it," and the court says: "Grammatically, the clause 'which may be deposited' may have as much the signification of past or present as of future time. The law will principally look at the purpose for which the instrument was required and given, to determine the tense of the verb." The rule is the same where the statute provides that before a deposit is made by the officer or received by the depositary the officer shall take and the depositary give a sufficient bond. Myers v. Kiowa County, 60 Kan. 189, 56 Pac. 11; People v. Sheppard, 37 N. Y. App. Div. 119, 55 N. Y. Suppl. 1130. So where the bond is conditioned for the payment of "all moneys which are or may have been deposited," it is sufficient to bring all moneys previously deposited within its scope and in legal effect to accomplish a redeposit of them under the bond; and hence a contention that the moneys previously deposited are not secured by the bond, since the statute authorizes bonds for future deposits only, is without force. Meeker County v. Butler, 25 Minn. 363. If the bond is conditioned to pay over all moneys "now in deposit in said bank, or due, or to become due therefrom," it covers existing deposits in the bank. Barnes v. Cushing, 168 N. Y. 542, 61 N. E. 902 [reversing 43 N. Y. App. Div. 158, 59 N. Y. Suppl. 345]. Application of payments.— A pass-book of the depositary containing its account with the county is admissible to show the application by consent of the parties of the checks first paid by the depositary after the bond was given to the payment of amounts previously deposited and which stood to the credit of the county when the bond was given, and hence to show that the payment of those

(B) Illegal Excess. Although deposits are made in excess of the amount allowed by law, the bond is valid to the extent of the sum legally deposited.[88]

(IV) Breach of Bond. A breach of the bond takes place wherever the obligor fails to deliver on demand the funds deposited,[89] or incapacitates itself to make delivery.[90]

(V) Liability of Sureties.[91] Sureties are liable for a deposit covered by the bond, although the depositary issues an interest-bearing time-certificate of deposit therefor to the officer making the deposit.[92] The failure of the officials properly to pursue their remedy against an insolvent depositary does not release the sureties on the depositary's bond;[93] nor are the sureties on an annual bond released from liability thereon by the acceptance by the state of an annual bond for the next succeeding year.[94]

(VI) New Bond. A depositary may be required to furnish a new bond by any public official who has power to require the original bond.[95]

5. De Facto Depositaries. The bond of a de facto depositary is binding where public funds have been deposited with it in reliance thereon, although the designation of the depositary was not made in accordance with statute.[96]

D. Term of Deposit. Where the power to appoint is given in general terms only, it would seem that the appointing authority cannot bind itself by appointing for any definite time, but that it has at all times power to revoke and reappoint in its discretion.[97] However an appointment is valid without renewal until a new appointment is made.[98] The appointing power cannot make a binding

Mandamus is the proper remedy to compel an officer to comply with the statutory duty to make deposits. People v. Gibler, 78 Ill. App. 193.

4. State v. Bartley, 39 Nebr. 353, 370, 58 N. W. 172, 23 L. R. A. 67, where the court, in issuing a writ of mandamus at the instance of the depositary to compel the deposit of public funds, declined to pass on the question whether the relator had such an interest as entitled it to maintain the action, since its right to do so was not raised by counsel, the court saying: "As the state at large is directly interested in the enforcement of the depository law, the attorney general could, and doubtless it is his duty to, institute the proceedings to compel the depositing of the funds in the banks designated as depositories; and perhaps a bank which has complied with the law might do so, at least in case the attorney general should refuse to appear and file the application." 7. McQuiston v. Central Bd. of Education, 88 Pa. St. 29, holding that where one statute provides that the depositary of a certain fund shall receive a specified compensation, and another statute provides that the bank offering the highest rate of interest shall be selected as the depositary of that fund, a bank which contracts under the latter act without mention being made of the compensation provided for in the former act is not entitled to compensation.

8. Trumpbour v. Trumpbour, 70 Hun (N. Y.) 571, 24 N. Y. Suppl. 212 [affirmed in 144 N. Y. 652, 39 N. E. 494], holding that where a depositary accepts an order of court directing a bank in which court money is temporarily deposited to pay it over to the depositary, and through its own fault omits to obtain the money from the bank, it is responsible therefor to the court and to the beneficiaries of the fund the same as if it had received the money.

2. To Keep Funds Separate. A depositary is not ordinarily bound to keep the funds deposited separate from other funds.[9]

3. To Pay Interest. A depositary is not liable for interest on deposits[10] in the absence of statute[11] or contract[12] providing for the payment of interest.

4. To Make Payment on Demand — a. In General. It is the duty of the depositary to pay out the fund on proper demand of the depositing officer or on his order.[13]

b. Payment of Illegal Bonds. A depositary of public moneys is not responsible for paying out the funds under illegal bonds issued by the proper public officers[14] unless it had knowledge of the illegality.[15]

9. Brown v. Wyandotte County, 58 Kan. 672, 675, 50 Pac. 888 (where the court says: "The county was a general depositor of funds, and by the act of deposit the reciproeal obligations of creditor and debtor arose. The deposit not being speeial, the funds were not supposed to be kept on hand for the depositor, and were not so kept, but as deposited they beeame the property of the Bank, whieh became liable to pay the amount on demand"); St. Louis County v. Ameriean L. & T. 11. Cass County v. Harrisonville Bank, 157 Mo. 133, 57 S. W. 736, holding that a requirement of interest on county funds does not necessitate the payment of interest on other funds deposited with the state eustodian.

12. MeQuiston v. Central Bd. of Edueation, 88 Pa. St. 29, holding that a depositary must pay the rate of interest eontraeted for, although above the legal rate, where the statute authorizes the seleetion as depositary of the person who shall bid "the highest rate of interest."

Authority to contract.— After agreement to pay interest the depositary eannot objeet that the state offieial had no authority to make the eontraet. New York v. National Broadway Bank, 10 N. Y. Suppl. 555. However a depositary of court moneys must pay the rate of interest provided in its eharter, notwithstanding a different agreement with parties to the suit, as only the court itself may make sueh an agreement. Rutland Nat. Bank v. Hankinson, 33 Fed. 561.

Implied contract.— An agreement to pay interest may be inferred from a previous course of dealing between the parties; but proof that other banks paid interest under like eireumstanees is no evidence of any obligation on the depositary in question to pay interest. New York v. Tradesmen's Nat. Bank, 11 N. Y. Suppl. 95.

Varying contract by parol.— A written agreement as to interest eannot be controlled by a prior or eontemporaneous oral agreement limiting the liability to pay interest on certain funds. Commereial State Bank v. Antelope County, 48 Nebr. 496, 67 N. W. 465.

13. Hall County v. Thomssen, 63 Nebr. 787, 89 N. W. 393, holding that where an outgoing county treasurer delivered to his successor two ehecks covering a deposit in a depositary bank, and took them to the bank and had them certified instead of drawing out the cash, after which the bank failed, it did not amount to a redeposit of the funds as a general deposit, and the liability of the bank upon its depositary bond continued. See also supra, IV, C, 4, b, (IV).

Court depositaries.— It is not the duty of a depositary of court funds so to keep its books that it shall not pay out in any one case more than has been deposited therein. "The deposits being, as required, in the name and to the eredit of the court, the bank was authorized and required to honor all eheeks drawn by the eourt, and to pay them generally out of sueh deposits; and the order or eheek for withdrawing the money, in stating the eause in or on aeeount of which it is drawn, was a memorandum imposing no duty upon the bank, but only operating for the eonvenience of the court and its offieers, in keeping its aecounts." 14. Owensboro Deposit Bank v. Daviess County Ct., 12 S. W. 930, 931, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 681, 13 S. W. 101, where the eourt says: "The bank was not a trustee, but a mere naked depositary, with the agents of the county to supervise its action. The fund was a trust fund, to be applied in a particular way, not by the bank, but the agents of the county. The bank was required to know that the bond or eoupon issued had been signed and delivered,— in other words, that it was a genuine bond, nothing more; and the mere faet that it might have been an over issue ereated no liability, unless there was fraud and eollusion between the bank and the eommittee in an appropriation of the fund to a purpose they knew was unauthorized."

15. Howard v. Owensboro Deposit Bank, 80 Ky. 496, 4 Ky. L. Rep. 406.

Notice of illegality.— The mere faet that the president of the depositary bank was an offieial of the eompany in whose favor illegal bonds were issued, and that one of the committee ordering their issue was eashier of the bank and secretary of the eompany, did

c. Set-Off and Priority. A depositary of public money may not refuse to pay holders of bonds issued against a fund in its hands because the state owes it money on another account.[16] The state has a prior right to public funds deposited with a statutory depositary,[17] but this priority may be defeated by a set-off by debtors of the depositary of debts due them from it.[18]

I. Liabilities of Depositary — 1. To Government — a. Suit Apart From Bond.[19] In those states where a deposit of funds creates a debt not between the government and the depositary, but between the depositing officer and the depositary,[20] the government has no right of action against the depositary apart from its bond,[21] especially where the deposit was made illegally,[22] except in case perhaps of fraudulent collusion between the depositary and the depositing officer[23] or in case of statutory permission.[24]

b. Suit on Bond — (I) Demand as a Prerequisite. Where the depositary has put it out of its power to fulfil the conditions of the bond, as by going into insolvency, no demand is necessary before suit is brought on the bond.[25]

(II) Pleading[26] — (A) Complaint. In a suit on a depositary's bond, a specific allegation must be made of the designation of the principal as depositary,[27] and as a rule the declaration or complaint should contain an assignment not charge the bank with notice that the bonds were invalid where these officials claimed consistently that the bonds were legal. Owensboro Deposit Bank v. Daviess County Ct., 12 S. W. 930, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 681.

A. 226 (holding that since a state or county treasurer is merely a custodian or trustee of public moneys coming into his hands, if he deposits such funds with one who knows their trust character and who afterward becomes insolvent, the state or county may sue to impress a trust on the insolvent estate). However, the state cannot bring an action against an assignee of a county depositor to claim a preference under the Missouri act of Feb. 11, 1881, providing that debts due the state from an insolvent shall be preferred, since the funds being county funds the debt of the depositor is to the county and not to the state. c. Summary Remedy on Bond. A summary remedy on the bond of the depositary is sometimes given by statute.[34]

2. To Third Persons[35]— a. In General. A depositary of court funds is in all respects exempt from the process of the litigants.[36] Claims against the funds must be made in the court which ordered the deposit to be made,[37] and in the same cause.[38] Funds deposited by a city in a bank to the credit of holders of city bonds cannot be sequestered as property of the bondholders.[39]

b. Garnishment[40] and Sequestration.[41] Funds in the custody of a depositary are not liable to garnishment by a debtor of the depositing officer, since the money is that of the government.[42] A writ of sequestration cannot properly issue against a depositary of city funds on a claim against the city.[43]

I. Definition.

A deposition is the testimony of a witness put or taken down in writing under oath or affirmation, before a commissioner, examiner, or other judicial officer, in answer to interrogatories oral or written.[1]

1. 3 Blackstone Comm. 449; Burrill L. Dict.; Tidd Pr. 810, 811.

"Testimony of a witness given or taken down in writing under oath or affirmation, before a commissioner, examiner, or other judicial officer, in answer to interrogatories and cross-interrogatories, and usually subscribed by the witness." Aven v. Wilson, 61 Ark. 287, 298, 32 S. W. 1074 [citing Weeks Dep. 3].

"Testimony of a witness, reduced to writing, in due form of law, by virtue of a commission or other authority of a competent tribunal, or according to the provision of some statute law, to be used on the trial of some question of fact in a court of justice." Bouvier L. Dict. [quoted in Indianapolis Water Co. v. American Straw-Board Co., 65 Fed. 534, 535].

"Written testimony of a witness given in the courts of a judicial proceeding, either at law or in equity." The Sallie P. Linderman, 22 Fed. 557, 558. And see Ferguson v. Dent, 46 Fed. 88, 93.

The word "deposition" may be used in two senses. In its restricted and technical sense, it is usually limited to the written testimony of a witness given in the course of a judicial proceeding, at law or in equity. But it is also a generic expression, which embraces all written evidence verified by oath, and thus includes "affidavits." Baker v. Magrath, 106 Ga. 419, 421, 32 S. E. 370 [citing Anderson L. Dict.]. See also Stimpson v. Brooks, 23 Fed. Cas. No. 13,454, 3 Blatchf. 456. "In common parlance, and in some clauses of the statute, [deposition] is often used to designate the document containing the interrogatories, answers and certificate of the magistrate; while in other sections, it is more appropriately used to designate the narrative of the witness, made under the sanction of an oath, and reduced to writing." Fuller v. Hodgdon, 25 Me. 243, 247.

A paper which does not show in what cause it was taken, whether with or without notice, or who was present examining or cross-examining, and which was not filed, is not a deposition. Mincke v. Skinner, 44 Mo. 92.

A statement of facts in writing, without date or venue, purporting to have been signed by a witness, but giving neither age nor residence of such witness, which statement is not shown to have been made under oath,

II. RIGHT TO TAKE.

A. Dependent on Jurisdiction — 1. In General. Unless where the right is inherent, as in equity in certain cases,[2] there is no authority to cause depositions to be taken except in those cases where the right is conferred by statute, and the court or judge to which application is made is vested with jurisdiction to grant it;[3] nor the oath waived, nor to have been taken on notice or in the presence of parties, nor before any official authorized to administer oaths, and which is not accompanied by a certificate of a competent official, from which compliance with any of the requisites for the taking of depositions in judicial proceedings can be inferred, is not a deposition, although so labeled and filed in a pending suit. Lutcher v. U. S., 72 Fed. 968, 19 C. C. A. 259.

Bastardy proceedings.— Under the English statute (7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, § 2) respecting bastardy proceedings, and requiring the mother to make a deposition, etc., evidence taken down in writing. Reg. v. Fletcher, L. R. 1 C. C. 320, 11 Cox C. C. 558, 40 L. J. M. C. 123, 24 L. T. Rep. N. S. 742, 19 Wkly. Rep. 781.

Coroner's inquest.— An entry indorsed on an inquisition taken by a coroner, purporting to be the examination of witnesses, without a jurat or certificate of the coroner that the witnesses testified on oath, or a showing that it is the handwriting of the officer or was taken by his direction, or that the witnesses were in fact sworn and that their testimony is truly stated, is insufficient under the statute. People v. White, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 167.

In criminal procedure testimony taken on a preliminary hearing, and reduced to writing by the committing magistrate. Cyclopedic L. Dict. "Depositions," in Cal. Pen. Code, § 871, requiring the magistrate presiding at the preliminary examination of a person charged with crime, to indorse the discharge of the prisoner upon the depositions taken includes the testimony taken on the presentation of the complaint before issue of the warrant, as well as the testimony taken on the examination of the accused. Mattingly v. Nichols, 133 Cal. 332, 65 Pac. 748. Evidence taken on the examination of the accused for the benefit of the state is not a deposition which is required to be taken with prescribed statutory formalities. Kerry v. State, 17 Tex. App. 178, 50 Am. Rep. 122.

Notes of testimony taken at a former trial of the same suit, where there was an opportunity to cross-examine, are substantially a deposition. Zell v. Benjamin, 1 Walk. (Pa.) 113. But notes of testimony taken before an auditor without further proof will not answer the definition of a deposition. Matthewson v. Wilson, 7 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 29. And the notes of testimony taken down by the shorthand reporter in the presence of the court at the time of the granting of the continuance, but not read over to the witnesses or corrected or signed by them, nor certified by the reporter or by any other person, are lacking in the essential elements of a deposition. Thomas v. Black, 84 Cal. 221, 23 Pac. 1037.

The distinction between an affidavit and a deposition is that the former is ex parte and voluntary, and the latter is made after notice and is compulsory. Crenshaw v. Miller, 111 Fed. 450. A deposition differs from an affidavit, in that the opposite party has an opportunity to cross-examine the witness who makes the former. Woods v. State, 134 Ind. 35, 33 N. E. 901. "A deposition is evidence given by a witness under interrogatories, oral or written, and usually written down by an official person; while an affidavit is the mere voluntary act of the party making the oath, and may be, and generally is, taken without the cognizance of the one against whom it is to be used." Stimpson v. Brooks, 23 Fed. Cas. No. 13,454, 3 Blatchf. 456. "Deposition" in Cal. Pen. Code, § 129, making the offense of perjury complete when a deposition is delivered with the intent that it be uttered or published includes an affidavit. People v. Robles, 117 Cal. 681, 49 Pac. 1042. See also AFFIDAVITS, 2 Cyc. 4 note 3.

"There is an obvious distinction between an oath and a deposition. . . . the ordinary and usual meaning of the word 'deposition' is confined to written testimony at least in legal proceedings." U. S. v. Clark, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14,804, 1 Gall. 497.

The testimony of each witness taken separately is a deposition within a statute authorizing the collection of a prescribed fee for the deposition of each witness taken, etc. Broyles v. Buck, 37 Fed. 137.

2. Equity Jurisdiction. The court of chancery from an early day exercised the power to procure testimony by deposition and to issue commissions for that purpose. This power is inherent in courts of equity, and except so far as their authority in this respect has been abrogated or curtailed by statutory regulation, it is independent thereof.[5]

3. Early Practice at Law. Formerly the common-law courts had no power to procure testimony by deposition, but litigants therein were obliged to resort to chancery,[6] or to procure the consent of the adverse party — the court lending its Effect of subsequent legislation.—A deposition taken without the authority of statute is not validated by a subsequent statute permitting the taking of a deposition under like circumstances. Brand v. Butler, 30 Wis. 681, where the subsequent statute placed parties on the same plane as witnesses.

U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 866 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 663], authorizing the issue of a dedimus by any of the courts of the United States "in any case where it is necessary in order to prevent a failure or delay of justice," applies only to cases of which those courts have jurisdiction. U. S. v. Hom Hing, 48 Fed. 635.

4. Something more than a mere presumption of authority is required. U. S. v. Hom Hing, 48 Fed. 635.

5. Una v. Dodd, 38 N. J. Eq. 460; Brown v. Southworth, 9 Paige (N. Y.) 351.

Origin of the power.— This power is said to have been borrowed from the civil law and to have constituted a part of the original jurisdiction of the chancery court. It is also said that it is a power inherent in all courts of justice, for "by the law of nations, courts of justice of different countries are bound, mutually, to aid and assist each other in the furtherance of justice." Una v. Dodd, 38 N. J. Eq. 460, 463 [citing Daniell Ch. Pr. 932; 1 Greenleaf Ev. § 320]. In Una v. Dodd, 38 N. J. Eq. 460, 466, the vice-chancellor, after the consideration of several English authorities, said that the court of chancery "independent of any authority conferred by statute, has power, in every cause and proceeding pending before it, where it is necessary in order to ascertain the truth of the matters in dispute, to have the evidence of witnesses residing in other jurisdictions, to take their evidence."

Coördinate jurisdiction.— The chancellor has power in all cases to grant a commission for the examination of absent witnesses, notwithstanding the register and clerk have like power in certain cases. Clark v. Bundx, 6 Paige (N. Y.) 432.

Statutory change.— A statute permitting the court to try suits in equity in the same manner as actions at law are tried without a jury, but authorizing a reference of such suits, leaves no provision for taking the deposition of a witness, even de bene esse, unless a reference is made to find the facts or facts and law. Marks v. Crow, 14 Oreg. 382, 13 Pac. 55.

In England a common-law court had no general power to issue a commission until 1 Wm. IV, c. 22. Dwinelle v. Howland, 1 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 87.

In New Hampshire the courts of law for an unknown period exercised the power of issuing commissions abroad, although the source of their jurisdiction in this respect does not satisfactorily appear. Russell v. Fabyan, 35 N. H. 159.

Concurrent jurisdiction.— Where a court sitting as a court of law has full power to grant a commission to take testimony, it is both unnecessary and improper to apply to the equity side. Peters v. Provost, 19 Fed. Cas. No. 11,032, 1 Paine 64.

Special commissions.— A motion for a special commission to take the testimony of a witness unable to attend court, on the ground that he has refused to give his testimony before a justice, and the remedy by attachment and fine or by a suit at law is inadequate, will be refused as an unusual exercise of the powers of the court; there being no doubt of the power of the court as a court of aid to procure unwilling suitors to consent by adjourning the trial or refusing to render judgment..[7]

4. STATUTORY AUTHORITY — a. Power of Legislature to Confer. It is within the powers of a legislature to confer authority on particular courts to prescribe the forms and modes of obtaining evidence [8] and to authorize the use of depositions by the accused in criminal cases;[9] but there is no power to authorize the taking and use of depositions by the prosecution, where the accused is entitled to meet his accuser face to face and to be confronted with the witnesses against him.[10]

b. Statutory Changes. Unless so expressly provided, statutes enlarging or diminishing the grounds for which depositions may be taken, or changing the mode in which they may be procured or the manner of taking them, are inapplicable to cases instituted before their enactment,[11] and a statute applicable to existing cases only will not extend to cases subsequently arising.[12] Neither is a deposition taken under one mode invalidated by a subsequent statute prescribing a different mode,[13] nor existing provisions respecting the perpetuation of testimony affected by a statute abolishing discovery.[14]

c. Statutes Applicable. Where depositions are permitted to be taken under different statutory provisions prescribing different modes of taking testimony under particular circumstances, the party seeking the testimony must resort to the particular mode prescribed and applicable to the conditions existing in the case presented, and cannot proceed under the other provisions.[15]

7. Amory v. Fellowes, 5 Mass. 219; Ragan v. Cargill, 24 Miss. 540; Dwinelle v. Howland, 1 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 87; Vanriper v. Vanriper, 3 Lanc. Bar (Pa.) 155.

According to the principles of the common law a party had the right to insist on the presence of witnesses in court, that he might cross-examine them in the presence of the jury, and by the original practice in the common-law courts depositions de bene esse could be taken only by consent of the parties. But as great practical inconvenience frequently resulted from a rigid adherence to these rules, the court uniformly exercised every legitimate power it possessed to induce parties to consent, by putting off the trial at the instance of defendant, if plaintiff would not give consent, and if defendant refused, by declining to render judgment, as in case of nonsuit. Ragan v. Cargill, 24 Miss. 540.

8. U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 862 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 661] empowering the supreme court of the United States to prescribe the forms and modes of taking and obtaining evidence is valid and constitutional. White v. Toledo, etc., R. Co., 79 Fed. 133, 24 C. C. A. 467.

Canada.— The parliament of the Dominion of Canada has power to provide for the taking of evidence of persons residing within the province of Ontario for use in foreign tribunals. Re Wetherell, 4 Ont. 713.
