5. Payment or Tender of Costs. Where plaintiff is liable for costs upon discontinuance, an attempt to discontinue without such payment is a nullity,[26] and defendant may treat it as such and proceed with the cause.[27]

H. Imposition of Terms — 1. In General. In cases where the right of a plaintiff to dismiss or discontinue is not absolute,[28] but is to be exercised under the control of the court, it may impose such equitable terms as circumstances may require, as a condition precedent to its exercise.[29] This discretion depends on the existence of rights which would be jeopardized by dismissal, not on the manner in which the court may become cognizant of them, and is not conditioned on some formal claim or assertion of them in the record.[30]

2. Payment of Costs. One of the most usual conditions imposed in such cases is the payment of costs,[31] and in proper cases the court may also impose in addi-

a direction by plaintiff to the clerk, although sufficient to authorize him to enter a judgment of dismissal in a pending action, did not effect a dismissal, where such judgment was never entered; and the court therefore retained jurisdiction over the cause and the parties. Time of entry on judge's calendar immaterial.— Where plaintiff dismisses as soon as the case is called for trial, the fact that the dismissal is not entered on the judge's calendar until after evidence is heard in defendant's behalf does not give the court jurisdiction to render a decree against plaintiff on an answer that does not state a counterclaim. tion to costs the payment of an extra allowance.[32] Nevertheless even in cases where it is within the discretion of the court to require payment of costs, it may permit a discontinuance without payment of costs, if the allowance thereof would be inequitable,[33] and although costs are imposed costs improvidently made will not be allowed.[34]

3. Election to Proceed With Suit. Where a plaintiff has the right to discontinue at his pleasure by paying defendant's costs, an order of discontinuance is conclusive on plaintiff and does not fail by reason of his non-payment of costs,[35] but where the right to discontinue is not absolute, a plaintiff who has applied for and obtained an order for leave to discontinue upon terms may refuse to accept the terms of the order and continue the action.[36] So an agreement by a plaintiff with defendant to discharge a suit, made without consideration, may be revoked by plaintiff before the entry of an order of discontinuance and he may proceed with the suit.[37] On the making of an order discontinuing an action on the payment of costs, defendant may elect to regard the discontinuance as the determination of the action, and enter judgment for costs after their adjustment.[38]

I. Operation and Effect — 1. In General. When a suit has been discontinued or dismissed as to one or more of several defendants the latter thereupon cease to be parties to the record and are not concluded by any judgment rendered in the cause;[39] and it has been held that rendition of judgment against a defendant as to whom suit has been discontinued and who has not appeared makes the judgment bad as to all defendants.[40] Nevertheless appearance of a defendant on whom no notice was served and as to whom a discontinuance was entered, cures the discontinuance and judgment may then be rendered against all the defendants.[41] Improper discontinuance as to one defendant will not avail another who waives the objection by afterward appearing and defending the suit.[42] A defendant against whom the action was dismissed cannot move to transfer the cause.[43] Where one of several plaintiffs dismisses as to his co-plaintiffs who acquiesce therein the latter are out of the cause for all purposes and cannot in future recover upon the cause of action on which they originally sued without bringing a new suit and serving process upon defendants.[44] After the entry of a discontinuance against one defendant plaintiff may immediately sue out new process against defendant so discontinued against.[45]

2. As Discharge of Cause of Action. A voluntary discontinuance, dismissal, or nonsuit by a party plaintiff does not of itself satisfy and discharge the debt or cause of action,[46] except where the basis of the dismissal is an agreement between the parties respecting the matters in controversy.[47] It settles no right of property between plaintiff and defendant, nor is it an admission of any right whatever in defendant.[48]

Rule 28 of the Alabama chancery practice, whereby the voluntary dismissal of a bill by complainant is made the equivalent of a final adjudication of the merits, is limited to the dismissal of cases which have been set down for hearing or trial, and a mere dismissal of a bill, whether or not compulsory, before it is pleaded to or set for trial or hearing, cannot be res judicata of the merits of the bill. Matter disposed of until reinstated on notice.— A dismissal by the court of a petition for reorganization of a bank under Gen. still pending files a bill in equity touching the same subject-matter and prays that his trover action may be made part and parcel of the bill and for an account and settlement, the subsequent dismissal of the bill on plaintiff's motion does not dismiss the action in trover.[49] Where a defendant is in custody on mesne process and plaintiff is nonsuited the sheriff may discharge defendant.[50]

4. Right to Defend Against Counter-Claim. A dismissal does not prevent plaintiff from making any legal defense to a counter-claim filed in the action.[51] Defendant in such case occupies the same position as though he were prosecuting an independent action,[52] and plaintiff should be permitted to plead and prove any fact tending to show that he is not liable on defendant's demand.[53]

5. Upon Jurisdiction. Although not ordinarily a final determination of the rights of the parties as they may be presented in some other action, yet a dismissal of an action is a final decision of that action as against all claims made by it,[54] and ousts the court of jurisdiction of the persons dismissed which cannot be resumed until the order of dismissal is vacated,[55] and no further proceedings can be had or judgment rendered by the court.[56] After a dismissal there remains no cause pending in which a third person may be permitted to intervene.[57]

6. As Waiver of Objections to Court's Rulings. A plaintiff by voluntarily dismissing his suit waives any errors the court may have committed.[58]

7. Collateral Attack. The validity of an entry of discontinuance cannot be inquired into in a collateral proceeding.[59] statute.[61] Nor does the statute apply to nonsuits set aside before the end of the term.[62]

J. Setting Aside and Reinstating Cause — 1. Power to Set Aside and Reinstate. The court has no power to strike out a voluntary nonsuit, against plaintiff's consent,[63] or to reinstate an action dismissed by agreement of all the parties, without notice to and consent of all parties interested.[64] So motions to set aside a nonsuit or to reinstate an action after dismissal are addressed to the discretion of the court,[65] and the decision thereon cannot be assigned for error.[66] A nonsuit cannot be set aside by agreement at the bar without the knowledge and agency of the court.[67]

2. Time. After a nonsuit or dismissal it is the usual rule that the same should be set aside and the case reinstated, if at all, at the same term at which it was granted.[68] The right, if any exist, may be lost by laches and lapse of time.[69] The general rule is that there can be no reinstatement at a subsequent term.[70]

Discontinued after lapse of two years.— When a cause is withdrawn from the docket, and leave given at the same time to reinstate it, but the cause is not reinstated, and no steps are taken in regard to it until after the lapse of two years, the cause is discontinued, and cannot then be reinstated. Griffin v. Osbourne, 20 Ala. 594.

Compliance with statute as to new trials.— Upon the calling of a case for trial, plaintiff moved for a continuance which was refused, whereupon he took a voluntary nonsuit with leave to move to set aside the same upon affidavits. Two days after he gave notice of his intention so to move as soon as the affidavits could be prepared, but the term expired twenty-six days later without any further steps having been taken. It was held that plaintiff's right of motion in legal effect amounted only to permission to move for a new trial, and that by his failure to comply with the provisions of the statute concerning new trials the court lost jurisdiction. 3. GROUNDS. A nonsuit or dismissal may properly be set aside and a reinstatement allowed where the necessity for plaintiff's act was superinduced by the error of the court,[71] or by a clerical error for which plaintiff was not responsible;[72] or was caused by fraud[73] or undue influence of the adverse party,[74] by surprise at the rejection of his evidence,[75] by withdrawal of an important witness immediately before trial,[76] by the necessary absence of plaintiff's attorney at the time of suffering nonsuit,[77] by an agreement not kept by defendant,[78] or by mistake of fact,[79] even though the mistake was not mutual,[80] or in ignorance of his obligations to other parties interested, whose rights are prejudiced.[81] So it is ground to set aside that the action was dismissed by plaintiff's attorney without his consent;[82] that the action was dismissed by a trustee without the knowledge or consent of the person beneficially interested or his solicitor;[83] that the action was dismissed because of the absence of plaintiff and his attorney, where because of sickness plaintiff was unable to attend or to notify his attorney;[84] or that the agreement pursuant to which dismissal was made was entered into by plaintiff's attorney improvidently or without due consideration.[85] So the court may always set aside a voluntary nonsuit or discontinuance made without formal leave of

In at least one state, however, it is expressly provided by statute that reinstatement may be within three terms after the order of dismissal is made, but if not moved for within that time it is too late. Glascock v. Brandon, 35 W. Va. 84, 12 S. E. 1102.

Necessity that fact appear in judgment entry.— Where a party is compelled by the judgment of the court to submit to a nonsuit, to enable him to revive the judgment it is not necessary that it appear in the judgment entry that the nonsuit was taken because of the judgment, on a matter of law arising in the cause, since it is sufficient if the matter appears in the bill of exceptions. Mistake due to negligence.— An action voluntarily discontinued should not be reinstated merely on the ground that plaintiff's attorney was ignorant either of the law or of a fact which he ought to have known and might readily have known before the discontinuance. Collusion of parties.— It has also been held that where the reorganization committee of an insolvent corporation which has brought a suit to enforce a contract of the corporation takes a nonsuit, through collusion with defendant, the court may in its discretion at the instance of an intervening stock-holder set aside the nonsuit on this ground. But where a discontinuance is entered by an attorney pursuant, although sometimes subsequent, to an agreement settling the case, the court ought not to disturb it without the most convincing proof of a revocation of the attorney's power, or some evidence at least impeaching the fairness or court where the same will give plaintiff an advantage or tend to oppress a defendant.[86] A motion to take off a nonsuit for the purpose of qualifying a witness who at the trial was incompetent is not based upon sufficient grounds and may properly be refused.[87] Nor will a cause be reinstated where it was dismissed on account of plaintiff's inexcusable negligence.[88]

4. Application and Notice. Ordinarily application to set aside an order of nonsuit or dismissal and to reinstate the cause is by motion[89] or petition,[90] supported by affidavit.[91] In some jurisdictions, however, it would seem that a rule to show cause is proper.[92] In whatever manner the application be made it should be upon due notice to the opposite party.[93]

5. Proceedings on Application. Where an order of a party dismissing his suit is presented by the opposite party, and is objected to as having been fraudulently obtained, or on other sufficient ground, the court may properly direct an issue to be made and tried with or without a party.[94] The court may in a proper case make the allowance of an application to set aside a nonsuit or discontinuance conditional upon the payment of costs.[95] And so too, it has been held, a court

An application by defendants to be reinstated as parties is equivalent to a motion to set aside an order of discontinuance. Morse v. Stockman, 65 Wis. 36, 26 N. W. 176.

Oral applications.— An application to set aside an order dismissing a suit may be made orally and affidavits in support of it may be presented when the motion is considered by the court, although at a subsequent term, since by Ill. Rev. St. (1891) c. 37, § 56, all cases undisposed of at the end of a term are continued by operation of law. Shannahan v. Stevens, 139 Ill. 428, 28 N. E. 804 [reversing 38 Ill. App. 571].

90. In Johnson v. Cheney, 17 Tex. 336, it was held that on motion to reinstate an action which had been dismissed it was immaterial whether the application was by petition or motion, provided the opposite party had sufficient notice.

When unnecessary.— Under Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 473, providing that the court may on terms relieve a party from a judgment or order taken against him through his mistake, inadvertence, or excusable neglect, in order to obtain relief against a dismissal entered by plaintiff's attorney under a mistaken belief, no affidavit in support of the motion for relief is necessary. Palace Hardware Co. v. Smith, 134 Cal. 381, 66 Pac. 474.

Twenty days' notice.— 2 Ballinger Annot. Codes & St. § 5157, provides that in proceedings for the modification or vacation of judgments parties shall be brought into court on the same notice as to time, etc., as in ordinary actions (twenty days); and section 4953 authorizes a court to grant relief from a judgment taken through mistake or excusable neglect, without specifying the length of notice to be served on the adverse party. In Chehalis County v. Ellingson, 21 Wash. 638, 59 Pac. 485, it was held that where a plaintiff voluntarily dismissed his cause and thereafter moved to reinstate the same such motion was a proceeding under section 5157 and not under section 4953, and hence twenty days' notice thereof was required to be given to the adverse party.

may amend a conditional order of reinstatement and make the same absolute at a subsequent term.[96]

6. Effect of Reinstatement. Where a nonsuit is set aside plaintiff is restored to all his rights and the cause is reinstated for trial.[97] And an order vacating an order of dismissal, unappealed from, operates to annul the entry in the clerk's register showing dismissal as well as the judgment of dismissal.[98] Where a suit is not barred by limitation when brought, it is not affected by a nonsuit and reinstatement.[99] A nonsuit taken by plaintiff in a cause, although set aside and the cause reinstated on the docket at the same term, discharges the witnesses who may have been summoned so that they are not bound to attend unless summoned anew.[1]

III. Involuntary Termination of Suit.

A. Power to Order Nonsuit or Dismiss. There is considerable conflict of authority as to the power of the court to order a compulsory nonsuit. In many jurisdictions under no circumstances has the court any power to compel plaintiff to submit to a nonsuit against his consent;[2] and where the judge advises a nonsuit plaintiff may still go to the jury if he insists on doing so.[3] In other jurisdictions, however, the power to order a compulsory nonsuit is held to exist.[4] In all jurisdictions the court has power to order a dismissal of an action where a proper case for the exercise of this power is shown.[5] The motion for involuntary nonsuit or dismissal is addressed to the discretion of the court and its refusal to grant the same will not be reviewed,[6] except in case of palpable error.[7]

B. Right to Dismissal or Nonsuit — 1. As Affected by Defendant's Demand For Affirmative Relief. A defendant who pleads a set-off cannot on failure of plaintiff to appear have judgment thereon, but the proper judgment is a nonsuit of plaintiff or a dismissal of the suit.[8] He is not required, however, to ask for a dismissal of the complaint until he has proved his cause of action.[9] If a defendant who has set up a counter-claim obtains a dismissal of the complaint, plaintiff, having excepted thereto, may insist that such counter-claim shall be passed upon by the jury and that defendant after having made the issue shall not be allowed to withdraw it, so as to reserve the right of having a new action for the same cause.[10]

2. As Affected by Admission of Part of Plaintiff's Claim. Where the answer of defendant admits some indebtedness a nonsuit should not be granted.[11]

3. Estoppel or Waiver of Right. The right to dismissal is one which may be waived or which under some circumstances defendant may be estopped from claiming by reason of conduct inconsistent with an intention to exercise such right.[12] He may be held to be thus estopped from insisting on a dismissal or discontinuance or to have waived his right thereto in various ways, as by continuance of the cause at his instance by which he admits its pendency,[13] by failure to seek a remedy in the proper time,[14] by failure of one defendant, after discontinuance as to the other, to object to the introduction of evidence on final argument

ment as in case of nonsuit or without the concurrence of the others,[29] unless their liability is separate,[30] or unless in good faith they appear by separate attorneys.[31] And where several defendants jointly move to dismiss, all should be entitled to such judgment or it will be error to dismiss.[32] Where judgment is obtained against one of several defendants, the others cannot nonsuit plaintiff.[33] The fact that certain persons have been improperly joined as parties defendant will not warrant the entry of a judgment in their favor, but the action should be dismissed as to them.[34] A defendant is entitled to an order to dismiss plaintiff's bill, notwithstanding the death of a co-defendant.[35] Where a regular default exists against a party he must first have such default set aside before a motion by him to dismiss the suit can be entertained.[36] Where certain persons are proper parties defendant and are liable for costs, a disclaimer of interest in the subject-matter of the suit is not ground for dismissal as to them.[37]

D. Who May Oppose Motion. An improper dismissal as to some defendants cannot be objected to by others whose rights are in no way prejudiced thereby.[38]

E. Dismissal or Nonsuit as to Part of Cause of Action. Where a pleading contains different counts or causes of action plaintiff may be nonsuited on motion of defendant or nolle prosequied as to a part of the causes of action on some of the counts and allowed to proceed on the others.[39]

F. Dismissal or Nonsuit as to Some of Joint Defendants. A court may dismiss or render judgment of discontinuance as to one or more of several defendants and leave the action to proceed against the others whenever a several judgment would be proper,[40] without dismissing as to all the defendants unless the cause goes to the discharge of all.[41] Where, however, the liability, if any exists, must be joint, as for instance, in an action against two on a joint judgment, one cannot be arbitrarily dismissed and the action allowed to proceed against the other.[42] Where some of the defendants are in default, the court has no power in dismissing the complaint as to some of the parties to dismiss as to those in default, since as to them the case was confessed by their default.[43]

G. Condition of Cause — 1. In General. A cause will be arrested on motion at any stage of the proceedings, when it is ascertained that the court has not jurisdiction.[44] A cause will be dismissed even after verdict[45] or judgment if at the same term,[46] or after entry of a continuance.[47] The cause will be dismissed at any time where the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.[48] Application for judgment as in case of nonsuit or of dismissal on other grounds has been held, however, to come too late when made after verdict,[49] unless upon the trial leave has been reserved to renew such motion notwithstanding the verdict.[50] So the application comes too late after final judgment,[51] after a judgment by default against one of the defendants,[52] on the day set for trial,[53] after the jury have been sworn,[54] after a cause has been called for trial[55] or taken same plaintiffs and different defendants, all involving the same questions of law, some were noticed for trial and others not, and a verdict was rendered for defendants in one of them, and exceptions taken by plaintiffs. Dismissal as to resident defendant.— Under a statute providing that where there are several defendants residing in different counties suit may be brought in any such county, where a party residing out of the county in which suit is brought is joined as a defendant with others who are residents, the court does not lose jurisdiction over the non-resident by a dismissal as to the resident defendants. under advisement,[56] or submitted to the jury,[57] after evidence on both sides has been introduced,[58] during the direct examination of witnesses,[59] or after plaintiff has proved facts which entitle him to recover.[60]

2. When Application Premature. A defendant has no right to move for judgment as in case of nonsuit until all the pleadings in the case have been carried to an issue.[61] So a motion at the second term to dismiss a bill for want of prosecution before all the defendants are served and while a demurrer to the bill is still pending at the instance of those who are served is premature.[62] Defendant may non prosequitur plaintiff in replevin, although the complaint has not been returned to the sheriff but has been withdrawn from his hands by plaintiff.[63]

H. Stipulations as to Dismissal. An agreement between plaintiff and defendant that the cause shall be dismissed upon certain conditions obligates plaintiff to dismiss upon performance thereof.[64] But a stipulation for a discontinuance entered into by plaintiff and one defendant will not be enforced if prejudicial to the rights of the other defendant.[65] An entry of discontinuance pursuant to agreement does not relate back to the time of the agreement so as to enable plaintiff to prosecute another suit for the same cause of action commenced after the agreement, but before the making of the entry.[66] Where an agreement or stipulation is made between parties to dismiss a suit, and there is no dispute as to the fact of such agreement, the courts will carry it into effect on motion.[67] But if the agreement is relied upon as a defense it should be pleaded.[68] A written stipulation before trial that an action be dismissed without costs does not authorize the entry of a judgment as on the merits, so as to bar a subsequent action for the same cause.[69] An order setting aside a stipulation for dismissal of an action cannot be made at chambers.[70] And it has been held that such a stipulation can-

Want of replication.— If a plaintiff files a copy of notes, without a narration or statement of his claim, and defendant voluntarily files a plea and orders the case on the trial list, and when the case is called a nonsuit is entered because of the non-appearance of plaintiff, the court will on motion take off the nonsuit, as without replication to defendant's plea the cause was irregularly on the trial list. not be set aside on the ground of mistake if the mistake be one which ordinary care would have avoided.[71]

I. Grounds — 1. In General. A motion to dismiss a suit is ordinarily founded upon matter of record, apparent upon the face of the proceedings,[72] because of some imperfection, gap, or chasm, caused by the act or neglect of plaintiff, or because of his disobedience to orders of the court; unless perhaps it be founded upon a release given or an agreement to dismiss pending suit.[73] As a general rule it cannot be founded on matters extrinsic to the record,[74] nor can it be made to serve the purpose of a plea in bar, nor devolve upon the court the summary determination of the merits of the case.[75]

2. Error as to Nature or Form of Remedy, and Misjoinder.[76] Error as to the nature or form of remedy is not a ground for dismissal or nonsuit,[77] especially after defendant has been defaulted.[78] So a misjoinder of causes of action is no ground for dismissal.[79]

3. Pendency of Another Action and Res Judicata.[80] An objection that another action is pending in the same court for the same cause should be raised by plea and is not ground for dismissal,[81] unless it appears on the face of the declaration

At the trial in 1838 an affidavit was read stating that the books were destroyed in 1833, and that plaintiff had admitted that the entry was originally against another than defendant. It was held that defendant was entitled to nonsuit.

Where written agreement supplemented by parol agreement.— In Sloan v. Courtenay, 54 S. C. 314, 32 S. E. 431, it was held that a ground of nonsuit that the "written instrument sued on" imposes no obligation on defendant to make good plaintiff's claim is not tenable, where the action was also based on an additional parol agreement supplementing the written agreement, and there was some testimony tending to show the obligation.

or bill.[82] Nor is the fact of a former adjudication as to the same cause of action a ground for dismissal,[83] unless such former adjudication appears on the face of the declaration.[84]

4. Premature Bringing of Action.[85] The premature bringing of an action is a ground for dismissal.[86]

5. Vexatious or Fictitious Suits. An action will not be dismissed merely because it is vexatious, unless it is clear that there is no meritorious cause of action,[87] or unless it is in fraud of justice.[88] If a suit is fictitious it may be dismissed after the assignment of a judgment by default, since there are no rights under such judgment to assign.[89]

6. Statute of Limitations.[90] Where it is apparent from the face of the declaration that the suit is barred by the statute of limitations,[91] or that all of the claim except an amount below the jurisdiction of the court is barred,[92] a motion to dismiss will be sustained. But the fact that a claim was stale will not sustain a judgment of nonsuit in an action of trespass if otherwise meritorious, if such action was brought within the time allowed by statute.[93]

Failure to show the court that security for costs is unnecessary is not a ground for dismissal, but only subjects the party to an absolute order to file security. Requard v. Theiss, 18 Misc. (N. Y.) 563, 42 N. Y. Suppl. 460. The fact that plaintiff has lodged an appeal against an order for security for costs is "sufficient cause," within the meaning of rule 1246, to exempt him from having his action dismissed for failure to comply with the order pending the appeal. Bennett v. Empire Printing, etc., Co., 15 Ont. Pr. 430.

Subsequent order imposing conditions.— Plaintiff's failure to amend his declaration, for which in good faith he has obtained leave, with a continuance of the case by withdrawing a juror, and his failure to pay the term costs imposed on him as a condition of the amendment by an order subsequently made, when he could no longer have any choice as to the acceptance of the leave on those occasions, will not justify the dismissal of his action. Refusal by one not bound to obey.— An action by a father for the loss of the services of his minor daughter, occasioned by personal injuries, should not be dismissed because she refuses to obey an order of the court in which the action was pending, requiring her to submit to a physical examination of her person by a physician. Bagwell v. Atlanta Consol. St. R. Co., 109 Ga. 611, 34 S. E. 1018, 47 L. R. A. 486.

failure to produce documents, books, or papers, when ordered to do so,[96] provided the order is peremptory in its nature.[97] A nonsuit will not be granted, however, because of the non-production of books and papers on trial, under a rule obtained by defendant, where the non-production is satisfactorily explained, nor where plaintiff is entitled to recover upon other counts in his narration.[98]

8. Irregularities in Proceedings. As a general rule no ground for dismissal is furnished by mere irregularities in proceedings, such as a defective oath for leave to prosecute in forma pauperis,[99] failure to tender an indemnifying bond in an action on a lost note,[1] failure to file an itemized account until two days after the writ was issued,[2] that bail was improperly required in an action commenced by capias,[3] failure of the clerk and master in chancery or the complainant for several terms to issue an alias process against certain defendants who have never been served,[4] or failure to file a statement of claim in action against a town.[5] The following omissions or irregularities have, however, been held to be properly taken advantage of by a motion to dismiss or a nonsuit: Failure to transmit the original papers, with the record of the proceedings in a cause wherein the venue has been changed;[6] failure of plaintiff to give a notice or make a demand conditional to his right to sue.[7]

9. Want of Authority to Bring Suit. That a suit is instituted without the authority of the person in whose name it is brought is ground for dismissal,[8] and

Necessity for motion for order.—Under acts authorizing the circuit court on motion and notice to require a party to produce his books and on failure to do so the court on motion may give judgment for the other party as in case of nonsuit, it is not enough for a defendant to give notice to a plaintiff to produce his books and then move for a judgment, for there must first be a motion for an order to produce the books. jurisdictions it is held that a motion to dismiss is the proper procedure only where the want of jurisdiction is apparent on the record, and that in any other case of want of jurisdiction of the subject-matter the objection must be taken by plea.[20] In some cases it is held that the action may be dismissed without any objection being made,[21] as where the verdict rendered finds for plaintiff an amount less than the jurisdictional amount prescribed by statute.[22]

29. Such a statute is not unconstitutional so far as it is made applicable to pending the time for service of the summons to one year after the commencement of the action, but fixes the extreme limit of time, both for the service of summons and return of summons, at three years;[30] but the court may in its discretion[31] dismiss, even though summons was issued and service was had within the time prescribed by statute.[32]

c. Defects in Steps Leading to Issuance of Process. The action will be dismissed for omission to indorse upon the writ in an action of trover the true nature of the action,[33] and an arrest of a debtor on mesne process under a creditor's sworn certificate, which is not made in compliance with the statutory requirements, is a ground for dismissal.[34]

d. Defective or Irregular Service or Return. Ordinarily defective service[35] or return of process[36] is not a ground for dismissal. A motion to dismiss for insufficiency of service, based on facts not apparent of record, cannot be entertained.[37] So it is not a ground for dismissal that service of process was procured by a fraudulent device or trick;[38] that a copy of the writ alone and no process was served on defendant;[39] or that a cause was improperly commenced by a capias ad respondendum instead of summons;[40] and an action will not be dismissed because the service was insufficient to support a personal judgment, if it was sufficient to hold property by attachment.[41] It has been held, however, that a cause will be dismissed where there is total want of authority in the person serving the process,[42] or where process is executed out of the jurisdiction of the court;[43] and service of a writ by a summons instead of by copy as required by statute is ground for dismissal.[44] So in case of misnomer of defendant the proper course is to discontinue and commence the action anew by issuing a writ against the true defendant.[45]

Appearance of part of defendants.— Failure to return the summons within the time prescribed by statute authorizes a dismissal as to such defendants as have not appeared, but the action may be prosecuted against those who have made such appearance, provided the court will be authorized to render a judgment against them in the absence of the other defendants. Peck v. Agnew, 126 Cal. 607, 59 Pac. 125.

12. Objections Relating to Parties[46] — a. Want of Capacity to Sue. As a general rule want of capacity to sue cannot be taken advantage of by a motion to dismiss or for nonsuit,[47] but it has been held that an action may be dismissed where plaintiff is neither a natural nor an artificial person.[48]

b. Misnomer. The misnomer of a party is not a ground for motion to dismiss or for nonsuit, but should be availed of by plea in abatement.[49]

c. Misjoinder of Parties.[50] At common law, except where the misjoinder appears upon the face of the record,[51] a joinder of too many plaintiffs is a ground of nonsuit on the trial, and this is true whether the action is on contract or sounds in tort.[52] So if too many persons are made defendants in actions on contract plaintiff will be nonsuited,[53] and he cannot avoid the effect of a misjoinder by entering a nolle prosequi as to defendant improperly joined, but must discontinue and commence a new action.[54] In actions ex delicto, however, a misjoinder of defendants is immaterial.[55] Under the code procedure, in a number of jurisdictions, a misjoinder of parties plaintiff is not a ground of dismissal of the complaint as to all the plaintiffs, if either has shown that he has a good cause of action;[56] but in such case the motion must be for a dismissal of the complaint as to plaintiff in whom no right of action appears.[57] Furthermore a plaintiff will not be nonsuited because he has brought too many parties into court, whether the action be on contract or tort.[58] The objection must be taken by demurrer or answer or it is waived.[59]

d. Nonjoinder of Parties.[60] In actions at common law, where a person who should be joined as plaintiff is omitted, defendant may demur, move in arrest of judgment, or sue out a writ of error, if the objection appears upon the pleadings.[61] And if it does not appear upon the pleadings but is disclosed on the trial plaintiff will be nonsuited.[62] In case of a defect of parties defendant, however, the objection can be taken by plea in abatement only. The objection cannot be raised by a motion for a nonsuit.[63] Under the provisions of some of the codes, where there is a defect of parties, either plaintiffs or defendants, the objection must be taken by demurrer if apparent on the face of the complaint, and by answer if it does not so appear, otherwise it will be deemed waived.[64]

e. Death or Disability of Party. Discontinuance on motion of a guardian of an insane person will be granted where plaintiff is placed under guardianship pending an action, and the probate court has decreed that his estate be administered in the insol-

13. OBJECTIONS RELATING TO PLEADINGS[67] — a. In General. Where the pleadings are so defective that they fail to state a cause of action against defendant, and the defects are such that they cannot be obviated by subsequent proceedings, a motion for a dismissal or nonsuit will be granted,[68] and the granting of such a motion is not a matter of discretion with the court but a legal right.[69] But a defendant cannot move for a dismissal or nonsuit for the mere insufficiency or uncertainty of the declaration or complaint,[70] where the defects may be obviated by vent course, under N. H. Comp. St. p. 159, § 30. Jones v. Jones, 45 N. H. 123.

66. Bauer v. Word, 135 Ala. 430, 33 So. 538, holding that the death of one of the parties pending suit, suggested on the record, is not ground for dismissing such suit before the expiration of twelve months from the date of the suggestion, within which time there could be a revivor of the suit.

Where a suit is partially abated by the death of one of the defendants, the other defendant cannot move to dismiss the bill, the proper course being to move that plaintiff do revive within a limited time. C.) 74, in which it was held that where a suit abates by the death of one of the defendants, the other defendant may move to dismiss for want of prosecution without moving that he revive; but if deceased defendant and the surviving defendant be both represented by the same solicitor the order may be to revive or that the bill be dismissed.

Failure to state cause of action against co-defendant.— When, in an action against two defendants, the complaint only states a cause of action against one of the defendants amendment,[71] or by giving leave to plead over,[72] or by allowing a continuance,[73] or where the defect may be cured by verdict,[74] or can be taken advantage of by answer, demurrer, motion in arrest of judgment, or objection to the admission of evidence.[75] The underlying principle as shown by the cases is: That if trial may be had on the merits of the case, and the defects in the pleading may be amended or cured by subsequent pleas or proceedings the action should not be dismissed.

b. Omission of Formal Requisites. The omission of formal requisites, such as signing and verifying a petition,[76] properly entitling papers in a cause (if it is apparent to what case they relate),[77] or stating separately and numbering distinct causes of action,[78] unless the omission is in disobedience of an order of the court,[79]

See 17 Cent. Dig. tit. "Dismissal and Nonsuit," §§ 134, 137; and, generally, PLEADING.

Defects apparent on the face of the declaration independent of any references to the writ or its services are not the subject of a motion to dismiss. Alexander v. School-Dist. No. 6, 62 Vt. 273, 19 Atl. 995.

Dismissing a suit for want of a declaration is error, where there is a declaration, on file and of record, to which a demurrer had been sustained on the ground that the facts stated were insufficient to maintain the action. Hower v. Lewton, 18 Fla. 328.

Under the Georgia practice a nonsuit takes place for failure to support the declaration by evidence, and want of necessary averments in a declaration is not cause for a nonsuit, but may be taken advantage of by a demurrer or motion ore tenus to dismiss. Anderson v. Pollard, 62 Ga. 46.

79. Refusal to obey an order of court to separately state and number different causes of action justifies a dismissal. Eisenhour v.

is not a ground for dismissal, although it may be ground for a motion to amend,[80] to make the pleading more specific,[81] or to strike it out.[82]

c. Delays or Omissions in Filing or Serving. Delay or omission in filing or serving pleadings within the time prescribed by statute, rules of practice, or order of court is usually a ground for dismissal or judgment as in case of a nonsuit or non prosequitur,[83] unless good cause for the default be shown.[84] But a failure to plead to special pleas is not ground for a nonsuit, where trial may be had on other issues pleaded.[85]

d. Variance. A material variance between the writ and declaration brought to the notice of the court by the pleading,[86] may be ground for motion to dis-

See 17 Cent. Dig. tit. "Dismissal and Nonsuit," § 135.

A failure to furnish defendant a copy of the complaint continuing for forty-nine days is an unreasonable delay in the prosecution of the action authorizing a dismissal thereof, on a failure to pay costs imposed as a condition of further prosecution. Ecles v. Debeand. 2 Code Rep. (N. Y.) 144.

Failing to reply to special plea of defendant at the return-term of the writ is not ground for nonsuit, although it may be if he fails to reply instanter at the succeeding term. Kain v. May, 5 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 368.

A rule of court prescribing dismissal unless the declaration be filed by the first day of the second term is not mandatory but is simply a privilege granted to defendant to have the case dismissed on motion. Ochus v. Sheldon, 12 Fla. 138.

Proceeding to trial against a substituted defendant on the original action without applying for or serving a supplemental complaint on him is good grounds for a dismissal or nonsuit. Wilson v. Lawrence, 8 Hun (N. Y.) 593.

Failure to amend within the time limited by order of court is ground for a motion to dismiss. Carr v. Moffat, 9 Can. L. J. N. S. 52. See also Chipman v. Cornwell, 111 Ga. 862, 36 S. E. 923.

In New York if a copy of the complaint is not served on defendant within twenty days after the first demand therefor, a motion to dismiss for want of service will be granted. Luce v. Trempert, 9 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 212. The rule laid down in Littlefield v. Murin, 4 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 306, 2 Code Rep. (N. Y.) 128, that the complaint should be served within a reasonable time after demand and that twenty-four hours would ordinarily be sufficient is no longer the law in this state.

In Wisconsin it is held that a discontinuance and not a nonsuit should be granted where plaintiff does not declare within the time prescribed by statute. Hiles v. McFarlane, 3 Pinn. (Wis.) 365, 4 Chandl. (Wis.) 89.

Necessity for notice of filing of answer.— Under the rules of practice in the District of Columbia plaintiff's failure to file general replications to defendants' answer within ten days after notice of the filing is not ground for dismissal unless defendants have given the ten days' notice, the ten days to be counted from the time of service of notice upon the plaintiff's solicitor. McIntosh v. Moulton, 3 MacArthur (D. C.) 587.

84. McCrory v. Boyd, 3 Stew. (Ala.) 279.

An omission to hold the court for any cause does not excuse a failure to file at that term pleadings which may be filed with the clerk. Downey v. Smith, 13 Ill. 671; Morrow v. Malone, 5 Sneed (Tenn.) 642.

85. McAden v. Gibson, 5 Ala. 341 (holding that where the general issue and special pleas are pleaded the fact that plaintiff refuses to reply further to the special pleas after a demurrer to his replication is sustained is not grounds for a nonsuit); Roberts v. Albright, 2 Greene (Iowa) 120.

86. Palmer v. Lesne, 3 Ala. 741, where it was held that if a variance between the writ and declaration is not brought to the notice

miss,[87] in the absence of a motion to amend.[88] And a material variance between the pleading and proof may also be ground for a motion to dismiss;[89] but not where defendant's counsel disclaims that he has been misled thereby.[90]

e. Prayer For Wrong Relief. A prayer for wrong relief is not ground for a dismissal or nonsuit, if plaintiff states a case entitling him to any relief, legal or equitable.[91]

f. Failure to File or Produce Obligations Sued on or Bill of Particulars. According to some decisions it is not sufficient ground for dismissal that plaintiff has failed to file with his declaration a copy of the obligation or record sued on.[92] In other cases it is held that where an instrument on which an action is founded is not filed and no reason is given for not filing it, unless it is alleged to be lost or destroyed, defendant may after answer move for a dismissal or require the party to file it.[93] Although there cannot be a dismissal on mere failure to file a bill of particulars where such particulars are given with abundant fulness in other matters of record,[94] a failure to file such a bill in disobedience of the court's order may be a ground therefor.[95]

14. WANT OF PROSECUTION — a. General Rule. An action may be dismissed or a nonsuit granted for the failure of plaintiff to prosecute it with due diligence,[96] of the court by the pleading, the court may grant a new trial for that cause, but cannot order a nonsuit or discontinuance.

87. Windett v. Hamilton, 52 Ill. 180; Schoonhoven v. Gott, 20 Ill. 46, 71 Am. Dec. 247 (material variance between names); Rogers v. Rogers, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 485. But see McKee v. Thompson, 1 Add. (Pa.) 24, where it was held that where the writ charged defendant personally, and the declaration charged him as executor, and alleged a submission by, and an award against, him, as executor, etc., and defendant pleaded to the issue, and the evidence supported the declaration, and the jury found against defendant as executor, such variance between the count and the writ was not a ground for nonsuit but for demurrer, plea in abatement, or motion in arrest of judgment.

defendants moves that an action be dismissed because of inexcusable neglect to prosecute, and the others were not notified, heard, or represented on the motion, the action can be dismissed only as to the moving defendant.[1]

b. Applications of Rule. Within the rule just stated, an action is properly dismissed for want of prosecution where there is no appearance by plaintiff or his counsel when his case is called in its order for trial;[2] where plaintiff fails to take any steps in the action for several years,[3] especially where younger issues have been tried in order during that time,[4] or where a cause is not brought to a hearing within forty days after the service of a notice requiring it to be done under the rule;[5] and leave to plaintiff to amend is no bar to granting defendant's motion to dismiss for lack of prosecution, made shortly thereafter.[6]

c. Excuses For Delay — (i) Impossibility of Trying Cause. Where it is impossible to try a cause in its regular order the action will not be dismissed for failure to proceed to trial.[7] And this is so, although the case had been noticed for trial.[8]

Question of due diligence one of fact to be shown by proper proof.— An action in the court below cannot be dismissed on motion of defendant, because of plaintiff's failure to prosecute and to enter continuances, where defendant has filed a plea and issue has been joined, although plaintiff fails to give notice of trial for sixteen years, there being no statute or rule of court having the force of a statute requiring a cause to be brought to trial within a given period, under the penalty of forfeiture of the right of further prosecution. Inference as to trial of younger issues.— Under Gen. Rule Pr. No. 36, providing that a motion to dismiss for failure to prosecute may be made after younger issues shall have been tried in regular order, where movant alleges that plaintiff has wholly failed to prosecute the action, and has taken no steps to bring the issues to trial, the court may infer that the younger issues have been tried. Discontinuance of summary proceeding notwithstanding stay law.— A summary proceeding by notice and motion will be discontinued, unless some action is had on the notice at the return-term, although the "stay-law" prohibits the rendition of judgment at that term; yet plaintiff may keep alive his notice by having it docketed according to the rule of practice adopted at this term or by some action of the court continuing its existence. Ex p. North-East, etc., R. (II) AGREEMENT TO SETTLE. An action will not be dismissed or a nonsuit granted for want of prosecution where the delay was caused by arrangements between the parties looking to a settlement,[9] or an agreement to arbitrate,[10] or a stipulation to submit the case to the court without a jury, for decision upon documents then on file.[11]

(III) AWAITING DECISION OF ANOTHER CASE. It is no excuse for delay in bringing on the trial of a cause at issue that another cause is pending, in which the same principles are involved and the decision of which might aid in the determination of the case at issue. The fact that defendant is the same in both cases is immaterial.[12] Where, however, it appears that a prior suit turning upon the same points has been tried and important questions of law were raised and exceptions taken on the trial, a judgment as in case of nonsuit will not be ordered for failure to proceed to trial, until such questions are determined by the supreme court.[13] So where one by order of the court and not upon his own motion is made a party defendant to an action and properly seeks to enforce certain rights therein, and subsequently for the protection of the same rights brings an action for their enforcement, the complaint in such second action should not be dismissed for failure to prosecute the same until the determination of the first action.[14]

(IV) DELAY OCCASIONED BY DEFENDANT'S FAULT OR WITH HIS CONSENT. It is error on the part of the court to allow the dismissal of a case for want of prosecution where the delay has been caused or acquiesced in by defendant,[15] or

Effect of defendant's offer to comply.— Where parties agree to dismiss an action if defendant will execute a mortgage to secure a balance due on the debt sued for after payment of a certain part of the debt, on offering to comply defendant is entitled to a dismissal, although plaintiff refuses to accept the mortgage. Necessity for filing agreement.— It is not an abuse of discretion for a court to dismiss an action for want of prosecution where it was dropped from the calendar nearly three years before by a verbal agreement between the attorneys, not authorized by defendant, to await the determination of another action; there being no agreement filed as provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 283. McLaughlin v. Clausen, 116 Cal. 487, 48 Pac. 487.

Trial prevented by entry of ne recipiatur.— A nonsuit for not proceeding to trial will not be allowed where defendant at the previous term had prevented a trial by entering where defendant has been equally negligent in the prosecution of a counter-claim interposed by him.[16]

(v) STAY OF ACTION. An action will not be dismissed for failure to proceed where such action is stayed by the acts of defendant,[17] as where defendant by injunction restrains plaintiff from proceeding in the suit,[18] or where the attorneys verbally arrange that a cause shall go over for the circuit.[19]

(vi) REFERENCE OF ACTION. In some jurisdictions the practice of moving for judgment as in case of nonsuit for delay in bringing the cause to trial applies only to the disposition of causes noticed and placed upon the calendar for trial and not to causes that have been referred;[20] and a nonsuit is not authorized because a party to a referred cause fails to appear before the referee,[21] or has unreasonably neglected to proceed in the cause.[22] In other jurisdictions the reference of an action for trial and judgment does not deprive the court of the power to order its dismissal for want of diligence in its prosecution before the referee.[23]

(vii) DEATH OF PARTY. In some jurisdictions[24] a judgment dismissing an action for want of prosecution is not void, although made after the death of plaintiff and without the substitution of his personal representative.[25]

The stay of proceedings remained in force for thirteen years without anything being done to vacate it, when it was vacated by consent, and the case was placed on the general calendar, and when reached was marked "Generally reserved." It was held that an order dismissing the complaint was properly granted for unreasonable neglect of plaintiff to proceed with the trial.

Anderson v. Cary, 89 Ga. 258, 15 S. E. 309.

Discretion of court in case of death before expiration of time to answer interrogatories.

(VIII) OTHER EXCUSES. The following have also been held sufficient excuses for failure to prosecute: Sickness;[26] that plaintiff acted under mistake of law or was misled by defendant's action;[27] want of notice as to time of giving deposition;[28] absence of counsel justified by state of the country;[29] prevalence of epidemic interrupting business generally;[30] sickness of attorney and counsel coming too late to employ others;[31] want of papers honestly expected;[32] facts beyond plaintiff's control preventing performance of stipulation as to time of trial;[33] and good reason to believe that he cannot have a fair trial by an impartial jury.[34] But the fact that the cause is one in which a public officer is concerned affords no excuse for failure to go to trial according to notice, and no reason for refusing judgment of nonsuit, it being the duty of public officers to provide other counsel when they cannot themselves attend.[35]

d. Rule or Notice to Plaintiff to Proceed. It is the general practice that the service of a rule or notice to plaintiff to proceed in the cause, or as it is sometimes called a rule to speed the cause, must precede the motion to dismiss for want of prosecution.[36]

e. Duty of Defendant to Notice Cause For Trial. Under a rule of court providing that whenever an issue of fact has been joined and plaintiff fails to bring the same to trial according to the course and practice of the court, defendant may at any time after younger issues have been tried in their regular order move for dismissal, it is not a prerequisite to this right that he should put the cause on the calendar,[37] or even notice the cause for trial.[38] Nevertheless the fact that defendant notices the cause for trial, the same not having been placed on the calendar, does not waive his right to move for a dismissal.[39] Where this rule does not prevail the proper mode of proceeding on defendant's part, if he would expedite the Remedy is by forcing plaintiff to trial.— Where sufficient diligence is not being used by plaintiffs to bring a suit to trial, but they duly appear to represent their cause, defendant's remedy is to force them to trial, and not to have the suit dismissed for want of prosecution. Where there is but one defendant.— It has been held that in actions where there is but one defendant his only remedy for the failure of plaintiff to bring the cause to trial is to notice it for trial on his part, and take judgment for dismissal if plaintiff fails to appear when called. determination of the cause, is to set it down for trial on his own notice. Then if plaintiff does not choose to try it defendant may move for a dismissal.[40]

15. Neglect to Enter Judgment. Neglect by the party entitled to judgment to demand and have the same entered within a certain time is by statute made a ground for dismissal in some jurisdictions.[41]

16. Other Grounds. It is not a ground for dismissal that a suit was brought in violation of an agreement to give time,[42] that the pleadings admit a set-off in defendant's favor exceeding plaintiff's claim, as shown by his own evidence,[43] or that a demand sued on has been paid off.[44] So where defendant made affidavit that the justice was a material witness and moved for a nonsuit, and plaintiff asked that the statement of the justice might be received as legal evidence, to which defendant refused to accede, it is error to nonsuit plaintiff.[45] When plaintiff accepted a tender, but did not apprise defendant of his intention to abandon the litigation, it was held to be the proper practice for the latter, when the case was called for trial, to move for a dismissal.[46]

Renewal of motion.— A mere motion to dismiss, made at the close of a case, without stating that it is a renewal of a motion previously made on specific grounds, and without claiming that such grounds are still tenable, fails to specify any defect in the proof and is not available on appeal. Lanahan v. Henry opposite party may be particularly directed to the supposed defects.[49] The specific defects sought to be availed of must be pointed out.[50] And no others than those specified will be considered.[51] But if two grounds are stated disjunctively, one of which is good and the other bad, it is error to refuse a dismissal.[52] It is not necessary, however, that a motion for nonsuit should show what the cause of action is.[53] Nor need any specific reference to the writ be made as in a plea in abatement.[54] A motion should not ask to discontinue as to a part of an entire cause of action.[55]

b. Time of Making. A motion to dismiss for want of jurisdiction of the subject-matter may be made at any time before final judgment or decree.[56] But all motions to dismiss for grounds which might be the basis of dilatory pleas must be made within the time allowed for the filing of that class of pleas.[57] Defendant's rights are not enlarged by filing a motion instead of a plea;[58] and the limitations as to time which apply to one mode of taking advantage of error should equally apply to the other.[59] Accordingly motions to dismiss for want of process or service or defects therein must be made within the time allowed for filing pleas in abatement,[60] and cannot be made after pleading to the merits.[61] And a motion to dismiss for want of authority to sue after pleading to the merits is also too late,

Where two grounds of dismissal are contained in the same sentence, but disjunctively, one bad and the other good, a refusal to dismiss the complaint is error, although the good ground was stated in very general terms. Goodrich v. Sweeny, 36 N. Y. Super. Ct. 320.

Extension of time by order.— An order of court after return of summons to a defendant that no default should be entered until further notice extends the time within which he might file a motion to dismiss and excuses the defendant from making a motion within the time required for entering appearances, as provided by statute. Ricker v. Gerrish, 124 Mass. 367.

Under the New York statutes and rules of court which provide that if after issue of fact has been joined plaintiff neglects to bring the case to trial defendant may move for an order dismissing the complaint, the motion must be made promptly after default or it will be waived. unless some excuse is shown for the delay.[62] Wherever the motion is filed within the time allowed for filing a plea in abatement or other dilatory plea it will be in time.[63] After a cause has been remanded from an appellate court pleas in bar pending and undisposed of must be disposed of before a motion to dismiss will be considered.[64]

c. Notice of Motion. Notice of motion for dismissal or nonsuit must always be given when required by statute or rule of court.[65] And irrespective of any statutory requirement it has been held that notice must be given of a motion to dismiss for want of prosecution.[66] On the other hand no formal notice need be given of a motion to dismiss for failure of the complaint to state a cause of action,[67] of a motion by an amicus curiæ to dismiss on the ground that the action is fictitious,[68] or of a motion to dismiss for want of equity, made at the hearing.[69] It has been held that a mistake in entitling the notice will not vitiate it if the affidavit annexed thereto is rightly entitled.[70] And the fact that the notice was for judgment of non prosequitur instead of nonsuit may be disregarded, where the papers showed that the latter must be the true object of the motion.[71] Notice by mail is insufficient.[72] Where the attorney of record in a suit affecting land lives in another state, service of notice on him at his residence will be sufficient.[73]

d. Renewal of Motion. A motion for a nonsuit, although overruled, may be renewed at a subsequent term,[74] upon leave of court,[75] and such a motion may also, it has been held, be renewed on appeal.[76]

2. Hearing and Determination — a. Discretion of Court. Except where the right to a dismissal or nonsuit is absolute, the court is vested with a large discretion, and its action in regard to an application for dismissal or nonsuit will not be disturbed unless there has been an abuse of such discretion.[77]

b. Questions Considered. Only a judgment of dismissal can be founded upon a motion to dismiss.[78] An issue of fact cannot be adjudicated on a motion to

78. Roy v. Thompson, 8 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 253, holding that where defendant claims affirmative relief, legal or equitable, the duty of an actor in bringing the cause to trial devolves upon him; and that he can only obtain the relief when the cause is brought dismiss.[79] Nor can that which goes to the whole merits of the action be tried on a motion to dismiss.[80] Errors in admitting evidence cannot be reviewed on a motion for nonsuit.[81] After a declaration has been amended, a motion to dismiss the action raises no question as to the right to amend, but only concerns the sufficiency of the declaration as amended.[82] When a case is submitted to the court for judgment on the pleadings and the court dismisses the action, plaintiff cannot complain because the court did not consider a demurrer filed by defendant with his answer.[83]

c. Evidence. If a motion to dismiss is based on the insufficiency of the complaint to state a cause of action, it will not be allowed unless the facts on which it was founded are apparent on the record.[84] But if any part of the ground of motion consists of an affirmative fact not apparent on the face of the proceedings, there must be an affidavit or other competent evidence of its existence.[85] For the purpose of ascertaining its jurisdiction by service by publication, the court may hear evidence on a motion to dismiss.[86] On a motion to dismiss a complaint for want of jurisdiction, the reasons for retaining jurisdiction may be set forth in opposing affidavits by defendant.[87] Proof to sustain a motion for discontinuance, on the ground that one of the defendants had settled plaintiff's claim, must be such as would be sufficient to sustain a plea of puis darrein continuance or a supplemental answer.[88] On a showing[89] that a suit is being prosecuted without plaintiff's knowledge and authority, suit should be dismissed, unless the attorney discloses who his client is and that he has a beneficial interest.[90]

3. Judgment or Order — a. Nature — (i) Absolute or Without Prejudice. Where the dismissal is based on some ground not going to the merits, a decree or order cannot be made precluding the party from again litigating a question touching the merits.[91] The dismissal should be without prejudice when based on a defect of parties,[92] on improper joinder of several causes of action against several defendants,[93] or on the fact that plaintiff is a public enemy;[94] where a joint action is improperly brought to recover damages for which the several plaintiffs may maintain separate actions;[95] where the court is without jurisdiction to entertain the suit;[96] where relief is sought on the mistaken assumption of a fact which does not exist, but which is the only ground relied on;[97] where the defense that an action is brought in bad faith and in fraud of another's rights is set up and established;[98] where plaintiff fails to appear, and defendant does not file a counterclaim or set-off;[99] where a case is regularly called for trial and plaintiff refuses to proceed with the trial;[1] where a demurrer to the petition is sustained;[2] where the court has sustained a demurrer to the evidence and overruled a motion for a new trial;[3] or (under a statute expressly so providing) where plaintiff does not prove his cause of action.[4] Where, however, the case made by plaintiff's pleading shows no cause of action and plaintiff does not or cannot amend, the dismissal should be absolute.[5] If the dismissal is absolute where it should be without prejudice, the judgment will be corrected on appeal,[6] even though the complainant does not urge the error.[7]

(II) CONDITIONAL. The court may make a dismissal or nonsuit conditional on plaintiff's non-compliance with the terms imposed by its order.[8] Thus the court may instead of dismissing give plaintiff an opportunity to bring his case to trial at a subsequent term, on penalty of dismissal for failure to do so,[9] and may make a dismissal conditional on his refusal to stipulate to pay costs.[10] So where several causes between the same parties and involving the same subject-matter are pending, and plaintiff is nonsuited as to one and refuses to try the others, defendants are entitled to judgment as in case of nonsuit, unless plaintiff stipulates that the causes remaining shall abide the event of the one tried.[11] The conditions so imposed must be strictly complied with,[12] and on failure to do so defendant is entitled to a judgment as in case of nonsuit, non prosequitur, or dismissal,[13] unless plaintiff shows a good excuse for non-compliance.[14] Defendant is not bound to accept a second stipulation to try, although furnished with an excuse by plaintiff; but he may proceed and apply for judgment as in case of nonsuit,[15] which will be granted, unless plaintiff stipulate anew and pay costs.[16] The court may of its own motion dismiss upon non-compliance with such terms,[17] and a decree that unless the complainant amends within a certain time his bill shall be dismissed has been held to operate as a dismissal unless the conditions are complied with.[18]

b. Form. Where a complaint is not in fact dismissed on the merits, judgment should not be entered that it is dismissed "on the merits,"[19] and a dismissal which is not on the merits is usually treated as being without prejudice although not so stated in the order.[20] An order striking a cause from the docket on motion may be regarded as a discontinuance thereof; but on reservation of the right to reinstate the case, should not be construed a dismissal or discontinuance.[21] A judgment or order of dismissal should as a rule state the reasons on which it is founded.[22] The court is not, however, bound to answer specific points raised by counsel, if it grants a nonsuit.[23] Where an action was dismissed for want of prosecution it does not render the judgment of dismissal invalid that no entry was made that plaintiff was called and did not appear.[24] Where defendant moves for a dismissal of an action on the ground of unreasonable neglect to prosecute, and plaintiff objects to the sufficiency of the motion, and submits affidavits in opposition to it, plaintiff is entitled to have his objection and affidavits recited in the order granting defendant's motion.[25] Where a judgment of dismissal failed to include a judgment for costs properly chargeable to plaintiff, the court may cause costs to be included by a nunc pro tunc order made at the same term.[26]

prosequitur or dismissal at the regular time, he may do so afterward by obtaining leave from the court for that purpose.[27] Where a judgment of dismissal for failure to comply with a rule for costs is insufficient as originally entered by the clerk, he has authority during the term to correct the defect and enter a proper judgment.[28]

K. Matters Working Discontinuance by Operation of Law — 1. Omissions or Irregularities in Proceedings. The following omissions or irregularities in the proceedings, it has been held, will not by operation of law work a discontinuance of the case: Failure of the clerk to docket a case;[29] omission of court or counsel to have a cause docketed and called for trial;[30] entry of default after plea of the general issue, where no similiter is on the record;[31] withdrawal of counsel from a case called for trial;[32] change of the terms of court without provision as to cases pending;[33] failure to hold a term of court;[34] failure of a judge to attend a regular term;[35] failure of the court to meet on the day to which it is adjourned;[36] and the illegal discharge by the court of a jury.[37] So it has been held that an action begun by capias is not discontinued by issuing a summons in the same case after it went into effect.[38] A case may, however, be stricken from the trial calendar because the entries of the clerk show that no issue remains for trial.[39]

2. Failure to Renew Process. Where it has been impossible to obtain service of process on a defendant, or it has proved ineffectual to bring him into court, failure to renew the process from time to time until service be obtained will work a discontinuance as to defendant not served,[40] but not as to defendants who have been properly served.[41]

the failure to enter a formal continuance will not work a discontinuance of a suit,[43] nor will the failure for a number of years to make any entry in a cause save regular continuances at each term.[44] According to other decisions, however, a suit may be discontinued by want of proceeding in the cause,[45] or by the continuance of a suit from term to term without the consent of defendant or other just cause.[46] An action is in effect dismissed by the court where plaintiff's attorneys withdraw their appearance and defendant has plaintiff called and defaulted.[47]

4. Irregularities in Pleading. The fact that a plaintiff demurs to a plea which is defective as being an answer to only a part of the declaration instead of taking judgment for the part unanswered will not as a rule operate as a discontinuance,[48] especially where there are other pleas which answer the whole declaration;[49] nor does a plaintiff discontinue his action by filing one demurrer to pleas in abatement and subsequent pleas;[50] nor does a failure to comply with an order of court directing a party to amend before the first day of the next term or the case to be dismissed operate as a dismissal of the cause.[51] If, however, the plea begins as an answer to but part and in truth answers only part, and plaintiff replies or demurs, the whole action is discontinued.[52] Declining to take issue on pleas which present a full defense to the action will amount to a discontinuance,[53] as will a refusal to join in demurrer when a defendant pleads the general issue in a defaulted action, by no means puts an end to it; and such actions may always be brought forward." Taft v. Northern Transp. Co., 56 N. H. 414, 416.

Failure to announce ready or move to continue.— Under the twenty-second rule of the superior court, when a case is called for trial the parties shall immediately announce "ready," or move to continue, and if five minutes elapse before the announcement or motion to continue plaintiff's case will be dismissed or defendant's plea stricken. Failure to take any steps toward maturing a cause.— The failure of plaintiff to take any steps toward maturing a cause against defendant beyond the entrance of a common order for eleven years, there not being during that period even an order of continuance, and no appearance for some years of the case on the docket of the court is a discontinuance of the cause. and files a demurrer.[54] Neglect to file a declaration within the time prescribed by law after the return of the writ also amounts to a discontinuance.[55]

5. Dismissal or Setting Aside of Process. A suit is not discontinued by setting aside the service of the summons,[56] or by an order requiring a new citation because of informality in the original citation;[57] and a dismissal of the bail process by the party is not a dismissal of the suit.[58] Where, however, it is provided by statute that if the court refuse to grant an order of attachment the action shall be dismissed without prejudice to a future action, if the attachment fails, the action fails with it.[59]

6. Removal of Cause. Removal of a cause to a federal court which declines to take jurisdiction and remands the cause does not operate as a discontinuance of the cause.[60]

7. Dismissal or Discontinuance Against Some of Co-Defendants.[61] A continuance of a cause as to one or more of several defendants works a discontinuance of the whole cause.[62] If process is served on only one of two joint defendants, no discontinuance as to the party not served need be entered.[63] A dismissal as to one defendant is also effected, where all the defendants against whom a judgment is rendered, except such defendant, appeal, and plaintiff proceeds to trial in the appellate court without bringing in such defendant;[64] where a declaration is filed against only one of several defendants, pursuant to leave of court to amend after sustaining a demurrer to the original declaration;[65] where, on the second trial of a case, a motion is made by plaintiff to amend the complaint, striking out all allegations making one defendant a party, and presenting issues as to him;[66] where one of the defendants in a joint action confesses judgment, and plaintiff accepts the confession and takes judgment against him separately,[67] where one defendant, in pursuance of a settlement, assigns his interest to complainant and permits the bill to be taken as confessed;[68] where plaintiff does not insist on service of a citation on one of several defendants and proceeds to trial against the others,[69] or where process not being served on one of several defendants, the record recites that those served, naming them, appeared, whereupon came a jury who joined for plaintiff without naming defendants.[70] So where, in an action commenced by attachment against certain persons by name, who are described in the affidavit and writ as constituting a private corporation and who are so named and described as defendants in the margin of the complaint, the complaint declares against the corporation, describing it as composed of the persons so named, the filing and going to trial on such complaint without objection operates as a discontinuance of the action against the individuals, and converts it into an action against the corporation as sole defendant.[71]

L. Discontinuance or Nonsuit on Court's Own Motion. The court may in many instances order a nonsuit or dismiss an action on its own motion,[72] even though it has previously refused a motion for nonsuit by defendant.[73] But where it has jurisdiction of the subject-matter and the parties, and the issues are tried without objection, it will not on its own motion raise objections to its jurisdiction;[74] and where a statute specifies the grounds for nonsuit a court cannot order a nonsuit for other reasons or without complying with the statutory provisions.[75] Nor can a court on its own motion dismiss or nonsuit a case after a plea of set-off has been filed.[76] It is also error for the court to dismiss on its own motion an action because prematurely brought.[77]

M. Operation and Effect — 1. In General. Where a suit is dismissed or a nonsuit ordered, the parties are out of court,[78] and all further proceedings are unauthorized,[79] until the judgment of dismissal or nonsuit is vacated and the cause reinstated.[80] In so far as the particular action is concerned it is the same as a judgment for defendant on the merits,[81] and in order to sustain a judgment subsequent to the dismissal the record must show such vacation or such acts of the parties as evince a design to have the cause heard and determined without regard to former proceedings.[82]

2. Effect on Intervention, Cross Complaint, or Counter-Claim. According to some decisions the dismissal on motion of defendant of the main action carries with it the dismissal of an intervention or cross petition filed in the case.[83] According to others if there is an intervener who claims an interest in the matter in dispute adverse to both plaintiff and defendant, and they answer the intervention, raising material issues, and on motion of defendant the court nonsuits plaintiff, the action is still pending as to the issues raised on the intervention, and the court should proceed and try them.[84] So also where plaintiff is nonsuited after filing an answer to a cross complaint, although he can have no relief on account of matters alleged in his complaint, defendant is entitled to have the issues made by his cross complaint and the answer thereto tried and disposed of.[85]

3. Enforcement of Order. If a court orders a nonsuit it is its duty to enforce such order.[86]

tinuance, plaintiff's remedy is by petition for trial and not by motion to reinstate.[91]

2. Discretion of Court. A motion to set aside a nonsuit or judgment of dismissal and reinstate the case, being usually considered as in the nature of a motion for reconsideration,[92] is addressed to and rests in the discretion of the court[93] before whom the case was heard and by whom it was dismissed or the nonsuit granted,[94] and such discretion will not be controlled unless manifestly abused.[95] Where, however, plaintiff's action is dismissed, but the case is continued as to defendant's counter-claim, the court has no authority at a subsequent term before the issues raised by the counter-claim have been tried to reinstate plaintiff's action upon motion.[96]

3. Time For Setting Aside and Reinstatement. It is competent for a court to reinstate a case during the same term at which it was dismissed.[97] But in accordance with the rule limiting the power of the court over their judgments rendered to the duration of the term at which they are entered[98] the court ordinarily has no power to set aside a dismissal or nonsuit and reinstate the cause at a subsequent term.[99] It has been so held where the cause is dismissed for failure of the complaint to state a cause of action,[1] or for want of prosecution.[2] Limitations of the rule, however, have been recognized. Thus a suit dismissed for want of prosecution may be reinstated at a subsequent term by consent of parties;[3] and one who is a necessary party but is not made a party may as a matter of right move at a subsequent term to set aside a dismissal.[4] So if the court dismisses a suit which it is incompetent to try, it may be reinstated on motion of plaintiff at a subsequent term.[5] It has also been held that where plaintiff dies before suit is dismissed, a motion at the succeeding term of court is the proper proceeding to have it reinstated.[6] In any event, however, a delay until a subsequent term before moving to reinstate is good ground for a court to refuse to set aside a dismissal and reinstate the case, in the absence of a good excuse for the delay.[7] If a statute requires a motion to reinstate within a year after dismissal, a motion not made within that time will not be entertained.[8]

4. Notice of Motion. While according to some decisions the setting aside of a dismissal or nonsuit at the same term at which entered, being within the discretion of the court, it may act on plaintiff's motion without notice to defendant or without requiring him to show cause against it,[9] the weight of authority is that under any circumstances notice must be given so that defendant may have an opportunity to be heard.[10] And in the absence of a showing to the contrary, it may be presumed that defendant had notice of an order setting aside a judgment of dismissal.[11]

Effect of entry of notice of motion to set aside.— When notice of motion to set aside a judgment of nonsuit is merely entered on the docket, but neither acted on nor called to the attention of the court, a general order that all motions be continued does not continue the motion, so as to authorize the setting aside of the judgment at a subsequent term. where a suit is meritorious and it appears that plaintiff was not culpably negligent,[12] and no injury results to defendant,[13] and it will not require so strong a ground to set aside a nonsuit as to grant a new trial.[14] Thus a cause may be reinstated where there has been surprise,[15] improvident consent to dismissal by attorney,[16] or failure to give bond for costs through ignorance that it would be required;[17] and where defendant has waived service of process, and afterward had the case dismissed for want of service, the court will reinstate the case on being informed of the waiver.[18] So it has been held that where a cause is dismissed for failure of the justice to send up a transcript of the proceedings, the dismissal will be set aside, where the justice makes affidavit that he had sent up the transcript and the affidavit is not controverted.[19] On the other hand the fact that a nonsuit is based on an untenable ground is not a ground to set it aside, if it appears from the facts that there were sufficient reasons for granting it.[20] And a nonsuit will not be set aside where it will serve no good purpose to do so.[21] So a nonsuit granted after evidence given on both sides will not be set aside for that cause alone,[22] on the ground that the judge received evidence prematurely or refused to submit to the jury a question of fact proper for their determination,[23] because he refused to grant an amendment of a declaration,[24] or because plaintiff tried his case on a wrong theory.[25] Granting or refusing a commission is within the discretion of the court, and unless arbitrarily granted or refused is no ground for setting aside a judgment of nonsuit.[26] And the fact that the case was dismissed contrary to agreement is not sufficient where it is not shown that the agreement was one between the parties to the action.[27]

Necessity for showing of meritorious defense.— An affidavit in support of a motion to set aside an order of dismissal and reinstate the cause, which shows negligence on the part of the applicant, and states that there is a full and complete defense to the suit, but does not show by facts stated that there is a meritorious defense, is insufficient. Bigelow v. Kewanee, 17 Ill. App. 631.

action cannot be tried on affidavits in support of a motion to set it aside.[37] Nor on such a motion will the court take notice of objections to the sufficiency of the declaration.[38] On a motion to set aside a nonsuit, a defendant may object because of the loss of a note declared on, being a note payable to bearer, as an answer to the motion, although at nisi prius no such objection was taken, and defendant then set up a defense on the merits, by showing a want of consideration.[39]

7. Imposition of Terms. A court in passing upon an application to set aside a dismissal or nonsuit and reinstate a cause may in its discretion impose reasonable terms as a condition of allowing the same,[40] the most usual being the payment of costs,[41] and the court may also require plaintiff to indemnify defendant, so far as possible, for expenses incurred in the preparation of the trial of the case when regularly called.[42] Whatever conditions are imposed in a reasonable exercise of judicial discretion in setting aside the judgment of nonsuit must be submitted to; but when these conditions are complied with immunity against the judgment exists for all purposes.[43]

8. The Order. A case dismissed cannot be reinstated on the docket by a mere ex parte order.[44] Where a motion for a reconsideration of the judgment of dismissal is granted, and defendant then interposes a further defense, the granting of such motion is equivalent to setting aside the judgment of dismissal.[45] Where a judgment containing an order dismissing as to two of the defendants gave judgment by default against the third, an order granting a motion to set aside the judgment does not reach the order of dismissal.[46] When setting aside a nonsuit improvidently moved for and granted, the court may not, in the absence of the other party, order on the trial at the same term.[47]

Contradictory affidavits.— Where such affidavits are contradictory, the court giving preference to those of one party instead of the other cannot be held error. Boyle v. Levi, 73 Ill. 175. Nor will it be an abuse of discretion to refuse to set aside a dismissal for failure to file an amended complaint within the required time, where the affidavits of the attorneys as to the existence of an oral stipulation for the extension of the time to file the complaint are contradictory. Payment not a condition precedent.— Where a nonsuit is ordered to be set aside upon payment of costs, the payment is not a condition precedent to be performed before the full operation of the order. Dana v. Gill, 5 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 242, 20 Am. Dec. 255. See also Hall v. Mackay, 78 Tex. 248, 250, 14 S. W. 615, holding that after the dismissal of a cause, an entry that "said cause be reinstated on the docket upon the condition of plaintiff paying all costs accrued in said cause" does not require such payment as a condition precedent to the reinstatement.

Imposition of terms where United States is plaintiff.— Where a suit brought by the United States is dismissed because plaintiff's attorney is not ready for trial, and makes no showing for a continuance, it is error to impose upon plaintiff, as a condition to its reinstatement, the payment of costs and an attorney's fee, in the absence of a statute authorizing the same. 9. Waiver of Objections. An exception to the reinstatement of a cause is waived where both parties waive jury, and submit the cause to the court for trial.[48] So the technical error of setting aside a judgment of dismissal without notice to defendant may be waived where the counsel for plaintiff appear to the motion and are heard,[49] or by permitting defendant to be heard upon a motion to reinstate the judgment.[50]

10. Operation and Effect. Where a cause which had been dismissed is reinstated, it stands as if it had never been dismissed,[51] but it cannot be reinstated by subsequent inadvertent signature.[52] So where an order of dismissal has been entered, but is afterward at the same term set aside, and the cause continued for a further hearing, the court does not thereby lose jurisdiction of the parties.[53] The fact that the court has reinstated on the docket a case which has been dismissed does not, however, prevent defendant from pleading and proving on the trial an alleged agreement and settlement, in pursuance of which the case was to be dismissed, and that the entry of dismissal was in fact made in accordance with such contract.[54]

C. Curing or Waiving Discontinuance. The appearance of a party after verdict waives a discontinuance.[55] And a discontinuance caused by plaintiff's failure to take judgment on unanswered counts of his declaration is cured after verdict by the statute of jeofails.[56] So a discontinuance is waived where defendant appears and consents to a continuance after the cause has been discontinued.[57] A motion for a nonsuit for the non-appearance of plaintiff will not be granted if he appears pending the motion.[58]

I. THE OFFENSE.

A. In General. In its broad sense the term "disorderly conduct" embraces certain minor offenses[1] which are usually defined by statute and consist of dis-

1. See Frankfurter v. Bryan, 12 Ill. App. 549; State v. Jersey City, 25 N. J. L. 536, 541; Matter of Miller, 1 Daly (N. Y.) 562, 19 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 394; People v. State Reformatory, 38 Misc. (N. Y.) 233, 77 N. Y. Suppl. 145; In re Newkirk, 37 Misc. (N. Y.) 404, 75 N. Y. Suppl. 777; Matter of McMahon, 64 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 285; State v. Sherrard, 117 N. C. 716, 23 N. E. 157.

"Any conduct which is contrary to law" may be considered as disorderly conduct. State v. Jersey City, 25 N. J. L. 536, 541 [quoted in Pratt v. Brown, 80 Tex. 608, 614, 16 S. W. 443].

The mere phrase "disorderly conduct," standing alone, without a statement of the particular acts constituting the offense, has no legal meaning and does not state the commission of any criminal act. People v. State Reformatory, 38 Misc. (N. Y.) 233, 77 N. Y. Suppl. 145.

The provisions of the N. Y. Consol Act, §§ 1448, 1458, 1459, 1461, which refer to disorderly conduct do not create or define any new offense, but only refer to the common-law offense of breach of the peace. People v. State Reformatory, 38 Misc. (N. Y.) 233, 77 N. Y. Suppl. 145.

The New York act of 1860, declaring certain acts to be disorderly conduct (Laws (1860), p. 1013), does not repeal or supersede the act of 1833, chapter 11, which provides that any conduct which in the opinion of the magistrate tends to a breach of the peace may be punished as disorderly conduct. Matter of Miller, 1 Daly (N. Y.) 562, 19 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 394.

The statutes now in force in England providing for the arrest and punishment for persons charged with idleness and disorderly conduct, vagrancy, etc., are 5 Geo. IV, c. 83, passed in 1824, and the amendatory acts of 1 & 2 Vict. p. 38; 31 & 32 Vict. p. 52; and 32 & 33 Vict. p. 99. 5 Geo. IV, p. 83, was a revision of preëxisting statutes upon the subject and would seem to have furnished a general outline for legislation of the same class in this country. See Stoutenburgh v. Frazier, 16 App. Cas. (D. C.) 229, 48 L. R. A. 220.

At common law any conduct tending to cause or provoke a breach of the peace or to disturb the peace and quiet of communities or to corrupt the morals of the people is indictable as a public offense. People v. State Reformatory, 38 Misc. (N. Y.) 233, 77 N. Y.

turbance of the peace and quiet of the public or communities, or families or a class of persons, or conduct which tends to cause or provoke a breach of the peace or corrupt public morals. A wilful or unlawful purpose is not an element of the offense, unless made so by statute.[2] In common parlance, a person guilty of disorderly conduct may be said to be a disorderly person;[3] but where statutes define "a disorderly person" and distinguish acts which may constitute the offense of disorderly conduct, the distinction is to be preserved and the different provisions relative to the different offenses particularly followed.[4]

B. Brawling and Quarreling. Quarreling, brawling, or railing in public is an offense punishable in some jurisdictions as disorderly conduct.[5]

C. Disturbance of Public. To constitute a disturbance of the peace the conduct must tend to or in fact annoy or disturb the community or neighborhood, or the citizens generally or such of them as are present, or it must amount Suppl. 145; State v. Graham, 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 134.

Necessarily one who commits a breach of the peace is guilty of disorderly conduct, but all disorderly conduct is not necessarily a breach of the peace, as where it is merely calculated to disturb or annoy. Mt. Sterling v. Holly, 108 Ky. 621, 57 S. W. 491, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 358. Among acts which have been held to constitute disorderly conduct are: Making noises, exclamations, and outcries in the public street by which people are drawn together and the highway obstructed (Com. v. Spratt, 14 Phila. (Pa.) 365. And see Rex v. Smith, 1 Str. 704; Hall's Case, 1 Vent. 169); reveling or behaving in a boisterous manner (In re Began, 12 R. I. 309); calling a non-union workman a scab during a period of public excitement (Com. v. Redshaw, 2 Pa. Dist. 96, 12 Pa. Co. Ct. 91); riotously raising a pole in a public street (Com. v. Morrison, Add. (Pa.) 274); exhibiting an effigy calculated to provoke a breach of the peace (Com. v. Haines, 4 Pa. L. J. Rep. 17, 6 Pa. L. J. 239); depositing an irritant substance so that one may apply it to his person (People v. Blake, 1 Wheel. Cr. (N. Y.) 490); purposely driving a heavily loaded wagon over a water hose in use by firemen at a fire (Com. v. Moore, 21 Pa. Co. Ct. 321); and the act of an innkeeper in refusing to entertain a traveler (4 Blackstone Comm. 168).

Drunkenness in a public place is per se "disorderly conduct" within the meaning of article 363 of the code of criminal procedure. Pratt v. Brown, 80 Tex. 608, 614, 16 S. W. 433.

2. See Watson v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1899) 50 S. W. 340; Grand Rapids v. Williams, 112 Mich. 247, 70 N. W. 547, 67 Am. St. Rep. 396, 36 L. R. A. 137. See also Philadelphia v. Wards, 1 Phila. (Pa.) 517, where a conviction for discharging a firearm in a city was held to be no violation of an ordinance forbidding the discharge of firearms "wantonly and without reasonable cause."

3. Disorderly persons are a class of persons designated in statutes which provide for their punishment. Bouvier L. Dict. See also In re Stegenga, (Mich. 1903) 94 N. W. 385; People v. Kelly, 99 Mich. 82, 57 N. W. 1090; Matter of Miller, 1 Daly (N. Y.) 562, 19 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 394; People v. State Reformatory, 38 Misc. (N. Y.) 233, 77 N. Y. Suppl. 145 In re Newkirk, 37 Misc. (N. Y.) 404, 75 N. Y. Suppl. 777. In Aldermen's Cases, 2 Pars. Eq. Cas. (Pa.) 458, 465, it is said: "The term 'disorderly' is certainly very extensive in its signification, and all who violate the peace and good order of society are liable to be punished, either as vagrants, disorderly persons, or for a breach of the public peace."

In New Jersey "all persons who shall use or pretend to use or have any skill in physiognomy, palmistry or like crafty science . . . shall be deemed and adjudged to be disorderly persons." See State v. Kenilworth, 69 N. J. L. 244, 54 Atl. 244.

St. 17 Geo. II, c. 5, provided for the punishment among others of disorderly persons.

One who loiters about the streets and barrooms in idleness without apparent habitation and without any means of support is a disorderly person within the common-law definition. In re Stegenga, (Mich. 1903) 94 N. W. 385.

The keeper of a saloon to which persons resort for the purpose of playing pool and bagatelle, somtimes for drinks and at other times on terms that the defeated party pay for the use of the gaming apparatus, is a disorderly person. People v. Cutler, 28 Hun (N. Y.) 465, 1 N. Y. Cr. 178.

4. Matter of Miller, 1 Daly (N. Y.) 562, 19 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 394.

5. Cook v. Carrollton, 92 Ga. 558, 17 S. E. 861; State v. Rollins, 55 N. H. 101; State v. Perkins, 42 N. H. 464. See Jacksonville v. Headen, 48 Ill. App. 60.

Habitual use of opprobrious language.— One who in his own dwelling-house is in the habit of using loud and vile language, consisting of opprobrious epithets and exclamations, in such a manner as to attract crowds of persons passing and living in the neighborhood, on Sundays as well as other days, and in the night as well as in the daytime, is within a statute punishing the offense of being a common railer and brawler. Com. v. Foley, 99 Mass. 497.

The use of vituperative and threatening words, not profane, in an ordinary tone of voice, to one who does not reply, is insufficient to a nuisance.[6] It is not necessary, however, that every person in the neighborhood or community should be disturbed.[7] In determining whether there has been a disturbance by the use of inhibited language regard must be had to the persons by and to whom the language was uttered, its character, and the occasion.[8]

D. Offensive Language In or Near Dwelling — 1. In General. In some of the states enactments exist which provide for the punishment of persons who enter into or go sufficiently near the dwelling of another, and use insulting, abusive, or vulgar language in the presence of the family of the occupant or any to authorize a conviction for quarreling, cursing, and acting otherwise in a disorderly manner. Carr v. Conyers, 84 Ga. 287, 10 S. E. 630, 20 Am. St. Rep. 357.

Conteckours (a derivation of contek, a contest, dispute, disturbance, opposition) are defined to be brawlers, disturbers of the peace. Burrill L. Dict.

Brawl and tumult as one offense.— The New Hampshire statute providing that "no person shall make any brawls or tumults, in any street," etc., authorizes the punishment of but one offense. State v. Perkins, 42 N. H. 464.

Pennsylvania.— Com. v. Spratt, 14 Phila. 365; Com. v. Morrison, Add. 274.

England.— Rex v. Smith, 1 Str. 704; Hall's Case, 1 Vent. 169.

See 17 Cent. Dig. tit. "Disorderly Persons," § 10.

Riotous conduct.— Riotous, as used in an ordinance making it a misdemeanor to act in a noisy, riotous, or disorderly manner in a public place or private house, is held to have been evidently used in its popular meaning as wanton and boisterous and to have no allusion to the technical crime of riot. State v. Kennan, 25 Wash. 621, 66 Pac. 62.

Charivari.— An ordinance making it a misdemeanor to "wilfully disturb the peace . . . by loud or unusual noise" is not violated by persons engaging in a "charivari." St. Charles v. Meyer, 58 Mo. 86.

An act done on Sunday does not amount to disorderly conduct because it shocks the religious feelings of another. Simmons, C. J., in Keck v. Gainesville, 98 Ga. 423, 25 S. E. 559. An ordinance making it penal to "act in a disorderly manner," or "make any unnecessary noise within the corporate limits, calculated to disturb the peace, quiet or good order of the city" or to "be guilty of disorderly conduct" is not violated by quietly working in a closed church on the Sabbath day, upon the benches therein; the work in question not being itself of such a character, or causing such noise, as would ordinarily disturb any citizen. Keck v. Gainesville, 98 Ga. 423, 424, 25 S. E. 559, where the court said: "To constitute a violation of the ordinance, the act must be such as would be disorderly, and the noise such as would be unnecessary and calculated to disturb the peace, quiet and good order of the community on other days of the week as well as on Sunday."

Persons living in residences which abut on a public street are inhabitants of such street, within the meaning of a statute forbidding the use of loud, indecent, or profane language "upon a public street, or near a private house, in a manner calculated to disturb the inhabitants thereof." Keller v. State, 25 Tex. App. 325, 8 S. W. 275.

7. State v. Fogerson, 29 Mo. 416.

Language addressed to one.— "The peace of a city" may be disturbed by calling a man "a damn fool and a bastard." Topeka v. Heitman, 47 Kan. 739, 28 Pac. 1096. The use in the presence of a man of an obscene word in an ordinary tone without anger, and under circumstances not calculated to offend the hearer or cause a breach of the peace, is not "calculated to disturb the peace of the citizen." Daniel v. Athens, 110 Ga. 289, 34 S. E. 1016.

Outcries in a public street constitute an indictable nuisance, although but a single person is disturbed, if the other elements of the offense are present. Com. v. Oaks, 113 Mass. 8.

Disturbance of single person.— A statute against disturbing the peace of families or neighborhoods is not violated by disturbing the peace of a single individual by the use merely of loud and abusive language. State v. Schlottman, 52 Mo. 164.

8. State v. Sturges, 48 Mo. App. 263, where evidence that defendant loudly accused a justice, while discharging his official duties, of instituting prosecutions against him, and called him vile names, was held sufficient to warrant a conviction.

Loud talk.— There may be a disturbance of the quiet of a city by loud talk alone. Topeka v. Heitman, 47 Kan. 739, 28 Pac. 1096. To constitute the offense under the Missouri statute (Rev. St. (1889) § 3784) it is necessary that the offensive or indecent conversation should be loud. State v. Maggard, 80 Mo. App. 286. To call a person a "damned highway robber" in a public restaurant in a voice so loud as to be heard on the street is punishable under an ordinance prohibiting and punishing disorderly conduct. State v. Sherrard, 117 N. C. 716, 23 S. E. 157. One who having partaken of intoxicants is a little loud in political discussion, but uses no indecent lan-member thereof. The object of such statutes is to protect homes from invasion and the occupants thereof from annoyance.[9]

2. THE PERSONS DISTURBED. These statutes contemplate that the persons protected are upon their own premises or in some place where they have a right to be, and are not designed to protect intruders or trespassers.[10]

3. PRESENCE OF FAMILY. The language must be used at a place and in the presence of the persons or some one of them specially mentioned in the statute.[11]

4. USE OF OFFENSIVE LANGUAGE IN OWN DWELLING. Statutes of this character have been held not to comprehend the use of objectionable language by a person in his own house or on his own premises,[12] unless the effect is to disturb the occupants of, or a family residing in, another dwelling.[13]

E. Offensive Language in Presence of Female. To constitute the offense of disorderly language or conduct in the presence and hearing of a female, it is enough that a female was present,[14] and it is immaterial that she may not have heard or witnessed the objectionable language or conduct.[15] So, although it has been held otherwise,[16] it seems to be unimportant that the offender had no knowl-

9. Laney v. State, 105 Ala. 105, 17 So. 107; McVay v. State, 100 Ala. 110, 14 So. 862. In Weaver v. State, 79 Ala. 279, a conviction was held to be warranted on proof that defendant whose wife had left him went to a house in which her children by a former marriage resided searching for her, and on being told by one of them not to come there again said: "I'll go where I dam please, and it don't make a dam bit of difference where it is."

In Pennsylvania the charge of going to the house of another, and grossly abusing his family, thereby rendering their lives uncomfortable, is not an indictable offense, but a mere civil injury. Com. v. Edwards, 1 Ashm. 46.

10. State v. Brumley, 53 Mo. App. 126.

The Missouri statute respecting the disturbance of the peace of a person implies that the person whose peace was disturbed was upon his own premises or in some public place or where he had a right to be. "The life and limbs of a trespasser or law-breaker are under the protection of the law, but this statute could hardly be construed as punishing one as a disturber of his peace who should use rather strong language toward an intruder who had before threatened personal injury, even though, in order to drive him away, such violence was threatened as could result in no bodily harm." State v. Lunn, 49 Mo. 90, 91.

11. Bones v. State, 117 Ala. 146, 23 So. 485.

Entire family need not be present or within hearing when the language is used. Bones v. State, 117 Ala. 146, 23 So. 485.

Language uttered in a highway near enough to the premises of the prosecutor to be distinctly heard and actually heard by his family or by any member thereof will be regarded as having been uttered in their presence. Henderson v. State, 63 Ala. 193.

12. McIver v. State, 34 Tex. Cr. 214, 29 S. W. 1083.

13. State v. Brumley, 53 Mo. App. 126.

Conversation with visitors.— Under the code a conviction may be had, although at the time of the alleged offense defendant was on his own adjacent premises and used the words in ordinary conversation with visitors without any intention of being overheard by his neighbors. Mullens v. State, 82 Ala. 42, 2 So. 481, 60 Am. Rep. 731.

Disturbance of occupant of same house.— A conviction for the offense of disorderly conduct by vile or boisterous conduct or profane language is not warranted by evidence that the witness whose family resided in the same house with that of defendant heard defendant in his own room quarreling with his wife, it appearing that the language was not loud, that there was no swearing, and that the only person disturbed was the father of the witness, who was ill. Ellis v. Pratt City, 113 Ala. 541, 21 So. 306.

14. McVay v. State, 100 Ala. 110, 14 So. 862. See Ivey v. State, 61 Ala. 58.

What constitutes presence.— Within the contemplation of the statute, words are used in the presence of a female when used in her hearing. Brady v. State, 48 Ga. 311. The words "arrest and be damned," spoken to a female, are indictable under a statute, prohibiting profane language in the presence of a female. Foster v. State, 99 Ga. 56, 25 S. E. 613. The words, "If you don't give up my pistol, I'll knock your brains out, by God," addressed to a woman in the house of another, are in violation of the Alabama code. Benson v. State, 68 Ala. 513.

15. Disorderly conduct on street-car.— Under a statute defining the crime of disorderly conduct, inter alia, as "indecent or disorderly conduct in the presence of females on . . . street cars," a conviction is warranted where a man and a woman, in an intoxicated condition, were riding on a street-car, using profane language and kissing and hugging each other to such an extent as to attract the attention of other passengers on the car, on which were also other females, notwithstanding the female passengers may not have heard or witnessed such conduct. Sailors v. State, 108 Ga. 35, 33 S. E. 813, 75 Am. St. Rep. 17.

edge of the proximity of a female.[17] Statutes punishing this offense contemplate the use of spoken words only.[18]

F. Eavesdropping. Eavesdropping is an indictable offense at common law.[19] It consists of listening under walls and windows or the eaves of houses, to hearken after discourse, and thereupon to frame slanderous and mischievous tales.[20]

G. Racing on Public Road. In some states engaging in a horse-race on a public road constitutes disorderly conduct.[21]

H. Using Firearms. In some jurisdictions, by statute, the discharge of firearms within the limits of a municipality[22] or along a public road, is punishable as disorderly conduct.[23]

I. Place of Commission. Where by the statute or ordinance denouncing the offense the place of its commission is made an essential element, unless it was there committed there can be no conviction.[24]

17. It will be enough if the language was heard by her. Thomas v. State, 92 Ala. 85, 9 So. 398.

18. Williams v. State, 117 Ga. 13, 43 S. E. 436; Stevenson v. State, 90 Ga. 456, 16 S. E. 95.

19. Com. v. Lovett, 4 Pa. L. J. Rep. 5, 6 Pa. L. J. 226; State v. Pennington, 3 Head (Tenn.) 299, 75 Am. Dec. 771; State v. Williams, 2 Overt. (Tenn.) 108.

Bishop says that eavesdropping consists in the nuisance of hanging about in the dwelling-house of another, hearing detail, and repeating it to the disturbance of the neighborhood. 2 Bishop Cr. L. 274.

N. Y. Pen. Code, § 436, provides that a person who secretly loiters about a building intending to overhear discourse therein and to repeat or publish the same to vex or annoy others is guilty of a misdemeanor.

Overhearing grand jury.— A person who secretly and stealthily approaches near to the room occupied by the grand jury while they are in session for the purpose of overhearing what is there said and done is guilty of eavesdropping. State v. Pennington, 3 Head (Tenn.) 299, 75 Am. Dec. 771.

Looking and listening.— Eavesdropping by looking and listening at a window for the purpose of framing slanderous tales is an indictable offense. Com. v. Lovett, 4 Pa. L. J. Rep. 5, 6 Pa. L. J. 226.

Peeping into windows.— One who with no legitimate purpose in so doing peeps into the windows in an occupied, lighted residence at hours of the night when people usually retire violates an ordinance providing a punishment for disorderly, indecent, or insulting conduct, and is a disorderly person. Grand Rapids v. Williams, 112 Mich. 247, 70 N. W. 547, 67 Am. St. Rep. 396, 36 L. R. A. 137. But see Com. v. Mengelt [cited in Com. v. Lovett, 4 Pa. L. J. Rep. 5, 6 Pa. L. J. 228], where it is said that the offense of eavesdropping consists in listening and not in peeping or looking privily, the latter being held not to be indictable.

21. An act forbidding the running of a horse-race upon a public road contemplates races between all animals of the horse kind and embraces races in which mules take part. Goldsmith v. State, 1 Head (Tenn.) 154.

The New York act of 1833 made the riding or driving of a horse through the public streets at a speed in excess of a specified rate disorderly conduct. Matter of Miller, 1 Daly (N. Y.) 562, 19 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 394.

The offense is complete, although the meeting was not in pursuance of an agreement, nor was a wager made on the result. Goldsmith v. State, 1 Head (Tenn.) 154.

22. Flinn v. State, 24 Ind. 286.

The Pennsylvania act of April, 1760, providing that "no person shall shoot or kill with a firearm any dove, etc., in the open streets of Philadelphia, or in the gardens adjoining, or any of the towns or boroughs of this province," is still in force. Com. v. Borden, 61 Pa. St. 272.

Want of reasonable cause.— Under the Philadelphia ordinance of July 9, 1821, punishing any person who shall "fire off or discharge, wantonly and without any reasonable cause, any gun," the offense does not consist in discharging firearms in the city, but in doing so without a reasonable cause to justify it. Philadelphia v. Wards, 1 Phila. (Pa.) 517.

The shooting of a sling shot in a city is not disorderly conduct, unless it tends to create disorder or disturb the public peace and tranquillity. Kinney v. Blackshear, 115 Ga. 810, 42 S. E. 231.

23. Johnson v. State, 105 Ala. 113, 17 So. 99; McDade v. State, 95 Ala. 28, 11 So. 375.

24. Johnson v. State, 105 Ala. 113, 17 So. 99; McDade v. State, 95 Ala. 28, 11 So. 375; Ivey v. State, 61 Ala. 58; Quin v. State, 65 Miss. 479, 4 So. 548.

Public place.— An office of a hotel in a city is a public place within an ordinance making it an offense to wrangle or quarrel in a public place. Howard v. Stroud, (Kan. Sup. 1901) 65 Pac. 249.

Public highway.— A railway track is not a public highway within the meaning of a statute prohibiting the use of abusive, etc., language on a public highway near the

J. Who May Commit. The offense of using abusive and insulting language cannot be committed by two, nor can two be jointly indicted therefor.[25] But otherwise as to the offense of racing horses on a public road.[26]

II. INDICTMENT, INFORMATION, OR COMPLAINT.[27]

A. In General. All the facts which by the statute denouncing the offense are made constituents thereof must be appropriately alleged.[28] Thus the character of the language or conversation,[29] the place of the commission of the offense,[30] and dwelling-house of another. To constitute such a highway there must be a road dedicated to and kept up by the public as distinguished from a private way. Comer v. State, 62 Ala. 320. Where several offenses are defined, some of which are complete only when committed on a public street or highway, the place of commission of the others is immaterial. Ex p. Foley, 62 Cal. 508.

Dwelling-house.— Where a woman remarries and removes from the residence formerly occupied by herself and husband, leaving her children, who are the heirs of the latter, in the possession of the residence, the premises may properly be described in the indictment as their dwelling-house. Weaver v. State, 79 Ala. 279. Where a man leaves his dwelling with no intention of returning, but has not removed his household effects and his wife spends her days in the house and the nights elsewhere while preparing to remove, it not being shown that the husband had acquired a dwelling elsewhere, the house is the dwelling of the husband within the meaning of the statute. Bragg v. State, 69 Ala. 204.

"Near" private residence.— A field five hundred yards distant from a private residence is not near the residence, within the contemplation of a statute forbidding the making of a disturbance near a private residence. Elliott v. State, 37 Tex. Cr. 514, 40 S. W. 284.

Curtilage in a statute forbidding the use of abusive, vulgar, or insulting language in a dwelling-house or upon the curtilage thereof, includes a yard, garden, or field used in connection with the dwelling, although not inclosed. Ivey v. State, 61 Ala. 58.

Presence of female.— The Alabama statute forbidding the use of offensive language in the presence of females prohibits such language without reference to the place of its use. Laney v. State, 105 Ala. 105, 17 So. 107; McVay v. State, 100 Ala. 110, 14 So. 862. To same effect see Ex p. Foley, 62 Cal. 508.

New Hampshire.— State v. Batchelder, 5 N. H. 549.

Pennsylvania.— Com. v. Mohn, 52 Pa. St. 243, 244, 91 Am. Dec. 153; Com. v. Taylor, 5 Binn. 277.

Vermont.— State v. Hanley, 47 Vt. 290.

28. Ivey v. State, 61 Ala. 58; People v. Pratt, 22 Hun (N. Y.) 300.

Revel.— A complaint charging that defendant did "revel, quarrel, commit mischief, and otherwise behave in a disorderly manner" is sufficient to apprise him of the nature of the accusation and to constitute a bar to subsequent proceedings. "Revel" has a definite meaning "to behave in a noisy, boisterous manner, like a bacchanal." In re Began, 12 R. I. 309.

It will be sufficient if the indictment contain enough to inform defendant and the court of the precise nature of the charge. State v. Fogerson, 29 Mo. 416.

Form of prosecution.— The Pennsylvania act of April 9, 1760, which provides that any person presuming to shoot at or kill with a firearm any dove, etc., in certain prescribed places shall forfeit a sum stated on conviction, and that one moiety shall he paid to the informer and the other to the overseers, contemplates a proceeding by the commonwealth for a conviction for the offense, and not a qui tam action of debt. Com. v. Borden, 61 Pa. St. 272.

29. State v. James, 37 Mo. App. 214. An information charging disturbance of the peace of a person named "by offensive and indecent conversation" does not charge the offense of disturbing the peace "by loud and offensive or indecent conversation." State v. Gallego, 57 Mo. App. 515.

30. Quin v. State, 65 Miss. 479, 4 So. 548.

Public place.— Where the statute provides for the punishment of persons who loitering or assembled in certain public places use loud and offensive language, a complaint merely the persons addressed, referred to, disturbed, or annoyed,[31] must be stated with such sufficient particularity as will show an infraction of the statute;[32] and it is also held that where the offense consists in the use of the prescribed language without provocation, it is incumbent on the prosecution to allege and prove a lack of provocation.[33]

B. Employment of Statutory Language. The authorities are not in accord as to the particularity required in charging the offense. Thus it is held that where the statute denounces but does not define the common-law offense of disorderly conduct, or punishes the offense by its legal designation without enumerating the acts which constitute it, its elements must be set out with substantial cercharging the use of such language in the presence of other persons without stating the place of such use is insufficient. Cowell v. State, 63 N. J. L. 523, 43 Atl. 436.

Street, lane, or alley.— A complaint on a statute punishing rude, indecent, or disorderly conduct in any street, lane, or alley, etc., must set out the place where the offense was committed. It is not sufficient to charge that the offense was committed openly and in the presence of divers persons. State v. Kennison, 55 N. H. 242.

Where people commonly resort.—A description of the place of the alleged disturbance as a place where people "commonly assemble" is equivalent to charging the place to be one where people "commonly resort." Hammond v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1894) 28 S. W. 204.

Location of house.— An allegation that the disorderly conduct charged was committed "at a house on the corner" of two streets designated within a certain city is a sufficient statement as to the place of the offense. Grand Rapids v. Williams, 112 Mich. 247, 70 N. W. 547, 67 Am. St. Rep. 396, 36 L. R. A. 137.

Near dwelling-house.—An indictment charging the use of abusive language near the "premises" of another does not charge the statutory offense of the use of such language at "the dwelling-house of another, or the yard or curtilage thereof, or upon any public highway, or any other place near such premises." State v. Moore, (Miss. 1898) 24 So. 308.

31. Citizens.— It is necessary in an indictment for a public nuisance by uttering loud cries and exclamations in a public street to allege that it was to the great damage and common nuisance of all the citizens of the commonwealth there inhabiting, being, and residing. Com. v. Oaks, 113 Mass. 8; Com. v. Harris, 101 Mass. 39; Com. v. Smith, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 80. It is not enough to charge the "disturbance of divers" citizens. Com. v. Smith, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 80.

Inhabitants of public street.— An information charging a disturbance of the "inhabitance" of a public street is not vitiated by the misspelling. Keller v. State, 25 Tex. App. 325, 8 S. W. 275.

Offensive language to family or female.— An indictment for using abusive, vulgar, or insulting language "in the presence of the family of the owner or possessor thereof, or of any member of his family, or of any female," must aver the presence of some of the persons named. Ivey v. State, 61 Ala. 58, 61. Where the offense consists in the use in reference to and in the presence of another or in reference to and in the presence of any member of his family of any abusive language, etc., the indictment must state that the objectionable language was addressed to the party to whom it referred or was used in his presence or the presence of any member of his family. A statement that it was uttered in the presence of others is not sufficient. Peters v. State, 66 Wis. 339, 28 N. W. 138. An information under Cal. Pen. Code, § 415, which prohibits the use of "vulgar, profane, or indecent language, within the presence or hearing of women or children, in a loud and boisterous manner," need not allege that the offense was committed on the streets of an incorporated town. Ex p. Foley, 62 Cal. 508, 510. A charge that the prescribed language was used in the presence or hearing of "a woman" is a sufficient charge that it was used in the presence or hearing of "a female" the statutory language. Jackson v. State, 137 Ala. 80, 34 So. 611. It is necessary to aver that the language in question was heard by the female alleged to have been present when it was spoken. Yancy v. State, 63 Ala. 141.

Necessity of naming person referred to.— A complaint under Minn. Laws (1881), c. 134, charging a person with using, "in reference to and in the presence of another, . . . abusive or obscene language, intended or naturally tending to provoke an assault, or any breach of the peace," should state the name (if known) of the person in reference to and in whose presence the language was used. State v. Clarke, 31 Minn. 207, 17 N. W. 344.

Person referred to.— An information charging the use of the prescribed language in the presence of a person named in which he was referred to by a vile term sufficiently avers that the language was used concerning him. Menasco v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. 582, 25 S. W. 422.

32. If the alleged disorderly conduct consisted of the commission of a common-law offense and there is no prescribed form of indictment by statute, the commission of the offense should be charged as at common law. Goree v. State, 71 Ala. 7.

33. Hardin v. State, 114 Ga. 58, 39 S. E. 879; Meaders v. State, 96 Ga. 299, 22 S. E. 527; Fuller v. State, 72 Ga. 213.

tainty, so as to identify it and apprise defendant of what he is charged.[34] On the other hand where the offense consists of disturbing the peace generally, or the peace of a family or class of persons by prescribed acts, language, or conduct there are numerous decisions to the effect that it will be sufficient to charge the offense in the language of the statute, without specification of particular acts done or language used.[35]

c. Duplicity. Two or more unlawful acts, similar in character, differing slightly in degree and shades of meaning, embraced in different sections of the same act, may be embodied as descriptive of one and the same offense and declared against in the same count or complaint.[36]

III. DEFENSES.

The statute of limitations presents a good defense.[37] So the accused may show in defense that the prosecuting witness was not himself in the place at the time.[38] And a party may defend against a charge of eavesdropping by showing that it was by permission.[39] In some states provocation is a good defense to a charge of using abusive language.[40] But it is not a defense to show that the language used was true;[41] that persons present encouraged and countenanced the Characterization of noise.— A charge of disturbing the peace of a family, couched in the language of the statute, "by loud and unusual noise," is insufficient, because failing to characterize the noise. State v. James, 37 Mo. App. 214.

A charge of uttering loud and offensive language, specifying it, on a day, month, and year stated in a particular public street of a municipality designated, is sufficient as to time, locality, and language used. Bassette v. State, 51 N. J. L. 502, 18 Atl. 354.

In Mississippi the indictment must state what constituted the offensive conduct or the nature or character of the conduct. Finch v. State, 64 Miss. 461, 1 So. 630, where it said that the general rule that it is sufficient to charge a statutory offense in the language of the statute does not apply when there are in the language of the statute no sufficient words to define any offense.

In Wisconsin the complaint must set forth the abusive language used. Steuer v. State, 59 Wis. 472, 18 N. W. 433.

The offense of being a common railer and brawler may be charged generally without setting out any distinct acts of railing and brawling. Stratton v. Com., 10 Metc. (Mass.) 217; State v. Rollins, 55 N. H. 101; State v. Perkins, 42 N. H. 464.

Illustration.— A complaint which sufficiently charges one offense of disorderly conduct is not bad for duplicity in joining in the same count an insufficient charge of another offense constituting disorderly conduct; but the latter charge may be treated as surplusage. State v. Rollins, 55 N. H. 101.

37. Smith v. State, 62 Ala. 29.

38. State v. Lunn, 49 Mo. 90.

39. It is a good defense to an indictment for eavesdropping at the window of a married woman that the offense was committed by authority of the husband of the woman. Com. v. Lovett, 4 Pa. L. J. Rep. 5, 6 Pa. L. J. 226.

A wrongful trespass upon personal property in the presence of its owner may or may not amount to such provocation as will justify the latter in using to the wrong-doer on the spot opprobrious words or abusive language tending to cause a breach of the peace. Meaders v. State, 96 Ga. 299, 22 S. E. 527.

Provocation by third person.— The accused may defend by showing that he was provoked to use the language by another than the person in whose presence the objectionable language was used. Ray v. State, 113 Ga. 1065, 39 S. E. 408.

Every threatening or insulting word, gesture, or motion, even toward a peace officer, does not amount to disorderly conduct, for the action may be of such a character or so provoked or conditioned as to be fully justified. Jacksonville v. Headen, 48 Ill. App. 60.

illegal act;[42] that the offense was committed during religious worship;[43] that defendant believed himself to be unlawfully deprived of his property;[44] that particular citizens were not disturbed;[45] or that the offense in question included the commission of another like offense.[46] Nor can defendant attack the character of the female in whose presence the alleged offense was committed.[47]

IV. TRIAL.[48]

A. Evidence[49] — 1. In General. Evidence of any acts or conduct of defendant tending to establish the charge is admissible;[50] and evidence that the offense was committed by defendant's connivance or assent will be sufficient.[51]

2. As to Identity of Offender. Evidence of an attempt to apprehend the accused is admissible for the purpose of identifying him as the offender.[52]

3. As to Place of Offense. The place of the offense must be proved as laid. Thus a charge of committing the offense in the dwelling-house or yard of another is not sustained by proof of its commission outside of but near the yard.[53] And a charge of committing the offense on a public road must be proved by showing that the place was such a road in fact.[54]

4. As to Disturbance. Evidence is admissible to show the inhabitation of the locality in which the disturbance took place;[55] but where the conduct itself constitutes the offense a witness should not be allowed to testify as to whether or not he saw anything indicating annoyance or disturbance of the citizens;[56] nor can individuals testify that they were in the neighborhood and were not disturbed.[57] And in its discretion the trial court may refuse to permit the prosecution to intro-

43. It is no defense to a complaint for beating a drum within the compact part of a town, in violation of statute, that it was done in the performance of religious worship, and caused no actual disturbance of the public peace. State v. White, 64 N. H. 48, 5 Atl. 828.

44. Seizure by constable.— Where one is prosecuted for disturbing the peace by using prohibited language near a private house, while in the act of turning loose a mare which a constable had seized, evidence that the constable had no right to seize the mare is immaterial. Watson v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. (1899) 50 S. W. 340.

Impounding cattle.— That the wife of the prosecutor who has impounded defendant's cattle demanded payment of the damage done to them and resisted his attempt to retake them does not show sufficient provocation. Ratteree v. State, 78 Ga. 335.

45. St. Charles v. Meyer, 58 Mo. 86.

46. Disturbance of families by disturbing public.— A prosecution for swearing in a public street, under Tex. Pen. Code, § 314, which establishes a penalty for using loud, indecent, or profane language "upon a public street, or near a private house, in a manner calculated to disturb the inhabitants thereof," is not barred by the fact that defendant may have equally violated the statute by disturbing the inhabitants of private residences. Simultaneous acts.— In a prosecution for using profane language near a private house, evidence that while committing the offense defendant attempted to strike a person named, is admissible as part of the res gestæ. Watson v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1899), 50 S. W. 340.

51. Racing on public road.— An indictment charging that defendant and another made and ran a race in a public road is supported by evidence that a third person rode defendant's horse for him. State v. Wagster, 75 Mo. 107.

53. Quin v. State, 65 Miss. 479, 480, 4 So. 548, where the court said: "If the indictment had charged the abusive language used by the appellant to have been uttered near the premises of Mr. Jones, the conviction might be sustained."

54. To authorize a conviction for shooting along a public road in violation of statute, the evidence must show that the place of the alleged shooting was a public road in fact. Johnson v. State, 105 Ala. 113, 17 So. 99; McDade v. State, 95 Ala. 28, 11 So. 375.

55. Keller v. State, 25 Tex. App. 325, 8 S. W. 275.

56. Com. v. Harris, 101 Mass. 29.

57. State v. Fogerson, 29 Mo. 416, although such testimony has been permitted to weaken the force of evidence as to the of-duce in rebuttal additional evidence as to the disturbance charged.[58] However, the evidence must show with reasonable certainty that the language or conduct complained of was calculated to disturb the community.[59] But it is unnecessary to prove that any particular individual was disturbed.[60]

5. As to Language Used. A witness may repeat the language alleged to have been used,[61] or one present or near the scene of the alleged offense may state that he did not hear the language imputed,[62] or may give his opinion as to whether the language could have been heard by others.[63] But it is improper to permit a witness to characterize the language as abusive or insulting.[64] The exact language charged need not be proved, but a conviction will be warranted by evidence of the use of language similar or substantially similar to that set forth.[65] But proof of the use of loud language will not support a charge of using loud and offensive language.[66]

6. As to Want of Provocation. If it is an element of the offense that the opprobrious words must have been uttered without provocation, in addition to proving their use the state must show that there was no provocation therefor.[67]

7. Of Mitigating Circumstances. To mitigate the offense of using abusive or offensive language to a female, defendant may show that the woman in question habitually indulged in like language generally or in defendant's presence.[68]

B. Election by Prosecution. Where specific acts of disorderly conduct have been proven, the prosecution cannot be compelled to elect upon which it will ask a conviction.[69]

C. Instructions.[70] If from the testimony it is doubtful whether the language proved was calculated to disturb any person, the jury should be instructed that they cannot convict unless they believe beyond a reasonable doubt that the language had that effect.[71] And an erroneous instruction which warrants a conviction, although the complaining witness was not within the peace, is not cured by further instructing the jury that they cannot convict, unless he was within the fensive character of the noise charged. St. Charles v. Meyer, 58 Mo. 86.

An indictment for exhibiting a stuffed figure representing a person with intent to provoke the neighborhood is not supported by proof of the exhibition of an effigy of a different character. Com. v. Haines, 4 Pa. L. J. Rep. 17, 6 Pa. L. J. 239.

An indictment for uttering loud cries and exclamations in a public street to the damage and common nuisance of all the citizens, etc., is supported by proof of acts tending to annoy all citizens which do in fact annoy any one present and not favoring them. Com. v. Oaks, 113 Mass. 8.

Railing and brawling.— Evidence of loud and violent language used by defendant in his own house with persons with whom he engaged in altercations will sustain a charge of being a common railer and brawler, if with other evidence it shows that defendant was accustomed to use immoderate and vituperative language so publicly and frequently as to be a common disturber of the public peace. Com. v. Foley, 99 Mass. 497.

Evidence of the habitual use of profane language is evidence of disorderly conduct, hence such evidence is admissible on the trial of one accused of being an idle and disorderly person. Com. v. Murray, 14 Gray (Mass.) 397.

71. Williams v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1896) 34 S. W. 926.

It is error to instruct that if a certain woman was near enough to hear abusive language, it was immaterial whether or not she actually heard it, where the uncontradicted evidence showed that no females were present. McVay v. State, 100 Ala. 110, 14 So. 862.

peace.[72] But there is no error in refusing to give a special charge as to a matter fully covered by a general charge already given,[73] or in refusing to charge specially that to convict the jury must believe that abusive language was addressed to a particular person in a manner calculated to provoke a breach of the peace, where there is no evidence that the language in question was addressed to such person.[74]

D. Province of Jury.[75] It is for the jury to determine from the evidence whether or not the language imputed to defendant was insulting or vulgar,[76] or his acts or conduct were calculated or tended to disturb,[77] or provoke a breach of the peace;[78] also whether there was a provocation for the language used, and if so, whether it was sufficient to justify its use.[79]

E. Conviction.[80] The conviction must be for the offense charged or one which is made an offense by the laws of the state.[81] A mere designation of defendant in the language of the statute as a disorderly person is not sufficient.[82] The record should state the proceedings, the circumstances, and the evidence, so as to show that the proceedings were regular and the conclusions of the magistrate justified.[83]

V. COMMITMENT.[84]

A commitment for disorderly conduct should state the particular act constituting the offense.[85] A commitment for disorderly conduct until security for Trespass.—When in a prosecution for using abusive and insulting language a trespass is alleged by the accused as his provocation for so doing, it should be left to the jury to determine whether or not there was in fact such a trespass, and if so, whether or not it was in their judgment sufficient to justify the language used. Meaders v. State, 96 Ga. 299, 22 S. E. 527. Wrongfully entering and taking possession of the place of business of another in his absence, remaining in possession until his return, and refusing to leave when requested to do so by him, raises a question for the jury whether there is such provocation as to justify the owner in using to the wrongdoer, on his refusal to leave, opprobrious words and abusive language tending to cause a breach of the peace. The punishment or place of confinement is usually prescribed by the statute defining the offense or by general statutes respecting like offenses.[88] If no punishment is prescribed the offense is punishable as a misdemeanor at common law.[89]

VII. REVIEW.[90]

The remedy of a person deeming himself aggrieved by a conviction for disorderly conduct is by appeal or certiorari.[91]

Neither the penal code nor the code of criminal procedure limits the powers of magistrates in this class of cases. Matter of McMahon, 64 How. Pr. 285. A commitment for disorderly conduct until the party shall find security for his good behavior, without qualification as to time, is void. It should be limited to a specified period, not exceeding twelve months. Matter of Miller, 1 Daly 562, 19 Abb. Pr. 394.

Failure to provide for security.— The commitment by a city magistrate of the city of New York of a person on a summary conviction of disorderly conduct, for a fixed period without permitting the taking of sureties for good behavior, is unauthorized. Matter of Motley, 24 Misc. (N. Y.) 488, 53 N. Y. Suppl. 878.

88. A sentence upon one convicted of disorderly conduct which imposes a fine of ten dollars and costs taxed at fourteen dollars and fourteen cents and commits defendant to the county jail until the payment of such fine and costs is not in violation of the Kansas constitution, because an excessive, cruel, and unusual punishment. In re McCort, 52 Kan. 18, 34 Pac. 456. In New York the confinement of disorderly persons in the Albany county penitentiary is proper and lawful, notwithstanding section 892 of the code of criminal procedure, providing for their committal to the jail of the county, as the laws of 1847, chapter 183, was not repealed thereby. I. GENERAL NATURE AND CHARACTER.

A. Definitions. A disorderly house is a house in which people abide or to which they resort to the disturbance of the neighborhood or for purposes which are injurious to the public morals, health, convenience, or safety.[1] The word "house," used in the terms "disorderly house," "bawdy-house," or "house of ill-fame," has been held to include in its meaning a single room in a house,[2] a boat on a river,[3] a covered wagon drawn from place to place,[4] a canvas tent,[5] or any building.[6]

B. Considered as a Nuisance — 1. IN GENERAL. Such a house constituted a public nuisance at common law.[7]

2. OF WHAT THE NUISANCE CONSISTS. The nuisance may generally be said to consist in drawing together dissolute persons engaged in unlawful or immoral practices thereby endangering the public peace.[8] And to constitute a disorderly house there must be an habitual violation of the law.[9] Boisterous and noisy conduct is not a necessary element of the nuisance; the peace and quiet of the neighborhood need not be disturbed.[10] Nor is it necessary that all or a great many persons in the neighborhood should see or hear what goes on in and about the house.[11] The objectionable or immoral conduct even need not be seen from the exterior of the house.[12]

Contra.— Under an ordinance providing for the punishment of any person found in a disorderly house or place, in a house of ill fame, or in a place resorted to for purposes of prostitution, the term "disorderly house" denotes a house in which people abide, or to which they resort, disturbing by their noise the order and tranquillity of the neighbors not necessarily a house of prostitution. Hawkins v. Lutton, 95 Wis. 492, 70 N. W. 483, 60 Am. St. Rep. 131. And see State v. Evans, 27 N. C. 603, 608, where the court seems to think noise and actual disorder necessary. See also Palfus v. State, 36 Ga. 280.

11. Price v. State, 96 Ala. 1, 11 So. 128, where it was held that it is not necessary that more than one person should be actually disturbed. See also Com. v. Hopkins, 133 Mass. 381, 43 Am. Rep. 527; Com. v. Oaks, 113 Mass. 8, holding that if the house is of such a character that any citizen passing would have been annoyed by it and if the annoyance is of such a character that it would worry any person passing it is a nuisance. But compare State v. Wright, 51 N. C. 25, where upon a charge for keeping a disorderly house, it appearing that defendant lived in the country, remote from any public road, and that loud noises and uproar were often kept up by his five sons when drunk, whom he did not encourage (save by getting drunk himself), but would sometimes endeavor to quiet, by which disorder only two families in a thickly settled neighborhood were disturbed, such conduct was held not to amount to a common nuisance.

II. KINDS OF DISORDERLY HOUSES.

A. Specific Kinds — 1. Those Nuisances Per Se — a. In General. The specific kinds of disorderly houses which are regarded in law as nuisances per se are bawdy-houses[13] and gaming-houses.[14]

b. Bawdy-House — (I) Definition. A bawdy-house or house of ill fame[15] is a house or place kept for the shelter and convenience of persons desiring unlawful sexual intercourse and in which such intercourse is practised.[16]

(II) Why Considered a Nuisance. A bawdy-house was a public nuisance at common law, because it drew together lewd and debauched persons, thus tending to disturb the peace and to increase immorality among the people.[17]

(III) Number of Women Inhabiting or Frequenting. It would therefore logically follow that a bawdy-house must be a place or resort for or a habitation of more than one woman.[18] Nevertheless a house where only one woman

"In its more enlarged sense it (the term disorderly house) includes bawdy-houses, common gaming-houses, and places of like character." Cheek v. Com., 79 Ky. 359, 362.

15. The term "house of ill fame," in its ordinary use, is synonymous with "bawdy-house." McAlister v. Clark, 33 Conn. 91. See Century Dict. But in some states which have a statute forbidding the keeping of a "house of ill-fame, resorted to for prostitution or lewdness," it is held that the term means a house which has a bad reputation besides being actually a bawdy-house. State v. Blakesley, 38 Conn. 523; Cadwell v. State, 17 Conn. 467; People v. Gastro, 75 Mich. 127, 42 N. W. 937.

"At common law a 'bawdy-house' or a "house of ill fame," in the popular sense of the terms, is a species of disorderly house, and is indictable as a nuisance." Henson v. State, 62 Md. 231, 232, 50 Am. Rep. 204 [citing 3 Greenleaf Ev. § 184; 2 Wharton Cr. L. § 2392]. The common-law offense of keeping a disorderly house is made out by proof that such house was resorted to by immoral persons for the purpose of prostitution. Com. v. Goodall, 165 Mass. 588, 43 N. Jacob's definition, "a house of ill-fame, kept for the resort and commerce of lewd people of both sexes," is followed closely in Rhodes v. Com., 15 Ky. L. Rep. 333; State v. Horn, 83 Mo. App. 47; State v. Evans, 27 N. C. 603. Bouvier adopts Jacob's definition, but inserts the word "unlawful" before "commerce." Bouvier's definition is adopted in Betts v. State, 93 Ind. 375, 376; Harwood v. People, 26 N. Y. 190, 191, 84 Am. Dec. 175. And see 5 Cyc. 676.

Can. Cr. Code, § 195, defines bawdy-house as "a house, room, set of rooms or place of any kind kept for purposes of prostitution."

Under N. Y. Pen. Code, § 322, defining a keeper of a disorderly house as one "who keeps a house of ill-fame or assignation of any description, or a house or place for persons to visit for unlawful sexual intercourse, or for any lewd, obscene or indecent purpose, or disorderly house, or a house commonly known as a stale beer dive," a charge of "keeping a disorderly house" necessarily implies keeping a place where persons are permitted to meet for unlawful sexual intercourse. When the house of a person is the resort of prostitutes, plying their vocation, with his knowledge, this constitutes a bawdy-house. King v. People, 83 N. Y. 587.

A place where one woman has been accustomed to receive men is not a brothel, within the meaning of Cr. L. Amendm. Act (1885), resides or resorts has been not infrequently held to be a bawdy-house or a house of ill fame.[19]

(IV) NUMBER OF COPULATIONS. A single illicit copulation within a house would not make such house a house of ill fame.[20]

(V) NEED NOT BE OPENLY CONDUCTED. It is not necessary that the house should be conducted openly or notoriously to constitute a nuisance.[21]

(VI) KEEPING A MISDEMEANOR. The keeping of such a house constituted a misdemeanor at common law.[22]

c. Gaming-House — (I) IN GENERAL — DEFINITION. A gaming-house is a house where gaming is practised; a gambling-house.[23] This constituted a nuisance at common law,[24] for it offered great temptation to idleness and tended to draw together disorderly persons to the encouragement of immorality and breaches of the peace.[25]

Early licensing. — It was always held infamous to keep a bawdy-house; yet some of our historians mention bawdy-houses, brothel-houses, or stews publicly allowed here in former times, till the reign of Henry VIII, by whom they were suppressed; and writers assign the number to be eighteen thus allowed on the bank-side in Southwark. (II) Pool-Rooms. A place of public resort kept for the sale of pools upon horse-races is a disorderly house.[26]

(III) Room For Selling Lottery Tickets. The keeping of a room or place for the sale of tickets in lotteries not authorized by law is not indictable at common law.[27]

(IV) Room For Betting on Fluctuations in Stocks. A house wherein the keepers permit persons to habitually assemble and engage in wagering money on the prospective fluctuations in the stock market is a common gaming-house.[28]

(V) Place Where Loser Pays For Drinks or For Use of Table. A house where it is permitted to play cards for drinks or cigars,[29] or a public saloon where it is permitted to play bagatelle or pool for drinks or for the payment for use of the table or instrument of play,[30] is a gaming-house.

2. Those Nuisances Per Accidens — a. In General. The other specific kinds of disorderly houses are nuisances only as they are conducted in a manner to annoy the public;[31] this class includes tippling-houses,[32] playhouses, or theaters[33] and bowling-alleys.[34]

35. Definition. A tippling-house has been defined as: "A place of public resort, where spirituous, fermented, or other intoxicating

a nuisance only when it is kept in a disorderly manner, to the annoyance of the neighborhood.[36] A person who keeps such a place and allows drunken, disorderly characters to congregate in it who drink, curse, or use foul language, shout and quarrel by day or by night is guilty of maintaining a nuisance.[37] A statute providing that every sale of intoxicating liquor without a license[38] constitutes the offense of keeping a disorderly house does not prevent a prosecution for the common-law offense of keeping a tippling-house.[39]

(II) SALE OF LIQUOR ON SUNDAY. The habitual sale of intoxicants on Sunday on the vendor's premises constitutes a nuisance.[40]

(III) DISORDERLY CONDUCT IN AND NEAR HOUSE. The law holds the keeper liable for the disorderly conduct in and about the house,[41] and even for disorderly acts outside the house by persons who became intoxicated therein.[42]

"Tippling houses are common drinking houses, kept for lucre and gain, where all people may, if they will, resort and drink ad libitum. c. Playhouse or Theater. At common law it was held that playhouses having been introduced with the laudable design of recommending virtue and exposing vice and folly were not nuisances per se, but might become so only through their management.[43]

d. Bowling-Alleys. The better rule is that a bowling-alley is not a nuisance per se at common law,[44] but it constitutes a nuisance when kept to the disturbance of the neighborhood, particularly at night.[45]

B. The Common Disorderly House. A disorderly house which cannot be considered as one of the specific kinds above enumerated and considered is called herein a common disorderly house.[46]

III. KEEPING AND KEEPERS.

A. Necessary and Unnecessary Elements of Keeping — 1. KNOWLEDGE OF KEEPER. The person accused of keeping a disorderly house must have knowl-

Disorder on the roads or lots adjoining a house where intoxicants are sold to slaves is the same nuisance as if the disorder had actually occurred within the house. Henry v. Com., 9 B. Mon. (Ky.) 361. But in Iowa the keeping for sale of native wine of his own manufacture by defendant who lived on a farm and the fact that persons buying the same at his house drank it and became intoxicated while in the highways leading therefrom, and by noisy and riotous conduct disturbed the neighbors living from one-half to one and one-half miles from defendant's house do not authorize the conviction of defendant for keeping a nuisance. That it is a custom of the establishment for the loser to pay for the use of the alley makes the place disorderly as a gaming-house. State v. Hall, 32 N. J. L. 158.

That it is kept in connection with a saloon does not necessarily make it a disorderly house. State v. Hall, 32 N. J. L. 158.

A billiard room is not necessarily a nuisance, and where there is no disturbance it cannot be a nuisance unless it be a tavern where, by statute, the mere keeping of a table is made so. People v. Sergeant, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 139.

46. Thus a house where prostitutes assemble or resort is a disorderly house (Doyle v. Levy, 89 Hun (N. Y.) 350, 35 N. Y. Suppl. 434), especially if they conduct themselves in a lewd manner in the house (Golden v. State, 34 Tex. Cr. 143, 29 S. W. 779). Under 23 & 24 Vict. c. 27, § 32, providing that "every person licensed to keep a refreshment house under this Act who shall knowingly suffer prostitutes, thieves or drunken and disorderly persons to assemble at or continue in or upon his premises" is liable to a penalty recoverable before justices, the court said: "It would be sufficient to warrant a conviction if the magistrates found that prostitutes assembled as such." Belasco v. Hannant, 3 B. & S. 13, 9 Cox C. C. 203, 8 Jur. N. S. 1226, 31 L. J. M. C. 225, 6 L. T. Rep. N. S. 577, 10 Wkly. Rep. 867, 113 E. C. L. 13. Rep. 474, 96 E. C. L. 133. But under a statute defining a disorderly house as "one kept for the purpose of public prostitution, or as a common resort for prostitutes and vagabonds," an information cannot be sustained against a saloon in which liquors, ices, and other things are sold, and to which good citizens resort for legitimate purposes, although the saloon is made an habitual place of resort by prostitutes and vagabonds, who, while there, behave themselves with propriety. Under the statute the house must be kept for the purpose of public prostitution, or as a common resort for prostitutes and vagabonds. McElhaney v. State, 12 Tex. App. 231 [distinguishing Couch v. State, 24 Tex. 557; Brown v. State, 2 Tex. App. 189]. See also Harmes v. State, 26 Tex. App. 190, 9 S. W. 487, 8 Am. St. Rep. 470.

A bar-room and dance hall, with music, kept with intent to bring together and entertain prostitutes and men desirous of their com-

edge of the character of the house and must have consented to its use to authorize his conviction.[47]

2. Control or Management. To hold a person liable for keeping a disorderly house he must have had in whole or in part the control or management of the premises.[48]

3. Keeping For Gain. In the absence of a statutory provision to that effect it is not necessary that the house should be kept for purposes of gain.[49]

B. Aiding and Abetting. A person who aids in keeping or lends his assistance in maintaining a disorderly house is by common-law principles in respect to misdemeanors guilty as keeper.[50] Accordingly one who leases his house to another to be kept as a disorderly house which is actually so kept with his knowledge[51] is, under common-law principles as to misdemeanors, guilty as pany, if such persons habitually assemble there to drink and dance together, may be a disorderly house, although the house is quietly kept and no conspicuous improprieties are permitted within it. Beard v. State, 71 Md. 275, 17 Atl. 1044, 17 Am. St. Rep. 536, 4 L. R. A. 675.

Subsequent knowledge.— Where by statute the owner is required upon learning of the unlawful use of the house by the lessee to keeper;[52] and by the same principle the owner's agent who rents a house knowing that it is to be used for a disorderly house is guilty as keeper.[53] But it has been held that one cannot be indicted as keeper where leasing a house for such purposes and under such conditions is itself a specific offense.[54]

C. Marital Relation in Connection With Keeping. A wife as well as a husband may be indicted for keeping a disorderly house,[55] whether she be living with[56] or apart from him.[57] The presumption of coercion on the part of the husband does not prevail in cases of this kind.[58]

IV. LETTING AS A SEPARATE OFFENSE.

Letting a house with the intent that it should be used for purposes of prostitution has been held upon common-law principles a separate offense in some jurisdictions;[59] in others it is not considered a specific offense at common law.[60] In any event the house must be actually used for such purpose, or there is no offense.[61]

And where letting a house, knowing that it is to be kept for prostitution, has been held an offense,[62] it is necessary that the landlord should have knowledge of the intended use of the house to hold him criminally liable.[63]

V. FREQUENTING.

Living in a bawdy-house was indictable at common law;[64] and by statute it is sometimes made an offense to frequent disorderly houses.[65] A single visit to a house is not sufficient to constitute the offense of frequenting.[66]

VI. CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTES, CHARTERS, AND ORDINANCES.[67]

A. Conflicting Laws — 1. SUSTAINING. The usual rule of statutory construction that repeals of statutes by implication are not favored,[68] or that where there are two statutes relating to the same subject and both can be given effect both must stand, applies to the construction of statutes relating to disorderly houses.[69]

2. LOCAL AND GENERAL. The principle of statutory construction that, if a special provision applicable to a particular object or locality be inconsistent with a general law, the former must prevail is applied to a comparison of duly authorized municipal ordinances with general statutes.[70] The law applicable to the locality will not be allowed to repeal the general law unless such an intention is plain.[71]

3. Later and Former. The rule that of several conflicting statutes the latest in time may prevail is applicable, although the latest statute be but a municipal charter.[72]

B. Statutes Giving Power to Municipal Corporations. The right to regulate or suppress disorderly houses and powers incidental thereto may be delegated by statute to a municipality.[73] But the power conferred upon the municipality must be exercised in a reasonable manner.[74]

C. Statute Imposing Two Penalties. An act which prescribes two different penalties for keeping a disorderly house is not void for uncertainty when the penalties are designed, one for one kind of a disorderly house, another for another kind.[75]

VII. DEFENSES.

A. To Charge of Keeping — 1. In General. That defendant endeavored to prevent certain affrays and breaches of the peace is no defense to the charge of keeping a disorderly house.[76] Nor is it a defense that defendant did not know the reputation of the persons who came to his house.[77]

2. License. A license granted by a municipality is a complete defense to a charge of keeping a house of ill fame.[78]

De Bar, 58 Mo. 395, which held that a repeal of such a provision by an amendment of the charter of the corporation does not revive the general statute]. See also Rogers v. People, 9 Colo. 450, 2 Pac. 843, 59 Am. Rep. 146.

Contrary doctrine.— In Ex p. Garza, 28 Tex. App. 381, 13 S. W. 779, 19 Am. St. Rep. 845, a clause of the charter giving the city the right to suppress, regulate, and inspect all such houses was held not to give the city a right to license them. Particularly was this thought to be so by the court, from the fact that the charter in question expressly gave the city power to license certain occupations, but made no mention of the power to license these houses. In Michigan the court said that to hold that a municipal ordinance relating to houses of ill fame superseded the general law was absurd. People v. Mallette, 79 Mich. 600, 44 N. W. 962. But an ordinance which includes more acts as disorderly than the general law is not void where those acts peculiar to the ordinance could be expunged without invalidating it. St. Ignace v. Snyder, 75 Mich. 649, 42 N. W. 1130.

71. Ex p. Garza, 28 Tex. App. 381, 13 S. W. 779, 19 Am. St. Rep. 845.

72. Thus where by the penal code the keeping of a bawdy-house is an indictable offense and subsequently by a charter the city is empowered to license bawdy-houses the charter prevails. Davis v. State, 2 Tex. App. 425 [citing Dwarris St. 156; Sedgwick St. & Const. L. 100].

A reduction of the punishment by the subsequent statute repeals the former. Com. v. Davis, 11 Gray (Mass.) 48.

Where two sections of a statute relate to distinct offenses: the first to keeping a house of ill fame, the second to the offense of resorting to or being an inmate of such a house, a subsequent act relating exclusively to the matter in the first offense does not affect the second section, although by the title of the amending act it would appear that the entire act was intended to be amended. State v. Richards, 76 Wis. 354, 44 N. W. 1104.

73. A statute which makes it an offense to keep a bawdy-house within any part of the limits of a designated city "other than that prescribed by ordinance" simply confers upon the municipality the right to make it an offense to keep such a house; it does not create such an offense. People v. Ah Ho, 1 Ida. 691; People v. Buchanan, 1 Ida. 681.

74. Thus where a power to impose fines with a maximum limit for a breach of its regulations is delegated to a municipal corporation, an ordinance imposing a fine for visiting bawdy-houses is void unless the penalty fixed is reasonable. In re Ah You, 88 Cal. 99, 25 Pac. 974, 22 Am. St. Rep. 280, 11 L. R. A. 408. But an ordinance providing a penalty of a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars, or imprisonment not exceeding three months, or both, for visiting a house of ill fame is valid, and not in conflict with the general laws of the state. Ex p. Johnson, 73 Cal. 228, 15 Pac. 43.

75. Ex p. Garza, 28 Tex. App. 381, 13 S. W. 779, 19 Am. St. Rep. 845.

76. Price v. State, 96 Ala. 1, 11 So. 128; Com. v. Cobb, 120 Mass. 356.

Request to be notified of unlawful acts.— It is no defense that defendant in good faith had requested the officials who attended his theater to notify him of any violation of law by any of his women. Johnson v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1893) 21 S. W. 929.

77. Price v. State, 96 Ala. 1, 11 So. 128.

But a license to run a saloon is not a defense to a charge of keeping a disorderly house where facts constituting the nuisance are proved. State v. McGahan, 48 W. Va. 438, 37 S. E. 573.

3. THAT WIFE WAS OWNER AND MANAGER. To a charge of keeping a house of ill fame, where it appeared that defendant lived and exercised acts of control there, it was no defense that the house was owned by his wife and that she also lived there and carried on the business and received all the profits.[79]

B. To Charge of Letting — 1. WRITTEN REQUEST TO VACATE. A written request by the owner to vacate is not a defense to the charge of letting a house to be used as a disorderly house, where the statute requires him, upon learning of the unlawful use, to proceed immediately to prevent such use.[80]

2. THAT WIFE WAS OWNER. Where by law the husband has control of the wife's separate property, it is no defense to the charge against him as owner for permitting a building to be used as a disorderly house that it was his wife's separate property.[81]

VIII. JURISDICTION.[82]

A. Of Degree of Offense. A court which has jurisdiction of all crimes under the degree of felony has jurisdiction of the offense of keeping a disorderly house.[83]

B. Territorial. Disorderly houses situated in the stream of the Mississippi river are within the jurisdiction of the district court of the state of Iowa in the counties bordering on the river.[84]

IX. DISQUALIFICATION OF JUDGE.[85]

The fact that a judge attended a meeting between the county and district judges called for the purpose of devising ways and means for suppressing gaming and disorderly houses does not disqualify him from sitting in the trial of one accused of keeping a disorderly house.[86]

79. This was on the common-law theory that the husband controlled the acts of the wife; and the statute making the wife's property independent of the control of her husband did not affect the husband's right to control his family. Com. v. Wood, 97 Mass. 225.

W. 821, 823 [citing Benson v. State, 39 Tex. Cr. 56, 44 S. W. 167, 1091]. In this case the court discussing the question and speaking through Davidson, P. J., said: "The tenth bill recites that, on account of a certain meeting between the county and district judges, and perhaps others, called for the purpose of devising ways and means for suppressing gaming and disorderly houses, the county judge who tried this case disqualified himself. It is also stated that this particular defendant was brought under discussion and condemnation at said meeting. This would not disqualify the county judge."

X. NUMBER OF DEFENDANTS.

Any number of persons in the same venue and having no community of interest may be included in the same indictment in which it is stated that they "severally" kept, etc.[87]

XI. INDICTMENT, INFORMATION, OR COMPLAINT.[88]

A. In General — 1. MISJOINDER. A count for a nuisance at common law by keeping a disorderly house may be joined in the same indictment with a count under a statute which defines a house used as a bawdy-house, for illegal gaming, and for illegal sale of intoxicating liquors, as a nuisance.[89] Where two counts charging defendant with letting a house knowing that the lessee intended to use it as a bawdy-house are joined to a third count charging that after having let the same defendant did knowingly permit the lessee to so use the same, the indictment does not charge two distinct offenses.[90]

2. DUPLICITY. An indictment which avers in one count the statutory offense of maintaining a nuisance by keeping a house of ill fame and the common-law offense of keeping a bawdy-house, with the usual common-law averments, is not duplicitous.[91] Where several ways are set forth in the same statute by which the offense connected with the existence of a disorderly house may be committed and all are embraced in the same general definition and made punishable in the same manner, they are not distinct offenses; a count therefore which charges them conjunctively is not duplicitous.[92]

91. It being manifest that the offense under the statute is intended to be charged and that it is plainly charged, other expressions in the indictment which are not essential to a distinct statement of the offense may be regarded as useless and rejected as surplusage where none of them is in conflict with the general purpose of the prosecution or inconsistent with an accurate description of the particular offense

3. FOLLOWING LANGUAGE OF STATUTE. An indictment which charges the offense of keeping a disorderly house in the terms of the statute is generally sufficient.[93] which is complained of. Com. v. Hart, 10 Gray (Mass.) 465.

92. Schulze v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1900) 56 S. W. 918, holding that an indictment for keeping a disorderly house, following the language of the statute, charging that at a certain time defendant was the tenant and lessee of a certain house, etc., and that he "did then and there unlawfully keep, was concerned in keeping, and knowingly permitted to be kept, the said house, etc., for prostitution," is good. Schulze v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1900) 56 S. W. 918.

Where a statute sets out a number of uses by which a house or place may become a nuisance, an indictment charging in one count the keeping of such place in a number of or in all of such ways is not bad for duplicity. Although each of such uses might be criminal in its nature, yet they are not charged as distinct offenses, but only as forming the elements which make up the single offense of a nuisance. Therefore an indictment under such a statute which charges that the defendant "did keep and maintain a certain building, to wit: a dwelling-house, used as a house of ill fame, resorted to for prostitution, lewdness, and for illegal gaming, and used for the illegal sale of intoxicating liquors, the said building so used as aforesaid being then and there a common nuisance," etc., is not bad for duplicity. Com. v. Kimball, 7 Gray (Mass.) 328. See also Com. v. Ballou, 124 Mass. 26. In State v. Brady, 16 R. I. 51, 52, 12 Atl. 238, an indictment which charged in one count that defendant did "keep and maintain a certain grog shop and tippling shop and building, place, and tenement used for the illegal sale and the illegal keeping of intoxicating liquors, and for the habitual resort of intemperate, idle, dissolute, noisy, and disorderly persons, to the great damage and common nuisance of all good citizens of this State, against the form of the statute," was held not duplicitous.

Charging in one count that defendant kept a disorderly house to the encouragement of idleness, gaming, fighting, and disturbing the peace does not charge two offenses, viz.: (1) the keeping of the kind of house designated, and (2) fighting, disturbing the peace, etc. "The substantive part of the offense is that defendant kept a disorderly house to the encouragement of idleness, gaming, fighting, etc., and not that she kept a house of that kind and also indulged in drinking, disturbing the peace, etc." Howard v. People, 27 Colo. 396, 400, 61 Pac. 595.

House and place.— A count which charges that defendant kept a "lewd house" and "place" for the practice of fornication is not duplicitous. Howard v. People, 27 Colo. 396, 61 Pac. 595.

Owner, tenant, and lessee.— In a prosecution for keeping a disorderly house, a complaint is not defective because it alleges in the same count that defendant was the owner, tenant, and lessee of the house. Merrell v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1895) 29 S. W. 41.

Prostitution "and" lewdness.— An information under a statute against keeping "a house of ill-fame, resorted to for prostitution or lewdness," which charges that the house was kept "for the purposes of prostitution and lewdness," is not duplicitous. King v. State, 17 Fla. 183; State v. Beebe, 115 Iowa 128, 88 N. W. 358.

Prostitution "or" lewdness.— An indictment which charges that the house was resorted to for prostitution "or" lewdness, instead of for prostitution "and" lewdness, is not duplicitous, since it follows the language of the statute. State v. Toombs, 79 Iowa 741, 45 N. W. 300.

Rep. 432 (where the offense was charged in the terms of the statute and the indictments were held sufficient); Brown v. State, 2 Tex. App. 189.

Where "to keep a house of ill fame resorted to for the purpose of prostitution or lewdness," is by statute made of itself a distinct punishable offense, an indictment which charges the offense in such terms is sufficient without alleging that the house was resorted to by divers persons, men as well as women, or that defendant kept it for lucre or gain (Com. v. Ashley, 2 Gray (Mass.) 356); without alleging that the act was done feloniously (State v. Beebe, 115 Iowa 128, 88 N. W. 358); without defining the meaning of the term "house of ill fame" (Betts v. State, 93 Ind. 375); or without concluding according to the common-law form, to the "common nuisance," etc. (State v. Stevens, 40 Me. 559).

Opium den.— A complaint under the Massachusetts statute "to provide for the seizure and disposition of property found where opium is smoked or sold, or given away to be sold, or for the arrest and punishment of persons there found present," need only follow the words of the statute in describing the offense and the implements and preparations found, and the place need not be alleged to be a resort for smoking opium; such allegations not being required by the statute. Com. v. Kane, 173 Mass. 477, 53 N. E. 919.

Failure to charge statutory offense.—Under a Texas statute which provides a penalty for "any owner, lessee, or tenant" who shall keep a disorderly house, an indictment which fails to allege that the accused was the owner, lessee, or tenant of the house in ques-

Where a statute uses disjunctive language in defining an offense, an indictment under it may be drawn in the conjunctive.[94]

4. Allegation as to Place. The place of the house should be correctly laid;[95] but it need not be alleged with any great particularity as to the exact location. Thus neither the house nor the lot on which it is situated need be named;[96] nor is any description of the realty[97] nor of the street[98] in which it is situated necessary. If the place is alleged to be in a city within the jurisdiction of the court,[99] or even in the county where the prosecution is commenced,[1] it is sufficient. In some jurisdictions no location whatever need be alleged.[2] But some particular house must be designated.[3]

5. Allegation as to Time — a. Of Keeping — (I) In General. The indictment must show a day certain on which the alleged offense was committed.[4] If a house or place has acquired a character of being disorderly, the charge of keeping the place on a single day may be sufficient.[5]

(II) The Continuando. Continuity being an element of the offense of keeping a disorderly house, it must be alleged.[6] The continuando should be laid by alleging the divers other days which must be alleged with the same exactness

1. State v. Raymond, 86 Mo. App. 537. The information described the parties as of the township of East Whitby, and had "county of Ontario" in the margin. It charged that they kept a house of ill fame, but did not expressly allege that they did so in that township or county. The evidence, however, showed that their place at which such house was kept was in East Whitby, in which the justices had jurisdiction. It was held sufficient. Reg. v. Williams, 37 U. C. Q. B. 540. But in State v. McLaughlin, 160 Mo. 33, 60 S. W. 1075, holding that where a statute makes it a felony to display the sign of an honest occupation on a house used as a common assignation house, an indictment which states that the house on which the sign was displayed was in G county, without any further description, is fatally defective, as defendant was entitled to a particular description.

2. Harlow v. Com., 11 Bush (Ky.) 610. In Sparks v. State, 59 Ala. 82, 86, it was said: "An averment of the particular parish in which the house was situate, was contained in the form of indictment at common law. . . . Whether it was a necessary averment, on authority, it is difficult to say. . . . There occurs to us no sound reason for requiring an averment of the particular locality of the house, except as a statement of the venue of the offense. The statute dispenses with allegations of venue, requiring that on the trial it should be proved. . . . It is an intendment, or implication of law, that the offense stated in any indictment was committed in the county in which the indictment is found."

No greater preciseness than would be required in arson or burglary is needed to describe the location of the house in an information for letting a house to be used as a bawdy-house. People v. Saunders, 29 Mich. 269.

Frequenting opium den.— In a prosecution, under a statute, for being present at "any place, house, building, or tenement" where and when implements for smoking opium and preparations of opium are found, a complaint describing the place as "the rooms designated as suite two in the first story of the building situated and numbered sixty-three in Emerald Street in said city of Boston" is sufficient. Sufficient allegation.— An indictment for keeping a disorderly house, which charges that the house complained of was kept and maintained on a certain day, "and on other days before and since, and at which men and women of evil fame met and congregated, and there remained, both by day and night," gambling, quarreling, drinking, etc., sufficiently alleges a repetition of continuance of the alleged disorder. Com. v. Myers, 56 S. W. 412, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 1770.

Insufficient allegation.— As the offense of keeping a disorderly house consists of a repetition of improper conduct amounting to a common nuisance, an indictment charging a person with keeping a disorderly house "on the —— days of ——, 1894, and before the finding of this indictment," without containing any words charging a repetition or frewhich is required in alleging a single day,[7] and such exactness may be obtained by alleging that the offense was committed on a day certain and divers other days between two days certain.

b. Of Leasing. An indictment for letting a place to be used for purposes of prostitution must allege some day as the time of making the lease.[8]

B. For Keeping Disorderly House[9]— 1. In General — a. Connecting Defendant With Keeping. The indictment must connect defendant with the keeping of the house at the time said house is alleged to be disorderly.[10]

b. Allegation of Defendant's Knowledge. It has been held that in an indictment, under an ordinance declaratory of the common law, for keeping a common disorderly house no scienter need be alleged, for the specific charge of the offense contains within its terms the knowledge of the purpose.[11] quency of the acts of disorder, etc., is insufficient. Com. v. Bessler, 97 Ky. 498, 30 S. W. 1012, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 357.

7. Wells v. Com., 12 Gray (Mass.) 326.

Between a particular day and a previous day certain.— An indictment for keeping a house of ill fame may charge the offense as committed on a particular day, and divers days between that and another day previous thereto. People v. Russell, 110 Mich. 46, 67 N. W. 1099.

Between a particular day and a subsequent day certain.— A complaint charging that defendant, on a particular day, "and on divers other days and times between that day and the day of making the complaint, . . . did keep a certain house of ill-fame, there situate," etc., sufficiently alleges the time when the offense was committed. Com. v. Shea, 150 Mass. 314, 23 N. E. 47; Com. v. Langley, 14 Gray (Mass.) 21; State v. Bailey, 21 N. H. 343; Rex v. Higginson, 2 Burr. 1232. See 2 Chitty Cr. L. 40.

On a day certain and on divers other days and times during the same month.— Where defendant was convicted before a magistrate of the city of Halifax of the offense of keeping a disorderly house on the 21st day of April, 1901, and on divers other days and times during the month of April, 1901, it was held on habeas corpus that the offense as charged did not constitute more than one offense, and the word "keeping" implied a continuing offense. Rex v. Keeping, 34 Nova Scotia 442.

On a particular day and on previous days. — Where the time is alleged to have been on a particular day and on certain days and times before that day it is sufficient. Reg. v. Williams, 37 U. C. Q. B. 540.

In Massachusetts it has been held that it is no objection to a complaint for keeping and maintaining a tenement used as a house of ill fame and for the illegal sale and illegal keeping of intoxicating liquors that the time of the continuance of the offense as alleged in the complaint extends beyond a period of six months. Com. v. Clark, 145 Mass. 251, 13 N. E. 888.

8. An averment that defendant, on the 15th day of April, 1853, and during the five months next preceding that day, was in possession of a certain tenement, and then and there let the same, etc., is not sufficiently specific. The reference by the words "then and there" is necessarily to the whole time mentioned and not to any particular day. Com. v. Moore, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 600 [citing Archbold Cr. Pl. 37; 1 Chitty Cr. L. 217; 2 Hale P. C. 177]. Contra, Smith v. State, 6 Gill (Md.) 425.

10. People v. Miller, 81 N. Y. App. Div. 255, 80 N. Y. Suppl. 1070, 17 N. Y. Cr. 263. Under a statute providing that "[all houses] . . . used as a place of resort, where women are employed to draw custom, dance, or for purposes of prostitution . . . are nuisances," an information which charges that defendant kept a house which was then "used as a place of resort where women are employed to draw custom and to dance" is insufficient, in that it does not allege that women were employed to draw custom and to dance at the time defendant was said to have kept the house. State v. Brown, 7 Wash. 10, 34 Pac. 132.

Under a statute which declares a penalty for "any owner, lessee, or tenant" who shall keep a disorderly house, an indictment for that offense is fatally defective which fails to allege that the accused was the owner, lessee, or tenant of the house. Lamar v. State, 30 Tex. App. 693, 18 S. W. 788.

11. Brown v. Toledo, 5 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 210. In Com. v. Davis, 9 Ky. L. Rep. 494, it was held that an averment that accused "maintains a certain common house of ill-fame, . . . resorted to for the purposes of prostitution and lewdness, and in said house, for lucre and gain certain persons whose names to the grand jury are unknown, as well men as women of evil fame and repute and name, and of dishonest conversation to frequent and come together did cause," sufficiently charges that accused knew the character of those he thus caused to assemble. But see People v. Miller, 81 N. Y. App. Div. 255, 80 N. Y. Suppl. 1070, 17 N. Y. Cr. 263, where an information which did not show defendant's knowledge of the disorderly character of the house in question or of the disorderly conduct of certain women who were found therein, was held insufficient, under N. Y. Code Cr. Proc. §§ 148, 149, which provide that when an information is laid before a magistrate he must take the depositions of the witnesses, which must set forth the facts stated by the prosecutor and his

c. Allegation of Keeping For Gain. An allegation that the house is kept for lucre is not material and need not be made.[12]

d. That House Was "Resorted to." The averment that a house or tenement is "used" for the purposes forbidden by the statute is not equivalent to an averment that it was "resorted to," the term used by the statute.[13]

e. Concluding "to the Common Nuisance," Etc. At common law an indictment for keeping a bawdy-house should conclude "to the common nuisance," etc.;[14] but an indictment at common law charging the keeping of "a common gaming-house" is not vitiated for not concluding "to the common nuisance," etc.[15]

2. Common Disorderly House — a. General Charge Insufficient. A general charge of the offense, without specifying particular acts of disorder, is not good.[16]

b. Common-Law Form. The common-law form of indictment for keeping a common[17] disorderly house alleges the bringing together of certain ill-disposed persons of evil name and fame and then sets out the disorderly acts within or about the house.[18] witnesses tending to establish the commission of the crime and the guilt of defendant.

Under statutes prohibiting "houses of ill fame resorted to" where the statute is entitled "Of offenses against chastity, morality, and decency," such a conclusion is not necessary. The offense is keeping a house not as "a common nuisance," but as an offense against "chastity," etc. Moreover the offense was charged in the language of the statute. State v. Stevens, 40 Me. 559. Under a statute, however, which declares a house of ill fame, "resorted to," etc., a nuisance, an indictment for keeping such a house which does not allege it to be a common nuisance is insufficient (Com. v. Davis, 11 Gray (Mass.) 48); but if the indictment alleges that the house was kept to the common nuisance of all good citizens, it need not expressly allege that defendant kept a common nuisance (Wells v. Com., 12 Gray (Mass.) 326 [distinguishing Com. v. Davis, 11 Gray (Mass.) 48, where the words, "to the common nuisance," etc., did not appear]). See Com. v. Hart, 10 Gray (Mass.) 465, where indictment charged the keeping of the nuisance and concluded "to the common nuisance."

"Did greatly annoy passers," etc.— An indictment charging defendant with keeping a house on the highway in the city of Houston, in the county of Harris, "as, and for a resort for evil-disposed, drunken and disorderly persons; and said house was then and there, with the consent of said John Flynn, defendant, resorted to by persons" who, by loud talking, swearing, etc., did greatly annoy passers upon the highway and citizens in the neighborhood, sufficiently charges a common nuisance under Paschal Dig. art. 2034. State v. Flynn, 35 Tex. 354.

"To the disturbance of others."— An indictment alleging that defendant kept a house of ill fame, resorted to for the purpose of prostitution and lewdness, "and at which prostitution and lewdness were carried on and permitted, to the disturbance of others," sufficiently charges the offense of nuisance under Iowa Code (1873), § 4091. State v. Odell, 42 Iowa 75; State v. Alderman, 40 Iowa 375.

15. As the offense in its own nature imports that it is a nuisance. C. 608, holding that an indictment charging the keeping of an "ill-governed" house, and omitting to state that it was "to the common nuisance," etc., may sustain a conviction for keeping a "disorderly house."

Minnesota.— State v. Grosofski, 89 Minn. 343, 94 N. W. 1077, where the common-law form is substantially followed, the indictment ending with "by which the peace, comfort or decency of a neighborhood is habitually disturbed." These last words are in the terms of the statute defining the offense of keeping a disorderly house.

c. Charging Statutory Offense. As has been stated, a charge in the language of the statute is usually sufficient.[19]

d. Averments as to Frequenters and Inmates. It is not necessary to allege the character of the persons who frequent the house.[20] Nor is it necessary that the indictment for keeping a common disorderly house[21] or a bawdy-house[22] should state the names of frequenters or of inmates[23] of the house.

3. BAWDY-HOUSE. An indictment at common law[24] for keeping a bawdy-house which does not aver that the persons who frequented the house were of both sexes insufficiently charges the keeping of a bawdy-house.[25] Under a statute which provides that if any person shall maintain and keep a lewd house or place for the practice of fornication or adultery, etc., an indictment for keeping a lewd house, not alleging that the house was kept for purposes of fornication by the owner or any one else, is not good.[26]

4. GAMING-HOUSE. By the better opinion an indictment which charges generally the offense of keeping a gaming-house is insufficient without stating what was transacted at the house.[27] At common law the indictment should charge

W. 340; Thompson v. State, 2 Tex. App. 82.

Place for fighting game cocks.— An indictment which alleges that defendant did keep a certain common, ill governed, and disorderly house, and, being proprietor of said house, did keep and use a room therein, and did "then and there willfully permit the same to be used and occupied for baiting and fighting certain birds, to wit, game-cocks," is sufficient to charge the offense of keeping a place for fighting any bird or animal, which is made a misdemeanor by N. Y. Pen. Code, § 665. People v. Klock, 48 Hun (N. Y.) 275.

20. State v. Dame, 60 N. H. 479, 49 Am. Rep. 331. defendant as keeper of a "common gaming-house."[28] In such an indictment it is not essential to set out what particular games were carried on in the house by its patrons.[29] A common-law indictment for keeping a "common gaming-house" is not vitiated by concluding "against the form of the statute."[30]

5. TIPPLING-HOUSE. An information for keeping a tippling-house or a house in which intoxicating liquors are sold need not allege that the disorderly conduct was caused by defendant's sale of liquors or was the result thereof.[31]

6. DISORDERLY THEATER. An indictment which charges that defendant was the owner and manager of a theater and dance house where liquors are sold and that he unlawfully employs therein lewd women and prostitutes is sufficient.[32]

C. For Letting House Used as Disorderly House[33] — 1. AVERMENTS AS TO LESSOR. Some authorities hold that an indictment at common law against one who leases a house for bawdy purposes must charge him as a keeper of the house;[34] others that he may be charged simply as lessor.[35] An indictment for letting a house for purposes of prostitution must aver that defendant was the owner or controller of the property when it was let.[36] Again where a statute provides that it is sufficient to show that a building is generally reputed in the neighborhood to be a place of assignation for men and women, in a prosecution against the owner of such building it is not necessary to allege knowledge of such use.[37]

2. AVERMENTS AS TO LESSEE. The indictment should give the name of the lessee or state some reason for not giving it, and it must aver that the lessee

101, 103, 45 Am. Dec. 449, Bronson, C. J., said: "I do not think the general charge would be enough in an indictment at the common law," and cited Archbold Cr. Pl. 600, and 3 Chitty Cr. L. 673, 674, to the effect that precedents require further allegations such as "that the defendant did cause and procure divers idle and evil disposed persons to frequent the house, and play at illegal games, &c.; and sometimes, disturbances and breaches of the peace are added." See supra, XI, B, 2. And see State v. Maurer, 7 Iowa 406, for an indictment held to sufficiently charge the keeping of a gaming-house.

28. An averment in an indictment that a person has kept and maintained a tenement used for illegal gaming is insufficient. Com. v. Stahl, 7 Allen (Mass.) 303. See Archbold Cr. Pl. (5th Am. ed.) 637.

29. Vanderworker v. State, 13 Ark. 700. And compare People v. Jackson, 3 Den. (N. Y.) 101, 45 Am. Dec. 449, holding that an indictment which charges that defendant kept a common gaming-house; to-wit, a place where tickets in unauthorized lotteries were sold, is bad. A place where tickets in lotteries are sold is not a gaming-house, admitting that a general charge of keeping a common gaming-house is sufficient. The latter part of the count cannot be rejected as surplusage for it tells what was meant by the general charge.

accepted the lease.[38] Where the use and occupation of the house by the tenant is shown by the indictment, an averment in so many words that the house was in fact so used and occupied is not necessary.[39]

D. For Frequenting Disorderly House — 1. BAWDY-HOUSE. An indictment[40] at common law for frequenting and haunting houses of ill fame must expressly charge that "the defendant, knowing the house to be a house of ill fame, did openly and notoriously haunt and frequent the same."[41]

2. OPIUM DEN. Unless the statute requires it,[42] it is not necessary to allege who is the keeper of the opium den, or that defendant was knowingly, willingly, or wantonly present;[43] nor need the mode of using the drug[44] or the instruments or preparations for smoking[45] be specified or described. Under a statute which forbids the resorting to a house, room, or apartment kept "to be used as a place of resort," an indictment is fatally defective which attempts to charge the offense without the words "a place of resort."[46] Under a statute which makes it unlawful for any person to frequent an opium den, an indictment which charges that defendant on or about a day named did unlawfully and feloniously enter and frequent, etc., is sufficient.[47]

E. Variance Between Complaint and Information. An information which charges the keeping of a house on a particular day and on divers other days between that day and a date mentioned is not invalidated by the fact that the complaint before the justice charged the offense as having been committed on the particular day only.[48]

XII. BILL OF PARTICULARS.

Where the keeping of a bawdy-house is charged with substantially the same particularity as in the common-law form, a motion for a bill of particulars will be overruled.[49]

XIII. VARIANCE BETWEEN ALLEGATIONS AND PROOF.

44. Therefore an objection to an indictment which charges defendant with resorting to such a place for the purpose of indulging in the use of opium by "smoking or otherwise" is fatal on account of being in the disjunctive, and is untenable. It is the intent to use opium that gives character to the act. The words "by smoking or otherwise" are wholly unessential and may be rejected as surplusage. State v. On Gee How, 15 Nev. 184.

47. State v. Ah Sam, 14 Oreg. 347, 13 Pac. 303. It was objected in this case that "frequent" meant "habit," which could not be contracted in one day. The court said this was a question of evidence, not of pleading; that in cases where the offense is in its nature continuing from day to day a particular act so to speak may be constituted out of the series of minor acts which minor acts may be committed on different days. There being no impossibility in law that all may really occur on one day, the allegation of a single day is sufficient.

XIV. EVIDENCE.

A. Admissibility — 1. To Show Keeping — a. In General — (I) Confining Proof to Allegations. Keeping a bawdy-house being a local offense, under an indictment which describes the offense as committed in a certain town, the prosecution is confined in its proof to the town;[53] and under an indictment containing a single count it is error to admit proof of the keeping of more than one house in the town.[54] So under an indictment for keeping a tippling-house, evidence that the upper rooms of the house were rented to, used, and kept by a certain woman as a bawdy-house is inadmissible.[55] But proof of events[56] occurring in the house and of its reputation[57] prior to the time covered by the indictment is competent, if such proof is confined to the time within the period of limitation and is not within the time of a previous conviction or acquittal.[58]

(II) Admissions or Confessions. The admissions of defendant may be received in evidence to show his connection with the house[59] or to show the character of the house.[60]

(III) Acts Done Outside House. Whether the disorderly conduct of persons who are outside the house is admissible may depend upon various considerations, such as the distance from the house at which they occurred[61] or the nature of the conduct.[62] But where defendant is charged as keeper, acts done by him street, and the proof is that the house is on "North Sixth" street, the variance is immaterial, and cannot prejudice the rights of defendant. State v. Hendricks, 15 Mont. 194, 39 Pac. 93, 48 Am. St. Rep. 666.

51. Com. v. Harrington, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 26. But it is reprehensible to give a date which is unreasonably remote from the true one, although the variance may not be such as to lead to a reversal for receiving the proof. People v. Saunders, 29 Mich. 269.

Statements made by defendant away from house.— Testimony that a few days before his arrest defendant was traveling on a railroad; that he had with him two women, whom he admitted to be prostitutes; and that he said he was taking them to the house in question is admissible, as it tended to show that the house was a bawdy-house. outside and away from the house in furtherance of the management or of the conducting of the house are admissible.[63] So where one accused of being a keeper of a disorderly house defends on the theory that he is only a creditor of the person he alleges to be the real proprietor, written securities showing the alleged relation of debtor and creditor are admissible.[64]

b. Common Disorderly House. Evidence of the annoyance which a disorderly house causes a neighborhood is admissible.[65] So evidence that defendant secreted a person in his house whom an officer of the law was seeking is admissible to show that a house is disorderly.[66]

c. Bawdy-House — (I) FREQUENTING BY MEN. The fact that men frequented the place at all hours of the day and of the night[67] and evidence of their number, their purpose in going and what they did there[68] are admissible upon a trial for keeping a bawdy-house.

(II) REPUTATION OF HOUSE. Under common-law principles it would seem that evidence of the general reputation of a house would be inadmissible upon the issue of whether it is a bawdy-house, and so quite a number of authorities hold;[69] but very many authorities hold that the reputation of the house is admis-

Acts of unchastity by frequenters elsewhere.— Upon trial for maintaining a disorderly house by permitting lewd persons to frequent it, evidence, not only of the bad reputation of the women resorting there, but of special acts of unchastity committed by them elsewhere than on the premises in question, is admissible. If not competent, the error in the admission of such evidence is cured if defendant himself proves that the women were street-walkers, of bad reputation, and that they had been seen in houses of prostitution. Showing the locus in quo.— Testimony of a witness that he could not identify the land on which the house in question stood from the recitals made in a deed to defendant, but nevertheless he could tell from the references within the instrument that the land described in the deed was the same as that upon which defendant lived is not objectionable, especially where there is not any question as to the locus in quo of the alleged disorderly house. Hearsay.— Evidence of the reputation of the house is inadmissible, because it is mere hearsay. "The house must be proved to be a house of ill-fame by facts and not by fame," sible.[70] And evidence of the reputation of the house before the day alleged in the indictment or information has been held admissible,[71] but not of its reputation subsequently.[72] Where a statute forbids the keeping of a "house of ill fame," some authorities hold that proof of the "ill fame" is material;[73] but others hold that the term "house of ill fame" is merely descriptive of the character of the house and does not refer to the repute of the house and that therefore the rule against admitting such hearsay evidence is not thereby changed.[74]

Effect of discontinuance of former trial as to admissibility of evidence of reputation before then.—Where a prosecution for the keeping of the same house of ill fame by the accused at a former time had previously been brought, and on payment of the cost by the accused had been discontinued by the attorney for the state, it was held that this constituted no objection to evidence in a later prosecution as to the reputation of the house at the time of and prior to the former prosecution. The nolle like a nonsuit or a discontinuance in a civil suit left the matter just where it stood before the commencement of the prosecution, and payment of costs had no effect upon the legal operation of the proceedings. State v. Main, 31 Conn. 572.

Evidence as to reputation on cross-examination.— Where witnesses testify on direct examination that the house in question did not have the reputation of a house of ill fame, it is proper on a cross-examination to show that they were not likely by occupation, habit, interest, or relations to know of its reputation. Where a witness of defendant, who was charged with keeping a house of ill fame, gave evidence in chief that defendant was reputed to be a charitably disposed person, was kind to those who were sick and in distress, and that he had never seen anything out of the way at her house, it was in the discretion of the court to allow such witness to be questioned on cross-examination as to the reputation of the house, and the admission of such questions was not reversible error. The fact that the inmates were daughters of the keeper and on account of that relation were entitled to remain in the house did not authorize them to turn it into a brothel nor destroy the inferential effect of their lewd conduct as tending to show the character of the house. (B) Former Convictions of Similar Offenses. To prove reputation, where reputation is admissible, evidence of defendant's conviction for offenses of the same general character has been held admissible.[81] Where, however, the record shows that defendant has appealed from the judgment and there is no evidence as to the determination of the appeal, it is error to admit the judgment.[82]

(V) Acts and Conversation of Inmates and Frequenters—(A) In General. The character of the conversation in and about the house[83] of the women who frequent it and their acts[84] are admissible in evidence.

Admissible upon a proper foundation.— When it has been shown on trial of a person accused of keeping a bawdy-house that the inmates of the house have reputations for unchastity and that the house is frequented by dissolute persons, the reputation of defendant for unchastity is admissible. Conversation not in presence of keeper.— Testimony of an omnibus driver that he took women to the house, and that a woman there told him, if he "saw any boys that wanted to come over to fetch them," is competent, although the conversation was not had in defendant's presence, since it tended to show the character of the women who frequented the house and their purpose in going there. Quarrel between man and woman — Epithets.— Evidence that a woman who frequented defendant's house, and whose reputation for chastity had been shown to be bad, had quarreled with a man, whom she accused of calling her a whore, and that defendant was present and had taken from the man a poker which he held in his hand was competent to show the character of the women in the house and the character of their conversation. visitors,[86] and the fact that the inmates had been convicted on a charge of being prostitutes and that defendant had gone bail for them[87] are admissible to show defendant keeper's knowledge of the character of his house.

d. Gaming-House. The acts of betting and gaming by the inmates and frequenters and what was said at the time as a part of those acts are admissible to establish the character of the house, irrespective of whether the alleged keeper was present or not.[88] Under an indictment against the keeper of a room in which common gaming is carried on for keeping a disorderly house, evidence of his keeping a faro bank therein may be given.[89]

e. Theater. Upon trial for conducting a theater in a disorderly manner, that defendant had been granted a license to give theatrical entertainments is immaterial;[90] and the rules and regulations posted in the house and the fact that the plays seen there are played at other theaters are inadmissible.[91] So the fact that defendant had repeatedly discharged disreputable employees upon having notice of their character is inadmissible.[92]

2. Where Defendant Is Charged as Lessor. Upon a trial for leasing a house to be used as a house of prostitution, the evil repute of the lessee and of her visitors and inmates is admissible to show the guilty knowledge of the lessor.[93]

B. Sufficiency — 1. Of Proof of Keeping — a. In General — (I) Proof of All Allegations. It is not necessary to prove all the facts alleged in the indictment, but only such as are material.[94] So where in an indictment for keeping a disorderly house it is charged in the same count that the house is several of the different specific kinds of a disorderly house, it is not necessary to prove every kind alleged.[95]

In the capacity defined by statute.— Where a statute prescribes a penalty against one "as owner, tenant, or lessee" of a house that is shown to overcome the presumption of defendant's innocence.[97] Common reputation or rumor, when admissible, is not sufficient to prove that the accused is the keeper of the house in question.[98]

b. Common Disorderly House — (i) Jurisdiction and Venue. It must appear upon trial that the offense was committed within the jurisdiction of the court.[99]

(ii) Resort of Bad Characters. To sustain an indictment for keeping a common disorderly house, it is sufficient to show that it is the resort of immoral persons, as drunkards and prostitutes,[1] particularly when such persons were there guilty of immoral,[2] lascivious,[3] or indecent[4] acts or used obscene or indecent language.[5] It is unnecessary to prove that the objectionable, disorderly, or lewd conduct in the house was visible from the exterior.[6] The common-law offense of keeping a disorderly house is sufficiently proved by showing that it was resorted to by persons for the purpose of prostitution.[7]

Owner's agent having control.— Under Tex. Code Cr. Proc. (1895) art. 426, providing that where one person owns the property and another has control of the same, the ownership thereof may be alleged to be in either, an allegation of ownership in defendant in an indictment for permitting a disorderly house to be kept on the premises was sustained by the evidence that he was the agent of the owner and rented the same. Ownership by one who claims to be only servant.— Where there was evidence that the person accused of maintaining a lewd house was jointly interested with his alleged employer in the business carried on, and that the accused lived in the house, collected the rents, and exercised acts of ownership about the building, and had stated before the trial that he was a partner with the other person, a verdict of conviction will not be set aside, although defendant claimed that he was merely his servant. Disorderly theater — Defendant's knowledge of character of women employed.— On the prosecution of the manager of a theater for keeping a disorderly house, under a statute forbidding a manager of a theater to employ prostitutes in his theater, the state proved that the women employed in the theater were prostitutes, and had borne that reputation for several years before their employment by defendant; that their reputations for chastity were not only bad, but it had been so testified to in trials in defendant's presence, while he had them in his employ; and that after the theater was over it was their custom to conduct themselves in an indecent manner with the patrons. It was held that such facts warranted a conviction, without positive proof of actual knowledge by defendant of the acts and doings of the women he employed, since the law requires him to use reasonable diligence to ascertain their character, and all that the state need do is to prove facts which would put a reasonable man on notice. (III) DISTURBANCE OF NEIGHBORHOOD. It is not necessary to prove that all persons in the neighborhood or that all who passed the alleged disorderly house were annoyed.[8] Evidence of crowds of disorderly persons going in and out of[9] or remaining in and about the house[10] and causing frequent annoyance to the neighborhood is sufficient to sustain the charge of keeping a disorderly house.

c. Bawdy-House — (I) NECESSARY PROOF — (A) A Resort. In a prosecution under a statute for keeping a "house of ill-fame resorted to for purposes of prostitution" it is necessary to prove that the house was the actual resort of evil persons for the lewd purposes set out in the law;[11] but such a statute does not require that the house be used habitually or for any considerable length of time for the prohibited purposes.[12] Evidence of frequent acts of prostitution by defendant with men who resorted there and of the repute of house as being a bawdy-house is sufficient without showing that other lewd women resorted there.[13] It is not necessary to prove acts of copulation.[14]

(B) Proof of Ill Fame. Where a statute prohibits the keeping of a house of ill fame resorted to for prostitution and lewdness, it has been held in a few jurisdictions that it is necessary to prove ill fame, that is, the bad reputation of, as well as the actual character of, the house.[15]

city, it is necessary, to authorize the fines for keeping such a house, to prove that the notice was given and that the house was used for the prohibited purposes.[16]

(II) Unnecessary Proof—(A) Keeping For Gain. To sustain an indictment for keeping a house of ill fame, it is not necessary to prove that it was kept for lucre or gain.[17]

(B) Conducting Openly. It is not necessary to prove that the house was conducted openly and notoriously; it being a nuisance per se,[18] it is sufficient if it is carried on in private.[19]

(III) Proof of Aiding and Abetting. Proof that the accused aided or assisted others in keeping a house of ill fame sufficiently sustains an information charging the keeping of such a house.[20]

(IV) Reputation of House and Frequenters. Although a few cases hold that the reputation of a house is sufficient proof of its being bawdy,[21] the general rule is that such evidence is not alone sufficient to determine its character;[22] but where, besides the ill repute of the house, there is evidence of its being resorted to by women of bad reputation and by men, the proof is sufficient to draw an inference as to the bawdy character of the house.[23]

(V) Proof of Allegations as to Time. Where the indictment specifies the time during which a house of ill fame was kept, proof of keeping upon any day within such time is sufficient.[24]

St. Rep. 401; State v. Toombs, 79 Iowa 741, 45 N. W. 300; State v. Brunell, 29 Wis. 435. On a trial for keeping a bawdy-house, there was evidence that defendant kept a boarding-house and saloon; that the second story of the house was frequented by men of questionable character; that a woman of notoriously bad repute for chastity drank and played cards with the callers upstairs; that there was a bed upstairs, to the joint occupancy of which with herself she occasionally invited callers. It was held that the evidence supported a conviction. State v. Dudley, 56 Mo. App. 450. Indeed it has been held sufficient proof of the character of the house that it was resorted to by women of lewd reputations and by men, without any proof of the reputation of the house. State v. Schaffer, 74 Iowa 704, 39 N. W. 89; Nelson v. Territory, 5 Okla. 512, 49 Pac. 920.

Sign displayed on house contrary to statute — Knowledge on part of defendant. Where by statute it is a felony to display the sign of an honest occupation on a house used as a bawdy-house, whereby any decent person may be inveigled into such house, and where upon trial for such an offense there is evidence tending to prove bawdy conduct of some of his female boarders, defendant's knowledge of such conduct must be proved; but it is not necessary upon such a trial to prove that some decent person was inveigled into the house; for the offense consists in displaying the sign. that persons of ill repute were permitted to remain upon the premises and become intoxicated is sufficient.[27]

2. Of Proof of Letting — a. Necessary Proof. In a prosecution for leasing premises to be used as a bawdy-house or as a common disorderly house, it is necessary to prove that defendant knew for what purpose his house was to be used,[28] that he was the owner or had control of the house,[29] and that the house actually was of the character alleged.[30]

b. Reputation of House, Lessee, and Inmates. As when keeping a bawdy-house was the subject of the criminal charge,[31] so also, when leasing or permitting a house to be used as a bawdy-house is the offense to be tried, the evil repute of the house is not sufficient to substantiate such charge;[32] nor is evidence of the bad reputation of the lessee and of other women seen in the house sufficient.[33]

3. Proof of Being Inmate or Frequenter. The charge of being found in a reputed house of prostitution is sustained by proof of defendant's having daily sexual intercourse there with men and by her giving the money thus earned to the person who placed her in the house.[34]

XV. TRIAL.

In most respects trials upon indictments for keeping disorderly houses and kindred offenses are governed by the same principles of law as any other criminal

A refusal to reënter and take possession upon being notified of the use to which his premises are being used by his lessee is not sufficient to support a conviction of the owner who had leased his property innocently and in good faith. Crofton v. State, 25 Ohio St. 249.

The continued receipt of rent, and a persistence in enlarging the term of a disorderly tenant who earns the means of paying rent by misconduct visible to the landlord, may amount to very satisfactory evidence that the latter procures and sanctions the disorderly conduct. State v. Williams, 30 N. J. L. 102.

When the owner had been in court when his tenant was arraigned for keeping a bawdy-house and when the owner had been actually notified that his tenant was keeping a bawdy-house in his property, the owner's knowledge of the use of his premises was sufficiently proved. People v. Wallach, 15 N. Y. Suppl. 226.

Where it is shown that the reputation of the house is notorious in the neighborhood in which defendant resides, a prima facie case of knowledge is established, and it devolves on defendant to show that he had no knowledge. Graeter v. State, 105 Ind. 271, 4 N. E. 461.

29. Rhodes v. Com., 12 Ky. L. Rep. 717.

30. That is, a house alleged to be rented as a bawdy-house must be shown to be one in fact. Drake v. State, 14 Nebr. 535, 17 N. W. 117.

Actual use of a house as a bawdy-house must be shown either directly or by circumstances of sufficient significance. The evil reputation of the lessee, her visitors, and inmates, are not sufficient to show the actual use of the premises. People v. Saunders, 29 Mich. 269.

Opium joint.— Where a statute makes it a misdemeanor to maintain a place where opium is smoked by other persons, it is necessary to prove that others than defendant keeper of such place did the smoking. People v. Reed, 46 N. Y. App. Div. 625, 61 N. Y. Suppl. 520, 14 N. Y. Cr. 326.

"It was enough that, in addition to the bad reputation which the house was shown to bear, notwithstanding no family lived in it, some of its rooms were supplied with beds and some little furniture, and the walls hung with indecent pictures; that it had a bar at which intoxicating drinks were sold, and was the resort, especially on Sabbath days and in the night-time, of men and women of lewd and lascivious character, many of the women being known prostitutes and keepers and occupants of places of ill fame in the city of Lincoln, who, while visiting this house, indulged in drunken revelry and licentious practices fit only for a brothel, which the evidence of what transpired there clearly shows it to have been." Drake v. State, 14 Nebr. 535, 538, 17 N. W. 117.

Amount of rent.— Where there is no evidence to show that the rent received for the house is extravagant, the jury cannot infer guilt from the amount of rent. People v. Saunders, 29 Mich. 269.

Frequenting.— Defendant was sixty-nine years old, infirm, and unable to earn his livelihood, and was a man of good morals and a church member. One of his children, with whom he was living, turned him out of the house, and he thereupon conveyed all his property, worth about one thousand five hundred dollars, to a prostitute, under an agreement whereby she was to give him three meals a day, furnish him a room in which to sleep, and upon his death inter him decently by the side of his wife's grave; and he was to do as much work for her as his strength would permit. Pursuant to said agreement, he took up his residence at her home, commonly known as a house of ill fame, and used for purposes of prostitution. Whether or not he knew of the character of the woman and her house when he made the arrangement did not fully appear; but he had sold her vegetables at her house for two or three years prior thereto. It was not shown that he was connected with any lewdness, that he was guilty of any acts of carnal intercourse, or that he actively participated in any acts of prostitution. It was held that a conviction under Ind. Rev. St. (1881) § 2002, as amended by Acts (1889), 337, for frequenting and visiting a house of ill fame, and associating with "females known or reputed as prostitutes," was warranted by the evidence. Weideman v. State, 4 Ind. App. 397, 30 N. E. 920.

35. See CRIMINAL LAW, 12 Cyc. 504 et seq.

36. Order of proof.— The necessary proof of defendant's connection with the house may be shown at any time before the closing of prosecution's evidence. Bindernagle v. State, 60 N. J. L. 307, 37 Atl. 619, holding that it is not necessary that defendant's connection with the house be shown before proof of acts within the house which tend to prove its character.

37. Questions for jury.—Whether the proof is sufficient to establish the existence of a disorderly house, or whether it is sufficient to charge defendant, alleged to be the keeper, with the management and control of the house, are questions which are solely within the province of the jury to determine. Bindernagle v. State, 60 N. J. L. 307, 37 Atl. 619. Whether satisfactory evidence has been produced to show that defendant, the alleged keeper of a disorderly house, has been guilty of habitually permitting such acts, sufficient occurrence of which would bring the house within the definition of a disorderly house, is a question for the jury. Brown v. State, 49 N. J. L. 61, 7 Atl. 340.

38. See CRIMINAL LAW, 12 Cyc. 611 et seq.

Instructions must be responsive to the indictment or information. Ross v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1896) 33 S. W. 972. And see Rhodes v. Com., 12 Ky. L. Rep. 717, instruction as to a "disorderly house" upon a charge of "keeping a bawdy-house." But see Bass v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1902) 66 S. W. 558 (instructions fuller than the charge in the complaint); Dailey v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1900) 55 S. W. 821 (presenting two phases of the same statute).

As to time.— Where an indictment alleges the keeping of a disorderly house from Oct. 22, 1887, and on each day thereafter, to Oct. 28, 1887, it is error for the court to instruct the jury that the indictment charges the keeping of the house from Oct. 8 to Jan. 31, 1888. Fleming v. State, 28 Tex. App. 234, 12 S. W. 605.

"Concerned in" keeping under a charge of keeping.— Upon a trial for keeping a disorderly house, the jury were instructed as follows: "If the jury believe from the evidence that the defendant did, in Hunt county, Texas, on or about the fourth day of May, 1886, either alone or in connection with another, keep a disorderly house, or was in any way concerned in keeping a disorderly house, you will find him guilty, and assess his punishment," etc. It was held correct, because keeping and being concerned in keeping a disorderly house amount to one and the same thing, within the meaning of the law. Stone v. State, 22 Tex. App. 185, 2 S. W. 585. In Ross v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1902) 70 S. W. 543, a charge predicated on the idea that defendant was "concerned in keeping" when the evidence showed only that defendant was owner and keeper worked no harm to defendant.

39. Defining offense.— Although it is the duty of the court to define the crime to the jury (Nelson v. Territory, 5 Okla. 512, 49 Pac. 920), a formal definition is not required; it is sufficient to inform the jury with sufficient fulness and accuracy what acts constitute the offense (State v. Clark, 78 Iowa 492, 43 N. W. 273). And compare Bass v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1902) 66 S. W. 558 (instruction not misleading as to knowledge of defendant); Sparks v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1899) 51 S. W. 1120 (instruction not confining crime to limits set by statute).

A definition which is not technically correct is not necessarily error if not misleading. State v. Toombs, 79 Iowa 741, 45 N. W. 300.

Defining term "common prostitute."— Under the statute punishing keepers of disorderly houses there was no error in refusing to define the term "common prostitute," the offense under the statute not requiring that prostitution should be plied indiscriminately by the inmates. Dailey v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1900) 55 S. W. 821.

"Pimp" wrongly defined.— It is error to charge, in a prosecution for keeping a house of ill fame, that "a pimp is a man who has intercourse with a loose woman, and usually she is taking care of him and supporting him"; and that the fact that defendant called a man "her pimp" established "a case of unwarranted sexual intercourse," the definition being erroneous, and the instruction in-instructions upon the evidence generally,[40] instructions weighing the evidence,[41] charges according to request,[42] or instructions constituting harmless error;[43] to the validity and effect of verdicts;[44] to the validity and effect of judgments and convictions;[45] to motions in arrest of judgment;[46] to motions for new trial,[47] etc.

vading the province of the jury. People v. Gastro, 75 Mich. 127, 42 N. W. 937.

Refusing to instruct as to the meaning of the word "prostitution," in a prosecution for keeping a disorderly house for the purpose of public prostitution, is not a fatal error. The meaning of the word is too well understood. Bigby v. State, 5 Tex. App. 101.

Whole charge to be considered.— In determining whether the court has properly defined the offense in its charge to the jury, the instructions must be considered as a whole, not in fragmentary parts. Territory v. Chartrand, 1 Dak. 379, 46 N. W. 583; People v. Russell, 110 Mich. 46, 67 N. W. 1099.

40. Instructions on the evidence.— Instructions should not be so framed that the jury can infer all the elements of the offense from a proof of part of them. O'Brien v. People, 28 Mich. 213.

41. Weighing the evidence.— It is error in the course of the instructions for the court to invade the province of the jury by weighing the evidence (People v. Gastro, 75 Mich. 127, 42 N. W. 937; Stone v. State, 22 Tex. App. 185, 2 S. W. 585. And see People v. Wells, 112 Mich. 648, 71 N. W. 176, as to conduct of defendant and associates on the street; Forbes v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. 24, 29 S. W. 784, as to weight of particular acts of prostitution); or by showing how it regards certain evidence (State v. Emblem, 44 W. Va. 521, 29 S. E. 1031).

Instruction foreclosing inquiry as to character of a house.— Upon a prosecution under Iowa Code, § 4939, for keeping a house of ill fame, the court instructed that in considering whether the house was a house of ill fame the jury should carefully consider its reputation, the actions of those visiting it, the time they did so, the reputation of the inmates of the house as well as the reputation of those who visited the house, and all the facts and circumstances shown in evidence, and from these determine the real character of the house "charged in the indictment to be a house of ill fame." It was held that the contention that the instruction foreclosed all inquiry regarding the character of the house was without merit and that the instruction was correct. State v. Beebe, 115 Iowa 128, 88 N. W. 358.

42. Charging according to request.— Proper requests to charge the jury as to matters not touched upon by the court in its general instructions should be granted. Gamel v. State, 21 Tex. App. 357, 17 S. W. 158. Where, however, the general instructions embrace substantially, but in different language, all the material instructions requested by defendant, he has no ground of exception. Com. v. Cobb, 120 Mass. 356; Stratton v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1898) 44 S. W. 506; Johnson v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1893) 21 S. W. 929.

43. Harmless error.— An instruction which is impertinent or is an inapplicable statement of the law is not reversible error where it could not have misled the jury and where the law was elsewhere fully and accurately stated. Graeter v. State, 105 Ind. 271, 4 N. E. 461; State v. Russell, 95 Iowa 406; 64 N. W. 281; State v. Hendricks, 15 Mont. 194, 39 Pac. 93, 48 Am. St. Rep. 666; Ross v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1902) 70 S. W. 543.

Cautionary instruction as to real issue.— On a prosecution for keeping a house of ill fame, evidence having been elicited affecting defendant's character for chastity, and that she had been charged with selling liquor illegally, a cautionary instruction that, "however bad she may be, or however guilty of other offenses, the question for you to determine is whether she is guilty of the offense charged," was not improper. People v. Wells, 112 Mich 648, 71 N. W. 176.

Erroneous instruction as to amount of fine. — On a trial for keeping a disorderly house, the punishment for which is fixed by Tex. Pen. Code, art. 341, at a fine of not less than one hundred dollars, nor more than five hundred, it was error to instruct the jury if they found defendant guilty, to assess his fine at two hundred dollars. Holland v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1895) 29 S. W. 786.

44. Verdict.— Upon an indictment charging that defendant kept a disorderly house to the common nuisance, etc., a verdict that "defendant kept a disorderly house and disturbed his neighbors" is bad. Hunter v. Com., 2 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 298.

45. On a verdict finding the accused guilty of keeping a disorderly house a judgment decreeing the establishment to be a nuisance and ordering the sheriff to abate it is void. Brooks v. State, 4 Tex. App. 567. Compare State v. Mullen, 35 Iowa 199.

A conviction for keeping a disorderly house which does not name a place where the offense was committed is void on its face for uncertainty. And if the conviction contains no adjudication of forfeiture of the fine imposed it is defective. Reg. v. Cyr, 12 Ont. Pr. 24.

Form of judgment see People v. Buchanan, 1 Ida. 681; Reg. v. Munro, 24 U. C. Q. B. 44.

46. A motion in arrest of judgment will not be sustained because the proof on the trial did not show that the house charged to have been disorderly was situated in the ward of the city that was alleged. Jacobowsky v. People, 6 Hun (N. Y.) 524.

47. A motion for a new trial upon an affidavit that affiant was defendant's husband living with her prior and subsequent to the time she was alleged to have kept the house will not be granted. Curry v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1893) 24 S. W. 516.

Appeal.— A prosecution for being an inmate of a bawdy-house is under Can. Cr.

XVI. PUNISHMENT.

At common law the keeping of a bawdy-house was punished with fine and imprisonment, and such other infamous punishment as the pillory, etc., as the court in its discretion should inflict.[48] The punishment of one convicted of keeping a disorderly house or of a kindred offense is now generally regulated by statute.[49]

XVII. SUPPRESSION.

A house used for prostitution in the city of New Orleans, without the limits prescribed by ordinance, may be proceeded against and closed to such purposes and its occupants forced to remove, on notice from the mayor to that effect.[50]

DISORDERLY PERSON. In common parlance, a person guilty of disorderly conduct.[1] (See, generally, BREACH OF THE PEACE; DISORDERLY CONDUCT; DISORDERLY HOUSES; VAGRANCY.)

DISPARAGEMENT. In old English law, an injury by union or comparison with some person or thing of inferior rank or excellence.[2] (Disparagement: Of Title, see ESTOPPEL; LANDLORD AND TENANT.)

Code (1892), § 783, not under the vagrancy act and no appeal lies under § 808. Reg. v. Nixon, 19 Can. L. T. 344.

Removal by certiorari.— Under 25 Geo. 2, c. 36, § 10, which enacts "that no indictment which shall . . . be preferred against any person for keeping a bawdy house, gaming house, or other disorderly house, shall be removed by any writ of certiorari into any other court; but such indictment shall be heard, tried and finally determined, at the same general or quarter sessions or assizes, where such indictment shall have been preferred (unless the Court shall think proper, upon cause shown, to adjourn the same), any such writ or allowance thereof notwithstanding," no indictment for keeping a disorderly house can be removed by certiorari, whether the indictment is at the prosecution of a constable or at the instance of a private individual. Reg. v. Sanders, 9 Q. B. 235, 237, 10 Jur. 1080, 15 L. J. M. C. 158, 58 E. C. L. 235.

Under Alabama code.— The punishment for the common-law offense of keeping a bawdy-house not being "particularly specified" in the revised code, the court on conviction may properly award the punishment authorized by section 3754 thereof. Ex p. Birchfield, 52 Ala. 377.

Nuisance abated — Nominal fine.— On a conviction for keeping a disorderly house, if the nuisance is abated, a nominal fine only will be inflicted, unless the case demands exemplary punishment. People v. Brougham, 1 Wheel. Cr. (N. Y.) 40.

Place of serving sentence see Huber v. Robinson, 23 Ind. 137.

Punishment may be modified where the actual knowledge of the keeper is not shown. People v. Miller, 15 N. Y. Suppl. 516.

Punishment not excessive.— A verdict assessing a fine of three hundred dollars and costs, or in default of payment thereof within ten days work in the chain gang for twelve months, for openly and notoriously maintaining a lewd house, is not excessive. McCain v. State, 57 Ga. 390. So a penalty of fifty dollars imposed by an ordinance for the maintenance of a building as a house of ill fame is not excessive. McAlister v. Clark, 33 Conn. 91.

50. New Orleans v. Chappuis, 105 La. 206, 29 So. 723, holding, however, that whenever a house is denounced as one of ill fame, and notice to vacate is given, the occupant is entitled to raise and have tried the issue of the immoral use of the premises, or the character of the house, before conviction for not moving can legally be made.

If immediately upon receipt of the notice the occupants alter their conduct and abandon their occupation, they cannot be forced to move. New Orleans v. Chappuis, 105 La. 179, 29 So. 721.

Bond by defendant.— Where the offense charged in a complaint is that of keeping a house of bawdry, and the accused is found guilty of that specific offense alone, an order requiring the accused to give bonds not to keep or frequent houses of bawdry is illegal, and a bond in conformity thereto is void. Darling v. Hubbell, 9 Conn. 350. And see BREACH OF THE PEACE, 5 Cyc. 1028.

98. The term embraces "condensation," according to its scientific as well as its popular sense. It is its primary meaning, and more nearly expresses the full sense of the term as it is used in scientific works, and in the statutes of the United States, than the mere generation of vapor. U. "The distillation of spirituous liquors is performed by a double process: by the application of heat to a still containing the material. The product of the first process, after running through the still, is commonly called low wines, or singlings; the low wines undergo a second process of distillation, by which spirits are produced; they are to be proof of the first, second, third or fourth degree, as defined and required by law. These are marketable, and here the process ends." U. S. v. Tenbroek, 2 Wheat. (U. S.) 248, 258, 4 L. ed. 231 [cited in Schuylkill Nav. Co. v. Moore, 2 Whart. (Pa.) 477, 493].

1. Compared with "ethyl alcohol" and "spirits of wine."— "While, in a strictly chemical sense, the terms 'ethyl alcohol' and 'spirits of wine' are generic terms, and the term 'distilled spirits,' as defined by [statute] . . . when used in that sense, would be generic, and not necessarily confined to the product of distillation, still, the term 'distilled spirits' has also an ordinary and literal meaning, which implies distillation, and, when it is used in the latter sense, it is confined to the product of distillation." U. S. v. Anthony, 24 Fed. Cas No. 14,460, 14 Blatchf. 92.

"The terms 'spirituous liquors' or 'distilled spirits,' and 'malt liquors,' [as used in the statute] are not used as synonymous. On the contrary, they are treated as different substances, and in the system of revenue restrictions, in providing for their manufacture and sale, they are regarded as distinct." Sarlls v. U. 17. Boyd v. Howden, 3 Daly (N. Y.) 455, 457, where this is said to be "a right which existed at common law, by which a party might take the personal property of another into his possession, and hold it as a pledge or security until he obtained satisfaction, by the payment of a debt, the discharge of some duty, or reparation for an injury done; with the right, in certain cases, to sell it to obtain satisfaction, of which the impounding of cattle for damage feasant, or the taking by the landlord [of] the goods and chattels of the tenant upon the premises, for the non-payment of rent, are familiar examples."

Distress at common law is said to be "the taking of a personal chattel out of the possession of a wrongdoer, into the custody of the party injured, to procure satisfaction for the wrong committed" (Hard v. Nearing, 44 Barb. (N. Y.) 472, 488 [citing 3 Blackstone Comm. 6]); the act of taking possession of personal property to hold as a pledge for the payment of a debt, the discharge of a duty, or for reparation of some injury done (Boyd v. Howden, 3 Daly (N. Y.) 455, 457), as "a pledge, taken out of the hands and possession of the tenant by the landlord, and kept by the latter until the tenant entitled himself to get it back again" (Alway v. Anderson, 5 U. C. Q. B. 34, 46).

"Distresses seem to have originated from two more ancient remedies of the common law. By the process of gavelet and cessavit the landlord could seize the land itself for rent in arrear, and hold it until payment was made. These processes have been obsolete for ages, and exist only in the memory of legal antiquaries. When they fell into disuse, distresses appear to have arisen, whereby instead of seizing the land, the lord seized all the movables upon the land, and held them until he received payment. In process of time, he was authorized by statute to make sale of them, and in this way we have the modern distraint." Emig v. Cunningham, 62 Md. 458, 461.

Compared with replevin see Hewitson v. Hunt, 8 Rich. (S. C.) 106, 110.

Distinguished from "execution" see Boyd v. Howden, 3 Daly (N. Y.) 455, 457.

"The terms 'sufficient distress,' in the grant, [in a lease] are not equivalents for 'sufficient property to satisfy the rent.' They refer to property not only sufficient in kind and value, for that purpose, but which, in addition, is subject by law to be distrained and sold, in satisfaction of the rent in arrears." I. ESTABLISHMENT OF THE DISTRICT.

A. Constitutional Provision. The constitution of the United States provided for the establishment of a seat of government by vesting in congress exclusive jurisdiction and control over a district (not exceeding ten miles square) to be acquired by cession from particular states and accepted by congress.[1]

B. Operation and Effect of Cessions. The cessions of territory, for this purpose, made by the states of Maryland and Virginia, and accepted by congress in 1790, and the organization of a government for the ceded district in 1801, had the effect of transferring to the United States the political and sovereign jurisdiction over the territory affected, and terminated the political and proprietary rights of those states in the same,[2] as also their power to legislate for the ceded district,[3] and the political rights, derived from citizenship in one or the other of those states, of such persons as were residents in the ceded territory at the time of the separation,[4] but had no effect on private rights of property or contract,[5] nor on the jurisdiction of the state courts over pending suits.[6]

C. Retrocession to Virginia. The portion of territory granted by Virginia was afterward retroceded to that state by the United States, so that the District, as at present constituted, lies wholly within the exterior boundaries of the original state of Maryland.[7]

D. Official Designation. The territory thus ceded to the national government was at first styled the "Territory of Columbia," but its official designation, as declared by an act of congress, is now "the District of Columbia."[8]

E. Seat of National Government. Congress has enacted that the District of Columbia "shall be the permanent seat of Government of the United States," and that "all offices attached to the seat of Government shall be exercised in the District of Columbia, and not elsewhere, except as otherwise expressly provided by law."[9]

Control of Potomac river.— The compact between Maryland and Virginia, made in 1786, in respect to the free navigation of the Potomac river, was a compact between the two states, as such, the citizens of each being entitled individually to the benefit of it, but not being individually parties to it. This compact could be modified or annulled at the will of the two states, and when they ceded the District of Columbia to the United States, there vested in congress, after the cession, the power to do whatever the legislatures of the two states could have done, in respect to that portion of the river within the District, subject only to the limitations imposed by the act of cession. II. POLITICAL STATUS AND GOVERNMENT.

The District of Columbia, under its present form of government, is neither a sovereignty, a territory, nor a department of the United States government; it is simply a municipal corporation, with such powers and liabilities as are common to municipal corporations in general, except in so far as it may be affected by acts of congress.[10]

III. POWERS OF CONGRESS.

A. Jurisdiction in General. The United States possesses complete jurisdiction, both of a political and municipal nature, over the District of Columbia,[11] and the constitutional grant to congress of exclusive legislative authority for the District carries with it all those incidental powers which are necessary to its complete and effectual execution.[12]

B. Legislative Authority. The legislative powers of the District, as a municipal corporation, are vested in congress,[13] and congress in legislating for the District may exercise all legislative powers on all subjects which the legislature of a state might exercise within the state,[14] including the power to enact such

As successor to previous corporations.— The municipal corporation created under the name of the District of Columbia by act of congress in 1871 (16 U. S. St. at L. 419 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 677]) succeeded to the property and liabilities of the corporations which were thereby abolished. District of Columbia v. Cluss, 103 U. S. 705, 26 L. ed. 455.

The statute of limitations in force in the District is applicable to all corporations, including the District itself in its character as a municipal corporation. Metropolitan R. Co. v. District of Columbia, 132 U. S. 1, 10 S. Ct. 19, 33 L. ed. 231.

Status as a state.— The District of Columbia is not a "state" in the sense of being one of the constituent members of the Union (Hooe v. Jamieson, 166 U. S. 395, 17 S. Ct. 596, 41 L. ed. 1049; Metropolitan R. Co. v. District of Columbia, 132 U. S. 1, 10 S. Ct. 19, 33 L. ed. 231; Cameron v. Hodges, 127 U. S. 322, 8 S. Ct. 1154, 32 L. ed. 132; Hepburn v. Ellzey, 2 Cranch (U. S.) 445, 2 L. ed. 332); but in a broader sense the District, being a separate political community, exercising legislative powers, may be regarded as a "state" within the meaning of that term as used in an act of congress (Talbot v. Silver Bow County, 139 U. S. 438, 11 S. Ct. 594, 35 L. ed. 210) or a treaty (De Geofroy v. Riggs, 133 U. S. 258, 10 S. Ct. 295, 33 L. ed. 642).

Dual capacity of congress.— In making laws for the District of Columbia congress still remains the legislative branch of the United States government; so that its acts are laws of the United States. Cohens v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 264, 5 L. ed. 257.

Taxation.— The power of "exclusive legislation" includes the power to tax. But congress, in laying taxes in the District, is not territorially restricted as is the legislature of a state. That is, to justify such taxation it is not required to be for District purposes only, but may be for any or all of the purposes for which congress may lawfully exercise the power of taxation. Loughborough v. Blake, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 317, 5 L. ed. 98. See infra, IX, B.

Assessments for improvements.— The power of congress to legislate for the District includes the power to provide for the assessment, on abutting lands and lands benefited, of half or more of the damages for and in respect of land condemned for the opening of streets. Wight v. Davidson, 181 U. S. 371, 21 S. Ct. 616, 45 L. ed. 900. See infra, VII, D.

Chartering corporations.— Although the power of congress, under the constitution, to create a private corporation has been denied, yet in its capacity as the local legislature of the District it may charter such a corporapolice regulations as may be necessary to protect the public peace, morals, safety, health, and comfort.[15]

C Constitutional Limitations. The power of congress to legislate for the District is so far limited that all the guaranties of the constitution respecting life, liberty, and property are applicable to the District, and are equally for the benefit and protection of its citizens as for those of the several states.[16]

IV. LOCAL LAW AND GOVERNMENT.

A. What Laws in Force. The laws in force in the District of Columbia include (except in so far as they are inconsistent with the code enacted in 1901, or have been modified or replaced by its provisions) the common law of England and all British statutes in force in Maryland at the date of the establishment of the District government, Feb. 27, 1801,[17] the principles of equity and admiralty, the constitution, all general acts of congress which are not locally inapplicable in the District,[18] all acts of congress which are by their terms made applicable to the District and to other places under the jurisdiction of the United States[19] and the code itself. The general laws and acts of Maryland which were in force at the time of the cession were held to remain as the law of the District, except where repealed or modified by acts of congress;[20] but these statutes, as well as the acts of the old legislative assembly of the District of Columbia, and the acts of congress previously enacted for the District alone, were repealed, with certain exceptions and reservations, by the code of 1901.[21]

B. Delegation of Legislative Power to District. The constitutional provision that congress shall "exercise exclusive legislation" over the District of Columbia is understood to prevent that body from delegating general legislative power to the authorities of the District;[22] but this does not stand in the way of its granting to the local authorities such powers as state legislatures may grant to their municipalities, that is, the right to make ordinances or by-laws.[23]

Confirmation of invalid proceedings.— In legislating for the District, congress has power to confirm proceedings which without such confirmation would be void, provided no intervening rights are thereby impaired. Mattingly v. District of Columbia, 97 U. S. 687, 24 L. ed. 1098.

C. Criminal Law. The United States has a criminal, common-law jurisdiction in the District, exercisable in the courts thereof.[24] Criminal offenses and violations of laws of the United States applicable to the District, committed in the District, are crimes against the United States, not against the District, and are to be prosecuted by the United States district attorney, while violations of municipal ordinances or police regulations are to be prosecuted by the city solicitor.[25]

D. Police Regulations. The commissioners of the District of Columbia are expressly authorized to make and enforce all such reasonable and usual police regulations as they may deem necessary for the protection of the lives, limbs, health, comfort, and quiet, of all persons and the protection of all property within the District.[26] It is essential to the validity of such regulations that they should be reasonable and not unnecessarily vexatious or oppressive. They cannot be sustained if their effect is unlawfully to deprive individuals of the use and enjoyment of their property, or to interfere with the owner's rights therein without

In pursuance of this and similar grants of power, rules in the nature of police regulations have been made by the commissioners, and sustained as valid by the courts, regulating the management of vehicles, including bicycles, on the public streets, their permissible rate of speed, etc. (Moore v. District of Columbia, 12 App. Cas. (D. C.) 537, 41 L. R. A. 208); hacks and other public carriages, hack-stands in the streets, and the rates of fare (District of Columbia v. Hazel, 16 App. Cas. (D. C.) 283; Callan v. District of Columbia, 16 App. Cas. (D. C.) 271; Dennison v. Gavin, 3 MacArthur (D. C.) 265); theaters, shows, and exhibitions, so far as necessary to protect the public (District of Columbia v. Saville, 1 MacArthur (D. C.) 581, 29 Am. Rep. 616); the collection and disposition of garbage (Dupont v. District of Columbia, 20 App. Cas. (D. C.) 477); the places where the stands of licensed vendors shall or shall not be located (Montz v. District of Columbia, 20 App. Cas. (D. C.) 568); the sites where fish may be cleaned and packed, and prohibiting the use of other sites for that purpose (Lambell v. Washington, 14 Fed. Cas. No. 8,025, 1 Hayw. & H. (D. C.) 25); and the qualifications required to entitle a person to engage in the trade of plumbing (U. S. v. Ross, 5 App. Cas. (D. C.) 241. And see U. S. v. Ludlow, 15 Wash. L. Rep. 792). It has also been held permissible to regulate the movement of railway locomotives and trains within the District (Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. District of Columbia, 10 App. Cas. (D. C.) 111), and provide a penalty for crossing a public street with an engine or cars in the daytime without having a flagman stationed at the crossing (Smith v. Stoutenburgh, 8 App. Cas. (D. C.) 510). The police power also extends to prohibiting lotteries and other forms of gaming within the District (Hall v. Washington, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 5,953, 4 Cranch C. C. 722; Thompson v. Milligan, 23 Fed. Cas. No. 13,969, 2 Cranch C. C. 207); prohibiting the keeping of dogs within the city without a license and requiring a fee for such license (Washington v. Lynch, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,231, 5 Cranch C. C. 498. Compare Washington v. Meigs, 1 MacArthur (D. C.) 53); prohibiting emission of dense or thick black or gray smoke (Sinclair v. District of Columbia, 20 App. Cas. (D. C.) 344; Bradley v. District of Columbia, 20 App. Cas. (D. C.) 169; Moses v. U. S., 16 App. Cas. (D. C.) 428, 50 L. R. A. 532); requiring security for good behavior from persons guilty of grossly indecent language or behavior in the public streets (Ex p. Reed, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11,634, 4 Cranch C. C. 582); and requiring licenses for certain occupations deemed proper subjects for police supervision (Cooper v. District of Columbia, MacArthur & M. (D. C.) 250). But the joint resolution of congress above referred to does not authorize the commissioners to punish persons selling liquor without a license. In re Sullivan, 21 D. C. 139.

Building regulations.— There is no limitation upon the character and extent of the building regulations which the commissioners may make and enforce under this act. The terms of the statute are broad enough to include every form of regulation which they may deem advisable, and which may reasonably be considered as relating to the proper subject. Halpine v. Barr, 21 D. C. 331; Fowler v. Saks, 7 Mackey (D. C.) 570; U. S. v. Cole, 7 Mackey (D. C.) 504. But when application is made for a permit to erect buildings, and the proposed buildings conform to all the requirements of the building regulations proper, in respect to materials, provisions for safety, and sanitary conditions, it is the duty of the commissioners to issue the permit on the payment of the lawful fees, and they cannot arbitrarily due process of law;[27] nor are they valid if they amount to an interference with, or restriction upon, interstate commerce.[28]

V. OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES.[29]

A. Commissioners. The executive authority of the District is vested in a board of three commissioners, one of whom is to be an officer of the engineer corps of the United States army, and the others citizens of the United States and actual and permanent residents of the District for at least three years before their appointment. The engineer commissioner is detailed for service by the president, and the civilian commissioners are appointed by the president and confirmed by the senate for a term of three years.[30]

B. Inferior Administrative Officers. Provision has been made by statute for such other officers as are necessary to operate the various departments and functions of the District as a municipal corporation, some of whom are to be appointed by the president, others by the commissioners.[31] A clerk or other administrative officer appointed by, or holding office under, the commissioners is a subordinate officer of the municipality; he cannot be regarded as an officer of the United States.[32]

C. Judicial Officers. The judicial system of the District of Columbia includes a court of appeals, a supreme court,[33] a police court for the trial of petty offenses and violations of municipal regulations, consisting of two judges learned in the law, appointed by the president for a term of six years,[34] and ten justices of the peace, appointed by the president for a term of four years, unless sooner removed as provided by law, who have a limited jurisdiction in civil cases only.[35]

D. Marshal. The marshal of the District of Columbia is appointed by the president, and it is provided by law that he shall serve for the same term, take the same oath, give bond with security in the same manner, and have generally within the District, in addition to the powers and duties imposed upon him by Majority rule.— The commissioners act as a board, and (except in the few cases where a statute expressly requires their unanimous agreement) any two of them may exercise the powers conferred upon the commissioners generally, in the absence of the third, or even against his expressed wish and vote, if present and participating in the proceedings. Building inspector.— The power to issue building permits is vested in the inspector of buildings, to the exclusion of the commissioners. U. S. v. District of Columbia, 5 Mackey (D. C.) 389.

Sinking fund commissioners.— The offices of sinking fund commissioners of the District of Columbia were abolished by 20 U. S. St. at L. 102, establishing a permanent form of government for the District, and their duties and powers transferred to the treasurer of the United States, "who shall perform the same in accordance with the provisions of existing laws. E. Appointment and Removal of Inferior Officers and Employees. The commissioners are empowered by law to abolish any office, to consolidate two or more offices, reduce the number of employees, remove from office, and make appointments to any office under them authorized by law.[37] But this does not give them power to abolish any office of the District government which is not held "under them," or the right of appointment to which is vested in the president or in any other officer of the general government.[38]

VI. PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND PROPERTY.

A. Of the United States. The buildings and grounds of the United States, situated in the District of Columbia, as distinguished from those belonging to or employed for the uses of the District government, are not under the care and control of the District, but are placed in charge of the chief of engineers of the United States army.[39] In particular the capitol, with the grounds surrounding it, has its own separate police force,[40] although in emergencies the police force of the District may be employed in assisting to preserve order or enforce the laws.[41]

B. Of the District. The public property, parks, grounds, streets, highways, and bridges of the District, and buildings used by the District for carrying on its municipal or governmental functions, such as the administrative offices of the District, the police courts, the public schools, and the stations of the police and fire departments, are under the care and control of the commissioners.[42]

Who eligible as policemen.— It was formerly provided, by D. C. Rev. St. § 354, that no person should be appointed a policeman or watchman on the police force of the District of Columbia except an honorably discharged soldier or sailor of the United States; but this was repealed by the comprehensive grant of powers to the commissioners, contained in the organic act of 1878, and they now have full power to appoint as policemen persons who have not served in the army or navy (Hutton v. District of Columbia, 20 D. streets is not in the abutting property-owners, subject to a public easement of passage; but in the United States, which is the absolute and unqualified owner of the same in fee.[44]

B. Street Parking and Park System. The commissioners have been vested with the jurisdiction and control of the street parking in the streets and avenues of the District, but the park system of the District, that is, the reservations, public squares, and the like, is under the exclusive control and charge of the chief of engineers of the United States army.[45]

C. Care and Control of Streets. The commissioners are vested with the care and control of the streets, avenues, and highways of the District,[46] and all the bridges in the District, except the aqueduct bridge across Rock creek.[47] But congress has reserved to itself the right to designate the routes of steam railroads through the city and to decide which streets they may use for their tracks and for other purposes.[48]

D. Opening and Improving Streets. Although the title to the streets in the District is in the United States, congress has power to provide that the cost of opening new streets or of highway improvements in the district shall be defrayed, not by the general government, but by the District, or wholly or in part by assessment upon the owners of lands benefited by the improvement.[49] As to improvements upon existing streets and highways, the commissioners, in virtue of their control over the public ways, have power to determine when and how, and with what materials the same shall be paved, and to change the character of pavements already laid.[50] They may also under certain conditions order the improvement or repair of alleys and sidewalks, the laying of sewers, or the con-

The holders of lots on the line of Water street in the city of Washington are not entitled to riparian rights, or to rights of private property in the waters or the reclaimed lands between Water street and the navigable channels of the Potomac river, unless they can show valid grants from congress, or from the city under the authority of congress, or such long and notorious possession of defined parcels as to justify the courts, under the doctrine of prescription, in inferring grants; for the intention, never departed from since the first conception of the city, was to establish such a street along the water front for a common access thereto. Assessment on street railways.— "When any street or avenue through which a street-railway runs shall be paved, such railway company shall bear all of the expense for that portion of the work lying between the exterior rails of the tracks of such roads, and for a distance of two feet from and exterior to such track or tracks on each side thereof, and of keeping the same in repair." 20 U. S. St. at L. 102, c. 180, § 5.

struction of new sidewalks or new curbing, assessing upon abutting property-owners half the cost of such improvements.[51] For work to be done in opening or repairing streets or sewers or other public works, the cost of which may exceed one thousand dollars, the commissioners are required to advertise for bids; and contracts for such work may be awarded only by the unanimous vote of the commissioners, and all such contracts must be copied into a book kept for that purpose and be signed by the commissioners.[52]

E. Grading. The power to grade and regrade the public streets of the District is a continuing one, to be exercised whenever the health, improvement, and prosperity of the city make it necessary,[53] and the District is not answerable for consequential injuries to the property of individuals unless negligence or a corrupt design to inflict damage is shown.[54]

VIII. PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS.

Except in regard to the repair and improvement of existing streets, public improvements in the District of Columbia are undertaken only under authority of acts of congress, which generally prescribe their extent and cost, the manner of assessing and collecting the expense, and the method and detail of construction, except in so far as the supervision of detail may be left to the commissioners.[55]

51. See 26 U. S. St. at L. 293; 26 U. S. St. at L. 1062, under which improvements of the kinds enumerated in the text may be ordered by the commissioners, in their discretion, without application on the part of interested property-owners, whenever the same shall in their opinion be necessary for the public health, safety, or comfort.

Permit system.—Improvements of the kinds enumerated may also be ordered by the commissioners upon the written request of a majority of the property-owners in the block or square to be affected, upon published notice, and after opportunity given to interested parties to appear and be heard in opposition. In relation to this method of assessment, congress has full power to authorize the assessment to be made on the adjacent proprietors, and it is not necessary that the tax should be a general one throughout the city. Willard v. Presbury, 14 Wall. (U. S.) 676, 20 L. ed. 719. And see Danenhower v. District of Columbia, 7 Mackey (D. C.) 99. But the municipal authorities cannot direct that the entire expense of street improvements shall be charged on abutting property; half the cost must be borne by the municipality. Young v. District of Columbia, MacArthur & M. (D. C.) 30. It has also been held that an abutting property-owner who has neither joined in the request for the improvement, nor acquiesced therein in such a manner as to estop him from denying that it was done with his assent, cannot lawfully be charged with any portion of the cost. Allman v. District of Columbia, 3 App. Cas. (D. C.) 8. At any rate such an assessment will be adjudged invalid on certiorari where the record does not show that any request was ever made by any one for the improvement, or that it was ever ordered by the commissioners. Keyser v. District of Columbia, 3 App. Cas. (D. C.) 31. It is essential to the validity of the assessment that notice should be given to an assessed property-owner at some serviceable stage of the proceedings; notice of the levy of the assessment after the improvement has been made is not sufficient. Allman v. District of Columbia, 3 App. Cas. (D. C.) 8. After an assessment has been paid the commissioners have no power, because of mistakes therein, to make another, although payment was made by a person who did not own the property. Danenhower v. District of Columbia, 7 Mackey (D. C.) 99. The assessment must be for the improvement specified in the contract therefor; and the commissioners have no power to add charges for items not named in the original assessment (Schneider v. District of Columbia, 7 Mackey (D. C.) 252); nor will the courts sustain the validity of an assessment levied on property not adjacent to the improvement made (Great Falls Ice Co. v. District of Columbia, 19 D. C. 327).

Congress may authorize property-owners to prosecute suits against the District for damages sustained by reason of a change of grade; and in such case the District cannot render the act of congress barren by setting up the general rule of law as to the liability of municipal corporations in such circumstances. IX. FISCAL MANAGEMENT.

A. Appropriations. The commissioners are required to submit annually to the secretary of the treasury estimates of the moneys needed for the expenses of the government of the District for the ensuing fiscal year. After the secretary has considered and passed upon such estimates, he must return a statement of the items and amounts approved by him to the commissioners, who then submit the same to congress. To the extent to which congress shall approve of the said estimates, congress appropriates the amount of fifty per cent thereof, and the remaining half is levied and assessed on the taxable property in the District, other than the property of the United States and of the District.[56]

B. Taxation. The power of congress to exercise exclusive jurisdiction in all cases whatever within the District of Columbia, includes the power of taxation.[57] By the provisions of the organic act of 1878 the rate of taxation in any one year on real and personal property must not exceed one dollar and fifty cents on every hundred dollars of taxable value.[58] Subject to existing statutes the commissioners are authorized to make regulations prescribing the times for the payment of taxes and the duties of the assessors and collectors in relation thereto.[59] sources within the limits of the state of Maryland, and using and occupying the land for that purpose in Maryland by permission and consent of the state. Reddall v. Bryan, 14 Md. 444, 74 Am. Dec. 550.

Water-main tax.— Notice to a property-owner is not necessary to sustain a water-main tax, under an act of congress providing that all assessments for laying water-mains in the District shall be at a specified rate per front foot on abutting lots, and giving the commissioners power to lay water-mains whenever they deem it necessary for the public safety, comfort, or health. Parsons v. District of Columbia, 170 U. S. 45, 18 S. Ct. 521, 42 L. ed. 943.

Public parks.— The fact that a public park in the District is dedicated by the act of congress creating it to the use and enjoyment of the people of the United States does not take it out of the rule as to special assessments applicable in the case of streets and highways; and such assessments, to aid in its purchase and improvement, may constitutionally be levied on property specially benefited. Wilson v. Lambert, 168 U. S. 611, 18 S. Ct. 217, 42 L. ed. 599.

Platting subdivisions.—While the commissioners of the District may be compelled by mandamus to take cognizance of, and consider and pass judgment upon, plats of subdivisions submitted to them, the judgment itself cannot be dictated or coerced. Ross v. U. S., 7 App. Cas. (D. C.) 1.

56. 20 U. S. St. at L. 102.

Unexpended appropriations.— All balances of appropriations for the District of Columbia which remain unexpended at the end of two years from the close of the fiscal year for which such appropriations were made must be covered into the treasury, one half to the credit of the surplus fund and one half to the credit of the general fund of the District. 25 U. S. St. at L. 793.

United States not liable for officer's salary. — The statutory agreement that the United States will pay one half of the approved estimates of expenses of the District, and the appropriations therefor, do not render the United States liable directly to the creditors of the District for the debts and liabilities of the corporation. The salary of a judge of a court of the District is an obligation of the District, not a debt of the United States; and consequently if the appropriation made by congress is not sufficient to pay it he cannot maintain an action against the United States. Bundy v. U. S., 21 Ct. Cl. 429.

A direct tax may be imposed on the District in proportion to the census. Loughborough v. Blake, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 317, 5 L. ed. 98.

Congress may exempt from taxation certain classes of property or tax them at a lower rate than other property. Gibbons v. District of Columbia, 116 U. S. 404, 6 S. Ct. 427, 29 L. ed. 680.

Occupation tax.— Under the general powers conferred on the District by the organic act, it may tax vocations and require returns, and test their accuracy by inspection. District of Columbia v. Waggaman, 4 Mackey (D. C.) 328.

Franchise tax.— The tax laws of the District do not, in terms or by implication, authorize the District to tax a corporate franchise. Alexandria Canal, etc., Co. v. District of Columbia, 5 Mackey (D. C.) 376.

59. 20 U. S. St. at L. 102.

As to the levy, assessment, and collection of taxes generally see TAXATION.

All taxes collected in the District are directed to be paid into the treasury of the United States, and disbursed for the expenses of the District on itemized vouchers which shall have been audited and approved by the auditor for the District and certified by the commissioners or a majority of them.[60]

C. District Expenses and Charges. The commissioners are authorized to apply the taxes and other revenues of the District to the payment of the current expenses thereof, including the public schools, the fire department, and the police.[61] But the revenues of the District, including both the amount raised by taxation and that contributed by congress in the form of appropriations, are to be expended only for the uses and purposes of the municipal government of the District,[62] and cannot be diverted to purposes connected with the public buildings or other property of the United States not controlled or used by the municipality.[63]

D. Indebtedness and Bonds. Bonds to secure the indebtedness of the District of Columbia can be issued only under authority of an act of congress.[64] Various issues have been authorized from time to time,[65] but the organic act of 1878 provided that there should be no increase of the amount of the total indebtedness of the district at the time of its adoption.[66]

E. Certificates of Indebtedness. The former board of public works of the District (now abolished and their powers transferred to the commissioners) issued certificates of indebtedness, secured upon assessments for public improvements levied but not yet collected. These were negotiable, and although primarily payable out of such assessments, also imposed a direct liability on the District in case of neglect or failure to collect the assessments.[67] But the organic act of 1878 provides that the commissioners shall have no power to anticipate taxes by a sale or hypothecation of any such taxes or evidences thereof.[68]

X. CLAIMS AGAINST DISTRICT.

A. Contracts. The commissioners have no authority to make any contract or incur any obligation, except such as are expressly provided by law and approved by congress.[69] It is specially provided that contracts for the construc-

Submission to arbitration.— The commissioners have no power to bind the District by a common-law submission of a pending suit for breach of contract to a referee. District of Columbia v. Bailey, 171 U. S. 161, 18 S. Ct. 868, 43 L. ed. 118.

Payment in bonds.— The District commissioners cannot agree that payment shall be made to a contractor in bonds of the District "at their market value at the New York Exchange at the date of each settlement;" but it must be at their par value. Taylor v. District of Columbia, 17 Ct. Cl. 367.

Employment of architect.— Where the authorities of the District have power to erect a public school they may employ an architect tion, improvement, alteration, and repair of streets, avenues, highways, alleys, gutters, and sewers, and all work of like nature, shall be made only with the official, unanimous consent of the commissioners, and recorded in a book kept for that purpose and signed by the commissioners.[70] But where work done under a contract with the District was authorized by law, and has been accepted, used, and controlled by the District for the benefit of the public, the contractor may recover on his contract, although the agents of the District neglected their duty in complying with the forms prescribed by law in making it.[71]

B. Torts — 1. Torts of Officers. The District of Columbia is liable in damages for injuries to individuals caused by the unlawful or tortious acts of its officers or employees, or by their carelessness or incompetence, in the same manner and to the same extent as other municipal corporations.[72]

2. Damages From Defects in Streets. The District of Columbia is responsible for the safe condition of its streets, alleys, public roads, bridges, and public sidewalks; and an action will lie against it to recover damages for injuries received in consequence of their imperfect or unsafe condition, provided it is shown that the District had notice of the defect or that it was so notorious and conspicuous in its character that the authorities charged with the inspection of the streets, etc., would in the proper performance of their duties have known of it.[73] to prepare the plans and specifications and to superintend its construction, and bind the District to pay him for his services. District of Columbia v. Cluss, 103 U. S. 705, 26 L. ed. 445.

70. 20 U. S. St. at L. 102.

Contracts of board of public works.— Under the former organization of the District government, the power to make contracts for public improvements was vested in the board of public works; and it was provided by law that "all contracts made by the said board of public works shall be in writing, and shall be signed by the parties making the same, and a copy thereof shall be filed in the office of the secretary of the District." Act Cong. Feb. 21, 1871, § 37. Under this provision it was held that the statutory powers of the board were vested in its members jointly and not severally, and that a contract was not valid unless signed by the members of the board, or a majority of them; neither the vice-president, the secretary, nor any other officer having power to bind the board by a contract, unless specially authorized thereto by the board. Sawyer v. District of Columbia, 2 MacArthur (D. C.) 509; Brown v. District of Columbia, 127 U. S. 579, 8 S. Ct. 1314, 32 L. ed. 262; Shipman v. District of Columbia, 119 U. S. 148, 7 S. Ct. 134, 30 L. ed. 337; Brown v. District of Columbia, 19 Ct. Cl. 445; Neuchatel Paving Co. v. District of Columbia, 17 Ct. Cl. 386. Further the provision that the contract must be in writing was held to be mandatory, and an oral promise or agreement by the board or any of its officers could not be enforced against the District. Ballard v. District of Columbia, 3 MacArthur (D. C.) 49; Barnard v. District of Columbia, 127 U. S. 409, 8 S. Ct. 1202, 32 L. ed. 207; O'Hare v. District of Columbia, 18 Ct. Cl. 646; Neuchatel Paving Co. v. District of Columbia, 17 Ct. Cl. 386. But in a case where a contract awarded by the board was not reduced to writing until long after the work under it was begun, and when it was put into writing one of the three who signed on behalf of the board was no longer a member thereof, it was held that even if the written contract was invalid because it was not executed by a majority of the five members of the board it was effective as embodying the parties' understanding of the parol contract. Shipman v. District of Columbia, 119 U. S. 148, 7 S. Ct. 134, 30 L. ed. 337. The board of public works had no power or authority, after a contract was once awarded and duly executed, to increase the sum to be paid to the contractor, by entries on its minutes or directions to its subordinates, and the District was not bound by any such action. Barnes v. District of Columbia, 22 Ct. Cl. 366.

71. Campbell v. District of Columbia, 2 MacArthur (D. C.) 533, suit upon an account for labor done and materials furnished.

The omission of the seal of the District from a contract which the commissioners executed as for the District, with their signatures and seals, will not prevent the instrument from binding the District as a specialty. District of Columbia v. Camden Iron Works, 181 U. S. 453, 21 S. Ct. 680, 45 L. ed. 948.

72. District of Columbia v. McElligott, 117 U. S. 621, 6 S. Ct. 884, 29 L. ed. 946; Roth v. District of Columbia, 16 App. Cas. (D. C.) 323; Grumbine v. Washington, 2 MacArthur (D. C.) 578.

C. Audit of Claims. The revenues of the District, raised by taxation of persons and property, may be disbursed for the expenses of the District only on itemized vouchers which shall have been audited and approved by the auditor for the District and certified by the commissioners or a majority of them.[74]

D. Suits Against District. The District of Columbia, in its character of a municipal corporation, is liable to suit at the instance of private individuals.[75] Such suits are properly brought against the District, and jurisdiction is acquired by the service of process on the commissioners, or any one of them, they being the executive officers of the corporation for such purposes.[76] It is provided by an act of congress that the attorney-general shall have the same power to interpose counter-claims in suits against the District of Columbia as in cases where the United States is a party.[77]

DISTRICT SEWER. A sewer constructed or acquired under authority of ordinances, within the limits of an established sewer district.[1]

DISTRICT TREASURY. The county treasury in counties not under township organization.[2]

DISTRINGAS. Literally, "you restrain, detain, distrain, hinder." A writ commanding a sheriff to distrain for a debt or appearance; a chancery process to compel the appearance of a corporation in certain cases; an execution in detinue and assise of nuisance.[3] (Distringas: Against — Corporation, see CORPORATIONS; Sheriff, see SHERIFFS AND CONSTABLES. To Enforce — Judgment in Detinue, see DETINUE; Payment of Costs, see COSTS. See also DISTRESS.)

DISTURB.[4] Primarily to throw into disorder or confusion; to derange; to interrupt the settled state of; to excite from a state of rest.[5]

DISTURBANCE.[6] Anything which throws into confusion things settled, which interrupts the movements, pursuits or thoughts of another.[7] (Disturbance: Of Common, see COMMON LANDS. Of Easement, see EASEMENTS. Of Peace, see BREACH OF THE PEACE. Of Public Assemblage, see DISTURBANCE OF PUBLIC MEETINGS.)

Former board of audit.— An act of congress in 1874 constituted the controllers of the treasury a board to "audit for settlement all the unfunded or floating debt of the District of Columbia." This did not make it a board of arbitration, and no finality attached to its findings, so that the disallowance of a claim by the board would not prevent the claimant from maintaining an action against the District. District of Columbia v. Cluss, 103 U. S. 705, 26 L. ed. 455; Neitzey v. District of Columbia, 17 Ct. Cl. 111. And see Strong v. District of Columbia, 1 Mackey (D. C.) 265.

The commissioners of the District do not succeed the late board of public works as parties to a suit in equity, where no process has been issued or served upon them; and a rule upon them to show cause in such suit should be discharged. Tompkins v. Mandel, 3 MacArthur (D. C.) 268.

A thousand things might or might not disturb others, in fact, according to their then existing pursuit, and this renders it an extremely difficult thing to lay down a general rule, which shall definitely settle what is or is not a disturbance."

I. WHAT CONSTITUTES OFFENSE.

A. In General. The offense of disturbing a public meeting is but slightly developed at common law, and it is not clear to what meetings the law affords its protection, nor what acts of disturbance are penalized. In America, however, this question is of minor importance, since in most if not all the states, the offense has been defined by statute.[1]

B. Meetings Protected and Requisites Thereof — 1. In General. In some states it is declared by statute to be a penal offense to disturb any lawful and peaceable assembly,[2] including meetings for amusement[3] and for moral and benevolent purposes,[4] political meetings,[5] temperance meetings,[6] and schools.[7]

2. Religious Meetings — a. In General. The disturbance of a meeting for religious worship is an offense at common law, and is indictable as such in the United States.[8]

1. See cases cited infra, I, B, 1, 2.

Sufficiency of definition.—A statute providing that any person who shall "molest or disturb" any meeting of inhabitants of the state met together for any lawful purpose shall be fined sufficiently defines the crime. State v. Oskins, 28 Ind. 364 [overruling Marvin v. State, 19 Ind. 181]. And the same is true of a statute providing that every person who shall disturb any religious society when meeting together in public worship shall be fined. A singing school is within the protection of a statute prohibiting the disturbance of schools (State v. Gager, 26 Conn. 607); and also, it seems, within the protection of a statute making it an offense to disturb "any meeting . . . for any lawful purpose" (State v. Oskins, 28 Ind. 364).

Private writing schools are also within the protection of the statute. State v. Leighton, 35 Me. 195.

A school not in session is not protected by statute from disturbance. State v. Gager, 28 Conn. 232.

There must be a teacher to constitute a school. A meeting of persons to sing together for their common improvement in the art of singing, but without a teacher, is not a school. State v. Gager, 28 Conn. 232.

See 17 Cent. Dig. tit. "Disturbance of Public Assemblage," § 1.

Statutes.—At common law it is a crime to disturb persons assembled for worship. In England statutes were passed to protect dissenters in their worship, because their assembly was unlawful; but in the United States such legislation is not required. In most of the states, however, statutes have been passed for the protection of persons assembled for worship and for the punishment of their disturbers. State v. Wright, 41 Ark. 410, 48 Am. Rep. 43. It is an indictable offense at common law to disturb divine services notwithstanding the statute declares the penalty and points out the remedy. Talladega v. Fitzpatrick, 133 Ala. 613, 32 So. 252;

b. Commencement of Services. It is an offense to disturb the meeting even though the services have not begun.[9]

c. Close of Services. The meeting is protected from unlawful disturbance, not only until the services have closed and the congregation are dismissed, but until there is a dispersion of the people, and they cease to be a congregation.[10]

d. Persons Not Taking Part in Services. It constitutes the offense to disturb persons present at the meeting, although they are not taking part in the services.[11]

People v. Crowley, 23 Hun (N. Y.) 412; People v. Degey, 2 Wheel. Cr. (N. Y.) 135.

Necessity of congregation.— The statute does not punish the disturbance of "religious worship." The offense is the disturbance of a "congregation assembled for religious worship." Hunt v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1896) 34 S. W. 750.

Organization or incorporation of congregation.— An unorganized body assembled in good faith for religious worship is within the terms of a statute prohibiting unusual business within a mile of a camp-meeting without the permission of the authorities in charge. Com. v. Bearse, 132 Mass. 542, 42 Am. Rep. 450. And all religious societies, without regard to whether they are incorporated, are within the terms of a statute prohibiting a disturbance of their meetings. State v. Stuth, 11 Wash. 423, 39 Pac. 665.

Citizenship of congregation.— In Indiana it is an essential factor in the crime that the persons collected together for religious worship were to a substantial extent inhabitants of the state. Cooper v. State, 75 Ind. 62.

Name, creed, and mode of worship.— The protection of the law extends to all, irrespective of creed, opinion, or mode of worship, if not indecent or unlawful. Thus Salvation Army meetings are protected. Hull v. State, 120 Ind. 153, 22 N. E. 117. And see Rex v. Wroughton, 3 Burr. 1683. And any assembly met for public worship is protected, although the members are of different creeds and have no distinctive name. State v. Ringer, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 109.

Object of meeting.— If the purpose of a meeting be solely for instruction in the art of singing, although confined to the singing of sacred songs, the meeting is not protected (Adair v. State, 134 Ala. 183, 32 So. 326. And see Green v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1900) 56 S. W. 915); nor is a business meeting of members or officers of a religious society (State v. Fisher, 25 N. C. 111. Contra, Hollingsworth v. State, 5 Sneed (Tenn.) 518), although it be opened with religious exercises (Wood v. State, 11 Tex. App. 318). A Sunday-school is protected (Martin v. State, 6 Baxt. (Tenn.) 234; dictum in State v. Stuth, 11 Wash. 423, 39 Pac. 665); but not a Sunday-school celebration and Christmas-tree service, although speeches be made on the subject of Sunday-schools and public morality (Layne v. State, 4 Lea (Tenn.) 199); nor is a political meeting protected as one for religious worship (Rex v. Lavoie, 6 Can. Cr. Cas. 39, 21 Quebec Super. Ct. 128).

Place of meeting.— A religious meeting is protected, although it be not held in a church, chapel, or meeting-house permanently set apart by a religious society for worship. State v. Swink, 20 N. C. 492.

Lawful conduct of meeting.—It is an essential element of the offense that the congregation disturbed should have been conducting themselves in a lawful manner. Kizzia v. State, 38 Tex. Cr. 319, 43 S. W. 86; Hunt v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1896) 34 S. W. 750; Nash v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. 368, 24 S. W. 32; Mullinix v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. 116, 22 S. W. 407.

9. State v. Ramsay, 78 N. C. 448, holding that if the congregation have assembled, a person who by speaking without leave prevents the services from taking place is indictable. It is sufficient if, at the time of the disturbance, the congregation are in the act of gathering together at the place of worship. Lancaster v. State, 53 Ala. 398, 25 Am. Rep. 625; Love v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. 27, 29 S. W. 790. A considerable number of the congregation must, however, be collected at or about the time when worship is to be commenced, and in the place where it is to be had, in order to make a disturbance of them indictable. State v. Bryson, 82 N. C. 576.

10. Lancaster v. State, 53 Ala. 398, 25 Am. Rep. 625; State v. Lusk, 68 Ind. 264; State v. Snyder, 14 Ind. 429; Williams v. State, 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 313. And see Wall v. Lee, 34 N. Y. 141. Contra, State v. Jones, 53 Mo. 486.

Applications of rule.— Although the congregation have been dismissed, it is an offense to create a disturbance while a portion of the people still remain in the house, and before a reasonable time has elapsed for their dispersal (Kinney v. State, 38 Ala. 224), or while they remain assembled around the house to administer to the wants of their domestic animals and to prepare and eat their own meals (Minter v. State, 101 Ga. 743, 30 S. E. 989). A meeting is not protected, however, where the services have been concluded ten minutes, and the lights in the church have been extinguished, and some of the congregation have gone home and others are on the way or in the act of leaving (State v. Davis, 126 N. C. 1059, 35 S. E. 600), although in Texas it has been held that the meeting is protected so long as any part of the congregation remain on the premises (Love v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. 27, 29 S. W. 790; Dawson v. State, 7 Tex. App. 59). A disturbance of a camp-meeting at night, after the congregation have dispersed and the people have retired to rest, is not within the prohibition of the law. State v. Edwards, 32 Mo. 548. Contra, Com. v. Jennings, 3 Gratt. (Va.) 624.

11. Adair v. State, 134 Ala. 183, 32 So. 326.

C. What Constitutes Disturbance — 1. General Rules. What shall constitute an interruption or disturbance of a public meeting cannot easily be brought within a definition applicable to all cases. It must depend somewhat upon the nature and character of the meeting, and the purpose for which it is held, and much also on the usage and practice governing there.[12] To constitute Withdrawal from meeting.— Persons who have withdrawn from the meeting may still form a part of it, if the withdrawal was for a temporary purpose, and they intend to return, and are in close proximity; and there is no presumption that persons sitting outside of the meeting-house engaged in conversation not connected with worship or loitering outside of the house are not a part of the assembly. Adair v. State, 134 Ala. 183, 32 So. 326.

12. Com. v. Porter, 1 Gray (Mass.) 476.

A meeting is "disturbed" when it is agitated, aroused from a state of repose, molested, interrupted, hindered, perplexed, disquieted, or diverted from the object of the assembly. Richardson v. State, 5 Tex. App. 470.

"Disturbance" is any conduct which, being contrary to the usages of the particular sort of meeting and class of persons assembled, interferes with its due progress and services, or is annoying to the congregation in whole or in part. State v. Stuth, 11 Wash. 423, 39 Pac. 665.

Particular acts of disturbance.— Disturbance of a religious meeting may consist in boisterous language and conduct (Stewart v. State, 31 Ga. 232; Cantrell v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1895) 29 S. W. 42), cracking and eating nuts (Hunt v. State, 3 Tex. App. 116, 30 Am. Rep. 126), cursing at the church door (Holmes v. State, 39 Tex. Cr. 231, 45 S. W. 487, 73 Am. St. Rep. 921), entering with a cigar in the mouth and refusing to remove the hat on request (Hull v. State, 120 Ind. 153, 22 N. E. 117), wearing a false mustache (Williams v. State, 83 Ala. 68, 3 So. 743), or deriding and making sport of the faith and practices of the congregation (Chisholm v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1894) 24 S. W. 646). So it is a disturbance for a person who has been expelled from membership in a church to insist upon stating his grievances at a subsequent meeting for worship. State v. Ramsay, 78 N. C. 448. But to sing in church as a choir, although in violation of the orders of the pastor, is not a disturbance. Com. v. McDole, 2 Pa. Dist. 370.

"Rude or indecent behavior."— The words "indecently acting," in a statute penalizing the disturbance of religious worship by such conduct, are used in a relative sense, and signify any conduct which, being contrary to the usages of the particular class of worshipers, interferes with their services or annoys the congregation; and accordingly they embrace talking or whispering so as to disturb the congregation, and also any attempt to interrupt the communion of the Lord's Supper. Nichols v. State, 103 Ga. 61, 29 S. E. 431. However, a person is not guilty of "rude or indecent behavior" where he merely strikes back at another by whom he is insulted and assaulted, although he might have avoided a continuance of the difficulty by withdrawing from it without peril to himself. Reeves v. State, 96 Ala. 33, 11 So. 296. See, however, Goulding v. State, 82 Ala. 48, 2 So. 478.

Selling goods near meeting.—In some states it is made a penal offense by statute to maintain booths for the sale of refreshments within a prohibited distance of an assembly gathered for worship, with an exception in favor of those carrying on a preëstablished business, and those having obtained permission from persons in charge of the meeting. These statutes are constitutional. Com. v. Bearse, 132 Mass. 542, 42 Am. Rep. 450; State v. Cate, 58 N. H. 240; State v. Read, 12 R. I. 137. However, so much of the Pennsylvania statute as provides for the forfeiture and summary sale of articles offered for sale in violation of the act is unconstitutional. Kramer v. Marks, 64 Pa. St. 151; Fetter v. Wilt, 46 Pa. St. 457. The prohibition is generally directed in terms against the sale of any articles of traffic, with a special enumeration of intoxicating liquors; and is usually construed to penalize the sale, not only of liquors, but of any other article of traffic. State v. Solomon, 33 Ind. 450; Rogers v. Brown, 20 N. J. L. 119; Riggs v. State, 7 Lea (Tenn.) 475. Contra, Kramer v. Marks, 64 Pa. St. 151; Fetter v. Wilt, 46 Pa. St. 457. The sale of merchandise is the gist of the offense; it is immaterial whether the sale disturbs the assembly. State v. Cate, 58 N. H. 240. If in fact the assembly is disturbed by the noise made by those who attend the sale, the seller is guilty of disturbing the meeting, although the disturbance is not occasioned by his own acts. West v. State, 9 Humphr. (Tenn.) 66. Where a statute contains a proviso that nothing therein shall be construed to prevent persons from pursuing their ordinary business at their usual place of doing business, or from selling victuals at their usual place of abode, the negative averments of a criminal complaint referring to the proviso must be proved by the state. State v. Read, 12 R. I. 135.

Intruding in meeting-house.— In Tennessee it is made a misdemeanor by statute to move into any building belonging to a religious assembly without leave from the person in charge. McGuire v. State, 3 Heisk. 104.

Participation in disturbance.— Where a number of persons talk and laugh among themselves so that a meeting is disturbed, the act of one is the act of all, and any one may properly be convicted. McAdoo v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1896) 35 S. W. 966. And where a camp-meeting was disturbed at two A. M., and defendant was found with others

a disturbance of a religious assembly it is not necessary that the services shall have been discontinued because of the improper conduct;[13] nor is it necessary that the members of a congregation whose attention was distracted by the improper conduct should have been annoyed thereby.[14]

2. Proximate Cause of Disturbance. To amount to the offense, the improper conduct must have been the proximate cause of the disturbance of the meeting.[15]

3. Preventing Meeting. To prevent persons from assembling as a body is not a disturbance of a meeting.[16]

4. Extent of Disturbance. The offense of disturbing a religious meeting may consist in disturbing not only the congregation, but also the minister or clerk[17] or any member of the congregation.[18]

D. Intention, Wilfulness, and Malice. If the natural tendency of an act is to disturb a meeting, and it does in fact disturb it, an intention to disturb is not a necessary factor in the crime.[19] It is sufficient if the act itself was done intentionally, since in such a case the law presumes an intent to disturb the meeting,[20] and this presumption cannot be rebutted by proof of a secret intention not to who were disturbing it, and failed to explain his being out at that hour, his conviction was justified. Ball v. State, 67 Miss. 358, 7 So. 353. However, the fact that defendant was one of a number of persons outside of the building who disturbed the meeting by their conduct is not sufficient to connect him with the offense. Brown v. State, 46 Ala. 175; Miller v. State, 83 Ind. 334.

Notice to desist.— The penalty imposed by Mass. St. (1875) c. 75, § 6, for disorderly behavior in town-meetings, does not attach unless the offender persists in such behavior after notice from the moderator, and does not withdraw from the meeting after being requested so to do by the moderator. Com. v. Hoxey, 16 Mass. 385.

Acts constituting other offenses.—Where a person disturbs a meeting by fighting, the state may elect to prosecute him for disturbing the meeting rather than for the assault and battery. Wright v. State, 8 Lea (Tenn.) 563. Acts amounting in fact to the disturbance of a public meeting oftentimes constitute another offense also. For assault and battery generally see Assault and Battery. Breach of the peace generally see Breach of the Peace. Carrying weapons into assembly see Weapons. Disorderly conduct generally see Disorderly Conduct. Drunkenness generally see Drunkards. Nuisance in general see Nuisances. Riot in general see Riot. Unlawful assembly in general see Unlawful Assembly.

13. Johnson v. State, 92 Ala. 82, 9 So. 539, where it is held that a meeting is "disturbed" if an intoxicated person goes into a church and uses profane language in a low tone, thus attracting the attention of the congregation and minister, although he does not thereby interrupt the services.

14. Holt v. State, 1 Baxt. (Tenn.) 192; McElroy v. State, 25 Tex. 507.

15. State v. Kirby, 108 N. C. 772, 12 S. E. 1045, holding that to engage in a fight outside of a church is not a disturbance of public worship, where the meeting was not interrupted until a third person reported the fight to the congregation. And interference with the wagon of a person attending religious services is not a disturbance of the assembly, although the owner, apprehending that some mischief might be done to the vehicle, left the assembly for the purpose of preventing it, where he had no knowledge that the act was being, or had been, committed, until he reached the conveyance. Cox v. State, 136 Ala. 94, 34 So. 168.

16. Davis v. State, (Miss. 1894) 16 So. 377; Com. v. Underkoffer, 11 Pa. Co. Ct. 589, holding that to lock the door of a church before the congregation has assembled and thereby keep them out is not a disturbance of religious worship. And to take possession of a school-house when there are no pupils present, and to forbid the teacher to use the building, although the school is thereby prevented from assembling, is not a wilful disturbance of the school. State v. Spray, 113 N. C. 686, 18 S. E. 700. Contra, Douglass v. Barber, 18 R. I. 459, 28 Atl. 805.

A finding that the congregation were disturbed is justified by evidence that two members were disturbed by defendant's conduct. McElroy v. State, 25 Tex. 507.

To disturb one member of a congregation is an offense, under Tex. Pen. Code, art. 180, forbidding the disturbance, not only of the congregation, but of any part thereof. Young v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1898) 44 S. W. 507; McVea v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. 1, 26 S. W. 834.

20. Wright v. State, 8 Lea (Tenn.) 563.

Inference of intent.— An intent to disturb a religious meeting may be inferred from conduct whose natural tendency is to disturb interrupt the assembly.[21] However, the act of disturbance must have been intentional, and its natural tendency must have been to disturb the meeting.[22] Consequently if the act was done, not by design, but through accident or mistake, there is no crime.[23] In many states the statutes make wilfulness an essential element of the offense of disturbing public worship.[24] In some states malice is made an element of the offense by statute.[25]

E. Justification and Excuse — 1. In General. Various facts may or may not excuse or justify the disturbance of a public meeting according to the circumstances of the particular case.[26]

Primary and secondary intent.—Where the meeting was interrupted by defendant's engaging in a fight, it is immaterial that his primary intent was not to interrupt the meeting, but to commit an assault and battery. Wright v. State, 8 Lea (Tenn.) 563.

See 17 Cent. Dig. tit. "Disturbance of Public Assemblage," § 1 et seq.

The word "wilful," as used in these statutes, is synonymous with "intentional," "designed," or "without lawful excuse." Williams v. State, 83 Ala. 68, 3 So. 743; Goulding v. State, 82 Ala. 48, 2 So. 478; Harrison v. State, 37 Ala. 154. "Wilful" means "with evil intent or without reasonable grounds for believing the act to be lawful" (Holmes v. State, 39 Tex. Cr. 231, 45 S. W. 487, 73 Am. St. Rep. 921); "without reasonable ground for believing the act to be lawful, or a reckless disregard of the rights of others" (Finney v. State, 29 Tex. App. 184, 15 S. W. 175); or evil intent or legal malice or without reasonable grounds for believing the act to be lawful (Wood v. State, 16 Tex. App. 574). "Unlawfully" is not a synonym of "wilfully." State v. Hopper, 27 Mo. 599; State v. Townsell, 3 Heisk. (Tenn.) 6.

Wilfulness may include legal malice (Wood v. State, 16 Tex. App. 574), although legal malice is not a necessary element of it (Holmes v. State, 39 Tex. Cr. 231, 45 S. W. 487, 73 Am. St. Rep. 921. Contra, State v. Dahlstrom, (Minn. 1903) 95 N. W. 580).

Presumption of wilfulness.— If a person curses in church in a manner calculated to disturb the congregation, the presumption is that the disturbance was wilful and wanton. Harvey v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1898) 44 S. W. 151.

Wilfully, maliciously, or contemptuously.— Where the statute uses the terms "wilfully," "maliciously," or "contemptuously" in the disjunctive, the offense is complete if either of those elements was present. State v. Karnes, 51 Mo. App. 293.

Recklessness or carelessness.— It is not sufficient that the act was done recklessly or carelessly. Harrison v. State, 37 Ala. 154. An act may, however, have been done wilfully, although carelessly and recklessly. Consequently the offense may be committed, although the acts complained of were done through carelessness or recklessness. Johnson v. State, 92 Ala. 82, 9 So. 539; Finney v. State, 29 Tex. App. 184, 15 S. W. 175.

25. State v. Jones, 53 Mo. 486; State v. Bankhead, 25 Mo. 558; McElroy v. State, 25 Tex. 507. And see Com. v. Phillips, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 370.

Presumption of malice.— Where a person disturbs a congregation by disorderly conduct and profane language, the presumption is, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that he acted maliciously. McElroy v. State, 25 Tex. 507.

26. Harrison v. State, 37 Ala. 154, where it is held that the fact that similar acts of disturbance had been perpetrated in the same church by others without reproof is no defense. Nor is it an excuse that one who has obtained permission to speak at a meeting is not called to order or otherwise interrupted while indulging in offensive discourse. Lancaster v. State, 53 Ala. 398, 28 Am. Rep. 625. And in a prosecution under a statute making it a penal offense to carry on unusual business within a mile of a camp-meeting without the permission of the authorities in charge, it is no defense that defendant had received no notice of the proposed meeting. Com. v. Bearse, 132 Mass. 542, 42 Am. Rep. 450.

Provocation.— Where the leader of a religious meeting indulged in personal criticism of defendant and denied him the privilege of speaking in his defense, and then indulged in further abusive language, whereupon defendant, upon again being denied the right to speak, left the meeting, a conviction was not justified. State v. Dahlstrom, (Minn. 1903)

2. Intoxication. Intoxication is not an excuse for disturbing a religious meeting.[27]

3. Authority or Right. The disturbance of a meeting may be justified when the accused acts under lawful authority[28] or in the exercise of a lawful right,[29] such as for instance the right of self-defense.[30]

II. PROCEDURE.

A. Indictment and Information[31] — 1. Form in General. The indictment must set out the offense with sufficient definiteness to establish its identity.[32] It 95 N. W. 580. And see Nash v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. 368, 24 S. W. 32. However, provocation does not justify a person in disturbing a meeting by calling another a liar. Calvert v. State, 14 Tex. App. 154. Provocation as mitigating punishment see infra, II, D.

27. Johnson v. State, 92 Ala. 82, 9 So. 539.

28. Ex p. McNair, 13 Nebr. 195, 13 N. W. 172, 42 Am. Rep. 765, where it is held that a statute prohibiting the sale of articles of traffic within three miles of any religious assembly, in any field or woodland, without a permit from the managers of the assembly, is not infringed by one duly licensed by the authorities of a village to sell such articles at a camp-meeting within the village boundaries. However, if defendant asserts a license from the managers of the assembly, the burden is on him to show that it was granted by persons authorized to issue it, and he does not prove this merely by the failure of the government to show that the assembly had an organization which established and governed it. Com. v. Bearse, 132 Mass. 542, 42 Am. Rep. 450.

Officers performing duties.— The disturbance of a public school is justified where the accused acted in pursuance of an order of the school-board, of which he was a member, and in the honest discharge of what he supposed to be his official duty, although as a matter of law the board was not vested with power to make the order. Bays v. State, 6 Nebr. 167. Nor is it an offense for the officers of a church to attempt, in a quiet, peaceful, and orderly manner, to protect the congregation from imposition and perhaps serious detriment by refusing to permit the services to be led by a suspended minister. Richardson v. State, 5 Tex. App. 470. So where a minority of the congregation who have been expelled from membership assemble in the church building to worship the officers of the church may use such means, not amounting to needless force, as is necessary to prevent the intrusion, without being guilty of disturbing public worship. Morris v. State, 84 Ala. 457, 4 So. 628. However, the sexton of the society that owns a church is not justified in interrupting the meeting of another congregation because it is an interference with the rights of a third congregation duly licensed to hold meetings there, where the licensee makes no objection. Dorn v. State, 4 Tex. App. 67. Right to exclude trespassers see also infra, note 29. Preventing assembly as disturbance of meeting see supra, I, C, 3.

Permission to speak.— No permission given a person to speak at a meeting by the leader of the services can justify or excuse acts or words which offend the order or decorum essential to christian worship. Lancaster v. State, 53 Ala. 398, 28 Am. Rep. 625.

29. State v. Schieneman, 64 Mo. 386, holding that a statute protecting religious assemblages does not allow the streets of a city to be blockaded by a religious meeting, and that a person who drives through a street to the disturbance of an assemblage is not guilty of an offense.

Right to exclude trespassers.— If a person refuses to let the congregation enter the usual place of assembly because he in good faith, although mistakenly, believes that he has a right to exclude them as owner of the premises, he is not criminally liable unless he maintains his supposed right in a disorderly manner. State v. Jacobs, 103 N. C. 397, 9 S. E. 404. However, it is no justification for moving into a building belonging to a religious society without leave, in violation of law, where the legal title of the society was perfect, and it was in possession, that plaintiff has an equitable title to the premises, since it was not intended by the legislature that questions of title to real estate should be tried in a prosecution for that offense. McGuire v. State, 3 Heisk. (Tenn.) 104. Right of church officers to exclude trespassers, see supra, note 28. Preventing assembly as disturbance of meeting see supra, I, C, 3.

Privileges of membership.— A member of the assemblage, although he be a member of the particular religious organization having control of the services, is bound to regard its peace and order. Lancaster v. State, 53 Ala. 398, 25 Am. Rep. 625; State v. Ramsay, 78 N. C. 448.

30. Wood v. State, 11 Tex. App. 318, holding that a member of a congregation may defend himself against an assault made upon him during the services by another member, even though the services are thereby interrupted. Contra, it seems, Graham v. Bell, 1 Nott & M. (S. C.) 278, 9 Am. Dec. 687. However, one who wilfully and intentionally engages in a fight without lawful excuse or necessity at or near the place at which people are engaged in worship, whereby they are disturbed, is guilty of disturbing religious worship, although he did not bring on the difficulty or strike the first blow. Goulding v. State, 82 Ala. 48, 2 So. 478. See, however, Reeves v. State, 96 Ala. 33, 11 So. 296.

31. Indictment and information generally see Indictments and Informations.

32. State v. Fugitt, 66 Mo. App. 625; State v. Kindrick, 21 Mo. App. 507.

is ordinarily sufficient, however, to frame the indictment in the language of the statute or in terms of equivalent import in all cases where the statute so far individuates the offense that the offender has proper notice, from the mere adoption of the statutory terms, as to what the offense he is to be tried for really is.[33]

2. Particular Allegations — a. Existence and Purpose of Meeting. The indictment must allege the existence of a meeting which defendant is charged with disturbing.[34] And so too the indictment must allege the purpose for which the meeting was assembled[35] with sufficient particularity to bring the disturbance within the prohibition of the statute defining the offense.

For forms of indictment for unlawfully disturbing an assembly see Kidder v. State, 58 Ind. 68; People v. Crowley, 23 Hun (N. Y.) 412; State v. Yarborough, 19 Tex. 161.

Conformity between information and complaint.— An information charging that defendant alone committed the offense by loud and vociferous talking and by assaulting a person named may be based on a complaint that the offense was committed by defendant and that person by loud and vociferous talking and by assaulting each other. Wood v. State, 11 Tex. App. 318. An information with full and proper averments charging that defendant, on a day named, unlawfully and wilfully disturbed a congregation assembled for religious worship, etc., taken in connection with an affidavit that defendant, on that day, "did commit the offense of disturbing religious worship," etc., is sufficient to support the conviction. Phants v. State, 2 Tex. App. 398.

Common-law offense.— An indictment concluding contra formam statuti may be maintained if the facts charged amount to an offense at common law, although not within the purview of any statute. Com. v. Hoxey, 16 Mass. 385.

33. Smith v. State, 63 Ala. 55; Minter v. State, 104 Ga. 743, 30 S. E. 989; Howard v. State, 87 Ind. 68; State v. Stubblefield, 32 Mo. 563; State v. McDaniel, 40 Mo. App. 356; State v. Hynes, 39 Mo. App. 569.

As against a motion to quash, it is sufficient to charge the offense in the language of the statute or in terms substantially equivalent thereto. Blake v. State, 18 Ind. App. 280, 47 N. E. 942.

Statutory form.— Where an indictment is not framed on the form given by statute, it must aver every material constituent of the offense, excepting the statements of venue and of time; and this is true, although the statutory form omits material constituents of the offense and the indictment alleges every material fact which the form contains. Smith v. State, 63 Ala. 55.

34. Smith v. State, 63 Ala. 55, holding that an indictment which fails to conform with the statute creating the offense for want of an averment that the persons disturbed were met in "public assembly," and which fails to conform with the statute prescribing a form of indictment for want of an averment that there was an "assemblage" of people, is insufficient. So an indictment charging the disturbance of a "congration" of people met for religious worship is bad. State v. Mitchell, 25 Mo. 420. And a complaint charging a wilful disturbance of a school must allege that the school was in session at the time of the disturbance. State v. Gager, 28 Conn. 232.

35. State v. Fisher, 25 N. C. 111.

Lawful purpose.— The indictment must allege that the meeting disturbed was held for a lawful purpose. State v. Steele, 74 Mo. App. 5. But an information for disturbing "any meeting of inhabitants of this State met together for any lawful purpose" need not state what the particular purpose was. Howard v. State, 87 Ind. 68, 69; Blake v. State, 18 Ind. App. 280, 47 N. E. 942.

Religious worship.— The indictment should charge that the assembly had met for divine worship, divine service, religious worship or service, or something of the same import. State v. Fisher, 25 N. C. 111. But an averment that the congregation were assembled for religious worship sufficiently alleges that they were "attending [a] protracted or other religious meeting." State v. Yarborough, 19 Tex. 161. And where a complaint alleges the exposure for sale of refreshments within the prohibited distance of the camp-meeting of a certain conference, being then and there a religious society holding a camp-meeting, it is not necessary to allege that the meeting was called for a "purpose connected with the object for which the society was organized." State v. Read, 12 R. I. 135.

Social and moral purposes.— An indictment charging the disturbance of a meeting at a church for social and moral purposes need not set forth the purpose of the meeting with greater particularity. Com. v. Gennerette, 10 Pa. Super. Ct. 598.

Name of society.— An indictment for disturbing a religious society at worship need not state the name of the society. State v. Ringer, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 109.

Following language of statute.— A complaint alleging the offense in the language of the statute is sufficient, although it does not show the purpose of the assembly. Von Rueden v. State, 96 Wis. 671, 71 N. W. 1048.

Lawful conduct of meeting.— An indictment must allege that the congregation disturbed were conducting themselves in a lawful manner. Kizzia v. State, 38 Tex. Cr. 319, 43 S. W. 86; Mullinix v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. 116, 22 S. W. 407. And an allegation that the meeting disturbed was "assembled for religious worship in a lawful manner" is not a sufficient allegation that the congregation were "assembled for religious worship and

b. Disturbance, and Acts Constituting Same — (I) FACT OF DISTURBANCE. The indictment must allege that the meeting was in fact disturbed by the act complained of.[36]

(II) MANNER OF DISTURBANCE — (A) In General. An indictment for disturbing a public meeting should show what the disturbance was. It should allege the manner or means by which the meeting was disturbed.[37] It is sufficient, however, to describe the acts of disturbance in general terms. The indictment need not enter into details.[38] conducting themselves in a lawful manner." Kizzia v. State, 38 Tex. Cr. 319, 320, 43 S. W. 86.

36. State v. Bankhead, 25 Mo. 558.

Sales of goods near religious meeting.— However, a complaint or indictment under a statute prohibiting unusual traffic within a certain distance of a religious meeting need not allege that the sales disturbed the assembly, disturbance not being an element of the offense. State v. Cate, 58 N. H. 240; Riggs v. State, 7 Lea (Tenn.) 475.

Nebraska.— Jones v. State, 28 Nebr. 495, 44 N. W. 658, 7 L. R. A. 325.

See 17 Cent. Dig. tit. "Disturbance of Public Assemblage," § 10.

If the disturbance is by acting, the indictment should indicate in general terms, without going into details, the character of the disturbing acts, as by hissing, applauding, laughing, disorderly moving about, or any other disturbing conduct that may be described in general terms. State v. Hinson, 31 Ark. 638.

In Virginia, however, an indictment for disturbing a religious congregation need not set up the means of disturbance. Com. v. Daniels, 2 Va. Cas. 402.

Charge in disjunctive.— Where a statute provides that "any person who, by loud or vociferous talking or swearing, or by any other noise, wilfully disturbs any congregation" is punishable, an indictment charging all the prohibited acts in a single count must use the conjunctive "and" instead of the disjunctive "or" employed in the statute. Copping v. State, 7 Tex. App. 61, 62.

38. Thompson v. State, 16 Tex. App. 159. See, however, Rex v. Cheere, 4 B. & C. 902, 7 D. & R. 461, 4 L. J. K. B. O. S. 79, 10 E. C. L. 851, a case of disturbance by threats.

Illustrations.— An indictment for disturbing a meeting by profane discourse need not set out the language used, either in detail or in substance. State v. Ratliff, 10 Ark. 536; State v. McDaniel, 40 Mo. App. 356. If the disturbance is by abusive language, the words spoken or the character of the language used need not be alleged, since mere noise by any kind of talking may disturb a congregation. State v. Hinson, 31 Ark. 638. An indictment charging that the offense was committed "by cursing and quarreling and fighting and discharging a loaded pistol, and by boisterous conduct and by otherwise indecently acting" sufficiently describes the mode of disturbance. Huffman v. State, 95 Ga. 469, 20 S. E. 216. An indictment charging that the accused "by cursing and using profane and obscene language, and by being intoxicated, and by fighting, and by loud talking, and by . . . otherwise indecently acting, did interrupt and disturb a congregation of persons, . . lawfully assembled for divine service" is sufficient without specifying the precise language alleged to have been used by the accused, or designating the person with whom he fought. Minter v. State, 104 Ga. 743, 744, 30 S. E. 989. An indictment in two counts alleging first, that defendants "did then and there, in a tumultuous and boisterous manner, and by indecently acting, disturb a congregation of persons lawfully assembled for divine service" at a certain church; and second, that they "did then and there indecently act and attempt to prevent the administration of the holy sacrament" at said church is sufficient on general demurrer as against an objection that the first count should have set out the particular act which was tumultuous and boisterous, and that the second count should have particularized the act of indecency. Hicks v. State, 60 Ga. 464.

Assaulting member of congregation.— Under a statute describing two classes of offenses: First, the disturbance of a congregation met for religious worship, by making a noise or by rude and indecent behavior, or by profane discourse either within the place of worship or so near to it as to disturb the meeting; and second, the threatening or assaulting of any person there being, an indictment is insufficient to charge an offense of the second class where it attempts to charge an offense of the first class and only describes the assault as the means of disturbance. State v. Bankhead, 25 Mo. 558.

Conduct "calculated to disturb."—Where a statute makes it an offense to disturb any congregation by acting in any way that is calculated to disturb them, an indictment alleging that defendant disturbed the congregation by laughing and talking, etc., is insufficient without averring that the conduct was calculated to produce a disturbance. State v. Booe, 62 Ark. 512, 37 S. W. 47.

Proximate cause of disturbance.— An indictment charging that defendant did disturb an assembly "by rude and indecent conduct, bidding defiance to teacher and school di-

(B) Following Language of Statute. If the statute defining the offense describes the various ways in which it is unlawful to disturb a meeting, it is sufficient to charge a disturbance in the language of the statute, without further specifying the means of interruption.[39]

(C) Duplicity. An indictment in a single count charging various means by which a meeting was disturbed is not bad for duplicity.[40] And an indictment for disturbing a religious meeting may charge defendant in the same count with disturbing both the society and its members.[41]

c. Intention, Wilfulness, and Malice. While as a rule where the evil intent accompanying an act is necessary to constitute it a crime the intent must be alleged in the indictment,[42] yet it is sufficient to allege it in the prefatory part of the pleading.[43] In those jurisdictions where wilfulness is an essential element of the offense, the indictment must charge that the offense was wilfully done.[44] So too in those states where malice is an element of the offense the indictment must allege that the acts were done maliciously.[45] rectors, and refusing to obey the orders of either, thereby interfering with the literary exercises of the school" sufficiently shows that the disturbance was caused by rude and indecent conduct. Robertson v. State, 99 Tenn. 180, 41 S. W. 441.

39. State v. Minyard, 12 Ark. 156; Minter v. State, 104 Ga. 743, 30 S. W. 989; Com. v. Gennerette, 10 Pa. Super. Ct. 598.

If the statute does not particularize the means of disturbance, an indictment which merely follows the language of the statute is insufficient. Conerly v. State, 66 Miss. 96, 5 So. 625. Contra, Jones v. State, 28 Nebr. 495, 44 N. W. 658, 7 L. R. A. 325; Kindred v. State, 33 Tex. 67.

Sales of goods near religious meeting.— An indictment under a statute making it a misdemeanor to "expose to sale or gift any spirituous liquors or any provisions or other articles of traffic" within one mile of a worshiping assembly, and not at the person's usual place of business, need not specify the articles charged to have been sold. It is sufficient if it follows the words of the statute. Riggs v. State, 7 Lea (Tenn.) 475.

Surplusage.— An indictment charging that defendant disturbed a congregation assembled for religious worship "by loud and vociferous talking and swearing" is sufficient, although the quoted words are not found in the statute describing the offense. Lockett v. State, 40 Tex. 4.

40. State v. McDaniel, 40 Mo. App. 356, holding that an information charging that defendant disturbed a congregation by making a loud noise, by rude and indecent behavior, and by profane discourse describes but one offense. And an indictment under a statute providing that "any person who, by loud and vociferous talking or swearing, or by any other noise, wilfully disturbs any congregation" is punishable, may in a single count embrace all the prohibited acts. Copping v. State, 7 Tex. App. 61, 62.

Surplusage.— An indictment charging the disturbance of a congregation by the use of a described indecent gesture is not bad for duplicity, because it also charges a disturbance by talking and laughing, the latter being mere surplusage. State v. Bledsoe, 47 Ark. 233, 1 S. W. 149. Nor is an indictment for disturbing a congregation by profanely swearing and "by talking and laughing aloud" bad for duplicity, the latter words being merely surplusage. State v. Horn, 19 Ark. 578.

41. State v. Ringer, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 109.

42. See, generally, INDICTMENTS AND INFORMATIONS.

Sufficiency of allegation.— An information charging that defendant "did use loud and profane language, and did smoke cigarettes, and did refuse to leave said room when requested so to do" by the officer in charge of religious worship sufficiently shows that defendant's acts were done with intent to create a disturbance. State v. Stuth, 11 Wash. 423, 425, 39 Pac. 665.

43. State v. Hynes, 39 Mo. App. 569.

44. State v. Stroud, 99 Iowa 16, 68 N. W. 450; Com. v. Phillips, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 370; State v. Townsell, 3 Heisk. (Tenn.) 6. And see State v. Hopper, 27 Mo. 599.

Contrary to statute.— An information charging a disturbance "contrary to the statute" does not supply an omitted averment that the acts were wilfully done. State v. Stroud, 99 Iowa 16, 68 N. W. 450.

Unlawfulness.— An indictment alleging that the acts were "unlawfully" done is not equivalent to a charge that they were done wilfully. State v. Townsell, 3 Heisk. (Tenn.) 6.

Sufficiency of allegation.— An information charging that defendant "did use loud and profane language, and did smoke cigarettes, and did refuse to leave said room when requested so to do" by the officer in charge of religious worship sufficiently shows that defendant's acts were done wilfully. State v. Stuth, 11 Wash. 423, 425, 39 Pac. 665.

45. Com. v. Phillips, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 370.

Wilfully, maliciously, or contemptuously.— In Missouri the indictment should charge that the disturbance was done "wilfully, maliciously, or contemptuously." State v. Hopper, 27 Mo. 599; State v. Bankhead, 25 Mo. 558. An indictment is sufficient in this state which alleges that defendant "wilfully" dis-

d. Place of Offense. By the weight of authority an indictment for disturbing religious worship need not specify either the locality of the church in which the congregation was assembled or its name,[46] it being sufficient if it shows that the offense was committed within the territorial jurisdiction of the court.

e. Time of Offense. The indictment should specify the time when the offense was committed.[47]

3. VARIANCE. All material facts charged by the indictment must be proved as laid.[48] A variance between the indictment and the proof in respect to the purpose of the meeting[49] or the manner or means of the disturbance[50] is fatal. It is turbed the meeting, however, since the statute sets forth those words in the disjunctive. State v. Karnes, 51 Mo. App. 293.

46. State v. Smith, 5 Harr. (Del.) 490; Minter v. State, 104 Ga. 743, 30 S. E. 989; Bush v. State, 5 Tex. App. 64; Corley v. State, 3 Tex. App. 412. Contra, State v. Fugitt, 66 Mo. App. 625; State v. Stegall, 65 Mo. App. 243; State v. Kindrick, 21 Mo. App. 507. And see Stratton v. State, 13 Ark. 688.

At or near place of worship.— The indictment need not aver that the act was done "at or near" the place of worship. Warren v. State, 3 Heisk. (Tenn.) 269 [overruling State v. Doty, 5 Coldw. (Tenn.) 33].

Character of place of meeting.— In Missouri the indictment must allege that the place where the congregation met was set apart for religious worship. State v. Schieneman, 64 Mo. 386; State v. Ellis, 71 Mo. App. 269; State v. Fugitt, 66 Mo. App. 625; State v. Stegall, 65 Mo. App. 243; State v. Kindrick, 21 Mo. App. 507. This is sufficiently alleged, however, by an averment that the congregation met for religious worship "at the Methodist Episcopal Church" in a certain town and county. State v. Karnes, 51 Mo. App. 293. In Texas the indictment must allege that the congregation was assembled at one of the places of meeting mentioned in the statute. State v. McClure, 13 Tex. 23. This is sufficiently done by an averment that the congregation was assembled for the purpose of worship in a certain house for religious worship, a "meeting-house" being one of the places mentioned in the statute. State v. Yarborough, 19 Tex. 161.

47. Stratton v. State, 13 Ark. 688.

In Alabama this rule has been modified by statute. Smith v. State, 63 Ala. 55.

Indictment void in part.— An indictment laying the time of the disturbance on a certain day, and on "other" days both before and after, is void only as to the uncertain days and is sufficient as to the day specified. State v. Jasper, 15 N. C. 323.

48. Jones v. State, 28 Nebr. 495, 44 N. W. 658, 7 L. R. A. 325, holding that if a complaint for disturbing religious worship alleges that defendant was not a member of the religious society in session and had no right to be present at the meeting those facts must be proved.

Joint wrong-doers.—Where two are charged in one count with disturbing a congregation of persons assembled for divine worship, the evidence of guilt must apply to the same transaction in order to convict both. Two separate acts of disturbance done by defendants respectively at different times, although on the same day, will not support the indictment. Jackson v. State, 87 Ga. 432, 13 S. E. 689. However, an allegation that defendant "acted together with" another in the commission of the offense is surplusage, and proof that he acted alone is not a variance. Finney v. State, 29 Tex. App. 184, 15 S. W. 175.

49. Kidder v. State, 58 Ind. 68, where it was held that if an indictment charges the disturbance of an assembly met to transact business matters relating to a church, proof of the disturbance of a meeting for religious worship does not sustain a conviction. And where a statute distinguishes between a congregation assembled for religious worship and one assembled for the purpose of conducting a Sunday school, a charge of disturbing a congregation assembled for religious worship is not sustained by proof of disturbing a Sunday school. Hubbard v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. 389, 24 S. W. 30. So an allegation that refreshments were exposed to sale within the prohibited distance from a camp-meeting of a certain conference, which was then and there a religious society holding such camp-meeting, must be proved as laid. State v. Read, 12 R. I. 135.

Progress of services.— If an indictment charges the disturbance of a congregation actually engaged in worship, it is a variance to show a disturbance merely of persons assembled for such worship. State v. Bryson, 82 N. C. 576.

Name of society.— It is no ground for quashing the complaint that it referred to the "Rhode Island and Eastern Connecticut Advent Christian Conference" as the "Rhode Island, Easton, Connecticut Advent Christian Conference." State v. Read, 12 R. I. 135.

50. Stratton v. State, 13 Ark. 688; State v. Jones, 53 Mo. 486; State v. Sherrill, 46 N. C. 508; Lyons v. State, 25 Tex. App. 403, 8 S. W. 643.

Issues.— Under an indictment alleging a disturbance "by talking, and by loud talking, and by using profane language, . . . and by then and there being, intoxicated, and by otherwise indecently acting, striking matches, smoking a pipe, making indecent and vulgar noises by laughing aloud," etc., the jury are not restricted to the consideration of vulgar noises made by laughing aloud, there being evidence of indecent and vulgar noises. Taffe v. State, 90 Ga. 459, 16 S. E. 204.

Conjunctive allegation of means of disturbance.— Where a statute contains disjunctive

a fatal defect also if the state fails to prove that the offense was committed within the territorial jurisdiction of the court;[51] and an allegation charging the disturbance of a congregation assembled at a named church is matter of local description identifying the particular congregation alleged to have been disturbed, and must be proved as laid.[52] However, an indictment which charges defendant in the same count with disturbing a religious society and its members while at worship is sustained by proof that he disturbed either.[53]

B. Evidence.[54] The rules of evidence prevailing generally in criminal prosecutions are applicable in prosecutions for disturbing a public meeting.[55] clauses specifying the prohibited ways in which a religious meeting may be disturbed, and the indictment in one count alleges a violation of those clauses conjunctively, the state may proceed upon either of the alternative clauses. Copping v. State, 7 Tex. App. 61.

51. State v. Kindrick, 21 Mo. App. 507.

52. Minter v. State, 104 Ga. 743, 30 S. E. 989.

The general rule of criminal procedure is that place is essential only on the question of jurisdiction, and, even where it is incorrectly stated, yet if the evidence establishes that the offense was committed within the jurisdiction of the court, the variance will not be fatal. Where, however, the place is stated in the indictment as matter of local description and not as venue it must be proved as laid. Minter v. State, 104 Ga. 743, 30 S. E. 989.

Assembly near place named in indictment. — A charge that the accused disturbed a meeting assembled "at" a named building is sustained by proof that he disturbed a meeting assembled at a bush arbor near such building, both places being within the jurisdiction of the court. McCright v. State, 110 Ga. 261, 34 S. E. 368; Minter v. State, 104 Ga. 743, 30 S. E. 989. However, an indictment for disturbing a congregation assembled "in" a certain church is not sustained by proof of the disturbance of a congregation assembled in the open air at a place temporarily prepared for worship, about forty yards from the meeting-house. Stratton v. State, 13 Ark. 688.

53. State v. Ringer, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 109.

Surplusage.—Where an information charges that defendant disturbed a meeting met for religious worship, an allegation that certain persons in particular were disturbed is surplusage and need not be proved. Hull v. State, 120 Ind. 153, 22 N. E. 117.

54. Evidence in criminal cases generally see CRIMINAL LAW.

55. Lewis v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. 618, 28 S. W. 465, where it is held that in order to show accused's mental condition, and also to affect the weight of his testimony, the state may prove that he had been drinking at the time of the disturbance.

Character of accused.— An accused may put in evidence of his good character, but until he does so the state may not prove his bad character as a disturber of religious assemblages. Harrison v. State, 37 Ala. 154. And if the accused puts his character in issue, the inquiry on the part of the state must be confined to a time antecedent to the time when the offense is alleged to have been committed. Brown v. State, 46 Ala. 175.

Hearsay.— Testimony that the preacher ceased preaching and spoke to defendant and others participating in the disturbance about their talking is not inadmissible as hearsay. McAdoo v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1896) 35 S. W. 966.

Declarations of accused.— The state may show declarations and conduct of defendant during the services tending to show wilfulness on his part in doing the act causing the disturbance. Adair v. State, 134 Ala. 183, 32 So. 326. Thus declarations of defendant before going to church and after his arrival there that he was going to stay there until he got satisfaction are admissible to support a charge of wilful disturbance. Price v. State, 107 Ala. 161, 18 So. 130. And evidence that after the sermon was concluded defendant stated that if the preacher fooled with him he would shoot him was admissible to show that his talking during the sermon was maliciously done. McAdoo v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1896) 35 S. W. 966.

Admissions of accused.— Where defendant understood that a remark addressed to him referred to a probable prosecution for disturbing a meeting, his answer that if the preacher fooled with him he would shoot him is a passive admission that he was connected with the disturbance. McAdoo v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1896) 35 S. W. 966.

Conclusions of witnesses.— Testimony that the manner in which defendant called witness a liar was calculated to disturb the congregation (Calvert v. State, 14 Tex. App. 154) or that the witness was disturbed by defendant's conduct (Morris v. State, 84 Ala. 457, 4 So. 628. And see Taffe v. State, 90 Ga. 459, 16 S. E. 204) is inadmissible as calling for a conclusion. However, testimony that defendant "caused general confusion, excitement, and disturbance" is not merely the witness' opinion (Lewis v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. 618, 28 S. W. 465); nor is testimony that defendant "was talking mad," and that he and another "looked like they were trying to fight" (Reeves v. State, 96 Ala. 33, 11 So. 296); and accordingly either is admissible.

Competency of witness.— The complainant in a prosecution for disturbing a religious meeting in violation of the Pennsylvania act of March 16, 1847, is a competent witness, since no part of the fine is payable to him.

C. Trial[56] — 1. Questions For Jury. It is within the province of the jury to determine whether at the time of the disturbance there was in fact a meeting of people,[57] whether the persons disturbed were in fact a part of the meeting,[58] whether the meeting was in fact one of those to which the law extends its protection,[59] whether the meeting in question was in fact disturbed,[60] whether the particular acts were sufficient in fact to constitute a disturbance,[61] and whether the disturbance was in fact intentional or wilful.[62] All these are questions for the jury to determine under proper instructions from the court.

2. Instructions.[63] The rules of law concerning instructions to the jury in criminal prosecutions in general are applicable in prosecutions for disturbing a public meeting.[64]

Usage of congregation.— Where a person who has been expelled from membership in a church disturbs a subsequent meeting by interrupting the services to state his grievances, the state may show that it was not the usage in that church for expelled members to do so. State v. Ramsay, 78 N. C. 448.

56. Trial of criminal cases generally see Criminal Law.

57. State v. Snyder, 14 Ind. 429, where it is held that the question whether a congregation was still "met together" or dispersed after the benediction is one for the jury under proper instructions as to the protection afforded by the statute.

58. Adair v. State, 134 Ala. 183, 32 So. 326, where it is held that the question whether persons outside of the meeting-house constituted a part of the assembly, and the question whether persons had withdrawn themselves from the meeting so as no longer to constitute a part of it, were for the jury.

59. State v. Norris, 59 N. H. 536, where it is held that where the principal object of a camp-meeting was the inculcation of principles of temperance and abstinence from intoxicating liquors, and each session was opened by prayer and the reading of the scriptures, and the meeting consisted of addresses on that subject, and the singing of temperance and religious hymns, it was a question for the jury whether the meeting was "convened for the purpose of religious worship," within the terms of the statute.

62. Harrison v. State, 37 Ala. 154; Wright v. State, 8 Lea (Tenn.) 563.

63. Instructions in criminal cases generally see Criminal Law.

64. Williams v. State, 83 Ala. 68, 3 So. 743, holding that a general charge should be construed as a whole and in connection with the uncontradicted evidence in the particular case; and that if, so construed, it asserts the law correctly, a disconnected sentence, although it may not express all the constituents of the offense, will not work a reversal.

Assumption of facts in issue.— Where defendant denies making any disturbance, it is error for the court in the instructions to assume that the acts complained of were evil and unlawful. Harvey v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1898) 44 S. W. 151.

Conformity to evidence.— Evidence that the disturbance occurred in the church during services, as well as just outside of the church immediately after services, justifies a charge that the statute protects a congregation so long as any of them are on the ground, either before, during, or after service. Love v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. 27, 29 S. W. 790.

Conformity to issues.— A request for instructions predicated upon a disturbance of a meeting, the disturbance of which was not charged in the indictment, is properly refused. Freeman v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1898) 44 S. W. 170.

Misleading instructions.—A charge that the word "interrupt," as used in the statute, means anything done by the accused which takes the attention of the hearers from the services or the discourse of a minister is bad as tending to mislead the jury by withdrawing their attention from wilfulness as an element of the offense. Brown v. State, 46 Ala. 175.

Presentation of defendant's theory.—Where the evidence is conflicting as to whether the meeting was one held for religious worship, defendant is entitled to a charge presenting his theory of the case. Green v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1900) 56 S. W. 915. So where a member of the church had prayed for defendant by name as being a very wicked and mean person, and defendant had appealed in vain to a deacon to put a stop to it, whereupon defendant protested against the person in question taking any further part in the services, he was entitled to an instruction that to be protected from disturbance the congregation must have been conducting itself in a lawful manner. Nash v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. 368, 24 S. W. 32.

Harmless error.— Although a disturbance occurred in the house and during services, it is harmless error to charge that the congregation were protected so long as any of them were on the ground before or after the meeting. Freeman v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1898) 44 S. W. 170.

66. Calvert v. State, 14 Tex. App. 154, holding that where a meeting was disturbed by defendant's calling witness a liar, defendant may show in mitigation of punishment that the witness gave him provocation for the remark.

Insanity.— It does not mitigate the offense of disturbing religious worship that the person conducting the meeting was insane. Freeman v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1898) 44 S. W. 170.

I. DEFINITION.

Divorce is a legislative or judicial act by which a marriage relation is either dissolved or partially suspended.[1] In the United States the term is generally used as implying the validity of the marriage, and does not therefore include the judicial annulment of an invalid marriage;[2] but in England the term seems now to be applied both to decrees of nullity and to decrees of dissolution of marriage.[3] As used in this article and for the most part in all recent statutes and decisions, it includes the judicial separation of the parties and the absolute dissolution of the marriage, but excludes an adjudication to the effect that no valid marriage ever existed.[4]

II. ORIGIN AND EXISTENCE.

A. Among the Ancients. Wherever among the ancients the institution of matrimony has existed, there has been a definite recognition of the right of either one or both of the parties to dissolve the relation, either by the act of one or both more or less formally executed or by the judicial decree of some magistrate or tribunal of competent jurisdiction.[5]

B. Among Modern Christian Nations. All christian nations by more or less rigid laws have limited and controlled the dissolution or suspension of the marriage relation. In countries whose governments are influenced by the church of Rome no divorces are permitted without special sanction of the pope;[6] but in other countries courts are clothed with power to grant divorces for causes prescribed by legislative enactment.[7] In the United States there is a lamentable diversity in the law of divorce in the several states, caused in the main by the difference in the statutory grounds for divorce and the different rules which exist as to the residence of the parties and the effect of the decree upon the validity of a remarriage of either one or the other of the divorced parties.[8]

III. KINDS.

A. Legislative Divorce — 1. DEFINITION. A legislative divorce is one granted by the legislature or by a court acting in a special case under authority granted by a special act of the legislature.[9]

2. LEGISLATIVE POWER — a. General Rules. The power to grant a divorce from the bonds of matrimony has been exercised by the parliament of England from an early period,[10] and this example was followed by the legislative assemblies of the colonies in America.[11] It seems to be established by the weight of authority that a legislature has power to grant divorces[12] unless expressly prohibited by constifoundation of ancient Rome there is no recorded instance of a divorce (Schouler Husb. & W. §§ 5, 489), although, as suggested by Prof. Woolsey, this absence of recorded cases may be due to the existence of family courts which apparently had jurisdiction over divorce cases. Woolsey Div. & Div. Leg. 40. Toward the end of the republic public opinion had ceased to frown upon divorce; the remedy was available to husband or wife and for slight cause, and although regulated by statute was easily procured with little or no formality. 4 Gibbon Rome, c. 44; 2 Kent Comm. 103.

In Austria divorces between protestants may be had, not only for several substantial causes, but at the request of both parties, on the ground of unconquerable aversion. See 2 Turnbull Austria 509.

7. Code Napoleon, arts. 233, 275–297, regarded marriage only as a civil contract, and allowed divorce not only for several reasonable causes, such as adultery and grievous injuries, to be submitted to a judicial tribunal, but also without cause and founded merely upon mutual consent. This consent was, however, subjected to several restraints which created great and serious checks upon the abuse of the privilege. After the restoration of the Bourbon dynasty, the law of divorce was changed, and in 1816 it was confined to a judicial separation from bed and board.

tution.[13] It has been held that the division of a state government into three departments, and the implied inhibition through that cause upon the legislative department to exercise judicial functions does not affect or exclude legislative control over the marriage relation,[14] but the contrary view has been taken[15] where jurisdiction to grant divorces for the same cause has been conferred by general statute upon the judiciary.[16] So constitutional prohibitions against laws impairing the obligation of contracts do not apply to marriages and thus restrict the power of the legislature to grant divorces.[17]

b. Estoppel to Deny Validity. Although the courts of the state have declared legislative divorces unconstitutional, yet where the parties to such a divorce live apart for a long period of time thereafter and each remarries each is estopped from interfering with the affairs of the other.[18]

c. Operation of Decision Against Legislative Power. Where the legislature has long exercised the power to grant divorces, a subsequent decision of the courts denying its power will not invalidate previous legislative divorces.[19]

3. Requisites — a. Cause. A legislative divorce is founded upon the mere will or discretion of the legislature, and may be effectual, although no cause therefor be shown.[20] Where, however, the power of the legislature to grant divorces is limited by the constitution to certain grounds, an inquiry into them is a necessary duty to prevent injustice.[21]

b. Notice to Parties. The legislature may, without notice to either party, exercise its constitutional power to grant divorces.[22]

4. Effect on Property Rights. A legislative divorce differs from a judicial divorce in that the former cannot divest vested property rights not pertaining to the marriage relation, while the latter may.[23] It cannot provide for the maintenance of the wife by an allowance in the nature of alimony, or direct the payment of money to the wife out of the husband's estate.[24] As to all rights dependent upon the marriage relation itself, however, a legislative divorce has the same effect as a judicial divorce.[25]

B. Judicial Divorce. A judicial divorce is one granted by the sentence of a court of justice pursuant to general law. It may be either absolute or limited. An absolute divorce or a divorce a vinculo matrimonii is one which terminates the marriage relation, and is a creature of statute.[26] A limited divorce or divorce a mensa et thoro is one which suspends the marriage relation and modifies its duties and obligations, leaving the bond in full force.[27] It is sometimes called "a judicial separation," leaving the term "divorce" to include the absolute dissolution of a marriage.[28] Prior to the enactment of "The Matrimonial Causes Act," in England, a divorce a mensa et thoro was the only divorce known to the ecclesiastical law.[29] In many of the states this kind of divorce has been abolished.[30] Absolute and limited divorces differ in operation and effect. The modes of procedure prescribed by the several statutes where both kinds of divorce are allowed are, however, similar down to the time of making the decree, from which point they differ.[31]

IV. NATURE.

A. As Dissolution or Suspension of Status. The courts have now for the most part abandoned the definition of marriage which treats it as a contract and have come to regard it as a status.[32] This distinction is important in considering Confirmation by legislature.—In some states the decree of divorce must be confirmed by the legislature. However, it does not become ineffectual because the act of the legislature confirming it is not passed at the first general assembly held after its rendition (Harrison v. Harrison, 19 Ala. 499); and legislative ratification will be presumed, where the decree is collaterally assailed after a lapse of twenty years and it appears that the husband married again and lived with his second wife until his death (Wilson v. Holt, 83 Ala. 528, 3 So. 321, 3 Am. many questions pertaining to the law of divorce. It bears directly upon the nature of the remedy and the right thereto, and upon the validity and effect of statutes regulating the subject.[33]

B. As Subject to Control of State — 1. In General. A divorce cannot be had except in that court upon which the state has conferred jurisdiction, and it can be had for those causes only, and with those formalities only, which the state has by statute prescribed.[34]

2. Consent of State. Marriage being a status based upon public necessity and controlled by the sovereign will for the benefit of society at large, its dissolution cannot be effected by the mere act or consent of the parties,[35] and the state may intervene by its prosecuting officer or through a power vested in the court itself to prevent such a dissolution where it should not be decreed, although the party against whom the suit is brought may not object thereto.[36]

Marriage among the Indian tribes, however, must generally be considered as taking place in a state of nature, and if, according to the usages and customs of the particular tribe, the parties are authorized to dissolve it at pleasure, the right of dissolution will be considered a term of the contract; and either party may take advantage of this term unless it be expressly or impliedly waived by them; or they may perhaps acquire such relations to society as will give permanency to the contract and take from them the right to annul it. Wall v. Williams, 11 Ala. 826.

36. Berthelemy v. Johnson, 3 B. Mon. (Ky.) 90, 38 Am. Dec. 179 (as to necessity of consent of commonwealth); Earle v. Earle, 43 Oreg. 293, 72 Pac. 976 (holding that where plaintiff sought divorce on grounds of desertion, but her own evidence showed her guilty of misconduct amounting to cause for divorce, the state being a party defendant to the suit, as required by statute, the court rightfully refused relief, notwithstanding default by the husband); Dismukes v. Dismukes, 1 Tenn. Ch. 266.

There are three parties to every application for divorce. Although upon its face a controversy between the parties of record only, it is in fact a triangular suit, sui generis, the government occupying the position of a third party without counsel, it being the duty of the court to protect its interests.

3. Constitutionality of Statutes. Marriage being a status, legislation affecting or annulling the marriage relation is not within the terms of a constitutional provision against legislative impairment of contracts.[37] The legislature cannot, however, constitutionally discriminate as to the persons entitled to the remedy.[38]

4. Construction of Statutes. Divorce statutes should not be construed in a spirit of improper liberality, nor with a view to defeating the desired ends; but as in the case of other statutes the object should be to ascertain the legislative intent and carry it faithfully into execution.[39] Where a statute of one state is adopted by another, it is to be taken in the latter with the settled construction previously given it in the former.[40]

5. Operation of Statutes.[41] Where a statute merely changes and simplifies the form of the remedy or otherwise merely affects the remedy it will apply in actions pending at the time of its passage.[42]

C. As Affected by Public Policy — 1. In General. Notwithstanding the diversity of the divorce laws in the several states of this country and England, it is conceded in all jurisdictions that public policy, good morals, and the interests of society require that the marriage relation should be surrounded with every safeguard and its severance allowed only in the manner prescribed and for the causes specified by law.[43]

2. Judicial Discretion. In furtherance of public policy courts necessarily exercise to a large extent a judicial discretion.[44]

Ch. 519; Denton v. Denton, 1 Johns. Ch. 364; Mix v. Mix, 1 Johns. Dec. 443). In Higgins v. Sharp, 164 N. Y. 4, 58 N. E. 9, it was suggested that while the jurisdiction of the state courts in matrimonial actions is purely statutory, yet the practice of the ecclesiastical courts in England to allow alimony and counsel fees in proper cases is one of the incidents which necessarily follows that jurisdiction.

generis.[50] It is not an action of contract but resembles more an action of tort[51] or a criminal action;[52] yet it is regarded as a civil case.[53]

b. Proceeding In Rem. In many states a divorce action is deemed a proceeding in rem so far as it affects the status of the parties, the custody of their minor children, and the service of summons by publication on a non-resident defendant.[54] This question is of importance in determining the jurisdiction of courts in divorce actions, and the effect of judgments against non-resident parties, and is hereinafter fully considered.[55]

2. Practice — a. In General. Proceedings in divorce should be conducted as in other cases unless there is a different provision by statute.[56]

b. In Equity. Where courts of chancery are vested by statute with divorce jurisdiction, as is the case in many of the states, divorce suits are to be conducted according to the rules of practice prevailing in ordinary suits in equity, unless the statute otherwise provides.[57]

any of the United States as a part of its judicial system,[61] and consequently up to the time of the creation of courts with a jurisdiction in divorce actions, ecclesiastical law relating to divorce remained unadministered for want of a tribunal.[62]

3. Courts of Equity. The remedy of divorce, so far as it may be said to be of statutory origin, is not within the inherent jurisdiction of courts of equity.[63]

4. Federal Courts. The federal courts have disclaimed jurisdiction upon the subject of divorce, or for the allowance of alimony either as an original equity proceeding or as an incident to a divorce action.[64] They will, however, entertain a bill to restrain the enforcement of a judgment of divorce obtained by imposition and fraud,[65] or to enforce payment of alimony decreed by a state court where the husband has removed to another state and is thus beyond the jurisdiction of the court granting the decree.[66]

B. By Statute — 1. In General. Jurisdiction in divorce cases in the United States is usually vested in the law or the equity courts or both, according to the nature of the judicial systems in existence in the particular states,[67] although in a few states probate courts have been vested therewith.[68] The exercise of jurisdiction

Exercise of jurisdiction in both equity and law.— Under a statute conferring upon the superior courts exclusive jurisdiction in divorce cases and also in equity cases, a superior court which grants equitable relief prayed in a petition for divorce may also as a legal remedy grant the divorce, exercising in the one case its chancery powers and in the other its power as a court of law. in divorce cases must conform with the statutory requirements,[69] and it depends upon the causes named in the statute.[70]

2. Construction of Statutes. A statute conferring general equity and law jurisdiction in civil cases upon certain courts includes actions for divorce.[71] It is generally otherwise where the statute limits jurisdiction to civil cases in which the amount in controversy does not exceed a sum specified.[72] If causes for divorce are specified by statute but no court is designated in terms to take jurisdiction thereof, it is the duty of superior courts of general jurisdiction to take cognizance of divorce cases so that the statute may not fail for want of a proper tribunal.[73] A statute permitting appeals to a supreme court whose duty it is to make such a decree as shall be just "according to the facts ascertained in the superior court" confers only appellate jurisdiction of divorce cases.[74]

3. Operation of Statutes. A statute conferring jurisdiction to grant divorces under certain conditions is not ordinarily given a retrospective operation.[75] It has been held that the repeal of all statutes relating to divorce deprives the courts of their jurisdiction in divorce actions, and terminates their jurisdiction even in pending actions unless the repealing act contains a saving clause.[76]

4. Validity of Statutes. The legislature cannot confer jurisdiction retrospectively so as to give vitality to a decree of divorce which is otherwise void for

88. Shaw v. Shaw, 98 Mass. 158 (holding that a domicile once existing cannot be lost by mere abandonment even when coupled with the intent to acquire a new one, but continues till a new one is in fact gained); De Meli v. De Meli, 120 N. Y. 485, 24 N. E. 996, 17 Am. St. Rep. 652 [affirming 5 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 306, 67 How. Pr. 20]; Matter of Morrison, 52 Hun (N. Y.) 102, 5 N. Y. Suppl. 90.

Abandonment of former residence.— One who leaves New Jersey to seek a more congenial climate and finds employment in another state where he marries and remains for more than six years, except for a period of three months spent on a visit to New Jersey, abandons his residence in that state, although he testifies that he is and has always considered himself a citizen thereof. Firth v. Firth, 50 N. J. Eq. 137, 24 Atl. 916. Where a resident of New York left his wife and resided abroad for twenty-nine years except for a short period spent in a visit to New York he lost his residence in that state. Williamson v. Parisien, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 389. However, a temporary absence does not effect a change of domicile. Burtis v. Burtis, 161 Mass. 508, 37 N. E. 740; Harris v. Harris, 83 N. Y. d. Sufficiency — (i) GENUINENESS. Nothing short of an actual residence in the state where the suit is brought with the intention of establishing a permanent residence there will satisfy the requirements of the statute as to residence.[89] Thus the courts will not take jurisdiction if the residence in the state is taken up for Acquisition of new residence.— Residence is acquired by living in a certain place with no present or definite intention of removing therefrom. Tracy v. Tracy, 62 N. J. Eq. 807, 48 Atl. 533. Temporary absences do not preclude the acquisition of a residence. Summerville v. Summerville, 31 Wash. 411, 72 Pac. 84. Thus, one who leaves the state of his domicile and takes up his residence in Washington as a government employee, where he marries and resides for ten years except for summer vacations spent at his original home and elsewhere, thereby acquires a residence in the District of Columbia. Bradstreet v. Bradstreet, 18 D. C. 229. So where a husband came into the state more than two years before filing a bill for divorce with the intention of becoming a resident, and still entertains that intention, he is a resident, although on several occasions he was absent on visits to his former home. Albee v. Albee, 141 Ill. 550, 31 N. E. 153. See also Larquié v. Larquié, 40 La. Ann. 457, 4 So. 335. And where a husband and wife come into a state with the intention of making it a permanent home, the fact that they spend their winters in another state is not inconsistent with their residence in the former. Morehouse v. Morehouse, 70 Conn. 420, 39 Atl. 516. However, the fact that a man carries on business in England does not render him a bona fide resident thereof where his domicile of origin was in Ireland and he still carries on business and keeps a residence there. Manning v. Manning, L. R. 2 P. & D. 223, 40 L. J. P. & M. 18, 24 L. T. Rep. N. S. 196, 19 Wkly. Rep. 479. Nor is length of time alone sufficient to effect a change of domicile. There must be a bona fide permanent intent, animus et factum. Vischer v. Vischer, 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 640.

Eq. 341, 19 Atl. 465 (holding that the fact that plaintiff has been at a hotel in the state "off and on" for several years is not enough to establish a fixed domicile there); Steele v. Steele, 26 N. J. Eq. 85 (holding that the fact that petitioner "was stopping" at a certain hotel in the state "at the time of the commencement of this suit" does not show residence there); Coddington v. Coddington, 20 N. England.— Burton v. Burton, 21 Wkly. Rep. 648, holding that a transitory residence is not sufficient to enable the courts to take jurisdiction.

The word "residence" as used in a divorce statute should be construed as though it were "domicile." Hamill v. Talbott, 81 Mo. App. 210; De Meli v. De Meli, 120 N. Y. 485, 24 N. E. 996, 17 Am. St. Rep. 652; Graham v. Graham, 9 N. D. 88, 81 N. W. 44; Smith v. Smith, 7 N. D. 404, 75 N. W. 783. Contra, Way v. Way, 64 Ill. 406. See also supra, note 84; and DOMICILE. However a mere legal residence in a state with an actual residence out of it is not sufficient. Tipton v. Tipton, 87 Ky. 243, 8 S. W. 440, 10 Ky. L. Rep. 252.

Presumption as to residence.— The place where a person lives is prima facie his residence. Tracy v. Tracy, 62 N. J. Eq. 807, 48 Atl. 533.

An intention to remain in a place and make it a fixed place of abode is a necessary element of residence. Way v. Way, 64 Ill. 406; Whitcomb v. Whitcomb, 46 Iowa 437; Hinds v. Hinds, 1 Iowa 36; Grover v. Grover, 63 N. J. Eq. 771, 50 Atl. 1051; Sweeney v. Sweeney, 62 N. J. Eq. 357, 50 Atl. 785. See, however, Pohlman v. Pohlman, 60 N. J. Eq. 28, 46 Atl. 658.

Time of forming intent.— If the statute requires two years' residence by plaintiff, he must have formed an intention to make the state his permanent residence two years before bringing suit. It is not sufficient that he has resided in the state two years if the intention was not formed that length of time before suit brought. Hooker v. Hooker, (N. J. Ch. 1897) 37 Atl. 773.

Alien resident.— Under a statute providing that no person shall be entitled to a divorce unless a bona fide resident and citizen of the state for one year prior to the commencement of the action, a bona fide resident of the state for one year who was foreign born but who had duly declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States may maintain an action for a divorce. Cairns v. Cairns, 29 Colo. 260, 68 Pac. 233, 93 Am. St. Rep. 55.

Residence during voyage.— The mere fact that plaintiff was sailing on the high seas is not inconsistent with a claim of residence in a port of one of the United States during that time, since the vessel may have been the sole purpose of obtaining a divorce which the laws of plaintiff's former domicile do not allow, and there is no intention to make the state a permanent residence after the divorce is obtained,[90] although the fact that the liberal divorce laws of a state induce plaintiff to acquire a residence there does not make him any the less a domiciled inhabitant if he goes into the state with the intention of making it a permanent home.[91]

(II) Cohabitation. In some states, unless the marriage occurred within the state, the parties must have cohabited within the state as man and wife else the court cannot take jurisdiction.[92]

(III) Period of Residence. The statutes conferring jurisdiction in divorce cases usually provide that plaintiff shall not only be a resident of the state, but also that his residence shall have continued for a certain length of time, which varies in the different jurisdictions.[93] In exceptional cases, however, the statutes allow an action to be brought by one who has not resided in the state for the time otherwise prescribed,[94] and moreover it has been held that want of residence of Presumption against residence.— Where suit is brought on the ground of desertion promptly on the expiration of an alleged residence in the state for the necessary two years, and where the desertion commenced while the applicant was a resident of a state whose laws do not grant an absolute divorce on that ground, a presumption arises against the existence of such a residence as is necessary to give jurisdiction of the matrimonial status of complainant. Limited divorce.— One year's residence of complainant is not necessary previous to an application for a divorce a mensa et thoro. It is necessary only where the application is for a divorce a vinculo matrimonii. Stokes v. Stokes, 1 Mo. 320.

Construction of statute.—Ala. Code, § 1492, providing that no bill can be filed for a divorce for voluntary abandonment unless complainant has been a resident of the state for three years next preceding is not affected by section 1485, bestowing jurisdiction to divorce persons for voluntary abandonment for two years next preceding the filing of the bill, nor by section 1494, providing that, where defendant is a non-resident, complainant must have been a bona fide resident of the state for one year next preceding the filing of the bill; the latter section referring to suits for other causes than voluntary abandonment, which, except in case of defendant's non-residence, allow the immediate filing of the bill. Davis v. Davis, 132 Ala. 219, 31 So. 473.

Repeal of statute.— A statute requiring five years' residence is not repealed by an act authorizing divorce for desertion for a term of three years. Brown v. Brown, 14 N. J. Eq. 78.

94. See statutes of the several states.

Residence at time of offense.— If plaintiff was a resident of the state at the time the offense was committed, he may sue for a divorce, although he has not resided there for the time otherwise prescribed. Sawtell v. Sawtell, 17 Conn. 284 (holding, however, under a statute requiring petitioner to have resided in the state three years before the date of the petition unless the cause of divorce has arisen subsequent to his removal to the state, that if the cause of divorce arises in another state before petitioner's removal, its subsequent continuance in Connecticut down to the date of the petition does not plaintiff in the state for the time prescribed by statute is a personal disability which may be cured, and hence is matter in abatement and not in bar of the action.[95]

e. Change of Residence Pendente Lite. A change of residence by a plaintiff after the commencement of the suit and before its trial does not deprive the court of jurisdiction.[96]

3. Residence of Defendant — a. In General. The residence of plaintiff and not that of defendant gives jurisdiction in divorce cases; and by the weight of authority the courts may entertain a divorce suit by a resident against a non-resident, although the service of process is constructive or is made outside of the state and defendant does not appear.[97] bring the case within the exception of the statute so as to authorize an action before the expiration of the three years); Way v. Way, 64 Ill. 406; Bowman v. Bowman, 24 Ill. App. 165. In some states this exception obtains only in cases of adultery committed while plaintiff was a resident of the state. Thelen v. Thelen, 75 Minn. 433, 78 N. W. 108; Dutcher v. Dutcher, 39 Wis. 651. If the parties were non-residents when the offense was committed, plaintiff must have resided within the jurisdiction for the length of time prescribed in ordinary cases. Hatfield v. Hatfield, 6 D. C. 80.

Place of commission of offense.— If the offense was committed within the state, plaintiff may sue without first having lived in the state the length of time otherwise prescribed. Way v. Way, 64 Ill. 406. If, however, the offense was committed in another jurisdiction, plaintiff must have resided within the state for the length of time prescribed in ordinary cases. Blandy v. Blandy, 20 App. Cas. (D. C.) 535.

Cohabitation within state.— Mass. Gen. St. c. 107, §§ 11, 12, provide that except when the libellant has resided in the state five consecutive years next preceding the time of filing the libel no divorce can be granted for any cause occurring in any other state unless before such cause occurred the parties had lived together as husband and wife in Massachusetts, and one of them lived there when the cause occurred. Shaw v. Shaw, 98 Mass. 158. That both parties have lived in the state separately is not sufficient to give the court jurisdiction. Weston v. Weston, 143 Mass. 274, 9 N. E. 557 [impliedly overruling Eaton v. Eaton, 122 Mass. 276]; Schrow v. Schrow, 103 Mass. 574. The statute does not deprive a wife of a right to a divorce where she and her husband had cohabited together in the state, although they subsequently removed to another state before the cause of action accrued, the wife having subsequently returned and taken up her residence in the state. Brett v. Brett, 5 Metc. (Mass.) 233. Where libellant has resided in the state for the statutory period of time before suing for divorce, the court has jurisdiction, although the parties have never lived together as husband and wife within the state. Discretion of court.— Under a statute permitting the court to exercise the discretion of dispensing with the three years' residence of plaintiff, the court will entertain petitions for divorce where the applicants have not resided in the state for three years if the court has jurisdiction over the parties and the offense was committed in the state or was a cause of divorce under the laws of the state where it was committed. b. As Cross Complainant. A statute making residence of plaintiff a prerequisite to the exercise of divorce jurisdiction does not preclude a non-resident defendant from filing a cross bill and obtaining a decree of divorce against plaintiff.[98] Nor will a non-resident defendant be deprived of his right to relief on a cross bill by a dismissal or discontinuance of the original petition.[99]

c. Extent of Jurisdiction Over Non-Resident. The weight of authority is in favor of confining the jurisdiction of the court in a divorce case, where defendant is a non-resident and has not been personally served within the state and does not appear, to a determination of the status of the parties.[1]

4. Residence at Time of Offense.[2] A court otherwise having jurisdiction may in some states grant a divorce, although the parties resided in another state at the time of the offense complained of,[3] in the absence of statute to the contrary.[4] In Construction of statute.— Where a statute authorizes a divorce for a desertion which has taken place "in any other state," it does not include a desertion occurring in a foreign country. Bishop v. Bishop, 30 Pa. St. 412.

4. Sanders v. Sanders, 29 N. J. Eq. 410; Coddington v. Coddington, 20 N. J. Eq. 263; Yates v. Yates, 13 N. J. Eq. 280, all holding, under a statute requiring a residence of three years, and in cases of desertion a residence "at the time of the desertion complained of," that a residence during the whole three years of the desertion is necessary.

Continuing injury.— Where a statute requires in order to give jurisdiction that the parties or one of them must have been an inhabitant of the state at the time of the injury complained of, an incurable impotence existing at the time of the marriage is a continuing injury and gives jurisdiction, although neither of the parties was an inhabitant of the state when the marriage was contracted. A. B. v. C. B., 34 N. J. Eq. 43. See, however, Brett v. Brett, 5 Metc. (Mass.) 233, holding that a statute providing that no divorce shall be decreed for any cause which shall have occurred in any other state or other states there is no jurisdiction where at the time the cause of divorce arose the parties were domiciled in another state.[5]

D. Place of Marriage.[6] If the court otherwise has jurisdiction of the cause and the parties it may decree a divorce, although the marriage was celebrated in another state.[7] country unless one of the parties was then living in Massachusetts, precludes a divorce in favor of a wife who was deserted by her husband in another state where both then resided, although she subsequently removed to Massachusetts and the desertion continued for more than five years and up to the time when she filed her bill. Time of abandonment.— Where a husband had no fixed domicile, and after he left the wife in New York for France she returned to Kentucky and there continuously resided, and he did not support her, it was presumed that his intention to abandon her was formed upon her return to Kentucky, and accordingly the courts of that state had jurisdiction, under Ky. Gen. St. c. 52, § 4, providing that no divorce shall be granted for an act done outside of the state unless the party complaining has an actual residence in the state at the time of the doing of the act, or unless such act by the laws of the state where it was done is a cause for divorce. Perzel v. Perzel, 91 Ky. 634, 15 S. W. 658, 12 Ky. L. Rep. 879. Where, however, a wife, after abandoning petitioner in another jurisdiction, came into the District of Columbia, from which she wrote him letters reproaching him for ill treatment and bringing to his mind the causes which compelled her to abandon him finally and indicating that such was her determination when she left him, such letters do not show that her intention to desert petitioner was not definitely formed until after her arrival in the District and thus show that the desertion occurred there. Ann. 317, all holding that parties who did not contract marriage under or with reference to the laws of the state cannot sue there for a divorce on grounds which occurred in another state before they acquired a residence in Louisiana.

Massachusetts.— Harteau v. Harteau, 14 Pick. 181, 25 Am. Dec. 372, holding that where a cause of divorce arose in another state, in which the parties at the time resided and in which the husband has since continued to reside, and the laws of that state do not admit of divorce for such cause, the courts of Massachusetts have no jurisdiction to decree a divorce on that ground after the wife's removal to Massachusetts, although the parties resided there at the time of their marriage.

E. Place of Commission of Offense.[8] If the court otherwise has jurisdiction of the cause, the fact that the offense was committed without the state does not affect the question of jurisdiction.[9] On the other hand the court will not assume jurisdiction merely because the offense was committed within the jurisdiction if the parties are non-residents.[10]

F. Jurisdiction by Consent or Waiver.[11] Jurisdiction over the subject-matter of an action for divorce cannot be acquired by consent or waiver of the parties.[12]

2. Residence of Defendant. In some states the suit is allowed or required to be brought in the county of defendant's residence.[14]

3. Sufficiency of Residence — a. General Rules. The residence which will determine venue must be actual residence in the county where the suit is brought.[15] The residence need not, however, have continued for any particular length of time,[16] in the absence of statute to the contrary.[17]

b. Separate Residence of Wife.[18] The domicile of the husband determines that of the wife,[19] but for the purpose of fixing the venue of an action of divorce a wife living apart from her husband may acquire a separate residence where she may sue.[20]

B. Place of Offense as Fixing Venue. The place where the offense was committed has no bearing on the question of venue. It is immaterial that the offense occurred in a county other than that in which the suit is brought.[21]

C. Waiver of Objections. If defendant is a resident of the state and fails to appear,[22] or appears and answers without objection to the local jurisdiction of the court,[23] objections to the venue are waived.

Mass. 184 (holding that where respondent has no settled place of residence, libellant may sue in the county where she resided at the time the offense was committed); Lane v. Lane, 2 Mass. 167 (holding that where the parties have no permanent place of residence the libel may be filed in the county where libellant dwells after separation).

D. Change of Venue. The provisions of practice acts relating to a change of venue in civil actions or special proceedings apply to divorce cases,[24] in the absence of provisions inconsistent therewith in the statutes relating to procedure in divorce actions, in which case the latter control.[25] In some states defendant is entitled to a change of venue to the county of his residence.[26]

VII. GROUNDS.

A. Legislative Control — 1. Power to Prescribe Grounds. The legislature has power to prescribe the causes affording grounds for divorce.[27]

2. Exclusiveness of Statutory Grounds — a. In General. The causes for divorce are prescribed by statute, and the courts have no inherent power to grant a divorce upon a ground not specified.[28] Thus in the absence of statute the court cannot grant a divorce either for alienation of the affections of one spouse or both,[29] or as a rule for antenuptial incontinence of a spouse,[30] for impotency or physical incapacity of either party arising after marriage,[31] for inability of the spouses to Impotency arising from idiocy is no cause for divorce. Norton v. Norton, 2 Aik. (Vt.) 188. The report of this case seems to warrant the conclusion that the ground upon which the opinion rested was the fact that live together,[32] for incompatibility of temper,[33] for the refusal of a spouse to cohabit,[34] or for the violation of an antenuptial agreement.[35]

b. Discretion of Court. In some states, however, courts are authorized to grant divorces, either absolute or limited, in their discretion.[36] The discretion thus conferred is a sound, legal discretion, and it cannot be exercised arbitrarily or without limitation.[37] In some states a divorce may thus be granted only for common-law or canon-law or statutory causes.[38] In others a divorce may thus be granted only for causes not otherwise specified in the statute.[39]

3. Operation of Statute. A statute declaring the causes for which divorces may be granted is ordinarily to be given a prospective operation only and does not authorize a divorce for a specified cause which occurred before the statute was enacted.[40] If, however, it appears to have been the intention of the legislature that the act should have a retrospective operation then the courts will give it that effect,[41] in the absence of a constitutional provision against retrospec-

tive[42] or ex post facto[43] laws. So a statute saving pending actions from the effect of a repeal of a previous act permitting a divorce on specified grounds will be given effect according to the intent of the legislature.[44]

B. Antenuptial Grounds — 1. IN GENERAL. Many statutory causes of divorce existing at the time of the marriage are in some states grounds for suits for the annulment of the marriage and therefore are not within the scope of this article.[45] Even where such grounds are made causes of divorce, decrees in suits therefor are in most cases the same in effect as decrees of nullity.[46]

2. FRAUD AND DURESS — a. In General. In a number of states fraud or duress in procuring a marriage is made a ground for divorce by statute.[47]

b. Character of Fraud — (I) IN GENERAL. The fraud that will constitute ground for divorce must be in a matter essential to the validity of the marriage itself.[48]

(II) CONCEALMENT OF UNCHASTITY. The concealment by the wife of the fact that she had committed fornication before marriage is not fraud constituting ground for divorce.[49] If, however, the wife was pregnant by another man at the time of the marriage, and she concealed that fact from the husband, he is entitled to a divorce for fraud,[50] unless he had himself had intercourse with her prior to

C. 327, 9 Am. Dec. 608 (where a statute declaring adultery to be a ground of divorce was held to be ex post facto and void as to cases of adultery committed before its passage, for the reason that adultery was punishable as a crime prior to the statute, and the statute added to this liability a deprivation of marital rights, thus increasing the punishment for the offense). Compare Elliott v. Elliott, 38 Md. 357.

Causes not criminal.— Where the cause of divorce prescribed by the statute is not criminal, the statute is not within the constitutional prohibition against ex post facto laws. It may be retrospective in its operation and partake of all the mischief of an ex post facto law, but if it is intended to have a retroactive effect and such purpose is clearly expressed, the courts cannot refuse to apply it according to the intent of the legislature. An existing marriage absolutely prohibits and avoids a subsequent marriage. The statutes in many states, however, make an existing marriage a cause of divorce, but a decree in a divorce suit can have no other effect than to declare the subsequent marriage void. See Moore v. Moore, 102 Tenn. 148, 52 S. W. 778.

Consanguinity and affinity are made causes of divorce in some states by statutes declaratory of the common or canon law, and the proceedings thereunder are practically the same as in the ecclesiastical courts, and the decree is a nullification of the marriage ab initio.

Physical incapacity as a cause for divorce must exist at the time of marriage and hence tends to vitiate the marriage as a fraud upon the injured party. A decree in a suit upon such a ground declares the marriage void ab initio and is in effect a decree of nullity. Chase v. Chase, 55 Me. 21; J. G. v. H. G., 33 Md. 401, 3 Am. (III) Misrepresentations as to Pregnancy. If at the time of the marriage the husband knew of the wife's pregnancy he is not entitled to a divorce because of her false assurances that he caused it,[53] at least unless he was deceived thereby.[54]

(IV) Misrepresentations as to Person or Property. False representations as to name, character, fortune, social standing, or previous marital experience do not justify a divorce as for fraud.[55]

c. Character of Duress. A divorce will not be decreed on the ground of duress unless it appear that the marriage was contracted under force or threat of bodily harm.[56]

3. Impotency and Physical Incapacity — a. In General. Antenuptial impotency is not a ground for divorce unless made so by statute.[57] Statutes permitting a divorce for this cause exist in many states, however.[58]

plete sexual intercourse practically impossible.[61] Thus absence of conceptive power or barrenness does not constitute impotency if there is complete power of copulation.[62] Physical incapacity as a statutory ground for divorce is generally construed to mean impotency.[63]

4. Mental Incapacity — a. In General. Mental incapacity at the time of marriage does not afford the sane party ground for divorce,[64] unless it is made a ground of divorce by statute, as is the case in some states.[65]

b. What Constitutes. Under a statute authorizing divorce for insanity existing at the time of marriage, it is not sufficient to show occasional spells of insanity before marriage.[66] The incapacity must be such as would render the party incapable of making a contract.[67]

C. Post-Nuptial Grounds — 1. Adultery[68] — a. In General. In every state and country where divorce is recognized as a remedy for marital wrongs adultery constitutes a cause therefor, although in a few states the adultery must have existed in a more or less aggravated form.[69]

b. Conviction Out of State. Unless otherwise expressed in the statute[77] a conviction and imprisonment without the state is not a cause for divorce.[78]

c. Finality of Conviction. Pending the hearing of an appeal or exceptions the conviction cannot be urged as a ground for divorce.[79]

In Tennessee, however, a statute providing that if either party to a marriage has knowingly entered into a second marriage in violation of the subsisting one, "this shall be a cause for divorce from the bonds of matrimony," is held not to give the innocent party to the first marriage a ground of divorce in addition to adultery, but merely to give a ground of divorce to the innocent party to the second marriage. b. What Constitutes — (I) Preliminary Considerations — (A) In General. In view of the great diversity in the language of the several statutes, it is impossible to frame a definition of cruelty which will be of universal application.[84] It has frequently been defined as actual, personal violence, or conduct causing a reasonable apprehension of it, or such a course of treatment as endangers life, limb, or health and renders cohabitation unsafe.[85] In determining what conduct constitutes cruelty, regard must be had to the provisions of the statutes and the circumstances of each particular case, keeping always in view the physical and mental condition of the parties and their character and social status.[86] It is thus Extreme cruelty is the infliction of grievous bodily injury or grievous mental suffering upon the other by one party to the marriage. Cal. Civ. Code, § 94.

Resort to ecclesiastical law.— Where the statute does not define cruelty resort must be had to judicial precedent (Hawkins v. Hawkins, 65 Md. 104, 3 Atl. 749), and the term should be given the same interpretation as was given it in the ecclesiastical courts of England (Morris v. Morris, 14 Cal. 76, 73 Am. Dec. 615; Shaw v. Shaw, 17 Conn. 189, Tayman v. Tayman, 2 Md. Ch. 393; Coles v. Coles, 2 Md. Ch. 341). In these courts a series of acts of personal violence, a menace to the safety of life, limb, or health, or any determined threats of serious bodily hurt have always been held ground for divorce. Social condition and refinement.— The social position of the parties and the degree of their refinement should be considered in de-difficult to enunciate general rules which will control the determination of the question. It is established in all jurisdictions, however, that mere want of congeniality [87] or incompatability of temper [88] and the consequent wranglings of the parties will not justify a charge of cruelty on the part of either.[89] Nor is jealousy [90] or overbearing conduct [91] on the part of the husband ground for divorce. The conduct of one of the parties must at least be such as to render cohabitation intolerable to the other;[92] and, although in some states actual bodily harm or apprehension thereof need not be shown, there must have been such treatment as so to destroy the peace of mind and happiness of the injured party as to endanger the health or utterly to defeat the legitimate objects of marriage.[93]

Alabama.— David v. David, 27 Ala. 222, holding that between persons of education and refinement the slightest blow in anger might be cruelty, while between persons of a different character and walk in life it might not mar to any great extent their conjugal relations or materially interfere with their happiness.

Mere austerity of temper, petulance of manner, rudeness of language, a want of civil attention and accommodation, even occasional sallies of passion, if they do not threaten bodily harm, do not amount to legal cruelty. The suffering party must bear in some degree the consequences of an injudicious connection; must subdue by decent resistance, or by prudent conciliation; and if this cannot be done, must suffer in silence. See 17 Cent. Dig. tit. "Divorce," § 63.

Aggravating circumstances.— A single instance of brutally beating the wife, accompanied with brutal neglect and abandonment, authorizes a divorce. Itzkowitz v. Itzkowitz, 33 N. Y. App. Div. 244, 53 N. Y. Suppl. 356. So a husband who, after working his pregnant wife in the field, violently seizes her and drives her and her baby away from home with curses is guilty of cruelty entitling her to a divorce, although no other act of violence is shown. Huilker v. Huilker, 64 Tex. 1.

Extreme and repeated cruelty.— Under the Illinois statute, which requires that the cruelty must be "extreme and repeated," there must be more than one act of actual physical violence to constitute the offense. H. 316 (holding that two assaults by a husband upon his wife, although not of a very aggravated nature, followed by violent and abusive language and indecent epithets, and conduct terrifying to her and their children, is cruelty for which she is entitled to a divorce); Lockwood v. Lockwood, 2 Curt. Eccl. 281, 7 Eng. Eccl. 114; Dysart v. Dysart, 1 Rob. Eccl. 106 (both cases holding that where defendant has occasionally lost control of himself, and when under the sway of passion has been led to the commission of acts which render further cohabitation unsafe, plaintiff is entitled to relief). See, however, Doyle v. Doyle, 26 Mo. 545, where it was held that the attention of the court should not be confined to the acts alleged as a ground for divorce, but the inquiry must involve the conduct of the parties for the period during which it is alleged that the misconduct took place, and that cruelty in most cases must be evidenced rather by general conduct than by particular acts.

(D) Permitting Cruelty by Third Persons. If a husband permits those under his authority so to conduct themselves toward his wife as seriously to impair her health, it constitutes cruelty on his part entitling her to a divorce.[97] So if a wife actively aids her children in their cruelty toward her husband she is chargeable therewith.[98]

(II) Acts of Violence. Continued acts of personal violence producing physical pain or bodily injury and a fear of future danger are unquestionably acts of cruelty for which a divorce may be granted.[99] Actual violence to constitute ground for divorce must be attended with danger to life, limb, or health, or be such as to cause reasonable apprehension of danger.[1] It is not every slight violence committed against the wife by the husband, even in anger, which will authorize a divorce.[2] Much less will slight acts of violence by a wife from which the husband can easily protect himself constitute cruelty entitling him to a divorce.[3]

(III) Conduct Exciting Fear of Harm — (A) In General. Actual violence is not a necessary element of cruelty as a ground for divorce. Any conduct justifying a reasonable apprehension of bodily harm is sufficient,[4] since the courts interfere not so much to punish an offense already committed as to relieve the injured party from future harm.[5] For the same reason there must exist a probability that future harm will ensue, else a divorce cannot be granted.[6]

(B) Threats. Words of menace importing actual danger of bodily harm may justify the granting of a divorce,[7] if of such a character as to impress upon the person to whom they are addressed a feeling that they are seriously meant and are to be followed by actual bodily harm.[8] injured party's health was not taken into consideration. And this doctrine still obtains in some states, either by force of precedent or by statute.[9] In the greater number of jurisdictions, however, the doctrine has been repudiated on principle or abrogated by statute, and cruelty justifying a divorce may consist of any treatment which occasions mental suffering in such a degree as to impair the innocent party's health.[10]

it has seriously impaired complainant's health or threatens the impairment thereof. Treatment causing mere unhappiness, accompanied by no ill effects on the health, actual or threatened, is not cruelty such as to justify a divorce.[11]

(c) Illustrations—(1) ABUSE OF CHILDREN. While a husband may use force in protecting himself from unreasonable interference by the wife in the proper chastisement of their child,[12] yet if he maltreats the child solely to give the mother pain and as a result her health is impaired it is legal cruelty.[13]

(2) ADULTERY AND LEWD ASSOCIATION. Adultery does not constitute cruelty as a ground for divorce;[14] but it is cruelty toward a wife for a husband to express his preference for, and openly consort with, lewd women,[15] or to threaten or attempt to commit adultery.[16]

(3) ATTEMPTS TO ENTRAP. The conduct of either husband or wife in maliciously concocting schemes to entrap one or the other into the appearance of having committed adultery for the purpose of securing evidence to be used in a suit for divorce is cruelty which entitles the injured party to a divorce.[17]

Effect of false charges on health see infra, note 22.

In California the statute defines extreme cruelty as "the infliction of grievous bodily injury, or grievous mental suffering, upon the other by one party to the marriage." Consequently if the conduct causes grievous mental suffering it is ground for divorce, although it does not have an injurious effect on plaintiff's health. Charges by wife.— If the false charge is made by the wife, however, the husband is not entitled to a divorce as for cruelty, unless he shows that from his temperament or calling the charges produced or were likely to produce mental suffering beyond the ordinary effect which such a charge would naturally have upon a man. Pennsylvania.— Barber v. Barber, 2 Am. L. J. N. S. 193.

Texas.— See Jones v. Jones, 60 Tex. 451; Simons v. Simons, 13 Tex. 468, both cases holding that false charges in a bill of divorce in connection with false charges otherwise made constitute cruelty.

Charge of antenuptial pregnancy.— A false and malicious charge by a husband in a cross bill filed by him for divorce that his wife was pregnant by someone other than himself when he married her and that she concealed the fact from him tends to cause the wife "grievous mental suffering" and is a sufficient ground to sustain a subsequent bill by the wife for divorce. Haley v. Haley, (Cal. 1887) 14 Pac. 92. Compare Blair v. Blair, 106 Iowa 269, 76 N. W. 700, where it was held that the conduct of the husband in making public in his pleadings and in the trial the fact that the wife had lived in adultery with another man before their marriage was not such cruel and inhuman treatment as to authorize a divorce.

Texas.— Loring v. Loring, 17 Tex. Civ. App. 95, 42 S. W. 642.

Washington.— Blurock v. Blurock, 4 Wash. 495, 30 Pac. 637. See, however, Scoland v. Scoland, 4 Wash. 118, 29 Pac. 930.

Belief in truth of charges.— The fact that the husband had reasonable grounds for believing in the truth of the charges is no defense, however, if in fact he did not believe in them. Walker v. Walker, 77 L. T. Rep. N. S. 715.

Presumptions as to malice and probable cause.— If a false charge of infidelity is made without probable cause, it is presumed to be malicious. Loring v. Loring, 17 Tex. Civ. App. 95, 42 S. W. 642. Where the charge was made in a bill for divorce, and the accused has been exonerated by the verdict or the bill has been dismissed for want of prosecution, the burden rests on complainant to show probable cause and good faith. Wagner v. Wagner, 36 Minn. 239, 30 N. W. 766. See also Jones v. Jones, 60 Tex. 451.

22. Palmer v. Palmer, 45 Mich. 150, 7 N. W. 760, 40 Am. Rep. 461 (charge of incest); Jones v. Jones, 62 N. H. 463 (charge of bigamy); Wright v. Wright, 6 Tex. 3 (charge of murder); Bray v. Bray, 1 Hagg. Eccl. 163, 3 Eng. Eccl. 76 (charge of incest).

Impairment of health.—If the false charges do not result in an actual or threatened impairment of health the person accused is not entitled to a divorce. Charges rendering marriage relation insupportable.— The fact that a wife while sick expressed a fear that her husband intended to poison her and consequently left him does not entitle him to a divorce as for cruelty rendering their living together insupportable. Sapp v. Sapp, 71 Tex. 348, 9 S. W. 258.

Charges as element of cruelty.— False charges of crime may in connection with other causes amount to cruelty, even where they are insufficient of themselves to constitute some foundation in fact, as where the circumstances are such that a husband is justified in accusing his wife of an attempt to poison him.[23]

(c) Of Insanity. If one spouse falsely charges the other with being insane it may constitute cruelty,[24] unless the charge is made in good faith upon a belief in its truth.[25]

(d) Of Physical Incapacity. A false and malicious imputation of incapacity for the marital relation, causing mental suffering to the injured party and consequent impairment of health, is cruelty for which a divorce may be granted.[26]

(5) Offensive Language. A systematic and continued use by the husband of vile, profane, and unkind language, in the presence of and toward the wife, causing mental suffering and threatening permanent injury to her health, entitles her to a divorce.[27] However, mere rudeness of language, petulance of manners, austerity of temper, or an occasional sally of temper which does not injure or threaten to injure the health of the complaining party does not constitute legal cruelty.[28]

(6) UNNATURAL ACTS — (a) MASTURBATION. The practice of masturbation in the voluntary presence of the wife is not cruelty, although her health may be injured by its effect on her feelings.[29]

(b) SODOMY. The commission of sodomy by a husband is extreme cruelty toward the wife.[30]

(v) CONDUCT IMPOSING HARDSHIP OR PRIVATION — (A) Failure to Provide Necessaries. Extreme neglect of a wife by the husband that inevitably tends to destroy her peace of mind and ultimately to impair her health warrants a decree of divorce,[31] unless the neglect was the result of adverse circumstances.[32]

(B) Failure to Provide Medical Care. A husband who negligently or wilfully refuses to provide for a wife such medicines and medical attendance as her condition may warrant and as may be within his means to afford is guilty of cruelty for which the wife is entitled to a divorce.[33] So if a wife wilfully and maliciously permits the husband to suffer for want of proper nursing when he is solely dependent on her care and has not the means to employ a nurse, it is cruelty for which he is entitled to relief.[34]

(C) Compelling Wife to Labor. Compelling a wife to perform work not suitable to her health and condition is cruelty entitling her to a divorce.[35]

Voluntary labor.— If the work, although

(D) Involving Husband in Difficulties. A wife's extravagance and dishonesty in money matters involving the husband in great difficulties is no cause for a divorce as constituting cruel and inhuman treatment.[36]

(VI) Conduct Directly Injuring Health— (A) Communication of Disease. The communication of a venereal disease by a husband to his wife is such cruelty on his part as will entitle her to a divorce,[37] unless he was ignorant of his condition[38] or unless she consented to the intercourse with knowledge of the disease and its nature.[39]

(B) Sexual Excess. Sexual intercourse persisted in by the husband against the will of the wife to the injury of her health is cruelty affording her ground for divorce,[40] if he knows or has reason to know the injury and suffering which his demands will inflict upon her.[41]

Pennsylvania.— McMahen v. McMahen, 186 Pa. St. 485, 40 Atl. 795, 41 L. R. A. 602, holding that where a wife was innocently contaminated with syphilis by her husband before marriage, and after marriage was kept by him constantly afflicted with it, until after enduring it for five years her life was endangered by longer living with him, it constitutes cruel treatment endangering her life, or indignities to her person rendering her condition intolerable and life burdensome, and is hence ground for divorce.

Although the disease was not communicated to the wife, yet where the husband, being afflicted before marriage, intentionally withheld the fact until after marriage, it constituted cruelty, since the knowledge of the fact when brought home to the wife was calculated to make her miserable to such a degree as to endanger her life or health or create a reasonable apprehension thereof. (VII) HABITUAL INTEMPERANCE. Habitual intemperance in the use of liquors or opiates does not of itself constitute cruelty.[42]

(VIII) REFUSAL TO COHABIT AND DESERTION. In the absence of proof that the health of the complaining party is either injured or threatened, the refusal of the other party to cohabit is not legal cruelty,[43] nor does desertion amount to cruelty.[44]

5. DESERTION — a. Statutory Provisions. Desertion or abandonment for a period varying from one to five years is generally prescribed by statute as a ground for divorce, either absolute or limited or both.[45]

b. What Constitutes — (I) IN GENERAL. Desertion or abandonment consists in the voluntary separation of one spouse from the other, for the prescribed time, without the latter's consent, without justification, and with the intention of not returning.[46]

Wilful and obstinate desertion.— Where the offense is described by statute as "wilful and obstinate desertion," it is essential that the party complained of left voluntarily and against the will of complainant, and that she remained away when it was her duty to return. (II) Separation—(A) In General. There must be an actual breaking off of the matrimonial cohabitation to constitute a desertion.[47] There may, however, be an actual cessation of matrimonial cohabitation, notwithstanding that the guilty party occasionally visits the other,[48] unless during those visits the parties cohabit as man and wife.[49] So there may be a cessation of cohabitation and a consequent desertion, in spite of the fact that the husband contributes toward the wife's support,[50] in the absence of statute to the contrary.[51]

(B) Refusal of Conjugal Rights. In some states a persistent and continued refusal of marital intercourse by one of the spouses without cause or justification constitutes desertion, although the parties still live beneath the same roof.[52] By the weight of authority, however, the mere withdrawal from the marital bed is not sufficient to constitute the offense; there must be a substantial abandonment of other marital duties also.[53]

(C) Change of Domicile—(1) In General. It is the right of the husband, without the consent of the wife, to establish the family domicile, and it is the duty of the wife to follow him.[54] By establishing a new domicile he does not therefore desert the wife,[55] provided that he invites her to come there.[56] Since the wife has no right to determine the family domicile, an expressly avowed permanent change of domicile by her without the consent of her husband and without cause constitutes desertion.[57]

Mere cessation of matrimonial cohabitation is not necessarily desertion.

(2) Refusal to Adopt Husband's Domicile — (a) General Rule. If the husband establishes a matrimonial domicile[58] and makes a peremptory and unconditional demand upon the wife to live with him there,[59] her refusal to do so, if without justification and persisted in for the statutory time, constitutes desertion.[60]

(b) Exceptions. The application of this rule may be limited by the condition of the wife's health, by the state of civilization in the place where the new domicile is established,[61] and by the hardship incident to the wife's journeying there. It has been held for example that a wife's refusal to follow her husband to a foreign country is not in itself a wilful and malicious desertion, since the circumstances may be such as to justify her refusal.[62]

(d) Separation Caused by Defendant — (1) Turning Wife Out of Doors. If a husband turns the wife out of doors she is entitled to a divorce as for desertion upon the expiration of the statutory period.[63]

(2) Misconduct Causing Complainant to Leave — (a) In General. Voluntary separation.— If a husband repeatedly tells his wife that she must leave at a certain time, and admits in his answer to her bill for divorce that he would have removed her if she had not gone, the wife is entitled to a divorce, although she left without force or threats. (b) Character of Misconduct. If the misconduct causing a separation is such as to constitute in itself a ground for divorce,[65] and not otherwise,[66] it is sufficient after the lapse of the statutory period to charge the offending spouse with desertion. In Massachusetts the statute authorizing a divorce for the "utter desertion" of either party has been held not to apply to cases in which the complainant was the deserting party, although the desertion was caused by the misconduct of the other. Padelford v. Padelford, 159 Mass. 281, 34 N. E. 336; Lea v. Lea, 99 Mass. 493, 96 Am. Dec. 772; Fera v. Fera, 98 Mass. 155; Pidge v. Pidge, 3 Metc. 257.

Intent.— If the guilty party persists in the misconduct despite the remonstrances of the complainant, it will be assumed that such misconduct was intended to bring about a separation and will constitute desertion. Sickert v. Sickert, [1899] P. 278, 68 L. J. P. 114, 81 L. T. Rep. N. S. 495. It is otherwise if the guilty party did not expressly or impliedly intend the consequences of his misconduct. Communication of disease.— A wife, who on learning that she had contracted a venereal disease from her husband, denied him marital rights, which caused him so to mistreat her that she was compelled to leave him, is entitled to a divorce as for desertion, upon the lapse of the statutory time. Daeters v. Daeters, (N. J. Ch. 1897) 38 Atl. 950.

Cruelty of wife.— The rule is the same where the wife by cruelty compels the husband to leave the family house. Upon the expiration of the statutory period he is entitled to a divorce as for desertion. Setzer v. Setzer, 128 N. C. 170, 38 S. E. 731, 83 Am. St. Rep. 666.

Non-support and cruelty.— If a husband fails to furnish his wife with such necessaries and comforts as are within his means and by cruelty compels her to leave him he is guilty of desertion. Levering v. Levering, 16 Md. 213. So where the failure of the husband to provide for the wife and his persistent and long continued cruel treatment of her, caused by his voluntary and habitual intoxication, is such as to render her existence miserable and actually to endanger her life, it amounts to desertion on his part. Separation directed by complainant.—Where a wife leaves her husband when directed by him, although his action resulted from a quarrel, he cannot afterward charge her with desertion. Reed v. Reed, 62 Ark. 611, 37 S. W. 230; Herr v. Herr, 17 Lanc. L. Rev. 209; Thorpe v. Thorpe, 30 Pittsb. Leg. J. N. S. 133, 13 York Leg. Rec. 103. Nor is the wife en-and that consent is not revoked,[78] there is no such desertion as warrants a divorce.

(B) Attempted Reconciliation — (1) As Prerequisite to Divorce. An attempt on the part of the complainant to effect a reconciliation is under some circumstances a prerequisite of an action for divorce.[79] Ordinarily if a husband whose wife has left him does not in some way express his desire to her that she return and resume her duties as a wife, her continued absence is not a desertion for which he is entitled to a divorce.[80] It has been held, however, that if the complainant is free from blame, he is under no obligation to take steps to effect a reconciliation;[81] but if the departure complained of was caused by the complainant's misconduct, and he made no effort to detain the wife or to secure her return, the separation will be deemed to have been consented to and will not constitute desertion, although complainant's misconduct would not in itself authorize a titled to a divorce for desertion, under such circumstances (Howe v. Howe, 23 Pa. Co. Ct. 363; Charter v. Charter, 65 J. P. 246, 84 L. T. Rep. N. S. 272), unless the husband's conduct was such as to compel her to leave his home (see supra, VII, C, 5, b, (II), (D)).

Consent because of misconduct.— If one party, upon discovery of the other's adultery, consents to or directs the other's departure, the departure is not a desertion, although the consent is justified. Rep. 373, holding that where a wife, on discovering the adultery of her husband, told him to go to the other woman, "and when you are sick of her, return to me," and she made him solemnly promise to return, which he never did, the husband was guilty of desertion. See also supra, VII, C, 5, b, (II), (D), (2), notes 64, 67.

Effect of bond for support.— A husband who has given bond to the guardians of the poor for the support of his wife, who has left his house, cannot maintain a libel for divorce against his wife on the ground of desertion. Vanleer v. Vanleer, 13 Pa. St. 211.

Unwillingness to cohabit.— A feeling of unwillingness on the wife's part to live with her husband is no bar to her suit if it is the reasonable result of the husband's misconduct. Eq. 771, 774, 50 Atl. 1051 (where it was said that "no wife, in order to be entitled to a divorce, ought to be required to swear that she desires to have a husband, who has ended a career of brutality toward her by deserting her, come back and resume that career"); Smith v. Smith, 55 N. divorce.[82] If it appear from the circumstances and the disposition of the parties that any attempt to effect a reconciliation would be unavailing, the attempt is not a prerequisite to an action of divorce.[83] A wife is not held to the same accountability as the husband for failure to seek a reconciliation.[84]

(2) As Terminating Desertion. Locus penitentiæ.— However wilful the desertion may be, and however destitute of reasonable cause, it is no ground for divorce, unless it is continued for two years. At any time during that period the offending party has an undoubted right to put an end to it, and if that is done no cause of divorce has arisen. If at any time during the two years the party guilty of the desertion, in good faith and with an honest intention to resume the marital relations, returns or offers to return to the deserted husband or wife, the continuity of the desertion is broken. Nor can the deserted party prevent this by refusing to receive back and to resume marital relations with the one guilty of desertion. He or she cannot, because the other has taken a position, however wilful or causeless it may have been, hold him or her to it. For the two years the door of repentance and return must be kept open, and if it is closed and barred when an offer to return is made in good faith, not only is the desertion terminated, but the circumstances may be such as to reverse the legal attitude of the parties, and constitute the party originally offended against from that time forth the offender. Albee v. Albee, 141 Ill. 550, 31 N. E. 153.

Preventing reconciliation.— Where the conduct of complainant has been such as to prevent a reconciliation and a return to the matrimonial domicile when offered or requested in good faith by the deserter, it is a sufficient justification for the desertion and will preclude a divorce because thereof.

(3) As Revocation of Consent to Separation. Although the complaining party may have at first consented to the separation or acquiesced in it, the effect of the consent as a defense to his action for divorce may be nullified by an attempted reconciliation.[88]

(4) Sufficiency of Offer of Reconciliation — (a) In General. An offer of reconciliation must be made in good faith and not merely to lay a foundation for a divorce, and must be free from improper qualifications and conditions,[89] and also be couched in terms likely to bring about a reconciliation. Expression of offer.—Where a wife who had deserted her husband for fear of the consequences of her own wrong wrote to him to come and see her, and afterward met him in a public place and told him that she wanted to see him, and he excused himself and they never met thereafter, neither the letter nor the conversation amounted to an offer by the wife to resume her marital duties. Ogilvie v. Ogilvie, 37 Oreg. 171, 61 Pac. 627.

Good faith must appear by facts showing that the offer was made in the hope that future dissensions would be avoided. The return by a wife to her husband's home is not alone sufficient where she was prosecuting litigation against him upon a groundless charge of adultery and made no offer to abandon the litigation or to retract the charge. Jenkins v. Jenkins, 104 Ill. 134. Where a husband professes to be willing to return to cohabitation, the questions that should be submitted to the jury are whether the conduct of the husband was that of a man honestly intending to resume cohabitation with his wife; whether he was not misrepresenting his real intentions in the letters he wrote; and whether the real and only object of those letters was to evade the consequences which might ensue and to deprive the wife of the remedy which she would be entitled to upon the completion of the two years' absence. French-Brewster v. French-Brewster, 62 L. T. Rep. N. S. 609. To negative a charge of desertion it is not sufficient that a man should merely write to his wife "Come back," or that he should say to a third person that he is willing to take her back. The court will look to the whole of his conduct, and must be satisfied from it that when he offered to take her back he really intended what he said. Harris v. Harris, 15 L. T. Rep. N. S. 448. See Harris v. Harris, 31 L. J. P. & M. 6.

Improper conditions.—An offer of reconciliation upon the condition that the wife release all interest in the husband's real property is not sufficient. Day v. Day, 84 Iowa 221, 50 N. W. 979. Nor is a condition proper which seeks to bind the wife, in case of her return, not to have any further intercourse with her mother. Williams v. Williams, 130 N. Y. 193, 29 N. E. 98, 27 Am. St. Rep. 517, 14 L. R. A. 220. So where a husband and wife have separated by agreement, the refusal of his request to be permitted to live with her at the place where she is living apart from him is not desertion. Eisenberg v. Eisenberg, 1 Pa. Co. Ct. 590, 18 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 146.

regret for the offerer's own wrong-doing, is not sufficient as an offer of reconciliation and may be disregarded.[90]

(b) Time of Offer. An offer of reconciliation by a guilty spouse after the expiration of the statutory period of desertion does not obliterate the offense and so deprive the innocent spouse of the right to a divorce.[91]

(5) Rejection of Offer of Reconciliation as Desertion. If within the statutory period of desertion[92] an offer of reconciliation is made the rejection of it constitutes desertion;[93] and this is true, although the party thus refusing to resume the marital relation was not originally the offender,[94] provided that the cause of the separation has been removed, as by reformation of the guilty party,[95] but not otherwise.[96]

(6) Failure to Attempt Reconciliation as Desertion. The mere failure of a husband whose wife has left him to attempt to effect a reconciliation does not of itself constitute desertion on his part,[97] unless she left him for just cause.[98]

(v) Intention, Wilfulness, and Malice. It is a necessary element of desertion as a ground for divorce that the guilty party shall intend to abandon the other and permanently renounce the obligations of the marriage relation. Accordingly it has been held that the desertion must be wilful;[99] and it has also been held in some states that the desertion must be malicious.[1] However, if the desertion is wilful and without justification malice is implied.[2]

6. Excessively Vicious Conduct. In some states excessively vicious conduct has been declared by statute to be a ground for divorce a mensa et thoro.[3]

7. Gross Misbehavior and Wickedness. Gross misbehavior and wickedness repugnant to and inconsistent with the marriage contract is a statutory ground for divorce in some states.[4]

8. Gross Neglect of Duty — a. Statutory Provisions. Gross neglect of duty by a spouse has been made a ground for divorce in some states.[5]

b. What Constitutes — (I) In General. Since the statutes do not define gross neglect of duty, the question is to be left to the sound discretion of the court.[6] It may consist of a single heinous act of neglect.[7] Simple neglect is insufficient, however. There must not only be a default or omission to perform a marital duty, but the act complained of must be attended with circumstances of indignity or aggravation.[8]

(III) ABANDONMENT. Abandonment or desertion is not sufficient to constitute gross neglect of duty unless accompanied with circumstances of indignity or aggravation.[10]

(IV) NEGLECT BY WIFE. A wife as well as a husband may be guilty of gross neglect and thus give cause for divorce.[11]

c. Period of Neglect. No length of time is prescribed during which the neglect must continue to constitute ground for divorce.[12]

9. HABITUAL DRUNKENNESS — a. In General. In the absence of statute drunkenness is not a ground for divorce.[13] In nearly all states, however, habitnal drunkenness or its equivalent is by statute a ground for divorce.[14] In some states habitual drunkenness, to authorize a divorce, must be accompanied with wasting of estate.[15] continuous drunkenness need not be shown,[17] yet occasional indulgence in intoxicating liquors is not sufficient to establish the offense.[18] There must be such a frequent indulgence to excess as to show the existence of a confirmed habit,[19] and an inability to control the appetite.[20]

(II) Use of Opiates. As a rule the drunkenness meant by the statute is that produced by the excessive use of alcoholic liquors and not by excessive indulgence in opiates.[21]

c. Period of Indulgence. The statutes usually prescribe the time for which the habit of drunkenness must continue in order to render it a ground for divorce,[22] and require that it shall have continued for that period immediately preceding the bringing of the suit.[23]

d. Antenuptial Habit. If the habit of drunkenness was contracted before the marriage it is not ordinarily ground for divorce.[24]

10. Insanity. Insanity arising after marriage is not ground for divorce,[25] unless, as is the case in some states, it is so provided by statute.[26]

Neglect of business.— Habitual intemperance is "that degree of intemperance from the use of intoxicating drinks which disqualifies the person a great portion of the time from properly attending to business, or which would reasonably inflict a course of great mental anguish upon the innocent party." 11. Mutual Separation. The mutual separation of the parties for a specified period is made a ground of divorce in some states.[27]

12. Non-Support of Wife — a. In General. In the absence of statute the non-support of a wife is not ground for divorce.[28] In many states, however, a divorce, either absolute or limited, is authorized by statute where the husband wilfully refuses or neglects to provide suitable maintenance for the wife,[29] usually for a prescribed time which varies from one to three years.[30]

b. What Constitutes — (I) Sufficiency of Maintenance. The sufficiency of the maintenance or support furnished by the husband depends upon the condition and social rank of the parties and is to be determined in each case by the peculiar circumstances thereof.[31]

(II) Wilfulness and Wantonness. The statutes sometimes provide that the refusal or neglect, to constitute ground for divorce, must be wilful, wanton, gross, and cruel,[32] in which case simple neglect or refusal to support is not sufficient to justify a decree.[33]

(III) Ability of Husband. Non-support of a wife is not a cause for divorce unless the husband has the pecuniary ability to support her.[34] Accordingly if the non-support results from his imprisonment for crime, it is not ground for divorce.[35] By the weight of authority, "ability" or "pecuniary ability" as used in the statute means ability to provide for a wife either from labor or from property rather than from property alone.[36]

(iv) Ability of Wife. It has been held that where the earnings of the wife are sufficient for her own support, and they are applied to that purpose, the failure of the husband to provide the common necessaries of life for the wife is not wilful neglect.[37]

13. Personal Indignities — a. Statutory Provisions. In a few states it is provided by statute that personal indignities rendering the condition of the injured party intolerable and life burdensome is a cause for divorce, either absolute or limited.[38]

b. What Constitutes — (i) General Rules — (a) In General. The offense of inflicting personal indignities on a spouse is similar to that of cruelty, although it includes conduct which is not within the definition of cruelty as a ground for divorce.[39] It is impossible to lay down a general rule for the determination of what indignities may render the condition of the injured party intolerable.[40] They may consist of rudeness, vulgarity, unmerited reproach, haughtiness, contumely, studied neglect, intentional incivility, manifest disdain, abusive language, malignant ridicule, and every other plain manifestation of settled hate and estrangement;[41] but slight acts of misconduct are not sufficient.[42] in a statute making the non-support of a wife a penal offense includes the husband's capacity to earn or obtain means for her maintenance. Contra, however, see Washburn v. Washburn, 9 Cal. 475, holding that the term "ability" has reference to the possession by the husband of the means in property to provide necessaries and not to his capacity of acquiring such means by labor.

In Vermont the legislature has declared "pecuniary ability" to mean "sufficient ability to provide suitable maintenance for a wife, whether derived from the income of property, personal labor, or any other source." Sess. Laws (1886), Act 59. This statute, however, does not refer to the capacity of the husband to acquire means for the wife's support, but to the money received by him as salary or wages, and hence the wife cannot obtain a divorce because the husband will not work and has therefore no means for her support. Cilley v. Cilley, 61 Vt. 548, 18 Atl. 1120; Jewett v. Jewett, 61 Vt. 370, 17 Atl. 734; Farnsworth v. Farnsworth, 58 Vt. 555, 5 Atl. 401.

37. Rycraft v. Rycraft, 42 Cal. 444; Washburn v. Washburn, 9 Cal. 475, holding that the reason of the rule is that the earnings of both husband and wife go into a common fund, the control of which belongs to the husband, and his consent that they be applied to the wife's support is a performance of his legal obligation. (B) Necessity of Violence. Personal violence or conduct creating a fear of bodily harm is not a necessary element of the offense of inflicting personal indignities on a spouse.[43]

(C) Necessity of Danger to Life or Health. Personal indignities, to constitute ground for divorce, need not be of such a character as to endanger life or health.[44]

(D) Single Act of Indignity. A single act of indignity is not sufficient to render the wife's condition intolerable or her life burdensome and so entitle her to a divorce.[45]

(E) Intention. Ordinarily an act is not an indignity unless it was intended as such.[46]

(II) Illustrations—(A) False Charges. Charges of infidelity made by a husband against his wife without just cause are personal indignities affording ground for divorce if they result in mental suffering rendering her condition intolerable;[47] and the same is true where the husband, in the presence of his wife, calls their child a bastard, especially where the accusation is coupled with other indignities of a personal nature.[48] If, however, the charge is made in the belief that it is true and not wantonly or in malice, it is not an indignity.[49]

(B) Habitual Intemperance. A single act of drunkenness does not constitute an indignity to the person of the complainant,[50] but a continued and excessive use of liquors and opiates rendering the condition of the injured party intolerable justifies a divorce.[51]

(C) Lewd Conduct. The lewd and indecent conduct of a husband toward his wife is not alone sufficient to authorize a divorce as for personal indignities rendering life burdensome.[52] She is entitled to a divorce, however, if he is openly and notoriously devoted to disreputable women.[53]

(D) Publishing Notice to Withhold Credit. A notice published by the husband to the effect that credit should not be given his wife on his account is not of itself sufficient as a personal indignity to warrant a divorce to the wife.[54] If, however, a husband acts without just cause and in malice, such a notice may in connection with other circumstances constitute a personal indignity.[55]

(E) Sexual Excess. If a husband compels the wife to submit to an over indulgence in sexual intercourse, she is entitled to a divorce as for personal indignities.[56]

14. Public Defamation — a. In General. Public defamation of one party to a marriage by the other is a statutory ground for a limited divorce in some states.[57]

b. What Constitutes. The offense is not complete unless the defamatory language was uttered in the presence of third persons,[58] although the utterance need not be in a public place.[59] If a false charge of misconduct was made to a third person in good faith and without malice it does not constitute public defamation;[60] nor is a charge of adultery made in a pleading in an action for divorce which fails for lack of proof necessarily within the statute.[61] If, however, a charge made in a judicial proceeding was known to be false by the party making it, it is ground for divorce.[62]

15. Religious Belief Inconsistent With Marriage. It is provided by statute in some states that if a spouse shall join a religious sect which professes to believe the relation of husband and wife to be unlawful and shall in consequence refuse to cohabit for a certain period the other may obtain a divorce.[63]

16. Turning Wife Out of Doors. In some states the statute authorizes a limited divorce to the wife if the husband shall turn her out of doors.[64]

17. Vagrancy. In some states vagrancy of the husband is made a ground of divorce in favor of the wife.[65]

18. Violent and Ungovernable Temper. The statutes of some states allow a divorce for the habitual indulgence of a violent and ungovernable temper by either party.[66]

VIII. DEFENSES.

A. Invalidity of Marriage. The remedy of divorce presupposes the existence of a valid marriage. Consequently a divorce may not be granted for causes which nullify the marriage ab initio unless the legislature has authorized that course;[67] nor may it be granted for other causes unless there exists a valid and subsisting marriage relation between the parties.[68]

B. Want of Capacity to Commit Offense — 1. DRUNKENNESS. It is no excuse for matrimonial misconduct that it is the result of intoxication voluntarily indulged in,[69] unless the complainant induced or consented to the intoxication.[70]

2. INSANITY. The insanity of a spouse, if it existed at the time of the commission of a matrimonial offense,[71] is, within the rule excusing a matrimonial

Fraudulent marriage.— Where one of the parties to an executory agreement to marry is induced by the fraudulent representations of the other to go through a marriage ceremony before a person not authorized to perform it and cohabitation follows, the party guilty of the fraud cannot urge the invalidity of the marriage to defeat an action for divorce by the innocent party. Insanity as abating suit see INSANE PERSONS.

Presumption of insanity.— If it appears that defendant was insane prior to the commission of the offense, the invalidity will be presumed to have continued down to that time. Cook v. Cook, 53 Barb. offense for want of capacity to commit, a defense to an action for divorce, whether the offense be adultery,[72] cruelty,[73] abandonment or desertion,[74] or non-support.[75]

C. Provocation, Justification, and Excuse[76] — 1. For Adultery — a. Coercion. Adultery of the wife does not constitute ground for divorce where she was forced to submit to it.[77]

b. Mistake. If a wife commits adultery through mistake, believing the man to be her husband, it is not ground for divorce.[78] So if the husband absents himself for a long period, and the wife in the belief that he is dead remarries and cohabits with another, she is not guilty of adultery so as to authorize a divorce.[79]

Depravity of character and abandoned habits are not in themselves evidence of insanity so as to constitute a defense to a charge of adultery. Hill v. Hill, 27 N. J. Eq. 214.

General insanity and monomania.— If the insanity is general the sane spouse may obtain protection through an inquisition of lunacy, and consequently the insanity precludes a divorce. Smith v. Smith, 33 N. J. Eq. 458; Hall v. Hall, 33 L. J. P. & M. 65, 9 L. T. Rep. N. S. 810, 3 Swab. & Tr. 347. If, however, the insanity consists in a monomania for which the subject cannot be confined, the sane spouse is entitled to a divorce for misconduct resulting from the disease (Smith v. Smith, supra; Scoland v. Scoland, 4 Wash. 118, 29 Pac. 930; Hanbury v. Hanbury, [1892] P. 222, 61 L. P. & M. 73, 1 Swab. & Tr. 192), unless it appears that the mental disorder has been subdued and that there is no danger of a recurrence of the acts of violence (Curtis v. Curtis, supra).

Test of insanity.— To constitute insanity a defense, it must have been such as to deprive defendant of the use of his reason to the extent that he did not know right from wrong and was incapable of willing the one or the other. Hansell v. Hansell, 3 Pa. Dist. 724, 15 Pa. Co. Ct. 514. It must be such as to deprive the party of the power to desist from the misconduct. Duvale v. Duvale, (N. J. Ch. 1896) 34 Atl. 888.

Voluntary separation.— A husband is not entitled to an absolute divorce from his wife on the ground that they voluntarily lived apart for five years (Ky. St. § 2117), where she has become a lunatic and been confined in an asylum for that length of time. Pile v. Pile, 94 Ky. 308, 22 S. W. 215, 15 Ky. L. Rep. 88; Ferguson v. Ferguson, 8 Ky. L. Rep. 428.

Time of insanity.— Insanity precludes a divorce for desertion unless the full period of desertion had elapsed before defendant became insane. The fact that the desertion commenced while defendant was sane does not defeat the defense where he or she became insane before the cause of action accrued. Blandy v. Blandy, 20 App. Cas. (D. e. Prior Divorce. An absolute divorce dissolves the marriage tie, and therefore subsequent intercourse between a former spouse and a third person does not constitute adultery, provided a final decree has been rendered,[80] and that no fraud was practised to obtain it.[81] Since a limited divorce does not sever but merely suspends the marriage relation. It does not relieve subsequent intercourse between one of the spouses and a third person of the character of adultery.[82]

d. Misconduct of Husband. Although the husband may not be guilty of connivance, yet if his conduct conduces to his wife's adultery he cannot have a divorce therefor.[83] The question of what conduct thus conduces to adultery depends largely on the circumstances of the particular case.[84] It must ordinarily amount sickness,[93] or imprisonment,[94] is a desertion which is justified or excused and does not constitute a ground for divorce.

e. Separation Pending Divorce Suit. Voluntary separation of either party during the pendency of a divorce suit brought by or against such party is not to be included in computing the statutory period of desertion, since such separation is justified.[95]

d. Misconduct of Complainant — (I) General Rule. Misconduct of one spouse causing the other to leave the family home and remain away may afford justification for the desertion and preclude a divorce on that ground.[96]

(II) Requisites of Misconduct. It has been held that a wife is not justified in leaving her husband unless his conduct is such as would in itself constitute a ground for divorce.[97] It would seem to subserve the interests of public policy

Qualifications of rule.— If a wife who has deserted her husband without just cause thereafter so wrongfully conducts herself as to justify and induce her husband to sue for a divorce upon the ground of adultery, the pendency of that action, although she be not in fact guilty, will not suspend the effect of her desertion. Wagner v. Wagner, 39 Minn. 394, 40 N. W. 360. So the institution of a suit by the husband after the wife's wilful desertion to have their marriage declared void is not sufficient to convert the desertion into justifiable separation from the time of the pendency of the suit. Causes not justifying desertion.— The husband is permitted to determine whom he shall entertain in his house, and therefore a wife is not justified in leaving him because he invites members of his family to live with him (Jones v. Jones, 55 Mo. App. 523. Contra, Powell v. Powell, 29 Vt. 148), or because he excludes her son by a former marriage from the house (Fulton v. Fulton, 36 Miss. 517). The refusal of the husband to allow the wife to attend a church of which she is a member is not sufficient to justify her in separating from him. Law-and the sacredness of the marriage tie, however, to permit a spouse to set up in defense of his or her desertion such misconduct on the part of the other as would render it impossible to continue the matrimonial cohabitation with safety, health, and self-respect, although the misconduct is not in itself a sufficient ground for divorce, and some courts so hold.[98]

(III) Particular Acts of Misconduct — (A) Adultery. If one spouse commits adultery, the other is justified in leaving the matrimonial domicile.[99]

(B) Cruelty. Cruel treatment by reason of which the wife is compelled to leave the home of the husband is a justification for the desertion and precludes a divorce on that ground.[1] Gross language, rude or overbearing manners, ill temper v. Lawrence, 3 Paige (N. Y.) 267. Nor is desertion justified by want of affection (Hitchcock v. Hitchcock, 15 App. Cas. (D. C.) 81; Taylor v. Taylor, 80 Iowa 29, 45 N. W. 307, 20 Am. St. Rep. 394; Schuman v. Schuman, 93 Mo. App. 99; Alkire v. Alkire, 33 W. Va. 517, 11 S. E. 11) or incompatibility of temper (Van Dyke v. Van Dyke, 135 Pa. St. 459, 19 Atl. 1061).

Missouri. — Gillinwaters v. Gillinwaters, 28 Mo. 60; Neff v. Neff, 20 Mo. App. 182, holding that a wife was justified in leaving the husband because he was subject to fits, where before the marriage he had denied the infirmity, and he refused to allow any one by to protect her.

Acts of third persons.— Cruelty on the part of members of the husband's family, without the wife's provocation, justifies her departure. Day v. Day, 84 Iowa 221, 50 N. W. 979; Loux v. Loux, 57 N. J. Eq. 561, 41 Atl. 358; Hutchins v. Hutchins, 93 Va. 68, 24 S. E. 903, holding, however, that mere offensive conduct by members of the husband's family not in itself cruelty is insufficient to justify the wife's desertion. See, however, Harris v. Harris, 31 Gratt. (Va.) 13, holding that the wife's desertion is not justified by the fact that the husband failed to con-per, jealousy, or unkindness,[2] if they do not threaten bodily harm,[3] will not ordinarily justify desertion, although personal violence is not a necessary element of cruelty as a justification.[4]

(c) Non-Marital Crime. The fact that the husband is guilty of a crime does not justify the wife in refusing to live with him while he is at large, if the offense is not a breach of his marital vows.[5]

(d) Non-Support. Inability of a husband to provide his wife with suitable support is not of itself sufficient to justify her desertion.[6]

(e) Refusal to Cohabit. One spouse is not justified in deserting the other because the latter refuses marital intercourse.[7]

(iv) Justification or Provocation For Misconduct. If the misconduct alleged in justification of a desertion was justified or provoked by the acts of defendant it is insufficient as a defense.[8]

4. For Non-Support. If a wife withdraws herself from the family home against her husband's consent, she cannot complain that he does not provide for her,[9] unless his conduct is such as to justify her in withdrawing from him.[10] False charges of infidelity made by a wife do not justify the husband in failing to support her.[11]

D. Agreement For Separation — 1. In General. An agreement for separation is not ordinarily a bar to a divorce, either limited or absolute,[12] and this is trol his servants and maintain over them her authority as his wife.

Sexual indulgence.— Frequent intercourse by the husband does not justify the wife's desertion unless it amounts to cruelty. Moores v. Moores, 16 N. J. Eq. 275. F. Condonation — 1. Definition. Condonation in the law of divorce is the forgiveness of an antecedent matrimonial offense on condition that it shall not be repeated, and that the offender shall thereafter treat the injured party with conjugal kindness.[18] So long as the offender complies with the condition there can be no divorce,[19] but a breach of the condition works a revival of the original offense and allows a divorce therefor.[20]

2. Essential Elements — a. Freedom of Consent. Condonation to be effectual must be the voluntary act of the injured party,[21] and not induced by fraud,[22] force,[23] or fear.[24]

b. Knowledge of Offense. Full knowledge of a matrimonial offense is an Imprisonment of a husband for felony affords no ground for divorce where to the wife's knowledge he had been convicted before the marriage. Caswell v. Caswell, 64 Vt. 557, 24 Atl. 988, 33 Am. St. Rep. 943.

Other definitions are: "The remission, by one of the married parties, of an offense which he knows the other has committed against the marriage, on the condition of being continually afterward treated by the other with conjugal kindness,— resulting in the rule that while the condition remains unbroken there can be no divorce, but a breach of it revives the original remedy." Inability to prove misconduct.— Although the innocent spouse entertains a suspicion or a conviction of the other's infidelity and continues the marital cohabitation, yet there is no condonation unless he has the means of proving the offense. 3. COHABITATION AS CONDONATION — a. Continuance of Cohabitation — (I) IN GENERAL. If with knowledge that a matrimonial offense has been committed the innocent spouse voluntarily cohabits with the other, it ordinarily operates as a condonation, and the offense cannot be set up as a ground for divorce.[31]

(II) AS CONDONATION OF ADULTERY. A continuance of cohabitation after knowledge of the commission of adultery condones the offense and bars a suit for a divorce on that ground.[32] This rule operates against an innocent wife who

Reason for relaxation of rule.— The rule is thus relaxed in favor of an innocent wife because of the greater difficulties accompanying her withdrawal from the matrimonial domicile arising from her greater dependence upon the existence of the conjugal relation for her support and maintenance.

Cruelty by communicating disease.—Where a wife continues willingly in cohabitation with her husband after his communication to her of a venereal disease, she condones his cruelty and will not be granted a divorce. Auld v. Auld, 16 N. Y. Suppl. 803; Rehart v. Rehart, (Oreg. 1891) 25 Pac. 775. A wife's cohabitation with her husband is not a condonation, however, although he informed her of the name of the disease, if he deceived her as to its cause and effects. Wilson v. Wilson, 16 R. b. Resumption of Interrupted Cohabitation. A voluntary resumption of cohabitation which has been interrupted because of the commission of a marital offense condones the offense the same as the continuance of a cohabitation which has not been interrupted.[37]

c. Cohabitation Pending Suit. Voluntary cohabitation of the parties pending proceedings for a divorce necessarily operates as a condonation of the misconduct complained of.[38]

d. Extent of Cohabitation — (I) In General. There need not be a long continued matrimonial intercourse after the discovery of the offense to constitute a condonation; it is ordinarily sufficient, especially as against the husband, if he has once had intercourse with his wife.[39]

(II) Presumption of Marital Intercourse. Sexual intercourse is not necessarily implied from the fact that the parties are living in the same house,[40] but if they occupy the same room and bed, and apparently continue their relations as before the discovery of the offense, marital intercourse and a consequent condonation of the offense will be presumed.[41]

4. Revival of Offense — a. In General. The condonation of a matrimonial offense is not absolute but is based upon the repentance of the guilty party and is conditioned upon non-repetition of the offense and his future treatment of the injured party with conjugal kindness; and a violation of the condition in either respect revives the original offense.[42]

b. Repetition of Offense. If the offense is repeated after condonation the original offense is revived.[43] Thus if a reconciliation takes place after a separation because of cruelty, subsequent cruel conduct of the guilty party revives the former acts and permits a divorce upon the ground of all acts of cruelty, either before or after the reconciliation;[44] and the commission of adultery subsequent to the condonation of a similar offense revives the former act and permits a divorce for either or both of such acts.[45]

c. Commission of Different Offense — (I) In General. An offense which has been condoned may be revived not only by a repetition of the same offense,[46] but also by the subsequent commission of other marital offenses.[47] Thus an act of adultery will be revived by subsequent cruel and unkind treatment,[48] and it has been held that cruelty may be revived by subsequent adultery.[49]

(II) Offense Not Ground of Divorce. To revive the original offense by subsequent misconduct of a different nature it is not essential that the misconduct shall be such as in itself to justify a divorce,[50] although it must be so pronounced as to raise a reasonable probability that if the marriage relation is continued a new cause for divorce will arise.[51] Thus adultery is revived by subsequent acts of impropriety tending toward but falling short of a repetition of the offense,[52] and an act of cruelty is revived by subsequent acts of cruelty not in themselves sufficient to justify a divorce.[53]

reformation cannot be entertained as a ground for refusing a divorce for gross cruelty.[54]

H. Connivance — 1. Definition and Elements. Connivance in the law of divorce is the complainant's consent, express or implied, to the misconduct alleged as a ground for divorce.[55] A corrupt intent on the part of the complainant that the guilty party should commit the offense is generally considered an essential element of connivance.[56] If the consent was actively given the intent is impliedly corrupt and the defense is complete,[57] but where the connivance is claimed as impliedly the result of certain acts or omissions, they must appear to have proceeded from an evil motive.[58]

2. Effect as Defense — a. In General. Connivance precludes the granting of a divorce to a party guilty thereof upon whatever grounds the suit is brought.[59] It is practically limited in its application, however, to suits upon the ground of adultery.[60]

b. As Defense to Acts Other Than That Connived at. A husband who has connived at one act of adultery by his wife cannot complain of any subsequent act with either the same or another man.[61] Ordinarily, however, he may obtain a divorce for adultery committed prior to that at which he connived.[62]

3. EXPRESS CONNIVANCE. A spouse who for the purpose of procuring a divorce actually procures the commission of adultery by the other, either personally[63] or by an agent,[64] is guilty of connivance and cannot complain of the other's wrong-doing.

4 IMPLIED CONNIVANCE. Connivance may be implied from acts and omissions of the complainant naturally tending to bring about the other party's adultery or otherwise showing the complainant's consent thereto.[65] However, mere negligence, folly, dulness of apprehension, or indifference will not suffice to charge the complainant with connivance.[66] The acts or omissions relied on to constitute the defense must be such as show a willingness that the guilty party should commit the matrimonial offense complained of.[67] The husband's failure to pro-

I. Collusion — 1. Definition. Collusion in the law of divorce is a corrupt agreement between a husband and wife whereby one of them, for the purpose of enabling the other to obtain a divorce, commits a matrimonial offense, or whereby for the same purpose evidence is fabricated of an offense not actually committed or evidence of a valid defense is suppressed.[70]

Passively refraining from interference in the wife's plans for future adultery and the employment of friends to watch her do not bar the husband's right to a divorce. Pettee v. Pettee, 77 Hun (N. Y.) 595, 28 N. Y. Suppl. 1067; Reiersen v. Reiersen, 32 N. Y. App. Div. 62, 52 N. Y. Suppl. 509.

Other definitions are: "A corrupt combining of married parties to procure a sentence or judicial order by some false practice; as, for one of them to appear to or in fact do what otherwise would be ground for divorce, or in any way to deceive the court in a cause, thus seeking its interposition as for a real injury." 2 Bishop Mar. Sep. & Div. § 249.

"An agreement between husband and wife that one of them shall commit, or appear to have committed, or be represented in court as having committed, acts constituting a cause of divorce, for the purpose of enabling the other to obtain a divorce." Cal. Civ. Code, § 114; Ida. Civ. Code, § 2030; Mont. Civ. Code, § 162; N. D. St. § 2746; S. D. St. § 3379.

Connivance is distinguished from collusion in two respects: (1) Connivance is the corrupt consent to a matrimonial offense actually committed, and this is its whole extent. Collusion on the other hand may consist in an agreement not only for the commission of a matrimonial offense, but also for the fabrication of evidence of an offense not committed or the suppression of evidence of a defense. (2) Connivance consists in the corrupt consent of complainant alone, while collusion necessarily involves a corrupt agreement between the spouses to practise fraud on the court. While one spouse may be guilty of conniving at an offense which the other voluntarily commits, yet there can be no collusion in such a case unless the offense is committed not only voluntarily but by actual agreement between the spouses. See Gray v. Gray, 31 L. J. P. & M. 83, 6 L. T. Rep. N. S. 336, 2 Swab. & Tr. 554, 10 Wkly. Rep. 863; Gethin v. Gethin, 31 L. J. P. & M. 43; Jessop v. Jessop, 30 L. J. P. & M. 193, 4 L. T. Rep. Exceptions.— If the collusive arrangement had no relation to the acts upon which the suit is finally based it is not necessarily a bar (Reed v. Reed, 86 Mich. 600, 49 N. W. 587), and a collusive agreement will not bar otherwise the complainant has a sufficient cause therefor;[72] and if evidence of counter charges is suppressed, a divorce will be denied, although the facts withheld are insufficient to establish the counter charges.[73]

3. WHAT CONSTITUTES — a. Agreement For Divorce. There must be an agreement between the parties to constitute collusion.[74]

b. Commission of Offense by Agreement. Where the husband promises to commit adultery and arranges with witnesses to procure evidence thereof to be used by the wife in her suit for divorce, it constitutes collusion and a divorce will be denied.[75]

c. Collusion in Prosecution of Suit.[76] An agreement between the parties to withhold evidence tending to weaken the complainant's case[77] or to suppress facts constituting a good defense[78] bars a divorce. However, the complainant cannot be deprived of his remedy because of the failure of the guilty party to appear and defend,[79] unless the default is the result of agreement.[80] The withdrawal of an answer is a circumstance demanding the close scrutiny of the court,[81] but an arrangement facilitating the trial and not resulting in imposition on the court is allowable.[82]

81. Leavitt v. Leavitt, 13 Mich. 452. However, an agreement between the parties as to a division of property and a subsequent desire of defendant to withdraw his answer and permit plaintiff to have a decree are not alone sufficient to constitute collusion (Erwin v. Erwin, (Tex. Civ. App. 1897) 40 S W. 53), and a compromise whereby opposition to a petition is withdrawn upon suggestion of the trial judge cannot be deemed collusive (McCarthy v. McCarthy, 36 Conn. 177).

82. Holcomb v. Holcomb, 100 Mich. 421, 50 N. W. 170, holding that a stipulation to strike from the complaint a charge of adultery and agreeing that the cause be tried on a charge of cruelty does not show collusion.

J. Lack of Sincerity. A suit for divorce must be brought in good faith,[83] without undue influence by third persons,[84] and for the sole purpose of redressing matrimonial wrongs.[85]

K. Recrimination — 1. GENERAL RULE. Divorce is a remedy for the innocent as against the guilty, and will not be granted where both parties are at fault.[86] The defense that the complainant has himself been guilty of misconduct constituting ground for divorce is known as recrimination.[87]

2. OFFENSES PLEADABLE IN RECRIMINATION — a. In General. To constitute a defense of recrimination the misconduct of which the complainant is guilty must be such as in itself to afford the defendant ground for divorce,[88] and it must also and assuming that both parties can be guilty of desertion, the doctrine of recrimination applies and neither is entitled to a divorce.[92]

c. Offense Different From That Complained of. By the weight of authority the offense pleaded in recrimination need not be of the same nature as the offense which defendant has committed. Any misconduct on the part of complainant which constitutes ground for divorce bars his suit without reference to the nature of the offense of which he complains,[93] although in some states a contrary rule prevails by statute or otherwise and the two offenses must be of the same character.[94] Accordingly in most jurisdictions adultery may be set up in recrimination to a suit based on defendant's cruelty,[95] defendant's desertion,[96] or defendant's commission of an infamous crime.[97] So cruel conduct, if made a ground of absolute divorce,[98] may be shown in recrimination of a charge of adultery.[99] And Construction of statute.— Ky. St. § 2120, providing that an action for divorce must be brought within five years next after the doing of the act complained of, does not prohibit the granting of a divorce to parties who have lived apart for more than five years, where the ground of divorce is that they have lived apart for five years next preceding the action. Clark v. Clark, 53 S. W. 644, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 955. "Condemnation for felony," which is made a ground of divorce by Ky. St. § 2117, does not refer to conviction merely, but exists as long as the judgment is in force, and hence the cause is not barred because not brought within five years from the conviction. It may be brought at any time during the imprisonment or within five years from the termination thereof. Davis v. Davis, 102 Ky. 440, 43 S. W. 168, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 1520, 39 L. R. A. 403.

Disability to sue.— One who has not resided in the state a year cannot sue for a divorce. Hence the statute requiring divorce suits to be brought within a year after the offense is committed does not bar a suit instituted shortly after the expiration of the first year of plaintiff's residence in the state, although the cause of action accrued more than a year before that time. Jacobsen v. Jacobsen, 11 Oreg. 454, 5 Pac. 567.

Running of statute.— The limitation of an action for divorce for desertion begins to run from the first solicitation to bring about a reconciliation. Howard v. Howard, 134 Cal. 346, 66 Pac. 367.

Construction of statute.— Within "one year after the discovery of the act charged" as used in a divorce statute does not apply to suits based on an act of cruelty but only on an act of adultery. Smedley v. Smedley, 30 Ala. 714.

Adultery.— Where the act complained of consists of a continuous adulterous cohabitation, the statute begins to run from the time when plaintiff acquired knowledge thereof, and not from any subsequent act of adultery committed during such cohabitation. Rep. 584, both decided under the Matrimonial Causes Act (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, § 31), which authorizes the court in its discretion to refuse a petition for a dissolution of the marriage when petitioner shall have been in its opinion guilty of unreasonable delay.

See 17 Cent. Dig. tit. "Divorce," § 235.

Unreasonable lapse of time is defined by Cal. Civ. Code, § 125, to be such delay "as establishes the presumption that there has been connivance, collusion, or condonation of excuse is shown for the delay; the same rule being applied as in equity cases in general.[11]

IX. PARTIES.[12]

A. Parties Plaintiff — 1. IN GENERAL. The remedy of divorce is personal, and the right to seek it belongs only to one or the other of the spouses.[13]

2. DISABILITIES — a. Coverture. In nearly all the states a married woman may now by statute sue in her own name for a divorce without the intervention of a next friend.[14]

b. Infancy. It has been held that infants of an age permitting them to enter into a valid contract of marriage may maintain an action for divorce.[15] the offense, or full acquiescence in the same, with intent to continue the marriage relation, notwithstanding the commission of the offense." A delay of fourteen months after a desertion without cause is not unreasonable. Thomson v. Thomson, 121 Cal. 11, 53 Pac. 403.

Presumption of condonation from lapse of time see infra, XIII, A, note 10.

Laches of wife.— A wife's delay will not be so strictly charged against her where the offense is adultery and she has not cohabited with her husband since she ascertained the fact of its commission. Johnson v. Johnson, 50 Mich. 293, 15 N. W. 462 (where the court suggests that delay in complaining of family difficulties should be encouraged rather than punished, in the hope that a better state of things may be established by the voluntary action of the parties); Cummins v. Cummins, 15 N. Lack of knowledge of the offense is a valid excuse for a delay in instituting suit. Clark v. Clark, 97 Mass. 331.

Poverty of complainant may excuse his delay. Schonwald v. Schonwald, 62 N. C. 215; Nicholson v. Nicholson, L. R. 3 P. 53, 29 L. T. Rep. N. S. 108; Wilson v. Wilson, L. At common law a suit for divorce could not be brought by a wife in her own name, but it was required to be done by a next friend (Hawkins v. Hawkins, 4 Sneed (Tenn.) 105); and in New York, under a statute permitting a suit for an absolute divorce to be brought by the wife in her own name but making no such provision where the suit was for a separation, it was held that in the latter case the suit must be brought by the wife's next friend (Smith v. Smith, 4 Paige (N. c. Insanity.[16] A divorce suit cannot be prosecuted in behalf of an insane plaintiff by his legal representative,[17] unless that course is authorized by statute, as is the case in some jurisdictions.[18]

d. Prodigality. A person under guardianship as a spendthrift may nevertheless petition for a divorce in his own name.[19]

B. Parties Defendant — 1. Disabilities[20] — a. Coverture. As a rule a wife may now by statute defend an action brought against her for divorce without the intervention of a next friend.[21]

b. Infancy. In the absence of statute to the contrary, an infant defendant in a divorce suit must appear by a guardian ad litem.[22]

c. Insanity.[23] If defendant was insane when he committed the offense[24] he may be sued for divorce, although he has become insane, an appearance being made in his behalf by his next friend or legal representative.[25]

2. Third Persons — a. In General. If plaintiff seeks, in addition to a divorce, other relief involving an adjudication of property rights as against defendant and other persons claiming an adverse interest in the subject-matter, such persons without the intervention of a guardian ad litem. Wood v. Wood, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 108. In the ecclesiastical courts guardians ad litem were appointed to represent infant parties in divorce suits. Meldora v. Meldora, 4 Sandf. (N. Y.) 721.

Discretion of court.— The fact that a divorce nisi was obtained while the parties were sane does not make it a matter of course that an absolute divorce should be granted; and a statement of facts agreed upon by the guardians does not free the court from its duty to dispose of the case as public policy and the interests of the parties require. may be made parties defendant.[26] In England, in a suit for divorce because of adultery, the alleged adulterer must be made a party unless otherwise directed by the court.[27]

b. Intervention — (i) In General. Ordinarily a third person cannot intervene in a suit for divorce for the purpose of opposing the granting of a decree.[28]

(ii) By Particeps Criminis. The person charged as particeps criminis with defendant in an act of adultery upon which the suit is based cannot intervene to protect his character,[29] unless he is permitted to do so by statute.[30]

(iii) By State. In some jurisdictions statutes have been enacted which provide that if no defense is interposed in a divorce suit, the state shall by some officer of court intervene and defend.[31]

A prosecuting attorney who has been discharged by the court from further service in a divorce suit which he had defended on the ground of collusion between the parties has no authority to move for a new trial or to tender a bill of exceptions. State v. Friedley, 151 Ind. 404, 51 N. E. 473.

notified of the institution of the suit by service of process, either personal or constructive, the court cannot render a decree.[32] In many of the states there are statutes or rules of court specially regulating the sufficiency of process and the service thereof in divorce suits. In the absence of these the regulations relating to process in civil actions in general will govern in proceedings for divorce.[33] Statutes regulating service of process in divorce cases should be strictly construed,[34] and a non-compliance therewith defeats the court's jurisdiction over defendant.[35]

B. General Requisites — 1. Signature. The citation must be signed by a proper officer else it is fatally defective.[36]

2. Statement of Ground of Divorce. In some states the process must indicate the ground upon which the divorce is prayed.[37]

3. Service of Petition. In some states not only a summons but also the petition for divorce must be served on defendant.[38]

C. Personal Service — 1. In General. Actual notice to defendant in a divorce suit is favored,[39] and is required where he is domiciled within the jurisdiction of the court and might have been personally served by the exercise of due diligence.[40]

2. Manner of Service. Unless defendant is a non-resident, the process must ordinarily be served upon him personally.[41] In some states, however, process may be served by leaving a copy at defendant's residence in his absence,[42] by mailing him a copy,[43] or by citing him through a curator ad hoc.[44] The reading

37. Rudolph v. Rudolph, 12 N. Y. Suppl. 81, 19 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 424, holding, however, that where a statute requires the process to be indorsed with a statement of the purpose of the action, as "action to annul a marriage," "action for a divorce," "action for a separation," an indorsement of "action for a divorce" on a summons in an action for a separation is a mere irregularity of which defendant cannot avail himself unless he has actually been prejudiced. Indorsement of copy.— A failure to indorse the copy of a summons left with defendant, where the original was properly indorsed, does not invalidate an order of arrest in the action or preclude an application for alimony but merely prevents the entry of judgment by default. 43. Smith v. Smith, 4 Greene (Iowa) 266, holding, however, that the statute should be strictly observed, and that the courts should carefully guard against any abuse of its provisions.

44. Lachaud v. Lachaud, 10 La. Ann. 156, holding that in a proceeding for absolute divorce based on a decree of separation from bed and board obtained six years before and on the continued abandonment, the absent of a subpœna to answer a bill of divorce is not a sufficient service;[45] nor is it sufficient merely to put defendant in the unknown possession of a summons.[46]

3. PLACE OF SERVICE. Personal service of process without the state is ineffectual,[47] unless authorized by statute.[48] However, process may be personally served beyond the county where the court sits.[49]

4. WHO MAY MAKE SERVICE. The officer or person by whom process in divorce suits may be served is usually prescribed by statute or rule of court,[50] and process otherwise served is ineffectual.[51]

D. Constructive Service — 1. IN GENERAL. Actual notice to a non-resident defendant in a divorce suit is not a prerequisite to the exercise of jurisdiction,[52] and in nearly all the states statutes exist which permit of a constructive service of process by publication where defendant is without the state.[53] Where the spouse may be cited through a curator ad hoc. Where, however, a marriage is solemnized in a foreign country and the husband subsequently abandons the wife and comes to Louisiana, he cannot prosecute a suit against her there for a divorce by causing a curator ad hoc to be appointed to represent her, through whom she is cited. Champon v. Champon, 40 La. Ann. 28, 3 So. 397.

There are only two cases in which a curator may be appointed to represent absent wives in suits for divorce; one where defendant is charged with commission of an infamous crime and being a fugitive from justice, and the other where a separation is claimed on the ground of abandonment. Muller v. Hilton, 13 La. Ann. 1, 71 Am. Dec. 504; Prindle v. Williams, 9 La. Ann. 34.

45. Welch v. Welch, 16 Ark. 527; Smith v. Smith, 9 Mass. 422, where the statute requires service to be made by serving the party with an attested copy of the libel and a summons to appear.

46. Bulkley v. Bulkley, 6 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 307, where plaintiff delivered to defendant, at the time of her departure upon a sea voyage, a sealed box which he informed her contained a present for a third person and a note for herself, but which in fact contained the summons.

47. Keen v. Keen, 2 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 492; Ormsby v. Ormsby, 30 Pittsb. Leg. J. N. S. 272; Conrad v. Conrad, 1 Lack. Jur. (Pa.) 34; Weatherbee v. Weatherbee, 20 Wis. 499. Contra, Holland v. Holland, 29 Cinc. L. Bul. 98. See also infra, XXI, C, 4, b, (I), note 71.

Service "wherever found."— A statute authorizing personal service of process on defendant "wherever found," and also providing for publication of summons in case defendant cannot be found in the county, does not give the courts jurisdiction of a non-resident defendant by personal service on him without the state. Burton v. Burton, 45 Hun (N. Y.) 68; Ralston's Appeal, 93 Pa. St. 133; Payne v. Payne, 18 Pa. Co. Ct. 34. Contra, Snyder v. Snyder, 1 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 187, 10 Phila. (Pa.) 306.

48. McFarlane v. Cornelius, 43 Oreg. 513, 73 Pac. 325, 74 Pac. 468 (holding that under the statute it is proper for an order for publication to require the summons and complaint to be mailed to defendant at a temporary foreign residence); Jones v. Jones, 60 Tex. 451 (holding that the object of the statute authorizing personal service of process on a non-resident defendant being to provide an easier and less expensive method of service than by publication, its provisions are to be liberally construed); Stephens v. Stephens, 62 Tex. 337 (holding, however, that the statute must be substantially complied with). See also Baldwin v. Baldwin, 1 Pa. Co. Ct. 178, 17 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 222.

If authorized at all, personal service on a non-resident defendant outside of the state can be made only when the publication of the summons has been ordered. McBlain v. McBlain, 77 Cal. 507, 20 Pac. 61.

49. Ewing v. Ewing, 24 Ind. 468; Brown v. Brown, 10 Nebr. 349, 6 N. W. 397; Austin v. Austin, 4 C. Pl. (Pa.) 67.

No special authorization from the court is necessary to warrant the service of a subpœna by the sheriff of another county than that in which the divorce proceedings have been instituted. Fillman's Appeal, 99 Pa. St. 286 [reversing 10 Wkly. Notes Cas. 222].

50. Leavitt v. Leavitt, 135 Mass. 191 (holding that a constable or private person has no authority to serve such process unless by special order of the court); Brown v. Brown, 15 Mass. 389; Timney v. Timney, 21 Pa. Super. Ct. 538 (holding that a rule of the common pleas providing that in divorce cases "the subpœna, copy of the libel and notice, and prayer and answer shall be served by the sheriff upon the respondent, if he is within the county," is a reasonable and proper rule, and one which the court has power to make, under Pa. Act March 13, 1815 (6 Smith Laws 286), although there is nothing in the act which requires service by the sheriff); Moffat v. Moffat, 10 Vt. 432 (holding that no person is authorized to serve process from the supreme court unless particularly named therein).

51. Spafford v. Spafford, 16 Vt. 511 (holding that if a person not authorized serves process, defendant may disregard it); Parker v. Parker, N. Chipm. (Vt.) 27 (where a petition for divorce served by a person not particularly named in the process was dismissed).

52. Residence of defendant as affecting jurisdiction: Domestic divorce see supra, V, C, 3. Foreign divorce see infra, XXI, C, 3.

53. Lewis v. Lewis, 15 Kan. 181; Hare v. Hare, 10 Tex. 355, both cases holding that a requirements of these statutes are strictly complied with and not otherwise,[54] the decree is as binding on the parties as in cases where the service of process is personal.[55]

2. Who May Be Served. Constructive service of process is available only in case defendant resides without the state,[56] is absent therefrom,[57] or cannot be found therein.[58]

3. Proceedings For Service — a. Affidavit of Non-Residence or Absence. The fact of the non-residence or absence of defendant is usually required to be shown by affidavit.[59] This requirement is jurisdictional, and if the affidavit does not comply with the statute in regard to its contents, service of process thereunder does not confer jurisdiction.[60]

b. Order For Publication — (1) In General. In most states an order directing the publication of a notice of the suit is made a prerequisite of constructive general statute authorizing constructive service of process where defendant is a non-resident extends to suits for divorce. See also Plummer v. Plummer, 37 Miss. 185, holding that a statute requiring one month's publication of notice in chancery cases impliedly repeals a prior statute requiring three months' notice in divorce cases.

Pennsylvania.— Sciple v. Sciple, 21 Pa. Co. Ct. 559.

Texas.— See Stephens v. Stephens, 62 Tex. 337.

United States.—Cheely v. Clayton, 110 U. S. 701, 4 S. Ct. 328, 28 L. ed. 298, holding that if the statutory requisites as to service by publication are not complied with, the divorce is void for want of jurisdiction of the person of defendant.

Indiana.— Beard v. Beard, 21 Ind. 321.

Maine.— Spinney v. Spinney, 87 Me. 484, 32 Atl. 1019, holding that where the libellee has a known residence within the state and is only temporarily absent from it an actual service of the summons must be obtained.

Nebraska.—Atkins v. Atkins, 9 Nebr. 191, 2 N. W. 466.

North Carolina.—King v. King, 84 N. C. 32.

Absence on a voyage with an expectation of returning is not such an absence from the state as will authorize proceedings upon the libel without personal notice. Mace v. Mace, 7 Mass. 212.

58. Israel v. Arthur, 7 Colo. 5, 1 Pac. 438; Morrison v. Morrison, 64 Mich. 53, 30 N. W. 903; Von Rhade v. Von Rhade, 2 Thomps. & C. (N. Y.) 491; Green v. Green, 13 Pa. Co. Ct. 671. See also Briggs v. Briggs, 2 C. Pl. (Pa.) 64, holding that where the respondent resides out of the state the proper mode of service of the subpœna is by the customary two returns of "non est inventus" and publication.

59. Godfrey v. Godfrey, 27 Ga. 466; Atkins v. Atkins, 9 Nebr. 191, 2 N. W. 466; King v. King, 84 N. C. 32.

Affidavit by plaintiff alone.— An order of publication will not be granted on the affidavit of plaintiff alone, without other proof of defendant's non-residence. Hall v. Hall, 10 N. Y. Suppl. 223.

Venue.— An affidavit attached to the petition need not state the venue where it is sufficiently laid in the petition. Burnes v. Burnes, 61 Mo. App. 612.

60. Godfrey v. Godfrey, 27 Ga. 466 (holding that it is insufficient to show merely that defendant could not be found in two counties); Atkins v. Atkins, 9 Nebr. 191, 2 N. W. 466 (holding that an affidavit which fails to set out for what the action is brought is fatally defective).

Illustrations of sufficiency.— An affidavit that affiant has made diligent search and inquiry for the residence and whereabouts of defendant and is unable to find him is sufficient. Morrison v. Morrison, 64 Mich. 53, 30 N. W. 903. Although the affidavit does not show what efforts have been made to find defendant, it is sufficient to sustain the granting of the order if no motion is made to set it aside. Von Rhade v. Von Rhade, 2 Thomps. & C. (N. Y.) 491. The affidavit is not faulty as failing to negative the existence of defendant's residence in the state where the complaint does so. McFarlane v. Cornelius, 43 Oreg. 513, 73 Pac. 325, 74 Pac. 468. Where the master reports that respondent resides abroad and has expressly refused to attend the hearing or authorize any one to appear for him, the affidavit for publication of notice of final rule for divorce need not state that an effort has been made to serve respondent personally with notice. Baldwin v. Baldwin, 1 Pa. Co. Ct. 178, 17 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 222. It is not necessary to describe defendant's property in the affidavit in order to authorize publication of summons and give the court jurisdiction to make a decree concerning such property. Goore v. Goore, 24 Wash. 139, 63 Pac. 1092.

service of process and a substantial non-compliance with the requirements of the statute renders the notice ineffectual.[61]

(11) SERVICE OF ORDER. In some states the order of publication must be personally served on defendant.[62]

c. Issuance of Summons. A summons need not be issued where service is made by publication,[63] in the absence of statute to the contrary.[64]

d. Publication of Notice. The statutes contain various provisions as to the publication of the notice of suit, and unless they are complied with the court acquires no jurisdiction over defendant.[65]

e. Service of Published Notice. The notice as published is usually required to be mailed to defendant at his last known place of residence or at some place specified in the order of publication,[66] unless it appears that the residence or whereabouts of defendant is unknown.[67] If this requirement is not observed the court acqnires no jurisdiction of defendant.

61. McBlain v. McBlain, 77 Cal. 507, 20 Pac. 61; Shrader v. Shrader, 36 Fla. 502, 18 So. 672; Freeman v. Freeman, 1 Mich. 480; Burnes v. Burnes, 61 Mo. App. 612, holding, however, that an order of publication is not vitiated because of a phrase to the effect that the last insertion in the newspaper therein designated was "to be at least" thirty days before the first day of a certain term of court, since such phrase is mere surplusage.

Entry of order.— Where the entry of the order in the rule docket is not required to contain an abstract of the facts, an entry which purports to state the grounds is not conclusive that upon such and no other the order was granted. Finch v. Frymire, (Tenn. Ch. App. 1896) 36 S. W. 883.

For form of order of publication see Knowlton v. Knowlton, 155 Ill. 158, 39 N. E. 595.

62. Bentley v. Hosmer, 110 Mich. 626, 68 N. W. 650, 69 N. W. 660, holding that the court has no jurisdiction where defendant was a non-resident, when the cause of action arose and has not been personally served with the order.

64. Israel v. Arthur, 7 Colo. 5, 1 Pac. 438, holding that a statute requiring "usual exertion on the part of the sheriff to serve summons," notwithstanding publication is not complied with where a return of "non est inventus" is made before the return-day of the writ.

Service of summons on non-resident defendant see supra, X, C, 3.

65. Ferguson v. Ferguson, 9 Pa. Dist. 250, holding that publication in a legal journal is not a compliance with a statute requiring the notice to be published in a newspaper.

Publication of the summons alone will suffice where it contains a notice that if defendant fails to answer within the time limited plaintiff will apply for the relief demanded by the complaint. Anonymous, 3 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 293.

Time of publication.— An order requiring publication of a notice for two weeks successively before the term of court to which it is made returnable is complied with by a publication once in each of two successive weeks, although the first publication is made less than two weeks before the first day of the term (Knowlton v. Knowlton, 155 Ill. 158, 39 N. E. 595), but if the last day of publication is on the return-day of the notice it is not sufficient (Powell v. Powell, 3 Del. Co. (Pa.) 206). Under a statute providing that upon an alias subpœna being returned non est inventus the sheriff shall cause notice to be published "for four weeks successively prior to the first day of the then next term," all that is required is that respondent shall have at least four weeks' constructive notice before the term at which he is bound to appear, and it is not forbidden that he have more. Although unnecessary under the statute, personal service of notice on a non-resident defendant, supplemental to the constructive notice by publication, does not invalidate the service by publication. Burnes v. Burnes, 61 Mo. App. 612.

67. Ensign v. Ensign, 45 Kan. 612, 26 Pac. 7 (where it was held that an affidavit stating that the residence of defendant is unknown and cannot be ascertained by any means within plaintiff's control forms no part of the service by publication and may be made and filed at any time before judgment is granted); Larimer v. Knoyle, 43 Kan. 338, 23 Pac. 487 (holding that the affidavit of unknown residence need not be filed within three days after the date of the first publication); Hemphill v. Hemphill, 38 Kan. 220, 16 Pac. 457.

E. Correction of Defects — 1. Amendment. A process defective in its inception may be amended to cure the defect where the power to allow amendments in civil cases is generally conferred on the courts by statute.[68]

2. Issuance of New Process. If a citation is fatally defective, the case will not be continued to allow plaintiff to issue and serve a proper summons.[69]

F. Proof of Service. To justify the entry of a decree of divorce in case of default, there must first be proof of due service of process.[70]

G. Waiver of Process — 1. By Appearance — a. By Plaintiff. By instituting the suit plaintiff appears for all purposes therein.[71]

b. By Defendant. A general appearance by defendant dispenses with the necessity of process, and if process is in fact issued the appearance waives defects therein and in the service thereof.[72] In some states the appearance of defendant under an original bill does not give jurisdiction of his person under a supplemental bill.[73]

2. By Acknowledgment of Service. An acknowledgment by defendant of due service of process is not sufficient to dispense with a compliance with the statutory provisions relating thereto.[74]

Acceptance of service.— Acceptance of service by defendant is ordinarily sufficient evidence that he has had notice of the suit (Keeler v. Keeler, 24 Wis. 522), if accompanied by proof of the identity of the person accepting the service (Bittinger v. Bittinger, 4 Pa. Dist. 441). Acceptance of service as dispensing with due service of process see infra, X, G, 2.

Identity of defendant.—Without proof that the person on whom process was served was in fact the defendant named therein, a divorce will not be granted. Delling v. Delling, 34 Misc. (N. Dist. 739.

See, however, Philbrick v. Philbrick, 27 Vt. 786, holding that if a citation is signed only by a justice of the peace, the irregularity is not waived by the libellee's attending the taking of the testimony.

Appearance by attorney.— Where defendant's counsel files a warrant of attorney and enters a general appearance for defendant, service of process on defendant is dispensed with. Renz v. Renz, 22 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 226. However, an invalid service on an attorney for defendant is not validated by the attorney's general appearance. XII. PLEADINGS.[83]

A. Complaint — 1. In General. The pleading of the party who institutes a suit for divorce is variously termed a bill, complaint, libel, and petition, according to the practice prevailing in the particular jurisdiction.

2. Election as to Ground of Divorce. If several acts, each constituting a separate ground for divorce, constitute collectively an additional ground for divorce, the injured party may proceed upon the latter alone.[84]

3. Joinder of Causes of Action. Two or more distinct matrimonial offenses may be charged in the same complaint where they are causes for the same kind of divorce.[85] Otherwise not,[86] unless the court has discretion to grant either an absolute or a limited divorce according to the facts proved.[87] A cause of action for an absolute divorce cannot be joined with one to annul a tripartite separation agreement;[88] but it is not a misjoinder to petition for a divorce and incidental relief.[89]

4. Allegation of Jurisdictional Facts — a. In General. The complaint should show on its face that the case is within the jurisdiction of the court. Accord-for divorce, should not leave the state without leave of court, was properly brought for the use and benefit of the wife; and a complaint alleging that after the bond was given the husband left the state and has not since returned, and that the wife recovered judgment against him in a certain sum, sufficiently shows, as against a demurrer, that he left after the judgment was rendered. 84. McCann v. McCann, 91 Mo. App. 1, holding that where a person has been guilty of several acts of misconduct which would warrant a divorce on the ground of adultery or habitual drunkenness, and they have been brought to the knowledge of the innocent party, they need not be set out as ground for divorce in the statutory words; for, if the acts are numerous and of a sort to render the condition of the injured spouse intolerable, they may be charged as indignities.

86. Decamp v. Decamp, 2 N. J. Eq. 294; Zorn v. Zorn, 38 Hun (N. Y.) 67; Henry v. Henry, 17 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 411; Hoffman v. Hoffman, 35 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 384; McIntosh v. McIntosh, 12 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 289; Rose v. Rose, 11 Paige (N. Y.) 166; Smith v. Smith, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 91; Johnson v. Johnson, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 163, all holding that a charge of cruelty, being a cause for limited divorce only, cannot be joined with a charge of adultery, which is a cause for absolute divorce. See, however, Doe v. Roe, 23 Hun (N. Y.) 19.

Multifariousness.— Where, however, a bill is filed for a divorce on the ground of adultery, containing a prayer for relief adapted to the charge of adultery only, it is not rendered multifarious by the insertion of charges of cruel treatment. Beach v. Beach, 11 Paige (N. Y.) 161.

87. Fera v. Fera, 98 Mass. 155; Young v. Young, 4 Mass. 430; Grant v. Grant, 53 Minn. 181, 54 N. W. 1059; Wagner v. Wagner, 36 Minn. 239, 30 N. W. 766.

88. Galusha v. Galusha, 138 N. Y. 272, 33 N. E. 1062, holding that the causes of action are not of the same class and do not affect the same parties.

89. Kashaw v. Kashaw, 3 Cal. 312 (where partition of community property was also asked); Hodecker v. Hodecker, 20 Misc. (N. Y.) 641, 46 N. Y. Suppl. 1073 (where a complaint in an action for limited divorce alleging cruelty and desertion by the husband and fraud in securing a release of dower rights, and also praying for provision for support and a temporary injunction against alienation of property, was held not to state more than one cause of action); Faulk v. Faulk, 23 Tex. 653; Damon v. Damon, 28 Wis. 510 (in both of which cases the sequestration of defendant's property for the benefit of plaintiff and her children was also asked).

Waiver of objection.— Under Nebr. Code Civ. Proc. § 96, providing that by failure to take exceptions to a misjoinder of causes of action it shall be deemed waived, property rights not growing out of the marriage relation should be adjudicated in an action for divorce, although not properly joined, where no objection was made. Reed v. Reed, 65 Nebr. 849, 91 N. W. 857.

ingly all facts whose existence is essential to the exercise of jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the suit should be alleged.[90]

b. Of Marriage. The fact of marriage should be averred in direct and explicit terms.[91]

c. Of Residence — (I) Necessity. Where a residence by complainant within the state is required for a certain period of time immediately preceding the commencement of proceedings for a divorce, or at the time the offense was committed or the complaint was filed, the fact of such residence is jurisdictional and should be alleged.[92] If residence in the state is alleged, it is not usually necessary to allege residence in the county where the suit is brought,[93] unless so required by statute.[94]

(II) Sufficiency. Residence as a jurisdictional fact should appear by direct and unequivocal averment, although no particular form is requisite.[95]

90. Edwards v. Edwards, 30 Ala. 394; White v. White, 45 N. H. 121; Jarvis v. Jarvis, 3 Edw. (N. Y.) 462.

91. Brinckle v. Brinckle, 10 Phila. (Pa.) 1, holding that an actual marriage and not a mere agreement to marry should be averred.

Lawful marriage.— A bill is not demurrable for a failure to state that the parties were "lawfully" married. Huston v. Huston, 63 Me. 184.

The place of marriage need not be alleged (Farley v. Farley, 94 Ala. 501, 10 So. 646, 33 Am. St. Rep. 141), unless the libel shows facts which render the place of marriage a jurisdictional fact (Greenlaw v. Greenlaw, 12 N. H. 200).

Common-law marriage.— The facts relied on to constitute a common-law marriage should be alleged in sufficient detail to permit of a determination of the question whether a marriage actually existed. Andrews v. Andrews, 75 Tex. 609, 12 S. W. 1124. If such facts negative the existence of a valid marriage the complaint will be dismissed. Van Dusan v. Van Dusan, 97 Mich. 70, 56 N. W. 234; Rose v. Rose, 67 Mich. 619, 35 N. W. 802; Clancy v. Clancy, 66 Mich. 202, 33 N. W. 889. Although the bill shows that a prior marriage existed at the time of the ceremony, yet if it alleges that after the impediment was removed the parties recognized the ceremony as binding and thereafter lived together as husband and wife, it is sufficient. Flanagan v. Flanagan, 116 Mich. 185, 74 N. W. 460.

92. Alabama.— Crossman v. Crossman, 33 Ala. 486.

California.— Bennett v. Bennett, 28 Cal. 599.

94. Richardson v. Richardson, 8 Pa. Dist. 242; Johnson v. Johnson, 3 Pa. Dist. 166; Powell v. Powell, 3 Del. Co. (Pa.) 206.

Mode of objection.— A libel which does not fully set forth, as required by rule of court, the time and circumstances of libellant's acquiring a residence in the county, but which complies with the act of assembly, must be taken advantage of by demurrer or on a rule for a bill of particulars and not by motion to quash. Shellenberger v. Shellenherger, 6 Pa. Co. Ct. 287.

Waiver of objection.— Failure of the petition to allege plaintiff's residence in the county cannot be taken advantage of for the first time on the trial. Lewis v. Lewis, 9 Ind. 105.

95. Batchelder v. Batchelder, 14 N. H. 330, holding that a general description of a party as being of a certain town and county within the state, without specifying residence, is insufficient. Where, however, the parties are described as residents of the state and the marriage is alleged to have taken place there, no further allegation of residence is necessary. Greenlaw v. Greenlaw, 12 N. H. 200.

Actual bona fide residence.— An allegation that plaintiff resides in the state and has resided therein for five years prior to the commencement of the suit is equivalent to an allegation that she is an "actual bona fide inhabitant of the state." Needles v. Needles, (Tex. Civ. App. 1900) 54 S. W. 1070.

Residence at time of offense.— Where a statute requires the injured party to be a resident of the state at the time of the com-

5. Allegation of Particular Offenses — a. In General. The nature and circumstances of the offense relied on as a ground for divorce should be specifically alleged, and the time and place where it was committed should be set forth with reasonable certainty.[96] However, a defect consisting of a failure to specify the mission of the offense and at the time of exhibiting the complaint, a complaint alleging that plaintiff had been an inhabitant of the state from September, 1872, and charging defendant with adultery at divers times between 1870 and 1873, is sufficient. Von Rhade v. Von Rhade, 2 Thomps. & C. (N. Y.) 491.

Residence next before suing.—An averment of residence in the state for "one whole year last past" is equivalent to the statutory phrase "one whole year next before the filing of the petition." Hinrichs v. Hinrichs, 84 Mo. App. 27. See also Burns v. Burns, 13 Fla. 369. But an allegation that plaintiff "has for more than one year prior to the filing of this petition been a resident" of the state is insufficient. Collins v. Collins, 53 Mo. App. 470. So an allegation that plaintiff has resided in the state for more than a year continuously before the filing of the petition is insufficient. Johnson v. Johnson, 95 Mo. App. 329, 68 S. W. 971. See also Haymond v. Haymond, 74 Tex. 414, 12 S. W. 90.

Specifying county but omitting state.— An allegation that plaintiff is a resident of Campbell county, omitting the words "in Kentucky," is presumed to mean the county of that name in that state. Strode v. Strode, 3 Bush (Ky.) 227, 96 Am. Dec. 211.

Usual residence.— An averment that plaintiff "now resides and for some time has resided" in a certain county is equivalent to the expression "usually resides," etc. Lochnane v. Lochnane, 78 Ky. 467.

96. Arkansas.— Rie v. Rie, 34 Ark. 37.

Florida.— Crawford v. Crawford, 17 Fla. 180; Phelan v. Phelan, 12 Fla. 449.

North Carolina.— Martin v. Martin, 130 N. C. 27, 40 S. E. 822; Everton v. Everton, 50 N. C. 202.

Pennsylvania.— Sites v. Sites, 9 Pa. Dist. 192, 23 Pa. Co. Ct. 439, holding that the libel should lay the grounds of complaint in the language of the statute and then specify particularly the constituent facts.

Rhode Island.— Brown v. Brown, 2 R. I. 381.

Tennessee.— Horne v. Horne, 1 Tenn. Ch. 259.

Texas.— Wright v. Wright, 6 Tex. 3; Byrne v. Byrne, 3 Tex. 336; Wright v. Wright, 3 Tex. 168.

Washington.— Stanley v. Stanley, 24 Wash. 460, 64 Pac. 732.

See 17 Cent. Dig. tit. "Divorce," §§ 293, 295.

A bill is sufficient on demurrer if enough appear on its face to require answer and explanation by defendant. Van Driele v. Van Driele, 58 Mich. 273, 25 N. W. 188.

Language of statute.— It is sufficient to charge the respondent's fault in the language of the statute. Mumford v. Mumford, 13 R. I. 19.

In Pennsylvania it has been held that a libel is not defective for want of particularity as to time and place, since defendant may demand specifications affording him the necessary information. Realf v. Realf, 77 Pa. St. 31 (adultery); Hancock's Appeal, 64 Pa. St. 470 (adultery); Breinig v. Breinig, 26 Pa. St. 161 (cruelty). Later rules of court, however, require the same precision in a libel that would be necessary in a bill in equity; but where time and place are specified with as much certainty as the party can reasonably be expected to furnish without setting out his evidence in detail, he should not be deprived of his opportunity to make out his case. Gillardon v. Gillardon, 15 Wkly. Notes Cas. 528 (adultery); Spengler v. Spengler, 15 Wkly. Notes Cas. 437 (cruelty). Bill of particulars see infra, XII, K.

Allegation of time and place of: Adultery see infra, XII, A, 5, b, (I), (B). Cruelty see infra, XII, A, 5, b, (II), (B). Desertion or abandonment see infra, XII, A, 5, b, (III).

Conviction of crime.— An allegation that defendant "was convicted of the crime of rape upon a little girl, daughter of plaintiff," sufficiently charges conviction of an infamous crime. Polson v. Polson, 140 Ind. 310, 39 N. E. 498.

Fraud and duress.— A general charge that the marriage was procured by fraud and coercion, without setting forth facts substantiating the charge, is insufficient. Ferris v. Ferris, 8 Conn. 166; Shriver v. Shriver, 14 Phila. (Pa.) 170.

Habitual intemperance.— A complaint alleging intemperance in the language of the statute is sufficient without alleging the different acts of intoxication. Forney v. Forney, 80 Cal. 528, 22 Pac. 294. So an allegation that "defendant, for more than five years last past, disregarding his duties as a husband toward the plaintiff, has been guilty of habitual intemperance" is sufficient to support a decree for plaintiff in the absence of a demurrer for uncertainty. Reading v. Reading, 96 Cal. 4, 30 Pac. 803.

Impotency to constitute a cause for divorce must be incurable and have existed at the time of marriage (see supra, VII, A, 2, a; VII, B, 3, b), and hence these facts should both be specifically alleged in the complaint. Ferris v. Ferris, 8 Conn. 166 (holding that an allegation that defendant was laboring under a "corporal imbecility" was insufficient); Peipho v. Peipho, 88 Ill. 438; Roe v. Roe, 29 acts constituting the ground for divorce with sufficient certainty is cured by an answer raising no objection thereto.[97]

b. Illustrations[98] — (I) Allegation of Adultery — (A) In General. Adultery must be specifically and positively alleged, and with such reasonable certainty as to time, place, and person that defendant may know the charge which he is called upon to meet.[99]

(B) Time and Place. The time and place of the offense should be alleged with sufficient particularity to enable defendant to prepare his defense.[1]

Pittsb. Leg. J. (Pa.) 319; A. C. v. B. C., 10 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 569. See, however, Kempf v. Kempf, 34 Mo. 211 (where a petition alleging that defendant was at the time of the marriage and still is impotent, specifying the particular character of the impotence, was held sufficient, although it did not allege that the defect was incurable, this fact being implied in the use of the term "impotence"). Furthermore the physical condition causing impotency should be described. Ferris v. Ferris, supra (holding that this requirement is not met by a general allegation that defendant has made no attempt to consummate the marriage); Peipho v. Peipho, supra.

Neglect.— When gross neglect is relied on as a cause for divorce, the complaint should state specifically and with reasonable certainty the facts and circumstances constituting the offense. Devoe v. Devoe, 51 Cal. 543; Callen v. Callen, 44 Kan. 370, 24 Pac. 360; Brown v. Brown, 22 Mich. 242; Burner v. Burner, 7 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 140, 1 Cinc. L. Bul. 164. And where the offense consists of the husband's neglect to provide for his wife, if of sufficient ability, the fact of his ability to provide must be alleged. Ward v. Ward, 20 Wis. 252.

Violent and ungovernable temper.— Where a divorce is sought on the ground of violent and ungovernable temper, the complaint must allege facts from which the court can determine whether such temper exists. Johnson v. Johnson, 23 Fla. 413, 2 So. 834; Phelan v. Phelan, 12 Fla. 449. Compare Donald v. Donald, 21 Fla. 571 (where the facts were sufficiently alleged); Burns v. Burns, 13 Fla. 369. It must also be alleged that such temper was indulged in toward complainant. Phelan v. Phelan, supra.

California.— Conant v. Conant, 10 Cal. 249, 70 Am. Dec. 717.

Indiana.— Short v. Kerns, 95 Ind. 431.

Nebraska.— Dakin v. Dakin, (1901) 95 N. W. 781, holding that a petition is sufficient if the allegations are set forth with sufficient fulness to allow of the introduction of evidence in its support, where no objection is made thereto.

Pennsylvania.— Breinig v. Breinig, 26 Pa. St. 161; Schulte's Appeal, 34 Leg. Int. 448.

If, however, the bill is so defective as to fail in setting out a legal cause for divorce, no amount of evidence nor the verdict of a jury will warrant a decree on it. Johnson v. Johnson, 4 Wis. 135. See also Wright v. Wright, 3 Tex. 168.

98. Allegation of: Conviction of crime see supra, note 96. Fraud and duress see supra, note 96. Habitual intemperance see supra, note 96. Impotency see supra, note 96. Neglect see supra, note 96. Violent and ungovernable temper see supra, note 96.

General allegation.— It is not sufficient to charge the offense by a general accusation or insinuation amounting to mere suspicion. Denison v. Denison, 4 Wash. 705, 30 Pac. 1100. A general charge may be sufficient, however, when founded on the pregnancy of defendant without access of plaintiff (Carty v. Carty, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 880; Mitchell v. Mitchell, 61 N. Y. 398) or on the existence of a venereal disease contracted since the marriage (Mitchell v. Mitchell, supra; Clark v. Clark, 7 Rob. (N. Y.) 276).

An allegation on information that defendant has been guilty of adultery is not sufficient. Trotter v. Trotter, 30 Pittsb. Leg. J. N. S. 109.

Living in adultery.— An averment that defendant was living "in open and notorious adultery" with a person named is sufficiently definite, since the evidence required to prove the offense is even greater than if a single act were alleged. Marble v. Marble, 36 Mich. 386. Compare Stokes v. Stokes, 1 Mo. 320, 322, where it was held insufficient to allege that defendant "is now residing . . . with the aforesaid Ann Smith, whom he has, . . . imposed on the people of this State as his lawful wife." In North Carolina the wife's petition for a divorce for the husband's adultery must allege in terms that after separating from his wife he has lived in adultery. Morris v. Morris, 75 N. C. 168.

Vermont.— Sanders v. Sanders, 25 Vt. 713.

Washington.—Denison v. Denison, 4 Wash. 705, 30 Pac. 1100.

In Pennsylvania the matter is governed by rule of court. See supra, note 96.

Time.— It is sufficient to allege the month and year without the exact day. Scheffling v. Scheffling, 44 N. J. Eq. 438, 15 Atl. 577. Especially is this true where the place and the name of the co-respondent are set forth. Addicks v. Addicks, 1 Marv. (Del.) 338, 41 Atl. 78 (where a libel was held sufficient, although the year was the only allegation in respect to time); Black v. Black, 26 N. J. Eq. 431; Noel v. Noel, 24 N. J. Eq. 137; Goodwin v. Goodwin, 23 N. J. Eq. 210; Woog v. Woog, 58 N. Y. App. Div. 620, 69 N. Y. Suppl. 555 (where a complaint was held sufficient, although the times were given only as between January and April, 1900, it being alleged that the precise dates were unknown).

Place.— The charge should be stated with such particularity of the place of commission as to enable defendant to meet it on the trial. Conant v. Conant, 10 Cal. 249, 70 Am. Dec. 717; Trubee v. Trubee, 41 Conn. 36; Freeman v. Freeman, 39 Minn. 370, 40 N. W. 167 (holding that it is insufficient to allege merely the name of the paramour unless either time or place is definitely set forth); Mills v. Mills, 18 N. J. Eq. 444; Marsh v. Marsh, 16 N. J. Eq. 391, 84 Am. Dec. 164; Wood v. Wood, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 108; Codd v. Codd, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 224; Kane v. Kane, 3 Edw. (N. Y.) 389; Horne v. Horne, 1 Tenn. Ch. 259. The place should be named, as a specified house or the like. Cardwell v. Cardwell, 12 Hun (N. Y.) 92 (holding insufficient an allegation of the commission of adultery at various houses of prostitution in a certain city); Heyde v. Heyde, 4 Sandf. (N. Y.) 692, 693 (holding insufficient a charge that "defendant, since the marriage, viz., in the month of November, 1851, committed adultery with a female in the city of New York, whose name is unknown to the plaintiff, and the particular circumstances whereof are unknown to the plaintiff, but which she expects to be able to prove at the trial of this cause"); Gridley v. Gridley, 7 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 215; Miller v. Miller, 92 Va. 196, 23 S. E. 232; Denison v. Denison, 4 Wash. 705, 30 Pac. 1100. If the house is not known, reference should be made to the particular nature of the proof by which the allegation as to the place of adultery is to be supported (Pramagiori v. Pramagiori, 7 Rob. (N. Y.) 302), and there should be an averment that the place is unknown and that complainant was unable to obtain information after having attempted so to do (Mitchell v. Mitchell, 61 N. Y. 398; Woog v. Woog, 58 N. Y. App. Div. 620, 69 N. Y. Suppl. 555). It is sufficient to allege that adultery was committed in the county in 1860 with a named person (Hawes v. Hawes, 33 Ill. 286); that the offense was committed on a certain day at a house named, giving city, street, and number (Stone v. Stone, (N. J. Ch. 1888) 13 Atl. 245); that adultery was committed with a certain person in a certain city, and with other persons in houses of ill fame in specified cities (Noel v. Noel, 24 N. J. Eq. 137); that respondent, "in August and September, 1871, visited the house of . . . a place of ill fame in Virgin alley, Pittsburg, for the purpose of fornication with divers persons unknown to the libellant" (Realf v. Realf, 77 Pa. St. 31). See also Evans v. Evans, (Tenn. Ch. App. 1900) 57 S. W. 367, holding an allegation of adultery with a named person in a certain city sufficient to justify the admission of evidence, although the street and number of the house were not alleged.

See 17 Cent. Dig. tit. "Divorce," § 300.

Cruel and barbarous treatment.— Under a statute authorizing a divorce because of the wife's "cruel and barbarous treatment" rendering the condition of the husband intolerable or his life burdensome, it is not sufficient to allege specific acts of personal indignities or gross insult offered by a wife to her husband. Pennington v. Pennington, 10 Phila. (Pa.) 22; Schlicter v. Schlicter, 10 Phila. (Pa.) 11; Bean v. Bean, 11 Lanc. Bar (Pa.) 138; Holland v. Holland, 4 Leg. Gaz. (Pa.) 372.

False charges.— An allegation in the wife's petition that her husband had filed a "false and malicious" affidavit in a divorce suit charging her with unchastity does not show cruelty where no averment is made that the suit has terminated in her favor (De Haley v. Haley, 74 Cal. 489, 16 Pac. 248, 5 Am. St. Rep. 460) and where the alleged cruelty consists of insults perpetrated by the wife in charging her husband with adultery, the complaint must allege the falsity of the charge (Huckabay v. Huckabay, 35 Tex. 620).

Language of statute.— It is good pleading to allege cruelty generally in the language of the statute and then specifically describe the particular acts complained of. Reese v. Reese, 23 Ala. 785; Sites v. Sites, 9 Pa. Dist. 192, 23 Pa. Co. Ct. 439; Edwards v. Edwards, 9 Phila. (Pa.) 617. In Rhode Island a petition for divorce is sufficiently specific, if it states the grounds of divorce in the language of the statute, except where petitioner relies on a charge of gross misbehavior and wickedness in violation of the marriage contract, in which case the acts relied on to make out the charge must be specified. Brown v. Brown, 2 R. I. 381. In Delaware the bill must describe the offense in the terms of the statute. Wagner v. Wagner, 3 Pennew. 303, 51 Atl. 603.

every act complained of need not be specifically described; it is enough if sufficient facts are alleged to establish legal cruelty as a ground for divorce.[7]

(B) Time and Place. The acts of cruelty should be alleged with reasonable certainty as to time and place.[8] However, the exact day and place of the occurrence of each particular act need not be alleged;[9] and where the conduct complained of is continued and not confined to any particular time or locality, a specific allegation of time and place is impracticable and should not be required.[10]

(C) Physical or Mental Effect. Since, to constitute ground for divorce, cruelty must result either in bodily harm or injury to the health or a reasonable fear of one or the other,[11] either one or the other of these effects of the misconduct on the complainant must be alleged.[12] In some states the misconduct, to Reese v. Reese, 23 Ala. 785; Johnson v. Johnson, (Cal. 1894) 35 Pac. 637 (holding that a complaint alleging extreme cruelty in that defendant, "about three years ago," struck plaintiff without cause, and since that time has continually, whenever they have been together, used vile language to her, is sufficient); Itzkowitz v. Itzkowitz, 33 N. Y. App. Div. 244, 53 N. Y. Suppl. 356; Irwin v. Irwin, 2 Okla. 180, 37 Pac. 548 (where an allegation that "on or about February, 1892, and on divers other occasions prior and subsequent thereto," defendant was guilty of cruelty was held sufficient).

10. Smedley v. Smedley, 30 Ala. 714, where a wife's bill alleging that the husband, "soon after their marriage, commenced treating her, and did treat her, with cruelty and inhumanity; that on various occasions he had inflicted blows on her in anger, and with much violence, thereby endangering her health and life," was held sufficient.

12. Smith v. Smith, 124 Cal. 651, 57 Pac. 573 (holding that a complaint which does not allege either grievous bodily injury or grievous mental suffering is defective); Freerking v. Freerking, 19 Iowa 34 (where a complaint which did not allege that plaintiff was injured or her health impaired was held insufficient); Jones v. Jones, 62 N. H. 463 (where the court required plaintiff to amend so as to set forth the mental or physical effect of the misconduct); Klein v. Klein, 34 N. Y. Super. Ct. 48.

It is sufficient to allege that the acts complained of caused grievous mental suffering without alleging an injurious effect on plaintiff's health (Barnes v. Barnes, 95 Cal. 171, 30 Pac. 298, 16 L. R. A. 660, the decision being based on a statute), or that the conduct complained of impaired or seriously threatened to impair libellant's health (Holyoke v. Holyoke, 78 Me. 404, 6 Atl. 827).

justify a divorce, must have further evil effects, in which case these must be alleged.[13]

(III) Allegation of Desertion or Abandonment. The complaint should aver the existence of the facts essential to constitute desertion or abandonment, as those offenses are defined in the particular state,[14] and accordingly it must appear that the absence has continued for the time prescribed by statute.[15]

6. Negativing Defenses — a. Provocation and Justification. In many states, usually because of statutes, the complaint must allege facts negativing misconduct on the part of complainant provoking or justifying the acts complained of.[16] However, the readiness of the complainant in a petition based on desertion to

13. Dunkel v. Dunkel, 11 Pa. Co. Ct. 297; Frazer v. Frazer, 32 Pittsb. Leg. J. (Pa.) 222 (both cases holding, under a statute authorizing a divorce for cruelty where the husband offers such indignities to the wife as to render her condition intolerable and force her to withdraw from his house and family, that a libel is insufficient which fails to allege that the wife was so forced to withdraw); Horne v. Horne, 1 Tenn. Ch. 259 (holding that an allegation that the husband's "treatment has been cruel in the extreme," without averring that it is such as "renders it unsafe or improper to cohabit with him and be under his dominion and control," as is required by statute to constitute cruelty, is insufficient).

14. Cass v. Cass, 31 N. J. Eq. 626; Todd v. Todd, 9 N. J. L. J. 342, both cases holding that a bill which alleges merely that a wife deserted her husband on a certain date and afterward persistently remained absent is insufficient for failure to show continuous, wilful, and obstinate desertion.

Voluntary absence.— It must appear that defendant's absence was voluntary. Hare v. Hare, 10 Tex. 355.

Wilfulness and malice.— If the statute provides that the desertion or absence must be "wilful and malicious," sufficient facts must be alleged to show that such was the character of the offense. Misconduct compelling plaintiff to leave.— Where a divorce is sought by a wife for desertion arising from her departure from the home of her husband because of his extreme cruelty, the facts constituting the cruelty should be specifically alleged. See Phelan v. Phelan, 12 Fla. 449), and that it continued up to the commencement of the suit (Kimball v. Kimball, 13 N. H. 222; Morey v. Morey, 82 Tex. 308, 17 S. W. 838).

C. 139, 13 S. E. 887. See infra, XII, B, 5, b.

Cruelty.— Allegations charging specific assaults have been held insufficient in the absence of a statement of facts explaining how they came to be made and under what circumstances they were inflicted. White v. White, 84 N. C. 340; Joyner v. Joyner, 59 N. C. 322, 82 Am. Dec. 421; Erwin v. Erwin, 57 N. C. 82. Kenemer v. Kenemer, 26 Ind. 330.

Desertion.— Where the statute describes the offense as absence "without reasonable cause" a failure to allege that fact is a fatal defect.

receive back and cohabit with her husband at all times during the period of absence need not be averred.[17]

b. Condonation and Connivance. The complaint need not allege that plaintiff has not condoned or connived at the misconduct complained of. Condonation and connivance are matters of defense to be set forth by defendant,[18] unless they affirmatively appear from the complaint.[19]

c. Laches and Limitations. Sufficient facts should be set forth in the complaint to show that the suit is brought within the time prescribed by statute,[20] or to explain an apparently inexcusable delay in applying for the divorce.[21]

7. Prayer For Relief. The complaint must contain a prayer for relief else a divorce will be denied.[22] If the prayer specifically seeks an absolute divorce, a limited divorce will not be granted, and vice versa,[23] unless the court is authorized to grant either an absolute or a limited divorce according to the facts alleged and proved.[24]

B. Answer — 1. In General. As a rule a defendant who contests the divorce is required to file a formal answer,[25] which should be a clear assignment of the causes why a divorce should not be granted.[26]

2. Time For Answering. The time for filing an answer is usually prescribed by statute.[27]

Texas.— See Hare v. Hare, 10 Tex. 355, holding that it is not sufficient to state that libellee unnecessarily and without sufficient cause abandoned libellant, but the circumstances attending the desertion must be particularly stated to show that it was without sufficient cause and was the offensive desertion contemplated by the statute.

3. Joinder of Defenses — a. Matters in Abatement and in Bar. Under the codes, matter of abatement and matter in bar may be set up as separate defenses in the same answer.[28]

b. Denials and Affirmative Defenses. In some states defendant may specifically or generally deny the alleged misconduct and insist in the same answer upon an independent, affirmative defense.[29]

4. Simple Defenses. The form, sufficiency, and effect of denials in an answer in divorce are commonly governed by the general rules of pleading as they exist in the different states.[30]

5. Affirmative Defenses — a. Invalidity of Marriage. If the complaint shows a marriage apparently valid, defendant cannot prove its invalidity without pleading it in defense.[31]

b. Justification. In the absence of statute, misconduct of plaintiff affording justification for the acts complained of must be alleged in the answer in order to be proved in defense.[32]

c. Condonation. By the weight of authority, condonation of the offense complained of as a cause for divorce must be alleged in the answer or it will not be available as a defense.[33]

d. Connivance. The defense of connivance, like condonation, must be specially pleaded else it cannot be proved.[34]

e. Recrimination. If defendant wishes to show that plaintiff has forfeited the right to relief by misconduct, he must set up that defense in his answer.[35]

30. Smith v. Smith, 19 Nebr. 706, 28 N. W. 296, holding that where a petition alleged that defendant had unlawfully gone through the ceremony of marriage with S and had since cohabited with S in a state of adultery, a denial in the answer that the marriage was unlawful and that defendant "has cohabited with said [S] in a state of adultery" is not a denial of the cohabitation.

A general denial is a good plea to a complaint based on adultery. Oades v. Oades, 6 Nebr. 304.

31. Vincent v. Vincent, 16 Daly (N. Y.) 534, 17 N. Y. Suppl. 497, holding that the defense that defendant had another wife living at the time of his alleged marriage to plaintiff must be pleaded to be available.

32. Moores v. Moores, 16 N. J. Eq. 275, holding that an answer alleging that the wife was compelled to leave her husband "because of his cruel conduct toward her," without specifying particular acts of cruelty or any facts from which cruelty could be inferred, is too vague to entitle respondent to introduce evidence in support of the charge. Discretion of court.— While the defense of condonation if not specially pleaded may not be taken advantage of as a matter of right, yet the court may, if there is reason to believe that such a defense exists, direct an inquiry to ascertain the fact, and refuse a divorce if it exists. f. Limitation of Actions. If it does not appear on the face of the complaint that the action is barred by the statute of limitations, that defense must be specially pleaded.[36]

C. Reply. The need of interposing a reply in an action for divorce is governed by the rules applicable in ordinary actions.[37]

D. Demurrer — 1. In General. Objection may be taken by way of demurrer to a complaint in a divorce suit as in any other case.[38]

2. Joinder With Plea. A plea and a demurrer cannot be put in at the same time.[39]

3. Grounds. The various grounds of demurrer are generally defined by statute.[40] It has been held that a complaint which is defective for lack of certainty is not demurrable.[41]

E. Cross Complaint or Counter-Claim[42] — 1. Right to Interpose. It was the practice of the ecclesiastical courts, where plaintiff himself had been guilty of misconduct constituting ground for divorce, to permit defendant to plead that misconduct, and if he himself was free from blame to obtain a divorce as if he were plaintiff.[43] This practice now prevails in both England and America either by force of statute[44] or by judicial determination adopting the ecclesiastical rule,[45] and defendant is permitted to seek and secure affirmative relief either by a pleading variously termed a cross complaint, cross bill, and cross petition,[46] or by the answer itself.[47]

2. Time of Filing. A cross complaint should be filed after the complaint has been answered.[48]

3. What May Be Included. Any misconduct which is a cause for either an absolute or a limited divorce may be set up as a counter-claim or alleged in a cross complaint as a ground for affirmative relief,[49] although it occurred after the institution of the suit.[50] So defendant may maintain a cross complaint for alimony and maintenance and the custody of the children, although she does not ask for a divorce.[51] A counter-claim to annul the marriage may not be interposed in an action for divorce, however;[52] nor may a cross bill to decide the title

In England, under the Matrimonial Causes Act of 1866 (29 Vict. c. 32), § 2, the court may in any suit instituted for dissolution of marriage, if the respondent opposes the relief sought on the ground, in case of suit by the husband, of his adultery, cruelty, or desertion, or, in case of suit by a wife, on the ground of her adultery or cruelty, give respondent the same relief as if he or she were petitioner. to land be interposed by defendant after a decree has been rendered in the divorce suit.[53]

4. Sufficiency of Allegations. The misconduct relied on for affirmative relief must be alleged specifically and with as much certainty as to time, place, and circumstance as in the case of a complaint.[54]

5. Prayer For Relief. A cross complaint or counter-claim should conclude with a prayer for relief, which should conform as near as may be to the requirements of a prayer for relief in an original complaint.[55]

F. Supplemental Pleadings — 1. In General. It is within the discretion of the court to permit either party to file a supplemental pleading. This power is usually conferred by statute,[56] although it would seem to exist without express statutory provision.[57] In passing on the application the court should consider all the facts and circumstances and grant or refuse it as may be proper.[58]

2. Supplemental Complaint — a. Necessity For Filing. Facts arising since the commencement of the suit and upon which the divorce sought is partly based cannot be brought before the court unless alleged in a supplemental bill.[59]

b. What May Be Alleged — (1) Facts Occurring Pendente Lite. Facts occurring after the filing of the original complaint may under certain conditions be alleged in a supplemental complaint.[60] However, plaintiff will not be permitted to set up in a supplemental bill subsequently occurring facts upon which a decree might be had without reference to the original bill.[61]

Louisiana.— Freudenstein v. Freudenstein, 110 La. 424, 34 So. 589, holding that relief cannot be granted on a supplemental bill alone or as the main demand.

Maryland.— Schwab v. Schwab, 96 Md. 592, 54 Atl. 653, 9 Am. St. Rep. 598, holding that in a suit for divorce for adultery a supplemental bill setting up as a ground for relief acts of adultery occurring subsequent to the institution of the suit and with persons not specified in the original bill is improperly allowed.

New Jersey.— Lutz v. Lutz, 52 N. J. Eq. 241, 28 Atl. 315, holding, however, that where condonation of an act of adultery is interposed as a defense, a supplemental petition may be filed charging defendant with acts of adultery subsequent to the alleged condonation and after the commencement of the action.

(II) Facts Inconsistent With Original Complaint. The supplemental bill being merely an addition to the original bill the two must be consistent.[62]

3. Supplemental Answer. Misconduct of plaintiff may be set up by defendant in recrimination by means of a supplemental answer, where it occurred after the original answer was filed[63] or was not discovered before that event.[64] So condonation of the offense complained of, occurring after the commencement of the suit, may be pleaded in a supplemental answer.[65]

G. Amendments — 1. In General. Amendments to pleadings in divorce suits are permissible to the same extent and under like restrictions as in other suits.[66] Ordinarily they are not allowable as a matter of right, but rest in the bill is received without objection, it will be treated as part of the case, and facts occurring subsequent to the filing of the original bill but prior to the supplemental bill will be considered as supporting plaintiff's case. Feigley v. Feigley, 7 Md. 537, 61 Am. Dec. 375.

sound discretion of the court;[67] and the court has the power not only to pass upon an application voluntarily made but also of its own motion to compel a defendant to interpose a valid defense if he has one.[68]

2. Application to Amend — a. Time of Making. An amendment may be allowed in a proper case at any time before final decree so as to present the entire controversy and enable the court to do exact justice and finally and fully determine the rights of the parties.[69]

b. To Whom Made. The application to amend must be made to the court.[70]

3. When Allowed — a. In General. Amendments are properly allowed for the purpose of making the essential allegations of the pleading more definite and certain,[71] or to insert an essential allegation which has been omitted[72] or to include allegations of misconduct committed subsequent to the commencement of the suit.[73]

b. Changing or Enlarging Cause of Action. Plaintiff cannot amend so as to change the action to one of nullity,[74] or so as to change an action for separation

An amended complaint setting up a new ground for divorce should be accompanied by the affidavit. Holloman v. Holloman, 127 N. C. 15, 37 S. E. 68.

A substantial compliance with the statute is sufficient. Eastes v. Eastes, 79 Ind. 363; Stewart v. Stewart, 28 Ind. App. 378, 62 N. E. 1023 (holding that if the petition, itself sworn to by petitioner before the clerk, contains the matters required to be stated in the affidavit, it is a sufficient compliance with the statute); Moore v. Moore, 130 N. Bill as matter of right.— Neither party is entitled as a matter of course to a bill of uncertainty as to the time and place of the commission of an act of adultery, and the name of the particeps criminis is not given.[92]

L. Impertinent Allegations. Nothing will be considered impertinent in a pleading which can in any event be material to the pleader, either as a cause of action or ground of defense or in relation to matters incidentally involved in the suit.[93]

M. Issues, Proof, and Variance — 1. CONFINEMENT TO ISSUES. Generally speaking the parties to a divorce suit, as in other cases, are confined to the issues made by the pleadings.[94]

Affidavit for bill.— Where the complaint is indefinite as to the time and place of the misconduct and the charges are denied by verified answer, a motion for a bill of particulars will be granted on the affidavit of defendant's attorney. Kirkland v. Kirkland, 39 Misc. (N. Y.) 423, 80 N. Y. Suppl. 21. Under some circumstances, however, the affidavit must be made by defendant personally. De Carrillo v. Carrillo, 53 Hun (N. Suppl. 243; Hartopp v. Hartopp, 71 L. J. P. & Adm. 78, 87 L. T. Rep. N. S. 188, holding that under an order to give further and better particulars of the dates and places when and where alleged acts of adultery extending over ten months were committed, petitioner must give the best particulars which he can extract from the witnesses upon whom he relies to prove his case, and that it is not a sufficient compliance with such an order to allege generally that respondent and co-respondent were constantly meeting, and were in respondent's bedroom together, and that they were frequently out riding and driving alone together, from which the court will be asked to infer that they committed adultery.

Particulars as to time.—However, the court is not warranted in requiring complainant to specify the precise time, if the place is definitely alleged and the name of the co-respondent is given. Krauss v. Krauss, 73 N. Y. App. Div. 509, 77 N. Y. Suppl. 203; Ketcham v. Ketcham, 32 N. Y. App. Div. 26, 52 N. Y. Suppl. 961 (holding that where a particular act of adultery is definitely alleged, and other acts "at various other times, at certain other places to defendant unknown," a motion for a bill of particulars as to the latter allegation should not be granted in such form as to exclude evidence of general confession or general course of conduct); Carpenter v. Carpenter, 17 N. Y. Suppl. 195 (holding that under an allegation that defendant was living "in adulterous intercourse" with a woman, plaintiff should not be required to furnish a bill of particulars); De Carrillo v. Carrillo, 53 Hun (N. Y.) 359, 6 N. Y. Suppl. 305, 17 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 220; Oviatt v. Oviatt, 14 Misc. (N. Y.) 127, 35 N. Y. Suppl. 654.

93. Anonymous, 15 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 311; Hopper v. Hopper, 11 Paige (N. In a suit based on adultery, any collateral fact may be alleged the admission of which by defendant would be material either in establishing the general allegations of the bill or in determining the nature of the relief to which plaintiff may be entitled. Casey v. Casey, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 59. However, charges of cruelty in the petition have been stricken out as impertinent. Pullen v. Pullen, (N. J. Ch. 1885) 1 Atl. 896; Monroy v. Monroy, 1 Edw. (N. Y.) 382.

In an action for separation based on cruelty the bill should not contain charges of adultery. Snover v. Snover, 10 N. J. Eq. 261; Klein v. Klein, 34 N. Y. Super. Ct. 48, holding that allegations of scandalous, indecent, and licentious acts committed with women other than plaintiff, unaccompanied with averments that such acts either led plaintiff to apprehend personal injury to herself or gave her pain or affected her body, mind, health, or feelings, are immaterial and irrelevant in a complaint for divorce from bed and board. However, it is not impertinent to allege acts of violence and misconduct on the part of defendant toward complainant's children and other members of his family. Perry v. Perry, 1 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 516.

94. Morrell v. Morrell, 3 Barb. (N. Y.) 236; Müller v. Müller, 6 Pa. Dist. 176, 18 Pa. Co. Ct. 400, holding that irrelevant and scandalous testimony not within the pleadings should be excluded, although exhibiting abundant grounds for divorce.

Legitimacy of child.— N. Y. Gen. Rules Prac. No. 75, requiring a husband who attempts to question the legitimacy of any of his wife's children to distinctly allege in his complaint that they are or that he believes them to be illegitimate, prevents the testing of the legitimacy of a child born before the marriage unless the question is presented by the complaint, notwithstanding that Code Civ. Proc. § 1760, permits the determination, as one of the issues in the case, of the legitimacy of a child born after the offense charged. Tully v. Tully, 28 Misc. (N. Y.) 54, 59 N. Y. Suppl. 818.

2. Necessity of Proof of Allegations. The complainant in a divorce case must ordinarily prove the essential allegations of his complaint.[95]

3. Variance — a. In General. It is a general rule in divorce as in all other cases that the allegations contained in the pleadings and the proof on the trial should correspond.[96]

b. As to Adultery. The essential allegations of the complaint as to the time and place of the commission of the adultery complained of and as to the person with whom it was committed should ordinarily be proved as laid.[97]

c. As to Cruelty. Where cruelty is alleged as a ground for divorce, the particular acts relied on in the complaint to establish it must be substantially proved as alleged.[98]

95. Bennett v. Bennett, 28 Cal. 599 (holding that plaintiff must prove residence within the state for the statutory period); Turner v. Turner, 3 Me. 398; Arborgast v. Arborgast, 8 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 297.

The marriage of the parties must be proved (Schmidt v. Schmidt, 29 N. J. Eq. 496; Belyew v. Belyew, (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 32 S. W. 40) if denied in the answer (Fox v. Fox, 25 Cal. 587; Hill v. Hill, 2 Mass. 150).

Where defendant files a cross petition for divorce, that relief may be granted him solely on evidence introduced by plaintiff, however. Glasscock v. Glasscock, 94 Ind. 163.

96. Colorado.— Cairnes v. Cairnes, 29 Colo. 260, 68 Pac. 233, 93 Am. St. Rep. 55; Rosenfeld v. Rosenfeld, 21 Colo. 16, 40 Pac. 49.

Connecticut.— Trubee v. Trubee, 41 Conn. 36, holding that where a petition alleges misconduct of defendant destroying petitioner's happiness and defeating the purposes of the marriage adultery cannot be proved.

New Jersey.— Zule v. Zule, 1 N. J. Eq. 96, holding that where a bill alleges cruelty as a ground of divorce and it appears that defendant had a former wife living at the time of his marriage with plaintiff, her request for a judgment of nullity must be refused.

New York.— Anonymous, 17 Abb. Pr. 48.

North Carolina.— Foy v. Foy, 35 N. C. 90, holding that since a complaint in a divorce case must be sworn to, it is more emphatically required in such cases than in others that the allegations and proof should correspond.

Pennsylvania.— Kershaw v. Kershaw, 5 Pa. Dist. 551.

See 17 Cent Dig. tit. "Divorce," § 351.

An allegation of the marriage of the parties authorizes the admission of proof of a common-law marriage, however. Cuneo v. De Cuneo, 24 Tex. Civ. App. 436, 59 S. W. 284.

97. Prince v. Prince, 25 N. J. Eq. 310; Scheffling v. Scheffling, 44 N. J. Eq. 438, 15 Atl. 577; Miller v. Miller, 20 N. J. Eq. 216, the last two cases holding that the offense must be shown to have been committed so near the time alleged that the variance shall not operate to the prejudice of defendant. See, however, XIII, B, 6, a, (II), (B), note 27.

Adultery after filing of bill.— The acts of adultery must be proved to have occurred before the filing of a bill for divorce or it will not be granted. Ferrier v. Ferrier, 4 Edw. (N. Y.) 296.

Where a single act of adultery is relied on and the particular time is specified in the complaint, the proof should be confined to the precise time of the offense as so specified. Bennett v. Bennett, 24 Mich. 482; Farnsworth v. Farnsworth, 8 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 171.

Place.— It has been held that if the place is particularly specified, proof of adultery at another place is insufficient. Adams v. Adams, 20 N. H. 299, 51 Am. Dec. 219; Prince v. Prince, 25 N. J. Eq. 310. Contra, Washburn v. Washburn, 8 Mass. 131.

Particeps criminis.— If adultery is alleged with a particular person, proof of adultery with any other person is not sufficient. Washburn v. Washburn, 5 N. H. 195; Prince v. Prince, 25 N. J. Eq. 310; Miller v. Miller, 20 N. J. Eq. 216; Mills v. Mills, 18 N. J. Eq. 444; Germond v. Germond, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 347, 10 Am. Dec. 335. If, however, it is alleged to have been committed with persons unknown to complainant, proof of adultery with any persons identified in the evidence may be permitted (Adams v. Adams, 20 N. H. 299, 51 Am. Dec. 219), provided that they were not known to complainant (Miller v. Miller, supra; Mills v. Mills, supra).

98. David v. David, 27 Ala. 222; Cole v. Cole, 23 Iowa 433; Westphal v. Westphal, 81 Minn. 242, 83 N. W. 988; Segelbaum v. Segelbaum, 39 Minn. 258, 39 N. W. 492, all holding that where particular acts of violence are charged, they must be substantially proved, although non-essential circumstances need not be proved precisely as set forth.

Proof of different acts.— The proof should be limited to the particular acts of cruelty relied upon as constituting a ground for divorce (Winterburg v. Winterburg, 52 Kan. 406, 34 Pac. 971; Ford v. Ford, 104 Mass. 198; Chadwick v. Chadwick, 52 N. J. Eq. 539, 28 Atl. 1051; McQueen v. McQueen, 82 N. C. 471; Thorp v. Thorp, Wright 763; Sites v. Sites, 9 Pa. Dist. 192, 23 Pa. Co. Ct. 439), although the court may take into account other acts of cruelty explanatory of the relations of the parties and tending to corroborate the specific acts alleged. See infra, XIII, B, 6, b, (II).

XIII. EVIDENCE.[99]

A. Burden of Proof and Presumptions. The general rules of law concerning the burden of proof and presumptions are applicable in suits for divorce.[1] Plaintiff bears the burden of establishing the allegations of the complaint.[2] Thus if he asserts it as a ground for divorce he must prove adultery,[3] fraud in concealing antenuptial pregnancy,[4] desertion,[5] habitual drunkenness,[6] or the existence of a prior marriage between defendant and a third person.[7] Defendant on

Eq. 322, 47 Atl. 183 (both cases holding that plaintiff must prove the existence of the misconduct complained of); Linden v. Linden, 36 Barb. (N. Y.) 61, 63 (where the court said: "Nothing is to be taken in favor of the applicant by presumption or intendment, as to the facts, even in the case of a default in answering, or at the hearing").

3. Williams v. Williams, 67 Tex. 198, 2 S. W. 823; Bradish v. Bliss, 35 Vt. 326; N. v. N., 9 Jur. N. S. 1203, 9 L. T. Rep. N. S. 265, 3 Swab. & Tr. 234.

Evidence in equipoise.—Where the facts relied on to establish adultery may as well import innocence as guilt, they must be held to import innocence. Carter v. Carter, 62 Ill. 439; Pollock v. Pollock, 71 N. Y. 137; Poillon v. Poillon, 78 N. Y. App. Div. 127, 79 N. Y. Suppl. 545; Steffens v. Steffens, 16 Daly (N. Y.) 363, 11 N. Y. Suppl. 424; Conway v. Conway, 37 Misc. (N. Y.) 414, 75 N. Y. Suppl. 760; Pfeiffer v. Pfeiffer, 9 N. Y. Suppl. 28; Donnelly v. Donnelly, 63 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 481. See infra, note 42.

Presumption of continuance of illicit relation.— Persons who have been cohabiting illicitly are presumed to continue their criminal intercourse so long as they live under the same roof (Smith v. Smith, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 432, 27 Am. Dec. 75), but the existence of an adulterous relation between a wife and a man other than her husband prior to the marriage raises no presumption of its continuance subsequent to the marriage (Razor v. Razor, 42 Ill. App. 504). See infra, XIII, C, 4, note 68.

4. McCulloch v. McCulloch, 69 Tex. 682, 7 S. W. 593, 5 Am. St. Rep. 96.

Presumption of fatherhood.—Where a wife gives birth to a fully developed child three and a half months after marriage, the presumption is that the husband is the father. McCullough v. McCullough, 69 Tex. 682, 7 S. W. 593, 5 Am. St. Rep. 96. This presumption is rebuttable however. Harrell v. Harrell, (Tex. Civ. App. 1897) 42 S. W. 1040. See also infra, XIII, C, 6, a, (II), (C).

5. Rogers v. Rogers, 18 N. J. Eq. 445 (holding that the circumstances and manner of the desertion must be shown, so that the court may determine whether defendant intended to abandon plaintiff and when such abandonment commenced); Hannigan v. Hannigan, 14 York Leg. Rec. 18; Smith v. Smith, 28 L. J. P. & M. 27, 7 Wkly. Rep. 382, 1 Swab. & Tr. 359.

Wilfulness and obstinacy.— If the wife's desertion under the statute must be wilful and obstinate, the burden is on the husband to show both wilfulness and obstinacy. Wood v. Wood, 63 N. J. Eq. 688, 53 Atl. 51; Loux v. Loux, 57 N. J. Eq. 561, 41 Atl. 358; Tracey v. Tracey, (N. J. Ch. 1899) 43 Atl. 713; Payne v. Payne, (N. J. Ch. 1894) 28 Atl. 449; Ogilvie v. Ogilvie, 37 Oreg. 171, 61 Pac. 627.

Consent of complainant.— A husband must prove by the weight of evidence that his wife separated herself from him by her own wilful act against his wishes. Wood v. Wood, 63 N. J. Eq. 688, 53 Atl. 51; Grant v. Grant, 36 N. J. Eq. 502; Sergent v. Sergent, 33 N. J. Eq. 204; Taylor v. Taylor, 28 N. J. Eq. 207; Stone v. Stone, 25 N. J. Eq. Eq. 445; Bowlby v. Bowlby, 25 N. J. Eq. 406; Jennings v. Jennings, 13 N. J. Eq. 38.

Misconduct of defendant.— Where it is alleged that complainant was compelled to separate from her husband because of his gross cruelty and that such misconduct constitutes desertion, the burden of proof is on her to show that fact. Seeley v. Seeley, 64 N. J. Eq. 1, 53 Atl. 387; Herold v. Herold, 47 N. J. Eq. 210, 20 Atl. 375, 9 L. R. A. 696; Starkey v. Starkey, 21 N. J. Eq. 135; Frush v. Frush, (N. J. Ch. 1890) 20 Atl. 261.

6. McCraw v. McCraw, 171 Mass. 146, 50 N. E. 526.

Presumption of continuance.— When gross and confirmed habits of intoxication are shown before separation of the spouses, they are presumed to continue, in the absence of evidence to the contrary. McCraw v. McCraw, 171 Mass. 146, 50 N. E. 526.

7. Harris v. Harris, 8 Ill. App. 57; Stymiest v. Stymiest, 16 Pa. Co. Ct. 236, both cases holding that when a prior marriage between one of the spouses and a third person is shown, it does not overcome the presumption of the validity of the later marriage, in the absence of evidence that the former spouse was then alive. And although it be shown that at the time of the second marriage the former spouse was living, the presumption of the validity of that marriage is not overcome, in the absence of evidence that the former spouses had not been divorced. Harris v. Harris, supra. See also supra, VIII, A, note 68. See, generally, DEATH, 13 Cyc. 295 et seq.; MARRIAGE.

the other hand bears the burden of establishing affirmative defenses set up in the answer. Thus the burden is ordinarily on him to show justification for his apparent misconduct;[8] and if connivance[9] or condonation[10] is set up as a defense, defendant must prove it.

B. Admissibility — 1. Admissions and Confessions. An admission or confession of guilt by defendant, while not alone sufficient to warrant a decree,[11] is admissible in connection with other evidence,[12] unless a statute forbids.[13]

2. Character and Reputation. Unless directly put in issue evidence is not

8. Morrison v. Morrison, 20 Cal. 431; Orr v. Orr, 8 Bush (Ky.) 156; Mendenhall v. Mendenhall, 12 Pa. Super. Ct. 290; Klopfer's Appeal, 1 Mona. (Pa.) 81, all holding that the burden is not on a plaintiff who seeks a divorce for desertion to show that no cause for the desertion existed. Contra, Besch v. Besch, 27 Tex. 390.

Exceptions.— However, where the alleged desertion consists of defendant's misconduct compelling plaintiff to separate from him, the burden is on plaintiff to show that her separation was compelled by the misconduct (see supra, note 5), and a husband who seeks a divorce because his wife refused to remove with him from one state to another must show that her refusal was unreasonable and that his conduct was such that it would be safe for her to live with him (Gleason v. Gleason, 4 Wis. 64).

9. Farace v. Farace, 1 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 419, 61 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 61.

In some states plaintiff is required to show absence of connivance where default is made by defendant. Ivison v. Ivison, 29 Misc. (N. Y.) 240, 61 N. Y. Suppl. 118; Hanks v. Hanks, 3 Edw. (N. Y.) 469. See also Simmons v. Simmons, 47 Mich. 253, 645, 10 N. W. 360; Emmons v. Emmons, Walk. (Mich.) 532. However, N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 1757, requiring plaintiff to prove the material allegations of the complaint in case defendant makes default, and rule 73 of the supreme court, providing that when the action is based on adultery, "unless it is averred in the complaint that the adultery charged was committed without the consent, connivance, privity, or procurement of the plaintiff, and that plaintiff has not voluntarily cohabited with defendant since the discovery thereof, judgment shall not be rendered for the relief demanded until plaintiff proves such facts by affidavit," do not require plaintiff, where defendant contests the action, to furnish proof of such facts when not alleged in the complaint. Lowenthal v. Lowenthal, 157 N. Y. 236, 51 N. E. 995; McCarthy v. McCarthy, 143 N. Y. 235, 38 N. E. 288.

10. Graham v. Graham, 50 N. J. Eq. 701, 25 Atl. 358; Merrill v. Merrill, 41 N. Y. App. Div. 347, 58 N. Y. Suppl. 503.

Presumption from cohabitation.—Condonation of an offense is presumed from a continuance of marital cohabitation subsequent to its commission with full knowledge of it (Burns v. Burns, 60 Ind. 259. See supra, VIII, F, 3, a), and accordingly the burden may be shifted to plaintiff to show that the circumstances were such that the cohabitation did not constitute condonation (Stevens v. Stevens, 14 N. J. Eq. 374; Kane v. Kane, 3 Edw. (N. Y.) 389). Plaintiff's knowledge of defendant's guilt will not be presumed but must be proved by defendant. Odom v. Odom, 36 Ga. 286. The presumption of condonation arising from cohabitation may be rebutted by the accompanying circumstances (Whispell v. Whispell, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 217), and will not be enforced against the wife to the same extent as against the husband (Phillips v. Phillips, 1 Ill. App. 245; Denison v. Denison, 4 Wash. 705, 30 Pac. 1100. See supra, VIII, F, 2, 3).

Presumption from lapse of time.— Condonation of cruelty may be presumed from lapse of time. Hitchins v. Hitchins, 140 Ill. 326, 29 N. E. 888 [affirming 41 Ill. App. 82]; Smith v. Smith, 43 N. H. 234; Fellows v. Fellows, 8 N. H. 160. Lapse of time as laches see supra, VIII, M, 2.

12. Morehouse v. Morehouse, 70 Conn. 420, 39 Atl. 516; Johns v. Johns, 29 Ga. 718.

Admission by letter.— Where divorce is resisted because of petitioner's adultery, a letter written by him confessing the commission thereof, although not signed or delivered to any person, is admissible. Lenning v. Lenning, 176 Ill. 180, 52 N. E. 46.

Involuntary confessions.— A confession is not admissible unless it is the voluntary act of the party making it. Perkins v. Perkins, 59 N. J. Eq. 515, 46 Atl. 173 (where the husband procured by threats his wife's signature to a confession of adultery); Summerbell v. Summerbell, 37 N. J. Eq. 603; Derby v. Derby, 21 N. J. Eq. 36; Callender v. Callender, 53 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 364.

13. King v. King, 28 Ala. 315; Evans v. Evans, 41 Cal. 103; Burke v. Burke, 44 Kan. 307, 24 Pac. 466, 21 Am. St. Rep. 283, all holding that a statute declaring that no divorce can be granted on the confession of either of the parties does not preclude the admissibility of such a confession but merely prevents a divorce where no other evidence is produced. See, however, Toole v. Toole, 112 N. C. 152, 16 S. E. 912, 34 Am. St. Rep. 479; Steele v. Steele, 104 N. C. 631, 10 S. E. 707; Perkins v. Perkins, 88 N. C. 41; Bascom v. Bascom, Wright (Ohio) 632; Brainard v. Brainard, Wright (Ohio) 354; Endick v. Endick, 61 Tex. 559; Stafford v. Stafford, 41 Tex. 111; Hanna v. Hanna, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 51, 21 S. W. 720; Hampton v. Hampton, 87 Va. 148, 12 S. E. 340; Cralle v. Cralle, 79 Va. 182, all holding that confessions are not admissible to show the general character[14] or the general reputation[15] of either party to a divorce suit. Where adultery is charged, however, evidence of reputation is by the weight of authority admissible to prove the good character of defendant,[16] although it is not admissible as substantive proof of adultery.[17]

3. INDECENCY. The mere indecency of disclosures is not sufficient for the exclusion of evidence which is relevant and material and necessary for the purposes of the suit.[18]

4. OPINIONS. The opinions or conclusions of witnesses as to the facts in issue are not generally admissible in divorce cases.[19] admissible under a statute providing that a decree of divorce shall be rendered upon full and satisfactory evidence "independent of the confession or admission of either party."

14. Humphrey v. Humphrey, 7 Conn. 116; Berdell v. Berdell, 80 Ill. 604; Sullivan v. Sullivan, 92 Me. 84, 42 Atl. 230, all holding that unless the general character of a party is directly put in issue, evidence of his general character is inadmissible, whether offered to rebut positive or presumptive testimony. However, the alleged grounds for divorce may be of such a nature as to bear directly upon his character, such for instance as a charge of cruelty consisting of a forced, vulgar, and excessive exercise of marital rights, in which case he may take the initiative and prove good character. Bu Bose v. Du Bose, 75 Ga. 753. See also cases cited infra, note 16.

15. Evans v. Evans, 93 Ky. 510, 20 S. W. 605, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 628; Dwyer v. Dwyer, 2 Mo. App. 17, both cases holding that the general reputation of either party for good or bad temper cannot be shown.

General reputation for morality in the neighborhood cannot be proved, where no attack has been made on the general character of the party. Breedlove v. Breedlove, 27 Ind. App. 560, 61 N. E. 797.

General reputation as to particular vices which are directly in issue is admissible. Graft v. Graft, 76 Ind. 136 (holding that where alleged cruelty consists of the husband's false accusation against his wife's chastity, she may show her good character); O'Bryan v. O'Bryan, 13 Mo. 16, 53 Am. Dec. 128; Miller v. Miller, 14 Mo. App. 418. But reputation for general good character is not admissible to rebut an attack upon the character in a particular respect. Berdell v. Berdell, 80 Ill. 604. And where the issue is whether the libellee has since the marriage contracted a habit of intoxication, evidence of her reputation for sobriety before marriage is not admissible. Sullivan v. Sullivan, 92 Me. 84, 42 Atl. 230.

16. Hilker v. Hilker, 153 Ind. 425, 55 N. E. 81 (holding that where evidence of particular acts of indiscretion by a wife is introduced, she may give evidence of her general reputation and character for chastity in the neighborhood where she resides); O'Bryan v. O'Bryan, 13 Mo. 16, 53 Am. Dec. 128 (where the rule is maintained on the ground that a charge of adultery brings in issue defendant's good character and reputation and on the further ground that such a charge is in its nature criminal and that such evidence should be admitted as in criminal cases); Warner v. Warner, 69 N. H. 137, 44 Atl. 908; Harper v. Harper, Wright (Ohio) 283 (holding that plaintiff's general reputation for chastity may be inquired into, but not as to specific acts). Contra, Humphrey v. Humphrey, 7 Conn. 116; Yallaly v. Yallaly, 39 Mo. 490.

Reputation of co-respondent.—It is not error to exclude evidence of the good reputation for chastity of the alleged particeps criminis, where her general reputation has not been put in issue and she is neither a party to nor a witness in the case. Cowan v. Cowan, 16 Colo. 335, 26 Pac. 934.

Michigan.— Marble v. Marble, 36 Mich. 386, holding that such evidence is subsidiary, subordinate, and incidental to the substantive proof, and serves merely to explain the conduct of the parties toward each other.

New Hampshire.— Washburn v. Washburn, 5 N. H. 195.

New Jersey.— Miller v. Miller, 20 N. J. Eq. 216.

See 17 Cent. Dig. tit. "Divorce," § 372.

18. Abernathy v. Abernathy, 8 Fla. 243 (holding, however, that the courts should require the examination of witnesses to be conducted in a spirit of delicacy, avoiding vulgar and obscene language); Melvin v. Melvin, 58 N. H. 569, 42 Am. Rep. 605.

19. Leaning v. Leaning, 25 N. J. Eq. 241; Richards v. Richards, 37 Pa. St. 225; Sheffield v. Sheffield, 3 Tex. 79. Compare Cameron v. State, 14 Ala. 546, 48 Am. Dec. 111; Myers v. Myers, 83 Va. 806, 6 S. E. 630.

Adultery.— The rule is the same in actions based on adultery. Soper v. Soper, 29 Mich. 305; Trevino v. Trevino, 54 Tex. 261. If, however, the conclusion of the witness is warranted by the facts as testified to by him, it may be admitted. Leary v. Leary, 18 Ga. 696 (where a witness was allowed to testify to his opinion in respect to solicitude manifested by a wife at the sick-bed of a man not her husband); Carter v. Carter, 152 Ill. 434, 28 N. E. 948, 38 N. E. 669; Bizer v. Bizer, 110 Iowa 248, 81 N. W. 465.

5. Evidence of Residence. The residence of plaintiff should be proved in the same manner as other essential facts.[20]

6. Evidence of Particular Offenses — a. Adultery — (i) In General. Adultery may be established not only by direct evidence of the commission of the offense,[21] but also by indirect or circumstantial evidence.[22] Whatsoever the character of the evidence offered, its admissibility is ordinarily governed by the rules of evidence applied in civil cases generally.[23]

(ii) Circumstantial Evidence — (a) In General. Indirect or circumstantial evidence is admissible to prove adultery.[24] The facts and circumstances, to be admissible in evidence, must be relevant and material, and such as may produce a reasonable inference that the offense has been committed.[25]

(b) Disposition and Opportunity. An adulterous disposition and an opportunity to commit the offense are in combination important factors in proving adultery by circumstantial evidence.[26] These facts may be proved by either direct or circumstantial evidence; and any circumstance is therefore admissible that tends to show a disposition on the part of the accused to commit adultery[27]

In ecclesiastical practice in divorce cases the rule was otherwise. Atkinson v. Atkinson, 2 Add. Eccl. 484, 2 Eng. Eccl. 387; Elwes v. Elwes, 1 Hagg. Const. 269, 4 Eng. Eccl. 401; Crewe v. Crewe, 3 Hagg. Eccl. 123, 128, 5 Eng. Eccl. 45, where Lord Stowell said: "The court, though it cannot rely on the opinion of the witnesses, has a right to know their impression and belief, whether the crime was committed or not; and it is material that the examiner should understand that it is necessary the witnesses should be required to give this information."

20. Sewall v. Sewall, 122 Mass. 156, 23 Am. Rep. 299 (where a voting list of a town, without evidence that a person's name was placed thereon at his request, and a tax-list with a memorandum of "paid" against his name, were held to be inadmissible in his favor to show that his domicile was in that town); Townsend v. Townsend, 2 R. Interest in alleged paramour's welfare.— Evidence of defendant's unusual interest in the welfare of the alleged paramour is admissible. Leary v. Leary, 18 Ga. 696; Toole v. Toole, 112 N. C. 152, 16 S. E. 912, 34 Am. St. Rep. 439, holding that evidence that a wife requested to be allowed to pay the costs of a criminal prosecution against her alleged paramour is competent as showing her interest in and association with him.

Alienation of affections.— Evidence tending to show an alienation of the affections of the husband or wife is admissible in connection with other evidence as affording an inference of adultery. Richardson v. Richardson, 4 Port. (Ala.) 467, 30 Am. Dec. 538; Mulock v. Mulock, 1 Edw. (N. Y.) 14; Saunders v. Saunders, 10 Jur. 143.

Non-support.— Evidence that a husband had contributed nothing to the support of his wife is admissible as tending to show his unfaithfulness to his marriage vows. Carpenter v. Carpenter, 9 N. Y. Suppl. 583.

25. Kilburn v. Kilburn, 89 Cal. 46, 26 Pac. 636, 23 Am. St. Rep. 447; Franey v. Franey, 28 N. Y. App. Div. 50, 50 N. Y. Suppl. 918 (holding that evidence that an accused wife was indiscreet in her language and under the influence of intoxicants at her home in the presence of the husband's friends, who had assembled at his request, is inadmissible); Lyon v. Lyon, 62 Barb. (N. Y.) 138; Beadleston v. Beadleston, 2 N. Y. Suppl. 809 (holding that evidence that a person with whom no adultery was attempted to be shown was discovered on one occasion in defendant's room while she was sick, using improper language and conducting himself in an improper manner, is not admissible).

26. McClung v. McClung, 40 Mich. 493, holding that it may be presumed that licentious persons of opposite sexes, consorting together and holding loose views of the marriage relation, commit such offenses as they have opportunity to commit.

27. Woodrick v. Woodrick, 141 N. Y. 457, 36 N. E. 395 (holding that salacious verses in the wife's handwriting are admissible against her); Carpenter v. Carpenter, 9 N. Y. Suppl. 583; Toole v. Toole, 109 N. C. 615, 14 S. E. 57.

Antenuptial incontinence.— Where the act is charged to have been committed with the same person with whom there was illicit connection prior to the marriage, the anterior connection may be shown to throw light on defendant's subsequent conduct. Bickley v. Bickley, 136 Ala. 548, 34 So. 946; and an opportunity created by the parties themselves or otherwise for the commission of the offense.[28]

b. Cruelty — (i) In General. Subject to the ordinary rules of evidence,[29] cruelty may be proved by either direct[30] or circumstantial[31] evidence. And subject to the same limitations defendant may in turn adduce any evidence that tends to rebut the charges made.[32]

(ii) Collateral Conduct. While a divorce cannot be granted for particular acts of cruelty which are not pleaded,[33] yet evidence of acts not alleged may be admitted in explanation, corroboration, or aggravation of those specifically charged,[34] and the collateral acts may be shown for this purpose, although they

Disposition of alleged paramour.—Evidence of the adulterous intent of the alleged paramour is not admissible in the absence of evidence connecting defendant with the same intent. Pond v. Pond, 132 Mass. 219 (where evidence that the alleged paramour went to a hotel with defendant and asked for connecting rooms was excluded, in the absence of evidence that they went to the hotel to commit adultery and that such request was made in defendant's presence); B. v. B., 10 Pa. Co. Ct. 558.

Acts of improper familiarity between defendant and the persons named as co-respondents may be shown. Brooks v. Brooks, 145 Mass. 574, 14 N. E. 777, 1 Am. St. Rep. 485; Thayer v. Thayer, 101 Mass. 111, 100 Am. Dec. 110; Mott v. Mott, 3 N. Y. App. Div. 532, 38 N. Y. Suppl. 261; Goldie v. Goldie, 39 Misc. (N. Y.) 389, 75 N. Y. Suppl. 357; Smith v. Smith, 13 N. Y. Suppl. 817; Caton v. Caton, 13 Jur. 431; Alexander v. Alexander, 6 Jur. N. S. 56, 2 Swab. & Tr. 95, 8 Wkly. Rep. 452.

Misconduct with another than alleged paramour.— Acts of indiscretion or of adultery committed with one not named as co-respondent are not admissible to prove the adultery charged in the complaint. Stevens v. Stevens, 54 Hun (N. Y.) 490, 8 N. Y. Suppl. 47; Goldie v. Goldie, 39 Misc. (N. Y.) 389, 75 N. Y. Suppl. 357; Davis v. Davis, 4 Misc. (N. Y.) 454, 24 N. Y. Suppl. 1151 [affirmed in 150 N. Y. 571, 44 N. E. 1123]; Beadleston v. Beadleston, 2 N. Y. Suppl. 809. And see McDermott v. State, 13 Ohio St. 332, 334, 82 Am. Dec. 444 (where it is said: "It by no means follows, that a desire to have sexual intercourse with one person, tends, legitimately, to prove a willingness to have like intercourse with another and different person. Indeed, the reverse is much the most probable"); Realf v. Realf, 77 Pa. St. 31. See, however, Derby v. Derby, 21 N. J. Eq. 36, 60 (where evidence of the husband's solicitation of a woman not named in the petition was admitted for the purpose of showing his disposition to be faithless to his marriage vows); Carpenter v. Carpenter, 9 N. Y. Suppl. 583 (where evidence of defendant's visits to other houses of ill fame than those in which the adultery was charged to have been committed, and of his lewd conduct on those occasions, was admitted as bearing on the probability of the evidence in support of the specific charges).

Pleading and proof.— Evidence of adulterous intercourse between the parties prior to the time set forth in the pleadings (Smith v. Smith, 13 N. Y. Suppl. 817; Lockyer v. Lockyer, 1 Edm. Sel. Cas. (N. Y.) 107) or subsequent thereto (Thayer v. Thayer, 101 Mass. 111, 100 Am. Dec. 110; Smith v. Smith, supra; Wales v. Wales, [1900] P. 63, 69 L. J. P. & Adm. 34. Contra, Foval v. Foval, 39 Ill. App. 644) is competent. It has been held, however, that evidence of improper intimacy with other men and at other times and places than those named in the bill of particulars is inadmissible. Realf v. Realf, 77 Pa. St. 31. See also XII, M, 3, b.

28. Mayer v. Mayer, 21 N. J. Eq. 246; Berckmans v. Berckmans, 16 N. J. Eq. 122; Freeman v. Freeman, 31 Wis. 235.

Eccl. 106; Jackson v. Jackson, 8 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 499, all holding that evidence that bruises and marks of violence were found on the body of complainant after she claimed to have received blows from her husband is competent in confirmation of her testimony. See, however, Edmond's Appeal, 57 Pa. St. 232.

32. Carter v. Carter, 152 Ill. 434, 28 N. E. 948, 38 N. E. 669 [affirming 37 Ill. App. 219], holding that where a wife charges that during a certain time she was in continued ill health as the result of cruelty, evidence that during that time she used to rise at six, go rowing with a male companion, and spend the day picknicking with him, is admissible to disprove the charge, although no improper relation between her and her companion is alleged.

Apprehension of danger.—Where the basis of the suit is misconduct of defendant because of which plaintiff apprehends bodily harm, any evidence is admissible that tends to show that such apprehension does not actually exist. Johns v. Johns, 29 Ga. 718; Griffin v. Griffin, 8 B. Mon. (Ky.) 120; Cook v. Cook, 11 N. J. Eq. 195.

occurred after suit brought,[35] and although they do not in themselves amount to legal cruelty.[36] The admission of such evidence, however, rests largely in the discretion of the court.[37]

c. Desertion. The acts and declarations of the parties in connection with the alleged desertion and occurring at about the date thereof are admissible as constituting a part of the res gestæ for the purpose of explaining the relations existing between the parties and enabling the court to determine whether the alleged misconduct constitutes desertion.[38]

d. Habitual Drunkenness. In an action for divorce on the ground of habitual drunkenness, evidence of facts collateral to those charged in the complaint is admissible in support of the charge.[39] Thus a confirmed habit of drunkenness existing prior to the period alleged in the complaint[40] or at any time subsequent Illinois.— Coursey v. Coursey, 60 Ill. 186, holding that evidence of defendant's drunkenness may be received in connection with that of violence or threats, since it tends to explain the character of the threats.

Indiana.— Breedlove v. Breedlove, 27 Ind. App. 560, 61 N. E. 797.

Maine.— Thompson v. Thompson, 79 Me. 286, 9 Atl. 888.

Minnesota.— Westphal v. Westphal, 81 Minn. 242, 83 N. W. 988; Segelbaum v. Segelbaum, 39 Minn. 258, 39 N. W. 492.

Pennsylvania.— Barnsdall v. Barnsdall, 171 Pa. St. 625, 33 Atl. 343, holding that the whole conduct of defendant during the period of the alleged ill treatment should be considered, and evidence descriptive of it is admissible.

Washington.— Lee v. Lee, 3 Wash. 236, 28 Pac. 355, holding that while no new and separate items of complaint not pleaded nor sufficient in themselves as grounds for divorce can be proved, minor circumstances and general conduct disclosing the animus of defendant in the commission of the acts charged may be shown.

England.— Squires v. Squires, 10 Jur. N. S. 756, 33 L. J. P. & M. 172, 3 Swab. & Tr. 541, 12 Wkly. Rep. 1028; Jewell v. Jewell, 6 L. T. Rep. N. S. 369, 2 Swab. & Tr. 573, 10 Wkly. Rep. 672, both holding that evidence of violent demeanor and language not pleaded but leading up to and making probable the acts charged may be admitted.

Communication of disease.— Where cruelty is alleged to consist of the communication of a venereal disease to the wife on two occasions shortly after the marriage, evidence that the husband had communicated the disease to her on another occasion not mentioned in the bill is admissible to show the extent of the cruel treatment. Hanna v. Hanna, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 51, 21 S. W. 720. And see Cook v. Cook, 32 N. J. Eq. 475, where evidence of defendant's association with abandoned women after his marriage and before he communicated a venereal disease to plaintiff was held admissible as showing that he exposed himself to the liability to contract the disease and with the knowledge of his condition recklessly communicated it to plaintiff.

Failure to provide for wife and children may be evidence of cruelty. Rupp v. Rupp, 59 Ill. App. 569; Eastes v. Eastes, 79 Ind. 363; Mack v. Handy, 39 La. Ann. 491, 2 So. 181; Morrison v. Morrison, 14 Mont. 8, 35 Pac. 1.

Condoned misconduct.—Evidence of cruelty which has been condoned is admissible to show the character of subsequent acts of cruelty alleged as a ground for a limited divorce. Doe v. Doe, 52 Hun (N. Y.) 405, 5 N. Y. Suppl. 514.

35. Gardner v. Gardner, 23 Nev. 207, 45 Pac. 139; Doughaday v. Crowell, 11 N. J. Eq. 201. Contra, Rayner v. Rayner, 49 Mich. 600, 14 N. W. 562.

Proc. 282, holding that a statement made by defendant to plaintiff on the second night of their marriage that he did not love her and had made a mistake in marrying her was properly admitted as a fact in itself contributing to constitute plaintiff's cause of action.

37. Smith v. Smith, 167 Mass. 87, 45 N. E. 52; Ford v. Ford, 104 Mass. 198; Scoland v. Scoland, 4 Wash. 118, 29 Pac. 930, holding that whether proof of acts of cruelty subsequently to the commencement of the suit should be permitted is a question resting largely in the court's discretion.

38. Walter v. Walter, 117 Ind. 247, 20 N. E. 148 (holding that the conduct of the husband toward the wife previous to their separation may be proved); Fulton v. Fulton, 36 Miss. 517; Graves v. Graves, 10 Jur. N. S. 546, 33 L. J. P. & M. 66, 10 L. T. Rep. N. S. 273, 3 Swab. & Tr. 350, 12 Wkly. Rep. 1016.

Religious belief.— In an action for divorce on the ground of abandonment, the fact that defendant belonged to a religious sect whose doctrines prohibited cohabitation with an unbelieving spouse and which had caused the separation of other spouses is irrelevant. Haymond v. Haymond, 74 Tex. 414, 12 S. W. 90.

39. Morrison v. Morrison, 14 Mont. 8, 35 Pac. 1.

40. Reynolds v. Reynolds, 44 Minn. 132, 46 N. W. 236; McBee v. McBee, 22 Oreg. 329, 29 Pac. 887, 29 Am. St. Rep. 613; Gourlay v. Gourlay, 16 R. I. 705, 19 Atl. 142.

to the commencement of the suit and prior to its trial[41] may be shown, not as independent ground for divorce but as bearing upon the issue of defendant's habits at the time charged.

C. Weight and Sufficiency — 1. Preponderance of Evidence. A complainant must establish the grounds for divorce by a clear preponderance of evidence;[42] the criminal law rule that guilt must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt being inapplicable where a spouse is charged with matrimonial misconduct.[43] The same rule applies generally to affirmative defenses. They must be established by a preponderance of the evidence.[44]

2. Number and Character of Witnesses[45] — a. In General. In most jurisdictions marital misconduct as a ground for divorce may be proved by a single witness in the absence of a statutory provision to the contrary effect,[46] provided

41. Allen v. Allen, 73 Conn. 54, 46 Atl. 242, 84 Am. St. Rep. 135, 49 L. R. A. 142 (holding that evidence of the intemperate habits of defendant up to the time of trial is properly admitted in the discretion of the court, since the condition authorizing divorce must exist at the time of its granting); Mack v. Handy, 39 La. Ann. 491, 2 So. 181.

Equally balanced testimony, as where the statements of the complainant are either denied or explained by defendant, is not sufficient. Jenkins v. Jenkins, 86 Ill. 340; German v. German, 57 Mich. 256, 23 N. W. 802; Fischer v. Fischer, 18 N. J. Eq. 300. See also supra, note 3.

Satisfactory evidence.— The circumstances relied on to establish the offense must be sufficient to satisfy the mind that it has actually taken place. Moller v. Moller, 115 N. Y. 466, 22 N. E. 169; Allen v. Allen, 101 N. Y. 658, 5 N. E. 341; Pollock v. Pollock, 71 N. Y. 137; Edmond's Appeal, 57 Pa. St. 232; Moore v. Moore, 22 Tex. 237; Caton v. Caton, 13 Jur. 431. The court is never required to adjudge defendant guilty of adultery merely because a witness swears to it or swears to facts from which it must be inferred. To justify such an adjudication, the court must be satisfied that the witnesses are honest, that they are not mistaken, and that their testimony is true. Fuller v. Fuller, 41 N. J. Eq. 460, 5 Atl. 725.

Positive and negative testimony.— The negative testimony of witnesses that they had never seen defendant drunk will not outweigh affirmative statements of other witnesses showing that he is an habitual drunkard. Smith v. Smith, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 859.

Preponderance of evidence of residence see infra, XIII, C, 5.

On the contrary, it has been held that a divorce cannot be granted on default upon the testimony of only one witness examined in open court and the deposition of one other witness. Suesemilch v. Suesemilch, 43 Ill. App. 573. See also Kline v. Kline, 104 Ill. App. 274. And in Kentucky by statute two that the witness is of good character and his testimony is credible[47] and uncontradicted.[48]

b. Children of Parties. The children of the parties are not necessarily excluded as witnesses in a divorce case,[49] but their evidence should be carefully considered and be supported by corroborating circumstances.[50]

c. Parties — (I) In General. The common-law rule prohibiting one spouse from testifying against the other has generally been changed by statutes so far as divorce cases are concerned.[51] If, however, the evidence consists in the testimony of the parties alone, and this is in conflict, a divorce will not be granted.[52]

(II) Corroboration — (A) Necessity. Ordinarily the uncorroborated testimony of the party charging the offense is insufficient to establish the fact of its commission, whether it consist of adultery,[53] cruel and inhuman treatment,[54] witnesses or one witness and strong corroborating circumstances are necessary to sustain the charge of adultery or lewdness. Barnett v. Barnett, 64 S. W. 844, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1117; Blanton v. Blanton, 59 S. W. 518, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 1017; Taylor v. Taylor, 7 Ky. L. Rep. 666.

A sworn answer denying the allegations of the bill does not make it necessary to prove them by two witnesses (Derby v. Derby, 21 N. J. Eq. 36) where the statute does not require a sworn answer (Hughes v. Hughes, 19 Ala. 307) or where the bill waives an answer under oath (Van Inwagen v. Van Inwagen, 86 Mich. 333, 49 N. W. 154). However, if the answer is responsive to the allegations of the bill, defendant is entitled to the benefit of it, as in other cases in equity. Latham v. Latham, 30 Gratt. (Va.) 307.

47. Hughes v. Hughes, 44 Ala. 698 (holding the testimony of a single witness insufficient where he was not of good general character); Brown v. Brown, (N. J. Ch. 1901) 50 Atl. 608 (holding that while the testimony of a single witness may be sufficient proof of adultery, although denied by defendant upon oath, yet such effect must depend upon the probability of the story, the character of the witness, and the consistency of his evidence); Fanning v. Fanning, 2 Misc. (N. Y.) 90, 20 N. Y. Suppl. 849 (holding the testimony of a single witness insufficient where he was biased).

(B) Sufficiency. Complainant is not required to be corroborated as to each act testified to in support of the complaint; if a portion of those acts are corroborated by the testimony of third persons it is sufficient.[58] The corroborative testimony must, however, relate to some material fact testified to by the complainant;[59] it is not sufficient to produce a witness who testifies generally in

Confessions may aid other proof but the decree must not rest alone, nor perhaps essentially, on them, for there is great danger of confessions extorted or made designedly to furnish means to effect a divorce. Sufficiency of corroboration.— The nature of the admission or confession and the circumstances under which it was made will determine the sufficiency of the corroborative evidence. Bergen v. Bergen, 22 Ill. 187; Jones v. Jones, 17 N. J. Eq. 351; Clutch v. Clutch, 1 N. J. Eq. 474; Stewart v. Stewart, 51 N. Y. App. Div. 629, 65 N. Y. affirmatively appears either from the circumstances under which they were made or from extraneous evidence that they are not collusive.[65] If either of these conditions is complied with, and the admissions or confessions were freely and intelligently made,[66] a decree of divorce may be founded thereon.[67]

4. Proof of Marriage. Marriage may be proved by cohabitation and general reputation,[68] unless the result would be to prove defendant guilty of bigamy, in which case a ceremonial marriage must be proved.[69]

5. Proof of Residence. A preponderance of the evidence is both necessary and sufficient to establish the residence of plaintiff within the state for the time prescribed by statute.[70] While residence may be proved by circumstantial evidence, the court will not act upon proof of circumstances not in themselves conclusive, if direct and indisputable evidence is available.[71] The testimony of complainant is not sufficient to establish residence,[72] unless it is uncontra-defendant hinting at like admissions, defendant's only explanation of them being that they were written under the influence of despondency. The rule does not require that each item of the confession be corroborated. Clark v. Clark, 86 Minn. 249, 90 N. W. 390, holding that it is sufficient if the corroborating evidence tends in some degree to support the allegations relied on. The evidence must, however, relate to some portion of the confession which is material to the issue. Lyon v. Lyon, 62 Barb. (N. Y.) 138, holding that where witnesses testify in regard to separate acts of adultery, but neither swears to any fact that tends to show that adultery was committed at the time stated by defendant in his confession, the corroboration is insufficient. The confession of a wife is not corroborated by the unsupported testimony of her husband. Perkins v. Perkins, 59 N. J. Eq. 515, 46 Atl. 173.

Absence of collusion.— The rule forbidding divorce on the uncorroborated confessions of a party is founded in the fear of collusion, and when they are made under circumstances precluding suspicion of collusion, the reason for the rule fails, and a decree may be granted thereon without other evidence.

See also Van Alstine v. Van Alstine, 23 Wash. 310, 63 Pac. 243, holding that the statement of plaintiff in an affidavit filed on motion for suit money

dicted[73] or corroborated.[74] In some states the statute requires proof of residence to be made by two witnesses who are resident freeholders and householders of the state.[75]

6. Proof of Particular Offenses — a. Adultery — (i) In General. The proof of adultery as a ground for divorce must be clear and positive.[76] It must be sufficiently definite to identify the time and place of the offense, and the circumstances under which it was committed.[77] The evidence sufficient to prove adultery may be direct, as where the parties are seen in flagrante delicto, or it may be indirect or circumstantial,[78] or it may consist in part of both.[79] In either event the court will carefully weigh the evidence, taking into consideration its inherent probability, the credibility of the witnesses, and the character of the evidence offered by the accused in denial or explanation; and if so considered the evidence of guilt is inconclusive a divorce will be denied.[80] However, the mere fact that the

that she is a resident of the state does not control facts showing the contrary as detailed in her testimony in the trial.

73. Pollock v. Pollock, 9 S. D. 48, 68 N. W. 176, holding that plaintiff's uncontroverted testimony that he had come into the state for the purpose of becoming a resident and had resided there the required length of time justifies a finding that he was a resident.

evidence is conflicting or that guilt is explicitly denied does not preclude a divorce for adultery.[81]

(II) Circumstantial Evidence — (A) General Rules. The charge of adultery may be sufficiently proved by evidence of circumstances leading to an inference of guilt.[82] It is impossible fully to indicate the circumstances which will lead to such a conclusion, because they may be infinitely diversified by the situation and character of the parties, and by many other incidental matters which may be apparently slight and delicate in themselves but which may have most important bearings in the particular case.[83] While the circumstances need not be such that

Artificial and technical rules afford but little aid in determining questions of this kind, for after all the question of guilt or inan inference of guilt is the only possible conclusion that can be drawn therefrom,[84] yet the facts must be such as to lead a just and reasonable man to the conclusion of guilt.[85] They are not sufficient if they merely justify a suspicion of guilt,[86] in the absence of other incriminating circumstances,[87] such for instance as the accused's failure to adduce available evidence in denial or explanation of evidence tending to show adultery.[88] So where the circumstances adduced in support of the charge are capable of two interpretations, one of which is consistent with innocence, a divorce should not be granted.[89] conclusive evidence of guilt, as where defendant was wantonly familiar with an inmate of the house and was shut up in a room with her.[99]

(c) Pregnancy Without Access by Husband. Where a married woman is pregnant with or gives birth to a child under circumstances negativing the possibility of her husband's being the father of it, her adultery is proved.[1]

(d) Subsequent Bigamous Marriage. Proof of a subsequent bigamous marriage of defendant is not sufficient to establish adultery, without proof of cohabitation also.[2]

(e) Venereal Disease. It is prima facie evidence of adultery that a husband long after marriage is infected with a venereal disease.[3]

(iii) Character of Witnesses — (a) Particeps Criminis. While the testimony of the alleged paramour may be considered in determining the fact of adultery,[4] it is liable to grave suspicion and should be acted upon with extreme caution;[5] and ordinarily unless it is corroborated it is not sufficient to establish guilt.[6]

3. Johnson v. Johnson, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 637.

Antenuptial disease.— Affliction with a disease within so short a time after marriage that it might have been contracted prior thereto is not sufficient to establish adultery as against his sworn denial. Mount v. Mount, 15 N. J. Eq. 162, 82 Am. Dec. 276 (where proof that the husband was so afflicted within six months after marriage was held insufficient); Popkin v. Popkin, 1 Hagg. (C) Detectives. Although the testimony of a person employed to watch and detect a husband or wife suspected of adultery is competent and ought not to be absolutely rejected, it should be received with great caution, and scrupulously and minutely scrutinized,[10] and ordinarily it should be corroborated either by the Extent of rule.—The requirement as to corroboration seems rather a precaution on the part of the court than a rule of law. It is founded mainly upon the inability of the party charged with adultery to contradict the testimony of the alleged paramour, because of the common-law incompetency of husband or wife to testify in actions for divorce. Where by statute either spouse may become a witness, the force of the reason requiring corroboration is materially weakened, and the sufficiency of the alleged paramour's testimony must depend mainly upon the degree of credibility the judge or jury sees fit to attach to it. Steffens v. Steffens, 16 Daly (N. Y.) 363, 11 N. Y. Suppl. 424.

Qualifications of rule.— The rule requiring corroboration of a particeps criminis does not apply where he denies the alleged criminality (Pollock v. Pollock, 71 N. Y. 137); and, if defendant declines to testify in his own behalf, the jury may find for plaintiff on the uncorroborated testimony of the particeps criminis (Crary v. Crary, 18 N. Y. Suppl. 753).

Sufficiency of corroboration.—The facts and circumstances relied on as corroborative of the paramour's testimony must be material and tend to prove that the adultery was in fact committed. Geoger v. Geoger, (N. J. Ch. 1900) 45 Atl. 349; Steffens v. Steffens, 16 Daly (N. Y.) 363, 11 N. Y. Suppl. 424.

This is not a rule of evidence absolutely controlling the determination of the issue, but one for the guidance of the judicial conscience. Winston v. Winston, 165 N. Y. 553, 59 N. E. 273.

Sufficiency of corroboration.— Where the testimony of prostitutes is corroborated by proof of facts and circumstances harmonizing therewith and giving such weight and strength to the testimony as to induce belief in its truth, a judgment of divorce is proper. Mayer v. Mayer, 21 N. J. Eq. 246; Moller v. Moller, 115 N. Y. 466, 22 N. E. 169; Van Epps v. Van Epps, 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 320. Such corroboration as justifies a belief that the incriminating testimony is true will suffice. Winston v. Winston, 165 N. Y. 553, 59 N. E. 273. facts and circumstances in evidence or by the direct testimony of other witnesses or by both.[11]

b. Cruelty. Cruelty as a ground for divorce must be established by clear and satisfactory evidence.[12] Mere general statements to the effect that defendant has ill treated plaintiff or that they cannot live together will not suffice.[13] In weighing the evidence the court may consider the failure of defendant to explain incriminating circumstances proved against him.[14]

c. Desertion. To establish desertion the evidence must be clear and convincing.[15] There must be proof of the facts and circumstances under which it occurred; it is not sufficient to state generally that the complainant was aban-

Reason for rule.— When a man sets up as a hired discoverer of supposed delinquencies, and the amount of his pay depends upon the extent of his employment, and the extent of his employment depends upon the discoveries he is able to make, then the man becomes a most dangerous instrument. Mental suffering.—To justify a decree upon the ground of cruelty causing mental suffering, proof of the existence and the cause of such suffering must be plain, and its serious effect upon present health, as well as its menace of real danger to life, must be shown with an unusual degree of certainty. Ogden v. Ogden, 17 App. Cas. (D. C.) 104; Densmore v. Densmore, 6 Mackey (D. C.) 544.

Communication of disease.— The testimony of a physician that the husband at the time of the separation had gonorrhea, accompanied by the admission that the medical books instance rare cases where that disease has been contracted from intercourse with chaste women, is not sufficient to entitle the wife to a divorce on the ground that the husband has contracted "a loathsome disease," as against defendant's denial, supported by the testimony of many medical experts that without microscopic examination it cannot be determined whether the disease is gonorrhea or urethritis, which is a disease frequently contracted from intercourse with chaste women in bad health. Boughner v. Boughner, 41 S. W. 26, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 504. See also Glenn v. Glenn, 87 Mo. App. 377. The fact that the wife was infected and that she had not been unchaste before marriage or unfaithful afterward, there being no proof that the husband had ever suffered from the disease, does not establish cruelty on the part of the husband as communicating a disease to the wife. Morphett v. Morphett, L. R. I P. 702, 38 L. J. P. & M. 23, 19 L. T. Rep. N. S. 801, 17 Wkly. Rep. 471. See also supra, note 3.

A husband suing for a divorce for cruelty must present a plainer case of violence or mental suffering injuriously affecting his health than the wife. Duberstein v. Duberstein, 171 Ill. 133, 49 N. E. 316; Aurand v. Aurand, 157 Ill. 321, 41 N. E. 859; Spitzmesser v. Spitzmesser, 26 Ind. App. 532, 60 N. E. 315.

Leading questions.— Where testimony in a divorce suit on the ground of cruelty is largely drawn out by leading questions, and goes but little beyond the points suggested by the questions, it is entitled to little credence. Richards v. Richards, 48 Mich. 530, 12 N. W. 688.

Physical ability of defendant to exert a great amount of violence, as where he was afflicted with locomotor ataxia, is a circumstance which may be considered in determining the effect of his alleged cruelty. McCahill v. McCahill, 71 Hun (N. Y.) 224, 25 N. Y. Suppl. 221.

Personal indignities as ground for divorce must also be proved clearly and satisfactorily. Edmond's Appeal, 57 Pa. St. 232.

13. Ogden v. Hebert, 49 La. Ann. 1714, 22 So. 919; Hill v. Hill, 24 Oreg. 416, 33 Pac. 809 (holding that plaintiff's testimony that defendant has falsely charged her with unchastity is not sufficient to warrant a decree, unless she also states the times, places, and circumstances of the alleged charges, and the persons to whom they were made); Edmond's Appeal, 57 Pa. St. 232 (holding the same rule applicable where a divorce is sought because of personal indignities).

Rep. 149, where it was held that a husband's state of health must be within his own knowledge, and that if he is charged with having communicated to his wife a loathsome disease, and does not come forward to assert his ignorance, the court will hold the charge established.

15. Franklin v. Franklin, 53 Kan. 143, 35 Pac. 1118; Hosmer v. Hosmer, 53 Minn. 502, 55 N. W. 630. See, however, supra, XIII, C, 1.

doned by the other party.[16] The fact of desertion may be proved by a variety of circumstances leading with more or less probability to that conclusion.[17]

d. Habitual Drunkenness. General testimony that defendant is an habitual drunkard is insufficient to establish the offense; facts must be given in detail so that the court may judge whether or not they constitute habitual drunkenness.[18]

7. Proof of Affirmative Defenses. Collusion is not required to be proved as fully as other defenses. The court may refuse a divorce if no more than a grave suspicion of collusion exists.[19] Connivance[20] or condonation,[21] however, must be proved by clear and satisfactory evidence; and no less evidence is required to establish a recriminatory charge made in an answer than is required to establish a like charge in a complaint.[22]

New York.— Williams v. Williams, 3 Silv. Supreme 385, 6 N. Y. Suppl. 645, 17 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 297, holding that desertion is shown by the fact that defendant left the state and took up his residence in another, where he procured a divorce.

XIV. TRIAL.[23]

A. Place of Hearing. It is frequently provided by statute that the hearing of a divorce suit shall be held in open court.[24]

B. Time of Trial. In some states the time of trial is regulated by statute.[25]

C. Continuances.[26] An order of continuance may be granted in a divorce suit as in other civil cases.[27]

D. Dismissal or Discontinuance[28] — 1. VOLUNTARY DISMISSAL. Ordinarily the complainant may at any time prior to a decree, unless a cross bill has been filed, dismiss the bill as a matter of course.[29]

27. Barnes v. Barnes, 95 Cal. 171, 30 Pac. 298, 16 L. R. A. 660, holding that an application for continuance is addressed to the sound discretion of the court, and will not be granted where the circumstances cast suspicion on the good faith of the application and induce a belief that it was intended solely for delay. So, although the court should be liberal in granting continuances in divorce cases, because the public as well as the parties are interested in the result, defendant cannot complain if his application is denied, where he has attempted to subordinate the business of the court to his own business engagements and convenience.

Grounds.— A continuance may be granted because of the absence of a material witness (Scripture v. Scripture, 70 Hun (N. Y.) 432, 24 N. Y. Suppl. 301. And see Hughes v. Hughes, 44 Ala. 698); or for the purpose either of remedying a defective service (Chase v. Chase, 61 N. H. 123), if the defect is not fatal (Philbrick v. Philbrick, 27 Vt. 786), or of permitting an amendment to a pleading (Burdell v. Burdell, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 473, 3 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 216), or of enabling a defendant who becomes insane pending the action to regain his reason (Stratford v. Stratford, 92 N. C. 297). However, the hearing will not be postponed to produce an insane plaintiff in court, where his physician's affidavit avers that he could not be presented in court without suffering injury. Thayer v. Thayer, 9 R. I. 377.

Pennsylvania.— Koecker v. Koecker, 7 Phila. 364, holding that a libellant may suffer a nonsuit on the trial as in other cases. See Schlichter v. Schlichter, 10 Phila. 11.

Public interest.— However, the right to a discontinuance is not to be strictly regarded in actions for divorce, since the rights of the parties to the record are not alone to be considered, but the public is also to be regarded as a party. Winans v. Winans, 124 N. Y. 140, 26 N. E. 293 (where the marriage of the parties was in issue); Winston v. Winston, 21 N. Y. App. Div. 371, 47 N. Y. Suppl. 399 (where defendant had obtained a divorce from plaintiff in another state and remarried a third person). But it has been held that the public has no interest in an action for divorce where the legality of the marriage is not questioned. Moore v. Moore, 22 N. Y. Suppl. 451. And see Burton v. Burton, 58 Vt. 414, 5 Atl. 281.

Grounds for refusing leave to dismiss.— Leave to discontinue will not be granted where defendant will thereby suffer a disadvantage (Murphy v. Murphy, 8 Phila. (Pa.) 357), as where a charge of adultery is made by defendant in recrimination and denied by plaintiff (Campbell v. Campbell, 12 Hun (N. Y.) 636); nor will leave be granted where the status or the custody of the children of the marriage will thereby remain undetermined (Winans v. Winans, 124 N. Y. 140, 26 N. E. 293; Winston v. Winston, 21 N. Y. App. Div. 371, 47 N. Y. Suppl. 399). To justify a refusal of the application, however, there must be some facts or reasons upon which the court's dis-

2. Involuntary Dismissal. The court may of its own volition or upon the application of defendant dismiss the complaint in a divorce suit as in other civil cases for various causes.[30]

3. Operation and Effect. Ordinarily a dismissal of the bill carries the whole case out of court,[31] unless defendant has interposed a cross complaint or counterclaim.[32] However, the court retains jurisdiction to determine the rights of the parties with reference to alimony and attorney's fees.[33]

E. Necessity of Taking Proofs — 1. Where Facts Are Admitted. Neither an express admission of matrimonial misconduct in defendant's answer, nor an implied admission by a failure to deny it, is sufficient to authorize a decree of divorce without proper proof of the fact.[34] Proof of marriage or residence cretion can be based. The fact that adultery is charged is not a sufficient cause for denying the application. Moore v. Moore, 22 N. Y. Suppl. 451.

Conditions of leave to discontinue.— Leave to discontinue is usually granted on condition that the costs and temporary alimony if any be paid by plaintiff. Leslie v. Leslie, 3 Daly (N. Y.) 194 [affirmed in 10 Abb. Pr. N. S. 64]; Milner v. Milner, 2 Edw. (N. Y.) 114. And see Clutton v. Clutton, 106 Mich. 690, 64 N. W. 774; Campbell v. Campbell, 54 How. Pr. (N. Proc. 340 (want of prosecution); Weichel v. Weichel, 7 Kulp (Pa.) 442, 15 Pa. Co. Ct. 606 (failure to comply with court rules in respect to the proceeding where defendant has defaulted).

On failure of proof.— The court may order a dismissal for failure of plaintiff to prove jurisdictional facts (Edwards v. Edwards, 30 Ala. 394, where a bill was dismissed without prejudice to plaintiff on failure to prove the statutory residence) or to sustain by sufficient evidence the misconduct alleged as a ground for divorce.

Erroneous dismissal.— Failure to serve the summons ten days before the first day of the term at which the suit was brought, as required by Ind. Div. Act, § 13, is not ground for a dismissal, but is only a cause for continuance. Bratton v. Bratton, 79 Ind. 588. Although the manner and substance of examination and cross-examination might lead to a suspicion of collusion, it is error to refuse to hear further testimony and to dismiss the suit without conclusive proof of collusion. Blinn v. Blinn, 113 Iowa 83, 84 N. W. 957. Defendant is not entitled to a compulsory non prosequi for plaintiff's failure to furnish a bill of particulars, where plaintiff has previously obtained a rule for counsel fees which are unpaid. Jones v. Jones, 23 Wkly Notes Cas. (Pa.) 370.

Dismissal without prejudice.— If the proof does not sustain the specific allegation of adultery contained in the bill, it may be dismissed with privilege of filing a new bill containing further specific allegations. Miller v. Miller, 20 N. J. Eq. 216. The discretionary power to order a dismissal without prejudice exists even after testimony has been received and the case is taken under advisement. 32. Dewees v. Dewees, 55 Miss. 315; Campbell v. Campbell, 12 Hun (N. Y.) 636, both cases holding that the court may order a retention of the cause for a final decree on the cross bill. So defendant is entitled to introduce evidence in support of his cross complaint, although plaintiff does not appear (Ficke v. Ficke, 62 Mo. 335) or fails to make out his case (Owen v. Owen, 54 Ga. 526). See also supra, V, C, 3, b.

33. Thornberry v. Thornberry, 2 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 322, holding that where a divorce and alimony are sought, and there is no ground for divorce, the bill should be retained so far as the claim for alimony is concerned.

Attorney's fees.— Where, pending a suit by a wife for divorce, she and her husband are reconciled and a dismissal is entered in vacation, the court retains jurisdiction until the entry of judgment at the next term, for the purpose of requiring the husband to compensate the wife's attorneys. Courtney v. Courtney, 4 Ind. App. 221, 30 N. E. 914. But see Sims v. Davis, 48 Nebr. 720, 67 N. W. 765, holding that upon an order of dismissal being filed, the attorney for plaintiff has no standing to move to set aside the order so that his application for an allowance of an attorney's fee may be passed upon.

34. Alabama.— Richardson v. Richardson, 4 Port. 467, 30 Am. Dec. 538, holding that which is alleged and admitted either expressly or impliedly need not be required, however.[35]

2. On Default or Bill Confessed. A divorce will not be granted upon default of defendant to appear or upon a bill taken for confessed, unless complainant's charges of misconduct are sustained by sufficient proof;[36] and the court will usually require proof of jurisdictional facts[37] and of service of process on defendant.[38]

3. On Failure to Prosecute Recriminatory Charges. It has been held that the failure of a defendant who has interposed a counter charge of adultery by way of recrimination to appear and prosecute the charge does not entitle plaintiff to a divorce without denying the misconduct.[39]

F. Trial by Court — 1. In General. In the absence of statute to the contrary, a suit for divorce may be tried by the court without a jury.[40]

2. Findings — a. Of Fact. Findings of fact by the court in divorce suits should include a determination of all the material issues made by the pleadings this rule applies in cases of divorce either a vinculo or a mensa et thoro.

In New York, Gen. Rules Pr. No. 72, provides that where the action is based on adultery, unless it be averred in the complaint that the offense was committed without plaintiff's privity, consent, or connivance; that five years have not elapsed since the discovery of the offense; and that plaintiff has not voluntarily cohabited with defendant since such discovery; and also where, at the time of the offense, defendant was living in adulterous intercourse, that five years have not elapsed since the commencement of the intercourse was discovered; and the complaint be verified under oath, judgment shall not be rendered for the relief demanded until plaintiff's affidavit be produced stating the above facts. This rule was made for cases of default only. McCarthy v. McCarthy, 143 N. Y. 235, 38 N. E. 288; Merrill v. Merrill, 41 N. Y. App. Div. 347, 58 N. Y. Suppl. 503; Evans v. Evans, 27 Misc. 10, 57 N. Y. Suppl. 274. A statement in the complaint that "five years have not elapsed since he [plaintiff] discovered the fact that such adultery had been committed by the defendant without his consent, connivance or procurement," is not a sufficient denial of such consent. Myers v. Myers, 41 Barb. 114. A dictum in Merrill v. Merrill, supra, is to the effect that plaintiff must negative condonation and prove the fact should defendant make default; but in Evans v. Evans, supra, the court declares that where a verified complaint contains the prescribed allegations, oral proof of them is unnecessary.

and litigated in the trial,[41] and should ordinarily be restricted to these.[42] They should not be mere conclusions of law,[43] but findings upon the ultimate facts in issue are sufficient without findings upon the facts probative thereof.[44]

b. Of Law. The findings of law should conclude with a finding in favor of one of the parties and against the other.[45]

G. Trial by Jury — 1. Right to Jury. A suit for divorce may be tried by the court without a jury,[46] unless the right of trial by jury is conferred by constitutional grant or legislative enactment.[47]

41. O'Brien v. O'Brien, 124 Cal. 422, 57 Pac. 225 (holding that a failure to find the jurisdictional fact of residence or the facts constituting the grounds for divorce is fatal); Cassidy v. Cassidy, 63 Cal. 352; Dunn v. Dunn, 62 Cal. 176; Miller v. Miller, 43 Iowa 325 (holding that a finding that defendant's conduct was "such as to manifest a disregard of the marriage vow and obligations to his wife" is not sufficient to sustain an allegation of inhuman treatment endangering life).

Findings on cross complaint.— Where the parties each complain of the desertion of the other, a finding that defendant deserted plaintiff is a sufficient finding as to the desertion set up by defendant. De Tolna v. De Tolna, 135 Cal. 575, 67 Pac. 1045. And where both parties allege cruelty, a finding of fact for plaintiff is sufficient basis for a conclusion of law that plaintiff is entitled to a decree. Smith v. Smith, (Cal. 1897) 48 Pac. 730.

Condonation.— Where evidence shows condonation of the acts for which a divorce is sought, however, it is the duty of the court to find to that effect, although condonation is not pleaded. Hunter v. Hunter, 132 Cal. 473, 64 Pac. 772.

44. Howard v. Howard, 134 Cal. 346, 66 Pac. 367 (holding that where the court finds that defendant deserted plaintiff it is not necessary to find further that plaintiff sought a reconciliation and defendant refused it); Kepfler v. Kepfler, 134 Cal. 205, 66 Pac. 208 (holding that a finding which negatives every charge of cruelty alleged in the complaint must be treated as negativing also a charge of desertion by driving plaintiff from home by cruelty); Terrill v. Terrill, 109 Cal. 413, 42 Pac. 137 (holding that where findings are made on issues raised by specific denials of plaintiff's allegations of desertion and failure to support, a separate finding is unnecessary on an allegation in the answer of defendant's willingness and offer to support); Trumpy v. Trumpy, 43 Conn. 270 (holding that a general finding that defendant has not been guilty of intolerable cruelty sufficiently negatives specific allegations of cruelty); Schmid v. Schmid, 60 Ill. App. 174, 175 (holding that a recital that "the court, having heard the evidence, . . . found the allegations of the bill to be true," is a sufficient finding); Pollock v. Pollock, 71 N. Y. 137 (holding that a decision stating that the court found plaintiff guilty of the adultery "as charged in the answer" and directing the complaint to be dismissed is a sufficient compliance with a statute requiring the decision to separately state the facts found and the conclusions of law). See, however, Fink v. Fink, 137 Cal. 559, 70 Pac. 628; Bowers v. Bowers, 19 Mo. 351, holding that a finding that defendant was guilty of acts and abuse which were indignities, without stating their nature, is insufficient.

45. Gullett v. Gullett, 25 Ind. 517, holding that a finding that a divorce ought to be granted, "not upon the application of either party, but upon the whole case," is insufficient, since a divorce can be granted only upon the application of the injured party. It has been held, however, that a decree of divorce in a suit where both parties appear is not objectionable because it does not find plaintiff to be the injured and innocent party. Schmidt v. Schmidt, 26 Mo. 235.

46. Arkansas.— Simpson v. Simpson, 25 Ark. 487.

Indiana.— Leffel v. Leffel, 35 Ind. 76, holding that where a jury trial is ordered and the jury fail to agree and are discharged, the court may find upon the issues and decide the cause on the evidence which was given before the jury.

47. Schafberg v. Schafberg, 52 Mich. 429, 18 N. W. 202, holding that the statute requiring the issues to be tried by a jury is not mandatory, but merely secures to either party the right to a jury unless it is waived.

In New York the issue of adultery must be tried before a jury unless such trial is waived. Batzel v. Batzel, 42 N. Y. Super. Ct. 561, 54 How. Pr. 139. The right to such a trial is constitutional and cannot be reduced to a discretionary right by a general rule of practice. Lowenthal v. Lowenthal, 92 Hun 385, 36 N. Y. 2. Application For Jury. The application for a jury must be seasonably made.[48]

3. Number of Jurors. The number of men required to constitute a jury is usually governed by statutes relating to jury trials generally.[49]

4. Submission of Issues. In nearly all the states the practice exists, either by statutory provision or by adaptation of equity rules, of authorizing the submission of questions of fact in divorce cases to a jury to aid the court in the determination of the issues.[50] The questions which will be thus framed and submitted[51]

In North Carolina the material facts charged in a petition for divorce and alimony must be submitted to a jury on whose verdict and not otherwise the court shall make its decree. Miles v. Miles, 55 N. C. 21.

In England it is usual for the court to try the issues more fit to itself than a jury (Ricketts v. Ricketts, 35 L. J. P. & M. 92, 13 L. T. Rep. N. S. 761); and the court may submit issues of fact to a jury, although the parties object (Ratcliff v. Ratcliff, 27 L. J. P. & M. 60, 1 Swab. & Tr. 217, 6 Wkly. Rep. 866; C v. C, 32 L. J. A demand for an issue is in time, if made at the second meeting before a commissioner appointed to take evidence (Derringer v. Derringer, 8 Phila. (Pa.) 269; Richards v. Richards, 5 Luz. Leg. Reg. (Pa.) 237; Beaumont v. Beaumont, 1 Chest. Co. Rep. 49. Branch v. Branch, 30 Colo. 499, 71 Pac. 632 (holding that a statute providing that the jury shall consist of six persons, unless the parties agree to a smaller number not less than three, applies in divorce suits, the statute concerning divorce having no provision as to juries); Hall v. Hall, 131 N. C. 185, 42 S. E. 562 (holding that consent to a verdict by eleven jurors is valid, the verdict being for defendant, although, under N. C. Code, § 1288, providing that no judgment in a divorce shall be given in favor of plaintiff till the facts have been found by a jury, it would not be valid if the verdict were for plaintiff).

(Pa.) 281, all holding that only such matters as are alleged on one side and denied on the other should be submitted.

Certainty.— In framing the issues care should be taken to specify with certainty the charges of misconduct on the part of defendant so as to enable him to meet them on the trial. Whitney v. Whitney, 76 Hun (N. Y.) 585, 28 N. Y. Suppl. 214; De Carrillo v. Carrillo, 53 Hun (N. Y.) 359, 6 N. Y. Suppl. 305; Strong v. Strong, 3 Rob. (N. Y.) 719, 4 Rob. (N. Y.) 621, 1 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 233, holding also, however, that issues as to adultery made in the pleadings and inserted without objection in the issues as framed for trial will not be expunged on motion merely for indefiniteness as to time and place.

Partial submission.— Each controverted allegation in the pleadings need not be submitted. Trigg v. Trigg, (Tex. 1891) 18 S. W. 313. Where a part of the alleged adulteries are denied, the court, on application of either party, must direct a settlement of the issues raised by the denial, and may take evidence of the adulteries not denied. Galusha v. Galusha, 43 Hun (N. Y.) 181. Where issues are once duly stated and settled, the parties waive the right to have, preliminarily to the trial, any more questions specifically stated and settled. Whitney v. Whitney, 76 Hun (N. Y.) 585, 28 N. Y. Suppl. 214.

If condonation or a recriminatory charge is set up in the answer, the issues may include the facts and circumstances relied on to sustain either defense, and they may be submitted to the same jury for determination. Morrell v. Morrell, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 318; and the mode of submission[52] are commonly governed by the general rules of practice.[53]

5. Province of Court and of Jury. It is for the jury to determine the issues of fact as submitted to it, and for the court to determine whether the facts if found are sufficient to justify a divorce.[54]

6. Instructions. The court may instruct the jury in respect to issues submitted to them in divorce suits as in other civil cases, and the same general rules are applicable thereto.[55]

7. Verdict — a. In General. Where issues are framed and submitted to the jury, the verdict should state specifically and with certainty the facts found to be true,[56] and should be responsive to the issues.[57]

52. Waldron v. Waldron, 55 Pa. St. 231 (holding that the form of the issues framed is properly directed by the court); Richmond v. Richmond, 10 Yerg. (Tenn.) 343 (holding that it is no objection that the issues are drawn on a paper distinct from the petition and answer).

54. Georgia.— Gholston v. Gholston, 31 Ga. 625.

Illinois.— Lenning v. Lenning, 176 Ill. 180, 52 N. E. 46 [affirming 73 Ill. App. 224] (holding that the question whether two or more acts of physical violence constitute cruelty is for the jury); Henderson v. Henderson, 88 Ill. 248 (holding that it is error to leave it to the jury to determine as a matter of law upon the evidence, whether complainant is entitled to a divorce).

Massachusetts.— French v. French, 14 Gray 186, holding that a ruling that certain evidence constitutes no defense is not error, it not being necessary to submit the evidence to the jury for them to determine that question.

North Carolina.— Harrison v. Harrison, 29 N. C. 484.

Pennsylvania.— Gordon v. Gordon, 48 Pa. St. 226; Breinig v. Breinig, 26 Pa. St. 161, holding that it is for the jury to determine whether words and acts proved imply a threat.

Texas.—Byrne v. Byrne, 3 Tex. 336; Wright v. Wright, 3 Tex. 168.

England.— Peacock v. Peacock, 27 L. J. P. & M. 71, 1 Swab. & Tr. 183, 6 Wkly. Rep. 866, holding that condonation is a question for the jury.

55. Lowenthal v. Lowenthal, 92 Hun (N. Y.) 385, 36 N. Y. Suppl. 1053 [affirmed in 157 N. Y. 236, 51 N. E. 995], holding that whers a charge that the question for the jury was whether the alleged offense as submitted had been proved by a fair preponderance of evidence, it was not error to refuse an instruction that a divorce should not be granted without evidence which after careful scrutiny is satisfactory and can command the confidence of a cautious judge or jury. Compare Lenning v. Lenning, 176 Ill. 180, 52 N. E. 46; Fries v. Fries, 34 Misc. (N. Y.) 478, 70 N. Y. Suppl. 295.

Conformity to issues.— The instructions must be responsive to the issues. Fuller v. Fuller, 108 Ga. 256, 33 S. E. 865 (holding that, although a libel charging respondent with conduct such as would authorize a divorce may be defeated by showing that libellant was guilty of "like conduct," the court should not submit to the jury the question whether improper conduct of libellant "justified" respondent in being guilty of conduct of the same kind, since the question of justification is not involved); Smith v. Smith, 72 N. C. 139 (where a general instruction that "it is for the jury to say whether the petitioner's complaints are well founded" was held erroneous).

Conformity to evidence.— The instructions must be in accordance with the evidence presented. Von Glahn v. Von Glahn, 46 Ill. 134 (holding that where cruelty is alleged, and the evidence tends to show that complainant had been guilty of like conduct or of conduct which provoked the acts charged, it is error to instruct the jury that "if they find that the defendant had been guilty of extreme and repeated cruelty, they should find for complainant," since, in the absence of any explanatory clause, it ignores the issue as to complainant's misconduct); Schoen v. Schoen, 48 Ill. App. 382 (holding that where no evidence is presented that plaintiff is afflicted with hysteria or that her condition is such as to incapacitate her from telling the truth, it is error to charge the jury to consider, in determining her credibility, the fact that she is afflicted with hysteria or other illness); Bohan v. Bohan, (Tex. Civ. App. 1900) 56 S. W. 959 (holding that where the evidence raises an issue of recrimination, it is error to refuse a charge that if the parties are equally at fault the verdict should be for defendant).

56. Wood v. Wood, 27 N. C. 674.

Construction of verdict.— A verdict finding the allegations of the bill to be true except the allegation that plaintiff has been a dutiful wife is substantially a verdict for plaintiff and prima facie entitles her to a decree. Thatcher v. Thatcher, 17 Ill. 66.

57. Burns v. Lewis, 86 Ga. 591, 13 S. E. 123 (holding, however, that a final verdict in favor of a total divorce is sufficient to dissolve the marriage, although silent as to the rights and disabilities of the parties, in spite of a constitutional provision devolving the regulation of the rights of the parties upon the jury); Forrest v. Forrest, 6 Duer (N. Y.) 102, 3 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 144 (holding, how-

b. Conclusiveness. The verdict of a jury in divorce suits is not conclusive on the court but may be disregarded or set aside by it at discretion,[58] unless the right to a jury trial is made absolute by constitution or by statute, in which event it cannot be set aside[59] except for sufficient cause as in common-law cases.[60]

H. Reference — 1. Power to Refer. In those states where divorce suits are controlled by chancery practice, a reference to a master may be had as in other suits in equity,[61] and in many states references in divorce suits are authorized by statutes, either as included within provisions relating generally to practice in civil cases[62] or by provisions expressly applicable thereto.[63] The consent of the parties is sometimes made a prerequisite of a reference, however.[64]

58. Indiana.—Morse v. Morse, 25 Ind. 156; Lewis v. Lewis, 9 Ind. 105, holding that the verdict is not conclusive, and that the court may look into the case and disregard so much of the findings as is plainly without the issues.

Montana.— Beck v. Beck, 6 Mont. 318, 12 Pac. 694, holding that the chancellor may give judgment for defendant, although the verdict is for plaintiff.

New York.— Lowenthal v. Lowenthal, 92 Hun 385, 36 N. Y. Suppl. 1053 [affirmed in 157 N. Y. 236, 51 N. E. 995], holding that where the jury finds affirmatively as to adultery, the court may disregard and set aside an answer stating by mistake that there was connivance on the part of plaintiff.

Texas.— Haygood v. Haygood, 25 Tex. 576; Moore v. Moore, 22 Tex. 237; Paulson v. Paulson, (Civ. App. 1893) 21 S. W. 778, holding that the rule of inviolability that attaches to a verdict in civil actions generally where there is some evidence to support it does not apply in actions for divorce; and that the judge must be satisfied, not only of the sufficiency of the causes alleged, but of the truth and sufficiency of the evidence by which they are established, independently of the verdict.

In Iowa and Missouri this rule does not prevail. Hobart v. Hobart, 45 Iowa 501 (holding that since the statute provides that actions for divorce shall be heard in "open court," such actions cannot even by consent of the parties be sent to a referee for hearing); Mangels v. Mangels, 6 Mo. App. 481.

Connivance, condonation, and recrimination. — Where it appears that a petitioner for divorce on the ground of desertion and adultery has himself been guilty of adultery and bigamy, as disclosed by his answer and affidavit filed in another suit before the chancellor, the case will be referred to a master to inquire into petitioner's right to a decree; the statute providing that, if it shall appear to the court that both parties have been guilty of adultery, no divorce shall be granted. Knott v. Knott, (N. J. Ch. 1903) 54 Atl. 559. So in a suit for divorce for adultery, if there is reason to believe plaintiff has forgiven the adultery, with knowledge of all the facts, or that the offense was committed by his or her connivance, the court may ex officio direct an inquiry to ascertain the fact. 2. Qualifications of Referee. To prevent collusion, statutes in some states prohibit a reference as of course in divorce cases to a person nominated by either party or agreed upon by the parties.[65] A person is not disqualified because he acted as referee in a prior action between the same parties.[66]

3. Powers and Duties of Referee — a. In General. In the absence of a statute to a contrary effect, the duty of a referee is confined to the mere taking of evidence and reporting the same to the court, with no power to find as to the truth of the facts and to suggest a decree; it is for the court itself to determine after an examination of the evidence whether a decree should be granted.[67] The duties of a master must be performed by him in person and cannot be delegated.[68]

b. Conduct of Examination. To guard against collusion, the referee should examine the witnesses himself,[69] and in so doing he may put leading questions.[70]

4. Report of Referee — a. Form and Contents. The report of the referee should embrace findings on all the issues,[71] including findings on affirmative

However, judgment on the report of a referee appointed as of course on the consent of the parties will not necessarily be refused. Young v. Young, 38 Misc. (N. Y.) 109, 77 N. Y. Suppl. 94. In Ives v. Ives, supra, the court struck out the name of the referee upon whom the parties had agreed and appointed a new one; but in Pratt v. Pratt, supra, it was held that where a referee on which the parties have agreed is nominated as of course the proceeding is void and cannot be amended by the appointment of a new referee.

In New York, under the practice in courts of equity before the adoption of the code, the master to whom a reference was made to take proof of defendant's adultery in case of default did not decide the question but merely reported the proof with his opinion thereon for the decision of the court. Renwick v. Renwick, 10 Paige 420; Dodge v. Dodge, 7 Paige 589. See also Perry v. Perry, 2 Barb. Ch. 285, holding that where a bill for separation is taken as confessed, the reference is only to satisfy the conscience of the court that there is no collusion, and not to protect defendant's rights. And in a later case arising under the code it was held that the court ought not to refer a suit for divorce to a referee to hear and determine the issues and thus divest itself of its obligation as the guardian of the rights of married women. Simmons v. Simmons, 3 Rob. 642. Under the old code of civil procedure, however, the practice was to refer issues arising in divorce suits to referees to hear and determine, in which case he might decide the issues and determine whether a divorce should be granted (Harding v. Harding, 43 N. Y. Super. Ct. 27, 53 How. Pr. 238; Sullivan v. Sullivan, 41 N. Y. Super. Ct. 519, 52 How. Pr. 453; Lincoln v. Lincoln, 6 Rob. 525; Merrill v. Merrill, 11 Abb. Pr. N. Dig. 460), and this practice still prevails in that state (McCleary v. McCleary, 30 Hun 154; Schroeter v. Schroeter, 23 Hun 230; Anonymous, 3 Abb. N. Cas. 161; Meyer v. Meyer, 7 N. Y. Wkly. Dig. 535), without regard to the exact wording of the order of reference. McCleary v. McCleary, supra, where an order directing "that this action be and the same is hereby referred to . . . to hear the same, and all the issues therein and to report to this court," was held to authorize the referee to hear and determine, although the court suggested that where issues are sent to a referee for trial it is better that the order should direct him "to hear and decide," or "to hear and determine." Compare Sullivan v. Sullivan, supra. An order of reference stating that "this action and the issues therein are referred" authorizes the referee to report upon the question of plaintiff's adultery, although no reply to the amended answer alleging adultery has been served by plaintiff. Breakey v. Breakey, 4 N. Y. St. 368.

68. Stone v. Stone, 28 N. J. Eq. 409; Cook v. Cook, 13 N. J. Eq. 263, holding that where the cause is referred to one master it is irregular to examine a witness before another master.

69. Emmons v. Emmons, Walk. (Mich.) 532; Dodge v. Dodge, 7 Paige (N. Y.) 589.

70. Seeley v. Seeley, 64 N. J. Eq. 1, 53 Atl. 387, but holding that the counsel for complainant cannot examine by questions of a leading character, and that evidence thus elicited should be accorded little weight.

Adultery.— Where but one charge of adultery is alleged, and that with a person named, the report of the master that defendant had defenses.[72] The usual practice is for the referee to annex to his report the evidence and original depositions taken by him.[73]

b. Conclusiveness. Unless otherwise provided by statute, the court is not bound by the findings and opinion contained in a referee's report, but may disregard the report and grant or refuse a decree on the merits.[74] Where, however, a divorce suit is referred to a referee to hear and determine, his decision and findings are the basis of the judgment to be entered, and no provision can be inserted not covered thereby,[75] and the court has no power to direct a judgment contrary thereto,[76] unless the evidence is insufficient to sustain the report, in which case the court may set it aside.[77] committed adultery with a person whose name was unknown is insufficient. Bokel v. Bokel, 3 Edw. (N. Y.) 376.

Desertion.— The report should state the facts and circumstances under which an alleged desertion took place, and the reasons which caused or provoked it, if they can be ascertained (Belton v. Belton, 26 N. J. Eq. 449; Leaning v. Leaning, 25 N. J. Eq. 241), and where it fails to do so the bill will be dismissed (Shepherd v. Shepherd, 1 N. J. L. J. 243). A report finding that the husband had wilfully, maliciously, and without reasonable cause deserted his wife, without a recital of the facts on which such finding was based, will be referred back to him for further findings. Lesher v. Lesher, 9 Pa. Dist. 69.

Former marriage.— A finding that plaintiff had a former husband living at the time of her marriage with defendant does not entitle defendant to a divorce, where the referee fails to report evidence of the fact or to specifically find that there was a valid marriage between plaintiff and the former husband and that it was in force when plaintiff married defendant. Linden v. Linden, 36 Barb. (N. Y.) 61.

Impotency.— A finding that defendant is impotent implies and includes every essential element constituting impotency, within the meaning of the law of divorce. Payne v. Payne, 46 Minn. 467, 49 N. W. 230, 24 Am. St. Rep. 240.

Opinion of referee.— The referee should report his opinion on the facts together with the testimony taken before him. Emmons v. Emmons, Walk. (Mich.) 532.

72. Myers v. Myers, 41 Barb. (N. Y.) 114, holding that there should be a finding as to connivance.

Condonation.— There should be a finding as to whether plaintiff has condoned the offense. Pugsley v. Pugsley, 9 Paige (N. Y.) 589. Where, however, cohabitation after knowledge of adultery is not set up as a defense, a finding based on proof of such fact can have no legal effect on a decision of the cause, and may be rejected as surplusage. Lewis v. Lewis, 9 Ind. 105.

Recrimination.— There should be a finding as to the adultery of plaintiff where it is alleged in recrimination and evidence is introduced in support of it. Griffin v. Griffin, 70 Hun (N. Y.) 73, 23 N. Y. Suppl. 1070; Paul v. Paul, 11 N. Y. St. 71; Church v. Church, 7 N. Y. See Uhlmann v. Uhlmann, 17 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 237.

Y. Suppl. 726, holding that the application for judgment on the report must be either granted or denied, and that the court cannot set aside the report.

c. Remission For Further Proofs. Where the reference is merely for the purpose of taking evidence, the court may, if the report does not sufficiently state the facts and circumstances of the offense, send the case back to the referee for further proofs;[78] but it is otherwise if the reference is not only to take evidence but to report the same to the court with findings.[79]

d. Confirmation. Where the reference is to hear and determine, the report is required to be certified to the court for confirmation, and judgment is to be entered by the court in conformity therewith.[80] If there is reason to suspect collusion or fraud,[81] or if the evidence reported does not support the findings of the referee satisfactorily to the conscience of the court, confirmation of the report is properly refused.[82] The court will not refuse to confirm because of errors committed by the referee in the reception and exclusion of evidence.[83]

XV. JUDGMENT OR DECREE.[84]

A. Nature of Relief Granted — 1. Divorce — a. In General. The final determination of a suit for divorce finds its expression in the judgment or decree declaring, if favorable to the complainant, either an absolute dissolution or a partial suspension of the marriage relation according to the grounds upon which the divorce is sought and the statutes under which the proceedings are instituted;[85] and if favorable to defendant either dismissing the complaint[86] or in case the allegations of a counter-claim or cross complaint have been sustained granting him an absolute or a limited divorce as if he were complainant.[87]

b. Absolute and Limited Divorce. A divorce may be either absolute or limited.[88] An absolute divorce or a divorce a vinculo matrimonii dissolves the marriage, releases the mutual rights and obligations of the parties, and creates a new status, carrying with it new duties and obligations imposed by statute or by the terms of the decree.[89] A limited divorce or a divorce a mensa et thoro does

Order refusing confirmation should be to the effect that the report be set aside, the order of reference vacated, and a new trial of the issues had, with costs to defendant to abide the event. An order absolutely dismissing the complaint upon the merits is error. Harding v. Harding, 53 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 238. It is error to set aside the report and direct a trial at the circuit, in the absence of an application to remove the referee or vacate the order of reference, since where the parties have consented to a reference the court cannot disregard the order of reference without a reason sufficient in law. Form of decree.— An order for the entry of a decree of divorce is not such a final decree as to dissolve the marriage. Cook's Estate, 77 Cal. 220, 17 Pac. 923, 19 Pac. 431, 11 Am. St. Rep. 267, 1 L. R. A. 567; Clark not dissolve the marriage, but by it the parties are permitted to live apart upon prescribed terms within the provisions of the statute under which it is rendered.[90] In some jurisdictions either kind of divorce may be granted in the discretion of the court.[91] If a divorce is decreed without declaration as to kind or class, it will be construed as for an absolute divorce.[92] In some states an absolute divorce may not be granted for certain causes until a limited divorce has been granted for the same cause and a prescribed time has elapsed therefrom without reconciliation of the parties.[93]

c. Conditional Divorce. In some jurisdictions it is the practice in certain cases to grant a conditional divorce by the rendition of a decree nisi to become absolute upon the happening of a prescribed contingency.[94] Such a decree is similar in nature and effect to a divorce from bed and board, since it does not Exercise of discretion.— This discretionary power should not be capriciously exercised, but should be governed by the evidence. Howlett v. Howlett, 70 S. W. 404, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 974 (holding that where the husband, without a mitigating circumstance, abused and cruelly beat his wife, indicated that he had a vicious temper, and showed that she would probably suffer great bodily injury by remaining with him, the wife was entitled to an absolute divorce); Locke v. Locke, 14 Ky. Reconciliation.— The fact that no reconciliation has taken place must be proved (Ellerbusch v. Kogel, 108 La. 51, 32 So. 191; Van Hoven v. Weller, 38 La. Ann. 903), and if a willingness to become reconciled be shown an absolute decree will not be granted (Mazerat v. Godefroy, 48 La. Ann. 824, 19 So. 756). A reconciliation nullifies the limited decree. Liddell's Succession, 22 La. Ann. 9.

The right to an absolute decree belongs only to the party in whose favor the decree of separation was granted. Johnson v. Johnson, 32 La. Ann. 1139. Where each party asks a divorce, a decree of separation awarding to the wife the custody of a child with costs against the community is presumed to have been rendered in favor of the wife. The proceedings to procure an absolute decree must be commenced and prosecuted in the ordinary way (Jurgielewiez v. Jurgielewiez, 24 La. Ann. 77; Gernon v. Hickey, 18 La. Ann. 454), and in such proceedings defendant may plead the nullity of the decree of separation (Daspit v. Ehringer, 32 La. Ann. 1174).

dissolve the marriage or entirely relieve the parties from their marital obligations.[95] The practice in relation to making the decree absolute so as finally to dissolve the marriage is usually governed by statute.[96]

2. INCIDENTAL RELIEF. Upon granting a divorce the court will determine the incidental rights of the parties, such as those relating to alimony and allowances,[97] the property rights of the parties,[98] the status,[99] custody, and support[1] of their children, the right of the wife to resume her maiden name,[2] the right of the parties to remarry,[3] and questions of costs and fees.[4] The decree should state in detail the incidental relief thus afforded,[5] especially where rights with respect to real property are involved.

B. Requisites — 1. In General. In the absence of statute a decree of divorce need not be in writing or signed by the judge.[6] It need not recite that notice was given to defendant;[7] nor is it void upon its face because it does not recite the jurisdictional fact of plaintiff's residence.[8] The names of the parties should be accurately stated.[9]

2. Conformity to Pleadings and Findings. The decree must be based upon and be in accordance with the facts alleged in the pleadings,[10] and should be supported by the findings of fact.[11]

3. Entry.[12] A decree of divorce may be entered nunc pro tunc.[13] A person not a party to the suit may cause the entry to be made,[14] and defendant therein is not entitled to notice of the entry.[15]

C. Judgment by Default or Pro Confesso — 1. Requisites and Validity. To justify the rendition of a decree of divorce as upon default, defendant must have been served with process,[16] the time for answering must have expired,[17] proof must be taken of the existence of the ground of divorce as alleged,[18] and in some states there are statutory regulations as to the time of entering the final decree.[19]

18. See supra, XIV, E, 2.

19. Meyer v. Meyer, 60 Kan. 859, 57 Pac. 550 (holding, however, that a statute prohibiting a trial at the same term as that in which the action was commenced does not forbid the taking of a default judgment at that term); Gibson v. Gibson, 40 Misc. (N. Y.) 103, 81 N. Y. Suppl. 343; Rothstein v. Rothstein, 40 Misc. (N. Y.) 101, 81 N. Y. Suppl. 342 (the last two cases construing a statute providing that no final judgment in an uncontested action for divorce shall be entered until after three months from the filing of an interlocutory judgment).

2. Opening or Setting Aside Default — a. Power of Court. Since a judgment by default is not favored in divorce suits, the courts are specially inclined to interpose by opening or setting aside such a judgment and giving defendant a day in court so that the merits of his defense may be passed upon,[20] under such terms and conditions as to the payment of costs and alimony as to the court may seem proper.[21] The opening of defaults in actions for divorce is generally provided for by statute, either by express provision or by implication from the terms of a statute authorizing the opening of defaults in civil suits generally.[22] Unless regulated by statute the rule in chancery must apply, and it rests in the sound discretion of the court to relieve defendant of the consequences of his default.[23]

b. Existence of Defense. It has been said that the rule that a default will not be opened to permit a defense to be interposed which is not meritorious is not vigorously applied in divorce suits;[24] yet it is generally required that it should be made to appear by affidavit or otherwise, as directed by statute or rules of practice, that if the default be opened there is likelihood of a different result being reached.[25]

c. Laches and Limitations. The time prescribed by statute within which an application may be made for opening a default should be observed,[26] and apart from this any unreasonable delay in making the application will unless explained preclude the granting of the relief.[27]

d. Effect of Remarriage or Death. If plaintiff has remarried since the rendition of a decree of divorce upon default, the courts will be reluctant to open it;[28] and the same is true where plaintiff has died since the decree was rendered.[29]

e. Grounds. A default decree may be set aside where defendant's failure to answer or to attend the trial was due to sickness,[30] to the fault of her attorneys,[31] to a miscarriage of the mails,[32] to the calling of the case for trial out of its order on the docket,[33] or to fraud.[34] So if there has been no service of process or an invalid service, it is ground for opening the default.[35]

D. Setting Aside Judgment — 1. Power of Court. By the weight of authority a court of justice invested with power on due proceedings to set aside or modify its own judgment for fraud or irregularity may for good cause shown set aside or modify its own decree of divorce,[36] and it has been held that this lief until 1899 precludes relief); Long v. Long, 59 Mich. 296, 26 N. W. 520 (holding that an order pro confesso not objected to for more than two years, although known to defendant's counsel, and no excuse for the delay being shown, will not be set aside). See Whittaker v. Whittaker, 151 Ill. 266, 37 N. E. 1017.

Qualifications of rule. — If immediate notice is given plaintiff's counsel that a motion will be made to open the default, plaintiff's remarriage before the lapse of a reasonable length of time within which to make the motion will not affect defendant's right to open and defend. Scripture v. Scripture, 70 Hun (N. Y.) 432, 24 N. Y. Suppl. 301. So where service is by publication only, the right to set aside the default has been declared by statute in some states to exist for a certain period, within which an application may be made notwithstanding plaintiff's remarriage. Lawrence v. Lawrence, 73 Ill. 577.

29. Day v. Nottingham, 160 Ind. 408, 66 N. E. 998, holding that the court will be extremely cautious in setting aside a divorce obtained on service by publication, where complainant is dead, although fraud in obtaining the divorce is alleged, and that the application to set it aside must be timely made and must present a strong case of fraud.

So if the statements in the affidavit are false, the default may be set aside. Elmgren v. Elmgren, 25 R. I. 177, 55 Atl. 322. Where, however, defendant does not ask leave to answer, the only question is whether the affidavit was sufficient to call for judicial action (Peterson v. Peterson, 15 S. D. 462, 90 N. W. 136); and if notice has been given defendant substantially in compliance with the statute, the default will not be opened merely because the affidavit is defective or false in part (Day v. Nottingham, 160 Ind. 408, 66 N. E. 998). See also supra, X, D, 3, a.

Proof of service. — The general rule that a return of process made by a public officer cannot be contradicted does not always apply; and where service is shown to have been defective, the court may, to prevent irreparable injury, open defendant's default and permit him to answer on the merits. 37. Comstock v. Adams, 23 Kan. 513, 33 Am. Rep. 191, holding that where a divorce is wrongfully obtained a subsequent agreement between the parties that it shall not be disturbed is against public policy and void.

38. Morris v. Morris, 60 Mo. App. 86, holding, however, that a divorce cannot be set aside because facts derogatory to plaintiff's right to relief are developed in a subsequent trial between third persons. In Kellow v. Kellow, 1 Lehigh Val. L. Rep. (Pa.) 202, however, it was held that where it afterward appears that at the time an ex parte decree for divorce was granted libellant was living in open adultery, the decree will be set aside. See Smith v. Smith, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 432, 27 Am. Dec. 75.

Matters arising subsequent to decree.— If, after a decree of divorce is entered, defendant is judicially declared insane, the decree should be vacated to permit the guardian to show that the misconduct complained of was the result of the insanity. Cohn v. Cohn, 85 Cal. 108, 24 Pac. 659. However, a decree should not be set aside because by a change in the law petitioner has since become a competent witness to testify to his own innocence. Holbrook v. Holbrook, 114 Mass. 568.

Mistake does not ordinarily afford ground for setting aside a divorce. Orth v. Orth, 69 Mich. 158, 37 N. W. 67, holding that a decree will not be modified or set aside because of defendant's misconception of the effect thereby produced upon property rights. A divorce inadvertently granted under a statute which had been repealed is of no effect, however, and should be set aside. Wales v. Wales, 119 Mass. 89; Edson v. Edson, 108 Mass. 590, 11 Am. Fraudulent service of process.— A judgment of divorce should be set aside upon the ground that the service of the summons was fraudulent where it appeared that a husband accompanied his wife to a steamer on which she was embarking for California, and there, at the last moment before the sailing of the vessel, delivered to her a sealed box which he informed her contained a present for a third person in California and a note for herself, but which in reality contained a summons in an action for divorce against her. collusion between the parties is binding on both and may be impeached by neither.[46]

c. Jurisdictional Defects — (i) In General. If the court rendering a judgment had no jurisdiction to do so, the judgment should be set aside whether or not the decree was procured by fraud.[47] The presumption is, however, that judgments of superior courts of general jurisdiction were regularly rendered, and this presumption obtains even when the record does not disclose that the court acquired jurisdiction.[48]

(ii) Defective Service of Process. Defendant is entitled to notice of proceedings for divorce against him, and without service of notice, either personal or constructive, in the manner prescribed by statute, the court acquires no jurisdiction of his person, and its judgment against him is void and will be set aside.[49]

d. Reconciliation or Consent of Parties. A decree of divorce may upon proper application to the court be set aside if the parties become reconciled.[50]

So also where the parties thereto consent to its vacation a decree may upon their application be vacated and set aside.[51]

3. Objections and Defenses — a. Marriage of Party Obtaining Divorce. The marriage of the prevailing party in a divorce suit does not preclude relief to the other party by vacating the decree in a proper case,[52] although there is a well justified reluctance to annul such decrees, and it should be done only after the most careful consideration.[53]

b. Death of Party Obtaining Divorce. The weight of authority favors the power of the court to vacate a decree of divorce, even after the complainant's death, where it was obtained by fraud and imposition on the part of the complainant,[54] or without due service of process.[55]

c. Acceptance of Benefits of Decree. Where defendant has himself acted in reliance on the validity of the decree with full knowledge of its effect, he cannot, after a lapse of time, and especially after the death of the complainant, have it set aside because it was obtained by fraud or without due notice.[56]

d. Bad Faith. A party seeking to vacate or annul a decree of divorce must be actuated by good motives and not by expectation of personal advantage.[57]

e. Lapse of Time — (i) Laches. If the party asking to set aside a decree of divorce has been guilty of laches that relief will be denied him.[58] Thus to vacate a decree of divorce obtained by fraud the injured party must act promptly after a discovery of the fraud,[59] unless the facts are such as to excuse the delay.[60]

(ii) Statutes of Limitations. The period within which an action will lie to set aside a judgment for fraud is usually prescribed by statute, and unless otherwise provided a general limitation applies to decrees of divorce.[61]

Missouri.— Richeson v. Simmons, 47 Mo. 20.

Pennsylvania.— Richardson's Estate, 132 Pa. St. 292, 19 Atl. 82.

Estoppel.— The length of time which has elapsed since a decree of divorce was rendered and the manner in which the parties have treated each other may operate as an estoppel and preclude either from interfering with the affairs of the other. Richeson v. Simmons, 47 Mo. 20. Thus if, after the decree of divorce, the wife brings replevin against her former husband in her name and recovers judgment, the assertion of her right as a feme sole estops her from controverting the validity of the divorce. 57. Zoellner v. Zoellner, 46 Mich. 511, 9 N. W. 831; Singer v. Singer, 41 Barb. (N. Y.) 139.

Presumption from delay.—The presumption arising from a long acquiescence by defendant in a fraudulent decree of divorce is that its injurious effects were not seriously regarded by her, and that her action in afterward attempting to set it aside is actuated by a desire to secure some personal advantage in addition to a restoration of marital rights. Nicholson v. Nicholson, 113 Ind. 131, 15 N. E. 223; Nichols v. Nichols, 25 N. J. Eq. 60; Singer v. Singer, 41 Barb. (N. Y.) 139.

58. Hubbard v. Hubbard, 19 Colo. 13, 34 Pac. 170, holding that after a decree has been acquiesced in for a long time, reasons which would in the first instance have caused the decree to be withheld may not be sufficient to warrant setting it aside. See, however, Bulkley v. Bulkley, 6 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 307, holding that since the court acquires no jurisdiction where service of summons is fraudulent, laches of defendant in moving to set aside a decree obtained in such a case is not available as a defense.

Excuse.— Fraud of plaintiff inducing defendant to desist from inquiry as to the rendition of the decree will prevent the running of the statute and excuse defendant's laches. Caswell v. Caswell, 120 Ill. 377, 11 N. E. 342; Brown v. Grove, 116 Ind. 84, 18 N. E. 387, 9 Am. St. Rep. 823.

See, however, Fritz v. Fritz, 9 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 275, holding that a delay of two years in bringing an action to set aside a decree of divorce obtained by fraud upon the jurisdiction of the court, although unexplained, is not such laches as will create estoppel.

4. PERSONS ENTITLED TO RELIEF — a. In General. Strangers to the divorce suit are not entitled to have an invalid decree of divorce set aside.[62] That right usually exists only in favor of the injured spouse.[63]

b. Prevailing Party. The party in whose favor a divorce has been granted cannot ordinarily have it set aside,[64] unless the divorce suit was instituted without the knowledge or consent of the applicant.[65]

5. PROCEDURE — a. Remedy. A decree of divorce may be set aside either by motion[66] or by an original suit in equity in the nature of a bill of review,[67] according to the circumstances of the case and the practice of the court in which the relief is sought.

b. Parties Defendant. If the prevailing party has remarried since the decree was granted, the second spouse may be made a party defendant in a proceeding to set aside the decree.[68] If he has died since the decree his legal representatives and all others interested in the distribution of his estate,[69] including all children born prior to the decree,[70] should be made parties.

c. Pleadings. The petitioner should show in his petition that he is the injured party and free from guilt,[71] and that he has a meritorious defense to the action for divorce.[72] He should also specifically allege the facts and circumstances constituting the fraud or irregularities complained of, and clearly show that the action was brought within the time prescribed by statute.[73]

d. Notice and Hearing. A decree should not be vacated without giving the complainant therein an opportunity to be heard,[74] and if he has remarried the second spouse also is entitled to notice.[75]

e. Decree — (i) Form. Where the proceedings for divorce were fraudulent from their inception, the decree setting aside the judgment of divorce should simply nullify it and not permit defendant to defend as though the judgment had never been entered;[76] but where the fraud occurred subsequent to the commencement of the divorce proceedings, the decree should set aside the judgment of divorce and grant defendant a reasonable time to plead.[77] A decree granting a divorce and settling the property rights of the parties cannot be set aside in part only.[78]

(ii) Operation and Effect. The vacation of a decree of divorce renders it void ab initio and restores the parties to their previous marital status, with all its incidental rights and duties.[79] On collateral attack the presumption is in favor of the validity of a decree setting aside a judgment of divorce.[80]

E. Collateral Attack — 1. Grounds of Attack. A decree of divorce granted by a court having no jurisdiction over the subject-matter or over the person against whom it was granted is absolutely void and may be collaterally attacked

Pleading.— Where a husband brings a claim against a tenant of his wife for a portion of her rents allotted to him by a decree of divorce, the tenant, if he means to take advantage of the nullity of the decree, must make his averment thereof in such form as that the husband can take issue. He cannot set the nullity up on argument under an averment that he has a mortgage of the rents and "reserves to himself the right to impeach the decree if occasion should offer and require him to do so." Cheever v. Wilson, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 108, 19 L. ed. 604. Misnomer of defendant, if no harm results therefrom, does not vitiate the decree so as to render it subject to collateral attack. Harrison v. Harrison, 19 Ala. 499; Howton v. Gilpin, 69 S. W. 766, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 630.

Defects in pleadings.— So where a decree of divorce is rendered on a complaint which does not state facts sufficient to justify the relief demanded and awarded, it cannot on that ground be collaterally attacked. In re James, 99 Cal. 374, 33 Pac. 1122, 37 Am. St. Rep. 60; Ayers v. Harshman, 66 Ind. 291. See McFarlane v. Cornelius, 43 Oreg. 513, 73 Pac. 325, 74 Pac. 468. Nor is a decree void as for fraud because the bill omitted to state a fact which would have been a bar to the relief sought. Harrison v. Harrison, 19 Ala. 499. The fact that the petition was not verified by plaintiff but was sworn to by her attorney is not a jurisdictional defect, and cannot be urged in a collateral proceeding instituted nearly thirty years later to enforce the dower rights of plaintiff. Kansas.— See Larimer v. Knoyle, 43 Kan. 338, 23 Pac. 487, holding that the fact that the petition for divorce, the affidavit for service by publication, and the affidavit filed in lieu of sending a copy of the petition and publication notice to defendant were false, does not render the judgment of divorce absolutely void.

2. Conclusiveness of Record. Recitals in the record of a divorce suit are conclusive in a collateral attack on the decree.[84]

3. Presumption in Favor of Decree. On collateral attack of a decree of divorce, it is presumed in favor of the decree, in the absence of a showing to the contrary, that the court had jurisdiction over the parties and that facts existed authorizing the court to exercise its jurisdiction over the subject-matter.[85]

4. Estoppel to Attack Decree. A party to a void decree of divorce who has acted thereunder and accepted its benefits cannot in a collateral proceeding

St. Rep. 146 (holding that an affidavit of service of summons by publication against a nonresident defendant and recitals thereof in the judgment are conclusive on collateral attack); Amy v. Amy, 12 Utah 278, 42 Pac. 1121 (holding that the reeital in the decree that "defendant was duly served with process by publieation" is eonelusive upon the court's jurisdiction of defendant's person, although the affidavit of publication fails to allege that the summons was published as provided by statute).

What constitutes record.— The affidavit on the application for an order of publieation and the order therefor are not a part of the judgment-roll and eannot be considered on the question of due serviee (Newman's Estate, 75 Cal. 213, 16 Pac. 887, 7 Am. St. Rep. 146), and their absenee from the reeord eannot be appealed to in a collateral attack to impeach a judgment reciting service of process by publieation (Amy v. Amy, 12 Utah 278, 42 Pac. 1121).

Construction of record.—A recital that due serviee by publieation was made does not preclude a eollateral attack on the judgment where the record otherwise affirmatively shows that the statute was not complied with. Utah.— Amy v. Amy, 12 Utah 278, 42 Pac. 1121, holding that where judgment of divorce reeited that defendant was duly served with process by publieation, the presumption of the eourt's jurisdiction of defendant's person is not overcome by the fact of defendant's non-residenee, neither the property rights of the parties nor the rights of their ehildren being determined thereby; and particularly where defendant reeeived notiee of the proceedings and both parties regarded the divorce as valid and again married.

Different acts of same nature.—Where adultery was alleged to have been committed during a certain period, and the bill is dismissed as unsustained by the evidence, a subsequent bill for similar misconduct during the same period is barred (Glaude v. Peat, 43 La. Ann. 161, 8 So. 884; Vance v. Vance, 17 Me. 203; Wagoner v. Wagoner, 76 Md. 311, 25 Atl. 338; Edgerly v. Edgerly, 112 Mass. 53; Viertel v. Viertel, 99 Mo. App. 710, 75 S. So a libel is barred if it alleges the same acts of cruelty as a former libel, although there is evidence of other acts of cruelty, previous to the former libel, than those testified to at the first trial. Fera v. Fera, 98 Mass. 155.

Different grounds of divorce.— The dismissal of a bill alleging certain acts as constituting a specific ground of divorce does not bar a subsequent suit alleging the same acts as constituting an entirely different ground. Vinsant v. Vinsant, 49 Iowa 639 (where it was held that a judgment for defendant in an action based on adultery is not a bar to a subsequent action based on conviction of assault with intent to commit rape, although the cause of action is founded on the same criminal act); Rand v. Rand, 58 N. H. 536 (holding that the refusal of a divorce for extreme cruelty is no bar to a subsequent suit on the ground of abandonment consisting of the same acts of cruelty compelling the separation of the parties). See, however, Bartlett v. Bartlett, 113 Mass. 312, 18 Am. Rep. 493, holding that the dismissal of a libel for desertion bars a subsequent libel for adultery known to libellant before the filing of the first libel, where he shows no reason for not having then assigned it as a ground of divorce.

Different relief.— A judgment on the merits against defendant in an action for absolute divorce is a bar to a subsequent action by plaintiff for a limited divorce upon the same grounds, where under the practice plaintiff might have obtained in the first action the relief prayed for in the second. b. To Subsequent Defense. A judgment dismissing a complaint for divorce on the merits precludes plaintiff from setting up the same grounds of misconduct as a defense in a suit for divorce afterward brought against him.[91]

2. Judgment as Merging Causes of Action. A decree granting a limited divorce does not bar a subsequent action by plaintiff on different grounds for an absolute divorce.[92] Nor does a judgment sustaining a defense based on the misconduct of plaintiff preclude defendant from afterward asserting the same misconduct as a ground for divorce.[93]

3. Judgment as Establishing Facts Adjudicated. A decree in a divorce suit is conclusive upon the parties as to all the facts actually determined.[94]

4. Requisites of Judgment — a. Jurisdiction. A judgment on the merits is not a bar to a subsequent suit if the court had no jurisdiction to determine the merits of the controversy.[95]

b. Adjudication of Merits. A judgment dismissing a suit for divorce does by statute continue for a year, the dismissal of the bill does not bar a subsequent action based on the continued neglect of the husband to support his wife for a year after the dismissal); Haley v. Haley, (1887) 14 Pac. 92 (holding that the dismissal of the wife's bill and the husband's cross bill containing charges of adultery against the wife, because neither was sustained by the evidence, does not bar a subsequent bill by the wife on the ground that such charges, being false, constituted cruel treatment).

In Oregon the statute authorizes the court on motion to set aside or modify so much of a decree for divorce as may provide for the support and education of minor children or the maintenance of either party, and hence the original decree is not final and conclusive as to those matters. Henderson v. Henderson, 37 Oreg. 141, 60 Pac. 597, 61 Pac. 136, 82 Am. St. Rep. 741, 48 L. R. A. 766.

H. 536, 75 Am. Dec. 154 (holding that if the dismissal is for a defect in the pleadings or for want of prosecution it is no bar).

Dismissal without prejudice.— A decree dismissing a libel for divorce without prejudice is not a bar to another action for the same cause. Cornelius v. Cornelius, 31 Ala. 479; Kershaw v. Kershaw, 5 Pa. Dist. 551; Burton v. Burton, 58 Vt. 414, 5 Atl. 281. 98. Wiseman v. Wiseman, 89 Ind. 479 (holding that an oral statement of a husband or wife that they have been divorced is not sufficient evidence thereof); Teter v. Teter, 88 Ind. 494 (holding that a transcript of the record in the divorce suit is not sufficient).

Sufficiency of copy.— An exemplified copy will not be sufficient proof unless it recites all the jurisdictional facts. Com. v. Blood, 97 Mass. 538; Lawrence's Case, 18 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 347, holding that if the decree does not show on its face the required jurisdictional facts, enough of the record should be produced to show that the court had jurisdiction.

Destruction of records.— Where the records of a certain court for a particular year were destroyed by fire, parol evidence of memoranda made by the judge on his calendar directing the entry of a decree in a case pending in such year in said court between the parties in question is admissible as tending to show the entry of such decree. In re Edwards, 58 Iowa 431, 10 N. See, however, Wiseman v. Wiseman, 89 Ind. 479 (holding that evidence that the husband cohabited with another woman in a remote place for a long period and had children by her, and that during all that time she was recognized as his wife, has no tendency to prove a dissolution of the original marriage); Barnes v. Barnes, 90 Iowa 282, 57 N. W. 851 (holding that where the records of the counties in which a man and his wife have lived show no divorce, there is no presumption of divorce in favor of the woman because she marries another, although the first husband also marries another, with whom, however, it is not shown that he lived); Gilman v. Sheets, 78 Iowa 499, 43 N. W. 299 (holding that a divorce will not be presumed where there is no evidence of conduct inconsistent with the continuance of the marriage relation on the part of the wife, although the husband has deserted her and married again); Ellis v. Ellis, 58 Iowa 720, 13 N. W. 65 (holding that where a wife had no knowledge that her husband, living apart from her, had married again or was cohabiting with another woman, until after his death, and there is no evidence that she did not at all times regard the marriage as existing, no presumption can be indulged that he had procured a divorce).

(II) Separation Agreements. An agreement between the parties for the separate support of the wife is not terminated by a decree for absolute divorce which is silent on the matter.[5]

b. As to Property Rights of Parties[6]—(I) Wife's Interest in Husband's Property. Inchoate rights of the wife in the husband's property are usually cut off by a decree of absolute divorce.[7]

(II) Husband's Interest in Wife's Property. The rights of a husband in his wife's property exist only during the marriage, and consequently an absolute divoree obtained by the wife divests him of all his interest therein.[8] Choses in action belonging to the wife and not reduced to possession by the husband before the commeneement of the suit will revest in her discharged of all his claims in the same manner as if the marriage had been dissolved by his death.[9]

(III) Estates by Entirety and in Community. Where property belongs to the community or is held as an estate by the entirety, the spouses become tenants in common on the granting of an absolute divorce.[10]

c. As to Resuming Maiden Name. A woman who has obtained a divorce may, even without statutory authority, resume her maiden name.[11]

d. As to Remarriage — (I) In General. Either party to an absolute divorce is at liberty to contract a new marriage,[12] and unless authorized by statute the decree of divorce should not impose restraints upon this right.[13] In many states, however, statutes have been enacted prohibiting the remarriage of the guilty party either absolutely or for a certain period subsequent to the divorce,[14] except, in some jurisdictions, by leave of court granted upon a showing of good behavior since the dissolution of the marriage.[15] Where defendant in a divorce suit is a non-resident, however, the jurisdiction of the court is limited to the dissolution of the marriage, and his remarriage cannot be prohibited.[16]

(II) Operation of Statutory Prohibition. A statute prohibiting the remarriage of a divorced person in the lifetime of the former spouse does not operate where the divorce was obtained in another state;[17] nor does it operate against a remarriage in another state,[18] even though the parties go there to evade the law of their domicile.[19]

2. Of Limited Divorce. A limited divorce, although it does not dissolve the marriage, substitutes for the common-law obligations arising from the marriage the wife to obtain a new trial is waived where she accepts alimony paid in compliance with the judgment.[29]

B. Grounds. A new trial or a rehearing will not be granted in a divorce suit except upon a sufficient ground,[30] such for example as the insufficiency of the evidence to support the decree,[31] or the discovery of new evidence.[32]

XVII. APPEAL.[33]

A. Right of Review — 1. In General. A right of review by appeal or writ of error does not exist in suits for a divorce,[34] unless as is the case in most jurisdictions the right is conferred by constitution or statute.[35]

Fraud.— A new trial will not be granted on the ground of fraud, unless the fraud is clearly proven. Folsom v. Folsom, 55 N. H. 78. And see Spitzmesser v. Spitzmesser, 26 Ind. App. 532, 60 N. E. 315, holding that a decree should not be set aside and a new trial ordered on the ground that defendant was misled and did not appear at the trial, where it was not claimed that there was any fraud or that plaintiff was connected with her being misled.

Surprise.— A new trial will not be granted because of a refusal to order libellant to produce more definite specifications as to the times and places of alleged acts of cruelty, especially where the court suggested that defendant should have a reasonable postponement to meet any unexpected evidence, of which he did not avail himself. Gardner v. Gardner, 2 Gray (Mass.) 434.

31. Ferguson v. Ferguson, 1 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 604, holding that it is the power and duty of a court of chancery to grant a new trial where there is reason to believe that defendant has been unjustly found guilty of the offense charged. Compare Hills v. Hills, 76 Me. 486.

Conflicting evidence.— A new trial should not be granted merely because the evidence is contradictory. Matthai v. Matthai, 49 Cal. 90; Donnelly v. Donnelly, 50 N. Y. App. Div. 453, 64 N. Y. Suppl. 83.

Weight of evidence.— A new trial should not be granted on the ground that the verdict is against the weight of evidence unless the court is satisfied with reasonable certainty that there has been error. Scott v. Scott, 9 Jur. N. S. 1251, 33 L. J. P. & M. 1, 9 L. T. Rep. N. S. 454, 3 Swab. & Tr. 320, 12 Wkly. Rep. 126; Miller v. Miller, 31 L. J. P. & M. 73, 2 Swab. & Tr. 427, 5 L. T. Rep. N. 32. Howarth v. Howarth, 9 P. D. 218, 51 L. T. Rep. N. S. 872, holding that the courts will grant new trials because of newly discovered evidence more frequently and for less cause in divorce cases than in other actions.

Materiality of evidence.— A new trial will not be granted where the newly discovered evidence relates to causes for divorce which are not alleged in the petition (Cass v. Cass, 34 La. Ann. 611; Pinkard v. Pinkard, 14 Tex. 356, 65 Am. Dec. 129), nor where the evidence is immaterial to the offense charged (Harnett v. Harnett, 59 Iowa 401, 13 N. W. 408, holding that where a wife has obtained a divorce on the ground of inhuman treatment, newly discovered evidence that the wife's relatives had unduly interested themselves in the case will not entitle the husband to a new trial).

Time of discovery.— The evidence must be shown to have been unknown to the applicant at the time of the trial and incapable of production at the trial by the exercise of reasonable diligence. Chapman v. Chapman, 129 Ill. 386, 21 N. E. 806, where defendant's application for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence as to the residence of complainant was denied, since it appeared that the only reason for not producing it at the trial was that defendant did not believe that complainant would testify as to her residence as alleged in her complaint.

2. Waiver of Right. If the party aggrieved by a decree of divorce remarries[36] or accepts benefits therennder,[37] the right to have the decree reviewed on appeal or writ of error is thereby waived.

B. Decisions Reviewable. Constitutional or statutory provisions making appellate jurisdiction dependent upon the pecuniary amount or value in controversy do not apply to divorce suits.[38] An appeal may be taken from an order, made after final decree of divorce, requiring defendant to pay an attorney's fee to plaintiff to enable her to contest a motion for a new trial.[39]

C. Parties. The party aggrieved or his legal representative may ordinarily appeal from a decree in a divorce suit as in other civil cases.[40]

D. Taking and Perfecting Appeal — 1. Time of Taking. Special statutory provisions sometimes require an appeal in divorce cases to be taken within a shorter period of time than in other cases.[41]

Dec. 717, holding that a constitutional provision giving the supreme court appellate jurisdiction where the matter in dispute exceeds two hundred dollars means that when the subject of litigation is capable of pecuniary computation the matter in dispute must exceed two hundred dollars in value, and does not prevent an appeal in suits for divorce. See also generally Appeal and Error, 2 Cyc. 542 et seq., 546, 584.

2. NOTICE AND BOND. Notice should be given and bonds or recognizances should be executed to perfect appeals in divorce cases in the same manner and to the same extent as in other cases, unless otherwise provided by statute.[42]

E. Supersedeas. An appeal from a decree of divorce ordinarily suspends the operation of the decree upon the rights of the appellant, although no supersedeas bond is executed.[43] However, the lower court retains jurisdiction to the extent of considering an application for the payment of alimony and the expenses of the wife pending a determination of the appeal.[44]

F. Sufficiency of Record — 1. JURISDICTIONAL FACTS. The record must affirmatively show that the trial court had jurisdiction over the parties and over the subject-matter of the controversy.[45]

2. EVIDENCE. The appellate court will not attempt to review the evidence in a divorce suit without a full transcript of the testimony.[46] It is not necessary to preserve in the record of a divorce suit the proofs heard by the court on a decree pro confesso. It is enough that the court finds the allegations of the bill to be true, where the contrary is not shown.[47]

G. Assignments of Error. As in other cases the assignment of errors must definitely point out the errors complained of.[48]

H. Questions Not Raised Below. In divorce suits, as in other cases, it is the rule that questions not raised in the trial court will not be noticed on appeal.[49]

I. Review — 1. General Scope. The appellate court may ordinarily consider and determine all questions which are properly presented for decision.[50]

2. Parties Entitled to Allege Error. Ordinarily the appellee cannot complain of errors if he has not taken a cross appeal.[51]

3. Presumption of Correctness. As in other cases the presumption is in favor of the correctness of a decree in a divorce suit.[52]

4. Grounds of Decision Below. The appellate court may affirm the judgment on grounds other than those assigned by the lower court.[53]

5. Discretion of Lower Court.[54] If the court below has a discretionary power to refuse a divorce, its judgment will not be reversed unless it is clearly shown that its power has been improperly exercised;[55] and the same rule applies to incidental matters within the discretion of the lower court.[56]

6. Questions of Fact — a. In General. Appellate courts, in the consideration bill as amended was not sworn to, will be disregarded if the facts which are to be introduced by the amendment negative collusion); Oliver v. Oliver, 20 Mo. 261 (holding that in the absence of exceptions, a judgment dismissing a bill for divorce will be affirmed); Wetz v. Wetz, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 597, 66 S. W. 869 (holding that where the motion for new trial failed to call to the attention of the court the question of the residence of plaintiff for the purpose of conferring jurisdiction, it will not be considered on appeal). See Appeal and Error, 2 Cyc. 660 et seq. See, however, Kirsch v. Kirsch, 83 Cal. 633, 23 Pac. 1083, holding that an objection that an amended cross complaint contains no prayer for affirmative relief may be raised for the first time on appeal.

Alimony.— Where there is no motion for a new trial, and no objection or exception taken, the court cannot consider an erroneous ruling of the trial court in giving alimony after the bill for divorce was dismissed. Stafford v. Stafford, 9 Ind. 162; Castell v. Castell, 28 La. Ann. 91.

Objections raised on motion for new trial.— Where it was urged on a motion for new trial that plaintiff had failed to show that the witnesses called by her to prove her residence were freeholders, as required by statute, it is sufficient for the purpose of raising that question on appeal. Driver v. Driver, 153 Ind. 88, 54 N. E. 389.

52. Curl v. Curl, 130 Cal. 638, 63 Pac. 65 (holding that on an appeal from a judgment for plaintiff, taken without bill of exceptions and without findings, the supreme court must presume that the evidence supported the complaint); Bergen v. Bergen, 22 Ill. 187 (holding that the presumption is that the court granting a divorce, if it received admissions as evidence, properly scrutinized the evidence, so as to be satisfied that the admissions were made in sincerity and without fraud); Haygood v. Haygood, 25 Tex. 576 (holding that where the verdict is in favor of plaintiff but the judgment is in favor of defendant, it will be presumed, in the absence of any statement of facts, that the judge correctly disregarded the verdict).

53. Hare v. Hare, 10 Tex. 355, holding that where a demurrer to a petition showing as special cause of exception that the court had no jurisdiction was erroneously sustained, the supreme court might affirm the judgment on the ground that the petition was defective for want of certainty. See Appeal and Error, 3 Cyc. 221.

Different grounds of divorce.— Where two or more grounds of divorce are alleged in a complaint, and a decree is granted upon evidence sufficient to support one of them, it should not be reversed because the evidence does not support the other. of questions of fact in divorce cases, are subject to much the same restraint as in other civil cases;[57] but they are usually clothed with the power to review such questions in determining whether the facts as proved are sufficient to establish legal grounds for divorce.[58] Divorce suits are treated in many jurisdictions as suits in equity,[59] and appellate courts will as in other equity cases[60] review questions of fact and determine from the whole case whether or not the divorce was properly granted or refused;[61] subject, however, to a different rule existing in some states confining the jurisdiction of appellate courts to a review of errors of law in suits in equity and actions at law indiscriminately.[62]

b. Sufficiency of Evidence — (i) Conflicting Evidence. A decree granting or refusing a divorce on evidence which is conflicting will not be disturbed.[63]

Blair v. Blair, 122 Cal. 57, 54 Pac. 369 (holding that where the cruelty is largely mental, it is for the trial court to weigh the evidence in order that the ultimate fact may be properly determined); Andrews v. Andrews, 120 Cal. 184, 52 Pac. 298 (holding that whether the misconduct complained of caused grievous bodily injury or grievous mental suffering is largely a question of fact to be determined upon the trial); Fleming v. Fleming, 95 Cal. 430, 30 Pac. 566, 29 Am. St. Rep. 124 (holding that whether grievous mental suffering was caused by certain acts of defendant is a question of fact for the trial court, and that its finding thereon is conclusive on the appellate court); Shuster v. Shuster, (Nebr. 1902) 92 N. W. 203 (holding that whether the improper language of the husband was provoked by the acts of the wife, unless the language was disproportionate to the occasion, is a question for the trial court); Cross v. Cross, 108 N. Y. 628, 15 N. E. 333 (holding that where the testimony shows a previous separation and a settled determination of the parties to live apart, the question whether the result sprang from an abandonment of the wife by the husband or of the husband by the wife is purely one of fact for the trial court, and the result will not be reviewed on appeal); Pollock v. Pollock, 9 S. D. 48, 68 N. W. 176 (holding that whether there were threats of harm justifying the leaving of the family home is a question of fact for the trial court, and that its decision thereon will not be disturbed unless there is a clear preponderance of evidence against it). J. Determination and Disposition of Cause.[68] An appellate court which has acquired jurisdiction of an appeal in a divorce suit may dispose of the cause by affirming, reversing, or modifying the decree appealed from.[69] Ordinarily on reversal the case will be remanded to the court below for a new trial[70] or for a determination of incidental matters,[71] although in some states the appellate court is authorized to render such a decree as according to the facts appearing in the record ought to have been rendered in the court below.[72] The reversal of a decree vacates the decree and all proceedings necessarily dependent upon it.[73]

K. Costs.[74] The successful party in an appeal in a divorce suit, even though it be the husband, is generally entitled to costs.[75] If, however, it appears that

Massachusetts.—Fuller v. Fuller, 177 Mass. 184, 58 N. E. 588, 83 Am. XVIII. COSTS AND FEES.[77]

A. When and How Awarded — 1. Discretion of Court. Costs in a divorce suit are not awarded as a matter of right for or against either party, but are usually within the discretion of the court.[78] Where both parties are at fault the court may equally divide the costs,[79] require each party to pay his own costs,[80] or allow no costs to either party.[81]

2. In Behalf of and Against Whom Awarded — a. For or Against the Wife. A wife is usually a favored party in respect to the allowance of costs, and she is frequently relieved from their payment, although she is the unsuccessful plaintiff or a defeated defendant.[82] If it appears, however, that the wife is the party in fault and is the owner of a separate estate, costs will not be awarded in her favor against the husband.[83]

b. For or Against the Husband. If the husband is the defeated party, the

In England the husband is not required to pay the costs in a divorce suit when his wife has sufficient means to pay them (Milne v. Milne, L. R. 2 P. 202, 40 L. J. P. & M. 13, 23 L. T. Rep. N. The burden is on the husband to show that costs of the suit will be awarded against him almost as a matter of course.[84] Although the husband is decreed a divorce for his wife's misconduct, the circumstances of the case may be such as to justify an award of costs against him.[85]

c. Against Third Parties. Costs may in certain circumstances be taxed against parties to the suit other than the husband or wife,[86] such for instance as a co-respondent[87] or a next friend suing in behalf of the wife.[88]

B. Amount and Items. The items taxable as costs are generally governed by statutes; and statutes permitting generally the award of costs in divorce suits are construed as authorizing an award of taxable costs only, as controlled by statutes applicable to other civil cases.[89] Whether or not an allowance for counsel fees and expenses of the suit already incurred can be taxed as costs and included in the final judgment depends upon the statute. In many states it can be done,[90] while in others such an allowance can be made only pendente lite for the purpose of enabling the wife to prosecute the suit to a conclusion.[91]

C. Payment and Collection — 1. In General. The taxable costs are not payable before the termination of the suit.[92]

2. Enforcement of Payment. The taxable costs may be collected by execution against the property, but ordinarily no attachment against the person will be awarded, or proceedings in contempt for non-payment be allowed.[93]

D. Liability For Counsel Fees — 1. Liability of Husband. In England a member of the legal profession who in good faith and upon probable cause prosecutes a wife's suit for divorce or defends the husband's suit against her may recover at law from the husband reasonable compensation for his services and expenses, whether he is successful or not.[94] In America the authorities on this question are irreconcilable.[95] The weight of authority and the better reasoning

The Pennsylvania statute authorizing courts to enforce their decrees in divorce cases by attachment against the person of defendant is limited in its application to decrees in divorces a mensa et thoro (Uhrich v. Uhrich, 4 Pa. Contempt.— It has been held, however, that upon the husband's refusal without sufficient cause to obey the order of the court and pay the costs, he may be proceeded against by attachment for contempt (Ballard v. Carperton, 2 Metc. (Ky.) 412); also that an attachment for contempt may be issued after the return of an execution unsatisfied. are against the liability of the husband, as upon implied contract, to pay for services rendered the wife in prosecuting[96] or defending[97] a suit for an absolute divorce; but where the action is for a separation the services rendered in her behalf are necessaries for which the husband should be held liable.[98] In any event it must be shown that the wife had a reasonable cause for instituting the suit.[99]

2. LIABILITY OF WIFE. At common law a wife's contract to pay an attorney a certain sum to prosecute or defend a suit for divorce is void because of her coverture.[1] The statutes of the several states have now for the most part relieved the wife of her common-law disabilities,[2] however, and under these statutes a contract made by a wife for the payment of an attorney for services in respect to the prosecution or defense of a suit for divorce may be enforced against her.[3]

In Iowa the decisions, or at least the dicta, are in conflict. From the latest case (Sherwin v. Maben, 78 Iowa 467, 43 N. W. 292) it would seem that the husband is not liable for services rendered the wife in a divorce suit brought by her, but is liable for services rendered the wife in a suit brought by him against her. Morrison v. Holt, 42 N. H. 478, 80 Am. Dec. 120. An examination of the cases cited in support of the doctrine that the husband is not liable for such services will show that they are nearly all actions for absolute divorce, and proceed on the ground that the purpose of the action was a dissolution of the marital relationship. XIX. ALIMONY AND ALLOWANCES.

A. In General — 1. DEFINITION. Alimony in a general sense means the allowance required by law to be made to a wife out of her husband's estate for her support, either during a matrimonial suit or at its termination, where the fact of marriage is established and she proves herself entitled to a separate maintenance.[5]

Whipple v. Giles, 55 N. H. 139, holding that a statute authorizing a married woman to contract and sue and be sued in respect to her separate estate as if she were unmarried does not authorize her to make a contract with an attorney for services in prosecuting a libel for divorce.

Y.) 606 (holding that on a bill for divorce on the ground of adultery, defendant is not entitled to security for costs, although the bill contains also a charge of cruelty, since the statute applies only to actions for divorce from bed and board); McElhinney v. McElhinney, 13 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 194 (holding that when libellant and her next friend are not residents, and neither has property in the state, and respondent will resist the libel, libellant must give security for costs); Calhoun v. Calhoun, 18 Wkly. Notes Cas. 2. Classification. Alimony is either temporary or permanent. Temporary alimony is that which is payable during the pendency of the suit, and is technically called alimony pendente lite. Permanent alimony is that which is payable after the termination of the suit during the joint lives of the parties.[6]

3. Origin and Existence. The doctrine of alimony is based upon the common-law obligation of the husband to support his wife, which is not removed by a divorce obtained by her for his misconduct.[7] The right of alimony, both temporary and permanent, was recognized in ecclesiastical law,[8] and is commonly recognized by modern statutes.[9] Even in the absence of statutory enactment, however, the courts will, if the legislature has given them jurisdiction in divorce cases, assume jurisdiction and administer the relief in conformity with the principles of ecclesiastical or common law.[10]

8. Shelford Mar. & Div. 586.

Temporary and permanent alimony.— Temporary alimony was awarded to the wife whether she was plaintiff or defendant (Wilson v. Wilson, 2 Hagg. Const. 203), for the purpose, as under the present law, of enabling her to prosecute or defend the suit, and for her support and maintenance pending the proceedings; and permanent alimony was granted where the wife had shown herself entitled to a separate maintenance (Ayliffe Parergon Jur. Can. Ang. 58; Godolphin Abr. Eccl. Laws 508; Shelford Mar. & Div. 292).

Absolute and limited divorce.— Divorces a vinculo were not decreed in ecclesiastical courts. Hence alimony was granted by them only as an incident to a divorce a mensa et thoro. Lawson v. Shotwell, 27 Miss. 630; Rees v. Waters, 9 Watts (Pa.) 90; Cooke v. Cooke, 2 Phillim. 40, 1 Eng. Eccl. 178.

Nullity of marriage.— Neither kind of alimony was granted unless there was a subsisting marriage; so where a nullity was decreed for causes which render the marriage void ab initio, no alimony was awarded. 4. Relief to Husband. Alimony being based upon the common-law obligation of a husband to support his wife, its very nature is opposed to affording that relief to a husband.[11] In some jurisdictions, however, statutes have been enacted providing for the maintenance of the husband and the children of the marriage out of the wife's separate estate under certain conditions,[12] or requiring a division of community property, or a restoration to the husband of property acquired by the wife from him prior or subsequent to the marriage.[13]

5. Independent Suit For Alimony. While the cases are in conflict, yet by the weight of authority, alimony may be allowed only as an incident to a suit for divorce, and not where it is the only relief sought,[14] in the absence of statutes conferring upon courts authority to decree separate maintenance of the wife under certain conditions.[15]

6. Prerequisites — a. Jurisdiction — (I) In General. It may be stated as a general rule, subject to exceptions prescribed either by statute or the practice in particular states, that orders for alimony should be made by the court in which the action is pending or by which a decree of divorce is rendered;[16] and under a statute conferring upon the court authority to order temporary alimony a judge sitting in chambers in vacation cannot grant such an order.[17]

(II) Upon Appeal. The authorities differ as to the power of an appellate court to grant an order directing the payment of temporary alimony and suit money upon an appeal in a divorce action. In some jurisdictions such power is denied,[18] but the weight of authority is in favor of an exercise of the power.[19]

(III) Of Person and Property of Defendant — (A) In General. The obligation of a husband to support his wife is personal, and therefore a decree of alimony against a non-resident defendant is in personam and void,[20] unless he has

(II) As To Resources of Husband. Unless otherwise provided by statute the court's jurisdiction to award alimony is not dependent on allegations in the complaint as to the husband's resources,[26] although satisfactory proof of his financial ability must be made.[27]

(III) As to Specific Property. If a division and distribution of property is sought as alimony by either party, the petition should specifically describe the property affected.[28]

(IV) Prayer For Relief. It is proper practice in probably all jurisdictions for the complainant to pray for alimony in her petition,[29] although the relief, being necessarily involved in every suit wherein a decree of divorce is rendered, will be granted even if not asked for in the pleadings.[30]

(V) Verification. Alimony will not be granted on the unverified pleadings of either party, where the allegations therein are denied, and are not supported by affidavit or other proof.[31]

vision therefor.[41] Such alimony will be allowed in actions for either absolute or limited divorce,[42] with the distinction, however, that, while in suits for absolute divorce the allowance is usually made as a matter of course, in suits for limited divorce a meritorious cause of action and actual injury must be shown before the relief will be granted.[43] The courts may award temporary alimony notwithstanding statutes conferring upon the wife the control of her separate property and the benefit of her own earnings,[44] although by such statutes the force of the reason for awarding temporary alimony is somewhat lessened, and the courts will not grant the relief so much as a matter of course.[45]

2. Discretion of Court. Allowance of temporary alimony is in the discretion of the court, and not a right belonging in all cases to the wife.[46] It is controlled by the circumstances in each particular case, and depends upon the probability of the success of the applicant's case, the pecuniary and social condition of the parties, and the other essentials hereinafter specified.[47] Moreover, this discretion is judicial and not arbitrary, and is subject to review on appeal.[48]

On the contrary it has been held that under statutes providing for alimony upon a decree of divorce being rendered, the court cannot order an allowance for the support of the wife pending a libel against her. This rule has since been altered in Vermont by a statute (St. [1894] § 2687) authorizing temporary alimony to the wife in any case. In North Carolina it has been held that a defendant wife who does not set up a claim on her part for a divorce is not entitled to alimony pendente lite. Reeves v. Reeves, 82 N. C. 348.

3. Pendency of Suit — a. In General. Service of process or appearance by defendant is essential to the exercise of the power of granting temporary alimony. Until such time the suit is not pending and the court has no jurisdiction over defendant.[49]

b. State of Pleadings and Issues. Temporary alimony should not be allowed upon the application of plaintiff before the suit has so far progressed as to show to the court that a meritorious cause of action exists.[50] It may be granted in the discretion of the court before defendant's answer is filed.[51]

c. Pending Appeal. Temporary alimony should be allowed the wife pending an appeal, where it is shown that the appeal was taken in good faith and that the allowance is necessary,[52] either by the court below or by the appellate court, according to the practice in the particular jurisdiction.[53] It has been held that in the discretion of the court temporary alimony continues until the termination of the litigation, including an appeal from the judgment rendered below.[54]

d. After Final Decree. Temporary alimony cannot be allowed after a final decree or dismissal of the suit, for then the suit is no longer pending and the court has no jurisdiction of the parties.[55]

4. Matters Essential to Allowance — a. Existence of Marriage — (i) In General. The right to alimony does not exist in the absence of a valid, subsisting, marital relation, since without this there is no obligation for the support of the alleged wife.[55]

(ii) Common-Law or De Facto Marriage. If a marriage de facto is admitted, and the parties have in good faith cohabited as husband and wife, the fact that the validity of the marriage as a marriage de jure is questioned will not preclude the right of the wife to an allowance of temporary alimony;[57] and a common-law marriage is also sufficient to authorize an allowance of temporary alimony.[58]

(iii) Proof of Marriage. In some jurisdictions, unless the marriage is admitted, there must be a preliminary investigation of the question of marriage before temporary alimony is allowed,[59] and the burden of proving the marriage is upon the applicant.[60] The evidence of marriage required on this preliminary hearing need not, however, amount to absolute proof. It is sufficient if it shows a fair probability that the wife will on the final hearing succeed in establishing the marriage.[61]

b. Pecuniary Needs of Parties — (i) Financial Ability of Wife. The wife must show upon her application for temporary alimony that she has no means under her control sufficient to maintain herself pending the litigation. her complaint charges adultery on information and belief, which is unequivocally denied by defendant.[66] If, however, there is some competent evidence of the husband's guilt, the wife will be allowed temporary alimony.[67]

d. Good Faith of Applicant. If it appears to the satisfaction of the court that the suit by the wife has not been instituted in good faith to secure a divorce, but merely to collect money from the husband or to compel him to support her, alimony pendente lite will not be allowed.[68]

5. Defenses and Objections — a. Misconduct of Wife. If the wife is guilty of marital misconduct, she is not entitled to temporary alimony.[69] Consequently if she admits, or does not deny, charges of misconduct in the complaint which are sufficient to entitle the husband to a divorce, her right to temporary alimony is barred.[70] The merits of the case will be investigated only to an extent sufficient to determine whether the bill is exhibited in good faith.[71] The fact that there is strong evidence in support of the wife's misconduct is not alone sufficient to preclude an allowance of temporary alimony,[72] and if the misconduct is denied, or a reasonable defense, such as condonation, connivance, or the like, is shown, her application will be allowed.[73]

J. P. & M. 91, 4 Swab. & Tr. 228, 11 Wkly. Rep. 257), and that her supposed guilt is never to be taken into consideration against her (Crampton v. Crampton, 32 L. J. P. & M. 142).

Conflicting affidavits.— The question of the wife's guilt should not be tried by conflicting affidavits. Great injustice might be done if the husband were not compelled to furnish to his wife the means of having so important a question of fact decided in the usual way. Boesenberg v. Boesenberg, 50 N. settlement for alimony with her husband which will be a bar to an additional provision for her support by way of temporary alimony.[74]

c. Other Provision For Wife's Support. Temporary alimony will not be allowed where ample provision has been otherwise made by the husband for the wife's support.[75]

d. Offer to Provide. The wife's refusal to accept support offered to her by her husband at his house does not constitute a defense to her application for temporary alimony.[76]

e. Poverty of Husband. In an action by a husband against his wife for divorce his poverty is no defense to an application for temporary alimony, since he should not be permitted to prosecute the action if he cannot furnish the wife with means to make her defense;[77] but where the suit is brought by the wife, the husband's poverty may be pleaded by him in defense to the application.[78]

f. Waiver of Defenses and Objections. Where a separation agreement pro-

Sufficiency of denial.— Ordinarily the wife's denial of the alleged misconduct is sufficient to entitle her to alimony unless the evidence produced against her is so strong as to render it improbable that she should succeed (Glaser v. Glaser, 36 Misc. (N. Y.) 231, 73 N. Y. Suppl. 284); but a denial which is merely formal, leaving actual facts testified to by reputable witnesses and which establish her guilt undenied and unexplained, is not sufficient to justify an award of alimony (Stearns v. Stearns, 33 N. Y. App. Div. 630, 53 N. Y. Suppl. 348).

Ch. 341 (holding that where the wife had received, since the commencement of the suit, a sum of money in derogation of the marital rights of the husband, which he consented that she should retain and apply to the expenses of the suit, the court refused to order him to pay anything further to enable her to prosecute her suit, but granted her alimony pendente lite); McCloskey v. McCloskey, 68 Mo. vides that the husband shall pay to the wife a certain sum for her support, and that on default an order may be made granting alimony at the same rate, the husband cannot, on a motion for temporary alimony, object that the wife has not a meritorious cause of action;[79] nor can the husband set up in defense any misconduct of the wife not alleged by him in recrimination.[80]

6. PROCEDURE — a. Application. The practice in the several states controls the nature of the proceeding for an allowance of temporary alimony, and the form and sufficiency of the application. In some states the application is not required to be instituted by petition but may be made on affidavit and motion.[81]

b. Notice. It has been held that alimony pendente lite may be granted without notice,[82] but where under the practice it is granted upon motion, the notice required for motions should be given,[83] unless other notice is expressly provided by statute.[84]

c. Submission to Jury or Referee. The allowance of temporary alimony being within the discretion of the court,[85] it is not necessary or proper that the question should be submitted to a jury.[86] A reference, however, may be directed by the court in its discretion to aid it in the determination of the questions in issue.[87]

d. Proof. An order for temporary alimony will not be made upon a mere presumption. There must be sufficient and legal evidence in support of the essential facts,[88] either by affidavits of the applicant and other persons,[89] or by depositions taken upon notice to the other party,[90] or by the oral testimony of the applicant.[91]

7. AMOUNT — a. In General. The amount allowed as temporary alimony is within the judicial discretion of the court, as is also the allowance itself,[92] to be governed by the needs of the wife, the husband's ability to pay, and all the circumstances of the particular case.[93] Consideration should be given to any cir-

Order to show cause.— Where the statute authorizes the court to grant temporary alimony upon application of the wife, the court may make an order requiring the husband to appear and show cause why it should not be granted, and in such case no notice of the application need be given to the husband prior to the making of the order. cumstances increasing the wife's expenses during the progress of the suit beyond that which they would ordinarily be;[94] and the wife's ability[95] and the husband's disability[96] are both material to a proper determination of the amount which should be awarded. The allowance pending the suit should be no more than is necessary for the wife's temporary support,[97] but should be sufficient to furnish her with means to support herself comfortably pending the litigation in accordance with the station of life to which she was accustomed prior to the commencement thereof.[98] It seems that more than her mere wants may be provided for,[99] although the amount allowed should be moderate,[1] and should not be so large as to place her in a better position than she was in before the suit was instituted.[2] The right of the wife to support pending suit embraces a provision for the maintenance of herself and such children as are dependent upon her, including the expense of an ordinary education for such children, but will not be extended against the opposition or without the acquiescence of the husband, to include the professional training of a grown son not in the wife's custody.[3] applied. In England[4] and in some of the states[5] it has been attempted to establish a fixed proportion of the joint incomes of the husband and wife to be paid the wife for her support pending the litigation; but such proportion is subject to variation with the circumstances of the parties and of the particular case,[6] and in the American cases allowances are made for the most part without effort to determine any fixed proportion of the husband's property and income.[7]

Georgia.— Collins v. Collins, 94 Ga. 490, 19 S. E. 823 (holding an allowance of twelve dollars per month reasonable where the husband was possessed of an estate valued at one thousand eight hundred dollars, against which there was a mortgage of seven hundred dollars); Collins v. Collins, 29 Ga. 517 (holding that an allowance of twenty-five dollars per month is not excessive where the husband is worth at least twelve thousand dollars).

Illinois.— Cooper v. Cooper, 185 Ill. 163, 56 N. E. 1059 (where it appeared that the husband had an annual income of at least two hundred thousand dollars; that preceding the separation the wife had received a monthly allowance averaging nine hundred and fifty dollars; that she had been accustomed to having large amounts expended on her account; and it was held that an allowance of six hundred dollars per month and house rent and one thousand five hundred dollars for suit money was not an abuse of discretion); Harding v. Harding, 144 Ill. 588, 32 N. E. 206, 21 L. R. A. 310 (where the husband had an annual income in excess of thirty thousand dollars, and the wife an annual income of about one thousand dollars, and an allowance of two hundred dollars a month was held not excessive); Umlauf v. Umlauf, 22 Ill. Kentucky.— Brown v. Brown, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 317 (where it was held that an allowance of one hundred and sixty dollars per annum to the wife is not excessive, no matter how poor the husband may be); Pearce v. Pearce, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 485 (holding that where a husband earns one hundred and fifty dollars per month, twenty dollars per month is a small allowance).

Michigan.— Potts v. Potts, 68 Mich. 492, 36 N. W. 240, where an allowance of eight dollars per week for the support of the wife and an infant child was held not excessive, it appearing that the husband was worth more than twenty thousand dollars.

Montana.— Finkelstein v. Finkelstein, 14 Mont. 1, 34 Pac. 1090, holding that an allowance of thirty dollars per month as temporary alimony is not unreasonable, where defendant is conducting a large business.

8. Order[8] — a. In General. The facts on which a decree of temporary alimony is based must appear in the record.[9]

b. Conditional Allowance. The court cannot require the wife to surrender any right as a condition of granting the allowance.[10]

c. Modification. The court may in its discretion modify an order for temporary alimony by reducing or increasing it,[11] as may seem proper under the New Jersey.— Finn v. Finn, 26 N. J. J. Eq. 389 (where an allowance of two dollars a week was granted, it appearing that the husband's property did not exceed three thousand five hundred dollars in value, yielding an annual income of not more than two hundred dollars, and that he had no trade or business or other source of income).

New York.— Scragg v. Scragg, 18 N. Y. North Carolina.—Moore v. Moore, 130 N. C. 333, 41 S. E. 943, holding an allowance of four thousand dollars as temporary alimony not excessive, where defendant was worth from eighty thousand dollars to one hundred thousand dollars, and his annual income from eight thousand dollars to ten thousand dollars.

See 17 Cent. Dig. tit. "Divorce," § 634.

Excessive allowances.— In the following cases the allowances of temporary alimony were deemed excessive: Sharon v. Sharon, 75 Cal. 1, 16 Pac. 345 (where the parties were secretly married, and the husband had agreed to allow the wife a certain amount per month until the marriage was announced, and it was held an abuse of discretion to allow her a greater sum as alimony pendente lite); Gardner v. Gardner, 54 Ga. 560 (where an allowance of forty dollars per month was reduced to twenty dollars, it appearing that the husband's estate was small and that he had supported and educated their only child until she was twenty-one); Cravens v. Cravens, 4 Bush (Ky.) 435 (where an allowance of seven hundred dollars was deemed exorbitant, the annual income of the husband not exceeding one thousand dollars); Boesenberg v. Boesenberg, 50 N. Y. App. Div. 622, 63 N. Y. Suppl. 770 (holding an allowance of twenty-five dollars per week excessive where the husband's income is claimed by him not to exceed one hundred dollars per month, and reducing the allowance to fifteen dollars per week, although it appeared that the parties had entered into articles of separation whereby the husband agreed to pay the wife twenty-five dollars per week); Hardy v. Hardy, 3 Silv. Supreme (N. Y.) 116, 6 N. Y. Suppl. 300 (where an allowance of one hundred and seventy-five dollars per month was reduced to one hundred dollars per month upon evidence that the wife was not wholly blameless, that the husband's income was five thousand dollars per annum, that he had debts amounting to four thousand five hundred dollars in part caused by his wife's extravagance, that he had deeded to her a comfortable home, and that no one was dependent upon her for support).

circumstances of the particular case; and this may be done upon the application of either party, whether plaintiff or defendant.[12]

d. Vacation or Dismissal. Since the court has full discretion in respect to allowances as temporary alimony it may for the wife's misconduct[13] or for any other sufficient cause[14] vacate or set aside an order granting the allowance.

e. Enforcement. An order for temporary alimony may be enforced by contempt proceedings,[15] if instituted while the action is pending.[16]

9. Commencement and Termination. It has been stated as a general rule that temporary alimony can be decreed only for future support, and should commence only at the time of notice of an application for its payment,[17] although it has been held that the order may properly relate back to the commencement of the suit.[18] The allowance ceases upon the entry of a final decree dissolving the marriage relation,[19] or dismissing the complaint.[20]

C. Counsel Fees and Expenses[21]— 1. Allowance in General. Either by virtue of express statutory enactment or by application of what is deemed the common-law doctrine governing the subject a husband may be required to make suitable allowances for the expenses incurred by the wife in a divorce suit instituted by or against him, and for the employment of counsel to aid her therein.[22] The rules governing the allowance of temporary alimony are for the most part applicable to allowances for expenses and counsel fees. The underlying doctrine is the same in both cases, and allowances are withheld for either purpose upon the same grounds.[23]

2. In What Proceedings Allowed. It has been held that a court of equity may, without the aid of a statute make an allowance to the wife for expenses and counsel fees in a suit brought by her to impeach the validity of a decree of divorce upon the ground of fraud;[24] and suit money has generally been allowed in proceedings instituted by either party to reduce or increase the amount of temporary alimony.[25]

3. Condition or Stage of Proceedings. As in the case of an allowance of temporary alimony, it has generally been held that an application for the payment of the expenses and counsel fees of the wife should be made while the suit is pending.[26]

In New York a different rule apparently exists. It has there been held that after a divorce a husband cannot be compelled to supply the wife with money for the prosecution or defense of suits brought in respect to an award of alimony, such as a proceeding by the wife to compel the payment of alimony. 4. DISCRETION OF COURT. The allowance of money for the expenses of the wife and her counsel fees is, as in the case of an allowance of temporary alimony,[27] largely within the discretion of the trial court,[28] and it will not be disturbed on appeal unless there is an abuse of discretion.[29]

5. MATTERS ESSENTIAL TO ALLOWANCE. The essential conditions under which allowances are made for counsel fees and expenses do not usually differ from those applicable to allowances of temporary alimony.[30] The existence of the marriage relation between the parties is ordinarily prerequisite to the allowance.[31] The wife need not prove the merits of her case,[32] although, as in the case of an application for temporary alimony, it must appear that she has good ground for bringing the suit.[33] She must show a necessity for the expenses incurred or to be incurred and for the services of counsel;[34] and finally must be without means of her own to meet such expenses and pay for such services.[35]

6. DEFENSES AND OBJECTIONS. An application for an allowance for expenses does not affect the jurisdiction of the trial court to allow counsel fees for services in presenting the case on appeal. Harding v. Harding, 205 Ill. 105, 68 N. E. 754 [affirming 105 Ill. App. 363].

Where anything remains to be done to protect the rights of the wife in the suit, and further services of counsel will be necessary to conduct the litigation to its conclusion, the court has power to secure her the future services of counsel and to provide for the payment of expenses to be thereafter incurred. and counsel fees may as a rule be barred for the same causes as an application for temporary alimony,[36] although allowances for expenses have been made where temporary alimony was refused, it appearing that the investigation of the charges and counter charges will necessarily involve a long and expensive litigation;[37] and in Pennsylvania it is usual to make allowances for counsel fees, although the wife is guilty of adultery[38] or has been convicted of felony.[39] The poverty or inability of the husband may be a sufficient objection to an allowance for counsel fees or expenses,[40] except where he himself brings the suit.[41] A separation agreement whereby the husband has made suitable provision for the maintenance of his wife does not necessarily preclude an allowance for expenses and counsel fees.[42]

7. Agreements by Counsel. An allowance for counsel fees may be refused where counsel have agreed to render their services gratuitously,[43] or for a percentage of the property recovered as a result of the suit.[44] An agreement between the wife and her counsel, without the husband being a party thereto, fixing the amount to be paid for their services, is not binding upon the husband, and should not control the allowance made by the court.[45] An agreement made by an attorney, upon receipt of a certain amount as a counsel fee, that no application shall be made for further fees until the result of the action is reached, does not bar an application for counsel fees upon a new trial, where the jury disagreed in the first trial.[46]

8. Application and Proceedings — a. In General. The practice in most of the states is for the wife to apply for an allowance for expenses and counsel fees at the same time as for an allowance of temporary alimony, and the proceedings thereon are usually controlled by the same rules.[47] The application should be made by special motion prior to the final judgment.[48]

b. Sufficiency of Affidavit or Petition. The affidavit or petition used upon an application for counsel fees or expenses of suit must show that a meritorious cause for a divorce exists,[49] and where the suit is brought by the husband against the wife she should deny upon oath the alleged misconduct or show that she has some other valid defense.[50] There should also be included a statement as to the services for which the allowance is required,[51] and as to the poverty of the wife and the ability of the husband to pay for such services.[52]

c. Who May Make Application. The allowance of expenses and counsel fees is for the benefit of the wife, and should be made upon an application in her name and not in the name of the attorneys.[53]

9. Amount and Purposes of Allowance — a. In General. The court may determine in its own discretion, from the facts and circumstances of each particular case as they appear from the pleadings and the proofs, the amount which should be allowed for the services of counsel and for the expenses of the wife in the prosecution or defense of the suit.[54] Only necessary litigation should be provided for,[55] and an allowance for attorney's services before the suit in devising schemes to secure evidence against the defendant is not proper,[56] although an allowance may be made for the services of an attorney in investigating the character and reputation of non-resident witnesses for plaintiff.[57] The amount allowed for counsel fees should not exceed the reasonable compensation of counsel under all circumstances of the case, without regard to what might properly be demanded, as between counsel and client, by the counsel actually employed.[58]

b. Number of Counsel. It is not within the discretion of the court to allow the wife money for unnecessary counsel.[59] Ordinarily an allowance for a single attorney is sufficient,[60] but the number of counsel for whose services the husband will be required to pay depends more or less upon the pecuniary ability of the husband and the character of the suit.[61]

c. Adequacy or Excessiveness of Allowance. As already indicated it is impossible to lay down a fixed rule determining the actual amount which should be allowed for counsel fees and expenses. An allowance will be adequate or excessive according to the wants of the wife, the pecuniary ability of the husband, and the difficulties involved in a litigation of the suit.[62]

See 17 Cent. Dig. tit. "Divorce," § 654.

Excessive allowances.— Where the sum of two thousand four hundred dollars had already been allowed for counsel fees, which was more than the husband had paid to his own attorneys, it is not an abuse of discretion on the part of the court to refuse a further allowance for counsel fees to the wife. White v. White, 86 Cal. 212, 24 Pac. 1031. A retainer fee of five hundred dollars is excessive where the annual income of the husband does not exceed one thousand dollars.

it be shown to be necessary to enable the wife further to prosecute or defend the suit, but this showing is essential.[63]

10. Order[64]— a. In General. The order may direct the payment of a specified sum for counsel fees and expenses generally, or may require the payment of a certain sum for a specific purpose.[65] It should direct the payment of the money to the wife and not to any other person.[66]

b. Modification and Additional Allowances. An order granting an allowance for counsel fees may, upon a showing of necessity, be modified by the court so as to direct the payment of an additional allowance.[67] The additional allowance cannot be granted after the wife has completed her case,[68] and where a further allowance is sought to cover expenses already incurred, it must be shown that it is necessary to enable her further to carry on the litigation.[69] Where an allowance is made by one judge, an application for a further allowance should not be made to another judge on substantially the same showing;[70] and where a suit is transferred from one county to another, the court in the latter county cannot refuse an allowance made by the court in the former.[71]

11. Allowance on Appeal. the appeal is taken by the husband, an allowance for counsel fees and expenses to enable the wife to resist it is granted almost as a matter of course.[73]

D. Permanent Alimony — 1. In General. Whatever distinction may have formerly existed, and whatever may have been the reasons therefor, the true doctrine under the modern law of divorce is to require a husband who has by his misconduct compelled his wife to live apart from him and secure a divorce to provide for her separate maintenance, whether the decree be for a suspension or an absolute dissolution of the marital relation.[74] The allowance of permanent alimony is commonly provided for by statute,[75] but even in the absence of express statutory authority it has been held that permanent alimony may be awarded as an incident to a decree of absolute divorce in the wife's favor.[76]

2. Misconduct or Non-Success of Wife in Suit. Generally speaking alimony is not allowed unless the decree of divorce is in the wife's favor.[77] In many jurisdictions, however, the general rule has been modified by statutes expressly or impliedly providing that permanent alimony may be awarded in favor of the wife, although a decree has been rendered against her.[78] Nevertheless the court will in the exercise of its discretion deny the relief where the wife has wilfully abandoned her husband without justification,[79] as where she leaves him to live in criminal relations with another.[80] So alimony may be denied if she has been guilty of adultery.[81] If, however, the husband was at fault and materially contributed to his wife's desertion or other misconduct, he may be required to provide for her support, although he obtains a divorce from her.[82] In some states the legislature has gone so far as to authorize the court to allow permanent alimony to the wife, although her application for a divorce is denied.[83] Ordinarily, however, there can be no alimony where a divorce is denied,[84] and even under statutes providing otherwise, maintenance cannot be awarded unless a cause for divorce or separation is established, and the decree is denied because of condonation or other defensive matter.[85]

3. Allowance After Divorce — a. In General. It is a general rule sustained by the weight of authority that an application for permanent alimony will not be entertained after a judgment for divorce has been rendered;[86] and this is so whether the divorce be absolute or limited.[87]

b. Reservation in Judgment. Alimony may be granted after a decree of divorce, if the right to have it subsequently determined is reserved therein.[88]

4. Determination of Right to Divorce. Permanent alimony should not be granted,[89] nor the question of the wife's right thereto considered,[90] until it is determined that a divorce should be granted, in the absence of statute authorizing alimony without divorce.[91]

5. Discretion of Court. As in the case of an allowance of temporary alimony,[92] an award of permanent alimony is within the sound discretion of the court,[93]

although if the award is erroneous on its face,[94] or unjust to either party or oppressive,[95] it is subject to revision and correction on appeal.

6. ARRANGEMENTS OR AGREEMENTS BETWEEN PARTIES — a. Settlements Upon Wife. Where a husband has already conveyed to the wife a fair share of his property, permanent alimony should not be decreed her upon obtaining a divorce for his misconduct.[96]

b. Antenuptial Contract. An antenuptial contract whereby each relinquished all rights to property then owned or afterward to be acquired by the other, and providing that upon the death of either party the property should descend to his or her heirs, does not preclude recovery of alimony by the wife upon her obtaining a decree of divorce.[97]

c. Validity and Effect — (1) IN GENERAL. The law upon reasons of public policy will ordinarily refuse to enforce contracts, made between a husband and his wife during the coverture, barring the wife from alimony;[98] and it has been generally held that a contract between the parties, executed pending the suit, whereby the husband agrees to pay a stipulated sum as alimony if a divorce be obtained is invalid as against public policy,[99] although a tripartite agreement entered into pending the suit, which does not depend upon the result thereof, is not open to the same objection.[1] If the agreement be made prior to suit brought, without anticipation of suit, it may be considered by the court in determining the amount to be allowed,[2] and, if there be no fraud or collusion and the agreement amply protects the interests of the wife and fairly disposes of the property and rights of the par-

Collateral attack of decree embodying agreement.— Where the wife agreed not to contest an action for divorce, the husband agreeing in return that if he obtained a divorce the decree should contain a provision for the payment to her of a certain sum for support, it was held that, although the agreement was void as against public policy, its invalidity was not available in a collateral attack on the decree in a suit afterward brought by the wife to recover instalments due thereunder. ties, it may be sustained.[3] After a decree of divorce has been rendered, the parties may agree as to the sums to be paid the wife as alimony, and in furtherance of such an agreement may submit their claims to an arbitrator for determination.[4]

(11) Separation Agreements. A valid separation agreement whereby the husband is bound to contribute a named sum for the support of his wife is not avoided or annulled by a subsequent divorce of the parties, and the court in awarding alimony to the wife cannot disregard it and make provision for the wife inconsistent therewith.[5]

7. Pecuniary Ability of Parties. In most jurisdictions the necessities of the wife and the resources of the husband are matters to be considered in determining the wife's right to permanent alimony.[6] If the wife has a separate estate sufficient for her support,[7] or if she has lived apart from her husband for a number of years and during such time has supported herself,[8] and the husband has no

A. 487, the court held that the authority conferred upon the court by the code to require defendant to provide suitably for the support of plaintiff as justice requires is not so broad as to admit of a construction conferring upon the court power to ignore all existing rules as to parties, pleadings, and proof, and arbitrarily set aside a valid agreement, because in the judgment of the court one of the parties agreed to accept from the other a less sum of money than she ought But see Collins v. Collins, 80 N. estate of his own,[9] the court may refuse to award alimony. But if the husband is capable of supporting his wife by his earnings, lack of other means will not justify a failure to make such an award.[10]

8. PROCEDURE — a. Application. Local practice will govern an application for permanent alimony. It is usual to include the application in pleadings praying for a decree of divorce.[11] The ecclesiastical practice was to apply for alimony in an ancillary proceeding, and this practice has been followed in some states.[12] Permanent alimony will not be awarded unless application therefor be made in some form.[13] The allegations to be made in pleadings for allowances of alimony have already been considered.[14]

b. Evidence — (I) IN GENERAL. Applications for alimony should be sustained by the oath of the applicant or by evidence aliunde.[15] The material facts, such as the husband's resources,[16] and the marriage of the parties,[17] must be fully established; and the husband should be permitted to produce any evidence which would tend to reduce the amount of alimony.[18] If the husband defaults in appearance or permits a bill to be taken as confessed the allegations contained in the complaint, so far as they relate to alimony, are to be taken as true;[19] and if the husband gives no evidence as to the value of his property or as to his ability to pay, the wife's statements in respect thereto will be deemed to be true.[20]

(II) BURDEN OF PROOF. The burden of proving the existence of essential facts is upon the applicant.[21]

c. Determination of Amount — (I) IN GENERAL. Unless otherwise provided by statute, no specific portion of the husband's estate need be awarded as alimony, although one third of the husband's income has often been held a proper apportionment.[22] The sum allowed should be such as from the circumstances of the parties and the nature of the case shall appear just and reasonable.[23] Where the wife is the injured party alimony should be allowed her sufficient in amount to maintain her and her children in as good condition as if she were still living with her husband; the general rule being that the innocent party should not be left to suffer pecuniarily for having been compelled by the conduct of the other to seek a divorce.[24]

ability as not unreasonably to reduce his own means of living,[27] although the fact that the allowance is burdensome upon the husband is not material if it be otherwise reasonable and just.[28] If his income be exclusively derived from his personal labor, the amount allowed will be less proportionately than if he were the owner of income-producing property.[29] The husband's acquisitions after the divorce should not be taken into account in determining the amount.[30]

(B) Suitable Provision For Wife. The husband's ability being determined, the next matter for consideration is the suitability of provisions to be made for the wife.[31] In determining this question the social condition and circumstances of the parties are important subjects of inquiry.[32] The fact that she has a separate estate producing an income,[33] or receives earnings from her own labor or from a business in which she is engaged,[34] should be taken into account, but only for the purpose of determining what would be a fair allowance to her out of the husband's property.[35] The age and physical condition of the wife should be considered. If she is old and infirm and incapable of contributing to her own support, she should receive more than if she were young and vigorous.[36]

(C) Wife Contributing to Husband's Estate. If the wife by her labors materially aided in the accumulation of the husband's property,[37] or if through Kentucky.— Trapp v. Trapp, 46 S. W. 213, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 335 (sustaining an allowance of two hundred dollars per year, where the husband was a capable business man with an estate worth ten thousand dollars, although he was past middle life and had a large family of children by a former marriage); Thiesing v. Thiesing, 26 S. W. 718, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 115 (sustaining an allowance of twenty-five dollars per month where the husband was worth three thousand dollars and earned one hundred and twenty-five dollars per month); McAllister v. McAllister, 15 Ky. L. Rep. 750 (sustaining an allowance of three hundred dollars per annum, where the husband's estate was valued at over five thousand dollars).

Maryland.— Ricketts v. Ricketts, 4 Gill 105, where the husband's income was estimated at nine hundred dollars per year, and the wife was allowed one third thereof.

Mississippi.— Verner v. Verner, 64 Miss. 184, 1 So. 52, where an allowance of one hundred and fifty dollars per annum was deemed reasonable, the husband having property worth more than one thousand two hundred dollars, and being able to earn more than his support by his labor.

New Jersey.— Streitwolf v. Streitwolf, (Ch. 1900) 47 Atl. 14 (where a husband having an annual income of two thousand three hundred dollars was required to pay his wife sixteen dollars per week); Boyce v. Boyce, 27 N. Suppl. 927 (sustaining an allowance of six hundred and fifty dollars per annum as alimony and five hundred dollars per annum for the maintenance and education of a child, where the husband's income was three thousand three hundred dollars per year, and he owned property valued at five thousand one hundred dollars, although the wife owned a house worth seven thousand eight hundred dollars, mortgaged for five thousand dollars, and had six thousand dollars awaiting investment, and an annual income of one hundred and twenty dollars from other sources); Forrest v. Forrest, 8 Bosw. 640 (holding that one third of the husband's income cannot be deemed in itself an extravagant proportion, and sustaining an allowance of four thousand dollars per annum, it appearing that the husband was worth between two hundred thousand and three hundred thousand dollars and had an annual income from his profession of twelve thousand dollars); Burr v. Burr, 10 Paige 20 [affirmed in 7 Hill 207] (where an allowance of ten thousand dollars per year was sustained, the husband being worth nearly a million, with but one relative having any claim on his money); Miller v. Miller, 6 Johns. Ch. 91 (where the court allowed one hundred dollars per year, the husband's annual income from his personal and real estate being three hundred and twenty-five dollars per year).

North Dakota.— De Roche v. De Roche, (1903) 94 N. W. 767, where the evidence disclosed that the husband and wife had accumulated fourteen thousand dollars, and the husband had a position which would support him, and the wife had the custody of three minor children, and an award of seven thousand dollars in gross was held not excessive.

Oregon.— Brandt v. Brandt, 40 Oreg. 477, 67 Pac. 508, sustaining an allowance of twenty dollars per month where the husband's property was worth nine thousand dollars, and he had an income sufficient for the maintenance of the family.

Virginia.— Owens v. Owens, 96 Va. 191, 31 S. E. 72 (sustaining an allowance of twenty dollars per month, where the property, valued at two thousand five hundred dollars, was purchased as a result of their joint labor, and the husband was a strong, healthy man between forty and forty-five years of age); Cralle v. Cralle, 84 Va. 198, 6 S. E. 12 (holding that an allowance of one hundred and fifty dollars per year is reasonable, it appearing that the husband is of good business habits and worth three thousand eight hundred dollars).

Wisconsin.— Hooper v. Hooper, 102 Wis. 598, 78 N. W. 753, 44 L. R. A. 725, where the husband was worth eighty thousand dollars, yielding an income of four thousand two hundred dollars, and in addition derived considerable income from his profession, and the parties occupied a high social position, and the wife was sixty years of age, an allowance in gross of seven thousand dollars and of one hundred dollars per month was sustained); Williams v. Williams, 29 Wis. 517 (sustaining an allowance of four hundred dollars per annum to the wife for her support and of five hundred dollars per annum for the support of a daughter of eighteen and a son of fourteen, where the value of the husband's property did not exceed thirty thousand dollars). Excessive allowances.— In the following cases allowances of alimony were deemed excessive: Culpepper v. Culpepper, 98 Ga. 304, 25 S. E. 443 (holding an allowance of twenty-five dollars per month to be excessive, where the husband had no property, was without a profession and out of employment, and had no home except upon his father's farm, where he worked for his board and clothing); Newsome v. Newsome, 95 Ky. 383, 25 S. W. 878, 15 Ky. L. Rep. 801 (where a husband worth thirty thousand dollars obtained a divorce which would have been granted on the application of either, and the wife was worth three thousand dollars, and an annual allowance to the wife of four hundred dollars was held excessive); Freeman v. Freeman, 13 S. W. 246, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 822 (where an allowance of four hundred and ten dollars per year was deemed unreasonable, it appearing that the husband was worth but three thousand dollars and was not able to work by reason of old age); Cowles v. Cowles, 29 N. Y. App. Div. 476, 51 N. Y. Suppl. 1057 (holding that one third of the husband's income is excessive, where the income is derived entirely from personal services which are liable to be reduced or taken away by conditions beyond his control); Williams v. Williams, 3 Silv. Supreme 385, 6 N. Y. Suppl. 645, 17 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 297 (reducing an allowance of one thousand dollars per year to five hundred dollars per year, where the husband's annual income was between three thousand and three thousand five hundred dollars, and the wife had an annual income of one thousand dollars, and an allowance of five hundred dollars per year had been made for the support of their child); Galnsha v. Galnsha, 43 Hun 181 (reducing the annual allowance to the wife from one-half the husband's income from invested property based on an estimate of five per cent to an allowance based on an estimate of four per cent); Heninger v. Heninger, 90 Va. 271, 18 S. (B) Adequacy or Excessiveness. The amount to be allowed as alimony in a gross sum will usually be determined by a consideration of the same facts and circumstances controlling an allowance in instalments.[55] If by statute or agreement the allowance is in lieu of all claim for dower, it will be greater than where the dower is not affected by the decree.[56] In any event the adequacy or excessiveness of the allowance in gross is to be determined in each case according to the peculiar circumstances thereof.[57]

Allowance in lieu of dower.— The right of dower becomes vested by statute in Michigan as soon as the decree of divorce becomes final (Orth v. Orth, 69 Mich. 158, 37 N. W. 67; Percival v. Percival, 56 Mich. 297, 22 N. W. 807), and where a wife prays for a reasonable sum as permanent alimony, she elects to take the sum awarded in lieu of dower (Walton v. Walton, 57 Nebr. 102, 77 N. W. 392).

Allowance equal to dower.— Where a divorce has been obtained by the wife, and her conduct is blameless, an allowance equal to what the law gives her on the death of her husband is reasonable. Thornberry v. Thornberry, 4 Litt. (Ky.) 251.

57. Alabama.— Turner v. Turner, 44 Ala. 437 (sustaining a gross allowance of thirty per cent of the estimated value of the husband's estate); Jeter v. Jeter, 36 Ala. 391 (holding an allowance of twenty thousand dollars to be reasonable, where the husband's estate was worth at least forty-six thousand dollars, and he had already made ample provision for the elder of his two children).

California.— Robinson v. Robinson, 79 Cal. 511, 21 Pac. 1095, sustaining an allowance of one thousand five hundred dollars where the husband's property was worth five thousand dollars.

Illinois.— Draper v. Draper, 68 Ill. 17, holding that an allowance of three thousand dollars payable in semiannual instalments of five hundred dollars is not unreasonable, where the husband is worth four times that amount); Johnson v. Johnson, 36 Ill. App. 152 (sustaining an allowance of two thousand dollars where the husband is proven guilty of adultery and is worth at least six thousand dollars).

Indiana.— Hedrick v. Hedrick, 128 Ind. 522, 26 N. E. 768 (holding that an allowance of one thousand one hundred dollars is not excessive, where the husband is worth two thousand two hundred dollars, to which his wife has contributed three hundred dollars); Metzler v. Metzler, 99 Ind. 384 (sustaining an allowance of one thousand five hundred dollars out of property valued at three thousand five hundred dollars); Bush v. Bush, 37 Ind. 164 (holding an allowance of one fourth of the husband's estate to be reasonable where the property was accumulated by their joint efforts); Hedrick v. Hedrick, 28 Ind. 291 (where an allowance of three thousand five hundred dollars from an estate valued at thirteen thousand dollars was held reasonable); Rudman v. Rudman, 5 Ind. 63 (holding that an allowance of one thousand one hundred and eighty dollars is not excessive where the husband is worth between four thousand and five thousand dollars); De Ruiter v. De Ruiter, 28 Ind. App. 9, 62 N. E. 100 (sustaining an allowance of four thousand dollars out of an estate worth twenty thousand dollars).

Iowa.— Day v. Day, 84 Iowa 221, 50 N. W. 979 (sustaining an allowance of two thousand five hundred dollars where the husband was shown to be well-to-do); Doolittle v. Doolittle, 78 Iowa 691, 43 N. W. 616, 6 L. R. A. 187 (sustaining an allowance of three thousand five hundred dollars out of an estate valued at fourteen thousand dollars, where the wife was possessed of not more than two thousand dollars in her own name); Sesterhen v. Sesterhen, 60 Iowa 301, 14 N. W. 333 (where the husband possessed a homestead worth two thousand dollars, other lands worth two thousand six hundred dollars, and personal property valued at one thousand dollars, and was not in debt, and an allowance to the wife of the homestead and five hundred dollars in money was held not to be excessive).

Kansas.— Leach v. Leach, 46 Kan. 724, 27 Pac. 131, holding that an allowance of two thousand five hundred dollars is reasonable where the divorce was granted for the wife's fault, the property of the husband being worth between ten thousand and fourteen thousand dollars.

Kentucky.— Lacey v. Lacey, 95 Ky. 110, 23 S. W. 673, 15 Ky. L. Rep. 439 (sustaining an allowance of one thousand dollars out of an estate valued at from two thousand five hundred to three thousand dollars, where the wife was beyond middle life and had contributed to the accumulation of the estate); Evans v. Evans, 93 Ky. 510, 20 S. W. 605, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 628 (holding an allowance of five hundred dollars reasonable where the husband is worth from two thousand to three thousand dollars); Coffman v. Coffman, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 204 (sustaining an allowance of one thousand two hundred and fifty dollars where the husband's estate is worth four thousand five hundred dollars, to which the wife has contributed one thousand dollars).

Michigan.— Wagoner v. Wagoner, 128 Mich. 635, 87 N. W. 898 (sustaining an allowance of six hundred dollars, where the husband has one thousand five hundred dollars in cash and some real property); Templeton v. Templeton, 126 Mich. 44, 85 N. consisted of a farm valued at three thousand three hundred and fifty dollars and personal property worth one thousand one hundred and forty dollars); Adams v. Seibly, 115 Mich. 402, 73 N. W. 377 (sustaining an allowance of two thousand dollars in lieu of dower and any claim for temporary alimony and costs, where the husband was a man of ample means); Kirkland v. Kirkland, 111 Mich. 166, 69 N. W. 233 (upholding an allowance of two thousand five hundred dollars absolutely and of two thousand dollars on condition that the wife release her right of dower, where the husband is worth at least sixteen thousand dollars); Reed v. Reed, 86 Mich. 600, 49 N. W. 587; Berryman v. Berryman, 59 Mich. 605, 26 N. W. 789 (sustaining a decree of four thousand five hundred dollars for permanent alimony where the husband has an estate worth ten thousand or fifteen thousand dollars which the wife helped to accumulate).

Missouri.— Gercke v. Gercke, 100 Mo. 237, 13 S. W. 400 (holding that an allowance of six thousand dollars is not excessive, it appearing that the husband and wife by industry and economy have accumulated an estate worth about twelve thousand dollars); McCartin v. McCartin, 37 Mo. App. 471 (holding that alimony in gross for the support of the wife should not ordinarily exceed one half of the husband's estate).

Nebraska.— Heist v. Heist, 48 Nebr. 794, 67 N. W. 790 (holding that an allowance of two thousand two hundred and fifty dollars payable in six annual instalments is not excessive, where the wife is without property, and the husband is worth four thousand five hundred dollars, and the custody of the children is awarded to her); Wilde v. Wilde, 37 Nebr. 891, 56 N. W. 724 (sustaining an allowance of two thousand dollars where the husband's estate is worth eight thousand five hundred dollars, of which amount four thousand dollars was made by him since the marriage out of property held by him in trust for others).

Tennessee.— Stillman v. Stillman, 7 Baxt. 169 (sustaining an allowance of twenty thousand dollars out of an estate valued at one hundred thousand dollars, where the wife has contributed six thousand dollars to the husband's business); Chunn v. Chunn, Meigs 131 (sustaining a decree awarding to the wife an amount equal to the whole of the husband's property, where he had acquired more than such amount by the marriage).

Wisconsin.— Pauly v. Pauly, 69 Wis. 419, 34 N. W. 512 (holding that where the husband is possessed of good business ability and has always been successful in accumulating property, an allowance of five thousand dollars is not excessive, although it is not shown that he was at the time of the divorce in possession of an estate); Williams v. Williams, 36 Wis. 362 (providing for an allowance of three thousand dollars and a homestead valued at one thousand five hundred dollars and the household furniture, where the husband was worth, after deducting his debts, the sum of twenty thousand dollars); Moul v. Moul, 30 Wis. 203 (sustaining an allowance of three thousand dollars in gross, and an annual allowance of two hundred dollars for the support of three minor children, it appearing that the husband owned a farm worth ten thousand dollars, a house worth one thousand dollars, and personal property valued at one thousand dollars).

See 17 Cent. Dig. tit. "Divorce," § 680.

Excessive allowances.— In the following cases allowances of permanent alimony in gross were deemed excessive:

Colorado.— Cowan v. Cowan, 16 Colo. 335, 26 Pac. 934, where an allowance of sixteen thousand eight hundred dollars out of an estate of twenty-four thousand dollars was deemed excessive.

Illinois.— Wilson v. Wilson, 102 Ill. 297 (overruling an allowance of six sevenths of the husband's estate); Andrews v. Andrews, 69 Ill. 609 (reducing an allowance of two thousand eight hundred dollars to two thousand dollars, it appearing that the husband's property did not exceed seven thousand dollars in value).

Indiana.— Graft v. Graft, 76 Ind. 136 (reducing an allowance of four thousand dollars to two thousand five hundred dollars, it appearing that the husband was not worth more than seven thousand dollars, consisting largely of a farm of one hundred and twenty acres); Conner v. Conner, 29 Ind. 48 (where an allowance to the wife from whom the husband had obtained a divorce of one third of the husband's estate was held excessive); Rourke v. Rourke, 8 Ind. 427 (holding that an allowance of eight hundred and fifty dollars to the wife was excessive where the husband was worth only two thousand dollars and the wife owned a farm of forty acres).

Iowa.— Ensler v. Ensler, 72 Iowa 159, 33 N. W. 384, holding that an allowance of four hundred and fifty dollars out of an estate of one thousand seven hundred dollars is excessive where the husband is physically disabled and cannot earn more than five or six dollars per week.

Kentucky.— Fletcher v. Fletcher, 54 S. W. 953, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 1302 (holding that the wife is not entitled to more than one half of her husband's estate, worth three hundred dollars); Beall v. Beall, 80 Ky. 675 (holding alimony amounting to one third of the husband's estate to be excessive).

Michigan.— Cummings v. Cummings, 50 Mich. 305, 15 N. W. 485, where the husband's entire property does not exceed two thousand five hundred dollars in value, and an allowance of one thousand two hundred dollars was held excessive, it appearing that the wife did nothing to assist in its accumulation.

Nebraska.— McConahey v. McConahey, 21 Nebr. 463, 32 N. W. 300 (reducing an allowance of eight hundred dollars to five hundred dollars, where the husband's property allotment of specific property to the wife by way of alimony will not be made.[58] Thus the court should not make an award of the husband's lands, absolutely divesting him of title thereto,[59] unless agreed upon by the parties,[60] or authorized by statute,[61] or unless the property was purchased with the wife's money,[62] or there are other circumstances in the case relating to the acquisition of the property or the condition of the parties which render it just and proper that certain lands should be conveyed to her.[63] However, a life-estate in specific real property owned by the husband may be given to the wife as alimony, to be held by her subject to the control of the court.[64]

(B) Determination as to Award. Where specific property may be allotted to the wife, the determination as to the award should be based upon much the was valued at two thousand two hundred dollars and the wife was worth five hundred dollars); Smith v. Smith, 19 Nebr. 706, 28 N. W. 296 (reducing an allowance of six thousand dollars to four thousand dollars, where the husband's property was valued at sixteen thousand dollars, and the wife had already been allowed two thousand dollars as temporary alimony).

South Dakota.— Williams v. Williams, 6 S. D. 284, 61 N. W. 38, holding an allowance of thirty thousand dollars out of an estate of fifty-six thousand seven hundred dollars to be excessive, where the wife had been awarded three thousand dollars as temporary alimony.

Tennessee.— Belcher v. Belcher, (Ch. App. 1900) 57 S. W. 382, holding that where the homestead is granted to the wife as required by statute, her allowance of cash alimony should be reduced so that her entire allowance will not exceed one half of her husband's estate.

Adequacy of allowance.— An allowance of one hundred dollars is sufficient where the husband's property is worth but two thousand five hundred dollars and the wife has denied him conjugal rights without reason. Tumbleson v. Tumbleson, 79 Ind. 558. An allowance of one thousand dollars out of an estate of nine thousand eight hundred dollars is sufficient where the husband is physically unable to perform manual labor. Tietken v. Tietken, 60 Nebr. 138, 82 N. W. 367.

58. Doe v. Doe, 52 Hun (N. Y.) 405, 5 N. Y. Suppl. 514.

59. Indiana.— Green v. Green, 7 Ind. 113; Rice v. Rice, 6 Ind. 100; Frakes v. Brown, 2 Blackf. 295.

Kentucky.— Quisenberry v. Quisenberry, 1 Duv. 197; Caskey v. Caskey, 4 Ky. L. Rep. 811.

Maryland.— Wallingsford v. Wallingsford, 6 Harr. & J. 485.

Michigan.— Perkins v. Perkins, 16 Mich. 162.

New Jersey.— Calame v. Calame, 25 N. J. Eq. 548.

North Carolina.—Miller v. Miller, 75 N. C. 70.

Tennessee.— Robinson v. Robinson, 7 Humphr. 440; Chunn v. Chunn, Meigs 131.

Virginia.— Purcell v. Purcell, 4 Hen. & M. 507.

Wisconsin.— Bacon v. Bacon, 43 Wis. 197 [citing Donovan v. Donovan, 20 Wis. 586] (holding that the power of the court to divest the husband of his title to realty in favor of his wife rests entirely on the statute); Campbell v. Campbell, 37 Wis. 206; Moul v. Moul, 30 Wis. 203 (holding that a wife is not entitled as alimony to a life-estate in the lands of her husband, with remainder to the children).

See 17 Cent. Dig. tit. "Divorce," § 681.

60. Thomas v. Thomas, 64 Mo. 353.

Implied authority.— Where a statute authorizes the court, without qualification as to mode, to secure to the wife support out of the husband's estate or to make such order in relation to the property and the maintenance of the wife as shall be right and proper, the court may adjudge that the fee-simple title to a particular tract of land shall vest in the wife as permanent alimony. Twing v. O'Meara, 59 Iowa 326, 13 N. W. 321; Zuver v. Zuver, 36 Iowa 190; Inskeep v. Inskeep, 5 Iowa 204; Jolly v. Jolly, 1 Iowa 9 [all virtually overruling Russell v. Russell, 4 Greene (Iowa) 26, 61 Am. Dec. 112]; Berthelemy v. Johnson, 3 B. Mon. (Ky.) 90, 38 Am. Dec. 179.

62. Shaw v. Shaw, 114 Ill. 586, 3 N. E. 271.

63. Mussing v. Mussing, 104 Ill. 126; Wheeler v. Wheeler, 18 Ill. 39; Brick v. Brick, 65 Mich. 230, 31 N. W. 907, 33 N. W. 761, holding that although it is unusual to grant alimony to the wife in the shape of a conveyance of her husband's interest in land, yet where the land is of comparatively small value and the circumstances of its acquisition render it quite just that she should have it, the decree in her favor will not be disturbed for that informality.

64. Jeans v. Jeans, 2 Harr. (Del.) 142; Shaw v. Shaw, 114 Ill. 586, 3 N. E. 271; Keating v. Keating, 48 Ill. 241; Armstrong v. Armstrong, 35 Ill. 109; Jolliff v. Jolliff, 32 Ill. 527 (holding that it is not erroneous to decree that the wife should "hold her present homestead as alimony, with the right to rent the same until the youngest becomes of age, and, also, all the personal property in her possession"); Caskey v. Caskey, 4 Ky. same facts and circumstances as where an allowance is made in gross or in instalments, except that the fact that the wife has contributed to the purchase of specific property may be of greater importance.[65] A decree awarding all the husband's property to the wife is unwarranted.[66] The award will necessarily vary in accordance with the condition of the parties and the circumstances of the case, ranging from the portion to which the wife would be entitled if her husband had died intestate,[67] to an allotment of one half of the husband's realty.[68] The allowance is within the discretion of the court, subject to revision on appeal for an abuse thereof.[69]

9. Judgment or Decree — a. Form and Sufficiency[70] — (I) In General. A decree for alimony will necessarily conform to the requirements of the practice in the particular jurisdiction. It may be rendered separately or as a part of a decree of divorce. It should state the time when the alimony commences, when payable,[71] and under what circumstances it will terminate.[72] Provisions should be included therein reserving the right to modify its terms.[73] The amount allowed for the support of the wife and children should be separately stated, although a failure so to do is not reversible error.[74]

(II) Conditions and Penalties — (A) In General. A decree for permanent alimony may properly impose reasonable conditions and penalties upon one or the other of the parties,[75] such as a provision that if the sum allowed is not paid at the time specified it shall draw interest at the rate of twelve per cent until paid,[76] or that if surety be given within thirty days for the payment of the sum awarded it may be paid in instalments, and if not, execution shall issue against the husband for the whole amount.[77]

(B) In Lieu of Dower.[78] Where the statute secures to the wife her right of dower upon a divorce for her husband's misconduct, the court cannot compel the wife to accept a gross sum in lieu of dower,[79] although it has been held

The times of payment should be so adjusted as to avoid if possible a sacrifice of the husband's property to pay the amounts allowed. Farley v. Farley, 30 Iowa 353. that by consent of the wife an allowance may be made barring her right of dower.[80]

(III) Construction and Effect. The provisions of the decree should be construed so as to give it the intended effect,[81] having due regard for its expressed terms and the circumstances under which it was rendered. If it requires payment within a certain number of days it will be construed to mean that payment should be made within a certain number of days after its service.[82] If it provides for payment of a certain amount each month or semimonthly, it will be deemed to import an allowance of a correspondingly increased amount yearly or monthly, as the case may be.[83] An award of specific real property carries with it the crops growing thereon at the time the decree is rendered.[84]

b. Security For Payment — (I) In General. Statutes are in force in some of the states authorizing the court to require the husband to give security for the payment of the alimony decreed.[85]

(II) Liens on Husband's Property. A decree granting permanent alimony does not become a specific lien on the husband's estate unless so provided by statute,[86] and the jurisdiction of a court of equity over alimony cannot ordinarily be extended so as to authorize the creation of such a lien.[87] Under the practice in some of the states, however, the decree operates as a judgment against the husband, and like other judgments becomes a lien upon his property when duly filed or entered,[88] or it may include an express provision that the amount therein directed to be paid shall become a specific or general lien thereon,[89] including his

Modification — (1) In General. A decree for permanent alimony is subject to modification because of fraud or mistake in the same manner and under the same circumstances as other decrees.[93] The general rule would seem to be that where the divorce is absolute a decree for permanent alimony containing no reservation of the power of modification cannot be altered after the expiration of the time within which an appeal may be perfected,[94] although it has been held that the court may modify a decree for alimony at any time upon proper allegations of the changed conditions and circumstances of the parties.[95] The ecclesiastical practice was to permit a modification of the rate of alimony after a decree of separation, where there was a material alteration of the circumstances of the parties,[96] and in following this practice the courts in this country have recognized a distinction between absolute and limited divorces, and have assumed to modify decrees for alimony granted in the latter case while refusing to do so in the former.[97] Statutes have been enacted in many of the states expressly conferring upon the courts the power to revise and alter decrees for permanent alimony.[98] Where such statutes refer to decrees for alimony generally they will be held applicable to decrees in both absolute and limited divorces without distinction.[99] They have been held not to apply where the allowance is payable in gross,[1] but where continuing alimony is granted the court is authorized to entertain a proceeding to secure an allowance in gross in lieu of instalments.[2] The power conferred by statute cannot be affected by provisions in the decree declaratory of its absolute and permanent effect;[3] but if the parties have agreed as to the amount of alimony, and an allowance is made in accordance therewith, it cannot be thereafter modified by the court upon the petition of the former husband.[4] After the prevailing party's remarriage the case will not be opened to permit of an adjustment of a matter of alimony.[5]

(II) Changed Circumstances of Parties. Unless it appears that the circumstances of the parties have changed since the decree was rendered,[6] or that there are material facts which existed prior to the decree of which the applicant was ignorant when it was rendered,[7] the decree is conclusive on the parties.[8] The conditions subject to change influencing a modification of the decree are usually of a pecuniary character, affecting the ability of the husband to pay[9] or the necessities of the wife.[10] While the fact that the custody of the children is awarded to the wife may be considered in determining the amount of permanent alimony, the subsequent removal of the burden of their maintenance and education is not necessarily a ground for reducing the amount,[11] although if the allowance was expressly made for both the support of the wife and the maintenance and education of the children, the amount may be reduced after the removal of the burden.[12] The court will consider whether the change of circumstances upon the Reduction of net profits from the husband's business is not of itself sufficient to justify a reduction of the sum ordered paid as alimony (Barrett v. Barrett, 41 N. J. Eq. 139, 3 Atl. 689), but a material depreciation in the value of his property since the divorce may furnish reasons for a reduction of an annual allowance to the divorced wife (Barbaras v. Barbaras, 88 Minn. 105, 92 N. W. 522).

part of the applicant was brought about by his own act, and if so, the decree will not be modified.[13]

(III) Proceedings — (A) Application or Petition. The time and manner of applying to the court for a modification of a decree of alimony is within the sound discretion of the court,[14] subject, however, to the provisions controlling generally the practice in similar proceedings. The facts relied upon to secure the relief desired must be set forth in the petition.[15]

(B) Notice and Hearing. Irregularities in the notice of an application for the modification of a decree for alimony are waived by a general appearance.[16] Ordinarily the hearing should be in open court or before a referee.[17]

(C) Evidence. All evidence introduced on the original hearing to determine the amount of alimony, and such other evidence as might have been then introduced but was not, is admissible on the hearing of an application for a modification of the judgment or decree.[18] It must be clearly shown that new or previously unknown facts require such modification.[19] Evidence as to the value of the wife's services and disbursements in the care and maintenance of a child of the parties is admissible.[20] If the husband seeks a modification he will ordinarily be required to show that the accrued instalments have been fully paid,[21] although the fact that they remain unpaid does not absolutely deprive the court of power to entertain the application.[22]

d. Vacating or Setting Aside — (I) For Failure of Service of Process. Where a decree of divorce containing a direction as to the payment of alimony is granted without personal service on defendant, who was not within the state when the suit was brought and made no appearance, so much of the decree as relates to alimony may be vacated and set aside.[23]

(II) Subsequent Remarriage or Misconduct of Wife. Where a wife has obtained an absolute divorce carrying with it the privilege of a remarriage, and permanent alimony is decreed to her, it is generally held that the husband upon her subsequent remarriage may secure an order vacating the decree as to alimony.[24]

The remarriage does not ipso facto dissolve the obligation of the former husband to continue the payment of the allowance; it simply affords a cogent reason for the court to modify or cut off the allowance. King v. King, 38 Ohio St. 370; Brandt v. Brandt, 40 Oreg. 477, 67 Pac. 508. So the income of a trust fund created by will for the benefit of testator's son cannot be devoted to the support of his wife, under a decree for alimony,

Misconduct of the former wife occurring after an absolute divorce does not justify either the vacation of a decree allowing her permanent alimony[25] or a reduction of the amount allowed;[26] but in case of limited divorce the husband may be discharged from a decree for alimony because of the wife's subsequent misconduct.[27] The determination of this question depends largely on whether the allowance is based upon the restitution to the wife of property brought to the husband by reason of the marriage or the partition of property jointly accumulated by both parties.[28]

e. Commencement and Termination of Allowance. Alimony is generally payable from the date of the order granting it,[29] although in the discretion of the court the allowance of permanent alimony may be computed from any time subsequent to the commencement of the suit for divorce, especially where defendant has been at fault in delaying the litigation.[30] A claim for alimony is personal and usually terminates upon the death of either of the parties,[31] although a number of cases uphold the power of the court to decree alimony during the natural life of the wife, thus making it a charge upon the husband's estate should he die first.[32] The intention to continue the alimony beyond the death of defendant and to bind his estate thereby must be clearly expressed in the decree, however.[33] An order for alimony upon a divorce a mensa et thoro continues in force only until the reconciliation of the parties.[34]

E. Disposition of Property — 1. In General. The statutes of some of the states provide for a division of the property of the husband upon the dissolution of the marriage, and for the transfer of a portion thereof to the wife for her support. Independently of the statute the court has no such power,[35] although courts of equity have assumed the power of restoring to the wife the whole or a portion of the property which by the marriage became vested in the husband.[36] The statutes vary materially in their terms. Some of them confer generally upon the court authority to make such disposition of the property of the parties as shall appear just and reasonable;[37] others in terms authorize the court to divide the real and personal property between the parties;[38] and it is sometimes provided that the wife upon an absolute divorce shall have a dower interest in the husband's real property, to be recovered and assigned to her in the same manner as though he were dead.[39]

2. Person Entitled. The statutes are usually so worded as to authorize a division of the property where the divorce was obtained either at the instance of the wife or of the husband,[40] and although the wife is in fault, she should be awarded a portion of the property acquired by the joint earnings of herself and husband during coverture.[41]

3. Agreements as to Property. It has been held that an arrangement entered into by the parties pending the litigation in regard to the disposition of the property is not binding unless approved of by the court and embodied in the decree.[42] If entered into prior to the commencement of the suit, and untainted with fraud and without collusion, such agreements are doubtless enforceable,[43] although the court in making disposition of the community property may disregard such an agreement.[44]

4. Estate Subject to Division. The determination of the question as to what estates are subject to distribution between the parties is governed by the terms of the statute under which the distribution is made. In some states the community property is subject to division,[45] in which case the separate property of the wife is not included,[46] nor is that of the husband, until after the disposition of the community property.[47] Ordinarily, however, the statutes are construed to authorize a disposal of the separate, as well the joint, property of the husband or wife,[48] having due regard to the circumstances under which the estate was acquired.[49] A statute giving to the wife upon obtaining a divorce a one-third interest in the real estate owned by the husband at the time of the decree is construed to confer upon the wife lands the equitable title of which is in the husband.[50] So a statute giving the wife a dower interest in the husband's lands on absolute divorce entitles her to dower in all the lands of which he was seized during the coverture, although he may have conveyed them before the divorce.[51] Where a wife holds a life-estate in lands with remainder to her children, her estate may be disposed of, but the remainder is not affected.[52]

5. Restoration of Property — a. To Wife. The rule in equity has always been that property shall be restored to the wife upon a dissolution of the marriage because of the husband's misconduct, which belonged to her at the time of the marriage and which the husband had secured by unfair means to be vested in him.[53] The subject is usually controlled by statutes, authorizing in more or less general terms the restoration to the wife of property which came to the husband

The earnings of the wife during coverture are under the common law the property of the husband absolutely, and upon a divorce granted by reason of his adultery will not be decreed to her. Armstrong v. Armstrong, 32 Miss. 279.

Misconduct of wife.— A wife who without cause deserts her husband is not entitled to the aid of a court of equity in getting possession of such chattels as she has contributed to the furnishing and adornment of her hus-

by the marriage.[54] Statutes authorizing the restoration of the wife's property upon granting her a divorce are usually construed as affecting the property which the law gives the husband by reason of the marriage, and not property obtained from the wife by gift or contract.[55] The court in restoring the wife's property may inquire into waste committed by the husband on the land since the proceedings for divorce were begun,[56] but he cannot be required to account for rents of lands received by him through the wife.[57]

b. To Husband. A divorce granted to the wife does not justify an award to the husband of property voluntarily settled by him upon her during coverture;[58] and it would seem a general rule that property voluntarily conveyed to the wife by the husband without fraud or undue influence cannot, in the absence of statutory authority, be restored to him upon his obtaining a divorce for her misconduct.[59] Statutes are in force in some of the states, however, which permit a distribution to the husband of so much of the wife's estate as shall have been derived from her husband;[60] and in any event the voluntary conveyance by the husband to the wife, prior to the commencement of the divorce suit, of a portion

In Kentucky the statutes provide that a decree for divorce shall contain an order of restitution of any property which either party may have obtained, directly or indirectly, from or through the other during marriage and in consideration thereof. Such section has been held not to apply to an award of alimony under a decree of divorce a mensa et thoro where the husband subsequently obtains a decree of absolute divorce (Johnson v. Johnson, 96 Ky. 391, 29 S. W. 322, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 660); nor does it include land conveyed by a husband to his wife after their marriage in consideration of love and affection (Phillips v. Phillips, 9 Bush 183). The consideration meant by the statute relates solely to the consideration passing between the husband and wife, and hence property purchased by the husband but conveyed directly to the wife by his order is within the statute. Bayer v. Fusche, 7 Ky. L. Rep. 832.

Money secured to a wife under a policy of insurance and to be paid to her under the terms thereof if she is living at the time of her husband's death may be "property in reversion," although the policy itself may not be a marriage settlement, and the court has power to compel her, if she is the guilty party in divorce proceedings, to settle her interests under the policy in favor of her husband and children. Stedall v. Stedall, 86 L. T. Rep. N. S. 124, 50 Wkly. Rep. 320.

of his property should be considered by the court in determining the amount to be awarded the wife as permanent alimony.[61]

c. Rights of Creditors and Purchasers. The rights of creditors and bona fide purchasers and encumbrancers which attach prior to the institution of proceedings for the divorce cannot be defeated by a restoration to the wife of property obtained by the husband through the marriage.[62]

6. Assignment of Homestead. Where a division of the property of the parties is authorized the homestead may be awarded either to one or the other as the circumstances of the particular case demand.[63]

7. Division of Property. The determination of the particular proportion of the property which should be allotted to the parties depends upon the authority vested in the court by the statute. Where the power is generally conferred upon the court without statutory limitation the division should be made after a consideration of many of the same matters as in the case of an allowance of permanent alimony,[64] such as the cause for which the divorce was granted, the conduct of the parties, the value of the estate to be divided, and other facts and circumstances peculiar to the particular case.[65] Unless so provided by statute,[66] no fixed portion of the estate of either party is to be allotted to the other upon a divorce. An allotment to the wife of all the community property has been sustained,[67] and an allowance to the wife of a share equal to that which she would have obtained upon the death of her husband has been held reasonable.[68] The division is within the discretion of the court and will not be disturbed on appeal unless the rights of the parties are clearly disregarded.[69] division of property may be made separately or be included in the petition for divorce. Where, however, it is sought to assign the wife's dower interests under a statute authorizing it, a separate proceeding should be instituted as if the husband were dead.[70] Notice of the application must be given to defendant.[71] Land held by the wife in her name for the benefit of her children cannot be partitioned in a suit for divorce unless the children are made parties.[72]

b. Evidence. In determining the portion to be allotted to the parties, any evidence tending to show the value of the estate, its character, and the source from which it was derived is admissible;[73] and the conduct of the parties may be considered.[74]

c. Judgment or Decree — (I) Form and Contents. The findings contained in the decree,[75] as well as the decree itself,[76] should conform with the pleadings. The decree should contain a description of the property adjudged to each of the parties sufficient for its identification.[77]

(II) Construction and Effect. The decree should be construed in connection with the statute conferring authority upon the court to render it.[78] A decree directing a restoration to the wife of property brought to her husband at marriage does not operate on articles consumed or disposed of at the time of the divorce;[79] but where the husband collects the rents pending the proceedings and takes the profits of community property assigned to the wife by the decree, he is accountable therefor.[80]

(III) Revision and Modification. Ordinarily a judgment providing for a division of real and personal property between the parties is final,[81] and cannot be modified by the trial court after the term at which it is rendered,[82] especially where the wife was acquainted with the specific parcels owned by the husband before the decree was entered, and permitted three years to elapse before attempting to set the division aside.[83] But where the judgment includes relief as to the division of property not demanded in the pleadings, that part of it relating to such division should be vacated.[84] or permanent alimony[87] have already been considered. In this place a number of general propositions alike applicable to all such orders or decrees, including remedies for their enforcement, will be discussed.

b. Conclusiveness of Adjudication — (i) In General. A judgment or decree allowing alimony is final and concludes all parties,[88] unless an appeal be taken therefrom,[89] or an application be made for revision or modification under statutory authority.[90] Such a judgment or decree cannot be collaterally assailed,[91] unless it be shown that the court was without authority to render it,[92] or through failure of service of process or other cause had no jurisdiction of the subject-matter or of the party against whom it was rendered.[93]

(ii) Rights Precluded. The final judgment granting a divorce and awarding alimony or disposing of the property of the parties is a bar to a subsequent action by either party to determine any of the property rights which might have been settled in such action.[94] It will be presumed that the court in awarding per-

Finality of decree.— Under a statute authorizing a revision of a decree for alimony, where there was not a final division of the property belonging to the parties, a decree for the payment of a certain annual sum to the wife as alimony so long as she shall remain unmarried, in lieu of all other interest in her husband's estate, is not such a final manent alimony estimated and adjusted the property rights of both husband and wife.[95] Such a judgment does not, however, preclude the wife from enforcing her rights against a third person to whom she had been fraudulently induced by her husband to convey property for the benefit of her husband.[96]

c. Rights of Wife's Creditors. In the absence of statutory authority, alimony directed to be paid the wife under a judgment or decree cannot be subjected to the payment of a debt contracted by her prior to the date of the adjudication.[97]

d. Payment of Amount. Alimony directed to be paid in instalments may be discharged by the payment of a stipulated sum.[98] Payment of temporary alimony cannot be refused by the husband upon the ground that the wife has appropriated to her own use household property greater in value than the sum awarded.[99] Interest may be required on instalments not paid when due,[1] not exceeding in any event the legal rate.[2]

e. Title to Property Awarded. An absolute assignment to the wife in the decree of a part of the husband's estate vests title thereto in her without conveyance from him.[3]

f. Effect of Death of Either Party as to Arrearages.[4] Alimony due the wife at the time of the husband's death is a legal claim against his estate;[5] and it has been held that arrears of alimony due the wife at the time of her death may be collected by her personal representatives,[6] although in some states such arrears are not so recoverable in the case of a limited divorce,[7] unless it appear that the husband had evaded payment and compelled the wife to contract debts.[8]

2. Enforcement — a. By Dismissal or Striking Out Petition. Failure of the husband to obey an order directing the payment of temporary alimony or counsel fees will not ordinarily justify a denial of his right to defend;[9] nor can he

for such reason be deprived of his right to appeal;[10] but in a proper case he may be punished by striking out his petition or by a dismissal of his suit.[11] Thus if he has ample means and vexatiously withholds payment of the sum which he is bound by the order to give to complainant for expediting her cause, his answer may be stricken out and he may be held in default.[12]

b. Execution. The enforcement of an order or decree for alimony by execution is usually controlled by the practice of the jurisdiction within which it was rendered. A decree for permanent alimony is usually treated as a judgment enforceable by execution like any other judgment;[13] but an order for the payment of temporary alimony or suit money, not being final, cannot be enforced by execution,[14] unless the statute directs otherwise;[15] nor can an agreement to pay temporary alimony be enforced by execution, in the absence of a decree in conformity therewith.[16] Where payment of permanent alimony is to be made in instalments, execution may issue to enforce payment of each instalment as it falls due, or of so many of them as may be due at any one time.[17] A statute authorizing a division of property between the parties to a divorce suit and impliedly conferring authority to charge the property adjudged to one of them with a payment directed to be made to the other does not permit the court to

e. Sequestration and Receivership. The enforcement of a decree directing the payment of alimony may be procured by the sequestration of the husband's property,[19] upon a compliance with the requirements of the statutes providing therefor or with the practice in respect to the enforcement of other judgments directing the payment of money;[20] and an equitable action may in a proper case be maintained by the wife to reach property not subject to sequestration.[21] In sequestration proceedings it is usual for the court to appoint a receiver of the property sequestered, whose duty it is to receive the income of the property in his possession and apply the same to the payment of the alimony awarded.[22]

d. Action on Judgment or Decree — (i) PLACE OF ACTION. An action to recover alimony accrued under a decree of a state court will lie in a federal court,[23] or in the courts of another state.[24]

(ii) WHEN ACTION LIES. Where provision is not otherwise made for the enforcement of a decree for permanent alimony, an action at law may be brought to recover the amount thereof in the same manner as in the case of other judgments directing the payment of money.[25] A decree for temporary alimony, however, being interlocutory and subject to change, cannot be made the foundation of an action as upon a final judgment.[26]

e. Action Against Third Persons. mentioned in the judgment and not specifically covered thereby is not to be subjected to the wife's claim for alimony,[28] unless it was transferred by the husband for the purpose of avoiding payment of her claim.[29]

f. Action to Subject Trust Fund. It has been held that a woman who upon procuring a divorce is awarded alimony is a creditor within the meaning of a statute providing that the income of a spendthrift trust beyond what is necessary for the support of the beneficiary shall be liable in equity to the claims of his creditors.[30] The right to subject a trust fund to the payment of alimony does not exist, however, until plaintiff has exhausted the ordinary remedies for the enforcement of the decree.[31]

before the divorce proceedings were instituted by the wife.[34] If at the time the conveyance was made there was no intention to defraud the wife, however, it cannot afterward be attacked by her for matters subsequently arising.[35]

(III) NOTICE TO GRANTEE. To invalidate the conveyance, the grantee must have had notice, either actual or constructive, that the conveyance to him was made by the husband for the purpose of avoiding payment of alimony in favor of the wife,[36] since an actual, fraudulent intent in both the husband and his grantee must be shown.[37] The mere fact that the husband and wife have separated is known to the purchaser is not of itself sufficient to defeat the conveyance;[38] but knowledge of the pendency of the suit or of the fact that the wife contemplates bringing the suit may be deemed sufficient notice to him.[39]

show cause why he should not be punished for his failure to make the payment provided for in the decree.[48]

(III) Defenses—(A) In General. The fact that the decree directing payment of alimony is made a specific lien upon real estate does not deprive the court of its power to enforce payment by an attachment for contempt;[49] nor does the pendency of an action to recover the alimony[50] or a technical irregularity in complainant's proceedings justify defendant's non-compliance with the order.[51] The fact that the allowance of alimony was too large is no defense in contempt proceedings where the husband has not applied for a modification of the order.[52]

(B) Inability to Pay. A defendant cannot be imprisoned for contempt in failing to pay money awarded as alimony which he is unable to pay,[53] unless it appear that his inability was occasioned by his own act for the purpose of avoiding payment.[54] However, the husband cannot be punished for his failure to seek employment in order to earn money to pay alimony.[55] The burden is upon a husband alleging inability to show that fact.[56]

(iv) Discharge From Imprisonment.[57] The husband should be discharged from imprisonment upon surrendering all his property to the court,[58] or upon full payment of the amount due at the time of his commitment together with the amount which has accrued during his imprisonment.[59]

G. Appeal[60] — 1. In General. The jurisdiction of appellate courts in cases of alimony is exercised in conformity with the statutes in force in the several states. As a general rule decrees either allowing or refusing alimony are reviewable on appeal,[61] although under the practice or statutes in some states orders for the payment of temporary alimony and counsel fees are not appealable before the final determination of the suit.[62]

2. Supersedeas. Statutory provisions relating to undertakings to stay proceedings on a final judgment usually apply to a decree directing the payment of alimony.[63] The amount of the undertaking is ordinarily based upon the sum

See, however, In re Cowden, 139 Cal. 244, 73 Pac. 156, holding that where the order committing petitioner for contempt in failing to pay alimony does not recite that he was able to pay, and such fact was not proved by affidavit or otherwise, the commitment was illegal, although the order recited that petitioner wilfully refused to pay the amount adjudged.

Evidence.—A conveyance by a husband with intent to prevent the execution of a decree for alimony, combined with the fact that the grantees were his son-in-law and daughter, is competent evidence in a contempt proceeding upon the question whether the husband has in his possession or control the means of paying the order of the court. 4. REVIEW. Where the testimony pertaining to matters upon which the allowance of alimony is made is conflicting the determination of the court below will not be reviewed;[69] nor will an appellate court interfere with the discretion of the lower court in determining whether temporary or permanent alimony should be allowed or in fixing the amount thereof, unless there has been an abuse of discretion.[70] Upon an appeal from an allowance of alimony in a decree of divorce, no question involving the granting of the divorce will be considered.[71]

5. DISPOSITION OF CAUSE. A modification of an allowance of alimony in a judgment or decree may, under the practice in most of the states, be made by the appellate court without a reversal, where all the facts necessary to enable it to do so are contained in the record on appeal.[72]

XX. CUSTODY AND SUPPORT OF CHILDREN.

A. Jurisdiction — 1. Of Subject-Matter. By express statutory provision, or in the absence of that by necessary implication, the court in which a divorce suit is brought has full authority to provide for the custody and support of the children of the marriage.[73] Statutes conferring such authority usually require it to be exercised by the court in which the divorce proceedings were instituted.[74] The jurisdiction is a continuing one, subject to be invoked at any time, and will not be interfered with by process issuing out of other courts.[75]

2. Of Person of Child. If defendant and the minor children are not within the jurisdiction of the court and a divoree is granted upon substituted service of process, the court cannot assume jurisdiction over the person of the children and award their custody to plaintiff;[76] but once having acquired jurisdiction of the person of defendant, the court retains it for the purpose of decreeing the custody of the children, although they may be removed from its territorial jurisdiction prior to the granting of the decree.[77] It is not necessary that the children be brought personally into court by writ of habeas corpus or otherwise.[78]

3. Necessity of Prayer in Pleading. Statutes usually authorize the court upon granting a divorce to award to either one or the other of the parties the custody of the children, even though no prayer therefor is contained in the pleadings.[79]

B. Custody Pending Action and After Decree — 1. Pending Action. The statutes in most jurisdictions are sufficiently broad to permit the courts to dispose of the custody of the children pending the action for divorce.[80]

2. After Divorce. Statutes conferring jurisdiction upon courts in relation to the custody and support of children are usually construed so as to authorize the court, upon decreeing a divorce, to determine which of the parents shall be intrusted with the custody of the children.[81] A decree of absolute divorce granted to the husband with no provision relating to the custody of a child precludes a subsequent application by the wife for an order permitting her to have access to the child;[82] but in the absence of statute the rule is otherwise where the decree is for a separation and makes no provision as to the children.[83]

3. On Dismissal or Denial of Divorce. Ordinarily where a decree of divorce has been refused to either party, the court will not pass on the question of the custody of the children,[84] but there are cases to the contrary.[85]

C. Award of Custody — 1. Interest or Welfare of Child. In determining the party in whose custody a child shall be placed after a divorce the leading if not the paramount consideration is the interest or welfare of the child.[86]

W. 429, holding that a statute authorizing the court to direct the payment of money for the separate support and maintenance of the wife and the children is sufficient to authorize the court to make such orders regarding the custody of the children pending the action as their welfare demands.

Missouri.— In re Morgan, 117 Mo. 249, 21 S. W. 1122, 22 S. W. 913, holding that where a court is authorized to dispose of the care, custody, and maintenance of the children when a divorce shall be adjudged, an ad interim order respecting such custody may be made.

2. Award to Third Person. Unless it is clearly shown that both the parties are unqualified,[87] the court is not justified in awarding the custody of the children to a third person.[88]

3. Award to Father or Mother — a. In General. The respective rights of the parents should be considered in determining to whom the child's custody should be awarded.[89]

b. To Father. The rule at common law is that the primary right to the custody and control of the children, without regard to sex, and with slight qualification as to early infancy, is in the father, and unless he is shown to be unfit or unable to care for them their custody should be awarded him on a divorce being granted;[90] but statutes empowering the courts in their discretion to award the custody of the children to either parent and to decree the payment of support money in proper cases have placed the parents substantially on an equality so far as the right to the custody of children is concerned.[91] cruelty,[95] or desertion.[96] However, the custody of children may be awarded to the offending party where the circumstances are such that their welfare will be thereby promoted.[97]

e. Character and Conduct of Parties. Inasmuch as parental example has great influence in the development of young children, due regard should be had to the character and conduct of the parties in awarding the custody of the children. If it be shown that the daily conduct of the father is not a fit example for them to follow and the mother appears to be a suitable person, their custody should be awarded to her.[98] If on the other hand the mother is addicted to vicious habits and so is not a suitable person to rear and educate the children, the natural right of the husband will prevail, or the custody of the children may be awarded to a third person.[99]

f. Preference of Children. Where the children are of such an age as to know their own wants, and the rights and capabilities of the parents are evenly balanced, the court may consult and abide by the wishes of the former in determining to which of the parents their custody should be awarded.[1]

g. Discretion of Court. The award of the custody of children upon or after a divorce is within the discretion of the court, to be exercised with due regard to the welfare of the children and the rights of the parties.[2] necessarily control the decision of the court,[3] although if conducive to the general welfare of the children the court may direct a compliance with its provisions.[4]

D. Removal of Children From Jurisdiction. In some cases the court in awarding the custody of children has directed that they shall not without its permission be permanently removed from its jurisdiction.[5] On the other hand it has been held that if it is conducive to the best interests of the child its custody may be awarded to a parent who resides without the state[6] or is about to depart therefrom and reside elsewhere.[7]

E. Access to Children. Where a decree of divorce awards the custody of the child to either of the parties, it is proper to include a provision permitting the other to visit the child under such restrictions as the conduct of the parties and the circumstances of the particular case may warrant.[8] The court will not ordinarily give an adulterous wife access to her children, although it is not absolutely precluded from doing so;[9] and access has been given to an adulterous husband.[10] Although the decree contains no provision allowing the parent deprived of the custody of the child to visit it, he may nevertheless do so at convenient and proper times in a decent and respectful manner.[11]

F. Duration and Termination of Custody. The English rule is to permit the court to regulate the custody of children until they attain the age of sixteen.[12] On the death of the parent to whom the custody of the child is awarded, the other parent ordinarily succeeds to the right of custody.[13]

G. Order or Decree as to Custody — 1. Operation and Effect. Unless modified or set aside,[14] a decree awarding the custody of a child is conclusive as to all questions affecting the matter existing at the time it was rendered,[15] and cannot be collaterally attacked.[16] The decree does not preclude further action by the court as new facts creating new issues arise, however.[17] An award of the custody of a child to the mother operates to divest the father of all right of control over the child.[18]

2. Modification — a. Power of Court. Power is usually conferred by statute upon the court to modify an order or decree disposing of the custody of a child by transferring it from one party to the other or by permitting the party deprived of the custody to visit the child.[19]

b. Application. An application for a modification of the decree as to the custody of the children should be made to the court in which the decree was rendered,[20] upon proper notice to the adverse party;[21] and it has been held that the application should be made in a proceeding brought expressly therefor, and not in a collateral proceeding such as a hearing on habeas corpus.[22]

c. Grounds. A modification of the decree awarding custody of the children will not be made unless it be shown that the circumstances of the parties have changed, or unless material facts are disclosed which at the time the decree was rendered were unknown and could not have been ascertained with reasonable diligence.[23] Where it is shown that the child is suffering for want of proper care, and that it is to its best interests that it be transferred from the custody to which it was awarded, the court will in its discretion modify the decree,[24] unless the court is deprived of this discretion by statute.[25]

H. Support of Children — 1. In General. The usual practice under the statutes is to provide in the decree granting the divorce for the support of the children, in addition to an allowance for alimony.[26] However, the power of the court to make an order directing the father to provide for the maintenance of the minor children under petition in the suit long after final decree has been entered is well established, where the decree contains no provision on the subject.[27]

2. Common-Law Liability. At common law the father remains primarily liable for the support of the children of the marriage as well after as before a divorce;[28] and the rule is the same where the custody of the children has been awarded to the mother,[29] unless the divorce was granted for her fault.[30] It has been held, however, that after a decree of divorce, either with or without an order for the custody of the children and in the absence of an order for their maintenance, there is no implied obligation on the part of a father to pay for support voluntarily furnished by the mother of the children, while she maintains the right to their custody.[31]

require the husband to provide for the support of children before final judgment in divorce is limited to the issue of the marriage.[32] An order cannot be made for the support of a child who is of age at the time the divorce is granted,[33] although it is an invalid;[34] and if a child has attained such an age that it is capable of supporting itself the court will not require the father to contribute to its maintenance.[35]

4. Amount of Allowance. The amount allowed for the support of children depends largely upon the financial condition of the father and the needs and circumstances of the children.[36] If a mother to whom the custody of a child has been awarded has means of her own, she may be held to contribute toward its support, and thus diminish the amount to be paid by the father;[37] the rule in this respect not differing materially from that applied in the case of an allowance of permanent alimony.[38]

5. Order or Decree — a. In General. An order for support is not necessarily erroneous because the court has not previously made an order for the custody of the child.[39] The power of the court to make an order for the support is limited to the conditions existing at the time the order is made.[40] In some states, where a child is awarded to the mother, the court cannot direct that an amount awarded for its support be paid to its guardian instead of to the mother.[41] On the wife's motion for alimony and provision for a child the court may order the husband to pay separate sums for the support of both.[42] The order for support is not vitiated by irregularities which result in no prejudice to either party.[43]

b. Modification. The amount allowed for the support of children is subject to subsequent modification, where the changed condition of the parties requires it;[44] the conditions under which an allowance for support may be modified and the proceedings thereon being substantially the same as in the case of a modification of an allowance of permanent alimony.[45]

c. Enforcement. An allowance for the support of the children is usually made under the same authority as an allowance of alimony and its payment is usually enforced in the same manner.[46] Execution against the father may issue in the mother's favor,[47] a receiver may be appointed to take charge of the father's property and to apply the proceeds thereof to the children's support,[48] or the father may be proceeded against as for contempt, if authorized by statute.[49]

6. Termination of Liability. A decree directing a father to provide for the support of his minor children until the further order of the court is not necessarily discharged by his death;[50] but upon the death of the mother to whom the allowance was directed to be paid the decree becomes ineffective and the husband's duty to support the child becomes absolute.[51] Liability under the decree is also terminated by the child's attaining majority.[52]

I. Appeal. An order awarding the custody and support of infant children is generally appealable, but it will not be disturbed on appeal, unless there has been a clear abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court.[53]

B. Effect of Void Divorce. If a foreign divorce is void because the court was without jurisdiction of the subject-matter or of the parties, the decree is given no effect whatever in the courts of another state.[56]

C. Jurisdiction of Foreign Court — 1. In General. To give validity to a foreign divorce and so render it effectual in other states the court pronouncing the decree must have had jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the suit and of the parties thereto. This is equally true of decrees of courts of sister states; if there was no jurisdiction the decree is not entitled to the faith and credit guaranteed by the federal constitution.[57]

2. By Consent. If neither party resides in a foreign state they cannot confer jurisdiction on its courts by consent so as to authorize a valid decree of divorce.[58]

3. Residence of Parties — a. In General. The courts of one state cannot determine the status of citizens of another state. To give validity to a decree of divorce therefore at least one of the parties must be a resident of the state of the forum. Otherwise the courts of that state have no jurisdiction and the decree will not be given extraterritorial effect.[59]

b. Of Plaintiff. If defendant does not reside in the state of the forum plaintiff must reside there, else the court has no jurisdiction to grant a decree.[60]

c. Of Defendant. If plaintiff is a resident of the state of the forum, residence of defendant therein is not necessary to confer jurisdiction on the court to dissolve the marriage.[61]

d. Genuineness and Sufficiency — (I) In General. To give the courts jurisdiction on the ground of plaintiff's residence in the state, his residence must be actual and genuine.[62]

(II) Residence For Purpose of Procuring Divorce. If a spouse leaves the family domicile and goes into another state for the sole purpose of obtaining a divorce, and with no intention of remaining, his residence there is not sufficient to confer jurisdiction on the courts of that state.[63] This is especially true where the cause of divorce is one not recognized by the laws of the state of his domicile.[64] If, however, the spouse leaves the state with no intention of returning, and takes up a permanent residence in a foreign state, he may lawfully acquire a divorce there which will be recognized in the state of his former domicile.[65]

(III) Length of Residence. In some states it is required by statute that an injured spouse must reside in the state a certain length of time before he can apply for a divorce.[66] The courts are in conflict, however, as to whether a foreign decree obtained by a bona fide resident of the foreign state is invalidated by the fact that his residence there has not continued for the prescribed period.[67]

(IV) Separate Residence of Wife. While the matrimonial domicile of the wife is usually that of the husband, yet if he is guilty of misconduct entitling her to a divorce, she may leave him and acquire a new residence in another state.[68] So if the husband deserts the wife and removes to a foreign state, the wife may remain and retain her original domicile.[69]

Constitutional law.— The provision of the federal constitution that full faith and credit shall be given to the judicial proceedings of one state in the courts of another does not enable a state to assume jurisdiction of per-constitutional mode recognized by the statutes of the state[71] or by a general appearance on the part of defendant.[72]

(II) Constructive Service of Process. If both parties are domiciled within the state where the action is brought a constructive service of process upon defendant is sufficient to insure the validity of the decree.[73] So a decree of divorce regularly obtained in the courts of one state by a plaintiff residing therein against a non-resident defendant constructively served with process in accordance with the practice in that state and which is valid and effectual there is equally valid in every other state.[74] In some states this rule has been accepted subject to qualifications[75] and in others it has been denied in toto.[76] Since, however, the

b. Conclusiveness of Recitals of Decree. Recitals of the existence of jurisdictional facts in the foreign decree or findings of the foreign court are not conclusive on the domestic courts and may be contradicted in a collateral attack on the decree.[83]

c. Presumption of Jurisdiction. In the absence of evidence to the contrary, it is ordinarily presumed that a foreign court which has assumed to grant a divorce is authorized to do so by the statutes of the state of whose government it forms a part.[84] It has been held, however, that there is no presumption of jurisdiction where it does not appear by the foreign record that either of the parties was domiciled within the state,[85] and that defendant was legally served or voluntarily appeared.[86]

E. Estoppel Against Attack — 1. By Judgment Refusing to Vacate Decree. An attempt by defendant, made in a court of the state where the decree was granted, to set it aside, which was defeated upon technical grounds solely, does not preclude him from impeaching it in the state of his residence on the ground that neither he nor plaintiff was a resident of the state wherein it was granted.[88]

2. By Pleading. An allegation in a pleading that the judgment of another state is void by the laws of the state in which it is brought into question is a statement of a conclusion of law and is not admitted by a demurrer to the pleading.[89]

3. Right of Prevailing Party to Attack Decree. A party who has obtained a foreign divorce cannot thereafter be heard to impeach the decree or deny its validity.[90]

This principle has been applied where a wife residing in one state obtains a divorce in another for a cause which is not recognized by the laws of the state in which she resided, upon a service of process by publication, and where after the death of her former husband she petitions for letters of administration upon his estate, claiming to be his widow. 56. The arbitrary sign or mark "$" in connection with figures is commonly used as an abbreviation of or to represent the term "dollar" or "dollars." Jackson v. Cum-coin[57] and as an expression of value.[58] As the name of a coin, it may mean a gold coin;[59] one of the gold coins of the United States, which at the standard weight of twenty-five and eight-tenths grains shall be the unit of value;[60] a silver coin;[61] one of the silver coins of the United States.[62] As an expression or measure of value, it is a unit of our currency;[63] the legal money unit of this country, made so by the laws of the United States;[64] one hundred cents of the legal currency of the nation;[65] one hundred cents, no more, no less, whether it is silver, gold, or paper;[66] a certain quantity in weight and fineness of gold or silver, authenticated as such by the stamp of the government.[67] (See CURRENCY; CURRENT FUNDS; DOLLARS; DOLLARS AND CENTS; and, generally, BANKS AND BANKING; COMMERCIAL PAPER; COUNTERFEITING.)

DOLLARS. Coined dollars;[68] gold dollars;[69] gold or silver dollars.[70] As a word of description, it may be used to denote a number of cents or dimes as well

mings, 15 Ill. 449, 453; Hunt v. Smith, 9 Kan. 137, 153; Clark v. Stoughton, 18 Vt. 50, 52, 44 Am. Dec. 361; Webster Dict. [quoted in Hall v. King, 29 Ind. 205, 206]. See also 8 Cyc. 138 note 70; 1 Cyc. 138 note 13.

Origin and meaning of the sign "$."—In an article entitled "Arbitrary signs," under "Monetary and Commercial," the sign "$" is described thus: "'$' dollar or dollars, as $1, $200; and in a note it is said, 'the origin of the sign $ has been variously accounted for, but it is probably a modified figure 8, denoting a 'piece of eight,' i. e. eight reals, an old Spanish coin of the value of a dollar." Webster Dict. [quoted in Hall v. King, 29 Ind. 205, 206]. In Goodall v. Harrison, 2 Mo. 153, 154, the court hold that the mark "$" for dollar is not a character known to the English language as a character to express a word or a part of a word. They put the decision upon a statute requiring proceedings in court to be in the English tongue only, and "in words at length and not abbreviated, except such abbreviations as are now commonly used in the English language." But the latter case was criticized in Jackson v. Cummings, 15 Ill. 449, 452, where it is said: "We can not follow the precedent of the Missouri court. I do not know the date of the Missouri statute, nor of the adoption of the mark '$' as an abbreviation of 'dollar' into common use in business transactions. On entering into business I found it domiciliated into the family of English abbreviations for the word 'dollar,' and never heard its claims questioned until now, nor its signification applied to any other word. . . . Doubtless this court would have sustained the indorsed credit '50' on the note, in Gilpatrick v. Foster, 12 Ill. 355, 357, as a credit for fifty dollars, had the mark '$' been a prefix."

Use of the decimal point.— "Whenever figures are used intending to represent money, such figures must, of course, be understood to represent 'dollars,' unless a different intention is clearly expressed. The point or dot, resembling a period in punctuation, separating certain figures on the right from those on the left, is the decimal point. It makes the figures on the right decimals of a unit of whatever is intended to be expressed by those on the left. Those on the left, as we have already seen, are intended to represent dollars, hence those on the right must represent decimals of dollars. As only two figures on the right are thus separated from the others, these two figures must represent hundredths of dollars; or, in other words, 'cents.' This is well settled by almost universal usage everywhere in the United States." Hunt v. Smith, 9 Kan. 137, 153.

theless the term "domicile" may have a variety of significations dependent upon its various applications. In common parlance it is often taken to mean simply the house in which a man may have his abode for the time being. Again a man may have a commercial, a political, or a forensic domicile, and all of these may exist at one and the same time and in different localities.[2]

B. Synonymous With "Home." No one word is more nearly synonymous with "domicile" than "home."[3]

"We like this conception of the word home, which constitutes the commanding element of the definition given in the Roman law, as well as those given by these two modern jurists. It is the word whose essential meaning comes up fully to our idea of domicil. It is a word which admits not of qualification. To speak of a permanent home is to perpetrate a tautology — to speak of a temporary home is to involve a contradiction of terms. It is a word which finds its true interpretation in the instincts of our nature. It is a word the full meaning of which is of universal appreciation; it is understood alike by the degraded savage and the classic Greek — by the Republican serf and the refined

C. Distinguished From "Residence" and "Inhabitancy." "Domicile" and "residence" are not convertible terms. The former is of more extensive signification and includes beyond mere physical presence at the particular locality positive or presumptive proof of an intention to constitute it a permanent abiding place.[4] Nor is "domicile" synonymous with "inhabitancy," as the latter is deemed to include citizenship[5] and municipal relations.[6] As used in many statutes,[7] however, particularly those relating to the qualification of Roman. Wherever that spot is found there the law fixes the domicil of succession, it matters not whether that be upon the wasted hills of the 'North State' or on the virgin plains of the 'Land of Flowers.'" Smith v. Croom, 7 Fla. 81, 153.

"Any person may have his domicile in one place and his residence, for the time being, in another. Domicile and residence are not convertible terms. Thus, a citizen of Mississippi may retain his dwelling here, with its furniture undisturbed, in charge of his neighbor or some friend, for a year or more, while he is educating his children in another, and occupying a hired house there, for that purpose. In such case, it is obvious that Mississippi continues to be the place of his domicile; and it is equally clear that he becomes, notwithstanding, a temporary resident of the other State where he is educating his children." Alston v. Newcomer, 42 Miss. 186, 192.

"The derivation of the two words, domicile and residence, fully points out the distinction in their meaning. A home (domus) is something more than a temporary place of remaining (residendi) however long such stay may continue." Burrill v. Jewett, 2 Rob. (N. Y.) 701, 702.

"There is a wide difference between domicile and mere residence. Of course they may be, and usually are, at the same place, and it is quite obvious that they may be at different places. But domicile is but the established, fixed, permanent, and may therefore be said to be the ordinary, dwelling place or place of residence of a party, as distinguished from his temporary and transient though actual place of residence. One is his legal residence as distinguished from his temporary place of abode; or, to use the language of the charge, one is his home, as distinguished from the place or places to which business or pleasure may temporarily call him." 7. "In all cases where a statute prescribes residence as a qualification for the enjoyment of a privilege, or the exercise of a franchise, the word residence is equivalent to the place of domicile of the person who claims its benefit." Matter of Dimock, 11 Misc. (N. Y.) 610, 613, 32 N. Y. Suppl. 927.

Residence has been deemed equivalent to domicile when used in a statute regulating conscription (Ex p. Blumer, 27 Tex. 734), the abode of a public official (Kempster v. Milwaukee, 97 Wis. 343, 72 N. W. 743), jurisdiction generally (Wood r. Roeder, 45 Nebr. 311, 63 N. W. 853), or the right to tuition in public schools (State v. Superior School Dist., 55 Nebr. 317, 75 N. W. 855).

voters,[8] to homesteads,[9] to taxation,[10] to the statute of limitations,[11] to succession, guardianship, and administration,[12] and in those prescribing the jurisdictional prerequisites to the maintenance of actions for divorce or separation the term "residence" has been held equivalent to "domicile."[13]

II. NECESSITY AND LIMITATION.

It is a settled principle that no man shall be deemed to be without a domicile, although he can have but one only at any given time,[14] or, as the rule is usually

See also Gardner v. Board of Education, 5 Dak. 259, 38 N. W. 433. The term "residence," as employed in the statute requiring the true residence to be stated in an affidavit to verify a plea in abatement, means the party's domicile or home. stated, he can have but one domicile at the same time for one and the same purpose.[15]

III. CLASSIFICATION.

A. In General. Domicile may be divided into domicile of origin, domicile of choice, and domicile by operation of law.[16]

B. Domicile of Origin. A domicile of origin is that which every infant has upon attaining majority, being the domicile of the parents at that time.[17]

C. Domicile of Choice. A domicile of choice is that which the individual has elected and chosen for himself to displace the domicile (whether of origin or of choice) previously obtained.[18]

15. See, generally, cases cited supra, note 14. It is obvious, however, from an examination of the cases that the last clause is a weak attempt to qualify what for all practical purposes is an absolute proposition, since the apparent exceptions (such as the so-called "commercial domicile") bear not upon domicile in its true sense but upon residence.
