ordered until plaintiff has shown enough to shift the burden of proof on defendant.[87] Nevertheless, where the court regards the testimony taken as an insufficient or unsatisfactory basis for a decision, it may of its own motion direct issues to be framed for trial by jury upon evidence to be introduced by the parties, and upon the rendition of the verdict rehear the case upon the testimony taken, the verdict, and such further testimony as the court may desire.[88] And where the evidence is conflicting, contradictory, or confusing, so as to make it doubtful on which side the preponderance lies, it is proper to submit the disputed facts to a jury.[89] Likewise where the credibility of the material witnesses is involved and

Before any evidence has been taken the court will not ordinarily submit issues to a jury, and especially not where it is not apparent that such issues will be decisive or even material. Fenno v. Primrose, 125 Fed. 635.

Weight of answer.— Issues should never be ordered where the court is of opinion that the answer is entitled to the same weight as two witnesses, or as one witness and corroborating circumstances, as the jury are not to be governed by this technical weight allowed to an answer. Gamble v. Johnson, 9 Mo. 605. Where defendant in express terms negatives the allegations in the bill, and the evidence of one person only affirms what has been so negatived, the court will not send the cause to be determined by a trial at law. Bougher v. Connecticut, 1 Pa. Co. Ct. 184.

Contest of wills.— Unless it appears to the court that there is evidence sufficient to justify a jury in finding against the validity of a will an issue will not be granted; and a mere scintilla of proof is not enough, nor the vague, loose, and ill-defined opinions of witnesses, nor the apparently unreasonable exclusion of the only child from the benefits of the will. Dyre's Estate, 12 Phila. (Pa.) 156; In re Colgate, 12 Phila. (Pa.) 48; In re Hardy, 12 Phila. (Pa.) 22. In determining the question of testamentary capacity, the fact that there is a scintilla of evidence to support the contestant's claim will not make it the duty of the court to submit the case to a jury. If the inherent probabilities in favor of the will are such that no verdict against it could properly be sustained, an issue will not be granted. In re Burdon, 14 Phila. (Pa.) 332. Nuisance.— Where a bill was filed praying to have a nuisance abated, and for an injunction to restrain defendant, and the act complained of was of the character of a nuisance, but the testimony was not sufficient to satisfy the court that it amounted to a nuisance in the particular case, an issue to determine the fact was properly directed. Clark v. Lawrence, 59 N. C. 83, 78 Am. Dec. 241.

uncertain.[90] But the court is not bound to direct an issue on the ground that the evidence is conflicting or contradictory, for the court may judge of the weight of the evidence, and if its conscience is satisfied may decide the case without a jury.[91]

B. Proceedings For Submission of Issues — 1. Direction and Framing of Issues — a. In General. When in equity proceedings a jury trial is desired appropriate issues will be made up under the direction of the court.[92] While

The prudent course.— Although a court of equity is not bound to direct an issue to a jury merely because the evidence is contradictory, yet where the proof is so conflicting as to make it difficult to attain a satisfactory conclusion it is prudent if not indispensable to do so. Kennedy v. Kennedy, 2 Ala. 571.

92. The court should so condense the issues as to present some proposition which the jury can neither affirm nor deny without finding all the other facts necessary to a conclusion. Barth v. Rosenfeld, 36 Md. 604.

An order that an issue be tried by a jury may not only direct the issue but frame it so that no more formal framing is necessary. Dorr v. Tremont Nat. Bank, 128 Mass. 349.

An issue to try the validity of a will is the same in fact as an issue to try whether the writing in question is a will or not. Ford v. Gardner, 1 Hen. & M. (Va.) 72.

Mental incapacity and undue influence.—A grantor sought to set aside a conveyance, alleging that because of imbecility of mind she was easily imposed upon, and was overreached and deceived by the representations of the grantee, and thereby induced to part with her property. It was held that such allegations being denied the issues should be, Was plaintiff when she executed the conveyance laboring under mental imbecility so as to render her an easy victim to undue influence? and was the conveyance procured through such influence? Gass v. Mason, 4 Sneed (Tenn.) 497. See also Bailey v. Ryder, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 74.

Cases governed more or less by local practice.—Three series of questions were submitted to the jury — one prepared by the court, one by plaintiff, and one by defendant — each series covering to a great extent the ground covered by the other series. It was held that the correct practice was to submit but one series of interrogatories covering the material questions in dispute. Kelly v. Perrault, 5 Ida. 221, 48 Pac. 45. Where a court directs a feigned issue to be made, the order directing it should provide that such issue be tried by a jury, unless the parties waive the jury and elect to try it by the court. Russell v. Chicago, etc., Electric R. Co., 98 Ill. App. 347. Issues to a jury should be framed and filed at a jury term, and not a law term of this court. Coffin v. Easton, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 107. Where upon the report of an auditor either party desires to try the case by jury, and there has not been an issue of fact joined, the proper mode is not to traverse the conclusions of the auditor, but for the party having the affirmative to file an allegation of the facts which he asserts should be traversed by the other party. Brewer v. Hyndman, 18 N. H. 9. Upon a reference to a master to settle issues and the place where they are to be tried, affidavits of the materiality and residence of the witnesses, for the purpose of fixing the place of trial, must state the substance of what the deponent expects to prove by each witness. Meach v. Chappell, 8 Paige (N. Y.) 135. Demand for an issue should be in writing (Moyer's Estate, 1 Pearson (Pa.) 407), and the form of the issue demanded should accompany the demand (Mealey's Estate, 11 Phila. (Pa.) 161). A case from which all equitable features have been eliminated, reducing it simply to an action to recover real property, is properly triable by jury, and it is not necessary to frame the issues to be submitted. Robertson v. Sharpton, 17 S. C. 592. Under Tenn. Code. § 4468 (Shannon Code, § 6285), providing that issues shall be made up by the parties under the direction of the court, defendant has a like privilege as plaintiff to tender issues to the court to be submitted. Green v. Huggins, (Ch. App. 1898) 52 S. W. 675. It is error to submit a number of points in evidence tending severally to establish a controlling, controverted fact in as many different issues; such points should be covered by one issue and not submitted separately. Crisman v. McMurray, 107 Tenn. 469, 64 S. W. 711. Application for a jury trial must be made by motion in open court and cannot be made by a demand in a replication or other pleading. Cheatham v. Pearce, 89 Tenn. 668, 15 S. W. 1080. Where an issue is directed by the United States circuit court for the third circuit, no declaration of any sort is requisite. The case is put on the trial list, and the jury sworn to try the issue, in the words of the order of issue itself. Wilson v. Barnum, 30 Fed. Cas. No. 17,786, 1 Wall. Jr. 342. The motion for jury issues will not in general be granted, where it appears that a trial at law and a hearing in equity have already been had, and that both have resulted in favor of the complainant. Howe v. Williams, 12 Fed. Cas. No. 6,778, 2 Cliff. 245.

When the verdict of the jury is merely advisory (see infra, XX, D, 1) error cannot be predicated on the form in which the in-ordinarily a jury trial is not had in equity cases unless the parties themselves apply for it,[93] it is nevertheless well settled that the court may of its own motion submit specific questions of fact to a jury for its own information and enlightenment.[94] Where an issue is ordered, the question whether the order is for an action at law or an issue out of chancery does not depend upon the form in which the issue is framed; but its nature and purpose give it character as the one or the other.[95] The court may direct an issue to be tried without expressly revoking an order of reference to auditors.[96] Where the judge before whom certain issues in equity are tried by a jury acts as chancellor in making the decree, the same proofs being relied on before the jury and the chancellor, a previous order submitting the issues to the jury is unnecessary.[97] It is irregular for the court to submit the whole case to the jury, without specifying the particular object or objects of inquiry,[98] and these should be separately stated so that the jury can answer each terrogatories to the jury are propounded (W. H. Taggart Mercantile Co. v. Clark, (Ariz. 1903) 71 Pac. 925), nor because the court refuses to submit questions requested by a party (Royce v. Latshaw, 15 Colo. App. 420, 62 Pac. 627), nor because the court, on motion of plaintiff without notice to defendant, submitted certain issues to the jury, as it may have done so for its own enlightenment (Rynerson v. Allison, 28 S. C. 81, 5 S. E. 218).

93. The time when application must be made for the framing of issues is a matter of local practice, usually governed by statutes or rules of court, and not presenting principles of general importance. The following cases explaining these local regulations are generally of value only in the jurisdictions in which they are decided, and no useful purpose would be subserved by treating them at length.

In South Carolina an order refusing to grant a jury trial in a chancery case, under Code, § 274*a*, even if conclusive as to the right to such trial under that section, does not preclude the court's right to frame for its own enlightenment an issue of fact to be tried by a jury. separately.[99] In other words the issues should be explicit and distinct.[1] But the issues raised need not embrace all the disputed facts, for the court may determine some for itself, and send only the others to the jury.[2] The same issue will not be presented to the jury at the instance of several different parties, unless they are joined as plaintiffs or defendants, so that there shall be but one verdict.[3] And where several defendants set up the same matter in defense, or put in issue the same allegations in the bill, and a replication is filed to all such answers, an issue must be awarded as to all or neither.[4] But if defendants have not a common interest, or if their defenses are distinct, an issue may be awarded as to one defendant, and refused as to the others.[5] When issues have been framed and are being tried, and the testimony brings out other issues a determination of which is necessary to a final decision of the controversy on its merits, additional issues may be framed for the purpose of presenting the whole case together, when doing so will not operate to the prejudice or surprise of the adverse party.[6] Likewise when there is a decree for one of the parties, but before judgment can be entered certain facts must be determined, the court will send the cause to a jury to determine such facts.[7]

b. What Issues Will Be Submitted. To justify the court in awarding a jury trial, there must be a material fact or facts in dispute, and this must appear, not only by allegation,[8] but also by evidence on which the court could sustain a verdict for the demandant.[9] A chancery case which does not involve any important issues of fact, but depends on the application of legal principles to admitted facts, should not be submitted to a jury for an advisory verdict.[10] The issue submitted by the court should be confined to disputed facts[11] which are material to the

Naked assertion in unsworn answer.— Where a motion for a jury trial was predicated upon the naked assertion of a fact in defendant's answer not under oath, it was held that there was no chancery practice which would require the court to submit a question of fact to a jury, upon the bare assertion of counsel that the fact existed, unsupported by any evidence whatever. decree;[12] it is error to direct an issue to try a question of law[13] or a mixed question of law and fact.[14] It is also error for the court to submit to a jury a question of fact the decision of which was necessarily involved in a decree previously rendered.[15] But error in submitting to the jury equitable issues which the court should have determined itself has been held to be cured by the court's passing on the issues notwithstanding the verdict.[16]

2. Objections and Exceptions to Issues. Objections to the order referring issues to a jury should be made before trial, and generally at the time such order is granted;[17] and it is too late to object on appeal that there was no formal order directing an issue, and that the court had without such order considered the finding of the jury.[18] Objections to the form of the issue should also be made before trial,[19] and should be made in the court from which they are sent.[20] When no objection is made at the time to the form of issue, such objection cannot be raised for the first time on appeal.[21] And where a party asks for a jury in the chancery court, it is too late after an appeal to have the case remanded for another jury trial, on the ground that the first issue was not a proper one.[22] A party who has agreed to the issues as submitted to the jury cannot afterward object either to their form or substance.[23]

3. Withdrawal and Modification of Issues. After referring an issue to a jury the court may revoke the order before trial,[24] or it may proceed to a decree without trying the issue or setting aside the order;[25] for the general rule is that an issue may be withdrawn by the court directing it at any time and be decided by the court itself.[26] Even after impaneling the jury, the court, if it be the same which directed the issue, may discharge them and itself find on the evidence.[27]

Where the evidence is too vague, even if believed, to establish the equity set up, it should be withdrawn by the chancery court

And where the parties by consent withdraw from the jury one of several issues, on which one the jury has been unable to agree, such withdrawal will not operate as a mistrial, but a waiver of jury trial as to that issue, and a tacit consent that it be decided by the court.[28] But neither party can by plea or otherwise change or qualify the issues as submitted.[29]

4. Failure to Demand Issues and Waiver of Right. If a party to a chancery suit desires a jury trial he should apply for one,[30] for, where it is proper to direct an issue, if applied for, but both parties proceed to take testimony and allow the hearing to be brought on without applying therefor, it is the privilege of the court to decide the issue when it can arrive at a satisfactory conclusion from the evidence.[31] This is especially so when there is no conflict in the evidence,[32] but even when the evidence is conflicting the fact that the court did not direct an issue is not error under these circumstances.[33] One's right to a jury trial may be waived by consenting to a reference,[34] or by a failure to object to an order sending the case to a master for a hearing on the merits.[35]

C. Trial of Issues Submitted — 1. Control of Chancery Court Over Trial. Where the chancery court is not required by statute to submit issues of fact to a jury, and does so only for its own enlightenment and to satisfy its own conscience, it may control the conduct of the trial of the issues and the proceedings before the jury in such way as it sees fit so that the purpose of the submission of the issues may be best subserved.[36] The chancery court may direct, not only what shall be tried, but the form of the issue, and who shall be the parties,[37] and which party shall uphold the affirmative of the issue,[38] what shall or shall not be relied on, on each side, as cause of action or defense,[39] and what evidence shall be received at law.[40] Directions may be given as to the use of the chancery pleadings as evidence at the trial,[41] or as to the use of depositions or written evidence

41. For a discussion of when and how far the chancery court will direct the answer to be read as evidence see Sturtevant v. Waterbury, 1 Edw. (N. Y.) 442, and cases cited therein. The answer of defendant cannot be read as evidence in the trial at law, unless in general.[42] When the chancery court makes an order that certain evidence shall be received at the trial of an issue at law, the judge conducting that trial has nothing to do with the admissibility of the whole or any part of the evidence, and accordingly must receive all of it and cannot reject any part of it; the chancery court by its order becomes responsible for the legality of the evidence.[43] Nor does the court of law have anything to do with the pleadings in equity upon which the issues are framed. Its province is simply to submit to the jury the determination of the issues, without reference to the question whether they were properly presented by the proceedings in the chancery court or not.[44] Nevertheless as issues to the law court are directed by the chancery court for the purpose of informing its conscience, if this purpose is achieved, the chancery court will not narrowly examine the proceedings in the law court; collisions between the two courts should be discouraged, and minute disagreements as to principle or procedure will be overlooked.[45] To the extent that the trial at law is not governed by the order submitting the issue, the proceedings in the law court are regulated by the practice of that court.[46]

2. Instructions to Jury — a. In General. When the verdict of the jury is advisory only,[47] it has been said that neither party has a right to ask the court to instruct the jury, because the court is not in any way controlled by the verdict.[48]

so ordered by the chancery court (Gamble v. Johnson, 9 Mo. 605; Black v. Lamb, 12 N. J. Eq. 108; Jackson v. Spivey, 63 N. C. 261) or read by plaintiff as an admission (Gamble v. Johnson, supra). In West Virginia, it was held that prior to the adoption of the code, on the trial of an issue, defendant had a right to have his answer read as evidence to the jury, and allegations of fact positively stated in the answer responsive to the bill should have had before the jury the same effect as such answer then should have had when read on the hearing in the chancery cause. But see as to trial of issues upon the validity of a will Carey v. Callan, 6 B. Mon. (Ky.) 44. It is the right and usual course, on the trial of an issue out of chancery, to examine witnesses viva voce; and it cannot be properly inferred that the answer and depositions were the only evidence on the trial of such issue. Cahoon v. Ring, 4 Fed. Cas. No. 2,292, 1 Cliff. 592. Where the motion for a jury trial is not made until after the evidence for the hearing in chancery has been taken, it was held in Marston v. Brackett, 9 N. H. 336, that it should be tried upon the same evidence on which it would have been tried in chancery, unless the court, upon cause shown, makes an order permitting the introduction of further evidence.

Case treated as action at law. — But where an equity case is submitted to a jury and tried as an action at law, and so treated by the court and the parties, it was held that the case should at least be fairly submitted to the jury, and the law correctly stated to them. Van Vleet v. Olin, 4 Nev. 95, 97 Am. Dec. 513.

In Georgia, because of the fact that a jury is a necessary part of the chancery system in that state (Brown v. Burke, 22 Ga. 574), when requested to do so, it is not only the province but the duty of the court, on the trial of equity causes, to instruct the jury as to what portions of defendant's answer

The court may, however, instruct the jury, but if it does so the instructions should not be general, as in an action at law, and should relate only to the determination of the questions of fact submitted to them.[49] No instructions should be given except those pertinent to the questions of fact submitted, no matter how pertinent they might be to other questions in the case not covered by the issues.[50] Furthermore if the court makes its own findings, whether it adopts the findings of the jury or disregards them, erroneous instructions given to the jury in any particular are not ground for reversing the judgment in the appellate court. The correctness of the decision of the court, and not the propositions of law it laid down for the guidance of the jury, is the question for determination in such cases.[51]

b. Directing Verdict. When the verdict of the jury is advisory only,[52] the same court controlling the case and the trial may direct a verdict for either party,[53] even though the evidence is conflicting.[54] In such cases the court may reject the verdicts general or special of the jury and enter a decree in accordance with its own determination, or what is equivalent it may direct a particular verdict upon the facts as being in accord with its own conclusions.[55]

3. Form and Sufficiency of Verdict. A general verdict in an equity case is insufficient.[56] Every issue presented must be separately passed upon,[57] and the jury in their verdict must answer to each separately.[58] But the fact that the jury return a general verdict is harmless error, where they also report special are responsive to the allegations in plaintiff's bill, so that the jury may understand from the proper source what is legal evidence for their consideration and what is not. For the practice on this point see Adkins v. Hutchings, 79 Ga. 260, 4 S. E. 887; Shiels v. Stark, 14 Ga. 429; Webb v. Robinson, 14 Ga. 216; Beall v. Beall, 10 Ga. 342. In North Carolina also a jury is part of the court of equity (Marshall v. Marshall, 4 N. C. 318); and the court should be careful to instruct the jury as to the nature of the issue and the application of the evidence produced before them (Ely v. Early, 94 N. C. 1).

Disagreement as to one issue.— It has been held that where several issues are referred to a jury, and they agree upon one and disagree upon others, the court will not receive the findings upon one issue. The finding must be altogether or not at all. Berry v. Wallen, 1 Overt. (Tenn.) 186.

State v. Farish, 23 Miss. 483.

findings for the same party, which are accepted by the court, and on which judgment is rendered.[59] The verdict must be certain and responsive to the issues presented and the directions given to the jury.[60] When the verdict settles and determines that a party to a suit has no right in the property in controversy, it is ordinarily sufficient, so far as the rights of such party are concerned, without proceeding to determine who in fact has such right.[61]

4. Return of Verdict. After trial of an issue at law the verdict is certified to the chancery court by the presiding judge. He should also state the general character of the evidence offered, such parts as were objected to, and the decision upon such objections, as also his charge to the jury.[62] It is customary for the judge to state in his certificate whether or not he approves of the verdict.[63] Where, as is generally the case in this country, the same court has a law side and a chancery side, and the issue is tried before the same judge who acts as chancellor, it is not necessary for the judge to certify the evidence and the verdict to himself as chancellor.[64]

D. Effect of Verdict on Subsequent Proceedings — 1. When Jury Trial Not a Matter of Right. In a chancery case, where the right to jury trial is not expressly given by statute, the verdict of the jury on issues submitted to them is in most jurisdictions merely advisory, and not binding upon the chancery court. The court may act on the verdict or reject it according as it is or is not satisfied. If the court believes the verdict wrong, it should be disregarded, and the court should have the issue retried or find the issue itself; for the trial is only to satisfy the conscience of the court as to a fact in regard to which the parties differ, and a finding not satisfying the conscience obviously cannot properly be adopted.[65]

Where a verdict, rendered upon the trial of an issue, is set aside by the law side of the court, and a new trial ordered, and another verdict is rendered therein, which is certified, a decree entered in conformity thereto will not be reversed on appeal because the first verdict was never certified to the chancery side of the court, by which alone it could be set aside, since the decree of the chancellor adopting the second verdict amounts to an affirmation of the action of the law side of the court. See 19 Cent. Dig. tit. "Equity," §§ 815, 816.

When verdict necessarily satisfactory.— It is said in Nease v. Capehart, 15 W. Va. 299, that while it is true that the object of directing an issue is to satisfy the conscience of the chancellor, nevertheless that conscience must be satisfied with the verdict of the jury upon an issue properly directed, where no errors have been committed during the trial thereof, either by the court or jury to the prejudice of either party.

Advisory in appellate court.— Since the jury's verdict in a court of equity does not finally settle questions submitted to it, the fact that an issue has been awarded and a verdict of the jury rendered thereon on which the chancellor based his decree does not limit the control of the court of errors and appeals over the same. Freeman v. Staats, 9 N. J. Eq. 816.

jury is a sound judicial discretion and subject to review by the appellate court.[66] If the court improperly directs an issue, it may on the final hearing disregard the finding of the jury, and enter such decree as to it seems right.[67] Likewise if by reason of the decision on one or more issues other issues which have been sent to a jury become immaterial, the verdict of the jury upon such immaterial issues may be set aside and the decree pronounced as if no trial by jury had been had.[68] Nevertheless, where the issues have been properly submitted to a jury, and they are material, if the trial appears to have been a fair one, and the parties have introduced all their evidence on the issues, the verdict of the jury is entitled to much weight and ought not to be lightly disregarded.[69] But where it is apparent that there was not a fair trial, as when matters are referred to a jury, coupled with other matters immaterial to the issue, and calculated to mislead them, their verdict will be entitled to little or no weight.[70] The chancery court will rarely set aside a verdict when the judge before whom the issue is tried certifies that he is satisfied with the verdict, and that it ought to be regarded as conclusive on the question submitted to the jury.[71] But the court has power to disregard the certificate and set the verdict aside if it is not satisfied with it.[72] On the other hand the court is not bound to set the verdict aside because the judge certifies that it is against evidence, and being satisfied that it is right may decree thereon accordingly notwithstanding the certificate.[73] And although the verdict of the jury is only advisory and may be entirely disregarded by the court, where as a matter of fact it is adopted by the court, it has the conclusive effect of a final adjudication.[74] But where no final decree has been entered in a chancery case, the verdict of the jury upon issues submitted to it is not conclusive upon the parties on the trial of an action at law in which the same question is raised.[75] The parties are entitled to the opinion of the chancery court upon the issues of fact as well as upon the issues of law, even when the issues of fact have been submitted to a jury. It is accordingly error for the chancery court, acting in a merely ministerial capacity, to enter its decree simply on the jury's verdict. On the contrary the decree which the court enters upon the return of the verdict must be its own decree, based upon its own knowledge of the facts, and it can treat the verdict of the jury only as an opinion on the facts which it is at liberty

Discrepancy between pleading and issue.— In an issue in a suit to compel the surrender of a deed alleged to have been fraudulently obtained, where the deed was described as dated May 15, 1872, and in the bill it was described as dated Jan. 15, 1873, it was held that plaintiff would be entitled to a decree on showing that the validity of the deed described in the bill was the question actually tried. Brooks v. Howard, 58 N. H. 190.

Where findings are disregarded.— Where in equity submission is made as if the jury were the ultimate triers of the facts, if the court should determine to disregard the findings, it should allow the party against whom such determination is made to be heard before it as a court in all particulars in which a trial to the court differs from a trial to the jury. 66. Miller v. Wills, 95 Va. 337, 28 S. E. 337, holding that, where the evidence relating to the particular fact in dispute is contradictory and evenly balanced, it is the peculiar province of the jury to weigh the evidence and decide the issue, and it is error for the lower court to set aside the verdict. See also Peckham v. Armstrong, 20 R. I. 539, 40 Atl. 419. On the other hand it has been held that the findings of the jury are entitled to little weight on appeal as against contrary findings made by the court itself. F. to consult.[76] When all the issues made by the pleadings are not submitted to the jury, the court should proceed, after their verdict is rendered on the issues which were submitted to them, to try the remaining issues, and it is erroneous for the court to adopt the findings of the jury and enter up judgment on the whole case without doing so.[77] When the jury have decided some of the issues submitted to them, but have been unable to agree upon others, the cause may be decided by the chancery court upon the whole record, including the report of the trial at law, provided such court finds itself able to dispose of the cause satisfactorily upon all the evidence before it.[78]

2. When Jury Trial a Matter of Right. Where the right to a trial by jury in chancery cases is given by statute, and it is not discretionary with the court to direct an issue or refuse it, the verdict of the jury is generally regarded in the same light as the verdict of a jury in a common-law action, and the chancery court is bound by it and cannot disregard it except under the same circumstances as would justify the judge in the law court in setting aside a verdict in a common-law action.[79] And when the chancery court, instead of directing an issue out of chancery, directs an action at law, the result of the action is final, and not a mere issue sent by the court to a jury to inform its conscience.[80]

E. New Trial of Issues — 1. Application Therefor. Where an issue is sent from a court of equity to be tried at law, the motion for a new trial must be made in equity and not at law.[81] The motion must be heard on the merits of such issue

The court will not entertain a motion for a new trial at the next term after judgment is rendered, after its final decree has been pronounced and recorded, unless there has been some action of the court to stay proceedings, although the counsel gave notice of the application and its grounds. Spann v. Fox, Ga. Dec. 1. Where issues are tried by a

alone, and cannot be affected by the equities arising on the bill and answer.[82] The motion may be denied if the affidavit of the moving party, although containing matters affording sufficient ground for a new trial, is contradicted by opposing affidavits.[83] On the hearing of the motion it cannot be objected that the issue was not broad enough and ought to have embraced other inquiries.[84]

2. Grounds For Granting or Refusing New Trial — a. When Jury Trial Not a Matter of Right. The object of an issue in equity, unless modified by statutory provisions, is, not to bind the court, but to satisfy its conscience.[85] It follows that a motion for a new trial is addressed to the conscience of the court which directed the issues,[86] and it may be granted or denied for reasons insufficient in an action at law.[87] Accordingly if the verdict in view of the evidence does not afford satisfaction a new trial may be directed, although there be no fraud, surprise, or miscarriage, and the verdict be one which at common law would not be disturbed.[88] On the other hand if the court is satisfied that substantial justice is done by the verdict, it will not be disturbed on mere technical grounds.[89] Thus a new trial will not be granted merely on the ground that testimony was improperly received or rejected at the trial of the issue, if in view of all the circumstances the court is satisfied that the result ought not to have been different, although a different decision as to the testimony had been made.[90] Nor will a new trial be granted for a misdirection of the judge to the jury, if on the whole the court is satisfied jury, and after the rendition of the verdict for defendant the case was continued for argument as to what the judgment should be, the trial was before the court, and defendant had, under Nev. Civ. Pr. Act, § 197, ten days after notice of judgment to move for a new trial. Duffy v. Moran, 12 Nev. 94. A new trial may be granted on motion at the hearing upon the equity reserved. Among equity cases themselves a new trial may be granted more readily in some than in others. Thus in New York it has been held that in analogy to the provisions of the statute (2 Rev. St. p. 309, § 37) granting a new trial in all cases of ejectment upon terms, courts of equity will grant a new trial of issues in a case where the verdict binds the heir as to the inheritance, or determines the validity of a will of real estate, upon grounds which in other cases might be insufficient. Clayton v. Yarrington, 33 Barb. (N. Y.) 144. It has also been held in New York that after a verdict establishing a will, on an issue to try its validity, a new trial will be awarded more readily than when the verdict is against the will. that the verdict is right.[91] Where the jury impaneled to try an issue fails to agree, the court may refuse to call another jury, and may decide the case on the evidence heard before the issue was framed.[92] When an issue has been properly directed, and the verdict of the jury is not responsive thereto, the verdict should be set aside and a new trial granted.[93] A new trial may be granted when the verdict of the jury is against the weight of evidence,[94] but it will not be granted on this ground unless preponderance of the evidence is very clear.[95] Where an issue framed and tried does not embrace the object contemplated, the court will direct a new and proper issue.[96] Where the verdict of the jury is without sense and contradictory, the court will not decree upon it, but will direct the issue to be submitted to another jury.[97] After two verdicts for the same party the chancery court is not bound to direct a new trial, although both verdicts were in opposition to the opinions of the judges who presided at the trials and a verdict had originally been rendered for the other party.[98]

b. When Jury Trial a Matter of Right. Where issues have been submitted by virtue of a statute giving a jury trial as a matter of right, the chancery court, in dealing with the verdict of the jury, will be governed by the same rules, and will indulge in the same presumptions in favor of the verdict as in an ordinary action at law.[99]

F. Direction of Action at Law. When plaintiff's right to equitable relief depends upon a legal title, the court in a proper case will retain the bill for a certain period, giving plaintiff in the meantime liberty to bring an action for the purpose of establishing his right at law, in order to found an equitable relief, in which case the bill will stand dismissed, unless the action is brought within the time limited.[1] It is said that the form which an issue at law shall take, whether it shall be an issue out of chancery or whether an action at law shall be instituted, is entirely within the discretion of the court.[2] Whether an order in a chancery cause framing an issue is for an action at law or an issue out of chancery does not depend upon the form of the issue, but upon its nature and purpose.[3] The court should always mold the action to be brought in such a form that the result shall be regarded as conclusive.[4] The parties to the action at law are bound to proceed with reasonable diligence, and are not entitled to suspend the further

Bills of exceptions may be taken at the trial and the proceedings are reviewable by rule to show cause and writ of error in the usual manner, and judgment at law will be entered which will be accepted in the chancery court as a finality.[6] After verdict the cause in chancery should be set down for further directions in the same manner as after the trial of an issue, and in the meantime no proceedings should be taken at law, in consequence of the verdict, except moving for a new trial, etc.[7] The court in the chancery cause ought to direct the final hearing to stand over to await determination of a writ of error if one is being prosecuted in the law court bona fide and without delay.[8]

A. Masters and Similar Officers — 1. Nature of Office. There were in the English chancery, and there are still in most American jurisdictions, officers known as masters in chancery, who act as assistants to the court,[9] performing both judicial and ministerial functions.[10] Their powers are usually derived from and confined to the terms of the order of reference,[11] but sometimes general powers are conferred.[12] Duties usually devolving upon masters are in some jurisdictions performed by officers more or less similar in character, but bearing different titles, such as commissioners,[13] committees,[14] or auditors.[15] In so far as such officers perform the duties of masters the difference in title may be disregarded, and the title of master is therefore used generically throughout the following sections.[16]

B. Power to Refer and Subjects of Reference — 1. Power to Refer Generally. Where the subject is one proper for reference it is generally within the power of the court in its discretion either to refer the cause, even without consent of the parties,[50] or to determine the questions involved without a reference.[51] In the absence of some special rule of practice a reference is not a matter of right,[52] and cannot be entered on the motion of a party as of course,[53] but only on special application,[54] and for good cause shown.[55] It is not competent for the court to abdicate its functions by referring the whole cause to a master to try and determine all the issues,[56] but it may do so by consent of parties.[57] There is no power to refer a judicial question for determination in an unjudicial manner.[58]

The construction of an instrument is a question for the court to decide, and not one proper for reference.[59] After final decree and the determination of an appeal there can be no reference for an account of rents received after the decree, as such a course, by permitting further appeals, would forever prevent the termination of the case.[60]

2. Subjects of Reference — a. In General. It has been said that there is no question at law or in equity which a master may not have to decide, or respecting which he may not be called upon to report his opinion to the court.[61] It is therefore impossible to enumerate the subjects proper for reference, and only those most frequently presented in the progress of a cause and in which the practice of referring is best settled will here be mentioned.[62]

b. Questions Relating to Pleadings. It is the practice to refer to a master exceptions for scandal and impertinence,[63] and also frequently exceptions to an answer for insufficiency.[64] Interrogatories have also been referred to a master when some of them seemed to call for evidence so clearly irrelevant that it should be rejected at the threshold.[65]

c. Taking Testimony. It is within the discretion of the court after the issues are formed[66] to order a reference to take testimony.[67] This may be done on showing that a large amount of irrelevant testimony was being offered which the examiner had no authority to exclude.[68] It is improper, where a new trial has been awarded, to refer the case to take the testimony de novo, as that already taken must stand as a part of the case.[69]

d. Suits For Infants. It was the established practice in chancery, when a suit had been instituted on behalf of an infant, on suggestion that it was not for his benefit, to refer the matter to a master to ascertain that fact, and, where two suits were instituted by different persons as next friend, to refer both in order to determine which was more for the infant's benefit.[70] This practice has received some recognition in the United States.[71]

e. Determining Particular Facts — (I) In General. The most frequent purpose of a reference is to take testimony and report to the court for its information with reference to some fact or groups of facts incidental to the main questions involved, but essential to be determined in order to frame a final decree. Besides the taking of accounts, the assessment of damages, and the determination of titles,[72] many other matters not susceptible of ready classification or even enumeration may be conveniently determined in this way.[73]

(II) Accounts. Where it becomes necessary to take an account it is the usual practice and the court has always power to order a reference for that purpose.[74] Indeed it is said that the investigation of accounts is the chief duty of a master,[75] and in some jurisdictions compulsory references are practically limited to that purpose.[76] While in general the court has power as in other cases[77] to pass on an account without the intervention of a master,[78] and may properly do so where the pleadings disclose the amount,[79] or where the matter is simple and free from complications,[80] still where these conditions do not exist it is very generally held that there ought always to be a reference.[81] Whenever it is expedient to do so the testimony on which the account is based may be taken before the reference to the master.[82]

(III) Assessment of Damages. Where an assessment of damages becomes necessary it is perhaps more usual to submit the issue to a jury[83] than to refer the matter to a master; but the proceeding often merges into an accounting, and a reference is frequently made for the purpose.[84]

(IV) Determination of Titles. On a bill for specific performance it was the English practice, where the only question was as to the vendor's title, to direct a reference to report thereon.[85] This practice has been followed in the United States,[86] and has been extended to some analogous cases.[87]

(V) Main Issues Should Be First Determined. A reference will not be ordered to inquire with regard to a fact constituting the gist of the controversy.[88] The main issues establishing the general rights of the parties should first be determined,[89] and the order should give definite directions as to the principles by which the master is to be guided and the scope of the matter referred.[90] Accordingly it is improper to order a reference until the time to answer has expired,[91] or, when matter in the nature of a demurrer is incorporated in the answer, until such matter has been passed upon.[92]

3. VALIDATING IRREGULAR REFERENCES. Generally an irregularity in referring a cause is waived by proceeding before the master without objection,[93] and one at whose instance a reference was granted cannot afterward complain.[94] Where, however, the order is a nullity, the objection is not waived by failure to insist thereon;[95] but it has been held that failure to enter an order of reference is cured by entry of a decree based on the report, as the decree raises the inference that the order was in fact made.[96] The order of reference is nevertheless subject to review at a later stage of the case.[97]

C. Proceedings Before Masters — 1. IN GENERAL. The proceedings in the master's office in England were governed by a highly technical and complicated system of procedure which it is not necessary here to set out,[98] as it is largely disused and the proceedings are now conducted under simpler rules.[99] A large discretion is generally reposed in the master as to the regulation of the proceedings before him.[1] A master must perform his duties in person and he cannot delegate his authority.[2] One appointed both examiner and master should first perform his duties as examiner and make his reports separately.[3]

2. DUTY TO PROSECUTE REFERENCE. The duty of prosecuting the reference devolved in chancery upon plaintiff, as the party in most cases interested in forwarding it;[4] but now the duty primarily devolves upon the party obtaining the reference.[5] If he fail to do so the prosecution may be committed to the other

99. The practice of course varies in different jurisdictions, the statutes and rules of which may be consulted.

U. S. Eq. Rules 73–81 relate to proceedings before masters in the federal courts. These rules dispense with the old formalities and establish a system in themselves, rendering a reference to the practice of the court of chancery unnecessary. Hatch v. Indianapolis, etc., R. Co., 9 Fed. 856, 11 Biss. 138.

A Michigan statute, directing proceedings involving an accounting, relates only to technical bills for accounting. People v. Randall, 37 Mich. 473.

1. U. S. Eq. Rule 77 provides that the master shall regulate all the proceedings in every hearing before him. See Bate Refrigerating Co. v. Gillette, 28 Fed. 673. The master should regulate the manner of taking the reference at the return of the first summons, so far as it conveniently can be done. Story v. Brown, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 112. A power to regulate proceedings in certain particulars existed in the English chancery. Bennett Office Master 6. Rule 102 of the New York chancery contained a similar provision.

2. Stone v. Stone, 28 N. J. Eq. 409.

Assistants.— A report will not be invalidated by the employment, even of a party, as amanuensis, in the absence of improper conduct on his part. Longmire v. Fain, 89 Tenn. 393, 18 S. W. 70. And assistants may sometimes be employed. See supra, XXI, A, 7.

5. Camden, etc., R. Co. v. Stewart, 19 N. J. Eq. 343; Quackenbush v. Leonard, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 131.

U. S. Eq. Rule 74 provides that the party at whose instance and for whose benefit the reference is made shall cause the same to be presented to the master for hearing on or before the next rule day succeeding the time when the reference was made.

Summons to examine witnesses may be had by any party, the proceedings having been instituted. Fream v. Dickinson, 3 Edw. (N. Y.) 300.

party by order made on a showing of the negligence,[6] or sometimes without an order.[7]

3. Presenting Reference to the Master. It was formerly proper for the master to proceed upon the minutes before the order of reference was entered, but this practice was abolished,[8] and the cause is laid before the master by delivering a copy of the title and ordering part of the decree.[9]

4. Notice to Parties. The rule is that the master cannot properly proceed in the absence of notice to all parties of the time and place of hearing.[10] It is unnecessary to give notice of a reference to be determined upon the pleadings, or facts already before the court.[11] A master who has obtained leave to withdraw his report for correction cannot file a new report changing his findings, without notice to the parties of a rehearing.[12] This notice as well as others during the proceedings was in chancery given in the form of warrants subscribed by the master and appointing the time and place for hearing, and the warrants were underwritten with a note indicating the particular purpose of the hearing.[13] In the United States a similar notice, usually called a summons, should be served, fixing the time and place and specifying the nature of the proceedings to be had.[14]

6. Quackenbush v. Leonard, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 131; Holley v. Glover, 9 Paige (N. Y.) 9; 2 Smith Ch. Pr. 97.

On a reference of exceptions the proper order is to procure the report in a time stated or that the exceptions be dismissed. Camden, etc., R. Co. v. Stewart, 19 N. J. Eq. 343.

7. U. S. Eq. Rule 74 provides that if the party at whose instance the reference was made shall omit to present it to the master, the adverse party shall be at liberty forthwith to cause proceedings to be had before the master at the costs of the party procuring the reference.

8. Bennett Office Master 5. A summons to proceed before actual entry of the order is irregular. Quackenbush v. Leonard, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 131.

After a chancery case is remanded with directions to refer the master cannot proceed until an order of reference has been made. Keenan v. Strange, 12 Ala. 290.

9. 2 Daniell Ch. Pr. 794. In the absence of other regulations the presentment to the master of a copy of the decree or ordering part thereof is still the customary and proper manner of laying the case before him, but there seems to be an absence of recent reported precedents. On a reference of an account to three auditors or a majority of them it is no objection to the report of two that one was not notified to attend. Davis v. Foley, Walk. (Miss.) 43.

10. Ballard v. Lippman, 32 Fla. 481, 14 So. 154; Whiteside v. Pulliam, 25 Ill. 285; Gaines v. Coney, 51 Miss. 323; Douhleday v. Newton, 9 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 71. The parties to a proceeding for the benefit of a person incompetent to contract are not entitled to notice of a reference to ascertain the reasonable fee for plaintiff's attorney. Nimmons v. Stewart, 13 S. C. 445.

If a party is absent the first day, the master must again notify the parties to appear, and thereafter he may proceed ex parte. Smith v. Estes, 2 N. C. 158.

Time fixed for service should be stated or underwritten, but it is unnecessary to serve a copy of the order of reference. Whipple v. Stewart, Walk. (Mich.) 357.

A notice directed to be published on account of the large number of parties is sufficient if it gives the style of the suit without naming all the parties. Martin v. South Salem Land Co., 94 Va. 28, 26 S. E. 591.

Harmless indefiniteness.— Where a notice fixed the time of hearing for a certain day, "if fair; if not, the first fair day thereafter," but the master proceeded on the day named, and no one was injured, the report was confirmed. White v. Drew, 9 W. Va. 695.

Defective proceeding.— Where the notice was to appear before A, and B, another master, returned that defendant did not appear the proceedings were irregular. Whipple v. Brown, Harr. (Mich.) 436.

Service on the solicitor is generally sufficient. Bennett Office Master 6. It is sufficient to leave the notice at the solicitor's dwelling in his absence. Taylor v. Thomas, 2 N. J. Eq. 106. Service on a solicitor is sufficient if the party is a non-resident and has no known agent. Johnson v. Person, 16 N. C. 364.

A recital in the master's report that reasonable notice was given is prima facie evidence of sufficient service.[15] In the absence of express rule the length of notice required is left to the discretion of the master, but it must be reasonable under the circumstances.[16] A party waives right to formal notice if he has actual notice and takes part in the reference,[17] at least if he does not object to proceeding.[18]

5. Scope of Inquiry — a. Determined by the Order of Reference. A master derives his authority from the order of reference and cannot extend his inquiry beyond the matters expressly referred.[19] The order will, however, be given a sufficiently liberal construction properly to accomplish the purpose of the reference.[20] The master must decide on all matters referred to him, and cannot

A report is a nullity in so far as it is not within the scope of the reference (White v. Walker, 5 Fla. 478; State v. Hyde, 4 Baxt. (Tenn.) 464; Gore v. Poteet, (Tenn. Ch. App. 1898) 46 S. W. 1050), and a decree made thereon should be reversed (Saunders v. Saunders, Litt. Sel. Cas. (Ky.) 10).

An agreement that an auditor may consider matters not specially referred is revocable until the award is made. Wright v. Cobleigh, 21 N. H. 339.

Liberal construction by parties.—Where the reference was to take proof relating to matters necessary or proper to be determined for the purpose of ascertaining the principles upon which an accounting should proceed, but all parties construed the order liberally and full testimony with regard to the accounting was taken, a final decree was rendered on the report. Perrin v. Lepper, 72 Mich. 454, 40 N. W. 859.

Because the master acted under a general mandate a report will not be disturbed if he confined himself to the services intended to be required of him. Burleigh v. White, 70 Me. 130.

Reference to take an account between the parties requires the settlement of all accounts. Harris v. Magee, 3 Call (Va.) 502. It includes all items embraced within the fair intent of the order, although not specified. Tolles' Appeal, (Pa. 1888) 14 Atl. 394. Where pending the suit the parties settled their accounts and a new order of reference was made, but the settlement contained errors and was mutilated, the commissioner was permitted to examine the accounts generally. Todd v. Bowyer, 1 Munf. (Va.) 447. A master to settle accounts has jurisdiction of every question which goes in charge or discharge, although involving fraud. Lowitz v. Alden, 6 R. A master, ordered to state necessary improvements, should consider all the circumstances, including improvements unprofitable in themselves but calculated to enhance the value of the whole property. Reed v. Jones, 8 Wis. 421.

A direction to distribute a fund among holders of first-mortgage bonds permits the master to entertain a claim by an owner of second-mortgage bonds that he was fraudulently induced to exchange first-mortgage bonds therefor. McElrath v. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co., 28 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 197.

For other instances see Lannan v. Clavin, 3 Kan. 17; Heywood v. Miner, 102 Mass. 466; Morse v. Slason, 16 Vt. 319.

A reference by consent to take proof of the issues joined and to report the same to the court with the master's conclusions as to the amount of damages, if any, plaintiff is entitled to recover, refers the whole case and not merely the question of damages. Walker v. Kinnare, 76 Fed. 101, 22 C. C. A. 75. But a consent decree, referring the cause "for hearing and determination on the merits," can only be considered, under the Illinois practice, as a reference to the opinion of the master and preparation of a decree report back a particular matter for the decision of the court,[21] but he may in some cases report the facts, submitting a question of law essential to the conclusion to the decision of the court.[22]

b. Master Cannot Go Behind the Order. The master cannot go behind the order or decree under which the reference is made; he must accept it as conclusive of all matters embraced therein.[23] Where a bill is taken pro confesso and the cause referred, defendant cannot offer before the master matters of defense,[24] nor can the master hear evidence which if it had been before the court would probably have changed the decree.[25] If a deposition was used without objection at the hearing, objection cannot be made to the credibility of the witness when it is offered before the master;[26] but the fact that a document was proved before the chancellor does not preclude an inquiry as to its genuineness by the master, when the chancellor had not acted thereon.[27]

c. Master Cannot Go Beyond the Pleadings. While the master is bound by the order of reference it is to be construed with reference to the pleadings, and the master cannot entertain any claim or decide any matter not embraced within their scope.[28] The master cannot permit an amendment of the pleadings.[29]

6. EVIDENCE BEFORE MASTER. In the absence of special restrictions the master has power to receive evidence for the proper determination of the matter referred.[30] He must act on the evidence presented and not on his personal knowledge.[31] The evidence may be documentary, by depositions, or viva voce.[32] If the testimony is taken orally it must be reduced to writing.[33] It is sometimes expressly provided that all depositions and documents previously read or used in the court may be used before the master.[34] The ordinary rules forbidding a reëxamination[35] apply to hearings before a master, and a witness once examined cannot be reëxamined before the master without an order therefor.[36] The master may be authorized to compel the production of books and papers.[37] It is also a

A master may compute the amount due on a note without the intervention of a witness. Dorn v. Ross, 177 Ill. 225, 52 N. E. 321.

It is proper to prohibit further proof, in referring the case, where a bill has been pending several years with ample opportunity to introduce evidence. Feige v. Babcock, 111 Mich. 538, 70 N. W. 7.

Authority over person in court.— A master may not order a person who has appeared but not taken the stand, to remove her veil so that she may be identified by a witness under examination. Rice v. Rice, 47 N. J. Eq. 559, 21 Atl. 286, 11 L. R. A. 591.

Evidence not filed as required.— He may not, however, disregard evidence on one side because of non-compliance with a rule of the master requiring it to be filed within a certain time. Nutriment Co. v. George Green Lumber Co., 195 Ill. 324, 63 N. E. 152 [reversing 94 Ill. App. 342].

The master should exercise independent judgment as to the weight of the evidence (Pilkington v. Cotten, 55 N. C. 238), but it is not necessarily error to base a finding of an amount on the average of the estimates of witnesses (Walling v. Burroughs, 54 N. C. 21; Morrison v. McLeod, 37 N. C. 108).

Deed.— A master has no power to compel frequent rule that parties accounting before a master shall bring in their respective accounts in the form of debtor and creditor.[38] It is competent for a master to examine the parties,[39] but a party so examined has a right to demand that the questions be propounded in writing.[40] Such an examination is in the nature of a bill of discovery, and the answers are evidence to the same extent.[41] A party so examined cannot be cross-examined generally by his own counsel, but he may accompany his answer with an explanation.[42] A party who refuses to attend the reference cannot object to an irregularity in the manner of taking testimony.[43] The master has power to rule on objections to the evidence,[44] but unless the evidence is clearly inadmissible the better practice is to receive it subject to the objections, so that it may go into the record and be considered without a re-reference if the court should deem it admissible.[45] An objection should always, however, be made when the evidence is offered, and an exception be taken.[46] In some jurisdictions it is the practice, when the master excludes evidence, to bring the matter at once before the chancellor and obtain his direction;[47] but elsewhere such practice is discountenanced.[48]

7. Adjourning and Reopening Hearing. The granting of adjournments is discretionary with the master, and an adjournment may be denied unless good cause and absence of laches is shown by the party applying therefor.[49] The case must, however, be continued by adjournments to a fixed time, or else notice given of the resumption of the hearing.[50] When a time is fixed by agreement of the parties for closing the testimony, the taking of testimony after the time so fixed is discretionary with the master.[51] It is said that the master should himself fix a reasonable time and ought not to open the case for further proof after that time without special cause.[52] Even when the court has fixed a time for closing the evidence the parties may waive the limitation and continue the taking of testimony thereafter.[53] After the closing of testimony the master retains discretionary power to reopen the case for further evidence,[54] but this power is generally held to cease when the draft of his report has been submitted to counsel.[55] Until that time the application should be made to the master,[56] but after the report is filed the power of re-referring rests with the court.[57]

D. The Master's Report — 1. Preparation and Filing. By the English practice, when the master was ready to report and had prepared a draft of his report, warrants were issued whereby the parties were permitted to inspect and take copies of such draft, and were heard thereafter by the master on objections submitted, the main purpose of this practice being to require the parties to make all objections in the first instance to the master.[58] After hearing suggestions as to changes in the report, and ruling thereon, the report was prepared for signature and an opportunity given to parties to submit in writing any remaining objections, and then the report was signed and filed.[59] It is in the United States in some jurisdictions necessary and in all perhaps permissible to follow in substance the English practice, but the practice in this respect is largely governed by rule and varies greatly.[60] The report should be filed within whatever time may be fixed by general rule or the order of reference, but the court may receive a report not filed within proper time,[61] and the parties may by agreement extend the time.[62] If a party wishes to save the benefit of a reference which has expired he should obtain an order reviving it.[63]

2. FORM AND SUFFICIENCY OF REPORT — a. In General. It is the duty of the master to report on all matters submitted to him, and he cannot refuse a finding on the ground that the evidence is insufficient[64] or that the issue is immaterial.[65] A master, directed to find facts, must report his finding of the ultimate facts and not merely the evidence tending to establish them,[66] or mere conclusions of law.[67] A master to take an account should report a full statement of the account and not merely state a balance,[68] or report generally against plaintiff that the bill should be dismissed.[69] The report should not contain matters of argument or reasoning in support of its conclusion,[70] but should disclose, where the matter in his lifetime or to his executors after his death, cannot found a decree. Boyd v. Kaufman, 6 Munf. (Va.) 45. An allowance of fees for giving notice is prima facie evidence that the notice was given. Lindsay v. Kirk, 95 Md. 50, 51 Atl. 960. motion and not an exception is also necessary where the master has improperly refused an adjournment,[84] omitted necessary testimony,[85] failed to return the evidence,[86] or rendered a report based on testimony procured by bribery.[87] A motion to set aside the report must be resorted to where one of several commissioners has improperly altered the report.[88] There is a lack of uniformity in the decisions as to the propriety of presenting some questions by way of exception, such as the propriety of the decree of reference,[89] the interposition of a new defense,[90] and especially the admission or rejection of evidence by the master.[91]

2. OBJECTING BEFORE MASTER. In order to lay the foundation for presenting exceptions to the court, a party must make the objection before the master, so that he may have an opportunity to correct his ruling before the report is filed,[92]

and the practice of submitting a draft report permits a rigorous enforcement of this rule.[93] No objection need be made to a principal finding of the master based on all the evidence, since that would amount only to a request that the master change his entire finding.[94] Under special circumstances exceptions have been considered, although no objection was made before the master.[95]

3. EXCEPTIONS — a. When Necessary. As a general proposition it is held that in order to obtain a review of the findings or recommendations of a master specific exceptions to his report must be filed.[96] The rule is uniform that in the absence of exceptions the court will accept as true all findings of fact,[97] but errors of law appearing on the face of the report may be suggested on the motion to confirm or on the hearing without exception.[98] An objection that the report is

Questions arising on objections made during the hearing should be embraced in the objections filed to the draft report, or they will be deemed waived. Troy Iron, etc., Factory v. Corning, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,196, 6 Blatchf. 328.

When renewed or further exceptions unnecessary.— Where an exception to the allowance of an item is overruled it need not be renewed on a restatement of the account. Moore v. Randolph, 70 Ala. 575. Where an exception to an item was sustained and the account sent back for modification and the master again reported the item, but also reported facts on which a modification could be made, it was held that the item might be corrected without further exception. Lippincott v. Bechtold, 54 N. J. Eq. 407, 34 Atl. 1079. The rule requiring exceptions to the second report does not apply to matters fully adjudicated by the court and not entering into the second report. Hopkins v. Prichard, 51 W. Va. 385, 41 S. E. 347. It is irregular to present by exceptions to an amended report the same questions which have been decided upon exceptions to the original. Clark v. Willoughby, 1 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 68.

2. Coffeen v. Thomas, 65 Ill. App. 117.

3. Prince v. Cutler, 69 Ill. 267. On a reference to ascertain debts secured by a deed of trust, any trust creditor may except to the report as to the claims of any other creditor. Feamster v. Withrow, 9 W. Va. 296. It is error to direct a master to apportion the sums to be paid among those liable and to issue execution therefor, as this deprives such persons of the right to except to the apportionment. McCartney v. Calhoun, 11 Ala. 110.

4. In Alabama the court may set aside a submission for final decree at the same term at which it is made and allow exceptions to be filed. Jones v. White, 112 Ala. 449, 20 So. 527.

In Florida exceptions cannot be taken after an appeal from an order based on the report. Sanderson v. Sanderson, 20 Fla. 292.

In Georgia even errors of law cannot be objected to after an unopposed order accepting the report. Anderson v. Usher, 59 Ga. 567.

In the Indian Territory, the statute, providing that exceptions must be made within four days after the first day of the term at which the report is filed, is construed to permit exceptions within four days after the filing of the report when the latter is filed after the first day of the term. Hampton v. Mayes, 3 Indian Terr. 65, 53 S. W. 483.

In Kentucky exceptions cannot be filed at a term subsequent to that at which the report is confirmed. Cox v. Doty, 45 S. W. 1044, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 287. They must be taken in the court below. Slaughter v. Slaughter, 8 B. Mon. 482.

In New Jersey and New York the regular time is eight days, after a rule to confirm nisi. Weber v. Weitling, 18 N. J. Eq. 39; Taylor v. Thomas, 2 N. J. Eq. 106; Champlin v. Champlin, 2 Edw. (N. Y.) 328. But in the New York chancery no precise time was fixed for filing exceptions to a report not requiring confirmation. Myers v. Bradford, 4 Johns. Ch. 434.

In Virginia the court may receive exceptions so long as the cause is retained on the docket (Wooding v. Bradley, 76 Va. 614), but an exception for want of notice, taken six years after the report was filed, was disregarded (Miller v. Holcombe, 9 Gratt. 665). It is error to pronounce a final decree on a master's report following a decree pro confesso, where the report was not returned thirty days before the term at which the cause was heard. Gray v. Dickenson, 4 Gratt. (Va.) 87.

In West Virginia the master must hold his report for ten days after its completion for the filing of exceptions, and he is required to certify to the court the exceptions and the evidence. Smith v. Brown, 44 W. Va. 342, 30 S. E. 160; Ward v. Ward, 40 W. Va. 611, 21 S. E. 746, 52 Am. St. Rep. 911, 29 L. R. A. 449.

U. S. Eq. Rule 83 gives one month from the time of filing the report to file exceptions thereto. This means a calendar month. Gasquet v. Crescent City Brewing Co., 49 Fed. 493. See also Fidelity Ins., etc., Co. v. Shenandoah Iron Co., 42 Fed. 372.

the time when the report is so filed as to be accessible.[5] The filing of exceptions will not be permitted after expiration of the regular time, except for accident, mistake, or surprise.[6] Where there has been a re-reference, matters not excepted to before cannot be presented in the guise of exceptions to the new report.[7]

c. Form and Sufficiency. Exceptions are entitled in the cause and in such a manner as to show the character of the instrument, the party excepting, and the report to which exceptions are taken. They regularly conclude with a general statement that the party excepts to the report and appeals therefrom to the judgment of the court.[8] The exceptions should be stated separately and must point out definitely in each instance the part of the report excepted to,[9] and must not merely challenge the report or a specified part thereof as erroneous, but must point out specifically the particular error upon which the excepting party relies.[10]

Exceptions may be entertained where the party failed to file them because of an agreement between the solicitors. Hoppock v. Ramsey, 28 N. J. Eq. 166. Amended exceptions will be overruled if not filed within the time prescribed. Syz v. Redfield, 11 Fed. 799. A party prejudiced by an irregularity should have an opportunity to except, although he permitted the master's report to be filed and several terms to elapse, where he was ignorant of the irregularity. Hart v. Small, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 288. Further time will not be granted merely because counsel did not know that the report had been filed. Clapp v. Sherman, 16 R. I. 370, 17 Atl. 130.

See 19 Cent. Dig. tit. "Equity," § 910.

Similarity to special demurrer.—It has even been said that an exception is analogous to a special demurrer and must have like particularity (O'Reilly v. Brady, 28 Ala. 530; Stewart v. Stewart, 40 W. Va. 65, 20 S. E.

Inaccurate or general exceptions will not be considered.[11] An exception calling for an examination of evidence must refer to and point out the particular evidence relied upon for its support.[12] If an exception is too broad, and includes any matter not properly open thereto, it may be overruled altogether.[13]

d. Additional and Amended Exceptions. It is within the discretion of the court to allow additional exceptions to be filed,[14] but leave will be given only where good cause is shown, such as accident or surprise.[15] Where exceptions are insufficient, as by being too general, the court may in its discretion permit them to be amended, if no prejudice will result.[16]

e. Setting Exceptions Down For Hearing. In the absence of rules to the contrary exceptions are brought to the attention of the court by setting the case 862), but this very strict rule has been denied (Foster v. Goddard, 1 Black (U. S.) 506, 17 L. ed. 228).

Under special circumstances an exception was considered, where it showed the manner in which an account should be taken, and stated the substance of the report that the party desired. New York M. E. Church v. Jaques, Hopk. (N. Y.) 453.

Unconstitutional statute.—Where a claim is given priority under an unconstitutional statute it is unnecessary for the exception to allege the unconstitutionality of the act. Fidelity Ins., etc., Co. v. Shenandoah Iron Co., 42 Fed. 372.

An exception, although inartistically drawn, is sufficient if it points out distinctly the finding of facts or the conclusion of law complained of. Story v. Livingston, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 359, 10 L. ed. 200; Central Trust Co. v. Wabash, etc., R. Co., 57 Fed. 441.

In Massachusetts the party excepting must point out in his brief the particular in which the ruling complained of is prejudicial to him. Canadian Religious Assoc. v. Parmenter, 180 Mass. 415, 62 N. E. 740.

11. Inaccurate exceptions.— An exception to the allowance of interest will not raise the point that interest was allowed for too long a period. The time from which interest should have been computed must be stated. Graham v. Chrystal, 1 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 121. Nor can the rate of interest allowed be called in question under such an exception. Baker v. Mayo, 129 Mass. 517.

An exception is too general, when it is that a finding is not "supported by the proofs" (Haller v. Clark, 21 D. C. 128), or that the findings, and each of them, are not warranted by the evidence (Waska v. Klaisner, 43 Ill. App. 611), or that the report is contrary to the law and the evidence (Winslow v. Mulchey, (Tenn. Ch. App. 1895) 35 S. W. 762). So an exception is bad where it is that the master did not find, "upon the whole testimony and the law," and as a conclusion of law on the findings of fact that plaintiff was entitled to recover. Falls of Neuse Mfg. Co. v. Brooks, 106 N. C. 107, 11 S. E. 456. It is too general to state that the master alowed a certain sum when he should have allowed a larger sum or a smaller. Emerson v. Atwater, 12 Mich. 314; Poling v. Huffman, 48 W. Va. 639, 37 S. E. 526. An exception "for other reasons apparent on the face of the report" is too general. Young v. Omohundro, 69 Md. 424, 16 Atl. 120; Hartley v. Roffe, 12 W. Va. 401.

12. Pruitt v. McWhorter, 74 Ala. 315; Crump v. Crump, 69 Ala. 156; Hayes v. Hammond, 162 Ill. 133, 44 N. E. 422 [reversing 61 Ill. App. 310]; McGuiness v. McGuiness, 60 Ill. App. 376; Jaffrey v. Brown, 29 Fed. 476; Greene v. Bishop, 10 Fed. Cas. No. 5,763, 1 Cliff. 186.

Exceptions need not set out the evidence, but are sufficient if they point out the specific matter of objection. Inter-State Bldg., etc., Assoc. v. Ayers, 71 Ill. App. 529.

Where exceptions make no allusion to the evidence and are not supported by the master's statement the report should be confirmed if the statement is sufficient to sustain the conclusions. Cutting v. Florida R., etc., Co., 43 Fed. 473.

Exception for disregarding evidence.— An exception on the ground that the master did not report or consider any of defendant's evidence need not set out the evidence so disregarded. Schnadt v. Davis, 185 Ill. 476, 57 N. E. 652 [affirming 84 Ill. App. 669].

Exceptions are not pleadings within the meaning of a statute giving a general right to amend. Suttles v. Smith, 75 Ga. 830.

down for hearing thereon.[17] Exceptions and a motion to set aside the report cannot be heard at the same time,[18] and it is said that a second hearing of exceptions will not be allowed.[19]

4. WAIVER OF OBJECTIONS TO REPORT. A party is precluded from objecting to the action of the court, based on a master's report, by failing to file exceptions, where exceptions are necessary,[20] by failing to bring them before the court for a ruling thereon,[21] or by other conduct inconsistent with the interposition of objection.[22] A waiver of exceptions to a report, finding the amount of damages in controversy, concedes only the correctness of such amount and not the correctness of the final decree adjudicating the right to recover it.[23]

F. Action of Court on Report — 1. WEIGHT OF REPORT. The report of a master or a similar officer is not conclusive, even as to facts found, but is subject to review by the court.[24] It is difficult to state any precise rule for determining what weight should be given the report. It is generally held that the report of a master is presumptively correct, and that his conclusions will not be disturbed unless error is made affirmatively to appear.[25] At least as to findings of fact there

The party excepting is not bound to set down the exceptions for argument. Stafford v. Rogers, Hopk. (N. Y.) 98.

U. S. Eq. Rule 83 provides that if exceptions are filed they shall stand for hearing, before the court, if the court is then in session; or if not, then at the next sitting of the court which shall be held thereafter by adjournment or otherwise.

22. One in contempt cannot complain of a premature confirmation. Butler v. Butler, 11 Ala. 668.

When the parties consented to a re-reference to new auditors and a decree was rendered on their report, neither party could complain that the first report had not been disposed of. Neely v. Neely, 1 Litt. (Ky.) 292.

Other conduct constituting waiver.— Where a master was ordered to report the evidence, and instead he found the facts, and plaintiff moved for action upon the findings, he thereby waived his right to object to their correctness. Borchus v. Sayler, 90 Ind. 439. Where counsel examined a draft report and caused amendments to be made, and made no objection to the report as filed, he could not afterward complain that he received no copy of the report, until after it was filed. Cobb v. Fogg, 166 Mass. 466, 44 N. E. 534. One who does not appeal from a decree dismissing an attachment bill cannot except to the report of a master ascertaining the damages from the attachment. is a strong presumption of correctness which can be overcome only by a clear showing of error,[26] and a finding on conflicting evidence will very rarely be disturbed.[27] If there is testimony to sustain the finding of the master it will not be disturbed merely because the court entertains a different view as to the weight of the evidence.[28] It is sometimes said that a finding of fact on conflicting evidence is entitled to the same weight as the verdict of a jury,[29] but this doctrine is sometimes also expressly repudiated,[30] and it is said that the master's findings are merely advisory,[31] that it is the duty of the court to examine the testimony and review the master's conclusions,[32] and that it may disregard the finding, and consider the evidence irrespective thereof.[33] The radically different doctrines just stated are in part accounted for by the distinction between evidence actually conflicting as to the primary facts, and evidence clearly establishing such facts, but affording ground for different reasonable inferences and deductions therefrom.[34] A very important distinction has also been made, especially by the federal courts and in recent years, between a report in pursuance of a reference imposed upon some of the parties and one made by consent, the cases holding that where the order of reference is involuntary as to some of the parties the report is advisory only, and that the court must act ultimately on its own judgment;[35] but that where the reference is by consent the findings are presumptively correct and reviewable only under the reservation in the consent and order entered thereon, and for manifest error in the consideration given to evidence or in the application of the law.[36]

In the federal courts this doctrine is nearly always stated with some modification. The finding should be as conclusive as the verdict of a jury, where there is such a conflict that some testimony must be rejected as untruthful (Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Texas, etc., R. Co., 33 Fed. 803), or where the question required for its decision the examination of many scientific and other witnesses (Pennsylvania v. Wheeling, etc., Bridge Co., 13 How. (U. based merely upon assertions of counsel,[37] or the truth of which does not appear in the record.[38] Exceptions will be regarded so far only as they are supported by the special statements of the master or by evidence brought before the court by reference to the particular testimony relied upon.[39] No evidence will be considered which was not before the master,[40] and returned with his report.[41]

3. HARMLESS ERROR. A master's report will not be disturbed for errors working no material prejudice to the party excepting.[42]

4. RECOMMITTAL TO MASTER. A motion to recommit is addressed to the discretion of the court, and ordinarily will not be granted in the absence of special reason therefor.[43] It is competent for the court to recommit the case to the master when it is found that he has committed an error,[44] has refused to hear counsel in argument,[45] or has failed to find on all matters referred to him and to pass upon accounts and to report thereon, and the master passes on the whole controversy, the fact that he did so without objection does not make his report presumptively correct. Oteri v. Scalzo, 145 U. S. 578, 12 S. Ct. 895, 36 L. ed. 824.

required by the original order but which would tend to support exceptions,[54] or to reëxamine a witness, except in case of a clear mistake or omission.[55] A report may be confirmed in part and recommitted in part,[56] or after a reference to two commissioners and a report by one alone there may be a recommital to that one.[57] An application to recommit for further evidence should name the witnesses and state the character of the evidence.[58] The court will receive evidence of extrinsic facts in support of an application to recommit.[59] A recommittal for a specific purpose does not open the case generally for review,[60] and the master must confine himself to the order of recommittal.[61] No notice to the parties is necessary on a recommittal to correct a report where no new evidence is to be taken.[62] Without recommittal the master may be permitted to amend his report in small matters, as by correcting a computation,[63] or by making it conform to the facts.[64] An error may be corrected, after confirmation,[65] but not after a decree founded thereon, without setting aside the decree.[66]

5. Correction by Court Without Recommittal. Upon the discovery of error in the master's report it is not essential that the cause be recommitted, but the court may itself make findings and determine the questions upon the testimony reported by the master,[67] or from the facts in the case aside from the evidence before the master.[68] The court may in like manner find additional facts where the report is incomplete,[69] and may find ultimate facts and draw conclusions from specific facts reported.[70] A witness before the master has even been permitted to correct his testimony in open court on a preliminary showing of mistake.[71] Where, however, a master died after an order of recommittal and before any further proceedings were taken by him it was held that the chancellor should not ignore the order and himself make a decree.[72]

6. Confirmation of Report. While the matter is affected to some extent by statute and rule, the chancery practice otherwise prevails, requiring that any report to which exceptions might lie must be confirmed before further action can be based thereon.[73] The practice as to obtaining a confirmation by the court varies. Under the chancery practice a rule was entered of course that the report stand confirmed unless within eight days the adverse party should show cause to the contrary.[74] A similar practice exists in some American jurisdictions.[75] Elsewhere there are general practice rules, taking the place of the special rule nisi, whereby the report stands confirmed unless exceptions are filed within a time fixed by the rule.[76] An order of confirmation made before expiration of the time to file exceptions is premature and should be set aside,[77] but thereafter the report may at any time be confirmed.[78] A confirmation is sometimes implied, as from an order overruling exceptions,[79] or from entering a decree based upon the report.[80] An order of confirmation is interlocutory only and subject to modification; it is not an adjudication.[81] The confirmation may be set aside for cause.[82]

XXII. DISMISSALS.

A. Voluntary Dismissals — 1. Plaintiff's Right to Dismiss. In the English chancery plaintiff might as a matter of course move to dismiss his bill at any time before decree,[86] and this is often stated as the general rule in the United States.[87] An order of the court must, however, be obtained to effect the dismissal,[88] and in the United States there is a decided tendency to regard the application as resting in the discretion of the court, to be exercised with regard term following the confirmation the order cannot be revised for fraud not affecting the obtaining of the order of confirmation. Thruston v. Devecmon, 30 Md. 210.

A written statement by plaintiff filed with the papers that certain defendants were not brought in, because found to be without into the rights of both parties.[89] Accordingly it is held that there may be no dismissal without prejudice, on motion of plaintiff, where the dismissal would operate to the prejudice of other parties.[90] Thus the right to dismiss without prejudice has been confined to cases where no order has been taken affecting the merits,[91] or where nothing has occurred to entitle defendant to a decree,[92] and has been denied, when the cause has remained a long time at issue.[93] It has been held too late to dismiss after the court has announced its decision,[94] after demurrer sustained and leave to amend not availed of,[95] after verdict for defendant on an issue to a jury,[96] and after an adverse report by a master.[97] Plaintiff cannot dismiss after an interlocutory decree, adjudicating the merits in part,[98] or so as to deprive defendant of an offer of equity, after plaintiff has obtained orders upon the bill containing the offer.[99] Where defendant may be protected thereby, a dismissal may be ordered conditioned upon terms which will afford such protection.[1] In some jurisdictions a plaintiff may not dismiss without prejudice after a cross bill has been filed,[2] or after an answer in the nature of a cross

bill.[3] It is said that one of several plaintiffs may dismiss as to himself,[4] but only on terms protecting the other plaintiffs from injury.[5] It has been also held that a plaintiff may dismiss as to one of several defendants,[6] but this rule seems subject to qualifications.[7] A plaintiff may not dismiss a part of his bill, his remedy being by a motion for leave to amend.[8]

2. Costs on Dismissal. As a general rule a dismissal on plaintiff's motion must be with costs,[9] but under exceptional circumstances costs have not been imposed.[10]

3. Reinstatement. The power to reinstate a cause, after it has been voluntarily dismissed, is frequently denied,[11] except for fraud.[12] On the other hand it is held that defendant may have the cause reinstated, for the purpose of having an order made in the progress of the suit reversed,[13] and that even plaintiff may move to reinstate.[14] An order giving leave to dismiss as to one defendant, but reserving the rights of others, may be revoked.[15] There can be no reinstatement without leave of court.[16]

relief,[31] or where the bill is defective in such a way that it might be cured by amendment.[32] Where it appears on an interlocutory application, as to dissolve an injunction, that plaintiff is not entitled to any relief the bill may be dismissed.[33]

(IV) Other Grounds. A bill will be dismissed where plaintiff disregards interlocutory orders,[34] for want of prayer,[35] on a showing that plaintiff has parted with his entire interest,[36] or that the bill was filed by one not authorized to act as solicitor in the court.[37] A bill has also been dismissed because after striking out improper matter what remained was unintelligible.[38] A bill will not be dismissed before the hearing because it can only be proved by witnesses at the time disqualified.[39] The defense of a former adjudication cannot be raised by motion to dismiss.[40] A statute prescribing grounds for dismissing on motion is exclusive.[41]

b. Dismissal on Bill and Answer. Ordinarily it is improper to dismiss a bill, in advance of the hearing, upon the bill and answer.[42]

c. Dismissals in Part. Any party may insist upon a dismissal as to another party having no interest.[43] A bill may also be dismissed as to parties over whom the court has no jurisdiction,[44] and it then stands as if they had not been named as parties at all.[45] A defendant brought in for the purpose of discovery will be dismissed on a demurrer successfully resisting the discovery.[46] A misjoinder of defendants is no ground, however, for dismissing the entire bill.[47] An original bill cannot be dismissed and a bill supplemental thereto retained.[48]

d. Notice of Motion. A motion to dismiss must in the absence of rule to the contrary be made on notice,[49] and the particular objection must be pointed out.[50]

e. Finality of Order. After an order dismissing the bill, no further order can be made in the cause until the bill is reinstated.[51] This it is held generally may be done upon prompt application therefor,[52] but it is sometimes held that the order of dismissal deprives the court of its jurisdiction.[53] The overruling of a motion to dismiss for want of equity does not prevent a later dismissal for the same cause.[54] A dismissal annuls a prior order requiring the performance of an act.[55] A dismissal of a bill on appeal, the record not disclosing an amended and supplemental bill on file, does not dismiss the bill as amended.[56]

2. At the Hearing. The grounds for dismissing a bill at the hearing are of course practically as broad as those upon which plaintiff may be in any way defeated.[57] The bill will then be dismissed if it is without equity on its face,[58]

even though a demurrer has been overruled.[59] The bill will be dismissed if plaintiff fails to make out his case by the proof,[60] or where pleading and proof are too inharmonious to entitle plaintiff to a decree,[61] or where the proof is too uncertain to found a specific and just decree.[62] Where the answer saves the right there may be a dismissal at the hearing on the ground that plaintiff has an adequate remedy at law.[63] A bill will also be dismissed where relief is impracticable.[64] Where defect of parties appears at the hearing the bill will not be dismissed without an opportunity to bring them in.[65] It has been said that a bill will not be dismissed because prematurely filed, if at the hearing it appears that plaintiff is entitled to relief.[66]

C. Effect on Cross Bill of Dismissing the Original. Dismissal of the original bill does not necessarily carry with it a cross bill.[71] If the cross bill is defensive merely, dismissal of the original dismisses the cross bill,[72] but if the cross bill sets up new facts and prays for affirmative relief against plaintiffs in the original the cross bill remains for disposition.[73] A cross bill presenting no independent equity falls with the dismissal of the original.[74] When the action taken on the

Where a bill asked the cancellation of a note on a ground not established by the proof, and a cross bill seeking to enforce the note disclosed an-original bill disposes of the subject-matter of a cross bill, the latter may be dismissed.[75] Where the cross bill does not fall with the original it may be retained as an original bill,[76] or as an original bill in the nature of a cross bill.[77]

D. Dismissals Without Prejudice. A dismissal without prejudice merely prevents the operation of the order or decree as a bar to a new suit, leaving to the parties the same rights of prosecution and defense as if the new suit were the first instituted.[78] The dismissal will not be made without prejudice when it is the result of a full hearing and determination of the merits,[79] but such an order is proper where the defect is formal.[80] A dismissal without prejudice is generally proper wherever the case has been disposed of for a reason not reaching the merits, and it is probable that plaintiff might be able to make out a good case; as where he has mistaken his remedy,[81] where the bill is defective merely and plaintiff not without equity,[82] or where there is an omission of merely formal proofs,[83] or an accidental failure of proof.[84] The dismissal should be without prejudice when it is the result of a defense in abatement,[85] for multifariousness,[86] or for want of parties.[87] A dismissal may also be ordered without prejudice other defense thereto, both bill and cross bill were dismissed. Bang v. Phelps, etc., Windmill Co., 96 Tenn. 361, 34 S. W. 516.

XXIII. DECREES.

A. Nature and Classification — 1. Definition. A decree is the judgment or sentence of a court of equity.[99] It is pronounced on the hearing of issues and determines the rights of the parties to the suit.[1] An order made upon motion or petition for the furtherance of the suit, without settling any right or liability pertaining to the substance of the controversy, is properly a decretal order rather than a decree.[2]

2. Interlocutory and Final Decrees. A decree is final when it decides and disposes of the whole merits of the case, reserving no further questions or directions for the future judgment of the court.[3] It is interlocutory when it reserves any question for future judicial consideration and determination.[4] A decree is final where it dismisses the bill,[5] although subsequent directions are given as to costs.[6]

W. 128, it was held erroneous expressly to dismiss without prejudice, on the ground that the effect of the decree in that respect could only be determined upon a plea of former adjudication in a later suit.

When final decree is improper.— The court should retain the cause so long as any judicial question is undetermined, and it is improper to render a final decree leaving such questions to be determined by the parties or by officers charged with the execution of the decree. Anderson v. Reed, 11 Iowa 177; Banton v. Campbell, 2 Dana (Ky.) 421; Hancock v. Hancock, 1 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 121, 15 Am. Dec. 92; Farmer v. Samuel, 4 Litt. (Ky.) 187, 14 Am. Dec. 106; Codwise v. Taylor, 4 Sneed (Tenn.) 346; Greenleaf v. Queen, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 138, 7 L. ed. 85. A final decree cannot be entered after a reference until the report comes in (Ogilvie v. Knox Ins. Co., 2 Black (U. S.) 539, 17 L. ed. 349), or usually until after expiration of the time for exceptions to be filed (Chatterton v. Mason, 86 Md. 236, 37 Atl. 960; Prescott v. Prescott, 175 Mass. 64, 55 N. E. 805). A decree may be entered against a defendant in default the same day that the report is filed. Price v. Boden, 39 Fla. 218, 22 So. 657. If a cause is set down for hearing on the first day of the term and exceptions remain to be disposed of, plaintiff may move for final decree at once upon the overruling of the exceptions later in the term. Morris v. Taylor, 23 N. J. Eq. 131. Where pleadings are lost or destroyed, a final decree should not be entered until they are supplied. Failure to adjudicate the costs does not affect the finality of the decree. Peterson v. Vann, 83 N. C. 118.

It is interlocutory if it merely dismisses a cross bill.[7] It is also interlocutory if it merely determines a demurrer,[8] confirms a master's report,[9] directs the payment of money into court, or delivery of property to a receiver,[10] or directs some act to be done before the decree can be effectual.[11] It is interlocutory if it leaves an amount to be paid to be ascertained in the future,[12] or if its finality is conditioned upon the performance of some act in the future.[13] With regard to decrees settling the rights of the parties in substance, but referring the cause to a master for some particular purpose, the cases are not altogether reconcilable upon their particular facts, but the principle running through them is that such a decree is interlocutory if any further judicial action will be requisite upon the coming in of the master's report,[14] and final, if all the consequential directions depending upon the result of the report are contained in the decree, so that no further decree will be necessary on the confirmation of the report.[15] A decree ordering a sale and reserving the question of distribution of the proceeds is interlocutory,[16] but where the sale is merely an execution of the decree and no further judicial action is required the decree is final.[17] Sometimes the character of the decree as final or interlocutory may be affected by what the decree itself declares in this regard, as indicating the purpose of the court with respect to further proceedings;[18] but if the decree is in its effect necessarily interlocutory, it cannot be made final by any phraseology or style tending to so characterize it.[19] A decree may be in part final and in part interlocutory, as where it adjudicates a part of the subject-matter and reserves independent questions,[20] or where it finally disposes of a case as to some of the parties alone.[21] An interlocutory decree remains until final decree subject to the control of the court and open to reconsideration and revision;[22] a final decree terminates the litigation and, unless vacated or modified within the regular time,[23] precludes the court from any further proceedings beyond its mere enforcement.[24]

3. CONSENT DECREES. Parties not laboring under any disability may by their express consent authorize the rendition of a decree which will bind them and which cannot be questioned.[25] Such a decree binds only the parties to the agreement, and is valid only so far as the parties to be affected thereby are before the court and give their consent.[26] In order to give a decree the effect of one by consent there must be an express and clear consent thereto.[27]

4. PRO FORMA DECREES. Where new and difficult questions of law are presented the practice has been to a limited extent recognized of entering a formal decree, avowedly without full consideration, in order to facilitate a speedy trial

A decree dismissing so much of a bill as relates to one of two separate matters, and directing an account to be taken as to the other, is not final in any part as to the parties retained in court. Templeman v. Steptoe, 1 Munf. (Va.) 339.

and thus save time and expense by a prompt determination on appeal of the questions involved.[28]

5. DECREES PRO CONFESSO. These decrees are governed by rules peculiar to themselves and are separately treated.[29]

6. DECREES ON DEFAULT. Where a defendant answers but does not appear at the hearing the decree is sometimes distinguished as one on default, but there is little difference between such decrees and ordinary decrees rendered on full hearing.[30] In the English chancery such a decree was called a decree nisi because it was entered not so much as the judgment of the court as that of plaintiff, and became absolute only on failure of defendant to respond to a rule to show cause against it.[31]

B. Preparation, Form, and Entry — 1. PREPARATION. In England the decree was drawn by the registrar from minutes of the court's directions, and passed and entered after rather complicated proceedings.[32] In the United States the general practice is for the solicitors, usually the solicitor for the successful party, to draw the decree,[33] and it is usual, but it seems not necessary, to submit the draft to the adverse solicitor, for his approval or objections.[34]

2. SIGNING. In the English chancery the decree when settled was formerly, in cases of difficulty, signed by the lord chancellor, but ordinarily by the registrar; the enrolment was signed by the lord chancellor.[35] In the United States the signature of the judge is in some jurisdictions essential;[36] in others if the degree appears of record the signature of the judge is not essential to its validity.[37]

3. ENTRY AND ENROLMENT. By the English practice a decree was entered, after being signed by the registrar, by filing it and entering a copy in the books.[38] While it was then effective for certain purposes, it was still open to rehearing and did not become strictly a record until enrolled,[39] which was accomplished by engrossing, not only the ordering part, but all the pleadings and proceedings and obtaining the signature of the lord chancellor.[40] In America it is often practicable to distinguish between the entry of the decree, through the filing and minuting thereof by the clerk, from its enrolment by transcribing it upon permanent books of record, but the practice in these matters has become widely varied.[41] An actual enrolment is in some jurisdictions requisite in order that the decree may be for all purposes effectual, and the mere filing of the decree is insufficient.[42] Sometimes a decree is deemed enrolled when it is signed and filed,[43] and sometimes at the expiration of the term at which it is made.[44] An enrolment relates back to the time of the decree.[45] Any subsequent decree should be enrolled by a continuance of the same record.[46] Before enrolment the decree is subject to rehearing, amendment, and modification,[47] and it may be used in evidence,[48] but it seems that if it be a final decree its execution cannot be enforced.[49] It may not be pleaded as an adjudication,[50] nor does it charge strangers with notice.[51]

4. ENTRY NUNC PRO TUNC. Where after the submission of a cause a party dies, a revivor may be obviated by entering a decree nunc pro tunc as of the date of the hearing.[52] It has also been held that where a judge dies after the preparation of the decree and before its entry the decree may still be entered,[53] but not where his term of office expires in the interval.[54] Where there has been a failure to enter a decree through accident or inadvertence of the court the decree may be entered as of the time when it should have been entered,[55] but this may be done only to make the record conform to the proceedings actually had. The expedient cannot be resorted to for the purpose of validating a proceeding which was void at the time it was had,[56] nor will it be permitted to affect the intervening rights of third parties.[57]

5. Form of Decrees — a. In General. In the English chancery the enrolled decree was almost a complete record of the cause, and consisted normally of three parts: (1) the date and title; (2) recitals of the pleadings, proceedings, and in general language, the evidence; (3) the ordering or mandatory part of the decree. The ordering part was sometimes prefaced by a declaration of the rights of the parties.[58] In the United States the decree should have a title, setting forth the names of the parties[59] and the time of rendering the decree.[60] The recitals are in the United States much abbreviated, and usually do not set forth the proceedings at length,[61] but it is sometimes required that the decree recite the premises on which it is predicated.[62] In some cases it is necessary for the protection of the party that the decree should declare the grounds or reasons for the order made.[63] Mere informalities do not vitiate a decree.[64]

b. Findings of Fact. It is sometimes held that the decree must contain findings of all the material facts necessary to sustain it,[65] but in some jurisdictions no findings of fact are necessary.[66] Where as is usual an issue is directed to a jury merely to inform the conscience of the court and is not binding, a decree based directly on the verdict is bad. There must be independent findings by the court.[67] The confirmation of a master's report is a sufficient finding of the facts reported,[68] but the decree should then strictly conform to the report.[69]

affected.[72] A decree must be specific in its directions,[73] but no more so than the circumstances of the case require.[74] A decree is at least erroneous if it is inconsistent in its different parts.[75] It has been held that a decree is sufficiently certain when amounts, descriptions, or the like are ascertained by reference to other portions of the record.[76] Uncertainty in an interlocutory decree is not ground for reversal, where it may be removed by subsequent proceedings.[77]

C. Nature of Relief Granted — 1. In General. Equitable relief may be adapted to the circumstances of the case. There is no limit to the variety of decrees in this regard.[78] While certain equitable remedies are called for with sufficient frequency to create definite rules for framing the decrees in such cases, in order to accord the appropriate relief,[79] these categorical remedies do not limit the scope of decrees. While equity will not do that which is only a hardship to defendant and of no benefit to plaintiff,[80] still where plaintiff clearly establishes his right, the court must award the appropriate relief without considering inconvenience to defendant.[81] It is of course impossible to specify what relief may be awarded outside of the well defined and common equitable remedies; but it may be said in general that the court will adjust the relief in such a way as to afford fair protection to the rights of all parties.[82] In accordance with principles already stated,[83] the decree should be so framed as to adjust all rights in controversy and make the relief complete.[84]

2. TIME TO WHICH RELIEF SHOULD RELATE. In general equity adapts its relief to the state of facts existing, not at the beginning, but at the close, of litigation.[85] Matters occurring after the filing of the bill cannot be embraced within the decree, however, until brought into the case by supplemental pleading.[86] The court will award relief to plaintiff without noticing interests acquired from defendant pending the suit.[87]

3. RELIEF IN RELATION TO PARTIES — a. Decree Must Affect Parties Alone. The decree must be confined to the interests of the parties before the court.[88] In the absence of indispensable parties no decree whatever can be rendered.[89] But when the absent parties are not indispensable parties, a decree may be rendered restricted to the rights of those before the court and saving the rights of the others.[90] The decree can affect the rights only of those who are named in the bill as parties,[91] and charged in it with an interest or liability and facts sufficient to call for relief,[92] and who have appeared or been summoned.[93]

b. Relief Among Plaintiffs. As already stated the general rule is that if all plaintiffs are not entitled to relief none is,[94] but this rule is sometimes denied or qualified.[95] It seems that where plaintiffs have several interests the decree should be in accordance with such interests, notwithstanding their joinder.[96] After affording plaintiffs relief in common the court will not, however, proceed to adjust an independent controversy among them with respect to the subject-matter.[97]

c. Relief Against Particular Defendants. Where the liability of defendants is several, the relief should be against each severally, according to his liability,[98] but where the liability is joint, the decree must be against all not showing a personal discharge.[99] If the liability of defendants is several and may be established without affecting the rights of others, a final decree may be made against one, retaining the cause as to the others.[1] Where two are jointly charged, one admitting the liability and the other not denying, the decree may go against both,[2] and where one admits and the other denies, and the proof fails against the latter, relief may be given against the former personally upon his admission.[3] Where the parties are before the court and their order of liability ascertained, the liability will be imposed immediately upon him who is ultimately liable.[4]

d. Relief Among Defendants. As it is the aim of equity to make a complete adjustment of the subject-matter among all interested, regardless of their position on the record,[5] the decree will grant relief between co-defendants based upon the pleadings and proofs between plaintiffs and defendants,[6] but not without cross bill upon matters outside of such pleadings and proofs.[7] Such relief is merely incidental to the granting of relief to plaintiff,[8] and if plaintiff be denied relief none can without cross bill be given between defendants.[9] The equities between defendants will not be adjusted where that course would cause serious delay or expense to plaintiff or prejudice his rights,[10] and it is sometimes said that such equities will be adjusted only when they are plain or admitted.[11] No decree will be made between defendants having adverse interest who are represented by the same solicitor.[12]

e. Decree on Bill and Cross Bill. It very frequently happens that defendant, instead of merely defending against plaintiff's demand, interposes by cross bill a counter demand with reference to the subject-matter against plaintiff. In such case the bill and cross bill being regularly heard together,[13] it is the duty of the court to dispose of the issues raised in both,[14] and make an affirmative decree in favor of one party or the other as the equities demand.[15] If the controversy takes such shape that a determination of all rights may be had on the lines of the cross bill, it seems that the decree may be based on the cross bill alone.[16] So far as the cross bill is concerned plaintiff therein stands generally in the position of a plaintiff in an original suit,[17] but plaintiff in the original bill, who has filed it in a jurisdiction in which he does not reside, cannot object to the jurisdiction of a cross bill on the ground of his own non-residence.[18]

f. Relief by Imposing Conditions on Plaintiff. While specific affirmative relief cannot be granted against plaintiff except upon a cross bill or equivalent pleading,[19] relief may be given indirectly by imposing upon plaintiff the doing of equity as a condition of affording him relief against defendant.[20] The condition so imposed need not go so far as to afford defendant complete relief, but only so far as to place him in the position he equitably should occupy in view of the relief accorded plaintiff.[21] Moreover the decree is not a peremptory decree against plaintiff, but merely a condition without the performance of which he will himself take nothing.[22] The facts upon which the condition rests must be definitely established[23] and must be pleaded.[24] It must not be left to plaintiff to determine when he shall perform the condition or whether he has performed it, and therefore that question should be reserved and a time for performance should be fixed.[25]

4. Relief in Relation to Pleadings — a. Conformity to Facts Alleged. The relief afforded by the decree must conform to the case made out by the pleadings as well as to the proofs.[26] Neither unproved allegations nor proof of matters not other parts of the pleadings and proofs.[29] But in the application of this rule an exact and absolute correspondence between bill and proofs is not required; if the facts found as the basis of the decree are substantially the same as those alleged in the bill, it is not a ground of error in the decree that they vary in some unimportant particulars.[30] It follows from the principles just stated that where plaintiff not only makes out the case stated in his bill but by the proofs shows himself entitled to additional equitable relief, this additional relief cannot be granted him, for the decree cannot go beyond the scope of the bill.[31] Furthermore, it is not enough that the proofs show that plaintiff is entitled to some relief; for unless that is the relief warranted by the allegations in the bill, plaintiff has failed to make out his case.[32] And if plaintiff has framed his bill to adapt it to a certain theory on which he bases his right to recover, the proofs must be such as to warrant a decree in conformity to this theory; and it is not enough that the proofs are sufficient to justify a decree in conformity to some other theory.[33]

Legal relief.— Where, on the hearing of a bill in equity, the evidence sustains none of the averments of the bill, the fact that it discloses a cause of action at law against one of defendants, which is not suggested in the bill, does not give the court jurisdiction to proceed with that cause of action. Relief for different reason.— But in Harriman Imp. Co. v. McNutt, (Tenn. Ch. App. 1896) 37 S. b. Relief as Affected by Prayer — (1) Generally Confined to That Prayed. The relief granted must conform to the prayer of the bill and cannot extend beyond that prayed.[35] Accordingly relief cannot be given for a greater suit for an injunction against apprehended injuries to real estate may be treated as a suit to quiet title if the averments are proper and sufficient, and relief decreed accordingly although not specially demanded. And in Jackson v. Tatebo, 3 Wash. 456, 28 Pac. 916, where the facts in the complaint showed that it was not an action to remove a cloud on plaintiff's title as therein stated, but an action in equity to obtain relief from fraud, it was held that it was in the power of the court of equity to grant such relief as the facts in the case required. See also Ridgely v. Bond, 18 Md. 433; Filler v. Tyler, 91 Va. 458, 22 S. E. 235.

Theory of fraud.— Where a bill in equity is framed on the theory that there was fraud entitling plaintiff to relief, it must be proved as laid in order to warrant a decree in plaintiff's favor; and the proof of other facts, although included in the charge of fraud, and sufficient under some circumstances to constitute a claim for relief under another head of equity, will not prevent the bill from being dismissed.

Substantial conformity.— A decree restraining the sale of "matrices" is not variant from a prayer to restrain the sale of a "matrix," both words being used to designate a single species of matrices. Stratton v. Seaverns, 163 Mass. 73, 39 N. E. 779.

Where the statute prescribes the relief, it should be granted without respect to the prayer. Hipp v. Huchett, 4 Tex. 20. The amount than asked for in the bill,[36] and where specific relief alone is prayed no relief can be granted unless it be that specifically asked.[37] The fact that plaintiff has prayed for more relief than he is entitled to forms no objection to awarding such part thereof as is warranted by the pleadings and proof.[38] It seems that a decree not founded upon a prayer, while erroneous, is not void,[39] and if all parties for a long time proceed in the cause as if it were for a particular purpose they cannot object that the court so dealt with it, although the decree rendered was not in conformity to the prayer of the original bill.[40]

(II) Effect of Prayer For General Relief. The rules just stated are much moderated by the practice of praying general relief in connection with the special prayers.[41] Under the prayer for general relief it is broadly held that any decree may be made which is warranted by the allegations of the bill.[42] In this general prayer authorizes such relief. Powers v. McEachern, 7 S. C. 290.

Under the codes it is very generally provided that after answer the court may grant any relief consistent with the case made by the complaint and embraced within the issue. It follows from this provision that after answer the relief need not be restricted to the prayer.

will not be granted so variant from that specially prayed as to surprise defendant and preclude him from fairly defending against it.[47]

D. Decrees Pro Confesso — 1. Nature. As already shown[48] modern practice permits, in lieu of compulsory process to enforce an appearance and answer, the treatment of defendant's default in appearance or pleading as a confession of the facts charged in the bill. A decree entered on such confession is generally called a decree pro confesso.[49]

2. When Bill Can Be Taken Pro Confesso — a. Necessity of Service or Appearance. In order that a bill may be taken pro confesso it is essential that defendant against whom it is so taken shall either have been duly served with process,[50] or shall have entered an appearance.[51] In cases where constructive service is authorized it is essential that it be made affirmatively to appear in the record that the statutory requirements have been strictly pursued.[52]

49. 1 Daniell Ch. Pr. 679. There is some confusion in the use of the term arising from its application in some cases to the order or interlocutory decree declaring defendant's default and its effect. and in others to the final decree rendered in consequence thereof. Strictly speaking of course it is the bill which is taken pro confesso, and the decree in such case is not a decree pro confesso, but a decree upon a bill taken pro confesso.

b. Proof of Service or Appearance. In order to found a decree pro confesso on defendant's failure to appear, the return of the subpœna must show that it was served in strict compliance with the law.[53] A recital in the decree of due service is generally deemed at least prima facie evidence of the fact,[54] but sometimes where the service is constructive the decree must state all the facts showing that it was regular.[55] A recital of a defendant's appearance is sufficient evidence of that fact.[56]

c. When Defendant Is Deemed in Default. The time when a defendant becomes in default so that a decree pro confesso may be ordered depends of course on the varying statutes and rules of different jurisdictions.[57] An order prematurely entered will not be deemed irregular if defendant never appears,[58] and if defendant appears after an order pro confesso and makes a motion without objecting to irregularities in taking the order he thereby waives such irregularities.[59] An order pro confesso is usually entered by the clerk on a rule day and cannot be entered at any other time, at least without order of a judge.[60] A bill cannot be taken pro confesso when a plea has been filed thereto and has not been disposed of,[61] and it has also been held that the pendency of a motion attacking the bill will have a like effect.[62] Where a demurrer has been overruled, defendant must first be ruled to answer,[63] and if he fails to do so the bill may then be taken as confessed.[64] Failure of a defendant to prosecute a reference before a master has been held to justify a decree against him.[65] As a general replication does not traverse a cross bill, the filing thereof does not prevent a decree pro confesso on the cross bill.[66] After exceptions to an answer have been sustained and defendant ruled to answer further, if he fails to do so the general rule is that the entire bill may be taken as confessed.[67] As no process is in general necessary upon an amended bill,[68] an order pro confesso can usually be taken on the original subpœna, although the bill has been amended,[69] and the same is true where after the order pro confesso there is an amendment purely formal,[70] or not affecting the rights of defendant in question.[71] The introduction of supplemental matter usually does not in the United States require new process before the bill can be taken pro confesso.[72] If defendant fails to answer a distinct part of the bill, plaintiff if he chooses may take that part as confessed.[73] While ordinarily a bill cannot be taken as confessed when an answer is on file,[74] a defendant who has answered may by express consent or by implication authorize such a decree.[75]

3. Proceedings in Taking Bill Pro Confesso — a. In General. The practice of taking bills pro confesso in the English chancery was to carry out the process so far as to issue a writ of sequestration, and then on motion or petition to obtain an order for taking the bill pro confesso, which was in effect an order to set down the cause for hearing on the bill alone. On the hearing the court would render such a decree as the bill, assuming its truth, might justify.[76] In the United States the practice is in general substantially the same, varying, however, much in detail in different jurisdictions, and requiring no process beyond the subpœna as a foundation for the order.[77]

b. Notice. Notice of the application for the order taking the bill pro confesso is not usually required,[78] but it is sometimes required when defendant has appeared and has failed to answer,[79] or where special circumstances exist rendering such notice equitably necessary.[80] Neither is notice after the order pro confesso of the application for a final decree in general necessary.[81]

c. Rule to Answer. It is sometimes required that defendant be specially ruled to answer before the bill can be taken as confessed.[82]

d. Affidavit of Regularity. In some jurisdictions it is essential that an affidavit be filed to the effect that the proceedings have been regular and that a default has occurred.[83]

e. Refunding Bond. It is a requirement in some jurisdictions on obtaining a decree pro confesso against absent defendants who have not been personally served and who have not appeared, that plaintiff shall give bond to make restitution to such defendants if they should be let in to defend after the execution of the decree.[84] It seems that the court has a general power to require security.[85]

f. Effect of Order Pro Confesso. The order to take the bill pro confesso is not in itself an adjudication,[86] nor does it entitle plaintiff to a decree as of course.[87] It operates to preclude defendant from taking advantage of affirmative defenses and from offering evidence in defense,[88] and establishes an admission of the truth of all definite and certain allegations of the bill,[89] but such allegations as are indefinite and uncertain will not sustain a final decree pro confesso unless they are supplemented by an adequate amount of proof.[90]

g. Proof After Order Pro Confesso. As by the order pro confesso defendant admits the certain allegations of the bill, he has no right to demand proof thereof, but proof must be made as to uncertain allegations.[91] The court may, however, in its discretion require proof.[92] Proof is, however, required as against infant defendants,[93] and against non-residents served constructively and who do not appear.[94] Where proof is taken the decree should depend thereon and not on the bill alone.[95]

which may be waived by defendant,[97] and in some jurisdictions no preliminary order is necessary.[98]

i. When Final Decree May Be Taken. The rules of course vary much as to the time which must be allowed after the order or decree taking the bill pro confesso, before a final decree can be taken.[99] Where defendants are united in interests, a final decree should not be taken before the case is in condition for decree as to all;[1] but it seems this rule does not apply where the interests are separate and a decree against one in default would not prejudice others.[2] It will be presumed that the decree was regularly rendered.[3]

4. Nature of Final Decree — a. In General. The theory upon which pro confesso decrees are taken being, not that defendant by his default subjects himself to the decree sought by plaintiff, but that he merely confesses the truth of the facts alleged with certainty in the bill and permits the case to be brought on for hearing upon the bill alone,[4] no decree can be taken unless the bill charges sufficient facts and with sufficient certainty to warrant a decree.[5] No relief can be granted except such as is within a fair scope of both allegations and prayer of the

The decree may be taken at the same term. Sanders v. Dowell, 7 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 206; Scott v. Davis, 9 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 38. In the New York chancery if defendant had appeared the case could not be taken up until regularly called except on special notice. Anonymous, 3 Edw. 136. In some jurisdictions the decree can be taken immediately (Platt v. Judson, 3 Blackf. (Ind.) 235; Claybrook v. Wade, 7 Coldw. (Tenn.) 555; Stark v. Murphy, (Tenn. Ch. App. 1899) 52 S. W. 736) and at the appearance term (Wessells v. Wessells, 1 Tenn. Ch. 60).

U. S. Eq. Rules 18 and 19 now provide that the court may proceed to a decree at any time after the expiration of thirty days after the entry of the order to take the bill pro confesso. This rule in its present form was adopted in 1878 (97 U. S. viii). Prior to that time the decree could not be taken until the following term. O'Hara v. McConnell, 93 U. b. Where Other Defendants Answer. Failure of one defendant to answer and a decree pro confesso against him do not entitle plaintiff to take the allegations of his bill as true against him who has answered.[10] A final decree on the merits cannot then be entered, either against the defaulting defendant or against those not in default, without proof of the material allegations of the bill.[11] And even where a decree pro confesso has been entered against a defaulting defendant, if upon issue joined by a co-defendant and trial had it turns out that the bill ought not to be sustained as to either defendant, it will be dismissed as to the defaulting defendant as well as to defendant not in default.[12] This rule of course does not apply where the allegations in the bill against the defaulting defendants and the defenses of the answering defendants have no necessary connection, so that upon the trial it turns out that a final decree upon the merits against the defaulting defendants is not inconsistent with a decree dismissing the bill as against defendants not in default.[13]

E. Construction and Effect of Decrees — 1. In General. In construing a decree the intent of the court granting it will be looked to,[14] and provisions may accordingly be sometimes implied.[15] The decree will be construed and restricted in accordance with the pleadings,[16] and even with reference to other parts of the record.[17] A liability for money under a decree is joint and several and so to declare it is surplusage.[18]

2. Decrees Relating to Title. A decree establishing an existing title operates of itself and carries with it the right of possession,[19] but as equity has in the absence of statute no power to create or transfer title, a decree for that purpose must direct the making of a conveyance, and the title passes by virtue of the conveyance and not by virtue of the decree alone.[20] Frequently, however, statutes create exceptions to this rule, but the provisions of such statutes vary.[21]

F. Enforcing Decrees — 1. In General. As equity acts primarily in personam,[22] the general method of enforcing a decree which is not self-executing is by contempt proceedings against the party refusing to obey it.[23] In the English chancery the foundation for such proceedings was laid by the service of a writ of execution, requiring obedience to the ordering part of the decree as recited in the writ.[24] The jurisdiction of the court continues for the purpose of enforcing and controlling the execution of the decree.[25] The court may often still proceed by attachment or similar process against the person,[26] or in an appropriate case by writ of sequestration.[27] More direct methods are, however, now usually available, such as executions analogous to those used at law, for the purpose of enforcing the payment of money.[28] On a decree awarding land to plaintiff, or after a sale of land, the purchaser will be put in possession by a writ of assistance or other writ having the same effect.[29] It is familiar practice, authorized now in most jurisdictions, where the court directs a conveyance of land, to appoint a commis-

2. STAYING ENFORCEMENT AND ENLARGING TIME. The court may when equitable circumstances require stay or suspend the execution of a decree,[31] or may enlarge the time allowed for its performance.[32]

3. NECESSITY OF REVIVOR. It is sometimes necessary in order that a decree may be carried into effect that it be revived, as where a party thereto has died,[33] or where by lapse of time a presumption of performance has arisen.[34] A decree may be revived pending a suit to vacate it.[35] A decree in equity must be revived by a bill of revivor and not by scire facias.[36] Want of jurisdiction to render the decree is a defense to the bill of revivor,[37] but error in the original proceedings is not.[38]

4. BILLS TO ENFORCE DECREES. Where a decree has remained unexecuted until it is necessary to have an adjudication to settle rights which have become embarrassed by subsequent events, a bill will lie to ascertain and settle such rights and enforce the decree,[39] and a bill will also lie to carry out the decree according to its object, where further orders are necessary in order to effectuate it and give it complete force.[40] So too a bill in the nature of a creditor's bill will lie to subject property which cannot be directly reached to the satisfaction of the decree.[41] An original bill is necessary to enforce the decree of a court which has ceased to exist, if other provision has not been made for that purpose.[42] Any cause which may exist against the enforcement of the decree must be shown by answer to the second bill.[43] Want of jurisdiction of the person of defendant in the first suit is a defense to the bill,[44] but mere error or irregularity is not.[45] It is generally held that defendant cannot show by way of defense fraud in procuring the decree.[46] It is, however, held that on such a bill the court will refuse to enforce the original decree, if found to be inequitable and unjust.[47]

XXIV. PROCEEDINGS TO CORRECT OR VACATE DECREES.

A. Introductory Statement. The power of the court to correct errors and to modify or vacate decrees and the proceedings to accomplish those objects depend upon the character of the decree, the character of the error or defect, and the time when the application is made. It may be laid down as a broad general proposition that the power of correcting and changing findings and orders exists, unimpaired by any limitation, as long as the cause remains open and within the jurisdiction of the court.[48] The application ought and in most cases must be made to the judge who granted the decree.[49] The whole matter is now sometimes con-

B. Consent Decrees. A decree entered by consent cannot be amended or vacated, nor will a rehearing be allowed thereon, except by like consent.[52] The rule applies, however, only where the decree is entered in accordance with the free consent of the parties. Therefore a decree will be reformed, if as entered it does not express the true intention of the parties,[53] or vacated for reasons sufficient to justify setting aside the consent.[54]

a report is generally interlocutory within the rules governing revision,[61] but is treated as final if it is conclusive as to the rights of the parties.[62] Indeed a decree, although interlocutory, is often held conclusive in so far as it adjudicates substantial rights, so that its provisions may not in subsequent proceedings be materially varied.[63] When the matter of an original bill has been adjudicated it cannot be reheard on hearing of a cross bill.[64]

D. Final Decrees — 1. Clerical and Formal Errors and Omissions. Mere clerical errors, errors of form or mistakes in the drafting of a decree, as distinguished from judicial errors, may be corrected on petition or motion.[65] This may be done without the formality of a rehearing,[66] and by a correction of the original degree or its enrolment, without entering a new decree.[67] The power to amend such errors continues after the enrolment of the decree and the adjournment of the term at which it was entered;[68] but the right of a party to move for such amendment may be lost by negligence,[69] or by unreasonable delay in making the application.[70]

in the decree be other than of the class just referred to, that is, if it be sought to vacate the decree or to modify it in matter of substance, this can generally not be done on motion, but only upon rehearing in pursuance of a petition for that purpose.[71] Without a rehearing, however, the court will make an amendment which would have been inserted of course at the time of the decree,[72] or it will correct an admitted error.[73]

b. Time For Making Application. In most jurisdictions the control of the court over the decree, for the purpose of vacating or modifying it, continues throughout the term at which the decree is entered;[74] but no power remains to make any substantial change after the expiration of the term, except by bill of review.[75] This is the practical rule, although technically it is the enrolment of the decree which places it beyond the control of the court,[76] the rule stated being usually worked out by treating the decree as enrolled at the end of the term.[77] A decree may, however, after enrolment be vacated by consent,[78] for false representation inducing the judge to sign it,[79] or in pursuance of statutory authority.[80] A decree may be amended after enrolment to insert matter inadvertently omitted,[81] and the enrolment itself may be vacated for irregularity in obtaining it.[82] As the power of the court continues for the purpose of carrying the decree into execution,[83] the limitation of the court's control to the term at which the decree was rendered does not apply to provisions inserted for the purpose of carrying the decree into effect, and such provisions may be amended or inserted at any time.[84] Because of the general limitation upon the power of the court to interfere with its decree, a rehearing may be allowed upon application made before the end of the term[85] or before enrolment,[86] but cannot be granted thereafter.[87] Other of one who has no interest affected by it.[93] If a decree is rendered against defendants jointly, they should all be joined in the application.[94] The court may before the decree is filed order a rehearing of its own motion.[95]

(III) The Petition. There must be an application in due form and in accordance with established practice to entitle one to a rehearing,[96] and the regular method of making application is by petition.[97] The petition must state by whom it is presented, the interest of the petitioner,[98] and the grounds on which the rehearing is asked.[99] It must be signed by counsel.[1] The English practice requires a certificate of two counsel that they conceive the cause proper to be reheard,[2] and the same practice has prevailed to a certain extent in the United States.[3] If the petition rests upon matter not appearing on the record it must be verified by oath.[4]

d. Under What Circumstances Rehearing Allowed — (I) In General. While it has been said that the granting of a rehearing is almost of course,[5] and while in the English chancery the cause was generally set down to be reheard upon the mere certificate of two counsel, as required by the practice,[6] still the rule is in the United States that the granting of a rehearing is discretionary.[7] A rehearing will

f. Under What Circumstances Decree Will Be Vacated. The court does not look with favor upon efforts to vacate a decree.[31] If the defect in the decree could be remedied on motion the decree will not be vacated.[32] It will be vacated if it was made unjustly against a party whose right has not been protected,[33] but only where enforcement of the decree would be inequitable.[34] It will not be vacated because of defects in procedure alone,[35] or where the same result in substance must be reached by another decree,[36] or where rights have been acquired in good faith under it.[37] It has been said that a decree will not be vacated because it is void, as it is then harmless.[38] It will not be vacated because plaintiff has parted with his interest,[39] or because one of two defendants, held jointly liable, died before the hearing.[40] A decree will not be opened to let in matter which the party neglected to present without excuse at the proper time,[41] nor will it be opened where he has been otherwise guilty of laches.[42]

E. Decrees Pro Confesso — 1. Power of Court to Vacate. With regard to pro confesso decrees the power of the court is generally more extensive than in the case of decrees rendered after hearing both parties, and the circumstances calling for the exercise of such power are different. Of course the order to take the bill pro confesso being interlocutory the power of the court to admit defendant to answer exists until final decree,[43] but the right of defendant to be let in is not absolute.[44] Power also exists as in other cases to set aside the decree before enrolment or before the end of the term.[45] The power is, however, generally held to extend beyond this and to permit the setting aside on motion or petition of a decree pro confesso, even after enrolment and at a subsequent term, in order to let in a meritorious defense,[46] and to prevent fraud or mistake.[47] Power to set aside a decree pro confesso after the term, except by bill for that purpose, is, however, in some jurisdictions denied.[48]

2. Exercise of Power Discretionary. As long as the power to set aside a decree pro confesso exists its exercise rests in discretion,[49] and the application will in general be granted when no injurious delay will result, and the applicant has not been guilty of great negligence.[50]

3. Grounds For Vacating Decree — a. Irregular Proceedings. A mere irregularity in service of process, if it was sufficient to give defendant notice, will not in itself require a setting aside of the decree;[51] but he must also show that substantial injustice has been done.[52] The court will vacate a decree if it was prematurely taken[53] or collusively obtained,[54] or if want of jurisdiction appears.[55]

b. Excusing Default. It is in general necessary, in order to vacate a default decree regularly entered, that defendant should show some reasonable excuse for his failure to appear or answer.[56] Promptness in making the application and a consideration of the rights of the adverse party have much to do in determining the sufficiency of the excuse.[57] It is said that if the application be promptly made defendant on payment of costs will be permitted to answer on showing any reasonable ground for indulgence.[58] Surprise, accident, and mistake afford proper grounds for relief,[59] and mental debility has been held an excuse.[60] It is not an excuse that defendant forgot,[61] or that he was ignorant of the procedure.[62] It is generally held that a defendant is not excused by the neglect of his counsel[63] or of his agent.[64] One who suffers a decree pro confesso and then attends a sale thereunder cannot have it opened without good excuse for such conduct.[65]

c. Showing Meritorious Defense. In addition to showing a sufficient excuse for the default, defendant, in order to have a decree pro confesso set aside, must show that he has a meritorious defense.[66] Defendant, in addition to swearing that he has a good defense on the merits, must state definitely the facts constituting such defense, or state its substance or nature;[67] or he must produce the sworn answer which he proposes to put in.[68] Likewise, if defendant makes the application on petition, the petition must state the nature of his defense and it must be sworn to.[69] Although the submission of an answer is not an indispensable requirement unless made so by statute,[70] it is nevertheless the most natural way of presenting to the court the merits of defendant's contention; and a sworn answer should ordinarily be tendered and the court may require it.[71] The decree will not be set aside on a general affidavit of merits.[72] A decree will not be opened to let in a defense which is technical merely,[73] or which is inequitable.[74] The merits which must be shown need not depend on new facts, but may consist of matter of law.[75]

4. Proceedings on Application. Plaintiff may resist the application by a counter showing.[76] The mere filing of an answer or giving leave to answer does not operate to vacate the decree. There must be a direct order to that end to ground further proceedings.[77] The order vacating the decree is conclusive and the propriety of the action cannot be raised in the subsequent proceedings.[78] The decree may be opened in a proper case as to one defendant alone.[79] If on opening the decree leave is given to answer, that form of defense alone may be resorted to;[80] but unless restricted by the order, any defense may be interposed which may be established by answer.[81] Defendant may be required to submit to terms.[82] Vacating the opening order restores the original decree.[83]

5. Decrees Based on Constructive Service. method of proceeding, and the conditions, where any exist, under which the defense may be interposed.[85] Sometimes the decree is vacated in the first instance,[86] and sometimes defendant is merely permitted to be heard and the decree stands unless set aside on final hearing.[87]

F. Bills of Review — 1. Nature and Functions — a. Definition. A bill of review is one filed to procure an examination and reversal of a decree after its enrolment.[88] It is not a part of the original cause but an independent proceeding,[89] and is the only proper method by which the court rendering a decree can review it for error after the time for rehearing has expired.[90]

b. Bills in the Nature of Bills of Review. A bill in the nature of a bill of review is a term properly applied to a bill to obtain relief against a decree, brought by or against one not a party to the original bill.[91] The term is sometimes applied to other bills having the general purpose of a bill of review but not being technically such.[92]

c. Supplemental Bills in the Nature of Bills of Review. A supplemental bill in the nature of a bill of review is one filed before enrolment to bring in matter discovered since the decree.[93]

2. What Decrees May Be Reviewed. A bill of review will not lie upon an interlocutory decree,[94] but only after final decree.[95] A decree by consent is not ordinarily subject to a bill of review,[96] nor can such a bill be filed to a decree pro confesso;[97] but it seems this rule does not apply as to errors apparent on the face of the record.[98] A release of error in a decree bars a bill of review to reverse it.[99] Where an appeal vacates a decree a bill of review will not lie after the appeal is perfected.[1] After affirmance by a higher court a bill of review will not lie,[2] unless the right is reserved in the decree above or permission thereafter given by the appellate court,[3] or unless the bill be founded on evidence discovered after the affirmance.[4] Where jurisdiction of the appellate court is appellate solely, it cannot itself entertain a bill to review its own decree.[5]

Vacating decree.— A consent decree may be vacated for mistake. Flagler v. Crow, 40 Ill. 414; Vincent v. Matthews, 15 R. I. 509, 8 Atl. 704. See supra, XXIV, B. A consent decree will not be vacated because of a later decision announcing the law contrary to what counsel supposed it to be. Ingles v. Bryant, 117 Mich. 113, 75 N. W. 442.

The general principle is that the decision of a higher court cannot be reviewed by the court below. Felty v. Calhoon, 147 Pa. St. 27, 23 Atl. 438. Therefore it applies to matters covered by a decree of reversal as well as affirmance. Costen's Appeal, 13 Pa. St. 292; Henry v. Davis, 13 W. Va. 230. It will not be allowed to present matter which might have been presented in the earlier proceedings. McLean v. Nixon, 18 B. Mon. (Ky.) 768. Matter which might have been and was not litigated in the first instance cannot be considered on appeal, but only by bill of review. Burt v. Thomas, 49 Mich. 462, 12 N. W. 911, 13 N. W. 818. A bill of review will not be allowed to revise the judgment of the appellate court on the ground that the decree was performed in ignorance of the appeal. Costen's Appeal, 13 Pa. St. 292. Even for newly discovered evidence, the right to file a bill must be granted by the appellate court. Stafford v. Bryan, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 45. It has been held that a bill grounded on newly discovered evidence will not lie after decree by the appellate court. Cox v. Hartsville Bank, (Tenn. Ch. App. 1900) 63 S. Iowa.— McGregor v. Gardner, 16 Iowa 538

3. In What Court Brought. The rule is uniform that the court which rendered the decree, and that court alone, has jurisdiction of a bill to review the decree.[6] Where a court is abolished and its jurisdiction transferred to another court the latter has power to review a decree of the former.[7] Whether courts of probate possess the power of entertaining bills of review in like manner as courts of general chancery jurisdiction is a question depending largely upon the construction of statutes.[8] Consent cannot confer jurisdiction.[9]

4. Parties — a. Generally. The general rule is that all parties to the original bill must be parties to the bill of review,[10] and that only such as were parties to the original bill should be brought in.[11] It is said, however, that only necessary parties interested in the decree need be brought in.[12] One who is out of the jurisdiction need not be made a party if his presence is not indispensable.[13] A voluntary purchaser from the successful party need not be brought in,[14] but a purchaser at a sale under the decree should be.[15] The parties should be ranged according to their interest in the matter to be reviewed.[16]

b. Plaintiffs. No one can maintain a bill of review unless he shows an interest injuriously affected by the decree.[17] In accordance with the general rule it is usually said that the bill lies only in favor of a party to the original decree or his privies;[18] but a trustee may file a bill for the benefit of the cestuis que trustent,[19] and one represented, but not a technical party, may file the bill.[20] An assignee of a party cannot become a plaintiff.[21] All parties having an interest in the reversal of the decree may join as plaintiffs.[22]

5. Within What Time Bill May Be Filed. Courts of equity adopt with reference to bills of review the analogy of the statute of limitations.[23] A bill of review being in the nature of a writ of error, the English chancery, following the common-law rule with reference to such writs, held that a bill of review might be brought within twenty years of the decree,[24] and this limitation has been adopted in a few cases in the United States.[25] For the most part, however, the American courts have followed the principle rather than the limitation recognized in England, and permit bills of review only within the time which is allowed for an appeal or writ of error within the particular jurisdiction.[26] Generally, however, this period applies only to bills for error apparent on the record, and there is no arbitrary bar to a bill based on new matter.[27] Sometimes the period is fixed by express statute.[28] The time generally begins to run from the time when the final decree is rendered;[29] but, where time runs against a bill based on newly-discovered evidence, it is to be computed from the time of discovery.[30] The time when the proceeding is deemed commenced is a question on which the decisions are not in harmony.[31] The usual exceptions are made in favor of persons under disabilities.[32] Besides the limitation arising from lapse of time the court will apply the ordinary rules denying relief where plaintiff has been guilty of laches.[33] A cross

performance of the decree does not, however, exclude the jurisdiction of the court, which undoubtedly has power to entertain a bill of review even though the decree has not been performed.[48] It is well settled that the rule does not operate when defendant can show to the satisfaction of the court that he cannot perform the decree,[49] or when the performance of the decree would extinguish some right which the party had at law.[50]

8. FRAME OF BILL. A bill of review must set out the former bill and the proceedings thereon, including the decree,[51] but not the evidence in the original cause.[52] It must state specifically the grounds upon which it is based,[53] and if

Substantial compliance.— Placing the amount of the decree in the hands of the master is a substantial compliance with the order of the court and will authorize a bill of review. Taylor v. Person, 9 N. C. 298.

Performance after filing bill.— Plaintiff in a bill of review had leave of the court to file his bill, and had performed all things required by the decree up to the time of filing his bill of review, but had failed to perform matters required by the decree to be performed after the date of filing the bill of review. It was held proper that he would be ordered by the court, on motion of defendant, to perform by a certain day, those matters as to which he was in default, on penalty of having his bill of review dismissed. 62. In Whiting v. U. S. Bank, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 6, 13, 10 L. ed. 33, the court said: "It has also been suggested at the bar, that no bill of review lies for errors of law, except where such errors are apparent on the face of the decree of the court. That is true in the sense in which the language is used in the English practice. In England, the decree always recites the substance of the bill and answer and pleadings, and also the facts on which the court founds its decree. But in America the decree does not ordinarily recite either the bill, or answer, or pleadings; and generally not the facts on which the decree is founded. But with us the bill, answer, and other pleadings, together with the decree, constitute what is properly considered as the record. And, therefore, in truth, the rule in each country is precisely the same, in legal effect; although expressed in different language." For extended discussion of the practice in England and the United States in this respect see McDougald v. Dougherty, 39 Ala. 409.

In Ohio, if the decree does not find the facts, the court will examine the evidence (McLouth v. Rathbone, 19 Ohio 21; Stevens v. Hey, 15 Ohio 313), but only where the evidence is of record (Holman v. Riddle, 8 Ohio St. 384), and will not reverse merely because of a difference of opinion as to the weight of the evidence (Medina County Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Palm, 5 Ohio St. 107; Gazley v. Huber, 3 Ohio St. 399; Tracey v. Sacket, 1 Ohio St. 54, 59 Am. Dec. 610; Buckley v. Gilmore, 12 Ohio 63), but will reverse where there is no evidence (Medina County Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Palm, supra). A dismissal will not be set aside where there was a material variance and no application for leave to amend. Reynolds v. Morris, 7 Ohio St. 310. A finding that publication was duly made is not conclusive. Trimble v. Longworth, 13 Ohio St. 431.

a bill of review are such as arise upon the pleadings, proceedings, and decree, without reference to the evidence.[70] The entire record will, however, be considered,[71] but only to examine for errors specified in the bill of review.[72] It is said that the error upon the face of the record which will sustain a bill of review must consist of the violation of some statute or rule of law or equity, and not merely an impropriety in the decree,[73] and accordingly a mere erroneous decision, such as may be reviewed by appeal or error, is said to be insufficient to support the bill.[74] A bill of review assumes that the court had power to act, and therefore want of jurisdiction which renders the decree void is not ground for the bill.[75] It is good ground that the bill is not sufficient to warrant relief,[76] that the bill was dismissed on an answer not denying the fraud charged and presenting no defense,[77] or that the decree was based on an unwarranted admission of a guardian ad litem.[78] The bill relates to the decree, and errors in the execution thereof are not available.[79] The court will not on a bill of review, consider a ruling resting in the discretion of the chancellor.[80]

make the original decree substantially inequitable,[88] and sufficiently cogent that if it were uncontradicted it would change the result or at least present a close question.[89] It must relate to the decree and not to proceedings in the execution of the decree.[90]

c. Matters Newly Arising. A bill of review lies for new matter arising after the decree was rendered.[91]

d. No Other Grounds Exist. A bill of review proper can be founded on no ground other than error apparent on the face of the record, newly discovered evidence, or new matter arising after the decree.[92] Bills to impeach decrees for fraud or other like causes, while partaking in some respects of the nature of bills of review, are original bills, governed by general equitable principles.[93]

10. Defenses. If defendant in a bill of review suffers the bill to be taken pro confesso, it will like other bills be taken as true.[94] Defendant may demur to the bill,[95] and the demurrer, when the bill is for error apparent, raises only the assignments of error specified in the bill.[96] It does not raise any question going merely to the propriety of permitting the bill to be filed.[97] Nor does it reach the failure to aver payment of costs[98] or performance of the decree.[99] Answering to the merits also waives non-performance of the decree sought to be reviewed.[1] Overruling a demurrer to a bill for error apparent opens the original decree.[2] A plea that a writ of error has been dismissed need not set out the entire record.[3] Defendant may by plea or answer show that the decree complained of was taken by consent,[4] or that the new evidence sought to be offered was not newly discovered.[5] New facts cannot be introduced by answer to a bill for error apparent.[6] It is not necessary to plead the original decree in defense.[7] Failure of plaintiff to give security will not justify a peremptory dismissal of the bill after defendant has allowed the case to proceed.[8]

11. Hearing and Determination. Upon the hearing of a bill of review all the presumptions are in favor of correctness of the decree sought to be reviewed and of regularity of the proceedings in connection therewith.[9] Where the bill of review is for errors apparent on the record the proceedings are similar to those at a hearing on a writ of error.[10] Issues of fact may be referred to a jury.[11] The burden of proof is on plaintiff in the bill of review.[12] The general rules relating to the weight of a responsive answer in equity as evidence apply to the answer to a bill of review.[13] Introduction of newly discovered evidence to prove facts in issue on the former hearing may be allowed; but this allowance rests in the sound discretion of the court, and is to be exercised cautiously and sparingly, and only under circumstances which render it indispensable to the merits and justice of the cause.[14] Upon a bill of review the former decree will not be absolutely annulled, except for some error going to the whole ground of the decree,[15] but will be reversed or corrected only to the extent that it injuriously affects the interest of the party rightfully complaining.[16] In other respects the former decree will remain in full force and effect, for the sustaining of the bill of review will not be allowed to operate in favor of other parties to the former decree not entitled to review it.[17] Nor can the former decree be modified so as to prejudice the rights of third parties interested under it.[18] If the bill of review attacks the former decree on the ground that it is void, this ground failing, the decree cannot be corrected.[19] The findings of the court should point out distinctly the parts of the former decree found incorrect, and should state clearly the several corrections and revisions to be made.[20]

I. THE OFFENSE.

A. Definitions[1] — 1. ESCAPE — a. Loss of Custody. Escape may be defined as the loss, before discharge by due process of law, of the lawful custody of a prisoner, whether voluntarily or negligently suffered.[2]

b. Departure From Custody. It may also be defined as departure by a prisoner from lawful custody before he is discharged by due process of law.[3]

2. AIDING ESCAPE. Aiding an escape may be described as any overt act which is intended to assist, and which may be useful to assist, an attempted or completed departure of a prisoner from lawful custody before he is discharged by due process of law.[4]

B. Elements of Offense — 1. ESCAPE — a. Loss of Custody — (I) WHAT CONSTITUTES LOSS OF CUSTODY. Any loss of physical control even temporarily is a loss of custody,[5] but a discharge which is authorized by law is of course no escape.[6]

1. These crimes have now been generally defined by statute, and modern cases must be examined with reference to local legislation, but such statutes are frequently merely additional to the common law. Hodges v. State, 8 Ala. 55; Com. v. Farrell, 5 Allen (Mass.) 130; State v. Brown, 82 N. C. 585.

2. This, an early authority says, "is properly an escape." 1 Hale P. C. 590.

"A voluntary escape is when any person having a felon lawfully in his custody voluntarily permits him to escape from it or go at large." 1 Hale P. C. 590.

Admitting to bail where bail not authorized.— Where two justices, under the habeas corpus act, admitted a person to bail who was charged with murder in the warrant, it was held that they were guilty of an escape and might very properly be indicted. State v. Arthur, 1 McMull. (S. C.) 456. See also 1 Hale P. C. 596.

3. Bouvier L. Dict.

Other definitions are: "When one who is arrested gains his liberty before he is delivered in due course of law." 1 Russell Crimes 467 [quoted in State v. Ritchie, 107 N. C. 857, 858, 12 S. E. 251; State v. Johnson, 94 N. C. 924, 926].

"The departure of a prisoner from custody." 2 Wharton Cr. L. § 2606 [quoted in State v. Ritchie, 107 N. C. 857, 858, 12 S. E. 251; State v. Johnson, 94 N. C. 924, 926].

4. See infra, I, B, 2.

It is not clear whether at common law there was any such offense distinct from the acts which in general made one an accessory to crime. See 2 Bishop Cr. L. § 1102 [quoting 1 Gabbett Cr. L. pp. 297–303]; 2 Hawkins P. C. c. 17, § 1; c. 29, § 26. The offense has, however, been so generally and so uniformly defined by statute and made a principal as distinguished from an accessorial offense that it may be properly defined and treated as such. Wilson v. State, 61 Ala. 151; Peeler v. State, 3 Tex. App. 533.

Distinguished from rescue.— Robinson v. State, 82 Ga. 535, 544, 9 S. E. 528.

A prisoner imprisoned in the county jail at the time of his aiding the escape of other prisoners confined therein is liable to the penalty prescribed in Wis. Rev. St. c. 167, § 12, for aiding in such escapes. Oleson v. State, 20 Wis. 58.

5. Nall v. State, 34 Ala. 262; 1 Hale P. C. 597, 602.

6. Discharge on bail.— The release of an

(II) LAWFULNESS OF CUSTODY.[7] Defendant must have been at the time of the escape charged by law with the immediate responsibility for the safe-keeping of the prisoner,[8] but it is sufficient that he was an officer de facto.[9] On the other hand if the custody of an officer de jure be unlawful, in the sense that it is void, not merely voidable, he is not liable for an escape.[10] Since one may be lawfully detained in custody pending a determination of guilt, the innocence or subsequent acquittal of the prisoner is not material in determining the officer's liability.[11] Until a lawful transfer of custody the original custodian is responsible.[12]

(III) INTENT—(A) Voluntary Escape. Voluntary escape means wilful loss of custody, and by the better view requires the existence of a specific intent to save the prisoner from punishment,[13] although this view is not universal.[14]

imprisoned debtor pending his application for discharge, under Ill. Rev. St. c. 72, § 8, authorizing the county court to permit him to give bond which shall contain a provision that he will surrender himself to the officer in whose custody he was when it was given, does not amount to an escape, voluntarily or negligently. People v. Hanchett, 111 Ill. 90.

7. See also infra, I, B, 1, b, (II); I, B, 2, d.

8. Act of subordinate.— A sheriff is not criminally liable for escapes by his deputies or jailers (Nall v. State, 34 Ala. 262; Watts v. Com., 99 Va. 872, 39 S. E. 706; Com. v. Lewis, 4 Leigh (Va.) 716; Barthelow v. State, 26 Tex. 175), unless himself at fault (Watts v. Com., 99 Va. 872, 39 S. E. 706. See also infra, I, B, 1, a, (III), (B)), but formerly the sheriff was liable to fine as for a negligent escape for any escape by a jailer (1 Hale P. C. 597).

Mere servants of the custodian are not liable for escapes. State v. Errickson, 32 N. J. L. 421.

Guard or hirer of convicts.— A guard in charge of convicts employed on public works (State v. Johnson, 94 N. C. 924; State v. Sneed, 94 N. C. 806) or one who hires convicts (Porter v. State, 34 Tex. Cr. 364, 30 S. W. 791) may be liable.

9. Thus, although his tenure of office be terminated (1 Hale P. C. 594), although he has not qualified for office (Pentecost v. State, 107 Ala. 81, 18 So. 146; State v. Maberry, 3 Strobh. (S. C.) 144), or although he be only temporarily employed as deputy (Kavanaugh v. State, 41 Ala. 399) he is a lawful custodian.

Even a private individual who arrests a known felon may be liable. 1 Hale P. C. 595.

10. A defect of jurisdiction, such as an unauthorized warrant, will make the custody unlawful, although the warrant was regular on its face. Housh v. People, 75 Ill. 487.

A mere informality in the form of a warrant, however, does not make it void. Martin v. State, 32 Ark. 124.

An error of law in the conduct of a trial does not make the custody void. State v. Garrell, 82 N. C. 580.

An officer cannot set up his own neglect of duty to show that his custody was unlawful. Pentecost v. State, 107 Ala. 81, 18 So. 146; Garver v. Territory, 5 Okla. 342, 49 Pac. 470.

11. Weaver v. Com., 29 Pa. St. 445; Com. v. Miller, 2 Ashm. (Pa.) 61.

The old law on this point is complicated by the severity of punishment of felons. This may account for some apparent exceptions suggested in 1 Hale P. C. 611, 612.

12. 1 Hale P. C. 594.

After arrest.— An officer's custody of a prisoner whom he has arrested upon a warrant and brought before a court for trial does not cease until the prisoner has been discharged or a warrant of commitment made out. Com. v. Morihan, 4 Allen (Mass.) 585. But where a person who is not a regular officer, but is specially deputed, under the statute, to serve a criminal warrant, makes an arrest, and returns the warrant to a justice of the peace, who acts upon the case, his authority is at an end. State v. Dean, 48 N. C. 393.

During trial.— A person on trial for a criminal offense is by operation of law in the custody of the sheriff, although no special or general order be made to that effect; and hence the sheriff is criminally responsible for accused's escape during trial. Hodges v. State, 8 Ala. 55.

After conviction.— It is the duty of a sheriff, on conviction of a defendant who is present at the trial for a misdemeanor, to retain him in custody, and, if the fine and costs be not immediately paid, to hire him out as directed by the judgment; and, if he voluntarily permits him to go at large, he is guilty of a misdemeanor. Griffin v. State, 37 Ark. 437. See also Luckey v. State, 14 Tex. 400.

13. 1 Hale P. C. 596.

A jailer who discharged a prisoner on a written discharge of a magistrate believing it to be legal was held not guilty of the crime of voluntary escape, but of the lesser crime of negligent escape. Meehan v. State, 46 N. J. L. 355.

Proof of an act of a deputy, which the sheriff might have known of if acting with due care, was held not enough to sustain a charge of wilfully permitting an escape. Barthelow v. State, 26 Tex. 175.

14. In re Bucks County Prison, 15 Pa. Co. Ct. 569 (where the fact that a jailer was acting under the orders of a sheriff in permitting prisoners to go at large was held no defense); State v. Manley, 1 Overt. (Tenn.)

(B) Negligent Escape. Although styled in the old common law "negligent escape" it seems that no excuse was recognized, at least in case of escape from confinement, except act of God or the public enemies;[15] and this rule has been sustained in some modern cases of escapes from confinement.[16] On the other hand negligence has been held in other cases to be as usual a question of fact on all the circumstances,[17] and this is frequently so by statute.[18]

b. Departure From Custody — (I) What Constitutes Departure. To constitute this form of escape there must be an actual departure from custody,[19] but the use of force or violence is not a necessary element.[20] The offense must be committed by departure before discharge by due process of law,[21] but such discharge, although for a temporary purpose only, is of course a defense.[22]

(II) Lawfulness and Nature of Custody.[23] It is not a crime to escape from custody, the authority for which is void in law,[24] although the warrant under

See 19 Cent. Dig. tit. "Escape," § 3.

Accidentally throwing down loose bricks placed at the top of a prison wall to impede escape and give alarm is sufficient force. Rex v. Haswell, R. & R. 340.

When accomplished by violence, this is styled "prison breach" (1 Hale P. C. 590. See also State v. Doud, 7 Conn. 384; State v. Brown, 82 N. C. 585; Rex v. Haswell, R. & R. 340), but many cases limit the use of this term to escapes from places of confinement (Com. v. Adams, 3 Pa. Super. Ct. 167). Under statutes at least it has been held that prison breach might be committed by an overt act attempting escape from jail, although unsuccessful. See Com. v. Homer, 5 Metc. (Mass.) 555.

Where a prisoner being in the corridor of a jail unlocked a door between the corridor and one of the cells and thence escaped, it was held an actual breaking on the analogy of decisions in cases of burglary. Randall v. State, 53 N. J. L. 488, 22 Atl. 46. On the other hand, where a convict who was taken with others to work in a stone quarry two miles from the prison made his escape by dropping unseen into a natural crevice in the rock, the opening to which was covered by a companion, which covering was removed by defendant on his departure, it was held not a breaking, since it was accomplished by stratagem and not by force. State v. King, 114 Iowa 413, 87 N. W. 282, 54 L. R. A. 853.

21. But note the reasoning of one case, which seems opposed to the above statement, that since the time for which one was sentenced had expired before rearrest he could not be rearrested as an escaped prisoner. The facts, however, distinguish the use. Scottsboro Corporate Authorities v. Johnston, 121 Ala. 397, 25 So. 809.

Contingent warrant.— Pending the execution of a search warrant on defendant's premises defendant was detained by the officers but escaped. The warrant authorized his arrest only if opium was found. None was found and it was held that he was not in lawful custody and hence not liable to indictment for escape under Hawaiian Pen. Code, c. 29, § 3. Rex v. Sin Fook, 8 Hawaii 185.

Prisoner surrendered by bail.—Where a person at liberty on bail is surrendered to the sheriff by his sureties with the prisoner's consent, the sheriff, without having a copy of the recognizance, cannot lawfully hold him which the prisoner is arrested is fair on its face;[25] but departure from mere custody, if lawful, is sufficient,[26] unless by statute the escape must be from a place of confinement,[27] or from a specified class of confinement.[28] A mere informality in process, however, does not render the custody unlawful,[29] and since one may be lawfully detained in custody pending a determination of guilt,[30] conviction of the original offense is not a condition precedent to a conviction of the escape,[31] and an acquittal on trial for the original offense is no defense to an indictment for the escape, for such custody, although voidable, is not void.[32] A commitment to a state jail under authority of the government of the United States is lawful custody, departure from which is indictable in the state courts.[33]

(III) INTENT. It would seem that there must be a criminal intent to evade the due course of justice.[34] There is accordingly some authority for the proposition that necessity may be considered as an excuse for an escape.[35] Consent in custody; and hence his escape constitutes no offense. State v. Beebe, 13 Kan. 589, 19 Am. Rep. 93. But a person who has been lawfully arrested on mesne process, admitted to bail, and afterward surrendered by his bail to the keeper of the jail, was held lawfully imprisoned within Mass. Gen. St. c. 178, § 46. Com. v. Barker, 133 Mass. 399.

Repealed statute.— A warrant issued under a statute previously repealed is void, and it was held that one confined thereunder might lawfully liberate himself, using no more force than was necessary to accomplish this object. State v. Leach, 7 Conn. 452, 18 Am. Dec. 113.

A chain gang is not a place of confinement under Ga. Pen. Code, § 314. Daniel v. State, 114 Ga. 533, 40 S. E. 805.

A yard suitably fenced and protected and wholly appropriated to the uses of the main institution was held within Mass. Gen. St. c. 178, §§ 6, 7, providing against escapes from a house of correction or yard adjoining or appurtenant thereto, although the yard was not immediately connected with the building. Com. v. Curley, 101 Mass. 24.

A jail was held a prison within the meaning of N. Y. Pen. Code, §§ 85, 92. People v. Johnson, 46 Hun (N. Y.) 667. See also Irvington v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1904) 78 S. W. 928.

The breaking open of a jail for the purpose of escape by a prisoner therein is within Vt. Comp. St. c. 106, § 11, p. 555. State v. Fletcher, 32 Vt. 427.

A village lockup is a jail within Vt. St. § 5094. State v. Dohney, 72 Vt. 260, 47 Atl. 785.

28. A commitment pending trial was held not within the meaning of Mass. Rev. St. § 51 (Com. v. Homer, 5 Metc. (Mass.) 555), but an additional sentence was held such imprisonment (Com. v. Briggs, 5 Metc. (Mass.) 559).

An indefinite term of imprisonment imposed for non-payment of a fine for violation of a city ordinance is not within Kan. Comp. Laws (1881), c. 31, §§ 179, 182, punishing any person confined in a place of confinement for any term less than life who shall break such prison or custody. State v. Chapman, 33 Kan. 134, 5 Pac. 768.

The opposite view in case of escapes of prisoners arrested for felony who were subsequently acquitted on the original charge was advocated by Lord Hale (1 Hale P. C. 611, 612), and in modern times was thought of sufficient authority to require distinguishing (Reg. v. Waters, 12 Cox C. C. 390).

33. Com. v. Ramsey, 1 Brewst. (Pa.) 422. But see contra, Trammel v. State, 111 Ala. 77, 20 So. 631.

34. Thus it has been held no escape where a convict "farmed out" has been placed by his hirer in charge of a third person with whom he remained and worked till the institution of the prosecution (Mills v. State, 41 Tex. Cr. 447, 53 S. W. 107, 55 S. W. 338), or went into another state with the knowledge of his hirer to earn money to pay his hirer (Peoples v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1890) 14 S. W. 352), or left the premises temporarily and without objection by his hirer (Carter v. State, 29 Tex. App. 5, 14 S. W. 350). It should be noted, however, that the preceding cases may be rested on lack of real custody and possibly on local statutes. See also the dissenting opinion of Church, J., in Riley v. State, 16 Conn. 47, the decision in which seems not really opposed to the foregoing proposition.

35. See 1 Hale P. C. 611, where it is said: "If a prison be fired by accident, and there be a necessity to break prison to save his life, this excuseth the felony." But compare State v. Davis, 14 Nev. 439, 444, 33 Am. Rep. 563.

Fear of violence from a third person was held no excuse for retaining a pistol against the will of an arresting officer and by use thereof leaving his custody, since it must be of the jailer, keeper, or other custodian, however, does not operate to negative this intent.[36]

2. AIDING ESCAPE — a. Overt Act. To constitute the offense of aiding escape some active assistance to the prisoner must be rendered,[37] and defendant's act must have been useful for the purpose intended.[38]

b. Intent. Defendant's intent to assist a departure from lawful custody must be proved,[39] even where this offense has been defined by statute without any express provision that such intent is essential.[40] Knowledge of the lawfulness of the custody of the prisoner, or good reason to believe it lawful, has been held essential as a means of showing intent.[41]

c. Attempt by Prisoner. Defendant's offense must be connected with some effort at escape on the part of the prisoner.[42]

d. Lawfulness of Custody.[43] It is not a crime to assist an escape from custody, the authority for which is void in law,[44] and where the statute so requires the assistance must be given to one actually in confinement,[45] or as it is sometimes provided to one who is lawfully detained in the custody of an officer on an accusation for a misdemeanor.[46] A mere informality in process, however, does not presumed that the officer would have protected him from violence. Hinkle v. Com., 66 S. W. 816, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1988.

37. Setting fire to a jail (Luke v. State, 49 Ala. 30, 20 Am. Rep. 269), holding or obstructing a posse in hot pursuit (Perry v. State, 63 Ga. 402), and delivering a crow-bar (Reg. v. Payne, L. Thus a pretended escape for the purpose of detecting defendant made by a prisoner acting in concert with those in charge of him was held not suffieient to make defendant's assistance to him a crime. Rex v. Martin, R. & R. 146. So, although Ala. Necessity of actual escape.— The statute 16 Geo. II, c. 31, which made it a felony to aid or assist any prisoner "to attempt to make his escape from any gaol, although no escape be actually made," was held not to apply to a case of such aiding when escape ensued. The offense of assisting a felon in making an actual escape was felony before, and therefore did not seem to fall within the view or intention of the legislature when they made this statute. render the custody unlawful,[47] nor does the fact that the custodian was merely an officer de facto.[48] The prisoner's guilt or innocence of the original offense is not material.[49]

II. THE PROSECUTION.

A. Jurisdiction. Jurisdiction over the place where the offense was committed gives authority to prosecute regardless of the jurisdiction by which the prisoner was sentenced to his original confinement.[50]

B. Indictment or Information[51]— 1. In General. The indictment must charge every necessary ingredient of the offense with reasonable certainty.[52] An indictment following the language of the statute defining the offense is usually sufficient,[53] but it has been held not sufficient where the statute obviously assumed, but did not specify, certain essential elements which should be set forth in the indictment.[54] Where general terms are defined by statute, the use of such general terms is sufficient without adding the details comprised in that definition.[55] The words "feloniously or unlawfully" are not necessary in the absence of those terms from a statute defining the offense.[56]

2. For Escape — a. Essential Averments — (I) Lawfulness of Custody. Although it has been held otherwise,[57] an indictment or information for escape should aver facts from which the lawfulness of the custody of the prisoner may

To assist one in escaping when held for having threatened to commit a public offense is as much a violation of the statute prohibiting assistance to one held upon "any criminal charge" as though he stood charged with its actual commission. State v. Bates, 23 Iowa 96. But under a New York statute making it an offense for aiding a prisoner detained for a felony to escape, no offense is committed by aiding and assisting a person committed "on suspicion of having been accessory to the breaking of the house of S., with intent to commit a felony," such committal not being a distinct and certain charge of felony. People v. Washburn, 10 Johns. 160.

51. Indictment or information generally see Indictments and Informations.

Whether indictment or information.— The provision of N. Y. Const. art. 1, § 6, that "no person shall be held to answer for a capital or other infamous crime . . . unless on presentment or indictment of a grand jury," was held not to affect the remedy by information to enforce punishment already due under sentence. Haggerty v. People, 6 Lans. 332, 346, 347. But under 1 Va. Rev. Code 629, prescribing a punishment for convicts escaping from prison, the proceedings must be by indictment not by information. appear, but general averments that the prisoner was "duly committed" to custody[58] or "unlawfully" escaped[59] have been held sufficient. It has been held unnecessary to allege that the custodian was an officer[60] or received the prisoner in his capacity as jailer;[61] that the prisoner was in custody by virtue of a warrant;[62] the particulars of the crime, arrest, or trial of the prisoner;[63] the jurisdiction of the court which convicted;[64] the term for which he was convicted, or the cause for which a convict was out under guard;[65] that a copy of the judgment had been handed to the warden of the prison;[66] or, in case of convicts "farmed out," that the term of hire had not expired[67] or that he was hired to remain in the county.[68]

(II) Intent. Since voluntary and negligent escapes are distinct offenses, an indictment for wilfully and negligently permitting an escape is bad for duplicity,[69] and an indictment charging that defendant "did lawfully, voluntarily, and unjustly permit" the prisoner to escape is insufficient allegation of a voluntary escape;[70] but an indictment charging that the escape was unlawfully and negligently permitted by defendant is a sufficient indictment for a negligent escape.[71] A conviction for negligent escape has been allowed under an indictment for voluntary escape, on the ground that the latter offense included the former, but it was questioned whether the reverse could be permitted.[72] An allegation that the custodian knew the prisoner's guilt has been deemed unnecessary.[73] An information alleging that an escape of a convict "farmed out" was unlawfully and wilfully made is sufficient without adding that it was without the consent of the hirer.[74]

b. Surplusage. It is unnecessary to aver, in an indictment alleging that a constable permitted a prisoner to escape and go at large, that the prisoner did escape and go at large.[75]

3. For Aiding Escape — a. Lawfulness of Custody. Enough must be set forth to show that the prisoner was in lawful custody,[76] but the original indictment need not be set forth;[77] and the particular felony with which the prisoner was charged,[78] and the particular court in which he was convicted[79] have been held immaterial. Where the punishment for aiding an escape depends on the gravity of the offense for which the prisoner was confined, it is necessary to allege the nature of that offense.[80]

b. Description of Means Employed. Under some statutes it has been held that means employed need not be set out,[81] and an indictment for assisting an escape by holding one of the officer's posse sufficiently describes the means without giving the names of the individuals held.[82] On the other hand it has been held that it must be alleged that defendant's acts were useful to assist the prisoner in escape,[83] unless this sufficiently appears from the acts set forth.[84] Such allegation has, however, been dispensed with where it was not obvious that the acts alleged were useful, although proof of it was deemed essential.[85] Where statutes limit the offense to "conveying into jail" allegations that certain articles were conveyed "unto" the jail[86] or were "furnished" the prisoner[87] were held insufficient. Where the statute makes separate offenses of attempting to set a prisoner at liberty and conveying into a jail any tool adapted to aid his escape, an attempt to do the latter was held not indictable under the former section.[88]

c. Attempt of Prisoner. While it should appear that the prisoner made an attempt himself, an allegation that defendant aided an attempt to escape sufficiently implies that there was such attempt.[89]

d. Intent. Defendant's knowledge that the prisoner was in lawful custody should be alleged to show criminal intent,[90] but this is implied from an allegation that he was in the custody of a public officer.[91] Under some statutes, however, this allegation has been held immaterial.[92] An allegation that defendant intentionally assisted a prisoner to escape by drilling a hole is enough without averring that the drilling was done with intent to facilitate an escape.[93]

C. Evidence — 1. Burden of Proof and Presumptions. Negligence of a custodian, it has been held, is implied from the fact of an escape, and defendant has in that case the burden of showing that the escape was not negligent.[94] There is no presumption of guilty knowledge in a prosecution for voluntary escape.[95]

2. Admissibility. Subject to the general rules of evidence governing and relating to competency and relevancy[96] in prosecutions of this character evidence has been held to be admissible which tends to establish or show any of the essential elements of the offense, such as the identity of defendant,[97]

his intent,[98] or the lawfulness of the custody.[99] So evidence is admissible to show the means employed in aiding one to escape.[1]

D. Variance. Failure to prove the date[2] or place[3] of escape or that the escape was by force as alleged[4] has been held no variance. Where the punishment depends on the gravity of the original offense, an allegation that the prisoner was confined on a charge of felony was not proved by evidence of a mere theft.[5] The identity of defendant in escape with the person originally committed must be shown.[6]

E. Trial — 1. Time of Trial. One who escapes while serving a term in the state prison may before the expiration of his term be tried for such escape,[7] and an escaped convict on recaption may be held until opportunity is given for a prosecution for the escape.[8]

2. Questions For Court or Jury. On trial for aiding escape the fact of custody and of its legality has been held to be a question for the jury under proper instructions from the court as to the rules of law by which to distinguish illegal custody.[9]

3. Instructions. A charge that certain documents were sufficient proof of lawful custody was held not a charge on the weight of evidence, but a proper explanation of its legal effect.[10] In determining an officer's negligence it was held not error to charge the jury that they might consider the physical strength of the prisoners and the gravity of the crimes with which they were charged and that it was the officer's duty to use bolts and bars in a manner likely to prevent escape.[11] If the indictment alleged the particular manner of aiding an escape it was error to charge that the offense was proved if the jury believed defendant in any manner aided escape.[12] To read to the jury a statute relating only to the Weight and sufficiency.— Proof of the use of a saw on cell fastenings in a manner indicating a purpose to open it has been held enough to convict one of aiding an escape (Simmons v. State, 88 Ga. 169, 14 S. E. 122); but where it only appeared that the prisoner asked defendant for his knife and defendant threw it into the cell, it was held not enough to prove intent (Poncio v. State, 28 Tex. offense of aiding prisoners to escape from an officer, when defendant was charged with the offense of carrying into jail articles useful to aid the escape of prisoners therefrom, was held error.[13]

4. VERDICT. On an indictment for feloniously aiding escape a verdict of negligently permitting escape was held an acquittal.[14]

F. Punishment — 1. IN GENERAL. Where offenses of this character have been defined or modified by statute, statutory punishments are usually provided; at common law the punishment depends upon whether the offense is a felony or a misdemeanor.[15] Where the prisoners aided to escape were confined for offenses of different degrees and a heavier penalty was provided for aiding the escape of a prisoner charged with the greater offense, on conviction defendant was liable to the greater penalty and to that alone.[16]

2. TERM.[17] Where the prison was not broken and no actual violence done the court did not inflict punishment exceeding that from which the offender had escaped.[18]

3. PLACE OF CONFINEMENT. As an offense at common law in Massachusetts no prison breach could be punished by a sentence to hard labor in the state prison.[19] Imprisonment in the jail from which defendant escaped was deemed not requisite.[20]

I. DEFINITION AND NATURE.

Escheat is an obstruction of the course of descent, and a consequent determination of the tenure by some unforeseen contingency; in which case the land naturally results back, by a kind of reversion, to the original grantor or lord of the fee.[1] Under the feudal system escheat was strictly an incident of tenure and imported an extension of tenure.[2] In this country escheat in the feudal sense existed in a few of the early colonies, but has not prevailed since the revolution,[3] and is now very generally regulated by statute.[4] The term has come to signify merely a falling of a decedent's estate into the general property of the state upon his death intestate and without lawful heirs,[5] and is applied indifferently to all rights of property of whatever nature.[6]

II. GROUNDS OF ESCHEAT.

Since the common-law disabilities of aliens[7] and bastards[8] have been greatly relaxed and modified by statute, and the English doctrine of corruption of blood

Escheat is distinguished from forfeiture in that the former was always to the lord of the fee as a consequence of the feudal connection, while the latter was always to the crown and inflicted upon a principle of public policy. 4 Kent. Comm. 426; Wright Ten. 117, 118.
Escheat is also distinguished from a reversion in that land escheated to the lord propter defectum tenentis, when a tenant in fee simple died without heirs; while on the other hand, on the death of the tenant for life, or the death without issue of a tenant in tail, the land reverted to the donor who had created that tenant's estate. 2 Pollock & M. and forfeiture for crime very generally if not universally abolished,[9] dying intestate without heirs is now practically the only ground of escheat to be considered.[10] There are a few instances of escheat which have arisen in this country under special statutes.[11]

III. PROPERTY SUBJECT TO ESCHEAT.

A. In General. Personal property never escheated in the original and technical sense of the term.[12] But in this country escheat applies to personalty as well as realty,[13] and generally to all rights of property of whatever nature.[14]

B. Equitable Estates. In England it was laid down by a very early case that equitable estates would not escheat,[15] and this decision was followed by the later

C. Reversions and Remainders. A remainder or reversion will escheat, as well as an estate in possession.[20] A vested remainder will escheat subject to the interest of the life-tenant before the termination of the life-estate,[21] but a contingent remainder will not.[22]

IV. TO WHOM PROPERTY ESCHEATS.

A. In England. Escheat in England as an incident of feudal tenure was always to the lord of the fee,[23] which would be to the king only where the tenant was a tenant in capite.[24] In the absence of a mesne lord the escheat is to the crown.[25]

B. In United States. In this country there are no feudal tenures, and property escheats directly to the state as the sovereign power within whose jurisdicheirs the estate would not escheat, but that the trustee would hold absolutely.

tion it is situated,[26] unless it has by statute directed otherwise.[27] In some states the statutes provide that the escheat shall be to the county[28] or town[29] where the property is situated. Land held by grant from the general government in a territory escheats to the United States[30] unless prior to the escheat the territory has been admitted as a state.[31]

C. In Canada. In Canada property escheats to the province in which it is situated and not to the Dominion.[32]

V. RELEASE AND WAIVER.

The state may through its legislature release its claim to property to which it would be entitled by escheat,[33] or during the pendency of escheat proceedings may order an abatement of the proceedings and release all interest in the property to the parties claiming adversely.[34] Under the feudal system of tenures the right to enforce an escheat might be waived by the lord of the fee.[35]

VI. PROCEEDINGS TO ENFORCE ESCHEAT.

A. Necessity For Proceeding. In most jurisdictions it is held that property, the title to which fails for want of heirs or devisees, escheats immediately upon the death of the owner, and that no inquest or office or other judicial proceeding is necessary.[36] In other jurisdictions a proceeding is either required by statute[37] or is held to be necessary because of a presumption that the decedent left heirs.[38] In all cases, however, where the escheat is claimed on the ground of a defeasible title in the adverse claimant, there must be a judicial proceeding,[39] or other notorious act equivalent thereto;[40] and the same seems to be true where there is any adverse claimant in possession,[41] although the proceeding may not be essential to the vesting of the state's title.[42]

B. Nature and Form of Proceeding. The proceeding to enforce an escheat is in the nature of an inquest of office.[43] The procedure is now generally regulated by statute,[44] and when so regulated the right must be established in the manner provided,[45] and all the requirements of the statute substantially complied with.[46] But after the state has established her right to the property she may pursue any remedy to obtain possession of it, whether it be a remedy existing at common law or given by statute.[47]

D. Time to Institute Proceedings and Limitations. Where the statutes allow a certain period for persons claiming as heirs to appear and assert their title, the state cannot maintain proceedings and enforce an escheat until the expiration of this period.[49] Escheat proceedings cannot be maintained pending an administration of the estate;[50] nor can proceedings to escheat a fund in the hands of a trustee be maintained until the trustee's account has been settled and the condition of the fund ascertained.[51] As the assertion of the state's right to an escheat is an act of sovereignty, laches or the ordinary statutes of limitations will not bar a recovery;[52] but there are statutes relating expressly to escheat proceedings.[53]

E. Parties — 1. Who May Institute Proceedings. Escheat proceedings must be instituted by and in the name of the state,[54] acting through its attorney-general,[55] or an escheator,[56] or other public officer authorized to conduct such proceedings.[57]

2. Who May Contest Proceedings. Any person in possession of the property in question,[58] or claiming an interest therein adverse to that of the state,[59] may appear and contest the proceedings.

F. Citation and Appearance. In some jurisdictions the statutes require that in escheat proceedings a notice or citation shall issue to all persons interested in the estate to appear and answer;[60] and when so required the statutes must be substantially complied with.[61] The judgment is not binding as to persons interested who are not brought into court by any sort of publication or other service of citation,[62] but the validity of the proceedings is not affected as to any person appearing voluntarily without formal notice.[63]

G. Pleading — 1. Information. The information must allege all the facts which are essential to the acquisition of the state's title,[64] and negative the existence of any conditions under which the title might be in another.[65] In some cases the statutes set out specifically what allegations the information must contain and these requirements must be complied with.[66]

2. Information as Counter-Claim. The state may come in as a party defendant in an action between adverse claimants for the property in question and file the information as a counter-claim.[67]

3. Traverse — a. In General. The traverse may be general or special and may extend to all or be limited to one or more of the facts necessary to support the inquisition.[68] The effect of a traverse is to bar the claim of the state until the issue is determined by trial.[69]

b. General Denial. Under the code system of pleading the traverser may give in evidence under the general denial any defense either legal or equitable.[70]

H. Evidence — 1. Presumptions and Burden of Proof. The law presumes that a decedent left heirs capable of inheriting,[71] and it is incumbent upon the state to rebut this presumption by proof.[72] While mere absence may create a presumption of death, it will not create a presumption that the decedent died intestate and without heirs, and other circumstances must be affirmatively shown from which such a presumption may be fairly drawn.[73] Where a traverse is filed to an inquest the weight of authority seems to be that the party traversing is considered in the character of a plaintiff and is bound to make out affirmatively a good title in himself,[74] but the authorities are conflicting and it has been expressly held that on a traverse of an inquest of office found on behalf of the people the traverser is to be considered as a defendant.[75]

2. ADMISSIBILITY. Where a question of pedigree is involved hearsay evidence is admissible.[76] Where actual seizin at the death of the decedent is essential to an escheat, evidence that the decedent was insane at the time he executed a deed of bargain and sale is admissible on the part of the state to show that the seizin was not divested.[77]

3. WEIGHT AND SUFFICIENCY. The evidence of the state must establish all the facts essential to the right claimed.[78] So the state must prove the death of the person whose property is claimed or facts from which the law will presume that he is dead,[79] and also that he died without heirs,[80] and without devising the property in question.[81]

I. Trial and Inquest — 1. RIGHT TO OPEN AND CLOSE. The traverser has the right to open and close the argument before the jury.[82]

2. NONSUIT. It is improper to grant a nonsuit in escheat proceedings where a traverse is filed, as there should always be a verdict of a jury finally determining the issue of fact raised.[83]

3. FINDING OF INQUEST. The inquest must find that the decedent died intestate and without heirs or any known kindred,[84] and any other fact which under the statutes of the particular state is essential to an escheat.[85]

VII. EFFECT OF ESCHEAT.

A. In General. A judgment in escheat proceedings is conclusive evidence of the state's title against all persons having either actual or constructive notice of the proceedings.[86] Escheat proceedings based upon the death of the owner of the property are if such person be alive entirely null and void;[87] and where the escheat is on the ground of alienage the judgment will not divest the title of a grantee under a deed of bargain and sale duly executed and recorded before the inquest.[88] If an estate is declared escheat after an order for its distribution has been made the administrator of the distributee has the right to receive and retain control of the fund, and after the payment of debts to the creditors he will hold the balance for the state.[89]

B. As to Creditors. The state takes escheated property charged with all the valid debts and liabilities of the intestate,[90] and creditors may enforce such claims against the property in the hands of the state,[91] provided they are presented before being barred by the statutes of limitations.[92] The escheat statutes usually expressly provide that the rights of creditors shall not be prejudiced.[93] In the absence of such provisions there is some conflict of authority as to whether the general statutes making the property of decedents assets for the payment of debts will authorize the sale of escheated property for this purpose,[94] or whether it is necessary that there should be a statute referring expressly to escheated property.[95]

C. As to Heirs. The escheat statutes usually protect the rights of heirs by providing a certain period within which persons claiming as such may come in and establish their title to the property;[96] but no person can take advantage of such statutes who was not a legally qualified heir at the time of his ancestor's death.[97]

D. To Transfer Title — 1. When Title Vests. As previously stated the law differs in the different jurisdictions as to the necessity for a judicial proceeding to establish an escheat.[98] If no proceeding is necessary, the title of course vests in the state immediately on the death of the owner.[99] Where an inquest is held to be necessary some of the cases hold that title does not vest in the state until after the proceeding,[1] while others hold that it vests at once, although a proceeding may be required by statute,[2] or may be necessary to put the state in possession against an adverse claimant.[3] In the case of an escheat on the ground of a defeasible title a proceeding is always necessary,[4] and no title vests in the state until after the proceeding is had.[5]

2. NATURE AND EXTENT OF STATE'S TITLE. The state takes the title which the former owner had and in the same condition, with all the privileges and appurtenances and subject to all liens and encumbrances.[6]

VIII. DISPOSITION OF ESCHEATED PROPERTY.

A. In General. In some of the states there are constitutional or statutory provisions that escheated property or the proceeds of its sale shall belong to the public schools[7] or state university;[8] and where a constitution so provides the legislature cannot divert the same to any other purpose.[9] Some of the statutes require that escheated lands shall be publicly sold, and in such cases they cannot be disposed of by grant.[10] Land which has escheated is not vacant land and cannot be granted,[11] or located[12] as such.

B. By Grant — 1. IN GENERAL. Except in jurisdictions where escheated property is appropriated to a particular purpose,[13] the state may dispose of it by grant,[14] but not under common warrants as vacant lands.[15] The grant may be made before any inquest of office or other judicial proceeding,[16] except in cases where such a proceeding is necessary to vest title in the state.[17]

In Maryland the right of granting escheated lands is vested by statute in the commissioner of the general land-office (Armstrong v. Bittinger, 47 Md. 103), but the grants are made on special escheat warrants (Jones v. Badley, 4 Md. Ch. 167).

17. Maynard v. Maynard, 36 Hun (N. Y.) 227, holding that where an escheat is claimed upon the ground of a defeasible title, the state acquires no title and can convey none until after it has been established by a judicial proceeding.

2. What Passes. An escheat grant relates to and operates to pass the whole of the original tract escheated,[18] unless a contrary intention clearly appears;[19] but it will not pass title to land named in the grant which was not in fact subject to escheat at the time of the grant,[20] even though it should afterward become escheat.[21]

3. When Grantee's Title Commences. Where a grant is made under an escheat warrant the grantee's title commences from the date of the warrant, and the patent, when granted, relates back to that date.[22] Where a subsequent warrant is taken out by another person he takes only a defeasible title subject to be defeated by a compliance with the law on the part of the person taking the first warrant and the issuance of a patent to him.[23]

4. Nature and Extent of Grantee's Title. Where escheated land is regranted the grantee takes the title in the same condition as it devolved upon the state, and therefore with the same privileges and appurtenances and subject to the same liens and encumbrances as in the hands of the person from whom it escheated.[24] An escheat grant is prima facie evidence of the grantee's title,[25] and that the land granted was liable to escheat.[26]

5. Priority of Escheat Grant Over Mesne Grant. An escheat grant relates back to the original grant escheated, and will overreach and defeat any intervening grants to other persons obtained under the general law.[27] The existence of a mesne grant, however, where there has been no fraud practised on the state, and the grantee has taken and paid for the land in good faith upon the supposition that it was vacant, is sufficient ground for refusing to issue a subsequent grant on an escheat warrant.[28]

The lord proprietor of the province of Maryland could not grant an escheated estate until after he had revested it in himself by entry. Kelly v. Greenfield, 2 Harr. & M. (Md.) 121.

In New York it was held by an early case as a general principle that a grant before office found could convey no title (Jackson v. Adams, 7 Wend. 367), but this decision has been expressly disapproved elsewhere (Colgan v. McKeon, 24 N. J. L. 566), and appears to be impliedly overruled by a later decision in the same state (McCaughal v. Ryan, 27 Barb. 376).

I. DEFINITION.

An escrow[1] is a written instrument,[2] which by its terms imports a legal obligation, deposited[3] by the grantor, promisor, or obligor, or his agent with a stranger or third person, that is, a person not a party to the instrument, such as the grantee, promisee, or obligee,[4] to be kept by the depositary until the performance of a condition or the happening of a certain event[5] and then to be delivered over to take effect.[6]

1. Derivation.— The word "escrow" which by apheresis is also "scrow" seems to have come through the French. The word "scroll" is of the same origin, being written in early modern English as "scrowl," "scrole," "scrolle," and sometimes "escroll." Century Dict. See also Harkreader v. Clayton, 56 Miss. 383, 391, 31 Am. Rep. 369; Tyler v. Cate, 29 Oreg. 515, 525, 45 Pac. 800; 4 Comyns Dig. 263; Perkins Conv. § 138.

2. Kinds of instruments which may be escrows see infra, II, B, 2, b.

3. Many of the cases, particularly the older ones, use the term "deliver" instead of "deposit" to express the tradition of the instrument to the depositary. In this article the word "deposit," whether verb or noun, is used to express only the placing of the instrument in charge of the depositary. "Deliver" and "delivery" are reserved for the final delivery of the instrument upon which it is to have legal effect. See infra, note 6, where the definitions and illustrations there set out will show the frequent confusion of the two expressions. For a clean-cut, exact use of "deliver" see Hoyt v. McLagan, 87 Iowa 746, 55 N. W. 18, where the court held that certain instruments left with a third person upon certain conditions were "left in escrow and not delivered." See also Clark v. Gifford, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 311, 313, where the meanings of the terms "delivery" and "deposit" are carefully distinguished.

II. THE ESCROW AGREEMENT OR TRANSACTION.

A. In General. In the great majority of cases, the instrument deposited, together with the stipulation as to the condition or the event upon performance or happening of which the instrument is to take effect, constitutes a contract; indeed by the general rule there must be a valid existing agreement between the parties, containing all the elements of a contract;[7] and as in other contracts the England.— The delivery of a deed as an escrow is said to be "where one doth make and seal a deed and deliver it unto a stranger until certain conditions be performed, and then to be delivered to him to whom the deed is made to take effect as his deed. And so a man may deliver a deed and such delivery is good." Sheppard Touchst. 58. See 4 Comyns Dig. 263 note.

The term is used to express the conditional execution and deposit of a written instrument in such way. See Century Dict. Thus, "an escrow is defined to be 'a conditional delivery of a deed to a stranger, and not to the grantee himself, until certain conditions shall be performed, and then it is to be delivered to the grantee.'" Firemen's Ins. Co. v. McMillan, 29 Ala. 147, 160 [citing 2 Blackstone Comm. 387; Bouvier L. Dict.; Coke Litt. 31, 36; Jacob L. Dict.; 2 Rolle Abr. 25; 1 Stephen Comm. 459]. "The conditional delivery of a deed or instrument in writing which is not to be operative or take effect as an absolute delivery until certain conditions shall be performed, is a delivery in escrow." Baum v. Parkhurst, 26 Ill. App. 128, 130. Where persons executing to each other instruments for the conveyance of land leave them in the hands of a third person until they get proper abstracts of title, reserving to themselves the determination of whether the abstracts are proper, they will be held to have been left in escrow, and not delivered, although each party took immediate possession under the deed to him. Hoyt v. McLagan, 87 Iowa 746, 55 N. W. 18. In pursuance of a contract between certain parties, an instrument of conveyance executed by one of them was deposited with a third person for delivery to the other, who was the grantee therein, upon a fulfilment by him of the terms of the contract. It was held that the instrument was deposited in escrow. Knopf v. Hansen, 37 Minn. 215, 33 N. W. 781. An escrow is a conditional delivery to a stranger, to be kept by him until certain conditions are performed and then to be delivered to the grantee. Patrick v. McCormick, 10 Nebr. 1, 5, 4 N. W. 312, paraphrasing 4 Kent Comm. 454. A deposit in escrow is the deposit of the deed with a stranger with the direction that he shall deliver to the grantee upon the fulfilment by the latter of some condition, as the payment of a sum of money, the performance of some obligation, or upon the happening of some event, the grantor reserving the right to reclaim the deed if the condition is not fulfilled or the event does not happen. Wier v. Batdorf, 24 Nebr. 83, 38 N. W. 22. Deposit as an escrow is a delivery on some collateral condition consistent with the contract, on the happening of which condition the contract is to take effect. State v. Perry, Wright (Ohio) 662. Defendant listed mining property with an agent, who negotiated a sale to a corporation to be formed, of which such agent was to be a member. L, one of the proposed incorporators, paid defendant half of the purchase-price, the balance to be secured by mortgage due in one year. Defendant executed an instrument of conveyance to L, and sent it to the agent, with instructions to deliver it when the mortgage was given. After several months, the mortgage not having been given, defendant rescinded the sale. It was held that the leaving of the deed with the agent was a deposit in escrow only. Tyler v. Cate, 29 Oreg. 515, 45 Pac. 800. See also Day v. Lacasse, 85 Me. 242, 27 Atl. 124; Spring Garden Bank v. Hurlings Lumber Co., 32 W. Va. 357, 9 S. E. 243, 3 L. R. A. 583.

Another use of the term is to express the custody in which such a writing so deposited is. See Century Dict.

consideration may be either a benefit to the promisor or a detriment to the promisee.[8] There is, however, a class of cases where no contract exists,[9] as where an instrument for the conveyance of land is deposited with a third person to be delivered to the grantee upon the death of the grantor.[10]

B. Component Parts — 1. In General. The contract is composed of two elements: (1) The instrument deposited;[11] and (2) the condition or conditions stipulated.[12]

2. The Instruments — a. Requisites. The instrument must be intended to take effect eventually upon delivery.[13] An escrow for the conveyance of land should be signed and acknowledged,[14] and should be perfect and complete in all other respects;[15] in fact, it differs from a deed in one particular only — it is deposited conditionally instead of being delivered.[16]

b. Kinds. The term "escrow" was originally applied to instruments for the conveyance of land,[17] but is now applied to all written instruments so deposited.[18]

Thus an instrument purporting to convey land delivered to grantee to be deposited by him with a third person until grantor returns from a journey, and in that event to be redelivered to grantor, is not an escrow because there is no event in which it is to be delivered to the grantee. 16. "Not only must there be sufficient parties, a proper subject-matter and a consideration, but the parties must have actually contracted. When the instrument purports to be a conveyance of land, the grantor must have sold, and the grantee must have purchased the land. A proposal to sell, or a proposal to buy, though stated in writing, will not be sufficient. The minds of the parties must have met, the terms have been agreed upon, and both must have assented to the instrument as a conveyance of the land, which the grantor would then have delivered, and the grantee received, except for the agreement then made that it be delivered to a third person, to be kept until some specified condition is performed by the grantee, and thereupon to be delivered to him by such third person. The actual contract of sale on the one side, and of purchase on the other, is as essential to constitute the instrument an escrow, as that it be executed by the grantor; and until both parties have definitely assented to the contract, the instrument executed by the proposed grantor, though in form a deed, is neither a deed nor an escrow; and it makes no difference whether the instrument remains in the possession of the nominal grantor or is placed in the hands of a third person, pending the proposals for sale or purchase." Purchase-money for land was deposited in bank under an agreement that it was to be paid to grantor upon his removing a cloud upon the title. Strict compliance with the condition was required by the court as in an

It has been held to include both sealed and unsealed instruments,[19] as mortgages[20] and bonds,[21] promissory notes,[22] life-insurance policies,[23] licenses for the use of patents,[24] certificates of stock,[25] or subscriptions to stock.[26]

3. The Condition or Event — a. Necessity — (i) In General. As the stipulated condition or event which must be performed or must happen before the instrument can take effect is what marks the difference between the escrow and the completely executed instrument, as the deed, bond, or note,[27] the condition must be one in fact which will prevent the operation of the instrument until complied with;[28] a mere understanding[29] or expectation or promise[30] that something will be done is insufficient. As a general rule the condition must be part of a contract between the parties.[31]

(ii) Whether a Condition or an Event Necessary. By some authorities a distinction is made between instruments the final delivery of which depends upon the performance of a condition and those instruments the final delivery of which awaits merely the lapse of time, or the happening of a contingency or event; in the latter case the effect of the instrument is not suspended, but it operates at once.[32]

b. Form. By some of the old authorities it is said that it is necessary that the form of the words used in the deposit of an instrument must be "apt and proper."[33] If this ever was necessary, it is absolutely certain that it is not

St. § 3128, which allows a married woman to bind her separate estate. The court did not decide whether the legal title passed or not, but it adopted the distinction made by Shaw, C. J., in Foster v. Mansfield, 3 Metc. (Mass.) 412, 37 Am. Dec. 154. See infra, II, B, 3, c, (II).

33. The form set out is as follows: "I deliver this to you as an escrow, to deliver to the party as my deed, upon condition that he deliver to you, 20*l* for me," or upon any required now. The term "escrow" need never be used;[34] nor on the other hand will the use of the term necessarily make the instrument an escrow,[35] although it evinces more clearly and distinctly than any other the actual intention of the parties.[36] It need not be in writing.[37] In fact no particular form of words is necessary, but the terms of the escrow stipulations are to be derived from all the circumstances.[38]

c. Kinds[39] — (i) In General. Conditions may be of many different kinds.[40] The most common condition seems to be the payment of money by the grantee or obligee.[41] An arrangement between the obligors of an instrument, as a bond or note, that it is not to take effect until some other person or persons become Erecting building on land, and giving purchase-money mortgage.— Where the evidence shows that an instrument for the conveyance of land was placed with a third person for delivery on condition that he would erect a house on the land to be conveyed and give back a purchase-money mortgage therefor, it is error to refuse to find that the instrument was deposited as an escrow. After making the devise in a formal manner the testator added, "under the following conditions, to wit: That she pay for the same one thousand dollars, with interest . . . and I have left a deed for the same in the hands of my executors, to be delivered to her after my decease, upon her paying or arranging the said sum, the said sum to go into the hands of my executors as part of my estate and divided among my legal representatives as hereinafter set forth. Held, that the grantee was not to take by virtue of the will but by virtue of testator's deed which was left in escrow and became void, when the grantee refused to pay the price named." Smith's Estate, 6 Kulp (Pa.) 76.

An instrument for the conveyance of land deposited as an escrow is equivalent to a mortgage to secure the first payment when the condition is that it shall remain an escrow until the first payment is made and then to be delivered as the deed of the parties. Brown v. Gilman, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 255, 4 L. ed. 564. But where the grantee accepts a deed as a present operative conveyance to secure money advanced there is not a deposit of an escrow. Whelan v. Tobener, 71 Mo. App. 361. In Alabama it was said that the incidents of a mortgage attach to an escrow which is obligated upon it is generally considered to supply a condition which will make the instrument deposited an escrow;[42] although this has been said not to be a condition of an escrow but merely a matter of defense.[43]

(11) Death of Grantor or Obligor. Whether the death of the grantor is an event upon which the instrument can assume the conditional character of an escrow is doubtful. There are authorities which hold that such an event is sufficient to hold the instrument in suspense as an escrow,[44] and that upon the death of the grantor the title passes to the grantee and that then and thereafter the title is deemed to have vested as of the time of the deposit.[45] The greater weight of authority appears to take the view that the death of the grantor is not an event which can suspend the passing of the title to the grantee.[46] Some of these author-not to be delivered until the payment of all the purchase-money and that the grantor may proceed in equity to have a lien declared on the land, and a decree for its sale to pay the purchase-money. Suddeth v. Knight, (1893) 14 So. 475.

43. "The question of delivery as an escrow, or otherwise, arises properly only between grantor and grantee, obligor and obligee, payor and payee, regarding all those of one character upon the instrument as one party, and those of the other character as the other party; and the doctrines springing out of the question are applied to instruments completed ready for delivery to the party to whom they are to be executed . . . But there is another class of cases, not properly involving doctrines touching the delivery of escrows, into which, however, the language of the cases relative to such delivery has been introduced, where the law is not so well settled. The class of cases to which we refer consists of those wherein the several persons composing the party of obligors have arrangements among themselves, or some of them, that the instrument shall not be delivered to the other party — the obligee — till the instrument is completed according to arrangements among themselves, all being of one party, obligors. But the question arising in these cases more properly is, when can the obligors defend against an instrument delivered to the obligee by some of the obligors without the consent of others, before it was perfected according to agreement among themselves? Defend because the instrument delivered was an imperfect one? And these cases may divide themselves into four classes: 1. Those where the instrument delivered is commercial paper. 2. Where the instrument delivered is not commercial paper, but something appears upon its face indicating that the instrument is incomplete. 3. Where the instrument is not commercial paper, and nothing appears upon its face indicating that it is not complete. 4. Where independent of appearance and character of the instrument, the obligee takes it with knowledge, &c." Berry v. Anderson, 22 Ind. 36, 42. See Goff v. Bankston, 35 Miss. 518, 525, where the court said that a plea was not tendered as an escrow. "At best, it amounts only to a special plea of non est factum, depending for its efficacy upon the alleged facts, which, if the obligor attempted to enforce payment of the bond, would be an act of fraud upon his part."

W. 1114, which apparently takes the same view as Hathaway v. Payne, supra, although the court cites Foster v. Mansfield, 3 Metc. (Mass.) 412, 37 Am. Dec. 154, as authority, and that case does not take quite the same view as Hathaway v. Payne, supra.

To the objection that under this rule a freehold in futuro will be created the court said, in Nottbeck v. Wilks, 4 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 315, 317: "Since the adoption of the Revised Statutes, whatever may have been the old technical difficulties, a freehold estate may be created to commence at a future day, provided its creation do not suspend the absolute power of alienation for a longer period than the 'established rules' allow."

46. Stewart v. Stewart, 5 Conn. 317, 321 (upon the argument of the case, it was contended on the one hand that the instrument in this case was an escrow, upon the other a deed. The court did not discuss this question, but was concerned with the question whether the instrument was a devise or a deed and came to the conclusion that it was a deed taking effect "from the first and only delivery, and consummated by the death of the grantor"); Belden v. Carter, 4 Day (Conn.) 66, 4 Am. Dec. 185; Jenkinson v. Brooks, 119 Mich. 108, 77 N. W. 640; Latham v. Udell, 38 Mich. 238 (in both of which Michigan cases it was held that an instrument for the conveyance of land left by the grantor with a third person with directions to have it handed over to the grantee immediately after his death was valid. The question in the case

ities say that the instrument when left with the third person becomes a deed in præsenti and that when delivered to the grantee after the death of the grantor it takes effect by relation from the first delivery.[47] It is difficult to distinguish between these cases and those which hold that the instrument is an escrow; in fact the difference has been said to be "not very material."[48] But is it always true that the distinction is not material? If it is considered that an escrow has been deposited, the conveyance, if voluntary, will not relate back to cut off intervening rights.[49] If, however, it is considered that there has been a delivery of a deed, the title passes at once and cuts off the rights of creditors which arise between this delivery and the death of the grantor.[50] The theory that an instrument for the conveyance of land left with a third person to be delivered after grantor's death is a deed in præsenti is now developed in some jurisdictions to the rule that the deed conveys the title of the land immediately to the grantee, subject to the life-interest remaining in the grantor.[51] The conveyance of real property by an instrument to be delivered to the grantee after the death of the grantor has been sharply criticized in some of the above cases, whether the instrument has been held an escrow[52] or a deed in præsenti.[53]

47. This was the view of Chief Justice Shaw in Foster v. Mansfield, 3 Metc. (Mass.) 412, 414, 37 Am. Dec. 154, who distinguished between a deed and an escrow as follows: "Where the future delivery is to depend upon the payment of money, or the performance of some other condition, it will be deemed an escrow. Where it is merely to await the lapse of time, or the happening of some contingency, and not the performance of any condition, it will be deemed the grantor's deed presently. Still it will not take effect as a deed, until the second delivery; but when thus delivered, it will take effect, by relation, from the first delivery" [citing Wheelwright v. Wheelwright, 2 Mass. 447, 454, 3 Am. Promissory note.— In Ruiz v. Dow, 113 Cal. 490, 496, 45 Pac. 867, the grantor and donor made a deed of gift of all his realty and personalty and it was objected that there was not a valid transfer of a certain note in question to the donee, that there was neither a gift causa mortis nor a gift inter vivos. The court held that there was no gift causa mortis, but that there was a valid transfer of title of the note to the donee. "The donor relinquished all present right and control over the note when he made the deed and delivered it to the cashier of the bank, and by the same act he also placed the right of possession of the note beyond himself." As the right of possession was lost to the donor, it was immaterial that the right of possession did not vest immediately in the donee.

the deposit.[54] Nevertheless it may be subsequently varied by the agreement of the parties.[55]

III. THE DEPOSIT.[56]

A. Whether a Deposit or Delivery Determined by Intention. Whether an instrument placed with a third person is to be an escrow or a completely executed instrument depends upon the intention of the parties.[57] If the evidence leaves any doubt upon the subject, the intention of the parties must be determined by the jury[58] upon the whole evidence.[59] A declaration by the depositor that he delivers the instrument as his deed,[60] or that "he delivers [deposits] it as an escrow"[61] is not conclusive, but is mere matter of evidence to be weighed in connection with other circumstances of the case, in order to determine the real character of the transaction.[62] It is said that a presumption exists in favor of the complete instrument and that an intention to the contrary must clearly appear if it is to be considered an escrow.[63]

B. Irrevocability of Deposit. It is an absolutely necessary element of a deposit that it should be irrevocable; that is, that when the instrument is placed in the hands of the depositary it should be intended to pass beyond the control of the grantor for all time, and that he should actually lose the control of and dominion over the instrument;[64] for in case the deposit is made in furtherance of

But a deposit does not amount to a delivery so as to take the case out of the statute of frauds where the grantee named in the instrument had taken possession of the land from another person, the condition never having been performed, who held adversely to the grantor named in the instrument deposited, and this although the grantee of the escrow had made a part payment at the time the deposit was made. Dec. 375, where a conveyance to the grantor's two sons in common was deposited with a third person to be delivered to the grantee in case the grantor should die before having made and executed his will. The court doubted whether the instrument was an escrow but said that the delivery was at all events conditional and to become absolute upon an event which subsequently took place and that therefore, as in the case of an escrow, the instrument would take effect from the first delivery. The question came up in a partition suit. There are a few other cases where the instrument deposited was subject to recall by the maker or grantor, and the recall not having been exercised by him was upheld so as to pass title or right. Thus, in Belden v. Carter, 4 Day (Conn.) 66, 4 Am. Dec. 185, the grantor of an instrument for the conveyance of land deposited it with a third person, saying at the time: "Take this deed, and keep it. If I never call for it, deliver to B. after my death: if I call for it, deliver it up to me." The grantor not having called for it, and it having been delivered after his death, it was held a good deed in the hands of the grantee. See also Martin v. Flaherty, 13 Mont. 96, 32 Pac. 287, 40 Am. St. Rep. 415, 19 L. R. A. 242. In Giddings v. Benjamin, 51 Vt. 227, 31 Am. Rep. 682, the maker of three notes put them into an envelope which he sealed and addressed to one of the payees of the notes. He deposited the envelope with one F, who indorsed the sub-absurd situation of a testamentary instrument, without the required formalities, being upheld in a court of law. And this whether it is considered that the instrument is deposited as an escrow or delivered as a deed or other fully executed instrument.[67] But the rule that the grantor has to part with all dominion and control over the instrument does not mean that he must put it out of his physical power to procure possession of it. It is sufficient that the instrument is deposited with the third person for the grantee without reservation and with the intention that it shall take effect and eventually operate according to its import in the case of an intended conveyance of land, to transfer the title.[68] It therefore follows that when a valid deposit of an instrument as an escrow has once been made, neither party can revoke without the consent of the other.[69] The deposit would be an idle ceremony and entirely nullify the object of the law if this were permissible.[70]

stance of the maker's directions on the wrapper which he put around the envelope, "Letter left in my care by Benj. Giddings, to be handed to Mr. Giddings if he calls for it; otherwise not to be opened in his lifetime." The maker of the note died intestate without ever having called for the package otherwise than to inquire for its safety. It was held that the option of recall not having been exercised, the delivery after death took effect by relation as of the time of the original deposit. The notes in this case were given to the three payees in payment of a third part in their father's interest in the intestate mother's dower estate, which he had enjoyed, and for which their father had never made demand. See also Blanchard v. Sheldon, 43 Vt. 512, where a note deposited to a third person, subject to recall during the lifetime, was held as a gift inter vivos. See also Daggart v. Simonds, 173 Mass. 340, 53 N. E. 907, 46 L. R. A. 332, where the court inclines toward this doctrine, but does not absolutely decide in favor of it.

67. Culy v. Upham, (Mich. 1903) 97 N. W. 405, in which case the consideration of a deed was past and future services in the care of the grantor and his wife. The consideration was set out in the deed and was a condition precedent to the delivery of the deed, namely, that the grantee should live with and care for the grantor until the grantor's death. It was held that the intention of the grantor was that the title should remain in him until after he died and then it should pass to the grantee if she had performed the conditions, that this intent was testamentary in character and could not be consummated by deed, and further that the condition precedent that the grantee should live with and care for the grantor was not waived by a deposit of the instrument with a verbal direction to deliver it after the grantor's death, since the verbal modification of the conditions in a deed is void under the statute of frauds. See supra, note 66. But where decedent deposited with a third person an instrument which stated that it was deposited as an escrow, to be delivered to the grantee at the grantor's death, or to grantor, at his request, in his lifetime, and the grantor afterward had the last clause erased, and redeposited the instrument, stating that he wished to put the property beyond the power of recall, the lands passed to grantee at the grantor's death. C. With Whom Made — 1. General Rule. As to who may be the depositary, the most usual expression of the general rule is that the instrument cannot be deposited with one of the parties thereto, but must be made with a stranger.[71]

2. When Instrument For Conveyance of Land Deposited. This rule, however, is subject to some modifications. Thus it has been said that an instrument for the conveyance of land may be deposited as an escrow with any person other than the grantee.[72] An instrument complete on its face for the conveyance of land cannot be deposited with the grantee as an escrow; such deposit becomes a delivery and the instrument so delivered becomes a deed,[73] which takes effect presently as the deed of the party making the delivery regardless of the oral conditions attached[74] which the party will not be bound to perform.[75] The rule is equally true, although when the instrument was delivered the parties did not intend that the grantee should acquire the legal title to the land to be conveyed and treated the instrument merely as documentary evidence of title and erroneously assumed that, notwithstanding its delivery to the grantee and its acceptance by him, the legal title would not pass until he had performed certain acts.[76]

Where a mortgage, perfect on its face, and bearing no evidence that the mortgagor's wife is to join in it, has been delivered by the mortgagor to the mortgagee, parol evidence is not admissible to show that it was delivered as an escrow, to become operative only on condition that the mortgagor's wife should join in it, since a deed can never be an escrow if delivered to the grantee himself. A negotiable note under seal cannot be delivered to the obligee as an escrow. Neely v. Lewis, 10 Ill. 31 [citing Moss v. Riddle, 5 Cranch (U. S.) 351, 3 L. ed. 123]. As to whether a note under seal is negotiable see 7 Cyc. 614–616.

Check in hands of payee.— Defendant owed M about sixty dollars by account, and plaintiff was a creditor of M by note for about the same amount, and M having stopped payment, defendant handed his check on a bank to plaintiff for forty-five dollars, payable ahead, and received from plaintiff the note against M, indorsed without recourse, under an agreement that if defendant could procure M, without suit, to set off the account against the note, plaintiff was to present the check for payment and discharge defendant from an account for thirteen dollars due from him to plaintiff; otherwise, to return the check and receive back the note. M refused to make the set-off, whereupon defendant demanded his check and tendered the note to plaintiff, and upon plaintiff's refusal to comply with his agreement, stopped the payment of the check. In an action on the check it was held that these facts were a good defense to the action; the proof showing that the check had been delivered to plaintiff, not absolutely, but in the nature of an escrow. Sweet v. Stevens, 7 R. I. 375. It is to be noticed that in Westminster Bank v. Wheaton, 4 R. I. 30, it was decided that a check and a bill of exchange were the same in effect except that the former had no days of grace.

An instrument delivered as a memorandum. —An instrument not under seal may be delivered to the party as a memorandum to whom on its face it is made payable, or who by its terms is entitled to some interest or benefit under it, on a condition, the performance of which is necessary to perfect the title delivery and as an avoidance of the conditions.[80] The same objections[81] are good in such a case as have been stated to be fatal to the operation of the oral conditions in the case of instruments intended as conveyances of land.[82]

b. Coöbligor or Joint Maker. The general rule already given[83] requiring the depositary to be a stranger has been qualified in a number of jurisdictions to the extent of allowing a coöbligor of a bond to be the depositary,[84] but even this is denied in a few states.[85]

4. With Agent of Grantee or Obligee. The ancient and more general rule is that the deposit of an instrument intended as an escrow with the agent of the grantee or obligee is equivalent to a deposit with his principal.[86] But there are

The instruments in this case were never intended as escrows and could not be so considered in any case, for they were not intended to take effect upon performance of any condition. a number of cases, for the most part recent, which refuse to hold that the term "stranger" or "third person" as used in defining the depositary of an escrow necessarily precludes the agent of the grantee or obligee from acting as custodian.[87] If the agent is such a one as that his acting as custodian of the instrument is not antagonistic to his principal's interests and the paper is put in his hand, not as a delivery, but as a deposit, this is no reason why he, as well as a stranger, should not be permitted to act for both parties.[88] The majority of the cases taking this view are cases where the depositary was the agent of a corporation; in fact it has been directly held that there is no such personal identity between a corporation and its officers as will preclude a deposit with them of an escrow for the conveyance of land to the corporation.[89] On the other hand it has been held that since a corporation can act only through its officers and agents a deposit with such a person is an absolute delivery.[90]

Deposit of a character to negative delivery.— In order that an instrument signed, sealed, and deposited may operate as an escrow and not as a deed, it is sufficient if the deposit be of such a character as to negative its being delivered to the grantee or person who is to have the benefit of it. It may so operate, although placed in the hands of the grantee's solicitor, if it be proved that he was intended to hold it as an incomplete instrument. Watkins v. Nash, L. R. 20 Eq. 262, 44 L. J. One of a committee appointed by the inhabitants of a town to obtain subscriptions to the stock of a railroad company, which subscriptions were to be delivered to the company only upon certain parol conditions, is not an agent of the company in such a sense as to prevent his receiving the subscription list as an escrow, although he is at the time acting as a member of said committee. 5. Rule Limited — a. To Instruments Complete on Face.[91] The rule that an instrument for the conveyance of land cannot be deposited with the grantee as an escrow, and that such attempted deposit becomes an absolute delivery and the conditions nugatory, has been held in some jurisdictions to be applicable only where such instruments are upon their faces complete contracts, requiring nothing but delivery to make them perfect binding contracts according to the intention of the parties.[92]

b. Not Applicable to Mere Tradition In Transitu. The mere tradition of the instrument to the grantee does not operate as a delivery absolute where it is agreed that the grantee is to deposit the instrument as an escrow with a third person certain and it is in due course actually so deposited.[93]

IV. Authority and Liabilities of Depositary.

Until the escrow contract has been made, the depositary has no rights or authority enforceable at law.[94] When this has been made and the instrument deposited, the depositary is not the agent of the grantor, obligor, or promisor alone, but he is the agent of both parties.[95] When the condition upon the hap-

92. Wendlinger v. Smith, 75 Va. 309, 40 Am. Rep. 727; Hicks v. Goode, 12 Leigh (Va.) 479, 37 Am. Dec. 677. Thus in Wendlinger v. Smith, 75 Va. 309, 317, 40 Am. Rep. 727, a writing appended to the covenant of the instrument which was in the possession of the grantee showed clearly on its face an intention that all the devisees of one Vial should by signing the writing declare their approval and ratification of the covenant. "It is true, they are not mentioned by their names in the body of the writing; but, with as much certainty as if particularly named, they are described collectively as 'the undersigned devisees under the will of the late Seymour P. Vial,' and corresponding scrolls were subjoined to which their signatures were to be prefixed. According to the authorities which have been cited, it was properly competent for Wendlinger to prove, as he offered to do, by parol evidence, that he delivered this covenant to Goddin to take effect only on condition that all of the devisees of Vial should give their written assent to the covenant, as the writing shows was contemplated. See also remarks of Daniel, J., in Smith v. Spiller, 10 Gratt. (Va.) 318, 324." Per Burks, J., in Wendlinger v. Smith, 75 Va. 309, 318, 40 Am. pening of which the instrument is to take effect is performed, the depositary becomes the mere agent or trustee of the grantee [96] and the depositary's possession is the possession of the grantee.[97] The depositary must have the power to judge whether the condition has been performed, in order to act,[98] unless he is relieved of this duty by the stipulations of the parties.[99] Where he has such power and exercises it, the non-performance of the condition cannot be asserted against bona fide purchasers.[1] A depositary who violates the terms of the escrow contract is liable in damages for the loss suffered thereby.[2]

8. By the terms of a contract of sale of real estate, the consideration of the instrument deposited was a stock of goods and a transfer of the lease of the store in which they were. An invoice of the goods had been made and the amount and value thereof fixed to the satisfaction of both parties, and upon the second day thereafter the vendor duly tendered the key of the store and an assignment of the lease, and upon the refusal of the latter to accept the same deposited them with the holder of the deed. There being no change in the amount or condition of the goods and no objection being made to the form or place of the tender, it was held that the seller was entitled to a delivery of the deed and that the purchaser was not entitled, under the evidence in the case, to exact as a further condition that the seller should allow him to make a reëxamination of the goods and a comparison thereof with the invoice previously made, in order to verify the accuracy of the same before final acceptance. Compliance after delivery.— Where the instrument is deposited by the grantor named therein with a third person, to be held as an escrow until the grantee shall have paid the specified debt and the instrument is delivered before the debt is fully paid, the delivery will be operated if the debt is sub-

depositor's negligence he ought not to be heard to complain.[10] If his act prevents performance by the grantee or obligee, a delivery subsequent to the actual fulfilment of the conditions will be upheld.[11]

B. By Whom Performed. Although the old idea of an escrow, as well as that found in some cases quite modern, seemed to be that the condition was to be performed by the grantee or obligee, where performance by any one was required,[12] it is not necessary that the condition should be performed by him;[13] it may be made by either party, by the grantor or obligor, as well as by the grantee or obligee.[14]

C. Time of Performance. If no time is stipulated for performance, the condition must be performed in a reasonable time.[15] If the time is set, a failure to perform within the agreed period will not preclude, after a performance, the grantee's or obligee's right to a delivery of the instrument where time was not an element of the contract,[16] or where the conduct of the grantor or obligor has acted as a waiver of the time element of the condition.[17]

D. In Whom Title Until Performance, Etc. Until the performance of the condition the title to the land to be conveyed remains in the grantor.[18] If the

Vroom, Ch., said: "In all cases the condition is to be performed by the grantee, and not by the grantor. The grantor has done all that was needful for him, to give complete effect to the instrument; he cannot by any subsequent act or omission or refusal of his, prevent his own deed from being operative. In this case, the act was to be done by the grantor, that is to say, he was to acknowledge the deed, and therefore it cannot be considered as an escrow." 3. The Rule When Bona Fide Subvendees — a. Generally. That a subvendee with notice of[23] or a subvendee put upon his inquiry as to[24] the wrongful delivery of the instrument would take no title or obtain no right is elementary. The great weight of authority sustains the view that an unauthorized delivery of the instrument conveys no title or gives no right even in favor of an innocent subvendee without notice of the conditions or event stipulated in the escrow contract;[25] and the authorities are very strong where the escrow has been obtained or delivered through fraud.[26] The principle on which the doctrine rests this state cannot be enforced against any one of them. The law presumes, that the party signing, did so, upon the condition that the other obligors named in the instrument should also sign it; and their failure to comply with their agreement gives him a right to retract. Dec. 394: "The rule is different in regard to a deed, bond or other instrument placed in the hands of a third person as an escrow, to be delivered on the happening of a future event or contingency. In that case no title or interest passes until a delivery is made in pursuance of the terms and conditions upon which it was placed in the hands of the party to whom it was intrusted. The council directed the president and clerk to sign a contract with the proprietor of the proposed factory and also to execute three bonds, of one thousand dollars each, to be deposited as escrows and delivered when the factory was completed as per contract. It was held that as by the terms of the resolution of the council the bonds were to be deposited with the bank as escrows to be delivered by it to the proprietor on the completion of the contract, the delivery to him was sufficient, whether the contract was performed or not. "Whether the condition was performed or not, we need not inquire. The bonds were issued, and were delivered to Seeley, by whom they were negotiated to plaintiffs through the bank. is that an instrument delivered in violation of the terms on which it has been placed as an escrow is not in fact delivered and that its possession by the grantee is no more effective to convey title than would be the possession of a forged or stolen instrument.[27] Some authorities proceed on the theory that a depositary is a special agent of the depositor and therefore, his powers being limited to the conditions of the deposit, one who claims through him takes the risk of the agent exceeding his powers.[28]

b. Estoppel Raised. The grantor or obligor may be estopped to assert the condition of the deposit of the instrument where he has recognized the validity of the delivery or has remained silent when called upon to speak and others have been injured.[29] If the grantor ratifies the unauthorized delivery he is estopped from disputing the rights of innocent third persons who have bought in good faith.[30] The grantor cannot recognize the grantee's possession of the instrument as valid for some purposes and disclaim it as nugatory for all others when innocent persons would be injured thereby. The partial recognition of the validity of the delivery works a complete estoppel.[31] Yet an act which is intended to protect the depositor's rights but which amounts to a ratification of the delivery may not operate as an estoppel.[32] An effectual demand for the payment of the balance of the purchase-money cannot be regarded as an acquiescence in the wrongful delivery of an escrow.[33] Where the grantee has been put into possession of the land and the instrument wrongfully delivered to him and recorded as a deed, the grantor is estopped to assert against a bona fide purchaser the non-performance of the condition,[34] for it is a familiar principle that where one is in possession

Judgment creditors of the grantee have been held not to acquire any rights in the land where the instrument was delivered fraudulently by the depositary. Patrick v. McCormick, 10 Nebr. 1, 4 N. W. 312. See also Stanley v. Valentine, 79 Ill. 544.

Balancing equities under this doctrine.— To maintain the plea of a bona fide purchaser, the subvendee must have obtained the legal title which he thus attempts to protect against some undisclosed equity or charge on the land. This he cannot do, for, although he bought on the faith of his grantor's possession of the escrow, the original grantor or his heirs still had the legal title. The original grantee had therefore no title and could convey none. The equities of the second grantee and of the heirs of the original grantor, being equal, or the equities of such heirs being superior, the legal title, which still remains in such heirs, will prevail. And see Farmer v. Marvin, 63 Kan. 250, 65 Pac. 221, where the instrument deposited was admitted not to be an escrow. In that case a note signed by the maker, without consideration moving to him, was placed in the hands of a third person, with written instructions to deliver on the happening of a certain contingency, and, in the event the contingency happened, then on the giving of indemnity thereafter to be agreed on by both the maker and payee in the note. Before the happening of the contingency, or the indemnity to be given had been agreed on the maker of the note died. It was held that the agency of the third person to make delivery of the note ceased and the note did not become the binding obligation of the estate of the deceased.

The court held that the

of land and has a deed of record, the possession will be referred to his deed, unless there are facts which are known to one who is about to acquire an interest in the land and which indicate a different possessory right.[35] But a broader and more general principle of equity governs the case; that is, where one of two innocent persons must suffer, he through whose agency the loss occurred must sustain the loss.[36] This principle is the more appropriately applied if the grantor learns of the unauthorized delivery and recording of the instrument and fails to take steps to prevent innocent third persons from acting to their injury.[37] The bare fact that the instrument has been placed on record does not estop the depositor from asserting the non-performance of the condition.[38] If the acts of the depositor have not changed the position of the persons claiming an estoppel, the claim is

See also Simson v. Bank of Commerce, 43 Hun (N. Y.) 156, where grantee was not in possession but title was recorded in him and depositary was to aid the grantee in making a loan on the land. VI. ENFORCEMENT OF CONTRACT AND PROTECTION OF RIGHTS THEREUNDER.

A. Right to and Forms of Actions and Remedies — 1. OF DEPOSITOR — a. In General. Where there has been an irrevocable deposit, as of an escrow of an instrument for the conveyance of land, the grantor may enforce specific performance of the contract on the part of the grantee to compel him to pay over the purchase-money agreed upon;[41] but if there has not been an irrevocable deposit the contract cannot be enforced.[42] A formal tender of the instrument is not necessary to enable the grantor to sue for the purchase-money, the payment of which was the condition precedent to the instrument taking effect.[43] Where the condition is not performed within the proper period of time, the grantor is entitled to the possession of the instrument.[44]

b. When Wrongful Delivery or Recording — (I) INJUNCTION.[45] The registration of an instrument,[46] or the sale of the land under a judgment against the grantee who has wrongfully obtained possession of the instrument,[47] will be restrained at the suit of the grantor.

(II) CANCELLATION[48] AND REMOVING CLOUD.[49] Where an escrow is put upon record through accident or mistake,[50] or by fraud,[51] there is a cloud on the grantor's title which a court in the exercise of its equity powers will remove. So an escrow fraudulently obtained from the depositary will by a court of equity be canceled in the hands of the grantee[52] or his assignee for value,[53] who if in

Where a grantor surreptitiously obtains possession of a deed that has been deposited as an escrow until the title is examined and the consideration is paid and thereafter conveys the land to a third person who has knowledge of the facts, a decree setting aside the latter deed and establishing the former is proper. Lewis v. Prather, 21 S. W. 538, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 749.

Lease from grantee who had no title through non-performance.— The grantee in an instrument drew a draft for the amount of the purchase-money for land which he had previously contracted to purchase, and placed it in the hands of a banker for collection; and the owner of the land placed his deed to the purchaser in the hands of the same banker, to be delivered to the purchaser on condition that the draft was duly paid; and the purchaser agreed that if the draft was not duly paid he would relinquish all his right to the land under the contract. The draft was repossession will be compelled to restore possession[54] and to account for the rents and profits.[55]

2. Of Deliveree. Upon performance of the condition the grantee or obligee is entitled to delivery,[56] which will be enforced by a decree of court.[57] Where a condition which was in favor of the grantee was not performed, he may waive it and enforce delivery.[58] If the depositary refuses to deliver, the remedy is not against the other party to compel specific performance of the escrow contract, but against the depositary to obtain possession of the instrument.[59] The ancient rule that a court of equity enforces only certain and defined agreements applies as well here as elsewhere; an action for specific performance of the contract will not be maintained if there is a want of certainty in respect to the persons to whom the conveyance is to be made.[60] If the depositary refuses to make the delivery due to the deliveree on the ground that the depositor claims the escrow, the depositary may be held liable for conversion.[61] If the escrows deposited are in such case certificates of stock, the measure of damages under a general allegation is the value of the certificates with the accumulated dividends thereon at the time of the demand for delivery and the legal interest on the same from the time of conversion.[62]

B. Pleading.[63] At common law the general plea of non est factum is the proper one to admit the defense to an action on the instrument by the grantee, etc., that the instrument is still an escrow with the condition precedent unperformed.[64] The defense is admissible under a special non est factum, but this carries with it the disadvantage of the burden of proof, whereas the burden is on the other party under the general plea.[65] Where a bond is in possession of

It was held that no title passed by the deed, but all claim of the grantee to the land under his contract was extinguished; and that a lease from him which stood upon the records was a cloud upon the title of the owner, and should be removed by a court of equity by decree. Contra.— Under a general plea of non est factum, a question as to the conditional signing and delivery of a writing cannot be considered. A special plea of non est factum is essentially necessary in order to make a defense upon the ground that there was a conditional signing or deposit of the writing. Hall v. Smith, 14 Bush (Ky.) 604.

Non-assumpsit is a proper plea under which evidence that instrument was intended as an escrow may be admitted. Couch v. Meeker, 2 Conn. 302, 7 Am. Dec. 274.

65. Union Bank v. Ridgely, 1 Harr. & G. (Md.) 324; Carter v. Turner, 5 Sneed (Tenn.) 178. See Hicks v. Goode, 12 Leigh (Va.) 479, 37 Am. Dec. 677. And Holt, C. J., said that in all his time he never knew such a plea

the obligee, a special non est factum which does not allege to whom it was delivered is defective.[66] When the deposit as of an escrow is pleaded by an equitable plea, an allegation showing the conditional deposit as of an escrow is absolutely necessary;[67] and the pleadings must properly connect plaintiffs with the conditions alleged.[68]

C. Burden of Proof. The burden of proof is usually on him who alleges the instrument to be an escrow.[69] Nevertheless the other party may have the affirmative of the issue as a result of the condition of the pleadings.[70] If the party who is relying upon the conditional deposit of the instrument as an escrow proves the deposit, it is then the duty of the other party to go forward and prove the performance of the condition or the happening of the event upon which the instrument was to take effect.[71] Where there is a question of bona fide purchasers who claim to have bought land without knowledge of an escrow contract, the burden of proving all the facts necessary to constitute a bona fide purchase rests upon those who make that claim.[72]

D. Evidence[73] — 1. Admissibility. Parol evidence is admissible to prove the condition upon which the instrument is deposited.[74] If, however, the condition be in writing, evidence to vary it is inadmissible.[75] Acts and declarations of the grantor subsequent to the time of the alleged delivery, in hostility to the deed, are inadmissible as against the grantee. But acts and declarations in support thereof are admissible, because they are adverse to the interests of the only person who at the time has any interest in overthrowing such deed.[76]

as this; for all these special non est factums in case of escrow and rasure, etc., are impertinent, for thereby defendant brings all the proof upon himself; whereas if he had pleaded non est factum generally, he would have turned the proof of whatever is necessary to make it his deed upon plaintiff. Want of verification.— In debt on a bond, defendant pleads that bond was delivered as escrow upon conditions which were not performed, et sic non est factum; the plea is not verified by affidavit of the party according to statute (1 Va. Rev. Code, c. 128, § 33), but plaintiff makes no objection for want of such affidavit, and the plea is received by the court, issue joined upon it, trial, verdict, and judgment for defendant; the want of the affidavit to the plea is not good objection to the judgment in an appellate court. So in Bury v. Young, 98 Cal. 446, 33 Pac. 338, 35 Am. St. Rep. 186, holding the same as to an instrument delivered in the same way, it was held that on the question whether a grantor had power to recall an instrument deposited as an escrow, evidence of subsequent acts of the grantor, tending to show his intentions at the time he made the deed, is inadmissible. Where a note was deposited with his servant by the deceased, and after his death delivered by the servant to the payee, evidence of the directions given by the deceased when he handed the note to his servant is competent in an action against the executor of the deceased's will by the payee. So also are the admissions

2. Sufficiency. Declarations of liability on the instrument and laches, together with contradictory direct evidence as to its ratification of the delivery of the instrument, without performance of the condition, is sufficient to sustain a verdict of ratification.[77] Evidence that the conditions had been performed and that the depositary had given the instrument to the grantor on his declaring that he took it for the purpose of delivering it to the grantee is sufficient to warrant a finding that there was a delivery valid to vest title in grantee.[78] A declaration by one of the obligors in the presence of some of the others at the time of execution that "others are to sign" is sufficient to allow the jury to infer that an escrow was intended by the obligors present.[79] A judgment in a former action wherein the question of performance of the condition of the deposit is litigated makes that question res adjudicata.[80] The exercise of acts of ownership by the grantee in possession of the land for a long period of time with the acquiescence of the grantor in such acts, together with the fact that the grantor had reserved the land out of a tract subsequently conveyed, is sufficient to show that the instrument was absolutely delivered.[81] The possession of the instrument by the grantee[82] or obligee[83] is prima facie evidence that it had been delivered to him.

E. Questions of Law and Fact. Whether an instrument has been deposited as an escrow or delivered as a deed or other fully executed instrument is a question for the jury.[84] If the condition precedent is expressed in writing, the construction of the writing is for the court.[85] Whether a wrongful delivery to the grantee or obligee has been ratified by the grantor or obligor is a question for the jury.[86]

Declarations of depositary to show passing of title.— Where an instrument has been deposited with a third person for delivery upon the performance of certain conditions by the grantee, proof of the declaration of the third person to the grantee that the instrument was ready for her is not admissible to show delivery in an action by the grantor upon an insurance policy issued upon the property described in the instrument. The mere circumstance that the name of a person who did not execute an instrument is inserted in the body of it as one of the obligors and a seal left for his name is not sufficient evidence of itself to show that those who did sign, seal, and transfer its possession, transferred it as an escrow, on condition that that person should also execute it. Where the direct evidence is conflicting as to whether the instrument was delivered as the deed of the grantor or deposited as an escrow, the fact that grantee had occupied the land for more than twenty years without paying rent and had exercised the political right in connection with the ownership of the land of voting on the property three times at county elections and once when the grantor, his father, was the returning officer, and one year he had qualified on the property as a municipal councilor, swearing that he owned the property; and the fact that thirteen years after the execution of the instrument the grantor deeded a tract of land to another son, expressly reserving from the operation of the deed the land covered by the description of instrument claimed to be an escrow, is sufficient to show that the instrument was delivered absolutely as the deed of the grantor. Question in court of equity.— Whether the questions of fact are to be determined by a jury depend upon the kind of an action in which the questions are to be determined.

VII. WHEN INSTRUMENT TAKES EFFECT.

A. At Delivery or Upon Performance. It is very often held that the escrow does not take effect as a fully executed instrument as a deed, bond, or note until the rightful delivery to the grantee, obligee, or promisee.[87] The logical position, approved by a number of authorities, is that the escrow takes effect as a deed, etc., the instant the required condition or event is performed or takes place, without any formal act of delivery.[88]

B. According to Agreement. The instrument will take effect according to the agreement of the parties where no intervening rights are injured.[89]

C. By Relation. The rule that the instrument does not take effect as a deed, bond, etc., until delivery or until performance of the condition is modified to the extent that, where justice requires it, the delivery will be held, by fiction of law, to relate back to the deposit, ut res magis valeat quam pereat.[90] Any title acquired by the grantor between the deposit and the delivery passes by such delivery to the grantee.[91] This principle applies where either of the parties to the instrument dies before the condition is performed, or before final delivery;[92]

In an action of the character which belongs to courts of equity jurisdiction the questions of fact may be found by the court. See for example Hillhouse v. Pratt, 74 Conn. 113, 49 Atl. 905; Eggleston v. Pollock, 38 Nebr. 188, 56 N. W. 805; Mudd v. Green, 12 S. W. 139, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 359.

whether grantor[93] or grantee,[94] or both parties.[95] If the grantee die before final delivery, the depositary may make delivery to the grantee's heirs and it will be held ordinarily to have taken effect in the ancestor so as to transmute title through him to the heirs by inheritance, where nothing intervenes to prevent.[96] So too will the delivery relate back to the deposit if in the meantime one of the parties has come under a disability, as mental incapacity[97] or, in the case of a woman, the marriage status.[98] The fiction will be resorted to only where justice requires it — never when injustice would result.[99] Thus it cannot be applied

Contra.— Where a statute provides that "a conveyance, settlement, or other act of a testator by which his interest in a thing previously disposed of by his will is altered, but not wholly divested, is not a revocation, but the will passes the property which would otherwise devolve by succession," the doctrine of relation cannot apply as against the disposition of property made by a will of the grantor, for the case falls directly within the inhibition of the statute, the title to the land being still in the grantor. Chadwick v. Tatem, 9 Mont. 354, 364, 23 Pac. 729.

Where the death of the grantor is the event upon the happening of which the escrow is to become a deed or the deed is to take effect (according to the view taken of an instrument deposited on such condition), the doctrine of relation is applied. Where fiction would injure grantor.—Plaintiff was defendant's tenant of premises in Toronto, for which he was in arrear to the amount of one hundred and forty-five dollars and eighty-three cents. Defendant sold the premises to the crown. The instrument of conveyance dated Oct. 23, 1872, was delivered by F, the agent at Toronto of the minister of justice, to M, the agent of the defendant, on November 15, for execution. On November 16 it was executed, and was by M handed to F as an escrow, to become a deed when the money was paid. The instrument was returned to F on November 26, and he registered it on November 29, but the money was not paid till December 7. Defendant having distrained on plaintiff for rent on November 29, it was held that the instrument did not become operative as a deed from its deposit by relation back, in which case defendant would have had no reversionary interest at the time of the distress, but from the payment of the purchase-money only. Oliver v. Mowat, 34 U. C. Q. B. 472. So where there is no exception to the covenant of warranty of an escrow, although a building on the land belonged to a third person, the deed will not, when delivered, relate back to the time of its execution, when it appears that prior to the delivery the grantee settled for the building with its owner, and the evidence shows that he did this because he had agreed with his grantor to take the lot subject to the right of the third person to remove it. Hoyt v. McLagan, 87 Iowa 746, 55 N. W. 18.

Corporation not in esse a grantee.— After the corporators had signed an agreement to become a corporation, and before the charter had been obtained, conveyance of land to corporation by name was signed and acknowledged by the grantor and deposited with a third person, with directions to retain it until the corporation obtained its charter and organized, and then to deliver it to the corporation, and after the charter had been received and the corporation organized under it, depositary made delivery to and acceptance was made by the corporation. It was held that said deed operated as a valid conveyance of said land to the corporation from the date of the delivery of said deed to it. Spring Garden Bank v. Hurlings Lumber Co., 32 W. Va. 357, 9 S. E. 243, 3 L. R. A. 583.

ESPECIAL. Distinguished among others of the same class or kind; special; concerning a species or a single object.[2]

ESPLEES. The products which the land yields.[3]

ESQUIRE. A term which imports magisterial character; a justice.[4]

ESSENCE. That which constitutes the particular nature of a being or substance and distinguishes it from all others; formal existence; constituent substance, as, the pure essence of a spirit. The predominant qualities or virtues of any plant or drug, extracted, refined, or rectified from grosser matter; or more strictly, a volatile essential oil, as the essence of mint.[5]

ESSENTIAL. Constituting or making that which is characteristic or most important in a thing; fundamental; indispensable.[6]

1. Jackson v. Rowland, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 666, 22 Am. Dec. 557, where it was held that fiction would not be allowed to preclude a judgment creditor who had recovered judgment between the deposit and the performance of the condition. See also Brown v. Austen, 35 Barb. (N. Y.) 341.

It will not be resorted to in favor of volunteers as against the grantor's creditors without notice of the deposit. Rathmell v. Shirey, 60 Ohio St. 187, 53 N. E. 1098, where there was no substantial consideration and where the court assumed in its opinion that there was such a delivery of the deed as would give it effect as against the heirs at law of the grantors. See also Taft v. Taft, 59 Mich. 185, 26 N. W. 426, 60 Am. Rep. 291. But in Whitfield v. Harris, 48 Miss. 710, it was held that the fiction would be resorted to when the record showed that the sale of land sought to be made by judgment creditors was by virtue of a levy made after the grantee had paid the purchase-price and had received the deed by final delivery and had left it for record, together with the further fact that she had been in possession and receiving the rents for about eighteen months, which was notice to the creditors of her title, and after the final delivery of the deed if not before equivalent to a record as between her and said judgment creditors.

Doctrine will not violate a contract.— A county, which contracted to sell lands which it owned and stipulated that it would not assess taxes against them until they should be conveyed, executed a conveyance and deposited it with the clerk of the board of county supervisors as an escrow, not to be delivered until the performance by the grantee of a certain condition and the conveyance was surreptitiously placed on record without performance of the condition. Subsequently upon performance of the condition a suit by the county to set the record and contract aside was dismissed by consent and a decree entered barring the county from setting up any right or title to the lands in controversy. It was held that an assessment for taxes before such decree was void, since the county still had title and the doctrine of relation would not be applied in direct violation of the agreement. Calhoun County v. American Emigrant Co., 93 U. S. 124, 23 L. ed. 826.

Cutting off dower.— Where an instrument was executed by a husband and wife and deposited as an escrow, and prior to the payment of purchase-money and acceptance of the instrument grantor's wife died and he remarried, it relates back to the time of its deposit as an escrow, so as to cut out the dower claim of the second wife. Vorheis v. Kitch, 8 Phila. (Pa.) 554; Smiley v. Smiley, 114 Ind. 258, 16 N. E. 585, where the condition or event was the death of the grantor and the grantees, children of the grantor by a former wife, being volunteers, and the second wife had been informed of the escrows before marriage.

I. DEFINITION AND APPLICATION OF THE TERM "ESTATE."

An estate in land is the degree, quantity, nature, or extent of interest which a person has in it.[1] While in its primary and technical sense the term "estate" refers only to an interest in land,[2] yet by common usage it has acquired a much wider import and application,[3] being applied to personal property as well as

The word "estate" is applied to land in two senses: (1) To point out the land itself; and (2) to signify the degree, quantity, nature, and extent of interest therein. Troth v. Robertson, 78 Va. 46.

The word "estate," as used with reference to a decedent's property, has acquired a realty,[4] and in its most extreme sense signifying everything of which riches or fortune may consist.[5] In many cases therefore its precise meaning can only be ascertained from the context, or the circumstances under which it is used.[6] As applied to land it does not necessarily import a fee or even a freehold,[7] but merely the quantity of interest a person has from absolute ownership to naked possession,[8] and is applied to rights in land, both in possession and expectancy, and to future estates either vested or contingent.[9] There is a very plain and marked distinction between an estate in lands and a title to lands; the former signifying the interest which a person has, and the latter the evidence of his right or of the extent of his interest, or the means whereby he is enabled to assert or maintain his possession.[10] wider application in a popular sense and refers to the entire mass of the decedent's property, both real and personal. Harrison v. Lamar, 33 Ark. 824.

The word "estate" may mean real or personal estate; or it may be descriptive of the locality or quantity of land only; or of the quantity of time or interest therein, or of both. Den v. Drew, 14 N. J. L. 68.

In a will the meaning of the term "estate" must be determined from the connection in which it is used (In re Hinckley, 58 Cal. 457; Crew v. Dixon, 129 Ind. 85, 27 N. E. 728); and it may refer either to the thing devised or to the quantity of interest (Hudson v. Wadsworth, 8 Conn. 348; Hart v. White, 26 Vt. 260; Lambert v. Paine, 3 Cranch (U. S.) 96, 2 L. ed. 377); and be restricted to realty only (Brainerd v. Cowdrey, 16 Conn. 1), or to personalty (Norris v. Clark, 10 N. J. Eq. 51; Havens v. Havens, 1 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 324; Archer v. Deneale, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 585, 7 L. ed. 272), or include both (Taylor v. Dodd, 2 Thomps. & C. (N. Y.) 88); standing alone without any qualification or restriction it will include all kinds of property, real, personal, and mixed (Cook v. Lanning, 40 N. J. Eq. 369, 3 Atl. 132; Gourley v. Thompson, 2 Sneed (Tenn.) 387; Pulliam v. Pulliam, 10 Fed. 23).

In statutes the import of the term depends in a great degree upon its association with other expressions (In re Hinckley, 58 Cal. 457); and the fixed absolute sense of the word in the abstract must give way to the connection in which it is used (Campbell v. Campbell, 37 Wis. 206).

II. CLASSIFICATION.

A. In General. Estates are classified: (1) With regard to the quantity of interest which the tenant has in the tenement; (2) with regard to the time at which that quantity is to be enjoyed; and (3) with regard to the number and connections of the tenants.[11]

B. With Regard to Quantity of Interest — 1. In General. With regard to the quantity of interest which the tenant has in the tenement, estates are classified as estates of freehold and estates less than freehold.[12]

2. Estates of Freehold — a. Definition and Classification. An estate of freehold is an estate of inheritance or for life in real property.[13] Estates of freehold are either estates of inheritance or estates not of inheritance,[14] all being estates of inheritance except estates for life.[15]

b. Freeholds of Inheritance — (I) Definition and Classification. An estate of inheritance is an estate which may descend to heirs.[16] Estates of inheritances are divided into inheritances absolute or fee simple, and inheritances limited.[17]

(II) Fee Simple. A tenant in fee simple is he that hath lands, tenements, or hereditaments, to hold to him and his heirs forever; generally, absolutely, and simply, without mentioning what heirs, but referring that to his own pleasure, or to the disposition of the law.[18] By fee simple is generally meant a fee simple absolute; but "fee simple" and "fee" are often used as convertible terms,[19] and the former does not necessarily mean a fee simple absolute,[20] but may be applied to a base or determinable fee,[21] or to a fee conditional.[22] A fee simple is so called because it is clear of any condition or restriction as to particular heirs.[23] It is the largest estate and most extensive interest that can be enjoyed in land,[24] being an absolute estate in perpetuity,[25] and conferring an unlimited power of alienation.[26]

(III) LIMITED OR CONDITIONAL FEES—(A) In General. Limited or conditional fees are of two kinds: (1) Qualified or base fees; and (2) fees conditional, so called at the common law; and afterward fees tail, in consequence of the statute de donis.[27]

(B) Base, Qualified, or Determinable Fees. A base or qualified fee is such a one as hath a qualification subjoined thereto, and which must be determined whenever the qualification annexed to it is at an end.[28] This estate is a fee, because by possibility it may endure forever in a man and his heirs; yet as that duration depends upon the concurrence of collateral circumstances, which qualify and debase the purity of the donation, it is therefore a qualified or base fee.[29] If the happening of the event upon which the estate is to be determined becomes impossible it is converted into an estate in fee simple.[30] The qualification on which the estate is to determine must be found in the instrument creating the estate,[31] but no especial or technical words are required to establish it.[32] A base fee during its continuance has all the incidents of a fee simple.[33] It is descendible [34] and assignable,[35] and the owner, while his title continues, has the same right to the exclusive use and enjoyment of the land and as complete dominion over it for all purposes as though he held it in fee simple.[36] The owner of a base fee cannot alone convey a perfect title to the property,[37] and if he conveys in fee the determinable quality of the estate follows the transfer;[38] but an indefeasible title in fee simple may be conveyed if those who would take the estate upon the contingency by which his estate would be defeated join with him in the conveyance.[39] Upon the determination of a base fee the property reverts to the grantor.[40] In the meanwhile the estate is out of him and all that remains to him is the mere possibility of reverter;[41] yet this mere possibility has been held to be an interest capable of assignment.[42] Base or qualified fees are still recognized,[43] and were not done away with by the statute quia emptores.[44]

(c) Fees Conditional. A conditional fee is one which restrains the fee to some particular heirs, exclusive of others, as to the heirs of a man's body, or to the heirs male of his body.[45] This estate was held to be a fee simple on condition that the donee had issue,[46] and with the further condition that in default of such issue it should revert to the donor.[47] As soon as any issue was born the estate was supposed to become absolute by performance of the condition, at least for three purposes: (1) To alien; (2) to forfeit for treason; and (3) to charge with rents and certain other encumbrances.[48] The estate might be aliened before the birth of issue so as to bar the rights of such issue,[49] but not so as to bar the donor's right of reverter.[50] After birth of issue alienation passed the entire estate and barred the donor's reverter;[51] but since the reverter was not barred in case the issue died before alienation,[52] it became customary to alien immediately on birth of issue and repurchase to hold in fee simple.[53] To prevent this the statute de donis conditionalibus[54] was passed which took away from the donee the power of

Blackstone's definition is: "A conditional fee, at the common law, was a fee restrained to some particular heirs, exclusive of others, . . . as to the heirs of a man's body, by which only his lineal descendants were admitted, in exclusion of collateral heirs; or to the heirs male of his body, in exclusion both of collaterals, and lineal females also." 2 Blackstone Comm. 110 [quoted in Barksdale v. Gamage, 3 Rich. c. Freeholds Not of Inheritance. Freeholds not of inheritance are estates for life only.[60]

3. Estates Less Than Freehold. Estates less than freehold are of three sorts: Estates for years, estates at will, and estates by sufferance.[61]

C. With Regard to Time of Enjoyment — 1. In General. Estates with regard to the time of their enjoyment are divided into estates in possession and estates in expectancy.[62]

2. Estates in Possession. Estates in possession are those whereby a present interest passes to and resides in the tenant, not depending on any subsequent circumstance or contingency.[63]

3. Estates in Expectancy — a. Definition and Classification. An estate in expectancy is where the right to the possession is postponed to a future period.[64] Estates in expectancy are divided into future estates and reversions.[65] Expectant estates are by statute in some jurisdictions descendible, devisable, and alienable in the same manner as estates in possession.[66]

b. Future Estates. A future estate is an estate limited to commence in possession at a future day, either without the intervention of a precedent estate, or on the determination, by lapse of time or otherwise, of a precedent estate created at the same time.[67] When the future estate is dependent upon a preceding estate it is termed a remainder.[68] Future estates are either vested or contin-

Remainders see infra, V.

Future estates include all remainders, gent.[69] They are vested when there is a person in being who would have an immediate right to the possession of the lands upon the ceasing of the intermediate or precedent estate.[70] They are contingent while the person to whom, or the event upon which they are limited to take effect, remains uncertain.[71]

D. With Regard to Number and Connections of Tenants. Estates with regard to the number and connections of their owners may be held in four different ways: In severalty, in joint tenancy, in coparcenary, and in common.[72]

E. Estates Upon Condition[73] — 1. Definition and Nature. Estates upon condition are those whose existence depends upon the happening or not happening of some uncertain event, whereby the estate may be either originally created, enlarged, or finally defeated.[74] Conditions may be annexed to every species of estate or interest in real property,[75] and are therefore more properly qualifications of other estates than a distinct species of themselves.[76]

2. Classification — a. In General. Estates upon condition are divided into estates upon condition implied or in law, and estates upon condition expressed or in deed;[77] and are further divided into estates upon condition precedent and estates upon condition subsequent.[78]

b. Conditions Implied. Estates upon condition implied in law are where the grant of an estate has a condition annexed to it inseparably, from its essence and constitution, although no condition be expressed in words.[79]

c. Conditions Expressed. An estate on condition expressed in the grant or devise itself is where the estate granted has a qualification annexed, whereby the estate shall commence, be enlarged, or defeated, upon performance or breach of such qualification or condition.[80]

d. Conditions Precedent. Conditions precedent are such as must happen or be performed before the estate can vest or be enlarged.[81]

e. Conditions Subsequent. Conditions subsequent are such, by the failure or non-performance of which an estate already vested may be defeated.[82] Estates upon condition subsequent have until defeated the same qualities and incidents as though no condition was annexed thereto,[83] but if conveyed or devised they pass subject to the condition.[84]

3. Requisites of the Condition. The condition annexed to the estate must be legal and possible.[85] The condition is void if it be impossible at the time of its creation,[86] or afterward becomes so by the act of God,[87] or of the grantor;[88] or if it be contrary to law[89] or to public policy,[90] or repugnant to the nature of the estate.[91] In such cases if the condition is a condition subsequent the effect is to vest the estate in the grantee, discharged from the condition;[92] but if a condition precedent be void the estate dependent thereon is also void, and the grantee takes nothing by the grant.[93]

4. Conditions and Limitations Distinguished. The distinction between a condition and a limitation is that in the case of a limitation the estate determines as soon as the contingency happens, without any act on the part of him who is next in expectancy, while in the case of a condition the estate continues beyond the happening of the contingency, unless the grantor or his heirs take advantage of the breach of the condition and make an entry or claim in order to avoid the estate.[94] The limitation specifies the utmost time of continuance, and the condition marks some event upon which the estate may be defeated.[95]

5. Conditional Limitations. A conditional limitation is an estate limited to take effect after the determination of an estate, which, in the absence of a limitation over, would have been an estate upon condition.[96] The estate is of a mixed nature, partaking both of a condition and of a limitation;[97] of a condition, because it defeats the estate previously limited; and of a limitation, because upon

III. ESTATES TAIL.

A. Definition and Nature. Estates tail are estates of inheritance, which, instead of descending to heirs generally, go to the heirs of the donee's body, which means his lawful issue, his children, and through them to his grandchildren in a direct line, so long as his posterity endures in a regular order and course of descent, and upon the extinction of such issue the estate determines.[1] It is such an estate as prior to the statute de donis conditionalibus was a fee conditional at common law.[2] This statute provided in effect that the estate should no longer be alienable by the donee upon birth of issue, but should remain to the heirs of his body according to the form of the gift, and on the failure of such heirs should revert to the donor.[3] The statute divided the estate into two parts, giving to the donee a particular estate, the fee tail, and leaving in the donor the ultimate fee simple expectant upon a failure of issue.[4] Estates tail were introduced into this country with the other parts of the English jurisprudence,[5] and recognized in most of the states until abolished or modified by statute.[6] In a few of the states, however, they were never recognized.[7] An estate tail like an estate in fee simple may

Estates tail are not applicable to the habits and conditions of our society nor in harmony with the genius, spirit, and objects of depend for its continuance on the performance of a condition or may be defeated by the happening of a contingency.[8] Estates tail are created either by deed or by will.[9]

B. Classification. Estates tail are either general or special,[10] according to whether the limitation is to the heirs of the donee's body generally,[11] or to certain specified heirs, coming within that description, to the exclusion of others.[12] But the specified heirs must be lineal heirs, as an estate tail can only be created by a gift to the donee and the heirs of his body begotten.[13] Estates tail may be further limited to the heirs male or to the heirs female.[14]

C. What May Be Entailed. The statute de donis which in terms referred to "tenements" was held to comprehend all corporeal hereditaments and also incorporeal hereditaments which savor of the realty, such as rents, commons, and estovers;[15] but mere personal chattels could not be entailed;[16] and a limitation which would create an estate tail in land passed the entire interest in personal property.[17] An estate pur autre vie may be limited in tail.[18]

D. Incidents. The incidents of an estate tail were: That the tenant in tail was not chargeable with waste, that the estate was subject to both dower and curtesy,[19] and was not liable to forfeiture for treason or felony nor chargeable with the debts of the tenant after his death.[20] After the decision in Taltarum's case the right to suffer a common recovery became an inseparable incident to estates tail.[21] At a later period they were made liable by statute for the debts of the tenant to the crown due by record or special contract, and still later they were made liable for all his debts in case of bankruptcy.[22] In Massachusetts estates tail are by statute liable for the debts of the tenant in tail.[23] Estates tail are not subject to the doctrine of merger.[24]

G. Barring Estates Tail — 1. By Common Recovery. The first relief against the evils incident to estates tail[36] was procured through the courts in the decision of Taltarum's case,[37] where it was held that an estate tail might be barred by a common recovery.[38] Common recoveries thereafter became the regular means of conveying estates tail,[39] and the right to suffer a recovery was recognized as one of the incidents of such estates.[40] A common recovery duly executed passed an absolute estate defeating not only the rights of the tenant in tail but those in remainder and reversion ;[41] but it let in all the preceding encumbrances of the tenant, and rendered valid all the acts of ownership which he had exercised over the estate.[42] Common recoveries were introduced into this country and allowed as a means of barring estates tail,[43] but have now very generally been done away with under the statutory provisions relating to these estates.[44]

In England common recoveries were abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 74, authorizing tenants in tail to alienate the land in fee simple. Tiffany Real Prop. 67.

2. By Lease. The next mode of barring estates tail was by virtue of a statute[45] whereby certain leases made by tenants in tail were allowed to be good in law and bind the issue in tail.[46]

3. By Fine. A later statute[47] provided that a fine duly levied by a tenant in tail should be a complete bar to him and his heirs, and all persons claiming under the entail.[48] Fines as a means of barring estates tail were recognized in this country in a few of the states until they were abolished by statute.[49]

4. By Appointment to Charitable Uses. A later statute[50] provided that an appointment by a tenant in tail of the lands entailed to a charitable use should be good without fine or recovery.[51] This means of barring estates tail is not recognized in this country.[52]

5. By Conveyance by Deed. In the absence of statute a tenant in tail can convey only a base fee subject to be defeated at his death by the entry of his issue.[53] It is now provided by statute both in England[54] and in this country that the tenant in tail may convey the estate by deed and thus bar the entail.[55] The deed must be made bona fide,[56] for a good or valuable consideration,[57] and must be executed[58] and recorded[59] in the manner provided by statute, and have proper parties

In Virginia fines and recoveries were abolished by a statute which allowed estates tail to be docked only by an act of assembly, or in respect to estates of small value, by proceedings under a writ of ad quod damnum (Watts v. Cole, 2 Leigh 653; Carter v. Tyler, 1 Call 165), which continued to be the law until the act of 1776 by which estates tail were abolished and converted into estates in fee simple (Orndoff v. Turman, 2 Leigh 200, 21 Am. Dec. 608).

legally capable of contracting.[60] The deed must be executed by the tenant in tail seized of the estate,[61] and will not be effectual to bar the entail if made by a tenant in tail in remainder[62] or by the heir in tail during his ancestor's lifetime.[63] A tenant in tail instead of defeating the estate tail altogether may convey only a limited interest therein, and upon the expiration of the particular interest will again take the estate tail as originally held.[64] Under a statute authorizing an absolute conveyance by deed the tenant in tail may mortgage the estate.[65] The mortgage deed does not of itself bar the entail, as the whole estate is not thereby conveyed,[66] and if the mortgage debt is paid the old estate is again revived;[67] but if it is not, a sale of the equity of redemption passes the entire remaining interest and bars the entail.[68] A deed properly executed and recorded is effectual to bar an estate tail, although executed merely for this purpose, for a nominal consideration, and on an express trust that the grantee shall immediately reconvey to the grantor.[69] The deed of the tenant in tail conveys to the grantee an absolute estate in fee simple,[70] and bars not only the estate tail but also all remainders and reversions,[71] and executory devises over,[72] and does not, as in the case of a common recovery,[73] let in prior encumbrances.[74]

IV. LIFE-ESTATES.

A. Definition and Nature. An estate for life is a freehold interest in land, the duration of which cannot extend beyond the life or lives of some particular person or persons, but which may possibly endure for the period of such life or lives.[78] The estate is a freehold whether for the tenant's own life or for that of another person,[79] but may be so limited that upon the happening of a contingency it may be entirely defeated before the death of the person for whose life it was granted.[80]

B. Classification — 1. Conventional and Legal Life-Estates. Estates for life are either conventional, which are created by the acts of the parties; or legal, which are created by construction and operation of law.[81] Conventional life-estates are either for the tenant's own life or for the life of some other person,[82] to which may be added a third class, estates for the tenant's own life and the life of one or more third persons.[83]

2. Estates Pur Autre Vie. An estate pur autre vie is an estate for the life of some person other than the tenant himself,[84] and is the lowest estate of freehold.[85] At common law if a tenant pur autre vie died in the lifetime of the cestui que vie any person might enter and hold the estate for the balance of the term as a general occupant;[86] but if the estate was granted to the tenant and his heirs the heirs were entitled to take it as special occupants.[87] The subject of occupancy is now regulated by statute in England[88] and in most of the states in this country.[89]

3. Tenancy in Tail After Possibility of Issue Extinct. Tenancy in tail after possibility of issue extinct is where one is tenant in special tail and the person from whose body the issue was to spring dies without issue; or having left issue, that issue becomes extinct.[90] The estate resembles an estate tail in that the tenant is not punishable for waste;[91] and an ordinary life-estate in that at common quent event can interrupt its progress; and when it has run twenty years no formedon can afterward be maintained. Dow v. Warren, 6 Mass. 328.

law it was forfeited by alienation in fee,[92] and is subject to the doctrine of merger.[93]

4. Life-Estates in Personal Property. By the early common law a life-estate in personal property with remainder over could not be created,[94] and a gift for life carried the absolute interest.[95] It is now settled that such estates may be created,[96] and that they may be created by deed as well as by devise,[97] and without the intervention of a trustee.[98] A specific bequest for life of property necessarily consumable in the use passes the entire interest,[99] unless the will shows a contrary intention on the part of the testator;[1] but if such property is included in a general residuary bequest for life it must be sold and the principal preserved for the remainder-man.[2]

C. Creation. Life-estates created by the acts of the parties may be created either by express words[3] or by implication.[4] An express life-estate is not enlarged into a fee by being coupled with a power of conveyance,[5] or by a warranty in fee or covenant for quiet enjoyment to the grantee and his heirs,[6] or by its being doubtful who will ultimately receive the remainder.[7] A life-estate in land cannot be created by a verbal agreement but only by a valid deed or will.[8]

D. Incidents[9] — 1. Alienability.[10] A life-estate is alienable whether the estate is in land[11] or in personal property.[12]

2. Liability For Debts of Life-Tenant. A life-estate is liable for the debts of the life-tenant,[13] and this liability cannot be avoided by any provision in the instrument creating the estate.[14]

E. Relative Value of Life-Estate and Remainder. There are many cases in which it becomes necessary to put a present value upon an estate for life.[15] The English rule was to consider an estate for life as equal in value to one third of the whole,[16] and this rule has been adopted in some of the cases in this country.[17] The general rule, however, is to calculate the value according to the probable duration of the life-estate, based upon the tables of life expectancy, but taking into consideration the state of the tenant's health and the other circumstances of the particular case.[18] The application of these rules in dividing the proceeds of sales and apportioning burdens and benefits is treated elsewhere.[19]

F. Relation of Life-Tenant to Remainder-Man or Reversioner — 1. In General. The relation of a life-tenant to the remainder-man or reversioner is usually termed that of a trustee,[20] or as explained in some of the decisions, a quasi-trustee.[21] He is a trustee in the sense that he cannot injure or dispose of the property to the injury of the rights of the remainder-man,[22] or acquire an outstanding title for his own exclusive benefit;[23] but he differs from the trustee of a pure trust in that he may use the property for his exclusive benefit and take all of the income and profits.[24] In general a life-tenant can do nothing during the continuance of his estate to impair the estate in remainder,[25] and on the other hand the remainder-man cannot do any act which will affect the life-estate.[26] There is no tenure[27] nor any privity of contract[28] between a life-tenant and a remainder-man; nor is there such a fiduciary relation as will prevent the life-tenant from purchasing from the remainder-man his remainder interest.[29]

2. ACQUISITION OF OUTSTANDING TITLE OR CLAIM. A life-tenant who allows the property to be sold for taxes cannot acquire a title adverse to the remainder-man or reversioner by purchasing at the tax-sale,[30] or by receiving a release of the title acquired by another purchaser.[31] The same rule applies to a foreclosure sale caused by the neglect of the life-tenant to pay the interest upon an encumbrance.[32] If the life-tenant purchases an outstanding title or encumbrance it will be held to be for the joint benefit of himself and the remainder-man or reversioner,[33] if the latter will contribute his share of the sum which the life-tenant has

The meaning of this rule is only that the life-tenant will not be permitted to acquire an adverse title by or through such purchase, or otherwise cut out the reversioner's right of contribution, without affording the latter an opportunity to redeem, and it will not prevent an assignment of the encumbrance to a third party and a foreclosure suit by such party to require the reversioner to redeem to the extent of his proportion. Downing v. Hartshorn, (Nebr. 1903) 95 N. W. 801.

This principle does not apply to contracts made by a life-tenant to which the remainderman is not a party, the benefit of which he paid.[34] If the life-tenant in such case pays more than his proportionate share he simply becomes a creditor of the estate for that amount.[35] If the property is sold under foreclosure to satisfy an encumbrance the life-tenant may be a purchaser at the sale.[36] He cannot, however, hold the title adversely, but will be deemed to have made the purchase for the benefit of himself and the remainder-man or reversioner in case the latter will contribute his share of the purchase-price,[37] and does so within a reasonable time.[38]

G. Rights and Liabilities of Life-Tenant — 1. Right to Possession of Estate — a. Land. The life-tenant of real property is entitled to its possession and enjoyment as long as his estate therein continues,[39] and cannot be compelled to submit to a sale thereof or to accept a sum of money in lieu of the specific use of the property.[40] If the remainder-man or reversioner obtains possession of the land before the determination of the life-estate, he will be required to restore the possession and to account to the life-tenant for all the rents and profits received by him.[41]

b. Personal Property. Where specific chattels are bequeathed for life the life-tenant is entitled to the actual possession of the property,[42] and cannot be compelled to submit to a sale or a commutation of his interest;[43] but where personal property is included in a general residuary bequest for life it should be sold by the executor, and the interest paid to the legatee for life, and the principal kept for the remainder-man,[44] unless the will shows a contrary intention on the part of the may enjoy without disputing the remainder-man's title. Bogle v. North Carolina R. Co., 51 N. C. 419.

In Maine the rule is to allow the tenant testator.[45] An executor should also invest a bequest for life of money,[46] and should sell and invest the proceeds of property, the use of which is its conversion into money,[47] or the possession of which is not essential to its beneficial enjoyment,[48] or which is of a perishable character,[49] unless the will shows an intention that the possession of the fund or property should be intrusted to the life-tenant.[50] The executor may instead of selling the property intrust it to the life-tenant upon his giving a sufficient bond;[51] but if he does so without such security and the property is consumed or wasted by the life-tenant the executor will be liable to the remainder-man for the injury sustained.[52]

2. Rights as to Use of Personal Property. Where there is a life-estate in personal property there must always be a power to make it available according to the circumstances,[53] and the life-tenant may convert one kind of property into another or change the character of the investments, provided such acts are in accordance with prudent management and the value of the property as a whole is not diminished.[54] Ordinarily the life-tenant is entitled to appropriate only the income and profits, and cannot encroach upon the corpus of the estate,[55] unless authorized to do so by the will;[56] but he may invest a fund, and the profits from such investment become his exclusive property, the remainder-man being entitled only to a return of the original sum.[57] When there is a specific bequest of personal property entirely consumable in the use and not reproductive the life-tenant may use it without any accountability to the remainder-man,[58] and when such property is included in a general bequest of personal property, to be specifically enjoyed, the rights of the remainder-man are defeated as to all of such property which is consumed in the use intended to be made of it;[59] but where personal property which should properly be sold and the proceeds invested is left in the custody of the life-tenant, he must account for all of the property consumed by him above the proportion to which he is entitled.[60] Where the property is consumable but also reproductive, such as flocks and herds, the life-tenant is entitled to the increase but must keep up the original stock.[61]

3. Estovers. Every tenant for life is entitled of common right to take reasonable estovers; that is, wood from off the land for fuel, fences, agricultural erections, and other necessary improvements.[62] In taking wood for fuel he is entitled to take a reasonable quantity,[63] and to take good fuel and such as is conveniently situated.[64] The right includes a reasonable supply for servants living in the same or another house upon the premises.[65] He may cut whatever timber is necessary for making repairs on the premises,[66] and if there are mines on the estate which he has a right to work he may take such timber as is necessary for mining operations.[67] He has no right to sell any of the firewood or timber or to exchange it for materials for repairs or to take more than is necessary.[68]

4. Emblements. A tenant for life, or his legal representative, is entitled to emblements, that is, the crops planted by him prior to the termination of the life-estate, in all cases where the life-estate is terminated by the act of God, as by the death of the tenant,[69] or where without the tenant's fault it is terminated by the

e. Stock Dividends.[98] Where the income from corporate stock is given for life with remainder over there is much conflict in the decisions as to the respective rights of the life-tenant and remainder-man.[99] In Massachusetts the rule is that cash dividends are income and go to the life-tenant and that stock dividends are capital and go to the remainder-man,[1] even though the cash dividends consist of a part of the capital of the company,[2] or the stock dividends are declared out of the net earnings.[3] The rule most generally followed, however, is to class a dividend according to what it really represents and not according to the form in which it is declared.[4] So if it is declared from the earnings of the company it is income and goes to the life-tenant, although declared in stock[5] or certificates of indebtedness.[6] On the other hand if the dividend is in fact a distribution of a part of the actual capital of the company it belongs to the remainder-man.[7] As regards the time of declaring the dividend, dividends declared during the continuance of the life-estate go to the life-tenant,[8] while those declared before the life-estate takes effect,[9] or after its termination,[10] are part of the corpus of the estate. Dividends earned prior to the creation of the life-

waste has been greatly modified in this country, and many things may be done by a tenant for life here that in England would be waste.[37] In England it is waste for a life-tenant to convert arable land into meadow or pasture land or vice versa,[38] but in this country the rule is otherwise,[39] unless the change is detrimental to the inheritance and contrary to the ordinary course of good husbandry.[40] Where a life-estate is given in personal property, to be enjoyed in specie, the tenant is liable for waste if he converts any of the chattels to unauthorized uses.[41] A life-estate may be created "without impeachment for waste," in which case the tenant may do all reasonable acts consistent with the preservation of the estate which otherwise might in law be waste;[42] but he cannot commit malicious or equitable waste so as to destroy the estate.[43]

A purchaser from a life-tenant, although holding under a deed which purports to convey the fee, must pay the annual taxes, and cannot recover therefor when ejected by the remainder-man. Bone v. Tyrrell, 113 Mo. 175, 20 S. W. 796.

If the life-tenant considers the tax illegal he should notify the reversioner of this fact and should be indemnified against loss in case the payment of the tax is to be resisted. Stetson v. Day, 51 Me. 434.

Where the tax had been assessed against the testator and become a liability against him prior to the creation of the life-estate, it must be paid by the executors and cannot be charged against the life-tenant. Taxes which have accumulated against the life-tenant are not chargeable against the remainder-man. Loeb v. Struck, 42 S. W. 401, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 935.

98. Abernethy v. Orton, 42 Oreg. 437, 71 Pac. 327, 95 Am. St. Rep. 774, holding also that the burden of proving any agreement which would relieve the life-tenant from his liability for taxes is upon the life-tenant.

99. Griffin v. Fleming, 72 Ga. 697, holding that where the devise of a life-estate contains a provision that it shall be occupied "free of rent or other charges" the life-tenant is not liable for the payment of taxes.

Where a will shows an intention that the entire income of a trust fund should be paid to the tenant for life, the trustee should pay to collect the rents and income and apply them to this purpose,[1] or the remainder-man may pay the taxes and recover the amount from the life-tenant.[2] The liability as a rule is limited to the income or rental value of the property,[3] but all of the rents and profits accruing during the continuance of the life-estate are applicable to the discharge of the liability.[4] To allow the estate to be sold for taxes is waste,[5] and the life-tenant is liable to the remainder-man for the injury sustained by him,[6] except in cases where the income or rental value of the property was insufficient to pay the taxes.[7] An assessment for a public improvement is not an ordinary tax.[8] If the assessment is for something in the nature of a permanent improvement of the whole estate it may be ratably and equitably divided between the tenant for life and remainder-man,[9] but where the improvement is of a temporary character, calculated to benefit only the life-interest, the assessment must be paid entirely by the life-tenant.[10]

encumbrances must keep down the interest accruing on such encumbrances during the continuance of his estate,[11] at least to the extent of the income or rental value of the property.[12] So if the encumbrance is paid off by the remainder-man or reversioner during the continuance of the life-estate, the life-tenant must contribute as his proportionate share the interest on the amount during the continuance of his estate.[13] The remainder-man or reversioner is not obliged to accept this interest in annual instalments, but may require that it be estimated according to the probable duration of the life-estate and paid in a gross sum;[14] but if no apportionment is made until the termination of the life-estate it will be based upon the period of its actual duration.[15] The life-tenant is not obliged to pay off arrears of interest accumulated prior to the beginning of his estate,[16] although such interest will be counted as a part of the principal debt on which the subsequently accruing interest must be kept down.[17] A life-tenant is under no obligation to pay off the principal of an encumbrance,[18] even to prevent a fore-

sale is necessary to protect the rights of the parties in interest.[42] It is also within the general powers of a court of equity to order a sale for reinvestment where all the parties interested are properly represented.[43] In the absence of statute a court of equity has no jurisdiction to decree a sale of the fee simple title in order to pay taxes or assessments.[44] Where property subject to a life-estate is sold under a decree of court that portion of the proceeds representing the relative value of the life-estate vests absolutely in the life-tenant and passes to his assignee or personal representative.[45]

3. Right to Equitable Relief in General.[87] In all cases where property in the hands of a life-tenant is in danger of loss, deterioration, or injury, the remainder-man or reversioner is entitled to come into equity by a bill quia timet for the protection of his interest in the property.[88] Either a vested or a contingent remainder-man is entitled to equitable relief for the protection of his interest,[89] but in the case of a contingent remainder-man the allowance of such relief will be governed by the circumstances of the particular case, and the degree of probability as to the contingent interest ever becoming vested.[90]

4. Injunction[91]— a. To Restrain Removal of Personal Property. Equity will enjoin a life-tenant of personal property from removing it out of the state,[92] but not unless good grounds are shown for believing that it is his intention to do so;[93] and, if the property has already been removed, equity will not usually interfere to redress the wrong until the remainder-man's right to possession has accrued.[94]

6. Sequestration[2] and Ne Exeat.[3] A writ of sequestration may be issued at the instance of a remainder-man or reversioner to prevent a life-tenant of personal property from removing it from the state,[4] but the writ will not be granted where there are not sufficient facts set forth to enable the court to see that the fear of such removal is well founded.[5] If the property subject to a life-estate has already been removed the court cannot order the sequestration of other property of the life-tenant,[6] but the tenant himself may be arrested under a writ of ne exeat and required to give bond not to leave the state and to abide the judgment of the court.[7]

life made a conveyance in fee by way of feoffment, fine, or recovery, he forfeited his estate.[18] A conveyance by deed of bargain and sale, lease and release, or other conveyance under the statute of uses, did not work a forfeiture.[19] In this country an alienation in fee does not work a forfeiture of the life-estate, but merely passes the estate of the grantor;[20] and in some of the states it is expressly so provided by statute.[21]

b. For Waste. At common law a life-tenant forfeited his estate by the commission of waste,[22] and in this country it is so provided by statute in some of the states.[23] Equity will in some cases prevent a forfeiture where the injury is repaired by the life-tenant before judgment of forfeiture is rendered.[24]

c. For Non-Payment of Taxes. In Ohio it is provided by statute that where a life-tenant permits the land to be sold for taxes and does not redeem the same within one year his estate shall be forfeited.[25]

d. For Disclaimer. At common law a tenant for life forfeited his estate by any act in a court of record amounting to a disclaimer of the superior title, as by claiming in himself a larger estate or affirming the reversion to be in a stranger.[26]

V. Remainders.

A. Definition and Nature. A remainder is a remnant of an estate in land, depending upon a particular prior estate, created at the same time, and by the same instrument, and limited to arise immediately on the determination of that estate, and not in abridgment of it.[41] The term "remainder" is a relative expression and implies that some part of the estate is previously disposed of,[42] which part must necessarily be something less than a fee, or in other words, such as would leave a reversion in the grantor if no remainder were created.[43] The particular estate and remainder, although different parts, the one in possession and the other in expectancy, are in fact only one estate.[44] The creation of these estates and the distinctions between vested and contingent remainders are treated elsewhere.[45]

B. Essential Characteristics — 1. Must Have Preceding Particular Estate — a. Necessity. The first essential of a remainder is that there must be a preceding particular estate.[46] This follows necessarily from the definition, since there can be no remnant of the whole unless a part has been disposed of;[47] and in the case of a freehold estate, which at common law could be created only by livery of seizin, it was necessary, in order to support the remainder, to create a particular estate, to the tenant of which livery of seizin could be made, to hold until the remainder should vest in possession.[48]

b. Character of Preceding Estate.[49] The particular estate must be a valid estate, for if void in its creation a remainder limited thereon is void also.[50] In quantity of interest it may be an estate tail,[51] or, as is usually the case, an estate for life;[52] but a tenancy at will is said to be too slender and precarious to be considered a portion of the inheritance and therefore insufficient to support a remainder.[53] A freehold limitation after an estate for years is not technically a remainder but takes effect at once subject to the term of years.[54] If the remainder is contingent and amounts to a freehold it must have a particular estate or freehold to support it.[55]

2. Must Be Created at Same Time as Preceding Estate. The remainder must pass out of the grantor at the time of the creation of the particular estate,[56] and by the same conveyance;[57] for if the particular estate were first created the residue would be a reversion, and if the remainder were first created it would fail for want of a particular estate to support it.[58]

3. Must Await Regular Determination of Preceding Estate. A remainder must await the natural termination of the particular estate and cannot be limited on an event which prematurely determines it.[59] A remainder may, however, take effect after a special limitation as distinguished from an estate on condition,[60] since a limitation merely marks the natural termination of the preceding estate and does not operate in derogation of it.[61]

4. Must Vest During or Immediately on Termination of Preceding Estate. The remainder must vest in right during the continuance of the particular estate, or eo instanti that it determines,[62] otherwise the freehold would be in abeyance and the remainder would fail for want of a particular estate to support it.[63]

5. No Remainder After a Fee Simple. A remainder cannot be limited so as to take effect after a fee simple,[64] whether it be a fee simple absolute or a fee conditional,[65] or a base or qualified fee,[66] although such a limitation may be good as an executory devise;[67] for a fee being the entire estate there can be no remainder after that is disposed of.[68] But notwithstanding a remainder cannot be limited after a fee, it is possible even at common law to limit two concurrent fees by way of remainder as substitutes or alternatives, one for the other, the latter to take effect in case the prior one should fail to vest in interest.[69] In such cases neither remainder is limited upon or after the other, but as soon as either becomes vested all rights under the other are forever excluded.[70] These remainders are sometimes known as "alternative remainders," and sometimes as "remainders on a contingency with a double aspect."[71]

6. STATUTORY MODIFICATIONS. The requirements of the common law as to the creation and essential characteristics of remainders have now been so modified by statute that the statutes of the particular state must be consulted.[72] But even in the absence of express statute these common-law requirements have lost most of their practical importance, since under the statutes of uses and wills a future limitation, although not good as a remainder, may in almost all cases take effect as a future use or executory devise.[73]

C. Remainders in Personal Property. At common law there could be no interest by way of remainder created in personal property,[74] and a gift for life with remainder over passed the entire interest therein;[75] but it is now well settled that such estates may be created.[76] Remainders in personal property may be

Thus there are statutes in some states providing that any estate may be made to commence in futuro without the intervention of a preceding estate; that a fee may be limited after a fee, or a contingent freehold remainder after a term of years; that a remainder may be limited on a contingency which might operate to abridge the preceding estate; that a contingent remainder shall be valid if it would be valid as a conditional limitation; and that an estate which would be good as an executory devise shall be equally so if created by deed. created either by deed or by will,[77] but it has been held that they cannot be created by parol.[78]

D. Acceleration of Remainder. A remainder is said to be accelerated where the time for its vesting in possession is shortened by the preceding estate being prematurely determined or for some reason incapable of taking effect.[79] So, where there is a devise for life to one who is legally incapable of taking,[80] or to one who refuses to accept the devise,[81] or if the life-interest is revoked by the testator,[82] or is subsequently forfeited by the life-tenant,[83] or if the devisee for life dies before the testator and the remainder-man survives him,[84] a vested remainder dependent thereon is accelerated; and where there are several successive remainders, one of which is void, the succeeding remainder is accelerated.[85] So also where there is a devise to a widow during widowhood with remainder over after her death, and the widow remarries, the remainder takes effect at once.[86] The doctrine of acceleration, however, is founded on the presumed intention of the testator, and will not be applied where a contrary intention appears.[87] In the case of a contingent remainder, it being uncertain until the happening of the contingency who will be entitled thereto, there can be no acceleration by a premature determination of the preceding estate.[88] The rule as to acceleration applies to remainders in personal property as well as realty.[89]

E. Rights and Liabilities of Remainder-Men. A great majority of the cases in which the rights and liabilities of both remainder-men and reversioners are considered arise out of controversies between these tenants and a preceding tenant for life, and as their rights and remedies in such cases are in most respects similar, they are, in order to avoid the repetition of general principles, treated a contingent remainder-man makes a conveyance by deed with general covenants of warranty, the title which vests upon the happening of the contingency inures to the benefit of the grantee, and the grantor will be estopped to assert title to the property;[3] and a conveyance for a valuable consideration will also be upheld in equity as an executory contract to convey and will be enforced as such upon the happening of the contingency and vesting of the estate.[4] The tendency of the modern authorities is to make a distinction between the cases where the contingency is in the uncertainty of the person and where it is merely in the uncertainty of the event,[5] holding that if the person who is to take the remainder in case the contingency happens is definitely ascertained, his interest is more than a mere possibility and may be conveyed;[6] and it has even been held that one of a class of such remainder-men, whose interest is liable to be cut down in amount by the birth of other remainder-men, may nevertheless convey his own interest subject to this contingency.[7] A contingent remainder might even at common law be released to the tenant in possession.[8] In a number of the states contingent remainders are alienable under the statutes authorizing the conveyance of "expectant estates,"[9] or "any estate or interest,"[10] or "any interest or claim" in real property.[11]

2. SALE BY ORDER OF COURT.[12] A court of equity has jurisdiction, provided the parties in interest are properly represented before it, to order the sale of property

St. 312, 322, 25 Atl. 44); but the cases cited do not support the statement and there is no reference to a prior decision of the same court (Stewart v. Neely, 139 Pa. St. 309, 316, 20 Atl. 1002), where the court said: "A contingent remainder can only be conveyed by devise; a deed purporting to convey it operates only as an estoppel, unless the conveyance is after the contingency happens."

in which there are remainder interests, for the purpose of reinvestment,[13] or where a sale is necessary to preserve such interests for those ultimately entitled thereto.[14] There is some conflict of authority, however, as to the power of the court in cases where there are remainder-men who are not ascertained or not in being.[15] If the remainder is to a class, those of the class who are in being may represent the others and a sale may be ordered,[16] so also if there are successive classes and the first class entitled to the remainder is represented.[17] If the remainder is to a class, none of whom are in being, it has been held that such interest cannot be represented and that no sale can be ordered,[18] and the same has been held where the remainder was to such children of the life-tenant as might be surviving at his death, on the ground that until the event it could not be ascertained who would represent the class.[19] In other cases, however, it has been held that the sale might be ordered, notwithstanding none of the class first entitled to the remainder were in being.[20] Where the estate is vested in a trustee he may represent contingent remainder-men not in being and the court may order a sale.[21] In all cases the order of the court must provide for such an investment of the proceeds as will protect the rights of all persons who have or may subsequently acquire an interest therein.[22] A court of equity will not order a sale to satisfy an execution[23] or the claims of attaching creditors.[24]

G. Bar or Defeat of Contingent Remainder — 1. In General. Since the remainder must have a preceding particular estate to support it,[29] and must vest during the continuance of this estate or eo instanti that it determines,[30] it follows that in the absence of any statutory provision,[31] or the interposition of a trustee to preserve the remainder,[32] if the particular estate determines or is defeated before the happening of the contingency upon which alone the remainder can vest, any contingent remainder dependent thereon will be defeated;[33] and it is immaterial whether the preceding estate is ended by reaching its natural limit or is terminated by the act of the tenant or by operation of law.[34] If the contingent remainder cannot take effect immediately on the first determination of the particular estate, it cannot vest afterward, although the particular estate should again come in being.[35]

2. By Natural Termination of Preceding Estate. If the preceding estate reaches its natural termination, as by the death of a life-tenant, before the event of the contingency upon which the contingent remainder is to vest, the remainder is defeated;[36] but if the preceding estate is in several persons, in common or in severalty, the remainder may fail as to one part and take effect as to another, since the particular tenant of one part may die before the contingency happens and the tenant of another part survive it.[37] Where the remainder is to a class of persons definitely described,[38] or to the survivors of a class,[39] only those persons answering the description who are in being when the contingency happens can take; and where none are in being answering such description at the happening of the contingency, the remainder is entirely defeated.[40]

3. By Alienation or Forfeiture. A contingent remainder may be barred by a tortious conveyance by the tenant of the preceding particular estate, as where he makes a conveyance of the estate by means of feoffment with livery of seizin,[41]

fine,[42] or common recovery;[43] but conveyances which derive their operation from the statute of uses, as a bargain and sale, lease and release, and the like, do not bar contingent remainders since they do not pass any greater estate than the grantor may lawfully convey.[44] The particular tenant may also forfeit his estate, and thus bar a contingent remainder by other means, as by the breach of a condition subsequent;[45] but any act of the tenant which merely gives the person having the next vested estate a right of entry, and does not ipso facto determine the estate, will not bar the contingent remainder unless advantage of the forfeiture be taken.[46]

4. By Merger.[47] A contingent remainder may be defeated by merger, where the preceding particular estate and the next vested estate of inheritance meet in the same person;[48] and if they meet only as to a part of the inheritance the remainder will be defeated pro tanto.[49] If the inheritance is given to the donee of the particular estate by the same instrument creating the contingent remainder, the estates will not merge so as to defeat such remainder;[50] but if by a subsequent conveyance, the contingent remainder will be defeated.[51] A further distinction is to be observed where the tenant of the particular estate takes the inheritance by descent.[52] If the descent is immediate from the person by whom the particular estate and the contingent remainder were created, there will be no merger,[53] unless after the descent the estates are conveyed to a third person;[54] but if the descent is not immediate the remainder will be defeated.[55]

5. By Sale Under Order of Court. In Pennsylvania it is provided by statute that contingent remainders may be barred by a sale under order of court,[56] but it must be alleged in the application that such is the purpose of the sale,[57] and all persons having a present interest in the property must be made parties.[58]

6. Trustees to Preserve Remainder. In order to prevent contingent remainders from being defeated by the premature determination or destruction of the preceding estate, a system was devised of interposing a trustee having a legal estate to support the remainder until the happening of the contingency upon which it could take effect.[59] This might be effected either by giving the trustee

a vested remainder, or by conveying the estate directly to the trustee and his heirs in trust for the tenant of the particular estate, and upon the further trust to preserve the contingent remainder.[60] Limitations in trust to preserve contingent remainders were not executed by the statute of uses, the legal estate in such case remaining in the trustee.[61] The trustee might, by joining with the preceding tenant, defeat the remainder,[62] which ordinarily would constitute a breach of trust;[63] but under the particular circumstances of some cases it has been held not to be a breach of trust,[64] and courts of equity have even directed that he should do so.[65]

7. Statutory Provisions. The possibility of contingent remainders being defeated by the premature determination or destruction of the preceding estate is now very generally done away with by express statutory provision, both in England,[66] and in this country.[67] There are also statutes in some of the states providing that any estate may be created to commence in futuro without any preceding estate to support it,[68] and that no conveyance shall operate to pass more than the grantor can lawfully convey.[69]

H. Actions by Remainder-Man[70] — 1. Rights of Action — a. At Law. A vested remainder-man may, during the continuance of the preceding estate, maintain an action for damages for any injury to his remainder interest.[71] A contingent remainder-man, having no vested interest, cannot maintain an action for damages in the nature of waste,[72] although he is entitled to have his contingent

Where a life-tenant has allowed property to be sold through failure to pay the interest on an encumbrance, the fact that the remainder-man might have had a sequestrator appointed during the lifetime of the life-tenant, to apply the rents and income to this purpose, does not deprive him of the right to recover the damages sustained from the estate of the life-tenant after his death. interest protected in equity.[73] Since a remainder-man has no present right to possession,[74] he cannot, during the continuance of the preceding estate, maintain an action for partition,[75] or an action of trespass to try title,[76] or a writ of entry against one rightfully in possession under the life-tenant.[77] A remainder-man cannot, even after the termination of the life-estate, maintain an action of trover for a conversion during the continuance of that estate.[78] Immediately on the death of the life-tenant the remainder-man's right of entry is complete and he may maintain an action to recover the property.[79] A remainder interest in personal property may be recovered either in an action on the case[80] or in an action of account.[81] Where personal property has been wrongfully sold by the life-tenant the remainder-man may, after the life-tenant's death, elect to proceed for the recovery of the property itself or for its value.[82]

b. In Equity. A remainder-man is entitled to equitable relief whenever necessary to protect his interest against loss or injury,[83] whether in the hands of the preceding tenant for life[84] or some other person.[85] And where the property is in the hands of a trustee any breach of trust or improper conduct on the part of the trustee is a ground for equitable relief,[86] and the remainder-man may maintain a suit for the appointment of a new trustee and for an accounting.[87] A remainder-man may also, during the continuance of the preceding estate, maintain a suit in equity to remove a cloud upon his title.[88] The rights of a contingent remainder-man are much more extensive in equity than at law, for, while he will not be

This rule does not apply to cases where the remainder-man has a present beneficial interest in addition to his interest in remainder, and in such a case a bill to set aside a deed executed by a trustee of the estate will be barred where there has been an unreasonable delay on the part of the remainder-man in asserting his claim to the property. McCoy v. Poor, 56 Md. 197.

94. Shortle v. Terre Haute, etc., R. Co., 131 Ind. 338, 30 N. E. 1084.

95. Murray v. Quigley, (Iowa 1902) 92 N. W. 869, holding that under the Iowa stat-

the rule apply to possessory actions where the entire estate is granted to a trustee, who holds the legal title in fee for the benefit of both the particular estate and the estate in remainder, in which case if the trustee's right of action is barred the cestuis que trustent in remainder are barred also.[96] The failure of a remainder-man to enter or otherwise enforce a forfeiture incurred by a preceding life-tenant until the right to do so is barred merely confirms the existing life-estate and does not affect his subsequently accruing right upon the death of the life-tenant,[97] and the same rule applies in cases where the life-tenant refuses to accept the devise.[98]

3. PARTIES.[99] In an action by a remainder-man, after the termination of the preceding estate, to recover his remainder interest in the hands of an adverse claimant, it is not necessary that the personal representative of the testator,[1] or of the preceding tenant,[2] should be made a party. Where personal property has been wrongfully disposed of by the preceding tenant and a remainder-man sues to recover his interest in the proceeds, all of the remainder-men interested in the fund must be made parties,[3] but any remainder-men who joined in the sale, and thereby divested themselves of their interest in the property, need not be joined.[4] Several remainder-men may maintain a joint action against a personal representative of a preceding life-tenant to recover rents collected by him which accrued after the termination of the life-estate.[5] A bill for the sequestration of personal property to prevent its removal from the state, which does not seek a final adjudication of the rights of the parties, but only to have the property secured, may be maintained by one remainder-man without making another, who is tenant in common with him, a party.[6]

4. PLEADINGS.[7] In an action to recover a remainder interest it is not necessary to aver a grant of administration on the estate of the testator,[8] nor need every article sought to be recovered be specifically described.[9] In a suit in equity to protect the remainder from loss or injury every fact essential to the relief which plaintiff seeks must be averred in the bill, and no relief can be granted for matters not alleged, although they may appear from other parts of the pleadings and evidence.[10]

5. EVIDENCE.[11] On a writ of entry by a remainder-man the entry of the remainder-man or some person for him or holding under him must be proved;[12] and in an action of ejectment the evidence must show that the preceding life-tenant was dead at the time the action was commenced.[13] In an action of trover against a purchaser from the life-tenant proof of a demand and refusal is evidence not only of a conversion at the time of the demand, but it authorizes a jury to presume a conversion from the time the remainder-man's right to possession accrued.[14]

6. VARIANCE. In an action by a remainder-man for an injury to his estate, the fact that it is misnamed as a reversion instead of a remainder is immaterial.[15] ute the right to maintain an action to quiet title, involving the vacating of a patent, may be barred during the continuance of the life-estate.

VI. REVERSIONS.

A. Definition and Nature. An estate in reversion is the residue of an estate left in the grantor, to commence in possession after the determination of some particular estate granted out by him.[17] It is a present vested estate, although to take effect in possession and profit in futuro,[18] and necessarily assumes that the original owner has not parted with his whole estate or interest in the land.[19]

B. Creation. A reversion is never created by deed or writing but arises by construction and operation of law,[20] and occurs wherever a grantor has conveyed less than his whole interest or estate.[21]

C. Incidents. The usual incidents to reversions at common law were fealty 519, holding that since the distinction refers only to the manner of derivation of title, each meaning an estate after the termination of a particular estate, a failure to discriminate in this form of action is immaterial.

Where a particular right of action is expressly given by statute to a "reversioner" it will not be held to include a remainder-man. Symons v. Leaker, 15 Q. B. D. 629, 49 J. P. 775, 54 L. J. Q. B. 480, 53 L. T. Rep. N. S. 227, 33 Wkly. Rep. 875.

A reversion is otherwise defined as: "The return of an estate to the grantor and his heirs, after the grant is over." Booth v. Terrell, 16 Ga. 20, 25; 4 Kent Comm. 353.

"What remains to the owner of an estate after he has parted with a portion of it, the possession of what thus remains being to return or revert to him upon the termination of the period for which the portion so parted with was to be enjoyed." 2 Washburn Real Prop. (6th ed.) 496 [quoted in De Kermel v. Alexander, 4 Ky. L. Rep. 142, 145].

"The Estate left in the Lessor or Donor, where he has given or parted with the Possession to another." Wrotesley v. Adams, 1 Plowd. 187, 196.

"The residue of an estate left in the grantor or his heirs, or in the heirs of a testator, commencing in possession on the determination of a particular estate granted or devised." Livingston v. New York L. Ins., etc., Co., 13 N. Y. Suppl. 105, 107; Payn v. Beal, 4 Den. (N. Y.) 405, 411.

The term "reversion" has two significations: first, as designating the estate left in the grantor during the continuance of a particular estate; and second, the returning of the land to the grantor or his heirs after the grant is over. Powell v. Dayton, etc., R. Co., 16 Oreg. 33, 16 Pac. 863, 8 Am. St. Rep. 251; Wrotesley v. Adams, 1 Plowd. 187.

At common law, if a remainder were limited to the heirs of the grantor, it took effect as a reversion, and it would be competent for the grantor as being himself the reversioner, after making such a limitation, to grant away the reversion. 2 Washburn Real Prop. (6th ed.) 503 [quoted in Akers v. Clark, 184 Ill. 136, 137, 56 N. E. 296, 75 Am. St. Rep. 152; Alexander v. De Kermel, 5 Ky. L. Rep. 382, 387 (affirming 4 Ky. L. Rep. 142)].

and rent.[22] The former, in the feudal sense, does not exist in this country.[23] Rent is an incident to the reversion, although not inseparably so.[24] The rent may be granted away, reserving the reversion,[25] or the reversion may be granted away reserving the rent by special words.[26] By a general grant of the reversion the rent will pass with it as an incident to it,[27] and the rule is the same where the assignment of the reversion is by mortgage instead of by an absolute conveyance;[28] but a general grant of the rent will not pass the reversion.[29] Rent which is due and in arrears at the time of the assignment of the reversion does not pass as an incident thereto.[30] A reversion is devisable, descendible, and alienable in the same manner as an estate in possession.[31]

D. Rights and Liabilities of Reversioner. A reversioner has no right of possession during the continuance of the preceding estate and is liable for trespass on the land in the same manner as any other person;[32] but upon the termination of such estate he is entitled to the immediate possession of the premises, notwithstanding any lease previously executed by the preceding tenant.[33] If the owner of a precedent life-estate is disseized, the reversioner is not obliged to enter at once, but has a new right of entry upon the death of the life-tenant.[34] A reversioner cannot, during the continuance of a life-estate, authorize the cutting of timber on the estate.[35] A reversioner is entitled to the benefit of any increase in value in the property before the termination of the preceding estate.[36]

E. Conveyance by Reversioner.[37] A reversion is a vested estate which the reversioner may convey absolutely by deed.[38]

F. Actions — 1. Rights of Action[39] — a. At Law. A reversioner may, during the continuance of the preceding estate, maintain an action for any injury done to the inheritance,[40] but not for an injury which affects only the preceding estate and not the reversionary interest.[41] If an injury to the possession is of such a character that without further interference by the act of man it would in the ordinary course of things continue to be so after the determination of the particular estate, the reversioner has a right of action on the ground that it might by lapse of time ripen into a right injurious to the inheritance,[42] but this rule is restricted to cases of nuisances of a fixed and permanent nature, the necessary effect of which is the injury complained of.[43] An action of case is the proper form of proceeding for an injury to an interest in reversion.[44] An action of trespass cannot be maintained by a reversioner who is not in possession of the premises,[45] unless authorized by statute.[46]

b. In Equity. A reversioner may maintain a suit in equity to prevent a threatened injury to his rights,[47] or to establish his claim, and to be placed in a condition to make it available whenever he shall become entitled to the possession of the estate.[48]

ance it is not necessary for the owner of the preceding particular estate to be made a party.[50] One of two reversioners may maintain an action for an injury to the inheritance without joining the other, unless the non-joinder is pleaded in abatement; and under the general issue, evidence of such non-joinder will not defeat the action, but will merely restrict plaintiff to the recovery of a moiety of the damage.[51]

3. PLEADING.[52] The declaration must either state an injury of such a permanent nature as to be necessarily injurious to the reversion, or must explicitly allege that it was done to the injury of the reversion.[53] The declaration should not be argumentative or contain a statement of the proof.[54] It is sufficient if it sets up an injury of such a permanent nature as to be necessarily injurious to the reversion,[55] but a mere allegation of injury to the reversion, without facts showing an injury of this character, is insufficient.[56] Under a statute providing that personal property shall be forfeited to the reversioner upon its removal out of the state by a tenant in dower, without the reversioner's consent, the declaration must allege that the removal was without such consent.[57]

4. EVIDENCE.[58] The evidence must be confined strictly to the damage done to the inheritance,[59] and the proof must establish that the injury complained of is prejudicial to the reversionary interest and not merely to the estate in possession.[60]

5. LIMITATIONS AND LACHES.[61] The statute of limitations does not run against a reversioner until the determination of the preceding particular estate,[62] nor can any laches in asserting his claim to the property be imputed to him until after his right of entry accrues.[63]

6. QUESTIONS OF LAW AND FACT. Whether the injury complained of is an injury to the reversion or merely to the possessory interest is a question of fact for the jury.[64]

7. DAMAGES. The reversioner can recover damages only for the injury done to the inheritance and not for any injury to the preceding estate.[65]

VII. MERGER OF ESTATES.[66]

A. Rule Stated. Whenever a greater estate and a less coincide and meet in one and the same person, without any intermediate estate, the less is immediately annihilated; or in the law phrase it is said to be merged, that is, sunk or drowned in the greater.[67] The merger is produced either from the meeting of an estate of higher degree with an estate of inferior degree, or from the meeting of the particular estate and the immediate reversion in the same person.[68] A greater estate can never be merged into a smaller, and if either perishes by the merger it must be the smaller estate;[69] but a portion of a particular estate may be merged without the residue; the merger being coextensive with the interest merged and extending only to the part in which the owner has two several estates.[70] The estate in which the merger takes place is not enlarged by the accession of the preceding estate; it continues precisely of the same quality and extent of ownership as before, and the lesser estate is extinguished.[71]

B. Application of Rule at Law and in Equity. At law, the rule that whenever a greater estate and a less coincide in the same person without any intermediate estate the lesser is merged, is invariable and inflexible.[72] In equity, the rules of law as to merger are not followed,[73] and the doctrine of merger is not favored.[74] Equity will prevent or permit a merger as will best subserve the pur-first severed from its native bed, without deducting the expense of severing it. Franklin Coal Co. v. McMillan, 49 Md. 549, 33 Am. Rep. 280.

poses of justice and the actual and just intent of the parties.[75] Wherever a merger would operate inequitably it will be prevented.[76] The controlling consideration is the intention, expressed or implied, of the person in whom the estates unite,[77] provided the intention be just and fair,[78] and a merger will not be permitted contrary to such intent.[79] Where there is no expression of intention equity will presume such an intent as is consistent with the best interests of the party;[80] and the same presumption is indulged where the party is an infant,[81] or person of unsound mind.[82] The intent of the party does not become fixed and unchangeable until someone acquires an interest in the property giving a right to draw such intent in question.[83]

C. Conditions Essential to Merger. In order that there may be a merger it is essential that there should be at least two distinct estates,[84] and that these estates should meet in the same person,[85] at the same time,[86] and without any intervening estate.[87] It is also laid down by some authorities that the estates must be held in the same right,[88] but while this is true where one estate is an accession to the other merely by operation of law, there may be a merger of two estates held in different rights which meet in the same person by act of the parties.[89] Where the greater estate is held by a fraudulent conveyance which is set aside, the lesser estate will not be merged.[90]

estate in remainder or reversion is as large as the preceding estate.[92] If the owner of a life-estate acquires the fee to only a portion of the remainder there will be a merger pro tanto,[93] but the life-estate in the remainder of the property will not be affected.[94] An estate pur autre vie may merge in an estate for the tenant's own life,[95] as well as in the remainder or reversion in fee.[96] In equity the merger will be prevented whenever necessary to protect the rights of an innocent third party,[97] or of the person in whom the estates meet.[98]

2. Estates For Years. An estate for years will merge in the remainder or reversion in fee,[99] or in another estate for years or an estate for life.[1] A particular estate for years will merge in a reversionary term for years, although it may be for a longer period than the reversion,[2] and any term of years, however long, will merge in an estate for life.[3] A legal title for a term of years will not be merged where the title to the reversion is merely equitable.[4] Equity will prevent the merger of an estate for years, if necessary to protect the interests of the person in whom the estates meet.[5]

A man cannot be trustee for himself, and consequently, as soon as a trust estate and the legal title unite in the same person, the trust estate is merged and lost. Hopkinson v. Dumas, 42 N. H. 296; Wills v. Cooper, 25 N. J. L. 137; Goodright v. Wells, 1 Dougl. (3d ed.) 771.

Where a widow, prior to an assignment of dower, joins with the heirs in a conveyance purporting to pass the entire estate, her equitable interest is merged in the estate conveyed by the heirs, and she cannot thereafter claim an assignment of dower in the land. Reeves v. Brooks, 80 Ala. 26.

interest,[8] or essential to the ends of justice,[9] that the estates should be kept separate.[10] But there can be no merger of a legal in an equitable estate so as to extinguish the legal title.[11] It is essential to the merger of an equitable in a legal estate that the two estates should be coextensive and commensurate.[12]

4. DOWER. Where a widow becomes the owner in fee of land in which she has a dower right, the dower right is merged in the fee,[13] except where it is manifestly to her interest that the two titles should be kept distinct.[14]

5. ESTATES TAIL. An estate tail is an exception to the rule of merger, and a man may have in his own right both an estate tail and a reversion in fee.[15]

I. ESTOPPEL IN GENERAL.

A. Terminology — 1. "ESTOPPEL." In the broad sense of the term "estoppel" is a bar which precludes a person from denying the truth of a fact which has in contemplation of law become settled by the acts and proceedings of judicial or legislative officers, or by the act of the party himself, either by conventional writing or by representations, express or implied, in pais.[1]

1. See Williams v. Supreme Council A. L. of H., 80 N. Y. App. Div. 402, 80 N. Y. Suppl. 713.

Other definitions are: "A preclusion in law which prevents a man alleging or denying a fact in consequence of his own previous act, allegation, or denial of a contrary tenor." Coogler v. Rogers, 25 Fla. 853, 873, 7 So. 391 [quoting Stephen Pl. 239]; Davis v. Collier, 13 Ga. 485, 491 [citing Coke Litt. 352*a*; Stephen Pl. 196]; Gavin v. Graydon, 41 Ind. 559, 566 [quoting Bouvier L. The purpose of all estoppels is to prevent duplicity and inconsistency. Bower v. McCormack, 23 Gratt. (Va.) 310. Estoppel "concludes the truth in order to prevent fraud and falsehood." Van Rensselaer v. Kearney, 11 How. (U. S.) 297, 326, 13 L. ed. 703. The reason which governs estoppels is

2. "ESTOPPEL BY CONDUCT." If a person by his conduct induces another to believe in the existence of a particular state of facts, and the other acts thereon to his prejudice, the former is estopped, as against the latter, to deny that that state of facts does in truth exist.[2]

3. "ESTOPPEL BY CONTRACT." This form of estoppel constitutes one of the main divisions into which the present article is divided, and it is accordingly defined in that connection.[3]

4. "ESTOPPEL BY DEED." A definition of this form of estoppel also will be found in the main division of this article which it constitutes.[4]

5. "ESTOPPEL BY JUDGMENT." "Estoppel by judgment" is a bar which precludes the parties to an action to relitigate, after final judgment, the same cause of action or ground of defense, or any fact determined by the judgment.[5]

6. "ESTOPPEL BY LACHES." A neglect to do something which one should do or to seek to enforce a right at a proper time has been termed, with questionable propriety, "estoppel by laches."[6]

7. "ESTOPPEL BY MISREPRESENTATION." This form of estoppel is treated in that after a man has by his own deed or act in pais admitted a fact to be true, he shall not be permitted to contradict it. Flagg v. Mann, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 467 [quoted in Haynes v. Stevens, 11 N. H. 28, 31].

Estoppel as to rules of law.— Estoppels preclude the assertion of facts not law. Moore v. Willis, 9 N. C. 555. See also infra, V, B, 1, b, (I), (B); and CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 8 Cyc. 791 et seq.

"An estoppel is always something personal — the party is estopped from recovering his claim, or proving his defence, by some act in law, or in deed, or in pais, which precludes him from going beyond it, and proving all the case. It always arises from the act of the party estopped by it." Gavin v. Graydon, 41 Ind. 559, 565. This does not apply in all respects to estoppel by record. A judicial record, considered as a memorial of the judgment, is binding on all the world. See infra, II, B, 1. Nor does an estoppel by record necessarily arise from the act of the party estopped. See infra, II, B, C.

Evidence distinguished.— The principle of estoppel is sometimes spoken of as a rule of evidence (Langdon v. Doud, 10 Allen (Mass.) 433, 435; Bean v. Pettingill, 30 N. Y. Super. Ct. 1; Crawford v. Lockwood, 9 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 547, 550; Gaston v. Brandenburg, 42 S. C. 348, 20 S. E. 157; Low v. Bouverie, [1891] 3 Ch. 82, 101, 60 L. J. Ch. 594, 65 L. T. Rep. N. S. 533, 40 Wkly. Rep. 50. Compare Martin v. Maine Cent. R. Co., 83 Me. 100, 21 Atl. 740), but it is not such. Evidence, properly speaking, is merely a means of proving a fact, and rules of evidence are a part of the adjective or remedial law. An estoppel to deny a fact, on the other hand, like a so-called conclusive presumption of law, is a rule of substantive law which declares the legal insignificance of the non-existence of the fact in question. Evidence of the falsity of the fact is excluded because the non-existence of the fact is immaterial. Whether the fact exists or not, the rights of the parties are the same in law. Accordingly a statute declaring that a certificate of acknowledgment is not conclusive does not prevent the operation of an estoppel by deed. It merely prescribes a rule of evidence, while an estoppel by deed involves a rule of property. Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Corey, 135 N. Y. 326, 31 N. E. 1095.

8. "ESTOPPEL BY NEGLIGENCE." This term may be applied to the class of cases where a man is estopped by another's misrepresentation, if, in breach of some duty to the person deceived, he has supplied the person making the misrepresentation with that which was necessary to make it credible.[8]

9. "ESTOPPEL BY RECORD." This form of estoppel constitutes one of the main divisions of the present article, and is defined in another place.[9]

10. "ESTOPPEL BY SILENCE." "Estoppel by silence" arises where a person who by force of circumstances is under a duty to another to speak refrains from doing so and thereby leads the other to believe in the existence of a state of facts in reliance upon which he acts to his prejudice.[10]

11. "ESTOPPEL BY VERDICT." The principle which precludes the parties to an action from relitigating a fact which has been determined in a previous action between them, notwithstanding that it did not of itself constitute the cause of action or ground of defense in the prior suit, is sometimes, with doubtful propriety, termed "estoppel by verdict."[11]

12. "ESTOPPEL BY WARRANTY." This is an estoppel based on the principle of giving effect to the manifest intention of the grantor appearing on the deed, as to the lands or estate to be conveyed, and of preventing the grantor from derogating from or destroying his own grant by any subsequent act.[12]

13. "ESTOPPEL IN PAIS."[13] By the earlier usage matter in pais commonly meant matter of fact as distinguished from matter of record.[14] In the law of estoppel, however, it meant, and still means, matter of fact as distinguished from matter of record or conventional writing.[15] "Estoppel in pais" therefore includes all forms of estoppel not arising from a record, from a deed, or from a written contract.[16]

14. "EQUITABLE ESTOPPEL." "Equitable estoppel" is estoppel in pais,[17] signifying estoppel by misrepresentation,[18] and a definition of it will accordingly be found in the division of this article treating of that form of estoppel.[19] The three terms are commonly used interchangeably. The term was borrowed originally from equity and hence denominated "equitable estoppel."[20] Equitable estoppels are so called not, however, because their recognition is peculiar to equitable tribunals, but because they arise upon facts which render their application in the protection of rights equitable and just.[21] The doctrine is recognized in the courts of common law just as much as in courts of equity,[22] although it was at first administered as a branch of equity jurisprudence.[23]

15. "QUASI-ESTOPPEL." This term has been applied to certain rules of law which are analogous to and yet differ from the principle founding estoppel in pais, and constitute one of the main divisions into which this article is divided.[24]

16. "TECHNICAL ESTOPPELS." "Technical estoppels" are those which arise from matter of record or the deed of the party estopped.[25]

In their common-law origin estoppels in pais seem to have arisen only in the case of those solemn and peculiar acts to which the law gave the power of creating a right or passing an estate, and to which the law attached as much efficacy and importance as to matters appearing either by deed or of record. Davis v. Davis, 26 Cal. 23, 85 Am. Dec. 157.

A term of recent growth.— The doctrine of estoppels in pais is one which, so far at least as that term is concerned, has grown up chiefly within the last few years. Strong v. Ellsworth, 26 Vt. 366.

16. Estoppel by contract is sometimes said to be of two sorts, viz.: (1) That arising from the contract itself, i. e., facts settled by contract; and (2) that arising from acts done under a contract. If the contract is in writing, the first sort of estoppel by contract is analogous to certain phases of estoppel by deed, and is not embraced in estoppel in pais (see infra, IV, A), although estoppel in pais is sometimes loosely defined or referred to as an estoppel not of record or under seal (Ragsdale v. Gohlke, 36 Tex. 286, 288; Love v. Barber, 17 Tex. 312, 318; Adams Gloss.); and if the contract is not in writing, it would seem to be a quasi-estoppel. The second sort of estoppel by contract seems to be a quasi-estoppel whether or not the contract is in writing. See infra, IV, A; VI, B, 1, f, (III).

Estoppel by misrepresentation, express or implied, is a species of estoppel in pais. See infra, V.

"Equitable estoppel" is a common term for estoppel by misrepresentation, and it is accordingly embraced in estoppel in pais. See infra, I, A, 14; V.

Technical estoppels compared.— "Technical estoppels, which conclude the party from showing the truth, are, for the most part, by deed or by matter of record. But there are other less solemn acts and admissions which may have the force of concluding the party, and are said to operate as estoppels in pais." Dezell v. Odell, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 215, 221, 38 Am. Dec. 628. They are not restricted by rules of technical estoppel (Hainer v. Iowa L. of H., 78 Iowa 245, 43 N. W. 185), but when established they operate as effectually as an estoppel by matter of record or deed (Lucas v. Hart, 5 Iowa 415).

17. "TITLE BY ESTOPPEL." Where a person without title, having conveyed with warranty, subsequently acquires the title, it inures to the benefit of the grantee, who is said to acquire the title by estoppel.[26] "Title by estoppel" or "right of estoppel" is said to arise also where one person makes to another a statement which is afterward acted upon, since in any action afterward brought upon faith of that statement by the person to whom it was made, the person making it is not allowed to deny that the facts were what he represented them to be, although in truth they were different.[27]

B. Classification. It is commonly said that there are three kinds of estoppel, viz., by matter of record, by matter in writing, and by matter in pais.[28] Estoppel by record is founded either on a judicial or a legislative record.[29] Estoppel by matter in writing is based on either a deed[30] or a written contract.[31] Estoppel by matter in pais[32] is founded on misrepresentation, express or implied.[33] There are also certain legal bars which have the same effect as an estoppel and yet are not strictly such, which have been termed quasi-estoppels.[34]

C. Odiousness of Estoppels. It is a common saying in the earlier reports that estoppels are odious and are not favored in law because they exclude the truth.[35] In so far as this dictum proceeds upon the theory that an estoppel necessarily excludes the truth it is founded on a misconception, for it is only within the possibilities that the truth may be excluded. It is rather to be supposed that facts which have been settled by judgment or by deed or which have been represented as existing are true in fact.[36] And in the later cases the wisdom and jusrecord or under seal, is not a technical estoppel, but only an evidential admission. See also Dezell v. Odell, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 215, 221, 38 Am. Dec. 628.

tice of the principle of estoppel, especially estoppel in pais, are fully recognized, and practically all ground of odium has disappeared.[37]

II. ESTOPPEL BY RECORD.

A. Definition. Estoppel by record is the preclusion to deny the truth of matter set forth in a record, whether judicial or legislative, and also to deny the facts adjudicated by a court of competent jurisdiction.[1]

B. Judicial Record — 1. In General. It is a well-established rule that the records of a court of justice import absolute verity, and no one, whether or not a party to the proceeding in which it was made, may in a collateral proceeding impeach it by adducing evidence in denial of the facts of which it purports to be a memorial.[2] So a recital in a judicial record imports absolute verity, and all

Not that ancient legal species, confined within certain narrow iron rules, to be strictly construed, applicable to but a few cases and which shut out not only the truth but also the equity and justice of the individual case and was rightfully denominated 'odious' (Horn v. Cole, 51 N. H. 287, 289, 12 Am. Rep. 111; Lyon v. Reed, 8 Jur. 762, 13 L. J. Exch. 377, 13 M. & W. 309; Coke Litt. 352*a*), but of the more modern species, borrowed originally from equity and hence denominated equitable estoppel."

New Hampshire.— Stevens v. Dennett, 51 N. H. 324, 333, where it is said: "An equitable estoppel is not odious, and is intended to promote and effectuate equity."

Pennsylvania.— Waters' Appeal, 35 Pa. St. 523, 527, 78 Am. Dec. 354, where the court said: "This used to be considered harsh law, and it grew into a proverb that estoppels were odious; but the observations of Mr. Smith, in concluding his note on Kingston's Case, (2 Smith Lead. Cas. 713) strike us as just, and they shall conclude this opinion. 'The truth is,' says that excellent writer, 'that the courts have been for some time favourable to the utility of the doctrine of estoppel, but hostile to its technicality. Perceiving how essential it is to the quiet and easy transaction of business, that one man should be able to put faith in the conduct and representations of his fellow, they have inclined to hold such conduct and such representations binding in cases where a mischief or injustice would be caused by treating their effect as revocable. At the same time they have been unwilling to allow men to be entrapped by formal statements and admissions, which were perhaps looked upon as unimportant when made, and by which no man ever was deceived, or induced to alter his position. Such estoppels are still odious.'"

South Carolina.— Bull v. Rowe, 13 S. C. 355, 369, where it is said: "The doctrine is not shifting and uncertain according to the caprice of the judge, but rests upon well-defined and fixed rules. Thus understood estoppels no longer deserve the epithet of 'odious' but are most useful agencies in the administration of justice."

Coke's statement.— "The rolls, being the records or memorials of the judges of the courts of record, impose in them such incontrollable credit and verity as they admit no averment, plea, or proof to the contrary." Coke Inst. 260*a*.

A judicial record is an instrument, prepared by an officer of the court, whether in the parties thereto are estopped from denying its truth,[3] for example a recital that the cause has been transferred to another court by consent.

2. JUDGMENTS. Two sorts of estoppel arise from the record of a judgment; first from the record considered as a memorial or entry of the judgment, and second, from the record considered as a judgment. As a memorial of the fact of the rendition of the judgment the record imports absolute verity and may be impeached by no one, whether or not a party to the proceeding in which it was made.[4] As a judgment, on the other hand, the record has the further effect of precluding a reëxamination into the truth of the matters decided; but in this aspect it is as a rule binding only upon the parties to the proceeding and their privies. This further and secondary effect of the record considered as a judgment is otherwise known as estoppel by judgment, the matters adjudicated being termed res judicata.[5]

3. JUDICIAL ADMISSIONS. The questions of the conclusiveness of the allegations of a pleading on the party interposing it, and of the admissibility of a pleading against the pleader as evidence of the facts alleged, whether in the same or a subsequent proceeding, do not strictly speaking fall within the scope of estoppel by record, and they are accordingly elsewhere considered;[6] and the same is true of admissions in court, agreed facts, stipulations, and sworn statements generally, such for instance as affidavits, made in a judicial or quasi-judicial proceeding.[7]

C. Legislative Roll. The enrolment of a legislative act, if regular on its face, ordinarily imports absolute verity, and is conclusive of the due enactment of the statute and of its terms. Accordingly by the better opinion no one may impeach it by resorting to the legislative journals for the purpose of showing that the statute was not regularly enacted or that its terms were not accurately enrolled. As to the latter point, however, a contrary view is upheld in many states, in some cases because of peculiar constitutional provisions.[8]

III. ESTOPPEL BY DEED.[9]

A. Definition. Estoppel by deed is a bar which precludes a party to a deed form of a book or of a roll, containing a chronological account of the proceedings of a court of justice and intended as a memorial thereof. See Herman Estop. & Res. Jud. § 22. Nothing is part of the record which is not enrolled. Glynn v. Thorpe, 1 B. & Ald. 153. In England it was necessary to transcribe the proceedings on a roll of parchment (Coke Inst. 260*a*), but in the United States paper has universally supplied the place of parchment as the material for a record (Nugent v. Powell, 4 Wyo. 173, 186, 33 Pac. 23, 62 Am. St. Rep. 17, 20 L. R. A. 199 [citing Hahn v. Kelly, 34 Cal. 391, 94 Am. Dec. 742]).

Explaining mode of making record.— A record cannot be contradicted so far as it speaks; but where it sought to charge an officer whose signature appears thereto with negligence as to acts therein recited, proof of facts and circumstances relative to the mode in which it was made up is admissible to weaken the inference deducible from the signature. Strong v. Harris, 3 Humphr. (Tenn.) 451.

W. 329, holding that a record of the supreme court showing that a certain person was "sitting, by consent of counsel," as special judge of such court in the absence of one of the commissioned judges thereof, cannot be collaterally attacked on petition for supersedeas in a case decided by such court while thus constituted. See, however, Hess v. Heeble, 4 Serg. & R. B. General Rule — 1. Estoppel Against Grantor. A person who assumes to convey an estate by deed is estopped, as against the grantee, to assert anything in derogation of the deed. He will not be heard, for the purpose of defeating the title of the grantee, to say that at the time of the conveyance he had no title, or that none passed by the deed; nor can he deny to the deed its full operation and effect as a conveyance.[11] aid of a title estop the grantee to claim under the conveyance purporting to confer that title. One having or claiming title to land may for greater security or to buy his peace purchase or procure an outstanding or adverse claim or title without estopping himself to deny its validity.[15]

3. Instruments Founding Estoppel — a. In General. To estop the grantor from denying that he had title at the time of the conveyance, the deed must either expressly or by implication be based upon the assumption of the existence of title in him, and it must purport to convey that title.[16] Subject to this limitation any deed of conveyance may found an estoppel against the grantor.[17] It need contain no technical covenants for title. If it bears on its face evidence that the grantor intended to convey and the grantee expected to become invested with an estate of a particular description or quality, and that the bargain had proceeded upon that footing, it creates an estoppel against the grantor in respect to the estate thus described, although no technical covenants be inserted.[18]

b. Quitclaim Deed. A mere quitclaim deed does not ordinarily operate as an estoppel against the grantor;[19] nor does it estop the grantee to dispute the claiming under a conveyance is not estopped to show that his grantor did not have title at a time anterior to the delivery of the deed (Frey v. Ramsour, 66 N. C. 466); and a party claiming under a deed by an executor who conveyed under a power in a will and also as heir at law of the testator may show that the grantor inherited the land (Deery v. Cray, 5 Wall. Compromise deed.— Where one of two adverse claimants of title to land took a conveyance from the other without warranty, paying a consideration therefor and thus settled pending litigation between them, no estoppel results, in subsequent litigation between those holding under the parties to the

c. Deed Poll. Ordinarily the estoppel arising from a deed poll applies only to the grantor and does not operate against the grantee, who may accordingly deny that his grantor had such an estate as he undertook to convey.[23] The acceptance of a deed poll will not estop the grantee to deny the grantor's title or to acquire a superior title;[24] but where the deed contains agreements or covenants to be performed by the grantee, his acceptance of the deed estops him to deny them.[25]

d. Chattel Mortgage. A deed in the form of a chattel mortgage may ordinarily found an estoppel the same as any other.[26]

C. Estoppel to Assert After-Acquired Title — 1. General Rule. If a grantor having no title, a defective title, or an estate less than that which he assumed to grant, conveys with warranty or covenants of like import, and subsequently acquires the title or estate which he purported to convey, or perfects his title, such after-acquired or perfected title will inure to the grantee or to his benefit, by way of estoppel.[27] The rule which equally applies to a special as to a compromise deed, from the introduction of that deed in evidence, together with the competing title of the grantee therein. Strong v. Powell, 92 Ga. 591, 20 S. E. 6.

Taking inconsistent positions.— Where the grantee does not sign the deed, the estoppel created by his acceptance of it is not an estoppel by deed strictly speaking but a quasi-estoppel based on the principle which precludes a person from taking the benefits of a transaction and at the same time avoiding its obligations. Knowledge of grantee.— In equity an after-acquired title will not inure to the benefit of the grantee where the latter knew that the grantor had no title when he conveyed, and there is no evidence of good faith or that the grantee claimed any interest in the lands. Viele v. Van Steenberg, 31 Fed. 249.

Where there is anything for a warranty to operate on the doctrine of estoppel to assert after-acquired title does not apply. Jackson v. Hoffman, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 271; Lewis v. Baird, 15 Fed. Cas. No. 8,316, 3 McLean 56.

Reacquisition of title.— If at the time of the conveyance and warranty the estate conveyed was liable to be taken by the grantor's creditors, a taking by them would constitute a breach of the warranty, and a reacquisition of the estate by purchase from his assignee in insolvency would estop him. Gibbs v. Thayer, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 30.

There is no principle of the Spanish law by which an after-acquired title will inure to the benefit of a former grantee. Bixby v. Bent, 59 Cal. 522; Norcum v. Gaty, 19 Mo. 65.

Estoppel to assert after-acquired title to fund in court see DEPOSITS IN COURT, 13 Cyc. 1038 note 54.

"the curious learning of title by estoppel" was adopted to avoid circuity of action.[28] The rule has been applied to transfers of personal property as well as real estate.[29]

2. INSTRUMENTS FOUNDING ESTOPPEL[30]—a. In General. To give rise to an estoppel to assert an after-acquired title there must be a deed purporting to convey an estate,[31] and the conveyance must have been the act of the person subsequently asserting title. A sheriff's sale of property not belonging to the debtor does not estop him from asserting against the purchaser title subsequently acquired.[32]

b. Necessity For Covenants — (I) In General. At common law the deed must contain a covenant of warranty in order to preclude the grantor from asserting an after-acquired title,[33] but at the present day other covenants may give rise to the estoppel;[34] and moreover if a deed either expressly or by necessary implication shows that the grantor intended to convey and that the grantee expected to become vested with an estate of a particular kind, the deed may found an estoppel, although it contains no technical covenants.[35] In many states statutes exist whereby conveyances purporting to convey the fee, or to convey a greater interest than the grantee has, or containing prescribed words of grant, are deemed to have the same legal effect as deeds which by the terms of the grant or covenants therein would estop the grantor to claim an after-acquired title or estate.[36]

Chattel mortgages.— If a person without title to chattels mortgages them and subsequently acquires title, it inures to the benefit of the mortgagee. Watkins v. Crenshaw, 59 Mo. App. 183; Hickman v. Dill, 39 Mo. App. 246. So where sellers of mortgaged personalty covenant "to warrant and defend the sale against all and every person whatsoever," and the mortgage is subsequently assigned to them, they are estopped to enforce it. (II) Conveyance of Present Interest. A conveyance by bargain and sale, release, or the like, which does not purport to convey any estate or which conveys a present estate, or the right, title, and interest of the grantor, and without covenants of warranty or seizin, passes only such a title as the grantor has at the time of its execution and delivery, and will not operate to confer on the grantee a new and independent title subsequently acquired by the grantor. This because the estoppel is coextensive with the estate, right, or interest which its conveyance purports to pass.[37] Accordingly a quitclaim deed will not estop the grantor from setting up a title subsequently acquired by him.[38]

c. Nature of Covenant — (I) Covenant of Warranty. Estoppel to assert an after-acquired title is most frequently founded on a conveyance with covenant of warranty.[39]

(II) Covenant For Quiet Enjoyment. An ordinary deed of bargain and sale with covenant for quiet enjoyment gives the grantee the benefit of a title subsequently acquired by the grantor.[40]

(III) Covenant of Seizin and Right to Convey. In some states title by estoppel may be founded on a covenant of seizin and right to convey.[41]

(IV) Covenant Against Encumbrances. A covenant against encumbrances will estop the grantor to assert a subsequent title acquired through the enforcement of a lien existing at the time of the conveyance,[42] but not a title otherwise acquired.[43]

(V) Covenant of Non-Claim. A covenant of non-claim in a deed amounts to the ordinary covenant of warranty and operates as an estoppel on an after-acquired title,[44] being confined, however, to the estate granted by the deed.[45]

(VI) Covenant For Further Assurance. A subsequent title inures under a covenant for further assurance as well as under a covenant of warranty.[46]

(VII) Special Covenants. A conveyance with special covenants as to acts of the grantor or those in privity with him, or against a particular title, will not preclude the grantor to acquire or assert an after-acquired title,[47] unless such acquisition is against the terms of the covenants therein.[48] So where a deed does not on its face purport to convey an indefeasible estate, but only the present right, title, and interest of the grantor, a covenant of warranty which attaches to the interest only and not to the land is qualified and limited by the grant, and will not pass an after-acquired estate, if it is apparent that the grantor intended to convey no greater estate than he was possessed of.[49]

d. Inoperative Covenants. Although it has been held that the general rule as to title by estoppel is not changed by the fact that a right of action on the covenant on which the estoppel is based is barred by limitation,[50] the weight of authority is to the effect that a grantor is not estopped to assert an after-acquired estate, if there is no liability on his covenants because of their being inoperative or having been extinguished.[51]

3. Estates or Rights Affected — a. In General. The estoppel will not operate as to land or an interest therein other than that which is specifically conveyed or called for by the plain import of the conveyance, and as to which the covenants for title are confined.[52]

Evidence.— Recitals in a deed will operate as an estoppel against the grantee only under those circumstances where the declarations of a grantor, made at the time of the execution of a deed, would be evidence against the grantee and those claiming under him. A recital is not competent to show title in the grantor. Joeckel v. Easton, 11 Mo. 118, 47 Am. Dec. 142. See, generally, EVIDENCE.

A party is estopped to dispute a title which is recognized in a deed under which he claims. Sawyer v. Campbell, 130 Ill. 186, 22 N. E. 458; Hanly v. Blackford, 1 Dana (Ky.) 1, 25 Am. Estoppel to attack prior mortgage.— A creditor who accepts a second chattel mortgage which expressly recites that it is subject to a prior mortgage or expressly recites the existence of a prior mortgage is estopped to attack the prior mortgage as in fraud of creditors or to assert that it constituted an assignment for the benefit of creditors generally. A recital as a rule does not raise an estoppel. To give it that effect it must show that the object of the parties was to make the matter recited a fixed fact, as the basis of their action. Hays v. Askew, 50 N. C. 63.

general or particular. General recitals are such as do not definitely affirm or deny the existence of some fact, or either expressly or impliedly show a clear intention of the parties that either one or the other or both of them shall be concluded from disputing the fact recited. These do not work an estoppel as to the fact in question.[76] Thus a recital in the alternative is not conclusive of either alternative alone. A party may deny its truth as to one of the alternatives.[77] Particular recitals, on the other hand, are such as definitely affirm or deny the existence of some fact and either expressly or impliedly show a clear intention of the parties that either one or the other or both shall be precluded from asserting anything to the contrary. These are binding.[78] Thus recitals in municipal bonds of preliminary facts touching the regularity of their issuance estop the municipality from denying those facts.[79]

c. Materiality. The doctrine of estoppel does not extend to mere descriptive matter or statements or recitals which are immaterial and not contractual or essential to the purposes of the instrument.[80] Thus the description in a deed of

d. Conclusiveness in Collateral Action. A recital works an estoppel only in an action founded on the deed or brought to enforce rights arising under it. While in a collateral action it may constitute evidence against the one party or the other, it is not conclusive.[82]

Washington.— State v. Forrest, 12 Wash. 483, 41 Pac. 194 (holding that a deed conveying property by reference to a plot or map thereof adopts such plot or map, and one holding thereunder is estopped from claiming any rights beyond the plotted boundaries of his lot); Dearborn v. Moran,

E. Requisites, Validity, and Construction of Deed[94] — 1. Execution — a. In General. The principle governing the doctrine of estoppel by recitals in sealed instruments is applicable only where the existence of the instrument as the act of the party is admitted or proved.[95] Furthermore the execution of the deed must be the voluntary act of the grantor. A party will not be prejudiced by the recitals in a deed executed under judicial compulsion.[96]

b. Seal. To create an estoppel by deed the instrument must be under seal,[97] unless an unsealed instrument is by statute placed on the same footing as a sealed instrument.[98]

2. Delivery and Acceptance. An estoppel by deed cannot arise against the grantor until the instrument which is claimed to create the estoppel has become effective by delivery;[99] but one holding a deed to himself and others and claiming the land under it cannot deny its validity as a conveyance to the other grantees for want of delivery.[1] A grantee is not estopped by a deed which he has never accepted or authorized to be accepted.[2]

3. Validity — a. In General. A deed having no validity cannot be made the basis of an estoppel;[3] and a void instrument will not operate by way of estoppel

Execution by agent.— A deed executed by an agent with authority to that end is as binding as one personally executed, and such authority may be proved by parol. Harris v. Neely, 1 Ky. L. Rep. 55.

Deed executed without authority.—A party is not estopped by a deed executed in his behalf without sufficient authority, and which he subsequently never assents to, recognizes, or acts under. Lawrence v. Anderson, 17 Can. Supreme Ct. 349. So a grantor is not estopped to deny the authority of one who assumed to convey as his attorney in fact, as set out in the deed; nor from denying that it was executed pursuant to another valid and existing authority. Earle v. Earle, 20 N. J. L. 347.

A recital in a bond will not estop the obligor to deny that the instrument is his deed. Singer Mfg. Co. v. Elizabeth, 42 N. J. L. 249.

A party signing a deed under an assumed name will be estopped from taking advantage of it. Davis v. Callahan, 78 Me. 313, 5 Atl. 73.

Where a seal is not essential to a conveyance of the legal estate in lands, the conveyance retains all the operation and effect of a sealed deed at common law, and the estoppel arising at common law out of the recitals or covenants of a sealed instrument still attaches to the unsealed conveyance, executed according to the requirements of the statute. Illustrations.— A release may found an estoppel as between the parties, although invalid as to the person having title because infected with maintenance (Jackson v. Demont, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 55, 6 Am. Dec. 259); and although a deed by a tenant in common of a portion of the estate in severalty is invalid as against the cotenants, yet it may estop the grantor and his heirs as against the grantee (Frost v. Courtis, 172 Mass. 401, 52 N. E. 515; De Witt v. Harvey, 4 Gray (Mass.) 486). So a deed executed by an executor under a will before the emanation of the patent can convey no legal title; but if the patent issue in the name of the executor, it operates in favor of the prior conveyance by way of estoppel, and this effect follows whether the will authorizes the executor to convey or not. Lewis v. Baird, 15 Fed. Cas. No. 8,316, 3 McLean 56.

where a deed is valid as to one of several grantors, he may be estopped, although it is void as to the others.[7] So it has been held that an inoperative conveyance by one tenant in common which is rendered effectual by a release from the other tenants in common will operate as an estoppel.[8]

b. Fraud and Mistake.[9] The general rule that a party will be estopped to question his own deed does not apply where the deed has been procured by fraud.[10] So a recital inserted in a deed through mistake will not in equity be permitted to operate as an estoppel, so as to exclude the truth.[11] It has been held, however, that where a tract of land is granted in clear and unmistakable terms, the grantor and those claiming under him are estopped to say in a court of law that the land thus described in the deed was inserted by mistake, and that another piece was intended.[12]

c. Incompetency of Parties. In order to work an estoppel the parties to a deed must be sui juris, competent to made it effectual as a contract.[13] Specific

Conveyance to churchwardens.— Although the churchwardens of a parish are not capable of holding lands, and the deed to them and their successors does not operate by way of grant, yet, if it contains a covenant of warranty binding the grantors and their heirs, it may operate in favor of the church by way applications of this doctrine will be found treated elsewhere in other titles in this work.[14]

d. Estoppel by Covenants in Invalid Deed. A deed which is void as a conveyance for want of words of inheritance[15] or grant,[16] but containing a covenant of warranty, may operate by way of estoppel to prevent circuity of action. But a covenant of warranty cannot operate by estoppel to confer upon the grantee a greater title than the deed itself would have conferred if effective.[17]

4. Construction — a. In General. In determining whether a deed creates an estoppel, every part of it should be given effect, if this can be done, and if the deed evidences conflicting intentions on its face, the object of the grant being considered, effect should be given to what may appear to be the controlling intention of the grantor.[18] The estoppel will be limited by the intention of the parties.[19]

b. Truth Apparent From Whole Instrument. Where the truth is apparent upon the deed or instrument, the parties shall not be estopped from taking advantage of it,[20] as for instance that the grantor had no title,[21] or only a naked possibility.[22]

c. Certainty. In order to create an estoppel the instrument by which the estoppel is claimed must be precise and certain and the intention clear and unambiguous.[23] It has been held, however, that an estoppel may be sustained by

necessary implication and upon a direct and irresistible inference from the words of the deed.[24]

d. Extent of Estoppel. An estoppel cannot be extended beyond the exact terms of the admission so as to preclude a party from establishing facts not inconsistent therewith.[25] It is confined to the subject-matter of the conveyance,[26] and will not extend to objects that the parties cannot reasonably be supposed to have had in view.[27]

Applications of rule.— One who specifically conveys a life-estate is not estopped by the conveyance thereafter to assert an undivided interest in fee. Holman v. Dukes, 110 Ind. 195, 10 N. E. 629. So a deed purporting to convey only such title as was acquired through tax deeds, with covenants limited to the estate acquired under such deeds, will not estop the grantor to set up a title otherwise acquired, or to deny the validity of the tax-sale. Sanford v. Sanford, 135 Mass. 314. A conveyance by a trustee to the beneficiary with warranty will not estop him to enforce the lien of a prior judgment obtained against the latter. Thompson v. Sankey, 175 Pa. St. 594, 34 Atl. 1104. One who conveys with warranty and a covenant against encumbrances is not estopped to claim from the grantee rents of the premises due by the latter for occupation prior to the conveyance. Woodcock v. Baldwin, 110 La. 270, 34 So. 440. One taking a conveyance of lots subject "to all special assessments" is not estopped to question the validity of an assessment of which he did not know, and which did not enter into the determination of the purchase-price. Gill v. Patton, 118 Iowa 88, 91 N. W. 904. An estoppel by deed precludes the grantor from denying the title thereby conveyed and the setting up any other title to the injury of the grantee, but does not prevent him from showing that the title was already in the grantee and that the object of the deed was merely to confirm the grantee's title. Dewing v. Hutton, 48 W. Va. 576, 37 S. E. 670.

Easements.— A conveyance with covenants for title without reservation estops the grantor from asserting an easement in the premises. De Roachmont v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 64 N. H. 500, 15 Atl. 131; Hodges v. Goodspeed, 20 R. I. 537, 40 Atl. 373. It has been held, however, that a warranty deed will not estop the grantor to claim a way of necessity over the land conveyed. Brigham v. Smith, 4 Gray (Mass.) 297, 64 Am. Dec. 76. So a proviso that any existing right of way in favor of the grantor shall extend over the land conveyed, and that such right shall be unaffected by the conveyance, will not estop the grantee to deny the existence of any such right. Knowlton v. New York, etc., R. Co., 72 Conn. 188, 44 Atl. 8.

rule is the same as to an estoppel to assert an after-acquired title; the parties and their privies are estopped, but strangers are not.[29]

2. Parties — a. In General. It is commonly said that the parties to a deed are estopped to assert anything in derogation of it. This is generally true as against the grantor, but not as against the grantee, as appears in other connections.[30]

b. Parties Acting in Different Rights or Capacities. It is well settled that a deed made by a person individually does not estop him in a representative capacity.[31] As to whether a deed made in a representative capacity estops the grantor individually the cases are not in accord. Some of the courts have held that the grantor is not estopped to assert an individual right or title in derogation of the deed,[32] but the weight of authority is to the contrary, at least where there are general covenants,[33] unless the deed expressly excepts or recognizes an interest

Dec. 221, it is held that if an executor as such conveys land in which he has an individual title he is estopped to assert it against the grantee, but that if he does not acquire title individually until after his official conveyance, he is not estopped. A conveyance by an executrix and life-tenant, executed by an attorney in fact in her name, adding the word "executrix," and in his name as agent, will estop her as to her life-estate. in the grantor individually.[34] A deed accepted in a representative capacity does not estop the grantee individually.[35] As a rule the doctrine of title by estoppel does not apply, in the absence of personal covenants, to a title subsequently acquired in a different right.[36] A deed executed by one as agent for another, particularly where it recites that he has authority to convey, estops him and his subsequent grantees from denying such authority.[37] One who conveys land as executor is estopped to deny that he was executor and had received letters testa-

v. Hopkins, 41 Vt. 250. That a devisee who is also executor, and who makes an unauthorized conveyance in his latter capacity, may be estopped to assert that his individual interest did not pass see Allen v. De Witt, 3 N. Y. 276. But where on a judgment obtained against two executors by confession, land was sold by the sheriff, and at the same time the executors made an indorsement on the sheriff's deed confirming the deed "by virtue of the power vested in us by the last will of the deceased," it was held that such indorsement, being under an express reference to the powers confided to the indorsers as executors by the will of the testator, did not estop them to claim in their own right the lands contained in the deed. Hendricks v. Mendenhall, 4 N. C. 371. An unauthorized conveyance by a devisee and executor in his latter capacity, although it may operate by way of estoppel to pass his estate, will not affect the rights of the other heirs and devisees. Deed by assignee in bankruptcy.— An assignee in bankruptcy who, although not so required by the bankrupt act, incorporates into his deed as assignee a personal covenant of warranty of title, estops himself, and likewise a grantee of his devisee, to claim any interest which he personally then had in the land. A guardian who conveys with covenants of seizin and warranty "for herself, her heirs, executors," etc., is estopped as to her individual rights. Foster v. Young, 35 Iowa 27. But an unauthorized deed by a natural guardian will not estop his individual grantee to set up the subsequent title derived from him. Shanks v. Seamonds, 24 Iowa 131, 92 Am. Dec. 465. A provision in a mortgage that the interest thereon should be paid from rents of land in charge of the mortgagor as guardian will not estop the latter to assert title to the land subsequently acquired. Where heirs convey with covenants of ownership, power to convey, warranty, and against encumbrances, they are estopped, as heirs of legatees, from petitioning that the land be sold to pay the legacies, there being no personal property. Shields v. Lakin, 21 Ohio St. 660.

34. Carothers v. Alexander, 74 Tex. 309, 12 S. W. 4, holding that a deed of a corporation signed by its president, conveying the right of the corporation to an undefined interest in land and at the same time recognizing an undefined interest in the same land in the president individually, which it does not convey, does not estop the president as to his individual interest.

mentary from the probate court;[38] and the principle also applies to administrators.[39] Whether it applies to public officers depends upon the circumstances.[40]

c. State or Municipality and Corporations. Generally speaking the doctrine of estoppel by deed applies against the state, and it will not be allowed to assert anything in derogation of its grant.[41] A municipal corporation is estopped by its grants the same as the state.[42] Private corporations are estopped in like manner as individuals.[43]

40. See Stoney v. Shultz, 1 Hill Eq. (S. C.) 465, 27 Am. Dec. 429. It has been held that a deed by a public officer as such will not estop him individually (Kissock v. Jarvis, 9 U. C. C. P. 156, sheriff); that a trustee for the public deriving his authority by statute is not estopped by his deed to deny that the statute gave him power to convey (Fairtitle v. Gilbert, 2 T. R. 169, 1 Rev. Rep. 455); and that a certificate of the land-office register on a grant prepared by him for signing by the governor and secretary of state that the person named as grantee has title to the within tract of land does not estop him individually to claim a superior title, since the statute requires him to make such a certificate merely as a guarantee to the governor and secretary that the proper preliminary steps have been taken (Hitchcock v. Southern Iron, etc., Co., (Tenn. Ch. App. 1896) 38 S. W. 588). On the other hand it was held that the trustee under the "town-site" act of the territorial legislature of Minnesota of March 3, 1855, and his representatives, were estopped to deny the title of an occupant to whom such trustee had executed a deed under the act. d. Mutuality of Estoppel. It is usual to say that an estoppel must be mutual else it will not operate as a bar, and that unless both parties are bound neither will be concluded.[44] So far as the parties to the deed and their privies are concerned this statement of the rule is subject to important exceptions and limitations.[45] In respect to strangers to the deed, however, the rule is given full application. A stranger is not estopped by the deed, nor may he take advantage of the estoppel created by it.[46]

manner take advantage of the estoppel.[49] The estoppel of a grantor as to an after-acquired title applies against those in privity with him the same as in other cases of estoppel.[50]

b. What Constitutes Privity. In the law of estoppel by deed, privity means: (1) Mere succession of rights, that is, the devolution, in whole or in part, of the rights and duties of one person upon another; or (2) the derivation of rights by one person from another and the holding in subordination to the latter.[51]

c. Who Are Privies — (i) In General. It follows from the definition of privity that a person is not bound as a privy by an estoppel against another, nor may he urge it, unless he succeeds to that other's possession or holds in subordination to it; persons claiming under an independent title are not estopped.[52] If, on the other hand, he does so succeed or does so hold, he is bound by the estoppel and may urge it the same as the original party to the deed.[53] Thus a creditor levying on land may not take advantage of an estoppel created by a deed thereof to the debtor, unless he buys in the property;[54] but a levying creditor is bound by an estoppel against the debtor as grantor.[55] So a purchaser at execution sale may take advantage of an estoppel arising from the deed by which the debtor acquired title,[56] and he is estopped by a deed made by the debtor before the sale.[57]

(ii) Grantees. A grantee is not in privity with the grantor so as to be bound by and entitled to take advantage of the estoppel created by the deed.[58] Thus

In many states indeed the second grantee is bound by the estoppel on the grantor, and hence is not entitled to the property as against the first grantee; not, however, because of privity between the grantor and the second grantee, but because the estoppel operates to transfer the after-acquired title to the first grantee immediately on its acquisition by the grantor.[64]

G. Estoppel Against Estoppel. An estoppel against an estoppel sets the matter at large.[69] Thus, if both parties claim under the same person and one is estopped by one deed and the other is estopped by another deed, both made by that person, one estoppel offsets the other, and the rights of the parties are to be adjusted without regard to any estoppel.[70]

IV. ESTOPPEL BY SIMPLE CONTRACT.

A. In General. There are two sorts of what has been termed "estoppel by contract," viz., (1) estoppel to deny the truth of facts agreed upon and settled by force of entering into the contract, and (2) estoppel arising from acts done under or in performance of the contract. The first form of estoppel, if the contract is in writing, is analogous to certain phases of estoppel by deed, and is not in strict propriety a species of estoppel in pais, since it is wholly based on a written instrument.[71] The second sort of estoppel by contract seems to be limited to cases where one party goes into possession of another's property in recognition of the latter's title, and it precludes the possessor from denying that title. It rests, whether or not the contract is in writing, on matter in pais. It does not, however, seem to fall within the scope of estoppel in pais, in the strict sense of that term, although it bears a close resemblance thereto and its practical operation is the same. Elements essential to an estoppel in pais are found wanting in this sort of so-called estoppel by contract, and it seems to rest on the broad principle which precludes a party from taking inconsistent positions to another's prejudice. It is therefore treated in this article in connection with that principle as a form of quasi-estoppel.[72]

B. Facts Settled by Contract — 1. General Rule. If, in making a contract, the parties agree upon or assume the existence of a particular fact as the basis of their negotiations, they are estopped to deny the fact so long as the contract stands.[73]

See 19 Cent. Dig. tit. "Estoppel," § 68.

68. Bigelow Estop. (5th ed.) 389. See Willson v. Louisville Trust Co., 102 Ky. 522, 44 S. W. 121, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 1590; Colton v. Galbraith, 35 S. C. 531, 14 S. E. 957.

69. Kimball v. Schoff, 40 N. H. 190; Hoboken v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 124 U. S. 656, 8 S. Ct. 643, 31 L. ed. 543; Branson v. Wirth, 17 Wall. (U. S.) 32, 21 L. ed. 566; James v. McGibney, 24 U. C. Q. B. 155. Thus where the grantee of a void grant reconveys part of the granted premises to the grantor, with intent that the one interest shall be satisfied out of the other, there is no estoppel which would fill an after-acquired title of the second grantor in favor of the first grantor. In such case each party is estopped by his own deed, and the one estoppel neutralizes the other. Emeric v. Alvarado, 90 Cal. 444, 447, 27 Pac. 356.

70. Carpenter v. Thompson, 3 N. H. 204, 14 Am. Dec. 348.

71. See supra, I, A, 13; infra, IV, B.

If the contract is not in writing, the bar rests in pais, and yet it does not possess all the marks of an estoppel in pais. It would serve no useful purpose, however, to divide and separately discuss this sort of bar according to whether the contract on which it rests is oral or written, since its practical operation is in either case the same; and the present division of this article therefore includes all cases of preclusion to dispute the truth of facts settled by contract, whether or not the contract is in writing.

2. Necessity of Seal. Since a deed is a writing under seal, it is self-evident that an unsealed writing cannot give rise to an estoppel by deed;[74] but it does not follow that a simple written contract cannot create an estoppel analogous to estoppel by deed and of the same force and effect, in so far as it is sufficient in law to effectuate the purpose for which it was made, and indeed there is positive authority that it may.[75]

3. Validity of Contract. An estoppel by simple contract cannot be predicated on an invalid contract.[76] However, it has been held that a party to an

"Estoppel by contract" is a term which is intended to embrace all cases in which there is an actual or virtual undertaking to treat a fact as settled, "as, for example, 'a contract based upon one's having a certain title to property will estop the parties, in the performance of the contract from claiming a different title.'" Estoppel to deny liability.— Where one who purchases stock and obligations of a corporation from a creditor of the company assumes payment of certain of the company's bonds secured by its mortgage, he is estopped, on foreclosure of the mortgage, to deny the company's liability on the bonds. Estoppel to deny lien.— An agreement by the holder of a mechanic's lien with a person claiming a mechanic's lien on the same property that, in consideration of the latter's forbearing to bring suit to foreclose his lien, it shall be prior to that of the former, concedes the validity of the latter lien, and estops the holder of the former from attacking it. McLeod v. Johnson, 96 Me. 271, 52 Atl. 760. And where one of two contesting claimants to public lands, after having been beaten in a contest before the interior department, signs an agreement with the successful entryman's grantee that for a consideration received he will make no claim to the land, he is thereby estopped to claim title under a previous settlement, on the ground that the entryman's possession was not in good faith and that his title was acquired by fraud. McCord v. Hill, 117 Wis. 306, 94 N. W. 65. However, a seller in an oral contract is not estopped to deny the buyer's title. Boies v. Witherell, 7 Me. 162.

Estoppel to deny trade-mark.— Defendants having agreed for a valuable consideration that certain labels should thereafter be the property of plaintiff, and that defendants would not infringe on their use, they are estopped from asserting that the symbols and devices composing the labels are not such as are subject to protection solely as trademarks. invalid contract which is not illegal and unlawful may be equitably estopped to dispute the validity of the contract.[77]

4. Recitals in Contract — a. In General. A party to a written contract is ordinarily estopped to deny the truth of recitals therein.[78] A recital that does not amount to a precise affirmation of a fact will not estop the party to deny the fact, however;[79] and an estoppel does not arise from a recital unless it is of the essence of the agreement;[80] nor is a recital binding in an action not founded on the contract.[81] In determining the effect of a recital, it must be construed in connection with the whole contract.[82]

b. Acknowledgment of Consideration. While an acknowledgment of receipt of consideration as part of the contract in which it occurs may not be contradicted for the purpose of defeating the operation of the contract,[83] yet it may as a simple receipt be contradicted for collateral purposes.[84] The party making the

V. ESTOPPEL BY MISREPRESENTATION.

A. General Nature and Essentials — 1. What Constitutes. Estoppel by misrepresentation, or equitable estoppel, is defined as the effect of the voluntary conduct of a party whereby he is absolutely precluded, both at law and in equity, from asserting rights which might perhaps have otherwise existed, either of property, of contract, or of remedy, as against another person who in good faith relied upon such conduct, and has been led thereby to change his position for the worse, and who on his part acquires some corresponding right either of contract or of remedy.[87] This estoppel arises when one by his acts, representations, or admis-

The acts in pais which would constitute an estoppel as laid down by Lord Coke were very few, and all were acts of notoriety not less formal and solemn than the execution of a deed; such as livery, entry, acceptance of an estate, and the like. Lyon v. Reed, 8 Jur. 762, 13 L. J. Exch. 377, 13 M. & W. 285.

An equitable estoppel in the modern sense arises from the conduct of a party using that word in its broadest meaning as including his spoken or written words, his positive acts, and his silence or negative omission to do anything. The common-law doctrine of estoppel was . . . a device which the common-law courts resorted to at a very early period to strengthen and lengthen their arm; and not venturing to exercise an equitable jurisdiction over the subject before them, they did convert their own special pleading tactics into an instrument by which they could attain an end which the court of chancery without any foreign assistance did at all times put into force in order to do justice. Keate v. Phillips, 18 Ch. D. 560, 50 L. J. Ch. 664, 44 L. T. Rep. N. S. 731, 29 Wkly. Rep. 710.

and did influence.[96] It will be allowed to shut out the truth only when necessary to do justice,[97] and never where it would itself operate as a fraud or work injustice.[98] The estoppel is a protective, and not an offensive, weapon, and its operation should be limited to saving harmless or making whole the person in whose favor it arises, and should not be made an instrument of gain or profit.[99]

3. Availability at Law. As a general rule an estoppel in pais may be set up in actions at law as well as in suits in equity;[1] and it has been said that in order to justify a resort to a court of equity it is necessary to show some ground of equity other than the estoppel itself, whereby the party entitled to the benefit of it is prevented from making it available in a court of law.[2] Where, however, the estoppel sought to be set up involves the title to land or interests therein which Equitable estoppel rests upon the fundamental principles of right and fair dealing; its creed is justice between man and man. Its objects are not punishment; its remedies are not penal. Its mission is to protect the innocent and blameless. Westbrook v. Guderian, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 406, 22 S. W. 59.

can only be transferred by deed, it is held in some jurisdictions that it cannot be taken advantage of in an action at law.[3]

4. Essential Elements — a. In General. In order to constitute an equitable estoppel there must exist a false representation or concealment of material facts; it must have been made with knowledge, actual or constructive, of the facts; the party to whom it was made must have been without knowledge or the means of knowledge of the real facts; it must have been made with the intention that it should be acted upon; and the party to whom it was made must have relied on or acted upon it to his prejudice.[4]

b. Materiality of Representation. It is essential to an equitable estoppel that the false representation, howsoever it may arise, whether by declarations, acts, or conduct, shall be of a material fact.[5]

c. Intent — (I) In General. It is an essential element of an equitable estoppel that the acts, representations, or silence relied on to create the estoppel must have been wilfully intended to lead the party setting up the estoppel to act upon them.[6] The word "wilfully" as used in this connection is not, however, to induce a particular line of conduct;[7] it is sufficient if the acts, representations, or silence relied on are of such a character as to induce a reasonable and prudent man to believe that they were meant to be acted on.[8] Negligent, as distinguished from intentionally fraudulent, misrepresentations may operate as an estoppel.[9] On the other hand, ordinary, casual declarations or admissions, not made for the purpose of inducing any specific action, and on the faith of which no one has been misled, are not conclusive in their character and are entitled to have only such weight attached to them as under all the circumstances they may fairly deserve.[10]

To authorize the finding of an estoppel in pais against the legal owner of lands there must be shown either actual fraud, or fault or negligence equivalent to fraud on his part, in concealing his title; or that he was silent when the circumstances would impel an honest man to speak; or such actual intervention on his part, as in Storrs v. Barker, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 166, 10 Am. Dec. 316, so as to render it just that, as between him and the party acting upon his suggestion, he should bear the loss. Trenton Banking Co. v. Duncan, 86 N. Y. 221.

See 19 Cent. Dig. tit. "Estoppel," § 127.

A purchaser at an execution sale who gives notice at the sale that the execution defendant has no title, the statement being true and should be an actual fraudulent intent or design to deceive on the part of the party sought to be estopped, but only that the case should be one in which the circumstances and conduct would render it a fraud for the party to deny what he had previously induced or suffered another to believe and take action upon.[13] It has been said, however, that fraud or bad faith is a necessary ingredient of misrepresentation by passivity.[14]

d. Knowledge of Facts — (I) In General. Knowledge of the truth as to the material facts represented or concealed is generally indispensable to the application of the doctrine of equitable estoppel.[15] It is not, however, indispensable made in good faith, is not estopped to set up the title thus purchased as a defense to an action of ejectment. Porter v. McGinnis, 6 Watts & S. (Pa.) 502.

Intentional fraud is not the essence of the doctrine of equitable estoppel. Hazard v. Wilson, 22 Misc. (N. Y.) 397, 50 N. Y. Suppl. 280.

The element of fraud appears when the effort is made to gainsay or deny the previous conduct. This is sufficient to work an estoppel and bring in the element of moral wrong, and there need be no precedent, corrupt motive, or evil design. If the effort to deny ought not in good conscience to be successful, then emerges the moral wrong which the court denominates fraud. Anderson v. Hubble, 93 Ind. 570, 47 Am. Rep. 394. The party setting up the estoppel is bound to the exercise of reasonable diligence under the circumstances; and if he really decides against one who merely fails to furnish such information.[26] There are, however, cases in which the representation, by actively misleading the person setting up the estoppel and preventing him from having recourse to available means of information, has been held to excuse his failure to inform himself of the facts,[27] upon the matter with a careless indifference to the means of information reasonably within his reach he will not be entitled to complain. Moore v. Bowman, 47 N. H. 494.

The very representations relied upon may have caused the party to desist from inquiry and neglect his means of information, and it does not rest with him who made them to say that their falsity might have been ascertained, and it was wrong to credit them. Graham v. Thompson, 55 Ark. 296, 18 S. W. 58, 29 Am. St. Rep. 40.

The law distinguishes between silence and encouragement, and while silence may be innocent and lawful, to encourage and mislead another into expenditures on a bad or doubtful title would be a positive fraud that should bar and estop the party, the author of that encouragement and deception, from disturb-

even in the case of constructive notice by matter of record.[28] But when the foundation of the estoppel insisted upon is silence and omission to give notice of one's rights, the party relying upon the same must not have had means of ascertaining the true state of the title by reference to the public records.[29] No estoppel arises where the party setting it up is under as great obligation to inform the person sought to be estopped of the real facts as the latter is to inform himself.[30]

(III) Equality of Knowledge or Notice With Adverse Party. There can be no equitable estoppel short of one arising from actual contract,[31] where the truth is known to both parties or where they both have equal means of knowledge.[32]

(IV) After-Acquired Knowledge or Subsequent Acts. Acts done or knowledge acquired subsequent to the transaction out of which the estoppel is claimed to arise can have no bearing upon the question. The representations or conduct relied on to raise the estoppel must have been concurrent with or anterior to the action which they are alleged to have influenced.[33] If, however, a party ing the title of the person whom he misled, by any claim of title in himself. Knouff v. Thompson, 16 Pa. St. 357.

estopped; it is sufficient to raise the estoppel if the other party has been induced to take upon himself burdens which he would not otherwise have taken.[36]

h. Prejudice to Person Setting Up Estoppel. In order to create an estoppel in pais the party pleading it must have been misled to his injury;[37]

See 19 Cent. Dig. tit. "Estoppel," § 142.

To estop one from declaring the truth, his conduct must not only have been such as would lead the other party to believe the fact was otherwise than the truth, but such other party must show affirmatively that he has relied upon the conduct of the party against whom he invokes the doctrine of estoppel and been induced by it to act or refrain from doing so. Drouin v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 74 Vt. 343, 52 Atl. 957.

Admissions equivalent to disclaimer of title do not necessarily amount to an estoppel in pais against the party making them, unless it appears that the party claiming the estoppel has so acted upon such admissions that an advantage will be gained of him or an injury result to him without it. Reeves v. Matthews, 17 Ga. 449. See also Jones v. Morgan, 13 Ga. 515.

An erroneous admission of counsel on a former trial as to the proper construction of a written contract will not estop his client from insisting on the correct construction on a subsequent trial, where the adverse party has not acted on the admission or changed his position hy reason thereof. Hoffman v. Bloomsburg, etc., R. Co., 157 Pa. St. 174, 27 Atl. 564.

Where an adverse party acts in spite of open opposition on the part of the interested party, the equitable rule granting relief against interested parties who stand by without disclosing their rights and see another do an act in ignorance of them cannot be invoked. Ashby v. Ashby, 59 N. J. Eq. 547, 46 Atl. 522.

Inducing a party to do an act he is legally bound to do will not raise an estoppel. Western Land Assoc. v. Banks, 80 Minn. 317, 83 N. W. 192. See also St. Croix County v. Webster, 111 Wis. 270, 87 N. W. 302.

36. Grand Isle v. Kinney, 70 Vt. 381, 41 Atl. 130. It is of the essence of estoppel that the act relied upon as such should have been injurious and to the prejudice of him who relies upon it as estoppel. Smith v. Powell, 98 Va. 431, 36 S. E. 522.

An act clearly beneficial to the person setting up the estoppel cannot be relied on. Goodale v. Middaugh, 8 Colo. App. 223, 46 Pac. 11.

Agreement to perform binding contract.— No estoppel arises respecting an agreement, not otherwise binding, made to induce a party voluntarily to perform a contract which he could be compelled to perform, although he performed it relying on and in consequence of the agreement. Organ v. Stewart, 60 N. Y. 413.

Expenditures in litigation may as reasonably constitute the basis of an estoppel as any other expenditure. Meister v. Birney, 24 Mich. 435 [quoted in Heyn v. O'Hagen, 60 Mich. 150, 155, 26 N. i. Default or Wrongful Act of Person Setting Up Estoppel. An estoppel in pais is never allowed to be used as an instrument of fraud, but only to prevent injustice,[39] and it is therefore essential that the party claiming the benefit of the estoppel must have proceeded in good faith.[40]

j. Mutuality. An estoppel in pais to be binding must be mutual and reciprocal.[41]

Damage to support an estoppel in pais against the owner of land so as to convert him into a trustee thereof in favor of the party claiming the estoppel must be something more than a technical consideration in a contract. It must be substantial and such that the party sustaining it cannot be put back in his former condition, nor be adequately compensated in money. East v. Dolihite, 72 N. C. 562.

Individual and particular interest.— A party setting up an estoppel must be personally misled or deceived by the acts which constitute the estoppel alleged, and he must have a particular interest in such acts more than the public at large. He must have trusted to them and confided in them in some particular business transaction. Garlinghouse v. Whitwell, 51 Barb. (N. Y.) 208.

k. Certainty. Before an estoppel can be raised there must be certainty to every intent, and the facts alleged to constitute it are not to be taken by argument or inference.[42]

5. Estoppel Against Estoppel. Where an estoppel exists against an estoppel, the matter is set at large.[43]

6. Laches or Delay in Asserting Estoppel. An equitable estoppel is not lost by delay in asserting it as would be the operation of limitations on the corresponding action for deceit growing out of the transaction;[44] but, in order to justify a person setting up an estoppel against the legal owner of land, he must be free from the imputation of laches in acting upon the belief of ownership by one who has no right.[45]

B. Grounds — 1. Express Misrepresentation — a. Representations — (i) In General. Where a person wilfully makes a representation intended to induce another to act upon the faith of it, or where, whatever his intention, a reasonable man in the situation of that other would believe that it was meant that he should act upon it, and in either case that other does act upon it as true and alters his position, there is an estoppel in pais to conclude the former from averring against the latter a different state of things as existing at the same time.[46]

If a person represents that he has no title in land and thereby induces another to purchase it from a third person, he is estopped, as against the grantee, to assert title. Fleming v. West, 14 Nova Scotia 294.

The representation must have been made to the party setting up the estoppel, or must have been of such a character and made under such circumstances that the party making it must be taken to have contemplated that it would be communicated to and acted on by him. Hodge v. Ludlum, 45 Minn. 290, 47 N. W. 805.

If the representation is not such as should induce a prudent person to rely thereon, the person making it will not be estopped thereby. McLain v. Buliner, 49 Ark. 218, 4 S. W. 768, 4 Am. St. Rep. 36. See supra, V, A, 4, e.

In an action to recover land, it has been held that there must be something more than the mere declarations of the party sought to be estopped, and that it must be shown that he claims a title or interest in the land, however defective, evidenced by a deed, bond, or written contract. Grayheal v. Davis, 95 N. C. 508. See infra, V, C, 2, b.

Admissions, whether by acts or declarations, which come under an estoppel in pais, consist of those, on the faith of which, a person, properly relying upon them, has been induced by the party making them, to act differently from what presumptively he otherwise would have done. Having been the means designedly of leading others to a particular course of action, they cannot afterward be conscientiously retracted, by the one who made them. Kinney v. Farnsworth, 17 Conn. 355.

Where a party has led another to give credit to a third person by an admission of funds belonging to the latter, and a promise to assume the liability, he is estopped to deny that he has such funds. Hiltz v. Scully, 1 Cinc. Super. Ct. 555.

Where a person has procured another to make an admission for a particular purpose, he having knowledge of the actual facts, he cannot, in a suit against the party making the admission, insist upon it as an estoppel. Davis v. Sanders, 11 N. H. 259.

The mere payment of part of a debt by one not legally bound, which does not prejudice any one, will not estop him to deny liability for the balance. O'Malley v. Wagner, 76 S. W. 356, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 810.

The fact that an admission is made under oath does not make it conclusive as an estoppel if it would not otherwise operate as such. Smith v. Ferris, 1 Daly (N. Y.) 18.

Judicial admissions, made in the interest of a person not a party to the suit in which they are made, operate between the parties in interest like stipulations pour autrui in contracts, and they cannot be recalled by the party making them, after they have been acted on by the party in whose favor they are made. See 19 Cent. Dig. tit. "Estoppel," § 286.

The true test is whether or not the circumstances are such as to impose upon one in equity and good conscience the duty to speak. As to when this duty devolves, there is not and from the nature of the case cannot be any established or uniform rules. It depends to a great extent upon the circumstances attending each particular case, and it is rare that two are alike. Generally speaking, if a person is present at the time of a transaction, he must speak. or he will be estopped. If absent his silence or other conduct must at least be of a nature to have an obvious and direct tendency to cause the omission or the step taken. Ayer v. Younker, 10 Colo. App. 27, 50 Pac. 218.

The estoppel requires, as to the person against whom it is claimed, opportunity to speak, duty to speak, failure to speak, and reliance in good faith upon such failure. Corp., 9 Allen (Mass.) 54; Great Falls Co. v. Worster, 15 N. H. 412.

The party maintaining silence must have known that someone was relying thereon, and was either acting or about to act as he would not have done had the truth been told. Scharman v. Scharman, 38 Nebr. 39, 56 N. W. 704; Allen v. Shaw, 61 N. H. 95; Viele v. Judson, 82 N. Y. 32 [overruling Cotello v. Meade, 55 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 356].

Fraud or bad faith is a necessary ingredient in misrepresentation by passivity. North America Ins. Co. v. Miller, 24 Ohio Cir. Ct. 667.

The fact that it is real estate that is concerned, the title to which and the rights in party who has kept silent to deny what his silence has induced the other to believe and act upon it will operate as an estoppel.[75]

b. Failure to Assert Title or Right — (i) General Rule. Where a person stands by and sees another about to commit or in the course of committing an act infringing upon his rights and fails to assert his title or right, he will be estopped afterward to assert it;[76] but it must appear that it was his duty to speak, and that his silence or passive conduct actually misled the other to his prejudice.[77] which are generally to be affected by instruments in writing formally executed, does not prevent the operation of the estoppel. De Herques v. Marti, 85 N. Y. 609. See also Mattes v. Frankel, 157 N. Y. 603, 52 N. E. 585, 68 Am. St. Rep. 804. See, generally, Frauds, Statute of.

tinuance and asserts his ownership to the property on which they are being made, no estoppel arises.[90]

(B) Construction of Railroad. Where an owner permits the construction of a railroad on his land, he cannot after the road is completed and large sums of money are expended on the faith of his apparent acquiescence, deny to the railroad company the right to use the property.[91] Similarly, where a tax in aid of the construction of a railroad has been voted by the taxpayers of a municipality, and the company has constructed its road through the municipality at an expense greatly in excess of the amount of the tax, the taxpayers making no objection to the legality of the vote until after the completion of the road, they are estopped to object to the validity of the election,[92] unless it is shown that the vote was obtained by fraud of which they were ignorant at the time of such construction.[93] So too railroad companies, their stock-holders and directors, are mutually estopped by agreements between themselves in reliance on which large expenditures have been made without objection.[94] This estoppel, however, does not preclude a recovery of damages by the landowner for injuries arising from the construction and operation of the road.[95]

(D) Improvements on Near-By Property. The failure of a landowner to object to improvements which he sees being made on property near his own is no ground of estoppel, as he is not bound to complain until his rights are encroached upon,[97] unless he knew or could have foreseen that an injury to his own property would necessarily result therefrom.[98] Permitting buildings to be erected in contravention of restrictive covenants will as a rule estop.[99]

3. Bailey v. Lumpkin, 1 Ga. 392, holding that the maker of an overdue note who stands by when it is transferred by the holder without giving any notice that it is usurious is not thereby precluded from afterward defending against the indorsee on the ground of usury.

(v) Failure of Judgment Debtor to Assert Invalidity of Judgment. A judgment debtor who without objection stands by and suffers the assignment of the judgment against him to an innocent third person will be estopped afterward to assert the invalidity of such judgment.[4]

c. Failure to Assert Claim — (i) In General. Where a person having a claim sees another doing an act inconsistent therewith, and stands by in such a manner as to induce the person doing the act, and who might otherwise have abstained from it, to believe that he assents to its doing, he cannot afterward be heard to complain of it.[5] To constitute the estoppel, however, there must have been a duty to speak, and the adverse party must have been actually misled.[6]

(ii) When Asked Concerning It. When a person having a claim is asked concerning it under such circumstances as to render it his duty to speak, and fails or refuses to make it known, and another is thereby actually misled to his prejudice, he will be thereafter estopped to assert such claim.[7]

d. Failure to Assert Lien. If a mortgagee or other lien-holder stands by while another acquires an interest in the property, and fails to make known or assert his lien, he will be afterward estopped to do so to the prejudice of that other;[8] but he will not be estopped if his conduct did not mislead the other party or in any way affect the transaction.[9]

e. Concealment of Facts. Where a person by concealing facts in his possession induces another to act in a manner other than he would have acted had he known such facts, he will afterward be estopped to set up such facts to the other's prejudice.[10]

f. Surrender of Possession of Property. The mere surrender of the possession of property to another is not sufficient to estop the party surrendering it from subsequently asserting a right or title thereto,[11] but he may be estopped when the circumstances are such as to indicate a disclaimer of such right or title and it would be inequitable to permit him to assert the contrary.[12]

g. Conveyance With Reference to Street or Way. A grantor of land who describes the same by a boundary on a street or way, if he be the owner of such adjacent land, is estopped from setting up any claim or doing any acts inconsistent with the grantee's use of the street or way, and such estoppel applies to his heirs or those claiming under him.[13] Where land has been divided into lots and a plat thereof is made showing such lots and streets and the owner sells lots so designated on the plat, he is estopped from depriving the purchaser of the use of the street. He has an easement in such street to be enjoyed in connection with the lot of which the grantor cannot deprive him.[14]

The owners of city real estate, who plat it into lots and streets, and sell the lots with reference to the plat are estopped, as against

3. Negligence — a. In General. A recognized proposition as to estoppel in pais is that if in the transaction itself which is in dispute a party has led another into the belief of a certain state of facts by conduct of culpable negligence calculated to have that result, and such culpable negligence has been the proximate cause of leading, and has led, the other to act by mistake upon such belief to his prejudice, he cannot be heard afterward as against that other to show that the state of facts referred to did not exist.[15] Negligence, to amount to an estoppel, must be in the transaction itself, and be the proximate cause of leading the party into mistake, and also must be the neglect of some duty which is owing to such party or to the general public.[16]

b. Acts Causing Injury to One of Two Innocent Parties — (I) In General. Wherever one of two innocent persons must suffer by the acts of a third, he who has enabled such third person to occasion the loss must sustain it.[17] This rule does not apply, however, in cases where the wrong was accomplished through the instrumentality of a criminal act; it being held that in such cases the crime, and not the negligent act, is the proximate cause of the injury.[18]

an estoppel must be one who has in good faith been misled to his injury.[30] Where, however, an express declaration to a third person is not confidential but general, and it is afterward acted on by others, the party making the declaration will be estopped,[31] if the circumstances are such that he is fairly chargeable with knowledge that his declaration may induce the action taken.[32] A party cannot set up in his own favor an estoppel against himself created by his own act;[33] nor can a complainant in a suit to recover real estate, being required to establish title in himself, assert that defendant is estopped from showing a paramount title which is necessarily brought out by complainant's efforts to establish his title.[34]

The government is not ordinarily bound by an estoppel, and while individuals may be estopped by the unauthorized acts of their agents, apparently within the scope of their agency, the sovereign power, being the trustee of the people, is rarely, if ever, bound by the acts of its agents; but, while it is true that for the neglect or the illegal or the unauthorized acts of its agents the government should not ordinarily be estopped to show the truth, there is good authority, based upon sound reasoning, to support the doctrine that where the government has acted by legislative enactment, resolution, or grant, or otherwise than through the unauthorized or illegal acts of its agents, and the parties dealing with the government have relied upon the same, and in good faith have so changed their relation to the subject-matter thereof that it would be inequitable to declare such action or grant illegal, the government will be estopped. they will be estopped or not, with respect to such public right or interest as justice and right may require. Such an estoppel can be set up only as a means of preventing injustice or a fraudulent result where there has been a change of conduct induced by the act of the municipal corporation.[47] In some cases it has been said that a municipal corporation may be estopped by the action of its proper officers, when the corporation is acting in its private as distinguished from its governmental capacity, and has lawful power to act.[48]

honesty and fair dealing.[50] As a general rule the estoppel is commensurate with the thing represented and operates to put the party entitled to its benefit in the same position as if the thing represented were true;[51] and can neither be extended beyond or cut below the natural and reasonable import of the representation.[52] It in no case extends beyond the act done or omitted in reliance on the conduct or representation of the party sought to be estopped,[53] nor can it be applied to make good an act forbidden by law,[54] or, it has been held, to debar a party from availing himself in a court of law of the statute of limitations.[55]

W. 135, holding that where plaintiff had been in possession of land seven or eight years under an agreement for it with his father, and while in possession agreed with an adjoining owner as to the boundary, he had sufficient interest to estop him from after-and different manner than that as to which the representation is made;[58] but where a person induces another to purchase property by asserting that it is free from encumbrance, it has been held that he will be estopped afterward to claim under a mortgage or judgment lien existing at the time but subsequently purchased.[59] In some jurisdictions it is held that the title to land cannot be affected in an action at law by an estoppel in pais.[60]

c. Rights and Liabilities Under Contract. As a general rule the doctrine of equitable estoppel applies to rights and liabilities under contracts.[61] It cannot be applied where the party claiming the estoppel changed his position before the representation was made by the other;[62] or with regards to rights or liabilities under an illegal contract,[63] or to enforce in an action at law a parol change in an executory contract under seal.[64] Nor can facts and circumstances relating only to the consideration for a note raise an estoppel as to the right to deny its execution.[65]

d. Remedies. The doctrine of estoppel does not extend to matters affecting the remedy only, which are foreign to and disconnected from the contract or the character in which the parties entered into it;[66] and when applied it should be only to the extent of protecting the party who has been misled against the loss actually occasioned thereby.[67]

VI. QUASI-ESTOPPEL.

A. In General. The term "quasi-estoppel" has been applied to certain legal bars which are in some respects analogous to estoppel in pais and which have the same practical operation as an estoppel in pais, but which nevertheless differ from that form of estoppel in essential particulars.[68] The term includes the doctrine of ward repudiating the agreement when he became the owner of the land.

It is only where a party may accept or reject without serious inconvenience that an estoppel arises from the acceptance of benefits. Cincinnati v. Cameron, 33 Ohio St. 336; Bigelow Estop. (5th ed.) 686.

Conditional acceptance.—The estoppel arises, although the benefits are accepted on condition that it shall not prejudice the accepter's rights (People v. Cortland County, 15 N. Y. Suppl. 748), unless the other party agrees to the condition (Nelson v. Hagen, 72 Iowa 705, 31 N. W. 875. See, however, People v. Cortland County, supra).

No estoppel arises where the person accepting the benefits is entitled thereto regardless of the transaction in question. Hays v. Heidelberg, 9 Pa. St. 203.

Inconsistency of position.—The transaction and the acceptance of benefits must be inconsistent with the claim subsequently asserted. Hartman v. Hornsby, 142 Mo. 568, 44 S. W. 242 [distinguishing Clyburn v. McLaughlin, 106 Mo. 521, 17 S. W. 692, 27 Am. St. Rep. 369; Austin v. Loring, 63 Mo. 19]; White v. Com., 110 Pa. St. 90, 1 Atl. 33. effect of a contract.[79] So too under similar circumstances one may be estopped

The acceptance of purchase-money under a quitclaim deed will not estop the grantor from setting up a title subsequently acquired. Bryan v. Uland, 101 Ind. 477, 1 N. E. 52; Avery v. Akins, 74 Ind. 283.

Where property is sold, to be paid for in instalments, the title being reserved until full payment is made, and the purchaser assigns his interest, and the assignee fails to pay an instalment of the price, the original vendor is not estopped to assert title to the property by his receipt of benefits under the assignment, there having been no fraud practised upon the assignee. Wiser v. Lawler, (Ariz. 1900) 62 Pac. 695.

A stranger to the transaction cannot take advantage of the acquiescence or ratification (Canale v. Copello, 137 Cal. 22, 69 Pac. 698), unless he has changed his position in reliance thereon (Crutchfield v. Hudson, 23 Ala. 393; Letcher v. Morrison, 27 Ill. 209).

Estoppel against statute.— If an assignment for the benefit of creditors is void because it requires creditors becoming parties thereto to release their demands except so far as provided for in the assignment, a release embodied in the assignment is also void, and the releasing creditor is not estopped from repudiating it by the fact that he has received payments under the assignment, where he did not induce the debtor to make the assignment or to believe that it would be a legal one. Vose v. Holcomb, 31 Me. 407.

"Ratification is the approval by act, word or conduct of that which was attempted (of accomplishment) but which was improperly or unauthorizedly performed in the first instance." Hartmann v. Hornsby, 142 Mo. 368, 375, 44 S. W. 242. It is not properly speaking a species of estoppel (Blood v. La Serena Land, etc., Co., 113 Cal. 221, 41 Pac. 1017, 45 Pac. 252; Bigelow Estop. (5th ed.) 457, 694), although it is sometimes so called (see, for instance, CORPORATIONS, 10 Cyc. 1083).

If the facts as to the title of land are known to all the parties, and no one has been or of proceedings under which his property has been taken for a public or quasi-public use.[81] In order to constitute an estoppel, however, the benefit received must be direct,[82] and must have been voluntarily received,[83] and with a knowledge on the part of the person receiving it of his rights.[84]

(II) Partial Disaffirmance of Transaction — (A) In General. A party to a transaction cannot ordinarily affirm it in part and in part disaffirm it. Thus with regard to rights claimed under a contract, a party will not be allowed to assume the inconsistent position of affirming the contract in part and disaffirming it in part.[85]

(B) Rejecting Condition, Exception, or Reservation in Deed. A person claiming under a deed containing a condition, exception, or reservation is bound thereby and cannot take the conveyance without assuming its obligations.[86]

See 19 Cent. Dig. tit. "Estoppel," § 242.

Acquiescence is an intentional failure to resist the assertion of an adverse right. Babb v. Sullivan, 43 S. C. 436, 21 S. E. 277.

Knowledge and intent.— In order to constitute an acquiescence in or ratification of a transaction between third parties, the acts relied on must have been done with full knowledge of all the facts, and with the intention to adopt and be bound by that which is claimed to have been acquiesced in or ratified. Halbert v. De Bode, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 615, 40 S. W. 1011.

If a party acquiesces only because of his inability to prevent a violation of his right, he is not estopped to assert the same when he is in a condition to enforce it. Booth v. Bunce, 31 N. Y. 246; McMillin v. Barclay, 16 Fed. Cas. No. 8,902, 5 Fish. Pat. Cas. 189.

Oral denial of right.— If the assertion of a right by one party is instantly denied by the other, even if such assertion is made in writing, while the denial is merely oral, there will be no estoppel. Wilson v. Cobb, 28 N. J. Eq. 177.

Mere non-action or passivity will not constitute an estoppel where no one has been misled thereby to act to his injury. Markland Min., etc., Co. v. Kimmel, 87 Ind. 560; Covington, etc., R. Co. v. Bowler, 9 Bush (Ky.) 468; Chafee v. Aiken, 57 S. C. 507, 35 S. E. 800. Thus the mere non-mention of a claim for a partial breach of a contract at the time of settlement between the parties to the contract will not estop the party from setting up such claim. Winans v. Sierra Lumber Co., 66 Cal. 61, 4 Pac. 952. So a mere failure to repudiate a void and unauthorized act of an agent will not raise an estoppel. Eldred v. Peterson, 80 Iowa 264, 45 N. W. 755, 20 Am. St. Rep. 416.

Ratification of one unauthorized act will not estop the party from denying another authority to do a similar act for a different purpose. Deer Lodge Bank v. Hope Min. Co., 3 Mont. 146, 35 Am. Rep. 458.

Accepting a report of an auditing committee which had approved the accounts of its treasurer, or making a report founded thereon to the legislature, will not estop a corporation from maintaining an action on his bond. Lexington, etc., R. Co. v. Elwell, 8 Allen (Mass.) 371.

Acquiescence in the use of a stream as a sewer will not estop the abutting owners from objecting to the construction of other sewers emptying therein by which the pollution of the water would be increased. Gale v. Syracuse, 35 Misc. (N. Y.) 465, 71 N. Y. Suppl. 986.

Permitting incurrence of expense.— Where a person claiming under a conveyance of water-rights for the purposes of a grist-mill and a cotton or woolen factory uses water for other purposes, one claiming under the grantor is not estopped from suing therefor by knowingly permitting defendant to incur expense in preparing for such use without making known his rights in the water. A person whose failure to assert a claim in one action has not caused any loss or injury to the adverse party is not estopped to assert the same in a subsequent action. Matthews v. Duryee, 45 Barb. (N. Y.) 69.

Failure to make a defense in a proceeding in which it is not available will not estop the party from making it in a subsequent proceeding in which it is available. Allen v. Wolford, (Pa. 1886) 6 Atl. 752.

Fraudulent levies.— A creditor is not estopped to allege that levies under attachments by other creditors were fraudulent, although he did not take action to prevent prosecution of the attachment suits to judgment, sale of the property, and distribution of the proceeds. Glasser v. Meyrovitz, 119 Ala. 152, 24 So. 514.

A mortgagee who permits the assignee of a fire-insurance policy to sue thereon is not estopped to claim the proceeds, where he intervened in the suit and his intervention was dismissed at the request of such assignee. Heins v. Wicke, 102 Iowa 396, 71 N. W. 345.

Testifying in proceeding.— Where, in condemnation proceedings by a railroad company, counsel for defendant states that defendant does not claim the land sought to be condemned, the fact that the real owner, not a party to the proceedings, testifies to the value of the land, will not estop him from subsequently maintaining ejectment against the railroad company for the land. Owen v. St. Paul, etc., R. Co., 12 Wash. 313, 41 Pac. 44.

Acceptance of payment into court.— Where a complainant brings money into court insisting that it is all that is due defendant, and the court makes an order that it be paid the latter on his executing a refunding bond, if defendant executes the bond and receives the money he will not be estopped from showing that a larger amount is due him, and this although he does not bring into court the note which the money was intended to pay. Byrd v. Odem, 9 Ala. 755.

Partition proceedings.— A party who participates and acquiesces in proceedings for partition will be estopped to subsequently deny the validity thereof. Hurst v. Whitly, 47 Ga. 366; Akers v. Hobbs. 105 Mo. 127, 16 S. W. 682; Young v. Babilon, 91 Pa. St. 280. Compare Moore v. Blagge, (Tex. Civ. App. 1896) 34 S. W. 311 [following 6 Tex. A person who relies upon an adjudication as an estoppel cannot dispute the truth of the material fact on which such adjudication is predicated. Buford v. Adair, 43 W. Va. 211, 27 S. E. 260, 64 Am. St. Rep. 854.

A defect of parties in a counter-claim is not available to plaintiff, where the omitted party is equally necessary to a determination of his own cause of action. Pawnee City First Nat. Bank v. Avery Planter Co., (Nebr. 1903) 95 N. W. 622.

Misjoinder on application of defendant.— Where, on defendant's application, a third person is joined as a necessary party to the action, defendant is estopped to deny that such third person was a necessary party. Kelly v. Norwich F. Ins. Co., 82 Iowa 137, 47 N. W. 986.

By designating a pleading as a defense, a party is estopped from afterward asserting that it is a counter-claim, and entitled to be treated as such. Babcock v. Maxwell, 21 Mont. 507, 54 Pac. 943.

One who induces the dismissal of an appeal on the ground that the decree is not final cannot afterward claim as against a bill of review that it was final. Taylor v. Cook, 136 Ala. 354, 34 So. 905, 96 Am. St. Rep. 26.

Suing on an award will estop a party from denying the authority of the arbitrators. Black v. Allan, 17 U. C. C. P. 240.

Facts otherwise apparent.— A portion of a claim having been satisfied by a transfer of real estate, a claim of the full amount will not amount to a disaffirmance of the transfer where an affidavit for an attachment accompanying the complaint sets forth such transfer as an offset to the whole indebtedness. Colvin v. Shaw, 79 Hun (N. Y.) 56, 29 N. Y. Suppl. 644.

Avoidance of estoppel.— An accepter of a bill who by suing the drawer on a note given him as indemnity for the acceptance before maturity of the bill has estopped himself from asserting that he is an accommodation accepter for a special purpose cannot avoid the effect of his act by afterward abandoning the suit. Farley Nat. Bank v. Henderson, 118 Ala. 441, 24 So. 428. However, the joinder of a husband as co-plaintiff with the wife, the complaint being afterward amended by striking out his name, will not estop him from claiming that he acted as agent for his wife. American Express Co. v. Lankford, 2 Indian Terr. 18, 46 S. W. 183.

Agreement as to date of rendition of judgment see Ridgway v. Morrison, 28 Ind. 201.

Consent order.— Where a party consents to an order providing for the advancement of money by a corporation to protect an estate in its possession as receiver, and the money is advanced, he cannot impeach the order, nor question the corporation's appointment or capacity to act as receiver, nor object that the receiver became a creditor by making such advances. Roby v. Title Guarantee, etc., Co., 166 Ill. 336, 46 N. E. 1110.

Consent to jurisdiction.— Where a suit is instituted of which a justice has no jurisdiction, and by agreement of defendant the case is tried before the justice, and results in a judgment for plaintiff, and defendant takes no appeal, and afterward plaintiff in accordance with a rule of court files a sworn copy of his account and takes a judgment for want of an affidavit of defense, defendant is estopped from objecting to the jurisdiction of the justice in order to destroy the validity of the judgment. Montgomery v. Heilman, 96 Pa. St. 44. See also Phelps v. Norman, (Tex. Civ. App. 1900) 55 S. W. 978, where it was held that a party who has signed and filed a stipulation in a cause that a judgment may be entered against him by a district court cannot question its jurisdiction.

A widow is not estopped by the possession of her intestate husband, who claimed under the owner but never paid any consideration or received a deed, from acquiring the title for herself instead of the estate. McDonald v. McCoy, 121 Cal. 55, 53 Pac. 421. However, a widow who continues in possession of land is estopped to deny the title derived under her husband's deed. Grandy v. Bailey, 35 N. C. 221.

Claim under unauthorized survey.— Where one having a grant of an unlocated lot of public lands makes a survey and claims thereunder in good faith but without authority, he is not estopped thereby as against one who enters upon and occupies adjoining land from claiming such land after it has been set off and patented to him under an official survey in place of part of the land which he claimed. Boggs v. Merced Min. Co., 14 Cal. 279.

One is not estopped to acquire a tax title to land merely because he went into possession thereof, claiming title prior to the levy of the tax on which the tax title is based. Blackwood v. Van Vleit, 30 Mich. 118.

Purchasers holding under conflicting titles. — Where land was purchased by parties whom the vendor assured that he owned all the conflicting titles and would guaranty to them indisputable rights, they could not be considered as holding under any one of the titles exclusively, but must be viewed as holding under that which would give them the best right, and they were not estopped from resisting eviction by relying on the elder grant. 2. Waiver. While waiver is not in the proper sense of the term a species of estoppel,[22] yet where a party to a transaction induces another to act upon the reasonable belief that he has waived or will waive certain rights, remedies, or objections which he is entitled to assert, he will be estopped to insist upon such rights, remedies, or objections to the prejudice of the one misled.[23] Questions of waiver, whether or not the adverse party has changed his position to his prejudice, are considered in many other topics in this work.[24]

Waiver distinguished.— "It seems to me that one difference between waiver and estoppel is that in the former the result was voluntary, while in the latter, the conduct of the party may have been voluntary, but with intention not to lose any existing rights, yet, if such conduct mislead, then estoppel arises. One is the voluntary surrendering of a right, Stewart v. Crosby, 50 Me. 134; Hoxie v. Home Ins. Co., 32 Conn. 21, 85 Am. Dec. 240, and the other is the inhibition to assert it from mischief that it has caused. Shaw v. Spencer, 100 Mass. 382, 395, 97 Am. Dec. 107, 1 Am. Rep. 115." Libby v. Haley, 91 Me. 331, 333, 39 Atl. 1004. "In strictness, the term 'waiver' is used to designate the act, or the consequences of the act, of one side only, while the term 'estoppel' (in pais) is applicable where the conduct of one side has induced the other to take such a position that he will be injured if the first be permitted to repudiate his acts." See, however, Larremore v. Squires, 30 Misc. (N. Y.) 62, 62 N. Y. Suppl. 885, where it was held that in foreclosure of a mortgage taken on the faith that a lease given the mortgagor was a recognition of his title estoppel, without a specific designation of it as such;[35] and where plaintiff has had no opportunity to plead an estoppel, he may show it in evidence without having pleaded it;[36] and the same is true where it does not appear that plaintiff knew the facts when his complaint was drawn,[37] or that his demand must ultimately rest upon it.[38]

3. As Defense — a. Raised by Demurrer. Whenever the matter of estoppel is apparent on the face of the pleadings, advantage may be taken of it by demurrer,[39] but not otherwise.[40]

b. Raised by Plea or Answer — (i) In General. Equitable estoppel is as available at law as in equity,[41] but no intendments are made in favor of a plea of estoppel, and it is incumbent on the pleader to plead fully all the facts essential to its existence.[42] It has been held that an estoppel in pais need not be pleaded, although relied on as a defense;[43] and the same ruling has been made with regard to estoppel by deed.[44] Defendant need not plead a matter of estoppel where the facts constituting it are alleged by plaintiff,[45] or where the estoppel is in rebuttal of evidence introduced by the latter,[46] or where the failure to plead it is waived by plaintiff by proceeding with the trial of the case without objection.[47] by the lessee, it is not necessary to plead an estoppel to render proof thereof admissible.

After-acquired title.— A petition in a suit to quiet title, alleging that an after-acquired title in plaintiff's vendor inured to the benefit of plaintiff, which failed to allege that plaintiff's deed contained either a covenant of warranty or of seizin, was demurrable. (II) Mode and Form. A plea or answer of estoppel must allege that plaintiff ought to be concluded from showing some fact or matter stated in the declaration or complaint to which the estoppel is interposed, because of some other fact or matter alleged in the plea or answer which constitutes the estoppel.[48] It should have a formal commencement and conclusion to mark its special character and a defect in such particulars may be reached by general demurrer.[49] Such a plea may be joined with a general denial where the averments by way of estoppel are not inconsistent with the denial.[50]

(III) Sufficiency of Allegations. All the essential facts constituting an equitable estoppel must be pleaded with certainty and particularity;[51] but if the allegations amount to an estoppel, it is sufficient, although the estoppel is not pleaded in so many words.[52]

(IV) Demurrer or Reply. If defendant pleads facts sufficient to constitute an estoppel plaintiff may reply.[53] If, on the other hand, the facts pleaded are insufficient, plaintiff must demur or he will be held to waive the question as to their sufficiency.[54]

ance of a defense must be specially pleaded by reply.[55] However, the fact that defendant is estopped to set up a defense need not be specially pleaded where the facts requisite to work an estoppel appear from the declaration[56] or answer;[57] but plaintiff may in either case take advantage of the estoppel by demurring to the plea.[58]

B. Issues, Proof, and Variance. To sustain an issue of estoppel the evidence must prove the very facts upon which the alleged estoppel is based. The estoppel pleaded cannot be supported by evidence tending to show another and different estoppel.[59] Before any of the consequences of an estoppel can be claimed the facts constituting it must be found or given in evidence.[60]

C. Evidence[61] — 1. Burden of Proof. Under the rule that he has the burden of proof who has the affirmative of the issue, the burden of proof is on the party alleging and relying on an estoppel to establish all the facts necessary to constitute it,[62]

And see Hawley v. Middlebrook, 28 Conn. 527, in which the plea was nul tiel record, with notes that defendant would show that he had never entered into the recognizance sued on, and it was held that it was not necessary for plaintiff to plead specially the facts estopping defendant from denying the truth of the record.

Under statutes, however, which do not allow a replication, plaintiff is allowed to give matters of estoppel in evidence, since the general rule can only apply where he has had an opportunity to plead. Waddle v. Morrill, 26 Wis. 611. See also Lites v. Addison, 27 S. C. 226, 3 S. E. 214.

subject of course to the proper presumptions which may be indulged under the facts of the particular case.[63]

2. Admissibility. Upon an issue of estoppel any evidence is admissible which tends to prove or rebut any of the facts essential to the establishment of the estoppel alleged.[64] Conversely where the doctrine of estoppel applies to the case, any testimony at variance with its full application thereto becomes incompetent.[65]

3. Weight and Sufficiency. Every fact essential to an estoppel in pais must be clearly and satisfactorily proved. Beyond this no general rule can be formulated, since from their very nature estoppels in pais are wholly dependent upon the peculiar facts of the individual cases.[66]

property to assert his title when the sale was made in his presence, the burden of proof lies on the purchaser to show that the owner's silence was wilful; but this requires no positive proof, as it may be inferred by the jury whenever the surrounding circumstances are such as to warrant the belief that his silence was incompatible with innocence of intention or object. Steele v. Adams, 21 Ala. 534.

Compare Bell v. Goodnature, 50 Minn. 417, 52 N. W. 908, to the effect that where in trespass defendant claims to own the land, and it appears that plaintiff was induced to buy it from another on defendant's representation that it belonged to such other, the court in charging the jury as to the facts which will estop defendant to claim title need not charge, and the jury need not find, that plaintiff would be injured by allowing the representation to be disproved.

Facts relied on.— The court need only charge the jury as to the facts relied on to create the estoppel, although there may be other facts beyond those stated which would amount to an estoppel. Berg v. McLafferty, (Pa. 1888) 12 Atl. 460.

Must be warranted by the evidence.— See Borkenhagen v. Paschen, 72 Wis. 272, 39 N. W. 774.

"Wantonly."— An instruction to find an estoppel if plaintiff "knowingly and wantonly suffered and permitted" certain facts to be held out is not misleading, although the word "wantonly" alone would require too great a degree of culpability. Harward v. Davenport, 105 Iowa 592, 75 N. W. 487.

Where the evident meaning of an instruction is correct, and it cannot be understood otherwise, it is sufficient. Cox v. Matthews, 17 Ind. 367. See also Draffin v. Charleston, etc., R. Co., 34 S. C. 464, 468, 13 S. E. 427, in which the court said that "the practical effect of the judge's charge was to leave the questions of fact to the jury, without any intimation whatever as to his own opinion, and then to lay down the law of estoppel, in which we see no error."

7. Century Dict.

At the common law there was no process by which a threatened trespass upon a real estate, however great or irreparable, could be prevented. After the act was done the injured owner might bring his action of trespass against the wrong-doer, and recover satisfaction in damages; but, the common law gave him no means of preventing the execution of the designs and threats of anyone, whose declared and settled purpose was to commit a trespass upon his lands. If, however, the claimant was not in possession, and he thought proper to bring an action to establish his right, and recover the estate; then, and in aid of such suit, and to prevent any injury from being done to the property, pending the controversy, the common law gave the writ of estrepement. Duvall v. Waters, 1 Bland (Md.) 569, 573, 18 Am. Dec. 350 [citing Jacob L. Dict.].

restrained in its meaning,[78] and in fact it is sometimes used as the equivalent of ANY,[79] q. v.

EVERYONE. Every person,[80] including a corporation.[81] (See PERSON.)

EVERYTHING. All things.[82]

EVERYWHERE. When literally used, a term synonymous with "the earth."[83]

EVICTED. In pleading, expelled, amoved, and put out.[84] (See EVICTION.)

EVICTION.[85] In its original and technical meaning, an expulsion by the assertion of a paramount title, and by process of law;[86] a recovery[87] of land, &c., by form of law;[88] a lawful disturbance of possession, or dispossession by judgment of law;[89] an ouster,[90] DISPOSSESSION,[91] q. v.; some change in the possession of the party by the disturbance of an actual or constructive possession, which has been displaced by a paramount title to which the party has been compelled by law, or by satisfactory proof of genuineness, to submit;[92] a turning out of possession, or placing the party in such a situation that, his expulsion being inevitable, he voluntarily surrenders the possession to save expulsion.[93] But the idea that the ouster must be by process of law has been long since abandoned.[94] Eliminating the old notion of an eviction, it may now be taken to mean[95] this,—not a mere trespass and nothing more, but something of a grave and permanent character done by the landlord with the intention of depriving the tenant of the enjoyment of the demised premises;[96] and the term is now popularly applied to every class of expulsion or amotion.[97] See COVENANTS; LANDLORD.
