I. INTRODUCTION.

A. Definition, Origin, and Nature of Equity — 1. DEFINITION. As the term is used in American cases and texts, equity is that portion of remedial justice which was formerly administered in England by the high court of chancery[1] by virtue of its extraordinary jurisdiction[2] as extended, limited, and modified by statute, and adapted to our conditions by judicial construction.[3]

2. ORIGIN AND HISTORY. The extraordinary jurisdiction of the court of chancery sprang from the conception that the king "is the fountain of justice," that is, that the supreme judicial power rests in the crown and that the law courts exercise merely an authority derived from it. When for any reason the subject was unable to obtain justice in the law courts the practice arose of petitioning the king directly, or the king in council, or the chancellor, for relief. Many early petitions presented as a ground for this appeal merely the poverty and weakness of plaintiff and the power and violence of defendant. The rigidity and limited character of the original writs and the impossibility of obtaining writs to meet cases not strictly within the precedents soon became the principal ground of such petitions. The chancellor, as the keeper of the seal and royal secretary, issued the original writs, and to him therefore petitions for relief for this latter reason would naturally be addressed. Nevertheless the early cases disclose a jurisdiction exercised indiscriminately by the council and the chancellor, whatever might be the grounds of petition. At last, by 3 Hen. VII, c. 1, a distribution of jurisdiction was effected whereby petitions based on the peculiar situation of the parties were relegated to the council, leaving to the chancellor cases based on the inadequacy of the common law. After many struggles with the law judges, notable among which is that led on the one side by Lord Ellesmere and on the other by Sir Edward Coke, the independent, and for some purposes superior, authority of chancery as a distinct court, administering independent remedies by its own procednre, became thoroughly established. Later chancellors developed through this jurisdiction a system of rules, principles, procedure, and remedies, which together form what we know as equity.[4]

3. NATURE OF MODERN EQUITY. Equity is therefore now a separate but incomplete system of jurisprudence, administered side by side with the common law, supplementing the latter where it is deficient, in places overlapping and there usually prevailing as against the law. It has its own fixed precedents and principles, now scarcely more elastic than those of the law. The relief it affords is

1. Certain other courts in England formerly exercised a jurisdiction analogous to that of chancery and called equitable. The court of exchequer exercised a very extensive jurisdiction of this character which was in 1841 transferred to the chancery by 5 Vict. c. 5. The influence of these courts on equity in America, if felt at all, was so slight as to be negligible. For a statement of the relation of such courts to the court of chancery see Jeremy Eq. Jur. Appendix.

2. Styled extraordinary to distinguish it from certain jurisdiction exercised at law — largely the issuing of original writs. Mitford Ch. Pl. 6.

3. "Equity jurisprudence may therefore properly be said to be that portion of remedial justice which is exclusively administered by a Court of Equity as contradistinguished from that portion of remedial justice which is exclusively administered by a Court of Common Law." 1 Story Eq. Jur. (13th ed.) 20. For other definitions see Abbott L. Dict.; Bispham Eq. §§ 1, 11; Burrill L. Dict.; Rapalje & L. L. Dict. See also infra, I, A, 2.

4. Although "every true definition of equity must, therefore, be, to a greater or less extent, a history" (Bispham Eq. § 1) such a history is beyond the scope of the present article and the statement of the text is necessarily suggestive rather than comprehensive. For the history of equity and the court of chancery see the following: Adams Eq. Introd.; Hardy Introd. Close Rolls; Jeremy Eq. Jur. Introd.; Kerly Hist. Sk. Eq. Jur. Ct. Ch.; Parkes Hist. Ct. Ch.; Pike Introd. Y. B.; Seton Early Rec. Eq.; Spence Eq. Jur. II, 1; Story Eq. Jur. cc. 1, 2. Collections of early proceedings of the highest historical value are: A Calendar of the Proceedings in Chancery in the Reign of Queen Elizabeth (published by the Record Commission in 1827); Select Cases in Chancery (publications of the Selden Society, vol. x). The latter contains a learned introduction of a historical character.

usually different, and the procedure, in some jurisdictions entirely distinct, in all varies more or less from that of law.[5]

B. Systems of Administration. The American jurisdictions may be grouped with respect to their systems of equity administration with practical accuracy into three classes: In the first class equity is administered by courts distinct from those administering the common law. In these the procedure is based upon that of the English high court of chancery, modified to a greater or less extent by statutes and rules of court. In the second class jurisdiction of cases at law and in equity is vested in the same courts, but the procedure is kept distinct and is in general the same as in the first class. This general system of procedure in force in the first and second classes of jurisdiction is that specially treated in this article. In the third class fall those states where law and equity are administered by the same court and where codes or practice acts abolish the distinctions in procedure.[6] Changes made from time to time in the system of administration in certain jurisdictions and minor departures from the typical systems render any tabular arrangement of the American jurisdictions in this respect misleading, each presenting its own peculiar history.[7]

5. The lay notion of equity is that its purpose is to administer natural justice in the particular case without regard to fixed or general rules, and indeed to set aside rules of law when essential to do so to the ends of natural justice. Such was undoubtedly the principle guiding the early chancellors. Such a state of affairs inevitably led to the condition depicted by the well known statement of Selden that "Equity is a roguish thing. For law we have a measure, and know what we trust to, Equity is according to the conscience of him that is Chancellor; and as that is larger or narrower, so is Equity. 'Tis all one as if they should make his foot the standard for the measure we call a Chancellor's foot. What an uncertain measure would this be! One Chancellor has a long foot, another a short foot, a third an indifferent foot. 'Tis the same thing in the Chancellor's conscience." Table Talk Eq.

The modern theory follows that of Lord Eldon: "The doctrines of this Court ought to be as well settled, and made as uniform almost as those of the common law, laying down fixed principles, but taking care that they are not to be applied according to the circumstances of each case." Gee v. Pritchard, 2 Swanst. 402, 414, 19 Rev. Rep. 87, 36 Eng. Reprint 670. "The principles are as fixed and certain as the principles on which the Courts of Common Law proceed." Bond v. Hopkins, 1 Sch. & Lef. 413. "Equity is not the chancellor's sense of moral right, or his sense of what is just and equal. It is a complex system of established law." Savings Inst. v. Makin, 23 Me. 360, 366.

6. The codes do not purport to affect substantive rights or to abolish the essential distinctions between legal and equitable rights and relief, but merely to assimilate the processes by which such rights are asserted and such relief obtained. For their effect in these respects see ACTIONS, II, J [1 Cyc. 734]. Where a code is enacted, suits in equity pending when it took effect generally proceed to decree under the former practice. Walker v. Armstrong, 2 Kan. 198; Green v. Moore, 66 N. C. 425.

7. In this note the general system in force from time to time in each jurisdiction is indicated, but only with sufficient particularity to assist in the study of cases of different periods.

Alabama, prior to Jan. 26, 1839, belonged to the second class of jurisdictions described in the text, administering law and equity by the same court but following the chancery procedure in equity cases. On that date separate courts of chancery were established and the state passed into the first class. This system still prevails. Code (1897), c. 16; Const. (1875) art. 6, §§ 1, 7, 8; Rules Pr. Ch. Ct. (Code, p. 1202).

Arizona has always been in the third class. Laws (1864), p. 1.

Arkansas.— The same courts generally administer law and equity but separate courts of chancery have been from time to time established in certain counties. The procedure was distinct until 1868 when a code was adopted largely assimilating procedure at law and in equity, but preserving certain distinctions.

California.— The first session of the California legislature enacted a Practice Act (Laws (1849–1850), c. 142) essentially similar to the New York and other codes of procedure. The state has therefore always belonged to the third class. As to the effect of this act see De Witt v. Hays, 2 Cal. 463, 56 Am. Dec. 352.

Colorado.—While a territory and until 1877 law and equity were administered by the same courts, but the procedure was distinct. 12 U. S. St. at L. p. 174, § 9; Palmer v. Cowdrey, 2 Colo. 1. In 1877 a code of procedure was adopted and the state fell into the third class.

Connecticut was in the second class until 1879, when a code was adopted known as the Practice Act (Pub. Acts (1879), c. 83) whereby the state was transferred to the third class. A section of this act provides that "wherever there is any variance between the rules of equity and the rules of the common law, in reference to the same matter, the rules of equity shall prevail." For detailed

C. Sources of Jurisdiction — 1. The English Court of Chancery. From what has been said as to the nature and origin of equity it follows that the basis history of the judicial system to 1848 see 1 Conn. Pref.

Delaware.— A separate court of chancery was created under the constitution of 1792 and the state has ever since been in the first class. Rev. St. (1893) p. 704.

District of Columbia.— The supreme court of the District of Columbia exercises both legal and equitable jurisdiction, but the procedure, as in federal circuit courts, is distinct. Willard v. Wood, 135 U. S. 309, 10 S. Ct. 831, 34 L. ed. 210; Page v. Burnstine, 102 U. S. 664, 26 L. ed. 268.

Georgia was in the second class until 1860, when a code was adopted assimilating the procedure at law and in equity but leaving the mode of trial as to each unchanged. Mackenzie v. Flannery, 90 Ga. 590, 16 S. E. 710; Littleton v. Spell, 77 Ga. 227, 2 S. E. 935. Prior to the code the superior courts had all the powers of the English chancery. Bolton v. Flournoy, R. M. Charlt. 125.

Idaho was organized as a territory in 1863. 12 U. S. St. at L. 808. In 1864 a code was enacted assimilating the procedure. Laws (1864), tit. 1, pp. 77–233. The state constitution (art. 5, § 1) prohibits distinctions in procedure and establishes a single form of action. In case of a variance between law and equity, equity shall prevail. Rev. St. § 4020. There have never been separate courts.

Illinois has always been in the second class. See Maher v. O'Hara, 9 Ill. 427.

Indiana.— From 1807 to 1814 there was a separate court of chancery. From 1814 until 1852 equity and law were administered by the same courts but the procedure was distinct. See McCord v. Ochiltree, 8 Blackf. 15. In 1852 a code was enacted. Rev. St. (1852) p. 2, c. 1. Since then the state has been in the third class.

Indian Territory.— The United States courts of the Indian Territory have both legal and equitable jurisdiction administered under an act of congress, adopting for that purpose the pleading and practice statutes of Arkansas. 26 U. S. St. at L. c. 182.

Iowa was until 1851 in the second class. In that year a code was enacted which was held, however, not to embrace chancery proceedings. Claussen v. Lafrenz, 4 Greene 224. A revised code was adopted in 1860 which has been the basis of the procedure since. It provides for "uniformity in the pleadings of law and equity, with a possible uniformity throughout, but a right of dissimilarity in the mode of proof, trial, and appeal." Report on Civil Code (Rev. (1860) p. 450 note). There have never been distinct courts.

Kansas belonged to the second class until 1859 when a code was adopted. When the rules of law and equity differ equity prevails. Deering v. Boyle, 8 Kan. 525, 12 Am. Rep. 480.

Kentucky.— Prior to 1891 there had been from time to time established separate chancery courts in certain counties. Otherwise law and equity were administered by the same courts. Until 1851 the procedure was distinct. In that year a code was adopted (Laws (1851), p. 106) which abolished "the forms of all actions and suits heretofore existing" but provided that "the proceedings in a civil action may be of two kinds: (1) Ordinary; (2) equitable." It has been held that this provision was intended to preserve the distinction between proceedings at law and in equity (Grigsby v. Barr, 14 Bush 330), and that the only change made by the code is that if an action be brought in the wrong court it shall not be dismissed but transferred, or else tried and decided as if properly brought (Fraley v. Peters, 12 Bush 469). The separate chancery courts were, however, abolished by the constitution of 1891. Const. §§ 109, 135. Notwithstanding the cases cited the code has practically assimilated the procedure and requires simply a separation of the cases on the docket. Hepburn Dev. Code Pl. § 193.

Maine.—The common-law courts were given from time to time limited equitable powers, but no complete system existed until by Laws (1874), c. 173, the supreme judicial court was given "full equity jurisdiction, according to the usage and practice of courts of equity, in all other cases where there is not a plain, adequate and complete remedy at law." The state is now in the second class.

Maryland.—The procedure in Maryland has always been distinct from that at law. From April 3, 1777, to March 10, 1854, there was a chancellor. Since 1854 the same courts have administered both law and equity except in the city of Baltimore where there is a separate chancery court.

Massachusetts.— From time to time statutes granted to the courts of law specific equitable powers. In 1877 the supreme judicial court was constituted a court of general equity jurisdiction. Laws (1877), c. 178. The state belongs in the second class. For detailed history of chancery in Massachusetts see article by Edwin H. Woodruff, 5 L. Q. Rev. p. 370, and for the colonial period alone, article by Solon D. Wilson, 18 Am. L. Rev. 226.

Michigan.— Except from 1836 to 1847, when there was a separate court of chancery, the same courts have administered both law and equity. See Harrington Ch. (Rev. ed.) Pref.; Richards v. Morton, 18 Mich. 255. A constitutional provision authorized the legislature to abolish, as far as practicable, distinctions between law and equity proceedings. The legislature in pursuance thereof passed an act giving a right to trial by jury in equity cases. Laws (1887), p. 358. This was held unconstitutional on the ground that of our equity jurisprudence must be sought in the extraordinary jurisdiction of the high court of chancery of England, and so it is held that equity jurisprudence the constitution authorized the removal of nominal distinctions alone and that it was beyond the power of the legislature to take away the functions of judges in equity cases. Brown v. Kalamazoo Cir. Judge, 75 Mich. 274, 42 N. W. 827, 13 Am. St. Rep. 438, 5 L. R. A. 226.

Minnesota belonged to the second class until 1853 when a code was enacted, St. (1853) c. 1, and the state has since been in the third class.

Mississippi.— Equity was administered by the law courts but by distinct procedure until 1821 when separate courts of chancery were established which still exist. 1 Freem. Ch. Pref.; Annot. Code (1892), c. 20; Const. art. 6, §§ 159, 160, 161; Laws (1898), c. 64.

Missouri.— Const. (1820) art. 5, §§ 1, 9, 11, provided for a chancellor and a court of chancery. An amendment in 1822 (art. 1, § 1), abolished the office of chancellor and transferred jurisdiction in chancery to the law courts. The legislature was authorized to establish separate courts of chancery, but never did so. From 1822 to 1849 Missouri was in the second class. A code was then adopted which places it in the third class. Laws (1849), p. 78.

Montana.— A civil practice act assimilating procedure in law and equity was passed by the territorial legislature in 1867, but for several years its validity in this respect was in doubt. See infra, this note, "In the Territories."

Nebraska has practically always been in the third class. The first territorial legislature adopted a large part of the Iowa code. Laws (1855), p. 55. In 1858 a complete code was adopted. Laws (1858), p. 110. A certain distinction was observed between actions at law and suits in equity, and there were special provisions regulating the latter, until the state was admitted into the Union, when these distinctions were abolished. Laws (1867), p. 71.

Nevada has always been in the third class. Laws (1861), p. 314.

New Hampshire.—For a long time no courts had chancery powers, but the courts of law adopted equitable principles when necessary to prevent injustice. In 1832 an act was passed conferring equitable powers upon the superior court of judicature which was sometime later construed as conferring general equity jurisdiction. Truesdale v. Straw, 58 N. H. 207; Walker v. Cheever, 35 N. H. 339; Wells v. Pierce, 27 N. H. 503. The procedure is distinct.

New Jersey has always belonged to the first class of jurisdictions. For detailed history of court of chancery see articles by Edward Q. Keasbey, 18 N. J. L. J. 69, and by W. M. Clevenger, 18 N. J. L. J. 229.

New Mexico was in the second class until 1897 when a practice act was adopted, Laws (1897), c. 73, which practically assimilates the procedure but preserves the former practice "in all cases and proceedings not comprehended within the terms and intent of this code."

New York.— From 1683 to the Revolution there was, except for brief intervals, a separate court of chancery. This court was reorganized by the constitution of 1777, and with some changes in 1821, existed until 1846, when by the constitution of that year its jurisdiction was transferred to the supreme court. The distinct chancery practice of course prevailed. From 1846 to 1848 equity was administered under chancery forms by the supreme court. In 1848 New York, first of all the states, adopted a code and has since been in the third class. See article by L. B. Proctor, 56 Alb. L. J. 173.

North Carolina was in the second class until 1868 when the constitution provided for the abolition of the distinctions in procedure (art. 4, § 1). A code was adopted the same year.

North Dakota.— The first legislature of Dakota territory adopted a code abolishing the distinctions in procedure at law and in equity. Doubts being entertained as to the validity of this act under the Organic Act, congress confirmed the code. 18 U. S. St. at L. 27; Gress v. Evans, 1 Dak. 387, 46 N. W. 1132. When the territory was divided and the two states of North and South Dakota were formed in 1889, the codes were continued in force.

Ohio was in the second class until 1853 when a code was adopted. Laws (1853), p. 57.

Oklahoma.— The first legislature of Oklahoma territory enacted a code (St. (1890) c. 70), placing it in the third class. But this code is ineffectual where its operation would deprive a party of a jury trial within the terms of the seventh amendment of the U. S. constitution. Black v. Jackson, 177 U. S. 349, 20 S. Ct. 648, 44 L. ed 801 [reversing 6 Okla. 751, 52 Pac. 406]; Potts v. Hollon, 177 U. S. 365, 20 S. Ct. 654, 44 L. ed. 808 [reversing 6 Okla. 696, 52 Pac. 917].

Oregon was in the second class until 1863, proceedings in equity being regulated by a separate practice act after 1854. Laws (1854), p. 173. In 1863 a code was adopted assimilating the pleadings at law and in equity but preserving in a measure the distinction between actions at law and suits in equity. See Burrage v. Bonanza Gold, etc., Min. Co., 12 Oreg. 169, 6 Pac. 766; Beacannon v. Liebe, 11 Oreg. 443, 5 Pac. 273; Delay v. Chapman, 2 Oreg. 242.

Pennsylvania.— There have never been distinct chancery courts, except from 1720 to 1736, and thence until the middle of the nineteenth century equity jurisprudence had no distinct existence. The necessity of enforcing equitable principles and remedies led to various devices whereby they were enforced under common-law forms, the courts asserting in themselves substantial chancery powers to be executed in that manner. Bisbing v. Graham, 14 Pa. St. 14, 53 Am. Dec. 510. This involved in most cases charging equitable principles to the jury and taking a verdict on the facts but reserving the form of judgment to the court. Hawthorn v. Bronson, 16 Serg. & R. 269; Hawk v. Geddis, 16 Serg. & R. 23 [affirming 1 Watts 280]. In 1836 full chancery powers were given over specified subjects covering a large portion of the field of equity to the courts of Philadelphia. Later further local grants were made, and in 1857 this jurisdiction was extended throughout the state. While the courts recognize the power of the legislature to give equity jurisdiction over what was formerly of common-law cognizance (Commonwealth Bank v. Schuykill Bank, 1 Pars. Eq. Cas. 180), they also hold that such grant of chancery powers does not deprive the courts of their former power to work out equity under common-law forms. Biddle v. Moore, 3 Pa. St. 161. The procedure under the legislative grants is analogous to the general chancery procedure, but has many important variations. For the peculiar history of equity in Pennsylvania see Equity in Pennsylvania, by Anthony Laussatt, Jr., reprinted in Pennsylvania Bar Association Reports (1895), p. 221, and Equity through Common Law Forms, by Sidney G. Fisher, 1 L. Q. Rev. 455.

Rhode Island.— Until 1842 the general assembly exercised judicial powers, especially those of chancery. The constitution then adopted (art. 10, § 2) prohibited the exercise of judicial powers by the general assembly, and authorized the assembly to confer such powers on the supreme court. Soon after full equity jurisdiction was given to the supreme court. The state belongs in the second class. See Gen. Laws (1896), c. 222, § 4; Brown v. Meeting St. Baptist Soc., 9 R. I. 179.

South Carolina.— Until 1784 chancery powers were exercised by the lieutenant-governor and a majority of the privy council. A court of chancery was established in 1784 (Grimke Pub. Laws 337), which existed until it was abolished by the constitution of 1868, and its jurisdiction transferred to the common pleas. Art. 4, §§ 15–17. The procedure remained separate until 1870 when a code was adopted. See 1 Desauss. Eq. Pref. Introd. and pp. 65–106; 1 McCord Eq. Pref.; 1 Richardson Rep. N. S. Adv.

Tennessee belonged to the second class until 1835 when a court of chancery was established which still exists. See 1 Memphis L. J. 1; 7 Tenn. Bar Assoc. Rep. 193.

Texas has never recognized law and equity as constituting distinct branches of jurisprudence. Its courts administer legal and equitable rights without regard to form. Smith v. Doak, 3 Tex. 215. Except where controlled by legislation, the courts devise their own procedure, adopting common-law and equity forms where convenient and in harmony with their own established practice. Seguin v. Maverick, 24 Tex. 526, 76 Am. Dec. 117; 30 Am. L. Rev. 813; Hepburn Dev. Code Pl. § 174.

Utah was in the second class until 1870 when a code was adopted. Laws (1870), p. 17; Hontz v. Gisborn, 1 Utah 173.

Vermont.— Since the date of its earliest reports Vermont has belonged to the first class. The judges of the supreme court are the chancellors.

Virginia.— From 1777 to 1830 there were separate courts of chancery. Since 1830 jurisdiction at law and in equity has been vested in the same courts, except that a separate chancery court for the city of Richmond has long existed. The distinctions in procedure have always been observed, but equitable defenses may be interposed in law actions. Brown v. Rice, 76 Va. 629. See, generally, Wythe Mem. in Wythe Ch. Rep. and 3 Leigh (Va.) Pref.

Washington has always been in the third class. Laws (1854–1856), p. 129.

West Virginia has always been in the second class. W. Va. Const. art. 8, § 12.

Wisconsin was in the second class until 1856 when a code was adopted. Laws (1856), c. 120.

Wyoming.— The first territorial legislature adopted a code which provided a distinct chancery procedure. Laws (1869), c. 75. This distinction was abolished in 1886. Laws (1886), c. 60.

United States.— The circuit courts, from their organization, have had jurisdiction both at law and in equity (1 U. S. St. at L. p. 72, § 11), but the distinctions in procedure have always been strictly observed. See COURTS, 11 Cyc. 633. By the Practice Act of 1792, 1 U. S. St. at L. 275; Rev. St. § 913, the procedure in equity cases is that of the English chancery, as modified by rules promulgated by the supreme court. See Eq. Rule 90.

In the territories.— It will have been observed that many territorial legislatures enacted codes or practice acts abolishing distinctions in procedure at law and in equity, and that the validity of these provisions was doubted. See supra, this note, "Montana" and "North Dakota." The supreme court of the United States had held that a territorial court could not by virtue of such act in a foreclosure suit award execution for a deficiency, because such practice was not authorized in the federal courts (Orchard v. Hughes, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 73, 17 L. ed. 560; Noonan v. Braley, 2 Black (U. S.) 499, 17 L. ed. 278); also that a judgment in a proceeding in the nature of a creditor's bill was erroneous because the proceedings had been in legal form (Dunphy v. Kleinschmidt, 11 Wall. (U. S.) 610, 20 L. ed. 223). Following these cases it was held in Montana that legal and equitable relief could not be ob-existed in that court.[8] This is true in matters of procedure as well as in matters of substance, as far as the former English practice may reasonably be applied.[9] And where a statute confers in general terms jurisdiction in equity or in chancery the jurisdiction so conferred is that of the English chancery.[10]

2. Statutes — a. Effect of Statutes in General. The principles of jurisdiction and rules of procedure derived from the English chancery have been vastly affected in many jurisdictions by the operation of statutes. These statutes are of two classes, the first operating directly by extending, limiting, or modifying such principles and rules, and the second operating indirectly, by creating or altering legal remedies. The operation of the second class, depending upon the applica-tained in the same proceeding. Woolman v. Garringer, 1 Mont. 535. See also Stevens v. Baker, 1 Wash. Terr. 315. The supreme court of the United States, however, expressly overruled its former decisions in Hornbuckle v. Toombs, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 648, 21 L. ed. 966, holding that the procedure of the territorial courts might be regulated by the territorial legislature, and that the Montana provisions for joining legal and equitable causes were valid. Hornbuckle v. Toombs has been followed in Ely v. New Mexico, etc., R. Co., 129 U. S. 291, 9 S. Ct. 293, 32 L. ed. 688; Davis v. Bilsland, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 659, 21 L. ed. 969; Herschfield v. Griffith, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 657, 21 L. ed. 968, and supported by dicta in Thiede v. Utah, 159 U. S. 510, 16 S. Ct. 62, 40 L. ed. 237; Page v. Burnstine, 102 U. S. 664, 26 L. ed. 268. See Woolman v. Garringer, 2 Mont. 405; Chumasero v. Potts, 2 Mont. 242; Gallagher v. Basey, 1 Mont. 457 [affirmed in 20 Wall. (U. S.) 670, 22 L. ed. 452]. The question involved is part of the larger one as to whether territorial courts are courts of the United States. See Courts, 11 Cyc. 633.

The so-called equity jurisdiction of Louisiana is of a different character, requiring the judge where the positive law is silent to proceed and decide according to natural law and reason or received usages. Clarke v. Peak, 15 La. Ann. 407. In Livingston v. Story, 9 Pet. (U. In states where equity jurisdiction was formerly restricted within specific statutory grants, later statutes conferring jurisdiction in general terms extend the equity powers of the court to those exercised by courts of equity generally. McLarren v. Brewer, 51 Me. 402; Hurd v. Turner, 156 Mass. 205, 30 N. E. 1137; Billings v. Mann, 156 Mass. 203, 30 N. E. 1136; Genet v. Delaware, etc., Canal Co., 6 Luz. Leg. Reg. (Pa.) 73. But it has also been held in Pennsylvania that as there was in the early history of the colony a court of equity, followed by a long period when equity was administered only under legal forms, the restoration of equity powers revived in many cases the powers formerly exercised by the colonial court, and that the act creating that court must be resorted to to ascertain the restored powers. Walsh v. Leonard, 8 Luz. Leg. Reg. (Pa.) 282.

The jurisdiction or practice of the exchequer affords no basis for jurisdiction or practice in equity in the United States. People v. Davidson, 30 Cal. 379; Smith v. Burnham, 22 Fed. Cas. tion of general equitable principles, is treated in connection with those principles.[11] With regard to the first class but few general principles can be induced.[12]

b. Validity of Statutes. Aside from cases involving constitutional guaranties of jury trial the courts have recognized a broad power in the legislatures to change the boundaries of equity jurisprudence as well as to regulate procedure.[13] Where the effect of a statute giving a remedy in equity for what was formerly a legal demand is directly to defeat the right of trial by jury the statute is usually void.[14] But where such effect is incidental to the conferring of power to administer complete relief in equity, the legislation is sustained.[15] Special acts authorizing a proceeding in equity in a particular matter are also sustained.[16]

c. Construction of Statutes. Statutes creating or extending equitable rights or remedies have generally received a strict construction.[17] But this rule is not

11. See infra, II, A, 2.

12. For particular classes of statutes and their effect see the specific topics to which they relate. In some cases attempts have been made to define by statute the entire scope of equity jurisdiction, as for instance, Ala. Code, § 602, the first clause of which is construed as embracing the original jurisdiction of chancery, and subsequent clauses all statutory extensions. Waldron v. Simmons, 28 Ala. 629.

13. A statute prohibiting the granting of injunctions in certain cases where they were formerly allowed does not invade a constitutional grant of jurisdiction in all cases in equity. Spreckels v. Hawaiian Commercial, etc., Co., 117 Cal. 377, 49 Pac. 353. In New Jersey the statute authorizing the court of chancery to compel railroad companies to erect gates at crossings was sustained as being consistent with general equity jurisdiction and modes of procedure. Palmyra Tp. v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 62 N. J. Eq. 601, 50 Atl. 369 [affirmed in 63 N. J. Eq. 799, 52 Atl. 1132]. So with a statute giving chancery power generally to abate a public nuisance. State v. Murphy, 71 Vt. 127, 41 Atl. 1037. A statute may grant an equitable remedy for a right acquired before its enactment, as the statute affects only the remedy and not the right. Hamlen v. Keith, 171 Mass. 77, 50 N. E. 462; Rogers v. Ward, 8 Allen (Mass.) 387, 85 Am. Dec. 710. But where a statute seeks to create a right and to provide an equitable remedy, if the substantive portion is unconstitutional the remedial portion being incidental cannot be availed of for any purpose. Green v. Roane, 26 Ark. 15.

14. See, generally, CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 8 Cyc. 695. In Michigan it was held equally beyond the power of the legislature to enforce a jury trial in a distinctly equitable suit. Brown v. Kalmazoo Cir. Judge, 75 Mich. 274, 42 N. W. 827, 13 Am. St. Rep. 438, 5 L. R. A. 226. So "if congress undertook . . to make the finding of a jury anything more than advisory to the chancellor, it would be held unconstitutional." In re Toledo, 73 Fed. 220, 224, per Ricks, D. J.

15. See infra, II, C. Code Md. art. 16, § 194, provides that, when a purchaser at a trustee sale refuses to complete the purchase, the trustee by bill or petition in equity may obtain a decree for a resale and for the payment by such purchaser of any excess of his bid over the price at the resale. This was held not to invade the right to jury trial and to be a proper enlargement of equity jurisdiction. Capron v. Devries, 83 Md. 220, 34 Atl. 251.

Particular statutes.—A Massachusetts statute (Rev. St. c. 81, § 8), conferring jurisdiction in equity in all "cases in which there are more than two parties having distinct rights or interests, which cannot be justly and definitely decided and adjusted in one action at the common law" has been held to require the elements of a bill of interpleader and not to embrace cases where a judgment without exception.[18] General equitable principles will not be extended for the purpose of bringing a case within a legislative grant.[19] When, however, equity jurisdiction is conferred over a particular subject, such jurisdiction includes with respect to that subject all the powers of courts of chancery.[20] The creation by statute of a new equitable remedy does not it seems exclude a remedy already existing by virtue of a statute conferring general equity jurisdiction, which is not repealed or amended.[21] While a right may be enforced under a statute giving equity jurisdiction, passed after the acquisition of the right,[22] such an act confers no jurisdiction over bills filed before the act was passed,[23] or after its passage and before it took effect.[24]

II. GROUNDS AND SUBJECTS OF JURISDICTION.

A. General Ground — Lack of Remedy at Law — 1. JURISDICTION DEPENDENT UPON LACK OF ADEQUATE REMEDY AT LAW — a. General Rule. As indicated by the historical development of the court of chancery,[25] equity has jurisdiction generally at law would not expose a party to litigation by a third person. Angell v. Stone, 110 Mass. 54, 55; Attaquin v. Fish, 5 Metc. (Mass.) 140. A Michigan statute conferring jurisdiction in equity "in all matters concerning nuisances where there is not a plain and adequate remedy at law" (Comp. Laws 11, 213) was held not to enlarge the chancery jurisdiction, which was confined to the prevention of irreparable injury and preventing oppressive litigation and multiplicity of suits. Norris v. Hill, 1 Mich. 202. On the other hand statutes giving jurisdiction in equity to ascertain and fix boundaries where they have become confused or uncertain are held to extend the chancery jurisdiction, as conferring authority independent of any equity superinduced by acts of the parties. King v. Brigham, 23 Oreg. 262, 31 Pac. 601, 18 L. R. A. 361; Washington Co. v. Matteson, 11 R. I. 550. But in the former case it was held not to permit the trial of titles when brought in issue.

18. A statute giving jurisdiction of suits between joint owners of personal property relative to such property (Mass. Rev. Laws (1902), c. 159, § 3) applies to cases where the property belonged to two or more in undivided shares and is not limited to technical joint tenancy. Haven v. Haven, 181 Mass. 573, 64 N. E. 410. In Mississippi and Virginia a statute giving jurisdiction in equity extends to cases where plaintiff has an adequate remedy at law. Freeman v. Guion, 11 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 58; Ruffin v. Commercial Bank, 90 Va. 708, 19 S. E. 790. In Michigan, however, under a statute conferring jurisdiction in equity "to hear and determine all cases of encroachments upon the public highways" the court will not in the absence of special circumstances assume jurisdiction, as an adequate remedy at law is also provided. Greenfield Tp. v. Norton, 111 Mich. 53, 69 N. W. 95. A New Jersey statute (Pub. Laws (1895), p. 462) gives equity jurisdiction under certain circumstances to make provision for the crossing of railroads at grade outside the limits of cities. It was held that where the crossing was to be within the limits of a city the court would by consent of parties take jurisdiction and determine the matter on the same principles as if the case fell within the act. Jersey City, etc., St. R. Co. v. New York, etc., R. Co., 62 N. J. Eq. 390, 53 Atl. 709. In Pennsylvania, owing perhaps to the inadequacy of the early grants of power, such statutes have received a very liberal construction. Thus an act conferring power to prevent or restrain the commission of acts contrary to law and prejudicial to the interests of the community or the rights of individuals was held to authorize an injunction to prevent repeated trespasses (Grubb v. Grubb, 9 Lanc. Bar (Pa.) 109), and to give jurisdiction over municipal corporations grossly abusing their privileges (Hill v. Kensington, 1 Pars. Eq. Cas. (Pa.) 501). See also Johnson v. De Camp, 3 Luz. Leg. Obs. (Pa.) 38. But jurisdiction will not be assumed by forced construction, especially where a statutory remedy is at all adequate. Bruce v. Jennings, 1 Leg. Op. (Pa.) 33.

19. Where jurisdiction had been granted in matters involving trusts, but not in cases of fraud, the court will not by treating one guilty of fraud as a trustee assume jurisdiction. Whitney v. Stearns, 11 Metc. (Mass.) 319; Mitchell v. Green, 10 Metc. (Mass.) 101. See, however, Huxley v. Rice, 40 Mich. 73. But when jurisdiction exists on other grounds the court will consider and determine a question of fraud incidentally arising. Holland v. Cruft, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 321. Where jurisdiction is given on the ground of fraud, the court will not extend the term by construction for the purpose of assuming jurisdiction. Galvin v. Shaw, 12 Me. 454.

in cases of rights recognized and protected by the municipal jurisprudence, where an adequate remedy cannot be had in the courts of common law.[26] The rule is generally stated in negative form that equity will not entertain jurisdiction where there is an adequate remedy at law.[27]

b. Application of Rule in General. This rule, simple enough in terms, becomes very difficult in application, especially in America. It often happens that by statute or judicial development an adequate remedy at law now exists in a class of cases where jurisdiction in chancery was established at a time when there was no remedy at law or where such remedy was inadequate. It also happens that a court of law may afford a remedy entirely adequate in the specific case, whereas chancery jurisdiction has been established in cases of the same class, because in general the legal remedy is inadequate in such cases. Out of this state of affairs two theories have been developed: (1) That the rule is to be taken in a generic sense, as indicating the origin of the jurisdiction and defining generally its grounds and subjects; (2) that it is a constant limit upon the exercise of jurisdiction in the particular case. The former theory is generally adopted.[28]

See 19 Cent. Dig. tit. "Equity," § 121.

28. See infra, II, A, 2. Where the latter or narrower theory prevails the courts in adopting it have generally been influenced by statutes in terms restricting equity powers to cases where there is no adequate remedy at law. See the following cases:

c. Concurrent Jurisdiction. By virtue of the former of the two theories just stated, wherever equity jurisdiction has been once established, and a remedy at law subsequently created or made effective, and whenever a case is of a class cognizable in equity, but the circumstances render a legal remedy available in the particular case, a party may proceed either at law or in equity. The broad field thus created constitutes what is known as the concurrent jurisdiction of equity.[29] In matters within the concurrent jurisdiction, where equity is first invoked, its jurisdiction will not be defeated by a subsequent proceeding at law.[30] If the action at law be first commenced equity will not assume jurisdiction without the intervention of some special cause rendering the jurisdiction at law inadequate.[31]

St. (1883) c. 77, § 6, gives full equity powers in cases of fraud, limited only by the usage and practice of chancery courts, concurrent with courts of law.

See also Curtis v. McIlhenny, 58 N. C. 290, and cases cited infra, II, A, 2.

In other jurisdictions such language in general statutes is held to be merely descriptive of general equity jurisdiction and not intended to restrict such jurisdiction. Consequently the broader doctrine prevails in spite of such statutes.

Several of these refer to section 16 of the judiciary act of 1789 (Rev. St. § 723), limiting suits in equity to cases where there is no plain, adequate, and complete remedy at law, as requiring the dismissal of bills. Buzzard v. Houston, 119 U. S. 347, 7 S. Ct. 249, 30 L. ed. 451, is the strongest of these, reversing a decree and directing a dismissal for want of jurisdiction where the bill sought rescission of a contract on the ground of fraud, it being held that an action of deceit was an adequate remedy under the circumstances. Phœnix Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Bailey, 13 Wall. 616, 20 L. ed. 501, expressly recognizes the jurisdiction of equity in such cases, but says it will not generally be exercised when the remedy at law is adequate. The other cases in the supreme court are cases where there was no equity in the bill and therefore no question of concurrent jurisdiction was involved. These are Killian v. Ebbinghaus, 110 U. S. 568, 4 S. Ct. 232, 28 L. ed. 246; New York Guaranty Co. v. Memphis Water Co., 107 U. S. 205, 2 S. Ct. 279, 27 L. ed. 484; Root v. Lake Shore, etc., R. Co., 105 U. 2. EFFECT OF ENLARGEMENT OF REMEDY AT LAW — a. By Statute — (I) JURISDICTION OF EQUITY GENERALLY NOT OUSTED. The general rule is that where jurisdiction in equity has become established a statute creating a remedy at law or removing the obstacles at law upon the existence of which the equity jurisdiction was originally founded does not oust equity of that jurisdiction, unless the statute affirmatively discloses the legislative intent to make the legal remedy exclusive.[32] Such intent, however, may appear in the new legislation either from the express language of the enactment or by clear implication deduced from such language.[33]

(II) Exceptions to Foregoing Rule. To the general rule above stated there are many exceptions. In those states where the existence of a remedy at law, adequate in the particular case, defeats the jurisdiction of equity, it is held that the statutory enlargement of legal remedies ousts pro tanto the jurisdiction of equity.[34] There are in other states, however, cases denying jurisdiction solely upon the ground that a legal remedy created by statute is adequate.[35] And everywhere the rule has been departed from to a greater or less extent with regard to specific subjects and grounds of jurisdiction.[36]

Attachment and garnishment.— It is generally held that a bill in equity will not lie

(III) Jurisdiction Declined When Legal Remedy Adequate. When jurisdiction has become concurrent through statutory enlargement of legal remedy or from other causes, a court of equity, although recognizing the existence of its jurisdiction, will generally decline to exercise it where the remedy at law is complete and adequate, and no special circumstances exist demanding the interference of equity.[37] Stronger equitable features must appear, and the court is more reluctant to exercise its power where doubts arise as to the existence of jurisdiction.[38] Where the existence of a concurrent jurisdiction is recognized, whether it will be exercised or declined rests largely in the discretion of the court, considerations as to the adequacy of the legal remedy controlling the exercise of such discretion.[39]

(IV) When Statutory Remedy Is Inadequate. The rule is uniform that where a remedy at law after statutory enlargement remains incomplete or otherwise inadequate, as where its pursuit is obstructed by such obstacles as would originally have grounded jurisdiction in equity, jurisdiction is not ousted and the court will not hesitate to exercise it.[40] It has been held, however, that equity

Married women's acts.— The effect of the statutes removing the disabilities of married women depends so much on the particular language employed and upon cognate legislation that it is impossible to generalize very broadly as to their operation on equity jurisdiction. Cases hold that the statutes securing to married women their separate property and permitting them to sue and be sued as femes sole do not deprive equity of jurisdiction to impose a liability upon their separate estates. Many of the cases cited supra, II, A, 1, a, would doubtless appear here if this distinction had been observed. cannot so supply the defects of a statutory remedy incorporate with the right itself.[41]

(v) State Statutes Inoperative on Federal Jurisdiction. A federal court is not deprived of jurisdiction in equity because a state statute has provided a remedy at law in such cases, however adequate such remedy may be.[42] When a right is dependent on a state statute, the jurisdiction of the federal court, as between law and equity, must be determined by the essential character of the case.[43] A state statute giving a remedy in equity does not confer equitable powers in such cases on the federal court.[44]

b. By Judicial Development. Equity jurisdiction once established because of the original inadequacy or absence of remedy at law is not defeated because the law courts without statutory authority have extended the scope of their remedies so far as to render them adequate. This rule is practically uniform.[45]

51. Roxbury v. Huston, 39 Me. 312; Marsh v. Edgerton, 2 Pinn. (Wis.) 230, 1 Chandl. (Wis.) 198. The cases relating to attempts to base jurisdiction on the loss of a legal remedy, once but no longer available, must be distinguished from those relating to the adequacy of a legal remedy still available. As to the latter see infra, II, A, 5.

52. See infra, II, B, 2, 4. The excuse must be founded upon matter of modern equitable cognizance. An early Kentucky case denied relief in equity against a judgment, where the equity asserted was that the action was brought by a tory, in a tory neighborhood, and that plaintiff had been afraid to go there and defend. It was intimated that relief might have been given if it had been clearly shown that there was a reasonable belief of personal danger. Holt v. Graham, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 192. On the principle stated in the text a court of equity will appraise the future rent under a lease providing arbitration for that purpose, where the arbitration fails without fault of plaintiff. by such matters of equitable excuse, unmixed with negligence on plaintiff's part.[53]

c. Remedy Barred by Statute of Limitations. It should follow from the foregoing principles that an appeal to equity cannot be made on the ground that plaintiff has lost his remedy at law through the operation of the statute of limitations, unless at least he was prevented from suing by accident or fraud. The refusal of courts of equity to consider such statutes as binding upon them has led to many applications on this ground, which have generally been disposed of on the question of laches rather than jurisdiction.[54] These cases are generally treated as cases where plaintiff has lost his legal remedy through his own neglect.[55] While it is said that equity will remove the bar proceeding from lapse of time, as it would any other legal advantage, if sought to be used unconscientiously,[56] such relief is in America usually denied.[57] A court of equity will entertain a bill where one would be unnecessary except for the fact that the early termination of the statutory period would defeat another remedy.[58] And where one carries on in a court of equity an unfounded litigation until his adversary's legal rights are barred equity will itself afford a substitute for the legal right which has been lost.[59]

d. Remedy at Law Unsuccessfully Attempted. Where one has asserted a demand or defense in an action at law and has been defeated upon the ground that such matter was of equitable cognizance, he is not thereby barred from relief in equity.[60] In such case a court of equity will not consider whether the rejection of the matter by the court of law was proper or improper, its decision thereof being conclusive.[61] If, however, the matter is one of concurrent jurisdiction and the party seeks his remedy at law, and is there defeated on the merits, he cannot have relief in equity except upon the ground of fraud, accident, or mistake.[62]

Radcliff v. High, 2 Rob. (Va.) 271. But where judgment was suffered at law because of the incompetency of defendants as witnesses, and two of defendants then assigned their interests to the others, who sought relief in equity, such relief was denied upon the ground that the assignors might have rendered themselves competent by assigning prior to the trial at law, and so have rendered the legal proceeding available. 4. What Constitutes Adequacy of Remedy — a. In General. The existence of a remedy at law does not deprive equity of jurisdiction unless such remedy be adequate.[63] By this is meant that it must be clear, complete, and "as practical and efficient to the ends of justice and its prompt administration as the remedy in equity."[64]

b. Efficiency of Remedy. To render a remedy efficient it must afford an actual and substantial protection of the precise right of the party. Therefore, although a remedy might be had at law sufficient in a general way to balance the wrong complained of, it is inefficient if either the nature of the relief afforded or obstacles in the procedure for attaining it render it incommensurate with the right.[65]

Smith v. American Nat. Bank, 89 Fed. 832, 32 C. C. A. 368. 65. A few cases will suffice to illustrate the principle. Assets of an insolvent debtor were

c. Convenience of Remedy. Equity jurisdiction has been sustained solely on the ground that the remedy at law would be cumbersome or inconvenient and therefore inadequate,[66] or because the equitable remedy is more convenient, speedy, and economical.[67] But this element is almost invariably combined with other circumstances of inadequacy, and is too indefinite to safely afford an independent ground.[68]

d. Promptness of Remedy. The greater promptness of the remedy in equity is often given as a reason for sustaining its jurisdiction.[69] This does not mean promptness in administration, depending on the state of the calendar, nor does it mean that the progress of a suit in equity is inherently more speedy, for on the contrary such progress has been generally and notoriously slow. It relates rather to directness of remedy and the avoidance of circuity of action and multiplicity of suits.[70]

e. Clearness of Remedy. To divest a court of equity of jurisdiction the remedy at law must be plain. This is an element of adequacy so important that it is usually emphasized by specific statement.[71] It is sometimes said that the legal remedy must be obvious.[72] The rule is usually stated less radically that equity will take jurisdiction where it is "doubtful" whether relief could be had at law,[73] or where it is doubtful whether a recognized legal remedy would be in the hands of a third person charged with the payment of a claim tainted by usury. A bill by a creditor was sustained to reach so much as might remain after purging the other debt of the usury, garnishment being ineffectual to enforce the entire right. Pope v. Solomon, 36 Ga. 541. A bill was sustained by the owner of buildings against the owner of the land whereon they were situated to enforce plaintiff's right to remove the building and for an account of rents and profits, ejectment and trover being ineffectual. Watkins v. Owens, 47 Miss. 593. Goods were purchased by means of fraudulent representations, defendant aiding in the fraud by taking a chattel mortgage of the goods sold and others. A replevin suit would determine only vendor's right to retake the goods, while by a bill in equity, if bad faith in the mortgagee appeared, plaintiff could have stricken from the recorded mortgage the goods by him sold; and if bad faith did not appear he could require the mortgagee to first resort to the other goods, thus protecting his entire right as regards the vendee instead of staking it all upon issue of good faith. Morse v. Nicholson, 55 N. J. Eq. 705, 38 Atl. 178. In an action in the nature of ejectment defendant filed under Oreg. Code, § 381, a cross complaint to reform a mistake in a deed through which he claimed. It was urged that his remedy by defense to the ejectment was sufficient, but it was held that the remedy sought by cross complaint was proper for an efficient protection of defendant's right — to perfect his title. Cases of doubt.— Defendant instructed plaintiff to lend money for him on a mortgage. Plaintiff took a bond and mortgage payable to defendant and himself advanced a portion of the money. Defendant refused to complete the loan or to repay plaintiff his advancement. It was held that plaintiff was entitled to a decree compelling an assignment of the bond and mortgage, as this was probably a more adequate indemnity than an action to recover the money advanced. Here the doubt seems to have been as to the practical efficiency of the legal remedy. Mount v. Suydam, 4 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 399. A bill in equity was sustained where a widow, who was also administratrix of her husband's estate, and the heir sought to recover on a policy of fire insurance, it being doubtful whether the proceeds were to be deemed personal assets to be recovered by the administratrix or realty, in which latter event a court of equity alone could secure the payment of the widow's portion to the heir upon her death. Portsmouth Ins. Co. v. Reynolds, 32 Gratt. (Va.) 613. Equity has jurisdiction of a bill to determine the validity of municipal bonds where plaintiff's bid was accepted, but it refused to take the bonds on the ground that they were void and the city threatened to hold plaintiff liable for loss. The reason was that if relegated to law plaintiff would have to decide at its peril whether the bonds were valid. German-American Invest. Co. v. Youngstown, 68 Fed. 452.

g. Practicality of Remedy. Notwithstanding repeated statements that to oust equity of jurisdiction the remedy at law must be as practical as that in equity,[78] some decisions indicate that the rule of practicality does not relate to ability to obtain the fruits of the remedy but to its fitness in nature to the end in view.[79] Accordingly it has been said that insolvency alone is not a ground for equitable interference.[80] Nevertheless injunctions are frequently granted where if defendant was solvent plaintiff would be relegated to his action for damages,[81] and in a very familiar class of cases equity does interfere after and sometimes even before judgment at law, to enable a party to obtain the "fruits of his remedy" because the ordinary process is impeded.[82] It is submitted therefore that the statements in the cases hereinbefore cited[83] are too broad, and that equity will interfere where the remedy at law has been exhausted and has proved unavailing, and often where without actual test it is shown that such remedy would be unavailing, provided the established principles and modes of relief existing in equity afford a practical remedy.[84]

79. Baltimore Safe Deposit, etc., Co. v. Anniston, 96 Fed. 661. In Rees v. Watertown, 19 Wall. (U. S.) 107, 22 L. ed. 72, the court denied the power of equity to appoint an officer to levy and collect a tax to pay a judgment against a municipality, or to subject the property of citizens to its payment, although several writs of mandamus had proved ineffectual through the resignations of officers and similar devices. While this case might have been disposed of on the ground that the levy of a tax is not the exercise of judicial power, and that individual property was subject to the payment of the judgment only through the medium of a tax levy, the reasoning of the court was that the remedy by mandamus is in theory adequate and perfect, and that difficulty in obtaining the fruits of the remedy was no ground for the interference of equity. In Thompson v. Allen County, 115 U. S. 550, 6 S. Ct. 140, 29 L. ed. 412, the tax had been levied but the sentiment of the community was such that no person could be found willing to accept the office, the duties of which comprised the collection of the tax. The court refused to collect the tax through a receiver, Miller, J., saying: "By inadequacy of the remedy at law is here meant, not that it fails to produce the money (that is a very usual result in the use of all remedies) but that in its nature or character it is not fitted or adapted to the end in view." 84. The method of securing the avails of a judgment through a creditor's bill, and the protection afforded by injunction and through receivers, where insolvency would render a judgment uncollectable, amply support the statement of the text. See the specific heads referred to. It is impossible to reconcile this vast array of cases with the principle stated and the cases cited supra, note 79, this section. Those cases if otherwise decided would have required the court, if not to usurp governmental functions of a non-judicial character, at least to clothe its officers with powers conferred by law solely upon non-judicial officers. The proposed remedy in equity was as little practical as the remedy at law.

Cases where legal remedy ineffectual.— In granting a decree for the specific performance of a contract relating to personal property because of the insolvency of the person against whom alone a judgment at law could be recovered the supreme judicial court of Massachusetts said: "On what plausible ground can it be contended that a judgment against an insolvent contractor is an adequate remedy? It would be manifestly against equity and justice for a court to decline jurisdiction in such a case. If the party injured by a breach of a contract can-

5. What Remedies at Law Are Deemed Adequate — a. In General. While it has been said that remedy at law means a remedy in a court of law, and that no other remedy ousts the jurisdiction of equity,[85] and such is the general significance of the term, a remedy will nevertheless bar relief in equity, provided it affords efficient protection, although it be not according to the ordinary course of the common law. Thus equity will not interfere where an adequate remedy is afforded in a court of admiralty,[86] or in bankruptcy,[87] or by judicial review on appeal or certiorari of the acts of public boards or officers.[88] Equity will not take jurisdiction if there is available a single remedy at law sufficient for plaintiff's protection,[89] or several remedies which are together sufficient.[90] But plaintiff will not be relegated to the pursuit of several remedies at law where the interference of equity will avoid circuity of action and a multiplicity of suits.[91]

b. On Money Demands. Where compensation in money will afford a party complete and efficient relief the law is usually adequate for that purpose, and plaintiff will be relegated thereto, if the legal remedy is unimpeded. Thus general assumpsit, or the common counts, having at an early date been adapted to the enforcement of equitable demands on equitable bases of compensation, must be resorted to where available.[92] This is true even where plaintiff claims a not avail himself of his remedy at law for any beneficial purpose, or if it be doubtful whether he can or not, a court of equity, if it can relieve him, ought certainly to interpose." Clark v. Flint, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 231, 238, 33 Am. Dec. 733. A bill to apply securities in the hands of a surety to the satisfaction of a debt, where the securities were mortgages subject to prior encumbrances, on lands in two states, was sustained because the remedy by execution on an equity of redemption of such character was "nominal and fancied." New London Bank v. Lee, 11 Conn. 112, 27 Am. Dec. 713. A bill in equity will lie against the representatives of one of several joint obligors where the survivors are insolvent. Shubrick v. Russell, 1 Desauss. (S. C.) 315. Where a theoretical remedy existed by procuring the appointment of an administrator de bonis non and suing him at law, but such remedy would be ineffectual because the management of the estate had been committed to a receiver appointed by the federal court, a bill in equity was sustained to establish a lien upon land and for its enforcement. Milner v. Neel, 114 Ga. 118, 39 S. E. 890. In sustaining a bill for the sale of a railroad as an entirety to pay numerous judgments and liens unenforceable except at great sacrifice by execution, the same court declared that the powers of equity will be invoked to aid the defects of the law, and where the facts and circumstances are novel and peculiar, analogous principles will be applied to the existing emergency. Macon, etc., R. Co. v. Parker, 9 Ga. 377. Where joint owners of a chattel could obtain at law adequate relief against a stranger they were not permitted to proceed in equity in order to adjust at the same time rights among themselves. Comby v. McMichael, 19 Ala. 747. A remedy at law against the personal representative of a deceased obligor in a bond prevents a resort to equity. Dawson v. Trimble, 3 Litt. (Ky.) 252. A remedy against a constable who parted with a bond given him for collection on the promise of a surety to pay it bars relief in equity against constable and surety. McIntyre v. Reeves, 43 N. Instances of adequacy.— A school-district having been consolidated with another, a person who had advanced money to the former was not permitted to enforce his claim against the consolidated district, because he held notes of certain of the school directors for the amount, and had an adequate remedy thereon. School Directors v. Miller, 54 Ill. 338. A and B gave C their obligations on a contract which was afterward rescinded. Application and qualification of rule.— The fact that complainant is not in possession will not give the chancellor jurisdiction where there is no obstacle to the legal remedy. Eubank v. Poe, 3 Dana (Ky.) 143. And it is held that in the absence of fraud the failure to take covenants merely deprives him of all remedy and does not give him a remedy in equity. c. Torts. Aside from the frequently exercised jurisdiction to prevent by injunction the commission of irreparable torts,[1] a court of equity is reluctant to afford its remedies in such cases,[2] damages usually constituting adequate redress. Therefore, where personal property has been taken, withheld, or otherwise dealt with under circumstances creating a cause of action in trover or trespass against the wrong-doer, and such remedy at law is unimpeded, the injured party must pursue it and cannot resort to a court of equity against the tort-feasor.[3]

The doctrine has been applied in some cases where the property consisted of stocks or bonds. Machinists' Nat. Bank v. Field. 126

Unless an accounting[4] or a discovery[5] is required, one must rely on his remedy at law against an attorney,[6] an agent,[7] or a public officer,[8] for negligence or misconduct. A completed injury to real property stands on the same basis as one to personalty, and the remedy must be sought at law where such remedy is unimpeded.[9]

d. Recovery of Personal Property — (1) Remedy at Law Generally Deemed Adequate. For the recovery of personal property wrongfully withheld the common-law actions of detinue or replevin, or analogous proceedings at law under the codes, generally afford an adequate remedy. Accordingly equity will not, when such remedies are available, take jurisdiction for the sole purpose of decreeing a delivery of chattels.[10]

Mass. 345; Sawyer v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., 119 Fed. 252. See also Arbogast v. American Exch. Nat. Bank, 125 Fed. 518, 60 C. C. A. 538. A bill was dismissed on this ground when brought by a corporation against its former trustees for the misappropriation of its assets, it being held that when defendants ceased to be officers jurisdiction could no longer be invoked on the ground of enforcing a trust. Bay City Bridge Co. v. Van Etten, 36 Mich. 210. A distributee of an estate cannot proceed in equity against one who has converted the property of the decedent, the personal representative having an adequate remedy at law. Caleb v. Mearn, 72 Me. 231.

Where the legal remedy is inadequate the rule is otherwise. The legal representative of a wife brought a bill against those of the husband to obtain possession of her choses in action. It was held that trover was inadequate because it would lie only after demand and refusal, which could not be made until after letters of administration had been granted. Gough v. Crane, 3 Md. Ch. 119. A bill was sustained, where chattels had been converted and sold, to compel discovery and payment over of the proceeds, upon the ground that such proceeds constituted a specific trust fund to which the owner was entitled, while damages at law would be confined to the value of the property. Dow v. Berry, 18 Fed. 121. A bill was sustained against an auctioneer who still retained the proceeds of the sale of chattels of plaintiff, wrongfully taken by the auctioneer's principal, although an action at law was pending against the purchaser to recover the chattel. Dawson v. Tremaine, 93 Mich. 320, 322, 53 N. W. 1044. And where defendant had wrongfully removed a monument to the memory of deceased persons, jurisdiction in equity being sustained to prevent further interference, it was also suggested that because of the peculiar character of the property a restoration may be compelled. McCullom v. Morrison, 14 Fla. 414. (II) EXCEPTIONS—(A) Property of Peculiar Nature or Value. In many cases, however, equity will interfere to compel the delivery of specific personal property on the ground that an adequate remedy is afforded neither by an action at law to recover possession, nor by damages. In the most important class of cases of this character the jurisdiction arises out of the peculiar nature or value of the property. Replevin and other legal possessory actions do not always restore possession, and if the legal process so fails the owner is relegated to a judgment for the value of the property. The remedy in equity is in this respect more efficient, and may be resorted to, in view of the probability of the failure of legal process to reach the property, when from the peculiar nature of the property or its special and peculiar value to the owner a judgment for damages would not afford complete redress.[11]

Application of rule.— The fact that there are several claimants or joint owners of chattels so withheld does not justify a resort to equity as against a stranger withholding them. Jurisdiction for the purpose of compelling delivery does not attach because of the necessity of distribution among the claimants. Comby v. McMichael, 19 Ala. 747; Hale v. Clarkson, 23 Gratt. (Va.) 42. By an antenuptial agreement the property of each party to be married was to be retained by each separately, the husband's property to go "to his children, and hers to her heirs and relatives." The wife died leaving her husband in possession of her property. After his death the next of kin of the wife filed a bill against the executor of the husband and others asking for a delivery of all the property derived from the wife's estate. It was held that this was merely a legal demand and that there was no jurisdiction. Strong v. Wiggins, 13 Fed. 418. A landlord claiming a right to distress should exercise it and leave the tenant to try the right in replevin; a bill to declare the property subject to distress will not lie. Haynes v. McGeehee, 17 Fla. 159.

Redemption of pledge.— While a New York case held that equity will not entertain a proceeding to redeem pawned chattels where an action at law can be maintained to recover them after tender of the amount due (Durant v. Einstein, 5 Rob. (N. Y.) 423, 35 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 223), the contrary is held elsewhere (Bates v. Crowell, 122 Ala. 611, 25 So. 217; Colburn v. Riley, 11 Colo. App. 184, 52 Pac. 684). See also Lang v. Thacher, 48 N. Y. App. Div. 313, 62 N. Y. Suppl. 956.

11. Bills in equity have been sustained on this ground to recover heirlooms and similar articles, the value of which is representative rather than intrinsic, and the loss of which cannot be compensated in money; as for example wampum-belts used by Indians to commemorate important events and to perpetuate the history of their race (Onondaga Nation v. Thacher, 29 Misc. (N. Y.) 428, 61 N. Y. Suppl. 1027 [affirmed in 53 N. Y. App. Div. 561, 65 N. Y. Suppl. 1014]), drawings and sketches (Lang v. Thacher, 48 N. Y. App. Div. 313, 62 N. Y. Suppl. 956), battle-flags (Orbin v. Stevens, 13 Pa. Super. Ct. 591), an altarpiece, remarkable for a Greek inscription (Somerset v. Cookson, 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 164, 22 Eng. Reprint 140, 3 P. Wms. 390, 24 Eng. Reprint 1114), a silver tobacco-box belonging to a club and by custom kept by its overseer for the time being (Fells v. Read, 3 Ves. Jr. 70, 30 Eng. But books of a newspaper company containing the accounts and names of special subscribers have not such special value, and the remedy for their recovery is at law. Lawrence v. Times Printing Co., 90 Fed. 24. Nor has a seal-skin sack bequeathed by will, at least where the executor rather than the legatee seeks its recovery. Squires v. Howell, 43 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 456. Although certain chattels are as a rule necessary to the exercise of the franchises of a corporation they cannot be recovered in equity without at least averring that their possession is essential to the exercise of the franchise. Keystone Electric Light, etc., Co. v. Peoples' Electric Light, etc., Co., 200 Pa. St. 366, 49 Atl. 951.

An artist's picture.— A court of equity has jurisdiction to order the delivery up to an artist of a picture painted by himself, as having a special value, the legal remedy being inadequate. But where by the terms of an agreement an artist seeking the restitution of a picture had in effect put a fixed price upon it, and as damages would be an adequate remedy, there was no jurisdiction in a court of equity to interfere. Dowling v. Betjemann, 2 Johns & H. 544, 8 Jur. N. S. 538, 6 L. T. Rep. N. S. 512, 10 Wkly. Rep. 574.

Letters.— A bill in equity will lie to compel the delivery of letters to the person to whom they belong, because aside from questions of

(B) Other Exceptions. In some other cases equity will decree the delivery of chattels. This is so when such relief is incidental to the exercise of an underlying equitable jurisdiction, as when it is required for the purpose of enforcing a

The delivery of notes given as collateral for a gambling debt will not be compelled, but this is because plaintiff does not appear with clean hands. Beer v. Landman, 88 Tex. 450, 31 S. W. 805.

Stock.— Where corporate stock has no special value apart from its market value, certificates therefor cannot be recovered in equity. Edelman v. Latshaw, 159 Pa. St. 644, 28 Atl. 475. But such a bill was sustained where the depositary of the certificate was held to be a trustee. Hill v. Rockingham Bank, 44 N. H. 567. Where defendant had sold the stock belonging to plaintiff the bill was dismissed, although defendant held other shares of like character. Lamb Knit-Goods Co. v. Lamb, 119 Mich. 568, 78 N. W. 646. The question of compelling delivery of certificates of stock must be distinguished from that of compelling by specific performance or otherwise the assignment or transfer of stock. See CORPORATIONS, 10 Cyc. 605 et seq.; SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

Muniments of title.— Deeds and other instruments which are evidence of plaintiff's title have for that reason a peculiar value, and equity will compel their delivery. Plaintiff and defendant compromised a disputed claim to public lands by agreeing that plaintiff should make a homestead entry and place a deed to defendant for a portion of the land in escrow for delivery after final proof. Defendant before final proof obtained possession of the deed. It was held that plaintiff's grantor could maintain a bill to compel its return to the depositary. Paxton v. Danforth, 1 Wash. 120, 23 Pac. 805. And the grantee of a deed placed in escrow may likewise compel a delivery to him after the condition has been performed. Stanton v. Miller, 65 Barb. (N. Y.) 58. A statute (Va. Code, c. 138) rendering effective the action of detinue does not oust the jurisdiction of equity to compel the delivery of title papers. Kelly v. Lehigh Min., etc., Co., 98 Va. 405, 36 S. E. 511, 81 Am. St. Rep. 736. But an heir was denied relief where he sought to recover in equity from a devisee the title papers of his ancestors merely upon the allegation that the will was void. Watson v. Bothwell, 11 Ala. 650. And where a deed with other property had been delivered as indemnity to a surety, it was held that the remedy was at law after the surety was released, the bill praying merely for the delivery of the deed and not for reconveyance. Surber v. McClintic, 10 W. Va. 236.

Slaves.— Bills for the delivery of slaves, although no longer presenting questions of specific practical interest, illustrate the principle stated in the text. Some cases hold that slave property was in its essence of such peculiar character that a bill in equity would lie for the delivery of the slaves, without alleging any special character or value in the particular slaves in controversy. Brown v. Goolsby, 34 Miss. 437; Hull v. Clark, 14 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 187; Murphy v. Clark, 1 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 221; Sims v. Shelton, 2 Strobh. Eq. (S. C.) 221; Bobo v. Grimke, McMull. Eq. (S. See 19 Cent. Dig. tit. "Equity," §§ 137, 154.

Family slave.— But allegations that the slave in controversy was a family slave and that a strong attachment existed toward him was sufficient to ground equitable jurisdiction. Hardeman v. Sims, 3 Ala. 747; McRea v. Walker, 4 How. (Miss.) 455.

Relief pending suit.— On allegations that defendants were without property and that there was danger of their removing slaves from the state the court sustained a bill to take possession of the slaves and hire them trust,[12] where plaintiff is entitled to an account,[13] where discovery is required and jurisdiction is retained to administer relief[14] or to prevent multiplicity of suits.[15] Of course where replevin or detinue would not afford a complete remedy equity will interfere, and as a part of the relief decree the delivery which might be had through replevin.[16] Where the remedy at law is impeded equity will take jurisdiction.[17]

e. Recovery of Land and Trial of Title. One relying on a legal title, who seeks only to recover possession of land held adversely, or whose rights are sufficiently protected by putting him in possession, has an adequate remedy at law by ejectment, writ of entry, or whatever possessory action prevails in the particular jurisdiction, and equity will not take jurisdiction for the sole purpose of restoring possession.[18] The rule is applied where the issue to be tried is one that cut pending the suit. Spendlove v. Spendlove. 1 N. C. 174.

12. See, generally, TRUSTS.

Chattels obtained through abuse of fiduciary relation.— The jurisdiction of the court by injunction to protect the possession, and to decree the delivery up, of specific chattels, is not merely as to such the loss or injury to which would not be adequately compensated by damages, but extends to all cases where the possession has been acquired through an alleged abuse of power on the part of one standing in a fiduciary relation to plaintiff. A. 171. Bills have also been sustained for the reasons grounding jurisdiction in the case of property of peculiar nature or value, apparently without regard to such special character of the property; as because replevin required the giving of a bond and permitted defendant upon giving bond to regain possession (Gough v. Crane, 3 Md. Ch. 119), or because damages were not susceptible of proof or computation (Redfield v. Widdleton, 1 Rob. (N. Y.) 79). In Massachusetts by statute (St. (1823) c. 140) a bill lies where chattels are secreted or withheld so that they cannot be found and replevied. Under this it is held that notes delivered by an insolvent to defendant on a secret trust in fraud of creditors and which defendant refused to deliver or to exhibit were within the statute, and that a bill would lie without first attempting replevin. Gibbens v. Peeler, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 254. It was also held in the same case that jurisdiction attaching in that manner could not be defeated by an offer made after filing the bill to produce the note. But jurisdiction depending on this statute, delivery of a deed cannot be compelled without showing that it is secreted or withheld so that it cannot be replevied. Travis v. Tyler, 7 Gray (Mass.) 146. See, however, Mills v. Gore, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 28. In Ohio where there is no such statute it is held that personalty, except heirlooms and actionable writings, cannot be recovered in equity, although concealed and although defendant is insolvent. Application of rule.— A plaintiff, seeking to compel a defendant to convey to him, disclosed in his complaint that he already held the legal title. He was relegated to ejectment. Dalton v. Hamilton, 50 Cal. 422. A conveyed to B and B to plaintiff. Subsequently through collusion the deed from A to B was destroyed and A made a deed to C who in turn deeded to D. A bill to set aside the fraudulent deed was dismissed. Willet v. Overton, 2 Root (Conn.) 338, 1 Am. Dec. 72. But this was in a state where by statute equity jurisdiction is prohibited when a remedy exists at law. See supra, II, A, 1, b, In Florida, a mortgage not passing the legal title, a grantor in a deed absolute in form but given as security may recover in ejectment from the grantee wrongfully in possession, and therefore cannot resort to equity. Endel v. Walls, 16 Fla. 786. A statute (N. H. Laws (1883), c. 43) provided that one in possession claiming an estate of freehold or an unexpired term of not less than ten years might maintain a bill in equity against an adverse claimant. Plaintiff had conveyed land to himself for life with remainder to defendant, with a condition avoiding the deed if defendant should neglect suitably to support plaintiff. Plaintiff filed a bill to annul the deed for a breach of condition. It was held that the statute did not confer jurisdiction in equity in cases where the law was adequate, and that the law permitted an action for a remainder in fee expectant upon a life-estate. Walker v. Walker, 63 N. H. 321, 56 Am. Rep. 514. And a remainder-man may not proceed in equity against a life-tenant to adjudicate title; the remedy is at law against the adverse claimants of the remainder. Preston v. Smith, 26 Fed. 884.

A court of equity is astute to detect attempts to accomplish ejectment under the guise of asserting equitable rights. Thus where a tenant sets up an independent title in himself, equity will not interfere in favor of the landlord on the theory of remedying a breach of trust. Whiting v. Taylor, 8 Dana (Ky.) 403. And a bill by a mortgagee against the mortgagor and an adverse claimant for foreclosure is as to the adverse claimant merely an ejectment bill and cannot be sustained. Jones v. Weed, 4 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 208. So a bill in form to quiet title where plaintiff is not in possession will not be sustained because of the extensive character of plaintiff's grant and the difficulty of acquiring possession of all the land included therein. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Amacker, 49 Fed. 529, 1 C. C. A. 345. A bill will not be sustained to enjoin a railroad company from constructing its road on land of which it had taken possession, where the controversy was as to the title (North Shore R. Co. v. Pennsylvania Co., 193 Pa. St. 641, 44 Atl. 1083), or to restrain an adverse claimant in possession from committing waste (Barry v. Shelby, 4 Hayw. (Tenn.) 229). A bill for possession may not be maintained against a tenant setting up an independent title, on the theory that his acts amounted to fraud and breach of trust. Whiting v. Taylor, 8 Dana (Ky.) 403.

Mesne profits.— Rents and profits recoverable at law in an ejectment action or after judgment in ejectment cannot be recovered by a bill in equity for that purpose.

Where a discovery is necessary a bill will lie after ejectment. Apalachicola v. Apalachicola Land Co., 9 Fla. 340, 79 Am. Dec. 284; Elliott v. Armstrong, 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 421.

Remedy at law inadequate.— Where judgment for rents and profits had been rendered against several hundred defendants who were insolvent, to whom a common warrantor was liable and plaintiff had no remedy at law upon the warranty from want of privity, a bill was sustained against the warrantor.

deed was delivered,[19] or upon the sufficiency of a description.[20] It is also invoked where the legal title depends upon construction of a will, the jurisdiction of equity in such cases not extending to the determination of legal title created by will, unencumbered by trusts.[21] Even when one of the parties is already fortified by judgment in ejectment another action in ejectment, rather than in equity, must be resorted to in order to obtain possession, where another action is available.[22] Relief of the character obtainable in ejectment has sometimes been denied even in cases where equity would ordinarily retain jurisdiction for the purpose of a complete adjustment of the controversy.[23] The courts have also refused to entertain bills requiring the trial of titles which might be tried at law, where the object was other than the recovery of possession.[24] On the same principle the court will not restrain proceedings in ejectment on a bill setting up matter available in defense in the ejectment suit and no supervening equity.[25] The general rule applies where the party in possession traces title through a void conveyance,[26] even where the invalidity is due to fraud,[27] and also where the conveyance is based on void judicial proceedings, and restitution of possession is the only relief sought, or all that is essential to plaintiff's protection,[28] at least where Lacassagne v. Chapuis, 144 U. S. 119, 12 S. Ct. 659, 36 L. ed. 368. A bill was dismissed where defendant had succeeded in ejectment by showing fraud in procuring the patent under which plaintiff derived title. Williams v. Rhodes, 33 Miss. 137. Application of rule.— Plaintiff in ejectment claimed title by patent from the United States issued in 1861, and defendants under a tax-sale in 1840 followed by twenty years' adverse possession. Defendants in ejectment filed a bill to restrain plaintiff from using his patent on the ejectment trial and to compel a conveyance. It was held that defendant's possession — if available at all — was available in defense of the ejectment, and the bill was dismissed. Wells v. Lammey, 88 Ill. 174. the invalidity appears on the face of the proceedings.[29] The essential adequacy of a legal remedy creates the restriction on equitable jurisdiction, and not primarily the nature of the issue or of the relief. Equity will therefore try titles,[30] or decree the delivery of possession of lands, in many cases where equitable jurisdiction exists on other grounds, and such action is incidental to a complete adjudication of the controversy,[31] or where it is uncertain whether the legal remedy is available,[32] or where the legal remedy is not in itself adequate.[33]

f. Rights Protected at Law Otherwise Than by Ordinary Actions — (i) Extraordinary Legal Remedies. Because quo warranto or proceedings in the nature of quo warranto afford an adequate and generally exclusive remedy in such cases, a court of equity will not usually interfere to try the title to a public office,[34] or an office in a corporation,[35] or to try the validity of a corporate organization.[36] For a similar reason equity will not interfere for the purpose of compelling the performance of a duty imposed by law, where mandamus is available for that purpose.[37]

To levy tax.— A water company sought in equity to compel a city to levy a tax to pay indebtedness under a continuing contract and to levy taxes annually in the future for the same purpose, and also to restrain the city from diverting funds already collected for that purpose to other purposes. The injunction was granted to prevent the diversion of the funds, but for the remainder of the relief plaintiff was relegated to law. Oconto City Water Supply Co. v. Oconto, 105 Wis. 76, 80 N. W. 1113.

Redress for past grievance.— It has been said that mandamus is prospective, and where redress of a past privation as well as restoration to enjoyment for the future is required, equity and not mandamus affords the remedy.

(II) Certiorari, Appeal, Etc. It is not the province of equity to review proceedings at law and grant relief against mere errors or irregularities, the remedy for such being by appellate proceedings.[38] The same principle has been applied where the statute afforded an adequate remedy against proceedings of an administrative or non-judicial character, either by appeal[39] or by certiorari.[40]

g. Defenses Available at Law. Relief will be denied to a party who seeks the aid of a court of equity against pending or threatened proceedings at law, where it appears that the matters relied upon are such as if established would constitute a defense in the law action, and where the complainant's right will be fully protected by a successful defense; that is, where no wrong is threatened beyond the assertion of the legal demand, open as it is to such defense.[41]

But of course this can only be true where law will not afford adequate redress. American Deaf, etc., Asylum v. Phœnix Bank, 4 Conn. 172.

Application of rule.—An attempt to recover back taxes paid, and to restrain the collection of future taxes, on the ground that the statute creating the collector's office was unconstitutional, was defeated because an action lay at law to recover back the taxes paid, and plaintiff could refuse to pay future taxes and defend an action brought to collect them. Crawford v. Bradford, 23 Fla. 404, 2 So. 782. Plaintiff sought to restrain an action of trespass on the ground that the rule of damages at law would under the circumstances be unjust. Relief was denied. Atlantic, etc., Coal Co. v. Maryland Coal Co., 62 Md. 135. In Massachusetts, where an action to enforce an award of arbitrators was pending, the court refused to entertain a bill to set aside the award for mistake, because the matter could be pleaded in defense. Mickles v. Thayer, 14 Allen (Mass.) 114. An action was brought to recover on an instrument acknowledging the borrowing of certain bonds to be returned on demand. The action was against principal and surety, and it was held that the fact that the bonds were sold and the proceeds accounted for to the lender was a defense at law and not a discharge of the surety assertable in equity. Linn v. Neldon, 23 N. J. Eq. 169. Failure to plead a defense does not permit a resort to equity where it might be availed of by amendment. Graham v. Stagg, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 321. Where obstacles exist to the interposition of the defense equity will interfere. Bassett v. Mason, 18 Conn. 131. So where the remedy by defense at law is not necessarily adequate. Hodge v. McMahan, 137 Ala. 171, 34 So. 185.

h. Effect of Prayer For Relief. Whether or not jurisdiction should be denied or declined because of the existence of an adequate remedy at law depends sometimes upon the nature of the relief demanded. Although a bill contains averments which might sustain a prayer for equitable relief and ground equitable jurisdiction, nevertheless if plaintiff asks only a decree for the payment of money or for other relief which he might obtain upon the facts stated at law, he will be relegated to his law action.[42] The same result follows where an equity exists and the bill prays, not for relief which might be granted, but for relief equitable in form and not grantable in equity because the legal remedy is adequate to accomplish the purpose sought.[43]

6. General Causes of Legal Deficiencies — a. Classification. The causes of those deficiencies of the law which give rise to jurisdiction in equity may be classified as follows: (1) The failure of the law to recognize a substantive right; (2) the inadequacy of the relief afforded at law to protect a right; (3) the inadequacy of the procedure at law to establish a right.[44]

An equitable estoppel may be enforced in equity, although it might be used as a defense to the action at law. Heath v. Derry Bank, 44 N. H. 174. Contra, Vermont Copper Min. Co. v. Ormsby, 47 Vt. 709. See Pokegama Sugar Pine Lumber Co. v. Klamath River Lime, etc., Co., 96 Fed. 34.

Negotiable instruments.— The interposition of equity to compel the surrender of negotiable instruments against the enforcement of which a legal defense exists is for the purpose of preventing plaintiff from being deprived of the defense by a transfer of the instrument to one not subject to the defense. Therefore where such an injury is not possible equity will not entertain jurisdiction for the purpose of compelling a surrender. Askew v. Hooper, 28 Ala. 634; Hoffman v. Treadwell, 39 N. Y. Super. Ct. 183; Dorr v. Peters, 3 Edw. (N. Y.) 132; Geer v. Kissam, 3 Edw. (N. Y.) 129; Hughes v. Pratt, 37 Oreg. 45, 60 Pac. 707; Glenwood Mfg. Co. v. Syme, 109 Wis. 355, 85 N. W. 432. The fact that a note contains a power of attorney to confess judgment on it does not take the case out of the rule. Vannatta v. Lindley, 98 Ill. App. 327. Where the complainant, an administrator, had made a note to the decedent which was in the possession of decedent's husband, it was held that complainant might as administrator recover possession of the note, although individually he could defend at law an action by the husband to recover thereon. Wales v. Newbould, 9 Mich. 45. And a note and chattel mortgage will both be canceled where there is a complete legal defense to the note but the mortgage might be foreclosed without suit. Badgett v. Frick, 28 S. C. 176, 5 S. E. 355.

Avoidance of defense.—On the same principle that a defendant must generally rely upon matters of law by way of plea or answer in the law action, it is held that a plaintiff at law cannot resort to equity to restrain the pleading of a defense, where the matter he relies on might be pleaded at law by way of replication. Hoboken Ferry Co. v. Baldwin, 58 N. J. Eq. 36, 43 Atl. 417.

42. A bill averred that defendant's intestate had sold property of plaintiff, agreeing to invest the proceeds in a home for her, but instead thereof had bought property and taken title in his own name and had sold the property. The prayer was only for the recovery of the money and the bill was dismissed. King v. Pate, 60 Ga. 106. Refusal of a party to a contract to permit the other party to see it will not justify a resort to equity to recover on the contract, in the absence of a prayer for discovery of its contents. Thomas v. Caldwell, 50 Ill. 138. A bill by a creditor, a party to a composition agreement, alleging fraud in procuring the composition but praying for damages and not rescission, should be dismissed. Denny v. Gilman, 26 Me. 149. Equity has no jurisdiction where an author seeks damages for a past violation of his copyright and to recover possession of the stereotype plates of his work, if he does not seek an injunction against further violation. Monk v. Harper, 3 Edw. (N. Y.) 109.

43. A creditor holding a mortgage on the debtor's chattels brought a bill, not asking foreclosure, but to restrain proceedings by an attaching creditor, and to have the court take control of the chattels and apply them to plaintiff's debt. It was held that for the purpose of the bill he had a remedy at law. Polk v. Gardner, 67 Ark. 441, 55 S. W. 840. A bill by a patentee of bird-cages against a licensee to compel him to disclose the number of cages made and sold and for general relief presented no equity when it failed to make a case for discovery. Nothing could be granted under the prayer for general relief except what could be recovered at law. Perkins v. Hendryx, 23 Fed. 418.

44. See 1 Story Eq. Jur. 26. All grounds of equity jurisdiction will be found to fall under one or another of these heads, but perhaps no analysis based on a classification of legal defects would permit the grouping of subjects of jurisdiction in a complete and categorical manner. With regard to some subjects equity jurisdiction is traced to several defects of the law or to a combination of defects. What is said under this head is merely illustrative of the general principles and not by way of remote or exhaustive

b. Right Not Recognized at Law. While the chancellor derived his jurisdiction from the inadequacy of the original writ to enforce recognized legal rights, equity in time came to recognize and enforce substantive rights which the law either denied or refused to recognize. In such cases the remedy at law is not only inadequate but entirely absent, or at least was so when the jurisdiction was established.[45]

c. Legal Relief Inadequate. In a very large class of cases there is no special obstacle to a judgment at law, but such judgment if obtained would not afford an adequate protection to the right asserted. The jurisdiction of equity in such cases is based upon the superior adequacy of the remedy, whereby specific relief is granted, adapted to the nature of the right and of the wrong committed or threatened.[46]

d. Inadequacy of Legal Procedure. Sometimes, although the right at law is fully recognized and a money judgment would afford adequate relief, the rules of procedure present obstacles to the attainment of such relief at law, and equity is invoked to remove such obstacles, or to grant relief itself because they are not presented in equity.[47] These obstacles are traceable largely, directly or indirectly, to the limitations imposed by jury trials, the necessity of arranging the parties so as to present only a dual contest, the rules of evidence and the singleness of issue. With regard to parties, beside the necessity of resorting to equity to avoid the legal requisite of duality,[48] the impossibility of the same persons being both plaintiff and defendant at law,[49] and the rules requiring those having a joint interest to unite,[50] often ground jurisdiction in equity to enforce a legal demand.[51] Historically, the principal obstacle to legal relief arising from the rules of evidence was the incompetency of parties as witnesses, hence the broad jurisdiction analysis. The grounds of jurisdiction as to each subject are treated elsewhere. See infra, II, B.

45. Of this character are the rights accompanying a trust, the equity of redemption of a mortgagor, the rights of an assignee of a chose in action, and others of like character which the law formerly ignored. While most of these have achieved at least partial recognition at law, the jurisdiction founded on their ancient denial generally remains (see supra, II, A, 2), and they are still called equitable rights (see infra, II, B).

46. The most familiar instances of this class are the cases where because of the inadequacy of a judgment for damages equity grants relief by way of injunction, specific performance, reformation, rescission, etc. See infra, II, B, 7.

47. See infra, II, B, 8.

48. At the common law, however numerous might be the parties, plaintiffs must have a common interest and defendants be charged with a common liability. See PARTIES. Therefore, a resort to equity is necessary, or was formerly necessary, wherever complete relief required an adjustment of diverse rights among the parties, as in adjusting liens, distributing funds, and often in matters of account.

49. Where the cause of action was in favor of several owners of a vessel against a partnership, and one of the owners of the vessel was a member of the partnership, a resort to equity was held necessary. Hayden v. Whitmore, 74 Me. 230. And also where the contest is between two partnerships with a common member. Bosanquet v. Wray, 2 Marsh. 319, 6 Taunt. 597, 16 Rev. Rep. 677. Where the legal remedy would be on a refunding bond payable to an executrix, a claim against such executrix must be asserted in equity. Pratt v. Boody, 55 N. J. Eq. 175, 35 Atl. 1113. So also a suit on a joint lease, one of defendants being both a lessor and a lessee. Pelton v. Place, 71 Vt. 430, 46 Atl. 63. For similar cases see Ramsey v. Johnson, Minor (Ala.) 418; Cumberland Justices v. Armstrong, 14 N. C. 284. Creditors of an estate may resort to equity where the administratrix is the real owner of a claim against the estate nominally held by another, the two having combined to subject property to the payment of the claim to the exclusion of other creditors, because the administratrix, who alone could be heard at law, cannot properly represent the estate. Cambridge Cent. Nat. Bank v. Fitzgerald, 94 Fed. 16.

50. As where one refuses to join in the necessary proceeding (Hoyt v. Fass, 64 Wis. 273, 25 N. W. 45), or where one has released the debt for an improper consideration (Piercy v. Fynney, L. R. 12 Eq. 69, 40 L. J. Ch. 404, 19 Wkly. Rep. 710). For this reason one executor may sue another in equity. Croker v. Hambden, Choyce Cas. Ch. 118, 21 Eng. Reprint 72; Peake v. Ledger, 8 Hare 313, 32 Eng. Ch. 313.

51. A bill in equity will lie also where those who would be defendants at law are numerous or shifting, as where the demand was against an unincorporated society with many members constantly changing by accessions, withdrawals, and deaths, the property based on the necessity for discovery.[52] Other obstacles are, however, sufficient to invoke the jurisdiction, as where it is sought to set aside an instrument which is void, the invalidity not appearing on its face,[53] or where rules peculiar to law prevent the establishment of a fact.[54] Equity will also take jurisdiction where it is impossible from the nature of the case to produce evidence to establish the amount of damages,[55] as well as where the legal measure of damages affords inadequate relief.[56]

B. Specific Subjects and Grounds of Jurisdiction —1. Multiplicity of Suits, and Circuity of Action — a. Principles Governing Jurisdiction.[57] It is frequently stated that equity will assume jurisdiction for the purpose of preventing a multiplicity of suits.[58] But this statement in its broad form is somewhat misleading. The mere fact that one is threatened with a multiplicity of suits and that he is likely to become involved in numerous proceedings does not alone entitle him to the aid of equity to avoid such situation. He must in addition show that some legal or equitable right is invaded or threatened.[59] The jurisdiction having being held in common. Shakers Soc. v. Watson, 68 Fed. 730, 15 C. C. A. 632. See infra, II, B. 1.

Co. v. Gass, 129 Ala. 214, 29 So. 920), or to set aside an invalid ordinance fixing water-rates where evidence aliunde is necessary to show the invalidity (Anoka Waterworks, etc., Co. v. Anoka, 109 Fed. 580; Los Angeles v. Los Angeles City Water Co., 177 U. Lee v. Howe, 27 Mo. 521. So a bill was sustained where plaintiff relied on an estoppel which could not be proved at law. Drexel v. Berney, 122 U. S. 241, 7 S. Ct. 1200, 30 L. ed. 1219. Application of rule.— Equity will interfere to avoid a multiplicity of suits, to remove a cloud upon title, and to enforce a trust. Dodge v. Briggs, 27 Fed. 160. But not in the absence of such equities. Schulenberg-Boeckeler Lumber Co. v. Hayward, 20 Fed. 422. And where numerous defendants are been exercised for preventive purposes, it must be invoked in time to have a preventive effect.[60] To justify the interference of equity it must appear that all rights involved can be as well protected in the equity suit as in the separate action,[61] and that the proceedings at law must necessarily be multiplex.[62] Plainin possession of land, each being entitled to a jury trial, equity cannot entertain a bill for the recovery of the land, although a multiplicity of suits would be thereby avoided. McGuire v. Pensacola City Co., 105 Fed. 677, 44 C. C. A. 670.

Other equitable rights.— The avoidance of a multiplicity of suits affords the occasion of appealing to equity, and affects the extent of the relief, where plaintiff shows some other equitable right, as to relief against fraud (Rynearson v. Turner, 52 Mich. 7, 17 N. W. 219; Biddle v. Ramsey, 52 Mo. 153), contribution (Walker v. Cheever, 35 N. H. 339), an accounting (Biddle v. Ramsey, supra; Plummer v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co., 19 Fed. Cas. No. 11,232, 1 Holmes 267), the construction of a will (Withers v. Sims, 80 Va. 651), or administration of estates (Kendall v. Creighton, 23 How. (U. S.) 90, 16 L. ed. 419). So after a partition sale a supplemental bill was entertained by a cotenant purchaser for an accounting and distribution of the proceeds as between him and his cotenant. Williams' Appeal, (Pa. 1889) 16 Atl. 810.

60. Thus the frequent applications for an accounting for damages growing out of repeated wrongs, as for waste, are incidental only to injunctions to prevent a continuance of the wrongs. See also Workman v. Smith, 155 Mass. 92, 29 N. E. 198; Johnston v. Stone, 71 Miss. 593, 14 So. 81. A bill by a railroad company claiming land under a grant, but not in possession, alleged that two defendants were withholding possession and that a large number of other persons were claiming adversely to plaintiffs. All persons in possession might have been joined in one action in ejectment. The bill was held insufficient to make out a case to prevent a multiplicity of suits. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Amacker, 49 Fed. 529, 1 C. C. A. 345 [affirming 46 Fed. 233]. See also McGuire v. Pensacola City Co., 105 Fed. 677, 44 C. C. A. 670; Smythe v. New Orleans Canal, etc., Co., 34 Fed. 825. Taxes on bank-stock were assessable against stock-holders but the bank was required to withhold sufficient funds from dividends for the payment thereof. A bank paid over moneys so retained on an illegal assessment. The bank sought by a bill in equity to avoid multiplicity of suits to recover it back. It was held that the tax being void the bank paid in its own wrong and that therefore one action at law by the bank would be sufficient for its recovery. It was also held that the bill could not be sustained to prevent multiplicity, or to restrain the collector from distributing the money among several municipal corporations, because such distribution would not absolve the collector from liability, and require separate actions against each municipality. Kimball v. Corn Exch. Nat. Bank, 1 Ill. App. 209 [affirmed in 89 Ill. 611]. A bill against several railroad companies for an accounting and repayment of over-charges, asserting that each was liable for a fractional part, was held bad, because plaintiff had a remedy at law for the whole amount against the company making the excessive charges. Scott v. Erie R. Co., 34 N. J. Eq. 354. Separate suits by two heirs on the same instrument was held not to be such multiplicity as to be relievable in equity. Druon v. Sullivan, 66 Vt. 609, 30 Atl. 98. But where two persons, each claiming as assignee, brought actions upon an instrument, it was held that defendant in the action might maintain a suit against both claimants to cancel the instrument on the ground of fraud in its inception. McHenery v. Hazard, 45 N. Y. 580. Bills by a number of insurance companies to set aside an adjustment for fraud were held bad because the fraud rendered the adjustment void and could be used as a defense at law, and if the relief should be granted actions at law must still be brought on the policies. Manchester F. Assur. Co. v. Stockton Combined Harvester, etc., Works, 38 Fed. 378. But a bill was sustained to set aside a judicial sale which was absolutely void, and which plaintiff might have defended against at law, where many persons claimed distinct parcels under the sale. De Forest v. Thompson, 40 Fed. 375. The theory of a bill for relief against a tax was that a penalty was imposed for each day's delay in payment and that an action would lie for each penalty. The court held that this failed to make a case, as it would not be presumed that the state would institute vexatious litigation. Pacific Express Co. v. Seibert, 44 Fed. 310. But a bill was sustained against municipal officers under similar circumstances. Hutchinson v. Beckham, 118 Fed. 399, 55 C. C. A. 333. A suit to avoid an assessment will not tiff must not have voluntarily rendered himself liable to the multiplicity of actions threatened.[63]

b. Conditions For Invoking Jurisdiction — (i) Many Controversies Between Same Parties. The multiplicity of suits which may be prevented by a single suit in equity may grow out of a complication of controversies between the same parties or it may grow out of the multiplicity of parties to the same or similar controversies. The earlier instances of the exercise of the jurisdiction in the first class of cases were for the purpose of preventing one who had been defeated at law from vexatiously reiterating his claim.[64] It seems to have been first thought that equity should interfere only after defendant had been repeatedly defeated at law. The rule now is that plaintiff must first have established his right at law, but the establishment of the right and not the number of trials founds the jurisdiction.[65] This early exercise of jurisdiction to protect one from the reiteration of unfounded demands has been extended to other cases, as to the protection of plaintiff from the necessity of reiterating a well founded demand against defendant.[66] The jurisdiction has also been extended to be entertained, although the assessment is divided into ten parts, payable annually, where one might at his election pay it all at once, and test its validity in a single action to recover it back. Greenhood v. MacDonald, 183 Mass. 342, 67 N. E. 336.

The number of actions which would constitute such multiplicity as to require relief in equity is not fixed, and depends on circumstances. Where actions by two plaintiffs were pending, which the court was without jurisdiction to restrain, and actions by two others only were threatened, jurisdiction was denied. McAlpine v. Tourtelotte, 24 Fed. 69.

63. As by splitting up a cause of action against him. Jones v. Chester Oil Co., 17 Ill. App. 111.

64. This jurisdiction arose chiefly from the inconclusiveness of a judgment in ejectment, injunctions being granted to restrain repeated actions. Bath v. Sherwin, Prec. Ch. 261, 24 Eng. Reprint 126; Leighton v. Leighton, 1 P. Wms. 671, 24 Eng. Reprint 563. See Injunctions; Quieting Title.

Repeated trespasses.— It has been sometimes held that relief against repeated trespasses will be awarded without any prior establishment of the plaintiff's rights at law. Musselman v. Marquis, 1 Bush (Ky.) 463, 89 Am. Dec. 637; Coatsworth v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 156 N. Y. 451, 51 N. E. 301; Lake Shore, etc., R. Co. v. Felton, 103 Fed. 227, 43 C. C. A. 189.

Repeated actions under contract.— A deed having been made in consideration of a grantee's maintaining the grantor for life, a bill to revoke the deed, alleging that the grantee had deserted plaintiff, and not alleging any determination at law, was sustained upon the ground that otherwise repeated actions for necessaries would result. Lowman v. Crawford, 99 Va. 688, 40 S. E. 17.

66. Alimony in instalments.— Thus bills have been entertained to enforce a contract to pay alimony in instalments, to avoid the necessity of repeated actions as the instalments fell due. Peterson v. Fleming, 63 Ill. App. 357. But where the alimony accrued under a foreign decree enforcement in equity was refused and the party relegated to successive actions at law. Bennett v. Bennett, 63 N. J. Eq. 306, 49 Atl. 501.

Prosecutions under municipal ordinances.— In Iowa the court seemed to recognize the existence of a power to prevent repeated prosecutions under a municipal ordinance, even after a conviction, where an appeal was pending to test the validity of the ordinance, but refused to exercise it unless to prevent irreparable injury, holding that by temporary obedience to the ordinance such injury could be avoided. Ewing v. Webster City, 103 Iowa 226, 72 N. W. 511.

a distinct class of cases, where a complexity of controversies arising out of the same contract or transaction would require several actions at law for entire relief. In such cases equity may take jurisdiction and adjust all the controversies so connected in one suit.[67]

(II) Avoiding Circuity of Action. Where, instead of a complexity of controversies between two parties with respect to the same subject-matter, the complexity arises from there being involved the several rights of more than two, each demanding adjustment, and each requiring at law a separate action, equity will frequently take jurisdiction of a suit to which all are parties and therein adjust all rights and determine the whole controversy.[68] The entertainment of bills to enforce directly a demand against the person ultimately chargeable, where at law the remedy would be against one secondarily liable, has in some cases been placed upon the same ground, of preventing circuity of action.[69]

Where rule inapplicable.— A bill showing the institution of suits on several notes which plaintiff had given to defendant, a non-resident, for the purchase-price of machinery which had been returned as defective, was held to be insufficient to show jurisdiction to prevent a multiplicity of suits. Krause v. Scott, 86 Ill. App. 238. So also a bill which stated that plaintiff had conveyed his property to defendant on the latter's agreement to pay the former's debts, that plaintiff had been obliged to pay a large part, and that defendant had failed to pay other debts, the bill seeking an accounting and reconveyance. Suit by corporation against directors.— In Empire State Sav. Bank v. Beard, 81 Hun (N. Y.) 184, 30 N. Y. Suppl. 756, an equitable action was sustained on behalf of a corporation against directors for negligent loss of corporate property, where defendants were directors during different periods, and it was necessary to apportion the loss among them. But in O'Brien v. Fitzgerald, 6 N. Y. App. Div. 509, 39 N. Y. Suppl. 707, equitable jurisdiction was denied in a similar action where the complaint alleged that defendants were accountable in distinct amounts, although it was also alleged that as to some matters all were liable and as to others part only were liable. (III) Similar Controversies With Many Persons. The jurisdiction based upon preventing a multiplicity of suits is also invoked where rights, simple enough in themselves, threaten a vexatious number of actions because of the great number of persons interested. Bills founded on this ground are "bills of peace," but that term is also frequently applied to other cases, where the jurisdiction is exercised to prevent a multiplicity of suits, particularly those where plaintiff seeks protection against the reiteration of an unsuccessful legal demand.[70] The earliest instances of bills of this character were brought by one claiming a general right against many persons to establish such right and thus avoid actions at law with each adversary.[71] The jurisdiction is exercised, however, either to protect the right of one asserted against many,[72] or the rights of many asserted against one.[73] In spite of some authority to the effect that it is only the person who would otherwise be subjected to a multiplicity of suits who can maintain the bill,[74] the rule undoubtedly is that either party may invoke the jurisdiction,[75] and the suit

Suits by representatives.— In some cases it seems that one who would not be a party at all to any of the legal proceedings may be plaintiff to the bill, as a representative of others, or as asserting a demand of his own in equity to protect others from vexatious litigation. Thus, a county having collected a tax to the entire amount authorized, and a city having been entitled to levy one half of such tax, it was held that the city might sue the county in equity for its proportion be-may be brought by one of the many on behalf of all.[76] The nature of the relationship which must subsist between the claims of the numerous persons cannot be stated with precision. It is clear that such claims must not be entirely distinct, unconnected, and independent.[77] On the other hand it is often said that the individuals composing a numerous body must claim in privity, or at least claim a common right, in order to found the jurisdiction.[78] Nevertheless bills have been sustained where there was no connection among the different claims other than that they all depended upon the same question of fact or law arising out of the same transaction.[79] Elsewhere it is held that such connection is insufficient.[80] cause a multiplicity of suits against and by the taxpayers would be therefore avoided. Frederick County v. Frederick, 88 Md. 654, 42 Atl. 218. While in the former case the sovereign powers of plaintiff state for the protection of public health were involved, in the latter its interest as such is less evident, and the rights protected were practically the individual rights of a large number of its citizens.

"There must be some common purpose in pursuit of a common adversary, where each may resort to equity, in order to be joined in one suit; and it is not enough that there 'is a community of interest merely in the question of law or of fact involved,' etc., as stated by Pomeroy in section 268 [Eq. Jur.]. Although he asserts that this early theory has long been abandoned, he fails utterly to prove it." Tribette v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 70 Miss. 182,

While all attempts to harmonize the authorities have failed, the rule which most nearly approaches that result is that the bill must relate to matters of the same nature and having a connection with each other, and in which all the parties are more or less concerned, although their rights in respect to the general subject of the case may be distinct.[81] Where the controversy is between one and a large number of persons, even though the right claimed be legal, no prior establishment thereof at law is essential.[82]

2. Accident and Mistake — a. Terms Defined and Distinguished. The terms "accident" and "mistake" have acquired generic and technical senses indicating grounds upon which courts of equity from a very early period have interposed to relieve a party from certain unjust legal burdens. By "accident" is meant an occurrence unforeseen and not reasonably to be anticipated, whereby the legal rights of a party are affected to his injury without neglect or misconduct on his part.[83] "Mistake" is an erroneous mental condition, conception, or conviction, induced by ignorance, misapprehension, or misunderstanding of the truth, but without negligence, and resulting in some act or omission done or suffered erroneously by one or both the parties to a transaction, but without its erroneous character being intended or known at the time.[84] An accident is something occurring

81. Brinckerhoff v. Brown, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 139 [followed in New York, etc., R. Co. v. Schuyler, 17 N. Y. 592], per Kent, Ch.

The confusion on this subject seems to result from several causes. Chancery refused to establish a private right as against a public right, as to a highway, because this would be to restrain the entire community. 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 171, 22 Eng. Reprint 147. Therefore there must be some common bond distinguishing the body of persons against whom the right is claimed. In the early cases the bond thus required was a privity or community of title or interest, and such cases present the technical "bills of peace." Tenham v. Herbert, 2 Atk. 483, 26 Eng. Reprint 692; Carlisle Corp. v. Wilson, 13 Ves. Jr. 276, 33 Eng. Reprint 297. But the principle of these bills was extended to other bills where there was no such community of interest, and called bills in the nature of bills of peace. Sheffield Waterworks v. Yeomans, L. R. 2 Ch. 8, 15 L. T. Rep. N. S. 342, 15 Wkly. Rep. 76; Ware v. Horwood, 14 Ves. Jr. 28, 33 Eng. Reprint 432. A contrariety of opinion has developed in several classes of cases, probably because of the intervention of principles of public policy. One of these classes consists of bills to restrain the enforcement of taxes claimed to be illegal. See Taxation. With regard to suits to enforce the liability of stock-holders in corporations, the apparent conflicts are largely due to the diverse character of such liabilities. See Corporations, 10 Cyc. 649–736.

82. Lapeer County v. Hart, Harr. (Mich.) 157; Eldridge v. Hill, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 281; Vann v. Hargett, 22 N. C. 31, 32 Am. Dec. 689.

83. It has been said that all attempts to define the term have been unsuccessful (1 Spence 628), and there have been few judicial attempts in this direction. "By accident is meant when a case is distinguished from others of a like nature by unusual circumstances." Bath v. Sherwin, 10 Mod. 1. Doubtless the difficulty of definition is largely due to the laxity of principle under which the relief was formerly exercised. Modern writers are in substantial if not verbal accord.

"Such unforeseen events, misfortunes, losses, acts, or omissions as are not the result of any negligence or misconduct in the party." 1 Story Eq. Jur. § 78 [followed in Smith Princ. Eq. (3d ed.) 232; Snell Eq. 346].

"An unforeseen and injurious occurrence not attributable to mistake, neglect, or misconduct." Smith Manual Eq. 36 [followed in Bispham Eq. § 174, and quoted in Magann v. Segal, 91 Fed. 252, 261, 34 C. C. A. 323].

"An unforeseen and unexpected event, occurring external to the party affected by it, and of which his own agency is not the proximate cause, whereby, contrary to his own intention and wish, he loses some legal right, or becomes subjected to some legal liability, and another person acquires a corresponding legal right, which it would be a violation of good conscience for the latter person, under the circumstances, to retain." 2 Pomeroy Eq. Jur. § 823 [quoted in Gotthelf v. Stranahan, 19 N. Y. Suppl. 161, 167].

84. 2 Pomeroy Eq. Jur. § 839. The term is even more difficult of definition than accident. It is "some intentional act or omission or error arising from ignorance, surprise, imposition or misplaced confidence." 1 Story Eq. Jur. § 110. This it will be observed does not distinguish between mistake and fraud.

Mistake exists "where a person acting upon some erroneous conviction, either of law or of fact, executes some instrument or does some act which, but for that erroneous conviction, he would not have executed or done." Hayne Outlines Eq. (5th ed.) 85.

"A mistake of fact is a mistake not caused by the neglect of legal duty on the part of the person making the mistake, and consisting subsequent to the transaction and reacting injuriously upon the legal rights of the party; it is objective. Mistake is subjective, relating to the mental condition of the parties at the time of the transaction, and thereby affecting the quality of the transaction in its inception.[85] The fundamental principle of relief in either case being the injustice of permitting the enforcement of legal rights not contemplated by the parties, the subjects are closely related and may well be treated in juxtaposition.

b. Accident. The common law always protected parties against the consequences of certain accidents,[86] but in cases not within the protection of the common law equity has jurisdiction to grant relief.[87] The state of facts which must in general be shown to warrant the relief is indicated by the terms of the definition given in the preceding section. It should, however, be added that relief will not be given as against an equity superior to that arising from the accident, as where it is sought against a purchaser for value without notice of the accident,[88] or where plaintiff has a mere expectancy and no vested right.[89] Nor will relief be given against an express covenant, where the parties may be fairly deemed to have contracted in view of the possibility of such an accident.[90] The most familiar instance of the exercise of the jurisdiction is perhaps in the case of written instruments which have been lost or destroyed by accident.[91] It has been held on similar principles that relief may be given against the loss of judicial records,[92] but such jurisdiction has been elsewhere denied.[93] Relief is accorded against judgments at law suffered through accident and without negligence, where a legal remedy is not available.[94] The death of a person who should perform an act may justify the interposition of equity to give plaintiff the benefit he would have received by its performance.[95] To this ground of jurisdiction is also traced the relief given upon the defective execution of powers,[96] and the relief often granted to executors and administrators in such cases, as the overpayment of legacies.[97] Accident is also often the ground of jurisdiction in cases involving confusion of boundaries,[98] and the relief accorded against penalties and forfeitures has been attributed to the same source.[99]

c. Mistake — (i) Mistakes of Fact — (a) In General. The jurisdiction of equity to relieve against the consequences of a mistake of fact has existed from an early period and is thoroughly established.[1] The nature of the relief granted and the particular circumstances requiring it are matters belonging to the specific subject involved.[2] Certain general principles may, however, be here stated.

(b) Privity and Mutuality Required. The equity is one existing between the parties to the contract or transaction affected by the mistake, and it will be enforced only as between them or those in privity with them.[3] The mistake at least when reformation is sought must be mutual,[4] and if so relief is given, although both parties are entirely innocent.[5] Where relief is given because of

(G) Degree of Proof, and Quality of Evidence. To justify the granting of relief,[16] at least where the alleged mistake is in a written instrument executed by the parties and the terms of the instrument are unequivocal,[17] there must be more than a mere preponderance of evidence,[18] since the strong presumption that the instrument expresses the true intent of the parties[19] must be overcome; and the rule is that proof of mistake must be clear and convincing.[20] But proof

(H) Instances of Exercise of Jurisdiction. The mistakes relieved against in equity relate most frequently to written instruments, and may be either mistakes in expression, affecting the sense of the instrument itself,[25] or mistakes inducing the parties to execute the instrument.[26] In the former case the mistake does not affect the equities of the agreement itself, but by reason thereof the agreement actually made has not been correctly embodied in the instrument, and the appropriate remedy is by reformation.[27] In the latter case the instrument correctly embodies the agreement made, or is appropriate to its execution, but the parties would not have entered into such an agreement but for the mistake, and the remedy is in the nature of rescission.[28] The jurisdiction has been also frequently exercised to reopen and correct accounts stated in consequence of errors in computation and otherwise.[29] Equity is also frequently called upon to relieve against a mistake as to the quantity of land embraced within a tract sold, by abating the purchase-price, and if necessary decreeing repayment proportioned to the deficiency.[30] Mistakes affecting judicial sales have also been corrected in equity.[31]

doctrine is universally traced to the maxim, Ignorantia juris neminem excusat. Regarding the rule as settled, courts and authors have made great efforts to discover and classify principles upon which the large and increasing number of exceptional cases may be based. None of these efforts has been altogether successful.[38] While recognizing the rule the courts are ready and even astute to seize upon any element of fact as sufficient in connection with mistake of law to justify the granting of relief.[39] Relief is also given where there has been a mistake of law by one party induced by misrepresentation or undue influence on the part of the other.[40] Equity frequently reforms a deed or other instrument which fails to express the true agreement of the parties as it existed when the instrument was drawn, especially where the mistake was that of a scrivener;[41] but where the instrument is drawn in conformity with that agreement and has been deliberately selected to effectuate the intention of the parties, relief will not be given, although it fails, through their misconception of the law, to operate as the parties intended.[42] In some cases, where a transaction has been equitably consummated before the discovery of the mistake, relief is refused upon that ground.[43] In some cases where the arrangement was entered into improvidently and without deliberation, relief will be given on the theory of surprise.[44] The maxim, Ignorantia juris neminem excusat, refers to domestic and not to foreign law, so that the rule has never been applied to a mistake of the law of another state, which is treated as a mistake of fact.[45]

38. In Cooper v. Phibbs, L. R. 2 H. L. 149, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 678, 15 Wkly. Rep. 1049, Lord Westbury undertook to distinguish between general law and private rights, holding that a mistake as to the general law was not relievable but a mistake as to private right might be. This theory has secured for itself some adherents. See Bispham Eq. § 187. The distinction, however, seems too subtle and difficult of application for practical purposes. Private rights, unless in very exceptional cases, rest on general law. If the facts are known and a mistake is made with relation to a private right depending upon those facts, it must be a mistake of general law. For discussions of the exceptions see 1 Story Eq. (B) Principle of Rule Discussed. No general principle can be stated which will harmonize the cases.[46] While the rule has been too often declared to be ignored, it seems to be founded upon a misconception of the maxim to which it is traced and the efforts of the courts to engraft exceptions have led practically in many cases to an annulment of the rule itself. In most of the cases where the rule is applied relief would have been denied under similar circumstances were the mistake one of fact. These are cases where one or both parties acted merely in ignorance of the law, with opportunity to inform themselves. A similar neglect as to a matter of fact would bar relief.[47] Of course to correct every transaction entered into in ignorance of the law would destroy the law itself by making it in each case what a party to be affected thought it was or ought to be. In cases, however, where both parties enter into the agreement, basing it on a mistaken assumption of the law relating to it, and are thus drawn into an arrangement different from that they had in contemplation, the courts with more or less frankness find some means of affording relief.

3. PENALTIES AND FORFEITURES — a. Relief Against Penalties — (I) DEVELOPMENT OF JURISDICTION. Equity, always expressing its abhorrence of penalties, first interposed to relieve against them by restraining actions at law for the penalty of bonds conditioned for the payment of money, on the obligor's paying or tendering the amount justly due.[48] There has never been practical necessity in the United States for a resort to equity in such cases, but the jurisdiction remains notwithstanding the availability of legal remedies.[49] At first jurisdiction was not asserted beyond relieving, where the penalty was designed only to secure the payment of money;[50] but in Lord Thurlow's time it was held that relief might be given where the penalty was inserted to secure the enjoyment of any collateral object.[51] It has since been generally considered that the jurisdiction extends to all such cases, where adequate compensation can be made.[52]

(II) PRESENT EXTENT OF JURISDICTION. Now whatever be the form of the contract, where there is a provision for the payment of a sum of money, evidently designed to secure the payment of a lesser sum, equity regards such provision as a penalty and relieves on payment of the lesser sum with interest.[53]

Cases explained.— In Ruffner v. McConnel, 17 Ill. 212, 63 Am. Dec. 362, the attempt was to reform a covenant so as to charge a party who had refused to enter into it when it was made. In Lyon v. Sanders, 23 Miss. 530, the agreement was entered into deliberately, as in Hunt v. Rousmanier, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 174, 5 L. ed. 589 [reversing 15 Fed. Cas. No. 6,898, 2 Mason 342], induced by the mistake of law of a stranger.

Relief is also given where the provision is for the payment of a certain sum on failure to perform promises other than for the payment of money, where the damages resulting from non-performance can be readily ascertained and are less than the stipulated sum.[54]

(III) Stipulations For Increased Rate of Interest. A familiar application of the doctrine, where the contract is one for the payment of money, is where it is provided that a higher rate of interest shall be paid unless the debt is paid upon its maturity. This provision is treated as a penalty, and equity forbids the enforcement of the higher rate.[55] In this respect, however, a distinction has sometimes been taken between a retroactive provision for a higher rate, and one merely stipulating for a higher rate after maturity, the former being deemed a penalty, the latter not.[56] A stipulation that on default of payment of interest the principal shall become due is not even in equity deemed a penalty.[57]

(IV) Circumstances Affecting Right to Relief. Although the fact that the stipulation is for a penalty is alone sufficient to invoke the jurisdiction, relief will more readily be given where other special equitable circumstances exist,[58] and will not be given at all where the default was wilful and persistent,[59] or was incurred under a contract in violation of public policy.[60]

ject to the equitable doctrines governing in case of contract is a question upon which the courts are divided.[61]

(VI) Relief Not Given From Liquidated Damages. Where it is impracticable to admeasure the damages resulting from plaintiff's default, and the sum stipulated is reasonable, it is regarded as a liquidation of damages, not as a penalty, and no relief will be given.[62]

(VII) Election Between Penalty and Performance. Finally it is observed that the court will not permit a party to evade performance of a contract by payment of the penalty fixed for non-performance.[63] Care must, however, be taken to distinguish such cases from those where the contract contemplates an option on the part of one party either to do or abstain from doing a certain act or in the alternative to pay a sum of money. This is not a penalty.[64]

b. Relief Against Forfeitures — (I) In General. A similar jurisdiction as in the case of penalties is exercised by equity to relieve against the consequences of forfeitures incurred at law,[65] the rule being that such relief will be given 61. In some cases equity has refused to enforce a statutory penalty. Gordon v. Lowell, 21 Me. 251; Mississippi R. Commission v. Gulf, etc., R. Co., 78 Miss. 750, 29 So. 789; Thompson v. New York, etc., R. Co., 3 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 625; Broadnax v. Baker, 94 N. C. 675, 55 Am. Rep. 633. In others it has denied relief against the penalty. Chandler v. Crawford, 7 Ala. 506; Powell v. Redfield, 19 Fed. Cas. No. 11,359, 4 Blatchf. 45. In one case at least such a penalty has been enforced. State v. Hall, 70 Miss. 678, 13 So. 39. Broadly speaking it would seem therefore that equity will not grant relief against such a penalty, nor on the other hand will it enforce the penalty.

Perhaps the distinction should be taken between a penalty in aid of a private right and one in support of public policy, treating the former in the same manner as if it were based on contract, and holding the latter binding in equity as well as at law. This would reconcile the cases cited, except Chandler v. Crawford, 7 Ala. 506, which refused relief from a penalty imposed upon a sheriff for not making a return, although this might be deemed a matter of public policy, and Mississippi R. Commission v. Gulf, etc., R. Co., 78 Miss. 750, 29 So. 789, in which case the decision was based largely upon the question whether the statute gave the court jurisdiction in such cases. But this distinction would certainly not hold good in England, where relief is never given against penalties imposed by or under authority of statute. Parker v. Butcher, L. R. 3 Eq. 762, 36 L. J. Ch. 552; Keating v. Sparrow, 1 Ball & B. 367.

In Maine a bond to procure the obligor's relief from arrest on mesne process was held to be within a statute (Rev. St. c. 77, § 8) authorizing the court to give relief from penalties under "civil contracts and obligations." Downes v. Reily, 53 Me. 62. But a recognizance for an appeal in a civil action could not be relieved against under a statute (St. (1821) c. 50) enabling equity to order executions for no more than is due in good conscience on specialties under seal, and recognizances taken in criminal cases. Paul v. Nowell, 6 Me. 239. The peculiar special statutory origin of equity jurisdiction in Maine explains these cases. See supra, I, B.

Application of rule.— On a purchase of land by A and B, it was agreed that if A should have any portion of B's share of the purchase-money to pay, then A should have all the land on repaying to B what he might have paid already. It was held that equity would relieve against this as a forfeiture. Asher v. Pendleton, 6 Gratt. (Va.) 628. Relief will be given against a forfeiture incurred by a wife, because she was under her husband's dominion. Frederick County Farmers', etc., Bank v. Wayman, 5 Gill (Md.) 336. Relief will be given from a forfeiture incurred under a mistake of law. Scott v. Dunn, 21 N. C. 425, 30 Am. Dec. 174. Equity will prevent resort to a legal fiction for the purpose of creating a forfeiture. Eveleth v. Little, 16 Me. 374. But in Georgia it is held that no relief can be given against a forfeiture provided for by a contract otherwise legal, and in where compensation can be fully made,[66] and on the tender or payment of such compensation.[67]

(II) Distinction Between Conditions Subsequent and Precedent. Courts have sometimes distinguished between forfeitures for breach of conditions subsequent and those for breach of conditions precedent, holding uniformly that relief may be given in the former case,[68] and sometimes asserting and sometimes denying the power to relieve in the latter.[69]

(III) Essentiality of Time as Affecting Relief. The exercise of the jurisdiction to relieve against forfeitures demands in most cases the application of the equitable doctrine that time is not essential, and that a failure to perform within the appointed time may be relieved against where compensation can be made for the delay.[70] But relief will be denied where the time of performance is made essential by the express terms of the contract,[71] or where by the general

(iv) Relief Forbidden by Nature of Contract. The doctrine being that of compensation in lieu of forfeiture, relief will not be given where compensation in damages is impracticable,[73] and it has therefore been held that while equity will relieve a tenant from forfeiture for non-payment of rent,[74] it will not do so for breach of other covenants.[75] In certain other cases the nature of the contract forbids relief against forfeitures, as in the case of a failure to pay premiums on life-insurance policies,[76] and forfeitures of corporate stock.[77]

(v) Statutory Forfeitures. It is quite generally held that equity will not relieve against a forfeiture provided for by statute,[78] but an ordinance or other act of a municipal body, declaring a forfeiture of a franchise or public contract, is not in the nature of a statute and is within the general rules.[79]

(vi) Effect of Equitable Circumstances. Relief is given because of the inequity of the forfeiture, and generally plaintiff need not show any other special equity. He will be relieved although negligent,[80] provided the default was not

c. Enforcement of Penalties and Forfeitures. As already indicated, the jurisdiction exercised to relieve against penalties and forfeitures is but one manifestation of the attitude of equity on the subject. The rule is practically absolute that it will not lend its aid affirmatively to enforce either a penalty or a forfeiture.[83] The rule goes so far as to forbid discovery which would expose a party to either penalty or forfeiture.[84] The few apparent exceptions to the rule against enforcing penalties and forfeitures are cases either controlled by, or at least attributed to, other countervailing equities. Thus bills have been sustained which in effect have aided vendors in contracts for the sale of land to enforce provisions for forfeitures therein, on the ground that they were bills for fore-form a condition precedent, relief will not be given where the failure arose from inattention or negligence. Barnet v. Passumpsic Turnpike Co., 15 Vt. 757.

Waiver in bill.— Where the penalty or forfeiture is solely for the benefit of plaintiff he may have discovery by waiving in his bill closure,[85] or bills filed after a forfeiture had been perfected, to restrain trespasses or other violation of the vendor's rights,[86] or to quiet title.[87] But the general rule is that not even under such a guise will equity lend its aid to divest an estate for breach of condition subsequent.[88] In other cases the provision invoked has been enforced as being for liquidated damages,[89] or a conditional limitation,[90] and neither a penalty nor a forfeiture. Perhaps the only real exception is one compelled by statute, as in the case of bills to redeem from usurious mortgages where the statute does not permit the requirement of a tender of lawful interest.[91]

4. Fraud[92] — a. Concurrent Jurisdiction — (i) Where Remedy at Law Is Adequate. With a single exception[93] courts of equity have jurisdiction to relieve in cases of fraud.[94] In so far as the law affords relief from fraud the jurisdiction is concurrent,[95] but equity will generally decline to exercise it where the benefit of the penalty or forfeiture, and equity will then restrain any attempt he may make to enforce it at law. Uxbridge v. Staveland, 1 Ves. 56, 27 Eng. Reprint 888.

the legal remedy is in all respects adequate.[96] Accordingly plaintiff will ordinarily be relegated to an action at law if his bill seeks only damages or the payment of money which might be recovered in such action,[97] or if the bill shows no right to relief other than that obtainable at law.[98] But as this rule is merely a guide for the discretionary exercise of the jurisdiction, and does not limit the jurisdiction itself, equity may grant relief, although an adequate remedy might be found in an action at law.[99] This view has the support of by far the greater weight of opinion and authority, notwithstanding a considerable number of cases treating the availability of a legal remedy as restricting the jurisdiction itself and not merely the propriety of its exercise.[1] In accordance with the general principles governing the exercise of concurrent jurisdiction,[2] where a cause has once been determined at law equity will not take cognizance of it in the absence of equitable circumstances not available at law,[3] and on the other hand where equity has first taken jurisdiction it may restrain the institution or prosecution of an action at law involving the same matters.[4]

(II) Where Remedy at Law Is Inadequate. Equity will always entertain jurisdiction to relieve from fraud, notwithstanding that the law would afford relief, either by action or defense, where such remedy would be doubtful, incomplete, or otherwise inadequate. This is true where the complete protection of plaintiff demands the setting aside of a conveyance,[5] the reëstablishment of a lien,[6] the restoration or establishment of title,[7] or other specific relief of an equitable character.[8] The concurrent jurisdiction is also invoked by the necessity of a discovery[9] or of an accounting.[10] Equity will also take jurisdiction where plaintiff has been fraudulently deprived of his legal remedy,[11] or it seems where by reason of defendant's insolvency the judgment at law would be unavailing, and equitable relief is practicable.[12] The adequacy of the legal remedy is not presumed,[13] and equity will take jurisdiction where it is doubtful,[14] or where the court is not satisfied that plaintiff could be remitted to law without injustice.[15]

b. Exclusive Jurisdiction — (I) In General. Beyond the field where a remedy, although often inadequate, may be had at law, and where the jurisdiction of equity is concurrent, there lies a large region where a party is helpless at law and the jurisdiction of equity may properly be said to be exclusive. At law fraud must be reached if at all either through an action for deceit, involving the elements of actual and wilful deception,[16] or indirectly by one of two methods, each treating the fraudulent contract or transaction as rescinded. The first is by action to recover back property or money or the value of property obtained by fraud, and the second to interpose the fraud as a defense to an action brought to enforce a liability fraudulently imposed.[17] This paucity of resources at law leaves to equity, through its more direct and specific remedies, the exclusive administration of relief in cases where the fraud itself is of a character cognizable at law, but not remediable through its forms.[18] In addition equity will treat as fraudulent many transactions which would not be so regarded at law. The precise extent of this equitable domain it is impossible to delimit in terms.[19] Even a classification of fraud cognizable in equity is difficult and of doubtful utility.[20] The extent of the jurisdiction may perhaps best be understood by considering what transactions equity deems fraudulent aside from those where actual imposition is proved.

(II) In What Sense Equity Presumes Fraud. As well in equity as at law, fraud is not absolutely presumed, but must be proved.[21] Yet, while in either forum the proof may be circumstantial, in equity an inference of fraud sometimes conclusive may be drawn upon the proof of facts less potent or less direct than would be deemed sufficient at law for that purpose.[22] Such inferences rather than presumptions of fraud give the term its more extensive signification in equity, and account for all the classes mentioned by Lord Hardwicke, except that of actual imposition established by direct proof.[23]

(III) Inequitable and Unconscionable Transactions. According to the classification of Lord Hardwicke[24] fraud may be inferred from the intrinsic nature

20. The classification usually followed is that of Lord Hardwicke in Chesterfield v. Janssen, 1 Atk. 301, 26 Eng. Reprint 191, 2 Ves. 125, 28 Eng. Reprint 182.
1. Actual fraud arising from facts and circumstances of imposition.
2. Fraud apparent from the intrinsic nature and subject of the bargain.
3. Fraud which may be presumed from the circumstances and conditions of the parties to the transaction.
4. Fraud which is so considered from circumstances of imposition on other persons not parties to the transaction.
5. Catching bargains with heirs, reversioners, and expectants.

and subject of the bargain. Where the transaction is in its nature and circumstances such as to give one party an inequitable or unconscionable advantage over the other, equity, inferring fraud, will not only decline to lend its aid to the party seeking to enforce such claim,[25] but will often actively interfere to give relief to the other party.[26] To this class is properly attributable the cases dealing with "catching bargains" made with heirs or other expectants, where oppression or unconscionable advantage taken of the necessities of such persons was presumed from the nature of the transaction.[27]

(IV) Fraud Presumed From Relation of Parties. Equity will often deem fraudulent, because of the relations existing between the parties, conduct which would not be objectionable in the absence of such relations.[28] So too fraud may be inferred merely from relationship of trust and confidence between the parties

28. As where one of a number of persons having a common interest in a security proto a bargain, although such relationship has no formal legal character.[29] Even where fraud is not presumed in the relationship alone, any circumstances of imposition in connection therewith will make a case for relief in equity.[30] To this class may also be ascribed cases where one party has been placed in a position of embarrassment or distress and is thereby deprived of real freedom of action, although not technically under duress,[31] and the other takes advantage of that fact to obtain his property or obligation.[32] Equity also raises the presumption of fraud in many cases of dealings between trustee and cestui que trust, guardian and ward, parent and child, and attorney and client; and permits proof of immaturity, imbecility, or even drunkenness on the part of one party to weigh heavily toward the establishment of fraud by the other.[33]

(v) Frauds on Third Persons. Equity affords relief against what may be termed indirect fraud, as misrepresentation, concealment, or the like, not practised in a transaction with plaintiff, but because of which he has been in fact misled to his prejudice.[34] On this principle relief is given against the exercise of a limited power to the prejudice of those who should be appointees.[35]

(vi) Other Cases of Actual Fraud. In many other cases not susceptible of accurate classification, equity seizes upon circumstances of imposition or artifice as sufficient to constitute fraud, which courts of law would generally deem insufficient. Thus equity may impose a higher duty than law with regard to the disclosure of matters of which one party is ignorant;[36] but there must nevertheless be at least an equitable duty to disclose facts in order to charge one with fraud through concealment.[37] Proof of collusion among other parties to the transaction to the injury of plaintiff is another basis of appeal to equity.[38] The equitable doctrine that time begins to run against the assertion of a demand, not from the commission of the fraud but from the time when it was or should have been discovered, opens a field for equitable relief where jurisdiction by lapse of time has become exclusive.[39] It has been said that a private statute obtained by fraud may be annulled in equity,[40] and that a surety may be discharged after his principal's insolvency, where he had relied on assurances by the creditor that he would not be called on for payment.[41] An innocent misrepresentation may be relieved against in equity where not at law.[42] Indeed it has been said that fraud in equity includes all acts, omissions, and concealments which involve a breach of either legal or equitable duty, trust or confidence justly reposed.[43]

(VII) CONSTRUCTIVE FRAUD. In addition to the foregoing cases, where actual fraud either exists or is presumed from circumstances, there is a class of purely constructive frauds, where no actual imposition is shown or even inferred; but the circumstances are such that public policy demands that they should be treated in the same manner as fraudulent acts.[44] Such cases arise generally out of contracts contrary to public policy or positive law, such as marriage brokage contracts or provisions in restraint of marriage,[45] or contracts in general restraint of trade.[46] But they extend to the entire group of contracts invalid on the grounds of public policy.[47] Contracts contrary to the policy of a statute are in like manner treated as if fraudulent.[48] In the same category transactions have sometimes been placed which were not in their inception illegal and not technically fraudulent, but the effect of which if not relieved against would be similar to that of a successful fraud.[49]

Frauds are frequently classified as either actual or constructive, and then all cases except those involving actual misrepresentation or wrongful concealment, directly established, are usually treated as cases of constructive fraud. 1 Story Eq. Jur. § 259; 2 Pomeroy Eq. Jur. §§ 922, 923. For the purpose of considering the extent of equity jurisdiction it is deemed best to distinguish in the manner stated in the text the cases of fraud purely constructive, where the jurisdiction is based rather upon analogy than upon presumption or inference of actual fraud. As in such cases the transaction is usually forbidden by law as well as equity, the jurisdiction is in a sense concurrent, but the treatment of such cases on the basis of fraud is an exclusively equitable doctrine.

c. Fraud Must Be Material. In all cases a party seeking relief from fraud must show that it was of a character material to the transaction and such as to operate to the injury of his legal or equitable rights.[50]

5. Equitable Titles and Interests — a. Trusts. As already noted[51] equity recognizes and protects certain titles and rights formerly and sometimes still ignored at law. The most important of these is the right or title of one in whose favor a use or trust has been created or results. The protection of such rights in equity gives rise to the very important jurisdiction to regulate and enforce trusts.[52]

b. Mortgages. Acting upon the maxim that "equity regards substance rather than form,"[53] and exercising its jurisdiction to relieve against forfeitures,[54] equity looked upon mortgages from a point of view entirely different from that presented at law. Instead of treating a mortgage as a conveyance becoming absolute upon breach of the condition, equity looked upon it solely as a security, and so recognized and enforced continuing rights in the mortgagor, commonly called his equity of redemption, this involving also the recognition of correlative rights as well as duties on the part of the mortgagee. These purely equitable rights led to another large field of chancery jurisdiction.[55]

c. Assignments. Another right recognized and enforced in equity, but formerly not at law, was that of the assignee of most choses in action.[56] The practical exercise of this jurisdiction has been greatly restricted by the recognition in modern times of such assignments by the courts of law, and by the extension of legal remedies, equity generally refusing to take jurisdiction where the assignee may protect himself by suit in the name of the assignor,[57] or otherwise.[58] Where, however, the legal remedy is still absent or inadequate equity takes jurisdiction.[59]

d. Liens. While it is said that equity has general jurisdiction, concurrent with law, for the enforcement of liens,[60] equity nevertheless recognizes and enforces certain liens not recognized at law.[61] Of these the most frequent species are the lien of a vendor for unpaid purchase-money,[62] and the so-called equitable mortgages.[63] Besides enforcing liens created by express contract,[64] equity, while disclaiming the power to create a lien in the absence of contract,[65] has nevertheless protected equitable rights by impressing liens in the absence of express contract and contrary to the rules of law.[66]

based on recognized equitable principles; it does not arise from a naked promise or purely moral obligation.[72]

6. Administration of Estates — a. Grounds and Scope of Ancient Equity Jurisdiction. It has been stated that "the whole jurisdiction of Courts of Equity in the administration of assets is founded on the principle, that it is the duty of the Court to enforce the execution of trusts, and that the executor or administrator who has the property in his hands is bound to apply that property in the payment of debts and legacies, and to apply the surplus according to the will, or, in case of intestacy, according to the statute of distributions. The sole ground on which Courts of Equity proceed in cases of this kind is the execution of a trust."[73] While it is true that the constructive trust relationship existing between the personal representative and those claiming an interest in the estate is ordinarily a sufficient ground for sustaining the jurisdiction of equity over administrations, nevertheless the origin of this jurisdiction can be more broadly rested on the general inability of the ancient common law and ecclesiastical courts to furnish legatees, distributees, and creditors full, adequate, and complete relief.[74] In particular the necessity in most instances of compelling a discovery of assets and the rendering of an account almost invariably drove legatees, distributees, and creditors into equity,[75] so that in the course of time in England the chancery court

74. Thus a general legacy, whether pecuniary or residuary, could not be recovered at all at common law. "There are certainly decisions which establish that in the case of an express promise to pay a pecuniary legacy in consideration of assets, an action will lie at law for the recovery thereof. But these cases seem not to have been decided upon satisfactory principles; and though they have not been directly overturned in England, they have been doubted and disapproved by judges as well as by elementary writers." Story Eq. Jur. § 591. And a specific legacy could be recovered only when the executor had assented thereto. In the ecclesiastical court a legatee or next of kin could compel the executor or administrator to deliver an inventory on oath, and could disprove or object to the inventory, and could after assent recover his legacy or distributive share, but there were no means by which assent could be compelled. And while a creditor could establish his debt at law he could not of course compel a discovery or the rendering of an account. In the ecclesiastical court a creditor could compel the executor or administrator to deliver an inventory on oath, but could not dispute the truth of the inventory. For a more detailed account of the inadequacy of the common law and ecclesiastical remedies see Story Eq. Jur. cc. 9, 10; Adams Eq. c. 4. It must of course be remembered that where the claim against the estate was purely equitable, as where the testator had charged land with his debts or legacies, thus creating an equitable lien, or had devised property in trust for the payment of debts or legacies, and the like, a court of chancery had an original and exclusive jurisdiction. As to suits at law or in equity for recovery of legacies or distributive shares see Executors and Administrators.

b. Effect of Establishment of Probate Courts — (i) Introductory Statement. In this country, however, the general jurisdiction over the estates of deceased persons has been given, to a greater or less extent in the various states, by constitutional or legislative enactment: (1) In some states to entirely distinct courts, created for this express purpose and exercising substantially no other jurisdiction;[77] (2) in other states to some one court in their juridical system, which, however, exercises other powers as well.[78] The question arises as to the effect of the establishment of these probate courts[79] upon the jurisdiction of the courts of equity in this country. In general it may be said that in all the states having the complete equity system, the original jurisdiction of chancery must be considered as remaining in full force and effect, notwithstanding the jurisdiction given to the probate courts, unless the constitutional or statutory provisions creating these courts, by express, negative, prohibitory language, take away the former chancery jurisdiction, or unless the probate jurisdiction is by these statutes given in such affirmative and exclusive language as to raise the necessary implication that it was the intention to displace the former corresponding chancery powers.[80] Bearing this general principle in mind the states may be roughly divided into three groups.[81]

(ii) States in Which Equity and Probate Jurisdiction Are Concurrent. The first group includes those states in which it has been held that the statutes relative to the probate courts have not taken away the former equity jurisdiction, but that it remains and continues unimpaired; in other words that the jurisdiction of the equity courts and the probate courts to the extent that it overlaps is concurrent. In these states, however, the general principle of concurrent jurisdiction applies, namely, that when the jurisdiction of one court attaches in a proper case the jurisdiction of the other court is to that extent excluded and will not be exercised.[82] Furthermore it is necessary to bear in mind in this connection

81. An attempt has been made in notes 84, 85, 90 infra, to group the states according to the view entertained in each as to the effect of the establishment of the probate courts upon the jurisdiction of their chancery courts. Owing, however, to the scarcity, and in some cases the absence, of decisions in some jurisdictions, it is difficult to determine with entire confidence into what group to place some of the states. The matter is further complicated by the fact that the question often depends upon a construction of the statutes conferring jurisdiction upon these courts. Moreover, some of the states have been in one group at one stage of their judicial history and in another group at another stage. Entire accuracy therefore cannot be hoped for.

82. See Courts, 11 Cyc. 985-987; and supra, II, A, 1, c.

the distinction between possessing jurisdiction and exercising it.[83] In some of the states of the first group the chancery court will, subject to the principle just referred to, exercise its concurrent jurisdiction whenever a complainant presents a case which comes within it; in other states of this group the chancery court, while admitting that it has jurisdiction, will refuse to exercise it unless some special reason is assigned indicating why in that particular case the probate court cannot do full, adequate, and complete justice in the premises.[84]

83. See supra, II, A, 2, a, (III).

84. The following states are in the first group:

Alabama.— It is well settled that devisees or heirs, legatees, or distributees, may resort to the chancery court at any time before the concurrent jurisdiction of the probate court has attached, without assigning any special reason therefor; but where the jurisdiction of the probate court has already attached, the concurrent jurisdiction of chancery is excluded unless some relief is required which the probate court for want of equitable jurisdiction cannot grant. On the other hand the executor or administrator is generally required to resort to the probate court in the first instance, and when he undertakes to transfer the administration into chancery, he must always assign a good equitable ground for asking that court to take jurisdiction of it. The probate court is without jurisdiction to render a decree against the surety of a deceased administrator, and therefore an administrator de bonis non may resort to equity in the first instance to compel the deceased administrator's personal representatives and the sureties on his official bond to make a final settlement of his accounts. Woods v. Legg, 91 Ala. 511, 8 So. 342. The same rules apply with respect to matters of guardianship. Hailey v. Boyd, 64 Ala. 399; Lee v. Lee, 55 Ala. 590; Campbell v. Conner, 42 Ala. 131. But while the administration is proceeding regularly in the probate court the chancery court will not ordinarily interfere to review and correct the acts of an administrator. Hutton v. Laws, 55 Iowa 710, 8 N. W. 642. The probate courts, however, are not vested with general chancery powers, and where the relief sought is purely equitable in character, such as the enforcement of a lien, the action should be in equity, there being no method of obtaining relief in probate proceedings. Mon. 499, it was held that an accounting had in the probate court could be attacked in equity on the ground of fraud, or where a discovery of assets was sought; but by the act of May 5, 1880, appeals are allowed from settlements made by fiduciaries in the probate court to the circuit court, and while a settlement in the probate court is only prima facie evidence of its correctness, this is only so, since the act, when the parties in interest fail to appear and contest the validity of the settlement. But when the parties in interest do so appear and contest the validity of the settlement in the probate court, their remedy is by appeal, and they are precluded from surcharging the settlement in the chancery court. (III) States in Which Probate Jurisdiction Is Exclusive. In the second group of states it is held that the jurisdiction of the probate courts is vii-

to the statute conferring jurisdiction upon the judge of probate, taking effect July 18, 1871, a proviso was added "that the jurisdiction hereby conferred shall not be construed to deprive the circuit court in chancery, in the proper county, of concurrent jurisdiction, as originally exercised over the same matters." Howell St. § 6760; Comp. Laws (1897), § 651. See Tudhope v. Potts, 91 Mich. 490, 493, 51 N. W. 1110. Notwithstanding this amendment, a demurrer was subsequently sustained to a bill filed by the sister of an intestate, claiming as a distributee of personalty, and not as heir, alleging fraud in the appointment of a guardian and administrator for the decedent, and asking the appointment of a receiver. Kellogg v. Aldrich, 39 Mich. 576. Assuming that the chancery court has concurrent jurisdiction, it will of course not interfere when the jurisdiction of the probate court has already properly attached. Shelden v. Walbridge, 44 Mich. 251, 6 N. W. 681.

Mississippi.— There have been two entirely distinct and different systems prevailing in this state, one founded upon the provisions of the constitution of 1832, and the other upon the provisions of the constitution of 1869, retained in the constitution of 1890. Under section 18, article 4, of the constitution of 1832, providing for the establishment in each county of a court of probate with jurisdiction in all matters testamentary and of administration, etc., it was held in Blanton v. King, 2 How. 856, that the court of probate had exclusive jurisdiction over such matters, and a bill in equity would not lie to review its proceedings. To the same effect see Neal v. Maxwell, 40 Miss. 726; Dease v. Cooper, 40 Miss. 114; Hart v. Hart, 39 Miss. 221, 77 Am. Dec. 668; Jones v. Irvine, 23 Miss. 361; Green v. Creighton, 10 Sm. & M. 159, 48 Am. Dec. 742; Gaines v. Smiley, 7 Sm. & M. 53, 45 Am. Dec. 295. But where the powers of the probate court were inadequate to do full and ample justice between the parties an appeal could be made to chancery. Anderson v. Duke, 28 Miss. 87; McRea v. Walker, 4 How. 455. The constitution of 1869, however, made no provision for separate probate courts, but by article 6, section 16, provided that "the chancery court shall have full jurisdiction," among other things, "in the following matters and cases, viz.: . . . Matters testamentary and of administration." By section 504 of the code of 1892 (formerly section 976 of the code of 1871), it is provided: "The court in which a will may have been admitted to probate . . . shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine all questions in relation to the execution of the trust of the executor, administrator, guardian, or other officer appointed for the administration and management of the estate, and of all demands against it by heirs at law, distributees, devisees, legatees, wards, creditors, or others; and shall have jurisdiction of all cases in which bonds or other obligations shall have been executed in any proceeding in relation to the estate, or other proceedings, had in said chancery court, to hear and determine upon proper proceedings and evidence, the liability of the obligors in such bond or obligation, whether as principal or surety, and by decree and process to enforce such liability." This statute enables a judgment creditor of an estate to sue in equity (Clopton v. Haughton, 57 Miss. 787; Whitfield v. Evans, 56 Miss. 488); also ex contractu creditors even without judgments (Brasfield v. French, 59 Miss. 632; Hunt v. Potter, 58 Miss. 96). The statute applies in favor of distributees, even after a formal settlement by the administrator. Brunini v. Pera, 54 Miss. 649.

New Jersey.— The authority conferred by statute upon the probate court is only a cumulative remedy afforded to parties and was never intended to deprive the chancery court of its jurisdiction. Frey v. Demarest, 16 N. J. Eq. 236; Salter v. Williamson, 2 N. J. Eq. 480, 35 Am. Dec. 513. While there are judicial intimations that where there are no special reasons for going into equity, the probate court is the proper tribunal, and should be selected by the parties, nevertheless as a practical matter the concurrent jurisdiction of the chancery court is very freely exercised. Culver v. Pierson, (Ch. 1888) 15 Atl. 269; Houston v. Levy, 44 N. J. Eq. 6, 13 Atl. 671; Frey v. Demarest, 16 N. J. Eq. 236; Salter v. Williamson, 2 N. J. Eq. 480, 35 Am. Dec. 513. And when a bill is filed in equity against executors or administrators by creditors or beneficiaries of the estate, touching the administration of the estate, the suit is for the benefit of all parties interested, and the chancery court will generally retain jurisdiction until a final accounting and a distribution of the assets is made. Coddingham v. Bispham, 36 N. J. Eq. 574. Nevertheless, when the concurrent jurisdiction of the probate court has first attached, and some progress has been made in the settlement of the estate, the chancery court will not ordinarily interfere with the administration of the estate, unless some good reason for its interposition is shown. Bechtold v. Read, 49 N. J. Eq. 111, 22 Atl. 1085; Titus v. Hoagland, 39 N. J. Eq. 294; Frey v. Demarest, 16 N. J. Eq. 236; Clarke v. Johnston, 10 N. J. Eq. 287. In Chamberlain v. Chamberlain, (Ch. 1890) 20 Atl. 1085, the chancery court refused to take jurisdiction of a bill filed for the purpose of having the court order the executors to sell real estate of which the testator had died seized, to pay his debts and to direct them as to the manner in which they should proceed in so doing. The court did not deny that it had jurisdiction, but said that there was no necessity for its intervention, the orphans' court act having provided a remedy in that court both in cases of testacy and intestacy. tually exclusive; that their powers as to those subjects over which they have jurisdiction are plenary, and often include the right to grant both legal and equitable remedies with respect thereto. In these states equity does not possess any jurisdiction over matters coming within the scope of the statutes conferring jurisdiction upon the probate courts, and can act only when the probate courts by reason of their not possessing full equity powers cannot afford relief.[85]

Tennessee.— The chancery court is given an extraordinary power in this state. It may concurrently with the probate court appoint an administrator of a decedent's estate six months after the decedent's death, where no person can be procured to administer in the usual way. A bill for this purpose can be filed only by a creditor or next of kin of the deceased. See Code (1884), §§ 3050–3060, 5047. The chancery court, however, is not a probate court, and has in this respect only the jurisdiction conferred by statute. Bruce v. Bruce, 11 Heisk. 729. But when such an administration is properly granted by the chancery court, it is intended to be general in its character and to effect a full and complete administration of the estate. Todd v. Wright, 12 Heisk. 442. In other respects it is not the intention of the statute to transfer the jurisdiction of the probate court to the chancery court, at the pleasure of the parties interested, nor to give the chancery court a concurrent general jurisdiction with the probate court in the administration and settlement of estates, but simply to provide a remedy in exceptional cases where the condition of the estate was so forbidding as to deter everyone from accepting the administration upon the ordinary terms of the law. Evans v. Evans, 2 Coldw. 143. The chancery court is also given concurrent jurisdiction by statute (Code (1884), § 5045), with the probate court to sell land to pay debts of decedents, whether the estate is solvent or insolvent. Burgner v. Burgner, 11 Heisk. 729. It also has concurrent jurisdiction (Code, §§ 3152–3155) with the probate court, within two years of the granting of letters testamentary or of administration, where the assets of the estate are in money, or in effects readily convertible into money, and upon satisfactory proof that there are no unpaid debts, to administer the estate, and distribute the assets among the legatees or next of kin, and in a proper case without requiring refunding bonds. Murgitroyde v. Cleary, 16 Lea 539.

Virginia.— Nelson v. Cornwell, 11 Gratt. 724. A creditor of an absent debtor, who is one of the heirs and distributees of a deceased intestate, may go into a court of equity for the purpose of having a division of the estate of the decedent, and of procuring payment of his debt out of the share of the absent debtor. Moores v. White, 3 Gratt. 139.

85. The following states are in the second group:

Connecticut.— Tweedy v. Bennett, 31 Conn. 276; Ashmead's Appeal, 27 Conn. 241; Beach v. Norton, 9 Conn. 182; Bailey v. Strong, 8 Conn. 278. But it has been held that the power of a court of equity to protect remainder-men by exacting security from life-tenants is independent of statute, and that the similar power conferred on the probate courts does not interfere with the general chancery powers of equity courts. Security Co. v. Hardenburgh, 53 Conn. 169, 2 Atl. 391.

Indiana.— Some early cases in Indiana involved the right of equity to interfere with accountings had in the probate court. In Allen v. Clark, 2 Blackf. 343, 344 [followed in Ray v. Doughty, 4 Blackf. 115; Murdock v. Holland, 3 Blackf. 114; Brackenridge v. Holland, 2 Blackf. 377, 20 Am. Dec. 123], the court said: "The settlement of accounts in the Probate Court is an ex parte proceeding, and ought not to preclude all future investigation of the subject. The Probate Court, however, is a Court of record, specially invested by the legislature with jurisdiction in these cases, and its decisions are entitled to great respect. An account, settled in that Court . . . is prima facie correct. The Court of chancery can only interfere in clear cases of mistake or fraud; and the complainant must be held to strict proof." Another line of early cases held that where a debtor is dead and a creditor has to proceed against his heirs, executors, or administrators, the chancery court has concurrent jurisdiction with the law court, and the creditor may elect into which court he will go. Whitney v. Kimball, 4 Ind. 546, 58 Am. Dec. 638; Bryer v. Chase, 8 Blackf. 508; Martin v. Densford, 3 Blackf. 295. By the act of assembly of Jan. 26, 1824, the equity side of the several circuit courts had full power in all probate matters. The act of Feb. 11, 1825, created a probate court, with power to determine all matters relating to decedents' estates, etc., except when the title to land should come in question. Under these two statutes there were two courts with concurrent, original probate powers. Mills v. Bradley, 1 Blackf. 541. By the act of May 14, 1852, the probate courts were superseded by the courts of common pleas which were given original and exclusive jurisdiction of (among other things) all matters relating to the

(iv) States in Which Equity Jurisdiction Is Ancillary or Corrective. In the third group of states the jurisdiction of equity is held not to be concurrent, but rather auxiliary or ancillary and corrective. In these states the probate courts have limited or no equitable powers, and by reason of this defect an appeal to equity is sometimes necessary. Thus, where an obstacle exists to the assumption of jurisdiction by the probate court, which only a court of equity can remove, equity will take jurisdiction to remove the obstacle, and although it might in many cases under these circumstances by the application of a well established equitable principle [86] retain jurisdiction for the purpose of giving complete relief, it nevertheless in this group of states, after removing the obstacle, generally remits the matter to the probate court, to be continued and completed in that court. Cases may be found, however, where even in these states equity has retained jurisdiction.[87] Again the probate court may have acted and rendered its decree, but there may be some equitable reason why its decree should not be allowed to operate. Under these circumstances the corrective powers of a court settlement and distribution of decedents' estates, and all actions against executors and administrators. In all cases where executors, administrators, or guardians were plaintiffs, the common pleas were given concurrent jurisdiction with the circuit court. Finally by the act of March 6, 1873, the circuit courts, in addition to the jurisdiction theretofore exercised by them, were given the same jurisdiction that had theretofore been exercised by the court of common pleas. Thus was transferred to the circuit court exclusive jurisdiction in all matters in relation to the settlement and distribution of the estates of decedents, and in all actions in which executors or administrators were the only defendants. Hillenberg v. Bennett, 88 Ind. 540; Wheeler v. Calvert, 25 Ind. 365. It would seem that the effect of the statutes of 1852 and 1873 was to place Indiana in the second group.

Massachusetts.— Wilson v. Leishman, 12 Metc. 316; Jenison v. Hapgood, 7 Pick. 1, 19 Am. Dec. 258. Even where an account was settled in the probate court without notice to the parties interested, the chancery court did not have jurisdiction. Sever v. Russell, 4 Cush. 513, 50 Am. Dec. 811. See also Greene v. Brown, 180 Mass. 308, 62 N. E. 374; Green v. Gaskill, 175 Mass. 265, 56 N. E. 560; Ammidown v. Kinsey, 144 Mass. 587, 12 N. Minnesota.— State v. Ueland, 30 Minn. 277, 15 N. W. 245.

Nebraska.— Williams v. Miles, 63 Nebr. 859, 89 N. W. 451. In Loosemore v. Smith, 12 Nebr. 343, 11 N. W. 493, it was held that the county court has original jurisdiction in the probate of a will, and its order admitting a will to probate is conclusive, unless by a direct proceeding, by appeal or otherwise, it is reversed. Accordingly a petition in equity to set aside a will which had been admitted to probate in a county court was dismissed.

New Hampshire.— Joslin v. Wheeler, 62 N. H. 169; Walker v. Cheever, 35 N. H. 339. The courts of probate have general jurisdiction of the subject of the estates of persons deceased, and as incidental to that have authority to try questions of fraud, mistake, and the like, incidentally arising in the cases then pending. Tebbetts v. Tilton, 31 N. H. 273; Allen v. Hubbard, 8 N. H. 487. Where an executor is appointed trustee as well, after the estate has been administered and the executor's duties as such have ceased, the probate court does not have jurisdiction to determine conflicting claims to the income of the trust fund and compel the trustee to execute the trust according to the intent of the will, but resort must be had to equity for such relief. Hayes v. Hayes, 48 N. H. 219. The power conferred on courts of probate to make decrees as to the disposition of trust property does not affect the jurisdiction of courts of equity in aiding trustees in investments and change of securities. In re Baptist Church, 51 N. H. 424.

North Carolina.— While the decisions are not conclusive, their tendency seems to be to place the state in the second group. Baker v. Carter, 127 N. C. 92, 37 S. E. 81; Stancill v. Gay, 92 N. C. 455; Hendrick v. Mayfield, 74 N. C. 626; Heilig v. Foard, 64 N. C. 710; Hunt v. Sneed, 64 N. C. 176.

The probate court has exclusive jurisdiction where a testamentary trust is given to the executor virtute officii, but its jurisdiction is concurrent with the court of equity where the trustee is appointed nominatim. of equity may be needed, in cases where the probate court by reason of its limited or lack of equitable powers is unable to prevent a miscarriage of its proceedings.[88] On the other hand the aid of the chancery court may be needed to carry into effect a decree of the probate court which that court by reason of its limited powers is unable to enforce.[89] Nevertheless the probate courts in these states are vested with ample powers to do complete justice in all ordinary cases, and the chancery court will decline to take jurisdiction unless special facts and circumstances are alleged showing that the case is one requiring relief of such a nature that the probate court is not competent to grant it, or some reason is assigned or facts stated to show that complete justice cannot be done in that court.[90]

88. Thus a claimant who had already had his claim allowed in part, which part had been paid, went before the probate judge in the absence of the administrator and without notice to him and by false representations induced the probate judge to allow the entire claim, of which fact the administrator had no notice until after the time to appeal had expired. There being a good defense against the excess of the claim so allowed, it was held that equity would enjoin the collection of that excess. Dundas v. Chrisman, 25 Nebr. 495, 41 N. W. 449.

89. Thus in Vermont it was held that the chancery court has jurisdiction to compel an executor to pay a legacy, where the probate court has decreed payment, since the order probably exhausted all the powers of the probate court to enforce payment. Bellows v. Sowles, 57 Vt. 411.

90. The following states are in the third group:

Arkansas.— Turner v. Rogers, 49 Ark. 51, 4 S. W. 193; Hankins v. Layne, 48 Ark. 544, 3 S. W. 821; McLeod v. Griffis, 45 Ark. 505; Mock v. Pleasants, 34 Ark. 63; Reinhardt v. Gartrell, 33 Ark. 727; West v. Waddill, 33 Ark. 575; Du Val v. Marshall, 30 Ark. 230; Haag v. Sparks, 27 Ark. 594; Freeman v. Reagan, 26 Ark. 373; Moren v. McCown, 23 Ark. 93. Gould Dig. c. 180, §§ 11, 12, authorizing the probate court to decree distribution of an estate under a will omitting names of children, etc., does not deprive the chancery court of its peculiar province "to afford relief, where contribution is to be made by different persons, or to different persons out of a common fund." Branton v. Branton, 23 Ark. 569. But a bill by judgment creditors to subject land of a deceased debtor which has been variously devised, the estate having been finally administered, is equitable, not being technically a proceeding to sell lands for the payment of the debts of the deceased, of which the probate court alone would have jurisdiction. Hall v. Brewer, 40 Ark. 433.

California.— The constitution of 1849 established county courts, and the duties of surrogate or probate judges were assigned to the county judges. Under the amendments to this constitution, ratified in 1862, distinct probate courts were established presided over by the county judges. Rosenberg v. Frank, 58 Cal. 387, decided under these latter provisions, placed California in the first group. See cases cited in the following opinion, especially Deck v. Gerke, 12 Cal. 433, 73 Am. Dec. 555. The constitution of 1879 established a superior court to which was given "original jurisdiction in all cases in equity" and also jurisdiction in "all matters of probate," doing away with the separate probate courts. The effect of the constitution of 1879 and the legislation thereunder has probably been to place the state in the third group, although there may be some justification for considering it in the second group. In re Davis, 136 Cal. 590, 69 Pac. 412; Sohler v. Sohler, 135 Cal. 323, 67 Pac. 282, 87 Am. Colorado.— While the decisions are not conclusive, they seem to place the state in the third group. People v. Barton, 16 Colo. 75, 26 Pac. 149; Marshall v. Marshall, 11 Colo. App. 505, 53 Pac. 617; People v. Arapahoe County Ct., 3 Colo. App. 425, 34 Pac. 166; Mitchell v. Hughes, 3 Colo. App. 43, 32 Pac. 185.

Georgia.— This state cannot with entire propriety be placed either in the first or the third group, but it seems more properly to belong in the third. Code (1895), § 3999; Thompson v. Orser, 105 Ga. 482, 30 S. E. 626; Duggan v. Lamar, 101 Ga. 760, 29 S. St. Rep. 178; Young v. Brown, 75 Ga. 1; Dean v. Central Cotton Press Co., 64 Ga. 670; Walker v. Morris, 14 Ga. 323. By Code (1895), § 3495, Code (1873), § 2600, equity was expressly given concurrent jurisdiction over the settlement of accounts of administrators. Ewing v. Moses, 50 Ga. 264.

Illinois.— The early decisions placed Illinois substantially in the first group. Grattan v. Grattan, 18 Ill. 167, 65 Am. Dec. 726; Vansyckle v. Richardson, 13 Ill. 171. The practical effect of the later decisions is, however, to transfer it to the third group. For the decisions establishing this rule see Strauss v. Phillips, 189 Ill. 9, 59 N. E. 560 [affirming 91 Ill. App. 373]; Goodman v. Kopperl, 169 Ill. 136, 48 N. E. 172 [affirming 67 Ill. App. 42]; Duval v. Duval, 153 Ill. 49, 38 N. E. 944 [affirming 49 Ill. The court of chancery will have jurisdiction of a bill charging a conspiracy between the administrator and two other defendants to defraud the legal heirs of a sum alleged to be due from the two defendants to the estate, and alleging that complainants were in ignorance thereof until after the settlement of the estate involved. Seymour v. Edwards, 31 Ill. App. 50. Where it appears, in an action by judgment creditors of a person deceased to subject land of which he died seized to payment of the debts, upon a full consideration of a complicated series of transactions, that there is still an outstanding unpaid balance due on such judgment, equity will grant the relief prayed. De Clerq v. Jackson, 103 Ill. 653. Heirs seeking to recover property from persons claiming title, and to subject it to a trust in their favor, may do so appropriately by a proceeding in equity for partition. Breit v. Yeaton, 101 Ill. 242.

Maryland.— The early decisions placed Maryland in the first group. Fenby v. Johnson, 21 Md. 106; Barnes v. Crain, 8 Gill 391; Hays v. Miles, 9 Gill & J. 193, 31 Am. Dec. 70; Conway v. Green, 1 Harr. & J. 151. Nevertheless the later decisions establish the rule that the chancery court will not take jurisdiction of the administration of a decedent's estate, unless there be some special circumstances which prevent the powers of the probate court from being altogether adequate to afford complete protection and relief, as the latter court is the one organized for the purpose of administering estates. Baltimore Safe-Deposit, etc., Co. v. Baker, 91 Md. 297, 46 Atl. 1071; Macgill v. Hyatt, 80 Md. 253, 30 Atl. 710; Alexander v. Leakin, 72 Md. 199, 19 Atl. 532; Alexander v. Stewart, 8 Gill & J. 226; Hewitt's Case, 3 Bland 184.

Missouri.— Caldwell v. Hawkins, 73 Mo. 450; Pearce v. Calhoun, 59 Mo. 271; Mayberry v. McClurg, 51 Mo. 256; Cones v. Ward, 47 Mo. 289; Dodson v. Scroggs, 47 Mo. 285; Miller v. Woodward, 8 Mo. 169; Bauer v. Gray, 18 Mo. But it is well settled that the probate judge possesses none of the powers of a chancellor, unless the right or jurisdiction is expressly conferred by statute, or is necessarily incident to the proper exercise of duties imposed. Where the personal assets are insufficient to pay the debts, and there is land belonging to the estate in possession of the heirs, and within the jurisdiction of the probate court, an adequate remedy at law is afforded by Rev. St. § 146, providing that land of the decedent may be subjected to sale to pay debts; and equity cannot grant the administrator relief by a bill for an accounting against the heirs for sums received from him, and for the rents and profits of the land. Priest v. Spier, 96 Mo. 111, 9 S. W. 12.

New York.— Some of the early decisions placed New York in the first group. Christy v. Libby, 5 Abb. Pr. N. S. 192, 35 How. Pr. 119; Decouche v. Savetier, 3 Johns. Ch. 190, 8 Am. Dec. 478. The later decisions state the rule to be that the chancery court in the exercise of its discretion will decline to take jurisdiction unless special facts and circumstances are alleged showing that the case is one requiring relief of such a nature that the probate court is not competent to grant it, or some reason is assigned or facts stated, to show that complete justice cannot be done in that court. Sanders v. Soutter, 126 N. Y. 193, 27 N. E. 263; Hard v. Ashley, 117 N. Y. 606, 23 N. E. 177; Wager v. Wager, 89 N. Y. 161; Haddow v. Lundy, 59 N. Y. 320; Borrowe v. Corbin, 31 N. Y. App. Div. 172, 52 N. Y. Suppl. 741 [affirmed in 165 N. Y. 634, 59 N. E. 1119]; Strong v. Harris, 84 Hun 314, 32 N. Y. Suppl. 349; Blake v. Barnes, 18 N. Y. Suppl. 471, 28 Abb. N. Cas. 401; Whitney v. Monro, 4 Edw. 5. Although the courts often use the word "concurrent" to characterize the chancery jurisdiction, and seldom in express terms deny jurisdiction, but rather decline to exercise it, nevertheless the practical effect of the decisions just cited is undoubtedly to place New York in the third group, and in the leading case of Chipman v. Montgomery, 63 N. Y. 221, the court distinctly says that the chancery jurisdiction "should be regarded rather as auxiliary than concurrent." An action in equity to have a legacy declared to be a charge upon testator's real estate is not a suitable and appropriate proceeding for ascertaining who are creditors and the amount of their claims, or to close up the estate, without administration or a resort to the procedure prescribed by statute for the proof of debts and their payment, etc., the court saying that "a court of equity is not the tribunal appointed by law to administer upon the estates of deceased persons." Hogan v. Kavanaugh, 138 N. Y. 417, 423, 34 N. E. 292. Attention must be called, however, to a comparatively recent decision, holding that the surrogate's court and the supreme court have equal jurisdiction of an action requiring executors of personalty to account, and that the latter court cannot lawfully refuse to take or retain jurisdiction of such an action unless there is interposed in bar thereof a plea that a proceeding is pending in the former court involving the same subject-matter. Ludwig v. Bungart, 48 N. Y. App. Div. 613, 63 N. Y. Suppl. 91. Later cases have followed this decision. Steinway v. Von Bernuth, 59 N. Y. App. Div. 261, 69 relief in matters relative to the recovery of legacies, distributive shares, and debts [91] can ordinarily be had in the probate or common-law courts, and a resort to equity for these purposes is in this country rarely necessary or even possible,[92] except in the first group of states. In those states, however, the chancery courts theoretically at least retain the full original equity jurisdiction, and although even in those jurisdictions as a practical matter resort is ordinarily had to the probate or common-law courts, nevertheless instances of appeals to equity may still occasionally be found.[93]

Taylor v. Huber, 13 Ohio St. 288; Stiver v. Stiver, 8 Ohio 217; Cram v. Green, 6 Ohio 429. The later decisions and statutes, however, seem to have the effect of placing Ohio in the third group. Texas.— The early cases showed a willingness on the part of the chancery court to assume quite a broad jurisdiction over the estates of decedents, although it was usually sustained on the ground that on account of some equitable right of the party the powers of the probate court were inadequate to grant full relief. Smith v. Smith, 11 Tex. 102; Newson v. Chrisman, 9 Tex. 113; Hall v. McCormick, 7 Tex. 269; Long v. Wortham, 4 Tex. 381; Chevallier v. Wilson, 1 Tex. 161. A creditor of a foreign testator who owned land in Wisconsin cannot sue in equity to compel the executor to prove the will in that state, since the creditor has the same right as the executor to produce an authenticated copy of the will and its probate in the foreign state, and to procure its allowance by the county court of the county in which testator's lands are situated. Wells v. Walsh, 87 Wis. 67, 57 N. W. 969.

92. Thus, in Wilkins v. Finch, 62 N. C. 355, 356, a demurrer was sustained to a bill by a single creditor against an administrator to enforce the payment of a debt of the deceased. The court said: "Such a jurisdiction is exercised in the court of Equity in England, but we see from the books that it is rarely resorted to. It is put on the ground of 'discovery and account,' and the doctrine that when the court has got hold of the case, it will go on and give relief and not send the parties to a court of law. This doctrine is very questionable and unsatisfactory, and there are many grave objections even in England to the exercise of the jurisdiction. . . Besides these objections to entertaining jurisdiction in this State, we have this additional consideration. There is a statute which empowers the courts of law to require the production of books and papers, and another statute which makes parties to actions at law competent and compellable to give evidence; so one of the grounds on which the jurisdiction in equity is based, to wit discovery, is entirely taken away by legislation in this State. Again, there is a statute which in most cases empowers the courts of law, in suits against executors, administrators, guardians, etc., where the matters pleaded may make it necessary that an account shall be taken," to provide for the taking of such account. "So the other ground on which the jurisdiction in equity is based, to wit 'account,' is almost entirely taken away by legislation in this State. . . . We feel well warranted . . . in holding that this jurisdiction of equity at the suit of a single creditor, has never obtained in this State, and will not now be entertained." See also Bernheimer v. Calhoun, 44 Miss. 426. The same general considerations have taken away this branch of equity jurisdiction in the other states in the second and third groups. Even in these states, however, in a case where some purely equitable ground for taking jurisdiction exists, as for instance where a legacy is a charge upon property, chancery is the proper forum in which to enforce the lien. to the effect of the existence or absence of a legal remedy[94] apply as well to the jurisdiction of equity over administrations as to its jurisdiction over other matters of general equitable cognizance. While in administration matters a resort to equity may be justified on the ground of the lack of a remedy at law,[95] the mere fact that the subject of the suit involves the estate of a deceased person will not justify the interference of equity when a legal remedy exists.[96]

d. Matters of Exclusive Probate Jurisdiction. While the original jurisdiction of equity over the administration of estates, where uninterfered with, has always been very extensive, nevertheless there are some matters which have always fallen within the exclusive jurisdiction of the common-law or ecclesiastical (probate) courts. Thus a court of equity in the absence of statute has no jurisdiction to admit a will to probate; nor can it avoid a will or set aside the probate thereof even on the ground of fraud, mistake, or forgery.[97] Such jurisdiction is vested exclusively in the probate courts.[98] In this country in the absence of statute a court of equity has now no power, probably in any jurisdiction, to entertain a suit brought to establish a will,[99] other than lost, spoliated, or destroyed wills.[1] In England, however, a mere legal devisee in possession could maintain a suit to establish the will against the heirs, although no trusts were declared by the will, and although it was not necessary to administer the estate under the direction or decree of a court of equity,[2] and he could maintain a similar suit against those claiming under another will of the same testator.[3] Such suits are in the nature of bills to quiet title.[4] In the absence of statute equity has never had jurisdiction to appoint executors or administrators or their successors,[5] and a creditor, legatee, or distributee must if such course be open to him apply to the probate court for the appointment of an executor or administrator, and cannot resort to chancery in the first instance.[6]

e. Equitable Aid to Trustees, Including Executors and Administrators. The existence of express trusts involving the estates of deceased persons, or the constructive trust relationship which equity has always deemed to exist between the personal representatives of an estate and those interested in it, still renders proper and occasionally necessary an application to equity, sometimes in matters of accounting and settlement,[7] and sometimes for the construction of wills, and for the direction of the executor and administrator.[8] In all cases of express trusts the trustee has always if in doubt the right to apply to the chancery court for a construction of the terms of the trust instrument, and to receive from the court aid and advice as to the proper manner of performing the duties incumbent upon him as trustee, and this rule is not varied because the trustee happens to be an executor and the trust instrument a will.[9] But in a case where there is no express trust, an executor or administrator will receive the aid and advice of the court only when the affairs of his testator or intestate are so much involved that he cannot safely administer the estate except under the direction of a court of equity.[10]

7. Equitable Relief as a Ground of Jurisdiction — a. In General. With reference to the subjects of the preceding sections,[11] the jurisdiction of equity is largely dependent upon or ascribed to the attitude of equity toward the substantive rights involved, although in dealing with such rights equity applies its own peculiar forms and remedies.[12] In very many cases, however, the jurisdiction depends chiefly or altogether upon the inadequacy of the relief obtainable at law, and the consequent necessity of invoking the more direct and specific remedies afforded by equity for the protection of rights in themselves sufficiently recognized at law.[13] For example the jurisdiction to compel specific performance can be invoked only to carry out the terms of a valid legal contract,[14] unless defendant has estopped himself from denying plaintiff's right,[15] and not to change or add to its terms for the purpose of making a more equitable adjustment.[16] The remedy is granted when a judgment at law would be inadequate relief even where the contract relates to personal property,[17] and is denied where such legal remedy is adequate.[18] In like manner the jurisdiction of equity may be invoked in appropriate cases solely to procure the cancellation, surrender, or reformation of instruments,[19] the rescission of contracts,[20] or preventive relief by way of injunction.[21]

b. Preventive Relief, Quia Timet. A class of cases requiring special mention, where the jurisdiction depends chiefly or altogether upon the necessity for relief obtainable only in equity, is that of bills whose object it is to prevent anticipated mischiefs which could not after their occurrence be adequately redressed. Such bills are known by the generic term of "bills quia timet."[22] While equity will not interfere for the purpose of declaring rights to prevent a possible controversy which has not yet arisen,[23] or where no actual danger to plaintiff's rights is shown,[24] it will interfere to protect the subject-matter of a controversy where there is actual danger that it may be so dealt with as to prejudice plaintiff's rights.[25] Instances of the preventive jurisdiction are found in the protection afforded to those holding remainders and other rights in futuro against loss or injury at the hands of one in possession,[26] and to sureties whose rights are in danger from the creditor's delay in proceeding against the principal.[27] Bills against trustees, executors, and administrators to prevent diversion or waste of the property in their hands are also treated as bills quia timet,[28] but the jurisdiction in such cases rests rather upon the equitable character of plaintiff's interest than upon the relief demanded.[29] While interpleader is usually treated as a distinct subject of jurisdiction,[30] a bill of interpleader is essentially a bill quia timet, to prevent the danger of a double liability for the same demand.[31] The necessity for an injunction or a receiver to protect the subject-matter from threatened injury may be the ground of appealing to equity, and to that extent bills with these objects may properly be traced to the quia timet jurisdiction.[32] Bills to perpetuate testimony are clearly of this class.[33]

8. Equitable Procedure as a Ground of Jurisdiction — a. Introductory Statement. While it is never easy to establish the origin of any branch of equity jurisdiction with precision,[34] the task is especially difficult where a resort to equity seems to have resulted from the obstacles presented by legal procedure, and from the greater convenience and adaptability of equitable forms.[35] The following subjects seem to be within this class, and the right to discovery in equity to be in most cases at the foundation of the jurisdiction.

b. Accounts. Aside from the numerous cases where an accounting may be had in equity in the exercise of jurisdiction acquired on other grounds, chiefly the enforcement of fiduciary rights, a jurisdiction is exercised for the purpose of an accounting alone, without other ground than the necessity of discovery or the greater convenience of equitable procedure in such matters.[36]

c. Partnership Affairs. The practically exclusive jurisdiction of equity in the adjustment of affairs among partners[37] has been traced in part to the advantages of the equitable remedies of specific performance, injunction, and receivership, but is largely due to the necessity of discovery and the superior facility of procedure in equity for the adjustment of accounts.[38] This jurisdiction the courts are not disposed to extend by analogy beyond the affairs of true existing partnerships.[39]

d. Adjustment — (i) In General. To the superior facilities of equity in matters requiring an accounting,[40] as well as to the practicability in equity of bringing in all parties interested and obtaining a complete adjudication of all rights in one proceeding,[41] may be traced the jurisdiction over certain subjects involving the preliminary taking of an account and the distribution of rights and liabilities among several. This jurisdiction may for convenience be termed that of adjustment.[42]

(II) Distribution of Funds. Where a specific fund or property is appropriated to or charged with the payment of various claims, so that it must be administered for the benefit of all, equity has jurisdiction to take an account of the claims and distribute the fund or proceeds of the property among the several claimants.[43] This jurisdiction may in most cases be supported also upon the theory of administering a trust.[44] Such a suit may sometimes be maintained by a single claimant on his own behalf,[45] but only where the charge upon the property is in the nature of a trust.[46]

(III) Set-Off. The jurisdiction is well established to compel the balancing or setting off of reciprocal demands which ought to go one in satisfaction of the other,[47] but this is not and never was allowed merely because of the existence of reciprocal demands.[48] To authorize it some special equity must be shown;[49] and

moreover jurisdiction will be declined where the party had or has an adequate remedy at law in the premises.[50]

(iv) Other Cases of Adjustment. Other cases where the jurisdiction is in part traceable to the superior facilities of the procedure in equity for the adjustment of complicated rights, but in part doubtless to the peculiar view taken by equity toward the rights themselves, are cases to compel contribution by all liable, where one has discharged the liability,[51] to compel indemnity, or as it is more frequently called exoneration, from one primarily liable to one secondarily liable, who has paid the debt,[52] and suits to accomplish subrogation[53] or marshaling.[54]

e. Partition. The jurisdiction of equity to partition land,[55] while concurrent with that of law,[56] is based upon the difficulties and obstacles presented by the legal proceeding.[57] In equity partition will be made in accordance with the equitable interests of the parties.[58] Partition of personal property will be granted in the rare cases where plaintiff is without remedy at law to protect his interests therein.[59]

f. Dower. While dower is a strict legal right, equity has long exercised a jurisdiction concurrent with law for its assignment,[60] based upon the necessity of discovery, and the obstacles presented in pursuing a writ of dower.[61]

g. Water-Rights. Because of the inadequate machinery and modes of relief at law a jurisdiction has been exercised to adjust, apportion, and regulate the relative rights and liabilities of the holders of the privilege of using water from the same stream.[62]

h. Creditors' Suits. In the numerous suits maintained by judgment creditors to subject property to the payment of their claims a sufficient basis for the jurisdiction is generally found in the existence of fraud.[63] In many cases, however, the jurisdiction must be sought in the inadequacy of an execution at law, to reach property which ought to go in satisfaction of the judgment, as where the debtor's interest is equitable only,[64] or where the peculiar character or situation of the property obstructs legal process,[65] or where, although an execution is available, title thereunder would be clouded.[66] In the absence of fraud equity will not interfere where there is no obstacle to the enforcement of the judgment by legal process.[67]

C. Retention of Jurisdiction — 1. Jurisdiction For One Purpose Retained to Afford Complete Relief. A court of equity which has obtained jurisdiction of a controversy on any ground or for any purpose will retain such jurisdiction for the purpose of administering complete relief and doing entire justice with respect to the subject-matter.[68] This doctrine seems to rest on the same principles which Contracts.— In Day v. Cummings, 19 Vt. 496, it was said to be the general practice, subject to many exceptions, where relief is sought as to a portion of a contract which defendant is suing on at law, for the court, on granting the relief prayed, to proceed to adjudicate all rights under the contract.

to pay an instalment of a mortgage debt, the court will retain jurisdiction to apply the surplus on other instalments. McDowell v. Lloyd, 22 Iowa 448.

After reformation of contract.— A special act of congress gave the court of claims equity jurisdiction on a claim for labor where the formal contract failed to express the intention of the parties. It was held that the court could reform the contract and settle the entire account in the same proceeding. Harvey v. U. S., 105 U. S. 671, 26 L. ed. 1206.

Further orders to receiver.— After property in litigation had been transferred by a receiver in pursuance of a decree to a corporation not a party to the bill, which refused to secure the receiver's expenses and perform other obligations, it was held that the court retained jurisdiction to order the receiver to retake the property and to transfer it to another corporation. La Junta, etc., Canal Co. v. Hess, 31 Colo. 1, 71 Pac. 415.

Adjusting water-rights.— The court having, on a bill to restrain an action against plaintiff for overflowing lands by means of a dam, sustained plaintiff's right to maintain the dam, retained jurisdiction to settle the rights of the parties in relation to its height. Le Roy v. Platt, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 77. But where the court decreed that a dam should be lowered it refused to retain jurisdiction for the purpose of permitting plaintiff to afterward ask that it be further lowered. Mann v. Wilkinson, 16 Fed. Cas. No. 9,036, 2 Sumn. 273. And having determined, in a suit to restrain disturbance of a water-right, that there had been no encroachment or threatened encroachment, the court refused to retain the bill without special cause to ascertain the limits of plaintiff's right. Pratt v. Lamson, 6 Allen (Mass.) 457.

Account after redemption.— On a bill by a stock-holder of a building and loan association to redeem his mortgage, he desiring to terminate his relations with the association, the court took an account of the entire transaction, including the amount due on the stock, and adjusted all relations. Middle States Loan, etc., Co. v. Hagerstown Mattress Upholstery Co., 82 Md. 506, 33 Atl. 886.

Where main purpose of bill fails.— Even where plaintiff fails to sustain his bill for its principal purpose the court may on the proper pleadings retain it to adjust such equities as do appear. Thus where a widow filed a bill to set aside conveyances by heirs on the theory that she took a fee under her husband's will, and the court found that she took but a life-estate with power of sale if the rents were insufficient for her support, it retained the bill to ascertain whether the rents were so sufficient and if not to make a sale. Watson v. Watson, (Tenn. Ch. App. 1900) 57 S. W. 385. A lease providing for a renewal or a taking by the lessor of improvements, the lessee filed a bill for a specific performance mine the value of the improvements and to arbitrate the amount of rent. This relief was denied but the court proceeded to determine the value of the improvements and to restrain an action for the restitution of the premises until such value was paid. Hopkins v. Gilman, 22 Wis. 476. And see infra, note 83.

72. Relief must be within the scope of the pleadings. Waldron v. Harvey, 54 W. Va. 608, 46 S. E. 603. A fortiori is this true where the court undertakes to decree against a defendant, at the same time dismissing the bill. Scofield v. Peck, 182 Mass. 121, 65 N. E. 60.

Miller v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 83 Ala. 274, 4 So. 842, 3 Am. St. Rep. 722. On a bill by a firm creditor to subject to the payment of his claims partnership property which had been mortgaged to secure debts of one partner, the court intimated, without deciding, that the claims must be reduced to judgment in order to sustain the bill, but some of plaintiff's claims having been reduced to judgment the court enforced others not so reduced on the theory that having obtained jurisdiction by reason of the judgment debts all others should be determined and enforced. Reyburn v. Mitchell, 106 Mo. 365, 16 S. W. 592, 27 Am. St. Rep. 350; Carpenter v. Osborn, 102 N. Y. 552, 7 N. E. 823. Jurisdiction having been obtained to set aside a deed recorded without delivery, it was retained to determine the title to the land and make a partition. Vreeland v. Vreeland, 49 N. J. Eq. 322, 24 Atl. 551. Suit having been brought by the United States to cancel contracts made by the Union Pacific Railroad Company with the Western Union Telegraph Company in violation of the former's charter, the court had power in that case to settle all matters in controversy between the United States and the two companies with regard to telegraphic business. U. S. v. Union Pac. R. Co., 160 U. S. 1, 16 S. Ct. 190, 40 L. ed. 319.

Matters occurring after suit brought.— The court is not restricted to an adjustment of the rights of the parties as they existed when suit was brought, but will give relief appropriate to events occurring pending the suit. b. Relief Obtainable at Law — (i) Where There Is Equity in Bill. When plaintiff has established a right to equitable relief the court will not only grant that relief but all other relief essential to a complete adjustment of the subject-matter among the parties, although it is thereby required to grant relief obtainable at law, and which if the object of an independent action could be obtained at law alone.[74] Notwithstanding the refusal of equity generally to decree the delivery of the possession of land,[75] such delivery will often be decreed for the purpose of affording complete relief, when a resort to equity has been necessary in order to establish plaintiff's title or right of possession.[76] The same rule prevails with regard to chattels.[77] Under a variety of circumstances the court for the same reason and as incidental to equitable relief may order the payment of money, although a separate action at law would lie therefor.[78] Thus the jurisdiction of equity having been invoked to restrain the further commission of wrongful acts, damages already suffered will quite generally be awarded.[79]

78. Incidental accounting.— Griffin v. Griffin, 163 Ill. 216, 45 N. E. 241; Smith v. Everett, 126 Mass. 304; Freeman v. Stine, 43 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 96; Clarke v. White, 12 Pet. (U. S.) 178, 9 L. ed. 1046. Sometimes the court will go beyond an accounting consequent upon the determination of the main equities involved, and will award moneys accruing somewhat collaterally but connected with such equities. Thus on a bill for abatement of the purchase-price because of a deficiency in the quantity of land purchased an account was taken of payments and other items, and the entire contract was adjusted. Stow v. Bozeman, 29 Ala. 397. For other examples see Boyd v. Hunter, 44 Ala. 705; Whitsett v. Kershow, 4 Colo. 419; Carpenter v. Osborn, 102 N. Y. 552, 7 N. E. 823.

A deficiency judgment may be awarded after a sale directed by the court under a deed of trust. Beecher v. Lewis, 84 Va. 630, 6 S. E. 367. As to deficiency judgments in foreclosure suits see MORTGAGES.

Contracts for municipal water-supply.— Certain cases growing out of contracts between cities and water companies afford some interesting illustrations and limitations of the rule declared in the cases just cited. Jurisdiction to compel the levy and collection of taxes to pay hydrant rentals to accrue in the future does not give jurisdiction to recover rentals already accrued. Eau Claire v. Payson, 107 Fed. 552, 46 C. C. A. ,466, 109 Fed. 676, 48 C. C. A. 608. Where the object of the action was to restrain the diversion of funds collected to pay rentals, to enforce the contract, and to compel future levies, the threatened diversion was restrained but the other relief denied. Oconto City Water Supply Co. v. Oconto, 105 Wis. 76, 80 N. W. 1113. A federal court of equity may annul a city ordinance impairing the obligation of its contract with the water company, but cannot as incidental thereto enforce payment of rentals under the contract. American Water Works, etc., Co. v. Home Water Co., 115 Fed. 171. Where a city had purchased waterworks subject to a mortgage, and was therefore a necessary party to a bill filed to foreclose the mortgage, a contract to pay the rental for hydrants to the trustee on behalf of the bondholders could be enforced in the same suit. Centerville v. Fidelity Trust, etc., Co., 118 Fed. 332, 56 C. C. A. 348; Fidelity Trust, etc., Co. v. Fowler Water Co., 113 Fed. 560. But equity jurisdiction cannot, at least in a federal court, be independently invoked to enforce such a contract against the city. New York Guaranty, etc., Co. v. Memphis Water Co., 107 U. S. 205, 2 S. Ct. 279, 27 L. ed. 484; Eau Claire v. Payson, 109 Fed. 676, 48 C. C. A. 608, 107 Fed. 552, 46 C. C. A. 466.

Rents.— Although the recovery of rents is usually a matter solely of legal cognizance (see supra, II, A, 5, b), when a court of equity has taken jurisdiction to set aside a title, it may also take an account of rents received through such title and award them to the rightful owner. Whetstone v. McQueen, 137 Ala. 301, 34 So. 229; Conklin v. Foster, 57 Ill. 104; Holeton v. Thayer, 86 Ill. App. 526; Martin v. Martin, 44 Kan. 295, 24 Pac. 418; Canton v. McGraw, 67 Md. 583, 11 Atl. 287.

Enforcing instruments after reformation, etc.— Courts of equity sometimes, having acquired jurisdiction to reform an instrument, retain it for the purpose of awarding such judgment as would be awarded in an action at law brought on the reformed instrument. Kelly v. Galbraith, 186 Ill. 593, 58 N. E. 431 [affirming 87 Ill. App. 63]; Keith v. Henkleman, 173 Ill. 137, 50 N. E. 692; Savage v. Berry, 3 Ill. 545; Freeport German Ins. Co. v. Downman, 115 Fed. 481, 53 C. C. A. 213. In the last case there was a cross suit to cancel the instrument and another to enjoin an action at law thereon. See, generally, REFORMATION OF INSTRUMENTS. In the code states this question is determined more by the provisions as to joinder of actions than on general equitable principles. See JOINDER AND SPLITTING OF ACTIONS. In some cases, however, jurisdiction is retained on the principle stated in the text. Bidwell v. Astor Mut. Ins. Co., 16 N. Y. 263; Hammel v. Queens Ins. Co., 50 Wis. 240, 6 N. W. 805. But in New York the rule was otherwise before the code. Getman v. Beardsley, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 274. Now a suit may be maintained against the party liable and an adverse claimant, to determine who is entitled to the proceeds reserving an action for such proceeds for a separate legal proceeding. Mahr v. Bartlett, 53 Hun (N. Y.) 388, 7 N. Y. Suppl. 143. But recovery has been permitted in the same suit. Convis v. Citizens' Mut. F. Ins. Co., 127 Mich. 616, 86 N. W. 994. In Missouri, under the code, in an action to reform an insurance policy, judgment may be given on the policy as reformed. Clem v. German Ins. Co., 29 Mo. App. 666. But in South Carolina, before the code, even on a bill to set aside a compromise on a policy, the court refused to try the rights under the policy where the question was one of fact. Alexander v. Muirhead, 2 Desauss. 162. On a bill, after loss, to compel delivery of a policy, recovery thereon was allowed. Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. v. Phillips, 102 Fed. 19, 41 C. C. (II) Where Equitable Relief Is Denied. Of course if the bill on its face discloses no ground of equitable jurisdiction no relief whatever can be granted where the courts or procedure in law and equity are distinct. Where the bill states matter within the equity jurisdiction, but plaintiff fails to establish such equity, the rule is that the bill must be dismissed, and cannot be retained for the purpose of allowing legal relief to which plaintiff has shown himself entitled.[80]

Retention discretionary.— In some of the foregoing cases the rule is stated in absolute terms, that jurisdiction will be retained to award damages, but in nearly all the power of the court is alone asserted, and in some it is distinctly decided that in such case, as in others where relief obtainable at law is incidentally sought, the retention of jurisdiction rests in the discretion of the court. Brown v. Gardner, Harr. (Mich.) 291; Davis v. Lambertson, 56 Barb. (N. Y.) 480. Accordingly on a bill to establish a deed and contract fraudulently withheld from record the court relegated plaintiff to an action at law for damages. Pulezer v. Kucharzyk, 116 Mich. 92, 74 N. W. 304. And on a bill to construe a will, while an accounting was taken on some matters, the court relegated to law the question of damages on a resale because of the bidder at the first sale failing to comply with his bid, on the ground that the question was too uncertain for determination in equity. Anderson v. Arrington, 54 N. C. 215.

Damages incurred pending suit.— In Davis v. Lambertson, 56 Barb. (N. Y.) 480, it was said that the damages to be recovered might be those incurred down to the time of trial; but in Whipple v. Fair Haven, 63 Vt. 221, 21 Atl. 533, it was held that damages could be recovered only to the commencement of the suit.

Nevertheless there are circumstances under which the court will grant compensation in money, ordinarily obtainable at law, upon denying equitable relief.[81] One of these cases is where plaintiff establishes his equity, but equitable relief is found impracticable.[82] Another is where the remedy at law would be doubtful or inadequate.[83] Neither of these cases is a real exception to the rule, because in each the plaintiff has established an equity and has failed merely to establish his right to the particular relief sought. Certain other apparently exceptional cases are really within the rule.[83] There are, however, some cases which substantially depart from the rule.[84]

the constitution, and U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 723 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 583], denying jurisdiction in equity where there is a plain, adequate, and complete remedy at law. But section 723 is merely declaratory of general principles and has no special restrictive force. See supra, II, A, 2, a, (I).

As against defendants not subject to the equity.— Where one against whom plaintiff's demand is purely legal is unnecessarily made a party to a suit in equity the legal demand cannot be enforced in that suit. Bradford v. Long, 4 Bibb (Ky.) 225; Fultz v. Walters, 2 Mont. 165. The same principle is applied in other cases where the equitable relief sought is impracticable. 83. An agent who has converted bonds belonging to his principal may be held liable for either their value or what he received, and being accountable in equity on the latter theory, and the court thereby acquiring jurisdiction, he will in that suit be compelled to pay whichever sum is the larger, although liable at law therefor. Brewer v. Caldwell, 4 Fed. Cas. No. 1,849. Where a penalty was provided for failure to perform a contract, the payment of such penalty was decreed as a condition of refusing specific performance. Cathcart v. Robinson, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 264, 8 L. ed. 120.

84. Walters v. Farmers Bank, 76 Va. 12, declares that if the bill shows equity, jurisdiction to grant legal relief will be retained, although it afterward appears that plaintiff was not entitled to any equitable relief. This doctrine was followed in Evans v. Kel-

(III) WHERE EQUITY FAILS AFTER SUIT BROUGHT. The rule is almost absolute that the jurisdiction of equity is to be determined by the facts existing when the suit is commenced. If plaintiff is then entitled to the aid of equity the jurisdiction will not be defeated by subsequent events which render equitable relief unnecessary or improper.[85] Bills concerning the title or right of possession to ley, 49 W. Va. 181, 38 S. E. 497 (citing also Hotchkiss v. Fitzgerald Patent Prepared Plaster Co., 41 W. Va. 357, 23 S. E. 576, which itself is based on Hanly v. Watterson, 39 W. Va. 214, 19 S. E. 536. But in both of these an equity was established). In Bullock v. Adams, 20 N. J. Eq. 367, plaintiff was denied specific performance because he had not tendered performance himself, and the court decreed restoration of payments made by him. In Green Bay Lumber Co. v. Miller, 98 Iowa 468, 62 N. W. 742, 67 N. W. 383, the court, holding that a mechanic's lien sought to be foreclosed was invalid, rendered judgment for plaintiff's debt. The same court had much earlier declared that jurisdiction ceased when the equity failed. Roberts v. Faliaferro, 7 Iowa 110; Cooper v. Armstrong, 3 Greene (Iowa) 120. In Waite v. O'Neil, 72 Fed. 348 [affirmed in 76 Fed. 408, 22 C. C. A. 248, 34 L. R. A. 550], specific performance was denied as unconscionable and a money decree rendered, because there was a showing of equitable cognizance and no objection was taken until final hearing. Legal relief has been granted where plaintiff made out a prima facie case for equitable relief which was denied because of the establishment of a defense thereto. Downes v. Bristol, 41 Conn. 274; Atkinson v. Felder, 78 Miss. 83, 29 So. 767. Paris v. Haley, 61 Mo. 453; Phillips v. Thompson, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 131. In the latter case the remedy at law was doubtful. Such relief was on the other hand refused in Horn v. Ludington, 32 Wis. 73.

In Tennessee jurisdiction is retained to award legal relief, where equitable relief is denied, by virtue of express statute. Shannon Code, § 6101; Gordonsville Milling Co. v. Jones, (Ch. App. 1900) 57 S. W. 630.

In code states.— While the rules stated in the text as to retention of jurisdiction are generally enforced in the code states, as shown by the citations in the preceding notes, no question of jurisdiction strictly speaking can there arise, because under the codes, except in two or three states, there is nominally at least no distinction in procedure between law and equity except in the mode of trial. It would seem therefore that where plaintiff makes out any right the action should be retained for its enforcement, the only question being as to the right of trial by jury. Nevertheless in New York the question has been frequently discussed from the jurisdictional point of view, and conclusions reached which it is difficult to reconcile. In some cases it is positively declared that where a plaintiff seeks only equitable relief and fails to establish his equity, the court will not retain the case to award legal relief. The true rule seems to be that if the complaint states a case for equitable relief alone, jurisdiction will not be retained where plaintiff fails to make out such case, although he proves a legal cause of action; but where the complaint states facts sufficient to ground a recovery at law such recovery can be had, although the equity fails. The matter is, however, one concerning code practice rather than equity jurisdiction.

land have, however, been dismissed where after suit brought ejectment became available as an adequate remedy.[86] And where a necessary party for the purposes of equitable relief dies pending the suit, and plaintiff fails to revive it against his representatives, legal relief will not be granted against the remaining defendant.[87]

(IV) Incidental Determination of Legal Questions and Titles. Related to but distinct from the subject of awarding legal relief in an equity suit is that of incidentally deciding questions of law and adjudicating legal rights for the purpose of awarding equitable relief consequent upon such determination. The English chancery, as a separate court, with a bar practically distinct from that of the law courts, was reluctant either to adjudicate a legal title or to determine any question purely of law, although such adjudication or determination was an essential prerequisite to the disposition of a cause properly before it. Accordingly, when the right to equitable relief was found to depend on a legal title, the practice was to retain the bill for a certain period with leave to plaintiff in the meantime to bring an action at law to establish his title, giving at the same time such directions and imposing upon the parties such restrictions as would secure an unimpeded and conclusive legal proceeding and judgment.[88] The law action proceeded to verdict, and a new trial might be moved for, but no further steps were taken at law, and the equity suit was then set down for further direction.[89] Where a question of law incidentally presented itself the practice was to direct a case to be stated to one of the law courts for its opinion.[90] Regularly the case was stated by the parties, and if they did not agree, was settled by a master. The judges of the court to which it was sent returned their opinion in the form of a certificate.[91] In the United States neither of these courses is customary. Instead the court will in the equity suit itself determine any legal questions incidentally arising, and, except where the jurisdiction of equity depends upon the prior establishment of a right at law, will try and establish legal rights or titles when equitable rights depend thereon.[92]

e. Relief to Defendants. The doctrine of retaining jurisdiction to completely adjust the controversy extends to the granting of relief to a defendant or between co-defendants.[93] On this ground defendant may have equitable relief to which he shows himself entitled as a consequence to the relief granted plaintiff,[94] or even in some cases where plaintiff has failed to make out his own case.[95] Under some circumstances defendant may thus obtain relief in the absence of facts essential to the maintenance of an original bill for the purpose.[96] Where the original bill is sufficient to invoke the jurisdiction of equity, defendant has often been accorded relief of a legal character;[97] but where the original lacks equity the cross bill falls with it.[98] Rights of defendants among themselves and germane to the subject at law will render further relief in equity unnecessary, the bill will not be retained. Outcalt v. Geo. W. Helme Co., 42 N. J. Eq. 665, 4 Atl. 669, 9 Atl. 683.

Title to office, etc.— While equity will not entertain a bill, the purpose of which is to try title to office (see supra, II, A, 5, f, (I)), it may on a bill having a proper equitable foundation, when necessary, incidentally determine such question. of the bill are governed by the same principle as cross relief against plaintiff.[99] Where a defendant injects a controversy into the suit plaintiff may have appropriate relief relating thereto.[1]

d. Independent Controversies. The doctrine of retaining jurisdiction to settle the entire controversy is confined, however, to the determination of rights dependent upon or at most germane to the subject-matter and main purpose of the bill. Jurisdiction will not be retained to adjust independent controversies between the parties, or controversies beyond the scope of that raised by the bill.[2]

3 Special Applications of Rule — a. Bills of Discovery. Much controversy has arisen as to whether, when jurisdiction is assumed for the purpose of discovery, it will be retained to give consequent relief. The rule supported by far the greater number of American cases is that where discovery proves to be necessary a court of equity may proceed to give relief,[3] unless the bill is brought in aid

"If certain facts, essential to the merits of a claim purely legal, be exclusively within the knowledge of the party against whom that claim is asserted, he may be required, in a court of chancery, to disclose those facts, and the court, being thus rightly in possession of the cause, will proceed to determine of an action at law,[4] or the intervention of a jury is deemed necessary or more appropriate for the determination of the claim.[5] But the retention of a bill of discovery for the purpose of giving relief obtainable at law rests in the discretion of the court,[6] and the court will in no case permit a legal demand to be drawn within its jurisdiction by an ill-founded demand for discovery. Therefore when it appears that discovery is unnecessary, relief at law will not be given.[7] Where in addition to the right to discovery plaintiff shows some other right of equitable cognizance the bill will be retained, although as to such other matter plaintiff might also have a remedy at law,[8] and in a few cases it is held or intimated that such further equity, as for example account, accident, fraud, or trust, is essential to the granting of relief.[9]

b. After Preliminary Injunctions. Where the aid of a court of equity has been properly invoked to obtain an injunction for the preservation of plaintiff's rights, jurisdiction will be retained to completely enforce the right.[10] But where there was no right to the injunction in the first place it cannot be made the basis for further relief.[11] remedies, such course may be followed, although an action at law is pending where the rights might be determined; whether such legal action was instituted after[12] or before[13] the jurisdiction of equity attached.

D. Jurisdiction as Affected by Territorial Limits — 1. Court Must Have Power to Enforce Its Decree. Courts exist for the enforcement of rights, not the determination of academic questions. This principle denies to a court of equity cognizance of any suit where its decree would be ineffectual because of territorial limits to the reach of its process. On the other hand a court of equity may act wherever and to whatever extent its decree can be made effectual.[14] As the original jurisdiction of chancery was purely personal,[15] jurisdiction could not be based on control of the res alone, but depended solely on acquiring jurisdiction of the party. Jurisdiction purely in rem is the creature of statutes, which are strictly construed.[16] Sometimes, however, the presence of the res within the jurisdiction enables a court to render an effectual decree of a personal character, when otherwise it could not do so, and therefore it is said that the court has jurisdiction whenever the presence of the parties, of the res, or of a portion of the res within its jurisdiction renders it practicable to make and enforce a decree which will accomplish the ends of justice.[17] No jurisdiction whatever exists unless the parties to be affected are by service of process within the jurisdiction or by voluntary appearance subjected to the control of the court, or the res is within the jurisdiction.[18]

2. Personal Jurisdiction and Foreign Subject-Matter. The general rule is that where a court has jurisdiction of the person of defendant it may render any appropriate decree acting directly upon the person, although the subject-matter may be without the jurisdiction;[19] and it may in such case compel the performance of a contract outside the jurisdiction.[20]

3. Suits Affecting Land. A court of equity has no more power than a court of law to render a decree directly affecting the title of lands in another jurisdiction,[21] nor can such result be accomplished by directing a conveyance to be made by a commissioner.[22] But where the court has jurisdiction of the parties it may render a personal decree which indirectly by controlling personal conduct affects the title to land outside the jurisdiction.[23] By virtue of its control over

Charging legacy on land.— In a suit to compel the payment of a legacy power was as-land within its boundaries a state may by statute authorize its courts after constructive service to directly adjudicate the title to such lands, although defendant is a non-resident and absent from the state.[24]

4. Suits Aiding or Attacking Other Proceedings. Where suit is brought to directly affect other proceedings, either to aid or attack them, it may be brought where such other proceedings were taken, although ordinarily no independent jurisdiction could there originate.[25]

5. Waiver of Objections. Where the court has jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the suit, the rule prevailing generally in judicial proceedings applies to suits in equity, and objections to jurisdiction over the person of defendant are waived by appearing to the merits.[26]

E. Restrictions Upon Exercise of Jurisdiction — 1. Introductory Statement. Notwithstanding the general object of equity to afford a remedy wherever a right exists and the law is inadequate to its protection,[27] jurisdiction is in some cases denied or declined, although plaintiff establishes a right and although the law is inadequate for its protection.[28]

A bill in aid of a proceeding at law may be brought where the action at law is pending (Kendrick v. Whitfield, 20 Ga. 379), and a bill to restrain the action at law may be likewise brought in the jurisdiction of such action (Freeman v. Howe, 24 How. (U. S.) 450, 16 L. ed. 749). But where a court of chancery has first obtained possession of the controversy it may restrain proceedings at law in another jurisdiction. Home Ins. The soundness of this doctrine except in a general sense may well be questioned.[30] Most of the cases declaring it might well have been disposed of on other grounds. The declaration is often made in suits for relief, chiefly by injunction, from acts of a criminal nature. In this class of cases the rule is that equity is without jurisdiction over crimes,[31] but it is said that if plaintiff makes out a case where equity would otherwise interfere for the protection of his property aid will not be withheld because the act complained of is a crime as well as an invasion of his private right.[32] It is submitted that the correct reason of these cases is that the extraordinary jurisdiction of chancery grew out of the inadequacy of the civil and not of the criminal law, and the restriction is to civil rights, not merely to property rights. The fact that interference, where the same act is a crime and also a civil wrong, is found in cases where the wrong was to property has been because the criminal laws have usually been a safeguard to private rights not concerning property, and not because equity could not protect such rights. That equity concerns itself with property rights alone is also often given as a reason for refusing to adjudicate titles to office,[33] or to protect purely political rights.[34] In some of these cases there is an adequate remedy at law, in others the exercise of jurisdiction would be an interference with the legislative or judicial branches of the government, in nearly all the supreme necessity of an orderly conduct of public affairs overrides any private rights involved. In many of the cases these reasons are also given. Jurisdiction to determine title to offices is denied,

See 19 Cent. Dig. tit. "Equity," § 8.

30. The doctrine has received little discussion from commentators. One writer first states it absolutely and without qualification, and later, with regard to jurisdiction over infants, says: "The necessity therefore for the existence of property as a prerequisite to the jurisdiction of the court, would seem to be more of a legal fiction than a reality; and the idea would now seem to be wholly exploded." Acts of public officers.— In People v. State Canal Bd., 55 N. Y. 390, the control of equity over the acts of public officers was restricted to matters affecting public property.

Boundaries between states.— The jurisdiction of the supreme court of the United States in equity to establish the boundaries between states is put upon the ground that the ques-although the right of plaintiff to the emoluments of the office is clearly a property right, so that the rule under discussion cannot properly apply and account for these cases. The protection afforded to trade-marks is also put upon the ground that it is a property right of the owner which is protected, and unfair competition cases go upon the same ground.[35] There are on the other hand certain cases which it is difficult to account for on the theory that property rights alone are protected, even under the most liberal interpretation of the term.[36] Among such cases are those protecting the author of private letters against their publication.[37] The jurisdiction of chancery over infants was supported as a delegation of the royal prerogative, regardless of property rights.[38] In many cases relief has been given against nuisances merely because they endangered personal safety or disturbed the comfort of plaintiff.[39] Other cases where the property right must be either very remote or altogether fanciful are those where relief granted consists in restraining the publication of portraits,[40] the removal of a dead tion is one of property and that sovereignty and jurisdiction are merely incidental. Rhode Island v. Massachusetts, 12 Pet. (U. S.) 657, 9 L. ed. 1233. It is quite clear that in nearly all such cases the question of sovereignty is paramount, and that the property involved is that of citizens not of the state, and that such property is affected only by determining which state shall have sovereignty over it.

36. "What is property? One man has property in lands, another in goods, another in a business, another in skill, another in reputation; and whatever may have the effect of destroying property in any one of these things (even in a man's good name), is, in my opinion, destroying property of a most valuable description." 3. Review of Proceedings at Law. While equity by acting on the parties often aids proceedings at law and as frequently restrains their prosecution or the enforcement of judgments,[43] it has no supervisory power over courts of law,[44] or tribunals of special jurisdiction,[45] and will act with reference to such proceedings only upon some distinct ground of equitable interposition.[46] It will not correct errors in legal proceedings,[47] even where there is no other method of review available.[48] The limitation is against the exercise of jurisdiction where the remedy at law fails because of improper administration and not because of extraneous circumstances.[49]

4. Abstract Rights and Trivial Matters — a. Only Substantial Rights Protected. Equity will not lend its aid for the protection of abstract rights.[50] To justify relief it must be sought in good faith to protect a substantial right and redress or prevent an appreciable wrong;[51] but if the right is substantial and the

49. The erroneous administration of a remedy must be distinguished from a case where the remedy fails through accident, fraud, or other matter of equitable cognizance. Where a statute gave to a writ of error bond the force of a judgment, equity relieved against it on grounds which would have been a defense to an action at law if such had been required. Gibbs v. Frost, 4 Ala. 720. Where judgment has been entered on a note given upon a consideration to be performed in the future, and the consideration fails after judgment, equity will relieve (Harper v. Coleman, 4 Litt. (Ky.) 156; Hunt v. Martin, 2 Litt. (Ky.) 82), but not where the defense could have been made in the action at law (Dugan v. Cureton, 1 Ark. 31, 31 Am. Dec. 727).

In a suit to set aside a tax-sale it appeared that the tax was void, but that it had been properly reassessed for an amount very slightly less. Relief was denied. Warden v. Fond du Lac County, 14 Wis. 618. The court refused to restrain the construction of a house encroaching on plaintiff's land, where only an occasional stone of the foundation projected a

b. Controversies Not to Be Anticipated. Equity will not act in anticipation of possible future controversies. Plaintiff's right must have been actually invaded, or if the relief sought be preventive there must be a state of affairs which actually threatens such right and calls for present relief.[53]

c. Trivial Matters — Jurisdictional Amount. From very early times it was considered "beneath the dignity" of the court of chancery to entertain suits involving only small amounts. A sounder reason is stated to be the avoidance of litigation unprofitable to the suitors and wasteful of the court's time.[54] Accordingly bills were dismissed if involving less than £10 or land to the value of forty shillings per annum.[55] In the United States similar rules are in force,[56] unless a different jurisdictional amount is prescribed by statute,[57] fifty dollars being usually deemed the equivalent of £10 sterling.[58] But suits in aid of charities were exceptions to the rule, and were entertained regardless of amount;[59] and a suit is never trivial, however small may be the particular amount involved, if its object is to protect a valuable right which would be endangered by acquiescence.[60] Whether the suit is trivial is generally to be determined by the nature of plaintiff's demand as disclosed by the bill, and not by the relief which he finally shows himself entitled to.[61] Where it appears on the face of the bill that the amount in controversy is insufficient objection may be taken by demurrer[62] or by motion to dismiss;[63] or the court may of its own motion at the hearing order the bill to be dismissed upon this ground.[64]

would through absence of the parties or subject-matter be ineffectual,[65] so where it has jurisdiction it will not render a decree which it is impracticable to carry out.[66]

6. LEGAL RIGHTS NOT ESTABLISHED AT LAW. Where the jurisdictions of law and equity are distinctly and separately exercised, a plaintiff who founds his right upon a legal title or claim which is controverted must before appealing to equity first establish such title or claim at law.[67] Where plaintiff's right is undisputed, or sanctioned by long enjoyment, such prior determination is unnecessary.[68]

7. NECESSITY OF JUDICIAL CHARACTER OF RELIEF. The powers exercised by a court of equity must be solely of course of a judicial character. Therefore a court of equity cannot perform an act which the law intrnsts to the discretion and control of municipal or other public officers, nor can it control them as to the manner of exercising such powers.[69] Neither can the court, from a sense of Rule in other cases compared.— The cases where jurisdiction is based on the prevention of multiplicity of suits between the same parties (see supra, II, B, 1) are illustrations of the rule; those where the jurisdiction is founded upon preventing multiplicity of suits when the parties are numerous are exceptions, jurisdiction attaching because the establishment of rights at law is impracticable. The rule requiring a judgment at law and execution as prerequisites to a creditor's suit (see 12 Cyc. 9, 16) goes rather upon the necessity of exhausting the legal remedy.

F. Waiver of Objection to Jurisdiction[72] — 1. For Entire Want of Equity. When the bill entirely lacks equity, that is, when it presents no matters within the domain of equitable jurisprudence, the objection is not waived by failure to interpose it at a particular time, but is available at any stage of the proceedings.[73] Although this rule has been restricted in statement to a want of equity apparent on the face of the bill,[74] it doubtless applies when on final hearing plaintiff wholly fails to make out any case of equitable cognizance.[75]

2. Objections Other Than Entire Want of Equity. Objections to proceedings in equity, other than an entire absence of matter of equitable cognizance, must be seasonably interposed or they are waived. Sometimes the rule is stated that the existence of an adequate remedy at law is waived by submitting to the jurisdiction or by not seasonably raising the objection.[76] In other cases it is said that the objection is waived, if not seasonably interposed, where it is competent for a court of equity to grant the relief sought and it has jurisdiction of the subject-matter.[77] The former statement would cover every jurisdictional defect unless construed, as it in fact is, to mean that in cases within the general domain of equity the objection that defendant in the particular matter has an adequate remedy at law may be waived. Both statements with their respective variants mean no more than that where a case is presented within the general field of equity jurisprudence, any feature which might lead the court to decline jurisdiction or to relegate the party to law in the particular case must be seasonably presented or the party will be deemed to have submitted to an equitable adjudi-

Federal cases.— That this is the test, and that there must be at least a matter of concurrent jurisdiction presented whereon to found a waiver of objection, appears from a comparison of the cases in the federal court. In the federal cases cited supra, note 73, the rule was laid down that a bill in equity will be dismissed at any stage when no matter of equitable cognizance is disclosed. In the following cases it was declared that where a matter of equitable cognizance is disclosed the court may in the absence of prompt objection proceed to an adjudication, although plaintiff might have availed himself of a remedy at law. 2. How Taken by Defendant. The appropriate method of objecting on the ground that plaintiff's remedy is at law is where the bill discloses the defect, by demurrer on that ground.[88] Where the defect is not apparent from the bill it should be presented by plea.[89] Accordingly it is said that an answer to the merits submits defendant to the jurisdiction,[90] but more frequently that an answer to the merits without objection to the jurisdiction waives such objection,[91] and in some cases it is expressly held that the objection may be preserved by specially presenting it in the answer.[92] Under the codes pleas are not recognized, and while it would seem that the only questions presented relate to methods of trial and the nature of the relief to be given, it is nevertheless held that objections to the proceedings being in equitable form, if not appearing on the face of the complaint and availed of by demurrer, may and must be taken advantage of by answer.[93]

III. MAXIMS OF EQUITY.

A. Nature of Maxims. Pervading the administration of equity in all its branches there appears a recognition of certain broad principles, so generally accepted and of such fundamental character, that they have become known as maxims. "They are not the practical and final doctrines or rules which determine the equitable rights and duties of individual persons, and which are constantly cited by the courts in their decisions of judicial controversies. They are rather the fruitful germs from which these doctrines and rules have grown by a process of natural evolution."[96] Having not anywhere been authoritatively declared as a code of rules, they have not been expressed in precisely the same form by different writers, and the treatises are not even in accord as to what precepts should be dignified as maxims. The following paragraphs state and explain all, it is believed, which have received general acceptance.[97]

B. Equity Will Not Suffer a Wrong to Be Without a Remedy.[98] This maxim includes the whole theory of equity jurisdiction, that it affords relief wherever a right exists and no adequate remedy at law is available.[99] All that has heretofore been said as to the jurisdiction of equity is therefore pertinent to this maxim, including the limitations upon the powers of equity as well as the scope of those powers.[1] In accordance with the maxim, where a statute creates a new right which cannot be adequately enforced at law, equity will contrive new remedies and orders to enforce it.[2]

Exercise of discretion.— The bill will be dismissed where it shows on its face that plaintiff has an adequate remedy at law. Curry v. McCauley, 11 Fed. 365. As a rule the discretion will be exercised in favor of retaining the bill (Taylor v. Ainsworth, 49 Nebr. 696, 68 N. W. 1045), but costs may be denied (Utica Bank v. Mersereau, 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 528, 49 Am. Dec. 189).

96. Pomeroy Eq. Jur. § 360.

97. Perhaps the earliest collection is the "Maxims of Equity" by Richard Francis published in 1729. This includes fourteen maxims of which the following are not now usually recognized in the form of maxims:

"IV. It is equity that should make satisfaction, which received the benefit.

"V. It is equity that should have satisfaction which sustained the loss."

The cases under the foregoing heads are those where the liability is directly imposed upon the person ultimately chargeable (see supra, II, B, 1, b, (II)) and those sustaining bills by parties ultimately entitled to the avails (see infra, V).

"VII. Equity relieves against accidents.

"VIII. Equity prevents mischief.

"IX. Equity prevents multiplicity of suits.

"XII. Equity suffers not advantage to be taken of a penalty or forfeiture, where compensation can be made."

The last four above given relate to grounds of equitable jurisdiction, the eighth to the entire subject of preventive relief. See supra, II, B.

"X. Equity regards length of time."

This last covers the doctrines of laches and stale demands. See infra, IV. In the appendix to Lofft's Reports is found a large collection of maxims, very badly arranged. A number of these relate to equity. See also Cyc. passim.

98. "Equity suffers not a right to be without a remedy." Francis Max. VI. Story does not give this as a maxim.

1. The supreme court of the United States in Rees v. Watertown, 19 Wall. 107, 22 L. ed. 72, held in effect that if the remedy at law was theoretically adequate equity could not afford relief because it was practically futile. As to this and kindred cases see supra, II, A, 4, g. See also Finnegan v. Fernandina, 15 Fla. 379, 21 Am. Rep. 292. The maxim is sometimes vindicated by denying that a wrong exists when no remedy can be afforded. Cronin v. Potters' Co-Operative Co., 11 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 748, 29 Cinc. L. Bul. 52.

C. Equity Delights to Do Justice and Not by Halves.[3] The significance of this maxim lies in its last words. It means that it is the aim of equity to have all interested parties in court and to render a complete decree adjusting all rights and protecting the parties against future litigation.[4]

D. Equity Acts In Personam.[5] This maxim embodies the principle distinguishing the process and decrees of the court of chancery and originally limiting their sanctions. It was originally the pride of the chancellors and the terror of the law judges that chancery acted directly upon the person or, as the phrase went, upon his conscience. It dealt with property but indirectly, by compelling the parties to act with relation to it. As a modern author has pointed out, there is a special sense in which equity has always acted in rem, in that its decrees are specific, dealing through the parties with the particular subject-matter in controversy, and not frequently awarding a recovery out of the general assets of the parties.[6] Moreover the power of equity has been extended so as to permit it in some cases to act strictly in rem.[7] It is unsafe therefore to consider the maxim as excluding the power of equity to deal directly with the res; but it is nevertheless true that equity deals primarily with the person, and usually only through him with the res, and such is the meaning of the maxim.[8] While the influence of this principle affects the entire exercise of the chancery jurisdiction, its most important modern application is perhaps in permitting a court having jurisdiction of the person of defendant to adjudicate with reference to a subject-matter beyond the reach of its process, and by personal decree to require action concerning it.[9] A more special application is in sustaining the power of a court to order a foreclosure and sale of the entire mortgaged property, although a large portion thereof lies out of the court's territorial jurisdiction.[10]

E. Equity Regards Substance Rather Than Form.[11] By force of this

v. Durant, 9 Paige (N. Y.) 182; Balch v. Beach, 119 Wis. 77, 95 N. W. 132.

A duty imposed upon a court by statute, without other qualification, is to be exercised at law or in equity according to its nature or character. Gephart v. Starrett, 47 Md. 396.

A statute which does not designate where a right conferred by it is to be enforced is to be administered by a remedy at law. So held in Helme v. Queenan, 18 Ill. App. 103.

Where a statute prescribes an inadequate remedy for a right conferred by it, a court of equity cannot supply the defect. Janney v. Buell, 55 Ala. 408.

3. This maxim does not appear in Francis, in Pomeroy, nor in Story Eq. Jur., but is given in Story Eq. Pl. § 72.

4. Tallman v. Varick, 5 Barb. (N. Y.) 277; Knight v. Knight, 3 P. Wms. 331, 24 Eng. Reprint 1088; Mitford Ch. Pl. 144. The effect of the maxim on equity jurisdiction has been already discussed. See supra, II, A, 4, f; II, C. As a remedy at law is not adequate unless it is complete the maxim is properly a corollary of that preceding (see supra, III, B), and is sometimes so treated (see Bispham Eq. § 37).

5. This maxim is very familiar and often repeated in the cases, but it is not found in either Francis or Story, although the latter of course discusses the principle embodied. It is often found in the form: "Equity acts in personam, not in rem." For reasons stated in the text this form is likely to mislead.

principle equity goes behind the form of a transaction in order to give effect to the intention of the parties, either to aid an act abortive at law because formally defective, or to impose a liability as against an evasion by a formal concealment of its true character. By thus going behind the form to reach the substance there has been developed the jurisdiction to relieve against penalties and forfeitures,[12] and also the whole equitable doctrine relating to mortgages, treating them as intended as security for the debt, rather than as conveyances to become absolute on breach of condition.[13] Upon the same principle equity permitted an inquiry as to the existence of a consideration for instruments under seal and enforced parol discharges of sealed instruments.[14] It is also by this means that equity aids defective conveyances.[15] To the operation of the maxim has also been ascribed the specific performance of contracts[16] and the whole system of equitable estates and liens.[17] More immediate applications of the maxim are found in the disposition of equity to consider the whole of the transaction and give effect to each part thereof in the light of connected circumstances,[18] not only to sustain a just claim but to defeat an unlawful demand.[19] A more doubtful application has been made by disregarding an objection for misjoinder of plaintiffs, who sued in two distinct capacities to recover a legacy.[20]

F. Equity Regards as Done That Which Ought to Be Done. The broad meaning of this maxim is that where an obligation rests upon a person to perform an act equity will treat the person in whose favor the act should be performed as clothed with the same interest and entitled to the same rights as if the act were actually performed. It is closely connected with and probably derived from the principle of regarding intent and substance rather than form. Interpreted broadly it would account for the doctrine of trust, specific performance, relief against accident and mistakes, and many other equitable doctrines. Its most familiar application is in support of the doctrines of conversion and reconversion.[21] Another familiar application is to contracts for the sale of land, which the law regards, while executory, as purely personal, but which equity treats as creating an estate in the vendee, the vendor retaining the legal title as security for the purchase-money.[22] The principle also lends its force to the establishment of liens and charges which could not be sustained at law,[23] and to working out justice by fixing rights as of the time when the obligation first accrued, rather than according to circumstances subsequently arising.[24] The enforcement of conveyances defectively executed has also been based on this maxim,[25] and by virtue of it an act requiring for its validity an order of the court has been held valid where the order had not been made but might be had of course.[26] The maxim has been treated also as creating a presumption that parties to ancient deeds did what the deed contemplated.[27] The word "ought" in the maxim imports an equitable obligation, not one purely moral or something merely advantageous or desirable; equity will regard as done only such things as rest upon an obligation which equity would directly enforce.[28] The maxim operates in favor of such persons only as by being parties or privies have a right to demand performance,[29] and it will not be enforced to the injury of innocent third parties.[30] The purpose of the maxim is to secure to the parties that for which they have stipulated, and it will not be employed to confer upon them an advantage greater than they would have received had the obligation been performed.[31]

23. A contract was made for the sale of land, a portion of the purchase-price to be

G. Equity Imputes an Intention to Fulfil an Obligation. This maxim, not found in Francis or in some modern works, expresses a somewhat circuitous theory whereby certain equitable obligations are enforced. It means that when an obligation rests upon one to perform an act and he attains the means of performing it he will be presumed to intend to perform it through such means, and usually will not be permitted to show the contrary. Equity will then give effect to the presumed intent.[32] Resulting and constructive trusts have been worked out on secured by mortgage. The purchaser procured a conveyance to be made to his wife and she gave the mortgage. On foreclosure the defense was urged that by the conveyance to her the land became community property and was not liable for her contracts, and that the mortgage was therefore void. this theory.[33] As the doctrine is seldom invoked to enforce an actual intent, but usually to thwart a contrary intent to take an unconscionable advantage, its actual utility is slight. Its purpose could generally but not always be accomplished by the more direct method of treating that as done which ought to be done.

H. Equality Is Equity.[34] The meaning of this maxim is that in the absence of relations or conditions requiring a different result, equity will treat all members of a class as upon an equal footing, and will distribute benefits or impose charges either equally or in proportion to the several interests, and without preferences.[35] The principal applications of the doctrine are in matters of contribution,[36] settlement of insolvent estates,[37] abatement of legacies,[38] and in the preference shown by equity in favor of tenancies in common as against joint tenancies.[39]

I. Equity Follows the Law. The language of this maxim is so broad and its proper application so narrow that its utility is doubtful and its tendency misleading. It is true only in certain special senses. Where no countervailing equity requires different treatment a court of equity in dealing with legal estates and rights will follow the rules of law in respect thereto.[40] Equity often by analogy, where the conditions are similar, applies the rules governing legal estates and rights to equitable estates and rights of analogous character.[41] The force of the maxim has sometimes been restricted to these principles,[42] but it has also received a broader application. Equity follows the law in the sense that it is bound generally at least by positive restrictions and rules of policy. Thus if an instrument is void at law for want of power to execute it, or as forbidden by statute, equity will not enforce it.[43] Again while equity, where equitable principles

Another example of the maxim is Blount v. Robeson, 56 N. C. 73, in which case B, plaintiff's ancestor, gave defendant's intestate a power of attorney to sell certain lands and to retain part of the proceeds. Defendant's intestate bought the land on an execution against B's grantor. B then died and thereafter defendant's intestate sold the land. Plaintiff brought suit to compel defendant to account for the proceeds. Relief was given, the court holding that the purchase at execution sale should be regarded merely as the removal of an encumbrance, and not the source of an independent title.

The limitation stated in the text is as important as the rule itself. In many cases legal rules of property are not observed, because of the intervening equity. A forged deed is void in equity as well as at law. Whittington v. Summerall, 20 Ga. 345.

Other examples.— A vendor covenanted to have justified it, has created many rights unknown to the law and even contrary thereto, the maxim has frequently been given as a reason for refusing to create rights unrecognized at law when not justified by equitable considerations.[44] Upon the same principle equity will follow legal rules of evidence, and except by way of discovery will not take jurisdiction because plaintiff cannot establish his case by legal evidence.[45]

J. Between Equal Equities the Law Will Prevail.[46] Unless one who seeks the aid of equity can establish an equity superior to that of the holder of the legal title to the subject-matter, he fails to overcome the legal right, which consequently prevails against him.[47] This rule is most frequently enforced by supporting the legal title to land as against an equitable right no stronger than that of the legal owner.[48] So the holder of a junior equity by acquiring the legal title before he has notice of a prior equity obtains the superior right,[49] and it has been held that one with an equal equity may purchase the legal estate for the purpose of obtaining the advantage.[50] The same rules apply to other species buy in certain claims against the property. He could not do so because the vendee had wrongfully himself bought in one of them. The vendor recovered at law the whole purchase-money and the vendee applied to chancery for relief. Relief was refused on the ground that equity follows the law, but it was also held that the legal rule was consonant with equity. Marshall v. Craig, 1 Bibb (Ky.) 394, 4 Am. Dec. 647. K. Between Equal Equities the First in Order of Time Shall Prevail.[53] This is another instance of a maxim whose terms are broader than its application. L. Equity Aids the Vigilant, Not Those Who Slumber on Their Rights.[58] It is by force of this principle that equity refuses to enforce demands which the party has unreasonably delayed in asserting.[59] Such is frequently treated as the extent of the maxim, but the courts have given it a wider application, as by protecting one who by superior diligence has obtained a legal advantage,[60] or by denying relief to one whose danger was created by his own neglect.[61]

M. He Who Seeks Equity Must Do Equity[62] — 1. General Scope of Maxim. This is a general principle, applicable to all classes of cases whenever necessary to promote justice,[63] and requires that any person seeking the aid of equity shall have accorded, shall offer to accord, or will be compelled to accord to the other party all the equitable rights to which the other is entitled in respect to the subject-matter.[64] Relief inconsistent with the equities of the adverse party will be denied,[65] and where the granting of relief raises equitable rights in favor of defendant, the according of such rights will be imposed as a condition of granting the trust. Briscoe v. Ashby, 24 Gratt. (Va.) 454.

These cases more properly rest upon the maxim that between equal equities the law will prevail. See supra, III, J.

Limitation of rule.— The party seeking relief is not required to sacrifice his own rights. Thus one who has acquired title from a purchaser at an execution sale may set aside a prior void sale, and is not obliged to accept a redemption by payment of the amount of the judgment under which his grantor purchased. Worthington v. Miller, 134 Ala. 420, 32 So. 748. A trust deed provided for subdividing the property, and also releases of lots designated by the debtor upon payment of ascertained amounts. Immediately after the debt matured foreclosure was commenced and the debtor by cross bill sought to enforce the release of a portion of the property because of payments made. Although the whole debt was then due it was held that the stipulation for partial releases could be enforced without tender of the whole debt. Lane v. Allen, 162 Ill. 426, 44 N. E. 831 [reversing 60 Ill. App. 457].

65. Two persons running separate ferries became partners, and tenants in common of the landings. One dying, defendant purchased his interest from his administrator, but the surviving partner refused to accept him as a partner and sought to restrain him from running a separate ferry. Relief was denied, as the refusal to accept defendant as a partner revived the right to run independently. Spann v. Nance, 32 Ala. 527. Specific performance will be refused of a contract entered into by mistake because such relief would not consist with equity and good conscience (Mansfield v. Sherman, 81 Me. 365, 17 Atl. 300); and relief will not be given where it involves repudiation of a deed for a valuable consideration void only because not stamped (Kinney v. Consolidated Virginia Min. Co., 14 Fed. Cas. No. 7,827, 4 Sawy. 382).

the relief.[66] It is on this principle that one who has failed to perform his own obligations under a contract cannot compel the other to perform.[67] A tender of performance before commencing suit is not, however, necessary where defendant without any default of plaintiff has refused absolutely to perform.[68]

2. Offering to Do Equity in Bill.[69] In cases where the maxim applies the bill should contain an offer to do what the court shall deem equitable, and in some cases the bill is demurrable for want of such an offer. It has been said that the offer is necessary only where the right to be accorded could not be enforced in its absence; that is, where the consent of plaintiff is essential to the establishment of the right;[70] but it is certainly also necessary where the doing of the equity is essential to the constitution of plaintiff's right.[71] An offer is also required in a bill for specific performance, for relief against usury, and formerly in a bill for an accounting.[72]

3. Maxim Binds All Parties. The maxim binds, not plaintiffs alone, but any party who affirmatively seeks equitable relief.[73]

4. Not Restricted to Rights Independently Enforceable. Since the doing of equity is imposed as a condition of obtaining equitable relief, many things may be required which defendant could not compel if driven to an independent action.[74]

Obligations associated with benefits.— One seeking to avail himself of a portion of an agent's acts cannot avoid the obligations imposed by the same acts (German Nat. Bank v. Hasting First Nat. Bank, 59 Nebr. 7, 80 N. W. 48); and one claiming under a provision in a contract cannot repudiate obligations imposed on him by the same contract (New York, etc., R. Co. v. New York, 1 Hilt. (N. Y.) 562); and one claiming under a will must submit to its conditions (Rankin v. Rankin, 36 Ill. 293, 87 Am. Dec. 205).

Equitable set-off.— In a suit to abate the purchase-price of land because of misrepresentation as to quantity, a corresponding demand by defendant as to land taken in part payment will be set off. Swope v. Missouri Trust Co., 26 Tex. Civ. App. 133, 62 S. W. 947.

5. No Equity Acquired Through Fraud. The maxim that he who seeks equity must do equity will not be applied in favor of one guilty of actual fraud, by requiring restoration to him in such manner as to enable him to obtain any advantage or security in the perpetration of the fraud.[75]

6. Equity Must Arise Out of Same Transaction. The maxim only requires that equity shall be done with regard to the subject-matter of plaintiff's demand; it does not extend to distinct transactions,[76] but the whole transaction will be considered, not merely the particular phase on which plaintiff bases his right.[77]

debtedness to defendant exists without paying the debt, although an action for the latter is barred by the statute of limitations. De Walsh v. Braman, 100 Ill. 415, 43 N. E. 597; San Antonio, etc., R. Co. v. Gurley, 92 Tex. 229, 47 S. W. 513. See also Mortgages.

Bills to redeem.—It has even been held that while a mortgagee may enforce his mortgage only to the extent of the particular debt secured, the mortgagor when he seeks to redeem must pay not only that but other debts subsequently arising. C.) 1; St. John v. Holford, 1 Ch. Cas. 97, 22 Eng. Reprint 712. This doctrine is certainly antiquated. The statutory rate of interest being seven per cent but twelve per cent being permitted by contract, a plaintiff seeking to redeem will not be required to comply with an unenforceable oral agreement to pay twelve per cent. Staughton v. Simpson, 72 Minn. 536, 75 N. W. 744. And see, generally, Mortgages.

Other examples.— Relief will not be given against a mortgage on the ground that the note secured has been altered, except upon payment of the debt. Goodenow v. Curtis, 33 Mich. 505. 7. Principal Applications of Maxim. The principal applications of the maxim are in suits to rescind contracts or to avoid other transactions, where plaintiff is required to restore benefits received and place other parties in statu quo,[78] election,[79] marshaling,[80] in bills for relief against usury,[81] and before the married women's acts in enforcing the wife's equity to a settlement.[82] The adverse equity which must be satisfied is sometimes raised by estoppel.[83]

N. He Who Comes Into Equity Must Come With Clean Hands[84]—1. Meaning of Maxim. This maxim expresses rather a principle of inaction than one of action. It means that equity refuses to lend its aid in any manner to one seeking its active interposition, who has been guilty of unlawful or inequitable conduct in the matter with relation to which he seeks relief.[85]

2. Aid Not Given to Consummation of Inequitable Acts. The most direct application of the maxim is the uniform refusal of equity to assist one seeking its aid to enforce or to carry to fruition a contract or transaction in which he has been guilty of conduct wrongful toward his adversary, so as to obtain the benefit of a fraud perpetrated upon him.[86] Nor will equity assist one in obtaining the fruits of an act which is illegal[87] or even enable him to gain from an act which is Cognate maxim distinguished.— This maxim is entirely distinct from and more comprehensive in its results than that requiring one who seeks equity to do equity. The latter presumes the actor's right to relief, and merely requires as a condition of obtaining it that he accord corresponding rights to his adversary. It does not presume that he has already committed iniquity. If he has the present maxim applies and forbids relief on any terms. Kinner v. Lake Shore, etc., R. Co., 69 Ohio St. 339, 69 N. E. 614.

Fraudulent judgment.— And a creditor who has procured judgment to be taken for an amount greatly in excess of what was due was denied relief by creditor's bill founded on such judgment against a fraudulent conveyance of the debtor's property. Sargent v. Salmond, 27 Me. 539.

A breach of trust which the vendee of land induces the vendor's agent to commit deprives the former of remedy on account of the agent's misrepresentations, either by way of rescission (Pearce v. Ware, 94 Mich. 321, 53 N. W. 1106), or recovery of damages (Pineville Land, etc., Co. v. Hollingsworth, 53 S. W. 279, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 899).

Mutilation of instrument.—One who erased from bank-bills official stamps, characterizing them as spurious, was for that reason denied a standing in court to establish that the bills were genuine. Longinett v. Shelton, (Tenn. Ch. App. 1898) 52 S. W. 1078. One who took a usurious note to indemnify him as surety for the maker was, however, in an early case, permitted to recover what he was compelled to pay as surety, although he had altered the note by reducing the interest and could therefore not recover on it. Little v. Fowler, 1 Root (Conn.) 94.

Transaction fraudulent in part.— Where a part of a demand accrued through fraud and a part not, and the valid part could not well be separated from the invalid all relief was denied. Kitchen v. Rayburn, 19 Wall. (U. S.) 254, 22 L. ed. 64. But see Lewis v. Robards, 3 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 406.

87. As by restraining a judgment in trespass for taking goods, which were taken tortiously to apply on rent (Dean v. Elyton Land Co., 113 Ala. 276, 21 So. 213), or to restrain ejectment, where plaintiff in equity obtained possession by force (David v. Levy, 119 Fed. 799).

Plaintiff maintaining a public nuisance cannot have the aid of equity to restrain defendant from abating it, although defendant has no authority to abate it. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Crothersville, 159 Ind. 330, 64 N. E. 914. The proprietor of a gambling-house cannot have an injunction to prevent the unconscionable.[88] One may be barred from relief by misconduct with reference to the suit itself.[89]

3. Relief Not Given Against Consequences of Misconduct. The principle of the maxim is that a court of equity will leave the guilty party seeking its aid where it finds him. Not only does it refuse, as has been seen, to carry to fruition a fraudulent, illegal, or otherwise unconscionable transaction, but where such transaction has been in whole or in part carried out it refuses to undo it, on the application of a guilty participant, and refuses to relieve him from legal liabilities or other consequences of his misconduct.[90]

4. Both Parties Participants in Fraud Against Third Persons. The rule not being for the benefit of defendant it is unnecessary for its operation that plaintiff's misconduct should be directed against him. Relief is refused where a stranger is the sufferer from the misconduct, and although defendant is himself a guilty participant therein and may indirectly profit by the refusal of the court to act. Thus where property has been transferred in fraud of creditors the court will not at the suit of the grantor or his privies enforce a secret trust by compelling the fraudulent grantee to reconvey[91] nor by requiring such grantee to

Application of rule.— An adverse claimant of land who purchases a lease or procures a tenant to attorn to him gains no rights in equity by the possession so obtained. Stetson v. Cook, 39 Mich. 750; Latham v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 45 Fed. 721. See also Sandeford v. Lewis, 68 Ga. 482. A defendant in an attachment suit who procured a dissolution because plaintiff's bond was not signed by the principal, successfully resisting plaintiff's efforts to amend it, was held to have no standing thereafter to have it reformed in equity. Booker v. Smith, 38 S. C. 228, 16 S. E. 774. On this principle a court of equity will not lend its aid to set aside a transaction which gives to defendant the means legally to effect an adjustment between the parties which is in its nature equitable, but which could not otherwise be made, as to secure contribution among tort-feasors. Maxwell v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 1 Tenn. Ch. 8.

89. Spoliation, fabrication, or suppression. —A plaintiff was denied relief because, for the purpose of making out his case, he had changed the dates of letters offered in evidence. Harton v. McKee, 73 Fed. 556. But a plaintiff who made out his case by other evidence was given relief, although he introduced forged receipts in evidence. Goodwin v. Hunt, 3 Yerg. (Tenn.) 124. And one seeking an equitable set-off was not denied all relief because he failed to show in his bill that he held partial security. Malone v. Carroll, 33 Ala. 191.

account.[92] The same rule applies in the case of other devices to defraud creditors.[93] Not only is the debtor denied relief, but also the fraudulent grantee, when he comes into equity to assert his claim.[94] In the same manner, under a great variety of circumstances, equity has refused to aid either party, where both are participants in a transaction in fraud of a third person, either to carry out their arrangement, to set it aside, or to relieve in any way with reference to it.[95]

6. COURT APPLIES MAXIM OF ITS OWN MOTION. The unconscionable character of a transaction between the parties need not be pleaded by defendant. Whenever it is disclosed the court will of its own motion apply the maxim.[99]

7. LIMITATIONS AND EXCEPTIONS. Extensive as is the application of the principle expressed in the maxim, it has certain limitations. Of these the most important is that a party is not barred from relief because of misconduct not connected with the matter in controversy.[1] It has been held that the misconduct must be so connected with the subject-matter as to affect the equitable relations between the parties,[2] but such language is misleading if not erroneous. Where the attempt is to enforce or otherwise to compel recognition of a contract or transaction the iniquity of which rests upon both parties, as well as where defendant is the victim of plaintiff's iniquity, it may well be said that the equitable relations of the parties are affected by such iniquity. But we have already seen that relief has been refused in many cases where defendant was not concerned either as victim or participant in plaintiff's misconduct, but where the granting of relief would permit plaintiff, sometimes very indirectly, to gain an advantage through a wrong perpetrated against a third person or against the public. The maxim itself affects the equitable relations between the parties wherever plaintiff's misconduct is in any way involved in the subject-matter of litigation. The supposed necessity of finding that plaintiff's misconduct has operated upon the relations of the parties has led to some decisions which it is difficult to reconcile with many already cited applying the maxim.[3] Notwithstanding this supposed necessity, relief has often been denied because plaintiff, seeking relief against the misconduct of another, has been guilty himself of similar but disconnected acts.[4] A party may have relief as tained for a prize. Smith v. Chesapeake, etc., Canal Co., 22 Fed. Cas. No. 13,024, 5 Cranch C. C. 563 [affirmed in 14 Pet. 45, 10 L. ed. 347]. to a transaction in itself untainted, although his title to the subject-matter may have originally grown out of his wrongful acts not connected with the present controversy.[5] So one does not always forfeit a right fairly acquired by subsequent misconduct connected therewith.[6] The maxim being one founded on public policy, public policy may require its relaxation.[7] Where parties to a fraudulent transaction are not in pari delicto relief is under some circumstances given to him who is less at fault, as against the more guilty party.[8] A party entirely innocent is of course not barred from relief because of the misconduct of others, although his rights may be associated with theirs.[9] Restitution has been compelled of property received under an illegal contract not involving moral turpitude,[10] and in some cases where plaintiff's misconduct has been directed against defendant relief has been given by imposing a condition of such a character as to eliminate the intended wrong.[11] Finally it has been said that the maxim refers only to wilful misconduct,[12] but this can mean no more than free and deliberate action with knowledge of the facts; it does not require consciousness of the illegal or immoral nature of the act.

IV. LACHES AND STALE DEMANDS.

A. General Principles — 1. Negligence Bars Relief in Equity. Courts of equity, while sometimes bound by and at other times following the analogy of statutes of limitation,[13] also act independently of such statutes, refusing relief to parties who have slept upon their rights or have been negligent in asserting them.[14] Negligence in the prosecution of the suit after its commencement may bar relief.[15] A party himself diligent may be precluded from relief by the negligence of others, as a grantee by the negligence of his grantor,[16] a personal representative by that of the decedent,[17] or joint tenants by that of one of their number.[18]

2. Exceptions to Operation of Rule — a. Negligence Not Imputed to Government. An exemption similar to that which government enjoys from the operation of the statute of limitations[19] exists in equity against the defense of laches,[20] and the laches of officers or agents will not be imputed to the government.[21] The rule has been applied even in favor of subordinate political subdivisions or officers acting with reference to governmental matters.[22]

b. Other Cases Presenting Exceptional Features. It is sometimes said that lapse of time will not bar the enforcement of a direct or express trust.[23] This statement is too broad, and trusts form no true exception to the rule. As long as the trust is acknowledged the right continues, and negligence cannot be imputed under such circumstances. But from the time of the repudiation of the trust the ordinary rules prevail.[24] Suits for relief against fraud also occupy a peculiar position. It has been said that in such cases lapse of time ought not to bar relief,[25] but the modern doctrine is that negligence, and even lapse of time alone, may bar relief from fraud, the question being as to the time from which the delay should be computed.[26] But when fraud is clearly proved the court will look with much more than usual indulgence on any disability under which plaintiff may labor as excusing his delay in asserting his rights.[27]

3. Terms Defined. The defenses presented arising out of negligence in the assertion of a right are generally discussed under the terms, "laches" or "stale demands." Laches in a general sense is the neglect to do what in law should have been done for an unreasonable and unexplained length of time under circumstances permitting diligence.[28] More specifically it is inexcusable delay in asserting a right.[29] Strictly speaking laches implies something more than mere lapse of time; it requires some actual or presumable change of circumstances rendering it inequitable to grant relief.[30] A stale demand or claim on the other hand is merely one which has for a very long time remained unasserted.[31]

B. What Constitutes Laches — 1. Depends on Circumstances of Each Case. No arbitrary rule exists for determining when a demand becomes stale[32] or what delay will be excused,[33] and the question of laches is to be decided upon the particular circumstances of each case.[34] No greater certainty of treatment is therefore practicable than to indicate the elements generally considered.

2. Lapse of Time — a. Mere Delay. While some delay in the assertion of a right is always an essential element of laches, unreasonable delay alone, independently of any statute of limitations, will often operate as a bar to relief.[35] It is held in some jurisdictions, however, that mere lapse of time unaffected by other circumstances will not bar an established equity.[36] Where a statute of limitations is applicable, it is quite generally held that lapse of time alone, short of the period of limitations, will not operate as a bar,[37] and the same rule obtains, but with less force, in the absence of direct statute, where a corresponding legal remedy exists, the analogy of the statute relating to which may be followed.[38]

The distinction stated in the text is by no means uniformly observed in the use of the terms. "Laches" is frequently used in cases where nothing appears except delay, and even where the court is applying a bar provided by the statute of limitations. It would be of doubtful utility to attempt closely to preserve in discussion a distinction in terminology which the courts have not found necessary to preserve in practice. Staleness of demand is therefore considered as an element sometimes alone sufficient to constitute laches (see infra, IV, B, 2, a), and also separately with reference to the effect of statutes of limitations (see infra, IV, E).

b. Delay as Affected by Nature of Proceeding — (i) INTRODUCTORY STATEMENT. While the courts have thus discussed the effect of delay alone, unattended by other circumstances,[39] it is quite evident that there can be few if any cases where there has been considerable delay, which present absolutely no other circumstances that might affect the question. The general nature of the proceeding is in itself a circumstance to be considered, and there are numerous cases denying relief, or discussing the propriety of according it, where lapse of time and the general nature of the proceedings are treated as the controlling elements.[40]

(II) Trusts. Unreasonable delay will bar a proceeding to enforce an implied trust,[41] but mere lapse of time will not bar a subsisting, express trust.[42]

(III) Controversies as to Land Titles. While it is said that lapse of time, uninfluenced by a statute of limitations, will not bar the divestiture of a legal title in favor of the equitable owner,[43] long adverse possession operates as a bar to the assertion of title in equity as well as at law.[44] Generally, where the issue is

40. In such cases there may be no special circumstances, such as loss of evidence, intervening rights of third persons, etc., rendering it inequitable to grant relief, and the refusal of relief may therefore be said to depend upon lapse of time alone.

The legal period and characteristics of possession are not always essential to the bar. Where one brought suit and dismissed it by agreement he could not after ten years attack the title of those in possession. Hermanns v. Fanning, 151 Mass. 1, 23 N. E. 493.

Twenty-three years' possession was held to bar relief, although there may have been occasional interruptions. League v. Rogan, 59 Tex. 427.

The following periods of delay have been held insufficient to prevent relief: Four years after complainant reached her majority (Stansbury v. Inglehart, 20 D. C. 134), six years where the period of limitation was ten (Davis v. Williams, 121 Ala. 542, 25 So. 704), and fourteen years as against cotenants (McClaskey v. Barr, 47 Fed. 154).

A widow holding under right of quarantine does not hold adversely to a purchaser at administrator's sale, who is therefore not barred, although he permits her to remain in possession twenty years without seeking an assignment of her dower. Sherwood v. Baker, 105 Mo. 472, 16 S. W. 938, 24 Am. St. Rep. 399.

One in possession without title cannot set up the defense of stale demand. Baker v. McFarland, 77 Tex. 294, 13 S. W. 1042.

A bill to redeem from forfeiture cannot be maintained by a lessee for ninety years, forty-as to the legal title, the statute of limitations controls, and the question of laches cannot arise.[45]

(iv) Mortgages. While the subject is now generally regulated by statute, independently thereof a court of equity will refuse to enforce a mortgage or trust deed which has long lain dormant.[46] It has been held that in the absence of adverse possession lapse of time does not bar a bill to redeem.[47]

(v) Accounting. Bills for an accounting have been dismissed because not presented within a reasonable time,[48] and where the attempt is by such a bill to dispute an account stated, or presented and held without objection, greater promptness must be exercised than in ordinary bills for an accounting.[49]

(vi) Legacies, Distributive Shares, Etc. While considerable indulgence

Twelve years' delay is not a bar. Thompson v. Dumas, 85 Fed. 517, 29 C. C. A. 312. Complainant four years after lending money secured by deed of trust learned of the existence of a cloud on the debtor's title, five years thereafter she acquired the legal title of the debtor, and one year after that sued to remove the cloud. The demand was held not to be stale. Coryell v. Klehm, 157 Ill. 462, 41 N. E. 864.

46. Rider v. White, 3 Mackey (D. C.) 305 (nineteen years, six months); Pitzer v. Burns, 7 W. Va. 63 (holding that twenty years is the period in the absence of statute).

Various periods.— Ten years' delay is not a bar (Tompkins v. Merriman, 6 Kulp (Pa.) 543), nor is twelve years (Kinna v. Smith, 3 N. J. Eq. 14). Mere delay for four years after learning of the fraudulent release of a trust deed does not bar the foreclosure thereof. Stiger v. Bent, 111 Ill. 328. Bonds secured by trust deed became due in 1845. Partial payment was made by the obligor's administrator in 1858. In 1877 the balance due was adjudged against the administrator. In 1853 the land had been sold to pay decedent's debts. A suit brought in 1883 to enforce the trust deed against purchasers at such sale was held to be within time. Bell v. Wood, 94 Va. 677, 27 S. Bill for accounting against trustee is not stale when brought a few months after the repudiation of the trust. Zebley v. Farmers' L. & T. Co., 139 N. Y. 461, 34 N. E. 1067.

Rents.— Eight years' delay after repudiation of the claim was held to bar a claim for rents arising under defendant's agreement to pay the debts of another. Bissell v. Lloyd, 100 Ill. 214. A widow who never had her dower assigned was barred, thirty-two years after her husband's death and two years after she has assigned her interest in the land, from an accounting of her proportion of the rents. Kiddall v. Trimble, 8 Gill (Md.) 207. Under somewhat similar circumstances after twenty-one years a widow's administrator was barred from a similar accounting. Steiger v. Hillen, 5 Gill & J. (Md.) 121. Fourteen years was held to bar the right of an heir to an accounting of rents received by the widow. Kyle v. Wills, 166 Ill. 501, 46 N. E. 1121. A lessee of oil land was permitted to maintain a bill for an accounting five years after defendant took, with notice of plaintiff's rights, a subsequent lease of the land. Stone v. Marshall Oil Co., 188 Pa. St. 614, 41 Atl. 748, 1119.

Receiver's fees.— Ten years' delay by a receiver in petitioning to have compensation allowed, after presenting his bill therefor, was held fatal. In re Whittemore, 157 Mass. 46, 35 N. Petition to review an executor's account is too late, twelve years after the account was filed and eleven years after confirmation. Ellison's Estate, 2 Pa. Dist. 521, 13 Pa. Co. Ct. 410. And see Lupton v. Jauney, 15 Fed. Cas. No. 8,607, 5 Cranch C. C. 474.

Reformation for mistake in settlement of accounts will not be decreed twelve years after the settlement. Clute v. Frasier, 58 Iowa 268, 12 N. W. 327.

is shown in favor of suits to enforce the payment of legacies and distributive shares of a decedent's estate,[50] great lapse of time has nevertheless been held to bar such suits.[51] A suit by a devisee whose lands have been sold to pay debts, and who seeks indemnity out of other property which should have been first resorted to, has been held barred by a delay of thirty years,[52] but not thirteen years;[53] and heirs are precluded, twenty years after the sale of their land under probate decree, from maintaining a suit to charge such lands with a lien for the unpaid purchase-money.[54]

(VII) RESCISSION. Delay for a comparatively short period is held sufficient to prevent the rescission of sales and conveyances of land,[55] but relief has been granted after several years' delay.[56] A delay of eight years has been held fatal to an attempt to set aside the surrender of a mortgage,[57] and one year and a half to an effort to set aside a trust deed for undue influence.[58]

(VIII) ATTACKING JUDICIAL SALES AND TAX-SALES. Delay alone, but usually where it is very considerable, is held to bar a suit to set aside a sale under foreclosure,[59] and attacks on administrators' sales for either irregularities or fraud

50. Amos v. Campbell, 9 Fla. 187 (where the delay was fifteen years); Lindsay v. Lindsay, 1 Desauss. (S. C.) 150 (forty years); Aylett v. King, 11 Leigh (Va.) 486 (delay of eleven years after plaintiff reached his majority and until after the death of the executor and the executor's executor).

Validity of assignment of his share may be challenged by a distributee at the final settlement of the administrator and before payment to the assignee. State v. Jones, 53 Mo. App. 207.

Four years' delay was held to bar an attack for irregularity in a sale under a power in the mortgage. McHany v. Schenk, 88 Ill. 357. Eleven years was held to preclude an attack on the ground that the land was sold en masse (Wood v. Young, 38 Iowa 102), but in the same state six years bars the right to set aside an execution sale on the same ground (Cunningham v. Felker, 26 Iowa 117). See, generally, JUDICIAL SALES.

Fifteen years.— Holders of bills, issued against a bridge but not constituting a specific lien, cannot impeach the sale of the bridge for fraud after fifteen years. Kennedy v. Georgia Bank, 8 How. But eight years' delay in a somewhat similar case was held no bar. Ship-

(XII) MISTAKE. Where there has been no change in circumstances bills will lie to reform instruments because of mistake after very considerable lapse of time.[68] But relief has been denied in some such cases on the ground of staleness,[69] and the question has been raised but unsuccessfully where the delay was very slight.[70]

(XIII) OTHER SUITS. The effect of lapse of time, independent of the statute or circumstances of estoppel, has been discussed with varying results in cases of various characters[71] permitting no trustworthy generalization.[72]

3. ASSENT OR ACQUIESCENCE. The borderland between laches proper and mere staleness of demand[73] is found in those cases where to mere lapse of time is added an element of assent to or acquiescence in the adverse claim. Starting with the doctrine that one who has affirmatively by words or conduct indicated his assent to the claims of another is guilty of laches if he thereafter for a long time makes no assertion of his own conflicting claim,[74] the courts apply the same rule where there has been acquiescence alone, and presume assent from lapse of time and failure to assert the right.[75] Particularly is this so where plaintiff attempts to assert an interest in land after long acquiescing in defendant's possession under claim of right,[76] or where he attempts to enforce a covenant or condition after considerable acquiescence in continuing breaches.[77] The doctrine of acquiescence also receives frequent application in suits by stock-holders attacking the acts of corporate officers, and in cases of a similar character,[78] and is enforced with good reason in attempts to impeach settlements and agreements in the nature of compromises.[79] But acquiescence of plaintiff in a conflicting claim cannot be inferred by the court where no circumstances appear which call upon plaintiff for assertion of his rights.[80]

4. Abandonment. As a right may be abandoned, such loss of the right itself of course defeats an effort to enforce it.[81] This principle has been incorporated into the doctrine of laches by treating a failure for a great length of time to assert a right as evidence of its abandonment.[82] Indeed it has been said that lapse of time will prevent the enforcement of an acknowledged right only because of a presumption of abandonment.[83]

5. Adverse Presumptions From Delay. Long delay in asserting a demand may defeat the remedy by raising a presumption of payment or satisfaction.[84] Delay is always a suspicious circumstance and if prolonged may create a presumption against the validity of a right which might otherwise be deemed established.[85]

These adverse presumptions are sometimes treated as conclusive,[86] and sometimes as rebuttable.[87]

6. Speculative Property and Speculative Conduct. The speculative character of the property involved is an important element in considering the effect of delay in asserting a right thereto, and more than ordinary promptness must be displayed to avoid the charge of laches in such case.[88] This is but one phase of a broader principle, that one may not withhold his claim, awaiting the outcome of an enterprise, and then, after a decided turn has taken place, assert or renounce his interest in accordance with the result.[89] Accordingly a marked appreciation or depreciation, according to circumstances, in the value of property involved, when the right might have been asserted before such change, will prevent the granting of relief.[90]

Where rule inapplicable.— But where one takes land in trust for himself and another, the land being purchased in order to obtain the benefit of an anticipated rise in value, a delay of eighteen years in seeking a conveyance of plaintiff's interest is not laches. Ripley v. Seligman, 88 Mich. 177, 50 N. W. 143.

7. Delay Working Prejudice to Defendant — a. Change in Circumstances Generally. A plaintiff who sleeps on his rights until the progress of events and change of circumstances have rendered it impossible to grant relief with equal justice to defendant is guilty of laches.[91] Indeed in accordance with the doctrine sometimes asserted that mere lapse of time unaffected by other circumstances will not bar relief,[92] it is sometimes held that delay in asserting a demand will not prevent relief unless there has been prejudice to defendant by reason thereof.[93] Prejudice to defendant may prevent relief, whether the change in circumstances is due to the voluntary act of defendant,[94] or is the result of the delay itself.[95]

b. Expenditures and Improvements. The most frequent case of laches consisting of delay working prejudice to defendant through change in circumstances is where plaintiff has slept on his rights and permitted defendant to make valuable improvements on property in controversy, or to make large expenditures in reliance on his title thereto. This is usually sufficient to bar relief;[96] but the operation of this rule is largely a question of degree and circumstance.[97] The making of improvements by plaintiff himself will not estop plaintiff from seeking reformation of a mistake in his deed on the theory that he thereby acquiesced in the deed as it stood, at least in the absence of proof as to knowledge of the mistake.[98]

8. Delay Working Prejudice to Third Persons. Equity is equally careful to avoid injustice to third persons as to parties, and therefore will deny for laches the claim of one who has slept on his rights until third persons have acquired rights which would be affected by granting him relief.[99] for its support no element of estoppel, but is founded on public policy,[2] the fact that the delay has tended to defeat defendant's power to prove his right is an additional reason for its application.[3] The doctrine operates as well against attempts, after the obscuration of evidence, to consummate a transaction long allowed to remain incomplete,[4] as in creating a presumption in favor of the validity of a completed transaction, when an effort is made to set it aside.[5] The loss or obscuration of evidence will be presumed from a considerable lapse of time.[6]

b. Death of Witnesses and Participants. A specific application of the general rule just stated is in the refusal of the courts to afford relief to one who has lain idly by until the important witnesses to the transactions involved have died.[7] Of course the result is the same where the testimony so lost is that of participants in the transaction, who would be parties to the suit had they lived;[8] but where such parties die there are usually difficulties presented in procuring evidence and conducting the case, other than those arising from the loss of their own testimony, and relief is denied for that reason.[9] Sometimes the rule is stated with less posi-

tiveness that equity looks with disfavor on such suits,[10] or that such a demand must be established with more than reasonable certainty.[11]

10. PURCHASERS — a. Generally. A change in circumstances forming an important element for consideration is the accrual of rights in others pending plaintiff's delay in asserting his own, and the most frequent instance of such new rights is that acquired by a purchaser of the property in controversy, who will be protected as against the title or right of one who unreasonably neglected to assert it until after the purchase.[12] Accordingly the protection which equity affords to bona fide purchasers of land without notice of an adverse claim[13] is, where plaintiff is chargeable with unreasonable delay, often put upon the ground of laches.[14]

One who delays until the property has passed to subsequent innocent purchasers will not be heard to attack for irregularities a sale under a deed of trust,[15] or under foreclosure of mortgage.[16] Nor may redemption be had from a defective sale under such circumstances.[17] A similar protection is accorded against prior claims, which have lain dormant, to one who claims under a subsequent patent,[18] and even to an occupant under color of a tax title.[19] The rule applies not only in favor of purchasers of land but to purchasers of other interests, as to an assignee of a mortgage,[20] of municipal bonds,[21] or of corporate stock.[22]

b. Purchasers at Judicial, Execution, or Tax-Sales. Notwithstanding the rule of caveat emptor applied at law to judicial sales,[23] in equity a purchaser at such a sale is protected on the ground of laches against one who sleeps on his right before attacking such sale either for irregularities[24] or as being void.[25] The same is true with regard to sales on execution,[26] and likewise to sales by administrators.[27]

C. Excuses For Delay — 1. Introductory Statement. As the whole doctrine of laches and staleness of demand rests upon the neglect of a reasonable opportunity to assert the demand,[29] the lapse of time will not bar relief where circumstances exist excusing the delay and rendering it inequitable to interpose the bar.[30] While many excuses are presented with sufficient frequency to permit of categorical treatment,[31] no such analysis can be exclusive, and exceptional grounds may be successfully presented, such as the interruption of judicial proceedings by civil war.[32] As public policy may afford a reason for refusing relief after long delay,[33] a counter public policy may operate to excuse delay, as where the suit is brought to protect a public right.[34]

2. Right to Sue Imperfect. A party is not chargeable with any delay which may occur before his right to sue becomes complete,[35] nor can laches be predicated upon delay during a period when no one was authorized to sue,[36] or during a period allowed by law for defendant voluntarily to perform the duty.[37]

3. Personal Disabilities — a. Generally. Equity will generally excuse a delay because of a personal disability of plaintiff which at law would prevent the bar of the statute of limitations,[38] and it will also consider disabilities as tending to excuse delay under circumstances which would not operate to prevent the bar of the statute.[39] Somewhat contrary, however, to the general principles governing the law of laches there are cases holding that when time begins to run it is not interrupted by a disability subsequently arising, as by the devolution of the estate to an infant or feme covert,[40] and that a voluntary disability, as coverture, will not be regarded although incurred during infancy.[41]

b. Infancy. Laches cannot be imputed to an infant,[42] and therefore a demand will not be rejected if asserted within a reasonable time after plaintiff attains his majority,[43] at least when there has been no change of circumstances preventing the doing of justice.[44] Unreasonable delay after attaining majority will be fatal.[45] Infancy, when a right accrued, may excuse ignorance of such right and consequently a failure to assert it promptly after attaining majority.[46]

c. Insanity. Laches cannot be imputed to one of unsound mind,[47] and mental affliction not wholly incapacitating plaintiff may excuse delay where defendant is not prejudiced.[48] A lunatic, being under the protection of the court, a suit on his behalf is in time if brought promptly after the appointment of a committee,[49] and is not barred by the laches of a next friend or others not legally chargeable with the protection of his rights.[50] One must proceed, however, with reasonable promptness after recovering his reason, provided he then learns the facts,[51] or has the means of ascertaining them.[52]

d. Coverture. Where coverture is a disability it excuses delay,[53] but not where statutes have removed the disability to sue.[54]

e. Poverty. The poverty of plaintiff is quite uniformly held to be no excuse for failing with reasonable promptness to assert his rights.[55]

f. Absence. Absence or non-residence, presenting no legal obstacle to a suit, is alone insufficient to excuse delay;[56] but it may excuse ignorance of the right and so indirectly operate to the same end;[57] and it may in itself account for slight delay which might be fatal under the circumstances to the claim of one present and in a situation to act immediately.[58]

4. Ignorance of Rights — a. Generally. Laches cannot be imputed to one who has been justifiably ignorant of the facts creating his right, and who therefore has failed to assert it.[59] Ignorance of the fact that defendants are invading or disputing plaintiff's rights is the same in effect as ignorance of the right itself.[60] Where the facts are known, ignorance of the law will not in general be a sufficient answer to the charge of laches.[61]

Ct. 418, 36 L. ed. 134. On the other hand it was held that a delay of five years in a suit to impeach a mortgage was sufficiently explained by the fact that plaintiff did not have earlier the benefit of legal advice. Pairo v. Vickery, 37 Md. 467. And one who had not brought suit because of certain state decisions adverse to his right was and familiar application in suits for relief on the ground of fraud, where time begins to run not from the perpetration but from the discovery of the fraud,[62] provided the discovery is made with reasonable diligence.[63] The remedy will be given in such cases, although the statutory period of limitations has expired.[64] Action must, however, be taken with reasonable promptness after the discovery.[65]

c. Concealment of Cause of Action. Whether the cause of action is itself based on fraud or not, if after it arises plaintiff is misled or lulled into security by the misrepresentations or other fraudulent conduct of defendant, he is not chargeable with laches for failure to proceed during such period.[66] Silence on the part of one under a duty to disclose the fact has the same effect as affirmative deception.[67]

e. Ignorance Must Not Be Due to Negligence — (i) Generally. Wherever ignorance of fact is urged as an excuse for delay the general doctrines on the subject of knowledge, actual and constructive, may be said to apply.[70] One must have been diligent and have made such inquiry and investigation as the circumstances reasonably permitted or suggested.[71] Means of knowledge are equivalent to knowledge,[72] and knowledge of facts sufficient to suggest inquiries which if made would lead to knowledge of the facts in question is sufficient to charge one with notice of the latter facts.[73] The known facts must, however, point with some directness toward the unknown,[74] although a mere suspicion of the crucial facts may raise a duty to inquire.[75]

(11) Constructive Notice. Equity as well as law charges a party with notice of public statutes,[76] with such knowledge as might be gained by an inspection of the records of land title, where such inspection is required by law or suggested by ordinary prudence,[77] and with knowledge of facts disclosed by the records of judicial proceedings to which he was party,[78] but not of proceedings to which he was not a party and which did not affect him.[79]

f. Imputed Knowledge. As a party is generally charged with the laches of his privies or agents,[80] it follows that knowledge of an ancestor will be imputed to an heir,[81] that of a plaintiff to his co-plaintiff,[82] and that of an attorney to his client.[83] The knowledge of others who might have sued but did not may raise the presumption of invalidity against plaintiff in spite of his own ignorance of the transaction.[84]

Where an attorney was careless in examining a docket and therefore did not find a pending case against his client, his negligence was imputed to the client, who was not permitted to avail himself of the excuse of his ignorance of the proceedings against him. Wallace v. Richmond, 26 Gratt. (Va.) 67. facts must allege such ignorance in his bill,[85] and it is generally held that he must disclose with particularity every element creating the excuse — that the facts could not have been discovered by the exercise of due diligence,[86] and just when [87] and how [88] the discovery was made. Often, however, the burden of proving knowledge is cast on defendant.[89]

5. Loss of Papers, Etc. Where records or papers essential to the prosecution of the suit have been lost or destroyed without the fault of the party requiring them, the delay in instituting or prosecuting the suit occasioned by such loss is thereby excused.[90] But a failure merely through lack of effort to collect the necessary evidence is no excuse for delay.[91]

6. Impossibility of Enforcing Decree. In some cases delay has been excused during a period when the situation of the parties was such that a decree if rendered could not have been enforced, as where defendant was insolvent,[92] where a lien on land was inferior to other claims absorbing its value,[93] and in a bill for specific performance where the vendor had been unable to convey.[94] But withholding the assertion of a right for the purpose of inducing one's adversary to make payments he might be willing to make only in reliance on plaintiff's acquiescence is rather a ground for refusing relief than for excusing delay.[95]

7. Efforts to Settle Without Suit. Delay will be excused when occasioned by efforts to obtain a settlement or satisfaction without litigation,[96] but such negotiations afford no excuse where the adverse party has in no way acknowledged the right or encouraged any hope of a settlement.[97] Repeated assertion of a right and of demands for redress may, however, rebut a presumption of acquiescence in the act complained of, and indeed establish the contrary fact — that plaintiff has constantly clamored against it.[98]

8. Acknowledgment of Plaintiff's Right. The continued acknowledgment by defendant of plaintiff's right is generally sufficient to account for delay by plaintiff in instituting suit to enforce it.[99] Delay will thus be excused when occasioned not only by defendant's promises to do equity [1] or by actual payments,[2] but also by defendant's silence or other conduct indicating acquiescence in plaintiff's right.[3]

9. Plaintiff in Undisturbed Possession. On the same principle which controls where there is an acknowledgment of plaintiff's right,[4] and perhaps as a corollary of that rule, one in possession of land may rest in security until his title or possession is attacked, and a failure to appeal to equity during that period will not prejudice his right either to quiet his title,[5] or to assert an equity against the holder of the legal title.[6] Thus lapse of time alone, while plaintiff is in undisputed possession, will not preclude him from suing to compel a conveyance,[7] or to reform a deed for mistake,[8] provided at least that there was no unreasonable delay after the discovery of the mistake.[9] The rule applies not only in favor of those occupying land, but also in favor of one enjoying the undisturbed privileges of an easement,[10] or even of personal property.[11] The principle involved is recognized even where its application is indirect.[12]

10. Reliance on a Legal Right. One who has a good legal title may rely on it and is not chargeable with laches for so doing when he afterward brings a suit in equity to remove an adverse claim,[13] or sets up his title in defense.[14] This rule has in a few cases been extended in favor of a plaintiff who through mistake of law erroneously supposed his legal right to be perfect.[15]

11. Pendency of Other Proceedings. Delay pending other proceedings has frequently been held excusable, not only where the termination of such proceedings was necessary for the ascertainment of facts involved in the later suit,[16] but also where the former suit had a similar object but proved unavailing.[17] It has been held that there is no laches arising from delay while plaintiff is endeavoring to enforce his right at law,[18] but this rule is not uniform.[19] Delay has also been excused where plaintiff had lost some time by proceeding at law against another party whom he supposed to be primarily liable,[20] and where he had waited a reasonable time for decision of the question involved in a case pending between other parties.[21] Time which elapses after the filing of an original bill is not to be considered in testing an amended bill for laches, where the latter presents substantially the same demand,[22] and the time during which an appeal is pending should

12. Confidential Relationship of Parties. Considerable indulgence is shown to a plaintiff who has been lacking in vigilance because of intimate relations with his adversary and confidence reposed in him.[24] Therefore the fact that the parties are near relatives is entitled to great weight in determining the question of laches.[25]

13. Continuing Duties. Where a duty is continuing in its character time runs, not from the creation of the duty, but from its breach,[26] and continuing breaches create constantly fresh rights of suit,[27] at least where plaintiff's conduct has been such as to forbid an inference of acquiescence.[28]

D. How Defense Is Presented, and Waiver of Objection. A bill disclosing on its face the existence of laches is open to demurrer on that ground,[29] and it is generally held that unless presented by demurrer, plea, or answer, the defense of laches or stale demand is waived.[30] The withdrawal of a demurrer on the ground of laches does not waive the right to plead it by answer,[31] but the abandonment of a demurrer filed with an answer waives the defense when the answer does not present it.[32] After a plea presenting the defense has been overruled it cannot be reasserted by answer.[33] The reason for requiring the defense to be pleaded is to give plaintiff an opportunity by amending his bill to show an excuse for the delay;[34] therefore, where the bill attempts to account for the delay, defendant need not plead it in his answer.[35] Contrary to the foregoing statements it is sometimes held that the question may be first raised on the hearing,[36] even on the court's own motion.[37] It is generally too late, however, to raise the question after a reference to a master and the filing of his report.[38] The defense cannot be first interposed on a bill of review.[39] It has been held that a defendant may not set up laches where he interposes a cross bill in respect to the same matters,[40] or where by answer he admits plaintiff's demand.[41]

E. Application of Statute of Limitations to Equity — 1. Introductory Statement. The application of statutes of limitations to equity causes presents questions which must be distinguished from although they are related to the doctrines of laches and stale demand.[42] At present there are in many jurisdictions statutes expressly applicable to causes in equity and their effect is simply a question of statutory construction.[43] The early statutes were not in terms applicable to equity;[44] but under them, and still, where no statute is in terms applicable, courts of equity nevertheless apply the rules established by statutes governing law actions, to matters within the concurrent jurisdiction, and to matters where an analogous right or remedy would be affected at law by the statute.[45] For the taking of this course different theories have been announced.[46]

2. Theory That Equity Acts in Obedience to Statute. A doctrine very forcibly announced by Lord Redesdale is that, although courts of equity are not within the words of the statutes of limitations, they are within their spirit and meaning, and act as to legal titles and demands, not by analogy, but in obedience to them. Therefore, wherever the legislature has limited a period for law proceedings, equity will in analogous cases consider itself bound by the same limitation.[47] This theory has received support in the United States as to matters within the concurrent jurisdiction.[48]

3. Theory That Equity Acts in Analogy to Law. A more general theory, applicable to equitable as well as legal titles and demands, is that a court of equity is not bound by a statute not in terms applicable thereto, but will follow the analogy of such statute with reference to corresponding rights and remedies.[49] The denial of relief because of delay alone irrespective of existing state statutes[50] may sometimes be accounted for by the adoption of the rules of the English chancery, founded on the analogy of the statute of James I and subsequent statutes.[51]

4. Principles Governing Application of Statute. In cases within the concurrent jurisdiction the statute will be applied generally with equal force as at law.[52]

Fraud and mistake.— The exclusion in computing delay of the time preceding the discovery of a fraud (see supra, IV, C, 4, b) is sometimes treated as an equitable exception to the operation of the statute of limitations, the analogy of which is followed, but time computed only from discovery. Gates v. Jacob, 1 B. Mon. 306; Thompson v. Blair, 7 N. C. 583; Longworth v. Hunt, 11 Ohio St. 194; Prescott v. Hubbell, 1 Hill Eq. 210; Moore v. Greene, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 9,763, 2 Curt. 202 [affirmed in 19 How. 69, 15 L. ed. 533]. But see Michoud v. Girod, 4 How. 503, 11 L. ed. 1076. The same doctrine has been applied in cases of mistake. Gates v. Jacob, 1 B. Mon. (Ky.) 306; Ormsby v. Longworth, 11 Ohio St. 653.

Ignorance of facts caused by plaintiff's living in a wild and remote region will not entitle him to sue in equity where ejectment would be barred by adverse possession (Rudland v. Mastic, 77 Fed. 688), nor will ignorance of legal right stay the running of the statute (Adams v. Guerard, 29 Ga. 651, 76 Am. Dec. 624).

regarded as the commencement of the suit and stays the further running of the statute of limitations.[63]

5. RELIEF AGAINST STATUTE. As equity itself recognizes and applies the statute of limitations, the fact that the statute would bar a remedy at law is no ground in itself for applying to equity for relief,[64] unless plaintiff was prevented from suing by the act of defendant himself.[65]

V. PARTIES.

A. Fundamental Rules — 1. ALL PERSONS INTERESTED SHOULD BE PARTIES. The fundamental rule as to parties to suits in equity is that however numerous they may be, all persons interested in the subject of the suit and its results should be made parties.[66] The reason for the rule is the aim of a court of equity to do

63. Pindell v. Maydwell, 7 B. Mon. (Ky.) 314. Where after limitations had expired, actions at law begun prior to that time were consolidated into one suit in equity, it was held that plaintiff's claim was barred only as to those defendants who were first made parties by the bill in equity. Frequent promises to pay whereby plaintiff was induced to defer suit do not justify an appeal to equity after the statute has run. Nelson v. Hamner, 84 Va. 909, 6 S. E. 462.

Fraud, collateral merely to the cause of action, will not base jurisdiction in equity after the statute has run. Jaffrey v. Bear, 42 Fed. 569. Averments of fraud inserted in a bill to invoke an exception provided by the statute will not give jurisdiction on the ground of fraud over a legal cause of action. Gaines v. Miller, 111 U. complete justice by embracing the whole subject, deciding upon and settling the rights of all persons interested in the subject of the suit, to make the performance of the order perfectly safe to those who have to obey it, and to prevent further litigation.[67]

2. Interest Must Be Material. One should not be made a party who has no material, subsisting interest in the subject-matter or controversy.[68] Thus it is not necessary to make a party one whose interest is nominal only,[69] or one whose connection with the controversy is merely as agent of another, without personal interest, and against whom no relief is sought.[70] So too one should not be made a party because of past interests or connection with the transaction out of which the controversy arises, when he is without interest in the present subject-matter.[71] And although one may have an interest in the subject-matter, he should not be joined if his rights are entirely separate, distinct, and unrelated to those involved in the particular controversy.[72] The interest of each party must be made to appear from the bill,[73] and it is the right of each litigant to insist upon a dismissal of all who have no interest.[74]

3. Interest Must Be Such That It May Be Affected by the Decree. It has been said that the interest required to make one a party must be in the object rather than in the subject of the suit,[75] and that one is not a proper party to a suit, although he may be interested in the subject-matter, if the decree to be rendered cannot affect such interest.[76] While it is doubtless true that one not affected by the decree is not a necessary party,[77] it will be seen hereafter that one may often be joined with propriety whom the decree will affect very indirectly.[78]

B. Classification of Parties. It is obvious that the application of the fundamental rule requiring the joinder of all persons interested[79] depends upon the nature and extent of the controversy presented by the bill, the subject-matter, and the relief sought. As it is founded upon the aim of equity to determine the whole controversy in one suit,[80] and as this object is one of practical convenience and yields to considerations of superior weight,[81] it is equally obvious that by extending or narrowing the scope of the controversy or even the claim for relief, the application of the rule may be considerably varied. This feature leads to the generally adopted classification of parties as necessary and proper parties. It has, however, been pointed out that much confusion has arisen in the use of these terms.[82] It is submitted that this confusion arises from the fact that the principles just stated give rise to three rather than two classes of parties: (1) Those whose interest is of such a nature that no final decree can be made without affecting that interest; (2) those whose interest is such that they ought to be parties in order to a complete determination of the controversy presented by the bill, but still of such a character that an effective decree of some kind may be rendered without affecting that interest; (3) those not interested in the controversy between the immediate litigants, but having an interest in the subject-matter which may be conveniently settled in the suit.[83] Without all of those of the first class before it the court is powerless to proceed; without all of those of the second class it will refuse to proceed unless it is impracticable to bring them all in; the joinder or omission of those of the third class is optional with plaintiff.[84] The second class is made up therefore of parties generally necessary, and it seems that the usual terminology may be reconciled with the logic of the situation by considering necessary parties as embracing two subclasses: indispensable parties, being those of the first class, and dispensable parties, being those of the second class; and by applying the term "proper parties" to the third class.[85]

joined who have unrelated interests, and the subject is treated in detail infra, VII, G.

C. Necessary Parties — 1. Definition. Necessary parties, as the term is here used,[86] are those who have an interest in the controversy presented by the bill, and whose presence is requisite to a complete adjudication of that controversy, whether or not it is practicable to render a decree partly adjudicating the controversy, without affecting their interests.[87]

2. What Interests Render a Party Necessary — a. Those and Those Only to Be Affected by the Decree. No person is a necessary party to a suit in equity, although he may have an interest in the subject-matter, if such interest cannot be affected by the decree.[88] Therefore the object rather than the subject of the suit must be looked to, and only those are necessary parties whose rights are involved in the purpose of the bill.[89] Therefore also the prayer for relief is important in determining the requisite parties, as one need not be made a party against whom no relief is demanded, provided his rights will not necessarily be affected.[90] It follows that where others are not thereby affected, plaintiff may

85. The federal cases cited supra, note 83, use the terms "indispensable," "necessary," and "formal," as applied to the three classes respectively. This use of the term "necessary," as applied to a class styled by some writers "proper," as distinguished from "necessary" (Pomeroy Rem. & Rem. Rights, § 329), is manifestly confusing; while the term "formal" is likely to lead to a misconception of the relations of parties of the third class to the subject-matter. Hence the terminology adopted.

dispense with a party otherwise necessary, by waiving his claim against him.[91] As a consequence of the rule one who has already performed all that could be obtained by the decree and who will not be affected by the completion of the relief as against others need not be joined.[92] It has been held that a public officer, bound to obey the mandates of the court, is not a necessary party to a proceeding looking to an order directing his official acts, no personal relief being sought against him.[93] An exception has been indicated to the general rule in the case of persons brought in for the protection of other defendants;[94] but the exception is not a real one, as the very object in such a case is that the decree may bind and so affect them.[95] The converse of the rule of course holds, and all persons whose rights may be affected by the decree are necessary parties.[96]

b. Owners and Claimants of Property in Controversy. It is of course impossible to divest or destroy a title by suit in which the holder of the title attacked is not a party.[97] Therefore, where the decree is to affect a title, all holding or claiming such title must be brought in.[98] Where the object of the

d. Assignor and Assignee. The assignee of the rights of another, being the equitable owner and real party in interest, is a necessary party to a suit affecting such right.[4] Where the legal title does not pass to the assignee,[5] or where the assignment is not absolute, or its validity or extent is in dispute,[6] the assignor must also be made a party. Otherwise the assignor is not a necessary party.[7]

e. Other Instances of Interests Affected. All parties to a contract must be parties to a suit where they have joint or common rights[8] or liabilities;[9] and all parties interested in a judicial proceeding must be parties to a suit to set it aside.[10] One who holds the subject-matter in his possession must be a party to a bill to obtain possession.[11]

f. Contingent Interests. One who has merely a contingent interest in the result of the suit is not a necessary party,[12] and it is even held that the fact that the decree may result in imposing upon one a collateral liability does not make him a necessary party.[13]

g. Past Interests. Although one had at the time of the occurrence of the events out of which the controversy arose such an interest in the subject-matter as would have rendered him a necessary party to a suit then brought, still, if before the bringing of the suit, he has parted absolutely with such interest and is not chargeable personally with any liability, he need not be made a party.[14] The rule is the same whether such interest cease by voluntary transfer,[15] or involuntarily, as by the termination of a trust,[16] or by having been divested by judicial proceeding.[17] Even where there was a personal liability, the person subject thereto who has completely discharged it need not be a party to a suit to determine interests in the property to which such liability related.[18] One who has parted with his interest in the subject-matter must nevertheless be made a party where plaintiff's success in a controversy with his successor would require the adjustment of equities between such former owner and the successor.[19]

h. Parties Necessary For Protection of Principal Defendants. In order to accomplish the object of completely adjudicating the controversy and of rendering the performance of the decree perfectly safe to those compelled to obey it,[20] it is frequently necessary to bring in as a party one against whom or whose interest plaintiff seeks no relief, but against whom the principal defendant would have a demand in the event of plaintiff's success.[21] For the same reason one must be joined who otherwise, not being bound by the decree, might assert a demand against the principal defendant which would be inequitable after the latter's performance of a decree in favor of plaintiff.[22]

i. Parties by Representation. To the general rule requiring all persons having interests which would be affected by the decree to be made parties,[23] there is a class of exceptions where the persons beneficially interested are effectively represented by a party. This exception exists where the legal guardians of such interests are present, who with reference thereto are equally certain to bring forward the entire merits of the question, and the object for which the presence of the actual owner would be required is satisfied.[24] The exception applies only where the contest is between such represented interests, taken as a unit, and others, and cannot apply where there may be a conflict of interests between the party representative and the persons represented.[25] Persons so represented are regarded as quasi-parties and may be heard in the suit on petition or motion.[26] The broadest application of this exception is in the case of executors or administrators, who in contests affecting their trust represent creditors, legatees, and distributees.[27] Not infrequently a trustee sufficiently represents the cestui que trust in controversies with strangers to the trust,[28] and a receiver the parties in interest in the suit in which he is appointed.[29] Upon the principle of representation it is settled in England that there may be an adjudication with reference to the fee if the first tenant in tail be brought before the court,[30] and if there be no person in being entitled to the inheritance then the tenant for life alone.[31]

3. INDISPENSABLE PARTIES. A party is indispensable when he has such an interest that a final decree cannot be made without affecting it, or leaving the controversy in such a condition that the final determination may be wholly inconsistent with equity and good conscience.[32] That is to say his presence as a party is indispensable where his rights are so connected with the claims of the litigants that no decree can be made between them without impairing such rights.[33] If the decree must be pursued against one, or if he must be active in its performance, his presence is indispensable.[34] The rules in regard to parties generally are founded in part on artificial reasoning, partly in considerations of convenience, and partly in the solicitude of courts of equity to suppress multifarious litigation;[35] but the rule as to indispensable parties is neither technical nor one of convenience; it goes absolutely to the jurisdiction,[36] and without their presence the court can grant no relief.[37] Thus, where the object of a bill is to divest a title to property, the presence of those holding or claiming such title is indispensable.[38] The rescission of an agreement requires the presence of all claiming property through such agreement,[39] and the impeachment of a judgment the presence of plaintiff in such judgment.[40] Sometimes an interest less directly intervenes which the decree must necessarily affect, but in such case the holder of such interest is none the less indispensable.[41]

4. Dispensable Parties — a. Who Are Such. A dispensable party is one who, while ordinarily necessary to a complete adjudication of the entire controversy, has nothing to perform necessary to the perfection of the decree,[42] and whose interest is so far distinct that it is practicable to render a decree, doing justice between the parties before the court, without affecting such interest.[43] The court may proceed without such party in the exercise of the discretion reposed in it as to the extent of the matter which should be embraced within the adjudication;[44]

but as dispensing with such parties so rests in the discretion of the court and not in the election of plaintiff the bill must set forth reasons for omitting them.[45]

b. Grounds For Dispensing With Parties — (I) In General. A party not indispensable, but under ordinary circumstances necessary, may be omitted when it is impossible to bring him in,[46] or where the delay and inconvenience of joining all would obstruct and probably defeat the purposes of justice.[47]

(II) Parties Numerous. It is a well established rule in equity that where the parties interested are numerous, and have a common interest in the object of the suit, one or more may sue or defend on behalf of all.[48] Although the interest be not strictly a common one in the subject-matter, all interested in the controversy need not be parties if the number be so great that it is impracticable or extremely inconvenient to bring them in,[49] or if they are so widely scattered that their names and residences cannot be ascertained without great difficulty.[50] The interests of those omitted must, however, be such as to be fully and fairly represented by those who are parties.[51] It is always a question to be determined on the facts of each case whether the parties to the record do so fairly represent the interests involved.[52] While the decree in such a case necessarily affects to some

(iv) Unknown Parties. Upon similar grounds if plaintiff is unable to ascertain the identity of the persons who by virtue of their interests should be made parties he may, if they are not indispensable, for that reason proceed without them.[59] But in such case, unless the parties, when discovered, would be dispensable on other grounds, it seems that the bill must pray a discovery of their identity.[60] There are now in many jurisdictions statutory provisions for proceeding by constructive service against such persons describing them as unknown.[61] It is generally held that the bill must disclose not only that the parties are unknown, but that plaintiff with diligence cannot ascertain them.[62]

(v) Other Grounds. Where one should be a party merely because of his interest in the subject-matter, and his presence is not necessary for the protection of others, the court will proceed without him upon its being made to appear that he disclaims all interest,[63] and even where a liability exists, one subject thereto may be omitted when he is insolvent and those before the court would not be benefited by having him brought in.[64] It is said that where one who if living should be a party has died and has no representative the court will if practicable proceed without such representative or if not so practicable will hold the bill until the proper parties can be made;[65] but it seems this rule does not obtain where plaintiff might have procured the appointment of a representative before suit.[66]

D. Proper or Formal Parties. A proper or formal party is one who is not interested in the controversy between the immediate litigants but has an interest in the subject-matter which can be conveniently settled in the suit, and thereby prevent further litigation.[67] Such persons plaintiff may make parties or omit at his option.[68] Subject to the rule against multifariousness,[69] plaintiff may bring in all participants in the acts out of which the controversy arises who may have interests either by way of rights or liabilities in the subject-matter, although not immediately concerned in the relief sought by plaintiff, in order that a decree may be rendered which will be an effectual determination of all such rights for the protection of all concerned.[70] Persons who have parted with their interests, although not necessary parties,[71] may sometimes on this ground be proper parties.[72] In bills to establish claims to property or funds, persons asserting conflicting claims may likewise be brought in.[73] Where the matter in litigation is entire in itself, one may be a proper defendant, although his interest extend only to a part of such matter,[74] and where the object of the suit is single, defendants may properly be joined, although their interests are distinct, provided they have a common connection with the matter in controversy.[75] So too where plaintiff's right is violated by the concurrent acts of several, it may be protected by a bill making all committing such acts defendants, and seeking appropriate relief against each, whether they have acted in combination[76] or whether they have acted separately.[77] It is generally improper to make one a defendant solely for the purpose of discovery,[78] and while several exceptions to this rule have been noted,[79] the only settled exception is in the case of suits against corporations, where officers and sometimes members may be made defendants solely for that purpose.[80] Therefore where books and papers are in the possession of a third person and are desired as evidence, a subpœna duces tecum must be resorted to, but where plaintiff wishes to obtain their custody he must make the third person a defendant.[81]

have its own proper parties, and parties to the original bill, not made such in the ancillary, have no more rights in the latter suit than if it were independent.[89]

F. Position of Parties on Record — 1. In General. The position of the parties on the record or their grouping as plaintiffs or defendants is of less importance in equity than at law. Provided the requisite of a proper plaintiff exists,[90] it is sufficient that all persons interested be before the court, and if so, their rights will be determined regardless of their position as plaintiffs or defendants.[91] Accordingly the court will when occasion demands transpose a party from one side to the other,[92] or it may proceed to decree without making the formal change.[93]

2. Plaintiffs — a. Must Show an Interest. In order to sustain his suit plaintiff must show that he has an interest in the subject-matter and in obtaining the object of the suit,[94] and a bill is demurrable which fails to show such interest.[95] It matters not, however, whether his interest in the subject-matter be legal or equitable in character.[96] One who has parted with all his interest cannot bring

40 S. E. 380. He may, however, in that way subject himself to the liabilities of a party. See infra, V, I. If one not a party files a petition disclosing an interest in the subject-matter, plaintiff must amend his bill, making the petitioner a party, before such interest can be determined. Gall v. Gall, 50 W. Va. 523, 40 S. E. 380. An order in a suit by one distributee, requiring an administrator to account before a master, does not make all who are entitled to distribution parties. Hook v. Payne, 14 Wall. (U. S.) 252, 20 L. ed. 887. Still it has been held that one at whose instance and for whose benefit a suit is instigated will be deemed the real plaintiff in determining whether a right exists to maintain the suit (Nicrosi v. Calera Land Co., 115 Ala. 429, 22 So. 147), and that where a bill states that it is brought for the benefit of a certain person, that person thereby becomes virtually a party and may be made an actual party by amendment (Fenwick v. Phillips, 3 Metc. (Ky.) 87).

In contempt proceedings it was held that a statement in the bill that it was brought against defendants named, their confederates and associates, whose citizenship and residences were unknown, could refer only to such as could be made parties and that none became such under that designation until named in the bill. Ex p. Richards, 117 Fed. 658.

interests.[5] It has been frequently held that it is a fatal objection to a bill if any plaintiff therein be not entitled to relief,[6] but the more reasonable rule is that the objection may be cured by dismissing as to the improper plaintiff.[7] Several plaintiffs asserting similar rights, but having no common interest, may not generally join in the same bill;[8] but the joinder of plaintiffs is governed largely by considerations of convenience,[9] and therefore to prevent multiplicity of suits bills are sometimes entertained where there is no privity or connection among the plaintiffs, except a common interest in the subject-matter,[10] or even the object to be obtained.[11] Persons who hold distinct interests derived from the same source, their validity depending upon the same question, may unite in a suit to determine and protect such interests.[12] Persons may likewise unite as plaintiffs, although their rights or titles be entirely distinct and unconnected, where they are invaded or threatened by the same act, calling for similar relief.[13]

d. Refusal to Become Plaintiff. One whose interest is with plaintiff and who should be a co-plaintiff but refuses to join as such should be made a defendant,[14] but the bill must show the refusal to join as plaintiff as a reason for adopting such course.[15] The refusal of such a person to participate actively as a complainant does not waive his right.[16] Where one who joined as plaintiff in instituting the suit declines to prosecute it further, and is a necessary party, the court should transpose him to the other side.[17]

G. Changes in Parties Pending Suit — 1. Bringing in New Parties. When in the progress of a suit it appears that a necessary party is not before the court he must be brought in,[21] and merely proper parties may be brought in.[22] Plaintiff may bring in such new parties, according to circumstances, either by amendment[23] or by supplemental bill.[24] A new party cannot, however, be brought in for the purpose of litigating a matter beyond the scope of the original bill,[25] and leave may be denied on the ground of laches,[26] or because amendment is unnecessary.[27] A defendant cannot object to an order of the court, making new parties, with plaintiff's assent.[28] It has been held that plaintiff cannot be compelled to add new parties if he chooses to take the responsibility of proceeding without them.[29] Defendant may bring in new parties by a cross bill for relief, but not by one which is merely defensive.[30] Under the code new parties may be brought in on motion of defendant,[31] or even of the court's own motion.[32]

2. Substitution. As a plaintiff may not continue to prosecute a suit after he parts with his interest,[33] or prosecute for the use of another,[34] it follows that wherever plaintiff's interest passes to another pending the suit the cause cannot proceed until the person acquiring that interest is substituted as plaintiff.[35] It seems also that a substitution of plaintiffs may be permitted to correct an error in the bringing of the suit.[36] Where a defendant's interest ceases, the necessity of a substitution depends generally upon whether the transfer is voluntary or by operation of law.[37] Where a necessary defendant dies, it is necessary to substitute, according to the nature of his interest, his heirs or personal representatives,[38] except where the parties are so numerous that the probable frequency of deaths would lead to successive delays if such substitution were required.[39] The assignee of an insolvent or bankrupt defendant must likewise be substituted.[40] Where, however, the transfer is voluntary and occurs after the suit was instituted, it is not essential to bring in the transferee.[41] Where new parties are substituted they succeed to the rights of their predecessor and are bound by the record as it was in his lifetime.[42] The court has power to substitute another person for the purchaser of lands sold under its decree and to cause the deed to issue to such person.[43] The appropriate method of making the substitution in the case of the death of a party is by a bill of revivor or by a bill in the nature of a bill of revivor,[44] and in the case of other transfers by a supplemental bill or by a bill in the nature thereof.[45]

As co-plaintiff or sole plaintiff.— One not a party will not be allowed to come in as a co-plaintiff (Drake v. Goodridge, 7 Fed. Cas. No. 4,062, 6 Blatchf. 151), or to prosecute a suit which the plaintiff therein has abandoned (Hyman v. Cameron, 46 Miss. 725).

Statutes have in many cases granted or extended the right.[47] And the general rule is departed from where the ends of justice require it,[48] as where the rights of such stranger would be affected by the decree and the court would be compelled to take notice of his absence; in such case he may be permitted to intervene instead of ordering the cause to stand over until he is brought in.[49] In order to intervene one must, however, show the existence of such an interest,[50] and the intervention must be for the protection of that interest.[51] A cestui que trust may be permitted to intervene where his right is not adequately protected by the trustee,[52] and stock-holders on similar grounds may in the discretion of the court be let into a suit against the corporation.[53] One may also become a party to a suit instituted for his benefit,[54] or to assert a right to share in the distribution of a fund realized for creditors.[55] So one may come in on the hearing and consent to be bound by the decree, thereby obviating error in not making him a party to the bill.[56] A limited intervention may sometimes be permitted, as to file testimony and be heard on the argument, without leave otherwise to interfere.[57]

b. Time to Intervene. One may by laches lose a right to intervene, and where the application is made after the cause has proceeded for a long time, the granting of leave is discretionary.[58] The court may in such a case restrict the intervention to such matters as may at that time properly be litigated.[59] Intervention is generally denied after decree,[60] and applications for leave to intervene after entry of

c. Petition and Procedure on Intervention. A petition of intervention should exhibit all the material facts relied on, embodying by recital or reference so much of the record in the original suit as is essential,[62] and, where the purpose is to intervene as a defendant, should be accompanied by the proposed answer, but may be allowed to stand for an answer.[63] The proceedings on intervention are much affected by statute.[64] In the federal courts the parties to the original bill are bound to take notice of an intervening petition filed in the suit;[65] but as intervention is generally not a matter of right, leave to file or an equivalent order must be obtained before an intervener will be recognized as a party.[66] A plaintiff by replying to a petition in intervention and proceeding to a hearing waives objection to the sufficiency of the petition and to the absence of an order granting leave to intervene.[67] An intervener by leave of court becomes a party for all purposes of the suit as though originally a party,[68] and has the benefit of proof already taken.[69] Even though the intervention be to assert a legal demand, the pleadings must, where law and equity are administered in separate proceedings, conform to the practice in equity.[70]

H. Objections as to Parties — 1. INTRODUCTORY STATEMENT. The mode of raising objections because of the misjoinder or non-joinder of parties depends upon the character of such parties, and the situation of the party objecting.[71] Where the proper parties are before the court, an objection based merely on their position on the record or description of their capacity will often be disregarded.[72]

2. PLAINTIFFS. Objection that a plaintiff has no interest in the suit, if the defect appears on the face of the bill, should regularly be taken by demurrer,[73] which may be general or for want of equity.[74] If the objection does not appear on the face of the bill it may be raised by answer.[75] The objection may, however, be taken at the hearing.[76] A mere misjoinder of plaintiffs is waived unless asserted by pleading.[77] Objection for non-joinder should be made by demurrer or answer.[78] An irregularity by bringing suit directly in the names of public officers instead of in the name of the attorney-general on their relation is waived by answering to the merits,[79] and an objection that the suit was by the legal owner of the demand instead of by the real party in interest was held bad on appeal.[80] A defendant cannot after answer object that a plaintiff's name was used without his authority.[81] The remedy for a plaintiff who has been joined without his consent is to move to strike out his name.[82]

b. Non-Joinder — (i) Nature of Objection. It is unnecessary to discriminate between objections based specifically on the non-joinder of proper defendants and objections for want of necessary parties to the bill. As the ranging of parties is of secondary importance,[87] and the essential thing is that all persons interested should be before the court, either as plaintiff or defendant,[88] any objection for want of parties, not going to the non-joinder of one whose absence as a plaintiff is not accounted for,[89] must be in effect to the non-joinder of a necessary defendant, because the joinder of merely proper parties is at the option of plaintiff, and their non-joinder not a matter of objection.[90]

(ii) Indispensable Parties. As the want of indispensable parties goes to the jurisdiction to render any decree,[91] an objection on that ground may be raised at any stage of the proceedings,[92] as on the hearing,[93] or on an appeal.[94] For the same reason the court will of its own motion raise and act upon the objection.[95] Where the nature of the bill requires a particular class of persons to be parties, it will not be presumed that defendants named in the bill are the persons and all the persons constituting such class, but such fact must be pleaded.[96]

by answer.[4] The pleading, whatever its class, must point out the proper parties,[5] not necessarily by name, for that might be impossible, but in such a manner as to indicate the precise objection and enable plaintiff to amend.[6] As a general rule objections of the class under consideration cannot be first made on the hearing,[7] or of course on appeal.[8]

Where defendant objects at the hearing, on the ground of non-joinder of a party in interest, he must show clearly that such interest existed at the commencement of the suit. Cook v. Mancius, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 89.

In New Jersey it is said that the objection may be made at the hearing (Melick v. Melick, 17 N. J. Eq. 156), but only when the absent parties are essential to the final determination (Van Doren v. Robinson, 16 N. J. Eq. 256); and where the detriment to the omitted party will be serious or the decree of no avail to plaintiff (Wood v. Stover, 28 N. J. Eq. 248). The court may in its discretion refuse to entertain at the hearing an objection based on the absence of one whose presence is required merely for the protection of defendant (Cutler v. Tuttle, 19 N. J. Eq. 549), and the objection will not be then entertained where the interest of the absent person is represented by defendant (Swallow v. Swallow, 27 N. J. Eq. 278).

In Pennsylvania the objection may be taken at the hearing but not thereafter. Brown v. Gray, 2 Kulp 136.

A defendant may waive his right to object, where there is no defect of indispensable parties, not only by failing to object at a proper time and in a proper manner, but also by consenting to a decree,[10] by answering in such a way as to show that a party necessary under the averments of the bill is not so,[11] or it seems even by objecting to the bill on other grounds.[12] Heirs do not waive a failure to revive a suit against them by consenting that such suit be heard together with one to which they are parties.[13]

I. Curing Defects as to Parties. As already seen [14] plaintiff may sometimes avoid the necessity of bringing in a party by waiving his claim against him. So one who should be a defendant may bind himself by the decree and so authorize the court to proceed without making him a formal party by stipulating to that effect,[15] or by appearing voluntarily and answering the bill.[16] While the court may dismiss a bill without prejudice for want of necessary parties,[17] this course will not be adopted except in the case of omission of indispensable parties who cannot be brought in,[18] or in case parties have been omitted wilfully and in bad faith,[19] or perhaps where a weak case is presented on the merits.[20] The proper course in case of misjoinder is to amend by dismissing as to the one improperly joined.[21] Where the defect is a non-joinder of necessary parties, the suit is merely suspended.[22] The court should not proceed until the absent parties are before it,[23] but the proper order is for the cause to stand over with liberty to amend by adding new parties,[24] and if that be not done within the time fixed that the bill be then dismissed.[25] An appellate court will not reverse a decree for want of parties who ought properly to have been joined, provided sufficient parties were before the court to sustain the decree as rendered,[26] and where the decree cannot be sustained the court will generally instead of dismissing the bill remand it to the court below that the omitted parties may be brought in.[27]

VI. PROCESS AND APPEARANCE.

A. Process — 1. Nature of Process in Equity Suits — a. The Subpœna. In the English chancery the fundamental writ for subjecting defendant to the jurisdiction of the court was the subpœna ad respondendum, a writ issued out of the court, after the filing of the bill, running in the name of the king, addressed to defendant in person and commanding him to personally appear on a day therein specified, to answer such things as shall then and there be alleged against him and to do and receive what the court shall consider in that behalf and this not to omit under penalty of one hundred pounds.[28] The object of the writ was to compel an answer, and it was accordingly followed, if defendant did not appear, by other writs and proceedings by way of attachment, sequestration, etc., to the same end.[29] As at the common law, so in chancery, actual appearance was long deemed necessary to the exercise of jurisdiction, but there arose the practice, when process failed to secure an appearance, of treating defendant's contumacy as an admission, and allowing the bill to be taken pro confesso,[30] a practice leading to a simplification in modern times of the compulsory process following the subpœna.

b. In the United States. The nature, form, and mode of service of process in equity suits in the United States are very largely regulated by statute and rule, and in many jurisdictions made to conform to process at law.[31] In some jurisdictions,[32] including the federal courts, the subpœna is retained in name and in substance.[33] In the absence of statute or established local practice it is generally safe to follow the practice of the English chancery as it stood at the time of the separation.[34] Where the form of subpœna is not prescribed, it has been held sufficient if it informs defendant that a suit has been instituted against him and a copy of the bill is furnished;[35] but it would seem that a time and place for appearance should also be fixed,[36] and a copy served with the return-day blank is not a good service.[37] A subpœna which has already been used cannot be altered and used in another suit.[38] A mere clerical error may be corrected,[39] and technical defects are sometimes disregarded.[40] The writ has performed its function when it has brought defendant into court, and if lost thereafter the court may perfect the record by supplying a copy.[41]

2. NECESSITY FOR PROCESS — a. In General. The issuing and service of formal process is, except where there is a voluntary general appearance,[42] essential to constitute one effectively a party defendant,[43] and the fact of service should appear on the record.[44] A failure to issue process of subpœna until after the service of another writ is, however, a mere irregularity.[45] After the court has lost jurisdiction by the dismissal of a cause and adjournment of the term the parties cannot again be brought in except by process.[46] Although a suit relates to or is ancillary to another suit in the same court between the same parties, if it be technically a new suit process must be issued,[47] and where the proceeding should have been by petition in the original suit but was taken by original bill instead it may be treated as dependent and proceeded with on mere notice without a subpœna to appear and amend.[48]

b. Amended Bills. Process issued and served on an original bill operates as notice of the claim and rights asserted therein,[49] and it is unnecessary generally to issue or serve a subpœna to answer an amended bill upon defendants already before the court on the original.[50] Where process to answer an amended bill is required it may be issued before the amended bill is filed.[51]

c. Supplemental Bills. In England a subpœna is necessary on a supplemental bill,[52] but in the United States it is usually unnecessary as to defendants already before the court.[53] A subpœna is necessary on a supplemental bill filed after the dismissal of the original.[54] Subpœnas on the original bill should be served before a supplemental bill is filed.[55]

Francis v. Smith, 1 Duv. (Ky.) 121.

In Kentucky it seems that process on a cross bill, while necessary as against co-defendants, was unnecessary against plaintiff in the original. Peak v. Perciful, 3 Bush 218; Horine v. Moore, 14 B. Mon. 311; Anderson v. Ward, 6 T. B. Mon. 419; Shelby v. Smith, 2 A. K. Marsh. 504.

In Illinois no process is necessary on a cross bill (Fleece v. Russell, 13 Ill. 31), even against an infant plaintiff in the original (Kingsbury v. Buckner, 134 U. S. 650, 10 S. Ct. 638, 33 L. ed. 1047).

In Texas a copy of the cross bill must also be served. Simon v. Day, 84 Tex. 520, 19 S. W. 691.

Under the codes the counter-claim in the answer usually serves the purpose of a cross bill against plaintiff, and while often a copy must be served formal process is unnecessary. See for example N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 501. Where relief is sought against a co-defendant, provisions vary. In New York the facts are stated and relief prayed in the answer, which must be served on the co-defendant. See N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 521.

In Indiana the parties must take notice of a cross complaint, the nature of which is disclosed by the original (Bevier v. Kahn, 111 Ind. 200, 12 N. E. 169), but process must be issued on one setting up a cause of action not so disclosed (Shaul v. Rinker, 139 Ind. 163, 38 N. E. 593. See also Joyce v. Whitney, 57 Ind. 550).

In Ohio process must be issued on a cross without process on the pleading setting them up,[57] but where the lien is not pre-existing, but is acquired by the cross bill itself, a subpœna must be served.[58]

3. Service of Process — a. By Whom Made. A subpœna or other original process should generally be served by the sheriff or corresponding officer, but the matter is largely regulated by statute.[59]

b. How Made — (1) In General. In England the ordinary method of service was by serving the original subpœna on defendant personally or by leaving it at his dwelling-house with some one of the family,[60] but since the orders of 1833,[61] it has been sufficient to deliver a copy instead, and in case of personal service to exhibit the original. Extraordinary service was permitted where ordinary service was impossible, according to circumstances; but an order of court was usually requisite to authorize and determine the manner of such service.[62] In the United States the method of service is determined by statute or rule.[63] When service other than personal is authorized the prescribed method must be strictly pursued.[64] Mere verbal differences between the original and the U. S. Eq. Rule 13 provides for service by delivering a copy of the subpœna to defendant personally, or by leaving a copy thereof at the dwelling-house or usual place of abode of each defendant, with some adult person who is a member or resident in the family.

For service on particular classes of persons see the specific titles, such as Husband and Wife; Infants; Insane Persons. For service on corporations see Process.

64. In Florida a statute providing for service of a subpœna by delivering a copy to a member of the family, and another statute providing especially for service of process on appeals against non-residents, it was held that the citation on appeal could not be served according to the former statute, where the appellee was out of the state. Guarantee Trust, etc., Co. v. Buddington, 23 Fla. 514, 2 So. 885.

In Illinois the service must be by copy. Sconce v. Whitney, 12 Ill. 150. The statute providing that service should be personal or by leaving a copy at defendant's usual place of abode with some white person of the family of the age of ten years and upward and informing such person of the contents, it was held that the return must show a compliance in each particular, and that it is bad if it does not show that it was left at his usual place of abode (Piggott v. Snell, 59 Ill. 106; Miller v. Mills, 29 Ill. 431), that it was left with a member of his family (Wells v. Stumph, 88 Ill. 56; Mack v. Brown, 73 Ill. 295; Fischer v. Fischer, 54 Ill. 231; Cost v. Rose, 17 Ill. 276; Montgomery v. Brown, 7 Ill. 581; Townsend v. Griggs, 3 Ill. 365), who must be named (Montgomery v. Brown, 7 Ill. 581), or if it does not show that such person was white (Miller v. Mills, 29 Ill. 431; Cost v. Rose, 17 Ill. 276), or that such person was informed of the contents of the copy (Mack v. Brown, 73 Ill. 295; Fischer v. Fischer, 54 Ill. 231; Cost v. Rose, 17 Ill. 276). A return that the copy was left with defendant's husband does not show that it was left with a person of the family, for he may have been living apart from her. Wells v. Stumph, 88 Ill. 56. See also as to the strict construction of this statute Divilbiss v. Whitmire, 20 Ill. 425.

In Mississippi a return of service by leaving at the residence is bad unless it shows that defendant could not be found. Foster v. Simmons, 40 Miss. 585. But where there is no proper person at the place of residence and defendant cannot be found, fastening the process to his door is leaving it at a public place, within the meaning of the statute. Ramsey v. Barbaro, 20 Miss. 293.

In New Jersey leaving at the residence of defendant's mother while he was residing there for the summer was held to be good, although defendant's own house was open and in charge of a servant (Harrison v. Farrington, 35 N. J. Eq. 4); and leaving a copy with defendant's father, while at work in a field copy served may not be fatal.[65] Service has been held sufficient where there was a variance between subpœna and return in the middle initial of defendant,[66] and where a copy of the bill containing prayer for process against defendant was served with the subpœna, service was held sufficient, although the subpœna omitted the name altogether.[67]

(II) Service on Attorneys. One of the occasions for extraordinary service by leave of the court which was recognized by the English chancery was in the case of a bill for an injunction against a person out of the jurisdiction to restrain proceedings at law. Here the court permitted service upon the attorney or agent carrying on the law proceedings.[68] The federal courts recognize the same practice,[69] and have extended it so as to permit service of subpœnas on cross bills on the solicitors of non-resident plaintiffs,[70] and also to a bill to reform a contract in order to maintain thereon a pending law action.[71] Such substituted service is, however, void in the absence of allegations of record or an order of court justifying it.[72]

c. Proof of Service — (I) The Return. In order to confer jurisdiction the near the house where both resided, was held sufficient (Wagner v. Blanchet, 27 N. J. Eq. 356).

In New York service on the head of the family with which defendant boarded was held sufficient. People v. Craft, 7 Paige 325.

In Pennsylvania leaving a copy of the bill at defendant's dwelling in the presence of an adult member of the family was held good. Gouldey v. Gillespie, 3 Pa. L. J. Rep. 125, 4 Pa. L. J. 510.

In South Carolina it seems that stress is laid on defendant's receiving actual notice of the subpœna, where the service is other than personal. Southern Steam Packet Co. v. Roger, Cheves Eq. 48.

In the federal courts, under rule 13 (see supra, note 78) leaving a copy at defendant's residence but not with any person there is bad (Day v. Phelps, 7 Fed. Cas. No. 3,689); and the return must also show that the person to whom it was delivered not only resided at defendant's domicile but was a member of defendant's family (Von Roy v. Blackman, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,997, 3 Woods 98). Service at a dwelling-house which defendant has not occupied for over two years will be set aside without a showing as to where he has since resided (Hyslop v. Hoppock, 12 Fed. Cas. No. 6,988, 5 Ben. 447); but service at the door outside defendant's dwelling satisfies the rule (Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Wulf, 1 Fed. 775, 9 Biss. 285). Service on a state must be upon both the governor and the attorney-general. New Jersey v. New York, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 461, 7 L. ed. 741. The service must be sixty days before the return-day. New Jersey v. New York, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 461, 7 L. ed. 741; New York v. Connecticut, 4 Dall. (U. S.) 1, 1 L. ed. 715. See Supreme Ct. Rule 5.

The rule is founded on presumed authority of the attorney and will therefore not be resorted to where the judgment attacked has been satisfied (Kamm v. Stark, 14 Fed. Cas. No. 7,604, 1 Sawy. 547), or where the law action is not connected with the injunction sought (Hitner v. Suckley, 12 Fed. Cas. No. 6,543, 2 Wash. 465). But the authority is presumed from retainer in the law action. Crellin v. Ely, 13 Fed. 420, 7 Sawy. 532.

return must state, not in general terms the fact of service, but specifically in what manner service was made, showing in all respects a compliance with the law.[73] The return must with certainty identify the persons served with those named in the writ.[74] There exists the usual conflict of opinion as to the conclusiveness of the return.[75] Where service is by a private individual proof must be made by affidavit.[76]

(II) ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF SERVICE. Defendant's formal acknowledgment of service may take the place of the return or even of formal service itself,[77] but the acknowledgment must be in writing and its genuineness must be proved.[78]

(III) RECITALS IN DECREE. A recital in the decree of service on defendant is at least prima facie evidence of the fact,[79] and is sometimes treated as conclusive.[80] Where treated as prima facie evidence it is rebutted if the return in the record shows defective service.[81]

4. CONSTRUCTIVE PROCESS. Of course no jurisdiction can be acquired over the person of non-residents not served with process within the state and who do not appear, nor can any personal decree be rendered against them.[82] As equity acts

Disputed territory.— Where two states claim certain territory, but only one exercises actual jurisdiction thereover, the courts of the other state obtain no jurisdiction by service of process within the disputed strip. Daniels v. Stevens, 19 Ohio 222.

A non-resident temporarily within the state may properly be served (Hart v. Granger, 1 Conn. 154), unless he has come under circumstances of privilege (Martin v. Ramsey, 7 Humphr. (Tenn.) 260).

Statutory restrictions.— While a state may not extend the process of its courts beyond the territorial limits of its sovereignty, it may restrict such process to counties or districts within such limits, and thus give primarily in personam,[83] the non-residence and absence of indispensable parties thus often defeats the jurisdiction.[84] Therefore, in order to enable the court to adjudicate where the subject-matter is within the jurisdiction and necessary parties are not, statutes have in certain cases created a jurisdiction, usually in form personal but actually in rem, and have provided for constructive service in such cases.[85] There can be no such constructive service without the direct authority of statute,[86] and in order to obtain jurisdiction the statute must be strictly pursued,[87] and such compliance must affirmatively appear of record.[88] It seems, however, that if the proceedings are regular they are not absolutely void, although defendant be in fact a resident,[89] and irregularities which might have been fatal before decree have sometimes been disregarded on appeal.[90] It has also been held that defendants personally served cannot object upon the ground that the notice published against another is insufficient.[91] Where jurisdiction is acquired for a particular purpose it cannot be extended to an amended bill for another purpose.[92] The service provided for is usually by publication in a rise to questions as to the effect of such extraterritorial service which must be determined by a construction of the statutes involved. As to such restrictions see Huntzinger v. Philadelphia Coal Co., 11 Phila. (Pa.) 609; Preston v. Lacey, 2 Del. Co. (Pa.) 463; Stack v. O'Hara, 5 Leg. Gaz. (Pa.) 97; Tierney's Appeal, 3 L. T. N. Non-residents may be made parties by publication where the contract out of which the suit arises is made in the state, or where any act is done by the non-resident in the state justifying the interference of chancery, or when he asserts title to property in virtue of some act or transaction which took place within the state. Holman v. Norfolk Bank, 12 Ala. 369. In Tennessee it was held that where process is served on one material defendant the court may by publication obtain jurisdiction over all others, although the rights of the non-residents are wholly distinct from the parties before the court. manner dependent upon the statute,[93] but it is sometimes required that it should be by mail,[94] or personally, without the state.[95]

B. Appearance. As before indicated an actual appearance was formerly deemed essential to the exercise of jurisdiction,[96] but now unless plaintiff for the purpose of discovery or otherwise has reason to compel an appearance the only effect of defendant's failure to appear is that it is taken to confess the bill and permit plaintiff to proceed ex parte.[97] The mode and effect of appearances in equity are in general the same as at law.[98] An appearance waives defects in process or the service thereof.[99] To have this effect the appearance need not be formal.[1] An order giving leave to appear and answer by a day named is complied with by demurring within the time fixed.[2]

In Alabama the place of publication is discretionary with the chancellor. Mobley v. Leophart, 51 Ala. 587.

In New Jersey where all the defendants reside out of the state, foreign publication is required; when any is served within the state, the notice to others may be published within the state. Wetmore v. Dyer, 2 N. J. Eq. 386.

In Arkansas where the chancellor believes that the publication has not been equivalent to actual notice, he may require a copy of the bill to be served if defendant's residence may be ascertained. Clarke v. Strong, 13 Ark. 491.

94. See, generally, Process. Here too the statute must be strictly followed. Barker v. Barker, 63 N. J. Eq. 593, 53 Atl. 4; Corning v. Gillman, 1 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 649.

Defects in the proof of mailing may be supplied by amendment. Dinsmore v. Westcott, 25 N. J. Eq. 302.

In New Hampshire such service may be by a private individual and proved by his oath. Stone v. Anderson, 25 N. H. 221.

In Vermont the subpœna must be addressed to the person authorized to deliver it. Burlington Bank v. Catlin, 11 Vt. 106.

In New York both under the old chancery practice and under the code, a defendant so served is entitled to the same time to appear as if the service had been by publication. Cornell v. Watson, 1 Edw. 82; N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 441.

Va. 515, 44 S. E. 187. Service cannot be objected to after the lapse of five years and the filing of an answer. Dixon v. Rutherford, 26 Ga. 153.

Answering a cross bill waives a subpœna thereon and service of a copy. Byers v. Sugg, (Tenn. Ch. App. 1900) 57 S. W. 397.

Demurring for want of equity waives a demurrer for want of jurisdiction of the parties. Merrill v. Houghton, 51 N. H. 61.

Objection in answer.— But it has been held that where a defendant answers, setting up his non-residence and want of jurisdiction over him, he does not waive this objection by also answering to the merits. Price v. Pinnell, 4 W. Va. 296.

1. Appearance to appeal.—Appearing for the purpose of prosecuting an appeal has been held to cure defects in the service. Standley v. Arnow, 13 Fla. 361; Lawlins v. Lackey, 6 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 70.

Agreed submission of case.— A defendant who had not been served with a copy of the bill was subjected to a decree when the record showed that he was in court when counsel agreed to submit the case. Miller v. Wilkins, 79 Ga. 675, 4 S. E. 261.

Cross bill seeking same relief.— Where a sale of real estate was set aside on the cross bill of an infant and a new sale decreed, it was held that defects in the service in the original case were of no avail, but here the cross bill prayed for a division or sale. Rankin v. Black, 1 Head (Tenn.) 650.

Waiving right to answer.— Where a petition in the nature of an original bill was filed, praying to be made a party plaintiff, and defendants therein named demurred and, the demurrer being overruled, waived their right to answer, it was held that relief could be given on the petition without process. Root-Tea-Na-Herb Co. v. Rightmire, 48 W. Va. 222, 36 S. E. 359. An agreement by a defendant not served that the answer of another defendant might be taken as his was held in one case, however, insufficient to authorize a decree. Sanders v. Jennings, 2 Dana (Ky.) 37.

A recital in the record that "the parties came by their solicitors" was held to apply only to such parties as had answered, and not to show an appearance by those not served. McCall v. Lesher, 7 Ill. 47.

2. New Jersey v. New York, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 523, 8 L. ed. 414.

equity is instituted by filing[4] a bill[5] in the form of a petition invoking the aid of the chancellor,[6] stating plaintiff's case, and praying for the relief to which he considers himself entitled.[7] When the suit is by the attorney-general to enforce a public right it is instituted not by bill but by information.[8] A person may sometimes also invoke the action of the court by a technical petition, which may be presented in a matter over which the court has jurisdiction either under some special statute or authority, or as being involved in a cause already pending.[9] Whether a matter is proper for a petition or is so far independent that it should be presented by bill rests largely in the discretion of the chancellor.[10]

2. Classification of Bills. Not only must the jurisdiction of the chancellor in suits concerning private rights be originally invoked by bill, but, except in merely incidental matters affecting the progress of the suit,[11] and in cases where a petition will lie,[12] all applications for the extension of the exercise of jurisdiction, as for cross relief, the introduction of new matter, and the granting of relief founded upon proceedings already had, must likewise be by bill; and this leads to the primary classification of bills as original bills and bills not original.[13] An original bill relates to some matter not before litigated in the court by the same persons, standing in the same interests.[14] Bills not original are usually defined as being either an addition to or a continuance of an original bill or both.[15] What is immediately discussed in the following subdivisions of this article relates to original bills and also to features common to all bills.[16]

13. 1 Daniell Ch. Pr. 402; Story Eq. Pl. 16. Lord Redesdale recognized three distinct classes — original bills, bills not original, and bills in the nature of original bills — the third class being comprised of those which are occasioned by or seek the benefit of a former bill or decree, but are not considered as a continuance of the former bill. Mitford Eq. Pl. 31. Daniell more specifically indicates the nature of such bills as being brought by one not a party to the original suit, to obtain the benefit of it or to procure the reversal of the decision made upon it. 1 Daniell Ch. Pr. 402. Such bills, as they are always dependent upon prior proceedings, may best be considered with bills not original, and in connection with the analogous regular bill, such as bills of review, bills of revivor, etc., or with the topics to which they relate.

3. WHAT CONSTITUTES AN ORIGINAL BILL. When a bill does not introduce an entirely new subject-matter to the consideration of the court, it is sometimes a doubtful question whether it should be original in character or in some form not original. Thus the subject-matter may be closely related to that of a former bill and yet so far distinct and the purpose of the bill so different that an original bill is required.[17] So too a want of privity between the parties to a bill and those to a former suit to which the bill relates requires resort to an original proceeding.[18] While a bill of review is not an original bill,[19] and avoids the objection of res adjudicata which prevents the retrial by original bill of issues once determined,[20] still an original bill rather than a bill of review must in general be resorted to where a decree is to be attacked for matters outside the record of the original suit.[21] While the character of a bill as original or otherwise must to a certain extent depend upon the form which has been given to it,[22] the courts do not confine themselves in the United States to technicalities of form, but will, where possible, determine the character of bills and give them effect according to their essence

16. For bills not original see their special titles in this article, such as "Bills of Review," infra, XX; "Bills of Revivor," infra, XIII; "Cross Bills," infra, XV; "Supplemental Bills," infra, XII.

17. Original instead of cross bill.— One of the defendants in a suit to enforce a judgment, having become the owner of the judgment debt and of a mortgage, given to secure it, must proceed by original and not cross bill, to foreclose the mortgage. Andrews v. Kibbee, 12 Mich. 94, 83 Am. Dec. 766. Where a bill was pending to enforce a contract for the exclusive use of defendant's name in the sale of patent medicines, defendant must proceed by original and not by cross bill, to restrain an unauthorized use of his name. Chattanooga Medicine Co. v. Thedford, 58 Fed. 347. Where affirmative relief is sought by a cross bill it to that extent partakes of the nature of an original bill. Crisman v. Heidrer, 5 Colo. 589. Where a judgment creditor filed a bill to reach property fraudulently conveyed, and other judgment creditors, who were made defendants, by answer, which they asked to be taken as a cross bill, sought to reach the same property to satisfy their own claims, a demurrer was sustained on the ground that such answer was in effect an original bill. Hergel v. Laitenberger, 2 Tenn. Ch. 251. A bill to enforce an equitable set-off against damages awarded by a decree growing out of another matter cannot be regarded as a cross bill. Providence Rubber Co. v. Goodyear, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 807, 19 L. ed. 587. See also infra, X, A, 2.

Original instead of supplemental bill.— A bill by a surviving partner to subject real estate of a deceased partner to the payment of debts cannot be regarded as supplemental to a bill to settle partnership affairs. White v. Miller, 158 U. S. 128, 15 S. Ct. 788, 39 L. ed. 921.

Original instead of bill or revivor.— A bill filed fifteen years after a decree for the sale of property, praying that the original bill and all the proceedings thereunder be reinstated to the extent of the interest of the party, is not a bill of revivor, but an original bill for the objects set forth in its prayer. Kennedy v. Georgia Bank, 8 How. (U. S.) 586, 12 L. ed. 1209.

Under the Pennsylvania practice of foreclosing mortgages by scire facias, a bill for an account of payments made on the mortgage should be filed in the scire facias proceedings, and not as an original suit. Black v. Bohlen, 175 Pa. St. 491, 34 Atl. 804.

Impeaching decree for fraud.— Where a petition for leave to file a bill of review has been denied, a bill afterward filed to set aside the decree for fraud is an original bill. Wickliffe v. Eve, 17 How. (U. S.) 468, 15 L. ed. 163.

22. Where a bill contains no prayer that it be regarded as a cross bill and heard with the original, the court may properly refuse to consider it as a cross bill. Kirkman v. Vanlier, 7 Ala. 217. On the other hand it has been held that a bill filed in one federal circuit court, reciting a bill to foreclose a railroad mortgage pending in another, but containing no description of the property or averments showing plaintiff's right to foreclose, cannot be regarded as an original bill. Mercantile Trust Co. v. Kanawha, etc., R. Co., 39 Fed. 337.

B. Form of the Bill — 1. In General. The bill in chancery was at first a very informal petition to the king or the chancellor.[24] It finally developed a highly complex and artificial form which has not inaptly been characterized as fantastic.[25] It consisted of nine parts, which will be considered in their order.[26] It has been said that while some of these are purely formal and some adapted only to occasional use,[27] the stating part and prayer for relief are alone essential to the validity of the bill.[28] Matters of form have never been regarded so much as at law,[29] but special rules regulating the form must of course be followed.[30]

2. Address. In the English chancery the bill opened with an address to the person having custody of the great seal[31] by name.[32] In the United States the address is usually to the court, but varies according to rule or usage in different jurisdictions.[33] Under the codes the pleadings in equity usually follow the same form as at law,[34] but where a distinction is preserved an address to the wrong side of the court is not a fatal error.[35] In the absence of rules to the contrary, there should be no caption or title to the bill, as is customary in pleadings at law,[36] and if such caption appears, it will be disregarded as surplusage, forming no part of the bill.[37]

3. Introduction. After the address comes a clause, commonly called the introduction, which states the names of plaintiffs and their places of abode.[38] As already shown,[39] only those are deemed parties who are named as such in the bill. Therefore the full names of all the parties should be stated.[40] The requirement of stating plaintiff's place of abode is said to be in order that the court and defendant may know where to resort to compel obedience to any order of the court, and particularly for the payment of costs or to punish improper conduct in the course of the suit.[41] While it has been held that a demurrer will lie for failure to state plaintiff's residence,[42] the English practice is merely to require plaintiff in such case to give security for costs.[43] The introduction should also state plaintiff's description,[44] and the capacity in which he sues.[45] In some jurisdictions the introduction must contain the names of defendants as well as plaintiffs.[46]

4. STATING PART OR PREMISES. This is an essential part of every bill in equity.[47] Its office is to state plaintiff's case,[48] and it must aver every fact necessary to show his title and right to relief.[49] Such facts must appear from the stating part and

U. S. Eq. cannot be supplied by reference to other parts of the bill.[50] The facts should be stated so distinctly and completely that the chancellor may from the face of the bill see that he has jurisdiction and tell precisely what decree should be rendered supposing the bill to be true.[51] The averments should be positive, certain, and unambiguous.[52] Properly the stating part is confined to a concise, positive statement of the facts essential to the relief sought,[53] leaving to the charging part statements of evidentiary facts, as a foundation for interrogatories, and matters in rebuttal of anticipated defenses;[54] but in modern practice it is often unnecessary sharply to separate these portions of the bill, and the stating part is made to include the matters which should more properly be charged.[55]

5. Confederacy Clause. The stating part of the bill regularly concluded with purely formal averments of a request to defendant to do that equity which the bill sought, and that plaintiff hoped that defendants would comply with that request.[56] Then followed a clause alleging a confederacy to injure plaintiff by defendants and other persons unknown, whose names plaintiff asked might, when discovered, be inserted in the bill, and a refusal by defendants to do as requested.[57] While it seems to have been once thought that this clause was necessary in order to lay the foundation for bringing in new parties by amendment,[58] it never seems to have been really essential for any purpose,[59] and statutes or rules often expressly provide for its omission.[60]

6. Charging Part. As in a bill framed with technical precision the stating part is confined to the essential allegations of ultimate facts constituting plaintiff's case;[61] all other facts which it is advisable to plead appear following the charge of confederacy and constitute what is known as the charges or charging part of the bill.[62] These facts are of two classes. The first consists of matters in avoidance of defenses interposed.[63] For this purpose the charges should be only of matters in avoidance of the defense, and should not state facts put in issue by the general replication.[64] The other class of charges are those inserted for the purpose of discovery.[65] As interrogatories cannot extend beyond the matters alleged in the bill, all facts in regard to which it is desired to propound interrogatories should be aptly charged.[66] As before stated the charging part is now frequently omitted or inserted in the stating part.[67]

7. Jurisdiction Clause. The jurisdiction clause followed the charges and consisted of a general averment that the acts complained of were contrary to equity and that plaintiff was without adequate remedy except in equity.[68] As the case must appear by the specific averments of the bill to be one of equitable cognizance,[69] without such specific averments the general averment of jurisdiction is unsupported;[70] and with such specific averments it is unnecessary.[71] While therefore the jurisdiction clause in bills in equity is commonly inserted it is therefore never essential.[72]

8. Interrogating Part. Following the jurisdiction clause there appears in the regular bill a prayer that defendants may answer the matters therein contained, according to their knowledge, information, and belief.[73] This general interrogatory in itself entitles plaintiff to a full disclosure as to the whole subject-matter of the bill,[74] but as specific and complete discovery was evaded in answering the general interrogatory, it became customary to insert in addition thereto specific questions covering those matters as to which plaintiff particularly desired discovery.[75] As the interrogatories merely serve to enforce a full answer to the bill, they must be confined to the case disclosed by the bill and to matters covered by statements or charges therein,[76] and defendant is not bound to answer an inter-

Barton Suit Eq. 37. The phrase, "to the end, therefore," preceding the interrogating part (which part is coupled with the prayer for relief by the conjunction "and") depends in its grammatical construction upon the prayer for process with which the sentence closes. This long sentence, embracing the interrogating part, the prayer for relief, and the prayer for process, is in skeleton form as follows: To the end therefore that defendants may answer the bill, and that they may be compelled to do as prayed, may it please your lordship, to grant a writ of subpœna, etc. See form in Barton Suit Eq. 29.

In the federal courts U. S. Eq. Rule 40, as originally adopted, required defendants to answer no statement or charge unless specially interrogated thereto but in 1850 (10 How. v.) this was repealed and it was provided that it shall not be necessary to interrogate a defendant specially upon any statement in the bill, unless plaintiff desires to do so to obtain a discovery. Rules 41 and 42 require the interrogatories to be numbered and a note to be attached at the foot of the bill, specifying by number the interrogatories which each defendant is required to answer. Rule 43 substitutes for the general interrogatory a form similar thereto but requiring answer only "to such of the several interrogatories hereinafter numbered and set forth, as by the note hereunder written they are respectively required to answer." A failure to specifically refer to the interrogatories in accordance with the form prescribed does not excuse defendant from answering. Federal Mfg., etc., Co. v. International Bank Note Co., 119 Fed. 385.

In Alabama similar rules exist and it is held that a failure to indicate at the foot of the bill the particular statements or interrogatories which each defendant is required to answer precludes plaintiff from taking advantage of a failure to answer the allegations of the bill. Martin v. Hewitt, 44 Ala. 418; Sprague v. Tyson, 44 Ala. 338. The rule is sufficiently complied with by dividing the bill into numbered sections and by a foot note requiring an answer to paragraphs numbered from one to five inclusive (Paige v. Broadfoot, 100 Ala. 610, 13 So. 426), or to answer "all the statements of the above bill" (McKenzie v. Baldridge, 49 Ala. 564).

rogatory without such foundation.[77] An interrogatory may not be based on a mere suggestion or hypothetical statement,[78] but it may call for particulars and circumstances embraced within a general charge, but not charged with particularity.[79] Interrogatories should be precise and full, but defendant will be required to answer without evasion their plain import.[80] It has been said that a bill which wholly omits the interrogating part is defective,[81] but in modern practice discovery is not always sought, and plaintiff is often permitted to waive the oath to the answer, thus reducing its effect to that of a pleading alone, and rendering special interrogatories consequently useless.[82]

9. Prayer For Relief. Following the interrogating part comes the prayer for relief, which is an essential part of every bill,[83] except perhaps in the case of suits by infants and suits concerning charities.[84] The practice is to ask the specific relief desired and to follow this with a prayer for general relief.[85] The English chancery was quite strict on a prayer for special relief in confining plaintiff to the relief prayed,[86] although it was conceded that a prayer for general relief was alone sufficient to entitle plaintiff to any decree required by the statements of the bill.[87] A special prayer must, to be available, be supported by the averments of the bill,[88] but if there be a proper prayer the bill will not be vitiated by the addition thereto of one that cannot be granted.[89] A special prayer will be held sufficient, although lacking formality and precision, if substantially it demands the appropriate relief,[90] and a prayer expressing the principal object is at least in connection with the general prayer sufficient without asking for all details essential to accomplishing the object.[91] The prayer for general relief should always be added in order that if plaintiff has mistaken the particular relief to which he is entitled the court may yet afford him that to which he has a right.[92] Errors in the special prayer are in most cases thereby cured,[93] but the court will not suffer a defendant to be taken by surprise, by granting under the general prayer relief inconsistent with that specially prayed or with the allegations of the bill.[94] It is not essential that the prayer for general relief shall closely follow the customary form,[95] and prayers of a very informal character have been held equivalent to one for general relief.[96] The court will determine the character of a bill from its entire substance and plaintiff cannot by the frame of his prayer give it a different character.[97] If plaintiff be in doubt as to the precise relief to which he is entitled, he may pray in the alternative for one species of relief and if that be denied then for another.[98]

10. Prayer For Process. The bill concludes with a prayer that a subpœna issue requiring defendants named to appear and answer the bill and abide the determination of the court.[99] No one is deemed a defendant unless he is named as such in the bill and process prayed against him,[1] and a prayer for process is usually held essential for the purpose of so indicating defendants.[2] There are, however, cases to the effect that it is sufficient if the bill elsewhere clearly designates those intended to be made defendants and process is actually issued and served upon them.[3] In order to accomplish the object of the prayer defendants should be actually named therein by their proper names,[4] and it is insufficient to describe them as the heirs of a named person,[5] or as "the defendants."[6] Any variation from this rule, as by describing defendants as persons unknown, belonging to a certain class, depends upon statute and the statute must be strictly pursued.[7] If a person is to be made defendant in two capacities, as in his own right and as a representative, process must be prayed against him in both capacities.[8] While courts have sometimes been strict in requiring the prayer to be precise,[9] certainty to a common intent is usually held sufficient.[10] The prayer for process is also the proper place to ask for a provisional writ, such as an injunction pendente lite or a writ of ne exeat.[11]

Reference to proof.— Failure to allege sufficient facts is not obviated by the statement that the facts will appear more fully by the proof. Briant v. Corpening, 62 N. C. 325.

A bill for relief and discovery is open to general demurrer unless it shows that plain-presumed.[14] What is essential to be alleged in particular cases is a question depending upon the nature and object of the case.[15]

2. Facts Must Be Averred With Certainty — a. In General. The allegations of a bill should be certain and specific.[16] As to the degree of certainty required,[17] two general rules have been announced, leading in most cases at least to the same result. The one is that the facts must be stated with such certainty that defendant may be distinctly informed of the nature of the claim made against him and of what he is called on to answer;[18] the other that they must be stated with such certainty that the court may ascertain plaintiff's rights and render a proper decree, if the bill should be adjudged true.[19]

b. Pleading Evidence. While the second of the rules above stated[20] requires sufficient detail to fix the terms of the decree, yet it is sufficient to state the ultitiff is entitled to some relief independent of the discovery. Welles v. River Raisin, etc., R. Co., Walk. (Mich.) 35; Meyers v. Schuman, (N. J. Ch. 1895) 31 Atl. 460.

mate fact, without the details and circumstances comprised within it or which go to prove it.[21] Mere evidentiary facts need not be pleaded,[22] and if they alone be pleaded without the ultimate fact which they tend to prove the bill is defective.[23] It is, however, often necessary to charge facts of an evidentiary character in order to lay the foundation for an interrogatory.[24]

c. Pleading Conclusions. On the other hand it is insufficient to plead merely conclusions; the facts should be pleaded from which the court rather than the pleader shall draw the conclusions.[25] It may not, however, be improper to allege a conclusion of law, in order to show the relations of the various facts to one another, and the end sought,[26] or where law and fact are so blended as to render separation impracticable.[27]

d. Pleading Positively. Facts should in general be pleaded positively[28] and in traversable form,[29] not hypothetically,[30] or by way of recital.[31] It is unimportant, however, what verb of assertion is used if the intention appears of making a positive allegation.[32] Merely inferential or argumentative statements are generally insufficient,[33] but such averments are sometimes tolerated when the implication

e. Pleading According to Legal Effect. It is in general sufficient, in equity as at law, to plead a contract according to its legal effect;[35] therefore no variance arises because of a difference in language between the bill and an instrument described therein, where the legal significance is the same.[36] A general averment of the legal effect of an instrument has been held sufficient when the bill was accompanied by a copy, from which the details fully appeared.[37] In pleading breach of covenant, however, the words of the covenant should be alleged or words coextensive with it in effect,[38] but if this be done it is immaterial whether the pleader styles it a condition or a covenant.[39] Where written instruments are ambiguous, it is proper to set them out in full, together with the construction which plaintiff claims for them.[40]

f. Pleading on Information and Belief. The rule requiring positiveness of statement[41] applies to facts essential to plaintiff's case and necessarily within his knowledge,[42] but is relaxed so as to permit an allegation on information and belief where the fact is not presumably within the knowledge of plaintiff, but is within that of defendant.[43] Considerable nicety has been indulged in as to the form of such an allegation. The proper form is to state the fact on information and belief and therefore charge it to be true.[44] An averment that plaintiff has been informed and believes and therefore avers is of doubtful sufficiency.[45] The pleader must allege the fact on information and belief and not that he is informed and believes that the fact exists.[46] A fortiori it is bad to allege merely that plaintiff is informed of the existence of the fact,[47] or to resort to any less positive form of statement.[48]

g. Facts Peculiarly Within Defendant's Knowledge. Aside from the relaxation of the rule requiring positiveness of statement and permitting allegations on information and belief of facts peculiarly within the knowledge of defendant,[49]

h. Rules as to Pleading Certain Classes of Facts — (i) Fraud. A bill seeking relief on the ground of fraud must distinctly and specifically charge the fraud.[51] It must state the specific facts and circumstances constituting the fraud,[52] and the facts so stated must be sufficient in themselves to show that the conduct complained of was fraudulent.[53] General charges of fraud or that acts were fraudulently committed are of no avail, unaccompanied by statements of specific facts amounting to fraud;[54] and on the other hand if there be sufficient facts stated to disclose fraud it is unnecessary to charge in express terms that the acts complained of were fraudulent.[55] Where the title of a purchaser is attacked for fraud the averment of notice to him must be distinct and direct.[56] While the specific facts constituting the fraud must be stated, it is not necessary to plead all the minutiæ which may be offered in evidence in proof of such facts,[57] and all that the rule requires is that the particular character of the fraud be made known, which may sometimes be done in quite general terms.[58] Where the fraudulent transaction was between third persons and not within plaintiff's knowledge, he may charge it as definitely as possible, averring his ignorance as an excuse for not making the charge more specific.[59] In determining whether the charges of fraud are sufficiently certain the whole bill must be looked to.[60]

which the court can determine whether plaintiff will probably be able to establish his claim;[67] and where the ground of such set-off is that one debt was contracted on faith of the other, a general averment to that effect is insufficient, but the specific facts showing it to be so must be stated.[68] An averment of tender should state the amount, the time, the manner, and show that no more was due.[69] A party claiming the benefit of a statute must state facts bringing himself within its provisions,[70] and in so doing an exception contained in the enacting clause must be negatived, while one not so contained, but found in a proviso or subsequent section, is a matter of defense.[71]

Terms of instrument.— But where a bill sets forth the terms of an instrument so as to show title in plaintiff, it will not be presumed that there were other provisions in the instrument defeating such title. Brewster v. Cahill, 199 Ill. 309, 65 N. E. 233; Cavender essential to show a vested right,[78] and this by averment of facts and not of mere conclusion.[79] The title shown may be either legal or equitable,[80] but the nature of the title must appear.[81] In bills to enforce a chose in action a consideration must be stated.[82] A general allegation of title is sufficient against one having himself no right,[83] but otherwise it is necessary to show the derivation of the title with certainty.[84] Plaintiffs claiming as heirs must not merely allege that they are such, but must show the relationship.[85] Where probate is not necessary to vest title under a will it is not essential to allege probate,[86] but in claiming under a bequest the domicile of the testator must be stated, as the law of the domicile determines the sense of the will.[87] Where plaintiff claims as a substituted trustee

78. A bill, reciting the soliciting of plans for a state capitol under the assurance that a board of experts would select eight designs, from which the commissioners would choose the architect of the building, and asking that the commissioners be compelled to make the choice, was bad because it did not allege that the plaintiff's design was one of the eight selected. Sufficient averments.— A bill to restrain a probate judge from selling a lot under an act to carry out a trust relating to a town site sufficiently shows title by alleging a conveyance to plaintiff by a former probate judge and that plaintiff is the owner of the legal estate. Logan v. Clough, 2 Colo. 323. A bill alleging an assignment of a mortgage in writing and sealed, conveying all the mortgagee's right and referring to the assignment, is sufficient without showing that the assignment was acknowledged or recorded. Lovell v. Farrington, 50 Me. 239.

85. Norris v. Lemen, 28 W. Va. 336; Bishop v. York, 118 Fed. 352. under a will, he must state facts showing how the vacancy occurred and that he was legally appointed, and it is not sufficient to allege that he was duly appointed.[88]

5. Relation of Defendants to Subject-Matter. The bill must show such a relation of defendants to the subject-matter as to charge them with the liability,[89] or some interest in the subject-matter which will be affected by the decree.[90] It is not, however, essential to state with particularity the nature of defendant's claim, as that may not be known.[91]

6. Injury to Plaintiff. The bill must show that plaintiff has sustained or will sustain some substantial injury by reason of the facts complained of,[92] and not by general averment, but by specific facts.[93] An injury slight in amount is, however, sufficient to sustain a suit for fraud,[94] and the court will interpose for the protection of property against wrongful acts which will in any way injuriously and irreparably affect its use.[95] The want of an adequate remedy at law must also appear from specific averments.[96]

7. Doing and Offering to Do Equity. The bill must allege that plaintiff has done, offered to do, or is ready to do, according to circumstances, everything necessary to entitle him to the relief he seeks,[97] or sufficiently excuse his failure to do so.[98] Where a tender of performance before suit is alleged the bill must show a continuing ability and readiness to perform.[99] Where the suit is to obtain relief against an inequitable demand, but there is or may be something justly due, the bill must offer to pay what may be found to be so justly due.[1]

8. Excusing Laches. Where on the face of the bill it appears that there has been long delay in instituting the suit, the bill must proceed by specific averment to account for and excuse the delay.[2] A general averment of plaintiff's ignorance of his rights is insufficient; he must show how he came to be so long ignorant and when and how he discovered them.[3] Where under such circumstances the bill charges fraud the time of its discovery must be stated,[4] with all circumstances requisite to bring plaintiff within the rules excusing his delay.[5] No excuse need be alleged, where the bill does not on its face and without resorting to inference show unreasonable delay.[6]

9. Excusing Non-Joinder of Parties. Where the court is called upon to dispense with a party ordinarily necessary,[7] the reason for so doing must be stated in the bill.[8] If, however, the facts excusing the non-joinder appear in the bill, it is not essential that they be formally alleged as an excuse.[9]

D. Exhibits. A bill must set forth a copy or aver the terms of an instrument vital to plaintiff's demand.[10] The method of so doing in the English chancery was to state in the bill the legal effect of the instrument,[11] and then refer to it in some such words as the following: "As in and by the said indenture, reference being thereunto had, when produced, will more fully appear." such a reference was to give the pleader the benefit of the entire instrument, as if pleaded, but not as evidence.[12] In this country it is usually required that the instrument referred to or a copy thereof be annexed to the bill as an exhibit.[13] This does not, however, dispense with proper averments in the bill itself as to the substance of such instruments.[14] The rule does not apply to instruments pleaded incidentally and not as the foundation of the suit,[15] nor to instruments not in plaintiff's control; but in the latter case the bill must set forth the excuse for not producing them.[16] It is sometimes required that copies of a record in another suit shall be attached.[17] The general rule is that instruments properly referred to and exhibited become for all purposes of pleading a part of the bill,[18] and consequently on demurrer may aid a defective statement in the bill itself.[19] The exhibit prevails as against an inconsistent averment in the bill.[20]

E. Construction and Conclusiveness of Allegations. While it is said that pleadings are not construed in equity with so high a degree of technicality as at law,[21] and that the court looks to the entire substance of the bill to determine its nature and effect,[22] the legal rule nevertheless prevails that where the allegations

Inconsistent alternative relief.— One cannot seek to enforce an equity under an instrument, and as an alternative ask to have it annulled (Walthall v. Rives, 34 Ala. 91; Rankin v. Jones, 55 N. C. 169; Bynum v. Ewart, 90 Tenn. 655, 18 S. W. 394), nor can he ask for the execution of a trust, and in the alternative for partition (Pensenneau v. Pensenneau, 22 Mo. 27). Neither can he ask to have a mortgage declared void and in the alternative to redeem (Tatum v. Walker, 77 Ala. 563); but he may allege full payment and offer to pay any balance that may be found due (Fields v. Helms, 70 Ala. 460). In Alabama one may not ask in the alternative that a conveyance be set aside or treated as a general assignment. Brooks v. Lowenstein, 124 Ala. 158, 27 So. 520; Heyer v. Bromberg, 74 Ala. 524; Moog v. Talcott, 72 Ala. 210;

remedy for repugnancy is by demurrer,[30] and a failure to demur waives the objection to the entire bill.[31] But, although objection be not made, the court will see that the litigation is put in form to be intelligently disposed of, and where defendants have accepted the bill in one aspect the court will treat it in that light alone.[32] Inconsistent charges may be made in order to obtain discovery, as they are merely ancillary and not the basis of relief.[33] So where the object of a bill is merely to prevent disturbance of an established possession different and inconsistent sources of title may be alleged.[34] The rule against repugnancy does not prevent the framing of a bill with a double aspect,[35] where the pleader is ignorant of the precise state of facts upon which his rights depend,[36] so that if one ground fail the other may be relied on.[37] Thus an infant complainant may seek to establish as the facts may warrant, either a partnership or a resulting trust, because of the investment of his money in an enterprise by his guardian.[38] So too one may allege that a deed was never delivered or if it was that the delivery was procured by fraud,[39] or, where it was doubtful whether a mortgage had been converted into a complete title, that title be quieted or that the mortgage be foreclosed,[40] or where the character of an instrument was doubtful, as to being a mortgage or a contract to sell, that it be enforced as that question should be determined.[41] A bill may be framed in a double aspect, if under either phase plaintiff is entitled to the same relief;[42] but it is bad if only one phase shows a right to relief,[43] or if the claims are so inconsistent as to destroy one another.[44] A bill cannot be framed in a double aspect where the two aspects require different parties.[45]

G. Multifariousness — 1. Definition. Multifariousness consists in improperly joining in one bill several distinct and independent matters and thereby confounding them.[46]

2. NOT DETERMINED BY FIXED RULES. The question as to what demands may properly be asserted in the same suit, or in other words, what constitutes multifariousness, rests largely in the discretion of the court,[47] to be exercised according to the requirements of convenience,[48] and in such a way as to avoid hardship or injustice to the parties,[49] and is therefore said to rest upon the circumstances of each particular case and to be subject to no general rule.[50] While it is true that the question is not governed by well defined technical rules, as is the joinder of law actions,[51] or as is generally the joinder of actions under the codes,[52] it will be found that certain well defined principles are recognized by the courts, not perhaps as universally controlling, but as guides toward a correct decision.[53]

3. DETERMINED FROM BILL ALONE. It is said that in determining the question of multifariousness the court will not look beyond the bill,[54] and by the statement therein of plaintiff's case, multifariousness not being caused by matters inserted by way of charge,[55] or by averments merely incidental or by way of inducement, not forming the basis of an independent demand.[56] Questions of very similar

51. See JOINDER AND SPLITTING OF ACTIONS.

52. See JOINDER AND SPLITTING OF ACTIONS. The joinder of causes under the codes, whether they be legal or equitable, is governed by specific statutes, and consequently the question in code states is one of statutory construction and not of multifariousness, as understood in the chancery practice. As nearly all the codes, however, provide that causes may be joined if they arise out of the same transaction, or transactions connected with the same subject of action, and as it has been pertinently hinted that this loose expression was to preserve the former equity jurisdiction and to justify the interpretation which should be found most convenient and best calculated to promote the ends of justice. New York, etc., R. Co. v. Schuyler, 17 N. Y. 592; Heggie v. Hill, 95 N. C. 303. See also many code cases cited in the subjoined sections.

53. In the subjoined subdivisions under this head the attempt is made to state these principles and cite the cases recognizing them, but not to enter into the consideration of their detailed application. To do the latter, with a view to harmonizing conclusions, would involve a minute examination of the circumstances of each case and transcend all reasonable limits.

character arise, however, with reference to the propriety of supplemental bills and cross bills, but the objection to foreign matter in these is not technically based on multifariousness.[57]

4. GENERAL CAUSES OF MULTIFARIOUSNESS. Multifariousness may arise either from the misjoinder of distinct demands or causes, or from the misjoinder of parties plaintiff or defendant, whose demands or liabilities are distinct and independent, and such is the usual classification adopted in discussing the subject.[58]

5. MISJOINDER OF CAUSES — a. Joinder of Entirely Distinct Causes. The general rule is that there cannot be joined in one suit entirely distinct matters, each of which would be sufficient to ground a bill.[59] Where the parties are the same an objection for multifariousness will not be good unless the matters are wholly distinct,[60] and a similarity in the natures of the different demands without other connection is often held sufficient to permit their joinder.[61]

b. Statement of More Than One Good Ground of Suit. Mere surplusage will not render a bill multifarious,[62] and therefore a bill is not rendered multifarious if in addition to stating a case for equitable relief it contains allegations with reference to another matter, but insufficient to entitle plaintiff to relief with reference thereto.[63] The addition of a prayer for relief not warranted by the allegations of the bill does not therefore render the bill multifarious.[64] To have that effect the bill must state two or more good grounds of suit,[65] and each ground must be sufficient as stated to support an independent bill in equity.[66] Therefore a bill is not multifarious for adding to an equitable cause of action matter in which there is no equity,[67] or matters over which a court of equity has no independent jurisdiction.[68] For this reason the insertion in a bill of an exclusively legal demand will not make it multifarious.[69] Although the bill contains averments which might make it multifarious, the objection is obviated if no relief is prayed concerning such matters.[70]

57. See infra, X; XII.

58. See 1 Daniell Ch. Pr. 437 et seq.; Story Eq. Pl. §§ 271, 279, 280. Strictly speaking multifariousness always relates to subject-matter, but as the propriety of joining several subjects in one suit depends sometimes chiefly or solely on their relations to one another, and again on the relations of the parties to the various subjects, the classification is convenient if not entirely logical.

entitle plaintiff to the same relief,[71] or by being properly framed in a double aspect,[72] or by praying for relief in the alternative.[73] A bill is, however, multifarious which seeks an adjudication of discordant interests,[74] or which sets up different claims which are inconsistent and repugnant.[75]

d. Multiplicity of Suits. The avoidance of a multiplicity of suits being in itself a ground of equitable jurisdiction,[76] a bill will not be held multifarious if the matters therein contained can be conveniently disposed of together and a multiplicity of suits thereby avoided.[77] But a bill will not be sustained on such ground when it seeks to litigate entirely distinct controversies between different parties.[78]

e. Singleness or Duplicity in General Object. In accordance with the aim of equity to administer complete relief in one suit,[79] a bill is not multifarious so long as it seeks to enforce a single right, although that enforcement demands an investigation of several matters, and relief of a complex character and consisting of different elements.[80] The court will in a single suit investigate and determine all questions incidental to the determination of the main controversy,[81] and will grant all relief incidental to the accomplishment of the main object of the bill.[82]

An amendment asking additional relief for the enforcement of the same right asserted in the original bill does not render it multifarious (Eberle v. Heaton, 124 Mich. 205, 82 N. W. 820), nor does an amendment which seeks to take advantage of a new remedy, provided by statute after the original bill was filed (Irons v. Manufacturers' Nat. Bank, 17 Fed. 308). But an amendment asserting a new and distinct right renders the bill demurrable, as where the original bill sought foreclosure of a mortgage and, after the filing of a cross bill attacking the validity of the mortgage plaintiff amended, asserting a judgment lien for a different debt. As instances of the granting of all relief essential to the enforcement of plaintiff's fundamental right may be mentioned bills for the reformation and foreclosure of a mortgage,[83] to reform and enforce other instruments,[84] to foreclose a mortgage and cancel a prior mortgage,[85] to establish a title and for partition,[86] to prevent future injuries and to recover for injuries already sustained from the same cause,[87] and the many cases where injunctions are granted as incidental to other relief.[88] So while it is not proper in one bill to seek at the same time relief and discovery in aid of an action at law,[89] or the perpetuation of testimony,[90] still, either discovery [91] or a commission for the examination of witnesses [92] may be had where incidental to the relief sought. A creditor's bill having for its single general object the obtaining of satisfaction of the debt may include as embraced therein several specific demands.[93] A single right may be enforced against different

93. Such a bill may seek to set aside fraudulent conveyances and also to reach equitable interests (Randolph v. Daly, 16 N. J. Eq. 313; Way v. Bragaw, 16 N. J. Eq. 213, 84 Am. Dec. 147), to set aside such deeds and to subject the land to the payment of a particular debt (Guyton v. Terrell, 132 Ala. 66, 31 So. 82; Wedgeworth v. Wedgeworth, 84 Ala. 274, 4 So. 149; Hutchinson v. Maxwell, 100 Va. 169, 40 S. Err. & App. 1903) 55 Atl. 738), or to subject land attached and remove the lien of a judgment fraudulent against the attachment (Stewart v. Stewart, 27 W. Va. 167). So a bill has been sustained after the return of an execution to aid a second execution and for a discovery of equitable assets (Clark v. Davis, Harr. (Mich.) 227), and where the debtor and grantee were partners, for an account of the partnership in order to disclose a want of consideration for the conveyance (Nulton v. Isaacs, 30 Gratt. (Va.) 726). Where the judgment debtor is deceased, the bill may charge against the representatives a devastavit and fraudulent conveyance of the debtor's property. Handley v. Heflin, 84 Ala. 600, 4 So. 725; Ragsdale v. Holmes, 1 S. C. 91. But see Jackson v. Forrest, 2 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 576. It was held that it is not multifarious for a creditor of an insolvent corporation to seek to set aside a fraudulent conveyance and to enforce the sole stock-holder's personal liability (Swepson v. Exchange, etc., Bank, 9 Lea (Tenn.) 713), but that it is multifarious to seek to set aside a fraudulent assignment by the corporation to enforce the individual liability of the corporators, and also to hold them personally liable as members of an unincorporated association (Ohio L. Ins., etc., Co. v. Merchants Ins., etc., Co., 11 Humphr. (Tenn.) 1, 53 Am. Dec. 742. Compare also O'Bear Jewelry Co. v. Volfer, 106 Ala. 205, 17 So. 525, 74 Am. St. Rep. 31, 28 L. R. A. 707; Allen v. Montgomery R. Co., 11 Ala. 437). It is multifarious to seek satisfaction out of property assigned by the debtor without consideration, and also damages for waste committed on land purchased by plaintiff under an execution on his judgment. Boyd v. Hoyt, 5 Paige (N. Y.) 65. Creditors were not per-defendants by awarding against each the appropriate relief.[94] Where on the other hand the bill asserts claims arising out of distinct rights and injuries, and therefore pursues not one main object but several distinct objects, it is generally multifarious.[95]

f. Identity of Subject-Matter. Frequently the fact that demands which are otherwise entirely distinct relate to the same subject-matter affords a sufficient connection to justify their union in one bill, and avoids an objection for multifariousness.[96] Indeed for the purpose of affording complete relief such joinder is mitted to set aside a fraudulent conveyance and at the same time to compel a settlement of an assignment for the benefit of creditors to remove the trustee and have a receiver appointed. often necessary.[97] A complete identity of subject-matter is not essential, it sometimes being convenient and even necessary to adjust at once rights concerning property which is only in part the same.[98]

g. Matters Arising Out of Same Transaction. The fact that different matters and demands arose out of the same transaction or series of transactions may render it convenient to dispose of them together, and therefore a bill uniting them all will be proper.[99] The particular requisites to a joinder on this ground are stated variously. A frequent statement is that different causes arising out of the same transaction may be joined when all the defendants are interested in the same claim of right and the relief sought is of the same general character.[1] Again it is said that causes may be joined if they arise out of the same transaction or series of transactions, forming one course of dealing and all tending to one end and if one connected story can be told of the whole.[2] Where such common origin leads to a commingling of controversies, their joinder in a suit to which all concerned are parties becomes necessary.[3] Perhaps no more definite test can be safely proposed than that of convenience in adjudicating the whole matter, arising from its common origin.[4] The most familiar application of the rule is doubtless in the case of bills embracing different injuries and demanding varied relief, all growing out of a single fraudulent scheme, such bills being sustained, whether directed against one defendant, or against several participating in the fraud.[5] A joinder may be justified by the fact that all the rights involved arise out of and depend upon the same contract,[6] or depend upon construction of the same instrument.[7]

h. Matters Requiring Different Decrees. It has been held that a bill is necessarily multifarious which presents matters so dissimilar as to require different decrees for their adjustment,[8] but this is not undisputed.[9]

6. Misjoinder of Plaintiffs — a. Plaintiffs With Distinct Claims. Several plaintiffs without community of interest and whose demands are distinct cannot unite in one bill to enforce such demands.[10] The rule extends so far as to prohibit the joinder with a demand in which all the plaintiffs are interested, of another in which only a part have an interest.[11]

b. What Community of Interest Essential to Joinder. In order to permit a joinder of plaintiffs, it is not essential that their demands should be joint; it is sufficient if they are all interested, although distinctly, in the subject-matter and the object to be attained.[12] Indeed a common interest in the object to be attained may in itself be sufficient to sustain the joinder,[13] as where several property-owners unite to prevent the collection of an illegal tax,[14] or the unlawful use of the street on which their property abuts.[15] Plaintiffs having distinct interests, but whose titles are derived from a common source, may unite in a bill to protect against an attack reaching that common source.[16] The fact that the injury to each is caused by the same act has been held to afford a sufficient connection to maintain a joint suit.[17] It is also held that plaintiffs may join, although their interests be separate, where the relief sought by each involves the same question, requires the same evidence, and leads to the same decree.[18] A mere similarity in distinct wrongs committed is not alone sufficient.[19] A similarity in the injuries sustained by different plaintiffs does not authorize a joinder.[20] Where the requisite community of interest exists it is immaterial that the plaintiffs are interested in different degrees and to unequal extents,[21] but persons holding antagonistic interests cannot join as plaintiffs.[22]

c. One Plaintiff Suing in Two Capacities. A single plaintiff may not unite in one bill distinct demands accruing to him in different capacities.[23] A stock-holder in a corporation cannot assert an individual right as stock-holder and a right of the corporation itself,[24] nor can one assert a single right of his own and one on behalf of himself and others.[25] The rule relates, however, to distinct demands and does not forbid the assertion of title or right to the same demand in two capacities,[26] unless the two claims are inconsistent;[27] nor does it forbid suing in two rights where the subject-matter is so interdependent as to demand a joint adjudication.[28]

A bill by creditors against stock-holders of an insolvent corporation is multifarious when it joins defendants, some of whom are liable to one plaintiff, some to another, and some for

must be some connection in interest among the defendants against the plaintiff.[30] The joinder of defendants who have no connection with the controversy creates multifariousness.[31]

b. Interests of Some Defendants Not Extending to Entire Bill. A bill is multifarious which unites distinct matters, if any defendant is unconnected in interest or liability with any one of such matters,[32] as where a joint claim against all the defendants is combined with a separate claim against one of them alone.[33] This rule must, however, be confined to bills presenting several distinct objects, for it is not necessary that each defendant's interest should extend to all the matters of a bill with a single general object; it is sufficient if each defendant is interested in some matter involved which is connected with the others.[34] So a defendant

A fortuitous connection not affecting the matter in litigation is insufficient to permit a joinder. One cannot in a single bill enforce performance against the vendor of land used by plaintiff and a third person for partnermay be brought in for the purpose of determining an ancillary matter, the determination of which is incident to the adjudication of the main controversy, although such defendant's interest extends only to such ancillary matter.[35] Where demands against different defendants are so connected that one cannot well be investigated without the other the two may be joined.[36]

c. Bills Presenting a Single Right. Since a bill is single and does not misjoin different causes so long as its object is the complete enforcement of one general right,[37] the fact that different defendants have distinct interests or liabilities with reference to that right does not render a bill multifarious.[38] Thus where the object of the action is to enforce a right to property under an entire claim of title the bill is not multifarious in joining defendants asserting distinct interests or interests in distinct portions,[39] although they claim under separate convey-

ances,[40] or under different sources of title.[41] One may always join as defendants, in order to obtain a complete adjudication, all persons having or claiming an interest in the subject-matter in controversy which can be conveniently settled in the suit,[42] and the introduction of such parties does not render the bill multifarious.[43]

d. Common Interest in Question Involved. If a bill presents a common point of litigation, decisive of the entire matter, it is not multifarious, although the interests or liabilities of defendants are unconnected, except by such common question.[44]

It is sufficient to avoid the objection also that all the defendants are alike interested in defeating plaintiff's claim.[45]

e. Defendants Acting in Concert. A plaintiff may proceed against several different defendants for appropriate relief against each, and because of acts separately committed, where he alleges that all was done in pursuance of a combination or conspiracy among such defendants.[46] The various acts resorted to are then but the details of a single scheme in which all are participants.[47] The charge of conspiracy must, however, be specific; the common confederacy charge in a bill not supporting a joinder of defendants charged with distinct, wrongful acts.[48] The rule has its most familiar application in bills charging defendants with acting in pursuance of a common scheme to defraud plaintiff,[49] but applies as well to all cases where defendants participate in a common injury to plaintiff,[50] and extends to cases where such common injury results from the combined independent acts of defendants without actual collusion among them.[51]

f. Seeking Different Relief Against Different Defendants. From what has already been said,[52] it follows that if circumstances exist justifying on other grounds a joinder of demands against different defendants, the mere fact that different forms of relief may be required as to each does not render the bill multifarious;[53] but the administering of different forms of relief affects the question of convenience in disposing of the matter in one suit, and in connection with other features it is sometimes mentioned as a reason for holding the bill to be bad.[54]

g. Same Defendant Sued in Different Capacities. A bill cannot unite distinct demands against the same defendant, where his liability upon one is individual and upon the other is in a representative capacity;[55] but the rule is confined to the presentation of distinct demands and does not extend to cases where defendant is otherwise a proper party in both capacities.[56]

8. Remedies. The proper remedy for multifariousness is by demurrer on that ground.[57] If defendant does not demur, he waives the objection.[58] Such waiver

etor, a bill against all so contributing to the injury is not multifarious. Woodruff v. North Bloomfield Gravel Min. Co., 16 Fed. 25, 8 Sawy. 628. In Pennsylvania it seems that the propriety of a joinder in such a case depends upon whether a proper case is made out for the prevention of multiplicity of suits. Compare Anderson v. Lehigh Coal, etc., Co., 9 Pa. the objection may frequently be obviated by abandonment of the objectionable matter.[63]

H. Impertinence and Scandal — 1. What Constitutes Impertinence. Impertinence has been said to consist in the introduction of unnecessary matter of every description,[64] but this definition is misleading. A better statement is that it consists of any allegation that is irrelevant to the material issues made or tendered.[65] The fact that an allegation is not strictly necessary does not render it impertinent; to have that effect it must have no bearing on the issue.[66] Allegations in the way of inducement, explanatory of essential averments, are not impertinent;[67] nor are matters of evidence or collateral facts, the admission of which by defendant would be material in establishing the general allegations of the bill or in determining the nature or extent of the relief to be granted.[68] The pleader may properly, after stating facts sufficient to entitle plaintiff to relief, add cumulative facts to intensify without varying the right claimed.[69] On the other hand, although there is some opinion to the contrary,[70] matter in its nature pertinent and even essential may become impertinent from its manner of statement, as by being prolix,[71] and especially is this true of redundant matter, as where instruments properly described are again set forth in hæc verba.[72]

2. What Constitutes Scandal. Neither suitors nor solicitors should be allowed to manifest their personal feelings in the bill,[73] therefore matter which is scandalous or unnecessarily reflects upon defendant should be stricken out.[74] Scandal consists of any unnecessary allegation which bears cruelly upon the moral character of an individual, or states anything which is contrary to good manners, or anything which is unbecoming the dignity of the court to hear, or which charges some person with a crime, not necessary to be shown in the cause.[75] Reckless charges of fraud and conspiracy may amount to scandal.[76] No averment is, however, open to an objection for scandal, unless it is also impertinent, for a charge, no matter how defamatory it may be, is not scandalous if it be relevant to the case made by the bill.[77]

3. REMEDIES. While impertinence and scandal are serious vices in a bill they are not grounds of demurrer.[78] The remedy is generally provided by rule, and is usually by exception specifying the objectionable matter, and a reference to a master to strike it out.[79] The court has, however, the inherent power to protect its records against such matter and may act sua sponte.[80] Counsel signing the bill are sometimes charged with costs.[81]

VIII. PLEADINGS IN DEFENSE.

A. Modes of Defense — 1. IN GENERAL. A defendant appearing has the election of four regular modes of defense to the bill, to wit, disclaimer,[82] demurrer, plea, and answer.[83] While merely giving a pleading sufficient in substance a wrong name is not fatal,[84] care must be taken that the pleading resorted to be in substance sufficient as the appropriate mode of defense, for often a single mode is alone appropriate to the assertion of particular defensive matter.[85] Regard

79. 1 Daniell Ch. Pr. 456.

In the federal courts the matter is governed by rules 26 and 27, providing that every bill shall be expressed in as brief and succinct terms as it reasonably can be and shall contain no unnecessary recital of deeds, documents, contracts, or other instruments in haec verba, or any other impertinent matter or any scandalous matter not relevant to the suit, and for written specific exceptions to be filed on or before the next rule day after the process shall be returnable, and for reference to a master thereon, with provisions for costs.

Objection may be taken on taxation of costs. Hood v. Inman, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 437.

In the federal courts, equity rule 27, requiring written exceptions on or before the next rule day after the return of process, does not deprive the federal courts of the power of acting on their own initiative. Kelley v. Boettcher, 85 Fed. 55, 29 C. C. A. 14. It was held proper where a bill contained scandalous charges, supported by unfounded evidence, to dismiss it, without considering a partial equity in favor of plaintiff arising from an estoppel. Brown v. Davis, 62 Fed. 519, 10 C. C. A. 532.

81. McConnel v. Holobush, 11 Ill. 61; Mitford Eq. Pl. 47. Bacon Ord. 56 provides for reproof or punishment of counsel signing.

U. S. Eq. Rule 26 provides that if the master finds in support of the exceptions, plaintiff shall pay defendant all his costs in the suit up to that time, unless the court otherwise orders. If the master reports against the exceptions plaintiff shall be entitled to costs occasioned by the reference.

82. The reasons for treating a disclaimer as a defense and distinct from an answer are stated infra, VIII, B.

83. Barton Suit Eq. 101; 2 Daniell Ch. Pr. 2; Mitford Eq. Pl. 97; Story Eq. Pl. 436. The election belongs to defendant; plaintiff cannot compel him to demur to test the sufficiency of his bill. Davison v. Johnson, 16 N. J. Eq. 112.

85. Where a defect appears on the face of a bill the objection must be raised by demurrer and not by plea. Mains v. Homer Steel-Fence Co., 116 Mich. 526, 74 N. W. 735; Sperry v. Miller, 2 Barb. But a good plea may be presented by averring, along with facts contained in the bill, additional facts making out a defense. Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Texas, etc., R. Co., 50 Fed. 151.

The defense of innocent purchaser cannot be raised by demurrer but must be set up by plea or answer. Heatherington v. Lewenberg, 61 Miss. 372; Scudder v. Van Amburgh, 4 Edw. (N. Y.) 29; High v. Batte, 10 Yerg. (Tenn.) 335.

Defense consisting of variety of circumstances, making it necessary to go into evidence at large, must be made by answer and not by plea. Carroll v. Potter, Walk. (Mich.) 355; Loud v. Sergeant, 1 Edw. (N. Y.) 164.

For other illustrations of the necessity of must also be had to local statutes and rules, which have greatly changed, and differently in different jurisdictions, the chancery rules affecting the choice of a defense.[86]

2. Conjoint Resort to Different Modes of Defense. It is not essential that the entire bill be met by the same mode of defense.[87] Defendant may demur to a part of the bill and answer the residue;[88] plead to part and answer the residue;[89] demur to part, plead to part, and answer the residue;[90] or demur to part, plead to part, disclaim as to part, and answer the residue.[91] Where such course is adopted it is essential that the pleading designate with precision the portion of the bill to which it is intended to apply.[92] The entire bill must, however, be met by some form of defense; defendant must answer all which he does not otherwise cover.[93] On the other hand care should be taken not to cover any portion of the bill by two modes of defense, the rule being that one may not at the same time demur and plead to the same matter,[94] or demur and answer the same matter.[95] A like rule forbids a plea and defensive answer to the same mat-properly selecting the mode of defense see the discussions of grounds of demurrers and pleas infra, VIII, C, D.

86. Want of necessary parties must in the federal courts be raised by answer (U. S. v. Gillespie, 6 Fed. 803), but elsewhere it may be raised by plea (Ulrici v. Papin, 11 Mo. 42; Scholl v. Schoener, 1 Woodw. (Pa.) 200). See supra, V, H, 3, b.

Ala. Code, § 701, abolishing the replication, permits plaintiff to ignore allegations in the answer not set out by special plea and not responsive to the bill. Stein v. McGrath, 128 Ala. 175, 30 So. 792.

In Pennsylvania, under rule of court, all defenses are made by answer or demurrer. By virtue thereof everything which might heretofore have been raised by demurrer or plea may now be raised by answer (Brower v. Kantner, 190 Pa. St. 182, 43 Atl. 7), and a plea of the statute of limitations will be dismissed (Moore v. Bush, 5 Pa. Dist. 141, 17 Pa. Co. Ct. 252).

Tenn. Code, § 4384, prescribes the order of defenses and the adoption of one waives those preceding it. Cooke v. Richards, 11 Heisk. 711. Defendant cannot therefore reserve the benefit of a demurrer in his answer. Lowry v. Naff, 4 Coldw. 370.

Although objection to answering improper matter may, under the local practice, be saved by defendant in his answer, it is said to be the better practice to plead or demur. Atterberry v. Knox, 8 Dana (Ky.) 282.

93. Graves v. Blondell, 70 Me. 190; Ferguson v. O'Harra, 8 Fed. Cas. No. 4,740, Pet. C. C. 493. This rule follows from the importance formerly attached to discovery, and consequent compulsion of an answer to a good bill. The special defenses by demurrer or plea are used to show that the requirement of an answer would be improper, the disclaimer that it would be unnecessary. 2 Daniell Ch. Pr. 3; Mitford Eq. Pl. 1. Therefore defendant must answer all that he has not shown reasons for not answering.

Where a plea presents matters in full defense, it is unnecessary to answer parts of the bill not involved in the subject of the plea. Sims v. Lyle, 22 Fed. Cas. No. 12,891, 4 Wash. 301.

Demurrer in answer.— Defendant cannot incorporate in an answer to the whole bill a demurrer to any part of it (Bird v. Magowan, (N. J. Ch. 1898) 43 Atl. 278), unless at least the demurrer is left for consideration as if it stood alone (Holt v. Daniels, 61 Vt. 89, 17 Atl. 786).

ter,[96] but under some circumstances it is necessary to fortify a plea by an answer giving discovery as to the matter to which the plea relates.[97] The consequence of violating these rules is in general that a plea is taken to overrule a demurrer which it overlaps, and an answer to overrule a demurrer or a plea, but the practice in this regard now varies.[98]

B. Disclaimers. A disclaimer is a pleading under oath whereby a defendant denies that he has or claims any right to the thing in demand and renounces all claim thereto.[99] It is sometimes treated as a form of answer,[1] but is really a distinct kind of defense,[2] as it has for its object the immediate termination of the suit,[3] by showing that a further answer is unnecessary.[4] It is therefore usually treated as a separate mode of defense.[5] A disclaimer is available only to a defendant charged merely with having an interest in the subject-matter and not with a liability with reference thereto.[6] It is proper only where his renunciation of interest should lead to a dismissal of the bill against him.[7] One cannot disclaim where he is charged with fraud,[8] or where a liability remains for costs.[9] The disclaimer must be full and explicit,[10] and must renounce not only the interest charged in the bill but all right in any capacity and to any extent.[11] It may, however, be restricted to a portion of the subject-matter.[12] It has been remarked that a disclaimer can seldom be put in alone.[13] Defendant may have had an interest with which he has parted and an answer is therefore required to show if this be a fact, and if so to enable plaintiff to make the proper parties.[14] A defendant who disclaims cannot be compelled to answer as to the after value of the property.[15] Plaintiff may, if he thinks the disclaimer improper or not supported by sufficient answer, present the question by exceptions in the same manner as to an answer;[16] otherwise, he should dismiss with costs as to the disclaiming defendant or amend.[17] He may, however, pray a decree against defendant on satisfying the court that he had probable cause for bringing the bill, but such decree is usually granted without costs.[18] In form a disclaimer is like an answer, having regularly the same commencement and conclusion.[19]

Where a demurrer and answer are filed, the court may permit the answer to be withdrawn and the case heard on the demurrer. In re Finley, 196 Pa. St. 140, 46 Atl. 443.

C. Demurrers — 1. Nature and Function — a. Testing Sufficiency of Bill. While a demurrer is said to be an answer in law to a bill,[20] inasmuch as it is a mode of defense,[21] its function is much the same as at law,[22] being to test the sufficiency of the bill.[23] Its purpose is to determine whether upon the facts as stated plaintiff is entitled to relief in equity,[24] or defendant is required to answer.[25] It is to be observed that a demurrer may challenge not only the sufficiency in substance of the facts alleged, but their sufficiency as stated, and may therefore reach defects in the form of the bill.[26] It will lie not only to an entire bill but to some distinct portion of one.[27]

b. Use Confined to Bills. Under distinctive equity procedure the use of demurrers is confined to defending against bills. There can be no demurrer to a plea[28] or to an answer.[29]

c. For What Purposes Necessary — (I) Generally. A demurrer is not only the proper but the sole remedy for defects in the frame of the bill,[30] or generally for defects curable by amendment.[31] Thus where a bill is sufficient in general

A demurrer is an allegation of defendant's, which, admitting the matters of fact alleged by the bill to be true, shows that as they are therein set forth they are insufficient for plaintiff to proceed upon or to oblige defendant to answer; or that for some reason apparent on the face of the bill, or because of the omission of some matter which ought to be contained therein, or for want of some circumstances which ought to be attendant thereon, defendant ought not to be compelled to answer. It therefore demands the judgment of the court whether defendant shall be compelled to make answer to plaintiff's bill or to some certain part thereof. Mitford Eq. Pl. 99.

statements defendant must usually demur if he desires to question it for want of particularity.[32] A failure to demur waives objection for repugnancy in allegations of the bill,[33] the personal disability of plaintiff,[34] and prematureness in instituting the suit.[35] It is also said that a failure to demur waives the advantage of matter in bar apparent on the face of the bill.[36] On the other hand it is sometimes said that wherever a general demurrer would lie relief will be refused, although none was interposed,[37] and that the court may sua sponte make any objection which should have been raised by demurrer, when necessary for the orderly administration of justice.[38] So it is held that a bill may be dismissed on the hearing, although not demurred to, where it does not show a right to equitable relief,[39] but generally a motion to dismiss is not a proper method of testing the equity of a bill.[40] Where the bill shows that the amount in controversy is beneath the cognizance of the court it is not necessary for defendant to demur but he may move to dismiss.[41]

(II) Defects Cured by Subsequent Pleadings or Proof. Although a bill may be so defective that a mere failure to demur would not waive the objection, still defendant, if he pass it without demurrer, may sometimes aid it by averments in his answer, or it may be aided by the evidence.[42] This rule is, however, often restricted to cases where the bill is merely insufficient in detail,[43] or where the averment supplied by the answer is implied in the bill,[44] or where the defective statement was due to plaintiff's ignorance of his rights;[45] and an entire failure to state a case for relief, it is often held, cannot be aided by subsequent proceedings.[46] It has been held that where the bill failed to show jurisdiction in equity defendant waived the benefit of a demurrer by filing a cross bill founded on matters of equitable cognizance,[47] but not by filing a cross bill seeking legal relief.[48]

2. Right to Demur. It may be laid down as a general rule that only such defendants as are affected by a defect in a bill have a right to demur thereto; or to put it in another form a defendant against whom a case is sufficiently stated cannot demur for an insufficient statement against other defendants. The principle has its most frequent application in the denial of demurrers for misjoinder of defendants when interposed by one properly joined and not injuriously affected by the misjoinder.[49] So where two different causes are improperly joined because some defendants are not affected by both a defendant who is affected by both may not demur,[50] but if two entirely disconnected claims are joined any defendant may demur.[51] All defendants being affected by a non-joinder of necessary parties or by a misjoinder of plaintiffs, any may demur therefor.[52] It has been held that the court will not entertain a demurrer by one alone of several defendants whose liabilities are joint.[53] A defendant consenting to a decree providing for further action on the original bill, and who accepts the benefit of such decree, estops himself from thereafter demurring to such bill;[54] but an order denying a motion to dissolve an injunction does not preclude a defendant from demurring on the same ground upon which he moved to dissolve.[55] An answer waives objections to the form and manner of proceeding and if a defendant answers he cannot generally thereafter demur.[56] Leave must first be obtained to withdraw the answer,[57] and leave will not be given where there has been great delay in making the application and further proceedings have been taken.[58]

3. TIME TO DEMUR. Until recent times defendant might demur as of course to the whole bill, only within eight days of his appearance,[59] and if an order was made giving further time to demur, plead, or answer, it was always conditioned that defendant should not demur alone but must plead to or answer some part of the bill.[60] This strict rule was afterward changed, allowing according to circumstances from five to ten weeks to plead, answer, or demur, not demurring alone; but only twelve days were even then permitted to demur alone.[61] In the United States defendant may usually demur at any time within the original time to answer, but the matter is governed by statutes or rules.[62] Under the common rule to answer defendant may demur,[63] and the same is true where time is extended by stipulation.[64] But a defendant who obtains a special extension of time to answer cannot under such an order demur.[65] Where an order for a decree pro confesso has been set aside with leave to answer, defendant may not demur.[66] A demurrer has been held too late after an order of reference,[67] and a demurrer filed out of time has been disregarded.[68] Where a demurrer is filed within time the court may permit a second one to be filed later.[69] One defendant may appear and demur before the others are served.[70]

4. Grounds of Demurrer — a. Ground Must Appear on Face of Bill — Speaking Demurrers. The purpose of a demurrer being to test the sufficiency of the bill,[71] it lies only for defects appearing on the face of the bill.[72] As no bill is sufficient unless it states facts sufficient to entitle plaintiff to the aid of a court of equity,[73] a defect in this respect, although it appears negatively only, will ground a demurrer.[74] Where other grounds are urged the defect must affirmatively appear. Thus where the bill states a prima facie case matter in bar can be taken advantage of by demurrer when it is stated without sufficient avoidance in the bill itself, but not otherwise.[75] A demurrer for want of necessary parties does not lie unless the bill shows the existence of persons whose presence is necessary, yet who are not made parties.[76] A demurrer on the ground that another action is pending will not lie unless the bill shows the pendency of such an action between the same parties in respect to the same subject-matter,[77] and a corporation defendant cannot on demurrer take advantage of a provision in its foreign or special charter unless such provision is disclosed by the bill.[78] A demurrer which seeks to violate these rules by relying on facts not appearing in the bill is termed a speaking demurrer,[79] and is bad.[80]

b. Want of Jurisdiction. A want of jurisdiction apparent on the face of the bill is ground of demurrer.[81]

c. Want of Equity. Unless the bill presents a case of equitable cognizance and shows plaintiff to be entitled to the aid of a court of equity it is demurrable.[82] A demurrer for want of equity lies, however, only where taking all the allegations of the bill as established there would be no ground for a decree granting relief.[83] So defendant cannot single out a portion of a bill as not presenting a matter of equitable cognizance and demur thereto, if the bill otherwise states a case for equitable relief and the portion objected to presents a matter which equity, having acquired jurisdiction for other purposes, would dispose of in order to render the remedy complete.[84] A defendant may demur on the ground that plaintiff has an adequate remedy at law.[85] But where the bill shows equity, the demurrer cannot be sustained unless the existence of an adequate legal remedy affirmatively appears from the bill.[86] Under the codes it is generally held that the question whether a complaint or petition states a case at law or in equity cannot be raised by demurrer.[87]

d. Staleness and Laches. It is generally held broadly that a demurrer will lie for laches or staleness appearing on the face of the bill.[88] This rule is quite generally observed where the bill shows that the analogous period of limitations has expired,[89] and is sometimes limited to such cases.[90] It is held that a demurrer will lie where the bill without giving any excuse discloses either limitations[91] or Non-joinder of a merely proper party against whom no relief is prayed is not ground for demurrer (Graham v. Graham, 85 Ill. No. 7,764, 2 Woods 144. It is no ground of demurrer that the bill was not served. Livingston v. Marshall, 82 Ga. 281, 11 S. E. 542. If a defendant is charged in the bill in the proper capacity a demurrer will not lie because the subpœna was issued without stating the capacity in which he is sued. Walton v. Herbert, 4 N. J. Ludington v. Elizabeth, 32 N. J. Eq. 159. One cannot by demurrer raise the point that a failure to issue process on the original bill prevented an amendment from relating back

g. Statute of Frauds. The rule of common-law pleading that, with respect to acts valid at common law but regulated as to mode of performance by statute, it is sufficient to use such certainty of allegation as was sufficient before the statute,[2] so far prevails in equity as to protect a bill so framed against demurrer,[3] and therefore a demurrer will not lie where a bill sets out an agreement within the statute of frauds without alleging a compliance with the statute.[4]

h. Former Decree. If a bill shows distinctly that a decree has been rendered in a former suit between the parties with regard to the same subject-matter a demurrer will lie, whether the present bill be inconsistent with that decree,[5] or merely unnecessary because full relief could be had under the former decree.[6] In the latter case, however, the bill is not demurrable, unless it discloses that the relief already had extends to the entire case now made.[7]

i. Prematureness. A demurrer will lie to a bill which appears on its face to have been filed prematurely, before plaintiff became entitled to enforce his right.[8]

j. Bills Charging Fraud. A general demurrer to a bill charging fraud is bad.[9] Such allegations must be answered,[10] and defendant may then demur as to other grounds of relief.[11] The restriction does not apply when the facts alleged are insufficient to constitute fraud,[12] or when they do not entitle plaintiff to any relief.[13]

k. Defects in Form of the Bill. Objections to the form of the bill must generally be taken by demurrer.[14] Defects which may be so objected to are such as the failure in the introduction to state the places of abode of the parties;[15] failure to allege facts positively where positiveness is required,[16] or want of certainty generally;[17] the want of an offer to do equity where such is required;[18] and the want of an oath to the bill in cases where one is required.[19] As to the failure of counsel to sign the bill the rule is not uniform,[20] nor is it as to a failure to file exhibits with the bill.[21] A bill is not demurrable for improperly waiving an answer under oath.[22] Illegibility is not ground for demurrer,[23] nor is the leaving of blanks not relating to matters of substance.[24] It is said that a demurrer will lie for defects in the prayer of the bill,[25] but it is no ground for demurrer that a bill improperly prays for incidental relief.[26]

1. Demurrers to Discovery. Where, as is now usual, relief is the main object of a bill and the discovery sought is incidental thereto, a demurrer to the relief extends to the discovery.[27] But the discovery may have a further purpose and not be incidental to relief, and in such case, if it be improperly sought, defendant may demur to so much of the bill as seeks discovery;[28] and although the discovery be incidental to relief properly sought, defendant may demur to the discovery if plaintiff be not entitled thereto.[29] The principal grounds for such demurrers are that the bill calls on defendant to answer charges imputing to him a criminal offense,[30] or subjecting him to a penalty or forfeiture,[31] or calls upon him to disclose a privileged professional communication.[32] In order to ground the demurrer it need not appear that the answer must necessarily have such effect or that it alone would produce such an effect. It is sufficient if it appears from the bill that such might be the probable effect,[33] or that the answer would be one step in a series having such a result.[34] The particular nature of these and kindred exemptions from the general duty of testifying is not peculiar to defendants in equity and is elsewhere treated.[35] A defendant may also demur to discovery of things immaterial to the relief claimed,[36] or to the discovery of a title not in privity with that of plaintiff,[37] or of matters in hazard of a title equal in equity with that of plaintiff, as that of a purchaser without notice.[38] A demurrer to the discovery will not lie because an oath to the answer is waived,[39] and of course it does not lie unless the impropriety of discovery appears on the face of the bill.[40] Where for the latter reason a demurrer will not lie defendant may answer, omitting the objectionable matter, and resist exceptions.[41]

5. Forms of Demurrers — a. In General. A demurrer should be entitled, to indicate its character, "the demurrer of C D to the bill of complaint of A B."[42] Then comes a formal protestation against the truth of the bill,[43] and if the demurrer be partial a designation of the portion of the bill demurred to.[44] The grounds of the demurrer are then stated, and the demurrer closes with a formal conclusion, averring in general terms "divers other errors and defects" and praying judgment whether defendant should make further answer.[45] The demurrer must be signed by counsel and must in some jurisdictions be further fortified by certificate or affidavit that it is deemed well taken and is not for delay.[46]

b. Necessity of Stating Grounds. It is not sufficient for defendant to state merely that he demurs to the bill, but he must state the grounds upon which he demurs.[47] For some purposes it is sufficient, however, to state the grounds in very broad and general terms, while in others they must be stated with particularity.[48] This gives rise to a classification of demurrers as general or special.[49]

c. General Demurrers — (I) What Demurrers Are General. A general demurrer goes only to the substance of the bill,[50] and in general terms assigns as ground of demurrer that the bill contains no matter of equity whereon the court can give plaintiff relief.[51] Demurrers which depart from the ordinary formula, but use language having a similar scope, are often treated as general demurrers.[52]

Terms distinguished.—Confusion sometimes arises from styling a demurrer to the entire bill a general demurrer and one to part of the bill a special demurrer. The latter is more properly styled a partial demurrer, and the former, for want of a better term and to avoid confusion, a demurrer to the whole bill. This confusion of terms leads to the frequent practice of styling a general demurrer, from its language, a demurrer for want of equity.

52. As where a demurrer states several special reasons going to the general equity of the bill. Ideal Clothing Co. v. Hazle, 126

In some states there are statutes or rules requiring in all cases a specification of the grounds of demurrer, and in whole or in part abolishing the use of general demurrers.[53]

(11) When Applicable. A general demurrer for want of equity is good only where the bill fails to state any ground whatever for equitable relief.[54] If such a case be stated the demurrer must be overruled, however imperfect the manner of the statement may be.[55] To sustain the demurrer the court must be satisfied that no discovery or proof properly called for by the bill can make the subject-matter of the suit a proper case for equitable relief.[56]

must be resorted to in order to reach any formal defect,[57] such as the failure to name defendant in the prayer for process,[58] suing on behalf of plaintiff and others instead of for plaintiff alone,[59] the improper framing of the bill to obtain the relief prayed,[60] or in general, any defects readily curable by amendment.[61] A special demurrer must also be resorted to, where facts are stated sufficient to call for relief, in order to attack the statement of such facts for want of certainty,[62] or inconsistency.[63] A demurrer for want of parties must be special, pointing out the necessary parties who are omitted, by name or otherwise.[64] A demurrer for misjoinder of parties must also be special.[65] Great care should be taken to point out the precise defect, wherever a special ground is stated.[66]

e. Demurrers Ore Tenus. The rigor of requiring the grounds of demurrer to be accurately stated is moderated in practice by permitting a defendant, who has on record a demurrer sufficient in form, to point out and argue on the hearing grounds of demurrer in addition to those formally assigned.[67] This is called demurring ore tenus.[68] Thus where a general demurrer fails defendant may Want of title to sue.— A demurrer to a bill by an assignee of a mortgage on the ground that plaintiff had not shown that she was the owner or that an executor was authorized to assign does not raise the objection that the heirs and executor of the mortgagee should be parties. Marsh v. Wells, 89 Ill. App. 485.

A demurrer for misjoinder of defendants and multifariousness does not raise the point that certain parties could not be joined by amendment. Schaub v. Welded Barrel Co., (Mich. 1902) 90 N. W. 335.

In code practice the term is sometimes applied to arguing matter of demurrer on the demur ore tenus for want of parties,[69] or for misjoinder,[70] or because the suit was not brought by next friend.[71] A ground not formally assigned nor assigned ore tenus below cannot generally be assigned ore tenus on appeal.[72] A demurrer ore tenus must be coextensive with the demurrer of record, that is to say, if the formal demurrer goes to the whole bill grounds cannot be assigned ore tenus going to only a part thereof.[73] A defendant is not allowed costs on the sustaining of a demurrer ore tenus;[74] and on the other hand plaintiff is generally allowed costs on the overruling of the formal demurrer, although the demurrer ore tenus is sustained.[75]

f. Partial Demurrers. As a demurrer is an entirety and must be overruled altogether, if bad in part,[76] defendant must not demur to the whole bill if any distinct part is not open to the objection, but he must in that case confine his demurrer to that portion of the bill to which it is applicable.[77] For the same reason a demurrer to several parts of a bill is bad if any of the parts demurred to is not open to the objection urged.[78] On the other hand a partial demurrer cannot be directed to allegations not separable from the rest of the bill,[79] and not together and alone constituting the basis of some portion of the relief sought.[80] A demurrer to that part of a bill seeking a writ of ne exeat is not good, for the reason that such writ is not in itself a remedy, but is merely a provisional writ which is used as a means to effectuate the remedy.[81] It is an indispensable trial of issues of fact. See Hoff v. Olson, 101 Wis. 118, 76 N. W. 1121, 70 Am. St. Rep. 903; Stein v. Benedict, 83 Wis. 603, 53 N. W. 891; Sherry v. Smith, 72 Wis. 339, 39 N. W. 556.

A demurrer to the entire bill will not reach unnecessary charges contained therein (Beach v. Beach, 11 Paige (N. Y.) 161), or a prayer for relief which is merely too broad (Whitbeck v. Edgar, 2 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 106).

Objections relating to parties.— A demurrer to whole bill for want of parties is bad if as to any claim of the bill there is no defect of parties. Weston v. Blake, 61 Me. 452; Trenton Pass. R. Co. v. Wilson, 53 N. J. Eq. 577, 32 Atl. 1. But where the bill as it stands entitles plaintiff to certain relief and would entitle him to other relief if other parties were added, and the prayer is for such other relief, defendant may demur to the whole bill for want of parties. Dart v. Palmer, 1 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 92. Where a bill shows a demand for which all the plaintiffs properly join, a demurrer to the entire bill for misjoinder of plaintiffs is bad, although the bill embraces a claim for one of the plaintiffs alone. Clarkson v. De Peyster, 3 Paige (N. Y.) 320.

Staleness.— Where a portion of the relief is barred by lapse of time and a portion not, the demurrer must be confined to that part asserting the stale demand. Radcliff v. Rowley, 2 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 23.

A demurrer to discovery must be confined to that portion of the bill seeking discovery of privileged matter. Burpee v. Smith, Walk. (Mich.) 327.

requisite in a partial demurrer that it must clearly and with certainty point out the part to which it is directed.[82]

g. Demurrer Incorporated in Answer. Where there is a demurrer to a part of the bill and an answer to the residue, the two may in the absence of special rule to the contrary be incorporated in the same instrument, the answer following the demurrer; and such was the usual practice in England.[83] As heretofore stated some jurisdictions permit a demurrer and answer to the same matter, and in others the court has power to authorize such pleading.[84] Under these circumstances grounds of demurrer may be incorporated in an answer to the whole bill.[85] Furthermore a ground of demurrer not waived by answer, such as general want of equity, may be insisted upon at the hearing by reservation of such ground in the answer.[86] Sometimes rules provide that instead of a formal demurrer defendant may insist on special matter in the answer and have the same benefit as if he had demurred. It is held that this merely states the common practice and applies only to matters affecting the merits, and is not permissible for matters in abatement,[87] or going to the jurisdiction, personal disability, or the like.[88]

6. Hearing and Determination of Demurrers — a. Setting Down For Hearing. A demurrer may be brought on by either party having it set down for hearing.[89] A demurrer by one defendant may be heard before service on the others.[90] The practice as to the time when a demurrer may be set down for argument, the party whose duty it is primarily to have it set down, and the consequence of a failure to seasonably set it down, varies greatly in different jurisdictions, and the local rules must be consulted.[91] If it is desired to object because of an irregularity in Designation of defective part.— It must specify by paragraph, page, folio, or some other mode of reference the part to which it is intended to apply. Atwill v. Ferrett, 1 Fed. Cas. No. 640, 2 Blatchf. 39. But it is sufficiently definite if it designates by subject the parts covered, as "the allegations of fraud" or "the invalidity of the assignment by the defendant company." Boardman v. Keystone Standard Watch Co., 8 Lanc. L. Rev. 25. But a demurrer "to all that part of the bill not pleaded or demurred to, for want of jurisdiction" is bad for uncertainty (Payne v. Berry, 3 Tenn. Ch. 154), as is also, after a plea to "all the accounts arising out of" the transaction, a demurrer to the residue of the bill (Clancy v. Craine, 17 N. C. 363). The rule has been stated that the court must not be put to the trouble of looking into the bill or answer to see what is covered by the demurrer, and that therefore it will not do to answer certain things and demur to the rest of the bill, without otherwise designating the portion demurred to. Devonsher v. Newenham, 2 Sch. & Lef. 199. The designation must be such that on a reference of the answer to the residue, on exceptions for insufficiency, the master may determine how much of the bill remains after the demurrer, to be answered. 91. U. S. Eq. Rule 38 provides that if plaintiff shall not set down a demurrer for the bringing on of the demurrer for hearing, such objection must be interposed in limine, as it is waived by proceeding to argument,[92] and the same is true of an informality in the method of interposing the demurrer,[93] or of an objection founded on the previous waiving by defendant of the defense set up in the demurrer.[94]

b. What Is Considered on Hearing — (I) In General. On the hearing of a demurrer the court looks only to the facts stated in the bill, because the demurrer lies only to a bill,[95] and for defects appearing on the face thereof.[96] Writings properly exhibited, being generally deemed part of the bill, are considered;[97] but not any other writings.[98] The court cannot take notice of an extraneous fact depriving the bill of its equity,[99] nor can it consider documentary evidence on file in the case,[1] or even, it seems, consider evidence submitted by consent.[2] A demurrer does, however, present for consideration the construction of an instrument made a part of the bill,[3] and the question whether the facts alleged justify the conclusions placed upon them.[4] The demurrer is to be determined as of the time when it was filed.[5]

(II) Admissions by Demurrer — (A) Facts Well Pleaded. For the purposes of hearing and disposing of a demurrer every part of the bill must be taken as true.[6] It is said that the demurrer admits the truth of all facts stated in the argument on the rule day when it is filed or on the next succeeding rule day, he shall be deemed to admit the sufficiency thereof and his bill shall be dismissed as of course unless the judge shall allow him further time. Under this rule if plaintiff does not have a demurrer set down on the rule day when it is filed, it cannot be ready for argument before the next rule day. Gillette v. Doheny, 65 Fed. 715.

pleaded carries with it an admission of whatever conclusion necessarily results from those facts, regardless of any statement of such conclusion in the bill.[12] No allegation is admitted contrary to a fact of which the court takes judicial notice,[13] or in conflict with exhibits made a part of the bill.[14] It has been held that where allegations are on information and belief, a demurrer admits only that plaintiff is so informed and believes and not that the fact exists.[15] Of course a demurrer by one defendant, although he be the principal defendant, does not operate as an admission affecting his co-defendants.[16]

posed to several parts of the bill and one of the parts demurred to is good.[24] It has been held that if a demurrer is bad as to one plaintiff it must be overruled altogether,[25] but the general rule is that the entire bill is bad if it does not state a case in favor of all the plaintiffs.[26]

(III) Demurrer Too Narrow. It was formerly the rule in England that if a demurrer did not cover so much of the bill as it might properly have extended to, it would be overruled;[27] but this doctrine was abolished there,[28] and does not seem to have gained acceptance in the United States.[29]

(IV) Demurrer Overruled by Plea or Answer. The necessity, in presenting different defenses to the same bill, of designating particularly the portions of the bill to which each is intended to apply has already been pointed out.[30] If defendant demurs in part and answers in part, and does not specify the parts to which each defense applies, or does not distinctly specify them, the demurrer will be disregarded as being overruled by the answer.[31] There must be no overlapping of defenses,[32] and if the same matter is covered to any extent by a demurrer and also by a plea or answer the plea or answer overrules the demurrer.[33] Thus a demurrer to the whole bill is overruled by an answer to the whole bill,[34] or to any part thereof,[35] and a general answer to the bill overrules any demurrer.[36] So if defendant demurs, and afterward answers as to the same matter, the demurrer is overruled or waived.[37] Where a demurrer to the whole bill is overruled by an answer to part, grounds of demurrer limited to other parts of the bill cannot be considered.[38] The doctrine of an answer overruling a demurrer has been in part abrogated by rule in the federal courts.[39] The demurrer of one defendant is not overruled by the plea of a co-defendant.[40]

(v) Demurrer Waived, Abandoned, or Withdrawn. A defendant may waive or abandon his demurrer, not only by expressly withdrawing it,[41] but by conduct inconsistent with an intention to rely upon it; as by proceeding to final hearing on the merits without a disposition of the demurrer,[42] by stipulating the facts and submitting the case for decision thereon,[43] or by consenting to a decree either interlocutory[44] or final.[45] The right to have a demurrer considered on appeal may be lost by answering over after an order overruling it.[46] Filing a

39. U. S. Eq. Rule 37 provides that no demurrer or plea shall be held bad and overruled upon argument only because the answer of defendant may extend to some part of the same matter as may be covered by such demurrer or plea. It is held that notwithstanding this rule defendant cannot demur, plead, and answer to the whole bill (Crescent City Live-Stock, etc., Co. v. Butchers' Union Live-Stock, etc., Co., 12 Fed. 225), or demur to the whole bill and answer the whole bill (Droop v. Ridenour, 9 App. Cas. cross bill does not constitute an abandonment of a demurrer which defendant has already filed to the bill.[47]

7. Disposition of Case on Demurrer — a. Implied Decision of Demurrer. A demurrer is sometimes considered as overruled by implication, in the absence of an express order of that character, as by rendering a decree granting relief to plaintiff,[48] or by ordering defendant to answer.[49] The granting of a preliminary injunction does not adjudicate a demurrer on file.[50]

b. Sustaining Demurrer — (i) Finality of Decision. According to strict practice the sustaining of a demurrer to the whole bill puts the case out of court,[51] and if the decision has clearly gone to the merits, it operates as res judicata.[52] Plaintiff if he desires to amend should ask leave to do so,[53] and before the entry of the order sustaining the demurrer.[54] A demurrer to a part of the bill, although sustained, does not lead to a dismissal of the bill,[55] and plaintiff may amend as if no demurrer had been interposed.[56] It has been held that where one defendant demurs, and discloses an entire want of equity in the bill as against any of the defendants the entire bill may be dismissed.[57]

(ii) Leave to Amend. In England, while an amendment was practically ground of demurrer is not pleaded in the answer and the case is heard on its merits, the ground of demurrer is waived. Kerns v. Perry, (Tenn. Ch. App. 1898) 48 S. W. 729.

never permitted, when sought after the sustaining of a demurrer to the entire bill,[58] it frequently happened that upon the hearing of a demurrer, where the defect could be remedied, the court, instead of sustaining the demurrer, gave plaintiff leave to amend his bill on payment of costs.[59] In the United States the practice is quite liberal, and it is said that where the bill discloses merits, the court on sustaining a demurrer must give leave to amend the bill.[60] It is practically the uniform practice, where the bill shows equity, not to dismiss it for want of parties, but to permit an amendment bringing them in.[61] It is discretionary on demurrer for misjoinder of plaintiffs to permit an amendment, striking out the names of some of them.[62] Plaintiff is usually permitted to amend when the bill on demurrer is found to be multifarious.[63] Allowance of an amendment rests, however, substantially in the discretion of the court,[64] and while in cases other than those above stated an amendment will be allowed where justice so requires,[65] it will be denied where the bill is wholly without equity,[66] for laches in making the application,[67] or where no amendment could be made improving the bill.[68] Plaintiff will not be permitted to present an essentially different case by amendment.[69] A pro forma decree dismissing a bill has been held proper in order to permit a speedy appeal.[70]

(III) Effect of Dismissal on Demurrer. Dismissal of a bill on demurrer puts the case out of court unless the bill is amended,[71] and also dismisses any cross bill which may have been filed.[72] On sustaining a demurrer to a supplemental bill, it is, however, error to dismiss the original,[73] and it is improper on sustaining a demurrer to make further direction disposing of money in court, the right to which is doubtful, without a hearing on the question.[74]

c. Overruling Demurrer — (I) Finality of Decision. An order overruling a demurrer is not final,[75] it merely determines that there is sufficient equity in the bill to require an answer.[76]

(II) Right of Defendant to Answer. The general rule is that on overruling a demurrer to the entire bill a final decree cannot be taken at once, but defendant must be ruled to answer.[77] In some jurisdictions a special rule to answer must be made on overruling the demurrer, and in others a time to answer is given by general rule.[78] If time is required beyond that limited defendant should apply therefor on notice.[79] Under the order to answer defendant cannot file a plea; special leave for that purpose is required.[80] The practice of requiring an answer after a demurrer overruled is not entirely uniform; some jurisdictions permit an immediate decree.[81] In no case, however, where proof is necessary for the rendition of a decree should one be rendered on overruling a demurrer without such proof.[82]

(III) Overruling Partial Demurrer. Where a partial demurrer, accompanied by answer, is overruled, the order should merely overrule the demurrer with costs;[83] an order to answer over is not necessary.[84] Defendant need not further answer, and plaintiff, if he wishes to require a further answer, must except to the answer already on file.[85] If, however, defendant has taken no proof in support of his answer, leave will not be granted to open proof on the overruling of the demurrer.[86]

demurrer,[87] but by leave of court, when the first demurrer is too broad, defendant may be permitted to interpose one less extensive,[88] and if plaintiff amends his bill defendant may demur, although a demurrer to the original bill has been overruled.[89] A decision on demurrer is conclusive of the questions decided until reversed,[90] and it is therefore held that where a demurrer is overruled, without reserving the benefit thereof by answer, the question determined cannot be again raised by the answer,[91] or on the hearing.[92]

D. Pleas — 1. Nature and Function — a. In General. A plea has been defined to be a special answer, showing or relying upon one or more things as a cause why the suit should be either dismissed, delayed, or barred.[93] Its proper office is to bring forward some one distinct matter of fact which is a complete defense to the whole bill or to some distinct part of it to which the plea applies.[94] It cannot be made to perform the functions of a demurrer, and is therefore bad if it states nothing except what already appears on the face of the bill.[95] It has been held that a plea cannot be resorted to for presentation of facts occurring after the filing of the bill,[96] but the practice of the English chancery permitted such facts to be pleaded.[97] A plea questions plaintiff's right to compel an answer,[98] and cannot be used to assert a right pertaining to procedure and not affecting the duty to answer.[99] The purpose of a plea is to shorten the controversy, and when it will not have that effect it will be overruled.[1] Therefore if the defense consists of a variety of circumstances making it necessary to go into the examination of witnesses at large a plea is unavailing.[2]

b. For What Purposes Necessary. Certain defenses, not appearing on the face of the bill, must, if made at all, be presented by plea and not by answer. Such are those going to the jurisdiction of the person of defendant,[3] the capacity of

In the English chancery a defendant might file a plea at any time before the return of an attachment with proclamations.[8] In the United States the time depends upon statutes or rules, but generally a plea may be filed without leave at any time within the period allowed for answer.[9] A plea cannot generally be filed after answer[10] or after hearing.[11] Defendant may waive his right to plead by conduct inconsistent with its assertion, as by a stipulation extending time to answer to the merits,[12] or by submission for final decree under an agreement of compromise.[13] Defendant pleading has control of the plea and may withdraw it, and other defendants cannot complain of such action.[14]

3. GROUNDS OF PLEAS. To attempt to specify the different defenses which may be properly presented by plea would require one to cover practically the entire domain of defenses.[15] It seems that every character of defense which may be resolved to a single point may be thus presented.[16]

4. FORM AND SUFFICIENCY OF PLEAS — a. Classes of Pleas. Pleas in equity have been usually classified, according to the nature of the defense presented, as pleas to the jurisdiction of the court, to the person of plaintiff or defendant, and in bar of the suit.[17] More generally they are classified as at law, as pleas in abatement and pleas in bar.[18] It is generally considered, however, that the distinction between pleas in bar and pleas in abatement is of little or no practical consequence, and the same would be true a fortiori of the further subdivision of pleas in abatement above stated.[19] A more practical classification is based on the character of the averments, as consisting of entirely new matter, of denials, or both, and so classified, pleas are affirmative or pure, negative, and anomalous.[20]

b. Formal Parts of Pleas. A plea in form resembles a demurrer, being entitled in the same manner, except that it is styled a plea, commencing with a similar protestation, and if partial, a like designation of the portion of the bill to which it relates, then stating the facts constituting the defense, and closing with a prayer whether defendant shall be required to make further answer.[21] A plea must be signed by counsel,[22] and must usually be sworn to, and sometimes certified by counsel to be well taken.[23]

c. Requisites of Pleas — (1) In General. At least as great strictness in pleading as to matter of substance is required in equity as at law.[24] The plea must be perfect in itself,[25] responsive to the bill,[26] and must state every fact necessary to make it a complete defense to the entire equity of the bill or that portion covered by the plea.[27] Rules of good pleading require that such facts be pleaded

(II) Matters in Abatement. Pleas in abatement are not favored and are strictly construed.[35] A plea to the jurisdiction that part of defendants are not residents of the county must state where their residence is.[36] But a plea showing lack of jurisdiction of the court over defendant need not designate another tribunal in which he may be sued.[37] A plea of another suit pending in the same court or another court of concurrent jurisdiction is proper,[38] but it must be accurate and positive and show that the purposes of the two suits are the same.[39] It must set forth the general character and object of the other suit,[40] must show that the subject-matter is the same,[41] and that the whole relief sought in the second suit is obtainable in the first.[42] If the former suit has been dismissed and an appeal has been taken, the plea must show that the appeal has been regularly perfected and is still pending.[43] A plea for want of parties is in bar and not in abatement.[44]

(III) Exhibits. An instrument essential to the establishment of the defense pleaded must be exhibited as in a bill,[45] and when this is done it becomes a part of the plea,[46] and will defeat the plea if it shows that the defense set up is not good.[47]

(IV) Singleness. An essential characteristic of a plea is that it presents a single ground of defense, going to the entire equity of the bill or some distinct portion thereof.[48] Therefore a plea which states facts constituting more than one ground of defense is bad for duplicity.[49] The requirement is that the defense presented should be single, and not that such defense should consist of a single fact. Therefore the plea may consist of a variety of facts, provided that they conduce to a single point and give as their result one clear ground disposing of the bill.[50] Different pleas may be pleaded to different parts of the same bill.[51] The rule against duplicity is not confined, however, to embracing two defenses in one plea, but forbids also the interposition, without leave of the court, of two or more separate pleas to the whole bill or to the same part thereof.[52] Leave to file several pleas is not granted as of course, or almost so, as at law, but only on special motion on notice,[53] and only when such proceeding appears to be necessary to save defendant from great inconvenience,[54] and where they present well defined issues which may be determined separately from the general equities of the bill, without injustice to plaintiff.[55] The proper remedy for duplicity is to compel defendant to elect which plea he will stand on.[56]

d. Partial Pleas. Like a demurrer, a plea may be to the whole bill or to some distinct portion thereof,[57] and if partial it must as in the case of a demurrer state distinctly to what part it is intended to apply.[58] The consequence of a failure to properly restrict a plea, and by such failure make it extend to parts covered by an answer, is much the same as in the case of an overlapping demurrer and answer;[59] but a plea, unlike a demurrer, is not necessarily overruled altogether because it is not good as to the whole bill or to all the portion which it purports to cover.[60] It has been held that where two defendants join in a plea in abatement it will be overruled if bad as to one of them.[61]

e. Affirmative or Pure Pleas. An affirmative or pure plea is one which merely states matter not apparent on the bill, and relies on the effect of such matter as a bar to plaintiff's claim.[62]

f. Negative Pleas. A negative plea introduces no new facts, but relies merely upon the denial of some matter in the bill upon which plaintiff's right depends.[63] The validity of a negative plea has been questioned.[64] Such pleas have, however, in recent times been very generally allowed,[65] but must be supported by answer.[66]

g. Anomalous Pleas. A third class of pleas in frequent use was referred to by a standard text-writer as being of an anomalous nature,[67] and such pleas are therefore for want of a better term generally styled anomalous pleas.[68] A plea to be good must show a complete defense and exclude every element which might defeat it.[69] Therefore where defendant desires to rely on some matter stated in the bill, but thereby impeached, it is not sufficient to merely reassert the matter relied on, but the plea must in addition thereto deny the matter in impeachment.[70] For example, where a bill seeks to set aside a release, or claims in opposition thereto, and charges matter to avoid the release, defendant may not merely plead the release but must deny the matter in avoidance,[71] and a plea of the statute of limitations must deny facts stated in the bill which if true would remove the bar.[72] A bill by a mortgagor alleged an entry by the mortgagee and a subsequent agreement to reconvey when the rents should have paid the mortgage debt. A plea, alleging the entry for condition broken, without denying the agreement, was bad.[73] In denying that plaintiffs are assignees, as claimed in the bill, it is proper to allege facts rendering the assignment void.[74] A plea relying on matter with reference to which fraud is charged must deny the fraud,[75] but a plea of limitations to a bill charging fraud need not deny the fraud.[76]

5. SUPPORTING PLEA BY ANSWER. While the object of a plea is to put an end to the case without the necessity of a general answer,[77] defendant cannot by pleading certain matter defeat plaintiff's right to any discovery which by his bill he has sought with regard to that very matter. The general averments of a plea must therefore be supported by a particular answer, affording such discovery.[78] The general rule as to the necessity of such an answer is, that if there is any charge in the bill which is an equitable circumstance in favor of plaintiff's case against the matter pleaded, that charge must be denied by way of answer.[79] A negative plea which squarely denies a statement of the bill would seem therefore to require the support of an answer;[80] but it has been pointed out that defendant is entitled to know what particular discovery is required, and that it is only where plaintiff has sought particular discovery as to the fact denied by the plea, as by charging circumstances by way of evidence, that defendant need support even a negative plea by answer.[81] The true rule therefore is not that every negative plea must be supported by answer, but every such plea must be supported by answer as to facts and circumstances charged in the bill in support of the statement denied by the plea.[82] The principle involved requires an answer in support of an anomalous plea,[83] which is only necessary where the bill anticipates and avoids the bar pleaded,[84] and also in support of a plea to a bill which, without stating the matter in bar, charges any facts or circumstances which if true would operate to defeat the bar.[85] A pure plea must for this reason be supported by answer to meet any specific charges in the bill which would defeat the plea.[86] In general, however,

86. A plea of bona fide purchase must be supported by answer where the bill contains any allegations which would charge defend-as a pure plea does not controvert any matter in the bill, no discovery and consequently no answer in support is requisite.[87] A plea to a bill charging fraud must generally be accompanied by an answer specifically denying the fraud.[88] Care must be taken that the answer does not go beyond the matter of the plea,[89] and that it be confined to matters strictly responsive to the bill.[90] It must be specific and not general in its denials.[91] It may be on information and belief as to any matter not alleged to be the acts of defendant, or concerning which he cannot be presumed to have personal knowledge.[92] On argument every fact charged in the bill which if true would defeat the plea will be taken as true unless denied in the answer,[93] and therefore if a plea requires an answer and none is put in the plea will be overruled.[94] On the hearing of a plea the answer may be read to counterprove it.[95]

6. Plea Overruled by Answer. As a plea presents a reason for not answering, it is overruled or waived by an answer, not merely in support of the plea, covering any part of the bill to which the plea relates.[96] This harsh rule has, however, in some jurisdictions been modified where the plea and answer are to parts only of the bill and happen to overlap.[97] An answer to the entire bill overrules any plea.[98] If defendant pleads and afterward answers to the merits his plea is waived.[99] An answer in support of a plea is not a separate defense,[1] and of course does not overrule the plea;[2] but if an answer for that purpose goes beyond what is necessary, and sets up any matter not merely in support of the plea, it will overrule the plea.[3]

7. Determination and Disposition of Pleas — a. Determining Sufficiency — (1) Striking Out and Setting Down For Hearing. Plaintiff should move to strike a plea from the files if he desires to object to it for want of form,[4] or as being an unauthorized pleading.[5] If he wishes to question its sufficiency in substance the proper course is to have it set down for argument.[6] While a demurrer to a plea is improper,[7] it is treated as a matter of form alone,[8] and the irregularity may be ignored and the demurrer treated as a setting down for hearing.[9] In England either party, if plaintiff did not reply, might obtain an order for argument;[10] but in the United States the primary duty of bringing it on varies in different jurisdictions.[11] The time when a plea may be set down for argument also what extent a plea need be supported by answer subjects defendant to great hazard under the strict rule. If he answers too little in support of his plea the plea will be overruled; if he answers too much or unnecessarily the same result follows. See 2 Daniell Ch. Pr. 206 note.

depends on local regulations.[12] A plea to the jurisdiction should be disposed of before another defense is considered, but a failure to do so will not invalidate the decree.[13] Where a record in bar of relief is pleaded, defendant may be required to show it before plaintiff replies or sets down the plea,[14] and where some defendants demurred and others had pleaded, but had obtained leave to withdraw the pleas, and it was doubtful whether they remained before the court, action on them was postponed until the hearing of the demurrer.[15]

(II) What Is Considered on Hearing. When a cause is heard on a plea, the inquiry is substantially as it would be on a demurrer to the plea.[16] Every fact in the plea which is well pleaded is for the purposes of the hearing assumed to be true,[17] and every allegation in the bill, not denied by the plea, is also assumed to be true.[18] The sufficiency of the bill cannot be questioned.[19]

(III) Disposition of Case on Hearing — (A) Overruling Plea. If upon the hearing the plea be determined bad and overruled defendant is entitled to answer, as in the case of a demurrer overruled.[20] When a plea has been overruled on its merits, the same defense cannot be presented by another plea[21] or by answer.[22]

(B) Saving Benefit of Plea to Hearing. If the court on the argument considers that, although the plea may be good, there may be matter which plaintiff might show in avoidance, it may order the plea to stand over until the hearing, saving to defendant the benefit thereof.[23] This has the effect of adjudging the plea to be prima facie good, but to permit plaintiff to reply and prove such matters in avoidance.[24] In like manner the court may without passing upon its merits overrule the plea without prejudice to the right of defendant to set forth the same matter in his answer.[25] The benefit of a plea has been saved to the hearing on a motion to set it aside for an objection which might be obviated by proof.[26]

(c) Ordering Plea to Stand For Answer. Under some circumstances the court may instead of overruling a plea direct it to stand for an answer.[27]

(d) Allowing Plea. If the plea be allowed on argument, this merely adjudges it to be good if true, and plaintiff must have an opportunity to take issue upon it.[28]

b. Determining Truth of Plea — (i) Replication. If plaintiff desires to take issue upon the plea, either without a hearing as to its sufficiency, or after it has been allowed on such hearing, he may file a replication and proceed to take proof as in the case of an answer.[29]

(ii) Effect of Replication. The effect of replying to a plea is to admit its entire sufficiency and to stake the result on its falsity in fact.[30]

(iii) Disposition of Case After Replication. As a replication confesses the sufficiency of a plea, the whole case turns on the determination of the issues so made. If defendant proves the plea the bill should be dismissed, either in whole or to the extent covered by the plea.[31] If defendant fails to prove his plea, he will not be permitted to answer, and plaintiff may take his decree according to his case as stated in his bill.[32]

c. Preliminary Reference to Master. The regular practice is, not to set a plea down for argument or to reply in the first instance, but to refer it to a master to determine its truth, where the plea sets up a former judgment in bar,[33] or a former suit pending.[34] On the coming in of the master's report the plea stands for argument on its sufficiency.[35] Plaintiff may, however, instead of obtaining the reference, have the plea set down for hearing,[36] or reply.[37]

E. Answers — 1. Nature and Functions — a. Twofold Nature of Answer. While an answer is uniformly considered as a mode of defense,[38] it serves not only that purpose, but the further purpose of giving the discovery to which a plaintiff in equity is entitled.[39] The requirements of the latter object have given rise to peculiar rules relating to the sufficiency and effect of answers appropriate to that purpose, but often applied without discrimination to the answer when considered as a defensive pleading.[40]

b. Necessity of Answer. Unless defendant disclaims,[41] or can and does protect himself by demurrer[42] or plea,[43] he must answer either the whole bill or that part not covered by demurrer or plea.[44]

c. Answer Must Set Up All Defenses. A defendant who answers must set up every ground and circumstance on which he intends to rely as a defense,[45] either

U. S. Eq. Rule 33 provides that if upon an issue the facts stated in the plea be determined for defendant, they shall avail him as far as in law and equity they ought to avail him. The uncertainty of this language is not greatly aided by the decisions. It has been held that the doctrine stated in the text still prevails. Daniels v. Benedict, 97 Fed. 367, 38 C. C. entire or partial.[46] Defenses arising after the filing of the bill should also be interposed by answer.[47] Plaintiff is entitled to be apprised of the nature of the defense relied on,[48] and if defendant states evidential facts, avowing their purpose to be to make out a particular defense, he cannot on the hearing use them to establish a different defense to which plaintiff's attention was not called.[49] It is said that in equity it is permissible to set out matters of law as well as matters of fact,[50] and defendant may in general set up want of equity or other meritorious defense by answer instead of demurrer.[51] If, however, facts appear on the face of the bill sufficient to defeat it, such facts need not be averred by way of defense.[52] Defendant may likewise is most cases assert by answer defenses which might have been interposed by plea.[53] New matter constituting a counter demand cannot in general be inserted in an answer,[54] but where facts which might be made the ground of suit against plaintiff constitute also an equitable defense

Where two defendants answer jointly, and one speaks positively for himself, it is said that the other, if he is not charged upon his own knowledge, may say that he has perused the answer and believes it to be true, but that this may not be done where they answer separately. 2 Daniell Ch. Pr. 266.

The answer of one partner on behalf of the firm is sufficient where the others are not charged with personal knowledge (Reynolds v. Dothard, 11 Ala. 531), and where no effort is made to get the answer of the others (Freeland v. Royall, 2 Hen. & M. (Va.) 575).

The penalty for answering separately in such case without good cause is an imposition of costs; but the propriety of separate answers will not be determined before the hearing. Van Sandau v. Moore, 4 L. J. Ch. O. S. 177, 1 Russ. 441, 25 Rev. Rep. 101, 46 Eng. Ch. 391.

U. S. Eq. Rule 62 provides that costs will not be allowed for separate answers or other proceedings by two or more defendants, employing the same solicitor, unless a master on reference shall certify that such separate answers and proceedings were necessary and proper and ought not to have been joined together. A joint and several answer of joint defendants is not required. A joint answer is sufficient if all the defendants swear to it. Davis v. Davidson, 7 Fed. Cas. No. 3,631, 4 McLean 136.

Where a solicitor has prepared an answer for one defendant and is employed by others shortly before answer day, he is not required to apply for an extension of time to answer for the first, in order that all may answer together. Pentz v. Hawley, 2 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 552.

Where one defendant did not sign or swear to an answer purporting to be that of all, a separate answer, filed by him without leave after the case was set down for hearing, was taken from the files as irregular. Fulton Bank v. Beach, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 307.

The answer of one of three executors will not be considered their joint answer, although the clerk's entry shows that all appeared and filed their answer. Chinn v. Heale, 1 Munf. (Va.) 63.

unless it purports to be the answer of defendant himself, not merely that of his agent or attorney.[88]

c. Exhibits. Defendant should exhibit, as in the case of a bill,[89] an instrument referred to as containing details to which plaintiff is entitled,[90] or facts material to his defense.[91] If a deed is stated to be executed, delivered, and recorded in a certain book, and a copy is set forth in the schedule showing a due acknowledgment, this sufficiently pleads the deed, as acknowledged and recorded;[92] but where the answer states the effect of the deed alone without producing it or annexing a copy, only the substance as set out in the answer is before the court.[93] Where a writing is exhibited, it is unnecessary to state its purport, as the writing is itself the evidence thereof.[94] Unnecessary matter should not be exhibited.[95] Affidavits annexed to an answer need not be taken on notice nor need copies be served on plaintiff.[96]

4. Sufficiency of Answer — a. Answer Must Be Full — (i) General Rule. A rule well established, following from plaintiff's right to discovery, is that where defendant submits to answer he must answer fully.[97] It was formerly doubted whether an answer totally denying plaintiff's right must proceed to give discovery to which plaintiff was only entitled consequentially upon establishing his right,[98] but the question was finally settled by requiring a full answer even in such a case.[99] In the federal courts the rule is otherwise.[1]

If untrue allegations are inserted in the bill to give the court apparent jurisdiction, defendant may deny such allegations and as to the residue of the bill insist that plaintiff's remedy is at law. Such an answer will bar relief but not discovery. Fulton Bank v. New York, etc., Canal Co., 4 Paige (N. Y.) 127.

A bill for an account of sales of a book alleged to have been published by defendant was sufficiently met by a denial that any such book was published, without rendering an account of sales of a book which was published but alleged to be a different one. Armstrong v. Crocker, 10 Gray (Mass.) 269.

1. U. S. Eq. Rule 39 provides that the rule requiring a full answer shall no longer apply in cases where defendant might protect him-every interrogatory which the bill calls upon him to answer,[2] unless it is not based upon and does not relate to any statement or charge contained in the bill,[3] or unless irrelevant,[4] or unless it calls for privileged matter.[5] The answer must have all the precision and detail called for by the interrogatory,[6] and must be direct and unequivocal as to defendant's state of mind either that he does believe the matter inquired of or that he cannot form any belief or has none.[7]

(III) Answering Independently of Interrogatories. Special interrogatories were devised only to prevent an evasion of the general duty to answer.[8] The general interrogatory is sufficient to require in itself a full and direct response to every averment of the bill, with all its material circumstances.[9] It is said, however, that if defendant admits sufficient to entitle plaintiff to the decree he prays self by plea from such answer and discovery; that he may insist by answer on all matters of defense in bar of or to the merits of the bill of which he might avail himself by plea in bar, and in such answer he shall not be compellable to answer any other matters than he would be compellable to answer upon filing a plea in bar and an answer in support of such plea. See Gaines v. Agnelly, 9 Fed. Cas. No. 5,173, 1 Woods 238; Samples v. Bank, 21 Fed. Cas. No. 12,278, 1 Woods 523. A defendant may not protect himself from full discovery on the ground that, although he has set out every defense, each one might have been interposed by plea. National Hollow Brake Beam Co. v. Interchangeable Brake Beam Co., 83 Fed. 26. Where oath to the answer is waived, it is sufficient to meet all allegations required for sufficiency as a pleading, without answering charges which are merely evidentiary. Field v. Hastings, 65 Fed. 279.

U. S. Eq. Rule 40, prior to 1850, provided that a defendant should not be bound to answer any statement or charge, unless especially and particularly interrogated thereto. See Treadwell v. Cleaveland, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,155, 3 McLean 283; Wilson v. Stolley, 30 Fed. Cas. No. 17,839, 4 McLean 272. That rule was repealed and it was there provided that it should not be necessary to interrogate for, the answer is sufficient, although it does not meet the whole bill,[10] and that it is not essential that each paragraph of the bill be answered separately and in detail. It is enough if each material allegation is fully answered.[11] A general allegation, there being no specific charge or interrogatory, may be answered with equal generality;[12] but an answer so general as to amount merely to an inference or conclusion is bad without stating the facts from which the inference or conclusion is drawn.[13]

(IV) What Need Not Be Answered— (A) Immaterial Allegations. The rule requiring a full answer is generally deemed not to require an answer to allegations which are immaterial,[14] and the test in this respect is to ascertain whether an answer would be material to plaintiff's case, whether proof on the subject might assist in supporting his equity.[15] Whatever plaintiff is bound to state in his bill defendant is bound to answer,[16] but a mere recital need not be answered in the absence of a special interrogatory directed thereto.[17]

(B) Matters of Privilege. While defendant must answer, notwithstanding any prejudice to his pecuniary interest generally,[18] he need not answer a charge which if confessed would subject him to punishment,[19] or to a penalty or a forfeiture.[20] It is sufficient to excuse the answer that it might furnish a step in the proceeding against defendant.[21] Defendant should not answer where the answer would involve a breach of professional confidence,[22] and he may refuse to answer disclosing his trade secrets,[23] and, it has been said, his own insolvency.[24] Defendant need not render an account in his answer, where the duty of accounting in the matter devolves upon plaintiff.[25] While in such cases defendant may generally protect himself by demurring to the discovery,[26] he is not obliged to do so, but may submit his objection in the answer.[27] It seems that if the answer objects to a discovery of particular facts and proceeds to answer some of those facts the objection is overruled.[28]

b. Specific, Direct, and Non-Evasive Denials. An answer is insufficient which in general terms denies the allegations of the bill. Each charge and allegation must be specifically confessed or denied,[29] but where the bill merely charges in general terms the denial need not be more specific.[30] The answer must meet the charges directly, without equivocation or evasion.[31] A denial will not be implied.[32] It must meet the point in substance; and a literal denial in the terms of the bill which fails to meet the substance of the charge is bad.[33] A statement of explanatory facts must frequently be added to avoid an exception for evasiveness.[34] No particular form of words is required, however, and it is sufficient if the defense is clearly made in substance, although not formally.[35] The whole answer will be taken together, and a denial evasive by itself may be made sufficient by other statements in the answer.[36] On the other hand a denial counts for nothing when accompanied by admissions which disprove it.[37] Charges of fraud in a bill must be met by answer,[38] and as to these defendant must deny with particularity and will be held to strict rules.[39]

c. Answering According to Knowledge, Information, and Belief — (I) The General Requirement. The general interrogatory is that defendant shall answer according to the best of his knowledge, information, and belief, or sometimes according to the best of his knowledge, remembrance, information, and belief.[40] This requirement must be observed,[41] and an answer is insufficient which responds as to defendant's knowledge alone. It must state any information defendant may have relating to matters called for, and his belief concerning the same.[42] The answer must distinctly show what is stated on knowledge and what on information and belief.[43]

(II) When Answer Must Be Positive. When the bill charges an act of defendant or other matter within defendant's knowledge he must answer positively.[44] It is insufficient in such case merely to disclaim knowledge,[45] or recollection,[46] or to deny on information and belief.[47] Where from lapse of time the court is satisfied that a positive answer cannot be made the rule is relaxed,[48] but then defendant must state his information and belief.[49]

(III) Answering on Information and Belief. When the facts charged are not within defendant's knowledge he may and must answer according to his information and belief.[50] In so doing it is essential that defendant state both his information[51] and his belief.[52] Defendant may not disclaim information where information is within his reach, but must in such case obtain it and state it.[53] An answer on information and belief, when properly put in, is sufficient as a pleading in order to present an issue;[54] but being after all merely hearsay it does not operate as evidence in favor of defendant.[55]

(IV) How Ignorance Should Be Pleaded. The rule requiring an answer according to knowledge, information, and belief demands that a defendant, in order to avoid, because of ignorance, an answer as to the truth of matters charged, should deny that he has any knowledge, information, or belief concerning such matter,[56] or that he has any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief.[57] It seems also that a denial of any knowledge or information is alone sufficient without requiring a statement as to belief;[58] but any less comprehensive form is bad.[59]

d. Pleading Defenses. The foregoing rules[60] are based chiefly on plaintiff's right to discovery. When it comes to pleading defenses it is said that the same degree of accuracy is not required as in a bill.[61] There must be such certainty as will inform plaintiff of the nature of the defense,[62] and every material fact must be stated, and not left to inference,[63] and stated in a concise and intelligible manner.[64] Averments of conclusions alone are of course insufficient,[65] as is also a merely argumentive allegation.[66] The material facts should usually be treated with particularity and not in general terms.[67] The precise nature of the defense should be indicated.[68] In setting up by answer a defense which might have been the subject of a plea defendant is usually required to set it out with the same certainty as in a plea.[69] Notice of prior equities must be denied whether notice is charged in the bill or not,[70] and one claiming as a bona fide purchaser must explicitly deny the fact of notice, and knowledge of every circumstance from which such notice could be inferred.[71] He must show that the consideration was paid,[72] and that the purchase was completed before notice was acquired.[73]

e. Consistency. An answer must be consistent,[74] and defendant may not insist upon a defense based on the truth of an allegation in the bill which he denies in the answer.[75] If defendant sets up inconsistent defenses in a sworn answer he shall not have the benefit of either.[76]

f. Impertinence and Scandal. Impertinent matter should be struck out of an answer,[77] at the cost of the offending solicitor.[78] The nature of the objection for impertinence is much the same as in the case of bills,[79] but the determination of what is impertinent is governed by somewhat different considerations. The answer is given a liberal consideration,[80] and matter will not be stricken out if it can have any influence on the decision of the suit, either as to relief or as to costs.[81] The test is said to be to inquire whether the matter could be put in issue.[82] Allegations are impertinent if they go beyond those of the bill and cannot affect the result.[83] Any matter which is responsive to the bill is pertinent;[84] as are matters going to the right of plaintiff,[85] matters appealing to discretion, where relief rests in discretion,[86] matters influencing the question of costs,[87] or other matters of benefit, although less directly, to defendant.[88] On the other hand matters which are the foundation for cross relief alone are impertinent in an

5. Plea Ordered to Stand For Answer. If on argument the court considers that matter offered by way of a plea may be a defense in whole or in part, but that the plea is formally defective, it will instead of overruling the plea direct it to stand for an answer.[96] When this is done without leave to plaintiff to except, the order implies that the plea is deemed sufficient as an answer, although not necessarily a full defense.[97] Defendant may be given leave to file a more formal answer,[98] or the right may be reserved in plaintiff to except.[99] When the right to except is reserved, the order allowing the plea to stand for an answer implies that it contains matter which if put in form of an answer would have been available as a defense to all or part of the matters which it professes to cover, but that plaintiff is entitled to further discovery.[1] An answer containing denials of allegations which plaintiff is required to prove to make out his title has been treated as a negative plea.[2]

6. Admissions by Answer — a. Express Admissions. Where a fact is alleged in the bill and admitted in the answer the admission is conclusive,[3] but an admission of the allegations of the bill is not an admission that plaintiff is entitled to the relief prayed.[4] No admission in an answer can avail plaintiff unless the fact admitted is substantially alleged in the bill.[5]

b. Admissions by Express Implication. Whatever be the rule as to the effect of leaving allegations wholly unanswered,[6] admissions are frequently expressly implied from what is stated in the answer. Thus, where a defense or denial is evasive and does not cover all the facts essential to its validity, it will be held to admit that the essential facts not covered favor plaintiff.[7] While an answer is subject to exceptions if it denies generally instead of specifically, or literally

instead of substantially,[8] such denials are not taken to admit the facts attempted to be controverted.[9] There are cases holding that an answer setting up a distinct meritorious defense, without questioning the right of plaintiff to sue in the capacity alleged in the bill, admits such right,[10] and even that such distinct defense admits that in other respects plaintiff's case as stated in the bill is true, there being no denials thereof.[11]

c. Effect of Not Answering Particular Allegations. Although from what appears in the answer an admission is sometimes implied of certain matters not denied,[12] mere silence as to a matter charged in the bill, unaccompanied by circumstances from which an admission may be so expressly implied, does not constitute, as at law, an admission of the matter so passed over; and plaintiff, unless he compels a further answer, must prove such matter.[13] This general rule is sometimes restricted to cases where the allegations in question are not charged or presumed to be within the knowledge of defendant, such allegations not being admitted by the proper authority, and the answer denied that the claim was legally canceled and alleged that, if canceled, it was without sufficient authority, the answer was held to admit the averments of the bill. Holmes v. State, 100 Ala. 291, 14 So. 51.

silence,[14] while allegations presumed to be within the knowledge of defendant are taken as admitted.[15] Again in a few jurisdictions it has been held that any material allegation in the bill, not denied or alluded to in the answer, must be taken as true.[16] Even under such a rule a defendant does not by silence admit matters of inference or law,[17] or matters contained in interrogatories having no foundation in the allegations of the bill.[18] A denial of knowledge concerning a matter puts plaintiff to his proof.[19] Sometimes by statute or rule there must be a sworn denial to put in issue the execution of a written instrument which is the foundation of the suit.[20]

d. Effect of Not Answering at All. Formerly plaintiff was required in all cases to make proof of his bill in the absence of an answer admitting it,[21] but in comparatively recent times, in order to prevent the inconvenience and failures of justice resulting from this rule, the practice, aided by acts of parliament, was established in England, of permitting plaintiff to take the bill as confessed after the failure of process to procure an answer.[22] In the United States the practice is general of permitting a decree to be taken pro confesso, if defendant does not answer within the time he is ruled to do so,[23] and consequently if a defendant who has been served with a subpœna permits the bill to be taken pro confesso for want of an answer or of an appearance, he thereby admits the truth of every Elsewhere in announcing this rule it is usually restricted to particular facts or circumstances. Thus it has been held that where facts are alleged in the bill, and without denying them matter in avoidance is set up in the answer, such facts need not be proved. Pelham v. Floyd, 9 Ark. 530.

material allegation of the bill.[24] The extent and import of the admissions must be gathered from the whole bill, including the exhibits attached.[25] Defendant does not admit anything not alleged,[26] conclusions of plaintiff from facts stated,[27] or allegations which plaintiff would not have been permitted to prove, had the bill been answered;[28] nor does he admit that the allegations of the bill are sufficient to support a decree.[29] Defendant may be protected against admissions from failure to answer by a stipulation that proof shall be taken and that he may offer evidence.[30]

7. Compelling Answer. Notwithstanding the modern right to take the bill as confessed for want of an answer,[31] plaintiff may sometimes require discovery in order to properly frame a decree, and for this purpose defendant may by proceedings for contempt be compelled to answer.[32] In England the practice existed of issuing a commission to take the answer of a party abroad or in the country, and such process has in some cases been resorted to in the United States.[33]

8. Withdrawing Answer. The court may always in its discretion permit a defendant to withdraw his answer to avoid admissions inadvertently made,[34] or to permit a demurrer to be filed.[35] But permission to withdraw an answer in order to file a demurrer or a plea will not be given when the question can as well be raised by answer as by demurrer or plea.[36]

9. Objections to Answer — a. In General. There is no regular mode of pleading, like a demurrer, whereby to test the validity of an answer as a defensive pleading.[37] An answer may be taken from the files and sometimes portions expunged on motion for certain irregularities,[38] and exceptions lie for certain defects, relating chiefly to discovery.[39] If, however, plaintiff wishes to test the general validity of the answer as a defense to his bill his only course is to set the case down for hearing on bill and answer.[40] It follows that if the answer is in part good as a defense the validity of the rest cannot be determined until hearing after proof taken.[41]

b. Striking From Files. A motion will lie to strike from the files an answer which is wholly irregular as a pleading,[42] as where it is filed by a stock-holder, asserting a defense for the corporation, and the corporation itself has not refused to defend,[43] or where it is so evasive as to be a mere delusion and not amount to an answer at all.[44] An answer may be stricken from the files because not properly sworn to;[45] but not because of defects in pleading.[46] Portions of answers have been stricken out, not because of their defects as a defense, but because of irregularity in interposing them.[47]

c. Exceptions — (i) Office of Exceptions. The method of taking advantage of particular defects in the answer is by exception,[48] a proceeding which has for its principal object determining whether the answer is sufficiently responsive to the bill, and enforcing rules as to discovery.[49] By exceptions plaintiff cannot question the sufficiency of the answer as a defense,[50] or of new matter contained in the answer and inserted for the purpose of setting up a substantive defense.[51] Exceptions are not favored and will not be allowed if calculated to surprise,[52] or if captious and unimportant,[53] or if their allowance could be of no benefit to plaintiff.[54]

(II) Grounds of Exception — (A) Insufficiency. Exceptions are the proper resort where the answer is insufficient in not fully responding to the bill,[55] but will lie only where some particular allegation, charge, or interrogatory is not fully answered.[56] Exceptions will not lie for the omission of what is immaterial.[57] An answer is subject to exception for not being sufficiently explicit,[58] or for being evasive.[59] The object of exceptions for insufficiency being to secure more perfect discovery, it has been held, where the failure to answer an allegation admits its truth,[60] that an exception will not lie because of such failure,[61] or where the bill does not seek discovery.[62] It is for the same reason held in some jurisdictions

62. Pearson v. Treadwell, 179 Mass. 462, 61 N. E. 44. The doctrine that exceptions for insufficiency are confined to cases where plaintiffs are compelled to rely on defendants

that where an answer under oath is waived the answer cannot be excepted to for insufficiency,[63] nor can an answer by a corporation under its seal.[64] It is not ground for exception to an answer otherwise sufficient that defendant has not filed a deed relied on as an exhibit.[65]

(B) Impertinence and Scandal. Exceptions are the proper method of objecting to impertinent or scandalous matter in an answer, and of having it stricken out.[66] An exception on this ground will not be allowed unless it is especially clear that the allegations objected to are wholly immaterial,[67] and tend to the introduction of improper evidence,[68] or if to strike out such allegations would render meaningless or change the meaning of what remains.[69] An exception for impertinence cannot be sustained in part, and will not be allowed if it embraces any pertinent matter.[70]

(C) On Overruling of Partial Demurrer or Plea. Where a defendant demurs or pleads to part of the bill and answers the residue, and the plea or demurrer is overruled, the answer remains,[71] and if plaintiff desires a further answer to the part of the bill covered by the demurrer or plea, he must except, whether the demurrer or plea was overruled in due course,[72] or is held to be overruled by the overlapping of the answer.[73]

(D) Pleas Ordered to Stand For Answer. Where a plea is ordered to stand for an answer, the order implies that the plea is deemed sufficient as an answer,[74] and plaintiff may not except thereto unless the right to do so is expressly reserved.[75]

(III) Right and Time to Except — (A) Generally. Plaintiff may of right and of course file exceptions within a certain period, usually fixed by rule, after the filing of the answer.[76] The time may be enlarged for cause shown.[77] By strict practice exceptions for impertinence must be filed and reported on before exceptions for insufficiency can be filed;[78] but exceptions for scandal may be filed at any stage of the case.[79] Where an answer accompanies a plea or demurrer, plaintiff cannot except until the plea or demurrer has been argued, unless he intends thereby to admit the validity of the plea or demurrer.[80]

(B) Exceptions to Further Answer. Plaintiff must raise all his objections to the sufficiency of an answer in the first instance, and he may not except to a further answer for new cause founded on the original bill.[81] If the further answer is insufficient, it must be referred on the old exceptions.[82] If the bill is amended, new exceptions may be filed for failure to sufficiently answer the amendments,[83] and the case will be referred on the old and new exceptions together.[84]

ing,[85] and should be properly entitled to indicate their character.[86] They must not be couched in general terms, but must indicate specifically what is objected to.[87] Amendments in substance are rarely permitted,[88] but amendments in matters of form are allowed,[89] and the substance may be looked into and the exceptions considered, although they are stated to be taken on one ground while they are in fact based upon another.[90] Separate exceptions to the same matter on different grounds are in general not allowed,[91] but may be under special circumstances.[92]

(B) For Insufficiency. An exception for insufficiency must set forth the particular points in the bill which are not sufficiently answered.[93] It must state the charges in the bill to which the exception is addressed,[94] the interrogatory applicable thereto, and the terms of the answer verbatim.[95] If these requirements are not met the exceptions may be struck from the files on motion,[96] or will be disallowed on argument.[97]

(C) For Impertinence. Exceptions for impertinence must point out the objectionable passages with such clearness as to enable the opposite party and the officers of the court to ascertain precisely what is objectionable.[98] As such exceptions cannot be allowed unless good in toto, and cannot be allowed to a part of an impertinent passage, they must embrace the entire matter subject to the particular exception, and must not embrace more.[99]

(V) Hearing and Determination of Exceptions. Unless defendant submits to the exceptions, they must be decided before further proceedings are taken;[1] but a decree will not be reversed because exceptions were not passed upon if they are not well founded.[2] The regular method of determining exceptions is by reference to a master,[3] but they are now frequently heard by the court.[4] If the exceptions are disallowed and plaintiff chooses to abide by them the answer is

U. S. Eq. Rule 63 provides that where exceptions are filed for insufficiency, if defendants shall not submit to them and file an amended answer on the next succeeding rule day, plaintiff shall forthwith set them down for hearing on the next succeeding rule day thereafter, before a judge of the court, and if he shall not do so they shall be deemed to be taken as true.[5] If the exceptions are sustained defendant should be ruled to answer further,[6] if then defendant neglects to comply with the rule the bill may be taken pro confesso.[7] Where exceptions are taken to part of the answer defendant may be ordered to answer over only so far as the exceptions extend;[8] but defendant may supply other deficiencies in the original answer, although not covered by the exceptions,[9] or set up new defenses which may have arisen;[10] and plaintiff may file new interrogatories and defendant will be required to answer them and the exceptions together.[11]

d. Waiver of Objections. Plaintiff waives all insufficiencies of the answer by going to hearing on bill and answer,[12] or by filing a replication.[13] Exceptions already on file may be withdrawn,[14] or may be waived by conduct inconsistent with insisting upon them.[15] It is said that defects in an answer are not entirely cured by a failure to object to them, and that they will still have an influence on the decision of the case.[16] Plaintiff has, however, been held in some cases to have waived the entire absence of an answer.[17]

IX. REPLICATIONS.

A. Nature and Function — 1. In General. A replication is plaintiff's answer or reply to defendant's plea or answer.[18] Its purpose is to put in issue the facts alleged in the answer.[19] By the interposition of a general replication every allegation in the answer not responsive to the bill is denied and must be proved before it can be used by the party making it.[20]

2. Answer Without Replication. If no replication to an answer is filed the answer is taken as true,[21] and no evidence can be received to contradict it.[22] The failure to reply admits not only allegations of new matter,[23] but also the truth of denials contained in the answer.[24] It seems that an exception exists where a record is pleaded, the existence of which may be tried without a replication,[25] and in the case of averments in the answer of facts which could not be within defendant's knowledge.[26] The admission does not extend to averments contradicted by other facts stated in the answer,[27] nor does it apply to an answer by one defendant, when all that it contains is set up in the answer of a co-defendant which is replied to, and the proofs thereon adduced make out plaintiff's case.[28] A disclaimer requires no replication.[29] In some jurisdictions statutes have abolished replications and placed the answer in issue without them.[30]

course,[31] but in some jurisdictions defendant cannot set the case down on bill and answer until plaintiff has been specially ruled to reply.[32] If plaintiff amends his bill after answer, it is irregular to file a replication before the time for answering the amended bill.[33]

2. How Failure to Reply May Be Cured. A replication being now a purely formal pleading,[34] plaintiff is quite readily relieved from the consequences of a failure to file it in time. While it is said that leave to file a replication nunc pro tunc will not be granted unless the court is satisfied that a hearing on bill and answer would work injustice to plaintiff,[35] leave will be given where the bill and answer differ materially, and proof is necessary to a proper understanding of the case.[36] The court will, where there has been excusable delay, permit a replication to be filed nunc pro tunc,[37] or may in its discretion order to stand a replication filed without leave after time.[38] The filing of a replication after notice of a motion to dismiss for want thereof is good cause against the motion,[39] but after a hearing on bill and answer and a direction of dismissal plaintiff cannot reply as of right,[40] and leave will not be given where no mistake or excusable inadvertence is suggested.[41] The court may permit a replication nunc pro tunc after decree,[42] but must give defendant leave to take any testimony which may thereby be rendered necessary.[43] After a cause has been set down for hearing on bill and answer, allowing plaintiff to reply is discretionary;[44] but the court will permit it on reasonable cause,[45] and should impose terms protecting defendant.[46] Where the parties without a replication have actually proceeded with the taking of proofs, defendant has had all advantage which he would have had if the replication had been seasonably filed, and plaintiff will be permitted of course to file it nunc pro tunc.[47] Indeed, filing a replication seems then unnecessary, as it will be deemed

31. U. S. Eq. Rule 66 provides that where an answer shall not be excepted to or shall be adjudged or deemed sufficient, plaintiff shall file a replication on or before the next succeeding rule day thereafter, and unless he do so defendant shall be entitled to a dismissal, unless a replication is allowed to be filed nunc pro tunc. waived by proceeding as if it were on file, as by submitting the case on pleadings and proof,[48] by going to hearing on the facts,[49] by taking proofs,[50] or even by cross-examining witnesses,[51] or consenting to a commission to take testimony.[52] An appellate court will not consider the absence of a replication if the point was not made below.[53]

C. Form and Sufficiency — 1. General Replication. The general replication is entitled, like other pleadings after the bill, so as to show its character and the answer to which it replies.[54] It commences with a reservation of the advantage of exception to the insufficiencies of the answer,[55] and an offer to maintain and prove the bill to be true and sufficient and the answer insufficient. Then follows a formal general traverse of the answer, with a formal verification.[56] It need not be signed by counsel.[57]

2. Special Replication. Formerly pleadings in chancery were special throughout, and ran on to issue as at common law; but the inconvenience of this practice led to the disuse of special replications, leaving plaintiff to amend his bill if the answer disclosed the necessity of pleading new matter.[58] In accordance with the later English practice special replications are in the United States usually not allowed,[59] and if filed may be stricken out on motion,[60] or the new matter may be treated as surplusage, and the remainder if sufficient as such regarded as a general replication.[61] Where by modifications of practice the matter of a cross bill may be incorporated in the answer, a general replication is insufficient to traverse such matter,[62] and a special replication is sometimes provided for to answer that purpose.[63] Where a special replication is admitted it cannot serve to set up new grounds of relief.[64]

D. Withdrawal of Replication. If plaintiff has occasion to amend his bill after replication filed he must get leave to withdraw his replication;[65] and must show that the amendment is material and why it was not made before.[66] Leave may be given to withdraw the replication in order to set the cause down on bill and answer,[67] and even for the purpose of moving to take the answer from the files.[68]

2. FOR WHAT PURPOSES PROPER OR NECESSARY — a. To Obtain Affirmative Relief. In order that a defendant may have any affirmative relief, it is generally essential that he should proceed by cross bill for that purpose.[70] A cross bill

Following cases are perhaps sufficient to illustrate this use of a cross bill. In a suit to restrain ejectment, defendant, on prevailing, cannot be awarded possession of the land without a cross bill, although the land is in possession of a receiver appointed at plaintiff's request. Jackson v. Sackett, 146 Ill. 646, 35 N. E. 234. Where defendant relies on the invalidity of an instrument on which plaintiff bases his right, a cross bill is necessary to secure its cancellation. Bay v. Shrader, 50 Miss. 326. A defendant, claiming the right to retain moneys which plaintiff seeks to recover, on the ground of a resulting trust to himself, must by cross bill establish the trust. Beck v. Beck, 43 N. J. Any equity which cannot be made effective by answer may be presented by cross bill and enforced against the original plaintiff (Brady v. Young, 4 Phila. (Pa.) 127), but no relief can be given without a cross bill except such as necessarily follows the dismissal of the original (Nelson v. Lowndes County, 93 Fed. 538, 35 C. C. A. 419).

Under the codes the purposes of a cross bill for relief against plaintiff are generally accomplished by incorporating the cross demands in the answer under the name of a counter-claim. Cross relief against a co-defendant is under some codes obtained by setting forth the facts with a proper prayer in the answer, and serving it on the co-defendant, and under others, through a cross complaint or cross petition. See, generally, PLEADING; RECOUPMENT; SET-OFF AND COUNTER-CLAIM.

Set-off and counter-claim.— A set-off or counter-claim, in the sense in which the terms are used at common law or under the codes, is unknown to chancery practice, and cannot be urged as a defense. Killam v. Jenkins, 25 Vt. 643; Brande v. Gilchrist, 18 Fed. 465. A demand of that nature must be asserted by cross bill (Pearson v. Darrington, 32 Ala. 227; Cartwright v. Clark, 4 Metc. (Mass.) 104; Meek v. McCormick, (Tenn. Ch. App. 1897) 42 S. W. 960; Brande v. Gilchrist, 18 Fed. 465), and then, if not connected with the subject-matter of the original bill, must show an equity which would be sufficient to sustain an original bill for a set-off (Derby v. Gage, 38 Ill. 27; Irving v. De Kay, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 319). When the claim is of such a character as to show that it operated to discharge plaintiff's demand before the original bill was filed, it may be presented by answer. Goodwin v. McGehee, 15 Ala. 232. In the New York chancery a statute permitted set-offs in equity in the same manner as at law. Irving v. De Kay, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 319; Chapman v. Robertson, 6 Paige (N. Y.) 627, 31 Am. Dec. 264.

justice cannot be done on the original bill and answer,[73] in order to obtain full relief to all parties as to the matters charged in the original bill.[74] An exception to the rule requiring a cross bill as the foundation for affirmative relief to a defendant exists in cases where the court entertains the original bill only on condition that plaintiff consents to submit himself to the same justice being rendered to defendant that he asks for himself,[75] as in a bill for an accounting, on which a balance may be decreed in favor of defendant without cross bill,[76] and in suits for specific performance, in which plaintiff himself may be compelled to perform.[77] It is also said that a cross bill is unnecessary to justify relief against plaintiff or a co-defendant, where the whole matter is already before the court and no substantial right is invaded by such a decree.[78]

b. To Obtain Discovery. A cross bill lies on behalf of a defendant against plaintiff, a co-defendant or both, for the purpose of obtaining discovery in aid of a defense.[79] It is by this means alone that a defendant may compel the produc-

c. To Introduce Newly Arising Defenses. A defendant, in order to take advantage of a defense arising pendente lite, must assert it in the form of a cross bill praying a dismissal of the original, this procedure taking the place of a plea puis darrein continuance at common law.[81] By strict practice this course must also be taken where the defense affects only a co-defendant.[82]

d. When Unnecessary. Where the matter of a cross bill is equally available in the answer, by way of defense to the original bill, a cross bill is unnecessary.[83] Therefore a cross bill will not be permitted to set up a mere defense, existing when the answer is filed, unless discovery is required;[84] and a cross bill is equally improper, even where relief is required, if such relief can be had on the principles already stated[85] by answer.[86] The rule is that where all the objects sought can be attained by answer, a cross bill will not be permitted;[87] but, although an answer is available for the main purpose, a cross bill may be used where the circumstances call for protection beyond that which could be had by answer.[88] It is said that

88. Where the matter of the cross bill constitutes a defense and at the same time entitles defendant to relief beyond the dismissal of the bill, and such relief cannot be had by answer, a cross bill is proper. Paxton v. Stackhouse, 4 Kulp (Pa.) 403. A cross bill may be permitted to insure relief to defend-where one defendant files a cross bill bringing the whole matter before the court, a second cross bill by another defendant will not be entertained.[89] An infant defendant will be protected by the court without his filing a cross bill.[90]

B. Time For Filing Cross Bills. Defendant may not file a cross bill before he answers the original,[91] and it should properly be filed, if against plaintiff, at the time the answer is put in to the original.[92] A cross bill against a co-defendant can hardly be put in at that time, because, until the answers are in, neither defendant knows what the other may set up.[93] The right is generally held to exist until publication passes in the original suit,[94] but not thereafter where it involves the taking of proof.[95] It is, however, within the discretion of the court to permit a cross bill after publication passed,[96] as where it does not delay the hearing,[97] or where plaintiff has kept defendant in ignorance of the facts entitling him to file the cross bill.[98] Where justice requires it may be filed after hearing,[99] but ordinarily it will not then be permitted.[1] The court may always deny leave to file a cross bill for unreasonable delay.[2]

C. When Leave to File Necessary. The practice doubtless very largely prevails of obtaining leave of the court to file a cross bill, but it seems that such leave is not in general necessary.[3] A contrary doctrine is sometimes stated;[4] but in nearly all cases where leave of court is held requisite, some circumstances ant, where he would be deprived thereof if plaintiff should fail in his proof. Wilcox v. Allen, 36 Mich. 160. existed taking the case out of the usual course and calling for the exercise of the court's discretion.[5]

D. Cross Bill by Direction of Court. The accomplishment by cross bill of the object of obtaining a complete determination of the entire subject-matter and the adjustment of all rights[6] is not left entirely to the volition of the parties; but when it appears that the suit as framed is insufficient to bring before the court the rights of all the parties and the matters necessary to a just and full determination of the cause, the court will even at the hearing direct a proper cross bill to be filed.[7]

E. Parties to Cross Bills.— 1. PLAINTIFFS. Any defendant who has a right in the subject in controversy not presented by the original bill may assert it by cross bill;[8] but in general it is essential that such defendant might have filed an original bill for the same purpose.[9] A cross bill by one in whose favor a decree is made in the original suit may, however, be dismissed as useless,[10] and, where the matter is already before the court on the cross bill of one defendant, it is proper to dismiss a second cross bill by another.[11] Parties sued as representing a class of numerous persons[12] may present a cross bill on behalf of the class.[13] One not a party to the original bill may not as a general rule exhibit a cross bill;[14] but a purchaser from a party pendente lite may file a cross bill to protect his rights.[15]

2. DEFENDANTS. A cross bill requires the same parties defendant as would an original bill for the same purpose.[16] Whether the cross bill must fail if such necessary parties are not parties to the original suit, or whether, on the other hand, they may be brought in on the cross bill, although not parties to the original, is a question upon which the practice is not uniform. In some jurisdictions it is held that new parties cannot be introduced by cross bill;[17] in others the practice of bringing in new parties is recognized.[18] Again it is held that new parties may be brought in where necessary to obtain affirmative relief,[19] but not for the purpose of bringing forward new matter by way of defense.[20] A cross bill in the nature of an original bill may be filed to assert a joint demand against a surviving plaintiff in the original bill and the representative of a deceased plaintiff.[21] Plaintiff in the original should be a defendant in a cross bill, although it be directed mainly against a co-defendant; because a controversy between defendants cannot be made the ground of a cross bill unless its settlement is necessary to a complete decree on the case made by the bill.[22] New parties cannot be brought in to settle such a controversy.[23]

F. Form of Cross Bills. A cross bill must be as complete and perfect as an original bill,[24] and must be good within itself, not relying upon reference to the original bill for any of its essential averments.[25] It must be so framed that both causes may be heard together and a single decree entered.[26] Regularly a cross bill, in addition to having all the requirements of an original bill for the same purpose, should state the original bill so far as to show its parties, scope, and object and should state what proceedings have been had thereon;[27] but it has been pointed out that this requirement was due to the fact that a cross bill might in England be filed in a court other than that in which the original was pending, and that where as in the federal courts a cross bill must be filed in the same court as the original, it is necessary only to set forth so much, with regard to the original and the proceedings thereon, as may be necessary to disclose the right sought to be brought before the court.[28] A defect in the title does not invalidate a cross bill otherwise sufficient.[29]

G. Sufficiency of Cross Bills — 1. Relation to Subject-Matter of Original Bill. A cross bill may and usually does introduce new facts and new issues not disclosed by the original bill;[30] but such new facts and issues must relate to the subject-matter of the original,[31] and must be so closely connected therewith as to constitute the cross bill a mere auxiliary of the original or a dependency thereon.[32] It must not set up matter which is not germane to the matter of the original bill.[33] Questions which are entirely distinct from those presented in the original Application of the rule may be illustrated by the following cases, holding that the cross bill was germane to the original and proper: On a bill to restrain an execution sale, a cross bill to establish the lien of the judgment and enforce it against the property in question. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Chicago Third Nat. Bank, 134 U. S. 276, 10 S. Ct. 550, 33 L. ed. 900. See also Jones v. Thacker, 61 Ga. 329. On a bill to restrain the execution of an award, a cross bill to enforce it. North British, etc., Ins. Co. v. Lathrop, 70 Fed. 429, bill cannot be introduced by a cross bill, although such questions be connected with the subject-matter of the original bill;[34] nor can a new subject-matter be introduced, although the controversy with relation thereto and that with relation to the subject-matter of the original bill arise out of the same transaction.[35] A cross bill will of course not lie to litigate a question open only to a direct proceeding for the purpose involved.[36] A controversy between co-defendants cannot be introduced by cross bill, unless its settlement is necessary to a complete decree on the case made by the bill.[37] Therefore a defendant cannot litigate matters with another defendant in which plaintiff is not concerned.[38] The objection that a cross bill is not germane to the original is waived by a general answer to the cross bill.[39]

2. JURISDICTION OF SUBJECT-MATTER. The jurisdiction acquired by virtue of the original bill extends to the matter of a cross bill having a proper relation to that of the original, although the court might not have been able to acquire jurisdiction for the purpose of an independent suit having the purpose of the cross bill alone.[40] This is because the cross bill is merely auxiliary and dependent on the original; and for the same reason it is said that a cross bill need not allege any independent ground of equity.[41] It has often been decided that any independent relief sought by a cross bill must be of an equitable character,[42] but on the other hand it has been held that matters purely legal may be relied upon, and that legal relief may be awarded upon facts growing out of or connected with the equities of the original bill.[43]

3. CONSISTENCY WITH ANSWER. A cross bill must be entirely consistent with the case made by the answer to the original.[44]

H. Allowing Answer to Stand as Cross Bill. Where an answer contains matter which should be presented by cross bill and possesses in other respects the requisites of a cross bill, it is sometimes treated as such, and allowed to stand as a cross bill, without requiring defendant interposing it to put in a separate formal pleading.[45] In some jurisdictions express provision is made whereby the matter of a cross bill may be inserted in an answer and relief be prayed.[46] The answer in such case must possess all the requisites of a cross bill,[47] and must be proceeded on in a similar manner.[48]

I. Defenses to Cross Bills. In the absence of statute process must be issued and served upon defendants to a cross bill,[49] and in any event a reasonable opportunity must be given to defend.[50] A defendant to both original and cross bill must separately interpose his defense to each.[51] The modes of defense and the grounds of each are substantially the same as in the case of an original bill.[52] As no independent ground of equity jurisdiction is in general required to support a defensive cross bill,[53] a demurrer for defect in that regard does not lie;[54] but a demurrer will lie to a cross bill for relief if, taken in connection with the other pleadings, it shows no right to affirmative relief.[55] Objection that the cross bill does not set up matter appropriate to such a pleading, as where it contains merely matter of defense, available by way of answer, may be raised by demurrer.[56] A demurrer will not lie on the ground that a cross bill is filed before the original was answered;[57] but a cross bill so filed will be taken from the files on motion,[58]

as will also a cross bill which is inconsistent with the answer to the original,[59] or is based on matters irrelevant to the case made by the bill.[60] A plaintiff in the original bill will not be permitted to interpose as a defense to a cross bill the fact that another suit is pending for the same purpose as the cross bill, he being precluded from setting up such defense by having brought the plaintiff in the cross bill into court to litigate the matter.[61] An irregularity in proceeding by cross bill is waived by permitting the case to progress to hearing or decree without objection.[62] A defendant must answer a proper cross bill.[63] In determining the sufficiency of an answer to a cross bill the allegations of the original bill are to be considered,[64] and it seems that one who is defendant in both original and cross bill may by reference incorporate his answer to the original into that to the cross bill.[65] An answer to a cross bill cannot be made the vehicle for the introduction of matter which should appear in the original bill.[66]

J. Staying Proceedings on Original Bill. The filing of a cross bill does not of itself operate to stay proceedings on the original until the cross bill can be answered or brought on for hearing,[67] and an order for that purpose will not be granted as a matter of course,[68] but only when necessary to the protection of the parties.[69] in order to bring in parties proper but not necessary.[75] A party may not on the hearing shift his demand from one defendant to another, on the strength of their answers, but he may amend his bill for that purpose,[76] and he may even amend in some cases by substituting a different defendant for the one originally sued.[77] A bill may likewise be amended by striking out the name of a plaintiff improperly joined,[78] by adding another plaintiff,[79] or by a change in the character in which plaintiff sues.[80] By amendment a party may be transposed from one side of the record to the other.[81]

d. Making a Different Case. An amended bill must not be repugnant to the original,[91] nor may it present an entirely new and essentially different case, entirely changing the purpose of the suit.[92] This principle is clear, but difficulties arise in determining what constitutes an essentially different case. To conform to proof.— A bill may be amended so as to change its character even after decree, where it is clear that the cause was tried as it would have been tried had the original bill been like the amended bill. Tremaine v. Hitchcock, 23 Wall. (U. S.) 518, 23 L. ed. 97.

To conform to plaintiff's intention.—An essentially different case may be presented by amendment, where it is clear that plaintiff had intended originally to present such case, and the sufficiency of the original bill to do case is not made by averments setting out the case more specifically or fully,[93] or by adding new facts or grounds for relief consistent with those originally presented,[94] although the relief demanded is thereby broadened or even changed, the main general object of the bill remaining the same.[95] An amendment will not be permitted which changes the case as to all defendants and presents a new case against new defendants,[96] nor may a plaintiff by amendment entirely change the grounds on which he seeks relief.[97] Therefore, while a plaintiff may amend by alleging the same title as claimed in the original bill, but obtained in a somewhat different way,[98] he may not in general assert a different title,[99] and especially where the change entails a change in the capacity in which plaintiff sues.[1] Where the grounds of the amended bill are repugnant to those of the original a new case is presented and the amendment will not be permitted.[2]

To make an amendment improper there must be a repugnancy between the purposes of the original and amended bills and not merely a change in the relief asked. Cain v. Gimon, 36 Ala. 168. Thus it has been held that a bill to reform an instrument cannot mitted even at a late stage of the case in order to bring within the issues facts existing when the original bill was filed, but not discovered until shortly before the amendment was asked, where the case made by the amendment is not thereby rendered inconsistent with that made by the original bill.[3] Facts occurring after filing of the original should, however, be presented, where proper at all, by supplemental bill,[4] and cannot generally be introduced by amendment.[5] A well recognized exception to this rule exists where plaintiff was without capacity to sue when the original bill was filed, and the incapacity is thereafter removed, the want of capacity being such that defendant could have waived it.[6] It has also been held that where plaintiff's right to sue was inchoate when he filed his bill, he may by amendment show its consummation,[7] and in some jurisdictions amendments to introduce newly occurring facts seem to be permitted generally.[8]

f. Amending Prayer. The prayer for relief may be amended with or without incidental amendments in the body of the bill, where a different case is not made and the effect of the amendment is to enable the court to adapt its relief to be amended into one to cancel it (Kennerty v. Etiwan Phosphate Co., 21 S. C. 226, 53 Am. Rep. 669), or one to cancel an instrument be converted into one to compel specific performance thereof (Gardner v. Knight, 124 Ala. 273, 27 So. 298. But see Papin v. Goodrich, 103 Ill. 86; Ferry v. Clarke, 77 Va. 397). A bill to redeem from a sale cannot be converted into one to set it aside (Robinson v. United Trust, 71 Ark. 222, 72 S. W. 992. But see York v. Murphy, 91 Me. 320, 39 Atl. 992), and a bill by an assignee to foreclose a mortgage cannot be converted into one against his assignor to rescind the assignment (Baker v. Graves, 101 Ala. 247, 13 So. 275). See also for similar instances: Howell v. Motes, 54 Ala. 1; Darling v. Roarty, 5 Gray (Mass.) 71; Pratt v. Bacon, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 123; Tappan v. Western, etc., R. Co., 3 Lea (Tenn.) 106; Savage v. Worsham, 104 Fed. 18. On the other hand it has been held proper to permit an amendment where the original bill alleged an absolute title and the amended a transfer absolute in form but intended as a mortgage (Ingraham v. Foster, 31 Ala. 123); also to permit a suit to foreclose to be converted into one for specific performance, where the instrument was void as an executed contract (Randall v. Jaques, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11,553), or one for specific performance into one to enforce a resulting trust (Milner v. Stanford, 102 Ala. 277, 14 So. 644), or one to reform and foreclose into one to reform and remove a cloud (Hawkins v. Pearson, 96 Ala. 369, 11 So. 304), or one to enforce a trust into one to quiet title (Newell v. Newell, 14 Kan. 202), or one to restrain action by one of two claimants to a fund into a bill for interpleader (Hastings v. Cropper, 3 Del. Ch. 165). There is no departure in changing a bill to partition land into one asking its sale and distribution of the proceeds (Fite v. Kennamer, 90 Ala. 470, 7 So. 920), or vice versa (Berry v. Tennessee, etc., R. Co., 134 Ala. 618, 33 So. 8; Watson v. Godwin, 4 Md. Ch. 25).

the case made by the bill and sustained by the proof.[9] Before answer filed plaintiff may amend by inserting or striking out a waiver of discovery.[10] But the effect of a sworn answer cannot be destroyed by an amendment subsequently made waiving the oath.[11] It seems that if the special relief asked is waived other relief cannot be obtained by amendment where it could not be had under the prayer for general relief,[12] but a prayer for general relief may be added by amendment.[13]

g. Amending to Meet the Answer. If plaintiff wishes to merely traverse the answer he must do so by replication,[14] and not by amending his bill.[15] In order, however, to meet affirmatively a defense which appears in the answer the bill should be amended by stating such defense as a pretense and adding a charge in reply thereto.[16] The right to amend is not confined to the avoidance of defenses presented by the answer, but extends generally so as to enable plaintiff to conform his case to new facts presented by the answer, to enable plaintiff to state particulars where the answer is such as to call for greater particularity than was at first required,[17] to enable him to avail himself of an admission contained in the answer,[18] or of a new equity in his favor disclosed by the answer.[19] So plaintiff may amend to adapt his case to a state of facts first appearing in the answer, but differing in detail from those assumed in drawing the bill.[20] It seems that an amendment will not be permitted, at least unless very good cause is shown, merely to add interrogatories, without any statements or charges for their foundation other than those already contained in the bill.[21] Defendant cannot require plaintiff to amend so as to expose defects in his case.[22]

h. When Formal Amendment Unnecessary. The court will sometimes treat a formal defect as amended without an actual amendment,[23] and even omissions may under some circumstances be disregarded.[24] Where new matter in the answer is of such a character as to require an amendment to the bill, but the parties proceed to proofs and such new matter is not proved, the necessity for an amendment no longer exists.[25] Where matter which should be introduced by an amended bill is presented by one miscalled a supplemental bill, the court will treat it as an amendment.[26]

2. At What Time Bill May Be Amended — a. General Rule. The court may in its discretion permit amendments at any stage of the case,[27] and this discretion is exercised with a view to the character of the amendment and the circumstances under which it is sought, amendments of a purely formal character being freely permitted, but amendments substantially changing the case being rarely allowed in its later stages.[28] Application to amend the bill should in any case be made as soon as practicable after the necessity therefor is discovered,[29] and an amendment otherwise proper may be denied for laches in making the application.[30] So where defendant, relying on the frame of the original bill, has altered his situation so that an amendment would operate to his prejudice, plaintiff will not thereafter be permitted to amend.[31]

b. Before Replication. Few questions arise as to the right to amend a bill before a replication is filed or the cause set down for hearing on bill and answer. As already stated plaintiff may in most cases amend his bill after a demurrer has been sustained.[32] Before answer amendments are allowed often as of right,[33] but it sometimes rests in the discretion of the court.[34] Amendments after answer rest in discretion,[35] and such amendments are freely allowed in order to permit plaintiff to meet the case made by the answer.[36]

c. After Replication and Before Hearing. The proper time to amend is before issue,[37] and special cause must be shown in order to justify an amendment thereafter,[38] it being held that the filing of a replication precludes plaintiff from making an amendment where he knew the necessity therefor before filing the replication.[39] A mere inadvertence may be corrected at any time, at least before hearing,[40] but very special cause must usually be shown in order to amend after a case is ready for hearing,[41] and new matters cannot generally be introduced after the cause is set down for hearing.[42] Except to enable plaintiff to conform his

In federal courts and in Pennsylvania.— U. S. Eq. Rule 29 provides that after replication plaintiff shall not be permitted to withdraw it and amend his bill, except upon a special order of a judge upon motion or petition after due notice and upon proof by affidavit that the same is not made for the purpose of vexation or delay, or that the matter of the proposed amendment is material, and could not with reasonable diligence have been sooner introduced into the bill, and upon plaintiff's submitting to such other terms as may be imposed by the judge for speeding the cause. bill to the proofs received,[43] amendments will not be permitted after the evidence has been taken unless under very special circumstances,[44] and the rule is that amendments at that stage must not be such as to substantially change the issues.[45] Amendments may, however, be made at this stage to bring in new parties,[46] but even for that purpose the application should be made earlier if the objection was raised by the answer.[47]

d. At Hearing. The power of the court to permit an amendment on final hearing is exercised only in furtherance of justice, where it is required for the protection of plaintiff and does not substantially abridge the right of defense.[48] Amendments have been permitted under such circumstances to bring in new parties,[49] to add an averment of the amount in controversy, where essential to the jurisdiction,[50] to amend the prayer,[51] to perfect a defective statement,[52] to meet matter set up in the answer,[53] and where the real truth was not disclosed by the answer and appeared only in the evidence.[54] The court will refuse leave where the amendment would make a substantially different case,[55] or where, because of laches, weakness of proof, or other circumstances, the case does not commend itself to the favorable consideration of the court.[56]

the cause the discretion of the court is still less readily moved to permit an amendment,[57] and an amendment will not then be permitted, the effect of which would be to materially change the issues or introduce new issues,[58] unless at least an opportunity is given to introduce further proofs.[59] It is proper to refuse an amendment after an adverse decision has been announced, especially where plaintiff has been guilty of laches.[60] Amendments have been permitted in matters more or less formal, as to remove a purely technical objection to the testimony,[61] or to attach exhibits.[62] Permission also has been given to correct a description of the land involved after submission,[63] but denied after decree and sale thereunder.[64] The latitude allowed in adding new parties continues after submission, and amendments for that purpose may be permitted.[65] A formal amendment to show jurisdiction of the person will be permitted after an order taking the bill pro confesso.[66]

g. Amending to Conform to Proof. One class of amendments is freely permitted without much regard to the time when the application is made, except that they should be made promptly after the necessity therefor appears,[77] and generally before final decree.[78] The amendments so permitted are to conform the pleading to the proofs actually made.[79] The reason for allowing such amendments is that where the parties have treated the matter as being in issue, and have introduced evidence thereto, no surprise can be occasioned by the amendment, and the case does not fall within the reason of the rule requiring material amendments to be made at an early stage of the proceeding.[80] Amendments are therefore permitted where the evidence has made out a case for relief, but differing in some of its phases, sometimes materially, from the case made by the bill,[81] and also where there is a similar variance between the bill and the findings of a master or committee;[82] but the power is exercised only to correct the bill in certain of its particulars, and not where the amendment would affect its general scope and present essentially a new case.[83] In most of the cases cited the amendment was asked and allowed on the hearing, but it may be made after the hearing,[84] after verdict on issues submitted to the jury,[85] or sometimes even on appeal.[86]

3. AMENDMENT OF SWORN BILLS. Where a bill is verified it is usually for the purpose of obtaining an injunction or other special remedy thereon, and the question of permitting amendments thereto is usually more or less complicated with questions relating to the granting of such remedy.[87] Such amendments may be permitted to prevent a failure of justice,[88] but are allowed with great caution.[89] The court will in some cases permit a sworn bill to be amended by amplifying or adding to its averments;[90] but not by striking out an averment, except under a clear showing of very special circumstances, such as mistake.[91] The amendment may not be made after answer without notice,[92] or without an excuse for the delay.[93] The proposed amendment must be presented with the application, and its truth sworn to;[94] and if allowed it must not be made by altering the original bill but must be engrossed and annexed to the original.[95]

After answer, plea, or demurrer he may obtain an order without notice to amend his bill with or without costs as may be directed. After replication he must apply on notice and submit to terms.

other parties from injury,[6] and usually include the payment of costs occasioned by the amendment.[7] Where a party is relying on a technical right and makes a slip in his pleading the court will impose as a condition of an amendment that he offer to do full equity,[8] and defendant may be given the benefit of a sworn answer by requiring that plaintiff shall not waive an answer under oath.[9]

5. Method of Amending. Where it is necessary to obtain leave of the court to amend a bill, the substance at least of the proposed amendments should be submitted with the application,[10] and the facts rendering the amendment necessary should be stated.[11] Minor amendments are sometimes made by interlineation of the original bill,[12] but where the amendments are so considerable that the original bill would be seriously defaced there must be a separate engrossment,[13] and it is sometimes held that no amendment should be made by interlineation but always by separate bill.[14] When the latter course is pursued the amended bill should recite so much of the original as is necessary to make the amendments intelligible,[15] and by strict practice it should be attached to the original.[16] The whole bill, together with the amendments, is sometimes reëngrossed, in which case the amendment should be in some way clearly designated.[17] Whether the amendment be by interlineation, by separate bill, or by reëngrossment of the entire bill, it must be actually made, and neither a stipulation nor an order for amendment will be treated as an amendment.[18]

If amendments are not designated objection should be made on that ground or defendant

6. Operation and Effect of Amendment. An amended bill is considered as an original bill,[19] or rather as a continuation of the original,[20] and with the original constitutes but a single bill and one record.[21] The averments of the original and amended bills and the prayers of both will be taken together.[22] Care should therefore be taken, in substituting averments, not only to add the new averments in the amended bill, but to strike out the old ones which are to be superseded, as otherwise both will stand.[23] A further consequence of the rule is that generally the amendment is treated as relating back to the filing of the original bill,[24] but this will not be done where it would prejudice defendant.[25] A still further consequence of the general rule is that the amendment of a bill after a default waives the default and ipso facto opens a decree pro confesso,[26] so that defendant is permitted to answer the entire bill.[27] An amendment after answer and replication opens the pleadings only to the extent that new matter has been presented.[28]

7. Defenses to Amended Bill — a. Moving to Take From Files. Where a bill has been irregularly amended the proper course for defendant is to move to take it from the files or to expunge the amendments.[29] If the irregularity is technical only the motion must be made at the first opportunity,[30] and the right to so move is it seems in all cases waived by consenting to the amendment,[31] or by long acquiescence.[32] An amendment cannot be objected to for irregularity in making it, on the hearing,[33] or on appeal.[34]

b. Demurrer. The regularity of an amendment cannot be raised by demurrer where the amendment was made on leave of the court,[35] and, on the other hand a demurrer and not an objection to an amendment is the proper method of testing the merits of the amendment.[36] An amendment may be demurred to at whatever stage the amendment be made.[37] The demurrer may be to the whole bill, if the amendment is made before answer,[38] or even if made after answer, where it changes the nature of the case.[39] Otherwise, where the bill is amended after answer, a demurrer must be restricted to the amendment or to the amended bill.[40] An amended bill may be demurred to on the ground of repugnancy to the original.[41] The effect of sustaining a demurrer to an amended bill stating a new cause is to dismiss the amended bill and let the original stand.[42]

c. Plea. An amended bill is open to plea in the same manner as to demurrer.[43] If defendant has answered the original bill the answer may be read to counterplead such plea.[44] If the bill is amended after a plea to the original, defendant may correspondingly amend his plea in matter of substance,[45] and where the amendment is made after disallowing a plea to the original bill defendant may plead anew to the amended bill.[46]

Amendment of bill with exceptions to answer.—Where there is an application to amend the bill and also exceptions to the answer, the court may require an answer at notice must be given of the waiver.[48] Plaintiff is entitled to an answer to new matter incorporated by amendment,[49] but not where the answer to the original fully responds to the amended bill.[50] Defendant may if he sees fit answer anew in all cases, even to the extent of setting up new defenses,[51] except where the amendment is purely formal and does not affect the right of the answering defendant.[52] Where several answers have been filed to the original bill defendants will not be permitted to answer jointly the amended bill.[53] It is competent, where the circumstances require no new answer, to order the original answer to stand as an answer to a bill amended on the hearing.[54] It is improper in answering an amended bill to repeat the matter set up in the original answer unless the amendment has substantially varied the case.[55] If a plea was standing to the original bill an answer to the amended bill overrules the plea and should meet the entire bill.[56]

B. Amended and Supplemental Answers — 1. General Rules. Amendments to answers may be permitted,[57] and this with freedom as to matters of form, dates, and verbal inaccuracies;[58] but with caution in other cases,[59] when it must be made to appear that the amendment is material and necessary to protect defendant,[60] that the amendment is true or highly probable, and that there was no great negligence on the part of defendant.[61] Except to correct clerical errors or supply formal defects,[62] or perhaps to strike out allegations,[63] the amendment should not be by interlineation or erasure but by filing a supplemental answer embodying the amendments.[64]

2. PURPOSES OF AMENDMENT — a. Correcting Mistakes. A mistake in the original answer may be corrected by amendment.[65] This is frequently permitted where the mistake was that of the solicitor.[66] While as a general rule an admission in an answer cannot be retracted by an amended answer,[67] still this may be done when it is shown that the admission was made by mistake.[68] The fact that defendant was misled by the generality of the bill is sufficient to require that he be permitted to amend so as to meet the case as afterward disclosed.[69] It is a condition of permitting the amendment to correct a mistake that plaintiff shall not be prejudiced.[70]

b. Setting Up New Defenses. A defendant is sometimes permitted by amended or supplemental answer to set up a defense not raised by the original,[71] but this will not be done where the defense existed and was known when the original answer was filed,[72] or where the defense is not consistent with the ends of jus-added to the original answer so as to be distinguishable therefrom.

A new answer, with the amendments added, must be made, or the original answer withdrawn by leave of court and the amendments added, or the amendments must refer to the portions of the answer intended to be amended. Mason v. Detroit City Bank, Harr. (Mich.) 222.

Where an order had been made giving leave to amend, and leave to both parties to surcharge and falsify, it was held that defendant might amend in this respect even as to matters

tice.[73] An amendment of this character may be made necessary by averments in the answers of other defendants.[74] In the absence of mistake the court will not permit an amendment which will entirely change the nature and theory of the defense,[75] at least after protracted litigation and at a late stage of the case.[76]

c. Facts Newly Discovered or Newly Arising. If material facts are discovered after the filing of the original answer an amendment is proper for the purpose of introducing them,[77] provided defendant was not grossly negligent in not discovering them sooner.[78] As to matters by way of defense, not merely discovered but occurring after the commencement of the suit, the regular method of introducing them is not by amendment,[79] but by cross bill.[80] In some jurisdictions, however, such matter may be inserted by amended or supplemental answer.[81]

3. Sworn and Unsworn Answers. It has been said that no distinction is recognized, as to permitting amendments, between sworn answers and answers the oath to which has been waived,[82] and such cases as advert to the distinction seem nevertheless to apply the same rules.[83]

4. At What Time Answer May Be Amended. In some jurisdictions formal amendments at any stage,[84] and substantial amendments before replication, may be made as of course.[85] Except where such rules apply the allowance of an

U. S. Eq. Rule 60 provides that an answer may be amended as of course in any matter of form or by filling a blank or correcting a date or reference to a document, or other small matter, at any time before replication is put in or the cause set down for hearing upon bill and answer.

In Alabama there is an absolute right to amend before final decree. See Ex p. Ashurst, 100 Ala. 573, 13 So. 542; Cowart v. Harrod, amendment is always in the discretion of the court,[86] and no absolute rules limit the time of making application, each case depending on its own circumstances.[87] A new defense may be inserted even after considerable delay when no evidence has yet been taken;[88] but after depositions have been taken the application will be looked upon with distrust, and there must be a showing of mistake or ignorance of the facts.[89] Substantial amendments should rarely be allowed after the cause is ready for hearing,[90] and only when the delay is satisfactorily accounted for.[91] An amendment may be made in a proper case after a reference to a master,[92] but it is generally denied after the master has reported.[93] After the direction and trial of an issue it is too late to insert matter relating to that issue.[94] Formal amendments to correct mistakes will be allowed after the hearing.[95] Amendments have been allowed, where meritorious, after the announcement of the decision,[96] but unwillingly,[97] and unless meritorious they are then denied.[98]

Leave to amend is very generally denied after decree, either interlocutory,[99] or final.[1] After an appeal has been perfected the trial court cannot allow a new defense to be interposed,[2] and after affirmance a supplemental answer may not be filed, unless upon the showing that defendant has not been at fault and that great hardship would result from a refusal.[3] After reversal amendments may be permitted,[4] but not to contradict the original answer.[5] Under a variety of circumstances leave to amend has been denied because of laches in making the application.[6] An amendment will not be permitted in anticipation of the result of an appeal from an order in the cause, as the application is premature.[7]

5. Application For Leave to Amend. Where an amended or supplemental answer cannot be filed of course the application for leave to amend must be supported by affidavit,[8] showing a sufficient reason within the rules already stated,[9] and setting out the proposed amendments.[10] The amendment must not extend beyond the terms of the order,[11] but the order itself does not effect an amendment, which does not become operative until the amended answer is actually filed.[12] On considering the application the court will look into the entire record, and will not confine itself merely to the petition or affidavit.[13]

C. Amending Pleas. Amendments of pleas are allowed with reluctance, and only where the original plea is substantially good, and the defect which it is sought to remedy is formal or the result of accident.[14]

D. Amending Cross Bills. The rules regarding the amendment of bills apply in general to the amendment of cross bills, but greater liberality is indulged than in the case of an original bill.[15] Verification of a cross bill in a case where

XII. SUPPLEMENTAL BILLS.

A. Nature and Functions — 1. IN GENERAL. It is usually said that the purpose of a supplemental bill is to supply some defect in the frame or structure of the original.[17] This statement standing alone confuses the purposes of amended and supplemental bills. A supplemental bill may be resorted to only where an amendment is not available.[18] To justify a supplemental bill it must appear that new matter has arisen since the original was filed, or new facts discovered, or that plaintiff was in some way prevented from availing himself of such matter at an earlier stage of the case.[19] The matter of the supplemental bill must be such that it might under some circumstances have been the proper subject of amendment;[20] but a supplemental bill is the proper proceeding, and in aid of justice will be permitted, to remedy imperfections after the time for amendment has passed.[21]

2. MATTERS NEWLY ARISING. Facts which occur after the filing of the original bill cannot in general be incorporated by amendment,[22] and a supplemental bill is the proper and essential proceeding to introduce such facts.[23] It is not sufficient foundation for a supplemental bill that new matter has arisen merely tending to corroborate the party's evidence,[24] or that a fact has occurred which does not change the rights or interests of the parties;[25] but an additional right accruing to plaintiff pending the suit should be set up by supplemental bill,[26] and this may be done for the purpose of varying the relief as such newly occurring facts may demand.[27] New matters arising in avoidance of a plea should also be set up by supplemental bill.[28] If new matters have arisen on which a decree might be rendered without reference to the matters contained in the original, a supplemental bill is improper; plaintiff should dismiss the original and file a new bill.[29]

3. Transfers of Interest Pendente Lite. Where the interest of a party is transferred pending the suit and the proceedings become for that reason defective a supplemental bill is the proper method for bringing in the new party.[30] This may be done where plaintiff acquires a new right,[31] or where the interests of defendants have been transferred to strangers.[32] So also where one has acquired the interest of a party pending the suit he may himself file a supplemental bill, whether the interest acquired be that of plaintiff,[33] or one acquired from a defendant.[34] By strict practice a supplemental bill is proper only where the same parties or the same interests remain before the court; but where new parties with new interests, arising from events happening since the institution of the suit, are brought before the court, it should not be by supplemental bill but by original bill in the nature of a supplemental bill.[35] The distinction between supplemental bills and original bills in the nature of supplemental bills is purely technical and is frequently disregarded.[36]

2. After Decree. A supplemental bill may be filed either before or after decree.[39] If after decree it may be in aid thereof, where some further action proves to be necessary in order to obtain its benefit,[40] or it may be to impeach the decree, and it is then a supplemental bill in the nature of a bill of review.[41] Leave will not be given after decree to file a supplemental bill to set up matters which might with reasonable diligence have been ascertained and determined in the original decree,[42] nor will it be permitted to vary the relief or principles established by the decree.[43] A supplemental bill cannot be filed after an absolute dismissal of the original,[44] but after a dismissal without prejudice, with leave to plaintiff to apply for relief under certain conditions, the application may be by supplemental bill.[45]

C. Right to File. A supplemental bill may not be filed as of course, but only on leave of the court for cause shown,[46] and granted ex parte or upon notice, according to local regulations.[47] The application is addressed to the discretion of the court,[48] and leave will be granted if probable cause is shown,[49] although there may be grave doubts as to plaintiff's right to the relief prayed therein.[50] A supplemental bill making an essentially different case from that contemplated in the leave given to file it will be taken from the files.[51] A bill filed without leave as an original bill, but which is properly a supplemental bill, may be allowed to stand as a supplemental bill,[52] and the refusal of the court to strike out a bill filed without leave is equivalent to leave to file it.[53] The irregular filing of a supplemental bill is waived unless objection is made in the court below,[54] and before hearing.[55] The irregularity is also waived by consenting to the filing,[56] or by demurring[57] or answering.[58]

D. Form and Sufficiency — 1. Form in General. A supplemental bill should state the original bill and the proceedings thereon,[59] but only so far as may be necessary under the circumstances in order properly to put in issue the supplemental matter and show its relation to the original.[60] It is not the practice to reiterate substantively facts stated in the original, but only to state them by reference as having been represented therein.[61] The bill must then state the supplemental matter, pray for relief appropriate to its object, and conclude with a prayer for process.[62]

2. Parties. Where a stranger who has acquired an interest himself files a supplemental bill, he must bring in as parties thereto all the remaining parties to the original,[63] and the same is true wherever a supplemental bill is filed for the purpose of putting in issue a new fact;[64] but where the bill is rendered necessary only by the acquisition of interest by a defendant, or a stranger who must be brought in, only that person need be made a defendant unless the interests of others will be affected.[65]

3. Relation to the Original Bill. A supplemental bill is a mere addition to or continuation of the original bill,[66] constituting therewith a single record,[67] and

both must be read together.[68] Hence there must be such a connection between the matter of the original and of the supplemental bill that a single bill combining the matter of both would not be multifarious.[69] It follows further that the supplemental bill must not be repugnant to the original.[70]

4. NECESSITY OF EQUITY IN ORIGINAL BILL. If the original bill be fatally defective, so that no valid decree could be rendered thereon, it cannot be supported by nor will it support a supplemental bill stating matters occurring after the original was filed to cure the defect.[71] A failure to demur on this ground waives the objection.[72]

E. Defenses. Besides the ordinary grounds of demurrer defendant to a supplemental bill may demur thereto on the ground that it is not properly connected with the original,[73] that it presents newly arising matter to aid an original fatally defective,[74] or that for any other reason it is not properly supplemental.[75] Pleas and answers are governed by the same rules as to form and substance as pleas and answers to the original.[76] The answer should be confined to the supplemental bill and cannot be made the pretext for adding to or amending the answer to the original.[77] Where the purpose of the bill is merely to bring in a new party he alone should answer it.[78]

XIII. BILLS OF REVIVOR.

A. Nature and Functions — 1. BILLS OF REVIVOR PROPER. The purpose of a bill of revivor is to continue a suit which has abated from the want of proper parties;[79] but only where title has passed to the person who is to be brought in, by mere operation of law, so that such person is merely to be ascertained but the title is not open to litigation;[80] as where by the death of a party his title passes to his heirs or personal representatives.[81] In the absence of statutes removing the disabilities of married women, a bill of revivor is also necessary, upon the marriage of a female plaintiff, in order to continue the suit with her husband as a party.[82] The bill may be filed not only to revive a pending suit, but to revive a decree, by a party having an interest in its enforcement or against representatives chargeable with its performance.[83]

2. BILLS IN THE NATURE OF BILLS OF REVIVOR. When the death of a party is attended with such a transmission of interest that the title itself may be litigated, as well as the identity of the person entitled, a bill of revivor proper is inadequate,[84] and the proceeding must be by original bill in the nature of a bill of revivor.[85] This is the case where the title has passed by will instead of descent.[86] A bill of this character is proper where upon the dissolution of a defendant corporation its title passes to an assignee[87] or receiver appointed by another court.[88]

3. BILLS OF REVIVOR AND SUPPLEMENT. When a bill of revivor is necessary, plaintiff therein is permitted also to introduce new matter proper for a supplemental bill.[89] Such a bill is called a bill of revivor and supplement, and is merely a compound of a bill of revivor and a supplemental bill, continuing an abated suit and supplying defects in the original.[90]

B. Time For Filing. The occasion for a revivor may arise and a bill of revivor be proper at any time before or after decree, and such a bill may in general be filed at any time before the statutory period of limitations;[91] but a revivor will be denied if not sought until after a very long period of inaction.[92]

C. Right to File. A plaintiff may generally file a bill of revivor as a matter of right without obtaining leave of the court.[93] Prior to decree a defendant may not file a bill to revive;[94] but he may on motion compel plaintiff to do so or dismiss his bill.[95] After decree it has been said that the rights of the parties having been ascertained any party can revive;[96] but this is true only where defendant has some interest under the decree which he is entitled to enforce by further proceedings.[97]

D. Form and Sufficiency. A bill of revivor should concisely state the parties and object of the original bill and the proceedings thereon, the abatement and plaintiff's title to revive, and should pray that the suit be revived accordingly.[98] If the instrument contains the proper averments for a bill of revivor it will be so considered, although styled by another name.[99]

E. Parties. In the case of abatement by death the revivor should be by or against the personal representatives or heirs or devisees as the nature of the interest demands.[1] Upon the death or marriage of a plaintiff all the remaining parties must be made parties to a bill to revive; but upon the death of a defendant only the representatives of the deceased defendant need be made defendants in the bill of revivor.[2] Where the bill is filed after decree all interested in carrying the decree into execution must be made parties,[3] but no others.[4]

F. Process. Necessity of process upon bills of revivor and the method of service are in general the same as upon ordinary bills.[5]

G. Defenses. Demurrers, pleas, and answers to a bill of revivor are subject to the same rules as in the case of original bills.[6] If supplemental matter be improperly inserted in the bill a demurrer for that reason should be restricted to such matter.[7] A bill to revive several distinct suits may be demurred to for multifariousness.[8] New defenses to the original cannot be interposed in answer to a bill of revivor,[9] nor can matters already decided in the original cause be

XIV. SIGNING AND VERIFYING PLEADINGS.

A. Signing — 1. By Counsel. In the absence of statute or rule to the contrary all pleadings in equity must be signed by counsel,[13] except disclaimers [14] and general replications.[15] The rule holds also as to other papers, not technically pleadings, which are put in by counsel, as exceptions to an answer.[16] The object of requiring the signature of counsel to a bill is to obtain the certificate, implied from the signature, that the bill contains matter proper to be presented to the court in that form,[17] and the same general object seems to exist in the case of Sufficiency of signature.— The signature should be by counsel and not merely in the name of counsel (Davis v. Davis, 19 N. J. Eq. 180), but it is sufficient if the signature appears on the back of the bill (Litton v. Armstead, 9 Baxt. (Tenn.) 514; Dwight v. Humphreys, 8 Fed. Cas. No. 4,216, 3 McLean 104). Cooper Eq. Pl. 18; 2 Daniell Ch. Pr. 409; 1 Hargrave L. Tr. 302. The object is sometimes stated to be to hold counsel responsible for impertinence and scandal (Mitford Eq. Pl. 47), and this seems to be the main object indicated in Lord Clarendon's orders (Beames Orders Ch. 165).

U. S. Eq. Rule 24 provides that the signature of counsel shall be considered as an affirmation on his part that, upon the instructions given to him and the case laid before him, there is good ground for the suit, in the manner in which it is framed.

Certificates of counsel.— A formal certificate of counsel is sometimes required instead of that implied by signature alone. U. S. Eq. Rule 31 provides that no demurrer or plea shall be filed to any bill unless upon a certificate of counsel that in his opinion it is well founded in point of law. See Secor v. Singleton, 9 Fed. 809, 3 McCrary 230. Similar requirements exist elsewhere. See Taylor v. Brown, 32 Fla. 334, 13 So. 957; Mill River Loan Fund Assoc. v. Claflin, 9 Allen (Mass.) 101; Hoagland v. See, 40 N. J. Eq. 469, 3 Atl. 513.

In Florida a failure to so certify a demurrer must be taken advantage of by motion to strike or it is waived. Keen v. Jordan, 13 Fla. 327.

In the federal courts the want of such certificate is fatal, and the demurrer or plea should be disregarded. Shefficld Furnace Co. v. Witherow, 149 U. S. 574, 13 S. Ct. 936, 37 L. ed. 853; Baltimore Cent. Nat. Bank v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co., 104 U. S. 54, 26 L. ed. 693; Dupree v. Leggett, 124 Fed. 700; American Steel, etc., Co. v. Wire Drawers', other pleadings.[18] If a bill be not signed it will be taken from the files,[19] and it is also open to demurrer.[20] If a bill be filed without a signature the defect may be supplied without costs,[21] and is waived by answer.[22] With the obliteration of the distinction between solicitors and counselors the requirement of signature by counsel has been so far modified that a signature by solicitors is sufficient.[23]

2. By Parties. An answer must be signed by defendant answering,[24] unless under special circumstances the court directs it to be received without a signature.[25] This is true, although the oath to the answer has been waived.[26] A disclaimer must also be signed by the disclaiming defendant, and his signature should be attested.[27] An affidavit or petition should be signed by the person swearing thereto.[28] A bill need not be signed by plaintiff.[29]

B. Verifying — 1. Bills. As a general rule a bill in equity requires no verification.[30] An affidavit must, however, accompany the bill in certain cases. In suits for the discovery of deeds and writings, and for relief founded thereon, there must be an affidavit that they are not in the custody or power of plaintiff, and that he knows not where they are unless they are in the hands of defendant.[31] A bill to examine a witness de bene esse is required to be supported by an affidavit of the facts rendering the loss of the testimony probable.[32] Bills of interpleader must be accompanied by an affidavit showing absence of collusion.[33] A verification is also necessary where a special remedy is sought upon the bill pending the suit.[34] There are in some jurisdictions statutes or rules requiring an oath to certain other bills or parts thereof.[35] A material amendment must be verified,[36] and the same has been held of a supplemental bill.[37] Unless a cross bill is verified it will not stay proceedings on the original.[38] Where verification of a bill is required it should in general be positive,[39] and in order to sustain incidental averments on information and belief they should not only be stated in the bill to be so made,[40] but the affidavit must show clearly what allegations are sworn to positively and what on information and belief.[41] One of two joint claimants may alone verify.[42] The verification should in general be by plaintiff himself, but for good reason shown it may be by an agent or attorney cognizant of the facts.[43] An irregular verification may be cured by amendment,[44] and a failure to verify is waived by demurring.[45]

2. DISCLAIMERS. A disclaimer, although in reality a distinct form of pleading, is often treated as a species of answer, having the same formal parts and being put in in the same way.[46] It is therefore put in under oath,[47] except where plaintiff has in his bill waived an answer under oath.[48]

3. DEMURRERS. As a demurrer states no facts it need not be put in under oath.[49] In the federal courts, however, it must be supported by an affidavit of defendant that it is not interposed for delay.[50]

4. PLEAS. A plea must be supported by an oath as to the truth of the facts therein set forth,[51] except such pleas as would not require for their support at the hearing evidence under oath.[52] The waiver of an oath to an answer does not dispense with an oath to a plea;[53] but if a sworn answer is filed in support of the plea, and states all the matter of the plea, the plea itself need not be sworn to.[54] The oath should generally be positive;[55] but where the fact alleged involves the intent of a party or other similar element which is the subject of nice legal distinction, an affidavit on information and belief is sufficient.[56] The affidavit may be amended.[57] Under the rule in the federal courts, if a plea is not supported by proper affidavit it may be treated as a nullity and disregarded;[58] but the more general rule is that the remedy is by motion to set it aside or take it from the files,[59]

5. Answers — a. In General. Since an answer affords discovery, and is evidence as well as a pleading, it must be sworn to unless plaintiff waives the oath.[61] Where several defendants file an answer each must swear thereto.[62] The answer of a corporation should be put in under the seal of the corporation, and not under oath,[63] and if in such case plaintiff requires an answer under oath he should make some of the officers parties for that purpose.[64] The form of oath varies, but it must be such as in connection with the answer itself to distinguish what is sworn to positively from what is sworn to on information and belief.[65] An answer not properly verified will be stricken out;[66] but the court may permit a verification after filing,[67] and the defect is waived by replying,[68] or by going to final hearing.[69]

b. Waiver of Oath. In modern practice it is quite generally provided that plaintiff may in his bill waive the oath to the answer.[70] Defendant may nevertheless answer under oath,[71] and the answer may then be used as an affidavit,[72] but it is not evidence in the cause.[73]

XV. Matters to Be Proved.

A. Necessity of Proof — 1. Issues Generally. A consideration of the nature, requisites, and forms of equity pleading shows that the system gives no opportunity for single formal issues such as are required at the common law.[75] With the disuse of special replications,[76] the cause was put at issue by service upon defendant of a subpœna to rejoin, or an appearance gratis to rejoin, without the actual filing of a rejoinder.[77] Now this formality is largely disregarded and the cause deemed at issue upon the filing of the general replication.[78] Perhaps the logical view, having due regard to the history of the court of chancery and the evidential character of the responsive answer,[79] is that plaintiff must make out his entire case by proof, with the right to use the answer so far as its admissions render it available for that purpose.[80] There is no practical difference, however, between this theory and the theory of an analogy to the common law, because each party

80. This seems true, especially because of the general rule requiring plaintiff to establish by other proof averments not answered at all. See supra, VIII, E, 6, c; Milligan v. Wissman, (Tenn. Ch. App. 1897) 42 S. W. 811. The practice of taking the bill as confessed for want of appearance or answer is modern. See supra, VIII, E, 6, d.

As to burden of proof.— There is no difference between law and equity. It rests in both is bound by the admissions contained in his pleadings,[81] and evidence on matters confessed by the pleadings will not be considered.[82]

2. What Plaintiff Must Prove. The practical rule is that it devolves upon plaintiff to establish by evidence every averment of his bill essential to entitle him to relief,[83] except such as are expressly or by implication of fact admitted by the answer.[84] This statement accords with the general rule that a defendant is not deemed to admit a particular averment by failing to answer.[85] In those jurisdictions where this doctrine is not held, the rule must be modified so far as to meet the particular doctrines there prevailing.[86] Where a new defendant is brought in by supplemental bill after the proofs have been taken, and such new defendant answers both the original and the supplemental bill, the proofs already taken cannot be used against him, and the answer must be taken as true unless further proofs are taken.[87] The rule prevails as at law that the substance only of the issue need be proved.[88]

3. What Defendant Must Prove. Where a replication is filed every averment of the answer not responsive to the bill is put in issue, and defendant must establish by proof all matters of defense alleged by him by way of avoidance.[89]

86. The rule is essentially the same, the difference lying merely in what allegations are deemed admitted. The different doctrines as to this are stated supra, VIII, E, 6, c.

Allegation of a former suit and decree therein constituting an estoppel must also be proved by defendant.[90]

4. Proof of Pleas. A general replication to an answer puts in issue the entire answer and calls for proof of all controverted matter;[91] but a replication to a plea puts in issue solely the truth of the plea, the burden to establish which is upon defendant,[92] and the evidence must be strictly confined to that issue.[93]

B. Proof Confined to Matters Pleaded — 1. Generally. The very object of pleadings requires that the parties be confined to the matters contained therein, and therefore no evidence will be considered except that relating to matters alleged in the bill or answer.[94] Plaintiff will be confined to matters alleged in alleged so vaguely and uncertainly as not to enable the other party to prepare his case so as to secure a full and fair investigation,[98] but an argumentative denial, if distinct and certain, is sufficient to make an issue.[99]

2. Proof of Specific Facts Under General Charge. Under general allegations specific facts may be proved, provided the general charge is sufficient to apprise the adverse party of the nature of the evidence to be introduced.[1] A general charge that a defendant has coöperated with other defendants, without specific traversable charges as to the manner of so doing, will not put such defendant's acts in issue,[2] and the parties will be confined to specific facts alleged in support of charges of insolvency[3] or usury.[4] Objection that the allegations are too general cannot be first made on appeal.[5]

XVI. TAKING PROOFS.

A. Modes of Taking Proofs — 1. Evidence a Part of the Record. A fundamental idea of the chancery practice was that all proceedings, including the evidence, must be made a matter of record,[6] and therefore all evidence, documentary or otherwise, must be filed,[7] except documents already of record,[8] or made a part of the pleadings of the party in whose behalf they operate and admitted in the pleading of the opposite party.[9]

2. THE ANCIENT METHOD. Formerly to the principle that the evidence should be made part of the record was superadded the further requirement that it be taken secretly and preserved a secret until publication passed. Accordingly, while mere formal proof of the execution of a document not impeached by the answer might be made viva voce at the hearing,[10] provided an order be first obtained for that purpose,[11] all other testimony was required to be adduced in response to interrogatories framed by counsel and propounded to witnesses, and their answers taken in writing in pursuance of a commission or by an examiner of the court.[12]

3. MODERN METHODS — a. In General. The taking of testimony in equity cases is now so largely regulated by statutes and rules that the local law must always be consulted, and general statements are almost impracticable.[13]

b. Depositions — (I) GENERALLY. In the absence of other positive provision to the contrary the testimony of witnesses in equity suits may still be taken upon written interrogatories in pursuance of a commission issued for that purpose or upon notice, as provided by statute or rule.[14]

(II) ORAL EXAMINATIONS. The practice has arisen in many jurisdictions of permitting witnesses to be examined orally by counsel, instead of on written interrogatories, before an examiner or other officer by whom the testimony of such witnesses is reduced to writing and certified.[15] A frequent requirement is

12. For a full description of the former method see 2 Daniell Ch. Pr. (1st ed.) c. 20. In view of the general disuse or modification of this old mode of proof a detailed description thereof is not deemed advisable.

13. In the federal courts the matter is regulated by equity rules 67–71. N. Y. Const. (1846) art. 6, § 8, provided that the testimony in equity cases shall be taken in like manner as in cases at law, and the same provision is continued in the present constitution, article 6, section 3. Provisions more or less similar are found in other jurisdictions.

14. See DEPOSITIONS, 13 Cyc. 834, 880. See also U. S. Eq. Rules 67, 68. The Illinois act of Feb. 12, 1849, providing for the taking of testimony in the same manner as in common law preserved the right to use depositions. Under the New York constitution (see supra, note 13), and other mandatory provisions of like nature, depositions can of course be used only under such circumstances as would permit their use at law.

Depositions taken in another suit between the same parties may be used in evidence by special order of the court granting permission. Leviston v. French, 45 N. H. 21.

15. See DEPOSITIONS, 13 Cyc. 891.

U. S. Eq. Rule 67 provides that either party may give notice to the other that he desires the evidence to be adduced in the case to be taken orally, and thereupon all the witnesses to be examined shall be examined before one of the examiners of the court, or before an examiner to be specially appointed by the court. After such notice has been given no deposition should be taken on interrogatories except for special reasons. Bischoffscheim v. Baltzer, 10 Fed. 1, 20 Blatchf. 229. Under the law as it stood in 1861, it was held that evidence must be taken either in open court or upon written interrogatories, unless the parties agreed to a different course. Bronson v. La Crosse, etc., R. Co., 4 Fed. Cas. No. 1,930. A deposition will not be suppressed because taken by stipulation before an officer without special appointment as an examiner (J. L. Mott Iron-Works v. Standard Mfg. Co., 48 Fed. 345), and on leave to take testimony before any examiner, if the parties proceed in part before one and then before another, the testimony taken before the second will be allowed to stand (Canton v. McGraw, 67 Md. 583, 11 Atl. 287).

that a party must furnish to his adversary in advance of the examination a list of the witnesses to be examined.[16] Under this system of examination of course all secrecy disappears, and publicity has been even encouraged.[17]

c. Examination in Open Court. As already stated[18] there are now frequent provisions whereby testimony in equity cases may or must be taken in open court as in cases at common law. This rests sometimes, when not compulsory, in the election of the parties,[19] and sometimes in the discretion of the court.[20]

B. Time For Taking Proof — 1. In General. By the chancery practice the time for taking testimony was brought to a close by an order passing publication, which in most cases had to be preceded by a rule to produce witnesses.[21] A rule to close the testimony within a specified or customary time is still, it seems, sometimes necessary;[22] but now statutes or general rules usually prescribe a fixed time

Counsel may not advise the witness on the examination that he is not compelled to answer, but it is the duty of the examiner to inform him of his rights. Taylor v. Wood, 2 Edw. (N. Y.) 94.

An examiner may be appointed pro hac vice. Steffee v. Kerr, 2 Woodw. (Pa.) 171; Smith v. Onion, 19 Vt. 432; Van Hook v. Pendleton, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,852, 2 Blatchf. 85.

Clerical assistance.— Under Md. Code, art. 16, § 144, the examiner may have a clerk to write down the testimony. Under U. S. Eq. Rule 67 the testimony may be taken by a skilful stenographer or typewriter under the direction of the examiner.

Miss. Code, § 1764, does not authorize the examination of witnesses in open court except in the cases specified. Winner v. Brandon, 82 Miss. 767, 35 So. 192; Dickerson v. Askew, 82 Miss. 436, 34 So. 157. But the code provision does not apply to equity cases tried by a jury (White v. Jones, (1903) 35 So. 450), nor to a case where the parties have virtually agreed that the testimony shall be taken orally, in which case one of them cannot withdraw from his agreement to the prejudice of the other (Lessly v. Ogden, (1904) 35 So. 825). Formerly no oral evidence was permitted. McIntyre v. Ledyard, Sm. & M. Ch. 91.

U. S. Eq. Rule 67 provides that upon due notice given, as prescribed by previous order, the court may at its discretion permit the whole or any specific part of the evidence to be adduced orally in open court on final hearing. An order for this purpose cannot be had ex parte. Mears v. Lockhart, 94 Fed. 274, 36 C. C. A. 239.

In Iowa there are two methods of trying equity cases: the first, which is generally applicable, requiring written evidence (Harlan v. Porter, 50 Iowa 446; State v. Orwig, 25 Iowa 280; Henderson v. Legg, 16 Iowa 484), the second, applicable in divorce cases, foreclosure of tax titles and of mortgages, being the same as in actions at law (State v. Orwig, 25 Iowa 280; White v. Kelly, 23 Iowa 275; Henderson v. Legg, 16 Iowa 484). The taking of stenographic notes is not a compliance with the law requiring written evidence. Godfrey v. McKean, 54 Iowa 127, 6 N. W. 151. See Code, § 2742; Laws (1878), c. 145.

Publication under the chancery practice was the open showing of depositions and the giving out of copies by the clerks or examiners. Blake Ch. Pr. 143; 2 Daniell Ch. Pr. 562; Practice Reg. 297.

Under U. S. Eq. Rule 69, publication may be ordered by any judge of the court upon due notice to the parties immediately upon the return of the commissions and depositions, or it may at any time pass in the clerk's office upon consent of the parties in writing and a copy thereof entered in the order book or indorsed upon the deposition. Where plaintiff's testimony has been taken by commission it will be published before defendant opens his case, so that defendant may know whether the case in chief has been made out. Eillert v. Craps, 44 Fed. 792.

Publication should be ordered on a rule day or in term-time. Coal River Nav. Co. v. Webb, 3 W. Va. 438.

In the New York chancery a notice of the rule to pass publication had to be served on defendant's solicitor or his agent (Billings v. Rattoon, 5 Johns. Ch. 189), but where such a rule had been enlarged no further rule need be entered upon the expiration of the further time (Moody v. Payne, 3 Johns. Ch. 294).

22. Tillotson v. Mitchell, 111 Ill. 518; Boon v. Pierpont, 32 N. J. Eq. 217; In re Mechanics' Labor Sav. Bank, 10 N. J. L. J. 112; James v. Berry, 1 Paige (N. Y.) 647; within which the evidence shall be taken.[23] Depositions taken after expiration of the time fixed, unless the time is enlarged or leave given to file nunc pro tunc, will be suppressed,[24] or will be excluded on the hearing,[25] without a motion to suppress.[26] Generally evidence may not be taken before the cause is at issue and ready for proof.[27]

2. Extending Time. It rests within the discretion of the court for cause shown to extend the time for taking the proof.[28] The exercise of such discretion depends of course on the circumstances of the case.[29] Where a new defendant is brought in by supplemental bill after proof taken, the cause should be reopened for proofs between such defendant and plaintiff.[30] Where both parties proceed with the proofs after the time for taking them has expired, they will be deemed to have consented to extend the time.[31] After publication has passed, witnesses cannot be examined except under very special circumstances,[32] and it has even sometimes been held that no extension will then be given except where the judge himself entertains a doubt, and desires to inform his conscience, or where some additional inquiry is indispensable to the rendition of a decree.[33] However,

Alabama rule 64, requiring consent or a special application to take proofs after publication, leaves unabridged the chancellor's discretion to order additional testimony to in-another well recognized cause for taking testimony after publication is the impeachment of witnesses.[34] The application for an extension of time should be made upon notice,[35] should show that the applicant has not been negligent,[36] should state the substance of what the party expects to prove,[37] and all facts necessary to fix the terms of the order.[38] As the extension is a matter of grace conditions may be imposed on granting it.[39]

3. Impeaching Witnesses. When the testimony was taken secretly, testimony to impeach witnesses was necessarily postponed until after publication, and it was necessary to obtain a special order for that purpose, which was granted, however, almost as of course.[40] For this purpose it was necessary to file articles giving notice of what witnesses were to be impeached and the particular grounds.[41] The examination was confined to evidence of the general character of the witness to be impeached, the contradiction of particular facts sworn to by him, not material to the issue,[42] and to showing that previously to his examination he had made statements contrary to his deposition.[43] The adverse party may under such an order take testimony to contradict the impeaching testimony and establish the credit of his witnesses.[44]

C. Reëxamining Witnesses. A witness whose examination has once been closed cannot ordinarily be reëxamined as to the same matter,[45] but for cause shown the court may in its discretion make a special order permitting such reëxamination.[46] The principal causes for such reëxamination are the suppression of the previous depositions for irregularity or because the interrogatories were leading, or the curing of omissions, or correction of mistakes made by the witness.[47]

D. Objections to Evidence. All the evidence offered must in general be received in the first instance in order to preserve it on the record,[49] but objections should be made when the testimony is offered, and incorporated in the record, to be passed upon later.[50] It is proper, however, to reserve until the hearing objections going to the competency,[51] or relevancy of testimony.[52] Objections must state clearly the testimony objected to and the ground of the objection.[53] Objections are waived unless the attention of the chancellor is called thereto,[54] and by other conduct inconsistent with an insistence thereon;[55] but an express waiver of an objection must be entered on the record.[56]

XVII. RULES OF EVIDENCE.

A. Analogy Between Rules at Law and in Equity — 1. In General. In general the rules of evidence in courts of law and in courts of equity are the same,[57] unless modified by statutory provisions.[58] And a court of equity is warranted in making the same deductions from facts as a jury might make.[59]

2. Parol Evidence to Vary a Written Instrument. Parol evidence is in general inadmissible, both at law and in equity, to vary a written instrument.[60] But where the powers of the court are invoked upon the ground of mistake or fraud, parol evidence will generally be admitted to contradict or control a written instrument if its admission is necessary in order to reach the equities of the case.[61] In other classes of cases the extent to which equity will receive parol evidence to vary a written instrument has never been established by authority.[62]

B. Pleadings as Evidence — 1. The Bill as Evidence. The allegations of a bill not sworn to by the complainant are generally considered as the mere suggestions of counsel, but those contained in a bill which is verified by him are

The burden of proof is the same at law and in equity (Pusey v. Wright, 31 Pa. St. 387), and the party maintaining the affirmative has it cast upon him (Pusey v. Wright, supra; Cochran v. Blount, 161 U. S. 350, 16 S. Ct. 454, 40 L. ed. 729. See also Huston v. Harrison, 168 Pa. St. 136, 31 Atl. 987; Clifton v. Weston, 54 W. Va. 250, 46 S. E. 360).

Evidence as to confessions and statements by defendant not charged in the bill is equally admissible in equity as at law. Jenkins v. Eldredge, 13 Fed. Cas. No. 7,266, 3 Story 181.

58. Ala. Code (1876), § 3036, which renders a written instrument, which is the foundation of an action, self-proving, unless execution is denied by a verified plea by the party charged with its execution or by whom it purports to have been executed, applies to suits in equity, although it is found in the chapter of the code devoted to evidence in proceedings in civil actions in courts of common law. Bonner v. Young, 68 Ala. 35 [followed in Hooper v. Strahan, 71 Ala. 75]. But see Singleton v. Gayle, 8 Port. (Ala.) 270.

Under Ohio Code, § 533, providing that all suits pending when the code took effect could be prosecuted to final decree as if the code had not taken effect, acts relating to the law of evidence (2 Curwen St. pp. 1522, 1597) were not repealed as to such suits pending. S.) 174, 5 L. ed. 589. And see Gill v. Claggett, 4 Md. Ch. 470. When a party prays relief against the very face of a written contract, on the ground that such writing does not truly speak the meaning and intention and true agreement designed to be entered into, he must clearly bring himself within the exception to the general rule which gives the preference to written over parol evidence. Brantley v. West, 27 Ala. 542. In order to show in equity that an instrument purporting to be an agreement between husband and wife should not be allowed any effect, oral evidence is admissible that it was signed by both with the understanding that they were not legally bound thereby. Earle v. Rice, 111 Mass. 17. Equity, to determine whether a written instrument is in effect a mortgage, hears parol evidence, not to contradict or vary the terms of the instrument, but to raise an equity superior to it, and give it effect according to the true intent and purpose of the parties. Pioneer Gold Min. Co. v. Baker, 23 Fed. 258, 10 Sawy. 539.

62. A court of equity will be much more liberal in allowing parol evidence to contradict or control a written instrument, in order to reach the equities of the case, than courts of law. The principle that parol evidence may be admitted, even in defense, to vary or contradict a written instrument, has never been established by authority, although it seems that courts of chancery are more liberal in admitting it to resist than to enforce a specific performance. Stoutenburgh v. Tompkins, 9 N. J. Eq. 332.

competent evidence against him.[63] But the bill is not evidence against plaintiff as to an allegation of fact contained in it which is not admitted by the answer; he is not concluded thereby.[64] Plaintiff's bill filed in another suit may be read against him, on proof of his actual privity to the contents and to the filing of it.[65]

2. The Answer as Evidence — a. Hearing on Bill and Answer. When complainant sets down the cause for hearing on bill and answer, or on bill, answer, and exhibits, he thereby admits that every well pleaded averment of the answer, whether responsive to the allegations of the bill or in avoidance, is true. Having filed no replication the answer is taken as true, and therefore defendant needs no proof; and the complainant not having replied cannot offer any.[66] It is in effect a submission of the cause to the court by complainant on the contention that he Vanneman v. Swedesboro Loan, etc., Assoc., 42 N. J. Eq. 263, 7 Atl. 676. The statements in a bill in equity are evidence against plaintiff, although very feeble, so far as they are the suggestions of counsel; and it seems that it makes no difference that plaintiff gave the bill in evidence simply in order to use the answer. Documents, records, etc.—At a hearing upon bill and answer plaintiff can read in evidence only such documents as are admitted in the answer, and records, or other instruments duly proved and acknowledged in such a manner as to make the production thereof, or an exemplification in case of a record, sufficient proof; and such proof and acknowledgment must appear by the bill. Latting v. Hall, 9 Paige (N. Y.) 383. And see Anonymous, 1 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 73.

Affidavits.— A bill in equity, praying for an account, was filed in a federal circuit court to recover license fees, and plaintiff moved for a decree on the bill and answer and an affidavit, and defendant put in counter affidavits. It was held, under equity rule 90, that the English practice which existed in 1842 must be followed, and not any other English practice, and that the affidavit of plaintiff could not be considered, but that the case would be heard on bill and answer. On submission upon an agreed statement of facts, after a general replication to a bill in equity, the allegations in the answer are to be taken as true only so far as they are supported by the facts agreed. Taunton v. Taylor, 116 Mass. 254.

Waiver of replication, etc.— After replication filed answers not under oath are not evidence of the facts stated in them; but the complainant in such case may waive his replication, and the cause may be set down for hearing on bill and answer only. Dascomb v. Marston, 80 Me. 223, 13 Atl. 868. Where a replication is filed and the cause set down for hearing, and no rule to produce witnesses is entered, it is a waiver of the replication, and defendants are entitled to the benefit of their answers as if the cause had been set down for hearing on bill and answer. Wiser v. Blachly, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 607. Where a hearing is had, and a decree made thereafter, on bill, answer, and replication, it must be regarded as an argument on bill and answer, whereby the allegations of the answer are admitted, although strictly the issue should have gone to an examiner to take testimony, or in some form have been supported by evidence. Qualification of rule.— Where a cause is brought to a hearing on bill and answer without replication, this will not be ground for taking the answer as true to its full extent, unless it appears to have been set down for hearing at the instance of complainant. Carman v. Watson, 1 How. (Miss.) 333.

Formal defect in answer.— Where complainant in the bill sets the cause down for hearing on bill and answer before replication filed to the answer and before the case is at issue, he will be held at the hearing to have admitted the truth of all the allegations of the answer, notwithstanding any formal defect in the oath to such answer. Lee v. Bradley Fertilizer Co., 44 Fla. 787, 33 So. 456.

Matters of fact alone admitted.— Plaintiff, by setting the cause down for hearing on bill and answer, admits the truth only of the pertinent and material facts set out in the answer, and not mere matters of opinion and inference. Contee v. Dawson, 2 Bland (Md.) 264. Where a cause is brought to a hearing upon the bill and answer, the answer must be taken for true in all points; and in such case if defendant states that he "hopes to prove" certain facts, they must be considered proved (Brinkerhoff v. Brown, 7 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 217); but it is not meant by this rule that legal deductions insisted on in the answer are to be considered as true, but only such matters of fact as are stated in the answer by way of defense, or evidence of the equity set forth in the bill (Rodgers v. Rodgers, 6 Heisk. (Tenn.) 489).

Other evidence.— When a cause is set down for hearing on bill and answer, the answer must be admitted to be true in all points, and no other evidence is admitted unless it be matter of record to which the answer refers and which is provable by the record. Milligan v. Wissman, (Tenn. Ch. App. 1897) 42 S. W. 811. Where a cause is set down for hearing upon the bill. answer, and exhibits, a deed filed by plaintiff as an exhibit is evidence for him, as the answer is for defendant. White v. Green, 36 N. C. 45.

b. Hearing on Bill, Answer, and Replication — (1) GENERAL RULE. As soon as the cause is at issue by the filing of a replication,[68] both parties may proceed to take testimony for the purpose of establishing their respective cases.[69] Under these circumstances, at the hearing the answer of defendant under oath,[70] and where it is made on defendant's knowledge, is evidence for him,[71] so far as it is responsive to the allegations of the bill,[72] and such an answer will be taken as Impertinent allegations in an answer cannot be used as evidence for defendant, although plaintiffs neglected to file their replications. Gunnell v. Bird, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 304, 19 L. ed. 913.

68. Where a replication is filed to an answer, defendant is put to his proof and cannot use his answer as evidence (Woodall v. Prevatt, 45 N. C. 199), except so much as may qualify or explain the meaning of some passage in the answer read in evidence by complainant (Clark v. Spears, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 96).

Where replication is unnecessary in chancery pleading (Ala. Code, § 901) facts not responsive to the bill that are set out in the answer, not by way of special plea, are superfluous, and do not require any action from the complainant. Stein v. McGrath, 128 Ala. 175, 30 So. 792.

Under Iowa Code (1851), where the answer does not call for a sworn replication, such replication is not equivalent to the testimony of a witness. Arms v. Stockton, 12 Iowa 327. A sworn replication, which neither admits nor denies the allegations of the pleading to which it is a reply, but denies all knowledge of the matters alleged, cannot be allowed the same effect as the testimony of a witness, particularly where the matters in the replication were not required by and are not responsive to the petition. Bacon v. Lee, 4 Iowa 490.

69. 1 Barbour Ch. Pr. 254. See also supra, XVI, B, 1.

70. Answer sworn to by part of several defendants cannot be admitted as the answer of the whole. Masterson v. Craig, 5 Litt. (Ky.) 39. See also supra, XIV, B, 5, a.

71. Patterson v. Scott, 142 Ill. 138, 31 N. E. 433 [affirming 37 Ill. App. 520]. If a bill is one that under the rules of chancery pleading is not required to be sworn to, but does not waive defendant's oath, a sworn answer is admissible in evidence. Pearce v. Suggs, 85 Tenn. 724, 4 S. W. 526. The right of a defendant to have his answer taken in evidence is coextensive with his obligation to answer. Blaisdell v. Bowers, 40 Vt. 126.

Defendant's answer to the charging part of the bill and responsive thereto is evidence in his favor as much as his answer to the stating part. Smith v. Clark, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 368.

Circumstances negativing a statement in the bill, and set forth in the answer, are so far evidence as to put plaintiff upon proof of his case, although no discovery is sought by the bill. Columbia Branch Bank v. Black, 2 McCord Eq. (S. C.) 344.

Where plaintiff calls upon defendant to state in his answer the consideration of a deed, and the latter does so and supports it by evidence, the answer will not be disregarded as evidence because unfavorable to plaintiff. Mattoon v. McGrew, 112 U. S. 713, 5 S. Ct. 369, 28 L. ed. 824; Hitz v. National Metropolitan Bank, 111 U. S. 722, 4 S. Ct. 613, 28 L. ed. 577.

Credibility of the answer is a question for the court. Dunham v. Gates, Hoffm. (N. Y.) 185. And, although all of an answer responsive to a bill is to be received as evidence, the court may believe a part of it and disbelieve another part. Mayo v. Carrington, 19 Gratt. (Va.) 74.

72. See infra, XVII, B, 2, b, (III). Only such facts set forth in an answer as are responsive to the allegations of the bill will be considered as evidence in the cause at the hearing.

74. For the amount of evidence necessary to overcome the responsive averments under these circumstances see infra, XVII, B, 2, b, (IV).

75. See supra, XV, A, 2. When the new matter is mere pleading to found a defense upon it must be proved; but when responsive to the bill, although affirmative in form, if in effect a denial of the charge in the bill, and directly responsive thereto, it is evidence to be taken as true till disproved, not pleading whose truth is to be established by evidence. Stillwell v. Badgett, 22 Ark. 164.

not sworn to, it ordinarily performs only the office of a pleading, and has often been said not to be evidence for any purpose.[76] It has, however, been doubted whether such an answer should be shorn of all weight as evidence, but just what its effect and value as evidence in the cause should be has not been definitely established.[77]

(B) Waiver of Oath by Plaintiff. It is quite generally provided by statute or rule of court that the complainant may in his bill waive an answer under oath, and that if such an express waiver is made the answer cannot be used by defendant as evidence in his favor even when sworn to.[78] In the absence of such statutes or court rules, it has been held that the complainant cannot by waiving

If treated as a valid answer by complainant, an unsworn answer will have the same effect in favor of defendant as if sworn to. Fulton Bank v. Beach, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 307.

77. 3 Greenleaf Ev. § 286. It has been held that an unsworn answer does not lose all force as evidence where it is responsive to the bill. It only changes the rule that requires the testimony of two witnesses, or one witness and strong corroborating circumstances, to overcome it. A mere preponderance of evidence will be sufficient for that purpose. Latham v. Staples, 46 Ala. 462. It has also been held that the facts alleged in the answer may be regarded by the court in deciding on the merits of the case, although the answer was not sworn to, where the facts regarded were admissions against defendant. Effect in requiring proof by plaintiff.— The fact that a bill in chancery dispenses with the oath of defendant to his answer does not relieve complainant from proving such allegations of his bill as are put in issue by the answer. Harris v. Reece, 10 Ill. 212. And where in a case heard on bill and answer without testimony complainant had waived the oath of defendant to the answer, but all the allegations of the bill which supported the equity of complainant's case were directly and fully contradicted by the denials of the answer made upon the personal knowledge of defendant, it was held, there being no evidence sufficient to support the bill, that the denials in the answer must prevail. Latham v. Staples, 46 Ala. 462.

Waiver in amended bill.— The effect of an answer under oath to an original bill calling

(c) Answer on Information and Belief, Etc. Answers on information and belief are of little or no weight as evidence and generally do no more than make an issue between the parties.[80] The same thing holds true when defendant refers to facts which are not within his own knowledge,[81] or when the answer refers for an answer under oath cannot be avoided by the filing of an amended bill waiving the oath, and an answer to the same not under oath. The answer under oath to the original bill will still be evidence on the hearing of the cause. Stevenson v. Mathers, 67 Ill. 123; Wylder v. Crane, 53 Ill. 490; Walker v. Campbell, 5 Lea (Tenn.) 354; Throckmorton v. Throckmorton, 86 Va. 768, 11 S. E. 289. And it has been held that where complainant, having ascertained what defendant's answer would be, filed a waiver of discovery, and also an amendment to his bill, the waiver did not hold good as to the answer, either to the original bill or to the amendment, the court saying that when complainant gets information from respondent, without waiver, as a part of his case, he must take all on the same terms; having received a part he can waive none. Stanford v. Murphy, 63 Ga. 410.

Admissions in answer.— But a defendant, in a bill for discovery and relief, whose oath has been waived, is not thereby excused from answering, and the only effect of dispensing with the oath is to deprive him of the benefit of his own declarations. Admissions contained in such answers are evidence against him. Cummins v. Jerman. 6 Del. Ch. 122, 33 Atl. 622; Hyer v. Little, 20 N. J. Eq. 443; Bartlett v. Gale, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 503; Uhlmann v. Arnholt, etc., Brewing Co., 41 Fed. 369.

Where several persons are made defendants who have no joint and common interest, so that the answer of one will not be evidence for or against the other, complainant may waive an answer on oath as to one of them, and may call for a sworn answer and a discovery from the other. Morse v. Hovey, 1 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 404.

Relief resting merely on the necessity of discovery cannot be set up where answer under oath is waived. Torret v. Rodgers, 39 Mich. 85.

Where an amended bill requires sworn answer, the original bill waiving answer on oath, and the only answer filed is that to the amended bill, and the cause is heard on the bill and answer, the answer is only to be taken as true so far as it is responsive to the amended bill. Taunton v. McInnish, 46 Ala. 619.

Unsworn answer received by consent of plaintiff will be allowed full effect as to co-defendants. Contee v. Dawson, 2 Bland (Md.) 264. But see Ayres v. Campbell, 9 Iowa 213, 74 Am. Dec. 346.

On agent's information.— But a party called upon to answer a bill may adopt the information of his agent and make the agent's statements his own, and such an answer will be entitled to the same effect as one made upon his personal knowledge. Radcliff v. Bartholomew, 38 N. C. 556.

Where answer on information and belief raises an issue, and complainant introduces no proof in support of his bill, the bill should be dismissed. Dunham v. Gates, Hoffm. (N. Y.) 185.

An answer professing ignorance of the transaction stated in the bill is not evidence against complainant. Its only legal effect is to compel him to establish his case by testimony. Drury v. Conner, 6 Harr. & J. (Md.) 288. A denial in the answer, when responsive to an allegation in the bill, of a matter not alleged to be within the peculiar knowledge of defendant, will be treated as merely putting the allegation in issue. Biscoe v. Coulter, 18 Ark. 423.

to facts the truth or falsehood of which defendant could not from his situation have known.[82]

(D) Inconsistency Between Denials and Defenses in Answer. Inconsistency between the denial made by the answer and facts which it also sets up as a defense will seriously weaken and may utterly destroy its effect as evidence.[83] This rule does not, however, ordinarily obtain where the practice is regulated by a code or practice act.[84]

(E) Evasiveness. The answer, to be evidence for defendant, must be direct and positive, or so expressed as to amount to a direct and positive denial or affirmation of the facts alleged and charged or denied in the bill, in order to have weight as evidence in his favor, in regard to those facts. Any evasiveness weakens the answer and may entirely deprive it of effect as evidence.[85] But a literal denial in the answer to a bill, although evasive and bad on exception, still cannot be taken as an admission of the bill.[86]

(F) Under Codes or Practice Acts. Many modifications of this chancery rule are of course found in those states where the practice is regulated to a greater or less extent by codes or practice acts.[87]

82. Biscoe v. Coulter, 18 Ark. 423; Lattomus v. Garman, 3 Del. Ch. 232.

Where an administrator is called upon to answer certain matters which appear to have rested exclusively within the knowledge of his intestate, it is sufficient that he swears as he is informed and believes; but his answer must be taken with reference to the reasons given for his belief, as well as to the nature of the subject of which he speaks. 84. Under the code, where defendant pleads a general denial and a further defense by way of confession and avoidance, the admissions of the latter cannot be used by plaintiff to establish the issues raised by the general denial. Stanley v. Schoolbred, 25 S. C. 181 [followed in Gilreath v. Furman, 57 S. C. 289, 35 S. E. 516].

See also cases as to evasive answers infra, XVII, B, 2, b, (III). A sworn answer which is grossly evasive cannot have the force as evidence of one that shows apparent good faith. Fairbairn v. Middlemiss, 47 Mich. 372, 11 N. W. 203. It is very significant where the answer under oath evades the controlling fact in issue. Baker v. Baker, 13 Cal. 87.

Examples of evasiveness.— Where a bill alleged that certain letters exhibited were received from defendant, and he states in his answer that he did not write them, but does not deny that he sent them, they are to be considered as genuine. Russell v. Russell, 4 Dana (Ky.) 40. Although an answer is responsive to the allegations of the bill, on the point of defendant being a good-faith purchaser for value, it is not evidence for defendant when he merely states that he purchased for a specified sum, without saying that the sum was paid. Ellis v. Woods, 9 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 19.

86. Russey v. Walker, 32 Ala. 532. See also supra, VIII, E, 4, b.

87. Alabama.— The answer in equity cannot be used as evidence by defendant, unless at the hearing he designates it as part of the testimony on which he relies, the 77th rule of chancery practice (Code (1876), p. 172), providing that "any testimony not offered in this way, and noted by the register on the minutes" is no part of the record, and must not be considered by the chancellor. Goodloe v. Dean, 81 Ala. 479, 8 So. 197. Where an answer to a bill for removal of a cloud on title, and subrogation to rights of a mortgagee, admitting a fact, is not mentioned in the note of testimony, nor even in the order of submission, it is no evidence of such fact. Tait v. American Freehold Land Mortg. Co., 132 Ala. 193, 31 So. 623.

California.— The answer is not evidence for defendant. Bostic v. Love, 16 Cal. 69.

Georgia.— A statement in a bill that the complainant is able to prove the allegations in his bill is not such a special disclaimer of discovery, under Rev. Code, § 4136, as will prevent the answer of defendant under oath from being evidence in his favor. Woodward v. Gates, 38 Ga. 205.

Iowa.— A set-off is not a pleading, within the meaning of the Code, section 1745, and, although sworn to, is not evidence equal to that of a disinterested witness. Thrift v. Redman, 13 Iowa 25.

Maryland.— Code (1888), art. 16, § 146, provides that defendant need not make oath to his answer, unless required by complainant, and that no answer, even though sworn to, shall be evidence against complainant, unless read by him at the hearing. Section 147 provides that if complainant shall not require an answer under oath, or shall require an answer only as to specified interrogatories, the answer, although under oath, except such parts as shall be directly responsive to such interrogatories, shall not be evidence for de-

(G) Other Limitations and Exceptions. The answer in order to be considered as evidence must be an answer to a fact averred in the bill and not an answer to a mere inference of law,[88] nor to a statement in the bill of defendant's pretensions.[89] Voluntary answers[90] and formal answers[91] are not evidence. A special force is given to an answer as evidence on an application to dissolve an injunction.[92] What the answer asserts is true is not evidence for defendant, if discovery be waived, but must be proved aliunde.[93] An answer is not evidence of inadmissible facts, as of a verbal agreement controlling a writing.[94] The general equitable principles of estoppel sometimes prevent a defendant from using certain facts which he has set up in his answer as evidence in his favor.[95] If an answer in equity is allowed to be withdrawn, and another answer filed, because the first one was filed by defendant's solicitor without the concurrence of his client, such answer cannot be read in evidence against defendant.[96]

(III) RESPONSIVENESS. The test of the application of the general rule that an answer is available as evidence of facts when responsive to the bill has been said to be whether the questions answered would be proper to a witness in a trial at law — whether they would be relevant, such as the witness would be bound to answer, and the answers be competent testimony.[97] Again it has been said that if the whole subject-matter of the statement or allegation in the answer might have been left out, then the allegations in the answer upon that subject are not responsive to the bill; but, if the omission of some statement upon that subject would furnish just ground of exception to the answer, then the answer, to the extent to which it is required, and whatever its character, whether affirmative or negative, fendant, unless the cause is heard on bill and answer only. It was held that where an answer under oath is required, it will be evidence against complainant only if read by him at the hearing, and where not so required it will if under oath be evidence for defendant when the cause is heard on bill and answer alone, but whether or not the answer be evidence it will always when denying the allegations of the bill force complainant to prove those allegations. Davis v. Crockett, 88 Md. 249, 41 Atl. 66. Acts (1852), c. 133, or Acts (1853), c. 344, relating to the effect of answers as evidence, do not apply to an answer, at the hearing of a motion for the dissolution of an injunction, when such a hearing is not the final one. Bouldin v. Baltimore, 15 Md. 18. See also Gelston v. Rullman, 15 Md. 260.

Vermont.— Gen. St. c. 36, § 24, providing that parties shall not testify in their own behalf in certain cases, does not apply to an answer to a bill or petition in chancery, but the answer when responsive is evidence, notwithstanding the statute. Blaisdell v. Bowers, 40 Vt. 126.

West Virginia.— Under Code (1899), c. 125, §§ 38, 59, providing that if the bill be verified defendant must verify his answer and that when he in his answer denies any material allegation of the bill the effect of such denial shall only be to put plaintiff on proof, an answer to a bill is not evidence for defendant, whether it be sworn to or not. The answer, when responsive to the bill, although uncontradicted, cannot be taken to establish anything in bar of the relief prayed, which parol testimony would not be admitted to prove, for it is as evidence only that it is received. Winn v. Albert, 2 Md. Ch. 169.

95. Where defendant in a bill of foreclosure is the original mortgagor, his answer is never regarded as evidence to impeach the consideration of the mortgage securities. Wooley v. Chamberlain, 24 Vt. 270. When a testator or intestate has died in the possession of personal property, and that fact is alleged after the usual form in a bill for partition or account against the executor or administrator, the answer of the latter cannot be received as evidence in support of a title adverse to that of the testator or intestate. The executor or administrator asserting such claim must proceed to support it by the same evidence as if he were the actor in the proceedings. Reeves v. Tucker, 5 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 150.

is but a response to the requisition of plaintiff.[98] If the answer springs out of the allegations in the bill, and its statements stand connected in substance with the subject-matter of the allegations, although they are not literally and directly responsive, it is evidence for defendant for so much as it is worth.[99] Where the answer is confined to such facts as are necessarily required by the bill and those inseparably connected with them, forming a part of one and the same transaction, the answer is responsive to the bill, as well when it discharges as when it charges defendant.[1] So it is well settled that an answer in stating the particulars of a transaction charged and inquired into by the bill is responsive.[2] Likewise so much of the answer as is necessarily connected with the responsive matter as being explanatory of it is deemed responsive.[3] An answer is responsive not only where it denies a material allegation of the bill, but also where a material disclosure is called for by the bill and made by the answer.[4] An answer is responsive to the bill only so far as it answers to a material statement or charge in the bill, as to which a disclosure is sought, and which is the subject of parol proof.[5] An evasive answer will not be considered responsive so as to be evidence in defendant's favor.[6] The rule which makes responsive answers proof for defendant applies only to fair answers, and not to those which upon their face are incredible.[7] Nevertheless the inherent improbability of allegations in an answer is insufficient in itself to overcome its responsive character.[8] The effect of an answer responsive to the bill does not depend upon defendant's competency as a witness.[9] An answer may sometimes be evidence of a fact not stated in the bill, as when the bill sets forth part of complainant's case only instead of the whole, and the part omitted and stated in the answer shows a different case from that made by the bill, and is not by avoidance merely.[10] What is responsive to a bill is to be determined by the bill, not by the interrogatories. The interrogatories can neither limit nor extend defendant's obligation to answer.[11] The application of the foregoing rules is illustrated by many cases depending each upon the particular averments of bill and answer, but presenting no general principles permitting of classification.[12]

(IV) Amount of Evidence Required to Overcome Answer — (A) Various Statements of the Rule. To the extent that the sworn answer of defendant is evidence in his own favor as hereinbefore stated,[13] it is obviously equal to the evidence of one witness,[14] and as plaintiff in equity always has the burden of proving that he is entitled to the relief prayed for in his bill,[15] he cannot overcome the answer of defendant so far as it is evidence and gain the relief sought by producing simply the evidence of one witness or evidence equal to that of one witness. It is accordingly well settled that the uncorroborated testimony of one witness will not overcome a responsive answer.[16] Just what amount of evidence is required has been variously stated. See 19 Cent. Dig. tit. "Equity," §§ 715, 716.

Irresponsive averments.—The rule of equity practice that when a defendant's answer under oath expressly negatives the allegations of the bill and the testimony of one person only affirms them the court will not decree in favor of the complainant does not extend to so much of the answer as is not directly responsive to the bill. Seitz v. Mitchell, 94 U. S. 580, 24 L. ed. 179.

When single witness sufficient.— The rule that one witness is not sufficient to overcome a responsive answer under oath is not applicable where defendant offers himself as a witness. Morris v. White, 36 N. J. Eq. 324. And upon an issue of fact formed on a bill and answer in equity being sent to a jury and the answer being read as evidence, it was held that the jury might find for plaintiff on the testimony of a single disinterested witness, if in their opinion such testimony was entitled to greater weight and credibility than the answer. Kinsey v. Grimes, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 290. And an averment in a bill neither admitted nor denied by the answer of course can be proved by a single witness. Trenchard v. Warner, 18 Ill. 142.

17. Circumstantial evidence.—The two witnesses need not be living witnesses who were present and cognizant of the fact in controversy; circumstantial evidence, if of equal weight and credibility, takes the place of the testimony of one or both of such witnesses. Field v. Wilbur, 49 Vt. 157.

Two witnesses will overcome a sworn answer. Morrison v. Stewart, 24 Ill. 24. And see Goggins v. Risley, 13 Pa. Super. Ct. 316.

An answer positively denying a charge in the bill ought not to be overcome by evidence less positive, although coming from two witnesses. Auditor v. Johnson, 1 Hen. & M. (Va.) 536. And see Brittin v. Handy, 20 Ark. 381, 73 Am. Dec. 497; Taintor v. Keys, 43 Ill. 332. But compare Farley v. Bryant, 32 Me. 474.

The oaths of two complainants in the same cause, made competent witnesses for themselves, are not legally entitled to be considered as destroying the effect of the answer, unless they seem to the court to be entitled to the weight of the oaths of two credible witnesses; and in considering their weight the interest of these witnesses must be taken into consideration. Vandergrift v. Herbert, 18 N. J. Eq. 466.

Testimony to two distinct conversations given by two witnesses will not be sufficient to disprove the answer. Love v. Braxton, 5 Call (Va.) 537.

Two witnesses need not be to the same specific fact. If they prove a repetition of the fact at different times it is sufficient. Bogart v. McClung, 11 Heisk. (Tenn.) 105, 27 Am. Rep. 737.

18. Documentary corroboration.— The corroborating circumstances may be by schedule and other documentary proof. Kilbourn v. Latta, 5 Mackey (D. C.) 304, 60 Am. Rep. 373.

Strength of circumstances.— Although the rule is often stated that the corroborating circumstances must be strong, where the court charged that the sworn answer could be overcome by one witness only where there were strong corroborating circumstances, it was held that the word "strong" should have been omitted, as it is enough if the circumstances give a clear preponderance against the answer. Durham v. Taylor, 29 Ga. 166. Where the testimony of one witness and corroborating circumstances are relied on to disprove an answer, it seems that the circumstances must be such that standing alone a reasonable conclusion as to the truth of the fact might be deduced from them. Maddox v. Sullivan, 2 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 4, 44 Am. Dec. 234. For circumstances held insufficient see Gelston v. Rullman, 15 Md. 260; Baugher's Appeal, (Pa. 1887) 8 Atl. 838; Peeler v. Lathrop, 48 Fed. 780, 1 C. C. A. 93. In Maryland the phrase "pregnant circumstances" is often used instead of the customary phrase "corroborating circumstances." West v. Flannagan, 4 Md. 36; Ing v. Brown, 3 Md. Ch. 521; Thompson v. Diffenderfer, 1 Md. Ch. 489. See also Hill v. Bush, 19 Ark. 522, for an illustration of the use of the phrase "pregnant circumstances."

Corroboration by wife.— Under the law of Pennsylvania, the testimony of a wife, supporting that of her husband, to a fact denied in the answer, is entitled at least to the weight of a corroborating circumstance, which is sufficient to satisfy the equitable requirement. Sharp v. Behr, 117 Fed. 864.

come the answer.[20] It has also been said that the answer must be taken as true unless it is proved otherwise by two witnesses, or by one witness and corroborating circumstances equal to another witness, or by other evidence entitled to the weight of two witnesses under oath.[21] Also that the answer may be overcome, not only by the testimony of two witnesses, or by one with corroborating circumstances, but by such circumstances alone, or by documentary evidence alone.[22] Whatever statement of the rule is adopted some discretion must doubtless be left with the chancellor to modify it according to the exigencies of the situation in order to prevent a miscarriage of justice.[23]

If the bill is sworn to, and the allegations in the bill are positive and direct, then it is oath against oath, and only one witness is required; but if the allegations in the bill are not positive, but only as to some or all of the facts alleged on information and belief, the answer will stand, unless overturned by two witnesses, or one with strong corroborating circumstances. Trabue v. Turner, 10 Heisk. (Tenn.) 447. And see Carrick v. Prater, 10 Humphr. (Tenn.) 270. When the bill and answer are both sworn to, a denial by defendant of an allegation as to which he could have no personal knowledge would at most only make an issue; but when the denial is made from his own knowledge it is conclusive, unless contradicted by at least one witness. Boyd v. Reed, 6 Heisk. (Tenn.) 631. But in Spence v. Dodd, 19 Ark. 166, 169, where the bill was verified, the court said: "We know of no rule of chancery practice which required the appellant to verify his bill by his affidavit. If the affidavit were really untrue in point of fact we know of no rule of law which would make the false oath of the appellant amount to legal perjury, and this because the affidavit was not a material requirement, and consequently an act wholly voluntary on the part of the affiant." The court accordingly held that the general rule applied.

Contra.— But in McGehee v. White, 31 Miss. 41, it was held that a positive and unequivocal denial in the answer of an allegation in the bill cannot be disproved except by two witnesses or by one with corroborative circumstances, even though it appears by the answer that respondent has no personal knowledge of the matter denied, it being said that the court will not look into the grounds on which the denial was made, or inquire whether it is sufficient or not as evidence.

One defendant making no answer.— Where one of two trustees is charged to have actual knowledge of a title adverse to that conveyed to them jointly, and the other trustee answers denying the allegations of the bill, but the one charged with knowledge makes no answer, the denial in the answer need not be overcome by the testimony of two witnesses or of one witness with corroborating circumstances. rule.[29] Formal answers putting in issue the allegations of the bill are not within the rule.[30] Ordinarily the rule does not obtain where the practice is regulated more or less by a code or practice act.[31] And it has been held that an answer, although responsive to the bill and denying its charges, is not conclusive upon a jury, although not contradicted by two witnesses or one and an equivalent.[32] The rule does not apply to a sworn answer to a petition, being applicable only to an answer to a bill.[33]

it as evidence when there is a privity of estate or interest between defendants,[36] or when some relationship such as that of partnership or agency exists between them;[37] and where admissions of a defendant would be evidence against his co-defendant there his answer is also evidence.[38] And plaintiff may use the answer of one defendant as evidence against a co-defendant when the latter claims through the former,[39] or when the latter refers to or adopts the answer of the former.[40]

their guardian ad litem or next friend are not evidence against them, and the allegations in the bill must be proved by other means before a decree can pass involving their interests.[42] Nor can the answers of adult co-defendants be used as evidence against them.[43]

e. Answers to Bills to Account. On a bill to account the answer is no evidence of disbursements, as such a bill is no more than a demand on defendant to show his receipts and legal proof of his expenditures, nor is the case varied by a call for the amount of disbursements and debts paid.[44] But where the accounts are open and defendant is called on to disclose in regard to the state of the accounts and the real amount due the answer is evidence as well of credits as of debits and of the balance.[45] Where a bill is brought for an account, and the answer sets up an account, stated in writing, and settled and signed by the parties, and states on oath that such account is just and true, it is a bar to the bill, unless impeached for some fraud, omission, or mistake pointed out.[46] Where a defendant having stated an account in his answer dies during the pendency of the suit and the matters involved in the account are of long standing, if there is evidence tending to support the account, the court may direct that the account be taken as prima facie evidence, irrespective of the question whether it is responsive to the bill.[47]

f. Answers to Special Interrogatories. Interrogatories, although not indispensable to a bill in equity, become part of it when founded on any matter contained in the charging part of the bill, and such interrogatories defendant is compelled to answer; and if the answer is responsive to such interrogatories it is evidence for defendant[48] as well as against him,[49] notwithstanding a replication to the answer has been filed;[50] and no presumption will be indulged against evidence furnished by defendant's answers to special interrogatories on account of its being furnished by an interested party.[51] But so much of an answer as is responsive to interrogatories propounded by complainant, as to facts not charged in the bill, and which cannot come in aid of defendant's equity, must be sustained by evidence independent of such answer.[52] The same principles apply to complainant's answers propounded on a cross bill.[53]

g. Weight of Answer as Evidence. An answer in equity, responsive to the bill, and positively denying the facts charged, is entitled to so great weight that when confirmed by testimony even of a kind not the most satisfactory it will countervail a case which on its face is a suspicious one.[54] But the answer as evidence is to be weighed like any other piece of evidence, and has no fictitious weight merely because it is a part of the pleadings.[55] It has often been broadly stated that when an answer is disproved in a material point it loses its weight as evidence.[56] The correctness of the rule, however, thus broadly stated is questionable, and it is doubtless subject to qualification.[57]

Supported by defendant's testimony.— Where answer under oath was not waived, and the answers so made were responsive to the bill, and were supported by the testimony of defendants, who were called as witnesses by complainant, the force of such testimony is not overthrown by the fact that it is improbable or open to suspicion under the peculiar facts and circumstances of the case; and the facts alleged in the bill can only be established by affirmative evidence, either direct or circumstantial. Coonrod v. Kelly, 119 Fed. 841, 56 C. C. A. 353.

57. Thus it has been held that a plaintiff cannot destroy the weight of the whole answer by proving that the answer is false in one respect or several respects; the only effect of such proof being to destroy the weight of the answer to the extent to which it is disproved by that amount of evidence which is required by the rule in chancery. Fant v. Miller, 17 Gratt. (Va.) 187. See also Broughton v. Coffer, 18 Gratt. (Va.) 184.

h. Use of Part of Answer as Evidence. Where the answer is to a bill of discovery only, and plaintiff uses it, he must read the whole of the answer, unless it sets up matter not responsive or which is impertinent. If so such parts should be excluded from consideration.[58] And when the cause is heard on bill and answer, without testimony, defendant's answer must be considered as a whole. Its admissions and denials must be taken together, and due weight must be accorded to the latter.[59] So where an order is prayed for defendant to bring money into court on admissions of the answer, the whole answer must be taken together and as true.[60] Where the bill is for relief and not alone for discovery, and the cause has been put at issue by the filing of a replication or otherwise, plaintiff may read a portion of the answer, and is not bound to read the whole; but he will not be allowed to read a passage from the answer, for the purpose of fixing defendant with an admission, without reading the explanations and qualifications by which the admission may be accompanied.[61] If the passage so read contains a reference to any other passage that must be read also.[62] But plaintiff may take parts of sentences if the sense be not thereby perverted or rendered uncertain.[63] And where the answer, although responsive to the charges of the bill, is contradictory in itself, or absurd in its explanations of admissions of defendant and disproved by one witness, the court may take admissions of the answer without the explanations.[64]

3. Pleas as Evidence. A plea in avoidance of and not responsive to the bill stands for nothing as evidence of the facts stated in it, and where the replication denies all the allegations in the plea it must be supported by evidence.[65] But against the party pleading it may of course be used as evidence at the hearing of another plea or answer in the cause so far as it contains admissions against his interest.[66]

4. Cross Bills as Evidence. If a cross bill is taken as confessed, it may be used as evidence against complainant in the original case on the hearing to the same effect as if he had admitted the same facts in the answer.[67] Where defendant files a cross bill setting out new matter, but does not call on complainant to answer thereto, the allegations will not be taken as true, but defendant will be required to prove them.[68]

5. Answers to Cross Bills as Evidence. When defendants in the original bill take on themselves the affirmative by a cross bill, and submit their rights to the consciences of those originally complaining, they must abide by the response of

Dig. § 5072, which provides that "every material allegation of the complaint, . . . and every material allegation of new matter in the answer, constituting a counter-claim or set-off, not specifically controverted by the reply, must, for the purposes of the action, be taken as true," where a cross bill is taken as confessed for want of an answer, the allegations therein will be treated as true. complainants, unless by more than equal evidence they disprove the same.[69] Complainant's answer to a cross bill which has been dismissed cannot be read in evidence in his favor.[70] A complainant cannot use his own answer to a cross bill as evidence, unless defendant shall first produce it in evidence.[71] And if defendants have brought a cross bill including as defendants thereto the original complainants and a third person, who is so interested in the subject-matter of controversy on the original bill as not to be a competent witness therein for complainants, the answer of such third person to the cross bill can in no way be used by complainants in the original bill to sustain the case made by them on that bill.[72]

C. Degree of Proof and Weight and Sufficiency of Evidence.[73] While in an equity suit, the party holding the affirmative of the issue may ordinarily establish his case by a preponderance of the evidence,[74] in a few classes of cases this rule is to some extent qualified; and in suits for specific performance,[75] to divest title to realty,[76] or where fraud is involved,[77] or where suits are brought after a long lapse of time, but under circumstances not raising the bar of laches,[78] it is generally stated that the proofs must be clear and satisfactory, and a bare preponderance of the evidence is scarcely enough.[79] If the evidence touching a disputed fact is equally balanced, or if it does not produce a just, rational belief of its existence, or if it leaves the mind in a state of perplexity, the party holding the affirmative as to such fact must fail.[80] While circumstantial evidence is as potent in equity as at law,[81] the court will not be influenced by mere circumstances to adopt a conjectural conclusion, in a matter susceptible of proof, and will not indulge in presumptions and inferences except as they may be drawn from facts directly proved.[82] And the chancellor in passing on conflicting proofs will follow the probabilities, although they are contrary to the impressions of witnesses of undoubted integrity of purpose.[83] A decree may be rendered on the testimony of a co-defendant if his interest is precisely balanced between the parties to the suit, although he is an indispensable party to the bill.[84] And the testimony of a party taken subject to the test of a cross-examination is sufficient to sustain a decree, in the absence of evidence on the other side.[85] But the evidence of parties who attempt to impose on a court of equity by false statements, manufactured accounts, or like deceptive practices should be rejected.[86] Likewise, where a witness in a suit for relief on the ground of fraud confesses that he was a participant in the fraud, his evidence is not sufficient to support the bill unless corroborated in substantial points.[87] The fact that a witness testifying as an expert is not properly qualified goes to the weight and not to the admissibility of his testimony.[88] A court of equity does not weigh testimony by the number of witnesses alone, as circumstances and known facts may often establish the truth more conclusively than the oaths of the parties or the written depositions.[89] Memoranda from books and written documents when produced in response to a call in the bill are evidence in the cause, but not necessarily conclusive as to the facts which they tend to establish.[90] When the allegations in a case are sustained by the records of the court before which it was tried, and those records are made exhibits in the bill by reference, and are examined by the court, the proof is sufficient.[91] Where funds are in the court of chancery, and a party petitions to have them applied in discharge of his claim, it is the practice of that court to receive the papers on which the claim is founded as prima facie evidence, and to act upon them accordingly, unless the testimony is put in issue, and full proof required by the opposite party.[92] Documentary evidence submitted at the hearing by stipulation is to be considered in the same light as evidence taken by deposition.[93]

Different contracts.— Plaintiff in equity cannot set up in his bill of complaint one contract, and obtain the relief he seeks, on the admission or proof of another contract of a different character, even though the relief he seeks would be the appropriate remedy in the case as proved or admitted by defendant. Bellows v. Stone, 14 N. H. 175.

Bill charging fraud.— Where a bill sets up a case of actual fraud and makes that the ground of the prayer for relief complainant is not in general entitled to a decree on establishing some one or more of the facts, quite independent of fraud, which may of themselves create a case under a distinct head of equity from that which would be applicable to the case of fraud originally stated. Hoyt v. Hoyt, 27 N. J. Eq. 399. Where a bill of equity is founded on alleged fraudulent business transactions, and the evidence fails to sustain the charge, the bill must be dismissed, although it appears that defendant owes debts growing out of the

B. Limitations and Exceptions to General Rule. But the general rule that proof and pleadings must correspond is to be applied equitably, and where there is enough in the pleadings to warrant relief, and to prevent the adverse party from being taken by surprise, the decree will not be reversed on the ground that the pleadings and proof do not sufficiently agree.[96] Nor will a decree be reversed, if warranted by the pleadings and sustained by the evidence, even though the proof is stronger and broader than that stated in the pleadings, and establishes grounds of relief or defense not contained therein;[97] but the decree under these circumstances must be that warranted by the pleadings, and not that warranted by the stronger and broader proof.[98] Furthermore, the mere fact of variance will not be fatal unless the cause of action or the defense stated and that proved are so materially variant as to prevent a decree in favor of either party,[99] for the general rule that the proof must correspond with the allegations applies only when the evidence discloses a cause of action or a defense essentially different from that set up by the pleadings.[1] A substantial correspondence of the proofs with the allegations is sufficient, and immaterial variances will be disregarded.[2] And in deciding a question of variance the court will bear in mind the general principle that a party is not bound from the nature of the case to use the same particularity in setting forth the rights of the adverse party as he is in setting out his own rights.[3] Nevertheless the qualifications will never be allowed to fritter away the rule itself, and no matter how clear a party's equity may be, business as to which the fraud is alleged. Babbitt v. Dotten, 14 Fed. 19. Where the whole frame of a bill of complaint is based on charges of fraud, and defendants are brought in solely on such charges, and the proofs fail to show any fraud, the bill must be dismissed, even if there be some evidence of an injury because of mistake. Keen v. Maple Shade Land, etc., Co., 63 N. J. Eq. 325, 50 Atl. 467, 92 Am. St. Rep. 682 [reversing 61 N. J. Eq. 497, 48 Atl. 596]. But it was held in Hood v. Smith, 79 Iowa 621, 44 N. Allegation of payment.— A party claiming a right in equity under an allegation of payment in full may show a partial payment, especially if he prays for relief in reference to such a state of the case, thus removing the element of surprise. Keaton v. Miller, 38 Miss. 630.

A mistake in the date of an instrument, which is the foundation of a bill, will be disregarded if defendant has not been misled thereby; and the variance on the record will not render the claim to relief or the defense bad in substance. Ontario Bank v. Schermerhorn, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 109.

Where a bill is to foreclose a mortgage which is alleged to have been created by verbal contract, and intended to secure two distinct debts, and the proof shows that only one of the debts was in fact secured, the variance is not fatal. Morrow v. Turney, 35 Ala. 131.

if there actually is a material variance between the pleadings and the proof, the general rule applies, and such variance is fatal to the relief asked for or the defense set up.[4]

C. Application and Effect of Principle of Variance. If the court decides that there is a variance, and furthermore decides that such variance does not come within the admitted qualifications to the general rule which have just been stated, then in arriving at its decree it cannot consider that portion of the evidence which constitutes the variance as thus understood, but must confine itself to the evidence which does not vary from the allegations of the pleadings, or which varies only to the extent allowed by the qualifications.[5]

Allegations of title.— Meadors v. Askew, 56 Ala. 584; Williams v. Hatch, 38 Ala. 338; McKinley v. Irvine, 13 Ala. 681. Where the bill sets up title under a will, title by codicils thereto, not mentioned in the bill, cannot be shown. Langdon v. Goddard, 14 Fed. Cas. No. 8,060, 2 Story 267. But where the relief asked for is justified either on the strength of the title alleged or on the title proved, a variance in this respect is immaterial. Webster v. Peet, 97 Mich. 326, 56 N. W. 558; Smith v. Portland, 30 Fed. 734.

Allegation of assignment.— Proof of a direct assignment of a patent from a patentee to plaintiff does not constitute a variance, although the bill alleges an assignment from the patentee through two intermediate parties to plaintiff. American Cable R. Co. v. New York, 68 Fed. 227. But a bill asserting a right under a bill of sale by defendant to A, and by A assigned to plaintiff, was held not to be sustained by proof of such bill made by defendant to B, by B assigned to C, and by C assigned to plaintiff. Mosier v. Norton, 83 Ill. 519; Beach v. Fulton Bank, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 573.

Allegations of fraud.— On a bill for relief on the ground of fraud, it is not necessary to prove the facts precisely as laid, but it is sufficient to prove them in substance. Sacket v. Hillhouse, 5 Day (Conn.) 551; Merrill v. Allen, 38 Mich. 487. But a bill charging actual fraud is not maintained by evidence of constructive fraud. Eyre v. Potter, 15 How. (U. And see, generally, FRAUD.

Allegation of trust.— Proof of a deed of trust will not sustain an allegation of a parol trust. Parker v. Beavers, 19 Tex. 406. Nor will proof of an intention to create a trust, never executed, sustain an allegation of an express trust. Lanterman v. Abernathy, 47 Ill. 437. And see, generally, TRUSTS.

Allegation of purchase-price.— Billingsley v. Billingsley, 37 Ala. 425.

Allegation of value.— Allegation of the worth of property in a bill to set aside a deed as having been fraudulently obtained need not necessarily be proved as laid. Lloyd v. Higbee, 25 Ill. 603.

XIX. HEARING.

A. Definition. The hearing in equity is equivalent to the trial of an action at law,[6] and has been defined as the examination of the facts in issue.[7]

B. Setting Down For Hearing. Under the chancery practice it was the duty of plaintiff primarily to set the cause down for hearing at the term following that in which publication was passed.[8] The rule still is that plaintiff alone may set the cause down on bill and answer,[9] but it seems that either party may set the cause down on bill, answer, replication, and proof.[10] The notice of the day for hearing was served on the adverse party through a writ called a subpœna to hear judgment.[11] The setting down for hearing is a ministerial act to be performed by the clerk or master and not by the chancellor.[12] Strict regularity was formerly required in the setting down of a cause for hearing, as the proceedings in that regard might be reviewed after decree;[13] but now the formal setting down for hearing may be waived.[14] The method of bringing a cause on for hearing is a matter of practice now so far regulated by local rules as to forbid very general statements.[15]

Matters of description.— Gilmer v. Wallace, 75 Ala. 220; Lee v. Patten, 34 Fla. 149, 15 So. 775; Dennis v. Ray, 9 Ga. 449; Sears v. Barnum, Clarke (N. Y.) 139. A bill in equity seeking relief for an obstruction of a way to plaintiff's mill and alleging it to be a public way is not sustained by proof of the existence of a private way. Gurney v. Ford, 2 Allen (Mass.) 576.

Mistake as to nature of transaction or instrument.— Jeffery v. Robbins, 167 Ill. 375, 47 N. E. 735 [affirming 62 Ill. App. 190]. If the bill proceeds on the theory that the transaction or instrument involved in the suit is a mortgage, and the evidence shows a conditional sale, there is a fatal variance. Swift v. Swift, 36 Ala. 147; McBrayer v. Roberts, 17 N. C. 75. The variance is likewise fatal if the evidence shows a vendor's lien instead of a mortgage. Baker v. Updike, 155 Ill. 54, 39 N. E. 587.

Variance between proof and exhibit to plaintiff's bill is not fatal if independently of the exhibit the suit may be maintained, there being no variance between the bill itself and the proof. Andrews v. Ford, 106 Ala. 173, 17 So. 446.

6. Bouvier L. Dict.

7. Vannevar v. Bryant, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 41, 22 L. ed. 476. See, generally, HEARING. This definition holds good not only as applied to the ordinary hearing on bill, answer, replication, and proof, but also to the hearing on bill and answer, under the theory that plaintiff must always prove his case and that a hearing on bill and answer accepts the answer as containing the sole and sufficient evidence for that purpose. See supra, XV, A, 1; XVII, B, 2, a. Where the answer is not under oath, it is merely a pleading, and in the absence of a replication the cause should be set for hearing on bill, answer, and proof. Chambers v. Rowe, 36 Ill. 171. The laying before the court of demurrers (see supra, VIII, C, 6), pleas, for the determination of their sufficiency (see supra, VIII, D, 7, a), and exceptions (see supra, VIII, E, 9, c, (v)) is also frequently called a hearing, although such proceedings involve no determination of fact.

A plea of former suit pending.— On the report of a master, finding the truth of a plea of a former suit pending (see supra, VIII, D, 7, c), the burden is on defendant to bring the suit to hearing on the plea and master's report. Hart v. Philips, 9 Paige (N. Y.) 293.

U. S. Eq. Rule 66 provides that if plaintiff omits to file his replication within the prescribed period defendant shall be entitled to an order as of course for a dismissal of the suit. If plaintiff allows the time for taking proofs to expire without taking any and thereafter unsuccessfully moves to strike out portions of the answer, there is no error in setting the cause down for hearing on bill and answer. C. Time of Hearing — 1. In General. The time when a cause may be brought on for hearing depends also on divers practice regulations, but it must be after issue is complete.[16] As a general rule the cause cannot be set for hearing as to one defendant unless it is in condition for hearing as to all,[17] nor can it be set for hearing as to a part only of the case.[18] Ordinarily the cause must stand until after the expiration of the time allotted for taking proof.[19] Plaintiff may, a certain event, the court will not proceed by petition on the happening of such event, but the cause must be regularly set down for hearing. Butler v. Halsey, 4 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 354. See also Ruckman v. Decker, 28 N. J. Eq. 5. A cause need not be set down for hearing in order to take a decree pro confesso for want of appearance. Warner v. Juif, 38 Mich. 662. 2. Postponements and Continuances. The rules as to postponements of the hearing and continuances of the cause do not vary greatly from those prevailing at law.[24] Applications therefor are addressed to the discretion of the court,[25] and terms may be imposed.[26] Any postponement must be reasonable in point of time,[27] and based on reasonable grounds,[28] such as the necessity of bringing in new parties,[29] or substantial amendment of the pleadings.[30] Continuances are of course proper to avoid the consequences of surprise.[31] Even after the hearing has proceeded postponements may be granted on like grounds.[32] Where a defendant comes of age after his guardian ad litem has answered, and it appears that he might make a better answer, the cause will be postponed,[33] and on a bill against adults and minors to confirm a title, the adults being willing to confirm the contract relied on, the case was held up until the minors came of age, in order to give them their election.[34]

3. Hearing Causes Together. It is within the discretion of the chancellor[35] to order that two suits be heard together where the parties are the same and the chief matter in controversy is the same in both,[36] or where the whole matter might originally have been embraced in one bill.[37] So causes may be heard together where they are so related that such a course is necessary for the protection of all the parties.[38] The particular rules governing such proceedings are elsewhere treated.[39] Where it is impracticable to hear together causes relating to the same subject-matter, the chancellor may hear first that one involving the principal questions regardless of its order on the docket.[40]

4. Hearing on Bill and Cross Bill. It is the duty of a party filing a cross bill to bring it on for hearing at the same time that the original is heard,[41] and the original cause and cross cause are heard together usually[42] but not necessarily.[43]

When the cross plaintiff desires to stay proceedings on the original he must apply on notice for such an order,[44] and cause must be shown to justify the delay of the original.[45] Where the cross bill seeks discovery with relation to the original, the latter cannot be heard until the cross bill is answered.[46] The cross defendant is entitled to time to answer a cross bill attacking his right, and there cannot be a hearing on the original and cross bill immediately on the filing of the latter.[47] A defendant will not be permitted to delay the hearing of the original by unreasonably deferring the filing of a cross bill.[48]

D. Conduct of Hearing — 1. The Regular Order of Hearing. The order of proceedings on a hearing rests within the control of the court,[49] but the ordinary course in chancery was for junior counsel for plaintiff briefly to open the pleadings on each side, after which the leading counsel stated the case and points in issue. Then there was read on behalf of plaintiff so much of the answers and depositions as he saw fit to offer, and then other counsel argued on his behalf. The same course was then taken on behalf of defendant and the hearing was closed by plaintiff's leading counsel.[50]

2. Offering Evidence — a. In General. Any party may offer evidence on an issue in which he is interested, although no affirmative decree could be made affecting him.[51] All evidence to be available must be offered at the hearing, and the court cannot subsequently inject evidence into the record which was not so introduced.[52] With the exception of proof of exhibits,[53] the evidence must be confined to that taken in advance of the hearing and reduced to writing.[54] Evidence taken on a preliminary matter, such as an application for an injunction, cannot be used on final hearing except by order of court.[55]

b. Proof of Exhibits at Hearing. It was the practice in chancery to permit proof viva voce at the hearing of the mere execution of an exhibit, not impeached by the pleadings.[56] No proof calling for cross-examination or more than the proof of handwriting could be received.[57] The same practice somewhat extended perhaps is recognized in the United States.[58] Where such proof is required an order must first be obtained for that purpose[59] and notice of the application must be given,[60] as the order does not go of course, and a satisfactory excuse must be given for having failed to make the proof in the usual way.[61] Documents set out or distinctly referred to in the pleadings and admitted,[62] or of such a character that they prove themselves,[63] may be read at the hearing without order or further proof; but documents, although they prove themselves, if they be not set out or distinctly referred to in the pleadings, cannot be so read without giving notice of an intention so to do.[64]

3. ARGUMENTS. In general plaintiff has the right to open and close the argument;[65] but it seems that where the cause is heard on bill, answer, and replication and defendant introduces no evidence he has the right to close.[66] On a hearing together of bill and cross bill, each party having material allegations to sustain, plaintiff in the original bill is entitled to open and close.[67] In other cases out of the ordinary course the right has been variously judged.[68] When the arguments have been once concluded no further argument can be heard unless the court so requests.[69] The court is not bound by the theory of counsel,[70] but will look at the case made and notice points not urged.[71] The court may in its discretion set aside a submission before the decision of the case,[72] but in that case a decree can-

XX. SUBMISSION OF ISSUES TO JURY, AND DIRECTION OF ACTION AT LAW.

A. Discretionary Power of Court — 1. In General. In the absence of statutory modification a jury is no part of the chancery system.[75] In an equity case the court has power to decide all the issues, whether they are issues of law or issues of fact,[76] and neither party is entitled as of right to have an issue of fact tried by a jury,[77] unless he is given that right by statute.[78] It is equally true, however, that the court has power to submit questions of fact to a jury, but whether it shall do so or not rests in its discretion.[79] The exercise of this discre-

2. Rules Governing Discretion. A burdened condition of the jury calendar should deter the court from unnecessarily sending issues to the jury.[81] An issue will not be directed where the facts can be satisfactorily ascertained by the court, and the proof is clear,[82] nor where there is no conflicting evidence and no question of fact to be determined.[83] And if the issue is a simple one, and the evidence is defective, the case will not be referred on final hearing to a jury, but the taking of further evidence will be ordered.[84] Nor will the court send issues to a jury when they are numerous, difficult, and complicated, and could not be properly passed upon by the jury without frequent instructions from the court on matters involving intricate questions of law.[85] Where the evidence fails as to a matter essential to the equity of plaintiff or to the defense relied on by defendant, it is not the practice to direct an issue,[86] and it is sometimes said that it should not be
