Part of letter introduced as admission.— In Lester v. Piedmont, etc., L. Ins. Co., 55 Ga. 475, it was held that a letter introduced as evidence need not be read in its entirety by the party who introduces it. To the same effect see Raphael v. Hartman, 87 Ill. App. 634. So it is held error to exclude a letter material to the issues written by defendant, and offered in evidence by plaintiff, on the ground that a part of the letter has been cut off and is gone, where defendant is asked as a witness to state whether the contents of the portion offered are in any way connected with the contents of the portion missing, and he refuses to do so. Letter from third person who is dead or out of state.— Where A, a party in a suit, seeks to put in as evidence a letter written to him by another person than the opposite party, in reply to a letter written by A, it is not necessary that he should, before he can be allowed to introduce such evidence, also put in evidence the letter written by himself, or prove its contents, when the person to whom it was written is either dead or out of the state. Right of party to introduce entire correspondence.— In Trischet v. Hamilton Mut. Ins. But where the issue was as to whether a certain transaction amounted to a satisfaction of a judgment against plaintiff, a letter written by defendant, subsequent to such transaction, purporting to be a reply to a letter from plaintiff requesting a certificate of satisfaction, was held to be inadmissible in defendant's behalf, although offered in connection with a letter from the adverse party to which it was a reply, plaintiff not having introduced any part of the correspondence. Stamped letter.— In an action on a note purporting to have been executed by the agent of a mortgagor, in which one of the matters in dispute is the authority of the agent, it is error to admit in evidence a letter, apparently written by the mortgagor and recognizing the validity of the note, and which is signed only by means of a rubber stamp, without evidence showing who affixed the stamp. Burgess v. Burgess, 44 Nebr. 16, 62 N. W. 242.

83. In In re Kennedy, (Cal. 1894) 36 Pac. 1030, petitioner introduced evidence tending to show that she received at Buffalo a letter signed C K (testatrix's name), containing a railroad ticket and five dollars. It was shown that the address of C K was at 616½ N street, and that at about that time she

the alleged sender may be looked into for internal evidence of the source from which it came, as for instance the fact that it relates to matters which are known only to the alleged sender.[84] A telegram is not admissible in the absence of proof of its authenticity either by proof of the handwriting, where the original message is offered, or by other evidence of its genuineness.[85]

(II) Admissions of Genuineness. An admission as to a writing is like an admission of any other fact, and a foundation for the introduction of a letter may be laid by proving that the party against whom it is offered has admitted its genuineness.[86] An admission by a party that he sent a letter dispenses with proof of its authenticity, although it is not in his handwriting.[87]

(III) Letters or Telegrams Received in Reply. A letter received in the due course of mail purporting to be written by a person in answer to another letter proved to have been sent to him is prima facie genuine, and is admissible in evidence without proof of the handwriting or other proof of its authenticity.[88] And the same rule has been applied to a telegram purporting to be borrowed five dollars to send, as she said, to her sister at Buffalo. It was held that petitioner might introduce from the book of registered letters of the San Francisco post-office an entry reciting the receipt of an letter from C K, 616½ N street, addressed to M R (petitioner), Buffalo, such testimony being proper, as affording some evidence that the letter came from deceased. So the fact that letters addressed to testator are found among his papers, with memoranda on them of their dates in testator's handwriting, is prima facie evidence that they are what they purport to be, so that they may be admitted without proof of their authenticity, where the object for which they were introduced was to show testator's mental capacity by his replies thereto. sent by a person in reply to a letter or telegram sent to him, at least where a foundation is laid for the introduction of secondary evidence.[89]

d. Proof of Delivery. To render a letter or telegram or a copy thereof admissible against the addressee, it must be shown that it was received or duly sent or delivered for transmission.[90]

e. Address or Direction. But it seems to be immaterial that a letter or telegram relating to a transaction between the parties is addressed and sent to a person not a party to the suit, provided it comes into the possession of the party against whom it is offered and is recognized by him by sending a reply or otherwise.[91] So a letter may be admitted against the writer, although addressed to no one, if it is shown to relate to a transaction between the parties and is produced by the adverse party and no suspicion is cast upon his possession.[92]

10. Maps, Diagrams, Etc. It is the common practice in the courts to receive private or unofficial maps, diagrams, models, or sketches for the purpose of giving a representation of objects and places which generally cannot otherwise be as conveniently shown or described by witnesses, and when proved to be correct or offered in connection with the testimony of a witness they are admissible as legitimate aids to the court or jury.[93] It is not essential for this purpose that the person making the map or diagram should testify to its correct-

Engravings.— In Ordway v. Haynes, 50 N. H. 159, it was held that engravings may be used merely as a chalk to illustrate a point in a case; but that the jury should be told nothing of the history of the print, as, in an action for malpractice, that it was taken from a medical book, since that gives it an undue importance with the jury.

Diagram held unnecessary for illustration. — In an action for damages for libel against a dentist, whom defendant had publicly denounced as a disgrace to the profession, a diagram exhibiting the condition of defendant's teeth on which plaintiff had operated before and after they were injured by plaintiff is inadmissible, as such drawing is unnecessary to illustrate the facts asserted. Photographs and pictures, it is said, stand on the same footing as diagrams, maps, plans, etc.,[98] and as a general rule whenever it is relevant or important to describe a person, place, or thing, in either a civil or criminal case, photographs or pictures are admissible for the purpose of explaining and applying the evidence in a cause and assisting the court or jury in understanding the case.[99] This kind of evidence has sometimes or is practically instructive[8] is a preliminary question to be determined by the judge presiding at the trial. The discretion of the court in respect to the question of verification of the photograph as a representation[9] and in other respects[10] has been held not to be open to exception or review by the appellate courts. In other jurisdictions it is held that the court's discretion is not unlimited even in respect to the question of the verification of the photograph but in clear cases is open to exception.[11]

In Massachusetts the rule has been laid down that whether a photograph is sufficiently verified is a preliminary question of fact to be decided by the judge presiding at the trial and is not open to exception. Van Houten v. Moss, 162 Mass. 414, 38 N. E. 705, 44 Am. St. Rep. 373, 26 L. R. A. 430; Com. v. Morgan, 159 Mass. 375, 34 N. E. 458; Blair v. Pelham, 118 Mass. 420. In other cases a somewhat broader rule is laid down (Carey v. Hubbardston, 172 Mass. 106, 51 N. E. 521; Harris v. Quincy, 171 Mass. 472, 50 N. E. 1042; Gilbert v. West End St. R. Co., 160 Mass. 403, 36 N. E. 60; Verran v. Baird, 150 Mass. 441, 22 N. E. 630), the principle being extended to the question whether the photograph was practically instructive to the jury (Harris v. Quincy, 171 Mass. 472, 50 N. E. 1042). But in Reimer v. New York, etc., R. Co., 178 Mass. 54, 59 N. E. 671, the court, after reviewing the prior decisions on this question, held that except on the matter of verification of the photograph the discretion of the trial court was not unlimited and could not be exercised arbitrarily.

tions,[15] it becomes material to know the location, surroundings, and condition of the premises upon which the accident, injury, or crime in controversy occurred, photographs of the locus in quo, if verified by proof that they are true representations, are competent evidence. Sketch or drawing.— In Hartford County Com'rs v. Wise, 71 Md. 43, 18 Atl. 31, it was held that as under Md. Acts (1886), c. 415, it was competent for the jury to be taken to the spot where the damage was alleged to have occurred, to inspect the location of the bridge and the adjacent country, it was not error to admit in evidence a sketch or drawing of these objects, although the drawing was made by an artist who had never seen the bridge.

Admissibility of stereoscopic view.— Upon the trial of an action against a town to recover damages sustained from a defective highway, it was held that a stereoscopic view of the spot was properly submitted to the jury with the aid of a stereoscope. So in an action against a city to recover damages for the negligent location and construction of a sewer and certain streets, whereby during a flood plaintiff's property was injured, stereoscopic views of the premises taken the day after the flood may be admitted in evidence to show the condition of the property. See 20 Cent. Dig. tit. "Evidence," § 893.

Sketch showing locality of bloodstains.— Where an artist swore from his own personal knowledge and observation, to the accuracy of his sketches, which showed the locality of bloodstains in the building in which the murder was committed, the accuracy of the sketches was satisfactorily shown, and they were admissible to explain localisentation of the place in question, and that the condition existing when it was taken was an exactly accurate reproduction of the condition existing when the accident, injury, or crime occurred.[16] Hence if the photographs are taken so long after the occurrence that the surroundings or conditions have changed,[17] or, whenever taken, if they do not for any reason appear to represent the subject or the conditions existing at the time of the occurrence in controversy in such a way as to be instructive they will be rejected.[18] Moreover, where the photograph

App. 498], photographs taken by an inexperienced operator two months after an accident, when the situation had been changed, were excluded. But see San Antonio v. Talirico, (Tex. Civ. App. 1903) 78 S. W. 28 [modified in (Tex. Sup. 1904) 81 S. W. 518, and cited supra, note 14].

Photograph three months after accident admitted.— A photograph of a jetty causing injury to a tug, taken three months after the accident, has been held to be competent to show its condition, where there was no evidence of a change of condition. Tracy v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 98 Fed. 633.

Changes not destroying substantial identity of locality.— In Beardslee v. Columbia Tp., 188 Pa. St. 496, 41 Atl. 617, 68 Am. St. Rep. 883, it was held that since photographs of the scene of an accident taken at or near the time are not always obtainable, photographs taken after changes in the surroundings have taken place may be admissible where it appears that the changes are not such as to destroy the substantial identity of the locality, and the changes, whatever they are, are brought to the attention of the jury. Accordingly in the above case photographs were admitted, although subsequently to the injury, and prior to the taking of the photograph changes had been made in the road or the place of accident. So it has been held that a change in the appearance of the locality made by the falling of the leaves from the trees is open to explanation. Dyson v. New York, etc., R. Co., 57 Conn. 9, 17 Atl. 137, 14 Am. St. Rep. 82; Dedericks v. Salt Lake City R. Co., 14 Utah 137, 46 Pac. 656, 35 L. R. A. 802. So the fact that snow was on the ground at the time the photographs were taken has been held not to be ground for their exclusion. Fitzgerald v. Hedstrom, 98 Ill. App. 109.

18. In an action for injuries caused by slipping on ice on a public highway at night, photographs of the sidewalk taken the following morning may be excluded, if they do not represent the condition of the walk, with reference to the roughness, slipperiness, or quantity of the ice, in such a way as to be instructive. Harris v. Quincy, 171 Mass. 472, 50 N. E. 1042. In an action for damages to plaintiff's property from the breaking of defendant's dam, about three miles above, the exclusion of a photograph of a gorge about halfway between, offered to show the force and effect of the water escaping from the dam, is within the discretion of the trial court, where there is no evidence as to the condition of the gorge before the breaking of the dam, or of other facts rendering the condition of the gorge instructive. Verran v. Baird, 150 Mass. 141, 22 N. E. 630. In a suit to recover for injuries sustained upon defendants' car, plaintiff offered in evidence a photograph of another car, which he proposed to show was precisely similar to the car in question. It was held that the evidenc was inadmissible. People's Pass. R. Co. v. Green, 56 Md. 84. In an action for death caused by the bursting of a distillery slop vat, plaintiff produced purported photographs of the vat hoops taken five days after the accident. Defendant's secretary testified that the photographs correctly represented the location of the tank, office building, roadway, and plant. The photographer testified that he took the photographs in defendant's back yard. Defendant's engineer testified that the burst vat hoops were thrown in this yard about three days after the accident, but that there were other hoops there, and he did not know whether the photographs represented is not offered as a mere general representation of the locus in quo, but to show distances, relative sizes, or locations of objects, it may be very deceptive and misleading,[19] and it seems that much more convincing proof of its accuracy is required than in ordinary cases.[20]

d. X-Ray Photographs. While a picture produced by an X-ray cannot be verified as a true representation of the subject in the same way that a picture made by a camera can be, the rule in regard to the use of ordinary photographs on the trial of a cause applies to photographs of the internal structure and conditions of the human body taken by the aid of X-rays when verified by proof that they are a true representation.[21] It has been held that, to constitute a foundation for the introduction of an X-ray photograph in evidence, it is not essential that it appear that it was taken by a competent person, nor that the condition of the apparatus with which it was taken and the circumstances under which it was taken were such as to insure an accurate picture; but where it has been shown by the evidence of competent witnesses that it truly represents the object it is claimed to represent, there is sufficient foundation for its admission.[22]

e. Photographic Copies of Documents.[23] A photographic copy of a document is held to be admissible where the original cannot be produced[24] or has become illegible[25] on proof that it is an exact copy of the original. But photographic copies of instruments can be used only as secondary evidence.[26] Thus a photograph of a document will be rejected where the document itself is in court.[27] However photographs of instruments already in evidence which are so enlarged as to make the proportions plainer and to illustrate the testimony of witnesses may go to the jury in the same way as would a magnifying glass or microscope.[28]

the hoops in question; that he did not point them out to the photographer; that he showed plaintiff's attorney where the hoops were; that he did show someone, but only one person, the vat hoops a few days after the accident; but that he showed them to no one with a camera. It was held that the photographs were not sufficiently identified as being of the hoops from the burst vat to be admissible. Hupfer v. National Distilling Co., 114 Wis. 279, 90 N. W. 191.

Relevancy of tables.— It is necessary for the one relying on a mortality table to prove the life expectancy of a person to show that he belongs to the class of persons from which such tables are made; they not being based on the general run of mankind, but being made up of selected risks, persons of sound body and mind, and having no physical defects or constitutional troubles, and of correct habits. Vicksburg R., etc., Co. v. White, 82 Miss. 468, 34 So. 331. Instances of admission of historical work. — In Bow v. Allenstown, 34 N. H. 351, 69 Am. Dec. 489, it was held that an account of a fire sent to the New Hampshire historical society's collections, by a former secretary of state, was admissible as a history of the event for the purpose of showing that many public records and papers had in a great measure to ancient facts which do not presuppose better evidence in existence, and where, from the nature of the transaction, the remoteness of the period, or the public and general reception of the facts, a just foundation is laid for general confidence.[47] Thus the writings of a living author on recent historical subjects are not admissible.[48] So a local history has been excluded as evidence of the facts therein recited.[49]

(v) Dictionaries. Dictionaries are not of themselves evidence, but they may be referred to as aids to the memory and understanding of the court.[50]

(vi) Law Commentaries. The works of commentators of recognized authority on domestic or foreign law are admissible.[51] So the courts must consult and obtain such aid as they can from the works of jurists and commentators on the subject of international law.[52] But these works are resorted to by judicial tribunals, not for the speculations of their authors concerning what the law ought to be, but for trustworthy evidence of what the law really is.[53]

c. Law Reports. The books of reports of cases adjudged in the courts of another state[54] or of a foreign country[55] are very generally held admissible as evidence of the unwritten or common law of the sister state or foreign country.[56]

Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Tuite, 44 Ill. App. 535.

Authentication of law reports.— Certain volumes of the reports of the supreme court of Massachusetts were proved by a member of the bar of that commonwealth to be "volumes of the regular reports" of that court, and it was also proved that they were obtained from an established law library association in New York city. It was held that they were properly proved. Congregational Unitarian Soc. v. Hale, 29 N. Y. App. Div. 396, 51 N. Y. Suppl. 704.

In the same way the printed reports may be referred to as expositions of domestic law.[57]

d. Market Quotations. Prices current and reports of the state of the market published in the newspapers and relied upon by the commercial world are held admissible.[58] But according to some of the authorities the sources of information or the mode in which the prices are ascertained must first be shown by extrinsic proof to render the evidence competent.[59]

e. Live-Stock Registers. Records published by authority of a recognized trotting association, if accepted and acted upon by persons conversant with racing matters as authentic and official, have been held admissible for the purpose of showing the speed of a horse and of others to whom he is related.[60] So under statute in Iowa a printed copy of a herd book in which cattle are registered has been held admissible if it be shown to be a standard authority recognized by cattle-breeders, it being regarded as an historical work of a particular subject.[61] The admissibility of books kept to register cattle and other animals as coming within the exception to the hearsay rule relating to proof of pedigree is discussed elsewhere.[62]

13. Authentication and Proof of Execution — a. Necessity — (i) In General. The general rule on the subject of proving private writings is that before they are receivable in evidence their due and valid execution or their genuineness and authenticity must be established.[63] This rule has repeatedly been applied not Printed reports held secondary evidence only.— In Donellan v. Hardy, 57 Ind. 393, it was held that a printed report of a decision of the supreme court, although issued by authority of law, is only secondary evidence of a judgment rendered by such court, and is admissible only when the destruction of the original record has been shown and a properly authenticated transcript cannot be obtained. So it has been held that the published volumes of supreme court reports do not furnish the highest evidence of the judgment of affirmance or reversal in a particular case, but the remittitur is the best evidence. Joint instruments.—Where a joint and several bond was offered in evidence against a single one of the parties charged thereby, preliminary proof of its execution by the party sought to be charged was held sufficient to render it admissible in evidence, although there was no proof of its execution by the other party thereon. Conard v. Atlantic Ins. Co., 1 Pet. (U. S.) 386, 7 L. ed. 189 [approved in Conard v. Nicoll, 4 Pet. (U. S.) 291, 7 L. ed. 862]. So it has been held that proof of the execution of a quitclaim deed by one of several grantors is sufficient to authorize the introduction of the deed in evidence in so far as it is sought to affect the interest owned by that particular grantor. Memorandum found in possession of accused.— A memorandum made in pencil, in the pocketbook taken from the accused, upon his arrest, may be read in evidence, without proof of its execution. Whaley v. State, 11 Ga. 123.

County warrants are held inadmissible in evidence at common law without proof of their execution, where the genuineness of the signatures thereto is put in issue by the pleadings. Apache County v. Barth, 177 U. S. 538, 20 S. Ct. 718, 44 L. ed. 878 [reversed in (Ariz. 1898) 53 Pac. 187].

Time of proof of execution.— It is not absolutely essential that the execution of the instrument should be proved prior to its admission. Allen v. State, 61 Ind. 268, 28 Am. Rep. 673; Washington County v. Dunn, 27 Gratt. (Va.) 608. Thus on the assurance of a party that due execution of a paper offered in evidence will be shown later in the trial, the court may allow it to be received without proof of execution. Dupree v. Virginia Home Ins. Co., 92 N. C. 417. So where an instrument is received in evidence without sufficient proof of its execution, the error is cured, if such proof be made subsequently during the trial. Houck v. Linn, 48 Nebr. 227, 66 N. W. 1103.

Instruments referred to by other instruments in evidence.— The rule of the text has been applied to instruments, although they are referred to by other instruments already in evidence. Lee v. Payne, 4 Mich. 106; Jackson v. Sackett, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 94. Compare Rhame v. Bower, 27 Ga. 408; Jackson v. Halstead, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 216. But in Neuval v. Cowell, 36 Cal. 648, it was held that in an action upon a contract referring to a previous contract as containing the plan by and prices for which the work sued for is to be done, the previous contract is admissible in evidence for purposes of description, whether its execution is proved or not. So in an action on a bond in which the principal and sureties guaranteed payment at maturity of instruments purchased of the principal by plaintiff, the instruments referred to in the bond were held admissible for the purpose of fixing the amount of plaintiff's recovery, without proof of their execution, although their execution is denied by the answer. Lombard v. Mayberry, 24 Nebr. 674, 40 N. W. 271, 8 Am. St. Rep. 234. To the same effect see Mallory v. Lyman, 3 Pinn. (Wis.) 443, 4 Chandl. (Wis.) 143.

Identification of writing referred to in verbal contract.—Where a contract lying wholly in parol refers for some of its terms to a written instrument, not as containing any operative words of obligation but as rendering the verbal agreement definite in details, it is not necessary to the admission of the writing in evidence, in establishing the verbal contract to prove its execution, it being sufficient to identify it. Smith v. New York Cent. R. Co., 4 Abb. Dec. (N. Y.) 262, 4 Keyes (N. Y.) 180.

Instrument offered in explanation of declarations.— Where a written instrument is so connected with the declarations of a party that they cannot be fully understood without it, proof of its execution is not a prerequisite to its admissibility in evidence, in connection with and as explanatory of the declarations. 83. Indorsements upon the backs of written instruments are independent writings, in the nature of receipts or written declarations, and can be read in evidence only after proof made that they are signed by the party sought to be charged, or have received his assent in some binding form. Turrell v. Morgan, 7 Minn. 368, 82 Am. Dec. 101; Hugumin v. Hinds, 97 Mo. App. 346, 71 S. W. 479; Strong Mfg. Co. v. Meridan Britannia Co., 23 Fed. Cas. No. 13,546. is sufficient to entitle the instrument to go to the jury.[84] In many jurisdictions there are statutes either dispensing with proof of execution except on formal denial, or otherwise modifying the common-law rule.[85]

(II) Authority to Execute — (A) In General. A deed executed by the party in whom title is vested, and expressing a valuable consideration, never needs as against him or those claiming under him, or as against a stranger, to be supported by proof of any authority in addition to the will of the party which led to its execution.[86]

(B) Instruments Purporting to Be Made Under Power of Attorney. A deed or contract purporting to be made by a trustee or an attorney in fact is not admissible as evidence of its contents unless the authority of the attorney in fact is established.[87] But the fact of execution may be shown independently of the bill of lading is admitted by the signer will not render the bill of lading admissible without proof of execution. Millam v. Southern R. Co., 58 S. C. 247, 36 S. E. 571. 86. A deed offered in evidence, and executed in Scotland, by which land in Ohio, which had been patented to B by the United States, was conveyed to S, recited that it was made in pursuance of a decree of the circuit court of United States for the district of Virginia, but no exemplification of the decree was offered in evidence in support of the deed. It was held in ejectment that as B was the patentee of the land, although he made the deed in pursuance of the decree, such decree could add nothing to the validity of the conveyance, and hence it was unnecessary to prove the decree, the deed being good without it. Games v. Dunn, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 322, 10 L. ed. 476. So in ejectment, plaintiff having proved title in his grantor, offered in evidence a deed from such grantor to himself, duly executed, expressing a consideration of one dollar, and also reciting that it was executed under and by virtue of the statute concerning voluntary assignments, and was made pursuant to the application of an insolvent and his creditors, and in pursuance of an order made by a county judge, etc. The reading of the deed was objected to unless plaintiff first proved the proceedings in the matter of the insolvency of his grantor. It was held that such proof was not necessary. Rockwell v. Brown, 54 N. Y. 210 [reversing 33 N. Y. Super. Ct 380]. See Ejectment, 15 Cyc. 123 et seq.

power to do so if that fact is relevant to the issue and the instrument is otherwise competent evidence.[88]

(c) Deeds of Executors or Administrators. So a party producing an executor's or administrator's deed must show that its execution was authorized,[89] and hence the appointment of the executor or administrator,[90] and the judicial proceedings under the authority of which the sale purported to have been made[91] must be shown.

Rule applied to sheriff's deed executed in another state.— Porter v. Wells, 6 Kan. 448.

Immaterial variance between deed and judgment.— If a sheriff in his deed to the purchaser set forth the execution but not the judgment the deed is admissible in support of the grantee's title; the grantee proving a judgment agreeing with the recitals of the deed, so far as relates to the names of the parties, although differing in some slight particulars in respect of the amounts constituting the sum for which judgment was rendered. Bettison v. Budd, 17 Ark. 546, 65 Am. Dec. 442.

Unsigned levy.— A tax fieri facias was offered in support of a sheriff's deed, and it appeared that the fieri facias was under fifty dollars, and that, although there was constable,[93] a commissioner or master in chancery,[94] or other officer cannot be given in evidence to support title without producing the record of the decree, judgment, and execution under the authority of which the sale was made,[95] or without proper secondary evidence thereof in case the records cannot be produced.[96]

(E) Instruments Under Corporation Seals. An instrument purporting to be executed by an officer or agent of a corporation for the corporation and having the corporate seal affixed is admissible in evidence without proof of the authority of the officer or agent to execute it.[97]

a levy entered thereon, it was not signed by any one. It was held that it was not error in the judge to refuse to let the fieri facias be read in evidence, without some proof that the entry was made by an officer authorized to levy such fieri facias, although there was a recital in the sheriff's deed that he had made such levy. Jones v. Easley, 53 Ga. 454.

Estoppel to deny sheriff's authority to sell. — When a sheriff's deed is offered by plaintiff to show the title under which defendant holds, plaintiff is not obliged to show the judgment and execution under which the deed was given, as he would have been if he had offered it in the line of his own title because defendant is estopped to deny the authority of the sheriff to sell, as he has entered under the sheriff's deed. Morehouse v. Cotheal, 22 N. J. L. 521.

Proof of collateral matter.—A sheriff's deed is admissible in evidence, without proof of his authority to sell, by showing judgment and execution, where it is offered to prove a collateral matter (Bolles v. Beach, 22 N. J. L. 680, 53 Am. Dec. 263), as for instance where the object is merely to show color of title (Doe v. Roe, 32 Ga. 448; Sutton v. McLoud, 26 Ga. 638; Burkhalter v. Edwards, 16 Ga. 593, 60 Am. Dec. 744).

Effect of long possession under deed.— A sheriff's deed under which possession has been held for more than twenty years is admissible, it is held, without producing the record of the pleadings, verdict, and judgment. Burke v. Ryan, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 94, 1 L. ed. 51.

Sheriff's deed amounting to judicial act.— In Gooch v. Scheidler, 20 Tex. 443, it was held that a deed made by a sheriff before the Revolution and executed before the judge upon whose judgment an execution issued with his sanction and authority is a judicial act, and hence presumed to be correct, and is admissible, although the record of the judgment is not produced.

93. Peterson v. Weissbein, 75 Cal. 174, 16 Pac. 769.

Official capacity presumed.— Where a constable signs a constable's deed as such, his signature is prima facie evidence of his official capacity, and the deed is rightly admitted in evidence in the absence of proof to the contrary. Cannon v. Cannon, 66 Tex. 682, 3 S. W. 36.

Deed introduced to show claim by adverse party.— A deed made under a decree in chancery may be introduced without an exemplification of the decree, where the only purpose is to show that the other party claims under it, and therefore cannot deny the grantor's title. Nixon v. Porter, 34 Miss. 697, 69 Am. Dec. 408.

Deed introduced for collateral purpose.— In McDermott v. Hoffman, 70 Pa. (iii) Necessity and Effect of Acknowledgment and Registration. Questions as to the necessity of acknowledgment [98] and recording or registration [99] to render a deed or other writing admissible in evidence without proof of execution, the effect of defective acknowledgments,[1] and of valid acknowledgments in dispensing with other proof of execution,[2] is treated elsewhere in this work.

(iv) Necessity of Probate of Wills. Under statute in various jurisdictions it is the general rule that before a will can be admitted in evidence in support of the title to property therein bequeathed or devised it must be shown to have been regularly probated.[3]

(v) Documents Produced on Notice. A paper produced on notice by the adverse party must be proved by him who offers it in like manner as if he had himself produced it, unless the party producing it be a party to the instrument, or claim a beneficial interest under it.[4] But production of a paper pursuant to notice by the opposite party dispenses with the necessity of proof by the party calling for its production, if the party producing it, or both parties, claim any benefit thereunder.[5]

b. Mode of Proof — (i) Attested Instruments — (a) In General. In the absence of statutory provision to the contrary,[6] the execution of an attested instrument must be proved by the subscribing witnesses, if they or any one of them can be had and are competent to be examined.[7] This rule applies both to

In New York the rule of the text has been applied to sealed instruments. Fox v. Reil, 3 Johns. 477. See also Henry v. Bishop, 2 Wend. 575; Shaver v. Ehle, 16 Johns. 201; Rex v. Harringworth, 4 M. & S. 350. In Hall v. Phelps, 2 Johns. 451, the rule was relaxed in respect to negotiable paper. See also Pentz v. Winterbottom, 5 Den. 51. And in Gilberton v. Ginochio, 1 Hilt. 218, it was held that the execution of an instrument not under seal may be proved by the admission of a party signing it, although attested by a subscribing witness.

Admissions in pleadings.— This rule has been applied, although the admission was made in an answer in chancery (Roberts v. Tennell, 3 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 247), as for instance in an answer to a bill of discovery (Call v. Dunning, 4 East 53). But in Smith v. Gale, 144 U. S. 509, 12 S. Ct. 674, 36 L. ed. 521 [affirming 4 Dak. 182, 29 N. W. 661], a different rule seems to have been applied in the case of an admission in a pleading in the same cause in which the instrument was sought to be introduced.

Agreement to admit instrument.— Where a party does not simply acknowledge the execution of an instrument, but agrees that the adverse party may introduce the instrument and may act upon it, as if the subscribing witness had been produced, evidence of the witness may be dispensed with. Execution proved by admission of counsel in open court.— Grady v. Sharron, 6 Yerg. (Tenn.) 320.

Admissions as secondary evidence.— Where the subscribing witnesses have been called, and failed to show that a deed was executed by a wife, whereby she relinquished her right of dower, the admissions of the wife, made during her widowhood, of her having executed the deed have been held admissible as the next best evidence. has been held, by the testimony of their agents.[21] Nor according to the prevailing view is the rule altered by statutes allowing parties to a suit to be witnesses.[22]

(B) Who Is a Subscribing Witness. A person cannot be considered a subscribing witness if he does not affix his signature to the instrument by the request or with the consent of the party or parties executing it,[23] or if his name is subscribed without his own knowledge and consent.[24] It is not necessary, however, that the subscribing witness should see the instrument executed if the party or parties acknowledge the instrument and request the witness to sign.[25]

(C) Certainty and Sufficiency of Testimony. Testimony of an attesting witness to the effect that he was present and saw the instrument signed and delivered and attested the execution is in general sufficient to entitle the instrument to admission as evidence.[26] So it has been held sufficient where the witness testified that the instrument was signed in his presence "to the best of his recollection."[27] Nor is it essential to admit an instrument in evidence that the subscribing witness should remember its execution by the parties; it is sufficient if he states that his signature is genuine and that it would not have been placed upon the instrument unless he had been called to witness it and unless the execution either took place in his presence or was acknowledged to him.[28]

Smith v. Morrow, 7 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 442, where it was held that where a grantor is ready and willing to be a witness to prove a deed, its execution need not be proved by the subscribing witness.

See 20 Cent. Dig. tit. "Evidence," § 1581 et seq.

Waiver of proof by subscribing witness.— In Rayburn v. Mason Lumber Co., 57 Mich. 273, 23 N. W. 811, it was held that, where a party calls his adversary or permits him to be called to prove an instrument referred to, it need not also be proved by the subscribing witness.

In Texas it is held that the execution of a deed may be proved by the grantor who is not interested without accounting for the non-production of the attesting witnesses (White v. Holliday, 20 Tex. 679), but not by the grantee (Wiggins v. Fleishel, 50 Tex. 57). Express request to sign unnecessary.— In proving the execution of an instrument, an express request by the maker to a subscribing witness to sign need not be shown, it being sufficient if he sign with the maker's assent. Smith v. Soper, 12 Colo. App. 264, 55 Pac. 195.

Witness of immature age.— An instrument may be read, although the party who executed it be long since dead, and the witness swearing positively to his signature was young at the time and read writing with difficulty. Wyche v. Wyche, 10 Mart. (La.) 408.

26. Hale v. Stone, 14 Ala. 803; Dawson v. Callaway, 18 Ga. 573.

Testimony held insufficient.— The testimony of an attesting witness to an instrument that the maker thereof took her seat at the table; that he did not see her write her name; that he did not know whether at the time of signing his name as witness she had signed her name; that he could not say that it was her handwriting; and that the instrument was not, to his knowledge, ever read to or by her, is not sufficient proof of execution. Edelen v. Gough, 5 Gill (Md.) 103.

Proof by attesting witness called for another purpose.— No exception lies to the admission of a written agreement in evidence for plaintiff after its execution had been proved by cross-examination of an attesting witness, who had been called by defendant for other purposes. (D) Number of Witnesses to Be Produced. Ordinarily it is sufficient to call one of several subscribing witnesses to an instrument to prove its execution and to authorize the reading of it to the jury,[29] unless, it has been held, the judge in his discretion requires the production of the others.[30] But it has been held that the single witness must be able to prove all the facts essential to the legal execution of the instrument; proof of his own signature and the signatures of the other witnesses not being sufficient.[31]

(E) Instruments Incidentally in Issue. Where a writing is not directly but only incidentally in issue, its execution may be proved by any competent testimony without calling the subscribing witness.[32]

(F) Secondary Evidence of Execution — (1) GROUNDS OF ADMISSIBILITY. If the subscribing witness or witnesses to a written instrument cannot be produced for the purpose of proving its execution,[33] as for instance if they are dead[34] or

Witness out of jurisdiction on public duty. —Where the subscribing witness to a bill of sale was out of the jurisdiction, on public duty, as a member of congress, proof of his handwriting was admitted. Selby v. Clark, 11 N. C. 265.

Residence known and near.— It has been held that if the subscribing witness lives outside of the state, it is no ground for the admission of secondary evidence of execution that his place of residence is known. Dunbar v. Marden, 13 N. H. 311. So it is held that the fact that his residence is near to the place of trial is immaterial. Harris v. Cannon, 6 Ga. 382; Emery v. Twombly, 17 Me. 65. But in Rich v. Trimble, 2 Tyler (Vt.) 249, it was held that if the place of the witness' residence is known and he lives within a reasonable distance from the place of trial, although outside of the state, his deposition should be taken.

Absence from county held immaterial.— Baker v. Massengale, 83 Ga. 137, 10 S. E.

efforts,[37] secondary evidence of execution is admissible. And the same is true if after the time of subscribing the witness becomes incompetent because of his

347. Compare Baker v. Blount, 3 N. C. 404, where it was held that the handwriting of a subscribing witness may be proved, where the party desiring to prove it has done all he could to procure the witness' attendance, but the latter had removed out of the county to avoid an attachment issued to procure his presence. So in Cook v. Husted, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 188, it was held that the declaration of plaintiff that the subscribing witnesses did reside in another county is sufficient evidence of the fact of their non-residence within the county in which the cause is tried to authorize the justice to admit other evidence of the execution of the deed. So a different rule is laid down under statute in Nebraska. Buchanan v. Wise, 34 Nebr. 695, 52 N. W. 163.

Temporary absence.—According to some of the cases, absence of the witness from the state or country or beyond the jurisdiction of the court, without any showing of a permanent residence elsewhere, is sufficient to lay the foundation for the introduction of secondary evidence. Jackson v. Feather River, etc., Water Co., 14 Cal. 18; McGarrity v. Byington, 12 Cal. 426; Harper v. Solomon, 1 Brev. (S. C.) 3; Oliphant v. Taggart, 1 Bay (S. C.) 255; Prince v. Blackburn, 2 East 250. See also Clark v. Sanderson, 3 Binn. (Pa.) 192, 5 Am. Dec. 368. But the general rule is that the mere temporary absence of the witness from the state or country will not justify the admission of secondary evidence (Gaither v. Martin, 3 Md. 146; In re Sacket, 1 Mass. 58; Harrel v. Ward, 2 Sneed (Tenn.) 610); and this whether the witness has been summoned (McCord v. Johnson, 4 Bibb (Ky.) 531; Creighton v. Johnson, Litt. Sel. Cas. (Ky.) 240) or not (Brown v. Hicks, 1 Ark. 232), and although his absence is caused by sickness (Gordon v. Payne, 3 N. C. 72).

Evidence of non-residence.— The fact of non-residence may like any other fact be established by any competent testimony. Dismukes v. Musgrove, 8 Mart. N. S. (La.) 375; Buchanan v. Wise, 34 Nebr. 695, 52 N. W. 163; People v. Rowland, 5 Barb. (N. Y.) 449; Clark v. Boyd, 2 Ohio 56; Harper v. Solomon, 1 Brev. (S. C.) 3. Proof by old residents of the town where a deed was executed, and who had resided there before and since the execution of the deed, that they never knew or heard of such persons in the state as the witnesses to the deed is prima facie sufficient to prove non-residence, and to let in secondary evidence of the genuineness of the signatures to the deed. Holman v. Norfolk Bank, 12 Ala. 369. Proof that a subscribing witness to a bond was residing out of the state when last heard from by one who was well acquainted with him is prima facie proof of his absence from the state, so as to render proof of his handwriting admissible. Gordon v. Miller, 1 Ind. 531. So proof that an attesting witness to a note, when last seen, was engaged in business out of the state, coupled with a return non est inventus on a subpœna by a constable of the city in which the attesting witness lived before going out of the state, is sufficient to let in secondary evidence of the genuineness of the signature. Troeder v. Hyams, 153 Mass. 536, 27 N. E. 775. But a sheriff's return is not the only evidence of a witness' non-residence and it is not necessary that a subpœna in such case should have issued for the absent witness. Dismukes v. Musgrove, 8 Mart. N. S. (La.) 375; Clark v. Boyd, 2 Ohio 56.

Foreign residence presumed from execution of instrument outside of jurisdiction.—Elliott v. Dyche, 80 Ala. 376; McMinn v. Whelan, 27 Cal. 300; McMinn v. O'Connor, 27 Cal. 238; Landers v. Bolton, 26 Cal. 393; Newsom v. Luster, 13 Ill. 175; Barfield v. Hewlett, 4 La. 118; Crouse v. Duffield, 12 Mart. (La.) 539; Valentine v. Piper, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 85, 33 Am. Dec. 715; Catlin v. Ware, 9 Mass. 218, 6 Am. Dec. 56; Sherman v. Champlain Transp. Co., 31 Vt. 162; Wilcox v. Hunt, 13 Pet. (U. But the description of the grantor in a deed as residing out of the commonwealth and proof of such non-residence are not sufficient evidence that the deed was in fact executed abroad, so as to admit secondary evidence of its execution, without accounting for the absence of the subscribing witnesses. becoming a party in litigation or otherwise interested, whether his interest is thrown on him by operation of law or is acquired by his voluntary act,[38] or if he subsequently becomes insane,[39] infamous,[40] or otherwise incompetent.[41] So, if the subscribing witness to an instrument denies or cannot recollect the transaction in question, other evidence of its execution may be resorted to.[42] But the mere fact that a witness is sick and incapable of attending the trial has been held to be no ground for dispensing with his testimony.[43]

(2) Proof of Handwriting[44] — (a) Of Attesting Witness. It is a general rule that, where the attesting witness is unavailable, proof of his handwriting is admissible as secondary evidence,[45] and proof of the handwriting of one of Interest acquired without fault of party claiming under instrument.— In Robertson v. Allen, 16 Ala. 106, it was held that if a subscribing witness to an instrument becomes incompetent from interest, without the fault or agency of the party who claims under it, secondary evidence is admissible to prove its execution.

Attempt to introduce incompetent witness unnecessary.— Robertson v. Allen, 16 Ala. 106.

Proof of interest a prerequisite to admission of secondary evidence.—To authorize the admission of secondary evidence of the execution of a written instrument, it is not enough to prove that the subscribing witness bears the same name as the wife of the party who executed it, but it must be proved that she is his wife. L. 434, it was held not to be a sufficient excuse for not producing a subscribing witness to an instrument to establish its execution that the magistrate before whom the suit is brought is the subscribing witness, since it is the party's fault thus to disqualify his witness. Proof of sealing and delivery.— Proof of the death and handwriting of a subscribing witness of an instrument not in the usual form of a sealed instrument, nor purporting in the body of it to be sealed, is held not to be evidence of the delivery and sealing of the instrument, although a sufficient seal, under the statute, is affixed to the subscriber's name. Newbold v. Lamb, 5 N. J. L. 449. So in Dawson v. Dawson, Rice Eq. (S. C.) 243, it was held that where the attestation of the subscribing witnesses to a deed certifies to its delivery as well as the execution, accounting for the non-production of witnesses, coupled with proof of their signatures, will sufficiently prove the delivery, but it is otherwise where the instrument does not recite that it was delivered.

(b) Of Person Executing Instrument. According to the decisions in some jurisdictions if it appears that the attesting witness is incapable of being produced, proof of the signature of the person executing the instrument may be made without first showing the unavailability of proof of the witness' handwriting.[50] In other jurisdictions, however, where the subscribing witness cannot be produced, it has been held essential as the next step to prove the handwriting of the witness, this being regarded as furnishing the evidence next in degree; and proof of the handwriting of the person who executed the instrument will not according to these authorities be admitted unless proof of the handwriting of the witness cannot be procured.[51] But it is agreed that proof of the handwriting of the person executing the instrument may be resorted to if the party is unable to prove the handwriting of the attesting witness.[52] Such proof may always be

Effort to prove handwriting of witness held insufficient.— Where it appeared that the subscribing witness to a bond had been clerk of the county court of a large, populous, and wealthy county, and had been dead only twenty-five years, it was held not to be sufficient for admitting testimony of the obligor's handwriting to show by one witness only that he did not know the subscribing witness' handwriting, and did not know of any person who did have such knowledge. produced as corroborative evidence of the due and valid execution of the instrument.[53]

(c) Incompetent Witnesses. Where the subscribing witnesses to an instrument upon which an action is brought have become disqualified by interest acquired since its execution, proof of the handwriting of the witnesses is competent to prove the due execution of the instrument.[54] Where, however, the subscribing witness was, by reason of the relation of husband and wife or interest in some other way, incompetent to testify to the execution of an instrument at the time of the subscribing as well as at the time of trial, proof of the witness' handwriting is inadmissible, but proof of the party's handwriting is admissible as if there had been no attesting witness.[55]

(g) Rebutting or Impeaching Evidence. It may be shown by a subscribing witness or alleged subscribing witness that the deed was not in fact delivered[56] or that his signature is not genuine.[57] So the presumption of the execution of an instrument by the maker arising from proof of the handwriting of a deceased subscribing witness may be rebutted by evidence that the signature is not in the maker's handwriting,[58] or by the denial of the person by whom the instrument purports to be executed in connection with other circumstances.[59] The character

Testimony of witness held not to amount to denial of signature.— Testimony of an alleged subscribing witness that on the day when the deed purports to have been executed she was not in the county, and did not on that day witness a deed from such grantors to such grantee, is not a denial of the genuineness of her signature on such deed. Sutherland v. Ross, 160 Pa. St. 29, 28 Atl. 437.

Conflicting testimony of witnesses.— The testimony of one whose name appears as a subscribing witness to a deed executed about twelve years previously, that he had no recollection of ever having seen and attested the deed, and believes he never did, is not sufficient to show the deed to be spurious, in opposition to one witness who testifies to its execution by the parties, and of others who state corroborating facts. Evidence held sufficient.— Where a witness stated that he had seen the bill of sale presented to him, and that he was present when the same was executed, such statement was equivalent to saying that he saw it executed, and was admissible in proof of execution. Mosely v. Gordon, 16 Ga. 384.

Evidence held insufficient.— Where a witness who could not read testified that he saw the party to the alleged contract sign a paper about the time of the date of the contract, and understood it to be of the purport of the paper offered in evidence, but was not a subscribing witness, and could not identify the paper either by the handwriting or by any mark, there is not sufficient evidence of the execution of the paper to authorize its admission, since, for aught that appears, it was in the power of the party offering it to have called a witness to the proof of the handwriting. Admission by use of instrument in same trial.— When a party admits a private writing to be genuine by using it as such upon a trial, he cannot afterward deny its authenticity when his opponent desires to use it. But where plaintiff makes affidavit of the loss of a writing, and offers secondary evidence of its contents, defendant may produce the original in court, by way of rebuttal of plaintiff's evidence, without thereby admitting the execution of the instrument. Hill v. Townsend, 24 Tex. 575.

Admission by production of instrument in prior proceeding.— In an action in a state court to recover damages for breach of a charter-party plaintiff offered in evidence a charter-party which had been produced and used by defendant, in a cause pending in the testimony of any one familiar with his handwriting,[65] or by any competent proof of the genuineness of his handwriting.[66] It is not necessary, to entitle an unattested instrument to be read in evidence, that its execution should be proved by direct evidence, but it will be sufficient if that fact is fairly inferable from the facts and circumstances proved.[67] If the genuineness of the signature to an instrument is proved by the admission of the party or otherwise, it will not be necessary to go further and prove the genuineness of the writing in the body of the instrument,[68] or to prove that it was actually made on the day of its date.[69]

D. Ancient Documents[70] — 1. General Rule of Admissibility. An ancient document is admissible in evidence without direct proof of its execution, if it appears to be of the age of at least thirty years, is found in the proper custody, and is unblemished by alterations and otherwise free from suspicion; the instrument being said in such a case to prove itself.[71] Under this rule documents have been frequently admitted in evidence upon proof of the handwriting of parties thereto or of subscribing witnesses without calling the subscribing witnesses.[72] A subscribing witness to an ancient document will not, according to the weight of authority, be required to be called, although it appears that he is living and actually in court at the time,[73] and this whether the testimony of the witness would tend to overthrow or establish the document.[74] This rule is adopted for common convenience and is founded upon the great difficulty of proving the due execution of a deed after an interval of many years. After the lapse of thirty years from the time of execution of a document the witnesses are presumed to be dead or beyond the jurisdiction of the court.[75] The fact that an instrument is an ancient document does not, however, affect its admissibility in evidence further than to dispense with proof of its genuineness, where it is otherwise admissible.[76] Ancient documents have been admitted, not only as muniments of title, or as instruments under which the parties to the action in which they are sought to be introduced assert a claim, but also to show other facts which they recite even in actions between strangers to the instrument.[77] The recitals in

Recitals in ancient deeds to prove former deed.— A recital in an ancient deed or will of any antecedent deed or document, consistent with its own provisions, will after the lapse of a long period be presumptive proof of the former existence of such deed or document, especially in a case where nothing appears to rebut such presumption. ancient deeds under which neither party to the action claims are competent evidence to prove the location of a disputed line[78] or a right of way.[79] Ancient plans and maps have been admitted on the same principle.[80] But it has been held that plans or maps may be so imperfect as to justify the court in declining to admit them, as for instance when they amount to memoranda merely and are preparations for a transaction which may have never taken place.[81] So ancient documents coming out of the proper custody, and purporting on their face to show exercise of ownership, such as leases or licenses, have been admitted as being in themselves acts of ownership and proof of possession.[82]

2. Character of Instrument — a. In General. It may be laid down as a general rule that any document or paper if it is otherwise competent may upon proof of the requisite facts be admitted in evidence as an ancient document,[83] and this rule applies whether the writing is with or without attesting witnesses.[84] Thus the rule applies not only to deeds,[85] wills,[86] bonds,[87] powers of

b. Public Records. Ancient original public records like ancient deeds, when shown to have come from the proper custody, are, in the absence of anything to impeach their verity, admissible in evidence without further proof of their authenticity, it being presumed after the lapse of thirty years that the official who made the record is dead.[93] The rule has been applied to books and records of land proprietors preserved as township or public records,[94] and to public records of deeds, although irregularly made,[95] provided facts requisite for the admission of the deeds themselves as ancient documents exist.[96]

c. Private Records. In the same way records and books of a private character, such as those kept by associations or societies of various kinds, have been frequently admitted as ancient documents where they contain intrinsic evidence of their verity and genuineness and are produced from the proper custody.[97]

Thus the rule has been applied to entries on the minutes of a masonic lodge[98] and to the books and records of companies of proprietors under whose authority lands have been divided or disposed of;[99] and in the latter instance, according to some of the decisions, without any proof of the original and continued legal organization of the proprietary and whether a clerk or any other person authorized to keep the records is in existence or not.[1] So entries appearing to be copies of authentic and contemporaneous instruments by persons employed for the purpose in books in which ancient deeds and instruments are usually transcribed for the sake of reference and preservation according to the custom of families having a muniment-room have been held admissible, where a search was made for the originals and they could not be found.[2]

Instrument improperly recorded.—In Settegast v. Charpiot, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 28 S. W. 580, it was held that a certified copy of the record of a deed is not admissible as of an ancient instrument unless the deed was properly of record. So in Hoddy v. Harryman, 3 Harr. & M. (Md.) 581, it was held that a copy of an ancient deed which does not appear to have been acknowledged is inadmissible in evidence, although the record book appears to have been lost. But in Hall v. Gittings, 2 Harr. & J. (Md.) 380, it was held that where possession had accompanied land, agreeably to an ancient deed, the inspeximus of the deed was admissible in evidence, although the deed needed no enrolment.

In South Carolina it is held that a copy of a deed is not admissible without proof of is lost or destroyed or for some other reason cannot be produced.[4] Especially is this true if the copies are of an age sufficient to constitute them ancient documents.[5] But it has been held that an examined copy of an instrument cannot be admitted in evidence without proof of the execution of the original, however old the original may purport to be.[6]

e. Instruments Purporting to Be Executed Under a Power. Where a deed purports to have been executed by virtue of a power of attorney and is admissible as an ancient document, the existence of the power of attorney authorizing its execution will be presumed;[7] but it has been held that if the power of attorney is recorded so that the evidence is perpetuated, the deed is not admissible without the power, however ancient it may be.[8] After the lapse of thirty years a partnership deed is admissible in evidence and the authority of a member of execution, however old it may be. Woolfolk v. Graniteville Mfg. Co., 22 S. C. 332.

Indorsement of court reciting existence of power.— The existence of a power under which an ancient deed purports to have been executed may be inferred from a recital on the face of the deed, made by the judge of first instance, before whom the same was executed, that such a power was in existence in his court, having been executed by the attorneys of the owner of the property. Storey v. Flanagan, 57 Tex. 649. See also Hooper v. Hall, 35 Tex. 82.

In Canada it has been held that the production of a deed thirty years old purporting on its face to be executed under a power of attorney does not prove the power, but proves only what appears on the face of the instrument that the person in question preferred to act under a power. Jones v. McMullen, 25 U C. Q. B. 542.

In England, where a deed more than thirty years old purports to be made in the execution of a special power of appointment and to be executed by the attorney of the donee of the power, it has been held that, although by reason of the antiquity of the deed the execution of it by the attorney as such ought to be presumed, yet there is no rule of law which requires or justifies the presumption that the attorney was duly authorized to execute the power. In re Airey, [1897] 1 Ch. 164, 66 L. J. Ch. 152, 76 L. T. Rep. N. S. 151, 45 Wkly. Rep. 286.

the partnership will be presumed.[9] A distinction has, however, been drawn in this respect between a private and a statutory or public power, and it has been accordingly held that an ancient deed purporting to have been made by an administrator under an order of court is not admissible in evidence in the absence of proof of an order of a court having jurisdiction to make the order.[10] So a sheriff's deed is not admissible as an ancient instrument where the judgment and execution on which it is issued are not produced or accounted for.[11] But where the authority of an administrator or a public officer to make the sale is shown, it will be presumed in favor of an ancient deed by him that the necessary and proper steps were taken to make the sale regular and legal,[12] at least where possession followed.[13]

3. Age of Document — a. In General. To render an instrument admissible as an ancient document there must generally be direct proof or evidence reasonably warranting the inference that the instrument has been in existence for thirty years or more.[14]

b. Circumstances Showing Age — (i) Date. The date of the paper, if resembling the residue of its contents, and not appearing to be altered or interpolated or otherwise spurious, is of itself a circumstance of some strength to show the period of its execution, inasmuch as a suspicion of its genuineness is not to be unreasonably indulged ;[15] but the fact that an instrument bears a date indicating

Proof of destruction of records.— After the lapse of thirty years the existence of a judgment and execution recited in a sheriff's deed will be presumed, on proof of the destruction of the records of the court from which the execution purported to issue. that it is thirty years of age is not conclusive evidence of the fact and the presumption may be overcome by proof to the contrary.[16]

(II) Marks of Age. So the marks of age that the paper bears upon its face, such as its tattered condition, its color, and the faded appearance of the ink is intrinsic evidence of the time of its execution more or less strong according to circumstances.[17]

(III) Indorsements and Certificates. So, when the age of a document is under investigation, all indorsements made thereon and certificates attached thereto which in any manner indicate its age are matters to be considered by the jury.[18] Thus in view of the habit of recorders of deeds, which is universal and matter of common knowledge, to indorse upon the deeds themselves the fact and date of their registration, such certificates appearing on deeds, are competent and sufficient evidence of the fact that the deeds had been put upon record during the year mentioned in the certificates.[19]

(IV) Copy of Instrument. So a copy of a power of attorney has been held to be admissible where it is offered to show the fact that there was such a paper in existence as the original power of attorney at the date the copy purports to have been made, and as bearing on the question of the antiquity of the original.[20]

(V) Computation of Age. A deed may be admitted in evidence as an ancient document when it is thirty years old at the time of the trial, although less than thirty years old when the action was brought, since the competency of the evidence depends as a general rule upon the state of things at the time it is offered and received.[21] It has been held that the principle upon which the antiquity of a deed is reckoned from the date of the deed applies to a will, although the testator has died within the thirty years.[22]

4. Custody. The mere fact that the deed is ancient will not of itself warrant the presumption that it is genuine and entitle it to be admitted in evidence.[23] In addition to proof of antiquity it is necessary that there shall be evidence that the deed comes from the proper custody or depository to justify its admission in evidence.[24] Thus the rule has no application to a deed in the possession of the

Custody held improper.—Where the record of the transfer of a land certificate in 1854 failed to show how or when such transfer came into the custody of the land-office prior grantor since the alleged execution.[25] But if an ancient document is produced from the proper custody,[26] as for instance documents found among the family papers of the person entitled thereto,[27] or in the hands of a trustee of an estate,[28] or of an agent or attorney of the parties beneficially interested,[29] it is admissible under the rule. Documents are said to be in proper custody if they are in the place in which and under the care of the person with whom they would naturally be; but no custody is improper if it is proved to have had a legitimate origin, or if the circumstances of the particular case are such as to render such an origin probable.[30] Accordingly the custody to be shown for the purpose of making a to the location of the certificate in 1874, it was held to be necessary for the party offering such transfer in evidence as an ancient instrument to show how or when it came into the land-office, or to explain its custody prior to the time it was known to be in such office, since the land-office was not the proper depository of the transfer before the location of the certificate. document evidence without proof of execution is not necessarily that of the person strictly entitled to the possession. It is enough if the person in whose custody the deed is found is so connected with the deed that he may reasonably be supposed to be in possession of it without fraud.[31] Whether a document comes from the proper custody is a question for the court and not for the jury.[32]

5. Possession Under Instrument and Other Circumstances — a. In General. The rule as to what evidence in addition to proof of antiquity and that the deed or will comes from a proper source is required to justify the admission of an ancient instrument in evidence without proof of execution is not entirely settled. The decisions are harmonious to this extent: That, where possession of the land has accompanied the deed or will, that fact furnishes sufficient evidence of its authenticity to justify its admission.[33] If property passes through several hands

Possession of part of premises.— To entitle a deed to be given in evidence as an ancient deed, without proof of its execution, it seems that possession under it for thirty years of a part of the premises contained in it is sufficient, even as against one in possession of another part. Jackson v. Davis, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 123, 15 Am. Dec. 451.

Occupation of premises through subordinate.— Evidence that the occupant of certain real estate had said that the land belonged to the descendant of a grantee, who had acquired title many years before through a sheriff's deed, raises a sufficient presumption of possession in the grantee to admit the deed in evidence as an ancient instrument. Hasbrouck v. Burhans, 47 Hun (N. Y.) 487.

Order of proof.— Apart from any consideration of the necessity of proof of possession under an ancient deed or will, the question whether the instrument shall be read in evidence before proof of an accompanying possession is had is one as to the order of proof; it is within the discretion of the court whether the possession shall be first proved or the instrument first given in evidence in order that the court may be able to say whether the possession has been in accordance with the tenor of the instrument. Staring v. Bowen, 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 109; Doe v. Passingham, 2 C. & P. 440, 30 Rev. Rep. 327, 12 E. C. L. 663.

in the course of a given time, each keeping in his possession the deed given to him, the possession of all is equally under the first deed, which may be given in evidence as an ancient deed, although never seen by any but the first grantee to whom it was given.[34] But where possession has not accompanied the deed the cases are not agreed as to what proof other than proof of possession will be sufficient to justify its admission.[35] In some jurisdictions it is held that proof of accompanying possession of the lands claimed to be embraced by the deed is indispensable to its admissibility as an ancient document,[36] and in some instances possession for the full period of thirty years seems to have been required.[37] But in a number of cases it has been held that possession for a less period than thirty years will be sufficient if there are other circumstances tending to show the genuineness of the instrument;[38] and indeed it may be stated as the general rule that a deed may be introduced in evidence without proof of its execution or without proof of possession thereunder, if such an account be given of the instrument as may under all the circumstances be reasonably expected and as will afford the presumption that it is genuine.[39] Thus the fact that important trans-

Possession for part of full period coupled with acknowledgment by grantor of execution.— Where the grantee in a deed, shortly after its date, which is thirty years before the trial, took possession of the land, which he believed to be that conveyed by the deed, and the grantor twenty years afterward acknowledged that he executed it on the day of its date, it is sufficient to show that the deed is an ancient instrument, so as to dispense with the production of the subscribing witness to prove its execution. So contemporaneous official acts may be considered in determining the genuineness of the deed, in the absence of proof of possession.[43] Indorsements or memoranda appearing upon an ancient deed, whether they are official or private, have been considered as circumstances indicating that the deed is genuine, where they are of such a character as to show to a cautious and discriminating man that they would not be there if the paper had been a forgery.[44] So also, if it be established that the document has been on record for over thirty years, this fact is strong evidence in favor of its

St. Rep. 295, it was held that an ancient deed cannot be read in evidence against an adverse claimant in possession for more than thirty years with his title of record to establish on the part of plaintiff a right of entry where no possession prior to the execution of the deed under the same chain of title or since its execution has been shown.

Contemporaneous plat indorsed on deed.— In trespass to try title, where it was admitted that a parol partition was made thirty years before, by parties since deceased, but the manner and extent of the partition was in dispute, a deed made in 1861 by plaintiff's ancestor was introduced, which had on its back a plat showing the land divided in a certain way. It appeared from a comparison of the handwritings that the deed and plat were made by the same person and were of the same age. It was held that in view of the age and evident genuineness of the deed, the death of the parties, and that a contemporaneous partition was made, the plat was properly admitted, especially as it was explanatory of the deed. Linam v. Anderson, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 631, 21 S. W. 768.

Where indorsements are suggestive of better evidence.— Where the papers themselves show that if genuine evidence of a satisfactory character might have been produced of the genuineness of the indorsements upon them and of the actual antiquity of the documents, the documents will not be admissible in the absence of the production of such other evidence. Smith v. Rankin, 20 Ill. 14.

genuineness, although it may not have been recorded in the place or manner required by law.[45]

b. Documents as Evidence of Acts of Ownership. Ancient documents coming out of proper custody and purporting upon the face of them to show exercise of ownership, such as a lease or a license, may be given in evidence without proof of possession or payment of rent under them, as being in themselves acts of ownership on the part of the lessor or licensor and hence proof of possession in him, at least where such acts of ownership are accompanied by other evidence showing enjoyment consistent with such ownership.[46]

6. Defects or Irregularities. The principle has been broadly laid down that the rule allowing ancient documents to be introduced in evidence without proof of their execution embraces no instrument which is not valid on its face and which does not contain every essential requirement of the law under which it was made.[47] Instruments have, however, been held admissible as ancient documents, although in some respects defectively or irregularly executed, and this, although the defect or irregularity appears on the face of the instrument,[48] although improperly or insufficiently acknowledged,[49] or although unrecorded or improperly recorded.[50] So it has been held proper to admit in evidence a certified copy of a deed which has been of record more than thirty years, although not acknowledged as required by the law in force when it was executed.[51] But in Texas it has been held that in the absence of a proper acknowledgment and proper certificate of such acknowledgment of the execution of a deed, no lapse of time will make admissible as an ancient instrument a certified copy from the record of such deed.[52]

7. Effect of Suspicious Circumstances — a. In General. To be admissible as an ancient document, a paper must be free from suspicion and have the appearance of genuineness.[53]

b. Alterations and Interlineations. Thus some explanation of alterations, interlineations, or erasures, if there are any of a material character, should as a general rule be required by the court, especially when insisted on by the adverse party, before a document should be allowed to be exhibited and read as part of the evidence.[54] Thus, where there is evidence tending to show that the date of a document has been changed so as to leave uncertainty arising from the face of the instrument itself as to what its true date is, it is for the trial judge to inspect the paper and hear such evidence as may be offered to explain the uncertainty and to determine whether it bears such marks of suspicion unexplained as to justify its rejection as an ancient document.[55] If the document is admitted, the jury must, it has been held, receive it as at least prima facie evidence.[56]

c. Circumstances Appearing From Extraneous Evidence. But the grounds of suspicion from which such instruments must be free before they are admissible in evidence, it has been held, refer to something apparent upon their face or shown by some fact or circumstance directly connected with them, and not to extraneous testimony.[57] Thus the fact that an affidavit has been made attacking the document as a forgery or otherwise impeaching its genuineness has been held not to affect its admissibility.[58] But although an instrument possessing the requisites prescribed by law proves itself, it may be shown to be a forgery or attacked as invalid on other grounds after its admission, by the introduction of evidence at the trial.[59]

Certified copy.—In Georgia it has been held that where an alleged certified copy of a deed is offered in evidence, and is met by an affidavit of forgery, as authorized by Ga. Civ. E. Compelling Production of Documents — 1. Public Documents. The general rule has been laid down that the courts undoubtedly have the power to compel the custodian of records and documents to produce them in court for inspection, and to be used as evidence when material and necessary; and whenever it is made clearly to appear in a proper manner that their production is necessary and material for the support of either a cause of action or defense, or the promotion of public justice, the power should be exercised.[60] But where its exercise is not so shown to be necessary, for the reason that certified copies could be obtained,[61] where the party making application for the production of the record is not shown to have any rights or interest therein,[62] or where it is for the public interest to prevent the publicity of the record,[63] the power should not be exercised.

2. Private Writings — a. In General. The power of compelling the inspection or production of documents by a bill of discovery[64] or by a subpœna duces tecum[65] is treated elsewhere in this work. The discussion here is confined in the main to the right of one party to compel the production of private writings by his adversary by order of a court of law.

b. Production by Adverse Party[66] — (i) In General. Notice to produce was as a general rule the only remedy of a party in a suit at common law unless he resorted to equity, in case the other party to the record had in his possession books or writings containing evidence material to the cause. Such notice, however, never enabled the party to compel the production of the documents, but served only to lay the foundation for the introduction of secondary evidence in case it appeared that the documents were in the possession of the party notified and that he refused to produce them at the trial, as requested.[67] But in England and to some extent in this country a modification of this rule has been made apart from any statutory provision, in cases where the party calling for the inspection has a direct interest in the document,[68] at least if the instrument is the foundation of the action and the party cannot declare against the adverse party without it, or it is required to perfect his defense.[69] Moreover various statutes exist in the different jurisdictions vesting courts of law or the courts in general with the power of compelling by order the production of private writings by one party in favor of another and attaching to the non-production of the paper or disobedience of the order the penalty of a nonsuit or default or a penalty in some other form.[70] These provisions were intended to prevent the necessity of instituting suits in equity to obtain from an adverse party in a suit at law the production of papers relative to the litigated issue.[71] The statutes, however, are generally applicable to all actions, whether the relief prayed for be legal or equitable.[72]

Wheeling v. Black, 25 W. Va. 266.

The affidavit of a party interested, taken without cross-examination, is competent evidence on a motion for an order on the opposite party to produce books and writings under the act of congress of Sept. 24, 1789, § 15 (1 U. S. St. at L. 73). U. S. v. Twenty-Eight Packages of Pins, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,561, Gilp. 306.

Under N. C. Code, § 1373, no affidavit is necessary to an order on the adverse party to produce papers containing evidence pertinent to the issue, but on motion and due notice their production may be ordered. in court.[80] So where the form of action or the pleadings gives a party notice to be prepared to produce a written instrument, no other notice to produce is necessary.[81]

(B) Time of Giving Notice. Notice to produce books or writings must allow a reasonable time for the party to appear and show cause why the rule should not be made.[82] It should be such, it has been held, as would be sufficient for preparation to try an issue of fact.[83]

(C) Description of Documents. The description of the document in the notice to produce must be sufficient to identify it and to apprise a man of ordinary intelligence of what is demanded.[84]

(IV) Order of Court. An order of court is as a general rule necessary to enable a party to call upon the adverse party for the production of papers; and a notice without such order will not be sufficient.[85]

Under statute in Indiana it is held that refusal to compel a party to produce certain books on the trial is not error if he was neither notified of the motion, as required by Rev. St. (1894) § 487 (Rev. St. (1881) § 479), nor present in person or by counsel when the motion was made. Globe Acc. Ins. Co. v. Helwig, 13 Ind. App. 539, 41 N. E. 976, 55 Am. St. Rep. 247.

Papers in town where trial occurs.—Where no notice to produce books is served on a party, he cannot, it has been held, be forced by the court to produce them, although they are in the town where the case is on trial. Brand v. Kennedy, 71 Ga. 707.

Special notice held essential.— It has been held that a party is not bound to produce books and papers before an auditor upon a simple notice from him of the time and place of hearing, without special notice to produce. Stetson v. Godfrey, 20 N. H. 227.

Notice of intention to move for judgment by default.— Under the federal statute providing that failure to produce papers after notice gives the party calling for them, if plaintiff, a right to a judgment by default, notice to produce the papers must give the information that it is intended to move for a judgment by default. Bas v. Steele, 2 Fed. Cas. No. 1,088, 3 Wash. 381.

Notice served on attorney.— In Geyger v. Geyger, 10 Fed. Cas. No. 5,375, 2 Dall. 332, 1 L. ed. 403, it was held that requiring the production of books and papers "on motion and due notice" pursuant to the Judiciary Act of 1789, § 15 (1 U. S. St. at L. 73), is a procedure to be kept under the control of the court for the purposes of substantial justice, and that where notice to produce deeds is served on the attorney of a party who lives at a distance, and the attorney offers to give references to the pages, etc., where the deeds are recorded, this is sufficient, without service on the party himself.

Under statute in Georgia it is held necessary that there should be a peremptory written order made by the court and entered upon its minutes

(v) Time of Production. It has been held that a party need not respond to a notice requiring him to produce papers on a trial before the jury are called or the party demanding their production has entered upon his case.[86]

(vi) Excuse For Non-Production. The non-production of the instrument may, however, be excused and the order for its production be rescinded,[87] as for instance because of inability of the person against whom the order is issued to find the document after diligent search,[88] or, it has been held, because of the fact that the documents called for are in the nature of hearsay or otherwise incompetent as evidence.[89] But where the plaintiff has documents in his possession which are legally admissible per se in behalf of the defendant, it has been held that it is no ground for not producing them that by reason of the plaintiff's requiring the production of the papers and providing for a reasonable time in which the party shall comply with the order. Marshall v. McNeal, 114 Ga. 622, 40 S. E. 796; Georgia Iron, etc., Co. v. Etowah Iron Co., 104 Ga. 395, 30 S. E. 878; Stiger v. Monroe, 97 Ga. 479, 25 S. E. 478.

A. 754, it was held that the fact that an order for the production of books and papers was too broad is not reversible error where it does not appear that irrelevant or improper parts of the books or papers were used as evidence.

Effect of failure to object to order.—Where an order for the production of books directs the production of all the books, without describing them, and the party complaining raises no objection in the trial court because the books were not described, but produces the books, and makes such objection only after the same are in the custody of the court, and under examination by the party calling for them, he cannot obtain the aid of the supreme court, through its remedial writs, to set aside the order of production. State v. Allen, 104 La. 301, 29 So. 114.

Delivery to commissioner.— In Cain v. Pullen, 34 La. Ann. 511, it was held that a party to a suit cannot be compelled to deliver his books and papers to a commissioner to be examined by witnesses summoned by him.

Order directed to party's agent.— An order of the court to produce books or writings ought, it has been held, to be made on plaintiff on record, and is bad if directed to a third person though he be plaintiff's agent. Rose v. King, 5 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 241.

Discretion of court in granting rule.— While the power of the court to grant an order is discretionary (Schmidt v. Kiser, 75 Iowa 457, 39 N. incompetency as a witness he may not be able to give his own testimony in explanation of them.[90]

(VII) Effect of Inconvenience or Expense of Production. Where the inconvenience and expense attending the production of books and papers at the trial are very great, and where a sworn copy of the papers or of the entries from the books is given or proposed to be given, it has been held that a strong case of the necessity of the production of the books or papers themselves should be made to compel their production or to subject the delinquent to the penalty prescribed by the statute.[91]

(VIII) Effect of Production and Inspection. A party cannot call on his adversary for the production of documentary evidence and when so produced claim the benefit of such portion thereof as may be to his advantage and at the same time deprive the adverse party of the right to use such part as may tend to the latter's interest.[92] In some of the decisions the rule is laid down that papers which are produced on notice and submitted to the inspection of the other side become by reason of such production and inspection evidence for both parties at the trial on the ground that to allow a party, after requiring his adversary to produce a document and after inspecting it, to insist on excluding it from the case altogether would give him an unfair advantage over the other.[93] But in other cases it is held that production and inspection alone do not make the Effect as evidence in subsequent trials.— It has been held that, where a party to a suit gives the adverse party notice to produce a paper at the trial, such notice is sufficient for the production of the same paper at any subsequent trial of the same cause. Rawson v. Knight, 73 Me. 340. But in Ellison v. Cruser, 40 N. J. L. 444, it was held that the rule compelling a party to put in evidence a paper, notice to produce which has been given to the opposite party, does not extend to a new trial of the cause, unless he again gives notice and makes inspection. In Georgia it is held that while writings produced on notice and inspected will thereby become evidence of the producing party without further proof on all trials of the same case (Wooten v. Nall, 18 Ga. 609), the production of such writings will not suffice to make them evidence for the producing party on the trial of another and entirely different case, although brought by the same plaintiff against the same defendant and for the same cause of action (Cushman v. Coleman, 92 Ga. 772, 19 S. E. 46).

Identical instrument called for necessary.— A party who produces a paper at the trial on the call of the adverse party is not entitled to read such paper in evidence for himself, after the party calling for it has inspected it and declined to use it, unless it appear to be the identical instrument called for. Reed v. Anderson, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 481. Thus a party who in response to a notice that he produce his account-books to be used as evidence produces instead of his books of original entry his papers evidence,[94] unless the party producing them sees fit to annex this as a condition of their production.[95] Papers produced on notice do not become evidence for the producer, unless the party calling for them inspects them.[96]

F. Determination of Question of Admissibility — 1. In General. The admissibility of documentary evidence as in the case of evidence in general is a question for the trial court to be determined from the circumstances of the particular case.[97] So it is the province of the court to decide any preliminary questions of fact, however intricate the solution, which may be necessary to enable it to determine the admissibility of the documents.[98] And its decision is conclusive unless it saves the question for revision, or counsel bring up the question on a bill of exceptions which contains a statement of the evidence.[99]

2. Sufficiency of Proof of Execution. Where the question is as to the sufficiency of the proof of the execution of a document, the rule has been laid down that the party offering it is only required to make out a prima facie case to render it admissible; that if the evidence wholly fails to show the execution of the instrument the court should reject it, but if there is a reasonable probability established that the paper is what it purports to be the question is one for the jury and the paper ought to go before them with instructions as to their duty.[1] ledger, not embraced in the notice, which is merely inspected by the adverse party, is not entitled to have such ledger considered as evidence in his favor. Harper v. Ely, 70 Ill. 581.

Effect of information as to paper derived from questions.—A book of accounts referred to in the answer but not offered in evidence is not made evidence because the complainant called for it, and asked, when it was produced, some questions about it which brought out its contents. The admission of the instrument on this preliminary proof of its execution does not relieve the party of the burden of proving to the jury its due and valid execution.[2]

G. Conclusiveness and Effect — 1. In General. A discussion of the conclusiveness of records and documents generally, both public and private,[3] as well as their weight and sufficiency,[4] will be found elsewhere in this title.

2. Effect of Introducing Part of Document. A book or document offered in evidence must as a general rule be considered in its entirety, the parts operating against the interest of the party offering it as well as the parts in his favor.[5] Accordingly as a general rule when a part of a document is introduced by one party the other party is entitled to put in the remainder.[6] But under this

Pa. Super. Ct. 325. Where certain transfers of land certificates are attacked as forgeries, the fact that the transferrer could not write his name and that the transfers are signed with his name is not conclusive evidence of forgery, since a man may direct another to sign his name, or hold the pen while another writes it for him. Ward v. Cameron, (Tex. Civ. App. 1903) 76 S. W. 240.

On the plea of non est factum it has been held that if there is any evidence, however slight, tending to prove the formal execution of the instrument, it is sufficient to entitle the instrument to go to the jury. Document excluded notwithstanding genuineness of signature.— In Aday v. Echols, 18 Ala. 353, 52 Am. Dec. 225, it was held that the supreme court would not undertake to say that a paper not before them purporting to be a receipt may not bear marks or evidence on its face conclusive to show that it is not a genuine receipt, although the signature attached to it may be in the handwriting of him whose receipt it purports to be.

Attack on instrument as forgery.— Under statute in Georgia it is held that, although a paper, upon testimony tending to prove its execution, has been admitted in evidence without objection — the same, however, not being the foundation of the action — the opposite party may nevertheless attack its genuineness and introduce evidence tending to show that the signature is a forgery. rule the using of part of a writing does not entitle the adverse party to read portions of a book, writing, or record which are irrelevant to the issue,[7] and in some of the authorities the rule is laid down that while in practice the instances may be very rare, where the entire writing would not be explanatory of the part read, yet if there are portions not explanatory the adverse party cannot put in the entire writing, although relevant, but only so much as tends to qualify, limit, or explain the part read by his adversary.[8] In addition to the foregoing rule allowing an adverse party to read the remainder of an instrument introduced in part by his opponent, the party producing the document in the first instance is sometimes required to read the entire instrument, on the ground that unless the whole is read there can be no certainty as to the real sense.[9]

3. Introduction For Particular Purpose. As a general rule, although a document is introduced to prove a particular fact, or for a particular purpose, it becomes substantive evidence in the cause and may be used by the adverse party for other purposes.[10] Nor, it is held, is a party entitled by an express qualification at the time of introducing a document to restrict its effect as evidence to a definite purpose, but he is compelled to offer it for what it is worth as evidence generally.[11]

XV. Best and Secondary Evidence.*

A. Definitions. Best evidence or primary evidence is that particular means of proof which is indicated by the nature of the fact under investigation as the most natural and satisfactory; the best evidence the nature of the case admits; such evidence as may be called for in the first instance, upon the principle that its non-production gives rise to a reasonable suspicion that if produced it would tend against the fact alleged.[1] "All evidence which shows upon its face that better remains behind, is secondary."[2]

B. "The Best Evidence Rule" — 1. Statement of Rule. The rule of evidence commonly known as "the best evidence rule" — one which from early times has been repeatedly enunciated by the courts — is that the highest degree of proof of which the case from its nature is susceptible must if accessible be produced; or in other words that no evidence shall be received which presupposes that the party who offers it can obtain better evidence.[3]

2. Limitations of Rule — a. In General. "The best evidence rule" does not demand that the strongest possible evidence of the matter in dispute shall be given, or that all evidence existing in the case shall be produced, but requires simply that no evidence shall be given from which, considering its own character and the nature of the transaction, an inference may arise that there is obtainable by the party other evidence more direct and conclusive and more nearly original in its source. While secondary evidence cannot be admitted in substitution for primary evidence, yet where the evidence offered is primary or on its face no indication that better remains behind is not secondary, but primary." 1 Greenleaf Ev. § 84 [approved in Jelks v. Barrett, 52 Miss. 315]. To the same effect see Shoenberger v. Hackman, 37 Pa. St. 87; Capera v. Mignon, (Tex. Civ. App. 1896) 33 S. W. 882. "The object of the rule of law which requires the production of the best evidence of which the facts sought to be established is susceptible, is the prevention of fraud; for, if a party is in possession of this evidence, and withholds it, and seeks to substitute inferior evidence in its place, the presumption naturally arises, that the better evidence is withheld for fraudulent purposes which its production would expose and defeat." Bagley v. McMickle, 9 Cal. 430, 446, per Field, J. Similar observations are to be found in many of the cases dealing with this principle of evidence. See particularly Mordecai v. Beal, 8 Port. (Ala.) 529; Fitzgerald v. Adams, 9 Ga. 471; U. S. v. Reyburn, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 352, 8 L. ed. 424 (opinion of Marshall, C. J.); Tayloe v. Riggs, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 591, 7 L. ed. 275.

original in its character, it cannot be excluded because there might have been introduced other primary evidence that is corroborative or stronger and more conclusive.[4] Under such circumstances it is the weight of the evidence, not its admissibility, that is involved.[5] In brief it is essential to the exclusion of evidence under the best evidence rule that the evidence not produced should be not only more direct, satisfactory, and conclusive than that offered, but should be also higher in grade or degree; and where there is no substitution of secondary for primary or original evidence the rule is not violated.[6]

b. Admissibility of Best Evidence Obtainable. Where the evidence offered, while not of the highest degree or of the most satisfactory kind, is otherwise competent and is the best which under the circumstances of the case can be produced, and the absence of evidence of a higher degree or of a more conclusive character is not attributable to the fault of the party seeking to prove the fact in controversy, then the requirements of the best evidence rule are complied with and the evidence is admissible.[7] This is the underlying principle upon which secondary evidence is admitted, where the primary evidence has been lost or destroyed, or is otherwise inaccessible to the party desiring to use it.[8] But the secondary evidence offered must of course be otherwise competent and admissible, notwithstanding that it is the best or only evidence of which the nature of the case is susceptible; and if for any reason it is incompetent it cannot be admitted.[9]

c. Prerequisites to Exclusion of Evidence. Before evidence can be excluded on the ground that it is secondary it must appear either from the nature of the fact to be proved or by evidence introduced by the objecting party that there is higher evidence in existence and of what that evidence consists;[10] that it is mate-

Ancient possession.— In a case in which it was sought to establish the possession of a party at a period one hundred and forty years before the trial, the statements of standard historians, recitals in public records and in statutes and legislative journals, the proceedings in courts of justice, their averments and results, and the depositions of witnesses taken in old suits, were admitted as evidence, because other testimony did not exist; but such evidence was admitted with great caution, and with due allowance for its importance and its capability of misleading, and restricted as to the historical part to facts of public interest of a general nature. different rules of evidence or are otherwise easily explainable.[15] Moreover not only is the best evidence rule confined to cases where the law has divided evidence into primary and secondary,[16] but there are no degrees of evidence, except where some document or other written instrument exists, the contents of which should be proved by an original rather than by other evidence which is open to the danger of inaccuracy.[17] Likewise the best evidence rule does not apply to proof of the nature, appearance, and condition of mere physical objects, but these

See EVIDENCE, 16 Cyc. 1123 et seq. This rule is applied in prosecutions for selling intoxicating liquor (see INTOXICATING LIQUORS) and in prosecutions for rape (see RAPE).

Testimony of a chemist who has analyzed blood and that of an observer who has merely recognized it belong to the same grade of evidence; and although one may be entitled to and may have greater weight with the jury the exclusion of either would be illegal. People v. Gonzalez, 35 N. Y. 39.

Weight of the evidence, however, is materially affected by the failure of a party to produce accessible witnesses whose knowledge of the facts is superior to that of those called to testify. Stevenson v. State, 83 Ga. 575, 10 S. E. 234; and cases cited in EVIDENCE, 16 Cyc. 1062 notes 4, 6.

15. Parliman v. Young, 2 Dak. 175, 4 N. W. 139, 711; Domschke v. Metropolitan El. R. Co., 148 N. Y. 337, 42 N. E. 804; Smith v. State, 13 Tex. App. 507, all are apparently contrary to the weight of authority as stated, but upon examination it appears that the testimony excluded in these cases might as well have been rejected as being hearsay. In Cheritree v. Roggen, 67 Barb. (N. Y.) 124, the true ground of rejection of the testimony was its irrelevancy. There are also cases which appear to lay down the proposition that the testimony of a third person as to the admissions and declarations of another who is himself a competent and accessible witness cannot be given in evidence, and in some of these cases there are to be found expressions of opinion which would imply that the holdings were based upon the best evidence rule. Parliman v. Young, 2 Dak. 175, 4 N. W. 139, 711; Woodward v. Paine, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 493; Wilson v. Boerem, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 286; Alexander v. Mahon, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 185; Coleman v. Southwick, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 45, 6 Am. Dec. 253. But the true basis of these decisions appears to be that the testimony rejected was hearsay, in that its object was to prove not the mere fact that such declarations or admissions were made, but to establish the truth of their subject-matter. That the broad proposition which some of these cases lay down is not law see Rice v. Bancroft, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 469; Badger v. Story, 16 N. H. 168; Featherman v. Miller, 45 Pa. St. 96.

Evidence destitute of probative force should be rejected for that reason, regardless of the best evidence rule. Rockwell v. Tunnicliff, 62 Barb. (N. Y.) 408. The cases of Hoadley v. Seward, 71 Conn. 640, 42 Atl. 997; Ward v. Kohn, 58 Fed 462, 7 C. C. A. 314; and Williams v. East India Co., 3 East 192, 6 Rev. Rep. 589, are all clearly referable to this principle, although the language used in the opinions shows that the best evidence rule was considered applicable to exclude the incompetent testimony.

facts may be proved by parol without offering the objects themselves in evidence or accounting for their absence,[18] and even where the objects themselves are present in court.[19] Hence, whatever the law may have been in early times, at the present day it can be said to be well settled that the best evidence rule applies exclusively to documentary evidence; and this is the view adopted by the more modern writers on the law of evidence.[20]

C. Parol Evidence Secondary to Written Evidence — 1. General Rule. Where written evidence of a fact exists, the writing as a general rule constitutes the best evidence of that fact; and where the writing is not produced parol evidence is inadmissible to prove its contents unless its absence is satisfactorily explained. In brief, parol evidence is not admissible in substitution for available written evidence, and the contents of an accessible writing cannot be proved by parol.[21] Where the fact to be proved is required by law to be evi-

2. Limitations of Rule. It cannot be laid down as a universal rule that where written evidence of a fact exists, all parol evidence of the same fact must be excluded;[23] and it has been said that there is perhaps no rule of evidence which allows of more exceptions than that which requires the best evidence to be adduced which the case admits of.[24] It is difficult, however, to formulate any rule which will accurately define in what cases it is not necessary to produce a writing as the best evidence, there being much conflict in the decisions; although this arises more perhaps from the application of the best evidence rule to differ-

For illustrations of this proposition so far as it involves applications of principles of evidence see infra, XV, C, 3. But for a discussion of the rule excluding parol evidence of contracts required by the statute of frauds to be evidenced by a writing, which is obviously not a mere rule of evidence, see, generally, Frauds, Statute of.

The "existence and design" of an instrument (as a bond) cannot be distinguished from its contents, and parol evidence is not admissible to prove either until the proper foundation has been laid. Smith v. Large, 1 Heisk. (Tenn.) 5.

Existence of instrument shown on cross-examination.— That the existence of a writing containing the facts to which the witness testifies comes out on cross-examination is no reason for dispensing with its production or refusing to strike out parol evidence of its contents. 24. Sally v. Capps, 1 Ala. 121, 122, per Collier, C. J., who said further: "This rule is founded upon a reasonable suspicion that the substitution of inferior for better evidence, arises from some sinister motive, and an apprehension that the best evidence, if produced, would alter the case to the prejudice of the party. It assumes that the transaction admits of better evidence; and though this may be true, yet if such better evidence is lost, or cannot be produced, proof of a secondary character may be adduced. So the rule being intended to guard against fraud, it ceases to operate where the presumption of fraud does not arise."

ing cases than from the rule itself.[25] Writings which constitute primary evidence have been divided by Mr. Greenleaf into three classes: (1) Instruments which the law requires to be in writing; (2) those contracts which the parties themselves have put in writing; and (3) all other writings the existence of which is disputed and which are material to the issue.[26] This classification has been expressly approved in numerous cases, and it has been held that writings which do not fall within one of the enumerated classes are not primary evidence.[27] In order that a writing may constitute primary evidence within the rule under discussion, it is required: (1) That the writing must have a legitimate tendency to prove the fact to be established;[28] (2) the writing must in reality be the more accurate, satisfactory, and conclusive medium of proof. Thus where the matter

Existence of unsigned memoranda containing statements as to the fact in controversy does not exclude parol evidence; and in fact the best or most direct evidence is the testimony of persons shown to be familiar with the fact. Illustrations.— In assumpsit for money promised by defendant to be paid plaintiff for a note of a third person sold and delivered by plaintiff to defendant, plaintiff need not produce, nor require defendant to produce, the note, but may prove its existence and the sale by parol evidence. Lamb v. Moberly, 3 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 179. Although parol evidence of the contents of a deed in the opposite party's possession is inadmissible without notice to produce the deed; yet where the fact in issue is not the contents of the deed but that the opposite party sets up a claim under such deed in fraud of his adversary and the existence and possession of such deed are not disputed, parol evidence is admissible to prove the fact. McIlvoy v. Kennedy, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 380. Where there is nothing in a deed of a peculiar character requiring its production as the best evidence of the matters to be proved, parol evidence of fraud in the sale may be given without producing it on notice to do so. to be proved is a substantive fact which exists independently of any writing, although evidenced thereby, and which can be as fully and satisfactorily established by parol as by the written evidence, then both classes of evidence are primary and independent and parol evidence may be admitted regardless of the writing.[29] Likewise where it appears that a witness has a distinct and independent recollection of the matters of which he testifies, his testimony is not rendered incompetent under the best evidence rule by reason of the fact that he made a contemporaneous written memorandum of those matters and does not produce it;[30] and under such circumstances the written memorandum is frequently held to be secondary evidence and inadmissible.[31] Moreover, where the writing or other documentary evidence of a fact is not as satisfactory or conclusive as the

Maps, surveys, and drawings, when constituting a part of a contract as explanatory of its terms, are not to be distinguished from other papers to which the rule applies, but are the best evidence of whatever they contain. Bryant v. Stilwell, 24 Pa. St. 314. Compare St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Eakins, 30 Iowa 279.

Various writings.— The rule stated in the text is applicable where the contract or a material part thereof is contained in written receipts (Davis v. Alston, 61 Ga. 225; Cowley v. Davidson, 13 Minn. 92), correspondence by letters (Lockhart v. Jones, 9 Rob. (La.) 381; Steele v. Etheridge, 15 Minn. 501; Irwin v. Irwin, 34 Pa. St. 525), bills of lading (St. Louis South Western R. Co. v. Cates, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 135, 38 S. (c) Fact of Contract as Distinct From Its Terms. Where the matter to be proved is simply the fact that a contract has been made, as distinct from its terms or provisions, the best evidence rule does not apply and parol evidence is admissible.[36]

(d) Terms of Contract Collateral to Issue. Where the terms of a written contract are collateral to the issue they may be proved by parol evidence without producing the writing or accounting for its absence.[37]

(e) Terms of Contract Must Be in Writing—(1) In General. In order to exclude parol evidence of the terms of a contract on the ground that there is written evidence thereof, it must appear that the parties or their authorized agents actually reduced the material terms of the contract to writing and that the writing was intended to embody their agreement, for otherwise the contract still rests in parol and may be proved by parol notwithstanding the existence of a writing relating thereto,[38] such as a memorandum made by an agent who acted for one of the parties only,[39] or whose agency was limited to bringing the parties together.[40] And where the immediate issue is whether there is or was a writing embodying the contract, it is erroneous to exclude parol evidence bearing on that issue upon the assumption that such a writing exists.[41]

(2) Consideration in Parol. An oral promise made by one party in consideration of the execution of a written instrument by the other may be shown by parol evidence.[42]

(3) Writing Made Subsequent to Execution or Performance. Parol evidence of a valid verbal contract is not excluded under the best evidence rule

Where matters contained in a certain written contract are sought to be proved in order to show an inducement for another written contract and to explain the latter, and the second contract defines and determines the relative rights of the parties inter se and is the main issue in the cause, the best evidence rule does not require the production of the first contract, but does require the production of the second contract. A verbal contract which has superseded a prior written contract is within the rule stated in the text. Pope v. Cheney, 68 Iowa 563, 27 N. W. 754; Pearson v. Wheeler, 55 N. H. 41.

Unsigned writing.— Where parties upon making a verbal contract reduce its terms to writing and agree that the writing is a correct statement of the terms of their contract, the memorandum thus made, although it is not signed, is the best evidence of the terms of the contract and parol evidence is not admissible. by the fact that the contract is reduced to writing after it has been executed or performed.[43]

(II) Bonds. The best evidence rule applies to exclude parol evidence of the contents of bonds unless their loss or destruction is shown or their absence otherwise satisfactorily explained.[44]

(III) Assignments. The best evidence rule applies to written assignments of contracts or other choses in action, and excludes parol evidence thereof unless the writing be produced or its absence explained, and the rule is applicable both to the assignment itself and to the original instrument which is assigned or which evidences the right transferred.[45] The same is true where it is sought to prove the assignment of a judgment.[46]

(IV) Letters. As a general rule a letter is the best evidence of its own contents, and unless the letter itself be produced or its absence explained parol evidence of its contents is not admissible.[47] This rule does not apply, however, where it is sought to prove the mere fact that a letter was written, and the fact is not in issue but only collaterally involved;[48] nor does it apply to proof of the contents of the letter where the contents are not in issue.[49]

(v) Telegrams. The best evidence of the contents of a telegram is the original message itself, and parol evidence of the contents of the message is admissible only where the original writing is produced or its absence explained.[50]

(vi) Notices. The contents of a notice cannot be proved by parol evidence, unless the document itself is produced or its absence satisfactorily explained,[51] except where the notice is collateral to the issue or is unimportant and not likely to have been preserved.[52] But the fact that notice was given or received may be proved by parol without accounting for the absence of the writing,[53] especially

As to what constitutes the original, that is, whether the original is the message delivered to the operator for transmission or the message delivered to the recipient after the transmission, see infra, XV, D, 2.

Operator instructed orally.— Where it is sought to show by parol evidence the contents of a message delivered to the telegraph operator, it cannot be objected that the evidence offered was not the best evidence, unless it be shown that the message delivered to the operator was in writing; and since as a matter of fact many telegrams are communicated orally by the sender to the operator the court cannot conclude without proof that telegrams given to an operator in any given case were in writing (Terre Haute, etc., R. Co. v. Stockwell, 118 Ind. 98, 20 N. E. 650. See also Banks v. Richardson, 47 N. C. 109), and the same rule would clearly be applicable where it is sought to prove by parol the contents of a message transmitted and delivered, if it appeared that the message transmitted was delivered orally to the recipient without being reduced to writing (Durkee v. Vermont Cent. R. Co., 29 Vt. 127, per Redfield, C. J.).

When parol evidence not secondary.—Where the telegraph message itself is not the foundation of the action, but the failure to transmit and deliver it within a reasonable time is the gist of the controversy, the fact that the message was delivered for transmission is a substantive fact necessary to be proved, and the best evidence rule does not apply, and parol evidence is not secondary but primary. The posting of notice of the appointment of an executor or administrator, as required by a statute, has been held to be provable by parol without producing the original notice or a copy thereof or accounting for its ab-

where the notice is not in issue but is merely collaterally involved.[54] Where a notice or notice and demand are required by law to be in writing and constitute an essential element of the right of action, so that without proof thereof the action cannot be maintained, the best evidence rule applies to make the writing primary evidence, and parol or other secondary evidence is not admissible until a proper foundation has been laid for its introduction.[55]

(VII) Accounts and Books of Account. As a general rule original written accounts and books of account are the best evidence of the matters they contain, and unless they are produced or their absence is explained their contents cannot be proved by parol.[56] But this rule does not apply to exclude parol evidence

Credits on plaintiff's books.— In an action on an open account, credits thereon are matters of defense and, as to the proof of these credits, plaintiff's books are not the highest evidence, but parol evidence is admissible. Hodges v. Tarrant, 31 S. C. 608, 9 S. E. 1038.

Existence or non-existence of entry.— It has been held that parol evidence is admissible to show that a certain fact does not appear in a book (Bessemer Land, etc., Co. v. Jenkins, 111 Ala. 135, 18 So. 565, 56 Am. St. Rep. 26. See also Burton v. Driggs, 20 Wall. (U. S.) 125, 22 L. ed. 299. Contra, McCall v. Moschowitz, 14 Daly (N. Y.) 16, 1 N. Y. given by witnesses whose testimony is founded on their personal knowledge independent of the books;[57] and where persons who can give such independent testimony are available and can readily be called as witnesses, or do in fact testify, the books of account are frequently excluded as being inferior evidence, especially where such persons made the book entries containing the facts to be proved.[58] books contain a certain entry (Ramsey v. Cortlandt Cattle Co., 6 Mont. 498, 13 Pac. 248). Thus a witness may be asked whether he found charges against a party in an account-book, not to show what the charges are, but to call the attention of the witness to them in order that they may be pointed out to the jury; and the witness may also be asked whether he found on the books any credits against the charges, where this question is asked for the purpose of obtaining a reply in the negative as a matter of convenience and to prevent the necessity of an examination of all the accounts. In an action against an administrator, it was held that a private account-book of the intestate was not admissible on the part of defendant to prove payments of money to third persons, they being competent witnesses. Faunce v. Gray, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 243.

(VIII) Wills. The best evidence of the provisions and contents of a will is the instrument itself, and unless it be produced or its absence satisfactorily explained, parol evidence of the matters it contains is not admissible.[59]

(IX) Bills of Lading. The contents of bills of lading cannot be proved by parol under the best evidence rule.[60] But the receipt of goods by a common carrier can be proved by parol without producing the bill of lading or accounting for its absence.[61]

(X) Rules of Railroad Companies. The written or printed orders, rules, or regulations of a railroad company concerning the management and running of its trains and the duties of its employees cannot be proved by parol evidence under the best evidence rule.[62] On the other hand the best evidence rule does not require that such regulations be produced or their absence explained, where the witness can testify to them of his own independent knowledge and recollection;[63] and of course parol evidence is not excluded where it does not appear that any written or printed rules exist, or where it is shown that the rules in question were not written or printed.[64] The fact that certain rules were not in force on a given date and had not then been put into the hands of the employees is susceptible of proof by the testimony of any one cognizant of the fact.[65]

courts have gone in applying the best evidence rule, it may be mentioned that under this rule parol evidence has been held inadmissible to prove the rating of a person on the books of a commercial agency,[67] a subscription for corporate stock,[68] written instructions given to an officer with respect to serving a writ,[69] the contents of an application for a life-insurance policy,[70] the contents of "time-checks" made out to employees of a railroad company,[71] or to show instructions contained in an illustrated catalogue as to the management of an engine.[72] Standard life-tables may be introduced in evidence to show the duration of a person's life, and the statement of a witness who has no knowledge of the subject, except such as he may have gained by consulting such tables, has been held inadmissible under the best evidence rule.[73] On the question whether the personal property of a decedent's estate is sufficient to pay the debts, it has been considered that the inventory is the best evidence; and testimony based on opinion is not admissible.[74] On the other hand, it has been held that the inventory and appraisement of the estate are not as high a grade of evidence as the testimony of the administrator or the appraisers,[75] while the fact that a witness' knowledge of the decedent's financial condition was derived in part from proceedings had in the probate court in settlement of the decedent's estate has been held not to render the witness' testimony inadmissible as being secondary evidence.[76]

(XIII) Particular Writings Not Within Rule. There are certain writings or inscriptions which cannot be properly classified as documents, and which the courts decline to hold as the best evidence of what they contain, but regard as simply matters of description or identity and primarily susceptible of proof by parol evidence. Among writings of this class are a direction on a parcel,[77] words written on the tag of a valise,[78] or on labels attached to jugs or decanters and indicating their contents;[79] and in a prosecution for unlawful assembly, where the purpose of the evidence is to show the character and intention of the assembly, parol evidence has been held admissible as primary evidence to prove an inscription on a banner or flag carried by the leaders of the crowd.[80] The log-book of a vessel is not proof per se of the facts therein stated except in certain cases specified by statute. Therefore it is proper to admit parol evidence to establish the time of sailing of a vessel and to show the course and termination of her voyage, without first proving that the log-book is missing or lost.[81]

b. To Particular Facts and Transactions — (I) Title to and Possession of Real Property — (A) Title — (1) In General. It is elementary law that where the title to real property is in issue, the deeds, patents, wills, mortgages, or other muniments of title constitute the best evidence, and parol evidence is not admissible to prove title unless their absence is satisfactorily explained.[82] This

R. A. 90, holding that a card attached to a pile of railroad ties and bearing the words "Arkansas and Texas Tie Company. rule excludes parol evidence of the contents of maps and surveys describing the boundaries of land when these matters become material to the issue,[83] although it has been held that the testimony of a witness who has knowledge of the lines, marks, and corners, and is thus competent to testify as to the boundaries of the property, is primary evidence and not secondary either to field-notes or certified copies of field-notes, or to the testimony of a person who was present and saw the survey originally made.[84]

(2) Where Title Not in Issue. Where the title to real property is not in issue but is only collaterally involved, or where it is necessary for a party to make only a prima facie showing of ownership, the best evidence rule is not applicable, and the fact of title or prima facie right of ownership may be established by parol evidence.[85] But although the title is only collaterally involved, yet, if it appears that the knowledge of the witness is derived from a written instrument affecting the title, the best evidence rule applies and the testimony is inadmissible unless the instrument is produced or its absence explained.[86]

(B) Possession. For the purpose of proving mere possession of real property, parol evidence is always admissible, notwithstanding the existence of written evidence such as deeds or other muniments of title.[87] The same is true as to a mere transfer of possession of land.[88] But it has been held that where it is sought to prove ownership or possession by the fact of the execution of a mortgage on the land, the best evidence rule applies and requires the production of the mortgage or an explanation of its absence.[89]

(II) Sales, Conveyances, and Mortgages of Real Property—(A) In General. Where it is sought to prove a sale or conveyance of real property, the general rule is that the written contract of sale or the deed of conveyance constitutes the best evidence of the transaction and the terms thereof; and if the instrument be not produced or its absence explained parol evidence of the transaction is not admissible.[90] The same rule applies to a mortgage of real

To show who was the grantor in a deed, the deed is the best evidence, and parol evidence of the fact is not admissible under the best evidence rule. Jacob Tome Institute v. Davis, 87 Md. 591, 41 Atl. 166.

Homestead.— Under Ga. Code (1882), §§ 3816, 3817, it is held that, in the trial of a case involving the setting apart and valuation of a homestead, the original homestead papers are primary evidence, and an exemplified or certified copy from the records of the clerk of the superior court is secondary. Pritchett v. Davis, 101 Ga. 236, 28 S. E. 666, 65 Am. St. Rep. 298; Brown v. Driggers, 60 Ga. 114.

Issue and assignment of certificate of entry.— That a certificate of entry of lands at the land-office had been issued and had been assigned by the purchaser cannot be shown by parol testimony, unless it is first shown that the certificate has been lost or destroyed or is in possession of the adverse party. Groover v. Coffee, 19 Fla. 61. But since an unlocated land certificate can be transferred by parol, it has been held that its transfer may be proved by circumstantial evidence without preliminary proof as to the loss, etc., of the writing by which it was transferred. Jones v. Reus, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 628, 24 S. W. 674.

Void deed.— The fact that a deed is be-estate,[91] and to a written instrument given by a grantee to a grantor showing that the grantee is to hold the land in trust.[92] Where the record of a conveyance or a properly authenticated copy of the record is made primary evidence by statute,[93] parol evidence of the contents of a recorded conveyance is not admissible if the statutory primary evidence can be produced.[94]

(B) Deed Collateral to Issue. The rule just stated[95] does not properly apply where the contents of the deed are not in issue or the object of the evidence is not to establish a conveyance under the deed, and the instrument is only collaterally involved. In such cases parol evidence is admissible.[96] This limitation to the rule is not, however, always observed.[97]

(C) Time of Execution and Delivery. The time when a deed was executed and delivered may be shown by parol evidence, since this is not proving the contents of the instrument.[98]

(D) Fact of Sale or Conveyance Apart From Its Terms. The question whether the best evidence rule applies to exclude parol evidence of the fact of a sale or conveyance of land, as distinct from the contents of the contract or deed, is a matter involved in some doubt. In some cases it has been held that the rule does not apply, and parol statements that a person has purchased land, has sold and conveyed it, or has executed a deed thereof have been held admissible without producing the written instrument or accounting for its absence.[99] In other cases, however, such evidence has been excluded under the best evidence rule.[1]

(III) Leases and Tenancy of Real Property. Where the relation of landlord and tenant exists by virtue of a written lease or other instrument, and the existence and terms of the tenancy lie at the foundation of the cause or are directly in issue, the written instrument constitutes the best evidence, and parol or other secondary evidence is excluded under the best evidence rule.[2] But in

tween third parties, and void because of incapacity of the grantor, has been held not to alter the rule that it must first be produced, or its non-production accounted for, before parol evidence is admissible. Smith v. Cox, 9 Oreg. 327.

other cases it is generally held that where the fact to be established is simply the existence of the tenancy as distinct from its terms, the best evidence rule does not apply, and, although there may be a lease or other written instrument defining the terms of the tenancy, the fact of the tenancy may be proved by parol without the necessity of producing the writing.[3] And it has been held that, although the terms of the tenancy may be directly in issue, parol admissions of the landlord or tenant or acts amounting to admissions are competent evidence against the party who made them, although they may involve the contents of the lease, and that to such admissions the best evidence rule is not applicable.[4]

(iv) Title to Personal Property. Where the title to personal property is in issue, and it appears that the title is evidenced by a bill of sale or other similar written instrument, it is generally held that the writing is the best evidence and parol evidence is not admissible unless the instrument is produced or its absence explained,[5] although there is authority to the contrary.[6] But where

(v) Sales and Mortgages of Personal Property— (a) In General. Where a sale of personal property is in issue and the transfer is evidenced by a bill of sale or similar written instrument, this instrument as a general rule constitutes the best evidence of the terms of the transaction and parol evidence is not admissible to prove matters contained in the writing unless the instrument itself is produced or its absence satisfactorily explained.[9] The same rule applies to a mortgage of personal property.[10]

(b) Fact and Time of Sale as Distinguished From Terms. In many well considered cases, however, a distinction has been made between proving the mere fact of the sale or its date and showing the terms of the transaction, it being held that where a writing is not essential to the passing of title, parol evidence is admissible to establish the fact of the sale and likewise the time when it

common law is, that parol evidence is admissible to prove the sale, delivery and ownership of personalty. was made, notwithstanding that the terms of the sale have been reduced to writing, although where it is sought to ascertain the terms of the sale the document containing them constitutes the best evidence.[11] But this distinction has not always been observed and the best evidence rule has been applied, not only in proving the terms of the sale, but also in proving the fact that the sale was made.[12]

(c) Writing Must Contain Terms of Sale. In any case, in order to exclude parol evidence of the sale on the ground that there is written evidence thereof, it must appear that the writing contains at least the material terms of the transaction.[13]

(VI) ARBITRATION AND AWARD. The best evidence of the contents of a written award is the instrument itself, and parol evidence of the contents thereof is not admissible unless the award be produced or its absence satisfactorily explained.[14] The same rule applies to a written submission to arbitration.[15] But while the award is the best evidence of its contents, it is not the best evidence of matters which were acted upon by the arbitrators and were considered by them in making up the award; in proving these matters parol evidence is not only admissible but necessary.[16] On the other hand, although the law does not require that matters submitted to arbitration be reduced to writing, yet when these are put in writing by the parties, the writing is the best evidence thereof and parol evidence is secondary.[17]

(VII) AGENCY. Where it appears that the appointment of an agent or an attorney in fact was made in writing, the best evidence rule applies to exclude parol evidence of the agent's or attorney's appointment or powers or of other matters contained in the writing unless the absence of the writing is explained.[18]

This is obviously true where the law expressly requires that the agent's authority must be evidenced by a writing, as in cases of authority to sell real estate.[19] But where the authority of the attorney or agent is not required by law to be in writing, and where it does not appear that written evidence thereof exists, the best evidence rule of course does not apply and parol evidence is admissible.[20] And although the agent was appointed by a written power of attorney or other writing, the fact of agency may be proved by parol where it is collateral to the issue,[21] or where, as to the particular matter in controversy, the agency was constituted independently of the power of attorney,[22] as where the agent had both written and oral authority, and it does not appear that he acted under the written authority.[23] Likewise, in a jurisdiction where the admissions of a party as to matters contained in a writing dispense with the production of the writing,[24] it has been held that the principal's admissions of the agency may be proved by parol without the necessity of producing the written authority of the agent.[25] And in an action between the principal and a third person who is a stranger to the instrument, the third person may establish by parol the fact of the agency.[26]

(VIII) PARTNERSHIP. If a partnership agreement exists in the form of written articles of copartnership, and it is sought to prove the terms of the agreement or other matters contained in the instrument, then ordinarily the instrument is best or primary evidence and the best evidence rule applies.[27] But in actions between partners and third persons, where it is sought to prove not the terms of the agreement but merely the existence of partnership,[28] or where the terms of the partnership are not in issue but are only collaterally involved,[29] the best evidence rule does not apply, and in the former case the existence of the partnership, and in the latter its terms and provisions, may be proved by parol evidence without the necessity of producing the written articles or explaining their absence. On the other hand it seems that as between the partners themselves the articles of copartnership constitute the best evidence even of the fact of partnership.[30]

(IX) BIRTH, MARRIAGE, AND DEATH.[31] Where the fact or date of a birth or death is in issue, the best evidence rule applies to require that the usual documentary or record evidence of these facts be produced or its absence explained before parol evidence is admissible.[32] The same rule has been said to apply to proof of marriage, the registry being considered the best evidence.[33] But the weight of authority appears to be that the mere fact that the law requires a record of marriages to be kept does not make the record higher evidence than the direct testimony of witnesses, and that such evidence is admissible without producing the record or accounting for its absence; the object of the record being to facilitate and preserve the evidence and not to limit or narrow the mode of proof.[34] Thus it has been held that in civil actions the production of record evidence of the marriage is unnecessary, parol evidence being admissible.[35] But where it does not appear that there is a legally authorized public register or record of births, marriages, or deaths in existence, and the existence of such a record will not be presumed but must be positively proved,[36] these facts and their dates may

Register of baptism.— Although the register of baptism is higher evidence of the age of a person than the testimony of witnesses, yet the existence of the former will not be presumed; it must be positively proved that be proved by parol evidence, provided it does not appear that there is higher evidence obtainable.[37] Hence under such circumstances heirship may be proved by parol evidence, such as reputation and other corroborating facts.[38] Likewise on an issue of infancy, parol evidence is admissible to prove the date of birth and the consequent fact of infancy, unless it be shown that there is accessible record or other competent documentary evidence thereof.[39] Although an entry in a family bible or other family memorandum or record as to the date of a person's birth or death may often be competent evidence,[40] yet such an entry does not belong to the grade of record evidence, and not only is it no better than the testimony of living witnesses cognizant of such date,[41] but where the parent or other relative who made the entry is alive and can testify, it is inferior or secondary to such person's testimony and therefore is not admissible as independent evidence.[42]

(x) Foreign Law—(A) Written or Statute Law. The general rule in the United States is that the best evidence rule applies to the written or statute laws[43] of a foreign state or country, and hence that such laws cannot be proved by parol evidence, unless express provision therefor is made by statute.[44] But it seems that the English courts permit such laws to be proved by competent parol evidence in the same manner as unwritten foreign laws are proved.[45] Where the written or statute laws of a foreign state or country have been properly proved, parol evidence otherwise competent is admissible to expound them,[46] but such evidence must be given by an expert or at least by a person shown to be familiar with the law to be proved.[47] Where, however, the statutes of a foreign state have been judicially construed, the decisions of the highest tribunal of that state are admissible as the best evidence,[48] although it seems that parol evidence is also admissible, for the reason that the judicial decisions construing the statutes constitute a part of the unwritten law.[49]

(B) Proof of Nature of Foreign Law—(1) General Rule. The court will not assume that a law of another state or country is statutory, and it is not necessary to prove that the law is not statutory before introducing parol evidence of it, especially if the foreign state is one where the common law prevails; but the necessity of establishing that the law is statutory rests with the party objecting to the evidence.[50]

(2) Whether Rate of Interest Is Statutory. Since, however, the right to recover interest on claims for money was not recognized at common law, but is solely the creature of statute, the better rule in the United States is that the rate of interest of another state cannot be proved by parol evidence unless the allowance of such interest be expressly proved as a usage having the force of law.[51] But there is authority to the contrary.[52]

(xi) Identity. Where the question to be solved by the evidence is merely the identity of a person, document, or thing, the best evidence rule does not apply, and parol evidence is admissible.[53]

(xii) Payment and Delivery—(a) Receipt Not Best Evidence—(1) General Rule. The best evidence rule does not apply to proof of payments of money[54] or delivery of merchandise[55] for which receipts are given, but the fact of payment or delivery may be proved by parol without producing the receipt or accounting for its absence; provided that the witness can testify to the fact positively and from his own independent knowledge not founded on his having seen the receipt itself.[56] And receipts have sometimes been held inadmissible as being inferior to the testimony of living witnesses.[57]

57. Receipts given for the payment of money between one of the parties to the ac-

(2) Qualification of Rule. A distinction is to be observed, however, between proof of the payment or the delivery of the property, and proof of the contents of the receipt. Thus while parol evidence of the payment or delivery is admissible without the production of the receipt, yet where it is sought to prove that a person executed and delivered a receipt for a certain amount, or to show by whom or the manner in which the receipt was signed, or to prove facts which it recites, parol evidence is not admissible without accounting for the absence of the receipt, for this would be proving the contents of the receipt by parol, and of its contents the instrument itself is the best evidence.[58]

(B) Payment of Commercial Paper. The payment of obligations that are evidenced by commercial paper may be proved by parol evidence, without producing the written instruments or accounting for their absence.[59]

(C) Payment by or in Commercial Paper. Where payment has been made by giving commercial paper, the paper need not be produced or its absence accounted for, but the fact of payment may be proved by parol.[60]

c. To Public Writings — (I) In General. The best evidence rule applies as well to writings of a public character as to private documents; and, where such writings are accessible, parol evidence of their contents is excluded. Among writings of this character may be mentioned the official registry of the arrival and departure of mails,[61] the books of the collector of internal revenue,[62] or of a county tax assessor,[63] the judgment of an inspector of buildings condemning a wall,[64] a plat, report, and legislative confirmation of the reservation of a city block by state commissioners,[65] the rulings and orders of the interstate commerce commission,[66] a public weigher's certificate,[67] government and railway reports as

(II) Newspapers. The best evidence of a notice, advertisement, or other matter contained in a newspaper is the newspaper itself, and unless the paper is produced or its absence explained parol evidence of its contents is not admissible.[70]

In an action by a printer for services in publishing advertisements and the like in a newspaper, it has been held unnecessary to produce the newspaper in order to show the performance of the printer's services. Enloe v. Hall, 1 Humphr. (Tenn.) 303, 310. In this case the court, per Green, J., said: "This case does not fall within the rule of evidence which the counsel seeks to apply. The work and labor for which this suit is brought was done upon the paper, and the work so done is no more required to be produced in open court than would any other work. As well might the tailor be required to produce the coat, or the watch-maker the watch, as evidence that the work had been performed." But in Richards v. Howard, 2 Nott & M. (S. C.) 474, also an action by a printer for services, it was held that the newspaper was the best evidence to show the performance of plaintiff's work.

But where it is sought to prove a negative, i. e., that during a certain time a certain person was not a justice of the peace, a certified copy of the record of commissions from the executive office is the best evidence, both in its character as record evidence and in the degree of its demonstrative power. or election is specifically alleged,[73] where it is sought to show the result of an election,[74] or where a statute expressly provides the manner in which evidence of the election or appointment shall be preserved of record.[75] And the best evidence rule applies to exclude parol evidence, where it is sought to prove the official character of a judicial officer of a foreign state or country.[76]

d. To Records and Judicial Documents — (I) General Rule. Where the fact to be proved is one which the law requires to appear of record, the general rule is that the record itself or a properly authenticated copy is the best evidence, and parol evidence cannot be received to prove the fact except where the record is lost or destroyed or is for other reasons inaccessible, and a properly authenticated copy cannot be obtained.[77]

(II) Limitations of Rule. In order to constitute a record the best evidence of any given fact, the record must be one which is authorized or required by law to be kept, and the fact must be one for the recording of which the law makes provision; otherwise, although the fact may exist in and be proved by a record, it is not necessarily thus to be proved, and other evidence of the fact is not secondary, but original.[78] The book or document must be one which the law declares to be a record or to be evidence of the fact it recites.[79] The record must also be one which would naturally show the fact sought to be proved.[80] Thus on questions of the identity of persons, records and registers are not the best evidence, for although the entries in them are received it is still necessary to identify the persons mentioned and this must be done by extrinsic evidence;[81] and the same is true where it is sought to show the identity of animals, certified copies of recorded brands and ear-marks being held not the only competent evidence, but parol evidence being equally admissible.[82] Where the fact to be established is one of general knowledge, or as it has been termed, "a public fact," it may be proved by the testimony of any person cognizant thereof notwithstanding that it appears of record.[83]

(III) Want of Record—(A) In General. Where the fact to be proved is not one as to the existence of which the law declares the record to be the sole and conclusive evidence, it is generally held that if the record does not contain evidence of the fact parol evidence otherwise competent is admissible,[84] especially when to exclude such evidence would prejudice the rights of innocent persons or enable a public officer to take advantage of his own default.[85] And a fortiori

(2) Applications of Rule — (a) In General. The rule just stated[95] applies where it is sought to establish by parol facts which properly appear upon the records of a court, or to prove by oral evidence the contents of documents properly constituting a part of such records, although such facts and documents are not the acts of the court itself.[96] In like manner the record itself, or a properly authenticated copy or transcript, is the best evidence, and parol evidence is excluded by this rule, where it is sought to prove facts properly appearing of record in courts of criminal jurisdiction,[97] or in the courts of sister states and for-

is true, although the parol evidence offered to prove such proceedings or judgments is the testimony of the justice himself.[7]

(c) Seizure and Sale of Property Under Process. As a general rule the seizure and sale of property under an order or decree or other judicial process cannot be proved by parol evidence, unless the loss or destruction of the record evidence of the authority under which the proceedings were had is shown, and a properly authenticated copy or transcript of the record cannot be obtained.[8]

(3) Limitations of Rule. (4) Want of Record. It is generally held that the proceedings, judgments, and decrees of courts of record can be proved only by the record itself or a properly authenticated copy thereof, and that, if no record of such matters has ever been made, the absence of the record cannot be supplied by parol or other extrinsic evidence; the rule whereby secondary evidence is admitted as to lost or destroyed records not being applicable.[12] In such cases the proper remedy is by legal proceedings to have the missing record properly made up, and for this purpose parol evidence is admissible to show the existence and occurrence of the proceedings, the record of which is to be supplied.[13] But the foregoing rules do not apply to the proof of facts and proceedings which are not required by law to be recorded;[14] nor do these rules apply in proving the proceedings of a tribunal which is not a court of record.[15]

Where a record of the acts and proceedings of a private corporation is required by law to be kept, such record constitutes the best evidence of its contents, and parol evidence is not admissible if the record is accessible.[16] The foregoing rule, however, is not of unlimited scope; independent facts of which a witness has personal knowledge may be proved by his testimony, notwithstanding that they may also appear upon the records of the corporation.[17] Thus the fact that a corporate meeting was held may be proved by parol without producing the record of what occurred at the meeting.[18] And where it is sought to show that a person is an officer of a corporation, unless it is necessary to prove that he is an officer de jure, the production of record evidence of his appointment or election is not necessary under the best evidence rule, but parol evidence is admissible to prove that he acted in his official capacity, and this proof is sufficient.[19]

(b) Want of Record. Unless it is expressly provided by statute, charter, or articles of corporation that the acts and proceedings of a private corporation can be proved only by its records, parol evidence is admissible to prove a fact or transaction which, although required to be recorded, has been omitted from the corporate records.[20] The omission of a corporation to make a record of its proceedings will not be allowed to prejudice the rights of an innocent third person who has in good faith relied upon an official assurance of its corporate acts.[21] A fortiori parol evidence is admissible where the fact in question is one not required by law to be recorded,[22] or the matter to be proved is of such a character that it would not be shown by the record,[23] or where the association of individuals whose proceedings are sought to be proved is not a corporation or official body required by law to keep a record, and in such a case it is immaterial whether any written evidence has been preserved or not.[24]

parol evidence is not admissible to prove such acts or proceedings unless the absence of the record is satisfactorily explained.[25] But this rule does not apply to exclude parol evidence of an independent fact which is not necessarily a matter of record and which is not shown by the witness' testimony to be a matter of record; in such a case parol evidence founded on the witness' own knowledge is not secondary but original evidence.[26] Moreover the right of a third person dealing in good faith with a municipal corporation or board cannot be prejudiced by a failure of the corporation or board to keep a proper record of its proceedings.[27]

Reference by witness when testifying.— "Yet, while this rule [the best evidence rule] is fully conceded, it is also true that a witness, when testifying, may, for the purpose of making his statements intelligible, and giving coherence to such of them as are unquestionably admissible in evidence, properly speak of the execution of deeds, the giving of receipts, the writing of a letter, and the like, without producing the instrument or writing referred to. To hold otherwise would cer-

the contents of a writing are not directly in issue, facts contained in the writing may be proved by parol evidence without the necessity of producing the writing or explaining its absence.[33] Likewise, where the existence or contents of a judicial record is only incidentally or collaterally involved, the best evidence rule does not require that the record be produced or its absence explained before parol evidence can be admitted.[34] Nor can parol evidence be excluded on the ground that tainly be productive of great inconvenience, and in some cases would defeat the ends of justice. References to written instruments by a witness, for the purpose stated, are to be regarded as but mere inducement to the more material parts of his testimony." Massey v. Farmers' Nat. (Va.) 11], it was said by Parke, B.: "The reason why such parol statements are admissible, without notice to produce, or accounting for the absence of the written instrument, is, that they are not open to the same objection which belongs to parol evidence from other sources, where the written evidence might have been produced; for such evidence is excluded from the presumption of its untruth, arising from the very nature of the case, where better evidence is withheld; whereas what a party himself admits to be true, may reasonably be presumed to be so. The weight and value of such testimony is quite another question."

Where a debtor makes a written calculation, thereby ascertaining the balance due by him, and verbally admits his indebtedness for such amount, his admission may be proved without the production of the written calculation. Hodges v. Tarrant, 31 S. C. 608, 9 S. E. 1038.

admissions of a party as to the existence and contents of an original document on file as a public record in a foreign country, where an alleged copy of the document is shown to him and he acknowledges its correctness.[40]

g. Proving Results of Voluminous Writings and Records. Where the results of voluminous facts contained in writings, or of the examination of many books and papers or records, are to be proved, and the necessary examination of this documentary evidence cannot be conveniently or satisfactorily made in court, it may be made by an expert accountant or other competent person and the results thereof may be proved by him, if the books, papers, or records themselves are properly in evidence, or their absence satisfactorily explained.[41] It seems, how-

This evidence was considered not as an ordinary admission, but as an admission so formal and so accredited as to amount to an admission of law intended to dispense with primary evidence.

Admission in testimony.— But an admission, made by a party when in court and under examination, that a paper produced was a letter-press copy of an agreement he had signed and was a true copy of the original, was held to bind the party as an admission against interest and to make the evidence primary in its nature. Haas v. Storner, 21 Misc. (N. Y.) 661, 47 N. Y. Suppl. 1100. To the same effect see Barnett v. Wilson, 132 Ala. 375, 31 So. 521.

To contradict document.— Where this rule obtains, parol evidence of such admissions cannot of course be received to contradict positive documentary evidence. Clark v. Slidell, 5 Rob. (La.) 330.

Word "copy" in a deposition.— While the word "copy," as generally used, presumes an original from which it is taken, this is not always true; and when this word is used in a deposition with reference to a writing it is a question of fact whether the writing is an original or a copy. Catron v. German Ins. Co., 67 Mo. App. 544, where one of two duplicate originals was marked "copy"; Banks v. Richardson, 47 N. C. 109, where the word was used with reference to a telegram.

If a copy is admitted and it afterward appears that the original is in the hands of plaintiff, the copy should be withdrawn. Gimbel v. Hufford, 46 Ind. 125. It is proper, however, for a witness whose deposition is taken to identify a written instrument and attach a copy thereof to the deposition; this part of the deposition should not be suppressed, for the absence of the original instrument may be accounted for at the trial and the copy thus be rendered admissible. Gimbel v. Hufford, 46 Ind. 125. See also Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. McWhinney, 36 Ind. 436. See, generally, Depositions.

A memorandum is inadmissible, even if it be a copy made by the witness himself from his own original memoranda. Green v. Caulk, 16 Md. 556.

Signature to advertisement published in newspaper.— Where plaintiff offered in evidence an advertisement published in a newspaper and purporting to have been signed by defendant and others, and defendant denied that he signed any advertisement it was held that the original paper signed by defendant must be produced or its absence satisfactorily explained before the advertisement published in the newspaper was admissible. McConachy v. Centre, etc., Turnpike Co., 1 Penr. & W. (Pa.) 426.

Admissions.— It has been held that the admission by the adverse party that a letter corresponded with a written contract which had been entered into by the parties will not authorize the letter to be read in evidence, to prove the contract, without accounting satisfactorily for the omission to produce the written instrument, of which the letter is at best only a copy. Fletcher v. Weisman, 1 Ala. 602. On the other hand it has been held that, in an action on an account where a copy of the book of original entries is admitted to be correct, the copy is admissible in evidence without producing the book; the copy by virtue of the admission becoming competent evidence. Tax roll secondary to original assessment.— To show that a person was the owner of certain property, it was held error to admit the tax rolls to show that he had had the property assessed in his own name unless it was first shown that the original as signed and sworn to by him could not be produced. Record of instrument.— Where a statute expressly makes the record of an instrument prima facie evidence of the facts therein stated, such record, when offered in evidence, is not subject to the objection that it is secondary. Grand Forks First M. E. Church v. Fadden, 8 N. D. 162, 77 N. W. 615.

Where a "profile" of work was referred to by parties when making a contract for grading a railroad, a profile proved by a witness to be made from the same data and measure-bonds,[47] bank-bills,[48] negotiable instruments,[49] chattel mortgages,[50] assignments,[51] accounts and books of account,[52] letters, including letter-press copies,[53] telements cannot be admitted, unless the absence of the original is first accounted for. Currier v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 31 N. H. 209.

Where a copy of a prior writing is attached to and incorporated in a written contract, it is admissible as primary evidence without accounting for the absence of the original. Comer v. Comer, 120 Ill. 420, 11 N. E. 848. See also Hauberger v. Root, 6 Watts & S. (Pa.) 431.

A blank for a contract of sale on instalments, although of the kind used in the seller's business, is inadmissible at least without showing that the original contract actually made, or a certified copy of the record of the same, is not obtainable. Record as primary evidence.—Where a statute (Ind. Rev. St. (1843) p. 518) required that a sworn account be made of administrators' sales and that the account be filed with the clerk of the probate court, to be preserved as evidence, it was held that the account thus made and filed was admissible as primary evidence to prove a sale made by an administrator, without producing the original memorandum from which the account was made or accounting for its absence. But the dots and dashes made on paper at the telegraph office cannot constitute the original of a message where the words of the message are put in writing by the operator. Banks v. Richardson, 47 N. C. 109.

Message given orally for transmission.— In order to exclude as a copy the message transmitted and delivered, it must appear that the message given for transmission was in writing, for there can be no copy of an oral communication. Banks v. Richardson, 47 N. C. 109.

What is original telegram.— The question whether a message delivered by a person to a telegraph company for transmission, or the telegram delivered by the company to the person to whom it is sent, is the original and primary evidence of the contents of the message depends upon the further question whether the telegraph company is the agent of the sender, or of the recipient of the message. The rule is that in the absence of evidence of mistake in transmission, if the person sending the message takes the initiative so that the telegraph company is to be regarded as his agent, the message actually delivered at the end of the line is the original and primary evidence, but if the person to whom the message is sent takes the risk of its transmission, or is the employer of the telegraph company, the message delivered to the operator is the original.

In an action against a telegraph company to recover damages or a statutory penalty for failure to transmit and deliver a message with due diligence, the issue being not as to the contents of the telegram but as to the failure or delay in transmission and delivery, the message actually delivered by the company is admissible in evidence without producing or explaining the absence of the message delivered by the sender to the company. This case was disapproved in Reliance Lumber Co. v. Western Union Tel. Co., 58 Tex. 394, 44 Am. Rep. 620. But it has been held that if in such an action the contents of the telegram sent are material, the loss by plaintiff of the telegram received will not lay the foundation for introducing parol evidence of its contents without accounting by notice to produce, or otherwise, for the non-production of the telegram written and delivered by the sender for transmission. To prove fact of sale.— The rule has been applied even though the copy of the deed was offered merely to prove the fact of the sale and not as evidence of title in the grantee, where it appeared that the original was in the control of the person offering the copy. Sims v. Gray, 66 Mo. 613.

A judicial record showing an entry by the prothonotary that the sheriff had acknowledged a certain deed amounts to nothing more than an abstract of the deed. It is not even a copy, and is secondary evidence which, where the title is in issue, cannot be introduced in evidence unless the original deed is produced or its absence satisfactorily explained. Lodge v. Berrier, 16 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 297.

Boundaries of land conveyed.— Where a tract of land is conveyed with a reservation of a certain parcel thereof which has been previously conveyed by deed by the grantor to a third person, this prior deed is the best evidence of its contents; and hence the boundaries of the reserved tract so conveyed cannot be proved by a description in a deed of later date from the same grantor to the same grantee, even if given in lieu of the prior deed. Poorman v. Miller, 44 Cal. 269.

Record of establishment of lost deed.— Under Ga. Civ. Code (§ 3611) declaring that if an original deed be lost a copy may be established by the superior court of the county where the land lies, and when so established shall have all the effect of the original, it is held that, where a deed has been established by regular proceedings in court, a certified copy of the proceedings taken from the minutes and records of the court is admissible as original evidence in any controversy where the original deed would be admissible. Blue prints of drawings by architect.— In an action by an architect for professional services in erecting a building, if the plans which he actually submitted were blue prints and the contract simply called for "plans," it is immaterial whether the plans submitted were the original drawings or merely facsimile copies thereof; and an objection that the blue prints are secondary evidence is untenable. Lincoln School Dist. v. Fiske, 61 Nebr. 3, 84 N. W. 401.

delivers to another a copy of a paper, but keeps the original, the original cannot be read in evidence to affect with knowledge of its contents the person to whom the copy is delivered unless notice to produce the copy is given.[68]

3. Photographs. Photographs of written instruments can be used only as secondary evidence. They are but copies which may or may not be facsimiles of their originals; and whether a photographic copy of a writing when offered in evidence is a mathematically exact reproduction of its original is a question of fact.[69]

4. Copy of a Copy. It is generally held that a copy of a copy of an original written instrument or other writing is not admissible in evidence unless the absence of both the original and the copy is satisfactorily explained.[70] But the contrary has been held upon the ground that there are no degrees in secondary evidence;[71] and where the original is lost or destroyed and it satisfactorily appears that the writing introduced as secondary evidence is in fact a correct copy of the original, it has been held admissible notwithstanding that it was made from a copy which is not produced and the absence of which is not explained.[72]

5. Duplicate Originals and Counterparts. Where an original instrument or writing is made or executed in duplicate or in a greater number of counterparts, each duplicate or counterpart is primary evidence and is admissible without the necessity of producing the other or accounting for its absence.[73] But the docu-

Recorded and unrecorded deeds.— Where it appears that a recorded deed has been lost and that the record thereof has been destroyed by fire, the testimony of a witness who has read the deed as it appeared on the records is admissible to prove the existence of the contents of the instrument, and notice of the introduction of such testimony is not prerequisite as it would be under a statute providing for such notice where a certified copy of the record is desired to be introduced. Hobbs v. Beard, 43 S. C. 370, 21 S. E. 305. Although a statute requires that a deed must be recorded before it is admissible in evidence, these provisions do not apply to exclude secondary evidence of unrecorded deeds that have been lost or destroyed. Such a state of the law would be a direct invitation to unscrupulous men to tamper with the public records."

is generally held, however, that the remedies provided by these statutes do not preclude the common-law mode of proof, but merely furnish an additional remedy.[5]

c. Destruction by Party Offering Secondary Evidence — (i) In General. It is not, however, a matter of course to admit secondary evidence of the contents of a writing upon proof of its destruction, but the cause or motive of the destruction is the controlling fact which determines the admissibility of such evidence.[6] Where it appears that a party seeking to establish a fact has voluntarily destroyed a writing constituting or containing the best evidence of that fact, he cannot introduce secondary evidence thereof, especially where the suit is in his own behalf and is founded upon the writing, without first introducing evidence to explain his destruction of the writing and to repel all inference of fraudulent design arising therefrom.[7] If, however, it appears that the destruction was done through acci-

For secondary evidence of lost or destroyed depositions see DEPOSITIONS, 13 Cyc. 978, 979.

Whether the lost record is of ancient or recent date is immaterial in the application of this rule. Davies v. Pettit, 11 Ark. 349; Isley v. Boone, 109 N. C. 555, 13 S. E. 795; Mobley v. Watts, 98 N. C. 284, 3 S. E. 284.

Copies of pleadings not marked "filed."— If pleadings in another case would be admissible in evidence, but are lost, copies thereof upon which the case was tried and which are found in the files of the case, although not marked "filed," are competent evidence. Ponder v. Cheeves, 104 Ala. 307, 16 So. 145.

Minutes entered upon the docket by a clerk of a court constitute the record of such court until the full record is made up from the minutes; and if in the meantime the docket be lost, it is to be deemed a loss of the record, and secondary evidence of its contents is admissible. Pruden v. Alden, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 184, 34 Am. Dec. 51. See also Dayrell v. Bridge, 2 Str. 1264; Evans v. Thomas, 2 Str. 833.

Records of naturalization are in nowise different from other records. When lost or destroyed, secondary evidence of their contents may be given, the same as of the contents of any other record. Headman v. Rose, 63 Ga. 458; Kreitz v. Behrensmeyer, 125 Ill. 141, 17 N. E. 232, 8 Am. St. Rep. 349. See also People v. Smith, 10 Misc. (N. Y.) 100, 31 N. Y. Suppl. 199. See also ALIENS, 2 Cyc. 115, 116.

Judgment, execution, and sheriff's sale.— In an action for the recovery of real estate where defendant claims under an execution sale, the issuance of the execution may, where the execution is lost or destroyed, be proved by an entry in a register made by the attorney who entered up the judgment and who has since died. Leland v. Cameron, 31 N. Y. 115. Likewise, although the return to an execution is ordinarily the best evidence of a levy and sale under it, yet when the execution has not been returned to the clerk's office, and it, with any return on it, has been destroyed or lost, and it is proved otherwise than from recital in the sheriff's deed that there was a judgment and execution, the recital in such deed is prima facie evidence of the levy and sale, they being official acts of the sheriff, even although the sale was not a recent one. Rollins v. Henry, 78 N. C. 342 [distinguishing Hardin v. Cheek, 48 N. C. 135, 64 Am. Dec. 600]. Compare Baskin v. Seechrist, 6 Pa. St. 154, 162.

When higher evidence exists.— In an early New York case it was held that to support an objection to the competency of a witness because he had been convicted of felony, parol evidence of the conviction was inadmissible, although it be proved that the clerk's office of the county had been burnt down, and the record probably destroyed, for there was higher evidence of the fact capable of being produced, that is, the transcript delivered into the court of exchequer by the district attorney, which must be presumed to have been delivered, such being his duty under a statute. dent or mistake, or upon an erroneous impression of its effect, or under other circumstances free from a suspicion of intended fraud, there is no impediment to his introducing secondary evidence.[8] So if the writing was destroyed in the usual course of business, or when it was not likely to be used as evidence in the party's favor, and had no value, the destruction cannot be held fraudulent and secondary evidence is admissible.[9]

(II) Voluntary Destruction Not Presumed. It will not be presumed that a party has voluntarily destroyed an instrument which he was interested in preserving, where there is no evidence on that point except that the instrument cannot be found. In such a case the only inference is that the instrument is lost.[10]

d. Destruction by Adverse Party. Where the writing constituting or containing the best evidence of a fact has been voluntarily destroyed by the party against whom the fact is sought to be proved, secondary evidence is admissible.[11] And acts of such party whereby the writing is effectually placed beyond the power

Voluntary destruction, without explanation, is held such presumptive evidence of fraudulent design as to preclude all secondary evidence. Bagley v. McMickle, 9 Cal. 430.

Destruction of a writing through mere negligence, however, appears not to be within the rule stated in the text and to afford no grounds for the exclusion of the party's parol evidence. Rodgers v. Crook, 97 Ala. 722, 12 So. 108.

In actions for libel the rule stated in the text is especially applicable, for the language used and the sense and meaning which properly attach to it constitute the gist of the action. Joannes v. Bennett, 5 Allen (Mass.) 169, 81 Am. Dec. 738. And see, generally, LIBEL AND SLANDER.

and control both of the other party and the court are equivalent to destruction and authorize the admission of secondary evidence.[12]

2. Inaccessibility of Primary Evidence — a. In General. In order to introduce secondary evidence of a writing it is not necessary to show that the original has been lost or destroyed, but it is sufficient to show that it is deposited in a place from which it cannot be removed for the purpose of being produced in court.[13] But the mere prospect that an original writing will be required in another suit or the fact that it is somewhat inconvenient for the party to produce it is not a sufficient ground for the introduction of secondary evidence.[14]

b. Primary Evidence in Custody of Another Court. Where an original instrument is in the possession of another court of the same state, secondary evidence of its contents is admissible if it appears that the instrument cannot be procured.[15] On the other hand the mere fact that an instrument is on file in another court in the same state or jurisdiction does not dispense with the necessity of reasonable efforts to obtain it; and if it does not appear that the instrument cannot with reasonable diligence be produced, secondary evidence is not admissible.[16] A fortiori secondary evidence cannot be introduced where the original instrument is on file in the same court, and permission of the court can readily be obtained to remove the instrument and introduce it in evidence.[17]

c. Primary Evidence Held by Third Person — (i) In General. It is undoubtedly true as a general rule that where a party desires to use in evidence an instrument in writing which is in the possession of a third person, he must either have it produced under a subpœna duces tecum or show that it is beyond his power to produce it in this or some other way, before he will be allowed to introduce secondary evidence of its contents.[18]

(II) Party Without Possession or Right to Possession of Primary Evidence — (A) In General. There is, however, a line of authorities holding that where a party desiring to prove facts evidenced by written instruments shows that the documents are not in his possession or control, and it appears from the circumstances of the case and the nature of the documents themselves that he is not entitled to their custody, he may introduce secondary evidence of their contents without further proof of his inability to procure the originals.[19]

(B) Establishing Conveyances in Chain of Title. The rule just stated,[20] although frequently embodied in statutes providing for the admission of copies, records, or transcripts of records, is applied in many jurisdictions in proving conveyances and mortgages of land, especially in establishing chains of title. In cases of this character it is held that where a person desiring to prove a deed or mortgage is not the grantee or mortgagee or the person who is entitled to the custody of the instrument, and it is shown that the instrument is not in his possession or control, he may introduce secondary evidence without further proof of his inability to produce the original instrument.[21]

Facts appearing on the trial.— If secondary evidence is introduced by plaintiff upon a prima facie showing of loss of the original document, and it then appears by defendant's testimony that the original is in the possession of a third person, plaintiff should move the court for leave to summon the third person to produce the writing, and if this course is not pursued plaintiff cannot object to defendant's use of secondary evidence to rebut the same kind of evidence adduced by himself. Dyer v. Fredericks, 63 Me. 173.

In Louisiana, it has been held that, where the instrument is in the possession of a third person whose interest it is to conceal it, this amounts to a proof of loss by an "overpowering force" under Civ. Code, p. 312, art. 247, and authorizes the introduction of secondary evidence without the necessity of serving upon such third person a subpœna duces tecum. Stockdale v. Escaut, 4 Mart. 564.

d. Primary Evidence Out of Jurisdiction — (I) In General. Where primary evidence of the fact to be proved is out of the jurisdiction of the court in which the evidence is desired to be used, as where books, instruments, documents, or other writings constituting or containing the primary evidence are in possession of a stranger who is beyond the jurisdiction of the court and the reach of its process, the question of the admissibility of secondary evidence has given rise to some conflict in the authorities. Rule restated.— In Burton v. Driggs, 20 Wall. (U. S.) 125, 134, 22 L. ed. 299, it was said: "It is well settled that, if books or papers necessary as evidence in a court in one State be in the possession of a person living in another State, secondary evidence, without further showing, may be given to prove the contents of such papers, and notice to produce them is unnecessary." This statement has been approved in many of the cases above cited in this note.

Party or his attorney in possession.— The rule stated in the text has been held not to apply where the party desiring to introduce the secondary evidence (Alabama Great Southern R. Co. v. Mt. Vernon Co., 84 Ala. 173, 4 So. 356) or his attorney (King v. Scheuer, 105 Ala. 558, 16 So. 923) had the custody of the document and resided out of the jurisdiction, and no attempt was made to obtain the document.

Non-residence of the grantor, in a suit to which the grantee is a party, does not of itself authorize the introduction of secondary evidence to prove title in the grantee under the deed; the presumption being that the deed is in the possession of the grantee, he must be notified to produce it, or its loss or non-existence must be established, before resort can be had to inferior evidence. Hussey v. Roquemore, 27 Ala. 281.

Presumption as to letters.— The fact that a letter was written to a person residing in another state or country raises a presumption that it is beyond the jurisdiction of the court, and its contents may be proven by secondary evidence without proving its actual loss or destruction. even in jurisdictions where the latter rule obtains, secondary evidence becomes admissible when the court is satisfied that the party desiring to prove the fact has made sufficiently diligent efforts to procure the primary evidence, but without success, or when it appears that the evidence is not subject to his control and that efforts to obtain it would be fruitless.[26] It has been so held where the person in possession of the document resided in another county than that in which the trial was had.[27]

(II) Primary Evidence in Custody of Foreign Court. Where an original written instrument is in the custody of the court of another state or country, or is attached to, or forms a part of the record of that court and cannot be removed therefrom, secondary evidence of its contents is admissible.[28] But it deposition of the custodian of the document should be obtained.

Where adverse party disclaims knowledge of instrument.— Secondary evidence of the contents of a written instrument may be given, when the party offering it is not entitled to the custody of the original, and the opposite party, to whose custody it rightfully belongs, upon being notified to produce it, disclaims all knowledge of it. Jones v. Jones, 38 Cal. 584. See also Benjamin v. Ellinger, 80 Ky. 472; Augur Steel Axle, etc., Co. v. Whittier, 117 Mass. 451; Dunbar v. U. S., 156 U. S. 185, 15 S. Ct. 325, 39 L. ed. 390. Compare Sun Ins. Co. v. Earle, 29 Mich. 406.

Letter written to adverse party.— Where a letter, directed to the adverse party at his usual address, has been mailed, postage prepaid, and notice has been given to that party to produce the original letter, which he has failed to do, a letter-press copy, or other copy of the letter, when shown to be correct, is admissible to prove the contents of the original. McDowell v. Ætna Ins. Co., 164 Mass. 444, 41 N. E. 665; Augur Steel Axle, etc., Co. v. Whittier, 117 Mass. 451; Sugar Pine Lumber Co. v. Garrett, 28 Oreg. 168, 42 Pac. 129. But see Freeman v. Morey, 45 Me. 50, 71 Am. Dec. 527. As to presumption of receipt of letters see EVIDENCE, 16 Cyc. 1065 et seq.

Failure of executors to produce original will.— Where executors under a will which revoked all former wills have failed on notice given to produce the original of a former will, it may be proved by production of the original draft by the attorney who drew the will. Keagle v. Pessell, 91 Mich. 618, 52 N. W. 58.

Mortgage to secure note.— Where a note secured by a mortgage is indorsed to a third person, who brings a suit thereon, the presumption is that the mortgage follows the note; and after notice to the holder of the note to produce the mortgage upon the trial, and its non-production, defendant may introduce secondary evidence of its contents. Downer v. Button, 26 N. H. 338.

In an action against a sheriff, where it is shown that an execution has been returned to plaintiff or his agent who fails to produce it on notice, defendant may give parol evidence of the regularity of his proceedings. Sias v. Badger, 6 N. H. 393.

An agreement between opposing counsel in open court that defendant would without notice produce before the trial all documents in his possession or under his control, relating to the case, is equivalent to notice to produce them; and upon defendant's failure to comply with this agreement, secondary evidence of such documents is admissible. Duringer v. Moschino, 93 Ind. 495.

Failure to produce records of corporation.— Under a statute providing that the acts and proceedings of corporations might be proved by sworn copies of the records thereof, it was held that the failure of a corporation to produce the original records on notice was not sufficient to authorize the opposite party to introduce parol evidence of their contents. Madison, etc., R. Co. v. Whitesel, 11 Ind. 55.

What facts may be proved.— A notice to produce papers for any purpose is sufficient to admit secondary evidence of any fact which would be shown by the papers upon their production, as for instance payment indorsed on a mortgage. Howell v. Huyck, 2 Abb. Dec. (N. Y.) 423, 4 Transcr. App. (N. Y.) 202.

Where the adverse party has produced the original instrument in compliance with a notice to do so, secondary evidence of its contents cannot of course be introduced. Dean v. Carnahan, 7 Mart. N. S. (La.) 258; Carr v. Gale, 5 Fed. Cas. No. 2,435, 3 Woodb. & M. 38. But where secondary evidence has been introduced on failure to comply with the notice, the fact that the original evidence is afterward produced does not render erroneous the previous admission of the secondary evidence. Phenix Ins. Co. v. Jacobs, 23 Ind. App. 509, 55 N. E. 778; Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Leatherwood, 29 Tex. Civ. App. 507, 69 S. W. 119.

record, if it appears that he is the real party in interest.[35] And a party who has failed to produce the primary evidence, and through whose fault the necessity has arisen for resorting to secondary evidence cannot complain that the latter is not of a wholly satisfactory character.[36] It makes no difference that the instrument is in the actual possession of some third person if it is still within the control of the adverse party, but under such circumstances the latter is held to his obligation to produce the writing on notice, and upon his failure to do so secondary evidence is admissible.[37] And the same rule applies where the document is in the custody of another court from which it may be withdrawn,[38] or is out of the jurisdiction.[39] On the other hand, if the document is held by a third person and is not in the adverse party's control, the notice is inoperative, and the party's failure to produce the document will not warrant the admission of secondary evidence, but the party seeking to introduce the evidence must summon the third person or show that with due diligence the document cannot be obtained.[40]

Statutes prescribing the manner in which courts may compel the production of books and papers, by a party to an action, and imposing a penalty for failure to comply with the court's orders, do not preclude the ordinary remedy under a notice to produce. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Elliott, 2 Indian Terr. 407, 51 S. W. 1067 [affirmed in 102 Fed. 96, 42 C. C. A. 188].

Notice to executor of deceased custodian.— Where a bill presented to a drawee for acceptance was at his request left with him, a notice to his executors after his death to produce it on the trial of an action against them for the refusal of their testator to accept will authorize the admission of parol evidence of its contents, although they deny it ever came to their possession. Exch. 119; Parry v. May, 1 M. & Rob. 279, 280, where Littledale, J., said: "In order to let in secondary evidence the instrument need not be in the actual possession of the party; it is enough if it is in his power, which it would be, if in the hands of a party in whom it would be wrongful not to give up possession to him. But he must have such a right to it, as would entitle him not merely to inspect but to retain; that is not so here, because even if the document were given to the defendant for the purpose of this cause,

b. Qualified, Conditional, or Restricted Production. Where books or papers are produced in court pursuant to a notice, the party producing them has no right to impose any conditions as to their use in evidence, but the requirement is absolute that they shall be brought into court for the benefit of the adverse party and shall be offered without reserve; it is for the adverse party, after thus obtaining possession of them, to decide whether it is expedient to use them. Hence if the party producing the books or papers endeavors to restrict their use in evidence, his adversary is entitled to give secondary evidence of their contents.[41]

c. Primary Evidence Privileged From Production. Where the documents, notice to produce which has been given, are privileged from production, and the party seeking to introduce the evidence has inspected and taken copies of the documents, he can, notwithstanding the privilege, introduce such secondary evidence on failure of his opponent to produce the writings.[42] Likewise, while an attorney cannot be compelled to produce or disclose the contents of an instrument intrusted to him by his client, he may be compelled to testify that such an instrument exists and that it is in his custody, and then, if proper notice to produce has been given, the opposite party may introduce secondary evidence.[43]

4. Inadmissibility of Primary Evidence. Secondary evidence of the contents of a writing cannot be introduced where it appears that, for any reason, the writing if produced would not be admissible,[44] even if its absence is satisfactorily it must be returned." See also Harvey v. Mitchell, 2 M. & Rob. 366.

The rule stated in the text applies where the nature of the instrument, production of which is desired, is such as to raise the inference that it is not in the possession or control of the party notified to produce it, but that it is properly in the custody of some third person. Bell v. Chandler, 23 Ga. 356, holding that a fieri facias is presumed to be in the possession of the clerk, and therefore a notice to a party to produce it is not a sufficient foundation for the introduction of secondary evidence. Subpœna duces tecum not a notice.— Where an instrument relating to the cause is delivered by the adverse party to his attorney, it is a confidential communication which the attorney cannot be permitted to disclose, and if the other party desires to prove its contents he must give notice to produce it. If execution of the instrument is not properly proved (Hovey v. Deane, 13 Me. 31; Epping v. Mockler, 55 Ga. 376), as where the subscribing witnesses are not produced and no excuse is given for their absence (Street v. Kelly, 67 Ala. 478; Gage v. Wilson, 17 Me. 378), secondary evidence of the contents of the instrument is not admissible.

Primary evidence excluded.— Where the record of proceedings by a justice of the peace has been excluded, parol evidence of matters contained therein is not admissible. Comisky v. Breen, 7 Ill. App. 369. But where a written contract clearly admissible is improperly excluded, no error is committed in afterward explained.[45] But if the fact to which the writing relates can be proved independently of the writing, it may be proved by parol evidence even though the writing if produced could not be received as evidence of the fact.[46]

F. Preliminaries to Admission of Secondary Evidence — 1. Proof of Execution, Existence, and Genuineness of Original Instrument. Before a party can be permitted to introduce secondary evidence of the contents of a written contract, deed, or other instrument stated to have been lost or destroyed, satisfactory proof must first be made of the former existence, proper execution,[47] and admitting parol evidence showing the execution and terms of the contract and the acts of the parties under it. Nebeker v. Harvey, 21 Utah 363, 60 Pac. 1029. Proof of suppression or destruction by the party to be affected by the instrument is equivalent to proof of execution where no better evidence can be had. McCredy v. Schuylkill Nav. Co., 3 Whart. (Pa.) 424. Thus where parol evidence was offered to prove that plaintiff executed a discharge of defendant from a certain claim, and tendered it to him in the court-room, by putting it in his lap, and that he brushed it or it fell upon the floor and was not afterward seen, it was held that the evidence was admissible; the instrument under such circumstances being considered a lost paper. Stoddard v. Mix, 14 Conn. 12.

Under Ga. Civ. Code, § 3611, providing for the establishing of lost deeds, if a properly established copy of a lost deed has been placed upon record, it is admissible without proof of the execution of the original deed. Leggett v. Patterson, 114 Ga. 714, 40 S. E. 736.

When a deed is not produced after due notice to the party having the control of it, the court will be liberal in the application of the rule which allows secondary evidence; and, although there be no direct evidence of the identity and execution of the deed, proof of circumstances tending to establish these facts is admissible and proper to be submitted to the jury. Bright v. Young, 15 Ala. 112.

Before the contents of a lost letter can be proved there must be testimony tending to prove the handwriting, or that it came from the alleged writer or his authorized agent, or was received in due course of mail in answer to letters previously mailed to the address of the alleged writer. Whitwell v. Johnson, 2 Nebr. (Unoff.) 66, 96 N. W. 272.

As to proof of handwriting, a distinction exists between the proof as to lost instruments, and of a paper produced and under the inspection of the witness. With respect to lost instruments, and especially where the knowledge of the witness has been acquired since he saw the paper, the proof of the handwriting as to the execution of which he testifies must be of the most unequivocal and positive kind. Nothing short of actually seeing the party write, or an acknowledgment, distinctly and clearly made by the party himself, will suffice. And, before a witness is permitted to state his belief of the genuineness of the handwriting of another, he must state facts and circumstances to show that he has knowledge enough to speak of it with reasonable certainty. It must not be guesswork, or mere probability. Porter v. Wilson, 13 Pa. St. 641. To the same effect see Hart v. Eckles, 4 Phila. (Pa.) 48. And see, generally, LOST INSTRUMENTS. So where the witness' only knowledge of the genuineness of a letter was derived from the signature, and he had no knowledge of the writer's handwriting, it was with before introducing secondary evidence of the contents of an instrument that is beyond the jurisdiction of the court.[49] Although the contents of written instruments cannot be proved by parol evidence without laying a proper foundation therefor, yet evidence of this character is competent to show the existence and execution of the instrument with a view to admitting secondary evidence in case of loss of the original.[50] The same is true where it is sought to show for this purpose the former existence of a record.[51]

2. Proof of Grounds For Admission of Secondary Evidence — a. In General. Where a party seeks to introduce secondary evidence of the contents of documents, and as a foundation for the introduction of such evidence relies upon the fact that the original writings have been lost or destroyed or are inaccessible to him, he must first establish this fact by sufficient and satisfactory evidence.[52]

held that his testimony was incompetent. Dorsey v. Dorsey, 3 Harr. & J. (Md.) 410, 6 Am. Dec. 506. But where a witness who could not remember the contents of a letter written to him had previously shown the letter to another person, it was held that the latter, although he had no knowledge of the handwriting of the letter, was competent to prove its contents and that the identity of the letter together with the evidence to show its contents were questions for the jury; the theory of the decision being that there did not appear to be any more satisfactory evidence obtainable. Curry v. Robinson, 11 Ala. 266.

Admission of a party that he executed an instrument is not secondary to proof of his handwriting, and may of itself be sufficient. Krise v. Neason, 66 Pa. St. 253; Conrad v. Farrow, 5 Watts (Pa.) 536.

If one witness swears positively to the handwriting, the proof is sufficient and it matters not how many other witnesses may swear to the contrary or what circumstances may be proved to cast doubt upon it; the secondary evidence becomes admissible, although the question of its sufficiency is still for the jury. Krise v. Neason, 66 Pa. St. 253.

Admitting secondary evidence of the contents of a letter does not obviate the necessity of proving the genuineness of the letter. Nichols v. Kingdom Iron Ore Co., 56 N. Y. 618.

Genuineness of telegram.— "While the transcript delivered to the person addressed is for some purposes, as between him and the sender, deemed the original, it never can be so without competent proof that the alleged sender did actually send, or authorize to be sent, the dispatches in question. The primary and original evidence of that fact would be the telegram itself in the handwriting of the sender, or of an agent shown to have been duly authorized. But when it appears that the telegram has been destroyed by the company, secondary evidence of the essential fact may be given." Oregon Steamship Co. v. Otis, 100 N. Y. 446, 453, 3 N. E. 485, 53 Am. Rep. 221. To the same effect see Chisholm v. Beaver Lake Lumber Co., 18 Ill. App. 131; Smith v. Easton, 54 Md. 138, 39 Am. Rep. 455 note; Geiser v. Cathers, (Nebr. 1903) 97 N. b. Burden of Proof. The burden of proving the facts essential to a proper foundation for the admission of secondary evidence, such as the loss, destruction, or inaccessibility of an original written instrument, rests of course on the party seeking to introduce the evidence.[55]

c. Mode of Proof. The preliminary proof of loss or destruction when made by a party to the cause[56] may generally be made either by his affidavit or his testimony in open court,[57] although his affidavit appears to be generally considered the proper mode of proof at least in the first instance,[58] provided that the testimony of the last custodian of the instrument cannot be obtained.[59] But the affidavit of a third person is generally held inadmissible.[60]

d. Order of Proof. It is immaterial in what order a party gives evidence constituting the proof preliminary to the introduction of secondary evidence, but this is a matter which rests in the sound discretion of the trial court and which, while reviewable on appeal, will not be interfered with except in case of abuse of discretion.[61] In determining the sufficiency of the preliminary proof of loss or destruction of primary evidence, the appellate court will not confine itself to the evidence received prior to the admission of the secondary evidence; but if it appears from all the evidence in the case that the facts before the court were sufficient to authorize the introduction of secondary evidence a new trial will not be granted for the admission of such evidence out of its regular order.[62] Thus where secondary evidence as to the contents of an original document is first received, and afterward satisfactory proof is made of the loss of the document, the mere fact of inverting the order of proof cannot be considered as reversible error.[63]

e. Proof of Loss or Destruction of Primary Evidence — (i) Admissibility of Evidence — (a) In General. While the sufficiency of evidence offered to show the loss or destruction of primary evidence is a matter resting in the sound discretion of the trial court,[64] the admissibility of such evidence is governed by the settled rules that apply to evidence offered for other purposes.[65] But, where there is sufficient competent evidence submitted to the court as a foundation for the admission of secondary evidence, the fact that hearsay evidence also was received is not ground for reversal.[66]

(B) Of Loss or Destruction of Records — (1) In General. The admissibility of evidence to prove the loss or destruction of public records appears to be governed by the principles generally applicable to evidence offered for other purposes. Thus the loss of public records, such for instance as the records of judicial proceedings, may be proved by parol.[67] And to show the probability of loss it is competent to prove that, when the record should have been made and thereafter, the officers keeping the records were careless and negligent in performing their duties.[68]

(2) Testimony of Custodian of Record. While the testimony of the custodian of a public record is of course admissible to prove that the record is lost or destroyed,[69] it has been held that there is no rule of evidence which requires that the loss or destruction of a public record shall be proved solely by the testimony of such custodian; but any person having knowledge of the fact may, if otherwise competent, testify thereto, and it is no valid ground of objection that the custodian is not called.[70]

(3) Certificate of Custodian of Record. It is generally held that the certificate of the custodian of a record is incompetent to prove loss of the record or parts thereof, but that this fact must be proved by the oath of some person having knowledge thereof.[71] In Pennsylvania, however, the contrary rule obtains.[72]

(II) Sufficiency of Evidence — (A) Question For Trial Court. Preliminary proof of the loss or destruction of primary evidence does not involve the question in issue and is not regarded as evidence in the cause; it is addressed solely to the trial court and its sufficiency is a question of fact for that court and not for the jury.[73] Moreover, the sufficiency of the evidence adduced on the preliminary proof rests in the sound discretion of the trial court; and the determination of that court on this question will generally not be disturbed on appeal, except in case of abuse of discretion amounting to error of law.[74] Proof of loss

(B) As to Search For Missing Document — (1) In General. Although it is difficult to formulate any comprehensive rule as to the quantum of proof which the law will deem sufficient to establish the loss or destruction of an original document, so as to authorize the admission of secondary evidence of its contents, it may be stated as a broad and general rule that the law will require evidence that a diligent and bona fide but unsuccessful search has been made for the document, in the place where it belongs or is most likely to be found, and that the party has exhausted in a reasonable degree all accessible sources of information and means of discovery which the nature of the case would naturally suggest; and such evidence will be sufficient.[76] The law does not, however, require direct and positive

Contra.— Avery v. Stewart 134 N. C. 287, 46 S. Compare cases cited supra, notes 73, 74.

Want of time and the inconvenience of search on the part of a public officer will not excuse the non-production of official documents in a proceeding in the court of claims or render parol evidence of their contents admissible. Brown v. U. S., 1 Ct. Cl. 377.

The character and extent of the search must be shown. Laster v. Blackwell, 128 Ala. 143, 30 So. 663; Rankin v. Crow, 19 Ill. 626; Avery v. Stewart, 134 N. C. 287, 46 S. E. 519; Parks v. Dunkle, 3 Watts & S. (Pa.) 291; W. V. Davidson Lumber Co. v. Jones, (Tenn. Ch. App. 1901) 62 S. W. 386.

Statement of party's conclusion.— When the party offering secondary evidence testifies that the original is "lost or destroyed," without showing a search or other facts to support his statement, the court will not adopt his conclusion and secondary evidence will be rejected. Booth v. Cook, 20 Ill. 129; Johnson v. Mathews, 5 Kan. 118; Avery v. Stewart, 134 N. C. 287, 46 S. E. 519; Anglo-American Packing, etc., Co. v. Cannon, 31 Fed. 313. So the mere statement of a witness that diligent search has been made to find the document in question is not sufficient proof of loss. Rankin v. Crow, 19 Ill. 626; W. V. Davidson Lumber Co. v. Jones, (Tenn. Ch. App. 1901) 62 S. W. 386.

A statement of counsel as to what his client has done in searching for the documents, where counsel's information is derived from the client, is not proper proof; the court must be distinctly informed by the testimony of a person having knowledge of the facts, and the extent of the search must be clearly proved. Smith v. Coker, 110 Ga. 650, 36 S. E. 105.

Where the proper custodian of the document testifies positively that it has been lost, or is not in his office in which it belongs, it has been held that a sufficient foundation is laid for the introduction of secondary evidence; that such testimony, in the absence of examination as to the search or manner of loss, raises the presumption that a proper search has been made. People v. Clingan, 5 Cal. 389; Postel v. Palmer, 71 Iowa 157, 32 N. W. 257 [distinguishing Howe Mach. Co. v. Stiles, 53 Iowa 424, 5 N. App. 517, 41 Pac. 838. Contra, Preslar v. Stallworth, 31 Ala. 402.

A party's affidavit of loss should state the facts bringing it within the rule of the text. Thus it must state with certainty whether the document is lost or destroyed, or in the possession of the opposite party, and should show what diligence has been used to recover it. Palmer v. Logan, 4 Ill. 56. It should show that search has been made in those places where the document would be most likely to be found, and should exclude all presumption that the party may have the document in his own possession or may know where it is.

(2) By Whom Proof Should Be Made. The loss or destruction of the document in question should be proved by the person in whose hands the document was at the time of the loss, or in whose custody it may be presumed to be or to whose possession it is traced, if he is living and within reach of the process of the court.[80] In case he is out of the jurisdiction, his deposition must be procured if practicable or some good excuse given for not doing so.[81] If he is dead the

Ga. Code, § 5673, following a former rule of court, provides that "whenever a party wishes to introduce the copy of a deed or other instrument, between the parties litigant, in evidence, the oath of the party stating his belief of the loss or destruction of the original, and that it is not in his possession, power or custody, shall be a sufficent foundation for the introduction of such secondary evidence." Testimony of a clerk that he had the oversight of defendant's papers and that he had made a thorough search among them but had been unable to find the paper in question is not sufficient to authorize the introduction of secondary evidence, since the testimony is not inconsistent with the hypothesis that the paper is in existence and that defendant himself has a knowledge of the place where it can be found. Under such circumstances the testimony of other persons who have knowledge of the facts is admissible if otherwise competent, and may of itself be sufficient.[85]

(3) Degree of Diligence Necessary — (a) In General. The degree of diligence necessary to be made in the search is a matter which cannot be confined within the limits of any inflexible rule, but must be determined largely by the peculiar circumstances of each case, and the character and importance of the document.[86] It has been said that the search must be made with the utmost good cannot be found at the time of the trial;[90] but it is generally sufficient to prove that diligent and unsuccessful search has been made in every reasonable quarter; it is not ordinarily necessary to exhaust every source of information or discovery.[91] Where the party never had the custody of the document and never was entitled to its possession, he will not be held to such strict requirements in proving its loss, destruction, or inaccessibility as if the document were one of which he had once had the possession or to the custody of which he was entitled.[92] In fine, it is held that under ordinary circumstances sufficient grounds are established for the introduction of secondary evidence, where it appears from the preliminary evidence that there is no reasonable probability or suspicion that the writing is designedly withheld or suppressed;[93] and it is not necessary to negative every possibility of its suppression.[94]

(b) Value or Importance of Document. In determining the degree of diligence which will be required in a search for a document, the value and importance of the paper and the purposes for which it is expected to be used are material matters to be considered.[95] If the document be a private paper in which the party offering secondary evidence of its contents has a personal interest, and it be an important paper, such as in the usual course of business would be likely to be in his possession or in the possession of another for his benefit, search for it in every direction in which it can be traced may reasonably be required, before

When rule of diligence relaxed.— Where the instrument is one required by law to be recorded, and was in fact recorded, no presumption can arise that the original is withheld for an improper purpose; and in such a case the law is much less stringent in its requirements of proof of loss than where the instrument is of a different character. Adams v. Shelby, 10 Ala. 478; Jones v. Scott, 2 Ala. 58. Where the custodian of the document is a third person who cannot be compelled to produce it, the rule as to diligence in search is relaxed, although enough must be shown to reasonably satisfy the court that the document is not voluntarily withheld by the party offering the secondary evidence. secondary evidence of its contents will be received.[96] A fortiori great diligence should be exercised where the instrument is one upon which the cause of action or the defense is based, and its execution and alleged contents are denied.[97] If the document be one in which other persons are also interested, and which has been placed in the hands of a custodian for safe-keeping, the latter must be required to make search, and the fruitlessness of such search must be shown, before secondary evidence can be admitted.[98] If the paper be one of importance chiefly to third persons, search among the papers of such persons as would have an interest in the preservation of the paper, or would under the circumstances be likely to have it in possession, will be sufficient.[99] Where the document is useless, or of little or no value, or is of such a character that it would not naturally be preserved with any care its loss or destruction may be inferred upon very slight evidence.[1] Thus where the purpose has been accomplished for which the instrument was executed, so that the instrument is functus officio and no rights can be founded thereon, there is a presumption or inference that it has been lost or destroyed, since necessity or reason for preserving it no longer exists and in such cases little or no evidence of search is required.[2]

If the document be one of public concern, and there be, by law, a place where such instruments, in due course of law, should be deposited and be found, search in that place is all that will be required, and in the absence of grounds of suspicion that the original is fraudulently withheld, will justify the admission of secondary evidence, without calling persons who have had access to the paper, and might possibly have the original in their possession. Search among papers in place of deposit.— Ordinarily it is not sufficient that the paper is not found in its usual place of deposit, but all the papers in the office or place should be examined. But this need not always be done, when, from the extent of the archives or office, it would be impracticable, or if by reason of the order in which the place is kept a more limited examination is equally satisfactory. (c) As to Search For Missing Record. The foregoing principles with respect to search for a missing document, and especially as to the person who should make the search and the place where the search should be made, apply with at least equal force where it is sought to establish the loss or destruction of public records or documents constituting matters of record; these writings commonly being in the custody of public officers and having well known places of deposit.[7]

3. NOTICE TO PRODUCE PRIMARY EVIDENCE — a. General Rule. Justice's judgment.— Secondary evidence of a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace during a former term of office cannot be received on proof of unsuccessful search in his office for his docket and papers, unless it is also shown that he has been in office continuously or has succeeded to the same office after an interval; for under such circumstances it does not appear but that the docket on which the judgment entry was made had been delivered to the justice's successor as required by law, and had not been returned. The object of requiring notice to produce an original document, before secondary evidence of its contents can be given, is to afford a sufficient opportunity to the opposite party to produce the writing and thereby secure, if he desires it, the best evidence of its contents, and is not to enable him to prepare evidence to explain or confirm the document. Reception of evidence without notice.— If parol evidence of a fact is received without notice to produce a document said to be primary evidence of the fact, the error is cured by subsequent proof that no such document ever existed. When notice not admissible in evidence.— Where defendant refused to produce a document on notice and the court held that the notice was not given a sufficient length of time before the trial, and thereupon the notice itself containing the alleged contents of the document was received in evidence, it was held that the admission of the notice was error; that although it might have been produced to the judge it should not be offered or received in evidence. Where an alleged mutilated paper is produced by the adverse party, voluntarily, on request of counsel, no notice to produce having been given, this fact will not operate to exclude secondary evidence of the contents of the part alleged to have been destroyed, and the objection that notice to produce the paper was not given is untenable. the adverse party to be prepared to produce a particular instrument or writing, if necessary to contradict his evidence, no other notice to produce the instrument is necessary before introducing secondary evidence of its contents.[12]

(III) Where Party Has Obtained Possession of Document by Fraud, Etc. Where a party has obtained possession of an original document by wrongful means, such as fraud, violence, and the like, he is not entitled to a notice to produce the writing as a preliminary to the introduction of secondary evidence.[13]

(IV) When Document Not in Party's Possession or Control. Notice to produce a document as a prerequisite to the admission of secondary evidence of its contents is required only when the instrument is, or may be presumed to be, in the possession or control of the adverse party, for otherwise the notice would be nugatory.[14] Thus notice to produce the document is unnecessary where

Reason of rule.— "Every written notice is, for the best of all reasons, to be proved by a duplicate original; for if it were otherwise, the notice to produce the original could be proved only in the same way as the original notice itself; and thus a fresh necessity would be constantly arising, ad infinitum, to prove notice of the preceding notice; so that the party would, at every step, be receding instead of advancing." Eisenhart v. Slaymaker, 14 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 153, 156, per Gibson, C. J. The statement has been quoted and approved in many of the foregoing cases in this note.

notified to understand what writings are required,[23] and a notice to produce certain documents described therein is not sufficient to warrant the introduction of secondary evidence of other documents than those mentioned in the notice.[24] But where the notice does not describe the documents with perfect accuracy, it is sufficient if so framed with regard to the subject-matter to which the documents relate, or otherwise, that the party notified cannot doubt what papers are meant.[25]

(II) Question For Trial Court. The sufficiency of a notice to produce a written instrument is a preliminary question of fact for the trial court, whose determination will generally not be disturbed on appeal, except in a plain instance of injury.[26]

(III) To Whom Notice May Be Given. Notice to produce a paper may be given either to the attorney of record of the real party in interest or to the party himself.[27] But the document must be held by the attorney as counsel for the party to the cause, and not as counsel for some stranger thereto.[28]

Written notice.— A general rule of practice requiring that a notice to produce papers shall be written has reference to preliminary preparation for the trial. The reason of the rule does not apply to a notice given in the presence and hearing of the court while the trial is in progress from day to day, and the materiality and pertinency of the document are apparent, and each party is at least presumed to have present all papers bearing on the case. Hence where a verbal notice to produce papers is given at a meeting before a referee, it is sufficient to warrant the introduction of secondary evidence at a subsequent meeting when the papers are not produced. But where plaintiff had given defendant notice to produce a certain document which had been delivered by plaintiff to defendant, and defendant produced a document which he claimed was the one he had received, it was held that plaintiff might testify that the document produced was not the one which he gave to defendant, and might introduce a copy of the one which he testified he did give to him. (IV) TIME OF SERVICE — (A) In General. As to the time of service of a notice to produce papers, no comprehensive rule can be laid down, but each case must be determined largely upon its peculiar facts, especially with regard to the accessibility of the document. The most that can be said is that the notice must be given in sufficient time to enable the party by the exercise of reasonable diligence, under the circumstances, to procure and produce the writings desired.[29]

Where the deposition of a witness is taken to prove the contents of documents, it is not necessary to give notice to produce the documents when the deposition is taken; but such notice must be given before the deposition can be used on the trial; and if notice is given a reasonable time before the trial, it is sufficient to admit the deposition or copies of the documents attached thereto. If it were impossible to procure the document between the time of giving notice and the time of the trial, this fact should be made to appear.[30]

(B) Notice at Trial. Where the document is in the possession of the adverse party or his attorney at the trial and is in court, notice given or demand made during the trial is generally sufficient,[31] and notice thus given is sufficient, although the paper is not actually in court, if it is so near that it can be speedily obtained.[32] Likewise, where the circumstances of the case are such that the document may be fairly presumed to be in the possession of the adverse party at the trial, and the want of a notice to produce it could work no surprise upon him and could not prejudice his rights, notice before the trial is not a prerequisite to the introduction of secondary evidence.[33] Thus where the papers are the subject of the action or defense, they will be presumed to be not only in the possession of the party relying upon them, but also to be present in court; and this latter fact may be presumed from the nature of the document itself and its particular connection with the cause. Under such circumstances notice at the trial is sufficient.[34] But ordinarily if the paper is not shown to be in the party's possession and in court, or if it does not appear to be readily procurable by him, notice at the trial is not sufficient.[35]

d. Proof of Service of Notice. The method of proving the service on a party of a notice to produce a document in his possession or control and the sufficiency of such proof are matters governed by the same principles and statutory provisions that relate to the service of notice in general.[36] The mere statement of counsel to the court that he served such a notice has been held insufficient.[37]

e. Waiver of Notice or of Objections to Its Sufficiency. The right of a party to require a notice to produce documents in his possession before the introduction of secondary evidence of their contents may be waived by him.[38] Likewise he may waive objection for insufficient description of the documents,[39] or because of service at too short a time before trial.[40] And the actual production of the documents or a voluntary offer to produce them will amount to a waiver.[41]

4. Proof of Correctness of Copy. Where the secondary evidence offered is a writing purporting to be a copy of an original document, it must be shown usually by proof of comparison with the original, that the writing is in fact a true copy.[42] Thus a copy of a copy of a lost or destroyed writing is not admissible as

1 Sandf. (N. Y.) 50, the court considered that it was irregular to prove by affidavit the service of a notice to produce documents, the proper mode of proof being deemed to be the examination of witnesses at the trial.

Sheriff's return on notice.— In McDonald v. Carson, 94 N. C. 497, it was held that a sheriff's return "executed by delivering a copy" indorsed on a notice to produce papers is sufficient, since it implies a delivery to each party to whom the notice is addressed.

38. Dwinell v. Larrabee, 38 Me. 464. Thus in an action by a chattel mortgagee against an officer who had attached the goods as property of the mortgagor, plaintiff having testified in his own behalf that he received a letter from the mortgagor a day or two before the execution of the mortgage; and, having stated on cross-examination that he had left the letter at home, it was held error to refuse defendant leave to cross-examine him as to its contents, for the purpose of disproving the bona fides of the mortgage, although he had not been notified to produce it, for the objection could affect only the rights of defendant, and he could waive it. Kalk v. Fielding, 50 Wis. 339, 7 N. W. 296.

39. Thus where the notice described a title bond as a deed, but the party took no exception, and produced the bond, and at a second trial exceptions were taken to the misnomer in the notice, and for that reason the bond was not produced, but the court thereupon admitted secondary evidence of its contents, it was held that the production of the paper on the former occasion under the notice was a waiver of the misnomer, and an acquiescence in the meaning intended by the notice, and that the secondary evidence was properly admitted. Entries in day-book transcribed in ledger. — Evidence that a day-book or book of original entries has been destroyed by fire does not make a ledger competent as to the same matter, without evidence to show that the entries in the ledger were transcribed correctly from the day-book by the person who made the entries in the day-book, or by one having knowledge of the transactions and of the correctness of the original entries. Kennedy v. Dodge, 19 Ohio Cir. Ct. 425, 10 Ohio Cir. Dec. 360.

Testimony of the person who made the copy is not essential; correctness of the copy may be proved by the testimony of any competent witness. Lombard v. Johnson, 76 Ill. 599; Terry v. Wood, 7 Baxt. (Tenn.) 292. And comparison with the original as read by another person has been held sufficient (Lynde v. Judd, 3 Day (Conn.) 499. See also Rice v. Rice, (N. J. Ch. 1892) 25 Atl. 321), especially where the person reading the original was the agent of both parties, as under such circumstances the inference is that he read correctly (Krise v. Neason, 66 Pa. St. 253).

Merely proving the handwriting of the copyist is not sufficient. Wills v. McDole, 5 N. J. L. 501; Brewster v. Countryman, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 446. Yet where the copy is a press-copy, proof of the handwriting is sufficient, for such a copy is a facsimile of the original. Smith v. Moorhead Mfg. Co., 23 Minn. 141.

Proving incorrectness of copy.— Where a party introduces in evidence a certified copy

secondary evidence, unless it has been compared with the original and found to be correct.[43] But the objection that a copy offered is only a copy of a copy is considered purely technical,[44] and where a witness testifies of his own knowledge that the paper is in fact a true copy of the original, it should be admitted; and the question whether the evidence shows it to be a copy of the original or simply a copy of a copy is for the jury to determine.[45] A fortiori, where there is some evidence introduced to show that the writing offered as a copy of the original is a true copy thereof, the writing is admissible and the question whether it is in fact a true copy is for the jury,[46] although where the document is the foundation of the action, more strictness in the proof is required[47] than where the document is only collaterally involved.[48]

G. Degrees of Secondary Evidence. On the question whether there are degrees of secondary evidence — that is, whether one kind of secondary evidence is admissible when another kind having more probative value is accessible — there are many dicta and some decisions, but these are in conflict, some courts holding that the most satisfactory kind of secondary evidence must always be produced or its absence explained,[49] and others holding that there are no degrees of secondary evidence, but that parol or any other secondary evidence is compeof a public record, it has been held that he cannot show by parol that the copy is incorrect in any particular, since by so doing he would prove the contents of the record by parol, which is forbidden by the best evidence rule. Monk v. Corbin, 58 Iowa 503, 12 N. W. 571. But it is generally held that where an original deed has been lost and a certified copy of the record thereof is introduced in evidence, it may be shown that the copy is not in fact a true copy (Harvey v. Thorpe, 28 Ala. 250, 65 Am. Dec. 344; Nixon v. Cobleigh, 52 Ill. 387; Sexsmith v. Jones, 13 Wis. 565; Booth v. Tiernan, 109 U. S. 205, 3 S. Y.) 235. See also Robertson v. Lynch, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 451. Although the rule excluding a copy of a copy properly applies to cases where the copy is taken from a copy, the original being still in existence and capable of being compared with the copy; or where the copy is taken from a record which is in existence and by law deemed as high evidence as the original, it is quite a different question whether it applies to cases where the original is lost or the record of it is not by law deemed as high evidence as the original, or where the copy of a copy is the highest proof in existence. So where the document introduced is not a mere copy of a copy verified as such, but is a second copy verified as a true copy of the original, it is admissible. Winn v. Patterson, 9 Pet. (U. Letter-press copies of letters are the best secondary evidence of their contents, and unless they are produced or their absence explained parol evidence of the contents of the letters is not admissible. Under Ga. Civ. Code, § 5173, "there are degrees in secondary evidence, and the best should always be produced. Thus a duplicate is better than a copy, and an examined copy than oral evidence." Shedden v. Heard, 110 Ga. 461, 467, 35 S. E. 707; Williams v. Waters, 36 Ga. 454. And under this provision where a duly approved copy of an inaccessible writing is in evidence, parol evidence as to its contents is not admissible. Shedden v. Heard, 110 Ga. 461, 35 S. E. 707. But to prove the contents of a lost document or judicial record it is not necessary to establish a copy in a separate proceeding but parol evidence is admissible, for parol evidence would have to be resorted to for the purpose of establishing the copy. To prove the contents of a will, the original and record of which are destroyed, parol evidence is not admissible where a copy is accessible. Illinois Land, etc., Co. v. Bonner, 75 Ill. 315.

To prove the adoption of a by-law by an assurance association, parol evidence is not admissible where the laws of the state provide that a certified copy of the record may be used. Lloyd v. Supreme Lodge K. of P., 98 Fed. 66, 38 C. C. A. 654.

Record or copy of deed.— Where a deed or grant which is shown to be lost has been recorded, it is error to admit parol evidence as to its contents without showing why the record or a certified copy of the record could not be produced. The contents of a letter may be proved by parol without accounting for the absence of a copy. Brown v. Woodman, 6 C. & P. 206, 25 E. C. L. 396.

The record of a deed is only secondary evidence and is not superior to parol; therefore the party desiring to prove the contents of a deed may introduce parol evidence without showing that no record of the deed is in existence. Simpson v. Edens, 14 Tex. Civ. App. 235, 38 S. W. 474. See also Mattocks v. Stearns, 9 Vt. 326.

The copy of a grant from the register's office, and one from the office of the secretary of the state, are both secondary evidence; and, where secondary evidence is admissible it is not a valid objection to the copy from the register's office that one from the office of the secretary would be better evidence. Osborne v. Ballew, 29 N. C. 415.

Telegrams.— Under the rule that there are no degrees of secondary evidence it is held that where the telegraph message actually delivered is the best and primary evidence of the contents of the message, if its non-production is satisfactorily accounted for, parol evidence is admissible, even though there be other secondary evidence which may be more satisfactory, as for instance, a written copy or the message delivered to the telegraph company. 51. In the case of Eslow v. Mitchell, 26 Mich. 500, 502, it was declared that "there is no rule of law that requires secondary evidence to be of one kind rather than another, where the writing is a private writing, and no counterpart is legally presumed or required to exist." But in Phillips v. U. S. Benevolent Soc., 125 Mich. 186, 84 N. W. 57, the point was treated as still unsettled, but not being necessary to the decision of the case was of course undecided. The members of the court were equally divided in nature of this evidence itself, or is made to appear by the objecting party, that other and more satisfactory secondary evidence is known to the other party and can be produced by him.[52] Moreover, where the secondary evidence offered is parol, the otherwise competent testimony of one witness cannot be rejected on the ground that it is not as conclusive and satisfactory as would be the testimony of some other witness who is not called.[53]

H. Suppression of Primary Evidence. As a general rule a party will not be allowed to give secondary evidence of the contents of original papers which are in his possession and which he has refused to produce upon notice.[54] And, although by such refusal he has compelled his adversary to resort to secondary evidence, he is still precluded from introducing secondary evidence in his own behalf.[55] Nor can he by subsequently producing the original document exclude the secondary evidence given by his adversary.[56] But whether the party has estopped himself from using secondary evidence is a question the determination of which depends upon the facts of the particular case and rests largely in the sound discretion of the trial court.[57]

XVI. Parol or Extrinsic Evidence Affecting Writings.*

A. General Rule — 1. Rule Stated. The general rule is that when any judgment of any court, or any other judicial or official proceeding, or any grant or other disposition of property, or any contract, agreement, or undertaking has been reduced to writing, and is evidenced by a document or series of documents, the contents of such documents cannot be contradicted, altered, added to, or varied by parol or extrinsic evidence. This rule exists independent of statute, but has been embodied in the statute law of some states.[58] The rule is a neces-their opinions on the question. Yet in Dillon v. Howe, 98 Mich. 168, 57 N. W. 102, it was held that, where a copy of a time book is accessible, the admission of parol evidence of its contents is error.

Where there is no direct evidence obtainable to establish the contents of a lost writing, circumstantial evidence is admissible. Johnson v. Franklin, (Tex. Civ. App. 1903) 76 S. W. 611, in which circumstantial evidence was admitted to establish the contents of a report of commissioners appointed to make partition of an estate.

Contents of lost telegram.— An objection that parol evidence of the contents of a lost telegram is but evidence of the contents of a copy, not of the original, is untenable, where it does not appear either from the evidence or from any judicial knowledge that any copy was made. In Pennsylvania parol evidence is allowed to contradict or vary written instruments, "1st. Where there was fraud, accident or mistake in the creation of the instrument itself, and 2d. Where there has been an attempt to make a fraudulent use of the instrument, in violation of a promise or agreement made at the time the instrument was signed, and without which it would not have been executed." Instrument not effective.— It has even been held that, although through some defect of form or by reason of some positive provision of law a written instrument cannot have the effect intended, it still remains the best evidence of the understanding of the parties and cannot be varied or contradicted by parol. Gardiner Mfg. Co. v. Heald, 5 Me. 381, 17 Am. estoppel at law,[61] nor upon the statute of frauds,[62] although it rests upon substantially the same principle.[63] But according to the modern and better view the rule which prohibits the modification of a written contract by parol is a rule, not of evidence merely, but of substantive law.[64]

2. Legal Effect of Instrument. The legal effect of a written instrument, even though not apparent from the terms of the instrument itself, but left to be implied by law, can no more be contradicted, explained, or controlled by parol or extrinsic evidence than if such effect had been expressed.[65] Thus where no time of performance is specified in a contract the legal effect is that it is to be performed within a reasonable time and parol evidence is not admissible to show an agreement that it shall be performed at a particular time;[66] and where no time for payment of an amount is fixed, it is, according to the established rule of law, payable on demand, and hence no parol evidence is admissible to show an agreement as to the time of payment.[67] Similarly where a contract of employment does not specify the time it shall remain in force, it is terminable by either party at pleasure, and parol evidence cannot be admitted of an agreement that the services shall be continued for a specified time.[68] So also it has been held that where a contract of employment was silent as to compensation, the law implied a reasonable sum and parol evidence was not admissible to show a specific sum.[69] It has also been held that, as the legal effect of two mortgages to secure instalments of the same debt is to give priority as to the proceeds of the mortgaged property to the instalments first due, such legal effect cannot be altered or varied by parol evidence tending to prove an agreement that the two mortgages should be of equal liens.[70]

Supplying omissions.— Where a justice's docket omits to enter a proceeding which should be entered, other proper evidence may be admitted to prove the proceeding. Anderson v. Henry, 45 W. Va. 319, 31 S. E. 998.

ings in a cause before him,[87] and will preclude a showing that the justice intended to enter a judgment different from the one recorded in his docket,[88] or that the form of the judgment was the result of a supposition that no other could properly be entered in the case.[89]

(B) Proceeding to Obtain Surety of the Peace. The record of a justice in a proceeding before him to obtain surety of the peace is not conclusive, but may be contradicted by parol evidence.[90]

(IV) Records of Police Court. The rule against the controlling of judicial records by parol evidence has been applied even to the records of a police court.[91]

(V) Foreign Judgments. The rule that a judicial record cannot be contradicted applies where an action is brought in one state upon a judgment obtained in another state.[92] But it has been held that the sentence of a foreign court of admiralty condemning property is only prima facie evidence of the facts upon which the condemnation purports to be founded, and in a collateral action such evidence may be rebutted by proof that no such facts existed.[93]

(VI) Record as to Particular Matters — (A) Acknowledgment of Service. Parol evidence is inadmissible to vary the date of the acknowledgment of service on a bill of exceptions.[94]

(B) Appraisement. Parol evidence is not competent to contradict or impeach the report or action of appraisers on execution proceedings,[95] or in ejectment.[96]

(C) Assignment of Dower. The record of an assignment of dower is conclusive as to the identity of the land set off[97] and its boundaries,[98] and also as to dower having been assigned in all the land.[99]

(D) Drawing of Jury. Oral evidence is inadmissible to impugn the certificate of officers to whom the selection or drawing of jurors is confided.[1]

(E) Duration of Judgment For Alimony. Where a judgment for alimony does not recite the length of time for which it is to be paid, it cannot be shown that there was a parol agreement between the parties before the entry of the divorce judgment that the alimony adjudged should continue during the life of the woman, for the effect of such testimony would be to contradict the terms and legal effect of the judgment.[2]

(F) Elements or Items Included in Verdict or Award. It may be shown that in the trial of an action the jury allowed in their award of damages certain items embraced within the declaration;[3] but the rule against contradicting the record precludes any showing that in a suit brought for one cause of action damages were given for another and different cause of action,[4] or for anything not included in the declaration.[5] Similarly, where an action has been tried by the parties and the court on the theory that plaintiff is entitled to have a certain matter considered as an element of his damages, the record of the case cannot be contradicted by testimony of the jurors that they did not include any allowance on account of such matter in their verdict.[6] Nor can it be shown after the confirmation of the report of commissioners allowing damages for the widening of a street that in the amount awarded by them to a certain person was included a sum intended for the benefit of another person, and for a purpose not appearing in the report.[7]

(G) Inquisition of Lunacy. It has been held that the record of selectmen who are made by statute a judicial tribunal for holding inquisitions of lunacy cannot be impeached by parol evidence;[8] but any person not a party to an inquisition may, if the proceeding is admitted in evidence against him, introduce other evidence to show that the alleged lunatic was of sound mind at any period of the time covered thereby.[9]

(H) Judicial or Execution Sale. The general rule with respect to the conclusiveness of records applies to the record of a judicial or execution sale.[10] Consequently it cannot be shown by parol or extrinsic evidence in contradiction of the record that necessary prerequisites to the sale were omitted;[11] that the sale did not pass the quantity of land,[12] or the title[13] which the record shows to have passed; that the real purchaser was a person other than the one stated on the record;[14] that the terms and conditions of sale were other than those appearing by the record;[15] nor that property was sold without authority.[16] But parol evidence has been held admissible for the purpose of showing the amount of money received by an administrator for a sale of land to be different from the amount named in the report of sale made by him.[17]

(I) Orders of Court. The rule forbidding the admission of parol or extrinsic evidence to contradict or vary judicial records or the recitals therein applies to orders of the court;[18] but such evidence is admissible for the purpose of rebutting a charge of fraud in the procurement of an order.[19]

(J) Poor Debtor Proceedings. It has been asserted as the rule that a certificate of justices of the peace as to the administration of a poor debtor's oath or bond is conclusive,[20] unless its effect be destroyed by an agreed statement of facts or the voluntary admission of illegal testimony;[21] and the same is true as to the certificate that due notice was given to the creditor.[22] But in other jurisdictions the contrary rule prevails.[23]

(K) Recognizance. The record of a recognizance may not be controlled or impeached by parol evidence,[24] at least between the parties.[25]

(L) Satisfaction of Judgment or Execution. An entry of satisfaction of a judgment or execution is, in the absence of statute, nothing but a receipt, and like any other receipt may be explained or varied by satisfactory evidence that payment was not in fact made.[26]

(M) Stay of Execution. Parol evidence is not admissible to prove that so much of the entry of a judgment by confession as relates to a stay of execution was without the consent of the person by whom the judgment was confessed.[27]

(N) Stipulations. A clear stipulation in writing with respect to certain suits is protected by the rule under discussion, and cannot be varied or contradicted by parol evidence.[28]

(O) Time of Issuing Process. The true time of filling up a process and placing it in the officer's hands for service or execution may be shown by extrinsic proof irrespective of the date of the process.[29]

(P) Time of Signing or Entering Judgment. Statement of the record as to the time of signing or entering up a judgment is a material part thereof and hence cannot be contradicted by parol or extrinsic evidence;[30] and the same rule applies to orders, except in a direct proceeding to set them aside.[31] But the exact hour of the entry of a judgment may be proved, as matter dehors the record, by competent evidence,[32] unless such proof would tend to impeach the record.[33]

Sufficiency of service.— Parol evidence is admissible to show that the place where service was made of notice of an application of a debtor to take the poor debtor's oath was not "the last and usual place of abode of the creditor," within a statute authorizing service by leaving a copy of the notice at such place. (VII) MINUTES OF COURT—(A) In General. The minutes of a judge or clerk are ordinarily proved by the production of the proper docket and showing by inspection that there is a minute, in which case it cannot be contradicted, explained, or enlarged by parol evidence[34] in the absence of any averment of fraud or error[35] But there is nothing about a minute which in legal contemplation precludes the possibility of forgery or mistake, and hence it may be shown by evidence aliunde whether the entry produced is in fact what it purports to be;[36] and the person by whom the minute purports to have been made is a competent witness whenever the question of the genuineness thereof is involved.[37]

(B) Contradiction of Record by Minutes. The minutes of the court are not admissible for the purpose of contradicting or impeaching the record proper after it has been made up.[38]

(VIII) EVIDENCE AS TO JURISDICTION—(A) General Rule as to Courts of Record. The jurisdiction of courts of record is presumed,[39] and as a general rule parol or extrinsic evidence will not be received to show that the court had not jurisdiction[40] or to contradict recitals showing jurisdiction,[41] unless there is something in the record itself showing that such recitals are not or cannot be true.[42] But parol evidence to support the jurisdiction may in a proper case be received.[43]

(B) Rule as to Inferior Courts. There is no conclusive presumption of jurisdiction in the case of courts of inferior jurisdiction,[44] and any statement in relation to jurisdiction found in the minutes, docket, record, or judgment of a justice of the peace or other inferior court is only prima facie evidence, in opposition to which it may be shown by any satisfactory means of proof that the authority of the court did not extend over the matter in controversy or the parties to the action.[45] Conversely, where the jurisdiction does not appear on the face of the record it may be shown by evidence aliunde.[46]

(C) Foreign Judgments. Any jurisdictional fact appearing in a record of a foreign judgment, or a judgment of a sister state, may be met by plea and proof to the contrary.[47]

(IX) Evidence in Aid of Record. The rule against parol evidence does not preclude the reception of extrinsic evidence in aid of the record,[48] or to explain

(x) Evidence Not Tending to Impeach Record. The rule against parol evidence does not exclude evidence which, while relating to the same matters dealt with in the record, in no way tends to impeach or contradict the record.[59] Thus extrinsic facts, not required to be made a part of the record, may be shown.[60]

(xi) Aiding or Impeaching One Part of Record by Another. A recital in one part of a judicial record may be either aided or impeached by other parts of the record.[61]

(xii) Matters Not Protected — (a) Unauthorized or Extrajudicial Certificate. The rule protecting records from impeachment by extrinsic evidence does not apply so as to protect unauthorized or extrajudicial certificates of judges, justices, or officers of the court.[62]

(b) Execution Book. The execution book kept by a clerk of court is only prima facie evidence of the truth of the entries therein, and may be contradicted by parol.[63]

Consent to action.— Parol evidence that an action by the trustee to foreclose a trust deed was prosecuted, and the property sold and bid in by the trustee, for the use and benefit of the cestuis que trustent, at their procurement and with their consent, is admissible. Mareck v. Minneapolis Trust Co., 74 Minn. 538, 77 N. W. 428.

Transfer of bid.— For the purpose of determining the right to a rent note, parol testimony is admissible to show that a certain person purchased land reported by the commissioner as sold to another, and transferred his bid to such reported purchaser. Bagby v. Warren Deposit Bank, 49 S. W. 177, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1357.

A certificate of a justice of the peace reciting matters as to which he is not called upon to certify and which are regularly no part of his record may be contradicted by parol evidence (Wolfe v. Washburn, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 261); and where the statute does not require the justice's certificate of the oath made by plaintiff as required by law to authorize the arrest of defendant to be indorsed upon the writ, defects in an insufficient certificate indorsed upon the writ may be supplied by extrinsic evidence (Marsh v. Bancroft, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 497).

An unauthorized certificate of the clerk to the effect that a certain release bond accepted by the sheriff has not been delivered to him to be filed is not such a document as cannot be impeached by parol evidence. State v. Gordy, 28 La. Ann. 589.

A statement in a return which must, from the nature of the case, be a matter of opinion only, may be explained by parol. Williams v. Cheesebrough, 4 Conn. 356.

63. Taylor v. Dundass, 1 Wash. (Va.) 92.

(c) Amendment of Record. A defendant in execution is not precluded by an amendment of the execution, made by authority of the court, from showing the original form of the execution.[64]

(xiii) Clerical Errors or Mistakes. It has been laid down as a general rule that parol evidence is not admissible to show clerical errors or mistakes in judicial records, in collateral proceedings, or in actions founded upon the judgment;[65] but in a number of cases such evidence has been admitted.[66]

b. Official Records and Documents — (i) General Rule. The rule under discussion also protects from contradiction or impeachment by parol or extrinsic evidence the official records or documents prepared and kept by public officers in the performance of their duties as such,[67] or filed with them for record or preser-

Maryland.— Clammer v. State, 9 Gill 279, holding that a clerical error in allowing a default judgment to remain on the docket after it should have been struck off because superseded by a judgment by confession is admissible, not to contradict the record but to restore the consistency of the pleading.

Michigan.— McDonald v. McDonald, 55 Mich. 155, 20 N. W. 882, holding that where a defendant in replevin claimed ownership of the property by purchase from plaintiff, and introduced as evidence a bill of particulars, filed by plaintiff in a prior action in which the value of the property was included as an item of set-off, plaintiff might show that such item was included by mistake of his attorney.

South Carolina.— Sims v. Campbell, 1 McCord Eq. 53, 21 Am. Dec. 595 [followed in Moore v. Edwards, 1 Bailey 23], holding that where the word "satisfied" had been indorsed on an execution, proof might be admitted that this was done by mistake.

A copy of the Revised Statutes deposited in the office of the secretary of state, certified under his hand and the seal of the state, has the same force and effect as if it were a portion of the original records of the legislature, and as such imports absolute verity. Therefore it is not competent in an ordinary civil suit to permit any inquiry into the correctness of the proceedings of the revising committee or of the secretary of state, in relation to such Revised Statutes. Eld v. Gorham, 20 Conn. 8.

Statements in letters patent issued by the governor to a corporation must be taken as vation pursuant to statute.[68] But in order thus to protect from contradiction a paper or document deposited in a public office it must have been made and certified in the manner and have come from the source required by statute to constitute it an official paper.[69]

(II) Application of the Rule — (A) Legislative Records. Records of the legislature are conclusive evidence of the matters which they purport to show,[70] and parol or extrinsic evidence will not be received to contradict or impeach either the enrolled bill of a statute[71] or the journals of the houses of the legislature;[72] although such evidence may be received to supply missing portions of the journals, which have become detached through accident or design,[73] or to show that through fraud, mistake, or error of judgment on the part of the recording officer the journals do not faithfully recite the proceedings as they actually transpired.[74]

(B) County Records and Proceedings. The rule against parol evidence also applies to county records and proceedings, and precludes the contradiction or variation of the same by parol or extrinsic evidence.[75]

(C) Municipal Records and Proceedings. Parol or extrinsic evidence

verity, and neither the minute-book of the corporation nor parol evidence of officers of the corporation can be admitted to contradict them. Goodbread v. Philadelphia, etc., Turnpike Co., 13 Pa. Super. Ct. 82.

Under a statute declaring that the printed journals shall be prima facie evidence to the same extent that duly authenticated copies of the originals would be, such journals are only prima facie evidence of what they contain and are liable to be rebutted. Bradley v. West, 60 Mo. 33.

In the absence of any law making the journals evidence for any purpose, they are not conclusive evidence of the passage of an act, but it may be necessary to refer to parol evidence to ascertain whether the act was passed in conformity to the constitution. This is true even where the constitution requires each house to keep a journal of its proceedings and publish the same, and a statute requires that the journal shall be deposited and kept in the office of the secretary of state and shall be printed and published. Green v. Weller, 32 Miss. 650.

In England the journals of the houses of parliament do not import absolute verity and are not conclusive of the facts stated in them, except in the case of a judgment rendered by the house of lords as a judicial tribunal upon appeal. Green v. Weller, 32 Miss. 650 [citing 1 Phillips Ev. 406].

(M) Transcripts and Authenticated Copies. A transcript or a duly authenticated copy of a record or recorded instrument cannot be shown by parol to be incorrect,[92] but its incorrectness may be shown by a production of the record or the original document and a comparison therewith.[93]

(III) Records or Documents Not Conclusive — (A) In General. There is a class of entries, sometimes called records, which are of a public nature and required by law to be kept by various officers, but which are of a less solemn character and are not accorded the conclusiveness attaching to judgments of courts of record. These, while competent evidence of the facts recorded and required by law to be recorded, are not conclusive but may be contradicted by parol or other extrinsic evidence.[94] To this class belong the records of births and marriages kept by clerks of towns;[95] the registry or enrolment of a vessel at the custom-house;[96] the record kept by a person employed in the signal service of the United States;[97] the calendar of prisoners kept by a sheriff or jailer;[98] and many others of a like character.[99]

(B) Ex Parte Certificate or Report. The law does not give a conclusive effect to the ex parte certificates and reports of public officers in relation to matters which depend upon the exercise of integrity, judgment, and discretion, and by which private rights and contracts may be seriously affected, but they may be controverted by extrinsic evidence,[1] unless a legislative intent that they

case can an omission which renders the record or document null and void be supplied by parol.[10] But an omission may be explained by parol;[11] and parol evidence may be admissible to show matters which, while they might properly appear on the record or document, are not required to be therein set forth;[12] or matters as to which a record is usually kept, although not required by statute.[13] It has also been asserted that, in the absence of any statute making the record of a public officer or board the sole evidence of his or their proceedings, parol evidence is admissible to show that certain acts were done or proceedings had, although as to them the record is silent, where the rights of innocent persons might otherwise be prejudiced.[14]

A recorded vote of the directors of a corporation, being a written instrument, must be construed by its terms alone, with reference to the subject-matter to which it applies, and parol evidence is not admissible of the sense in which it was understood by a director. Gould v. Norfolk Lead Co., 9 Cush. (Mass.) 338, 57 Am. Dec. 50; Peterborough R. Co. v. Wood, 61 N. H. 418.

has been denied.[19] Omissions from the corporate records may be supplied by parol evidence, particularly where there are no statutory provisions as to what the records shall show,[20] and such evidence may be admitted to explain entries in the minutes.[21]

2. Private Writings — a. Arbitration and Award. The rule against the admission of parol evidence applies to the case of an arbitration and award, and such evidence cannot be received to vary or contradict the terms of either a written submission[22] or the award itself.[23] It cannot be shown that the arbitrators did not intend what their award on its face declares,[24] nor that a change has been made in the powers committed to the arbitrators by the submission;[25] nor can the scope of a written submission to arbitration be enlarged by evidence of a contemporaneous parol agreement.[26] But it has been held that parol evidence is admissible to invalidate the award by showing that the arbitrators exceeded their powers, although the submission and award are in writing and under seal.[27]

b. Bills and Notes. Although the authorities as to the admissibility of parol evidence to affect commercial paper are by no means uniform,[28] the general rule

Rep. 494, in which it was held that parol evidence was admissible to show that a writing in the following form, "Received of P. five hundred dollars due on demand," was intended as a mere receipt.

Use of instrument.— A note cannot be shown to have been intended to be used only as collateral. Clement v. Drybread, 108 Iowa 701, 78 N. W. 235. Evidence of an agreement not to negotiate an instrument negotiable on its face would be a contradiction of the writing and hence is not admissible. Bank v. Wood, 19 N. Y. Suppl. 81.

A check cannot be contradicted by parol (Shirts v. Rooker, 21 Ind. App. 420, 52 N. E. 629), or shown to have been intended as a memorandum for money lent (Kelley v. Brown, 5 Gray (Mass.) 108).

The giving of a duplicate of a lost draft by the drawer does not necessarily evince a purpose to waive a defense of the drawer against liability on the draft, nor does such duplicate as a matter of law import a promise to pay the draft. Therefore it is competent to show by parol evidence that the drawer informed the payee that he did not intend by the giving of such duplicate to waive his right, but merely intended to accommodate the payee by putting in his hands a paper which would enable him to collect the money from the drawee. Gilby Bank v. Farnsworth, 7 N. D. 6, 72 N. W. 901, 38 L. R. A. 843.

A note executed more than six months after a sale of goods, for the price of which the note is given, and based upon no new consideration, is not conclusive as to the real agreement between the parties as to a warranty, but the real agreement between the parties may be shown. Hille v. Adair, 58 S. W. 697, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 742.

Interest.— It cannot be shown that there was an agreement that the note should not bear interest (Stutsman v. Stutsman, 3 Blackf. (Ind.) 231), or that interest was to be paid at a rate other than that expressed in the instrument (Redden v. Inman, 6 Ill. App. 55; Davis v. Stout, 126 Ind. 12, 25 N. E. 862, 22 Am. St. Rep. 565; Catlin v. Harris, 7 Wash. 542, 35 Pac. 385), or that interest apparently payable at maturity was to be paid annually (Dance v. Dance, 56 Md. 433; Kœhring v. Muemminghoff, 61 Mo. 403, 21 Am. ment,[37] or where by the express terms or legal effect of an instrument it is payable in money to show that it was agreed that it should be paid in any other way.[38] It has also been asserted that any evidence varying or nullifying the effect of a written acceptance of a bill is inadmissible.[39]

c. Bills of Sale — (I) In General. The great weight of authority places bills of sale or sale notes on the footing of other written instruments, with respect to the admission of parol evidence to vary the same, and therefore hold that such an instrument cannot be varied, added to, contradicted, or explained by parol or other extrinsic evidence.[40] On the other hand it has also been held that a simple bill of sale does not embody the preliminary or essential terms of a contract in such a way as to exclude parol evidence.[41] These authorities, however, are not necessarily conflicting but may be explained by the following distinction: In so far as a bill of sale partakes of the nature of a receipt or is simply declaratory of a fact, it may be explained or perhaps contradicted; but to the extent that it expresses the contract of the parties and defines their rights and liabilities, it is

This rule has been applied to an indemnity bond (American Surety Co. v. Thurber, 121 N. Y. 655, 23 N. E. 1129; Bernard-Beere v. Klaw, 35 Misc. (N. Y.) 27, 70 N. Y. Suppl. 204 [affirming 66 N. Y. Suppl. 495]; Wylie v. Commercial, etc., Bank, 63 S. C. 406, 41 S. E. 504), a forthcoming bond (Bolling v. Vandiver, 91 Ala. 375, 8 So. 290), an official bond (Jones v. Smith, 64 Ga. 711; State v. Hall, (Miss. 1891) 8 So. 464; Stoner v. Keith County, 48 Nebr. 279, 67 N. W. 311; McKee v. Com., 2 Grant (Pa.) 23), a poor debtor's bond (Chase v. Collins, 68 Me. 375; Titcomb v. Keene, 20 Me. 381), a recognizance or undertaking in replevin (Baker v. Merriam, 97 Ind. 539; Smith v. Tyler, 51 Ind. 512), a bond for title given in connection with a contract of sale (Crouch v. Johnson, 7 Tex. Civ. App. 435, 27 S. W. 9), a bond to convey a right of way for a railroad (Applegate v. Burlington, etc., R.

ment of a stipulated sum as damages in case of a breach parol evidence concerning the subject-matter of the contract, so far as the situation of the parties is concerned, is admissible when it tends to show that a breach has resulted in such damages as cannot be readily ascertained by a pecuniary standard.[51]

e. Certificates of Stock. It has been held that a resolution of the directors of a joint-stock company authorizing a certain person to contribute capital and become a shareholder and the certificate of stock issued in accordance therewith cannot in the absence of fraud or mistake be varied by parol evidence that the transaction was a loan and not a contribution to the capital.[52]

f. Charter-Parties. Parol evidence is not admissible to enlarge or vary the terms of a charter-party or in any way to contradict it.[53]

g. Collateral Security or Pledges. The writing evidencing a deposit as a pledge or collateral security cannot be added to, contradicted, or varied by showing the nature of the transaction to be other than what appears by the face of the instrument,[54] and conversely where the law requires a pledge to be in writing parol evidence is not admissible to show that writings which on their face are not pledges amount to such in fact.[55]

h. Contracts — (i) General Rule. The most usual application of the parol evidence rule is with respect to contracts, as to which it is established that in the absence of fraud or mistake parol or extrinsic evidence is not admissible to vary, add to, modify, or contradict the terms or provisions of the written instrument by showing the intentions of the parties or their real agreement with reference to the subject-matter to have been different from what is expressed in the writing;[56] for where the parties have deliberately put their engagements into writing

Co., 41 Iowa 214), and a bond by an absolute grantee to reconvey (Bennock v. Whipple, 12 Me. 346, 28 Am. Dec. 186).

The rule excludes evidence to show that at the time of the execution of the bond the obligee said he would not hold the obligor responsible (Cowel v. Anderson, 33 Minn. 374, 23 N. W. 542; Woodward v. McGaugh, 8 Mo. 161; Chetwood v. Brittan, 2 N. J. Eq. 438, 4 N. J. Eq. 334 [affirmed in 5 N. J. Eq. 628]; Towner v. Lucas, 13 Gratt. (Va.) 705); that the bond was accepted only as a temporary bond to be void on the execution of a new bond (Jones v. Smith, 64 Ga. 711); that a bond absolute on its face was intended as indemnity merely (Howell v. Hooks, 17 N. C. 258); that the principal or interest of the bond was intended to have been made payable at a later period than appeared on the face of the bond (Davis v. Cammel, Add. (Pa.) 233; Cook v. Ambrose, Add. (Pa.) 323), as that a bond payable immediately was not to be demanded until after the obligor's death (Geddy v. Stainback, 21 N. C. 475); to make an executor's bond, describing the testator as James L. F., applicable to the estate of Joseph L. F. (McGovney v. State, 20 Ohio 93); or to contradict the implication of possession from a recital in a delivery bond that the obligor was desirous of retaining possession (Lucas v. Beebe, 88 Ill. 427. But see infra, XVI, C, 28).

The fact that a bond refers to an extrinsic matter, to explain which a resort to parol evidence may be necessary, does not authorize the admission of such evidence to explain or contradict the bond itself. South Carolina Soc. v. Johnson, 1 McCord (S. C.) 41, 10 Am. Dec. 644.

That the transaction amounts to a sale cannot be shown by parol. Johnson v. Zweigart, 114 Ky. 545, 71 S. W. 445, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 1323; Nelson v. Robson, 17 Minn. 284.

The rule applies only to a valid instrument, and where a memorandum given by a pawnbroker to a pledgor did not comply with the law and showed usury upon its face, it was permissible to show an oral agreement between the parties that legal interest only should be charged. written contract, and the whole engagement of the parties and the extent of their undertaking is presumed to have been reduced to writing.[57] The rule, however, goes even further than this, and it has been established that where the instrument is free from ambiguity and is in itself susceptible of a clear and sensible construction, parol or extrinsic evidence is not admissible even to explain its meaning or determine the construction of the writing.[58]

Showing what was actually done.— While prior or contemporaneous declarations of parties contracting cannot be received to interpret an unambiguous written contract, yet evidence that certain alterations from the first draft of the contract were made by the parties before its execution is admissible to show their real intentions. The following writings were held not to constitute written contracts excluding parol evidence: An indorsement on an envelope containing securities given as collateral, stating the borrower's name and place of business, the name of the lender, the amount of the loan, the time and rate of interest, and a list of the securities (Union Trust Co. v. Whiton, 97 N. Rep. 421); and a mere written acknowledgment of a sum due (Alexander v. Thompson, 42 Minn. 498, 44 N. W. 534).

A vote of a corporation fixing an officer's salary is not a contract until it has been communicated to the officer and accepted by him; and parol evidence as to the circumstances attending the transaction is admissible as affording an inference that the vote was communicated to him and accepted by him, or the reverse, for such evidence does not vary the written vote but only shows whether or not it took effect as a contract. by parol, even though it is not signed.[66] Nor does the fact that a contract originally rested in parol and was reduced to writing only after being partly performed preclude the application to the writing of the rule excluding parol evidence to vary or contradict the writing, for the parol agreement is merged in the written one.[67]

(III) Particular Classes of Contracts—(A) Advertising. A written contract for the publication of advertisements cannot be varied by showing parol agreements not embodied therein.[68]

(B) Building and Working. A contract for buildings or other works stands upon the same plane as any other contract and must be held to express the entire agreement of the parties; and hence cannot be varied, added to, modified, or contradicted by parol or extrinsic evidence, or by any showing of the intentions of the parties, or of their real agreement with reference to the subject-matter.[69]

Accordingly it cannot be shown that the builder verbally warranted that the architect's plans would be satisfactory (Hills v. Farmington, 70 Conn. 450, 39 Atl. 795); that

Nor where the clear legal effect of the contract is to include the doing of certain work can it be shown by parol evidence that such work was not included.[70] But the intention of the parties to the contract may be shown where its language is not sufficiently specific,[71] or certain incidents are omitted.[72]

(c) Carriage. The rule against the admission of parol evidence to vary or contradict a written contract applies in full force to contracts of carriage or shipment.[73] The most usual application of this rule is to bills of lading, as to which certain things not mentioned in the contract were to be furnished for the compensation stated (Meader v. Allen, 110 Iowa 588, 81 N. W. 799); that a provision in a contract for digging a well whereby the contractor agreed "to furnish thirty barrels of water per day or no pay" meant fresh water and not salt (Dearmin v. Schnell, 71 Mo. App. 503); that a forfeiture for failure to complete by a certain day, provided by the terms of the contract, was intended by the parties as liquidated damages and not as a penalty (Van Buren v. Digges, 11 How. (U. S.) 461, 13 L. ed. 771); that representations, inconsistent with the contract, as to the outside cost of the work, were made on the part of the contractor (May Mantel Co. v. U. S. Blow-Pipe Co., 93 Ga. 778, 21 S. E. 142); that it was agreed that a deduction was to be made from the contract price to provide for work which the contractor was not required to do under his contract (McGuinness v. Shannon, 154 Mass. 86, 27 N. E. 881); that there was an understanding that certain work included in the contract should not be done, or that work included in the contract, in excess of a certain amount, should be paid for as an extra (Dougherty v. Norwood Borough, 196 Pa. St. 92, 46 Atl. 384); that interest should be paid by the owner on a deposit in bank which the contract required the contractor to make as security for his performance thereof, the contract being silent as to interest (Wear v. Schmelzer, 92 Mo. App. 314); or, where by the terms of the agreement the contractor was to take in payment of the price certain notes of a third person secured by mortgage, that the owner undertook that the notes were well secured, and the land mortgaged free from other encumbrance (Conant v. Dewey, 21 N. H. 353).

Where no amount of work is specified in a contract to do grading or ballasting at a certain rate per yard, parol evidence tending to show that any given amount was contemplated is inadmissible. Wells v. Milwaukee, etc., R. Co., 30 Wis. 605.

The value of work cannot be shown by parol where the price is fixed by contract. Sherman v. New York, 1 N. Y. 316.

Items of extra work cannot be shown by parol where the contract provides that no extra work is to be allowed unless executed under written authority. Page v. Nicholson, 27 La. Ann. 116.

A contract making price payable upon approval of the work by a third person is not ambiguous because it fails to state by what evidence the approval is to be shown, and parol evidence is not admissible to show that it was intended that the approval should be in writing, as this would vary the written agreement. 72. Rugely v. Goodloe, 7 La. Ann. 294, holding that where a contract to put up a sugar mill and engine for a planter specifies no time for the completion of the work, parol evidence is admissible to show such facts and usages as, coupled with the stipulations, will indicate the period which the parties must be presumed to have contemplated, but not mentioned, from a knowledge that such incident would be supplied by equity, usage, and law.

The rule applies to a shipping bill signed by the shipper and accepted by the carrier (Doty v. Thomson, 39 Hun (N. Y.) 243), and to a contract limiting the liability of the carrier, signed by the parties several hours after the shipment (Stewart v. Cleveland, etc., R. Co., 21 Ind. App. 218, 52 N. E. 89).

Railroad tickets are within the rule in so far as they express the contract. Walker v. Price, 62 Kan. 327, 62 Pac. 1001, 84 Am. St. Rep. 388, 52 L. R. A. 323. But compare Van Buskirk v. Roberts, 31 N. Y. 661; Quimby v. Vanderbilt, 17 N. Y. 306, 72 Am.

it is well established that in so far as they express the contract between the parties and define their rights, liabilities, and undertakings, they cannot be varied or contradicted by parol evidence.[74] But bills of lading are instruments of a two-fold

Dec. 469, in which cases it was held that steamship passage tickets are generally to be regarded as tokens rather than contracts, and are not within the rule excluding parol evidence to vary an agreement. Where a printed railway ticket is lost before use, evidence that at the time of purchase the agent of the railway company orally agreed to issue a duplicate in case of loss is inadmissible. Simis v. New York, etc., R. Co., 1 Misc. (N. Y.) 179, 20 N. Y. Suppl. 639. Nor, where the ticket contains a full and unambiguous printed contract signed in ink by the purchaser, that it shall expire on a date shown by punch marks on its margin, can parol evidence of statements made by the ticket agent at the time, contradictory of the contract contained in the ticket, be admitted. Rolfs v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., 66 Kan. 272, 71 Pac. 526. Place or mode of stowing.— Inasmuch as a bill of lading which is silent as to the place of storage in a ship imports a contract, according to the customs of shipping, that the goods are to be stored under deck, parol evidence of an agreement that the goods might be stored on deck is inadmissible. Creery v Holly, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 26. But compare Doane v. Keating, 12 Leigh (Va.) 391, 37 Am. Dec. 671. See CARRIERS, 6 Cyc. 420 note 1.

A guaranty of the payment of freight written on the back of the bill of lading cannot be shown by parol evidence to have been intended as security for the payment of the freight in place of the lien held by the carrier. Jones v. Hoyt, 25 Conn. 374.

Statement as to condition of goods.— A statement in a bill of lading or receipt for goods shipped that they were received in good order or in apparent good order is merely prima facie evidence, and parol evidence is admissible to show the actual condition of the goods. Evidence not tending to vary bill of lading.— Where the defense to an action for the freight of a cargo is that it was carried under special charter by the day, and a bill of lading of the cargo has been introduced, evidence that it is not customary to give a bill of lading where the boat is chartered by the day is admissible, for such evidence does not tend to vary the purport of the bill of lading, but goes to show that if the fact had been as contended for by defendant they would have been unable to produce the paper in question. Zimmerman v. Rainey, 26 Misc.

character, being at once contracts and receipts,[75] and in so far as they partake merely of the nature of receipts they may be explained or contradicted by extrinsic evidence.[76]

(D) Employment. The terms of a written contract of employment cannot be varied or contradicted by parol.[77] This rule precludes any showing that the duration of the employment was by a parol agreement to be different from the

(N. Y.) 795, 56 N. Y. Suppl. 199. So too evidence to fix a liability on others than the signer does not vary the contract within the meaning of the rule. McTyer v. Steele, 26 Ala. 487. See infra, XVI, C, 2.

An exception to the rule stated in the text, which effects a modification of the principle, is, where the bill of lading is executed and delivered, or the freight charges are paid as stipulated therein, and there has been published and posted for public inspection in the office of the carrier, where it could be seen by the shipper or consignee, an order of the carrier, allowing authorized special rates for certain classes of freight to be used for particular purposes, and directing the freight to be paid for at the regular tariff rates, the overcharge to be refunded upon application. Accordingly evidence is not admissible to prove that a continuing guaranty was not intended to be continuous (Schneider-Davis Co. v. Hart, 23 Tex. Civ. App. 529, 57 S. W. 903), that a guaranty for all goods sold to a certain person "until further notice" was limited to one year (Indiana Bicycle Co. v.

(F) Indemnity. The rule excluding parol or extrinsic evidence to contradict or vary a written contract[82] applies to contracts of indemnity.[83]

(G) Insurance. The rule that a contract in writing merges all previous negotiations leading up thereto and, if its terms are free from doubt or ambiguity, cannot be altered or contradicted by parol evidence unless in case of fraud or mistake, is applicable to contracts or policies of insurance.[84]

Tuttle, 74 Conn. 489, 51 Atl. 538), that a guaranty of payment for all materials delivered to a certain person up to a fixed amount was intended to apply only to materials furnished to be used in the execution of a particular contract (Henry McShane Co. v. Padian, 142 N. App. Div. 584, 38 N. Y. Suppl. 16), or that a continuing guaranty of payment for goods delivered from time to time was intended as security for past indebtedness (Pritchett v. Wilson, 39 Pa. St. 421, in which case, however, the evidence was rejected on the ground that the guarantor could not be affected by such an agreement between the person guaranteed and the creditor, to which he was not a party).

An imperfect description of a note in a guaranty thereof cannot be aided by parol. Ordeman v. Lawson, 49 Md. 135.

Showing notes to be within guaranty.— In Eckel v. Jones, 8 Pa. St. 501, it was held that parol evidence was admissible to show that a guaranty of S's notes "payable to" E for a certain amount was intended to cover two notes drawn by S to the order of a third person, on the same date with the guaranty, and in the aggregate amounting to the sum named, and by such third person transferred to E; the court saying: "There is no exact technical meaning to be applied to the word 'payable' when used in contracts. It is to be taken according to the common acceptation of the word in the popular language of the country and in that sense means due to, to be paid to, which would exactly fit the condition and description of E in regard to these notes and the guaranty."

(H) Partnership. A contract of partnership cannot be extended, limited, or otherwise varied by parol evidence to show that the true relation of the parties or their rights and liabilities are different from what appears in the written instrument,[85] for all of their prior negotiations and agreements with respect to the proposed partnership are merged in the articles of partnership.[86] And the same rule applies to a written agreement entered into for the dissolution of the partnership.[87]

(I) SALE—(1) IN GENERAL. The parol evidence rule applies in full force to contracts of sale, whether relating to real or personal property, and whether formally drawn up and executed or existing only in the shape of offers or orders and acceptances thereof, and such contracts cannot be added to, varied, contradicted, or controlled by parol or extrinsic evidence.[88]

See 20 Cent. Dig. tit. "Evidence," §§ 1780, 1789.

This rule has been applied to exclude evidence that a contract to sell a certain quantity of pecans referred to pecans to be grown in certain territory (Hopkins v. Woldert Grocery Co., (Tex. Civ. App. 1902) 66 S. W. 63), that a contract for the sale of a certain quantity of sound rice referred to a particular cargo (Ruiz v. Norton, 4 Cal. 355, 60 Am. Dec. 618), that a contract for the sale of a grist-mill included bolting cloth (O'Reer v. Strong, 13 Ill. 688), that a contract to ship been frequently held that a contract for the sale of a business cannot be added to by parol evidence of an agreement that the good-will was included or that the vendor should not again engage in such business at a particular place or for a particular time.[90]

(3) Price. The statement in a contract of sale as to the price paid or to be paid by the purchaser is an essential part of the contract, and hence it cannot be varied or contradicted by parol.[91]

(4) Time and Mode of Payment. A contract of sale is also conclusive as to the time, mode, and terms of payment, and cannot be varied or contradicted as to these matters by parol.[92]

(5) Time and Place of Delivery. Parol evidence is not admissible to vary or contradict the language of the contract as to the time[93] or place of delivery of a certain quantity of ice referred to such only as was then owned by the vendor (Schreiber v. Butler, 84 Ind. 576), or that a sale of land by the acre was contemplated where the contract shows a sale in gross (Dozier v. Duffee, 1 Ala. 320; Wadhams v. Swan, 109 Ill. 46; Anderson v. Snyder, 21 W. Va. 632; Depue v. Sergent, 21 W. Va. 326).

Where the land is described in general terms parol evidence of the vendor's representations as to the quantity of land is inadmissible to lay the ground for compensation for a deficiency. National Iron Armor Co. v. Bruner, 19 N. J. Eq. 331. Thus where the contract states that the land contains "about 65 acres," parol evidence is inadmissible to prove a sale of sixty-five acres, or the vendor's representations that there were at least sixty-five acres. Baltimore Permanent Bldg., etc., Soc. v. Smith, 54 Md. 187, 39 Am. Rep. 374.

Where no mention is made of the quantity of land agreed to be sold, it cannot be shown by parol evidence that, prior to the written contract, it was orally agreed that the tract contained a certain number of acres. Ohlert v. Alderson, 86 Wis. 433, 57 N. W. 88.

Where an insufficient description is given in a bond to make title, parol evidence cannot be resorted to for the purpose of showing what the parties meant or to identify a particular parcel of land which was the subject-matter of a written contract. Richardson v. Godwin, 59 N. C. 220. But see infra, XVI, C, 30.

Where the contract refers to an official survey or draft, such survey must be taken to contain the true quantity, and in the absence of fraud evidence to vary this amount cannot be received. Wier v. Dougherty, 27 Pa. St. 182.

the articles sold especially where the original agreement is in the form of a covenant.[94]

(6) Time and Essence of Contract. Parol evidence cannot be admitted to show that time was of the essence of the contract where the terms of the contract do not so provide.[95]

(7) Reservations. Reservations cannot be shown by parol where this would add to or contradict the contract.[96]

(8) Warranty. Parol or extrinsic evidence is not admissible either to add to the terms of a written contract of sale by engrafting thereon a warranty as to the thing sold,[97] or to add to, limit, or extend to matters other than those specified an express warranty contained in the instrument.[98] But evidence of a verbal

Certain amount "per year."— A written contract to deliver one thousand tons of bark "per year" for five years allows the contractor the entire year in which to furnish one thousand tons, and parol evidence is not admissible to show that the bark was to be delivered at particular times during the year. Curtiss v. Howell, 39 N. Y. 211.

Where no time for delivery is specified the law implies a contract that the goods shall be delivered within a reasonable time; and no evidence will be admissible to prove a specific time at which they were to be delivered, for that would be to contradict and vary the legal interpretation of the instrument. 7. Dye v. Thompson, 126 Mich. 597, 85 N. W. 1113; Owen v. Ellis, 64 Mo. 77. Evidence that neither of the parties to a deed understood its legal effect and operation at the time of its delivery is inadmissible to defeat the deed. Winslow v. Driskell, 9 Gray (Mass.) 363.

Even in a suit in which the grantor is not interested, he cannot explain his own grant, deed was executed,[8] to show agreements of the vendor to extinguish interfering claims[9] or existing encumbrances,[10] to affect a grantee's stipulation, contained in the deed, to pay a mortgage on the land,[11] or to show that there was such a stipulation on the part of the grantee where it does not appear in the deed.[12] Nor can parol declarations by the grantor change the character of the instrument.[13]

(II) Grants of Public Lands—(A) In General. Grants of public lands, where the subject-matter is within the power of the officer making the grant, are of that dignity which precludes the admission of any parol or extrinsic evidence to impeach, vary, or contradict them,[14] or even, it has been held, to aid in their construction.[15]

(B) Character of Land. A title under a grant of public lands of the government cannot be defeated by parol evidence that the land is not of such a character as to be subject to the grant, where there is no evidence that the secretary of the interior neglected or refused to decide the question,[16] but it is otherwise where such neglect or refusal is made to appear.[17]

(C) As Between Third Persons. Even in a collateral proceeding not between the parties to the grant, it has been held that the grant being a matter of record cannot in general be impeached and declared void except by some matter of record, evidence of the same grade as the grant itself, or by facts apparent on the face of the grant.[18]

(III) Official Deeds—(A) In General. A deed executed by a public officer in his official capacity to the purchaser at a judicial, execution, or other official sale is entitled to the same conclusive effect as any other deed and is not subject to be impeached, contradicted, added to or varied by parol or extrinsic evidence.[19] Thus it cannot be shown that the terms of sale were other than those appearing there being no ambiguity of any kind. Revere v. Leonard, 1 Mass. 91.

by the deed,[20] or, in the absence of any ambiguity in the description of the premises, that land covered thereby was not intended to be conveyed.[21] It is also inadmissible to show that the land was sold under a different judgment and execution than those recited in the deed,[22] nor can a recital as to the property sold be enlarged by parol evidence.[23]

(B) Evidence to Uphold Deed. Parol evidence has been held inadmissible even to support a tax deed,[24] or to contradict recitals in a sheriff's deed which if true would render the deed void.[25]

(IV) Matters as to Which Deed Is Conclusive—(A) Description of Parties. A deed is conclusive as to the parties thereto, and parol evidence is not admissible to show that the person described in the deed as the grantee was not the person intended.[26]

(B) Description of Premises—(1) In General. Where the description in a deed of the premises intended to be conveyed is clear and free from ambiguity, it cannot be varied, controlled, or contradicted by parol or extrinsic evidence.[27]

Where a tract of land is described in a deed, but the number of acres therein stated is inaccurate, it cannot be shown by parol that only that number of acres out of the tract was sold. Turner v. Rives, 75 Ga. 606.

Half of a parcel of land, as described in a deed, means the exact half in quantity, and the court will not go outside the deed to ascertain whether the parties intended other-

(2) Boundaries. The statements of a deed as to the boundaries of land have the same conclusiveness as any other portion of the description and cannot be varied by parol or extrinsic evidence or by showing any understanding of the parties different from that expressed in the deed;[31] and it is not admissible to Messer v. Rhodes, 3 Brewst. (Pa.) 180.

A meander line run by a government survey is not a boundary and evidence aliunde is inadmissible to show that it was intended as contradict or vary the statements in the deed as to the courses,[32] distances,[33] or calls,[34] unless the land is described by distance and course only, and monuments of boundary were made at the time of the execution of the deed or grant, in which case these control in case of a variance between them and the description.[35]

(c) Estate or Interest Conveyed. It is not admissible to contradict or vary the terms of a deed by parol or extrinsic evidence to show that the estate or interest intended to be conveyed was different from that which the clear language of the instrument purports to convey.[36] This rule has, however, been held to be such. Schlosser v. Cruickshank, 96 Iowa 414, 65 N. W. 344 [distinguishing Bigelow v. Hoover, 85 Iowa 162, 52 N. W. 124, 39 Am. St. Rep. 296; Glenn v. Jeffrey, 75 Iowa 20, 39 N. W. 160; Lammers v. Nissen, 4 Nebr. 245].

Boundary lines established by consent may, it has been held in Pennsylvania, be shown notwithstanding their contradiction of general words in a deed. The court based this holding, however, upon the view that such lines, without regard to the words of the deed, have been recognized and maintained by the law because the case is not within the statute of frauds. A recital showing a trust attached to the grant cannot be contradicted by parol evidence showing an intent that the deed should operate as an absolute conveyance. McDermith v. Voorhees, 16 Colo. 402, 27 Pac. 250, 25 Am. St. Rep. 286.

Where the grantees are described as husband and wife so that they take an estate by entireties, the deed cannot, in an action by the wife's heirs against the husband's grantee, be contradicted by parol evidence subject to the exception that a deed absolute on its face may in equity be shown, by parol evidence, to have been intended to have the effect of a mortgage merely;[37] and it has also been held that, where the making of the deed involves a criminal offense, the intention of the grantor may be shown.[38]

(D) Covenants. The legal effect of a covenant in a deed cannot be enlarged or restricted, varied or destroyed by parol evidence of simultaneous or prior agreements, or of the intentions of the parties.[39] Nor is it permissible to engraft a covenant upon a deed by parol.[40]

(E) Reservations or Limitations. A deed which is upon its face an absolute grant is not subject to have reservations or limitations engrafted thereon by parol or extrinsic evidence of intentions, understandings, or agreements contradictory to or at variance with its clear language;[41] and conversely where the deed does that the parties were not husband and wife and took as tenants in common. Jacobs v. Miller, 50 Mich. 119, 15 N. W. 42.

The unsworn declaration of a partner in a firm which transferred a lease, reduced to writing after the transfer, is not admissible to add to or explain the terms and conditions of the lease transferred. Hollingsworth v. Atkins, 46 La. Ann. 515, 15 So. 77.

Indorsements on a lease by the lessor extending the term and providing that all improvements then or thereafter made shall be dence admissible to show that an instrument which is on its face a lease is in reality a contract of sale.[47] But it may be shown that a written instrument purporting upon its face to be merely a lease was intended to operate as a mortgage to secure the payment of a debt.[48]

(II) Conclusiveness as to Particular Matters — (A) Accessaries to Be Furnished. The terms of a written lease cannot be added to by showing an agreement on the part of the lessor to furnish certain accessaries which are necessary or convenient to the use of the demised premises or property, such as water, steam, and the like;[49] nor can a custom to furnish such accessaries be shown where this would add to the terms of the written instrument by parol.[50]

(B) Assignment. Where a lease is silent as to the lessee's right to assign his term, parol evidence is inadmissible to show that the premises were to be used and occupied by the lessee himself.[51]

(C) Description and Identity of Premises. The written lease is also conclusive as to the description and identity of the demised premises, and cannot be contradicted, added to, or varied in this respect by parol evidence;[52] nor is it permissible to show reservations and exceptions not contained in the lease.[53]

(D) Fixtures. An agreement that the tenant shall have the right to remove buildings or other fixtures erected by him, at the end of his term, cannot be added to the lease by parol evidence.[54]

(E) Rent. A written lease cannot be varied by establishing a parol agreement between the parties modifying its terms as to the rent payable,[55] either with respect to the amount of rent to be paid according to its terms,[56] or the

the lessor's property cannot be varied by parol evidence. Walsh v. Martin, 69 Mich. 29, 37 N. W. 40.

A lease giving the privilege of purchasing does not admit of parol evidence to show a contemporaneous agreement that in case of purchase the rent should be applied on the purchase-price. Braun v. Wisconsin Rendering Co., 92 Wis. 245, 66 N. W. 196.

Annulment of previous written agreement. — If the effect of a lease is wholly to abrogate and annul a written agreement between the parties thereto of previous date, parol evidence is inadmissible to show that it was the intention of the parties that such agreement should remain, notwithstanding the lease, as a subsisting contract. Tibbits v. Percy, 24 Barb. (N. Y.) 39.

Where the object of a lease was a special one, parol evidence is inadmissible to prove that the lessor had granted the privilege of using the premises for other purposes. Sientes v. Odier, 17 La. Ann. 153.

time[57] or mode of payment;[58] nor can an agreement that payment of rent shall cease on a certain contingency or condition not named in the writing be shown.[59]

(F) Repairs and Improvements. The lease cannot be added to by showing an agreement to make certain repairs and improvements other than those, if any, stipulated for in the instrument,[60] nor can the stipulations of the lease in regard to these matters be varied or controlled by parol.[61]

(G) Right to Sublet. A right given by the lease to sublet either generally or for certain purposes cannot be restricted by evidence of a contemporaneous oral prohibition against subletting for a purpose within the general terms of the authority.[62]

An agreement by the tenant to pay water-rates for water used for running a hydraulic elevator placed in the leased building at the tenant's request cannot be shown by parol, the lease having been changed at the time of such improvement so as to provide for an increased rent in consideration thereof. Time not provided for.— Under a written lease for one year from March 1, 1889, with the privilege of two years, the rent for the first year being due June 1, 1889, it was competent for the landlord to show by parol that the rent for the second year was to be paid in advance, as it does not follow, from the fact that the rent for the first year was due June 1, that the rent for the second year was also to be paid on that date. A letter written in the course of negotiations for the lease of a house, stating that it would be put in first-class order, is a mere proposal leading up to the renting of the property and hence, the proposal being merged in the lease, the letter is not admissible in evidence. Hunter v. Hathaway, 108 Wis. 620, 84 N. W. 996.

61. Murdock v. Ganahl, 47 Mo. 135. (I) Use of Premises. A covenant in the lease that the premises will not be used for certain purposes or in a certain manner cannot be controlled by parol evidence showing declarations that the covenant would not be enforced;[65] and conversely, where the purpose for which the premises are to be occupied is not stated in the lease, parol evidence is not admissible to show an alleged verbal agreement of the landlord without consideration to sign a consent to the use of the premises for the sale of liquors.[66]

(J) Warranty. It cannot be shown by parol that there was an oral warranty in reference to the condition of the demised premises or property, or their fitness for the purpose for which they are liable, which is not contained in the lease itself.[67]

l. Letters. The parol evidence rule may protect letters from variation or contradiction where they are of a contractual nature, containing promises, propositions, undertakings, representations, and the like, especially where it is intended that the receiver shall act upon the faith of the contents of the letter;[68] but letters sublet for "business purposes" precludes parol evidence to show a contemporaneous oral prohibition against subletting for saloon purposes.

Contra.— Barnhart v. Edwards, (Cal. 1896) 47 Pac. 251; Swedish-American Nat. Bank v. Germania Bank, 76 Minn. 409, 79 N. W. 399, holding that parol evidence was not admissible to show that a mortgage given to se-time;[81] or that it was given to secure or indemnify against a contingent liability of the mortgagee as the mortgagor's surety and the like.[82] And it has also been held that in the absence of any specific statement in the mortgage as to the character of the advances, parol evidence may be introduced to prove what advances were intended, and if the mortgage is made to one member of a firm evidence of advances made by the firm would be competent.[83]

(III) Property Included. The description in the mortgage as to the property included therein and intended to be covered thereby is conclusive and parol or extrinsic evidence is not admissible to contradict, add to, or vary the same by showing the intention of the parties in this respect to have been other than that expressed by the instrument.[84]

(IV) Time and Mode of Payment. Parol evidence is not admissible to vary or contradict the express language of a mortgage with reference to the time when the debt secured thereby shall become payable;[85] nor can it be shown that it was intended that payment should be made only out of a certain fund.[86]

n. Powers of Attorney. A power of attorney cannot be added to, varied, or contradicted by parol evidence,[87] although it has been held in several cases that cure "money owing" was intended to secure future advances.

A mortgage to secure advances for a certain year cannot be varied by parol evidence to show that it was subsequently agreed that the mortgage should be retained as security for other and further advances for the succeeding year, not previously contemplated or provided for therein. Inconsistent dates.—A mortgage dated 1837, payable in 1830, is payable immediately, and parol evidence cannot be given to vary this legal result. Fuller v. Acker, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 473.

Time of foreclosure.— Where one gives a chattel mortgage which provides that if the mortgagee shall deem himself unsafe he may foreclose, parol evidence is not admissible to show an agreement that the mortgage should not be foreclosed within a year, unless the mortgagor was induced, in signing it, to believe that it contained stipulations not included therein. Moore v. Howe, 115 Iowa 62, 87 N. W. 750.

Omission of time.— Where a mortgage does not recite when the sum secured is payable, but provides for the payment of interest thereon "until paid at the time hereinbefore set forth," the presumption that the sum is immediately payable is overcome, and the agreement of the parties as to when it shall become due may be shown by parol. p. Receipts — (i) General Rule. It is well settled as a general proposition that the rule excluding parol or extrinsic evidence to vary or contradict written instruments does not apply to mere receipts; but these may be contradicted by showing that the money receipted for was not in fact paid, that certain items were or were not intended to be included or otherwise.[90] It has been held that the reason why receipts are open to parol investigation, and to be varied in their parties; and that many mistakes are made in settlements, to correct which the doors of justice should not be shut by the general terms of a receipt, which describes no particulars of what is settled,[91] and hence that when a receipt contains no general or vague expressions, but is definitely descriptive of what is intended to be affected thereby, such a receipt, like other writings in general, must not be assailed with parol evidence, unless on the ground of fraud.[92] A more satisfactory explanation is that such instruments are in no way contractual in their nature, but are mere acknowledgments, and that the reason which has given rise to the parol evidence rule has no application to them.[93]

(II) Instruments Within the Rule. The rule that parol evidence is admissible to explain or contradict receipts applies to all writings which are in the nature of receipts, even though they might not technically be termed such,[94] and regardless of whether they are independent instruments, or mere parts of[95] or indorsements on other instruments.[96] A receipt given by a public officer in the money or property does not render the writing a mere receipt subject to be contradicted by parol evidence.[99] But where a written instrument is both a receipt and an agreement or contract, the contractual nature of the writing does not prevent the admission of parol evidence to contradict or explain that portion which is operative only as a receipt.[1]

(iv) Warehouse and Storage Receipts. A warehouse or storage receipt evidences a contract of storage between the maker of the receipt and the person to whom it is issued, and hence is, according to the better view, within the rule prohibiting the admission of parol evidence to vary contracts;[2] but when it is nothing more than an acknowledgment of the receipt of property it stands on the same ground as other receipts and is open to parol explanation or contradiction.[3]

(v) Receipts Amounting to Accord and Satisfaction. When the receipt contains anything in the nature of an agreement upon the compromise or settlement of disputed claims or unliquidated damages that one party shall accept and receive from the other a certain sum of money or certain property in satis-

As between the maker and an assignee who has in good faith taken a warehouse receipt as security for money advanced, the instrument is not simply a receipt subject to be explained by parol proof, but a contract subject to the rules applicable to other contracts and excluding parol proof. This is not upon the ground that such receipts are negotiable strictly, but that they are sui generis and stand upon grounds applicable to that class of paper. Stewart v. Phœnix Ins. Co., 9 Lea (Tenn.) 104.

q. Releases. A release is usually an instrument of such a contractual nature that it is within the rule prohibiting the admission of parol or extrinsic evidence to vary or contradict written contracts;[6] but such a writing may be so similar in its character to a receipt that the rules of evidence applicable to a receipt may be applied and it may be explained, controlled, qualified, or even contradicted by parol evidence.[7]

r. Transfers and Assignments. Where a transfer or assignment is clear and free from ambiguity parol evidence is not admissible to change the scope of the instrument.[8] This rule undoubtedly excludes any showing by the parties of parol Accordingly it cannot be shown that a release was intended to embrace matters not specified therein (Frost v. Brigham, 139 Mass. 43, 29 N. E. 217; Brady v. Read, 94 N. Y. 631), or that a release of all demands was not intended to include a particular debt (Pierson v. Hooker, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 68, 3 Am. Dec. 467).

A statute which permits inquiry into the consideration of a sealed instrument does not alter the rule of the common law by which an instrument under seal operates per se as an extinguishment of the debt to which it refers, and, although liable to be avoided by proof that it was obtained by fraud or duress, is not open to contradiction by parol evidence. Stearns v. Tappin, 5 Duer (N. Y.) 294.

Release of one of several joint obligors.— In equity the intent of the parties may be shown for the purpose of restraining the general effect of a release of one of several joint obligors and preventing the release from operating to discharge the others. and allows parol or extrinsic evidence for the same purpose in respect of other writings of a similar character.[20]

C. Limitations of and Exceptions to the Rule — 1. Flexibility of Rule. There is perhaps no rule of law which is more flexible or subject to a greater number of exceptions than the rule which in actions at law excludes parol evidence offered to vary or explain written documents.[21] It has been said that in the multitude of exceptions much confusion has arisen, so that the exact limit to be placed upon the exceptions depends not only upon the peculiar facts of each case, but also to some extent upon the peculiar cast of thought of the individuals composing the court.[22] It may be stated generally, however, that the courts have endeavored to adapt their rulings, either way, to the obvious demands of abstract justice in each particular case.[23] The result is that, while the decisions are fairly uniform with respect to their abstract statements of the limitations of and exceptions to this rule, when the question arises as to whether a case presenting a particular state of facts comes within the general rule, or is taken out of it by one of the recognized limitations or exceptions, or again brought within it by one of the numerous limitations of and exceptions to those limitations and exceptions, the authorities are in many instances in hopeless conflict.[24]

2. Evidence Not Inconsistent With Writing. The parol evidence rule does not preclude the reception of parol evidence with reference to a matter evidenced by the writing, where such evidence relates to a matter in pais, or is of such a character that it does not tend to vary or contradict the written instrument.[25] Thus there is no objection to the admission of evidence which is offered not to contra-cumstance that a matter is evidenced by a writing cannot preclude the admission of parol evidence of independent facts, although they relate to the same transaction.[30]

3. Aiding Inference From Instrument. Parol evidence is admissible to aid an inference which may be deduced from a written instrument.[31]

4. Alterations, Erasures, and Mutilation — a. Alterations. The rule against parol evidence to vary or contradict a written instrument does not preclude evidence to explain an alteration in a written instrument and to show that it was made under such circumstances as not to vitiate the instrument;[32] nor does it exclude evidence to show that an alteration of or addition to a writing was made without authority from the writer.[33] Evidence is also admissible to show the fact that an alteration has been made,[34] and the person by whom and the circumstances under which it was made.[35] Where it is claimed that an instrument in evidence, by reason of alterations therein, fails to express the true contract or agreement of the parties, extrinsic evidence thereof is admissible.[36] It has been held that the alteration of a record may be shown by parol.[37]

b. Erasures. Parol evidence may be received to show the time when and the circumstances under which an erasure was made in a written instrument and to sustain the validity of the instrument notwithstanding,[38] and, where the instrument is to be enforced as though there had been no erasure, parol evidence may be received to show what the erased words were if they cannot be ascertained from the instrument itself.[39] It has also been held that where the portion of a

Evidence has been admitted to show that a promissory note was to be surrendered upon a certain condition (Hagood v. Swords, 2 Bailey (S. C.) 305); that a note under seal was not to be paid till the collection of another note given to the maker of the first note by a third person for the purchase-money of land sold to the first maker (Quin v. Sexton, 125 N. C. 447, 34 S. E. 542); that a release of claims on account of the publication of a libel was executed on condition that no further libel would thereafter be published (De Haven v. Coup, 5 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 562, 6 Am. L. Rec. 593); that at the time a note was executed and put into the hands of the payee an agreement was made that it should be returned to the maker at a certain date if he should then demand it (McFarland v. Sikes, 54 Conn. 250, 7 Atl. 408, 1 Am. St. Rep. 111); and that at the time the payees of an accommodation note indorsed the same it was agreed that before the maker should sell it he should obtain the name of another party as payee and that the latter should also indorse it and that the maker should execute a mortgage to indemnify the payees against loss (Caudle v. Ford. 72 S. W. 270, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 1764).

Option to rescind sale.— Where an unconditional note is given for the purchase-price of certain property, parol evidence is admissible to show an option on the part of the purchaser to rescind the sale within a certain time, as this does not contradict the note but sets up an independent agreement made at the same time that upon a condition or contingency the note was to become void. conflicting, may be to a great extent reconciled by the reasonable assumption that the courts in making the decision one way or the other had in mind, although they may not have clearly expressed, the true distinction, which is this: The rules excluding parol evidence have no place in any inquiry in which the court has not got before it some ascertained paper beyond question binding and of full effect,[45] and hence parol evidence is admissible to show conditions relating to the delivery or taking effect of the instrument, as that it shall only become effective upon certain conditions or contingencies; for this is not an oral contradiction or variation of the written instrument but goes to the very existence of the contract and tends to show that no valid and effective contract ever existed;[46] but evi-

That cannot be qualified or varied from its natural import, but must speak for itself. The rule does not forbid an inquiry into the object of the parties in executing and receiving the instrument."

There is a radical distinction between a conditional delivery, which is not to become complete and effective until the happening of some condition precedent, and a complete delivery which is sought to be defeated by subsequent contingencies that may or may not arise. In the one case there is no contract until the condition has been complied with; in the other there is a binding contract, notwithstanding the happening of the contingency relied upon to defeat it. Instruments not under seal may be delivered to the one to whom upon their face they are made payable, or who by their terms is entitled to some interest or benefit under them, upon conditions the observance of which is essential to their validity. And the annexing of such conditions to the delivery is not an oral contradiction of the written obligation, although negotiable, as between the parties to it or others having notice. It needs a delivery to make the obligation operative at all and the effect of the delivery and the extent of the operation of the instrument may be limited by the conditions upon which delivery is made. Benton v. Martin, 52 N. Y. 570.

The character of the delivery of a written instrument, whether absolute or conditional, may be established by parol. Verzan v. McGregor, 23 Cal. 339; Ryan v. Cooke, 172 Ill. 302, 50 N. Nature of condition.— In Mehlin v. Mutual Reserve Fund L. Assoc., 2 Indian Terr. 396, 400, 51 S. W. 1063, the court, after referring to the rule stated in the text, said: "Unless the non-fulfillment of the condition goes to the failure of consideration, this would seem to trench upon fixed principles of law."

b. Particular Instruments — (i) Sealed Instruments Generally. It is well established as a general rule that an instrument under seal cannot be delivered to the grantee or obligee upon a parol condition which may prevent the taking effect of the instrument according to its tenor,[48] although in New York it has been held that this applies only to instruments which are required to be under seal, and not to instruments effective without a seal.[49]

(ii) Bills and Notes. Where a bill or note or other negotiable instrument is absolute in its terms, neither the maker nor the indorser can be allowed to show that the obligation was a conditional one merely or was to be paid only in a certain contingency,[50] and this is true notwithstanding the fact that the note was given pursuant to a verbal agreement for the payment of a sum of money on Instruments not under seal.—The rule that where there has been an actual delivery of an instrument with the intention at the time of passing the present title, it cannot be shown by parol that the writing was not to become operative until the performance of some condition, applies to unsealed as well as to sealed instruments. In South Carolina, as between parties to a note or as against transferees with notice where the note does not state the consideration upon which it was given or where only a general consideration such as value received is stated, it is competent to prove that the note was given as part of an agreement by which the payment was to be conditional instead of absolute. McGrath v. Barnes, 13 S. C. 328, 36 Am. Rep. 687.

Indorsement in blank.— Parol evidence is admissible to prove that at the time when the owner of a note, who was not a party to it, indorsed his name in blank thereon, it was agreed that he was not to be liable unless the purchaser should return it on failure to collect it at maturity. Brewer v. Woodward, 54 Vt. 581, 41 Am. Rep. 857.

Evidence showing set-off.— In an action on a note given for the purchase-money of certain property, parol evidence is admissible to show an agreement that part of the property would be taken back if not satisfactory, as such evidence does not go to alter the terms of the note, but tends to establish a set-off. evidence that the bond never became effective because of the failure of conditions precedent therein.[56]

(v) Deeds of Conveyance, Leases, and Mortgages. A deed of conveyance may of course be delivered to a third person to take effect upon a condition to be subsequently performed,[57] but it is a well established rule that a deed cannot be delivered to the grantee or his agent in escrow, and that a deed so delivered at once becomes effective according to its terms.[58] It follows that parol evidence is not admissible to show that a deed which has been executed and delivered is subject to any conditions whatever which do not appear in the writing itself.[59] The effect of this rule is simply that when a person has made a deed of real estate and delivered it to the grantee who thereby becomes possessed of the power to use it, the grantor cannot overthrow the title thus created by any assertion that he did not intend to do precisely what he did do when the deed was delivered.[60] But a vendee may prove by parol that he did not accept a deed as performance of the vendor's contract to convey or only accepted it as such conditionally, for such evidence does not contradict the terms of the deed or tend to prove that it was not to be operative as a conveyance according to its terms.[61] Parol evidence is inadmissible to prove that a lease[62] or a mortgage[63] was delivered subject to conditions not appearing in the instrument.

Where a bond was signed in blank and was afterward filled up with a condition to pay certain sums of money absolutely, the signer may show that he did not authorize or assent to the condition as written in the bond, but that by the agreement of the parties the payments were to be conditional. (vi) Subscriptions to Stock. A subscription to the stock of a corporation cannot be varied by parol or extrinsic evidence for the purpose of showing that it was made upon conditions not appearing in the written instrument.[64] But it may be shown that the subscription was made under such circumstances that it was not to become a binding obligation until the condition was fulfilled,[65] and where the subscription books have been signed not by the alleged subscriber but by a person whom he authorized to subscribe for him, the subscriber may show by parol evidence that he authorized the subscription only on certain conditions.[66] So where the subscription has been delivered in escrow it may be shown that it was delivered to take effect only upon certain conditions.[67]

c. Conditions on Which Delivery to Be Made. Where an instrument, even though it be under seal, has been executed but not delivered absolutely, parol evidence is admissible to show the terms and conditions upon which it was, by the agreement and understanding of the parties, to be delivered,[68] or that it was not to be delivered at all, until certain conditions should be performed.[69]

d. Performance of Conditions. Parol evidence is admissible to show that a condition precedent to the liability of a party to a written instrument has been fulfilled,[70] or, where the instrument is by its terms to be void unless certain conditions are complied with, to show non-compliance.[71]

e. Time For Performance. Parol evidence is not admissible to enlarge the time allowed for the performance of a condition precedent specified in a written instrument.[72]

f. Completeness of Writing. The rules excluding parol evidence to show conditions annexed to the delivery of a deed or other written instrument apply only to instruments which upon their face are complete and require nothing but delivery to make them effective, and not to instruments which are insufficiently executed or show upon their face that they are not intended to take effect.[73]

7. Connection of Different Writings — a. In General. It has been asserted that parol evidence is not admissible to connect writings which are in themselves distinct and complete and do not on their face show any connection;[74] but this rule is not of uniform operation, as there are cases in which such evidence has been considered admissible;[75] and certainly such evidence must be admissible where there is something on the face of one of the instruments to indicate that it does not in itself evidence a complete transaction, or where it refers to some other writing or undertaking.[76]

b. Of Obligation With Collateral Security or Guaranty. Parol evidence would seem to be always permissible to connect an instrument containing an obligation to pay money with another instrument evidencing the giving of security for, or a guaranty of, payment, as this is in effect nothing more than identifying the subject-matter of the latter instrument, or explaining an ambiguity, and the latter instrument is usually of such a character as to show that it does not, standing alone, evidence the complete agreement of the parties.[77] And this is true even though the note or other obligation produced does not in all particulars correspond with a description thereof in the mortgage or other writing.[78]

8. Of Parol Agreement With Writing Between Different Persons. It has been held that where one of two contracting parties to an agreement in writing made a similar verbal agreement with a third person, expressly referred to in the writing, there could be no objection to connecting the parol agreement with the written one by parol evidence, and thus showing the terms of the parol agreement.[79]

9. Consideration — a. General Rule. As a general rule the recitals of a written instrument as to the consideration are not conclusive, and it is always competent to inquire into the consideration and show by parol or other extrinsic evidence what the real consideration was.[80] Thus it may be shown that the real

At law as well as in equity the illegality or vice of the consideration for a bill of sale may be shown and made available. Tribble v. Oldham, 5 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 137.

The distinction between sealed and unsealed instruments as to the right to impeach the consideration does not exist in Mississippi. Meyer v. Casey, 57 Miss. 615.

In an action to set aside a certificate of redemption executed by a sheriff, its recitals may be impeached by parol evidence showing that no redemption was in fact made, and no money paid to the sheriff. Cooper v. Finke, 38 Minn. 2, 35 N. W. 469.

The Illinois statute allowing the defense of failure of consideration of a note not only gives to the maker of negotiable paper the right to introduce verbal evidence to vary or contradict such paper, but also operates to abrogate the general elementary rule that parol evidence is not admissible as against another writing than the note, if such other written instrument relates to the consideration of the note, or was executed in the course of the same transaction as was the note, and under such circumstances that the note and such other instrument ought to be regarded as but parts of one and the same consideration for the transfer of several items of property, the actual consideration for each item may be shown by parol.[88] The principle admitting parol evidence to vary the consideration expressed in a written instrument does not rest upon the ground of fraud, accident, or mistake, and hence it is not necessary in order to form a basis for the admission of such evidence that the pleading should contain any allegation thereof.[89]

b. Application to Particular Instruments — (I) Sealed Instruments Generally. It was formerly held, although there was much conflict of opinion, that the clause stating the consideration in a deed or other instrument under seal must be held conclusive on the parties like other parts of the instrument and was not open to contradiction or explanation,[90] but the more modern decisions settle the rule that, although the consideration expressed in a sealed instrument is prima facie the sum paid or to be paid, it may still be shown by the parties that the real consideration is different from that expressed in the written instrument.[91]

(II) Deeds of Conveyance — (A) In General. Accordingly[92] it is held by an uncounted multitude of authorities that the true consideration of a deed of conveyance may always be inquired into, and shown by parol evidence,[93] for the transaction. New York L. Ins. Co. v. Easton, 69 Ill. App. 479; Baker v. Fawcett, 69 Ill. App. 300. See also Broadwell v. Sanderson, 29 Ill. App. 384.

Showing relation of principal and surety.— The admissibility of parol evidence to show the relation of principal and surety is within the rule that admits such evidence to show that the written instrument is void either for the want or failure of consideration, and this is no infringement of the rule excluding parol contemporaneous evidence to contradict or vary the terms of a written instrument. Port v. Robbins, 35 Iowa 208.

The terms of a written instrument cannot be varied nor can conditions not found therein be created by parol evidence, even though the defense to an action on the instrument is failure of consideration. Sargent v. Cooley, 12 N. D. 1, 94 N. W. 576.

Evidence is admissible to show that the real consideration of a deed to a railroad company was the company's promise to build a depot on the land, although the expressed consideration was "benefit to be derived from the building of the road and one dollar paid" (Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Neafus, 93 Ky. 53, 18 S. W. 1030, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 951. See also Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Doss, (Tex. Civ. App. 1896) 36 S. W. 497); that part of the consideration for a grant was that the property should not be used for the sale of intoxicating liquors (Hall v. Solomon, 61 Conn. 476, 23 Atl. 876, 29 Am. St. Rep. 218; Taylor v. Becker, 8 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 151, 6 Cinc. L. Bul. 25); that the consideration of a conveyance by a husband to his wife, reciting a valuable consideration, was her promise to execute her will, and devise to him one third of her estate, including said lands (Manning v. Pippen, 86 Ala. 357, 5 So. 572, 11 Am. St. Rep. 46); that, although a money consideration is recited, the true consideration of a deed was the agreement of the grantee to support the grantor (Rankin v. Wallace, 14 S. W. 79, 12 Ky. L. Rep. 97; Scott v. Scott, 3 B. Mon. (Ky.) 2. Contra, Thompson v. Corrie, 57 Md. 197), or some other persons (Wilfong v. Johnson, 41 W. Va. 283, 23 S. E. 730); that a conveyance of property in trust for a wife was made in consideration of her release of dower (Bullard v. Briggs, 7 Pick. (Mass.) 533, 19 Am. Dec. 292); that marriage was the consideration of a deed expressed to be for a money consideration only (Tolman v. Ward, 86 Me. 303, 29 Atl. 1081, 41 Am. St. Rep. 556; Eppes v. Randolph, 2 Call (Va.) 125; Villers v. Beaumont, Benl. 39, Dyer 146*a*. Contra, Betts v. Union Bank, 1 Harr. & G. (Md.) 175, 18 Am. Dec. 283); that the consideration for a deed of post-nuptial settlement moved from the wife's father, although it is recited to have been paid by the husband (Marks v. Spencer, 81 Va. 751); or that the price of the land was to depend on the number of square feet contained therein (Cardinal v. Hadley, 158 Mass. 352, 33 N. E. 575, 35 Am. St. Rep. 492).

Agreement preceding execution.— It is impossible to give effect to the doctrine that the consideration of a deed may be shown by parol without permitting the parties to prove does not affect in any manner the covenants of the grantor or grantee, and neither enlarges nor limits the grant." [94]

(B) Assumption of Encumbrances. It may be shown, although not expressed in a deed, that the grantee agreed as part of the consideration to pay or assume an existing encumbrance,[95] even though the deed contains a covenant of warranty against encumbrances, for such evidence does not destroy the warranty but leaves it in full force and effect except as to the specific encumbrance, the payment or assumption of which was a part of the consideration.[96]

(III) Other Instruments. The rule just stated in respect to evidence of consideration of deeds[97] has also been applied to assignments,[98] bills and notes,[99] bills

what agreement as to the consideration preceded the execution of the deed. Such agreement necessarily precedes the execution, and the fact that the consideration was agreed upon sometime prior to the execution and delivery of the deed does not preclude the grantor from showing what constituted the true consideration. Lowry v. Downey, 150 Ind. 364, 50 N. E. 79; Hays v. Peck, 107 Ind. 389, 8 N. E. 274.

A memorandum of real estate conveyed, and of the prices thereof per acre, made by the grantors, and furnished by one of the grantees to the conveyancer before the execution of the deed, can be introduced in evidence by the grantors, to show the true consideration. Guinotte v. Chouteau, 34 Mo. 154.

In an action on a covenant of seizin, as the damages are regulated by the amount of the purchase-money, parol evidence is admissible to prove a different amount from that mentioned in the deed. Henderson v. Henderson, 13 Mo. 151; Morse v. Shattuck, 4 N. H. 229, 17 Am. Dec. 419.

Testimony as to the value of land conveyed is inadmissible to rebut the prima facie evidence of the actual consideration as shown by the consideration expressed in the deed. Yenner v. Hammond, 36 Wis. 277.

Where a conveyance has been made by order of court on the application of the purchaser at a sale made under order of court, parol evidence is not admissible to prove the non-payment of the purchase-money; for it is the duty of the court to be satisfied that the money has been paid before it authorizes a conveyance, and the admission of parol evidence in an action at law to negative the adjudication would lead to inextricable confusion. unless the instrument is of such a nature that the failure to express a consideration renders it void under the statute of frauds.[14]

f. Consistency With Expressed Consideration. It has been laid down that the consideration to be shown by the parol evidence must be consistent with that stated in the writing, otherwise the evidence cannot be admitted.[15]

g. Altering or Defeating Legal Effect or Operation of Instrument — (i) In General. Where the effect of parol evidence contradicting the consideration expressed in the instrument or showing the true consideration to be different therefrom would be to change or defeat the legal operation and effect of the instrument, or to add new matter to an agreement complete upon its face, the evidence is not admissible; for in such case it comes within the rule which forbids the introduction of parol evidence to vary, contradict, or defeat a written instrument and not within the exception to that rule that parol evidence is admissible for the purpose of contradicting or showing that the true consideration is other and different from that expressed in the writing.[16]

Considerations held consistent with those expressed.— Where a deed from a husband to his wife recites a consideration of five dollars "and the further consideration of love and affection," evidence that the real consideration was an antenuptial agreement was held admissible, as this was not directly inconsistent with the consideration expressed. Barnes v. Black, 193 Pa. St. 447, 44 Atl. 550, 74 Am. St. Rep. 694. So where a deed conveys or assigns property "for value received" such recital is not inconsistent with, nor does it exclude, parol proof that the consideration for which the deed was made was executory in its character. Sullivan v. Lear, 23 Fla. 463, 2 So. 846, 11 Am. St. Rep. 388. Where the consideration of a mortgage on a separate statutory estate of a married woman was the joint promissory note of the married woman and her husband, it was not a contradiction or variation of the mortgage to prove that the consideration of the note was the individual indebtedness of the husband. Aiding implication.— Where the recited consideration of a contract between a principal and agent is the procuring of a purchaser for property, but there is a clear implication of a consideration consisting of the services in that behalf to be rendered by the agent, proof of facts which make out such implied consideration does not contradict, add to, or vary the written contract, but tends to support it according to the legitimate and proper interpretation. Goward v. Waters, 98 Mass. 596. See supra, XVI, C, 3.

But see Chappell v. Doe, 49 Ala. 153, holding that where a deed recited a cash consideration, it could not be shown, in an action at law, that the consideration was Confederate money), or in part for illegal attorney's fees (Macomb v. Wilkinson, 83 Mich. 486, 47 N. W. 336).

Evidence of a particular illegal motive which induced the party to execute an instrument is not admissible where the instrument is founded on a sufficient legal consideration. Patterson v. Fowler, 22 Ark. 396.

h. Good and Valuable Considerations. Legitimate considerations are either good or valuable, and it has been asserted as a distinction that where one of these is expressed, parol evidence cannot be admitted at law to show that the consideration was of the other kind; the reason being that if the consideration of the deed is only good it impresses upon the title the character of a deed of gift, while if the consideration expressed is a valuable one, the title is thereby impressed with the character of title by purchase; and hence that to permit the introduction of parol evidence to show that the consideration is of a different nature from that expressed would change the legal effect of the deed.[19] It is to be noted, however, that there are cases in which this distinction has not been observed,[20] or has been expressly denied.[21] It would certainly seem proper, where a deed expresses merely a nominal valuable consideration, to show a good consideration, such as natural love and affection, and such evidence has been admitted.[22] Similarly it has been held that notwithstanding a deed recites a money consideration it may be shown that it was in fact an advancement.[23]

i. Where Consideration Is Executory or Contractual. Where the statement in a written instrument as to the consideration is more than a mere statement of fact or acknowledgment of payment of a money consideration, and is of a contractual nature, as where the consideration consists of a specific and direct promise by one of the parties to do certain things, this part of the contract can no more be changed or modified by parol or extrinsic evidence than any other part, for a party has the right to make the consideration of his agreement of the essence of the contract, and when this is done the provision as to the consideration for the contract must stand upon the same plane as the other provisions of

26. Hinnemann v. Rosenback, 39 N. Y. 98, holding that where a party to a contract undertook to take a certain sum in money and "Five hundred dollars in an order on W.," this language did not necessarily mean that the order was to be payable in money, and it might be shown by parol that the order was to be for materials of the value stated. This was considered a case of aiding in the interpretation of the language of the contract by extrinsic evidence.

Nature of ambiguity.— An ambiguity, in order to authorize parol evidence, must relate to a subject treated of in the paper and must arise out of words used in treating that subject. Such an ambiguity never arises out of what was not written at all, but only out of what was written so blindly and imperfectly that its meaning is doubtful. Southampton v. Jessup, 173 N. Y. 84, 65 N. E. 949 [modifying 64 N. Y. App. Div. 525, 72 N. Y. Suppl. 312, 780].

Ambiguity brought out on cross-examination.— Where an expression in a written contract is shown by extrinsic matters to be ambiguous, the fact that the ambiguity was disclosed by defendant's cross-examination does not affect defendant's right to explain the ambiguity. Rogers v. Toilettes Co., 37 Misc. (N. Y.) 779, 76 N. Y. Suppl. 940.

but as to its particular application, it may be explained and properly directed.[31] Likewise where the writing is illegible parol evidence is necessarily admissible.[32] But where the language used is clear and unambiguous, extrinsic evidence is not admissible on the ground of aiding the construction, for in such case the only thing which could be accomplished would be to show the meaning of the writing to be other than what its terms express,[33] and the instrument cannot be varied or Where two writings construed together are unambiguous parol evidence is not admissible to explain their meaning. Harrison v. Tate, 100 Ga. 383, 28 S. E. 227.

The settled legal construction of the language used in a written instrument cannot be contradicted by parol. Self v. King, 28 Tex. 552; Godkin v. Monahan, 83 Fed. 116, 27 C. C. A. 410.

Parol evidence of prior agreements as to the meaning of ambiguous terms is inadmissible in the absence of fraud concealing the terms of the contract from the party executing it. Green v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 92 Fed. 873, 35 C. C. A. 68.

Where the language used is in its primary meaning unambiguous, and that meaning is not excluded by the context, and is sensible with reference to the extrinsic circumstances in which the parties to the instrument were placed at the time the writing was made, such primary meaning must be conclusively taken to be that which the parties intended and to state the intention of the parties, and no evidence is receivable to show that in fact the parties used the language in any other sense, or had any other intention. Hildreth v. Hartford, etc., Tramway Co., 73 Conn. 631, 48 Atl. 963.

A contract which has been interpreted by the supreme court is not ambiguous or uncertain, and on a new trial parol evidence cannot be introduced to show the intention of the parties, under Cal. Civ. Code, § 1649, and Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 1864, authorizing parol evidence in cases of doubtful and ambiguous contracts; for these sections do not apply when the courts are able to declare the true intent of the parties. San Diego Flume Co. v. Chase, (Cal. 1893) 32 Pac. 245.

The use of the words "more or less" in a writing concerning a sale of property does not create such an ambiguity as will let in parol evidence. Cabot v. Winsor, 1 Allen (Mass.) 546; Shickle v. Chouteau, etc., Iron Co., 10 Mo. App. 241 [affirmed in 84 Mo. 161].

The mere assertion by a party to a written contract that uncertainties exist in it will not open the door for admission of parol evidence, where the court can find no equivocal language in the contract. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Truskett, 67 Kan. 26, 72 Pac. 562.

resorted to except that which is furnished by the writing itself.[35] It is also well established that parol evidence is not admissible to give to a writing a construction conformable to the secret intentions which one or both of the parties may have entertained but which the writing fails to express.[36]

b. What Evidence Is Admissible — (i) Evidence Must Tend to Aid Construction. The parol evidence which can be admitted to explain the contract must be such as tends to show the correct interpretation of the language used, and its only purpose is to enable the court or jury to understand what the language really means; parol evidence which has no tendency to aid in the construction of the writing or to explain any ambiguity therein cannot be admitted.[37]

(ii) Acts of Parties. Where the meaning of the parties is uncertain from the words used and it is not within the power of the court to ascertain their meaning by reference to the body of the instrument, evidence of the acts of the parties contemporaneous with and immediately prior to the execution of the instrument may properly be considered.[38] The subsequent conduct of the parties acting under a contract the meaning of which is doubtful is also admissible to aid in the construction of the instrument and in determining the question of intent.[39]

(iii) Condition of Subject-Matter. A deed or other writing should be construed with reference to the actual state of the subject-matter at the time of its execution, and for that purpose extrinsic evidence may be admitted to place the court or jury in the position of the parties at the time of executing the instrument, and thus enable them to intelligently interpret the language used.[40]

(iv) Construction by Parties. Evidence of the practical construction given to an instrument of writing by the parties thereto may be admissible to explain its meaning when explanation is necessary.[41] But an unambiguous contract cannot be varied by evidence of a construction by the parties different from that which the language clearly imports.[42]

(v) Conversations and Statements of Parties. The conversations and statements of the parties at the time of or just previous to the execution of the contract between them may be admissible for the purpose of aiding in the construction of the writing;[43] but oral declarations of the parties made at or before the time of the execution of the instrument are not admissible for the purpose of showing an intention or purpose not therein expressed.[44] Conversations between and statements of the parties to a written contract after its execution have also been held admissible to explain an ambiguity in the writing.[45]

(vi) Expert Evidence. The admission of expert testimony to show what work was necessary to be done in order to comply with a building contract is not an infringement of the rule which forbids the admission of parol evidence to vary or contradict a written contract.[46]

(VII) Extrinsic Matters Referred to. Where a writing itself contains a reference to extrinsic matters these matters may be shown for the purpose of explaining the writing.[47]

(VIII) Facts Existing at Time. Facts existing at the time of the making of the contract may properly be considered for the purpose of interpreting the language used, where such language is obscure and ambiguous.[48]

(IX) Identification of Writing Referred to. Where a written contract or agreement contains a reference to some other writing, parol evidence is admissible for the purpose of identifying the writing so referred to.[49]

(X) Inducing Cause. The inducing causes leading up to the execution of a written instrument may also be shown to aid in its construction where its phraseology is doubtful or ambiguous.[50]

that the real intention of a party was other than what is clearly expressed by the writing.[52]

(xii) Knowledge of Subject-Matter. It has been held that, in cases of obscure instruments, the court may inquire into the actual state of knowledge which the parties to the instrument had on the subject of it, and where it involves questions of science, may refer to the state of public knowledge or learning on the subject at the time the instrument was made.[53]

(xiii) Origin of Liability. Parol evidence is admissible as to the origin of the debt for which a note was given, for this does not change or even purport to change any of the terms of the note.[54]

(xiv) Other Writings. Other writings relating to the same subject-matter are, especially if expressly referred to,[55] admissible in evidence to explain the agreement before the court,[56] or to aid the description of the subject-matter.[57] A reference to a particular writing, however, does not exclude other evidence than the writing so referred to.[58]

the contract may be admissible for the purpose of aiding the court in the interpretation of the instrument.[61]

(xvii) Purpose of Writing. In order to correctly ascertain the intentions of the parties to a deed, contract, or other instrument of writing, and properly to interpret the same, it is competent to inquire into the purpose for which the writing was executed, and to this end parol evidence is admissible.[62]

(xviii) Relations of Parties. Evidence is admissible to show the relations of the parties to the subject-matter and to each other, where, on the face of the contract, its terms are obscure.[63]

(xix) Rules of Association. Where the constitution and by-laws of an association prescribe the mode of performing contracts of a certain kind between members of the association, they become a part of a contract between such members, and are admissible in evidence in an action on such a contract to aid in its construction.[64]

(xx) Supplying Omissions. It has even been held that, when necessary to a correct interpretation of the instrument, an omission may be supplied;[65] but

ing of the words, and of the correct application of the language to the things described. Such evidence is received, not for the purpose of importing into the writing an intention not expressed therein, but simply with the view of elucidating the meaning of the words employed; and in its admission the line which separates evidence which aids the interpretation of what is in the instrument from direct evidence of intention independent of the instrument must be kept steadily in view, the duty of the court being to declare the meaning of what is written in the instrument and not of what was intended to be written.[68]

(XXII) Understanding of Parties. Parol or extrinsic evidence of the understanding of the parties in respect to the construction of a written instrument may be given to explain that which would otherwise be ambiguous,[69] and for this purpose evidence of declarations of a party made previous to or at the time of signing the contract is admissible.[70] But the understanding which one party to a contract has of its meaning is not evidence in his own favor and against the other party, to whom such understanding was not communicated, where the effect of the contract is in controversy.[71]

c. Latent and Patent Ambiguity — (I) Lord Bacon's Rule. It was laid down as the rule by Lord Bacon that a latent ambiguity may be explained by extrinsic evidence, but that a patent ambiguity may not;[72] and this has been very generally accepted by the courts as correct.[73] But this general distinction has

(II) Latent Ambiguity— (A) Rule Stated. A latent ambiguity arises when the writing upon its face appears clear and unambiguous, but there is some collateral matter which makes the meaning uncertain.[75] And it is so well established as to be beyond all possible dispute that parol or other extrinsic evidence is always admissible to explain a latent ambiguity in any written instrument.[76] The reason given for the rule is that as the ambiguity is raised by extrinsic evidence the same kind of evidence must be admitted to remove it.[77]

(B) Limitations of Rule. It is to be observed, however, that while parol evidence may be admitted in explanation where there is a latent ambiguity, it can do no more than explain the doubtful expressions of the instrument consistently with the relations of the parties and the other incidents of the contract.[78] The rule that where an ambiguity is created by parol it may be removed by parol was never intended to violate the rule that a writing shall not be contradicted or explained by inferior testimony. instrument itself removes the ambiguity it cannot be controlled.[79] When there are two tracts of land, to either of which the same description applies, and a deed purports to convey one of them by such description, and it is proposed to show by parol testimony, not that the intention was to convey one in particular, but that it was to convey both, the offer is not to remove an ambiguity and to identify a thing that has actually been conveyed, but rather to enlarge the operation of the instrument, and to make it convey two tracts of land, contrary to the expressed intention to convey one only. This is not evidence to explain a deed, but is simply evidence to add to its terms and make it convey more than it purports to convey and hence is not admissible.[80] The fact that there is in a writing a latent ambiguity which may be met or removed by parol evidence does not open the door for the admission of parol evidence generally or for any other purpose.[81]

(c) In What Latent Ambiguity Consists. The most ordinary instance of a latent ambiguity is where an instrument of writing contains a reference to a particular person or thing and is thus apparently clear upon its face, but it is shown by extrinsic evidence that there are two or more persons or things to whom or to which the description in the instrument might properly apply.[82]

C.) 269, 273, in which case the court stated an illustration as follows: "Thus if a man convey to his son John a house in the town of Columbia, 'being the house in which he now lives,' proof that he had two sons of that name would render it uncertain which of the two was meant. But if by the same testimony it should appear that one of those sons was in Europe at the time the deed was made, and the other son living in the house, the deed itself would remove the doubt of its being made to him who was then living in the house."

Where land is described by reference to a plat of the town on file, but the fact that there are two plats raises a doubt as to the property conveyed, extrinsic evidence is admissible to show the lot intended. Slosson v. Hall, 17 Minn. 95.

The appellation "junior" forms no part of a man's name (see, generally, NAMES) and hence, where there are two persons of the same name as the one mentioned in a writing, it may be shown by parol which was intended notwithstanding the fact that one was known as "junior." Where a grant is issued to a certain person, but no person of that name ever existed, it is a case of latent ambiguity and evidence is admissible to show who was the person intended,[83] and the same is true where a grantee is described by a wrong christian name.[84] Latent ambiguities also arise through the difficulty in applying to the land itself a description thereof contained in a written instrument,[85] and it has been held that where the ambiguity consists of a reference to records, documents, and descriptions outside of the writing, and which are necessary to be regarded as part of the description of the subject-matter, there is a latent ambiguity.[86] So when a person, by a written instrument, sells or contracts to sell a certain number of articles of a specified kind and owns more of such articles than the number mentioned in the writing, a case of latent ambiguity arises.[87] The courts also consider that a latent ambiguity may exist from the terms of the instrument itself,[88] as for example where a writing is capable of two constructions, both of which are in harmony with the language used.[89]

Suggestion as to intermediate cases.— It has been suggested that those cases in which the words are all sensible and have a settled meaning, but at the same time consistently admit of two interpretations according to the subject-matter in the contemplation of the parties, constitute an intermediate class partaking of the nature both of patent and latent ambiguities, and in such case evidence ought to be admitted showing the circumstances under which the contract was made and the subject-matter to which the parties refer.

(III) PATENT AMBIGUITY—(A) In General. What is usually termed a patent ambiguity[90] is such as exists or appears on the face of the writing itself.[91] That portion of Lord Bacon's rule in which he states that an ambiguity of this character cannot be explained by parol has frequently been repeated by the courts as a correct exposition of the law;[92] but it has also been subjected to much criticism.[93] Thus it has been said that it is too general,[94] and not of universal application,[95] at least where the word "ambiguity" is taken in its broad sense of doubtfulness, uncertainty, or double meaning.[96] It is certainly not true that an ambiguity appearing on the face of the paper, if that alone be looked to, cannot be explained by parol,[97] and the rule laid down by Lord Bacon that extrinsic evidence is not admissible to explain a patent ambiguity has never been acted upon in its widest extent,[98] for there are to be found in the reports many cases where, although the ambiguity was such as should undoubtedly be designated as patent, if that term be taken in its broad sense, the courts have admitted evidence to explain it[99] or to show the circumstances surrounding the transaction and the situation of the parties.[1] In addition to this there are many cases flatly repudiating this part of the rule and expressly holding that a patent as well as a latent ambiguity may be explained by extrinsic evidence.[2]

(B) Description of Land. The lack of uniformity in the cases is well illustrated by those relating to the description of land. Thus the principle that parol evidence is inadmissible to explain or correct a patent ambiguity has been frequently applied to such ambiguities in the description of land in a deed or other writing,[3] as for instance where there is a failure to recite the state, county,

Where the property is not described in a paper purporting to be a lease, the ambiguity is patent, and parol evidence is not admis-

town, or range in which the land is located.[4] On the other hand there are a number of cases holding that an omission of the name of the state, county, section, township, or range from the description of land in a writing may be supplied by parol,[5] some of which base their holding upon the ground that such an omission constitutes a latent ambiguity.[6]

(c) The True Rule. The true rule with regard to patent ambiguities must be taken to be this: The patent ambiguity which cannot be explained by parol evidence is that which remains uncertain after the court has received evidence of the surrounding circumstances and collateral facts which are of such a nature as to throw light upon the intention of the parties. In other words and more generally speaking if the court, after placing itself in the situation in which the parties stood at the time of executing the instrument, and with full understanding of the force and import of the words, cannot definitely ascertain the meaning and intention of the parties from the language of the instrument thus illustrated, it is a case of incurable and hopeless uncertainty and the instrument is so far inoperative and void; and it cannot be sustained or rendered operative by the introduction of evidence which would necessarily have the effect of adding new terms to the writing.[7]

d. Meaning of Words, Phrases, and Abbreviations — (i) In General. Where any doubt arises as to the true sense and meaning of the words themselves, or any difficulty as to their application under the surrounding circumstances, the sense and meaning of the language may be investigated and ascertained by evidence dehors the instrument, for both reason and common sense agree that by no other means can the language of the instrument be made to speak the real mind of the party. In this case parol evidence is admissible ex necessitate.[8] Evidence has been admitted under this principle to show the meaning of sible to explain it. Noyes v. Stauff, 5 Oreg. 455.

Another statement of the rule is as follows: "First. Where the instrument itself seems to be clear and certain on its face, and the ambiguity arises from some extrinsic or collateral matter, the ambiguity may be helped by parol evidence. Second. Where the ambiguity consists in the use of equivocal words designating the person or subject-matter, parol evidence of collateral or extrinsic matters may be introduced for the purpose of aiding the court in arriving at the meaning of the language used. Third. Where the ambiguity is such that a perusal of the instrument shows plainly that something more must be added before the reader can determine what of several things is meant, the rule is inflexible that parol evidence cannot be admitted to supply the deficiency," and the last class constitutes the patent ambiguity of Lord Bacon. 96. "Breeder."— As to the admissibility of evidence to explain the term "breeder" the decisions are not uniform. In St. Paul, etc., Trust Co. v. Harrison, 64 Minn. 300, 66 N. W. 980, the term was considered a technical one which might be explained by farmers, horsemen, and stockmen engaged in such business. In Connable v. Clark, 26 Mo. App. 162, it was held that the words "good breeder" as applied to a jack were properly treated as a technical term which might be explained, but the court said that the words, if used separately, could be easily interpreted. And the opinion intimated in this case finds support in Cross v. Thompson, 50 Kan. 627, 32 Pac. 357, where the court held squarely that the words "breeder and foal getter" were so familiar and easily understood as to preclude the admission of evidence as to their meaning.

this rule may apply that the word or phrase should have no fixed meaning in ordinary usage, for even though it has such a meaning, yet if it also has a technical meaning in the language of commerce or art, parol evidence is admissible to show that it was used in the latter sense,[97] and, if the court is satisfied that it was so used,[98] extrinsic evidence is admissible to explain what the technical meaning is.[99] On the other hand where by giving a word its strict technical legal meaning a contract will be rendered entirely meaningless, it is competent to show by parol the sense in which the word was used, if it is used by laymen in a different sense, or has a popular or common meaning, and by doing so the contract may be given force and effect.[1]

(iv) Abbreviations, Signs, and Cipher Writings. It has also been held that parol evidence is admissible to explain the meaning of abbreviations appearing in a written instrument;[2] but this principle is of course not applicable in the case of those abbreviations of the meanings of which the courts will take judicial notice.[3] Similarly where a writing contains certain signs or characters the meaning of which is not commonly known, although it is familiar to those among whom such signs or characters are used, parol evidence of their meaning is admissible.[4] There is a sort of mercantile shorthand made up of few and short expressions which generally convey the full meaning and intention of the par-

dence varying the date of a written instrument, where the date is a material part of the contract or undertaking, so that to vary the date would vary the rights of the parties.[14] Such a case arises where a promissory note is made payable a certain time after date,[15] where the date is referred to in the body of the contract as fixing the time of payment,[16] or where the date of a lease shows the remaining time it has to run and is thus obviously an essential item in the description of the interest created by the instrument, without the fixing of which the whole interest under the lease would be indeterminate.[17] But where a contract provided that certain work should be completed within a certain number of days "after the date of the execution of the contract," parol evidence was admitted to show that the contract was executed and delivered at a date subsequent to the date of the instrument.[18]

13. Discharge, Performance, and the Like — a. In General. It is always competent for a party to a written contract or obligation to show that his liability thereunder has been terminated by some method known to the law.[19] Thus it is permissible to show that a contract or other obligation has been fully discharged, as this does not vary the terms of the writing in any particular,[20] or that a party has been released from all or a part of his obligations under the writing.[21] It is also permissible to show that the obligations which a party to a writing has thereby assumed have been performed by him,[22] or that the written agreement between the parties has been entirely rescinded, abrogated, or abandoned by them.[23]

b. Payment or Accord and Satisfaction. Where a writing evidences an obligation or a promise to pay money, or is based upon a money consideration, it is admissible to show by extrinsic evidence that the money has been paid,[24] or the obligation satisfied.[25] And this is true even though the evidence tends to show a payment or satisfaction other than in money or in the method provided by the writing, provided the payment or satisfaction actually made has been accepted by the parties as a compliance with the obligation which the writing shows; or is in accordance with an agreement that the obligation may be satisfied in that manner.[26] A person liable upon a written instrument may show that his liability has been discharged by accord and satisfaction.[27]

c. Waiver and Estoppel. Parol or other extrinsic evidence has been admitted to show that a party to a contract has waived the benefit of or become estopped to assert his rights under some or all of the provisions in his favor in the agreement.[28]

14. Dispute as to Contractual Character of Writing. The rule which excludes parol evidence to contradict or vary the terms of a written agreement can be applied only when a written agreement is proved to exist between the parties, and consequently parol evidence is admissible to show that a writing, although purporting on its face to be a contract, was not in fact intended by the parties to be such.[29]

Where a paper set up as an agreement is not admitted to be such by the party sought to be affected by it and there is a conflict of evidence on the question whether it is such agreement or not, the court will not exclude testimony adduced to prove a verbal agreement differing in its terms from the written one, but will merely direct the jury to disregard such testimony in case they find the writing to be the agreement of the parties. 15. Formal Parts of Instrument. The reasons upon which the rule excluding parol evidence to add to, vary, or contradict a written instrument is founded confine it to the essential and substantial parts of the writing and the rule does not apply to those parts which are merely formal.[30]

16. Identification of Writing. Evidence, the sole purpose of which is to identify a writing offered in evidence, is not objectionable as tending to vary or contradict it.[31]

17. Inducing Cause. It has been held that where the execution of a written instrument has been induced by an oral stipulation or agreement made at the time, on the faith of which the party executed the writing and without which he would not have executed it, but such agreement or stipulation is omitted from the writing, even if its omission is not due to fraud or mistake, evidence of the oral agreement or stipulation may be given, although it may have the effect of varying the contract or obligation evidenced by the writing,[32] where there has been an attempt to make a fraudulent use of the instrument in violation of such promise or agreement, or where the circumstances would make the use of the writing for any purpose inconsistent with such agreement dishonest or fraudulent.[33] This rule is put upon the ground that the attempt by one party afterward to take advantage of the omission of such terms from the contract is a fraud upon the other party who was induced to execute it upon the faith of

18. Invalidating or Defeating Operation of Instrument — a. In General. The objection to parol evidence does not apply where it is offered not for the purpose of contradicting or varying the effect of a written contract of admitted authority, but to disprove the legal existence or rebut the operation of the instrument,[35] and in order to determine the validity of the writing the true character of the transaction may always be shown.[36] So also evidence which is offered not for the purpose of varying or contradicting the terms of a written instrument but to show that it was never intended to be operative between the parties and never in fact had any legal existence as a contract or grant is admissible.[37]

But compare Thomas v. Grise, 1 Pennew. (Del.) 381, 41 Atl. 883, holding that fraud can be proved under the general issue.

The Illinois Practice Act requires a verified affidavit denying the execution of the contract sued on in order to prevent the contract from proving itself, and, in the absence of a compliance with this requirement, evidence cannot be admitted to prove that a provision giving the buyer an option to rescind before a certain day was fraudulently omitted from an order for a certain article. only for the purpose of proving fraud in a written agreement cannot be legally used to control or vary the terms of such agreement.[63]

(III) Intention to Defraud Third Persons. It is not permissible for one party to a writing, in an action against the other party, to show by parol evidence that at the time it was executed it was agreed to be a mere sham and made only for the purpose of deceiving the creditors of one of the parties.[64]

f. Illegality. The rule which forbids the introduction of parol evidence to contradict, add to, or vary a written instrument does not extend to evidence offered to show that the contract was made in furtherance of objects forbidden by statute, by the common law, or by the general policy of the law.[65] Thus parol evidence is admissible to show that, although the writing evidencing a transaction is legal upon its face, the real transaction is tainted with usury;[66] or

Violation of law in carrying out contract. — In an action for the hire of convicts under a written contract legal on its face, parol evidence is not admissible to show that by a private understanding the hirers were to work the convicts in an illegal manner, for the fact that the hirers, with or without the consent of the public officer with whom the contract was made, violated the law in the working or treatment of the convicts, would furnish no reason for not paying the hire at the rate stipulated in the contract. that a contract valid on its face was intended, not as a commercial transaction, but as a mere wager on the future state of the market.[67]

g. Lack of Authority to Execute Instrument. Where an instrument purporting to bind one person is executed by another, parol evidence is competent to show whether the latter had authority to sign an instrument in the terms of those which he did sign, or whether the instrument has been accepted by the person to be bound as his contract.[68] So also extrinsic evidence is admissible to show the lack of authority of public officers, as of the officer who issued a patent[69] or bounty order.[70]

h. Matters Relating to Execution or Delivery. The rule that antecedent and contemporaneous oral statements cannot be received to alter or vary the terms of a written instrument presupposes the due execution and delivery of the writing in a way to bind both parties as to its terms; and it has no application when the execution of the writing is the subject of inquiry, but upon the issue of execution vel non what was said and done at the time and by whom are the vital facts, and evidence as to these matters is admissible.[71] Delivery of a deed or other written instrument is the final act of the parties by which the party executing the instrument puts it into the possession of the other party, both intending thereby to make it operative and binding;[72] but it is not a part of the contract and is not

Collateral agreement.— Parol evidence is admissible to show that at the time a note was given for money lent, a collateral agreement was made to pay a certain sum as extra interest, and that all the payments made were for the extra interest and not on the note, as this does not control or modify the written contract executed by the parties, but establishes an independent fact or a collateral agreement incidentally connected with the written contract. Rohan v. Hanson, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 44.

An agreement to extend a note at usurious rates upon payment of a part at maturity cannot be shown by parol, where the note does not stipulate the usurious interest. In such case the agreement to extend is alone affected by the usury. Allen v. Turnham, 83 Ala. 323, 3 So. 854.

Place of payment.— Where money was lent by a citizen of New York to a firm doing business in Iowa, and the money was remitted to them there, and a certificate of deposit taken, dated in Iowa, by which the firm acknowledged the receipt of the money and promised to pay it to the order of the lender one year from date, on the return of the certificate, with interest at the rate of ten per cent per annum, a lawful rate of interest in Iowa, parol evidence was held inadmissible, in an action on the certificate, to prove that it was a part of the contract that the principal and interest mentioned in the certificate should be payable in New York, where the rate of interest named would be usurious. Potter v. Tallman, 35 Barb. (N. Y.) 182.

A deed purporting to be an absolute conveyance of land cannot be avoided or controlled in its construction by parol evidence to show that it is in reality a mortgage or assurance made for the payment of money, and that the contract on which it was made was usurious, since the effect of such proof would be to vary the legal effect and import of the deed by parol evidence. proved by it.[73] The intent and purpose thereby to make the instrument effective is generally inferred from the act thus changing the custody, or from the fact that the party to whom it purports to be executed has it in his possession, but this may be explained and rebutted by parol evidence,[74] and declarations of intentions connected with the execution and delivery and the circumstances attending the same may properly come in as part of the res gestæ.[75] Thus it may be shown that there never was any valid and effective delivery of the instrument,[76] or that an apparent delivery was without authority,[77] or was only in escrow.[78] It may also be shown that the party executing the instrument handed it to the other party, not as a final delivery, but to be examined and returned,[79] or for the purpose of being retained until some precedent act was done by the party to whom it purported to be executed;[80] or that the party obtained possession of it by accident, and against the will of the other party;[81] or that by mistake a wrong paper was delivered.[82] Similarly, it may be shown by parol that an instrument in the form of a contract was accepted by the person to whom it was delivered under the belief that it was a mere receipt, to which he was entitled.[83]

recognized as one of the grounds of equity jurisdiction;[85] and while many authorities declare that evidence of mistake is admissible only in equity and not in a court of law,[86] this rule is by no means universal, and there are many cases in the books, especially since the tendency has grown up to obliterate the sharp distinctions between law and equity, in which parol evidence has been held admissible to show a mistake in reducing the agreement to writing irrespective of the form of the action and whether it is in fact an action at law or a suit in equity.[87] In order that parol evidence may be admissible to show a mistake in

(II) Application to Particular Instruments—(A) Deeds. The rule that parol evidence is admissible to show a mistake in a written instrument has been frequently applied to deeds;[89] most commonly in proceedings brought for the purpose of reformation,[90] or other proceedings in equity,[91] but also in actions at law.[92] Thus evidence has been admitted to show a mistake in the name of the grantee;[93] the description of the property conveyed;[94] the insertion of courses and distances;[95] or as to the quantity of land;[96] or in stating the district wherein the property lies.[97] It has also been held admissible to show that the property

97. Way v. Lowery, 72 Ga. 63, holding that a county map was admissible in evidence to show that the word "seventh," as contained in the deed descriptive of the district in which the property lay, was inserted by mistake and "seventeenth" was intended; the map showing no such district as the seventh.

conveyed was not that which was sold,[98] or that property intended to be conveyed was omitted by mistake.[99]

(B) Other Instruments. Evidence to show mistake has also been admitted in the case of assignments,[1] bills and notes,[2] contracts generally,[3] contracts of carriage,[4] contracts of insurance,[5] contracts of partnership,[6] contracts of sale,[7] leases,[8] mortgages,[9] and deeds of trust.[10]

(III) Character of Mistake. The rule admitting parol evidence in case a written instrument through mistake does not correctly express the intention of the parties applies only in cases of mistake of fact and not where a party has contracted under a mistake of law.[11] In order to render parol evidence admissible to contradict the terms of a writing on the ground of mistake, it must clearly appear that such mistake was mutual.[12] Where the person sought to be bound by a writing has carelessly signed the same without reading it, the fact that it is averred not to contain the contract as made furnishes no ground for admitting parol evidence to vary its terms, for it is not the duty of courts to relieve parties from the results of their own gross negligence.[13]

Where the legal effect of a contract is to bind certain persons as principals, such persons cannot, by parol, defeat the effect of such contract, by showing that some other person was to be bound thereby and not themselves. Weir Furnace Co. v. Bodwell, 73 Mo. App. 389, holding it to be settled law in Missouri that where an association assumes to enter into a contract in a corporate capacity, and the party dealing with the association contracts with it as if it were a corporation, the individual members of the association can be held liable as partners, in the absence of any stipulation that a corporation to be organized thereafter shall be alone looked to for payment; where corporate promoters enter into a written contract for and in the name of a future corporation they cannot by parol defeat the effect of such contract by showing that the future corporation was to be bound thereby and not themselves. party thereto acts not for himself but for another, to show the real party in interest.[32]

c. Character in Which Party Acts or Contracts. Where there is on the face of a contract ambiguity as to the character in which a party contracts, the door is open to parol evidence, which cannot in such case be said to vary the contract.[33] Thus, where an executor, administrator, guardian, or other fiduciary is a party to an instrument, parol evidence is admissible to show that he acted in his fiduciary capacity;[34] and where there is such ambiguity on the face of an instrument or agreement made or signed by a public or corporate officer as to be consistent with the construction, either that he means to bind himself personally, or that he acts in his official capacity, parol evidence is clearly admissible to prove the circumstances under which the contract was made and the true nature of the transaction, in order to show in what character he acted.[35] But where the legal effect of an instrument is to bind the officers by whom it is signed alone, and the name of the corporation does not appear on the instrument in such a way as to render it doubtful from the paper itself whether the corporation or the officers were intended to be bound, parol evidence is not admissible to show that the officers acted only in their official capacity.[36]

d. Individual or Partnership Contract. Parol evidence has been held to be admissible to show that an instrument executed by one partner individually is intended as a firm obligation and is binding upon the firm,[37] or was made for the use and benefit of the firm,[38] especially where the instrument contains something indicating that it is more than a mere personal obligation.[39] It may also be shown by parol that the name of an individual appearing as a party to an instrument is a partnership name,[40] and that the contract or obligation is that of the firm;[41] and similarly where several persons have formed a partnership but have not adopted any firm-name, and one of them has made a contract in his own name with a person who knows he is acting for the firm, parol evidence is admissible to bind the firm on such contract.[42] Where an instrument is executed by several persons, it is competent to show by parol, when properly pleaded, that such persons composed a partnership and that they executed the instrument as a firm obligation,[43] or that the transaction was a partnership one and for the benefit of the firm.[44] Where the title to land purchased by the members of a firm is taken in the individual names of the persons composing the firm, parol evidence is admissible to show that the lands were purchased for partnership purposes and paid for with partnership funds,[45] and where land is purchased or held in the name of one partner, parol evidence is admissible to prove that the purchase was for the use and benefit of the firm, thus showing a resulting trust in favor of the firm.[46]

e. Identification of Parties. Where a person claims the benefit of an instrument in writing, or it is sought to charge him thereunder, parol evidence is admissible for the purpose of identifying such person as the one named in the instrument.[47]

Conflicting authorities.— It is to be noted that, while the principles set forth in the text are well settled and supported, there is the usual lack of uniformity in the application thereof to particular states of facts; and several of the cases cited supra, note 35, are, when the instrument in question is looked at, difficult to distinguish from the cases cited in this note.

f. Relations of Parties. The relation actually existing between parties to an instrument may be shown by parol, where the effect of such evidence is not to vary the effect of the writing,[48] but where a written paper appears to be a joint undertaking of all the signers, parol evidence is not admissible to show that some of the signers were parties of the first part contracting with the others as parties of the second part.[49]

g. Mistake or Variance in Name. While there are cases supporting the rule that a written instrument can be reformed only in equity and hence that in an action or proceeding at law parol evidence is not admissible to show a mistake in the name of a party,[50] the better and more modern rule is that at law as well as in equity a mistake or variance in the name of a party may be shown and parol evidence admitted to show the real party intended.[51]

24. Place of Execution. The place at which an instrument was executed, not being an essential part of the writing, parol evidence is admissible to show that the instrument was executed at a place different from the one at which it purports to have been executed.[52]

the proof of a collateral parol agreement which is inconsistent with the written terms equally forbids the proof of one which is inconsistent with its implied conditions.[57]

c. Completeness of Writing. In order to let in parol evidence of collateral agreements relating to the same subject-matter as a written agreement between the same parties, it must appear that the writing was not intended to embrace the entire agreement of the parties.[58] The only criterion of the completeness of a written contract as a full expression of the agreement of the parties is the writing itself. If it imports on its face to be a complete expression of the whole agreement — that is, contains such language as imports a complete legal obligation — it is conclusively presumed that the parties have introduced into it every material term, and parol evidence cannot be admitted to add another term, although the writing is silent as to the particular one to which the parol evidence is directed.[59] The writing cannot be proved to be incomplete by going outside and proving that there was an oral stipulation entered into and not contained in the written agreement,[60] nor can parol evidence be admitted to prove a contemporaneous agreement that a written instrument which appears upon its face to be duly executed, intelligible, unambiguous, reasonable, and complete, should be considered only as the basis or outline of a contract to be subsequently filled out with stipulations other than those contained in the writing.[61]

d. Matters of Inducement. The general rule admitting parol evidence of a collateral agreement[62] is especially applicable where such agreement constituted a part of the consideration of the written agreement,[63] or operated as an inducement for entering into it,[64] and indeed there are many cases asserting or intimating that it is necessary in order to render proof of the oral agreement admissible that it should have been of this character.[65]

e. Subject of Collateral Agreement. It has been asserted that where the parties have reduced a contract to writing, in order to warrant the introduction of parol evidence of a matter as collateral, it must relate to a subject distinct from that to which the writing relates.[66] On the other hand there are cases holding that the rule against parol evidence does not apply where a distinct, collateral, contemporaneous agreement, independent of and not varying the written agreement, is offered in evidence, although it relates to the same subject-matter.[67] This conflict may be explained upon the theory that in the first class of cases the court had in view the subject of the writing in the more confined sense of the term, while in the latter class the court had reference to the general subject-matter of the agreement. To illustrate, the rule first set forth has been held not to exclude evidence of a collateral agreement of warranty or guaranty as to articles, the sale of which is evidenced by the written instrument, for it has been said that the writing is limited to the article sold as such, while the guaranty or warranty is limited to the capacity or quality of the article;[68] yet it would hardly be an improper course of reasoning, and would lead to the same result, to say that the subject of the agreement is the sale of articles of a particular capacity or quality, and that, while the sale is evidenced by a writing, the agreement as to capacity or quality is suffered to rest in parol.

f. Agreement Must Be Separate and Independent. It has been held that in order to admit parol evidence of a collateral agreement as to a transaction evidenced by a writing, the agreement must be separate and distinct from and independent of that which the writing purports to express.[69] In the application of this rule the existence of a written lease precludes evidence of an alleged agreement of the lessor to make certain repairs not referred to in the lease.[70] A bill of sale or written contract for the sale of personal property precludes evidence of a warranty not referred to in the writing,[71] and a written contract of warranty precludes evidence of any other warranty.[72]

g. Particular Writings — (I) Assignments. A written instrument evidencing an assignment does not preclude parol evidence of a collateral agreement between the parties which does not contradict or vary the terms of the instrument.[73]

(II) Bills and Notes. Bills and notes and instruments of a like character do not as a rule even purport to express the entire contract or agreement between the parties thereto, and hence parol evidence is admissible to show collateral agreements between such parties,[74] provided such agreements are not inconsistent understood of course that the parol evidence must not be inconsistent with the written instrument.[84]

(VI) Contracts of Partnership. Parol evidence is admissible to show an agreement collateral to but not inconsistent with a contract of partnership.[85]

(VII) Leases. The existence of a written lease does not preclude parol evidence of a collateral agreement between the lessor and the lessee,[86] unless it is inconsistent with or contradictory to the terms of the written instrument.[87] Thus it may be shown that there was an independent agreement of the lessor to make certain repairs[88] or to provide certain fixtures,[89] a warranty as to the condition of the premises,[90] or a contemporaneous promise of the landlord that the adjoining premises shall not be used in a manner inconsistent with the convenient use of the demised premises.[91] So also it has been held admissible to show that at the time of the execution of the lease the lessor expressly reserved by parol the crop then growing upon the demised premises.[92]

denced by a judicial record, provided of course the evidence does not tend to contradict the record.[95]

(x) Sales of Personalty. Evidence of a parol contemporaneous agreement connected with a sale of personalty is admissible, although the sale is evidenced by a written instrument,[96] provided such agreement does not tend to vary or contradict the terms of the writing itself.[97] Thus evidence has been admitted to show that there was an oral warranty with respect to the articles sold,[98] or that there were certain reservations or limitations agreed upon by the parties, and consistent with the writing but not expressed therein,[99] or that the seller agreed to advertise the goods sold.[1] So also it has been held that an agreement by the vendor of a stock of goods or business establishment not to engage in the same business at a particular place or for a specified time may be shown.[2]

(xi) Sales of Realty. Notwithstanding the fact that a sale of realty is evidenced by a deed or other written instrument, the parties may show by parol prior or contemporaneous agreements collateral to the transaction, subject of course to the limitation that such evidence must not tend to vary or contradict the writing, but must be consistent therewith.[3] Thus it may be shown that there were certain collateral agreements between the parties concerning the assumption or payment of encumbrances upon the property,[4] or that there were certain reser-

Showing signer to be witness merely.— Parol evidence is admissible to show that a person whose name appears on a written instrument in the usual and proper place for the name of a subscribing witness, but without any attestation clause to show in what capacity he signed, was in fact a witness. Garrison v. Owen, 1 Pinn. (Wis.) 471. See also Tombler v. Reitz, 134 Ind. 9, 33 N. E. 789, holding that parol evidence may be admitted to show that a person who signed his name on the back of a note, secured by mortgage, did so not as an indorser but as a witness to the transaction.

When rule not applicable.— The rule admitting extraneous evidence to show the real character of a conveyance of realty is not applicable to a contract to convey land, where the party to be charged derived his title from a stranger; for the rule can only be applied where the complaining party parts with the title, and it passes to respondent. 38. Other illustrations.—Such evidence has also been admitted where defendant authorized plaintiffs to sell certain lots, agreeing on their selling enough to realize fifty-five hundred dollars to her, to convey the remainder to them, to show what lots were sold and therefore what lots should be conveyed (Stamets v. Deniston, 193 Pa. St. 548, 44 Atl. 575); where an agreement recited that "great difficulties had arisen" but did not set forth what they were, to show that a

though the contract or transaction as to which the evidence is sought to be introduced is of such a nature that by the statute of frauds it is required to be in writing, for the evidence does not supply an omission and thus make a contract which the law requires to be in writing, rest in parol, but merely tends to explain an ambiguity, which is permissible.[39] Of course, if the instrument is not ambiguous as to the subject-matter, but clearly designates it, parol evidence is not admissible, for in such case its only effect would be to vary the writing.[40]

b. Imperfect or Inaccurate Description. Thus where the subject-matter of the writing is imperfectly described therein or the description is in some respects inaccurate, ambiguous, or very general in character, it is always competent to aid the description and identify the subject-matter to which it is intended to apply and to apply the description to such subject-matter by extrinsic evidence not inconsistent with what is written.[41]

certain claim was among the difficulties and was settled by the agreement (Wood v. Lee, 5 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 50); where the articles of a corporation declared that one of the purposes of its organization was "to own, manufacture, sell, and lease directory machines" without describing or specifying them, to show that the machines meant were those for which a patent had been applied for by one of the incorporators and were the same as those which were alleged to infringe another patent (National Mechanical Directory Co. v. Polk, 121 Fed. 742, 58 C. C. A. 24); where a physician sold the good-will of his practice to another by written contract, to show in what locality the seller practised his profession (Warfield v. Booth, 33 Md. 63); where two persons entered into a partnership by which one agreed to pay the debts of the other, to show what the other's debts were (Goldbeck v. Eisele, 8 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 512); where a person contracted to "make a deed for 500 acres of land as soon as I get my warrant laid," to show that he then had a one-thousand-acre preëmption warrant and that the parties intended that the five hundred acres should be conveyed out of it (Peyton v. Matson, Litt. Sel. Cas. (Ky.) 37); to prove that land granted to the husband of a demandant is the same land out of which dower is demanded (Keefer v. Young, 2 Harr. & J. (Md.) 53); and to prove that a certain transaction between two parties was not within a contract of agency between them, even though the contract stated that it contained all the contracts between the parties, and that no verbal agreement should be binding (Springfield Fertilizer Co. v. Tompkins, 16 Ind. App. 403, 45 N. E. 615). So also it has been held that, where the defense in ejectment is an outstanding title in another, extrinsic evidence is admissible to show that the descriptions in the deed relied on and in plaintiff's deed cover the same premises, unless such descriptions be repugnant to each other. Schultz v. Lindell, 30 Mo. 310.

In reference to judicial proceedings evidence has been admitted to identify the subject-matter of a suit (Hobart v. Beers, 26 Kan. 329); property attached (Darling v. Dodge, 36 Me. 370); replevied (Pool v. Tucker, 36 Ill. App. 377), or levied on under an execution (Elliott v. Hart, 45 Mich. 234, 7 N. W. 812; Morgan v. Spangler, 14 Ohio St. 102; Wildasin v. Bare, 171 Pa. St. 387, 33 Atl. 365; Titusville Novelty Iron Works' Appeal, 77 Pa. St. 103; Scott v. Sheakly, 3 Watts (Pa.) 50); to show what was included in the inventory of an administrator (Wheeler v. Smith, 13 Iowa 564); to show that a particular action was included in a written agreement to settle all actions between the parties, although it was brought in the name of one of the parties as next friend to his son, who was a minor (Lawson v. McAnulty, 1 Pittsb. (Pa.) 200); to identify a judgment as having been rendered on a replevin bond signed by plaintiff at defendant's request (Knickerbocker v. Wilcox, 83 Mich. 200, 47 N. W. 123, 21 Am. St. Rep. 595); to identify the matters submitted to arbitrators or referees and to prove that they acted upon them (Buck v. Spofford, 35 Me. 526; Hoagland v. Veghte, 23 N. J. L. 92; Osborne v. Calvert, 83 N. C. 365); and to identify a note designated in an award as "the note of M." (Bancroft v. Grover, 23 Wis. 463, 99 Am. Dec. 195).

h. Sufficiency of Description to Admit Parol Evidence. In order to admit parol evidence to aid in the description of the subject-matter of a deed or other writing, there must be some such description as will serve as a foundation for such evidence; that is to say, the writing must at least give some data from which the description may be found and made certain. Evidence is not admissible to identify the property, where the description thereof is so vague as to amount practically to no description at all,[53] or as it has been expressed, parol evidence cannot be admitted, first to describe the subject-matter of the deed or other writing and then to apply the description.[54] But any description, however general and indefinite, which is capable of being made certain by other evidence is sufficient to sustain the writing and admit of parol evidence to identify the property meant.[55]

Texas.— Coker v. Roberts, 71 Tex. 597, 9 S. W. 665; Pierson v. Sanger, (Civ. App. 1899) 51 S. W. 869.

See 20 Cent. Dig. tit. "Evidence," § 2121. See infra, XVI, C, 32, b, (II).

The test of the admissibility of evidence dehors the deed is involved in the question whether it tends to explain some descriptive word or expression contained in it, as to show that such phraseology, otherwise of doubtful import, contains in itself, with such explanation, an identification of the land conveyed. The rule is founded on the maxim, "Id certum est quod certum reddi potest." Blow v. Vaughan, 105 N. C. 198, 10 S. E. 891.

Descriptions held not sufficient.— The following descriptions have been held too vague and indefinite to receive aid by parol evidence: "Thirty three or four thousand acres of land situate in the county Surry, between Rockford and the Blue Ride" (Worth v. Simmons, 121 N. C. 357, 28 S. E. 528); "your lot" (Farthing v. Rochelle, 131 N. C. 563, 43 S. E. 1); "adjoining the lands of J. R. Conner and others, and containing fifty acres, more or less" (Wilson v. Johnson, 105 N. C. 211, 10 S. E. 895); the "forty acres tract" (Johnson v. Fecht, 94 Mo. App. 605, 68 S. W. 615); all the crop "raised on" certain land, in a chattel mortgage, the year not being stated (Eggert v. White, 59 Iowa 464, 13 N. W. 426); and "a one horse wagon," being the only description in a chattel mortgage, and the mortgagor having four such wagons (Holman v. Whitaker, 119 N. C. 113, 25 S. E. 793).

See 20 Cent. Dig. tit. "Evidence," § 2121.

Where natural boundaries and the lines of adjoining proprietors are called for in the description of land in a complaint for the recovery of the same and defendant admits that he holds possession of the land claimed by the complainant, the description is not too indefinite to admit of parol evidence to identify the land. Wellons v. Jordan, 83 N. C. 371.

That land is well known in the locality by the description given in a deed may be shown by parol evidence, no matter how vague the description may appear. Shewalter v. Pirner, 55 Mo. 218; Webster v. Blount, 39 Mo. 500; Vasquez v. Richardson, 19 Mo. 96; Bates v. State Bank, 15 Mo. 309, 55 Am. Dec. 145; Hart v. Rector, 7 Mo. 531.

Descriptions held sufficient.— The following descriptions have been held not too vague or indefinite to be aided by parol: The "entire crop" of a mortgagor, "of every description, raised by him annually," until the debt is paid (Varnum v. State, 78 Ala. 28); "any of my black walnut trees, not exceeding fifteen in number, that will girth eight feet six inches in circumference, and under ten feet," in a written agreement to sell the same (Dunkart v. Rineheart, 89 N. C. 354); "homestead farm" (Hunsecker's Estate, 6 Pa. Dist. 202, 19 Pa. Co. Ct. 14); a certain person's

i. Different Descriptions in Different Instruments. Where different instruments relating to property describe the same in a different manner, it may be

"Enfield property" (Packard v. Putnam, 57 N. H. 43); "water lot 36 in Kinzie's addition to Chicago" (Chicago Dock, etc., Co. v. Kinzie, 93 Ill. 415); "thirty acres of land situated in Stony Creek township, adjoining the lands of W. J. and B." (Wilkins v. Jones, 119 N. C. 95, 25 S. E. 789); "twenty-five head of horses," in a mortgage (Barker v. Wheelip, 5 Humphr. (Tenn.) 329, 42 Am. Dec. 432); "Rose Hill," in a lease (Dougherty v. Chesnutt, 86 Tenn. 1, 5 S. W. 444); "known as the property of the late George Robertson, deceased," being the description of land in a partition decree (Calloway v. Henderson, 130 Mo. 77, 32 S. W. 34); "one-half of boat," in an assignment of a year's support to a widow, parol evidence being admissible to show that a particular boat was the only one in which the husband had any interest at the time of his death (Lupton v. Lupton, 117 N. C. 30, 23 S. E. 184); and "my entire crop of cotton and corn of the present year," in a mortgage (Ellis v. Martin, 60 Ala. 394. See also Smith v. Fields, 79 Ala. 335; Wasson v. Connor, 54 Miss. 351). Parol evidence has also been admitted to show that the parties to a written lease of "four acres out of lot 4" had, when it was made, agreed on certain boundaries thereof (Schneider v. Patterson, 38 Nebr. 680, 57 N. W. 398).

In the case of deeds a description which gives the beginning corner and the several courses, so that it may be easily identified, is sufficient, and parol evidence is admissible to identify the land, where its identity is called in question. Orr v. How, 55 Mo. 328. The following descriptions have been held sufficient to admit evidence: "Situated in said Phipsburg near the east end of the old Winnegance mill-dam, and being the same land said to have been conveyed to said Reuben S. by his late father, Wm. Morse, and reserved from a farm conveyed to Albion W. Morse, dated July 10, 1850, and recorded" (Moses v. Morse, 74 Me. 472); "the Douglas gold mine" (Baucum v. George, 65 Ala. 259); "on the south side of Trent river, adjoining the lands of Colgrove, McDaniel, and others, containing three hundred and sixty acres, more or less" (Perry v. Scott, 109 N. C. 374, 14 S. E. 294); "all their lands lying between Haw River and Stony Creek, up to the line of J. H." (Euliss v. McAdams, 108 N. C. 507, 13 S. E. 162); "a piece of the Abraham Moore tract of land that belongs to the heirs of Z. P., lying and being in the county of M., on the Elijah creek and its waters in district eleven, as we inherited it at the death of Z. P. as heirs of him" (Moses v. Peak, 48 N. C. 520); "all the interest, right, title and claim they may have in the estate of her father, William A. Brawley, deceased, more particularly an undivided seventh share, which descended to the said Mary Catharine from her father, of all the lands of his estate" (Robbins v. Harris, 96 N. C. 557, 558, 2 S. E. 70); "all the real estate, water-rights, and property of every description, real and personal, in the state of Nevada, belonging to the first parties of the first part, or either of them" (Brown v. Warren, 16 Nev. 228); "all that tract of land situate in said county and bounded as follows: adjoining the lands of B., H., M., T., and others, containing 360 acres, more or less" (McGlawhorn v. Worthington, 98 N. C. 199, 3 S. E. 633); "the Sellars tract" (Euliss v. McAdams, 108 N. C. 507, 13 S. E. 162); "a certain tract of land in this state, lying about 12 miles above F., containing about 500 acres" (Cox v. Rust, (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 29 S. W. 807); "known by the name of the mill spot" (Woods v. Sawin, 4 Gray (Mass.) 322. See also Tucker v. Field, 51 Miss. 191); and "a certain tract in N. Township, adjoining the lands of H. S. and others, said to contain 37½ acres" (Hinton v. Roach, 95 N. C. 106). See also Dorgan v. Weeks, 86 Ala. 329, 5 So. 581; Black v. Pratt Coal, etc., Co., 85 Ala. 504, 5 So. 89; Hartsell v. Coleman, 116 N. C. 670, 21 S. E. 392; Moses v. Peak, 48 N. C. 520; James v. Koy, (Tex. Civ. App. 1900) 59 S. W. 295.

In the case of contracts of sale a description less definite than would be necessary in the case of a deed may be sufficient to form a basis for the admission of parol evidence to identify the subject-matter. Thus where a person owned but one tract of land in a subdivision of a city, and this tract was referred to in the correspondence which constituted the contract for a sale thereof, but without a definite description, parol evidence was held admissible to identify the property. Adams v. Thompson, 28 Nebr. 53, 44 N. W. 74. The following descriptions have also been held sufficient to admit of parol evidence to identify the property: "30 acres of land, lying and being in the State and county aforesaid, adjoining the land of E. P. Simons and the land of the said White" (Edwards v. Deans, 125 N. C. 59, 34 S. E. 105); "a house on Church street" (Mead v. Parker, 115 Mass. 413, 15 Am. Rep. 110. See also Hurley v. Brown, 98 Mass. 545, 96 Am. Dec. 671); "one tract containing 193 acres, more or less, it being the interest in two shares, adjoining the lands of J. B., E. O., and others" (Farmer v. Batts, 83 N. C. 387); "his farm" (Brinkerhoff v. Olp, 35 Barb. (N. Y.) 27); "two lots owned by me in 116th street, New York, between 8th and 9th avenues" (Waring v. Ayres, 40 N. Y. 357); "sixty acres Comida and Cone bottom, also ten acres hillside woodland adjoining the Mitchell tract" (Meyer v. Mitchell, 75 Ala. 475); "a steam-mill and distillery, with all the machinery, . . . situate in the County of Smith, and State (of Tennessee) aforesaid, near the village of Rome, in Civil District No. 13, on the banks of the Cumberland River, supposed to contain one and a half acres of land" (White v. Motley, 4 Baxt. (Tenn.) 544); and "the wharf and flats occupied by shown by parol that such different descriptions relate to the same piece of property, if they are not absolutely repugnant.[56]

j. Evidence Must Be Consistent With Writing. The general rule that parol evidence is not admissible to vary or contradict a written instrument precludes the admission of evidence to identify the subject-matter of a contract or the property described therein when such evidence is inconsistent with what appears in the writing.[57] But where a portion of the description of property is erroneous, the fact may be shown by parol evidence and the property intended to be described may be identified, as this amounts merely to the rejection of the false reference in the description, pursuant to the well settled rule of interpretation falsa demonstratio non nocet.[58]

31. Subsequent Agreements — a. In General. The rule forbidding the admission of parol or extrinsic evidence to alter, vary, or contradict a written instrument does not apply so as to prohibit the establishment by parol of an agreement between the parties to a writing, entered into subsequent to the time when the written instrument was executed, notwithstanding such agreement may have the effect of adding to, changing, modifying, or even altogether abrogating the contract of the parties as evidenced by the writing;[59] for the parol evidence does

Evidence not inconsistent.— Parol evidence of extrinsic facts and circumstances is admissible to show that a tract of land described in a deed as the tract or lot "known as the east half" of a certain named division, was in fact less than the mathematical half of the division, as this evidence whereby the land described is identified does not contradict, vary, or explain the terms in the deed but leaves every word in the description to be understood in its plain and ordinary sense, as the description does not call for a certain quantity of land. A subsequent written agreement making the payment of a note conditional may be admitted under the general issue. Heaton v. Myers, 4 Colo. 59.

"An executed parol agreement" such as may, under Cal. Civ. Code, § 1698, be proved for the purpose of altering a previous writing must consist in the doing or suffering of something not required to be done or suffered by the terms of the writing. Mackenzie v. Hodgkin, 126 Cal. 591, 59 Pac. 36, 77 Am. St. Rep. 209.

Evidence of prior negotiations.— Where there is strong presumptive evidence that subsequently to the execution of a written contract the parties agreed orally upon a new contract, which was a modification of the former, testimony may be received of negotiations and conversations between these parties, previous to the written contract for the purpose of throwing light upon, and showing more clearly, the nature and character of the subsequent agreement. Collins v. Lester, 16 Ga. 410.

Parol evidence of a settlement under an account stated as to an amount due under a cised their right to change or abrogate the same, or to make a new and independent contract.[60]

b. Time of Agreement. It makes no difference how soon after the execution of the written contract the parol one was made. If it was in fact subsequent and is otherwise unobjectionable it may be proved and enforced.[61]

c. Consideration. In order to render evidence of a subsequent parol agreement admissible to vary the terms of a written contract, it is necessary that such subsequent agreement be founded upon a consideration.[62]

d. Sealed Instruments. It has been held that where an executory agreement is under seal, it cannot be modified or changed by proof of a subsequent parol understanding or agreement,[63] or be released or rescinded by parol;[64] but the time for the performance of a contract under seal may be extended by parol.[65]

e. Contracts Required to Be in Writing. The principle that a contract, although in writing, may be altered by a subsequent legal contract not in writing cannot be applied to a contract required by law to be in writing, for if the contract may be altered by parol then there is a contract on the subject-matter by parol in violation of the statute.[66]

f. Applications of the Principle. In the application of the principle under discussion, evidence has been admitted to establish a new and subsequent agreement into which the former one entered as inducement,[67] or to show a subsequent modification,[68] or waiver or abandonment of the contract,[69] or of certain provisions or conditions thereof,[70] or of a right existing thereunder,[71] or a release from the obligations of an executory contract.[72] It has also been held admissible to show

Adoption of seal.— Where a joint and several note appeared on its face to be under the seal of one only of the makers, parol evidence is admissible to show that the other maker had adopted the seal as his own, and that it was executed as the sealed note of both. Twitty v. Houser, 7 S. C. 153.

Validity of an insurance policy may be sustained by parol evidence showing that the agent of the insurer knew of and assented to the existence or procurement of other insurance or of a mortgage on the property insured, notwithstanding a provision in the instrument that it shall be void in case of such other insurance or a mortgage unless the consent of the insurer be shown by a written indorsement thereon (McElroy v. British America Assur. Co., 94 Fed. 990, 36 C. C. A. 615); or where breach of warranty is relied on as a defense, parol evidence is admissible to show that the agent of the company was responsible for an improper statement in the application, and that the insured was in no way responsible for such mistake, but relied on the insurer or his agent to prepare the application and policy, and did not in fact know of such improper statement, and that the agent of the insurer knew the facts as they existed (Texas Banking, etc., Co. v. Stone, 49 Tex. 4); or where the policy contains a stipulation to the effect that it shall be void if any false statements are made in the application for insurance, it may be shown by parol that the statements given by the insured to the agent of the insurer were true and were different from those which the agent transcribed in the application which he sent to the insurer (R. b. Instrument Void on Its Face — (i) In General. Where an instrument is upon its face void, because it shows a violation of some statutory provision, or omits something which the law makes essential to its validity, or for any other reason, parol evidence cannot be admitted to contradict the portion which shows a violation of the statute, to supply the omission which renders the instrument void, or otherwise to make effectual that which the law declares shall be of no effect,[93] unless it can be shown that the provision which renders the instrument void was inserted by mistake.[94] But parol evidence has been held admissible to show that an instrument which appears on its face to be void because dated on Sunday was in fact delivered on a secular day and hence is valid.[95]

(ii) Uncertainty. Where an instrument or a portion thereof is void for indefiniteness or uncertainty in any of its terms, the deficiency cannot be cured by parol evidence;[96] but, before pronouncing an instrument void for uncertainty, matters in the application for life insurance, on information which he obtained from third persons without the consent of the insured. parol evidence is admissible to show the circumstances under which the insertion was made, although it contradicts the written contract (Union Mut. Ins. Co. v. Wilkinson, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 222, 20 L. ed. 617). See, generally, Insurance.

On the question of the sufficiency of an attestation of a witness to a note, for the purpose of bringing it in the exception to a statute limiting actions on such instruments, it is admissible to prove that it was attested with the knowledge and consent of the maker, and in pursuance of an agreement of the parties at the time the note was signed. Swazey v. Allen, 115 Mass. 594.

Consideration.— Where it has been shown or is contended that the consideration for a deed or other instrument was illegal, or that the consideration named therein was not paid or did not exist, it is competent to introduce parol evidence to show a legal consideration, although different from that expressed. c. Evidence of Ratification. A ratification of the transaction evidenced by a void instrument may be shown by parol;[98] and where a contract is not upon its face that of the party whom it is sought to charge, parol evidence is admissible to show an adoption or ratification thereof by such party.[99] So also if one partner signs the firm-name to a sealed instrument in the course of the firm business, the subsequent assent to it by his copartner so as to bind the firm may be shown by parol.[1]

from their true agreement, and defendant admits that the contract does not express the agreement truly but sets up an agreement different from that alleged by plaintiff, the real contract may be established by parol evidence.[5]

37. Writings Collateral to Issue. It has been held that the rule against the admission of parol evidence to vary or contradict a written contract does not apply where the writing as to which it is sought to introduce the evidence is collateral to the issue involved and the action is not based upon such writing.[6] This rule has usually been applied in cases where the action was not between the parties to the instrument,[7] in which case another exception would also apply,[8] but it has also been applied where the parties to the action were the same as the parties to the writing.[9]

38. Writing Not Evidencing Contract of Parties. Where the writing is such that it does not embody the contract between the parties to the controversy in which it is introduced in evidence, such contract resting in parol, the rule excluding evidence to vary a written instrument does not of course apply, and the true contract may be shown.[10]

39. Writing Not Expressing Entire Agreement — a. In General. Where a written instrument, executed pursuant to a prior verbal agreement or negotiation, does not express the entire agreement or understanding of the parties, the parol evidence rule does not apply to prevent the introduction of extrinsic evidence with reference to the matters not provided for in the writing.[11] This principle

In an action for malicious prosecution where the inquiry is as to the existence of probable cause on the part of defendant in causing plaintiff's arrest for obtaining money by false pretenses, made to procure the execution of a certain contract, parol evidence is admissible as to what occurred between the parties prior to the time of the making of the contract. Where a complaint contains two counts, one on a note, and the other for money lent, both for the same debt, although defendant asserts that plaintiff bought the note, parol evidence of the negotiations for the loan and that defendant received its proceeds is not incompetent as varying the written instrument, it being in support of the count for money lent. appears that fraud or mistake has intervened.[63] On the other hand it has been asserted that an omission of a portion of the agreement may be shown by parol.[64] This discrepancy is, however, more apparent than real, and probably results more from a loose use of terms than a confusion of ideas, as both lines of cases may be reconciled with what appears to be the most satisfactory general rule that can be announced in respect to this matter; which is that while the writing itself is the only criterion by which the intention of the parties is to be ascertained, yet it is not necessary that the incompleteness thereof should appear on its face from a mere inspection of it, for it is to be construed in the light of its subject-matter and the circumstances under which and the purposes for which it was executed.[65] Indeed some of the cases which state flatly that the instrument must appear on inspection to be incomplete contain expressions showing a recognition of the modification that the surrounding circumstances may also be considered.[66] The parts of the agreement proposed to be proved by parol must not be inconsistent with, or repugnant to, the intention of the parties as shown by the written instrument; for, to receive parol proof of a part not reduced to writing, which is directly repugnant to the intention of the parties as expressed in the

The only criterion of the completeness of a written contract as a full expression of the agreement of the parties is the writing itself. If it imports on its face to be a complete expression of the whole agreement — that is, contains such language as imports a complete legal obligation — it is conclusively presumed that the parties have introduced into it every material term, and parol evidence cannot be admitted to add another term, although the writing is silent as to the particular one to which the parol evidence is directed. written instrument, would contravene the rule that parol evidence cannot be received to contradict or vary the terms of a written agreement.[67]

d. Where Pleadings Declare on Writing Only. Where a party in his pleadings relies solely upon an alleged written contract between himself and the other party, he is bound by his pleading and cannot object to treatment of the writing as the whole contract of the parties, and hence he cannot introduce parol evidence to vary such contract.[68]

e. Statute of Frauds. The rule that where a contract upon its face is incomplete resort may be had to parol evidence to supply the omitted stipulation applies only in cases unaffected by the statute of frauds. If the subject-matter of the contract is within the statute of frauds and the contract or memorandum is deficient in some one or more of those essentials required by the statute, parol evidence cannot be received to supply the defects, for this would be to do the very thing prohibited by the statute.[69]

f. Question For Court or Jury. It has been held that the question whether the parties intended to express the whole of their agreement in the written contract is one for the court, since it relates to the admission or rejection of evidence.[70] But there is also authority for the view that whether the writing embraces the whole contract is a question for the jury [71]

40. Writing Not in Evidence. The rule against parol evidence to vary or contradict a written instrument cannot of course apply where the writing which it is claimed the evidence offered will vary or contradict is not itself in evidence.[72]

D. Proceedings in Which Parol Evidence Rule Not Applicable — 1. To Cancel or Reform Instrument. The rule excluding parol or extrinsic evidence to vary or contradict a written instrument has no application in a proceeding brought for the purpose of obtaining the cancellation or reformation of the instrument,[73] but in such a proceeding it may be shown that the instrument does not correctly express the intentions of the parties by reason of a mutual mistake,[74] or that it is tainted with fraud.[75] And this is true whether or not the contract is such as is required by the statute of frauds to be in writing.[76]

2. For Specific Performance. When a court of equity is asked to compel the specific performance of a contract, the inquiry may be made whether in equity and good conscience the court ought to specifically enforce it, and this involves the hearing of evidence of extrinsic facts. It has long been the established rule that it rests in the sound legal discretion of courts of equity whether or not they will compel the specific performance of any particular contract, and such a discretion is not a mere arbitrary discretion but a discretion to be reasonably exercised upon a full and fair consideration of all the facts and circumstances involved. Hence it is usually held competent for defendant in such a proceeding to show that the writing does not express the true agreement of the parties.[77] But a court of equity will not, at the instance of the party seeking to enforce performance, reform the instrument by the aid of parol evidence and then decree execution of it as reformed.[78] applies only in controversies between the parties to the instrument and those claiming under them.[79] It has no application in controversies between a party to the instrument on the one hand and a stranger to it on the other, for the stranger not having assented to the contract is not bound by it, and is therefore at liberty when his rights are concerned to show that the written instrument does not express the full or true character of the transaction. And where the stranger to the instrument is thus free to vary or contradict it by parol evidence his adversary, although a party to the instrument, must be equally free to do so.[80] This

Evidence to support instrument.— Where a person not a party to an instrument has introduced parol evidence to vary its terms and show that it is not what it purports to be and does not express the true intent of the parties, one of the parties to the instrument may introduce parol evidence to support it and show that by its terms the true intent of the parties is expressed and generally established the bona fides of the transaction. Smith v. Moore, 2 Indian Terr. 126, 48 S. W. 1025.

A trustee in insolvency proceedings is in contemplation of the law a stranger to a bill of sale executed by the insolvent, for he takes by virtue of his office for the benefit of creditors. Grove v. Rentch, 26 Md. 367.

A curator ad hoc, who, although mentioned in a notarial act, as assisting the minor vendee, does not sign it, is a third person, and may show by parol that the price, stated to have been paid in cash by the minor, was paid by himself, partly cash and the balance by his note. Benoit v. Broussard, 19 La. 387.

One of two joint tort-feasors can avail himself of a release of the other, and is therefore not a stranger to the release to that extent, but he is a stranger to the instrument in the sense in which the term is used in the rule that in a suit between a party to a contract and a stranger thereto neither is concluded by the writing, but either may contradict it by parol evidence. b. Third Person Claiming Under Instrument. The rule which forbids the terms of a written contract to be varied by parol evidence[89] does not preclude one not a party to the contract from showing that he has rights under it, because it was entered into for his benefit.[90] But where a third person not a party to an instrument claims rights or benefits thereunder and seeks to take advantage thereof, the parol evidence rule applies to him as much as to a party, and he is not entitled to introduce evidence to vary or contradict the writing.[91] It has been asserted that the recitals of a deed, mortgage, or other instrument do not form a contract between, and are not conclusive in a subsequent contest, an interpleader suit for example,[92] between the grantors or the parties to the obligation on one side or their privies.[93]

E. Waiver of Benefit of Rule. Where a party who is entitled to the benefit of the rule prohibiting the admission of parol evidence to vary or contradict a Principal and agent.— In an action by a principal upon a contract made by his agent in his behalf, against the other party to the contract, the rule excluding parol evidence to vary the contract would apply, but in an action by the principal against the agent to recover the true consideration received by the agent for the sale of property owned by the principal, under a contract in the agent's name, the rule does not apply. Barbar v. Martin, (Nebr. 1903) 93 N. W. 722.

In a contest between a party and a privy of the other party to a contract or other writing neither can introduce evidence to vary or contradict the writing. W. C. Belcher Land Mortg. Co. v. Norris, (Tex. Civ. App. 1903) 78 S. W. 390.

Cases explained and reconciled.— There are a few cases in which the right of parties to a written instrument to contradict or impeach it in a controversy with strangers has been denied, but in cases of this character the true ground of the decision is that the rights of third persons have intervened so as to estop the parties from denying that the effect of the instrument is what its terms import. writing[94] waives the benefit thereof by allowing such evidence to be received without objection and without any effort to have it stricken from the minutes or disregarded by the trial court,[95] he cannot, after the trial has closed and the case has been decided against him, invoke the rule in order to secure a reversal of the judgment by an appellate court.[96] So also where one party has introduced evidence of the conversations and negotiations leading up to a written agreement, the other party may give evidence as to the same matters, notwithstanding an objection that the evidence offered by him tends to vary or contradict the writing.[97]

F. Rights of Third Persons. Even though some of the exceptions to the parol evidence rule[98] might warrant the introduction of parol evidence to show the true contract evidenced by the writing, or some collateral agreement and the like, the rights of a third person may intervene so as to preclude the admission of any evidence whatever to show the transaction or the effect of the instrument to be other than it appears to be on its face.[99]

XVII. WEIGHT AND SUFFICIENCY.*

A. Degree of Proof — 1. Various Terms Defined — a. Competent Evidence. By competent evidence is meant that which the very nature of the thing to be proved requires as the fit and appropriate proof in the particular case.[1]

b. Conclusive Evidence. Conclusive evidence is evidence incontrovertible[2] — "either a presumption of law, or else evidence so strong as to overbear all other in the case to the contrary."[3]

c. Demonstration. Demonstration is that degree of evidence which excludes all possibility of error and is presented only in mathematical deductions.[4]

d. Moral Evidence. By moral evidence is meant all the evidence which is not obtained either from intuition or from demonstration.[5]

e. Mere Scintilla. A mere scintilla of evidence means the least particle of evidence — evidence which, without further evidence, is a mere trifle.[6]

f. Prima Facie Evidence. Prima facie evidence is that which, either alone or aided by other facts presumed from those established by the evidence, shows the existence of the fact it is adduced to prove, unless overcome by counter evidence.[7]

g. Satisfactory Evidence. Satisfactory evidence has been defined to be that amount of proof which ordinarily satisfies an unprejudiced mind beyond a reasonable doubt.[8]

h Evidence Excluding Reasonable Doubt. The term "reasonable doubt" has been defined elsewhere in this work.[9]

2 Mere Conjecture or Suspicion. A fact cannot be regarded as proved where the evidence merely gives rise to conjecture[10] or suspicion[11] of its existence.

3. Preponderance of Evidence — a. Preponderance Required — (i) In General. In civil cases an issue of fact cannot be regarded as proved unless the party having the burden of proof thereon produces a preponderance of evidence.[12]

"Equity is not more stringent in requiring evidence, than a court of law in similar cases. Whatever, therefore, would sustain a verdict in the latter, ought to sustain a decree in like case, in the former." Gray v. Roden, 24 Miss. 667, 670. In Ridley v. Ridley, 1 Coldw. (Tenn.) 323, a case in equity, the court said plaintiff must "satisfy the mind and conscience of the court" in order to entitle him to a decree. In the later case of Chapman v. McAdams, 1 Lea (Tenn.) 500, 509, it seems to have been held that the language above quoted stated a higher degree of proof than is demanded by the authorities, and that in equity as at law a preponderance of evidence is sufficient. McFarland, J., dissenting, said he had "always understood" that courts of equity never act "upon a less degree of certainty than men usually act upon in other affairs of equal importance?" In the cases cited at the head of this note there is no distinct enunciation that a higher degree of proof is required in equity than at law, and in many of the equity cases the term "preponderance of evidence" is used to describe the quantum of proof essential to a finding in favor of a party. There is so much logomachy in the discussion by courts of the term "preponderance of evidence" that the rule in equity cannot safely be said to differ from the rule at law as a general proposition. See, however, Chaney v. Phœnix Ins. Co., 62 Mo. App. 45, 49.

sanction the doctrine that nothing more than a bare preponderance is required.[47] Under that rule "a case too weak to stand alone when unopposed by a defense may become invigorated and helped out by a still weaker defense."[48] Accordingly many authorities hold that a preponderance of evidence does not suffice unless the judgment of the trier of fact is "satisfied"[49] or "reasonably satisfied."[50] However, a requirement of proof which "satisfies," without qualification, has been held to be too exacting, since it appears to demand proof beyond a "full" [67] preponderance of evidence denotes more than the preponderance rule demands. Questions of this kind most frequently arise in considering the correctness of instructions to juries given or refused.[68]

(II) Preponderance of Probabilities. While a conclusion of fact may be legitimately drawn from a preponderance of probabilities in its favor,[69] the probabilities must be such that the conclusion is acceptable to the judgment of the court or jury applied to the evidence in the particular case.[70] A majority of chances never can suffice alone to establish a proposition of fact, since the slightest real evidence would outweigh all contrary probabilities.[71]

d. Evidence to Overcome Adverse Presumptions — (I) In General. The party having the burden of proving a fact must produce evidence sufficient to overcome opposing presumptions, if any there be, as well as opposing evidence.[72]

Thus it was held that "very clear and decisive evidence" was required to prove that a telegraph message regularly received was not transmitted from the office whence it purported to have been sent.[73] But it is said that the preponderance rule[74] continues to operate in such cases, the adverse presumption merely requiring more evidence to constitute a preponderance than where no presumption exists.[75] More evidence is required to overcome a strong presumption than to overcome a weak one.[76]

(II) Improbabilities. Highly improbable facts "should have credence in nothing less than the most convincing proofs."[77] The proof should be clear and strong in proportion to the degree of improbability.[78]

e. nesses on each side is unequal.[80] But if application of the recognized tests of credibility of witnesses and of evidence fails to show a preponderance on one side or the other the issue ought to be determined against the party having the burden of proof.[81]

(II) Disparity in Number — (A) In General. In ascertaining the preponderance of evidence the maxim is testes ponderantur non numerantur,[82] and numerical preponderance of witnesses does not necessarily constitute a preponderance of evidence so as to require a contested question of fact to be decided in accordance therewith.[83] The intelligence, fairness, and means of observation of the witnesses and various other recognized factors in determining the weight of

"Weight of evidence is not a question of mathematics, but depends on its effect in inducing belief. It often happens that one witness standing uncorroborated may tell a story so natural and reasonable in its character, and in a manner so sincere and honest, as to command belief although several witnesses of equal apparent respectability may contradict him. The manner and appearance of the witness, the character of his story, and its inherent probability may be such as to lead a jury to believe his testimony, and accept it as the truth of the transaction to which it relates. The question for the jury is not on which side are the witnesses most numerous, but what testimony do you believe." Braunschweiger v. Waits, 179 Pa. St. 47, 51, 36 Atl. 155, per Williams, J.

A jury cannot capriciously disbelieve the greater number. Trott v. Wolfe, 35 Ill. App. 163. Where many witnesses who are in a position to know the facts to which they testify concur in their testimony, and are disputed only by a few who have had no better opportunities to know the facts, it is not permissible to reject the testimony of the many and accept that of the few without some tangible and substantial reason for so doing. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Givens, 18 Ill. App. 404. The following instruction was approved in Gage v. Eddy, 179 Ill. 492, 504, 53 N. E. 1008: "The evidence of the smaller number cannot be taken by the jury in preference to that of the larger number unless the jury can say, on their oaths, that it is more reasonable, more truthful, more disinterested and more credible."

Suspicion attaching to superior number.— Although there be ground for suspicion of bias and connivance among the witnesses for one party their numerical superiority may suffice to neutralize testimony on the other side that is more or less confused and contradictory. The Napoleon, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 10,015, Olcott 208.

The probability that several witnesses have conspired to commit perjury is less than the probability that a single opposing witness has committed perjury. Kentner v. Kline, 41 N. J. Eq. 422, 4 Atl. 781. "Undoubtedly, if all the witnesses are equally intelligent, and equally truthful and free from influence or bias, and have the same opportunities for knowing the facts testified to, and testify from such knowledge, a court could safely, and ought to credit the greater number, on the ground that none are presumed to have testified falsely, and the many would be less likely to be mistaken than a less number." One witness may be believed, however, in opposition to several.

California.— Grant v. McPherson, 104 Cal. 165, 37 Pac. 864, where a finding in favor of one witness against two or three was not dis-where he is an interested party and all or nearly all the opposing witnesses are disinterested.[91]

(B) Considerations Favoring Greater Number. Several concurring witnesses are less likely to be mistaken or perjured than a single opposing witness.[92] Under the facts in each case the following considerations have been advanced by courts in favor of the greater number of witnesses: that it is not possible for them to be mistaken and that their testimony is either true or wilfully false;[93] that they are disinterested and opposed only by an interested party;[94] that the opposing witnesses are interested parties;[95] that the party against whom they testify has made admissions tending to corroborate their testimony;[96] that their testimony is corroborated by the conduct of the parties;[97] that they had superior opportunities for observation;[98] and that they are for various other reasons better entitled to credit.[99] It is an argument in favor of the greater number that they are adults, while the opposing fewer are children.[1]

(C) Considerations Favoring Smaller Number. Under the facts of the particular case courts have argued in favor of the fewer number of witnesses as follows: That they had superior opportunities for observation;[2] that they are sustained by the probabilities of the case[3] or the surrounding circumstances;[4] that their testimony to the condition of a street for example is corroborated by a photograph;[5] that they are corroborated by documentary evidence;[6] that the party to the suit for whom the opposing witnesses testified had made damaging admissions;[7] that the memory of the opposing witnesses was shown to be at fault turbed on appeal, although the appellate court conceded for the sake of argument that his opportunity for observation was inferior to that of the others.

in various particulars of their testimony;[8] that some of the opposing witnesses admitted that they were paying no particular attention to the matter;[9] that some of the opposing witnesses were impeached by contradictory statements;[10] that the greater number differ among themselves as well as from the fewer number, and that the recollection of the latter is more likely to be correct;[11] that the fewer are supported by a legal presumption, while the others are identified in feeling and interest;[12] that the opposing witnesses are employees of the party for whom they testify or otherwise so situated as to make their testimony unsatisfactory;[13] that two witnesses against one are husband and wife, the latter of whom is a party to the suit;[14] that their testimony is not intrinsically improbable or incredible;[15] that their testimony is inherently probable;[16] that there is inherent improbability in the testimony of the opposing witnesses;[17] that their testimony is characterized by coherence and an air of veracity;[18] that their manner is markedly sincere and honest;[19] or that the manner of the opposing witnesses is such as to impair or destroy the force of their testimony.[20]

4. Clear and Convincing Proof — a. In General. In numerous cases where an adverse presumption is to be overcome[21] or on grounds of public policy and in view of peculiar facilities for perpetrating injustice by fraud and perjury,[22] the degree of proof required is variously expressed as "clear," "clear and conclusive," "clear, precise, and indubitable," "convincing," "entirely satisfactory," "satisfactory," "strong," "unequivocal," etc.[23] Not infrequently the courts have declared that in such cases the proof must be "beyond reasonable doubt,"[24] that picion."[28] But these latter have been characterized as "apparently unconsidered expressions,"[29] and it has been many times deliberately held that proof beyond a reasonable doubt is not required.[30] Indeed there is strong authority for the proposition that a preponderance of evidence suffices in this class of cases, although a higher degree of proof than in ordinary cases may be requisite to constitute that preponderance.[31] But the phrase "preponderance of evidence" is almost never used in these cases,[32] and has been expressly disapproved as a measure of the proof required.[33]

Some authorities demand a still higher degree of proof, requiring plaintiff to prove his case beyond reasonable doubt or even beyond any doubt.[46]

f. Lost Instruments. In order to establish a lost instrument on behalf of a party asserting rights under it[47] the same measure of proof is required as in suits for reformation of instruments or to establish parol trusts;[48] that is to say, the evidence must be of the clearest and most satisfactory character,[49] and according to some authorities beyond reasonable doubt.[50]

g. Donatio Causa Mortis. It is usually declared that evidence sufficient to prove a gift causa mortis must be very strong,[51] even "free from uncertainty" according to some authorities.[52]

h. In Other Cases. A degree of proof usually denominated "clear and convincing," etc.,[53] is required in order to impeach an official certificate of acknowledgment of a deed,[54] to impeach an officer's return of service of process,[55] to prove acknowledgment to take a debt out of the statute of limitations,[56] to estab-

prove actual notice of an unrecorded conveyance of land so as to defeat the title of a subsequent purchaser,[83] to set aside a deed and divest the title to real estate for breach of a condition subsequent,[84] to obtain equitable relief against the legal right of another,[85] to protect a trustee for breach of trust by proof of acquiescence of the cestui que trust,[86] to establish the integrity and fairness of a transaction between parties one of whom may be presumed to exercise a controlling influence over the will and conduct of the other,[87] to supply a lost record,[88] to prove "disavowals or renunciations of right,"[89] to establish a nuncupative will,[90] to prove that a person executing a will understood it to be an instrument of a different nature,[91] to authorize entry nunc pro tunc on court records of judicial action previously taken,[92] to sustain an award by explanation of conduct by the arbitrators prima facie fatal to the award,[93] to set aside a verdict on account of previously expressed opinions by jurors,[94] or to set aside a government land patent[95] or a patent for invention[96] on the ground of fraud or mistake. "Where a remedy is summary courts always require that a clear case be made out."[97] Where a claim of great magnitude is to be sustained, if at all, by the testimony of interested parties who have had time and inducement to trump up a false case, the evidence should be clear and undisputable.[98]

5. Proof Beyond a Reasonable Doubt. There are very few civil cases where courts have agreed that facts must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt.[99] In suits for the infringement of patents, where defendant assails the validity of the patent on the ground of prior use of the patented article, it is well settled that he must establish that defense by proof beyond a reasonable doubt.[1] It has been held that probate of a will must be refused if there is a reasonable doubt whether all the formalities required by statute in the execution of wills have been observed,[2] and that the same degree of proof is required in order to defeat a bankrupt's application for a discharge on the ground of perjury committed by him.[3]

6. Proof of Negative Facts. To establish a negative the same degree of proof is not ordinarily necessary as in cases where proof of an affirmative is required.[4] Generally a negative fact is sufficiently proved prima facie by proving some affirmative fact or state of facts inconsistent with the affirmative of the proposition to be negatived and therefore raising a presumption that the negative is true.[5]

B. Memory of Witnesses — 1. Importance of the Subject. Inasmuch as trials involving questions of fact are seldom de recenti facto, it will be found that with the possible exception of actual or presumed bias of witnesses[6] no consideration affecting the weight of testimony is so frequently noticed and discussed in the reported opinions of courts as the capacity of memory with respect to facts to which the testimony relates. This is conspicuously true in those numerous cases where by the law of evidence the party having the burden of proof is required to establish his contention by more than a mere preponderance of evidence — as in criminal cases,[7] and on certain issues in patent infringement suits,[8] where proof beyond a reasonable doubt is required, or, as in several classes of civil suits, where clear and convincing proof is required.[9] "The laws which regulate the human memory"[10] determine in many cases the credibility of a witness[11] and even the propriety of applying to his testimony the maxim falsus in uno falsus in omnibus,[12] and may conceivably pronounce uncontradicted testimony by an unimpeached witness incredible.[13]

2. Phenomena of Memory in General. "Other things equal, at all times of life recency promotes memory."[14] Hence greater credit may be given to the sworn or unsworn statements of a party when made near to the time of the fact under investigation than to his contrary testimony at a much later time.[15] In weighing testimony allowance is constantly made for actual or presumptive want of recollection of facts occurring at a very remote date.[16] An impression is

In patent infringement cases "extremely hazardous it is, after many years, for a witness to state that any given machine is exactly like another machine," where he produces no model or drawing and has nothing remembered the better in proportion as it is more attended to.[17] "The attention which we lend to an experience is proportional to its new or interesting character; and it is a notorious fact that what interests us most vividly at the time is, other things equal, what we remember best."[18] A person's recollection of his own acts is presumptively better than that of others who had not equal interest or concern in his doings.[19] "A woman is not likely to forget when and where she was married."[20] But a fact may easily depart from the memory when it was concurrent with another fact of vastly preponderating interest,[21] and a country girl who testifies to her sudden marriage in a strange city should not be discredited because she cannot clearly describe the house where the ceremony took place, since "it is highly probable that, as she entered this house her mind and heart were so engrossed with thoughts of her marriage as to have excluded everything else and rendered her unobservant, if not insensible, to her surroundings."[22] A young woman school teacher should not easily forget the amount of her yearly salary in the only school she ever taught.[23] Novelty diminishing, interest diminishes,[24] and ordinary circumstances attending one of a multitude of like experiences occurring in a person's daily life or vocation it is difficult or impossible to recall to refresh his memory. Ely v. Monson, etc., Mfg. Co., 8 Fed. Cas. No. 4,431, per Sprague, D. J. See also Deering v. Winona Harvester Works, 155 U. S. 286, 301, 15 S. by effort of memory.[25] "Little reliance can be placed on the general recollection of persons in regard to ordinary occurrences under their immediate observation when their memory is not charged with the matter at the time."[26] Persons who witness signatures to ordinary written documents rarely have a definite memory of the matter for any considerate length of time.[27] Indeed the circumstances attending the execution of a will are naturally soon forgotten by one who frequently witnesses wills,[28] or probably by any one else after great lapse of time.[29] Memory of officers taking acknowledgments is open to the same observation.[30] A person's memory of a casual event is reinforced by having his attention specially called to it, while the details are still accessible to recollection.[31] So a startling occurrence may justly be supposed to prompt a person's memory to hark back and recall the presence or absence of causative circumstances within his cognizance, that alone made no impression on the memory.[32] And an extraordinary

25. "That a person, 72 years of age, should be able to recollect the minute details of a tool made by him when he was 38, would, in any circumstances, be extraordinary. But should it appear that during this long interval he had been constantly engaged in working at his trade — making hundreds and probably thousands of optical instruments — should it be shown also that nothing had occurred for 30 years to direct his attention to the particular tool in question and that the case is barren of the slightest circumstance to aid or refresh his recollection, such an exhibition of memory would be amazing, if not miraculous. . . . Is it probable that any human intellect can retain with accuracy for 30 years the petty details of an eventless and humdrum occupation? It is, of course, possible that such testimony may be true, but the chance that it may not be true should be sufficient to deter a court of equity from striking down a valuable patent upon the strength thereof alone." or unusual incident in an ordinary transaction may preserve the memory of the latter, when it would otherwise perish.[33] A witness to a disputed fact may properly be allowed to state any circumstance occurring at the same time, which had a tendency to fix the occurrence in his mind,[34] unless such circumstance be of itself mere hearsay evidence of the existence of the fact in question.[35] Memory is more tenacious of the substance of events than of their precise order, when they are nearly contemporaneous,[36] especially if they are of an exciting character.[37] Memory of transactions involving a great number of names, dates, amounts, etc., must be frail.[38]

3. Preternatural Memory. While history records a few examples of men possessing preternatural memory,[39] common knowledge that memory is fallible[40] reduces to a minimum value testimony which cannot be believed except upon the hypothesis that the witness is gifted with a memory "amazing," [41] "extraordi-

St. Rep. 381, per Bryan, J., where the court came to the conclusion that as between the holder's testimony that the cashier did not, as in the supposable case above quoted, inform him the second time that the check would not be paid, and the cashier's testimony that he did so inform the holder, the testimony of the holder should prevail. The court thought the cashier probably mistook some other person for the holder "or he may have confounded together some of the many conversations which took place on this subject." 40. "How frail and fallible is memory! . . . Usually, the impressions made on the memory resemble much more the traceless track of the arrow through the air, than the enduring hieroglyphics upon the pyramids and obelisks of ancient Egypt. Many memories are mere sieves. And I would sooner trust the smallest slip of paper for truth, than the strongest and most retentive memory, ever bestowed on mortal man." nary,"[42] "miraculous,"[43] or "such as would constitute a prodigy."[44] Still it is a familiar fact that tenacity of memory varies greatly in different persons,[45] and special considerations may in a particular instance convince the court that a witness really has an exceptionally strong memory.[46]

4. Memory of Illiterate Persons. Courts take judicial notice that persons engaged in business who cannot read and write have their faculty of memory more acutely educated, for the reason that they are compelled to depend upon their memory and cannot rely upon written memoranda.[47]

5. Memory in Old Age. Old age of a witness supports a presumption that his memory is to a considerable extent untrustworthy in respect of recent events,[48] and not altogether perfect as to transactions in his adult life.[49] On the other hand such witnesses are often entitled to the credit of remembering what took place in their childhood or youth[50] — especially if it were a matter of domestic interest[51] — as accurately as persons of unimpaired faculties.[52] And where respectable, disinterested witnesses advanced in life testified distinctly and positively to the details of a comparatively late transaction, and were in a measure corroborated, the court declared that the confidence due to them was "not to be diminished on account of their age."[53]

6. Memory of Childhood Events. A witness of mature age may well remember facts that occurred in his childhood,[54] sometimes where they were of little intrinsic interest,[55] but his testimony should be "received with caution."[56] As to matters of no special interest and without domestic connection, it is unwise to depend much upon the testimony of persons quite young at the time,[57] confidence in the testimony being reduced to zero if the witness was of extremely tender years;[58] and the general credit of the witness may be destroyed by his recklessness in this behalf.[59] The testimony of young persons is considered elsewhere in this work.[60]

7. Memory Refreshed. That a thing forgotten on one day may be remembered on another,[61] especially by attentive and careful recollection[62] or by conference with other witnesses to the same fact,[63] is an irregularity in the process of forgetting which courts fully recognize. Still, judges are accustomed to inquire by what means a memory once confessedly faded was revived,[64] and, unless the answer is satisfactory, the testimony of the witness may be lightly regarded [65] or rejected as clearly fictitious.[66] A witness' memory of a remote transaction may be aided by the circumstance that he testified on a former occasion when his memory was presumably fresh,[67] or that the transaction has for other reasons occupied his mind from time to time.[68] A contemporaneous memorandum made by the witness [69] may "serve to refresh or to correct his memory and increase greatly the value of his testimony." [70]

8. Physical Condition of Witness. Ability of a witness to recall accurately the details of a transaction is largely affected by his physical condition at the time when it occurred or when remembrance is suggested or attempted.[71] Intoxication tends to impair accuracy both of observation and of memory.[72] Illness of a witness when his testimony is taken,[73] or admitted lapses of memory due to sunstroke,[74] may render his evidence valueless. Discrepancies attributable to fatigue induced by long cross-examination are excusable; that is to say they do not necessarily impugn the general credibility of the witness.[75]

No imputation against the witness' integrity is implied in deducting something from the face value of his testimony. Hence the rule is enforced regardless of the exalted character of the witness.

Witness seeking to entrap.— "Very little reliance can be safely placed upon the version of conversations given by a witness who was seeking through them the means of maintaining an action in favor of his employer. However honest and commendable his motives might have been, a witness so employed would be exceedingly apt to remember statements favoring the wishes of his employer, and to forget or not listen to explanations and qualifications made at the time." Sunday v. Goodon, 23 Fed. Cas. No. 13,616, Blatchf. & H. 569, 576, per Betts, D. J.

deceased,[87] or to the contents of a lost document.[88] "Witnesses whose memories are prodded by the eagerness of interested parties to elicit testimony favorable to themselves are not usually to be depended upon for accurate information."[89] But no presumption of law is here involved,[90] and the candor and moderation of the witness,[91] or the surrounding circumstances[92] may relieve him from suspicion and justify full confidence in his testimony.

10. Discrepancies Between Witnesses. Among the ignorant, the strongest proof of the truth of testimony derived from several witnesses, is the fact that the statements of each are nearly identical with those of the others.[93] Experienced judges, however, are peculiarly aware that exact similarity is characteristic of the testimony of corrupt witnesses whose evidence has been prearranged.[94] It is expected that honest witnesses in speaking of a past transaction will not reproduce it, in description, with the same fulness of detail,[95] and differences in their recollection do not affect the credit due to the substance of their testimony in which they agree.[96]

11. Relation Between Credit of Witness and Condition of Memory. "The law is well settled that a witness may very seriously impair his credibility by swearing positively and minutely to occurrences which were not of such a nature as to impress themselves forcibly upon his memory,"[97] or which would almost certainly have been obliterated from his mind by lapse of time and a throng of later impressions;[98] especially where many of the witnesses to the same fact forbear to testify with exactness.[99] Unfavorable inferences against such a witness are emphasized by contrast when he admits weakness of memory in regard to facts of no greater moment than those he professes to remember.[1] In balancing the testimony of any witness against opposing testimony, probabilities, or presumptions, the fact that he cannot recollect, or cannot recollect correctly, what a person of normal memory would hardly forget will detract more or less, according to circumstances,[2] from the weight to be given to what he affirms with confidence.[2] Lapse of memory[4] or positive misrecollection[5] of collateral and unimportant facts does not usually affect the rest of the witness' testimony.[6] It might not escape comment, however, in a close case or where indubitable proof is demanded.[7]

2. "One thing I think must be regarded as absolutely certain: If his evidence on this point is true, his memory is so utterly untrustworthy that no confidence can be reposed in his recollection, especially when his recollection differs from that of the complainant." Clark v. Clark, 52 N. J. Eq. 650, 659, 30 Atl. 81, per Van Fleet, V. And in Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. v. Brown, 30 N. J. Eq. 193, 200, the same vice-chancellor said: "A witness who denies, with almost imprecatory solemnity, his own acts in important transactions which he must recollect if he has any memory at all, cannot be believed in anything he affirms."

particularly where the exact language used is sought to be recalled after a great lapse of time,[9] or where the words spoken were of indifferent interest to the hearer.[10] For this reason among others testimony to oral statements of a person is received with great caution.[11] The effect of bias upon a witness' memory of conversations has been elsewhere noticed.[12] Inability of a witness to narrate a conversation verbatim from memory does not necessarily nor usually affect the general credit of the witness;[13] on the contrary, if a witness professes to do so

his credit is open to suspicion.[14] Where a witness cannot recollect what was said, but declares that he can recollect what was not said, the latter statement is of questionable validity.[15] A person's memory of his own utterances will be regarded as more authentic than that of a listener.[16]

13. MEMORY OF DATES AND TIME OF DAY. Of all facts a date "slides the easiest from the memory."[17] Witnesses are proverbially inaccurate as to dates,[18] and discrepancies between witnesses as to the day or time of day of an event do not ordinarily affect the substance of their testimony.[19] Courts have little or no faith in a witness' recollection of dates or of the time of day of events, if he has no collateral fact by which he ascertains them.[20] And his recollection of two contemporaneous events proves nothing as to the time, unless the date of one of them be known.[21] The date of a transaction may and should be fixed by associating it with other circumstances of public and unquestioned notoriety, or with credible written documents, or with other facts occurring at a time clearly proved.[22] Time of day may be established in this manner as well as by a timepiece.[23] Testimony to dates is destroyed or weakened by contradicting or casting suspicion upon the transactions named as constituting the data by which the time is located.[24] Memory is very likely to confuse with one another the dates of transactions of a kindred character occurring at nearly the same time.[25] A witness may testify to his "impression" as regards a date, but the weight of such testimony depends very much upon circumstances.[26] Dates do not much impress themselves upon the young.[27]

14. Estimates of Time. Courts do not expect witnesses to testify with precision and harmony in respect of the time consumed in a transaction.[28] Estimates of the duration of short periods of time into which much experience is crowded are notoriously inexact,[29] and are apt to be excessive,[30] especially if the mind was in a state of anxiety or expectation;[31] and a witness who assumes to measure time with accuracy under such circumstances tends to discredit himself.[32] Periods of time are apt to be shortened or lengthened in the estimate of biased witnesses to accord with their own interest or desire.[33]

15. Memory of Contents of Written Instruments. The difficulty of retaining in the memory the contents of a written instrument after much lapse of time is universally recognized by courts.[34] Especially is testimony to the contents of a

It is seldom that a witness can give the precise expressions or their collocation on which the meaning often depends. Smith v. Carter, 3 Rand. (Va.) 167. "Of all methods of proving the contents of a lost writing, the resort to the memory of one who has read it, is the most desperate." Bolton's Estate, 14 Pa. Co. Ct. 575, 576, per Ashman, J.

writing untrustworthy where the witness is aged and acquired his asserted knowledge of the contents of the instrument when he was a stripling.[35] On the other hand it has been remarked that the contents of an instrument might be satisfactorily proved by the recollection of a reasonably intelligent witness who recently read it.[36] A non-professional witness who affects to remember complicated provisions with extraordinary certainty after a great many years is open to suspicion.[37] The same is true where the witness was a youth when he read the instrument, had no special reason to impress the contents on his memory, and was unfamiliar with such documents.[38] The fact that the witnesses are interested or otherwise biased always evokes adverse comment,[39] for besides the danger of perjury by such witnesses,[40] their memories are much inclined to accord with their desires.[41] Repeated conferences by a friendly witness with the parties in interest concerning the matter to which he testifies are not calculated to guide his memory to exact truth.[42] Where a witness is clearly mistaken in some other parts of his testimony it tends to impeach the accuracy of his memory of the contents of a writing to which he testifies.[43] Faith in the testimony of a witness given with remarkable precision may be greatly shaken by his inability to recollect with equal accuracy the contents of important documents of a similar character in his own possession.[44] That a witness does not remember the minutiæ of contents after several decades ought not seriously to impair confidence in his memory of the general character of the instrument.[45] It has been intimated that the memory of a witness who testifies from hearing the instrument read would not be so reliable as if he had read the instrument itself.[46] The date of an instrument is the part least likely to make an impression on the memory.[47] The language of an instrument expressing its main object would be more likely to attract attention and adhere to the memory than qualifications of its essential provisions.[48] That the terms of the instrument were simple, for example a devise of a known tract of land to a known person, would be a circumstance conducing to accuracy of memory.[49] Where one who was named sole executor and residuary legatee in a will, which was a brief instrument, read it several times, and made a draft of the substance of it, his testimony to its contents sufficed to establish the will.[50] The memory of a conveyancer as to the form of a deed drawn by him should be deemed superior to the memory of a person who was present when the deed was made and cognizant of its contents but who had no knowledge of the different forms of conveyancing.[51] The fair and impartial testimony of an experienced lawyer who drew the document and gave the transaction his careful personal attention is perhaps the strongest direct evidence that could be produced,[52] particularly where the provisions of the instrument are simple,[53] or the memory of the witness is refreshed by a memorandum.[54] Testimony of an intelligent lawyer who read the instrument for a special purpose is also cogent evidence.[55] Positive testimony to a particular stipulation in an instrument overcomes testimony of persons who merely state that they did not notice it.[56]

C. Weight and Conclusiveness — 1. Weight of Evidence — a. In General. It is a maxim that evidence is to be weighed according to the proof which it was in the power of one side to have produced, and in the power of the other to have contradicted.[57] The weight of various species of evidence is hereinafter considered in this article.[58] The weight of testimony of witnesses, hereinbefore noticed, as far as it depends upon the faculty of memory[59] is more particularly treated elsewhere in this work.[60]

b. Ex Parte Affidavits. Ex parte affidavits are universally regarded as weak evidence, to be received with caution,[61] especially where the affiant is an illiterate person.[62] The very strength of an affidavit may make the court less credulous of its contents.[63]

c. Depositions. Testimony given by deposition,[64] especially by deposition taken ex parte,[65] is deemed by courts to be of inferior value to testimony delivered viva voce in the presence of the trier of facts.[66] Nevertheless, it is error to instruct a jury that, as a matter of law, testimony embodied in depositions is entitled to less confidence than would be the case if the testimony had been given orally at the trial.[67]

66. See cases cited in the preceding notes. The advantage of seeing the witness and observing his deportment while testifying has been strongly stated in many cases where a reviewing tribunal, having the testimony before

d. Written Evidence Superior to Oral. Oral testimony depending on the memory of witnesses is not as reliable as written or documentary evidence.[68] A party seeking to establish a fact in opposition to written evidence must make out his case with more than usual clearness.[69]

e. Evidence Introduced by Adverse Party. Facts are to be found by weighing all the testimony, whatever may be its source,[70] and a defect of proof on one side may be supplied by the evidence introduced on the other side.[71]

f. Evidence Improperly Admitted. Parties have a right to try their case on evidence which is not of the quality or character required by law,[72] and where such evidence is admitted without objection it is the right and duty of the court or jury to give it the same consideration as if it were legal evidence.[73] But evidence intrinsically destitute of probative quality acquires no new attribute in point of weight by its production in the case.[74] Secondary evidence admitted without objection cannot avail to contradict primary evidence.[75] Evidence brought out incidentally and not applicable to any issue made by the pleadings cannot be considered.[76] Testimony excluded on objection but subsequently introduced surreptitiously should be disregarded.[77]

g. Positive and Negative Testimony — (i) What Is Positive and What Is Negative. Where a witness testifies that he saw or heard a fact this is positive evidence.[78] Where another witness testifies that he was present and did not see or hear or that the fact did not occur this is strictly negative evidence if nothing more appears or if it appears that he was paying no particular attention at the time,[79] even if the witness expresses the opinion that he would have seen or heard had the fact taken place.[80] Having opportunity more or less adequate for correct observation, if he testifies that he was attentive but did not see or hear his testimony is commonly termed negative testimony,[81] but "not of a purely negative character."[82] Under the same circumstances, however, if he testifies not merely that he did not see or hear, but that the fact did not occur, it is clearly positive testimony though negative in form.[83] Where a witness describes a fact observed by him and an opposing witness describes the same fact differently the testimony of both is equally positive.[84]

(II) Relative Weight of Positive and Negative—(A) In General. All other things being equal,[85] the testimony of a witness who testifies positively that a certain fact occurred is generally speaking entitled to more weight than the evidence of another witness who swears that the fact did not occur,[86] for it is far more probable that the latter has forgotten the occurrence than that it should be distinctly impressed on the mind of the former if it never took place.[87] Moreover, courts strive to avoid imputing perjury to witnesses,[88] and testimony is not decisive and the question is to be determined from all the evidence bearing on the subject. Killian v. Georgia R., etc., Co., 97 Ga. 727, 25 S. E. 384; Marcott v. Marquette, etc., R. Co., 49 Mich. 99, 13 N. W. 374.
