99. Accuracy of memory of the positive witness may be open to such grave doubt testimony of several witnesses ought to outweigh the negative testimony of only one.[1]

(c) Various Circumstances Affecting Weight. Whether the positive or the negative testimony shall prevail is frequently determined by considerations affecting the weight of testimony in general.[2] Interest or other bias of witnesses on either side may impair the weight of their testimony.[3] Positive testimony that an act was done may be fortified by the circumstance that the actor's regard for his personal safety would prompt him to do it,[4] or weakened by the fact that the witness who testifies to his own act was in the habit of performing the same act at frequent intervals daily and would be unlikely to recollect the particular instance.[5] Weight of negative testimony may be augmented by the circumstance that the witness had a reason for observing whether the fact occurred or not;[6] self-protection, for example.[7] Negative testimony may be weakened by the fact that the attention of the witnesses was diverted by excitement or alarm,[8] or by ravishing strains of music;[9] familiar sounds often fail to be noticed where there is no occasion to notice them;[10] or a sound may not have been heard because the wind was unfavorable,[11] or other sounds interfered with hearing.[12]

(iii) Negative Testimony Alone. Prima facie evidence of consideration by acknowledgment thereof in a deed may be overcome by the purely negative testimony of a subscribing witness to the instrument.[13] Negative testimony may constitute strong proof where positive evidence could hardly fail to exist if the fact actually occurred and none such is discovered,[14] and it may acquire great force from the neglect of the adverse party to call witnesses who know positively whether or not the fact in dispute occurred or to explain their absence.[15]

h. Declarations and Admissions — (i) Weight of Testimony — (a) Oral Statements in General. Because testimony to oral statements of a person, although it be honestly given, is peculiarly subject to the fallibility of human memory[16] and because it is easily fabricated, and for the further reason that what was said may have been imperfectly comprehended, wrongly interpreted, or misunderstood, courts declare that it should always be received with caution and that it is weak and even "dangerous" evidence.[17] Adverse comments on this species of

(B) Alleged Statements of Dead Men. Exposed to all the infirmities just mentioned[20] is the testimony to oral statements of dead men, which is invariably subjected to the closest scrutiny in view of the impossibility in most cases of convicting the witness of perjury if his testimony is wilfully false.[21] Readier credence will be given to the testimony when it is in harmony with the established facts in the case,[22] or is supported by strong corroborating circumstances,[23] or where other persons present when the alleged statement was made are not called to contradict the witness,[24] or where several witnesses who testify to the statement have probably committed perjury if it was not made,[25] or where the temptation to falsify was great, and the witness could have sworn to more specific and numerous declarations without fear of contradiction.[26]

(C) Positive and Negative Testimony. Positive testimony of a witness that he heard a statement made usually outweighs the testimony of other persons who were present and who testify merely to a want of recollection[27] or that they did not hear it,[28] especially if the circumstances of the particular case indicate that alone;[64] that the alleged statement was made by a person in extremis who spoke with difficulty,[65] or was made partly in a foreign language not well understood by the witness and partly in English, which the declarant imperfectly understood;[66] that there was a different subject-matter to which the alleged statement might well refer;[67] that the witness is not positive in his testimony;[68] that the witness fails to remember his own previous sworn statements of the language used;[69] that the witness at one time distrusted the accuracy of his memory of the statement to which he testifies;[70] that the memory of the witness is in a confused condition;[71] that the witness makes the alleged declarant contradict himself in the same conversation;[72] that discrepancies in the examination of the witness in chief and his cross-examination, although immaterial, betray inaccuracy or confusion of memory;[73] that the witness' testimony is loose, uncertain, and contradictory;[74] that the witness cannot state who, if anybody, was present;[75] that the manner of the witness does not inspire confidence;[76] that the witness is unable to locate definitely the time of the conversation, although it must have been recent if it occurred at all;[77] that the witness does not recollect how the conversation arose, nor who introduced the particular topic, nor how he happened to come in contact with the declarant on the occasion, nor to whom he first repeated what was said;[78] that the witness has made mistakes in other parts of his testimony;[79] that the witness pretends to repeat verbatim a casual conversation after many years;[80] that the witness testifies to several different conversations which together supply all that is necessary for the case in hand;[81] that the credibility of the witness is seriously impaired by other parts of his testimony;[82] that the witness is seriously discredited as to part of his testimony by the opposing testimony of several witnesses;[83] that the witness prevaricates and contradicts himself;[84] or gives materially different versions of the language used;[85] that the witness has made contradictory statements as to the import of the declaration;[86] that the witness has evidently been "instructed" by the party in whose interest he testifies;[87] that there is a remarkably minute concurrence in the testimony of the several witnesses creating suspicion that they are testifying

(E) Circumstances Favorable to Testimony. The following facts have been noticed as tending to accredit testimony to oral statements: That the testimony of the witness is reasonable and probable in view of the established facts,[92] or is corroborated by the other evidence in the case;[93] that the subject-matter of the statement was likely to be discussed between the witness and the declarant, who were intimate acquaintances;[94] that several witnesses concur in their testimony to the statement,[95] and must be grossly perjured if the statement was not made,[96] while the party himself, highly interested, alone denies it;[97] that the same alleged statement was made at different times to different witnesses;[98] that the conduct of the witness subsequent to the alleged statement seems to have been influenced by it;[99] that the subsequent conduct of the alleged declarant tends to confirm the testimony;[1] that the witness related the same story soon after the alleged statement was made and with no possible motive to prevaricate;[2] that the witness is a person of unimpeachable character;[3] that the witnesses are not impeached in any manner;[4] that the witnesses are disinterested and unbiased;[5] that the witness testifies very circumstantially;[6] that the testimony is "precise, definite, distinct, positive";[7] that the several witnesses who testify to the alleged statement had met the declarant for the express purpose of discussing the subject-matter of the statement;[8] that the attention of the witness was specially directed to the statement;[9] that his memory is refreshed by a memorandum made at the time;[10] that several witnesses testify to the statement and another person who was present is not called to contradict them;[11] that no attempt is made to contradict the witness where it might have been done with effect had his testimony been true;[12] that the alleged declarant, a party to the suit, although present at the trial, is not called as a witness,[13] or, testifying in the case, does not contradict the witness nor offer any explanation;[14] that the alleged declarant who denies the statement has evidently testified falsely in other particulars;[15] that his testimony in denial of the statement was not delivered in a satisfactory manner;[16] that he gives an unsatisfactory explanation of his language and attributes to it a sense improbable in itself and contrary to that in which it was understood by the witness;[17] or that his denial is not so clear and positive as the opposing testimony.[18]

(II) Weight of Admissions Clearly Proved — (A) Express Admissions. Admissions when proved to have been made are to be considered and weighed precisely as other evidence.[19] The weight of admissions depends upon their character and the circumstances under which they were made,[20] and the effect of such circumstances is to be determined by the jury.[21] Declarations and admissions against interest, when deliberately made in view of all the facts to which they relate, are of a highly satisfactory and convincing character as evidence if they are not explained.[22] On the other hand admissions have little probative force when admission was made voluntarily to a confidential friend,[31] or is corroborated by other evidence in the case.[32] Admissions may be explained or qualified, and the party is at liberty to show that the fact admitted by him did not exist,[33] but cogent proof is required in order thus to overcome a deliberate admission,[34] especially a written admission.[35]

(B) Tacit Admissions. The weight of admissions by silence when statements are made in the presence of a party[36] depends upon the force of the circumstances and the motives which impel a denial if the statements are untrue.[37] Under some circumstances a party's silence may militate strongly against him,[38] but an adverse inference is always to be drawn with extreme caution,[39] especially where the statement is made by a stranger to the controversy;[40] and the evidence is of very little value where the silent party had no means of knowing the truth or falsity of the statement.[41]

2. CONCLUSIVENESS OF EVIDENCE — a. On Party Introducing It. A party may call witnesses or produce other evidence to prove a particular fact, although the testimony of witnesses who have previously testified on his behalf in the cause is thereby contradicted.[42] Where a party's own testimony makes out a case the contradictory testimony of his own witnesses does not destroy it as a matter of law;[43] and conversely a party's own testimony may be rejected and the facts may be found in accordance with the testimony of other witnesses, on whatever side called.[44] Nor is a party necessarily concluded by the testimony of his adversary whom he calls as a witness.[45] By introducing documentary evidence a party does not in general preclude himself from contradicting it.[46]

b. Evidence as to Value. Market value of an article[47] or the price for which it was sold on execution[48] or at auction[49] is not conclusive evidence of actual value.

D. Circumstantial Evidence and Credibility of Witnesses — 1. Circumstantial Evidence. As in criminal cases,[50] so in civil cases at law or in equity a well connected train of circumstances is as cogent of the existence of a fact as any array of direct evidence,[51] and frequently outweighs opposing direct testimony.[52] There is no rule that circumstances sufficient to establish a fact shall have the force and effect of the direct testimony of at least one credible witness.[53] A conclusion is not supported by circumstantial evidence unless the facts relied on are of such a nature and so related to each other that no other conclusion can fairly or reasonably be drawn from them,[54] and this requirement is strictly enforced where decisive direct evidence is probably obtainable, but is not produced.[55] A fortiori the circumstances must agree with and support the hypothesis which they are adduced to prove.[56] A fact cannot be established by circumstances which are perfectly consistent with direct, uncontradicted, and unimpeached testimony that the fact does not exist.[57] Where circumstantial evidence is relied upon the circumstances must be proved and not themselves presumed.[58]

2. Credibility of Witnesses — a. In General. "It is impossible to prescribe any fixed rule by which the credibility of the witness is to be tested." [59] Various circumstances affecting credibility have already been noticed.[60] Other and multitudinous considerations tending to enhance or impair the credibility of testimony are fully discussed elsewhere in this work.[61]

b. Witnesses Interested or Otherwise Biased. A biased witness is one who has a motive to color his statements, to suppress the truth, or to state what is false.[62] While pecuniary interest of the witness is the most common source of bias, close relationship to the party for whom he testifies,[63] hostility to the opposite party,[64] or any other circumstance which, according to common observation and experience, tends to create a partisan feeling,[65] also gives rise to bias. If a witness is biased his testimony to mere matter of opinion or judgment should usually be more or less discounted before it is accepted as a means of ascertaining truth.[66] Deliberate perjury, however, is not to be imputed to him without strong reason, and his testimony to matters of fact on his personal knowledge is ordinarily entitled prima facie to the credence awarded to the testimony of other witnesses,[67] but if it conflicts with probabilities or is contradicted by other apparently credible witnesses having equal means of knowledge, the disagreement is very generally reconciled by charging his testimony to mistake or defective memory.[68]

E. Sufficiency of Evidence — 1. In General. Evidence, although conflicting, is sufficient to support a finding or verdict where it meets the requirements of clearness, certainty, and convincing force in the particular case,[69] or supplies reasonable grounds for inferring the essential facts.[70] On the other hand testimony consisting of a mere legal conclusion [71] or utterly destitute of reasonable precision [72] is insufficient.

A son-in-law having spent money in improving his father-in-law's land, under a promise that it would be given to his wife, it was attempted to set off against this claim certain of his grocery bills, alleged to have been paid by the father-in-law. The only evidence in support of the claim was that of the son-in-law, who was unable to tell the amount or the time of the payments, and it was held that this evidence did not support the claim. Mechanics' Sav. Bank, etc., Co. v. Scoggin, (Tenn. Ch. App. 1899) 52 S. W. 718.

73. By La. Rev. Civ. Code, art. 2277, testimony of one witness, unsupported by corroborating circumstances, is insufficient to prove a contract where the amount exceeds five hundred dollars. For cases applying or suits[74] no more than one witness is required to establish any fact,[75] except the fact of reputation or notoriety.[76] Thus a lost or destroyed will may be established by testimony to its contents by a single witness.[77] In the numerous cases holding or intimating that the particular fact in dispute could not be established or negatived by the uncorroborated testimony of one witness, more especially of an interested witness, it will be found that cogent reasons of public policy controlled,[78] or that the testimony was opposed by a strong presumption of law,[79] the presumption, for example, of the truth of an officer's return of service of process,[80] of the verity of an officer's certificate of acknowledgment,[81] or that a deed duly

3. Inferences From Evidence. When a material fact is not proved by direct testimony, it may be rationally inferred by the court or jury from the facts which have been so proved,[83] even though the inference be not a necessary one.[84] But judgment must be exercised in accordance with correct and common modes of reasoning,[85] and an inference should not be adopted from a few of the facts proved when it is absolutely inconsistent with, and repelled by, other equally well proved facts.[86] Mere possibilities will not sustain a legitimate inference of the existence of a fact.[87]

4. Availability on Any Issue of Evidence Introduced Generally. Evidence introduced without restriction is available on any issue which it tends to prove,[88] and which is within the pleadings.[89] But if the evidence is limited to a particular purpose its effect must be confined to that purpose,[90] especially if the evidence would not be independently competent for any other purpose.[91] An entire book cannot be used by one party merely because the other has read and introduced a part of it.[92]

F. Particular Facts or Issues — 1. Evidence as to Value. The price paid for real property, improvements made thereon, and the amount offered to the owner for the property are important considerations in estimating its value.[93] Estimate of value of property destroyed made at or near the time of its destruction is preferable to an estimate made years afterward from memory of its condition.[94]

2. Identity. The weight of testimony to personal recognition depends greatly upon the opportunity of the witness for observation of the person and the probability that he took accurate notice,[95] as well as the lapse of time since the person was last seen,[96] and his change of features in the meanwhile.[97] The testimony is received with caution when it is inconsistent with other evidence in the case.[98] Since identity is more easily disproved than established, weakness of evidence in disproof tends to strengthen the evidence of identity.[99] Credit may be given to testimony of a witness that he recognized the voice of an acquaintance talking to him by telephone.[1] Identity of name is sufficient in the first instance as presumptive evidence of identity of person.[2]

3. Ownership. Unchallenged possession and control of property is sufficient evidence of ownership,[3] but is not conclusive.[4] A certificate of enrolment of a vessel pursuant to a federal statute is some evidence of ownership.[5] Ownership may be established against a party by proof of his tacit admission thereof.[6] One whose name and business address appear on a wagon in use on a public street is prima facie the owner of the vehicle.[7] Parol evidence that personal property was purchased at a sheriff's sale is not sufficient proof of title to it.[8] Ownership is not proved by testimony which consists of a mere conclusion of law with the facts left in uncertainty.[9] Testimony that title to real estate "passed" from one person to another, without further particulars, has no value whatever,[10] and mere hearsay is clearly insufficient.[11]

4. Pedigree. In pedigree cases[12] general reputation as to marriages, births, and deaths is highly satisfactory evidence.[13] The official register of births and baptisms is usually strong evidence of the facts stated therein[14] and better than testimony to oral declarations and admissions of strangers to the record.[15] Inscriptions on tombstones uncontradicted for many years acquire a considerable degree of authenticity,[16] but in many cases have been proven to be gross frauds.[17] Testimony of interested parties to oral declarations of persons long since dead is regarded with suspicion.[18] It can hardly overcome opposing inferences derived from official entries,[19] and is inferior in weight to testimony of witnesses who speak from personal knowledge.[20] Entries in a family bible manifestly not contemporaneous with the event recorded are of doubtful value as evidence of ancient facts.[21]

I. DEFINITION.

An exchange of property is a mutual grant, transfer, or commutation of property for property other than money.[1]

See 21 Cent. Dig. tit. "Exchange of Property," §§ 1, 2.

Exchange of goods has been defined to be: "A commutation, transmutation or transfer of goods for other goods, as distinguished from sale, which is a transfer of goods for money." Burrill L. Dict.

"The transfer of goods and chattels for other goods and chattels of equal value. This is more commonly called barter." Bouvier L. Dict.

"Exchanges of goods and merchandise, Were the original and natural way of commerce, precedent to buying; for there was no buying till money was invented; though in exchanging, both parties are as buyers and sellers, and both equally warrant." 2 Jacob L. Dict.

Exchange of land has been defined to be "a mutual grant of equal interests, the one in consideration of the other." 2 Blackstone Comm. 323. To same effect see Bixby v. Bent, 59 Cal. 522; Hartwell v. De Vault, 159 Ill. 325, 42 N. E. 789; Wilcox v. Randall, 7 Barb. (N. Y.) 633; Windsor v. Collinson, 32 Oreg. 297, 52 Pac. 26; Long v. Fuller, 21 Wis. 121; Bouvier L. Dict.; Burrill L. Dict.; Jacob L. Dict. See also infra, II, A, 1.

Parties to exchange of land.— An exchange of land can only be made between two parties in interest. If more than two parties, pursuant to an agreement between them, make conveyances each to the other, it is not a technical exchange. Doe v. Spencer, 2 Exch. 752; Eton College v. Winchester, Lofft 401, 2 W. Bl. 936, 3 Wils. C. P. 468, 483. See also Jacob L. Dict.

"Barter" and "exchange" are often used synonymously. Cooper v. State, 37 Ark. 412; Com. v. Davis, 12 Bush (Ky.) 240; Reynolds v. Franklin, 41 Minn. 279, 43 N. W. 53; Jenkins v. Mapes, 53 Ohio St. 110, 41 N. E. 137. See also BARTER, 5 Cyc. 621.

By La. Civ. Code, § 2630, an exchange of property is defined as "a contract by which the contractors give to one another one thing for another, whatever it be, except money; for in that case it would be a sale." Preston v. Keene, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 133, 136, 10 L. ed. 387.

The difference between an "exchange" and a "sale" is that in the former no fixed money price is placed upon either of the properties exchanged, while in the latter there is either a money consideration or the equivalent thereof in property at a fixed valuation. Fuller v. Duren, 36 Ala. 73, 76 Am. Dec. 318; Com. v. Davis, 12 Bush (Ky.) 240; Picard v. McCormick, 11 Mich. 68; Herrick v. Carter, 56 Barb. (N. Y.) 41; Thornton v. Moody, (Tex. Civ. App. 1893) 24 S. W. 331; Jordan v. Dyer, 34 Vt. 104, 40 Am. Dec. 668; Loomis v. Wainwright, 21 Vt. 520; Buffum v. Merry, 4 Fed. Cas. No. 2,112, 3 Mason 478; 2 Blackstone Comm. 446. II. REQUISITES AND VALIDITY.

A. Formal Requisites — 1. Essential Words in Exchanges of Realty. Exchange of lands is a technical form of conveyance in which the word "exchange" must be used, and no circumlocution can operate to supply this word if it be omitted.[2]

2. The Consideration — a. In General. The primary consideration moving from each party to an exchange is the property transferred by him to the other party;[3] but the mere fact that one of the exchangers pays a sum of money in addition to the property transferred by him, or that provision is made for an adjustment of the difference in the values of the respective properties, does not necessarily prevent the transaction from being an exchange.[4]

v. Bowman, 2 La. 251, where it was held that where one party received a slave from another at a stipulated price, to be paid out of the proceeds of another slave delivered by the former to the latter, it was a contract of exchange. It has been held that there is no substantial difference between an exchange and a sale, the title to the property passing in each case, and the same rules of law being applicable. Howard v. Harris, 8 Allen (Mass.) 297; Com. v. Clark, 14 Gray (Mass.) 367; Kennerly v. Somerville, 68 Mo. App. 222. But granting this to be true, the technical distinction between the two transactions is of considerable importance in some cases. Thus, in Walker v. Renfro, 26 Tex. 142, it was held that certain reciprocal conveyances of realty did not constitute a technical exchange, and hence one of the parties, on being evicted from the land he had received, had no right of reëntry upon the land he had given in exchange. In Cooper v. State, 37 Ark. 412, it was held that a count in an indictment charging that defendant did "sell, barter, or otherwise dispose of" certain property, a sale of which was a criminal offense, was bad for uncertainty, "sell" and "barter" not being synonymous. But in Smith v. Spears, 22 Ont. 286, it was held that a power to sell and "absolutely dispose of" authorized an exchange. In Edwards v. Cottrell, 43 Iowa 194, it was held that a power of sale in a mortgage did not authorize an exchange of the mortgaged property. See also McMichael v. Wilkie, 18 Ont. App. 464. Likewise in Long v. Fuller, 21 Wis. 121, it was held that a power of attorney to exchange certain property did not authorize a sale thereof. See, generally, Sales.

"A partition and an exchange are well-known modes of assurance, perfectly distinct from each other, each having its own rules." Atty.-Gen. v. Hamilton, 1 Madd. 214, 223, 16 Rev. Rep. 208.

"Exchange" differs from "bailment" in that in the former no return of the property given in exchange is contemplated, whereas in the latter the specific property, either in its identical form or in some other form into which it may be traced, must be returned by the bailee. Schindler v. Westover, 99 Ind. 395; King v. Fuller, 3 Cai. (N. Y.) 152; Austin v. Seligman, 18 Fed. 519, 21 Blatchf. 506. See, generally, Bailments.

See 21 Cent. Dig. tit. "Exchange of Property," § 3.

Technical exchanges now of rare occurrence.— As a result of this rule, technical exchanges of land have been almost entirely abandoned in modern conveyancing, the substitute being mutual deeds of bargain and sale. Gamble v. McClure, 69 Pa. St. 282.

3. Brown v. Bailey, 159 Pa. St. 121, 28 Atl. 245; Moss v. Culver, 64 Pa. St. 414, 3 Am. Rep. 601; Harvey v. Gallaher, (Tenn. Ch. App. 1898) 48 S. W. 298.

Covenants and promises accompanying an exchange form a part of the consideration. Headrick v. Wisehart, 57 Ind. 129.

Exchanges in gross.— Where no money valuation is placed upon either of the properties exchanged, the presumption is that the transaction is an exchange in gross. Atkinson v. Beckett, 34 W. Va. 584, 12 S. E. 717.

Value of corporate stock.— A contract to exchange goods for corporate stock, without naming its value, calls for the stock at its par value. Tilkey v. Augusta, etc., R. Co., 83 Ga. 757, 10 S. E. 448.

4. Lingeman v. Shirk, 15 Ind. App. 432, 43 N. E. 33; Sternberger v. McGovern, 56 N. Y. 12 [reversing 4 Daly 456]; Frame v. Tabler, (Tenn. Ch. App. 1898) 52 S. W. 1014. But see Windsor v. Collinson, 32 Oreg. 297, 52 Pac. 26, where it was held that the payment of money in addition to the property exchanged renders the transaction a sale. See also Wilcox v. Randall, 7 Barb. (N. Y.) 633; Long v. Fuller, 21 Wis. 121, in both of which cases it was intimated that if the money

b. Sufficiency — (i) Title to Property. Each party must have a transferable title to the property given by him in exchange. Where neither party has such a title there is a total failure of consideration on both sides, and the exchange is void.[5] Likewise where the title attempted to be transferred by either party fails the exchange is voidable at the election of the other party.[6]

(ii) Estates in Realty. In exchanges of realty the estates of the parties in the respective properties exchanged must be of equal dignity, as for example a fee for a fee, or lease for a certain term for a lease for the same term.[7]

(iii) Value. The value of the respective properties need not be equal, but there must not be such a disparity as will shock the conscience of equity.[8]

3. Mutuality. Mutuality is essential to every exchange of property. Each party is both vendor and vendee, and each must grant, convey, or transfer to the other; otherwise the transaction is not an exchange.[9] consideration be proportionately very large, as for example equal to or greater than the value of the property consideration, the transaction will be a sale instead of an exchange.

Commercial paper.— Where one of the parties gives his notes in addition to the property constituting the primary consideration moving from him, and executes a mortgage on the property received by him to secure such notes, the notes constitute a part of the consideration of the exchange, and hence any shortage in the property received by the party giving the notes furnishes a set-off to the extent thereof in an action against the maker of the notes. Frame v. Tabler, (Tenn. Ch. App. 1898) 52 S. W. 1014. The note of a third party, given in exchange for other property, is itself the consideration moving from the party giving it in exchange, and if it be not paid such party will not be liable to the other party on account of the non-payment. Shuff v. Cross, 12 Mart. (La.) 89.

5. Bixby v. Bent, 59 Cal. 522; Cadieux v. Rawlinson, 2 Quebec 296, holding, however, that since plaintiff did not know that defendant had no title, he might maintain an action for damages for breach of the contract. See also St. Denis v. Higgins, 24 Ont. 230. A contract to exchange lands which the parties do not own, "provided title can be procured and made," is a contingent contract, and is not binding if the parties are unable to comply with the condition. Lacy v. Hall, 37 Pa. St. 360. But the fact that plaintiff, in a contract for exchange of lands, agreed to convey by full covenant deed, when the title was in his mother, was held in Macdonald v. Bach, 169 N. Y. 615, 62 N. E. 1097 [affirming 51 N. Y. App. Div. 549, 64 N. Y. Suppl. 831], not ground for defendant's refusal to perform when, at the time for passing title, plaintiff tendered a covenant deed to the property, executed by his mother, and offered to join in such deed in order to be bound by the covenants.

The law implies a warranty of title in exchanges of land (Gamble v. McClure, 69 Pa. St. 282; Bixler v. Saylor, 68 Pa. St. 146; Dean v. Shelly, 57 Pa. St. 426, 98 Am. Where a tract of land worth one thousand six hundred dollars is exchanged for a tract worth one thousand dollars, there is no such discrepancy in their values as will authorize a cancellation of the exchange, although the owner of the latter tract purchased it for less than one thousand dollars for the purpose of speculation. Wilson v. Jackson, 167 Mo. 135, 66 S. W. 972.

Innocent purchasers.— Where by agreement between the parties one of them conveys to a third person who has purchased from the other party, the exchange cannot be canceled for failure of the consideration moving from the party who sells to the third person, where such third person has no knowledge of the worthlessness of the property given in exchange by his vendor. Belau v. Bryan, 89 Iowa 348, 56 N. W. 512.

9. Bixby v. Bent, 59 Cal. 522; Preston v. Keene, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 133, 10 L. ed. 387.

Bilateral agreement but not exchange.— A written instrument providing for an exchange of property, signed and sealed by both parties, abstracts of title to be furnished and deeds to be delivered within fifteen days, contained the following provision: "This agreement is made subject to the procuring of a satis-

4. Transfer of Title or Possession. The mutual transfer of title or possession need not be contemporaneous. A contract of exchange may be executory on one side and executed on the other.[10] The contract may even be executory on both sides.[11]

B. Parol Contracts For Exchange of Realty. Parol contracts for the exchange of realty are valid when established by clear and indubitable evidence,[12] and have been sufficiently performed to take them out of the statute of frauds.[13]

III. Performance of Contract.

A. Time — 1. In General. In the absence of anything to show a contrary intent on the part of the parties, a contract for the exchange of property must be performed on both sides concurrently.[14] Neither party therefore can put the factory loan to the party of the first part (plaintiffs) on the last-described property" (the property to be received by plaintiffs in the exchange). Construing this as meaning a loan to be procured by plaintiffs satisfactory to themselves, but not stating its amount or terms, it was held that, although in the form of a bilateral agreement, this instrument in legal effect amounted only to a proposal or offer by defendant, which he was at liberty to withdraw at any time before its acceptance by plaintiffs, the reason being that plaintiffs had an arbitrary right to repudiate the transaction, and hence there was lacking that mutuality of obligation essential to every contract. Storch v. Duhnke, 76 Minn. 521, 524, 79 N. W. 533.

Forfeiture for failure to convey.— Where one party agreed for a certain consideration to convey certain property to the other party, provided the latter would at the same time convey certain other property to the former, each to incur a certain forfeiture if he failed to convey, it was held that the failure of the second party to convey, he not having accepted any conveyance from the first party, did not render him liable to a forfeiture, the reason being that he had not agreed to convey anything to the first party, and hence the contract being without mutuality. Goodale v. Hill, 42 Conn. 311.

Mutual covenants.— In the absence of evidence showing a contrary intent, the presumption is that covenants in a contract for the exchange of property are mutual. Pead v. Trull, 173 Mass. 450, 53 N. E. 901.

Independent covenants.—Not all covenants, however, in exchanges of property are mutual. Thus, where an agreement to exchange lands contains covenants on the part of each party to pay taxes on his property to the date of the exchange, and also contains a covenant by one of the parties to sell the property he is to part with in the exchange for a specified sum for the benefit of the other party, the covenants to pay taxes and the covenant to sell are not mutually dependent covenants, so as to make payment of taxes by the party in favor of whom the covenant to sell is made a condition precedent to his recovery for a breach of such covenant; but such failure to pay taxes may be shown in diminution of damages. Hartman v. Ruby, 16 App. Cas. (D. C.) 45. See also Putnam v. Mellen, 34 N. H. 71.

10. That is, the mere fact that one of the parties is not to receive his consideration until a future date will not prevent the transaction from being an exchange. Pratt v. Wickham, (Mich. 1903) 94 N. W. 1059; Mitchell v. Gile. 12 N. H. 390; Jenkins v. Mapes, 53 Ohio St. 110, 41 N. E. 137. But see Preston v. Keene, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 133, 10 L. ed. 387, holding that under the laws of Louisiana an exchange must be executed on both sides. See also to the same effect Saul v. His Creditors, 7 Mart. N. S. (La.) 594.

11. See Gamble v. McClure, 69 Pa. St. 282.

12. Brown v. Bailey, 159 Pa. St. 121, 28 Atl. 245; Moss v. Culver, 64 Pa. St. 414, 3 Am. Rep. 601; Casey v. Castle, 112 Wis. 32, 87 N. W. 811. A parol contract for the exchange of lands cannot be inferred merely from the declaration of the parties, but must be proved by competent evidence. Taylor v. Henderson, 38 Pa. St. 60. The terms of agreement must furthermore be shown with precision, and the evidence must establish the agreement to a moral certainty; but absolute certainty is not required, and mere conflict in the evidence is not fatal, provided all the necessary facts be established with reasonable distinctness and certainty. Jermyn v. McClure, 195 Pa. St. 245, 45 Atl. 938.

Fixing of boundaries.— The boundaries are fixed with sufficient certainty where two persons, having adjoining lands lying on both sides of a stream, make a parol exchange, and agree that one shall own the land on a certain side of the stream and the other the land on the other side. Jermyn v. McClure, 195 Pa. St. 245, 45 Atl. 938.

13. See, generally, Frauds, Statute of.

Parol rescission — Estoppel.— It does not lie in the mouth of one party to a trade, when the other party, seeking to rescind the contract of exchange, has placed him in statu quo, to say that the trade had to do with a lease of real estate for more than five years, and that the rescission of the contract was required by law to be in writing. Hart v. Kimball, 72 Cal. 283, 13 Pac. 852.

14. Brennan v. Ford, 46 Cal. 7; Pead v. Trull, 173 Mass. 450, 53 N. E. 901.

Waiver.— Where one of the parties performs without insisting on contemporaneous other party in default except by full performance on his own part or a proper tender thereof.[15]

2. Limitations as to Time. Sometimes it is provided in the contract that the performance must be made within a specified time, in which case failure of either party to perform or to demand and tender performance within the specified time discharges the other party, unless the party seeking to enforce the contract have a valid excuse for his own default.[16]

B. When Complete. A contract of exchange is completely performed when the titles to the respective properties have mutually passed; that is, when there has been a delivery and an acceptance on both sides.[17] Where anything remains to be done on either side the contract is not fully performed.[18] performance by the other party, the right of contemporaneous performance is waived, and the contract becomes executed on one side and executory on the other. Morgan v. Powers, 66 Barb. (N. Y.) 35. Compare Godfrey v. Rosenthal, (S. D. 1903) 97 N. W. 365, where plaintiff assented to the delay in the delivery of a deed.

15. Royal v. Dennison, 109 Cal. 558, 42 Pac. 39; Crabtree v. Levings, 53 Ill. 526; Pead v. Trull, 173 Mass. 450, 53 N. E. 901; Hamilton v. Crossman, 130 Pa. St. 320, 18 Atl. 634; Ellis v. Light, (Tex. Civ. App. 1903) 73 S. W. 551.

Excuse for failure to tender performance.— In Royal v. Dennison, 109 Cal. 558, 42 Pac. 39, it was held that the mere fact that one of the parties conveyed the land agreed to be exchanged by him to his father for the purpose of defeating the claims of creditors against the land, which conveyance was set aside as to the creditors, was no excuse for the other party's failure to perform or to make a tender thereof, in the absence of anything to show that the father was unwilling to convey according to the contract of exchange, and that the son was unable to pay the claims of the creditors.

16. Perritt v. Arnold, 11 U. C. C. P. 413. A contract for an exchange of real estate, containing dependent covenants to be performed within a time fixed, is not discharged by non-performance or a failure to demand performance within the time stated, where performance is prevented by the previous death of one of the covenantors, and the absence of administration upon his estate. Pead v. Trull, 173 Mass. 450, 53 N. E. 901.

Where such provisions are made, the time within which the contract must be performed depends upon the construction of each particular contract. A contract for the exchange of lands provided that one party should obtain a loan "as soon as possible, and when the funds are borrowed the deeds above provided for shall be exchanged and delivered, or within 40 days at the most." It was held that the forty days did not commence to run from the time the contract was made, but from the effecting of the loan by said party. Te Poel v. Shutt, 57 Nebr. 592, 602, 78 N. W. 288.

17. Jenkins v. Mapes, 53 Ohio St. 110, 41 N. E. 137; Hazard v. Hamlin, 5 Watts (Pa.) 201; Russell v. Phelps, 73 Vt. 390, 50 Atl. 1101.

In common-law exchanges of land no livery of seizin was necessary (2 Blackstone Comm. 323); but it was necessary that there should be an execution by entry or claim in the life of the parties (2 Blackstone Comm. 323; Bouvier L. Dict.; Jacob L. Dict.).

It is a question for the jury to decide whether there has been a delivery. Rhea v. Riner, 21 Ill. 526.

Rights of third parties which have been acquired by reason of a completed exchange cannot be defeated by a reëxchange. Hazard v. Hamlin, 5 Watts (Pa.) 201. Thus, in Wolf v. Plunkett, 30 Fed. Cas. No. 17,926, 1 Flipp. 427, it appeared that A and B exchanged lands, there being at the time a recent judgment, unknown to B, which was a lien on A's property, and the property for that reason was reëxchanged, the original parties being put into possession. It was held that a purchaser under an execution on such judgment against B's property had a title at law superior to the title of B or subsequent purchasers from him. See also Cook v. Pinkerton, 81 Ga. 89, 7 S. E. 171, 12 Am. St. Rep. 297, where it was held that an exchange of personalty, being complete upon mutual transfer of possession, where one of the parties without the other's consent repossesses himself of the property which he has given in exchange, he thereby commits a tort, and one purchasing such property from him acquires no right therein. But where one of the parties to an exchange of lands, each having executed title bonds, agrees that the other party may mortgage the property to be conveyed by him, the former thereby waives his equities under his title bond in favor of the mortgagee. Kirklin v. Atlas Sav., etc., Assoc., 107 Ga. 313, 33 S. E. 83.

18. Thus, where two parties agree to exchange lands, and one party executes a deed for all he has agreed to exchange, but receives a deed for only a part of what the other party is to convey, the contract is not extinguished. Harland v. Harpold, 182 Ill. 227, 55 N. E. 376. Likewise, under an agreement to exchange a growing crop of wheat for a certain amount of oats, the title to the wheat does not pass so long as the oats remain undelivered and mingled with other oats belonging to the party contracting for the wheat. Crapo v. Seybold, 35 Mich. 169. See also Barrett v. Turner, 2 Nebr. 172, where it was held that where a party who had agreed to exchange land for personalty

C. Sufficiency. Literal performance is not required. It will be sufficient if the party seeking to enforce the contract has substantially and in good faith complied with his obligations thereunder.[19]

D. Tender of Performance. A tender of performance, in order to have the effect of an actual performance, must be unconditional,[20] the property or a sufficient conveyance thereof must be produced,[21] and the party to whom the tender is made must wrongfully reject it.[22] discovered a defect in the title to the land which he had received, and therefore placed the personalty in the hands of a third person, with instruction to deliver them to the other party to the exchange upon the payment by him of a certain price, this did not operate to transfer the title to the property or constitute a performance of the contract. And see Miles v. Langley, 2 Russ. & M. 626, 11 Eng. Ch. 626, 39 Eng. Reprint 533, where it was held that a mutual exchange of possession of parts of certain lands in which the parties held leasehold estates did not operate to defeat a sale to a third person of one of the leaseholds under legal process against the party who gave it in exchange.

Reservation of right to rescind, within a certain time upon certain conditions, will not prevent the contract from being fully performed upon mutual delivery and acceptance, so as to entitle the party in whose favor the reservation is made to reclaim the property given by him without returning the property received by him or tendering a return thereof. Stoddard v. Graham, 23 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 518. See also Johnson v. McLane, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 501, 43 Am. Dec. 102. And see Walker v. Reed, 26 N. C. 152, where the court, construing a condition whereby each party upon a certain contingency was to have the right to resume title and possession of the property conveyed by him, held that upon the mutual conveyance of the properties the titles thereto passed, subject only to be defeated upon the happening of the specified contingency.

H. 71 (where it was held that a contract for the exchange of cattle on a certain day at a certain place was sufficiently performed by one of the parties by his having his cattle at the designated place at eight o'clock A. M., and again at a later time during such day, although during the interval when the cattle were absent the other party came prepared to accept them and left before their return); Macdonald v. Bach, 169 N. Y. 615, 62 N. E. 1097 [affirming 51 N. Y. App. Div. 549, 64 N. Y. Suppl. 831] (where it was held that where a wall on property which plaintiff has contracted to exchange extends on the property of an adjoining property-owner about three-quarters of an inch, and the latter has erected an independent wall on his property, the encroachment is not sufficient to justify defendant's refusal to perform the contract); Calloway v. Hamby, 65 N. C. 631 (where specific performance was decreed, notwithstanding that the slaves which plaintiff had transferred to defendant in consideration for the property in litigation had been emancipated by the federal government. This decision was based also on the ground that defendant in purchasing the slaves took them subject to the possibility of emancipation, although there was nothing to this effect in the contract).

Buildings in course of construction.—Where buildings in course of construction were exchanged for other property, and thereafter, pursuant to the contract of exchange, such buildings were completed and accepted by the party to whom they were to be transferred, the contract was held to have been completely performed, notwithstanding that the fire department, acting within its discretion, required the buildings to be equipped with fire-escapes in addition to those already existing. Riley v. Ackley, 12 N. Y. Suppl. 701. See also Canaday v. Stiger, 55 N. Y. 452 [affirming 35 N. Y. Super. Ct. 423], where it was held that one who accepts in exchange for other property buildings in course of construction by a contractor has no equity against the other party if the contractor fails to complete the buildings.

Stipulations as to satisfaction.— A stipulation that the agreement is subject to the condition that the titles shall be satisfactory on both sides does not give either party the arbitrary right to refuse to accept a tendered performance by the other party. If in such case the titles are good in law both parties are bound to be satisfied. Underhill v. Beardslee, 37 N. J. L. 309, where it was held, however, that an outstanding inchoate right of dower in the land agreed to be exchanged by one party is sufficient ground for dissatisfaction on the part of the other party.

21. A party making the tender must produce the property (Hounsford v. Fisher, Wright (Ohio) 580); but where the other party repudiates the agreement and makes no objection because the property is not produced, a mere offer to perform, coupled with the ability to carry out the offer, is sufficient (Eames v. Haver, 111 Cal. 401, 43 Pac. 1120).

IV. ENCUMBRANCES.

A. Covenants Against Encumbrances. Where a party to an exchange of realty has accepted a conveyance with covenants against encumbrances, it has been held that he cannot refuse to convey to the other party merely because of the existence of encumbrances,[23] or because he has not been reimbursed for expenditures which he has been compelled to make on account of such encumbrances.[24] On the other hand it has been held that where either party has to make expenditures in order to protect the property received by him from encumbrances covenanted against by the other party, he may, if he has not himself conveyed to such other party, either retain the property agreed to be conveyed by him as security for such expenditures, or have the amount thereof decreed a lien on such property, and have it sold to satisfy the lien.[25]

B. Assumption of Encumbrances. The operation and effect of provisions assuming mortgages, taxes, and assessments depend upon the construction of each particular contract.[26]

V. REMEDIES.[27]

A. For Failure to Perform Contract — 1. Where One Party Has Performed. Where one of the parties to a contract of exchange of property has on his part fully performed the contract by conveying or delivering the thing which he agreed to give in exchange, upon the failure or refusal on the part of the other party to perform the contract he may affirm the contract and maintain an action at law for the value of the thing which he should have received[28] or an action veyed the property which he agreed to exchange will place the other party in default if he refuse to accept such deed, where no objection is made at the time on account of the deed being from such third party. Royal v. Dennison, 109 Cal. 558, 42 Pac. 39.

23. Greenwood v. Hoyt, 41 Minn. 381, 43 N. W. 8. In Reynolds v. Franklin, 41 Minn. 279, 43 N. W. 53, it was held that even though a particular encumbrance be specially covenanted against by one of the parties, and the other party be obliged to execute a bond to the holder of the encumbrance in order to obtain possession of the property, the second party, having accepted the warranty against the encumbrance, must rely upon it, and cannot on account thereof refuse to perform. But see infra, V, D, 1.

Lien on land conveyed.— In Seney v. Porter, 12 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 546, it was held that where one of the parties is compelled to redeem from an encumbrance covenanted against by the other, he has a lien on the land conveyed in exchange by him for the amount thus expended.

Recovery of taxes paid.—Where each party agrees to pay certain taxes on the property given by him in exchange, and one of the parties gives to the other the money to pay such taxes, but is thereafter, on account of such other party's failure to pay them, compelled to pay them again, he may set off the amount of such taxes in an action by the other party against him on notes given by him in part consideration. Action for property.— In Morgan v. Powers, 66 Barb. (N. Y.) 35, it was held that a contract to exchange personalty passes the title of the properties to the respective parties, and hence that, upon the failure of one of the parties to deliver, the other party may maintain an action for the specific property which he ought to have received. See also Rhea v. Riner, 21 Ill. 526.

Shortage.— Where the party who has fully performed has received a portion but not all of that which he ought to have received, he may recover from the other party the value of the shortage. Reynolds v. Franklin, 41 Minn. 279, 43 N. W. 53; Dargan v. Ellis, 81 Tex. 194, 16 S. W. 789. Even though the contract be for an exchange in gross, if one of the parties has been misled as to the quantity he was receiving equity will decree him compensation. Atkinson v. Beckett, 34 W. Va. 584, 12 S. E. 717. This decision manifestly rests upon fraud, and in all actions for shortages arising from fraud or mistake, plaintiff must show that upon the delivery thereof he gave prompt notice to the other party, with a demand to have it corrected. Selleck v. Griswold, 49 Wis. 39, 5 N. W. 213. See infra, V, C. In Harm v. Voss, (Iowa 1900) 82 N. W. 753, the evidence was held not to show any shortage. In Jenne v. Gilbert, 26 Nebr. 457, 42 N. W. 415, it was held that where it appeared that a verbal exchange of a mercantile business for other property was made on March 22, to date from March 1 of the same year, and there was conflicting evidence as to whether plaintiff or defendant was to have the proceeds of the business from March 1 to March 22, it was reversible error to exclude defendant's testimony that he was to receive such proceeds. In Smyser v. Frank, 49 S. W. 1071, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 952, it was held that there can be no recovery for a shortage in the exchange of lands, in the absence of evidence of the value of the land omitted.

Boot money.— Where, upon an exchange of personalty, one of the parties agrees to pay the other a certain sum as boot money, such sum may be recovered upon the common count for goods sold and delivered. Porter v. Talcott, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 359. But in Wagner's Appeal, 3 Walk. (Pa.) 130, it was held that when an assigned estate is solvent, the assignee is not liable to pay a sum of money which had been agreed by him to be paid on an exchange of the assigned land for other real estate, the latter being taken by the assignors, who thus become owners of the money in question, which was not needed to pay their debts. In Chamberlin v. Peltz, 1 Mo. App. 183, it appeared that the claimants had given personalty for realty, on the understanding that they were to have a mortgage on the personalty to secure the excess in value thereof over the value of the realty, but that this excess had been settled and claimants had accepted a mortgage, in ignorance, through their own carelessness, of taxes which constituted an encumbrance on the realty, and thus reduced its value. It was held that an equitable lien upon the personalty for the unsettled difference in the values of the properties would be denied. The complaint in an action for boot money need not allege that the goods transferred by plaintiff to defendant were of the kind and quality contracted for, or that they were free from liens. Sharp v. Radebaugh, 70 Ind. 547. An action to recover the difference resulting from an oral contract of exchange of lands should not be based upon the oral agreement, which is void, but upon the contract as executed. Ing v. Roberts, 1 N. Y. City Ct. 371.

Failure to make improvements as agreed upon property exchanged furnishes the party receiving such property with a cause of action against the other party for the difference between the value of the property unimproved and the value which it would have had if it had been improved as agreed. Wilson v. Yocum, 77 Iowa 569, 42 N. W. 446.

Demand of performance must be made upon the party failing to perform as a condition precedent to the right of the other party to sue for the value of the thing he ought to have received. Edwards v. Hartt, 66 Ill. 71; Morgan v. Powers, 66 Barb. (N. Y.) 35. But where it appears that a demand would have been useless, the failure to make it is excused. Greenwood v. Hoyt, 41 Minn. 381, 43 N. W. 8.

Res adjudicata.— A judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action for the value of property agreed by defendant to be delivered to plaintiff in exchange for other property is no bar to a subsequent action by defendant in the first action for breach of warranty as to the property received by him. Morgan v. Powers, 66 Barb. (N. Y.) 35.

29. Lingeman v. Shirk, 15 Ind. App. 432, 43 N. E. 33; Reynolds v. Franklin, 41 Minn. 279, 43 N. W. 53; Mitchell v. Gile, 12 N. H. 390.

Conversion.— A contract of exchange of property is governed by the same rules of law as a contract of sale, and upon breach thereof an action may be maintained by the party who has performed for damages for conversion of the property traded for. Russell v. Phelps, 73 Vt. 390, 50 Atl. 1101.

Sufficiency of declaration.—Allegations that plaintiff and defendant agreed to exchange lands, and that as a further consideration defendant promised to make certain improvements upon the land adjoining the tract to be conveyed to him, which improvements defendant had failed to make, will sustain an action for a breach of a contract. Wilson v. Yocum, 77 Iowa 569, 42 N. W. 446.

performance.[30] On the other hand he may rescind the contract and sue at law for the specific property with which he has parted,[31] or the value thereof;[32] or he may sue in equity for the rescission of the contract.[33]

Measure of damages.— Plaintiff agreed to exchange certain wheat with defendant for seed wheat. Plaintiff was to deliver all his wheat to the elevator, deliver the storage tickets to defendant, and pay storage charges until April 1, and was to take the seed wheat at defendant's residence. Plaintiff performed his agreement but defendant refused to comply with the same. It was held that the measure of damages was the difference between the value of the seed wheat when and where it was to be delivered and the market value of plaintiff's wheat at the time of refusal of defendant to accept the storage tickets. Talbot v. Boyd, (N. D. 1902) 88 N. W. 1026. See N. D. Rev. Codes, § 4985. See also infra, V, A, 2. In an action to recover damages for breach of a written contract for the exchange of land, the plaintiff cannot include as a separate item of damages counsel fees which he was required to pay in a previous equity suit brought by the defendant against the plaintiff to enforce specific performance of the contract, and resulting in a dismissal of the bill. Kaufmann v. Kirker, 22 Pa. Super. Ct. 201.

30. Reynolds v. Franklin, 41 Minn. 279, 43 N. W. 53; Te Poel v. Shutt, 57 Nebr. 592, 78 N. W. 288; Macdonald v. Bach, 51 N. Y. App. Div. 549, 64 N. Y. Suppl. 831 [affirmed in 169 N. Y. 615, 62 N. E. 1097].

Specific performance decreed in suit for rescission.— See Gray v. Reesor, 15 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 205.

The statute of limitations does not begin to run against a claim for the specific performance of a contract of exchange until one of the parties has fully performed or has made a valid tender of performance. Brennan v. Ford, 46 Cal. 7.

31. Saul v. His Creditors, 7 Mart. N. S. (La.) 594.

Condition precedent.— If one who exchanges property desires to recover what he surrendered, he must tender back what he received, although the exchange may have been an enforced one produced by violence. The fact that the amount received by plaintiff is proportionally small makes no difference. Nor does a refusal by defendant to surrender the property on demand excuse plaintiff from making his tender. Reynolds v. Copeland, 71 Ind. 422.

Waiver.— Although either party to an agreement for an exchange of personal property may refuse to deliver until he receives the property agreed to be given in exchange, he may waive performance by the other party and complete the agreement on his part by full performance, and having done so he cannot rescind the agreement of exchange and sue for the property delivered by him, his only remedy in such case being an action for the property agreed to be given in exchange, after demand made or for its value. Morgan v. Powers, 66 Barb. (N. Y.) 35.

Equitable defenses.— A party to a parol agreement for the exchange of land, in possession under the contract, who by his own act puts it out of his power to perform his part of the contract, is not entitled to retain possession of the land; and the fact that he has made permanent improvements thereon gives him no such equity therein as will defeat an action of ejectment by the other party. French v. Seely, 7 Watts (Pa.) 231, 32 Am. Dec. 758.

Under a conditional contract for the exchange of lands, if the party obligated to perform the condition does not do so within a reasonable time, the other party may rescind and recover back the property. Joplin v. Fleming, 38 Tex. 526.

32. Reynolds v. Franklin, 41 Minn. 279, 43 N. W. 53; Bicknall v. Waterman, 5 R. I. 43.

Proof of non-performance by defendant is essential to a recovery by plaintiff. Thus in Long Island R. Co. v. Verree, 69 N. Y. 487, it was held that where a party who had agreed to exchange old iron for fish joints at certain valuations delivered old iron in excess of fish joints received, he could not recover the value of the excess without proof of the other party's refusal to deliver sufficient fish joints to pay for such excess.

Pleading.— The value of the property conveyed cannot be recovered on allegations seeking to recover the value of the property agreed to be conveyed. Lowe v. Turpie, 147 Ind. 652, 44 N. E. 25, 47 N. E. 150, 37 L. R. A. 233.

Assumpsit.— It has been held that where one of the parties has performed by delivering the property which he has agreed to exchange, he may sue the other party in assumpsit for goods sold and delivered if such other party fails or refuses to perform. Reynolds v. Franklin, 41 Minn. 279, 43 N. W. 53; Redman v. Adams, 165 Mo. 60, 65 S. W. 300; Clark v. Fairchild, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 576; Way v. Wakefield, 7 Vt. 223. See also Basford v. Pearson, 9 Allen (Mass.) 387, 85 Am. Dec. 764. On the other hand it has been held that assumpsit for goods sold and delivered will not lie in such case. Mitchell v. Gile, 12 N. H. 390. It seems settled, however, that this form of action rests upon a rescission of the contract of exchange. Reynolds v. Franklin, supra. See also Mitchell v. Gile, supra. Hence, it has been held that it will not lie where the effect will be to rescind the contract in part only. Bellows v. Cheek, 20 Ark. 424.

33. See Gray v. Reesor, 15 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 205.

Upon a bill filed by T against H to rescind the contract for the exchange of lands, it appeared that H had been in possession of his land for twelve years, and had paid all the purchase-money, but that D, from whom he purchased, had died and he had brought a suit against D's widow and heirs to have the title made to T. It was held that it was error to decree a rescission of the contract, as under the circumstances H should have been allowed a reasonable time to procure the title. Stimson v. Thorn, 25 Gratt. (Va.) 278.

2. Where Neither Party Has Performed. Where neither party has performed, and one of them, on being called upon to perform, fails or refuses to comply with his contract, the other party may maintain an action for damages for the breach of the contract.[34] In an exchange of lands, where the parties have exchanged possession but not conveyances, upon the refusal of either party to convey, the other party may maintain ejectment for the property with which he has parted.[35]

34. Warren v. Chandler, 98 Iowa 237, 67 N. W. 242; Sternberger v. McGovern, 56 N. Y. 12 [reversing 4 Daly 456]. In the latter case it appeared that the parties had agreed to exchange certain properties at certain valuations, but that defendant was unable to perform by reason of his wife's refusal to release her dower. It was held that defendant could not be compelled to accept a conveyance from plaintiff, and to pay him in money therefor at its cash valuation; but that plaintiff's remedy was an action for damages.

The measure of damages is the difference in value between the respective properties agreed to be exchanged.

Incidental expenses incurred by plaintiff in the preparation of the abstract and title papers tendered by him to defendant may be recovered without any allegation of special damages. Fagen v. Davison, 2 Duer (N. Y.) 153. In Warren v. Chandler, 98 Iowa 237, 67 N. W. 242, it was held that in an action for breach of a contract to exchange, plaintiff is entitled to recover the expenses incurred by him, after execution of the contract, in an endeavor to perform, but before he learned that prior thereto defendant had put it out of his power to perform by conveying to another. In Roche v. Smith, 176 Mass. 595, 58 N. E. 152, 51 L. R. A. 510, it was held that where an owner of real estate has contracted to exchange it for property owned by another, whom a broker whom he had employed has produced, the contract providing that the land should be conveyed by each to the other within twenty days by a good and sufficient warranty deed, such owner may recover from the customer the amount of the commissions paid to the broker, where such customer is unable to convey a good title to his property.

Conditions precedent.— Neither party can recover damages without a proper tender of performance on his own part; but where the other party has by conveying to another put it out of his power to perform no such tender is necessary. Way v. Miller, 80 Mo. App. 382.

Evidence.— In an action for refusal to accept land which plaintiff agreed to convey to defendant in exchange for other property, plaintiff to prove his title offered an abstract, which the abstractor testified was correct. Attached to the abstract was the certificate of another abstracter reciting that the title remained unchanged from the date of the abstract. It was held that as the certificate was part of the abstract which plaintiff furnished defendant at the time the contract was to be consummated, and as plaintiff's evidence of title was sufficient independent of the certificate, it was not error to refuse to strike it out. Warren v. Chandler, 98 Iowa 237, 67 N. W. 242.

Conditions precedent.— Where the parties have exchanged lands, but deeds are not delivered pursuant to agreement, ejectment will not lie to recover the land for such failure, without notice and an offer to rescind the contract. Maynard v. Cable, Wright (Ohio) 18. See also Royal v. Dennison, 109 Cal. 558, 42 Pac. 39, where it was held that where plaintiff and defendant agreed to exchange certain land, and before the conveyances thereof were executed plaintiff borrowed money from defendant, and orally agreed that the loan was to be secured upon the lots which defendant was to convey, plaintiff could not, on defendant's default, rescind the contract and maintain ejectment for the property given by him in exchange without offering to repay the loan. But in Alexander v. Wheeler, 69 Ala. 332, it was held that plaintiff, having the legal title, need not, as a condition precedent to bringing ejectment, offer to rescind a parol exchange of lands made between persons under whom he and defendant respectively hold title.

2. FAILURE OF TITLE. Where the title to the property received by either party fails, he may rescind the exchange,[39] and sue for the recovery of the property with which he has parted,[40] or its value;[41] or he may bring an equitable action for the rescission of the exchange,[42] or affirm the contract and sue for damages for the breach thereof.[43] In technical exchanges of land either party may,

Assumpsit.— As to whether in such case assumpsit for goods sold and delivered will lie the authorities seem to be in conflict. Hunt v. Sackett, 31 Mich. 18. See also supra, V, A, 1. Where money is paid as difference in an exchange of horses by plaintiff and defendant, and defendant receives money on a subsequent sale of the horse received by him, and the horse received by plaintiff is reclaimed by an owner from whom it was stolen, an action in assumpsit for money had and received lies to recover the money paid by plaintiff as boot, together with that received by defendant from the sale. Hook v. Robison, Add. (Pa.) 271.

Where plaintiff has sold part of the land received by him in the exchange, he cannot have a rescission, since the parties cannot be placed in statu quo. Neal v. Reynolds, 38 Kan. 432, 16 Pac. 785. Likewise where he has leased the land and cannot recover possession thereof to the other party. Whittemore v. Farrington, 7 Hun (N. Y.) 392.

Removal of defects in title.— Where, pending proceedings for the rescission of a contract for an exchange of real estate because of defects in the title to the property conveyed by defendant, the latter removed the substantial defects, it is no objection to the admission, on the trial, of documentary proof of title in defendant free from substantial defects, that such title was not exhibited before the filing of complainant's bill. Bollnow v. Novacek, 184 Ill. 463, 56 N. E. 801. Where plaintiff claimed that land conveyed to him under an agreement to exchange was encumbered with a tax title, but the court found that defendant's grantor had obtained a quitclaim deed from the holder of the tax title, and had conveyed to defendant by deed of warranty, plaintiff was not entitled to a decree rescinding the agreement. Pirgandi v. Fay, 128 Mich. 630, 87 N. W. 888.

In a suit for specific performance defendant may set up failure of title to the property received by him, and obtain a rescission of the exchange. Calhoon v. Belden, 3 Bush (Ky.) 674.

43. Stewart v. Jack, 78 Iowa 154, 42 N. W. 633; Hunt v. Sackett, 31 Mich. 18; Bixler v. Saylor, 68 Pa. St. 146.

Conditions precedent.— An action for damages being an affirmance of the contract, no tender of return of benefits received thereunder is necessary. Hunt v. Sackett, 31 Mich. 18.

Measure of damages.— Where plaintiff and defendant agree to an exchange of lands, and after the exchange defendant's title to the land conveyed by him fails entirely, the measure of plaintiff's damages is the reasonable market value of the land at the time of failure of title. Stewart v. Jack, 78 Iowa 154, 42 N. W. 633.

Burden of proof.— Plaintiff, suing for a breach of contract for the exchange of lands on the ground that defendant did not own the land given by him in exchange, has the burden of proving the alleged breach, defendant not being bound in the first instance to disprove such breach by showing title in himself. Primm v. Legg, 67 Ill. 500.

Parties.—Plaintiff and defendant exchanged land, and on failure of title to the land conveyed by defendant, plaintiff sued for damages. It was held that as plaintiff had owned the land conveyed by him, the fact that the conveyance by defendant was made to plaintiff's wife does not affect plaintiff's right to recover the damages, as the conveyance to the wife gave her no right of action for the damages. Stewart v. Jack, 78 Iowa 154, 42 N. W. 633.

Parties in pari delicto.— S exchanged horses with D, knowing that D had stolen the horse. B, with the same knowledge, bought S's horse from D. The owner of the stolen horse took it from S. It was held that S could not recover from B. Bixler v. Saylor, 68 Pa. St. 146.

By statute in Louisiana an exchanger who is evicted of the thing he has received in ex-upon the failure of the title to the property received by him, make a reëntry upon the land given by him in exchange, whereupon the title thereto reverts to him;[44] but this right does not appertain to an exchange of chattels.[45]

3. Failure of Value. Where the property received by one of the parties proves to be entirely worthless, he may rescind the exchange and sue for the value of the property which he gave in exchange,[46] or he may maintain an equitable action to have the exchange rescinded.[47]

C. For Fraud or Mistake[48]— 1. Fraud. An exchange of property like any other transaction is vitiated by fraud, and if either party has been induced by the fraud of the other to make the exchange he may rescind the whole transaction,[49] change may at his election either sue for damages or for the recovery of the property he gave in exchange, but he must first be evicted before he can maintain either action. Barcus v. Farrar, 4 La. Ann. 219; Preston v. Keene, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 133, 10 L. ed. 387.

Bargain and sale.— An exchange of lands effected by deeds of bargain and sale, without the use of the word "exchange," not being a technical exchange (see supra, II, A, 1), there is no right of reëntry for eviction, the remedy being an action for damages on the covenants of warranty. Gamble v. McClure, 69 Pa. St. 282. See also infra, V, D.

Innocent purchasers.— Plaintiff agreed with one W to exchange certain land for what purported to be Texas land scrip, and it was understood that they would convey the land to whomsoever W might designate. W then sold the land to defendant, to whom plaintiffs accordingly made the deed. The scrip proved worthless, and plaintiffs sought to cancel their deed. It was held that as neither defendant nor her agent had knowledge of the agreement between plaintiffs and W, and W had acted solely for himself, plaintiffs had no cause of action. Reliance on fraudulent representations is essential to the right to rescind therefor. Wilson v. Jackson, 167 Mo. 135, 66 S. W. 972; Nisley v. Spencer, 1 Nebr. (Unoff.) 562, 95 N. W. 798. See also Lucas v. Crippen, 76 Iowa 507, 41 N. W. 205. There can be no rescission for representation, the truth of which the complaining party has undertaken to ascertain (Wilkin v. Barnard, 61 N. Y. 628) or for failure to disclose the existence of a mortgage which is duly recorded (Stephen's Appeal, 87 Pa. St. 202). But in De Frees v. Carr, 8 Utah 488, 33 Pac. 217, it was held that one whose mind has become enfeebled by disease will not be precluded from rescinding an exchange for fraudulent representations merely because he might by reasonable diligence have discovered the fraud.

Representations as to title.— Where one who has traded personal property for a mortgage and a small sum tenders back the mortgage and the money and replevies the property, claiming that defendant falsely represented the mortgage to be a first mortgage and good, it is incumbent on him to show that there was a prior encumbrance on the lands such as to affect the title and impair his security; and the mere proof of a prior mortgage, executed by a different person, which had been foreclosed, and the sheriff's deed executed, in the absence of any showing that such prior mortgagor ever owned the land, is not sufficient. Nor does this make out a prima facie case, so as to shift the burden of proof on defendant to show that it did not affect the title. Bristol v. Braidwood, 28 Mich. 191.

Conditions precedent.— As a general rule one cannot rescind an exchange for fraud until he has returned the property which he himself has received, or has made a valid tender of the return thereof. Samples v. Guyer, 120 Ala. 611, 24 So. 942; Rohrof v. Schulte, 154 Ind. 183, 55 N. E. 427; Balue v. Taylor, 136 Ind. 368, 36 N. and maintain an action for the recovery of the property which he gave in Hayden, 169 U. S. 1, 18 S. Ct. 274, 42 L. ed. 639 [affirming 72 Fed. 402, 18 C. C. A. 618]. This rule, however, is subject to exceptions. Thus, in Johnson v. Flynn, 97 Mich. 581, 56 N. W. 939, it was intimated that no return or tender of absolutely worthless property is necessary. It was held, however, that a stove worth three dollars was not worthless within this rule. In Gates v. Raymond, 106 Wis. 657, 82 N. W. 530, it was held that where plaintiff in replevin got defendant drunk and induced him to trade horses, so that defendant could use the money he got to boot in playing poker, and plaintiff and his associates then won from defendant at poker boot money and the horse he was to receive in exchange, defendant could rescind the trade and recover his horse without returning the money or the horse he was to receive in exchange. In Moody v. Drown, 58 N. H. 45, it was held that when the defrauded party elects to treat a fraudulent exchange of chattels as void, and the title of the chattel received by him has wholly failed, he may rescind the exchange without transferring to the other party a good title which he has subsequently obtained from a third person, since he is obliged to return only that which he has received under the exchange. In Faulkner v. Klamp, 16 Nebr. 174, 20 N. W. 220, it was held that where a party has fraudulently represented a horse traded to another to be sound and healthy, and the horse has died, the defrauded party can rescind the contract and maintain replevin for the property procured by such fraud, notwithstanding his inability to restore the property received. The court in support of its decision cited three instances in which a return of the property received is unnecessary, viz., where such property is worthless; where the party guilty of the fraud has by his own act rendered a return impossible; and in any case where a return is impossible. The last instance cited, however, is subject to the qualification that the return must not have been rendered impossible through the fault of the complaining party. See infra, this note "Waiver and Estoppel." In Stroff v. Swafford, 79 Iowa 135, 44 N. W. 293, it was held that the fact that timber has been stolen from land conveyed by defendants to plaintiffs in exchange for other property while the title was in the latter is no reason for refusing a rescission of the contract on the ground that defendants cannot be placed in statu quo, where plaintiffs have never been in possession of the land, and such thefts would probably have taken place without regard to the change of title, the land being in a different state from that in which the parties resided; and it was further held in this case that it is not necessary that plaintiffs should tender to defendants the amount of an encumbrance upon the realty conveyed by plaintiffs, which has been paid off by defendants, where such realty has been conveyed by defendants to third persons, and hence cannot be restored to plaintiffs. In Saint v. Taylor, 12 Heisk. (Tenn.) 488, it was held that where plaintiff's inability to place defendant in statu quo is due to defendant's fault, plaintiff may rescind without returning the property received by him. Where a sufficient tender of return is made by the complaining party, but is refused by the other party, the subsequent retention of such property by the former will not bar an action by him based on rescission. Barnett v. Speir, 93 Ga. 762, 21 S. E. 168.

Material representations.— False or fraudulent representations which will justify a rescission must be representations as to facts, and not mere expressions of opinion. Lockwood v. Fitts, 90 Ala. 150, 70 So. 467; Lucas v. Crippen, 76 Iowa 507, 41 N. W. 205; Wilson v. Jackson, 167 Mo. 135, 66 S. W. 972. They must likewise be material. As to what are material representations see Putnam v. Bromwell, 73 Tex. 564, 11 S. W. 491. And compare Singleton v. Houston, (Tex. Civ. App. 1904) 79 S. W. 98, holding that misrepresentations, even though innocently made, may amount to legal if not actual fraud.

Caveat emptor.— In Bristol v. Braidwood, 28 Mich. 191, it appeared that defendant, in delivering to plaintiff a mortgage in exchange for certain chattels, stated with reference to prior mortgages "that there were none so far as he knew." It was held that this representation came within the maxim caveat emptor, and that hence plaintiff could not rescind. But see Dawson v. Chisholm, 1 N. Y. Suppl. 171.

Expenditures made by the exchanger guilty of the fraud have been held not to preclude a rescission. Weeks v. Currier, 172 Mass. 53, 51 N. E. 416.

Reappraisal.— Where an exchange of goods for land was to be made on the basis of an appraisal at cost, and one of the parties misrepresented the cost of the goods, removed the cost marks, raised the cost price, and destroyed his books, the other party to the contract is not concluded by the inventory of the appraisers and may have the goods reappraised. Sutliff v. Dayton, 106 Mich. 179, 65 N. W. 522.

Laches.— The right to rescind for fraud must be exercised within a reasonable time. Johnson v. McLane, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 501, 43 Am. Dec. 102. What is reasonable time, however, does not depend alone upon lapse of time, but upon all the circumstances. Beardsley v. Clem, 137 Cal. 328, 70 Pac. 175.

Waiver and estoppel.— One who has been induced by fraud to make an exchange of property may by certain acts waive the fraud and thus be precluded from rescinding; as where after discovering the fraud he continues to use and enjoy the property received by him (Samples v. Guyer, 120 Ala. 611, 24 So. 942; Moore v. Howe, 115 Iowa 62, 87 N. W. 750; Dunks v. Fuller, 32 Mich. 242); where after discovering the fraud he permits the other party to make valuable improve-exchange[50] or for its value;[51] or, as in the case of failure of consideration,[52] he may sue in equity for the rescission of the contract.[53] Another remedy open to the defrauded party is to affirm the exchange, and institute an action for damages

ments on the property received by the latter (Foley v. Holtry, 41 Nebr. 563, 59 N. W. 781); or where he fails to make a prompt offer to return the property received by him (Balue v. Taylor, 136 Ind. 368, 36 N. E. 269). Likewise, where he assumes the responsibility of investigating the truth of the other party's statements, and thereafter accepts the property without having made such investigation, he will be precluded from rescinding, unless a fair investigation was prevented by the fraud of the other party. Munkres v. McCaskill, 64 Kan. 516, 68 Pac. 42; Wilkin v. Barnard, 61 N. Y. 628. But in Stevens v. Thompson, 98 Mich. 9, 56 N. W. 1041, it was held that the fact that the complainant, when he tendered back to defendant a deed to her property, demanded payment for the personal property which he had given in exchange, did not estop him from rescinding. Likewise where one, after exchanging horses with another, claimed that the horse received by him was not as represented, and thereupon the other party took the horse back and gave him another, which in turn was returned as not fulfilling representations, it was held that it could not be said as a matter of law that he had affirmed the first contract. Whiteside v. Brawley, 152 Mass. 133, 24 N. E. 1088.

Detinue.— See Whitworth v. Thomas, 83 Ala. 308, 3 So. 781, 3 Am. St. Rep. 725, where it was held that in detinue to recover property which plaintiff has fraudulently been induced to part with in exchange the value of such property is not in issue.

Mutual frauds.— In Whitworth v. Thomas, 83 Ala. 308, 3 So. 781, 3 Am. St. Rep. 725, it was held that where one of the parties to an exchange seeks to rescind it for fraud and to recover the property which he gave in exchange, the fact that he may himself have been guilty of fraud is no defense. The court said: "The maxim, In pari delicto potior est conditio possidentis, has no application to a case like this. The maxim applies, and only applies, where two or more are jointly concerned in the perpetration of one and the same fraud; a conspiracy or combination to accomplish an illegal object, through fraud, by which some third person is to be the sufferer. It does not permit one independent deceit or fraud to be set off against another deceit or fraud, so as, on that account, to estop the latter from maintaining his suit. It may confer a right to a cross action. It does not deny to either party all right to sue."

51. Straus v. Herman, 45 Ga. 222. In this case it was also held that where the defrauded party has received money in addition to property, he may retain the money and, the other party having sold the property received by him, sue for the value of the property received by him, such value representing the balance of the purchase-price of the property given in exchange by plaintiff. See Ga. Code, § 2614.

False representations of third parties as to the kind and quality of the property which one of the parties to an exchange will receive thereunder, neither of the parties to the exchange having seen it, will not support a suit to rescind for fraud, where it appears that plaintiff was offered an opportunity to go and see the property, but declined the offer and agreed to take the property at his own risk. Crist v. Dice, 18 Ohio St. 536. See infra, V, C, 2. And compare Irwin v. Wilson, 45 Ohio St. 426, 15 N. E. 209.

The relative values of a lot which an exchanger is fraudulently led to believe that he is getting and the lot which he really gets are not involved in a suit to rescind the exchange. Nelson v. Carlson, 54 Minn. 90, 55 S. W. 821. But in Tifel v. Jenkins, 93 Md. 744, 49 Atl. 840, the relative values of the properties exchanged were considered as bearing on the question of the fraud charged against defendant, and it was held that the values would be fixed as of the time of the exchange. And in Davis v. Van Wie, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 30 S. W. 492, it was held that when the petition in addition to the charge of fraud raises the question of adequacy of consideration, evidence showing the unmarketable nature of the articles received in exchange by plaintiff, and the unreasonable burdens assumed by him, is admissible to show the attitude of defendant toward the transaction.

Evidence of fraud.— In Bunch v. Shannon, 46 Miss. 525, it appeared that plaintiff was a person of weak mind, having great confidence in defendant, and was overreached by him, and consequently did not acquire a good title to the property received by him. It was held that this evidence was sufficient to warrant a rescission. In Wilson v. Jackson, 167 Mo. 135, 66 S. W. 972, and in Houghton v. Graybill, 82 Va. 573, the evidence was held insufficient to show fraud. See also Anderson v. Black, 32 S. W. 468, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 732; Dunnigan v. Green, 165 Mo. 98, 65 S. W. 287; Covey v. Keegan, 29 Nebr. 250, 45 N. W. 454.

Findings as to fraud.— Where plaintiff sought to rescind an exchange of property on the ground of fraud, and the court finds there was no fraud, a failure to find as to all the facts alleged in the complaint is not error. Norris v. Crandall, (Cal. 1901) 65 Pac. 568.

Suit to recover property conveyed to defendant by third party.— Where plaintiff, defendant, and a third party entered into an agreement whereby plaintiff conveyed land to a third party, who in consideration therefor paid a certain sum of money to plaintiff and conveyed other land to defendant, who in turn conveyed certain chattels to plaintiff, it was held that plaintiff might maintain a suit to rescind the exchange on account of fraudulent representations made by defendant, notwithstanding that the title to the land sought to be recovered by plaintiff had never been in him. Cabaness v. Holland, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 383, 47 S. W. 379.

Placing parties in statu quo — Transfer of mortgage.— Equity, in decreeing a rescission of an exchange of land for fraud, can transfer a mortgage with the consent of the mortgagee, that has been placed on the land received by plaintiff in exchange, to the land restored to him, where the rescission could not otherwise be had, and by force of the decree the mortgage becomes a lien from its date. Stevens v. McCoy, 60 Ohio St. 540, 54 N. E. 517.

Rights of third parties.— Equity will rescind a contract for the exchange of lands where the minds of the parties, whether by fraud or by mistake, have never met; and it cannot be contended as a reason for refusing relief that third parties have rights, where such rights are wholly dependent upon a valid exchange. Crowe v. Lewin, 95 N. Y. 423.

54. Brown v. Holden, 120 Iowa 191, 94 N. W. 482; Moore v. Howe, 115 Iowa 62, 87 N. W. 750; Kimball v. Cunningham, 4 Mass. 502, 3 Am. Dec. 230; Reed v. Ismond, 110 Mich. 16, 67 N. The value of the consideration moving from plaintiff is not ordinarily in issue in an action for damages for fraudulent representations regarding the quality of the property received by him. Likes v. Baer, 8 Iowa 368. But see Caumiser v. Conley, 60 S. W. 375, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 1237, where defendant having alleged fraudulent representations as to the value of the land given in exchange by plaintiff, the court in estimating plaintiff's damages considered the question as to the real value of such land. Where, moreover, the issue is as to which of two chattels defendant agreed to deliver to plaintiff in exchange, evidence that the property agreed to be exchanged by plaintiff was to the knowledge of the parties worth much less than the more valuable of the two chattels of defendant in question is admissible. Norris v. Spofford, 127 Mass. 85.

Knowledge of the fraud complained of before the exchange is closed will deprive the complaining party of all right to sue for damages (Moore v. Howe, 115 Iowa 62, 87 N. W. 750); but it does not rest upon plaintiff to show that he had no notice of the falsity of defendant's representations (Patee v. Pelton, 48 Vt. 182).

the difference in the value of the property as represented to him by the other party and its real value.[55]

2. Mistake. Mutual mistake, in consequence of which one of the parties does not get the kind or quality of property which he thought he was getting, may be corrected by an equitable action to rescind the exchange.[56]

D. For Breach of Warranties, Covenants, and Conditions — 1. Warranties and Covenants — a. Warranties. For the breach of a warranty in a contract of exchange as to the title or quality of the property exchanged the party not in Caveat emptor.— Where plaintiff, who owned a farm, exchanged the same for defendant's stock of goods, he could not thereafter complain of the values placed on certain fixtures, etc., by defendants, when the means of knowledge were as equally available to him as to defendants. Moore v. Howe, 115 Iowa 62, 87 N. W. 750.

Based on ratification of exchange.— An action for damages is an election to ratify the exchange. Stuart v. Hayden, 169 U. S. 1, 18 S. Ct. 274, 42 L. ed. 639 [affirming 72 Fed. 402, 18 C. C. A. 618].

Outstanding mortgage as a defense.— In an action for damages for breach of a contract for exchange of real estate, occasioned by the failure of defendant to convey, the existence of an outstanding mortgage on plaintiff's property is a defense, where it was shown that plaintiff assured defendant that the title was free from encumbrances, although the contract did not call for a warranty deed from plaintiff. Godfrey v. Rosenthal, (S. D. 1903) 97 N. W. 365.

Sufficiency of petition.—In Stewart v. Jack, 78 Iowa 154, 42 N. W. 633, which was an action for damages for failure of title, the petition was held to present a good cause of action.

55. McDole v. Purdy, 23 Iowa 277; Augur v. Smith, 90 Tenn. 729, 18 S. W. 398.

Assumpsit.— Plaintiffs agreed to sell their farm to defendant, and to take for it the farm of one G at the same price, provided G would not take a less price for his farm. Defendant agreed with G for his farm at a less price, but deceived plaintiffs by representing that G would not take a less price, and the trade with plaintiffs was thereupon completed, plaintiffs declaring at the time that they were not "swapping" farms, but buying and selling. There was no agreement to pay to plaintiffs anything more than the G farm for theirs. It was held that plaintiffs were entitled to recover in assumpsit the difference between the agreed price and the amount paid for the G farm by defendant. Jordon v. Dyer, 34 Vt. 104, 80 Am. Dec. 668.

Set-off.— Where one of the parties has given his note in addition to property in exchange for other property, in an action against him on the note he may set off the difference between the real value of the property received by him and its value as fraudulently represented by plaintiff. Davis v. Elliott, 15 Gray (Mass.) 90.

A mistaken opinion expressed by one of the parties as to the value of the property offered by him in exchange is not ground for the rescission of the exchange, although such opinion was relied on by the other party. Norris v. Crandall, (Cal. 1901) 65 Pac. 568.

Petition.— In a proceeding to set aside a conveyance, made in an exchange of farms, on the ground of the grantee's false representations, if he be not proved to have known the same to be false, relief may be granted on the ground of mutual mistake. Montgomery v. Shockey, 37 Iowa 107.

Mistakes based on false representations of third parties.— One who has exchanged land for land in another state, with which both parties are unacquainted, but whose value is stated to them by a third person, under a mistake as to its identity, can, on learning of the mistake a few months after the deeds have been made and delivered, rescind by tendering back a deed of the land and the notes and mortgage received by him, on the ground of mutual mistake, since he cannot be considered negligent in relying on the third person's statements. Irwin v. Wilson, 45 Ohio St. 426, 15 N. E. 209 [distinguishing Crist v. Dice, 18 Ohio St. 536]. See supra, V, C, 1.

Election to rescind.— Where, under an agreement for the exchange of lands, a mistake in regard to the measurement is clearly shown, plaintiff may elect to have the contract enforced according to the true boundary lines, or to have it rescinded entirely. Gilroy v. Alis, 22 Iowa 174.

Estoppel.— In Beardsley v. Clem, 137 Cal. 328, 70 Pac. 175, it was held that where one of the parties, prior to giving notice of his intention to rescind, allows the other party to make permanent valuable improvements on the land, and sells such party material for improving the land, he is estopped to sue for rescission on account of mutual mistake.

A mistake as to quantity, whereby one of the parties receives more than he is entitled to, may be remedied by an equitable action to compel such party to restore such excess. Shipp v. Swann, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 82.

Mistake as to encumbrances assumed.— Where plaintiff in making an exchange assumed debts on the property received, the fact that afterward there prove to be other liens than those stated to him is not ground for rescission, where there was no evidence of fraud by the other party, who settled default may rescind the exchange,[57] and recover in an action at law the property given by him in exchange,[58] or the value thereof.[59] He is not, however, obliged to rescind, but may affirm the contract and sue for the breach thereof.[60]

b. Covenants. For breach of covenants by one party the other party may either sue for damages[61] or rescind the exchange.[62]

2. Conditions. Where an exchange is made upon the condition that one of the parties may return the property received by him upon the happening of a Conditions precedent.— The property received by the complaining party must be returned. Thompson v. Harvey, 86 Ala. 519, 5 So. 825; Smith v. Hale, 158 Mass. 178, 33 N. E. 493, 35 Am. St. Rep. 485. In the latter case it was held that on a rescission for breach of warranty of a contract for the exchange of chattels, where the chattel received by the party not in default was a buggy, the springs of which were warranted by the other party, and a spring broke without the fault of the former, he might rescind by returning the buggy in its broken condition. Zitske v. Goldberg, 38 Wis. 216, was a case of an exchange of horses, defendant's horse being warranted, plaintiff's horse being estimated at a higher value than that of defendant, and the latter was to credit plaintiff on his books, and did so credit him, with the amount of a certain prior account existing in defendant's favor against plaintiff. It was held that the payment of such account was not a condition precedent to plaintiff's right to return defendant's horse, for a breach of warranty, and recover possession of his own, although the rescission of the contract of exchange revived plaintiff's liability on said account.

A suit for rescission may be maintained for breach of warranty of title. Saint v. Taylor, 12 Heisk. (Tenn.) 488. See also Moss v. Jefferies, 32 S. C. 195, 10 S. E. 939, where the petition was held obnoxious to a demurrer for failure to state facts sufficient to authorize the rescission.

58. Replevin is a proper remedy in such case. Ferguson v. Bullock, 1 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 71; Marston v. Knight, 29 Me. 341; Zitske v. Goldberg, 38 Wis. 216. See also Marson v. Plummer, 64 Me. 315.

Assumpsit.— An action based upon a rescission of a contract of exchange of personal property for breach of warranty of title cannot be maintained under the common counts, as the effect of an action so brought would be to affirm the contract. Hunt v. Sackett, 31 Mich. 18.

60. In such case the only question involved is the difference between the value of the property as warranted and its real value. Rutan v. Ludlam, 29 N. J. L. 398. See also Wilson v. Yocum, 77 Iowa 569, 42 N. W. 446.

Assumpsit lies in such case. See Gates v. Moore, 51 Vt. 222.

Conditions precedent.— An action upon a contract of exchange of personal property, for breach of warranty of title, is an affirmance of the contract; and no act in disaffirmance of the trade, such as tendering back the boot money, or demanding the property given in exchange, is necessary as a condition precedent to bringing the action. Hunt v. Sackett, 31 Mich. 18.

Equitable remedy.— Where, after an exchange of lands by deeds containing covenants of warranty and against encumbances, it appears that one of the tracts is subject to a vendor's lien, equity will compel the grantor to pay off or remove the encumbrance, or give the grantee suitable indemnity. Thomas v. St. Paul's M. E. Church, 86 Ala. 138, 5 So. 508.

61. In a suit for breach of a guaranty on an exchange for encumbered property, whereby the owner was to sell it at a specified sum, the measure of damages is the difference between the value of plaintiff's land conveyed to defendant and the value of defendant's land conveyed to plaintiff, over and above the encumbrances on the latter, provided that such difference does not exceed the sum for which defendant agreed to sell, and in the discretion of the jury interest on the amount, if any, found to be due, from a date not earlier than the commencement of the suit. Hartman v. Ruby, 16 App. Cas. (D. C.) 45.

62. Fletcher v. Arnett, 4 S. D. 615, 57 N. W. 915.

Suit to rescind.— Where a party to the exchange of land agreed to transfer a record title to the entire strip pointed out, and was only able to convey a record title to a part of the strip, holding title to balance by adverse possession only, it was within the province of a court of equity to decree a rescission of the entire transaction at the suit of the other party. Zunker v. Kuehn, 113 Wis. 421, 88 N. W. 605.

Rescission in lieu of enforcement of lien.— Where one of the parties retains a lien on land exchanged by him to secure the payment of a mortgage on the land received, which mortgage the other party covenants to pay, and the land is sold thereunder on ac-certain contingency, relating to the kind, condition, or quality of the property he is receiving, upon the breach of such condition, that is, upon the happening of the specified contingencies, the party may rescind the exchange,[63] and sue at law for the recovery of the property which he gave in exchange,[64] or in equity for the specific purpose of having the exchange rescinded.[65]

E. Vendor's Lien.[66] It is very well settled that in a proper case a vendor's lien arises as well where by exchange land is to be received as where money in specie is to be paid.[67] count of such party's default, equity will not enforce the lien, but will decree a rescission where it appears that the land would not have been sold under the mortgage if the covenantee had paid notes given by him as a part of the consideration for such land. Parks v. Walden, 39 S. W. 52, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 118.

63. Condition precedent.— The party rescinding must return the thing received by him in the exchange. Cheeseman v. Cade, 24 N. J. L. 632; Stoddard v. Graham, 23 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 518.

64. See cases cited infra, this note.

Admissibility of evidence.—Where, in a suit to recover for failure of conditions, property which plaintiff has given to defendant in exchange for other property, the issue is as to whether the exchange was conditional or absolute, evidence as to the qualities or condition of the property received by plaintiff is inadmissible. Fulliam v. Hagens, 83 Iowa 763, 50 N. W. 215; Kelley v. Downing, 69 Vt. 266, 37 Atl. 968. Neither is evidence of defendant's knowledge of the defects covered by the condition admissible in such case. Avery v. Miller, 118 Mass. 500; Rollins v. Wibye, 40 Minn. 149, 41 N. W. 545. But evidence that plaintiff has had the use of the property traded for by him, and that defendant has not received it back from plaintiff, is admissible. Fulliam v. Hagens, supra. Likewise where the issue is as to whether the conditions as to the kind or quality have been broken, evidence as to the kind and quality of the property received by plaintiff is admissible. I. DEFINITION AND KINDS.

An exchange is an association of persons engaged in business of the same nature who for convenience have combined to provide at the common expense and under uniform rules a common place for the transaction of their individual business.[1] They are commonly formed by dealers in stocks and commodities of various kinds, and are known by various names, notably stock,[2] grain, cotton, live stock, produce, and real estate exchanges, and also boards of trade and chambers of commerce.[3]

II. NATURE AND STATUS.

An exchange without a charter is generally regarded as a voluntary association,[4] and not a partnership, joint stock company, or corporation.[5] A number of important exchanges have, however, either taken advantage of general incorporation laws or secured special charters.[6]

III. Constitution, By-Laws, and Customs.

A. In General. The powers of an exchange are derived from its constitution, if unincorporated; if incorporated, from its charter.[7]

B. Construction. In case of conflict between the constitution and the by-laws of an exchange the constitution must prevail.[8] In construing the by-laws the court will regard the substance of the whole matter, and disregard grammatical errors.[9] The construction of a by-law is a question for the court.[10]

A board of brokers is a voluntary association of individuals formed without a charter for the purpose of affording facilities in transacting the business of its members as brokers, and is not either a joint stock company or a partnership. It does not share in either the gains or the losses of the individual associates — each member takes his own gains and incidentally sustains his own losses. There are no profits to be divided among the members, nor losses to be borne, arising out of the acts of the association. And the association looks to a continued existence, unaffected by the death, resignation, suspension, or removal of its members. White v. Brownell, 3 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 318, 324 [affirmed in 2 Daly 329, 4 Abb. Pr. N. S. 162].

A society for the protection of trade, the professed object of which was to watch the progress of measures through parliament affecting the trade interest, and to protect its members from the practice of the fraudulent and dishonest, is not a partnership. Caldicott v. Griffiths, 1 C. L. R. 715, 8 Exch. 898, 23 L. J. Exch. 54.

Although not a corporation or a partnership, a stock exchange possesses some of the characteristics of both. Belton v. Hatch, 109 N. Y. 593, 17 N. E. 225, 4 Am. St. Rep. 495; Thompson v. Adams, 93 Pa. St. 55; Leech v. Harris, 2 Brewst. (Pa.) 571; Hyde v. Woods, 12 Fed. Cas. No. 6,975, 2 Sawy. 655 [affirmed in 94 U. S. 523, 24 L. ed. 264].

Exchanges as associations generally see Associations.

6. Exchanges as corporations generally see Corporations.

Nearly all the stock exchanges are unincorporated, while a majority of the other exchanges enumerated in the text have been formed as corporations. See Dos Passos Stock-Br. & Stock-Exch. (2d ed.) 13–19.

Laws (1886), c. 333, authorizing the organization of corporations or associations for the purpose of fostering trade and commerce, or the interest of those whose business is the erection of buildings or the furnishing of materials, and to diffuse accurate and reliable information among its members as to the standing of merchants and builders, is not against public policy as being in restraint of trade. C. Amendment. A member is ordinarily bound by amendments to the constitution and by-laws regularly adopted by the exchange.[11]

D. Validity. To be binding, the constitution and by-laws of an exchange must not contravene public policy or the law of the land, or be unreasonable[12]

Amendment prohibiting smoking on change. —A by-law fixing the hours during which the exchange rooms shall be open for business, and prohibiting smoking therein during those hours, is valid, although it extends the hours designated for the same purpose by a previous by-law. Amendments to rules providing for a gratuity fund are ordinarily binding on the members and their representatives. Parish v. New York Produce Exch., 169 N. Y. 34, 61 N. E. 977, 56 L. R. A. 149; MacDowell v. Ackley, 93 Pa. St. 277. If, however, the exchange undertakes by its by-laws to accumulate a fund for the benefit of persons dependent upon members at the time of their death, it cannot bind dissenting members by an amendment of the by-laws so as to distribute the accumulated fund among the living members. Parish v. New York Produce Exch., 169 N. Y. 34, 61 N. E. 977, 56 L. R. A. 149.

Partial invalidity.— An amendment to the by-laws will fail entirely if it contains an illegal provision which from its importance may have contributed more than any of the others to secure the small majority of votes by which it was adopted. Parish v. New York Produce Exch., 169 N. Y. 34, 61 N. E. 977, 56 L. R. A. 149.

Retrospective operation.—An amendment of a constitution relating to the mode in which the proceeds of a sale of a seat in the exchange shall be distributed among the creditors of a former member does not govern the distribution of the proceeds of a seat sold before the amendment was made. A rule prohibiting curb transactions is not unreasonable or in restraint of trade. State v. Milwaukee Chamber of Commerce, 47 Wis. 670, 3 N. W. 760.

A rule prohibiting members of a live-stock exchange to employ more than three traveling solicitors in certain states, who must be members of the corporation and be paid a certain stipulated salary, is an abuse of a franchise to maintain a commercial exchange to facilitate the receiving and distribution of live stock and to secure to its members the benefits of coöperation in their business. People v. Chicago Live Stock Exch., 170 Ill. 556, 48 N. E. 1062, 62 Am. St. Rep. 404, 39 L. R. A. 373.

A rule prohibiting smoking on change is reasonable. Albers v. Merchants' Exch., 138 Mo. 140, 39 S. W. 473.

A rule that in cash sales of produce the buyer may have them inspected at his own expense, and that if he accepts them without inspection he takes them at his own risk as to quality, is not unreasonable as applied to cases where the two parties are speculating in produce, and the seller does not seem to have better means of knowledge as to the condition and quality of the article than the buyer has. Chicago Packing, etc., Co. v. Tilton, 87 Ill. 547.

A rule that the buyer shall pay the first ten days' storage charges on all sales of grain in bulk on elevator receipts, unless otherwise specified at the time of sale, is valid. Goddard v. Merchants' Exch., 9 Mo. App. 290.

Rules affecting interstate commerce.— The rules of a live-stock exchange whose members are commission merchants, relating to the conduct of their business of buying and selling stock for others in a given market and fixing their charges for such services, are not agreements affecting interstate commerce, within the anti-trust law, having no direct or necessary relation to such commerce, although some of the sales themselves may constitute interstate commerce, and the cost of such transactions may be indirectly and incidentally affected by such regulations; and by-laws of such an exchange limiting the number of persons who may be employed by any member to solicit the consignment to him of stock shipped to that market, and prohibiting members from sending prepaid telegrams giving market quotations, are but regulations or agreements relating to their business, and are not in restraint of interstate commerce. Hopkins v. U. S., 171 U. S. 578, 19 S. Ct. 40, 43 L. ed. 290 [reversing 82 Fed. 529].

Validity of constitutional provision as to transfer of seat by defaulting member.— A provision in the constitution of an exchange whose members are limited in number and elected by ballot that a member, on failing to perform his contracts or becoming insolvent, may assign his seat to be sold, and that the proceeds shall, to the exclusion of his outside creditors, be first applied to the benefit of the members to whom he is indebted, the purchaser not becoming a member, nor having the right to transact business in the board until elected by ballot, is not contrary to public policy. Hyde v. Woods, 94 U. S. 523, 24 L. ed. 264.

Validity of rule altering common law.— If a by-law is not unreasonable or contrary to public policy, the fact that it introduces a rule which is not the rule of the common law does not render it invalid. Goddard v. Merchants' Exch., 9 Mo. App. 290 [affirmed in 78 Mo. 609].

Right of stranger to urge invalidity.— While a dissenting or unwilling minority of the members of an exchange may in proper cases appeal to the courts for relief against the enforcement of an invalid by-law, yet strangers have no right to interfere with its enforcement; nor can the members be com-or uncertain.[13] The members are not ordinarily bound by invalid rules of the exchange.

E. Persons Bound. One who becomes a member of an exchange submits himself to the operation of its constitution, by-laws, and customs, and agrees to be bound thereby, so far as they are within its powers to make.[14] Persons who are not members of the exchange are not bound by its laws and customs,[15] unless they contract with reference to them.[16]

F. Interference by Courts.[17] If the constitution and by-laws of an exchange are valid,[18] the courts will not interfere to control their enforcement, but the association will be left to enforce them in the manner which it has prescribed.[19]

IV. OFFICERS AND AGENTS.

18. State v. Milwaukee Chamber of Commerce, 47 Wis. 670, 3 N. Corp. (11th ed.) § 591, note 5; Dos Passos Stock-Br. & Stock-Exch. (2d ed.) 69; Lindley Partn. (4th ed.) 5. The utmost these associations can claim is the power to make rules which the courts will not pronounce unreasonable, unconstitutional, or violative of the principles of the common law. Dos Passos Stock-Br. & Stock-Exch. (2d ed.) 60, 70.

The courts will not be bound by a determination of an exchange ultra its rules, or by a determination in accordance with rules which conflict with established principles of law. Weston v. Ives, 97 N. Y. 222; Commercial Telegram Co. v. Smith, 47 Hun (N. Y.) 494; Dos Passos Stock-Br. & Stock-Exch. (2d ed.) 70.

The courts will not attempt to enforce them. The association itself must enforce its capacity, and the rules governing the liability of such bodies for the acts of their officers and agents, apply to incorporated and voluntary commercial exchanges respectively, and their officers and agents.[20]

V. DISSOLUTION.

An incorporated exchange may be dissolved by the court either at the suit of the state [21] or at the suit of a stock-holder.[22] The causes for which the courts will dissolve an unincorporated association are either those for which a dissolution is specifically provided by the constitution, or, where that instrument is silent on the subject, a dissolution will be decreed in an equitable action at the suit of one or more of the members against all the others on a showing that the object of the society's existence has terminated, or, where a statute provides for the dissolution of such societies, in the manner thereby indicated, or it may be dissolved by the unanimous consent of its members on its property being divided among them.[23]

VI. MEMBERSHIP.

A. Admission of Members. An exchange, whether incorporated or not, has full power to make rules defining eligibility to membership in the association, and laws by such means as it may adopt for its government. Chicago Bd. of Trade v. Nelson, 162 Ill. 431, 44 N. E. 743, 53 Am. St. Rep. 312.

There must be a fair and honest administration of the rules, however, and the courts will interfere to see that this is done. White v. Brownell, 2 Daly (N. Y.) 329, 4 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 162; Hutchinson v. Lawrence, 67 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 38.

20. See, generally, ASSOCIATIONS; CORPORATIONS.

Liability as partner.— The general rule as to members of unincorporated associations is that they are regarded as partners, and subject to the whole law of partnership. For the acts of its officers and servants, directly authorized by the constitution, laws, or regulations of an exchange, its members would be individually liable under this general principle. This personal liability of a member of an unincorporated exchange was recognized in Kronfield v. Haines, 20 Misc. (N. Y.) 102, 45 N. Y. Suppl. 92, in which case it was held, however, that defendant was not liable for printing and stationery supplies furnished to the exchange, as he was not shown to be a member thereof. See, generally, PARTNERSHIP.

Liability as principal.— Where the officers or servants of an unincorporated exchange have contracted obligations or incurred liability without being authorized by the association, the question seems to be determined by the law of principal and agent rather than that of partnership. The agency must be made out by the person who relies on it, for none is implied by the mere fact of association. Dos Passos Stock-Br. & Stock-Exch. (2d ed.) 38–40; Lindley Partn. & Comp. L. (4th ed.) 57, (6th ed.) 133. See, generally, PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

A produce exchange employing a clerk and auctioneer to conduct auction sales at a call board for the benefit of such members only as pay an extra charge for the privilege is not liable for failure of the clerk to record a sale, in the absence of proof of negligence in his appointment. However, a finding of negligence on the part of the clerk in failing to record a sale is warranted, although the accurate performance of this duty was extremely difficult, because bidding was very rapid, and great confusion attended the transactions. A failure of the member making the sale to examine the record in order to assure himself of the entry of the transaction, such being the general practice of members, does not conclusively establish contributory negligence on his part. Warren v. St. Louis Merchants' Exch., 52 Mo. App. 157.

21. People v. Chicago Live Stock Exch., 170 Ill. 556, 48 N. E. 1062, 62 Am. St. Rep. 404, 39 L. R. A. 373, in which it was held that the state may proceed to claim a forfeiture of the charter of an incorporated exchange by an information in the nature of quo warranto, where the corporation is abusing its franchise by dictating to its members, consisting of live-stock commission merchants, the number and kind of traveling solicitors they shall employ, and how they shall be paid.

22. Hitch v. Hawley, 132 N. Y. 212, 30 N. E. 401 [affirming 15 Daly 413, 8 N. Y. Suppl. 319], where it was held that where the interests of the stock-holders of an incorporated exchange are so discordant as to prevent effective management, and a large majority of both its trustees and members wish to wind up its affairs, dissolution and distribution of the assets among the stock-holders will be "beneficial to the interests of the stockholders," within N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 2429, providing that where a majority of the trustees favor dissolution, and it appears that a dissolution "will be beneficial to the interests of the stock-holders, . . . the court must make a final order dissolving the corporation."

prescribing the mode to be followed by applicants for admission; and the courts cannot compel the admission of an applicant who is ineligible or who has failed to comply with the prescribed mode in which membership can be gained.[24]

B. Discipline of Members and Termination of Membership — 1. Grounds. The rules of the exchange generally provide that a member may be fined, suspended, or expelled for misconduct,[25] fraud,[26] infractions of just and equitable principles of trade,[27] inability to meet his contracts,[28] unjustifiable or fraudulent breach of contract,[29] refusal to submit differences to arbitration or to comply with

Right of purchaser of seat to admission.— Where the by-laws of an exchange provide for admission to membership on the written application of an applicant indorsed by two members, approved by seven votes by the board of directors, and upon payment of an initiation fee, or on presentation of a certificate of unimpaired or unforfeited membership, duly transferred, and by signing an agreement to abide by the rules of the association, the ownership of such a certificate does not constitute the holder a member or entitle him to any rights as such, and the only way in which he can avail himself of the certificate is by tendering it in lieu of the prescribed initiation fee in case he is admitted to membership, or, in case his application is rejected, then by selling it. American Livestock Commission Co. v. Chicago Livestock Exch., 143 Ill. 210, 32 N. E. 274, 36 Am. St. Rep. 385, 18 L. R. A. 190. So where a seat has been sold by the assignee in bankruptcy of the owner, the purchaser may offer himself, or may procure a purchaser of the seat, and nominate him to the exchange, and ask to have him elected and recognized as a member; and, until such proceedings for recognition have been taken by the purchaser, he is not entitled to relief by way of a judgment that he is entitled to the seat and that another claimant is not. McCabe v. Emmons, 51 N. Y. Super. Ct. 219.

Estoppel.— A person is estopped to deny his membership where he has frequently visited a board of trade on a visitor's ticket, and when there permitted another to deal with him as a member thereof, and accordingly he is bound by the rules and customs of the board as to those transactions. Chicago Packing, etc., Co. v. Tilton, 87 Ill. 547. And if a person entitled to a certificate permits it to be issued to another, he is estopped to assert his title against a bona fide purchaser from the holder. Allien v. Wotherspoon, 50 N. Y. Super. Ct. 417.

The fact that an application for membership is improperly rejected does not justify the applicant in going on the premises of the exchange in violation of its rules before his right to membership has been established in the courts. Babcock v. Merchants' Exch., 159 Mo. 381, 60 S. W. 732.

A rule requiring payment of the assignor's debts in the exchange as a prerequisite of a transfer of membership does not require the payment of debts as to which the assignor has been discharged in bankruptcy. State v. Minneapolis Chamber of Commerce, 77 Minn. 308, 79 N. W. 1026.

A defaulting member who, immediately on his failure, notifies the exchange is nevertheless debarred from his privileges until he makes satisfactory settlements, where the by-laws provide that a member unable to meet his contracts shall notify the president, and in default of notice the president shall appoint a committee of investigation who, if satisfied of the member's default, shall instruct the president to post notice of the failure, and that the member shall thereupon be debarred from his privileges until he makes satisfactory settlements. Sexton v. Commercial Exch., 10 Pa. Co. Ct. 607.

A mere breach of contract, without any moral delinquency on the part of the member, is not within a by-law authorizing the board of managers of an exchange to expel a member for "fraudulent breach of contract, or of any proceedings inconsistent with just and equitable principles of trade." People v. New York Produce Exch., 149 N. Y. 401, 44 N. E. 84.

Although a contract was not made during a session of the exchange or on its floor, yet a breach of it may afford ground for suspension. Haebler v. New York Produce Exch., 149 N. Y. 414, 44 N. E. 87; Dickenson v. Milwaukee Chamber of Commerce, 29 Wis. 45, 9 Am. Rep. 544.

the award of arbitrators,[30] or other cause authorized by its charter or constitution.[31] The rules also generally provide for the sale of the seat of a member who has been expelled or becomes ineligible for reinstatement, and the payment of his exchange creditors out of the proceeds.[32]

2. VALIDITY OF RULES.[33] Breach of contract[34] by a member of an exchange,

"Improper conduct."— By resorting to the courts to prevent the exchange from disposing of another seat claimed by him as assignee, a member is not guilty of "improper conduct," within a by-law providing for expulsion for that cause, where the charter and by-laws confer no authority on the exchange to determine the ownership of a seat in dispute, and there is no explicit agreement depriving him of the right to appeal to another tribunal in such a case. People v. New York Cotton Exch., 8 Hun (N. Y.) 216.

"Misconduct."— The refusal of a member to pay a pecuniary fine imposed on him by the directors for a violation of a by-law adopted by them, where he in good faith took the position that they had no power to impose the fine, was not "misconduct" for which he might be suspended. Albers v. Merchants' Exch., 39 Mo. App. 583. See also Savannah Cotton Exch. v. State, 54 Ga. 668.

The fact that the contract is enforceable at law does not withdraw it from the jurisdiction of the board of managers under a by-law authorizing it to suspend or expel a member upon a charge of fraudulent breach of contract or of conduct inconsistent with just and equitable principles of trade. People v. New York Produce Exch., 149 N. Y. 401, 44 N. E. 84.

Where a member refused to comply with a valid contract on a false pretext which was not put forth in good faith, the board of managers has jurisdiction to determine whether such conduct is inconsistent with the charter and by-laws of the exchange. Haebler v. New York Produce Exch., 149 N. Y. 414, 44 N. E. 87.

30. People v. New York Cotton Exch., 8 Hun (N. Y.) 216, holding, however, that by resorting to the courts to prevent an exchange from disposing of another seat claimed by him as assignee, a member does not act in antagonism to the power of the exchange to adjust controversies between its members, so as to afford ground for his expulsion.

Failure to comply with an award rendered against his protest that the exchange had no jurisdiction of the matter in issue is not such misconduct as would authorize the expulsion of a member. Savannah Cotton Exch. v. State, 54 Ga. 668.

Refusal to submit to arbitration a matter not in dispute is not ground for expulsion under a by-law requiring disputes or misunderstanding between members to be submitted to a committee of arbitration for settlement. A capricious or fraudulent exercise of the power to expel will not be upheld. Farmer v. Kansas City Bd. of Trade, 78 Mo. App. 557.

By resorting to the courts to prevent the exchange from disposing of another seat claimed by him as assignee, a member does not act in antagonism to the power of the exchange to establish just and equitable principles in trade, so as to afford ground for his expulsion. People v. New York Cotton Exch., 8 Hun (N. Y.) 216.

By-laws must state the causes for expulsion with certainty so that the members may know what conduct will subject them to the penalty. People v. New York Produce Exch., 149 N. Y. 401, 44 N. E. 84.

In resisting unlawful authority of the exchange, a member does not violate his duty as such. Leech v. Harris, 2 Brewst. (Pa.) 571.

Although a contract fails to comply with the statute of frauds and is not made during a session of the exchange, a by-law providing for the expulsion of a member for non-compliance with it is reasonable and valid. Dickenson v. Milwaukee Chamber of Commerce, 29 Wis. 45, 9 Am. Rep. 544.

misconduct,[35] refusal to submit differences to arbitration,[36] and other causes[37] may lawfully be made ground for fine, suspension, or expulsion by the exchange; and offending members asking judicial recognition of their rights as such cannot attack by-laws so providing as being unreasonable, or against public policy, or unconstitutional.[38]

3. Prosecution of Charges — a. Preliminary Investigation. If the propriety of the conduct of a member of an exchange is called into question, a committee may, without notice to him, make a preliminary investigation to determine whether formal charges shall be preferred.[39]

b. Qualification of Prosecutor. A person not a member of the exchange, if in its employ, may prefer charges against a member for a violation of its rules.[40] So may a member of the exchange, although personally aggrieved by the alleged wrong-doing,[41] or although he is a member of the committee which is to try the charges.[42]

c. Specification of Charges. The specification of charges should be sufficient in form fairly to inform the member of what he is charged,[43] but it is not to be tested by the strict rules of criminal pleading.[44]

Chicago Bd. of Trade v. Nelson, 162 Ill. 431, 44 N. E. 743, 53 Am. St. Rep. 312. So a charge of breach of contract and conduct inconsistent with just and equitable principles of trade is sufficient, although it does not allege that the member was guilty of such conduct in matters relating to the contract mentioned, where, from the body of the complaint, it is apparent that such is charged. A charge of "unmercantile conduct in fraudulently charging purchaser with 300 or 400 pounds of meat to the car more than it actually weighed, and saying that was the weight actually bought of [the complainant]" is sufficiently specific. Blumenthal v. Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce, 8 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 622, 9 Cinc. L. Bul. 76.

Scope of issues. — The specifications on which a charge of fraud was based, after referring to a sale of certain stock and the manner in which it was conducted, alleged "that all the aforesaid transactions were had by the parties in pursuance of an agreement for the purpose of bringing about fictitious and fraudulent sales"; and the member, in his answer, admitted that there were on his books several accounts that had excited his suspicions, but that he believed that nothing fraudulent or contrary to the rules of the exchange was taking place. It was held that the scope of the charges was not limited to the particular transaction as to the shares mentioned. Young v. Eames, 78 N. Y. App. Div. 229, 79 N. Y. Suppl. 1068.

d. Right to Hearing. An accused member is entitled to a hearing on the merits.[45]

e. Delegation of Power to Try Members. An exchange is generally authorized by its charter or constitution to delegate the power to try and punish offending members to a board of officers to be elected from its number.[46]

f. Notice of Hearing.[47] An accused member is entitled to notice of the hearing at which the charges are to be investigated,[48] even though the rules of the exchange do not so provide.[49]

g. Mode of Trial. An accused member is not entitled to a trial conducted in accordance with the rules which govern the proceedings of courts, but only to the trial prescribed by the constitution of the exchange.[50]

h. Right to Jury.[51] A constitutional provision securing the right of trial by jury does not apply to a proceeding taken by an exchange for the removal of a member for offenses against its constitution or by-laws.[52]

i. Right to Counsel. In the absence of a rule of the exchange to the contrary,[53] an accused member of the exchange is, it seems, entitled to be represented

There must be an investigation of the question whether the position taken by the member is justifiable before he can be deprived of membership for refusing to do an act on the ground of its illegality. Matter of Lurman, 90 Hun (N. Y.) 303, 35 N. Y. Suppl. 956 [affirmed in 149 N. Y. 588, 44 N. E. 1125]. If, however, accused admits the existence of ground for suspension, he need not have a formal hearing or trial. Moxey's Appeal, 9 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 441.

If taken without notice, formal complaint, or trial, and in his absence, a proceeding against a member for his suspension is utterly void. State v. Milwaukee Chamber of Commerce, 47 Wis. 670, 3 N. W. 760.

However, a statute providing that the exchange "shall have the right to admit as members such persons as they may see fit, and expel any members as they may see fit," does not authorize a delegation of that power to the board of directors. State v. Milwaukee Chamber of Commerce, 20 Wis. 63.

Delegation to lay tribunal.— The question whether goods tendered a member as buyer are of a character in which it is unlawful to trade cannot be delegated by the exchange to a lay tribunal called graders. Consequently the exchange cannot, because of their report that the goods are not unlawful, refuse to give the member the benefit of a review or a hearing on the merits, and deprive him of membership because of his refusal to accept the goods. Matter of Lurman, 90 Hun (N. Y.) 303, 35 N. Y. Suppl. 956 [affirmed in 149 N. Y. 588, 44 N. E. 1125].

Sufficiency of notice.— Notice of "a meeting to take into consideration the conduct of a member" does not comply with a by-law requiring notice of a meeting for the expulsion of a member to be given. Technicalities.— Proceedings to expel a member under charges presented, notice given, and a hearing afforded, are to be considered without too much regard to any technicalities. Substantial justice is to be followed rather than form. Albers v. Merchants' Exch., 39 Mo. App. 583; People v. New York Produce Exch., 149 N. Y. 401, 44 N. by counsel in a trial of the charges.[54] The trial board also is entitled to counsel if the by-laws so provide.[55]

j. Right to Examine and Cross-Examine Witnesses. An accused member is entitled to examine his own witnesses and to cross-examine the prosecuting witnesses against him.[56]

k. Evidence.[57] An exchange is not bound by strict rules of evidence in the trial of an offending member.[58]

l. Waiver of Objections. An accused member may waive irregularities and the infraction of various rights by failing to take proper action at the trial with reference thereto.[59]

m. Adjudication. An adjudication by an exchange expelling a member is like an award made by a tribunal of the party's own choosing. The exchange acts judicially, and its sentence is conclusive, like that of any other judicial tribunal.[60] One only of several partners in a firm member of the exchange may be convicted on a charge against the firm for a violation of the rules of the exchange.[61]

4. Punishment[62] — a. Fine. An exchange has power to fine a member for an infraction of its rules.[63]

54. Dos Passos Stock-Br. & Stock-Exch. (2d ed.) 97.

In New York the courts have not yet passed upon the power of an exchange to make such a rule. In Hutchinson v. Lawrence, 67 How. Pr. 38, it appeared that at a meeting of the governing committee of the stock exchange, preliminary to hearing charges against plaintiff, a motion in behalf of the latter to be defended by counsel was defeated. In Neukirch v. Keppler, 56 N. Y. App. Div. 225, 67 N. Y. Suppl. 710, it is held that an objection by plaintiff that he had no counsel could not be considered as he had not asked for counsel. In Young v. Eames, 78 N. Y. App. Div. 229, 79 N. Y. Suppl. 1068, it is held that such an objection should have been raised by the pleadings.

b. Suspension and Expulsion — (i) Power to Suspend or Expel. To a limited extent an exchange has inherent power to expel a member for certain acts, although such power is not conferred by its charter or constitution, or the power is conferred in general terms.[64] The power to expel for various causes, however, is generally conferred on the exchange by its charter or articles of association.[65] against members of the exchange. However, a by-law giving the directors indefinite power to fine members for misconduct, without limit as to the amount of the fine, is invalid. Albers v. Merchants' Exch., 39 Mo. App. 583.

64. Jackson v. South Omaha Live Stock Exch., 49 Nebr. 687, 68 N. W. 1051 (holding that this power need not be specifically conferred in the articles of incorporation, as against members of the exchange); State v. Milwaukee Chamber of Commerce, 20 Wis. 63 (holding, however, that where the power is conferred in general terms, the corporation may exercise it only to accomplish the objects of its creation).

The inherent power to expel may be exercised: (1) When an offense is committed which has no immediate relation to the member's corporate duty, but which is of so infamous a nature as to render him unfit for the society of honest men; (2) when the offense is against his duty as an incorporator or member of the association; and (3) when the offense is of a mixed nature — against the member's duty as a corporator or associate, and also indictable by the law of the land. But before a member can be expelled for a crime, there must be a previous conviction by a jury according to law. Leech v. Harris, 2 Brewst. (Pa.) 571.

Where an action at law is pending, the refusal of a member to submit the same dispute to arbitration or to abide the decision of the arbitration committee is not a violation of his duty as a corporator, which justifies his expulsion or suspension. State v. Milwaukee Chamber of Commerce, 20 Wis. 63.

Circulation of false reports about an officer of an exchange by a member may be made ground for disciplining him. Farmer v. Kansas City Bd. of Trade, 78 Mo. App. 557.

"Dishonorable conduct."—A by-law providing for the suspension of a member for "dishonorable conduct" is within the powers of an exchange having authority to admit or expel members and to make such rules as the members may think proper for its government. Chicago Bd. of Trade v. Nelson, 162 Ill. 431, 44 N. E. 743, 53 Am. St. Rep. 312. It has been held, however, that the directors have no power to declare "bad faith and dishonorable conduct" that which is nothing of the kind. The rule permitting expulsion for acts of bad faith is not one by which members may be expelled at the pleasure of the board, without reference to the character of the deeds it may see fit to designate as bad faith and dishonorable conduct. Nelson v. Chicago Bd. of Trade, 58 Ill. App. 399.

Fraudulent breach of contract or proceedings inconsistent with just principles of trade. — Power to expel for fraudulent breach of contract or for proceedings inconsistent with just and equitable principles of trade is conferred by a charter of an exchange stating that its object is to "inculcate just and equitable principles of trade, to establish and maintain uniformity in commercial usages, . . . and to adjust controversies and misunderstandings between persons engaged in business," and which authorizes the making of all proper by-laws, and the expulsion of any member in such manner as may be provided. People v. New York Produce Exch., 149 N. Y. 401, 44 N. E. 84. Although he is not guilty of actionable fraud, yet the charter of the New York produce exchange, as amended in 1864, confers on the board of managers authority to discipline a member guilty of unjust and inequitable conduct in trade, including breach of contract. Haebler v. New York Produce Exch., 149 N. Y. 414, 44 N. E. 87; People v. New York Produce Exch., 149 N. Y. 401, 44 N. E. 84. And although the transaction occurred with a person not belonging to the exchange, yet an exchange formed to inculcate just and equitable principles in trade, and authorized to make needful by-laws, and to expel any member in such manner as may be provided, may expel a member for obtaining goods under false pretenses. Refusal to deal in adulterated food, in violation of N. Y. Laws (1893), c. 661, § 41, is not a ground for which a member may be suspended by the exchange. Matter of Lurman, 90 Hun (N. Y.) 303, 35 N. Y. Suppl. 956 [affirmed in 149 N. Y. 588, 44 N. E. 1125].

Refusal to submit dispute to arbitration.— Continuance of membership may be made conditional on the submission of disputes to arbitration, under Minn. Gen. (II) Effect of Suspension or Expulsion. An expulsion not only terminates the membership but destroys all rights incidental thereto.[66] A suspension, however, does not interfere with the offending member's vested rights of property.[67]

5. Interference by Courts[68] — a. General Rules. Disciplinary rules of an exchange and its decisions thereunder are ordinarily binding on its members,[69] and are not subject to collateral attack or review in the courts.[70] Ordinarily a court will not interfere in a contest between an exchange and a member thereof who has been suspended or expelled, either to grant an injunction against the enforcement of the judgment of the exchange[71] or to compel the exchange to member for an unjustifiable breach of contract to purchase cement taken from the earth and manufactured into a salable article. Haebler v. New York Produce Exch., 149 N. Y. 414, 44 N. E. 87.

An indefinite power to expel members may not be inserted in the charter. Leech v. Harris, 2 Brewst. (Pa.) 571.

A conflicting and doubtful construction of regulations of the exchange does not justify it in depriving a member of his rights. Powell v. Abbott, 9 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 231.

The presumption is against the power to expel a member except for causes recognized by adjudged cases, since it is in the nature of a forfeiture which the law does not favor. People v. New York Cotton Exch., 8 Hun (N. Y.) 216.

No issue was raised as to the power of the exchange, on finding plaintiff to have made a fictitious sale, to expel him for fraud, where plaintiff alleged the refusal of the exchange to recognize him as a member, and the answer set up his expulsion for fraud, and his reply set up insufficiency of evidence of fraud. Young v. Eames, 78 N. Y. App. Div. 229, 79 N. Y. Suppl. 1068.

Rights of customers of expelled member.— The fact that a broker by virtue of his membership has made contracts between customers does not prevent the exchange from expelling him for violation of its rules, as such contracts may be enforced by the customers in their own names. Proceeds of sale of seat.— Where a member violates the constitutional relationship between him and the exchange by being guilty of reckless dealing or doing business with improper parties, and he is thereupon deprived of his membership and declared ineligible for readmission, he or his assignee forfeits all right to the proceeds of his seat, and the same may be disposed of as the association may direct; and the association may then fill the vacancy or not as it pleases. Belton v. Hatch, 109 N. Y. 593, 17 N. E. 225, 4 Am. St. Rep. 495. In that case a distinction is made between the case of an expelled member who is ineligible for readmission, and one who becomes honestly insolvent and fails to qualify for readmission. In the former case the member is deprived of all claim upon the association, but in the latter the proceeds of the seat may be paid to the member after all claims of the association are discharged. See Dos Passos Stock-Br. & Stock-Exch. (2d ed.) 31, 146. It has been held, however, that, in the absence of any specific provision therefor, the expulsion of a member for fraud does not forfeit to the exchange his property rights in his seat, and that the proceeds, after paying any claims of the exchange or its members, belongs to the expelled member. In re Gaylord, 111 Fed. 717. Effect of agreement to suffer suspension.— A contract made between a broker and his client that if the former would appear before the arbitration committee and suffer suspension the latter would reimburse him for incidental losses is valid, and damages may be recovered for its breach. reinstate him to membership.[72] The courts will not review the evidence on which the exchange based its determination,[73] further than to ascertain whether the case is so bare of evidence that no honest mind could have reached the conclusion arrived at by the exchange.[74] Nor ordinarily will the courts restrain the exchange from proceeding to a trial of an accused member. It cannot be assumed in advance that his trial will not be a fair one so as to justify the issuance of an injunction.[75] In all cases the member must avail himself of the rights and remedies provided by the rules of the exchange before he can appeal to the courts for relief.[76]

Mandamus.— If the exchange is unincorporated, mandamus is not the proper remedy to determine whether or not an expelled member is entitled to be reinstated. Weidenfeld v. Keppler, 84 N. Y. App. Div. 235, 82 N. Y. Suppl. 634. And even where the exchange is incorporated, so that mandamus is the proper remedy to determine that question, yet if the member had full notice of the proceedings for expulsion and was fully heard, the only questions open to him, in the absence of fraud, are the question of the jurisdiction of the tribunal of the exchange to which he was summoned to entertain the proceeding, and, upon the evidence presented to it, to adjudge his disfranchisement, and the question of the regularity of the proceedings before that tribunal. People v. New York Produce Exch., 149 N. Y. 401, 44 N. E. 84.

73. Chicago Bd. of Trade v. Nelson, 162 Ill. 431, 44 N. E. 743, 53 Am. St. Rep. 312.

There is a presumption that a decision expelling a member, after a trial of charges, was founded on sufficient evidence, and in order to sustain the expulsion in the courts, the exchange is not bound to produce sufficient of the evidence on which its decision rests to show that the charges were sustained. Young v. Eames, 78 N. Y. App. Div. 229, 79 N. Y. Suppl. 1068.

Even if the courts can review findings of fact of the directors of an exchange, yet they may do so only where the evidence adduced before the directors has been embodied in a bill of exceptions; and if that evidence is conflicting, the findings of the directors will not be disturbed. Jackson v. South Omaha Live Stock Exch., 49 Nebr. 687, 68 N. W. 1051.

Findings of fraud.— The fact that a transaction by an accused member was a fictitious sale did not preclude the committee of the exchange from making a finding of fraud, inasmuch as the same act may constitute a fictitious sale and also fraud. Young v. Eames, 78 N. Y. App. Div. 229, 79 N. Y. Suppl. 1068. A finding of fraudulent breach of contract, or conduct inconsistent with just and equitable principles of trade, is justified by evidence that the member failed to perform a contract to deliver to another a quantity of oil at a stipulated price, and that the price of oil had advanced between the date of the contract and the date set for the performance, and that the delinquent member endeavored to shift the blame from himself by stating that he was acting as agent for another. Adequate remedy at law.—A court of equity will not entertain a bill by a member to restrain the exchange from expelling him for a violation of its rules, since if he has any remedy it is in a court of law. Sturges v. Chicago Bd. of Trade, 86 Ill. 441. And although the same matters are involved in an action at law between the same parties, a temporary injunction will not be granted forbidding the exchange to investigate charges brought by one of its members against another in the manner provided by its charter and by-laws, where it is not alleged that any harm has been done to the accused, or is threatened to be done. Hurst v. New York Produce Exch., 100 N. Y. 605, 3 N. E. 42.

Irregularity of proceedings in exchange.— The fact that a member of the tribunal which is to try the accused member prefers the charges is no ground for enjoining the trial. Green v. Chicago Bd. of Trade, 174 Ill. 585, 51 N. E. 599, 49 L. R. A. 365 [affirming 63 Ill. App. 446]. Nor will the regularity of the proposed trial be inquired into by the courts. Chicago Bd. of Trade v. Riordan, 94 Ill. App. 298.

76. Moxey v. Philadelphia Stock Exch., 14 Phila. (Pa.) 185 [affirmed in 9 Wkly. Notes Cas. 441], holding that, where the rules provide an ample remedy for reinstatement, equity will not relieve a suspended member. So if an accused member fails to present facts in justification before the tribunal of the ex-

b. Exceptions. The determination of a disciplinary proceeding by the regularly constituted tribunal of the exchange, like the determination of a quasi-judicial body, is a proper subject for judicial investigation and control as regards jurisdictional error at the suit of an aggrieved member.[77] So the courts will interfere to restrain a contemplated unlawful suspension or expulsion,[78] or to reinstate a member who has been unlawfully disciplined.[79] As to whether a member who has been suspended or expelled for violating a by-law which is against public policy is entitled to come into the courts for a decree reinstating him, the cases are in conflict. In some jurisdictions, it seems, a member is entitled to relief under these circumstances,[80] while in others it is held that his right to be restored to membership is vested in the contract between himself and the exchange, which he must accept in its entirety, and that so long as he insists on the rights of a member he cannot base any right of action upon the illegal character of any of its by-laws.[81] However this may be, persons who are not members of the exchange cannot ordinarily ask the courts to restrain the enforcement of illegal rules regulating the conduct of members in their business relations with others.[82]

6. Liability For Wrongful Suspension or Expulsion. A member of an exchange may in a proper case maintain an action against the association for damages for his wrongful suspension or expulsion.[83] However, neither the mem-

A total absence of evidence to support a sentence of expulsion should have the same force in mandamus proceedings to compel reinstatement as the absence of jurisdiction on the part of the exchange to make any inquiry at all. People v. New York Produce Exch., 149 N. Y. 401, 44 N. E. 84.

In Illinois it has been held that where a member of an exchange is improperly expelled by proceedings contrary to its constitution and rules, the court of chancery cannot reinstate him by injunction. Fisher v. Chicago Bd. of Trade, 80 Ill. 85. If, however, the member's property rights are involved, the courts, whether of law or of equity, have power so far to supervise the action of the exchange as to determine whether it has proceeded according to its rules, and, if it has failed in a substantial manner, to correct the abuses which may result therefrom. Mandamus will issue to compel restoration to membership where an exchange is incorporated and a member has been unlawfully deprived of his rights (State v. Milwaukee Chamber of Commerce, 20 Wis. 63); but not where the exchange is unincorporated (Weidenfeld v. Keppler, 84 N. The exchange having sold the seat of a member who had been unlawfully expelled, it is liable to him therefor; and the fact that the proceeds of the sale were applied to the payment of his creditors in the exchange does not operate either as a defense to an action by him against the exchange or in mitigation of damages. Olds v. Chicago Open Bd. of Trade, 18 Ill. App. 465.

Mandamus.— The bringing of such an action is a waiver of the right to mandamus.

bers of an exchange [84] nor its officers [85] are liable in damages to a member who has been wrongfully suspended or expelled, in the absence of malice.[86] It has been held that an action for damages may also be maintained by a member where he is denied the privileges of the exchange, and his means of livelihood as a broker, without actual suspension or expulsion.[87]

C. Rights of Members in Property of Exchange — 1. In General. The possession of property by an exchange is a mere incident and not the main purpose of the association, and a member has no severable proprietary interest in it or a right to any proportional part of it upon withdrawing. He has merely the enjoyment and use of it while he is a member, and the property remains with, and belongs to, the body while it continues to exist, and when it ceases to exists the members become entitled to their proportional shares of its assets.[88]

2. Gratuity or Trust Fund. The charter, constitution, and rules of the exchange frequently provide for the creation by assessment or otherwise of a gratuity or trust fund out of which a certain sum is to be paid to the widow or family, or next of kin of, or persons dependent upon, a deceased member in good standing. In this fund a member has no severable, proprietary interest.[89] It is a mere gift from the surviving members of the exchange to the persons mentioned,[90] and the right to the fund exists subject to the rules of the exchange.[91]

84. Lurman v. Jarvie, 82 N. Y. App. Div. 37, 81 N. Y. Suppl. 468, holding that where an exchange had jurisdiction to suspend members for violation of its rules, the fact that it arbitrarily and erroneously suspended a member without affording him an opportunity to be heard did not render the members of the exchange liable for injury to his business reputation, in the absence of malice.

Damages.— Where a member was suspended for a day, but his business was not molested thereby, and he could make no estimate of any loss suffered by not being on the exchange, he could not recover therefor in an action for unlawful suspension. Albers v. Merchants' Exch., 138 Mo. 140, 39 S. W. 473. So where a member paid dues for a year in which he was erroneously suspended, but it was not shown that the payment was caused by the suspension, it could not be recovered as damages caused thereby. And counsel fees and other incidental disbursements incurred in a mandamus proceeding to procure the reinstatement of the member, other than those taxed as costs or disbursements, are not recoverable by the member in one action against the exchange for damages. Lurman v. Jarvie, 82 N. Y. App. Div. 37, 81 N. Y. Suppl. 468.

85. Albers v. Merchants' Exch., 138 Mo. 140, 39 S. W. 473, holding that when acting within the powers conferred by the charter, upon charges of misconduct by a member, the directors of an exchange constitute a corporate court, and for mere errors of judgment by which damages result to the member, an action does not lie in his favor. To subject them to liability they must have been guilty of malice.

86. Albers v. Merchants' Exch., 138 Mo. 140, 39 S. W. 473, holding that malice does not appear where an exchange made a reasonable regulation, and a member violated it for several days in a defiant manner, and on the advice of an attorney he was fined by the directors, and on failure to pay the same was suspended, although the suspension was subsequently annulled by the court.

Ownership of real estate.— To avoid the questions which would arise as to real estate belonging to the New York stock exchange a company was incorporated on Jan. 30, 1863, under the laws of the state of New York, empowered to hold real estate, the stock of the company belonging exclusively to the exchange. D. Transfer of Seat — 1. Assignability. A seat in an exchange is commonly transferable by the member,[92] subject, however, to limitations imposed by rules of the exchange.[93]

2. Transfer by Exchange — a. Seat of Defaulting Member. The rules of the exchange generally authorize it to sell the seat of a defaulting member,[94] and to apply the proceeds to the payment of debts due from him to members of the exchange, the nature of the debts thus entitled to preferred payment depending upon the rules of the exchange.[95] Such regulations as these are within the Remedy for refusal to permit transfer.— Where a member is expelled because of his refusal to arbitrate a dispute with another member, as provided in the by-laws of the association, his remedy, if he has one, for the deprivation of his right to transfer his membership, is by a proceeding to compel the board to permit the transfer, and not by a proceeding to reinstate him to membership. Sale by exchange or by member.— Where the exchange, acting pursuant to a constitutional provision, refused to permit an insolvent member to transfer his seat until the price was paid into the exchange to pay debts due members, the transfer was not a voluntary sale, but a sale under rules of the exchange which required the proceeds of the sale of the seat of an insolvent member to be applied to the payment of loans from other members. Consequently the proceeds were not subject to garnishment by an outside creditor, the member being indebted to his fellow members to the amount of the proceeds. Evans v. Adams, 81* Pa. St. 443; Dos Passos Stock-Br. & Stock-Exch. (2d ed.) 150.

Sale on decease of defaulting member.— Where a defaulting member is suspended, the rights of creditors in the exchange to the proceeds of his seat do not become immediately fixed unless the seat is then sold, and if the period of settlement is extended in the defaulter's favor for successive yearly periods until his death, the rights of creditors in the exchange are to be determined according to its rules as then existing and not as they were at the time of the suspension. A claim need not arise out of a stock transaction to entitle it to share in the proceeds of the sale. It is sufficient if it arises from, or relates to, the business of stock brokage. Hence friendly loans between members are entitled to participate. Sheppard v. Barrett, 17 Phila. (Pa.) 145.

Adjudication of right to participate.— A committee of the exchange has no power to admit, as a claim against the proceeds of the sale, a debt which the constitution expressly excludes from participation in the fund. Weston v. Ives, 97 N. Y. 222. And see Cochran v. Adams, 180 Pa. St. 289, 36 Atl. 854. The adjudication of the arbitration committee, made after the rights of a non-member have accrued under an attachment execution, is not binding on him either as to the merits or as to the amount of a claim which the exchange asserts is entitled to participate in the proceeds of sale. Sheppard v. Barrett, 17 Phila. (Pa.) 145.

Where the constitution of an exchange is ambiguous as to the disposition of the proceeds of the seat of an insolvent member, usage, as well as the practical construction put upon the constitution by the parties, may be proved. In re Hayes, 37 Misc. (N. Y.) 264, 75 N. Y. Suppl. 312.

power of the exchange,[96] and are binding on the member and all those claiming under him.[97]

b. Seat of Deceased Member. The rules of the exchange generally authorize it to sell the seat of a member on his decease, and provide that the proceeds shall be applied to the payment of debts due members of the exchange, and the balance, if any, paid to the deceased member's personal representative.[98] These regulations are binding on the personal representative of the deceased member,[99] and moreover he takes the proceeds subject to liens created by the member in his lifetime.[1] The nature of the debts entitled to participate in the proceeds of sale depends upon the rules of the exchange.[2]

E. Dealings Between Members — 1. Regulation by Exchange. The constitution and rules of an exchange commonly contain various regulations concerning mutual dealings between its members.[3] As between the members these rules

Effect of liquidation proceedings in exchange.— A creditor in the exchange may sue a defaulting member in respect of claims which are being dealt with in the liquidation proceedings in the exchange (Ratcliff v. Mendelssohn, 87 L. T. Rep. N. S. 422), and the balance due a creditor in the exchange after receiving a dividend on his debt out of the stock exchange assets of a defaulting member may be collected in the ordinary tribunals (Ex p. Ward, 20 Ch. D. 350, 51 L. J. Ch. 752, 47 L. T. Rep. N. S. 106, 30 Wkly. Rep. 560). Effect on right to proceed against defaulter's estate see Assignments For Benefit of Creditors; Bankruptcy.

Rights of antecedent purchaser from member.— Where a member assigns his seat in payment of a preëxisting debt, and the transferee deposits the amount of the consideration with the exchange to be applied in accordance with its rules, the balance of the deposit, after paying the debts due to the exchange and its members, cannot be taken by a judgment creditor of the retiring member as being his property. It belongs to the transferee. Hanscom v. Hendricks, 123 N. Y. 664, 26 N. E. 750 [affirming 52 Hun 80, 5 N. Y. Suppl. 109].

Interference by courts.— A threat by an individual officer or member of the exchange to make an improper distribution of the proceeds of a seat, although he be a member of the committee having charge of the matter, does not justify the issuance of an injunction pendente lite to restrain the officers of the exchange and the committee and members from acting. So a debt due a firm, a member of which is a member of the exchange, is not entitled to share in the proceeds of the sale of a deceased member's seat unless it was contracted during the existence of the partnership; and unless the debt grows out of a transaction relating to the business of a stock exchange broker, it is not entitled to participate in the proceeds of sale. Only contracts made in the exchange are directly governed by its rules (Rorke v. San Francisco Stock, etc., Bd., 99 Cal. 196, 33 Pac. 881; Mills v. Gould, 42 N. Y. Super. Ct. 119), and contracts touching real estate are not within the jurisdiction of a stock exchange (Leech v. Harris, 2 Brewst. (Pa.) 571). If, however, parties to a contract made outside of the exchange insert in it a stipulation that it is made and shall be settled according to the rules of the exchange, then such rules will govern the rights of the parties. Bassett v. Irons, 8 Mo. App. 127; Mills v. Gould, 42 N. Y. Super. Ct. 119.

Clerks of members being disabled from making contracts within its jurisdiction binding upon their employers, a contract made in violation thereof is, unless ratified by the employer, absolutely void as regards the jurisdiction of the association, so that the employer of such clerk, upon being charged before the tribunal of the association with having violated its laws by refusing to be bound by the transaction, is entitled to be exonerated upon its appearing that the transaction was neither authorized nor ratified by him; and a finding otherwise reached, by testing the rights and obligations of the parties by a standard not found in the laws of the association, is not binding on the employer. Bartlett v. Bartlett, 116 Wis. 450, 93 N. W. 473.

Grade of grain.— A rule that, on all contracts for grain for future delivery, a tender of a higher grade than the one contracted for is sufficient, affects only the fulfilment of contracts in the legal sense of that term, and consequently does not apply to a transaction where an offer to sell grain of a certain kind was not accepted absolutely but was met with an offer to purchase grain of a different kind. Rugg v. Davis, 15 Ill. App. 647. The grade of grain to be delivered under a contract for future delivery is governed by rules in force at the time of the purchase and not by those in force at the time specified for delivery. E. Hess Malting Co. v. Warren, 15 Ill. App. 596.

Inspection of produce.— The right of inspecting flour and appointing inspectors for that purpose, conferred on the Chicago board of trade by charter, was not taken away, so far as members of the board are concerned, by the consolidated charter of the city of Chicago, adopted in 1863. Chicago v. Quimby, 38 Ill. 274. The inspector's agency for the parties to the contract, if any agency exists, does not extend beyond inspecting the commodity and certifying its grade, and by failing to make the inspection within the prescribed time with the seller's consent he does not waive in behalf of the buyer the right to take advantage of the rule. Bassett v. Irons, 8 Mo. App. 127. A purchaser on change is presumed to rely, as a protection against imposition, on the certificate of inspection issued in accordance with the rules of the exchange. If, however, the seller makes a distinct assertion of the quality and condition of an article, whether it amounts to a warranty or not, which he knows or should know is untrue, with a view to inducing another member to buy, and the latter relies on the assertion, believing it to be true, and by reason thereof does buy, and damages ensue to him, he may sue for deceit notwithstanding that he procures an inspection of the article pursuant to the rules of the exchange. Thorne v. Prentiss, 83 Ill. 99. Validity of rule as to inspection of produce see also supra, III, D.

Deposit as security.— Under a rule of the gold exchange, providing that either party may require a deposit as security, and that a failure to make the deposit within the prescribed time shall be considered a failure to complete the contract, a failure to deposit constitutes a breach of contract and gives the injured party an immediate right of action for his damages without waiting for the time of performance to arrive. And if a buyer of gold fails to make the deposit required of him as security, the other party may resume his original rights in respect to the gold and sell it without notice. Mills v. Gould, 42 N. Y. Super. Ct. 119. Where, however, money is deposited in a bank as margins on a purchase of oats, and thereafter a corner is run in oats in violation of law, and in consequence the purchaser defaults in his contract, and the seller refuses to settle except at the average market price of oats as prevailing in the exchange on the last day of the month in which delivery was to be made, as authorized by the rules of the exchange in reference to settlements, the purchaser is entitled to an injunction restraining the bank from paying the deposit to the seller. Montreal Bank v. Waite, 105 Ill. App. 373. But where a member of the board of trade sells grain for future delivery on the account of a third person, and the transaction results in a loss, and the principal obtains an injunction against the member forbidding him from paying the loss out of the funds deposited with him as security, and the brokers with whom he dealt threaten to proceed against him under the rules of the board unless he pays the loss, he is not entitled to sustain a bill of interpleader against his principal and those brokers to determine to whom the funds in his possession belong. Ryan v. Lamson, 44 Ill. App. 204.

Cotton contracts.— Under the rules of the New Orleans cotton exchange, a contract for the sale of cotton is deemed final when the price has been agreed on, and the delivery of the same is considered to have been completed when it passes the scales. The buyer is bound to receive the cotton within seven working days from the day of sale; but, after demand has been made upon the press for delivery without avail, the same remains at the risk of the seller, who is liable for the loss or deterioration sustained thereto by any fault of his, or by the happening of a fortuitous

2. Arbitration of Differences — a. In General. The constitution or by-laws of an exchange commonly provide for the arbitration of differences between members by a committee of the exchange. So far as they do not tend to oust the courts of jurisdiction,[5] such regulations are within the power of the exchange,[6] and are binding on the members.[7]

b. Arbitration Proceedings. Jurisdiction of an arbitration committee is special and limited, and if it fails to conduct the investigation in accordance with the charter and by-laws of the exchange its judgment is not binding.[8] If, howevent. Paton v. Newman, 51 La. Ann. 1428, 26 So. 576. A rule of the Memphis cotton exchange provided: "All cotton shall be received within five working days from date of sale. The weighing and examining of cotton shall constitute a confirmation of sale, but delivery shall not be considered final until paid for;—the factor's policy of insurance to cover until delivered and paid for; payment being considered final act of delivery." It seems that a transaction under this rule is not an executory agreement to sell when payment is made, but it is mere stipulation for the security of the seller, which enables him at his option to refuse to part with the possession until payment is made. But, whatever be the proper construction of the rule, where parties by a habitual course of dealing with each other had wholly disregarded it on both sides, and the seller in the particular transaction, as in all others, delivered unconditionally, and without restraint as to possession and use, and manifested no concern about securing payment through the rule, it amounts to waiver by the seller of the stipulation, and the risk of loss by fire passed with the title to the buyer on actual delivery to him. Sales made on change are presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, to have been made with reference to the rules of the exchange, and must be construed with reference thereto. However, the members may contract on change or elsewhere so as to bind themselves to obligations beyond and independent of the rules of the exchange. Thorne v. Prentiss, 83 Ill. 99. 5. Savannah Cotton Exch. v. State, 54 Ga. 668, where it is held that awards of the arbitration committee are reviewable, so far as the legal rights of the parties are concerned, by the judicial tribunals of the state, the same as the awards of other arbitrators. So the pendency of an action at law precludes the committee on arbitration from taking jurisdiction of the matter in dispute without plaintiff's consent. State v. Milwaukee Chamber of Commerce, 20 Wis. 63.

Suspension for refusal to arbitrate.— A by-law providing for arbitration of business disputes and for suspension of a member for refusing to arbitrate is not invalid as ousting the courts of jurisdiction. Evans v. Minneapolis Chamber of Commerce, 86 Minn. 448, 91 N. W. 8.

6. Evans v. Minneapolis Chamber of Commerce, 86 Minn. 448, 91 N. W. 8, holding that a by-law providing for voluntary arbitration between members is authorized by articles of incorporation empowering the exchange to adjust business disputes. However, a rule providing for compulsory arbitration of disputes is not authorized by a charter empowering the exchange to appoint committees for the settlement of disputes which may be voluntarily submitted for arbitration by its members. Montreal Bank v. Waite, 105 Ill. App. 373.

7. Haebler v. New York Produce Exch., 149 N. Y. 414, 44 N. E. 87, holding that an offer to arbitrate before a tribunal of persons who are not members of the exchange does not preclude a reference of the dispute to the board of managers under a by-law requiring complaints to be referred to the board in case a member refuses to arbitrate. However, the right of a member to appeal to another tribunal will not be denied him upon a doubtful construction of a by-law. People v. New York Cotton Exch., 8 Hun (N. Y.) 216.

A member may revoke the power to arbitrate at any time before award, although the constitution of the exchange provides that it shall be the duty of the arbitration committee to exercise jurisdiction over all matters of difference between members and that their decision shall be binding. And since any award made after revocation would be unenforceable, the member is not entitled to an injunction to restrain the committee from making an award. Heath v. New York Gold Exch., 7 Abb. ever, the committee proceeds regularly, its adjudication is conclusive on the parties;[9] the courts will not review an adjudication[10] further than to determine whether it was regularly and fairly made.[11]

3. Default in Board Transactions. The constitution and by-laws of an exchange usually contain regulations concerning the rights and duties of the parties in case a member defaults in a transaction on the board or becomes insolvent,[12] and commonly provide a mode for the liquidation of debts due creditors in the exchange from defaulting members.[13]

The committee has power to construe rules of the association as to its jurisdiction, and those claimed to have been violated by the member whose conduct is under investigation, when such rules will reasonably admit of two constructions, but not otherwise. Bartlett v. Bartlett, 116 Wis. 450, 93 N. W. 473.

Adjournment.— Exercise of the power of the committee to adjourn the hearing rests in its sound discretion, but its proceedings in that respect are nevertheless subject to review, and may be null if it appear that the discretion has been abused. Sonneborn v. Lavarello, 2 Hun (N. Y.) 201.

Refusal to hear evidence renders the action of the committee invalid, where the rules require it to hear such evidence under oath as either party may wish to submit touching the dispute. Ryan v. Cudahy, 157 Ill. 108, 41 N. E. 760, 48 Am. St. Rep. 305, 49 L. R. A. 353.

The committee is the judge of the competency and value of the evidence offered before it, and may properly hold that testimony tendered for its consideration shall bear such marks of authenticity as would entitle it prima facie to credit. Vaughn v. Herndon, 91 Tenn. 64, 17 S. W. 793.

A member is estopped to deny the jurisdiction of the committee over the person and subject-matter, where he voluntarily submits to a trial before the committee without calling its jurisdiction into question. Ryan v. Cudahy, 157 Ill. 108, 41 N. E. 760, 48 Am. St. Rep. 305, 49 L. R. A. 353.

A member waives objection to the omission of the arbitrators to take oath and to the character of the evidence received by it, where he submits to a trial on the merits without calling those matters into question. Sonneborn v. Lavarello, 2 Hun (N. Y.) 201.

A member is entitled to appeal on the question of the jurisdiction of a committee to arbitrate a dispute without submitting the whole merits of the controversy to the board of appeals. Savannah Cotton Exch. v. State, 54 Ga. 668.

9. Montreal Bank v. Waite, 105 Ill. App. 373; Vaughn v. Herndon, 91 Tenn. 64, 17 S. W. 793.

However, the judgment must be reasonably certain to render it conclusive on the parties, and so bar a subsequent suit. A reversal by the committee of appeals of a board of trade of an award made by the committee of arbitration does not determine the rights of the parties, but leaves them as they stood before the arbitration. Redmond v. Bedford, 40 Ill. 267.

10. Alton Grain Co. v. Norton, 105 Ill. App. 385; Montreal Bank v. Waite, 105 Ill. App. 373, both holding that the courts will not review the question whether a judgment of the board of directors is correct, or whether the evidence before the board is sufficient to authorize its findings.

11. Ryan v. Cudahy, 157 Ill. 108, 41 N. E. 760, 48 Am. St. Rep. 305, 49 L. R. A. 353, holding that where property rights are involved, courts have power so far to supervise the action of a board of trade as to determine whether it has proceeded according to the rules and regulations provided for its action, and, if it has failed in a substantial manner, to correct abuses which may result from its unwarranted proceedings. And see Savannah Cotton Exch. v. State, 54 Ga. 668.

12. Gill v. O'Rourke, 6 Pa. Super. Ct. 605, where it is held that a rule requiring written notice when default on a contract is intended is sufficiently complied with by a letter from seller to buyer stating, "So far as we are concerned deal is off," irrespective of the reason of the default. However, a rule requiring creditors of a defaulting member to report the default to the exchange within a certain time applies only to defaults in exchange transactions. Rorke v. San Francisco Stock, etc., Bd., 99 Cal. 196, 33 Pac. 881.

Settlement of differences.—In a controversy respecting the price to be charged to a defaulting seller, the committee of the board of trade should not confine the parties to evidence of the difference between the contract price and a figure established by a committee on the day of delivery, regardless of the fact whether such figure is real, fictitious, or collusive. And the fact that the seller had put up margins when demanded does not deprive him of the right, when the title to the margins is put in issue, of proving that the market value of the article sold was no higher on the day of delivery than when it was sold. Ryan v. Cudahy, 157 Ill. 108, 41 N. E. 760, 48 Am. St. Rep. 305, 49 L. R. A. 353.

Rep. 451, holding that the word "assets" in London stock exchange rules, No. 176, which provides that the official assignees in the exchange shall collect the assets of a defaulting member, and shall distribute them to the creditors in the exchange, means the whole of the member's assets, and not merely his stock exchange assets.

VII. RIGHTS AND DUTIES OF EXCHANGE AS TO THIRD PERSONS.

A. In General. Persons who are not members of an exchange have no right to enter upon its premises against its wishes;[14] nor ordinarily have they a right to relief against the enforcement of rules of the exchange.[15]

B. Quotations — 1. In General. Until voluntary publication of its market quotations, an exchange has a right of property in them.[16] It may accordingly

14. Chicago Open Bd. of Trade v. French, 61 Ill. App. 349, holding that the exchange may exclude regular customers of a member the same as others. And the fact that members were violating the rules of the exchange by trading on the curb or through bucket-shops does not justify a non-member in entering upon the premises of the exchange for that purpose in violation of its rules, and remaining there after he has been ordered to leave. Babcock v. Merchants' Exch., 159 Mo. 381, 60 S. W. 732.

15. Russell v. New York Produce Exch., 27 Misc. (N. Y.) 381, 58 N. Y. Suppl. 842, holding that an exchange will not be restrained from posting a resolution on its bulletin board declaring certain persons who are not members guilty of certain charges, and prohibiting members from acting for them on the board, where it does not appear that the business of the exchange is so affected by a public use as to render it subject to regulation at the suit of one not a member. Where, however, an exchange adopts rules obligatory on its own members by which their rights may be summarily determined between themselves without notice and opportunity to be heard, such determination has no external force to injure or impair the rights of persons not voluntarily subject to the jurisdiction of the tribunal. Morris v. Grant, 34 Hun (N. Y.) 377.

The passage of a by-law in restraint of trade as forbidding members of a live-stock exchange from dealing with certain outside parties does not give such parties any right to equitable relief, since by-laws and contracts in restraint of trade are only illegal in the sense that the law will not enforce them; and the fact that the business of buying and selling live stock at that market, which is owned by a private corporation, has become so large as to have an influence on the commerce of the entire country, does not justify the courts in declaring such market public, and in applying to business transacted therein rules different from those governing similar transactions elsewhere. American Livestock Commission Co. v. Chicago Livestock Exch., 143 Ill. 210, 32 N. E. 274, 36 Am. St. Rep. 385, 18 L. R. A. 190 [affirming 41 Ill. App. 149].

There is not a free publication, depriving an exchange of its property right in its quotations, where it furnishes them to customers for their exclusive use either by means of a ticker or by placing them on a blackboard in the customer's office. Chicago Bd. of Trade v. Hadden-Krull Co., 109 Fed. 705.

An exchange is entitled to an injunction prohibiting the use of its quotations by a person to whom they are furnished by one who obtains them surreptitiously from the exchange before their publication. Chicago Bd. of Trade v. Hadden-Krull Co., 109 Fed. 705.

A preliminary injunction will be refused where defendants, sued to restrain their use of board of trade quotations, deny such use, and show that they could obtain the same quotations from another source, and issues are made or can readily be forced by complainant so as to procure a speedy final hearing; nor will a preliminary injunction issue in a federal circuit court to restrain the use of quotations by bucket-shops, where a district court of the same circuit has refused the exchange an injunction sought for the same purpose, on the ground that complainant is a too nearly similar concern, and the circuit court of appeals has not yet reviewed that judgment. Chicago Bd. of Trade v. Ellis, 122 Fed. 319. A preliminary injunction will not be granted to a board of trade restraining the use of its quotations by others, where the question whether there has been such a prior publication of the quotations as to make them public property is in dispute, both as to the facts and their effect, and can be properly determined only on a full hearing. Chicago Bd. of Trade v. C. B. Thomson Commission Co., 103 Fed. 902. A preliminary injunction will be refused where a board of trade seeks to restrain the use of "continuous quotations," which are alleged to have been surreptitiously obtained by defendant, and such term was defined in contracts between complainant and telegraph companies for the transmission of the same as meaning prices electrically and uninterruptedly transmitted from complainant's exchange to such telegraph companies, and thence to their patrons at intervals of less than ten minutes, and it did not appear that the quotations received by defendant were continuous quotations, as so defined, or that they had been received prior to their having been dedicated to the public. Chicago Bd. of Trade v. Buffalo Consol. Stock Exch., 121 Fed. 433.

Where a greater part of the transactions of an exchange are gambling transactions, and the officers of the exchange have knowledge of that fact, the exchange is not entitled to an injunction against the use of quotations withhold them entirely from the public,[17] or, if it elects to permit their dissemination, as it may lawfully do,[18] it may impose on its licensees such conditions regarding their use as it sees fit.[19]

2. RIGHT TO DISCRIMINATE. By the weight of authority, an exchange may give out its quotations to only such persons as it sees fit to nominate, excluding all others.[20] It is not a public corporation;[21] nor are its quotations impressed with a trust in favor of the public;[22] and no rule of public policy is violated by discrimmade on its floor by an outside concern conducting a bucket-shop. Chicago Bd. of Trade v. O'Dell Commission Co., 115 Fed. 574. Such quotations are of no legitimate value as tending to promote the commerce of the country, and dissemination thereof cannot be restrained. Where, however, the rules of the exchange prohibit gambling transactions, all sales made thereunder are presumptively valid, and the burden of proof rests upon one asserting the contrary to show that neither party to the transaction contemplated an actual delivery; nor does the mere fact that gambling transactions may be carried on in its exchange, in violation of its rules, establish the claim that the organization is a bucket-shop concern, doing business in violation of law, and therefore not entitled to maintain a suit in equity to protect its property right in its market quotations, it being indisputable that it transacts a vast amount of legitimate business. 21. Metropolitan Grain, etc., Exch. v. Chicago Bd. of Trade, 15 Fed. 847, 11 Biss. 531, where it was held that a board of trade, composed of merchants dealing in the products of the country, who solely for their own convenience provide a room where they meet to transact business, although incorporated under the laws of the state, is not a public corporation, and is not obliged to allow the reporters of a telegraph company on the floor of its exchange for the purpose of collecting and transmitting the reports of the markets therefrom.

22. Matter of Renville, 46 N. Y. App. Div. 37, 61 N. Y. Suppl. 549.

An exchange performs no public service, and is charged with no public duty; and, the business transactions on its floor being exclusively those of the individual members, they have the same immunity from public inspection as exists in other branches of business, and the exchange may refuse to furnish information as to such transactions to such persons or companies as it sees fit, although for many years it has permitted persons not members to have access to its floor and gather reports of its transactions, to be distributed as news. Wilson v. Commercial Telegram Co., 3 N. Y. Suppl. 633.

In the absence of legislative action, a court of equity is not authorized to deny relief to a corporation conducting an exchange merely because the chancellor is of the opinion that its business, originally private, has grown to such magnitude and assumed such importance that the public is entitled to an interest therein, and to a control thereof commensurate with that interest. When such a condition arises, the measure of the public control is limited by the extent of the public interest, and the initiative in declaring a public use and the making of regulations pertaining thereto is of legislative, and not judicial, cognizance. Chicago Bd. of Trade v. Christie Grain, etc., Co., 116 Fed. 944.

ination in the nomination of licensees.[23] In Illinois, however, a contrary doctrine prevails. A public interest there attaches to the quotations, where they are given out, which entitles non-members to receive them for a lawful purpose without unjust discrimination, and upon the same terms given by the exchange to others.[24]

App. 93], holding that where an exchange has for years permitted and invited a telegraph company to transmit its quotations to all persons who choose to pay, and the information so obtained has in consequence become of essential importance to the commercial world, such information becomes impressed with a public trust, and the board cannot afterward treat it as purely private, and withhold it from all but a favored few. And see Chicago Bd. of Trade v. Riordan, 94 Ill. App. 298; Chicago Bd. of Trade v. Hadden-Krull Co., 109 Fed. 705.

The proprietor of a bucket-shop cannot, however, enjoin a board of trade from depriving him of its quotations, since a court of equity will not lend its aid to carry on an illegal business. a statute relating to wills, the terms are employed plainly to designate the whole operation; including both the signature or acknowledgment of the testator, and the attestation of the subscribing witnesses; they are not used to designate the testator's part alone.[52] As used in reference to the act of the executor in carrying out the provisions of a will, the terms mean the settlement of the estate under the provisions of law for the settlement of the estates of deceased persons, and the distribution of the property to the beneficiaries.[53] In criminal law "execution" means the putting to death of a criminal under sentence of a court.[54] In each of the applications — the execution of a deed,[55] of a writ,[56] or of a criminal,[57] and in every other application of the word, there is, when the word is used in its strict sense, the same meaning, namely, that of completing or performing what the law either orders or validates.[58] The sense in which the terms are used can generally be determined from the context.[59] (Execution: Of Criminal, see Criminal Law. I. DEFINITION.[1]

An execution is a writ issuing out of a court, directed to an officer thereof, and running against the body or goods of a party.[2] A writ of execution has been defined as the end of the law;[3] final process and the end of the law;[4] the end and fruit of the law;[5] the act of carrying into effect the judgment or decree of a court;[6] the final judgment of a court,[7] or other jurisdiction, and the writ which authorizes the officer so to carry into effect such judgment;[8] a judicial writ issuing from the court where the judgment is rendered;[9] a writ which authorizes the officer to carry a judgment into effect;[10] a writ issued to enforce

II. General Nature and Essentials.

A. Assignability.[23] It has been said that there might be a legal difficulty in transferring the writ so that the assignee could maintain a suit founded on it, although the right of receiving the money upon it and of directing the officer in its execution is clearly allowable;[24] in other cases, however, the assignment has been expressly held to be valid,[25] and in some jurisdictions the statutes expressly provide for its assignment under certain conditions.[26]

B. Operation and Effect of Statutes. The general rules as to the constitutionality, interpretation, operation, and effect of statutes in general have been applied to statutes relating to executions.[27]

A limitation as to actions, prescribing the time within which actions on judgments must be brought, is not applicable to the remedy by execution, but relates to actions only (Kincaid v. Richardson, 25 Hun (N. Y.) 237), and hence a statute may properly authorize an execution after an action on the judgment is barred by limitation (Matter of Warner, 39 N. Y. App. Div. 91, 56 N. Y. Suppl. 585 [affirming 22 Misc. 488, 50 N. Y. Suppl. 940]; Agar v. Curtiss, 8 N. Y. App. Div. 337, 40 N. Y. Suppl. 815).

Destruction of lien.— A statute, the operation of which must be construed as a destruction of the lien which has been acquired by the issuance of an execution, would of course be unconstitutional. Warren v. Jones, 9 S. C. 288.

Retroactive effect.— As a rule statutes authorizing the issuance of execution after the expiration of a certain time or prohibiting such issuance in certain cases will not be considered as retroactive unless the language employed expressly so warrants (Mann v. McAtee, 37 Cal. 11; Lockhart v. Tinley, 15 Ga.

C. Judgment, Decree, or Order[28] — 1. Necessity.[29] An execution cannot be lawfully issued on other than a final judgment or decree pronounced by a competent court which has determined the respective rights and liabilities of the parties litigant.[30] The courts adhere to this rule with strictness; the parties to the action cannot by agreement confer upon a clerk authority to issue execution for a debt not evidenced by a judgment,[31] and a mere verdict,[32] or a decree that money be brought into court,[33] or an award,[34] or an order of the probate court stating a guardian's account and ordering him to pay to his successor the balance found due from him on such accounting,[35] is not sufficient where no judgment has been rendered. So too a filing of the necessary papers authorizing an entry of judgment by confession in vacation without such entry actually being made is not sufficient.[36]

2. Nature — a. Contingent or Conditional Judgment. A judgment on condition can be enforced by execution only in pursuance to the conditions thereof,[37] but where it appears that the condition or contingency on which the judgment

Adoption of state laws by federal court.— The general act of congress of May 19, 1828, adopted the state laws concerning proceedings on execution, and by the subsequent act of 1842 declared such laws applicable to states admitted since 1828. This adoption is the same as the reënactment in haec verba of the original act, and therefore adopts the laws in force in such states in 1842 as to all those states admitted between the period of 1828 and 1842. might be satisfied from a different source or for a lesser amount has not been complied with, execution may at once issue for the amount of the same.[38]

b. Decree or Rule of Court For Payment of Money. While proceedings in contempt were perhaps the original method of enforcing decrees for the payment of money,[39] such decrees are properly and under the present practice more usually enforced by the more direct remedy of execution;[40] and no leave need be obtained from the court for that purpose,[41] although it has been held that such decree must be properly signed by the chancellor.[42]

c. Dormant Judgment.[43] As an execution on a judgment that is void is of no avail,[44] it follows that if the statutes specifically declare a dormant judgment void an execution and sale thereon are also void.[45] Generally speaking, however, an execution issued on a dormant judgment is not absolutely void but is voidable only,[46] but it may be set aside at the instance of defendant unless the judgment has been properly revived by a scire facias;[47] and the principle that an innocent purchaser will be protected where the only informality of a judgment is its dormancy does not apply where defendant may also set up as a defense the statute of limitations.[48] But an execution issued while a judgment is yet alive is good, and may be completed by the officer after the expiration of the statutory period of limitation.[49]

d. Foreign Judgment. In the absence of statute[50] there is no way of proceeding upon a foreign judgment other than by the action of debt,[51] and the constitutional provision that full faith and credit shall be given in each state to the public acts, records, and judicial proceedings of every other state does not apply to the subsequent acts under a judgment, such as issuing and returning executions thereon.[52]

e. Judgment by Confession.[53] An execution may issue upon a judgment by confession the same as on any other judgment unless otherwise provided by statute,[54] although in at least some jurisdictions such issuance is under the equitable control of the court in which the judgment may be rendered;[55] and a party issuing execution upon a judgment entered by warrant of attorney[56] proceeds at his peril.[57]

f. Judgment After Revival. Where judgment is revived on scire facias it is held in some jurisdictions that the execution must be issued on the original judgment,[58] although in some states it is held to be immaterial on which of the judgments the execution issues, as it is legal in either case.[59]

Right to show promise of payment of judgment.— An effect of a statute declaring a judgment dormant after the expiration of a certain time cannot be avoided by an execution plaintiff by proving a new promise made within the statutory period, inasmuch as the execution is not in legal contemplation an action, but the result of one, and cannot therefore be made to perform the office of a writ or summons or declaration, and hence cannot be traversed. If a new promise has been made the old judgment may be a basis upon which the promise may be available in a proceeding to obtain a new judgment; the old one being merely evidence of debt, but such issue cannot be raised by the levy of an execution. g. Judgment Rendered on Appeal. The remedy by execution on judgments rendered by an appellate court exists the same as on judgments rendered by an inferior tribunal.[60]

h. Order Taxing Costs. An order taxing the costs of an action against a party in favor of the officers of the court, while not strictly speaking such a judgment as would be rendered between parties in an adversary suit, is in legal effect a judgment, when docketed, and execution may issue thereon.[61]

3. Form and Requisites — a. In General. The judgment of course need be in no particular form to support an execution thereon so long as its validity is unaffected,[62] although where the statute prescribes a certain form of execution and judgment a substantial compliance therewith is necessary;[63] and as an execution is but a proceeding under the judgment its validity is not affected by a mere irregularity in the assignment of the judgment.[64] There must, however, be a judicial ascertainment of the party to whom the money is due,[65] and a clear statement of the final determination of the court.[66]

b. Entry or Docketing — (i) In General. While the entry or docketing of a judgment is necessary for the purpose of creating a lien,[67] such docketing is not in the majority of jurisdictions essential to enable a party to issue an execution thereon where the judgment has otherwise been duly rendered;[68] although by virtue of statutes in some states it would seem that an official entry or docketing is a condition precedent to the right of the writ.[69]

(II) Time of Entry. In those jurisdictions where it is necessary to the validity of an execution that the judgment record be first completed, it is held that the law will not notice fractions of a day in order to determine whether or not the record was thus complete before the execution issued, unless it be clearly necessary to prevent an injustice;[70] and it would seem that, where the record is subsequently completed, the execution would become effective from that time.[71] So too for the purpose of the validity of an execution a judgment entered in term-time will be presumed to have been entered up during the actual session of the court;[72] and a failure to make formal entry is an irregularity which may be waived by failing to make a motion to vacate until several months after the execution has been issued.[73]

c. Necessity of Special Order For Writ. It is not required in a judgment at law that the court shall in terms direct the issuance of an execution,[74] and the same rule has been applied to a decree in chancery.[75]

d. Must Be Final.[76] It is also essential that the judgment, to be a sufficient basis for a valid execution, be not a mere interlocutory order, or dependent upon a contingent liability, but it must be a final determination of the contention between the parties;[77] and where a joint judgment is opened as to one of the joint debtors, execution cannot issue against the other until the final determination of the liability of his coöbligor;[78] but where the matters at issue are clearly divisible, and a judgment is rendered on one point, which it is clear is in no way affected by a judgment on the other point, execution may issue on the former judgment.[79]

e. Must Be For Specific Amount. It is essential that there be a specification of the amount to be recovered in the judgment before execution can issue thereon,[80] and where the judgment is rendered for a debt or damages, and for costs, execution cannot be issued for the collection of such costs, if the amount thereof is not designated, except in cases where the law authorizes the clerk to tax the costs and include them in the execution.[81] But in some jurisdictions an execution issued for a greater amount than is actually due is not for this reason absolutely void, but is voidable only,[82] and in such cases the practice is to apply to the court to set aside the excess.

dated by an amendment to the judgment subsequent to the issuance of the writ, the reason being that if the amendment were valid the execution would show a different judgment than the one upon which it was issued, and would therefore on that account be a nullity; and if the amendment were invalid, the judgment upon which the execution was issued would still be void.[89]

(II) Irregular, Erroneous, or Voidable Judgment. The rule that a valid execution cannot be issued on a void judgment applies only to judgments which are legally of no force or effect, and may therefore be attacked collaterally, and has no application to judgments which are merely erroneous[90] or voidable,[91] or subject merely to some irregularity or informality.[92] But the amendment of an imperfectly entered judgment, making it perfect as originally ordered, imparts validity to an execution previously issued.[93]

(III) Judgments Rendered Without Notice to Defendant — (A) In General. A personal service on defendant, or his appearance in the proceedings in which the judgment is obtained, is necessary to render a general execution against him valid,[94] and a mere entry on the docket of "judgment by default" has been held insufficient to support this process,[95] although by virtue of statutory provisions execution may be taken out against a non-resident defendant, or one who has had no personal notice, upon giving a proper bond.[96]

b. Sufficiency. The transcript must show the jurisdictional facts on which the judgment in the justice's or inferior court was founded, as such facts cannot be supplied after the execution is issued,[2] and hence where the transcript does not show that there was a proper service of process on defendant,[3] or if the transcript

Where a judgment stays execution until an indemnity bond is furnished, a defendant is not entitled to notice of its filing, that he may have an opportunity of objection to its sufficiency; plaintiff must at his peril give a sufficient bond, and if he fails to do so his proceedings may be enjoined. Under the English practice, the removal of a judgment by virtue of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, § 22, into the court of queen's bench is for the purpose of execution only, and irregularities in obtaining the judgment cannot be inquired into. Simon v. De Witts, 4 Jur. 989. For application of 19 Geo. III, c. 70, providing for the removal of judgments from an inferior court to a superior one for the purpose of issuing execution as on a judgment from the latter see Crookes v. Longden, 5 Bing. N. Cas. 410, 7 Dowl. P. C. 413, 3 Jur. 317, 35 E. C. L. 224; Batten v. Squires, 4 Dowl. P. C. 53 (holding that the statute does not apply to judgments obtained by a defendant, but that its phraseology could admit of application to a plaintiff only); Smithers v. Tanner, W. W. & H. 84. But these statutes are held not to provide for the removal of judgments of a county court. Moreton v. Holt, 3 C. L. R. 348, 10 Exch. 707, 1 Jur. N. S. 215, 24 L. J. Exch. 169, 3 Wkly. Rep. 207.

The affidavit required of the party when the filing of a transcript of the justice's judgment is sought is jurisdictional, and a want of it is not a mere irregularity (Bigelow v. Booth, 39 Mich. 622; Monaghan v. McKimmie, 32 Mich. 40); it must state the amount due on the judgment (Bigelow v. Booth, 39 Mich. 622); and show the insufficiency of defendant's goods liable to execution within the county where the judgment was rendered. Hence it is held that an affidavit is insufficient which identifies the judgment set forth in the transcript only by the title of the cause and the date on which it was rendered (Denver v. Connolly, 92 Mich. 549, 52 N. W. 1003). But the mere fact that the affiant failed to sign such affidavit is not fatal. Merrick v. Mayhue, 40 Mich. 196.

3. This is true if it is not shown that defendant appeared either personally or by an attorney. Wedel v. Green, 70 Mich. 642, 38 N. W. 638. But the mere fact that it does not show the manner of service upon him, where he appeared by an attorney, is not fatal. Bauer v. Miller, 16 Mo. App. 252.

is not officially signed and certified by the justice or by the judge of the inferior court,[4] an execution issued thereon is void.

D. Joint Execution on Separate Judgments. Each judgment must carry its own execution, and a single execution cannot be issued on two separate judgments;[5] but, where a judgment decrees a distinct and separate amount in favor of two or more plaintiffs, a separate execution may issue in favor of each.[6] So too where, in an action against joint defendants, separate decrees are rendered against each, an execution may be issued against one of them without issuing the same against the other.[7]

E. Particular Forms of Writ.[8] While if there is a writ peculiarly applicable to the enforcement of a judgment, of a specific nature, it must be invoked by the creditor,[9] on many judgments the creditor has an option as to the form of writ he may employ.[10] So too certain writs have been more often invoked than others in different jurisdictions. On the other hand some writs in use under the common law have been wholly or partially discarded by modern practice. The reports, however, contain illustrations of the enforcement of judgments by a levari facias,[11] fieri facias,[12] venditioni exponas,[13] distringas,[14] elegit,[15] and scire

15. Elegit is a writ authorized by ancient statute, under which the sheriff is commanded to take the personal property of the debtor, and to appraise the same, and to deliver it, at its appraised value, to the creditor, and also to deliver to the creditor, formerly one half, but by a later statute, the whole of the judgment debtor's freehold estate, of which he was seized at the time of the docket of the judgment. "At common law no judgment lien existed in favor of the judgment creditor. The nearest approach to a modern judgment lien was found in St. 13 Edw. 1, called the 'Statute of Westminster II.,' which created the writ of elegit. The only remedy offered the judgment creditor under this was the sequestration of the profits of the land by writ of levari facias, or the possession of a moiety of the lands by writ of elegit, and in certain cases of the whole of it by extent. In all these cases the creditor held the land in trust until the debt was discharged by the receipt of rents and profits." Thompson v. Avery, 11 Utah 214, 229, 39 Pac. 829 [citing 3 Blackstone Comm. 419]. To the same effect see Russell v. Dyer, 33 N. H. 186, 196 [citing Gove v. Brazier, 3 Mass. 522], opinion of Fowler, J.

Compared with "fieri facias."—"If the debtor has sufficient personal estate, at its appraised value, to satisfy the judgment, then the sheriff does not proceed to deliver the freehold estate. It will be seen that the elegit, in England, is analogous to our writ of fi. fa. In both cases the operation is the same. If a fi. fa. in this state, or an elegit in England, be issued, and the debtor has no personal property, which here can be levied on and sold, or there, appraised and delivered in satisfaction of the judgment, then the sheriff proceeds against the real estate." North American F. Ins. Co. v. Graham, 5 Sandf. (N. Y.) 197, 200. Compare Dobbin v. Allegheny, 7 Fed. Cas. No. 3,941. See FIERI FACIAS.

facias,[16] which comprise the more common forms applicable to the enforcement of this remedy.

F. Simultaneous Executions.[17] As it would be oppressive and against equity to carry on two executions at the same time, it has been held that two should not be issued at the same time on one judgment,[18] nor can a second execution be issued to the same county until a legal return and disposal of the first has been made;[19] it is well settled, however, that a party may sue out different species of execution at the same time upon a judgment, but can proceed upon but one of them at a time for the satisfaction of his debt,[20] and where different processes are served at the same time defendant may elect which shall stand, and the court may set aside the others,[21] although it has been held that the objection to the irregularity of simultaneous issuance must come from defendant, and not his creditors.[22] Two writs may, however, issue simultaneously on the same judgment to two different counties.[23]

G. Successive Executions.[24] The levy of an execution is not of itself a satisfaction of the judgment, and does not preclude a plaintiff from again resorting to this remedy if the fruits of the first levy are insufficient to satisfy his debt; his remedies are cumulative and he may successively sue out and levy writs until he reaches that point at which the law declares the debt to be satisfied.[25]

H. Effect of Acts or Proceedings After Judgment and Before Issuance — 1. In General. Any condition of affairs arising subsequent to the rendition of judgment, to operate as a suspension of the execution, must of course change the legal relationship of the parties in some particular.[26]

2. Destruction of Record. Where a judgment is once recovered it remains in force until satisfied or barred by limitation, although the evidence of its recovery may be lost or destroyed, and in such case if the party desires to enforce it the correct practice, it seems, is to make an application to the court and introduce such evidence of destruction as may be in his possession showing the fact of rendition, and the loss or destruction of the record, and where such evidence is satisfactory an execution should be awarded;[27] but this ought not to be done without notice to the party against whom the judgment was rendered.[28]

3. Discharge of Judgment[29] — a. In General. When, upon any state of facts, the judgment becomes in legal contemplation in effect satisfied, no execution can lawfully issue thereon,[30] and a sale thereunder is of no validity and conveys no

Permitting a non-resident defendant to come in and enter a defense, after judgment, does not of itself open the judgment or operate to suspend the issuance of an execution. Carswell v. Neville, 12 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 445.

The mere taking of a security for the amount of the execution does not, of itself, and in the absence of an agreement, operate to suspend the execution (State Bank v. Potius, 10 Watts (Pa.) 148), although it has been held that, where a creditor receives a note drawn by a third party as a security for a debt, he should not be allowed to issue execution in satisfaction of the original obligation until he had returned such note to the debtor (Murphy v. Eckel, 1 Walk. (Pa.) 144), otherwise if the note is a nullity on account of fraud in its procurement (Mitchell v. Hockett, 25 Cal. 538, 85 Am. Dec. 151).

title even to a bona fide purchaser;[31] but the discharge must be in toto, and so long as there is a balance due on the judgment plaintiff has a right to his execution for its collection.[32]

b. Fees and Charges of Officer. An officer has no interest in a judgment sufficient to authorize him to interfere with or control any settlement or agreement which the parties thereto may think proper to make; his fees are but incidental to the judgment, and if it is satisfied or discharged he must look to the parties for them and cannot levy an execution for the purpose of their collection.[33] So it is held that no execution can issue for fees due a witness when the judgment has been satisfied.[34]

c. What Constitutes a Discharge — (i) In General. A discharge of a judgment, whereby an execution rendered thereon is a nullity, may result from a discharge of defendant in bankruptcy,[35] the collection of a note given for the amount of the judgment,[36] the payment of one of two judgments for the same debt,[37] or compliance with certain statutory provisions.[38]

(ii) Payment by Joint Debtor. Where a judgment rendered against several defendants is paid by one of them, the payment satisfies and discharges the judgment as to all, and an execution will not issue against the others for the purpose of enforcing contribution;[39] hence a surety or indorser who pays for the principal is not entitled to take out execution on the judgment against a cosurety.[40]

Evidence of satisfaction.— While the officer's return is usually the evidence of a discharge or satisfaction of a judgment, it is not necessarily the only evidence, and a bond taken from the purchaser, which fact appears of record, is a bar to an execution on the original judgment notwithstanding the officer's return is quashed. The mere service of a garnishment under an execution does not amount to a satisfaction of the debt in the sense that an execution cannot be subsequently issued; and the creditor may, if he so desires, take out an alias or pluries execution, the effect of which is to abandon the garnishment, whereupon the debtor's claim to the money or effects in the hands of the garnishee at once revives. (III) Payment by a Third Party. Payment of a judgment by a third party will as a rule operate as a satisfaction in the absence of any evidence of an assignment, and no execution can issue thereon after such payment,[41] although where the third party pays in consideration for its assignment and not in satisfaction he may sue out execution.[42]

4. Existence of Other Remedy. Statutes giving the right to an execution on judgments under conditions or circumstances where they could not issue at common law are cumulative only, and do not preclude the enforcement of the same by an action.[43] So too an execution and an action, not being inconsistent remedies, the one may be instituted, although the enforcement of the judgment is at the same time being sought by a use of the other.[44]

5. Motion For New Trial[45] or Appeal.[46] Inasmuch as it is unfair that a party who has recovered judgment should be delayed in obtaining the fruits thereof by a mere act of the opposite party, it is held in many jurisdictions that the mere act of moving for a new trial, in the absence of a statute or special order of the court to that effect, does not operate per se as a suspension or stay of the execution,[47] although under the practice of some jurisdictions it is error to issue execution until after the motion for a new trial has been disposed of,[48] and where a new trial has been granted, although the court may have acted illegally and erroneously, yet the clerk cannot disregard such order and issue an execution.[49] As an

A party cannot proceed at the same time via ordinaria and via executiva, as these terms are understood in the Spanish law practice, inasmuch as the use of the former is to obtain a judgment, while a resort to the latter must be supported by something which has the force and effect of a judgment; hence it would be clearly inconsistent with just judicial proceeding to allow both methods to be pursued at the same time. appellant would not only be hampered but oftentimes actually deprived of the benefit of his appeal if execution were issued while it is pending, any sale upon this process under such circumstances will be prevented by an injunction,[50] unless the statute provides for the execution of certain judgments notwithstanding an appeal;[51] but it is essential that the appeal be from the judgment on which the execution is sought to be issued; and an appeal from an order denying a new trial will not prevent an execution upon the original judgment.[52]

6. Vacating or Annulling Judgment.[53] As the foundation of an execution is the judgment of a court or some act or obligation which is in law equivalent thereto, it necessarily follows that where a judgment has been vacated or annulled the execution falls with it.[54]

7. Violation of Agreement.[55] An execution issued in violation of an agreement that it should not be issued on the judgment therein within a specified time or upon the non-compliance with certain conditions is voidable only and not absolutely void;[56] hence it is the duty of the officer to comply with the same, and not presume to determine the conflicting rights of the parties thereto.[57] So too it may issue at once upon a non-compliance with conditions on which its suspension depends;[58] but where it is issued in violation of an agreement it will be set aside at the instance of defendant.[59] But it is held that an execution issued in violation of an agreement is not such a fraud upon creditors as will justify or require the setting aside of the same upon their application.[60]

Nature of liability.— It has been held that where a creditor agrees to indulge his debtor for a limited time, and before the expiration of such time levies an execution, that defendant's remedy should be an action upon the agreement for damages, and not an action of trespass, as an agreement to indulge the debtor for a stipulated time can hardly be said to operate as a release during that time, of the right to levy, and even if it does so operate, it does not vacate the process of the court, which still remains valid; hence a party thus suing out an execution violates only his contract and not the law of the land. Chambers v. McDowell, 4 Ga. 185.

or those acting for him, have the exclusive control of the issuance of an execution thereon and may order it at their option;[62] and the fact that plaintiff has, after rendition of the judgment, become an alien enemy does not alter the rule.[63] But by virtue of statutes in some jurisdictions the permission of the court may under certain circumstances and conditions be necessary;[64] and where it is sought to be issued by the personal representative of the deceased judgment plaintiff, the preliminary statutory requirements must be observed.[65]

B. Application of Rule — 1. To Assignees. Inasmuch as an execution must conform to the judgment the assignment of the latter will not, in the absence of a statute, effect a change in the parties to it, and the execution should be issued at the instance of the assignee in the name of the assignor,[66] although by virtue of statutory provisions[67] in some jurisdictions if the assignment was filed,[68] or is evidenced by the act of a notary,[69] or permission of the court is obtained,[70] the execution may issue in the name of the assignee.

2. To Joint Plaintiffs. If one of two joint plaintiffs dies execution should upon proper evidence of his death be issued in favor of the survivor,[71] unless the statute necessitates the substitution of his personal representatives;[72] and, where the damages adjudged in favor of several joint plaintiffs are several and distinct as to each of them, execution in favor of each may be issued on the judgment.[73]

IV. Persons Against Whom May Issue.[74]

As the execution must pursue and conform to the judgment, it follows that it can be issued only against those who are parties to it,[75] and it is not sufficient that the party against whom it is sought to be issued is interested in the judgment, or in fact the real party in interest in the suit, so long as he is not made a party to the action.[76] If the parties to the action have appeared in a representative capacity execution must issue against them in that capacity.[77] The rule that the execution must follow the judgment does not, however, necessitate the making of all the parties to a judgment parties to the execution; but, where the obligation devolves jointly and severally upon judgment debtors, execution may be issued against a part of them only.[78]

V. PROPERTY SUBJECT TO.[79]

A. Personal Property — 1. In General. The general rule of law is that all chattels, the property of the debtor not expressly exempt by law, may be taken in execution; that is to say, all kinds of personal property of the debtor which he can make the subject of a voluntary transfer of title can by execution be made the subject of an involuntary transfer.[80] In some jurisdictions the rule has been thus stated: In the absence of statute, the right to seize and sell is coextensive only with the power to take and deliver possession.[81]

2. Money[82] — a. In General. The rule is well established that money, whether in specie or bank-notes (which are treated civiliter as money), if in the possession of defendant, or capable of being identified as his property, may be taken in execution, provided no trespass is committed in making the levy.[83] So long as

4. Fructus Naturales. Perennial plants and their ungathered product, such as trees, bushes, grasses, peaches, timber, fruit, etc., are incident to the soil and not subject to execution.[90]

5. Crops Raised on Leased Lands — a. Interest of Landlord. Unless the landlord and tenant are tenants in common of the crop, the share of the former cannot be levied upon until the crop has been divided.[91]

b. Interest of Cropper. By analogy a cropper has no such interest in the crop as can be the subject of execution and sale while it remains en masse, for until a division is made the whole crop is the property of the landlord.[92]

c. Interest of Tenant. Where land is leased for a share of the crops to be

d. Interest of Tenants in Common. Where the owner and the occupant of land agree to jointly cultivate and divide the products of such land, such contract creates between them a tenancy in common in the products, and the share of either the owner or the occupant is liable to seizure and sale under execution against him.[94]

6. Wearing Apparel. Even in the absence of statute, it has been held that the necessary wearing apparel of a debtor is exempt from levy and sale on execution, upon the sound principle of justice and public policy.[95]

authorities all agree that if the statute authorizing such a levy and sale has not been substantially complied with, then the sale is unauthorized and void, and cannot, as in the case of a sale which is voidable merely on account of some irregularity, be ratified.[4]

11. Seat on Stock Exchange. It has been held in some jurisdictions that a seat on a stock exchange is not property in the eye of the law, and cannot be seized in execution for the debts of the members; that it is the mere creation of the board, and to be held and enjoyed with all the limitations and restrictions which the constitution of the board choose to put upon it.[5] However, the weight of authority and the better reasoning appear to support the proposition that such a seat or membership upon a stock exchange is property, and therefore subject to execution in the sense that it may be reached by appropriate proceedings and applied, as other property of a debtor, to the payment of his just debts.[6]

12. Fixtures — a. In General. The doctrine is now well established that fixtures, using the term as denoting those personal chattels which have been annexed to the land, and which may be afterward severed and removed by the party who has annexed them, or a personal representative, against the will of the owner of the freehold,[7] are subject to seizure and sale in execution.[8]

It was held that under the terms of this statute such an association was not a joint stock company.

Corporate franchises.—Cal. Civ. Code, § 388, provides that for the satisfaction of a judgment against a corporation authorized to receive tolls, its franchise and all its rights law, their provisions must be strictly complied with in order to make the levy and sale valid.[15]

14. Property Essential to Enjoyment of Franchise — a. General Rule. In some jurisdictions the tendency has been not to exempt corporate property from execution and sale, even where such property is essential to the enjoyment of the franchise owned by such corporation.[16] According to the great weight of authority, however, in the absence of statute, all property necessary for the full enjoyment and exercise of the franchise of a public or quasi-public corporation is exempt from levy and sale under execution, no matter how such property was acquired by the owner of the franchise.[17]

b. Upon Abandonment of Franchise. But conceding that the property of a and privileges may be levied on and sold under execution; and it has been held, under this section of the code, that the franchise of an individual to collect tolls cannot be levied on, there being no statutory provision therefor. Gregory v. Blanchard, 98 Cal. 311, 33 Pac. 199.

corporation necessary to the exercise of its franchise is exempt from execution, this exemption cannot continue after the use of the franchise has been abandoned.[18]

15. Property Fraudulently Conveyed. The remedy of a general creditor against an invalid preferential transfer by an insolvent debtor is by a creditor's bill, not by execution sale of the property as that of the debtor, and suit to vacate the transfer, as such relief would merely give plaintiff a like preference.[19]

16. Property Whose Sale Is Prohibited. The better rule seems to be that laws prohibiting the sale of spirituous liquors in a state, or local option laws prohibiting such sale in counties in which they are in force, do not, in the absence of special statutory provisions, apply to sales under judicial process; and that spirituous liquors are property, and as such under the protection of the law, and may be taken on mesne process or execution.[20]

B. Real Property[21]— 1. At Common Law — a. Early Rule. It was a well settled principle of the common law of England that the real estate of a debtor could not be taken in execution, at the suit of a citizen creditor, and sold for the satisfaction of the debt;[22] but for debt due the state or the king land could always be taken in execution.[23]

b. Modification of Rule. But the general rule at common law, in regard to the liability of real estate to be taken in execution as between party and party, was modified by a statute passed in the year 1285,[24] which made such estates liable

See, however, Nichols v. Valentine, 36 Me. 322, where it was held that if, in relation to any specific description of articles, the law prohibits such a sale, such articles cannot legally be attached on mesne process or seized on execution. The provisions of the Maine statute under which the above decision was rendered have, however, been held to apply only to such liquors as were liable to seizure and forfeiture, or intended for sale in violation of the provisions of the statute. 24. This statute, which gave the writ of elegit, enlarged the remedy of the creditor by declaring that when a debt was recovered or damages adjudged it should be in the election of plaintiff to have a fieri facias, or to have all the debtor's chattels and one half of his lands delivered to him until the debt was levied to a reasonable extent. Jones v. Jones, 1 Bland (Md.) 443, 18 Am. Dec. 327. See supra, II, E.

to be partially taken in execution.[25] This judicial lien was afterward mainly fortified and enlarged by a statute passed in the year 1732, applicable only to the then colonies of Great Britain, which subjected the whole of the debtor's real estate to be taken in execution and sold for the payment of his debts.[26]

2. Present Rule in United States — a. In General. Under the influence of the English statutes, and by force of statutes enacted in various states upon the subject, the general rule in this country now is that every interest of the debtor in land, whether legal or equitable, is bound by the lien of a judgment against the owner thereof, and is consequently subject to sale under execution issued upon such judgment.[27] However a levy by a sheriff of one state upon real property situated in another state,[28] or in the absence of statute, in another county,[29] is entirely void.

b. Land Held Under Unrecorded Deed[30] — (i) Interest of Grantor. In many jurisdictions statutes have been enacted declaring that every deed of real estate shall be void and of no effect against a judgment creditor, a bona fide purchaser, or a mortgagee, for a valuable consideration, not having notice thereof, unless such deed shall be recorded within a specified time after its delivery.[31] Such notice, however, may be constructive as well as actual.[32]

(II) In Personal Property. Likewise personal property leased for a term may be seized and sold under execution against the lessee, the purchaser at the sale acquiring the right to retain and use the property to the end of the term.[51] And the better rule seems to be that a clause in the lease prohibiting alienation will not prevent the sale of such lease under execution against the tenant, unless judgment was fraudulently confessed with a view to defeat such restriction.[52] However a lease pur autre vie is not subject to sale as personal property under an execution.[53]

9. Estate at Will or by Sufferance. The better rule seems to be that the interest which a tenant at will or by sufferance has in another's real estate is not such an interest in land as can be sold on execution.[54]

10. Where Will Directs Conversion of Property. Where a testator directs his executor to sell his land and divide the proceeds among designated legatees, it is well settled that such legatees have no estate in the land which can be the subject of execution.[55]

11. Joint or Several Property — a. Real Property. The general rule is that the property of tenants in common is liable to be levied upon under an execution against one of them, and the share of the execution debtor sold by the sheriff.[56]

Under Mo. Rev. St. (1889) § 6368, providing that no tenant, for a term not exceeding two years, shall assign or transfer his term or interest, or any part thereof, to another, without the written consent of the landlord, it was held that such interest was not subject to sale under execution against the tenant. Likewise under Sayles Civ. St. Tex. art. 3122, providing that persons leasing lands or tenements shall not rent or lease them during the term of the lease to another person without first obtaining the landlord's consent, it has been held that the lessee's interest is not subject to levy and sale under execution against the lessee in the absence of an agreement which permits assignment or subletting at the will of the lessee. b. Personal Property. Likewise the legal interest of a defendant in undivided chattels may be seized and sold under execution, since, in contemplation of law, his interest is perfectly distinct from that of his cotenant, and each has a several interest, although the occupation be joint.[57] And mere authority to sell property held jointly, given by one cotenant to another, does not exempt the share of the former from levy and sale under execution.[58]

12. Rent Reserved to Grantor. It has been held in one jurisdiction that a rent reserved to the grantor on a conveyance in fee of land cannot be taken on execution against the grantor, even where the conveyance contains a clause of distress and a provision for reëntry,[59] while in another jurisdiction it has been held that rent reserved to the grantor is such an interest as may be taken in execution against the grantor and sold.[60]

13. Interest of Licensee. Where a mere license is given by the owner of land to another, to enter thereon and plant and raise crops, or extract oil, gas, and minerals, or to operate mines, if so agreed upon, such crops, oil, gas, or minerals, as the case may be, will belong wholly to the licensee, and may be levied upon as his property.[61]

14. Interests in Public Lands — a. Prior to Issuance of Patent. A purchaser of land from the government, by the act of entry and payment of the purchase-money, acquires an inchoate legal title, and, prior to the issuance of the patent, the interests of such purchaser, for which he has received a certificate of final payment, may be levied upon and sold under execution, the patent, when issued, taking effect by relation, as of the day when the payment was made.[62] So the

c. Improvements on Public Lands. In some jurisdictions the improvements of settlers on public lands are regarded as property, the proper subject-matter of binding contracts between individuals, and hence subject to seizure and sale under execution.[65] In other jurisdictions, however, by force of statute, improvements on public lands on which debtors reside or which they cultivate are not subject to execution.[66]

D. Equitable Estates or Interests[67]—1. In General—a. Early Doctrine. The general rule was well established that in the absence of statute a debtor's equitable estate in real[68] or personal property, although accompanied with possession, could not be seized and sold under a fieri facias,[69] and it was necessary for the judgment creditor to go into equity to subject such interest.[70] But in some jurisdictions the rule was early adopted, without the aid of statute, that all real estate of the debtor, whether legal or equitable, was bound by a judgment against him, and might be taken in execution and sold for the satisfaction of the debt.[71]

b. Modern Doctrine. The trend of modern legislation is to subject every real interest of the debtor to the satisfaction of his debts, and now, by statutory enactment in most of the states, every equitable interest in real[72] or personal property is subject to levy and sale under execution against a judgment debtor.[73]

2. Deed of Trust — a. Interest of Grantor. The general rule is that after the execution of a deed of trust, the grantor has no such interest in the trust property as is the subject of sale under execution at law;[74] but it has been held in some jurisdictions that, if the deed of trust leaves an interest in the trust property in the grantor, such interest may be sold on execution against him.[75]

b. Interest of Trustee or Possessor of Naked Legal Title. It is not every legal interest that is made liable to sale under an execution. It is essential that the debtor have a beneficial interest in the property.[76] Therefore a trust estate is not subject to sale under an execution issued against a trustee, he having no beneficial interest in such estate.[77] The better doctrine, however, seems to be that where there is a conveyance to trustees, one of whom is to take a beneficial

Equitable title with right of possession.— A person having an equitable title to. with right of possession of, land which really belongs to, and is held in trust for, another, interest in the property, he takes a legal estate to the extent of such interest, which may be seized and sold under execution.[78]

c. Interest of Cestui Que Trust — (i) General Rule. The generally accepted doctrine in the United States, in construing statutes based upon 29 Car. II, is that in order to subject the equitable estate of a cestui que trust to execution at law, the trust must be clear and simple, and for the benefit of the debtor alone, and that equitable interests held jointly with another person are not subject to sale under execution.[79] The tenth section of the English statute of frauds, making trust estates liable to execution for debts of the cestui que trust,[80] did not extend to the provinces, and in some of the states it has never been adopted.[81]

No. 5,098, 5 Sawy. 266, that the interest of persons to whom land was conveyed as trustees of an unincorporated association will pass on execution sale under a judgment for a debt of the association, recovered in an action against all the members, including such trustees.

Trust not appearing on face of deed.— Where a deed of bargain and sale of real estate was made for the purpose of having the grantee convey same to the wife of the grantor, but contained no trust on its face, it was held that such deed vested such an ostensible title in the grantee as might be subjected by his judgment creditors as against a reconveyance to the wife of the original grantor, which was not recorded within six months from its date. (II) Where Cestui Que Trust Has Whole Beneficial Interest. In some jurisdictions, by force of statute, where the cestui que trust has the whole beneficial interest in the property, his estate and interest therein are subject to the levy of an execution, without resort to the remedies afforded by a court of equity.[82] And in other jurisdictions this rule is applied where the cestui que trust is in possession of the property.[83]

E. Mortgaged Property — 1. Interest of Mortgagor — a. Rule at Common Law. Upon the principle of the common law that no property but that in which the debtor has a legal title is liable to be taken under execution against him, an equity of redemption is not liable to sale under execution against the mortgagor, since a mortgage, at common law, operated as a conveyance of the legal title and left in the mortgagor, whether he continued in possession or not, a mere equity.[88]

This doctrine is still adhered to in some of the United States, at least as to chattel mortgages.[89] However, the mortgagor's interest in the mortgaged property is subject to execution after the debt has been discharged in full, even before satisfaction of the mortgage is executed, if he then has the whole beneficial interest and the mortgagee the naked legal title.[90]

b. Rule in United States — (i) Personal Property. Now, however, in a majority of the states, either by force of statute or by the adoption of the equitable view of mortgages, the doctrine is well established that a mortgage of property is not a common-law conveyance on condition, but a mere security for the mortgage debt, and that, as long as the possessory right of a mortgagor of chattels remains, his interest in the mortgaged property is subject to sale under execution against him.[91] In some jurisdictions, however, the rule is laid down that after default, when the mortgagee or the trustee in a deed of trust has the right to take based on the theory that after default there is no such possessory right or interest left in the mortgagor as is capable of being seized and sold under execution against him.[93] And where this doctrine obtains the rule is adhered to, even where the mortgagor is allowed to remain in possession after default,[94] for in the eye of the law he is in possession merely by sufferance and as the bailee of the mortgagee.[95] The courts in some jurisdictions have carried this doctrine to the extent of holding that even before condition broken, where the mortgagor has not the right of possession for a definite period, his interest is an equity of redemption merely, which is not the subject of levy and sale upon execution, his possession being permissive merely and not a matter of right.[96]

likewise subject to sale by the mortgagee upon an execution obtained upon a debt not secured by the mortgage.[99]

2. INTEREST OF MORTGAGEE — a. In Personal Property — (I) BEFORE DEFAULT. The better doctrine seems to be that the interest of the mortgagee in personal property, where the possession remains with the mortgagor, and before condition broken, cannot be taken in execution as the property of the mortgagee.[1]

(II) AFTER DEFAULT. But it has been held in some jurisdictions that personal property pledged by way of mortgage may, after condition broken, be levied on under an execution against the mortgagee, even where the property remains in the hands of the mortgagor.[2] In other jurisdictions, however, it is held that a mortgagee's interest in personal property, after breach of condition, and before foreclosure, is not subject to execution, even where the property is in his possession.[3]

b. In Real Property. According to the weight of authority, the estate of the mortgagee in real property, before foreclosure, is not the subject of sale under execution against him, even after default.[4]

Rule in Tennessee.— It was held in Wilkins v. Johnson, (Ch. App. 1899) 54 S. W. 1001, that the levy of an execution on land subject to a mortgage is void on its face, as being a levy of an equitable interest in land, and all subsequent proceedings based on such a levy are a nullity.

Where, after default and foreclosure of the mortgage, the mortgagor is, by statute, given the right of redemption within a specified time, on payment to the purchaser of the purchase-money, interest, and lawful charges, it has been held that this is a mere personal right of the debtor — a right to repurchase the land and be restored to the estate he had at the time of the sale — and that it is not the subject of levy and sale under execution at law. 3. Prout v. Root, 116 Mass. 410. F. Property Conveyed to Secure Payment of Indebtedness — 1. Interest of Grantor — a. At Common Law. At common law the interest of a grantor in a deed of trust to secure a debt was not subject to sale under execution against him;[5] and in many jurisdictions, following the common-law rule, it was formerly held that the interest of a grantor in a deed of trust is not analogous to the interest of a mortgagor, and is not the subject of lien or execution at law.[6]

b. Present Rule in United States. Now, however, in a majority of the states, where a debtor conveys property by deed of trust to secure the payment of his indebtedness, and in the deed of trust gives the trustee power to sell the property thereby conveyed in the event of his default in the payment of the indebtedness, such conveyance is regarded as having substantially the same effect

Possessory interest.— It was held in Hawkins v. May, 12 Ala. 673, that the possessory interest of the grantor, which may be sold under execution against the will of the grantee, is a certain ascertained possession for a definite period, and not a permissive possession which may be terminated at the pleasure of the grantee whenever he considers it necessary for his security, and which is in fact terminated by the interposition of a claim. See also O'Neal v. Wilson, 21 Ala. 288.

Where conveyance was absolute.— It was held in Massachusetts that on a writ of entry, the demandant claiming under an execution sale, and the tenant under a previous conveyance absolute in form, but really only made as a security for advances, that the demandant could not recover, under Pub. St. c. 171, § 1, declaring what lands may be taken on execution, unless the land is held "on a trust for him [the debtor] whereby he is entitled to a present conveyance," the conveyance under which the tenant claimed not being fraudulent as to creditors. Where stock of a corporation was assigned to the corporation itself as collateral security for a loan, it was held that the title of the assignor to the stock was so far divested that it could not be sold under execution against him. Early's Appeal, 89 Pa. St. 411.

as mortgages with powers of sale, and the interest or estate in the grantor is held to be subject to execution at law.[7]

2. INTEREST OF GRANTEE. In those jurisdictions in which the interest of the grantor in property conveyed by deed of trust is subject to execution, by parity of reasoning, the grantee in such deed of trust has no interest in the property so conveyed as is subject to sale under execution against him.[8]

G. Property Pledged or Pawned — 1. INTEREST OF PLEDGOR — a. At Common Law. At common law property pawned or pledged was not liable to be taken in execution in an action against the pawner;[9] at least, not unless the bailment was terminated by payment of the debt, or by some other extinguishment of the pawnee's title.[10] Where the pledgee elects to waive his lien upon the property pledged, there seems to be no reason why he may not levy upon such property under a writ against the pledgor.[11]

b. In the United States. In most of the states the doctrine is well recognized that the interest of the pledgor in the property pledged is liable to seizure and sale on execution, subject to the interest of the pledgee therein.[12]

2. Interest of Pledgee. The question as to whether the interest of a pledgee in the property pledged is subject to levy and sale under execution has received very little consideration by the courts, but it seems to have been formerly thought that such property was not subject to execution at all for the debt of the pawnee.[13] Now, however, it is held in some jurisdictions that since the pawnee has a beneficial interest accompanied by a rightful possession, such interest is subject to levy and sale under execution against him.[14]

H. Interests Under Contracts in General — 1. Contracts For Services. The rule seems to be well recognized that all contracts for the hire of labor, skill, or industry, without any distinction, whether they can be as well performed by any other as by the obligor, unless there be some special agreement to the contrary, are considered as personal on the part of the obligor, and such rights, which are merely personal, are not liable to sale under execution.[15]

2. Contracts of Sale in General — a. Interest of Vendor — (i) General Rule. The rule has been laid down in many jurisdictions that the vendor of real property who has sold land and put his vendee in possession, but has not executed a conveyance, has an interest in the land which may be sold under execution.[16] However, the equitable lien held by a vendor of real estate, after absolute conveyance thereof, is not subject to levy and sale on execution.[17] In the case of personal property the rule has been laid down that unless the transaction is in fraud or delay of creditors, a contract of sale of such property leaves no leviable interest in the vendor prior to neglect or refusal of the vendee to complete the contract by payment of the agreed purchase-money.[18]

(ii) Where Bond For Title Has Been Given. Where, however, the vendor has given bond for title and received part of the purchase-money, the better doctrine seems to be that he has no such interest in the land as can be sold under execution.[19] In several jurisdictions it is held that, so long as the whole

b. Interest of Vendee — (i) In General. In the absence of statute the interest of a vendee in a contract for the sale of land, being merely an equitable interest, cannot be sold under execution against the vendee.[21]

(ii) Where Partial Payment Has Been Made. In the United States the weight of authority is that the interest of a vendee in property under a contract of sale, where the purchase-money has not been paid, or only a part of it paid, is not subject to sale under execution against him.[22] In some jurisdictions, however, under statutes subjecting equitable interests to sale under execution at law, it has been held that where the vendee has paid part of the purchase-money his interest in the property is leviable under execution against him;[23] and in a few jurisdictions, where the statutes subjecting equities are broader in their terms, the interest of the vendee is held to be leviable, even where he has not paid any part of the purchase-money.[24]

(III) Where Bond For Title Has Been Given. In some jurisdictions, where bond for title has been given to the vendee, but the purchase-money has not been paid in full, the rule is laid down that the vendee or his assignee has not such an equitable estate in the property as is liable to be sold under execution against him.[25] In other jurisdictions, however, under the interpretation by the courts of the statutes relating to executions, the vendee of real estate holding a bond for title is in equity considered as the real owner, whether he has paid the purchase-money or actually taken possession or not, and his interest therein is subject to sale under execution against him, subject only to the legal and equitable rights of the vendor for the unpaid purchase-money.[26]

2. Property Held Adversely — a. Personal Property. Where personal property is held adversely to its owner, his interest therein being a mere chose in action, in the absence of statute it is not liable to sale under execution against him.[39]

b. Real Property — (I) Early Doctrine. At common law, and by construction of the earlier statutes in many of the states, the debtor's interest in land in adverse possession was not subject to sale under execution against him.[40]

(II) Modern Doctrine. The doctrine seems now to be well settled that the interest of a debtor in real property is subject to sale under execution against him, even where such property is held by a third party in adverse possession, the doctrine of adverse possession not applying to judicial sales.[41]

3. Property Consigned For Sale — a. General Rule. The general rule is that personal property consigned to a dealer, factor, or other agent, with authority from the owner to sell the same, the agent being required to account for the proceeds when sold, is not subject to sale under execution on a judgment obtained against such agent.[42] The mere fact that a party is to have an interest in the profits of certain property after it has been sold does not give him a leviable interest in the property itself.[43] In some jurisdictions the rule is thus laid down: Where the contract does not contemplate an absolute acquisition of title by the bailee or agent, or his becoming absolutely responsible for the purchase-price, the transaction cannot be regarded as an absolute sale, or as creating an interest in his favor, so as to render the property liable to execution against him.[44]

b. Where Transaction Amounts to Absolute Sale. Where, however, the instrument consigning the goods to the agent or bailee creates an apparent absolute liability on his part for the purchase-price of the goods, the transaction will be regarded in law as an unconditional and absolute sale, even though the instrument declares it to be otherwise, and expressly stipulates that title shall remain in the consignor until payment of the purchase-price; and such property in the hands of the consignee is leviable under execution against him.[45]

Va. Code, § 2877, provides that, if any person transact business in his own name without any addition as "factor" or "agent," all the property and stock used in such business shall, as to his creditors, be liable for the debts of such person; and section 2465, as amended by Acts (1899–1900), p. 89, provides for the recording of muniments of title valid between the parties, but void as to purchasers without notice. 4. PROPERTY ALIENATED PRIOR TO JUDGMENT. Where property has been purchased by an authentic act, and passes into the possession of the vendee, it is not leviable under execution against the vendor, and if the creditors desire to attack the transaction on the ground of fraud the proper mode of procedure is by a creditors' bill.[46]

5. PROPERTY PURCHASED AT JUDICIAL SALE — a. Interest of Purchaser. The purchaser of property at a judicial sale has not, previous to the making and delivery to him of the sheriff's or master commissioner's deed, such an interest in the property as can be levied on and sold under execution against him;[47] and where the judgment debtor is allowed by statute a stipulated time within which to redeem his property sold under execution, the purchaser at the execution sale acquires no leviable interest in the property prior to the expiration of the time allowed for redemption.[48]

b. Interest of Debtor Where Property Is Left in His Possession. The retention of possession by the execution debtor of property sold at a sheriff sale is not an index of fraud, because the sale is not the act of such debtor, but of the law; and property thus purchased and left in the possession of the former owner is not liable to be taken under another execution against such debtor.[49]

one other than its owner, merely as bailee, without claim of title, the better doctrine seems to be that it is liable to execution for the debt of the bailor.[50]

b. Interest of Bailee — (i) General Rule. In the case of a bailee, where the general property and right of possession are in the bailor, the bailee having only an equitable interest therein, the better doctrine is that the interest of the bailee in such property is not subject to execution against him.[51]

(ii) Property Loaned. In many jurisdictions statutes have been enacted, aimed at pretended loans of personal property, providing that uninterrupted possession by the borrower for a specified period, without demand, prosecuted by due course of law, by the lender, will render such property subject to sale on execution against the borrower, unless such alleged loan, reservation, or limitation of use or property is declared by will or deed, properly proved and recorded.[52] Where, however, the owner of a chattel loans it to another, it is not liable to an execution against the borrower in favor of a creditor whose debt was made before the loan was made, and where the credit could not have been given upon the faith of the supposed ownership.[53]

7. Materials of Contractor. The doctrine seems to be well settled that where a contractor engages to construct a house, vessel, bridge, or other thing, and to furnish the materials therefor, that no property vests in the person for whom it is to be built, until finished and delivered, even where certain portions of the contract price are agreed to be paid, and are paid to the contractor, at specific stages of the work; but such materials, prior to completion of the contracts and delivery, are subject to seizure and sale under execution against the contractor.[54]

8. Church Property. Churches and church property, although intended for the public benefit, are a part of the public interest that is committed exclusively to private enterprise, and therefore a church and the lot upon which it is erected are private property and subject to levy and sale in the same manner as other private

9. Property of Municipal Corporations or Counties[57] — a. General Rule. Where property of a municipal or other public corporation is sought to be subjected to execution to satisfy judgments recovered against such corporation, the question as to whether such property is leviable or not is to be determined by the usage and purposes for which it is held. Thus, property held for public uses, such as public buildings, streets, squares, parks, promenades, wharves, landing-places, fire-engines, hose and hose carriages, engine-houses, public markets, hospitals, cemeteries, and generally everything held for governmental purposes, is not subject to levy and sale under execution against such corporation.[58] Likewise it has been held that taxes due to a municipal corporation or county cannot be seized under execution by a creditor of such corporation.[59] Where a municipal corporation or county owns private property, not useful or used for corporate purposes, the general rule is that such property may be seized and sold under execution against the corporation, precisely as similar property of individuals is seized and sold.[60]

b. Property Not Dedicated to Corporate Purposes. And property acquired by a corporation beyond what is actually dedicated to corporate purposes, and is essential to the proper exercise of its franchise, is leviable under execution against it.[61]

10. Property of Citizen on Execution Against Public Corporation — a. General Rule. In the United States, according to the weight of authority, where there is no provision in the act of incorporation which authorizes a resort to the individual property of the inhabitants of an incorporated town, county, or parish, for the purpose of discharging judgment against the corporation, then the private property of the inhabitants of such town, county, or parish is not liable on execution against the corporation.[62]

Insurance money from property destroyed. — It has been held in Alabama that where property of a municipal corporation, exempt from execution under the code on account of its useful municipal purposes, is destroyed, insurance thereon, taken out by the corporation, stands in the place of the property destroyed, to be used for its restoration, and is therefore also exempt. Ellis v. Pratt City, 111 Ala. 629, 20 So. 649, 56 Am. St. Rep. 76, 33 L. R. A. 264.

Public use temporarily abandoned. — It was held, in Murphree v. Mobile, 104 Ala. 532, 16 So. 544, that city property used for municipal purposes does not lose its exemption from levy and sale by a temporary use for private purposes.

Public use abandoned. — It was held in McEnery v. Pargoud, 10 La. Ann. 497, where land was acquired by a parish under an unconditional grant from the United States in 1823, the fact that part of it had been used as a cemetery between 1794 and 1800, although not so consecrated, and that such use had then been abandoned, was not sufficient to set aside an execution sale of the land on a judgment against the parish, on the ground that the land was not alienable on account of being a public place.

K. Property In Custodia Legis[64] — 1. General Rule. The doctrine is well settled that property in the hands of sheriffs, constables, clerks of court, receivers, executors and administrators, appraisers, assignees in bankruptcy, etc., is regarded as being in custodia legis, and cannot be reached by execution, in the absence of statutory authority; the only difficulty experienced in the application of the doctrine being in determining the question as to when property is so within the custody of the law as to be included in the purview of the rule.[65]

Whisky in bonded warehouse.— Whisky deposited in a bonded warehouse of the United States, and held therein for internal revenue tax due the government, is virtually in the possession of the United States, and the sheriff has no right to enter such warehouse and seize in execution such whisky as the property of defendant under a writ of fieri facias in his hands, even though he may offer to pay the tax. 2. Property Held Under Prior Writs — a. General Rule. By the great weight of authority, property once levied on remains in the custody of the law, and is not liable to be taken by another execution or process in the hands of a different officer, and especially by an officer acting under another jurisdiction.[66] But now in some jurisdictions, by statutory enactments, property of a debtor in the custody of the law under prior writs is subject to levy under subsequent writs of execution, thus giving creditors priority, according to their diligence, in any interest the creditor may have in the property after the prior execution has been satisfied.[67]

b. Where Original Judgment Is Void. Since it is only where property is lawfully taken by virtue of legal process that it can be considered as being in the custody of the law, and not otherwise,[68] property of an execution defendant levied upon and seized by an officer under execution issued on a void judgment

b. Liability For Debts of Debtor Under Junior Execution. The doctrine seems to be, by analogy of reasoning, that money remaining in the hands of the court or court officer, after satisfaction of the execution, by virtue of which it was realized, is not subject to seizure under a junior execution against the execution debtor.[73] In several jurisdictions, however, it has been held that money produced by the sale of the property of a defendant in execution, remaining in the hands of the officer after satisfying such execution, is subject to seizure under a subsequent execution against the debtor.[74]

c. Liability For Debts of Officer. It is a self-evident proposition that money in the hands of or deposited by an officer in his official capacity, realized by virtue of an execution placed in his hands, is not liable to seizure and sale under an execution against him personally.[75]

L. Estate of Decedent[76]— 1. Interest of Intestate. Since the regular grant of administration eo instanti invests the personal representative with the assets of the deceased, they are not subject to seizure and sale under an execution issued on a judgment thereafter rendered against the intestate.[77]

2. Interest of Devisee or Legatee[78]— a. General Rule. Since each devisee or legatee has a legal estate which may be alienated or devised by him, such estate is likewise subject to execution against him, in the same manner as other beneficial sion of the attorney, and cannot be taken in execution for plaintiff's debts.

legal estates.[79] The doctrine has been laid down in several states, notably Georgia and Louisiana, that when devisees are entitled to several parcels of land, a specific parcel cannot, before partition, be sold on execution against a single devisee, upon the theory that such a sale would be an attempt to interfere with the rights of other devisees to partition.[80]

b. Where Legacy Has Not Vested. A legacy does not vest in the legatee until the executor has assented to it, or at least until it is seen with reasonable certainty that he will not need the legacy to enable him to pay claim of a higher rank than the claim of the legatee, and until property has vested in the legatee it is not subject to be seized and sold for his debts.[81]

3. Interest of Heirs or Distributees — a. General Rule. An intestate's lands descend to his heirs, and may be sold on execution against them, subject to the rights of the administrator in case the lands are needed to pay debts.[82]

b. Where Interest Has Not Been Ascertained. In some jurisdictions it has been held that the undivided interest of an heir in a particular piece of property belonging to the succession of his ancestor is subject to seizure and sale under execution.[83] However, the better doctrine seems to be that an execution sale of a judgment debtor's interest in the estate of a deceased person, before such interest is ascertained, is void.[84]

VI. Issuance, Form, and Requisites.[85]

A. Jurisdiction and Authority to Issue — 1. Of Courts — a. In General. A court competent to pronounce judgment is competent to issue execution.[86] Except where special provision is made for issuance in another way, execution must issue from the court which rendered the judgment.[87]

b. Abolished Court and Court Succeeding to Jurisdiction. Where a court is abolished by an act of the legislature and its jurisdiction transferred to another court, an execution issued out of the court so abolished is absolutely void,[88] and a sale thereunder is therefore a nullity. A court which succeeds to the jurisdiction of the abolished court usually has jurisdiction to issue execution on the judgment rendered by the abolished court.[89]

2. Authority and Duty of Clerk — a. In General. The clerk, not the judge, is the proper officer to issue execution.[90]

c. Necessity of a Judgment. The clerk of court has no authority to issue execution, except upon a judgment,[92] which remains unsatisfied.[93]

d. Subject to Plaintiff's Directions.[94] In the absence of a statutory regulation,[95] the clerk has no authority to issue execution without the direction of plaintiff or his attorney.[96] A party is not bound by proceeding under an execution issued without his authority or that of his attorney.[97] In the absence of proof it will be presumed that the clerk issued an execution under the direction of the person who had control of it.[98]

e. Issuance Pending Appeal on Taxation of Costs. If a party against whom judgment has been recovered appeals from the clerk's taxation of costs, the clerk has no right to issue execution until the question has been settled by a judge according to usage.[99]

B. To What County May Issue — 1. In the First Instance — a. County of the Venue. By the common law the execution could not in the first instance go beyond the territorial jurisdiction of the particular court which rendered the judgment.[5]

b. County of Defendant's Residence. In jurisdictions where executions

Bill in equity.— Where a clerk of a district court refuses to issue execution on a judgment rendered in such court on the ground that it had been attached on the suit of another, a bill in equity will not lie to release the attachment to compel the clerk to issue execution, since the party's remedy is by an action on the official bond of the clerk. Miller v. Sanderson, 10 Cal. 489.

Where oral application is made to the clerk for an alias execution he is liable on his official bond for refusing to issue such writ, where he does not demand a written application and proof of interest and authority. Steele v. Thompson, 62 Ala. 323. See Clerks of Courts, 7 Cyc. 230.

The limits of the jurisdiction of the general court, being the same as those of the state, execution may be issued in the first instance to any county (Com. v. Caldwell, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 8); and so at one time the jurisdiction of the court of exchequer in the state of New York was a general one territorially and its process ran throughout the state (People v. Van Eps, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 387). Compare Raub v. Heath, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 575.

In Kentucky, under the statute of 1796, a fieri facias could not lawfully issue to any other county than that of the venue, unless the debtor removed himself or his effects or resided out of the county of the venue. Mason v. Rogers, 4 Litt. 375. See also Chiles v. Hoy, 6 T. B. Mon. 46.

Issuance to the locus of the debtor's property.— Where Code Pr. art. 642*d*, provides that a fieri facias may be directed to the parish where the property of defendant is situated, the writ may issue to such place, although out of the jurisdiction of the court. Lafon v. Smith, 3 La. 473, holding that article 746 of the code did not affect article 642, for the two articles were intended to furnish two distinct remedies. In Brush v. Lee, 36 N. Y. 49, 51, 1 Transcr. App. (N. Y.) 66, 3 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 204, 34 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 283, the court said that the judgment creditor had the right to collect his judgment where the debtor had property. Under a statute in Kentucky which provided that if defendant removes himself or his effects or shall reside out of the jurisdiction of the court where the judgment was given, execution might issue at the request of plaintiff to the sheriff of any county within the state where defendant or debtor whose goods or lands might be found, it was held that execution might issue to any county where defendant had property if he did not live in the county within the jurisdiction of the court. Sanders v. Norton, 4 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 464.

Creditor may enforce a judgment lien on personal property in another county. Where property of the judgment debtor, after the lien on the property has attached by the recording of the judgment in the county of the venue, is sold and removed by the vendee to another county, the lien follows the property into any county whither it may go and the judgment creditor may make this lien effective by issuing the writ into the other county whither the vendee has taken the property. Street v. Duncan, 117 Ala. 571, 23 So. 523.

Where two executions are issued simultaneously on the same judgment, but directed to different counties, and action was taken on only one of them, an injunction staying a levy under both executions was erroneous, since the party had a right to proceed under Mistake as to residence.— Where plaintiff under a mistaken belief as to the residence of defendant issued execution to the wrong county, he was not prevented, upon discovery of his mistake, from withdrawing the execution from the sheriff of that county and procuring issuance of a writ to the proper county. Parrish v. Saunders, 3 Humphr. (Tenn.) 431.

Where the county in which the judgment debtor resides is attached to another for judicial purposes, an execution required by statute to be issued to the sheriff of the county where the debtor resides as preliminary to supplementary proceedings may properly be issued to the sheriff of the county to which the one in which the debtor resides is attached. Beebe v. Fridley, 16 Minn. 518.

8. Lesher v. Gehr, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 330, 1 L. ed. 161; Palmet v. Price, 2 Salk. 589. The first fieri facias needed not be filed before the testatum writ issued. It was held, if produced, returned. 4 Comyns Dig. 137 H. In fact writs of fieri facias issued to the county of the venue were returned of course by the attorneys themselves, so that this return was a mere matter of form; so much so that an affidavit by the sheriff of the county of the venue that he had never returned any fieri facias in the cause was not sufficient to upset a writ sent into another county. Palmet v. Price, supra. See also Com. v. Caldwell, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 8; McCormick v. Meason, 1 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 92. The irregularity of issuing a testatum writ without previous original fieri facias might be cured by the subsequent production of the original fieri facias (Denn v. Lecony, 1 N. J. L. 39; Brand v. Mears, 3 T. R. 388; Bond v. Jacob, Barnes Notes 200; Smith v. Phripp, Barnes Notes 209; Sweetapple v. Atterbury, Barnes Notes 211); or by the suing out of an original fieri facias into the proper county (Cowperthwaite v. Owen, 3 T. R. 657 [cited in note to Allen v. Allen, 2 W. Bl. 694]; Meyer v. Ring, 1 H. Bl. 541). In Burdus v. Satchwell, Barnes Notes 208, it was said that "in case of a Testat. Fi. fa. the Court will not go into a nice Enquiry when the Fi. fa. in the Original County to warrant the Testat. was sued out; it is sufficient if the first Fi. fa. returned be produced."

Where several executions are issued on the same judgment, in consecutive order, on the same day to different counties, and the first execution, which issued to the county of the venue is first levied, it will be held to be valid, although those subsequently issued are not, unless all were issued to delay other creditors of defendants in execution. Where a suit is instituted in one county and removed on defendant's application to another and plaintiff recovers judgment, there is no need of a return of nulla bona in the county where the judgment was rendered. Browning v. Loraw, 58 Md. 524.

If a defendant removes from the county where a judgment is rendered against him, under the statute, execution may issue from the court of such county to the sheriff of the county where defendant resides; and upon the return of nulla bona on a fieri facias issued in the county where judgment was rendered the clerk of the court of that county may issue execution to another county. judgment rendered in one county cannot issue to another county until it had issued in the county of the venue and been returned nulla bona. In some states, for certain purposes at least, the preliminary requisite is issuance to and return from the county of defendant's residence.[10] And in some jurisdictions it is necessary that there should be an issue to and a return of nulla bona from either the county where the judgment was rendered or the county of defendant's residence.[11] At common law a fieri facias issuing without a testatum to a county other than where the venue was laid could be set aside.[12] An execution issued in the first instance to another county is not void and therefore can prevent the judgment from becoming dormant;[13] and a sale under it may be valid;[14] and the title of the purchaser is not affected by the fact that defendant had ample property in the county where the judgment was obtained to satisfy it, when he had failed to point out the property when called upon.[15] It may be presumed by all innocent purchasers and by the sheriff that an execution sent beyond the county of the venue is legally sent;[16] but if the purchaser has notice of the irregularity, the sale may be avoided.[17] No one who has no interest in the property levied

Where a court has general jurisdiction a testatum clause is not necessary. It is required only where a court issues process to a county in which it has no general jurisdiction. Roads v. Symmes, 1 Ohio 281, 13 Am. Dec. 621.

Where the statute directs a copy of the docket entries to be sent with an execution issuing to another county, the fact that such a copy does not contain all the entries which ought to appear of record is no reason why the execution should be quashed, provided the copy shows that there was a subsisting judgment and that upon it the execution properly issued. It is not necessary to make a specific allegation upon the subject, for if the execution has issued to the wrong county it devolves upon defendant in such case to show it in his defense (Brown v. Bates, supra); and to constitute a valid defense defendant should show not only that he resided and had a place of business in some other county, but also that he had visible property there out of which the execution might have been satisfied if plaintiff had exercised due diligence to ascertain the fact (Cassidy v. Meacham, 3 Paige (N. In Maryland by the act of 1715, if a defendant in a judgment shall fly, remove, or absent himself out of the county in which the judgment is rendered, plaintiff may take a transcript of the record of the judgment, under seal, and lay it before the court of the county in which defendant may happen to be, to be entered upon the records of such county, upon which that court is authorized to award execution by capias ad satisfaciendum, fieri facias, or attachment. The act of June 16, 1836, gives power to issue execution on a judgment for the recovery of money to another county when the judgment debtor has no property, personal or real, in the county of the venue sufficient to satisfy the judgment; under this statute a testatum fieri facias can issue only on the original, not on the derivative, judgment, although the latter had been revived. a statutory provision exists and consequently in such jurisdictions execution may be issued from any county where a transcript of the judgment is filed.[22]

(III) Effect of Issuance to Another County Before Docketing Therein. Although an execution issued to a county before a judgment is docketed therein may be irregular,[23] yet an execution is valid which issues from the clerk's office before the docketing in the other county where it is not delivered to the sheriff until after such docketing.[24] It has even been held that the irregularity caused by issuing the execution and levying thereon several hours before the transcript of the judgment was filed was cured by the subsequent filing of the transcript.[25]

(IV) Form of Executions to Counties Where Judgment Is Docketed. In some jurisdictions an execution which does not show upon its face,[26] or does not recite,[27] that the transcript has been filed in the county to which it is issued is void.

C. Death of Parties After Judgment Rendered and Before Its Execution[28]—1. Of Sole Party Defendant or Plaintiff — a. In Illinois, when a judgment is a lien upon the land of defendant before his death, no execution can be issued thereon before the expiration of one year after defendant's death. Clingman v. Hopkie, 78 Ill. 152. The Georgia act of 1799 which restrains "suits or actions" against executors or administrators until the expiration of twelve months after the death of the decedent does not restrain the collection of judgments already obtained against the deceased in his lifetime by levy and sale of his goods and chattels under execution issued thereon. Form of writ — Proper recitals.— Although in case of the death of a judgment debtor before execution, the better practice is to recite in the execution the recovery of the judgment, the death of defendant, and notice to the administrator of the judgment, and to command the sheriff to levy the execution on the land owned by defendant at his death, yet an execution issued in the name of defendant is sufficient in substance. Wight v. Wallbaum, 39 Ill. 554. An execution on a judgment against B issued against C, "executor of the will of B deceased," should recite changed by statute, the statute should in every particular be strictly pursued in order to claim the rights conferred by it.[33]

(II) PLAINTIFF—(A) In General. In like manner at common law and by the early rule which usually obtained in this country a valid execution could not issue in favor of a deceased plaintiff without a revival of the judgment by scire facias.[34] An execution could not issue in favor of one not in esse,[35] for there was no party left who could make a motion for leave to issue execution on the judgment.[36] An execution issued after the death of plaintiff without a revival of the judgment could be quashed on motion.[37] The authorities differ as to whether an execution so issued is void[38] or merely voidable.[39] This rule has been changed by statute in many states with the result that the executor or administrator may have execution on the original judgment without any revival.[40] Where this change has been made execution must be sued out in the mode prescribed by the statute.[41]

(B) After Judgment Assigned. Where the judgment had been assigned before

Contra.— In New York, under Code Proc. § 428, the representatives could not have execution on motion, but had to resort to an action, a proceeding similar to the old proceeding by way of a scire facias quare executionem non (Jay v. Martine, 2 Duer 654; Wheeler v. Dakin, 12 How. Pr. 537); and such an action was not an action on the judgment within the prohibition of section 71 and might be brought without leave of court (Wheeler v. Dakin, supra. See also Cameron v. Young, 6 How. Pr. 372). This rule was subsequently changed so that the judgment could be revived by motion. Bellinger v. Ford, 21 Barb. 311. But see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1379, 1380, 1381, for the law at the present time.

By Minn. Gen. St. (1866) c. 66, § 13, an action is declared deemed to be pending until judgment therein is satisfied, and section 36 as amended by Laws (1876), c. 46, provides that in case of the death of a party the court may on motion allow the action to be continued by or against his representative. the death of plaintiff, it has been held that the assignee may issue execution without a proceeding to revive the judgment.[42]

b. After Execution in Sheriff's Hands — (I) Before Original Served. If defendant dies after the execution is awarded and before it is served, it may nevertheless by the common-law rule be served upon his goods in the hands of his executor or administrator;[43] but it has been held in this country that the sheriff cannot proceed unless the execution is both sued out and levied.[44] If plaintiff dies after execution awarded, the execution would not abate but the sheriff might nevertheless proceed.[45]

(II) After Service or Return of Original. It would seem to follow naturally from the above common-law rule[46] that the issuance of an alias or pluries would not be affected by the death of defendant after the original is in the hands of the sheriff; and so it has been considered in one case at least.[47] But in some states it is held that an alias execution cannot issue after the death of defendant without a revival of the judgment unless a lien has been acquired by former execution issued in the lifetime of defendant and properly continued since;[48] if, however, the continuance has not been properly maintained, the lien

In Alabama it is said that an alias execution cannot issue after the death of defendant without a reversal of the judgment except to continue a lien acquired by a former execution issued in the lifetime of defendant. Fryer v. Dennis, 3 Ala. 254.

Death of plaintiff. — A having recovered a judgment against B sued out a fieri facias and before the return of it he died. After his death, he having no representative, another fieri facias was sued out in his name. This fieri facias was set aside as having issued erroneously. Wingate v. Gibson, 5 N. C. 492. The rule was the same in New Jersey where scire facias was necessary before the passage of the amended Practice Act. Morgan v. Taylor, 38 N. J. L. 317.

48. Fryer v. Dennis, 3 Ala. 254. See Brown v. Newman, 66 Ala. 275, holding that the fact that the debtor became bankrupt a few days before the return of the original without levy and more than a year before his death did not affect this principle. See also Halsey v. Van Vliet, 27 Kan. 474. An alias and pluries writ issued after the death of defendant, where no intervening term had been allowed to lapse without renewal, is not void; and, if voidable, the irregularity cannot be taken advantage of by a stranger. Collingsworth v. Horn, 4 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 237, 24 Am. Dec. 753.

Originally in Alabama an alias or pluries fieri facias issued after the death of defendant would not authorize a levy on and a sale of land of which defendant died seized. Abercrombie v. Hall, 6 Ala. 657; Lucas v. Doe, 4 Ala. 679. See Erwin v. Dundas, 4 How. (U. S.) 58, 11 L. ed. 875. This rule was changed by the adoption of the code which removed all distinction between land and personal property in respect to a lien of an execution and the authority of sale conferred is lost and then scire facias is necessary to revive the judgment before any subsequent execution can issue.[49]

c. After and Before Teste of the Writ. If defendant dies after the teste of the writ and before the writ was sued out, execution could nevertheless be issued;[50] for by fiction of law the writ had relation back to its teste[51] and the relation went back to the first day of the term.[52] It was immaterial that the judgment was not signed until after the death of defendant.[53] The right to issue execution when defendant died after the teste of the writ existed on the theory that the goods of defendant were bound from the test — the common-law rule before it was changed by the statute of frauds.[54] If an execution bore teste subsequent to the death of defendant, it could be quashed on motion[55] and was generally held void.[56]

In Texas the act of Feb. 5, 1840, declared that the judgment should operate upon all property of defendant situated in the county of the venue if execution is issued within twelve months after rendition and due diligence is used to collect the same. rendition thereof and before issuance of execution the execution may issue in favor of[57] or against[58] the survivors without revival by scire facias.[59] But this was not the rule where the real estate of the survivor was to be subjected.[60] The creditor may of course revive against the decedent's representative to increase his security.[61]

b. D. Original or First Execution — 1. On Transcript of Justice of the Peace, or of a Lower Court or on Appeal Therefrom — a. Upon a Transcript Without Appeal — (i) County in Which Transcript Should Be Filed. The circuit court, or a similar designated court of record, of the county in which the judgment was rendered is the proper court to which a justice's judgment and proceedings should be certified for procuring execution against real estate.[67]

(ii) Prerequisites to Filing Transcript — (a) Issuance of Process.[68] In some states the issuance of an execution by the justice of the peace, and a return by the officer of nulla bona, are prerequisites to the filing of a transcript in the court of record.[69]

(b) Return of Officer[70] — (1) Sufficiency of. The rule that in special statutory proceedings it must appear on the record that everything was done which the statute requires is applicable where the sufficiency of the return of the officer before the filing of the transcript is in question.[71]

(2) Premature Return. Although by statute an execution issued by a justice of the peace is made returnable within thirty days, the return of the execution unsatisfied on the same day that it was issued nevertheless authorizes the filing of a transcript of the judgment and return in the court of record.[72]

(iii) Time of Filing Transcript. The filing of the transcript in the court of record before the expiration of the period of time during which execution can issue in a justice's court[73] and the certifying of the transcript to the wrong term of court have been held to render invalid an execution issued on such transcript.[74]

Execution issued before compliance with requirement.— Although the statute requires that an execution shall be issued by the justice and returned nulla bona before an execution can be issued on the transcript, yet an attachment execution which has been issued on the transcript is not void, although no certificate of the justice's execution and return has been filed in the prothonotary's office prior thereto. In such cases the court will give leave to file such certificate nunc pro tunc. Guerin v. Guest, 3 Pa. L. J. Rep. 111, 4 Pa. L. J. 471.

Presumption.— After the lapse of seventeen years from the acknowledgment of a sheriff's deed, it will be presumed that the certificate of the justice as to the required preliminary proceedings was produced to the prothonotary before he issued the fieri facias on the transcript, although such certificate is neither on file nor noted on the docket nor proved to have ever been in existence. Laughlin v. Bunting, 1 Am. L. J. (Pa.) 271.

It is necessary that the transcript be filed within the period of limitation for the justice's judgment.[75]

(IV) Requisites of Transcript—(A) In General. A transcript must be of a judgment properly rendered;[76] but, where a transcript of the proceedings under which the judgment is revived before a justice of the peace is filed in the court of record, a transcript of the original proceedings is not necessary.[77] If the transcript contains all that is required by the statute it is sufficient.[78]

(B) Copy of Judgment and Execution. A certified copy of the judgment with the return need not appear in the record, and it may not be necessary that a copy of the execution issued from and returned to the lower court should be embodied in the transcript.[79]

(C) Variance Between Judgment and Transcript. The justice's transcript should correspond with the frame of the judgment by him rendered;[80] but so long as there is no change in meaning, a variance in form is of no consequence.[81]

(V) Effect of Transcript. When the transcript is filed, the usual rule is that it stands upon the same footing, as to execution, as if it were a judgment recovered in the court of record.[82] In most jurisdictions the justice of the peace,[83]

79. Provided the issuance of the execution by the justice and the nulla bona return appear in the transcript. Burke v. Miller, 46 Mo. 258. At least this is so where the copy of the procedendo under which the execution issued by the justice was filed with the transcript, and the transcript itself contained the judgment rendered by the justice, a recital of the appeal to the circuit court, the return of the case by procedendo, the issue of execution and the return thereof nulla bona, and the certificate of the justice that it was a correct transcript of the judgment as it stood on his docket. It was held further in this case that a certificate of the justice that the execution filed with the transcript was a part of the proceedings in the suit was not enough to show a non-compliance with the statute. Umfleet v. Kelly, 58 Ill. 499. In Waddell v. Williams, 50 Mo. 216, it was held that it was not essential to the validity of the execution in the circuit court that the transcript embrace a copy of the execution by the justice and the nulla bona return of the constable where such facts were recited in the sheriff's deed of land sold under an execution issued from the circuit court [criticizing Carr v. Youse, 39 Mo. 346, 90 Am. Dec. 470, which holds that the fact that an execution had been issued upon a judgment rendered by a justice and returned nulla bona must appear by a certified copy of the execution and of the constable's return thereto; that the certificate of a justice of the peace to that effect was not admissible in evidence as a too rigid interpretation of the law]. In Murray v. Lafton, 15 Mo. 621, it was intimated by the court that it would be well if a transcript of the justice's execution and return thereon were filed and recorded with the transcript of the judgment, for when so made it would furnish record evidence not to be collaterally contradicted. In Ruby v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., 39 Mo. 480, and in Franse v. Owens, 25 Mo. 329, the certificate of a justice which did not contain a copy of the execution and return was held sufficient.

Effect of replevying judgment.— The right of a judgment creditor under Ky. Code, § 723, which provides for the filing of transcript of a judgment in the usual manner and that upon the filing of the transcript the judgment creditor is entitled to the same remedies as if the judgment had been rendered in the circuit court, is not affected by the judgment defendant's giving bond and replevying the judgment rendered by the lower court, for the replevying bond will be treated as a judgment of the lower court although the replevy of a judgment extinguishes it. or lower court,[84] as the case may be, can conduct no further proceedings on the judgment after it has been transcribed, but the court of record thenceforth has the control of all proceedings, including execution,[85]

(VI) ISSUANCE ON THE TRANSCRIPT—(A) Prerequisites—(1) FILING OF TRANSCRIPT. The transcript must be filed, but need not be recorded before execution may issue thereon.[86]

(2) ISSUANCE OF EXECUTION BY JUSTICE AND RETURN[87]—(a) IN GENERAL. The general rule is that execution cannot issue out of the court of record on the transcript unless an execution has previously issued from the justice of the peace and been returned nulla bona.[88] In some states this should appear by the certificate

In Pennsylvania, the act of March 20, 1810, provided for the filing of transcript for the purposes of lien and the issue of execution out of the court of record against land. For many years the inferior courts of record of the state were at variance as to whether an execution could issue against personal property, as well as real, after the transcript was filed. See Bradley v. Ward, 12 Phila. 255, 6 Wkly. Notes Cas. 366; Wheeler, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Moore, 6 Wkly. Notes Cas. 270, and in Conrad v. Brandt, 14 Phila. 159, 8 Wkly. Notes Cas. 439 (the court refusing to follow Techner v. Karpeles, 13 Phila. 169, stating that it had little to add to the opinion in the case of Wheeler, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Moore, supra); Ginder v. Reynolds, 2 Chest. Co. Rep. 466, 2 Del. Co. 247 (at least without a scire facias having been first issued), all holding that upon the filing of the transcript in the court of record it became a judgment of that court only so far as the enforcement thereof against real property; that as against personal property the magistrates still had control of the execution. See also Lyter v. Dunkel, 2 Pearson 283. But in Bair v. Bowman, 2 Chest. Co. Rep. 462; Techner v. Karpeles, 13 Phila. 169; Weir v. Lawrence, 9 Wkly. Notes Cas. 207; and Hamilton v. Dawson, 2 Pa. L. J. Rep. 357, 4 Pa. L. J. 141, it was held that the transcript became a judgment of the court of record (that is, of the common pleas) for all purposes. In Hitchcock v. Long, 2 Watts & S. 169, it was held that the transcript while in the court of common pleas was such a judgment of that court as an attachment might issue upon under provisions of the act of June 16, 1836. And in Reichenbauch v. Arnold, 2 Pa. L. J. Rep. 527, 4 Pa. L. J. 325; and Brechemin v. McDowell, 1 Phila. 368, it was held that statutes which gave the remedy by attachment in cases before a justice would not prevent similar proceedings upon the transcript while in the common pleas. In Brannan v. Kelley, 8 Serg. & R. 479, it was held that a scire facias to revive a judgment of the justice of the peace, a transcript of which has been filed in the court of common pleas under this statute, must be issued by the court in which the transcript was filed and not by the justice before whom the judgment was obtained. The supreme court does not appear to have made any other decision relative to the subject. In 1885 the legislature passed an act making transcripts of judgments before justices of the peace, magistrates, etc., of the same effect as judgments in court, thus setting at rest this much vexed question. See note to Ginder v. Reynolds, 2 Chest Co. Rep. 466.

Bond.—The requirement by statute of the filing of a bond before the issue by the clerk of an execution upon a transcript of a justice's judgment filed in his office does not apply where personal service has been had or where defendant has entered an appearance in a suit before the justice. The provision is restricted to cases where defendant has been constructively summoned. Hawkins v. Wills, 49 Fed. 506, 1 C. C. A. 339 [following Bush v. Visant, 40 Ark. 124].

Presumption of filing bond.—See Rust v. Reives, 24 Ark. 359.

Alias.—Where an execution has been issued on a judgment of the justice of the peace within the period of limitation and returned unsatisfied, it is sufficient to warrant an alias on the transcript after the expiration of the period of limitation. Moyer v. Sekenger, 16 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 242. See Jackson v. Page, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 585, holding that the county clerk was authorized to renew an execution issued by him on a transcript or to issue a new execution. See infra, VI, E.

87. See supra, VI, D, 1, a, (II), (A).

88. Massey v. Gardenhire, 12 Ark. 638; Wineland v. Coonce, 5 Mo. 296, 32 Am. Dec. 194; Clevenstine v. Law, 3 Pa. L. J. Rep. 417, 5 Pa. L. J. 459; Guerin v. Guest, 3 Pa. L. J. Rep. 111, 4 Pa. L. J. 471. But the return nulla bona by the constable on the justice's execution is sufficient to authorize the issuance of the execution on the transcript (Klein v. Wielandy, 15 Mo. App. 581); and where this appears in the transcript, a certified copy of the judgment with the reof the justice.[89] A failure to comply with the requirement of the statute as to the issuance and return nulla bona in the lower court is not a mere irregularity, but renders an execution issued upon a transcript under such conditions invalid.[90]

(b) Validity of Execution. If an execution has issued and been returned nulla bona, it must have been a valid one or it will be of no effect in fulfilling the preliminary requirement.[91]

(c) Time of Issuance. The execution must have issued out of the justice's court within the period of limitations.[92]

(d) Officer's Return. The requirements of the statute as to the return must be strictly followed by the officer making it.[93] The fact that the execution was returned before the expiration of the time set by statute for return may[94] or may turn thereon need not appear in the record to authorize the issuance on the transcript (Burke v. Miller, 46 Mo. 258); and where the transcript shows that an execution has been issued by the justice, it is sufficient evidence of the fact without the production of the original execution (Crowley v. Wallace, 12 Mo. 143). See Illingsworth v. Miltenberger, 11 Mo. 80, enforcement of mechanic's lien.

Defendant non-resident of county.— Where the statute forbids execution to issue on the transcript where defendant is a resident of a county unless an execution has issued from the justice and been returned nulla bona, an execution without such prior return is valid if defendant is a non-resident at the time of issuance (Huhn v. Lang, 122 Mo. 600, 27 S. W. 345; Jordan v. Surghnor, 107 Mo. 520, 17 S. W. 1009), even where he may have been a resident when the judgment was rendered and when it was revived (Tracy v. Whitsett, 51 Mo. App. 149).

The proviso of the Pennsylvania act of June 24, 1885, was a substantial reënactment of the proviso of the act of March 20, 1810, except that the later act substituted the words "any execution" in place of the words "fieri facias" in the clause which provided that no fieri facias should be issued unless the justice of the peace had first issued an execution and there had been a return thereon of no goods sufficient to satisfy the demand. Hoffman v. Hinnershitz, 4 Pa. Co. St. 207.

Under Minn. Sp. Laws (1889), c. 34, § 15, providing that, on filing in the district court the transcript of a judgment of the municipal court, the judgment passes "under the exclusive control of the district court, and is carried into execution by its process as if rendered in said district court," the previous issuance out of the justice's court and the return nulla bona is not necessary. Upon a scire facias quare executio non upon a transcript filed in the common pleas and judgment upon the scire facias, an execution may issue without the usual preliminary issuance by the justice and return nulla bona. Green v. Leyner, 3 Watts (Pa.) 381, 382.

89. Mishler v. Wise, 9 Lanc. Bar (Pa.) 150. See also Frankem v. Trimble, 5 Pa. St. 520. But if it appear on the face of the transcript (Drexel v. Man, 6 Watts & S. (Pa.) 343), or by certificate of the justice which is not a part of the transcript (Bauer v. Miller, 16 Mo. App. 252), or by either (Hoffman v. Hinnershitz, 4 Pa. Co. Ct. 207), that the required issuance from the justice's court and return nulla bona has been made; it is a sufficient fulfilment of the condition precedent to issuing execution on the transcript.

Where an exemplification of the transcript filed in the court of record is filed in another county, it is not necessary that the return of "no goods" by a constable in the county where the justice's transcript was originally filed should appear by certificate in order that execution may be issued in the other county. not[95] render the execution invalid; this depends upon the law of the jurisdiction in which the execution was issued.

(3) Preliminary Affidavit. The required affidavit, preliminary to obtaining execution upon the transcript, that the judgment in the justice's court was unpaid, need not negative payment of the judgment to the clerk.[96]

(B) Time of Issuance. The effect of a transcript being the same as a judgment of the court,[97] the time when an execution upon the transcript may issue is governed by the statute of limitations as to judgments rendered in such court.[98]

(C) Authority For or Control of Issuance.[99] After the transcript has been filed, a judgment creditor or his attorney, not the clerk, has the right to direct the issue of execution thereon.[1]

(VII) Requisites and Form of Writ—(A) Recitals—(1) Of Judgment. The fact that the execution recites the judgment as of the court of record, and not as a judgment of a justice of the peace, is not objectionable.[2]

(2) Of Parties. The insertion of a name in the execution which did not appear among the parties in the judgment need not render the execution invalid.[3]

(3) Of Prior Issuance and Return Nulla Bona. The execution need not recite the previous issuance by the justice of the peace and the return thereon nulla bona.[4]

(B) Command to Levy. The execution on the transcript is not objectionable for lacking a clause commanding a levy on the goods and chattels of defendant.[5]

In Conn v. Doyle, 2 Ohio 318, it was held that where execution had been stayed by writ of error and supersedeas and the judgment was affirmed, the execution plaintiff might sue out a new writ of venditioni in the lower court and sell, for the procedendo from the appellate court merely removed the prohibition interposed by the supersedeas; that he could not sell under the procedendo as a process issuing from the appellate court.

Certiorari.— Where the justice's judgment has been affirmed on certiorari, execution can issue from the appellate court at once without a remittitur (Robbins v. Whitman, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 410, 1 L. ed. 199); and where the proceedings in certiorari were dismissed for want of prosecution, defendant in certiorari was held entitled to take out execution in the supreme court, the court holding that "it is precisely the same thing as non-prossing a writ of error" (Anonymous, 3 N. J. L. 753). In Walker v. Gibbs, 2 Dall. (Pa.) 211, 1 Yeates (Pa.) 255, 1 L. ed. 352, it was held that where a judgment was obtained in a suit for foreign attachment in the common pleas and execution issued and the proceedings were removed to the supreme court by certiorari, a second execution might be properly issued out of the supreme court.

Limitation of jurisdiction of appellate court to that of justice's court.— On an appeal by the landlord from proceedings before a justice of the peace to ascertain a set-off against land, the appellate court cannot enter judgment or issue an execution to enforce its decision; for the justice's duty being confined to ascertaining and determining whether the claimant had a claim against the landlord which should be set off against the rent, the appellate court's (the court of common pleas) jurisdiction was likewise limited. (B) Signing, Entering, and Docketing Judgment and Filing Judgment-Roll. By the old English practice, an execution might issue as soon as the judgment was signed; docketing the judgment was not a prerequisite to the issuing of execution thereon.[11] In this country it appears to be the general rule, although generally it may not be the proper practice, that an execution may be issued on a judgment which has not been docketed or entered; at least an execution so issued is not void.[12] Whether the judgment may be entered or execution issued before the judgment-roll is made up and filed is apparently a question of practice for each jurisdiction.[13] The irregularity of issuing execution before entry of judgment or before the filing of the judgment-roll may generally be cured by subsequent entry of the judgment[14] or filing of the roll.[15] of a year and a day, but he was obliged to bring an original action in which he could offer a judgment as evidence of the debt.[19] But in real actions, where land was recovered, demandant after the year might take out scire facias to revive his judgment.[20] To make the form of the procedure more uniform the Statute of Westminster II (13 Edw. I) gave scire facias to plaintiff in a personal action to revive his judgment where he had omitted to sue execution within the year after judgment was obtained.[21] The reason for forbidding the issuance without a scire facias after the lapse of a year is frequently said to be that a presumption is raised that the judgment was satisfied.[22] But this is not strictly correct. It would be more accurate to say that the lapse of time afforded some presumption or some probability of satisfaction.[23] The rule requiring scire facias to the debtor, if the original execution did not issue for a year after the rendition of the judgment, was generally adopted by the states of this country either as a part of their common law or by statutory enactment without any distinction as to the personal or real actions such as existed before the Statute of Westminster.[24]

(B) Under Modern Statutory Regulations. This period of a year and a day has been quite generally lengthened in this country. The exact time in which the original execution can be issued must be ascertained from the statute of each jurisdiction.[25]

23. For the legal presumption is that the judgment is not satisfied until the statute of limitation has run upon it where an action of debt is brought upon it or on a scire facias to revive it. But as a year is ordinarily sufficient to enable a creditor to enforce payment of a judgment by his execution and his own interest will usually induce him to exact a speedy satisfaction, a delay beyond that time makes it necessary for the creditor to call the execution debtor before the court to show cause against his, the creditor's, issuing his execution. A new point of departure.— A levy of an execution on a judgment founded on notes given for the price of land of which plaintiff in execution retained title, before plaintiff has executed and recorded a deed of the land to defendant in execution, although invalid under Ga. Code, § 3654, is an assertion of plaintiff's right to collect the execution; hence the entry thereof by the sheriff constitutes a new point, from which Code, § 2914, limiting the time for enforcing judgments, will commence to run. Rogers v. Smith, 98 Ga. 788, 790, 25 S. E. 753 [citing Neal v. Brockhan, 87 Ga. 130, 13 S. E. 283; Stanford v. Connery, 84 Ga. 731, 11 S. E. 507; Long v. Wight, 82 Ga. 431, 9 S. day of the entry of judgment is sometimes included in,[33] and sometimes excluded, from,[34] the reckoning. Sundays are usually excluded.[35]

(2) Period in Which Execution Is Stayed. The time that a stay of execution is in force should not be reckoned as a part of the period of time within which plaintiff may issue his execution without scire facias or motion.[36] This principle holds when the stay is due to a mere indulgence given by the creditor to the debtor.[37]

(3) Period in Which Execution Is Superseded by Writ of Error. The time within which a judgment is superseded by a writ of error cannot be considered as a part of the time within which plaintiff may issue his execution as of course.[38]

(4) Period in Which Execution Is Enjoined. At common law the time execution was prevented from issuing by injunction could not be excluded from the period of time plaintiff was entitled to issue his execution;[39] and this rule has sometimes obtained in this country;[40] but the modern rule is that the injunction suspends the running of the statute.[41]

(5) Period of Action on Judgment. The time of the pending of an action on the judgment must be excluded.[42]

(6) Period of Debtor's Absence From Jurisdiction. Under a statute which provides that the time of the absence of the debtor from the state shall not be included in reckoning limitations, the time the debtor is absent from the jurisdiction must be excluded from the reckoning of the running of the ten years of the life of a judgment.[43]

(v) Effect of Premature or Delayed Issuance.[44] A premature issuance of an execution is an irregularity which may render the execution voidable but not void.[45] An execution which issued without scire facias after the lapse of a year and a day was at common law only voidable not void.[46]

(Va.) 579, 582. The courts were unanimous that this rule of "reviving a judgment of above a year old, by scire facias, before suing out execution upon it," which was intended to prevent a surprise upon defendant, ought not to be taken advantage of by a defendant, who was so far from being surprised by plaintiff's delay, that he himself had been trying all manner of methods whereby he might delay plaintiff; and therefore they not only discharged the rule but discharged it with costs too. b. Form[47] and Requisites[48] — (I) In General. An execution, to be valid, should disclose on its face the authority to issue it.[49] An exact coincidence with a form of execution prescribed by statute is not necessary; it is sufficient if it is substantially followed.[50] The fact that an original execution is expressed to be an alias does not vary the legal effect of the writ.[51] Unnecessary recitals of proceedings in the action previous to final judgment do not affect the regularity of the execution.[52]

(II) Special Execution Distinguished From General. A special execution differs from the general writ only in this: that it points out and specifies the property to be sold and pursues and follows the judgment in respect of the disposition of the proceeds arising from the sale.[53] A judgment creditor has no

In Kentucky it was held in an early case that an execution issued after the lapse of a year was void as to plaintiff, although the court said that such a defect did not avoid the writ as to the sheriff who might justify under it. Possession delivered under such execution by the attornment of the tenant was therefore held of no avail. Hoskins v. Helm, 4 Litt. 309, 311, 14 Am. Dec. 133 [citing Tidd Pr. 936].

Under the modern practice in North Carolina if the vitality of a judgment has not been preserved by successive issues of execution at intervals prescribed by law for that purpose, an execution sued out without a renewing order made by the clerk is irregular but not void. Language of writ.— Under La. Code Pr. art. 626, providing that the order of execution must be in French and English when the French language is the maternal tongue of the execution debtor, the enforcement of an execution in English only will be enjoined when the maternal tongue of the execution debtor is French, although the petition in the action was in the English language only, and was not objected to by defendant. Dubroca v. Favrot, 3 La. Ann. 272. Where there is no evidence on record that French is the mother tongue of defendant, no objection can be made that the writ is not in both languages. Lafon v. Smith, 3 La. 473. To have execution in French, defendant's maternal tongue, is a personal privilege which he may waive. His creditors cannot complain. Le Blanc v. Dubroca, 6 La. right to a special execution except in the cases expressly allowed by statute.[54] Where the special execution is the proper one to be issued, it has been held that the general execution could not issue.[55]

(III) Conformity to Judgment— (A) In General. An execution should conform to the judgment on which it is issued.[56] A variance between the judgment and the execution need not, however, vitiate the latter;[57] it may not render it void, but only voidable.[58] However, the variance between the execution and

54 Brown v. Duncan, 132 Ill. 413, 23 N. E. 1126, 22 Am. St. Rep. 545; Mayer v. Farmers' Bank, 44 Iowa 212. In Fraser v. Thrift, 50 Cal. 476, it was held that an execution upon a money judgment could not be issued against any particular piece of land. And in Bower v. Holladay, 18 Oreg. 491, 22 Pac. 553, it was held that it was not proper to include in the execution the command to the sheriff to satisfy the judgment out of property held by the receiver of the court. The writ must be issued against the property of the judgment debtor generally. But in Barnes v. Hyatt, 87 N. C. 315, 317, the court said that "the designation of particular land only gives a more limited scope and authority to the process than the law permits, and cannot be prejudicial to any right of the judgment debtor."

55. Annis v. Gilmore, 47 Me. 152. See State v. Vogel, 14 Mo. App. 187. Park v. Long, 7 Iowa 434.

Form of writ in attachment cases.— Where there is no personal judgment, but only a judgment of condemnation upon attachment proceedings, a special writ is proper. See Adriance v. Heiskell, 8 App. Cas. (D. C.) 240. Thus, where a judgment was recovered in an action to enforce a lien for labor in cutting logs, aided by attachment of the logs, an execution issued in common form against the goods, chattels, or lands of the debtor and, for want thereof, upon his body cannot give authority to seize the logs attached, for it contains no allusion to the logs which were the subject of the controversy and which therefore could not have been legally seized by virtue of such a writ. Annis v. Gilmore, 47 Me. 152. But an execution against the goods generally of defendant, although ground for error, is not void where the sale was of the attached goods alone (Boothe v. Estes, 16 Ark. 104), but where the judgment is general, a special writ is usually held improper (Philips v. Stewart, 69 Mo. 149; Kritzer v. Smith, 21 Mo. 296; Adriance v. Heiskell, supra, where there were two judgments, one personal and the other a judgment of condemnation of property attached). But in Corriell v. Doolittle, 2 Greene (Iowa) 385, it was held that, although the judgment be general a special execution pursuant to the writ of attachment might issue on the ground that the "authority for a general execution necessarily included a warrant for one of a more limited or special character. In Kerr v. Swallow, 33 Ill. 379, a suit was begun by attachment. Defendants were served not personally but by publication. They subsequently appeared and defended. It was held that a special execution on the judgment was properly issued for the sale of the attached property, although after the appearance and plea the suit was in personam and the judgment against defendants was properly in personam and the award of execution was general, for the property attached was not released by defendants' appearance. Where a general judgment was rendered in attachment, where there was service by publication only, and the court had jurisdiction of the res, but not of the person of defendant, although the judgment was general in form, it was held to be the duty of the clerk to look to the nature of the proceedings and the jurisdiction of the court, and to issue only that special execution which the law and the character of the service warrants. the judgment on which it is issued may be so material as to render the execution fatally defective.[59]

(B) Statement of Amount. The rule that the execution should follow the judgment applies to the statement of the amount due.[60] But where the judgment appears from the whole record to be not without authority, and it is clear that the execution is really issued on the particular judgment in question, the general rule is that a variance in the amounts recited in the judgment and in the execution does not necessarily render the execution void, where such variance is caused by mistake.[61] The validity of the execution should be tested by the intent with which it was issued; if issued with fraudulent intent, of course it would be void;[62] and an execution for a less amount[63] or even an execution for a greater

If, however, but one sale is made to satisfy the sum actually due, and the execution has been issued for a sum greatly in excess of that sum, the error can only be remedied by setting aside and declaring void the entire proceeding under the execution." An omission in a bill of costs of twenty-five cents for recording the confession of judgment does not render the execution void. Perry v. Whipple, 38 Vt. 278 [distinguishing Wilson v. Fleming, 16 Vt. 649, 42 Am. Dec. 531].

Failure to itemize a bill of costs, as the statute requires, is not fatal. The statute is merely directory. Meadows v. Earles, 12 Lea (Tenn.) 299. But where the code provides that on every execution the clerk must state the several items composing the bill of costs and that without such copy of the bill of costs the execution is illegal, an execution which states the aggregate of the witness' fees without the names of the witness and the fees allowed in each, or without itemizing the several fees of the clerk or sheriff, is void. Maxwell v. Pounds, 116 Ala. 551, 23 So. 730. And where a pluries execution is issued after the return of two other executions unsatisfied, and the clerk's and sheriff's fees of the two prior executions are stated in gross, and not itemized, the execution is void and will not support a lien. Marks v. Wood, 133 Ala. 533, 31 So. 978. But under the same section of the code an execution issued out of a circuit court upon a cause appealed from a justice of the peace is not vitiated by the fact that the justice's fees are set forth only by a statement of their gross amount, for there is no law requiring any officer of the circuit court to keep an itemized account of costs accruing in cases appealed from a justice's court. Griffin v. Dauphin, 133 Ala. 543, 31 So. 849.

Failure to set out the bill of costs in words is not fatal, and it has been held that an omission of the word "hundred" after the word "five" and before the word "thirty-four" may be supplied from the figures in the indorsement. Warder v. Millard, 8 Lea (Tenn.) 581. Although an execution does not have indorsed thereon the costs in words at length, as required by N. C. (D) Several Judgments Against Same Debtor and Different Sureties. A plaintiff who holds several judgments against a debtor, and different sureties or indorsers, may in the absence of any agreement to the contrary issue execution upon any one of the judgments.[75]

(IV) Recital of Judgment—(A) In General. A description or recital of the judgment is inserted in the execution, not only that the officer may know what he is to enforce, but also that by inspection the writ may be connected with the authority for issuing it.[76] Properly, this part of the execution should have the precision of the judgment itself;[77] but by the general rule the failure to recite the judgment accurately does not render the writ void[78] so long as it can be clearly and unmistakably identified with the judgment purported to be recited, the process being merely irregular. Even total omission of the recital may not render the execution void.[79] An execution which recites the judgment as rendered in one court when it was rendered in another is not necessarily void.[80]

But where the judgment cannot be identified from the recital the writ is void.[81]

(B) Date of Rendition. By the strict rule that used to prevail, a misrecital as to the term in which a judgment was rendered made the writ void.[82] The modern rule is part and parcel of the general rule that if the judgment can be clearly identified mistakes in its recital will not vitiate the writ; that is, so long as the judgment may be identified a mistake[83] in the date of its rendition, or even an omission[84] of the date does not make the execution void, but such mistake or omission is a mere irregularity.[85]

(V) Recital and Description of Parties — (A) In General. The rule that the execution must follow the judgment applies with peculiar fitness to the recitals and description of the parties.[86] But if the parties as recited in the writ such an error would not vitiate the proceedings when the advertisement and deed contain sufficient data to ascertain which the court is under whose judgment the execution issued, particularly where the writ under which the sheriff must have acted and of which he must have preserved copy is in the record and where the objections are made by parties to the record who had notice of the proceedings and who did not object.

Failure to state the county where the judgment-roll was filed, as required by Cal. Code Civ. App. 357]), or recites the judgments as rendered a year earlier than they actually were (Davis v. Kline, 76 Mo. 310) or a day later in the same month and year (Stewart v. Severance, 43 Mo. 322, 97 Am. Dec. 392) or three days later (Alexander v. Miller, 18 Tex. 893, 70 Am. Dec. 314, where there was no such judgment rendered on the day recited and the day recited was the day of adjournment of the court, which accounted for the mistake), an execution which recited the judgment as rendered in 1809 instead of 1839 (Whitehall Bank v. Pettes, 13 Vt. 395, 37 Am. Dec. 600), or an execution which appears to have been issued before the judgment was rendered (Dailey v. State, 56 Miss. 475) is not void.

Misrecital of date of docketing.—An execution levied upon personal property exclusively is not void because it omits to state the true date of docketing the judgment in the county to which such execution runs. Mollison v. Eaton, 16 Minn. 426, 10 Am. Rep. 150.

84. Mooney v. Moriarty, 36 Ill. App. 175. In Drawdy v. Littlefield, 75 Ga. 215, it was held that a fieri facias need not name the term at which the judgment was rendered, where it declared that it was lately rendered in court and was for a stated amount of principal, a stated amount of interest, up to a certain date, and also interest, or together with interest, from that date.

85. In Franklin v. Merida, 50 Cal. 289, it was said that it was not even an irregularity that needed amendment.

can be plainly identified with those of the judgment, the general rule is that the writ is valid in spite of mistakes or omissions or other irregularities in this respect.[87]

(B) Omission of Name. While the omission of plaintiff's name from the recital of the parties may not vitiate the writ where plaintiff's identity can be fairly made out from the rest of the writ,[88] an execution on a money judgment which does not show against whose property it is sent is void.[89] Where there are several defendants the execution should be against all.[90] But the omission of the name of a defendant does not render the writ void so long as the writ can be clearly identified with the judgment.[91] On the same principle the addition of a

Which judgment to follow.— An execution which includes the costs of a proceeding to enjoin a former execution on the same judgment is regularly issued, although it is entitled as of the latter proceeding in which the parties plaintiff and defendant of the former proceeding are transposed. So an execution against A and B for a sum which it recites plaintiff has recovered against "him" is void on its face, as it is uncertain against whom the judgment was rendered. Farmers Nat. Bank v. Lancaster Nat. Bank, 4 Ky. L. Rep. 451.

(c) Mistake in Name. A mistake in the name of a party plaintiff[94] or defendant[95] need not avoid the writ where the identity of such party is not in doubt.[96] Surely the writ would not be void as against such of the parties whose names are correctly recited.[97] But it has been held that an execution which varies from the judgment in the names of both plaintiffs and defendants cannot be identified with the judgment and is void.[98]

The sheriff's deed recited that the execution was issued on a judgment against one Hemmings, commanding a levy on his property, and in the habendum recited that he would hold the same to the purchaser as fully as could the "said Hunnings, above mentioned." It was held, that as the deed was evidence of the execution, and consistent with the conclusion that it was issued either against Hemmings or Hunnings, it would be presumed that the execution followed the judgment, and was correctly issued. Execution against a partnership.— Where a judgment is against a firm and the individual members, naming them, and describing them as members of the firm, an execution thereon judgment in not describing defendants as makers and indorsers does not render the execution void.[3] Where a judgment is rendered in favor of a guardian, execution issuing in the name of the infant does not follow the judgment and may be quashed[4] or enjoined.[5] Where judgment is recovered in favor of a person for the use of another, an execution which issues in the name of the usee does not follow the judgment,[6] and under the old practice has been held void,[7] although it was not universally so held;[8] but under the reformed procedure this would not be the rule.[9]

(VI) Direction to Officer—(A) Necessity. The direction in the writ to the officer,[10] usually the sheriff,[11] is what gives him his authority.[12] The levy of a writ by an officer to whom it was not directed has been held void,[13] but the modern tendency seems to be to consider it only voidable.[14] But if the direction be defective in not designating the officer to execute the writ, the defect is not objectionable where what is lacking appears in another part of the writ[15] or from an accompanying instrument.[16] The fact that the direction does not exactly conform to the statutory requirement is not necessarily fatal.[17]

(B) When Regular Officer Disqualified. When the sheriff is a party, the writ should be directed to someone else, usually to the coroner;[18] or, if he be disqualified, to another officer.[19] In some jurisdictions the writ should contain a suggestion of the disqualification or non-existence of the officer whose prior right and duty it is to act;[20] but the omission to make this appear on the face of the writ is not fatal.[21]

(C) To Person Whose Term of Office Has Expired. It is a general rule that an officer who commences the execution of process must complete it, even though his term of office may have expired before such completion.[22] The reason of such

17. Thus, an execution directed "to any lawful officer to execute and return," instead of "to all and singular the sheriffs and constables of this state," such execution being in fact properly levied by a sheriff, and properly sold thereunder (Byars v. Curry, 75 Ga. 515); or an execution against a sheriff directed to all and singular the sheriffs and coroners of this state instead of to the coroner of the county of defendant sheriff and to all and singular the sheriffs of the state except defendant sheriff, it having appeared that defendant had ceased to be sheriff, and the fieri facias levied by his successor (Gillis v. Smith, 67 Ga. 446); or an execution issued by a legally authorized court martial, and directed to the sheriff of one district, instead of to "all and singular the sheriffs of the [said] State" (Carr v. Scott, Riley (S. C.) 193) is not void.

18. Pope v. Stout, 1 Stew. (Ala.) 375; Brown v. Barker, 10 Humphr. (Tenn.) 346. See supra, note 13. The writ may be directed to the coroner where such coroner was appointed by resolution of the legislature, although he failed to give bond before acting under such appointment. McBee v. Hoke, 2 Speers (S. C.) 138. But where a judgment is obtained against one as the executor of an estate after the resignation of the trust, the judgment has no effect upon a succeeding administrator and therefore an execution may lawfully issue to the sheriff, although he is the succeeding representative of the same estate. Wilson v. Auld, 8 Ala. 842. See also CORONERS, 9 Cyc. 981, 982.

Under Ga. Code, § 3633, requiring that an execution against the sheriff to be directed to the coroner of the county of the sheriff's residence and to all and singular the sheriffs of the state except the sheriff so disqualified, an execution directed to all and singular the sheriffs and coroners of the state was held sufficient, although not strictly complying with the statute, where it appeared that defendant had ceased to be sheriff and the fieri facias was levied by his successor. Gillis v. Smith, 67 Ga. 446.

Where a statute authorizes the coroner to perform all the duties of the sheriff if there is a vacancy in the shrievalty, it may be taken as fairly implied that when the vacancy shall have been filled the function of the coroner under such statute shall cease and that all unexecuted process is to be turned over to the sheriff. Therefore, when the vacancy is filled before the levy is made by the coroner, an execution (which contained the proper recitals as to vacancy) directed to the coroner may be executed by the sheriff. In Blance v. Mize, 72 Ga. 96, it was held that where the writ is directed to the coroner of the county of defendant sheriff's residence and to all and singular the sheriffs of the state, except the sheriff of such county, is sufficient to give the coroner authority to make the levy; but where the fieri facias is not thus directed and it does not appear on the face of the proceedings that the sheriff is disqualified to act, a levy under such writ is void. If, however, the coroner makes affidavit of the disqualification to the clerk and the clerk issues the process, the coroner can then make the levy. Compare Boaz v. Nail, 2 Metc. (Ky.) 245, construing Ky. a rule is apparent where chattels have been seized: the seizure vests the property in the sheriff.[23] Such a reason is wanting in case of a levy upon land;[24] in such a case, however, the venditioni might go to either the ex-sheriff or the acting sheriff.[25]

(VII) Name in Which Writ Should Run. It is a very general rule that a mistake as to the name in which a writ should run is merely clerical error and does not affect the validity of the writ.[26]

(VIII) Command to Levy and Make Amount. The fact that the command of the writ does not follow exactly the order of the court,[27] or the form of the statute,[28] or that in the command the amount of the sum to be made is left blank,[29] or that the command to dispose of the goods was omitted[30] does not render the writ void.

(IX) Directions as to Property to Be Taken — (A) In General. At common law the writ of fieri facias commanded the officer to make the money of the "goods and chattels" of defendant.[31] The modern form of the general fieri facias generally includes the real estate along with the goods and chattels.[32]

If an officer other than the sheriff serve the original process upon which judgment is rendered, the execution on the judgment must be directed to and served by the same officer (Boaz v. Nail, 2 Metc. (Ky.) 245), although the cause for directing the original process to him has ceased. Compare Tuggle v. Smith, 6 T. 26. Thus execution is not void merely because it does not run in the name of the state. See Bean v. Loftus, 48 Wis. 371, 4 N. W. 334. So the mistake of using "territory" for "state" is a mere irregularity. Carnahan v. Pell, 4 Colo. 190; State v. Cassidy, 4 S. D. 58, 54 N. W. 928.

The constitutional provision that all process shall issue in the name of the state is directory to the officers intrusted with the issuing of judicial process and regulates a mere matter of style; and its non-observance in the issuance of an execution does not affect the title of a purchaser at a sale made by the sheriff pursuant thereto. Directions as to kind of money to be levied. — Defendants executed a bond, with warrant of attorney, payable in specie, current gold and silver money of the United States, which recited that no law or laws then enacted or that might thereafter be enacted should operate to allow payments to be made in any manner other than designated. Judgment was entered on such bond and warrant, and fieri facias issued, in which the sheriff was required to levy the debt and interest "in specie, current gold and silver money." When the writ is to be executed against specific property,[33] the description should sufficiently identify it.[34]

(B) Priorities to Be Observed. In directing the officer as to the property to be seized, certain priorities should be observed. Thus the judgment should be satisfied as far as possible out of personalty before execution is sent against the realty.[35] Where property of debtor has been attached, it should be taken before any other of its own kind — that is, real or personal — which has not been attached,[36] but nevertheless even where both real and personal property belongthorized in law to be taken. Holmes v. Jordan, 163 Mass. 147, 39 N. E. 1005. But in Chicago v. Rock Island R. Co., 20 Ill. 286, it was held that a special collector of taxes was not authorized to levy on land under a warrant which directed him to levy only on the goods and chattels of defendant.

Early in Pennsylvania it was decided that under a general execution which describes the property to be taken as "the goods and chattels," etc., land might be taken. "Lands are to be considered chattels in Pennsylvania for the payment of debts." Andrews v. Fleming, 2 Dall. 93, 1 L. ed. 303.

Following a special statutory provision.— Where a statute provided for the issuance of execution against the real estate situated in a town, an execution running against the real estate of the inhabitants of the town is defective, for it should be directed against all the real estate of the town whether belonging to the inhabitants thereof or not. Unless such defect is amended no title can be conveyed. Caldwell v. Blake, 69 Me. 458 [following Hayford v. Everett, 68 Me. 505].

A description as "the undivided half-interest of B" in land held by A and B as tenants in common was sufficient, although it did not show what the interest of B was, as the presumption of law was that the shares of A and B were equal. Baker v. Shepherd, 37 Ga. 12.

A description which follows the judgment is not void for uncertainty, although the description may be loose. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Hill, 86 Ga. 500, 12 S. E. 877. See supra, VI, D, 2, b, (IV).

A tract of land need not be described as a cotton or sugar estate, although such is the case; at least a sale of the plantation will not be enjoined on that account. Arnous v. Lesassier, 12 La. 124.

Land of which defendant is seized at date of acknowledgment of recognizance.— An execution which was issued to satisfy a judgment on recognizance may command the taking of the lands of which defendant was seized when the recognizance was acknowledged, instead of when the judgment was rendered, since the recognizance creates a lien on the lands of the recognizor from the time of its acknowledgment. State v. Stout, 11 N. J. L. 362.

Where a statute provides for the satisfaction of an execution out of realty of debtor belonging to him when the judgment was docketed, a direction against realty belonging to the debtor on a named day which is several days after such docketing is a mere irregularity. Flanders v. Batten, 50 Hun (N. Y.) 542, 3 N. Y. Suppl. 728 [affirmed in 123 N. Y. 627, 25 N. E. 952]. See also Green v. Burnham, 3 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 110.

Execution issued after lien of judgment lapsed.— Under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 1252, which provides that after a judgment has ceased by lapse of time to be a lien on the debtor's land, an execution may nevertheless be issued by filing and recording a notice describing the judgment, the execution, and the property levied on, and that the judgment then becomes a charge on the title of the judgment debtor only from the time of recording notice; an execution which is intended to take advantage of the code provision must correctly state the interest which the creditor is entitled to have sold, and it will be set aside if it describes the interest as of the time when the judgment is rendered. Garczynski v. Russell, 75 Hun (N. Y.) 497, 27 N. Y. Suppl. 465.

35. But an execution which commands the sheriff "to levy upon the real estate, goods, and chattels" of defendants in the writ, instead of directing a resort to the personal property of such defendants first and then a levy on the realty, is informal, but not void. Wright v. Young, 6 Oreg. 87. See, however, Place v. Riley, 98 N. Y. 1, the decision of which is contra in principle. But N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 1369, as to the principle stated in the text, does not apply to a writ issued under section 1252 which relates to executions on judgments which have ceased to be liens on land and makes special provision therefor. ing to the execution debtor has been seized by the officer under an attachment the order of personal before real must still be observed.[37]

(x) Directions For Return. The return-day of the execution is generally required to be stated in it for the certainty and regularity of the proceedings, but mainly for the security of the rights of the party entitled to the fruits of it.[39] Therefore, to direct the return within a period less than [39] or greater than [40] the period of time fixed by statute ought not to and usually does not make the writ void but merely voidable. The rule would be the same where the return-day is entirely omitted,[41] or where the writ is made returnable out of term,[42] or on Sunday,[43]

37. An execution omitting the personal property unattached was held void, and a sale of land under it conveyed no title. Place v. Riley, 98 N. Y. 1. In Lucier v. Pierce, 60 N. H. 13, it was said that a sheriff is bound to levy under execution in his hands on the proceeds of the sale of goods attached under a writ, even without special directions.

Intervening term.— At common law it was not necessary that the writ of execution should be made returnable to the next term after that at which it is tested; if a term intervened it was not material. State v. Ferrell, 63 N. C. 640; Shirley v. Wright, 2 Ld. Raym. 775, 1 Salk. 273, 2 Salk. 700. In cases where the North Carolina statute applies, it is only in affirmance of the common law, as to the return of writs. State v. Ferrell, 63 N. C. 640. In Pennsylvania it has been held that the intervention of a term was unobjectionable. Thorpe v. Ellithorpe, 21 Pa. Co. Ct. 216. The intervention of a term is not an irregularity. Miner v. Walter, 8 Phila. (Pa.) 571. See Ingham v. Snyder, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 116. In Alabama, where a statute gave a court of equity power to issue execution in cases of accounting, such execution to be returnable on the first Monday in some month, the day to be specified in the writ, the execution is not void if the day specified is beyond the next term of court. Brevard v. Jones, 50 Ala. 221. But under Tex. Laws (1873), p. 209, requiring all executions to be made returnable on or before the first day of the next term of court, the clerk cannot, by an indorsement "returnable in sixty days," make the writ returnable after the expiration of the statutory limit, without rendering the writ and the sale under it void. Cain v. Woodward, 74 Tex. 549, 12 S. W. 319.

Meaning of "next term."— Where by statute executions are returnable to the next term of court, this means the next term after the money can be lawfully made. Chamberlin v. Beck, 68 Ga. 346.

What "term" includes.— The act of April 17, 1856, provided for an additional judge for the counties of Erie and Crawford, and that said judge should hold "courts" in the county of Crawford; "one term commencing on the third Monday in January to continue two weeks; one term commencing on the third Monday in May, to continue two weeks," etc. A fieri facias made returnable on the third Monday in May is returnable to the term required to be held by the additional judge. "They are as much terms of the court as those held by the other judge." Bunce v. Wightman, 29 Pa. St. 335.

41. Brown v. Thomas, 26 Miss. 335; Vandeusen v. Brower, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 50. Under N. Y. Code, § 290, requiring a sheriff to make return of an execution within sixty days from the time he received it, it is not necessary to state in the execution the time and place of the return. or even where it is made returnable within an impossible year.[44] If the statute fixes a time within which the officer who executes the writ must make return, a direction to make "due return" thereof is sufficient.[45] If the direction shows when the writ is returnable, the omission of proper words in the direction is immaterial.[46]

(XI) TESTE—(A) In General. The teste of the writ is the formal concluding clause beginning "witness," etc.[47] By the ancient English practice a fieri facias should be tested in term-time on a day after the judgment was or may be supposed to have been given.[48] If it were tested out of term it was void.[49] The proper practice was to have the writ tested in the name of the senior judge.[50]

(B) Date. By the old rule the writ should be tested as of the first day of the term next preceding the time when it was actually sued out.[51] The more modern

Reckoning of statutory period.—The code of Oregon is in force in Alaska and section 278 of the code provides that execution should be returnable "within sixty days after its receipt by the sheriff to the clerk's office from whence it issued." Under this section the period within which an execution issued to a United States marshal in Alaska was returnable must be reckoned from the date of its receipt by the marshal, not from the date of its issuance from the clerk's office. At common law the writ from the date of the teste became a lien on the personal property. This was done away with as unfair to bona fide purchasers by 29 Car. II, c. 3, § 16, by which no lien could arise on personal property until actually delivered to the sheriff. This statute has been generally followed in the United States. The legislature of the separate states in many instances have gone still farther by providing that the lien does not arise until the personal property is actually levied upon. Such is the law in Missouri. Burton v. Deleplain, 25 Mo. App. 376. See infra, VII, A, 2.

In New York the omission in the teste of the name of the judge as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 23, was held a mere irregularity, the substantial requirements of section 1366 being fulfilled. Douglass v. Haberstro, 88 N. Y. 611 [affirming 25 Hun 262, 62 How. Pr. 455]. See to the same effect Park v. Church, 5 How. Pr. 381, Code Rep. N. A writ of mesne process not bearing teste of the chief, first, or senior justice of the court, as required by N. H. Const. art. 87, is not void. The court distinguished between mesne and final process: "Because to a writ of final process, the defendant has no opportunity to object by plea or motion that it wants a seal or other constitutional requisite; whereas in the case of mesne process he may plead the defect, or make it the ground of a motion." This of course is on the theory that what can be amended is not void and vice versa. The court said further that it was possible that the case of Hutchins v. Edson, 1 N. H. 139 (which decided that a writ of final execution not under seal was void as not meeting requirements of constitution) ought not to be extended beyond the point expressly decided and that the court did not find it necessary to extend it to mesne process for the reason given above. Parsons v. Swett, 32 N. H. 87, 89, 64 Am. Dec. 352.

Teste in name of judge disqualified.—A fieri facias is not invalid because it bears teste in the name of the regular judge of the circuit who, being disqualified, did not preside when it was rendered. Drawdy v. Littlefield, 75 Ga. 215.

rule is to have the writ tested as of the day on which it is issued.[52] The fact that the year of Christ is omitted when already the year of the commonwealth is stated,[53] or that the execution is not dated at all,[54] or that a mistaken or impossible date was given,[55] does not render the execution void.

(XII) Signing of Writ by Officer or Party. At the present time[56] in this country, when the writ is sealed and otherwise regular, the absence of the clerk's signature, which is properly placed immediately after the attestation clause, may render the writ void[57] or merely irregular,[58] according to the jurisdiction. Where process bore the seal of court and regular teste and was signed by the deputy clerk instead of by the clerk, it has been held unobjectionable,[59] or at least not void.[60]

In New York by an early statute writs issued in term had to be tested as of some day in the same term; if issued in vacation, of some day in the preceding term. A mistake in the test, however, did not render the writ void. Gordon v. Valentine, 16 Johns. 145.

The signature of the clerk is an absolute necessity to the validity of the writ, and this is all the more so since the legislature dispensed with the other indicium of the writ's authenticity, that is the seal, when the writ was to be executed within the county in which it issued. Shepherd v. Lane, 13 N. C. 148.

A levy was properly set aside on motion where the execution was not subscribed by plaintiff or his attorney as required by Wis. Rev. In Arkansas the affixing of the name of plaintiff in execution to the writ, instead of the name of the clerk, is a mere irregularity. Jett v. Shinn, 47 Ark. 373, 1 S. W. 693.

In New York the clerk's signature is surplusage upon execution issued by plaintiff. Ryan v. Parr, 16 N. Y. Suppl. 829. Where an attorney residing out of the state subscribed an execution in an action in which he was attorney before he left the state, such subscription is an irregularity which does not render the execution void, but only voidable on motion to set it aside. (XIII) SEAL. At the present time[61] the effect of a want of a seal upon the writ depends upon the wording of the statute or constitutional provisions relative to the subject, or upon the construction given to such statutes or provisions; thus under the interpretation placed upon some statutes an execution without a seal is of no validity;[62] while under other statutes it has been held that an execution without a seal is not void but merely voidable.[63] If the lack of a seal does not render the writ void, it would follow that a sale under such writ would not be void;[64]

Wrong seal.— Where an execution is issued out of the court of common pleas, with the seal of the supreme court attached to it instead of the seal of the common pleas, the process is erroneous and is the same as though it had no seal, but such a writ is not void; it is merely voidable. but on the other hand it would be void, if under the statute the absence of a seal renders the writ void.[65]

(XIV) INDORSEMENTS. The fact that the indorsement of a levy is pasted on is not necessarily objectionable.[66] An execution issued after the death of plaintiff is not void because it is not indorsed that it was issued by the personal representative of deceased plaintiff.[67] Unauthorized indorsements do not affect the writ and may be treated as surplusage.[68] An indorsement of the description of the property attached and of the persons by whom it is replevied upon an ordinary fieri facias on a judgment in a suit commenced by attachment does not change the character of the writ.[69] Where the amount stated in the indorsement varies from that stated in the body of the writ the latter controls and the sheriff should heed it alone.[70] The fact that a statutory provision as to indorsements has not been followed may not render the writ void.[71] A statutory provision that unless plaintiff indorses on the execution that he will receive certain kinds of bank-notes in payment, defendant may give a replevin bond for the debt payable in two years, does not apply to executions on judgments of federal courts.[72] Proof that the indorsement of the time of the receipt of the writ is in the handwriting of the sheriff is admissible if the time when the writ was in his hands is a material fact in evidence.[73] An officer's indorsement which he is required by law to make as to a fact or act or event is generally held to be conclusive.[74]

Sup. 1892) 20 S. W. 48 [citing Freeman Ex. §§ 98, 200], were not indorsed does not render the writ or the sale under it (Wilson v. Swasey, supra) void. In Nebraska it has been held that such a provision as to indorsing the time of receipt of the writ is applicable only to executions issued out of a court of record on which a sale of land may be had and does not apply to an execution levied on a growing crop on a judgment rendered in a non-term case in the county court, but that such a judgment is controlled by section 1067 and following, under which no such requirement is made. Indorsement not to levy on equity of redemption.— 2 N. Y. Rev. St. p. 368, § 31, declares that it shall not be lawful for a sheriff to sell the equity of redemption of a mortgagor, his heirs or assigns, by virtue of an execution on a judgment; and section 32 provides that plaintiff's attorney shall make an indorsement on the execution issued on a deficiency judgment in foreclosure proceedings directing the sheriff not to levy on the mortgaged premises. c. Obtaining Issuance — (I) Preliminary Demand of Satisfaction From Debtor.[75] In some jurisdictions, and under certain circumstances, execution will not be allowed to issue until after a demand of satisfaction of the debt has been made.[76] After demand has once been made and execution issued, it is not necessary to renew the demand before issuing an alias.[77] The objection that a demand was not made before issuing execution affects only the costs and then only in case the money has been tendered.[78]

(II) Leave of Court — (A) Necessity of — (1) In General. Execution in the enforcement of an interlocutory decree,[79] or upon a judgment which has been opened to let in a defendant,[80] or where judgment has been given upon a condition,[81] cannot be issued without special leave of court. Where the collection of a judgment at law has been enjoined and the injunction has been subsequently dissolved, leave of court for issuance of an execution upon the judgment at law is not necessary.[82] Leave of court to issue an execution is required neither after the judgment of the trial court had been affirmed, with damages, on appeal,[83] nor after the judgment of the trial court has been reversed, a remittitur of the record having been filed in the trial court.[84] Where a judgment is entered on a bond payable in instalments, leave of court is not necessary for the issuance of execution for the instalments as they become due.[85] Execution issued without leave of court, when leave should be obtained, is held sometimes void,[86]

parol evidence is inadmissible to show that it was received earlier (In re Kinney, 2 Leg. Op. (Pa.) 102); or that another execution against the same defendant was received earlier but inadvertently withdrawn from a pigeon-hole and indorsed as of later receipt (Person's Appeal, 78 Pa. St. 145). In Vanderveere v. Gaston, 24 N. J. L. 818, it was held that a clerk's certificate indorsed on an execution against goods and lands is sufficient prima facie evidence that it was recorded before it was delivered to the sheriff; his testimony that it was his custom when in a hurry to omit making the record until after the return of the writ was not sufficient to invalidate his certificate, when he would not swear that he did not in fact record the present execution before it was delivered. See infra, VI, D, 2, d, (II), (B).

Indorsement by the attorney of date of issuance.— By the act of 1777 (Rev. c. 115, § 13) it is made the duty of the clerk or attorney issuing process, to mark thereon the day on which it shall be issued. When process has been issued by an attorney, his indorsement thereon of the day on which it issued is prima facie evidence, but no more. Boyden v. Odeneal, 12 N. C. 171.

sometimes merely voidable, and not void, in the discretion of the court from which it issued.[87]

(2) After Lapse of Time. It is not unusual to have a statutory provision requiring leave of court to issue execution after the lapse of a certain period of time from the rendition of the judgment.[88] Some jurisdictions, however, have a period within which execution may issue as of course, which period cannot be extended by leave of court.[89] Under this rule a motion for leave to issue within the required time, to which motion the attention of the court was not called until after the statutory period had run, has been denied on the ground that it was the business of plaintiff to see that the motion was called to the attention of the court and acted upon within the statutory period.[90] In those jurisdictions where leave of court is required for issuance after a certain period from the rendition of the judgment, leave of court will not be granted where the period of limitation of the life of the judgment has run.[91] The fact that plaintiff has brought an action on his judgment and recovered a new judgment thereon does not prevent his obtaining leave to issue execution on a dormant judgment.[92] The exercise of the court's discretion in denying or giving leave for issuance of execution is not generally reviewable;[93] at least the action of the court will not be reversed unless there was an abuse of discretion.[94] If an execution, first issued more than five years after the judgment without leave of court, would have been

An administrator may set up the statute of limitation in opposition to a motion for leave to issue execution after ten years from the time the judgment was rendered against his intestate, although executions have been issued at regular intervals of three years and although the intestate, if living, could interpose no objection. issued upon application, it is not an abuse of the court's discretion to refuse to set aside the execution.[95]

(3) After Death of Party.[96] In New York after the expiration of one year after the death of a party against whom final judgment has been rendered for a sum of money, the judgment may be enforced with like effect as if the judgment debtor were still living, by execution against any property upon which it is a lien; but execution cannot be issued without leave having been obtained both from the court which rendered the judgment and from the surrogate by whom letters of administration or letters testamentary were duly granted.[97] It seems that the application to the court which rendered the judgment need not be preceded by an application to the surrogate. The leave of the surrogate may be obtained at any time.[98] In Kansas, after judgment has been revived against the executors who hold, by the terms of the will, the legal title to the lands belonging to the estate, no resort to the probate court is necessary, either for a classification of plaintiff's demand or for an order for the sale of the property, for execution against such lands as are bound by the lien of the judgment.[99]

When surrogate may order issuance.— By N. Y. Laws (1879), c. 542, N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 1380, was amended by the clause providing "where the lien of the judgment was created as prescribed in section twelve hundred and fifty-one of this act, neither the order nor the decree can be made until the expiration of three years after letters testamentary or letters of administration have been duly granted upon the estate of the decedent." Under this clause a surrogate has authority to grant an order after three years from the death of the judgment debtor when he left no personal estate and no letters of administration have ever been issued. In re Holmes, 131 N. Y. 567, 30 N. E. 66 [affirming 16 N. Y. Suppl. 51]. The above amendment was held not to apply to cases where the judgment debtor died before the date upon which it took effect. Scire facias to show cause why an execution should not be issued may be served on the judgment defendant alone if alive, and if dead, on his executors or administrators; it is not necessary to serve the terre-tenants.[2] The object of the scire facias was merely to give defendant a day in court to show cause.[3]

(2) Under Modern Practice — (a) In General. Other forms of proceedings for obtaining execution have been quite generally substituted for the old proceeding by scire facias.[4]

(b) The Application. The application for leave to issue execution may be made by the assignee in the name of the judgment creditor unless he objects.[5] The executrix of a deceased person may join with the survivor in an application for leave to issue after five years.[6] The statute may permit the application to be made in vacation when sufficient reason is shown to exist.[7]

In Pennsylvania the practice was strictly conformable to the common law before the act of 1791, and the scire facias was absolutely necessary to make an executor or administrator a party to a judgment. Under the practice which grew up subsequent to that statute the administrator of a plaintiff who died after judgment did not proceed by scire facias to issue execution; the death of plaintiff might be suggested on the record and the administrator could go ahead; if, however, there was any defense available to the defendant, the proceedings might be stayed. erly verified.[8] The affidavit need not set forth the judgment or a copy of it;[9] but it must show that the judgment remains wholly or partly unsatisfied.[10] Under a statute which provides that, after the expiration of one year from the death of the party against whom a final judgment for a sum of money has been rendered, execution may issue against any property upon which judgment is a lien; the moving papers should show facts supporting a lien of the judgment. A simple allegation of its existence is insufficient.[11] If execution is to be issued against the real estate of a deceased judgment debtor, the petition to the surrogate should show that the personal property is insufficient to pay the debts.[12] An application by one not plaintiff for leave to issue execution, which avers that applicant owns the judgment, is sufficient without setting out the facts supporting that conclusion.[13] The irregularity caused by the omission to state that the judgment was rendered in the court in which the motion is made is cured by a finding to that effect.[14]

(e) Appearance, Defense, and Pleading by Judgment Debtor. Under a former practice in some of the states defendant might appear and, in answer to a motion for leave to issue execution upon a dormant judgment, might plead payment in satisfaction of the judgment.[23] Although a statute which regulates the practice neither contemplates nor requires the use of pleadings on the hearing, yet the fact that the lower court determined the question on pleadings is not a ground for error.[24] The validity of the judgment and the proceedings leading up to it cannot be questioned.[25] The sole question as to the judgment is, whether it had been satisfied or not.[26] If the party against whom it is moved to have execution

No notice to defendant in an execution based on a justice's transcript is necessary where defendant does not reside in the county when the process issued. McAnaw v. Matthis, 129 Mo. 142, 31 S. W. 344 [following Huhn v. Lang, 122 Mo. 600, 27 S. W. 345], construing Mo. Rev. St. (1889) § 6287.

Notice to non-residents is given by the clerk of the court on sufficient affidavit and need not be signed by a party in interest. Fitch v. Gray, 162 Ill. 337, 44 N. E. 726.

Affidavit for notice of publication.— Under Ill. Rev. St. c. 77, § 39, providing for a stay of twelve months after the death of a judgment debtor and for giving "at least three months' notice of the existence of such judgment before issuing execution" to the representatives or heirs in writing if within the state, otherwise by publication in accordance with chapter 22, sections 12, 13, which provides for service on non-resident defendants by publication, on affidavit of complainant that defendant resides without the state, such affidavit may be made on information and belief. It is not necessary to state the time when the execution will be issued; and hence it is immaterial that the execution is not issued on the day stated in the notice. Fitch v. Gray, 162 Ill. 337, 44 N. E. 726.

The notice may be made out by the clerk of the court, and need not be signed by the sheriff, although it may be served by him. Nash v. Johnson, 9 Rob. (La.) 8.

Plea to scire facias.— Under the old practice defendant could plead to a scire facias. See Sacia v. Nestle, 13 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 572. On a scire facias to obtain execution, a plea that defendant was a householder, etc., and that the property was exempt from execution must aver that defendant was a resident householder. For residents only are entitled to the privilege of the statute. A plea that no execution was issued, and that defendant was ready and willing at the time of the judgment, and was still ready and willing to surrender sufficient property to pay the debt and costs is good. issue shows that he is the owner of a judgment against the movant, the court may require the former to make a motion to set off his judgment against the one upon which execution is sought.[27]

(III) The Order to Issue. While the order to issue, or granting leave to issue, execution must conform to the usual requirements of a valid order,[28] no technical form of order seems to be necessary.[29] Under certain circumstances the order may be in the alternative,[30] or it may leave to the clerk the duty of reckoning the amount from the record from which the execution may issue.[31] Upon plaintiff's motion for issuance of execution, it is proper for the court of its own motion to issue an order to defendant to show cause why the motion should not be granted.[32]

d. Issuance — (I) In General. An execution cannot be considered as being issued until it is placed where it might have been executed and some efficient act done under it.[33]

(II) Delivery to Officer — (A) In General. It is generally held[34] that a writ is not issued until it has been delivered to the officer who is to execute it.[35]

On an appeal from the decision the usual rule that the court will not look into evidence on which a fact was found in the court below, unless the same is incorporated in a statement or bill of exceptions and an exception properly taken to its admissibility when offered applies. Ladd v. Higley, 5 Oreg. 296.

27. Betts v. Garr, 26 N. Y. 383 [reversing 1 Hilt. 411], holding, however, that if the movant, in applying for his execution, has complied with the requirements of the code, the court cannot, upon mere proof of the existence of the judgment against the movant, deny his application for execution.

Presumption of validity.— See Knox v. Randall, 24 Minn. 479.

29. A statement of reasons need not be set out in an order of seizure and sale. Garrish v. Hyman, 29 La. Ann. 28.

The indorsement of the judge's fiat on the petition for an order of seizure and sale, to which an authentic act importing the confession of judgment is attached as a part thereof, constitutes a valid order. Riley v. Christie, 13 La. Ann. 256.

Clerical error.— The fact that the one to whom the case has been referred in the capacity of master to assess damages, etc., was designated as "assessor" does not invalidate an order for execution. Fisk v. Gray, 100 Mass. 191.

31. Where a balance was due on a decree in favor of plaintiff, an order directing the clerk to issue execution to satisfy such decree as to the right, title, claim, and demand of such plaintiff is proper, although it leaves to the clerk the duty of reckoning the amount from the record. In South Carolina under the old practice process was generally signed by the attorney and tested by the clerk by signing his name and affixing his seal in the margin. That was "issuing" the process. Bragg v. Thompson, 19 S. C. 572, 578.

App. 376, 379 [citing Angell Lim. § 312; Webster Dict.] (holding that an execution taken out of the clerk's office, but not received by the sheriff until nearly a month after the expiration of the statute of limitations, was not "issued" within the required period of the statute); Kelley v. Vincent, 8 Ohio St. 415 (holding that taking a writ of execution from the clerk's office by the judgment creditor and returning the same to the clerk without delivery to the sheriff is not "suing out" an execution so that the judgment will be prevented from becoming dormant).

The word "issued" means that an execution is to be made out, properly attested by the clerk and delivered to the sheriff to be executed by him. Pease v. Richie, 132 Ill. 638, 24 N. E. 433, 8 L. R. A. 566.

Instructions or directions to officer at time of delivery.— A delivery with instructions to do nothing is no delivery. Cook v. Wood, 16 N. J. L. 254. But compare Koren v. Roemheld, 6 Ill. App. 275. The fact that plaintiff, after delivery to the sheriff and his indorsement of the time of receipt of the writ, directed a levy on a part only of the execution debtor's property does not prevent a subsequent levy under the same writ on other

Leaving the writ at the sheriff's office is a good delivery to him,[36] but leaving it at the sheriff's residence in his absence is not a delivery to him.[37] Delivery to the deputy is equivalent in law to a delivery to the sheriff himself.[38]

(B) Evidence of Delivery. A sheriff's indorsement on an execution of the hour of leaving it is conclusive that the writ was in his hands at that time.[39] In the absence of an indorsement by the sheriff of the time the execution was received, parol evidence is admissible to show the actual day of the sheriff's receipt of it.[40]

(III) Recording of Writ. In some jurisdictions the writ must be recorded[41] or indexed[42] before it can be executed against real estate.

E. Alias, Pluries, and Renewed Writs[43] — 1. Definition of Alias and Pluries. The writ which follows the original fieri facias was called at common law an alias fieri facias; writs which followed the alias were called pluries fieri facias.[44]

2. Renewed and Reëstablished Writs. A renewed execution is not a different property of the execution debtor. Moses v. Thomas, 26 N. J. L. 124 [affirmed in 26 N. L. J. 570].

Effect.— The delivery of an execution to the sheriff gives him no right to or interest in the goods and chattels until a levy is made. Hathaway v. Howell, 54 N. Y. 97. See infra, VII, B, 11.

Leaving the writ at a butcher shop kept by a deputy sheriff who was absent therefrom at the time is not a good delivery to the sheriff. Burrell v. Hollands, 78 Hun (N. Y.) 583, 29 N. Y. Suppl. 515.

The setting apart of a pigeon-hole in the prothonotary's office for the use of the sheriff is a mere matter of convenience and the putting of a writ therein is not delivery to him. Person's Appeal, 78 Pa. St. 145.

Presumption as to date.— Unless the contrary appear it will be presumed that the writ was delivered to the sheriff on the day the levy was made. Storey v. Agnew, 2 Ill. App. 353.

Presumption of delivery and issuance.—The facts that a sheriff advertised property, had it appraised, sold it, executed a certificate of purchase, returned the order of sale with proper receipts for the proceeds of sale, and executed a deed are sufficient to show that the execution had properly issued, and was in the hands of the officer when he made the sale, although there was no finding in direct language in the verdict that an order of sale properly issued was in the sheriff's hands. Peters v. Banta, 120 Ind. 416, 22 N. E. 95.

Presumption of continuance in hands of sheriff.— Where an execution issued by the clerk passes in due course from him to the sheriff, it will be presumed to have remained in the sheriff's hands during his continuance in office unless shown to have been returned or delivered to plaintiff or to some other person within that period. Anderson v. Blythe, 54 Ga. 507.

41. Vanderveere v. Gaston, 24 N. J. L. 818, 821.

The recording of an execution against real estate, before it is delivered to the sheriff, is essentially requisite to give validity to the execution under the statute. Elmer v. Burgin, 2 N. J. L. 186.

A memorandum by the clerk of the style of the action, names of parties, and amount to be raised, leaving a blank to be filled afterward, is not a recording and gives no authority to levy or sell. Vanderveere v. Gaston, 24 N. J. L. 818; Voorhees v. Chaffers, 24 N. J. L. 507.

A tax fieri facias transferred, but not recorded within thirty days, cannot be enforced by the transferee as a lien on defendant's property. Hoyt v. Byron, 66 Ga. 351.

Place of record.— Where under the statute it was necessary that an execution for the sale of land be recorded in the office whence it issued, an execution issued on a judgment of the county court, but recorded in the office of the town-clerk, cannot be received as evidence of title. one from the original but derives its efficacy, not from the mere change of its date, but from the original signature of the clerk.[45] If an execution has been lost or destroyed and the fact is properly shown, plaintiff may reëstablish his writ in lieu of the lost original;[46] and the writ thus reëstablished is not an alias.[47] The new copy is made out nunc pro tunc.[48]

3. Right to Alias, Pluries, or Renewed Writs[49] — a. In General. If satisfaction[50] is not obtained by the original, the party interested has the right to an alias and a pluries until satisfaction is obtained.[51] If an execution is directed to be levied for less than the sum to which plaintiff is entitled, another execution cannot be issued for the balance.[52] Where an execution is discharged[53] or satisfied[54] by mistake or accident, the creditor is entitled to an alias. An alias execution may issue, although the record of the judgment has been lost.[55] Neither the forfeiture of a claim bond[56] nor the beginning of supplementary proceedings[57] affects plaintiff's right to have an alias. A creditor whose execution is enjoined for failure to credit a partial payment is not entitled to an alias writ, but his remedy

In the case of a pluries the writ ran "we command you, as we have often (pluries) commanded you before." Bouvier L. Dict.

A writ returned by the sheriff after an injunction and before seizure does not lose its efficacy, and after the dissolution of the injunction the sheriff may proceed under it, no alias writ of seizure and sale being necessary. Stackhouse v. Zuntz, 41 La. Ann. 415, 6 So. 666.

If plaintiff omits the direction to collect interest on the judgment, he cannot subsequently have an alias for the interest. Todd v. Botchford, 86 N. Y. 517, under N. Y. Civ. Proc. § 1368.

Where, on account of a sum having been credited by mutual agreement on a mortgage held by plaintiff against defendant, an execution was not issued for the full amount, and where it was held subsequently on foreclosure proceedings that the amount so credited was not secured thereby, it was held that plaintiff was entitled to an alias and if an order of the court was necessary the court should make such order. Sheboygan Bank v. Trilling, 75 Wis. 163, 43 N. W. 830.

The proper way to correct the error when an execution was issued for an amount less than that to which plaintiff is entitled and has been returned satisfied is to quash the execution, not to issue an alias. Browns v. Julian, 5 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 312.

54. Langdon v. Langdon, 1 Root (Conn.) 453; Pillsbury v. Smyth, 25 Me. 427; Hutchins v. Carver County Com'rs, 16 Minn. 13, holding that the district court has in the interest of justice power to vacate an execution under which an invalid sale of real estate is made and the proceedings thereon, and to order the issuance of an alias even though the original execution has been returned satisfied.

is to have the injunction dissolved for the balance due.[58] Since the right at common law of issuing an alias execution is unquestionable, the right still exists if statutes do not assume to take it away.[59] Where by statute the party or his attorney of record has the right to issue execution, an alias issued by the clerk without authority from the execution plaintiff is an irregularity but does not render the writ so issued void.[60] The rule that plaintiff is entitled to a special execution only in cases expressly allowed by statute[61] applies to alias executions.[62] The right to an alias may be waived;[63] but if the creditor has granted an indulgence to defendant upon the original execution, there is no presumption that the indulgence is extended to alias execution after its issue.[64]

The special fieri facias clause in the writs of venditioni exponas has not the force and effect of an alias fieri facias, but is dependent upon the result of the sale under the venditioni exponas, to which it is annexed. If such sale is insufficient to satisfy the debt, then for the first time the fieri facias becomes operative. Dunn v. Nichols, 63 N. C. 107. In Allemong v. Allison, 8 N. C. 325, 328, it was held that a special writ of fieri facias which the sheriff levied, together with a venditioni exponas, which special writ was afterward issued on the same judgment, was a "mere blank and perfectly deaf until life and activity was given to it" by the execution of the venditioni exponas.

Defendant is estopped to object that the execution was never returned to the clerk, if an execution is renewed without objection. Bull v. Rowe, 13 S. C. 355, opinion of the court by McGowan, A. J.

The return of the marshal covering the date of the receipt and the levy of the prior writs duly indorsed upon the alias writs and certified to by the clerk of the court under his hand and seal is sufficient to show the issue of the prior writs in the absence of any objection that the writs themselves should be produced. Where plaintiff upon inquiry was informed that the first fieri facias was returned nulla bona, he was justified in issuing an alias, especially as the return was actually indorsed on the original fieri facias, although the fieri facias was not in fact returned to the prothonotary's office until the following day. the contrary it will be presumed that alias writs were preceded by others regularly issued,[67] and that the alias was not issued until the return of the prior writ.[68] Nevertheless it has been held that, although it is irregular to issue an alias before return of the former execution, such irregularity does not render the alias writ void.[69]

(II) Disposition of Levy — (A) Where Levy Sufficient. Where sufficient property has been levied upon under the first writ no other can issue until such levy is disposed of[70] or released.[71] This rule has been considered necessary to prevent abuse and oppression.[72] The proper writ to dispose of a levy is a venditioni exponas, not an alias.[73] Until the levy is disposed of by a sale of the property or a return of it to the debtor, a satisfaction of the judgment is presumed;[74] but this is only presumption,[75] and has been held not to apply to a levy upon real estate.[76] If execution is levied on the property of the debtor, it is held, although

Moreover, after such levy, the sheriff may discover personal property upon which it will become his duty to levy and make the money, before he can lawfully sell the lands." But in Indiana a levy upon real estate of sufficient value to pay the judgment creates a presumption of satisfaction, and there exists no distinction between the effect of a levy upon real estate and that of a levy upon personal property. not universally,[77] that a replevin bond[78] or a forthcoming bond[79] given by the debtor operates for the time being as a satisfaction of the original judgment and so long as the bond is in force a second execution cannot issue. A levy subsequently relinquished is not a satisfaction, and a second execution may issue.[80] If the property levied upon is lost through the fault of defendant or converted to his own use, there is a sufficient disposition of the levy to authorize the issue of another execution.[81]

(B) Where Levy Insufficient or Void. Where the levy is insufficient to satisfy the judgment,[82] or is upon property not belonging to the debtor[83] or upon property not subject to execution,[84] the creditor is entitled to an alias. But it must clearly appear that the property levied upon is not sufficient to pay the judgment,[85] for prima facie a valid levy is sufficient.[86]

4. Time of Issuance — a. When May First Issue. An alias fieri facias cannot be regularly issued for the same term to which the original is issued.[87] An alias may issue before the return-day of the original if the original has been returned before the return-day.[88]

b. Limitation — (I) At Common Law When Continued on the Rolls. At common law if the original writ of fieri facias was issued within a year and a day[89] of the rendition of the judgment and returned[90] and thence continued regularly upon the records of the court, a new writ of execution might be taken out at any time without reviving the judgment by scire facias.[91] The practice of entering the continuances on the judgment-roll was merely formal, for they might be entered after the writs were issued [92] and after objection had been made.[93] By statute the practice became unnecessary in England [94] and fell into disuse in this country.[95] If the original was sued out within a year after the rendition of the judgment and returned nulla bona, it was immaterial that more than a year and a day elapsed between the return of the original and the issuance of the alias.[96] But an alias execution cannot issue after the period of the limitation of the life of the judgment has run.[97]

(II) Under Modern Statutes. An analogous rule sometimes prevails under modern regulations as to practice; if the original is sued out within the time limited by statute, the limitation of the statute does not apply to the alias which may issue as of course.[98] By some decisions, however, it is held that the limita-

To executions on what judgments does statute apply.— Where judgment was rendered before the adoption of the code, and divers executions have been issued and returned since the date of the judgment, the judgment is subject to the presumption of satisfaction under the act of 1826 and not to the statute of limitations as prescribed by the code; and an affidavit of plaintiff that the judgment had not been entirely satisfied, such affidavit being admitted in evidence without objection, was all that was needed to justify the leave given by the court to issue execution. Johnson v. Jones, 87 N. C. 393.

Execution not returned within the limited period.— Under Mont. Code Civ. Proc. § 349, which provides that after five years from the entry of the judgment execution can issue only by leave of court on proof that some part thereof remains unsatisfied, but such "leave shall not be necessary when the execution has been issued on the judgment within the five

tion applies to the alias and pluries writs as well as to the originals.[99] In some jurisdictions the time within which a writ may issue after the date of issuance of the last preceding writ is specially limited.[1] An execution for costs issued by the clerk against the successful plaintiff has been held not to be an execution from which to date the time within which an execution in favor of plaintiff may be issued.[2]

(III) Reckoning of Period of Limitation. The time for renewing an execution so as to render a scire facias unnecessary begins to run from the last day the execution has to run in court before its final return.[3] Any delay caused by an injunction out of chancery cannot be taken into an account.[4] By statute in some states the period of the Civil war is excluded from the period of limitation.[5] Where an execution was issued and then discovered to be void, and an order for a new execution was obtained, but no new execution was issued until five years after rendition of judgment, the order did not extend the time within which the execution could issue.[6]

5. Form and Requisites — a. In General. The fact that the writ does not reveal the form of an alias or a pluries is an amendable irregularity[7] and it should not be quashed merely because not entitled to an alias execution.[8] An execution which is not an original should show on its face that others have preceded it,[9] and in some jurisdictions the number of executions which have preceded it.[10] At common law an execution not an original should recite the proceedings under a former fieri facias[11] and, according to the old rule in England, the clerk should subscribe under subsequent writs the time when the first one was issued.[12] That the writ does not recite the proceedings under a former fieri facias as required at common law[13] or that it does not show, as required by statute, the number of executions which have preceded it[14] does not render the writ void. For-years, and returned unsatisfied in whole or in part," the fact that execution issued within the five years and was not returned at all does not prevent the granting of an execution after that time. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Bender, 13 Mont. 432, 433, 34 Pac. 848.

mal errors in prior executions do not invalidate a later execution correctly issued.[15]

b. Teste. Under the old practice an alias was properly tested as of the term to which the original was returnable,[16] or as of the day on which the original was returnable,[17] and the pluries as of the term to which or the day on which the alias was returnable and so on.[18]

c. Recital of Amount. Where an execution has been satisfied in part, an alias must state the proper amount of the judgment remaining unsatisfied and command the officer to collect such unsatisfied part in the usual form.[19] A renewal execution should issue for the balance due upon the original with interest from the date of the last credit on the principal debt.[20] As in the case of original executions, the issuance of an alias for too great an amount does not render the writ void.[21]

d. Indorsements. If a statute provides that a plaintiff must indorse on the execution that he will receive bank-notes of a certain kind in payment of the judgment, or if he refuse defendant may give a replevin bond for the debt payable in two years, plaintiff is not bound to make the indorsement upon an alias after the return nulla bona on the original which was properly indorsed.[22]

But see Royce v. Strong, 11 Vt. 248, holding that under the Vermont statute of 1837 scire facias was not the appropriate remedy to obtain new execution when the former one had been levied upon real estate in a defective manner, especially where the defect does not appear upon the face of the levy.

Scire facias is proper where an equity of redemption is levied on and sold and no interest passes from a mistake in the proceedings (Pillsbury v. Smyth, 25 Me. 427), where the levy on the equity of redemption has been in a manner not authorized by law (Dewing v. Durant, 10 Gray (Mass.) 29), where part of the real estate levied on cannot be held (Rice v. Cook, 75 Me. 45; Ware v. Pike, 12 Me. 303), or where the judgment creditor voluntarily reimburses a purchaser at execution sale under his judgment for moneys paid for property against which the execution did not run (Piscataquis County v. Kingsbury, 73 Me. 326). In Vermont,

Plaintiff may also obtain relief by motion;[25] and sometimes an action of debt on the judgment is held a concurrent remedy with scire facias.[26] In the absence of collusion between plaintiff and defendant, an execution may be renewed by the written consent of the judgment debtor indorsed upon it.[27] The maxim, "He who asks for equity must do equity," may be applied to a creditor asking for an alias.[28]

(II) Notice. The motion for a new execution after the former execution has been returned satisfied by levy on land, the levy having been defective, will not be granted except upon notice to defendant.[29] The rule is the same where a motion is made for reëstablishing or obtaining a new writ which has been destroyed or lost.[30]

(III) Pleading and Proof. A plaintiff must aver and prove that the property on which the original execution was levied did not belong to the debtor, where this is made the ground for a new execution.[31] Where a new execution is asked for on the ground that the property seized under the former writ was encumbered by a prior lien, the declaration must show that the property was taken from the execution defendant by virtue of such lien.[32]

b. Defense. On a scire facias to obtain a new execution on the ground of the invalidity of the original, no facts can be properly relied on in defense which existed prior to the judgment.[33]

c. Order or Leave of Court. Where execution has been returned "satisfied" the clerk cannot on the ground of mistake issue a new execution without leave of court.[34] After satisfaction by a sale no further levy can be made until the court where A levied on property as belonging to B and was sued therefor by C who, however, agreed to discontinue and release his claim and did discontinue, but afterward recommenced his suit and recovered of A the value of the property, whereupon A sued him on his agreement to discontinue and release and recovered back the same amount, scire facias by A for an alias execution against B on the ground of failure of title in the property levied was sustainable. Mack v. Nichols, 5 Vt. 200.

Application for scire facias.— Under an old Massachusetts statute the creditor could not sue out a scire facias for an alias without a previous application to the court whence the first execution issued; for the writ authorized by that statute did not issue as a matter of right but rested in the discretion of the court. 28. Thus where an execution has been levied on goods and chattels which have been sold and the proceeds paid over to the creditor, he cannot maintain an action to obtain a new execution on the ground that the goods were not the property of the debtor until he has refunded the money thus received or tendered it back. Batchelder v. Wason, 8 N. H. 121.

29. Williams v. Cable, 7 Conn. 119, holding that an application for a new execution on such a ground was substantially a scire facias and must be proceeded with accordingly, and a new execution granted on motion without the notice required in civil actions is void. has set aside the sale, vacated the satisfaction and ordered a new execution.[35] If the first writ is returned not executed, a new order of seizure and sale is not necessary to the validity of an alias.[36] Where plaintiff in execution has been compelled to refund the value of a portion of the property levied upon under the original execution, no order or leave of court is necessary for the issuance of a second execution for the amount so refunded.[37] Under an equity rule which provides that if the decree be solely for the payment of money, final process to execute the decree may be by a writ of execution in the form used in suits at common law, an alias cannot be issued except by order of the court which rendered the decree.[38]

7. Effect of Issuance. The general rule seems to be that the mere issuance of an alias before the return of the original is not of itself sufficient to establish an abandonment of the execution and the levy thereunder,[39] although such issuance of an alias is competent evidence on the question of abandonment.[40] An alias, although improperly issued, may be a legal justification to the officer to whom it is directed.[41] An alias continues the lien of the original so as to preclude the satisfaction of another execution between the two.[42] The issuing of an alias does not preclude the judgment debtor from showing, on an issue of illegality, that the judgment had been paid before the alias was issued.[43]

In Georgia, where there was an early provision for renewing an execution where one had been issued and returned within seven years, an alias could not regularly issue without an order of the court for that purpose, which order should set forth all the previous proceedings which had taken place under the original execution, but an objection to an alias which had been issued without this order came too late after the parties had litigated a claim case under it, the defect being considered at that time by the court as having been waived. Watson v. Halsted, 9 Ga. 275.

But in Miller v. Milford, 2 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 35, where after levy and extent on land under execution the inquisition and extent were set aside, and where there was a levy and sale of the same land under an alias thereafter issued, plaintiff relinquished the first execution in form merely but not in substance for he laid the second execution on the same land.

b. Void or Voidable Writs. No court will attempt to amend a void process, for such process is a mere nullity and it would be absurd to speak of amending a process or proceeding which has no legal validity.[46] But the rule is practically universal that a writ which is only voidable for clerical errors or omissions or for mistakes of form can be amended;[47] thus amendments have been allowed in cases of non-conformity to judgment,[48] such as a variance in the amount,[49] in cases of error in reckoning interest,[50] in cases of non-conformity to præcipe,[51] in cases of misrecital of date of rendition of judgment,[52] in cases of mistake in or omission

The party asking for the amendment of a writ of execution must pay the costs of the application or motion.[72]

4. Effect of Amendment. The amendment nunc pro tunc of a writ of execution makes it effective as between the parties, as if the defect had never existed.[73]

5. Validating Statute. A statute which provides that all irregularities and defects in the issuance of executions upon valid judgments and against real property shall, as to sales previously made, be disregarded validates, without amendment by the court, an execution issued without a seal.[74]

G. Alteration of Writ After Issuance. In some jurisdictions plaintiff may properly make certain alterations in an execution after its issuance;[75] in others the strict rule as to the alteration of instruments in a material part is enforced.[76] An apparent alteration in an execution will be presumed to have been innocently made before issuance.[77]

Notice.— A court has no power to amend process returned at a former term, without giving notice to persons whose rights have previously accrued. Simpson v. Simpson, 64 N. C. 427, 429 [citing Cape Fear Bank v. Williamson, 24 N. C. 147; Phillipse v. Higdon, Bus. 380].

73. Adams v. Higgins, 23 Fla. 13, 1 So. 321.

Relation.—An amendment to a valid writ of execution, made by order of court after levy, relates back to the date of the writ. Hall v. Lackmond, 50 Ark. 113, 6 S. W. 510, 7 Am. St. Rep. 84; Tilton v. Cofeld, 93 U. S. 163, 23 L. ed. 858 [quoted in Sannoner v. Jacobson, 47 Ark. 31, 47, 14 S. W. 458]. But execution against W K will not bind the goods of B K as against a bona fide purchaser, although B K was the real person against whom the judgment and execution were intended; and an amendment of the judgment will not affect by retroaction the title of such purchaser. Shirley v. Phillips, 17 Ill. 471.

In Alabama the amendment of an execution by striking out the name of a person not a party to the judgment, which name had been improperly inserted in the execution, does not affect its lien. Andress v. Roberts, 18 Ala. 387.

In Georgia it was provided by statute (Ga. Code (1882), § 3495), that an amendment of the writ caused the levy to fall (Jones v. Parker, 60 Ga. 500; Bradford v. Water-Lot Co., 58 Ga. 280; Beasley v. Bowden, 58 Ga. 154; Manry v. Shepperd, 57 Ga. 68. But see Artope v. Barker, 72 Ga. 186); but this applied to only the final process not to mesne process (Dawson v. Garland, 70 Ga. 447). This statute is now repealed (Ga. Code (1895), § 5114), and the repeal applied to cases pending at the time as well as to those which subsequently arose (Baker v. Smith, 91 Ga. 142, 16 N. E. 967). Therefore at the present time amendment by way of supplying the omitted name of plaintiff does not cause the levy to fall. Smith v. Bell, 107 Ga. 800, 33 S. E. 684, 73 Am. St. Rep. 151.

In Illinois the title of the officer seizing the goods remains unimpaired even if an amendment has the effect of destroying the writ. Corbin v. Pearce, 81 Ill. 461.

In Maine an execution executed by the proper officer, although the direction is omitted, may be amended by inserting the direction, under leave of the court; and an unauthorized erasure of a correct direction and an insertion of a different direction may be corrected in the same manner. Rollins v. Rich, 27 Me. 557.

74. Kipp v. Burton, 29 Mont. 96, 74 Pac. 85, 63 L. R. A. 325.

75. Keyes v. Chapman, 5 Conn. 169, altering directions for return of writ. In Hall v. Richardson, Quincy (Mass.) 329, it was said that an execution should not be altered out of court.

Plaintiff's attorney may with the consent of defendant alter a fieri facias without entering a rule for the purpose after it is placed in the sheriff's hands, so as to make it correspond with the judgment record. Oakley v. Becker, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 454. Plaintiff's attorney without fraud, but without authority from the clerk, inserted in the writ the direction to the proper officer. It was held that this did not avoid or affect the execution. Blanchard v. Waters, 10 Metc. (Mass.) 185 [distinguishing Brier v. Woodbury, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 362].

76. It is illegal for a party or his attorney to alter an execution after he has received it from the clerk, and before delivery to the officer (People v. Lamborn, 2 Ill. 123); and an execution altered in a material part after being issued becomes thereby void (White v. Jones, 38 Ill. 159).

A clerk of court has no authority to authorize a sheriff to alter an execution in any way. Vance v. Vanarsdale, 1 Bush (Ky.) 504.

A solicitor has no authority to alter the teste of an execution in a court of chancery. Merrill v. Townsend, 5 Paige (N. Y.) 80.

77. McDonald v. Fuller, 11 S. D. 355, 77 N. W. 581, 74 Am. St. Rep. 815 [citing 1 Freeman Ex. § 47].

H. Collateral Attack. Mere irregularities in an execution or in the issuance thereof cannot be taken advantage of in a collateral proceeding;[78] thus, issuing an execution too soon,[79] issuing an execution after the proper time,[80] issuing an execution after the death of the debtor,[81] a variance between the amounts in the judgment and in the execution,[82] the lack of a seal,[83] and a mistake in the signature[84] have been held to be irregularities which cannot be taken advantage of collaterally. It is only where the proceedings are so defective that they are absolutely void that defects in them can be relied on in a collateral proceeding.[85] A void execution may be objected to by any person whose interests are affected by it.[86] Of mere irregularities defendant alone or his representative, as a general rule, can take advantage in a direct proceeding;[87] a probable exception to this

Affixing wrong seal.— A clerk of the circuit court by mistake attached to an execution the seal of the district court. Upon a motion in which a plaintiff who had obtained against the same defendant a judgment in the supreme court intervened, the circuit court directed the execution to be corrected nunc pro tunc. It was held that the circuit court acquired jurisdiction of the subject-matter and the intervener, and the order could only be modified on direct appeal. Rose v. Dubuque V. R. Co., 47 Iowa 420.

84. The affixing of the name of plaintiff in execution to the writ, instead of the name of the clerk, does not render the writ subject to collateral attack. It will be treated as amended when collaterally assailed. Jett v. Shinn, 47 Ark. 373, 1 S. W. 693.

rule exists in the case of a subsequent execution creditor.[88] The rules just stated have been applied to executions issued on transcript from a justice of the peace[89] to executions issued to other counties,[90] as well as to alias executions.[91]

I. Waiver of and Estoppel to Assert Defects.[92] The debtor may waive an irregularity in the execution either by some positive act,[93] or by silence when he should speak,[94] or by laches.[95] It is said that the waiver by defendant will be inferred from very slight evidence.[96]

VII. LIEN, LEVY OR EXTENT, AND CUSTODY OF PROPERTY.

A. Lien — 1. NATURE OF LIEN — a. In General. The lien created by an execution is not a right in the property itself, but a right to levy upon it to the exclusion of interests subsequently acquired. It does not vest in the judgment creditor either a jus in re or a jus ad rem; it is simply a right by law to charge the property with the payment of the debt.[97]

b. As Applied to Real Estate — (I) Where Judgment Is a Lien. Where the judgment is a lien upon real estate, it has been generally recognized by the courts that an execution and levy thereunder upon such real estate creates no new or separate lien from the lien of the judgment.[98]

(II) Where Judgment Is Not a Lien[99] — (A) In General. Where, however, land is levied on under an execution issued on a judgment which is not a lien on such land, the execution creates a lien on it.[1]

(B) Testatum Execution. The lien of a testatum execution upon land is an independent one.[2]

2. Commencement of Lien[3] — a. Rule at Common Law. At common law, an execution issued on a judgment of a court of record related back to the teste of the writ, and bound the debtor's personal property from the time it was awarded.[4]

b. By Statute in England. By an early English statute,[5] the common-law rule was modified to the extent of providing that no fieri facias or other writ should bind the debtor's property, except from the time such writ should be delivered to the officer to be executed, who upon its receipt should indorse thereon the day he received the same.[6] Yet it has been held that as against defendant, although not as to a bona fide purchaser or stranger, the property is bound from the teste of the writ, as before the statute.[7]

c. Rule in United States — (i) Delivery to Officer. This statute[8] was afterward incorporated in the jurisprudence of almost all of the United States, and is still, with immaterial variations, the law in a majority of the states, and when possession of the property is taken under levy the lien relates back to the time of the delivery of the execution.[9] In some jurisdictions the above doctrine

Where several executions were issued on the same judgment, and all were acted on bona fide without being satisfied, it was held that the last of them related to the teste of the first, and bound the property of defendant from that time. Dawson v. Shepherd, 15 N. C. 497.

is applied, except as against a bona fide purchaser, or mortgagee without notice, whose rights attached between the delivery and the levy of the execution.[10]

(II) Actual Levy. Now, by statute, in quite a number of the states, an execution is a lien upon property only from the time of the levy thereof.[11]

3. Property or Interests to Which Lien Attaches[12] — a. In General. As a general rule the lien of an execution operates upon and binds all property, real or personal, which is the subject of levy and sale in obedience to its mandate, and consequently it is sometimes termed a "general lien," to distinguish it from liens which only operate on specific or particular property.[13]

Levy before return-day of writ.— It has been held under the Pennsylvania statute of June 16, 1836, that the levy must be made before the return-day of the writ in order to make the lien good from the time the writ is placed in the sheriff's hands; but when a proper levy is made before the return-day of the writ, the levy itself relates to the hour at which the writ was placed in the sheriff's hands and indorsed thereon. b. After-Acquired Property. In some jurisdictions the lien of an execution attaches to property acquired by the debtor after the execution comes into the hands of the officer.[14] In other jurisdictions, however, it is held that property acquired by an execution debtor, after the date of the levy of the writ, and not mentioned in the original levy, is not subject to the lien of the execution.[15]

c. Territorial Extent. As a general rule the lien of the execution is coextensive with the writ.[16]

Rule in Illinois.— The above rule applies in Illinois to the personal property of a judgment debtor (Monmouth Second Nat. Bank v. Gilbert, 174 Ill. 485, 51 N. E. 584, 66 Am. St. Rep. 306; Blatchford v. Boyden, 122 Ill. 657, 12 N. E. 801); but it is held in that state that the levy of an execution upon real estate has no force in the creation of a lien, except in the single instance where the execution was issued to a foreign country, and the certificate of levy recorded as the statute requires, and with that exception the lien, if any exists, is that of the judgment, and the lien of an execution will not operate to continue the lien of the judgment beyond the statutory period of seven years (Conwell v. Watkins, 71 Ill. 488; Tenney v. Hemenway, 53 Ill. 97). See supra, V.

Debt payable in future.— It has been held in Virginia that a debt, due to the judgment debtor, having present existence, although payable at a future day, is subject to the lien of the execution, but a debt which may become due to the judgment debtor, but is dependent on some contingency which may or may not happen, and over which the court has no control, is not subject to the lien. App. 347; Blum v. Light, 81 Tex. 414, 16 S. 4. Priorities — a. See 21 Cent. Dig. tit. "Execution," § 226.

In Tennessee, however, where judgment was rendered in the supreme court and execution awarded, and subsequently judgments were secured against the same debtor, and executions thereon, although not awarded until after execution in the prior judgment, came to the hands of the sheriff before the prior execution, it was held that on a sale of the land under all the executions, the one first awarded was entitled to priority in satisfaction. Johnson v. Ball, 1 Yerg. 291, 24 Am. Dec. 451. It has been held that plaintiffs in execution are entitled to a ratable division of the moneys realized on executions issued on judgments rendered on a prior day in the same term, as if the same were all rendered as of the first day of the term. Porter v. Earthman, 4 Yerg. 358. See, however, Berry v. Clements, 9 Humphr. 312, holding that under such circumstances the priority of the executions will relate to the date of which they bear teste.

Executions in the hands of different deputies.— It was held in Kennon v. Ficklin, 6 B. Mon. (Ky.) 414, 44 Am. Dec. 776, that where two executions came into the hands of different deputies of the same sheriff, against the same defendant, the proceeds of the levy by either deputy should be applied to that execution which first came into the hands of either.

Executions issued to another county.— Under the Mississippi statute providing that a judgment lien shall not attach to property out of the county in which it is rendered until an abstract of the judgment is filed with the clerk of the circuit court in the county in which the property may be situated, it has been held that where several judgments are rendered in one county and execution is issued to another without filing abstracts of the judgments, the execution first coming to the hands of the sheriff and levied has the priority, although issuing on a junior judgment. Gresham v. Roberts, 2 Sm. & M. 471.

Indorsement of time of receipt.— It has been held in Pennsylvania that omission by the sheriff to indorse on an execution the time of receiving it does not give priority to a subsequent execution whereon the time is indorsed. Hale's Appeal, 44 Pa. St. 438.

Priority obtained by fraud.— Where one of England.[19] In some jurisdictions executions delivered to the officer at the same time stand on an equal footing, even though issued on judgments recovered at different times, and are entitled to share pro rata in the proceeds of the execution sale.[20]

(B) Unrecorded Executions. Under statutes requiring executions to be recorded before delivery to the officer, it has been held that an execution duly recorded, when delivered to the sheriff, is entitled to priority, as to real estate, over an execution previously delivered, but not recorded until after the delivery of the second execution.[21]

(II) As Affected by Date of Levy—(A) General Rule. In some jurisdictions the rule has been laid down that, as between different writs, the one first levied is entitled to priority, without regard to the dates of the writs or the time of their delivery to the officers; that the lien given by delivery binds the property against a voluntary transfer, but not one made under legal process.[22]

two creditors, on their way to procure executions against a common debtor, caused the other's arrest by crying "stop thief" after him, and thereby obtained a prior execution, it was held that his priority of lien would be postponed as against the creditor wrongfully detained. Davis' Estate, 15 Pa. Co. Ct. 634.

Proof of direction to sheriff to sell.— It was held in Freeburger's Appeal, 40 Pa. St. 244, that where plaintiffs in a prior execution alleged that they had given orders to the sheriff to proceed and sell before a second execution came into his hands, they must prove the fact affirmatively or their execution will lose its priority.

Simultaneous levy.— Where an equity of redemption is levied on simultaneously by two creditors and sold under their executions, the proceeds are to be equally divided between them. Sigourney v. Eaton, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 414, 25 Am. Dec. 414.

Where, in violation of an agreement not to enter a judgment until the judgment of another creditor should be entered and execution issued thereon, judgment was entered and execution issued before the time stipulated, it was held that the creditor violating his agreement would be postponed, in the distribution of proceeds, to the creditor for whose benefit the agreement was made, although the execution of the latter came to the sheriff's hands after that of the former. Ayers' Appeal, 28 Pa. St. 179.

Where the first execution issued was fraudulent as to creditors, and the second execution creditor having a valid lien, with knowledge of this fact, induced the first execution creditor to get out of the way, it was held that his act could not be impeached by a third execution creditor, or cause him to lose his priority. Kelchner's Estate, 11 Pa. Super. Ct. 595.

Delivery on same day.— In several jurisdictions where this doctrine is adhered to, writs delivered to the officer on the same day are regarded as being delivered at the same time, and entitled to share pro rata in the proceeds of the sale. State v. Hunger, 17 Nebr. 216, 22 N. W. 457; Meier v. Cardington First Nat. Bank, 55 Ohio St. 446, 45 N. E. 907; Bachman v. Sulzbacher, 5 S. C. 58; Ex p. Stagg, 1 Nott & M. (S. C.) 405. And see Rawles v. People, 2 Colo. App. 501, 31 Pac. 941. But in other jurisdictions it has been held that where both executions are issued on the same day the particular hour when each was issued will be material in determining the question of their priority and will be inquired into for that purpose. (B) After-Acquired Property. The rule just stated is likewise applied in some jurisdictions in the case of property acquired by the judgment debtor after the rendition of the judgment and the issuance of execution, and the judgment creditor first levying upon such property obtains priority, even where the execution is a junior one.[23]

(C) Where Writs Are of Same Date. In some jurisdictions the rule is laid down that between judgment creditors whose writs are of the same date he who first takes the property in execution has the preference to be first paid out of its proceeds, and this has been held to be true whether the property taken under

Partial levy.— It was held in Walpole v. Ink, 9 Ohio 142, that a judgment creditor, by levying on a part of the debtor's lands only, loses his preference as to other lands first levied on by other execution creditors. Where execution was levied within the year.— It was held in Kentucky Northern Bank v. Roosa, 13 Ohio 334, that a judgment cannot by prior levy obtain a preference over another judgment of the same term levied within the year.

Suits to set aside conveyances.— It has been held in New Jersey that where creditors obtain judgments and make levies, and then bring suits to set aside fraudulent conveyances which are void as to all of them, their priorities in the property conveyed are in the order of their levies, without regard to the order in which they filed suits to set aside the conveyances, the assets being legal assets, and that this rule is not affected by the fact that in certain cases the executions were returned, with the levies annexed, to the effect that they were unsatisfied. Wilson's Appeal, 13 the writ be real or personal estate, or choses in action not subject to actual or manual seizure.[24]

(III) As Affected by Date of Judgment. In some states, where an execution is levied on the property of defendant, and, before the sale of such property, another execution, issued on a senior judgment, comes into the hands of the officer, the rule is laid down that plaintiff in the senior judgment is entitled to the proceeds of the sale.[25] Where, however, neither of the judgments is a lien on the property by reason of non-compliance with statutory requirements regarding enrolment, the execution first levied is entitled to priority regardless of the seniority of the judgment.[26]

(IV) As Affected by Invalidity of Levy. An execution, the levy of which is defective by reason of non-compliance with some statutory provision, such as irregularity in return, or failure to record, will be postponed to a junior execution, which has been levied in strict compliance with the statute.[27]

Deceased judgment creditor.— In construing the Mississippi statute giving a junior judgment creditor who has sued out execution, etc., priority of lien over elder judgment creditors "who fail, refuse, or neglect to sue out execution," the courts have held that this statute refers to living judgment creditors only, and does not apply to a case where the senior judgment creditor is dead and cannot properly be said to "fail, refuse, or neglect" to sue out execution. operation by a judicial stay, such as an injunction, or by the setting aside of the judgment upon which it issued. Upon the dissolution of the injunction, or the restoration of the judgment, such execution is entitled to priority over junior executions whose liens have attached to the property of the judgment debtor in the interim;[29] and the same rule applies in the case of an execution where the lien is subsequently suspended in its operation on particular property by proceedings to try the right of such property.[30]

(VI) As Affected by Delay in Executing Writ — (A) Rule in England. With a view to prevent collusion and fraud and other abuses of the writ, a statute was early enacted in England,[31] declaring that executions taken out with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors or others should be as against such persons utterly void.[32]

(B) Rule in United States — (1) General Rule. It is a well settled rule of law, adhered to in the United States with some modifications of the strict English doctrine, that the office of an execution is not to secure but to enforce the payment of a debt, and, as a consequence, an attempt to make use of it for the purposes of security merely is a perversion of the writ, and postpones it, and the lien thereof, to other liens or executions subsequently issued or accruing.[33] However,

Opening up judgment.— Where, after a levy on personal property under an execution, the judgment was opened by the court to let defendant into a defense, "all proceedings to be stayed, the sheriff to be secure in his levy," and a bond was given by defendant, to the sheriff, conditioned for the delivery of the property on demand, or for the payment of the amount of the execution, it was held that the lien of such levy was preserved as against a subsequent levy on the same property under another execution. Proceeding to enjoin sale.— Where the validity of an execution which had been levied on land was in issue in a proceeding to enjoin the sale thereof, it was held that the rights of the execution plaintiff were in no way affected by a sale of the land under another execution. Sampson v. Wyett, 49 Tex. 627.

Where indemnifying bond was given.— In Tennessee some of the decisions make the effect of the injunction dependent on security being given when it issues, holding that where defendant is indemnified from loss by a sufficient bond his lien is thereby lost, while in the absence of such bond the lien continues and again becomes effective upon the injunction being dissolved. See 21 Cent. Dig. tit. "Execution," § 235 et seq.

Reason of rule.— In Fletcher's Appeal, 17 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 300, it was held that a creditor who makes use of his execution to protect property for a debtor's use will be postponed to junior execution creditors, because his taking is a fraud on them, but not because his lien is gone.

Delay in issuing execution.— In Illinois a judgment ceases to be a lien on real estate if execution is not issued thereon within one year from its date, and where an execution is not issued for a year after judgment, no lien attaches to property conveyed between the expiration of the year and the time of the actual issuance of the execution. Ford v. Marcall, 107 Ill. 136.

Evidence of unreasonable delay.— Where personalty seized on execution is left in the possession of the judgment debtor and there is evidence of unreasonable delay in offering it for sale, it is error for the court to foreclose inquiry and withdraw the question before the jury by instructing them that the levy was valid at the time the lien of a junior execution attached. Acton v. Knowles, 14 Ohio St. 18.

Failure to give indemnity bond.— The discharge of a levy on account of the judgment creditor's failure to give a bond of indemnity, when required by the sheriff, destroys the lien on the property and thus gives effect, as against a subsequent levy, to a deed executed by defendant while the execution was in the sheriff's hands, but before his levy. Cotten v. Thompson, 25 Ala. 671.

Postponement of sale — Presumption of fraud.— The rule has been laid down in Illinois that fraud arises, as a legal conclusion, will not be fraudulent as against a junior execution;[34] and it has been held that a mere failure, neglect, or refusal, on the part of plaintiff, to give directions as to the manner or time of executing the writ does not constitute such interference with its execution as will have the effect of rendering it dormant.[35]

(2) Modification of Doctrine. In some jurisdictions the rule has been laid down that where the action of the execution creditor shows nothing more than a disposition on the part of plaintiff to treat the family of defendant in the execution with due consideration, by not subjecting them to unnecessary inconvenience from the consent of the judgment creditor to a postponement of the sale under his execution, even where he is actuated only by motives of kindness and leniency toward his debtor, and gives preference to a junior execution levied during the pendency of such postponement. The court held that the agreement was neither fraudulent per se, nor in abrogation of the rights of junior judgment creditors); Everingham v. Ottawa Nat. City Bank, 124 Ill. 527, 17 N. E. 26 [affirming 25 Ill. App. 637]; Lancaster Sav. Inst. v. Wiegand, 2 Pa. L. J. Rep. 246, 3 Pa. L. J. 523 (where it was held that a direction by plaintiff to the sheriff not to push or proceed with his execution does not destroy his priority or lien, if the sheriff refuses or neglects to comply, but proceeds without delay to levy and sell).

Delay in issuing writ of venditioni exponas. — It has been held in Indiana that a delay of twenty-six days in issuing a writ of venditioni exponas does not operate ipso facto to divest the lien of the levy on the execution in a race of diligence between execution creditors. Zug v. Laughlin, 23 Ind. 170.

Delay of five years in making sale. — It has been held in Michigan that, where notice of a levy on real estate is filed in accordance with the Michigan statute, a delay of five years in making sale does not avoid the levy if the judgment creditor has acted in good faith, and a levy and sale made meanwhile cannot affect it. Ward v. Citizens' Bank, 46 Mich. 332, 9 N. W. 437.

Failure to take a rule on the sheriff to return the writ, where plaintiff in execution does not consent to the sheriff's delay in selling the goods levied on, will not cause him to lose his priority. Gillespie v. Keating, 17 Pa. Co. Ct. 418.

Junior creditor's consent to delay. — Where a junior execution creditor consents to a senior execution creditor making use of his execution to protect property for their debtor's use, the first writ does not lose its priority of lien on that account. Fletcher's Appeal, 17 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 300.

Negligence followed by diligence. — It has been held in Pennsylvania that whatever laches an execution creditor may have been guilty of, if he wakes up and orders the sheriff to proceed before another writ comes into his hands, he is safe. Deacon v. Govett, 4 Phila. (Pa.) 7. See also Miller v. Kosch, 74 Hun (N. Y.) 50, 26 N. Y. Suppl. 183.

Negligence of sheriff. — The mere failure of the sheriff to levy a fieri facias on a sufficient amount of defendant's property to satisfy it will not postpone an elder to a junior execution, especially if plaintiff in the former is merely passive, without attempting to control the sheriff's action. Leach v. Williams, 8 Ala. 759.

35. To produce that result, plaintiff must actually give some direction or command which is inconsistent with the mandate of the writ, and which it would be a breach of duty on the part of the sheriff to obey. Leach v. Williams, 8 Ala. 759; Kiehn v. Bestor, 30 Ill. App. 458 (holding that plaintiff is only required to avoid such interference with the officer holding the execution as would render it improper for the latter to enforce payment according to the mandate of the writ); Koren v. Roemheld, 6 Ill. App. 275; Paton v. Westervelt, 2 Duer (N. Y.) 362 (where the senior execution creditor consented, in writing, to a delay on the part of the sheriff to sell, and the sale did not take place for forty-seven days after return-day of the execution. The court held that this did not render the execution dormant and give priority to a junior execution); Stroudsburg Bank's Appeal, 126 Pa. St. 523, 17 Atl. 868. See also Huntsville Branch Bank v. Robinson, 5 Ala. 623.

Bill to remove cloud from title. — Where an execution creditor, before selling land levied on, filed a bill in equity to have an obstruction removed as a fraudulent conveyance, and afterward, but before the determination of the equity suit, another creditor obtained judgment, and levied on and sold the land within twelve months, it was held that the former's lien would have priority. Shepherd v. Woodfolk, 10 Lea (Tenn.) 593.

or annoyance, the lien of such execution is not lost.[36] It has been held in several cases that where an execution levied upon property is stayed by order of the judgment creditor, this of itself is no evidence of fraud, and that there must be some proof of actual fraud, or intention to hinder and delay other creditors, in order to subject a senior execution to postponement.[37]

(VII) As Affected by Leaving Property in Debtor's Possession— (A) English Doctrine. The rule in England is that where property is levied upon and allowed to remain in the custody of the judgment debtor, such levy is regarded as fraudulent, and the property is subject to levy under a junior execution, which thereby gains priority.[38]

(B) Rule in United States. This stringent doctrine, however, has been somewhat modified in the United States, arising from the sentiments of humanity and the peculiar necessities of the country; and the mere fact that the property is left in the possession of the judgment debtor is now held to be not sufficient evidence to establish fraud in the use of the writ;[39] and in most jurisdictions, in order to invalidate the lien, it is necessary to show that the sale was postponed,

Postponement.— It was held in Lantz v. Worthington, 4 Pa. St. 153, 45 Am. Dec. 682, that a postponement of the sale of personal property by an execution creditor to a time before the return-day, being but an adjournment, will not avoid his right for the benefit of a subsequent execution creditor, it being consistent with an intention to levy the debt under the writ.

Where an assignee for the benefit of creditors has intervened, and by arrangements with the sheriff and the first execution creditor, has been permitted to take possession and make sale of the goods, it has been held in some jurisdictions that the above rule does not apply, upon the theory that the assignee is an officer of the law, subject to the supervision and control of the court, and having presumably no interest but to get the most out of the property for the benefit of those entitled by law to the proceeds. and the judgment debtor's possession of the property continued for such a period as to raise the presumption that the action of the officer was inspired by the judgment creditor;[40] but in a few jurisdictions the English doctrine has been adhered to.[41]

(VIII) ALIAS WRITS. In some jurisdictions, by statute, if a term has not elapsed,[42] and an alias writ is delivered to the sheriff before the sale of the prop-

Rule in New Jersey.— Some of the New Jersey cases have modified the common-law doctrine to the extent of holding that where a judgment debtor is permitted after the levy to deal with the property as his own, buying and selling according to his course of business, does not constitute a legal fraud, which, without regard to the bona fides of the transaction, will postpone the execution in favor of a subsequent levy, and that such acts simply afford evidence of a fraudulent intent, which may be rebutted. Caldwell v. Fifield, 24 N. J. L. 150.

Where debtor pays rent for property.— It was held in Sterling v. Van Cleve, 12 N. J. L. 285, that an agreement, by the execution creditor with an execution debtor, to suffer the goods levied on to remain in the possession of the latter for a specified time, in consideration that defendant would pay plaintiff the rent therefor, equivalent to their being kept in good order and of the same value as before, the levy is not a fraud on the subsequent execution creditor, and will not postpone the prior execution.

An execution levied on provisions belonging to the debtor, which are suffered to remain with the debtor and to be consumed in his family, is constructively if not actually fraudulent as against a subsequent attachment or execution. Farrington v. Sinclair, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 429.

Household furniture.— In Cowden v. Brady, 8 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 505, Gibson, J., said that the only exception in Pennsylvania to the rule that the levy is held to be fraudulent where the goods are left in the hands of defendant is confined to household furniture, and even there plaintiff must use reasonable diligence.

41. And the rule has been laid down that if the levying officer fails to take and retain possession of the property, his levy is invalid as against purchasers or creditors subsequently levying, even where the judgment creditor does not direct or acquiesce in the retention of the property by the judgment debtor. 42. Where plaintiff suffers a term to elapse between the return of his first execution and the issuance and delivery to the sheriff of an alias, the lien of the first is lost, and a junior execution issued and delivered to the

erty under a junior execution,[43] in favor of another creditor, the lien of the original writ continues, notwithstanding the alias may not have been delivered to the officer until after such junior execution.[44]

(IX) Writs From Different Jurisdictions.[45] Where a controversy arises as to the priority of executions issued by courts of different jurisdiction — for example, between state and federal courts — the doctrine is well settled that the tribunal which first acquires possession of the property, by seizure of its officer, may dispose of it so as to vest the title in the purchaser, discharged from the claims of creditors of the same grade.[46]

(X) Effect of Sale Under Junior Execution. Where an officer having two executions in his hands against the same debtor levies and sells under the junior execution, such sale is valid, and the property cannot afterward be taken from the purchaser by the senior judgment creditor, nor is his execution a lien upon the proceeds thereof. The only remedy for the party thus injured is against the officer.[47]

In Illinois, by statute, where an execution is issued within one year after judgment rendered, and subsequently an alias execution is levied on real estate within seven years, and after the seven years the execution is returned during its lifetime, and a venditioni exponas is immediately issued, under which a sale is made, there is a continuous lien under and by virtue of the original judgment, and such lien has priority over the liens of junior judgments and executions. Consent to a postponement of sale under his execution, by an execution creditor, renders the lien of his execution dormant, and gives the lien of a junior judgment preference, and the dormancy thus created applies in favor of sales and encumbrances of the property as well as the lien of junior executions. Reformation of mortgage in equity.— A mortgage, after foreclosure and sale thereunder, was reformed in equity so as to include property inadvertently omitted therefrom, and it was held that the lien of the mortgage on such property, after reformation, was superior to that of a judgment obtained after the execution of the mortgage, before its reformation, although it was founded on a debt contracted on the faith of the debtor's apparent unencumbered ownership of such property, since a judgment creditor is not a gages[51] or an attachment properly levied.[52] Ordinarily the seizure of property under an execution founded upon a valid judgment creates a lien on such property superior to any lien or privilege acquired and recorded against it subsequent to such seizure,[53] and this includes a lien acquired by a subsequent writ of attach-bona fide purchaser within Ga. Code, § 3119. Phillips v. Roquemore, 96 Ga. 719, 23 S. E. 855. See to the same effect Milmine v. Burnham, 76 Ill. 362.

Bowman v. Manter, 33 N. H. 530, 66 Am. Dec. 743.

Right of action differentiated from specific lien.— It has been held in Pennsylvania that where the goods of one party are wrongfully and inextricably confused with those of another, the right of the injured person to claim and take enough out of the whole mass to make him whole must be postponed to the right of one who first obtains a specific lien on the whole by execution or otherwise. Wood v. Fales, 1 Phila. (Pa.) 499.

(II) Unrecorded Instruments— (A) Chattel Mortgages.[57] Where statutes regarding chattel mortgages or conditional sales require that such mortgages or sales must be recorded to be valid against bona fide creditors and purchasers for value, the rule is laid down that the lien of an execution levied on property of a judgment debtor is superior to that of a prior unrecorded mortgage or sale of which the judgment creditor had no notice at the date of his levy, even where the mortgage or sale was subsequently filed before sale.[58] In some jurisdictions, however, it has been held that the lien of a bona fide mortgagee under unrecorded mortgage was entitled to priority over the lien of an execution subsequently levied, provided the mortgage is duly recorded before sale under such execution.[59]

Irregularity in issuing execution.— It has been held in Pennsylvania that a creditor who before defendant absconded obtained a domestic attachment cannot set aside a prior execution obtained without authority, and merely on the ground that the judgment on which the execution was obtained was only ripe for execution on the day the execution issued, and that such execution, although irregular, was not void, but voidable, and could only be attacked by defendant. Alexander v. Alexander, 2 Chest. Co. Rep. (Pa.) 401.

Mortgage of after-acquired goods.— It has been held in New Jersey that where there is a mortgage of goods thereafter to be acquired by the mortgagor, an execution levied on the goods after they are so acquired will prevail over the mortgage, since, to constitute a valid sale or mortgage in New Jersey, the vendor or mortgagor must have a present property in the thing sold or mortgaged. (B) Deeds.[60] So, under the various registry statutes, a prior deed to property which is recorded after the levy of an execution on the property can give such deed no effect as against the levy, provided the execution creditor had no notice of the deed at the time of his levy.[61]

(C) Executions. In jurisdictions where the statute requires that the execution shall be entered on an execution docket within a prescribed period after its issuance, and, where this statutory requirement is not complied with, a subsequent purchaser or mortgagee of such property without actual notice of the levy will take the property free from the lien of such execution.[62]

(III) Property Previously Attached.[63] In some states, where real estate has been attached and the attachment preserved, an execution levied under a judgment recovered in such suit operates as a lien from the date of the attachment, prior to all encumbrances created by the debtor subsequent to the levy of the writ of attachment.[64]

c. Proceedings to Determine — (I) General Rule. The rule seems to be reasonable and equitable that a judgment creditor should be permitted to test the validity of claims which have apparent priority over the lien of his execution and which he believes to be founded in fraud; and in most jurisdictions he can, by proper proceedings and upon sufficient showing to the court, have any cloud upon the title to the property seized, such as a fraudulent transfer or mortgage, removed before a sale of the property.[65]

Sale by parol agreement.— Where an oral sale of land is made before the levy of an execution on it, but there is no payment on the purchase, and afterward the land is conveyed to the purchaser, and he then pays and secures consideration, the execution lien is superior to the deed. Jones v. Allen, 88 Ky. 381, 11 S. W. 289, 10 Ky. L. Rep. 962.

The subsequent acknowledgment of an ineffectual conveyance to a voluntary grantee will not relate back to the signing and delivery of the deed so as to prejudice the rights of execution creditors. Hendon v. White, 52 Ala. 597.

Vendee in possession under executory contract.— It was held in an early Kentucky case that a vendee of land under an executory contract, in possession, who obtained a deed for such property from the vendor between the levy of execution thereon and the sale, could not defend his title at law against a personal,[71] has been levied on under an execution issued on a valid judgment, a subsequent purchaser is bound to take notice of such outstanding lien, and acquires the property subject thereto. However, the levy of an officer under an execution does not convert the title of defendant in execution into a mere right of action, and he may still transfer his title to the property as if no levy had been made, so long as the property remains in custodia legis, subject to the question of right arising from the levy.[72]

(II) Transfer or Levy Without Visible Change of Possession. By the common-law rule, a grant or assignment of goods and chattels is valid between the parties without actual delivery, but as to creditors the title is not considered as perfect unless possession accompanies and follows the deed; and notice to a third person of a sale or assignment of chattels, where possession has never been taken under the sale or assignment, does not affect the right of the officer to seize purchaser under the execution. Butts v. Chinn, 4 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 641.

Orchard v. Williamson, 6 J. J. Marsh. 558, 22 Am. Dec. 102. See also State v. Blundin, 32 Mo. 387, laying down the same rule.

Levy on growing crop.— Under the Tennessee statute, an execution cannot be levied on a growing crop "until the fifteenth of November, after such crop is mature." It has been held under this statute that a levy made in December under an execution tested as of the July preceding did not take precedence of a sale of such crop in September, before its maturity, the effect of the statute being to postpone the lien of the execution. Sale between issuance of original and alias fieri facias.— It was held in Hardy v. Jasper, 14 N. C. 158, that where an original fieri facias is issued to one county and an alias issued to another, a sale by the judgment the property in execution as the property of the vendor or assignor.[73] Conversely, where personal property levied on under execution is suffered to remain in the possession of the execution debtor by order of the judgment creditor, a subsequent purchaser of such property for a valuable consideration will generally acquire title, free from the lien of the execution.[74]

(III) Delay in Enforcing Writ. The general rule[75] is that the judgment creditor acquires no lien, even as against volunteers, by causing his writ to be issued and then countermanding the levy thereof, or by giving instructions to the officer not to levy until directed to do so.[76] An inactive levy, lying dormant and without notice to an innocent purchaser, is evidence of grosser negligence and greater wrong to the purchaser than no levy at all, and a bona fide purchaser of property, without notice of any judgment or levy thereon, holds the property discharged from the lien of any execution under a judgment against his vendor, debtor of his property situated in the latter county, made while the first writ was in the hands of the sheriff, was valid.

See, however, McGee v. Riddlesbarger, 39 Mo. 365, holding that where a party conveyed real estate by deed of mortgage and also "all his notes, bonds and evidences of debt," the title to such choses in action, although not delivered, passed to the mortgagee as against a subsequent execution creditor.

Possession obtained before execution issued.— However, upon the bona fide sale of property, where the vendee does not take possession at the time of the sale, yet if he acquires possession before an execution is issued against the vendor, it has been held that his title is good against the execution creditor. McKinley v. Ensell, 2 Gratt. (Va.) 333.

Under a verbal contract for the sale of an article to be manufactured by the seller, if the contract is within the statute of frauds the title does not pass to the buyer until delivery, and where a valid execution against the vendor is placed in the sheriff's hands in the interim between the manufacture and delivery of the article, the execution lien is superior to the vendee's title. Sawyer v. Ware, 36 Ala. 675.

Unregistered bill of sale.— It was held in Johnson v. Morgan, 2 Humphr. (Tenn.) 115, that, where a bill of sale of slaves is not registered before the lien of an execution attaches, they will be subject to the execution.

Wrongful possession.— Where a party wrongfully obtains possession of personal property which has been previously levied on under execution and sells the same, his vendee takes title subject to the lien of the execution. Ross v. Richolson, 3 Kan. App. 239, 49 Pac. 97.

75. However, under statutes which provide that the goods and chattels of a judgment debtor are bound by the execution from the time it is issued to the sheriff, although no levy is made, except as against bona fide purchasers for value and subsequent judgment creditors, it has been held that subsequent instructions to the sheriff not to levy will not, as to volunteers, impair or affect the lien created by delivery of the writ to the officer. Crane v. Penny, 2 Fed. 187, holding that an assignee in bankruptcy is not a purchaser for value but a volunteer, and that as the bankrupt could not avail himself of the objection that the execution was dormant, neither could the assignee.

See McIntyre v. Sanford, 9 Daly 21, holding that the rules applicable to dormant executions do not apply to a levy upon real estate, for the reason that an execution against real estate, no matter when issued, relates back to the docketing of the judgment and is a mere power of sale in the hands of the sheriff; while as against personal property an execution becomes a lien only when levied, and such an execution is not allowed to lie dormant in the hands of the sheriff to be levied only when subsequent executions come into his hands.

See, however, Keel v. Larkin, 72 Ala. 493, holding that as against defendant in execution, his heirs or personal representatives, the lien of an execution is not lost or sus-where he has been in possession for the statutory period pending an inactive levy.[77]

(iv) Sale After Issuance, but Before Levy. In those jurisdictions in which the lien of an execution does not attach until actual levy, the title of a bona fide vendee or assignee of property of the judgment debtor acquired after the issuance, but before the levy of the execution, is superior to the lien of the execution.[78] And in several states in which the execution is a lien from the time of its delivery to the officer, the same result is accomplished by statutory provision, declaring that the lien of the execution cannot be enforced as against bona fide purchasers and encumbrancers acquiring their title prior to the levy and without notice of the writ.[79]

5. Duration of Lien[80] — a. General Rule. Since the object of the lien is to prevent the transfer of the property subject to execution, the general rule is that the lien continues as long as the writ remains in force, in order that property may be taken and sold thereunder, and that the lien ceases when the writ is functus officio.[81]

b. Where No Actual Levy.[82] In the absence of statutory provisions to the con-

In Illinois, where an execution is issued to another county and there levied on lands and the certificate of levy is duly filed, the lien of the levy will continue for seven years from the time the judgment becomes a lien in the county in which it was rendered (Rainey v. Nance, 54 Ill. 29); and under the act of 1872, declaring judgments liens on real estate for seven years from their rendition or revival where execution is issued within one year, and providing that real estate levied on may be sold within a year after such seven years, it has been held that the lien on lands levied on continues for one year after the expiration of the seven years (Dobbins v. Peoria First Nat. Bank, 112 Ill. 553).

In Indiana under Rev. St. (1881) § 741, the lien on personalty obtained by levy of an execution continues only thirty days from the return of the writ unless an alias writ is issued. Wheeler v. Haines, 114 Ind. 108, 15 N. E. 827.

In Ohio under Rev. St. § 1212, where a judgment is rendered in one county and execution is issued thereon to the sheriff of another county, and by him levied on land in his county, and such execution is duly entered on the foreign execution docket, it thereby becomes a lien on such land, and will continue for a period of five years from the date of such levy as against subsequent purchasers from the execution debtor, notwithstanding the execution is returned by the sheriff without further proceedings by order of the judgment creditor. Decatur Branch Bank v. McCollum, 20 Ala. 280.

In South Carolina Code, § 311, provides that an execution shall have active energy from the time it is first lodged until the regular term of the court from which it is issued, which shall follow next after the full completion of five years from its lodging. McLaurin v. Kelly, 40 S. C. 486, 19 S. E. 143. Warren v. Jones, 9 S. C. 288.

(II) Necessity For Alias or Pluries Writs.[88] In some jurisdictions the rule is that where an original writ of fieri facias is returned unsatisfied, in order that its lien may be preserved plaintiff must sue out an alias writ to the next term and continue to renew the same from term to term, and in the event that an alias writ is not sued out to each succeeding term, the lien created by the first writ is discharged.[89]

d. Effect of Expiration of Judgment Lien. Where a general lien is created by the judgment,[90] it is held in some jurisdictions that the levy of an execution during the existence of a judgment lien does not create a new lien or extend the lien of the judgment,[91] and at the expiration of the lien of the judgment, the lien of the execution likewise expires.[92]

e. Abatement of Writ by Death of a Party[93] — (I) Judgment Creditor. Since the writ is deemed to be in process of execution from its teste at common law, and from its delivery to the officer under statutes where the common-law fiction of relation to the day of the teste has been abolished,[94] in the absence of express statutory provision, a writ of execution in the hands of an officer is not abated by the death of the judgment creditor, and it is the duty of the officer to proceed to execute the writ against the personal or real property of defendant notwithstanding the death of the judgment creditor, no scire facias or other revival being necessary, and the lien of the execution continues.[95] However, in several jurisdictions it has been held that where a personal judgment is taken and

In Virginia it was held in Hicks v. Roanoke Brick Co., 94 Va. 741, 27 S. E. 596, that under Code (1887), § 3602, the lien of the execution continues so long as the judgment can be enforced. See also Charron v. Boswell, 18 Gratt. 216; Puryear v. Taylor, 12 Gratt. 401.

See, however, Mendenhall v. Burnette, 58 Kan. 355, 49 Pac. 93, holding that an execution on a judgment, revived after the death of defendant against his executors, who hold title to lands under his will, can only be levied on the property bound by the lien of the judgment, and cannot be levied on personal property which passed into the hands of the executors, nor on lands to which the lien did not attach.

In Kentucky the rule has been laid down that the lien created by the levy of an execution on the land of defendant in his lifetime is not discharged by his death before a sale thereof, and may be enforced in equity; yet the death of defendant divests the power of the sheriff to make a sale under such levy until a revival of the judgment against the heirs of the deceased. Burge v. Brown, 5 Bush 535, 96 Am. Dec. 369; Holeman v. Holeman, 2 Bush 514; Huston v. Duncan, 1 Bush 205. See also Howe v. Lane, 8 Ky. L. Rep. 783, holding that the death of defendant in an execution which has been levied on personal property does not discharge the levy, but until it is revived, suspends all power of the sheriff except to maintain the status existing under the levy when defendant died. See, however, Bristow v. Payton, 2 T. B. Mon. 91, 15 Am. Dec. 134, holding that after the death of defendant in execution the sheriff cannot seize, even where a levy has been previously made, without a revivor.

In Tennessee it has been held that where the execution debtor dies after a levy on his land, but before a sale, a sale made thereunder without a scire facias issued against the heirs is void. Stockard v. Pinkard, 6 Humphr. 119. See also McKnight v. Hughes, 4 Lea 522, holding that where a lien has been fixed upon land by the levy of an execution and the debtor dies before sale, his heirs may demand exhaustion of personal assets before the sale of the land.

Dissolution of debtor corporation after levy.— Under the laws of South Carolina, after an execution has been levied on real estate of a corporation defendant, neither the lien created thereby nor the validity of the sale thereunder to convey title is affected by the dissolution of the corporation. Execution tested and issued after death of defendant.— It was held in Shelton v. Hamilton, 23 Miss. 496, 57 Am. Dec. 149, that a sale made under execution tested and issued after the death of defendant therein, and without a revival of the judgment, is voidable but not void.

Alias writs.— It has been held under Ala. Code (1876), §§ 3213, 2633, that where, during the lifetime of a judgment debtor, an execution is received by the sheriff, the land may be sold under levy after the debtor's death if the lien of the execution is preserved by the issue of alias executions. f. Arrest of Debtor Under Capias Satisfaciendum.[3] By the common-law rule a judgment creditor, by committing the body of his debtor to prison on his execution, released his lien on the property and could not thereafter levy on it unless the debtor died in custody or escaped.[4]

g. Satisfaction of Judgment.[5] Where, before the sale of property under an execution levied thereon, the judgment under which the execution was issued is satisfied, the lien of the execution is thereby terminated and a sale thereunder is void.[6]

B. Levy or Extent — 1. Definition. The levy of an execution has been defined to be the acts by which an officer sets apart or appropriates, for the purpose of satisfying the command of the writ, a part or the whole of a judgment debtor's property.[7]

b. Directions to Officer — (i) In General. The judgment creditor has a right to give directions to the officer as to the time and manner of executing the writ when he delivers the process to him, and the officer receiving it under such instructions is bound to follow them if they are not in conflict with the law, and on failure is answerable for the consequences.[10] However, he is not obligated to go with the officer to defendant or to point out property to be levied upon.[11]

(ii) Withdrawal of Writ. The rule has been laid down in some jurisdictions that where the judgment creditor has placed an execution in the hands of the sheriff, he may withdraw it before it is so acted on[12] that its withdrawal would be injurious to third parties, and the direction to the sheriff not to act on the writ is equivalent to its withdrawal.[13]

authority, to enable the sheriff to sell the property and vest in the purchaser at the sale a valid title, a levy upon the property so sold is indispensable.[14] In some jurisdictions, however, it is held that as far as real property is concerned the validity of the title of the vendee at a sheriff's sale is not dependent upon a valid levy.[15]

b. Waiver. A judgment debtor may, however, waive a levy upon his property, and where there is such a waiver the sale passes title as effectually as if a valid levy had been actually made.[16]

4. Who May Execute Process — a. General Rule. The levy of the writ of execution must be made by an officer duly qualified to act under it and cannot be made by a private person.[17]

De facto officer.— The duly appointed constable who is exercising the duty of his office, although he has not given the bond required by law, is a de facto officer, and a levy by him is not void. Gunn v. Tackett, 67 Ga. 725; Nason v. Dillingham, 15 Mass. 170.

The justice of the peace has no authority to appoint a person to levy a writ of execution issued from the district court. Webb v. Harris, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 1289.

Where the statute prescribes the particular officer or class of officers who must execute the writ, the officer attempting to levy thereunder must be the officer or one of the class common law, an officer cannot personally, or by his deputy, levy an execution in which he is to any degree interested.[18]

5. Scope of Authority[19] — a. Latitude Permitted in Selecting Property. An officer to whom a writ is delivered for execution is not compelled to levy on the particular property pointed out by the judgment creditor, provided he levies on other property sufficient to satisfy the process,[20] nor is he to follow the instructions of the judgment creditor in the execution of the writ if they are oppressive or will produce a great sacrifice of the property of the judgment debtor.[21]

Authority regulated by amount of execution.— Under a Massachusetts statute giving a constable authority to serve process within his own town in any proper case where the subject-matter involved does not exceed three hundred dollars, it has been held that his authority to serve process under an execution is determined by the amount for which the execution was issued, and not by the amount of the judgment before any of it was collected. Dalton-Ingersoll Co. v. Hubbard, 174 Mass. 307, 54 N. E. 862.

Dual tenure of office.— It was held in Godwin v. Gregg, 28 Me. 188, 48 Am. Dec. 489, that the fact that the officer making the levy of an execution is a coroner, holding at the time one commission as a coroner and another as a justice of the peace, did not render the levy void.

Levy and sale by bailiff.— It was held in Pruit v. Lowry, 1 Port. (Ala.) 101, that a levy and sale by one constable acting as bailiff for another, which were recognized and returned by the other, were void, and the purchaser's title under such sale and return was invalid.

Execution for costs.—It was held in Vining v. Officers of Ct., 86 Ga. 127, 12 S. E. 298, that it was the invariable rule in Georgia for the sheriff or other levying officer to levy an execution for costs, whether he be interested in the costs or not, and that his interest therein would not invalidate the levy.

Right to commissions.— It was held in Badley v. Ladd, 70 Miss. 688, 12 So. 832, that the fact that a person deputized to make a levy to satisfy a judgment had prior thereto been retained as an attorney to collect the claim on which the judgment was rendered, and would be entitled to commissions for collection thereof, was no ground to quash the levy, as the law allows commissions to the officers for collecting money, and the right to such commissions could not properly be held a disqualification to act as special deputy.

Sheriff member of banking corporation.— It was held in Adams v. Wiscasset Bank, 1 Me. 361, 10 Am. Dec. 88, that a sheriff who was a member of a banking corporation might serve process thereon, because, not being personally liable, he was not a party to the action.

except at the suit of the king, for when the king is a party the officer may break the house either to arrest defendant or to do other execution of process.[27]

(B) Of Third Person. However, an officer is justified, after demand for admittance and refusal, in breaking open the outer doors of a third person's house in order to execute a writ of fieri facias upon the judgment debtor's property removed thither to avoid an execution.[28]

(II) Forcing Inner Doors of Dwelling-House. Where, however, in executing a writ of fieri facias, an officer has gained a peaceful entry into a house, if he finds the inner doors closed or fastened so that he is unable to seize the goods, he may, in case they are not opened on demand, break them open.[29]

jurisdictions it is held that an execution, made returnable to a court on a certain day, may be executed at any time during that day while such court is in session, but not after its adjournment.[32] Where an officer has sold property under a writ of execution, the law presumes, his return being silent upon the subject, that he did his duty by levying the execution while it was still in full force.[33]

7. Mode and Sufficiency of Levy[34] — a. In General. The mode in which all writs and precepts shall be served and executed is now regulated by statute, and unless the officer or his deputies in levying a writ of fieri facias substantially complies with the provisions of the statute their acts are invalid and they become trespassers.[35] Plaintiff in execution has the unconditional and absolute right to have his process executed in the usual and customary way, that is, by levy and sale of any property belonging to defendant which may be subject to execution.[36]

b. Against Joint Debtors. Where judgment is taken and execution issued jointly, against two defendants, it is immaterial so far as they are concerned, whether the sheriff first levies on joint property or not.[37]

c. Demand Before Levy — (I) Necessity. As a general rule[38] the officer is not required to give notice to the judgment debtor of the issuance of the writ, or to make any formal demand on him for the payment of the execution, but may proceed forthwith to levy the same.[39]

(II) Sufficiency. Under statutes requiring a formal demand upon the judgment debtor for payment before the levy of the execution, it has been held that this demand must be made upon the debtor personally, or at his usual place of abode.[40] The omission, however, of such demand and notice before levy is a mere irregularity and will not render the levy invalid or void, and no relief will be granted to the judgment debtor where he does not appear to have been in any way prejudiced by the omission of the officer.[41]

d. Selection of Property[42] — (I) Right of Judgment Debtor. In a majority of the states, by force of statute, the judgment debtor is now entitled to the right to select and point out to the officer property upon which he desires the levy to Execution creditor as mortgagee.— Under La. Code, § 648, providing that the debtor shall not have the right of pointing out to the sheriff the property he wishes seized on execution if the execution creditor has a mortgage on part of the debtor's property, it was held that where the creditor had a mortgage on the property seized, no objection could be based on the refusal to allow the debtor to point out the property he wished seized. Lambeth v. Sentell, 38 La. Ann. 691.

Insolvency of defendant.— It has been held under La. Code Pr. arts. 726, 727, that the fact that defendant in execution is insolvent does not excuse the sheriff from calling on plaintiff to point out property of defendant subject to execution. Taylor v. Hancock, 19 La. Ann. 466.

Right of plaintiff to make selection.—Under an Illinois statute plaintiff might select what property he desired levied on, where the statute did not particularly direct him. Thorpe v. Wheeler, 23 Ill. 544; Evans v. Landon, 6 Ill. 307.

Sufficiency of designation.— Where the sheriff held execution against a debtor, who gave him a written surrender of the amount and directed him to levy, and although the debtor owned several tracts which lay adjoining, yet it was held sufficient that he directed the levy on a particular portion described in the surrender. Vallandingham v. Worthington, 85 Ky. 83, 2 S. W. 772, 8 Ky. L. Rep. 707.

Where partial levy has been made.— It has been held in Texas that defendant in execution desiring to exercise his right to point out property to be levied on, after a partial levy has been made, must point out other property as a substitute liable to execution and sufficient, or if such other property is insufficient, he must request the sheriff to levy on it also and sell it first, and if he proposes to exercise his right he must put the officer in possession of the property or give him such control over it as may enable him to deliver it to the purchaser. Ross v. Lister, 14 Tex. 469.

44. In the absence of a showing that such right was exercised by defendant and disregarded by the officer, the former cannot be heard to complain, nor can a stranger to the writ, having no interest in or lien upon the property, be permitted to question the regularity of the levy for such cause. Insufficient designation of property.— In Anderson v. Oldham, 82 Tex. 228, 18 S. W. 557, it was held that a request by a judgment debtor to the officer to levy on horses in a lot in town, in the absence of more specific designation, did not make it the officer's duty to levy thereon before levying on real estate under the statute requiring that levy shall first be made on property designated by defendant, provided that if it be personal property defendant deliver it into the officer's possession.

Property encumbered in excess of value.— If the property pointed out by a debtor to the officer is encumbered by recorded liens which exceed its value, the creditor may disregard the debtor's election and seize other property belonging to him. Todd v. Gordy, 29 La. Ann. 498.

e. Personal Property— (I) Possession or Control[46]— (A) General Rule. The rule is well settled that to constitute a valid levy upon personal property the property must be within the power and control of the officer when the levy is made, and he must take it into his possession within a reasonable time thereafter, and in such an open, public, and unequivocal manner as to apprise everybody that it has been taken in execution.[47] In some of the cases the rule has been thus stated: The officer must deal with the property in such a manner, in order to constitute a valid levy, as would, without the protection of the execution, make him a trespasser.[48]

Property left with defendant.— In Dorrance v. Com., 13 Pa. St. 160, it was held that it is not necessary, to constitute a valid levy of an execution, that the property levied on should be taken into actual possession, but that it is sufficient if it be forthcoming to answer the exigencies of the writ. But see Auby v. Rathbun, 11 S. D. 474, 78 N. W. 952, where the officer merely stated to the debtor that he came to levy on his property, at the same time giving the debtor a written notice and stating that the sheriff would probably never come for the property, and he assumed no control over the property, either personally or by an agent, and the levy was held to be insufficient. levy, provided he makes an inventory of the property levied on, and the control of the property by the officer is acknowledged or acquiesced in by the judgment debtor.[51]

(D) Partial Seizure. The rule is well settled that where an officer makes a seizure of a part of the property of the judgment debtor in a building, by virtue of a fieri facias, in the name of the whole property, it is a valid levy upon all of the property, and the inventory made out by the officer furnishes the means of ascertaining what goods were levied on.[52]

(E) Failure to Take Forthcoming Bond. Failure of the officer to take a forthcoming and delivery bond as authorized by statute does not affect the validity of the levy.[53]

(F) Secret Levy. Since the general rule is that a levy, in order to be valid, should be open and notorious,[54] a secret levy will as a rule be held to be invalid as against third persons.[55]

(II) Particular Classes of Property—(A) Fixtures and Machinery. The general rule is that fixtures and ponderous machinery, being incapable of actual possession, any notorious act of the officer asserting title under a levy is sufficient.[56]

(D) Corporate Stock. Corporate stock being of such character and often so situated as not to be capable of actual seizure by the officer, the mode of levy upon such property is regulated entirely by special statutory enactments, the usual method of making levy being by leaving a copy of the writ with a designated officer of the corporation, together with a notice setting forth the shares of stock held by the judgment debtor which are levied on under the writ.[59]

(E) Promissory Notes and Other Evidences of Indebtedness. In jurisdictions where the rule is adhered to that, in order to constitute a valid levy on tangible property, such property must be taken into actual possession by the officer, a sale of a bond, note, or other evidence of indebtedness belonging to the judgment debtor, but never in the possession of the officer, confers no title and is void for the reason that it has never been a valid levy upon such property.[60]

(F) Rights of Action in General. At common law choses in action were not subject to levy under execution,[61] and now in a majority of jurisdictions they are reached by creditors' suits,[62] garnishment,[63] or proceedings supplementary to execution.[64] In some jurisdictions, however, a valid levy of incorporeal rights is effected by service of notice of the levy upon the person indebted to the judgment debtor and also upon the judgment debtor.[65]

(G) Intermingled Property. Where a judgment debtor's property is intermingled with that of a third person, although without such person's knowledge, the officer may levy upon and hold the whole until the stranger identifies his property and demands a redelivery.[66]

(H) Property Previously Attached. Where an execution creditor has a lien upon property by virtue of a prior valid attachment thereof, the delivery of the execution to the proper officer constitutes a valid levy upon such property.[67]

(i) Property Held by Tenants in Common or Joint Owners. The rule has been laid down in some jurisdictions that where a judgment debtor owns property as tenant in common or joint owner with others, it is the duty of the officer to levy upon and take into his custody the whole of the property, although he can only sell the judgment debtor's undivided interest therein.[68] In other jurisdictions, however, it has been held that, where personal property is owned in common, an execution against one part owner cannot be rightfully levied on the whole property, but only on the debtor's share therein.[69]

f. Exhaustion of Personalty Before Levy on Realty — (i) General Rule. Under the general policy of the law, the judgment creditor is not permitted to levy upon real or personal property indiscriminately, at his option, and since, under the influence of the common law, the interests of the judgment debtor are supposed to be best conserved by allowing him to retain his realty in preference to his personalty, the general rule is that the officer must exhaust the personal estate of the judgment debtor subject to execution before proceeding to levy upon his real estate.[70] However, it has been held under several statutes requiring the exhaustion of personalty before the levy of execution upon realty of the judgof the officer did not constitute a taking in execution, since the previous attachment of the property by the officer was invalid. See, however, Santa Fé Bank v. Haskell County Bank, 59 Kan. 354, 53 Pac. 132, in which it was held by a divided court that where property is in the hands of an officer by virtue of an attachment in another suit, the mere receipt of an execution and indorsement thereon of the time of its receipt does not operate as a constructive levy of the execution on such property.

ment debtor, that where the judgment debtor fails to call the sheriff's attention to his personalty, even though he may possess sufficient personalty to satisfy the execution, the execution may be levied first upon realty.[71] Statutory enactments in regard to the order in which property of the judgment debtor shall be subjected to levy under execution are, however, usually regarded as directory only, and where the officer fails to comply therewith it renders the levy thereunder voidable only, and not void, and a sale based upon such levy will be sustained when collaterally attacked.[72]

(II) Where Sufficient Personalty Cannot Be Found. An officer is justified in subjecting real property of the execution debtor under his writ if he has no knowledge of personal property out of which his levy might be made, and where there is no evidence that by the exercise of reasonable diligence he could have discovered such property;[73] and a return by the officer of "no personal

Hanson v. Barnes, 3 Gill & J. (Md.) 359, 367, 22 Am. Dec. 322.

Under an execution against goods and chattels, it has been held that a seizure of real estate is invalid. Thompson v. Chauveau, 7 Mart. N. S. (La.) 331, 18 Am. Dec. 246.

Under the Illinois statute, however, the above rule is reversed and personal property cannot be taken under execution until after the judgment debtor has been given the opportunity to turn over real estate. Pitts v. Magie, 24 Ill. 610; Tuttle v. Wilson, 24 Ill. 553; Ryder v. Buckmaster, 4 Ill. 196; Metz v. McAvoy Brewing Co., 98 Ill. App. 584. The judgment debtor, however, who surrenders certain personal property to the officer in satisfaction of the execution cannot recall that property and turn over real estate in lieu thereof. Larson v. Laird, 36 Ill. App. 402.

Under the Vermont statute a debtor's real estate is liable for his debts as well as his personalty, and subject to execution at the judgment creditor's election. And where an officer holding an execution is directed by the creditor to levy on realty, it is his duty to do so. However, in the absence of such direction he is not bound to levy on realty until after the personalty is sold and executed. Newbury Bank v. Baldwin, 31 Vt. 311.

Where personalty is encumbered.— It was held in Detrick v. State Bank, 6 Ind. 439, that a sheriff need not levy an execution on personalty before proceeding against the real estate of the debtor, if the personalty is so encumbered with mortgages that it would not probably sell for anything.

Effect of fraudulent conveyance.— It has been held in North Carolina that where defendant in execution has conveyed all his property, both real and personal, to a third person, the judgment creditor is entitled to direct the officer to levy on the real estate before the personalty, since the debtor, by fraudulent conveyance of his property, waives the right to have his personalty levied on and exhausted before his realty. property found" is sufficient to justify a levy upon the real property of the judgment debtor.[74]

(III) Levy at Direction of Judgment Debtor. The rule seems to be well settled that the officer holding an execution against the judgment debtor may at the request of the latter levy upon his real estate to the exclusion of his personalty, even where there is a sufficient amount of personalty to satisfy the execution.[75]

(IV) Execution Against Joint Debtors. Under an execution against several joint defendants, where there is a finding of no personal property as to one of the defendants, the writ may be levied on his real estate before exhausting the personal estate of the other defendant.[76]

g. Real Property — (I) General Rule. In the absence of statute to the contrary, it seems to be the general rule in the United States that a levy upon or seizure of real property under an execution may be legally made without the officer going upon the premises, by simply indorsing a description of the property upon the writ and stating that it is levied upon for the purpose thereof.[77] In

See, however, Hassell v. Kentucky Southern Bank, 2 Head (Tenn.) 381, holding that if some of the defendants have personal property liable to the satisfaction of the debt and others have not, it is the duty of the officer to proceed against the former, or either of them, until sufficient property is found to discharge the debt.

(B) Rule in New England. In several of the New England states, however, it is provided by statute that the officer shall set off the land levied upon by metes and bounds, and not an undivided portion of it, except in cases where the property cannot be divided without great injury to the parties, when the officer may set off such an undivided portion of the real estate as shall be sufficient to satisfy the execution.[82]

(C) Interest of Joint Tenants or Tenants in Common. The rule is well settled that an execution against a judgment debtor holding land in joint tenancy, or tenancy in common, cannot be levied on part of such land by metes and bounds, but must be extended over the whole tract, and such undivided proportion taken as will satisfy the debt.[83] Where a levy is made upon property of a judgment debtor in which third parties are interested as cotenants or tenants in common, it is essential that the interest on which the levy is made be definitely specified.[84]

(D) Interest of Tenant For Life. An execution against a tenant for life may be levied either on the land or on the rents and profits.[85]

Levy on estate in reversion.— It has been held in Maine that it is no objection to a levy that it was made upon an undivided third of an estate in reversion, of which the debtor owned one undivided half, as such rule would practically defeat the rights of all creditors whose demands were less in value than the interest of the debtor. (E) Equity of Redemption. In some jurisdictions, by statute, in the case of mortgaged realty, the execution creditor has the election to restrict his levy to the equity of redemption or to levy on the land.[86] In other jurisdictions, however, the statute provides that where the land sought to be subjected is encumbered by a mortgage, the equity of redemption should be levied on eo nomine, and a levy on the land does not operate to pass to the purchaser the equity of redemption.[87]

(III) Excessive Levy. Where an execution is levied on more land than the judgment debtor owns, or on more than his share in a certain tract of land, the levy is nevertheless valid for as much of the land as he does own, or for his share thereof.[88]

h. Property Held Under Valid Levy — (I) Subsequent Writs in Hands of Levying Officer. Where an officer has property of a judgment debtor in his possession by virtue of a valid levy, the reception of a second writ of execution operates as a constructive levy upon all the property held by him by virtue of the first writ.[89] Where, however, the levy under the original writ in the hands of Property deposited with custodian.— It has been held in Illinois that property deposited by the sheriff with a custodian, as provided by the Illinois act of Feb. 22, 1861, is in the actual possession of the custodian and the sheriff's possession becomes constructive only, and no levy by him under any subsequent process is valid unless he indorses it thereon in the sight of the property and with notice to the custodian. Chittenden v. Rogers, 42 Ill. 100.

the officer is void, a constructive levy of subsequent execution made by indorsement will not bind the property against subsequent executions actually levied thereon.[90]

(II) Subsequent Writs in Hands of Different Officers. Since an officer holding a subsequent writ is not authorized to take property into his control to the exclusion of an officer in possession thereof by virtue of a prior writ, a notification by the officer holding a subsequent writ to the officer in possession, and the indorsement of the levy upon the writ, constitutes a valid levy.[91]

i. Successive Levies Under Same Writ — (I) General Rule. The rule is universally recognized that an officer, notwithstanding the prior levy, is authorized, at any time before the return-day of the writ, to make such further levies upon the property of the judgment debtor as may be necessary to satisfy the execution in his hands.[92]

(II) Where Sufficient Property Is Levied on. However, after a sufficient levy upon the judgment debtor's property, his property is not subject to further levy so long as the property first levied upon is detained from him, but upon such property being restored to him, his property is liable to a further levy within the life of the writ.[93]

(III) Property of Joint Defendants. Where an execution issues on a judgment against two or more joint defendants, or a principal and surety, and the execution is levied upon the property of one of the defendants or the principal, but nothing is realized under such levy, the fact of the former levy will not invalidate a subsequent levy upon and sale of the property of the other co-defendant or surety.[94]

j. Notice of Levy[95]— (I) Necessity. In some jurisdictions the judgment debtor is by statutory enactment entitled to notice of levy upon his property, and of the time fixed for the sale thereof.[96] In one jurisdiction the statute requires notice of levy to be given only where the property sought to be levied upon is situated in a county other than that of the residence of the judgment debtor, or than that from which the execution issued;[97] in another, notice of the levy is required to be given to the judgment debtor only when he is in actual occupation and possession of the property;[98] and in yet another jurisdiction, where the officer levies upon property of joint debtors in the possession of one of them, the Reason of rule.— In McDonogh v. Garland, 7 La. Ann. 143, it was stated that the object of the notice required to be given to the judgment debtor of the seizure of his property under execution is to apprise him of what property the sheriff takes in execution and of what he claims to take possession by virtue of the seizure.

Land subject to a judgment lien.— It has been held under Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 691, that in levying execution on land subject to the judgment lien, it is not necessary that the sheriff file a copy of the writ with the recorder of the county, a description of the property levied on, or a notice that it is levied on, as in the case of land attached. Lehnhardt v. Jennings, 119 Cal. 192, 48 Pac. 56, 51 Pac. 195.

Under Ky. St. § 58a, subs. 2, no execution or levy or sale thereunder shall affect the right of a subsequent purchaser of any land upon which such execution may have been levied, except from the time notice of such execution shall be filed in the office of the clerk of the court from which such execution issued. Park v. McReynolds, 111 Ky. 651, 64 S. W. 517, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 894.

Evidence of notice.— It was held in Ward v. Saunders, 28 N. C. 382, that the records of the court ordering the venditioni exponas are sufficient evidence of notice to defendant of the levy on land.

97. Smith v. Thompson, 169 Mo. 553, 69 S. W. 1049; Harness v. Cravens, 126 Mo. 233, 28 S. W. 971; Lohmann v. Stocke, 94 Mo. 672, 8 S. Dec. 575.

Where mortgaged land is sold under a special fieri facias notice of execution required to be given to a judgment debtor residing out of the county need not be given. Hobein v. Drewell, 20 Mo. 450; Hobein v. Murphy, 20 Mo. 447, 64 Am. Dec. 194.

98. Bennett v. Burton, 44 Iowa 550; Babcock v. Gurney, 42 Iowa 154; Fleming v. Maddox, 30 Iowa 239 (holding that one who erects a sawmill on land and has male employees residing thereon, although himself absent and residing in another county, is "in actual possession" and "occupation" of the land within the meaning of Iowa St. (1860) § 3318, entitling such persons to written notice of levy); Jansen v. Woodbury, 16 Iowa 515.

statute requires him to notify the other joint debtors of such levy, and a sale without such notification is invalid.[99] However, the better doctrine is that the failure of the officer to give personal notice of the levy to the judgment debtor, where so required by statute, is a mere irregularity and does not render the sale made thereunder void.[1]

(II) SERVICE. Under statutes requiring service of notice of the levy upon the judgment debtor, it has been usually held that this service must be upon the judgment debtor personally, or his authorized agent.[2]

(III) WAIVER. The statutory notice required to be given to the judgment debtor is for his benefit exclusively, and may be waived by him without prejudicing the rights of a purchaser or vitiating his title.[3] Waiver of notice on the part of the judgment debtor will be presumed from various overt acts, such as the execution of a forthcoming bond,[4] the appearance of the judgment debtor in person or by agent at the sale and bidding upon the property,[5] or where the judgment debtor voluntarily points out property for levy.[6]

k. Entry or Indorsement of Levy[7]—(I) NECESSITY. In a majority of jurisdictions the officer is required to indorse or enter upon the writ an inventory of the property seized, or at least a memorandum of the levy, at the time thereof, or within a reasonable time thereafter, and he will be held liable for any loss resulting from his failure to do so;[8] several jurisdictions extend this rule so far as

Ann. 551 (holding that where notice of an order of seizure and sale is given to defendant as executrix, she having full authority as such to represent the estate in the proceeding, her qualifying as administratrix did not render it necessary that she should be notified in this latter capacity also); Ball v. Crockett, 9 La. (Tenn.) 79, holding that personal service is not necessary, and that it is sufficient for the officer to leave a written notice at the house of defendant.

Notice to executor or administrator.— It has been held in Massachusetts that where an execution against the property of one deceased is levied on an equity of redemption, the notice required by statute must be given to the executor or administrator of the deceased or his legal representative, and not to his heirs. Atkins v. Sawyer, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 351, 11 Am. Dec. 188. Parish v. Turner, 27 N. C. 279.

If the debtor conceals himself, besides service on the curator ad hoc appointed to represent him in the selection of an appraiser on execution, notice should also be left at the place where defendant last resided. Farrell v. Klumpp, 13 La. Ann. 311.

(II) Sufficiency—(A) Real Property—(1) Description of Land—(a) In General. (B) Personal Property. While in a majority of jurisdictions a failure to indorse on the writ a description of the personal property levied on thereunder will not invalidate the levy, yet in cases where the property is not taken immediately into actual custody by the officer he should indorse on the writ a list or description of the property, so that it be readily identified.[15]

(C) Signature. In the absence of express statutory provision, the omission of the signature of the officer from his indorsement made on the writ is a mere irregularity and not fatal to the levy, and the officer may amend the indorsement by adding his signature thereafter.[16]

(III) TIME OF. In the absence of a statute it is not necessary that the indorsement on the writ should be made on the date of the levy, and it is sufficient if such indorsement be made at any time before the return-day of the writ.[17]

(IV) AMENDMENT. After the return-day of the writ[18] the better doctrine seems to be that amendment can only be had by leave of the court. However, the court will usually upon proper motion allow such amendment to be made nunc pro tunc.[19]

(v) Conclusiveness. The indorsement made upon the writ of execution by the officer is prima facie evidence of the levy therein recited.[20]

l. Inventory — (i) In General. The rule is laid down in some of the cases that it is the duty of the officer levying upon personal property of a judgment debtor to make an inventory of the goods and chattels levied on.[21] In many jurisdictions, however, it is held that the failure of the officer to make an inventory of the goods levied upon will not invalidate the levy, but will only render the officer liable for any damages resulting from his failure to perform his duty.[22]

(ii) Where Part of Property Is Exempt. The rule has been laid down that in levying upon property of a judgment debtor, of which a certain amount is exempt by statute, failure to make the inventory required by statute, and to allow the judgment debtor to select from the property the amount so exempted, will invalidate the levy;[23] but where none of the property levied upon is included in the statutory exemption, a failure of the officer to make an inventory will not invalidate the levy.[24]

m. Appraisement[25] — (i) Necessity of — (a) Real Property — (1) General Rule. In many jurisdictions, by statutory enactment, where real estate of a judgment debtor has been levied upon by virtue of a writ of execution, such property must be appraised prior to a sale thereof, in order to ascertain the true value of the property and to protect it from a sale disproportionate to such ascertained value;[26] and a sale on execution without appraisement, where the statute requires an appraisement, is void,unless the judgment under which the execution issues so directs.[27]

(2) ESTATES OF UNCERTAIN DURATION. In several jurisdictions the rule is laid down that where estates of uncertain duration, such as estates for life and contingent interests, are levied upon, no inquisition or condemnation is necessary to validate the sale thereunder.[28]

(3) PROPERTY FRAUDULENTLY CONVEYED. In some jurisdictions, by statutory enactment, real estate which the debtor has conveyed or caused to be conveyed, with intent to defraud his creditors, may be sold under execution without an appraisement, although the original judgment and execution did not so provide.[29]

(B) Personal Property. In a few states, by force of statute, personal property levied upon and advertised for sale on execution must be duly appraised before sale.[30]

(II) WHAT STATUTE GOVERNS. The rule seems to be well settled in some states that the statute in force at the date of a contract on which judgment has been rendered will govern as to the necessity and method of appraisement of property levied upon under execution issued on such judgment;[31] but where it does not appear when the contract on which a judgment is obtained was made,

See, however, Brown v. Bemiss, 2 La. Ann. 365, holding that where an undivided half of land was seized under execution, the owner of the other half, claiming a lien on the entire tract for a levee constructed thereon, was not entitled to an appraisement before sale. Such appraisement should be made afterward.

(III) Waiver—(A) General Rule. The rule is generally recognized that the judgment debtor, for whose benefit appraisement clauses are usually included in statutes prescribing the mode of execution, may at his option legally waive the right of having his property appraised before sale under the execution.[33]

(B) Where Debtor Has Parted With Title. Where the judgment debtor has previously parted with his interest in the premises levied on, subject to the lien of the judgment, a waiver of appraisement by such judgment debtor is of no effect, and a sale of the property without appraisement confers no title on the purchaser.[34]

(C) How Evidenced. The judgment debtor's exercise of the waiver of his right to have his property appraised may be evidenced by his expressly authorizing it in writing, and it is frequently incorporated in the contract by which the debt on which the judgment is based is created,[35] or constructively by his acquiescence in the sale of the property by the officer, of which he has full notice; the latter on the ground of estoppel.[36]

(iv) Notice of. Wherever the statute makes appraisement a prerequisite to a valid sale of property levied upon under execution, the judgment debtor is entitled to reasonable notice to choose an appraiser or appraisers, as the statute may direct;[37] and, unless the circumstances are such as to justify the officer in dispensing with the notice,[38] an appraisal and sale without such notice to the judgment debtor is void.[39]

(v) Appraisers — (a) Number and Qualifications of — (1) In General. Most of the statutes provide for the appointment of three appraisers, and it is essential to the validity of the appraisement that each appraiser possess the statutory qualifications, which cannot be waived even by the consent of the parties.[40]

(2) Freeholders or Householders. One of the qualifications usually required by statute is that the appraiser shall be a freeholder or householder of the county or town in which the property to be appraised is situated.[41]

(3) Effect of Interest. All the statutes enumerating the qualifications of the appraiser require that he shall be impartial and disinterested.[42] The ground estopped by circumstances from either impeaching the regularity of the proceedings or subsequently attacking the title of the purchaser at the sheriff's sale under the writ.

(4) Where Different Parcels of Land Are to Be Appraised. Under some jurisdictions, where separate and distinct parcels of real estate are seized to satisfy an execution, a different set of appraisers may be chosen to appraise each separate parcel.[44]

(B) By Whom Chosen — (1) General Rule. In a majority of the United States, by statutory provision, one of the appraisers is selected by the judgment creditor, and another by the judgment debtor, and the third appraiser is selected by the officer holding the writ.[45] The appraiser which each party to the action is entitled to select may likewise be chosen by a duly authorized agent of such party.[46]

In Delaware it was held in Flinn v. Fennimore, 7 Houst. 262, 31 Atl. 586, that a writ of fieri facias which shows that the inventory and appraisement were made by the sheriff alone and verified by defendant, and which was indorsed with a return reciting "levied on goods and chattels as per inventory and appraisement annexed," was sufficient to cut out subsequent levies, where it appeared that it was in conformity with a long continued practice in the county.

(2) In Case of Joint Debtors. Where execution issues against joint debtors, and the same is levied upon their joint property, the selection of one appraiser may be made by either of such debtors;[47] but where the execution is levied on the property of only one of several joint debtors, the appraiser must be selected by such debtor, and a selection by the other debtor, without the concurrence of the debtor whose property has been levied upon, is void.[48]

(3) Where Debtor Is Absent From Jurisdiction. In most jurisdictions, where the judgment debtor is absent from or resides out of the state at the time of the levy, the levying officer is authorized to select an appraiser for him.[49]

(4) Neglect or Refusal to Make Selection. Where the judgment debtor, after due notice, neglects or refuses to exercise his right of selection, the officer making the levy is generally authorized to select an appraiser for him.[50] of the officer should show that such oath of office was duly administered by the officer designated by statute to administer it.[51]

(2) By Whom Administered. The statutes usually authorize the administration of the oath by the officer making the levy or by a magistrate or justice of the peace.[52] However, the statute may require that the oath shall be administered by a justice of the peace in the county where the property to be appraised is situated.[53]

Affirmation.— It has been held in Massachusetts that where the magistrate certifies that a person appointed as an appraiser made affirmation under pains and penalties of perjury that he would faithfully and impartially appraise such real estate, etc., that it was sufficient, although he did not certify that such person was conscientiously scrupulous of taking an oath. Hall v. Hoxie, 3 Metc. (Mass.) 251. See also Cooper v. Bisbee, 4 N. estimate of its value,[56] although in appraising real estate it has been held not necessary that the appraisers should actually go upon the land if they can make a proper appraisement without doing so.[57] Where the appraisers have no personal knowledge as to the value of the property, it is their duty to hear testimony in respect to its value.[58]

(B) Property of Joint Debtors. Where an execution against several debtors is levied on land of which they are severally seized, the land of each debtor must be separately appraised;[59] but where an execution is levied upon the property of two joint debtors held by them in common, it is not necessary to appraise each one's share separately.[60]

(C) Several Parcels of Land. Where several parcels of land belonging to the judgment debtor are levied upon under execution, they may be appraised either severally or jointly.[61]

(D) Entire Interest of Judgment Debtor. The appraisement should embrace the entire interest of defendant in the property levied upon, and the appraisers should ascertain the value of the interest set off in order that the debtor may redeem, and a failure to do so invalidates the levy.[62]

(E) Deductions For Encumbrances — (1) General Rule. Stevenson v. Fuller, 75 Me. 324.

Rents and profits.— Where the statute provided that rents and profits might be sold under execution as other property, the appraisers setting down the value of each year separately, it was held that an appraisement of the rental value of property in gross for a term of years, and not the value of each year separately, rendered the levy invalid. owner of an equity of redemption is levied on the land, it should appear from the return that the appraisers excluded the mortgage from their consideration in making the appraisement.[64]

(2) Judgment Creditor Bound by. An execution creditor levying on an equity of redemption in real estate is bound by the action of the appraisers as to the amount and validity of a prior encumbrance and is estopped from afterward showing that such encumbrance is less than the valuation of the appraisers, or founded on a usurious contract.[65]

(3) Contingent Lien. The better rule seems to be that in levying an execution on land, the appraisers may deduct from the appraised value of the property a contingent lien upon the same, such as the encumbrance of the inchoate right of the judgment debtor's wife to dower.[66]

(4) Excessive Allowance. Where, in the appraisement of property, an allowance is made for an encumbrance upon or estate in the property which does not exist, the levy is invalid.[67] Likewise, where there is a valid and subsisting encumbrance upon the property, but such encumbrance is materially overestimated by the appraisers, the levy is invalid.[68]

(f) Agreement of Appraisers. In some jurisdictions the rule is laid down that, in order to constitute a valid appraisement, all of the appraisers must agree as to the value of the property.[69]

n. Setting Aside Appraisement. The general rule is that where an appraisement of property has been made by duly qualified appraisers acting in accordance with statutory requirements, such appraisement will not be set aside except for fraud or mistake other than mere error of judgment on the part of the appraisers.[73]

o. Second Appraisement. Where an appraisement has been set aside in consequence of irregularity or fraud, it is proper for the court to enter an order for a new appraisement.[74] Where, however, the sale is set aside for any reason, such as inadequacy of price, no new appraisement is necessary.[75]

8. Amount of Property to Be Levied On — a. General Rule. In determining the amount of property to be levied on to satisfy an execution, the officer is left to exercise his own judgment, free from the constraint or control of either plaintiff or defendant; but it is his duty to take property sufficient to satisfy the execution, allowing for reasonable and probable depreciation of such property at a forced sale, but he should not make the levy so unreasonable and excessive as to bear on its face the appearance of oppression and unnecessary rigor.[76]

b. Interest. In the absence of statute to the contrary, where an execution is issued in an action for debt or penalty, the officer is not authorized to levy for ter to indicate that in making the appraisement the requisites of the statute were complied with, an amendment thereto may be made, notwithstanding any intervening interest of the subsequent purchaser or creditor, but in such case permission to amend ought not to be given as a matter of course, nor granted without first notifying the adverse party and giving him an opportunity to show cause against the amendment); Gudger v. Penland, 118 N. Sum indorsed on writ.— The rule laid down in some jurisdictions that the officer in levying the writ should be governed in the amount to be levied by the sum indorsed on the back of the writ rather than by that recited in the body thereof, seems to be consonant with reason and justice, since the amount recited in the body of the writ is often nominal, whereas the indorsement states the credits, items of cost and charges, and dates of interest, and contains the real demand of plaintiff. Com. v. McCoy, 8 Watts (Pa.) 153, 34 Am. Dec. 445.

interest which has accrued since the rendition of the judgment, but only for the amount of the execution.[77]

c. Excessive Levy — (I) What Constitutes. It is difficult to lay down any general rule as to what amounts to an excessive levy, and the question must usually be determined by the circumstances of the particular case under consideration; but where the property levied upon proves upon appraisement to be of substantially greater value than the amount of the execution, the fees of the officer, and other expenses of the levy, such levy will be regarded as excessive.[78]

(II) Remedy For. The usual remedy for an excessive levy made through mistake is in equity, where by proper decree a creditor may be compelled to relinquish so much of the property levied on as would be equal to the excess levied, or pay an equivalent therefor in money.[79]

(III) Waiver of. Where the judgment debtor acquiesces in the sale of his property under execution and fails to make objection to the same, on the ground of excessive levy, for a considerable period of time, where no fraud is shown in the transaction, such delay on his part will be held to be a waiver of the objection.[80]

Audita querela.— It has been held in Vermont that audita querela is an appropriate remedy to vacate and set aside the levy of an execution where the officer has made a false return of the parcel, and in consequence has set off more of the lands of defendant than is required to satisfy the execution. 9. Objections to Irregularities[82] — a. Who May Object. The general rule is that where irregularities have occurred in levying an execution, such as failure to comply with statutory requirements, the judgment debtor alone can make objection thereto, third parties not being competent to urge such objection.[83]

b. Waiver of.[84] Irregularities in the manner of levying an execution may be waived expressly [85] or constructively by the judgment debtor or any other party in interest;[86] as where the execution debtor furnishes the officer with a descrip-

10. Quashing or Vacating Levy[89] — a. Motion to Quash — (I) General Rule. Where a levy is sought to be set aside on the ground of irregularity, or because it was improperly made, the usual method[90] of testing the validity of such levy is by a motion to quash or vacate the same.[91]

(II) Grounds For Motion — (A) In General. A motion to quash or set aside the levy may be made on the ground that the levying officer was not competent to act,[92] or that he omitted some statutory requirement essential to the validity of the levy,[93] such as a failure to allow the judgment debtor to designate the property to be levied on,[94] that the property levied upon was in custodia legis,[95] or that the judgment debtor had been discharged in bankruptcy.[96]

(B) Where There Is No Evidence of Levy. Since, however, the levy is the foundation of the proceeding, on motion to quash the same, if there is no evidence of such levy, the motion must be overruled.[97]

(C) Where Debtor Has No Interest in Property. A motion to quash the levy is not a proper proceeding to try the question of title to property, and the courts will not set aside a levy upon the motion of a party, not on the ground of irregularity in the levy, but on the ground that the officer has seized property of a stranger to the writ;[98] or on the ground that the judgment debtor has no interest in the property levied on.[99]

(III) Notice of Motion. Notice of motion to quash or vacate the levy should be given to all persons interested in or claiming under the writ, since they are entitled to be heard in opposition to the motion.[1]

(IV) Jurisdiction. The doctrine seems to be well recognized that the court issuing the execution is the proper tribunal to pass upon the question of alleged defects or irregularities in the levy thereof, and that a court of coördinate authority has no jurisdiction to hear and determine a motion to quash such levy.[2]

b. Operation and Effect. Where under proper proceedings the levy of an execution has been quashed or vacated, the parties stand in the same situation as if no levy had been made, and the sheriff cannot proceed to a sale of the property under such levy.[3]

11. Operation and Effect of Levy — a. Interest of Judgment Debtor — (I) Personalty. The general rule is that the levy of an execution on personal property does not change the title of the judgment debtor into a mere right of action, the title remaining in him, with a capacity of disposition in any manner which does not impair the lien of the execution.[4]

(II) Realty. Likewise the levy of an execution on real property of the judgment debtor does not operate as a disseizin, nor does it deprive the judgment debtor of the power of transferring or selling the same, subject to the lien of the execution.[5]

b. Interest of Judgment Creditor. The general rule is that the judgment creditor, by virtue of levy under his execution, does not acquire any title to the property seized, but only an inchoate right to payment out of its avails by legal proceeding.[6] In some jurisdictions, notably the New England states, lands are extended under execution and set off to the creditor instead of being sold, and it is not until the officer has delivered seizin and the same has been accepted by the creditor that the extent becomes final and the title of the judgment debtor is divested.[7]

12. Release or Abandonment of Levy — a. By Acts of Judgment Creditor — (I) Return of Writ Without Sale. The return of an execution by the officer after levy without sale, by the direction of the judgment creditor, is a surrender of his authority, and leaves such property as free from his control as if no levy had been made upon it.[8] However, where part of the property taken under execution is improperly levied on, a direction by the judgment creditor to the officer not to sell such property does not constitute an abandonment of the levy as to the other property rightfully taken.[9]

(II) Delay in Advertisement and Sale. Likewise, a failure for a long period of time to enforce the levy of an execution by an advertisement and sale of the property will be treated, as to third parties, as a waiver or abandonment of the levy.[10] However, as against the judgment debtor and parties claiming under him, the mere suspension of the execution or abandonment of sale will not affect the lien thereof.[11]

(III) Issuance of Second Writ. In several jurisdictions where plaintiff, after the levy of his writ, abandons it and sues out an alias writ, the benefit of the first levy is lost.[12] In other jurisdictions, however, the issuance of a second writ prior to the return or satisfaction of the first one may be evidence tending to show an abandonment of the former, but it is not usually regarded as conclusive, and may be overcome by testimony showing the contrary.[13] states that, after the levy of an execution, a resort to other remedies, such as filing a creditor's bill in aid of execution, is not a waiver or abandonment of the levy.[14]

b. By Acts of Officer — (i) In General. The rule in some jurisdictions is that a neglect or dereliction of duty on the part of the officer subsequent to the levy of the writ, to which the judgment creditor is not a party, will not invalidate the levy.[15] In some cases, however, it has been held that if an officer elects to relinquish a levy, or if by any act of his it is in effect relinquished, it is discharged beyond reclamation, and the remedy of the judgment creditor is then against the officer upon his official bond.[16]

(ii) Leaving Goods in Possession of Defendant. The presumption that an officer has done his duty in executing the writ must be indulged until the contrary is shown, and the better doctrine seems to be that the fact that the officer without fraud has left the goods in care of the execution defendant will not constitute an abandonment of the levy.[17] Where, however, through the instrumen-

Surrender of goods to another officer.— It was held in Miller v. Getz, 135 Pa. St. 558, 19 Atl. 955, 20 Am. St. Rep. 887, that a constable's levy is not abandoned merely because he gives his execution to the sheriff, who makes a subsequent levy, subject to the constable's levy, on the same goods and sells them.

Question of fact.— It has been held in England that where a sheriff who has seized goods under a writ of fieri facias goes out of possession, the question whether in so doing he has abandoned possession is a question of fact. Compare McConnell v. Denham, 72 Iowa 494, 34 N. W. 298, where, after a levy on chattels mortgaged, the execution creditor authorizes the release of the chattels "without prejudice to his lien thereon," it was held that the lien, if one existed, would cease at the time of the release, notwithstanding this reservation.

Private sale of property.— It was held in Dunham v. Rundle, 4 Pa. Super. Ct. 174, that an execution creditor who permits control of the property to remain with the execution defendant after levy, so that private sales are made in contravention of law, will be postponed to a junior execution.

Where execution debtor had given security for the release of his stock of goods and had continued in business for more than a year, it was held that no lien existed on the goods to which the surety could be subrogated. Hubbard v. Fravell, 12 Lea (Tenn.) 304.

Cattle on range.— It has been held in Texas that a valid levy on cattle on a range is not lost in favor of a mortgagee by the removal of cattle to other counties by the owners, where the owners were acting for the mortgagee in such removal. Brown v. Hudson, 14 Tex. Civ. App. 605, 38 S. W. 653.

Suspension of lien.— It was held in Newcombe v. Leavitt, 22 Ala. 631, that if executions are regularly issued from term to term, the lien created by placing the execution in the officer's hands is not lost, but suspended merely, by the removal of the property from one county to another within the state; but where such property is removed to another state, where it is acquired and held by bona fide purchaser until the statute of limitations execution was issued and the levy made is reversed or vacated, the lien created by the levy of the execution is extinguished.[21]

13. Revival of Levy or Lien — a. In General. Wherever the levy of an execution has been suspended in its operation by an injunction or the execution of a forthcoming bond, and such injunction is dissolved or forthcoming bond quashed, the lien of such execution is thereby restored.[22]

b. By Alias or Pluries Writs. Where the lien created by the levy on property of the judgment debtor is lost by the return of the writ nulla bona, it is not revived by the delivery of an alias fieri facias so as to overreach interests which have intervened in the interim.[23]

C. Custody of Property[24] — 1. By Officer Making Levy — a. In General. The officer making a levy on personalty is presumed in law to have the possession or custody of it, but under conflicting decisions in the various jurisdictions, the degree of care which he must exercise in protecting and preserving such property seems to be by no means settled.[25] The rule seems to be universally recognized, however, that the levying officer is answerable to either party for any damages suffered from his negligence, or that of his agents, in the care of the property while held by him by virtue of his levy.[26]

b. Title Acquired. A levy of an execution upon property of the judgment debtor vests in the officer making the levy a special property in the goods seized, and the right of possession thereof, for the purpose of sale under such levy.[27] in that state has barred its recovery, and it is then brought back into the state where the execution issued, such purchaser's title is perfect against the execution creditor, even though he has had executions regularly issued from term to term.

Temporary removal.— It has been held in Kentucky that the lien given by the levy of an execution is not lost by the temporary removal of defendant's property. Forman v. Proctor, 9 B. Mon. (Ky.) 124; Hood v. Winsatt, 1 B. Mon. (Ky.) 208. See also Mitchell v. Ashby, 78 Ky. 254.

Thus it has been held that the seizure of property under execution vests in the officer making the levy the right to receive the rents and profits of such property from the date of seizure;[28] and it has also been held in several jurisdictions that an officer levying on a mortgagor's equity of redemption in mortgaged property is entitled to take such property into his possession for the purpose of effecting a sale of the mortgagor's equity.[29]

c. Action For Recovery. Since the effect of the levy of an officer upon property of the debtor is to vest him with title therein for certain purposes, he may maintain an action of trespass against any person disturbing him in such possession;[30] or an action of trover for its conversion;[31] or bring an action of replevin for its recovery.[32]

Stranger in possession.— It has been held in California that where a stranger to the execution is in possession of the property, claiming to own it by virtue of a transfer to him from the debtor, which would prevent the latter from retaking possession, the sheriff cannot justify without producing both the execution and the judgment authorizing its issue. Release by second levy.— However, one in whose possession the officer leaves property levied on under execution, which levy is released, is not estopped, as against the officer, to claim title to the property by purchase from the execution debtor after such release, on the officer subsequently levying a second execution, and taking possession un-

3. Execution of Forthcoming and Delivery Bond[36] — a. Authority of Officer to Accept. In nearly every jurisdiction, by statutory enactment, where the officer levies on personal property by virtue of a fieri facias, he may instead of removing the property take a bond with sureties for the delivery of such property on a stipulated day for sale.[37]

b. Who May Execute — (i) General Rule. As a general rule statutes providing for the giving of a forthcoming bond authorize only the person whose property is levied upon to execute such bond.[38]

(ii) One of Several Defendants. The better doctrine seems to be that one of several defendants in execution may replevy the property levied upon, even where his co-defendants fail to unite with him in executing the bond.[39]

c. Form and Requisites of Bond — (i) In General. While the form and requisites of the bond vary according to the provisions of different statutes, yet, since the proceeding is statutory, it is essential that the bond should substantially conform to the requirements of the statute by which it is authorized.[40]

Direction not to take security.— It has been held in Kentucky that where the execution contains a direction that no security of any kind is to be taken, the officer has no authority to accept a forthcoming bond, and if he does it will not be valid as a statutory bond, although it may be good at common law as a direction to the officer. North Carolina.— Grady v. Threadgill, 35 N. C. 228 (holding that a bond conditioned that defendant shall deliver the property to the officer at the time and place of sale is sufficient, without the words "to answer the said execution"); Foster v. Frost, 15 N. C. 424.

B. Mon. (Ky.) 151 (holding that a replevin bond to plaintiffs in their proper right, taken after an execution in their favor as administrators, is erroneous); Jones v. Powell, 5 Litt. (Ky.) 289 (holding that, although a replevin bond may be assigned to a third person, execution thereon must still issue in the name of the obligee, and a delivery bond taken to the assignee, by virtue of such execution, is irregular); Lynchburg Trust, etc., Bank v. Elliott, 94 Va. 700, 27 S. Death of plaintiff prior to execution of bond.— It has been held in Mississippi that where plaintiff in execution dies after the execution issues, but before the making of a forthcoming bond by defendant, a judgment on such forthcoming bond executed to the deceased plaintiff is void. Smith v. Montgomery, 11 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 284. See, however, Turnbull v. Claibornes, 3 Leigh (Va.) 392.

Where name of obligee was omitted.— Where a writing under seal certified that the subscriber was surety for the forthcoming of all goods and chattels of defendant in execution named therein, on the day therein specified, it was held that this was a covenant with the constable to whom it was delivered, and not with the execution plaintiff, as a deed takes effect by the delivery thereof. (iv) Description of Execution. The forthcoming bond should recite the issuance and levy of the writ,[43] and the name of the judgment debtor;[44] and it should also state the amount for which the execution issued.[45] Any material variance between the writ and the description thereof in the bond will be fatal to the latter.[46]

(v) Bond Covering Two Executions. It has been held in some jurisdictions that it is proper to unite two executions against the same party in one forthcoming bond, provided the bond recites distinctly the amount of each execution.[47]

(vi) Bond Lacking Statutory Requisites. Although a forthcoming bond be not good as a statutory bond for failure to comply with some provision of the statute, it may yet be good as a common-law obligation.[48]

(vii) Defects in Bond — (a) Objections in General. A defect in a forthcoming bond cannot be urged by motion to quash an execution issuing upon it after forfeiture of the bond.[49] Where a defect in the bond will not inure to the injury of the obligors therein, as where the penal sum is too small,[50] or where the officer has taken the bond without the sureties required by statute, and the judgment creditor has accepted it,[51] the obligors cannot object to the validity of the bond on such grounds.

(B) Amendment. After the execution of a forthcoming bond, where there is a clerical error patent upon the face of the bond, the court will allow an amendment to correct it, and permit the bond to be reformed so as to make it conform to the true and evident intention of the parties at the time of its execution.[52]

(C) Waiver. So the execution defendant may waive any defects in the bond.[53]

(D) Quashal on Account of. The proper procedure in the case of a defective forthcoming bond is a motion to quash, and it will usually be granted at the instance of the judgment creditor, provided it be made at the proper time.[54] In several jurisdictions a motion to quash a defective forthcoming bond and execution thereon must be made at the first term of court after the execution issues.[55]

d. Operation and Effect[56]—(I) Extinguishment of Lien of Judgment and Execution—(A) General Rule. In quite a number of jurisdictions, by statute, where a forthcoming and delivery bond is given, the property covered thereby is released by the bond and the lien of the judgment and execution destroyed, and upon the forfeiture of the bond the latter operates as a new judgment upon which execution may immediately issue.[57] In some cases the rule is

(B) Void or Defective Bond. It has been held that a forthcoming bond, without any, or with a fictitious, security, is absolutely void, and its forfeiture does not discharge the lien of the judgment or execution;[60] and the same rule applies where the bond is afterward quashed for any irregularity.[61]

(II) Where Judgment or Levy Is Void. Since a forthcoming bond must be founded upon a valid judgment and execution thereunder, such a bond, given under a void judgment or under a void levy of execution, is also void.[62]

(III) Waiver of Objections to Execution and Levy. The better doctrine seems to be that, where a forthcoming bond has been given, the obligors therein are estopped to attack the validity of the writ on which it was taken, or the levy thereunder, and that by the execution of the bond all irregularities in the writ and levy are waived.[63]

Jones v. Myrick, 8 Gratt. 179.

Death of slave.— It was held in Kentucky that the death of a slave for which a delivery bond had been taken would exonerate the security when the bond was not otherwise forfeited, but a failure to deliver any part of the property without legal excuse would render the surety liable for the whole debt. Laughlin v. Ferguson, 6 Dana 111.

Emancipation of a slave after levy and the institution of proceedings to try the right of property has been held in Alabama not to preclude the right of action on the forthcoming bond previously given to obtain a discharge of the slave from the levy. Madden v. Hooper, 42 Ala. 397.

Runaway slave.— It was held in Cole v. Fenwick, Gilm. (Va.) 134, that a judgment on a bond for the forthcoming of a slave ought not to be relieved against because the forfeiture occurred by the running away of the slave.

Effect of temporary injunction.— It was held in Indiana, in an action on a delivery bond, that defendant was not excused from a subsequent delivery by the fact that, on the day named in the bond for the return of the property, a temporary injunction, procured by defendant, was in force, the court holding that he could not thus take advantage of his own wrongful act. Midland R. Co. v. Eller, 7 Ind. App. 216, 33 N. E. 265.

Property seized under superior liens.— Where property in possession of one who has given a forthcoming bond is, before the time has arrived for compliance with the obligation, seized by virtue of liens of superior dignity to the lien of the process under which the property was first seized, the principal obligor and his sureties are not liable for failure to comply with the conditions of the bond. (III) Effect of Reversal of Original Judgment. The reversal of the judgment upon which the forthcoming bond was given avoids the bond and execution issued thereon, without a motion to quash.[67]

(IV) Extent of Liability of Obligor. In some jurisdictions, by statute, the obligation entered into by the execution of a forthcoming bond is to produce the property on the day of sale, or to pay the amount of the judgment, with interest and costs, but not the amount of the bond, nor the value of the property if it exceeds the amount of the judgment; and the surety on the bond cannot be held for another or different amount than his principal.[68]

(V) Relief of Sureties—(A) Delay in Proceeding on Bond. An unreasonable delay on the part of the judgment creditor to sue out execution on a forthcoming bond after it has been forfeited will discharge the sureties.[69] However, a reasonable delay in proceeding upon the forthcoming bond will not release the sureties, especially where it is not shown that they were damaged thereby.[70]

(B) Irregularities in Judgment or Levy. The doctrine is well settled that a court of equity will not grant relief to an obligor in a forthcoming bond on the ground of an irregularity in the judgment or levy on which such bond was founded.[71]

(C) Fraud or Accident. In some cases, however, equity has undertaken to Virginia.— Rucker v. Harrison, 6 Munf. 181, where supersedeas to the judgment was issued before the day of sale, and the property on the bond being forthcoming, it was held that the penalty of the bond was severed and no motion would lie upon it. See Spencer v. Pilcher, 10 Leigh 490.

United States.— Barton v. Petit, 7 Cranch 288, 3 L. ed. 347, holding, however, that where the original judgment is reversed, the execution on which the bond was given must be brought up by certiorari, so that the connection between the two judgments may be shown.

See 21 Cent. Dig. tit. "Execution," § 422.

Injunction.— It was held in Wilson v. Stevenson, 2 Call (Va.) 213, that, although a forthcoming bond cannot be forfeited if an injunction to stay proceedings is issued before the day appointed for the delivery of the property, an injunction will not discharge liability on a bond forfeited before its issue.

Bond executed by executor.— Where an execution is issued on a forthcoming bond executed by executors on a levy of property of their decedent, their liability is personal, and not in their representative capacity, since the legal effect of the bond was to create a personal obligation, and as indemnity the executors held the property on which the levy had been made. Seizure of property under writ of detinue.— It has been held in Alabama that the sureties on a forthcoming bond were discharged from their obligation and excused from delivering the property by its seizure, while in the hands of the principal in the bond, under a writ of detinue issued at the instance of a third person claiming the property as his own. (Miss.) 103.

Premature return of writ.— It was held in Stewart v. Lacoume, 30 La. Ann. 157, that the surety on a forthcoming bond is not released by reason of the return of a fieri facias against the principal before the return-day of the writ, unless he is shown to have been injured thereby.

f. Action on Bond[75]—(I) Right of Action—(A) General Rule. Where the statute authorizes the issuance of execution against the obligors in a forfeited forthcoming bond, this remedy is generally regarded as cumulative merely, and not to preclude the proper party from instituting an action on the bond.[76]

(B) Liability of Officer Over. The rule has been laid down in several jurisdictions that the officer has no right of action on a forthcoming bond until he has been held liable to the execution creditor for the amount of the property, and then only to the amount of his actual damage.[77]

(II) Conditions Precedent—(A) Notice to Obligors. In some jurisdictions a condition precedent to an action on a forthcoming bond is a notice to the obligors of the time and place of sale of the property for which such bond was given;[78] but a legal advertisement of such sale has been held to be sufficient notice to the obligors.[79]

(B) Return of Execution and Bond. Under some statutes it is required that the forfeited bond be returned with the execution upon which it is based;[80] and,

See, however, Perry v. Hensley, 14 B. Mon. (Ky.) 474, 61 Am. Dec. 164, holding that where exempt property was levied on without the owner's consent, and a delivery bond given, the bond was not obligatory, and a surety might have relief in a court of equity.

Personal obligation.— It has been held in South Carolina that an action cannot be maintained by the successor in office of a sheriff upon a bond given by defendant in execution to the sheriff for the delivery to him or his deputy of property levied upon under execution and left with defendant therein. Such a bond is a mere personal obligation for the indemnity of the sheriff, and not an official bond which passes to his successor in office. Guffin v. Ingram, 8 S. C. 249.

(III) Defenses. It has been held that neither a denial of liability of the property to seizure,[82] the invalidity of the original judgment,[83] fraud or mistake in the execution of the bond,[84] destruction of the property,[85] nor the filing of a claim by a third party for the property after the execution of the bond[86] is a valid defense to an action on a forthcoming bond, although a waiver of the condition of the bond may constitute a good defense.[87] The sureties on a forthcoming bond cannot as a rule defeat a recovery against them by objecting to proceedings in the levy of the execution, on account of irregularities therein, and if the principals are bound the sureties are likewise bound, and they cannot set up any defenses which are not available to their principals.[88]

(IV) Parties.[89] Where a forthcoming bond is executed to secure a release of property which has been seized on several executions having equal priority, on breach of the condition it is proper to join the several judgment creditors as parties plaintiff in an action upon the bond.[90]

82. In an action against the obligors on a forthcoming bond, the general rule is that defendants cannot set up as a defense that the property for which the bond was given was not the property of defendant in the execution. Burrall v. Acker, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 606, 35 Am. Plea that property was mortgaged.— It has been held in Illinois that it is no defense to an action on a forthcoming bond to show that the property for which the bond was given was mortgaged at the time of the levy of the execution, and that subsequently the mortgagee had seized the property under his mortgage and sold it for less than enough to pay the mortgage. Dehler v. Held, 50 Ill. 491.

Judgment in rem.— It was held in Humphreys v. Humphreys, 1 Greene (Iowa) 477, that a special plea in an action on a delivery bond is good which alleges that a judgment in rem had been rendered against particular property, and that instead of taking the property so held for the debt the sheriff levied upon other property not affected by the judgment.

87. If a failure on the part of the obligor to deliver the property at the time and place stipulated in the bond is occasioned by anything said or done by plaintiff, amounting to a waiver of that obligation, it will be a good defense to an action on the bond. Mapp v. Thompson, 9 Ga. 42.

88. Arkansas.— Dugan v. Fowler, 14 Ark. 132 (holding that a subsisting undischarged levy upon property sufficient to satisfy the judgment is not such a satisfaction as can be pleaded in bar of recovery in an action on a forthcoming bond, but is merely matter in abatement); Sullivan v. Pierce, 10 Ark. 500.

(v) Pleading[91] — (a) Declaration or Complaint. The declaration or complaint in an action on a forthcoming bond should set out the condition of the bond and allege the facts which constitute a breach of such condition,[92] such as a failure to deliver the property on the day specified in the condition,[93] the recovery of judgment and the issuance of execution thereunder, showing that the officer had authority to seize the property and take the bond.[94]

(b) Plea or Answer. In debt on a forthcoming bond, a plea that defendants have always been and still are ready to deliver the goods according to the condition of the bond is bad.[95] However, in such an action a plea of payment is good.[96] Likewise the plea that defendants delivered the property on the day, at the place, and to the officer named in the condition of the bond is good.[97]

(vi) Evidence.[98] In an action on a forthcoming bond, the writ on which the levy in the original case was made is indispensable evidence;[99] and evidence of the return of the writ nulla bona is admissible to show a breach of the bond.[1]

(vii) Measure of Recovery.[2] In most jurisdictions the statutes provide that the measure of recovery for the breach of a forthcoming bond shall be the value of the property at the time the bond was executed, provided such value is not in excess of the amount of the execution, principal, interest, and costs.[3]

92. Hunter v. Brown, 68 Ind. 225, where the allegation in an action on a delivery bond that the execution defendant had failed to "pay the cash value" of the property, which had been duly appraised, was held equivalent to an allegation of his failure to pay the "appraised value." See Hawkins v. Johnson, 3 Blackf. (Ind.) 46, holding that an omission to aver the value of the property in a forthcoming bond is not cause for general demurrer.

93. Eldridge v. Yantes, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 72 (where the declaration was held to be fatally defective in failing to aver that the property had not been delivered to the sheriff); Hawkins v. Johnson, 3 Blackf. (Ind.) 46 (holding that an allegation that the property was not delivered on the day specified in the condition, nor at any other time since the delivery bond was executed, is sufficient on general demurrer).

Sufficiency of allegation.—In an action upon a forthcoming bond it is sufficient to negative the delivery of the property, according to the condition of the bond, in words coextensive with its legal import and effect, and to affirm that the sheriff returned the bond as forfeited. Presumptions.— Where the bond sued on was dated prior to the execution on which it purported to be taken, the presumption of law is that there was a mistake in the date of one of them, and such mistake will not render the bond void. Cook v. State Bank, 5 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 163.

Proof of performance of condition.— Where the sheriff took a forthcoming bond for the delivery of property on the day of sale, and such property was not sold for want of bidders, it was held that the taking of a second bond for its delivery at an adjourned sale was conclusive proof of the performance of condition of the first bond. g. Summary Remedies — (I) Statutory Judgment — (A) Judicial Judgment Unnecessary. In some jurisdictions, by statutory enactment, a forthcoming bond, when returned forfeited by the officer, accompanied by the execution, has the force and effect of a judgment, and no further judgment is necessary to the issuance of execution thereon.[4] However, to authorize a judgment upon a forthcoming bond, the record should affirmatively show a forfeiture of the bond and a return of the execution unsatisfied.[5]

(B) Where Formal Judgment Is Required — (1) Motion and Notice. In several jurisdictions, however, the statute requires a formal judgment to be entered by the court upon the forfeited bond, and an essential condition precedent thereto is the service of a notice of motion for judgment upon the obligors in the forfeited bond, such motion to be made returnable to a designated term of court.[6]

(2) Hearing of Motion. On the hearing of the motion for judgment on the forthcoming bond, the pleadings are ore tenus, and formal issue need not be joined, and the court may render judgment on the evidence without the intervention of a jury;[7] and the judgment rendered upon a forfeited bond creates a lien

Full amount of judgment debt.— Under the Tennessee act of 1801, the surety in a delivery bond was liable for the whole judgment debt in case of forfeiture, although the property included in the bond was of less value, and equity would not relieve him, except for fraud. Love v. Smith, 4 Yerg. 117.

On replevin bond.— It has been held in Illinois that in an action on a replevin bond, as the officer represents not only the interest of the execution creditor, but also the general owner of the property, he is entitled to recover the full value of the property replevied, and if the proceeds of the judgment exceed the amount due the execution creditor, the officer must hold such excess in trust for, or pay to, the general owner, or to whomsoever may appear to be entitled to it. Bennet v. Gilbert, 94 Ill. App. 505 [affirmed in 194 Ill. 403, 62 N. E. 847].

Attorney's fees.— In Georgia where the judgment on which a writ of execution is founded includes attorney's fees, it is proper to include such fees in a judgment rendered on the forthcoming bond given to release the property seized under the writ, but not otherwise. Bowden v. Taylor, 81 Ga. 204, 6 S. E. 280.

Costs.— It has been held in Indiana that in an action on a delivery bond, the statute authorizing damages does not authorize damages being given for the costs recovered in the suit in which the bond was given. Patterson v. Brown, Smith 288.

See, however, Patton v. Walcott, 4 Ark. 579.

Evidence of forfeiture.— Under the Arkansas act of Dec. 16, 1846, giving forfeited delivery bonds the force and effect of judgments, the sheriff's return of forfeiture of a delivery bond is conclusive evidence of the fact. Ruddell v. Magruder, 11 Ark. 578; Ex p. Reardon, 9 Ark. 450.

See also Miller v. Barkeloo, 8 Ark. 318 (holding, however, that a judgment so rendered must show affirmatively that the execution was returned unsatisfied); McLain v. Irwin, 6 Ark. 171.

(II) EXECUTION ON JUDGMENT. The general rule is that execution may issue at any time after the forfeiture of the bond, and the same has become in effect a statutory judgment.[9] The better rule seems to be that an execution issued upon a forfeited forthcoming bond may include defendants to the original judgment as well as obligors in the bond.[10]

VIII. STAY, QUASHING, VACATION, AND RELIEF AGAINST.[11]

A. The Stay — 1. DEFINITION. The stopping or arresting for a limited period an execution on a judgment; that is, of the judgment creditor's right to issue execution, is called a stay of execution.[12]

2. KINDS OF STAY — a. Enumeration. Stays of execution are said to be of three kinds:[13] (1) Those which are a consequence of or attend appellate proceedings;[14] (2) those which are granted upon the ground that execution should be postponed for some cause other than appellate proceedings or even perpetually[15] stayed;[16] and (3) those which result from statutes granting defendant a further time upon his giving security or upon the existence of security[17] to satisfy the judgment.[18]

b. First Kind. In some jurisdictions it is provided by statute that execution shall not issue within a certain time after judgment, that defendant may within the time specified have a sufficient opportunity to take out a writ of error.[19]

c. Second Kind — (I) COURT'S AUTHORITY OVER ITS PROCESS. Under the general supervisory powers over their process, all courts of common law have the power to temporarily stay execution on judgments by them rendered whenever it is necessary to accomplish the ends of justice.[20] The authority which a judge in

In Texas, however, the rule is that after twelve months plaintiff may have a citation or scire facias to the principal and sureties to show cause why execution should not issue against them. Burton v. Miller, 14 Tex. 299.

10. Sheppard v. Melloy, 12 Ala. 561 (holding that if the execution does not, on its face or by the indorsement of the clerk, show who were the obligors in the bond, it may be amended by the judgment and forthcoming bond); Trotter v. Hannegan, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 319.

chambers exercises over process of the court in a case pending is usually that of the court itself.[21] A court in an equity action has power to make provisions for the time when the judgment is to be carried into effect.[22]

(II) Not a Substitute For Other Appropriate Remedies. A stay cannot be substituted for a proper legal remedy, such as an appeal,[23] audita querela,[24] action at law,[25] or bill in equity.[26]

(III) Grounds—(A) General Nature of. The ground of relief must rest either on facts occurring subsequent to the decree, or judgment, or on antecedent facts which show fraud in its rendition, or want of jurisdiction of the court apparent on the record.[27]

It is in the discretion of the court to grant or stay execution according to the circumstances and equities of each particular case. But this discretion must be judicially exercised; and, unless facts are brought to the knowledge of the court which furnish a just ground for interposition, they will not interfere with the regular course of proceedings. Sawin v. Mt. Vernon Bank, 2 R. I. 382. The discretion of the court will not be reviewed on appeal, unless capriciously exercised or abused. Granger v. Craig, 85 N. Y. 619.

"The ground of this jurisdiction is the power and duty of all Courts to prevent the abuse of their process, where an improper or unjust use is attempted to be made of it." Therefore where two judgments exist for the same debt, the payment of one is the satisfaction of both, and the attempt to coerce payments afterward by execution is an abuse of the process of the court and process issued for such a purpose may be superseded. St. § 4967, providing that, if any person against whose property an execution shall be issued applies to any judge of the court out of which the same may have been issued, by petition setting forth good cause why the same ought to be stayed, such judge shall thereupon hear the complaint, applies only to a petition for stay of execution when made in vacation to the judge of the court out of which the execution issued. Johnson v. Greve, 60 Mo. App. 170.

N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 775, forbids a judge out of court to make an order to stay proceedings in an action for a longer time than twenty days, except to stay proceedings under an order or judgment appealed from, or where it is made upon notice of the application to the adverse party, or in cases where special provision is otherwise made by law. See Carter v. Hodge, 150 N. Y. 532, 537, 44 N. E. 1101.

22. An execution will not be stayed for reasons which arose prior to the judgment and would have constituted a defense to the action in which the judgment was rendered. Marshall v. Caudler, 21 Ala. 490.

The reason of this rule is the familiar one that a judgment is conclusive at law of the rights of the parties and fully determines all defenses which might have been urged against the demand before the judgment was rendered. (B) On Equitable Grounds. There is no case which decides that, by a simple rule for a stay, a similar purpose may be accomplished to that sought by a bill in equity.[28] Nevertheless a stay is frequently allowed on grounds which are in their nature peculiarly equitable, as for instance to give defendant opportunity to set off a claim against plaintiff.[29] The stay on this ground is all the more just when plaintiff is insolvent;[30] but, if plaintiff on his part furnishes security to the amount of the execution, there is then no reason for the stay.[31] A stay has been granted to prevent fraud or great injustice,[32] to save the expense of numerous sales to satisfy different liens on the same property, or to determine the equities of numerous parties in a complex situation by a suit in chancery.[33]

(C) Garnishment of Judgment Debtor.[34] The fact that the debtors have been garnished at the suit of a third person is quite generally held to be good ground for a stay.[35] However, a stay is not universally allowed on this ground. In Pennsylvania, if attachment execution is served on defendant by creditors of plaintiff, the practice is to rule the sheriff to pay the proceeds of the execution issue to try the fact, and stay execution until after the trial.

28. Pennsylvania Co. v. Harshaw, 6 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 272. St. (1879) § 3215, an execution sale under a judgment foreclosing a mechanic's or contractor's lien against a railroad is only for the benefit of such lien-holders as have obtained judgment at the time of the sale. Judgment was obtained by two lienholders, while in twenty or more suits to enforce other liens against the same property judgment had not been reached. It is the duty of the court wherein the suit against the garnishee by his creditor may be pending, upon a proper representation of the facts, to take measures that no injustice shall grow out of the double vexation."

Bona fide debt.— The court should ascertain if the garnishment is for a bona fide debt, without collusion with the debtor. Early v. Rogers, 16 How. (U. S.) 599, 14 L. ed. 1074. Compare Nevian v. Poschinger, 23 Ind. App. 695, 55 N. E. 1033.

Montgomery Gaslight Co. v. Merrick, 61 Ala. 534.

into court and then refer the matter to an auditor to determine the respective rights of the parties.[36] In Texas the garnished defendant has the right of the stakeholder to require the claimants to interplead.[37] The garnishment of the debt in another state has been held sufficient ground for a stay until the garnishee is released from the garnishment;[38] but the general rule would seem to forbid the garnishment of a judgment debt by process from a court of different jurisdiction, the situation being governed by the rule of priority in acquiring jurisdiction.[39]

(D) Pending a Motion or Proceeding. Execution will be stayed pending a motion[40] or certain other proceedings[41] in the cause.

title,[43] constitutes a ground for a stay of execution. But when an execution is unauthorized by the judgment it will be stayed;[44] and a stay may be granted under special statutory provision in certain cases.[45]

d. Third Kind — (i) In General. By statute a stay of execution is sometimes authorized upon defendant's furnishing sufficient security.[46] Some states at one time gave defendant the right to a stay unless plaintiff indorsed on the execution that he would receive bank paper in discharge of the execution.[47]

(ii) Stay of Freeholder Defendant — (a) In General. In some jurisdictions a stay of a definite length of time on money judgments is allowed the judgment debtor if he possesses a freehold of sufficient value to secure the creditor.[48] To justify a plea of freehold to an execution, the property must be unencumbered.[49]

(b) Who Entitled to Privilege. The stay will be allowed to all judgment defendants on the application of one of them who as a freeholder is entitled to it.[50] A defendant who has defaulted is entitled to the stay.[51] If a statute gives the right to a stay on this ground, a quasi-public corporation owning a freehold may also claim the privilege.[52]

(c) Judgments Not Stayed. Under a statute which provides for a freehold stay in actions instituted by writ for the recovery of money due by contract or for damages arising from a breach of contract, no stay can be had where the land is specially charged with the judgment on which the execution sought to be stayed is issued,[53] or where the judgment has been rendered against defendant in scire facias on a recognizance bail.[54]

(d) Claiming Privilege. The freehold must be claimed by defendant,[55] and the fact of defendant's being a freeholder should appear from the record.[56] But to claim his privilege defendant need not show title as in ejectment; possession under color of title is in general sufficient.[57] Although it is usually the convenient practice for a defendant to file a plea of freehold and to justify it when ruled to do so, this is not necessary; he is entitled to the stay without any plea filed by him.[58] If the estate of freehold is in the county[59] where the plea is filed[60] defendant need only show the existence and value of the freehold, and it then rests upon plaintiff to show an encumbrance, if he makes an objection to the plea on that ground.[61]

(e) Procedure of Plaintiff. After the plea of freehold has been filed plaintiff may move to dismiss it for insufficiency.[62]

In Delaware it was provided that a freeholder should have the stay unless he waived his privilege or unless plaintiff or someone for him should make oath or affirmation that he had good ground to believe or verily believed that if the stay of execution for six months were allowed the sum due by the judgment would be lost. In Mousely v. Allmond, 4 Harr. 92, it was decided that this oath must be made within two days after the rendition of the judgment. But in Humphries v. Hitchens, 1 Houst. 526, a case decided fifteen years later and probably under another statute, it was held that the affidavit might be made within the six-months' stay of execution granted. The objection made was that plaintiff had not made his affidavit within five days. In Hearn v. Ralph, 2 Harr. 6, it was said that the wife who was joined as plaintiff with the husband appeared to be

3. LENGTH OF STAY — a. In General. The length of the stay depends upon the statute which confers the right to it.[65]

b. Perpetual Stay. The power of the court to stay execution in the interest of justice has been exercised even to the extent of giving relief by a perpetual stay, when it was clear that it was just so to do.[66]

c. Reckoning of Time of Stay. When the time of the stay is reckoned from a certain day that day should be excluded;[67] if from an act done, the day on which it is done must be included.[68] Where a statute provides that a stay authorized by it is to be reckoned from the return-day of the original process, the reckoning should begin from the return-day of the first original process which was effective in bringing defendant into court.[69] In some jurisdictions a stay is reckoned from the rendition of the judgment.[70]

4. CLAIMANTS AND OPPONENTS OF STAY. Under a statute authorizing a "party" to apply to a judge in vacation for an order staying proceedings as preliminary to a motion in term-time to quash the writ or other proceedings, no one but a party to the action can apply for a stay.[71] A statute providing that wage-earners' claims shall be preferred and first paid out of the proceeds of sale gives holders a creditable person who, within the provisions of the act, might make the oath for the issuance of the execution before the expiration of the six-months' stay.

of such claims no right to object to the staying of a writ of execution issued on a judgment obtained by another person against their debtor.[72] In New York the court has ordered a partial stay in behalf of bona fide purchasers where the lien of the judgment has ceased by lapse of time.[73]

5. WAIVER OF STAY. A waiver of defendant's right to a stay will not be readily implied.[74] An intended waiver of a stay of execution is not affected by a statute which gives a stay of execution on contracts waiving it, for such a statutory provision is unconstitutional.[75]

6. PROCEEDINGS TO OBTAIN STAY[76] — a. Jurisdiction.[77] As a general rule a lower court has no power to stay an execution on a judgment of an appellate court.[78] If an execution is issued to another county the court that issued the execution has jurisdiction to stay the execution, not the court of the county to which the execution has been sent;[79] and if the judgment has been docketed in another county, the rule that the court which rendered the judgment has control of the execution would still appear to apply.[80]

b. Security — (1) NECESSITY OF.[81] The usual prerequisite to obtain a stay is that defendant shall furnish plaintiff security for the debt.[82]

Chancery will not supersede the execution of its own decree for money, except upon bond, with good security sufficient to secure

(II) Sufficiency of.[83] Statutory provisions for furnishing security must be substantially complied with.[84] It may not be necessary, however, to comply with all the provisions of the statute, as some may be merely directory.[85]

(III) Effect.[86] In some jurisdictions the mere giving of security operates ipso facto in some instances as a stay.[87] Again by statute in some states the bond, recognizance, or obligation given to obtain a stay has the effect and force of a judgment confessed in a court of record against the person or persons acknowledging the same and against their estates;[88] but it is not a judgment

the debt sought to be enjoined. "The ordinances of Lord Bacon required decrees to be executed before they could be impeached, and wherever these rules have been modified by statute, or departed from in practice, it has always been upon the terms of requiring security for the amount of the judgment or decree, either by the payment of the money into court, or by personal bond with good security." Clark v. Henderson, 1 Tenn. Ch. 506, 507.

In Florida, under the statute of 1844, which provided that no judicial sale should take place except upon the first Mondays of December, January, February, or March, provided defendant in execution tendered to the sheriff the bond therein prescribed conditioned for the forthcoming of the property levied upon, a bond is not necessary to obtain stay of proceedings, where the levy has been upon real estate, for the delivery bond in the statute was meant to provide for security for the forthcoming of property which was in its nature personal and subject to replevin. But in Sterne v. McKinney, 79 Ind. 578, it was held that a recognizance of the replevin bail for less than the whole of the judgment, interest, and costs was not authorized by statute and was void; the court holding flatly that in so far as Vincennes Nat. (v) Filing and Approval of Bonds. It is a usual statutory provision that the security offered by defendant must be approved by some person or officer.[91] If the security is not approved as required by law plaintiff may treat it as a nullity and issue execution.[92] The creditor may waive the approval since it is for his benefit;[93] but neither the debtor nor the security can take advantage of the want of it.[94] The undertaking need not be filed unless the statute requires it.[95]

In Pennsylvania a recognizance for a stay of execution was taken for six months by mistake of the prothonotary, instead of for nine months. The security was given to enable defendant to have the benefit of the stay given to a judgment debtor under the act of June 16, 1836. Defendant offered a new recognizance for nine months. It was held by the court that under his new recognizance defendant could have the stay for the full statutory period, but without prejudice to any right which plaintiff might have under the recognizance already entered into after the stay for nine months should have expired. The court said that it had no power to amend the first recognizance entered into. Welsh v. Brown, 2 Miles 108.

95. And if it is the practice to file the undertaking and the undertaking in question has not been filed, the court may order it

e. Application or Motion.[96] Motion or application to the court or judge is the common procedure to obtain a stay.[97] An order or rule to show cause is sometimes used.[98] Proceedings to obtain a permanent stay of an execution sale of land should be by bill in equity, not by petition and rule.[99] The applicant must make out a good case, for the court will not stay summarily if the case is doubtful, but will leave the party to seek his remedy by action.[1] The affidavit,[2] petition, or application[3] should set forth the applicant's ground for relief with sufficient particularity.

d. Time For Application. Application for the stay must be made within the time prescribed by law.[4] This rule would not prevent the execution from being stayed by agreement after the time set by statute.[5]

filed nunc pro tunc as of the day of its approval. Such a proceeding is in substance, although not in form, a bill to supply a lost record. The equity side of the court has jurisdiction in a proceeding of this character. Stettler v. Schmoyer, 3 Walk. (Pa.) 356.

96. Scope of proceedings.— If defendant obtain an order suspending the sale of property taken on an order of seizure and sale, the merits of the case cannot be gone into on a rule to set aside such order, but such rule is only to be allowed for irregularity in the issue of the order suspending the sale. This is the rule in Pennsylvania. Thus under the act of June 16, 1836, requiring as a condition of stay that bail shall be entered within thirty days from judgment rendered, a stay granted where bail was not entered until thirty-three days after judgment was erroneous. e. Notice. As a general rule the order for a stay cannot be made without notice to the opposite party, either before or accompanying the order.[6]

f. The Order.[7] An order staying a judgment is sufficient, if the judgment is described with reasonable certainty.[8] A stay of execution granted by a judge pro tem. until a case-made is settled has reference to an effectual settlement made before the judge has lost jurisdiction.[9] In New York the order should not be for a given number of days.[10] In Pennsylvania it is considered good practice to accompany a judge's order temporarily staying execution with the stipulation that the lien remain.[11] Service of the order should be made upon the proper person and in the proper manner.[12]

7. Remedy of Plaintiff Prejudiced by Stay. If plaintiff is prejudiced by a stay, his remedy is by application to the court which granted it for an order vacating or modifying the stay as the case may require; he has no remedy in equity.[13]

8. Effect of Stay — a. In General.[14] A stay usually operates upon all subsequent proceedings.[15] If a sale of property is stayed a sale during the stay is

In Kansas, however, it has been held that the fact that a judgment of foreclosure was stayed by order of court without a formal written motion affords no sufficient reason for setting aside the order. Morrill v. Seip, 26 Kan. 148.

7. A military order staying proceedings for the sale of property under execution, when served on the sheriff, operates as a stay of execution, since it is a command issued by a paramount authority. Humphreys v. Browne, 19 La. Ann. 158.

It is no objection that the stay describes the judgment as rendered against A, when in fact it was against A, B, and C, B and C being only indorsers. Cannon v. Trail, 1 Head (Tenn.) 282.

Judgment payable by instalments.— Although defendant in a judgment of foreclosure rendered for the full amount due and to become due is entitled to a stay on each instalment as it becomes due on entering the proper replevin bail, an order providing "that, upon replevin bail being given for the amount of the first note and interest thereon, and costs, no further bail or stay be required until further demand be made in the premises," is not erroneous, since under such order, when any instalment becomes due, previous ones having been paid, defendant will be entitled to give replevin bail for the instalment and thereby stay the execution. void.[16] Where a judgment is entered with a stay upon the record, the time within which an execution may issue begins to run from the time when the stay expires.[17] Where a stay is entered on a judgment against principal and surety it is prima facie a stay for all parties.[18]

b. On Lien, Levy, and Priority.[19] The levy and lien of an execution are not affected by an order of court staying the execution;[20] but the execution of a supersedeas bond may destroy the effect of a levy on personal property.[21] A stay of execution in the entry of the judgment suspends the running of the statute limiting the duration of the judgment lien.[22]

10. Liability on Bonds[29] — a. In General. The courts are careful not to hold the security liable for any more than his undertaking requires.[30] A stay bond binds the property of the surety from the date of its execution.[31] Where the execution is superseded on account of some matter of discharge after judgment, the security of the petitioner for the supersedeas is bound only for the costs of the new proceeding.[32] Where a defendant retains his property, under a statute,[33] upon giving bond for a stay of execution upon condition that he will neither remove, secrete, assign, nor in any way dispose of it until plaintiff's demand shall have been satisfied, an assignment of the property to other creditors is a breach of the bond.[34]

b. Defenses — (i) In General. The law of suretyship governs the liability of the stayer, and what would release a surety under that law will generally release him.[35] And it has been held that a refusal to accept offer to pay debt in

34. There is no substantial difference between such a disposition of property, and a general assignment of it for the use of creditors. The theory of the law is, that a vigilant creditor who has prosecuted his claim to judgment shall not be deprived of the fruits of his vigilance, by defendants entering bail to stay execution, and then assigning his property to other creditors, or in any other way disposing of it, to defeat such judgment creditor, except for the sustenance of himself or family, pending the stay of execution. Estoppel.— One who knows his name is being used as stayer and does nothing to avoid the liability but permits his land to be sold to satisfy the execution, merely saying to the sheriff when given notice of sale that he is not bound, as he did not authorize his name to be signed, will, on attempting on that ground several years later to void the sale, be held by reason of his acquiescence to have ratified the signing of his name. full[35] or satisfaction of the original judgment[37] may constitute a valid defense. Revival of judgment[38] against the principal by scire facias issued against him alone[39] or neglect on the part of the execution debtor to file the twelve months' bond with the execution[40] does not release the surety. An obligor under a bond given to stay execution is estopped from setting up the unconstitutionality of the law under which the stay was allowed.[41]

(II) Attack on the Instrument. A penalty and a condition being indispensable to constitute a recognizance, the plea of nul tiel record to an action on a recognizance lacking these requisites will be sustained.[42] Mere mistakes or immaterial omissions in a bond do not constitute a valid defense.[43] Where a stay is attempted to be taken under a stay law it is held in some jurisdictions to be a good defense to an action against the stayer that the bond, recognizance, or undertaking was not entered into in pursuance to the requirements of those laws.[44] In other jurisdictions, however, it is held that one may be held on his

Failure of plaintiff in execution to enroll judgment upon a forfeited forthcoming bond until more than a year after its rendition does not discharge the surety on the bond, although such failure lets in the lien of younger judgments, which take all the principal's property. That his insolvency is ascertained before the expiration of the time limited for the stay does not exonerate the stayer, under a statute which provides for requiring defendant to justify or give other security if plaintiff deems his debt in danger from the insolvency of the stayer. When an order was made in vacation staying an execution until next term, the obligor in a bond given to indemnify plaintiff for all damages arising from the stay cannot defend on the ground that the stay extended not beyond the next term and that, if plaintiff could have made the money any time after that and failed to do so, the obligor was not liable. Stay of execution by consent of plaintiff after the judgment has been revived is within the letter of the statute which provides that in all cases where a justice of the peace renders judgment he may receive and enter security for the stay of the judgment at any time before the same is paid or execution is issued with the consent of plaintiff or his agent. It is no attempt to stay the judgment of revivor on the ground of that judgment conferring any right to a party, then to give security for the stay. If that were the question the counsel for plaintiff in error would be correct. But this is the stay by consent of plaintiff, of the original judgment, before execution issued. undertaking as a common-law contract, although it may not be binding and effective as a statutory undertaking if supported by a sufficient consideration.[45]

(III) Attack on Judgment and Proceedings. So long as a judgment remains in force the stayer cannot go behind it in search of irregularities in the proceedings in order to be discharged from his liability.[46] The fact that the judgment has since been set aside as void is not a defense to an action on the bond given for the stay of execution on the judgment.[47]

In Iowa it was held that execution properly issued against the principal and stayer in the bond, although the clerk had never had a judgment against the stayer, and there was never any journal entry of judgment other than the one originally entered against the principal in the stay bond. Cavender v. Smith, 5 Iowa 157.

In Nebraska Code Civ. Proc. § 477, requires that "at the expiration of the stay bond the clerk shall issue a joint execution against all the joint debtors and sureties, describing them as debtors or sureties therein."

an execution may issue against the stayer alone on a suggestion made of the principal's death.[55]

d. Remedies of Stayer — (i) Requiring Judgment Debtor to Be First Proceeded Against. In some jurisdictions the security cannot be held liable until after the judgment debtor has been proceeded against.[56] In some jurisdictions the stayer is entitled to have a judgment defendant who was only surety on the cause of action proceeded against before he himself is held for his liability of stayer if the stay has not violated the contract of suretyship.[57] Where a release of a levy upon the original surety's property was effected by the stay the surety is liable before the stayer.[58] In other jurisdictions plaintiff may proceed against either principal or stayer or both at his option.[59]

(ii) Exoneration. If the stayer is obliged to discharge the judgment, he is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the creditor against the judgment debtor.[60]

In Indiana it is proper for the execution to be issued nominally against the principal and stayer for the sake of conforming to the judgment, although the principal is dead, but it can be enforced against only the surviving stayer. Carnahan v. Brown, 6 Blackf. 93.

56. Burr v. Moody, Wright (Ohio) 449, where issuance against the principal first was specially required by statute. See Ensley v. McCorkle, 74 Ind. 240, where this requirement is made by statute. If the property of the principal is not immediately subject to process, as where by the death of the principal it cannot be reached without revivor (Cheatham v. Brien, 3 Head (Tenn.) 552), or where his property is encumbered and an attempt to sell it would result only in costs (Folger v. Palmer, 35 La. Ann. 814), the creditor is not bound to seize the principal's property, but it is the officer's duty to proceed against the stayer at once.

Mere delay in not going against principal does not discharge the surety, especially where the surety fails to use the remedy given him in such a case by statute. Anderson v. Lithgo, 5 Baxt. (Tenn.) 603.

Where a principal still has an equity of redemption, although the land has been duly and legally sold by the sheriff for much less than its value under a prior judgment in favor of another plaintiff against the same defendant who has no other property subject to execution, the execution plaintiff is not required to proceed first against such property, although he had the right to redeem it from the sale. B. Quashing Execution[61] — 1. Definition. The term "quash" as applied to writs is predicated of some defect in the writ itself, or in the form of the writ, which defect does not reach to the merits of the case.[62]

2. Grounds[63] — a. In General. If the court has improperly made an order directing execution to issue, it will on motion recall the execution, although the order is appealable.[64] Where an appeal from the judgment has been taken and an undertaking given for a stay of proceedings, an execution issued upon the judgment may be set aside on motion.[65] If plaintiff and sheriff have been enjoined from executing the original fieri facias, an alias issued after the injunction will be quashed.[66] An agreement not to issue execution will be enforced, but where after reasonable time the agreement has not been carried out on the part of defendant, a rule to set aside will be discharged.[67] But that there are other lands in the hands of purchasers from defendant after the judgment and liable to contribute to the payment of the debt is not a ground for a motion to quash,[68] nor is the fact that a defendant corporation is in process of voluntary dissolution, no permanent receiver having been appointed,[69] for the creditor is entitled to any benefits derived from an execution up to the time of the appointment of a permanent receiver.[70]

b. Defective Judgment — (I) Judgment of Court of Record. Irregularities and errors in the rendition of a judgment or in the proceedings leading thereto, unless such errors are jurisdictional[71] or unless the judgment is utterly void,[72]

In Tennessee, under Code, §§ 3063–3067, the stayer of a judgment may pay it off and have his motion against the principal debtor, or he may, on his affidavit that if execution is stayed longer he fears he may be obliged to pay the debt, have execution issued at any time; but he has no authority to control the judgment, or direct the issuance of execution thereon, without the assent of plaintiff, except in the mode prescribed by statute, and where he does so plaintiff may direct its return, after it has been issued, without affecting the liability of such stayer. Chaffin v. Rose, 5 Baxt. 696.

Right of exoneration exists against only defendants in judgment, although there may be other persons who were liable on the cause of action but not joined in the judgment, as he had not contracted to pay any money for them, and the fact that he had created no contract. Reeves v. Isenhour, 59 Ind. 478.

Right of exoneration exists against all co-defendants in the judgment, although he stayed it at the request of one alone and although some of the co-defendants were sureties. Reissner v. Dessar, 80 Ind. 307.

Jurisdiction of stayer's action against debtor. — The court of common pleas has jurisdiction of an action by the obligor of a bond given to stay an execution on a judgment of the superior court to recover the amount thereof from the judgment debtor, after having paid it to the judgment creditor, where the bond misdescribed the execution, so that an action thereon could not lie in the superior court, as such action did not seek to interfere with the judgment, but only sought relief on the ground of the mistake in the bond. cannot be made grounds for a motion to quash an execution upon the judgment.[73] Such a motion cannot be made to perform the office of a writ of error.[74] A rendition of a judgment for a greater amount than that to which plaintiff was entitled would not be a ground for quashing the execution.[75] An objection that the complaint[76] or the petition[77] did not state a cause of action or an objection that there has been a mistake as to the parties,[78] or that the judgment was not authorized by the verdict because the verdict was irresponsive to the issue,[79] cannot be made upon a motion to quash. But an execution issued on a void judgment may be quashed.[80]

(II) Judgment Transcribed From Justice of the Peace. Likewise errors and irregularities in a justice's court which are not jurisdictional in their nature cannot be made a ground for a motion to quash an execution issued upon the transcript of a judgment out of the court of record where the transcript was filed.[81] But that the proceeding before the justice was a nullity on account of lack of jurisdiction[82] or that a condition precedent to the filing of the transcript

Judgment against a person subsequently found insane.— A judicial finding upon an inquest de lunatico inquirendo, which was pending at the same time as the proceedings which led to the execution judgment, that defendant was non compos mentis is a sufficient ground for quashing the execution; for by the finding defendant at the time he was made a party to the proceedings upon which judgment was rendered was incapable of being a party in the eye of the law. In Pennsylvania it has been said: "The proceedings (of the justice's court) are not in such case properly before the court at all, and the transcript is to be treated as if it contained only a record of the judgment, upon which we cannot restrain execution, even if the judgment is in fact void, because

c. Matters of Defense to Action. An execution will not be vacated on account of any defense which could have been made at the time of the trial.[84]

d. Matters Arising After Judgment and Before Issuance. Where the matter of discharge of a judgment debtor is subsequent to the judgment, motion to quash is the proper remedy[85] — a remedy which very early in this country was substituted for the audita querela.[86]

e. Errors and Informalities in the Execution and Its Issuance — (i) Errors in the Writ Itself. An execution issued on a judgment which does not authorize it may be quashed on motion[87] and the money made thereon ordered to be refunded.[88] But by the general rule where there is only a clerical mistake, the execution will not be quashed, but amended so as to conform to the judgment[89] unless the variance is so great that the execution cannot be identified with the judgment, in which case it must be quashed.[90] Where an execution does not conform to the judgment in that it is issued for a greater amount than that for which the judgment was rendered, the very general rule is that when this variance is there is nothing to show us that the judgment has no foundation." The applicant, a married woman, not having asserted her rights with due regard for the rules of procedure, was not allowed to do so on a motion to quash, although the objections which she alleged might have been fatal upon certiorari. She was therefore left to defend an action of ejectment or bring trespass for levying upon her land. Brandes v. Struphauer, 2 Chest. Co. Rep. 319.

83. Thus where the condition precedent is the issue upon the justice's judgment and return nulla bona defendant may show upon a motion to quash the execution issued upon the transcript any defect or irregularity in the justice's process or constable's return. Ruby v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., 39 Mo. 480. But an execution issued by the circuit court upon a justice's judgment will not be quashed because the justice's transcript does not show the manner of service upon defendant where he appeared in defendant's action. Bauer v. Miller, 16 Mo. App. 252.

Evidence that the execution issued by the justice was returned nulla bona before its return-day is admissible. due to a clerical mistake and there is no question of fraud the execution will not be quashed.[91] Writs of execution may be set aside when they have been issued for an amount less than the amount of the judgment,[92] unless the reason for the variance should appear on the face of the writ.[93] The writ may be quashed, however, for irregularities in the direction for its return.[94] A misrecital of parties in the writ should not be a ground for quashing thereof so long as the writ can be identified with the judgment.[95] A variance between a judgment and the recital of it in the execution, which variance is immaterial and does not work any preju-

An execution issuing from the orphans' court for the collection of money which is not made returnable to the regular semi-annual return of the county court proper, if there are fifteen days between the beginning of a term and the teste of the writ, or, if there are not fifteen days, then to the next succeeding term of the county court, should be quashed on motion. dice to the debtor,[96] or an unauthorized indorsement upon an execution,[97] or the fact that it lacks a seal,[98] is not a ground for a motion to quash.

(II) Errors in the Issuance of the Writ. An execution issued by a person without authority to issue will be quashed.[99] An execution bearing teste after the death of defendant,[1] or an execution which issued a year and a day after the rendition of the judgment and without a revivor,[2] or an execution prematurely issued,[3] or one which was not subscribed by the party issuing it or by his attorney, as the statute required,[4] should be quashed.

f. Matters Arising After Issuance. The quashal of a writ of execution is often based upon matters arising after its issuance,[5] such as the payment or satisfaction of the judgment,[6] or the garnishment of the execution defendant for the judgment debt.[7] A mere tender of payment, however, will not authorize the

A mere oral announcement of a decision by judges sitting in the general term and the entry of the decision in the minutes of the clerk is not such a judgment of the general term as will authorize action under it. An execution therefore issued by plaintiff upon an original judgment at special term in his favor after an oral announcement by the judges at general term of an affirmance of the judge without the necessary formalities as stated above is an irregularity to be taken advantage of on motion. See Bowman v. Tallman, 2 Rob. (N. Y.) 632.

Motion must be made in season, for "ordinarily courts of law refuse to set aside executions, when that, and that only, has been done, which is required to be done now, although done prematurely." Hapgood v. Goddard, 26 Vt. 401, 405.

Waiver of irregularity.— On a note payable "one day after date," judgment was entered the day when the judgment was due, the next day, under power of attorney, and execution issued. Afterward defendant in writing admitted that the execution was issued with his full consent, and that it was the understanding that there was to be no stay of execution. (U. S.) 244, 11 L. ed. 253).

The fact that the clerk indorsed a credit after issuance, which credit should have been indorsed to conform to a judgment by confession, is not a ground for quashing the execution. Williamson v. Ong, 1 W. Va. 84.

The fact that plaintiff attached money of defendant in the hands of a third person furnishes no ground to set aside the execution if no money was realized on the attachment. Grove v. Nes, 11 York Leg. Rec. (Pa.) 9.

Replevin bond satisfaction while in force. — An execution being levied upon the property of one defendant and a replevin bond taken, the second execution against the other defendant cannot issue so long as the replevin bond is in force, it being a satisfaction of the original judgment; if the execution issue, it will be quashed. Taylor v. Dundass, 1 Wash. (Va.) 92.

court to quash the execution, unless the money is paid into court.[8] Nor will an order of execution be vacated because subsequently defendant filed an appeal-bond which was approved.[9] The court has no power to set aside or to vacate an execution for acts of omission and commission on the part of the sheriff after the writ had duly come to his hands;[10] hence a levy upon property not subject to execution is not ground for quashing the writ.[11]

3. Proceedings to Quash[12] — a. Jurisdiction. The court having cognizance of the judgment is the proper tribunal to enforce it by execution[13] and to set aside executions issued without authority.[14] It is not necessary or proper to go into equity if the vacation of an execution is all the relief asked.[15] As a general rule courts have the power to quash an execution at any time, but they may refuse to exercise the power when it would be unjust to do so, as for instance in the case of laches.[16] Application to quash may be made to a judge in vacation under the practice in some jurisdictions.[17] Although it is usual that a judgment

The mere allegation that exempted land has been levied on and sold is not a ground for quashing the execution. Hasty v. Simpson, 84 N. C. 590. In Roth v. Insley, 86 Cal. 134, 24 Pac. 853, it was contended that, when execution was levied on exempt property, the proper remedy was to apply for the recall of the execution and that an injunction was not necessary on account of the aforesaid remedy at law. But the court decided that inasmuch as a sale of the homestead property constituted a cloud upon the title, the proper remedy was injunction and that the justice who issued the execution could not have been authorized to recall it. See infra, VIII, D, 3, a. In Straat v. Rinkle, 16 Mo. App. 115, it was held that a motion to quash an execution levied on homestead property was properly overruled when the ground was that the appraisement of the property was erroneous.

Effect of death of execution plaintiff after levy see supra, VI, C. In Kennedy v. Holloway, 6 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 321, it was held that a stranger to the execution could not insist on quashing the execution or levy on this ground.

It being the uniform practice in the court of appeals to take cognizance of all errors assigned which appear on the face of the proceedings it will continue to do so until the practice shall be changed by law. Hence if an indorsement of a credit is made upon an alias execution without fixing the time at which the amount so credited should be applied to the credit of judgment for a debt which bears interest until paid, the injustice can be arrested by the court of appeals. of a justice of the peace transcribed to a court of record is deemed a judgment of the court where the transcript is filed to be enforced[18] and that the court of record will quash executions issued after it acquires jurisdiction in cases where it it is just and proper to do so,[19] the court of record is not absolutely bound by the transcript, but has the right to examine the proceedings to see whether the justice acted within his jurisdiction.[20]

b. Parties.[21] A motion to quash a writ should generally be in the name of the parties of record.[22] But a person whose property is affected by a fieri facias may move the court to set it aside, although he is not a party to the suit.[23] An execution prematurely issued will not necessarily be set aside at the instance of creditors.[24] A judgment debtor who is entitled to have an execution quashed because the judgment has been satisfied by a co-debtor, although he has neglected to quash, may nevertheless on the same ground supersede and quash an execution issued on a judgment against a garnishee under that execution.[25]

c. The Motion or Application — (i) Whether Proper Proceeding. The proper proceeding to quash an execution is by motion; but a motion would be unnecessary after notice that execution has been withdrawn,[26] or after it has been returned.[27]

In North Carolina it was held that where fieri facias on a justice's judgment was levied on land, and the regular proceedings had in the county court for subjecting the land and a sale made by virtue thereof, the county court at a subsequent term had no authority, on motion, to set aside the fieri facias on the justice's judgment. In Pennsylvania a judgment was obtained against husband and wife before a justice for the husband's debt; no appeal was taken and a transcript was entered in the court of common pleas and an execution issued. It was held that the common pleas had no jurisdiction to open the judgment; that the wife's only remedy against the judgment was by appeal, and that for all purposes but lien the judgment remained before the justice where alone it is assailable; that one court cannot overhaul a judgment while it remains within the jurisdiction of the court that rendered it. (II) NOTICE OF MOTION—(A) Necessity. It is necessary that a notice of motion to quash should be given to the parties to be affected.[28]

(B) Upon Whom Served. The notice of motion must be served upon the real parties in interest, not upon their attorneys.[29]

Changing grounds at hearing.—Where, upon a motion to quash an execution, certain reasons therefor are assigned, and after argument, both parties being present, the mover, upon the suggestion of the court, withdraws the reasons assigned and assigns others varying from them in form only and not in substance and requiring no change in the arguments or authorities relied upon by the adverse party, the latter is not entitled to new notice before proceeding to further argument; and if he declines to contest the matter further without such notice the court may nevertheless decide the motion against him. Allegation of clerical misprision.—A motion to quash execution on the ground that service of notice of recovery of the action against the personal representatives of defendant who died pending the action was not had on the part of defendants sufficiently presents the objection that the judgment is a clerical misprision. If it is admitted, as it was not in this case, the rendition of the judgment was a accurate description of the execution must accompany the petition or application;[37] in others this is unnecessary.[38]

(iv) Time of. A motion to quash an execution for an irregularity must be prosecuted with diligence; any considerable delay on the part of the appellant will be treated as a waiver of the irregularity and an irrevocable renunciation of his right to quash the writ.[39] Whether an execution may[40] or may not[41] be quashed after its return depends upon the law of the particular jurisdiction. A motion to quash an execution on the ground that it was issued more than a year and a day after rendition of judgment is not barred by the lapse of the time for bringing writs of error.[42] But an execution upon a dormant judgment cannot be set aside after property has been sold under it.[43] On a motion to quash a return cannot be questioned before the return-day, even though the execution be filed before that time;[44] and an execution cannot be quashed at one term when not returnable until the next term.[45]

d. The Hearing — (i) Nature and Scope of Questions and Issues Considered. On a motion to quash an execution questions which should properly be considered on an appeal cannot be presented.[46] The court will examine previous proceedings subsequent to the judgment to ascertain whether there has been any irregularity in the orders of the court or in the action of the clerk.[47] As a general rule questions of title[48] will not be determined upon a motion to quash, nor will equities be adjusted.[49] If the motion is upon the ground that the judgment has been released by the creditor, the court will investigate whether the judgment has been assigned, or whether the release was obtained by fraud or misrepresentation.[50]

(II) Evidence.[51] A motion to quash an execution resting on facts outside the record in the case must be established by evidence upon the hearing of the motion.[52] In some jurisdictions the proper practice is for the court to require evidence in support to be in the form of affidavits.[53] The unsupported affidavit of defendant may[54] or may not[55] be sufficient to support the motion to quash, according to the jurisdiction. The burden of proof is upon defendant who moves to quash an execution on the ground that the judgment has been paid.[56] Where it is shown by defendant that he has paid the judgment to plaintiff's attorney of record, it is then the duty of plaintiff to show a revocation of authority of the attorney to receive the money before it was paid to him and that defendant had notice of the revocation.[57]

(III) Directing an Issue. Although the court has the right to consider the motion and decide it in a summary way,[58] it will sometimes for its own satisfaction direct an issue.[59]

Appeal or Writ of Error.[61] Whether an appeal or writ of error will lie from an order quashing or refusing to quash an execution is a question upon which the authorities are in conflict; some authorities, among them the federal courts, hold that the order is not a final judgment from which a writ of error will lie,[62] others hold the contrary.[63]

4. EFFECT.[67] The quashing or dismissal of final process for irregularities does not affect the judgment on which it was issued,[68] and the judgment creditor may obtain the issuance of another execution;[69] nor does it vitiate a sale of property made in pursuance of the execution.[70] A judgment quashing an execution after the supreme court had reversed the trial court's refusal to quash relates back to the original judgment and its effect, so far as respects the parties to that judgment, is to vacate all process issued for its satisfaction.[71] The quashing of the execution destroys the levy upon personal property.[72]

C. Affidavit of Illegality[73] — 1. NATURE OF REMEDY. The proceeding by affidavit of illegality[74] is a substitute for audita querela,[75] and the legislature in adopting this mode of proceeding has confined the effect of illegality to executions and judgments issuing out of and returnable to the court.[76]

2. GROUNDS — a. In General. Where a levy is made of a fieri facias founded on a debt contracted prior to June, 1865, and there was no affidavit of payment of taxes as required by the relief act of 1870, defendant may stop the progress of the fieri facias by affidavit of illegality.[77] Inasmuch as plaintiff has the option of proceeding against the property of the principal or of the surety when the execution is against both, the dismissal of a levy on the lands of the principal is no ground for illegality on the part of the surety.[78] Where land is conveyed to one who agrees in consideration therefor to pay off a judgment, instead of which he takes an assignment of the judgment and proceeds to enforce the same by levy

and sale, the proper remedy is by an affidavit of illegality, not by injunction.[79] An execution founded upon an award against administrators in their representative capacity, but levied upon the individual property of the administrator, is ground for an affidavit.[80] When an execution issues upon the foreclosure of a mortgage on personal property, the mortgagor or his special agent may file an affidavit of illegality wherein he may set up and avail himself of any defense which he might have set up according to law upon an ordinary suit upon the demand secured by the mortgage and which goes to show that the amount claimed is not due.[81] The affidavit of illegality is not a remedy for an excessive levy.[82] To be good as a ground of illegality, the variance between a fieri facias and the judgment on which it is founded must be material.[83] That the levying officer violated his duty in refusing to levy on the property pointed out by defendant,[84] or that the land levied on does not belong to defendant,[85] is not a ground for an affidavit. Nor is it a ground of illegality that a levy on property of a co-defendant was dismissed by plaintiff without an order of court and the execution afterward levied on property of affiant.[86]

b. Defective Judgment. If defendant has not been served and does not appear, he may take advantage of the defect by affidavit of illegality;[87] but if he has had his day in court he cannot go behind the judgment by affidavit of illegality.[88] The remedy by affidavit of illegality is not a substitute for an appeal or by plaintiff's promise that, in case of such withdrawal, he would look to the principal alone for payment, was held to be a relief of the surety which he might set up in an affidavit of illegality, averring both the agreement and the illegal issuance of execution on the original judgment. Defenses which should have been urged at the trial cannot be brought up by affidavit of illegality. Brock v. Brock, 104

a writ of error or other formal proceedings.[89] An ordinary affidavit of illegality is sufficient to raise the question of service where there is no official return thereon;[90] but if there is a return, a traverse must be filed thereto at the next term after notice of it,[91] and proof must be made that the sheriff's return was traversed at the next term after notice of the return.[92] A defendant who has had his day in court and against whom a judgment has been rendered cannot go behind the judgment by an affidavit of illegality because he was by plaintiff's fraud, unmixed with negligence on his own part, deprived of a hearing. His proper remedy is by a petition in equity to set aside the judgment.[93]

3. TIME OF FILING. Where an affidavit of illegality is based on an alleged want of service, the traverse of the return of the sheriff that defendant was served must be made at the first term after notice of the entry of service is had by defendant.[94]

4. FORM, REQUISITES, AND SUFFICIENCY — a. Formal Requisites. The venue of the affidavit must be that of the court issuing the execution.[95] The grounds of illegality alleged must be sworn to.[96]

Trial held in unlawful place.— A judgment of the superior court rendered on appeal from a justice's court is not void so as to be attacked by affidavit of illegality of execution issued thereon, on the ground that the justice's court was not held "at a court house established according to law," both parties having had their day in the superior court. Green v. Alexander, 88 Ga. 161, 13 S. E. 946.

An execution which conforms to an irregular but not void judgment is not proceeding illegally and is not a ground for an affidavit of illegality. Emory v. Smith, 51 Ga. 323.

A judgment, defective simply in not being signed, is not void; and hence an affidavit of illegality to an execution issued upon such judgment, on the ground that there is no judgment, cannot be sustained. Pollard v. King, 62 Ga. 103.

Judgment not describing indorser or surety as such.— An affidavit of illegality is insufficient which states that the judgment on which the execution is founded is irregular in that, although the suit was against an indorser or a surety, the judgment fails to describe him as indorser or a surety. When the maker and indorser of a promissory note are dead, and the administrator of the maker is also executor of the indorser, and suit is brought on the note against him in both capacities, although the judgment does not specify the relation of maker and indorser, it is good against him, at least so far as he is the representative of the maker, and if levy be made accordingly he cannot arrest it on that ground by affidavit of illegality. law.[98] If one of the grounds of an affidavit presents a legal defense against the further progress of the execution a motion to dismiss should be denied.[99]

(II) Lack of Jurisdiction. An affidavit which alleges lack of jurisdiction of person must distinctly negative all grounds of jurisdiction and all methods of service.[1] An affidavit which alleges that the judgment was rendered by a justice of the peace at a place in his district where he had no authority to sit is good, without alleging the place at which the justice ought to have held court.[2]

(III) Payment. An allegation to the effect that the amount for which the execution has been issued has been paid must be clear and unequivocal.[3] But an allegation that the execution has been fully paid off since the rendition of judgment is sufficient on general demurrer, although it is not alleged to whom payment was made.[4]

(IV) Other Allegations. An allegation that there was no judgment or that the judgment on which the execution was issued was set aside on motion for a new trial is not demurrable.[5] An affidavit alleging falsity of a constable's return that there was no personal property to be found must distinctly aver that defendant had personal property subject to execution at the time of the levy on the realty.[6] If the land levied upon is misdescribed in the execution the affidavit should set out the misdescription.[7] An affidavit which does not identify the premises levied upon otherwise than by reference to the entry of levy where the premises are fully described is sufficient.[8] An affidavit that execution was levied on property set apart as a homestead to affiant's deceased husband is not demurrable for failing to state that the execution plaintiff had not made affidavit that his claim was within one of the exceptions to the homestead act.[9]

c. Parties. The remedy by affidavit of illegality, which is a substitute for audita querela, lies only in favor of defendant in execution[10] whose property has been

A ground, taken in an affidavit, that the execution "issued upon a bogus judgment, which was not obtained after a due course of law, but was obtained in chambers, contrary to the statute in such cases made and provided, and by fraud," is too general and indefinite, and does not show that the judgment is void, and therefore cannot be inquired into in a proceeding by illegality. seized.[11] A co-defendant whose goods have not been seized cannot make affidavit.[12] If the illegality is alleged to be want of service upon defendant and the return of the sheriff that defendant was served is traversed, the sheriff should be made a party to the traverse.[13]

5. Amendment. Defendant is bound at his peril to state all the grounds of illegality which may exist at the time of filing his affidavit; if he fails, he will not be allowed to file a second affidavit for the same causes.[14] The affidavit is amendable by new and independent matter if defendant did not know of the existence of the matter at the time the affidavit was filed,[15] and if he will swear that he did not know of it at that time.[16] Nevertheless in spite of this provision of the code[17] amendments of a different character which only alter grounds already filed may be made without the oath.[18] If, pending the issue on an affidavit of illegality, leave is granted to withdraw the execution to be levied on other property of defendant, he may make another affidavit when the levy is made and the property advertised for sale.[19] A prior affidavit by one defendant whose property was not seized[20] will not bar a subsequent affidavit by a co-defendant after his property has been levied upon.[21] Defendant should set forth specific reasons why the facts were not known to him at the time of filing the first affidavit.[22] A second affidavit filed after the dismissal of the first must show diligence to ascertain the facts on which it was granted at the time of filing the first affidavit.[23]

6. Bond. The failure of defendant to give a forthcoming bond to replevy the property levied on is not a good legal ground for dismissing the affidavit.[24] He may replevy it by giving bond and security for its forthcoming, but is not bound to do so.[25] If the affidavit is filed to an execution based on the foreclosure of a mortgage on personal property and the affiant either gives bonds with security for the forthcoming of the property, or makes affidavit of his inability from poverty so to do, his affidavit is properly dismissed.[26]

7. WITHDRAWAL. If the illegality is withdrawn, plaintiff in execution may proceed as in cases where claims may be dismissed or withdrawn.[27]

8. THE HEARING AND DETERMINATION — a. Order of Proceedings. When the case on trial is made by an affidavit of illegality, a motion by plaintiff in the fieri facias to dismiss the illegality takes precedence of a motion by defendant to quash it.[28]

b. Proof — (i) In General. Where an affidavit has been filed and a bond given, the court should hear the evidence as to the facts stated in the affidavit.[29] The evidence must be confined to the grounds stated in the affidavit.[30]

(ii) Burden of. The burden of proof is necessarily on plaintiff to make a prima facie case by putting an execution, fair on its face, in evidence and showing a legal levy thereon.[31] It is then the duty of defendant to go forward and show that the execution is proceeding illegally.[32] If the execution defendant does not appear, the proceedings must be dismissed, not tried ex parte.[33]

c. Submission to Jury. If plaintiff or his attorney desires to controvert the facts contained in the affidavit, issue must be joined and tried by a jury.[34] Where the affidavit alleges among other grounds of illegality that there was no jurisdiction over the person of defendant, it is not an abuse of discretion upon the part of the trial judge but is good practice to direct a separate issue to be formed and first tried upon that ground.[35] When no evidence in support of an affidavit of illegality is admitted, there should be no submission of the case to the jury, but the illegality should be dismissed or sustained as matter of law.[36] On the other hand a verdict may be directed in a proper case.[37]

Where want of jurisdiction of person of defendant alleged.— When it is alleged that defendant had not been served and had neither appeared and pleaded nor authorized another to do so for him, it is necessary to prove affirmatively the truth of these allegations. Le Master v. Orr, 101 Ga. 762, 29 S. E. 32. Where the ground of an affidavit of illegality is want of service, it is incumbent on defendant to produce the record of the suit and to support the allegations in his affidavit by evidence; the presumption of law being in favor of the validity of the judgment. But where, on levy of fieri facias, defendant averred in his oath of illegality that the consideration of the debt was slaves, the judge cannot stop the cause for want of jurisdiction, because the evidence satisfies him that the consideration was slaves. He must submit the issue to the jury. Corbin v. Habersham, 43 Ga. 166.

d. The Adjudication — (I) In General. A motion to set aside an affidavit of illegality which sets up that what purported to be a judgment was entered without authority involves the legal sufficiency of that judgment, and a denial of the motion is a decision that the judgment is void.[38]

(II) Conclusiveness of. The questions determined as well as those which should have been litigated in a proceeding upon an affidavit of illegality are, as to the parties and their privies, henceforth res adjudicata.[39] But a judgment sustaining a demurrer to an affidavit for insufficiency is no bar to a new proceeding containing allegations stating a good case.[40] A judgment overruling a demurrer and sustaining the affidavit except as to a certain sum will bar a subsequent application to amend the demurrer by introducing new and distinct grounds.[41]

(III) Appeal From.[42] Where the bill of exceptions differs from the record sent up, the record, not the bill of exceptions, will be followed in the appellate court.[43]

e. Costs[44] and Penalties. It it be made to appear upon trial of an issue formed on an affidavit of illegality that the interposition was only for delay, the jury trying the case may assess upon the principal debt such damages, not exceeding twenty-five per cent, as may seem reasonable and just.[45]

D. Injunction[46] — 1. The Rule Against Injunction if Adequate Remedy Exists at Law. The usual rule that injunction will not be granted if an adequate remedy at law exists obtains when it is sought to restrain the enforcement of an execution.[47] If defendant can obtain a satisfactory remedy by a simple motion

Two issues raised by two defendants, one issue outside affidavit.— Where one of two defendants in execution had filed an affidavit of illegality, and his co-defendant had made an extraordinary motion for a new trial on grounds involving other facts than those set up in the affidavit, refusal to submit both to the jury together was not error. Such questions therefore cannot be raised later in a motion to set aside the execution and judgment for the same causes embraced in the execution (Field v. Sisson, 40 Ga. 67) or in defense to an action on the bond given at the filing of the affidavit (Bowden v. Taylor, 81 Ga. 204, 6 S. E. 280).

A judgment that the fieri facias had not been paid is a bar to a motion that the fieri facias shall be entered satisfied (Tucker v. Respass, 28 Ga. 613) or to an injunction against the issuance of the execution (Neal v. Henderson, 72 Ga. 209).

Erroneous judgment acquiesced in.— Where one making an affidavit of illegality failed to appear to prosecute the same and the justice, instead of dismissing the affidavit, rendered judgment against affiant on the merits, the judgment was not absolutely void, so that, on its being acquiesced in by affiant, it became conclusive on him. to the court which issued the execution, it would be absurd to go into equity to obtain relief. Equity will not listen to such a case.[48] Injunction will not lie where the remedy is by appeal,[49] or where defendant may have relief by affidavit of illegality.[50] Where motion to quash would take too long[51] or where the situation presents several questions complicated of law and fact[52] injunction is proper.

Where the Execution or Its Issuance Is Objected to — (i) Void or Irregular Writ — (A) In General. Injunction is not the remedy to prevent a sale under an execution void upon its face[53] or under an execution issued upon a void judgment.[54] The appropriate method is by application to the court of issuance,[55] or

But where an affidavit of illegality was filed, issue on which was pending, and the judge dismissed the "case and levy for want of jurisdiction" and plaintiff attempted afterward to proceed upon the same levy, it was held that defendant had exhausted his remedy at law by procuring an order dismissing the levy and that therefore equity would enjoin plaintiff from proceeding in defiance of the judgment of dismissal without requiring defendant to seek any further order at law. Insufficient or inaccurate description of land.— When the return describes the land levied on as wild, uncultivated, or unoccupied land, injunction will issue upon proof that land was occupied and that therefore the levy was unlawful. Sherman v. Union Nat. Bank, 66 Miss. 648, 6 So. 501. A mistake in the description of land levied on is not ground for issuing an injunction if the land can be readily identified. Boggess v. Lowery, 78 Ga. 539, 3 S. E. 771, 6 Am. St. Rep. 279, where a portion of the lot of land in controversy was described correctly as to the number, the portion of the lot from which it was taken, and the boundaries, but there was a mistake as to the district. If the inaccuracies are not such as would have deceived the judgment debtor injunction will not issue. Deville v. Hayes, 23 La. Ann. 550. A slight variance between the description of the property in the advertisement and the seizure and notice is insufficient to sustain an injunction, when it is apparent what property is intended. McCarty v. McCarty, 19 La. 300 (where description of land was correct except it said land seized was on West Bank of a certain bayou instead of on east bank); Dabbs v. Hemken, 3 Rob. (La.) 129. It is also held in Louisiana that as an insufficient description renders the sale void and leaves defendant unharmed he has no ground for an injunction. Henderson v. Hoy, 26 La. Ann. 156.

The fact that by mistake or omission credits were not entered on an execution is not ground for enjoining the writ. Brown v. Wilson, 56 Ga. 534; Rowley v. Kemp, 2 La. Ann. 360; Gorsuch v. Thomas, 57 Md. 334. The remedy is by motion in the court which rendered the judgment for a rule on the judgment creditor to show cause why the credits should not be allowed (Gorsuch v. Thomas, supra) and upon the rule an execution should be stayed until the facts are ascertained; but where an execution issued against principal and security, and part of the money was made by the sheriff by levy and sale of the principal's effects, but he returned it "No money made," and an alias issued against the security for the whole debt, the sheriff having absconded, the security was entitled to relief in equity, and the court had jurisdiction to enjoin for the amount made by the sale (Fryer v. Austill, 2 Stew. (Ala.) 119).

The maxim that he who asks for equity must do equity has been held applicable to a defendant who asks an injunction against an excessive execution. See Russell v. Cleary, 105 Ind. 502, 5 N. E. 414. Where execution issued for costs, it will not be enjoined for being excessive where it does not appear that the judgment debtor has paid the interest on the costs, for a judgment for costs bears interest. Calderwood v. Trent, 9 Rob. (La.) 227. The injunction should be perpetuated as to the excess alone; the creditor should be entitled to proceed with the sale for the amount actually due. b. Wrongful Levy on Property of Defendant in Execution — (I) Personal Property. By an almost universal rule an execution against personal property will not be enjoined unless it possesses some peculiar value or attribute, unless its sale would cause irreparable damage to its owner, or unless for some reason the owner has not an adequate remedy at law.[61] But if the seizure of goods would

If the debtor thinks that the sheriff has seized more property than was reasonably necessary to satisfy the judgment and costs, he may apply to the judge to issue a writ and demand an appraisement. In Seymour v. Hill, 67 Tex. 385, 3 S. W. 313, it was said that the reason that injunction would issue was that after the expiration of the year from rendition of the judgment, it is presumed from the delay in taking out execution that the judgment has been paid; that this presumption is rebuttable by proof that it has not in fact been paid and, when rebutted, the injunction will be dissolved and any money which had come into the hands of the sheriff under the execution will be applied to the judgment under a proper prayer therefor on the part of the creditor. See Gabel v. McMahan, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 716. In Clegg v. Varnell, 18 Tex. 294, it was queried whether a claimant of property levied on as that of another could enjoin the sale, when the execution was not issued within the twelve months provided by law. In Hayes v. Bass, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 15, it was said that an injunction was unauthorized unless a case as presented comes within some of the exceptions pointed out by the statute.

Family relics.— Ottomans, vases, and solar lamps and a china tea set are not exempt from execution on the ground that they are family relics. An injunction will not issue to protect them, especially as they had been presented to the testator's wife in his lifetime by friends and relatives as family presents and she was not a party to the suit, and as the complainants have not offered to do equity by paying the value of the articles they wish to protect. Property in custodia legis.— A temporary injunction may be granted to restrain the sale of personal property, when it appears that such property is in custodia legis, and is not subject to the satisfaction of the judgment under which the execution issued, and a sale of the same would confer no title in the purchaser. (II) Land. An injunction will not lie to restrain the sale of land under execution where there is an adequate legal remedy to protect the title.[63] But to prevent a cloud upon the title, equity will sometimes enjoin a sale of lands on execution.[64] A sale of real property under an execution void upon its face would not pass a cloud upon the title and therefore a court of equity will not interfere to enjoin the sale.[65] A sale of an entire tract of land at one time instead of by tent in some jurisdictions. Williams v. Wright, 9 Humphr. (Tenn.) 493; Randolph v. Randolph, 6 Rand. (Va.) 194. In Du Pre v. Williams, 58 N. C. 96, it was held that a slave possessed no peculiar value so that a sale of it will cause irreparable injury, that if a wrongful sale was made adequate reparation could be obtained at law.

Several levies and several sheriff's indemnitors.— In New York the court is bound to approve an undertaking indemnifying the sheriff from liability for a levy, etc., if the indemnitors are responsible, and the sheriff is thereby discharged from all liability. It was held that, where several levies are made for which there are several indemnitors and where consequently it is uncertain for what property each indemnitor is liable, there is no certain and adequate remedy at law for the levy, if wrongful, and a creditor, on sufficient security being given, should be restrained from enforcing his execution until the rights of the parties are determined. Newcombe v. Irving Nat. Bank, 51 Hun (N. Y.) 220, 4 N. Y. Suppl. 37, 39. But in Wiley v. Bridgman, 1 Head (Tenn.) 68, it was held that where several creditors had executions at law on a piece of land any one of them was protected adequately at law by his rights in the distribution of the fund; that therefore a bill in equity to restrain a sale of the land and asking a decree of sale in chancery should be dismissed on demurrer.

Where there is a remedy by replevin at common law or by the proceeding called an intervention and third opposition, which in the jurisprudence of Louisiana has been substituted for the common-law remedy, there is no necessity for resorting to equity to restrain the sale of personal property belonging to a state seminary of learning after it has been levied on. Levy on heir's interest.— A bill in equity will lie to enjoin a sale on an execution obtained by a creditor of A and levied upon what was claimed to be his interest in the estate of his father, who had died intestate, leaving real estate, but who before his decease had made an advancement to A exceeding what would have been his portion of his father's estate. Dyer v. Armstrong, 5 Ind. 437.

Levy on life-estate an embarrassment to administration.— The levy of an execution upon a life-estate in land belonging to a decedent's estate will not be enjoined at the instance of the executors, on the ground that it will embarrass the settlement of the estate concerning the personalty. The proper place for the trial of the validity of a title, by virtue of the levy of an execution, is in an action of ejectment. Johnson v. State Bank, 21 Conn. 148. Owner of fee cannot enjoin an execution against a life-tenant, although the levy embraces the fee and is not restricted to the estate for life, for a sale and a conveyance by the sheriff would pass only such an estate as defendant in execution has, and interest in the fee would not be affected thereby. can be obtained;[81] as for instance where the levy would mean loss of credit and commercial ruin.[82]

(II) Wife of Debtor. Equity will enjoin an execution upon a judgment against a husband levied on the separate property of the wife.[83] In Pennsylvania it is held that if the title of the wife is disputed[84] the court should not assume jurisdiction and enjoin execution, for it would thus withdraw from a trial by jury questions which would properly arise in ejectment proceedings by the purchaser at the execution sale.[85] In Texas injunction will not lie, except where the wife applies for an injunction to restrain the sale of the homestead upon execution against the husband,[86] for trespass to try title is an adequate remedy.[87] Where husband is part owner of the property, there ought to be no objection to selling the husband's interest.[88] If the wife has conveyed the property levied on she has no right to an injunction;[89] but it seems her grantee would.[90] If the husband make a fraudulent conveyance to his wife, injunction will not issue against execution levied on the property thus conveyed.[91]

(III) Debtor's Vendee—(A) Generally—(1) Land. Where creditor's judgment is not for any reason a lien upon the land of the debtor, a bona fide purchaser from the debtor may in many jurisdictions enjoin the creditor from selling the land purchased on the ground that the sale would cast a cloud on his title.[92] In other jurisdictions the purchaser is left to his remedy at law;[93] even in these jurisdictions, however, equity will interpose where there are other grounds for its intervention, as, for instance, in the case of fraud.[94] Where lien has attached of course it can be enforced.[95]

Where a contract for sale of land was made but the title did not pass until after the judgment upon which execution was sought to be issued against the land in question and where the vendee had entered and made valuable improvements but had paid no part of the consideration money, it was held that the judgment creditor would be equally benefited by taking the purchase-money as by executing the judgment against the land, and that upon the vendee's paying of the money into court together with the interest due he would be entitled for protection against the judgment by a perpetual injunction. Lane v. Ludlow, 14 Fed. Cas. No. 8,052, 2 Paine 591. See also McSorley v. Ludlow, 16 Fed. Cas. No. 8,927, 2 Paine 600, where the money had been paid over and injunction was granted. And see Downing v. Mann, 43 Ala. 266. In Brown v. Prescott, 63 N. H. 61, an oral contract for the sale of land was made and the buyer entered and made improvements, all of which the creditor of the seller knew, but took no action to prevent. The court held that under the circumstances the buyer's right to a specific performance of the contract of sale was not affected and that to protect his right the court would enjoin the creditor of the seller from levying execution on the land. In Lane v. Ludlow, supra, it was said that the vendee was the equitable owner of the land and equity would therefore protect his right. See Rodriguez v. Buckley, (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 30 S. W. 1123.

Where the judgment appeared satisfied of record, but the vendee did not allege in his bill that he was misled, and where it appeared that he had not yet paid the purchase-money and could recoup the amount of the judgments from it and so be uninjured, he was not allowed an injunction. (2) Personal Property. The buyer of personal property is not entitled to enjoin an execution against the property he has bought from the debtor unless the property has some peculiar value,[96] or unless it can be shown that the damage would be irreparable,[97] or in other words unless there is no speedy or adequate remedy at law.[98]

(B) When Conveyance Fraudulent. By the statute of Elizabeth[99] the creditor had a legal right to proceed at law and to sell the property of a debtor conveyed on voluntary consideration in fraud of his creditors, or he might, as before the passage of the statute, go into equity to have the fraud adjudged. If he exercised his right under the statute the old courts of equity would not interpose at the instance of the purchaser to prevent or remove a cloud on his title.[1] This may be said to be the usual rule at the present day.[2]

(C) When Other Property Remaining to Debtor. The doctrine of marshaling[3] has been successfully invoked in many jurisdictions in aid of the vendee of a judgment debtor to compel the creditor to resort to the property still in the possession of the debtor before selling the land of the debtor's vendee to satisfy the judgment. Injunction may issue against the creditor who insists on proceeding first against the vendee.[4] The doctrine will not be extended so far as to inter-

One who has purchased slaves of a judgment debtor a short time before the judgments were rendered to obtain an injunction to restrain the levy of execution issued upon the judgments on the slaves must make out a clear and undisputed title, or a purchase for a fair and bona fide consideration, above suspicion or doubt in relation to its fairness. 3. That if one creditor may resort to two funds or pieces of property to satisfy his claim and another creditor has access to only one of the funds or pieces of property, he who has the double means of satisfaction may be compelled to first exhaust the fund to which the other creditor has not access. Aldrich v. Cooper, 8 Ves. Jr. 382, 2 White & T. Lead. Cas. 82, 96 note, 7 Rev. Rep. 86, 32 Eng. Reprint 402; Bispham Eq. Pt. 2, c. 6, § 340 et seq. See, generally, Marshaling Assets and Securities.

There is, however, eminently respectable authority to the effect that the creditor cannot be compelled to resort to any one of several sources to obtain satisfaction; that on the contrary, he has the right to select what property of the judgment debtor shall be sold under his execution. In Gunn v. Harrison, 7 Ala. 585, 588, where the court held that the vendee had an adequate remedy at law (see supra, VIII, D, 1), the court further held that there were no grounds for interference by a court of equity upon a showing that there was personal property in the hands of the vendor, which under his contract should have been delivered to the vendee, which the creditors might have levied on. "The creditors have the right to subject any property which belongs to the debtor, to the satisfaction of their debts. For aught this court can know, the property in his possession, is covered by other claims. Be this as it may, the right of the creditor to levy at his peril, on any property he claims to be the property of the debtor is indisputable."

Hurd v. Eaton, 28 Ill. 122; Sidener v. White, 46 Ind. 588 (where the court refused an injunction on the ground that the sheriff since the sale to the vendee complainant had wrongfully committed the execution defendant to remove from the state and sell other property subject to the lien of the execution); Russell v. Houston, 5 Ind. 180; Jackson v. Sloan, 76 N. C. 306 (holding that the purchaser of land from a partnership against which judgment has been obtained may restrain the judgment creditor from selling the

(iv) Debtor's Surety. That the principal has not been proceeded against has been held to authorize an injunction for the surety whose land has been levied on.[6]

(v) Land Taken by Eminent Domain. Land taken by eminent domain is in the custody of the law and no private claim can be permitted to conflict with the right of the public. An execution issued against the land will be stayed by injunction.[7]

d. Levy on Joint Property. The fact that the property levied on is jointly owned does not in some jurisdictions make an exception to the general rule[8] that injunction will not issue to prevent the sale of personal property,[9] particularly where the resistance to the levy has a fraudulent aspect.[10] Injunction has been issued to prevent the removal of the property that the debtor's share in it might first be determined,[11] and to protect the equity of one coöwner when the execution was issued at the instance of another coöwner.[12] Injunction is properly issued to protect infants' shares in real property held in trust.[13]

e. Levy on Trust Property. A sale of land under execution against the trustee would cloud the equitable title of a cestui que trust and will therefore be enjoined.[14] But the grantee of land subject to a trust who subsequently receives an interest in the land discharged of the trust cannot enjoin an execution against his interest in it.[15] Injunction is properly issued to protect infants' shares in real property held in trust.[16]

f. Payment or Tender of Debt. If the judgment has been satisfied and execution issues, the remedy is not by injunction but by motion to recall the execution and have satisfaction entered of record.[17] This rule, however, is not land purchased, until an account can be taken of the proceeds in the hands of the sheriff and realize by the sale of other land of the partnership under execution by the creditor in order that it may be ascertained whether or not the creditor has satisfied his judgment); Jones v. Maney, 7 Lea (Tenn.) 341. Defendant has three remedies: He can (1) sue the officer in trespass, (2) move to quash the execution, or (3) replevy the property sold thereunder. Parker v. Oxen-universal.[18] It would be highly proper to enjoin an execution issued upon a decree after the decree has been satisfied, for thus a court of equity is taking its own method of regulating its own process.[19] Equity would properly take jurisdiction where the execution was being fraudulently used to oppress defendant.[20] The rule ought to be the same where a proper tender has been made; the defendant should employ his remedy at law, not an injunction.[21]

g. Garnishment of Debtor. In some jurisdictions a debtor who has been garnished may enjoin execution by his creditor until it is determined who is entitled to the money owed.[22] In others injunction is held not to be the proper remedy, but defendant is remitted to his remedy by stay.[23]

h. Where Remedy at Law Has Been Vainly Sought. But the rule under which a court of equity declines to interfere until after the application for relief has been made to the court in which the judgment was rendered has no application when relief has been sought and denied in that court. The denial of that court to grant relief gives to the court of equity the same authority to interfere as if the other court were powerless to render aid.[24]

See Smith v. Dewey, 64 N. C. 463, holding that it is no ground for an injunction against an execution under a judgment in favor of an assignee in bankruptcy of a bank that the execution defendant (complainant), "being unable to obtain bills upon said bank," had tendered to the sheriff one-half the amount of the judgment in currency in satisfaction of the whole, and that it had been refused. In Jackson v. Law, 5 Cow. (N. Injunction for claimant of property in hands of garnishee.— A garnishee denied having any property or money belonging to defendant, but a traverse to his answer was sustained. A new trial being denied, he took a bill of exception, but gave no supersedeas bond. Plaintiff who was insolvent recovered judgment. j. Where Process Issued by Court of Equity. Nor does the rule affect the control of a court of equity over process issued upon its own decree.[26]

3. Grounds For and Right to Injunction — a. In General. Whether an injunction will be granted is often a matter of discretion with the court;[27] but sometimes the court has no discretion to refuse an application for an injunction.[28] The sale under an injunction will be enjoined to prevent a conflict of jurisdictions.[29] Equity which follows the law will not enjoin judgment creditors from pressing their executions, until the applicant for homestead exemption can have the property set apart for the benefit of another creditor, no matter how just the claim of that creditor may be.[30] If the petitioner's equity of contribution can be asserted after the proceeds of the execution sale are in the hands of the officer a refusal to grant an injunction is not an abuse of discretion.[31] An injunction, not a rule to show cause, is the proper proceeding to arrest an order of seizure.[32]

b. Protection of Other Creditors — (i) Simple Contract Creditors. A simple contract creditor should reduce his claim to a judgment to get a standing in a court of equity to enjoin the disposition of his debtor's property under judgments alleged to have been obtained in fraud of his claim.[33]

(ii) Lien Creditors — (a) In General. The senior encumbrancer has no occasion for an injunction, for the sale cannot affect his lien.[34] Nevertheless injunction has been granted in such cases.[35] Equity will not generally enjoin a injunction (McCandless v. McKibben, 99 Ga. 129, 24 S. E. 872). And if defendant voluntarily withdraws his affidavit and no additional facts appear which entitle defendant to a second affidavit of illegality, injunction will not issue. (B) Mortgagees—(1) In General. Injunction will not generally lie in favor of a mortgagee against an execution levied on land by the holder of a junior encumbrance, for the senior lien will not as a rule be impaired.[39] If through another who acts without authority the mortgagee's rights are not evidenced in whole by title of record, as they formerly were, execution may be enjoined to prevent a cloud on his title.[40] The mortgagee who comes into equity to foreclose his lien may have injunction to prevent a sale of the property under executions and attachments at law, in order to prevent a multiplicity of suits and a cloud upon the title.[41]

Where a debtor is adjudged a bankrupt and a levy by a judgment creditor who did not prove his claim in bankruptcy is made upon land formerly belonging to the bankrupt, but which has since been conveyed by the assignee in bankruptcy, the invalidity of the creditor's lien on the property acquired by his execution is not so clear as to justify the court in granting an injunction restraining the sale, but the creditor should be permitted to sell the property, the question of title acquired to be determined in a subsequent suit at law. (2) To Restrain Levy Upon or Removal of Fixtures. Under a statute which makes all the railroad property subject to a mortgage upon it, injunction will be granted the bondholders of the road if execution is levied upon the rolling-stock.[42] The trustee of a deed of trust of all the property of a company may enjoin the sheriff from seriously damaging the freehold by the removal of machinery from the premises in execution of a judgment, although the sheriff claims that the deed is fraudulent.[43]

(II) FILING REQUISITE BOND[53] OR MAKING DEPOSIT. A bond is almost always required of a party asking an injunction against an execution.[54] The amount depends upon the various statutory provisions.[55] As a general rule an injunction issued without a bond or deposit may be set aside;[56] but there are cases where equity will issue and maintain an injunction without the filing of a bond by the complainant.[57]

When rule not applicable.— The rule that one suing to set aside a sale of his property to an innocent third person must tender the consideration which such purchaser paid does not apply to an action to restrain the sheriff and a pretended purchaser of the property at an execution sale from consummating the sale. The principle invoked does not apply to a suit like this, which is not an action in revendication to recover back property sold and delivered to a third party. This is an action to prevent the consummation of an illegal and void sale, to stop the sheriff and others from perpetrating a wrong against the right of plaintiff, by dispossessing her of her property illegally. Ohio.— Sample v. Ross, 16 Ohio 419, holding that the court of common pleas cannot issue an injunction to restrain an execution of the supreme court, but the remedy is by application to the supreme court on return of the writ.

Pennsylvania.— Barnes v. Barnes, 16 Pa. Co. Ct. 534 [following Nelson v. Guffey, 131 Pa. St. 273, 18 Atl. 1073], where a sale of land on a testatum fieri facias from another county was sought to be restrained by the wife of the judgment debtor on the ground that the judgments under which the land was to be sold had been recovered against her husband by collusion between plaintiff in the execution and her husband who had previously transferred the land to her, and that the object of this collusion was to sell her land and thus cast a cloud upon her title. But the court of common pleas, as a court of equity, has power to restrain plaintiff in an action at law in the district court from issuing an execution in that court. Hensell v. Warden, 17 Leg. Int. 332.

Texas.— An injunction to stay execution should be made returnable to the district court of the county in which judgment was rendered. Hendrick v. Cannon, 2 Tex. 259. The statutory requirement (Sayles Civ. St. art. 2880) is imperative (Hugo v. Dignowitty, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 158); it is not a personal privilege, belonging to litigants, which can be waived by consent of parties (Capps v. Leachman, (Civ. App. 1896) 35 S. W. 397). It has been held that the application for the injunction must be made to the court which rendered the judgment. Winnie v. Grayson, 3 Tex. 429; Brown v. Young, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 1240. The statute says that the injunction must be made returnable to and tried by the court which rendered the judgment. It has been held that the injunction may be granted in another county but must be made returnable to the court where the judgment was rendered. George v. Dyer, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 780. Furthermore a judge of another court may grant an interlocutory injunction. Capps v. Leachman, (Civ. App. 1896) 35 S. W. 397. A county court of one county has not jurisdiction of a suit to enjoin execution of a judgment of a county court of another county. Aultman v. Higbee, (Civ. App. 1903) 74 S. W. 955. The district court cannot enjoin the execution of a judgment of the county court. Bell v. York, (Civ. App. 1897) 43 S. W. 68. The district court has no jurisdiction of a suit to set off judgments held by plaintiff against one of defendants, who was insolvent, against a judgment obtained by such defendant against plaintiff in a county court, and to enjoin the other de-equitable power of the court to interfere with and stay by injunction the collection of a judgment. A bill may be filed in the courts of one state to enjoin proceedings on a judgment recovered on a judgment rendered in the court of another state.[61] The objection to the jurisdiction should be made before answering on the merits, or defendant will generally be considered to have waived the defense.[62]

c. Time of Action. The party asking an injunction must be diligent.[63] Injunction will not issue until a levy is actually made[64] or until plaintiff fendants, as assignees of the judgment against plaintiff, from having execution issued thereon. Smith v. Morgan, 28 Tex. Civ. App. 245, 67 S. W. 919. The statute applies to a judgment which has been rendered by the court of appeals which was not void and is prima facie a judgment against a surety on a supersedeas bond on appeal, and execution is issued thereon by the clerk below as directed by the appellate court under Rev. St. art. 1045, so as to deprive a court of the county outside of that in which the execution was issued of jurisdiction of an injunction against the execution. Adoue v. Wettermark, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 545, 55 S. W. 511. The statute does not apply where the injunction is asked on the ground that the property levied on was the homestead of the execution debtor. Leachman v. Capps, 89 Tex. 690, 36 S. W. 250; Van Ratcliff v. Call, 72 Tex. 491, 10 S. W. 578; Fannin County Bank v. Lowenstein, (Civ. App. 1899) 54 S. W. 316; Capps v. Leachman, (Civ. App. 1896) 35 S. W. 397. And the jurisdiction of a court other than the one in which a judgment was rendered to grant an injunction to stay proceedings on execution is not avoided by the allegation as a second cause of action that the execution was void for irregularities on its face, although the court has no jurisdiction to grant an injunction on such second ground under the statute. Leachman v. Capps, 89 Tex. 690, 36 S. W. 250. Nor does it apply where it is sought to sell plaintiff's land under an execution levied on a judgment rendered in a case to which he was not a party. In such a case he may properly seek to enjoin the sale in the court in whose jurisdiction the land lies instead of in that in which the judgment was rendered. Huggins v. White, 7 Tex. Civ. App. 563, 27 S. W. 1066. See Winnie v. Grayson, 3 Tex. 429; Brown v. Young, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 1240. The law does not apply to a writ issued to restrain the collection of a judgment rendered in a justice's court, for a justice of the peace has no equity power. Foust v. Warren, (Civ. App. 1903) 72 S. W. 404.

Virginia.— Beckley v. Palmer, 11 Gratt. 625. But see Wessell v. Sharp, (Tenn. Ch. App. 1897) 39 S. W. 543, holding that equity can enjoin the levy of an execution issued from the supreme court on a judgment for the costs of a former suit, which the judgment creditors alleged they had paid by mistake, but which the judgment debtor had in fact paid, when the judgment was rendered on motion without notice to the judgment debtor, and without his being before the court.

See 21 Cent. Dig. tit. "Execution," § 520.

County of residence.— In Georgia by Code, § 4183, all bills must be filed in the county of the residence of one of defendants against whom substantial relief is prayed, except in cases of injunctions to stay proceedings, when the bill may be filed in the county where the proceedings are pending, provided no relief is prayed as to matters not included in such litigation. "Under this section, jurisdiction may be entertained against a non-resident of the county if the proceeding sought to be stayed is a suit instituted by him in a court of that county; but we do not think the levy of an execution and other ministerial acts to affect a sale are a pending proceeding within the meaning of this section." Rounsaville v. McGinnis, 93 Ga. 579, 581, 21 S. E. 123 [distinguishing Mayo v. Renfroe, 66 Ga. 408; Wright v. Southwestern R. Co., 64 Ga. 783]. Where the state has actually received the amount due upon an execution issued by the controller general for the hire of convicts, and the execution has been assigned to a private citizen, a petition by defendant in execution to enjoin the assignee from proceeding with a levy of the execution, being a controversy exclusively between private citizens, should be brought in the county of the assignee's residence, and is not maintainable in another county, although the property seized be located therein, and the sheriff thereof, by whom the levy was made, be enjoined as a party defendant. Dade Coal Co. v. Anderson, 103 Ga. 809, 30 S. E. 640.

In New Hampshire a stay of execution may be had by an injunction from the supreme court, or by an order suspending the issuing of the execution in the court where the judgment is. Grant v. Lathrop, 23 N. H. 67.

62. Wood v. Currey, 49 Cal. 359; Byrne v. Anderson, 10 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 81; Miller v. Longacre, 26 Ohio St. 291. The objection to the jurisdiction is waived if defendants after having their attention called to the question of venue proceed to trial without objection or plea to the jurisdiction. threatens to enforce his judgment.[65] A statutory limitation within which an injunction against the execution of a judgment must be brought has been held not to apply to a suit by one not a party to the judgment,[66] or to a suit to enjoin for causes which have arisen since the rendition of the judgment.[67]

d. The Bill — (i) General Principles of Pleading. The pleading must not be vague or uncertain.[68] Facts not conclusions of law must be pleaded.[69] The principle that the pleading will be construed against the pleader is sometimes maintained,[70] particularly where injunction is sought on purely technical grounds.[71] But allegations which are necessarily implied need not be specifically set out.[72]

(ii) Negativing Facts. To show his equity it is sometimes necessary for the complainant to negative the existence of certain facts.[73] This often happens where there is a question of jurisdiction[74] or of notice to an adverse party.[75]

(iii) Bill to Enjoin Sale of Land.[76] If sale of land is sought to be enjoined, a description of the property is a necessary part of the complaint.[77] If

65. Ke-tuc-e-mun-guah v. McClure, 122 Ind. 541, 23 N. E. 1080, 7 L. R. A. 782 (holding that where there is no pretense that a creditor is threatening to levy on land not liable to execution, there is no ground for an injunction); Elson v. O'Dowd, 40 Ind. 300 (holding that it must be shown that the execution is in the hands of the officer who threatened or is about to levy illegally).

If the property of the debtor has been seized but not taken possession of by the sheriff, the debtor is not entitled to an injunction to enjoin the sale. Derville v. Hayes, 23 La. Ann. 550.

66. Kempner v. Ivory, (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 29 S. W. 538. See also Lewis v. Labauve, 13 La. Ann. 382, holding that, under Civ. Code, art. 3366, which provides that the third possessor, who is not personally liable to the debt, may notwithstanding, within ten days of his being served with an order of seizure, oppose the sale of the property, a third possessor who is not personally liable for the debt may for good cause enjoin the execution of the order of seizure, even after the delay of ten days mentioned in the code.

Petition within a year from affirmance on appeal.— In a suit to restrain executions on judgments, the objection that the judgments were rendered more than a year before the filing of the petition is not good where the petition was filed within a year from the affirmance on appeal of one judgment, and the others were made to depend on that by stipulation of the parties. Willis Point Bank v. Bates, 76 Tex. 329, 13 S. W. 309.

67. Williams v. Bradbury, 9 Tex. 487.

68. Bill in equity generally see EQUITY, 16 Cyc. 216. Taylor v. Clark, 11 La. Ann. 560. See Carter v. McMichael, 20 Ga. 96, where the administrator of an estate recovered a judgment against one of the distributees for three thousand dollars. The distributee filed a bill to enjoin the sale of his property under said judgment, in which it was averred that there were funds in the hands of the administrator coming to him (the distributee) amounting to five thousand dollars; that the administrator had held possession of the estate six or seven years, and was believed to be insolvent; and where it was held that the bill showed a complete equity as against the administrator, and need not aver that the securities to the administration bond were insolvent.

73. Jordan v. Corley, 42 Tex. 284 (holding that where application to enjoin a sale is made on the ground that the execution was issued more than twelve months after judgment is insufficient, unless it is alleged that no other execution had issued before that time); Williams v. Bradbury, 9 Tex. 487 (holding that where injunction is asked on the ground that certain payments have been made upon the execution, it is necessary to distinctly aver that the payments had not been credited upon the execution, otherwise a general demurrer may be sustained). See Abercrombie v. Knox, 3 Ala. 728, 37 Am. Dec. 721, where it was said that it must also be charged that plaintiff refused to make the credit, or that he is attempting to enforce payment a second time.

74. Farrington v. Brown, 65 Cal. 320, 4 Pac. 26 (holding that an allegation that plaintiff had no knowledge of the judgment until more than thirty days after rendition is insufficient; it should be alleged that plaintiff was neither served with the summons nor appeared in the action in which the judgment was rendered); Krug v. Davis, 85 Ind. 309.

75. Pursel v. Deal, 16 Oreg. 295, 18 Pac. 461, holding that where an irregularity in the service of summons on defendant on motion for leave to issue it is alleged, the complaint must deny that defendant appeared at the hearing of the motion or must show in some way that the proceeding was taken against him without notice.

the bill shows that a sale would cast a cloud upon the complainant's title to the land levied on it is sufficient.[78]

(iv) Showing Title. The complainant must show his title to or his interest in the property upon which the execution sought to be enjoined has been levied.[79] If ownership is substantially averred, it is sufficient if the averment is not met by an exception calling for greater particularity of statement.[80]

(v) Pleading Defense Not Available at Trial. A bill which discloses matters which would if proved have established a good defense to the original action does not show equity if no reason is given why the defense was not interposed in the original action or why the complainant has not resorted to the legal remedies afforded him.[81]

(vi) Pleading Defects in Proceedings or Judgment. If it is claimed that the judgment was void it must be alleged and shown either that it shows on its face, or that the record in the cause otherwise affirmatively shows, a want of jurisdiction, or that some equity against the judgment or some available defense to the cause of action upon which it is predicated exists.[82] Where defects in proceedings are relied on they must be specifically alleged.[83] An uncontroverted allegation that plaintiff in execution was dead at the time of issuance is sufficient.[84]

(vii) Offering Equity. Where the maxim that he who asks for equity must first offer to do equity applies, the complainant must make his offer in the bill to do equity or must show that he has already done equity.[85]

(viii) Special Averments. The necessity and sufficiency of particular allegations in a bill of this character have been frequently passed upon by the courts;[86] for example an allegation that complainant is a bona fide purchaser from the judgment debtor;[87] an allegation that complainant is a trustee of the

But it is not sufficient to allege that there is an apprehension of a multiplicity of suits in consequence of the contemplated sale. Cook v. Texas, etc., R. Co., 3 Tex. Civ. App. 145, 22 S. W. 58.

79. Davis v. Beall, 21 Tex. Civ. App. 183, 50 S. W. 1086, where the allegation that the execution had been levied on divers tracts of land belonging to other persons than the complainant was of no avail. But in Nashville Trust Co. v. Weaver, 102 Tenn. 66, 74, 50 S. W. 863, an administrator's bill to enjoin a sale of corporate stock alleging that complainant "does not know to whom it belongs, but presumes that it belongs to . . . [his intestate's] estate" was held sufficient to require an answer.

Pleading homestead.— A complaint which alleges that the property levied on was the complainant's homestead and dwelling-house and that he and his co-defendant had offered other property to be levied on in satisfaction of the debt, is bad for not alleging that the property offered belonged to the execution defendants, or to one of them. Alexander v. Mullen, 42 Ind. 398. In Alexander v. Banner, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 111, 30 S. W. 563, it was said that where it was alleged that the land levied on was occupied as a homestead, the pleading should disclose whether the record title was in the name of plaintiff or of his wife.

80. Hart v. Conolly, 49 La. Ann. 1587, 22 So. 809.

A defendant in replevin who has given a forthcoming bond and holds the property may have an injunction against a sale of the property in execution against plaintiff, without alleging in his bill that the property is his, for the bill shows that he is in lawful possession of the property and bound to have it forthcoming in the event that the action of replevy should be decided against him. In this condition of the property it must be considered as in custody of the law and not subject to be taken from the complainant's possession under an execution against plaintiff in the action of replevy. Such an interference with the course of the law would be productive of confusion and should not be indulged. Furthermore the complainant would be deprived of the power to keep the property and to have it ready to be delivered according to the exigencies of the action in replevy as he was bound to do so by his bond. 87. Bona fide purchaser.— Where the complaint claims as bona fide purchaser from the judgment debtor he must show a prior equity. If he is purchaser of goods he must show property levied upon;[88] an allegation that complainant's right to point out other property to be levied upon was denied;[89] an allegation that a former execution had been enjoined;[90] as well as allegations of tender of payment,[91] or satisfaction of the judgment.[92]

e. Exhibits. No written instrument unless some pleading is founded upon it, is properly an exhibit.[93]

f. The Answer[94] — (i) In General. It is not always necessary for every party defendant to answer.[95] Where the answer pleads in the alternative, each alternative pleaded must be a complete and sufficient ground of defense.[96] Where the bill alleges that a previous execution on the same bond had been satisfied, an answer alleging that the previous execution and return had been quashed, but failing to show that the execution debtor was before the court or notified of the motion to quash, is insufficient.[97] In a suit to enjoin an execution on the ground that the judgment has become dormant, defendant may plead the that he purchased prior to the judgment creditor's judgment claim. Wenzel v. Milbury, 93 Md. 427, 49 Atl. 618. If he is the purchaser of land he must show a sale to himself prior to the attachment of the lien of the judgment on which execution was issued. Jones v. McCrady, 48 S. C. 533, 26 S. E. 802.

88. Trustee.— A bill to restrain the sale of trust property levied on as the individual property of the trustee should set forth the judgment and execution under which the alleged sale is about to take place with sufficient particularity to give color of right in the sheriff to make the levy and sale and should sufficiently show color of right to the property in the person alleged to be trustee. Trueblood v. Hollingsworth, 48 Ind. 537, holding that it is not sufficient for matters which should be alleged in the complaint to be set forth in an exhibit.

89. Denial of right to point out property.— If defendant in the execution asks the injunction on the ground that his right to point out other property to be levied on had been denied him, he must allege that he made an effort to prevent the sale of the property levied on by a tender to the sheriff of other property subject to execution. Anderson v. Oldham, 82 Tex. 228, 18 S. W. 557; Smith v. Frederick, 32 Tex. 256; Alexander v. Banner, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 111, 30 S. W. 563. See Beaird v. Foreman, 1 Ill. 385, 12 Am. Dec. 197. And, in case he alleges that he pointed out other property to the sheriff, that he had title to that property. Forbes v. Hill, Dall. (Tex.) 486.

Where a person wishes a particular tract of land levied on every reasonable evidence of title should be exhibited to the officer. The officer is not bound to take any loose memorandum which a defendant may offer as evidence as his title to the land. Beaird v. Foreman, 1 Ill. 385, 12 Am. Dec. 197.

90. Former execution enjoined.— An allegation that a prior execution in favor of another plaintiff against a part of the same defendants had been enjoined is not sufficient where there is nothing to show that the ground for the prior injunction did not have reference to the judgment or process itself and not to the property levied on. Dunn v. Mobile Bank, 2 Ala. 152.

91. Tender.— A bill to enjoin the levy of an execution which alleges tender of the amount due must aver all the facts necessary in pleading a tender at law. McGehee v. Jones, 10 Ga. 127. See Cooper v. Whaley, 90 Ga. 285, 15 S. E. 824, for case where tender was pleaded.

92. Payment.— An allegation that the judgment had been "paid off and satisfied in full" has been held to justify a decree enjoining the issuance of an execution on the judgment. Deleshaw v. Edelen, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 416, 72 S. W. 413. But see Dunham v. Collier, 1 Greene (Iowa) 54, holding that where there is a judgment, and also a decree against a party for the same demand, the collection of the money under the decree cannot be enjoined, unless the complainant allege in his bill that the judgment has been satisfied. See, however, supra, VIII, B, 2, f, as to proper remedy for issuance of execution after satisfaction thereof.

93. Upon a complaint to enjoin a sheriff's sale of property levied upon under execution, the execution need not be made an exhibit. Trueblood v. Hollingsworth, 48 Ind. 537. A complaint for an injunction to restrain the sale under an execution of certain property of plaintiff on the ground that plaintiff had received a mortgage of it from the execution defendant, the property not being subject to be taken on execution, had foreclosed the same, and had purchased the property at the foreclosure sale, need not contain copies of the judgments, executions, returns, and the sheriff's deed. judgment in reconvention.[98] An answer which shows that the irregularities which are the ground of the injunction sought were waived by agreement is sufficient.[99]

(II) Effect. Where the allegations of the bill are traversed by the answer, injunction should not be granted, and in case a temporary injunction exists it should be dissolved,[1] for the answer is regarded and taken as true so far as it is responsive to the bill.[2] If the answer by its admissions shows that equity remains with the complainant after all the allegations have been taken as true the injunction will not be dissolved.[3] Where the answer raises issues properly triable at law, the injunction will be dissolved.[4] The allegations of the answer may cure the defects of the bill.[5]

g. Verification of Pleadings.[6] In equity as a general rule pleadings should be verified.[7]

h. The Parties[8] — (I) Plaintiff. A person who was not a party to the decree cannot enjoin a sale under execution, unless he can show that his rights will be directly affected by the sale;[9] for a person who has no title or interest in the property to be sold cannot enjoin the execution against the property.[10] A person not a party to the execution who owns[11] or has an interest in[12] land

Mississippi.—Duncan v. Robertson, 57 Miss. 820, holding that a husband who bought land sold under a judgment against his wife, but did not get any title, cannot maintain a bill to enjoin a sale under another judgment against his wife.

12. A beneficiary heir who has only a residuary interest in the succession may enjoin the levied on may maintain a bill to enjoin the execution. Where trust property has been levied upon, the trustee is the proper party to ask for an injunction; if he neglects or refuses to act, or if he has resigned and his successor has not been appointed, the cestui que trust may take measures to protect the estate.[13] A railway company cannot enjoin an execution upon its locomotives where it does not allege that execution was not issued upon a valid judgment, or for a just debt.[14] Where a judgment creditor is proceeding by execution to raise the full amount of his judgment, when that amount is not due, but has been reduced by payments or otherwise, a subsequent execution creditor has a right to an injunction to restrain the prior creditor from selling under his execution until the payments are ascertained, and the creditor gives credit for them.[15] Where the complainant's equity is a mere incident to the equity of another it must be set up through or under the other and therefore the other is a necessary party plaintiff.[16] Persons who have no common interest or whose causes of action did not arise out of the same transaction cannot be joined as parties.[17]

(II) Defendant—(A) In General. Plaintiff in execution is a necessary party.[18] A bill to enjoin execution upon a judgment on a delivery bond should make the surety of the bond a party.[19] Where the complainant is a person other

A person holding an equity of redemption in his homestead has an interest therein sufficient to restrain its sale under execution. Ingraham v. Dyer, 125 Mo. 491, 28 S. W. 840.

Mortgagees.— Where the debtor seeks to enjoin the creditor from selling property upon which there are mortgages, which the judgment creditor claims to be fraudulent, the mortgagees should be made parties to the action, that the rights of all concerned may be determined in one action. Gaster v. Hardie, 75 N. C. 460.

The assignee of a mortgage deposited as an escrow may enjoin the mortgagee from enforcing his judgment which has been entered on the warrant of attorney accompanying the bond prior to the assignment of the mortgage. Booth v. Williams, 11 Phila. (Pa.) 266. See Escrows, 15 Cyc. 560 et seq.

The vendor who sold land with covenants of warranty is entitled to an injunction to restrain a sale thereof when the sale would create a cloud on the vendee's title. Huggins v. White, 7 Tex. App. 563, 27 S. W. 1066, where the judgment had been paid. See Bach v. Goodrich, 9 Rob. (La.) 391. But see Kelly v. Wiseman, 14 La. Ann. 661. See also Howard v. Walsh, 28 La. Ann. 847. In a court which recognizes the right of the vendor who sold with covenants of warranty to enjoin, the vendor has no equity if he sold before the judgment was rendered and the pending of the suit; for the title which he warranted is in no danger of being clouded and therefore he is under no liability to make good his covenants. Small v. Sumerville, 58 Iowa 362, 12 N. W. 315.

Interveners.— In an injunction suit to restrain a sale of a plantation under execution, it is improper to allow third persons who claim a vendor's privilege on the mules and crops on the plantation to intervene. Barron v. Sollibellos, 26 La. Ann. 289.

13. Zimmerman v. Makepeace, 152 Ind. 199, 52 N. E. 992.

Under-tutor.— Where the property of a minor has been seized by a judgment creditor of the tutor on a personal judgment, and the question of the validity of the minor's title of the property is in issue, the under-tutor is the proper party to bring an injunction to enjoin the sale thereof. McEnery v. Letchford, 23 La. Ann. 617.

19. Jamison v. May, 13 Ark. 600, it being held in the case that the original judgment was not in force, the judgment on the de-

than the judgment debtor, the judgment debtor may be a necessary party.[20] A bill cannot join separate respondents acting in different capacities upon different rights and not chargeable with any joint liability or interests in the relief sought.[21]

(B) Sheriff and Other Officers. It seems to be quite usual to make the sheriff who holds the execution a party;[22] but it has been specifically held in some jurisdictions that he is not a necessary party,[23] and in some that he is not even a proper party.[24] A decree against plaintiff in the execution as sole defendant would be as effectual as though the officer having the process had been made a party and included in the decree.[25] A notice to the sheriff of the order for an injunction is sufficient.[26] The clerk being a mere minister of the law and having no interest in the suit is not a proper party.[27]

i. Notice. Notice to the counsel of plaintiff has been held sufficient.[28]

j. Issues. If complainant seeks to restrain execution on the ground that the property seized belonged to him, not to the judgment debtor, no other issue can be made but that of ownership.[29] The capacity of sheriffs duly commissioned

Under La. Code Pr. art. 739, specifying the grounds upon which executory process may be enjoined without bond, defendant is not entitled to an injunction on the ground that the obligation sued upon was null and without consideration ab initio; and, if an injunction is issued without bond, no evidence is admissible upon the trial of the injunction suit, except in support of allegations containing reasons enumerated in said article. Hodgson v. Roth, 33 La. Ann. 941.

Where, for the purpose of obtaining an equitable set-off, the judgment debtor filed a petition to enjoin the enforcement of a judgment against it by a member of the firm against which he had suits pending and which subsequently resulted in favor of the firm, it was competent on petition for permanent injunction to prove that he expected to move for a new trial. It was further proper to prove that defendants had no partnership assets, that one of them was insolvent and the other a non-resident and had no property in the state. These were facts tending to show that the complainant might be entitled to injunction to preserve his equitable right of set-off. Harris v. Gano, 117 Ga. 934, 44 S. E. 11.

34. Goldsmith v. Michel, 19 La. Ann. 272. See supra, VIII, D, 2, c, (I), (B). The grantee in a deed conveying a plantation, with "improvements, cattle, mules," etc., who seeks to enjoin execution against certain mules seized as the property of one who, before and after the conveyance, was manager of the plantation, has the burden of showing that the mules were attached to the plantation and passed with it as part of the realty. Citizens' Bank v. Grand, 23 La. Ann. 141. But the vendee of the judgment debtor's land is not obliged when suing to enjoin from sale of the land under an execution against the debtor-grantor to prove the existence of the judgment. Miller v. Wilkerson, 10 Kan. App. 576, 62 Pac. 253.

In those states where the courts would enjoin the sale of a slave (see supra) the title of the complainant had to be made clear, uncontrovertible, and above suspicion of fraud (Saunders v. Woods, 5 Yerg. (Tenn.) 142; Pope v. Eakin, 3 Humphr. (Tenn.) 413); or he would be left to his remedy at law (Wood v. Cruisman, 6 Humphr. (Tenn.) 279; Bryan v. Earthman, 6 Yerg. (Tenn.) 24). Nevertheless the court has directed an issue to try the question whether a negro had been given or loaned to the complainant (defendant in execution) when the legal title was not in the complainant. Prewett v. Loony, 8 Yerg. (Tenn.) 63. See also Beale v. Digges, 6 Gratt. (Va.) 582.

The burden of going forward.— An affidavit of an attorney introduced on the hearing of a petition for injunction against a sale under execution, positively averring that a deputy sheriff made an oral agreement with him extending the time for interposing an affidavit of illegality, was not met by an affidavit by the sheriff personally alleging that he had made no such agreement, but not denying that the same was made by the deputy. l. The Decree. Although a court of equity, when it takes jurisdiction for any reason which makes its intervention necessary or proper, will always endeavor to do full justice to all parties and will shape its decree to that end,[36] it is always exceedingly wary of granting a decree which gives any relief by the extraordinary remedy of injunction greater than the necessity of the situation requires, and of course the complainant cannot get more than he asks for.[37] On the other hand an injunction will not be entirely dissolved for error when a modification will better serve the ends of justice.[38] When there is no equity in the bill, it should be dismissed and the injunction dissolved; but it is not proper to decree a sale under the execution.[39]

m. Dissolution.[40] When an injunction has accomplished its purpose it may be dissolved.[41] It is necessary for the bill to be filed; and if it is not filed the temporary injunction obtained will be dissolved.[42] An injunction granted on the allegation of nullity of the judgment on which the execution issued will be dissolved with damages, if the action of nullity is barred by prescription.[43] A legislator's privilege does not prevent a court from acting on a motion to dissolve an injunction in his favor to stay proceedings.[44] An injunction against a provisional seizure is null if it does not reach the sheriff until after seizure and may be dissolved on motion.[45] The dissolution of the injunction restores as a general

If a sale of perishable goods has been enjoined, the court would modify its decree so as to permit the sheriff to sell and pay the proceeds into court to abide the event of the suit. Heath v. Hand, 1 Paige (N. Y.) 329.

39. Lovette v. Longmire, 14 Ark. 339. See also Noerdlinger v. Huff, 31 Wash. 360, 72 Pac. 73, holding that if the motion to dissolve is equivalent to a demurrer to the complaint on the ground that it does not state a cause of action and there is no request for leave to amend the complaint, it is proper to dismiss the suit.

Where the answer squarely met the allegations of the bill it was proper that the injunction should have been dissolved; but it was error to dismiss the bill when the case had not been set down for hearing upon bill and answer and the bill was not devoid of equity upon its face, and when the case had not been at issue long enough to justify a trial on bill and answer without proof. Upon dissolving an injunction without a dismissal of the bill, the proper course was to require a refunding bond as a condition of allowing defendant to collect the judgment. Abandonment or waiver.— Where plaintiff obtained an injunction against an execution sale on the ground of a clerical error in the published notice, and the sheriff then readvertised the sale properly for a more distant day, and plaintiff then gave a bond for the rule the parties to the same position which they occupied before it was granted.[46] But the lien which was created by the levy and discharged by the injunction is not restored. It is therefore necessary for the creditor to sue out a new fieri facias not a venditioni exponas,[47] which if issued would be void and the proceedings thereunder quashed on motion.[48] When an injunction is dissolved, the creditor has an election to proceed either on the bond or on his execution.[49]

n. Second Bill. If complainant brings a second bill, he must show that the new matter alleged did not exist at the time the first bill was filed or that if it existed it was unknown to him.[50]

o. Damages and Costs. Upon dissolution of the injunction, plaintiff in execution is as a rule entitled to damages or costs for the delay in collecting his judgment.[51] But the allowance of damages or costs being a matter to be governed largely by the discretion of the court, its refusal to make an allowance must be an abuse of the most palpable character to authorize a reversal.[52] But if plaintiff in execution has not been delayed in the collection of his judgment,[53] or if the costs claimed were not due to the injunction, but would have been incurred in any event,[54] or if the injunction has been against the collection of the amount out of a particular piece of property without any restraint of satisfaction elsewhere,[55] plaintiff in execution is not entitled to costs when the injunction has been dissolved. If an execution upon a forthcoming bond against the principal and surety has been enjoined at the instance of the principal alone, the surety is not liable for the damages incurred by the principal for retarding the execution.[56] If an execution on a void money judgment is enjoined and a judgment upon a claim for affirmative relief was granted the complainant, the production of the property at the sale, he will be held to have abandoned his injunction. Beard v. Gresham, 5 La. Ann. 160.

costs of the injunction suit should be taxed against defendant in injunction.[57] If a third person attempts to enjoin an execution against his property instead of pursuing his remedy at law, the only damages which plaintiff in execution can recover are in reconvention for the wrongful suing out of the injunction.[58] The measure of damages for the delay caused by a temporary injunction is the amount of debt and interest lost by reason of the wrongful issuance of the injunction.[59]

p. Liability on Bonds.[60] If an injunction is granted to restrain the sale of property levied on in order that plaintiff may have the benefit of its value if found entitled to it, the obligors on the bond are liable only for the costs and damages occasioned by enjoining the sale.[61] The obligor is bound only for those damages against which he stipulates in his bond.[62] The accrued interest is an element of damages for the delay caused by the injunction and for which the obligor on the bond is liable.[63] In some jurisdictions the bond has "the force and effect" of a judgment.[64]

5. Effect — a. In General. An injunction restraining the levy of an execution precludes the creditor from placing it in the officer's hands, although no sale is made.[65] If an officer proceeds to sell property he has levied on before the injunction he becomes a trespasser ab initio.[66] A sheriff enjoined from further proceedings under a seizure should not return the writ, but retain it, to be proceeded with if unfettered.[67] If plaintiff and sheriff have been restrained from executing the original fieri facias an alias cannot be issued.[68] But enjoining the

That a bill by partners to enjoin levy on their individual property under a judgment against the firm was drawn under mistaken belief of counsel that the judgment was collectable out of the individual property of the partners is not ground for granting relief to a surety on the bond erroneously executed under Ala. Code, § 3522, with condition for payment of the judgment, who voluntarily paid the same on demand. Halsey v. Murray, 112 Ala. 185, 20 So. 575.

68. And if a second fieri facias has improvidently issued the proper action of the execution of the original judgment does not affect an execution issued on a forfeited forthcoming bond given at issuance of the execution upon the original judgment.[69] The time that an execution is stayed by an injunction of a federal court cannot be included in the reckoning of the time within which the sheriff must make return.[70] The full intent of an injunction is not necessarily confined to the letter, but may sometimes be judged from its spirit and purpose.[71]

b. On Lien and Levy, Etc. By the general rule an injunction releases the levy and the lien created by it.[72] It is held also that the sheriff is bound to restore to the owner the chattels levied on.[73] If an elder execution is enjoined, the sheriff should go ahead and levy a junior which he has in his office,[74] and the proceeds cannot be applied to the elder execution,[75] which is protected by security given court is to quash it. Byrne v. Michoff, 24 La. Ann. 297.

But where an execution was enjoined for being issued prematurely before notice of judgment was served on defendant, and pending the injunction the writ of fieri facias was regularly returned into court and a notice of judgment regularly served upon defendant, plaintiff was not prevented from suing out an alias fieri facias, and seizing and selling property under the writ. "The reason is that it would ruin both debtor and creditor if the sheriff should be required to hold the goods to the termination of an injunction bill in chancery. In Mississippi the act of 1824 gave a lien on all property, real and personal, from the time judgment was entered. Under this act an injunction would not destroy a judgment lien or postpone it to a subsequently attaching one, but merely restrains its enforcement until the injunction is dissolved. If the property has been sold the money should be paid to defendant. Keith v. Wilson, 3 Metc. (Ky.) 201.

In Minnesota if a sheriff has levied an execution and is enjoined from further proceedings, it is his duty, upon service of the injunction, to note the fact on the execution, and retain the levy, but desist from further proceedings; and, if at the end of sixty days from receipt of execution he has received no notice of dissolution, he should return the execution, detailing the facts. Pettingill v. Moss, 3 Minn. 222, 74 Am. Dec. 747.

But in Mississippi, under the act of 1824, which gave a lien on all property, real and personal, from the time the judgment is entered, the lien extends to the money produced by a sale of property under execution as well as to the property itself, and when the sale is in virtue of several executions the court will direct the money to be applied to the discharge of the elder judgment. Smith v. Everly, 4 How. 178.

when the injunction was obtained.[76] That is why security must first be given before the lien created by the execution can be suspended.[77] An injunction will not affect levy on realty.[78] That the time during which an injunction operates shall not be considered in the reckoning of the limitation of a judgment lien on land, the injunction must be against the enforcement of the judgment itself.[79]

E. Stay, Quashing, or Withdrawal at Instance of Creditor — 1. In General. A party cannot on his own motion quash his execution, if it be regular and if defendant would be injured.[80] And if it be irregular he cannot quash it after a sale.[81] But a fieri facias which has issued illegally may be withdrawn by plaintiff;[82] and he may stop the sale of property not subject to the execution.[83]

2. Effect — a. In General. Staying the execution after levy does not discharge the debt.[84] An agreement between plaintiff and the debtor to suspend a levy is no bar to the enforcement of the execution.[85]

b. On Lien and Levy, Etc. In some jurisdictions an agreement by a judgment creditor for a stay postpones his lien on the personal property levied on to the claims of other creditors.[86] Such an agreement is deemed, irrespective of its motive, constructively fraudulent as against junior creditors,[87] particularly is this true if the stay agreed upon be indefinite.[88] A stay for a limited time, however, is not infrequently held not to postpone the lien;[89] and indeed some jurisdictions hold that a stay by the creditor will not postpone his lien unless the stay has been for fraudulent purposes.[90]

IX. Claims by Third Persons.[91]

A. General Considerations — 1. Right to Intervene. The right of a third person, not a party to the action in which execution has issued, to intervene and claim property levied on, is unknown to the common law.[92] Consequently such persons only can intervene, and then only under such circumstances as are provided for in the statutes.[93] But where a case is clearly within the statutes intervention is a matter of right not of grace.[94]

2. Right or Title of Claimant. The nature of the title which the claimant must have to be entitled to intervene is wholly dependent on statute. In some jurisdictions his title must be legal,[95] while in others an equitable title or right is

As to bona fide purchaser.— A party holding an execution may withhold it from participation in the fund in court, or withdraw it from the sheriff's hands; but if the rights of a bona fide purchaser of the property from defendant are thereby affected he would have an equity against its future enforcement. 4. Attack on Judgment or Execution. A claimant under the statutes cannot inquire into the regularity of a judgment or execution which is merely voidable and which has not been quashed or set aside, although he may as to one which is void, or which has been quashed or set aside.[1]

5. Time For Interposing Claim. A claim is too late which is interposed after a sale or other legal disposition of the property,[2] or upon appeal.[3] So too a premature trial of a claim will render a judgment founded thereon void,[4] although the fact that a claim under a deed of trust has been interposed before, but tried after, the breach of the condition entitling the trustee to possession will not invalidate it.[5] The mere delivery of an execution to the sheriff will not stop the running of the statute of limitations in favor of a claimant in possession. To effect this, an actual seizure is necessary.[6]

In Georgia, however, it is "settled that a claimant may attack an execution for any reason which the defendant in execution could urge against it at the time of the trial of the claim case" (New England Mortg. Security Co. v. Watson, 99 Ga. 733, 735, 27 S. E. 160); but he has no right to make a motion to quash the attachment or judgment on which the execution is based, or the execution itself. His only concern being that the process shall not be enforced by a seizure and sale of his property, his remedy, in a case where such a motion would be good if presented by the proper party, is to move to dismiss the levy (Morrison v. Anderson, 111 Ga. 847, 36 S. Failure to return affidavit.— A trial of the right of property will not be dismissed because an affidavit of the claimant does not appear in the case. Although that is necessary to justify the officer in taking a bond, the statute does not require him to return it with the bond. Ellis v. Abercrombie, 10 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 474.

b. Sufficiency. A substantial compliance with the law in reference to notice and affidavit of claim by third persons claiming property seized on execution, as to the description of the property claimed, and the nature of their right or title, is all that is necessary.[12] Patent errors, such as in names or dates, which may be corrected by other papers in the case, are immaterial.[13]

c. Amendment. It has been held that amendments, which are germane to the issue,[14] may be allowed by the court to a notice and affidavit of claim of a third person,[15] provided such amendments are authorized by statute.[16] Error, however, cannot be predicated upon the allowance or refusal of immaterial amendments to a claimant's affidavit.[17]

7. Security by Claimant[18] — a. In General. In addition to notice and affidavit of claim, a claimant is required to give a bond, conditioned according to law,[19] as a prerequisite to the trial of title.[20] Where, however, the claimant is unable to give bond, he may be allowed to prosecute his claim nevertheless, upon filing a proper affidavit setting out the facts.[21]

b. Parties to Bond. The claimant himself, if the legal owner, is the proper person to give the statutory security,[22] and in Alabama may even do so when only the beneficial owner of the property seized.[23] To whom the bond is to be made payable, whether to plaintiff in execution[24] or to the sheriff,[25] is regulated by statute.

d. Time For Giving Bond. The time for giving the bond is regulated by statute or governed by the practice of the particular jurisdiction.[27]

e. Objections and Amendments. The mere fact that a bond is voidable will not defeat the claimant's right, although it may cause a stay of proceedings;[28] and where the bond given is merely defective, it may be amended or a new bond given in its place.[29] Objections must be taken within a reasonable time.[30]

8. Estoppel[31] to Assert or Deny Claim. A claimant may by his conduct estop himself to assert his claim;[32] but to have this effect and create an estoppel the acts done or omitted by him must have been with a view to mislead, and must have been acted upon by the opposite party.[33] And under the general rules

27. In Georgia the bond should be given at the time of the interposition of the claim. Hand v. F. W. Hall Merchandise Co., 91 Ga. 130, 16 S. E. 644.

In Pennsylvania it should be given at the return of the rule requiring it to be given. Wolf v. Wolf, 1 Del. Co. 380.

Before rule absolute.— The execution and delivery of a bond before the entry of the rule absolute is merely premature, and does not invalidate it. It relates to the time of the rule absolute when that is finally entered. Com. v. Beary, 9 Pa. Super. Ct. 246.

See 21 Cent. Dig. tit. "Execution," § 557.

Pointing out property for seizure.— A party who, being himself the owner of property, points it out to be seized in execution for the debt of another, will be estopped from denying the title of defendant. Amonett v. Young, 14 La. Ann. 175. But the pointing out of the property by a servant of the owner will not estop the owner from setting up his claim. New York Car-Oil Co. v. Richmond, 6 Bosw. (N. Failure to assert claim at time of seizure.— If the owner of property is present when it is levied on as the property of another, and makes no objection, and sets up no claim at the time, this does not estop him from setting up his claim. Irwin v. Morell, Dudley (Ga.) 72. See also Straus v. Minzesheimer, 78 Ill. 492; Blum v. Merchant, 58 Tex. 400. But see Murne v. Schwabacher, 2 Wash. Terr. 191, 3 Pac. 270.

Mere failure to file a claim to land levied on will not estop the owner from subsequent assertion of title thereto. Sears v. Bagwell, 69 Ga. 429.

Estoppel of execution defendant.— In an action to recover personal property by a governing estoppels an estoppel may similarly arise against the execution plaintiff to deny the claimant's right.[34]

9. Lien on and Custody of Property Pending Claim. Pending the adjudication of a claim to property under execution, the lien of the execution is not lost. It is at most merely suspended, and the property is regarded as still in the custody of the law.[35] The claimant is as a rule entitled to the actual custody of the property,[36] and until the trial of the issue the sheriff has no authority to receive it back from him.[37] Nor will the fact that an indemnity bond has been given by the execution creditor affect the claimant's right to the property, either as against such creditor or the purchaser at the execution sale.[38]

B. Proceedings For Establishment and Determination of Claims[39] — 1. Nature and Form of Remedy — a. In General. A claim case is said to partake of the nature of an equitable proceeding,[40] and being of purely statutory origin it is necessary to look to the statutes which themselves create the right for the form of remedy.[41] But the remedy thereby given is cumulative merely, plaintiff claiming under an execution sale on a judgment against defendant, defendant is not estopped by the fact of the execution against him from denying that he owned the property, and asserting that it belonged to a third person; and this although he had declared previously to the execution sale that the property belonged to him. Estoppel to deny title.— An execution creditor, who pending interpleader proceedings purchases the goods in the claimant's hands at sales under executions obtained by the claimant's creditors against him and resells the same at a profit, is estopped from denying in the interpleader proceedings that the property belonged to claimant. Moore v. Whitney, 10 Lanc. Bar (Pa.) 122, 1 Leg. Chron. (Pa.) 1, 7 Luz. Leg. Reg. (Pa.) 158. But the attachment and sale of property to pay the purchase-price thereof does not estop the attaching creditor, as against a claimant, to deny the debtor's title when he sold it to the claimant. Right of surety to control disposition.— A surety in a claim bond, in which the principal is trustee for a feme covert, has no equitable right to prevent the feme covert from removing the property covered by the condition of the bond out of the state, previous to a forfeiture of the condition. and does not take from the claimant his right to assert title either at common law[42] or in equity.[43] Where, however, an election of remedy has once been made, the claimant will be bound thereby.[44] In cases where the statutory remedy is inapplicable, the claimant is necessarily remitted to such other remedies as the law affords.[45]

c. Sheriff's Interpleader.[48] In some jurisdictions, notably Pennsylvania and England, the proper mode of procedure to determine claims to property taken in execution is by interpleader[49] whereby, upon claim being made, the sheriff applies to the court for a rule on plaintiff and claimant to appear before the court, contest their respective rights, and abide the further order of the court.

C. 369. Compare Slowman v. Back, 3 B. & Ad. 103, 23 E. C. L. 54, in which an interpleader was allowed on a claim by a third person against both writs.

Goods in possession of stranger.— Allen v. Gibbon, 2 Dowl. P. C. 292.

Mortgaged goods.— A sheriff is not entitled to a rule for an interpleader in case of a levy upon goods claimed to be subject to mortgage, since his proper course is to sell the interest of the execution defendant subject to the lien. Brill v. West End Pass. R. Co., 4 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 139. See also

d. Motion. Motion is not a proper remedy by which to procure the delivery of the property seized to the claimant,[50] although a rule will lie to compel an officer to comply with the requirements of law with reference to the return of the execution and claim papers.[51] A motion or other proceeding to stay, quash, or vacate the execution will not lie in favor of a claimant to the property levied on.[52]

e. Sheriff's Jury. In England and some of the states, the sheriff, upon claim being made, may impanel a jury to determine the ownership of the property levied upon.[53] But unless specifically provided for by law,[54] such proceedings, not being judicial in their nature,[55] are never conclusive upon the parties, and are at best merely a method whereby the sheriff seeks to avoid the danger of trespassing upon the property of a stranger.[56]

2. Jurisdiction.[57] Claims of third persons to property seized on execution should as a rule be adjudicated in the court from which the execution issued.[58]

But where the levy is made in a county other than that in which the execution issued, the coördinate court of the former has jurisdiction.[59] In case the court from which the execution issued has no jurisdiction of the amount of the claim, the claimant can compel his adversary to come into a higher court to litigate it.[60]

3. PARTIES[61] — a. Necessary and Proper Parties — (i) IN GENERAL. All persons interested in the disposition of property under execution which is claimed by a person not a party to the writ should be made parties to the proceedings.[62]

(ii) CLAIMANTS. Proceedings to determine the ownership of property levied on can only be prosecuted by one not a party to the writ,[63] except where a party holds for the benefit of a third person.[64] The holder of the legal title is himself the proper party to assert claim,[65] although this may be done by an equitable owner under some statutes.[66] Where two or more are jointly interested, one may prosecute a claim for the benefit of all;[67] while on the other hand the several beneficiaries under a mortgage for an aggregate amount may properly join as claimants.[68]

(iii) JUDGMENT CREDITOR. Except in replevin[69] the judgment creditor should always be made a party to claim proceedings.[70]

In Alabama the circuit court has jurisdiction of all claims to property levied on, whether the execution issued from that court or another. Cullum v. Smith, 6 Ala. 625.

In Texas, under Rev. St. (1895) arts. 5293–5295, the officer is required to indorse on the claimant's bond the value of the property assessed by him, and return the bond to the proper court having jurisdiction of the amount. When made as required, such assessment determines the jurisdiction of the court to which the return is made. Cleveland v. Tufts, 69 Tex. 580, 7 S. W. 72. If only partially made the court is not bound to determine its jurisdiction by his assessment, but can hear evidence of value. Cullers v. Gray, (Civ. App. 1900) 57 S. W. 305. (iv) Judgment Debtor. The judgment debtor cannot be joined with the claimant in one proceeding.[71]

(v) Officers. The officer who levied an execution has such an interest in the property seized as to render him a proper party to the claim proceedings.[72] But the officer should not be joined in a suit to enjoin the sale of land, where the judgment creditor is the only one whose acts are claimed to give the court jurisdiction.[73]

b. Death of Party.[74] Upon the death of the execution creditor or the claimant, the proceeding must be prosecuted in the name of his personal representative.[75] In case of the death of one of several plaintiffs, the case should proceed in the name of the survivor.[76]

4. Notice.[77] Timely and sufficient notice of claim proceedings must in all cases be given to the adverse party, whether such party be the claimant, the sheriff, or the judgment creditor.[78]

5. Pleadings[79] — a. In General. Unless required by statute, formal pleadings are unnecessary in claim proceedings.[80] They should, however, be in writing,[81] and should so far as practicable conform to the pleadings in other civil actions, clearly setting out the basis of the claim and the claimant's title or right, and all matters of defense thereto.[82] In Pennsylvania the issue is made up by regular

Sufficiency of notice.—A notice by the sheriff to plaintiff's attorney that he had decided to summon a jury to try the validity of the claimant's rights to property seized on execution, specified the time and place of the trial, and was given five or six days prior thereto. The notice was repeated to the claimant in person on the day before, and again on the morning of the trial; a postponement to suit plaintiff's convenience, if desired, being offered. case,[92] but it will not prevent the claimant from interposing another claim,[93] or from pursuing any other available remedy with reference to the property.[94]

7. Issues, Proof, and Variance. The issue to be tried under the claim statutes is an issue of the liability of the property to plaintiff's execution as against the claimant's title or right, if any he has, and the claimant cannot as a rule urge irregularities in or the invalidity of the levy.[95] The claimant must in all cases prove his title as claimed, or the variance will be fatal.[96] But it is not a fatal variance that the proof shows an ownership of only a part of the goods upon a claim to all,[97] or an ownership in trust upon a claim to absolute ownership,[98] or a several instead of a joint ownership as claimed.[99]

8. Evidence [1] — a. Burden of Proof. Where a third person interposes a claim to property seized on execution, the burden of proof is as a rule upon him to establish the validity of his title.[2] Where, however, the claimant or his agent was in

Admission of defendant's possession.— When the claimant admits the possession of the property by defendant at the time of the levy, he assumes the burden of showing that the title is in him, and that it was not in defendant at any time from the date of the judgment to the date of the levy. In England the burden lies upon the party having the affirmative of the interpleader issue.[7]

b. Admissibility — (I) In General — (A) Acts, Declarations, and Admissions. The admissibility of acts, declarations, and admissions of the execution defendant,[8] of the claimant,[9] of the officer,[10] of a party in possession of the property,[11] or of the person from whom defendant derives title[12] are governed by the general rules relating to the admissibility of evidence.

(B) Judgment, Execution, and Return. On the trial of the right of property in a claim case the execution and return are admissible in evidence against the claimant;[13] but an execution which fails to follow the judgment either as to the whose possession the property was when seized, the court should direct which party shall assume the burden of proof.

7. Adnitt v. Hands, 57 L. T. Rep. N. S. 370.

8. Admissible.—The declarations of defendant in execution, in whose possession the property levied on was found, when made before, or at the time of the levy, are competent evidence to show the nature and character of his possession. Gayle v. Bancroft, 22 Ala. 316. See also Williams v. Kelsey, 6 Ga. 365, in which plaintiff offered evidence to show that a witness had rented of the execution defendant, and paid him therefor, a lot of land specified in the mortgage of the claimant; but there was no evidence that such land had been sold under judgment of foreclosure. The court below admitted the evidence and excluded a question put by the claimant whether defendant did not state at the time of renting the land that he was acting as agent. The admission of the evidence and the exclusion of the question were each held to be error. So too his declarations or admissions are admissible to show the character of the transfer by him to the claimant, where the deed is attacked for fraud or want of consideration, if made before the pendency of the litigation, or the existence of the claim sought to be enforced against him. Hayes v. Hill, 105 Ga. 299, 31 S. E. 166; Pearson v. Forsyth, 61 Ga. 537. But see Coole v. Braham, 3 Exch. 183, 18 L. J. Exch. 105.

Inadmissible.—But declarations made after the suit has been brought and before judgment, to the effect that he had sold the property in controversy to the claimant, are inadmissible in the latter's favor (Tillman v. Fontaine, 98 Ga. 672, 676, 27 S. E. 149 [citing James v. Taylor, 93 Ga. 275, 20 S. E. 309]); and conversely declarations made under oath as a witness at a former trial of the same case in disparagement of the claimant's title are not admissible against him (Tillman v. Fontaine, supra).

9. Admissible.— As plaintiff in execution succeeds only to the rights of defendant, any act, declaration, or admission of the claimant, which would be admissible evidence for or against himself in a suit between him and the execution defendant, is also admissible on the trial of the claim suit. Allen v. Smith, 22 Ala. 416. See also Gates v. Bowers, 58 N. Y. Suppl. 287.

10. Inadmissible.— A statement made by the officer after the levy, not shown to be part of the res gestæ, is hearsay and inadmissible. Goldberg v. Bussey, (Tex. Civ. App. 1898) 47 S. W. 49.

11. Admissible.— The declaration of the person in whose possession the property was found, made at the time of the levy, that he received it from defendant, is admissible evidence against the claimant. Derrett v. Alexander, 25 Ala. 265.

12. Admissible.— Declarations or admissions made by the person from whom the defendant in execution traces title, and which as a whole tend to show title to the property in him, are admissible in favor of plaintiff in execution. Amended return.— Where property sold on execution is afterward levied on by another creditor, and claimed by the purchaser, a return, amended by the officer during the trial of the claim, may be read in evidence. Savage v. Forward, 7 Ala. 463.

Failure to docket judgment.— The failure of plaintiff in fieri facias to have a judgment entered on the general execution docket, as provided by the Georgia act of Oct. 1, 1889, is no reason for rejecting the fieri facias as evidence on trial of a claim to property on which it had been levied. Rice v. Warren, 91 Ga. 759, 17 S. E. 1032.

If the execution introduced is for any reason void, or if no execution is offered in evidence, there can be no legal verdict in favor of plaintiff in execution. Collins v. Hill, 115 Ga. 465, 41 S. E. 678.

Proof of levy.— Where an execution had been read in evidence, it was error to refuse to permit the sheriff to testify that he levied on the property by virtue of such an execution. Johnson v. Sommers, 3 Ill. App. 55.

Previous levies may be proved without producing the executions.— See Yarborough v. Moss, 9 Ala. 382, in which the question was as to the possession of the claimant and defendant when the levy was made, the property being in the hands of the sheriff under previous levies.

parties or in amount is properly excluded.[14] A tax fieri facias, with which the claimant is unconnected, is inadmissible in evidence.[15] On the trial of a claim suit, the record of plaintiff's judgment against defendant in execution is irrelevant and inadmissible;[16] and the same is true of evidence as to the transactions by which the indebtedness merged in the judgment was created.[17]

(c) Payment of Debt. In a claim case the claimant may prove that the execution debtor has paid off and satisfied the debt due the execution creditor.[18]

(d) Financial Condition of Debtor. The financial condition of the debtor is admissible in evidence, where it tends to show his relationship to the property as against the claimant.[19]

(e) Title in Third Person. In a trial of right of property, the claimant must recover on the strength of his own title and he cannot show to support his claim a title paramount to that of defendant in execution in a third person, a stranger to the proceeding.[20] On the other hand it is competent for the creditor to show that the claimant has parted with his title to a third person.[21]

(f) Value of Property. As plaintiff in execution, if successful upon the trial of the right of property, is entitled to a return of the specific thing which was delivered to the claimant, or its assessed value, it is allowable for him to offer evidence to the jury to show its value at the time of trial.[22]

(ii) To Show Particular Matters. What evidence is and what evidence is not admissible in a claim case to show the claimant's title,[23] to show a

Where the levy is made in another county than that from which the execution issued, and a trial of the right of property is demanded, the copy of the execution returned by the sheriff to the county of the trial has the same effect as if it was an original execution, without any certificate that it is a copy. Proceeds of services.— When a creditor is pursuing property by levy on the ground that it is the proceeds of his debtor's services, rendered in a mercantile business conducted by the debtor nominally as agent for his wife, evidence of the value of his services is admissible for the creditor, in a claim case between himself as plaintiff in fieri facias and the debtor's wife as claimant. Keller v. Mayer, 55 Ga. 406.

Value of the use of the property from the time it was received by the claimant under his bond is properly admitted, as the judgment should show such value to enable the claimant to choose whether to return the property, and pay for its use, or to pay for the property, with interest on its value. Keating v. Julien, (Tex. Civ. App. 1893) 23 S. W. 607, construing Tex. Rev. St. art. 4845.

fraudulent transfer of the property to the claimant,[24] to show possession of the property in defendant in execution,[25] to show fraud or mala fides in the acquisition of the property by defendant in execution,[26] to show the indebtedness (motive in purchasing property); Anderson v. Lewis, 20 Ga. 383 (judgment against representations of defendant establishing copy of deed); Gillespie v. Miller, 37 Pa. St. 247 (deed conveying separate estate with which property levied on as that of claimant's husband was bought).

A trust deed not legally acknowledged and recorded is inadmissible in evidence, without proof of actual knowledge on the part of the execution plaintiff. Wasson v. Connor, 54 Miss. 351.

Notes in claimant's hands, claimed to have been given for the price of the property and returned upon payment thereof, and from which the signatures have been torn, are not evidence of claimant's ownership, as against execution creditors of her husband. New v. Driver, 89 Ga. 434, 15 S. E. 535.

Record of a proceeding by third persons against claimant to have an execution canceled, which had been transferred to claimant by a sale under which he claims the title in dispute, which proceedings ended in a judgment refusing the petition, is irrelevant, although its admission is harmless. Ansley v. Hart, 77 Ga. 42.

24. Where the transfer of the property to the claimant is attacked for fraud, any evidence tending to show or rebut the fraud is admissible, its force and effect being for the jury to determine. Lamkin v. Clary, 103 Ga. 631, 30 S. E. 596. See also Snodgrass v. Decatur Branch Bank, 25 Ala. 161, 60 Am. Insolvency of defendant at or about time of transfer.— See Tillman v. Fontaine, 98 Ga. 672, 27 S. E. 149. See also Knox v. Fair, 17 Ala. 503, where proof of the ostensible insolvency of defendant, with evidence of his ability to purchase property notwithstanding, was held admissible to show a motive for taking the title in the claimant's name.

Tax books are admissible to show that claimant paid no taxes and had no means to purchase lands in dispute. Tillman v. Fontaine, 98 Ga. 672, 27 S. E. 149.

The record of a suit in equity between the same parties, in which it was alleged that the property had been sold under the same execution, that claimant caused it to be purchased for her benefit, and that the sale was procured by fraud, and a decree was rendered setting aside the sheriff's deed for fraud, is admissible. Littlefield v. Drawdy, 84 Ga. 644, 11 S. E. 504.

Transcript of decree discharging defendant as bankrupt is admissible as evidence of the time and fact of discharge, where it is claimed that the property was fraudulently conveyed and it is shown that it went back into the possession of the bankrupt a short time after his discharge. Snodgrass v. Decatur Branch Bank, 25 Ala. 161, 60 Am. Dec. 505.

In Illinois plaintiff in execution must show a valid judgment and execution issued thereon, before he can attack the transfer to the claimant for fraud (Calumet Paper Co. v. Knight, etc., Co., 43 Ill. App. 566), but a special plea of fraud is unnecessary (Bostwick v. Blake, 145 Ill. 85, 34 N. E. 38).

In Nevada, in Chamberlain v. Stern, 11 Nev. 268, it was held that when personal property is found in the possession of the execution debtor, and after levy is claimed by a stranger, the officer is not bound to surmise that there may have been a sale, and so attack it for fraud in his answer. He is not bound to assail the transaction till it is brought to his knowledge, and, if it makes its first appearance at the trial, he may meet it there with the proof of the fraud.

25. To show the possession of defendant in execution, a statement in an entry of levy that he was in possession at the date of the levy is prima facie evidence of that fact (Burt v. Rubley, 113 Ga. 1144, 1145, 39 S. E. 409 [citing Lamkin v. Clary, 103 Ga. 631, 30 S. E. 596; Williams v. Hart, 65 Ga. 201]); as is a forthcoming bond executed by him, and under which he retained the property in dispute (Sandlin v. Anderson, 76 Ala. 403).

The act of a third person in his behalf with reference to the property, such act being subsequently ratified by him, is also admissible upon the question of the retention of the possession by defendant up to the time when the lien of the execution attacked, the evidence tending to establish his possession for the statutory period without demand made and pursued by the claimant by due course of law. Knox v. Fair, 17 Ala. 503.

26. False representations, made by the execution defendant to the claimant, in reference to his pecuniary condition, to induce the claimant to sell him the goods in controversy on credit, are admissible on the trial of the claim case to show the contract void on account of the misrepresentation of a material fact. Chisolm v. Chittenden, 45 Ga. 213.

of defendant in execution to the claimant,[27] or to show the indebtedness of defendant in execution to plaintiff in execution[28] must be determined by the general rules governing the admissibility of evidence.

c. Weight and Sufficiency — (I) On Part of Execution Plaintiff. Plaintiff in execution makes out a prima facie case where he shows a valid execution and that the property levied on was in the possession of the execution defendant at the time the levy was made;[29] but to make a prima facie case against the claimant in favor of plaintiff in mortgage fieri facias, it is not sufficient to prove possession of the mortgaged property by the mortgagor at the time of the levy, but either possession or title in the mortgagor at the date of the mortgage must be shown.[30] The fact that the claimant concealed the property in order to escape the levy is not of itself sufficient to authorize a finding that the property is subject to levy.[31] Plaintiff in execution need not prove the judgment upon which his execution is based.[32]

(II) On Part of Claimant. The sufficiency of the evidence to support a verdict for the claimant is wholly dependent upon the facts and circumstances of the individual case.[33] But the uncontradicted testimony of the claimant that the

See also Ballard v. Mayfield, 107 Ala. 396, 18 So. 29, in which it was held that a mortgage of defendant's interest in crops grown on his land by a tenant was not invalid for insufficient description, as the property might be identified by parol evidence as having been raised on the land during the mortgage period, and delivered to defendant for rent.

Such indebtedness cannot be shown by a private memorandum of debts made out by defendant, nor by the schedule attached to his petition in bankruptcy, where both were made after the claimant's purchase, and after plaintiff had obtained judgment. Barber v. Terrell, 54 Ga. 146.

28. The existence of defendant's indebtedness to plaintiff prior to the sale to the claimant may be proved by showing that a proposition was made to compromise such indebtedness by paying less than the whole amount admitted to be due. property levied on had been bought by him with his own means, and had never been owned since his purchase by any one else, is sufficient to entitle him to recover;[34] as is the undisputed testimony of the claimant and the execution defendant that the property had been bought for the claimant with his money by defendant as his agent.[35] So too evidence that the claimant was a bona fide purchaser for value from one to whom defendant in execution had, before the date of plaintiff's judgment, on a valuable and adequate consideration, in good faith, conveyed the property in dispute, requires a verdict for the claimant.[36] On the other hand a judgment by default or confession is not evidence of the justness or existence of a debt in favor of the claimant as against the plaintiff in execution;[37] and where the evidence shows that the property belongs to a third person the claimant cannot recover.[38]

9. Trial[39] — a. Conduct Generally. The conduct of the trial or hearing of a claim case is a matter resting largely in the discretion of the court.[40] But it is error to render a personal judgment by default against the claimant without a writ of inquiry as to the value of the property;[41] and where the claimant has shown, by an exemplification of the record of the suit in which the judgment was obtained under which the execution was levied, that defendant therein had not been served, the court should refuse a continuance to allow plaintiff to show the contrary, since the record can only be perfected in the court rendering the original judgment.[42]

b. Right to Open and Conclude. In a claim case, if defendant in execution was in possession of the property at the date of the levy, the burden is upon the claimant,[43] and he is entitled to the opening and conclusion of the argument.[44] But if, where the execution defendant was in possession, the claimant fails to

The examination of witnesses is a matter within the court's discretion. Thus it is not error to allow counsel for the creditor or defendant in the common-law suit, as well as counsel for plaintiff, to participate in examining witnesses in the claim case arising under a judgment against a garnishee (Smith v. Wellborn, 75 Ga. 799); nor after the argument of a motion for a nonsuit for levying execution illegally, to recall the sheriff and draw from him the fact as to the person on whom he served notice of levy, and then to direct him to amend the return accordingly (Primrose v. Browning, 59 Ga. 69); nor to refuse to allow the debtor to be recalled to show in case the court should rule in plaintiff's favor, that the property was exempt (McCaughan v. Picard, (Miss. 1897) 21 So. 796). But a rule on the claimant to submit himself to a cross-examination, taken before the time allowed for filing his bond, is premature (Stokes v. McKinney, 34 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 128).

After submitting his proof to the jury upon an issue involving the precedence of an execution or of deeds, without a motion to dismiss or withdraw the levy, plaintiff in fieri facias cannot complain after verdict, that the levy should have been dismissed. Groves v. Williams, 69 Ga. 614.

assume the burden of proof, plaintiff, on being directed to assume the affirmative, is entitled to open and close;[45] and where, neither by the entry of levy nor the admission of the claimant, the possession of the property is shown to be in the execution defendant, and plaintiff, taking the burden of proof, establishes the fact by evidence introduced on the trial, he and not the claimant is entitled to the conclusion, unless the claimant introduces no evidence.[46]

c. Province of Court and Jury. All controverted questions of fact in a claim case are as a rule to be submitted to the determination of the jury.[47] It is, however, for the court to determine in the first instance whether the undisputed facts are such as to condemn the transaction between the execution defendant and the claimant as a legal fraud;[48] and where the answer of the claimant in a sheriff's interpleader does not raise any dispute as to the facts, and the only question to be decided is one of law, no issue should be awarded, and the question raised is for the decision of the court.[49] So too where it is apparent from the evidence that the claimant has no cause of action, or that plaintiff in execution cannot sustain his levy, the court may properly direct a verdict,[50] dismiss the levy,[51] or award a nonsuit.[52]

d. Instructions. On the trial of a claim case it is error to refuse to give instructions submitting the issues raised by the evidence to the jury,[53] or to give an instruction which improperly restricts the jury in the determination of the issues.[54] The instructions must be predicated upon some evidence,[55] and must correctly state the law thereon;[56] and an instruction which is misleading,[57] or in any way prejudicial to either party,[58] or which in any manner invades the province of the jury by withdrawing from their consideration any question of fact,[59] is erroneous. Where fraud is alleged, the instructions should be accompanied by a statement of the facts necessary to constitute fraud in law,[60] and it is proper to direct the jury's attention to peculiar circumstances which if unexplained tend to show fraud.[61] It is also proper for the court to instruct the jury as to the effect of proof of possession in the execution defendant.[62]

e. Verdict and Findings — (i) In General. In order to support a judgment, the verdict in a claim case must be certain,[63] and responsive to the issue or issues,[64] and to the evidence.[65] The jury may, however, bring in a verdict as to part of the property only, without mentioning the rest.[66]

A general verdict "for the plaintiff" is sufficient. It is mere surplusage to state in the verdict the amount for which the claimant and his sureties are bound. Willer v. Kray, 73 Tex. 533, 11 S. W. 540. See also Williams v. Jones, 2 Ala. 314, to the effect that a finding for plaintiff is a condemnation of the property absolutely in discharge of his execution.

A verdict finding the property levied on not subject, is not illegal because the claimant showed title to but one undivided half of the land, when plaintiff showed neither the possession of defendant nor any title in him, except as to the one-half interest, which claimant showed had been previously sold at a tax-sale, under which he acquired title. Mitchell v. King, 53 Ga. 470.

A claim covering one half of certain lots, without stating which, might be demurrable; but a verdict in favor of the claimant should not be set aside for uncertainty. Jones v. Cleveland, 62 Ga. 237.

Where there are several execution plaintiffs, the verdict of the jury should declare what sum fixed by deducting from the entire fund in court, or from the total value of the goods delivered to the claimant, the amount representing the proceeds or value of the goods found to be his property, each defendant is entitled to receive, either out of the money in court or from the claimant in possession of the goods. The issue, on the trial of an ordinary claim case, is whether the property is subject or not, and no finding by the jury as to the amount due on the fieri facias is requisite. Lamar v. Coleman, 88 Ga. 417, 14 S. E. 608. See also supra, IX, B, 7.

A verdict that "the execution is a lien upon and binds the property" is good as being within the spirit and intent of a statute which provides that "if the jury find the goods and chattels to be the property of the defendant in the execution, the verdict shall, as against the claimant, justify the officer in selling such goods and chattels." Tucker v. Bond, 23 Ark. 268, 272. See also as to sufficiency of verdict to justify officer in selling the property Schroeder v. Clark, 18 Mo. 184.

65. McLaughlin v. Ham, 84 Ga. 786, 11 S. E. 889, to the effect that where the levy and claim both cover the fee, and a life-estate in the property only is subject, the jury ought so to find, instead of finding generally in favor of either party.

(II) Assessing Value of Property. The jury need not assess the value of the property claimed,[67] unless required to do so by statute. When so required the verdict must if practicable assess the value of each article separately.[68]

(III) Setting Aside Verdict of Sheriff's Jury. The verdict of a jury impaneled by the sheriff to try the validity of a claim by a third person to property levied on is not such a judicial determination as may be reviewed, in the absence of an express statutory provision authorizing a review, since it is not conclusive of the ownership of the property, and therefore a motion will not lie to set aside such verdict.[69]

10. Judgment and Enforcement[70] — a. Judgment — (I) In General. The judgment in a claim case should be in accordance with any statutory provisions regulating its form,[71] although a mere clerical misprision may be amended on motion.[72] Where the claimant fails to appear and join issue, plaintiff in execution is entitled to a judgment by default against him as in other cases.[73]

(II) Assessment of Value of Property. Where in the trial of the right of property the bond does not state the separate value thereof, and there is no issue upon that point, the judgment need not ascertain it.[74]

(III) In Favor of Claimant. A judgment in favor of the claimant should be so framed as to affect only his rights as against plaintiff in execution. Thus it is error for the court to dismiss a levy where it appears that a part only of the property levied on is claimed, but it should be dismissed only as to that part as to which the claimant establishes his claim;[75] and similarly on a claim by a mortgagee, it is error to discharge the property from all liens by reason of the levy, where the levy is good as to the judgment debtor, although inferior to the claim-

The statute must be reasonably construed. See Kibble v. Butler, 14 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 287.

If the jury assess the aggregate value of the property, instead of the separate value of each article, that portion of their verdict is without legal warrant and wholly nugatory, and must be treated as surplusage; but the judgment will not be reversed on account of such defect, if the verdict is in other respects formal, and sufficient to authorize the judgment rendered upon it. Willis v. Planters', etc., Bank, 19 Ala. 141. See also Hardy v. Gascoignes, 6 Port. (Ala.) 447, where it was held that if the jury are unable to assess the value of each article separately the claimants cannot be heard to complain.

In Mississippi a contrary rule prevails, and a judgment against the claimant and his surety will be reversed where the jury fail to assess the value of the distinct articles separately. ant's mortgage.[76] Where a new trial is granted unless plaintiff will dismiss his levy as to a portion of the property, which is done, and the parties agree that the residue shall be subject to the execution, judgment on the pleading, as modified, is proper.[77]

(iv) Against Claimant. The judgment for plaintiff in execution in a claim case should under some statutes be that the property is subject to the execution,[78] and that plaintiff in execution recover from the claimant the damages assessed by the jury, together with his costs.[79] Under other statutes the judgment must be in the alternative, for the specific property or its assessed value;[80] while under others yet judgment may be rendered against the claimant and his sureties on the bond, in the event of his forfeiture or breach of condition.[81] Where a judgment for the claimant is set aside on appeal, plaintiff in execution is entitled to a judgment for the value of the property, and legal interest thereon from the date of the bond, together with damages.[82]

(v) Against Execution Defendant. It is error, in a trial of the right of property, to render a new judgment against the execution debtor, thus making him liable for the costs and the penalty.[83]

11. Reinstatement and New Trial.[86] When in a claim case the execution levy has been improperly dismissed, the court may correct the error at the same time by reinstating the case on motion.[87] So upon a proper showing the court may award a new trial in a claim case, as in other civil cases.[88]

12. Appeal and Error.[89] In respect to appellate procedure, the right of review,[90] the jurisdiction of the proceedings for review,[91] the sufficiency of the

13. Costs, Damages, and Expenses — a. Costs[94] — (i) In General. While the costs in a claim suit are largely in the discretion of the court, and do not necessarily follow the verdict,[95] yet as a rule they will be awarded against the defeated party.[96]

(III) Security For Costs. The rules in regard to security for costs in claim proceedings follow the analogy of the rules on the same subject in actions generally.[98] But a non-resident plaintiff in execution is not required to give security for the costs in a claim case,[99] unless the burden of proof is on him.[1]

(IV) Sale of Property For Costs. In case of a finding against the claimant of property taken in execution, the property cannot be sold to pay the costs of the trial of the right of property.[2]

C. Operation and Effect of Determination — 1. In General. The determination of the right of property in a claim proceeding does not affect the title to the property as between the claimant and the execution defendant, or the rights of third parties;[4] but as between the execution plaintiff and the claimant it is conclusive as to the liability of the property to the execution,[5] and, where cution, he cannot, before breach of the bond, again seize the property, nor accept a voluntary surrender of it from the claimant, and in either case charge plaintiff in execution with the expense of keeping it. the judgment is against the claimant, as to the validity and binding force of the judgment in the principal action.[6] A judgment for the claimant does not operate as a bar to an action of trespass for the tort committed in taking the property under the execution,[7] although a judgment against him will bar not only an action against the officer,[8] but also one against a purchaser at the execution sale.[9] On the other hand plaintiff in execution may, notwithstanding a judgment for the claimant, compel the officer to sell by giving him a sufficient indemnifying bond.[10] Where the levy is dismissed, plaintiff in execution cannot proceed to the trial of the claim case without procuring a reversal of the judgment of dismissal.[11]

2. Dismissal and Nonsuit. The dismissal of a claim case by a court of competent jurisdiction is in effect a judgment against the claim.[12] So too a nonsuit in a sheriff's interpleader is a final determination of the issue against the claimant,[13] although it will not prevent his contesting his claim in some other form.[14]

3. Parties Bound. The verdict and judgment in a claim case will as a rule bind those only who are parties to the proceeding;[15] but where several claimants

Sale by defendant after levy.— Where, after a valid levy, defendant in execution had sold the property, a verdict, on the trial of the right of property, justifying the officer in levying and selling, is also a justification to plaintiff in execution or other purchasers interfering in defendant's sale. A claimant is not bound by a judgment in proceedings instituted by the sheriff without his consent, since Nebr. Code, § 486, provides that a trial of the right of property can be had only at the instance of the claimant. Storms v. Eaton, 5 Nebr. 453.

have filed claims against a fund in the hands of the sheriff under a judgment, a verdict on an issue between two of the claimants will bind all.[16]

4. Relevy and Sale Under Original Judgment. After a judgment adverse to the claimant in a trial of the right of property, the property may be reseized and sold under the original judgment;[17] and the execution plaintiff cannot be compelled to pursue his remedy on the claimant's bond,[18] or, where he has been sued in replevin, to issue execution on the replevin judgment.[19]

D. Liability of Claimant and Sureties — 1. On Claim and Forthcoming Bonds — a. In General — (i) Liability of Claimant. The liability of a claimant on his bond is analogous to that of an attachment defendant on a forthcoming bond, and hence is fixed by a final judgment against him.[20]

A security on a claim bond is sufficiently a party to the claim case to be bound by a verdict and judgment therein for damages and costs. Harvey v. Head, 68 Ga. 247. He cannot, in an action on the bond, object that the jury, in determining the claim case, omitted to notice a portion of the property (Elliott v. Gray, 4 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 168), nor can he, two years after the levy and sale, and after the title of his principal has been declared void, intervene and again try such title (Saisarence v. Mayer, 19 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 537). But a surety is not precluded, by a judgment improperly obtained against his principal, from resorting to a court of chancery to establish that the property levied on and condemned had been previously levied on by a senior judgment creditor and condemned, pending a trial of which the last levy was made, and that the property had been delivered in satisfaction of the judgment of the senior creditor (Babcock v. Williams, 9 Ala. 150).

There must be a judgment by a court of competent jurisdiction, in order to fix the liability of the claimant on the forthcoming bond made by him. Brannan v. Cheek, 103 Ga. 353, 29 S. E. 937.

Failure to maintain title.— Where a claimant gave a bond conditioned that he should at all times maintain his title to the goods, but neglected to file a statement of title for more than two weeks after the rule to interplead was made absolute, it was held that this was a failure to maintain his title which wrought a breach of the bond, although there had been no service of the rule upon him. Com. v. Beary, 9 Pa. Super. Ct. 246.

Conversion and sale by claimant.— A sale of the property by the claimant is a breach of the bond, for which he can be proceeded against without first demanding the property and readvertising it for sale (Lassiter v. Byrd, 55 Ga. 606); and where he sells for more than the amount of the creditor's debt, and then withdraws his claim, he is liable to the creditor for the amount of the debt (Tift v. Keaton, 78 Ga. 235, 2 S. E. 690). See also Bowen v. Penny, 76 Ga. 743, to the effect that where the property was delivered to the claimant, and consumed by him, he was personally liable on the forthcoming bond, although he signed as trustee for his wife.

In case the same property is levied on by several creditors, and a claim bond is given to one of the executions only, and that creditor alone contests the title with the claimant, and succeeds in condemning the property, the other creditors have no right to claim the money which he receives from the claimant in discharge of the claim bond. Barnett v. Handley, 8 Ala. 685, where the bond was executed to the junior execution only.

Sale of property under superior lien.— Where claimant gives the levying officer a forthcoming bond and retains possession, and thereafter the same officer sells the property under a superior lien, applying the proceeds to such lien, the maker of the forthcoming bond is not liable for failure to produce the property at the time and place of sale. Floyd v. Cook, 118 Ga. 526, 45 S. E. 441, 63 L. R. A. 450.

(II) Liability of Sureties[21] — (A) In General. Where, in a statutory proceeding to try rights of property, a claimant's bond is filed, the court has jurisdiction over the person of a surety on such bond.[22] But the liability of the surety is dependent upon that of his principal, and cannot be enforced until a liability is fixed upon the principal.[23] A surety on several bonds is liable to each creditor for a breach of the condition of the bond, although he may thereby be compelled to pay the value of the goods levied on several times.[24]

(B) Release From Liability. A surety cannot be discharged by substituting another bond, with other surety, without the consent of the other party;[25] and since, after final judgment, on the bond, sureties become principal debtors, they are not discharged by an extension or stay of execution;[26] nor because plaintiff in a senior execution did not have the proceeds of the sale of the property under a junior execution applied to the senior execution.[27]

(III) Surrender of Property. The condition of a bond that the goods levied on shall be forthcoming to answer the writ, in case the issue shall be determined against the claimant and in favor of the execution creditor, is broken, if upon such determination all the goods are not forthcoming.[28] The doctrine is well settled that in order that the surrender may discharge the liability on the forthcoming bond there must be an actual return of the identical[29] property to the possession and control of the officer,[30] in as good condition as when it was

Where it appears that the property is owned jointly by the claimant and the debtor, the limit of the assessment of value is the value of the debtor's interest, and the sheriff is not entitled to have it assessed at the amount named in the execution. Ploss v. Thomas, 6 Mo. App. 157.

b. Enforcement of Liability — (I) In Proceedings For Trial of Right. In some jurisdictions the liability of the claimant and his sureties upon the claim bond may be enforced summarily in the proceedings for the trial of the right of property.[39]

(II) By Action[40] — (A) In General. The liability of a claimant and his sureties is most usually enforced by action on the bond.[41] The execution plaintiff may maintain an action on a forthcoming bond in his own name;[42] but it is the duty of the officer to institute an action on the claimant's replevin bond.[43]

In Florida, McClellan Dig. p. 526, § 28, provides that whenever a person who has interposed a claim to property levied on by execution, and given bond to plaintiff in execution, shall not deliver the property according to the terms of the bond, the bond shall have the force of a judgment, and the clerk may issue execution thereon for the amount of the debt. Under this statute, the execution can only issue against the obligor and his sureties, and only for "the amount of the debt." Moody v. Hoe, 22 Fla. 314, in which it was further held that where several different executions have been levied, under McClellan Dig. p. 524, § 22, and the bond is made jointly to all plaintiffs, the clerk cannot issue execution in favor of one only of such plaintiffs, although the jury found against the claimant in his favor, and in favor of the claimant against the others.

In Kentucky, under Code, § 716, a party to whom a bond is executed may move the court to which it is returned for a judgment, on ten days' notice of the motion. Smith v. Wells, 4 Bush 92. See also Rogers v. Bostain, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 764. Compare Howe v. Lane, 8 Ky. L. Rep. 783, to the effect that a claimant's bond, taken by the sheriff after the death of defendant, is not a statutory obligation enforceable by motion; but that the special proceeding will not bar an action at law on the bond, if the facts will sustain it.

In Texas, Rev. St. (1895) art. 5307, provides: "In all cases where any claimant of property under the provisions of this title . . . shall fail to establish his right thereto, judgment shall be rendered against him and his sureties for the value of the property, with legal interest thereon from the date of the bond." Davis v. Jones, (Civ. App. 1903) 75 S. W. 63. 41. Under Ga. Code, § 3326, which provides that an action may be maintained on a forthcoming bond given in a claim case for deterioration in the value of the property, such an action is not authorized on a delivery bond for property taken under execution, where an affidavit of illegality has been filed. (B) Defenses. Defendant can set up no defense which would permit him to prove the very issue which it was incumbent upon him to prove in the claim case;[44] nor can he show that the jury found by their verdict that the claimant was interested with defendant, and that the interest which the latter had on a settlement of accounts was nothing.[45]

(C) Pleading. The general rules of pleading are applicable in actions upon claim and forthcoming bonds.[46]

(D) Evidence.[47] In actions upon claim and forthcoming bonds, presumptions,[48] burden of proof,[49] the admissibility of evidence,[50] and the weight and sufficiency of proof[51] are governed by the general rules relating to such matters in other actions.

(E) Instructions.[52] An instruction upon an issue whether an unsuccessful claimant had offered to return the property in as good condition as he had received it is not objectionable because it described the property slightly differently from what the pleadings and evidence showed it to be.[53]

It is only necessary in the declaration, statement, or complaint to set out facts sufficient to show a breach of the conditions of the bond (Bowen v. Penny, 76 Ga. 743), and to allege the value of the goods, where plaintiff's recovery is limited to such value (Byrne v. Hayden, 124 Pa. St. 170, 16 Atl. 750). No affidavit of defense is required (Davis v. Wood, 39 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 328); but a special plea must allege all the facts necessary to sustain it (Young v. Waldrip, 91 Ga. 765, 18 S. E. 23).

47. Evidence generally see EVIDENCE.

48. There is no presumption, on default by the obligors in an action on a bond given by a claimant for the delivery of goods on the settlement of the claim in favor of the execution creditor, that the goods for which the bond was given were worth as much as the amount due on the judgment. Byrne v. Hayden, 124 Pa. St. 170, 16 Atl. 750.

49. In an action on a forthcoming bond the burden of proof is upon the claimant to account for his failure to surrender the property. Young v. Waldrip, 91 Ga. 765, 18 S. E. 23. In a motion for judgment, where the pleadings are oral, the court should require each party to state his case, and from that statement prescribe what shall be the issue, and who shall assume the burden of proof. Borches v. Bellis, 110 Ky. 620, 62 S. W. 486, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 37.

50. In an action on a forthcoming bond the bond itself is properly admitted in evidence on behalf of plaintiff (Ingram v. Harris, 9 Pa. Super. Ct. 301, 43 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 550), while under a plea of payment defendants may give in evidence the return of the sheriff, showing a levy and sale, and money made thereby (Hill v. Grant, 49 Pa. St. 200); but they will not be permitted to prove that the property levied on, and for which they gave their bond, really belonged to themselves, or to others than the execution defendant (Waterman v. Frank, 21 Mo. 108; Ingram v. Harris, 9 Pa. Super. Ct. 301, 43 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 550. But see Williams v. Smith, 4 Bush (Ky.) 540; Robinson v. Sharp, 32 S. W. 416, 761, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 736).

Equitable ownership.— On a motion for judgment on a claimant's bond, the claimant may claim that, although the debtor is the legal owner of the property, claimant is a partner, and equitable owner of two-thirds' interest therein. Williams v. Smith, 4 Bush (Ky.) 540.

51. See cases cited infra, this note.

To show breach.— The breach of a bond, conditioned that the goods shall be produced at the time and place of sale, if the claim be disallowed, can be proved only by showing that the property was advertised for sale, and was not produced at the time and place provided therefor, or by showing that the property had been disposed of by the claimant. Bowdoin v. Roberts, 85 Ga. 657, 11 S. E. 784.

To sustain finding that property belonged to debtor.— In an action on a bond given by a claimant of property levied on, evidence that the execution debtor was exercising dominion over the property, and that defendant had disclaimed title thereto and declared that it belonged to such debtor, sustains a finding that it belonged to the latter. (2) Stay of Proceedings. Where judgment has been rendered on an interpleader bond, the court will not stay proceedings until the determination of other feigned issues growing out of a levy upon the same goods by other execution creditors, in order to relieve defendant from his liability on other interpleader bonds.[57]

(3) Application of Proceeds. The proceeds of a judgment on a forthcoming bond should be applied on the execution, whether the judgment on which the execution issued was a lien on the property seized or not. Defendant in execution has no claim to the proceeds.[58]

2. On Indemnity Bonds.[59] Where the claimant of property levied on under execution has possession of it, and refuses to deliver it to the sheriff, and gives a bond of indemnity to the sheriff for not assessing and selling it, he is liable to the sheriff on such bond.[60]

E. Remedy of Claimant on Indemnity Bond[61] — 1. Right of Action. The execution of an indemnity bond to the officer levying an execution does not postpone the right of action against the officer by a claimant of the property, but simply shifts the liability from the officer to the obligors.[62] The right of action accrues immediately upon the execution of the bond,[63] and the fact that the claimant has executed a bond to retain possession of the property will not prevent his instituting an action on the indemnity bond for the damages previously sustained.[64]

2. Defenses — Validity of Bond. The validity of a bond of indemnity cannot be attacked on the ground of duress,[65] nor because of a variance in the description of the property, where it is otherwise described in the bond the same as in the officer's return, and the evidence shows that the property taken was that for which the bond was given,[66] nor because the statement of claim omits some material matter, if the bond was given by the execution plaintiff without objection upon the demand of the officer.[67]

3. Pleading[68] — Answer. In an action on an indemnifying bond an answer denying plaintiff's ownership of the property is defective, if it fails to negative his ownership of any part thereof.[69]

4. Evidence.[70] Where a claimant brings trespass against plaintiff in execution, the officer making the levy and the sureties on the bond of indemnity given the engine, etc., and the court described the property as a steam-engine, carriage, boiler, etc.

Conversely the fact that an indemnifying bond has been taken and returned by the officer does not bar the right of the claimant to maintain an action of claim and delivery against the officer to recover possession of the property levied on. officer, the bond is competent evidence to connect the sureties with the alleged trespass.[71]

5. Trial[72]— Instructions. Although the evidence as a whole tends to show that plaintiff is either the owner of all the property or of some of it, it is proper to instruct the jury that if they believe plaintiff is the owner of the property, "or any part thereof," they will find for him the value of the property, or of such part as they believe from the evidence he owned at the time of the levy.[73]

6. Damages.[74] Where a sale of the property under the execution is void, and the property is returned to the claimant, and no substantial damage is shown, in an action on the bond of indemnity the claimant is entitled to nominal damages only.[75]

X. Sale.[76]

A. Manner, Conduct, and Validity — 1. Authority of Officer to Sell — a. In General. An officer making a sale under execution acts solely by virtue of the statutory authority conferred, which must be strictly pursued; and where such power does not exist nothing passes by the sale.[77]

b. After Expiration of Term of Office. Where a sufficient levy of execution is made upon property during the life of the writ, and prior to the expiration of the term of office of the officer to whom it is delivered, such officer is empowered to make a sale of the property so levied upon after his term has expired.[78]

c. Where Officer Is a Party at Interest. Under the principle of public policy which makes it unlawful for a sheriff to levy an execution issued in his favor, it

The distinction between an execution and a judicial sale is that the former is a ministerial and the latter a judicial act. At common law, if the officer in conducting an execution sale conformed to the established regulations, the sale was final and valid as soon as made, confirmation being required only in judicial sales.
