is unlawful for an officer or his deputy to conduct a sale under an execution to which he is a party.[79]

d. Sale by Successor in Office. The question as to whether or not an officer can complete the service of an execution which has been begun by his predecessor has been often before the courts, and the decisions thereon cannot be harmonized. In the case of personal property the rule seems to be well settled that the sale must be made by the officer who levied the writ, the reason given being that the officer, by virtue of his levy, has acquired an interest in the property.[80] However, since the levy of an execution upon real estate does not vest any special property in the officer making the levy, as in the case of personal property, the rule has been laid down in many jurisdictions that the powers of his successor in office are concurrent with those of the officer making the levy in respect to the sale of such property.[81] While some courts have gone to the extent of holding that in the case of real property the new officer is the proper party to make the sale and execute the conveyance, and that a sale by the officer whose term has expired is a nullity,[82] others, following the common-law rule in regard to chattels, have held that only the outgoing officer has power to complete the execution by the sale and conveyance of the land levied upon.[83]

Death or disability of officer.— Under a Michigan statute providing that when the officer shall have begun to serve an execution and dies, or is incapable of completing the service and return thereof, the same may be completed by any other officer who might by law have executed the same if originally delivered to him, a levy made upon real estate by a sheriff who afterward enlisted and went to war, and a sale made by his successor in office while the former was in the army, is good. 83. This line of decisions is based on the common-law maxim that an execution is an

e. Venditioni Exponas[84] — (i) Nature of Writ. A venditioni exponas is not an execution in the proper sense of the word. It is more in the nature of a mandate[85] or order requiring the sheriff to proceed to the execution of the former writ, which is still regarded as the foundation of his proceedings.[86]

(ii) Office of Writ. The execution and levy constitute the predicate of the venditioni exponas, and the latter, as the former, rests upon the judgment, and its only office is to sell that which has been already seized to satisfy the judgment and costs upon which the execution issued, and the same is the case with any subsequent venditioni exponas that may issue.[87] Hence where the officer, acting under a writ of venditioni exponas, sells property in a case where no fieri facias was issued,[88] where the property sold has not been levied upon,[89] or where the judgment has been satisfied or merged in another judgment,[90] such sale is null and void.

(iii) Form of Writ. A venditioni exponas, made by the proper tribunal, entire thing and must be completed by the hand which begins it. Byers v. Fowler, 12 Ark. 218, 54 Am. which recites the issuance of an execution[91] by the justice of the jurisdiction in which the land lies and its levy by the proper officer of that county, is sufficient, although it does not designate by name the county or district in which the land lies;[92] and where clerical errors appear in the writ, the proper corrections should be made on the application of the purchasers at the sale.[93]

(IV) RIGHT OF JUDGMENT CREDITOR TO. Where an officer, whose duty it is to sell property seized to satisfy an execution, either omits, neglects, or refuses to make sale thereof, according to law, the rule is well settled that the creditor whose debt or demand the property was seized to satisfy may have a writ of venditioni exponas to compel the officer to discharge his duty and coerce him to sell the property.[94] Under some statutes in order to warrant the sale of real property a venditioni exponas must be issued.[95]

2. CONDUCT OF SALE — a. What Law Governs. The law in force at the time of the sale of land on execution will control the proceedings of the officer conducting the sale, and not the law in force at the time the judgment was rendered.[96]

b. Designation or Description of Property. It is a cardinal rule, in an execution sale of real property, that the land sold should be designated with reasonable certainty.[97] The rule is likewise elementary that, in the sale of personal property under execution, the property must be pointed out to the bidders and specifically designated, and it must not be left to any future act to ascertain what property was actually sold.[98]

c. Sale of Less Than Whole Interest. A sale under execution is not void merely because the officer sells a smaller interest in the property than the execution defendant really owns.[99]

d. Excessive Sale. A sale, under execution, by an officer, of more property than is sufficient for the satisfaction of a judgment and execution is void.[1] However, where the amount of property sold in excess is not appreciable, the sale will not be avoided on that account.[2]

e. Rents and Profits. Under some statutes the fee simple of real estate cannot be sold to satisfy an execution until the rents and profits for a term of years stipulated in the statute have been first offered for sale at public auction, and, if such rents and profits do not sell for a sum sufficient to satisfy the execution, then the fee simple may be sold.[3]

f. Lumping Realty and Personalty. It is irregular to sell real and personal estate together, indiscriminately.[4]

g. Sale Under Several Executions. It has been held in several jurisdictions that one sale of real estate may be made to satisfy several executions.[5] However,

Executions governed by different laws.— It has been held in Indiana that where a sheriff has several executions in his hands governed by different laws as to the terms upon which the property levied upon is required to be sold, and it is evident that he cannot possibly comply, at a single sale, with the requisitions of each execution, if the property is divisible he may sell under each execution a sufficient portion for its satisfaction. Harrison v. Stipp, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 455.

Interests of joint owners.— It has been held in Louisiana that a sheriff holding two separate writs of seizure and sale, one directing him to sell the interest of one joint owner, and the other to sell that of the other joint owner, cannot advertise and sell the property as an entirety. Danneel v. Klein, 47 La. Ann. 928, 17 So. 466.

Bledsoe v. Willingham, 62 Ga. 550 (holding that a sheriff cannot legally sell a larger estate than that embraced in his levy, nor can three levies of three separate executions, each against a different defendant, be consolidated so as to make a single act of sale under the whole pass title); Building Assoc. v. Henry, 3 Phila. (Pa.) 34. See Chapman v. Androscoggin R. Co., 54 Me. 160, holding that an equity of redemption cannot be sold upon two or more executions jointly in favor of different creditors.

Sale under junior judgment.— One holding several judgments on land may properly have the land sold under execution to satisfy a junior judgment, notifying the bidders of the existence of the liens of the older judgments. Hardwick v. Jones, 65 Mo. 54.

k. Place of Sale — (I) In General. The general rule is that a failure of the officer to sell under the execution at the place specified in the notice of sale avoids the sale.[10]

(II) Real Estate — (A) County Court-House. By statutory provision in almost every state real estate is to be sold at the door of the court-house of the county in which such land is situate.[11]

(B) Sale in Another County or District. The rule is well established that a sale under execution in one county or judicial district, of property located in another county or district, is at least voidable,[12] and in many cases it has been held to be absolutely void, and open to collateral attack.[13]

And compare Davis v. Collier, 13 Ga. 485, where the parties agreed that the sheriff should sell property at public auction sooner than it could have been sold at law, and it was held that the court had no power to treat the funds so raised as proceeds of an execution sale and distribute the same among the creditors.

An execution sale is a nullity if not made in the manner calculated to bring the best price, unless all the parties interested consent to a sale in some other way. State v. Morgan, 29 N. C. 387, 47 Am. Dec. 329.

Leasehold property.— Under a statute requiring personal property to be sold upon the premises, it was held in Pennsylvania that leasehold property need not be sold upon the premises. Sowers v. Vie, 14 Pa. St. 99.

Sale by consent.— It has been held in Alabama that a sale under execution, by consent of parties, at a place other than that described in the statute, is not void, if there was no intention to defraud, and no other lien on the property at the time of the sale. Cawthorn v. McCraw, 9 Ala. 519.

Where sale was adjourned.— It was held in Tinkom v. Purdy, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 345, that a sale may be adjourned, after it has commenced, to a different place, and if there has been no fraud and the officer has not abused his discretion, he will not be a trespasser, and the sale is valid.

Presumption as to place of sale.— Where there is nothing shown to the contrary, it is to be presumed that a sheriff's sale was made at the court-house door, in the proper county, as required by law, and at the proper hour. Kendrick v. Latham, 25 Fla. 819, 6 So. 871.

Where the location of the court-house is changed, either temporarily or permanently, subsequent to the levy of an execution, it has been held that the sale should take place at the new location, not the old one. Longworthy v. Featherston, 65 Ga. 165; Union Bank v. Smith, 3 La. Ann. 147; Kane v. McCown, 55 Me. 181.

Where there are two courts of coördinate jurisdiction in the same county, it has been held that the sale may take place at the door of either. Anniston Pipe Works v. Williams, 106 Ala. 324, 18 So. 111, 54 Am. St. Rep. 51. In some jurisdictions, however, it has been held that as the federal statutes require sales on executions to conform to the state laws, a sale made by a United States marshal should be made before the door of the county court-house, and such sale, if made before the door of the federal court, is void. Moody v. Moeller, 72 Tex. 635, 10 S. W. 727, 13 Am. St. Rep. 839; Sinclair v. Stanley, 64 Tex. 67. See also Bornemann v. Norris, 47 Fed. 438.

(III) Personal Property[14] — (A) General Rule. The better rule[15] seems to be that where personal property is sold by the sheriff under execution, in the absence of such property from the place of sale, the sale is absolutely invalid.[16] In some jurisdictions an exception has been made to this rule when all the parties interested have consented to the sale taking place in the absence of the property.[17]

(B) Sale at Different Places. Where the character and situation of the property, and the interests of the party require, the officer may, in his sound discretion and in good faith, advertise and sell at different places.[18]

In open view of property.— In some jurisdictions the courts, while recognizing the above rule, have held that where the officer is sufficiently near to the property to be in open view thereof, so that the bidders at the sale can see distinctly what property they are bidding on, it is not necessary for him to be in the actual presence of the property in order to validate the sale thereof. Usage in trade sales.— Where the objection was raised that stereotyped plates, when sold on execution, were not in view of the purchasers, in accordance with the provisions of the statutes, testimony was admissible to show usage in trade sales to sell such plates without inspection, as their value above type metal depended upon the salable character of the work stereotyped. Bruce v. Westervelt, 2 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 440.

under execution shall be made within a fixed period after the levy, or after due notice of sale given, such provisions have usually been held to be mandatory,[19] and a sale made after the expiration of such time conveys no title or right to possession as against the execution debtor. An execution sale cannot take place on Sunday, but it may take place on a non-judicial day, since such a sale is not a judicial act.[20] In some jurisdictions, by statutory provision, sales of land under execution are required to be made on certain designated days of the terms of court of the county in which the land is situate, and a sale made at any other time is invalid.[21] The rule has been laid down in some jurisdictions that within the statutory limitation the time of sale under an execution is a matter within the discretion of the officer, and the sale will not be vacated if ordinary prudence be shown in the exercise of the discretion.[22]

Consent of parties.— It was held in Cawthorn v. McCraw, 9 Ala. 519, that a sale under execution, by consent of the parties, at a time other than that prescribed in the statute is not void, if there was no intention to defraud and no other lien on the property at the time of sale.

Effect of stay.— Under a Tennessee statute land subject to a judgment lien must be sold within a year after judgment recovered, unless prevented by an injunction or a writ of error, or an appeal in the nature of a writ of error, in which case the land may be sold within a year after the judgment shall be affirmed on such proceeding, or the injunction be dissolved, and under this statute it has been held that a stay of execution by writ of error coram nobis and supersedeas come within the saving of the statute. (Tenn.) 38 (holding that a sale of land under execution, made by an officer on the second day of the term of the court to which the execution is returnable, is valid). In Tayloe v. Gaskins, 12 N. C. 295, it was held that a sale made by the sheriff on the first day of the term to which the fieri facias is returnable is good.

Under a Kentucky statute requiring sales of land on execution to be made on the first day of the term of court, it was held that a sale could not be made on any other day without the written consent of both plaintiff and defendant in the execution. Wile v. Sweeny, 2 Duv. 161; Chambers v. Hays, 6 B. Mon. 115. But the consent of defendant will be presumed if he was present at the sale and assisted in making arrangements for it. Continuation of sale.— Under a South Carolina statute, providing that certain sales of land by the sheriff shall be made on the first Monday in each month, "and if the sales commenced on that day, cannot be concluded on the same, they may be finished on the day following," it has been held that a sale made on Tuesday is valid, although there may have been sufficient time to have concluded the sale on Monday. (II) After Death of Judgment Debtor. The weight of reason and authority seem to uphold the rule that a sale under an execution issued and levied in the lifetime of defendant, which is not made until after such defendant's death, is not void.[23]

(III) After Return-Day of Writ. Upon the question as to whether the sheriff has authority to make a sale of real property after the return-day of the writ, there is considerable conflict of authority; one line of cases holding that after the return-day the writ is functus officio, and that the officer has no authority to proceed further thereunder without the issuance of a venditioni exponas.[24] Some of the cases make a distinction between personal property and real property, and hold that since a levy on chattels vests in the sheriff a special property therein, he may sell, after return-day of the writ, without a venditioni exponas, but that in the case of real property a levy gives him neither property nor a right of possession, and therefore the sale of such property, after return of a fieri facias and without a new writ, is without authority and passes no title.[25] Another line of authorities lays down the rule that if property, whether real or personal, is seized under a fieri facias before the return-day of the writ, the officer may proceed to sell at any time afterward without new process.[26]

Where defendant consents.— It was held in Dale v. Medcalf, 9 Pa. St. 108, that a sale under a fieri facias, made by the consent of defendant after the return-day is void against a subsequent purchaser at a sheriff's sale under an encumbrance which would have been discharged by the former sale, had it been valid, and the act of 1845, so far as it professes to validate such sale made in 1840, is unconstitutional. See, however, Pickard v. Peters, 3 Ala. 493, holding that property levied on may be sold after the return-day of the execution by the consent of defendant without a venditioni exponas. In this case, however, there were no other liens upon the property.

(IV) Prior to Time Authorized by Statute — (A) General Rule. A sale of property under execution by an officer prior to the time at which he is authorized by statute to make a sale is invalid.[27]

Particular hour of sale.— It was held in Coxe v. Halsted, 2 N. J. Eq. 311, that a sale of real estate on execution will not be set aside because it is advertised to take place between twelve and five o'clock of the day of sale, without specifying the particular hour, where there was no proof of fraud or unfair practice.

the contrary appears, it will be presumed that an officer making a sale under execution gave all the requisite statutory notices.[30] In some jurisdictions, however, where objection is made to the confirmation of a sale for the want of legal notice, the rule is laid down that the officer must prove that the proper notice was given;[31] likewise, that the burden of proof is upon the party setting up title to land based upon an execution sale, that proper notice of such sale was given.[32]

(II) Necessity of. In many jurisdictions, by statutory enactment, notice in writing is required to be given to defendant in execution of a sale thereunder.[33] The general rule seems to be that failure of the officer to give the notice or notices required by law will render such sale voidable,[34] and under some statutes the effect of failure to give notice is to render the sale void;[35] but in some jurisdictions it is held that the neglect of the officer making a sale to give the notice required by law does not affect the validity of such sale to an innocent purchaser without notice of such omission, as the party aggrieved has his remedy against the officer for any injuries sustained by reason of the neglect.[36]

(III) TIME OF GIVING. Where the statute requires notice to be given to the judgment debtor at a specified time prior to the sale,[37] or requires such notice to be posted in certain public places[38] during a designated period before the sale, a sale which takes place before the period required by the statute has elapsed is irregular and voidable.[39]

In Michigan, however, the rule has been laid down that where an execution has been levied on detached parcels of land, the sale of the whole in one lot, for one bid, after an offer in parcels has failed to bring bidders, is not allowable, this rule being based on the ground that the owner cannot thus be deprived of the statutory right to redeem any one of the parcels without being compelled to redeem the others. q. Order of Offering For Sale.[61] Where lands subject to a judgment lien have been alienated at different times, they must be sold under execution to satisfy such judgment in the inverse order of the dates of the former sales thereof.[62] Some of the statutes, however, provide that the judgment debtor may direct the order in which different parcels of property levied on shall be sold under execution, and may choose whether his realty or personalty shall be first offered for sale.[63]

r. Terms of Sale. The general rule is that purchasers at an execution sale are bound, as to terms of payment, by the terms announced by the sheriff at the time of the sale.[64] However, a purchaser at an execution sale is not bound by any promise or conditions imposed by the sheriff, which are not imposed by the law.[65]

3. Who May Become Purchasers — a. In General. The general rule is that all persons are permitted to become purchasers at an execution sale, provided they are competent to contract and do not occupy such a relationship with the execution defendant as would prevent them from making their interests antagonistic to his.[66]

Under Iowa Rev. § 2281, providing that a homestead "shall not be sold except to supply a deficiency remaining after exhausting the other property," etc., such a sale was good, notwithstanding one of the tracts sold was the homestead, since the act of the sheriff in offering the separate tracts and receiving no bids therefor was an exhaustion of the other property named in the writ within the meaning of the statute. d. Agent of or Person in Fiduciary Relation to Judgment Debtor. The rule is laid down in some jurisdictions that a purchase at an execution sale, for the use of, or on behalf of, defendant in execution, will render such sale invalid.[69] So the doctrine that a person standing in a fiduciary relation to another will not be permitted, in the management of the property, to derive an undue advantage at the expense of the cestui qui trust, has been applied to execution sales.[70]

e. Co-Defendants. It is a well recognized rule that one of two co-defendants may purchase the property of the other defendant, when sold to satisfy a joint execution against both.[71]

4. Bids[72]— a. General Rule. The sale of property under execution should be made to the highest bidder, and where the officer refuses to receive a bid and sells the property to some other bidder, such bidder may by appropriate proceedings vacate the sale and compel the bidding to be resumed at the point where his bid was rejected.[73]

b. Bids Made in Writing. The officer conducting an execution sale is authorized to receive bids made by letter or other writing, as well as oral bids, provided such written bids are publicly cried, as the other bids are.[74]

c. Conditional Bids. Conditional bids at execution sales are contrary to the policy of the law.[75]

d. Withdrawal of Bid. A bidder at an execution sale has a right to withdraw his bid at any time before the property is struck down to him.[76]

f. Agreements or Combinations Concerning.[79] It is the policy of the courts to discountenance combinations or agreements on the part of purchasers at execution sales, the object and effect of which are to stifle competition, and the courts will deny to any party to such agreement or combination any benefit from the sale and set it aside upon proper motion.[80] However, the above rule does not

Sedgwick, 8 Pa. St. 407, holding that a bid reduced to writing before the sale was concluded was a waiver of prior bids by the same person. See Sparling v. Todd, 27 Ohio St. 521, holding that while an officer may receive bids in writing or through any other medium, provided they come to him as bids at the time of the sale, he cannot receive such bids prior to the sale and then cry them at the sale.

75. Where a bidder imposes conditions to his bid, the bid should be disregarded by the officer conducting the sale. Dewey v. Willoughby, 72 Ill. 250; Isler v. Colgrove, 75 N. C. 334 (holding that the sheriff is not bound to receive a bid from plaintiff in one of several executions claiming priority, made upon condition that the same shall be credited on that execution; he has a right to require the purchase-money to be paid in cash); Faunce v. Sedgwick, 8 Pa. St. 407. See also Fox v. Kline, 85 N. C. 173.

Withdrawal by implication.— Where a bid has been made at a sheriff's sale under execution and the sale adjourned, the bid is withdrawn by implication. Donaldson v. Kerr, 6 Pa. St. 486.

After a bid has been accepted, however, the general rule is that the bidder cannot thereafter withdraw the same and treat the sale as a nullity, except with the consent of the execution creditor and the debtor. Mistake in bid.— Where, at a sale of land upon execution, the judgment creditor's agent by mistake exceeded his instructions by bidding more for the property than he was authorized to pay, it was held that he might withdraw his bid, if done promptly, by paying the costs. Assent of all concerned.—In Maffet v. Ijams, 103 Pa. St. 266, it was held that while ordinarily an agreement not to bid at a sheriff's sale, if in fraud of the execution defendant apply to an association or combination of bidders formed for honest and proper purposes.[81]

g. Representations or Conduct Concerning. Since all execution sales should be open to free and full competition, the rule is universally recognized that where the purchaser does any act or makes any false representation, the effect of which is to destroy such competition and stifle bids, by reason of which the property sells at an undervalue, the sale will be invalid.[82] However, if a party has an interest in property about to be sold under execution, or a valid claim against it, or one believed to be valid, it is not improper for him to announce such interest or claim before the sale takes place, and such statement will not estop him from becoming a purchaser of the property nor invalidate the sale.[83]

5. Payment of Purchase-Money — a. General Rule. In the absence of express statutory provision, an officer has no legal right to sell on credit property taken on execution, unless by the agreement of the parties or the direction of the judgment creditor, and if he does so it is at his own risk against loss from the credit given.[84]

b. Where Judgment Creditor Is Purchaser. The rule is laid down in some jurisdictions that where the judgment creditor becomes a purchaser at the execution sale, the officer should, at the direction of such judgment creditor, credit the amount of his debt upon the execution, if the costs of the sale are paid.[85] Where, however, there are other liens on the property of equal dignity with the lien of the judgment creditor, the officer may require him to pay over the purchase-

But where he elects to avoid the sale on account of the non-payment of the purchase-money, a resale of the property becomes indispensable.[90]

f. Liability on Contract of Purchase — (I) General Rule. A purchaser at a sheriff's sale who refuses to comply with his contract of purchase is liable to an action by the sheriff, and the sheriff's right to recover the full price cannot be controverted if he at the time of the trial has the ability to deliver the property, or if it has been previously placed at the disposal of the purchaser by a tender thereof.[91] However, where the judgment creditor is the purchaser, the officer

(II) Loss on Resale — (A) General Rule. Where the sheriff resells property which the purchaser at the first sale has refused or neglected to pay for, there is an implied contract by the first purchaser to pay the difference which is thus ascertained between his bid and the price realized at the subsequent sale.[93]

(B) Notice of Resale. The rule has been laid down in several jurisdictions that a purchaser at an execution sale who refuses to complete the sale by the payment of his bid cannot be held liable for loss on a resale of such property, unless notice is given to him of such resale and that he will be held liable.[94] In many jurisdictions, however, where the statutes provide that execution sales shall take place between specified hours of the day, where a bidder refuses or fails, after demand, to make payment, a resale may be made on the same day within those hours and without any additional notice to the first purchaser.[95] absence of fraud,[3] a court of equity cannot relieve a purchaser at a judicial sale on the ground that title fails.[4]

(c) Fraud or Mutual Mistake. However, notwithstanding the rule of caveat emptor, the purchaser at an execution sale will be protected from paying the purchase-price where he was induced to purchase through the misrepresentations of the judgment creditor or debtor, even though he might have ascertained their falsity by the examination of the public records.[5] Likewise where a plain mistake, not as to the title, but as to the property levied on and sold, has been made by the sheriff, the execution defendant, and the purchaser, where the mistake materially affects the value of the property actually sold, and the purchaser applies to have the sale set aside before the money has been actually paid he is entitled in equity to such relief.[6]

(d) Defects in Proceedings Prior to Sale. In an action by the sheriff to recover the price bid by a purchaser at an execution sale, or to recover the difference between his bid and the amount realized at a resale of the property, defects in the proceeding, prior to the sale, such as in the levy,[7] or in the judgment, where the judgment is not void, cannot be urged in defense.[8]

(iv) Parties.[9] The general rule is that whether the action against the purchaser at an execution sale be for the whole purchase-price, or for the deficiency resulting from a resale only, it should be brought in the name of the officer conducting the sale;[10] many of the decisions going the length of holding that the

b. Form and Contents.[20] This certificate should recite the parties to the action, the date and amount of judgment, a description of the property sold, the date of the sale and amount bid, the name of the purchaser, and the redemption period.[21] The court which issued the fieri facias will upon motion on a proper showing compel the sheriff to correct an error or omission in a certificate of sale of lands made by him.[22]

9. Confirmation — a. In General. While, in a majority of the United States, no order of confirmation of an execution sale is necessary,[23] yet in several jurisdictions, by statutory enactment, the proceedings of the officer conducting an execution sale are required to be reported to the court from whence the writ under which the officer acted emanated, for the confirmation or disapproval of the sale, and under such statutes an execution sale is not complete until it has been confirmed by the court.[24] at the sale is set forth. It is the evidence of a sale whereby, subject to the right of redemption and of possession in the judgment debtor for the time allowed therefor, the entire equitable title is conditionally vested in the purchaser, subject to be defeated by a redemption, but if not so redeemed, the certificate is evidence of his right to a deed which shall vest in him the dry legal title which remained in the judgment debtor." b. Motion For. The motion for the confirmation of the sale may be made at any time after the sheriff has made his return, by any person interested therein, or such sale may be confirmed by the court ex mero motu, without the consent of the sheriff.[25]

c. Determination of Motion. Upon the hearing of the motion by the court, it should either confirm or set aside the sale, but should not modify its terms;[26] and under some statutes, on such hearing, the court cannot look beyond the return of the officer, and if such return on its face shows that the proceedings were regular, it is the duty of the court to confirm the sale.[27]

d. Conclusiveness and Effect of Order—(i) General Rule. Since the order of confirmation of an execution sale is merely an adjudication that the proceedings of the officer in conducting the sale, as they appear of record, are regular, and a direction to the sheriff to complete the sale, such order is not res judicata in an action to recover the land founded on such sale so as to preclude the introduction of evidence to show fraud in the conduct of the sale, or that it was based on a void judgment or execution.[28]

(II) CURE OF IRREGULARITIES. The rule has been laid down in some jurisdictions that the confirmation of an execution sale of real estate cures all defects and irregularities in the proceedings relating thereto, where the court making the order is one of competent jurisdiction, and such order cannot be collaterally attacked.[29]

(B) Where Judgment Is Dormant or Void. An execution debtor whose property is sold under a dormant or void judgment is not estopped from asserting title to the property, as against the holder of a sheriff's deed, merely because he failed to take steps to arrest the sale under such dormant or void judgment.[44]

(III) Execution Creditor. When not transcending the mandate of his writ, the sheriff may be considered in some degree as the judgment creditor's agent, and the latter is as a rule estopped from assailing the validity of a sale made by virtue of such writ.[45] Thus, where the execution creditor receives from the sheriff the proceeds of an execution sale, with full knowledge of the manner of its conduct, and without making any objection to the sale, he is thereafter estopped from attacking its validity.[46]

(IV) Purchaser. A purchaser at an execution sale cannot have the sale set aside on the ground that the title to the property sold was in himself or in a third person,[47] and where he has executed a sale bond, he is estopped from urging any informalities in the sale.[48]

under execution may by his acts or his acquiescence in the sale be estopped from attacking its validity.[49]

(vi) Surety. A surety on a stay of execution is not estopped to show that the judgment recited is a nullity;[50] and a surety on a delivery bond which merely binds the obligor to have the property or its value forthcoming for the satisfaction of the judgment is not estopped to assert a right in himself to the property and show that it should not be used to satisfy the judgment.[51]

2. Grounds — a. In General. Where the motion is made in due season, and by a proper party, a sale of property under execution will be set aside if there has been a mistake, irregularity, or fraud in the conduct thereof, to the prejudice of either party to the action or a third person.[52]

a misdescription, land is sold other than that levied upon, such sale will be set aside at the instance of the purchaser upon motion, or by bill in equity.[55]

c. Attack on Judgment. The fact that a judgment is liable to reversal on error does not invalidate an execution sale thereunder made while the judgment is still in force, and the filing of a bill to set aside such judgment is no ground for a motion to set the sale aside.[56]

d Advance on Bid. Where a sale of property by the sheriff is in all respects fairly and legally made, and an offer of an increased bid is made in case a resale is offered, the better rule is that it is a matter of discretion with the court to which the offer is made to accept it or not, and unless an abuse of such discretion is fairly shown an appellate court has no right to interfere.[57]

e. Defects or Irregularities in Execution or Levy. The courts as a rule will refuse a motion to set aside an execution sale for mere irregularities, as shown by the record, in the execution or levy, where the proceedings were not fraudulent or void, and the court rendering the judgment had jurisdiction over the parties and the subject-matter, particularly where no injury was shown to any of the parties interested.[58] Where, however, the writ under which the levy is made is so defective as to render it void,[59] as for instance, where the description of the land levied on is so indefinite that it cannot be located,[60] or where there is a failure to substantially follow the provisions of the statute in the service of the writ, the sale is void and will be set aside upon proper proceedings.[61]

f. Irregularities or Misconduct Affecting Sale — (i) In General. The rule is well recognized that a court of law is competent to control the acts of its officers in the execution of its process, and may, when satisfied that the officer, in the conduct of an execution sale, has been guilty of irregularities, to the injury of any party having an interest in the action, set such sale aside.[62] However, technical irregularities in a sale which are not shown to have been prejudicial to any of the parties in interest will not furnish sufficient ground for setting it aside. This is especially true where property was purchased by a stranger to the action without notice of any irregularities.[63]

However, where it appears that no benefit would have resulted from a division of the property, a sale en masse will not per se invalidate the sale.[67]

(iv) Want or Inadequacy of Notice. In almost every jurisdiction failure by the officer to give the proper notice of sale is sufficient ground for setting it aside where the motion is made by an interested party in due season.[68] Likewise the insufficiency of the notice, such as misdescription of the property or failure to advertise for the statutory period, has been held sufficient to warrant the vacation of the sale.[69]

g. Inadequacy of Price — (i) General Rule. The rule is well settled that the mere inadequacy of the price at which property is sold at an execution sale will not of itself, in the absence of any irregularities in the conduct of the sale, warrant the court in setting such sale aside; particularly after the property has come into the hands of an innocent purchaser without notice of any irregularities.[70] Some of the courts, however, have laid down the rule that, where the

(II) Appraised Value as Standard. In some jurisdictions the statutes relating to execution sales require that property sold on execution shall bring a designated proportion of its appraised value, exclusive of liens and encumbrances, and where property is sold under these statutes for less than such designated proportion of its appraised value, the sale may be vacated by proper proceedings.[72]

h. Inadequacy of Price Connected With Irregularities or Fraud. The rule is recognized in a majority of jurisdictions that to avoid an execution sale as against an innocent purchaser, even where the price paid is inadequate, knowledge of the vice in the sale or some misconduct traceable to him must be shown, and while the courts will often seize upon a slight circumstance to add to the weight of inadequacy of price to turn the scale, yet it must be shown that such purchaser is in some measure responsible for it.[73] Various circumstances have been seized upon by the courts to grant relief where there has been substantial inadequacy of price at an execution sale, and the additional circumstances need not be sufficient per se to authorize the sale to be set aside, if they tend to show that an unfair advantage was taken, or that the sale was conducted in a manner prejudicial to the rights or interests of the parties interested; for while inadequacy of price will not of itself be sufficient, yet when coupled with other circumstances tending to prove fraud, it becomes controlling and conclusive evidence, and justifies interference by the courts to prevent the consummation of an inequitable result.[74] Thus any irregularity on the part of the officer conducting the

(II) Time Within Which to Move — (A) In General. In the absence of statute,[85] there is no inflexible rule as to the time within which a motion to set aside and vacate a sale under execution must be made, the general rule being that there must be promptness of action and no unreasonable delay, which is to be determined by the particular circumstances of each case; ordinarily the proceeding is to be regarded as equitable in its nature, and the question of laches, when involved, is to be determined on equitable principles.[86] In some jurisdic-

Res adjudicata.— It has been held in Pennsylvania that an execution defendant who has had his day in court and his objections to the sale considered and disposed of on a motion to restrain the sheriff from making the sale cannot be heard afterward on the same grounds on a motion to set aside the sale. Where purchaser who had failed to take sheriff's deed applied to the court twelve years afterward for an order directing the person then holding the office of sheriff to make the deed, it was held that defendant in execution or his heirs at law had the right to tions the rule is laid down that defendant waives all irregularities in the execution sale, unless within the statutory period allowed for redemption he moves to have the sale set aside.[87]

(B) After Confirmation or Execution of Deed. The rule has been laid down in several jurisdictions[88] that fraud or mistake in the conduct of an execution sale furnishes sufficient ground for setting it aside, even after the confirmation thereof, or after the sheriff has executed the deed of conveyance to the purchaser.[89]

(III) Notice of Motion. The court cannot entertain a motion to set aside a sale under execution if notice is not given to all the parties interested,[90] unless such notice is waived by appearance.[91]

b. Bill In Equity[92] — (I) When Bill Will Lie. The rule is well recognized that a bill in equity will not lie to set aside an execution sale where the party seeking the aid of equity has a speedy and adequate remedy at law; but, where the grounds upon which the sale is sought to be vacated are not apparent from an inspection of the proceedings, such as a combination to suppress bidding or any other species of fraud,[93] or for any misconduct or illegality on the part of the

In Missouri the rule is laid down that a motion to set aside a sale under execution is too late if made after the term at which the sale occurred has passed, the remedy then being by bill in equity. Force v. Van Patton, 149 Mo. 446, 50 S. W. 906; Downing v. Still, 43 Mo. 309; Nelson v. Brown, 23 Mo. 13.

88. The contrary rule, however, prevails in some jurisdictions where it has been held that after the court has approved the sale of property under execution, and the sheriff's deed has been acknowledged and delivered to the purchaser, it cannot, on motion or otherwise, set aside the sale and divest the title of the purchaser on the ground of fraud, accident, or mistake, and that the proper remedy in such case is an action of ejectment or a bill in equity. advertisement, and appraisement of the property are admissible in evidence for the party seeking to vacate the sale.[9]

(11) Burden of Proof. The burden of proof is upon the party making the motion or filing the bill in equity to vacate an execution sale, to show the irregularities or fraud relied upon.[10]

f. Decision. The decision upon a motion to set aside an execution sale rests in the discretion of the court and is not conclusive on the ultimate rights of the parties claiming the property.[11]

5. Effect of Vacating Sale. Where an execution sale is vacated for an irregularity or fraud in the conduct thereof, as a general rule the judgment creditor should be restored to his full judgment,[12] the purchaser should be refunded the purchase-price,[13] and the execution debtor restored to his title and to possession of the property.[14]

6. Collateral Attack on Sale — a. General Rule. Where the court has jurisdiction of the case and the parties, and the power to issue a venditioni exponas, a sale made thereunder, and a deed properly acknowledged by the sheriff cannot be set aside in a collateral action,[15] either for irregularities occurring before the sale,[16]

7. Presumption of Validity. The courts will as a general rule indulge all presumptions in favor of the regularity of an execution sale, and of the judgment, execution, and levy upon which it was founded;[20] and the execution purchaser is not affected by matters subsequent to the sale arising between parties to the judgment to which he is a stranger.[21]

C. Title and Rights of Purchaser[22]— 1. Actions to Try or Confirm Title — a. In General. In almost every jurisdiction the statutes authorize an execution purchaser to maintain an action at law or a bill in equity to quiet title, whether he be in or out of possession of the property.[23]

b. What It Is Necessary to Prove. In the appropriate action by a purchaser at an execution sale to try the title to property, it is necessary for him to show

h. Undivided Interests. The rule is well recognized that where personal property owned by two or more persons is sold on execution against one of them only, the purchaser at the execution sale takes only the interest which the judgment debtor had in such property, and becomes a tenant in common with the other owners thereof.[51]

i. Rights Passing as Incidents. The general rule is that upon the sale of property on execution, all the rights and privileges necessary to the full and free enjoyment of the same pass as incidents thereto.[52] Under this rule it has been held that the purchaser at an execution sale has the right to affirm or disaffirm the lease of property;[53] is entitled to the benefit of covenants of warranty running with the land,[54] and also the right of action to set aside a previous fraudulent conveyance of the property.[55] However, the right of action for damages to the property or for waste accruing prior to his acquisition of the title,[56] the right to mortgage notes,[57] the right to a contract for pasturage,[58] the right to the franchise of a corporation,[59] or the right to collateral agreements made between the owner of stock sold and the company issuing the same,[60] do not pass as incidents of the execution sale.

j. Subsequently Acquired Title. A legal title subsequently acquired by the judgment debtor cannot inure to the benefit of the purchaser of the equitable title at the execution sale.[61] However the rule has been laid down in some jurisdictions that where a judgment debtor holding land under a land-office certificate, which is sold under execution against him, thereafter acquires a patent for such land, the perfected title will inure to the benefit of the execution purchaser and cannot be set up adversely to him.[62]

k. Time at Which Title Vests. A purchaser of land sold on execution acquires by his purchase no more than a lien upon the land for the amount of his bid until the termination of the time within which the judgment debtor is entitled to redeem;[63] and, where the statute requires that the sale shall be confirmed by the court, title does not vest in the purchaser until after such confirmation.[64]

3. Prior Liens or Encumbrances[65] — a. In General. jurisdiction, however, in order that the mortgage may continue as a subsisting lien upon the property after its sale under a junior execution, such mortgage must be a prior lien to all other liens, save other mortgages, ground-rents, and purchase-money due to the commonwealth.[70]

(II) Unrecorded Mortgages. In jurisdictions, however, requiring the recording of mortgages, where a mortgage is not recorded within the time prescribed by the statute, a judgment against the mortgagor obtained before the foreclosure by a judgment creditor without notice of the mortgage, takes priority thereof, and an execution sale under such judgment will extinguish the lien of the mortgage.[71]

c. Judgment Liens. Prior to the Pennsylvania act of April 6, 1830, a sheriff's sale of land extinguished prior mortgages, and it was not in the power of the sheriff, purchaser, or parties to keep them alive as mortgages, so as to affect third persons subsequently buying, by any memorandum in the conditions of the sale or bargain among themselves, of which such subsequent purchaser had notice. d. Definition of Bona Fides. In order to constitute a purchaser at an execution sale a bona fide purchaser, he must purchase for a valuable consideration and without notice, actual or constructive, of any equities outstanding against the property, or of any irregularities in the proceedings which would vitiate the sale.[83]

e. Who Are Purchasers For Value. A purchaser at an execution sale who has not paid the amount of his bid is not entitled to protection against prior equities of which he had no notice, or to be considered a bona fide purchaser.[84] Likewise the rule has been laid down that an execution creditor who applies his bid for the property sold on execution to the satisfaction of his judgment is not a purchaser for a valuable consideration.[85]

f. Where Judgment Is Satisfied Prior to Sale. The courts seem to be divided upon the question as to the effect upon the title of a bona fide purchaser at an execution sale of the satisfaction of the judgment prior to the sale of the property thereunder; in some jurisdictions the rule is laid down that a bona fide purchaser will acquire a good title even though the execution be paid off or the judgment satisfied before sale;[86] but the better doctrine seems to be that the satisfaction of the judgment prior to an execution sale of property thereunder will render such sale void, and the purchaser will take no title thereunder, even though he bought in good faith and without notice.[87]

g. Where Title Is Out of Debtor. Where the judgment debtor alienates property prior to the attachment of the lien of a judgment against him, the purchaser of such property at an execution sale under such judgment acquires no title, even though he purchased in good faith and without notice of such prior alienation.[88]

h. Vendee of Execution Purchaser. The general rule is that a bona fide purchaser from the sheriff's vendee is not affected by equities which might be set up against the property in the hands of such vendee.[89]

sale in the same position as the execution debtor is merely that which is sufficient to put such person on inquiry leading to the whole truth, and it is not necessary that the notice should contain full, entire, and circumstantial information of every fact which would affect the bona fides of the purchaser and which it might be material for him to know.[91]

(II) Liens, Encumbrances, and Equities. The same rule applies to liens and encumbrances on and equities outstanding against property sold on execution, as in the case of irregularities and defects in the judgment, execution, and sale; and the purchaser at the execution sale takes the property subject to all such liens, encumbrances, and equities which could be enforced against the property in the hands of the judgment debtor of which he has actual or constructive notice.[92]

(III) Where Judgment Creditor Is Without Notice. It has been held in some jurisdictions that where the judgment creditor was without notice of the irregularities in the proceedings, or of liens or equities against the property, the fact that the purchaser at the execution sale had notice of such irregularities or of such liens or equities against the property would not affect his title and he

j. Judgment Creditor as Purchaser — (i) General Rule. Where the judgment creditor becomes a purchaser at an execution sale, he of course takes subject to all equities and is affected by all irregularities of which he had either actual or constructive notice.[97] However, the courts are divided upon the question as to whether the judgment creditor who purchases at his own sale is affected by irregularities, liens, and equities of which he had no actual or constructive notice. According to the better doctrine, he is chargeable with notice of all irregularities in the judgment, execution, and sale, and of all liens upon and equities subsisting against the property in the hands of the judgment debtor,[98] thus, under this line of decisions it has been held that a sale to an execution plaintiff will be rendered invalid by the reversal of the judgment under which the sale took place.[99] Yet

Failure to file account.— It was held in Ashe v. Drennis, 2 Bay (S. C.) 329, that

(II) Illustration of Rule. Where the statute provides that execution shall issue within a designated period after the rendition of judgment, its issuance after the expiration of such period without a revival by scire facias renders it voidable merely, and a sale thereunder will give a valid title to the purchaser.[6] Nor will any mere irregularity in the indorsement of the writ, or clerical error in its recitals, which render it voidable only, invalidate the title of a bona fide purchaser at a sale thereunder.[7] So the general rule is that the title of a purchaser of property at an execution sale is not affected by irregularities in the levy with which he was not connected, such as failure of the officer to make a seizure of the property in the mode or by the steps prescribed by statute,[8] or by the failure of an officer to make a demand of payment before levying the execution,[9] although in some jurisdictions the rule is that there must be a valid levy as prescribed by statute in order to support the sheriff's deed, and that where such statutory levy is wanting the execution purchaser acquires no title.[10]

(III) Exception to Rule. However, while the general rule is that a bona fide purchaser at an execution sale is not chargeable with notice of mere irregularities in the suit,[11] yet if there be jurisdictional or other defects rendering the bona fide purchasers at execution sales are not affected by the neglect of the administrator of the estate against which the execution ran, to file an account and plea of plene administravit.

Retention of property by judgment debtor. — It was held in Matteucci v. Whelan, 123 Cal. 312, 55 Pac. 99, 66 Am. St. Rep. 60, that Cal. Civ. Code, § 3440, making void sales of chattels against the seller's creditors where there is no continued change of possession does not apply to a purchase at an execution sale made by a stranger to the proceedings, in view of Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 698, providing that an execution sale conveys to the purchaser all the rights which the debtor had.

In Louisiana the rule has been laid down that the failure to give the statutory notice of an execution sale will avoid such sale even as to a bona fide purchaser. where the execution plaintiff is the purchaser, the vacation or reversal of the judgment operates to vacate the sale as between the parties.[18]

7. Effect of Modification of Judgment. In some jurisdictions where the amount of the judgment is on appeal, the purchaser's title to the property is not affected thereby, even though he be the judgment creditor, and he is only bound to restore to the execution debtor the difference between the original judgment and the judgment as modified;[19] and if there is no order for restitution, where such order is provided for by statute, the purchaser's title is not affected by the modification of the judgment.[20]

8. Right to Possession — a. General Rule — (i) Personal Property. The general rule is that the purchaser of personal property at an execution sale who has complied with the terms of the sale and has paid the amount of his bid is entitled to immediate possession of the property purchased.[21]

(ii) Real Property. Since purchasers at execution sales succeed to the rights of the execution defendant, in the absence of statutes allowing redemption by him, they become entitled to the possession of the property purchased, immediately upon the perfection of their title by compliance with the terms of the sale, provided defendant was entitled to such possession; and in jurisdictions allowing the execution debtor a designated period in which to redeem the property, the purchaser becomes entitled to possession, immediately upon the expiration of the

such property may recover possession thereof from the mortgagor or any one claiming under him.[26]

(II) Mortgagee in Possession. Where, however, the mortgagee is in possession of the property, or has a right to the possession by reason of default in the mortgage, the execution purchaser cannot maintain ejectment, or any other action for the recovery of the property, until he has complied with the terms of the mortgage.[27]

e. Taking Summary Possession. The general rule is that a purchaser at an execution sale, upon compliance with the terms of the sale, and under the redemption statutes, where his title becomes absolute by the expiration of the redemption period, may take possession of the property purchased whenever he can do so peaceably, as where the property is in the actual possession of no one at the time, and he can take possession without any breach of the peace; but he is never justified in taking forcible possession, and in such case it is necessary for him to resort to ejectment or other appropriate action.[28] The officer conducting the sale is sometimes authorized by statute to evict defendant, his heirs, or their tenants or assignees after the judgment, when they are in possession of the property.[29]

f. Remedies For Recovery — (I) Form of Action. In the absence of express statutory provision, the proper remedy of a purchaser of the legal title of land sold under execution to secure possession thereof is ejectment,[30] or forcible entry

Stranger to record in possession.— It has been held in Georgia that a purchaser of land at an execution sale cannot move orally and without notice for an order directing the eviction from the land of one who is a stranger to the record and the case in which the sale was made, and who does not appear to be liable to eviction under Ga. served upon the parties entitled thereto a designated period of time prior to the institution of proceedings.[48]

(v) Parties.[49] The general rule is that under statutes allowing summary proceedings for the recovery of the possession of property sold under execution, or in real actions therefor, such proceedings or action may be maintained by the judgment creditor or any person claiming under him;[50] and may be maintained against the judgment debtor in possession, his representatives, and parties in possession under him, who took possession subsequent to the lien of the judgment.[51]

(vi) Pleading.[52] In an action or summary proceeding to recover possession of land purchased at an execution sale, plaintiff should in his complaint or petition describe with sufficient certainty the property claimed to have been purchased by him; should allege that the same was sold by the sheriff or other officer authorized by law to sell the same, that he purchased such property at said sale and paid the purchase-money, and received the officer's deed therefor, and that defendant in execution or one claiming under him is in possession thereof.[53]

(vii) Evidence[54] — (a) Admissibility. In an action to recover possession of property sold on execution which had previously been conveyed by the judgment debtor, evidence that such conveyance was fraudulent and void is admissible.[55] The return of the sheriff is admissible to show the sale as between parties and privies.[56] Under the Pennsylvania statute,[57] the only question at issue before the trial court is the title averred by defendant in his affidavit, and all evidence inconsistent therewith should be rejected.[58]

(b) Sufficiency. The general rule is that in an action of ejectment, or a kindred action, for the recovery of the property purchased at an execution sale, it is sufficient for the purchaser or a party claiming under him to show a valid judgment, execution, and sale, which latter may be done either by a sheriff's deed or his return.[59] In some jurisdictions plaintiff is required to show in addition that

(VIII) Writ of Possession[61]—(A) In General. In many jurisdictions by statutory provision, the purchaser of property at an execution sale, upon proper notice to the party in possession, is entitled to a writ by virtue of which the officer is commanded to place the purchaser in possession of such property. This writ is now generally designated as a writ of possession.[62]

(B) Hearing of Motion For. Upon a hearing of a motion for a writ of possession, all questions of fact should be submitted to a jury for decision,[63] and where allowed by statute, damages for the wrongful detention of the property are properly included in their verdict.[64]

9. Rents and Profits — a. In General. The common-law rule that a purchaser of land buys all that is growing on or issuing out of it, belonging to the vendor, unless specially exempted, including rent in money or in kind, accruing out of an unexpired term, applies also to land sold at an execution sale. But in a majority of jurisdictions, by statute or judicial construction, the purchaser becomes entitled to such rents and profits only which accrue after the execution and delivery of his deed.[65] In several jurisdictions, however, by statutory provision, the purchaser

In Kentucky it has been held that a recovery cannot be had against an adverse claimant, for the possession of property purchased at an execution sale on exhibition of the sheriff's deed alone, without the judgment and execution, since such judgment and execution are the officer's authority for selling. Dunn v. Meriwether, 1 A. K. Marsh. 158. of land at an execution sale is entitled to the rents and profits accruing from the date of sale, whether a deed has been executed or not.[66]

b. During Redemption. In jurisdictions where the judgment debtor is allowed a designated period in which to redeem his property from the execution sale, the statutes are not uniform in regard to the disposition of the rents and profits during the redemption period. In some jurisdictions a purchaser may recover the rents and profits from the party in possession, accruing between the sale and the expiration of the redemption period, even where the property is redeemed at the expiration of that period,[67] while in others the execution purchaser is given a right of action for the rents and profits during the redemption period against the judgment debtor only, and then only in case he fails to redeem at the expiration been applied where the purchaser was guilty of fraud or collusion in the purchase, and the judgment debtor in such case is not required to tender the purchase-money as a condition of the restitution of the property.[79]

(II) Action Against Judgment Creditor. In some jurisdictions where the debtor had no title to the property sold, the purchaser at the execution sale has no cause of action against the judgment creditor for the purchase-price, but his only remedy is against the judgment debtor.[80] In other jurisdictions, however, by judicial construction or express statutory enactment, a bona fide purchaser is given a cause of action against the execution creditor as well as the judgment debtor in case of failure of title;[81] although in at least one jurisdiction he must exhaust his remedy against the judgment debtor before being allowed to proceed against the judgment creditor.[82]

c. Subrogation[83] to Rights of Lien Creditors. The better doctrine seems to be that a purchaser at a void execution sale, who has in good faith paid off previous valid liens, or whose money, paid for the purchase-price, has been used to pay the debts of the estate, is entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the creditors so paid off.[84]

d. Revival of Original Judgment. In several jurisdictions it is provided by statute that where a purchaser of property at an execution sale, or his successor in interest, fails to recover possession, in consequence of irregularity in proceedings, or because the property sold was not subject to execution and sale, the court having jurisdiction thereof must after notice, and on motion of such party in interest, revive the original judgment in the name of the petitioner for the amount paid by such purchaser at the sale.[85]

e. Compensation For Improvements.[86] Where the owner of property seeks aid in a court of equity against a bona fide holder of an invalid title under a void execution sale, equitable relief will not be granted except upon the terms of compensation for improvements made on the premises in ignorance or mistake as to the title.[87]

12. Liability of Purchasers — a. In General. Since an officer is not protected by process where he goes beyond the commands thereof and sells property not included in his writ, such sale will give the purchaser no right thereto, and the retention of possession and ownership by such person will render him liable in an appropriate action to the owner of the property.[88] The purchaser is likewise bound by any agreements of the judgment debtor made prior to the sale with third parties, affecting the property which are tantamount to a lien thereon.[89] However, an execution purchaser who pays the full amount of his bid[90] is not bound to look to the application of the purchase-money, and is not liable in an action by parties entitled to a portion of the price;[91] nor is he responsible for any irregularity of the officer by which the purchaser from the execution debtor was deprived of notice of the levy and lien.[92]

b. Liens and Encumbrances. A purchaser at an execution sale is not personally liable for a mortgage or other subsisting lien upon the property, subject to which, and not for the payment of which, the property is sold.[93]

c. Rents, Profits, and Improvements.[94] Where for any reason an execution sale is subsequently set aside, the general rule is that the execution purchaser is liable in an action by the judgment debtor, or the owner of the property, for the rents and profits accruing while the property was in his possession;[95] such pur-

13. Title and Rights of Purchaser's Vendee — a. General Rule. The vendee of a purchaser at an execution sale takes all the right and title acquired by his vendor at such sale, and where the purchaser has not received the sheriff's deed at the time of the sale or assignment, the deed afterward received by such vendee perfects his title.[99] However, the purchaser's vendee acquires no better

An equitable assignee of all an execution purchaser's title in land after time for redemption has expired has been held in Michigan to be entitled in equity to a decree for a deed from the sheriff and for possession of the land, but not for a release from the execution debtor in possession, nor for mesne title than such purchaser, and a claimant of the property may set up the same defenses or equities against such vendee as he might against the purchaser.[1]

b. Assignee of Certificate of Sale. A sheriff's certificate of sale issued to the purchaser at an execution sale is assignable, and such assignment authorizes the sheriff to make a deed to the property to the assignee, who thereby acquires all the rights and remedies of his assignor in such property.[2] And it has been held in some cases that title may pass by such a defective assignment of the certificate of sale as would not compel the officer to execute a deed to the assignee, and if he voluntarily does so the deed is good.[3] The assignee of a certificate of sale does not, however, acquire any greater rights than his assignor, and the same defenses and equities subsist against the certificate in his hands as in the hands of his assignor.[4] Upon failure of title the assignee has a cause of action against his assignor for the consideration paid for the assignment.[5]

b. Retroactive Operation. Where statutes give the right of redemption on execution sales or change the mode of procedure or the redemption period, the better doctrine is that such statutes have no retroactive effect.[7]

2. Sale En Masse and Redemption in Part — a. General Rule. Under the redemption statutes the general rule is that where different parcels of land are sold en masse they must be redeemed en masse and cannot be redeemed in separate parcels.[8]

b. Lands Held in Common. The statutes now usually provide that, where lands held in common are sold under execution, the judgment creditor of one of the joint owners may redeem the interest of his debtor without redeeming the whole tract of land sold.[9]

3. Agreements as to. Where a purchaser at an execution sale enters into an agreement with the judgment debtor to allow him to redeem the property within a specified period after the expiration of the statutory right to redeem, upon the payment of the purchase-price, with interests and charges, equity will decree the execution of such agreement, upon the fulfilment of his part thereof by the judgment debtor;[10] and it has been held in some jurisdictions that such agree-

states, by statutory provision, a judgment debtor may redeem property sold on execution against him, by compliance with such statutory provisions within the time designated therein.[15] However, the statutes giving the judgment debtor the right to redemption do not make actual ownership at the time of sale or redemption a condition precedent, the right following the person and not the land and continuing for the period prescribed by the statute, although the debtor meanwhile may have parted with his title.[16] Under some statutes defendant's right to redeem his property sold under an execution sale within the statutory period is lost in case he appeals or causes the execution to be stayed.[17]

b. Method of Computation. The general rule is that where the statute gives the right of redemption within one year, or within a certain number of days, from the day of sale, the day of the sale is to be excluded from the computation.[31] Under statutes giving a certain number of months within which redemption may be made, calendar and not lunar months are intended.[32] Where the last day of redemption falls on a holiday, redemption may be made on the following secular day.[33]

c. After Expiration of Redemption Period. Where, by reason of irregularities and fraudulent conduct on the part of the officer conducting the sale, or of other parties to the proceedings, the judgment debtor has been prevented from exercising his rights during the redemption period, or where through no fault of his own he had no notice of the sale in time to allow him to redeem within the period,[34] equity in its discretion will grant relief on a proper bill, and allow the judgment debtor to redeem after the expiration of the redemption period. In several jurisdictions, however, it has been held that a party is not entitled to redemption after the expiration of the statutory period, merely on the ground that he had no actual notice of the sale or that he was mistaken as to the time when the right of redemption expired.[35] The statutory right to redeem property from an execution sale within the prescribed period cannot be extended by any act of the party claiming that right, such as a suit to redeem or the like.[36]

6. Amount Required to Redeem — a. In General. The various redemption statutes usually provide that the parties accorded the right to redeem may do so upon the payment of the amount of the bid on the original purchase, together with a certain percentage fixed by the statute in the way of interest and charges, this percentage varying in the different states.[37] In several jurisdictions the redemption statutes provide that where the purchaser is a bona fide judgment creditor, and within a stipulated time after the sale makes an advance on his bid, not exceeding the amount of his judgment, he can then hold the property subject to redemption at the price bid, plus such advance, just as if he had bid the whole sum at the time of the sale.[38]

b. By Judgment Debtor. Where the judgment debtor seeks to redeem property which has been bid in and purchased at an execution sale, he may do so by paying the purchaser the amount of his bid, plus the statutory percentage,[39]

Permanent improvements.—Under Ala. Code, § 1889, a redeeming debtor must pay the party in possession the value of all permanent improvements, and, in case of disagree-and other lawful charges.[40] He need not, however, pay any other liens upon the property held by the purchaser.[41]

c. By Judgment Creditor. Where, however, a subsequent judgment creditor or other lienor having the statutory right to redeem seeks to redeem the property, he is required to pay all the liens of the owner of the certificate of sale paramount to the lien under which he seeks to redeem.[42] He is not, however, required to pay off junior liens.[43]

7. Tender and Payment[44] — a. Sufficiency — (i) In General. A party attempting to redeem property from an execution sale must make tender of the whole amount required by the statute to effect such redemption, and the payment of a less sum than that fixed by the statute is fatal to the proceedings; and the mistake being one of law does not afford ground for equitable relief upon the tender of the amount sufficient to cover the deficit.[45] Where, however, the redemptioner has tendered to the person authorized to receive it the statutory amount, his declination to receive the same for any reason does not invalidate the tender.[46] Nor is the right to redeem forfeited by failure to make seasonable ten-ment as to the amount, each must appoint a referee. Steele v. Hannah, 91 Ala. 190, 9 So. 174.

Sale under several judgments.— It has been held in several jurisdictions that where several executions are issued against land, and it is sold on a junior execution, and later sold under a senior one, where the purchaser at the first sale fails to redeem the land from the sale under the senior execution, a junior judgment creditor can redeem from the sale under the senior execution, without redeeming from the sale under the second execution. der, when such tender was prevented by inability, after diligent effort to find the purchaser or any person authorized to act in his behalf.[47]

(II) Medium of Payment. Redemption should be made in money, and, in the absence of statute, it has been held that such redemption money is what is regarded as current money at the time and place, although not strictly a legal tender, unless the judgment under which the sale was made was rendered payable in a particular kind of money.[48]

b. Parties to Whom Payment Should Be Made. The various redemption statutes differ to some extent in designating the persons to whom the redemption money should be tendered or paid. Most of the statutes make the officer conducting the sale, or his agent or personal representative, a proper person to receive it.[49] Under such statutes tender or payment to the execution purchaser is equally valid.[50] Where, however, the purchaser has parted with the certificate of purchase, payment should be made to his grantee or vendee, if known to the redemptioner.[51] Some statutes provide for payment of the money to the clerk of the court in the county where the sale took place;[52] although, in the absence of such statutory provision, payment to the clerk of the court has been held to be of no effect.[53]

8. Proceedings to Effect — a. Notice. Where the statute directs that the payment of the redemption money be made to the officer conducting the sale, the general rule is that no formal notice need be given to the purchaser, and the payment of the money and the filing of the papers required by statute are sufficient.[54]

b. Production of Papers. Where the statutes conferring the right of redemption and designating the parties having the right to redeem require the production and tender by the party seeking to redeem of certain specified proofs of certain requisite facts,[55] the due production of those particular proofs are as much a prerequisite to his right as the existence of the facts to be proved.[56] Such proofs, however, may be waived by the purchaser, or the party claiming under him.[57] They cannot, however, be waived by the officer conducting the sale.[58]

c. Receipt or Certificate. In the absence of statute to the contrary, the receipt or certificate of the sheriff conducting the sale is sufficient evidence of the payment of the redemption money, and establishes a complete redemption of the property from the sale under the execution.[59]

9. Waiver and Estoppel.[60] The general rule is that the legality of a redemption cannot be called in question by the purchaser, where he has accepted the redemption money, or any part thereof upon agreed terms, and such redemption may be completed according to the terms of the agreement, even after the expiration of the redemption period;[61] nor can it be collaterally attacked by a third party;[62] nor can a defect or irregularity in redemption proceedings be urged by the debtor or one claiming under him, where neither of them sought to redeem during the statutory period.[63] In some jurisdictions, however, it is held that the acceptance by the purchaser of the redemption money or any portion thereof will not estop the purchaser thereafter from questioning the legality of the redemption on the ground of irregularities or defects in the proceedings.[64]

10. Actions to Redeem — a. Right of Action — (i) General Rule. The right to redeem property from an execution sale is not perfect and cannot be enforced by an action at law or a bill in equity,[65] until there has been either a full performance by plaintiff of all the statutory requirements, or a valid and sufficient excuse for non-performance without any fault or neglect on the part of such plaintiff.[66]

(ii) Condition Precedent.[67] In some jurisdictions, in an action to enforce the right to redeem property from an execution sale, if the declaration, complaint, or petition fails to show that payment or tender was made before the pleadings were filed, a tender made in such pleadings is not sufficient to authorize a judgment or decree for the redemption, unless, in connection with such offer, the pleadings show a valid and sufficient excuse for the omission to make such tender before the action was brought.[68] In other jurisdictions, however, it is held that a tender of payment contained in the complaint or petition, or payment

65. Bill in equity or action at law.—Where a party entitled by statute to redeem property from an execution sale has fulfilled all the statutory requirements, and the purchaser, or the party claiming under him, fails or refuses to make restitution of the property, the proper remedy of such redemptioner is a bill in equity (Vick v. Beverly, 112 Ala. 458, 21 So. 325; Aycock v. Adler, 87 Ala. 190, 5 So. 794; Walker v. Ball, 39 Ala. 298; Moore v. Gore, 35 Ala. 701; Morrill v. Everett, 83 Me. 290, 22 Atl. 172; Ewing v. Cook, 85 Tenn. 332, 3 S. of the money in court prior to the rendition of the judgment or decree, is sufficient.[69]

b. Time to Bring Action. An action at law or bill in equity to enforce redemption must, however, be brought within a reasonable time after the refusal of the purchaser to make restitution, and laches on the part of the redemptioner will bar the right of action.[70]

c. Parties.[71] Where the execution debtor has tendered the redemption money to the purchaser within the redemption period, his vendee may maintain a bill to redeem without making such debtor a party;[72] and where property has been redeemed from the execution purchaser, such purchaser is not a necessary party to a suit by his redemptioner to enforce the right of redemption against a subsequent redemptioner.[73]

d. Pleadings.[74] In an action at law or a suit in equity to enforce the right of redemption, the complaint or bill should allege an attempt to exercise the right of redemption in the usual statutory mode.[75] Thus, under a statute giving the judgment debtor the right to redeem only upon condition that possession of the land was delivered to the purchaser within a stipulated period after the sale without suit a bill to enforce the right of redemption which fails to allege the fulfilment of such condition precedent is fatally defective.[76]

e. Decree.[77] Under a statute authorizing a judgment debtor to redeem the interest in his land which may have been sold under execution, a decree that the purchaser shall convey the land by a quitclaim deed is erroneous, since he may have acquired some other interest than that which passed at the sale.[78]

f. Accounting For Rents and Profits. Under statutes giving to the execution purchaser the right of possession of the property and the rents and profits from the day of sale until the redemption of the property, such purchaser must account to the redemptioner for the rents and profits thus received by him during the interim between the sale and the redemption.[79] In some jurisdictions, however, the liability of the purchaser to account for the rents and profits, except by way of offset to improvements made, does not arise until he is put in default by a proper tender of the amount necessary to redeem.[80]

11. Operation and Effect — a. On Title of Purchaser. Upon the redemption of property from an execution sale, the estate of the execution purchaser in such property is destroyed and determined, and the redemptioner succeeds to whatever right, title, or interest the purchaser acquired at the sale,[81] and a deed made by the sheriff to the execution purchaser, or one claiming under him, after the statutory redemption thereof, passes no rights.[82]

in some jurisdictions[83] is that the taking of an assignment of a certificate of sale, although by a party entitled to redeem, is not a redemption of the property under the statute, and that anyone having a judgment against the debtor whose property was sold may redeem from such sale within the statutory period on complying with the terms of the statute.[84]

c. Interest Acquired by Redemptioner — (I) In General — (A) Other Than Debtor or His Successor in Interest. Upon the redemption of property from an execution sale, a sheriff's deed to a redemptioner, other than the debtor or his successor in interest, passes the same title as it would pass to the purchaser, if executed to him without redemption; and, since the sale of land on execution destroys all liens subsequent to the judgment under which it is sold, a judgment creditor redeeming property from an execution sale takes title discharged from all prior liens, whether by judgment or otherwise.[85]

(B) Debtor or His Successor in Interest. In some jurisdictions the rule is that where redemption is made by the judgment debtor or his successor in interest, such redemption does not have the effect of transferring to him the rights of the purchaser, subject to be defeated by other redemptioners, but that such redemption simply destroys the effect of the sale as such, and applies the money realized thereby as a payment upon the judgment upon which the property was sold, and extinguishes all rights of the purchaser;[86] and in jurisdictions where this rule is adhered to, upon a redemption by the judgment debtor or his grantee, the original liens are restored and the property may be sold again for any balance remaining unpaid on the original judgment, or under any other judgment which was a lien upon the property prior to the original sale.[87]

83. In other jurisdictions, however, it is held that the assignment of the sheriff's certificate of sale to a person having the right to redeem operates as a redemption from the execution sale. (II) Where Redemptioner's Judgment or Execution Is Invalid. In some jurisdictions a judgment creditor who in good faith redeems land from an execution sale under a prior judgment and receives a sheriff's deed acquires a good title, although the judgment under which he redeemed was void for irregularity.[88]

(III) Reversal of Judgment From Which Redemption Was Had. A redemptioner is entitled to protection as a purchaser, and his rights as such are not impaired by a reversal, after he has effected his redemption, of the judgment under which the sale from which he redeemed was made.[89]

(IV) Satisfaction of Judgment. In some jurisdictions it is held that, where a judgment creditor has redeemed property from an execution sale by virtue of his judgment, this does not constitute a satisfaction thereof, and he may redeem again under the same judgment from a sale of the property under a judgment senior to his own and the one from which he first redeemed;[90] nor is such redemption a bar to an action at law to enforce the payment of the judgment.[91]

d. Conveyance to Redemptioner. Where the redemptioner has fulfilled all the statutory requirements necessary to effect a redemption, he is entitled to a deed to the property from the sheriff;[92] or, in case the purchaser has already received a conveyance from the sheriff, then the redemptioner is entitled to a conveyance from the purchaser, and may proceed by a bill in equity, or other statutory remedy, to enforce his rights.[93]

e. Application of Redemption Money. Under the various redemption statutes the payment of the amount necessary to redeem by a party so entitled is purely voluntary and constitutes a waiver of all defects in the proceedings, and such money is not recoverable back on account of such alleged defects;[94] and, where a judgment creditor has redeemed property from an execution sale, he has no further interest in or control over the redemption money.[95]

E. Conveyance to Purchaser[96] — 1. Necessity of — a. Personal Property. In a case of personal property the general rule is that the title vests in the purchaser by virtue of the levy and sale without any bill of sale.[97]

b. Real Property. In regard to real estate the rule is not uniform, it being held in some jurisdictions that a deed from the sheriff to the execution purchaser is not necessary to pass the legal estate, but that the same becomes vested in the vendee by operation of law.[98] In a majority of jurisdictions, however, a conveyance from the sheriff is necessary in order to perfect the title of a purchaser of real estate at an execution sale,[99] and the sheriff's certificate of sale is not sufficient for that purpose.[1]

Although the cancellation or destruction of a deed after its delivery does not annul it as a conveyance, yet, where a sheriff's deed to a nominal purchaser of lands sold under execution is destroyed by him at the instance of the grantee and the person who furnished the purchase-money, and for whom the purchase was made, and another deed is executed to the latter, a court of equity will, in the absence of intervening equities in favor of third persons, treat the second deed as conveying the title. 2. Authority to Make — a. Officer Conducting Sale — (i) General Rule. The general rule is that the officer conducting an execution sale is the proper party to execute a conveyance of the property sold.[2]

(ii) After Expiration of Term of Office. In the absence of statute to the contrary,[3] the officer conducting the sale may execute a conveyance, even after the expiration of his term of office;[4] and, in case of the death of such officer prior to the execution of a deed, the proper remedy for the purchaser is to apply to the court for the appointment of a commissioner or master to execute a conveyance.[5]

b. Deputy. The general rule is that a deed of property sold on execution may be made by a deputy, whether he conducted the sale or not.[6] However, the execution of a deed when made by the deputy must appear to be the act of his principal, and a deed made by the deputy in his own name is void.[7]

d. During Redemption Period. A sheriff's deed executed after an execution sale before the expiration of the statutory redemption period is void for want of authority in the officer to execute it at that time.[10]

e. Enjoining Execution or Delivery of Deed. Where sufficient ground exists to prevent the completion of a sale by the execution of a deed by the sheriff, it is within the discretion of a court of equity to grant an injunction restraining the sheriff from executing it.[11] However, after an execution sale and the expiration of the redemption period, the judgment debtor has no such interest in the land as will entitle him to raise objections to the completion of the sale by the execution of the deed, he then occupying the position of a mere stranger.[12]

chaser, the sheriff is authorized and may be compelled to execute the deed to a designated third party.[15]

b. After Death of Judgment Debtor. Where a sale is had and approved, and a deed ordered, and before its execution the judgment debtor dies, it is not necessary to revive proceedings in the name of the heirs or legal representatives of the deceased before the deed is executed.[16]

c. After Death of Party Entitled. Upon the death of the purchaser, or the party entitled to a sheriff's deed, before the issuance thereof, the deed should at the instance of the executor or administrator be made to the heirs or devisees of the party so entitled.[17]

d. Time to Move For. A motion to require the sheriff to execute a conveyance of land sold at an execution sale should be made within a reasonable time after the expiration of the redemption period, and laches on the part of the party entitled will bar his right to a deed.[18]

e. Remedies to Compel Execution. The power of the sheriff to conduct an execution sale, receive purchase-money, and execute a conveyance, is not a mere naked power, but a power coupled with a trust, and, in case of the refusal or neglect of such officer to make proper conveyance, a court of equity will compel him so to do.[19] In some jurisdictions, however, it is held that the only proper remedy is by a motion in the cause and not by distinct action.[20]

4. Form and Requisites of Deed[21] — a. Recitals — (i) In General. While, in the absence of statute, no particular form of words is required in a sheriff's deed to pass the title, it must appear from the language employed that such was the intention, and it must contain apt and proper words of grant, release, or conveyance.[22]

(ii) Specific Recitals. It should contain a recital of the judgment, its date, the names of the parties, the amount thereof, and the court rendering the same;[23] it should likewise recite the execution, levy, and date thereof,[24] the date of sale,[25] notice of sale,[26] and the name of the purchaser.[27]

(iii) Effect of Omission or Misrecital. However, statutory provisions prescribing the recitals to be inserted in the sheriff's deed have been held to be directory only; hence a misrecital or omission as to immaterial matters will not affect the validity of the deed,[28] the general rule being that the recital in a sheriff's deed is not a necessary part thereof, and if the deed misrecites or omits to recite the judgment or execution under which the sale was made,[29] or the sale

the description of the property in the deed is equally applicable to two or more tracts of land, and there is nothing in the officer's return under the writ from which the particular tract to which the description refers can be ascertained, the deed is void for uncertainty.[32]

(II) VARIANCE. The decisions are not at all uniform upon the question of the effect of a variance between the sheriff's deed and the officer's return, notice of sale, etc., some of the courts holding that any material variance between them will invalidate the deed,[33] and others holding that an immaterial variance will not affect the deed,[34] and that even a material variance may be cured by amendment, or by evidence of the true state of facts.[35]

5. EXECUTION AND DELIVERY — a. Condition Precedent. In some jurisdictions the statutes require as a condition precedent to the execution of the deed that the proceedings be examined and approved by the court and an order obtained directing the deed to be made.[36]

b. Must Be in Name of Officer Making Sale. The deed should be executed by the sheriff, or, where executed by a deputy, it must be in the name of the sheriff.[37]

c. Acknowledgment.[38] The statutes usually require sheriffs' deeds to be acknowledged by that officer before the clerk of some court of the county or district in which the land lies, and the certificate of such acknowledgment to be indorsed thereon by the clerk.[39] In some jurisdictions the sheriff's deed is inoperative to pass the title unless acknowledged in the manner prescribed by statute;[40] while in others it is held that acknowledgment is not essential to the validity of the deed where its execution is otherwise duly proven.[41] The acknowledgment of the sheriff's deed cures all irregularities,[42] which do not render the sale and proceedings prior thereto void ab initio.[43] Statutes as a rule do not designate the time within which the sheriff's deed must be acknowledged,[44] and it has been held that the acknowledgment may be made after the sheriff's term of office has expired.[45]

b. Effect of Delay. The failure of the execution purchaser to record his deed within the time required by statute will not invalidate his title where there are no intermediate conveyances.[50]

7. Construction and Operation — a. Evidence of Title. According to the better doctrine, a sheriff's deed is of itself prima facie evidence that the grantee therein holds the title and interest in the property which was held by the judgment debtor at the time of the rendition of the judgment, or at any time thereafter up to the time of the sale of the premises;[51] and in several jurisdictions it is prima facie evidence of the validity of the judgment itself.[52] Where a sheriff's deed is supported by the introduction of a judgment and an execution thereunder, which would have authorized the deed if the provisions of the law relating to the sale of the judgment debtor's property were complied with, such deed is prima facie proof of compliance with all provisions of the law necessary to make it a valid transfer of the title to the sheriff's vendee.[53]

b. Property or Interest Conveyed. The general rule is that a sheriff's deed conveys only the estate which it purports to convey, although defendant in execution had a greater interest subject to levy and sale.[54] In construing such deed,

Exceptions.— Where a sheriff's deed excepted certain land conveyed by A to C, it

however, the whole description of the property should be taken together, so that every clause and word should be given effect, if possible, in order to ascertain the true intent of the instrument.[55]

c. Conclusiveness of Recitals[56] — (I) In General. Upon the sale of property by an officer, the recital in his deed of compliance with the various requirements of the statute is sufficient prima facie evidence of the fact,[57] and cannot be impeached collaterally.[58] However, such recitals being only prima facie evidence, may be overcome by testimony proving their falsity.[59]

(II) Judgment, Execution, and Sale. In some jurisdictions the statutes require the sheriff's deed to recite the judgment, execution, and sale, and such recitals are made evidence of the facts therein stated, and relieve the party claiming under the deed from the necessity of producing the judgment and writ of execution, and put the onus upon the party contesting the deed to establish the invalidity of the sale, or the judgment by virtue of which it was made.[60] In other jurisdictions, however, both the judgment and writ of execution must be produced, and thereafter all recitals in the sheriff's deed as to his acts thereunder, such as the levy, advertisement, and sale, are prima facie evidence of such facts.[61]

(IV) Where Deed Is Executed by Successor in Office. Recitals in a deed by a sheriff of the acts of his predecessor in office are not sufficient evidence of the facts recited, in the absence of statute making them presumptive or prima facie evidence thereof.[64]

(V) Curing Defective Proceedings. While recitals in a sheriff's deed will not validate a sale which is void on account of failure to observe some statutory requirement,[65] yet an irregularity which renders the sale voidable and not void, such as a misdescription of the property, is cured by a correct recital in the deed.[66]

well settled that a sheriff's deed when executed takes effect by relation, and must be treated as if executed on the date when the lien under which the sale was made was created.[67]

(II) Subsequent Encumbrancers and Purchasers. Under the rule just stated, the title of a party claiming under a sheriff's deed will prevail against the claims of encumbrancers and purchasers, whose interest attached subsequent to the sale of the property.[68]

(III) Where Property Was Previously Attached. Likewise a sheriff's deed for property sold under an execution issued in an attachment suit relates back to the levy of the attachment and cuts off all subsequent liens.[69]

an execution sale, and the sheriff should pay over to such party the money so collected, less the amount of his fees and charges.[70] Where the execution debtor stands passively by and allows his property to be sold, and makes no opposition to the sale, and subsequently surrenders possession, he cannot claim the proceeds of the sale on the ground that the judgment had been satisfied by payment prior to the sale,[71] or on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings.[72]

b. Limitation of Rule. Where, however, there is proper ground for setting a sale aside on account of irregularities in the proceedings, but the property has passed into the hands of innocent purchasers, then the execution debtor can have recourse to the proceeds of the sale in lieu of the recovery of the property.[73]

c. Where Sale Terminates Liens on Property. Under some statutes upon the sale of property on execution, all existing liens thereon, with a few designated exceptions, are terminated, and such liens are transferred from the property to the proceeds of the sale, and such proceeds should be applied to existing liens according to their priority.[74] Such statutes, however, embrace only judgment or lien creditors of defendant in execution, and have no application to his contract creditors.[75]

d. Costs, Expenses, and Attorney's Fees. The sheriff has a lien upon the funds in his hand realized from an execution sale for his lawful fees, and the expense incurred in making the levy and sale, and he may retain such amount upon settlement with the execution creditor;[76] and, where liens upon the property having priority to the judgment and execution under which the land was sold exhaust the fund realized by the sale, the costs of the execution and sale thereunder should be deducted before distribution of the fund to the prior lienors.[77] However, attorney's fees or commissions cannot be paid out of such fund,[78] unless such fees are expressly included in the judgment.[79]

e. Agreements. Where lien creditors enter into an agreement for the distribution of the proceeds of an execution sale in a certain manner, such agreement will bind the parties thereto, and the distribution by the sheriff in accordance therewith will be upheld.[80]

f. Mortgages, Vendors', and Mechanics' Liens. Where there is a valid recorded mortgage upon land at the time of the rendition of the judgment, only the equity of redemption in such land is subject to levy and sale, and therefore the judgment creditor is entitled to the proceeds of sale, and not the mortgagee, whose lien still attaches to the land.[81] This rule likewise applies to vendors'[82] and mechanics' liens.[83] Where, however, a sale takes place under a judgment the law, and when sold the proceeds are preserved against creditors whose liens attach subsequent to the levy.[87]

(II) Notice of Claim. In order to have a claim for wages accruing against a judgment debtor allowed, it is necessary for the claimant to file with the sheriff a written notice of his claim prior to the execution sale.[88] While such notice need not be in any particular form, so long as the matters essential to give the claimant a lien are recited, yet it should set forth facts sufficient to make a case within the statute, so that the officer and persons interested may know that the labor was performed within the time limited, in a business defined by the act, the sum due, and that property subject to the lien is embraced in the levy.[89]

Where a landlord's interest in real estate had been sold under execution and he made a claim for arrearages of rent due from prior tenant which had accrued before the sale of the landlord's interest, it was held that he was not entitled to payment out of money in the hands of the sheriff arising from a sale under execution of the personal property of a tenant who took possession after the sale of the landlord's interest, since such sale destroyed his right to a remedy for distress for arrearages of rent. c. Debts Due to State or Municipality. In the absence of statute, debts due to the national government, a state, or municipality are not entitled to priority over subsisting liens upon the property sold on execution in the distribution of the proceeds realized therefrom.[94] However, in practically every jurisdiction by express statutory enactment such debts are now made a first lien upon the property and have a preference over all other claims in the distribution of the proceeds of the sale.[95]

3. Distribution Among Different Judgments, or Executions — a. Prior Judgments or Executions — (i) General Rule. In the appropriation of the proceeds of property sold under several executions, the rule is well established that the money must be applied to those executions under which the property was sold according to the priority of the judgment lien,[96] and, where property is sold on an execution levied under a junior judgment, such judgment is entitled to be first satisfied out of the proceeds of the sale before a senior judgment upon which no execution has been issued, since the lien of such senior judgment is not thereby divested.[97] Moreover it has been held that the fact that some of the judgments

(II) Where One Judgment or Execution Was Fraudulent. Where property is sold under several executions and it appears that one of the executions or judgments was fraudulent, or that such judgment had previously been satisfied, then it is not entitled to share in the proceeds of the sale.[99]

b. Pro Rata Distribution. In many jurisdictions, by statutory enactment, where several judgments are rendered at the same time against one defendant in favor of different creditors, and real estate of the judgment debtor is sold under an execution issued on one of the judgments, executions on the other judgments being all in the sheriff's hands at the time of sale, the holders of such judgments are entitled to share pro rata in the proceeds of the sale, without regard to the execution under which the land was sold.[2] However, the common-law rule is that where the money arising from the proceeds of the sale of property under two or more executions, the liens of which are equal, is not sufficient in amount to pay the debts that have been levied, it must be applied equally to the several debts, irrespective of their several amounts, unless a surplus remains after the full payment of one or more of the claims; in case there be such surplus that must be applied equally to the balance of the unpaid debts.[3]

c. Application to Execution Against Judgment Creditor. Money collected by an officer on an execution sale is in custodia legis, and the better rule is that it cannot be applied by the officer to the satisfaction of a contemporaneous execution against the execution creditor.[4] In some jurisdictions, however, it is held that the sheriff may apply the proceeds of an execution sale to the payment of an execution held by him against the execution creditor, and upon motion the court may order him to make such application.[5]

d. Liability to Refund. Where the proceeds of land sold at an execution sale are paid over to a party having a junior lien, a senior lienor or the sheriff, in case he is held liable, may, by appropriate action at law or a bill in equity, recover the money so paid.[6]

4. Right to Surplus — a. Right of Judgment Debtor. Where a sheriff has satisfied all executions placed in his hands, and there are no liens upon the property which were transferred to the proceeds by virtue of the sale, then the judgment debtor is entitled to any surplus remaining in the sheriff's hands; and the sheriff cannot retain such surplus proceeds for a debt due to himself, or for expenses which he incurred without legal authority.[7]

erty under execution, after the satisfaction of the execution under the senior judgment, junior judgment creditors and other creditors whose liens attach to the proceeds have a right to apply any surplus remaining to the satisfaction of their liens according to priority.[8]

c. Rights of Mortgagee. Where land is sold subject to a prior mortgage, the surplus proceeds in the absence of other liens thereon must be returned to the judgment debtor, and not paid to the mortgagee, who must look to the land for the satisfaction of the mortgage.[9] Where, however, property is sold under a judgment senior to a mortgage, the lien of the mortgage is transferred from the property to the proceeds, and the mortgagee is entitled to share in any surplus arising from the sale in the order of priority.[10]

d. Rights of Grantee. The rule is well settled that a grantee of property which has been sold under a judgment against the grantor, which was a prior lien upon the property, is entitled to any surplus remaining after the satisfaction of such judgment.[11] This is equally true where the grantee himself becomes the purchaser at the execution sale.[12]

e. Proceedings For Recovery. A lienor or grantee from the judgment debtor who is entitled to the surplus remaining after satisfaction of the execution under which the property was sold may make application for the payment of such surplus by motion in the action in which the execution was issued, if such lienor or grantee was not a party to any action against the judgment debtor.[13] Where, however, such surplus has been paid over to a party not entitled thereto, if the claimant's right to such surplus is not clear, his remedy is an action against the sheriff or the party who has received the surplus and not by summary proceedings.[14]

5. Proceedings For Distribution — a. Distribution by Officer. The general rule is that a sheriff may distribute the proceeds of an execution sale to the parties entitled thereto, in the absence of conflicting claims, although he does so at his own risk and is liable to the party injured for any mistake.[15] However, where the proceeds of an execution sale is the subject of conflicting claims of which the sheriff has due notice, he cannot proceed to the distribution thereof, but should hold the money until the claims are settled, unless otherwise directed by the court;[16] and where the sheriff is in doubt as to the proper application of the proceeds of an execution sale, he should apply to the court for instructions as to the proper disposition of the fund.[17]

b. Payment Into Court.[18] Upon application of a claimant to the fund, a court having jurisdiction thereof may direct the sheriff to bring the proceeds of the sale into court; and it may likewise make such order of its own motion.[19]

(II) Proceedings Before Auditor. An auditor has no authority to inquire into the validity of a judgment in due form rendered by a court of record;[23] it is, however, within his jurisdiction to determine the ownership of the judgment.[24] His report to the court should recite the facts proved and not the evidence; this part of his report should be in effect a case stated or special verdict.[25]

e. Directing Issues — (I) In General. The court having in hand the distribution of the proceeds of a sheriff's sale should direct an issue to try material facts in dispute, where a demand is made for it by an interested party.[26] And the question must be one of fact and not of law.[27] The court, however, is not bound to direct an issue unless there is a formal demand for it.[28]

(II) Application or Affidavit to Obtain Issue. In at least one jurisdiction the statute requires the applicant for an issue on distribution of proceeds of sheriffs' sales to make affidavit that there are material facts in dispute, and to set forth their nature and character, it being within the province of the court to determine whether to grant the issue on the affidavit.[29] Under the Pennsylvania

j. Costs.[40] In the distribution by an auditor or by the court of the proceeds of an execution sale, costs do not necessarily fall upon the unsuccessful claimant; where he shows probable cause for litigation, the costs are usually charged against the fund.[41] Where, however, the ground of the contest was merely the suspicion of fraud, collusion, or lack of consideration, unsupported by the evidence, the costs of the proceedings will not be allowed out of the fund, but will be charged to the unsuccessful claimant.[42]

XI. RETURN.[43]

A. Definition. A return on a writ of execution is the short official statement of the officer, indorsed thereon or attached thereto, of what he has done in obedience to the mandate of the writ or of the reason why he has done nothing.[44]

B. Necessity — 1. In General. It is the duty of the officer to whom an execution is directed to make a return thereto on or before the time fixed by law, to the proper court or officer, in all cases, whether it has been executed or not;[45] and if the officer fails to make due return he may be compelled to do so by the court out of which the execution issued.[46]

2. Effect of Failure to Make — a. In General. While it is the duty of the officer in all cases to return the writ by the return-day, yet neither of the parties can be deprived of the return by his neglect or failure so to return it, nor will a levy made thereunder be invalidated by such neglect or failure.[47]

b. On Title of Purchaser. The failure of the officer to make a return of the writ will not in most jurisdictions invalidate the title of a purchaser at the execution sale.[48]

c. Presumption Against Officer. Where an officer fails to return an execution, it will be presumed against him that he has collected the money.[49]

C. Requisites and Sufficiency — 1. In General. The return to an execution must be in writing,[50] upon the writ itself or upon a paper attached thereto,[51] and must show upon its face either that the mandate of the writ has been fully complied with or, if not, the existence of such a state of facts as, without fault or negligence on the part of the officer, prevented a compliance.[52] The return should be a statement of facts, and not of any conclusions of law which the offi-

When several writs are issued.— If a sheriff returns a seizure under that and another writ it is bad (Wintle v. Chetwynd, 7 Dowl. P. C. 554, 1 W. W. & H. 581); but it is a sufficient return that he has seized goods of defendant by virtue of several previous writs of cer might form as to what constituted a levy;[53] and, while a reasonable degree of certainty is all that is required,[54] the return must answer the whole writ,[55] and set out the acts of the officer with sufficient precision to show whether they have or have not been legal and regular.[56]

2. By Whom Made. The return of an execution should be made by the officer to whom it is directed, and, if the writ has been executed by an under-sheriff or deputy, he should return it in the name of his principal by himself as deputy.[57] In some jurisdictions, however, a return by a deputy in his own name is sufficient;[58] nor will it vitiate a return that it is signed by the deputy for the sheriff, and not in the name of the sheriff, by the deputy.[59]

3. To What Court. An execution should be returned to the court from which it issued.[60]

4. Time For Making — a. In General. An execution should regularly and properly be returned at the time fixed by law and designated in the writ.[61] But while this is the rule, the officer may in many jurisdictions return the execution before the return-day, even unsatisfied, where he has been unable after diligent search to find property subject to the writ,[62] and it has been held that, where the

"The time allowed for the return of an execution is for the benefit of the sheriff, and to prevent action or compulsory proceedings against him before he has had a reasonable ends of justice will be furthered thereby, and there is no evidence that the sheriff can derive any advantage from holding the execution until the return-day, it is within the power of the court to compel an earlier return.[63] So too a return may be made after the return day,[64] and under special circumstances and for good cause shown the court may extend the time within which the return is to be made.[65]

b. Effect of Delay on Title of Purchaser. The time within which the officer makes return to an execution does not affect the validity of a sale made under it,[66] and even though a return is necessary to the validity of the sale the sale is not invalidated by a delay, but the return when made relates back to the time named in the writ.[67]

c. Excuses For Non-Compliance With Law. A stay, granted by a court of competent jurisdiction, which restrains a sheriff from enforcing an execution, suspends the running of the time in which he is required to return the writ;[68] and the same is true of the pendency of an interpleader issue.[69] But neither the authorization of plaintiff,[70] nor the fact that the execution came to the officer's hands but a few days before the return-day,[71] nor the fact that the sale was not time to execute the process; that the point beyond which it would not continue is provided, but that the statute is silent as to how soon he is to be permitted to make the return." Buist v. Citizens' Sav. Bank, 4 Kan. App. 700, 46 Pac. 718, 719.

5. Date of Delivery of Execution. The date of delivery of an execution to a sheriff need not be noted by him on his return.[73]

6. Sending Return by Mail. The law does not require the sheriff of another county to whom an execution is issued to return it either in person or by deputy. If he deposits it in the post-office properly directed, in time to reach the clerk of the court from which it issued by the return-day, it is sufficient.[74]

b. Statements Relating to Levy — (i) In General. The officer is required to return only the ultimate facts,[78] and a return, in general terms that he "levied" is sufficient, without stating the acts done in making the levy, as the necessary proceedings will be implied.[79] And, if the return states that the officer sold and delivered the possession of the property, it sufficiently shows an actual seizure, although it does not state in terms that he made a levy.[80] Where the execution is not fully satisfied, the return must state that defendant has no other property from which the residue of the execution can be made.[81]

(II) Sale and Conveyance — (A) In General. While the sheriff's return should regularly state all the facts necessary to show a valid levy and sale, yet, in a majority of the jurisdictions, the purchaser's right is held to rest upon his purchase, under a valid execution issuing upon a valid judgment and consequently all that the return need show in this respect is the satisfaction, in whole or in part, of the judgment or the cause or the failure to make satisfaction of any part of it.[82] In the New England states, however, the return must state in substance that every act was done required by the statute to constitute a valid levy and sale; but it is not necessary that the performance of such acts shall be stated by the officer in direct terms; it is sufficient if it appear from the language used, or can be reasonably and fairly inferred from it, that the act was done.[83]

(B) Notice of Sale. The return should show that the required notice of sale, whether by advertisement or notice to the debtor, or by both, has been given;[84]

mission of the court;[97] but after a return has been filed and become a matter of record, the officer can no longer amend it of his own motion,[98] and must make application to the court, which will in its discretion grant the required permission.[99]

2. Power to Compel Amendment. A court has no power to compel an officer to amend his return to conform to the facts.[1]

3. Persons Entitled. Only the officer,[2] one of the parties,[3] or a purchaser[4] is entitled to ask leave to amend.[5]

4. Time of Amendment. There is no fixed time within which an application to amend must be made, and, if the facts are clear and the rights of third persons will not be injuriously affected thereby, an amendment may be allowed by the court at any time subsequent to the return of the execution which may seem proper.[6]

5. Scope and Purpose of Amendment. While it has been said that an amendment which will destroy or materially alter a return will not be allowed,[7] the true rule seems to be that an amendment will be allowed or disallowed "as may best tend to the furtherance of justice."[8] An amendment will be permitted, irrespective of the time which has elapsed, provided it is clearly in accordance with the facts and does not prejudice the rights of third persons, acquired bona fide without notice.[9] On the other hand, facts occurring subsequent to a return cannot be incorporated into it by amendment;[10] nor will an amendment be allowed which only partially corrects a return, where if the whole return were to be corrected so as to conform to the truth an invalid levy would be shown.[11] So too a court has no power to allow an amendment by which the provisions of a statute would be defeated or evaded.[12]

6. Determination. A motion for leave to amend a return is determinable by the court without a jury.[13]

7. Effect. An amendment relates back to the original return, and dates from it, and the officer is freed from any responsibility on the original.[14]

E. Construction — 1. In General. The well settled rule is that the return of an officer when ambiguous is to be so construed as to make it consistent with the proper discharge of the duty imposed upon him by law, if the return by reasonable intendment and construction can be made to bear this interpretation.[15] usual ground, however, for quashing or setting aside a return is that it is false in fact.[20]

b. Notice of Motion. All parties interested must be notified of a motion to quash or set aside a return.[21]

c. Effect. The vacation of a false return of satisfaction leaves the lien still in force against the property;[22] but the quashing of the return of an execution sale, where the purchaser has given a sale bond, does not revive the lien of the levy, but gives the judgment creditor a right to have another execution issued.[23] Quashing such a return does not, however, per se set aside the sale or quash the bond. An order to that effect is necessary.[24]

G. Operation and Effect — 1. In General. The officer is the legal agent and representative of plaintiff and defendant in the judgment, and also of the accepted bidder and has the right to bind all the parties by his return of the execution.[25] After a return has been made, the execution becomes functus officio.[26] But the mere levy of an execution on lands does not operate as a satisfaction of such execution;[27] nor does the return of an execution unsatisfied give the judgment creditor a lien upon the equitable property of the debtor.[28]

2. Admissibility in Evidence. An officer's return is evidence of the facts therein stated as between the parties to the suit,[29] so far as the statement of such facts is a part of his official duty.[30] As against the purchaser at an execution sale, the officer's return is inadmissible;[31] but where the title to property is claimed through a sheriff's sale, the return to the execution is admissible in evidence in favor of the purchaser or of one holding under him.[32]

3. Weight and Sufficiency — a. In General. An officer's return on an execution is sufficient evidence of the truth of the facts stated therein;[33] and the fact that his return appears on an execution sufficiently shows that he was the the officer holding the same, and that he held it for the purpose of its legal enforcement.[34]

b. As Against Other Evidence. As an official record made by the officer in the discharge of his official duties, greater weight will as a rule be attached to a return than to evidence generally.[35]

c. Aider by Extrinsic Evidence. Applying the general rules relating to admissibility of parol evidence[36] such evidence has been held to be admissibe to explain,[37]

A return that the money was made and paid to plaintiff is sufficient evidence of the receipt of the money by plaintiff upon a rule to restore it to defendant; but a bare return of "Satisfied," without stating that it was paid to plaintiff, or a return that the money was paid by defendant to plaintiff or his attorney is not sufficient. Explanation by sheriff.— Where a return shows a levy and sale, and a return of the money to the purchaser, as the property did not belong to defendant, the sheriff may, in an action by plaintiff in execution for the money received from the sale, explain that at the time of the sale he did not know that defendant did not own the property. corroborate,[38] or supply defects in a return,[39] provided it does not contradict its terms.[40] So too evidence of extrinsic facts not required to be stated therein is admissible in aid of a return.[41]

4. CONCLUSIVENESS — a. In General — (I) RULE STATED. A return to an execution is generally, except as to third persons, conclusive of the facts which it recites.[42]

(II) AS TO DATE. Where, after a judgment has become dormant, an officer makes an entry on the execution and antedates it, that fact may be shown by parol evidence.[43] Similarly parol evidence is admissible to show that a date appearing in his return was no part thereof, but was inserted by the sheriff without authority after the return was made.[44]

(III) AS TO LEVY. While it is true that statements made in an officer's return on an execution as to the levy made thereunder are as a rule conclusive;[45] nevertheless it has been held that mere statements of opinion or statements of reasons are not conclusive.[46]

(iv) As to Delivery Bond. The statements in a sheriff's return as to the taking and forfeiture of a delivery bond may be impeached.[47]

(v) As to Sale. As a general rule, and in the absence of fraud or mistake, the official return of a sheriff concerning the sale of the property levied on is conclusive.[48] In an action by the sheriff to recover the purchase-money his return is prima facie evidence that defendant was the purchaser.[49]

b. As to Parties and Privies. the officer, if there is a sufficient description of the property sold whereby it can be identified.[60]

H. Return of Extent — 1. Necessity. Nothing will pass by an extent of an execution upon land, unless the execution, with the doings of the officer, is returned to the court from which it issued, so that the extent may become a matter of record there.[61]

2. Time For Making. The return of an extent on land should be made during the life of the execution.[62]

3. Form and Requisites — a. In General. All the material facts necessary to show that the law has been substantially complied with in the levy of an execution upon real estate must appear explicitly or by necessary intendment by the officer's return.[63]

b. Description of Property. The return of an officer of an extent upon real estate must describe the property by metes and bounds, or in such other mode as will distinctly point out and identify it.[64] Where an officer makes an extent on the same parcel of land under two executions for and against the same parties, he need not levy on each execution separately, and describe distinct boundaries in each return.[65]

4. Inventory and Appraisement — a. In General. The return of the officer must show expressly or by necessary implication that the requirements of the statute in relation to the inventory and appraisement of the land set off were complied with.[66]

b. Appointment of Appraisers. A substantial compliance with all the requirements of the statute as to the appointment of appraisers must be shown by the officer's return, either expressly or by necessary inference.[67]

d. Competency of Appraisers. The return of an extent must show that the appraisers were freeholders and possessed the qualifications required by the statute as to discretion and disinterestedness.[69]

e. Oath of Appraisers. The return must show, either in itself or by reference to the justice's certificate, that the appraisers were sworn as required by law,[70] and that the person by whom they were sworn was a magistrate.[71]

5. Amendment. An officer's return of an extent may be amended, in order to perfect the title, according to the truth and justice of the case, when no rights of third persons have intervened, and the evidence is full and satisfactory;[72] and even as against third persons, the return may and will be thus amended, if such persons have knowledge of the facts, or if the return contains in itself sufficient motive to show that in making the levy all the requirements of the statute were probably complied with.[73]

6. Construction. In construing the return of an extent on land, every intendment will be made in favor of the sufficiency of the return, and of the regularity and legality of the officer's acts.[74]

In Massachusetts the return need not show that the appraisers resided within the county or the commonwealth. Campbell v. Webster, 15 Gray 28.

7. OPERATION AND EFFECT — a. In General. It is the return of the officer of the appraisement and proceedings which operates as a statute conveyance of land set off on execution, and divests the debtor of his title;[75] and the delivery of seizin is an acceptance of title by the creditor in satisfaction of the debt, as of the date of those proceedings.[76]

b. Conclusiveness. The return of a levy on real estate is conclusive upon the parties and their privies, and against the whole world as evidence that thereby, as between the parties, the title of the debtor in the estate levied on passed to the judgment creditor.[77] As against the officer the return is conclusive,[78] but not as against third persons.[79]

8. RECORD. The statutes require the officer to make his return to the clerk's office from which the execution issued and to cause the execution, with his return thereon, to be recorded in the registry of deeds, or in the town clerk's office, of the county, district, or town in which the land lies, on or before the return-day. Unless this is done, no title passes except as against the debtor and his heirs and persons having actual knowledge of the facts.[80] It is otherwise as to the record in the office of the clerk of the court, or of the justice issuing the execution. It is sufficient if the record be made before suit is brought by which the title is to be tested.[81]

XII. PAYMENT, SATISFACTION, AND DISCHARGE.[82]

A. What Constitutes. An execution is satisfied either by a payment of money or by a conversion of the debtor's property.[83] The payment of an amount[84] or the conversion by sale[85] of the debtor's property into an amount equal to the amount due satisfies the judgment and the process is henceforth as functus officio.[86] A payment of a portion of the debt is a satisfaction pro tanto and plaintiff must credit the amount so paid.[87] If a sale is had and the property is not of sufficient value to pay the debt, of course the execution is not satisfied as to the balance.[88]

B. Satisfaction by Payment — 1. As to Interest and Costs. The law contemplates but one final judgment and but one final execution for its collection, and to prevent a defendant from being harassed by successive executions it will consider the debt satisfied when one execution has been issued and the money made upon it by the sheriff, and therefore if defendant does not include his costs,[89] or the interest on the judgment,[90] these items will be considered satisfied also. Inasmuch as the payment of a portion of the debt is a satisfaction pro tanto, interest cannot afterward be collected upon the amount thus recovered, for a delay which is not caused by defendant.[91]

2. PAYMENT BY CERTAIN PERSONS AND THE EFFECT — a. By Co-Defendant. If an execution has been satisfied by one of several co-defendants who were all principals upon the cause of action, it cannot be subsequently issued against any of the other co-defendants for the benefit of the one who made the payment.[92] But a payment of the debt by a surety operates as an assignment of the judgment and the execution may be continued for his use.[93]

b. By Third Person — (i) GENERALLY. If the judgment debt be paid by a person not a party to the judgment and not liable upon it, the judgment will be extinguished or not, according to the intention of the party paying.[94] The old New York code of procedure[95] provided that "after the issuing of execution

But in Michigan, if a co-defendant pay the execution upon agreement that it shall be kept alive for his benefit, the agreement is treated as one to permit defendant who made the payment to enforce the execution against the other co-defendants to the extent that the law justified a resort to them; that is, each for his proportional share. against property, any person indebted to the judgment debtor may pay to the sheriff the amount of his debt, or so much thereof as shall be necessary to satisfy the execution; and the sheriff's receipt shall be a sufficient discharge for the amount so paid."[96] This provision has been adopted in many states[97] and exists in somewhat altered form in the New York code of civil procedure at the present time.[98]

(II) By Officer and His Right of Subrogation. In some jurisdictions it has been considered against public policy for an officer who pays the debt of defendant to have the use of the execution for his own reimbursement.[99] In other jurisdictions, whether the sheriff may be subrogated to the rights of the creditor seems to be a matter of intention between the parties. If the sheriff takes an assignment at the time he makes the payment or in some cases if it is agreed that the judgment shall remain open the sheriff can have execution for his exoneration.[1] In still other jurisdictions there appears to be no question of

This line of authorities is based on the decision of Chief Justice Kent in Reed v. Pruyn, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 426, 430, 5 Am. Dec. 287, where it is said: "The practice of sheriffs of paying executions themselves, and taking security and judgment bonds from the party over whom they have at the time such means of coercion, is to be strictly and vigilantly watched by the courts. Such humanity is imposing, but it may be turned into cruelty. Nothing is more important to the honor of the administration of justice, than that the officers of the court should not use its process as the means of making unequal bargains, and taking undue advantage."

It is a salutary rule that when the sheriff has neglected or violated his duty so as to be required to pay plaintiff, he ought not to be permitted to use the judgment for his own benefit, except under peculiar circumstances and by express leave of the court. Doctrine explained.— In Morris v. Lake, 9 Sm. & M. 521, 526, 48 Am. Dec. 724, the court took the view that if a third person (in this case a sheriff) voluntarily pays an execution without an agreement that it is not to operate as a discharge, or without taking an assignment, the execution will be satisfied, and cannot afterward be enforced. Where the sheriff takes an assignment several months afterward as an afterthought, he cannot thus revive a liability previously discharged. "It is a question of intention and agreement between the parties. Once a payment always a payment."

"The sheriff has the same right of purchasing the debt that others have; and such purchase necessarily carries with it all the remedies for its enforcement to which the assignor was entitled." Clevinger v. Miller, 27 Gratt. (Va.) 740, 745. "A sheriff may purchase a debt in his hands for collection by execution if he act bona fide. . . . "We are unable to discover any difficulty, or injustice that could proceed from sustaining a suit for the benefit of the officer, who has become liable, and has advanced the money to the creditor, on taking his assignment of the debt. If execution is obtained in such suit, it must go into the hands of some officer, who is not interested, for collection. This will avoid a good share of the difficulties the court was so cautious to avoid in those cases cited from Johnson's Reports [Sherman v. Boyce, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 443, and Reed v. Pruyn, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 426]; . . . The officer can never use the name of the creditor, to collect by suit, unless he first makes his peace with the creditor. But, when he uses the name of the creditor, without any objection from him, to collect a debt from him who ought to pay it, there is no hardship in presuming that the creditor has made an assignment to the officer, who had an equitable claim to such assignment." money without an operative execution in his hands.[7] A payment therefore to him as sheriff prior to his having the execution in his hands does not satisfy the debt.[8] After the return-day an execution which has not been levied is as functus officio, and the sheriff has no authority, as sheriff, to receive the payment of it,[9] and the receipt of money by the sheriff does not operate as a payment;[10] and plaintiff will not be prevented from enforcing his judgment, unless he is proved to have received the money.[11] But if the execution has been levied, payment may properly be made to the sheriff after return-day;[12] the sheriff not only has authority then to receive money when tendered in payment of the debt, but it is his duty to receive it, instead of satisfying the debt out of defendant's property.[13] With an operative execution in the sheriff's hands, a payment made to him before the return-day is a satisfaction of the judgment.[14] After the expiration of his term as sheriff, a person has no authority to receive payment of money on an execution, and payments made to him do not discharge the judgment unless actually paid over by him to plaintiff.[15]

4. Media of Payment[16] and the Officer's Authority as to Acceptance — a. The General Rule. The sheriff is not permitted to negotiate between the parties so as to accept anything but money as the satisfaction of an execution in his hands.[17] The exigency of his writ requires him to make the money, and he can receive only money in satisfaction.[18]

The officer holds the money as an agent and not as an officer if defendant pays after the return-day, for the plain reason that if he had made his return on the execution according to the fact that he had received the money and the day on which it was paid the return would not have precluded plaintiff from issuing another execution. The process was functus officio and could therefore confer upon the sheriff no power or authority to act in his official capacity. The officer being responsible only as agent, can only in this character be held liable. His failure to pay over the money to plaintiff is simply a breach of contract and is governed by the statute of limitations applicable in such case. Edwards v. Ingraham, 31 Miss. 372. b. The Kind of Money. Payment of an execution must be in lawful money of the United States, and the sheriff or other officer cannot receive anything else in satisfaction of a judgment except with the consent of plaintiff.[19] Lawful money of the United States was at one time considered to be gold and silver only;[20] but this is no longer the case, since the decision of the legal tender cases[21] by the supreme court of the United States. Payment in bank-bills[22] or in Confederate currency[23] without the consent of plaintiff is unauthorized, particularly if the bank-bill or currency is depreciated.[24] Plaintiff has the right to direct the officer to receive a certain kind of money in satisfaction of his debt.[25] If the sheriff or marshal receive bank-notes or other non-legal tender currency, and plaintiff sanctions the transaction either expressly or impliedly the execution is discharged.[26]

d. Acceptance of Choses in Action by Officer. Choses in action, such as mortgages, promissory notes, etc., are not an exception to the rule that money alone can be received by the sheriff, under his writ, in satisfaction of the judgment.[29] But a chose in action may be taken in payment of an execution with the consent of plaintiff.[30] Whether a chose in action has been received in satisfaction of the execution is always a question of fact.[31] By the general rule the giving of a promissory note does not of itself raise any presumption of settlement of the account between the parties.[32]

Where the attorney of the judgment creditor indorsed on the execution that he had received for collection a promissory note made by a third person and payable to the debtor for a greater amount than the judgment, and that in consideration thereof he consented that the execution should be returned unsatisfied, the execution was not discharged. The attorney "had, without doubt, authority to discharge the defendants from this judgment; but he had no authority to make his clients the bailiffs of the defendants to collect the note of their debtors, and subject them to an action of account by the defendants." Even though plaintiffs themselves had made this receipt upon the execution, it would not have operated as a discharge of the execution, for it does not purport to be received in satisfaction of the debt, but merely to be taken for collection. "Another execution might lawfully have been sued out immediately after this should have been returned." Langdon v. Potter, 13 Mass. 319, 320.

and from the terms of the statute granting the right, the power of the sheriff to set off executions depends upon the question whether or not judgments are mutual. Plaintiff in one must be defendant in the other.[35] Not only is this so, but the mutuality must exist in another respect: the judgments must in fact belong to and be the property of the respective parties thereto.[36] It is, however, immaterial what may be the nature of the causes of action upon which the judgments have been rendered, as where one is in tort and the other in contract.[37] It has been held that neither the sheriff, the coroner, nor the constable can set off executions unless they are in his possession as an officer authorized and obliged to obey them and unless the writs are directed to him.[38]

C. By Sale of Debtor's Property. When property is levied on and sold under an execution it is a satisfaction of the execution to the extent of the proceeds of the sale.[39] The fact that plaintiff is obliged to refund the amount realized has been held not to destroy the satisfaction of the judgment received from the sale and that no further satisfaction could be had from defendant.[40]

There the plaintiff brought a scire facias quare executionem non, and the plea was, not simply that the sheriff had levied, but that he had taken divers sheep of the defendant for the debt, and yet detaineth them. The reason given was, that 'the plaintiff has his remedy against the sheriff, and the execution is lawful which the defendant cannot resist.' The value of the sheep was not mentioned; and surely it cannot be pretended that such a step shall be taken as a satisfaction per se. Suppose the sheep had been sold, bringing only half the judgment; was the remedy by action, scire facias, or execution gone for the residue? See 21 Cent. Dig. tit. "Execution," § 1074½ et seq.

A levy on personal property is prima facie a satisfaction pro tanto; and a surety is bound by the presumptive satisfaction of an execution arising from a previous levy on personal property belonging to the principal, and he cannot recover from the principal any sum which he may afterward pay in satisfaction of the judgment, unless he show an amotion of the levy, or otherwise destroy by sufficient proof the presumption of payment thus created. Brown v. Kidd, 34 Miss. 291.

The levy of an execution on personalty is only affirmative evidence of the satisfaction of the execution to the value of the property so seized. It seems a levy on personal property is never deemed a payment except in those cases where, if it were not, defendant would be twice deprived of his property on the same judgment. Banks v. Evans, 10 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 35, 48 Am. Dec. 734.

"It is not an open question in this State that the levy of an execution on personal property operates as a satisfaction for the same. To this general proposition two exceptions have been established, viz.: the levy will not operate as a satisfaction if the levy be released, or the defendant himself dispose of the property." Hunn v. Hough, 5 Heisk. (Tenn.) 708, 710.

"We are aware of the necessity of guarding this rule carefully. Hence, we state that a levy dismissed by the plaintiff, with the consent of the defendant, is no satisfaction or discharge, so far as he alone is concerned. In that event, it would be a satisfaction, as far as third persons are concerned, as sureties, junior judgment creditors or purchasers from the defendant." Newsom v. McLendon, 6 Ga. 392, 396.

A levy which does not show the value of the property does not raise a presumption of satisfaction of the execution. Fuller v. Watkins, 11 Heisk. (Tenn.) 489.

creditor to obtain satisfaction.[45] A levy and sale under a subsequent execution on the same judgment and against the same defendant,[46] while the former levy remains, are void and no title passes.[47] If the sheriff allows the property to go to waste or the property is otherwise disposed of so that defendant loses the benefit of it, the presumption of satisfaction becomes conclusive in favor of defendant;[48] and plaintiff must seek his remedy against the sheriff.[49] The presumption also becomes conclusive if, after a great lapse of time, a disposition of the levy is unaccounted for.[50] If the property is left in the possession of defendant, no presumption of satisfaction arises.[51] Nor does any presumption arise when there is a levy of an attachment.[52] When there are several executions in the sheriff's hands and the levy of one of them is made upon sufficient personal property to satisfy all, no presumption of satisfaction of those executions not levied arises.[53] The presumption of satisfaction may be rebutted;[54] as by showing that the property has been restored to defendant,[55] particularly where the property has been

66. "The reason upon which this principle was adopted, was, that the creditor elects to hold the land for so many years till the debt be satisfied out of the rents and profits, and the judgment-roll shews, that it was satisfied by the elegit. This rule was so manifestly unjust, that in the thirty-second year of the reign of Henry VIII. a statute was enacted, for that reason expressed in its preamble, by which it was provided, that where the creditor is lawfully divested of the land so delivered to him on such extent, he may have a writ of scire facias against the defendant; and thereupon, if no sufficient cause, other than the acceptance of said land on the former writ of execution, is shewn, to bar the said suit, a new writ or writs of execution on the judgment, of the like nature and effect as the former, for the residue of the debt unsatisfied by such former execution; and the same provision is reenacted, in similar terms, by the 8 Geo. I. c. 25.; under which provisions the plaintiff, on the new writ of execution, has the same privileges as on the issuing of the original elegit; that is, if the plaintiff can have no fruit of it, he may sue out a scire-facias against the debtor's goods or chattels, or a ca. sa. to take his person in satisfaction of the debt." Cowles v. Bacon, 21 Conn. 451, 462, 56 Am. Dec. 371.

Delivery of possession of land by liberari facias is a satisfaction of the execution. "In England, when an elegit is extended upon the land of the defendant, and returned filed, and possession delivered, it is a full satisfaction plaintiff was not entitled to any further means of satisfaction by writ, action, or execution, and if the tenant by elegit was divested of the land so held under that writ of execution by one having a title paramount to his own, that is, a better title than the debtor's from whom he extended the land, the rule of law that the debt was considered satisfied by the extent remained unchanged and unaffected by this circumstance; and the creditor could not afterward resort to any other writ or have any other remedy for the portion of his debt thus deemed to be satisfied. But this is not the modern rule. Although a number of cases may admit that a levy upon sufficient personalty is a satisfaction of the debt, they all but universally hold that that rule does not prevail in the case of a levy upon realty.[67] The sheriff gets no qualified property in lands levied on, as is the case in a levy upon personalty. The debtor still holds title and possession.[68] A levy upon land does not operate even as a prima facie satisfaction and therefore does not extinguish the debt, although the levy is unaccounted for.[69] There can be no satisfaction of an execution levied on real estate until the purchaser gets a good title at the sale.[70] Of course if the sale brings enough to satisfy the debt the judgment is extinguished.[71]

E. Satisfaction by Arrest of Debtor.[72] If the body of the debtor is taken in execution, the taking operates as a prima facie discharge of the debt and as a complete suspension of further action on the part of the judgment creditor against the imprisoned debtor to satisfy his judgment[73] during the imprisonment of the debt. And so far was the doctrine carried, that it was formerly holden that the bare entry of a prayer of an elegit, upon the roll was a bar to all executions. . . . It is unnecessary, in this state, to depend upon those principles of the English law, as the sale of land, and proceedings under a liberari facias are regulated by our acts of assembly, and particularly the act of 1705." of the debtor. If there are several defendants, a capias against one does not bar plaintiff from taking out execution against the others liable to the same judgment.[74] If the creditor discharges the debtor from his imprisonment, the debt is nevertheless satisfied and any subsequent levy on the debtor's property will be void.[75] If defendant escapes from prison the creditor may have his fieri facias for the debt.[76]

F. Application of Payment or Proceeds. Payment to the sheriff or a sale of sufficient property discharges a defendant, although the sheriff fails to pay it over to plaintiff;[77] and defendant is entitled to have the judgment satisfied of record.[78] And even if the payment is not put on record as by indorsement, the execution is nevertheless satisfied,[79] for as soon as the sheriff recovers money in payment of the execution the law makes the application in satisfaction of the judgment.[80] Of course if defendant consents to the sheriff's misapplication of the money, defendant is estopped to claim that the debt is satisfied.[81] Where there are several executions against a debtor, the proceeds of a sale under one of them should as a general rule be applied by the sheriff to satisfy according to their several priorities the different executions which are in his hands before the completion of the execution of the writ under which the sale was made.[82] It is not only the duty of the sheriff to apply the proceeds to the satisfaction of the oldest

St. 373, it was said that a sale of property and receipt by the sheriff are not per se satisfaction of any particular judgment lien, but in contemplation of law it is so applied unless the sheriff, in violation of duty, makes a misapplication of the fund to a junior lien.[83]

G. Release Without Satisfaction. A sheriff cannot discharge an execution if the judgment be not satisfied.[84] If plaintiff for a valuable consideration releases land levied on from the levy, it cannot be subjected to a levy at the instance of subsequent transferees of the execution;[85] but if property subject to execution is released by plaintiff, the execution is satisfied to the extent of the value of the property so released so far as purchasers and creditors are concerned.[86] A lawful tender to the sheriff of the full amount of an execution in his hands discharges the lien on the property levied upon.[87]

H. Motion to Enter Satisfaction and Notice Thereof. Where the debt has been extinguished and satisfaction has not been entered, the debtor should move to have the entry made;[88] his remedy is not in equity.[89] If the creditor purchases at an execution sale of land, he may show, before he has received the conveyance, upon a rule to show cause why satisfaction should not be entered, that the title was not in defendant, and that defendant was guilty of fraud in representing the title in himself.[90] In no case ought satisfaction to be ordered by the court where the evidence of payment is not conclusive.[91] Before a motion encumbrance, although its lien may be extinguished.

A sale under a junior execution for an amount sufficient to satisfy a senior is to be deemed a payment in satisfaction of the latter, and a subsequent payment by the debtor upon the senior does not authorize the presumption that he consented that the proceeds of the sheriff's sale should be applied to the junior execution. Lawrence v. Grambling, 19 S. C. 461. In Davis v. Barkley, 1 Bailey (S. C.) 140, plaintiff had distinct judgments against two defendants for the same debt. He levied his execution on the goods of one of them, but directed the proceeds of the levy to be applied to the satisfaction of a junior judgment against the same defendant. It was held that the levy was a satisfaction of the senior judgment, and that the judgment against the other defendant was also thereby extinguished, although funds had been placed in his hands for the payment of the debt by the party ultimately liable, and had not been paid by him over to plaintiff.

If several notes are joined in one suit, and the execution recovered in such suit is satisfied only in part, a surety for some of the notes may insist upon a proportional application for the money for which he is liable. Blackstone Bank v. Hill, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 129.

In Kentucky it was held that where a sheriff applied the proceeds of an execution to the payment of an execution against plaintiff in the first execution by his direction, and there was actually no application, there was no payment of the second execution, especially after the judgment on which it issued had been revived by scire facias. Cosby v. Worland, 6 B. Mon. 195.

to enter satisfaction of or a credit upon an execution can be made notice must be given plaintiff.[92]

I. Evidence[93] and Presumptions of Satisfaction. Although the sheriff's indorsement of payments on the writ without his signature and the dates is not a legal return,[94] it is nevertheless evidence of payment.[95] The evidence must be confined to the issue.[96] A fieri facias which has not been returned is not evidence that the debt has been satisfied;[97] but a party may prove an execution satisfied, although it has been returned.[98] An admission of payment may sometimes be implied.[99] A receipt "in full" by the sheriff indorsed upon the execution raises a presumption, in the absence of any proof to the contrary, that the whole amount due has been paid, although by actual calculation the aggregate of all the credits indorsed is less than the sum due.[1] The return of "satisfied" on an execution raises the presumption that the money due on it was paid before the return-day[2] and that the right person received the money.[3] As sheriffs are not permitted, without the consent of the judgment creditor, to receive anything but money in payment of an execution,[4] a return declaring the execution to be satisfied by note raises no presumption of payment unless it shows a special authority to take a note in payment.[5] A previous payment and satisfaction of the execution will not be readily presumed as against a purchaser thereunder,[6] but of course it may be shown.[7]

J. Vacating Entry of Satisfaction — 1. When the Right Exists. Satisfaction entered upon a void execution may for sufficient reasons be vacated.[8] If the sale upon which the satisfaction has been entered has proved void on account of an informality of the sheriff, the entry of satisfaction may be vacated.[9] Where property is sold to satisfy an execution and the execution is returned satisfied, the authorities are at variance whether such satisfaction can be vacated when it appears that the title to the property sold is not in defendant. Some jurisdictions allow the right to vacate the satisfaction.[10] Others deny this right[11] in the absence of fraud on the part of defendant in his representation of title,[12] and leave the creditor to seek whatever remedies the equities of his case require.[13] Even in those jurisdictions where the vacation of satisfaction is allowed, the right is not extended to cases where defendant really has an interest in the property and the judgment creditor who purchases gets, without any fraud on the part of defendant,[14] a smaller estate than he contemplated.[15]

2. PROCEEDINGS TO OBTAIN. Scire facias is or has been a usual method of obtaining a vacation of satisfaction.[16] In the modern practice an order to show cause or a motion would be the proper method.[17] The motion to set aside the entry of satisfaction must be served upon defendant;[18] and the proceeding to set aside the entry of satisfaction must be made with due diligence.[19]

and have been held to exclude a resort to that remedy.[23] But where, as to reach equitable assets or to set aside fraudulent transfers, they provide a less effective or inadequate remedy, and, although in many respects they may be a substitute for a creditor's bill, they are by no means exclusive, but the creditor may still resort to equity.[24] In their essential features the proceedings have been regarded as equivalent to a new or independent suit instituted and conducted for the benefit of all the creditors against additional defendants whose indebtedness it is proposed to subject to the creditors' demands.[25] The better view, however, seems to be that they are new or additional proceedings of a special and equitable nature, ancillary to the original action, and designed to enforce the collection of a judgment recovered therein.[26]

B. Statutory Provisions — 1. Constitutionality. A federal statute authorizing supplementary proceedings in accordance with the state practice for the collection of judgments recovered in common-law actions in the United States courts does not conflict with the provision of the federal constitution which preserves and establishes the distinction between relief at law and in equity.[27] Nor is a statute authorizing a probate judge, when not sitting in court, to entertain supplementary proceedings in aid of an action pending in another court a violation of a constitutional provision prescribing and limiting the jurisdiction of the probate court.[28] But an act which makes no provision that no answer which the debtor may be required to make shall be used against him in any criminal prosecution is in violation of a constitutional provision that no person shall be compelled to give testimony which may incriminate him.[29]

2. Retrospective Effect. Statutes providing for supplementary proceedings are retrospective, and the proceedings are applicable to executions issued before their passage, especially where they expressly or impliedly abolish former remedies of the same kind.[30]

C. Jurisdiction[31] and Powers — 1. In General. The right to order an examination of a debtor or a third person in proceedings supplementary to execution, or to act in relation to matters incidental to such examination, is statutory, and cannot be exercised except where the authority has been expressly or impliedly conferred,[32] and ordinarily jurisdiction once acquired continues until the termination of the proceeding.[33] Jurisdiction cannot be conferred by the mere appearance of the debtor and his submission to examination without objection.[34]

2. Concurrent Jurisdiction. The jurisdiction may be concurrent or so conferred as to permit the judges of one court on the observance of certain formalities to entertain proceedings on judgments rendered in another court or jurisdiction,[35] and ordinarily the entertainment of the proceedings in one court in Courts of equity.— A judgment creditor whose execution has been returned unsatisfied may have the aid of a court of equity to subject to the satisfaction of the judgment debts due to his debtor. Bryans v. Taylor, Wright (Ohio) 245. Chancery has not the power, at suit of a judgment creditor, to institute an inquiry into the circumstances of defendant, for the purpose of discovering and compelling him to surrender securities or chattels in his personal possession. Creswell v. Smith, 2 Tenn. Ch. 416.

The denial to county courts of jurisdiction in equity cases will not preclude them from entertaining supplementary proceedings. Second Ward Bank v. Upmann, 12 Wis. 499.

Title to real estate involved.— The Indiana act providing that, when it appears that title to real estate is in issue in the common pleas court, the cause shall be transferred to the circuit court of the same county does not deprive the court of common pleas of jurisdiction in proceedings supplementary to execution, where title to real estate is incidentally involved. Carpenter v. Vanscoten, 20 Ind. 50.

Delinquent taxes cannot be collected by these proceedings — another remedy having been provided by statute. Bassett v. Wheeler, 84 N. Y. 466. See, generally, Taxation.

In Indiana supplementary proceedings may be instituted in a court different from that in which the original judgment was rendered accordance with the statutory authority will not operate to oust the other court of jurisdiction.[36]

3. Exclusive Jurisdiction. Sometimes the jurisdiction is exclusive,[37] but while as a matter of propriety all proceedings based on the same judgment should be had before the same officer,[38] this rule will not preclude another judge from entertaining proceedings based on the same judgment against other parties.[39]

4. Where Causes Are Transferred. Where causes pending in an existing court are by constitutional provisions transferred to a newly created tribunal, the power to act in supplementary proceedings respecting executions issued out of the court from whence the causes are transferred necessarily follows.[40]

5. Of Court or Judge. Where the power to compel the appearance of the judgment debtor is conferred on the judges of a court, the order should be made by one of them and not by the court;[41] but where the power is vested in and out of which the execution was issued. Cooke v. Ross, 22 Ind. 157.

In Louisiana under the act of March 20, 1839, providing that, where plaintiff has applied for a fieri facias, and has reason to believe that a third person has property of the judgment debtor under his control or is indebted to him, such person may be cited to answer touching such property or debt, the parish court of any parish to which an execution is issued has jurisdiction to issue the citation. Featherstone v. Compton, 3 La. Ann. 380.

In New York the judges of county courts (Miller v. Adams, 7 Lans. 131; Conway v. Hitchins, 9 Barb. 378; People v. Mead, 29 How. Pr. 360; Genesee Bank v. Spencer, 15 How. Judge of other district.— While an order for the examination of a third person may be made by a judge outside of the district in which the debtor resides, all proceedings subsequent to the examination must be before the judge of the district of the debtor's residence. the court or a judge thereof, any order in the proceeding may be made by either.[42]

6. Dependent on Debtor's Residence or Place of Business.[43] The statutes respecting these proceedings require as a rule that the proceedings shall be instituted in the county where the debtor resides or has a place of business,[44] and that where the debtor is a non-resident the proceedings shall be instituted in the county where the judgment was rendered or the judgment-roll filed.[45]

7. Dependent on Recovery of Judgment, Issue of Execution and Return[46] — a. In General. The recovery of a judgment, the issuance of an execution thereon, and its return unsatisfied in whole or in part are prerequisites to the right to examine the judgment debtor or a third person in aid of the execution or after its return for the purpose of discovering property of the debtor.[47]

Issue to county of temporary residence.— The execution is properly issued to the sheriff of the county where the debtor has a summer residence, although his permanent residence is elsewhere. Matter of Rowland, 21 N. Y. App. Div. 172, 47 N. Y. Suppl. 493. A debtor hiring lodgings from month to month and occupying them for several years is a resident within the county where he lodges so that the issue of an execution to that county is sufficient to sustain the proceedings, although he has a permanent residence elsewhere. Rose v. Durant, 87 N. Y. App. Div. 240, 84 N. Y. Suppl. 276.

Issue of second execution.— Where a second execution can only be issued by leave of the court, an execution issued without such leave will not give the court jurisdiction. Y.) 512, it was held that where one execution had been properly issued an order for examination might issue, although another outstanding execution had not been returned.

In New Jersey a proceeding for a discovery under the statute in aid of execution need not be preceded by an execution de bonis et terris. A fieri facias against personalty alone will suffice. Westfall v. Dunning, 50 N. J. L. 459, 14 Atl. 486.

In Oregon in proceedings in aid of execution a judgment creditor is not required to levy on and sell tangible property of the judgment debtor before invoking the aid of supplemental proceedings. State v. Downing, 40 Oreg. 309, 58 Pac. 863, 66 Pac. 917.

Where the object of the proceedings is to reach property which could not be reached by the execution or found by the sheriff, it is absolutely necessary that the execution should have been returned unsatisfied in whole or in part. Shannon v. Steger, 75 N. Y. App. Div. 279, 78 N. Y. Suppl. 163.

Sufficiency of return.— A return stating that no personal property was found, and reciting that a levy was made on an equity not subject to execution, sufficiently shows the return of the execution unsatisfied. House v. Swanson, 7 Heisk. (Tenn.) 32. Where the sheriff had advertised real estate of the debtor for sale and before the day of sale and after the limitation of the time fixed by law for making the return, he made a return, stated that he had collected nothing, had found no personal property but that he had levied on certain real estate which he had advertised for sale, the return was held insufficient to justify an order of examination. E. Who May Be Examined[62] — 1. As Judgment Debtor — a. In General. The proceedings may be maintained against joint debtors,[63] a married woman,[64] an infant,[65] a lunatic,[66] a trustee against whom judgment has been recovered as such,[67] and it seems a sheriff against whom execution has issued.[68] But a discharged bankrupt,[69] a stock-holder of a corporation against which judgment has been obtained,[70] or a foreign consul[71] will not be compelled to submit to an examination.

b. Corporations. As to corporations, the decisions are not uniform; thus while it has been held that a corporation may be examined,[72] it has also been held that this right only extends to a foreign corporation having no business or agency within the state,[73] and not to a domestic corporation,[74] or a foreign corporation having a place of business within the state.[75]

2. As a Third Person. With certain exceptions[76] any person indebted to cure leave of the court to institute the proceedings. Moore v. Taylor, 2 How. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 343.

F. Property Which May Be Reached[78] — 1. In General. Proceedings supplementary to execution operate on all personal property, money, and choses in action whether in possession or under the control of the debtor or in the hands of third persons.[79] Thus it has been held that property which can be reached by on a judgment against the assignee for a debt of the bankrupt, as a corporation having property of the debtor. Havens v. National City Bank, 4 Hun (N. Y.) 131, 6 Thomps. & C. (N. Y.) 346.

Where sufficient property has been discovered by the examination of third persons an order directing the examination of another person will be vacated as unnecessary. Crane v. Beecher, 6 N. Y. Suppl. 225.

Agreement to pay claim.— Where on examination of an executor the proceedings are adjourned under a stipulation to pay the claim from the first moneys coming to the executors on the debtor's account, an examination of his coexecutor is unnecessary, and cannot be maintained. Crane v. Beecher, 6 N. Y. Suppl. 225.

Effect of receivership.— Where, in sequestration proceedings against a judgment defendant to enforce payment of judgment, a receiver is appointed, a third party, having property formerly belonging to defendant, cannot be examined in supplementary proceedings, since the receiver takes title to the property. In Wisconsin such earnings are exempt, although the statute authorizes the judge to order any property of the judgment debtor not exempt from execution to be applied toward the satisfaction of the judgment. Brown v. Hebard, 20 Wis. 326, 91 Am. Dec. 408.

In Ohio the earnings of the debtor for three months next preceding the order for his examination are exempt. See Snook v. Snetzer, 25 Ohio St. 516.

The following earnings have been held to be exempt: Earnings of one in charge of others who himself performed some part of the labor (Moran v. Darcy, 10 Misc. (N. Y.) 789, 31 N. Y. Suppl. 1130), money due to a husband from his wife for services rendered to her in her separate business (Kingman v. Frank, 5 Month. L. Bul. (N. Y.) 34), earnings in a business independently carried on, in which the debtor's services are the chief factor (McSkiman v. Knowlton, 14 N. Y. Suppl. 283, 20 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 274; Sandford v. Goodwin, 20 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 276 note), and tuition fees, payable to the debtor on the day on which proceedings are commenced against him (Miller v. Hooper, 19 Hun (N. Y.) 394). But neither the proceeds of a saloon business (Prince v. Brett, 21 N. Y. App. Div. 190, 47 N. Y. Suppl. 402) or a retail ice business, in conducting which two carts and several men are employed (Mulford v. Gibbs, 9 N. Y. App. Div. 490, 41 N. Y. Suppl. 273), moneys received in the conduct of a business (Aschemoor v. Emmvert, 5 Month. L. Bul. (N. Y.) 80), moneys earned but turned into the business of the employer (Clark v. Andrews, 19 N. Y. Suppl. 211), sums due the debtor, a boarding-house keeper, from her boarders (Whalen v. Tennison, 1 Month. L. Bul. (N. Y.) 22), the income of an unmarried man derived from boarders (Van Vechten v. Hall, 14 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 436), nor the earnings of a debtor whose wife kept a boarding-house, which was self-sustaining, and with which he had nothing to do (Martin v. Sheridan, 2 Hilt. (N. Y.) 586) are exempt.

A salary is not exempt as necessary for the support of the debtor's family, when its intended use is for the support of persons as to whom there is no legal liability. Blake v. Bolte, 9 Misc. (N. (III) Of Public Officers. For reasons of public policy the wages, fees, or salary of a public official, due or to become due from the public authorities, cannot be subjected in their hands to the payment of his debts under proceedings supplementary to execution instituted for that purpose.[14] But salary or earnings of such an official which he has reduced to possession may be subjected to payment of the judgment.[15]

c. Trust Funds or Property. In some jurisdictions money or other property held in trust for the debtor cannot be reached by these proceedings where the trust was created by, or the trust fund proceeded from, a person other than the debtor,[16] unless the trust has been so far performed that the fund is payable directly to the debtor.[17] These provisions apply as well to the income of the fund as to the principal,[18] except that income in excess of what is necessary to

d. After-Acquired Property. The proceedings only affect property which the debtor has at the time the order for his examination is served, and not property thereafter acquired.[20]

G. Time of Institution — 1. During Lien of Judgment.[21] In accordance with the doctrine that the creditor must exhaust his legal remedies before he can resort to these proceedings, they are not available to him after the time the judgment ceases to be a lien on real estate or chattels real.[22]

2. Within Prescribed Time After Return of Execution.[23] Where the time after the return of execution within which the proceedings may be instituted is limited to a time prescribed, the failure to institute the proceedings within the time so limited is a preclusion to the right;[24] and this, although the right accrued under a former statute.[25] The right once lost is not revived by the issuance of a second execution.[26] But if the commencement of the proceedings is not limited to any Excusing timely return.— Second Ward Bank v. Upmann, 12 Wis. 499.

It will be presumed that the sheriff did his duty by returning the execution within the time limited by law. Bean v. Tonnelle, 24 Hun (N. Y.) 353, 1 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 33.

That the debtor was adjudicated a bankrupt, or that proceedings were stayed by the federal court, will not suspend the operation of the limitation, when the debt was not proved in bankruptcy, although proved afterward. Cleveland v. Johnson, 5 Misc. (N. Y.) 484, 26 N. Y. Suppl. 734.

Objection to an execution because not issued within the time limited by law must be raised in a direct proceeding for that purpose (U. S. Land, etc., Co. v. Pike, 2 Month. L. Bul. (N. Y.) 31); and the proceedings will not be vacated under such circumstances if they were instituted in good faith (Port Jervis Nat. Bank v. Hauser, 15 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 488).

time after entry of judgment they may be instituted at any time during the life of the judgment.[27]

3. Premature or Collusive Return.[28] The creditor's remedy by execution must be really exhausted by permitting the officer to take the usual course. If there is collusion, or the return is made prematurely, pursuant to the creditor's instructions, and without any real attempt to effect a levy, the proceedings cannot be sustained.[29]

4. Limitation of Time.[30] Where the time of instituting the proceedings is limited, the failure to resort to them during the period of limitation will preclude the right to maintain such proceedings.[31] Even though no time is limited the

Where two executions have been issued the limitation applies to the return of the execution first issued. Importers', etc., Nat. Bank v. Quackenbush, 143 N. Y. 567, 38 N. E. 728. But see Levy v. Kirby, 51 N. Y. Super. Ct. 69, 7 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 98.

The mere fact that the premature return was made at the request of the creditor will not invalidate the proceedings where a bona fide but unsuccessful attempt has been made to find property of the debtor (Engle v. Bonneau, 2 Sandf. Where three days after the issue of an execution and a request to the sheriff to try and make it, the latter returned it unsatisfied, with a statement that it was unnecessary to call upon the debtors, as they had nothing, he having had already several executions against them which were returned unsatisfied, an order for the examination of the debtors before the expiration of the sixty days limited for the return was held to have been properly granted. Dormant judgment.— A proceeding under Ohio Rev. St. § 5464, in aid of execution, cannot be maintained on a judgment which has become dormant when it is commenced. Simpson v. Hook, 6 Ohio Cir. Ct. 27, 3 Ohio Cir. Dec. 333.

proceedings must nevertheless be commenced within a reasonable time after the right accrues [32]

H. Proceedings to Procure Examination [33] — 1. The Affidavit [34] — a. Entitling. The affidavit should be entitled in the court in which the proceedings are instituted,[35] but, if it sufficiently refers to the proceeding, it will not be invalidated by a defective title.[36]

b. Necessary Allegations — (i) In General. Ordinarily, to confer jurisdiction to make an order for the examination of the judgment debtor or a third person, an affidavit should be presented [37] which should appropriately set out the requisite facts.[38] An affidavit made on information and belief should disclose the source of information by naming the informant and stating his means of knowledge as well as the affiant's grounds of belief.[39]

Necessity of leave.— See Currie v. Noyes, Code Rep. N. S. (N. Y.) 198.

Statutory language.— It is not enough to follow the language of the statute. Rome First Nat. Bank v. Wilson, 13 Hun (N. Y.) 232.

Alleging jurisdiction.— An affidavit presented in a court of inferior jurisdiction need not state that it is a court of record. Sayer v. McDonald, 2 How. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 119.

Absence or disqualification of judge.— Where an order can only be made by an officer where the judge whose duty to make it is absent from the county or for any reason unable or disqualified to act to authorize such officer to make an order of examination, the affidavit must show such absence, inability, or disqualification. Shannon v. Steger, 75 N. Y. App. Div. 279, 78 N. Y. Suppl. 163.

The nature of the relief sought need not be stated. Knight v. Nash, 22 Minn. 452.

Separate prayers for relief.— Where two separate affidavits are filed in which causes therefor are stated, and each of which closes with a separate prayer for relief, the sufficiency of such affidavits is to be considered separately. Abell v. Riddle, 75 Ind. 345.

The mere appearance and the examination of the judgment debtor without objection will not confer jurisdiction. Bingham v. Disbrow, 37 Barb. (N. Y.) 24, 14 Abb. Pr. (N. (II) Of Authority to Institute.[40] Where the affidavit is made by a person other than the judgment debtor it must show his authority to act on behalf of the creditor.[41] So where the judgment creditor is dead, his personal representatives seeking to enforce the judgment through these proceedings must show their right to do so.[42]

(III) Of Compliance With Rule of Court.[43] An affidavit to procure an order of examination need not comply with a rule relative to motions generally, requiring the motion papers to state whether or not any previous application for the order sought was made.[44]

(IV) Of Recovery of Judgment.[45] The affidavit should affirmatively show the recovery of a judgment,[46] that it was duly entered or docketed, or, where the judgment was recovered in an inferior or a justice's court, that a transcript thereof

An attorney who claims a lien on the judgment must show his status. Merchant v. Sessions, 5 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 24; Russell v. Sumerville, 4 Month. L. Bul. (N. Y.) 3.

The authority of the attorney of the creditor to institute the proceedings need not be shown. Miller v. Adams, 52 N. Y. 409 [affirming 7 Lans. 131]; Kress v. Morehead, 8 N. Y. St. 858.

Right to require proof of authority.— Where the officer to whom application is made doubts the right of the attorney who applies to act for the judgment creditor, he may require evidence on that point. Kress v. Morehead, 8 N. Y. St. 858.

42. The affidavit must state the death of the creditor, the issue of letters to the applicant, his due qualification, and that he has ever since acted as the personal representative of the decedent. Walker v. Donovan, 6 Daly (N. Y.) 552, 53 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 3.

Necessity of formal proof.— See Collier v. De Revere, 7 Hun (N. Y.) 61; Scott v. Durfee, 59 Barb. (N. Y.) 390 note.

At most, however, non-compliance with such a rule (Bean v. Tonnelle, 24 Hun (N. Y.) 353, 1 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 33), or with a rule requiring the indorsement with the name and address of plaintiff's attorney of all papers required to be filed (Dorsey v. Cummings, 48 Hun (N. Prior invalid order.— It is not necessary to refer to a previous order which was a nullity. Ludlow v. Mead, 3 N. Y. Suppl. 321.

Jurisdiction of justice.— An affidavit in proceedings on a judgment rendered by a justice need not show that he had jurisdiction. Conway v. Hitchins, 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 378. A statement that the judgment was recovered in a justice's court in a certain town named sufficiently states before whom the recovery was had without further particularity. Kress v. Morehead, 8 N. Y. St. 858.

Place of recovery.— An affidavit stating that "judgment was rendered and perfected in this action" is sufficient statement that the judgment was recovered in the court in which the affidavit is entitled. Webster v. Sawens, 3 How. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 320.

In whose favor.— See Kress v. Morehead, 8 N. Y. St. 858.

Recovery on personal service or appearance. — It is not necessary to state that the judgment was rendered on personal service of the summons or on the debtor's appearance, when that fact appears by the judgment-roll on file. Sayer v. McDonald, 2 How. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 119. To the same effect see Bean v. Tonnelle, 24 Hun (N. Y.) 353, 1 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 33. Where the execution was returned at the time the statute in effect did not require it to show that the judgment was recovered upon personal service of the summons or an appearance, an application which fails to show that judgment was so rendered is sufficient, although the existing statute was filed in the proper county.[47] The affidavit should describe the judgment with substantial accuracy,[48] and should show that it was for an amount authorizing the debtor's examination.[49]

(v) Of Execution and Return.[50] Unless the proceeding is in aid of execution the regular issuance of an execution on the judgment against the property of the judgment debtor and its return unsatisfied in whole or in part must be appropriately shown.[51] contains that requirement. Folwell v. Cambeis, 14 N. Y. Wkly. Dig. 115.

47. Hawes v. Barr, 7 Rob. (N. Y.) 452, holding that a statement that the judgment-roll was filed is insufficient.

A misstatement of the date of entry will not render the order void. Matter of Hatfield, 17 N. Y. App. Div. 430, 45 N. Y. Suppl. 270.

In proceedings on a judgment of a court of record a statement that it was docketed in the county clerk's office is not essential. Kennedy v. Thorp, 2 Daly (N. Y.) 258, 3 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y. 131 [reversed on other grounds in 51 N. Y. 174].

Sufficiency of allegation of docketing.— See Ludlow v. Mead, 3 N. Y. Suppl. 321.

Time of filing transcript.— Hawes v. Barr, 7 Rob. (N. Y.) 452.

The affidavit need not state that a transcript was filed except where the judgment was rendered by a justice. Bingham v. Disbrow, 37 Barb. (N. Y.) 24, 14 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 251; Kennedy v. Thorp, 2 Daly (N. Y.) 258, 3 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 131 [reversed on other grounds in 51 N. Y. 174].

Necessity where execution issues out of same court.—The affidavit need not state that an execution has been issued, since a judge will take judicial notice that an execution has been issued in his own court. Timm v. Stegman, 6 Wash. 13, 32 Pac. 1004.

Issue to what county.— It must appear that the execution issued to the county where the debtor resides when the order is made. Schenck v. Irwin, 60 Hun (N. Y.) 361, 15 N. Y. Suppl. 55, 21 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 96.

(vi) Of Debtor's Residence or Place of Business.[52] The affidavit must state the residence of the judgment debtor or his place of business[53] at the time of making the affidavit[54] or of the institution of the proceedings.[55] A statement in the alternative is bad[56]

(vii) As to Property of Debtor. With respect to the necessity in proceedings instituted after the return of the execution of alleging the existence or non-existence of property belonging to the debtor,[57] the authorities, because of Admissibility of affidavit in action.— The affidavit cannot be used at the trial to supply a deficiency in the proof as to the issue of an execution. Balz v. Benninghof, 5 Ind. App. 522, 32 N. E. 595.

The kind of execution, that is, whether "against property," must be alleged. People v. Hulburt, 5 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 446, Code Rep. N. S. (N. Y.) 75, 9 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 245. But see McArthur v. Lansburgh, Code Rep. N. S. (N. Y.) 211, holding that if the issue of execution is alleged it will be presumed that it was against property.

Return where the proceedings are in aid of the execution in the hands of the sheriff need not be alleged. Hutson v. Weld, 38 Hun (N. Y.) 142.

The return of an alias execution must be shown. Rome First Nat. Bank v. Wilson, 13 Hun (N. Y.) 232.

Time of return.— The affidavit must show a return of the execution within the time limited for the institution for the proceedings. McGuire v. Hudson, 16 N. Y. Suppl. 392. It is sufficient to show that the time within which it is the sheriff's duty to make the return has expired. Bean v. Tonnelle, 24 Hun (N. Y.) 353, 1 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 33. It is immaterial that the return of nulla bona was made more than a year before the affidavit. Burkett v. Holeman, 119 Ind. 141, 21 N. E. 470; Burkett v. Bowen, 118 Ind. 379, 21 N. E. 38.

Waiver of proper return.— Appearance and submission to an examination is a waiver of an objection that a sheriff's return was defective where no prejudice has resulted to the debtor. Baker v. Herkimer, 6 N. Y. St. 581.

Proof of the return of the execution unsatisfied may be made by an affidavit of the creditor (Conway v. Hitchins, 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 378) or by the sheriff's return (Hinsdale v. Sinclair, 83 N. C. 338).

The court is not concluded by the sheriff's return of nulla bona, where it is apparent by the record that the return is false. Moyer v. Moyer, 7 N. Y. App. Div. 523, 40 N. Y. Suppl. 258.

An allegation that the debtor has an "office" for the personal transaction of business sufficiently states that he has a "place" for the transaction of business in person. Batcheldor v. Nugent, 24 N. Y. Suppl. 828, 23 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 178.

Non-residence.— An allegation that the debtor resides in another state is insufficient. Driggs v. Smith, 47 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 215.

54. The residence or place of business which must be stated is that of the time of making the affidavit and not that of the time the execution was issued. Franey v. Smith, 88 Hun (N. Y.) 215, 34 N. Y. Suppl. 780; Zelie v. Vroman, 22 Misc. (N. Y.) 486, 50 N. Y. Suppl. 836.

57. In Indiana to reach funds of the judgment debtor in the hands of third parties, the affidavit must show that such debtor has property which he unjustly refuses to apply toward the satisfaction of the judgment. Earl v. Skiles, 93 Ind. 178.

In Iowa under a statute requiring an affidavit to show that the debtor has property which he refuses to apply to the satisfaction of the judgment, such affidavit is not necessary on a second examination, which is but the continuation of a former one. McDonnell v. Henderson, 74 Iowa 619, 38 N. W. 512.

In New Jersey the petition must state a belief that the judgment debtor has property reserved sufficient to pay the execution. Seyfert v. Edison, 47 N. J. L. 428, 1 Atl. 502.

In New York, although there are decisions to the contrary (Engle v. Bonneau, 2 Sandf. 679, 3 Code Rep. 205; Jones v. Lawlin, 1 Sandf. 722; Tillow v. Vere, 1 Code Rep. 130), the rule seems to be that the affidavit need not state that the debtor has property applicable to the debt, which was not reached by the execution (Anonymous, 3 Sandf. 725; Hatch v. Weyburn, 8 How. Pr. 163; Hough v. Koblin, Code Rep. N. S. 232).

In North Carolina it is necessary to show: (1) The want of property liable to execution, which is proved by the sheriff's return of "unsatisfied;" (2) the non-existence of any equitable estate in land within the lien of the judgment; and (3) the existence of property, choses in action, and things of value unaffected by any lien and incapable of levy. Hackney v. Arrington, 99 N. C. 110, 5 S. E. 747; Magruder v. Shelton, 98 N. C. 545, 4 S. E. 141, 2 Am. St. Rep. 349; Hinsdale v. Sinclair, 83 N. C. 338; Weiller v. Lawrence, 81 N. C. 65. A statement that diverse statutes, are not uniform. And so with the necessity of specifying or describing the property.[58] Where in a proceeding in aid of execution the statute requires it to be shown that the judgment debtor has property which he unjustly refuses to apply to the satisfaction of the judgment, that fact must be duly alleged.[59]

(VIII) AS TO AMOUNT DUE. So long as any part of the judgment remains unsatisfied the creditor is entitled to an order requiring the debtor to appear and answer.[60] And it has been held that if the execution has been returned partly certain persons are indebted to the debtor is sufficient without stating that defendant has no property liable to execution. Hutchison v. Symons, 67 N. C. 156. The omission of the proper negative averments as to property in defendant liable to execution, or the existence in him of equitable interests which may be subjected to sale in the nature of execution, may be remedied by amendment at the hearing. Weiller v. Lawrence, 81 N. C. 65.

In Oregon a statement that the debtor had property liable to execution which he refused to apply toward the satisfaction of the judgment, if believed by the court or judge, is sufficient to authorize the issuance of orders requiring the judgment debtor to appear for examination and to satisfy the judgment, notwithstanding an attachment of certain tangible property without levy of execution thereon, and the existence of sufficient tangible property to satisfy an execution. State v. Downing, 40 Oreg. 309, 58 Pac. 863, 66 Pac. 917.

In Pennsylvania an affidavit for the examination of an alleged fraudulent debtor, which follows the words of the statute, that deponent "had reason to believe" that the judgment debtor had property, rights in action, etc., "which he fraudulently conceals" and refuses to apply to the payment of his debts," etc., is sufficient, although it does not set forth the grounds of belief. Davis v. Mowbray, 9 Wkly. Notes Cas. 47; Cox v. Walton, 8 Wkly. Notes Cas. 360. Contra, Horstman v. Kaufman, 8 Wkly. Notes Cas. 73.

In North Carolina the property need not be specified. Magruder v. Shelton, 98 N. C. 545, 4 S. E. 141, 2 Am. St. Rep. 349.

Allegation of exemption.— Abell v. Riddle, 75 Ind. 345.

59. Hutchison v. Symons, 67 N. C. 156.

In Indiana, when the execution remains in the sheriff's hands unsatisfied, the affidavit must show that the judgment debtor has no other property than that held by a third party. Balz v. Benninghof, 5 Ind. App. 522, 32 N. E. 595. It is sufficient to allege that the debtor has an equitable interest in real estate which he refuses to apply to the judgment. Carpenter v. Vanscoten, 20 Ind. 50.

In Iowa it is necessary to show that no property is known to plaintiff or the officer on which execution can be executed, or that there is not enough to satisfy the claim of plaintiff, and further that defendant has property in the state not exempt from execution. Lutz v. Aylesworth, 66 Iowa 629, 24 N. W. 245.

In New York a plain case showing that the debtor has property which he unjustly refuses to apply must be shown. Owen v. Dupignac, 17 How. Pr. 512. An affidavit which disclosed only that there was a place of business conducted by defendant's son, and that plaintiff was informed that defendant had and still has an interest in the merchandise and stock thereof, does not show that he has any property freed from the claim of third persons which he refuses to apply to the payment of his debts. Owen v. Dupignac, 17 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 512.

An affidavit in the language of the statute is sufficient. Rome First Nat. Bank v. Wilson, 13 Hun (N. Y.) 232.

An affidavit on information and belief that defendant has property which he unjustly refuses to apply toward the satisfaction of the judgment" is insufficient. The affiant should give the name of his informant, with his means of knowledge, and should describe the property and allege a demand. Manken v. Pape, 65 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 453.

Property not subject to levy.— In New York an order in aid of execution can be granted only on a showing that the debtor has property which is not subject to execution, or which cannot be reached by an execution. Sackett v. Newton, 10 How. Pr. 560. In North Carolina a statement that defendant has not sufficient property subject to execution to satisfy the judgment but has property "not exempted from execution," which he unjustly refuses to apply to its satisfaction, is sufficient. Farmers', etc., Nat. Bank v. Burns, 109 N. C. 105, 13 S. E. 871. In Oregon a statement that the debtor had property liable to execution which he refused to apply toward the satisfaction of the judgment, if believed by the court or judge, if sufficient to authorize the issuance of orders requiring the judgment debtor to appear for examination and to satisfy the judgment, notwithstanding an attachment of certain tangible property without levy of execution thereon, and the existence of sufficient tangible property to satisfy an execution. unsatisfied the affidavit must contain a statement showing the amount due on the judgment.[61]

(IX) Of Demand to Apply Property. In some jurisdictions where the proceedings are in aid of an execution which has not been returned no demand on the debtor to apply his property in satisfaction of the judgment is necessary or need be shown.[62] In others such a demand and non-compliance therewith has been held necessary to show a refusal of such application.[63]

(X) Indebtedness or Possession of Property by Third Party— (A) In General. Where to authorize the examination of third persons it must appear that he is indebted to the judgment debtor in a sum exceeding a specified amount, the facts relative thereto must be duly alleged.[64] But such a provision does not apply where the object of the proceeding is to reach property of the debtor in the hands of such third person.[65]

(B) Necessity of Positive Allegations. It is not necessary to present positive proof of the indebtedness of the third person, or his possession of property of the debtor, but it is only necessary that the proof should be sufficient to satisfy the judge to whom application is made.[66]

(C) Alternative Allegations. An affidavit that such person has property of Information and belief.—An allegation that the third person has property of the debtor or is indebted to him, made on information and belief, is sufficient to confer jurisdiction without positive proof. Miller v. Adams, 52 N. Y. 409 [affirming 7 Lans. 131]. An order based on an affidavit made on information and belief is effective until vacated. Pierce v. Parrish, 28 N. Y. App. Div. 22, 50 N. Y. Suppl. 735; Fleming v. Tourgee, 16 N. Y. Suppl. 2, 21 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 297.

A subsequent order made in the proceeding cannot be attacked, because the order for examination was on information and belief. Cooman v. Board of Education, 37 Hun (N. Y.) 96.

The better practice seems to require, however, that the allegations should be as positive as the circumstances permit, and that where the affidavit is made on information and belief the sources of the information and grounds of the belief should be appropriately stated. the debtor in excess of the statutory amount or is indebted to him beyond such amount is bad because in the alternative.[67]

c. Verification. The affidavit should be verified by the judgment creditor, or by some other person having knowledge of the facts and authorized to act in that behalf.[68]

d. Filing Affidavits. After satisfaction of the judgment and discontinuance of the proceedings, and subsequent to procuring an order to examine a third party, the debtor may compel the creditor to file the affidavits on which it was granted.[69]

e. Defects — Objections. If the affidavit is defective, the remedy is to set aside the order granted upon it[70] by a motion in which the defects are specified.[71]

2. Order For Examination — a. Entitling. Where the order is made by the judge of a court other than that out of which the execution issued, it is properly entitled as of the latter court.[72] But jurisdiction will not be lost because the order is improperly entitled.[73]

all the facts necessary to the jurisdiction,[76] and when all the necessary facts to constitute it a regular and valid order are recited it will be so deemed until attacked by a direct proceeding and the contrary is made to appear.[77]

(II) Before Whom Returnable[78] — (A) Judge. Except where a referee is appointed the order must require the judgment debtor to appear before the judge who grants the order or before a designated justice before whom the subsequent proceedings are to be had.[79] In New York when the proceedings are instituted in the supreme court within a district where the debtor does not reside, the order must be made returnable to a justice of the district in which the debtor has his residence.[80] It is essential that the officer before whom the proceedings are made returnable should be designated with reasonable particularity.[81] But Appearance after examination.— Sickels v. Hanley, 4 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 231.

Order returnable before court.— An order is not irregular because returnable before the court instead of before the judge by whom it was issued. Barrington v. Watkins, 36 N. Y. App. Div. 31, 55 N. Y. Suppl. 97.

Waiver of requirement to appear — Wrong justice.— An objection that the order was made returnable before one of the justices of the court, not before the judge making the order, is waived by failure to object on the return-day, and acquiescing in an order denying a motion to set aside the proceedings by failure to appeal (Ammidon v. Wolcott, 15 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 314), or by voluntarily submitting to examination (Hobart v. Frost, 5 Duer (N. Y.) 672, 3 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 119).

When such an order is made as to a third person, all subsequent proceedings must be had in the district where the debtor resides. Gildersleeve v. Lester, 69 Hun (N. Y.) 344, 23 N. Y. Suppl. 471.

Want of authority.— Although the execution issued out of a court having general jurisdiction without the state, in the absence of a statutory provision to that effect, there is no authority in the judge granting an order in one district to make all subsequent proceedings returnable before a judge in another district. mere vagueness not amounting to uncertainty will, it has been held, not vitiate the order.[82]

(B) Referee.[83] A referee may be appointed by the order[84] with[85] or, where so authorized by statute, without the consent of the parties,[86] or where it is apparent that the examination will be protracted and the parties are attended by counsel.[87]

(III) Time of Examination. The order should fix the time when the person whose examination is desired is required to appear for that purpose.[88]

(IV) Place of Examination.[89] Likewise the place of appearance or where the examination is to be held must be specified in the order.[90] With respect to a third person, a place may be designated with reference to his convenience.[91]

c. Service — (I) In General. Timely[92] service of the order and other necessary papers must be made[93] personally.[94] In some jurisdictions service may be made upon the debtor's attorney,[95] or by leaving a copy of the order with his wife,[96] and it has been held that service may be made beyond the jurisdiction of the court in which the judgment was rendered, and even without the state.[97] But the judge issuing the order has no power to dispense with or change the manner of service prescribed by statute.[98]

(II) Exemptions. A resident is not exempt from service while in attendance on court,[99] but a non-resident is,[1] and so is a legislator during the time in which he is exempt from arrest on civil process.[2]

(III) Who May Serve. Any one may serve the order.[3]

d. Filing. The debtor cannot compel the filing of an order for the examination of a third person.[6]

I. Second Examination[7] — 1. In General. A judgment creditor is entitled to examine his debtor once as fully as may be.[8] A second examination cannot be had where a full and exhaustive examination has been had,[9] or the original order is still in force or outstanding.[10] The creditor will not be permitted to harass the debtor by successive examinations.[11]

Discretion of judge.— This principle is not jurisdictional; but the grant of the order is discretionary. Marshall v. Link, 13 N. Y. Suppl. 224, 20 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 209.

Refusal of the debtor to verify his deposition furnishes a good ground for a second order. Weiss v. Ashman, 11 Misc. (N. Y.) 377, 32 N. Y. Suppl. 161, 24 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 268, 1 N. Y. Annot. Cas. 314.

Former examination on judgment recovered on.— This rule applies to a judgment rendered on a judgment on which an examination has been had. Irwin v. Chambers, 40 N. Y. Super. Ct. 432.

It is sufficient to show grounds for a belief that the debtor has acquired property since

tion has been issued and returned nulla bona,[14] or new facts have come to the knowledge of the creditor.[15] The right to reëxamine the debtor will not be precluded, by a discontinuance of the original proceedings by consent,[16] the vacation of the first order before the conclusion of the debtor's testimony,[17] the failure of the proceedings because of the non-attendance of the referee,[18] the default of the creditor,[19] or the failure of a third party to appear.[20]

3. AFFIDAVIT TO PROCURE. The affidavit presented on an application for a second examination must show that a previous order was granted, and what proceedings, if any were had thereunder;[21] but an omission in this respect may be supplied by amendment.[22] In addition the affidavit must specifically show the acquisition of property by the debtor since the former examination, that an alias execution has been issued and returned unsatisfied, or that new facts justifying a new order have come to the knowledge of the applicant.[23]

4. NOTICE OF APPLICATION. An order requiring a judgment debtor to submit to a second examination may be granted ex parte.[24]

5. SCOPE OF INQUIRY. As a rule the new examination should be limited to the time since the former examination was had.[25]

J. Proceedings to Examine Third Persons[26] — 1. IN GENERAL. Generally, in aid of the principal proceeding, the right exists to compel persons indebted or having property of the judgment debtor to submit to an examination in respect thereto.[27] This right is not affected by a provision that no action can be main-

The court has no power to limit the examination to an inquiry as to whether defendant had acquired any property, real or personal, since the date of his examination on a former order, where the order made authorized a general examination and the former order proceeding was never terminated by a decision, but was voluntarily abandoned by the consent of both parties. tained to obtain a discovery in aid of another action,[28] or by a claim by such person of ownership of the property in question;[29] nor will the right be precluded by an attachment of the debtor's property,[30] or by payment to him.[31]

2. Necessity of Proceedings Against Debtor. Proceedings for the examination of third persons are distinct proceedings from those authorizing the debtor's examination and are not dependent upon the institution of proceedings against the latter or his examination.[32]

3. Necessity of Notice to Debtor. Notice to the debtor of an application to examine a third person or of his examination is not essential,[33] but may be required in the discretion of the judge who entertains the application;[34] unless notice has been given to the debtor he cannot appear by counsel,[35] and it has been questioned whether he can move to vacate the proceedings.[36]

In Wisconsin the only restriction on a junior proceeding is that creditors prosecuting prior proceedings shall be notified of the priority of right as against persons who, being chargeable with notice of the prior proceeding, commenced subsequent proceedings of the same character.[39]

L. Contemporaneous Resort to Other Remedies.[40] The institution and pendency of proceedings supplementary to execution will not preclude the maintenance of a creditor's action by the judgment creditor;[41] nor will the levy of an attachment affect the right to institute the proceedings;[42] nor will the institution of such an action bar the examination of a third party.[43] Neither are pending proceedings affected by the issue of a second execution,[44] or the levy thereof, unless it is clear that such levy will be effectual to satisfy the judgment,[45] in which case the creditor may be compelled to elect which remedy he will pursue.[46]

M. Injunction[47] to Restrain Disposition of Property — 1. In General. To effectuate the object of the proceedings the creditor may procure an injunction restraining any person whether a party to the proceeding or not from disposing or suffering any disposition of or interference with property of the debtor, or any property or debt concerning which any person may be required to be examined until further direction.[48] The service of a restraining order on a third person creates a lien in favor of the creditor as against a similar order subsequently obtained by another creditor, but which was first served.[49]

2. Who May Be Restrained. In some jurisdictions the power to restrain pendency thereof, and that but one receiver shall be appointed. Kellogg v. Coller, 47 Wis. 649, 3 N. W. 433. Should a junior proceeding be instituted before the officer who issued the prior order for the examination of the judgment debtor, such examination should be first had in the prior proceeding, especially if the same is being diligently prosecuted. The same rule should be observed, although the junior proceeding be instituted before another officer. Kellogg v. Coller, supra.

extends only to parties to the proceedings.[50] In others the power is not limited to the restraint of the debtor, but extends to property as to which any person may be required to attend and be examined.[51]

3. Necessity of Order. A valid order made by a court or officer having jurisdiction in the premises is absolutely necessary.[52]

4. Application. The application must show some reason for the injunction,[53] and where an application is made in an action in aid of execution, the complaint must show that plaintiff is entitled to judgment.[54]

5. Property Affected. As regards the property affected, it has been held that the injunction is not operative as to property of the third person, but only as to property of the judgment debtor,[55] owned by, earned before, or due him at the time of the order;[56] and an injunction restraining the disposition of money or property inapplicable to the satisfaction of the judgment is improper and inoperative.[57]

6. Knowledge of Order. A party may be bound by an injunction order of which he has knowledge, although imperfect service is made on him.[59]

7. Abandonment. The commencement of a creditor's suit will not revive an injunction order granted in supplementary proceedings which have been abandoned.[60]

8. Stay of Injunction. A stay of all proceedings until the hearing of a motion to vacate the judgment will not stay the operation of an injunction granted on the supplementary proceeding.[61] But the operation of an order restraining a third person from disposing of property until further order in the premises ceases on the making of an order appointing a receiver.[62]

N. Arrest of Debtor.[63] Where a warrant for the arrest of the debtor will issue in these proceedings on proof that he will leave the state or conceal himself, and that there is reason to believe that he has property which he unjustly refuses to apply to the payment of the judgment,[64] the proof must be sufficient to bring the case within the provisions of the statute.[65] The warrant for the arrest may be issued by a judge[66] or the referee appointed to conduct the examination of the debtor,[67] and it is not affected by the vacation of the order for the debtor's examination.[68]

deemed pending until satisfaction of the judgment.[69] The vacation of an order for the examination of the debtor will not terminate proceedings under a warrant issued after the order.[70] It has been held, however, that a default by the creditor is of the same effect as the dismissal of a complaint without going into the merits.[71]

2. Abatement.[72] The proceedings will abate by the death of the debtor,[73] or by the issuance of a new execution on which the judgment is collected,[74] but not by such a lapse of time since their institution as will authorize a presumption of payment of the judgment,[75] or by suing out an attachment against the property of the debtor,[76] or an appeal from the judgment taken without a stay of proceedings.[77]

3. Abandonment. The proceedings may be abandoned by the act of the creditor, as by his failure to appear or proceed,[78] or to regularly adjourn or extend the proceedings.[79] But an agreement to discontinue the action,[80] the issue of a second execution after the return of the first unsatisfied,[81] or delay in procuring the appointment of a receiver, will not be deemed an abandonment of the proceedings.[82]

Under the Indiana statute which provides that "the sufficiency of the order and of the

made in the county where the judgment was rendered,[3] and to the judge who granted it.[4] If the proceedings are regular on their face extrinsic matters cannot be considered.[5] Notice of the motion should be given to the judgment creditor,[6] and should point out the error or irregularity complained of,[7] unless the defect is jurisdictional.[8] A second order of examination,[9] obtained for the failure of the debtor to verify his deposition taken in the original proceedings, may be vacated, on condition that he make the required verification.[10]

4. The Order. Unless the proceedings have been abandoned or have been otherwise terminated,[11] an order terminating the proceedings is ordinarily necessary, otherwise the proceedings will be deemed pending.[12] On vacating an order for the examination of a debtor, he may be required to appear for examination on the day named in the original order.[13]

Q. The Examination[14]— 1. Jurisdiction to Conduct. If the order of reference is not properly served on the person sought to be examined the referee acquires no jurisdiction.[15] But jurisdiction is not lost by the arrest of a debtor who has evaded examination,[16] or by the absence of the referee at the time and place set for the examination,[17] and voluntary submission to examination will constitute a waiver of want of jurisdiction.[18]

2. Oath of Referee. The oath need only be administered once. It is unnecessary to again administer it on an adjourned day.[19]

3. Powers and Duties of Referee. In addition to the general powers of the referee to conduct the examination, procure the attendance of witnesses, and the like, he may when so empowered summon the debtor to appear before him.[20] He may also require the creditor to proceed with due diligence,[21] pass on the good faith of a third person in denying any indebtedness to the debtor and direct him to pay the same,[22] and entertain an application for a stay of proceedings;[23] and he may name or suggest a receiver for appointment.[24] But he cannot, except by special order, reopen an examination completed and closed.[25]

4. Removal of Referee. A motion to remove the referee will be denied where the facts are disputed, and the debtor waived objection by submitting to examination.[26]

5. Place of Examination.[27] The place of examination is generally designated by statute or fixed by the order of examination.[28] However, an adjournment may be taken to a place other than that designated in the order,[29] and by submitting to an examination elsewhere the debtor may waive his right to have it conducted at the place designated in the order.[30]

7. Right to Counsel. Participation by counsel in the examination of a witness is not a matter of right,[33] but rests in the discretion of the referee,[34] and although it has been held that the debtor may be cross-examined in his own behalf,[35] it has also been decided that the party examined is limited to the aid of counsel in framing his answers.[36] But parties not to be examined cannot appear by counsel,[37] although on examination of a third party who has a remedy against another the latter may retain counsel to represent the former.[38]

8. Witnesses[39] — a. In General. Witnesses other than the judgment debtor may be compelled to attend and testify as on the trial of an action,[40] but the debtor is entitled to notice of their examination.[41]

b. Procuring Attendance of. The attendance of a witness cannot be enforced by order,[42] but only by the process of subpœna,[43] and he is entitled to witness' fees as a condition of appearing and testifying.[44]

unless it is apparent that the levy will be effectual to satisfy the judgment.[86] But the proceedings will not be stayed because the creditor has availed himself of concurrent remedies,[87] or because an appeal has been taken from the judgment,[88] unless security is given and a stay procured.[89] Nor will a stay of proceedings on an execution preclude the creditor from examining a third party,[90] or a stay pending the decision of a motion affect an existing injunction restraining the disposition of property.[91]

S. Order For Payment or Delivery of Property — 1. In General. In the states where supplementary proceedings are authorized, it is generally provided that, if money or property applicable to the judgment is discovered in the possession or under the control of the debtor or any other person, its application to the satisfaction of the judgment may be directed by payment or transfer to the creditor, to the sheriff holding the execution, or to a receiver appointed in the proceedings.[92] The right so conferred will not be lost by the failure of the debtor to appear for examination,[93] by the fact that the debtor was arrested for evading an examination by leaving the jurisdiction,[94] or by the institution of an action by the receiver to recover other property;[95] but it may be lost by laches.[96]

3. APPLICATION FOR ORDER — a. In General. An order to apply money or property to the satisfaction of the judgment can be made only when it is satisfactorily shown that the debtor or a third person has money or property so applicable or has control of the same, and is able at the time of the order to comply with it, as well as such other facts as will authorize the exercise of the power conferred on the court or an officer thereof.[10]

b. Who May Make. The application for the order may be made by a judgment creditor who has assigned his judgment,[11] but not creditors other than those who instituted the proceedings.[12]

c. Notice of. Notice to the judgment debtor,[13] to his debtor,[14] or to one claiming a lien, of the application for an order to pay over money or deliver property[15] is unnecessary, or at least is discretionary. But as to property claimed by a third person, it seems that such person is entitled to be heard.[16]

4. THE ORDER — a. Power to Make. The power to make an order for the payment of money or transfer of property in satisfaction or partial satisfaction of the judgment is usually vested in the court, a judge thereof,[17] or the officer by whom

And it has been doubted whether a county judge is authorized to order a conveyance by the debtor of his property to a receiver or to direct its delivery and possession to that officer. Tinkey v. Langdon, 60 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 180. An order of the county judge appointing a receiver in supplementary proceedings does not affect the power of the supreme court in which judgment was recovered to make an order on motion of the judgment creditors for the delivery of property of the debtor to the receiver. Matter of Crane, 81 Hun (N. Y.)

the examination is conducted.[18] If vested with a discretion in the premises, the court instead of making an order for application may appoint a receiver,[19] or where the property may be levied upon, leave the creditor to his execution.[20]

b. Requisites.[21] Possession of money or property of the debtor cannot be acquired without a valid order,[22] which should direct payment or delivery to the party entitled.[23] It must specify the property to be delivered with reasonable certainty[24] and exempt property not liable to levy and sale under an execution.[25] It should not, however, require the payment of money in a specific kind of currency,[26] or be so framed as to require the delivery of property of which a manual delivery cannot be made,[27] or so as to compel its transportation to the person designated to receive it;[28] or, where the debtor's claim is payable in a commodity at a stipulated price, as to order the party liable to deliver to the creditor sufficient of the commodity at the agreed price to satisfy the debt.[29] It has been held that the order may be in the alternative requiring the debtor to apply property or in default that an attachment issue;[30] but it has also been held that an order in the alternative requiring the debtor to pay over money or undergo imprisonment is improper.[31] Mere irregularity in the form of the order will not vitiate it,[32] although an order improvidently or erroneously made may be vacated and the parties placed in statu quo.[33]

c. Service. Service on the debtor of an order directing a third person to pay over his indebtedness to the former is discretionary.[34]

d. Objections. Objections to the order must be taken by a motion addressed to the judge who made it.[35] It cannot be attacked for irregularity in granting the original order for examination.[36]

5. Necessity of Demand. Where property is ordered to be delivered to a receiver, it must be demanded by the receiver personally.[37]

6. Compliance With Order — a. Effect in General. While it has been held that payment on delivery by a third person in obedience to an order will protect him against the debtor as to the same demand,[38] it has also been held that payment without notice to the judgment debtor is no defense to an action by him,[39] and that compliance with the order will not defeat the rights of a claimant who has had no opportunity of asserting his claim.[40] Neither is the order an adjudication of the fact of liability to the debtor,[41] or of the extent of such liability.[42]

b. Effect of Assignment. Obedience to an order by a third person is no defense to an action by an assignee or purchaser of the claim in good faith,[43] nor will payment by one who has paid under a notice of attachment relieve him from compliance with an order requiring payment to the sheriff.[44] Payment to the sheriff under a statute permitting such a payment by one indebted to the judgment debtor will not affect the rights of a bona fide assignee of the judgment.[45] But obedience to the order will protect a debtor who without knowledge made an ex parte order for delivery of the property to the receiver, the court set aside the order. Shannon v. Steger, 75 N. Y. App. Div. 279, 78 N. Y. Suppl. 163.

of an assignment of the judgment has paid or applied the money or property as directed.[46]

7. Disobedience to Order.[47] If the debtor disobeys an order to assign his property to a receiver a further order of sequestration is unnecessary.[48]

T. Receivers[49] — 1. Right to Receivership — a. In General. Where the proceedings have been regularly instituted and the conditions exist which entitle the creditor to the appointment of a receiver, such an appointment is usually a matter of course.[50] A receivership is proper as ancillary to an injunction to restrain the disposition of the debtor's property,[51] and to give effect to an order requiring the payment of money or delivery of property,[52] or to bring an action to determine conflicting claims to the debtor's property.[53] But there is no right to a receiver where the judgment has been paid or satisfied.[54]

b. Priority of Right.[55] As between creditors in different proceedings the earlier applicant is presumably entitled to the appointment.[56]

c. Necessity of Execution and Return. A prior exhaustion of legal remedies is a prerequisite to a receivership,[57] hence there is no right to the appointment unless an execution has duly issued;[58] but its return is immaterial if property which cannot be reached thereby has been discovered,[59] or the debtor has property which he refuses to apply.[60]

d. Dependent on Disclosure of Property.[61] A receiver of the judgment debtor may be appointed where it appears that he has property applicable to the judgment, either in his own hands and under his control or in the possession or controlled by others, or there is reasonable ground to believe that he has,[62] or even where no property has been discovered,[63] or a third person indebted to the judgment debtor has extinguished his indebtedness.[64] The creditor himself cannot proceed directly to recover the property.[65] But the ownership of exempt property will not authorize a receivership.[66]

e. Existence of Other Remedies.[67] Although where other adequate remedies are available to the creditor a receivership is not a matter of strict right,[68] and he may be required to pursue them,[69] a receivership will not be denied because

Waiver of objection to jurisdiction. — By failing to appeal from an order appointing a receiver, objection to the jurisdiction to make

b. Who May Be Appointed. Any competent person may be appointed receiver.[77] Where the appointment of a designated officer of the court can only be made with the written consent of the parties, an appointment made without such consent is a mere irregularity,[78] which cannot be taken advantage of in a collateral proceeding,[79] and a referee may be permitted to nominate a person, whom the judge in his discretion may appoint.[80]

c. Time of Appointment. A receivership cannot be had where no order for examination or warrant to procure the attendance of the debtor has been made[81] or served,[82] but may be had at any time after the return of the order,[83] or after the return-day of the motion for the receivership.[84]

d. The Application — (I) In General. All the proceedings preliminary to the application and necessary to confer jurisdiction should be shown.[85] Thus it should appear that a valid judgment was rendered[86] and that execution was duly issued thereon and returned unsatisfied in whole or in part,[87] that an examination of the debtor or others was had,[88] and in some jurisdictions that property was disclosed.[89]

(II) Notice of Application[90] — (A) To Debtor. Except where an application for a receiver is made on the return-day of the order for examination, or at the close of the examination, the failure to give notice to the debtor as required by statute is an irregularity which will require the order of receivership to be set aside.[91] This rule, however, has been held not to apply in cases where notice has

A receiver may be appointed during the examination (People v. Mead, 29 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 360), while the proceedings are pending pursuant to an adjournment (Barnett v. Moore, 20 Misc. (N. Y.) 518, 46 N. Y. Suppl. 668), at the conclusion of the debtor's examination (Groot v. Greely, 5 Month. L. Bul. (N. Y.) 69), where he has failed to appear as directed by the original order (Sickles v. Hanley, 4 Abb. N. Cas. (N. been waived,[92] or has been dispensed with by the order of appointment, as provided by statute, because the debtor cannot be found within the state.[93]

(B) To Other Creditors. Where other creditors in like proceedings are entitled to notice of the application, notice to them is necessary to the regularity of the appointment.[94] But they are not entitled to a copy of the examination on which the application is based.[95]

(C) Time of Notice. The time of notice is usually prescribed by statute, but when it is not a reasonable time must be afforded the debtor,[96] or the other creditors.[97]

(D) Form of Notice. The notice need not be specific. A general notice will suffice.[98] But where the examination is before a referee it must be in writing.[99]

(E) Service. Service of notice on the debtor must be personal.[1]

A mere statement that notice cannot with due diligence be given is insufficient. Grace v. Curtiss, 3 Misc. (N. Y.) 558, 23 N. Y. Suppl. 321.

A recital in the order that it had been brought to the attention of the judge that the debtor resided in another state is sufficient to justify the court in dispensing with notice. O'Connor v. Mechanics' Bank, 54 Hun (N. Y.) 272, 7 N. Y. Suppl. 380 [reversing 2 N. Y. Suppl. 225].

The court cannot dispense with notice, on affidavits made on information and belief, to the effect that, although searched for, the debtor could not be found and that he was out of the state, no facts being stated as to the attempt to find him, or any grounds for the belief furnished. to all the property of the judgment debtor not exempt by law.[3] But should not adjudicate the rights to property in the hands of a third person.[4]

(II) Validity. An order is not vitiated because of an immaterial erroneous designation of the court in the title,[5] or for the reason that the execution on which the proceedings were based was subsequently countermanded,[6] or erroneous, because of the extinguishment of the debt of a third person to the debtor.[7] But an order conferring on the receiver powers in excess of those prescribed by statute is invalid for want of jurisdiction.[8]

(III) Effect of Appointment. The order furnishes no presumption of jurisdiction or regularity,[9] unless made by the judge of an inferior court acting in that behalf for a superior jurisdiction.[10] The judge who grants the order is not deprived of further jurisdiction,[11] nor does the appointment affect the rights of other creditors,[12] or terminate the proceedings.[13] But after the appointment strangers to the proceedings deal with the judgment debtor at their own risk.[14]

(IV) Objections — Collateral Attack — (A) In General. An order made by a judge having jurisdiction, or reciting the existence of jurisdictional facts, is conclusive on collateral attack. It can only be vacated or set aside by a direct proceeding brought for that purpose.[15]

(B) Who May Object. Although the validity of an order appointing a receiver may be attacked by a party claiming title adversely to the debtor,[16] mere irregularities in the appointment can only be taken advantage of by the judgment debtor.[17]

(C) Waiver. The rule is well settled that defects or irregularities in the appointment of the receiver or in the prior proceedings may be waived[18] by

Bond or Security.[23] Except in a case where security may be dispensed with[24] it is incumbent on the receiver to file the bond or security required by law with the proper officer.[25] The sufficiency of the bond cannot be determined in a collateral proceeding.[26] Objections for insufficiency can be urged by the debtor alone[27] in the court which appointed the receiver.[28]

4. Extension of Receivership — a. In General. As the appointment of a receiver divests the debtor of all his property, where several proceedings are pending against the same debtor there should be but one receiver, and a receivership in one proceeding may be extended to proceedings subsequently instituted or in which subsequent applications are made.[29]

Consent of debtor.— The rule that a creditor must first exhaust his remedy by execution, before proceeding by a receiver, exists for the debtor's benefit and has no application where the receivership is extended with the debtor's consent. Webb v. Osborne, 15 Daly (N. Y.) 406, 7 N. Y. Suppl. 762.

Death of debtor.— A receivership cannot be extended after the death of the judgment debtor. Matter of Tribune Assoc., 13 Misc. (N. Y.) 326, 34 N. Y. Suppl. 459.

Vacation.— After the extension of a receivership, it is improper to vacate it and appoint a new receiver. Garfield Nat. Bank v. Bostwick, 14 N. Y. Suppl. 919.

Filing order of extension where original order not filed.— An order extending the receivership, when duly filed, will entitle the receiver to all rights resulting from such filing, although the original order was not filed, and will vest in him the title to property then held by the debtor. Webb v. Osborne, 15 Daly (N. Y.) 406, 7 N. Y. Suppl. 762. Necessity and effect of filing order of receivership see supra, XIII, T, 3, e, (v).

back to the commencement of the proceedings on the senior judgment.[31] The filing of the order of extension prior to the filing of the original order will vest in the receiver the title to property then held by the debtor.[32]

5. Appointment in Creditor's Action. The appointment of the same receiver in supplementary proceedings and in a creditor's action is not of right, but is discretionary.[33]

6. Control of Receiver.[34] On appointment of a receiver by a judge the authority of the latter over him ceases. He then becomes an officer of the court in which the judgment was rendered, and is subject to its supervision and control to the same extent as are receivers in other proceedings or actions.[35]

7. Termination[36] of Receivership. The payment of the judgment will terminate the receivership[37] except as to proper claims of the receiver.[38] So it will end by the death of the debtor,[39] or may be vacated because of abandonment of the proceedings.[40] But a continuance of the execution will not affect an extension of the receivership,[41] nor will an appointment be vacated or set aside after a considerable lapse of time, where suit has been commenced by the receiver,[42] because of the appointment of a receiver of a corporate debtor which has become insolvent,[43] or for the reason that the receiver may have difficulty in getting possession of the debtor's property.[44] The order of appointment can only be vacated or modified by the judge who made it.[45]

8. Death of Receiver.[46] On the death of a receiver in supplementary proceedings, appointed by a court of special jurisdiction during the pendency of an action brought by him, the trust devolves on the highest court of the state having general jurisdiction, which on a proper application may appoint another agent to represent it.[47]

9. Resignation.[48] In a proper case a receiver may be permitted to resign, and a new appointment may be made.[49]

10. Removal.[50] Where sufficient cause[51] therefor is shown a receiver may be removed and another person substituted;[52] but he should have notice of the charges against him, and be afforded an opportunity of being heard.[53]

11. Rights, Powers, and Duties — a. In General. The rights and powers of a receiver in proceedings supplementary to execution are in the main similar to those of receivers appointed for other purposes.[54] He has no power, however, to issue an execution on a judgment recovered by the debtor,[55] although it has been held that he may issue an execution on a judgment docketed in his favor in an action to which he was not a party,[56] nor can he contest the probate of a will which divests the debtor of all interest in the estate.[57]

b. Power to Sell. When so authorized the receiver may sell the property of the judgment debtor.[58] Thus it has been held that a private sale of personalty may be directed when there is a probability of realizing a better sum than could

c. Disposition of Funds — (i) In General. The duties of a receiver in proceedings supplementary to execution are fixed by law. He is bound to apply money or effects in his hands to the payment of debts due to the creditors represented by him according to their legal or equitable priorities, and to restore what remains, if anything, to the debtor or those who have succeeded to his rights.[67] But except on notice to the debtor, the court has no power to direct the receiver to apply moneys in his hands to the payment of anything but the judgment dition to the inadequacy of the price procured, the attorney for the debtor had no notice of the date of the sale.

Where the debtor has a claim for false imprisonment suffered in an action brought against him in the name of the receiver by the judgment creditors, the court will refuse to order the funds in the receiver's hands distributed, since any damages recovered by the debtor in such a case would be payable from the fund. Shay v. Dickson, (Ch. 1888) 15 Atl. 252.

under which he was appointed or such other judgment or judgments as to which his receivership has been extended.[68]

(II) Claims on Funds Held by Receiver.[69] The claim of a third party to funds in the hands of the receiver may be determined on a special motion, without notice to the creditor;[70] but a stranger to the action and subsequent proceedings, has no standing to compel the payment to him of moneys collected by the receiver.[71]

d. Employment of Attorney.[72] The court cannot require the receiver to employ any particular attorney,[73] nor need he retain the attorney of the creditor to conduct actions or proceedings.[74] He has been permitted to do so, however,[75] although such an employment has been held to be irregular.[76]

e. Right to Accounting From Personal Representatives.[77] A receiver of a party entitled as beneficiary or otherwise to share in a decedent's estate may require the personal representatives of the decedent to account to him,[78] but has not such an interest in the estate as will entitle him to an accounting by an executor who is the judgment debtor.[79]

12. Liabilities — a. In General. The receiver is liable to the debtor or creditor as the case may be, for wrongful conduct or mismanagement on his part.[80]

b. Accounting by Receiver. The receiver may be required to account for property which may come into his hands.[81] On the death of the debtor his personal representatives may compel an accounting as to the proceeds of real property conveyed to the receiver,[82] and where the receiver assumes to determine as to whom a fund in his hands belongs, and erroneously pays it to persons not entitled, he may be compelled to account and justify his conduct, if he can.[83] But one who questions the accuracy of an account rendered by the receiver to the judge who appointed him is not entitled to an accounting in the court of chancery, but must apply for relief to such judge.[84]

13. Title to and Rights in Property[85] — a. Personal Property — (i) In General. The title of the receiver to personal property is dependent largely on statutory provisions. It may vest from the time of the making or filing the order of appointment or the time of qualification, or he may take such title as the debtor had at the institution of the proceedings; in either case no assignment to him is necessary.[86] The title of a receiver to claims on which the debtor had brought suit is superior to that of an assignee of the judgment debtor under an assignment made subsequent to the filing of the order of receivership.[87] How-

Necessity and sufficiency of filing.— The or-

c. Disputed Indebtedness or Ownership.[4] A receiver has no absolute right to money or property the ownership of which is in dispute.[5]

d. Property Transferred or Mortgaged. A transfer made after the institution of the proceedings[6] or after the receiver's appointment will not affect or divest him of title.[7] The receiver does not become vested with the title to property assigned or transferred prior to the institution of the proceedings or under some statutes to his appointment, but must resort to an action to test the validity of the transfer.[8] The receiver acquires no better or other title than the debtor had.[9]

der should be filed in the office of the clerk of the county where the real estate is situated. Wright v. Nostrand, 47 N. Y. Super. Ct. 441. An order appointing a receiver in the county where the proceedings were had should be filed in the county where judgment was recovered and a certified copy thereof filed in the county of the appointment. Staats v. Wemple, 2 How. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 161. Where the original order is filed in the county where the judgment-roll is filed, the debtor resides, and the real estate is situated, a certified copy need not be filed or recorded. Fredericks v. Niver, 28 Hun (N. Y.) 417.

The order need not be recorded in the register's office in addition to filing it. Wright v. Nostrand, 47 N. Y. Super. Ct. 441.

Necessity of judgment lien.— A receiver acquires no title to real estate situated in another county by filing the order appointing him or a certified copy thereof in such county as provided by statute, unless the judgment creditor has obtained a lien thereon by docketing the judgment in such county and has exhausted his legal remedy by execution against the property. Faneuil Hall Nat. Bank v. Bussing, 147 N. Y. 665, 42 N. E. 345; Importers', etc., Nat. Bank v. Quackenbush, 143 N. Y. 567, 38 N. E. 728. Hence a conveyance by debtor of real estate situated in a county other than that in which a receiver has been appointed, after the order of appointment has been filed in such county, will vest a good title in the grantee as against the receiver, unless the judgment has been docketed in that county. Faneuil Hall Nat. Bank v. Bussing, 147 N. Y. 665, 42 N. E. 345.

The title passes when an order extending the receivership is filed, although the original was not filed. Webb v. Osborne, 15 Daly (N. Y.) 406, 7 N. Y. Suppl. 762.

It has been held that a chattel mortgage executed before but not filed until after the order for examination is void as against the receiver;[10] but the weight of authority is to the effect that in such a case the mortgage being good as between the debtor and the mortgagee is good as to the receiver.[11]

e. Funds or Property Held in Trust.[12] Although ordinarily trust funds or property held in trust cannot be reached in these proceedings,[13] a receiver is entitled to such property or funds where the trust was created by the debtor for his own benefit,[14] and under some circumstances the receiver may reach the income of such a fund.[15]

f. After-Acquired Property.[16] A receiver takes no title to property acquired by the debtor after the institution of the proceedings or as has been held in some cases after his appointment.[17]

14. Actions[18] — a. Right to Institute. The receiver cannot institute an action, where the right of action accrued solely to the judgment debtor,[19] but only where the title to the property or money sought to be reached has vested in him, or he has acquired a right or title to it by reason of his appointment,[20] and the creditor

Action on insurance policy.— A receiver is not a creditor within a statute authorizing creditors to recover on policies of insurance where premiums have been paid out of the debtor's property in excess of the prescribed amount. Masten v. Amerman, 51 Hun (N. Y.) 244, 4 N. Y. Suppl. 681 [reversing 20 Abb. N. Cas. 443].

The receiver may maintain: An action for an accounting as to funds and securities and for their payment and delivery to the receiver. Armstrong v. McLean, 153 N. Y. 490, 47 N. E. 912 [reversing 92 Hun 397, 36 N. Y. Suppl. 764]. An action for the benefit of the creditor to enforce an equitable lien might have brought a similar suit.[21] The receiver cannot maintain replevin to recover personal property mortgaged prior to his appointment, and reduced to possession by the mortgagee through foreclosure,[22] nor an action for the conversion of property sold before judgment under a void chattel mortgage.[23] He may, however, maintain such an action against a debtor who has converted property which has vested in him by reason of his appointment.[24] Nor can he maintain an action where the relief can be maintained in the proceedings.[25]

b. Disputed Indebtedness or Ownership.[26] Where the alleged indebtedness of a third person to the debtor is denied, or the ownership of property is disputed, the proper remedy is an action by the receiver to determine the fact of ownership.[27]

c. Property Transferred.[28] A receiver may prosecute an action to annul or set aside a transfer fraudulently made, with the like effect as if the action were instituted by the creditor.[29] His rights in this respect are not confined to the

to which the debtor is entitled. Walsh v. Rosso, (N. J. Ch. 1898) 41 Atl. 669. The receiver cannot maintain: An action against the wife of the debtor to recover for the services of her husband rendered in carrying on her separate business where there was no express agreement to pay therefor. Lynn v. Smith, 35 Hun (N. Y.) 275. An action to collect attached debts. Andrews v. Glenville Woolen Co., 11 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 78.

Action to construe will.— The receiver of a legatee cannot have his claim determined in an action to construe the will under which he is a beneficiary, but only by a direct proceeding. Smith v. Edwards, 23 Hun (N. Y.) 223.

New action on extension of receivership.— It seems that where, pending an action by a receiver, he is appointed at the instance and on behalf of other creditors, he may commence a new action in their interest. Bostwick v. Menck, 40 N. Y. 383.

property or moneys held in trust for the judgment debtor, where the trust was not created by himself, but the creditor himself must proceed by an action in equity,[38] nor can he maintain an action to reach so much of the income of a trust fund as may remain after satisfying the provisions of the trust.[39]

f. Jurisdiction of Actions. In instituting an action the receiver is not confined to the court of his appointment, but may select any tribunal of competent jurisdiction.[40]

g. Necessity of Authority From Creditor.[41] To authorize an action to set aside a conveyance as a cloud on title so as to subject the property to the execution it is necessary that authority should be first obtained from the creditor.[42]

h. Necessity of Leave of Court. While it is the better practice for the receiver to procure the leave of the court to institute an action, and the procurement of such leave is ordinarily necessary,[43] there are decisions to the effect that the receiver has general power to institute actions, and that no leave to do so is necessary.[44]

i. In Whose Name Brought.[45] When so authorized by statute,[46] or by the order appointing him, the receiver may sue in his own name as such.[47]

j. Parties.[48] All persons whose presence is necessary to a determination of the matter in controversy or questions involved are necessary parties to the action.[49] Thus the judgment debtor is a necessary party to an action to set aside

A complaint is not demurrable for the failure to allege issuance of the execution to the county of the debtor's residence. Campbell v. Foster, 35 N. Y. 361 [affirming 16 How. Pr. 275].

Where a judgment was recovered against three copartners, and execution issued in the county where one of them had a place of business and where the partnership was located, but it did not appear that execution was issued in the county where either of the defendants resided, it was held that a receiver appointed in proceedings supplementary to execution founded on such judgment could maintain an action to set aside a fraudulent conveyance, and that a prima facie case was made out — that the remedy at law had been exhausted. Hyatt v. Dusenbury, 12 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 152.

exists in his favor,[66] or in favor of those whom he represents,[67] or that defendants at the time of plaintiff's appointment had money or property in their hands belonging to the debtor,[68] and his right to prosecute the action in a representative capacity.[69] Where real estate is involved it should also appear that the order of appointment or a certified copy thereof was filed in the proper county with the officer designated by statute.[70]

(II) ANSWER. To defeat the action the answer must contain averments which if proved will be sufficient to absolve the defendant from liability.[71]

l. Trial[72] — (I) EVIDENCE.[73] An allegation of fraud in an assignment must be sustained by competent proof.[74] A debtor claiming that a fund standing in his name in fact belongs to another has the burden of proof.[75] On collateral attack the production and proof of an order of receivership containing a recital of jurisdictional facts is conclusive as to the regularity of the receiver's appointment.[76]

(II) QUESTIONS OF LAW AND FACT. The question of fraudulent intent is one of fact,[77] and an answer setting up that the judgment debtor is a proper party presents the question whether or not he is a party individually and in his representative capacity.[78]

(III) MEASURE OF RECOVERY.[79] On setting aside a transfer by the debtor the receiver is entitled to receive only so much of the property or its proceeds as may be necessary to satisfy the judgment on which the proceeding is based, or the claims represented by him, and to pay the expenses of the receivership, and the costs of the action.[80]

m. Injunction.[81] In a proper case a receiver may invoke the remedy of injunction, but he must show sufficient facts to entitle him to the relief.[82]

n. Defenses. Irregularities in the proceedings upon which the receivership is based are not necessarily fatal to his right to maintain an action;[83] nor can it be urged as a defense where the judgment debtor has consented to the appointment.[84] A defense may be lost by the failure to interpose it in time.[85]

15. Substitution in Pending Action by Debtor. Where an action by the debtor to recover claims of third persons is pending the court in its discretion may substitute the receiver as plaintiff and permit him to prosecute the action for the benefit of the creditor or creditors whom he represents.[86] The order of substitution should be on notice to the debtor,[87] and should protect his attorney, permitting him, if he so elect, to continue in the litigation for the preservation of his rights.[88]

16. Receiver as Party to Creditor's Action.[89] A receiver in whom the debtor's rights of action and property have vested is a proper party to an action to set aside a judgment,[90] an alleged fraudulent mortgage,[91] or an action to apply land to payment of the judgment;[92] to partition land in which the debtor has an interest,[93] or where he has in his possession an instrument indemnifying the debtor against a cause of action sued on.[94] But where neither the receiver nor the creditor are parties to an action, the former cannot be required to pay over moneys received by him as the property of the debtor.[95]

c. Violation of Restraining Order. Violation of an order or direction restraining or enjoining the disposition or transfer of money or property constitutes a punishable contempt, where the result is to impair or prejudice the creditor's rights or remedies.[4] Thus it is a contempt to use or withdraw moneys on deposit in a bank, in the name of the debtor,[5] or as trustee;[6] to collect or dispose of earnings;[7] to confess judgment[8] or suffer judgment for a fictitious debt;[9] to assign a debt,[10] an interest in a decedent's estate,[11] or for the benefit of creditors;[12] to transfer or convey property;[13] to use the proceeds of mortgaged property,[14] or to pay rent;[15] to collect and dispose of rents of real estate,[16] or to interfere with the collection of rents by the receiver.[17] But there is no contempt in collecting debts due a firm of which the debtor is a member and using the same in its business,[18] paying over money or delivering property belonging to another,[19] which is inapplicable to payment of the judgment,[20] effectuating a prior

d. Disobedience to Order For Payment or Delivery of Property — (i) In General. Disobedience of an order requiring the payment of money, delivery of personal property, or the conveyance of real estate may constitute a contempt.[32] It is not a contempt to refuse to pay or deliver property except as provided by the order,[33] to convey or deliver possession of real estate, the title to which has vested in the receiver by operation of law,[34] or to deliver property the title to which is in dispute.[35] Nor is a party guilty of contempt, where, not having possession or control of the money or property or for any other reason, he is unable to comply with the order.[36]

(II) Necessity of Filing and Serving Order. To punish as for a contempt in refusing to pay over money or deliver property, an order for such delivery or payment must have been duly made, served,[37] and filed with the proper officer,[38] as well as a refusal to comply therewith after a proper demand.[39]

e. Non-Payment of Costs.[40] Although there are decisions to the contrary,[41] it has been held that the refusal to obey an order to pay the costs of the supplemental proceedings may be punished as a contempt, although the costs might have been collected by execution.[42]

f. Suing Receiver Without Leave. The debtor[43] or a third party whose property has been wrongfully taken from him is not punishable as for a contempt in suing the receiver without leave of the court.[44]

Misnomer.— The debtor may defend on the ground that he is incorrectly named in the summons in the original action (McGill v. Weill, 10 N. Y. Suppl. 246, 19 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 43) and that the misnomer was repeated in the order (Muldoon v. Pierz, 1 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 309).

superseded,[65] vacated,[66] or reversed.[67] But mere irregularities in the order or immaterial defects[68] or the insufficiency of the affidavit on which it was granted will not relieve the party charged from liability.[69] Nor can the truth of the affidavit be raised in these proceedings.[70] So it is a good answer that the order for examination was improperly or irregularly served.[71]

i. Excuses. Disobedience may be excused in a proper case, where exculpatory facts or circumstances are shown.[72] Inability to pay over money or to deliver property in accordance with the terms of the order constitutes a valid excuse for the failure to comply therewith.[73]

j. Abandonment. Mere delay of a judgment creditor to proceed with contempt proceedings against the debtor for failing to appear for examination does not amount to an abandonment or waiver of such proceedings.[74] And where the party charged obeys the order, the court may decline to proceed further with the proceedings.[75]

k. Order of Conviction — (i) In General. An oral order made in the absence of the party and without appearance on his behalf or any case made by the moving party is improper.[76]

(ii) Requisites. The order convicting of the contempt should specify the particular misconduct constituting it.[77] And where by statute prejudice must have resulted to the creditor, the order must also state that the misconduct defeated, impaired, impeded, or prejudiced his rights or remedies.[78] But an order imposing a fine to indemnify the creditor for costs and disbursements, and the damage and loss sustained by the contempt, need not show that actual loss was sustained, or recite a finding of the facts on which the loss was based.[79]

(iii) Alternative Order. An order in the alternative requiring compliance with its directions, or that the party be imprisoned until he obey it,[80] or fully satisfy the judgment, is improper.[81]

(iv) Conditional Order. An order relieving the offender from punishment on compliance with certain conditions therein contained is regular and proper.[82]

l. Punishment[83] — (i) In General. Where it is fairly made to appear that the creditor has sustained or will sustain loss or damage by reason of the contumacy of the person against whom proceedings have been brought,[84] it may be punished by imposing a fine on the contemner and committing him to jail until payment of the same, or by otherwise complying with the mandate of the court,[85]

or until he has been duly discharged according to law, as for instance by release on bail.[86]

(II) Amount of Fine. Contempt in these proceedings is punishable as a civil and not as a criminal contempt, and the fine imposed should be sufficient to indemnify the creditor for his loss and injury, together with costs and expenses.[87] Under a statute providing that, where actual loss has been sustained by the creditor, a fine sufficient to indemnify him may be imposed, but, where no actual damages are shown, a fine not exceeding the costs and disbursements of the injured party and a specified sum in addition may be inflicted. A fine equal to the amount of the judgment and costs is warranted where actual damages are shown,[88] but otherwise the amount of the fine is limited to the costs and disbursements, and the fixed sum designated.[89] An excessive fine imposed may be reduced to the statutory amount.[90]

m. Action on Bond[91] of Debtor Attached. A complaint in an action on a bond given for the appearance of a debtor who has been attached for a contempt need not allege the issue and return of an execution in the original action, or that an order for the attachment was made.[92]

b. Necessary Allegations. Where an order permitting the institution of proceedings against a person indebted to the judgment debtor is a prerequisite to the complaint, an allegation therein that such an order was duly made is sufficient.[8] The recovery and entry of a judgment should be alleged,[9] also the issuance of an execution thereon to the proper county.[10] That the third party has property of the debtor or is indebted to him,[11] which with other property claimed by him as exempt will exceed the amount exempt by law,[12] that the judgment debtor holds no other property than that sought to be reached in the hands of such third person subject to execution sufficient to satisfy the judgment,[13] that the debtor unjustly refuses to apply the money or property sought to be reached to the satisfaction of the judgment,[14] the nature of the claim sought to be enforced against the third party,[15] and if it is sought to establish fraud or a trust relation between the debtor and the third party, the necessary facts must be stated.[16] But plaintiff need not anticipate or negative matters of defense.[17]

c. Verification. The failure to verify the complaint may be waived by the interposition of an answer to the merits.[18]

5. The Answer[19] — a. In General. Under the Indiana practice, after the making of an order requiring the parties to appear and answer, the proceedings are summary, without further pleadings and therefore no answer is necessary.[20]

b. Verification. The answer must be duly verified or it will be rejected.[21]

c. Conclusiveness. Sworn denials by the debtor and the third person of any indebtedness between them is not conclusive on plaintiff.[22]

6. Defenses. Defendant cannot raise the question of the liability of a third person alleged to be indebted to him.[23]

7. Evidence[24] — a. Necessary Proof. To support a judgment against third persons all the facts necessary to entitle plaintiff to the relief sought must be proved. Thus there must be proof of the issue of execution on the judgment against the debtor where that fact is denied;[25] also evidence sufficiently describing the property sought to be reached,[26] showing that it is subject to execution,[27] and proof of the claim due the judgment debtor,[28] so as to enable the court to direct

what property shall be levied on and sold[29] and what indebtedness due the debtor shall be applied to the payment of the judgment against him.[30]

b. Admissibility. Evidence in behalf of plaintiff is admissible to overcome evidence of the debtor that he has no property subject to execution;[31] but evidence of the third party is not evidence against the debtor,[32] and written evidence of transactions as to which the facts may be elicited from the debtor is immaterial.[33]

c. Sufficiency. The evidence must be sufficient to show the existence of property or an indebtedness applicable to the judgment.[34] Proof of issuance of an execution in the county where the firm debtor and one partner did business and its return unsatisfied prima facie establishes exhaustion of the legal remedy.[35]

d. Burden of Proof. The burden is on the creditor to show the existence of interests sought to be reached,[36] and where the allegations of the petition are taken as prima facie true, after a traverse by the debtor he must make sufficient proof to cast on plaintiff the burden of proving such allegations.[37]

b. Examination of Witnesses. The party calling a witness is under no obligation to inform the court as to the testimony he expects to elicit if the witness is permitted to answer the question.[40]

c. Findings. The court is not required to make special findings of fact and to state its conclusions of law thereon.[41]

d. Objections and Exceptions. Where errors occur on the trial objections must be made and exceptions saved and presented in and by the record, in the same manner as in any other civil action.[42] An exception which treats one paragraph of an answer as an entire answer is bad for indefiniteness.[43]

Liens and claims of third persons.—Defendant was appointed receiver of the holder of a liquor tax certificate in supplementary proceedings, and thereafter demanded and received such certificate from the debtor, without knowledge that plaintiff claimed to own the same by reason of his having advanced the money paid therefor. Under an order of the court appointing such receiver, he surrendered the certificate, and his report disposing of the proceeds thereof was confirmed without any notice of plaintiff's claim. It was held that the receiver's acts done in obedience to the mandate of the court did not constitute a conversion of the certificate as against plaintiff. Ernest Ochs v. Pohly, 87 N. Y. App. Div. 92, 84 N. Y. Suppl. 1. Under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 2469, providing that where a receiver's title to personal property has become vested, and an order requiring the judgment debtor to attend and be examined has been served before the appointment of a receiver, his title extends back, so as to include the debtor's personal property at the time of the service of the order, but that this shall not affect the title of a

W. Liens[44] — 1. In General. The rights of parties in these proceedings with respect to the acquisition of liens are in great measure analogous to the rights of the parties to a creditor's bill.[45]

2. How Acquired — a. By Institution of Proceedings — (I) In General. On service on the debtor of an order for his examination, the judgment creditor acquires a lien on the property of the debtor in his hands or under his control,[46] or upon funds or property of the debtor in the hands of a third party with notice or upon whom like service is made.[47]

(II) Equitable Assets. While it has been held that no lien on equitable assets of the debtor is acquired by the institution of the proceedings,[48] it has also been held that the commencement of the proceedings gives the creditor the same lien on such assets as he would acquire by filing a creditor's bill.[49]

b. By Appointment of Receiver. A lien is acquired by the appointment of a receiver of the debtor's property,[50] or by proceedings taken by him on behalf of

"purchaser in good faith without notice," etc., the fact that money due the judgment debtors, in the hands of a third person, was assigned in good faith, and for value, after the service of an order in supplementary proceedings upon such third person directing the payment of the money to the receiver, did not necessarily affect the rights of the assignee. Dienst v. Gustaveson, 85 N. Y. Suppl. 371. When he is not made a party to the proceedings, the rights of an assignee of money due the judgment debtor, in the hands of a third person, assigned after service of an order in supplementary proceedings on such third person directing the payment of the money to the receiver, are not made greater or less by the order, as against such third person. Necessity of scire facias.— In Pennsylvania a bill for discovery in aid of a judgment, which is not accompanied by a scire facias, gives no lien as against the attachment of a third party. People's Nat. Bank v. Kern, 193 Pa. St. 59, 44 Atl. 331.

An assignment executed and delivered be-the creditor,[51] as an action to set aside a transfer by the debtor as fraudulent.[52] But no lien is acquired on assets assigned or transferred by the debtor prior to the institution of the proceedings.[53]

3. Priorities — a. In General. The lien acquired by the institution of the proceedings is superior to that of a senior judgment creditor,[54] but inferior to a levy by another creditor.[55] As between creditors, the one whose order instituting the proceedings is first served acquires a prior lien.[56] The lien acquired by a receiver on setting aside a transfer relates back to the commencement of the action brought for that purpose and will overreach the title of a purchaser pendente lite.[57] As between receivers, priority will be determined by the time of the applications for the receiverships, and not by the time of appointment.[58] The priority of judgment liens on land or its proceeds is determinable by the order in which the judgments were entered.[59]

b. Proceedings to Determine. The question of priority is not the subject of action, but should be summarily presented to and disposed of by the court in a proceeding to which the claimants are made parties.[60]

4. Loss of Lien. A lien acquired by the institution of the proceedings may be lost or divested by their abandonment,[61] but not by a subsequent assignment or transfer by the judgment debtor,[62] an amendment of the original affidavit,[63] a subsequent adjudication of bankruptcy against the debtor,[64] or, where the party seeking to subordinate the lien is not acting in good faith, by laches.[65] Nor will the lien be extinguished by the death of the debtor,[66] or in the absence of fraud or collusion by permitting the debtor to retain possession of the property.[67]

proceedings supplementary to execution generally provide for the allowance of costs and disbursements of the proceedings or of a fixed sum in lieu of costs. They may be allowed to the judgment creditor,[69] in a proper case to the judgment debtor,[70] a third person whose examination discloses no possession or control of property belonging to the debtor,[71] or one who, although not a party to the action, was made a party to the proceeding.[72] The payment or satisfaction of the judgment will not preclude the right to costs or disbursements.[73]

b. Application For. An application for an allowance of a sum as costs should not be made until the close of the proceeding,[74] and is not too late if made at any time before the final order for the application of the funds in the hands of the receiver.[75] The order directing their payment may be made without notice to the debtor.[76]

And a statute providing that costs shall be recovered in an action, and a separate execution issued therefor, has been held not to be within a general provision respecting the time when executions may issue generally.[79]

(II) By Deduction From Judgment. It has been held that costs awarded to the debtor may be credited on the judgment;[80] but it has also been held that, where an adequate and exclusive mode of applying money or property discovered has been provided, a deduction of costs from the judgment is unauthorized.[81]

e. Security For Costs. Unless so provided by statute, the judgment debtor cannot require the creditor to file security for the costs of the proceeding.[82]

2. In Actions by Receivers — a. In General. A receiver is not entitled to costs and disbursements in an action in which he is a nominal defendant against whom no personal claim is made,[83] nor, when made a party to an action by the debtor in which he interposes an answer seeking affirmative relief, is he entitled to costs against his co-defendant.[84] But an unsuccessful appeal will not affect his right to costs, if he was justified and was guilty of no impropriety in taking the appeal,[85] and he may be adjudged to pay costs personally where he has instituted and prosecuted an action without leave of the court,[86] or has inexcusably interfered with property of a third party.[87]

b. Liability of Judgment Creditors. Judgment creditors are not personally liable for the costs of an unsuccessful action brought by a receiver, where they are not parties to the action and have taken no part in its prosecution.[88] But a creditor is so liable if he directs or takes an active part in prosecuting the action in the receiver's name for his own benefit,[89] or procures himself to be appointed receiver before the recovery of judgment, and illegally seizes property.[90]

c. Security For Costs. A receiver may be required to give security for costs.[91] As where he has no funds in his hands applicable to the payment of costs and has obtained leave to sue.[92]

3. In Contempt Proceedings. The judgment creditor is entitled to costs in proceedings to punish for a contempt in which the party charged has been convicted,[93] and in the exercise of its discretion costs may be awarded against him

Amount.— A judgment under La. Rev. St. § 1781, requiring a bond for a forced surrender of a debtor's property, does not condemn him to pay any sum of money, or to deliver either movable or immovable property, and, pending an appeal from such judgment, the creditor may proceed with the execution or garnishment; hence the only bond which can be required of a party appealing suspensively from such judgment is for costs only, and not for the value of the judgment or property. XIV. EXECUTION AGAINST THE PERSON.[5]

A. Nature and Purpose. Execution against the person is effected by the writ of capias ad satisfaciendum, under which the sheriff arrests defendant and imprisons him till he satisfies the judgment or is discharged by proceeding of law.[6] Proceedings to procure an execution against the person are a "civil action" within the meaning of codes and statutes.[7] Such an execution is an extraordinary remedy which as a general rule is not to be resorted to if the amount due upon a judgment may be made by an ordinary execution against the property of the judgment debtor.[8] According to some decisions the purpose of such execution is the collection of the amount due,[9] but according to other authorities statutes allowing imprisonment for debt in certain cases have for their object both the enforcement of payment and the punishment of fraudulent debtors.[10]

B. Remedy as Affected by Constitution, Statute, or Agreement — 1. PROHIBITION OF IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT. Express constitutional prohibitions against imprisonment for debt are found in a great majority, if not in all, of the states of this country,[11] and in England provision to this end is made by what is known as the "Debtors' Act." [12] In some states executions against the person have been abolished,[13] and in those jurisdictions where it is still permitted the proceeding has been subjected to many modifications and limitations. All modifications, conditions, and restrictions upon imprisonment for debt provided by the laws of any state are by act of congress applicable to process issuing from federal courts to be executed therein.[14]

2. Effect of Foreign Laws Protecting From Execution. A law of a foreign country which protects the party to a contract from execution will, in the courts of the United States, protect the same individual from arrest upon the same contract.[15]

3. Agreements as to Exemption From or Liability to Arrest. A defendant may by agreement be exempted from execution against the person.[16] So also notwithstanding statutory specifications of cases in which an order of arrest may be issued a defendant may consent in writing to the entry of a judgment against him which will authorize an execution against his person.[17]

C. Jurisdiction and Authority to Issue. With regard to the question of jurisdiction and authority to issue a capias ad satisfaciendum or execution against the person on final process, it is difficult to lay down any rule of general application.[18] Imprisonment for debt on process from federal courts having been

By the acts of congress of 1837 and 1839, it was provided that no person should be imprisoned for debt in any state upon process issuing out of a court of the United States, where by the laws of such state imprisonment for debt had been abolished; and that, where by the laws of the state imprisonment for debt should be allowed under certain conditions and restrictions, the same conditions and restrictions should be applicable to the process issuing out of the courts of the United States. abolished by act of congress in all states which have abolished them by law, the federal courts in such states have no jurisdiction of a suit for the enforcement of a state statute, highly penal in its nature, in regard to fraudulent debtors.[19]

D. Cases in Which Execution Is Authorized — 1. In General. The object of prohibitions of imprisonment for debt being to relieve from useless imprisonment honest debtors who may be unable to satisfy judgments against them,[20] it is usually held on the principle that the reason failing the rule fails therewith, that such statutes afford no protection against executions against the person in the case of tort-feasors or debtors who are able to pay but are unwilling to do so, or are guilty of fraud or bad faith;[21] and there would seem to be no question as to the constitutionality of statutes allowing executions against the person in such cases.[22] Since, however, such executions are permissible only by virtue of statute, or exceptions in the constitution, in order that they may issue the case must be brought within the provisions of the statutes allowing the same or within the exceptions, in doing which such provisions should not be strained beyond the fair and proper meaning of the terms used.[23]

2. Right as Dependent Upon Nature of Action — a. Actions Ex Contractu. Defendants in actions arising out of or founded upon contracts, express or implied, are usually exempt by statute from imprisonment on executions against the person except as otherwise specially provided,[24] unless the action is one which,

In Tomlin v. Fisher, 27 Mich. 524, it was held that imprisonment of a defendant in replevin, although expressly allowed by Mich. Comp. Application to equitable suits.— Under the New York Non-Imprisonment Act of 1831, no person can lawfully be arrested or imprisoned on any civil process issued out of any court of law or on any execution issued out of any court of equity in any suit or proceeding instituted for the recovery of any money due upon any judgment or decree founded upon contract or due upon any contract express or implied, or for the recovery of any damages for the non-performance of any contract. People v. Spier, 57 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 274 [reversing 12 Hun 70, 54 How. Pr. 73]. In Georgia, however, a decree in an equity cause for a specific sum of money under the 13th rule of equity practice established by the judges in convention under the authority of the Georgia act of 1821 may be enforced by a capias ad satisfaciendum against defendant. Saunders v. Smith, 3 Ga. 121.
A suit not for recovery of money or damages is not within the act abolishing imprisonment for debt, although founded on a contract, and execution against the person may issue therein. Rogers v. Dibble, 8 Paige (N. Y.) 9, a suit to reform a deed and confirm plaintiff's title.
Although an action may be in form ex delicto, yet when the testimony shows that it is ex contractu defendant will, under the Pennsylvania act of 1842, abolishing impris-

although in form ex contractu, in reality arises ex delicto,[25] or unless an order of arrest has issued in the action.[26] In some jurisdictions, however, provision is expressly made for the enforcement by a warrant of arrest of judgments on contracts in certain cases.[27]

b. Actions to Recover Fines, Forfeitures, or Penalties. Fines, forfeitures, or penalties imposed by law are not debts,[28] and hence actions for the recovery or collection thereof are not within the purview of constitutional or statutory prohibitions against imprisonment for debt.[29]

May v. Hammond, 146 Mass. 439, 15 N. E. 925, in which case it was held that the contingent liability of the indorser of a promissory note is a "debt" within the meaning of this statute. c. Actions Ex Delicto. It seems to be well settled that prohibitions of imprisonment for debt apply only to actions arising out of contracts, express or implied, and do not extend to actions ex delicto.[30] The proceedings in which executions against the person are allowed vary in the different states. It has been allowed, for example, in actions involving fraud or deceit;[31] actions to recover criminal proceeding, and a person imprisoned in a county jail by virtue of an execution against the body for such violation is entitled to the benefit of the act for the relief of persons imprisoned on civil process. Brophy v. Perth Amboy, 44 N. J. L. 217.

Capias pro fine.— In Com. v. Webster, 8 Gratt. (Va.) 702, it was held that the common-law writ of capias pro fine is unrepealed and may be used by the commonwealth, and that when there is a judgment in favor of the commonwealth for the fine and costs of prosecution, the writ may issue for the fine and the costs, but where the judgment is for costs without a fine, the writ is not a proper process to enforce the judgment. "A capias pro fine was not at common law, and is not under our statute, a process for enforcing judgments recovered by individuals. The conditions of confinement under this writ are different from those under a ca. sa., and its substitution for a writ of ca. sa. might result in substantial injury to the defendant; if, indeed, its form would allow it to be so substituted." damages for so obtaining, receiving, paying, converting, or disposing of the same,[40] where defendant is about to abscond,[41] or where defendant has non-exempt property which he conceals or refuses to apply in satisfaction of the judgment against him.[42]

d. Form of Action as Determining Nature of Cause of Action. Since the form of action adopted will not necessarily determine whether the cause of action be for a tort or breach of contract, the allegations of the declaration or complaint will be looked to in order to ascertain whether the acts complained of constitute a tort within the meaning of statutes allowing imprisonment of a defendant on an execution against the person.[43]

e. Waiver of Right by Joinder of Different Causes of Action.[44] Ordinarily the uniting of a cause of action for which a defendant may be arrested with one for which he may not waives the arrest and execution against the person of defendant and entitles him to have such execution vacated.[45]

f. Effect of Waiver of Tort and Suit Ex Contractu. According to some decisions, where plaintiff elects to rest his action as upon contract and not upon tort, he cannot, after obtaining judgment upon that theory, have an execution against defendant's person.[46]

A bona fide intention of an insolvent debtor immediately to assign all his property for the benefit of his creditors generally is a just cause for refusing to apply money or things in action in payment of a judgment within the New York act of 1831 abolishing imprisonment for debt, but providing that an unjust refusal to make such application on the demand of the judgment creditor shall entitle such creditor to a warrant for defendant's arrest. Hall v. McKnight, 6 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 348. See, however, In re Prime, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 296, 1 Edm. Sel. Cas. (N. Y.) 479.

Counts in contract and in tort.— An execution against the person will not issue where the complaint states a cause of action arising out of a breach of contract and another cause arising out of a tort, the recovery being for all that appears on the one cause as much as on the other. Sherwood v. Pierce, 50 N. Y. Super. Ct. 378; Brown v. Treet, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 225 [limited and explained in Suydam v. Smith, 7 Hill (N. Y.) 182].

ance of an act, the neglect or refusal to perform which would be punishable by the court as a contempt, where defendant is not a resident of the state, or, being a resident, is about to depart therefrom, by reason of which non-residence or departure there is danger that a judgment and order requiring the performance of the act will be rendered ineffectual.[47]

4. Right as Dependent Upon Previous Order of Arrest in Same Action. As a general rule where the right to arrest depends on the nature of the action and is a part thereof, an execution against the person may issue, although no previous order of arrest has been granted,[48] as in the case of actions ex delicto.[49] Where, however, the grounds of arrest are extraneous to the cause of action, an execution against the person may in some jurisdictions issue only after a previous order of arrest has been obtained and served,[50] and it is immaterial that the com-

Right dependent upon judgment of court.— Under Vt. Gen. St. c. 121, § 24, the character and effect of the execution is made to depend upon the judgment of the court, as to whether the cause of action arose from the wilful and malicious act or neglect of defendant, and it is wholly immaterial whether the original writ issued against the body or not, or whether the service was made by an arrest of the body or by an attachment of property or by summons. An action to recover for injuries caused by negligence is an action to recover for "personal injuries" under N. Y. Code, §§ 549, 3343, giving the right to an execution against the person without an order of arrest. Ritterman v. Ropes, 52 N. Y. Super. Ct. 236.

In Illinois it was provided that no execution should issue against defendant's body unless the judgment was obtained for a tort, or unless he should have been held to bail upon a writ of "capias ad satisfaciendum." But in People v. Hoffman, 97 Ill. 234, it was held that this phrase should be construed to mean "capias ad respondendum" as this was evidently the legislative intent. See also People v. Healy, 128 Ill. 9, 20 N. E. 692, 15 Am. St. Rep. 90; Barney v. Chapman, 21 Fed. 903.

In South Dakota it is provided that an plaint states grounds of arrest unless the facts constituting such grounds are necessary to the cause of action.[51]

5. Effect of Release or Discharge From Arrest on Original Process. Where a defendant has been arrested in an action authorizing his arrest, and where upon turning out security to plaintiff's attorney for the claim in suit, he is, by the consent of the latter, released from arrest before judgment, he is still liable to final process against his person on the judgment.[52] After an order of arrest has been discharged on motion, a defendant is not liable to arrest on execution against the person, although on his default at the trial a special verdict has been found stating that he was guilty of the fraud charged in the complaint.[53]

E. Judgments on Which Execution Authorized — 1. In General. A judgment, in order to authorize the issuance of an execution against the person, must have been obtained in an action not within the prohibition of imprisonment for debt, but one in which an order of arrest is proper.[54] The judgment must not be one which has become dormant at the time of the arrest,[55] must be in per-

After the transcript of a judgment has been filed in a court of record where by statute it is deemed the judgment of the latter court, such transcript of a judgment against a debtor will entitle the creditor to an execution against the person of such debtor, where the action was one in which such execution was proper. sonam,[56] and must not be merely a cautionary judgment for a sum which may never become due.[57]

2. Amount of Debt For Which Rendered. In some jurisdictions whether or not an execution will issue against the person of defendant depends upon the amount of the debt.[58]

3. Scire Facias Judgment. The award in an original judgment of the right to a close jail execution does not authorize the clerk to issue such an execution on a scire facias judgment.[59]

4. Judgment For Costs. In actions where executions against the person are proper, and where the costs are but an incident to the debt and are necessarily incurred in order to procure the enforcement of the judgment, imprisonment is authorized for the costs as well as for the amount of the principal debt or demand.[60] In actions where the arrest of defendant is not authorized, plaintiff, if unsuccessful, is not liable to an execution against his person for the costs,[61] as in suits founded on contract;[62] and according to some decisions a judgment for defendant for costs is to be treated, whatever the form of the action, as a judgment for a debt, and plaintiff is not liable to an execution against the person unless about to depart from the state without leaving sufficient to satisfy the judgment, or fraudulently converting or disposing of his property.[63] The weight of authority, however, under modern practice is to the effect that in certain classes of actions in which defendant could have been arrested, the complainant when unsuccessful in his suit becomes the judgment debtor and is liable to arrest and imprisonment on a judgment for the costs in such suit.[64] So also where plaintiff recovers in his action but not a sufficient amount to carry costs.[65]

5. Decree For Alimony. In some jurisdictions execution may be awarded against the person as well as against the property for the enforcement of a decree for alimony upon a divorce;[66] but in others payment of alimony has been held

2. Joint Debtors. Although where the right to execution against the person depends on the nature of the action, an execution must follow the judgment and be issued and run against all defendants jointly sued or jointly liable,[82] yet, in an action against joint debtors, where an order of arrest has been granted against one of them and execution against all has been returned unsatisfied, the requirement that the execution must follow the judgment does not apply, but an execution running against the person of only the one arrested is regular.[83]

H. Time For Charging Debtor in Execution. At common law the practice seems to have been to sue out a capias ad satisfaciendum or execution against the person at any time within a year from the rendition of the judgment,[84] and if a defendant had been arrested provisionally upon a capias ad respondendum he remained in the custody of the sheriff or his bail until he was charged in execution.[85] The time within which a plaintiff is entitled after judgment to charge the body of defendant in execution is sometimes expressly prescribed by statute;[86] and where this is the case defendant must be charged within

Proc. § 572, an execution against the person could be set aside where not issued within three months after the entry of judgment, only where defendant was in actual custody; but this amendment abolishes the requirement of actual custody and enables defendant to move to set the execution aside on proof that plaintiff neglected to issue it within the three months. such time or the execution will be vacated unless reasonable cause be shown to the contrary.[87] Where, however, such provision is not made plaintiff must be allowed a reasonable time within which to charge his debtor.[88]

I. Previous Issue and Return of Fieri Facias. At common law a fieri facias and a capias ad satisfaciendum may issue simultaneously,[89] and the fact that a fieri facias has been issued and is at the time in the hands of the sheriff does not preclude the right to the issuance of a capias ad satisfaciendum,[90] although, since the execution of either writ is usually held to operate prima facie as a satisfaction of the judgment, the two writs cannot be contemporaneously executed,[91] and if anything is done under a fieri facias a capias ad satisfaciendum cannot be executed if issued until the former execution is returned.[92] The practice is controlled by statute in some states. In a number of states it is expressly provided by statute that an execution against the person cannot issue unless an execution against property has been previously issued and returned,[93]

unsatisfied in whole or in part.[94] This prohibition, being for the benefit of the judgment debtor, may, however, be waived by him.[95] When a party is entitled to an execution against the property and person of a debtor, the mere taking out of a fieri facias in the first instance without effect, or with only partial success, will not prevent the subsequent resort to the more stringent process of capias ad satisfaciendum.[96]

J. Proceedings to Procure — 1. In General. The statutory provisions as to the proceedings by which an execution against the person may be procured must in all cases be strictly followed before the writ may issue.[97]

2. Notice to Appear For Examination. In some jurisdictions it is provided by statute[99] that if the cause of action in any action of trespass or trespass on the case has arisen from the wilful and malicious act or neglect of defendant, the court or justice before whom the action is tried shall cause a certificate thereof to be made on the back of the execution issued in such action, and defendant shall not be discharged on giving bond.[1]

statute so to do, usually the judgment creditor or his attorney,[10] and may be sworn to before one authorized to administer oaths or affirmations to witnesses and others.[11] Defective grammar, where the sense is apparent, will not invalidate such an affidavit,[12] and a court in its discretion may permit the amendment of the affidavit as to matters of form.[13]

6. Evidence. On application for a writ of capias ad satisfaciendum the facts authorizing the issue of such writ must be proved by legal and competent evidence, and mere statements of conclusions of law will not suffice.[14] The officer making the order for the writ is to decide upon the weight and credibility of the evidence, although its applicability may be reviewed,[15] and his order should show that the proof was to his satisfaction.[16] A statement made by defendant when examined under a trustee act cannot afterward be sworn to as evidence of fraud to procure a capias ad satisfaciendum.[17] Nor can the testimony of a debtor taken upon his examination in supplementary proceedings be used as evidence of his fraud to obtain an order of arrest under the Non-Imprisonment Act, such supplementary proceedings being in the nature of a bill in equity.[18] The magistrate in determining whether the evidence laid before him is sufficient to satisfy him of such a state of facts, as the statute requires, performs a judicial duty, and may therefore be disqualified from the performance thereof by reason of his relations to plaintiff.[19]

7. Demand For Payment. Where demand is required by statute before an execution can issue against the person of a debtor for refusal to deliver up his estate, there must have been a specific demand for property to satisfy the judgment, made in such manner as to give him to understand that he will be liable to arrest for failure to comply, and also a refusal by the debtor.[20]

8. INDORSEMENT OF AMOUNT DUE AND ORDER TO ARREST. The clerk need not indorse on a capias ad satisfaciendum "that the sheriff hold defendant to bail in double the sum sworn to be due" as the writ shows both the amount due and the order to arrest.[21]

9. LEAVE OF COURT. It would seem to be well established that an order of court granting leave to issue an execution against the body is unnecessary where a previous order of arrest which has been granted still remains in force,[22] or where plaintiff would have been entitled to an order of arrest from the nature of the action, and from the facts necessarily stated in the complaint.[23] Where, however, an affidavit filed after judgment is the ground of the application, an order of the court is usually held to be necessary.[24]

K. The Writ — 1. FORM AND REQUISITES — a. In General. The form of an execution against the person is usually fixed by statute and nothing need be stated therein which is not required by such statute.[25] Where such forms exist they should not be disregarded,[26] although a substantial compliance will be sufficient.[27] And so far as applicable it seems that the rules relating to the form and requisites of executions against property govern the form and requisites of executions against the person.[28]

ize the issuing of a warrant under the Non-Imprisonment Act against a judgment debtor for unjustly refusing to apply his choses in action to the payment of a judgment against him, it is not necessary, in the demand made upon the debtor, to specify particularly what choses in action he is required to appropriate for that purpose.

In what name should run.— A capias ad satisfaciendum is process within the meaning of a constitutional requirement that all process shall be in the name of the state. Webster v. Farley, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 163. See supra, VI, D, 2, b, (VII).

To whom directed.— A capias ad satisfaciendum must be directed to the sheriff of the county in which the venue of the action is laid, although defendant was arrested on mesne process in another county, and gave bail to pay or surrender himself to the sheriff of the county where the arrest was made. Drake v. Cochran, 18 N. J. L. 9. And see Dudlow v. Watchorn, 16 East 39. See supra, VI, D, 2, b, (VI).

To what county directed.—A capias ad satisfaciendum issued on a replevin bond may be directed to the county in which the original judgment was obtained, although the bond was taken in another county. Scott v. Maupin, Hard. (Ky.) 122. See supra, VI, B.

Laying venue.— An execution against the person, issued and dated in a town within the county where the judgment was rendered is not void because a different venue is laid in the margin. Avery v. Lewis, 10 Vt. 332, 33 Am. Dec. 203.

Teste.— Where a capias ad satisfaciendum is issued in vacation it may be tested of the preceding term; if issued in term it should be tested of some day in the same term. Gordon v. Valentine, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 145. Although in England it is not necessary that an execution should be made returnable in the term next after that in which it is tested, yet in some of the states of this country under statute a capias ad satisfaciendum with a term intervening between its teste and return is irregular and a motion to set the same aside will be granted unless plaintiff obtains leave to amend upon paying the costs of the motion. Gibbons v. Larcom, 3 Wend.

b. Specification of County to Which Execution Against Property Issued. An execution against the person should specify eo nomine the county to which the execution against the property was issued.[29]

c. Recital as to Oath and Affidavit. A capias ad satisfaciendum issued on a judgment is not void on its face, although it does not recite that the oath required by law to be made was made before it issued,[30] nor, in the absence of statutory requirement, is it essential to the validity of a capias ad satisfaciendum that it should recite upon its face that the affidavit required by statute has been made.[31]

d. Conformity to Judgment. Where the right to issue an execution against the person depends upon the nature of the action, the execution must run against all the defendants, but where the right to arrest depends upon extrinsic facts, all the defendants are not necessarily liable to arrest, and plaintiff in such an action may issue an order of arrest against the defendant liable to arrest and after judgment may charge him in execution.[32] Where one of two joint plaintiffs dies after the rendition of the judgment, and no entry of his death is made in court, the execution should be taken out in the name of both the plaintiffs so that it may conform to the judgment.[33] An execution against two persons, in which the name of one only is erroneously stated, is not void as against the other; and a bond given by the latter to procure his release from arrest on such execution is valid.[34] Where the christian names of plaintiffs are not inserted in the warrant or judgment, a capias ad satisfaciendum which properly pursues the judgment gives the officer authority to make the arrest and take bond, although such christian names are not inserted in the writ.[35]

e. Statement of Object of Execution. An execution against the body should recite that it is to pay and satisfy plaintiff in the judgment and not the state or commonwealth.[36]

f. Recital of Judgment and Return of Execution — (I) In General. Unless required by statute an execution against the body need not contain a recital that the suit was commenced by warrant or that the judgment was rendered in an action of tort,[37] although it has been held that while not essential it would be well for the execution in connection with its other recitals to briefly refer to the cause of arrest.[38] It need not recite the incidents of the judgment,[39] nor the fact that an execution against property was returned unsatisfied.[40]

(II) Description of Judgment. Where a description of the judgment is necessary a capias execution sufficiently describes the judgment by giving its

(N. Y.) 303. It has been held that the teste being a matter of form, and not of substance, where such a writ was erroneously dated so that at the time it was dated the person in whose name it bore teste was not a judge of the court from which it issued, it is not void but only irregular, and a sheriff will not be protected who refuses on this ground to execute it. Jordan v. Porterfield, 19 Ga. 139, 63 Am. Dec. 301. And according to some decisions an execution not attested in the name of any court or judge is irregular and may be amended. Douglas v. Haberstro, 2 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 186. See supra, VI, D, 2, b, (XI).

Seal.— The seal of the court is essential to the validity of a capias ad satisfaciendum running out of the county in which such court sits. Finley v. Smith, 15 N. C. 95. See supra, VI, D, 2, b, (XIII).

29. O'Shea v. Kohn, 38 Hun (N. Y.) 149; People v. Reilly, 58 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 218. amount, the names of the parties, the court in which, and the term when it was rendered, without any more extended recital of the prior proceedings.[41]

(III) Docketing of Judgment. Where an execution against a person states a recovery and docketing of judgment in a certain county, and an issue and return unsatisfied of an execution in another county, it is immaterial that it does not recite a docketing in the second county.[42]

(IV) Amount Due and Costs. A writ of execution against the body is not void for failure to state the amount due plaintiff and the costs to be paid.[43]

g. Directions to Sheriff. A usual provision is that the writ shall require the sheriff substantially to arrest the debtor and commit him to the jail of the county until he shall pay the judgment or be discharged according to law[44] and to make due return of the execution.[45]

2. Amendment. An execution against the body may be amended[46] so as to cure such irregularities in form as the omission of the testatum clause,[47] a wrong attestation as to the name of the chief justice,[48] failure to direct the time for its return,[49] or erroneous direction as to the place to which returnable.[50] Although mesne process against the person returnable on Sunday, or out of term, is void, a capias ad satisfaciendum, being final process, may in such case be amended.[51]

3. Waiver of Defects[52] — a. In General. Where an affidavit is necessary upon an application for a certificate authorizing the arrest of a debtor, although the debtor appears after he has been defaulted in pursuance of a citation issued without an affidavit, such appearance will not constitute a waiver of the irregularity if he had no actual knowledge of the issuance of the citation before an affidavit had been made.[53] If the judgment of the court below is correct and legal, irregularity in a capias ad satisfaciendum cannot be taken advantage of on error.[54]

b. Waiver by Giving Bond. As a general rule where a person arrested upon a capias ad satisfaciendum gives bond under the insolvent laws, he is held to have thereby waived the privilege of immunity from arrest,[55] as well as his objections to the judgment upon which the writ was issued,[56] and his objections to defects in the writ.[57]

4. Alias, Pluries, and Renewed Writs[58] — a. When Issuance Proper. An alias execution against the person may issue where the first is returned "not found,"[59] or uncertified;[60] where the first is found to be so defective as to be invalid;[61] or where the officer suffers the debtor who has been arrested to escape without plaintiff's consent.[62] Where bail have surrendered the principal on a scire facias, plaintiff is entitled to an alias execution against him, notwithstanding more than a year has elapsed since the return of the former execution.[63] An alias execution cannot issue against a debtor who has been discharged from imprisonment,[64] for the neglect of plaintiff to take him in execution within the proper time,[65] or for neglect to pay or give security for prison fees.[66]

b. Proceedings to Obtain. The clerk cannot be required to issue an alias execution upon a debtor's default on his poor debtor's recognizance till the facts entitling plaintiff to it have been found by the court, on plaintiff's application, and entered on the record.[67]

An alias execution is void where the release of defendant is at the request or with the consent of plaintiff (Long v. Cherington, 161 Pa. c. Form and Requisites.[68] A second execution is not invalidated by the omission of the statement that it is an alias execution or its failure to refer to the first.[69] If the first writ be returnable non est the second may include the costs of issuing both.[70] A writ purporting to be a pluries capias, but without date and signature, is void.[71]

L. Arrest, Custody, and Disposition of Prisoner — 1. Arrest — a. Where Writ Operative. In the absence of statutory restriction a capias ad satisfaciendum is not confined in its operation to the county of defendant's residence,[72] but arrest thereon must be made by the officer within his jurisdiction or the proceedings will be unauthorized and void.[73]

b. Direction to Arrest Without Commitment. If a judgment creditor directs the officer to whom the writ of execution is delivered to arrest the debtor thereon, but not to commit him until further orders, the officer is justified in not arresting the debtor.[74]

c. Discretion of Officer. In executing a precept where he is commanded to arrest the body of an individual, the officer has the right to select such particular time of day as he thinks most expedient under the circumstances, and is authorized to make use of so much force as is necessary to accomplish the object.[75]

d. Duty to Inquire as to Property Before Arrest or Accept Same After Arrest. The diligence required of an officer in searching for property does not, it has been held, require inquiry on the subject by him of defendant before arresting the latter under an execution directing the officer to satisfy the judgment from the personal property of the debtor, and if sufficient is not found, to arrest the debtor, nor after the arrest can the officer be required to accept property in lieu of the debtor's person.[76]

e Mode of Arrest — (i) In General. To constitute a legal arrest upon an execution against the person, the officer should lay his hand on defendant or otherwise take possession of his person, so as to make him his prisoner in an unequivocal form.[77] Where, however, the party sought to be charged is a prisoner, the lodging of the capias ad satisfaciendum with the sheriff whose prisoner he is is a sufficient charging in execution.[78]

(ii) Right of Officer to Break and Enter Dwelling.[79] An officer in order to be justified under the writ must execute the same in a legal way and if a sheriff, in attempting to execute a writ of execution on civil process which is delivered to him to be levied, break open the outer door of the dwelling-house of the execution debtor, where the debtor then is, with a view of arresting the body of the debtor on the execution, such act is unlawful.[80]

If an arrest has been made, and the person arrested escapes and takes refuge in his dwelling-house, the officer may break open the outer door of the house in pursuit of him after making known his business, demand of

on a judgment in tort is returned unsatisfied before its return-day, and on the same day an alias execution is issued, an arrest on the alias execution made after the return-day of the first execution is legal.[81]

g. Resumption of Original Arrest Suspended by Recognizance. When the service of an execution has been begun before the return-day thereof, it may be completed after the return-day by an arrest of the debtor's person. The taking of the debtor into custody by the officer on the execution after the refusal of the debtor's oath has been annexed to it is not a new or second arrest, but is a resumption or continuance of the original arrest which has been suspended during the proceedings under the recognizance.[82]

2. Commitment.[83] In order to constitute a lawful commitment on an execution against the person, there must be at least a delivery of the prisoner at the jail, to the sheriff or deputy, jailer, or someone authorized to confine in the jail.[84] Where a debtor arrested on execution and carried before a magistrate does not ask to be admitted to take the poor debtor's oath, he may be committed to jail without examination.[85]

3. Custody and Disposition of Prisoner — a. In General. It is the duty of the officer to whom the writ is addressed, after arresting the judgment debtor, to incarcerate him and retain him in custody[86] until the judgment has been satisfied or he has been discharged by due process of law.[87]

b. Place of Confinement. In some jurisdictions a person arrested upon an execution against the person should be committed to the jail of the county from which the execution issued;[88] in others, however, it is held to be the duty of the sheriff to commit him to the jail of his own county, although the writ issued from the court of another county.[89]

c. Duration of Imprisonment. In some jurisdictions it is provided that in case of arrest upon execution in certain cases the debtor must be imprisoned for a specific time before he can be discharged.[90] In others it is provided that no person shall be imprisoned on execution beyond a certain designated period,[91] at

The Delaware act of 183-, directing the discharge of imprisoned debtors after five days, except under certain circumstances, is cumu-

d. Rights and Liabilities as to Jail Fees — (I) In General. It is the duty of the debtor confined under execution to maintain himself so long as he has the means,[93] and if he is unable to do so the jail fees must be paid by the person at whose instance the debtor is confined,[94] which fees are to be lodged with the jailer;[95] nor will the failure of the jailer to take a bond from the creditor for the payment of such fees release the creditor from his liability.[96] This duty of the creditor to provide for the debtor's support is, however, terminated by the release of the latter from custody.[97] In some jurisdictions the fact that a debtor has taken the benefit of prison bounds does not release the creditor from his obligation to pay jail fees if the debtor is unable to do so;[98] and should the judgment creditor refuse to pay the fees in advance when demanded the debtor will not commit a breach of his bond by going out of the prison limits.[99] In others, however, the creditor is liable only while the debtor is actually confined within the walls of the prison.[1]

(II) Discharge For Failure of Creditor to Pay Jail Fees — (A) In General. Where the creditor at whose instance a prisoner is confined on an execution refuses to discharge the jail fees for which he is responsible, the debtor's imprisonment becomes illegal and the debtor is entitled to his discharge.[2]

(B) Manner of Discharge. In some jurisdictions upon the failure of the person at whose instance the debtor is imprisoned to pay or secure the payment of jail fees, after due notice and demand, the sheriff or jailer in whose custody the prisoner is may discharge him from confinement.[3] In other jurisdictions the lative, and the right to a discharge under it may be waived by the debtor applying for the benefit of the general insolvent law. In re Fortner, 2 Harr. 461.

Laws (1882), c. 270, §§ 1, 2, provide that a debtor surrendered by his sureties shall be released from imprisonment unless his creditor shall, within twenty-four hours after notice of such surrender, pay for his board for a week in advance. It was held in Casey v. Viall, 17 R. I. 348, 21 Atl. 911, that where the surety, when surrendering the debtor, paid for his board for a week in advance, and served notice on the creditor immediately, such payment not being made for the benefit of the creditor, did not relieve him from the necessity of paying the board within twenty-four hours after receiving the notice; and that in computing the twenty-four hours Sunday is not to be excluded, since the payment of such board on Sunday is not rendered illegal by R. upon process in the same suit to charge him in execution within the time prescribed by law will entitle him to a supersedeas,[11] upon application to a judge of the court in which the judgment was rendered.[12] So where the debtor is surrendered in exoneration of bail and plaintiff proceeds to judgment but suffers the prescribed term to elapse without charging defendant in execution, he may obtain a rule to show cause why a supersedeas should not be granted, and the same will be granted unless good cause to the contrary be shown.[13] Although delivering a capias ad satisfaciendum to the sheriff is good cause against a supersedeas, yet if the sheriff return the writ non est inventus, a supersedeas will be granted unless it be followed up by an alias, for the issuance of which the court may under special circumstances allow time.[14] So also a supersedeas may be granted where defendant has not been charged in execution within the proper time after the return-day of an execution against his property.[15] Where defendant is discharged, under the act abolishing imprisonment for debt, between the verdict and judgment, the court will order a perpetual stay of the capias ad satisfaciendum, although if the discharge is objected to by plaintiff the court may open the case so as to give him a chance to try the question, the judgment standing as security.[16] It has been held in a number of cases that if plaintiff after service of the rule to show cause why a supersedeas should not issue, and before the time assigned to show cause, charges defendant in execution he may show this for cause and it will be sufficient to prevent a supersedeas;[17] and where a defendant in custody of the sheriff has been regularly charged in execution, after a rule to show cause why a supersedeas should not be granted, notwithstanding he was before supersedible, he is no longer entitled to a supersedeas.[18]

statute providing that no person shall be arrested or imprisoned by virtue of any mesne process which shall issue on any contract made or entered into after a certain date, a judgment creditor took out an execution against the body of defendant on a judgment recovered in an action on a contract entered into subsequent to such date, and the body of the debtor was arrested thereon, such execution will be set aside.[24] So defendant may move to set aside an execution against his person on the ground that it is not warranted by the facts, and it will be no answer to his application to say that he had allowed himself to be arrested by preliminary process.[25] When defendant is arrested on an execution defective enough to be voidable, but not void,[26] or incapable of amendment, defendant's remedy is by motion to have the execution set aside, and not by habeas corpus.[27]

2. When Not Proper. On the other hand it has been held that the court should not interfere upon an application to quash, vacate, or set aside a capias ad satisfaciendum based upon mere irregularities,[28] such as irregularities in the method of obtaining the judgment,[29] in the entry of the judgment,[30] in the recitals of the writ,[31] in the recitals in the indorsement on the writ,[32] in the teste of the writ,[33] or in the manner of the service of the writ;[34] nor should the court interfere for reasons that existed at the time of the trial of the original suit and which might then have been presented by way of defense.[35]

3. Time of Motion. Although if a motion to set aside an order of arrest is not made before judgment, defendant may be imprisoned on a capias ad satisfaciendum issued on the judgment, defendant may nevertheless even after the entry of judgment move to set aside the order of arrest, upon showing to the court that the judgment was recovered on a cause of action for which he was not liable to arrest.[36] A motion to quash a capias ad satisfaciendum is too late after the writ has been returned and defendant discharged on bonds to appear under insolvency laws, and after hearing on his petition in insolvency, and the forfeiture of his bond to appear therein.[37]

4. NECESSITY OF ACTUAL CUSTODY. In some jurisdictions where defendant in execution is at large by virtue of a bond given under the insolvent act, he cannot move to quash the proceedings because the writ is voidable, although he might do so by placing himself again in actual custody.[38]

5. ORDER SETTING ASIDE. An order setting aside an execution against the person being valid on its face is a justification to the sheriff for releasing the debtor from imprisonment.[39]

O. Return[40] — 1. NECESSITY FOR. In order to charge the bail of a debtor, a capias ad satisfaciendum must be issued against the principal and returned non est inventus[41] within the life of the execution,[42] and the return of non est inventus by an officer, after an execution has run out in his hands, with a view to charge bail on mesne process, is a false return.[43] No return of the execution is necessary to justify a commitment of defendant thereunder.[44] Nor does the imprisonment of the debtor end with the return or expiration of the writ.[45]

2. TIME FOR. The provisions of the statutes, if any,[46] must control the time for the return of an execution against the person. For the purpose of charging bail it has been provided in some jurisdictions that the execution against the principal must be returned to the next succeeding term of the court from which it issued,[47] or to the day to which such term is adjourned,[48] in which case no intermediate return is sufficient to fix the bail, nor can it be regarded as the return required by law;[49] in others that there must be a legal return of non est inventus within sixty days from the time of rendering final judgment.[50] Still other provisions are to the effect that the execution should have been four days in the hands of the officer before the return thereof[51] or that it shall not be returned in less than fifteen days.[52]

3. FORM AND REQUISITES. In returns of non est inventus a strict compliance with the forms is unnecessary. If the officer returns the facts it is sufficient.[53] In

In an early South Carolina case it was held that a sheriff might return a capias ad satisfaciendum so as to charge the bail so soon as he was satisfied that defendant was not in his district, and after he had made a return of non est inventus the court would presume that he had retained the writ a sufficient time to be sure of the truth of his return. some jurisdictions the officer who makes the return of non est inventus upon the execution against the principal must state particularly in his return what notice he gave to the bail or the bail cannot be charged.[54] Where the successor of a sheriff lets defendant to bail, against whom a writ had been executed by the former sheriff, before the return-day of the writ, he should state the fact in addition to the former sheriff's return.[55] Although in arrest on mesne process a return of the arrest and of a rescue is a good return, yet in case of arrest on execution against the person such a return is not a good return, since the officer is bound to call to his aid the posse comitatus.[56]

4. Amendment. Upon application made to the court within a reasonable time,[57] the officer has been allowed to amend his return so as to show that the commitment was under the capias itself and not pursuant to the order of the magistrate,[58] to supply an omission of a return of non est inventus as to the principal,[59] or to correct the return when made under a mistake of fact which from its nature might not have been within the officer's knowledge.[60]

5. Conclusiveness. The return must be considered as a true statement of the facts therein recited until the contrary is made to appear.[61] But the officer's return is not conclusive as to third persons whose interests are not connected with the suit.[62]

P. Discharge[63] — 1. Jurisdiction and Authority to Discharge. The right of a debtor to obtain his discharge being a right given or created only by statute, it follows that it can be enforced only in the manner prescribed by the statute,[64] and by application to the judge or justice designated in the statute,[65] and not under the provisions of any prior statute.[66] A debtor committed upon a capias ad satisfaciendum issued from a United States court cannot be discharged under the provisions of a state law relating to the discharge of persons taken into custody under writs of capias ad satisfaciendum.[67]

2. DISCHARGE ON HABEAS CORPUS[68] — a. In General. Whenever the process under which a person has been committed emanates from a court of competent jurisdiction whose proceedings may be reviewed so that redress may be had by appeal, writ of error, or any other direct means of review, a judge is not justified in giving relief upon habeas corpus, but the party aggrieved will be left to such direct methods of redress;[69] and debtors applying for relief under the acts giving to courts power to discharge debtors on habeas corpus must show in their petition a case over which the courts have jurisdiction, and without this there is no authority for their discharge.[70] A recognizance for defendant's appearance at the trial of the issues framed in a habeas corpus proceeding is void against the sureties.[71]

b. Scope of Inquiry. On habeas corpus the regularity and propriety of the arrest may be inquired into, so far as to determine whether the creditor had any right or authority to issue the process;[72] and the question whether the prisoner was a person of such a description or condition as could be lawfully arrested on proceedings in the form adopted is clearly open to proof.[73] The writ cannot, however, be issued to inquire into a mere matter of temporary privilege by which the applicant was exempted from arrest, his remedy for the violation of such privilege being by an ex parte application.[74]

3. DISCHARGE ON PAYMENT OR SATISFACTION OF JUDGMENT — a. In General. A debtor is entitled to be discharged on paying the amount of the execution and fees.[75] If, however, an execution be issued against one joint obligor for the costs who on payment of them is discharged this will not be a discharge or release of the other obligor who had been taken on execution for the debt.[76]

b. Upon Giving Note or Draft. The better rule seems to be that, unless otherwise authorized by statute[77] or by the terms of the writ,[78] the sheriff can receive nothing in satisfaction but money or its equivalent.[79]

4. Discharge on Consent of Creditor — a. In General. Plaintiff in a civil action may at any time order the discharge of a debtor confined under execution issued on the judgment,[80] and may make such agreement or take such security as he pleases, on discharging his debtor from arrest, so long as the officer has no beneficial interest therein.[81]

b. By Agent or Attorney. Plaintiff's attorney as such has no power to allow a discharge of defendant without the actual payment of the money.[82] The authority of a person, as special agent of plaintiff to discharge defendant, without satisfaction of the debt must be clearly and fully proved and strictly pursued.[83]

c. Effect. The discharge of the debtor by order of plaintiff constitutes a technical satisfaction of the debt,[84] and is a bar to a subsequent arrest in the same cause;[85] but such discharge is not a payment of the debt so as to release a guarantor.[86] A defendant, discharged at request of plaintiff, is still entitled under a contract to indemnity, to such costs and charges as he has been put to, and such damages as he has sustained by litigation, although the judgment is satisfied by such discharge.[87]

5. Discharge on Motion — a. Grounds. In some jurisdictions and in certain cases[88] the debtor when imprisoned under an execution against the person may secure his release from imprisonment on motion. But neither the violation on the part of the sheriff of the directions of the statute in respect to the mode of imprisonment,[89] the fact that the prisoner was recaptured in one state, by the sheriff after a negligent escape from his custody in another,[90] nor the inability of the debtor to endure the imprisonment,[91] furnish a ground for granting the prisoner's motion for a discharge from custody.

b. Hearing and Determination. Where the commitment on execution is founded only on the facts alleged as the ground for arrest on the debtor's motion for discharge from commitment, the facts are to be examined in the same manner as if the motion were to discharge from arrest.[92] In a proceeding by a debtor imprisoned for refusing to surrender his estate, where he is charged with fraud, it is sufficient to sustain such charge by a preponderance of the evidence.[93] Petitioner may show that on the trial of the case the evidence was necessarily on a given count which would not warrant the issuing of the execution.[94]

c. Imposition of Terms. In granting a debtor's motion to be discharged from imprisonment the court may under certain circumstances impose terms,[95] such as a stipulation on the debtor's part that he will not bring an action for false imprisonment,[96] or will not bring a suit against plaintiff's attorney.[97] Where, however, the debtor is relieved because the execution issued upon a judgment previously paid or discharged the court cannot impose terms.[98]

6. Discharge on Affidavit of Debtor or Certificate of Magistrate. Under some statutes allowing plaintiff a capias ad satisfaciendum upon making affidavit of certain facts, the debtor may obtain his release from custody by making a counter affidavit denying the facts alleged in plaintiff's affidavit,[99] or by submitting himself to an examination by the magistrate who signed the process [1] and obtaining a certificate as to the non-existence of the facts stated in plaintiff's affidavit.[2]

7. Discharge on Bond[3] to Proceed Under Insolvent Laws — a. In General. In a number of states provision is made by statute for the discharge of persons arrested on execution against the person upon their giving bond that they will take the benefit of the insolvent law of the state,[4] and if one legally arrested gives bond, with surety, conditioned for his appearance to take the benefit of the insolvent law, instead of suing out a habeas corpus, the surety will be bound by his obligation.[5]

b. Form and Requisites. The bond should in its form follow the statute authorizing the same, and one materially varying from that presented by the statute will be void.[6] A usual provision is that the bond shall be payable to the party at whose instance the arrest is made,[7] in twice the amount of the debt;[8] but a bond for the appearance of an insolvent in court is good, if it is for double the original debt, exclusive of interest and costs,[9] and it has been held that such a bond, although less than twice the amount of the arresting creditor's debt, is a valid bond, and binding on the parties.[10]

c. Performance or Breach. The bond will be forfeited by the failure of the debtor to apply by petition for the benefit of the insolvent laws within the time prescribed by statute,[11] to procure continuance to another term,[12] or to surrender himself into custody if he does not procure his discharge by the court upon his application.[13] But it has been held that the condition of the bond was not broken where the debtor was prevented from complying with the condition by a failure of one of the justices to attend,[14] where the justice refused to permit the debtor to take the oath,[15] or by a transfer of property by the debtor after his arrest and the execution of the bond.[16] In some jurisdictions the appearance of the principal is all for which his sureties on the bond are liable,[17] and a surrender of the debtor discharges his bond, but if he fails to appear his sureties are liable;[18] but in other jurisdictions it has been held that a voluntary surrender by the principal will not relieve his bail from the obligation which is contained in the bond unless he has failed to procure his discharge at the instance of his creditors, or by the act of the court.[19] Where surrender is made impossible by act of the law the debtor's bail are entitled to relief.[20] Where a debtor is arrested in one county under execution issued in another and gives bond for discharge on appearing within a certain time and taking the oath, the appearance is properly made in the county where the debtor was arrested.[21] The bond is not binding after the Sickness of the principal and surety whereby they were both unable to attend the court to which the bond was returnable is no reason for setting aside a judgment rendered against them, as their only course in such circumstances was to have appeared by attorney and obtained a continuance. Osborne v. Toomer, 51 N. C. 440.

21. Under such circumstances therefore the debtor is not liable on the bond for not ap-capias ad satisfaciendum has been set aside; in such case the jailer has not authority to detain the debtor and the surrender would be but nominal.[22] A bond to take the benefit of the insolvent law is not discharged by an act abolishing imprisonment for debt.[23]

d. Effect of Discharge. The discharge of one who gives such bond by a judge or the prothonotary is binding upon the sheriff who has the debtor in custody, whether the bond given be legal or illegal.[24] Where the debtor has given bond in each of two counties conditioned to apply for discharge, his discharge in one county by act of law releases him from the performance of the condition of the bond in the other county.[25]

e. Recommitment. A debtor who has given such bond can only be imprisoned for failure to give notice to creditors,[26] refusal to take the oath, and conviction of fraud.[27]

f. Discharge of Sureties. Death of the debtor before forfeiture,[28] his offer in open court to surrender himself and on the same day going to and remaining in prison,[29] or a declaration of the invalidity of the bond by competent judicial authority [30] operates as a discharge of his sureties. Where defendant, in custody on execution gives a bond, with surety to take the benefit of the insolvent law and a second execution issues on forfeiture of the bond, plaintiff cannot, after discharging the debtor from custody under the second execution without the surety's assent, maintain an action against the surety on the bond.[31]

g. Action on Bond [32] — Pleading.[33] Plaintiff must in his declaration on such a bond so state the breach of the condition as to show clearly the necessity of defendant's appearance within the meaning of the bond.[34] A failure to set out in pearing in the other county. Avery v. Seely, 3 Watts & S. (Pa.) 494.

Place of surrender.— The surrender must be to the court to which the capias ad satisfaciendum is returnable, or to the sheriff of that county. Where the writ issues to another county a surrender to the sheriff of it is a nullity (Mooring v. James, 13 N. C. 254), and upon an appeal by a debtor who had been arrested on a capias ad satisfaciendum and given bond under the insolvent debtors' law for his appearance at the county court, from a judgment finding him guilty of fraud and concealment and ordering his imprisonment, the debtor is bound to appear in the superior court, the same as he originally was in the county court (Wilkings v. Baugham, 25 N. the declaration the judgment on which the final process was issued is not ground for motion in arrest of judgment.[35]

8. Discharge on Surrender or Disclosure as to Property — a. In General. Under some statutes provision is made for the discharge of execution debtors, upon making disclosure or surrender of all their property, effects, money, etc., in satisfaction of the judgment on which the execution issued.[36]

b. Judgments or Executions Under Which Discharge Obtainable. Construing the provisions of such statutes in the several jurisdictions[37] it has been held that a defendant imprisoned under a capias ad satisfaciendum in an action for assault and battery[38] or for seduction[39] is not entitled to be discharged from arrest. And a discharge from imprisonment has been refused where the process issued upon a judgment in an action of which malice was the gist;[40] also where the judgment was in an action founded on actual force, or on fraud or deceit, or criminal conversation, where the damages found by the jury exceeded one hundred dollars.[41]

c. Grounds For Refusing Discharge. In some jurisdictions a person committed for fraudulently disposing of property[42] will not be discharged from imprisonment on his making an assignment of his property, the statutory provisions for a discharge applying only to cases where there has been no disposal of property with intent to defraud creditors.[43] Where, however, one liable to arrest

The withdrawal of a debtor's schedule from the clerk's office by his attorney after it had been filed, and its retention by him until the sitting of the court to which it was returnable, where no application was made for it, either at the clerk's office, or to the counsel, is good ground for continuing the cause, if it operates as a surprise when produced; but it is insufficient to authorize the imprisonment of the debtor, no fraudulent intent nizance conditioned that the debtor shall attend from time to time and from place to place is void.[52]

(II) Reopening Proceedings. Where the debtor's petition for discharge has been denied because he concealed some of his property[53] or on the ground that he omitted from his account some claims owned by him,[54] the proceedings may be reopened upon his showing that he acted in good faith, stating facts which explain or justify his conduct.

e. Schedules and Affidavits — (I) Necessity For. Upon the application for discharge, the debtor making such application must render a schedule or inventory under oath[55] of all his property.[56]

(II) Time of Filing. Where the time of filing the schedule is fixed by law, plaintiff may sue and recover for the breach in not rendering a schedule within the proper time,[57] unless there be a valid excuse for such failure, in which case he will be allowed to file it afterward nunc pro tunc.[58]

(III) Form and Requisites. The schedule or inventory should set out the estate, choses in action, and money which the debtor has in possession or is entitled to,[59] or show that he has no property or effects of any kind, except such as is exempted in the oath prescribed by law for insolvent debtors.[60] It should con-

f. Surrender of Property. It has been held that the applicant is bound to make actual delivery of the goods to his assignee, or do that which is equivalent thereto, and that mere readiness and willingness to deliver is not enough.[62] On the other hand it has been held that, when the debtor's schedule shows that he has property in another state, he is not compelled to bring the same into the jurisdiction where he has been discharged.[63]

g. Contest by Creditor — (i) Right to Contest. When an insolvent debtor has filed his schedule as provided by law, the creditor may contest his right to be discharged,[64] by traversing the schedule so filed, as by suggesting fraud or concealment of any property, money, or effects not embraced therein;[65] and if issue is found against the debtor he may be imprisoned until he surrenders the property.[66]

a suggestion of fraud to be filed and an issue to be made up so that the matter may be tried by a jury.[69]

(B) Form and Requisites. The suggestion must contain the charges and specifications to which the verdict must answer,[70] and charges on the ground of fraud must be clear, distinct, and specific, and not founded on mere hearsay and rumor.[71] It is not, however, necessary to specify the time, place, sum, person, item, and other facts with the same precision required in an ordinary declaration,[72] although advantage may be taken of defects in form or substance.[73] And an objection to the specification on the ground that it is not sufficiently certain is too late after issue joined.[74]

in an action for malicious prosecution,[91] or a defendant arrested under an execution issued for damages recovered in an action of trespass quare clausum fregit.[92] In some jurisdictions it is expressly provided that a person shall not be entitled to the jail liberties when committed on execution on a judgment in an action the cause of which is certified to have arisen from the wilful or malicious act of defendant,[93] and it has been held that a husband committed for contempt in not paying alimony is not entitled to the jail liberties on giving bonds to the sheriff.[94]

Execution by sureties only.— In some jurisdictions a prison-bounds undertaking to release a debtor from imprisonment, running in the name of the debtor as principal, is a valid obligation when executed by the sureties alone (Hickman v. Fargo, 1 Kan. Bond valid under statute or at common law.— See Barker v. Ryan, 1 Allen (Mass.) 72.

A written instrument in the form of a bond, but under seal, taken by a sheriff as security for the liberties of the prison will be valid; and the indulgence of the prisoner within such liberties is a sufficient consideraauthorized by statute.[2] A bond for the liberties of the prison, executed by the debtor under duress, is void both as against him and his sureties,[3] and, where a debtor was arrested on an invalid writ, a bond executed by him for prison limits is without consideration.[4] Where a debtor was permitted at his own request to go outside the prison limits in company with the jailer, although it may be a voluntary escape as between the debtor and creditor, yet it does not render a bail-bond afterward given void,[5] nor is a bond invalid because the records of the inferior court did not show at the time that a plan of the bounds had been returned by the sheriff, or that a survey of them had been made under the direction of said court as required by law.[6] A jail bond, executed after commitment but bearing a date prior to the commitment, is not on that account invalid.[7]

(II) Amount of Bond. Although the ordinary rule is that a prison-limits bond should be for double the debt and costs,[8] yet a provision to this effect has been held merely directory,[9] and a bond in a less sum will be sufficient if accepted,[10] so long as it is sufficient to satisfy the judgment in favor of the creditor.[11]

e. Joint Bonds. Where there is a joint judgment and execution against two, who are arrested and committed to prison, they may execute a joint prison-bounds bond.[12]

f. Delivery and Acceptance. Where a bond is given for the prison limits by a debtor in execution, delivery to the jailer is a good delivery to the obligee.[13] And the acceptance of the bond may be implied from the conduct of the creditor.[14]

g. Performance or Breach. The conditions of a bond for the prison limits are broken where the debtor departs from such limits,[15] without the express consent of the obligee in such bond,[16] and this according to some decisions however innocent the departure is, whatever the distance, and however soon he returns.[17] In others, however, it has been held that there will be no forfeiture where such transgression of the limits is unintentional and the debtor returns as soon as he is aware of his fault.[18] A prisoner having the liberties is bound at his peril and at the risk of his sureties to keep within them; and if the lines are in any part vague and indefinite he should confine himself within the places where they are not so.[19] The bond may be forfeited by failure of the debtor to surrender him-tion to support such instrument. Seymour v. Harvey, 8 Conn. 63.

The stay of proceedings against the person of a debtor, upon a petition for the benefit of the law for the relief of insolvent debtors, or upon the continuance of such petition, does self in accordance with the condition of the bond,[20] or unless he relieves himself from liability on a prison-limits bond, by executing an assignment under the act for the relief of poor debtors within the time prescribed by statute,[21] or if he does not furnish a schedule of his effects within a certain time as required by statute,[22] unless incapacitated by sickness from filing his schedule until after the expiration of the time allowed him.[23] So where the judgment creditor refuses to pay the prison fees in advance for the subsistence of the judgment debtor, it is not a breach of the bond for the debtor to leave the prison limits.[24] The condition of a prison-limits bond is not broken by the prisoner's escape while insane,[25] and an escape made from necessity and without the consent of the debtor, as by being carried out of the jail in a fit of sickness, does not violate the condition of the bond,[26] nor is a prisoner guilty of an escape if he pass the night in a house appropriated by the county to the use of prisoners, although the jailer exercise no control over the house or prisoner,[27] or if he goes into the jail yard in the nighttime for purposes indispensably necessary when there were no accommodations within the jail.[28]

30. Where by statute the powers of a sheriff who has left office in relation to all pris-

that time it discharges his sureties.[31] So a bond for prison limits is discharged by the creditor's receipt, given to the debtor, in satisfaction of the judgment and execution on an agreement fairly made by the creditor and a third person, although the creditor is not able to obtain any benefit from such agreement.[32]

j. Limits of Jail Liberties[33] — (I) By Whom Fixed. In some jurisdictions the power of establishing and altering the jail liberties is conferred on courts of sessions,[34] while in others such power is given to boards of supervisors on recommendation of the county courts.[35]

(II) Rights of Prisoner. A prisoner for debt is restricted to the jail limits fixed by law for the time being, although they were more extensive when he gave his bond;[36] but he has a right to go anywhere within the jail limits that other persons have who are not confined to such limits.[37] The establishment of prison bounds coextensive with the county in contemplation of law extends the prison walls to the county line.[38]

k. Assignment of Bond. A prison-limits bond may be legally assigned by the officer to whom it is made to the party for whose benefit it was intended,[39] after breach of such bond,[40] and in some jurisdictions, where a debtor gives the jailer a bond for the prison limits and escapes, it is the jailer's duty to assign the bond to the creditor.[41]

Scire facias can, however, issue only from the court having the record on which it was founded. Sewall v. Sullivan, 108 Mass. 355.

(B) Summary Proceedings by Motion.[44] A motion will lie in some jurisdictions for summary judgment on a prison-limits bond where the conditions thereof are in conformity with the requirements of the statute,[45] and where due notice of the pendency of the action for the escape has been given to the prisoner and his sureties.[46]

(C) Actions. In some states suits on bonds for the prison-bounds are limited to a year after the breach.[47] A suit on a prison-limits bond may be maintained by the party to whom it was made,[48] or by his assignee.[49] Plaintiff may sue the surety on a prison-bounds bond without joining the principal and before judgment against the latter.[50] According to some decisions bonds given to sheriffs for the prison liberties are for their indemnity only, and neither the sheriff nor his assignee can recover on such bond without showing that he has been injured.[51] According to others, however, the bond is held not merely one for indemnity and the necessity for damage is expressly denied,[52] and plaintiff is only required to show an escape,[53] and is not required to prove any special damage.[54]

(II) Defenses—(A) In General. It has been held that defendant's subsequent voluntary return to the bounds before commencement of suit,[55] that the debtor's property had been sold under a fieri facias,[56] that the debtor's detention was illegal because the jail expenses had not been paid,[57] that the penalty of the

An action cannot be maintained upon a bond to keep within the limits and rules of the prison, given by a person arrested upon a capias ad satisfaciendum, as under the N. C. bond is more or less than is required by the statute,[58] a valid promise not to arrest defendant on the first execution at law,[59] the subsequent assent of plaintiff to the escape,[60] a promise by the sheriff that if defendant escaped he would not sue him until he had first sued the bail,[61] a mere agreement to waive performance of the condition of the bond,[62] a discharge by the commissioner of special bail,[63] the misinstruction of the sheriff as to the limits,[64] a custom of the jailer to permit prisoners for debt who had the liberty of the yard to keep apartments not appropriated to their use by law,[65] failure to bring action against the sheriff within a year after the escape,[66] or a plea of non damnificatus[67] do not constitute a defense upon a forfeited prison-bounds bond; and, if the old sheriff has a right of action on the limit bond, a recovery against the new sheriff for the same escape is no bar.[68] On the other hand it has been held that defendant may interpose a valid defense to an action on a prison-bounds bond by showing that the execution under which the debtor was imprisoned was illegal[69] or has been quashed for irregularity,[70] the subsequent passage of a statute compelling imprisonment for debt,[71] that the debtor left the bounds with the consent and license of creditor,[72] or with the consent of the sheriff,[73] that the debtor had been discharged as an insolvent and presented his discharge to the sheriff who thereupon liberated him,[74] that the debtor had been duly committed to an asylum as a lunatic,[75] or the payment of a debt.[76]

and substance of the condition.[79] A declaration averring breach of condition of the bond must also allege the existence of the judgment and execution under which the bond was given.[80] Where the declaration on a prison bond shows that the bond set forth a judgment of a different date from that on which the execution issued the variance is fatal;[81] and where it is pleaded that no such execution issued as was described in the bond, which plea was traversed, a misdescription as to the damages and costs mentioned in the execution is a variance, and if the execution offered varied from the one described in the bond and judgment, it will not support the action.[82]

(B) Plea or Answer. In an action of debt on a jail bond taken pursuant to statute a plea of performance in the words of the condition will be sufficient;[83] but it seems that it is not a sufficient answer to a specific breach of a condition to plead generally a performance of the condition.[84] A plea in avoidance of a bond on the ground of a discharge under a statute should show a discharge as provided for by the statute.[85]

(C) Replication. A replication setting out the condition of the bond, etc., should aver the existence of a judgment on which the execution issued and it should conclude with a verification.[86] Since the right of action on a jail bond is in the sheriff until shown out of him by assignment, a replication to a plea of a

That the execution issued in due form of law and was delivered to the sheriff to levy, serve, and return according to law, and that for want of goods the sheriff by virtue of the execution and according to the precept thereof arrested the body of the debtor, sufficiently imports that the execution was properly directed as a legal officer. Where the breach alleged is the escape of the debtor, it is a good plea that the debtor continued a prisoner within the prison bounds as established by law, according to the term of his bond, until he was discharged by due course of law. 85. Morrow v. Weaver, 8 Ala. 288, a discharge under the statutes relating to the discharge of debtors upon rendering schedule, etc.

Jurisdiction of commissioners, etc., to take poor debtor's oath should be shown. In some jurisdictions a plea to an action on a prison-bounds bond setting up the taking of the poor debtor's oath should set up sufficient facts to show the jurisdiction of the commissioners or judges before whom the oath was taken (Hubbell v. Dimick, 1 Vt. 253), and a plea to a scire facias against bail, merely averring that the principal has been taken by a capias ad satisfaciendum and availed himself of the statute for the relief of honest debtors, is bad which does not show the jurisdiction of the court that discharged him, nor notice to the creditor (Langley v. Lane, 10 N. C. 313); but it has been held that a plea that after the execution of the bond the debtor was discharged by a supreme court commissioner under the insolvent act, and thereby was exempted from imprisonment for debt, need not state all the facts giving jurisdiction to the commissioner it being sufficient to allege the presenting of the petition and schedule required by said act (Hayden v. Palmer, 24 Wend. release from him that he had no equitable interest therein has been held to be insufficient.[87]

(D) Rejoinder. A rejoinder in an action on a prison-limits bond is bad which departs from the plea.[88]

(IV) TRIAL[89]—(A) Scope of Inquiry. In an action on a jail bond where the execution issued in pursuance of a rule of court, an inquiry cannot be made whether the execution issued regularly, or whether the rule was complied with.[90]

(B) Evidence.[91] In actions for breach of prison-bounds bonds the admissibility of evidence to invalidate a debtor's discharge,[92] or to show the actual limits of the jail liberties,[93] is governed by the general rules of evidence.[94] In an action on a bond given by a judgment debtor for the liberty of the prison limits, plaintiff has the burden of proving a breach.[95]

(C) Questions For the Jury. The intention of the debtor in going into the jail and surrendering himself to the sheriff is a matter for the determination of the jury.[96]

(V) DAMAGES.[97] In an action on a bond for prison limits where default has been made, the damages must be assessed by a jury.[98] In some jurisdictions the measure of damages in an action on a forfeited bond for the prison limits is the amount of the debt on which defendant was confined,[99] together with interest and costs,[1] or, as it is provided in some jurisdictions, the actual loss suffered by the creditor;[2] but it has been held that the debtor is not liable for the interest accruing on the debt, if he pays the amount due on the execution at the time of the commitment before departing the liberties.[3] In others, however, judgment in actions on bonds given for the liberty of the prison yard shall be rendered for the whole penalty of such bonds.[4] The measure of recovery cannot be reduced below what the statute prescribes by proof of the inability of the principal to have discharged the judgment on which the execution issued, either in whole or in part.[5] Plaintiff cannot, however, recover of the surety therein more than the penalty of the bond.[6] A sheriff may recover the expenses of retaking an escaped prisoner on a bond giving the prisoner the liberties of the prison;[7] but he can recover only nominal damages and costs, where the creditor fraudulently induced

Where the limits of the jail liberties, as described in the map and survey on record, are uncertain and contradictory, it seems that the reputed limits are the best evidence of the actual limits (Trull v. Wheeler, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 240); but evidence that the prisoners entitled to the jail liberties had been accustomed from the time when such limits were established to go to certain places as being within the bounds is incompetent to control the construction of a statute and the return of the selectmen, all the proceedings being recent (Ballou v. Kip, 7 Johns. the escape.[8] The costs of a suggestion made to the court in opposition to an unsuccessful amplication for discharge cannot be recovered in an action on a prison-bounds bond.[9]

(VI) JUDGMENT AND EXECUTION.[10] In an action of debt on a jail-limits bond, the whole sum due in equity to the creditor may be recovered in the name of damages;[11] but in such an action, although judgment for plaintiff is for the whole penalty, he cannot have execution for more than the original debt with interest and costs.[12]

(VII) APPEAL.[13] An appeal may be prosecuted by bail for the limits in the name of a sheriff on a judgment against him for an escape,[14] and a judgment against a surety on a jail-limits bond will be reversed unless the record affirmatively shows that the debtor has been guilty of an escape by passing beyond the prison bounds.[15]

(VIII) LIABILITY OF SURETIES[16] — (A) In General. The sureties on a prison-limits bond may stand on the very terms of the undertaking they have executed,[17] but that liability is fixed as soon as plaintiff acquires his right to the bond by assignment.[18] To preserve recourse upon the surety in a prison-limits bond, plaintiff must so conduct his proceedings as to be at all times able to subrogate the former to all his rights against the debtor.[19] The sureties are liable if the debtor escapes before the time is out for charging him in execution.[20]

(B) Release by Surrender of Principal. In some jurisdictions sureties on prison-limits bonds cannot release themselves from responsibility by surrendering the debtor,[21] but in others they may surrender their principal at any time before judgment rendered against them on such bond.[22]

(C) Release by Discharge of Principal. The sureties to the bond are released where the debtor is discharged by plaintiff,[23] or by a judge in the absence of the sureties,[24] or where the creditor makes a contract with the debtor without the knowledge of the sureties which induces the debtor to depart or escape the liberties.[25] The sureties on a bond given for prison rules are not, however, released

In New Hampshire the statute which provides that a debtor arrested or imprisoned on execution shall be discharged on giving bond that he will within a year take the poor debtor's oath, or surrender himself up to the creditor, in which latter event the creditor may cause him to be recommitted to jail "where he shall remain in close confinement and shall not again be discharged on giving bond as aforesaid" does not prevent a debtor who has so surrendered himself, and who has thereafter been recommitted by his creditor, from being discharged on taking the poor debtor's oath. (II) Right as Dependent on Nature of Execution. In the absence of express statutory exceptions,[35] a debtor confined under an execution against the person issued in civil proceedings is entitled to the benefit of a law for the relief of insolvent debtors,[36] but such statutes are not applicable to persons imprisoned under execution issued in proceedings of a criminal character.[37] To entitle one imprisoned under execution in a civil action to the benefit of such a statute it must be shown that he is not in custody on account of any of the causes mentioned in the statute, as excluding from its benefits.[38]

(B) Form and Requisites—(1) In General. The bond prescribed to be given to entitle a debtor to release from arrest is not a joint, but a separate bond, to be given by each.[40] A poor debtor's bond or recognizance must be made in conformity with the statute provisions in force at the time, in all its material parts, or it will not be a good statute bond, although it may secure to the creditor equally valuable rights.[41]

(2) Conditions. The most usual conditions of a poor debtor's bond are that within a certain time after its date the debtor will cite the creditor before a designated tribunal, submit himself to examination, and take the poor debtor's oath, or pay the debt, interest, costs, and fees arising in the execution, or deliver himself into the custody of the keeper of the jail into which he is liable to be committed under such execution.[42] Such a bond or recognizance may be further conditioned that the debtor will abide by the order of the examining magistrate.[43]

(3) Designation of Amount. The bond should, in order to be a good statutory bond, be for the sum designated by statute,[44] usually in double the sum for which the debtor was arrested or imprisoned, with the legal cost of the execution;[45]

20, 39 N. E. 415; Cook v. Thayer, 121 Mass. 415; Barber v. Floyd, 109 Mass. 61; Crissy v. Vogt, 9 Pa. Super. Ct. 418, 43 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 527.

By whom made.— The bond must be executed by the debtor as well as by the sureties or it will not be a good statute bond. Howard v. Brown, 21 Me. 385. Such bond or recognizance may, however, be taken orally. Townsend v. Way, 5 Allen (Mass.) 426.

To whom given.— Under a statute providing for the release of a debtor on bond, but not stating to whom the bond was to run, the bond may be given either to the creditor or to the officer. Pease v. Norton, 6 Me. 229.

40. Hatch v. Norris, 36 Me. 419, holding, however, that such a bond if given, although not a statutory bond, may be good at common law and each principal may be a surety for his coöbligor.

If there is a substantial compliance with the law in the conditions of the bond, it will be sufficient, although the form should vary in its language from that of the statute. Hatch v. Lawrence, 29 Me. 480. See also Wiggin v. Peters, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 127.

"Magistrate" is equivalent to "court or magistrate." Stearns v. Hemenway, 162 Mass. 17, 37 N. E. 766 [followed in Boston Wall Paper Co. v. Mullen, 163 Mass. 20, 39 N. E. 415].

Time of performance.— A poor debtor's bond, conditioned to be performed in a shorter time than is required by statute, is not valid as a statute bond, but is good at common law. Hathaway v. Crosby, 17 Me. 448.

The omission of the recognizance to name the magistrate before whom the debtor is to appear does not invalidate the recognizance, where the statute in relation to poor debtor's recognizances does not compel the debtor to accept any particular magistrate but merely requires him to appear before "some magistrate authorized." Cook v. Thayer, 121 Mass. 415; Thacher v. Williams, 14 Gray (Mass.) 324; Adams v. Stone, 13 Gray (Mass.) 396.

42. Ross v. Berry, 49 Me. 434; Randall v. Bowden, 48 Me. 37; Hatch v. Norris, 36 Me. 419; Fales v. Dow, 24 Me. 211; Cushman v. Waite, 21 Me. 540; Wiggin v. Peters, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 127.

In Massachusetts it is provided by statute that where a judgment debtor is arrested under an execution, and desires to take the oath as a poor debtor, but does not wish to have a time fixed for his examination, the magistrate may take his recognizance, conditioned that within thirty days he will deliver himself up for examination, "giving notice of the time and place thereof as herein provided, and appear at the time fixed for his examination, and from time to time until the same is concluded, and not depart without leave of the magistrate, making no default at any time fixed for his examination." Bliss v. Kershaw, 180 Mass. 99, 61 N. E. 823. After the judgment debtor has applied to a proper magistrate to have a time and place fixed for his examination and the same has been done and notice given to the creditor, another magistrate has no jurisdiction unless the former application is withdrawn to take a recognizance that the debtor will deliver himself up for examination within thirty days and such a recognizance will be void. Snelling v. Coburn, 10 Allen 344.

but a slight variance from this amount will not invalidate the bond,[46] as for instance the fact that the recognizance was taken in a sum less than double the amount of the ad damnum in the writ;[47] and it will be no defense to a suit on the recognizance that it does not include the cost of the writ of execution.[48] Unless expressly authorized the interest accruing on the judgment should make no part of the penal sum;[49] but where a statute requires the officer levying an execution to collect lawful interest on the debt from the rendition of judgment, a relief bond in which interest is omitted is not a statutory but a common-law bond.[50]

(c) Approval. It is an essential of a valid statutory bond for the release of a poor debtor that such bond be approved in the manner provided by statute,[51] and such bond must show that it was approved in the manner provided by law, or it can only be held good at common law.[52] In some jurisdictions the statute in relation to the approval of bonds given by poor debtors is not imperative and may be waived by the creditor.[53]

(d) Return and Recording. In the absence of a statute requiring it, it is not necessary that a poor debtor's recognizance should be returned or recorded in any court of record.[54]

(e) Validity as Dependent Upon Authority to Arrest. Where the arrest is unauthorized, a bond given under a statute to obtain release from such arrest is one which the obligor may avoid whenever it is attempted to be enforced,[55] and in some jurisdictions if the arrest is made without authority of law a recognizance entered into in consequence of it is absolutely void.[56] Where, however, a debtor who

The officer's fees for service of an execution by arrest are properly included in "the sum due thereon" which, under Me. Rev. St. c. 113, § 24, is to be doubled to fix the penalty of the poor debtor's bond to be given by the debtor to obtain his release from such arrest. Bradley v. Pinkham, 63 Me. 164.

If the officer intentionally includes an illegal item of fees, the bond will be valid only at common law, notwithstanding the officer intended to take it according to the statutory requirements. Call v. Foster, 49 Me. 452. Where the officer who takes the bond of an execution debtor includes in it a sum for "dollarage" as an item of his fees, it is thereby invalidated as a statute bond. Ross v. Berry, 49 Me. 434. If, however, the officer includes an illegal item under a belief that it was allowable, it has been held that the bond will be protected as a statutory bond. If the bond be valid only at common law, because of error in the penal sum, its condition will be performed if the debtor cite, submit himself to examination, and take the oath, although the proceedings are not according to the requirements of the statute. Ross v. Berry, 49 Me. 434.

51. Randall v. Bowden, 48 Me. 37. Under a statute providing that the sureties in a poor debtor's bond may be approved in writing by the creditor, an approval by the creditor's attorney of record is a sufficient compliance with the statute. Poor v. Knight, 66 Me. 482. In Scribner v. Mansfield, 68 Me. 74, a poor debtor's bond, given under Me. Rev. St. c. 113, § 24, was approved of as to the sureties in the following words: "We, the subscribers, approve of the sureties named in the foregoing bond. Scribner & Blossom, creditors, per E. S. Ridlon, their attorney." This was held a statutory approval. And in some states it is provided that the bond may be approved in writing by the creditor, his attorney in the action, or by two disinterested justices of the quorum of the county in which the debtor is arrested. Battle v. Knapp, 60 N. H. 361.

52. Gould v. Ford, 91 Me. 146, 39 Atl. 480; Smith v. Brown, 61 Me. 70; Guilford v. Delaney, 57 Me. 589.

53. As where the creditor voluntarily and without objection takes the bond not so approved. Battle v. Knapp, 60 N. H. 361. And it has been held that the bringing of suit by a creditor on a poor debtor's bond is an acceptance of it (Pease v. Norton, 6 Me. 229), and is an approval of the sureties, and is equivalent to an approval by two justices of the quorum (Pease v. Norton, 6 Me. 229; Kimball v. Preble, 5 Me. 353).

54. Thacher v. Williams, 14 Gray (Mass.) 324.

56. Smith v. Bean, 130 Mass. 298; Learnard v. Bailey, 111 Mass. 160.

Thus a poor debtor's bond is void when it is obvious that there could have been no such judgment, nor any such execution, as is alleged therein, and nothing appears therein to show at what term of the court the judgment is privileged from arrest, but having the right to waive that privilege, does so, and is taken on execution, the poor debtor's bond given to obtain his release is not void for duress.[57]

(F) Conclusiveness of Recitals. If the bond recites the day of arrest and bears date on the same day, the debtor and his sureties are bound by the date of the bond and recital of the day of arrest, and parol evidence is inadmissible to show that the bond was in fact executed on a day subsequent.[58]

(G) Computation of Time. The time of performance of the conditions of a poor debtor's bond is computed from the date of the bond and its recital as to the day of arrest, although not in fact executed until a subsequent day.[59] In computing the number of days in which the debtor is to surrender himself according to the terms of his bond, fractions of a day are not to be included,[60] and where the bond is conditioned that the prisoner shall surrender himself if he is not discharged in a certain number of days from the day of his commitment such day of commitment is excluded.[61] So it has been held that where a designated period was allowed the debtor from the date of the bond in which to take the oath or in default thereof surrender himself, the day of the date of the bond should be excluded.[62] Where the condition of the bond is that the debtor if not allowed to take the poor debtor's oath shall surrender himself into custody within a certain number of days, the time does not commence to run until the justices to whom the debtor has applied have disallowed the oath, provided the debtor has done all in his power to take it and in the computation of days the day appointed for taking the oath is excluded.[63]

(H) Construction. Courts will adopt liberal constructions to avoid forfeiture of such bonds.[64]

(I) Performance or Breach — (1) In General. In order to avoid the forfeiture of the conditions of a statutory bond given by a debtor to obtain his release from arrest on execution, he must comply with one of the alternatives contained in the conditions of such bond, within the time fixed by law,[65] unless prevented by the obligee, the law, or the act of God from so doing.[66] In fulfilling the conditions of a poor debtor's bond good only at common law, the debtor is not required to perform any other of the statutory provisions than those named in the bond.[67]

(2) By Failure to Appear. The condition of a poor debtor's bond or recognizance is broken if he fails to appear at the time fixed for his examination.[68]

The surety in a bond for the appearance of an insolvent debtor to render his schedule

The condition of a recognizance entered into by a debtor who has been arrested on an execution is fulfilled if the debtor appears and submits himself to examination at the time and place fixed for that purpose, and is discharged and allowed to go at large, by the magistrate without taking the oath, although the magistrate may have erred in the performance of his duty,[69] and he is not bound to surrender himself until the magistrate certifies such refusal upon the execution.[70]

(3) By Failure to Make Disclosure. A refusal by a debtor to make disclosures before a tribunal having authority to act is a breach of his bond;[71] and the disclosure by the debtor if undertaken must be concluded and the oath taken within the time, and it will not relieve from forfeiture that the disclosure was seasonably commenced,[72] unless the delay was at the request of the creditor or the objection is waived by him;[73] and such a breach of his bond by the debtor in refusing to make disclosure is not waived by the creditor's subsequent participation in a disclosure by such debtor.[74] So the bond will be forfeited where the debtor when disclosing his affairs shows that he has money on hand or debts due him which he does not cause to be appraised and set off for his creditor;[75] but it has been held that where a poor debtor, after he had given a relief bond, disclosed that he had a certain sum of money which he afterward paid to the creditor, and it was indorsed on the execution, the creditor could not sustain an action on the bond.[76]

(4) By Failure to Take Oath. To prevent a breach of the conditions of a poor debtor's bond, where the creditor has done no act excusing or waiving the performance within the prescribed time,[77] and such performance has not been rendered impossible by the act of the law or the act of God, the debtor must show to the satisfaction of the justices that he is entitled to take, and must take the oath,[78] in accordance with the provisions of the statute.[79] The certificate of justices of the administration of the poor debtor's oath to one who has given is not liable if the debtor does appear and obtain his discharge, although it be fraudulently obtained, provided the security is not a party to the fraud. Davis v. Cathey, 1 Stew. (Ala.) 402.

bond on arrest conditioned as by law required will not support a plea of performance of the condition of the bond in a suit thereon, if it incorrectly states the amount of the judgment and the date of its rendition.[80]

(5) Surrender to Save Penalty. To save the penalty of his bond by performing its last condition, that of surrender, a poor debtor should seasonably[81] "deliver himself into the custody of the jailer" and be received into jail, or deliver himself to the jailer at the jail in such a manner as will make it the duty of the jailer to receive him into custody in the jail.[82] So also where a statute requires a debtor surrendering himself to remain a designated time at the jail his failure to remain for such time is a breach of the bond.[83] When the debtor has once seasonably surrendered himself into the custody of the jailer, the penalty of the bond is saved and he cannot be made liable thereon by reason of any misconduct or negligence of the jailer;[84] and if the debtor is improperly discharged by the jailer the forfeiture of the bond is nevertheless saved.[85]

(6) Omission to File Certificate of Discharge With Jailer. If the condition of a poor debtor's bond does not expressly require that the certificate of the justice as to the debtor's discharge shall be filed with the keeper of the prison, it is not broken by an omission to file it.[86]

(j) Liabilities on Bonds—(1) Actions to Enforce[87]—(a) In General. Where a debtor gives a bond to discharge an attachment of his goods on mesne process, and thereafter to obtain relief from arrest enters into a recognizance and is defaulted thereon, the creditor may sue on both instruments to the extent of obtaining the amount of his judgment with interest and costs.[88] If, during the pendency of a suit on a bond, given under the Poor Debtors' Act, there is another action against the debtor, alleging that he wilfully made false disclosures, it cannot affect the rights of the parties to the suit on the bond.[89]

(b) Defenses. The only bar to an action on a poor debtor's bond is a complete fulfilment on the debtor's part of one of its alternative conditions.[90] Thus performance of conditions has not been excused on account of sickness,[91] or lunacy of the debtor,[92] a discharge of the debtor in bankruptcy after breach of the bond even if the principal is released by such discharge,[93] an oath taken in a different county than the one in which the arrest was made is no defense to an action on the bond to take the poor debtor's oath,[94] that the recognizance was taken in a sum less than double the amount of the execution on which the debtor had been arrested, or that the place fixed for his examination was not inserted in the condition of the recognizance.[95] The erroneous adjudication of the justices before whom the disclosure of the debtor is made that the debtor, having disclosed enough in their opinion to pay the debt, is not bound to answer further, and, having offered the property disclosed that he is entitled to his discharge,[96] or the omission by the officer to return into the clerk's office, during the lifetime of the precept, an execution on which a poor debtor's bond was taken by such officer,[97] or because the debtor was so destitute of property that he might legally have taken the poor debtor's oath,[98] or because the judge was absent from the county and disabled by sickness from hearing the case, at the day fixed for the hearing.[99] Where the sureties on a poor debtor's bond did not read it, but were truly informed of the date of the bond and the time of the arrest of the debtor, although they were misinformed as to the time when the conditions must be performed, they cannot be relieved from liability where there was no fraudulent design;[1] nor does a creditor's participation in the examination of a poor debtor after the expiration of the time limited by statute constitute a waiver of the forfeiture of the bond.[2] Where, subsequent to the commencement of an action on a poor debtor's bond, one half of the original judgment is released by the creditor, the judgment is not thereby vacated but the plaintiff should recover the part remaining.[3] A plea of performance of the condition of a poor debtor's bond according to the statute estops the debtor from claiming it to be by reason of its variance from the requirements of the statute a common-law bond.[4] Where a judgment debtor makes default in appearing for examination, it is no defense to a suit on the recognizance that the execution has not been returned.[5] The failure of the creditor to advance money for the debtor's support, although ordinarily a ground for discharge, will be no defense in an action on a jail-limits bond, where such failure was induced by the debtor's deception which was known to the sureties.[6] On the other hand a release by plaintiff,[7] a certificate of two justices of the peace and quorum that they had seasonably administered the oath to a poor debtor, specifying the mode of their appointment and proceedings, showing that the same complied with the statute,[8] a reversal of execution,[9] or payment and acceptance of the whole amount equitably due on the bond before suit commenced thereon for the penalty[10] has been held to constitute a good defense to an action on a poor debtor's bond for release. And no judgment can be rendered on a bond to appear and render a schedule of property given on executing a capias ad satisfaciendum where such bond fails to recite the capias ad satisfaciendum and parties to a judgment and where the writ shows a fieri facias issued on the judgment and a levy on property which prima facie was sufficient to satisfy the judgment.[11] It is competent for the creditor to waive provisions in the recognizance made for his own security, and in such case the debtor will be excused from strict performance by reason of the creditor's acts or agreements.[12]

tion to count on any other than the penal part of the bond, leaving the condition to be pleaded by defendant if it affords him any defense.[14] The declaration in an action on a recognizance [15] need not aver affirmatively that the execution has not been paid.[16] Where the certificate authorizing the arrest, which recites that the debtor was notified to appear before the court, is annexed to and forms part of the declaration, the declaration shows that such notice was given.[17] A declaration on a bail-bond need not aver the truth of the affidavit on which a capias ad satisfaciendum [18] issued, stating defendant had refused to surrender his land, as the fact cannot be inquired into in such collateral action.[19]

bb. Plea. Where a statute makes it a requisite to the discharge of a poor debtor that a certificate be delivered to the jailer, a plea of discharge under the poor debtor's oath must allege such delivery of the certificate to the jailer.[20]

(d) Evidence.[21] In an action on a poor debtor's bond, the admissibility of parol [22] or documentary evidence,[23] or of the statements [24] or conduct of the parties,[25] is subject to the general rules controlling the admissibility of evidence.[26] If the debtor was not legally entitled to take the poor debtor's oath, on the evidence actually produced before the magistrate within the time limited in the bond, testimony is not admissible on the trial of a suit upon the bond to show that evidence might have been introduced which would have authorized the taking of the oath.[27] Likewise the general rules relating to the burden of proof,[28] presumptions,[29] and the weight and sufficiency of the evidence[30] govern in actions of this character.

(e) Damages.[31] The measure of damages on a poor debtor's bond is the actual damage caused by the breach,[32] usually the amount of the debt and costs with interest in the absence of other evidence.[33] When there has been a payment and acceptance of the full amount equitably due on the bond before a suit was commenced thereon, for the penalty, the action cannot be maintained.[34] When prior to breach of any condition of the poor debtor's bond the principal therein has legally notified the creditor and has been allowed by the proper justices to take the oath, the damages are to be assessed by a jury at the request of either party, otherwise by the court, and any legal evidence on that point may be introduced by such party.[35]

Only nominal damages are recoverable for the technical breach of the condition of a poor debtor's bond for not assigning to the creditor property disclosed on the examination, the title being vested in an assignee in insolvency (Smith v. Dutton, 74 Me. 468); but the debtor in order to reduce the damages to a nominal sum must show that during the thirty days following the judgment in the original action he was utterly worthless in property, and that his failure to disclose did not damage plaintiff (Webster v. Bailey, 57 Me. 364). If a poor debtor discloses certain articles of property liable to attachment and does not deliver them on demand, and no direct evidence of the value of them is offered by either party, in an action on the poor debtor's bond, the jury may render such verdict as from the whole testimony in the case they may believe plaintiff is entitled to recover. Torrey v. Berry, 36 Me. 589.

If the breach be caused by the omission to appraise a note disclosed on the examination, the amount of damages is not to be limited to the value of such note; but any legal proof going to show the ability of the debtor to have paid the debt or some part thereof is admissible and should be taken into consideration by the jury in the assessment of damages. passage of a statute abolishing imprisonment for debt pending appeal from a judgment involving fraud against a poor debtor arrested on execution.[38] But the sureties are not relieved on the ground of obvious clerical errors which are subject to correction,[39] or where the principal, not having attempted to perform any of the conditions of a poor debtor's bond within the prescribed time, it became forfeited, and he afterward filed his petition and obtained his discharge as a bankrupt.[40] Where judgment is against two, and plaintiff takes one in execution and discharges him, the bail of both is exonerated.[41]

(b) By Surrender of Principal. When the principal is called at the term to which his bond is returnable, and answering to his name presents himself to the court, the surety is entitled to his discharge.[42] The right of sureties to release themselves from liability by the surrender of their principal is usually given;[43] but in some jurisdictions under statutes providing for the release of a poor debtor by his giving a bond conditioned to perform certain acts or deliver himself into the custody of the keeper of the jail, the surety of the poor debtor's bond had no authority to surrender the debtor against the latter's will.[44] Where a person arrested on execution gives bond, under the Insolvent Debtors' Act, and is surrendered by his bail according to the condition of the bond, the creditor does not by neglecting to cause the recommitment of the debtor discharge the debt or the sureties therefor.[45]

(B) Form and Requisites. As to the form and requisites of an application or petition by a poor debtor for his discharge, it is as a rule held sufficient if he presents a statement in writing,[48] and signed,[49] showing the necessary facts entitling him to the benefit of the act for the relief of poor debtors and containing apt words to indicate his wish to be admitted to that benefit,[50] as by showing that the petitioner is so under arrest as to be entitled to a discharge,[51] describing the creditor,[52] and showing in substance that the debtor is unable to pay the debt upon which he is committed.[53] It need not describe the statute which contains the provision, and an erroneous description of it may be rejected as surplusage.[54] One application and notice, specifying that the oath is to be taken upon two executions, may be sufficient.[55] It is no objection to the discharge of a poor debtor on his oath that the nature of the action in which the judgment was recovered is wrongly stated in his application, where such mistake is no injury to the creditor.[56]

(C) Notice — (1) NECESSITY FOR. Notice to the creditor[57] and proof of service of the same[58] is necessary where a debtor who has been arrested on execution makes application for a discharge under the Poor Debtors' Act.

(2) BY WHOM ISSUED. The justice who issues a citation to the creditor for the debtor's disclosure performs no judicial duties, but acts ministerially, and need not therefore be disinterested,[59] and he cannot refuse to issue the notification when application is properly made to him, but is to act forthwith without any hearing of parties upon the subject.[60] Where two justices of the quorum are required for the examination, one alone cannot issue the notice and fix the time and place for hearing the debtor's application.[61]

See also Hanson v. Dyer, 17 Me. 96). In others the debtor may apply to a justice of the peace in the county where he was arrested, or if he is committed or has delivered himself into the custody of the jailer, he may apply to a justice of the same county, or at his request the jailer may apply in his behalf. Me. Rev. St. c. 113, § 26; Wing v. Hussey, 71 Me. 185. (3) To Whom Given. The person to whom the notice or citation should be given is the creditor or creditors,[62] and, where the execution is in favor of several, notice must be given to all creditors living in the commonwealth whether they be partners or not.[63] In some states it is provided that the service may also be made on the creditor's agent or attorney of record;[64] and where the creditor is dead or does not reside or have a place of business in the county where the arrest is made and has no agent or attorney therein, the debtor may give notice of his intention to take the poor debtor's oath to the officer making the arrest.[65]

(4) Form and Requisites.[66] Since the notice or citation to the creditor lies at the foundation of the proceedings, it must be substantially according to the requirements of the statutes before the justices proceed to take the debtor's disclosure, and in order that they may have jurisdiction so to do.[67] The subject of which notice is to be given is the representation of the debtor that he is unable to pay the debt and is desirous of taking the benefit of the law for the relief of poor debtors;[68] and all that is required to make the notice effectual is that it shall contain an intelligible statement or recital of the facts which it is necessary or material for the party to be served to know.[69] The notice should inform the creditor of the time and place fixed for the examination,[70] and should give such a description of the judgment and process to which it relates that the person and case may be rightly understood;[71] but a merely verbal vari-

If a judgment debtor has been arrested on two executions in favor of the same creditor, and upon each arrest has entered into a recognizance, a subsequent notice to the creditor of his desire to take the oath for the relief of poor debtors must specify from which of the two arrests he seeks to be discharged. Merriam v. Haskins, 7 Allen (Mass.) 346. In Way v. O'Sullivan, 106 Mass. 118, a judgment debtor was arrested at different times on two executions in favor of the same creditor, and upon each arrest entered into a recognizance. Afterward two notices to the creditor, precisely alike, stating that the debtor "arrested on execution in your favor" ance which cannot mislead the creditor or create a doubt as to the object of the citation will not vitiate the proceedings.[72] The notice or citation should be in writing, signed by the magistrate issuing it, and designating his official capacity,[73] and under seal,[74] and should correctly describe the person to be cited,[75] and the debtor.[76] The citation need not be a warrant commanding an officer to give notice, but may be addressed to the creditor himself,[77] and it need not name the magistrate before whom it is to be returned,[78] nor need it state the amount of the debt, nor describe the execution more particularly than as an execution at the creditor's suit, issued from a certain court of common pleas at a certain date,[79] nor state the date of the judgment or of the execution.[80] An averment in the citation that the bond had not expired is unnecessary, when the citation gave the date of the bond, and the proceedings thereby appeared seasonable.[81]

(5) Amendment. The citation or notice to the creditor will not be deemed incorrect for want of form only, or for circumstantial errors or mistakes where the person and case can be rightly understood, but such errors or defects may be amended.[82]

(6) Waiver of Objections to Notice. Although a statute prescribes the mode of notifying the creditor of the intention of the debtor, yet such creditor may by himself or attorney waive his right to such statutory notice.[83]

(7) Second Notice. In some jurisdictions a poor debtor may have any num-desired to take the poor debtor's oath, and fixing the same time and place of his examination, were served at the same time on the creditor. It was held that the notices were sufficient.

Mere defects or irregularities in the notice will be waived by the appearance of the cred-

ber of citations to his creditor, so long as each citation states a change of circumstances since the preceding hearing, which changes must be proved before the magistrate.[84] In others the rule is that when a debtor has given notice of his desire to take the benefit of the act for the relief of poor debtors, no new notice can be given until after a certain number of days unless the former notice is insufficient in form or service.[85]

(8) Service of Notice — (a) Time. The time for the service of the notice or citation on the creditor is usually fixed by statute.[86] In Massachusetts it has been held that the condition of a recognizance by a poor debtor that within thirty days from the day of the arrest he will deliver himself up for examination, giving notice of the time and place thereof, does not require him to have the notice served upon the creditor within the thirty days.[87]

(b) Place. Notice of the debtor's intention to take the benefit of the act for the relief of poor debtors may be served in another county than that in which the arrest was made,[88] but a discharge upon taking the poor debtor's oath is invalid if the notice was served outside of the officer's precinct.[89]

(c) Manner and Sufficiency — aa. In General. The statutes of the various states usually require the notice to be served personally[90] upon the creditor or creditors by their agents or attorneys by delivering an attested copy,[91] or leaving itor at the examination of the debtor without objecting to the notice. Moore v. Bond, 18 Me. 142; Bliss v. Kershaw, 180 Mass. 99, 61 N. E. 823; Williams v. Kimball, 135 Mass. 411; McInerny v. Samuels, 125 Mass. 425; Bunker v. Nutter, 9 N. H. 554.

If the notice is served on the creditor's attorney the time for travel is to be computed from the place of service, and not from the attorney's residence. Carroll v. Rogers, 4 Allen (Mass.) 70.

Where the debtor gives to the officer making the arrest notice of his intention to take the poor debtor's oath, the time is to be computed as in case of service upon a plaintiff; and the time for travel is to be determined by the distance between the place of service on the officer and the place of examination, and not by the distance of the creditor's residence or place of business therefrom. Homer v. Sinnott, 119 Mass. 191.

Within fifteen days before hearing.— A notice of hearing on application to be allowed to take the poor debtor's oath, required by statute to be served at least fifteen days before the day of hearing, is insufficient if served within that time. Sanborn v. Piper, 64 N. H. 335, 10 Atl. 680.

Ten days before term to which case continued.— Where a person has been arrested on a capias ad satisfaciendum and has given bond for his appearance at court to take the insolvent debtor's oath, and the case is continued to the next term of court, a notice served on his creditors ten days before the term to which the cause is continued is a sufficient notice, under the act for the relief of insolvent debtors. the same at their last and usual place of residence ;[92] and where this is the case the reading of the notice by the officer to the creditor is usually held not a legal service thereof.[93] A constable[94] is a competent officer to serve the citation, although the amount due the creditor is in excess of the amount which limits the service of writs by him in a personal action or one in which damages are claimed ;[95] and in some jurisdictions a copy of the application and order of the justice fixing a time and place of hearing, delivered to the proper party, is a sufficient notice, although the person attesting and delivering the same, was not an officer.[96]

bb. Waiver of Defective Service. In accordance with the rule that the judgment creditor may waive any formalities intended merely for his security, he may personally or through his attorney by accepting the service of notice waive any informality and irregularity therein ;[97] and in a suit on a poor debtor's recognizance the question whether plaintiff had waived service of the notice in due form should be submitted to the jury.[98]

(9) Return[99] — (a) In General. While the return of service of notice on application to take a poor debtor's oath should be returned before the proper officer,[1] be sworn to[2] and contain a recital of the time of service,[3] great liberality is exercised in amendments to supply omissions or to correct palpable errors therein for the purpose of sustaining proceedings when the justice of the case requires it.[4]

(b) Conclusiveness. The return of the officer[5] as to his service of the citation is conclusive between the parties, and must be taken as true unless it contains some repugnancy.[6]

Service of the original application and order thereon will be sufficient, although the statute directs that the creditor shall be served with a copy of such application and order. Eaton v. Miner, 5 N. H. 542. And see Callaghan v. Whitmarsh, 145 Mass. 340, 14 N. E. 149.

3. Under a statute providing for service of notice of an application by a debtor to take the poor debtor's oath by leaving a copy at the place of abode of the creditor to be served, allowing not less than a certain time before the time appointed for the examination, the return of service must state how long before the time set for the application the notice was left at the creditor's abode (Smith v. Randall, 1 Allen (Mass.) 456), but where the officer's return is defective, in not allowing time for travel, it has been held that parol evidence is competent to show that the creditor waived such time (Lord v. Skinner, 9 Allen (Mass.) 376).

(D) Successive Applications. It is sometimes provided by statute[7] that if one magistrate after examination is not satisfied that the debtor is entitled to his discharge and remands him to prison, this will not prevent him from obtaining his discharge upon new notice to the creditor and new proceedings before the same or other magistrates, and that pending an appeal from the judgment of a magistrate finding an applicant for the poor debtor's oath guilty on charges of fraud, another magistrate may entertain another application for the oath.[8]

(E) Jurisdiction and Authority of Magistrates — (1) IN GENERAL. The statutes providing for the relief of poor debtors usually designate the magistrate or justice before whom the proceedings, examination, administration of oath, etc., are to be conducted.[9] The presumption is in favor of the jurisdiction and acts of justices administering the poor debtor's oath,[10] and the authority of one acting as commissioner in insolvency to take a debtor's recognizance will be presumed, in the absence of evidence that it was usurped.[11]

(2) NECESSITY FOR OATH.[12] Commissioners appointed under statute to take a defendant's disclosure need not be sworn.[13]

(3) SELECTION — (a) IN GENERAL. Justices, in order to have authority to conduct the examination of a poor debtor, administer the oath, and make the certificate prescribed by law must be selected or appointed in the manner designated by the statute authorizing such proceedings,[14] and, when this right of the creditor timony to prove its falsity is inadmissible, except in a suit against the officer for a false return. Davis v. Putnam, 5 Gray (Mass.) 321; Niles v. Hancock, 3 Metc. (Mass.) 568; Leach v. Hill, 3 Metc. (Mass.) 173; Hall v. Tenney, 11 N. H. 516. Thus where an officer makes a return on a citation issued to two or more joint creditors that he has served the same by leaving an attested copy at their last and usual place of abode, it must be taken as true that they had the same place of abode. Leach v. Hill, 3 Metc. (Mass.) 173.

7. In Pennsylvania, however, on an application for the benefit of the insolvent laws, where there has once been a full hearing and decision on the merits, the court will not hear another petition made under the same circumstances, and the only mode for a debtor to adopt whose petition has been rejected on a hearing on the merits is to present a special petition, reciting the former proceedings and decision, and ask for a rehearing which the court will grant or refuse in the exercise of a sound legal discretion. Abbot's Case, 1 Ashm. 69.

Place of examination.— One desirous of taking the oath for the relief of poor debtors must be examined before magistrates authorized to act in the county in which the arrest was made, and he cannot cite his creditor and be heard with effect before those of any other county. Houghton v. Lyford, 39 Me. 267; Dalton-Ingersoll Co. v. Hubbard, 174 Mass. 307, 54 N. E. 862. But when it appears by the bond in suit and by the officer's return on the execution (made a part of plaintiff's case) that the arrest was made in the county in which the disclosure was had, the fact of jurisdiction is established. Revocation of authority.— See Chamberlain is denied, the justices taking the disclosure have no jurisdiction and their proceedings are void.[15] If the creditor is not present to select a justice, the appointment is to be made for him by an officer.[16]

(b) Selection of Third Justice. If the two justices selected do not agree, they may choose a third justice to act with them, and if they cannot agree on a third, a legally qualified officer may choose him.[17]

(c) Time For Selection. The debtor may select one of the justices to take his disclosure at any time after the citation to the creditor has been prepared, and before the tribunal has been organized.[18]

(4) Disqualification.[19] If the justices who administered the oath to the debtor are not authorized in conformity to the provisions of the statute to act in the matter their certificate of discharge has no validity whatever.[20] In order that their acts may be binding the justices before whom the examination is conducted must be disinterested.[21] The issuing of a citation to a creditor does not, however, disqualify the justice issuing the same from hearing the disclosure, as a justice selected on the part of the debtor,[22] nor will the fact that a justice who heard a disclosure on the part of the debtor was counsel for the debtor in an action subsequently brought on the bond given to procure the release of the debtor from arrest under execution affect the validity of the disclosure.[23]

(f) Proceedings on Examination and Disclosure—(1) Time and Place. The time and place of the examination is to be appointed by the magistrate and not fixed by the debtor.[24] The hearing must be had at the time and place stated

The justices cannot be selected on a day which by statute is dies non juridicus; and, if so selected, in the absence of the creditor, the disclosure, although made on a subsequent day, is invalid, and constitutes no defense to an action on the poor debtor's bond. Poor v. Beatty, 78 Me. 580, 7 Atl. 541.

Administration of oath without prison limits.— The oath may be administered to a poor in the notice of hearing, unless such hearing is delayed by an adjournment regularly made.[25]

(2) Attendance of Magistrate and Parties — (a) Procuring Attendance of Magistrate. In some jurisdictions the burden of doing the necessary preliminary acts is upon the debtor,[26] including the procuring of the attendance of the magistrate or other officer at the time and place fixed for examination.[27] In other jurisdictions it is held to be the duty of the creditor selecting a justice for the purpose of hearing the disclosure of a poor debtor to procure the attendance of the justice selected by him at the time and place appointed in the citation.[28]

(b) Time For Appearance. The statutes providing for the relief of poor debtors as a rule designate the time within which the magistrate and parties shall appear, a usual allowance being one hour after the time fixed for the examination,[29] or to which such examination is adjourned,[30] and there will be no default until the expiration of the full time.[31]

(c) Failure of Debtor to Appear. The failure of a debtor to appear on the day fixed for his examination will constitute a breach of the recognizance.[32]

(d) Effect of Departure of Debtor. If, having appeared, the debtor departs from the presence of the magistrate with the intent to permanently absent himself before the final order is in some form made, declared, or announced, this will constitute a breach of his recognizance or bond,[33] and where a debtor appears for

Under statutes giving a magistrate the discretionary power which courts have in civil actions as to adjournment and other incidents of a poor debtor's examination, the magistrate may keep open the hearing after the expiration of the hour to which it has been adjourned; and it is immaterial that, without informing the creditor, he had told the debtor that he need not appear till after the expiration of the hour. Lincoln v. Cook, 124 Mass. 383.

32. Driscoll v. Hurlburt, 167 Mass. 327, 45 N. E. 754, holding this to be so even though the creditor had agreed to a continuance, where the debtor's counsel was, by the terms of the agreement, required to have it filed, and the order for continuance made but failed so to do.

Necessity for certificate.— The departure of a debtor arrested on execution from the presence of the magistrate before whom he is examined, on the oral refusal of the magistrate to administer the poor debtor's oath, but before a certificate of his refusal has examination and his counsel enters a general appearance, the fact that the citation is not in court does not justify the debtor in departing without leave.[34] It is competent for the magistrate to suspend the proceedings for a brief period and to resume them again, and where he does so on the return of the debtor he by implication sanctions his absence as being for a legitimate purpose.[35]

(3) HEARING — (a) COURSE AND SCOPE OF EXAMINATION. Any course of examination which would have a tendency to exhibit conduct of the debtor inconsistent with the oath will be pertinent and appropriate,[36] and a debtor will not be allowed to take the oath, if he cannot account for the appropriation of money traced to his hands.[37] The debtor must make a true disclosure of his business affairs and property under oath, and the creditor may propose to the debtor any interrogatories pertinent to the inquiry.[38] The statement exhibited under oath by a petitioner for the benefit of the insolvent laws is taken to be prima facie correct; and the burden of proving it to be erroneous lies on the opposing creditors,[39] and whether the statements made by a poor debtor at his examination before the justices are true, and if so whether they are consistent with the oath, are questions for the final decision of the magistrates under the statute.[40]

(b) EVIDENCE.[41] The court must hear any legal and pertinent evidence adduced by the creditor,[42] and opposing creditors have the right to introduce proof upon the subject of the arrest of the debtor.[43] The debtor may prove by his own oath that he has been arrested and given the bond required by the statute in such case.[44]

(d) Adjournment — aa. Power to Adjourn. In proceedings for the examination of poor debtors, the magistrate or justice[46] may postpone or delay the examination from time to time whenever it becomes necessary in the performance of their duty,[47] and for reasons of which they are the proper judges,[48] and the adjournment may be based upon the consent of the parties.[49]

Attendance of another magistrate at adjourned examination.— Where two magistrates meet at the time and place appointed for the examination and adjourn to a future day, and only one of them is able to attend again on that day, another magistrate may attend instead of him who was absent, and the two who are thus present may lawfully proceed to examine the debtor. oath,[54] must depend upon the statutory provisions relating to the proceeding. If, on the examination and hearing of the parties, the magistrate or justice is satisfied that the debtor's disclosure is true and they do not discover anything therein inconsistent with his taking the oath,[55] they may administer the same to him.[56] In some jurisdictions, however, it has been held that the magistrates to whom a debtor applies for the oath of insolvency have no discretion where he has complied with the requisites of the act in relation to notice, schedule, etc., but are bound to administer the oath, although they may be of the opinion that the debtor is about to commit perjury.[57]

(f) Appraisal and Assignment of Property. In Maine, where a debtor shall disclose in his examination that he possesses bank-bills, notes, accounts, bonds, or any property not exempt by law, which cannot be attached, appraisers shall be selected to appraise such property,[58] before the oath can be administered;[59] and a failure to have the appraisal made will prevent the debtor's discharge from his bond.[60] And in several jurisdictions the debtor, as a condition of being admitted to take the oath, may be required to deliver up his property,[61] or assign the same to his creditor.[62]

(g) Costs.[63] The creditor is entitled to recover of the debtor the expense of citing him on the execution to appear and make a disclosure,[64] but the payment of the magistrate's fee is not a condition precedent to the discharge of a poor debtor.[65] A defendant who is discharged by taking the insolvent's oath is not entitled to costs.[66]

the magistrate's decision;[68] and where such charges are sustained[69] the debtor shall not be released but may be subjected to additional punishment.[70]

(b) Form and Sufficiency. Charges of fraud need not be stated with the particularity requisite for an indictment, but only with sufficient clearness to inform the debtor of the nature and particulars of the transaction intended to be proved against him.[71] They may be alleged upon belief without venue, and as "on or about" a day named within the limitation presented by statute,[72] and may be signed and sworn to by one of several partners in behalf of his firm.[73] The question whether the charges of fraud were sufficient in form cannot be raised on motion in arrest of judgment.[74]

(c) Trial[75] — aa. Nature. The charges of fraud are in the nature of an action at law, notwithstanding the provision for punishment by imprisonment.[76] They are incidental to the debtor's application to be relieved from imprisonment, by taking the oath, and are set up by way of answer to that application.[77]

bb. Evidence.[78] Upon the trial of charges of fraud the creditor has the burden of proof,[79] but the rules of evidence in civil proceedings apply,[80] and such charges need not be proved beyond a reasonable doubt as in strictly criminal cases.[81] The debtor and his wife may be called by the creditor as witnesses on the trial of charges of fraud.[82]

cc. Motion to Dismiss. A motion by the debtor to dismiss charges of fraud may be entertained if seasonably made.[83]

(d) Appeal.[84] Upon the trial of charges of fraud, either party has a right of appeal from the decision, and of trial by jury,[85] such appeal being in like manner as in civil actions,[86] and statutes giving this right to the creditor are not unconstitutional as placing the debtor twice in jeopardy.[87] An appeal will not be allowed merely for the purpose of enhancing the punishment.[88] This right of

Amendment.— The omission to state in charges of fraud alleged against a debtor on his application to take the poor debtor's oath that the alleged fraud was committed after the debt of the creditor was contracted may be supplied by amendment (Brown v. Tobias, 1 Allen (Mass.) 385), and a motion to dismiss because of the insufficiency of the charges of an objecting debtor should be overruled, where the charges and specifications were afterward amended (Lamagdelaine v. Tremblay, 162 Mass. 339, 39 N. appeal, although claimed by the creditor does not make it less the duty of the examining magistrates to administer the oath to the debtor and issue the certificate thereof, where they decide that the charges of fraud are not maintained,[89] nor will an appeal taken from the decision of the magistrate, finding the poor debtor guilty upon charges of fraud filed, exempt the debtor from arrest on the execution.[90]

(5) RECORD — (a) IN GENERAL. The authority of the justices before whom the examination and disclosure of a poor debtor took place must appear from the record, and nothing will be presumed in favor of the jurisdiction;[91] but the record of the proceedings of justices administering a poor debtor's oath need not exhibit a compliance with the requirements of a statute when the same are merely directory.[92]

(b) CERTIFICATE — aa. Necessity For. It is the duty of the magistrates discharging a debtor to make out a certificate and deliver it to the debtor, this constituting the evidence upon which the prison keeper is required to discharge him and the evidence of his exemption from imprisonment on that or any other execution, to be issued on the same judgment or any other judgment founded thereon;[93] and is all that is required to complete the debtor's discharge.[94]

bb. Form and Requisites. Where the statute prescribes the form, a compliance therewith is sufficient and nothing further need be inserted.[95] Should a certificate come to be pleaded, it must, however, appear to apply with requisite certainty to the execution mentioned in the declaration.[96] Where the citation and bond describe the judgment on which the debtor was arrested as rendered at a certain term of court, it is not a misrecital in the discharge to describe it as rendered on a particular day of such term.[97] Where it appears by the justices' certificate to Protection from imprisonment.— A certificate of a magistrate administering the oath to a debtor committed to jail on execution that he has been admitted to the benefit of such oath will protect him from imprisonment on such execution. Thompson v. Berry, 5 R. I. 95.

A creditor cannot avail himself, in any shape, of informality in a certificate, which the magistrates give to the jailer that a debtor has taken the oath. Keay v. Palmer, 5 N. H. 43.

If the certificate substantially state the facts entitling the debtor to his discharge it will be sufficient. Garland v. Williams, 49 Me. 16. Thus a certificate is not invalidated by the failure of the justices to keep any further record, nor by the omission to state that the justices are disinterested and not related either to the creditor or the debtor (Butler v. Fairbanks, 4 Gray (Mass.) 531), nor is it invalidated by the initial letter only of his christian name being given, and all statement of his occupation omitted, in his representation to the jailer, in the application of the jailer to a justice, in the notice by the justice to the creditor, and in the certificate of discharge; if the notice to the creditor accurately states the date of the execution and the court which issued it (Davis v. Putnam, 5 Gray (Mass.) 321).

96. Hence a certificate setting forth an execution for a sum different from that on which the debtor is committed will not authorize his discharge, although the proper oath may have been administered to him. Holbrook v. Pearce, 15 Vt. 616.

what debt the proceedings related, their omission to insert the date of the execution on which the arrest was made will not render the proceedings void.[98] The certificate of discharge need not be stamped.[99]

cc. Amendment. If seasonably moved for, an amendment of the certificate will be allowed,[1] and where justices duly selected and qualified have administered the poor debtor's oath, after an examination, to a debtor who had been arrested on execution and had given bond, they may amend their certificate conformably to the truth of the case,[2] not only after the commencement of a suit upon the bond but upon the trial thereof,[3] as for instance by adding in accordance with the proof a much fuller statement of the manner in which they were selected,[4] by stating by whom they were selected as justices,[5] and by stating that the debtor was examined on oath.[6]

dd. Effect as Evidence. The certificate of justices of their proceedings under an insolvent act is of itself evidence of the facts it contains, and a party claiming under such proceedings is not compelled to prove such facts by evidence aliunde the certificate.[7] It is, however, evidence only of the facts required by the statute to be stated in the certificate.[8]

ee. Record and Delivery to Jailer. A statutory requirement that the return as to the administration of the oath to the debtor should be made to the court within a certain time has been held to be merely directory.[9] In some jurisdictions the certificate must be delivered to the jailer,[10] or the going at large of the debtor will be a breach of his jail bond.[11] In others, however, where the condition of the bond does not expressly require that the certificate shall be filed with the keeper of the prison, the bond will not be forfeited by the omission to file it,[12] nor is it essential to the defense of a suit on a poor debtor's bond that the certificate should be filed with the prison keeper prior to the commencement of the suit.[13]

ff. Conclusiveness of Certificate. In some jurisdictions the doctrine is expressly recognized that a creditor may go behind the certificate of the magistrates and show irregularity in the preliminary proceedings, as for instance in the notice.[14] In

Subject to rebuttal.— Where the certificate of the justices states their own character, the parties to the process, the commitment of the debtor, his desire to take the oath, and that he had caused the creditor to be notified according to law, it is sufficient to make out a prima facie case of jurisdiction, subject to rebuttal, however, by proof of a want of it. others, however, the adjudication of the magistrates respecting the notice and return is conclusive,[15] unless its effect be destroyed by an agreed statement of facts or by a voluntary admission of illegal testimony.[16] The certificate while prima facie evidence of jurisdiction of the justices is not conclusive on the point and want of jurisdiction may be shown.[17]

(6) Validity and Effect of Discharge — (a) Validity. A poor debtor's discharge is not rendered invalid by reason of a mistake honestly made,[18] by payment of fees to his attorney and to the justice,[19] or by failure to pay an amount stipulated to be paid by him until the day of adjournment of the proceedings,[20] nor is it rendered less valid by the fact that the oath was unnecessarily administered to him.[21] Where, however, an imprisoned debtor procures a discharge of the execution by false representation or concealment of the truth the discharge will be void;[22] and it has been held that if it does not affirmatively appear from the justice's certificate of discharge of a poor debtor, or from the proofs in the case, that the justices were "disinterested," the certificate will not defeat an action on the bond.[23] The creditor does not waive his right to object to the validity of the discharge by not accepting an offer of assignment of property to him by the debtor.[24]

(b) Effect — aa. In General. As a general rule an execution debtor regularly discharged upon examination cannot be again arrested or imprisoned on the same or a subsequent execution issued on the same judgment or one founded thereon,[25] or as it is provided in some jurisdictions from arrest or imprisonment for the same debt, costs, or charges,[26] unless convicted of having wilfully sworn falsely

39. Where a change of circumstances is necessary to entitle a debtor to a second citation to his creditor, if a poor debtor has oath,[40] want of legal service of notice on the creditor,[41] and the like, the general rule is that a discharge under the poor debtors' acts is a release from and a satisfaction of the jail-limits bond,[42] even though the discharge was obtained by fraud.[43]

Q. Rearrest — 1. In General — Common-Law Rule. It is a general principle of the common law that a man shall not be taken twice in execution for the same cause,[44] the arrest upon execution by order of the creditor and discharge being considered even as a satisfaction.[45]

2. On Same Writ. Although the common-law rule just stated has usually been changed by statute so as to preserve to the creditor all his rights and remedies on the judgment,[46] yet it has been held that the debtor cannot be rearrested on the same execution against his body, where the debtor enters into a recognizance in compliance with the statute[47] and by taking advantage of the provisions of the Poor Debtors' Act either is allowed to take the oath or is excused by the non-appearance of the creditor from doing so;[48] where the jailer applied in the same action to be admitted to the oath, and after hearing upon the merits been refused, his discharge under a second citation to his committing creditor will be void, unless upon a change of circumstances since the refusal, recited in the citation, and will afford no jurisdiction, in an action against him and sureties upon a prison-limits bond, for an escape from the limits. Eastwood v. Schroeder, 5 R. I. 388.

The recognizance takes the place of the execution and the arrest, and remains as security to the creditor, and the power of the execution is suspended until the debtor submits himself to examination, and the magistrate refuses the oath provided for the relief of poor debtors and annexes his certificate to that effect. 48. If a debtor who has been arrested on an execution is allowed by the magistrate before whom he is carried, with the consent of refuses to receive and retain the body of the debtor delivered to his custody by the arresting officer;[49] or where the creditor elects to bring action against the sheriff for escape.[50] Where, however, the debtor illegally escapes,[51] is illegally discharged from arrest,[52] or forfeits his prison-bounds bond by breaking the prison bounds,[53] he may be retaken on the original execution and committed to custody. But it seems that the debtor may sometimes by agreement,[54] or by his acts and conduct,[55] waive his right not to be arrested again on the same writ.

3. On Subsequent Writ. While a debtor is in the custody of the sheriff under an execution against the person, his creditor has no right to issue another execution against the person of defendant on the same judgment to the sheriff of another county,[56] and where, after arrest on an execution against the person, the writ is set aside as void, there cannot on a reversal of the order be a rearrest under the same process; but a new execution against the person will issue on the judgment.[57]

4. After Voluntary Escape. In some jurisdictions the doctrine is well settled that after a voluntary escape of a prisoner on execution the officer who permitted it has no authority to retake the debtor upon the same execution against his will, even within the state in which the escape has taken place,[58] at least without the

the creditor, to go at large from day to day during his examination, and is present at the time and place to which it is adjourned, and waits in readiness to be further examined, and to take the oath, a reasonable time, and until he is informed by the magistrate that the oath will be administered to him, and the creditor does not appear, this is a full performance by the debtor of his duty, although the oath be not administered, and the creditor has not power to arrest him. permission of the creditor.[59] It is, however, competent for the creditor to procure a second arrest of the party, who had been arrested or imprisoned, notwithstanding the escape voluntarily permitted by the jailer,[60] and it has been held that this right can be assigned to the sheriff by parol or otherwise and the sheriff may then exercise it in a manner as ample as could the creditor himself;[61] but the right to imprison ceases where the creditor gives the debtor permission to go off the jail limits or to go at large.[62] In other jurisdictions, however, where a sheriff permits a person whom he has arrested for debt to escape he may recapture him and hold him as before, as the prisoner of the execution creditor.[63]

XV. WRONGFUL EXECUTION.

A. Nature and Grounds of Liability — 1. WRONGFUL ISSUANCE OF EXECUTION. An execution is wrongful where the writ is issued upon a void judgment,[64] or where the party causing the writ to be issued knows that the judgment has been discharged, either by payment,[65] or by an express agreement,[66] or where the judgment has been extinguished by a valid discharge in bankruptcy.[67] A party issuing an execution on a judgment for a debt which he knew to have been paid before the entry of the judgment is liable in an action for malicious abuse of legal process, whether he caused the judgment to be entered or not.[68]

2. WRONGFUL LEVY.[69] A levy is wrongful if made under a writ which was wrongfully issued,[70] or where events subsequent to the issuance of the writ have made it improper to proceed thereunder.[71] The levy is also wrongful if made in an unauthorized manner,[72] or if it is made upon property of a person other than the judgment debtor,[73] or property of the judgment debtor which is exempt.[74] A levy is wrongful if made first upon a class of property which the statute provides shall not be taken until another class is disposed of,[75] or, where the judgment debtor is allowed by statute the right to designate the property to be levied on, if he is denied this right,[76] or the levy is afterward made upon other property than that designated.[77] The levy is also wrongful if excessive.[78]

3. WRONGFUL SALE. Where property is sold under execution where the original levy was wrongful,[79] or where after the levy the judgment has been satisfied,[80] or a proper tender made of the amount due thereunder,[81] or where a sale is made under an execution issued upon a judgment which is afterward reversed,[82] the sale is wrongful, and the injured party may recover in an appropriate action for the damages sustained. An unlimited sale of partnership property under an execution against only one of the partners is wrongful,[83] and, where there has been a conditional sale of property, the title to remain in the vendor until payment is made, a sale of such property under execution is wrongful unless made subject to the rights of the vendor in the conditional sale.[84]

4. WRONGFUL ARREST.[85] Causing the arrest of an execution debtor, where he has sufficient property to satisfy the judgment, is a trespass for which the person suing out the execution is liable.[86] An action of trespass will lie in cases where a person has been arrested on a process which was irregularly issued and

B. Persons Liable — 1. In General. The liability for a wrongful execution may rest upon either or several of the following persons: The clerk[90] or justice issuing the writ,[91] the officer who executes it,[92] the execution creditor[93] or his attorney,[94] the obligors on the officer's bond of indemnity,[95] the purchaser at the execution sale,[96] or a person not a party to the writ.[97]

or authorized.[2] The execution creditor may be liable for a wrongful execution in cases where no action will lie against the officer, for while the officer is protected, if he has proceeded under a writ valid upon its face and issuing out of a court of competent jurisdiction, the execution creditor must show a valid judgment authorizing the execution.[3]

b. For Acts Directed by Attorney. An execution creditor is liable for a wrongful execution directed by an attorney whom he has retained generally to conduct the suit, or to recover the amount of the judgment.[4]

c. For Acts of Officer Subsequently Ratified. An execution creditor who has not authorized or directed an unlawful levy or sale in the first instance may became liable by a subsequent ratification of the act of the officer. If, with knowledge that a sale is wrongfully made, he became a purchaser of the property,[5] or receives the proceeds of the sale it is a ratification of the wrongful act which renders him equally liable with the officer;[6] but he will not be liable where he receives the proceeds in ignorance of the fact that the sale was wrongfully made.[7] The liability of the execution creditor extends only to the injury resulting from the particular act or acts ratified.[8]

If the execution creditor receives the proceeds of a sale directed by his agent, and does not repudiate the trespass upon learning that the sale was wrongfully made, he is liable as if he had expressly authorized the act. 4. Purchaser at Execution Sale. The purchaser at an execution sale who does nothing more than purchase is not liable in trespass for the act of the officer in making a wrongful levy and sale. His purchase does not make him a trespasser by relation.[10] Neither is the purchaser liable in trespass for subsequently carrying away the goods purchased, provided he received possession of the goods from the officer at the time of the sale;[11] but if the goods are not delivered at the time of the sale he is liable in trespass for subsequently taking and carrying them away.[12]

5. Persons Not Parties to Writ. A stranger or person not a party to the suit who officiously directs an officer in making a wrongful levy,[13] or who accompanies an officer and assists him in the commission of the wrongful act is equally liable with the officer for the injury sustained.[14]

C. Persons Entitled to Recover Damages. Any person having an interest in the property who sustains an injury by the wrongful taking thereof may maintain an action for the damages sustained.[15]

But see Weller v. Hanaur, 95 Fed. 236; McLeod v. Fortune, 19 U. C. Q. B. 98, where it was held that while plaintiff in execution by signing such a bond would become a joint trespasser with the officer, yet the surety on the bond having no control over the writ and receiving no benefit from its execution would not be so liable.

The nature of the liability of an obligor on an indemnity bond as regards the officer arises out of a contract of indemnity, but as regards the person whose property is wrongfully sold the liability is in tort by reason of such obligor being a co-trespasser with the officer. Martin v. Buffaloe, 128 N. C. 305, 38 S. E. 902, 83 Am. St. Rep. 679.

In construing a bond of indemnity, a construction will not be given which will make the obligors liable for a trespass which they did not direct or authorize, if the bond can reasonably be construed otherwise. Clark v. Woodruff, 83 N. Y. 518 [affirming 18 Hun 419].

An officer cannot release a surety on an indemnity bond from his liability in tort to the person injured, since the surety is a joint trespasser with the officer. Martin v. Buffaloe, 128 N. C. 305, 38 S. E. 902, 83 Am. St. Rep. 679.

The taking of an indemnity bond in the manner provided by statute relieves the officer in some jurisdictions from liability (Brock v. Church, 5 Ky. L. Rep. 855; Bradley v. Holloway, 28 Mo. 150), but the right of action on the indemnity bond does not preclude an action of trespass against the execution creditor (State v. Donnelly, 9 Mo. App. 519).

Goss v. Cardell, 53 Vt. 447, which case was decided under a statute providing that the title of the debtor shall be vested in the assignee as it existed at the time of the adjudication.

The owner of an ultimate estate in chattels cannot maintain an action on the case for a wrongful sale, although the officer professed to sell the entire property. Holmesley v. Hogue, 49 N. C. 481, where it was held that since the execution sale passes only such an interest as the execution debtor has the ultimate estate is not thereby interfered with.

To maintain an action of trespass for a mere wrongful levy upon property, plaintiff must have had either the actual possession or the right of possession at the time of the levy, but in case of a wrongful sale a conditional reversionary right of possession is sufficient to support the action. of the relief sought. The owner of property which has been wrongfully taken under execution may maintain replevin to recover it,[17] or he may treat the taking as a conversion and sue for damages.[18] In actions for the recovery of damages, the general rule is that if the injury is the immediate result of the wrongful act complained of, trespass is the proper action, but if merely consequential the remedy should be an action on the case.[19] Trespass is the proper remedy for an arrest under void process,[20] or where the execution debtor has sufficient property to satisfy the judgment,[21] or for a wrongful levy upon property of a person other than the judgment debtor.[22] The owner of property which has been wrongfully seized under execution may, however, waive the trespass and sue in trover for the conversion of the property taken.[23] Case is the proper remedy for taking property under voidable process,[24] or for maliciously suing out an execution upon a voidable judgment.[25] As the relief afforded by the legal remedies in the case of wrongful executions is full and ample, equity will not entertain a bill for this purpose except under extraordinary circumstances.[26]

2. Conditions Precedent.[27] Where an execution debtor is arrested under process issued upon a judgment which has been paid or otherwise discharged, it is not necessary to obtain a rule setting aside the process as a condition precedent to the right to maintain an action for the wrongful arrest,[28] but the rule is otherwise where the process is merely voidable.[29] A person whose property is wrongfully taken under an execution against another person is not bound to notify the officer that the property is his, or to oppose the sale, but may at once seek relief by suit.[30]

3. Parties.[31] If property belonging to different persons is wrongfully taken under the same execution, the owner of each parcel should sue separately for the injury sustained.[32] Several defendants cannot be proceeded against jointly for a wrongful execution unless they are jointly liable, and to create such a liability there must have been a concert of action between them.[33] Provision is in some cases made by statute for substituting the execution creditor as a defendant where the action has been brought against the officer.[34]

4. PLEADING.[35] In an action for damages for a wrongful sale under execution, the complaint should state the articles sold and the value of each or show some reason why such statement cannot be given.[36] Where the fact that the act complained of was done maliciously is relied upon, it is not necessary that the word "malice" should be used in the complaint if language describing or defining it is used.[37] In an action of trespass for a wrongful arrest a replication to a plea of justification under legal process does not sufficiently allege a payment of the judgment unless it states facts showing that the payment was made and received in discharge of the debt and so as to extinguish it.[38]

5. EVIDENCE, PRESUMPTIONS, AND BURDEN OF PROOF.[39] In an action against an execution creditor for a wrongful execution, it will not be presumed that he intended that the officer should take any action not authorized by the terms of the writ,[40] and no recovery can be had against him without proof that he authorized, directed, or ratified the wrongful act.[41] In such cases the burden of proving the ownership, seizure, and value of the property, as well as that of showing the existence of any circumstances which would warrant the allowance of exemplary damages, is upon plaintiff.[42] When, however, property wrongfully levied upon is in possession of the claimant at the time of the levy, his possession is prima facie evidence of ownership, and the burden is upon defendant to show the contrary.[43] Where a sale is made in a manner other than that which the statute directs the presumption is that the price realized is less than if the statute had been complied with.[44] In an action against an execution creditor for wrongfully causing a levy to be made under an execution issued upon a void judgment, the act of the officer in making the levy raises the presumption that the judgment was regular and the burden is upon the plaintiff to show the contrary.[45] A statutory provision making a judgment against a principal on an official or judicial bond presumptive evidence against the surety does not apply to bonds of indemnity.[46] Evidence of the cost price of property levied upon,[47] and also of what the property brought at the execution sale, is admissible for the purpose of showing its actual value.[48] No evidence is of course admissible which is not justified by the allegations of the pleadings.[49]

6. DEFENSES. When an execution is sued out on a satisfied judgment the fact that the debtor received the surplus of the proceeds of the sale does not deprive him of his right of action,[50] nor does the recovery of property wrongfully taken bar an action for the unlawful seizure and detention.[51] An execution creditor who causes the property of a person other than the execution debtor to be wrongfully taken is not relieved from liability by the fact that he derived no advantage from the levy.[52] It is no defense to an action for a wrongful sale of exempt

property that the debtor had at the time of the levy and sale other property concealed sufficient to pay the debt.[53] It is no defense to an action for a wrongful execution that defendant was acting in aid of the officer, when the assistance was not rendered at the officer's request.[54] The fact that an officer proceeded under a writ valid on its face and issuing out of a court of competent jurisdiction is a good defense to the liability of the officer for a wrongful execution, but the execution creditor who caused the writ to be issued or directed the levy or sale must show a valid judgment.[55] When plaintiff has an election of remedies, the form of action chosen is open to all the defenses peculiar to that form of action.[56]

7. Limitations.[57] In an action of trover for the taking of goods under an execution which is irregular and void, the statute begins from the date of the original taking of the goods and not from the date that the execution was set aside.[58] Where the action is for wrongfully suing out an execution upon a satisfied judgment the statute begins to run from the time the execution is sued out, and is not suspended by injunction proceedings restraining the enforcement of the execution.[59] The period of limitation depends upon the statutes of the state where the action is brought.[60]

8. Damages[61] — a. In General. In the absence of any circumstances which would warrant the allowance of exemplary damages,[62] the recovery in an action for wrongful execution should be such as will compensate the injured party for the actual loss sustained.[63] Where there is merely a wrongful seizure, recovery will be limited to the special damages sustained thereby,[64] and if no such injury is shown the damages will be nominal only.[65] Where the property has been sold or so lost to the owner as to amount to a conversion, it has been variously held that the damages should be the value of the property,[66] or the value at the time of the conversion with interest to the time of the trial,[67] or with such an allowance as will compensate the owner for the use of the property during this period.[68] Where goods in the possession of a pledgee are wrongfully taken under execution, the pledgee may recover the full value of the property, and not merely the amount of his lien against the pledgor.[69] Where property is sold under an execution issued upon a judgment which is afterward reversed, the measure of damages is the value of the property and not the amount for which it was sold.[70] Where an interest in property is wrongfully sold and the interest has no actual value, only nominal damages can be recovered.[71] The damages must be such as can be ascertained by certain proof and not such as are merely speculative; loss of credit,[72] and a loss of profits from the interruption of business have generally been held to be of the latter character.[73] Attorneys' fees have in some cases been allowed as an element of damages.[74] The amount of damages which may be recovered depends also upon the nature of the action in which the relief is sought.[75]
