Obtaining title for another and possession for self.— Where the officer of a corporation by false and fraudulent statements induces certain persons to purchase worthless stock in the corporation, he is guilty of obtaining money under false pretenses, although the title to the money obtained passes to the corporation, and he receives none of it. Obtaining signature to instrument.—On the question whether the crime of obtaining the signature of a person to a written instrument is complete until the instrument is delivered, the cases are not uniform. In some states it is held that delivery is necessary. State v. McGinnis, 71 Iowa 685, 33 N. W. 238; Fenton v. People, 4 Hill (N. Y.) 126. In others the offense of obtaining the signature to a written instrument, when the instrument is such as takes effect or exposes the signer to liability as soon as signed, is complete as soon as the instrument is signed. Delivery of the instrument to defendant is not necessary. Com. v. Hutchison, 114 Mass. 325. See further infra, VIII, A, 3, b, (II).

Delivery to carrier.— Delivery of goods to a common carrier in one county, to be carried and delivered to the consignee in another, is a sufficient delivery to the consignee to consummate the crime of obtaining goods under false pretenses. In re Stephenson, 67 Kan. 556, 73 Pac. 62. E. The Property Obtained — 1. In General. St. 30 Geo. II provided for the obtaining of "money, goods, wares or merchandise." Many of the American states in their statutes have transcribed this enumeration of the property, the obtaining of which shall constitute the crime. Others have added other kinds of property, such as valuable securities, credit, chattels, property, etc. Under these statutes it may be stated as a general rule that the property obtained must be such that the deprivation of it may, by possibility at least, be a cause of loss to prosecutor.[24] Under the term "property" is included promissory notes binding on the maker,[25] and drafts,[26] but not land,[27] or board and lodging,[28] or the indorsement of credit on a note,[29] or patronage.[30] The term "valuable security" embraces an order for money,[31] but to be within the statute it must be a valuable security while in the hands of prosecutor; it is not sufficient that it becomes of value after delivery to defendant.[32] The term "valuable thing" used in some of the statutes includes a promissory note,[33] whether the maker be solvent or insolvent,[34] a check representing funds in bank,[35] and the signature of a person to a note whereby he becomes a surety, although the note and the paper on which it is written is the property of defendant,[36] but not a receipt for a debt.[37] Under the term "valuable right" a chance in a raffle is not included.[38] Within the term

Obtaining signature to instrument.— The same rule applies to indictments for obtaining a signature to a written instrument; the instrument must be such as might possibly injure the party signing it. In re Payson, 23 Kan. 757; Dord v. People, 9 Barb. Thus a promissory note of a minor is not within the statute (Com. v. Lancaster, Thach. Cr. Cas. (Mass.) 428), nor is a receipt (Moore v. Com., 8 Pa. St. 260), nor the contract of a married woman (State v. Clay, 100 Mo. 571, 13 S. W. 827). But it is within the statute to induce a person by false pretense to execute a promissory note, although it is non-negotiable (State v. Porter, 75 Mo. 171), or to execute a deed (Woodruff v. State, 61 Ark. 157, 32 S. W. 102; State v. Tripp, 113 Iowa 698, 84 N. W. 546), or to indorse a draft (Bargie v. U. S., 30 Fed. Cas. No. 18,229, 2 Hayw. & H. 357). "other effects" is a promissory note.[39] The term "money" used in most of the statutes does not include bank-notes,[40] or credit,[41] or extension of time for the payment of money.[42] "Chattels" includes a letter,[43] and a railway ticket,[44] but, in analogy to larceny, is held not to include animals.[45]

2. PROPERTY NOT IN EXISTENCE. The property need not be in existence at the time the false pretense is made, to render accused indictable.[46]

3. VALUE. The value of the property obtained as fixing the degree of the crime is to be measured by the actual loss suffered by prosecutor in the transaction.[47]

F. Loss to Prosecutor. While the statutes do not in express language require that the person from whom the property is obtained should be defrauded thereby, but only that it be obtained with intent to defraud him, nevertheless it is uniformly held that the crime is not committed unless the prosecutor is in fact defrauded.[48] Hence if prosecutor gets out of the transaction just what he bargained for the offense is not committed.[49] The injury to prosecutor may result from the loss of the property parted with, or from deprivation of the benefit he expected to accrue from defendant's representation, or from the property given him by defendant in exchange for the property parted with. In neither case is it necessary to the crime to show that he has suffered actual pecuniary loss, or that he will necessarily suffer such loss;[50] but in the first case it is Swindling.— By Tex. Pen. Code, § 793, it is not necessary in order to constitute the offense of swindling that any injury shall result to the person intended to be defrauded, if it is sufficiently apparent that there was a wilful design to cause injury. See May v. State, 15 Tex. App. 430. But see Lively v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1903) 74 S. W. 321.

To prove injury to the purchaser by the fraudulent exhibition of a false cotton sample, the difference in value between the cotton as delivered and that represented by the sample at the time and place of sale must be shown. If the purchaser shipped the cotton to Mobile, and there sold it at a small advance on the price paid by him, the prosecutor cannot be allowed, for the purpose of showing injury or damage to him, to prove that the cost of transportation to Mobile was greater than this difference in price. In accord, State v. Clark, 46 Kan. 65, 26 Pac. 481. These cases may possibly be reconciled with the other cases on the ground that the thing promised by defendant was in essence has recovered,[53] or may eventually recover,[54] for any loss he has sustained. Prosecutor is none the less defrauded because the property parted with was appropriated by defendant to the purpose for which it was delivered.[55] It is sometimes said in a general way that to obtain property by false pretense is no offense if the property obtained is intended by defendant to be applied to the payment of a debt due from prosecutor, because prosecutor is not defrauded by being made to pay a debt,[56] but this unqualified statement is not supported by the cases.[57]

In Vermont it is doubtful if an intent is a necessary element of the offense. State v. Bacon, 7 Vt. 219.

Intent impossible in law.—An offense under Ariz. Pen. Code, par. 105, declaring guilty of a felony one who with intent to defraud presents a fraudulent claim, for payment to a county officer authorized to pay the same, if genuine, is not stated by an indictment charging the presentation for payment to a county treasurer of a warrant drawn by a county school superintendent in favor of another than defendant and not alleged to have been indorsed, since Ariz. Rev. St. par. 1574, makes it the treasurer's duty to pay over school moneys on such warrants "duly indorsed by the person entitled to receive the same," and it would not have been possible for defendant to defraud the county by means of such unindorsed warrant, and being impossible the possibility must be taken in law as disproving any intent to defraud. Cluff v. Territory, (1898) 52 Pac. 350.

Intent to deprive prosecutor of part of property obtained.—The intent need not be to deprive the prosecutor of the entire property obtained, it is sufficient if it be to deprive him of a part comprehended within the whole. Reg. v. Leonard, 2 C. & K. 514, 3 Cox C. C. 284, 1 Den. C. C. 304, 61 E. C. L. 514.

Obtaining to apply to debt of prosecutor.—It is held in some cases that where defendant obtains the property to apply on a debt owed by prosecutor, there is no offense, because of a lack of an intent to defraud. Pruitt v. State, (Ark. 1889) 11 S. W. 822; Com. v. McDuffy, 126 Mass. 467; Com. v. Thompson, 2 Pa. L. J. Rep. 33, 3 Pa. L. J. 250. In Rex v. Williams, 7 C. & P. 354, 32 E. C. L. 653, Mikell Cas. Cr. L. 879, prosecutor owed a debt of which the creditor could not get payment. Defendant, a servant of the creditor, went to prosecutor's wife and obtained two sacks of malt from her, saying that his master had bought them of prosecutor. Defendant knew this to be false, but took the malt to his master to enable him to pay himself the debt. It was held that if defendant did not intend to defraud prosecutor but merely to put it into his master's power to compel prosecutor to pay him a just debt, defendant ought not to be convicted of obtaining the malt by false pretenses. This case, the case on which the other cases are founded, seems to have been strangely misunderstood. The court says defendant did not intend to defraud prosecutor, but only to put it in his master's power to compel prosecutor to pay the debt. In other words, defendant did not intend to deprive prosecutor of title, but only of possession. In Reg. v. Hamilton, 1 Cox C. C. 244, 247, Pollock, C. B., says of this case: "The defendant believed, however erroneously, that he had some sort of right to do as he did, and this was probably the ground on which the jury acquitted him." Of course if he believed he had a right to the malt, he had no intent to defraud. In Reg. v. Parkinson, 41 U. C. Q. B. 545, the court disapproves Rex v. Williams, supra, and holds that to obtain by false pretenses a sum of money from A, due from him to B, with intent to pay the same to B, is obtaining by false pretenses, remarking that defendant got the money by fraud, and that could only be done with intent to defraud somebody, and if it was not to defraud the creditor, it must have been to defraud the debtor. In the case of In re Cameron, 44 Kan. 64, 24 Pac. 90, 21 Am. St. Rep. 262, defendant obtained by false pretenses an organ that belonged to her and which was wrongfully detained by prosecutor, and it was held, on the authority of People v. Thomas, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 169, and the other cases cited above, that she was not guilty. This case is clearly distinguishable. Here defendant obtained only possession by the false pretenses, title being already in her, and this fact would prevent her being guilty of obtaining the property by false pretenses, whereas in People v. Thomas, supra, the title to the money obtained was not in defendant. The true doctrine would seem to be, under the settled rule that intent is for the jury, that the mere fact that the property was obtained to apply to an indebtedness of prosecutor is no defense; but that evidence of such indebtedness and appropriation may be considered by the jury, together with all other facts and circumstances, that they may determine the question of intent. See infra, VIII, D, 1. It is well settled that the use the defendant makes of the property is no defense. See supra, IV, F; infra, VII, A.

Obtaining materials to be used in one building and using them in another.—In a trial under Mo. Rev. St. (1899) § 4226, providing that a contractor who purchases material on credit, then representing that it is to be used in a certain building, and thereafter uses it in another building, without the written consent of the seller of the material, and with intent to defraud him, shall be punished, etc., not otherwise do so.[59] The intent to defraud need not be directed against the legal owner; it is sufficient if it be directed against any one in lawful possession of the goods, or who parts with property in reliance thereon.[60] Nor need the intent be to cause ultimate loss to prosecutor, since prosecutor is defrauded by the mere obtaining of his property by a false pretense; although he may suffer an ultimate loss, an intent to cause actual loss is not necessary. Thus an intent to return the money or property obtained is no defense;[61] nor is it a defense that defendant believed that the money he obtained was a fair compensation for injuries he had received by the negligence of prosecutor;[62] and since the intent provided for by the statutes is the intent to defraud another, and not to benefit defendant, it is no defense that defendant did not intend to derive any advantage accused's testimony that of twenty thousand laths ordered for the two houses only eleven thousand went into them, establishes an intent to do the specific thing which the statute forbids, notwithstanding his testimony that he had no intent to steal or defraud. State v. Gregory, 170 Mo. 598, 71 S. W. 170.

Selling land twice.— Where defendant, indicted for selling land which had already been sold, by false pretense and misrepresentations made a second sale to purchasers at their own request, and fully informed them with regard to the first sale, he is not guilty of fraud within Cal. Rev. St. § 12, since there was no intent shown on part of defendant to defraud. People v. Garnett, 25 Cal. 470, 95 Am. Dec. 125. One who has made a conveyance, and afterward concluded that it was invalid, and reconveyed the land to a grantee having knowledge of the prior deed and the transactions connected therewith, is not amenable to the statute, in the absence of proof of artifice or attempt to defraud, although the first deed in fact conveyed a good title. The simple making of a second deed while a former one is outstanding and in force, without reciting the same, does not, in the absence of any fraudulent intent, constitute the offense prohibited by statute. Armstrong v. Winfrey, 61 Mo. 354.

Selling property without disclosing encumbrance.— Under S. C. Gen. St. § 2514, making it a misdemeanor "wilfully and knowingly" to sell property on which there is a lien without giving notice of the lien, where a vendor of land has given two mortgages on it, his promise to arrange to meet such matters as he had put upon the land is sufficient notice as to the mortgages, and does not indicate an intention to suppress notice of a judgment lien, his actual knowledge of which is in controversy. State v. Johnson, 20 S. C. 387.

from the obtaining of the property.[63] It is not necessary that the intent be to accomplish the particular result aimed at; if the particular result fails and another thing of value is obtained by means of the false representations, it is sufficient.[64] The intent must exist, however, when the property is obtained.[65]

2. Knowledge of Defendant of Falsity of Pretense and of Prosecutor's Reliance Thereon. Since there can be no intent to obtain the property by means of the false pretense unless defendant knows the pretense to be untrue, such knowledge on the part of defendant is essential to the commission of the crime,[66] but it is said that making a statement recklessly and without information justifying a belief in its truth is tantamount to an utterance of a statement knowing it to be false.[67] There can be no conviction under the statute against obtaining goods by false pretenses, unless defendant knows, or has reason to believe, that his representations are relied on as the ground of credit.[68]

V. ATTEMPT.[69]

The crime of attempting to obtain property by false pretenses consists in: (1) An intent to obtain by the false pretense; (2) the doing of some act, beyond mere preparation, toward obtaining the property by means of the false pretense; (3) the failure so to obtain the property.[70] If defendant with the requisite intent has

What constitutes.— Attempting to pass the note of a bank that has stopped payment to defendant's knowledge is an attempt to obtain by false pretenses. Reg. v. Jarman, 14 Cox C. C. 111, 38 L. T. Rep. N. S. 460. On a prosecution for attempting to cash a certificate of deposit, falsely representing it to be the property of accused, evidence that accused presented the certificate at the teller's window with the payee's indorsement thereon, unaccompanied with any explanation, and done some act toward obtaining the property, it is none the less an attempt because for some reason unknown to him he could not have completed the crime;[71] but the act done toward the accomplishment of the end in view must be adapted to secure that end.[72]

VI. PARTIES TO THE CRIME.

The general principles of criminal law relating to principal and accessary apply to the crime of obtaining property by false pretense.[73] False pretenses made by one of several in pursuance of an agreement between them are chargeable to all;[74] but when one commits the crime by means of an innocent agent, he alone is guilty.[75] The mere fact that one of several persons obtaining the property by agreement received no share of the property does not make him the less a party;[76] evidence of a conversation between accused and the cashier immediately thereafter, in which accused insisted that he was the bona fide holder by purchase, shows a demand for payment. State v. Riddell, 33 Wash. 324, 74 Pac. 477. However, one who by false representations induces another to draw money from a bank and with it purchase a spurious gold brick cannot be prosecuted under Ill. Cr. Code, § 98, for an attempt to obtain money by a confidence game, since the money was actually obtained, although the sale was consummated in a different county from the one where the representations were made and the prosecution brought. Graham v. People, 181 Ill. 477, 55 N. E. 179, 47 L. R. A. 731.

Distinction between preparation and attempt.—The general distinction between preparation and attempt applies in attempt to obtain property by false pretense. The criminal act, while it need not be the last proximate act to the consummation of the complete offense, must approach sufficiently near to it to stand either as the first or some subsequent step in a direct movement toward the commission of the offense after the preparations are made. State v. Fraker, 148 Mo. 143, 49 S. W. 1017; Reg. v. Button, [1900] 2 Q. B. 597, 19 Cox C. C. 568, 64 J. P. 600, 69 L. J. Q. B. 901, 83 L. T. Rep. N. S. 288, 48 Wkly. Rep. 703.

Attempt to obtain is not within Vexatious Indictments Act (22 & 23 Vict. c. 17) providing that no bill of indictment for obtaining property by false pretenses shall be found by a grand jury, unless the prosecutor presenting the indictment has been bound by recognizance to prosecute or give evidence against the person accused, or unless the person accused has committed, etc. Reg. v. Burton, 13 Cox C. but one does not commit the crime by merely being present when the property is received by another and taking part of the property.[77] When the crime is a misdemeanor all parties engaged are principals.[78]

VII. DEFENSES.

A. In General. On the principle that the injury is to the state, defendant cannot plead that prosecutor has condoned the crime and settled with defendant,[79] that he has offered to return the property to the prosecutor,[80] that prosecutor has regained possession of the goods,[81] that their loss has been made good to him,[82] or that prosecutor has signed a paper stating that he did not rely on the pretense.[83] The fact that defendant was entitled to a part of the money obtained by false pretenses does not excuse him;[84] nor is it a defense that prosecutor instituted the prosecution for the purpose of gaining restitution.[85]

B. Contributory Guilt. A crime being an act directed against the state, the state cannot be estopped from prosecuting it by the act of any individual, and hence the fact that the party defrauded by the false pretense was himself guilty of some fraud in the transaction is no defense to the accused.[86]

C. Contributory Negligence. The same principle should apply to the defense of negligence in the prosecutor; and when his negligence alone, unmixed with other considerations, is interposed as a defense, it is held to be immaterial.[87] Ordinarily, however, this defense arises in connection with the character of the pretense and is decided under the rules governing that branch of the subject.[88]

D. Motive of Prosecutor in Parting With Property. The motive actuating prosecutor in parting with the property is immaterial; hence, although his object in parting with it was charitable and not mercenary,[89] or although it was

Election by state.— Under S. C. Gen. St. (1882) § 2514, providing that any person who wilfully and knowingly sells and conveys any real or personal property on which any lien or liens exist without first giving notice of such lien or liens to the purchaser is guilty, etc., the offense consists in selling, without regard to the number of liens on the property, and where an indictment charges the existence of several liens the state cannot be required to elect on which it relies. Indictments held sufficient.— Alleging that defendant, by falsehood and artifice, obtained from the owner a bill of sale of property and the possession thereof, whereby the owner was defrauded and cheated, is sufficient to charge defendant with being a "common cheat and swindler." Jones v. State, 93 Ga. 547, 19 S. E. 250. Where an indictment is for passing a draft drawn against no funds, it is not necessary to allege that the draft was of no value. State v. Caldwell, 79 Iowa 473, 44 N. W. 711. An information for obtaining money under false pretenses is sufficient which alleges that defendant procured a loan by offering to pledge as security certain notes which he represented were unpaid; that the lender relied on his representations; that only part of the notes promised were delivered, and that some of them had been paid; and that defendant knew his representations to be false, and made them with intent to defraud. State v. Ashe, 44 Kan. 84, 24 Pac. 72. An indictment alleging that defendant, with intent to defraud, expressed certain boxes which he represented to the consignee as containing tobacco suitable for cigars; that the representations were false and fraudulent, and known to be such by defendant; and that the consignee was thereby deceived into paying a specified sum of money for tobacco stems and rubbish, sufficiently charges the obtaining of money under false pretenses. Hafner v. Com., 36 S. W. 549, 18 Ky. L. Rep. 423. An indictment for obtaining property by false pretenses is sufficient which alleges that defendant, with intent to defraud, fraudulently represented to the owner of described goods that he was then, and for two years had been, employed by a third party, who told him to come to the owner's warehouse and get the goods, for which the employer would pay, and that by reason of these representations, which were false, and which defendant knew to be false, the owner was induced to deliver the goods to defendant. Com. v. Whitney, 3 S. W. 533, 8 Ky. L. Rep. 776. An indictment which charges that defendant obtained money from one bank by falsely representing that he had money in another bank need not allege that the latter was incorporated, since it is not the one defrauded. Brown v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1898) 43 S. W. 986.

Inconsistent averments.—An indictment for obtaining goods by false pretenses which avers that defendant purchased the goods is insufficient, a purchase being inconsistent with an obtaining by false pretenses. People v. Conger, 1 Wheel. Cr. (N. Y.) 448. However, an information for obtaining personalty under false pretenses by giving Confederate money in exchange therefor and representing it to be valuable which alleges that accused "did, . . . with intent to defraud, . . . buy" from the complaining witness the property described is not insufficient as precluding fraud by the use of the word "buy," since the gist of the offense was the false representation of the value of the money and not the buying of the property. Pinney v. State, 156 Ind. 167, 59 N. E. 383. An indictment which charges that pretenses were made to induce prosecutor to become the surety of defendant on a six-hundred-dollar note, but shows that instead of becoming a surety prosecutor became a principal and made a note for six hundred dollars payable to defendant, is bad for ambiguity and uncertainty. State v. Locke, 35 Ind. 419.

Duplicity.— An indictment is not bad for duplicity in that it sets out two inconsistent representations of defendant, but a conviction may be had on proof of the falsity of either. State v. Tripp, 113 Iowa 698, 84 N. W. 546. It is not a valid objection to an indictment that it charges two crimes, one the procuring of a signature to an instrument by false pretenses, and the other the obtaining of money by the same means. State v. McDonald, 59 Kan. 241, 52 Pac. 453; State v. Meade, 56 Kan. 690, 44 Pac. 619. Nor is an indictment bad for joining successive statutory phases of the same offense (People v. Luttermoser, 122 Mich. 562, 81 N. W. 565; Com. v. Sober, 15 Pa. Super. Ct. 520), nor because the facts stated show a case of larceny, since different offenses may spring from the same act (State v. Styner, 154 Ind. 131, 56 N. E. 98).

An indictment for false packing of cotton is not vitiated by the use of the term "sand-packing," this being a term generally understood in Alabama, and certain. Daniel v. State, 61 Ala. 4.

An indictment for fraud in the sale of wool (Ohio Rev. St. § 7069-3) must state that the wool was washed wool, describe the objectionable substance complained of contained in the wool, and aver that the fleeces were so arranged as to be calculated to defraud the purchaser. Hogue v. State, 23 Ohio Cir. Ct. 567.

Indictment for resale in fraud of seller.— An information under La. Acts (1896), No. 94, § 2, for buying goods on credit and selling them out of the usual course of business with intent to cheat the seller, need not set forth the name of the person to whom the goods were resold. State v. Artus, 110 La. 441, 34 So. 596.

Indictment for selling land twice.— An indictment under Mo. Rev. St. § 3569, providing for the punishment of one making a deed of any lands which he has previously conveyed to another without reciting the former deed, need not set forth the entire description of the land conveyed by the second deed, a description which identifies the land by its lot number being sufficient. State v. Wilson, 66 Mo. App. 540.

Indictment for selling without disclosing encumbrance.— If an indictment for making a deed to land without reciting an existing mortgage thereon describes the land merely as "a certain house and lot in" a certain town, county, and state, it is fatally defective (State v. Jones, 68 Mo. 197), and an indictment for this offense should also contain an averment of neglect to give the information concerning the encumbrance before payment of the consideration (State v. Bryant, 58 N. H. 79).

In an indictment for conveying land without title, it is not essential that a copy of the deed be set forth; nor is it necessary, where the instrument purports to convey land situated in another state, to aver in the indictment in terms that the deed was in the form of a proper conveyance of land under the laws of such state; it is sufficient if it be averred in the indictment that the conveyance was by deed of general warranty. Minnesota.— State v. Henn, 39 Minn. 464, 40 N. W. 564.

where [96] and the time when [97] the offense was committed. It is not bad merely because ungrammatically expressed if, read as a whole, the meaning is clear;[98] and if otherwise sufficient, unnecessary repetition and redundancy will not invalidate it;[99] nor will the fact that it contains some immaterial allegations render it bad.[1]

2. LANGUAGE OF STATUTE. The indictment need not charge the offense in the language of the statute. If words of similar import are used,[2] or if the indictment describes the offense with more particularity than the statute,[3] it is sufficient. It need not charge a conclusion of law, even though the conclusion is part of the statutory definition of the offense.[4] As a general rule, where the statute creating the offense sets forth with precision and certainty all the elements

Missouri.— State v. Barbee, 136 Mo. 440, 37 S. W. 1119, holding that under the constitutional provision that an accused shall have the right to demand the nature and cause of the accusation, an indictment for procuring payment by a bank of overdrafts to a specified amount drawn on it by defendant, by false representations as to the ownership of a note, which avers neither the date, the amount, nor the date of maturity of the note, nor that the maker was or was represented by defendant to be solvent, nor that the overdrafts were authorized by reason of defendant's representations, nor the dates, amounts, or payees of such overdrafts, is bad for uncertainty.

New York.— People v. Winner, 80 Hun 130, 30 N. Y. Suppl. 54.

Oregon.— State v. Hanscom, 28 Oreg. 427, 43 Pac. 167, holding, however, that an indictment under Hill Annot. Laws Oreg. § 1777, making it a penal offense to obtain by false pretense a signature to a writing, the false making of which would be forgery, which alleges that defendant, by falsely representing to W that he was authorized by a corporation to draw a draft on it to W's order to procure funds to be used for the corporation, obtained W's indorsement to such a draft, without an allegation that the indorsement was for defendant's accommodation, sufficiently shows defendant what he has to meet upon trial.

This rule does not mean that it is sufficient to copy the statute into the indictment. Even when a form is prescribed in the statute, it will not do simply to fill up the blanks; it must be so far extended into detail as to render the particular instance of offending certain. In England an indictment was held bad on demurrer for omitting to allege that defendant "knowingly" made the pretense, although the statute did not in terms require a scienter, and although another statute provided that if the offense was alleged in the words of the statute it should be held sufficient. Reg. v. Henderson, C. & M. 328, 2 Moody C. C. 192, 41 E. C. L. 183. But in a later case, Reg. v. Bowen, 13 Q. B. 790, 3 Cox C. C. 483, 13 Jur. 1045, 19 L. J. M. C. 65, 4 N. Sess. The same rule applies to indictments following statutory forms.— If the form provided does not sufficiently apprise accused of the charge against him, it is unconstitutional, and an indictment following it is insufficient. W. 827; State v. Crooker, 95 Mo. 389, 392, 8 S. W. 422. The form considered by the court in the above cases was that contained in Mo. Rev. St. (1889) § 3826, which provides that in an indictment for obtaining property by means of any trick, false pretense, etc., "it shall be deemed and held a sufficient description of the offence to charge that the accused did on —— unlawfully and feloniously obtain or attempt to obtain (as the case may be) from A B (here insert the name of the person defrauded) his or her money or property by means and by use of a cheat, or fraud, or trick, or deception, or false and fraudulent representation or statement, or false pretense, or confidence game, or false or bogus check, or instrument, or coin or metal, as the case may be, contrary to the form of the statutes." It was held unconstitutional as it did not require a particular description of the property obtained or of the means used to obtain it. The case of State v. Blizzard, 70 Md. 385, 17 Atl. 270, 14 Am. St. Rep. 366, is in accord with the Missouri cases cited above, on the general principle for which those cases are cited; but whereas the former decide that a statutory form which makes no provision for setting out the false pretenses is unconstitutional as not apprising accused of the nature of the charge against him, the latter decides that under Md. Code (1888), art. 27, § 288, it is unnecessary to set out the pretenses, accused being entitled on application to a statement of the false pretenses to be given in evidence. See also Jules v. State, 85 Md. 305, 36 Atl. 1027. Ill. Cr. Code, § 99, providing that in prosecutions for obtaining money by a confidence game "it shall be deemed and held a sufficient description of the offense to charge that the accused did, on, etc., unlawfully and feloniously obtain, or attempt to obtain, (as the case may be), from A B, (here insert the name of the person defrauded or attempted to be defrauded), his money (or property, in case it be not money), by means and by use of the confidence game," does not violate Ill. Const. art 2, § 8, providing that no person shall be held to answer for a criminal offense without an indictment, or section 9, providing that in criminal cases defendant shall be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation against him, or section 2, providing that no person shall be statement is required. Illustrations of these rules are found in other connections in this article.[9]

3. Particular Averments — a. As to the Pretense — (i) Enumeration and Description — (a) In General. It is not sufficient merely to aver in the indictment that accused obtained the property by a false pretense; the pleader must go further and not only set out the pretense but set it out with such particularity as to enable the court to determine whether it is such a pretense as comes within the statute and as to apprise accused of the charge against him.[10] This requirement will be dispensed with if it is averred in the indictment that the grand jury are deprived of liberty without due process of law. Graham v. People, 181 Ill. 477, 485, 55 N. E. 179, 47 L. R. A. 731; Morton v. People, 47 Ill. 468.

Florida.— Hamilton v. State, 16 Fla. 288.

Indiana.— Johnson v. State, 75 Ind. 553, holding that an indictment for false pretenses in procuring the payment of a claim against a county is bad, where it does not accurately describe the warrant or order held by accused, or state to whom it was made payable, or the amount.

New York.— People v. Laurence, 66 Hun 574, 21 N. Y. Suppl. 818 (holding that an indictment for larceny committed by means of false pretenses and representations is insufficient where the pretenses and representations alleged therein are in the nature only of promises or agreements which relate wholly to future actions and events); People v. Gates, 13 Wend. 311; Skiff v. People, 2 Park. Pennsylvania.— Com. v. Frey, 50 Pa. St. 245; Com. v. Galbraith, 24 Leg. Int. 117.

Texas.— State v. Dyer, 41 Tex. 520 (holding that an indictment in form for falsely representing an instrument of writing, in form a promissory note, to be a draft, and thereby obtaining money for it, is not sufficient; that the indictment should disclose in what particular the instrument was defective; and that the name of the instrument, if valid, is immaterial); Mathena v. State, 15 Tex. App. 473.

United States.— U. S. v. Hess, 124 U. S. 483, 8 S. Ct. 571, 31 L. ed. 516; U. S. v. Watkins, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,649, 3 Cranch C. C. 441.

Rep. 139 (holding that passing a check is not a representation that the person passing it has at the time money in the bank on which it is drawn equal to the amount of the check, for it may be he has authority from the bank to overdraw his account, and hence the indictment should not allege this to be the representation, but should allege that the check was a valid order for the payment of the sum mentioned in the check); Reg. v. Henshaw, 9 Cox C. See 23 Cent. Dig. tit. "False Pretenses," § 34 et seq.

Contra.— Jules v. State, 85 Md. 305, 36 Atl. 1027; State v. Blizzard, 70 Md. 385, 17 Atl. 270, 14 Am. St. Rep. 366, by statute.

Although in some states obtaining by false pretense is larceny, the better opinion is that it is still necessary, in order to convict accused of larceny by false pretenses, to set out the pretenses used. State v. Henn, 39 Minn. 464, 40 N. W. 564; People v. Dumar, 106 N. Y. 502, 13 N. E. 325; Marshall v. State, 31 Tex. 471; Warrington v. State, 1 Tex. App. 168. Contra, Anable v. Com., 24 Gratt. (Va.) 563; Leftwich v. Com., 20 Gratt. (Va.) 716.

Indictments held sufficient.— In a charge that the crime was accomplished "by the making of false statements and representaunable to give a more particular description of the pretense,[11] unless such description could have been given by the exercise of ordinary diligence.[12] It is not necessary to describe the false token or pretense with greater particularity than the description employed by accused at the time he used it, if as so described it appears to be within the statute;[13] and it is not necessary that the very words of the pretense be set out; it is sufficient to state the effect of the pretense correctly; hence the indictment need not allege whether the pretense was spoken or written.[14] If the pretense is described more minutely than is necessary, such description is part of the indictment and cannot be treated as surplusage.[15]

(B) Where Pretense Is in Writing. When the false pretense is in writing or

tions," the quoted words are synonymous with the statutory words "by false pretenses" obtaining, etc. State v. Grant, 86 Iowa 216, 53 N. W. 120. Where the false pretense alleged was pointing out to a purchaser valuable property as that sold him by defendant, and in fact conveying to him other property which was valueless, an averment that the property pointed out was in the city of D, and was lot one, block two, of Van's addition, was held to be a sufficient description. State v. McConkey, 49 Iowa 499. The fact that some of the representations alleged in an indictment are mere promises does not vitiate the indictment if it also contains allegations of other representations which do amount to false pretenses, but the false promise may be treated as surplusage or as mere inducement to the allegations which charge the false representations that in law are false pretenses. State v. Vorback, 66 Mo. 168. Where the acts of defendant are properly described as "false pretenses," further describing them as "inducements" and "sayings" does not render the indictment defective. State v. Switzer, 63 Vt. 604, 22 Atl. 724, 25 Am. St. Rep. 789. An indictment alleging that accused did falsely pretend that a paper partly in print and partly in writing, produced by her to the prosecutor and purporting to be a bank-note for the payment of five pounds to the bearer, was then a good, genuine, and available order for the payment of five pounds and was then of the value of five pounds, by means of which false pretense accused did unlawfully attempt to obtain a sewing machine, although inartificially framed, sufficiently alleges that accused falsely represented the note to be a good and genuine note of an existing bank and of the value of five pounds. Reg. v. Jarman, 14 Cox C. C. 111, 38 L. T. Rep. N. S. 460. See also Oxx v. State, 59 N. J. L. 99, 35 Atl. 646.

An indictment for cheating must set out the means employed. State v. Roberts, 34 Me. 320; State v. Johnson, 1 D. Chipm. (Vt.) 129. However, an indictment for cheating by false weights which avers that defendant kept in his warehouse "certain false weights for the weighing of grain" and used the same "by artful and deceitful contrivances" to defraud certain persons sufficiently describes the manner of cheating. People v. Fish, 4 Park. Cr. (N. Y.) 206.

False token.— When the indictment is for obtaining property by use of a false token, the indictment must set forth the token used. Lambert v. People, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 578. But it need not set out the specific currency — e. g. whether Spanish or Mexican — to which a coin intended to be counterfeited belonged. State v. Boon, 49 N. C. 463.

Games and tricks.— An averment that the property was obtained "by use of the confidence game" sufficiently describes the pretense. Graham v. People, 181 Ill. 477, 55 N. E. 179, 47 L. R. A. 731; Maxwell v. People, 158 Ill. 248, 41 N. E. 995; Morton v. People, 47 Ill. 468. But an indictment for obtaining by a trick (State v. Pickett, 174 Mo. 663, 74 S. W. 844) or a trick game (In re Trick Game, 5 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 572, 7 Ohio N. P. 604) which fails to specify the kind of trick game practised is defective.

Selling note.— An indictment under Ind. Rev. St. (1881) § 2204, providing that "whoever sells, . . . any . . . promissory note, . . . knowing the signature of the maker thereof to have been obtained by any false pretence,— shall be imprisoned in the State prison," need not charge that the false pretenses were of themselves sufficient to constitute a crime under the statute. State v. Adams, 92 Ind. 116, 118. In an indictment for unlawfully offering to sell promissory notes the signatures to which had been procured by false pretenses, it is not necessary to allege that the notes are of any value, where a copy of them is set forth. Umbenhauer v. State, 4 Ohio Cir. Ct. 378, 2 Ohio Cir. Dec. 606.

Attempt.—An indictment for attempt must allege that the attempt was by false pretense, or that the cheat was of a public nature. Reg. v. Marsh, 3 Cox C. C. 570, 1 Den. C. C. 505, 13 Jur. 1010, 19 L. J. M. C. 12, 3 N. Sess. Cas. 699, T. & M. 192.

consists wholly or in part in the use of a written instrument, the writing need not be set out in haec verba, it is sufficient, as in the case of a verbal pretense, to set out the purport of it,[16] unless some question turns on the form or construction of the instrument, or some legal description of it is given in the indictment, the accuracy of which it may be material for the court to determine.[17]

(c) Where Several Pretenses Were Employed. The indictment need not aver all the pretenses used; it is sufficient if it alleges one pretense which was an inducing cause of the imposition.[18]

(d) Where Indictment Is For Attempt. An indictment for an attempt to obtain property by false pretense must show the means the accused proposed to use to obtain the property.[19]

(ii) By and To Whom Made, and Who Injured. An indictment for obtaining property by false pretense must allege specifically that defendant made the pretense in question,[20] and state to whom the pretense was made,[21] and who

The rule is correctly stated in White v. State, supra, but in the other Texas cases cited the rule is expressed more broadly — that when the writing "enters into the offense as a part or basis thereof" it must be set out in haec verba; and in Dwyer v. State, supra, the court gives as the reason for setting out the writing in haec verba that "the indictment must set out the words used by the accused . . . whence it follows that, if in writing, the words and figures therein . . must be set out." This is incorrect in premise.

See also State v. Dorr, 33 Me. 498, where an indictment for obtaining a horse by a false pretense that the mare which defendant exchanged therefor was his own and unencumbered failed to allege that the mare was of any value, and it was held that this was not a sufficient ground for an arrest of judgment.

19. In re Schurman, 40 Kan. 533, 20 Pac. 277. However, an allegation in an indictment for an attempt to obtain money by representing to a bank that defendant was the owner of a certificate of deposit issued by the bank, that defendant pretended he was the owner of such deposit, and that by means of such false pretense he sought to obtain the value thereof is sufficient without an allegation that the certificate was in his possession. While if two persons acting in concert obtained property by false pretenses, both are equally guilty, yet the indictment must allege which, if only one, made the false pretenses. Kirtley v. State, 38 Ark. 543. was defrauded thereby,[22] unless his name is unknown.[23] It is sufficient to allege that the pretense was made to or that the person defrauded was a corporation, either private[24] or municipal,[25] a firm,[26] or, where the pretense was by advertisement, the public generally.[27] If the false pretenses are not made to the person from whom the goods are obtained, the indictment must show the relation between them so that it may appear how the pretenses could have caused the injury.[28]

(III) FALSITY. The indictment must negative by special averment the truth of the pretense alleged.[29] Where, however, several pretenses are alleged, they

However, an indictment for false representations to a firm alleged to be composed of H and others named which alleges that the representations were made to H is not demurrable on the ground that it is not alleged that H was a member or employee of the firm, as it will be presumed on demurrer that the names alleged describe the same person. Woods v. State, 133 Ala. 162, 31 So. 984. And where the indictment states that the representations were made to a certain person, and that he was the owner of the money obtained, and the owner of the J. In Texas an averment of the falsity of the pretense is dispensed with by statute. Arnold v. State, 11 Tex. App. 472.

When the pretense alleged is that accused had power to do a certain thing, the indictment must deny possession of the power, and the belief of the accused in his power and the intent to use the power. U. S. v. Post, 113 Fed. 852.

In negativing it is not essential to aver in express terms that the pretenses were "false." Britt v. State, 9 Humphr. (Tenn.) 31. It is sufficient to allege that defendant "unlawfully, knowingly and designedly pretended," then denying the pretense to be true. Rex v. Airey, 2 East 30, 2 East P. C. 831.

Presenting fraudulent claims.— An indictment charging defendants with making a fraudulent account against a certain city, with certifying to a fraudulent bill, with presentation of a fraudulent bill, with unlawfully making out and presenting a fraudulent bill, and with receiving payment upon a false and fraudulent bill, sufficiently charges an offense, under Ohio Rev. St. § 7075, making it an offense to make and present fraudulent claims to public officers, although there is no averment that defendants falsely pretended that the city was indebted to them, or averments showing in what respect the claim was false and fraudulent. 34. People v. Griffith, 122 Cal. 212, 54 Pac. 725 (holding that an indictment for obtaining money by false representations charging that defendant represented that he was the owner of and in possession of certain land, and by reason of such ownership and possession had full authority to let the same, and apprise defendant of the evidence he must meet, the negation of the truth of the pretense must allege affirmatively in what the falsehood consisted.[35] that at the time defendant made such representations he was not the owner of and in possession of such land and had no authority to let the same, etc., is insufficient, as it does not deny that defendant owned the land in question, or that he was in possession thereof, but avers that he was not the owner "and" in possession); State v. Murphy, 68 N. J. L. 235, 52 Atl. 279; Cunningham v. State, 61 N. J. L. 666, 40 Atl. 696; State v. Trisler, 49 Ohio St. 583, 31 N. E. 881 (holding that an indictment charging defendant with falsely representing that he was the owner of several parcels of land does not sufficiently negative the truth thereof by an allegation that defendant "was not then and there the owner of all of said real estate," since defendant might have been owner of all save an insignificant parcel of the land); Redmond v. State, 35 Ohio St. 81 (holding that an indictment for obtaining goods by false pretenses must negative the substantial truth, and not merely the literal truth, of the representations as a means whereby accused obtained the credit); Dillingham v. State, 5 Ohio St. 280 (holding that an averment that defendant obtained the signature to a note for four hundred dollars by the pretense that he was engaged in an extensive spoke manufacturing business is not sufficiently negatived by an averment that he was "not engaged in an extensive spoke manufacturing business," since it only denies that the business was extensive, and a man might be good for four hundred dollars without having an extensive business).

Negations held to be sufficient see the following cases:

Indiana.— Merrill v. State, 156 Ind. 99, 59 N. E. 322, holding that an indictment which states that defendant sold a piano by representing that it was second-hand and that he had purchased it for two hundred and fifty dollars, which was less than it was worth, and that defendant was not in fact the owner of the piano and had never owned it, is not insufficient in failing to specifically deny that defendant purchased the piano for two hundred and fifty dollars, since the allegation that he was not and had never been the owner was a sufficient denial thereof.

Vermont.— State v. Switser, 63 Vt. 604, 22 Atl. 724, 25 Am. St. Rep. 789, holding that where the false pretense alleged is that defendant represented that six men named had agreed to furnish him money to pay his debts, it is not necessary in negativing the representation to allege that no one of the six would furnish the money, for if all had not made the agreement the pretense was false even if one or all of them would furnish the money, since the crime does not depend on whether prosecutor would suffer loss.

See 23 Cent. Dig. tit. "False Pretenses," § 37.

35. State v. Trisler, 49 Ohio St. 583, 31 N. E. 881 (holding that an indictment charging defendant with falsely representing that he did not owe any one, which alleges that defendant "did owe and was indebted to divers persons to the amount of one thousand dollars," without naming the persons to whom he was indebted, is too indefinite); Wills v. State, 24 Tex. App. 400, 6 S. W. 316 (holding that an indictment was fatally defective which charged swindling by means of an invalid and spurious note which defendant represented to be valid and genuine, knowing the contrary, and which set out the note, apparently valid on its face, in haec verba, but did not allege the facts which rendered it worthless); Reg. v. Wickham, 10 A. & E. 34, 8 L. J. M. C. 87, 2 P. & D. 333, 37 E. C. L. 43 (where an indictment charged the false pretense as being a representation that a promissory note delivered by defendant was a good and valuable security, and negatived the representation merely by stating that the note "was not a good and valuable security for the sum of 21 pounds or for any other sum," and it was held that the negation was defective in not stating in what respect the note was not valuable).

Representations as to ownership or encumbrances.— In an indictment for obtaining property by false pretenses, where it is charged as a part of the false pretenses that certain real estate was falsely represented to be free from prior encumbrances, the prior encumbrances should be set out or described. Keller v. State, 51 Ind. 111; People v. Winner, 80 Hun (N. Y.) 130, 30 N. Y. Suppl. 54. So an indictment is bad which charges a defendant with obtaining property by falsely pretending to be the unqualified owner of certain horses exchanged therefor, when such horses were in fact encumbered by mortgage, but fails to state the parties to the mortgage, or its date or amount, or the county where recorded, or whether possession was delivered to the mortgagee and retained by him, or whether the mortgage was recorded. State v. Stowe, 132 Mo. 199, 33 S. W. 799. But a general averment that the pretense was false will be deemed sufficient after verdict. State v. Luxton, 65 N. J. L. 605, 46 Atl. 1101, 48 Atl. 535. And an indictment for obtaining money by a mortgage on a particular lot of cattle which defendant did not own, by means of false representations as to the ownership thereof, is not defective in failing to allege that defendant had no other cattle on which he gave the mortgage, nor that the money loaned was not secured by other cattle. Moore v. People, 190 Ill. 331, 60 N. E. 535.

(IV) EFFECTIVENESS. The indictment must show that the property was obtained by means of the false pretense alleged.[36] Accordingly when there appears to be no natural connection between the pretense and the delivery of the property, such additional facts as are necessary to show the relation must be alleged.[37] A defect in the indictment arising from failure to show the con-

Selling unsound animal.— An allegation that the false pretense was that defendant said a horse which he traded to prosecutor "was all right," whereas in truth it was not all right, but diseased to such an extent as to render it worthless, is not a sufficient negativing; the indictment should allege in what respects the horse was not all right. Swindling.— Under the Texas act of 1881, prescribing "the requisites of indictments in certain cases," the indictment in a prosecution for swindling must allege that accused obtained the property by means of the false representations; an averment that the person swindled believed the false pretense and by reason thereof parted with his property is not sufficient. Ervin v. State, 11 Tex. App. 536. See 23 Cent. Dig. tit. "False Pretenses," § 38 et seq.

Procuring sale by false pretenses.— It is sometimes necessary under this rule, when the goods are obtained under a contract of sale or exchange, to aver in terms that prosecutor was induced to sell or exchange and did sell or exchange the property. State v. Miller, 153 Ind. 229, 54 N. E. 808; State v. Williams, 103 Ind. 235, 2 N. E. 585; Cooke v. State, 83 Ind. 402; Com. v. Strain, 10 Metc. (Mass.) 521. But when the indictment contains other averments showing the connection between the pretense and the obtaining, this specific nection between the false pretense and the obtaining is a material one and is not cured by verdict.[38] However, no particular form of words is necessary; an allegation that "by means of the false pretense," or "relying on the false pretense," or the like, is sufficient where it is apparent that the delivery of the property was the natural result of the pretense alleged.[39] The same general rules apply when the false pretense used is a token; the indictment must show that it was by means of the falseness of the token that accused was able to perpetrate the averment is not essential. State v. Jordan, 34 La. Ann. 1219; Com. v. O'Brien, 172 Mass. 248, 52 N. And see State v. Williams, supra, where the allegation was that for the purpose of obtaining "credit" certain false representations were made, and that by means thereof defendant did then and there obtain from prosecutor "on credit certain goods," etc., and it was held that the indictment should have shown whether the goods were obtained as a result of negotiations for a purchase, loan, or exchange. An indictment for obtaining property by false pretenses which alleges that defendant, intending to cheat and defraud A, made to him certain false representations respecting a horse, which A believed, and being deceived thereby was induced to purchase and receive of defendant the horse, and gave and delivered to defendant certain property in payment therefor, does not sufficiently set forth that A purchased the horse respecting which the false representations were made, or parted with his property by reason thereof. Cheating and swindling.— An indictment for cheating by false pretenses which avers that defendant pledged a watch belonging to a third person as security for the performance of a certain act, falsely exaggerating its value, but which contains no allegation of any authority from the owner to pledge it, is bad on demurrer. State v. Estes, 46 Me. 150. An indictment for swindling which alleges that defendant, by falsely pretending to have sold certain land for a sum which would be due at some future time, induced a certain person to deliver and did acquire from such person a certain mule, with intent to appropriate the same to his use, is insufficient in failing to show whether the person mentioned was induced to part with the title and possession, and also whether he was to be paid out of the sum realized from the land, or at all. No. 18,098, 1 Hayw. & H. 211 (holding that where the statute used the word "pretenses," an averment that "by reason of which false pretense," etc., is bad).

Averment of prosecutor's belief in pretense. — It is usual to allege that prosecutor believed the pretense to be true and was induced thereby to part with his property; but this allegation is not essential if it is otherwise shown by the indictment that the goods were obtained by the false pretense. But see Gregg v. People, 98 Ill. App. 170, decided under a statute which provided that an indictment should be valid which stated the offense in the language of the statute.

(II) AVERMENT OF DELIVERY. If the indictment avers that defendant obtained the property, it need not allege that the property was delivered to him.[44] An indictment for obtaining a signature to an instrument by false pretenses must state that the instrument was delivered to defendant, or, what is equivalent, that the signature was obtained by defendant.[45]

c. As to the Property Obtained — (I) DESCRIPTION — (A) General Rule. The property alleged to have been obtained must be described with such certainty and particularity as to enable the jury to determine whether the property proved to have been obtained is the same as that upon which the indictment was founded, and to enable defendant to make his defense intelligently.[46] However, the ing witness, by such false pretenses, "was induced to then and there sell and deliver" the property to defendant, is had for failure to allege that such witness did sell and deliver the property); State v. Clay, 100 Mo. 571, 13 S. W. 827; People v. Court Gen. Sess. New York County, 13 Hun (N. Y.) 395.

If three persons joined in the pretense and one of them obtained the property, the indictment should aver that each of them obtained it. Jones v. U. S., 13 Fed. Cas. No. 7,499, 5 Cranch C. C. 647.

This allegation must be direct, not inferential. Dwyer v. State, 24 Tex. App. 132, 5 S. W. 662. Thus an allegation that prosecutor paid defendant a sum is not equivalent to an allegation that defendant "obtained" said sum. State v. Lewis, 26 Kan. 123; Kennedy v. State, 34 Ohio St. 310. However, an allegation that defendant "received" is equivalent to an averment that he obtained. Matter of Fitzpatrick, 21 Ohio Cir. Ct. 519, 11 Ohio Cir. Dec. 695. So an indictment for swindling which alleges, in connection with false pretenses, that defendant "did thereby then and there fraudulently induce the said C to exchange his said three hundred dollars in money for a draft," sufficiently alleges an exchange. Faulk v. State, 38 Tex. Cr. 77, 41 S. W. 616 [following Nasets v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1895) 32 S. W. 698]. And under Wash. Code, § 1243, which provides that words used in a statute to define a crime need not be strictly pursued in the information, it is not necessary to use the word "obtain," but the words "did buy" are a sufficient allegation of obtaining. State v. Knowlton, 11 Wash. 512, 39 Pac. 966.

Acquisition.— An indictment under Tex. Pen. Code, art. 790, which defines swindling as "the acquisition of personal or movable property . . . by means of false pretense," etc., "with the intent to appropriate the same to the use of the persons so acquiring," must aver the acquisition of the property by defendant, and an averment that the property was delivered to defendant by the alleged swindled person is not sufficient. Cannon v. State, (Tex. App. 1890) 15 S. W. 117.

W. 340, in both of which cases, although not necessary to the decision, the court said that it was necessary to allege that the instrument was received by defendant. The necessity for an averment of delivery is also implied in State v. Jamison, 74 Iowa 613, 38 N. W. 509.

Michigan.— People v. Kinney, 110 Mich. 97, 67 N. W. 1089.

It is not sufficient to allege merely that prosecutor was induced to sign and did sign the instrument. State v. Clark, 72 Iowa 30, 33 N. W. 340; State v. McGinnis, 71 Iowa 685, 33 N. W. 338. See, however, State v. Butler, 47 Minn. 483, 50 N. W. 532, holding that in an indictment for obtaining a signature to a deed through false pretenses, an averment that the deed was "executed" includes everything necessary to its full execution.

46. People v. Conger, 1 Wheel. Cr. Cas. (N. Y.) 448, 4 City Hall Rec. 65 (holding that in an indictment for obtaining goods of a merchant by false pretenses, it is insufficient to set forth a bill of the goods with the usual abbreviations as in a merchant's book of account); State v. Reese, 83 N. C. 637; State v. Kube, 20 Wis. 217, 91 Am. Dec. 390.

It is not sufficient to allege merely that defendant obtained "certain real and personal property" (State v. Crooker, 95 Mo. 389, 8 S. W. 422; State v. Rochforde, 52 Mo. 199), or "a certain lot of dry goods" (Redmond v. State, 35 Ohio St. 81, holding that this is true even under a provision of the code that no indictment shall be deemed invalid for any defect or imperfection which does not tend to the prejudice of the substantial rights of defendant on the merits), or "a larger amount of dry and fancy goods of the value of twenty-seven dollars" (State v. Appleby, 63 N. J. L. 526, 42 Atl. 847), or "goods and money of the prosecutor to the value of fifty dollars" (State v. Reese, 83 N. C. 637), or "board of the goods and chattels of the prosecutor" (Reg. v. McQuarrie, 22 U. C. Q. B. 600. See Reg. v. Gardner, 7 Cox C. C. 136, 1 Dears. & B. 40, description is required to be only as particular as the nature of the case will admit,[47] and the property need not be described by its legal name.[48]

(B) Money, Bank-Notes, Certificates of Deposit, and Writings in General. When the property obtained consists of money, there is an irreconcilable difference of opinion among the authorities as to what particularity of description is necessary. On principle it would seem to be sufficient to describe the money as a certain amount of the lawful money of prosecutor without stating the denomination of the various pieces, their number, or whether they were notes or coin; and the best considered cases are to this effect,[49] although there are respectable authorities that require a more particular description.[50] Bank-notes are not sufficiently described as "goods,"[51] nor a certificate of deposit as "money."[52] When the thing obtained is a written instrument or the signature of a person thereto, it is not necessary in describing the instrument to set it out in haec verba,[53] but it

E. 178, it was held sufficient to describe the money as the sum of four thousand, nine hundred and seventy-five dollars in money, of a kind and description to the grand jury unknown and a more particular description of which could not then be given, of the value of four thousand, nine hundred and seventy-five dollars.

Washington.— State v. Knowlton, 11 Wash. 512, 39 Pac. 966.

West Virginia.— State v. Hurst, 11 W. Va. 54, holding that a description as divers United States treasury notes and divers national bank-notes the denomination of which is to the jurors unknown, amounting in the whole to the sum of one hundred and fifty-eight dollars, and of the value of one hundred and fifty-eight dollars, is sufficient without specifying the number of notes.

England.— Reg. v. Brown, 2 Cox C. C. 348.

See 23 Cent. Dig. tit. "False Pretenses," § 44.

Description in alternative.— An indictment for obtaining money to the amount of thirty dollars under false pretenses, describing the same as follows: "To wit, thirty dollars in United States treasury notes, . . . of the denomination of five dollars each; thirty dollars in United States silver certificates of the denomination of ten dollars each; . . . thirty dollars, one United States gold certificate of the denomination of twenty dollars . . . and one United States silver certificate of the denomination of ten dollars; . . . thirty dollars in . . . gold coin, . . . of the denomination of ten dollars each; . . . thirty dollars in . . . silver coin, . . . of the denomination of one dollar each; . . . thirty dollars in . . . nickel coin, . . . of the denomination of five cents each," is bad for uncertainty. Value of money.— Money, being itself a measure of value, cannot be rendered more definite by an averment of value; hence, an averment that defendant obtained "sixty-five dollars in money" by false pretense is sufficiently certain without alleging the value of the money. must be described with such certainty as to identify it when produced in evidence,[54] so that defendant may not subsequently be indicted for the same offense.[55]

L. 686 (both holding that an indictment for obtaining goods by false pretenses with intent to defraud a specified person is bad, unless it states whose property the goods were, and that the defect is not aided by verdict); Sill v. Reg., Dears. C. C. 132, 1 E. & B. 553, 17 Jur. 207, 22 L. J. M. C. 41, 1 Wkly. Rep. 147, 72 E. C. L. 553 (holding that this requirement is not dispensed with by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, § 25, which provides that every objection to an indictment for any formal defect apparent on the face thereof shall be taken before the jury shall be sworn). See, however, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, § 88, which renders an allegation of ownership unnecessary.

Allegation held sufficient.— An indictment for false pretenses alleging that the prisoner obtained "from A a cheque for the sum of 8 pounds, 14 shillings, 6 pence, of the moneys of B," is a sufficient allegation that the check was the property of B, for "the money" may be stricken out. Reg. v. Godfrey, 7 Cox C. C. 392, Dears. & B. 426, 4 Jur. N. S. 146, 27 L. J. M. C. 151, 6 Wkly. Rep. 251.

The ownership need not be stated by a direct allegation if facts are alleged which show the ownership clearly. People v. Skidmore, 123 Cal. 267, 55 Pac. 984; State v. Balliet, 63 Kan. 707, 66 Pac. 1005; State v. Knowlton, 11 Wash. 512, 39 Pac. 966.

It is not sufficient that it may be gathered by inference from the other necessary averments of intent to defraud, etc., that the ownership of the property was in some person named. Moulie v. State, 37 Fla. 321, 20 So. 554; Halley v. State, 43 Ind. 509; State v. Lathrop, 15 Vt. 279, holding that an allegation that defendant obtained goods of B with intent to defraud B of them is not a sufficient allegation that B owned the goods. Contra, State v. Dixon, 101 N. C. 741, 7 S. E. 870; State v. Boon, 49 N. C. 463, holding that it is not necessary to allege that the property obtained was the property of prosecutor, from whom it is alleged to have been obtained.

What constitutes ownership.— Although money deposited in a bank and mixed with its funds becomes its property, yet where county funds are deposited in a bank as required by law, and a specific sum is thereafter separated and appropriated by the bank for the payment of a county warrant by direction of the receiver of taxes and county treasurer, it thereby becomes, and is paid out as, the gee,[57] or in a person in possession of the goods[58] or in a person with authority to sell them.[59]

(III) QUANTITY OR NUMBER. The quantity or number of chattels obtained should be stated with certainty,[60] unless the circumstances of the case do not admit of it.[61]

(IV) VALUE. The value of the property obtained need not be stated in the indictment,[62] unless, as in some jurisdictions, value is made an element of the offense.[63]

d. As to Loss to Prosecutor. An indictment for obtaining property by false pretenses need not allege specifically that prosecutor suffered loss by reason of the false pretense,[64] but it must set forth facts sufficient to show that he suffered a money of such officer, so that in an indictment for obtaining by false pretenses county funds on deposit in a bank by means of a fraudulent warrant, the property in the money is properly laid in the receiver of taxes and county treasurer. State v. Lynn, 3 Pennew. (Del.) 316, 51 Atl. 878. Under Ky. Cr. Code, § 128, providing that if an indictment for an offense involving an injury to property describes the offense with sufficient certainty to identify the act an erroneous allegation as to the ownership of property is not material, an indictment for obtaining money by false pretenses which describes the money obtained and alleges that it was not the property of accused is sufficient, although it alleges that the money belonged to a married woman, who is shown to have had no separate estate. Hennessy v. Com., 88 Ky. 301, 11 S. W. 13, 10 Ky. L. Rep. 823. Where money was obtained from a servant of prosecutor by false pretenses that it was due for carriage, the fact that the master reimbursed the servant does not make the property obtained that of the master, and it is wrongly laid in the indictment as the property of the master. Rex v. Douglass, 1 Campb. 212, 7 C. & P. 785 note, 32 E. C. L. 871.

Obtaining by games.— In an indictment under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, § 17, for winning money at cards by fraud, unlawful device, and ill-practice, it is not necessary to state to whom the money belonged. Reg. v. Moss, 7 Cox C. C. 200, Dears. & B. 104, 2 Jur. N. S. 1196, 26 L. J. M. C. 9, 5 Wkly. Rep. 49.

Obtaining signature to instrument.— If an indictment for false pretense in obtaining a signature to an instrument, under a statute that makes it a crime to obtain the signature to an instrument the false making of which would be forgery, states facts that show that the instrument was such an instrument, it need not allege the ownership of the property represented by the instrument. legal injury as that term is understood in the law of false pretense, else it fails to charge an offense.[65]

e. As to Knowledge, Intent, and Design. Unless the pretense averred is of such a character as to exclude the possible hypothesis of his ignorance of its falsity,[66] the indictment must allege specifically that accused knew the pretense to be false.[67] When the statute makes a certain intent an element of the offense, that intent must be averred in the indictment by a proper affirmative allega-

Obtaining signature.— An indictment for obtaining by false pretenses the signature of a person to a deed of real estate must aver that prosecutor had some interest in the property, or that the deed contained covenants rendering him liable to an action. Dord v. People, 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 671. An averment that it was a "warranty deed" shows sufficiently that it may prejudice the person signing. State v. Butler, 47 Minn. 483, 50 N. W. 532. St. Rep. 789), or "unlawfully and designedly" (State v. Blauvelt, 38 N. J. L. 306. Contra, Com. v. Hulbert, 12 Metc. (Mass.) 446), or "falsely and fraudulently" (Reg. v. Henderson, C. & M. 328, 2 Moody C. C. 192, 41 E. C. L. 183), did pretend, or by an allegation of an intent to defraud (Reg. v. Philpotts, 1 C. & K. 112, 47 E. C. L. 112). See, however, State v. Snyder, 66 Ind. 203, where it was held not necessary to specifically allege that defendant knew the pretense to be false, if it is alleged that he "designedly, feloniously, and with intent to defraud" did "falsely pretend," as he could not "designedly intend to defraud" by means of the false pretense unless he knew that it was false.

Averments held sufficient.— An averment that "in truth and in fact each and every of the pretenses and representations so made by [defendant] as aforesaid was and were wholly false and fraudulent and untrue, and [defendant] then and there well knew such was the case," is a sufficient allegation of defendant's knowledge of the falsity of the pretense. People v. Dimick, 107 N. Y. 13, 30, 14 N. E. 178. An information for obtaining money by false pretenses, alleging certain statements of fact by defendant, and then alleging as to each of them that it was not the fact, followed by the words "all of which [she] . . . then and there well knew," sufficiently alleges defendant's knowledge of the falsity of her statements. Baker v. State, 120 Wis. 135, 97 N. W. 566.

Indictments held not fatally defective.— An information which charges defendant with having obtained money under false representations, but which does not directly allege his knowledge of their falsity, although demurrable, is not fatally defective. People v. Millan, 106 Cal. 320, 39 Pac. 605. An indictment which sets out pretenses, negativing their truth, "all of which the defendant then and there well knew," is not obnoxious, after verdict. to the objection that the scienter is not sufficiently averred. State v. Janson, 80 Mo. 97.

False weights.— An indictment under 1 N. Y. Rev. St. p. 611, § 33, to recover damages for using false weights, need not aver scienter on the part of defendant. Bayard v. Smith, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 88.

tion.[68] Thus where the crime is a felony, the intent must be alleged to have been felonious.[69] Unless the statute makes an intent to defraud a particular person,[70] or to accomplish a particular result,[71] an element of the crime, the intent to defraud the one or to accomplish the other need not be averred.[72] Statute 30 Geo. II, c. 24, § 1, which has been the model for most of the statutes in this country, makes it an element of the crime that the goods be "designedly" obtained. Under such a statute the indictment must allege that the goods were "designedly" obtained or some word equivalent to or broad enough to include the statutory word must be used.[73]

68. Florida.— Jones v. State, 22 Fla. 532.
Iowa.— State v. Daniels, 90 Iowa 491, 58 N. W. 891, holding that the same rule applies to an indictment for designedly and by false pretenses obtaining the signature of a person to a written instrument.
Massachusetts.— Com. v. Dean, 110 Mass. 64, where an indictment was held bad that contained no allegation of intent to defraud other than a concluding statement that the jurors "say and present" that defendant, "in the manner aforesaid, designedly, by a false pretence and with intent to defraud," procured the signature.

Indictments held sufficient.— Under Ala. Cr. Code (1886), §§ 3811, 4383, allowing the intent in an indictment for attempting to obtain money by false pretenses to be alleged in the alternative "to injure or defraud," an indictment charging an "intent to defraud" alone is sufficient. White v. State, 86 Ala. 69, 4 So. 674. An indictment under La. Rev. St. § 813, providing for punishing any one who by any false pretense "shall obtain from any person, money or any property, with intent to defraud him of the same," which charges defendant with obtaining by false pretenses the property of another "with intent to defraud" is sufficient. State v. Lewis, 41 La. Ann. 590, 6 So. 536. An indictment for obtaining money or goods by false pretenses, if charged in the words of Tenn. St. (1842) c. 48, § 1, providing that "whoever shall feloniously obtain the personal goods or choses in action, of another, by means of any false and fraudulent pretence shall be guilty of felony," need not charge the money or goods to have been obtained with intent to steal them, though in another section of the statute it is declared that false pretenses includes all cases where the party "intended to steal the [goods]." B. Pleading and Proof — 1. General Rule. Every allegation in the indictment essentially descriptive of the offense must be proved as laid.[74] An indictment for obtaining money by false pretenses is not sustained by proof of a different offense.[75] However, in some jurisdictions by statute there may be a conviction for an attempt to obtain property by false pretenses under an indictment for so obtaining the property.[76]

2. Particular Allegations and Proof Thereunder — a. As to the Pretense. A variance between the description of the pretense in an indictment for obtaining property by a false pretense and the proof thereof is fatal,[77] unless the variance be

See, however, Rex v. Howarth, 3 Stark. 26, 3 E. C. L. 579, holding that it is not necessary to allege that defendant did designedly pretend, etc.

Indictments held sufficient.—The word "designedly," although used in the statute, is not necessary in the indictment if words equivalent are used. State v. Grant, 86 Iowa 216, 53 N. W. 120 (where the indictment charged that defendants conspired "for the unlawful, malicious, and felonious purpose, and with fraudulent and malicious intent and purpose, . . . to obtain," etc.); Com. v. Hooper, 104 Mass. 549.

74. Com. v. Pierce, 130 Mass. 31 (holding that an allegation charging two persons jointly with obtaining a loan of money by false pretenses is not supported by proof of a loan to only one of the persons); Wallace v. State, 11 Lea (Tenn.) 542 (holding that where the indictment alleged that a note obtained was executed to S, and the evidence showed that it was to S's daughter and by her assigned to S, the variance was fatal). See also Tuttle v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1899) 49 S. W. 82. However, an allegation that prosecutor was induced to deliver goods "as upon a sale upon credit" is sufficiently proved by evidence of a sale of the goods to defendant on his promissory note, payable in four months. Com. v. Davidson, 1 Cush. (Mass.) 33. And see Amos v. State, 123 Ala. 50, 26 So. 524.

An allegation not descriptive of the offense need not be proved, but may be rejected as surplusage. Com. v. Mulrey, 170 Mass. 103, 49 N. E. 91 (sustaining a conviction under an indictment for obtaining money from a city by making a false return of the amount due under a contract, which denies that there was anything due from the city, although a portion of the amount obtained was proved to be due); State v. Ridge, 125 N. C. 658, 34 S. E. 440 (holding that since N. C. Code, § 1025, provides that an indictment for obtaining goods by false pretenses need not allege the ownership of the goods, the allegation of ownership in an indictment is mere surplusage, which need not be proved). So unless the statute makes the value of the property obtained an element of the crime, it is not necessary to prove the value, although it is stated in the indictment. Com. v. Sessions, 169 Mass. 329, 47 N. E. 1034; Com. v. Lee, 149 Mass. 179, 21 N. E. 299; Com. v. Morrill, 8 Cush. (Mass.) 571; Cunningham v. State, 61 N. J. L. 67, 38 Atl. 847; People v. Herrick, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 87.

If an indispensable allegation is made needlessly specific, the unnecessary portion cannot be rejected but must be proved as laid. Schayer v. People, 5 Colo. App. 75, 37 Pac. 43.

False marking of casks, etc.— Although an indictment charges a false marking of flour with intent to defraud A, and also thereafter a sale to A, yet if the false marking with intent to defraud is proved, the sale need not be. State v. Burge, 7 Iowa 255.

Selling land twice.— Where the second deed conveys but a part of the property charged in the indictment to have been conveyed by both it and the first deed, it should be considered, in the determination of the effect of the variance, whether the part conveyed by both deeds formed a material inducement to the second, or whether the variance had any tendency to prejudice the substantial rights of defendant. State v. Wilson, 66 Mo. App. 540.

75. McQueen v. State, 89 Ala. 91, 8 So. 115. In some jurisdictions, however, while the crimes remain distinct, it is provided by statute that on an indictment for obtaining property by false pretenses the prisoner may be convicted of that offense, although the proof shows that he obtained the property by larceny. immaterial.[78] Defendant cannot be convicted on proof of pretenses not alleged in the indictment.[79] Hence if the indictment alleges a single representation made of a single inseparable fact, and the proof is of a single representation variant from that charged, the variance is fatal;[80] but where the pretense is charged as a single pretense, proof of a double and separable representation, one part of which alone might constitute this element of the offense and which corresponds with the pretense charged, is no variance;[81] nor is there a variance when several representations are alleged and only one is proved.[82] However, the allegation as to the

On a trial for obtaining money by falsely pretending that a note was valid and secured by a mortgage, the fact that in the margin of the note were the words, "This note is secured by real-estate mortgage," which were not in the copy of the note set out in the indictment, was not a variance. Com. v. Parmenter, 121 Mass. 354. The proof must correspond to the allegations of the indictment as to the person from whom the property was obtained.[90] However, there is no variance where it is alleged that the property was obtained from a certain person and the proof shows it was delivered to defendant by the agent of such person.[91]

f. As to the Time When the Pretense Was Made. The date on which the pretense was made being immaterial, a variance as to the date is not fatal.[92]

C. Evidence[93]— 1. Burden of Proof and Presumptions. As in the case of all other crimes, so in this, the burden of proving every element of the crime beyond a reasonable doubt is on the state.[94] A fraudulent intent is not presumed from the fact that the pretenses were false and that defendant knew them to be so.[95] However, a presumption of an intent to cheat and defraud arising from the fact that property is obtained by means of a trick or deception, or false or fraudulent representation or pretense, is not artificial but probable and reasonable, and hence the state may create such a presumption by statute.[96]

2. Admissibility — a. In General. On a trial for obtaining property by false pretense, any evidence which tends to prove any element of the crime is admissible,[97] subject to the general rules governing the admissibility of evidence in crim-

c. As to Knowledge and Intent. As a general rule, any evidence which has a legitimate tendency to prove that defendant knew his representations to be false is admissible,[2] and the same is true of any evidence which tends to prove or to disprove a guilty intent.[3] Evidence of similar false representations made by defendant to the same person for the purpose of obtaining property, or to others shortly before or after the representations for which defendant is on trial, is in most jurisdictions held admissible to prove either defendant's knowledge of their falsity or a guilty intent or both,[4] and this is so even though the transactions drafts on the bank are not admissible to show that he had no funds there. State v. Reidel, 26 Iowa 430.

ant has been acquitted on an indictment for such other representations;[6] but evidence that defendant had obtained property by such other representations is not admissible to prove intent.[7] Defendant may himself testify as to his intent.[8]

d. As to Reliance on Pretense. The general rules governing the admissibility of evidence apply to evidence offered on the issue of whether prosecutor relied on the false pretense.[9] By the weight of authority prosecutor may testify that he was induced to part with the property by the false pretenses.[10]

3. Weight and Sufficiency[11]— a. As to the Pretense and Its Falsity. The state must prove beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant made the pretense,[12] and that it was false.[13] It is not necessary that the proof should be direct; it is sufficient if the evidence establish such facts as tend legitimately to show its falsity;[14] and since defendant is usually in a position to know the truth or falsity of the representation, slight evidence of its falsity is sufficient for a conviction, in the absence of countervailing evidence of its truth.[15]

Evidence of similar transactions between the parties is admissible to show whether prosecutor was deceived or is using the law to enforce a debt. State v. Rivers, 58 Iowa 102, 12 N. W. 117, 43 Am. Rep. 112.

Evidence sufficient to shift burden of proof. — It is said in some of the cases cited above that slight evidence of falsity will throw

b. As to Intent. The intent must be proven specifically; it cannot be implied from proof of the making of the pretense.[16] Lack of intent is not shown by evidence that defendant intended to apply the money and in fact applied it to the object for which it was given.[17]

c. As to Reliance on the Pretense. While the state must prove that prosecutor relied on the false pretense,[18] it is not necessary that that fact should be established by the direct evidence of prosecutor himself.[19]

d. As to the Property Obtained. The fact of the obtaining of the property by defendant may be proved by circumstantial evidence.[20] In the absence of evidence raising any question of ownership, proof that property was in possession of prosecutor is sufficient proof of his ownership.[21]

D. Trial — 1. Province of Court and of Jury. Questions of law are for the court.[22] Issues of fact, on the other hand, are for the jury.[23] Thus it is for the jury to determine what impression the words used by defendant were intended to convey, and did convey,[24] whether defendant knew of the falsity of the pretense,[25] whether the representations were made with intent to defraud,[26] whether the pretense was calculated to deceive a person of ordinary prudence,[27] and whether the pretense was relied on by prosecutor so as to be the inducing cause of the transfer of the property.[28]

2. INSTRUCTIONS. The court should instruct the jury as to every essential element of the offense; therefore a failure to instruct the jury as to the necessity for intent,[29] for defendant's knowledge of the falsity of the pretense,[30] and for injury to prosecutor,[31] or a failure to instruct as to the materiality of the pretenses where more than one was used,[32] is reversible error.

3. VERDICT.[33] The verdict must contain, either in itself or by reference to the indictment, all the elements of the crime.[34]

IX. PUNISHMENT.

The crime of obtaining property by false pretenses is punished variously in different jurisdictions.[35]

Massachusetts.— Com. v. Coe, 115 Mass. 481.

Michigan.— People v. Stockwell, 135 Mich. 341, 97 N. W. 765, where in a prosecution for obtaining money under false representations that a certain person was the father of an unborn child, such person attempted to explain away a previous denial that he had had connection with the woman, and it was held that the reasonableness of his explanation was for the jury.

New York.— Thomas v. People, 34 N. Y. 351.

Pennsylvania.— Com. v. Daniels, 2 Pars. Eq. Cas. 332.

England.— Reg. v. Martin, L. R. 1 C. C. 56, 10 Cox C. C. 383, 36 L. J. M. C. 20, 15 L. T. Rep. N. S. 54, 15 Wkly. Rep. 358; Reg. v. Welman, 6 Cox C. C. 153, Dears. C. C. 188, 1 Wkly. Rep. 361; Reg. v. Hamilton, 1 Cox C. C. 244.

Canada.— Reg. v. Harty, 31 Nova Scotia 272, where the court thought the pretense too remote for the obtaining of the property, although it was a question for the jury to find whether there was a direct connection between the two.

Where evidence of similar transactions has been admitted, the court must in its charge limit the purpose and object of the evidence to the question of intent. Martin v. State, 36 Tex. Cr. 125, 35 S. W. 976.

30. Crawford v. State, 117 Ga. 247, 43 S. E. 762.

31. Berry v. State, 97 Ga. 202, 23 S. E. 833.

32. State v. Nine, 105 Iowa 131, 74 N. W. 945; West v. State, 63 Nebr. 257, 88 N. W. 503. However, an instruction that in order to convict the jury must believe that defendant procured money on the faith of his representation that he had money in a certain bank, which representation was the one charged in the indictment, excludes the idea that they could convict if he obtained the money on any other representation. Brown v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1898) 43 S. W. 986.

33. Propriety of conviction where several pretenses are charged, the truth of some of which is not properly negatived, and a general verdict of guilty is rendered see supra, page 427, note 30.

Verdicts held sufficient.—A verdict of guilty will not be set aside because it fixes the value of the money at a few dollars more than is established by the evidence, where the uncontradicted proofs show that the sum procured exceeded thirty-five dollars, the amount to obtain which by false pretense is made criminal by Nebr. Cr. Code, § 125. Wax v. State, 43 Nebr. 18, 61 N. W. 117. Under the Ohio act of Feb. 21, 1873 (70 Ohio Laws 39), making it an offense to procure, etc., the signature of a person to a promissory note, if the indictment sets out the amount of the note, it is not necessary that the value of the note be found by the verdict of the jury. The amount of the note, not its value, determines the grade of the offense. Ellars v. State, 25 Ohio St. 385. In a prosecution for obtaining a signature to an indorsement of a draft by false pretenses wherein the judge withdrew from the jury as immaterial the proof of the obtaining the money, a verdict, "We find the defendant guilty of obtaining money under false pretense, as charged in the indictment," was a substantial finding of the offense; and the reference to the money obtained would be, if necessary, stricken out as surplusage. Wallace v. State, 2 Lea (Tenn.) 29. Where the jury find in a special verdict that prosecutor supplied the prisoner with the goods, and that she believed the statement he made, which was false, it is to be inferred that she so acted because she believed the statement. Reg. v. Burton, 16 Cox C. C. 62, 54 L. T. Rep. N. S. 765.

A verdict cannot be amended on review in a court of appeal. Reg. v. Ewing, 21 U. C. Q. B. 523.

See also Ex p. Neustadt, 82 Cal. 273, 23 Pac. 124 (holding that a possible penalty of life imprisonment for this offense is not authorized); Wilde v. Com., 2 Metc. (Mass.) 408 (holding that defendant may be sentenced to pay costs as well as a fine, but that he cannot be sentenced to solitary confinement);

FALSE REPRESENTATION. See False Pretenses; Fraud.

FALSE RETURN. A return made by the sheriff or other ministerial officer to a writ in which is stated a fact contrary to the truth and injurious to one of the parties, or to some one having an interest in it.[1] (False Return: By Sheriff, see Sheriffs and Constables. Of Taxable Property, see Taxation.)

FALSE SWEARING. The act of knowingly and intentionally stating upon oath what is not true;[2] a false statement under oath by a voluntary declaration or affidavit, which is not required by law or made in the course of a judicial proceeding.[3] In its ordinary sense, swearing to what the deponent knows to be untrue; swearing corruptly; swearing which is morally, wilfully false, not merely mistaken.[4] (False Swearing: Generally, see Perjury. By Bankrupt, see Bankruptcy. By Insolvent, see Insolvency. By Insured,[5] see Fire Insurance.)

ent sense;[47] nevertheless the term has been extended to include the issue of the ancestor's children,[48] all his descendants,[49] the whole group of persons thus related by blood,[50] and is even said to be as broad as the word "relatives," which includes relatives by affinity as well as by blood;[51] the husbands and wives of blood relatives.[52] The ordinary meaning of the term when used in wills is said to be next of kin,[53] but it may mean heir-at-law,[54] and it may have many other meanings or shades of meanings; in fact its legal import must be determined by the intention of the testator expressed in the language of the whole instrument, read in the light of relevant circumstances existing at the time of execution;[55] and different meanings may be given to the term in two distinct clauses in the same will, when used in one case in reference to real property and in the other to personal property;[56] and sometimes it may be rejected for uncertainty.[57] When the term is used in connection with real estate, it implies inheritance — that species of succession which belongs to inheritance.[58] (Family: In General, see HUSBAND AND

76. Union Nat. Bank v. Seeberger, 30 Fed. 429, where the term is construed under a tariff act.

77. Derivation.— The word is derived from to agriculture, either to the raising of crops, or pasture, or both;[78] an indefinite quantity of land, some of which is cultivated,[79] whether it be large or small, isolated, or made up of many parcels;[80] for a farm may be of any size, of any shape, of any boundaries; may include less than one lot, or comprise several lots or parts of lots.[81] The term is and has been a collective one, comprehending divers things collected together, whereof one is a messuage, and the others are the lands, meadows, pastures, woods, commons, and other things lying on or appertaining thereto.[82] As a verb, as used in a lease of mineral lands, to bring feorme, an old Saxon word signifying "provisions" (Kendall v. Miller, 47 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 446, 448); "farme" or "ferme," called in Latin "firma." Sheppard Touchst. 93 [quoted in Black v. Hill, 32 Ohio St. 313, 318].

A primitive meaning of the term, in England, at least, was agricultural land let to a tenant. Lane v. Stanhope, 6 T. R. 345, 348 [quoting Johnson Dict.]. See also Respublica v. Carmalt, 4 Yeates (Pa.) 416, 417. And at still earlier times the word was used as the equivalent of "rent" (Black L. Dict.), which meaning was naturally derived from the original meaning of the old Saxon word feorme, viz., provisions, because the rent was paid in provisions produced on the land; and from the meaning "rent" it was a natural transition to have the word signify the very estate or lands rented. Kendall v. Miller, 47 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 446, 448.

In more modern times the word has received a more extended signification, and now denotes, in this country, both in a popular and legal sense, a considerable tract of land, devoted, in part at least, to cultivation, with suitable buildings, and under the supervision of a single occupant, regardless of the nature or extent of his tenure. Kendall v. Miller, 47 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 446, 448 [citing Burrill L. Dict.].

80. In re Drake, 114 Fed. 229, 231, where it is said: "For a long time after the words began to be used in an agricultural sense, they were applied to lands held on lease, and 'demise, lease, and to farm let' are still the operative words of a lease, but they are, in modern use, applied without respect to nature of tenure. Robinson Crusoe says, 'I farmed upon my own land,' so it appears that the words have been used in their present sense for nearly 200 years."

A single farm.—"Any considerable tract, or a number of smaller tracts of land, set apart for cultivation by a single occupant, whether as a tenant or owner, and upon which he resides, even though disconnected and separated by the lands of adjoining owners, if used together, would be regarded as constituting a single farm; and, if sufficiently identified, the whole would undoubtedly pass under the word 'farm,' in a testamentary devise." "A mill situate on a farm is not a product of it — it is not the result of the cultivation of the soil — it is not essential to it — it is a structure enclosing machinery for the purposes of manufacture, transformation, not transmutation, and its earnings — the tolls — are not products of the owner's farm, but the products of the farms of other people, and the clause in question clearly does not therefore embrace them. A grist mill is no more a part of the farm than a cotton mill, a cotton gin, a blacksmith-shop, or other structure or machinery erected on it for the purposes of manufacture. The earnings of such things are not of the product of the farm, in the sense of the statute." State v. Kennerly, 98 N. C. 657, 659, 4 S. E. 47.

97. As for instance horses, swine, sheep (State v. Kennerly, 98 N. C. 657, 659, 4 S. E. 47; Philadelphia v. Davis, 6 Watts & S. (Pa.) 269, 279), cattle (State v. Kennerly, 98 N. C. 657, 659, 4 S. E. 47), and neat cattle (Philadelphia v. Davis, 6 Watts & S. (Pa.) 269, 279).

98. State v. Spaugh, 129 N. C. 564, 568, 40 S. E. 60, holding that a bona fide farmer who peddles meat, produced from animals raised or fattened on his farm, is not within the purview of an act requiring the payment of a tax by persons engaged in buying and selling fresh meats. The court said: "What this law contemplates is that the meat in its essential character must be the product of the land owned or worked by the man who seeks to peddle it." But see, however, Philadelphia v. Davis, 6 Watts & S. (Pa.) 269, 279, where the court said: "The ox is the produce of the farm; beef is the produce of the slaughter-house and the shambles. It is manufactured by the professional skill of an artisan, whose business is as distinct from that of a farmer, as is that of a flax-dresser or a wool-comber."

28. Black L. Dict.

The United States has been generally styled, in American political and judicial writings, a "federal government." The term has not been imposed by any specific constitutional authority, but only expresses the general sense and opinion upon the nature of the form of government. In recent years, there is observable a disposition to employ the term "national" in speaking of the government of the Union. Neither word settles anything as to the nature or powers of the government. "Federal" is somewhat more appropriate if the government is considered a union of the states; "national" is preferable if the view is adopted that the state governments and the Union are two distinct systems, each established by the people directly, one for local and the other for national purposes. I. DEFINITION.

A fence is an inclosing structure about a field or other space, or about any object, composed of wood, iron, or other material, and intended to prevent intrusion from without or straying from within.[1] It is nothing more than a line of obstacle, and may be composed of any material which will present a sufficient obstruction.[2] It may be a hedge,[3] a ditch,[4] a wall,[5] a trestle,[6] or a navigable stream or deep watercourse.[7]

II. SUFFICIENCY.

In the absence of a statute defining what constitutes a sufficient fence, the rule is that a fence which will turn ordinary stock is a good and sufficient fence;[8] it is not necessary that it turn stock which are peculiarly vicious and prone to break fences.[9] Where a division line fence is not required to be built of any particular height or size, or of any particular materials or particular style, it must be so built as to size, height, character, and kind of materials that it will be proper and suitable for all the purposes of such fence, and will be reasonably safe, and not necessarily cause injury to the adjoining owner or his property or animals.[10] Where, however, what constitutes a sufficient or lawful fence is described by statute,[11] land must be inclosed by a fence of the character thus Sufficiency with reference to particular animals.—Statutes sometimes require that fences shall be so constructed as to turn hogs (Huber v. Wilkinson, 46 Iowa 458; Hoskins v. Huling, 2 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 155), or sheep (Enders v. McDonald, 5 Ind. App. 297, 31 N. E. 1056).

A lawful fence means a fence as defined by statute. The word "lawful" in this connection applies merely to the quality of the fence, its height, material, etc. Russell v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., 83 Mo. 507.

"Lawful" and "sufficient" fences distinguished.—"Sufficient fences," which a person must maintain around premises or fields to entitle him to recover for a trespass thereon, do not necessarily mean lawful fences, but mean fences such as farmers of practical knowledge and experience would consider as sufficient to protect the crop from injury by usually orderly cattle. Robison v. Fetterman, 9 Pa. Cas. 604, 14 Atl. 245.

"Lawful" and "ordinary" fences distinguished.—"Ordinary fences," in a statute relating to unruly cattle that will not be restrained by ordinary fences, does not mean lawful fences. Ordinary, in such a connection, means common. There is therefore a class of common fences to which the term "ordinary," in contradistinction to "lawful," can properly apply. Hine v. Wooding, 37 Conn. 123.

In Indiana a lawful fence is defined by statute to be "such as good husbandmen generally keep." See Sisk v. Conck, 112 Ind. 504, 14 N. E. 381, 14 Am. St. Rep. 213; Hinshaw v. Gilpin, 64 Ind. 116; Blizzard v. Walker, 32 Ind. 437; Myers v. Dodd, 9 Ind. 290, 68 Am. Dec. 624.

described,[12] or at least by an inclosure equivalent, in its capacity to turn stock, to the statutory fence.[13] The height of a lawful fence being prescribed, the average height cannot be considered in determining its sufficiency; it is immaterial that it is higher in some places if it is lower in others.[14] An immaterial variation from the statutory height will be disregarded; substantial compliance with the statute is all that is required.[15] An agreement for a partition fence which requires a "sufficient fence," without a more particular description, will be held to refer to and adopt the standard prescribed by statute.[16] Statutory requirements as to the sufficiency of partition fences may be waived by agreement.[17]

III. DUTY TO ERECT AND MAINTAIN.

A. In General. A statement of the rules as to the duty of erecting and maintaining fences generally has been made elsewhere.[18]

B. Partition Fences — 1. How Duty Arises — a. In General. A landowner's obligation to build, maintain, or contribute toward a partition fence arises by prescription, agreement, or statute, as otherwise no such duty is incumbent upon him.[19] Although a fence actually exists between adjacent lands, it will Evidence.— In a contest respecting the lawful character of a fence, the opinion of the fence-viewers as to its sufficiency is admissible in evidence (Phillips v. Oystee, 32 Iowa 257); but in the absence of a statutory provision making the fence-viewers the sole judges of the sufficiency of a fence in an action brought for the recovery of damages caused by trespassing cattle, the sufficiency may be proved like any other fact. Noble v. Chase, 60 Iowa 261, 14 N. W. 299.

To what fences statutes apply.— A statute specifying the height of partition fences has no application to outside fences. Scott v. Buck, 85 Ill. 334; Scott v. Wirshing, 64 Ill. 102. Although not in terms so providing a statute relating in part to partition fences and elsewhere prescribing the dimensions of a lawful fence implies that a partition fence must be such a one. become a partition fence, and the obligations and rights of the adjacent owners, under the partition fence statutes, will arise only on its being made a partition fence by agreement, or by proceeding in the manner prescribed by statute.[20]

b. By Prescription. The obligation to maintain a partition fence may arise by prescription.[21] It has also been decided that the respective owners may become bound by prescription to maintain a specific portion of such a fence.[22] From a joint maintainance, however long continued, no prescriptive obligation can arise.[23] A prescriptive obligation on the owner of land to maintain a partition fence is not destroyed by his becoming a tenant in common of the adjoining land;[24] but where adjoining lands which have once belonged to different persons, one of whom was bound to repair the fences between the two, afterward become the property of the same person, the preëxisting obligation to repair the fences is destroyed by the unity of ownership. And where the person who has so become the owner of the entirety afterward parts with one of the two closes, the obligation to repair the fences will not revive, unless express words be introduced into the deed of conveyance for that purpose.[25] A statute as to partition fences will not interfere with an obligation as to the maintenance of such a fence existing by prescription.[26]

c. By Agreement — (i) In General. The owners of adjacent lands may make valid agreements as to the construction and maintenance of partition fences, even when this matter is regulated by statute.[27] Where such owners make an Constitutionality.— "Laws compelling the building, maintaining, and keeping in repair of partition fences are enacted in the exercise of the police power, and are an ancient branch of legislation which has been uni-requirement to build and maintain such fences; the parties may dispense with them if they so agree.[33]

(II) Upon Whom Statutory Rights and Duties Conferred. Partition fence statutes confer no rights or duties, except between the owners of adjoining lands and those who hold under them, and hence negligence with respect to partition fences does not concern the general public.[34] It has been held that any person occupying land and interested in the making and maintaining a partition fence, be his estate or interest in the premises what it may, is entitled to avail himself of the provisions in the statute in reference to partition fences, the remedy not being limited to the owner of the fee.[35] The grantee of one who has built a partition fence succeeds to the right of his grantor to enforce contribution from the adjoining owner.[36] Under such statutes it is generally the duty of the occupier of the land and not of the owner thereof to maintain partition fences.[37] An administrator is not personally liable in an action under a statute which provides that when one of the owners of adjoining lands neglects to build his proportion of a partition fence the person injured thereby may build it and recover therefor.[38]

(III) To What Lands Applicable. Sometimes statutes as to partition fences apply only to agricultural lands and do not require fences between urban lots;[39] other statutes on the subject apply only to lands that are inclosed,[40] or formly sustained." Tomlinson v. Bainaka, (Ind. 1904) 70 N. E. 155, 158.

Nature of inclosing fences.— Such statutes apply where natural barriers form part of the inclosure of the one making use of the fence (Gonzales v. Wasson, 51 Cal. 295), and it is occupied,[41] or improved.[42] Occupation means use such as to made it advantageous, for the purpose of such use, to fence; actual residence on the land is not required.[43] Land is under improvement when used to good purpose or turned to profitable account.[44]

(IV) Division of Partition Fences — (A) In General. Statutes as to partition fences generally provide that the portions which adjoining landowners shall construct and maintain shall be assigned to them by officials known as fence-viewers, upon application made by one of such owners when they cannot agree.[45]

(B) Redivision. If the land of one adjoining owner is sold in different parcels after a division of a partition fence, either by agreement or under the statute, so that new coterminous proprietors are introduced, each one extending over a part only of the line so divided, a new adjustment and division becomes necessary.[46] Where, after a fence between adjoining landowners has been divided throughout the whole length by fence-viewers, one of the owners lays a part of the land on the line in common and is thereby relieved from further contribution to maintain the fence there, the other owner will be entitled to a new division of the rest of the fence.[47]

(V) Contribution to Cost of Partition Fences — (A) In General. Such statutes also generally provide that where one adjacent owner does not construct or maintain his portion of a partition fence, the other adjacent owner may construct all of it or make all necessary repairs, and may recover from the defaulting not necessary that the fences forming such inclosure should be "lawful" fences (Meade v. Watson, 67 Cal. 591, 8 Pac. 311; Boenig v. Hornberg, 24 Minn. 307).

Equality of division.— Under a statute requiring each owner to make equal portions of a partition fence, it is not necessary that the whole portion of each should be contiguous. Equality is best promoted by assigning to each owner a portion of the fence which is nearer to his residence and less difficult, together with a portion also of the more remote and more difficult. Prescott v. Mudgett, 13 Me. 423. Under some statutes each owner is not required to build one half the fence, but each must build a portion that is just and equal with reference to the cost of construction and maintenance. See Titman v. Smith, 61 N. J. L. 191, 38 Atl. 810; People v. Dewey, 1 Hun (N. Y.) 529.

Partial division.— It is not necessary to assign the whole of a fence between adjacent owners; a division of a part will be legal. Prescott v. Mudgett, 13 Me. 423; Alger v. Pool, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 450. But see Castner v. Riegel, 54 N. J. L. 498, 24 Atl. 484.

owner the value of his proper share of such construction or maintenance, the sufficiency of such fence or of the repairs to it, and the value thereof, being determined by fence-viewers.[48]

(B) Amount of Recovery. It has been held that where the value of a fence as appraised by viewers is recoverable, "the question which it is their duty to determine, is not what the materials are worth for any other purpose, and not, necessarily, what the materials and labor cost, but what, in the condition in which they find it, is its value as a fence. This may or may not equal the cost, depending, among other things, upon what economy was used in its construction, the suitablenesss of the materials, the character of the work, and whether, by reason of decay or other cause, it has deteriorated in value."[49] Half the value of a fence may be recovered, although it is a better or more expensive one than would have satisfied the requirements of the statute;[50] but one who builds or repairs a fence must act reasonably, and has no right to be extravagant either in materials or work.[51] In some jurisdictions, by statute, a landowner who builds such part of a fence or makes such repairs as the adjoining owner should have built or made may recover from the owner who is in default double the expense or value of his portion of the fence or repairs.[52] Such statutes being penal as well as remedial are strictly construed, and will not be extended to cases not clearly within their provisions;[53] and all proceedings prescribed by such statutes must be strictly followed.[54]

(C) Lien For Cost of Construction or Repair. It is sometimes provided by statute that the expenses of building or repairing a fence shall be a lien on the land of the owner who is in default.[55]

(D) Action to Enforce—(1) NATURE AND FORM. An action brought under a statute to recover double the expense of building or repairing the portion of a defaulting owner is legal in its nature and triable by jury.[56] An action on the case is the proper one for this purpose,[57] and assumpsit will not lie;[58] but where a custom exists,[59] or there is an agreement[60] to pay half of such expense, assumpsit will lie.

(2) PREREQUISITES TO ACTION — (a) NECESSITY OF APPLICATION TO VIEWERS. Where the statute makes fence-viewers a special tribunal for the adjudication of the rights and the settlement of controversies of adjoining landowners, respecting the erection and maintenance of partition fences, no action will lie in the courts for that purpose until fence-viewers have been applied to and acted in the premises;[61] but where the statute makes no provision for fence-viewers, an appraisal by them is not necessary to entitle one to maintain an action for the recovery of the expense of building or repairing a partition fence, and such expense may be proved by witnesses who know or can judge what it was.[62] The statutory remedy of applying to fence-viewers does not apply when the obligation to maintain a division fence rests upon a deed[63] or upon agreement.[64]

(b) NECESSITY OF DEMAND. Before bringing an action against the defaulting owner, a demand for the amount awarded by the fence-viewers must be made.[65]

(3) WHEN ACTION ACCRUES. An action founded upon the award of fence-viewers does not accrue until such award is made.[66] Under a statute providing for recovery unless the cost be paid within "one month after demand," an action commenced before the expiration of a month after demand for payment is prematurely brought.[67]

(VI) FENCE-VIEWERS — (A) In General. Partition fence statutes generally provide for fence-viewers[68] whose duties, as has been previously stated, are to assign to adjoining owners their due portions of such fences for erection or

Presumption of authority. — It has been held that fence-viewers are quasi-public offi-

maintenance,[69] and to determine the sufficiency and value of such fences when contribution proceedings are brought by one owner against the other.[70]

(B) Powers. The powers of viewers are limited strictly to those given by statute, and when they exceed those limits their determinations are void.[71] They have no power to require one owner to build a part of the portion of the fence assigned to the other;[72] to apportion fences which are not for any reason subject to apportionment, and they cannot conclude the parties by determining a fence to be a partition fence when in fact it is not;[73] to make an assignment when a previous assignment has been made;[74] or when an obligation to maintain has arisen through prescription;[75] or when a written agreement has been made and recorded under a statute providing that such a partition shall be forever binding on the parties, assigns, and successive owners and occupants.[76] Under a power to assign portions of a hedge for maintainance they cannot require each party to trim his own side for the whole distance.[77] Where they have power to fix the value of a fence, they have no power to determine whether such fence has been paid for, in whole or in part, and have no control over the sum to be paid.[78] They have no authority to settle the rights of different claimants of land,[79] nor to establish boundary lines;[80] but they are sometimes authorized by cers, and that their having acted officially is prima facie evidence of their appointment and qualification. Hollister v. Hollister, 35 Conn. 241. And where persons act as fence-viewers without objection on the part of landowners who were present or represented at the hearing, a finding that they are fence-viewers de facto at least is justified, although no evidence of their appointment is introduced. statute to designate the line upon which a partition fence is to be built.[81] The powers of viewers are also limited by the complaint or application under which they proceed.[82] When selected by the parties upon notice, the scope of their powers is determined by such notice.[83]

(c) Notice of Proceedings. Persons whose rights will be affected by the proceedings of fence-viewers must have notice of the time and place of such proceedings,[84] and this is true, although notice is not expressly provided for by statute;[85] but a party appearing and not objecting to want of notice waives it.[86] Notice in writing not being prescribed, oral notice is sufficient;[87] but a written notice must be given when it is prescribed by the statute.[88] No period being designated, the time of notice must be "reasonable," and merely time enough to enable one to get to the meeting is not sufficient, although a short time would ordinarily suffice.[89] Such notice must be sufficiently definite to inform the party as to the time and place and the fences to be passed upon.[90] Although several matters are to be passed upon by fence-viewers, one notice is sufficient,[91] but it must embrace all the matters to be considered, or it will be insufficient as to those omitted.[92]

(d) Decision or Order — (1) Form and Contents — (a) In General. It is sometimes required that the decision of fence-viewers shall be reduced to writing and a copy given to each party,[93] that it shall be sworn to[94] and recorded.[95]

Technical objections to the form of an award are not favored.[96] An award is void which does not declare the fence built to be sufficient,[97] or which, under a statute requiring an assessment of the "expense" of building a fence, finds its value.[98] An award is not void for failing to specify whether the value fixed is the actual or double value, if it appears from the whole award which is meant.[99] When the dispute is as to the value of the fence and the proportion thereof which one party should pay to the other, the award should specify such sum.[1] An order is not vitiated because of mere surplusage in its contents;[2] and it has been held that omissions in an award may be supplied by oral testimony.[3]

(b) Order or Notice to Build or Repair.[4] An order or notice to build or repair a partition fence should fix the time for compliance[5] definitely.[6] A notice to repair need not specify the particulars in which the fence is deficient;[7] and it is sufficient, although it does not specify the portion of the fence to be repaired.[8] Reasonable certainty is all that is required in the description of a fence in such notice.[9]

(2) Conclusiveness. The decision of fence-viewers upon questions within their jurisdiction is conclusive,[10] unless impeached for fraud or mistake.[11] Thus the determination of the viewers as to the amount of fence to be built and maintained,[12] or as to the sufficiency of a fence already built,[13] is conclusive. And a decision against the establishment of a fence on the ground that the land is uninclosed is binding upon the parties until it is otherwise determined on a new application;[14] but a party being bound by a covenant in a deed to maintain the whole of a fence, an apportionment by viewers does not conclude the other party, who will not be estopped from asserting such obligation although he assented to the apportionment.[15] It has been decided that the award of fence-viewers is only prima facie evidence as to the amount of contribution to be made by one adjoining owner to another who has erected the whole fence.[16]

(3) Appealability. The right to appeal from the decision of fence-viewers is sometimes expressly provided by statute.[17] Whether a landowner was assessed by fence-viewers with the cost of a more expensive fence than the law required must be decided on appeal and not on certiorari to review their proceedings.[18] Under a statute authorizing appeals in "qui tam and other actions for forfeitures to give notice, when the party is otherwise notified recording is not necessary.

and penalties," appeal lies from the action of justices of the peace acting as fence-viewers;[19] and where a statute provides for the entry of judgment by a justice of the peace ex parte on a fence-viewers' award if it is not paid within a certain time, an appeal lies from such judgment as from other judgments of such courts, the proceedings being an "action" within the code and a judicial rather than a ministerial act.[20]

(E) Fees. The amount of the fees of fence-viewers and the persons by whom they are paid are matters regulated by statute.[21]

2. How Duty Terminated. When a statutory method of terminating the obligation as to partition fences is prescribed, the obligation continues until such method has been complied with.[22] One at whose solicitation a division fence was apportioned after the adoption of a herd law, and who with the adjoining owner acquiesced in the apportionment and erected a fence accordingly, cannot afterward of his own motion relieve himself of the obligation to keep his portion of the fence in repair.[23] One of two adjoining landowners who sets his fence in his own land and throws open to the public the land between his line and the fence is thus relieved from assisting to maintain a partition fence.[24]

3. Location of Partition Fences. Although fences on the line between adjacent owners are generally contemplated by statutes providing for partition fences,[25] yet to constitute a partition fence it is not necessary that it be located precisely on the true line;[26] but substantial compliance with the rule that a partition fence must be located on the line between adjoining landowners would seem to be necessary in the absence of an express or implied agreement to locate it elsewhere.[27] Where landowners expressly agree as to the location of a partition fence,[28] or acquiesce in its location for a long period,[29] or treat a fence as being on the line,[30] the fact that it is not on the line is immaterial. Where a partition fence which was not upon the true line is rebuilt, it may be correctly located.[31] As the line between adjacent landowners is imaginary, existing only in theory,[32] and as every species of fence must take some land and cannot stand on a mathematical line,[33] a reasonable amount of land may be used for the erection of a partition fence, one half of such fence being placed on the land of each of the adjacent owners.[34] If more than half of such a fence is built upon the land of one of the adjacent owners, without his consent, he is entitled to relief.[35] The occupation by a landowner of the requisite land of his neighbor for the erection of a partition fence is not adverse but permissive.[36] The rule which permits partition fences to be placed equally on the land of each adjoining owner does not apply to fences meeting on the front of adjoining premises. Such fences are required to terminate at the division line.[37]

fact that a fence was not of the kind or dimensions prescribed by statute will not defeat an action for its wilful destruction.[39] Trover lies against a person who removes a quantity of fence from the land of its owner, although such person was acting at the time under the direction of town officers and mistakenly supposed the fence to be upon the land of the town.[40] Persons who throw down or leave open fences are sometimes, by statute, made liable to a penalty recoverable in a civil action.[41]

2. Rights and Liabilities of Adjacent Owners — a. In General. If a fence separating the lands of adjoining owners is built by one of them entirely on his own land it belongs to him and he has a right to remove it.[42] A fence erected on the line between the lands of adjoining owners,[43] or recognized by them as being on the line, although not so in fact,[44] generally belongs to them as tenants in common. Either may repair it and may lawfully enter on the land of the other for that purpose,[45] but if either destroys or removes it he is liable to the other tenant.[46]

b. Statutory Provisions. In some jurisdictions there are statutes which prohibit the removal of partition fences, unless notice of intention to remove has been given by one owner adjacent to the other, at a prescribed time in advance of the the premises of a citizen in conducting the work has a mere license, and, if he is under the necessity of taking down a fence in passing and repassing, he must keep the fence in as good condition as before he pulled it down, and a failure will render him a trespasser ab initio and liable accordingly. Remedies of cotenant. — "Whenever one tenant in common does an unlawful act, whereby his co-tenant is injured, the law affords an appropriate remedy; he may bring removal.[47] The fact that one adjacent owner has notified the other that he intends to remove will not justify the other in removing his part without notice; it is only where the party making the removal has given the notice that the statute affords any protection to him.[48] The effect of removing a partition fence upon notice is to remit the parties to their common-law rights and duties.[49] Statutes sometimes provide that a landowner who desires to let his land lie open shall not remove his part of a partition fence if the adjoining owner pays him for it.[50]

3. RIGHT TO REMOVE FENCES PLACED BY MISTAKE. If one of two adjoining landowners, with the knowledge of the other, erects a division or a partition fence which is by mistake placed upon the land of the latter, and the former upon discovering his mistake removes the fence, the latter cannot recover its value,[51] nor is the former liable to an action of trespass for such removal.[52] A statute giving the right to remove fences placed by mistake on the lands of other persons has been held to apply only to natural persons, and to give no right to remove fences erected by mistake on lands of the state or of the United States.[53]

4. EVIDENCE. In an action for damages for the removal of a fence without notice judgment for half the value of the fence is not supported by evidence of trover or trespass against his co-tenant, when the thing in common is destroyed, or the conversion is equivalent to an exclusion of the right of the tenant suing. The removal of the fence from the original dividing line, on the land of the defendant, and its appropriation to his exclusive use, was tantamount to the destruction of the thing in common." Written notice is sometimes expressly required by statute (Brown v. Brown, 23 Ill. App. 90; Deimel v. Obert, 20 Ill. App. 557; Grief v. Kahn, 87 Ky. 17, 7 S. W. 159, 10 Ky. L. Rep. 87), but in the absence of such provision notice by parol is sufficient (Holladay v. Marsh, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 142, 20 Am. Dec. 678).

In Texas, by statute, it is "unlawful for any person who is a joint owner of any separating or dividing fence or who is in any manner interested in any fence attached to or connected with any fence owned or controlled by any other person to remove the same" without first giving six months' notice. See Long v. Cude, 75 Tex. 225, 12 S. W. 827, (Civ. App. 1894) 26 S. W. 1000; St. Louis Cattle Co. v. Gholson, (Civ. App. 1895) 30 S. W. 269; Jamison v. State, 27 Tex. App. 442, 11 S. W. 483.

Fences not on the boundary line.— In Missouri a fence not built upon the boundary line between adjoining proprietors is not a division fence within the meaning of the statute, and may be removed by its owner without giving the statutory notice. Sims v. Field, 74 Mo. 139 [explaining Jeffries v. Burgin, 57 Mo. 327]. Under the Kentucky statute, however, it seems that even though a fence is entirely on the land of one of the adjacent owners, it cannot be removed unless the statutory notice is given, if it is treated as a partition fence. Grief v. Kahn, 87 Ky. 17, 7 S. W. 159, 10 Ky. L. Rep. 87.

Manner of pleading notice.— Where notice of a removal of a partition fence is alleged, the pleading should show that the notice was given in due time and to a proper person; an averment that reasonable notice was given is insufficient. statements of defendant that he owned only one half of it, when the otherwise uncontradicted evidence shows that it was built wholly by defendant and that plaintiff's grantor was merely permitted to connect with it.[54] Under a statute imposing a penalty against one who shall voluntarily throw down or open any fence or gate and leave the same open it is not sufficient to prove merely that defendant threw down a fence, but evidence must be introduced to show that he left it down.[55] In an action growing out of the removal of a fence, when the ownership of the land on which the fence was situated is not in issue, evidence offered to show title to the land is properly rejected.[56] A witness may testify that a fence for the removal of which an action is brought was a partition fence, although the evidence does not show that it was a statutory partition fence, if he knows the fact that it was erected by agreement between the parties who owned the land, and the statement is not objectionable as a conclusion of law.[57]

5. Damages. One who removes or destroys the fence of another is liable to respond in damages for any loss which is the natural or proximate consequence of his act;[58] and where an adjacent owner removes a partition fence without notice to[59] or the consent[60] of the other adjacent owner, when such notice or consent is required by statute, the measure of damages is the same. Where one who has given the proper notice commences the removal of a partition fence, one day prior to the time authorized by statute, he is liable for nominal damages only, unless it is shown that actual loss has been sustained.[61] Punitive damages may be awarded against one landowner for wrongfully and forcibly removing a partition fence against the protest of the adjacent owner;[62] but when one's good faith in believing his land invaded by a fence is not impugned, he should not suffer punitive damages for tearing it down.[63]

B. Criminal Liability — 1. In General. Criminal liability for acts done or omitted as to fences, being prescribed by statutory enactments containing varying provisions, whether or not a prosecution can be sustained depends upon the terms of the particular statute under which it is brought.[64] As a general rule to be criminally liable for removing or destroying a fence one must have acted unlawfully and wilfully and committed some trespass;[65] if the purpose is legiti-mate and no harm is done the offense is not committed.[66] The inquiry as to the possession of the fence should ordinarily be limited to the actual peaceable possession, and not extended to the right of possession.[67] One removing a fence under a bona fide claim of right does not commit the offense of "maliciously or wantonly," "maliciously or voluntarily," or "knowingly and wilfully" breaking down the fence of another;[68] but where one's belief in his right is due to negligence in not ascertaining the fact of ownership of the land on which a fence is located he is held guilty.[69] A conviction for unlawfully, wilfully, and knowingly fencing the land of another will not be sustained where it appears that defendant has all along made claim to that portion of the land upon which the fence was erected, and it also appears that his vendors made a similar claim.[70] Under some statutes, in order to establish criminal liability, it must be shown that the fence constituted an inclosure;[71] but a statute being merely against maliciously or negligently throwing down a fence, it is not necessary that the fence form a part of an inclosure.[72] In criminal prosecutions for injuries to or acts done in connection with fences, it is immaterial whether or not the fence is a lawful one, that is, of such dimensions as would entitle the owner to bring a civil action for a trespass by the cattle of another.[73]

as would be required in an indictment,[76] yet the complaint must state the essential elements of the offense charged.[77] Under a statute making it an offense to destroy or injure any fence or to injure any growing crops, an indictment alleging that defendant removed a fence and injured the growing crops it inclosed charges but a single offense.[78] An action against unlawfully making or permitting a fence to remain about the lands of another must be prosecuted in the name of the state, although half the fine goes to the informer;[79] and a criminal prosecution and a civil action to recover a penalty cannot be joined where one statute imposes treble damages for the benefit of the injured party for throwing down a fence and another makes such act a misdemeanor.[80]

3. Defenses — a. In General. A trespass being a necessary element of such offenses, any fact may be shown in defense, in general, which might be shown by defendant in an action of trespass.[81] It is no defense that defendant removed the fence in order to induce a civil suit to try title,[82] or that he was acting as agent of another and by his direction.[83] One who while lawfully working a public road takes down a fence built by a landowner across such road is not guilty under the Texas statute which makes one criminally liable for removing a fence without the consent of the owner.[84] One cannot be convicted of tearing down a fence when his act is the pulling up of the posts on which no wire is strung, these not constituting a fence.[85]

b. Ownership or Possession. It has been decided that a statute against maliciously or negligently tearing down the fence of another is not violated by a person who tears down a partition fence, or one of which he is a joint owner.[86] One in actual possession of premises inclosed by a fence, or who alone or with another owns a fence, cannot be convicted of "unlawfully injuring the fence of another."[87] Generally, where the fence is removed on defendant's own land, he is not guilty of a criminal offense.[88] Where the actual possession is in the prosecutor, defendant cannot exculpate himself by showing title to the land upon which the fence was situated.[89] Where a fence is erected by one person upon the lands of another, it ordinarily becomes the property of the latter, who does not generally violate criminal fence statutes by removing it.[90] Ownership of the land, however, does not necessarily determine the ownership of the fence, which is the controlling question, and this being determined by agreement, it is immaterial on whose land the fence is located.[91]

4. Evidence. One who is prosecuted for breaking a fence may introduce a deed made to him for the property upon which the fence was located as tending to show rightful possession.[92] Although a fence is realty, its ownership, so far as is necessary to be proved, may be proved by parol.[93] On the question of ownership defendant cannot put in evidence a survey not made in conformity to statutory provisions and not shown to have been by the consent of the adjacent owner.[94] It may be shown in a prosecution for moving a division fence that in a prior civil suit between defendant and the prosecuting witness, a judgment was rendered establishing the boundary where the fence was located.[95] In a prosecution for destroying a wire fence, it is competent to prove declarations going to show motive, where the accused made such declarations, or where they were made in his presence and hearing and received either his active or tacit consent.[96] In a prosecution for breaking down a fence, when the owner cannot be had before the court, it is competent to prove his want of consent by circumstances.[97] In such a prosecution notices published in a newspaper purporting to be signed by the owners of the land prohibiting trespassing thereon are inadmissible to show want of consent of one of the owners in the absence of evidence that he published them, or authorized their publication.[98] Ownership in another than defendant is not sustained by testimony of the prosecuting witness that the fence was his and on his land, but that he knew nothing about the line between him and defendant, when defendant and others testified that the fence was on defendant's land and that they knew the line.[99] A prosecution for throwing down and leaving open a fence is not supported by evidence of throwing down and going across the adjacent premises; it must affirmatively appear that the fence was left down.[1]

5. Instructions and Questions For Court and Jury. Others having been engaged with defendant in the commission of the act constituting the offense, it is not error to charge that defendant is guilty if he wilfully committed the act either alone or in concert with others,[2] and an instruction that defendant was not guilty if he unintentionally committed the act is properly refused in the absence of evidence to support such charge.[3] The question of the sufficiency of a watercourse to serve as a fence being material, it was held to be a question of law for the court, the jury deciding the facts.[4]

V. LIABILITY FOR INJURIES.

A. Caused by Improperly Constructed Fences — 1. To Persons. The owner of a partition fence is not liable for a personal injury caused by its fall, if he uses the care of a prudent man in maintaining it.[5] If, as between two adjoining owners, the duty of maintaining a partition fence rests exclusively upon one of them, the other owner is not liable to a third person for a personal injury caused by its fall.[6] A landowner owes no duty to persons trespassing upon his lands, in the construction of fencing not along public highways, and there can be no negligence in the construction of such fencing.[7] Where a house stands on a lot at the corner of two streets, but at some distance from both of them, a barbed wire fence running diagonally across such lot from the house to the corner of such streets is not maintained along a sidewalk, within the statute prohibiting such maintenance, and the owner of such lot is not liable to a person who leaves the sidewalk in the dark and is injured by running into such fence.[8]

2. To Live Stock — a. In General. One who builds or maintains a fence must see that it is in a reasonably safe condition and unlikely to injure live stock rightfully coming in contact with it, and for all injuries caused by a failure in this respect he is liable to respond in damages.[9]

b. By Barbed Wire Fences. The act of a landowner in erecting a barbed wire fence does not in itself render him liable to one whose live stock sustains injuries therefrom;[10] but one negligently constructing or maintaining such a fence and thereby causing injury to stock lawfully at large or on the adjacent lands is liable therefor;[11] and if there is gross negligence, or entire want of care in its construction, punitory damages are recoverable.[12] When such a fence is so negligently constructed as to constitute a trap for passing live stock, liability exists for injuries sustained by them, even though it is constructed entirely upon defendant's land and the stock are trespassing when injured.[13] One who in constructing a division fence of barbed wire leaves the wire on the ground without protection is liable to respond in damages to the adjoining owner whose stock is injured by it.[14]

c. Contributory Negligence. One whose negligence contributed to the injury of his live stock cannot recover therefor;[15] but it is not contributory negligence for one to turn his stock loose in his own field, or in a public highway, with knowledge that a fence constructed by another partly around such field or along such highway is improperly and negligently constructed, as he cannot be deprived of the use of his own premises or the public highway by another's violation of duty.[16]

B. Caused by Failure to Erect or Maintain Fences One whose duty it is to build or maintain a fence is as a general rule liable for all injuries which may be fairly said to be the legal and natural consequence of his neglect to do so.[17] Where the injury is caused by defect in a partition fence, it must be shown that the injury resulted from a defect in that portion of the fence which it is the duty of defendant to maintain;[18] but the fact that the portion of the fence which it is the duty of the adjoining landowner to maintain is defective also does not relieve from liability.[19] One who fails to maintain his portion of a partition fence properly is without redress for injuries occasioned by his neighbor's stock breaking through such portion, as the loss is occasioned by his own negligence.[20]

When election unnecessary.— It has been decided in Georgia that when the lines of a militia district are changed, and territory added to such district, the added territory

tive enactment.[23] The official or officials under whose direction such elections are to be held and by whom the result is to be ascertained and declared are usually designated by statute.[24] Such statutes generally provide the qualifications of the persons who may vote or sign the petition.[25] Such an election is not void for mere irregularities;[26] but an election held on any other date than that provided by statute is necessarily void.[27]

B. Taxation. The legislature may provide for levying a tax to defray the cost of the fence erected around such a district.[28] A tax will not be defeated for mere irregularities which can be corrected,[29] or for failure to follow provisions which are directory merely.[30] But the assessment must conform to the requirements of the act, or it is altogether unauthorized.[31]

I. DEFINITION AND NATURE.

A ferry is a liberty to have a boat upon a river for the transportation of men, horses, and carriages with their contents, for a reasonable toll. The term is also used to designate the place where such liberty is exercised.[1] In the latter sense a ferry is a public highway, being a continuation of the highway with which it connects,[2] and the limits of the ferry proper are the high-water mark at either terminus.[3] A distinction is also made between private ferries, which riparian owners may under certain restrictions establish for their own convenience, and public ferries which are franchises that cannot be exercised without the consent of the state and must be based upon grant, license, or prescription.[4] There is nothing in the nature of a ferry which requires that it should be operated from but one place on one shore to a single point on the opposite shore;[5] nor is there any particular limit to the distance over which it may be operated.[6] A ferry may consist of the right to transport from one shore only, or from one shore to the middle of the stream.[7]

II. ESTABLISHMENT AND MAINTENANCE.

A. Right to Establish Private Ferries. A riparian owner may, without legislative authority, establish a ferry for his own use, and may occasionally carry others and receive compensation therefor, provided it is not done as a regular business;[8] but he has no right to receive regular compensation either directly or indirectly, or to operate the ferry for the accommodation of any considerable portion of the general public.[9]

B. Right to Establish Public Ferries — 1. NECESSITY FOR LEGISLATIVE AUTHORITY. The right to establish and maintain a public ferry is a franchise which cannot be exercised without the consent of the state, and no person, although he may own the land on both sides of a stream, may establish such a ferry unless authorized to do so by the proper authority.[10]

2. REMEDIES FOR UNLAWFUL ESTABLISHMENT. If a public ferry be established without authority, the state has a remedy by quo warranto,[11] and any prior grantee whose rights are infringed by action.[12] The statutes in many jurisdictions make the unauthorized establishment of a ferry a misdemeanor,[13] or provide a penalty to be recovered by persons operating authorized ferries whose rights are infringed.[14]

C. Power to Grant Franchise — 1. In General. In England the power of granting ferry franchises emanates from the crown.[15] In Canada the right is vested in the provinces, except as to ferries between a province and any British or foreign country or between two provinces, which are subjects of Dominion legislation.[16] In the United States ferries are established by legislative authority, which is exercised either directly by a special act or through some other competent authority under the provisions of a general law.[17] In the making of such general laws territorial legislatures have the same power as those of the states.[18] The power of establishing ferries is never exercised by the federal government, but lies within the scope of those undelegated powers which are reserved to the states respectively.[19]

2. Power to Impose Conditions. The state in granting a ferry franchise may impose such terms and conditions upon the right to enjoy it as may be necessary to its proper regulation.[20]

3. Delegation of Power to Inferior Bodies — a. To What Bodies Delegated. In most jurisdictions the power of establishing ferries has been delegated to certain courts, boards of commissioners, municipalities, or other bodies, which are authorized under general laws to issue licenses for this purpose.[21] The delegation of this authority to an inferior body does not prevent the legislature from exercising the same right,[22] and, when a ferry is established by a direct legislative grant, no further license from the inferior body is necessary.[23] The legislature has the same right in cases where the authority of the inferior body is conferred by a state constitution,[24] unless its power in this regard is expressly denied.[25]

b. Limitation of Authority of Inferior Body. An inferior body in establishing ferries must act in strict conformity with the law by which its powers are conferred, and when its authority is limited any act done in excess of such authority is void.[26]

c. Procedure to Acquire Franchise — (i) In General. The procedure for acquiring a ferry franchise from an inferior body varies according to the statutes in the different jurisdictions. A formal application should be made,[27] stating the location of the proposed ferry,[28] and the applicant's ownership of the land or other facts essential to his right to receive the franchise.[29] A notice of the application is usually required to be given, either publicly by posting notices,[30] or personally on certain persons,[31] so that any one entitled to contest the granting of the application may have an opportunity to do so. Any one whose vested rights may be interfered with may appear and contest the granting of the application.[32] The owner of a prior established ferry is under no obligation to appear and contest the application,[33] but if he does so and the proceedings are erroneous, his remedy is by appeal and not by injunction to restrain the other ferry.[34] The record of the proceedings must show that all the requirements of the statute have been complied with.[35] The grantee of the franchise is in some cases required to give bond.[36]

(ii) Sale or Lease to Highest Bidder. The statutes in some cases authorize the right of establishing ferries to be disposed of at public auction by a sale or lease to the highest bidder,[37] but the highest bidder is not entitled to exercise the franchise until he has complied with all the conditions imposed by the statute.[38]

d. Review of Action of Inferior Body.[39] An appeal will lie from the judgment of a county court or other inferior body in proceedings for the establishment of ferries.[40] The action of such bodies will always be reviewed where it involves any error in carrying out the provisions of the statutes;[41] but their discretion in determining whether the public convenience requires the establishment of a ferry, while it is not unlimited and may be reviewed,[42] will not be interfered with where it does not clearly appear to have been abused.[43]

4. Power to Establish Ferries on Boundary Waters. The states, and not the federal government, have the authority to establish ferries upon waters forming a boundary between the states,[44] or between a state and a foreign country.[45] The franchise of one state can confer no rights as to landing upon or ferrying from the other state,[46] but is valid as far as the jurisdiction of the state which grants the franchise extends, without any concurrent action on the part of the other state;[47] and as to ferrying from its own shore the franchise of either state may be made exclusive.[48] Where a stream separates two counties of the same state, the counties on each side have concurrent jurisdiction.[49]

D. Prescription. A ferry franchise may be acquired by prescription, in which case a grant from the state is presumed.[50] a ferry franchise should be granted to a single individual. It may be granted to several persons together,[51] or to a corporation,[52] or to the trustees of a town.[53] It is not necessary, except where the law expressly requires ownership,[54] that the grantee should own the land where the ferry is located.[55]

2. PREFERRED RIGHTS OF RIPARIAN OWNERS. The statutes in many jurisdictions give a preference to the person owning the land where the ferry is to be located.[56] These statutes do not give to the owner an absolute right to have a ferry established upon his land, but only make him a preferred claimant for the right whenever the proper authorities have decided that the establishment of a ferry is necessary.[57] If the landowner fails or refuses to avail himself of his right or is adjudged not to be a proper person to exercise the franchise, it may be granted to another;[58] but in such cases it is indispensable that before making the grant the owner of the land should be given notice of the application for the establishment of the proposed ferry.[59]

F. Nature of Franchise.[60] A ferry franchise is property and is entitled to the same protection as any other property.[61] It is private property within the constitutional provisions against taking or damaging private property for public use without just compensation.[62] It is classed as real property, an incorporeal hereditament,[63] and must be conveyed in the manner provided for conveyances of realty.[64] A legislative grant of a ferry franchise, when duly accepted, is a contract between the grantee and the state which cannot be impaired by subsequent legislation,[65] unless the grant is to a public or municipal corporation, in which case it has been held that the power of the legislature to regulate such corporations includes the power to repeal the grant.[66] It is also held that there is no contractual relation growing out of a license to operate a ferry acquired under a general law.[67]

G. Construction of Franchise. In the grant of a ferry franchise no set form of words is necessary,[68] and in construing such grants, in cases of ambiguity, a construction will be given which will make the grant effective rather than one which will entirely defeat it, if such a construction is within the reasonable meaning of the terms employed;[69] but as to the privileges conferred, ferry franchises have generally been held to fall within the rule of strict construction against the grantee and in favor of the government.[70]

H. Exclusiveness of Franchise — 1. In General. At common law a ferry franchise was in its nature exclusive of contiguous competition,[71] and this is certainly true as to competing ferries sought to be established without authority of law.[72] But as to other ferries established by authority of law, the rule is that a prior franchise will not be considered as exclusive unless it is expressly so provided, and the legislature or other proper authority may establish as many other ferries at or near the same place as the necessities of the public may require.[73] In any case the grant is always taken subject to the rights of the public upon navigable waters,[74] and subject to the right of the federal government to make such improvements in these waters as may be necessary in its regulation of interstate commerce.[75]

2. Power to Make Franchise Exclusive. There is no doubt that the legislature may, subject to the restrictions above mentioned, make the grant of a ferry franchise exclusive.[76] Where the right is granted by an inferior body under the provision of a general law, it is held in some jurisdictions that the grant may be made exclusive,[77] and in others, that such bodies cannot grant exclusive franchises unless expressly authorized to do so.[78]

3. Statutory Regulations. In the absence of statute there is no particular limit within which the keeper of a public ferry is secure against the establishment of another public ferry,[79] but in most cases the special act authorizing the establishment of the ferry, or a general law, provides a limit within which other ferries may not be established.[80] These laws, however, usually make an exception of cases where the public necessities demand other ferries, or in regard to certain localities or conditions, as in the case of ferries located at or near cities or towns or rendered necessary by the establishment of public highways.[81]

I. Infringement of Franchise — 1. What Is Infringement.[82] It is not an infringement for persons to use their own boats for crossing within the limits of a ferry franchise, or to occasionally carry others where no tolls are charged;[83] but any attempt to operate a private ferry within such limits for the accommodation of any considerable portion of the general public,[84] or to collect tolls by indirect means, is an infringement of the franchise of any duly authorized ferryman whose business is interfered with.[85] The use of vessels upon navigable waters for purposes of commerce is not an infringement,[86] unless they are used with the regularity and purpose of ferry trips in competition with a lawfully established ferry.[87] The operation of an unauthorized ferry so as to injure a ferry regularly established is an infringement whether the latter's franchise is exclusive or not.[88] A railroad authorized to operate a ferry as a connecting link

2. REMEDIES FOR INFRINGEMENT — a. Injunction[91] — (I) GROUNDS OF EQUITY JURISDICTION. Injunction is a proper remedy to protect a party in the enjoyment of a ferry franchise. The equity jurisdiction rests upon the ground of its necessity to avoid a multiplicity of suits and to afford adequate protection to plaintiff's property in his franchise.[92]

(II) RIGHT TO MAINTAIN SUIT. A suit for injunction cannot be maintained by one who has not complied with the requirements of the law authorizing him to operate his own ferry,[93] or who has so grossly neglected his duty as to make the establishment of another ferry a public necessity.[94] Nor will injunction lie where the injury complained of is not an invasion of plaintiff's franchise, but a mere trespass upon his property.[95]

(III) PLEADING. The bill must allege a compliance with the conditions authorizing plaintiff to operate his ferry,[96] and that he has established his ferry and is offering his services to the public,[97] and that defendant either did not have a license or that he transported passengers for pay.[98] The bill must also allege facts showing that plaintiff's remedy at law is inadequate.[99]

b. Actions For Damages — (I) PARTIES.[1] Where a license for operating a ferry is issued to two persons jointly they may maintain a joint action for damages for infringement.[2]

ized to operate his ferry and that defendant collected tolls without lawful authority,[4] or operated the ferry other than for his personal use.[5] It is not necessary to allege ownership of the soil,[6] nor that plaintiff kept sufficient boats and ferrymen.[7] In an action by a lessee, it must be alleged that the lessor was owner of the franchise and had the right to lease it to plaintiff.[8]

(III) Proof. It is sufficient for plaintiff to prove possession and enjoyment of the ferry to entitle him to recover.[9]

(IV) Defenses. It is no defense to an action for damages that plaintiff has neglected to operate his ferry, or failed to furnish suitable accommodations.[10] Where defendant's ferry is duly authorized by a competent tribunal his grant is, until set aside by a competent authority, a good defense to an action for damages.[11]

(V) Damages.[12] The measure of damages for the infringement of a ferry franchise is the amount of tolls lost to the owners by diminution in the number of customers using the ferry,[13] unless defendant has used other means than fair competition in operating his ferry.[14] No recovery can be had for any time during which it is not shown that plaintiff had a license.[15]

J. Transfer of Franchise — 1. K. Termination of Franchise[28]— 1. Right to Franchise, How Lost. The right to exercise a ferry franchise may be lost by non-user,[29] or by failure to comply with the conditions upon which it was granted,[30] or to renew the bond as required by statute,[31] or by expiration of the franchise.[32] A ferry license is not vacated, nor the franchise lost, by the death of the grantee,[33] except in jurisdictions where the franchise is held to be a personal trust imposed upon the grantee alone.[34]

2. Enforcement of Forfeiture. The state alone can insist upon the forfeiture of a ferry franchise,[35] and if for any cause the owner of the franchise subjects his right to forfeiture, the fact must be ascertained by an appropriate judicial proceeding instituted for that purpose;[36] it cannot be determined in a collateral proceeding.[37]

L. Renewal of Franchise. The statutes of some states make the former keeper of a ferry a preferred claimant for the right to a renewal when the original franchise has expired,[38] and, in jurisdictions where riparian owners are preferred claimants for the franchise in the first instance, they are entitled to the same preference as to a renewal.[39] The granting of a renewal is discretionary with the authorities having power to make the grant, and if they deem it for the public good they may refuse a renewal and discontinue the ferry.[40]

M. Right to Collect Tolls.[41] The grant of a ferry franchise implies in its very nature the taking of tolls by the grantee,[42] and the right to collect the same exists as long as the right or duty of operating the ferry continues.[43] A ferryman can collect no greater toll than is allowed by statute,[44] and in some jurisdictions is liable to prosecution and fine for charging a greater rate.[45] Where a passenger is obliged to pay a greater rate than that allowed by law, the excess, if not voluntarily paid, may be recovered.[46]

N. Right to Land and Embark. A riparian proprietor operating a private ferry from his own land has no right to land upon the property of the opposite owner without the latter's permission;[47] nor can he, for a private ferry, so use a public highway without the consent of the owner of the land through which the highway runs.[48] As to the right of landing and embarking in the case of public ferries whose termini are public highways, the decisions are conflicting. The grant of the franchise carries with it whatever rights the public then has or may afterward acquire to the use of the highway for this purpose;[49] and where the landowner retains the fee and the public has only an easement for passage, it is held in some cases that this right of way includes the right to use the highway for landing and embarking,[50] while others hold that this is not so much a public use as a use by the holder of the ferry franchise for his own gain, and that it is an additional burden upon the land for which compensation must be made to the owner.[51] A grant of the right of landing and embarking may be presumed from usage,[52] and it has been held that, where a riparian owner who would be a preferred claimant for the franchise fails to apply for it, he waives the right to object to this use of his land by the person to whom the franchise is granted.[53]

B. Extent of Power to Regulate and Control. The state may, through the proper authorities, require the payment of a license-fee,[58] fix the rates of ferriage,[59] the hours during which the ferry shall be operated, and the number and frequency of trips,[60] and make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to insure that the franchise shall not be abused to the serious detriment or inconvenience of the public.[61]

The power given to a city to regulate rates of toll implies that the rates fixed shall be reasonable. Rohn v. Beardstown, 32 Ill. App. 407.

In North Carolina the rates of toll are fixed by the county commissioners, and it is error for the superior court to fix such rates in the first instance on an appeal in proceedings before the county commissioners for the establishment of the ferry. Robinson v. Lamb, 126 N. C. 492, 36 S. E. 29.

The board of freeholders under the New Jersey "act concerning ferries" may fix the rates when one terminus is within their county, even though the other terminus is out of the state. State v. Hudson County, 23 N. J. L. 206.

Article 4797 classifies the persons entitled to license and operate a ferry, while article 4798 makes it unlawful for an unlicensed person to operate a ferry for compensation. Article 4799 provides that, whenever a watercourse forms a part of the boundary line of a state, if any charge shall be assessed by the adjoining state for the privilege of a ferry landing, the same charge may be assessed by the commissioners' court for a like privilege of landing in this state. It was held that articles 4797 and 4798 referred to ferries wholly in the state, and the commissioners' court had no authority under them to require license from an interstate ferry. IV. OPERATION.

A. Duties and Liabilities in General[62] — 1. Liability as Common Carrier — a. Of Passengers — (I) In General. A ferryman is a common carrier of passengers.[63] Like other common carriers the ferryman is not an insurer of the passenger's safety, but is required to exercise the highest degree of care, skill, and foresight to protect him from injury.[64] As soon as a ferryman signifies his assent or readiness to receive the passenger, he becomes liable for his safe transit and delivery.[65]

(II) Liability For Wrongful Expulsion. A ferryman has no right to expel a passenger from a ferry-boat for violating a rule of the company without first informing the passenger of the existence of the rule, nor has he any right to touch the person of the passenger without first notifying him that unless he leaves the boat such extreme measures will be resorted to.[66]

(III) Effect of Passenger's Contributory Negligence. Where the passenger's own negligence has contributed to the injury complained of, he cannot recover against the ferryman.[67]

b. Of Goods — (I) In General. A ferryman is a common carrier of goods,[68] and like other common carriers is an insurer of the property committed to his care and is responsible for all injuries to it, except such as may be caused by the act of God or a public enemy.[69] The ferryman's liability as a common carrier is

It is not, as a matter of law, contributory negligence for a passenger to leave the cabin and stand on the deck between the cabin and the end of the boat (Peverly v. Boston, 136 Mass. 366, 49 Am. Rep. 37), or to stand near a stairway, or go down the stairway without taking hold of the railing (Bartlett v. New York, etc., Transp. Co., 57 N. Y. Super. Ct. 348, 8 N. Y. Suppl. 309), or to rise from his seat before the boat is safely moored (Snelling v. Brooklyn, etc., Ferry Co., 13 N. Y. not relieved or lessened by the fact that the goods are usually accompanied by the owner.[70] His responsibility in regard to animals is the same as in the case of other property,[71] except where the loss or injury is due to the animals' own restiveness or viciousness of temper.[72]

(II) Effect of Owner's Custody and Control. There is a diversity of opinion as to the liability of a ferryman for property which a passenger takes with him upon a ferry-boat for transportation and does not deliver into the custody of the ferryman, but retains under his own control and management. It has been held that in such a case the owner acts, in the control of his property, solely as the agent of the ferryman, whose responsibility is that of a common carrier insuring the safety of the property.[73] On the other hand it has been held that the liability of a ferryman in such cases is more restricted.[74]

2. Liability on Statutory Bond. In some jurisdictions keepers of public ferries are required to give bonds for the faithful performance of their duties as such, on which actions may be brought by or for the benefit of persons damaged by the failure of such ferrymen to comply with the conditions of their bonds.[75]

3. Duty to Operate Ferry. The grant of a ferry franchise imposes upon the grantee the duty of operating the ferry, and his failure to do so is a sufficient ground for the forfeiture of his franchise,[76] and is a bar to his right to maintain a bill to enjoin the operation of a rival ferry.[77]

4. Duty to Transport. It is the duty of a public ferryman to transport passengers at all reasonable hours and without unnecessary delay,[78] and any person who is refused transportation or unreasonably delayed may maintain an action for the damages sustained.[79] The statutes in some states provide a penalty to be recovered in such cases by the injured party.[80]

5. Duties as to Safety of Passengers and Property — a. Sufficiency and Safety of Boats. A ferryman must provide a sufficient boat or boats to accom-

74. Thus he has been held to be liable for any loss or injury resulting directly from his failure to provide safe and suitable boats and appliances, or his failure to exercise proper care and skill in managing them, but the passenger who retains control of his property must use due care to protect it from injury, and if his own negligence in this regard contributes to the injury complained of he cannot recover. b. Safety of Means and Appliances. A ferryman must equip his boat with such guard rails, chains, barriers, and other appliances as are necessary to secure the safety of passengers and property in transportation.[84]

c. Safety of Landings and Approaches. A ferryman must maintain safe and suitable landing places for the ingress and egress of passengers and teams,[85] and appliances of sufficient strength to hold the boat securely to her mooring;[86] but he is not bound to guard against all possible accidents which could not reasonably have been foreseen,[87] nor is he bound to adopt new and improved methods, where those already in use are reasonably safe.[88] The duty as to the safety of landings applies not only to the immediate means of getting on and off the boat, but requires the ferryman to furnish safe passageways between the ferry-houses and the streets.[89]

d. Skill Required in Operating. A ferryman must exercise the utmost care, skill, and vigilance in managing his boat and in providing against injury to passengers and property while in course of transportation.[90] Ferries are also subject to the same rules as other vessels with regard to moving cautiously or coming to anchor to avoid collisions with other vessels, in cases of fog or darkness.[91]

6. Actions to Enforce Liability[92] — a. At Common Law — (i) For Personal Injuries — (A) Pleading.[93] In order to recover against a ferryman on the ground of a breach of contract to carry the passenger safely there must be an allegation in the complaint of such contractual relation.[94] Where the authority of towns to operate ferries rests entirely upon special grants, the complaint in an action against the town must allege the existence of such a grant.[95]

(B) Burden of Proof and Presumption of Negligence.[96] Where a passenger rightfully on a ferry is injured in transportation, the presumption is that it was due to the negligence of the ferryman, and the burden is upon the ferry-

Letting down the chain securing the passageway from the ferry-boat to the bridge, by a servant of the ferry company, before the boat is properly made fast, is negligence for which the ferry company in case of injury is liable (Ferris v. Union Ferry Co., 36 N. Y. 312); but mere evidence that the chain had been removed, but not by the servant in charge, is not sufficient proof of negligence on the part of the company (Joy v. Winnisimmet Co., 114 Mass. 63).

It is negligence to order teams to pass off before the bridge is properly adjusted to the level of the boat. Hazman v. Hoboken Land, etc., Co., 50 N. Y. 53.

Proof of the striking of a ferry-boat against the slip with unusual violence, and that there was no exceptional weather or tide to make the landing difficult, is sufficient evidence of negligence to warrant a recovery by a passenger who is thrown and injured (Cash v. New York Cent., etc., Co., 56 N. Y. App. Div. 473, 67 N. Y. Suppl. 823; Snelling v. Brooklyn, etc., Ferry Co., 13 N. Y. Co., 104 La. 157, 29 So. 1).

Where a company operating a ferry-boat moors its boat and keeps open the gate, it thereby invites a passenger to embark, and gives assurance that it is safe to do so. Dougherty v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 86 N. Y. Suppl. 746.

Amendment.— In an action for injuries received by a passenger at the landing of a ferry, it was error to permit an amendment alleging, for the first time, insufficient lighting as an act of negligence. Scribner v. Long Island R. Co., 88 N. Y. Suppl. 351.

94. Grafton v. Brooklyn Union Ferry Co., 19 N. Y. Suppl. 966, 22 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 402, holding that no recovery can be had on this ground where the complaint alleges a tort and claims damages only.

man to prove the contrary.[97] The rule, however, is subject to qualification, and has been held not to apply in cases where the injury is of such a character that it might reasonably have happened without any negligence on the part of the ferryman,[98] or is caused by something not connected with the machinery of transportation,[99] or where the cause of the injury is equally well known to both parties.[1] It is not incumbent upon plaintiff to prove the exercise by him of ordinary care to avoid the injury.[2]

(II) For Loss of or Injury to Property[3] — (A) Nature of Action. Where property is lost or damaged by the negligence of a ferryman, the owner must sue the ferryman either on his contract as a carrier or in tort.[4]

(B) Pleading.[5] The complaint must specify the articles lost or damaged so as to inform defendant of the extent of the action.[6]

(C) Proof. In an action of contract against a ferryman for loss of or injury to property, it is sufficient for plaintiff to show the receipt of the property by the ferryman and the loss or injury; the burden is upon defendant to show that his failure to perform his agreement was due to a cause which would relieve him from liability.[7]

(D) Evidence.[8] Evidence is not admissible of any losses or injuries other than those alleged in the complaint,[9] nor of a custom or usage among ferrymen which would make the safety of a passenger or his property to depend upon his own conduct and not upon the care and vigilance of the ferryman.[10]

(E) Damages.[11] The recovery should be for whatever damage was the natural and proximate consequence of the injury complained of.[12]

b. On Statutory Bond[13] — (I) Nature of Remedy. The remedy given on the bond of a public ferryman[14] is in the nature of a common-law action on the case for damages caused by the ferryman's negligence. It is a cumulative remedy and not exclusive of the common-law right of action.[15]

(II) Pleading. The complaint must allege facts showing clearly a breach of the conditions of the bond.[16]

B. Liability of Private Ferryman. One who keeps a private ferry for his own use is not a common carrier,[17] but the owner of a private ferry may so use it, as where he undertakes for hire to convey all persons indifferently, with their carriages and goods, as to subject himself to the liability of a common carrier.[18]

FIDELITY INSURANCE

For Matters Relating to:

Insurance in General, see Insurance, and cross-references thereunder.

I. DEFINITION.

Fidelity insurance is a contract whereby the insurer, for a valuable consideration, agrees, subject to certain conditions, to indemnify the insured against loss consequent upon the dishonesty or default of a designated employee.[1]

II. FORM, NATURE, AND VALIDITY OF CONTRACT.

The contract is sometimes in a form very similar to that of a policy of insurance,[2] while in other instances it is in the form of a bond of indemnity.[3] It is sometimes issued upon the application of the employer[4] and sometimes upon the application of the employee.[5] But whatever the form of the contract, it is well established that guaranteeing the fidelity of employees is a form of insurance,[6]

although it also partakes somewhat of the nature of a suretyship.[7] A contract guaranteeing the honesty of employees is not void as being against public policy.[8] Where a bond given by an insurer of the fidelity of an employee makes it essential to its validity that the signature of the employee shall be subscribed thereto, but it is never so signed by the employee, the bond is invalid.[9]

III. CONSTRUCTION OF CONTRACT.

A contract to indemnify an employer against the dishonesty or default of employees is subject to the same rules of construction as apply to other insurance contracts.[10] Thus if, looking at all its provisions, the bond or policy is fairly and reasonably susceptible of two constructions, one favorable to the insured and the other to the insurer, the former construction, if consistent with the objects for which the bond or policy was given, must be adopted.[11] But in construing a policy the manifest intent of the conditions must be respected,[12] and the rule above stated cannot be availed of to refine away terms of a contract expressed with sufficient clearness to convey the plain meaning of the parties and embodying requirements, compliance with which is made a condition to liability thereon.[13]

9. Construction upholding contract.— Defendant contracted to indemnify plaintiff against any loss arising from the fraud or dishonesty of a certain factor at a certain town in his management of plaintiff's money intrusted to him with which to buy cotton. The factor was one of a firm and had exclusive control of the business at the town named. Plaintiff had no separate contract with the individual factor, but had a written contract with the firm to buy cotton at such town, and such contract was shown to defendant at the time of executing the contract of indemnity, and was referred to therein as the contract between plaintiff and the factor. IV. LIABILITY OF INSURER.

A. Losses Covered by Policy. In order to create a liability on the part of the insurer, the loss must be one which is covered by the terms of the policy, fairly construed.[14] A policy, bond, or contract of the character under discussion usually by its terms covers only losses due to "fraud or dishonesty" on the part of the employee,[15] and in such case the liability of the insurer is restricted to claims based upon the larceny, embezzlement, or at least the dishonesty of the employee,[16] and a loss resulting from the employee's carelessness or inattention to business or other acts or omissions not fraudulent or dishonest imposes no liability on the insurer.[17] The better opinion appears to be that where the policy insures against loss through the "fraud and dishonesty amounting to embezzlement or larceny" of the employee, the words "fraud or dishonesty" are to be taken in their ordinary sense, and it is not necessary that the acts of the employee should have been such as to subject him to an indictment and conviction for larceny or embezzlement.[18] And in order that liability may attach on a bond conditioned to insure an employer against larceny or embezzlement by an employee, it is not necessary for the employer to introduce such proof as would convict the employee of the crime of larceny or embezzlement as defined by the laws of the state.[19] Where a policy guarantees not only the honesty but also the diligence and faithfulness of the employee, any loss due to his negligence or irregularities must fall on the insurer.[20]

B. Time Covered by Policy. The contract usually covers only losses from acts of the employee committed while it is in force,[21] and does not render the 14. See Milwaukee Theatre Co. v. Fidelity, etc., Co., 92 Wis. 412, 66 N. W. 360, holding that an arrangement between a corporation and its treasurer by which he is to pay interest on the moneys in his hands makes him, as to such moneys, merely a debtor of the corporation, and his failure to pay them over to his successor on demand is therefore not an embezzlement thereof such as will create a liability upon a bond to reimburse to the corporation any loss resulting from embezzlement or larceny by such treasurer.

"Fraud and dishonesty amounting to embezzlement."— Where the cashier of a bank removed a bundle of notes from the bank premises to his residence for the purpose of signing them, but it appeared that he brought them all back, and subsequently, in his office in the bank, he put a number of five-dollar notes in the bundle instead of ten-dollar notes, and thus defrauded the bank, it was held that in intrusting the notes to the cashier to be signed there was no negligence on the part of the bank involving a violation of the terms of a contract of fidelity insurance, and that the loss was one caused by "fraud and dishonesty amounting to embezzlement" on the part of the cashier and came within the guaranty given by the policy. insurer liable for losses resulting from acts committed before the contract was entered into.[22]

C. Time of Discovery as Affecting Liability. The bond or policy sometimes contains a provision limiting the liability of the insurer to losses discovered during the time of its continuance,[23] or within a fixed period after its discontinuance,[24] or the death, dismissal, or retirement of the employee,[25] and in were carried forward by him into his new term, and paid out of current receipts, as such obligations were not discharged when assessments were made sufficient to meet them, but continued obligations until paid, their payment out of funds of the association did not amount to embezzlement or larceny committed during the new term, and the surety was not liable for the misappropriation. See also New York Fidelity, etc., Co. v. Consolidated Nat. Bank, 71 Fed. 116, 17 C. C. A. 641.

When contract in force.— Where a bond recited that it was made July 1, 1891, and stated that it was for a term ending July 1, 1892, and an indorsement on its back stated those days to be the dates of the bond and of its expiration, and the premium received covered one year, but the bond was dated July 10, 1891, it was held that the bond was properly construed as in effect from July 1, 1891, without regard to evidence as to when it was accepted. Supreme Council C. K. of A. v. New York Fidelity, etc., Co., 63 Fed. 48, 11 C. C. A. 96.

Effect of renewal.— A fidelity bond given to reimburse a bank for loss occasioned by the fraud or dishonesty of its bookkeeper recited that the insurer would make good to the employer, to the extent of seven thousand dollars, all pecuniary loss occasioned by the dishonesty of the employee occurring during the continuance of the bond or any renewal thereof. The liability of the bond was limited to default occurring during one year. A renewal bond guaranteeing the fidelity of the employee for the following year was given. It recited that it was a renewal bond, subject to the conditions of the original bond. It was held that the renewal bond was a new contract only so far as it extended the indemnity of the original bond to another year, but there was in effect one bond, with one penalty. Nashville First Nat. Bank v. U. S. Fidelity, etc., Co., 110 Tenn. 10, 75 S. W. 1076, 100 Am. St. Rep. 765.

To what period deficit attributable.— The plaintiffs made, on Jan. 1, 1879, their claim under the policy, which only extended to losses occurring within the period of twelve months prior to such claim being made. It appeared that at the end of 1877, the default was six hundred and seventy-four dollars, which was increased during the first two months of 1878, to one thousand two hundred and sixty-one dollars and fifty-seven cents, but in the next four months the deficiency was reduced by payments to two hundred and ninety-two dollars and eighty-five cents, after which it again increased until, at the end of 1878, it amounted to eight hundred and forty-four dollars and twenty-two cents. It was held that, in the absence of any specific appropriation, the payments must be appropriated to the earliest items of the default, thereby paying off the whole of the default due at the end of 1877, so that the whole amount of eight hundred and twenty-four dollars and twenty-two cents, due at the end of 1878, must be deemed to have accrued due within that year. Board of Education v. Citizens' Ins., etc., Co., 30 U. C. C. P. 132.

Conclusiveness of entries, receipts, and reports.— On the reappointment of the treasurer of a beneficial association for a new term, a surety company gave to the association its bond to make good "such pecuniary loss, if any, as may be sustained by the employer by reason of fraud or dishonesty of the employed in connection with the duties referred to, amounting to embezzlement or larceny, which was committed and discovered during the continuance of said term, or any renewal thereof," it was held that entries, receipts, and reports made by the treasurer during the life of the bond, in the ordinary course of his duty as treasurer, charging himself with certain items, were not conclusive against the surety as to the time when such items were received, there being no circumstances creating an estoppel in pais. What constitutes retirement.— Where, by the terms of the bond, the insurer agreed to make good and reimburse any loss to the insured, a bank, caused by any act of fraud or dishonesty on the part of an officer, not only with regard to his duties as such officer, but such case there is no liability unless the fraud, dishonesty, or negligence causing the loss not only occurred, but was discovered within the time limited.[26] The same is true where the liability is limited to acts or defaults committed within a certain time prior to their discovery.[27]

D. Change in Employee's Position or Duties. Where a new contract made by an employer with an employee increases the responsibilities of the employee, such new contract discharges a fidelity company from liability on its bond,[28] unless the obligation in terms covers the acts of the employee in any position or duties to which he may be assigned in the employer's service, as well as in regard to his position and duties at the time the obligation is entered into.[29]

E. Release From Liability. The act of the employer in intrusting money or property to the employee after discovering his dishonesty will usually release the insurer from liability for subsequent acts of the employee.[30] The fact that the employee has made over to the employer money or property which has been or might have been applied to make good the loss caused by the employee's act or default does not, at least where the whole loss has not been made good, amount to such a settlement or condonation as will relieve the insurer of liability,[31] nor does such relief result from the fact that the employer has recovered a part of the money taken by the employee,[32] or that the amount lost might be recovered by the employer from other sources.[33] A claim on a policy of fidelity insurance in connection with the duties to which, in the employer's service, he might be subsequently appointed, and the liability was limited to losses occurring during the continuance of the bond and discovered during such continuance or within six months thereafter, and within six months from the death, dismissal, or retirement of the employee from the service of the employer, it was held that where the bank suspended and the bank examiner entered upon an investigation of its affairs, the officer did not retire from the service of the bank, within the meaning of the bond, but remained in the service of the employer during at least the investigation of the bank's affairs and the custody of its assets by the national bank examiner, which lasted until the appointment and qualification of a receiver, and hence that notice given within six months from the latter date was sufficient. Failure to suspend employee.— Under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 91, the power of dismissing rate collectors is vested in the lord lieutenant, but by regulations of the privy council, made under the act, the collector general is empowered to suspend any collector who in his opinion has been guilty of neglect of duty. In Byrne v. Muzia, 8 L. R. Ir. 396, it was held that the omission of the collector general to suspend the collector, after knowledge of fraud and dishonesty on his part during his service and employment, was not a defense to an action on the guaranty: (1) Because the doctrine of Phillips v. Foxall, L. R. 7 Q. B. 666, 41 L. J. Q. B. 293, 27 L. T. Rep. N. S. 231, 20 Wkly. Rep. 900, was inapplicable to a guaranty for the fidelity of an officer appointed and removable by the lord lieutenant; (2) because the omission to exercise a power of suspension as distinguished from a power of dismissal did not terminate the liability of the sureties.

is not affected by communications of the employer with the employee after his appropriation of the employer's funds and flight where such communications did not have any injurious effect as regarded the insurer.[34]

V. DUTIES OF INSURED.

A. Supervision of Employee. It has been held that in order to warrant a recovery of a policy guaranteeing the fidelity of an employee, the employer must perform all the duties with respect to supervision of the employee and the like which are imposed upon him by the contract or the proposal or application upon which it is based, and which is made a part thereof.[35]

B. Notice of Fraud, Dishonesty, Etc. The bond or policy frequently imposes upon the insured the duty of informing the insurer of any acts of the employee which are fraudulent or dishonest or may involve a loss,[36] as soon as, or 356, holding that the fact, although conceded, that a bank was liable for a loss resulting to an employer through the fraudulent act of his employee in raising the amount of checks drawn on the bank, would not release such employee's surety on a fiduciary bond from liability to the employer.

Where the employer is a corporation, a stipulation "that the employer shall observe, or cause to be observed, due and customary supervision over the employee for the prevention of default, and if the employer shall at any time during the currency of this bond condone any act or default upon the part of the employé which would give the employer the right to claim hereunder, and shall continue the employé in his service without written notice to the company, the company shall not be responsible hereunder for any default of the employé which may occur subsequent to such act or default so condoned" in reason imports that the things forbidden to be done or agreed to be done are to be either done or left undone by the corporation in its corporate capacity, speaking and acting through the representative agents empowered by the charter to do or not to do the things pointed out, and such a stipulation is not fairly subject to the construction that it was the intention that the neglect or omission of a minority in number of the board of directors, or the neglect or omission of subordinate officers or agents of the corporation, should be treated as the neglect or omission of the corporation. Maryland Fidelity, etc., Co. v. Courtney, 186 U. S. 342, 362, 22 S. Ct. 833, 46 L. ed. 1193 [affirming 103 Fed. 599, 43 C. C. A. 331].

What constitutes compliance with conditions.— An application to a surety company for a bond to secure the faithful performance of his duties by the cashier of the applicant, a corporation, contained the following question and answer: "It is suggested: (1) That all moneys and checks received be deposited intact in bank, and all disbursements be made either by check or from a petty cash fund drawn from the bank as required; and (2) that all checks received be indorsed 'For deposit,' to prevent any loss or conversion. To what extent will these practices be followed?" Answer: "Fully." It was held that the employer complied with such warranty by adopting a regulation requiring all checks to be deposited, indorsed as therein specified, and by exercising reasonable supervision over its cashier to see that the practice was pursued; and that the answer to such question could not be construed as an absolute warranty by the employer that its cashier would adopt all checks, properly indorsed, and to relieve the surety from liability for the failure to make such deposits, contrary to the employer's regulations, and without its knowledge, where it exercised reasonable diligence in the premises. A. 542] (speculation or gambling of employee); American Surety Co. v. Pauly, 170 U. S. 133, 18 S. Ct. 552, 42 L. ed. 977 [affirming 72 Fed. 470, 18 C. C. A. 644].

Time to which condition relates.— Where defendants, by their agreement, contracted to guarantee plaintiff against loss sustained by any act of fraud, dishonesty, etc., of an employee, provided that plaintiff should, "within ten days after the discovery by him of any fraud or dishonesty of the 'said persons employed,' and of any matter in respect of which any claim may be intended to be made, give notice in writing, at the office of the society, as far as the case will admit, of all the particulars thereof; and after any such discovery, the guaranty herein contained shall, as to loss by any act of fraud or dishonesty, subsequent thereto, be at an end," it was held that the proviso required notice to be given of such fraud or dishonesty only as would form the foundation of a claim under the guaranty and did not impose upon plaintiff an obligation to give notice if he discovered that fraud or dishonesty had occurred as soon as practicable after, the facts come to the knowledge of the employer,[37] and failure of the employee to comply with such a condition will defeat a recovery.[38]

C. Notice of Loss. It is very usually stipulated in policies or bonds of the nature under discussion, as a condition precedent to a recovery thereon, that the insured shall, upon the discovery of any default or loss, immediately give the insurer notice,[39] in writing.[40] Such a stipulation has, however, been construed to require, not that notice should be given to the insurer instantly on the discovery of a default or loss, but merely that such notice should be given within a reasonable time thereafter, having in view all the circumstances of the case.[41]

A provision requiring notice to the insurer "as soon as practicable" after the occurrence of an act on the part of the employee which may involve a loss shall have come to the knowledge of the insured makes it the duty of the insured to transmit information of such acts on the part of the employee, not as soon as possible, but with reasonable promptness, and it is for the jury to say whether the notice was given within a reasonable time. American Surety Co. v. Pauly, 170 U. S. 133, 18 S. Ct. 552, 42 L. ed. 977 [affirming 72 Fed. 470, 18 C. C. A. 644].

Whether positive knowledge necessary.— Under a condition of the contract requiring the insured to give written notice to the insurer of any act of the employee which may involve a loss for which the insurer is responsible as soon as practicable after the occurrence of such act "shall have come to the knowledge" of the insured, it is not sufficient to defeat the insured's right of action that it be shown that he may have had suspicions of dishonest conduct of the employee. American Surety Co. v. Pauly, 170 U. S. 133, 18 S. Ct. 552, 42 L. ed. 977 [affirming 72 Fed. 470, 18 C. C. A. 644]. But a provision of the contract requiring the insured to notify the insurer immediately upon "becoming aware" of the employee being engaged in speculation or gambling means that such notice shall be given when the insurer is "informed of," "apprised of," or "put on guard in respect to" such conduct on the part of employee, and the phrase "becoming aware" cannot be considered as meaning "having knowledge," nor can it be considered equivalent to "becoming satisfied." Knowledge of co-employee.—Where the contract contained no stipulation making it in the least degree incumbent upon the insured, a bank, to exercise any diligence or care in inquiring into or supervising the conduct of the particular employee, or of any of his co-employees in its service, and imposed upon it no duty of vouching for the fidelity or efficiency of the latter, or of requiring them to watch or report upon his actions and doings, information or knowledge on the part of the bank's cashier, he being only such a co-employee, as to the matters concerning which the company had stipulated for notice, would not, relatively to it, be, under these circumstances, imputable to the bank itself. D Proof of Loss. It is usually required that the insured shall file with the insurer his claim with full particulars thereof, immediately or as soon as practicable after giving notice of a default or loss.[43]

E. Criminal Prosecution of Employee. A criminal prosecution of the employee by the employer, if required by the insurer, may, by the terms of the contract, be made a condition precedent to a recovery against the insurer.[44]

VI. REPRESENTATIONS INDUCING CONTRACT OR RENEWALS.

As a general rule before a contract of fidelity insurance is entered into or renewed, the applicant is required to make certain statements or answer certain questions as to the character of the employee, the state of his accounts, and the like,[45] and if such statements or answers are untrue the contract is thereby avoided,[46] especially where it is expressly provided by the contract that such repre-

ery of any loss or default, and should file his claim, with full particulars, immediately thereafter, and that the bond should be void if immediate notice was not given. The employer discovered defalcations on August 20, but did not notify the company until October 3. He, however, immediately endeavored to secure a bookkeeper to ascertain the exact amount of the defalcations. One was obtained about September 1, and finished his examination October 2, notice being sent the day following. It was held to be a question for the jury whether the notice was given within the required time. Remington v. Maryland Fidelity, etc., Co., 27 Wash. 429, 67 Pac. 989.

Statement as to knowledge.— Statements made by the insured that its secretary was not in arrears or was not to the knowledge of the employer or its officers in arrears or a defaulter or in debt to it, etc., did not constitute a warranty that the secretary was not indebted to it at the time as a fact, but only that he was not so indebted, etc., to the knowledge of the association or its officers. Facts as to which no representation made. — Where a bond for the fidelity of the treasurer of a beneficial association recited that the association had delivered to the company certain statements relative to the duties and accounts of the treasurer, which it was agreed should form the basis of the contract expressed in the bond, it was held that if such statements involved no misrepresentation or concealment the contract could not be affected by loose parol statements or concealment of facts about which no inquiry was made, or conduct on which no reliance was placed, or by conversations, as to laws of the association, with its vice-president, at the time of application for the bond, it not appearing that he had authority to make any representations on the subject, or by the fact that at the time of such application the treasurer was in default to the association, there being no representation to the contrary in the statements delivered, and nothing to show that at that time the fact was known to any officer of the association. sentations or answers are a part or the basis thereof.[47] Where the insured is a corporation, statements and answers made by an officer, who in making the same represents and is properly acting for the corporation, are binding upon it.[48] Statements in the application as to the conduct of the employer's business, the checks to be used to detect error or fraud on the part of the employee, the amount with which he would be intrusted, and the like, have been considered mere promissory representations of intention rather than warranties.[49]

The Tennessee statute, which provides that no representation or warranty made in negotiations for a contract or policy of insurance, or in any application therefor, shall be deemed material or defeat the policy unless the misrepresentation is made with actual intent to deceive, or unless it increases the risk of the loss, applies to fidelity bonds given to an employer to indemnify him for losses occasioned by the fraud of an employee. Nashville First Nat. Bank v. U. S. Fidelity, etc., Co., 110 Tenn. 10, 75 S. W. 1076, 100 Am. St. Rep. 765, holding further that the question whether statements of a bank cashier made to a fidelity company during the negotiations for the issuance of a bond insuring the fidelity of an employee of the bank were true was for the jury.

Ont. Ins. Act (1892), § 33, subs. 2, provides that no contract of insurance made or renewed after the commencement of the act shall contain any condition that the contract shall be avoided by reason of any statement in the application therefor, or inducing the entering into of the contract by the corporation, unless such condition is limited to cases in which such statement is material to the contract, and no contract within the intent of such section of such act shall be avoided by reason of the inaccuracy of any such statement unless it be material to the contract. Accordingly a condition of such character which is not limited to cases in which the statement inducing the contract is material to the contract is illegal and cannot be relied upon to defeat a claim under the contract. Unintentional misrepresentation.— An employee's surety bond provided for its renewal from year to year. At the time of its issuance the employer agreed to make monthly examinations of the employee's accounts, and did so, as agreed. The bond expired July 1, and afterward, on July 20, the employer, having examined the books, made a renewal certificate reciting that they were correct, and all moneys accounted for, and an extension of the policy was granted. The books were apparently correct, but as a matter of fact defalcations had occurred which an expert might have detected. It was held that under the circumstances the certificate was a representation of a fact and not a warranty of its truth. Remington v. Maryland Fidelity, etc., Co., 27 Wash. 429, 67 Pac. 989. VII. PLEADING.

In an action on a contract of fidelity and guaranty insurance, plaintiff must state his cause of action and defendant its defenses according to the usual rules of pleading.[50] A failure of the complaint to fully set out the contract is cured where it is set out in full in the answer.[51] Defendant must aver and prove breaches of the stipulations of plaintiff contained in his application where such breaches are relied on.[52]

VIII. EVIDENCE.

It is incumbent upon plaintiff to prove his case as laid,[53] and any legitimate evidence tending to this end should be admitted.[54] On an issue whether the president of a building and loan association had made false representations to a surety company as to the business integrity of an employee, a question whether, at the time of such statement, he knew that the employee had failed to make his

50. See, generally, PLEADING.

Defective amendment.— Where defendant filed an amendment to its plea, which amendment alleged that the employee had, within the knowledge of plaintiff, been guilty of a specified default, such amendment not being legally complete without further alleging that plaintiff had failed to duly notify defendant of the default in question, was properly stricken on demurrer. Necessity of pleading fraud.— In an action upon a guaranty for the fidelity of an employee, a plea of defendants that the contract was entered into by them on the faith of a certain statement and representation made by plaintiff and the person employed that there had been no balance outstanding from the latter, nor any irregularity in his accounts, and that such representation was untrue was held had on demurrer, for not alleging, either that the statement was fraudulent or circumstances from which fraud could be inferred as matter of law. 54. Clifton Mfg. Co. v. U. S. Fidelity, etc., Co., 60 S. C. 128, 38 S. E. 790, holding that where defendant contracted to indemnify plaintiff against any loss arising from the fraud or dishonesty of plaintiff's agent in his management of plaintiff's money intrusted to him to buy cotton, and by the written contract with plaintiff the agent agreed that such money should be kept separate from any other funds, and that on demand he would return any unexpended moneys of plaintiff, any evidence tending to show a criminal intent on the part of the agent in the use and disposition of the money was competent, since plaintiff could recover on the guaranty only on showing fraud or dishonesty.

Previous fraudulent or dishonest acts of employee.— In an action on a bond insuring the fidelity of a bank cashier, evidence of acts of fraud and dishonesty by the cashier, occurring before the date of the bond, and for which no claim was made against the surety company, but which were similar to the acts on which the claim was based, was admissible to show that the acts on which the claim was based were intentional, and not merely negligent or due to oversight. American Surety Co. v. Pauly, 72 Fed. 470, 18 C. C. A. 644 [affirmed in 170 U. S. 133, 18 S. Ct. 552, 42 L. ed. 977].

Account-books.— In an action on a bond insuring the fidelity of a bank cashier, for the purpose of showing the dealings with the bank of the president, who was charged with having misappropriated the bank's money with the cashier's aid, the president's ledger account was put in evidence, together with the testimony of the bookkeeper who made the entries, and who swore that they were correctly made from the original deposit slips and checks furnished to him by the teller, who had died before the trial; that it had been the teller's duty to verify all deposit slips and to pay the checks; and that all such slips and checks, when reaching the bookkeeper's hands, bore marks indicating that they had been verified or paid by the teller. It was held that the account was competent and sufficiently proven. American Surety Co. v. Pauly, 72 Fed. 470, 18 C. C. A. 644 [affirmed in 170 U. S. 133, 18 S. semiannual report was properly excluded, where there was no evidence that it was the employee's duty to make such report.[55]

IX. SUBROGATION TO RIGHTS OF EMPLOYER.

A corporation which has insured an employer against loss by reason of the want of integrity or fidelity, or by reason of the misconduct of one of his employees, stands in the shoes of the employer and has a right to be subrogated to all the rights of the employer in the prosecution of dishonest employees, and also has a right to all the remedies that the defrauded employer would have.[56]

FILAMENT. A substance like a thread; a long, thread-like process;[23] fiber.[24]

FILE.[25] A word of well-defined meaning,[26] which may, however, be used in several senses.[27] As a noun, it signifies a thread, string, or wire upon which writs and other exhibits in courts and offices are fastened or filed for the more safe keeping and ready turning to the same;[28] a paper placed with the officer, and assigned by the law to his official custody;[29] a record of the court;[30] papers put together and tied in bundles;[31] and, more loosely, the official custody of the court or the place in the offices of a court where the records and papers are kept.[32] As a verb, it means to string, to fasten, as papers, on a line or wire for preservation; to arrange or insert in a bundle, as papers, indorsing the title on each paper;[33] to leave a paper with an officer for action or preservation;[34] to deposit with the proper custodian for keeping;[35] to place in the official custody of the clerk;[36] to put upon the files or among the records of a court;[37] to place papers upon a file; or, more generally, to deposit papers in official custody;[38] to receive papers officially for orderly, systematic safe keeping;[39] to note on a paper the fact and date of its reception in court;[40] to indorse on a paper the date of its reception, and retain it in the office, subject to inspection by whomsoever it may concern;[41] to indorse a paper, as received into custody, and give it

"Filing" distinguished from "entering of record."— These expressions are not synonymous. They are nowhere so used, but always convey distinct ideas. "Filing" originally signified placing papers in order on a thread or wire for safe-keeping. In this country and at this day it means, agreeably to our practice, depositing them in due order in the proper office. Entering of record uniformly implies writing. Naylor v. Moody, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 247, 248. See also State v. Lamm, 9 S. D. 418, 419, 69 N. W. 592 [citing Anderson L. Dict.], where it is said: "There is, however, a marked distinction between entering a paper of record and filing the same."

53. Naylor v. Moody, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 247, 248; Demers v. Cloud County, 5 Kan. App. 271, 47 Pac. 567, 569.

The modern method of filing papers is to place them in the official custody of the proper officer to be kept as a permanent record, and the making of an indorsement thereon by the officer of the time they were received (Wilkinson v. Elliott, 43 Kan. 590, 595, 23 Pac. 614, 19 Am. St. Rep. 158), but "though the ancient mode of filing papers has gone into disuse, the phraseology of the ancient practice is retained in the common expressions 'to file,' 'to put on file,' 'to take off the files,' &c., from 'filum,' the thread, string, or wire used in ancient practice for connecting the papers together" (Holman v. Chevaillier, 14 Tex. 337, 339).

In matters of practice, the word "filing" is very commonly used to express the duty of bringing to the proper office, as the case may be, writs, pleadings, affidavits and other such matters for safe custody, or enrolment. The duty of filing in this sense may be properly considered as included under the word "returning." Hunter v. Caldwell, 10 Q. B. 69, 81, 12 Jur. 285, 59 E. C. L. 69.

Distinguished from the indorsement.—It has been said that the word "filing" is generally used to describe the indorsement on a paper of the day when it is left at a public office (Lent v. New York, etc., R. Co., 130 N. Y. 504, 509, 29 N. E. 988. See also Jones v. Wells, 3 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 94); but the filing is the actual delivery of the paper to the clerk without regard to any action that he may take thereon (Grubbs v. Cones, 57 Mo. 83, 84 [quoted in State v. Hockaday, 98 Mo. 590, 593, 12 S. W. 246]), and does not consist of the marking put on it by the clerk, but in placing it as a permanent record in the office or case where it belongs (Bettison v. Budd, 21 Ark. 578, 580 [citing State v. Gowen, 12 Ark. 62; Keath v. Berkley, 7 Ark. 469; Thompson v. Foster, 6 Ark. 208]). Indeed the indorsement of the fact of filing is only evidence that such filing has been made

place among other papers;[56] the act of either party bringing the paper and depositing it with the officer for keeping, or the act of the officer in folding, endorsing and putting up the paper.[57] (Filing: For Purpose of Record, see Assignments For Benefit of Creditors; Chattel Mortgages; Deeds; Judgments; Liens; Mechanics' Liens; Mortgages; Records; Sales.)

FILIUS CONSTAT ESSE IN FAMILIA PATRIS ET NON MATRIS. A maxim meaning "A son appears to be in the family of the father and not of the mother."[58]

FILIUS IN UTERO MATRIS EST PARS VISCERUM MATRIS. A maxim meaning "A son in the mother's womb is part of the mother's vitals."[59]

FILIUS NULLIUS. See Bastards.

FILL. To so occupy that no space remains;[60] to hold, as an office;[61] to pay; to promise to pay.[62] (To Fill: Blanks, see Alteration of Instruments; Bonds; Commercial Paper; Deeds; Forgery.)

FILL A PRESCRIPTION. To furnish, prepare, and combine the requisite drugs in due proportion as prescribed.[63] (See, generally, Physicians and Surgeons.)

FILLED. A technical term used by manufacturers, and relates to the process of manufacture.[64]

"The origin of the term indicates very clearly, that the filing of a paper can only be effected by bringing it to the notice of the officer, who anciently put it upon the 'string' or 'wire.' I. TITLE TO PROPERTY FOUND.

A. Chattels Unattached to Realty — 1. FINDER'S TITLE AGAINST ALL BUT OWNER — a. In General. By the general rule of the common law one who finds and appropriates a lost[1] chattel not buried in or attached to the soil[2] acquires the title thereto and the right to possession thereof against all the world except the true owner.[3] This rule of the common law has been frequently and variously modified by the terms and provisions of local statutes of many states and these statutes have been considered as wise and equitable.[4]

b. As Affected by Fact That Finder Is an Employee. A servant (other than a slave) or employee who finds a lost chattel while engaged in work for his master is entitled thereto as against the master if the latter is not the owner.[5]

c. As Affected by Ownership of Property In or Upon Which Chattel Was Found. As a general rule the title and the right to possession of the finder is not affected by the ownership of the property in or upon which the thing lost[6] is found.[7] Thus, if a lost article is found on the surface of the ground,[8] on the floor of a shop,[9] in the public parlor of a hotel,[10] or near a table at an open-air

Operation of statute.— A state statute providing that property found must be appraised and the appraisal left with the town-clerk for a year before the owner's title can be divested does not apply to property found in waters not wholly within the state, unless it be shown that the property was found within that part of the waters within the state. place of amusement,[11] or in the car of a railroad,[12] it becomes, except as against the loser, the property of the finder who appropriates it, without any reference to the ownership of the property in or upon which the article was found or from which it was taken.[13] So too if the lost thing be found within a chattel transferred by sale, the finder takes title to the thing found unaffected by the property rights of the vendee of the chattel,[14] for unless the vendee of the chattel had knowledge, when he made his purchase, of the thing contained therein,[15] or had reason to believe that anything more than the chattel was sold to him,[16] no title to the thing found passed to him by the sale. This rule that the title of the finder is unaffected by the fact that the thing was found in or upon the property of another has been limited in some cases, however.[17]

d. As Affected by the Nature of the Property Found. The rule that the finder of the lost chattel has title against all the world except the true owner does not under some decisions include choses in action.[18]

2. Titles of Finders Inter Se. It is a necessary consequence of the general rule as to the title of the finder of a lost chattel[19] that the first finder who appropriates the chattel found and then loses it has a superior title to that of a subsequent finder, against whom the first finder's rights can be enforced.[20] If a lost chattel is discovered by two or more persons under circumstances which fairly show that it was found by all, the finders take a qualified title in common.[21]

J. Q. And it makes no difference that the possessor is not aware of the thing's existence. . . . It is free to any one who requires a specific intention as part of a de facto possession to treat this as a positive rule of law. 3. Finder's Title Against Owner or His Representative. The finder is only the apparent general owner of the thing found, under an uncertain or contingent title which may be defeated by the discovery of the true owner;[22] the owner and loser's title is unaffected by the mere fact that his chattel has been lost.[23] Before a perfect title accrues to the finder, it is necessary that the true owner should have completely relinquished and abandoned his title, although this inchoate title is sufficient to maintain trover thereon against everyone except the true owner.[24] If the true owner dies before his title and right to the lost chattel be discovered, his personal representative has same right over the lost chattel as he has over other property of the decedent's estate.[25]

B. Property Buried in or Attached to Soil. If a chattel is buried or imbedded in the soil and does not belong to that class of chattels which when so found should be considered treasure-trove,[26] title is in the owner of the soil, unless in some instances at least the depositor owner be known.[27] Such a chattel

C Property Found But Not Lost — 1. In General. It is clear that the finder does not take title to every article found out of the possession of its true owner. That the finder should have his qualified title, the chattel found must have been lost, and a thing is not lost unless possession of it has been parted with casually and involuntarily,[29] so that the mind has no impress of and can have no recourse to the event.[30] A thing voluntarily laid down and forgotten is not lost within the meaning of the rule giving the finder title to lost property, and the owner of a shop,[31] bank,[32] or other place[33] where the thing has been left is the proper custodian rather than the person who has happened to have discovered it and rather than all other persons except the owner.

2 Treasure-Trove. Treasure-trove is usually defined as any gold or silver in coin, plate, or bullion found concealed in the earth,[34] or in a house or other private place,[35] but not lying on the ground,[36] the owner of the discovered treasure being unknown.[37] It seems to be generally considered that the treasure must be either gold or silver coin or bullion;[38] but articles manufactured of gold and silver have been conceded and held to be treasure-trove,[39] and it has been said that at the present time treasure-trove may "be taken to include paper representatives of gold and silver, especially when they are found hidden with both of these precious metals."[40] By the early common law the finder of treasure-trove took title thereto against all the world, except the true owner,[41] but by St. 4 Edw. I the title to treasure-trove was vested in the crown, subject to the claim of the true owner.[42] This seems to have been the general rule of law of nearly all nations[43] and remains the law of England at the present time.[44] It has been said that in this country the law relating to treasure-trove has generally been merged into the law relating to lost property found.[45]

Paramount title of true owner.— The rule of the common law, in regard to treasure-trove as laid down by Bracton, lib. 3, cap. 3, and as quoted in Viner Abr. is "that he to whom the property is, shall have treasure trove, and if he dies before it be found, his executors shall have it, for nothing accrues to the King unless when no one knows who hid that treasure." 43. 2 Kent Comm. 358 [citing Grotius De Jure Belli et Pacis, bk. 2, c. 8, § 7]. By the law of emperor Hadrian, which was adopted by Justinian, the finder of treasure-trove took title, except as against the true owner, if the thing found was on his own land, but if it was found by chance on the land of another, half of the treasure went to the proprietor of the soil and the other half to the finder. B. Care and Custody of Property. At common law the finder is not liable for mere negligence in the care and keeping of the chattel he has found,[48] but if he uses the property in a way which injures it he is liable to the owner for the injury.[49]

III. FINDER'S RIGHT TO COMPENSATION.[50]

In the absence of an offer of reward, the finder has no right to a reward for the finding of the lost chattel.[51] The finder is, however, entitled to be reimbursed for his necessary expenditures for the preservation of the property,[52] and perhaps for his time and trouble,[53] but he has no lien therefor,[54] and he cannot pay himself for his expense and trouble by using the property for that purpose.[55]

I. DEFINITION.

A fine is a pecuniary punishment imposed by a lawful tribunal upon a person convicted of crime or misdemeanor.[1]

1. Bouvier L. Dict. [quoted in People v. Nedrow, 122 Ill. 363, 366, 13 N. E. 533; Hudson v. Granger, 23 Misc. (N. Y.) 401, 403, 52 N. Y. Suppl. 9; Southern Express Co. v. Com., 92 Va. 59, 63, 22 S. E. 809, 41 L. R. A. 436].

Other definitions are: "A pecuniary punishment for an offense or a contempt committed against the King." State v. McConnell, 70 N. H. 158, 46 Atl. 458; Coke Litt. 126*b* [quoted in State v. Ostwalt, 118 N. C. 1208, 1213, 24 S. E. 660, 32 L. R. A. 396; State v. Burton, 113 N. C. 655, 662, 18 S. E. 657]. See also Jacob L. Dict.

"A pecuniary punishment imposed by the judgment of a court upon a person convicted of crime." State v. Steen, 14 Tex. 396, 398.

"A sum of money paid at the end, to make an end of a transaction, suit, or prosecution; mulct; penalty." Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. State, 22 Kan. 1, 15 [citing Webster Dict.; Richardson Dict.].

"A pecuniary punishment for an offense inflicted by sentence of a court having authority to impose it." Wilcox v. Knoxville Borough, 12 Pa. Co. Ct. 641, 646 [citing Anderson L. Dict.].

"The sentence pronounced by the Court for a violation of the criminal law of the State." Board of Education v. Henderson, 126 N. C. 689, 691, 36 S. E. 158.

"Amends, or pecuniary mulct for an offence committed." State v. Robertson, 15 Rich. (S. C.) 17, 20.

"Fine" is derived from "finis," and is so called because its payment puts an end to the offense for which it is imposed. State v. Steen, 14 Tex. 396, 398. See also Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. State, 22 Kan. 1, 15; Coke Litt. 126*b*.

Distinguished from "penalty."— In its broadest sense "penalty" includes fines, as well as all other kinds of punishment (Gosselink v. Campbell, 4 Iowa 296; The Strathairly, 124 U. S. 558, 31 L. ed. 580; U. S. v. Mann, 26 Fed. Cas. 15,718, 1 Gall. 177; Reg. v. Gavin, 1 Can. Cr. Cas. 59. But see Lancaster v. Richardson, 4 Lans. (N. Y.) 136); but in its narrower sense a penalty is the amount recovered for a violation of the statute law of the state or the ordinance of a town, which violation may or may not be a crime (Lancaster v. Richardson, 4 Lans. (N. Y.) 136; Hudson v. Granger, 23 Misc. (N. Y.) 401, 52 N. Y. Suppl. 9; Fuller v. Redding, 16 Misc. (N. Y.) 634, 39 N. Y. Suppl. 109; Board of Education v. Henderson, 126 N. C. 689, 36 S. Rep. 673); while a fine is a pecuniary punishment inflicted by the sentence of a court of criminal jurisdiction on a person convicted of crime (Indianapolis v. Fairchild, 1 Ind. 315; State v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 64 Nebr. 679, 90 N. W. 877; Lancaster v. Richardson, 4 Lans. (N. Y.) 136; Hudson v. Granger, 23 Misc. (N. Y.) 401, 52 N. Y. Suppl. 9; Fuller v. Redding,

II. ORIGIN AND SOURCE.

Fines constitute in whole or in part the punishment for many offenses at common law,[2] as well as for many offenses created by statute.[3] Subject to constitutional restrictions,[4] the imposition and regulation of fines belong to the legislature.[5]

III. RECOVERY AND IMPOSITION.

A. Proceedings to Recover. Since the word "fine" in its strict technical sense is to be regarded as a punishment for a criminal offense,[6] a criminal prosecution is the usual mode of recovery.[7] But the mode in which fines and penal-

16 Misc. (N. Y.) 634, 39 N. Y. Suppl. 109; Board of Education v. Henderson, 126 N. C. 689, 36 S. E. 158; Southern Express Co. v. Com., 92 Va. 59, 22 S. E. 809, 41 L. R. A. 436. See also Slayton v. Marshall, 64 N. H. 549, 15 Atl. 210, 1 L. R. A. 51; State v. Burton, 113 N. C. 655, 18 S. E. 657; U. S. v. Mann, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,718, 1 Gall. 177). The terms "fine" and "penalty" are, however, often used as synonymous (People v. Nedrow, 122 Ill. 363, 13 N. E. 533; State v. Horgan, 55 Minn. 183, 56 N. W. 688. See also Lord v. State, 37 Me. 177); and the term "fine" has been held broad enough to include "penalties" recoverable in a civil action (People v. Nedrow, 122 Ill. 363, 13 N. E. 533; Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. State, 22 Kan. 1, 15, where the court said: "In all cases where money is imposed merely as punishment for the violation of some law, we think the imposition of such money should be called a fine;" Hanscomb v. Russell, 11 Gray (Mass.) 373; Territory v. Baca, 2 N. M. 183). See also, generally, PENALTIES.

Distinguished from forfeiture.— "A fine is a pecuniary penalty," while "a forfeiture is a penalty by which one loses his rights and interests in his property." Gosselink v. Campbell, 4 Iowa 296, 300. See also Johnson v. Daw, 53 Mo. App. 372. But the terms are often used indiscriminately (see Gosselink v. Campbell, 4 Iowa 296; Hanscomb v. Russell, 11 Gray (Mass.) 373; Southern Express Co. v. Com., 92 Va. 59, 22 S. E. 809, 41 L. R. A. 436); and it has been held that the word "forfeit," or "forfeiture," when used in a criminal statute to denote a punishment for crime, is equivalent to "fine" (Ex p. Alexander, 39 Mo. App. 108, holding that a provision that a person convicted shall "forfeit and pay a sum not exceeding one thousand dollars," authorizes the imposition of a fine, and imprisonment on non-payment thereof; State v. McConnell, 70 N. H. 158, 159, 46 Atl. 458, where the court said: "A pecuniary punishment called a forfeiture, is equivalent to the same pecuniary punishment called a fine;" Ex p. Marx, 86 Va. 40, 9 S. E. 475. See also Com. v. Avery, 14 Bush (Ky.) 625, 29 Am. Rep. 429; State v. Mumford, 73 Mo. 647, 39 Am. Rep. 532; State v. Sellner, 17 Mo. App. 39). See also FORFEITURES, post, p. 1356.

Personal liabilities imposed on public officers for the non-performance of official duties are not fines. Porter v. Thomson, 22 Iowa 391.

Money paid on a forfeited recognizance is not a fine and is not a substitute for a fine, although the alleged crime was one which might have required the imposition of a fine if defendant had appeared and had been convicted; and consequently no part of such money belongs to the informer who would have been entitled to a share of the fine. Implication arising from statutory use of word.— In State v. Marshall, 64 N. H. 549, 15 Atl. 210, 1 L. R. A. 51 [followed by State v. Horgan, 55 Minn. 183, 56 N. W. 688; State v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 64 Nebr. 679, 90 N. W. 877], the rule is laid down that in the absence of any special provision as to the mode of procedure, the use of the word "fine" determines the form of the remedy.

Statute providing for fine and imprisonment.— A statute providing that on conviction the party guilty of violating the statute shall be fined or imprisoned or both contemplates a criminal proceeding only. Pardee v. Smith, 27 Mich. 33; U. S. v. Claflin, 97 U. S. 546, 553 note, 24 L. ed. 1082, 1085; U. S. v. Morin, 26 Fed. Cas. 9. State v. Ford, 70 Mo. 469 (holding that a statute providing for the recovery of fines in certain cases by a "civil action" to the use of the county before a justice does not authorize a proceeding before a justice founded on an affidavit charging a criminal offense, on which a warrant is issued for the arrest of defendant); Ex p. Marx, 86 Va. 40, 9 S. In Kentucky under statutes providing that a public offense for which the only punishment is a fine may be prosecuted by penal action in the name of the commonwealth, it has been held that a fine may be recovered in a civil action unless the statute creating the offense provides that the proceeding must be by indictment. Preponderance of evidence sufficient for recovery.— Under a statute providing that the fine imposed for a violation of its provision may be enforced by criminal prosecution or sued for and recovered before a justice, a suit for the fine is not a criminal prosecution but is a civil action in which a recovery is justified by the preponderance of evidence. Proctor v. People, 24 Ill. App. 599.

Previous conviction of offender as prerequisite.— Under a municipal ordinance providing for the imposition of a fine, where a person is convicted of a violation of the ordinance, the fine "to be collected as similar debts are now by law collected," it has been held that the fine cannot be collected by a suit before a justice until after the person charged has been convicted of violating the ordinance. B. Imposition — 1. IN GENERAL. The court or jury in assessing the fine on conviction of an offense must conform to the statute prescribing the punishment for the offense, and as a general rule any departure therefrom makes the sentence illegal.[12]

2. AMOUNT OF FINE. At common law, when an offense was punishable by fine, the amount thereof was usually left to the discretion of the court within constitutional boundaries.[13] The amount of fines is now, however, generally a matter of statutory regulation;[14] and as a general rule a sentence to have full force and effect must conform to the statute.[15]

3. JOINT OFFENDERS. Although several persons may be jointly indicted and jointly tried, they must be severally fined.[16]

S. W. 589, 18 Ky. L. Rep. 610 (holding that under Ky. St. § 793, providing that the fine imposed on railway companies for failure to give the statutory signals at grade crossings is to be "recovered by indictment," such fine can only be recovered by indictment, although section 1139 provides that a fine may be recovered by civil proceedings or by indictment); State v. Helfrid, 2 Nott & M. Nominal fine imposed.— In People v. Cochran, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 73, it was held that where a prisoner was convicted of a misdemeanor on his own confession in open court, and no circumstances attending the offense, either by way of aggravation or extenuation, were shown, the court had no criterion by which to regulate its discretion in fixing the punishment, and hence a nominal fine only would be imposed.

Province of court and jury distinguished.— According to the common-law practice, the jury finds whether or not the prisoner be guilty, and if they find him guilty the court must assess the fine. IV. PAYMENT AND SATISFACTION.

A. Payment or Giving Security — 1. In General. As a general rule payment of a fine by a prisoner will operate as his discharge after an order of court has been obtained for that purpose.[17]

2. Medium of Payment — a. In General. In the absence of language to the contrary, it will be presumed that the court in imposing a fine contemplated payment of the fine in the ordinary currency of the country.[18] The rule has been laid down, moreover, that in the absence of statute an officer has no authority to receive anything other than money in payment of a fine.[19] Under statute in some jurisdictions it has been held that fines may be paid in county warrants,[20] in coupons from state bonds,[21] or by the giving of some other security.[22]

b. Confession of Judgment. As a substitute for the cash payment of a fine and imprisonment therefor, provision is made by statute in some jurisdictions for a confession of judgment by defendant for his fine and costs, with good and sufficient sureties.[23] Indeed the practice of allowing a party committed for fine and

3. Interest on Fines. A fine imposed by the judgment of the court upon a person convicted of crime does not bear interest under a statute allowing interest on judgments.[25]

4. To Whom Payment Is to Be Made. In order to discharge defendant from further liability for a fine, payment must be made to an official authorized by law to receive payment.[26]

B. Enforcement of Payment — 1. By Execution — a. Against Property. After a fine has been imposed by the sentence of the court, it is regarded as in the nature of a debt of record due the state,[27] and it may be enforced by execution against defendant's property both at common law[28] and under statutes

Attorney as surety.— Tenn. Acts (1903), p. 89, c. 48, making it unlawful for an attorney to sign a bond or enter into any recognizance as surety for an appearance in a criminal case, and punishing by fine a violation of its provision, has no application to securing a confessed judgment for a fine and costs pursuant to Shannon Code, § 7214. Halfacre v. State, (Sup. 1904) 79 S. W. 132.

Lambert v. State, 43 Ill. App. 223.

Contract for service for repayment of surety.— Sometimes, by statute, a person upon whom a fine has been imposed is authorized to procure security for the payment of his fine and the costs incidental to his conviction, by contracting with his surety to render personal services until his fine and costs are paid (Ex p. Davis, 95 Ala. 9, 11 So. 308. See also Convicts, 9 Cyc. 878 note 93 et seq.); and he may be subjected to a criminal prosecution for a violation of the contract, without a good and sufficient excuse (Giles v. State, 88 Ala. 230, 7 So. 271. See also Convicts, 9 Cyc. 879 note 98 et seq).

A judgment confessed by a third person to satisfy a fine and costs imposed on one convicted of an offense has been held to be regular and proper, but an execution upon such a judgment can only issue against the person who has confessed the judgment and not against him jointly with the person against whom the fine and costs were awarded; and hence an execution issuing against them jointly is void, and a sale under it conveys no title to the purchaser. in many jurisdictions.[29] The execution may issue whether the sentence be for a fine alone, or a fine coupled with a definite term of imprisonment;[30] and it has been held that it may issue, although defendant's body has already been taken in execution for the fine.[31] Executions in these cases are as a general rule governed by the principles applicable to executions in civil cases.[32]

sentenced to pay a fine, it is within the discretion of the court to order his imprisonment until the fine be paid.[45] A direction in a sentence imposing a fine that defendant stand committed until the fine is paid is no part of the penalty for the offense, but is merely a means of compelling obedience to the judgment of the court.[46]

(II) Where Both Fine and Imprisonment Are Imposed. As a general rule, where the punishment for an offense is both fine and imprisonment, the court may order defendant, for a failure to pay the fine, to be imprisoned, and that such imprisonment begin after the expiration of the term fixed as a punishment for the crime.[47]

(III) Necessity of First Proceeding Against Property. Apart from express statutory requirement,[48] it is not a condition precedent to the power to imprison that an effort should first have been made to satisfy the fine out of the property of defendant.[49]

b. Place of Confinement. As a general rule, where the sentence is to pay a fine and in default of payment to be imprisoned, the imprisonment should be in the common jail of the city or county.[50] But the rule has been laid down in New York that where a prisoner is sentenced to both fine and imprisonment in the state prison, it is proper to direct a continuance of imprisonment in the state prison, in default of payment of the fine.[51]

c. Duration of Imprisonment — (I) In General. In the absence of a statute limiting the duration of the imprisonment to enforce the payment of a fine, it seems that the convict may be imprisoned for an unlimited time in default of payment of the fine.[52] But statutes authorizing imprisonment for non-payment of a fine usually impose limitations upon the term of imprisonment.[53] As a gen-

Reduction of imprisonment by partial payment.— In Iowa it is held that one committed for non-payment of a fine must remain in custody for the whole of the term fixed in the sentence, unless the whole fine be sooner paid (Galles v. Wilcox, 68 Iowa 664, 27 N. W. 816); but in California, where the imprisonment operates as a satisfaction of the fine at a certain rate per day, the prisoner may at any time pay the sum remaining unsatisfied and claim his discharge (Ex p. Riley, 142 Cal. 124, 75 Pac. 665; Ex p. Casey, 85 Cal. 36, 24 Pac. 599; Ex p. Chin Yan, 60 Cal. 78; Ex p. Kelly, 28 Cal. 414. Compare Ex p. Harrison, 63 Cal. 299).

eral rule, however, the term of imprisonment for the non-payment of a fine is not limited by statutes prescribing a maximum period as punishment for the offense in controversy.[54]

(II) FIXING DURATION IN SENTENCE. At common law the commitment is until the fine be paid,[55] and it is not competent to sentence to imprisonment for a term fixed and absolute as a penal consequence for non-payment of a fine.[56] Where the duration of the imprisonment is fixed by statute, the rule in some jurisdictions is that a commitment until the fine be paid, without specifying the duration of the imprisonment, is not void, as the statute fixes a limit beyond which the imprisonment cannot extend regardless of the language of the judgment;[57] but in other jurisdictions the court must conform to the statute, and a commitment until the fine be paid will not justify the detention of the prisoner.[58] A commitment for a definite period which exceeds the statutory limit is illegal.[59]

d. Discharge From Imprisonment — (I) IN GENERAL. In the absence of statute a person imprisoned for non-payment of a fine cannot demand his discharge Improper release by jailer.— Where one sentenced to pay a fine and to be imprisoned until such fine is paid in the proportion of one day for every dollar of the fine is released by the sheriff without authority, the time of his absence cannot be considered as spent in jail in satisfaction of the judgment. Ex p. Vance, 90 Cal. 208, 27 Pac. 209, 13 L. Suppl. 95; Ex p. McGee, 33 Oreg. 165, 54 Pac. 1091, holding that a sentence of a municipal court to imprisonment for one hundred days for non-payment of a fine or violation of an ordinance is not illegal as being in conflict with a provision in the city charter, giving power to punish violations of ordinances by fine or imprisonment not exceeding ninety days. But see Brownbridge v. People, 38 Mich. 751; Howard v. People, 3 Mich. 207.

In California the rule of the text was applied in the earlier cases (Ex p. Casey, 85 Cal. 36, 24 Pac. 599; Ex p. Kelly, 28 Cal. 414), but it is now provided by statute (Pen. Code, § 1205) that imprisonment for non-payment of the fine must not "extend in any case beyond the term for which defendant might be sentenced to imprisonment for the offense for which he has been convicted" (Ex p. Erdmann, 88 Cal. 579, 26 Pac. 372).

Power of court to fix definite limit to imprisonment.— The court may, however, fix a limit beyond which the imprisonment shall not extend, although the fine be not paid. Brock v. State, 22 Ga. 98.

A commitment by a justice of the peace, under a statute authorizing him to commit until a fine be paid, but prescribing no particular length of imprisonment, must strictly conform to the statute giving him his authority, and a commitment to jail "for the term of one year, unless the said sum shall be sooner paid," is unwarranted. Ex p. Marx, 86 Va. 40, 9 S. upon proof that he is unable to pay.[60] Since a fine is not a debt but a punishment for crime,[61] a person in execution for the non-payment of a fine imposed in a criminal proceeding is not entitled to the benefit of general acts passed for the relief of insolvent debtors,[62] unless such acts expressly include persons imprisoned for non-payment of fines.[63] Statutes in many jurisdictions, however, make special provision for the discharge of one imprisoned for non-payment of a fine, upon his making affidavit that he is unable to pay the fine, and after undergoing a limited term of imprisonment or otherwise complying with the law.[64]

(II) Improper Discharge or Escape. If a prisoner, after being fined and ordered into custody, escapes before his term of imprisonment expires, with or without the consent of the officer into whose custody he has been placed, he is not thereby legally set at liberty and may be retaken and imprisoned.[65]

Retrospective effect of statute reducing per diem.— It has been held that a law reducing a per diem allowed a county convict as a credit on his fine when working the same out by manual labor can have no application to a judgment which was rendered and in process of execution prior to the passage of the law. Ex p. Hunt, 28 Tex. Working out several fines.— Under statute in Arkansas providing that, where a prisoner is delivered to a contractor for the discharge of his fine, he shall be kept at work "for such time as will discharge all fines and costs for which he may be committed," and allowing a certain rate of compensation per day, a person who has been convicted and fined for twenty offenses is not entitled to a discharge when the largest fine is paid, on the theory that the periods of his detention for the several offenses run concurrently, as would be the case if the imprisonment were imposed as a punishment unless the judgment otherwise specified, but the prisoner must work until all the fines are paid. Ex p. Brady, 70 Ark. 376, 68 S. Effect of inability to work.— Under statute in Tennessee, it has been held that a prisoner may be discharged by a county judge before he has worked out his fine, but that no person shall be so discharged except on the certificate of a physician that such person is physically unable to labor. Vanvabry v. Staton, 88 Tenn. 334, 12 S. W. 786. By statute in Texas a convict who from age, disease, or other disability, physical or mental, is unable to do manual labor, shall not be required to work, but shall remain in jail until his term of imprisonment is ended or until the fine and costs charged against him are discharged at the rate of one dollar for each day of such confinement in jail. Ex p. Anderson, 34 Tex. 4. Application by Court of Funds Belonging to Prisoner. It has been held that where money is deposited in lieu of bail for a prisoner,[69] or is found on the person of the prisoner when arrested for intoxication and searched by the police,[70] it may be applied in payment of any fine imposed on the prisoner, and that although the judgment is in the alternative and would be satisfied by either payment or by imprisonment, the prisoner has no right to elect to be imprisoned instead of thus paying the fine.[71]

Liability of county or government for fine improperly collected.— In Houtz v. Uinta County, 11 Wyo. 152, 70 Pac. 840, it was held that whatever may be the defects in the proceedings where the fine was collected, the county is not answerable for the money so collected, unless it is shown to have been paid into the county treasury. So in Carver v. U. S., 16 Ct. Cl. 361 [affirmed in 111 U. S. 609, 4 S. Ct. 561, 28 L. ed. 540, it was held that no action can be maintained against the tarily paid under a mistake of law,[74] as for instance, where the payment was induced, not because of threatened imprisonment but to avoid further inconvenience and trouble.[75] The mere fact, however, that the judgment imposing a fine is void as being in excess of the jurisdiction of the court does not, it has been held, constitute a sufficient ground for recovering back money paid without objection or protest.[76]

2. RESTITUTION AFTER VACATION OF JUDGMENT. Restitution of a fine after the reversal of a judgment imposing it is not a matter of right,[77] but it is for the court to determine whether the payment was voluntarily[78] or involuntarily made,[79] and therefore whether defendant is entitled to a restitution.

V. DISPOSITION OF PROCEEDS.

A. In General. By the common law all fines belong to the crown,[80] or in this country to the state as succeeding to the prerogative of the crown.[81] Constitutional or statutory provisions very generally prescribe the application and disposition to be made of fines,[82] as for instance, that they shall be paid over to

United States for the recovery of a fine illegally imposed by a military commission while it remains in the hands of the military officers.

Remission of fines see, generally, PARDON.

W. 418, holding that one who is arrested for the violation of a void ordinance pleads not guilty, but makes no objection to the ordinance, is found guilty and is fined, and pays the fine, while under arrest, without protest, believing that the judgment against him therefor is valid, does not pay under duress, and cannot recover back the money so paid.

Recovery against magistrate in individual capacity.— Under a statute prescribing both fine and imprisonment for a violation of its provisions, it has been held that a sentence by a justice of a fine only is erroneous but not void as being without jurisdiction, and where the person sentenced has paid the fine he cannot maintain an action against the justice in his individual capacity for its recovery. See 23 Cent. Dig. tit. "Fines," § 25.

Informer must give first information.— In U. S. v. Funkhouser, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 15,177, 4 Biss. 176, it was held that a party claiming an informer's share must be the first informer. See also U. S. v. George, 25 Fed. Cas. 15,198, 6 Blatchf. 406. So in U. S. v. Simons, 7 Fed. 709, it was held that the fact that a person has procured testimony, be it ever so valuable, does not entitle such person to an informer's share where the crime has been disclosed by others and proceedings have been commenced in consequence of such information. In U. S. v. Funkhouser, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 15,177, 4 Biss. 176, it was held that if several causes exist by either of which a fine, penalty, or forfeiture is incurred, information of any one of them properly given to the proper officer will entitle the person giving the information to the informer's share if he is the first informer.

the application of the proceeds of fines to educational or other purposes, acts of it has been held that that person is the informer, within the meaning of the statute, who first gives notice to the police authorities that a violation of the law has taken place, and in consequence of whose communication arrests are made, followed by conviction and payment of the fine, and that it is not necessary that he should be a witness in the case or have such personal knowledge of the crime as to make him a competent witness. Sanner v. State, 85 Md. 523, 37 Atl. 165.

Character of information.—It has been held that the information furnished by an informer must be substantially true and capable of proof. U. S. v. Funkhouser, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 15,177, 4 Biss. 176. So it has been held that it is not sufficient to state a general suspicion of rumor, although such statement may lead to inquiries disclosing facts sufficient to incur liability. U. S. v. Funkhouser, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 15,177, 4 Biss. 176.

Information leading to other information.—Where A informed against B for smuggling and B confessed and implicated C for receiving the property smuggled, and C was arrested and acting upon the advice of a third party also confessed and implicated D as his principal in the transaction, and D was convicted and fined, A was held to be entitled to an informer's share of the fine imposed. U. S. v. Simons, 7 Fed. 709.

Form of communication.—U. S. v. Funkhouser, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 15,177, 4 Biss. 176.

From what time claim of informer dates.—In U. S. v. Funkhouser, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 15,177, 4 Biss. 176, it was held that the claim of an informer can only date from the time when he actually gave the information and not from the time when he ascertained the facts.

How informer's share estimated.—In U. S. v. Funkhouser, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 15,177, 4 Biss. 176, it was held that the share of an informer must be taken from the net and not from the gross proceeds. See also Routt v. Feemster, 7 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 131.

Officer as informer.—It seems that any person receiving pay from the government whose duty it is to disclose any information he may receive is "an officer of the United States," within the meaning of the act of 1874, and therefore cannot be an informer. U. S. v. Simons, 7 Fed. 709 [citing U. S. v. Funkhouser, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 15,177, 4 Biss. 176; U. S. v. One Hundred Barrels Distilled Spirits, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 15,946, 1 Lowell 244; U. S. v. Thirty-Four Barrels Whiskey, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,462]. Compare In re One Hundred Barrels Whiskey, 18 Fed. Cas. No. 10,526, 2 Ben. 11. Under Maryland Code Pub. Gen. Laws, art. 38, § 2, providing that all fines and penalties, when recovered, shall be paid to the county or city where the same may be imposed, unless directed to be paid otherwise by the law imposing them, but if there be an informer he shall have half, unless otherwise provided, it has been held that the state had no interest in, and could not maintain, an action against a sheriff to recover fines which he collected and claimed as informer's fees. Sanner v. State, 83 Md. 648, 35 Atl. 158.

To whom information must be given.—To entitle a person to an informer's share under 14 U. S. St. at L. 145, the information must be given by him to some government official who has the power and duty to act thereupon. U. S. v. Funkhouser, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 15,177, 4 Biss. 176.

Action of debt for recovery of share.—A complainant, under a statute imposing a fine, cannot recover in an action of debt that portion of the fine to which, by the terms of the statute, he may be entitled, in the absence of a special provision to that effect, since in the absence of any special provision as to the mode of procedure, the use of the word "fine" in a statute determines that its recovery must be by indictment or information. State v. Marshall, 64 N. H. 549, 15 Atl. 210, 1 L. R. A. 51.

Form of judgment imposing fine.—In a criminal prosecution, under a statute which gives one half of the fine to the prosecutor or person injured, it has been held that the judgment should on conviction be rendered in favor of the state, for the use of the county, for the whole amount of the fine, to be collected as other fines on conviction of misdemeanors, and that there is no authority for a severance of the judgment. Bass v. State, 63 Ala. 108. See also Rawlings v. State, 2 Md. 201, holding that where an act awards one half of a fine to the county, and one half to the informer, and the whole is adjudged to the state, the judgment will not be reversed at the instance of the person convicted.

Execution in favor of informer.—Where judgment imposing a fine in a prosecution by information is entered in favor of the state it has been held that an execution thereon in favor of the informer is invalid. Dupont v. Downing, 6 Iowa 172. To the same effect see Bass v. State, 63 Ala. 108.

Effect of remission by governor on share paid over to informer.—It has been held that after a fine has been paid over to the informer his right thereto is absolute, and a subsequent remission by the governor will not give the person fined a right of action to recover back from the informer the amount of the fine paid to him. I. DEFINITION.

Fire insurance is a contract[1] by which the insurer, for a consideration, agrees to indemnify the insured against loss of or damage to property by fire.[2]

II. NATURE OF CONTRACT; INSURABLE INTEREST.

A. Personal Contract. A contract of fire insurance is in its nature personal, being presumed to rest to some extent on the trust and confidence of the insurer in the insured that the property will not be destroyed by the insured for the purpose of realizing on the contract.[3]

B. Contract of Indemnity. Fire insurance is a contract of indemnity only.[4]

C. Insurable Interest — 1. NECESSARY TO VALIDITY. The definition of the contract as one of indemnity requires that the insured shall have some interest in the property which will be injuriously affected or imperiled by destruction of or injury to the property by fire. If the person procuring or holding the contract of insurance has no such interest the contract is invalid,[5] the objection to such contract being that it is a mere wager on an event in the happening of which the insured has no interest.[6] To render the contract valid, the insured should have an interest in the property at the time of making the contract as well as at the time of loss;[7] but the parties may by contract provide for insurance when the interest attaches, and if during the existence of the risk and at the time of the loss the insured has an interest, he may recover, although when the contract was made his interest had not yet attached;[8] nevertheless if at the time of the loss there is no interest there can be no recovery under the contract.[9]

2. What Constitutes Insurable Interest — a. Rules Stated. Any title or interest in the property, legal or equitable, will support a contract of insurance on such property.[10] Indeed, any interest in or relation to the property, such as that its loss may cause a pecuniary injury to the insured, is sufficient to sustain a contract of insurance.[11] So one who is in the possession and use of property

In North Carolina it was held in Shepherd v. Sawyer, 6 N. C. 26, 5 Am. Dec. 517, that a wagering contract is illegal only when prohibited by statute or against public policy, and therefore that, in the absence of statute, a contract of insurance with reference to property in which the insured has no interest is not necessarily invalid. But this is perhaps the only case in which a purely wagering contract as to loss of property has been sustained in this country. As will appear in discussing insurable interest in the article Marine Insurance, it is competent for the parties to contract with reference to the contingency or loss having already occurred, but only where the contract is for the benefit of one having some interest in the property. And see infra, II, D, 1.

under a claim thereto has an insurable interest, although he may be without either legal or equitable title.[12]

b. Particular Persons Having Such Interest — (i) In General. Applying the rules just stated[13] as to what constitutes an insurable interest it has been held that the following persons among others[14] have an insurable interest in property: Any bailee;[15] a carrier of goods;[16] a consignee of goods with power of sale;[17]

The term "interest" as used in regard to the right to insure does not necessarily imply any property in the subject of the insurance (Sturm v. Atlantic Mut. Ins. Co., 38 N. Y. Super. Ct. 281 [affirmed in 63 N. Y. 77]; Buck v. Chesapeake Ins. Co., 1 Pet. (U. S.) 151, 7 L. ed. 90); and a contingent interest is sufficient (Fenn v. New Orleans Mut. Ins. Co., 53 Ga. 578; Hooper v. Robinson, 98 U. S. 528, 25 L. ed. 219).

The fact that the loss of the property will cause pecuniary damage to the insured gives him an insurable interest, although he has no direct interest in the property itself. Hayes v. Milford Mut. If there be a right in or against the property which some court will enforce upon the property, a right so closely connected with it and so much dependent for value upon the continued existence of it alone as that a loss of the property will cause pecuniary damage to the holder of the right against it, he has an insurable interest. See 28 Cent. Dig. tit. "Insurance," § 144.

21. An assignee for the benefit of creditors may insure the assignor's property, and his insurable interest attaches even before he has filed his bond and qualified as such assignee. Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Adams, 8 Ky. L. Rep. 532; Sibley v. Prescott Ins. Co., 57 Mich. 14, 23 N. W. 473.

22. An executor or administrator of an estate has an insurable interest in the property coming into his possession. Security Ins. Co. v. Kuhn, 108 Ill. App. 1 [affirmed in 207 Ill. 166, 69 N. E. 822]; Herkimer v. Rice, 27 N. Y. 163; Phelps v. Gebhard F. Ins. Co., 9 Bosw. (N. Y.) 404; Globe Ins. Co. v. Boyle, 1 Cinc. Super. Ct. 444; Sheppard v. Peabody Ins. Co., 21 W. Va. 368.

23. An attaching creditor has an insurable interest in the property covered by his attachment. Donnell v. Donnell, 86 Me. 518, 30 Atl. 67; McLaughlin v. Park City Bank, 22 Utah 473, 63 Pac. 589, 54 L. R. A. 343.

24. A mere general creditor, without any specific lien upon property of his debtor, has no insurable interest in such property, for a contract of fire insurance does not cover liability on a debt or guaranty. Bishop v. Clay F. & M. Ins. Co., 49 Conn. 167; Foster v. Van Reed, 5 Hun (N. Y.) 321. But it is said that one who has furnished a dealer with goods which have been incorporated into his stock, relying for payment on the success of the business, has an insurable interest in the stock. Roos v. Merchants' Mut. Ins. Co., 27 La. Ann. 409.

25. General judgment creditor.— A general judgment which may be enforced against any real property of the debtor, in the absence of a levy under such judgment on any specific property, does not give the judgment creditor such an interest in the real property of the debtor as to support insurance on such property. Grevemeyer v. Southern Mut. F. Ins. Co., 62 Pa. St. 340, 1 Am. Rep. 420. This seems to be doubted in Rohrbach v. Germania F. Ins. Co., 62 N. Y. 47, 20 Am. Rep. 451; Spare v. Home Mut. Ins. Co., 15 Fed. 707, 8 Sawy. 618.

It seems that one who has a right to have his claim paid by the sale of specific real estate of a deceased debtor has an insurable interest in the real property left by such debtor which is subject to be taken for the payment of the claim. Creed v. Sun F. Ins. Co., 101 Ala. 522, 14 So. 323, 46 Am. St. Rep. 134, 23 L. R. A. 177; Herkimer v. Rice, 27 N. Y. 163.

26. The grantee in a conveyance which is voidable at the suit of a creditor nevertheless has an insurable interest in the property. Home Ins. Co. v. Allen, 93 Ky. 270, 19 S. W. 743, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 161; German Ins. Co. v. Hyman, 34 Nebr. 704, 52 N. W. 401; Steinmeyer v. Steinmeyer, 64 S. C. 413, 42 S. E. 184. But it is said that the grantee in a conveyance actually and not constructively fraudulent as to creditors has no insurable interest. Home Ins. Co. v. Allen, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 95.

27. A landlord has an insurable interest in the premises and in personal property of the tenant on which he has a lien. Loudoun County Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Ward, 95 Va. 231, 28 S. E. 209.

28. A tenant has an insurable interest in the premises, whether he be a tenant for a fixed term or at will. Schaeffer v. Anchor Mut. F. Ins. Co., 113 Iowa 652, 85 N. W. 985; Georgia Home Ins. But if the property has been conveyed by the husband to the wife, but not to her sole and separate use, as required by statutory provision, the husband still has an insurable made by his joining in the deed.[50] But if the statutes do not authorize the separate and independent ownership by the wife of real property in her own right,[51] and her husband is entitled to the possession of such property, as tenant by curtesy initiate during her life, he has an insurable interest.[52] Likewise a widow has an insurable interest in land in which she has a dower estate.[53] An estate by entirety is an insurable interest.[54] Under the provisions of homestead statutes[55] by which either husband or wife has an interest in the property of the other which cannot be cut off save by his joining in a conveyance or otherwise, either has an insurable interest in the homestead owned by the other.[56]

(III) Judgment Debtor and Purchaser at Judicial Sale. Until title under a judicial sale has absolutely and finally vested in the purchaser and all the rights of the judgment debtor to redeem or have the sale set aside have been lost, such judgment debtor, being the former owner of the property, still has an insurable interest therein.[57] The purchaser, however, at judicial sale has an insurable interest in the property from the time that he acquires a conditional or potential right to such property under his purchase.[58]

(IV) Partner. One partner has such an interest in the partnership property as to be entitled to insure the same in his own name,[59] and of course a partnership may insure the property owned by it, or in which it has an interest.[60]

3. Extinguishment or Change of Interest. As there must be an insurable interest at the time of loss as well as at the time of the making of the contract,[63] a total extinguishment of the interest of the insured in the property after the making of the contract and prior to a loss will prevent recovery under the contract for the loss.[64] But if the insured still has an insurable interest in the property at the time of loss, he may recover, although his interest is not the same as at the time of contract, unless the change has been such as to avoid the policy by some stipulation in the policy itself, providing for a forfeiture.[65]

4. Assignment[66] to Person Without Interest. A fire-insurance policy may be assigned as collateral security by the consent of the company, and it will be immaterial that the assignee has no interest in the property.[67]

D. Subject-Matter — 1. Property Not in Existence. The contract of fire insurance as usually made relates to property assumed to be in existence at the time when, by the terms of the contract, the risk attaches, and if at that time, although without the knowledge of either party, the property is not in existence, there is no valid insurance.[68] But the parties may, by antedating the contract, cover a loss which has already occurred, provided the fact of the loss is not known to the insured.[69] If, however, the loss is known to the insured, but not to the company, the contract is invalid.[70] An agent has no authority to bind his company for insurance of property which to his knowledge has already been destroyed.[71]

2. NATURE OF PROPERTY WHICH MAY BE COVERED — a. Property Which May Be Damaged by Fire. As the insurance is against loss or damage by fire, property such as land, which is not subject to such loss, cannot be insured.[72]

b. Future Interests. Insurance may be effected on a future interest, but the interest must subsist at the time of the loss to give rise to a claim for indemnity.[73]

c. Separate Interests. There may be distinct insurable interests in the same property, and the separate interest of the insured may be covered by a policy.[74]

d. Profits. Any reasonable expectation of profit or advantage to be derived from the thing insured is proper subject of insurance.[75]

e. Prohibited Property. Even though the agent of the company is prohibited from insuring property of a specified character, nevertheless a policy on such property, duly issued, will be binding on the company.[76]

III. THE MAKING OF THE CONTRACT; EXECUTORY CONTRACTS TO INSURE.

A. Parties.[77] There is no peculiarity of the contract of fire insurance differentiating it from other contracts as to the capacity of the parties.[78] Any corporation, association, or individual capable of owning property and contracting with reference thereto may contract for insurance thereon,[79] provided of course such person has an insurable interest, as already explained.[80]

B. Authority of Agent to Contract For Company — 1. SOLICITING AGENTS. An agent of a fire-insurance company, authorized merely to receive and forward applications and collect premiums, is not a general agent to contract for insurance, and cannot make a contract which will be binding on the company.[81]

C. Contracts to Procure Insurance. Where one, whether as insurance agent, broker, or person having an interest in the property, enters into a valid undertaking, whether express or implied, to have property insured, and fails to do so, he is liable in damages for breach of his contract to the person for whose benefit such contract existed.[85] But the contract relied on in such a case must be

Personal contract with agent to renew.— Where the contract is with the agent of a company carrying a policy on the property that it will be renewed in the same or some one mutually binding and supported by a consideration, or the arrangement must be of such a nature as to operate by way of estoppel.[86] The measure of damages for breach of the contract to procure insurance is the amount which might have been recovered under such insurance if procured as agreed,[87] and nominal damages may be recovered, even though no actual loss is shown.[88]

D. Executory Contracts to Insure — 1. Power of Company to Make. The right to make contracts of insurance like any other right of contracting exists as at common law, unless prohibited by statute.[89] Provisions in the statutes or in the charter and by-laws of the company as to the method of executing a policy[90] of insurance, as that it shall be in writing, signed by the officers, shall bear the seal of the company, or shall be countersigned by the agent, do not prevent the making of a valid executory parol contract of insurance which may be enforced against the company.[91]

2. Authority of Agent to Make. An agent duly authorized to bind his company by contracts for insurance may make valid contracts by parol or by a binding slip or memorandum,[92] and a general authority to solicit insurance, receive

3. Method of Making — a. Oral Agreement.[94] There may be an oral agreement for insurance which will be binding on the company before the issuance of a policy.[95]

b. Binding Slip or Receipt. It is usual, however, to issue to the person contracting for insurance some sort of a receipt or memorandum, which is sometimes called a binding slip, evidencing the making of the contract, although not specifying its terms and conditions. Such binding slip or memorandum is evidence of a present contract of insurance between the parties,[96] and the insurance takes effect and is in force from the time the binding receipt or memorandum is delivered to the person contracting for the insurance.[97]

4. Validity. A valid executory contract must, however, be made out, specific, either by express terms or by implication, as to the subject-matter, period, rate, and amount of insurance.[98] If there is no specific agreement as to the period of the insurance,[99] or as to the company in which the insurance is to be taken,[1] the contract will not be enforceable. There must be a consideration for the executory agreement to insure,[2] but an agreement, even implied, to pay the usual premium, will be sufficient to constitute a consideration.[3]

5. Terms and Conditions of the Contemplated Policy. The preliminary agreement not being an executed contract of insurance but contemplating the issuance of a policy which shall contain in full the terms and conditions of the contract, in order to determine what are the terms and conditions contemplated in the preliminary agreement, it is necessary to ascertain the terms and conditions of such a policy as the company were bound to issue in pursuance of such agreement.[4] But it will be presumed that the policy contracted for was such policy as the company was in the habit of issuing to those contracting for insurance.[5]

6. Enforcement — a. In Equity. A court of equity will grant relief for breach of a valid contract to issue a policy of insurance by compelling the delivery of the policy, and this relief may be granted after a loss.[6] But even in an equitable action to compel the issuance of a policy, the court may and can properly, on proof of a loss for which recovery could be had under the policy if it had been issued, enter a money judgment for the recovery of the loss.[7]

b. By Action at Law. The insured is not required, however, to seek relief in equity. He may sue at law for breach of the contract to insure, and recover as damages the amount which could have been recovered had a policy been issued in accordance with the terms of the executory agreement.[8]

The rights of one whose property is destroyed by fire after an oral contract to insure it, but before a policy therefor is issued, are subject to the provisions of the standard policy prescribed by law, and he can recover only by compliance with the conditions required by such policy, including that as to furnishing proofs of loss within a specified time. Hicks v. British America Assur. Co., 162 N. Y. 284, 56 N. E. 743, 48 L. R. A. 424.

An oral agreement for additional insurance retains all conditions of the policy which is added to, except as changed by the verbal contract; and this is true, whether the original policy is valid or not. Green v. Liverpool, etc., Ins. Co., 91 Iowa 615, 60 N. W. 189.

Pleading and proof.— The petition in an action for a loss under an oral contract for insurance must allege the terms and conditions of the policy intended to be issued, and allege in general the terms and specify the performance of the conditions. Trask v. German Ins. Co., 58 Mo. App. 431. Thus it is necessary for plaintiff to show compliance with the terms of such a policy as to notice and proof of loss. Hicks v. British America Assur. Co., 162 N. Y. 284, 56 N. E. 743, 48 L. R. A. 424.

5. Vining v. Franklin F. Ins. Co., 89 Mo. App. 311.

7. TERMINATION BY ISSUANCE OF POLICY. When a policy is issued and accepted in pursuance of a parol agreement for insurance, the liability under the executory contract is terminated, and such contract is merged in the policy.[9] But the liability of the company under the executory contract is not merged in a policy which does not conform to the terms of the preliminary agreement and is not accepted as a substitute therefor.[10] And if, although there is an attempt to issue a policy, such policy does not become valid as a contract of insurance by reason of lack of assent thereto of the company or the assured, then the oral contract of insurance continues in force.[11]

E. Mutuality — 1. IN GENERAL. As in any other contract,[12] there must be mutuality of obligation in order to render the contract of insurance effectual as against either party.[13] If there is any lack of agreement of the parties

If the insured in a mutual company is discharged in bankruptcy, so that he is released from liability on his premium note, the mutuality of the contract of insurance is thereby

as to any essential feature of the contract, the contract cannot be enforced as binding on either party.[14]

2. Application. Generally speaking, there can be no contract of insurance until the application for insurance has been made in some form or manner by the insured;[15] but no formal application is essential to the validity of the contract if it is in fact made and acted upon.[16]

3. Acceptance — a. Essential. Likewise there must be some acceptance of a proposition for insurance by the company; and of course such acceptance must have become effectual to bind the company before the loss, in order that there be a valid insurance covering such loss.[17] But the acceptance may be effectual as a contract to insure, although the policy has not yet been written.[18]

b. Effect of Delay. Acceptance of the application in some form being essential to the validity of the contract, mere delay in acceptance of an application made[19] or failure to notify the insured of the rejection of his application will not constitute an acceptance.[20]

15. Statute of frauds.— An oral contract for

IV. THE POLICY.

A. Its Nature. An insurance policy is a contract, and not a piece of property, and the written instrument is the evidence of a contract between the parties;[25] but when duly executed and delivered, the insured is entitled to the possession of the instrument, and may maintain his right to such possession by appropriate action.[26]

B. Form — 1. In General. The rules applicable to written contracts determine the sufficiency of a policy of insurance,[27] in the absence of statutory provision on the subject.[28]

2. Statutory Forms. By statute in several states[29] a standard form of policy[30] is prescribed, which must be employed in entering into the contract, and no provisions not found in the prescribed form will be enforced.[31] In other states[32] certain conditions are specified, but the authorities of the state are given power to approve such forms as they may deem proper.

C. Execution — 1. By Company; Countersigned by Agent. It is usual for companies to execute blank policies in due form, and place them in the hands of agents, to be filled out and delivered; and under such method of doing business it is usual to stipulate in the policy, as thus executed in blank, that it shall not be valid until countersigned by the agent who issues it. Under such a stipulation a policy not thus countersigned is not valid.[33] But the countersigning may be waived, and the policy nevertheless valid, if the actual execution of the policy under proper authority is otherwise shown.[34] insurance is not invalid under the statute of frauds. Sanborn v. Fireman's Ins. Co., 16 Gray (Mass.) 448, 77 Am. Dec. 419; Roger Williams Ins. Co. v. Carrington, 43 Mich. 252, 5 N. W. 303. See also Frauds, Statute of.

A by-law of a mutual insurance company providing that a policy may at the request of the insured be indorsed payable to the mortgagee as his interest may appear, is not obligatory, and hence a failure to do so does not relieve the insurer from liability. Loomis v. Jefferson County Patrons' Fire Relief Assoc., 92 N. Y. App. Div. 601, 87 N. Y. Suppl. 5.

28. See infra, IV, B, 2.

29. As in Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Wisconsin, etc.

30. The New York standard form is not only prescribed in some of the other states, but is used by many companies in states where it is not specifically prescribed, and is given in full in the note. Form of the policy is set out in full in Wis. St. (1898) §§ 1941, 1943–1964.

31. In Massachusetts the standard form may be to some extent added to or modified by attaching a slip to the policy. Quinn v. Philadelphia Fire Assoc., 180 Mass. 560, 62 N. E. 980. 2. SEALING. In the absence of some requirement in the charter of the company that it shall contract only under seal,[35] it is not essential or usual that the policy be a sealed instrument.[36]

3. INCORPORATING OR ATTACHING OTHER DOCUMENTS OR PAPERS — a. Application or Collateral Stipulation. Stipulations in collateral instruments may be made parts of the policy, by express reference;[37] but such collateral instruments not expressly incorporated into the policy by reference or otherwise, such as an application on which the policy is issued, are not to be taken into account in construing the terms of the policy.[38] In several states[39] it is specifically provided by statute that any application or other collateral instrument, although expressly referred to in the policy, and by terms made a part thereof, shall not be binding as against assured, unless actually incorporated into the policy, or a copy is indorsed thereon or attached thereto.[40]

by-laws of a mutual company may be incorporated into the contract by reference.[41] It is usual, however, to incorporate specific provisions of the articles and by-laws relative to the particular contract of insurance, into the express contract, or print them on the back thereof.[42]

D. Delivery — 1. In General. In the absence of any other evidence to show assent of the company to the making of a contract of insurance, delivery of the policy must be shown.[43] But where a policy has been duly executed in compliance with an application on the part of the insured, so that the minds of the parties have fully met as to the terms and conditions of the contract, a manual delivery of the policy to the insured is not essential to render it binding on the company.[44]

41. The articles of incorporation and the by-laws of a mutual association enter into and become part of the contract with each member of the company. Farmers' Mut. Hail Ins. Delivery by an agent whose authority is unrevoked will be binding on the company, although the insured has been notified of an intention to revoke the authority of the agent. Lightbody v. North American Ins. Co., 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 18.

If the agent retains the policy for his own personal security, for reimbursement of premium advanced for the insured, the contract is binding on the company. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Pekor, 106 Ga. 1, 31 S. E. 779.

If the policy has been put into the hands of the company's agent, to be delivered to the insured, and nothing remains but to make such delivery, without any further action on the part of the insured being necessary, except the mere formal act of receiving the policy, then their agent is presumed to hold the policy for the insured, and the contract is complete and binding.

Massachusetts.— Wheeler v. Watertown F. Ins. Co., 131 Mass. 1.

2. After Loss. If the contract has become binding by the issuance of the policy and the placing it in the hands of an agent for delivery, then the fact that such delivery is not actually made to the insured until after loss has occurred will not defeat recovery by the insured.[45]

E. Acceptance. In general it is essential, as in case of other written contracts, that the instrument, to be binding on the parties, must not only have been executed by the one party, but also accepted by the other.[46] But by acceptance without objection the insured becomes bound by the terms of the policy.[47] The assent of the insured, such as to make a binding contract, may, however, be shown without proof of actual acceptance.[48]

V. Premiums and Assessments.

A. Premiums — 1. Necessity of Payment — a. In General. The consideration for the carrying of the risk of the policy by the insurer is the premium paid by the insured, and the payment of such consideration, unless waived by the insurer, or unless a different agreement is made in relation thereto by the parties, is a condition necessary to the operation of the policy.[49] Provisions to this effect in the policy, being mere restatements of the law, have been considered by the courts as valid.[50]

b. Extension of Credit — (I) In General. But while this is the general inference when nothing is said as to payment of the premium, the presumption may be rebutted by showing that there was an agreement, either implied from past dealings between the insurer or its agent and the insured,[51] or made at the time of the issuance of the policy, that payment of the premium would not be a prerequisite, or that credit was to be given.[52] When no time is fixed by the company within which the proposition to insure must be accepted and the premium paid, the law fixes a reasonable time.[53]

(II) Authority of Agent. An agent who has power to countersign and deliver policies and who is responsible to the company for the premiums and their collection on all policies issued by him binds the company by an agreement to extend credit to the insured.[54]

c. Waiver of Prepayment. A condition that the payment of the premium is

But when the provisions of the policy are that it shall not take effect until payment of the premium, there is sometimes a contrary holding, the court regarding the insured chargeable with the provision of the policy despite the agent's agreement for to be regarded as a condition precedent also may be waived by the insurer, in part,[55] or wholly.[56] If the insured be prevented by the insurer from performing such a condition the insurer cannot assert such a failure.[57] An unconditional delivery of the policy by the agent to the insured amounts to a waiver of the condition of payment in advance of the inception of the risk.[58]

2. WHAT IS PAYMENT — a. In General. A valid payment may be made in other ways than in cash if there has been an assent thereto by the insurer or its agent.[59] Thus payment may be made by check [60] or by note.[61]

b. Payment by Insurer's Agent. As the payment of the premium in cash may be waived by an agent authorized to deliver policies and receive payment, an agreement between the insured and the agent that the latter will be responsible to the company for the amount and hold the insured as his personal debtor amounts to such a payment that the insured's rights under the policy immediately vest.[62] This is true a fortiori if the company has actually accepted the agent's credit, for it is a waiver of the requirement of cash payment by the insured.[63] If the agent is the personal debtor of the insured and agrees to pay the debt by payment of the premium, this has been held to constitute such payment that the insured is protected in the absence of fraud.[64]

c. Payment to Insurer's Agent. Payment to the agent of the insurer authorized to receive the same is equivalent to payment to the insurer,[65] and the policy has its inception from the instant such payment is made.[66] And it is no defense to the company that the agent has not remitted at all, or that remittance has not been made until after the loss.[67] Although the policy provides that payment shall be at the home office, it is sufficient if made to a qualified agent;[68] but such a payment is not sufficient if the insurer expressly notifies the insured that no agent is qualified to receive it.[69] It must of course appear that the person acting as the recipient of the money was actually the agent of the insurer and authorized to collect for it.[70] If the insurer has intrusted the policy to its agent for delivery to the insured, and the latter in reliance thereon has paid the premium to such agent, the insurer cannot be heard to say that such agent has not authority to collect.[71] The effect of a stipulation contained in a policy that

3. Return of Premiums Paid — a. Unearned Premiums. Inasmuch as the consideration for the payment of the premium is the carrying of a risk by the insurer, if the risk did not attach, and in consequence the risk was never actually carried by the insurer, there has been a failure of consideration and the insured is entitled to a return of his consideration paid, namely, the premium.[73] If, however, the risk has once attached, even for a moment, although the policy may be afterward forfeited, the insured is not entitled to a return of the premium he has paid.[74]

Right to surrender.— It must be borne in mind that statutes in some states and provisions in many policies reserve to the insured the right to terminate the insurance and recover the unearned premiums. 75. If the insured by deception and false pretenses induced the insurer to take a risk condition providing for a forfeiture, the insured has no claim on the insurer for any unearned premium.[76] On the other hand, if the insurer or its agent has induced the insured to take out the policy by false representations, the insured can at any time rescind the contract and recover back his premiums.[77] If the insured has reserved the right to rescind the contract should the policy on due consideration prove unsatisfactory, his right to recover the premiums paid above the short rates, or to recover a note in its entirety given for the premium, rests upon the contract so made.[78] If the risk attached only in part to the subject-matter of the insurance, and the contract is severable, there may be a return of the premium as to that part as to which the consideration has failed.[79]

c. Nature of Action to Recover. An action to recover premiums is not an action on the policy, but a distinct and separate proceeding, supportable on principles of quasi-contract,[80] and thus is not barred by a provision in the policy that all actions thereon must be brought within a specified time.[81]

4. Who Liable For — a. Person For Whose Benefit Policy Is Procured. Even though a person's name does not appear in the application for insurance, he is liable for the premiums if in fact he was the principal, although the policy was procured by another.[83]

b. Assignee or Mortgagee. A mere covenant in a policy that the assignee thereof shall be liable for the premium does not render the assignee so liable to the insurer when an assignment is made;[84] although, as between the assignor and the assignee, such a provision may be effectual.[85] Where a trust deed or mortgage provides for the maintenance of insurance on the policy described in it, a clause in the policy that the beneficiary on demand shall pay the same amounts to a contract on the part of the beneficiary to pay the premium if the mortgagee fails to do so;[86] but a mere transfer of a policy by way of collateral security throws upon the mortgagee, in the absence of any express provision, no obligation to pay the premiums.[87]

B. Assessments — 1. Premium Notes — a. Use and Nature. Companies doing business under the mutual plan provide for the payment of sums as a consideration for carrying the risk either by means of annual or stated dues or by assessments levied per capita on its entire membership when losses occur,[88] or by means of assessments as funds are needed to pay the insurer's liabilities, levied on notes[89]

J. 88, holding that the assignee's liability for premiums arises only when he enters into a contract with the insurer, and that it arises from the new agreement. It was said in Storms v. Canada Farmers' Mut. Ins. Co., 22 U. C. C. P. 75, that the non-payment of a cash premium note given by the original assured cannot, after assignment assented to by the insurer, be set up to defeat the claim of the assignee, he not having been aware even of the existence of the note.

Particularly is this true if the mortgagee expressly requests the insurer not to cancel, promising himself to pay if the mortgagor does not, and the insurer, in reliance on such promise, fails to cancel. 89. Stock notes.— Some mutual companies are permitted by their charters and by-laws to receive from their members notes payable in a different manner called "stock-notes" or "absolute funds." Such notes are assessable for losses accruing otherwise than during the maker's membership in the company. Long Pond Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Houghton, 6 Gray (Mass.) 77; Nashua F. Ins. Co. v. Moore, 55 N. H. 48. See also infra, V, B, 5. They are not merely subject to ratable assessment but may be deemed matured, unless otherwise provided, at the pleasure of the company. Dana v. Munro, 38 Barb. (N. Y.) 528. A company organized, however, solely on the assessment plan is not permitted to receive stock notes. Corey v. Sherman, 96 Iowa 114, 64 N. W. 828, 32 L. R. A. 514. Although if nothing appears in either charter or statute limiting the mode and manner in which the company may do business, the issuance of policies upon either the stock note (Continental Fire Assoc. v. Masonic Temple Co., 26 Tex. Civ. App. 139, 62 S. W. 930), or cash premium plan (Davis v. Oshkosh Upholstery Co., 82 Wis. 488, 52 N. W. 771), is not ultra vires. But see Bradford v. Mutual F. Ins. Co., 112 Iowa 495, 84 N. W. 693, where a mutual company was held incapable of receiving premiums. If a mutual company be permitted to issue policies in return for stock notes, it is not precluded thereby given by each member upon entering into the mutual relationship, as an evidence of indebtedness. The amount of such notes is the maximum that any member can be called upon to pay,[90] and assessments are to be levied only proportionally thereon upon all the members of the company at the time of the loss.[91] In the absence of statutory requirement no particular form is necessary to constitute a valid note for this purpose.[92] Such a note payable to the insurance company or "the treasurer for the time being" is a good note for the company.[93] While the note is given as the consideration for the policy and in such a sense is a part of a single transaction, yet in an action on the note it has been held that the policy is not admissible in evidence to vary the terms of or to insert additional provisions into the note, unless the policy be expressly referred to or made a part of the note.[94] A premium note is transferable like any other note, there being no implied agreement on the part of the insurer to retain it until due.[95]

b. Defenses in Suits on Premium Notes — (1) In General.[96] That a loss due defendant on a policy has not been paid is a defense to the note.[97] The insolvency of a mutual company is a defense against further assessments on a premium note,[98] but not against sums past due;[99] nor is it if the note given was not one merely subjecting the maker to assessments but rendering him absolutely liable.[1] In making an assessment upon premium notes, amounts paid in by way of cash premiums are to be allowed for.[2] from issuing policies upon its fundamental mutual assessment plan. Toll v. Whitney, 18 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 161. Co. v. Clark, 12 Gray (Mass.) 165, where there was also a second count to the declaration inserted upon the theory of an assumpsit, there being also a count upon the note, the court admitted the policy in evidence. In Lovet v. Johnson, 2 Root (Conn.) 114, the note being expressed to be for the premium on an insurance policy, the court took notice of a stipulation of the policy for a reduction of the premium.

Declarations of the agent of the company at the time the note was made were held admissible, upon the theory that the note was received, although absolute upon its face, in connection with the provisions of the charter and by-laws of the company. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. v. Jarvis, 22 Conn. 133.

(II) ILLEGALITY. The validity of the charter of the company cannot be inquired into in an action on the premium note;[3] but if a company is doing business contrary to the provisions of the charter, a note given in furtherance of such illegal business cannot be enforced.[4] If an insurance company fails to comply with the statutes of a state requiring certain acts as a condition of its doing business within that state, this may be set up as a defense in an action on a premium note.[5]

(III) FAILURE OF CONSIDERATION. That the note was given without a consideration is fatal to the same in whole or in part.[6]

(IV) CONTRACT NOT EMBODIED IN POLICY. If an insured gives his note with the agreement that a certain kind of policy is to be issued, a defense that certain provisions were omitted therefrom is valid when he is sued on the note;[7]

but if the insured has failed to assert the variance and has had the benefit of the policy as it stood, he will be estopped to set up the defense in an action on the note.[8]

(v) Fraud. Actual fraud on the part of an insurance company[9] or its agent whereby the insured was induced to take out the insurance is a defense in an action brought against him on the premium note by the company,[10] or by its transferee with notice.[11] If the insured signed the notes without reading the policy, he is barred from asserting that the agent gave a different policy than that agreed upon;[12] but illiteracy of the insured is an excuse for reliance upon the agent's statements as to the nature of the policy.[13] A representation at the time of issuing the policy that a company is solvent when in fact it is unable to pay its losses is fraudulent and a defense to the maker of a premium note.[14] Oral statements by the agent as to what future assessments will be, in contradiction to the provisions of the policy, do not amount to a fraud.[15] If the insured wishes to assert the fraud he must do so seasonably, however, and cannot set up the same by way of defense to the notes after a long lapse of time, inasmuch as his proper remedy was by way of a rescission in equity, before he obtained the benefit of the insurance;[16]

When the policy contains a stipulation that "every . . . person, forwarding applications or receiving premiums, is the agent of the applicant, and not of the company" the Massachusetts courts have given effect thereto and have declared that the fraudulent representations of such a person are no defense to the insured. Shawmut Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Stevens, 9 Allen (Mass.) 332. Also but fraud, being an equitable defense, is not available when the rights of innocent parties have intervened.[17]

(VI) OFFICIAL DELINQUENCY. Inasmuch as the officials of a mutual concern are to a certain extent agents of the various members in the performance of their official duties, their delinquency or derelictions are in general no ground of defense in a suit on a premium note.[18] So mere delay in levying or collecting an assessment is not generally regarded as a good defense to a premium note.[19] However, the fact that an assessment is excessive and illegal embraces more than a defense of delinquency and is available.[20]

(VII) SUSPENSION OF POLICY. An insurance company may recover premiums earned prior to any default on the part of a policy-holder in paying instalments, despite a provision of the policy that it shall lapse during delinquency.[21] If there be a provision that on failure to pay an instalment the entire note falls due, the fact that the policy also provides for a suspension during the period of default does not defeat the first provision.[22] The entire amount of the note may be enforced despite the suspension,[23] except that, when the policy provides that it

18. Davis v. Sharp, 2 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 197, 2 West. L. Month. 40; Lycoming F. Ins. Co. v. Newcomb, 4 Leg. Gaz. (Pa.) 409. Thus a violation of a statute prohibiting such a company from employing solicitors is no defense. Randall v. Phelps County Mut. Hail Ins. Assoc., 2 Nebr. (Unoff.) 530, 89 N. W. 398. Nor is a champertous contract for the collection of the assessments. Connecticut River Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Way, 62 N. H. 622. Nor is the fact that the officers were improperly receiving compensation. Thropp v. Susquehanna Mut. F. Ins. Co., 125 Pa. St. 427, 17 Atl. 473, 11 Am. St. Rep. 909. shall be null and void during default, for such a period the insured is not liable for premiums.[24]

(VIII) CANCELLATION, SURRENDER, AND FORFEITURE. The fact that the failure to pay a premium renders a policy void does not affect the consideration for which the note was given;[25] but a forfeiture which will relieve a company from liability on the policy will ordinarily relieve the insured from future liability on his premium notes;[26] not, however, for premiums past due.[27] The insured remains liable for future premiums despite an unexecuted agreement to cancel a policy and surrender the note.[28] The insured cannot set up as a defense his own defaults or misrepresentations when the insurer has elected to waive the same.[29]

(IX) STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.[30] Inasmuch as the premium note does not become due until the assessment has been made,[31] the statute of limitations does not begin to run upon the customary premium note until an assessment is levied.[32]

2. Who Liable For. Upon a complete assignment the assignee becomes liable for assessments and the assignor is discharged,[33] and his liability does not revive on a reassignment to him as security for a debt.[34]

3. By Whom Levied. The assessment is to be levied by the person or body charged with that duty by the by-laws or fundamental law of the company.[35] This is usually the board of directors.[36] As this is a discretionary power it cannot be delegated,[37] although a complete ratification of the act of a functionary named to levy an assessment would amount to the exercise of that discretionary power and hence be valid.[38] But other persons than the directors may be called on by the laws of the company to determine the necessity for an assessment.[39]

4. Amount. The face of the premium note is the maximum amount assessable.[40] But, except in the case of stock notes or absolute funds, which are collectable at the pleasure of the assessing body without assessment,[41] the note is to be paid only when needed to pay the obligations of the company,[42] and when an assessment has been validly laid by the assessing power.[43] And each note of every member without regard to the amount he has already paid or the length of time he has been a member[44] must be assessed ratably[45] in the proportion which the amount of his note bears to the aggregate amount of all the deposit notes.[46] In determining the amount of assessments to be levied, the directors are not required to assume that all notes will be promptly met, but may consider the possibility of being unable to collect in full and determine the percentage of the assessment accordingly.[47] If a particular mode of assessment be provided in the charter or by-laws this must be followed, although the directors may consider another more equitable,[48] unless such method in view of subsequent legislation has become illegal.[49] The assessments need not be after each loss or necessarily in exact amount to the particular loss sustained, an approximation, so long as it is equitable and ratable, being valid.[50]

5. For What Purposes Levied — a. For Losses — (i) In General. In theory a mutual company levies assessments only to meet losses as they accrue. In practice, as this would lead to an interminable number of assessments and many of extremely small per cent upon the face of the note, more often a levy and assessment is made at rarer intervals and at such times provision is made for a number of past losses as well as reasonably for anticipated future losses. In some instances such levies are upheld if made within the reasonable discretion of

An assessment made on the face of a premium note, although payments have been made thereon, is proportional when made in the same manner on all notes of the same class. Connecticut River Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Whipple, 61 N. H. 61.

Just assessment.— An assessment by a mutual insurance company on all the members on the basis of the "schedule premium," which was found by multiplying the amount of insurance by the percentage or rate of the risk, is just and equitable. Susquehanna Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Leavy, 136 Pa. St. 499, 20 Atl. 502, 505.

Void assessment.— A formal assesment on a premium note given to a mutual insurance company to the entire amount of the note, without any inquiry or determination as to the amount of losses and of premium notes liable to be assessed therefor, is void, and the omission cannot be supplied by proof, upon the trial of an action upon the note, that such assessment would have been proper. Sands v. Graves, 58 N. Y. 94.

Where the business of an insurance company had been carried on, partly on the mutual and partly on the stock plan, and moneys had been received for premiums under the latter plan, which moneys were appropriated to the payment of losses, thus relieving early members on the mutual system from assessments on their notes, and leaving others to be assessed for subsequent losses, it was held that there was no remedy for this inequality, and that the subsequent losses must be borne by those whose notes were in force at the time they occurred. A company cannot by contract limit the number of assessments that will be required, for all its losses must be paid, and hence a greater number of assessments than those agreed upon may be necessary. Morgan v. Hog Raisers' Mut. Ins. Co., 62 Nebr. 446, 87 N. W. 145.

Improper amount.— An error in the amount of an assessment, as stated in the notice arising from miscalculation, will not prevent a recovery of the amount actually due. Thropp v. Susquehanna Mut. F. Quaker City Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Notter, 15 Pa. Super. Ct. 596.

the directors.[51] In others, most of such cases arising from a construction of a fundamental statute or by-law, it is asserted that the power to levy an assessment is limited by the amount of losses, sustained and unpaid at the time of making the assessment.[52] And in case the amount in excess of past losses is unreasonable, no special circumstances being shown to justify the excess, the assessment would everywhere be held invalid.[53]

(II) DURING LIFE OF POLICY A member of a mutual insurance company cannot be assessed for losses sustained before he became a member of the company.[54] Nor is a member liable to assessment for losses occurring after he has ceased to be a member.[55] The rule is the same if the policy has been declared forfeited.[56] The company in short must show that the loss accrued during the life of the policy of the member assessed.[57] But during the existence of his policy

the insured is liable for his proportion of every loss arising.[58] And this even though the subject-matter of the insurance be alienated or destroyed unless an actual surrender of the policy is made,[59] and all prior assessments paid.[60] After the cancellation of his policy, a member of a mutual company, while not liable for losses arising subsequently to the date he ceases to be a member, is still assessable for losses arising prior to that time, to the amount of his deposit note.[61] The rule is the same in case the membership has come to an end by the termination of the policy by other means than by cancellation.[62]

presumption of regularity in all mere formalities obtains.[73] It is necessary that the company should show affirmatively the necessity of a levy and that the same has been done pursuant to its act of incorporation and by-laws.[74] To this end it is necessary that the statement of the condition of the assets of the company upon which the levy is based should be sufficient to enable a member to judge of the necessity for the assessment he is called on to pay.[75] Thus while lumped items are improper,[76] a setting out of all the details is superfluous.[77] It is not necessary that the resolution levying the assessment should specify the names of each member assessed or the precise sums required to be paid by each member; if the percentage is fixed, the court regards the levy as sufficiently certain, for that is certain which can be made certain;[78] but members liable to an assessment cannot be omitted therefrom, for this violates the rule requiring a proportionate levy, and an assessment which knowingly does so is invalid.[79] Every assessment levied by a company should include all losses arising down to the time of the levy,[80] but it need not include contested or litigated claims until they are established by a court of competent jurisdiction.[81]

b. The Notice. No notice to the members of the directors' intention to levy an assessment is required.[82] But notice of the levy of the assessment must be given fully and legally to each member before he can be held personally upon his note.[83] A demand is, however, unnecessary unless stipulated for or reasonably implied.[84] When no mode is prescribed by the by-laws the notice may be either written or verbal.[85] In the absence of specific requirement mailing a notice to the last known address of the member is sufficient;[86] but if a particular sort of notice be required by the by-laws nothing else will suffice.[87] A demand for the payment of an assessment is a sufficient notice of the levying of the assessment.[88]

c. Default, Penalties, Interest, Etc. If the policy and note provide that, in case of a default in the payment of an assessment, the entire amount of the note shall become due and payable, plaintiff upon showing such default may have judgment for the balance unpaid upon the note, although in general an execution can only issue for future assessments and costs as they accrue.[89] But it appears generally speaking that a provision that a certain sum of money shall be due and payable or that a large rate of interest shall be chargeable upon the failure of the member to pay his assessments is a penalty and therefore will not be enforced.[90] On general principles of the law of damages interest[91] should be recoverable for failure to pay an assessment properly levied from the date on which payment thereof became due.[92]

7. Classes of Members; Liability. A mutual insurance company has ordinarily no right to divide its risks and capital into classes and restrict the liability upon stock notes to the class in which they are placed. The insured has the right to call upon the whole capital of the company and require an assessment upon all the stock notes.[93] If, however, the charter permits a separation of risks into classes the obligations and rights of the members in the different classes may be kept separate and a member be liable only for losses arising in his division, as well as able only to enforce payment of a loss he may sustain against the members of his class,[94] provided that the loss may be fully paid by assessments within that class, for the notes of the members of a different class must be assessed if such means be insufficient.[95]

8. Insurer's Lien. The charter of a company, or the statutes under which a charter is granted, frequently give the company a lien on the property insured for unpaid premiums. The right is also frequently reserved by the policy. This lien so reserved is good as against the insured so long as he retains title;[96] but is lost by a sale of the property to a bona fide purchaser,[97] and a mortgagee is deemed a "purchaser."[98] Such a lien is not general upon any property of the insured, but only upon the particular property insured against which it is reserved.[99] The lien may be filed even after the expiration of the policy.[1] The foreclosure of such lien is an equitable action in its nature.[2]

VI. VALIDITY OF CONTRACT OR POLICY IN GENERAL.

A. Effect of Want of Assent. A policy issued by an insurance agent acting without knowledge or consent of either party is of course not valid.[3]

B. Effect of Fraud or Mistake.[4] Fraud or mistake as to the substantial terms or subject-matter of the contract will render it void.[5] But to avoid the contract on the ground of fraudulent inducement or representation, it must appear that the representation or inducement was material to the contract.[6]

C. Effect of Illegality — 1. In General. If the policy is void as being in violation of statutory provisions, there can be no recovery thereon.[7] The fact, however, that the company is empowered by its charter to make contracts in the jurisdiction in which it is created will not render a policy of insurance on goods not within such jurisdiction invalid.[8]

2. Against Public Policy. If the policy is void by reason of being against public policy there can be no recovery thereon.[9] But the mere fact that the insured attempts to protect himself by a policy against loss that may be due to his own fault will not render the contract invalid as against public policy.[10]

3. Property Used in Unlawful Business. If the subject-matter of the insurance is property employed in an unlawful business the policy will be void.[11]

D. Partial Invalidity. Where the contract is invalid as to a part of the risk, it may be enforced as to that part as to which it is not invalid, if the two parts can be separated.[12] Agreements or stipulations in a policy which are forbidden by law will be disregarded, and the contract sustained.[13]

Such contracts are made in order to afford the assured protection in his illegal acts. Shaw, Ch. J., says: 'Where the direct purpose of a contract is to effect, advance, or encourage acts in violation of law, it is void. But if the contract sought to be enforced is collateral and independent, though in some measure connected with acts done in violation of law, the contract is not void.' Boardman v. Merrimack Mut. E. Estoppel,[14] Waiver, or Ratification — 1. On Part of Insurer — a. As to Informality in Execution of Contract. As against any defects or informalities in the execution of the formal contract, an estoppel of the party who could otherwise complain will result from his act in subsequently treating the contract as valid after knowledge of the defect or informality.[15] But a contract forbidden by law cannot be made binding by estoppel.[16]

b. As to Prepayment of Premium — (i) By Officer or Agent. One clothed with apparent general authority to deliver policies may waive the requirement as to prepayment.[17] A mutual company whose articles or by-laws forbid the delivery of a policy without prepayment of the premium will, however, not be estopped by the act of an officer in issuing a policy without compliance with such condition.[18]

(ii) By Custom or Course of Dealing.[19] Authority to waive prepayment, even as against express stipulations of the policy, may be inferred from a custom of dealing on the part of the company's agent known to and acquiesced in by it.[20]

Thus it is competent to show a course of dealing between the company and its agents,

(III) By Delivery of Policy. It is usually made a condition precedent to the taking effect of the policy that the premium be paid; but this condition may be waived by delivering the policy without insisting upon such requirement.[21]

(IV) By Acknowledgment of Receipt in Policy. Where the policy duly executed and delivered recites that the premium has been paid, the company will be estopped from questioning its validity on the ground that the premium was not paid.[22]

c. Authority of Officer or Agent to Estop.[23] An officer or agent having authority to act for the company in contracting insurance may in general bind the company by a waiver amounting to an estoppel.[24] But in the case of mutual companies in which all the members are policy-holders estoppel by acts of officers or agents is not so conclusive.[25] However a mutual company represented by duly

VII. Renewals.

A. Nature and Effect — 1. New Contract. A valid renewal gives rise to a new contract of insurance which requires the assent of both parties, and a new consideration.[28] Like any other contract[29] it is to be established by a preponderance of the evidence.[30]

2. Embodying Terms of Former Policy. Although the renewal constitutes a new contract, nevertheless its terms are to be determined by reference to the

27. One who accepts a policy of insurance without dissent will be presumed to have knowledge of its contents and to have assented thereto, and will be estopped to deny that its provisions are binding upon him.

Effect of acceptance see supra, IV, E.

Fraud.— Of course it is open to the insured to show that he was fraudulently misled as to the contents of the policy. Wyman v. Gillett, 54 Minn. 536, 56 N. W. 167.

Delay in making objection.— The retention of a policy for a considerable period without objection makes the showing of estoppel stronger. Plympton v. Dunn, 148 Mass. 523, 20 N. E. 180; Susquehanna Mu F. Ins. Co. v. Oberholtzer, 172 Pa. St. 223, 32 Atl. 1105, 1108; Schofield v. Leach, 15 Pa. Super. Ct. 354; Fennell v. Zimmerman, 96 Va. 197, 31 S. E. 22.

Alteration of policy.— Where the policy appears to have had a slip attached thereto, it will be presumed that such slip was attached at the time of delivery. Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Davis, 59 Mo. App. 405.

29. See Contracts, 9 Cyc. 213, 259 note 95, 272 note 66, 480 note 25.

Seal.— Even though the policy is a sealed instrument, the renewal need not be under seal. Lockwood v. Middlesex Mut. Assur. Co., 47 Conn. 553.

Fraud of the insured in procuring a renewal, with knowledge that the property has been destroyed, concealing the fact from the company, will defeat recovery under the renewal. Nippolt v. Firemen's Ins. Co., 57 Minn. 275, 59 N. W. 191.

Estoppel.— The renewal contract may become effectual by estoppel. Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Hale, 67 Ark. 433, 55 S. W. 486.

30. McCabe v. Ætna Ins. Co., 9 N. D. 19, 81 N. W. 426, 47 L. R. A. 641.

Parol.— The renewal, as well as the original contract may be made out by parol evidence. Roberts v. Germania F. Ins. Co., 71 Ga. 478; Commonwealth v. Mechanics' Mut. F. Ins. Co., 120 Mass. 495; Post v. Ætna Ins. Co., 43 Barb. (N. Y.) 351; Cohen v. Continental F. Ins. Co., 67 Tex. 325, 3 S. W. 296, 60 Am. Rep. 24. Parol contracts see supra, III, D, 3, a; III, F.

Custom.— An alleged custom of companies to renew insurance policies without special request will not in itself be sufficient evidence to establish a renewal, unless it is of such nature as to be binding on the insured, terms and conditions in the original policy, which will be deemed to be continued in force, except as altered or modified in the contract of renewal.[31]

B. Power of Agent. An agent having authority to make contracts of insurance by issuance of policies or otherwise is presumed to have authority to renew policies already in force.[32]

C. Agreements to Renew. An agreement to renew insurance in force will be presumed to have reference to the terms and conditions of such existing insurance.[33] But a mere indefinite executory agreement on the part of the agent for renewal of insurance will not bind the company.[34] as well as on the company. Nippolt v. Firemen's Ins. Co., 57 Minn. 275, 59 N. W. 191.

See 28 Cent. Dig. tit. "Insurance," § 276 et seq.

If a new policy is delivered to the insured in connection with the renewal, he will be presumed to have assented to the terms of such policy, although they may differ from the terms of the former policy. Thomson v. Southern Mut. Ins. Co., 90 Ga. 78, 15 S. E. 652.

The application for the former policy will be considered as containing the representations on which the new contract is founded. American F. Ins. Co. v. Nugent, 7 Ky. L. Rep. 598.

Change of title, interest, or hazard.— Any change in the title to the property or the interest of the insured therein, or any increase of hazard not made known to the company and which would have avoided the former policy under the terms thereof, will also avoid the renewal. Firemen's Ins. Co. v. Floss, 67 Md. 403, 10 Atl. 139, 1 Am. St. Rep. 398; Garrison v. Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Co., 56 N. J. L. 235, 28 Atl. 8; Cole v. Germania F. Ins. Co., 99 N. Y. 36, 1 N. D. Renewal Receipts. The renewal receipt is more than a mere receipt for money; it is evidence of a contract.[35] But it is an extension of the original policy, and not a substitute therefor.[36]

E. Payment of Premium. Prepayment of the premium on renewal is essential under the same conditions as are applicable to the prepayment of the premium for original insurance.[37]

VIII. ASSIGNMENT[38] OR TRANSFER OF POLICY.

A. As Giving Assignee Right to Proceeds — 1. ASSIGNABILITY. An insurance policy, while not assignable at law,[39] because at law a chose in action may not be assigned, is assignable in equity, and all the interest of the assignor thereby vests in the assignee and can be asserted by him against the assignor.[40] An assignment of the proceeds of the insurance as distinct from an assignment of the policy is valid, and will transfer to the assignee the right to such proceeds;[41]

United States.— In re Wittenberg Veneer, etc., Co., 108 Fed. 593; Aultman v. McConnell, 34 Fed. 724.

See 28 Cent. Dig. tit. "Insurance," § 468 et seq.

Nature of such assignment.— Such assignment is of course subject to all equities and defenses existing in favor of the company against the insured. Matthews v. General Mut. Ins. Co., 9 La. Ann. 590; Ames v. Richardson, 29 Minn. 330, 13 N. W. 137. Like any other assignment it may be void on account of misrepresentation or fraud. Frank v. Tolman, 75 Ill. 648; Derrick v. Lamar Ins. Co., 74 Ill. 404. And if void for any reason, the insured may recover, regardless of the assignment. Lett v. Guardian F. Ins. Co., 125 N. Y. 82, 25 N. E. 1088 [affirming 52 Hun 570, 5 N. Y. Suppl. 526]; Commonwealth Ins. Co. v. Trask, 8 Phila. (Pa.) 32. It seems that an equitable assignment of the and no notice thereof need be given to the insurer to complete this right.[42] Even if there is a provision in the policy against assignment before or after loss, without consent of the company, such provision will not render invalid an assignment made after loss without consent, for such an assignment relates to the cause of action and not to the policy.[43] The provision against assignment can only be taken advantage of by the company.[44]

2. WHAT CONSTITUTES SUCH ASSIGNMENT. The intention of the parties that an assignment should take place is determinative, and no particular form is necessary in order to transfer an equitable interest in the proceeds to the assignee.[45] It is proceeds of the insurance may be made before loss (Russ v. Waldo Mut. Ins. Co., 52 Me. 187; Frink v. Hampden Ins. Co., 45 Barb. (N. Y.) 384, 1 Abb. Pr. N. S. 343, 31 How. Pr. 30; Commonwealth Ins. Co. v. Trask, 8 Phila. (Pa.) 32), but not if the policy prohibits assignment as collateral security (Lynde v. Newark F. Ins. Co., 139 Mass. 57, 29 N. E. 222). After the payment of the debt the complete right to the proceeds is in the insured. Griswold v. American Cent. Ins. Co., 1 Mo. App. 97 [affirmed in 70 Mo. 654].

Assignment of part interest.— As a chose in action cannot be split, an assignment of a part of the insured's interest is ineffectual. Lamb v. Council Bluffs Ins. Co., 70 Iowa 238, 30 N. W. 497; Baughman v. Camden Mfg. Co., 65 N. J. Eq. 546, 56 Atl. 376. But when two specific properties or two specific interests therein are insured by the same policy, on a conveyance of the separate properties or interests, the policy may be separately assigned. Ct. 430, the owner of a policy delivered it to a creditor saying that he wished to make an assignment thereof and that he wished the creditor to take it and collect it. The court considered this a completed and valid assignment. Compare Frankenthal v. Guardian Assur. Co., 76 Mo. App. 15.

A letter directing the agent of an insurance company to retain out of the proceeds of a fire policy the amount of an account due by the writer to a certain creditor was held not to amount to an assignment when the letter was not acted upon and the policy remained in the hands of the writer. In re Foster, Ir. R. 7 Eq. 294.

A verbal assignment is sufficient (O'Brien v. Prescott Ins. Co., 11 N. Y. Suppl. 125 [reversed on other grounds in 134 N. Y. 28, 31 N. E. 265]; Bennett v. Maryland F. Ins. Co., 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1,321, 14 Blatchf. 422), unless a statute requires a writing (St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Brunswick Grocery Co., 113 Ga. 786, 39 S. E. 483; Morehead v. Mayfield, 109 Ky. 51, 58 S. W. 473, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 580). And it was held in Cannon v. Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Assoc., 58 N. J. Eq. 102, 43 Atl. 281, that an assignment not in writing would carry the equitable title to a policy, although the by-laws of the insurer contemplated a written assignment.

An actual delivery of the policy is not necessary (Weaver v. Weaver, 80 Ill. App. 370; Spring v. South Carolina Ins. Co., 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 268, 5 L. ed. 614), but a delivery thereof with intent to assign completes the assignment (Matter of Babcock, 12 N. Y. St. 841).

An indorsement upon a policy assigning "the interest of the insured as owner of the property covered by the within policy" is sufficient. Rines v. German Ins. Co., 78 Minn. 46, 80 N. W. 839.

An unexecuted purpose or agreement to assign will not take effect as an assignment. Meadows v. Meadows, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 495.

But a covenant to insure contained in a mortgage operates as an equitable assignment of insurance when effected. Griet v. Citizens Ins. Co., 5 Ont. App. 596.

Estoppel of insured.— An insurance com-not necessary that there should be an assignment of the property insured, for an assignment by way of collateral only is sufficient to give the assignee the equitable title to the proceeds of the policy.[46]

B. As Creating Privity With Assignee — 1. Necessity of Consent. Most policies contain a provision that they are not assignable without the consent of the insurer, and they frequently provide the mode in which such consent shall be manifested. Such provisions are valid and accomplish the purpose intended,[47] so that the assignee acquires no privity with the insurer unless such consent be obtained.[48]

2. Consent — a. In General. Consent is usually given by an express agreement made at the time of the assignment, but by the form of the contract itself consent may virtually have been given in advance.[49] When there is such a pro-

pany is not liable for the cancellation values of policies paid to a person fraudulently representing himself to be their owner, if they were by the insured signed in blank and delivered to such person as his agent for another purpose. The owner of the policies is estopped from asserting title as he has conferred the indicia of title upon the agent, and of two innocent parties the one that has made it possible for the other to suffer must himself stand the loss. Vanderslice v. Royal Ins. Co., 7 Pa. Dist. 51, 14 Montg. Co. Rep. 96.

Statute of Elizabeth.— A trader insured his stock in trade and other effects. These were destroyed by fire. He assigned the policies to trustees in trust to pay and divide the moneys received thereunder among all his creditors ratably and to pay the balance, if any, to himself. The court held the assignment not void under 13 Eliz. c. 5, at the suit of a creditor whose debt was under £50. Green v. Brand, 1 Cab. & E. 410.

But the rule is otherwise as to creating a contractual privity between the insurer and the assignee. The latter must have an insurable interest under such circumstances. Hoyt v. Hartford F. Ins. Co., 26 Hun (N. Y.) 416.

A clause in a bill of lading providing that in case of loss or damage the carrier should have the benefit of the insurance on the goods and should not be answerable over to the insurer operates as an assignment of such insurance to the carrier. Insurance upon property does not necessarily pass with a sale of the property even as between the vendor and vendee, and even a covenant in a contract of sale or mortgage that the holder shall procure insurance does not inure to the benefit of the other party without an express stipulation. Lees v. Whiteley, L. R. 2 Eq. 143, 35 L. J. Ch. 412, 14 L. T. Rep. N. S. 472, 14 Wkly. Rep. 534. And see supra, II, A. But see Gates v. Smith, 4 Edw. (N. Y.) 702 (where the policy passed on a partition sale after confirmation but before conveyance); Farmer's Bank v. Mutual Assur. Soc., 4 Leigh (Va.) 69 (where a mortgage of the insured buildings was held to operate as an assignment of the policy).

A transfer of personal property covered by a policy of insurance, with a covenant to insure for the benefit of the transferee, does not vest the latter with any interest in the existing insurance. Lees v. Whiteley, L. R. 2 Eq. 143, 35 L. J. Ch. 412, 14 L. T. Rep. N. S. 472, 14 Wkly. Rep. 534.

This follows from the well established principle that a policy does not run with the subject-matter of the insurance into whosesoever hands it may come, but is rather a contract to personally indemnify the party insured.

vision and the insurer without valid reason refuses to consent to an assignment of the policy, the assignee acquires the same right as though consent had been given.[50] But if there is nothing in the policy giving consent in advance, a consent must actually be given at or subsequent to the time of the assignment to invest the assignee with rights against the insurer.[51]

b. Mode of Giving. If a certain method for obtaining consent to an assignment of the policy is prescribed in the policy itself, no other mode will suffice.[52] And a forfeiture takes place if it be provided that such will be the effect of an assignment without the insurer's consent.[53] But if the company waives such a requirement and assents to the assignment the right of the assignee is perfected.[54] As an insurance contract can be created by parol, so an assignment creating privity with the insurer can be made in the same fashion,[55] unless required to be in writing by the policy, in which event the terms of the policy must be followed,[56] unless this requirement be waived.[57] If the consent to Consideration.— An agreement by a company to consent to an assignment of the policy must rest upon a consideration, or otherwise it is void and cannot be specifically enforced. Equitable Ins. Co. v. Cooper, 60 Ill. 509. But an agreement by the assignee to pay the premium due is a sufficient consideration. Hughson v. Hardy, 62 Minn. 209, 64 N. W. 389. North British, etc., Ins. Co. v. Gunter, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 598, 35 S. W. 715.

the assignment of the policy has been obtained by fraud or sharp practice the insurer is not bound thereby.[58]

c. By Whom Given. Consent to an assignment may be given by the president of the company, acting as its agent,[59] and a formal vote of the directors is not necessary.[60] It may be given by the secretary,[61] or by an agent for such purpose lawfully authorized.[62]

3. Effect of Consent. When the assignment has been completed and the consent of the insurer obtained a new and independent contract has arisen[63] by which the assignee acquires all the rights of the assignor.[64] If the assignor has prior to the assignment forfeited all his rights under the policy, there is nothing that the assignee can acquire.[65] Inasmuch as the assignee is simply substituted for the assignor and stands in his shoes, he therefore takes subject to every set-off,[66] prior equity, and defense existing in favor of the insured against the assignor,[67]

Mistake as to nature of assignment.— The policy making no restriction as to the kind of assignment that might be made, and, although the company gave its assent presuming that the assignment was absolute as the deed purported, it was decided in the case of Merrill v. Colonial Mut. Extent and limits of rule.— A fortiori is even though he is unaware of the same. When the assignment has been completed and consent of the insurer given thereto, the assignee under the new arrangement has acquired the right to sue in his own name.[68]

4. SUBSEQUENT ACTS OF ASSIGNOR AS AFFECTING ASSIGNEE. Where the policy is simply by the consent of the company made payable to another as his interest may appear, the policy continues to be a contract with the original insured, and any action on the part of the original insured which would defeat his right of recovery under the policy will likewise defeat the recovery by the assignee,[69] but if by virtue of contract or statute the assignment by consent of the company becomes a new contract with the assignee, then no subsequent act of the assignor (the original insured) will defeat the assignee's rights.[70]

C. As Effecting a Forfeiture of Policy — 1. STIPULATIONS AGAINST ASSIGNMENTS. A customary clause in fire-insurance policies is one providing that in case of an assignment without the consent of the company the policy shall stand

But the assignee is protected as against future acts only of the assignor. If the pol-

forfeited.[71] Such a provision is uniformly upheld by the courts, but is required in order that the policy may be so forfeited.[72]

2. WHAT CONSTITUTES SUCH ASSIGNMENT. It is not every transfer of an interest under a policy that falls within the prohibition. The term has a somewhat limited meaning. The assignment contemplated is one whereby the assignor parts with all his rights under the policy and which when completed creates a privity between the assignee and the insured.[73] A specific agreement in the policy that an assignment by way of pledge or collateral security will work a forfeiture will, icy was invalid in its inception by reason of fraud or misrepresentation, it is not validated by consent to a consignment. Stanstead, etc., Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Gooley, 9 Quebec Q. B. 324; Omnium Securities Co. v. Canada F., etc., Ins. Co., 1 Ont. 494.

The policy becomes ipso facto void upon the violation of such provision. Buchanan v. Westchester County Mut. Ins. Co., 61 N. Y. 611.

Bankruptcy.— In Fayette County Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Neel, 6 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 233, it was held that an assignment in bankruptcy was not such an assignment as would avoid the policy under the foregoing provision. The same was held in Appleton Iron Co. v. British American Assur. Co., 46 Wis. 23, 1 N. W. 9, 50 N. W. 1100, where there had been no actual assignment or delivery of the policy to the trustee, although the bankrupt's petition stated that the policy was so assigned. But in Starkweather v. Cleveland Ins. Co., 22 Fed. Cas. No. 13,309, such an assignment was held to have the effect of forfeiting the policy.

Bills of lading.— A clause in a bill of lading subrogating the carrier to the rights of the shipper as to insurance in case of loss, although the insured accept the bill of lading as a contract, does not avoid a policy providing against assignments and stipulating forfeiture as the penalty thereof. Jackson Co. v. Boylston Mut. Ins. Co., 139 Mass. 508, 2 N. E. 103, 52 Am. Rep. 728. however, have the stipulated effect.[74] An assignment of the claim of the insured after the loss has been sustained does not fall within this provision against assignment, as such an assignment is not an attempt to create a new contractual relation with the insurer, but is merely the sale or transfer of a chose in action, which is always permitted in equity.[75] If the assignment be of the sort prohibited but is contingent upon obtaining the consent of the insurer, it does not avoid the policy.[76]

IX. REINSURANCE.

A. Nature of the Contract — 1. Classes of Reinsurance. The term "reinsurance" is used in two different senses: (1) It may mean a contract between two insurance companies, by which the one assumes the risks of the other and becomes substituted to its contracts, so that on the assent of the original insured the liability of the original insurer ceases, and the liability of the so-called reinsurer is substituted;[77] (2) but, as usually used, it designates a new contract, by which a company secures partial or entire indemnity for losses which it may suffer under risks which it continues to carry.[78]

2. Indemnity; Insurable Interest. The contract of reinsurance by which a company contracts for its own protection against liability which may accrue to it on risks which it continues to carry is a contract of indemnity.[79] The original insurer has an insurable interest in the property covered by its risks, and therefore the contract is not open to the objection of being a wager contract.[80] And such insurable interest will be sufficient to support reinsurance for the whole or any portion of the risk carried.[81]

3. Validity and Effect. The terms of the contract of reinsurance must be found in the agreement between the reinsuring and the reinsured companies, and not in the original policy of insurance.[82] The usual incidents affecting the

77. This form of reinsurance is usually made for the purpose of enabling the company carrying insurance to retire from business by securing a release from its obligations. It may also be resorted to for the purpose of securing release from a certain class of obligations, or even certain specified risks. See Fire Ins. Assoc. v. Canada F. & M. Ins. Antedating.— A loss which has already occurred will not be covered by the contract of reinsurance, if it is made with reference to the custom that reinsurance shall take effect only from the time it is granted, even though the fact of loss was not known to the other party. Premiums.— The obligation to pay the full premium stipulated in the policy of reinsurance cannot be affected by proof of usage or custom among all companies in the same locality, by which the reinsuring company obtains a percentage from the gross amount stipulated, nor by proof of a parol agreement making such custom a part of the written contract. The company which takes over the business of another, in consideration of payments to be made, and thereby renders the company thus reinsured unable to carry out its contracts, cannot relieve itself from liability to the policy-holders by avoiding its contract, on the ground of the other company's failure to pay subsequent instalments of the consideration, as required. it may without express authority, unless the power is denied in its charter, make contracts of reinsurance. Perhaps an agent having authority to issue policies of insurance may bind his company by a policy of reinsurance, but he cannot act as agent for both parties; and if he attempts to reinsure the risks of one company as agent in another company for which he also acts as agent the contract will be invalid.[88]

2. By Statute. There was an English statute prohibiting insurers from making contracts of reinsurance unless in case of insolvency, bankruptcy, or death of the insurer;[89] but this statutory provision is not found in general in state statutes on the subject of insurance.[90]

C. Relation of Original Policy-Holder to Reinsuring Company. Under a contract of reinsurance, the original policy-holder has no claim against the reinsuring company, for the reinsurer contracts with the reinsured company only.[91] But in some states it seems to be held without due consideration that an action may be maintained by the original insured against the reinsuring company, perhaps on the theory of avoiding circuity of actions.[92] Where the second company has undertaken to reinsure the policy-holders in the first, and such a substitution of liability has been assented to by the policy-holders, they may of course sue the reinsuring company as on an original contract of insurance.[93]

D. Liability of Reinsurer — 1. MEASURE OF RECOVERY. The reinsured company may recover from the reinsurer not simply the amount which it in fact paid under the risk reinsured, but what it is bound under its policy to pay by reason of the loss.[94] And the liability of the reinsuring company may include also costs and expenses of defending a suit by the reinsured company, for the purpose of determining its liability, if the reinsurer has notice of the action.[95] The liability of the reinsuring company is in general for all loss suffered by the reinsured company on account of the risks reinsured, up to the amount of reinsurance.[96] But it is frequently stipulated in policies of reinsurance that the liability of the reinsuring company shall be for a pro-rata proportion only of the risks; and under such a stipulation the reinsurer is bound only for such proportion of the amount for which the reinsured company is liable.[97]

Operation and effect of such stipulation.— A stipulation in the policy that the loss if any is payable at the time, and pro rata with the insured, relates to the amount for which the reinsured company is liable, and not to the amount which it is actually compelled to pay; and insolvency of the reinsured company will not diminish the liability of the reinsurer. Under such a stipulation the liability of the reinsuring company accrues at the same time with the liability of the reinsured. Blackstone v. Allemania F. Ins. Co., 4 Daly (N. Y.) 299. Mere custom or construction will not be allowed to reduce an absolute liability provided for in the contract of reinsurance to pro-rata liability. Mutual Safety Ins. Co. v. Hone, 2 N. Y. 235. But the usual stipulation that a loss shall be "payable pro rata at the same time and in the same manner" as to the insured under the original policy has been held to reduce the liability of the reinsuring company to its pro-rata share of the amount actually paid by the original insurer. Illinois Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Andes Ins. Co., 67 Ill. 362, 16 Am. Rep. 620. liability for the loss reinsured, as the original insurer may make against the original insured.[98] And the companies may agree that one of them may make a defense for both, the costs to be pro-rated.[99]

E. Proofs and Adjustment of Loss. Where the reinsuring company assumes the entire risk and liability of the company reinsured, proofs of loss by the original insured may be made to the reinsuring company.[1] If the contract is one of reinsurance proper, without special conditions as to proofs of loss other than as usually found in insurance policies, the reinsured must make proofs of loss to the reinsurer.[2] There are usually provisions in the policy of reinsurance as to the proofs to be furnished.[3] Failure of the reinsurer to object to the form or substance of copies of proofs of loss furnished by the company is a waiver of the objection that they were not furnished in time.[4]

X. CANCELLATION, SURRENDER, RESCISSION, AND REFORMATION.

A. Cancellation — 1. Right to Cancel — a. In General. In the absence of statute[5] or of a right reserved in the contract,[6] the insurer cannot cancel the policy without the consent of the insured.[7] For it has no right to abandon or change the contracts it has made.[8]

98. Eagle Ins. Co. v. Lafayette Ins. Co., 9 Ind. 443; Delaware Ins. Co. v. Quaker City Ins. Co., 3 Grant (Pa.) 71; New York State Mar. Ins. Co. v. Protection Ins. Co., 18 Fed. Cas. No. 10,216, 1 Story 458, an action on a policy of marine reinsurance.

But knowledge of the agent acting for the reinsuring company of any objection which might be urged by way of defense will be imputed to the company, and defeat its right to interpose such objection to the validity of the insurance. Virginia F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Cummings, (Tex. Sup. 1904) 78 S. W. 716.

Counter-claim.— The reinsuring company cannot buy up claims against the reinsured company and use them by way of offset as against its liability to such company on the policy of reinsurance. In re Cleveland Ins. Co., 22 Fed. 200.

99. See cases cited infra, this note.

Compromise.— If the company thus undertaking the defense afterward compromises without the consent of the other, there can be no recovery by it for the proportion which should have been paid by the other, in the event of judgment being rendered. Commercial Union Assur. Co. v. American Cent. Ins. Co., 68 Cal. 430, 9 Pac. 712. But where such an arrangement makes the original insurer simply the agent of the reinsurer for the purpose of making defense, the original insurer may compromise its liability, as it might have done had no agency been created. Consolidated Real Estate, etc., Co. v. Cashow, 41 Md. 59; Gantt v. American Cent. Ins. Co., 68 Mo. 503.

1. Whitney v. American Ins. Co., 127 Cal. 464, 59 Pac. 897.

2. Yonkers, etc., F. Ins. Co. v. Hoffman F. Ins. Co., 6 Rob. (N. Y.) 316.

Generally it is sufficient if the reinsured transmits the notice and proofs given to it by the original insurer. New York Bowery F. Ins. Co. v. New York F. Ins. Co., 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 359.

3. See cases cited infra, this note.

Operation and effect of such provisions.— If the condition is that the contract of reinsurance is subject to the same risks, valuations, conditions, and mode of settlements as are or may be adopted or assumed by the company reinsured, then preliminary proofs to the reinsurer are dispensed with. Consolidated Real Estate, etc., Co. v. Cashow, 41 Md. 59. And a requirement that the reinsured give notice and render an account of the loss and so on means that there be a notice and schedule served within a reasonable time under the circumstances. Cashau v. Northwestern Nat. Ins. Co., 5 Fed. Cas. No. 2,499, 5 Biss. 476.

4. Ex p. Norwood, 18 Fed. Cas. No. 10,364, 3 Biss. 504.

5. Statutes in some of the states give the right to the insurer or to the insured to withdraw from the contract on certain conditions. See statutory provisions in Iowa, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, North Dakota, Pennsylvania, Wisconsin, and Wyoming.

6. See infra, XI, A, 1, b.

If the contract is intended to bind each party only so long as it chooses, the insurer may cancel it at will, on notice to the insured. Manchester F. Assur. Co. v. State Ins. Co., 91 Ill. App. 609; Sun Fire Office v. Hart, 14 App. Cas. 98, 53 J. P. 548, 58 L. J. P. C. 69, 60 L. T. Rep. N. S. 337, 37 Wkly. Rep. 561.

Custom of other companies permitting cancellation is not available to establish such a custom on the part of plaintiff (American Ins. Co. v. Neiberger, 74 Mo. 167), at least not without showing facts to which a custom is applicable (Pollard v. Fidelity F. Ins. Co., 1 S. D. 570, 47 N. W. 1060).

8. People's Mut. Ins. Fund v. Bricken, 92 Ky. 297, 17 S. W. 625, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 586.

b. By Reservation in Policy. But where the right is reserved to cancel the policy, and the cancellation is made pursuant thereto and in the manner prescribed, the insurer is released from liability.[9] Such a reservation in a contract of insurance is valid,[10] and is not contrary to public policy;[11] but it must be exercised and completed before a loss occurs,[12] and a cancellation made after a loss, although without knowledge of the loss, is void.[13] The motive for such cancellation is wholly immaterial.[14]

c. By Mutual Agreement. Even though no right to terminate the contract is reserved, the parties may by mutual agreement cancel the policy.[15]

2. Manner of Effecting — a. In General. If the policy prescribes a certain method for exercising the reserved right of cancellation by the company, this method must be followed,[16] unless the insured waives the requirement.[17] So

9. Albany City F. Ins. Co. v. Keating, 46 Ill. 394; Allemania Ins. Co. v. McHugh, 1 Lack. Leg. Rec. (Pa.) 411 (where it was also stated that the insured has no power to coerce the insurer in the exercise of its discretion to cancel); Sea Ins. Co. v. Johnston, 105 Fed. 286, 44 C. C. A. 477.

10. National Ins. Co. v. Irwin, 1 Disn. (Ohio) 68, 12 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 714.

But it gives the insurer no authority merely to reduce the amount of the insurance. Western Assur. Co. v. Stoddard, 88 Ala. 606, 7 So. 379.

11. Boland v. Whitman, 33 Ind. 64. Defendant, after having policies issued by plaintiff's agent giving him a right to cancel, changed to another company and was offered a lower rate to change back. Unlike the former policies the new one contained a clause in fine print limiting the right to cancel. The agent did not call his attention to the clause, but rather gave him to infer the opposite. It was held that the clause limiting the right to cancel was not binding on defendant. Hartford Steam Boiler Inspection, etc., Co. v. Cartier, 89 Mich. 41, 50 N. W. 747.

A by-law of a mutual fire-insurance company giving the secretary power to cancel a policy for non-payment of assessments is valid. Douville v. Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Co., 113 Mich. 158, 71 N. W. 517.

When a "binding slip" is issued, referring to a policy, the terms of the policy as to cancellation become a part thereof. Karelsen v. Sun Fire Office, 122 N. Y. 545, 25 N. E. 921 [affirming 1 N. Y. Suppl. 387]; Van Tassel v. Greenwich Ins. Co., 72 Hun (N. Y.) 141, 25 N. Y. Suppl. 301.

The insurer may not cancel if there be an imminent danger of the destruction of the insured property. It may, however, consider a change in circumstances, such an increase in risk, as to justify a cancellation when immediate destruction is not impending. Home Ins. Co. v. Heck, 65 Ill. 111.

A waiver made under a mistake is not effectual as a waiver. Quong Tue Sing v. Anglo-Nevada Assur. Corp., 86 Cal. 566, 25 Pac. 58, 10 L. R. A. 144.

Any ratification of an attempted but defective cancellation is ineffectual unless made with knowledge of the material facts. Larsen v. Thuringia American Ins. Co., 208 Ill. 166, where the insured acquiesces in the cancellation a method of cancellation other than that prescribed in the policy may be operative.[18]

b. Return of Premiums. If the policy gives the insurer the right at any time to cancel and return the unearned premium "upon surrender of the policy," or the right to cancel "upon notice," the return of the premium or tender thereof is not a condition precedent.[19] If, however, the return of the unearned premium is a condition for exercising the right of cancellation, a failnre to return or tender the premium renders the attempted cancellation nugatory;[20] but even here the premiums need not be returned if the insured has temporarily,[21] or absolutely, waived the requirement,[22] and whether or not there has been a waiver is a question of fact.[23] In case the premium has not been actually paid, no tender of unearned premium is necessary,[24] nor is it when the premium has

The statement that a premium is "at the call" of the insured is not sufficient. Van Valkenburgh v. Lenox F. Ins. Co., 51 N. Y. 465. This is true under the New York standard policy. Tisdell v. New Hampshire F. Ins. Co., 155 N. Y. 163, 49 N. E. 664, 40 L. R. A. 765. But it has been denied under policies requiring the surrender of the policy by the insured as a condition precedent to the repayment of the unearned premium. Walthear v. Pennsylvania F. Ins. Co., 2 N. Y. App. Div. 328, 37 N. Y. Suppl. 857.

Under the New York standard policy return or tender of the unearned premium is necessary, and a mere notice that it will be returned is insufficient. Tisdell v. New Hampshire F. Ins. Co., 155 N. Y. 163, 49 N. E. 664, 40 L. R. A. 765.

When an agent has issued a policy to himself, and the insurer on that ground desires to cancel the policy, tender of the premium is a prerequisite. Hanover F. Ins. Co. v. Shrader, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 255, 31 S. W. 1100, 32 S. W. 344.

Co., 38 Ohio St. 110; Mueller v. South Side F. Ins. Co., 87 Pa. St. 399); but the note if not returned must be credited with the unearned premium (Little v. Eureka Ins. Co., 5 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) been paid after the proper steps for cancellation have been taken.[25] Payment to the agent of the insured is sufficient,[26] but the insurer takes the risk in paying to an agent as to whether the agency is still subsisting.[27] If one policy is surrendered to be replaced by the issuance of a new policy, the cancellation is not completed until the new policy is executed.[28]

c. Mistake or Fraud. A cancellation procured or perfected through fraud or mistake does not bar the insured from asserting rights under his policy.[29]

d. Waiver of Defects. Even though the cancellation has not been properly accomplished the insured may with full knowledge[30] waive the defective cancellation and become bound thereby.[31]

e. Notice — (i) Insured Entitled to. The insured is entitled to notice of the fact that his policy is canceled, and cancellation is not effectual until the notice has been given.[32]

(11) Sufficiency. The notice must conform to that specified in the policy,[33] although the insured may waive the requirement of time,[34] and if no notice is prescribed therein a reasonable notice must be given.[35] The notice must be actual and a mere entry on the books of the company[36] or a mere instruction to an agent to cancel is not sufficient.[37] A notice sent by mail but not received,[38] a notice sent but not received until after the loss,[39] or a notice so blurred as to be illegible[40] is not sufficient. The notice should state, not merely an executory intent to cancel,[41] or a threat to cancel if some condition be not complied with,[42] but should convey a knowledge of a present completed cancellation.[43]

(III) To Whom Given—(A) In General. The notice should be given to the party to the contract,[44] that is, to the one liable for the payment of the premium.[45] But if the policy is payable to a mortgagee, notice to him is necessary to cut off his rights.[46]

(B) To Agent—(1) Of Insured. If the person to whom notice of the cancellation is given is the agent of the insured and authorized to receive such notice, this is notice to the insured,[47] and a general agent of the insured upon whom has been devolved the duty of attending to matters of insurance is such an authorized agent,[48] but a broker employed by the insured to procure insurance is not.[49]

(2) Of Insurer. The agent of the company who has written the policy is not a proper person to whom such notice can be given,[50] even though he retains the insured's policy with limited authority.[51] A frequent provision in policies is that the agent procuring the policy is the agent of the insured and not of the insurer;

such a provision does not, in the majority of jurisdictions, make him an agent to whom notice of cancellation can be given.[52] But if the agent is in fact the agent both of the insurer and the insured, notice of cancellation may be given to him.[53]

3. WHO MAY CANCEL. There is no presumption that a mere soliciting agent has a right to cancel a policy,[54] and in fact he has not such power without express authorization;[55] and, although he possesses such authority, he cannot delegate his power, but only the doing of mere ministerial acts.[56] Where, however, an agent has authority either express or implied to request the cancellation of the policy, the cancellation by the company upon his request is valid.[57]

Possession of an insurance policy by an insurance broker ordinarily confers upon him implied authority to procure its cancellation, but this implication is rebutted where at the time of a request for cancellation by the broker the insurance company is informed that he has ceased to be the agent of the policy-holder. And where an insurance broker has possession of a policy belonging to another, but is the agent of such other only for the purpose of obtaining certain additional insurance and having the form of certain policies changed, he has no implied authority, notwithstanding such possession, to cause a cancellation thereof. cellation rests on the party asserting the same.[58] The general rules governing the admissibility[59] and the weight and sufficiency[60] of evidence apply in proving the cancellation of the policy.

B. Surrender — 1. Right to Surrender. If no right is reserved by the terms of the contract and if there is no statutory requirement[61] giving the insured the right to withdraw, he cannot surrender his policy without the consent of the insurer.[62] But a provision is frequently found in policies allowing the insured to withdraw at his election.[63] Even if the right be not expressly reserved, the insured and the insurer may agree to a surrender.[64]

2. Who Entitled to Surrender. The right reserved in a policy passes to an assignee thereof.[65] A general or authorized agent may surrender for the

After the execution of the premium note and the acceptance of the policy to take place in futuro, it was returned to the company by its agent for correction. The insured then instructed the company to cancel the policy and return his note. The company refused and forwarded the corrected policy, which the insured immediately returned and which was then held by the company. In an action on the premium note, the maker was held not liable. insured,[66] and the insured who has left his policy in the hands of an agent may be estopped to deny that agent's authority to surrender the same.[67] But a mortgagee in possession of the policy has no such authority.[68]

3. Mode of Surrender. No notice of an intention to surrender is necessary.[69] The surrender itself must be made in accordance with any requirements of the policy,[70] or with the statute prescribing the mode.[71] If the surrender has been made to the agent[72] of the insurer the negligence of the agent in failing to notify his principal does not affect the insured.[73]

4. Effect of Surrender — a. In General. On a completed[74] surrender of the policy the contract is terminated.[75]

Surrender by bailee.— Where the value of goods, the property of the bailee and covered by the same policy as those of the bailor, exceeded the whole amount insured and the bailee presented no claim for the loss of the bailor's goods, the court found that this was equivalent to an election by the bailee to cancel so much of the policy as covered the goods held by him in trust. Assoc., 103 Iowa 276, 72 N. W. 530, that even though plaintiff had failed to read the policy at the time it was executed, the subsequent failure of plaintiff to read the same and discover the mistake until after the property was burned, two months after the delivery of the policy, was not laches such as to bar relief. And in general a plaintiff is not guilty of laches simply because of lapse of time, when he has been ignorant of the error. Bidwell v. Astor Mut. Ins. Co., 16 N. Y. 263.

Where an action has been brought on the policy within the time limited therein, a bill for reformation is not barred, although brought after such time, as such bill is not a suit on the policy within the meaning of the limitation. Taylor v. Glens Falls Ins. Co., 44 Fla. 273, 32 So. 887; Hay v. Star F. Ins. Co., 77 N. Y. 235, 33 Am. Rep. 607; Rosenbaum v. Council Bluffs Ins. Co., 37 Fed. 724.

4. It seems to be largely a question of practice in the particular jurisdiction. See cases cited infra, this note.

Some courts hold that there is a variance between plea and proof and require the reformation before the action at law on the policy can be maintained. Taylor v. Glens Falls Ins. Co., 44 Fla. 273, 32 So. 887; Collins v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co., 44 Minn. 440, 46 N. W. 906; Sun Ins. Co. v. Greenville Bldg., etc., Assoc., 58 N. J. L. 367, 33 Atl. 962; Maher v. Hibernia Ins. Co., 67 N. Y. 283, asserting the doctrine that a judgment for the amount due may be sustained in an action seeking reformation and a money judgment thereon, without in terms adjudicating a reformation.

Other courts assert that there is no need of first obtaining reformation, when there is a mere misdescription, but the insurer actually was aware of the real risk carried (Eggleston v. Council Bluffs Ins. Co., 65 Iowa 308, 21 N. W. 652; American Cent. Ins. Co. v. McLanathan, 11 Kan. 533; State Ins. Co. v. Schreck, 27 Nebr. 527, 43 N. W. 340, 20 Am. St. Rep. 696, 6 L. R. A. 524), where the insurer is estopped (Carey v. Home Ins. Co., 97 Iowa 619, 66 N. W. 920), or where the insurer has waived a condition (Kansas Farmers' F. Ins. Co. v. Saindon, 52 Kan. 486, 35 Pac. 15, 39 Am. St. Rep. 356; Hobkirk v. Phœnix Ins. Co., 102 Wis. 13, 78 N. W. 160; Smith v. Commonwealth Ins. Co., 49 Wis. 322, 5 N. W. 804). In Deitz v. Providence-Washington Ins. Co., 31 W. Va. 851, 8 S. E. 616, 13 Am. St. Rep. 909, a reformation was held unnecessary to permit one not a party to a policy to sue thereon, the theory of undisclosed principal being adopted. In Burke v. Niagara F. Ins. Co., 12 N. Y. Suppl. 254 [affirmed in 128 N. Y. 668, 29 N. E. 148], when property was insured in the name of the decedent after his death and was subse-

of the mistake.[5] But he cannot maintain the action for a reformation if the preceding action at law amounted to an election to assert the policy as it then stood as representing the real contract.[6]

b. After Modification by Agreement. A mistake may be corrected by mutual agreement[7] of the parties. The transaction then amounts to a reissue of the policy upon the terms intended,[8] and a reformation by the court is not necessary to maintain an action.[9]

3. Incidental Relief. A money judgment may be granted as an incident to and in the same action as that in which reformation is decreed.[10]

XI. Construction and Operation of the Contract.

A. In General — 1. Rules Applicable to Other Contracts. Policies of insurance are written contracts between the parties, and are to be construed by the same rules which are applicable in the construction of other written instruments.[11] quently assigned to a mortgagee by the executors, no reformation was held necessary to enable a second assignee to maintain suit thereon.

A correction made by the agent of the insurer is not binding on the insurer unless the agent is given authority therefor, as it is in effect the making of a new contract. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Dunn, 22 Ind. App. 332, 53 N. E. 251; S. S. White Dental Mfg. Co. v. Delaware Ins. Co., 105 Fed. 642 [reversed in 109 Fed. 334, 48 C. C. A. 382]. And compare Laclede Fire-Brick Mfg. Co. v. Hartford Steam-Boiler Inspection, etc., Co., 60 Fed. 351, 9 C. C. A. 1. Even the written indorsement of the secretary was held ineffectual in Hoffecker v. New Castle County Mut. Ins. Co., 5 Houst. (Del.) 101, when the same was made merely at the request of the insured. But a ratification of such an act by the board of directors was held to bind the insurer in Wood v. Rutland, etc., Mut. F. Ins. Co., 31 Vt. 552.

A modification of the contract by one party alone does not affect the rights or liabilities of the other party thereto. Even in mutual benefit associations, the modification of the by-laws, although the insured has agreed that they may be amended and be a part of the contract, must not alter a vested right. Farmers' Mut. Hail Ins. Assoc. v. Slattery, 115 Iowa 410, 88 N. W. 949.

Acquiescence in a proposed modification must be shown. McLean v. American Mut. F. Ins. Co., 122 Iowa 355, 98 N. W. 146.

Consideration.— A modification need rest on no further consideration than the mutual agreement of the parties. Montgomery v. American Cent. Ins. Co., 108 Wis. 146, 84 N. W. 175.

Parol modification.— In the absence of a statutory prohibition, inasmuch as a contract of insurance may be created by parol, it may be modified in the same manner, and the fact that the contract is a written one does not prevent its change or enlargement by a subsequent parol agreement. Westchester F. Ins. Co. v. Earle, 33 Mich. 143. But this rule is sometimes changed by statute (Simonton v. Liverpool, etc., Ins. Co., 51 Ga. 76), or by the by-laws or charter (Halliday v. Eureka F. & M. Ins. Co., 7 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 193, 1 Cinc. L. Bul. 286).

2. INTENTION TO BE TAKEN INTO ACCOUNT. Policies should be construed so as to give effect to the evident intention of the parties.[12]

3. LIBERAL CONSTRUCTION IN FAVOR OF INSURED. The policy of insurance, being an instrument prepared by the insurer, should in case of doubt under the general rules be construed strictly against the insurer, who prepares it, and liberally in favor of the insured.[13] This is the rule, even though the intent of the company

A reasonable interpretation should be placed upon the policy. Fireman's Ins. Co. v. Cecil, 12 Ky. L. Rep. 48, 259. Intent limited to terms.— The intention of the parties, however, must be sought in the instrument itself. Bell v. Firemen's Ins. Co., 5 Rob. (La.) 446; Bell v. Western M. & F. Ins. Co., 5 Rob. (La.) 423, 39 Am. Dec. 542; Mississippi Mut. Ins. Co. v. Ingram, 34 Miss. 215.

This rule of construction is stated in a variety of ways. For instance that policies of insurance being regarded as commercial instruments (Hearn v. New England Mut. Mar. Ins. Co., 11 Fed. Cas. No. 6,301, 3 Cliff. 318) are to be liberally construed for the purpose of sustaining them; and technical objections are not to be favored (Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Barnd, 16 Nebr. 89, 20 N. W. 105; Palmer v. Warren Ins. Co., 18 Fed. Cas. No. 10,698, 1 Story 360). The policy is to be interpreted most strongly against the company (Continental Ins. Co. v. Daniel, 78 S. W. 866, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 1501; Keck v. Porter, 9 Kulp (Pa.) 428), and most favorably to the insured (Mobile Mar. Dock, etc., Co. v. McMillan, 27 Ala. 77; Wells v. Pacific Ins. Co., 44 Cal. 397; Travelers' Ins. If there is any doubt or uncertainty under the terms of the policy as to the intent of the parties, it is to be resolved in favor of the insured. Provident Sav. L. Assur. Soc. v. Cannon, 103 Ill. was otherwise.[14] The object of the contract being to afford indemnity, it will be so construed, in case of doubt, as to support rather than defeat the indemnity provided for.[15] But if the terms of the policy are clear and unambiguous, they are to be taken in the plain and ordinary sense, and no construction is necessary.[16]

4. Conditions and Exceptions. Conditions and exceptions are to be strictly construed against the company, and liberally construed in favor of the insured.[17] Stipulations and conditions in the policy are to be so construed if possible as to avoid forfeiture [18] and afford indemnity.[19]

6. Conflict Between Written and Printed Provisions. The rule well recognized in the construction of contracts, that in case of conflict between written and printed portions of the instrument the writing will be presumed to represent the intent of the parties as against the printed portions, is applicable to policies of insurance.[21] Thus if the printed portion excludes certain articles from the risk, or prohibits their being kept, and the written portion extends the policy to cover property of such character as to necessarily include prohibited articles, the written portion will invalidate the exclusion or prohibition found in the printed portion.[22] The same construction is applied where the printed stipulations as to ownership of the property are inconsistent with the description of the property in the written clause.[23]

B. Stipulations on Margin or Back of Policy, or Attached by Slip. Conditions written or printed on the margin or the back of the policy are to be construed as portions of it if by the terms of the policy they are made part thereof.[24] Provisions or conditions may be incorporated into the policy by

Articles used in particular business.— If the written portion of the policy covers property to be used in conducting a particular business, articles usually used in conducting such business are included within the risk, although they are excluded by the printed portion of the policy. C. Construing Policy With Application or Other Accompanying Documents. The written application is usually considered a part of the contract, and the policy is to be construed in connection with it.[26] Especially is this so where the proposals and conditions are attached to the policy and delivered with it, even though the policy does not contain any express reference to such papers.[27]

3. Construction by Parties. The practical construction put upon the contract by the parties thereto will be binding upon them.[37]

4. Construction by Prior Decisions. Terms used in a policy which have by prior decisions of the court been given a definite meaning will be presumed to have been used in view of such established construction.[38]

In North Carolina the statute provides that all policies of insurance, applications for which are taken within the state, are to be construed in accordance with the laws of the state. Horton v. Home Ins. Co., 122 N. C. 498, 29 S. E. 944, 65 Am. St. Rep. 717.

Reference to laws of state.— Even though the contract specifies that it is to be construed according to the laws of the state in which the company has its home office for the transaction of business, nevertheless, if finally executed and delivered in another state, the courts of the latter state will not feel bound to look to the laws of the state thus referred to for the purpose of determining questions with reference to its construction and operation. Robinson v. Hurst, 78 Md. 59, 26 Atl. 956, 44 Am. St. Rep. 626, 20 L. R. A. 761; Pietri v. Seguenot, 96 Mo. 258, 69 S. W. 1055; Summers v. Fidelity Mut. Aid Assoc., 84 Mo. App. 605.

Reference to the laws of foreign countries. — By the terms of a policy entered into between parties residing in different jurisdictions, the terms of the contract as to its enforcement may be made dependent on the laws of a jurisdiction expressly specified. Spurrier v. La Cloche, [1902] A. C. 446, 71 L. J. P. C. 101, 86 L. T. Rep. N. S. 631, 51 Wkly. Rep. 1. But in the absence of any evidence as to the foreign law, it will be presumed to be the same as the law of the jurisdiction. Huth v. New York Mut. Ins. Co., 8 Bosw. (N. 44. Thus if an application is sent from one state or country to a company doing business in another, and the application is there accepted, and a policy issued in accordance with such application, the law of the state or country in which the company thus transacts the business will control as to the validity of the contract. And this is true, although the policy, instead of being sent directly to the insured from the office of the company, is sent to an agent of the company, to be delivered to the insured. Commonwealth Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. William Knabe, etc., Mfg. Co., 171 Mass. 265, 50 N. E. 516; Western v. Genesee Mut. Ins. Co., 12 N. Y. 258; Huntley v. Merrill, 32 Barb. (N. But if some modification of terms is required by the company, the contract is not completed until the policy is delivered to and accepted by the insured, and the place of such delivery and acceptance then becomes the place of contract. Born v. Home Ins. Co., 120 Iowa 299, 94 N. W. 849.

contract will be governed by the laws of the state where the contract is to be performed;[46] and the remedy will be administered by the law of the state in which suit is brought.[47]

H. Description of Parties — 1. The Insured. The name of the insured,[48] as a party to the contract, usually appears from the written instrument; but if the designation is imperfect or ambiguous extrinsic evidence may be resorted to, and the contract will be held to apply to the person thus ascertained.[49] In general one who is not the insured cannot have the benefit of the insurance, unless it is stipulated in the policy or is otherwise made to appear that the contract was made for his benefit.[50]

2. Beneficiary. The insurance may be for beneficiaries not specifically named, if otherwise sufficiently described.[51]

48. The term "the insured" refers to the person applying for the insurance and entering into the contract therefor, and not to another person to whom the loss may be made payable (Sanford v. Mechanics' Mut. F. Ins. Co., 12 Cush. (Mass.) 541); but if the one to whom the loss is made payable is really the contracting party, he is the insured, although the property may belong to another in whose name the policy is ostensibly taken (Traders' Ins. Co. v. Pacaud, 150 Ill. 245, 37 N. E. 460, 41 Am. St. Rep. 355; Sias v. Roger Williams Ins. Co., 8 Fed. 187).

49. Clinton v. Hope Ins. Co., 45 N. Y. 454. Where the policy was issued to "L. Simon" and in a suit thereon it appeared that a woman claiming as plaintiff was intended by that name, it was held that her recovery would not be defeated by the fact that in the body of the instrument the insured was frequently referred to by the personal pronoun "his." Simon v. Home Ins. Co., 58 Mich. 278, 25 N. W. 190. On the other hand it has been held that a recital in the policy designating the "estate of Daniel Ross" as the beneficiary was without legal significance, but might be sustained by parol evidence showing the person intended. Clinton v. Hope Ins. Co., 51 Barb. (N. Y.) 647.

A policy for the benefit of the heirs and representatives of a deceased person is valid in favor of the trustee of the property held for their benefit. Savage v. Howard Ins. Co., 52 N. Y. 502, 11 Am. Rep. 741.

A policy issued to "S. M. G., agent," sufficiently indicates that the intent is to insure for the benefit of persons not named. Platho v. Merchants', etc., Ins. Co., 38 Mo. 248.

Parol evidence.— Where the policy was

I. Description of Subject-Matter — 1. In General. The language of the policy being chosen by the insurer, it should be construed, if practicable, so as to cover the subject-matter intended to be covered.[52] A portion of the description which is false may be disregarded, if enough remains to identify the property; the rule being to support the contract of indemnity when possible.[53] The description in the application may be referred to for the purpose of defining the subject-matter to which the policy relates.[54] Merely clerical errors or mistakes may be corrected even after loss.[55]

2. Location. The location of the property is usually an essential element in the description, and the policy will not be extended to property not within the terms of the description in this respect.[56] The location of personal property is written in the name of the owner "with a contractor's insurance for 30 days," parol evidence was held to be admissible to show the intention that the insurance was to be for the benefit of the contractor for thirty days, and after that for the benefit of the owner. See 28 Cent. Dig. tit. "Insurance," § 351.

But even as to matter of description, some liberality is exercised in applying the description to the property, so as to carry out the evident intention of the parties, as is illustrated by the following cases.

Massachusetts.— Westfield Cigar Co. v. Insurance Co. of North America, 165 Mass. 541, 43 N. E. 504.

Minnesota.— Bergstrom v. Farmers' Mut. Ins. Co., 51 Minn. 29, 52 N. W. 980; Soli v. Farmers' Mut. Ins. Co., 51 Minn. 24, 52 N. W. 979.

as material a part of its description as the location of buildings; and if the personal property is described as kept or contained in a certain building, its loss will not be covered if destroyed elsewhere.[57] And a removal of the property to another building or location takes it out of the description of the policy.[58]

3. Buildings and Additions. In general the description of a building covers only the single and complete structure, and not separate structures used in connection with it,[59] nor walls or fixtures not constituting a part of the permanent structure.[60] So too it is well settled that the term "buildings and additions"

Thus the description of the property as on the premises of a certain company was held not to apply to the same property on premises subsequently acquired. Providence, etc., R. Co. v. Yonkers F. Ins. Co., 10 R. I. 74; Brandt v. Berlin Farmers' Mut. Feuer, etc., Co., 108 Wis. 231, 84 N. W. 180. But it was held that a description of the property as in the "frame stable and carriage house building belonging with" the dwelling of the insured, and on the same lot, covered such property in a frame building afterward erected on the same lot for the same use. Robinson v. Pennsylvania F. Ins. Co., 90 Me. 385, 38 Atl. 320. Words of description of the place in which the property is kept, which designated a factory or some such general place of business, may cover goods not in the main building. Extent and limits of rule.— If the property is described as covered by insurance while in a certain building or location "and not elsewhere," the insurance will cover only a loss of the property while in that location. L'Anse v. Philadelphia Fire Assoc., 119 Mich. 427, 78 N. W. 465, 75 Am. St. Rep. 410, 43 L. R. A. 838. But a removal of the goods described as in a building from one part of the building to another will not affect the insurance. Fair v. Manhattan Ins. Co., 112 Mass. 320.

Live stock described as "in barn or in field" will cover animals at large. Trade Ins. Co. v. Barracliff, 45 N. J. L. 543, 46 Am. Rep. 792. However, live stock, vehicles, and the like may be so described that any animals or vehicles within the general description of the policy in a specific barn referred to will be covered by the policy. does not cover structures not structurally connected with, and dependent upon, the main building.[61]

4. FIXTURES. The insurance on a building, in the absence of an express exception, covers those things which have by annexation become a part of the realty,[62] but not those things which remain personalty, although they are within the building.[63] But the term "store fixtures" is used to cover fittings, fixtures, furniture, etc., which are peculiarly adapted for use in course of trade, whether they are a part of the realty or not.[64]

person as his interest may appear, the interest thus protected being usually that of one who, as creditor holding a lien or otherwise, has become entitled to the proceeds of the insurance,[76] or to "whom it may concern,"[77] the person entitled to the proceeds of the insurance being thus left to be ascertained by facts shown to exist at the time of the loss.[78]

12. Property Held in Trust, or Otherwise, For Another. It is usual[79] for persons engaged in the business of keeping property for others, on account of which they may be liable,[80] to insure such property under policies covering goods held by them "in trust"; but this term does not imply a technical trust, but only possession of property of others, for which the insured may be called on to account.[81] Such insurance is, however, on the goods, and not on the interest of the insured therein; and he may recover the entire value, accounting to the real owner who sees fit to avail himself of the benefit of the insurance for any excess beyond the interest or liability of the insured,[82] although the insurance may be so taken as to cover only the liability of the insured and preclude any recovery by him for the benefit of the owner.[83]

13. Partnership Property. A partner who insures the partnership property[84] in his own name, without any stipulation or understanding that the insurance is for the benefit of the firm or his copartner, is presumed to have insured only his own interest in the property.[85]

14. Mortgaged Property. The mortgagor and the mortgagee each has an insurable interest, and may insure the property in his own name,[86] and the policy will be construed as insurance of the property for the benefit of the insured, whether he be mortgagor or mortgagee, unless it is otherwise stipulated.[87]

15. Evidence to Aid Description. Parol evidence[88] is not usually admissible for the purpose of extending the policy to cover property not included in the description;[89] but it may be received for the purpose of applying the description to property intended to be described.[90] And where general terms, such as "the contents of a building,"[91] or "property held in trust,"[92] or the kind of goods usually kept in the particular stock described,[93] are used parol evidence may be received to identify the property. Proof of custom or usage[94] cannot be received to show that it was intended that a policy made in the name of a particular person should protect the interests of another person.[95]

96. Policies of marine insurance, on the contrary, usually fix the amount to be paid in the event of loss, leaving no occasion for inquiry as to the value of the property at the dependent upon the amount of the loss, to be determined after the loss has occurred, and the valuation of the property in the application or policy does not fix the liability of the company, even in case of total loss.[97] Such policies are called "open policies."[98] However, by an open policy is also sometimes meant, in the United States, one in which an aggregate amount is expressed in the body of the policy, and the specific amounts and subjects are to be indorsed from time to time.[99] On the other hand, by special provision in the policy, the loss may be valued so that the liability is fixed;[1] as in the case of a policy in which the amount payable in case of loss is fixed by the terms of the policy itself,[2] in which the value of the subject-matter insured is agreed upon by the parties,[3] or in which both the property insured and the loss are valued, and which bind the insurer to pay the whole sum insured, in case of total loss.[4] In such cases the policies are

Other definitions of an "open policy" are: "[A policy] in which the sum to be paid as indemnity in case of loss is not fixed in the contract, but is left open to be proved by the claimant, or to be determined by the parties, and this determination is called an adjustment of the loss." Fire Ins. Assoc. v. Miller, 2 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 332 [citing May Ins. 27]. "A policy on which the value is to be proved by the assured." Bouvier L. Dict. [quoted in London Assur. Corp. v. Paterson, 106 Ga. 538, 549, 32 S. E. 650].

As defined by statute, an open policy is one in which the value of the thing insured is not agreed upon, but is left to be ascertained in case of loss. Cal. Civ. Code (1899), § 2595; Ga. Civ. Code (1895), § 2129; N. D. Rev. Code (1899), § 4496; S. D. Civ. Code (1903), § 1486.

A policy issued to indemnify a contractor against loss he may sustain by reason of the building which he has contracted to build in case of its destruction, to a sum not exceeding a designated sum, is an open policy. It does not mean that as soon as the house is destroyed by fire the insured shall be entitled to recover the sum designated, but means that he is to recover the amount if that is the damage done to him by the fire. Ulmer v. Phœnix F. Ins. Co., 61 S. C. 459, 462, 39 S. E. 712.

Failure to fill in the blank or to make any indorsement as to value will render an instrument an open policy and not a valued policy of insurance. Snowden v. Guion, 101 N. Y. 458, 467, 5 N. E. 322.

99. Bouvier L. Dict. [quoted in London Assur. Corp. v. Paterson, 106 Ga. 538, 549, 32 S. E. 650]. In London Assur. Corp. v. Paterson, 106 Ga. 538, 32 S. E. 650, where the company agreed to carry three fifths of a fifty-thousand-dollar risk, and offered to take, and afterward by indorsement on the policy assumed, a liability not exceeding fifty thousand dollars on the excess, the policy was construed as not limiting the liability to three fifths on the additional fifty thousand, the subsequent dealings of the parties showing that full liability as to the second risk was assumed.

In an open policy of insurance, for which an aggregate amount is expressed, there are as many contracts for insurance as there are indorsements on the policy of separate shipments of goods. State v. Williams, 46 La. Ann. 922, 929, 15 So. 290 [citing Douville v. Sun Mut. Ins. Co., 12 La. Ann. 259].

1. Cushman v. Northwestern Ins. Co., 34 Me. 487, where a policy which after insuring one thousand seven hundred dollars upon a mill and fixed machinery and one hundred and fifty dollars on movable machinery therein proceeded in written words as follows: "Said insured being the lessee of said mill for one year from November 1st, 1850, and having paid the rent therefor of $2171.01, which interest, diminishing day by day, in proportion to the whole rent for the year, is hereby insured" was considered to be a valued policy, although in a printed part of the instrument there was a provision that the "loss or damage should be estimated according to the true and actual cash value at the time such loss or damage shall happen."

Where the bona fides of the transaction is not assailed, and neither fraud nor mistake is charged, the valuation is conclusive on the parties as to the amount which the assured is entitled to receive upon the happening of the condition of the policy. That is the rule which is settled upon authority, and to that extent it qualifies the principle underlying the contract as one of indemnity. Michael v. Prussian Nat. Ins. Co., 171 N. Y. 25, 63 N. called "valued policies."[5] A policy of insurance must be regarded as an open one, unless it appears to have been the intention of the parties to the policy, upon a fair and reasonable construction of its terms, to value the loss, and thereby fix by contract the amount of recovery.[6]

2. Pro Rata Liability. Where an aggregate amount of insurance is on separately valued items pro rata, the risk as to each item is to be determined by pro-rating the insurance according to the value of the different items.[7] The usual provision for pro-rating relates, however, to other insurance; and in general, in the absence of other insurance, the company is liable to the full amount of the sum specified in the policy, for the loss of any portion of the property covered.[8]

The value of the thing insured is fixed by the contract of the parties, and requires no proof; and, this constituting the only difference between an open and a valued policy, the value being agreed on, it is binding on both parties, and cannot be opened unless the value fixed is so exorbitant as to make it a fraudulent or gambling policy. Natchez Ins. Co. v. Buckner, 4 How. (Miss.) 63.

A valued policy determines beforehand the amount for which the insurer is liable in case of loss, and such amount is inserted in the policy as a fit sum to be paid if loss occurs. It does more than merely value the property insured; it values the loss. To do this the policy must amount to a contract either to pay, in case of loss, a stipulated sum, or that the property shall be estimated at the stipulated sum in case of loss. As defined by statute a valued policy is one which expresses on its face an agreement that the thing insured shall be valued at a specified sum. Cal. Civ. Code (1899), § 2596; N. D. Rev. Code (1899), § 4496; S. D. Civ. Code (1903), § 1486.

This form of policy may be said to be one in which the insurer himself, at the time of making the policy, assesses the damages in case of total loss, unless fraud, inducing an overvaluation on the part of assured, is established. Wood F. Ins. § 41 [quoted in Farmers' Ins. Co. v. Butler, 38 Ohio St. 128, 134].

The term "valued policy" applies to cases only where a valuation is fixed upon the underwritten property by way of liquidated damages, and for the purpose of avoiding a subsequent valuation of the property in case of loss. Universal Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Weiss, 106 Pa. St. 20 [citing Bouvier L. Dict.]. Insurance upon property "valued at six thousand dollars each, making in all thirty thousand dollars, of which fifteen thousand dollars are insured in the Western Marine and Fire Insurance Company: this policy covers the other fifteen thousand dollars," has been held to be clearly a valued policy. Under a policy which limits the liability of the company to a certain proportion of the value of the property at the time of the insurance, specifying, however, the valuation placed upon the property and the amount of the insurance, which does not exceed the proportion of the valuation thus placed upon the property, such valuation is conclusive; and it is not open to the company afterward to show that the valuation was excessive, for the purpose of reducing the amount of its liability; but such a stipulation relates to the value of the property at the time of the insurance, and not to the value at the time of loss; and the policy is therefore not in a proper sense a valued policy, but, like other policies of fire insurance, is an open policy, the liability of the company being determined by the value of the property at the time of loss. K. Commencement, Duration, and Termination of Risk — 1. Commencement. As a general rule,[9] the risk commences with the date of the policy.[10] But where the insurance is effected by a preliminary contract in accordance with which a policy is to be issued,[11] the risk takes effect from the date of such preliminary contract.[12]

2. Duration and Termination — a. In General. The duration of the insurance depends in general upon the terms of the policy; but if the policy fails to state any terms of duration, it is deemed to be in force for a reasonable time.[13]

b. Termination on Condition Subsequent. The contract may be so framed that the risk will continue only during the existence or continuance of a certain specified condition of the property; and when that condition ceases to exist the policy will no longer be binding.[14]

9. Delivery.— If, by stipulation, the policy is to go into effect only on delivery, the liability of the company does not attach until such delivery. Atlantic Ins. Co. v. Goodall, 35 N. H. 328.

It may be stipulated in the preliminary contract that the insurance shall take effect from the approval of the application, and the company will become liable for a loss occurring between the date of such approval and the issuance of a policy. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Kelley, 2 Nebr. (Unoff.) 720, 89 N. W. 997 [citing New York Union Mut. Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 23 Pa. St. 72].

Power of agent to bind company by preliminary agreement.— An agent without authority to contract binding insurance cannot by stating to the insured that the risk will attach at once bind the company. O'Brien v. New Zealand Ins. Co., 108 Cal. 227, 41 Pac. 298; Stockton v. Firemen's Ins. Co., 33 La. Ann. 577, 39 Am. Rep. 277; Allen v. St. Lawrence County Farmers' Ins. Co., 88 Hun (N. Retrospective contract.— While a contract mutually entered into, covering a loss which may already have occurred, is valid if insured has not concealed any knowledge as to the occurrence of the loss (Security F. Ins. Co. v. Kentucky M. & F. Ins. Co., 7 Bush (Ky.) 81, 3 Am. Rep. 301; Bennett v. Connecticut F. Ins. Co., 11 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 429, 27 Cinc. L. Both dates inclusive.— Where by its terms the policy runs from one day named to another day named "both inclusive" it does not expire until midnight of the last day. Herald Co. v. Northern Assur. Co., 4 Montreal Super. Ct. 254.

Mistake.— If the agent has by mistake issued a policy for a longer period than that intended, and the insured has accepted it as a valid policy for the time specified, the company is bound. But where by mistake the date of the expiration named in the policy is the same as the date on which by the terms of the policy it is to go into effect, the fact of mistake may be shown by parol evidence, and the policy will be valid for the term intended. Where it was stipulated that the policy should continue until a new policy was issued, and the insured surrendered the old policy and accepted a new policy, it was held that the risk under the new policy attached as against the company, although it had not yet formally accepted the return of the old policy. Atlantic Ins. Co. v. Goodall, 35 N. H. 328.

L. Contract Entire or Divisible — 1. In General. Policies are frequently written which, while specifying one gross premium, cover several items of property, the total amount of the insurance being apportioned to the several items by specifying the amount of insurance on each item;[15] and the courts are hopelessly divided[16] as to whether in such case the policy is to be regarded as an indivisible contract, so that a breach of stipulation or warranty as to one of the items of property covered will avoid the policy in its entirety, or whether, on the other hand, the policy is to be regarded as in effect so many separate contracts, so that the invalidity as to one item of property will not defeat recovery for loss on other items as to which there is no breach.[17] The fact that the contract is executed as a whole, and the consideration is a gross premium, has led many courts to adopt the conclusion that such a contract is indivisible;[18] but the weight of authority on the general proposition is perhaps in favor of the rule that the contract is divisible, and may be valid as to some of the items of property covered, although void as to the others.[19] The conflict in the authorities extends to policies covering Condition as to falling of building.— Under a stipulation that the falling of the building insured shall terminate the risk, damage to the building by storm or otherwise, which does not result in its complete fall and destruction as a building, does not terminate the risk. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Congregation Rodeph Sholom, 80 Ill. 558; London, etc., F. Ins. Co. v. Crunk, 91 Tenn. 376, 23 S. W. 140.

15. The effect of the apportionment of risk among several separate and distinct items of property is to limit the amount of the risk as to each of such items. Plath v. Minnesota Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Assoc., 23 Minn. 479, 23 Am. Rep. 697; Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Pfeifer, (Tex. Civ. App. 1897) 39 S. W. 1001.

16. Many of the cases apparently conflicting could be reconciled on the theory that the question is one of construction, depending on the intent of the parties, the reasonable intendment being that where the risk is common to the different items of property, as for instance where the policy covers a building and contents, or separate items of personal property in the same building, the policy should be construed as indivisible, while it should be allowed to be divisible where the risk of loss as to one building or item of property is wholly distinct from that as to the other. estates are separately insured by the same policy, the contract is severable,[25] and that a policy of insurance assigned to a mortgagee may be regarded as severable, so as to be valid as to him, although invalid as to the mortgagor.[26]

XII. MISREPRESENTATION, FRAUD, OR BREACH OF WARRANTY AVOIDING POLICY.

A. In General — 1. Misrepresentations — a. Effect in General. The effect of a misrepresentation[27] in connection with fire insurance is generally to avoid the policy;[28] but if a representation in a policy partly fails, but is true and is complied with so far as essential to the risk insured against, the policy remains in force.[29]

b. Materiality. But a misrepresentation as distinct from a warranty[30] must be with reference to a matter material to the risk or the rate of premium, and if it is as to a matter which would not have affected the making of the contract, had it been truly represented, then the validity of the contract is not affected by such misrepresentation.[31] It is the materiality of the misrepresentation as to the making of the contract, and not its materiality as shown by a subsequent loss, which is to be considered in determining the validity of the contract.[32] Representations may be made material by the stipulations of the policy so that the question

But on the other hand it is said that where two parties have joint insurance on property in which each has a separate interest, the fact that the policy is void as to one, because he is found not to have an insurable interest, will not avoid it as to the other. of materiality will not be open to inquiry,[33] but they thereby become in effect warranties, and are governed by the general rules relating to warranties.[34]

c. Falsity. A representation relied upon as avoiding the policy must not only be false in fact but false to the knowledge of the insured making it, that is, it must be knowingly and intentionally false,[35] and false in a substantial and material respect.[36] Thus if the application for a policy of fire-insurance is not made by the insured or some agent authorized to act for him misstatements therein will not avoid the policy if they are not made warranties;[37] if, however, the representation is made by an agent acting under the authority of the insured, for the purpose of securing insurance, it will be binding upon the insured.[38] So too it seems to be well settled that unintentional misstatements or omissions will not defeat the policy;[39] however, if the representations are as to a material fact and they were relied on by the company in entering into the contract, the policy is invalid.[40]

Incorrect statements given as a matter of opinion or belief will not, it has been frequently held, invalidate the policy.[41]

2. Fraud and False Swearing[42] — a. In General. Any fraud of the insured in procuring the policy[43] renders it voidable at the election of the company.[44] But the false swearing must be knowingly and wilfully done.[45]

b. Concealment[46] — (I) Effect in General. The insured may by failing to disclose facts material to the risk to be assumed under the policy, and which he has reason to believe are not within the knowledge of the company, be guilty of such fraud as to defeat the contract.[47]

(II) Materiality. The concealment must be of a material fact, that is, one which, indicating a greater risk than the company would otherwise have reason to suppose it was assuming, would probably have deterred the company from entering into the contract.[48]

(III) Facts Within Knowledge of Insurer. If the fact is within the knowledge of the company or might reasonably be assumed to be within its knowledge, the assured is under no obligation to communicate it.[49] By the great weight of authority[50] the issuance of the policy with knowledge that representations or warranties made by the insured are false will be a waiver of any right to avoid the policy on that ground.[51]

(IV) Facts Not Within Knowledge of Insured. If the fact is not one within the knowledge of the insured, he is under no obligation to communicate it;[52] but if the insured fails to state a fact which by the terms of the policy renders it void, the failure to state will vitiate the policy, although the proviso is not known to the insured.[53]

Nor will a total failure to answer a question asked constitute a concealment, for the company is thereby advised that the insured gives no information upon that subject, and if it deems the information material it should insist upon an answer to the question before issuing its policy.[55]

3. Breach of Warranty — a. Nature and Elements of Warranty. The parties may by their affirmative contract declare that a representation shall be deemed material and thus eliminate the question of materiality and good faith so that such representation shall become a warranty; in that case a misrepresentation constitutes a breach of warranty rendering the contract void. Thus it is usual to specifically provide in the policy that the application, survey, or other statement by the insured, on the faith of which the policy is issued, shall be deemed a part of the policy and any statements made by the insured therein shall be deemed warranties, and thus the statements of the application are given as full effect as though they were made in the policy itself;[56] but unless thus incorporated into the policy by specific reference, the statements of the application or other statements preliminary or collateral to the making of the contract are not warranties, and their falsity will affect its validity only as misrepresentations.[57] Statements contained in the policy itself may be made warranties by an

policy is nevertheless not absolutely void but voidable in such sense that it will be valid if the company waives the breach of warranty or condition.[65] Notwithstanding the broad statement, however, supported by many cases,[66] that falsity of any statement contained in the policy or incorporated therein, by reference, will render the policy void irrespective of its materiality or the good faith with which it is made, nevertheless there may be statements in the policy or in the application referred to in the policy, such for instance as descriptions of the property, which are so clearly matters of surplusage and not pertinent or material to the contract that they will be disregarded, and their falsity will not affect the validity of the contract.[67]

c. Materiality — "Representation" and "Warranty" Distinguished. Warranties differ from representations, then, in that falsity of a representation will defeat the contract only where it is material, as representations are merely inducements to the making of the contract,[68] while in case of a warranty the statement is made material by the very language of the contract, so that a misrepresentation of a matter warranted is a breach of the contract itself.[69] Therefore the falsity of a statement which is made a warranty will avoid the contract without regard to whether it can be considered as material in any way to the risk or the loss.[70]

67. Cases of this kind are to be explained, not on the theory that the parties cannot by express stipulations make any representations material without regard to the extent to which they may affect the risk, but on the theory that, considering the purpose with which the contract is made, it could not have been the intention of the parties that exact accuracy in such statements was relied on.

d. Knowledge of Falsity. The fact that a statement which is made a warranty is made in good faith or through mistake will not prevent the falsity thereof from constituting a breach of warranty and avoiding the policy.[71] Nevertheless statements which are made warranties may by their very terms so clearly appear to be merely statements as to the knowledge or belief of the insured that falsity therein will avoid the policy only where it is intentional, and as to a material matter.[72]

e. Construction of Warranty.[73] As the effect of a breach of warranty is to invalidate the contract and operate as a forfeiture of the insurance, a warranty will be construed strictly as against the company, and liberally as against the insured.[74]

in substance the policy is void.[75] However, complete accuracy in detail is not required or essential, provided that the description is substantially correct and that the risk is not really greater than as represented.[76] An omission to mention a material part of the description is a fatal concealment,[77] but not so if the part omitted in no wise increases the hazard.[78] The age of a building is a material part of its description, and if false will effect a forfeiture of the policy,[79] unless such a statement be entirely immaterial, because of the nature, preservation, and value of the premises.[80] A practically complete reconstruction is equivalent to a rebuilding and the date thereof may be used to fix the age of the structure.[81]

b. Location. While a statement as to the location of the subject-matter of the risk, both with reference to its own situation,[82] and with reference to its position relatively to adjacent structures,[83] is an essential feature of the risk when

5. The current and standard form now recites that the policy is to be void if the "interest of the insured be not truly stated herein or be other than unconditional and sole ownership." Former phrases in use are that the insured is the "owner," "the sole owner," or "unconditional owner" of the property, that he has "a perfect legal and equitable title," or that his title is "unconditional, free, and unencumbered;" or that the insured is the "owner in fee simple."

The Michigan supreme court has refused to strict and technical construction by the courts.[7] Under such provisions misrepresentations may avoid the policy, although not made with any knowledge of their falsity or an intent to deceive.[8] And the insurer's failure to inquire into the title is likewise immaterial.[9]

b. What Amounts to a Breach — (i) Ownership of an Insurable Interest. When the only stipulation of the policy is that the insured must be the "owner" of the property,[10] or that the property be "his,"[11] the courts have not regarded this statement as importing a warranty that the insured is seized unconditionally in fee to the exclusion of all persons, but, if in common parlance, the property might be spoken of as "his" and he has an insurable interest not over-regard such stipulations as amounting to a warranty in præsenti, but say such provisions are to be construed only with reference to the future. Hall v. Niagara F. Ins. Co., 93 Mich. 184, 53 N. W. 727, 32 Am. St. Rep. 497, 18 L. R. A. 135; Hoose v. Prescott Ins. Co., 84 Mich. 309, 47 N. W. 587, 11 L. R. A. 340.

But the better view is to regard them as relating to ownership when the policy is issued. Rosenstock v. Mississippi Home Ins. Co., 82 Miss. 674, 35 So. 309; Collins v. London Assur. Corp., 165 Pa. St. 298, 30 Atl. 924.

In case of a conflict between such clauses in the printed part of the policy and provisions specially inserted, the former must yield to those specifically thus embodied. Dresser v. United Firemen's Ins. Co., 45 Hun (N. Y.) 298; Grandin v. Rochester German Ins. Co., 107 Pa. St. 26.

The provisions are applicable alike to personalty and realty (Girard F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Hebard, 95 Pa. St. 45), except when the term "fee" or "fee simple" is used, such a term not being applicable to anything but real estate (German Ins. Co. v. Miller, 39 Ill. App. 633; Butler v. Standard F. Ins. Co., 4 Ont. App. 391).

The burden is on the insurer to establish the defense that, at the time the policy was taken out, the insured was not the owner of the property, notwithstanding it is incumbent on the insured, in order to make out a prima facie case, to show that the property belonged to him at the time it was burned. The words "absolute fee-simple title" mean that the insured does not have a limited interest in the property, but that he claims and holds under a deed of conveyance or other evidence of title purporting to invest him with an estate in fee simple. When the policy was conditioned to be void if the insured's interest be other than the entire and unconditional ownership, it was held that the reference was descriptive, not of the legal title, but only of what interest the insured possessed, and if that be insurable, although less than a fee, and did not rest upon a condition and were not held jointly or in common, the condition was not broken. insured, the policy is not forfeitable because his interest is not entire.[12] But under a policy providing that the title of the insured must not be other than unconditional and sole ownership, the fact that the insured has an insurable interest exceeding in value the amount of the policy will not prevent a forfeiture.[13]

(II) Ownership of Equitable Title. If the insured possesses the equitable title to the premises, the fact that the naked legal title is outstanding, which he has a right to compel to be transferred, will not amount to a breach of a condition that he is the owner, that his interest is absolute, or that his title is not other than sole and unconditional ownership.[14] But possession of land under a verbal gift will not satisfy such a condition, because equity will not aid a volunteer to perfect a conveyance.[15] The absence of a deed when the insured is the real owner, although the record title rests in another, will not affect his right to recover.[16] Thus possession under claim of right and color of title for a longer period than the statute of limitations constitutes the occupant the owner in fee of the premises.[17]

(III) Business Carried on in Name of Another. Actual ownership satisfying the condition is not interfered with by the fact that the insured has carried on his business in the name of another for purposes of strengthening his credit or otherwise.[18]

(iv) Vendee in Contract For Sale. Inasmuch as the vendee under a written contract of sale has the right to compel a conveyance by equitable proceedings for a specific performance, a policy taken out by him is not invalidated, although his interest be not disclosed in full, by a provision that the policy is void if the property be not "his,"[19] or if his interest is "other than sole and unconditional ownership." The retention of a lien by the vendor for the purchase-money is not inconsistent with such ownership.[20] But if he actively misrepresents the nature of his interest he cannot recover on the policy, although he has a valid enforceable contract for the purchase of the property.[21] The rule is the same as to personalty if possession has been taken and no lien has been reserved by the vendor.[22] And if the title has actually passed to the vendee the fact that a lien has been retained for the purchase-price or that a chattel mortgage has been given by the vendee to secure the vendor does not make the vendee's interest other than "sole and unconditional."[23] But if the title by the terms of the contract is to remain in the vendor until the conditions are complied with, the interest of the vendee is not insurable as being "sole and unconditional."[24] So if the only condition to be performed is payment of the purchase-price, the deed being in escrow, the vendee is the "sole and unconditional owner."[25] It is immaterial that the contract provides for a forfeiture for non-payment of an instalment,[26] at least in the absence of any breach which the vendor can take advantage of.[27] Even though the contract be parol, there is no misdescription if the vendee has entered into possession and has made such valuable improvements that under the doctrine of part performance the contract is taken out of the statute of frauds.[28] But if the contract is not enforceable because of the statute of frauds the policy is invalid.[29] A person in possession of realty holding a "bond for deed" is likewise possessed of "sole and unconditional ownership."[30]

(v) Vendor in Executory Contract. Correlatively, if the vendor of realty is under an obligation to convey title upon the payment by the vendee of the purchase-price, his interest is to be regarded in equity as a mere lien and his rights those of a trustee. Consequently his interest is not equivalent to unconditional and sole ownership,[31] at least if possession has been taken by the vendee.[32] However, if the sale is upon condition that the title remains unaffected in the vendor until the performance of the condition, his interest is regarded as unconditional and sole.[33] The giving of an option, under which the holder thereof has not bound himself to purchase, does not affect the owner's interest or title.[34] And in the case of personalty when possession has not passed, the vendor's interest remains unaffected by virtue of a contract for sale whereby the title is to remain in the vendor until the purchase-price is paid.[35]

(vi) Mortgages, Defeasible Conveyances, and Other Liens — (a) In General. Where a mortgage is regarded merely as giving the mortgagee a lien by way of security and not as operating to transfer an estate, the existence of a mortgage or other lien upon property has been quite uniformly held not to amount, prior to foreclosure, to a breach of a condition in the mortgagor's policy that the insured's interest shall be entire, sole, and unconditional ownership, the stipulation being considered not to refer to a mere encumbrance.[36] And the same rule has been generally adopted, even where the common-law theory of a mortgage prevails,[37] notably in the case of a mortgage on personal property.[38] A trust deed, being in effect a mortgage, stands on the same footing and does not interfere with the grantor's unconditional ownership.[39] Similarly a deed absolute but intended as a security does not vitiate a policy, for the grantor can compel a reconveyance of the bare legal title.[40] Likewise a bill of sale intended as security, the vendor retaining possession of the property, does not render the policy invalid.[41] But if in any case a reconveyance is not enforceable in equity by the grantor such insured misrepresents his interest by calling the property his.[42] The existence of a mere lien of other character, such as a vendor's lien[43] or judgment,[44] does not amount to a breach of such condition.[45] Nor does the levy of an attachment.[46] Nor does a pending litigation concerning the title lessen the interest of the insured so as to make him other than the sole and unconditional owner.[47]

(B) After Foreclosure or Judicial Sale. After foreclosure has progressed to a sale, the mortgagor's interest, being limited to a right of redemption, cannot be properly designated as sole and unconditional ownership.[48] So the purchaser of in firm property is not sole and unconditional ownership.[60] There is no misdescription, however, if the property be described in the absence of specific inquiry as "his."[61] If the insured merely gives a share of the profits of the business to an employee, no partnership in fact being intended, there is no partnership in law and the insured's interest is sole and unconditional. There must be a true partnership.[62] In some jurisdictions, because of the form of conveyance, a deed may vest the legal title completely in an individual partner named as grantee, so that he may describe himself as the "sole owner."[63] An executory agreement for a partnership, never in fact entered into, will not render void a policy containing a condition that an insured individual is the sole owner.[64] So a surviving partner is not vested with unconditional ownership, although there is a merger to some extent of the firm and his individual title for purposes of settlement.[65]

(x) Marital Interests. A married woman is the unconditional and sole owner of her separate property despite her husband's interest by way of curtesy[66] or homestead.[67] A husband therefore misdescribes property by calling it his when the title is in the wife.[68] So the wife misdescribes her husband's property right to remove therefrom the insured structures.[82] The fact that a lease is outstanding does not render the lessor's interest other than absolute and unconditional ownership.[83]

(XIII) BUILDING ON LEASED LAND. In the absence of an inquiry or provision in the policy, the insured need not disclose the fact that the insured building owned by him stands upon leased ground.[84] However, it is a frequent provision in policies that under such circumstances the fact must be disclosed to the insurer. A failure to give such information will under such a policy avoid the insurance.[85]

(XIV) POLICIES PAYABLE "AS INTEREST MAY APPEAR." If a policy is made payable to a designated person "as his interest may appear," there is no necessity for a specific statement as to the payee's interest, the policy amounting to a waiver of such a requirement.[86] But this does not excuse a breach of condition as to statements of title on the part of the insured, the payee not being regarded as such, nor the insurer as charged with notice of the nature of the payee's interest.[87]

(XV) MISCELLANEOUS INTERESTS. The owner of all the stock of a corporation has such title that he will constitute his grantee the "sole, absolute and unconditional owner" of the company's realty;[88] but he cannot describe himself as such.[89] The existence of a mere pooling arrangement between competing business interests does not alone amount to a breach of such provision.[90] Where the insured executes an instrument operating as a deed, instead of operating as a

of an attachment[5] or of an execution[6] on insured property is an encumbrance which must be disclosed when encumbrances are inquired about. But not so if the seizure was illegal and hence did not constitute a true lien.[7]

(VI) MISCELLANEOUS. A mechanic's lien is an encumbrance which must be disclosed under the encumbrance clause of a policy.[8] But a landlord's lien is not.[9] Nor is a lease of a store an encumbrance on merchandise therein.[10] A bond to convey land is not a prohibited encumbrance after the time has expired for completion of the contract and the purchase-price is unpaid.[11] Nor is any lien which is no longer enforceable.[12] A charge on land to pay an annuity is an encumbrance.[13] Liens against one member of a partnership do not constitute a breach of the condition of a policy taken out by the firm.[14]

5. OTHER INSURANCE — a. Effect of. The modern policy provides that it shall be void if the insured "now has or shall hereafter make or procure any other contract of insurance, whether valid or not, on property covered in whole or in part by this policy." When this customary condition against further insurance is found, avoidance takes place even though the insured forgot to disclose such insurance or was unaware of its existence, if there actually is other insurance on the property,[15] for the provision is regarded as reasonable and valid,[16] and it is immaterial that the property is not over insured.[17] Nor can the insured protect himself by canceling the prior policy if the condition is once broken.[18] Nor does its expiration revive the subsequent policy.[19] In Illinois, however, it has been held that the policy takes life when the prior insurance expires or is canceled.[20] It has also been held that an overstatement of existing insurance under an express warranty will likewise vitiate the policy.[21] In the absence of a provision requiring an insertion of the amount of outstanding insurance in the policy, a verbal statement thereof is sufficient.[22] And even where the policy requires a disclosure of other outstanding insurance to appear in the policy, while some few cases assert that a verbal notice to the insurer is insufficient,[23] the great burden of adjudication in other fields of insurance is that the knowledge of the insurer is sufficient without indorsement, at least as to all matters arising contemporaneously with the issuance of the policy.[24]

b. What Constitutes Additional Insurance — (1) Interest Insured. To be insurance of the sort prohibited the prior policy must have been insurance upon the same subject-matter,[25] and upon the same interest therein.[26] The subject-matter of the two policies need not, however, be identical,[27] for a policy insuring the property in question along with other property is a breach of the condition.[28]

(II) Prior Policy Invalid. If the prior policy is totally invalid before the issuance of the policy in suit, it cannot be regarded as constituting an insurance which must be disclosed, in the absence of a specific requirement as to the disclosure of insurance whether valid or not.[29] If the policy requires "all insurance (valid or not)" to be disclosed, however, a failure to mention a former policy apparently valid on its face but in fact void will vitiate the insurance.[30] And it has been held that a policy which is not void ipso facto but only voidable on breach of a condition, is double insurance, although a breach has occurred, unless the forfeiture has been declared.[31] There is an irrepressible conflict among the authorities when both the prior policy and the policy in suit are conditioned to be void if there be further insurance, as to which policy is thereby affected. In case the clause is given a literal interpretation, the prior policy ceases to exist upon taking out the second and the latter is consequently the sole insurance and its condition is not broken. Such is the view of many courts.[32] In other jurisdictions the prior policy is regarded as merely voidable until the forfeiture is declared, and in consequence constitutes additional insurance which if not disclosed will vitiate the subsequent policy.[33] When two policies are simultaneously isssued, it has been held that neither is vitiated by the other.[34]

that he has disclosed all circumstances material to the risk he cannot, except under penalty of a forfeiture, conceal those facts which would affect the willingness of the insurer to carry the policy.[36] And under any circumstances the false representation as to any surrounding and concomitant facts will render his policy void in its inception.[37] False statements that the insured premises are equipped with fire-fighting apparatus will avoid the policy.[38] And a like result follows from a false warranty as to the maintenance of a watchman upon the grounds.[39]

40. See infra, XIII, A, 7, a. A condition in a policy affecting its validity can only be defenses available to the insurer, but of which it had no knowledge, which do not inhere in the estate of the assignee.[41] But if the defect continues and does not amount to a mere personal defense against the assignor, the assignee cannot recover, although he knows nothing thereof.[42]

2. MORTGAGEES. The mortgagee takes only the interest of the mortgagor, and hence if he be merely a designated payee the existence of a defense by way of a breach of a condition precedent will defeat his right to a recovery on the policy.[43] And this has been regarded as true even though the policy provides that it shall not be invalidated by any act of the mortgagor, such provisions referring to the breach of a condition subsequent.[44] But if an independent contract for insurance is entered into between the insurer and the mortgagee the latter is not affected by any misrepresentation made by the mortgagor.[45] And some courts interpret the meaning of the provision against the acts of the mortgagor as amounting to such an independently enforceable contract.[46]

D. Entire and Severable Contracts. If the policy covers several risks, and the consideration therefor be severable and the subject-matter distinct and separate, a breach of a condition precedent with respect to one of such risks or subject-matters will not prevent a recovery upon the policy for the portion as to which no condition was broken.[47] But if the breach of condition necessarily

XIII. FORFEITURE FOR BREACH OF PROMISSORY WARRANTIES, OR CONDITIONS SUBSEQUENT.

A. In General — 1. NATURE OF PROMISSORY WARRANTY. Warranties may be of two types: (1) Affirmative, relating to the present or past existence of certain facts upon the exact truth of which depends the inception of the contract of insurance and thus operating by way of a condition precedent;[52] and (2) promissory, relating to the continuation or fulfilment of certain conditions upon which the life and continuation of the policy depend, which are thus in effect conditions subsequent.[53] An agreement to perform an executory stipulation is a

By a renewal of the policy a promissory promissory warranty.[54] Any representation in the nature of a promise or stipulation for future conduct on the part of the insured must be inserted in the policy in order to be available to the insurer.[55]

2. Materiality. In the absence of statutory regulation, the breach of a promissory warranty avoids the policy irrespective of its materiality.[56] Many states, however, have enacted laws in a large measure annulling this rule, and providing that unless the breach of condition contributes to the loss it will not effect a forfeiture. While policies already forfeited are not affected by such statutes,[57] all policies issued after their passage come within their purview.[58]

3. Revival of Policy. There is much conflict upon the question whether a policy is revived by a termination of the prohibited condition constituting a breach of warranty. On principle, it would seem that the answer should depend on whether the policy is conditioned to be void, or is to be merely suspended for breach of condition. If the latter only is provided, the policy should revive when the breach no longer continues and when the risk is restored to its original condition.[59] If, however, the provision be that a forfeiture occurs upon a breach, that is, that the policy shall become void, the removal of the situation causing a breach of condition should not operate to revive the policy without the consent

Warranty indorsed on or attached to policy. — Where the policy states that it is accepted subject to such conditions as may be indorsed thereon or added thereto, a promissory warranty is sufficiently within the rule stated in the text if appearing upon a slip attached to the policy (Kelley-Goodfellow Shoe Co. v. Liberty Ins. of the insurer.[60] The standard form of policy contains express words of forfeiture if any of the conditions or promissory warranties of the policy are broken.[61] But where policies have simply provided that notice shall be given to the company of any increase of risk or have reserved the option to declare the policy void, the courts have not declared forfeiture simply on breaches of conditions,[62] but have considered a forfeiture as thereby occurring only when on general principles a duty created by law has been violated.[63]

Whether acts of mortgagor or assignor will forfeit the policy as to the mortgagee edge and consent of the insured, the act, on principles of agency, is the act of the insured.[65] Under the provisions in the standard policy[66] the acts of third parties over whom the insured has no control, or of which he has no cognizance, should be immaterial.[67]

5. Breach as to Part of Risk. If the policy covers several risks, but these risks are so distinguishable as to be severable, and the consideration for the risks be also severable, a breach of a condition as to one of the risks will not avoid the policy in toto, but only pro tanto.[68] If, however, the breach of the condition necessarily increases the risk upon the other property insured,[69] or if the contract of insurance be an entirety,[70] or if the consideration be a lump sum not reserved to the company of declaring a forfeiture, all legal and affirmative steps to complete a forfeiture are requisite.[76] And some courts have regarded the term "void" as meaning only "voidable," and consequently assert that a breach of condition merely gives the insurer ground to declare a forfeiture.[77] And the insurer may waive the forfeiture and continue the policy.[78] Whether this waiver may be oral when the contract provides that it must be in writing and indorsed on the policy is a question upon which there is great judicial conflict. and the mortgagee becomes possessed of only the mortgagor's chose in action. It is immaterial that the mortgagee was the party who procured the insurance.[89] The same rule prevails when the designated payee is not a mortgagee, but a mere appointee.[90] Even though the transfer be with the assent of the insurer, if no privity of contract is completed, the mortgagee's rights will be defeated by the breach of conditions by the mortgagor.[91] But if a new contract be made directly between the mortgagee and the insurer, subsequent breaches of condition by the mortgagor are immaterial and do not affect the rights of the mortgagee.[92] These rules have led to statutory enactments in many states that the mortgagee shall not be prejudiced by the acts of the mortgagor after the mortgagee has thus been designated as the payee.[93] The mortgagee it seems, however, should notify the insurer of any breach of conditions of which he is cognizant in order to justify a recovery by him.[94]

8. Construction. Inasmuch as forfeitures are not favored by the law and because policies are drawn by the insurer, conditions therein amounting to promissory warranties are to be construed liberally in favor of the insured and more strongly against the insurer for whose benefit they are imposed;[95] but this does not mean that the insured can assert that he was not cognizant of the warranty contained in the policy issued to him. He is bound by those that appear therein in the absence of fraud, misrepresentation, or concealment.[96]

B. Change in Condition, Use, or Occupancy — 1. In General. Every contract of insurance is made with reference to the conditions surrounding the subject-matter of the risk and the premium is fixed with reference thereto. It has been said that if the insured were permitted to change those conditions and still assert the existence of the policy, he would be doing an unconscionable act, and that accordingly there should be implied in every policy a condition that the state or use of the premises will not be changed so as to materially increase the risk.[97] It is customary, however, to insert in the policy provisions that the contract shall be void if the hazard be increased by any means within the control of the insured, together with provisions concerning repairs and occupancy,[98] which will be hereinafter considered. The standard policy contains such clauses.[99]

2. Alterations and Additions — a. Stipulations. Alterations in a building not increasing the risk do not avoid the policy in the absence of stipulations that such shall be the result;[1] and even if notice be required of "any change in the risk," notice need not be given of an immaterial change.[2] A stipulation that the policy is to be void if material alterations be made in the premises causing an increase of the risk is uniformly upheld;[3] but stipulations that the policy is to be void, or that notice must be given to the insured, if any alteration, addition, or enlargement be made, are to be given effect irrespective of whether there is thus an increase of risk or whether such alterations were connected with the cause of the fire.[4]

b. Permission to Make. The insurer may be taken to have waived the full or partial effect of such a clause by giving permission to the insured to make repairs which otherwise would be prohibited. The extent of the repairs thus

It was said in Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Coomes, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 238, that an addition to an insured building increasing its value and so furnishing an additional motive to the insured to preserve his property could not be regarded as increasing the risk. If this is to be understood as a general principle it is not sufficiently discriminating.

A change from shingle to corrugated iron roofing is not an increase of risk. Meyer v. Queen Ins. Co., 41 La. Ann. 1000, 6 So. 899.

The so-called "builder's risk" clause, that is, "that the working of carpenters . . . or other mechanics, in building, altering, or repairing the premises" shall vitiate the policy, has been held not to refer to repairs not increasing the risk and rendered necessary to remedy the defects endangering the safety of the insured property (James v. Lycoming Ins. Co., 13 Fed. Cas. No. 7,182, 4 Cliff. 272) or to the casual patching up of the building and current repairs such as are indispensable to the proper conduct of the business carried on therein (Phœnix Ins. The condition must receive a reasonable construction and it cannot be construed so as to be repugnant to the nature and purpose of the policy or inconsistent with the due and customary use of the property. James v. Lycoming Ins. Co., supra. It has been said that the condition has reference to some permanent alteration of the building. Shaw v. Robberds, 6 A. & E. 75, 1 Jur. 6, 6 L. J. K. B. 106, 1 N. & P. 279, W. W. & D. 94, 33 E. C. L. 63. But a material change (Mack v. Rochester German Ins. Co., 106 N. Y. 560, 13 N. E. 343; Leibrandt, etc., Stove Co. v. Fireman's Ins. Co., 35 Fed. 30; Reid v. Gore Dist. Mut. F. Ins. Co., 11 U. C. Q. B. 345), or extensive alterations (Imperial F. Ins. Co. v. Coos County, 151 U. S. 452, 14 S. Ct. 379, 38 L. ed. 231), under this clause will vitiate the policy.

Where alterations and additions are of the same general character as the original building, and not such as would have called for a higher rate of premium than before, such additions do not tend to increase the risk. Schenck v. Mercer County Mut. F. Ins. Co., 24 N. J. L. 447.

allowable because of a given permission is to be determined by a reasonable construction of the policy and the language of the permission.[5]

c. Standard Policy. The provision in the standard policy[6] is reasonable and valid. It permits reasonable repairs, but limits the time in which even those necessary for the preservation of the property must be completed.[7] And it is immaterial whether or not such alterations or repairs contribute to the loss.[8]

3. Falling of Building — a. Stipulations. The standard policy contains a provision that if the "building or any part thereof fall, except as the result of fire, all insurance by the policy shall immediately cease." This provision is valid.[9]

b. What Constitutes a "Falling." It is requisite that the fall be of some material or substantial part of the building.[10] Even without this stipulation of the policy, if the building had by falling ceased to be such, and had become "a mere congeries of materials" the policy would be invalid, for it is a building and not a rubbish heap that is insured.[11]

4. Erection of or Change in Adjacent Buildings — a. By Insured. It has been held that a representation as to the position of a building insured with respect to other buildings is not a warranty that the buildings will retain that position relatively during the life of the policy.[12] A mere alteration of the premises by the erection of contiguous buildings without increase of risk will not therefore avoid the policy, unless the policy so stipulated.[13] But if the policy provides that any alteration of the risk by means under the control of the insured will vitiate the contract, or that the conditions stated therein constitute a continuing warranty, the subsequent erection by the insured of additional structures upon the adjacent premises will terminate the insurer's rights under the policy.[14]

b. By Third Parties. Ordinarily the erection of new buildings by persons other than the insured adjacent to the insured premises will not avoid the policy.[15] But if it be stated in the policy that it is to be void if the hazard be increased by any means within the knowledge of the insured and that the statements with reference to exposures constitute a continuing warranty,[16] it is held that the policy is vitiated by the subsequent erection known to the insured of a building over which he has no control.[17]

5. Change in Use — a. In General. A mere statement of the present use of a building, although a warranty in præsenti, is not a promissory warranty that the building shall continue to be so used during the life of the policy. It is rather

So if the policy provides that on renewal it is to be continued under the original representation, the failure of the insured to state a change by the erection of an adjacent building will vitiate the renewal policy. In some of the earlier cases, however, when by a policy premises are insured as of a certain character, a total change in that character, even though no express provision is inserted, has been held to amount to an unconscionable change in the risk and so cause a forfeiture. What amounts to a prohibited change in use in general.— The placing of unslaked lime in the basement of a church (Minnehaha County School Dist. No. 116 v. German Ins. Co., 7 S. D. 458, 64 N. What does not amount to a prohibited change in use in general.— The mere fact that the office is moved from one room to another (Pacaud v. Monarch Ins. Co., 1 L. C. Jur. 284), the fitting up of a paper mill with appliances run by the same gearing to grind grain (Wood v. Hartford F. Ins. Co., 13 Conn. 533, 35 Am. Dec. 92), or the setting up of machinery to manufacture boxes, an appropriation of the premises for carpenter work (U. S. Fire & M. Ins. Co. v. Kimberly, 34 Md. 224, 6 Am. Rep. 325) does not amount to such a prohibited change in use as to avoid the policy. The use of a part of a building to make brooms does not convert the building into a broom factory. Fire Assoc. v. Gilmer, 3 Walk. (Pa.) 234.

An auction sale of insured's stock after execution is not a violation of a warranty that the premises would be used as a "store occupied by the insured." Rice v. Tower, 1 Gray (Mass.) 426.

this is done it is immaterial whether or not the change had anything to do with the loss.[21] A provision frequently found in the policy is that the same shall be void "if the hazard be increased by any means within the control or knowledge of the insured" and certain designated uses are denominated extrahazardous and are prohibited. When such is the case it is not proper to show that in fact such uses were not more hazardous, for they have been finally agreed upon as falling within such a classification.[22] The use for a purpose considered more hazardous according to the policy vitiates the insurance, for such a provision is a warranty;[23]

When risks are classified and more hazardous risks are prohibited, the change from one use to another within the class to which the original risk belonged will not affect the policy. Brink v. Merchants', etc., Ins. Co., 49 Vt. 442. In determining whether the hazard has been increased, comparison is to be made with the use set forth in the application and policy and not with a use prior to the execution thereof. State Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Arthur, 30 Pa. St. 315. But if the policy simply provides that the insured shall and the policy is avoided, although the risk be not increased.[24] When a a policy specifies the uses to which the premises are or may be applied, a mere increase of risk, so long as the premises are being put to a use contemplated and covered by the policy, unless prohibited in specific terms, will not avoid the insurance.[25] When a change of use which during its continuance increased the hazard has been terminated and the property restored to its former use, the policy should be totally void in the absence of a waiver by insurer, when it is provided that a change in use shall forfeit the policy;[26] but if the policy provides only that the life of the policy shall cease so long as the premises shall be used for any prohibited purpose, if a prior improper use has been terminated and the original condition restored the policy is revived.[27]

b. Illegal Use — (i) Effect of. If the direct purpose of the contract is to effect, advance, or encourage acts in violation of the law it is settled that the policy is void.[28] But it is equally well settled that a mere illegal use made of the premises, there being no provision of the policy applicable,[29] and no design, Liquors.— The statutes of some states make the sale of liquor entirely or within certain limits illegal. 29. These clauses are frequently found in policies which may affect the rule: (1) "If the risk be increased by any means under the insured's control." Here a mere illegal use is insufficient to avoid a policy. Behler v. German Mut. F. Ins. Co., 68 Ind. 347; Martin v. Capital Ins. Co., 85 Iowa 643, 52 N. W. 534. (2) "If there is any change in the nature or character of the property insured, the policy shall be void." Under this provision it has been held that the conversion of an ordinary sleeping apartment into a house of assignation and prostitution avoids the policy. Indiana Ins. Co. v. Brehm, 88 Ind. 578. (3) The policy may expressly provide that the insurance is to be vitiated if the premises are put to an illegal use. Under such a provision the policy becomes void upon undertaking within the premises a trade illegal under the laws of the state. Concordia F. Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 4 Kan. App. 7, 45 Pac. 722; Kelly v. Worcester Mut. F. Ins. Co., 97 Mass. 284; Campbell v. Charter Oak F. & M. Ins. Co., 10 Allen (Mass.) 213. But even here a mere transitory, illegal act is immaterial if it be not an appropriation by means of insurance, to promote an unlawful enterprise, does not affect the right of insured to recover.[30]

(II) KNOWLEDGE. The lack of knowledge of the insured, under a clause forbidding an illegal use, that illegal acts are done is wholly immaterial.[31]

(III) REVIVAL. When once a policy has become void by its terms, it is not revived by a termination of the illegal appropriation.[32]

e. By Operation of Factory at Night. The standard policy contains a clause that a policy on a factory shall be void if it be operated in whole or in part at night later than ten o'clock. In the absence of some such provision, operating at night would not avoid the policy,[33] although a statement in the application that the insured does not intend to run at night would amount to a promissory warranty.[34] When such a provision appears in the policy it is upheld.[35]

d. Cessation of Operation of Factory. Provisions, as that of the standard policy, that if the subject-matter of the insurance be a manufactory, the policy shall be void if it shall "cease to be operated for more than ten consecutive days," or similar provisions that if the factory "cease to be operated" the contract is terminated, are uniformly upheld.[36] What amounts to a cessation of operation is a question which cannot be very definitely answered.[37] A mere temporary stopping of work for repairs is not a "cessation" which will avoid the policy[38] in the absence of a provision fixing the number of days in which a stoppage may be had.[39] Endeavors of the insured while the factory is shut down to prevent loss and to actually lessen the risk that would be present were the factory in operation, as by the employing of watchmen, are immaterial.[40]

What is a part of a manufactory.— Pulleys, shafting, machinery, etc., are deemed to be part of the factory within the provision of the policy that if the insured property be a manufacturing establishment its non-operation would avoid the policy, and hence a policy on such articles alone is vitiated by a cessation of work. Stone v. Howard Ins.

6. Change in Occupancy. A statement of the present occupancy does not amount to an implied promissory warranty that the insured will not change the nature of the occupancy during the life of the policy. An express condition to that effect must be inserted by the insurer to result in an avoidance of the policy by a change of occupancy.[41] When such a provision is inserted, it is immaterial,

b. Provisions in Policy — (I) Respecting Increase of Risk Only. Under a policy only providing generally that any increase of risk without the consent of the insurer shall avoid the policy, the mere fact that the building is unoccupied at the time of the fire is not of itself an increase of risk that will vitiate the contract.[47]

(II) That Policy Shall Be Void. It is, however, almost the universal custom to insert a specific condition in the policy respecting subsequent vacancy of the premises. That of the standard policy is "this policy shall be void if a building herein described whether intended for occupancy by owner or tenant, be or become vacant or unoccupied and so remain for ten days." Such provisions are reasonable[48] and valid.[49] When the policy provides against increase of risk and also against vacancy, the former clause should not be construed as qualifying

Extent and limits of rule.— In Kirby v. Phœnix Ins. Co., 13 Lea (Tenn.) 340, it was held that it was proper to allow the insurer to show that there was a general custom of insurance companies not to take a risk on vacant property, as tending to prove that non-occupancy was a material increase of risk. So it has been held that if the non-vacancy was a greater risk than occupancy by tenants of ordinary care and habits, there could be no recovery, although the company would have been responsible had the loss occurred while the premises were occupied by tenants whose occupancy was more hazardous than vacancy. Luce v. Dorchester Mut. F. Ins. Co., 110 Mass. 361. It is an increase of risk to leave a door unlocked when a building is not occupied. Mooney v. Glenns Falls Ins. Co., 4 Pa. Dist. 639. the latter and so requiring the vacancy to be such as to increase the risk.[50] Despite such general provisions, the real contract may have been that the premises were insured as vacant premises. In this event forfeiture clauses permitted to remain in the policy form have no application.[51]

(III) Requiring Notice. While a vacancy under the provisions mentioned in the foregoing subsection operates ipso facto,[52] the rule is different in case the policy merely provides that the insured must "give notice" or "immediate notice" of the vacancy, and does not provide expressly for a forfeiture for failure to do so.[53] When notice is required, the insured has a reasonable time in which to give the same,[54] and this is true, although the policy requires "immediate notice."[55]

c. Statutory Provisions as to Risk. It being the general rule that the materiality of a breach of warranty is not in question,[56] statutes have been enacted in many states to the effect that the breach of such conditions of the policy shall not vitiate the insurance, notwithstanding any provision of the policy to the contrary, unless there is a material increase of the risk caused thereby, or unless the breach is connected with the loss.[57] In the absence of fraud an immaterial breach does not, under such statutes, affect the insurance.[58]

d. Knowledge of Insured. If the policy provides that the same is to become void by vacancy, the forfeiture does not depend at all upon the insured's knowledge of the fact of vacancy.[59] If, however, the policy is conditioned to be void if the risk be increased by any means within the knowledge or control of the insured, the knowledge and control both become material and the policy is not forfeitable in their absence.[60]

e. Revival of Policy. If the policy contains a stipulation that it is to be void if the premises shall become unoccupied or vacant, reoccupancy after a breach does not revive the forfeited policy;[61] but if the provision be that "so long as the building shall be unoccupied" the policy shall cease, or the equivalent thereof, the insurance is merely in abeyance during the period of non-occupancy and revives when the vacancy ceases.[62]

f. Vacancy as to Part Only. If the contract of insurance be separable, as for instance when two buildings are insured under one policy, a prohibited vacancy in one of the separable portions of the subject-matter will not create a forfeiture of the entire policy, but only as to that part in which the condition was broken.[63] The mere fact that the buildings insured are separate and distinct will not necessarily make the contract of insurance separable, for it has been held that where a gross sum is paid as the premium the policy constitutes an entire contract, although the amount of insurance is apportioned among the several structures pears to have been applied in the absence of a statute.

If, however, the subject-matter of the insurance is regarded as an entirety, as for instance if several buildings are insured under the comprehensive term "the premises," vacancy of all the various buildings may be required to render "the premises" vacant, non-occupancy of the premises being the prohibited risk by the policy. A ten-tenement frame block is not unoccupied when two of the tenements are in actual use and occupation as residences. Harrington v. Fitchburg Mut. F. Ins. Co., 124 Mass. 126.

Occupancy of land upon which buildings are placed is not occupancy of "the premises" within the meaning of the policy. Sexton v. Hawkeye Ins. Co., 69 Iowa 99, 28 N. W. 462. In Thomas v. Hartford F. Ins. Co., 53 S. W. 297, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 914, 56 S. W. 264, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 1139, the term "premises" was held to mean the dwelling-house alone and not to include the various buildings on the tract on which the dwelling stood, it only being insured.

Vacancy of the dwelling-house constitutes vacancy also of an appurtenant building, such as a corn-crib, and the doctrine of severability does not in such case authorize recovery for loss of the appurtenant build-included under the policy.[64] If the life of the policy is expressly made contingent upon the continued occupancy of all separate structures insured thereunder, the stipulated effect is had by a vacancy of one of such buildings.[65]

g. Personalty in Unoccupied Building. The insurance of personalty may be avoided by the non-occupancy of the building in which it is contained. Such will be the effect if there be a stipulation against non-occupancy.[66]

h. What Constitutes "Vacancy" or "Non-Occupancy" — (i) In General. As, in general, the term "vacant" means empty of everything, while "unoccupied" means that no actual use is being made of the premises, by any one corporeally present or in possession,[67] a condition against non-occupancy is much more easily broken than is a condition against vacancy. Historically it appears that the insurer has gradually increased the severity of such provisions. Originally the insurer relied upon an alleged implied agreement that the premises insured should remain in the same condition as when the policy was issued;[68] then, upon the theory that a description in præsenti should be construed as a promissory warranty.[69] It was next asserted that vacancy was prohibited under a clause of the policy providing that the contract should be void in case the risk was increased;[70] then "vacancy" was expressly prohibited in terms of various character.[71] Next the word "unoccupied" was linked to the term "vacant" as denoting a state prohibited;[72] and finally the modern and the standard policy provides that the contract of insurance shall terminate if the building insured shall "become vacant or unoccupied."[73]

(E) Eating on Premises. The mere fact that persons eat within the building does not constitute an occupancy.[85] Nor is it necessary that persons should eat upon the premises in order that it should be occupied by a family.[86]

(F) Periodic Visits of Inspection. The mere fact that someone, even though he be the owner,[87] frequently or even daily inspects the premises to see if all is well, does not constitute occupancy,[88] although this may keep the premises from being vacant.[89]

(G) Understanding of Insurer. The understanding of the insurer as to the sort of occupancy that would be made of the premises will control, and occupancy of the sort contemplated is sufficient, even though it would not, in the absence of such understanding, satisfy the general requirement of the policy.[90]

(H) After Partial Loss. The insured is still deemed an occupant after a partial loss, although not in possession during the period in which the insurer is authorized to exercise its option to repair.[91]

(III) Of Buildings Intended For Rental. Somewhat different questions arise from those foregoing when the dwelling or other building insured is intended to be rented. If the insurer is cognizant of the purpose to which the structure is to be put, he must be aware that an occasional vacancy will be a necessary incident to such use.[92] Consequently a temporary vacancy of such premises so described merely incident to a change of tenants will not avoid the policy which prohibits vacancy or non-occupancy under penalty of a forfeiture.[93]

House Ins. Co., 95 Iowa 642, 64 N. W. 628, it was held that occupancy by one who had conspired to burn the building to procure insurance on personalty situated therein was not "occupancy," as provisions respecting occupancy are inserted to secure the safety of the building and are only fulfilled by such occupancy.

Such a vacancy must not, however, continue for an unreasonable length of time;[94] although it has been held that even though a long period of time had intervened, the insured was protected if he used all reasonable exertions to procure another tenant.[95] But the holding that the good faith of the insured is immaterial seems more consonant with justice.[96]

(IV) OF OTHER BUILDINGS. The principle that the contemplated use must govern is illustrated by what amounts to an occupancy of buildings other than dwellings. What is "non-occupancy" and "vacancy" must necessarily depend upon the nature of the premises insured.[97]

In Lockwood v. Middlesex Mut. Assur. Co., 47 Conn. 553, the policy only provided against change of risk and such incidental vacancy was not regarded as increasing the risk. In Texas this rule has been a bone of contention. In East Texas F. Ins. Co. v. Kempner, (Civ. App. 1894) 25 S. W. 999, the Texas court of civil appeals considered that the temporary vacancy for three days of a store building incidental to a change of tenants did not avoid the policy. Other factories.— In the case of factories and mills a mere temporary suspension of work therein does not amount to a vacancy and non-occupancy. Albion Lead Works v. Williamsburg City F. Ins. Co., 2 Fed. 479. Particularly is this so where the premises were customarily rented to tenants and the fire occurred while a new tenant was being sought, the fixtures and tools being all in the factory as usual. This was a mere temporary non-occupancy incidental to a change of tenants. Halpin v. Phenix Ins. Co., 118 N. Y.

C. Keeping and Use of Prohibited Articles—1. Provisions of Policy. If the policy expressly states[98] that certain articles may not be used or kept on the premises under penalty of forfeiture, this amounts to a promissory warranty and courts regard the condition as reasonable and enforceable.[99]

2. Classification of Hazards. If a policy classes articles that may be kept thereunder into groups, and differentiates these groups as ordinarily, extra, or specially hazardous, prohibiting the keeping of articles falling in other groups than those specifically permitted, the keeping of such differently grouped articles will avoid the policy.[1]

3. Increase of Risk. The same result is had if the policy provides that it is to be void should the risk be "increased by any means within the insured's knowledge," and articles intrinsically dangerous are used or kept upon the premises.[2]

165, 23 N. E. 482. The clauses of the modern policy against cessation of the operations of a mill or manufactory have accordingly resulted. See supra, XIII, B, 5, d.

See 28 Cent. Dig. tit. "Insurance," § 782.

A mere statement that a certain article or commodity "is not insurable" does not amount to a provision that the use or keeping of such commodity will terminate the policy. It means simply that the value thereof will be excluded from any estimate of loss unless specially insured. Duncan v. Sun F. Ins. Co., 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 488, 22 Am. Dec. 539.

Policies are construed, in this respect as in others, most strongly against the insurer. Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Slaughter, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 404, 20 L. ed. 444. Thus in the last case cited a policy stipulating that it should be void "if gunpowder, etc., be kept on the premises, or if camphene, etc., be kept in quantities exceeding one barrel" was construed to allow gunpowder on the premises up to the amount of one barrel. See supra, XIII, A, 8. So a general description of goods insured will operate as a permission to keep all goods customarily kept under that description (Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Taylor, 5 Minn. 492. See also infra, XIII, C, 9, c), but not to keep goods prohibited by ordinance, particularly when the policy provides that commodities of the stated character should not be kept in a different manner than that prescribed by law (Jones v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co., 51 N. Y. 318). For a construction of policy wherein there was a conflict of printed terms resulting in a permission to keep gunpowder see Bowman v. Pacific Ins. Co., 27 Mo. 152. The rule stated in the text applies, however, only to articles that increase the risk to the premises insured and not to those considered hazardous because of their own liability to damage, and which do not call for an increase of premium on the premises containing them. It must affirmatively appear that the risk was increased. Such would not be the result of the use of a less inflammable substance than that specifically permitted. Grand

4. Materiality of Breach. When the keeping of a certain article is prohibited it is wholly immaterial, if it be kept, that its keeping was not connected with the occurring of the fire.[3] Under such a prohibition the increase or non-increase of risk is also generally deemed immaterial.[4] Statutory enactments, however, frequently change this rule.[5]

5. Knowledge of Insured. Unless the provision of the policy relied on by the insurer be if "the risk was increased by means within the control or knowledge of the assured," and instead the policy prohibits the keeping of specified articles, the fact that the prohibited articles were kept by another than the insured and without his knowledge is immaterial.[6]

6. Use Discontinued. If the policy provides only for a suspension thereof while prohibited articles are upon the premises, the discontinuance of such a use revives the operation of the policy.[7] If the policy provides that it shall be void

Rapids Hydraulic Co. v. American F. Ins. Co., 93 Mich. 396, 53 N. W. 538.

The mere failure to extinguish lamps at a time long prior to the fire is not a use that increases the risk, even though the policy provides that lamps shall be put out at the close of the day's business. Fireman's Ins. Co. v. Cecil, 12 Ky. L. Rep. 48, 259.

The use of a fluid, not specifically prohibited, for lighting purposes in moderate quantities is not an increase of the risk. Wheeler v. American Cent. Ins. Co., 6 Mo. App. 235. The keeping of gasoline and coal oil in reasonable quantities in a grocery for sale at retail will not, according to Renshaw v. Missouri Mut. F. & M. Ins. Co., 103 Mo. 595, 15 S. W. 945, 23 Am. St. Rep. 904, vitiate a policy, not specifically prohibiting the same, but providing that the policy shall be void if the premises are occupied in such a way as to increase the risk.

if prohibited articles are used or kept on the premises, the authorities are in conflict upon the question of whether or not the policy revives upon a cessation of the prohibited act.[8]

7. USE ON ADJACENT PREMISES. Without such a provision as is contained in the New York standard policy[9] the keeping of prohibited articles by the insured on land adjoining or such keeping by those under his control will not work a forfeiture.[10] An increase of the risk by the use of adjacent premises not under insured's control, there being no provision as to adjacent premises in the policy, will not affect the rights of insured.[11]

8. PERMISSION TO USE. If permission be obtained to use or keep articles prohibited by the policy, all keeping and using must be done strictly in accordance with the terms of the permission, or forfeiture results.[12]

9. WHAT CONSTITUTES A "KEEPING OR USING" — a. In General. These words have been construed to mean a permanent keeping or use. A "casual" deposit of articles in a building has therefore been said not to be a "keeping or using;"[13] so likewise of a temporary use.[14] The addition to these two terms of a third, "allowed," the policy thus providing that it shall be void if certain articles are "kept, used, or allowed" on the premises, does not seem to have modified the

8. The general rule in the case of breach of promissory warranty, the policy stipulating that it shall be void, is that the policy is dead and can be revivified only by express agreement between the parties thereto. Davis v. German American Ins. Co., 135 Mass. 251; Diehl v. Adams County Mut. Ins. Co., 58 Pa. St. 443, 98 Am. Dec. 302. See also supra, XIII, A, 3. This rule has been followed where the cause of the forfeiture has been the use or keeping of prohibited articles. Wheeler v. Traders' Ins. Co., 62 N. H. 450.

On the other hand in some states it has been asserted that the validity of the policy should depend upon the state of the premises at the time of the loss. Fireman's Ins. Co. v. Cecil, 12 Ky. L. foregoing rule, as the term has been construed to mean "allowed to be kept or used."[15] The term "storing," not now so frequently employed as formerly, has reference to a keeping in a mercantile sense in considerable quantities with a view to traffic or safe-keeping, not to one where the keeping is incidental and only for the purpose of consumption.[16] So a keeping only of reasonable amounts for the purpose of selling by retail has been held to be not a "storing."[17] Otherwise than in these instances the amount kept is immaterial except under statutes, for the presence of small quantities if "kept or used" will vitiate the policy.[18]

b. Effect of Custom of Business. It has repeatedly been held that a breach of a printed condition of a policy against the keeping of certain substances does not preclude recovery when the subject-matter insured was known to the insurer to be such that the use of these substances was a necessary and usual incident of the business,[19] provided that such substances be kept only in such quantities and

For household use.—The use of small quantities of gasoline for the purpose of cleaning clothes and destroying vermin is not a breach of a condition of a policy providing that it shall be void if gasoline is stored or used in or on the premises. La Force v. Williams City F. Ins. Co., 43 Mo. App. 518. So likewise such a use is not an increase of hazard. Columbia Planing Mill Co. v. American F. Ins. Co., 59 Mo. App. 204.

For exhibition.— While the keeping of articles to be exhibited or to be used as means and instruments of the exhibition is not a "keeping and storage" thereof (New York v. Hamilton F. Ins. Co., 10 Bosw. (N. Y.) 537) it yet amounts to a prohibited "use" and as such avoids the policy (Fischer v. London, etc., F. Ins. Co., 83 Fed. 807). In Humboldt F. Ins. Co. v. Mears, 29 Pittsb. Leg. J. Materials for repair.— So a painter's temporary storage of materials used by him in repainting the premises has been held not to be a "storing" of such prohibited materials. O'Niel v. Buffalo F. Ins. Co., 3 N. Y. 122. So likewise the keeping of gasoline to be put in torches to burn off the paint in order to repair the building was held in Smith v. German Ins. Co., 107 Mich. 270, 65 N. W. 236, 30 L. R. A. 368, not to violate a condition that gasoline should not be "kept, used, or allowed" on the premises. Contra, Rockland First Cong. Church v. Holyoke Mut. F. Ins. D. Special Causes Increasing Risk — 1. In General. A statement by the insured in an application for insurance, although by the policy denominated a warranty, as to conditions prevailing, or rules and regulations as to conduct on the insured premises, is only a warranty in præsenti and is not promissory.[30] But if the policy requires the insured to disclose in the future any changes in such matters, increasing the risk, he is held to the same degree of strictness in disclosing such increase of risk as in disclosing facts existing at the time of the application,[31] and such a clause refers to matters not specifically referred to in the policy.[32] But such increase of hazard is one which amounts to a permanent change and not to a mere temporary cause removable and removed prior to loss.[33] The question whether or not the risk is actually increased is one for the jury in an action on the policy.[34]

2. Stoves and Heating Apparatus. A statement of the method of heating in use at the time of the issuance of the policy does not amount to a promissory warranty in the absence of some express promissory stipulation.[35] But an agreement that the insured will use a certain form of heating apparatus,[36] or that he will use it in a certain way, is a warranty, the breach of which will invalidate the policy.[37]

3. Engines. The use of a steam engine is frequently a subject of prohibition in policies. If such use is entirely prohibited, a breach of the condition avoids the policy.[38] So if the requirement be that notice should be given, and the use materially increases the risk, a failure to give notice vitiates the contract.[39] If the policy prohibits a change in the premises increasing the risk, the placing of a gasoline engine therein is a violation of the policy.[40]

E. Change of Location of Property — 1. Effect of in General. A description as to the location of property, although it may be a warranty in præsenti, is not, in the absence of an express stipulation, a promissory warranty that the property will remain in the location described.[41] The same rule has been applied to the insurance of a building so that its removal, not increasing the risk, did not vitiate the policy.[42] The foregoing holding is in accord with general principles as to promissory warranties, but it has been held that words descriptive of the location of an insured article do constitute a warranty that it will not be removed therefrom except for purposes incident to its use and enjoyment.[43] There are many authorities that property remains insured while being put to its adapted uses, even though temporarily outside the premises mentioned in the policy;[44] but there does not seem to be such a holding under the provision of the standard policy.

2. PROVISIONS OF POLICY. If the policy provides, as does the New York standard policy, that articles are insured "while located as described herein and not elsewhere," the insurance terminates upon the removal of the subject-matter of the policy.[45] But the policy revives upon its restoration to its original location or second removal with the insurer's consent.[46] A provision in the policy that it shall become "void" upon a removal of the property from the premises where it was insured is construed as meaning only a suspension during the period of removal.[47] If the policy provides against an "increase of risk" this is not necessarily broken by the removal to a new location of the subject-matter of the contract.[48]

new location and for the continuance of the policy in force is in effect a new contract and gives rise to a new risk.[49] If the consent be not given in the mode prescribed by the policy, even acquiescence by the company's officers will not permit a removal.[50]

F. Change in Title, Interest, or Possession — 1. Nature of Warranty — a. Historically. In the earlier decisions it is seen that the policy makes no provision for forfeiture of the insured's rights because of any change in title, interest, or possession. The courts were therefore left to a consideration of general principles upon the query whether the insured retained any insurable interest in the subject-matter of the contract. A policy being only an agreement to indemnify the insured and not an absolute agreement to pay a sum of money when property is destroyed, an insurable interest at the time of the loss is as obviously necessary as it is in the inception of the contract.[51] If therefore the insured had parted with his insurable interest, his policy necessarily died with the transfer,[52] and the contract being in its nature personal with the insured did not pass with the subject-matter into the hands of the transferee without a new agreement with the insurer.[53] But the same result was not reached when the transferrer retained enough of interest to amount to an insurable interest. The policy still protected him as to the part retained, that is, he would be indemnified as to his own loss in case of fire affecting that interest. A conveyance of anything less than the entire interest of the insured therefore, there being no stipulation concerning such a transaction, will not defeat the policy.[54] Because of the foregoing principles the same conclusion was reached under the earlier forms of stipulation concerning title and interest contained in the policy. When it was stipulated therefore that the policy should become void upon "alienation" of the property insured, or upon "transfer" or "sale" thereof, these clauses were held to refer only to an absolute transfer of the insured's entire interest.[55] Such provisions, however, necessarily result in the termination of the contract if the insured parts with his Transfer in view of death.— Although the policy would survive the death of the insured, it will be avoided by a conveyance, even when the policy provides against any change in "interest or title, whether by act of parties or by operation of law," such a transfer being held prohibited and a "change of title" within the meaning of the policy.[59]

c. Provisions of Policy. Transfer of title has been held to be not per se an increase of risk;[60] and a provision that the policy shall not be assignable does not prevent a transfer of the property insured.[61] Where the provision of the policy requiring notice of change of title is merely directory, failure of the mortgagor to give such notice does not defeat the insurance as to the mortgagee;[62] but the contrary is the rule if the policy is to be void if the title is changed, unless the mortgagee notifies the insurer.[63]

d. Consent. Consent of the insurer to a transfer of the title to an assignee of course operates as a waiver of the conditions of the policy against change of interest, title or possession.[64]

e. Change in Possession. An actual change is necessary to avoid the policy under a condition relating to possession.[65] If the insured has placed the property temporarily in the possession of another under such circumstances that he cannot immediately demand an abandonment of the premises, there is a change of possession.[66] If the person in possession is himself an insured person under the policy there is no fatal breach of such a condition, although the person who originally was in possession may have yielded the same.[67]

But the consent must be had before loss. Dadmun Mfg. Co. v. Worcester Mut. F. Ins. Co., 11 Metc. (Mass.) 429.

The provision of the standard policy is that the policy shall be void if "any change take place in the interest, title, or possession of the subject of insurance whether by legal process or judgment, or by voluntary act of the insured, or otherwise."

65. Thus a mere constructive change by transfer of warehouse receipts does not avoid a policy containing only such a prohibition. California Ins. Co. v. Union Compress Co., 133 U. S. 387, 10 S. Ct. 365, 33 L. ed. 730. A mere formal seizure by the sheriff, not actually dispossessing the insured, is not a "change of possession." McClelland v. Greenwich Ins. Co., 107 La. 124, 31 So. 691. The same result is had if the seizure proceeds to sale, at which time the insured becomes the purchaser. Cleavenger v. Franklin F. Ins. Co., 47 W. Va. 595, 35 S. E. 998.

66. Cottingham v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co., 10 Ky. L. Rep. 727. If the vendee in an executory contract of sale goes into possession the policy is avoided under a condition against change of possession, although a condition against change of title may not be broken thereby. Cottingham v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co., 10 Ky. L. Rep. 727. But the possession of an agent during the insured's temporary absence is not a breach of the condition. Shearman v. Niagara F. Ins. Co., 46 N. Y. 526, 7 Am. Rep. 380. So a temporary possession for the purpose of making repairs, by a lessee under a contract to lease in the future, is not ground for forfeiture for a breach of this condition. Alkan v. New Hampshire Ins. Co., 53 Wis. 136, 10 N. W. 91.

67. Thus if a chattel mortgagee to whom the policy is payable takes possession this is no breach of the condition. Runkle v. Hartford Ins. Co., 99 Iowa 414, 68 N. W. 712. But a purchase by one partner of the other's interest works a dissolution and therefore a change of possession. Jones v. Phœnix Ins. Co., 97 Iowa 275, 66 N. W. 169. So when property is insured to three copartners and remains in the possession of two of them,

2. What Amounts to a Prohibited Change — a. Nominal Conveyance. As the object of the condition is that the insured shall have no greater motive to destroy the property or less interest in watching or guarding it, a transfer of interest which is merely nominal, the ownership remaining the same in fact, does not vitiate the policy.[68]

b. Incomplete Conveyance. If the conveyance be only in fieri and not completed at the time of loss the policy is not terminated.[69] Thus, when there has been no delivery of the bill of sale,[70] or of the deed,[71] or no acceptance of the same, one being required,[72] there is no change in the title. Under this principle a conveyance contingent upon the consent of the insurer,[73] or of the creditors of the assignor,[74] or of the court,[75] or of the transferee's attorneys,[76] does not avoid the policy. Likewise prior to the completion of legal proceedings transferring title or possession there is no change thereby sufficient to work a forfeiture.[77] But it has been held that while an incomplete conveyance is not a change in title, it may be a change in "interest," as when a deed is left in escrow until payment be completed.[78]

c. Void and Voidable Conveyances. A conveyance wholly void does not transfer title so as to avoid a policy.[79] The delivery procured by fraud, of a

e. Defeasible Conveyance. The authorities differ upon the question as to whether a conveyance absolute in form, but intended as a collateral security, amounts to a change of title so as to avoid the policy. Some courts hold that inasmuch as such an instrument may by parol be shown to have been intended as a mortgage and therefore is a mortgage in equity, the real transaction is to be considered a mortgage and the effect upon the policy the same, thus not affecting the contract.[86] Other courts say, however, that whatever the ultimate effect may be as to a restoration of title, the title is for a time at least out of the insured, which avoids the policy.[87]

g. Retention of Lien. In the absence of a forfeiture clause, the insured who sells, but retains a purchase-money lien for the price has an insurable interest.[89] But when the policy contains a provision against change of "title" or of "title, interest, or possession" the retention of the lien will not keep the policy alive.[90]

h. Contract For Sale. A contract entered into by the insured to convey the premises, even though valid, if no deed is made, is not a breach of a condition that the interest of the insured shall remain "entire, unconditional, unincumbered and sole."[91] It is not a breach of a condition of the policy providing that it shall be void if the property is "transferred," or "alienated;"[92] or "if the property be sold or transferred in whole or in part;"[93] nor is it a change of "title."[94] The foregoing statements are universally recognized if the possession has not passed to the purchaser and the matter remains in fieri,[95] even though the instrument be expressed as "a bond to stand for a deed."[96] But when possession has been taken by the vendee who has paid a part of the purchase-price, this has been held a breach of a condition prohibiting a change of "interest";[97] yet payment of the part of the purchase-price and entry into possession by the vendee has been held immaterial when it has not been shown that the purchaser was entitled to a deed.[98] A contract of sale does not violate a policy providing that "if any change take place in the title, ownership or possession, by sale, incumbrance, mortgage, etc., the policy shall be void."[99]

j. Partition. When a policy contains a prohibition of any alienation, or change of title or interest, the same is avoided by a completed partition proceeding.[2]

k. Premises Becoming Involved in Litigation. A condition in an insurance policy that it shall become void if the title or possession of the property is or shall become involved in litigation is not against public policy.[3] But such a condition does not apply to litigation involving no question of title or possession adverse to that of the insured.[4] If the policy be payable to a mortgagee, the commencement of foreclosure proceedings by him is not a breach of the condition in question.[5]

l. Foreclosure of Mortgage — (I) Stipulations as to "Increase of Risk." In the absence of stipulations, the mere commencement of foreclosure proceedings is not in itself a "change" of ownership or "increase of hazard."[6]

completed foreclosure sale under a mortgage on the insured property avoids the policy under such a provision.[8]

(III) STIPULATIONS AS TO COMMENCEMENT OF PROCEEDINGS. The modern policy, however, provides that the "commencement of proceedings of foreclosure" shall render the policy void.[9] The standard policy requires this to be with the knowledge of the insured.[10] Under this provision the first steps in a foreclosure proceeding when taken vitiate the policy,[11] and a discontinuance thereof thereafter does not avail the insurer.[12]

(IV) STIPULATIONS AS TO NOTICE OF SALE. The provision of avoidance of the standard policy if "notice be given of sale of any property covered by this policy by virtue of any mortgage or trust deed" has reference to the extrajudicial enforcement of a mortgage by means of notice and sale. terms, except "attachment," are inapplicable to a proceeding to enforce a judgment upon real estate.[19] The insurer retains an insurable interest until a completed sale on execution,[20] and this is true also in the case of an attachment.[21] In the absence of such a provision the insurer cannot defend in an action on a policy insuring personalty upon the ground that the title or interest has been changed by levy or that there has been an alienation, provisions only against such latter acts being found in the policy;[22] nor is a levy a breach of a covenant forbidding a change of "possession," so long as the change is only constructive and not actual.[23] not affecting the validity of the proceedings, title is passed by the sale and hence the policy stands forfeited.[27]

o. Assignment For Creditors, Bankruptcy, or Receivership. A general assignment for the benefit of creditors avoids a policy conditioned against a sale, alienation, or transfer of title.[28] The same rule obtains in case of voluntary bankruptcy when the insured transfers his property to an assignee or trustee in bankruptcy.[29] Likewise an assignment and adjudication in involuntary bankruptcy vitiates the policy.[30] The appointment of a receiver does not affect a breach of a condition against alienation or change of title or interest.[31] Nor does mere change in the personnel of receivers avoid the policy.[32]

p. Acquisition of Additional Interest. A change of title whereby the contingent interest of the insured becomes absolute does not defeat the insurance,[33] nor does the getting in of the legal title by the insured owner of the equitable interest.[34] This is true as to an insured mortgagee under the lien theory of a mortgage.[35] So also under the legal theory of a mortgage, the acquisition by an insured mortgagee of the mortgagor's outstanding equity does not affect the policy.[36] who are jointly insured, because what is contemplated is a transfer of the entire interest to one not previously interested or insured.[37]

r. Partnership Transactions — (I) Formation of Partnership. Whether a policy on goods owned by an individual is forfeited under a clause respecting alienation, by his taking in a partner, is a mooted question. It has been asserted that, whatever the result when both members are insured and a transfer is made between coöwners, the introduction of a previously uninsured person into the risk is a hazard which should not be put on the insurer and is what is intended to be covered by the prohibition. This view rests also in a measure on the proposition that the insured by taking a partner ceases to be sole owner.[38] On the other hand it is claimed that the insured does retain an insurable interest and the policy is intended to prevent only a transfer passing entire title.[39] The admission of a new member into an already insured partnership would seem to rest on the same considerations.[40]

(II) Transaction Between Insured Copartners. According to the weight of authority, where an insurance policy is issued to a partnership, a transfer by one partner to the others of all his interest in the partnership property will not vitiate the insurance, notwithstanding a condition that the policy should become void if the property should be sold or conveyed, or the interest of the parties therein changed.[41] It cannot be said as a matter of law that the transfer

however, when the lessee asserts his rights, operate as a change of possession.[49] It is manifestly a breach of a condition against a change of "title, ownership, or possession" if a lessee be allowed to occupy the premises with an option to purchase,[50] or if the lease provides that "if the lessee pays the lessor" a certain sum "the lessor doth hereby sell and convey."[51]

G. Encumbrances — 1. Provisions of Policy. The fact that the giving of a mortgage has been held to be no change in title, ownership, or interest,[52] as well as the insurer's desire to prevent a lessening of the insured's interest in protecting the insured property, has led to the insertion in many policies of a specific provision against encumbrances. Such conditions are valid and enforceable.[53] But in the absence thereof, a subsequent encumbrance will not affect the policy.[54] If the fact that the warranty is intended to have a future operation be not clearly apparent, a provision that if the premises "be" encumbered the policy shall lapse will be treated only as a warranty of present condition.[55] The provision cannot apply against an encumbrance of which the insurer was cognizant, executed before the policy.[56] The question whether the execution of an encumbrance increased the risk or not is wholly immaterial when the stipulation amounts to a promissory warranty.[57] Some policies merely require notice of an encumbrance. If this be not complied with the policy is void,[58] after a reasonable time in which notice might have been given.[59] The provisions against encumbrance are applicable to both real and personal property,[60] unless the language specially restricts their applicability.[61]

2. WHAT CONSTITUTES AN ENCUMBRANCE — a. In General — Mortgage. The placing of an encumbrance upon property pursuant to an understanding to that effect when the policy was issued between the insurer and the insured is not a forbidden encumbrance.[62] Mortgages, being voluntary in their nature, are especially within the prohibition against an encumbrance, whether the subject-matter be realty[63] or personalty.[64]

b. Inoperative Instrument. If the instrument be inoperative, the condition is not broken, for no real encumbrance has been created.[65]

c. Renewal of Existing Encumbrance. A provision against future encumbrances is not broken by a renewal of a prior mortgage existing at the date of the policy, and known to the insurer.[66] Nor does a mere change in the form of an existing encumbrance amount to a breach.[67] So the paying off of the mortgage debt by borrowing and giving a new mortgage for the money borrowed does not affect the policy.[68] So items of encumbrance may be changed provided the total amount is not increased over that of the original encumbrance.[69] Even though the original mortgage may have been paid off, the insured may borrow again to the extent of the mortgage existing at the time of the execution of the policy, without a breach of the condition.[70] But none of these transactions must increase the amount of the encumbrance, or the policy lapses.[71]

d. Encumbrance of a Part of Property Insured. In case the contract is severable,[72] the encumbrance of a portion of the subject-matter thereof will not vitiate the policy on the part not encumbered.[73] If the policy be not regarded as severable, even though the matter insured be of distinct and separate kinds, that is, if the insurance be regarded as an entirety, or if it be provided that an encumbrance in any manner shall vitiate the entire policy, an encumbrance placed on any article or portion of the subject-matter terminates the insurance.[74] An encumbrance by an owner of an undivided interest of his share will vitiate the entire policy on the property.[75]

e. Mechanic's Lien or Judgment. The provisions against encumbrances have been construed to refer only to voluntary encumbrances and not to those placed on the property in invitum,[76] such as a mechanic's lien,[77] or a judgment against the insured constituting only a general and not a special lien.[78]

3. Extinguishment of Encumbrance. In accordance with the weight of authority in cases involving a breach of other warranties of a policy conditioned to be void if such warranties are broken, it is held that the subsequent removal of encumbrances before loss in no wise revives the policy prohibiting an encumbrance on pain of forfeiture,[79] but the contrary has been quite generally held.[80]

H. Precautions Against Fire or Loss of Proof — 1. In the Absence of a Stipulation. In the absence of a stipulation the insured is under no obligation to take precautions against a possible loss, even to the extent of following the custom of the particular business.[81] But a representation in the application as to the methods employed in caring for the building or for substances likely to cause fire, when made a part of the policy by reference, requires that such methods be not discontinued so as to increase the risk.[82]

Encumbrance by partner to partner.— This rule is not applicable, however, to encumbrances given from one insured partner to another, for all parties being in privity with the insurer there is no increase of risk. 2. EMPLOYMENT OF WATCHMAN — a. In General. It is, however, frequently customary to insert in the modern policy certain stipulations as to the prevention of fire by the employment of a watchman. When such a stipulation amounts to a promissory warranty, it is immaterial that the breach had nothing to do with the loss.[83] Statutory provisions that the insurer shall not be exonerated by the negligence of the insured do not relieve the latter from a compliance with his warranty in this respect.[84]

b. Who Is a Watchman.[85] One who sleeps at night in a house a short distance from the premises, visiting the buildings several times during the night, is not a watchman in the sense required by the policy;[86] nor is a person who merely sleeps on the premises a watchman.[87] The presence of individuals on the premises is not a compliance with the warranty if they are not keeping, or are not there to keep, watch.[88]

c. Duty of Watchman — (i) In General. This warranty is not satisfied by an occasional tour of inspection,[89] but requires that the watchman should be on duty at all times so that a fire would not progress without discovery.[90]

(ii) Sleeping on Duty. The fact that the watchman has fallen asleep at the time of the fire will not of itself prevent a recovery.[91]

(iii) Temporary Absence. The absence of the watchman from the premises temporarily for a few minutes has, however, been held immaterial when it does not appear that the loss in any way followed therefrom,[92] but when the war-

Temporary absence immaterial.— In Au Sable Lumber Co. v. Detroit Manufacturers' F. Ins. Co., 89 Mich. 407, 50 N. W. 870, it was held that his temporary absence when the fire broke out was not a breach, if the absence was upon a purpose connected with his watchman's duties. So an absence of two hours by a watchman who left his post contrary to directions before his relief man came was held not to forfeit the policy, although the fire occurred in the interval. Mc-ranty is that the watchman should be on the premises constantly, his absence at the time of the fire is fatal.[93]

d. Custom of Owners of Similar Property. The custom of owners of similar property as to the employment of a watchman is not admissible to vary the express undertaking of the policy.[94]

3. Appliances For Extinguishing Fire — a. In General. If the policy provides that the insured shall maintain appliances of a certain sort to extinguish fire, the failure to do so will avoid the policy;[95] but it has been held that a failure to keep such apparatus at a specified point is immaterial, if it would not have been accessible even if maintained, because of the proximity of the fire.[96]

b. Temporary Breach of Warranty. The insured is not responsible for a temporary breach of such a warranty, occasioned by necessary repairs put upon the protecting system;[97] nor for a disability caused by the fire itself,[98] or by the weather.[99]

4. Keeping of Inventory, Books, and Safes — a. Validity of Clause. In order to expedite the proof of loss and to verify the honesty of the claim of loss, provisions are customarily inserted in policies upon stocks in trade requiring the insured to take an inventory at frequent intervals, to keep regular books, and to preserve all papers in an iron or fireproof safe. These provisions are uniformly upheld as promissory warranties to be strictly performed to entitle the insured to recover for a loss.[1]

b. The Inventory. Where the policy contains a condition requiring the insured to take an inventory at least once a year, the insured is not required to take an inventory immediately upon obtaining the insurance. He has the period mentioned in which to perform.[2] If the policy does not especially direct the taking of an inventory, but only the preservation of the last one taken, the fact that no inventory has ever been taken will not defeat the policy.[3] The inventory intended by the policy is a "detailed and itemized enumeration of the articles composing the stock with the value of each,"[4] consequently an invoice of goods purchased is not a compliance with the condition requiring an inventory;[5] nor is a mere summary of the condition of the goods sufficient.[6]

credit.[7] No artificial mode of keeping them is required if these matters be shown in a way that may be understood reasonably by a man of ordinary intelligence.[8] The requirement contemplates a keeping of books by the insured; it is therefore not met by producing books of others, although they show the same transactions.[9]

d. Preservation in a Safe. As already noted, the clause requiring the insured to preserve in an iron safe inventory and books, and to produce them in proof of his loss, is valid.[10] This casts upon him the responsibility for their loss in all cases where such loss is due to a wrongful or negligent act on his part or on the part of his agents or servants.[11] The stipulation, however, requires only that the books should be in the safe at night and when the store is not open for business.[12]

Such a clause does not apply to a suspension of business caused by a fire raging in the vicinity and threatening the building, so that business operations are interrupted by the danger. The insured under such circumstances must exercise only reasonable diligence to preserve the books. Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Schwartz, 115 Ga. 113, 41 S. E. 240, 90 Am. St. Rep. 98, 57 L. R. A. 752.

The fact that the insured kept but one set of books for two businesses will not justify him in leaving the books under a counter

The policy sometimes gives the insured the option of leaving the books, etc., in a safe or safe place.[13] If the insured has complied with the requirements of taking an inventory and keeping books, the fact that some of such books were destroyed will not invalidate his policy where he is able to supply the missing information by other satisfactory means.[14] If the books have been produced [15] to the adjuster, their subsequent loss is not a breach of the warranty.[16] If the policy calls for preservation in a "fireproof safe" the insured does not by this term warrant the safe to preserve the books.[17]

5. Prevention of Further Loss. A provision occasionally met with in policies that after a partial loss the insured shall protect the property from further damage and separate the damaged from the undamaged property is an absolute requirement which must be observed as a condition precedent to any recovery on the policy.[18]

I. Additional Insurance — 1. Provisions of Policies — a. Avoidance. Upon the assumption that the insured will be the less careful to protect his property from loss in proportion as the amount of his insurance is increased,[19] a usual stipulation of the policy is one that the contract shall be vitiated if additional insurance is procured on the property without the insurer's consent.[20] Such a provision is valid and reasonable.[21] There is a strange conflict of opinion as to whether the policy becomes void ipso facto or whether the doing of the pro-

13. hibited act renders the policy only voidable at the instance of the insurer.[22] A number of courts give a literal effect to the stipulation and avoidance immediately results.[23] Other courts assert that the provision is inserted for the benefit of the company and may be waived by it as any other provision intended for its benefit, and hence the policy is voidable only.[24]

ficient.[29] Notice to an agent who effected the insurance and to whom a policy is intrusted for delivery, of existing insurance, is sufficient.[30] The same has been held as to an agent employed to solicit risks and to negotiate contracts,[31] although the contrary has been more generally held;[32] but such agents are not authorized to consent to any additional insurance in the absence of express authorization.[33]

c. Permission. The right to prohibit additional insurance involves the right to limit the amount of any additional insurance.[34] If permission be given to carry additional insurance any condition upon which the permission rests must be fulfilled or forfeiture results.[35] A recital in the policy limiting the total insurance permitted to a certain proportion of the value[36] of the property is an implied consent that the insured may carry concurrent insurance within the limit named without affecting the policy.[37] If the insured takes out a greater amount than that permitted no proportionate recovery is permitted, but a forfeiture in toto results.[38]

2. Time of Effecting. The earlier form of prohibition that "if any member procures insurance" or "if the holder insures" in another company the policy shall be avoided was held to apply only to the procuring of subsequent insurance after the issuance of the policy,[39] and not to that previously effected.[40] The present forms refer to insurance procured at a time prior, contemporaneous, or subsequent.[41]

3. Knowledge and Good Faith of Insured. When the policy is conditioned to be void upon the taking out of additional insurance, the facts that there was no intention to defraud the insurer, that the insured was ignorant of the existence of the provision of the policy or of any prior insurance, if the existence of prior insurance is stipulated to have the same effect, or that the insurance was obtained in forgetfulness, are all immaterial; the policy is avoided.[42] Insurance obtained, however, by a third person without the knowledge or consent of the insured, upon the same interest as that of the insured, will not affect his rights under his policy.[43] If the policy simply prohibits further insurance with no penalty for a breach, a fraudulent intent on the part of the insured in obtaining the additional insurance must be shown to defeat a recovery.[44]

4. Under Statutes Relating to Increase of Risk. Different holdings appear under statutes providing that no breach of condition shall affect the insured's right of recovery unless it increases the risk.[45]

5. What Constitutes — a. Invalidity of Policy. In case the provisions of the subsequent policy are not broken, or if it does not contain a provision that other insurance is prohibited, and the subsequent policy is in other respects valid, the prior policy conditioned against additional insurance is invalidated.[46] In case the second policy, for other reasons than the presence of a prohibition against additional insurance, is invalid, the additional insurance has never actually been had and the prior policy is unaffected.[47] However, if the second policy, like the first, contains a provision that it shall be void if the insured has or obtains other insurance, there is great difficulty in determining whether the second policy is ipso facto void by virtue of the clause and of the prior insurance, and hence does not constitute a breach of the prohibition contained in the prior policy, or whether the second policy is voidable only at the option of the second insurer and hence constitutes such additional insurance as to vitiate the prior contract. The answer in a given jurisdiction will depend on whether a policy is regarded as void, or voidable only, for breach of the condition against further insurance.[48] In many cases the former view is adopted; the second policy is therefore void and the prior policy enforceable, the condition remaining unbroken;[49] but the authorities are nearly as numerous to the effect that the second policy is valid until avoided, constitutes additional insurance, and so operates to vitiate the first

45. In Sun Fire Office v. Clark, 53 Ohio St. 414, 42 N. E. 248, 38 L. R. A. 562, such a statute was held inapplicable, inasmuch as, it was said, additional insurance is as a matter of law an increase of risk. The statutory provision was a protection, however, in Lindley v. Union Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Co., 65 Me. 368, 20 Am. Rep. 701, when there was no proof of actual increase of risk by the taking out of the second policy.

As for instance if the second policy is void because issued by a foreign insurer without compliance with statutory regulations (Rising Sun Ins. Co. v. Slaughter, 20 Ind. 520); or if the second company has no license from the government, or charter, when the same is required by the local law (National Ins. Co. v. Rousseau, 13 Quebec 295); or where the insured had not the sole, entire, and unconditional ownership of the property as he had represented to the insurer (Wheeler v. Watertown F. Ins. Co., 131 Mass. 1). And in these cases it is apparently immaterial that the second insurer might have waived the forfeiture. But in Bigler v. New York Cent. Ins. Co., 20 Barb. (N. Y.) 635, a policy not void, but voidable only by the second insurer, was not considered to vitiate the former policy.

48. See cases cited supra, XII, B, 5; XIII, I, 1, a.

policy.[50] It would seem to follow therefore that the prior policy becoming nonexistent the condition of the second policy is not broken, so that that which would have been voidable had the prior policy survived now becomes valid.[51] Insurers have in view of this conflict inserted in their uniform policies a provision that the forfeiture is to occur whether the additional insurance be "valid or otherwise." In general such a clause is held as reasonable.[52] If the second insurer waives the defense of invalidity and pays the policy either in full or in part by way of compromise, some courts assert that the insured, having accepted the benefit of the insurance, is estopped to deny its validity, and therefore cannot recover on the prior policy; and if the second policy was only voidable there seems a greater reason for this view;[53] other courts, however, do not agree that there is any estoppel which can be set up by the first insurer under such circumstances.[54]

54. The reason assigned is that there was no reliance by the first insurer on the second insurer's payment, or change of position consequent thereon. It is therefore held that as the policy actually was void there was no breach of the condition by the acceptance of a mere gratuity. Lindley v. Union Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Co., 65 Me. 368, 20 Am. 55. See cases cited infra, this note.

An application for other insurance does not constitute a breach of the condition, the reason of the rule, that is, that the insured would be less anxious to protect the property from loss, not applying while the subsequent policy remains incomplete. Taylor v. State Ins. Co., 107 Iowa 275, 77 N. W. 1032; Temple v. Western Assur. Co., 35 N. Brunsw. 171 [affirmed in 31 Can. Sup. Ct. 373].

c. Renewal of Existing Insurance. When a policy prohibiting additional insurance is issued with the knowledge of the insurer that other policies are in existence on the same subject-matter, the renewal of such policies upon their expiration is not a breach of the condition, the insurer virtually having given permission for such an amount of other insurance.[56] It has likewise been held that no breach occurs if the insured instead of renewing the policy in the same company takes no greater amount in another company.[57]

d. Termination of Additional Insurance. The effect of a clause prohibiting additional insurance is to terminate and not merely suspend the policy. Hence the expiration of such additional insurance before loss will not revive the policy.[58]

e. Identity of Subject-Matter. To constitute double and therefore prohibited insurance, the risk must be upon the same property and the liability the same.[59]

Conditional insurance.— If the additional insurance is taken out conditionally, to be binding only provided the other insurer consents thereto, this does not affect the other policy. Gross v. New York, etc., Steamship Co., 107 Fed. 516.

It is no defense that after a loss a further policy was issued and antedated, even though the insured forced a compromise thereon, for liability on the policy in suit attached before the other policy issued (Taylor v. State Ins. Co., 98 Iowa 521, 67 N. W. 577, 60 Am. St. Rep. 210, 107 Iowa 275, 77 N. W. 1032), that after loss the insured filed proofs of loss with the second insurer whose policy had been issued without insured's knowledge or acceptance, the prior insurer's liability becoming fixed before the further insurance became complete (Nelson v. Atlantic Home Ins. Co., 120 N. C. 302, 27 S. E. 38), or that the insured has collected further insurance, if the money has been paid to him by the second company by mistake under a policy not embracing the property destroyed (Home F. Ins. Co. v. Deets, 54 Nebr. 620, 74 N. W. 1088).

This does not mean, however, that all the property insured under each policy must be precisely identical. Therefore if a subsequent policy insuring other property includes property already insured under a policy containing a provision against additional insurance the prior policy will be avoided, at least to the extent of such property so included. Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Michigan Southern, etc., R. Co., 28 Ohio St. 69.

An insurance upon merchandise kept for sale covers property of the same description substituted for the original articles sold. Whether the subsequent insurance of a part only of the property originally insured will vitiate the entire prior policy there is some conflict. The weight of authority inclines to the view that, although the items be separable, if the premium be entire, the policy is fully avoided.[60] If concurrent insurance be permitted by the policy, it is sufficiently "concurrent" so that the insurance is not of the prohibited type, if the later policy is upon a part of the subject-matter.[61]

f. Insurance of Separate Interests — (i) In General. In order that the condition against additional insurance be broken, it must appear, not only that the same property is covered, but also that the same interest in the same property is doubly insured.[62] If the interest, however, is greater than and includes that insured under the first policy this constitutes double insurance.[63]

(II) Under a Mortgage. A mortgagor and a mortgagee have distinct and separate insurable interests, so that the separate insurance thereof will not avoid a policy.[64] If the policy of the mortgagor is made "payable to the mortgagee as his interest may appear," this is regarded as an insurance of the mortgagor, and hence a subsequent insurance by the mortgagor vitiates the policy,[65] but insurance by the mortgagee does not affect the contract.[66] If the mortgagee is the real party insured and not merely a designated payee the interests of course are distinct and insurance by the mortgagor or his assigns is not duplicate.[67] Additional insurance procured by the mortgagee upon the mortgagor's interest without the consent or knowledge of the mortgagor will not affect the rights of the mortgagor;[68] but additional insurance procured by the mortgagor upon his own interest in violation of the terms of his policy will operate to defeat the right of a mortgagee to recover, unless the latter be separately insured, or unless the policy expressly exempts the mortgagee from the results of the acts of the mortgagor.[69]

(III) Under an Assignment. An assignee to whom a policy is transferred, with the consent of the insurer, along with the title, must notify the insurer of the existence of another policy taken out by him on the same property.[70]

6. Duty to Maintain or Drop Other Insurance. There is no implied duty to retain existing insurance upon premises under a provision of the policy that the "insured shall recover such a portion of the loss only as the sum insured bears to the whole amount of the insurance."[71] There is a disagreement as to whether a promise to drop other insurance is equivalent to a warranty, breach of which will avoid a policy.[72]

J. Non-Payment of Premiums or Assessments — 1. 2. Assessments on Premium Notes. It is generally specifically provided in the policy[77] that a failure to pay assessments as levied will avoid or suspend the contract of insurance. Such provisions are constitutional[78] and reasonable,[79] and are uniformly upheld, so that the liability of the company ceases when a default in payment is made,[80] in the absence of a waiver[81] or an extension of time agreed upon by the insurer.[82] The insurer is relieved from liability for any losses occur-when assessments are levied.[89] Statutes have been enacted in many states requiring notice to be of a certain sort and that it should be given a certain number of days prior to the time that a forfeiture can be declared. Such statutes must be strictly complied with, where they exist, or a forfeiture does not result.[90]

b. Manner of Giving. The statutes usually provide for a personal notice or one by registered mail. In the absence of statutes, by-laws of insurance companies requiring only notice by publication are sufficient authority to forfeit a policy after such form of notice.[91] By-laws providing that notice may be by circular are not satisfied unless the circular is received;[92] but a by-law authorizing notice by mail is satisfied by the proper posting of the letter containing the notice;[93] and statutes requiring written notice by registered letter are satisfied by mailing such a letter to the address of the insured.[94]

c. Sufficiency. The notice should not alone state that the assessment will fall due at a certain time, but also that the policy will be canceled unless the assessment is paid.[95] The notice should distinctly state the date by which payment is required.[96] In the absence of a statutory provision requiring it no demand is necessary.[97]

d. Who Entitled to. The assignee[98] under a completed assignment creating privity of contract with the insurer is the party entitled to notice.[99] A mortgagee whose interest is known to the insurer is entitled to such notice, and in the absence thereof his security by virtue of the policy is not affected.[1]

4. What Is Payment. There can be no forfeiture if the agent of the insurer himself advanced the money for the insured and made the insured his personal debtor,[2] and the fact that the insured's personal note to the agent was unpaid presents no ground of forfeiture.[3] Tender[4] or payment to the agent of the insured is of course sufficient,[5] whether he remits the same prior to loss or not;[6] but a personal set-off belonging to the insured against the agent has been held no payment so as to prevent a cancellation of the policy by the insurer.[7]

5. Excuses For Non-Payment. The sickness of the insured is no excuse for failure to pay an assessment at the proper time.[8] In the case of death the obligation to pay falls upon those thereupon beneficially interested in the property, and a failure by them to pay at the proper time forfeits the policy.[9] War between the countries of the insured and insurer amounts to an excuse for delinquency in the payment of premiums.[10] It is an excuse that the assessment was improperly or illegally levied,[11] or that it is levied to meet losses occurring before or after the period of his membership.[12] The failure of the insurer to have the note at the place of payment at the maturity thereof is an excuse for delay in paying an assessment, if the insured was at that time ready and willing to pay the note.[13]

XIV. ESTOPPEL, WAIVER, OR AGREEMENTS AFFECTING RIGHT TO AVOID POLICY.[14]

A. Applicability of Doctrines — 1. WHAT CONDITIONS MAY BE WAIVED. When an insurance contract is conditioned to become void in case there be a breach of a condition precedent or subsequent, the true meaning is not that the instrument is upon a breach thenceforth a nullity and has no legal existence, but only that upon the violation of the covenants by the insured the insurer shall cease to be bound by his covenants.[15] Inasmuch therefore as such conditions are inserted for the benefit of the insurer they may all be waived by him,[16] except when the insured by the act loses his insurable interest.[17] Even a stipulation that the conditions of a policy cannot be waived, or if waived at all only in a certain manner, may itself be waived.[18] It is impossible to assert with any confidence a consistent theory upon which all the adjudications in insurance cases, commonly collected under the topics of waiver or estoppel, may rest.[19] Indeed it will be

19. To call the matter one of estoppel solely would not be correct, for the insurer is frequently barred from asserting the breach of a condition under circumstances where the elements of an estoppel do not exist. See cases cited infra, this note.

To call it waiver alone is equally inadequate, for many adjudications require that the insured must have incurred a detriment, by reason of some reliance upon the conduct of the insurer, before the latter is barred from asserting the breach. See cases cited infra, this note.

Waiver and estoppel have been considered as identical in the following cases among many others, thus requiring all the elements of a true equitable estoppel before the insurer can be barred by its conduct.

Nebraska.— Home F. Ins. Co. v. Kennedy, found that the cases even within a single jurisdiction are by no means consistent. The only harmonious principle that pervades the subject seems to be a desire on the part of the courts to hold the company as strictly as possible to the performance of its contract and to prevent an unfair reliance, on its part, upon technical conditions of the policy. In consequence a waiver or estoppel has frequently been predicated upon the most innocent acts and the insurer barred by conduct which in other fields of contract would never produce such a result.[20]

2. CONSIDERATION. As to whether or not a new consideration is necessary to support a waiver, there is some unexpected conflict in the authorities. While a consideration plays no part in the ordinary doctrine of equitable estoppel, and cases determined upon this theory ignore the presence or absence of a further consideration moving to the insurer,[21] yet other cases, proceeding on the theory that a waiver is in effect a new contract, assert that if no new and additional consideration is present, the company is not barred by its conduct from setting up any defenses that it may have.[22]

3. NECESSITY OF KNOWLEDGE. It is a fundamental principle of the doctrine of waiver, applicable equally to insurance as to other branches of the law, that a waiver to be effective against the party making it must have occurred with full knowledge of all material facts.[23] For example it has been repeatedly held that tain period,[47] or waive a condition against additional insurance or a breach thereof.[48]

(B) Extent and Limits of Rule. The foregoing rule[49] does not apply where the agent has been given express or implied authority to waive conditions.[50] And even though a mere soliciting agent cannot waive conditions still he binds the insurer by knowledge acquired in the preparation of the application and by representations made to the insured concerning the same.[51]

c. Adjusters. The apparent scope of the authority of an insurance adjuster does not extend beyond settling the loss after it has occurred. While he may therefore waive any provisions of the policy respecting form or time of proof of loss and any formal matters connected with the procedure of settlement,[52] he has not as a matter of law power to waive a condition not connected with the business he is employed to accomplish, or to waive a forfeiture for breach of warranty or condition subsequent and reinstate a policy. If he has such a power it must rest on an express authorization and must be proved if relied upon.[53] Inasmuch as an insurance adjuster has such express authority to demand proofs of loss and to participate in an adjustment, his acts frequently give rise to an implied waiver from compelling the furnishing of such proofs or proceeding to enter into the business of adjustment when the insurer has knowledge of a right to forfeit

It is not within the apparent scope of the authority of an attorney employed by the insurer to collect a premium note to waive the policy. But this rests upon the basis of his having express power to do the particular acts in question.[54]

2. Effect of Provisions of Policy. Insurers have customarily inserted provisions in their policies limiting the powers of an agent to waive conditions and warranties. As to whether or not such provisions are effectual there is great conflict of opinion. A restriction in the policy upon such an agent's authority cannot be construed to refer to his acts prior to the delivery of the policy, as the insured cannot, until that time, be expected to have knowledge of the limitation, so long as the waiver is within the apparent scope of the agent's powers.[55] There are many cases supporting the view that the insured is, after delivery, chargeable with notice of the limitations mentioned in the policy, and that a waiver by an agent in a manner prohibited by the policy or a waiver by any agent whose powers are thus restricted is ineffectual to bind the insurer.[56] Such a restriction may itself, however, be waived by the insurer by conduct tending to justify an inference that it was not insisted on.[57] However, many cases view an attempted restriction in this manner upon the powers of officers or agents acting within the scope of their general authority, as to the waiving of conditions, as ineffectual, inasmuch as such person might himself issue a policy not containing such condition. The waiver of an existing condition therefore by him is under this theory binding upon the insurer.[58] Again if the agent in doing the acts relied upon as a waiver has been following the directions of the main office it is immaterial that the immediate act was done by the agent, for the ultimate waiver is by the insurer.[59]

C. Express Waiver — 1. Whether Writing Necessary. On principle there would seem to be no doubt that the parol-evidence rule is applicable to policies of insurance as well as to other contracts, and inasmuch as the written contract is presumed to be the final conclusive repository of the agreement, evidence of a prior or contemporaneous oral agreement should not be admissible to vary the written policy.[60] However, the question is one involved in hopeless confusion and contradiction.[61] The admission of evidence to show a waiver by acts subsequent to the formation of the contract does not rest on the same considerations. Unless possibly in the case of sealed instruments, the parties to a contract can alter the same as they may desire, by writing or verbally.[62] It is the modern custom for insurers to insert provisions in their policies that no waiver shall be effective unless the same be in writing and attached to the policy or indorsed thereon. The effect of such provisions is differently regarded. Some courts treat the requirement as determinative and hold a parol waiver as ineffectual, the insured being charged by the terms of the policy with knowledge of the limitation.[63] Other courts state that the provision is inserted only for the benefit of the provision of the policy is intended to protect the insurer against just such claims and that the waiver is not valid until the indorsement is made.[69]

3. Effect When Written and Indorsed. The indorsed consent of the company by its authorized officer[70] or agent[71] to do an act otherwise prohibited by the policy is a waiver of the condition.[72]

D. Implied Waiver — 1. Nature of. The subject of implied waiver presents in full the conflict between the two diverse theories of a waiver and an estoppel as a basis for forbidding the insurer to set up the breach of a condition contained in the policy. Bearing in mind that some cases require all the elements of an equitable estoppel to be present, and that others assert that the absence of such elements is immaterial, it may be stated as a general rule that the insurer is deemed to have waived the performance of conditions precedent or subsequent when in good conscience he ought not to be heard to assert them, as when by reason of his conduct he has led the insured to believe that they would not be insisted upon.[73] So the inference of waiver is to be drawn from any declaration or act justifying the belief that the performance of a condition contained in the policy would not be insisted upon.[74] The same inference is to be drawn when the act fairly indicates, after a breach of condition that the insurer

A total failure to answer the questions contained in the application seems to qualify

a fraud on the insured to permit the insurer with knowledge of the then existing breach of a condition precedent to accept the premium and to issue a policy pretending to insure, but which could be avoided after a loss by a reliance upon such a breach of condition.[79]

b. Failure to Answer Letters of Insured. The insured is not entitled to rely upon the insurer's mere failure to reply to his letters as being a waiver of any condition or as amounting of itself to consent to do an act otherwise prohibited by the policy.[80]

c. Failure to Assert Forfeiture — (i) In General. While the weight of authority is that a policy conditioned to become void upon a breach of a warranty is void ipso facto upon such a breach without formal proceedings on the part of this rule. Milwaukee Mechanics' Ins. Co. v. Niewedde, 12 Ind. App. 145, 39 N. E. 757.

Failure of insurer to make inquiry.— As to whether or not a failure on the part of the insurer to inquire as to the nature of or as to defects in the insured's title is a waiver of such disclosure, there being a provision concerning the same in the policy, the cases conflict. In general a personal examination or inquiry by the insurer is not necessary if the policy is expressly conditioned against the facts which might have been found on inquiry. Hoxie v. Home Ins. Extent and limits of rule.—And the fact that a private instruction of the agent as to the acceptance of such a risk is violated is no defense to the insurer. Howard Ins. Orient Ins. Co. v. Prather, 25 Tex. Civ. App. 446, 62 S. W. 89. See infra, XIV, E, 3, a. the insurer,[81] yet it is true that such conditions are inserted for the benefit of the insurer and may be waived, and that the insurer may elect to continue the policy despite the breach. If it does the policy is revived and restored. Its failure to assert a forfeiture therefore is at least evidence tending to show a waiver thereof.[82] Many authorities go further, however, and hold that the failure to assert a forfeiture after knowledge of a ground thereof will amount of itself to a waiver. Whenever it appears that the insured was deluded thereby into a belief that he was protected, and consequently relied on the implied statement of validity to his detriment, a true estoppel rises.[83] Other authorities, however, assert that when the policy is conditioned to be void upon a breach, and the insurer has not induced

Rauch v. Michigan Millers' Mut. F. Ins. Co., 131 Mich. 281, 91 N. W. 160, however, Grant, J., dissenting, a failure of the insurer to respond to a letter of the insured stating that he had taken out additional insurance, but could not tell whether this conflicted with the terms of the policy, as it was at his banker's, but to advise him if it did, was held to estop the insurer from claiming a forfeiture under a clause prohibiting all further insurance. In Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Johnston, 143 Ill. 106, 32 N. E. 429 [affirming 42 Ill. An assertion of forfeiture and non-liability upon a distinct and separate ground from failure to pay the premium will excuse the absence of an affirmative statement[86] that other breaches are not claimed, amount to a waiver of the right to set up such further breaches.[87] Some cases affirmatively state a necessity of a change of position by the insured to his detriment in reliance upon a waiver arising from such acts,[88] but others presume a detriment or regard it as unnecessary.[89] Of course the insurer should be barred from asserting a defense already known to it and inconsistent with one previously claimed.[90] All other breaches are waived if the insurer by way of a defense to an action on the policy sets up only one specific ground for forfeiture.[91]

d. Admission of Liability. If the insurer with full knowledge of the facts on which a forfeiture might be claimed admits its liability upon the policy,[92] or if it promises to pay the same, this constitutes a waiver of its right to insist upon the forfeiture.[93]

e. Consent to Assignment of Policy — (i) In General. When the company consents to an assignment of the policy and thereby creates a privity of contract with the assignee, it is to be considered as having waived all defenses available against the assignor but not inhering in the estate or interest of the assignee acquired from the assignor, for this is virtually the taking out of a new policy by the assignee.[94] Consent to such an assignment is a waiver of all breaches of condition of any kind, past or existing, of which the insurer is cognizant at the time of consenting to the assignment;[95] but if the insurer does not know of the breach and it inheres in the estate of the assignee after the assignment there is no waiver thereof.[96] The insurer cannot after consenting to the assignment assert that the assignment was itself void between the assignor and the assignee, for it is a party to the transaction.[97] If an assignment has already occurred, a notation on the policy made at the request of the assignee, "Loss if any payable to the mortgagee," will amount to such a waiver that the policy is confirmed in the hands of such assignee and mortgagee.[98]

Ins. Co., (R. I. 1896) 35 Atl. 579), or itself induced by fraud does not amount to a waiver (Concordia F. Ins. Co. v. Koretz, 14 Colo. App. 386, 60 Pac. 191). f. Demand, Acceptance, or Retention of Premiums or Assessments — (I) Waiver of Conditions of Policy — (A) Acceptance Prior to Loss — (1) In General — (a) Not Due and Earned Prior to Breach. Inasmuch as the acceptance of a premium with knowledge[1] of a right and an intention to assert a forfeiture of the policy for a prior or existing breach of condition would be a fraud upon the insured, the principle is well settled, that if the insurer, being cognizant of a right to declare a forfeiture, demands or accepts a premium not already earned and due to it prior to the breach, it has elected to treat the policy as valid and subsisting, and the forfeiture is waived.[2] This rule is applicable in

(2) In Case of Severable Contract. If the contract be a severable one, there is no waiver by accepting payment of the premium upon that part of the risk only, concerning which there has been no breach.[9]

(3) Mistake of Insurer or Its Agent. There is no waiver if the demand was made or the acceptance was had by reason of a mistake on the part of the insurer or of its agents, provided it returns or tenders the amount collected, if any, to the insured on discovery thereof.[10]

(4) Indorsement on Policy. For the purposes of a waiver for this reason it is immaterial that the policy requires an indorsement of any waiver thereon.[11]

(B) Acceptance After Loss. Some cases assert that when the loss has occurred the rights of the parties are thereby fixed and that the collecting of a premium at such a time does not operate as a waiver or estoppel.[12] However the more general rule would seem to be that a waiver results,[13] at least when nothing remains after the loss to which insurance might attach.[14]

(C) Retention of Premium After Knowledge. If the insurer has accepted payment of a premium without knowledge of a right to declare a forfeiture, it is under a moral obligation upon discovery of the facts to return to the insured the portion thereof that has not been earned during the life of the policy, and a failure to do so operates as a waiver of the forfeiture.[15] But there are holdings that a failure to return the unearned premium after loss and subsequent discovery of a breach of condition is not a waiver of the insurer's defense.[16]

(II) Waiver of Delinquency—(A) Prior to Loss. In the absence of a waiver,[17] the prepayment of the premium is a condition precedent to the attaching of the risk, the policy taking its life only from the time the premium is paid.[18] If, however, the risk has once attached[19] and the insurer before loss accepts overdue premiums, it thereby waives the right to enforce a forfeiture by reason of the delinquency. The insured's rights are thereby completely restored.[20] So too a forfeiture is to be regarded as waived when the agent of the insurer agrees that he will give the insured notice of the falling due of any premium note.[21]

(B) After Loss — (1) IN GENERAL. The same rule has been asserted where a payment is made after a loss has occurred, even though the insurer is not cognizant thereof;[22] but it is believed that the better rule is that a waiver and reinstatement are not had by a payment accepted after loss without knowledge of the same.[23] A payment, however, after loss and after the insurer has knowledge thereof will operate to estop the insurer from asserting a delinquency and permits a recovery on the policy.[24] A tender of payment after loss is of course insufficient if the risk has never attached.[25]

(2) PARTIAL LOSS. If overdue premiums are accepted after a partial loss, there is not necessarily a waiver as to the past loss occurring during delinquency, for the policy as to the part not destroyed is merely suspended and the insurer may by accepting payment waive delinquency only as to such part of the risk.[26]

(C) Stipulations in Policy. It appears that when the policy contains a stipulation that it shall stand suspended during delinquency, but that the holder shall be liable for such delinquent assessment, or that the entire premium note shall be deemed earned upon default, the insurer does not waive the delinquency as a defense to any loss occurring during such periods, by demanding or accepting premiums.[27] The rule is the same when the premium is by the policy absolutely payable whether the latter be forfeited or not.[28] The parties may validly stipulate in advance that when a delinquency occurs the insured's rights will finally terminate and that the collection of a premium thereafter will not be regarded as a waiver.[29]

(D) Custom and Course of Dealing. By failure to assert forfeitures because of delinquency in meeting assessments, the insurer may establish a course of dealing which if known to the insured may estop it from asserting a forfeiture of the policy because of a delay in payment, even though the policy provides that a forfeiture shall take place.[30] Or it may estop itself by its habits of business from declaring a forfeiture without having made a demand of payment.[31]

The statement of the rule is even broader in Smith v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co., 3 Dak. 80, 13 N. W. 355, that is, that the insurer is estopped if he "permits" the insured to make out proofs of loss without asserting a forfeiture which he is aware he has a right to assert. Contra, American Ins. Co. v. Walston, 111 Ill. App. 133.

There are authorities, however, that when the policy itself provides that the loss shall not be payable until proofs of loss are rendered, there is no waiver by the insurer in requiring or accepting such proofs. Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Flemming, 65 Ark. 54, 44 S. W. 464, 67 Am. St. Rep. 900, 39 L. R. A. 789; Fitchpatrick v. Hawkeye Ins. Co., 53 Iowa 335, 5 N. W. 151.

A waiver of the requirement that books should be kept in a fireproof safe, resulting from demand of proofs of loss, operates to excuse the production of such books in an action on the policy. Corson v. Anchor Mut. F. Ins. Co., 113 Iowa 641, 85 N. W. 806.

Arbitration.— Insistence upon arbitration under a stipulation which applies to the measure of damages alone is a waiver of a defense to the whole policy. Home F. Ins. Co. v. Kennedy, 47 Nebr. 138, 66 N. W. 278, 53 Am. St. Rep. 521. But see Briggs v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co., 65 Mich. 52, 31 N. W. 616. Co., 18 Nova Scotia 478, 6 Can. L. T. 539. And a completed arbitration is a final waiver. City of London F. Ins. Co. v. Smith, 15 Can. Sup. Ct. 69.

The furnishing of blanks for proofs of loss in the absence of knowledge of a breach of condition is not a waiver of the right to declare a forfeiture. Alston v. Northwestern Live Stock Ins. Co., 7 Kan. App. 179, 53 Pac. 784.

ments of an equitable estoppel;[36] but there are many of the cases in which the insured could not have sustained any true detriment, but in which by demanding and accepting proofs of loss the insurer was held to waive its defenses.[37] The assertion of objections to proofs of loss on grounds of form waives other defenses as to the conditions of the policy,[38] unless those grounds are reserved by denying any liability thereon.[39]

(II) PARTICIPATION IN ADJUSTMENT— (A) In General. A participation in an adjustment of the loss amounting to a final understanding and an agreement to pay a sum thereunder to the insured amounts to a waiver of all breaches of condition of which the insurer was then cognizant.[40] As to whether a mere participation in adjustment will amount to a waiver, there is a conflict; some authorities assert that the slightest participation in an attempt to adjust the loss will result in a waiver;[41] while others require that there should have been such procedure that the insured has incurred a detriment before a waiver results.[42] Most cases[43] assert the customary rule and state that a waiver cannot be implied from a participation in the adjustment of a loss unless the insurer is aware of the facts giving rise to a forfeiture.[44]

(c) Payment or Its Equivalent. If the insurer with knowledge of the breach of a condition pays the amount of the policy into court upon an interpleader,[46] or pays or partially pays any loss under the policy,[47] it has recognized the policy as still in existence and must be considered to have waived its defenses, unless the policy was severable so that under the law it would be only forfeitable in part.[48] An election by an insurance company to rebuild or repair with knowledge of the right to declare a forfeiture is a waiver of all defenses of every kind which otherwise it might assert.[49]

(d) Sale of Salvage. If the insurer with knowledge of a right to forfeit sells the salvage from the fire it thereby waives its defense.[50]

It has already been stated to be a fundamental principle of the doctrine of waiver in insurance law that knowledge of a breach of condition is essential before a waiver can be predicated of the acts of an insurer.[58] While in general such knowledge must be actual,[59] it has been stated that the insurer waives a forfeiture for breach of a condition precedent when he possessed information which if pursued would have led to actual knowledge when he issued the policy.[60] The insurer is chargeable as with actual notice with knowledge of all matters disclosed in the application or in the form of the policy itself.[61] All matters necessarily implied[62]

insurer, although the act be in behalf of a different principal, provided only that he be an agent of the type whose knowledge ever is imputable to his principal.[76] However, that he has acquired knowledge of material facts prior to the issuance of the policy in suit, while acting as the agent of another insurer, gives rise to no different rule than an acquisition of knowledge in any other employment.[77] Knowledge thus acquired contemporaneously is imputable to both insurers.[78]

d. Must Be Agent of Insurer[79] — (i) In General. If the person whose knowledge is alleged to have been that of the insurer was not in fact the agent of the insurer, his knowledge is immaterial.[80] An attempt, however, on the part of the insurer to make any person who acts in obtaining the policy an agent of the insured by the assertion of such a fact in the policy is not recognized in general as changing the actual situation and relationship.[81] Where the courts have held the contrary rule, statutory enactments have frequently settled the law in accordance with the foregoing statement.[82] Although some jurisdictions uphold the provisions of a policy requiring that all waivers must be indorsed thereon, yet, inasmuch as the mere fact of knowledge by the agent is not itself a waiver, but, being imputed to the principal, is only a basis from which its subsequent actions are to be judged, such provisions requiring indorsement should have no effect upon the doctrines herein treated;[83] but some courts say that the knowledge of the agent under such circumstances is not the knowledge of the principal.[84]

(II) Agent's Clerk or Subagent. If the agent be of the type that his knowledge is to be imputed to the insurer, the knowledge of his clerk or subagent acquired in his employment during or subsequently to the issuance of the policy is likewise attributable to the insurer.[85]

(B) Particular Conditions — (1) As to Title or Interest of Insured. The insurance company is therefore taken to have waived a defect in the title of the insured, against which a condition of the policy is directed, of which it was cognizant when the policy was issued.[91] The company cannot assert that the fact that the building insured stands upon leased ground vitiates the insurance, by the terms of the policy, when such fact was disclosed or known to the agent or to the company.[92] And indeed it has been held that the rule is the same where the policy is conditioned to be void in case the title to the property be involved in litigation,[93] or if foreclosure proceedings be commenced, and a breach of such conditions is known to the insurer when the policy is issued.[94] It seems, however, that the rule cannot be applied to a knowledge of the fact that the insured had no insurable interest.[95]

(2) As to Encumbrances. (4) Other Conditions or Misrepresentations. So also the general rule as to the effect of the insurer's knowledge at the time of issuing the policy to create an estoppel to claim a forfeiture, or to show a waiver of condition, has also been applied with respect to other particular conditions and misrepresentations.[98]

(II) Acts Which if Continued Would Be a Breach of Condition— (A) In General. It has been said that a mere knowledge of a future intent to violate any of the provisions of a policy can never be held to constitute a waiver.[99] However language distinctly appears in the adjudications to the effect

Co. v. Vining, 68 Ga. 197; Dacey v. Agricultural Ins. Co., 21 Hun (N. Co. v. Saunders, 86 Va. 969, 11 S. E. 794. Contra, Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Magee, 47 Ill. App. 367). that when a prohibited act has been customary and the agent knows the insured intends to continue the same when the policy is issued, there is a waiver.[1]

(B) Keeping of an Iron Safe. In connection with the breach of a condition requiring the keeping of an iron safe, etc.,[2] some authorities assert that a mere knowledge when the policy is issued that the insured has no such safe is a waiver,[3] and others state the opposite rule to be true.[4]

(C) Keeping or Use of Prohibited Article. The knowledge of an insurer that articles prohibited by the policy as dangerous are used or kept on the premises when the policy is issued will estop it to claim a forfeiture because of the continuation of such use;[5] but the contrary has been stated, inasmuch as non constat that such use will be continued, and the insurer is entitled to suppose that the insured will comply with the provisions of the policy.[6]

(D) Prohibited Occupancy or Use. If the insurer on accepting the policy knows that a prohibited occupancy or use is had of the insured premises, a waiver is held to result from such knowledge,[7] although some authorities are to the effect that to constitute a waiver of conditions as to future use something more must appear than the mere knowledge of the agent or the insurer that such use had previously been customary.[8]

(E) Vacancy of Premises. Although it does not follow that vacancy of the premises will continue because the premises are vacant and unoccupied at the time when they are insured, yet it has generally been held that the insurance company cannot claim a forfeiture by reason of the continuance of a vacancy existing with its knowledge at the time the policy issues.[9] But if the building becomes occupied and vacancy thereafter occurs there is no waiver of such subsequent vacancy.[10]

b. After Issuance of Policy. The weight of authority[11] is in favor of the rule that if the insurer acquires notice of facts authorizing a forfeiture after the policy is delivered and fails to assert the same, but acts as though the policy were still subsisting and valid, it is to be taken to have waived its right to declare a forfeiture.[12]

(II) False or Mistaken Interpretation of Terms and Their Effect. The agent having the implied and apparent power to make necessary explanations of the meaning and effect of the terms employed by the insurer in its interrogatories or policy and to agree with the applicant as to the terms which he shall employ to express the facts stated by him,[22] if the agent interprets the meaning of the conditions of the policy mistakenly and in consequence the insured answers erroneously, thereby misrepresenting his title or the nature of the risk, the insurer can assert no forfeiture.[23] If the statements of the agent as to the legal construction of the policy put upon it by the insurer are relied upon by the insured to his detriment after the issuance of the policy, and he acts in accordance

If after the application has been forwarded the insured apprises the agent of further facts but the agent assures him that they are not therewith, in general the company is held to be estopped to assert the breach of condition thereby occurring,[24] unless the construction is obviously in conflict with the terms of the policy;[25] but it is sometimes said that a representation of law by the agent cannot bind the insurer.[26]

(III) Failure to Make Insertion in Application or Policy. It has been stated similarly that if the insured understood that certain stipulations should be inserted in the application by the agent and was informed that they had been so inserted, the insurer is bound by the policy and application in the form the insured understood that it would exist, despite the parol-evidence rule.[27] So the insured is entitled to presume that the policy is in accordance with the application, and he need not examine it to ascertain whether or not it corresponds.[28]

(IV) Insertion in Application of Mistaken or Intentional False Statements. Upon the same principle if the insured at the time of applying for the policy truthfully states to such agent the facts involved in the risk, and the material, the insurer cannot set up these facts to defeat the policy. Jacobs v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co., 86 Iowa 145, 53 N. W. 101.
