5. Corporations Having No Powers in State or Country of Creation. And in a late case in Oklahoma, involving the status of a corporation created in one state or territory to do business exclusively in another, it was held that it is indispensable that a corporation seeking to invoke the doctrine of comity must first be possessed of some right, power, or privilege in the state or country of its creation, and unless it has, not only existence, but also some right or power there, it cannot be awarded any in a foreign state or country.[39]

F. Foreign Corporation Coming Into State and Doing Business Under Same Name as Domestic Corporation. Statutes exist prohibiting foreign corporations from doing business within the domestic state under names similar to those possessed by domestic corporations;[40] and without the aid of any statute a corporation will be protected in its exclusive right to the use of its name, as a trade name, by an injunction in equity.[41] A foreign corporation which has assumed the name of an older domestic corporation, which it could not obtain if incorporated in the state, will be enjoined from the use of it, although it has complied with the registration laws, and has thereby received a certificate to do business in the state.[42] On the other hand a court of equity will not, at the suit of a corporation created in another state, enjoin a corporation of the state of the forum from the use of its corporate name, adopted prior to the organization of the complainant company. A foreign corporation cannot thus contest the right of a domestic corporation to the name given to it by the state creating it.[43]

G. Provisions Subjecting Foreign Corporations to Same Liabilities and Restrictions as Domestic Corporations. Constitutional provisions and statutes exist in some of the states providing, in various language, that foreign corporations shall be subject to all the liabilities, restrictions, and duties that are or may be imposed upon domestic corporations of the like kind and character.[44] The purpose of such a constitutional provision or statute has been declared to be "to produce uniformity in the powers, liabilities, duties and restrictions of foreign and domestic corporations of like character, and bring them all under the influence of the same law."[45] It is also observed, concerning this statute, that "by declaring that foreign corporations shall have no other or greater powers, there is a direct implication that they shall have equal powers with domestic corporations of like character."[46] The meaning is that a foreign corporation, on complying with the terms of the domestic statute containing such a provision, acquires the same rights respecting its contracts as domestic corporations of like character have, whether it would have the same rights under the rule of comity or not; and that it can exercise no greater powers in the state than domestic corporations can.[47] A provision of a state constitution that no foreign corporation shall be allowed to exercise or enjoy within the state greater rights or privileges than those possessed or enjoyed by corporations of similar character created under the laws of the state is merely an inhibition against the granting of greater rights or privileges to foreign corporations, and does not affect the validity of laws governing domestic corporations, although they cannot be applied to foreign corporations.[48]

H. Interference With Internal Management of Foreign Corporations — 1. General Rule. The general rule is that the courts of one state will not interfere in controversies relating merely to the internal management of the affairs of foreign corporations, or in other words, will not undertake to exercise visitorial powers over them.[49] A suit to regulate or interfere with the internal affairs of a foreign corporation is not authorized by a statute which provides for the appointment by a foreign corporation of an agent upon whom process may be served, as a condition precedent to its right to do business in the state, and a statute providing that a resident of the state may bring an action against a foreign corporation on any cause of action.[50]

2. Instances Under the Foregoing Rule. For instance a shareholder cannot, it has been held, appeal to a domestic court to compel a foreign corporation to pay such dividends as may, on an accounting, appear to be proper.[51] So the complaint of a shareholder that he has been deprived of his rights as a shareholder by being excluded from his right to vote at a shareholders' meeting, and seeking to be reinstated as a member of the foreign corporation, is an action which will not be entertained.[52] Upon the same ground, relief has been refused to shareholders of a foreign corporation to restrain the company from paying a stock dividend;[53] to appoint a general receiver of the assets of the corporation or a receiver of assets not within the state of the forum;[54] to compel the corporation to divide its assets among its shareholders;[55] to dissolve it;[56] to enjoin or cancel an unauthorized issue of new stock;[57] to set aside contracts made by the corporation on the ground that they are unwise and reckless and depreciate or render valueless the stock of complainants;[58] to enjoin assessments by a mutual life-insurance company as excessive and fraudulently made for the purpose of causing

3. Cases in Which the Rule Does Not Apply. The rule above stated does not apply so as to prevent a court from granting relief against a foreign corporation, at the suit either of a shareholder or member or of a creditor, where it has jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject-matter, and the suit does not involve a mere regulation of the internal affairs of the corporation.[63] Upon the question what acts of a foreign corporation are within this rule, and what without it, the distinction has been taken that where the act affects one solely in his capacity as a member, he must seek redress of his grievance in the courts of the state or country creating the corporation; but where the act affects his individual rights, he may demand redress of any tribunal where jurisdiction may properly be acquired.[64] The court may, at the instance of a shareholder, compel a foreign corporation by mandamus to permit him to inspect and make copies of the books, papers, and other documents of the corporation, where they are in the custody of an officer of the corporation within the state,[65] but not otherwise.[66] And it may, at the suit of a resident shareholder or creditor, as the case may be, against the corporation and its officers within the jurisdiction, compel an accounting for and restoration of funds or property wrongfully taken or withheld from the corporation,[67] and enjoin or grant other relief in the case of ultra vires or fraudulent acts.[68] And in many cases it has been held that a court of equity will, in a proper case, at the suit of a shareholder or creditor of a foreign corporation, appoint a receiver and decree distribution of its assets within the state.[69]

4. Courts Will Settle Ordinary Questions Depending Upon Construction of Foreign Charters. The courts of the domestic state will — and this is a matter of every-day practice — settle questions of right depending upon foreign charters, which do not involve the mere internal government of foreign corporations. They will, for example, where the question becomes material, inquire whether a corporation created by the laws of another state has transcended its charter powers.[70] In construing a foreign charter, they will in general follow the decisions of the state creating the foreign corporation;[71] although this rule has been denied where the question related to the devolution of title to land in the domestic state.[72]

5. Statutory Regulations. The legislature of a state, like the courts, has no power to regulate the internal affairs of a foreign corporation.[73] But statutes of a state merely imposing conditions precedent to the right of foreign corporations to do business within the state, or merely regulating the conduct of their business therein, are not open to the objection that they constitute a regulation of the internal affairs of such corporations.[74]

II. POWER OF FOREIGN CORPORATIONS RELATING TO PROPERTY.

A. Power to Acquire and Hold Land — 1. GENERAL STATEMENT OF DOCTRINE. It is impossible to state in a paragraph any rule upon this subject applicable in all the states of the Union; but the following is believed to be the doctrine which obtains in most of the states: (1) That a corporation created under the laws of one state of the Union may acquire and hold land in another state,[75] when it requisite to the sale of the land owned by it within the state has reference to the conduct of its business within the state and is not a regulation of its internal affairs.

Power to buy in property at execution or foreclosure sale.— The power of a corporation to sue for the collection of its just debts, or the enforcement of its other rights (see infra, V, A), might be ineffectual in many cases, unless the power were conceded to it, which is possessed by ordinary plaintiffs, of bidding and buying in property sold under executions sued out upon judgments in its favor; and accordingly this power has been judicially conceded (Columbus Buggy Co. v. Graves, 108 Ill. 459; Elston v. Piggott, 94 Ind. 14). So, the power, conceded to a foreign corporation, of lending its money upon a mortgage security (Pancoast v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 79 Ind. 172; infra, II, A, 7), carries with it by necessary implication, a concession of the power to foreclose the mortgage, and to protect its rights by becoming the purchaser at the judicial sale which takes place in the foreclosure proceedings (Elston v. Piggott, 94 Ind. 14; infra, II, A, 7).

might so acquire and hold land in the state of its creation,[76] unless (a) the local statute law prohibits it from so doing,[77] or (b) what is more vague and indeterminate, the local courts declare it to be against the public policy of the state to allow it do so.[78]

2. Doctrine That Power Can Be Questioned Only by the State — a. In General. (2) But in either of these last cases there is a countervailing principle, constantly applied by the courts, which is this: That in actions between the foreign corporation and private suitors, or between other private parties, in which the power of the corporation so to acquire and hold real estate is challenged, the courts will hold it to be a question between the state in its political capacity and the foreign corporation or those claiming under it, and, if the state does not interfere to escheat the land to its own uses, will allow the title to be good.[79]

b. Assent of State of Situs Presumed. Stated in another way, the doctrine is that the right of a corporation to purchase and hold lands in another state depends upon the assent or permission of such other state, express or implied.[80] But such is the general law of comity which prevails among the states composing the American Union, that the presumption will be judicially indulged in, that a corporation created by one state, if not forbidden by its charter or governing statute, may exercise the powers thereby granted within the other states of the Union, including the power of acquiring land unless prohibited therefrom, either in their legislative enactments, or by their public policy, which public policy is to be discovered in the general course of their legislation or the settled adjudications of their highest courts.[81] Where a corporation organized in one state of the Union assumes to exercise power within the limits of another state, the assent of such other state will be presumed, in the absence of expressions to the contrary in its statutes or settled adjudications, so long as the state itself refuses to interfere by a direct proceeding in the nature of quo warranto brought by its attorney-general, or otherwise, to escheat the land so acquired by the corporation, or otherwise to oust it from the exercise of the power.[82]

Kansas.— Omnium Invest. Co. v. North American Trust Co., 65 Kan. 50, 68 Pac. 1089, the state alone can insist upon a forfeiture denounced by statute.

c. Analogy Between This Doctrine and Rule as to Holding of Land by Aliens. It has been observed that the right of a foreign corporation to take and hold land, without explicit license from the state within whose boundaries such land lies, rests on the same footing as the right of an alien so to take and hold land. If an alien attempts to acquire and hold land, his estate is subject to forfeiture by the state; yet, until some act is done by the state to divest the title out of the alien and vest it in itself, it remains in the alien, who may convey it and make a good title to a purchaser. In other words, the settled doctrine is that an alien may acquire a transmissible title which is not divested until office found.[83]

d. Qualification of This Rule. It has been held, however, that the doctrine above stated does not apply where no title has ever vested in the corporation, but it is seeking to acquire title — that, while a foreign corporation, acting in excess of its conferred authority, may be questioned as to its authority only by the state, yet where, in an action by a foreign corporation, there is an attempt to acquire title to property vested in an individual, such individual may deny its corporate capacity as a defense to its right of recovery.[84]

3. Must Have Power to Acquire and Hold Land in State of Creation. Where the foreign corporation cannot take and hold real estate under the same circumstances in the state of its creation, it has been held that it cannot do so in another state.[85] It would seem that this is merely a question of public policy, and it has been so treated;[86] but in a recent Oklahoma case it was held, aside from any question of policy, that a corporation seeking to invoke the doctrine of comity must be possessed, not only of existence, but also of some right or power in the state of its creation, and therefore that a corporation created in Kansas for the sole purpose of acquiring, owning, and dealing with real estate in Oklahoma could not acquire and hold land in Oklahoma.[87] Other cases are apparently to the contrary.[88]

4. DECISIONS CONSIDERING THE QUESTION AS ONE OF PUBLIC POLICY — a. General Affirmation of the Power. Where the question of the power of foreign corporations to acquire, hold, and transmit land has been considered by the state courts on the footing of public policy, their answers have generally been in affirmation of the power. Most of the courts, in the absence of express restriction, have found nothing in the public policy of their states opposed to the conclusion that a corporation, empowered by its charter to own real estate for a particular purpose, may purchase and hold such real estate within the state of the forum.[89] Contrary to a decision in Illinois hereafter referred to,[90] other courts concede the power of foreign corporations to hold lands in the state of the forum, or in a state other than that of their creation, even where such corporations are organized for the purpose of dealing in land, and are known as "land companies."[91] But a disposition may be discovered in recent legislation to exclude from the privilege of holding land foreign corporations organized for the mere purpose of speculating in land.[92]

Wash. Laws (1889–1890), c. 9, § 1, amending Wash Code, § 2479. This does not apply to a foreign corporation organized before the passage of the act. Realty Co. v. Appolonio, 5 Wash. 437, 32 Pac. 219.

was made in the state of Illinois in the year 1873, under peculiar political conditions,[93] the supreme court of that state holding that a title to land in the state of Illinois acquired from a foreign corporation known as a "land company," was of no validity, and would not support ejectment.[94] This was followed by another decision of the same court holding that a corporation of another state appointed to act as trustee under the will of a deceased citizen of that state could not hold the real estate of the testator situated in Illinois.[95] But the same court held in a later case that an educational institution incorporated in Wisconsin, and authorized to hold real estate, was competent to take a devise of real estate situated in Illinois. The court regarded the question as one to be decided in accordance with the public policy of the state as made manifest by its legislation, and then, by examination of numerous acts of the legislature, concluded that the legislation of the state was not adverse to corporations organized for educational purposes, but on the contrary, gave them a hospitable reception and placed them upon an equal footing with domestic corporations.[96]

5. Power Limited by Charter or Governing Statute of Corporation — a. In General. All the preceding cases either state in terms or proceed upon the assumption that a corporation has no power to acquire, hold, or convey lands situated in another state, unless the power is, either in express terms or by necessary implication, conferred on it by its own charter or governing statute. In all these cases two sources of power are to be considered: (1) The charter or governing statute of the foreign corporation; and (2) the restrictions imposed by the local law. If the first source of power fails, the other need not be considered, but there is an end of the question.[97]

b. Construction According to Lex Rei Sitæ. Applying the well-known principle that a statute or other instrument relating to the title to land is construed according to the law of the situs, it has been held that when the question arises whether a foreign corporation has the power to acquire real estate, the decision of the highest court of the state in which the foreign corporation exists will not be conclusive as to its power under its charter, but it will be for the courts of the state in which the land is situated to construe the charter and to determine whether, under it, such a power exists; in which case a holding of the highest court of the state creating the corporation, in affirmation of the power, will be persuasive authority merely.[98]

St. (1874) c. 32, § 26), place foreign corporations on the same footing as domestic corporations with respect to the power to take and hold real estate, and accord to them the power to hold so much as may be necessary for the transaction of their business within the state. c. Presumption. When the question arises as to whether a foreign corporation has power under its charter or governing statute to take and hold lands, it will be presumed that the power exists in the absence of proof to the contrary,[99] unless the nature and purposes of the corporation are such that it would not ordinarily have such power.[1]

6. Power to Take and Hold Land by Devise — a. Such Power Generally Affirmed. The power of a foreign corporation to take and hold land by devise, and generally the validity of a devise of land to a foreign corporation, is governed by the foregoing principles. According to the prevailing American doctrine, in the absence of local legislation to the contrary, of which legislation there are few traces, a testator may devise lands situated in one state to a corporation existing in another state.[2]

b. Exceptions to the Rule. But a foreign corporation cannot take by devise contrary to the statute of wills of the domestic state,[3] or contrary to the legislation or public policy of such state prohibiting such corporations from taking or holding land, or legislation imposing conditions which are not complied with.[4] Nor will a devise to a foreign corporation be good where it has no power, under its charter or governing statute, to take such a devise in the state of its creation.[5]

c. Effect of Statute of Wills of Foreign State. In some of the cases it has been held that the statute of wills of the state of a corporation's domicile prohibiting devises to corporations does not operate outside of the state so as to incapacitate the corporation from taking by devise in another state, where it has power under its charter to take and hold land, and the statute of wills of such other state allows devises to corporations.[6] Other cases are to the contrary.[7]

d. Effect of Want of Power, and the Doctrine of Equitable Conversion. If, by reason of a want of power in its charter or governing statute, or by reason of a prohibition in the local law, the foreign corporation has no power to take a devise of lands, the title does not vest at all in the corporation; nor can a court of equity so apply the doctrine of equitable conversion as to convert the land devised to it into money and turn over to the foreign corporation such money; but the land will descend to the heirs of the testator according to the law of the state in which it is situated.[8] Where, however, a will so directs or authorizes a sale of real estate by the executor as to create an equitable conversion of the same into personalty and gives the proceeds to a foreign corporation, it is a bequest of personalty and valid, notwithstanding the corporation cannot take by devise.[9]

7. Power to Take and Foreclose Mortgages. The power to take mortgages of real estate as a security for debts due and to foreclose the same is generally conceded by the American courts to corporations created under the laws of other states.[10] This power has been conceded to corporations created under the laws of other states with the power, under their charters, to loan money on mortgages[11] to foreign corporations having demands against domestic citizens upon which actions can be maintained in the domestic forum;[12] and to foreign corporations taking such mortgages by way of additional security for debts lawfully contracted within the domestic jurisdiction, although their charter may not have authorized the taking of such security upon an original investment.[13] And it has been held that the mortgagor is estopped from setting up a want of power in the foreign corporation to invest its money upon mortgages in the domestic jurisdiction;[14] and, what is equivalent to the last holding, that only the state can set up such a want of power.[15] Of course a state may prohibit a foreign corporation from taking and foreclosing mortgages on land within its limits, or impose conditions precedent to its right to do so;[16] and the power of foreign corporations in this as in other respects is limited by their charter or governing statute.[17] In most states, however, one who borrows money from a foreign corporation, or otherwise incurs a debt to it, and gives a mortgage as security, cannot defend a suit to foreclose on the ground that the transaction was ultra vires.[18]

8. Power to Take Lease or License. 9. Constitutional and Statutory Restriction or Prohibition. Statutes have been enacted in some of the states restraining or prohibiting the power of corporations to hold land within such states. Other statutes impose conditions upon the right of foreign corporations to hold property or to do business in the state.[23] Some of these statutes which have received judicial exposition are referred to in the note below.[24] Where a statute prohibits a foreign corporation from acquiring and holding land, it will not be permitted to circumvent and evade the statute by any scheme or device whatever, as, for example, by taking and holding through a trustee.[25] But it has been held that a statute prohibiting such a corporation from holding land does not prohibit it from acquiring and holding a majority of the stock of a domestic corporation owning land and thereby controlling the same.[26]

Tennessee.— The act of March 26, 1891, prohibiting the acquisition of property by a foreign corporation not complying with the provisions of the act, construed with the conclusion that the statute does not prevent such a corporation, lawfully doing business in the state, from making a valid conveyance of property which it may have acquired. B. Power to Alienate or Encumber Lands — 1. Such Power Everywhere Conceded. Foreign corporations have the same power to alienate or to mortgage or otherwise encumber their property that domestic corporations or natural persons would have,[28] subject to any limitations as to their powers or the mode of exercising them in their charter or governing statute;[29] although the legislature of the state in which the lands are situated may, and sometimes does, restrain the exercise of the power, when to allow its exercise will prejudice the rights of its own citizens as creditors of the corporation.[30]

2. What Law Governs as to Mode of Conveyance. In respect of the mode in which the conveyance or mortgage is made, the local law governs; although the question whether the directors have received power from the shareholders to authorize the mortgage, and other questions as to the mode of exercising the corporate powers, must be determined by reference to the charter, governing statute, or by-laws of the corporation.[31]

C. Power to Acquire, Hold, and Transfer Personal Property — 1. In General. It is everywhere conceded that a foreign corporation has the same power and right as a domestic corporation to acquire, hold, and transfer personal property in other states than that of its creation,[32] subject to limitations in its

30. A decision of one of the state courts of nisi prius in Colorado has been quoted to the proposition that a foreign corporation cannot encumber its property situated in Colorado, under the Colorado Corporation Law, section 260, to the exclusion of claims asserted by citizens of the state, even though they are not recorded and were unknown to parties advancing money on mortgage of the corporate property, who acted with due diligence. Holland Trust Co. v. Taos Valley Co., 11 R. & Corp. L. J. 74. A state statute, declaring it unlawful for any foreign corporation to own or acquire property in the state, or do any business there, without first filing a copy of its charter in the office of the secretary of state, and an abstract thereof in each county in which it desires to do business (Tenn. Act, March 26, 1891), does not take it out of the power of a railroad company previously owning property, and authorized to do business in the state, to make a valid sale of all such property, without first complying with the provisions of the statute. Chattanooga, etc., R. Co. v. Evans, 66 Fed. 809, 14 C. C. A. 116.

31. Saltmarsh v. Spaulding, 147 Mass. 224, 17 N. E. 316; Union Nat. Bank v. State Nat. Bank, 155 Mo. 95, 55 S. W. 989, 78 Am. St. Rep. 560. For instance it has been held in Massachusetts that a statute of that state, providing that a corporation shall not convey or mortgage its real estate, or give a lease therefor for more than a year, unless authorized by a vote of the shareholders at a meeting called for the purpose, does not apply to foreign corporations, nor invalidate a mortgage made by a New Hampshire corporation of its lands situated in Massachusetts, where there has been no such vote of the shareholders. Saltmarsh v. Spaulding, supra. So the question whether such a mortgage was void by reason of the fact that the meeting of the directors at which it was authorized had been held, not in New Hampshire, the state of the domicile of the corporation, but in Massachusetts, the state of the situs of the land, was determined, with reference to the laws of New Hampshire and the by-laws of the corporation, in favor of the validity of the mortgage. 2. Power to Take Bequest. Subject to charter or statutory restrictions, if any,[35] a foreign corporation has the same power as a domestic corporation to take a bequest of personal property.[36] In some states restrictions are imposed by statute upon the power of a testator to make bequests to charitable or other corporations;[37] but it has been held that a statute of the state of a corporation's creation imposing such restrictions does not operate extraterritorially, so as to affect bequests to the corporation in other states in which there is no such statute,[38] or so as to affect a bequest by a resident of another state.[39]

D. Power to Act as Executor, Administrator, Guardian, or Trustee. If authorized by its charter,[40] and not prohibited by the laws or public policy of the domestic state,[41] a foreign corporation may to the same extent as a domestic

B. Particular Conditions, Restrictions, and Regulations — 1. License-Fees or Taxes. There is no prohibition in the federal constitution which operates to restrain the legislature of a state from exacting from foreign corporations, as a condition precedent to their being admitted to do business within the state, license-fees or taxes, even where they are not imposed upon similar domestic corporations, and in most jurisdictions there are statutes imposing such fees or taxes.[51] It is competent for the legislature in imposing a tax upon a foreign

In New York the statute (Laws (1896), c. 908, as amended by Laws (1901), c. 558) imposes upon foreign corporations doing business in the state a license-fee and franchise tax to be computed upon the basis of the capital stock employed by the corporation within the state; and under this statute a foreign corporation is not liable to the license-fee or tax unless it is doing business in the state and its capital or some portion thereof is employed within the state. App. Div. 545, 85 N. Y. Suppl. 849.

In Pennsylvania the statute (Act May 8, 1901, Pub. Laws 150) imposes upon foreign corporations whose principal office or chief place of business is located in the commonwealth, or which have any part of their capital employed wholly within the commonwealth, a bonus of one third of one per cent upon the amount of their capital employed or to be employed wholly within the commonwealth. This statute affects those foreign corporations only, which, after the passage of the act, locate their chief place of business or employ some part of their capital wholly within the commonwealth. impose reasonable requirements as a condition precedent to the right of the foreign corporation to do business within the domestic state or territory, and are generally held to be valid.[55]

b. A Mode of Domesticating Foreign Corporations. This is one of the modes adopted by some of the states for domesticating foreign corporations.[56] A foreign corporation cannot in general be domesticated without its consent. It cannot, for instance, be compelled to become a domestic corporation of another state by the act of its general counsel in filing its charter and by-laws with the secretary of such other state, without its knowledge or consent, his authority being limited to prosecuting and defending suits specially intrusted to him, and to the payment of taxes and license-fees, where it promptly disavows his acts and notifies the secretary of such other state, and demands the return of the papers deposited with him.[57]

c. Penalties and Disabilities For Failure to Comply With Statute. Some of the statutes under consideration not only impose penalties[58] upon the foreign corporation or its agent neglecting to comply with their provisions, but also declare that all their acts and contracts made within the state during the period of their default shall be void.[59]

d. Evidentiary Character of Certificate Filed by Corporation. It has been held that a certificate filed by a foreign corporation in the office of the secretary of state, which was a declaration of its existence as a foreign corporation, although not the strongest possible evidence of that fact, was not for that reason secondary evidence, as it did not presuppose greater evidence, but was competent as primary evidence of an admission by the corporation.[60]

3. Appointment of Agent Upon Whom Process May Be Served. A foreign corporation may be and very generally is required by the legislature of a state within which it seeks to do business to appoint a resident agent, upon whom all process may be served in suits against such corporation, and to execute and file a power of attorney in due form to that end;[61] and in default of which it will not

Non-compliance caused by act or omission of officer of domestic state.— Where a foreign corporation prior to making a contract in the state has substantially complied with the restrictive statute by obtaining a certificate of authority to do business from the state auditor, having first furnished him, as required by the statute, with a statement showing, among other things, its act of incorporation, and has filed such certificate, with a certified copy of the statement in the clerk's office of the proper county, its contracts are not rendered invalid or unenforceable because the certified copy of the statement so filed, by reason of the auditor's omission, is defective in not containing, as required by the statute, a copy of the act of incorporation filed with the auditor, since the defect is due to the auditor's act, and not to any omission of the corporation or its agents. 56. See supra, I, A, 3, b, (IV). Even if domestic corporations were entitled to such notice, the foreign corporation could not claim the right of a domestic corporation without showing compliance with the statute. be permitted to do business within the state, and any contracts which it assumes to make within the state may be voidable at least in the absence of circumstances of estoppel.[62] Many of the states have thought the matter of sufficient importance to embody in their constitutions provisions requiring foreign corporations doing business within the state to keep a known place of business and authorized resident agents therein.[63] And statutes have been enacted in affirmation of these constitutional provisions.[64] These constitutional provisions, being prohibitory, are generally held to be self-enforcing;[65] but the provision of the constitution of Arkansas was held not to be self-executing, and not operative until made effectual by an act of the legislature.[66] The agent appointed by a foreign corporation need not be invested with any of the contractual powers which the corporation is permitted to exercise, but it is sufficient if he is authorized to accept and receive service of process.[67] In some jurisdictions foreign corporations are required to file a stipulation authorizing the service of process in any action against it on the state commissioner of insurance (in the case of insurance companies) or some other public officer;[68] or it is provided that if a foreign corporation doing business in the state does not appoint an officer or agent to receive service of process, then process may be served on some designated public officer.[69]

4. Maintenance and Designation of Place of Business. In some states, by constitutional or statutory provision, foreign corporations are required, in addition to appointing a resident agent upon whom process may be served, to maintain and designate one or more known[70] places of business within the state.[71] Such a statute is complied with by designating the town, the city, or the other known place where the agent of the corporation may be found, without designating the particular store, building, or office where he may be found.[72]

5. Filing by Agent of Evidence of Authority. So much difficulty in proving the authority of agents of foreign corporations has arisen, and so many frauds upon domestic citizens have been perpetrated by such bodies by denying the authority of those who have acted in their behalf, that some of the states have enacted statutes providing, in substance, that the agents of foreign corporations, before entering upon their business as such, shall file evidence of their authority with the clerks of the counties within which they propose to do business.[73] A sensible construction placed upon such a statute was that it did not apply to a manager engaged in appointing other agents to do the business of the company.[74]

6. Taking Out License, Permit, or Certificate — a. In General. Another class of statutes requires foreign corporations, before doing business in the state, to take out a license, permit, or certificate from the secretary of state, commissioner of insurance, or other designated officer, upon the payment of a prescribed fee, usually called a franchise tax, or performance of other prescribed conditions; and a foreign corporation cannot lawfully do business in the state without a compliance with such statute.[75]

b. Evidentiary Character of Certificate or License. Under a statute providing that, if the secretary of state, commissioner of insurance, or other officer is satisfied that a foreign corporation has complied with the requirements of the laws entitling it to do business in the state, he shall issue a certificate or license stating such compliance, the certificate or license is sufficient to establish prima facie the authority of a corporation holding it to do business in the state.[76]

7. Filing Statements of Financial Condition, Amount of Capital, Etc. Some of these statutes, in addition to other requirements, prescribe that the foreign corporation shall file an annual report of its financial condition, in default of which its directors will become personally liable for its debts.[77] And in some states, before a foreign corporation, or corporation of a particular kind, can do business in the state, it is required to file a statement showing the amount of capital employed in its business or other facts as to its capital or assets and liabilities.[78]

8. Deposit of Securities, Etc. Many other statutes require that foreign corporations in order to obtain a license to do business shall deposit with the treasurer or other officer of the state securities of a given amount and description, for the protection of citizens of the state who may do business with the corporation. Such statutes are usually enacted with respect to foreign insurance companies for the protection of domestic citizens who may become their policyholders, but they sometimes apply also to other corporations, and they are valid.[79] It has been held that for a foreign saving association to make such a deposit in order to obtain the right to do business within the state is not ultra vires.[80]

9. Showing as to Assets and Subscription and Payment of Capital Stock. There are also statutes in some states requiring foreign corporations, before being entitled to do business, to show that a certain per cent of their authorized capital stock has been subscribed and paid in,[81] or to show that, in addition to their required capital, they have assets equal to their outstanding liabilities, etc.[82]

10. Prohibiting Removal of Causes or Resort to Federal Courts. A state statute cannot constitutionally prohibit a foreign corporation from removing to a federal court, as authorized by the act of congress, an action brought against it in a state court, or to require an agreement by it that it will not resort to the federal courts;[83] nor can it render an agent of a foreign corporation or the corporation itself liable civilly or criminally for violation thereof.[84] But since a state has an absolute right, without regard to its motive, to exclude a foreign corporation, a state officer cannot be compelled by mandamus to issue a permit or license to a foreign corporation to do business in the state, or be enjoined from canceling or revoking a permit or license, on the ground that the exclusion of the corporation is unconstitutional because of its refusal to comply with such an unconstitutional statute.[85]

11. Other Provisions. In some states there are other provisions than those above enumerated affecting the business of foreign corporations.[86] A state may require, and in some instances has required, the consent of the shareholders of a foreign corporation to the sale or encumbrance of its property in the state or other acts or contracts therein.[87] And in a number of states, in addition to statutory or constitutional provisions prescribing particular conditions precedent to the right of foreign corporations to do business in the state, there is a general provision to the effect that no corporation organized outside of the state shall be allowed to transact business in the state on more favorable conditions than are prescribed by law for domestic corporations; thus placing them under all regulations or restrictions imposed by law upon the latter.[88]

ing conditions or restrictions upon or regulating foreign corporations sometimes apply in terms to foreign corporations of a particular kind only, and sometimes apply to foreign corporations generally, or are general and except corporations of a particular kind.[89] In this subdivision we will consider such provisions with reference to particular corporations.[90] As a rule, where foreign corporations of a particular kind are governed by special regulations, the general law pertaining to foreign corporations is not applicable to them.[91]

2. Insurance Companies — a. In General. The business of insurance is not commerce, and a policy of insurance written by a corporation existing in one state upon property existing in another state, or upon the life of a resident of another state, is not interstate commerce.[92] It follows from this that it is competent for any state to impose such restrictions upon foreign insurance companies seeking to do business within its limits as may to its legislature seem necessary or desirable, and that if foreign insurance companies cannot do business under the restrictions, or comply with the conditions, they must keep out.[93]

b. Impairment of Rights by Subsequent Statutes. But it has been held that where a foreign insurance company has complied with all the conditions demanded by the existing state law, and has received a license to carry on its business in the state, and, under such license, has expended money in establishing agencies and in advertising and building up a business, it has acquired the same right to challenge the validity of statutes subsequently enacted impairing its business which a domestic corporation might possess.[94]

c. Minute Regulations of Insurance Companies. In some of the states the business of life insurance is minutely regulated by statute, and foreign insurance companies are not permitted to do business within the state without complying with the statutes.[95] Such is the case in Ohio. It has been held in that state that a company organized under the laws of Pennsylvania for the purpose of "insuring lives on the plan of assessment upon surviving members," without any limitation, does not come within the class of life-insurance companies provided for in section 3630 of the Revised Statutes of Ohio, which section does not embrace companies insuring the lives of members for the benefit of others than their families and heirs. A mandamus would not therefore be granted against the superintendent of insurance to compel the registration of such a foreign insurance company.[96]

d. Application of Statutes to Mutual Benefit Societies. The question has arisen in several cases, whether benevolent orders, or mutual benefit societies, which combine with social features the feature of mutual life and health insurance, are life-insurance companies within the meaning of statutes subjecting foreign insurance companies to local supervision.[97] A mutual aid association of the state of Ohio is not a foreign insurance company within the meaning of a Pennsylvania statute,[98] and is not liable to the penalty imposed by that act on foreign insurance companies for transacting business within the state without authority of law, but is within the exception of another statute[99] which divests the control of the insurance commissioner over beneficial associations.[1] A foreign

96. State v. Moore, 38 Ohio St. 7 [reaffirmed in 39 Ohio St. 486, in respect of a New York insurance company].

97. See Sims v. Com., 114 Ky. 827 24 Ky. L. Rep. 1591, 71 S. W. 929, holding that under Ky. St. § 641, declaring that the words "insurance company" or "insurance corporation" shall include any association carrying on in any manner the business of insurance, except societies which secure members through the lodge system exclusively, and employ no agents, except in the work of local subordinate lodges, a corporation which issues certificates of membership, amounting to a contract of life insurance, obtaining members through employed agents, and without their being attached to a lodge to become insured, is, although it be an assessment or co-operative insurance company, as defined by section 664, within section 633, subjecting to penalty an agent of a foreign insurance company who solicits insurance for it without first procuring a license.

98. Penn. Act, April 4, 1873.

99. Penn. Act, May 1, 1876, § 54.

1. Com. v. National Mut. Aid Assoc., 94 Pa. St. 481.

So in Ohio it was held that associations of persons incorporated under the act of April 20, 1872 (69 Ohio Laws 82), for the purpose of mutual protection and relief of its members and for the payment of stipulated sums of money to the families or heirs of deceased members, are not subject to the laws of that state relating to life-insurance companies. State v. Mutual Protection Assoc., 26 Ohio St. 19.

So in Missouri there are a number of decisions upon the question whether societies of this kind are subject to the insurance laws mutual benefit association having no "legal reserve," but merely an "emergency fund," with a reservation, in its benefit certificates, of a power to raise or lower the specified rates of assessment, has been held to be an association providing insurance "upon the assessment plan," and as such entitled to do business under the laws of Wisconsin upon complying therewith; and a peremptory mandamus was accordingly granted by the supreme court of that state to the commissioner of insurance, to compel him to grant a license to such a company.[2]

3. BANKING COMPANIES. A state may impose any conditions, restrictions, or regulations it may see fit upon the right of foreign banking corporations to carry on their business within its limits.[3] In the days of state banks of issue and of what was called "wild cat" and "red dog" money, statutes were sometimes enacted prohibiting the dealing in bank-bills issued by foreign banking corporations. The taxing clause of the National Banking Act has rendered the decisions construing these statutes obsolete, and hence they will not be examined except in so far as they refer to commercial paper other than circulating bank-notes, issued by foreign banking companies. Such a statute has been held not to avoid a promissory note executed in another state, and payable there, although the parties of the state. It was held that where one of the main objects of a corporation was to aid the families of its deceased members, the payment of a small stipend to the helpless children of a deceased member was not a violation of a provision of the charter against carrying on the business of insurance. Barbaro v. Occidental Grove No. 16, 4 Mo. App. 429. But where the main object of the corporation was to do business of insurance, and it had salaried officers, and paid commissions upon risks obtained in the course of its business, it was held that it could not evade the insurance laws by calling itself a benevolent society, and obtain a charter as such. State v. Citizens' Ben. Assoc., 6 Mo. App. 163. Similarly see State v. Merchants' Exch. Mut. Benev. Soc., 72 Mo. 146; State v. Brawner, 15 Mo. App. 597. Compare State v. Central St. Louis Masonic Hall Assoc., 14 Mo. App. 597.

Under statutes of Vermont (Vt. Rev. Laws, § 3607, as amended by Vt. Acts (1884), No. 45), a mutual or coöperative insurance association not organized under the laws of that state is not entitled to a license to transact business therein, unless it has assets to the amount of one hundred thousand dollars, and so much more as may be necessary to balance its liabilities, such liabilities to be computed and such assets to be invested as provided by the statute. Granite State Mut. Aid Assoc. v. Porter, 58 Vt. 581, 3 Atl. 545.

Corporation of District of Columbia.—That a corporation created by an act of congress "in the District of Columbia," with power to exercise all the powers incidental to "fraternal and benevolent corporations" within that district, has no inherent power to do business in a state in violation of its statutes see Layden v. Endowment Rank, K. P. of W., 128 N. C. 546, 39 S. E. 47.

What is a "banking corporation."—A foreign corporation making loans upon mortgages of real estate and pledges of its own stock is not a "banking corporation" within the meaning of a restrictive statute. Pacific Bldg. Co. v. Hill, 40 Oreg. 280, 67 Pac. 103.

That an express company doing a banking business is not within the meaning of such statutes see Wells v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 23 Fed. 469, 10 Sawy. 441.

What is a "banking" or "loan and investment" business, within the meaning of the Massachusetts act of 1889, chapter 452, prohibiting a foreign corporation from engaging in the banking or loan and investment business under a name similar to that of a domestic corporation see International Trust Co. v. International L. & T. Co., 153 Mass. 271, 26 N. E. 693, 10 L. R. A. 578.

Construction of Missouri statute excluding foreign banking and loan associations from that state see Ferguson v. Soden, 111 Mo. 208, 19 S. W. 727, 33 Am. St. Rep. 512; Long v. Long, 79 Mo. 644; Louisiana Bank v. Young, 37 Mo. 398; Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Albert, 39 Mo. 181.

Construction of early New York statutes against foreign banking corporations.—That the statute prohibited lending money upon a mortgage under the designation of the business of banking see Silver Lake Bank v. North, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 370. That an agreement to redeem notes issued in violation of the statute was void see De Groot v. Van Duzer, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 390 [reversing 17 Wend. 170]. What statutes prohibiting foreign corporations from keeping an office of discount and deposit within the state did not prohibit a single loan see Suydam v. Morris Canal, etc., Co., 6 Hill (N. Y.) 217 [affirming 5 Hill 491 note]. That it was a violation of the statute for an agent of a foreign banking company to attend, from time to time, at a place in New York to receive deposits and discount notes see Taylor v. Bruen, 2 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 301. That a national bank was within the prohibition knew that the note was to be indorsed and used in the state containing the prohibitory legislation.[4]

4. Guaranty and Surety Companies. So also, in the case of foreign guaranty and surety companies, they may be admitted, excluded, or regulated as to the legislature may seem best.[5] A constitutional provision that the exercise of police powers of the state shall never be abridged, or so construed as to permit corporations to conduct their business in such a manner as to infringe the equal rights of individuals or the general well-being of the state, is not violated by a statute authorizing a foreign, as well as a domestic guaranty company, to become surety upon bonds required to be furnished by law.[6]

5. Trust Companies. In like manner, a state may admit, exclude, or regulate foreign trust companies seeking to do business within its limits.[7] A foreign corporation which accepts and acts as trustee under a trust deed executed by a railway company, entitling the trustee in a special contingency to enter into and take possession of the railroad and all the property mortgaged, and to manage, maintain, and operate the railroad by such agents and managers as the trustee may appoint, and to collect and receive all moneys and revenues arising from such management, and to apply the same to the expenses arising in the performance of the trust, including a reasonable compensation for its services, and next to the maintenance, management, and operation of the railroad, including payment of taxes, assessments, etc., and next to the payment pro rata of the interest due and in default of the bonds secured thereby, has been held to be within the Illinois statute requiring any corporation "accepting and executing trusts" to file a list and brief description of the trusts held by the company.[8]

6. Manufacturing and Mercantile Companies — a. In General. It has repeatedly been held that a state may altogether exclude foreign manufacturing and mercantile corporations, or impose upon them such terms or restrictions as it may see fit as a condition precedent to their right to do business within its limits,[9] except that it cannot prevent or interfere with transactions constituting interstate or foreign commerce.[10]

b. Corporations Vending Patented Articles. But it has been held that exclusive rights guaranteed to inventors by the government of the United States in pursuance of acts of congress passed in conformity with the constitution cannot be impaired by the legislation of the states; and therefore that a statute imposing conditions and restrictions upon foreign corporations entering a state to do business is inoperative with respect to foreign corporations engaged exclusively in the manufacture and sale of articles covered by letters patent of the United States.[11] The rule does not apply, however, to transactions not connected with the manufacture, use, or sale of the patented article.[12]

7. Railroad and Other Transportation Companies. Railroad, express, and ferry companies, and other corporations engaged in the transportation of goods or passengers, are also subject to restriction or regulation by other states than those of their creation in which they may seek to do business,[13] subject to the rule that a state cannot interfere with interstate or foreign commerce.[14]

D. Retaliatory Statutes and Statutes of Reciprocity — 1. In General. In a number of states statutes against foreign corporations, known as "retaliatory" statutes, or as statutes of "reciprocity," have been enacted. Roughly stated, they provide that whatever restrictions, penalties, etc., are imposed by the laws of another country or state upon corporations of the domestic state doing business in such other country or state shall be imposed upon corporations of such other country or state within the domestic state.[24]

2. CONSTITUTIONALITY.[25] The constitutionality of these statutes has been upheld against the objection that they involve the passing of laws which are to take effect upon the contingency of certain legislation in other states;[26] since it is competent for the legislature of a state, in its providence, to enact statutes which become operative only upon the happening of the contingencies named therein; and although the statute may long remain dormant, yet it springs into life and becomes completely operative, as an expression of the legislative will, as soon as the contingency arises.[27] Such statutes are also upheld against the objection that they violate constitutional provisions against unequal taxation.[28]

nation, any taxes, fines, penalties, license fees, deposits of money, or of [securities], certificates or other obligations or prohibitions are imposed on insurance companies of this state, doing business in such state or nation, or upon their agents therein, so long as such laws continue in force, the same obligations and prohibitions, of whatever kind, shall be imposed upon all insurance companies of such other state or nation, doing business within this state, and upon their agents here." In a proceeding by quo warranto in Ohio to oust an insurance company, organized under the laws of Michigan from doing business on the assessment plan in Ohio, it appeared that the laws of Michigan did not permit Ohio companies to do business within that state on the same plan, and judgment of ouster was accordingly entered. State v. Western Union Mut. L. Ins. Co., 47 Ohio St. 167, 24 N. E. 392, 8 L. R. A. 129. So, it has been held under the Ohio statute (Ohio Rev. St. § 3630*e*), as amended by a later act (Ohio Act, April 18, 1883; 80 Ohio Laws 180), that the insurance commissioner of Ohio cannot be compelled by mandamus to issue his certificate of authority to do business in that state to a corporation organized under the laws of New York to insure lives on the assessment plan, where it appears that, by the laws of New York, Ohio companies, organized to do business contemplated in section 3630 of the Revised Statutes of that state, are not entitled as of right to a certificate of authority to do business therein. 3. Construction and Application of Such Statutes — a. In General. In the construction of these statutes a distinction has been taken between them and statutes of reciprocity, in that while the statutes of reciprocity are to be liberally construed, these statutes of retaliation are to be strictly construed; and it has been said that a statute of the latter kind is "not applied to a case that does not fairly fall within its letter."[29] It is merely another way of stating this principle to say that retaliatory statutes will not be enforced against a foreign corporation on the ground of alleged restrictions in the statutes of the state which created it, unless it is clearly proved that those statutes would have the restrictive effect which is claimed.[30] Upon this principle of strict construction, it has been held that a judgment of ouster, in a proceeding by quo warranto against a foreign corporation which has complied with the laws of Minnesota, will not be granted, as a measure of retaliation, upon the ground that the laws of the state where it was created would exclude corporations of Minnesota from doing business there, unless it is clearly apparent that such is the effect of the foreign law.[31] Under a statute imposing upon corporations of another state the same penalties that may be imposed by such other state upon corporations of the domestic state, a foreign corporation which has not complied with the statutes of such domestic state cannot maintain an action on a contract therein, where such is the rule in the state of the corporation's creation with respect to foreign corporations.[32]

Co., 115 Ind. 291, 17 N. E. 580; State v. Insurance Co. of North America, 115 Ind. 257, 17 N. E. 574; Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Welch, 29 Kan. 672, 678 (where Judge Brewer said: "The legislature may classify for the purpose of taxation or license, and when the classification is in its nature not arbitrary, but just and fair, there can be no constitutional objection to it. . . . Here foreign insurance corporations are classified by the states from which they come, and, when we consider the purposes of such classification, it cannot be held that there is anything arbitrary or unjust therein. But doubtless this charge is not to be considered as within the constitutional restrictions as to taxation, but rather in the nature of a license or condition of entering this state and transacting business within its limits"); People v. Philadelphia Fire Assoc., 92 N. Y. 311, 44 Am. Rep. 380. See also Goldsmith v. Home Ins. Co., 62 Ga. 379. Contra, Clark v. Mobile, 67 Ala. 217. A statute is valid which provides for a general rate of taxation to be paid by insurance companies, but which makes an exception in the case where any foreign state imposes upon insurance companies of the domestic state, doing business therein, a higher rate of taxation than is imposed by such general statute, in which case the domestic state will, by way of retaliation, impose the higher rate of taxation. When the contingency happens, the higher rate of taxation is to be imposed by the proper taxing officer of the state, and taxes collected from the foreign corporation upon the basis of such higher rate cannot be recovered back in an action against the taxing officer. Home Ins. Co. v. Swigert, 104 Ill. 653. Nor is a statute which lays a uniform rate of taxation upon foreign insurance companies, except those organized in a state which imposes a higher rate of taxation upon similar corporations organized in the domestic state, and which provides that, in respect of the corporations of such foreign state, the same rate of taxation shall be imposed which such state imposes upon the corporations of the domestic state, unconstitutional on the ground that it imposes different rates of taxation upon different corporations of the same class, and thereby violates the constitutional mandate that taxes shall be uniform. It is not, for instance, in violation of a constitutional provision (Ill. Const. art. 9, § 1) which empowers the legislature to lay certain taxes "in such manner as it shall, from time to time, direct by general law, uniform as to the class upon which it operates." In respect of the difference between a reciprocal and a retaliatory statute, the statute hereinbefore quoted (see supra, note 24) was held to be a statute of the latter kind, the court saying: "Reciprocity expresses the act of an interchange of favors between persons or nations; retaliation, that of returning evil for evil, or disfavors for disfavors. Accurately speaking, we reciprocate favors and retaliate disfavors. This then is a retaliatory statute. It treats the companies of other states as Ohio companies are treated in those states; but the moment it is made to appear that Ohio companies are not treated with the same favor in another state, that companies of that state are treated in Ohio, a case is made for the application of its provisions, and retaliation follows as a result." b. Condition of Law of Foreign State Must Be Judicially Ascertained. The foregoing statement implies that when it is sought to enforce a retaliatory statute, the condition of the law of the foreign state, against whose citizen it is sought to enforce it, must be ascertained by an inquiry in court either by the judge or by a jury; although this involves the incongruity of the statute being in force or not in force according to the ascertainment of a fact in pais.[33]

c. What Must Appear to Give Effect to Such a Statute. Upon the same principle, it has been held that to make a case for the application of such statutes it must be made to appear that a company has been formed in the domestic state to do substantially the same kind and line of business as the foreign corporation which it is sought to oust of the exercise of its franchises within the domestic state, and that such domestic corporation would, by the laws of the foreign state, be precluded from transacting the same business therein, or be subjected to burdens not imposed by the laws of the domestic state on such foreign corporation.[34] So it is held in other courts that the contingency which renders these retaliatory statutes operative arises when the laws of another state impose the additional burdens and conditions upon corporations of the state enacting the statute, and it is not delayed until some corporation of the domestic state is actually subjected to such burdens and conditions,[35] or actually establishes an agency there.[36]

E. What Constitutes a Doing, Transacting, or Carrying on of Business — 1. Introductory Statement. Many of the constitutional provisions and statutes under consideration prohibit foreign corporations from doing or carrying on business within the state unless they have previously complied with the conditions therein named, so that the statute or constitution does not apply unless the corporation engages in business within the state;[37] and the question constantly arises under them, what constitutes a doing, transacting, or carrying on of business, within their meaning.

2. Statutory Definition. A definition, in an act relating to the service of

35. Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Welch, 29 Kan. 672. Where the retaliatory statute provided that, "when, by the laws of any other state, any taxes, fines, penalties, licenses, fees, deposits of moneys or of securities, or other obligations or prohibitions, are imposed or would be imposed, on insurance companies of this state, doing, or that might seek to do, business in such other state, or upon their agents therein, so long as such laws continue in force, the same obligations and prohibitions, of whatever kind, shall be imposed upon all insurance companies of such other state, doing business within this state, or upon their agents here" (Iowa Code, § 1154), it was held that an insurance company organized in the state of New York, with power to make several different kinds of insurance, could not do business in Iowa, and would be ousted of its privilege of so doing by quo warranto, where it appeared that an Iowa company would not be permitted, in New York, to make more than one line of insurance; and this although no Iowa company may have attempted to make more than one line of insurance in the state of New York. "It is not important nor necessary," said the court, "to the existence of the law here that an Iowa company should go to New York to test the sincerity of the people in the enforcement of her law; nor is such a step necessary to the enforcement of the law in this state. A spirit of comity between the states should induce a belief that their laws are made in good faith, and for observance. The sting of the adder may be necessary in some cases, to avoid encroachments, but such necessity is not the result of a law or rule of action." State v. New York Fidelity, etc., Co., 77 Iowa 648, 653, 42 N. W. 509. That the New York statutory provision that where any other state shall impose any obligation on New York corporations doing business in such other state, the like obligations are imposed on similar corporations of such other state transacting business in New York, applies only to obligations, and not to prohibitions or limitations upon the powers of such corporations, such as a denial of the right to insure persons over sixty years old see Griesa v. Massachusetts Ben. 3. Isolated Transactions — a. General Rule. The general conclusion of the courts is that isolated transactions, commercial or otherwise, taking place between a foreign corporation domiciled in one state and citizens of another state, are not a doing or carrying on of business by the foreign corporation within the latter state, even, according to the weight of authority, where the transaction is of such a character as to constitute a part of the ordinary business of the corporation.[40]

where the constitutional and statutory provision is against doing "any" business in the state without complying with the specified conditions, it has been held that the doing of a single act of business, if it be in the exercise of the regular business of the corporation, is as much prohibited as the doing of a hundred such acts, and is just as much opposed to the policy of the constitution and statute, which is to protect the domestic citizens against the fraud and imposition of insolvent and unreliable corporations, and to place them in an attitude to be reached by legal process in the domestic courts, in the event of any existing necessity to bring suit against them to vindicate a legal right, or to contest the validity of any contract made by or with them. The making of a single loan secured by mortgage, by a corporation which has not complied with the conditions, has therefore been held to be within the prohibition, in such a sense that an action to foreclose the mortgage cannot be maintained in the domestic courts.[60] And the same is true, according to this view, of any other isolated contract in the course of a foreign corporation's ordinary business.[61]

4. Statutes Aimed at Entering State by Agents and Carrying on General Business. under an agreement that all goods, so long as unsold, remain the property of the corporation, and that the proceeds of the sales also become the exclusive property of the corporation, then manifestly the corporation has established an agency within the state for the sale of its goods and is doing business within the state within the meaning of such a statute.[69] And so where the foreign corporation appoints a local agent within the prohibiting state and consigns its goods to him in carload lots, for sale on commission.[70] But where an agent is employed by a foreign corporation in a state having such a restrictive statute, to solicit orders and make estimates of material to be furnished therefor, receiving payment by way of commissions on orders sent by him to the corporation, or otherwise, such orders being subject to acceptance by the corporation, and being filled by direct shipment from the home office to the customer, the corporation is not deemed to be doing business within the restricting state, within the meaning of such a statutory prohibition.[71] The same has been held with respect to sales of goods shipped by a foreign corporation into the domestic state, to be there sold on commission.[72] Purchasing of goods within a state by a foreign corporation through an agent resident therein, the goods to be shipped to the corporation out of the state, has been held to be a doing of business in the state.[73]

of the statute would be inadmissible in so far as state statutes are concerned, because, so applied, it would have the effect of imposing a restraint upon commerce between the states or with foreign countries.[75] The same rule applies to the purchase of goods by an agent to be shipped out of the restricting state.[76]

7. Foreign Corporation Acting as Trustee. 9. Various Other Transactions Held Not to Be a Doing of Business. On the other hand the following transactions have been held not to be the doing of business within the state enacting such a restricting statute: For a company organized for the purpose of mining coal and manufacturing coke and selling the same, after having ceased its mining and manufacturing before the passage of the restrictive act, to continue to own and rent its coal lands situated within the restricting state, for agricultural purposes;[89] for a foreign corporation to purchase shares of the stock of a domestic corporation domiciled in a state having such a restrictive statute and voting upon the same for directors at a corporate meeting;[90] for a foreign corporation to enter into an executory agreement for the future construction of a street railway in the restricting state;[91] and the like.[92]

F. Statutes Do Not Restrain General Freedom of Contract. From the foregoing it may be concluded that such prohibitions do not restrain foreign corporations from exercising the general right to make contracts within the domestic states. In other words, the mere fact that a foreign corporation without complying with such a statute makes a contract with a domestic citizen, or takes a contract from him, is not unlawful, but the contract may be enforced in a judicial proceeding.[93]

G. Statutes Not Allowed to Restrict Interstate or Foreign Commerce. Nor are they allowed to restrict the ordinary operations of commerce, although conducted by corporations, across the boundary lines of the states of the Union or between the states and a foreign country; because, to give them this effect, would bring them into conflict with the settled interpretation put upon the commerce clause of the federal constitution.[94] Therefore a foreign corporation may advertise its goods, take orders for them, make contracts of sale, and ship its goods to customers within a state having such a statutory restraint or prohibition without complying with such statute.[95] The same is true of course of other

H. Statutes Do Not Generally Apply to Contracts Made Outside the State — 1. In General. Such statutes are not generally allowed to operate so as to impose any restraint upon the making and taking of contracts the situs of which is outside the state enacting the statute; and this for two reasons: (1) To allow them to have such an operation would give them an extraterritorial effect beyond the limits of the principle of interstate comity; and (2) it would also, in most cases, interfere with the operations of interstate commerce.[97]

2. Sales of Goods. The most familiar illustration of the preceding doctrine arises in the case where goods are sold by a foreign corporation in the state of its own domicile, or in some state other than the state having the restrictive statute, and are shipped into the restricting state and there delivered to its customer, whether the sale be made by correspondence, or through local agents or traveling salesmen. Here the transaction is valid, although the foreign corporation has not complied with the prohibitory statute.[98]

3. Insurance — a. Contracts the Situs of Which Is the Domicile of the Company. Here, as in other cases,[99] the distinction is between the case where the company procures a risk within the foreign state by its own affirmative action, or where it allows some broker to procure a risk for it for his own pecuniary gain, and the case where a resident of a foreign state, of his own mere volition, solicits the writing of a policy upon his life or property. In such a case the situs of the contract is the state of the residence of the insurance company, and not the state of the residence of the insured.[1] But, without reference to the theoretical question of the situs of the contract, it has been reasonably concluded that a restrictive statute against foreign insurance companies, such as those under consideration, was not designed to prevent the citizens of the state from going out of the state to procure insurance on their property, if they should see fit, but was designed merely to prevent irresponsible and insolvent insurance companies from invading the state with their solicitors and defrauding its citizens.[2] On the other hand, for a foreign corporation to come into the domestic state, where there is such a restrictive statute, and to take out a fire-insurance policy on its plant and material

Contra.— In Pennsylvania it has been held, contrary to the decisions in other states, that a contract of insurance on property in that state with a foreign insurance company, irrespective of where the contract is made, is illegal as an attempt to do business in violation of the statute of that state. It was conceded in a New Jersey case that it might be competent for the state, by its legislation, to invalidate, in its own courts, an insurance contract, made in good faith in another state, on property located within the domestic state; but it was reasoned that it would be so contrary to the comity which should be observed between the states, that such an intention would not be imputed to the legislature, in the absence of language which would bear no other interpretation. Columbia F. Ins. Co. v. Kinyon, 37 N. J. L. 33.

Situs of contract see infra, IV, K, 2.

2. Clay F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Huron Salt, etc., Mfg. Co., 31 Mich. 346. So in effect is Columbia F. Ins. Co. v. Kinyon, 37 N. J. L. 33. But it is not a sound conclusion, as held in the federal case next cited, or in accordance with the weight of authority, that where the foreign insurance company has an agency in another state, and has not complied with the restrictive statutes of such other state, and its agent in that state has received an application and premium note, and transmitted them to the home office, where they have been accepted, and a policy has been written out and returned, this policy is valid, although the agent within through brokers in such state, is not a doing of business within such state within the meaning of the statute.[3]

b. Establishing Agency and Doing Business Within the State. The distinction lies between writing a single policy on property situated within another state, and procuring risks through an agency established there. This is doing business within the latter state in violation of the statute.[4]

c. Withdrawing From State, But Collecting Premiums and Paying Losses. A foreign insurance company which assumes to withdraw from a state in which it has been issuing policies, and thereafter refuses to take any new risks or issue any new policies therein, but continues to collect premiums on its outstanding policies and to pay losses arising thereunder, has been held to be still doing business within the state within the meaning of a statute respecting service of process upon an agent.[5]

4. Loans and Mortgages. On the same principle statutes of the kind under consideration do not operate to prohibit loans made by foreign building and loan associations to domestic citizens, where the contract is made and is to be performed in the state of the domicile of the association.[6] But where a foreign building and loan association establishes an agency within the state enacting the restrictive statute, for the purpose of securing applications for its loans, or, it has been held, sends an agent into the state to solicit applications for loans, then it is deemed to be doing business within the state, within the meaning of such a statute.[7] The transactions of what are called mortgage loan companies and of the like corporations rest on substantially the same grounds, with respect to this question, as the transactions of building and loan associations. It has been held that a mortgage loan company, which makes its securities payable at a designated agency in another state, which pays them there, which appoints a trustee resident the foreign state has not complied with its statutes. Lamb v. Bowser, 14 Fed. Cas. No. 8,008, 7 Biss. 315 [affirmed in 14 Fed. Cas. No. 8,009, 7 Biss. 372].

On the other hand, it has been held, but with doubtful propriety, that a contract of insurance upon property within the state containing the restrictive statute, made with a foreign insurance company, is an attempt to do business, and is hence within the prohibition of the state no matter where the contract was made. I. Assignments For Creditors, Confessions of Judgment, Prosecution and Defense of Suits, Settling Accounts, Etc. The doing of matters of which the ordinary business of a foreign corporation does not consist, but which it does in the exercise of its general rights for the purposes of its safety, or in order to do justice to its creditors, or to comply with some other provision of the local law, are not the "doing of business" within a state, within the meaning of statutes like those under consideration; but under a sound interpretation of such statutes, the doing of business consists only of carrying on the operations of its trade for the making of profit.[10] It is accordingly held that there is no doing of business in the state, within the meaning of such statutes, where foreign corporations make an assignment of their property for the benefit of their creditors,[11] or confess a judgment in favor of a particular creditor,[12] or where they merely commence and prosecute or defend suits in the state.[13] It has also been held that

J. Retroactive Effect of Such Statutes — 1. In General. Statutes excluding or imposing conditions or restrictions upon foreign corporations have been held to apply to corporations doing business in the state at the time of their passage as well as to those subsequently coming into the state, even though they use the words "seeking to do business" in the state;[19] and such construction of a statute does not render it unconstitutional.[20] But where such a statute, after enacting that a failure to comply with the stated conditions should subject the foreign corporation to a fine, declared, in addition, that "on and after the going into effect of this act," no foreign corporation which shall fail to comply with the act can maintain any suit in any of the courts of this state, it was held that the act took effect only on causes of actions and demands arising after its passage, and did not prevent the foreign corporation from enforcing a mortgage executed to it prior to its enactment.[21] So a similar statute in other states has been held not to apply to the contracts of foreign corporations made before its passage.[22] So, under a statute requiring foreign corporations to procure a certificate of authority to do business within the state, and providing that no such corporation, doing business in the state, shall do business after a specified date without having procured such certificate, but that any lawful contract previously made by it may be performed and enforced within the state subsequently to such date, such a corporation may maintain an action after the date named in the statute on a contract and notes made while it had a right to carry on business in the state without such certificate.[23] From these and other decisions it may be concluded that the mere collection of a debt due to a foreign corporation on a contract made before the passage of such a retroactive statute is not affected by the statute, since to give it such an effect would impair the obligation of the contract.[24]

2. Effect Upon Continuing Contracts Already Entered Into. Aside from any question as to constitutionality, these statutes, unless their language requires a different construction, are generally held to be prospective only, so as not to apply to a continuing contract previously entered into between the foreign corporation and a domestic citizen.[25] On the contrary, it has been held that it is no defense to the prosecution by the state of a foreign corporation for carrying on business in the state without filing the statement required by a statute that the corporation filed the required statement before delivering the goods which it had sold, since the execution of the contract of sale constituted the carrying on of busi-

Penalty for continuing business.— That the failure of a foreign insurance corporation already doing business in a state to comply with such a statute will render it liable to the penalty imposed by the act for continuing to do business, at the suit of one holding a policy issued before passage of the act, was held in Sandel v. Atlanta Mut. ness within the state.[26] In line with this doctrine is a holding to the effect that a statute which provides that a foreign corporation doing business in the state without first complying therewith cannot maintain an action on any contract or demand growing out of such unlawful business, a compliance after the making of such contract, or after the commencement of an action thereon, will not remove the bar of the statute and enable the action to proceed.[27] But it is to be kept in mind that this is not the doctrine of all the courts.[28]

K. Enforcing Statutes by Penalties Against Agents. Where it is competent for the legislature of a state to forbid the doing of a certain act on the part of a corporation, it can enforce its laws by imposing a penalty on the agents of the corporation who commit the act.[29]

L. Protection and Discrimination in Favor of Domestic Creditors or Shareholders — 1. In General. A state may, subject to constitutional limitations, enact statutes for the protection of domestic creditors of foreign corporations doing business in the state;[30] but it cannot constitutionally discriminate in favor of domestic creditors as against creditors who are citizens of other states, with respect to distribution of the assets of a foreign corporation within the state, or otherwise.[31] A state, however, may require a foreign corporation seeking to Defense in action by corporation for breach. — Where a state statute prohibited any foreign corporation from transacting any business in the state without first complying with its requirements as to filing a copy of its charter, etc., and further provided that any contract made by such a corporation affecting its personal liability or relating to property in the state before compliance should be wholly void on its behalf, but enforceable against it, and after the enactment of such statute, but before it went into effect by its terms, a foreign corporation entered into an executory contract to be performed within the state, it was held that the statute, on taking effect, became applicable to anything done or to be done under the contract by such corporation thereafter, and constituted a defense to an action by the corporation for a breach of the contract by the other party by refusing to continue operations under it, such corporation having failed to comply with the requirements of the statute. Construction of statute. — The statute of South Carolina (21 St. at L. p. 409), declaring the terms on which foreign corporations may do business and own property in that state, and providing that a court of compe-

do business therein to make a deposit in trust for the protection and benefit of its citizens as against non-resident creditors and shareholders.[32]

2. Prohibition Against Mortgaging Property to Injury of Domestic Citizens. Statutes have been enacted providing that no foreign corporation shall mortgage or encumber its property to the injury or exclusion of any citizen of the state. Under such a statute it has been held that a foreign corporation cannot encumber its property to the exclusion of demands of the citizens of the state, although such demands are not of record and are unknown to the parties advancing money on the mortgage of the corporate property, and although such parties have acted with due diligence.[33] Upon the question what is an "injury" to a citizen of the state, within the meaning of such a statute, it has been held that a mortgage executed by a foreign corporation to secure notes given to a citizen of the state and to non-residents respectively is not an injury to the domestic citizen.[34]

M. Selling Intoxicating Liquors. A foreign corporation permitted by its own charter to sell intoxicating liquors may be licensed to transact such business in Massachusetts.[35]

N. Inspection of Books and Records. As has been shown, where a foreign corporation fails to keep its books within the state, as required by the constitution, and there is no officer having control of such books within the reach of the process of the state, a mandamus will not issue commanding inspection; but where there are books within the state, in the custody of an agent of such corporation, it may be compelled to allow a shareholder, whether resident or non-resident, to inspect the same and make copies.[36] This subject is very commonly regulated by statute.[37] Under the applicatory statute of New York a shareholder of a foreign corporation which has a transfer agent in the state for the transaction of business in the state, but which does not keep therein the stock-book required by law, is entitled to inspect the books kept by the transfer agent, and by the register of transfers of stock, containing some or most of the information which would be shown by the stock-book if kept; since the books may be considered as books kept by the corporation.[38] The shareholder may also inspect any papers officially kept by the secretary and treasurer of the corporation, in its New York office, from which he can obtain similar information.[39] The statute above referred to gives a penalty against the officer refusing the inspection, of two hundred and fifty dollars "for any refusal" to be recovered by the person to whom such refusal was made.[40] Under this statute the shareholder may recover the prescribed penalty for each day during which his right of inspection is denied.[41] Interest will not be allowed on the penalties recovered.[42] The officers of the corporation as well as the corporation itself are subject to the statutory penalty, although no duty to disclose the books is expressly imposed on the officers by the statute.[43]

37. Under the New York statute (Laws (1892), c. 688, § 53, as amended by Laws (1897), c. 384, § 3), requiring foreign corporations having an office for the transaction of business in the state to keep a stock-book open for shareholders' inspection during business hours, a corporation which maintains in the state an office or agency for the transfer of stock is maintaining an office for the transaction of business, and it may be compelled by mandamus to deposit and exhibit its stock-book at such office. People v. Montreal, etc., Copper Co., 40 Misc. 282, 81

O. Devices to Evade Statutes. The courts have several times had to deal with ingenious devices invented to evade the requirements of these statutes. One of these was to procure a domestic charter; but this ingenious scheme did not work, because there was no proof that the corporation had ever organized or acted in any way under the domestic charter, and the contract which it sought to enforce purported, on its face, to be executed in its favor as a foreign corporation.[44] Another, which turned out to be equally futile, sought to make a good mortgage for the benefit of a foreign corporation not authorized to do business in the state, by giving it to a trustee who was a resident of the state.[45] Another sought to evade the effect of a statute providing that all contracts entered into by foreign corporations without the payment of a prescribed franchise fee should be wholly void, by the device of having all the shareholders of the corporation execute the contract by acting together as individuals; but it was held that this would not work, because what the law forbade the corporation to do all its members could not do for it.[46]

N. Y. Suppl. 974. Refusal to permit a shareholder to inspect the stock-book of a foreign corporation is sufficiently established where it is shown that he has made repeated demands for inspection and that those in charge of the office have for a month met such demands with evasive answer. 40. In an action to recover such a penalty, the secretary of the corporation testified that he told plaintiff that the corporation had an office at the place alleged in plaintiff's complaint, and that the books were there; that the company had no other office, and that all the business was transacted there, which testimony was corroborated by defendant's attorney. It was held that, although the company had no considerable amount of business to transact, the evidence was sufficient to show that the company had an office in the state for such business, within the meaning of the statute. Cox v. Island Min. Co., 65 N. Y. App. Div. 508, 73 N. Y. Suppl. 69. In an action under the statute to recover the penalty for violation thereof, the complaint is fatally defective if it does not bring defendant within the statute by alleging that it was a stock corporation, and that it was not a moneyed or railroad corporation. P. Revocation of License or Permit. Subject to the qualification that a state cannot pass laws impairing the obligation of contracts[47] and other constitutional limitations,[48] a state which has licensed a foreign corporation to do business within its limits may revoke such license at any time, or may authorize such revocation by the secretary of state, commissioner of insurance, or other public officer.[49]

Q. Mandamus to Compel Filing of Charter, Etc., or Issue of License, Etc. If the secretary of state, superintendent of insurance, or other proper officer, refuses to file the charter, certificate of incorporation, articles of incorporation, etc., in compliance with the statute regulating the business of foreign corporations within the state, or to issue a certificate or permit to do business, when a foreign corporation is entitled thereto, then, according to the weight of judicial opinion, the foreign corporation may have a writ of mandamus compelling him to do so;[50] but not where the corporation is organized for purposes not contemplated by the statute and consequently is not included within the statutory license,[51] or where it has not complied with the statute.[52] Nor will the writ lie where the statute gives the superintendent of insurance, secretary of state, or other officer, discretionary power in the matter, so that his determination is final.[53]

R. Injunction Against Revocation of License or Permit. If the secretary of state, superintendent of insurance, or other officer attempts to revoke the license or permit of a foreign corporation which has fully complied with the laws of the state and is entitled to do business therein, the corporation may maintain a suit to enjoin his threatened action.[54]

S. Proceedings to Oust or Exclude Corporations — 1. Quo Warranto. A foreign corporation exercising its franchises within a state, in contravention of the constitution or laws of such state, or without authority therefrom or thereunder, may be ousted from such exercise of its franchises and privileges by a proceeding in the nature of an information for a writ of quo warranto.[55] It may, for example, be ousted for violating the statute law of the state against monopolistic combinations called trusts;[56] and it cannot set up as a defense to the proceeding that it is not bound by the acts of its agents because they involve a criminal responsibility in addition to civil liability.[57] In such a case the judgment of ouster may properly provide that it shall not so operate as to interfere with the right of the foreign corporation in dealing in matters of interstate commerce; since the statute against monopolies does not undertake in any way to regulate or prohibit the transactions of interstate commerce.[58] In such a case it is not essential that there should have been an antecedent conviction in a court of law, in order to the maintenance of quo warranto proceedings or a bill to restrain a foreign corporation from doing business in the state, where the penalties imposed by the statute are independent.[59] Where the ground of the proceeding by the state is that the foreign corporation is exercising its franchises and privileges within the state without authority of law, the corporation cannot set up as a defense a license from an officer of the state, since that may have been issued without authority of law.[60] Where a foreign corporation had failed to qualify itself under the domestic statutes to exercise its corporate functions in the domestic state, under an honest belief that it was not necessary to do so because of the relation which the foreign corporation sustained to a domestic corporation, an unconditional judgment of ouster was not granted.[61]

2. Injunction.[62] A foreign corporation which assumes to enter the domestic state and establish itself and do business there, without complying with the conditions imposed by its statute law, presents the case of a continuing public nuisance which may be restrained by an injunction.[63] Such an injunction will not be granted upon slight evidence of special injury, at the instance of a rival foreign corporation which has complied with such laws.[64] The resident agent of the foreign corporation is a proper if not a necessary party to such a bill, although the only personal remedy provided by the statute against the agent is a criminal prosecution.[65] Where a foreign corporation has complied with the law and received permission to do business in the state, it cannot be enjoined at the suit of the state from performing contracts made before such permission was obtained.[66]

IV. Consequences of Violating Constitutional or Statutory Conditions or Restrictions.

A. Introductory Statement. There is some actual conflict in the decisions as to the effect of failure of a foreign corporation to comply with constitutional or statutory provisions imposing conditions or restrictions upon the right to do business in a state;[67] but more frequently the decisions are only apparently in conflict because of a difference in the language of the statutory or constitutional provisions on which they are based.[68] Some questions which might properly be also classified under this subdivision have already been considered.[69] Before going more specifically into the question as to the effect of failure of a foreign corporation to comply with constitutional or statutory restrictions or conditions, it may be stated that such compliance will be presumed in the absence of evidence to the contrary,[70] and that an action by a foreign corporation will not be dismissed because of failure to comply technically with the statute, where there has been a substantial and honest compliance as far as possible.[71] Failure of a foreign corporation to obtain a license or certificate before doing business in the state, as required by a statute providing as a penalty that it shall not maintain an action in the state on a contract made therein before procuring such license or certificate, does not make it a trespasser in using a highway in the state, so as to affect the questions of negligence and contributory negligence in an action against it for damages caused by a collision between its vehicle and that of plaintiff.[72]

B. Right of Foreign Corporations to Enforce Contracts — 1. In General. Upon the question whether the failure of a foreign corporation to comply with restrictive statutes, such as those under consideration, before undertaking to do business in the domestic state, will render its contracts, made with the citizens of that state, void or voidable, the decisions are in a state of irreconcilable contradiction.[73]

2. Contracts Void and Unenforceable — a. In General. A numerous class of holdings are to the effect that where a statute of a state provides that foreign business in the state in violation of its provisions.[75] According to this doctrine one who is sued by a foreign corporation on a contract entered into by it without having complied with the statute is not estopped to set up such non-compliance as a defense.[76] Sometimes the statute applies in terms to contracts of a foreign corporation with citizens only, and does not render void or unenforceable contracts between foreign corporations and persons who are not citizens of the state.[77]

b. Especially Where No Specific Penalty Is Prescribed. The above conclusion is regarded as clear in some jurisdictions where the prohibition of the statute is not accompanied with any specific penalty; since in such cases this is the only effective way by which the prohibition can be enforced.[78]

Evasion of statute see supra, III, O.

Doctrine that such a contract is void even when questioned collaterally.— One court has held that the contracts of foreign corporations which have not complied with the conditions of the domestic state prescribing the terms on which they may come into the state and do business are void even when questioned collaterally. Rising Sun Ins. Co. v. Slaughter, 20 Ind. 520. But this seems to be a plain aberration.

Non-compliance with the statute not due to any omission of the corporation, but to the act or omission of the officers of the domestic state, does not render the corporation's contracts unenforceable. American Ins. Co. v. Butler, 70 Ind. 1. See supra, III, B, 2, a, text and note 54.

New contract after compliance with law.— It has been held that where a mortgage taken by a foreign corporation is void because at the time it was taken the corporation had not complied with the statute so as to be qualified to do business in the state, a subsequent mortgage, taken after the corporation has qualified to do business in the state, for the secret purpose of validating the first, but on pretense of making concessions to the mortgagor, is likewise void, as being without consideration and obtained under a false pretense. Gilmer v. U. S. Sav., etc., Co., 103 Tenn. 272, 52 S. W. 851.

c. Contracts Expressly Declared Void or Unenforceable. If, as is sometimes the case, the statute expressly declares that all contracts of a foreign corporation in violation thereof shall be void, or that no action shall be maintained thereon, then of course there is no doubt as to the intention of the legislature and there can be no recovery thereon by the corporation.[79]

d. Recovery by Other Party of What He Has Advanced Under Contract. One court has held that, where a life-insurance company, created and existing under the laws of another state, has assumed to do business and write policies upon lives within the state of the forum, one whose life has been thus insured by it may, a year and a half after accepting the policy, elect to treat the contract as void and maintain an action to recover back the cash premium paid thereon, and this without any abatement representing the value accruing to the beneficiary in the policy in that he was lawfully insured during the period named.[80]

e. Defense by Other Party So Far as Contract Is Unexecuted on His Part. Another class of cases is to the effect that contracts made under the circumstances which we have under consideration are voidable at the election of the domestic citizen in such a sense that he can elect to treat the contract as void whenever an action is brought against him by the foreign corporation to enforce it, and that he can successfully defend against such an action by merely pleading and proving the failure of the foreign corporation, prior to making the contract with him, to comply with the laws of the state entitling it to do business therein.[81]

f. Contracts Void, Although Individuals Are Joined With the Corporation. Contracts entered into with foreign corporations doing business in the domestic state in violation of such a restrictive statute are void, although individuals are joined with the corporation as copartners.[82]

g. Illustrations of This Doctrine — (i) IN GENERAL. The cases in which the courts have applied this doctrine that contracts of foreign corporations in violation of the constitutional or statutory provisions under consideration are void and

The governing principle of the text is more or less discussed in the following cases: Hyde v. Goodnow, 3 N. Y. 266; Huntley v. Merrill, 32 Barb. (N. Y.) 626; People v. Imlay, 20 Barb. (N. There is an analogous decision to the effect that a foreign corporation keeping an office in New York, of discount and deposit, when prohibited by statute to do so, cannot maintain an action for money loaned on a note or other security taken on such loan, or on a count for money lent. New Hope Delaware Bridge Co. v. Poughkeepsie Silk Co., 25 Wend. (N. Y.) 648. Another decision is to the effect that a statute providing that if a foreign corporation do any act forbidden by the laws of the state to be done by a home corporation "it shall not be authorized to maintain any action founded on such act," merely debars it from maintaining any action on a contract prohibited to domestic corporations, but leaves the contract good for other purposes. 82. Harris v. Columbia Water, etc., Co., 108 Tenn. 245, 67 S. W. 811; Ashland Lumber Co. v. Detroit Salt Co., 114 Wis. 66, 89 N. W. 904, both holding that a partnership composed of two individuals and a foreign corporation which has not registered its charter in the state as required by a statute or otherwise failed to comply with the local not enforceable by the corporation cover all executory contracts without regard to the subject-matter. For example, foreign corporations have, under this doctrine, been denied the right to recover for the price of goods sold or for breach of a contract of sale,[83] for the furnishing of material and labor and construction of an electric railway,[84] upon a subscription to a fund for building a butter factory,[85] or a subscription to stock,[86] and the like.[87]

(II) Premium Notes, Etc., of Insurance Companies. A large number of these cases hold that foreign insurance companies, which have not complied with such local statutes, cannot maintain actions against domestic citizens upon what are called premium notes, that is to say, upon notes given for the settlement, in whole or in part, of amounts agreed to be paid for insurance, fire or life; or on notes given by the members of mutual insurance companies to make up the joint fund upon which they do business, whereby their members stand as the insurers of each other, and other like contracts.[88]

(III) Recovery by Insurance Companies of Assessments From Members. On the same ground it has been held that a foreign insurance company, not having complied with such a domestic statute, cannot recover an assessment made against a member who is a citizen of the domestic state.[89]

(iv) Loans and Mortgages. Another class of decisions illustrating the proposition[90] that the domestic citizen may treat such contracts as void when he is sued by the foreign corporation thereon is found in cases where foreign corporations, including foreign building and loan associations and mortgage loan companies, without having so complied with domestic statutes as to entitle them to do business within the domestic state, have loaned money to citizens of such state upon mortgages of their property situated therein, or where foreign corporations have sold goods to them on credit and taken security in the form of such mortgages, in which cases these decisions allow the domestic citizen, when an action is brought by the foreign corporation against him to foreclose the mortgage, to set up as a defense the fact that the contract was void because the corporation had not complied with the statute.[91] It has also been held that where a citizen has given a foreign corporation a bond and mortgage which are void because of the corporation's failure to comply with the statute, he may maintain a bill in equity to cancel the same.[92]

h. Compliance With Statute After Making of Contract. Where a contract entered into by a foreign corporation is void and unenforceable by the corporation, either by express provision of the statute or under the construction placed upon it by the courts in the particular jurisdiction, because of the corporation's failure to comply with the statutory requirements before entering into the contract, its subsequent compliance with the statute will not enable it to maintain an action thereon.[93] The rule is otherwise, however, under statutes merely suspending the remedy of the corporation on contracts until it complies therewith, or merely prohibiting actions on contracts before such compliance.[94]

i. Enforcing Contracts in Other States. It has been held that where a foreign corporation enters into a contract in a state in violation of its statutes, and the contract is void and unenforceable by the corporation in that state, the courts of another state will not enforce the same.[95] But it has been held that this rule does not apply where the statutes of the state in which the contract was made do not make the contract void, but merely deny the corporation the right to maintain an action thereon, since the provision that a foreign corporation, not having complied with the laws of the state, cannot sue therein, has no extraterritorial operation, and the doctrine of comity does not require recognition of such provision in another state.[96] In determining the application and effect of the statutes of a state on a contract made therein by a foreign corporation, the construction placed upon the statutes by the courts of such state will be followed by the courts of other states.[97]

Dec. 663 (contract made by an Ohio corporation in Indiana without compliance with the statutes, and action thereon brought in Kentucky); Allegheny Co. v. Allen, 69 N. J. L. 270, 55 Atl. 724 (contract made by a foreign corporation in Pennsylvania without compliance with its laws, and action brought thereon in New Jersey).

j. Effect of Retaliatory Statute. Where, in addition to a statute requiring a foreign corporation to procure a certificate or permit before doing business in the state, there is a retaliatory provision[98] that when another state imposes any greater penalties on corporations of the state enacting the statute than the laws of such state impose upon corporations of such other state, the same penalties shall be imposed upon corporations of such other state doing business in the enacting state, a contract of a foreign corporation in the enacting state, without procuring a certificate or permit, is void and unenforceable by it, where such a contract by a foreign corporation in the state of the corporation's domicile, without compliance with the laws thereof, would, under the decisions of such state, be void and unenforceable.[99]

3. Contracts Not Void or Unenforceable — a. In General. Contrary to the foregoing, there is a numerous class of decisions to the effect that the failure of a foreign corporation to comply with the domestic statutes prescribing the conditions upon which it shall be permitted to do business within the state does not render its contracts made therein void and non-enforceable, or prevent it from maintaining an action against the domestic citizen thereon.[1] Sometimes the

96. Allegheny Co. v. Allen, 69 N. J. L. 270, 55 Atl. 724, holding that a foreign corporation could maintain an action in New Jersey on a contract made by it in New York without having procured the certificate required by N. Y. Laws (1892), p. 1805, c. 687, § 15, providing that no foreign corporation shall do business in New York without first having obtained the certificate required by the act, and that no foreign corporation doing business in the state shall maintain any action on a contract made in the state, unless prior to the making thereof it shall have procured such a certificate. The court held that the only penalty prescribed by the act is a denial of the right to maintain an action thereon in that state, which does not attach to the contract so as to deprive it of a suable quality in another state.

97. Allegheny Co. v. Allen, 69 N. J. L. 270, 55 Atl. 724. As the Pennsylvania courts have held that isolated acts of business by a foreign corporation within the state are not doing business within the state in violation of law, such ruling will be followed by the courts of New Jersey as to contracts made in Pennsylvania. statute contains an express provision to the effect that failure of a foreign corporation to comply with its provisions shall not render its contracts void.[2]

b. Insurance Contracts. This construction has been placed in some states, contrary to the rule in some of the other states, upon statutes imposing restrictions and conditions upon the right of foreign insurance companies to do business therein.[3] If a foreign insurance company writes a policy upon the life of a domestic citizen before complying with the provisions of such a statute, the assured cannot make that the ground of refusal to pay premiums; but if the policy contains the usual provision of forfeiture for non-payment of premiums it will lapse by reason of such non-payment, although the company may not have complied with the statute. In other words, if the policy remains in force at all, it remains in force according to its terms; it is not valid in so far as it operates against the company, while at the same time void in so far as it imposes a burden upon the assured or the beneficiary.[4] Under a statute declaring that contracts of insurance made by a foreign company which has not complied with the statutory conditions shall be valid, but imposing a fine on the agent of such company, the foreign insurance company may maintain an action to recover assessments made under the provisions of its policy, although it has not complied with the local law.[5] conveying land in the domestic jurisdiction may be enforced therein, although the foreign corporation may not have complied with the statutes of the domestic state prescribing the terms on which it may do business therein.[6] So it has been held of a chattel mortgage.[7]

d. Rule Where Statute Prescribes a Distinct Penalty. Some of the decisions cited in the preceding sections have been influenced by the consideration that the statute imposes a distinct penalty upon the foreign corporation or upon its agents, or both, for doing business within the state in violation of the statutory restrictions; and the courts have reasoned in such cases that it was the intention of the legislature that the penal or criminal sanction should afford the only remedy for the violation of the statute and that it did not intend that a violation of the statute should operate to avoid contracts made before its conditions were complied with.[8] Where the prohibitory statute also annexes a penalty, there is more room for doubt; but even in the latter case many courts take the view that the corporation will not be allowed to make its own violation of the law the ground of an action in the courts of the sovereignty whose law it has violated, so as to maintain an action upon the contract.[9]

e. Doctrine That Other Party Is Estopped. In some states the courts have held, contrary to the doctrine hereinbefore stated, that where a person enters into a contract with a foreign corporation, and receives the benefit of such contract, he is estopped to set up the fact that the corporation had not complied with a statute of the state imposing conditions upon its right to do business therein, for the purpose of avoiding liability on the contract.[10]

4. Contracts Voidable, But Not Void. Another doctrine is that a non-compliance of a foreign corporation with statutes prescribing the terms on which it may enter the state and do business renders its contracts, made with domestic citizens during its default, voidable at the election of the other contracting party, but not wholly void.[11]

5. Statutes Prohibiting Maintenance of Action[12] — a. Statutes Merely Suspending Remedy of Corporation. The shocking immorality involved in the proposition that a citizen should be judicially encouraged to repudiate his contract, fairly made, with a foreign corporation, and to keep the fruits of such contract while repudiating the obligation on his part — to keep the goods but not to pay for them — has led some of the legislatures and courts to find a way out by adopting the rule that the failure of a foreign corporation to comply with statutes imposing conditions upon which it may enter the state and do business does not operate to render its contracts, made with inhabitants of the state, wholly void, but merely operates to suspend the remedy of the foreign corporation in the courts of the state upon such contracts, until it shall have complied with the statutory conditions.[13] Under this rule, until such compliance, any action by the

New York.— Under statute (Laws (1892), c. 687, § 15) prohibiting a foreign corporation from doing business without procuring a certificate from the secretary of state that it has complied with all requirements of law, and providing that no corporation doing business in the state without such certificate "shall maintain any action in this state upon any contract made by it in this state until it shall have procured such certificate." Neuchatel Asphalt Co. v. New York, 155 N. Y. 373, 49 N. E. 1043 [affirming 12 Misc. 26, 33 N. Y. Suppl. 64, which modified 9 Misc. 376, 30 N. Y. Suppl. 252] (contract made and mechanic's lien filed without having complied with statute not void, but remedy merely suspended, and may be enforced by action after having procured certificate); Dunbarton Flax Spinning Co. v. Greenwich, etc., R. The act of this state of 1895 (Laws (1895), c. 240), requiring a foreign corporation not only to procure the certificate, but also a receipt for a license-fee, and providing that in event of failure to procure the same "no suit shall be maintained or recovery had" by such corporation, was superseded by the act of 1896 (Laws (1896), c. 908), providing that no action may be maintained or recovery had by a foreign corporation unless the license receipt be procured within thirteen months from the beginning of business in the state (as to which see infra, IV, B, 5, b), and the effect of failure to procure the certificate was left by the act of 1896 to be governed by the act of 1892 first above referred to. J. R. Alsing Co. v. New England Quartz, etc., Co., supra. The law has been changed in this respect in New York by the later act of 1901, which is referred to infra, IV, B, 5, b, note 15.

Washington.— Under a statute authorizing foreign corporations to sue and be sued and to do business in the state in the same manner and to the same extent as domestic corporations, but providing that such corporations shall file a copy of their articles of incorporation and a written appointment of an agent. Huttig Bros. Mfg. Co. v. Denny Hotel Co., 6 Wash. 122, 32 Pac. 1073, compliance with statute after filing of notice of material-man's lien and before commencement of suit was held sufficient.

and judgment upon it in favor of defendant would operate merely to abate the suit.[14]

b. Statutes Barring Remedy of Corporation. Other statutes imposing conditions to be complied with by foreign corporations before doing business in the state, and in terms prohibiting the maintenance of actions by corporations which have not complied with the conditions, do not merely suspend the remedy of the corporation until such compliance, but bar any action by a foreign corporation upon a contract made by it in the state before it has complied with the statute, so that compliance therewith after making the contract will not enable it to sue thereon.[15] It has been held that such a statutory requirement or restriction, providing that no corporation can maintain an action in any court of the state upon any demand, whether arising out of contract or tort, unless at the time when the contract was made or the tort committed it had filed its articles of incorporation as provided by another clause of the statute, creates a condition precedent to the right of the foreign corporation to maintain any action in the state growing out of its transaction of business within the state, the performance of which condition must be averred and proved by the foreign corporation in order to maintain a standing in court.[16]

c. Effect Upon Executory Contracts Entered Into and Partly Performed Prior to Enactment. After the enactment of such a restrictive statute providing Foreclosure of mortgage.— Under a doctrine prevailing in Indiana, whereby the failure of the foreign corporation to comply with the domestic statute merely operates to suspend its remedy until such compliance, a plea in abatement is properly sustained to an action to foreclose a mortgage taken by the corporation without such compliance. New York.— Under a statute (Laws (1892), c. 687, § 15, as amended by Laws (1901), c. 538, p. 1327) providing that no foreign corporation shall maintain any action on any contract made in the state unless, before making the same, it shall have procured a certificate from the secretary of state. Texas.— Under a statute imposing conditions and providing that no such corporation can maintain any suit or action, either legal or equitable, in any of the courts of the state upon any demand, whether arising out of contract or tort, "unless at the time such contract was made or tort committed" the corporation had complied with the statute. that any contract made by a foreign corporation affecting its personal liability or relating to property in the state before its compliance with the statute should be wholly void on its behalf, but enforceable against it, but before it went into effect by its terms, a foreign corporation entered into an executory contract to be performed within the state enacting the statute. It was held that the statute, on taking effect, became applicable to everything done or to be done under the contract by the corporation thereafter; consequently that the other contracting party might refuse to continue further operations under the contract, and might defend an action by the corporation for its breach of the contract, on the ground of the corporation not having complied with the statute.[17]

d. Action by Corporation Upon Contract Assigned to It. It has been held that a statute prohibiting actions on contracts made by foreign corporations until they shall have procured from the secretary of state a certificate authorizing them to do business within the state does not disable a foreign corporation from maintaining an action on a contract made between other parties and assigned to it.[18]

e. Actions Upon Contracts Made Without the State. The fact that a foreign corporation doing business in a state without obtaining the certificate required by a statute of such state, which statute prohibits the maintenance of an action on a contract made within the state by such corporation, will not prevent it from maintaining an action on a contract made without the state.[19]

6. Actions in Federal Courts. When a foreign corporation brings an action in a federal court on a contract entered into in the state, and the contract is illegal and void under the construction placed upon the state statute by the highest court of the state, such construction will be followed by the federal court, and the action cannot be maintained.[20] Where, however, the contract is not void, but the statute merely prohibits the foreign corporation from maintaining an action thereon in any court of the state, it has been held that the corporation may nevertheless maintain an action in the federal courts, since a federal court will not refuse to enforce a valid contract, harmless in itself, which is non-enforceable in the state courts merely on account of non-compliance with the state administrative regulations.[21]

C. Right of Domestic Party to Enforce Contracts Against Corporation — 1. In General. It is almost universally held that where a foreign corporation comes into a state and enters into a contract with a domestic citizen without having complied with the laws of the state imposing conditions precedent to its right to do business therein, it cannot set up its non-compliance with the law to defeat an action against it on the contract, even though it could not enforce the contract itself, and although the statute imposes a penalty upon it for doing business in violation of the prohibition.[22] The object of the statutes is to protect

20. Cæsar v. Cappell, 83 Fed. 403, holding, however, that while federal courts follow the construction of a state statute by the courts of a state, they are not required to adopt a construction based on implications from the language of a judicial opinion, nor bound by the construction of a state statute by the courts of the state as applied to contracts entered into before such construction was adopted.

domestic citizens doing business with such corporations, and they are not to be construed, in the absence of clear provision to such effect, as rendering contracts void as against such citizens.[23] To so construe them would render them instruments of fraud and oppression to those for whose protection they are intended.[24] It is not intended to devolve upon persons dealing with such corporations the duty and risk of ascertaining whether the statute has been complied with.[25]

2. ESTOPPEL OF CORPORATION TO SET UP ITS VIOLATION OF THE LAW. Otherwise stated, the doctrine, as laid down in many of the cases, is that if the state does not intervene and if the party for whose protection the statute was enacted does not rescind it, the corporation is estopped thus to set up its own violation of the law in avoidance of its contracts.[26]

3. INSURANCE CONTRACTS. In accordance with this doctrine, it has repeatedly been held that where a foreign insurance company enters the domestic jurisdiction, and there does business by writing policies upon the property or lives of domestic citizens in violation of a restrictive statute, it will not be allowed to defend on this ground, when an action is brought against it to recover the amount assured in the policy.[27]

4. Loans and Mortgages. The rule has also been applied to foreign corporations borrowing money and giving mortgages to secure the same. Although a note or bond and mortgage or trust deed given by a foreign corporation to secure a loan may have been in violation of a statute requiring such corporations to comply with certain conditions precedent to entitle them to do business in the state, it cannot repudiate the contract without restoring the consideration; and therefore it cannot set up its violation of the law to defeat an action by the mortgagee to recover the money and foreclose the mortgage or trust deed.[28]

5. Liability on Bond Given by Foreign Corporation. If a foreign corporation enters a state and gives a bond with sureties, without complying with the statutes relating to foreign corporations, both the corporation and the sureties are estopped to set up the non-compliance with the law to escape liability on the bond.[29] The same principle applies where a foreign surety company, without complying with the local statutes, becomes surety on a judicial or other bond.[30]

6. Non-Compliance With Statute Does Not Defeat Jurisdiction. The fact that a foreign corporation has not obtained a permit to do business, required by the Texas statute, does not affect the jurisdiction of the courts to entertain a suit against it, although it might prevent it from maintaining a suit.[31]

D. Executed Contracts Unaffected by Statutes. The doctrine that a contract entered into by a foreign corporation without having complied with the statute prescribing conditions precedent to its right to do business in a state is void or voidable, and cannot be enforced by the corporation, does not affect the rights of either party under a contract which has been fully executed or prevent the corporation from maintaining or defending actions to protect such rights.[32] This is true, for example, of property rights under mortgages to foreign corporations which have been foreclosed.[33] The rule has also been applied to a note given

E. Effect With Respect to Actions For Tort. Unless the statute says so in express terms, as some of the statutes do, the non-compliance by a foreign corporation with the terms and conditions upon which the domestic law allows it to enter the state and do business, will not preclude it, or any one claiming through it, from maintaining an action which is purely ex delicto.[35] And a statute imposing conditions precedent to the right of a foreign corporation to do business in the state and prohibiting a corporation which has not complied therewith from maintaining an action on any contract made in the state, has no application to an action against such a corporation for tort.[36]

F. Effect With Respect to Assignees or Transferees of Corporation — 1. In General. It has been held that where a foreign corporation cannot maintain an action to enforce a non-negotiable chose in action, because of its failure to comply with the local statutes in relation to foreign corporations, one to whom it assigns the same cannot maintain an action, "as the assignee of a chose in action stands exactly in the shoes of his assignor."[37] But this rule does not apply where a person himself enters into contracts in pursuance of rights acquired by contract between him and a foreign corporation.[38]

2. Negotiable Instruments. A different rule has been applied to negotiable instruments. As in case of other ultra vires contracts,[39] the promissory notes or other written obligations given by foreign corporations which have not complied with the conditions of the local law are, in most jurisdictions, if negotiable, good in the hands of bona fide holders for value.[40] The rule does not apply, however, in those jurisdictions in which contracts made by foreign corporations which have not complied with the laws are void or unenforceable by them, unless the holder of the instrument occupies the position of a bona fide holder for value.[41]

G. Effect With Respect to Agents and Their Sureties[42] — 1. Actions by Corporation — a. On Bond of Agent. Some of the cases hold that where a foreign corporation enters a state by means of its agent and does business there, state, where there was nothing to indicate that the subject-matter grew out of the business in which it was engaged. See also the statutes referred to supra, IV, B, 5, b, text and note 15.

Suppl. 594, holding that failure of a foreign corporation to obtain a certificate authorizing it to do business in the state, as required by N. Y. Laws (1901), c. 538, § 15, which provides as a penalty that it shall not maintain an action in the state on a contract made in the state prior to its procuring such a certificate, does not make it a trespasser in using a highway in the state, so as to affect the questions of negligence in an action against it for collision between its vehicle and that of plaintiff.

37. Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Davis, (Tex. Civ. App. 1899) 54 S. W. 381 [affirmed as to this point, but reversed on other points in 93 Tex. 378, 55 S. W. 562]. See to the same effect Kinney v. Reid Ice Cream Co., 57 N. Y. App. Div. 206, 68 N. Y. Suppl. 325.

In this case a foreign corporation which was engaged in preparing a book for publication and securing contracts and subscriptions for advertising space therein assigned to plaintiff the right to conduct, publish, and issue such book and make all contracts in relation thereto in its name. Subsequently plaintiff's soliciting agent made the contract in question with defendants, for advertising in said book, in the name of said corporation. In an action on said contract it was held that plaintiff did not sue as assignee of such contract, but upon the contract as made by himself, and that it was not necessary to allege or prove that the corporation had filed a certificate.

Williams v. Cheney, supra.

in violation of restrictive statutes such as those under consideration, it cannot maintain an action against its agent or his sureties upon a bond given by him to the corporation to secure the faithful fulfilment of his duties, for the reason that, the doing of the business by the agent being expressly prohibited by the local statute, no recovery can be had without proving that both the plaintiff and the defendants have violated the law.[43] Other cases are to the contrary.[44]

b. For Money or Property Received by Agent. It has been held, even by courts which deny the right of a foreign corporation to maintain an action on the bond of an agent, where it has been doing business in violation of the law,[45] that its failure to comply with the law is no defense in an action by it against the agent to recover money or property received by him to its use,[46] on the ground that "the agent is estopped to dispute the title of his principal to the money which he has received for him."[47] Under some statutes, however, the rule is otherwise.[48]

Commission merchants.— Even if sales by a regularly licensed commission merchant of goods consigned to him by a foreign corporation be considered unlawful sales by it because of its failure to comply with the local statute prescribing conditions under which it may do business in the state, such illegality cannot be set up by the commission merchant in an action by the corporation against him to recover money received by him on such sales. In re Hovey, 198 Pa. 48. People's Mut. Ben. Soc. v. Lester, 105 Mich. 716, 63 N. W. 977, holding that a foreign mutual benefit society could not maintain an action to recover from an agent moneys collected by him, under an arrangement with its officers, on assessments by it, where the moneys were collected in the course of the conduct of business in violation of a statute (Howell St. § 8136) which provided that when any act should be forbidden to be done by any corporation without express authority of law, and such act should be done by a foreign corporation, it should not be authorized to maintain any action founded

c. On Note Given by Agent. The rule stated above would seem to apply so as to prevent an agent from setting up that the corporation was doing business in violation of the statute to defeat an action by it on a note given for money or property received by him for the corporation.[49] There is a decision, however, which is apparently to the contrary.[50]

2. Actions by Agent — a. In His Own Name on Behalf of Corporation. A non-compliance on the part of a foreign corporation with a statute imposing the terms and conditions under which it may enter the state to do business will prevent its agent from prosecuting in his own name an action in its behalf which the corporation itself would not be allowed to prosecute, for example, an action to recover damages for an injury done to the property of the foreign corporation while it was in the agent's possession.[51]

b. Recovery of Commission or Other Compensation. It has been held that an agent who does business within a state for a foreign corporation, which is there in violation of the laws of the state, cannot maintain an action against a citizen of the state to recover his commission for a loan of money procured for such citizen from the corporation.[52] And it would seem to be equally clear on well settled principles that he cannot maintain an action against the corporation for commissions or other compensation arising out of his illegal conduct of its business in the state.[53]

3. Embezzlement or Larceny by Agent. In a criminal prosecution for embezzlement or larceny by the agent of a foreign corporation it is no defense that the agent or corporation had not complied with the statute imposing conditions upon the right of such corporations to do business in the state, and that the money or property embezzled or stolen was received by the agent in the transaction of an unlawful business.[54] Statutes relating to embezzlement, however, may be so restricted in terms as to exclude embezzlement by agents of foreign corporations.[55]

H. Effect as to Maintenance and Defense of Actions Generally. This question has already been considered in some of its phases.[56] In addition to what has been elsewhere said, it is to be remarked that statutes sometimes expressly provide that a foreign corporation which has failed to comply with conditions thereby prescribed shall not maintain any action or proceeding in any of the courts of the state;[57] and sometimes there is a prohibition against the defense of upon such act, or upon any liability or obligation, express or implied, "arising out of" or made or entered into in consideration of such act.

any action or proceeding.[58] But it has been held that a statute merely prohibiting the commencement, maintenance, or prosecution of an action does not prevent a foreign corporation which has not complied with the statute from defending a suit brought against it,[59] interposing and recovering upon a counter-claim arising out of the transaction in suit,[60] or prosecuting an appeal or writ of error from a judgment recovered against it.[61] And, as we have seen, a state statute merely denying the right to sue in the state courts cannot prevent suits in the federal courts.[62]

I. Legislature May Validate Contracts. It has been held competent for the legislature, by a retrospective statute, to validate contracts made between domestic citizens and foreign corporations in violation of a previous prohibitory statute; since such curative legislation does not have the effect of divesting vested rights, or of impairing the obligation of contracts, but merely of preventing men, upon reasons which concern the state alone, from repudiating the honest engagements into which they have entered.[63]

land as it can transmit to a third party, although it has failed to comply with a constitutional prohibition or statute of the state prescribing the terms upon which it can do business within the state, so long as the state does not intervene.[65] Further than this, it is generally held that acquiring the title to real or personal property, and holding or transmitting the same, without more, is not the doing or transacting of business within the meaning of the statutes imposing conditions or restrictions upon foreign corporations, and is not prohibited by such statutes.[66]

K. Situs of Contracts For Purpose of Application of Statutes — 1. Where Delivered and Accepted. The better view seems to be that the situs of a contract for the purpose of determining the application of the statutes excluding or imposing conditions or restrictions upon foreign corporations[67] is not the place where it is formally written, but the place where it is delivered and accepted.[68]

2. Insurance Policies — a. When in State in Which Policy Is Delivered and Accepted. The situs of an insurance policy for this purpose is often held to be in the state in which it is delivered and accepted.[69] This is especially true, where, as is generally the case with such policies, the policy by its own terms is not to be valid until it is countersigned by the local agent within the state where it is delivered.[70] The rule is the same, although there is no local agent who can rightfully sign it and deliver it, by reason of the fact that the foreign insurance company has not complied with the conditions of the local statutes which entitle it to do business within the domestic state.[71]

b. When at Office of Corporation Issuing Policy. It has been held, however, that where the agent of a foreign insurance company through whom the insurance is effected has no larger authority from the company than to receive and transmit to the home office applications for insurance, and to receive from that office and deliver the insurance policies which are issued and transmitted in pursuance of such applications, then the situs of the policy is in the state of the home office, and it is held to take effect as a contract as soon as it is signed by the proper officers at the home office and put in the mail for transmission; for from that moment it becomes a binding and irrevocable contract between the parties; and inasmuch as the acceptance of the application, the signing, issuing, and mailing of the policy, all take place within the state of the home office, the situs of the contract is deemed to be in that state, and not in the state of the agent to whom it is transmitted for delivery.[72] The same rule has been held to apply where the policy, instead of being sent to the assured directly by mail, is sent to the company's agent at the domicile of the assured to be by him delivered to the assured.[73] Whether the last proposition is sound must depend upon the predicate that the authority of the agent, when the policy is received by him from the home office, is limited to a delivery of it to the insured. Where, under similar circumstances, by the terms of the policy itself it is not to be valid unless countersigned by the local agent, and where it is so countersigned and delivered by him, the situs of the contract, according to the view taken in some states, is the state within which it is so countersigned and delivered.[74]

3. Loans and Mortgages. The situs of a loan by a foreign corporation and a note or bond and mortgage given to secure the same is, for the purpose of determining the application of restrictive statutes, in the state of the corporation's domicile, where the contract is made there, through the mails or otherwise, and is to be performed there, although the borrower and mortgagor is a resident of another state and the land covered by the mortgage is there situated.[75] According to the better opinion, however, the situs is in the state where the land is situated where the contract is solicited by and made through a local agent of the corporation there who is engaged in the business of procuring applications for loans in the state and forwarding them to the corporation.[76]

4. Effect of Stipulation in Contract. Where a foreign corporation enters into a contract in a state under whose laws it is void or unenforceable because of the corporation's failure to comply with statutory conditions precedent to the right to do business therein, or because of a statute wholly excluding such corporation, the contract cannot be rendered valid or enforceable by a stipulation therein that it shall be governed by the laws of the state of the corporation's domicile.[77]

L. Personal Liability of Officers, Agents, or Shareholders on Contracts. In the absence of a statute, the mere fact that a foreign corporation has engaged in business and entered into a contract, without complying with the local statutes imposing conditions upon the right of such corporations to do business in the state, does not render the directors and shareholders liable as partners on the contract, when the laws of the state are not such as to prevent recognition of the existence of the corporation, but the remedy in such case is against the corporation.[78] It is otherwise, however, where the laws or public policy of the state are such that the existence of the corporation cannot be recognized.[79] And where a person assumes to act as agent for a foreign corporation doing business in a state without complying with the local statute, and enters into a contract on behalf of the corporation with a domestic citizen, and incurs a debt to him, he is personally liable, at least if the citizen is ignorant of the non-compliance with the statute.[80] In some states the statute expressly makes the officers and agents of foreign corporations personally liable for their debts where such corporations do business in the state without complying with the statutory requirements,[81] or where they fail

Estoppel to deny agency.— Persons issuing policies of insurance on behalf of a foreign insurance company, and afterward issuing slips or permits to be attached thereto, in which they describe themselves as "agents," are estopped to deny their agency when it is sought to hold them personally liable as agents under a statute. W. 791, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 58. Under Ky. St. § 576, providing for the punishment of every corporation doing business in the state which shall fail to have its corporate name

In some states violation of the statute by an agent is made a misdemeanor and he is rendered liable to fine or imprisonment, or both.[84] Prosecution of a person for acting as agent of a foreign corporation without taking out the license required by statute is not barred by the subsequent taking out of such license.[85] To render the agent liable the act of agency must be done within the state,[86] but it is not necessary that the contracts made through his agency shall be made within the state.[87] Penal provisions of statutes relating to foreign corporations and their agents are to be strictly construed, and their penal intent must be shown in clear and unambiguous words.[88]

O. Right of Private Individuals to Enjoin Corporation. As a general proposition a private individual cannot sue to enjoin acts within the state by a foreign corporation on the ground that it has not complied with statutory conditions precedent to the right to do business within the state, but the proceedings to exclude it must be instituted by the attorney-general or other proper officer on behalf of the state.[90] But where the acts of a foreign corporation not authorized under the laws of the state infringe the private rights of an individual (or private corporation) or constitute a public nuisance causing him special damage, he may maintain a suit for an injunction.[91]

See, generally, NUISANCES. It was held, under a statute containing such provisions, that a domestic citizen could not maintain an action against a foreign corporation, on behalf of himself and others similarly situated, to enjoin it from erecting certain telephone poles in a city, on the ground of its failure to comply with the statute, unless otherwise the petition showed a right to an injunction. Hershfield v. Rocky Mountain Bell Telephone Co., 12 Mont. 102, 29 Pac. 883. The decision does not seem to be sound. Although the municipal authorities had authorized the establishment of the telephone service, yet, as defendant corporation had no right to enter the state for the purpose of doing business, its occupation of the public streets was unlawful, and was therefore a nuisance; and consequently any abutting landowner damaged thereby ought to have been allowed an injunction to restrain the same.

b. Right to Sue Rests Upon Comity of State of Forum. The right of a corporation to sue in the courts of another state or country is not an absolute right but rests upon the comity of states.[94] Under the operation of this principle of comity a corporation created in one state can sue in the courts of another state the same as a domestic corporation can, unless prohibited by the legislation of the state in which it attempts to sue.[95]

c. Right to Sue Subject to Restraints of Local Law — (i) In General. This doctrine is often roughly expressed in the proposition that a corporation created by the laws of one state may maintain an action in another state or country, unless restrained from so doing by the local laws of such other state or country.[96] As we have seen statutes exist in many states, if not in all, expressly imposing restrictions upon the right of foreign corporations to sue;[97] but the mere commencement or prosecution of suits is not doing business in a state within the meaning of a restrictive statute.[98]

(II) Actions in Federal Courts. As we have seen, when a foreign corporation brings an action in a federal court, state statutes and the construction placed upon them by the state courts will be followed in determining whether the corporation has any right of action; but state statutes merely prohibiting or imposing restrictions upon the right of a foreign corporation to maintain an action in the state courts cannot prevent it from suing in the federal courts, where it has a cause of action.[99]

d. May Sue in Corporate Name. This is very old law; and the meaning is that a foreign corporation, having the right of action against a resident of the domestic forum, is allowed to sue and recover judgment thereon in its corporate name. Thus, the Dutch West India Company was allowed to sue in its corporate name in the English king's bench for money which had been borrowed from them at Amsterdam, and which was payable in bank there, and to recover judgment for the same.[1]

e. Special Statutory or Other Remedies. When a foreign corporation has a good cause of action in a state, it is entitled, in the absence of express restriction or exclusion, not only to the right to resort to the ordinary remedies by actions at law or in equity, but also, by comity, to the same right as domestic corporations to resort to special statutory or other remedies, such as attachment,[2] mandamus,[3] mechanics' liens,[4] and the like.[5]

2. For What Causes of Action — a. In General. The principle being conceded that a foreign corporation may sue for the redress of injuries in the domestic jurisdiction, it must follow, in the absence of statutory restraints, that it may sue upon any cause of action for which a domestic person or corporation might sue.[6] For example, it may maintain an action at law or in equity to collect a debt due to it or enforce performance or recover damages for breach of a contract entered into without the state, or lawfully within the state;[7] and it may maintain an action for any tort committed against it,[8] such as an action for libel,[9] trespass,[10] or conversion.[11] It may maintain an action for damages by a municipal corporation to its telegraph and telephone poles standing within the limits of the municipality, even though the local statute prohibits foreign corporations from doing business in the state until they shall have complied with certain prescribed conditions.[12] In like manner it may maintain an action to recover real or personal property, such as writ of entry or ejectment,[13] or replevin,[14] or forcible entry and detainer to recover possession of real estate from a tenant unlawfully holding over, it being no defense that the corporation holds the premises in violation of law;[15] and it may intervene in attachment proceedings for the purpose of protecting its right to the property attached.[16] So also it may maintain a suit in equity for an injunction for the protection of its rights;[17] and generally it is entitled to whatever remedy is accorded to a domestic creditor for the collection of a debt due for goods sold and delivered, with priority of payment according to the priority of its execution, although it may have no office in the state of the forum where service can be had upon it.[18] proceedings denied to residents of the state or other suitors in its courts.[19] It cannot in Delaware upon the rule of comity demand a writ of mandamus until the state has in some manner recognized its corporate existence and powers.[20]

3. Pleading and Evidence in Actions by Foreign Corporations — a. In General. In this connection those questions only will be considered which are peculiar to actions by foreign corporations, other questions of pleading or evidence, although arising in such actions, being treated under other titles.[21]

b. Allegation of Corporate Existence. It is believed that the rules obtaining in many jurisdictions, elsewhere considered, which dispense entirely with the allegation that plaintiff or defendant is a corporation or which permit that allegation to be made in the most general language, without pleading the charter or incorporating statute, or explaining how it came to be a corporation,[22] apply to foreign as well as to domestic corporations.[23]

c. Allegation and Proof of Compliance or Non-Compliance With Local Laws — (I) In General. Whether it is necessary for a corporation plaintiff to allege compliance with statutory requirements will depend upon the language of the statute, and upon the view which is taken in the particular jurisdiction upon the question whether the non-compliance with it operates of itself to cut off a right of action on the part of the corporation; and upon the further question whether compliance with the statute is in the nature of a condition precedent to such right of action.[24] In some states the view has been taken that a foreign corporation cannot maintain an action upon a contract made within the domestic state, without alleging and proving that it has complied with the laws of such state imposing the doing of certain acts, such as having a duly constituted agent and known place of business in the state, etc., as the condition upon which alone it is permitted to do business within the state; the language of the statute or its judicial construction being such that a compliance with it is a condition precedent to the right to maintain an action in the courts of the state, so that, as in the case of other conditions precedent, compliance with it must be averred and proved by plaintiff.[25] In these states it will not be sufficient for the corporation to allege, in general terms, that it has complied with the laws of the state authorizing a

23. For instance, a foreign corporation, suing in the courts of Ohio, is not required to set out in its petition the terms of its charter, showing its capacity to maintain the action. Smith v. Weed Sewing Mach. Co., 26 Ohio St. 562. So, it has been held, in Indiana, in the case of a corporation formed by the concurrent legislation of two states, that it is not necessary, to enable such a corporation, when suing, to put in evidence its act of incorporation granted by the legislature of the foreign state, that it should have pleaded such statute, since to require this would lead to great prolixity in pleading. foreign corporation to do business therein, because that is merely stating a conclusion of law; but it must aver that it has done the acts which the statute requires, stating what it has done.[26] It must appear that the corporation had complied with the law at the time the contract was made, where this is necessary to enable it to sue thereon, and not merely at the time the suit was commenced.[27] Compliance with the statute need not be alleged where the complaint does not show that the corporation was doing business in the state or that the contract was made in the state.[28]

(II) When Non-Compliance With Local Law Is Matter of Defense— (A) In General. In other jurisdictions it is held that a foreign corporation, in order to maintain an action arising out of transactions in the state, does not have to allege its compliance with the statute imposing conditions precedent to the right to do business in the state, or to sue therein, but that non-compliance therewith in a matter of defense to be pleaded in bar or in abatement, according to the construction placed upon the statute in a particular jurisdiction.[29]

(B) How Such Defense Is Pleaded. In Indiana and some of the other states, in order to make this defense available, it must be set up by a plea in abatement, in compliance with the construction of the statute and rules of practice in the particular jurisdiction.[30] But in other jurisdictions the plea is in

Dec. 27, by a special plea in abatement, in which defendant must allege that the corporation has a place of business in the state, that it is doing business in the state, that it does not come within any of the exceptions provided for in the statute, and that it has not complied with the requirements thereof. Under this rule an answer defending on this ground, which merely alleges that the agent of plaintiff corporation failed to comply with the requirements of the statute, is insufficient. It is necessary bar.[31] This defensive pleading, by whatever name called, must set up distinctly that plaintiff is a corporation of the kind or class named in the restrictive statute, or the plea will be demurrable.[32] A general plea denying its right to maintain an action within the state is not sufficient.[33] Under any system of pleading the defense must be clearly raised by affirmation of facts which, if proved, bring plaintiff within the operation of the statute prohibiting it from maintaining the action.[34] A variance in the name of the foreign state under which plaintiff was incorporated is immaterial.[35]

(c) When Such Defense May Be Raised by Demurrer. If the bill, declaration, or complaint, by whatever name called, shows on its face that plaintiff foreign corporation was transacting such business within the state as required it to file a statement with the secretary of state designating a known place of business, or to comply with other statutory conditions precedent, without showing that it has complied with the statute in this respect, the defense that it has not complied with the law may be raised by demurrer in those states where the corporation is to allege that it had failed to comply with such provisions, at or prior to the commencement of the action. Singer Mfg. W. 816, holding that in an action by a foreign corporation on a note and mortgage which plaintiff alleges that it received in part payment for land sold to defendant, an affirmation by defendant that plaintiff was not the owner of the note and mortgage did not raise the issue of the right of plaintiff to hold land under the laws of the state. And where a complaint alleged that plaintiff was a foreign corporation, to which defendant answered that he had no knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief, but did not affirmatively set out that plaintiff had not complied with a statute requiring foreign corporations to obtain a certificate of authority to do business in the state, it was held that plaintiff could recover without showing that fact. International Soc. v. Dennis, 76 N. Y. App. Div. 327, 78 N. Y. Suppl. 497. So in an action by a foreign corporation to recover assessments on stock, an affidavit of defense was held insufficient where it averred that plaintiff maintained an office in Philadelphia, where its business was carried on and where the assessment was made, that all the business relative to the issue of stock was conducted in Pennsylvania, and that plaintiff had not complied with the local law, as the affidavit should state when the business was conducted at the office referred to and what was the character of the business. Galena Min., etc., Co. v. Frazier, 20 Pa. Super. Ct. 394. And a specification of a defense in that plaintiff corporation had not complied with the provisions of Va. Worrell v. Kinnear Mfg. Co., 103 Va. 719, 49 S. E. 988. A plea to a hill for the foreclosure of a mortgage which avers that the mortgage contract was made in Tennessee, that the mortgagee was a foreign corporation which had not complied with the requirements of the statutes to entitle it to do business in the state, that it had opened an office in the state for the purpose of making loans and securing the same by mortgages of lands in the state, and had been, and then was, doing "an extensive loan and mortgage business" throughout the state, does not sufficiently plead facts showing that the making of the contract in suit was not an isolated transaction, or that the corporation was "carrying on business" or "attempting to do business" in the state, within the prohibition of the statutes. required to allege compliance with the statute.[36] But if the bill, declaration, or complaint does not show this, a demurrer will not lie on the ground that there is no allegation of compliance with the statute.[37] In those states in which the corporation is not required to plead compliance with the statute, a bill, declaration, or complaint is demurrable if it affirmatively appears therefrom that it has been doing business in the state and has not complied with the statute;[38] but if this does not affirmatively appear the defense must be raised by plea or answer and cannot be raised by demurrer.[39] In Kentucky the fact that a foreign corporation, suing for the price of goods sold, had not complied with the local statute so as to entitle it to do business within the state is not ground of special demurrer, although the fact appears by affidavit.[40]

(III) Defense Waived If Not Raised by Demurrer or Answer. Where the objection that a plaintiff foreign corporation has not complied with the local statute so as to be entitled to do business in the state is not taken either by demurrer or answer, it is waived; it cannot be raised for the first time on appeal.[41]

d. Pleading Statutes Invalidating Contracts. Where there is a statute voiding the contracts of foreign corporations which have failed to comply with certain statutory conditions precedent before doing business within the domestic state,[42] if such a corporation sues to enforce a contract, and this statutory defense is set up, the answer by which it is set up must show that the contract was made within the domestic state,[43] or it will be bad on demurrer.[44] The rule of pleading is the same where the broker of a foreign corporation sues a citizen to recover commis-

A bill in equity in a court of Alabama by a foreign corporation to foreclose a mortgage, which merely avers that the complainant "has complied with the laws of the State of Alabama, which authorize a foreign corporation to do business in this State," is considered as averring that the company had a duly constituted agent and known place of business in that state only at the time when the suit was commenced, and not at the time when the money was loaned or the mortgage taken, upon the principle that doubtful averments are to be taken most strongly against the pleader. It is therefore not an averment that the corporation had a duly constituted agent and known place of business at the time when the transaction took place, as required by the constitution and statute; and for that reason such a bill is demurrable. sions on a loan which he has negotiated for defendant with the foreign corporation.[45]

e. Plea in Abatement in Action For Tort. As the restrictive statutes under consideration do not in general prevent foreign corporations from suing for torts,[46] it is quite easy to conclude that such a defense cannot be set up by a plea in abatement to an action by a foreign corporation for a trespass or other tort.[47]

f. Presumptions and Burden of Proof. In some jurisdictions, as we have seen, a plaintiff foreign corporation is required to affirmatively allege and prove that it has complied with the local statutes so as to be entitled to maintain the action, and such compliance will not be presumed.[48] In other jurisdictions such compliance will be presumed, in the absence of anything to show the contrary, unless an issue on the question is properly raised by defendant.[49] When an issue is raised as to such compliance, the burden of proof is on the corporation in some states,[50] while in other states it is on defendant.[51] When a foreign corporation sues on a contract, and there is nothing to show where or when it was made, it will be presumed that it was lawfully made; for instance, that it was made out of the state, or before enactment of the statute, or after compliance therewith, such a compliance being shown.[52]

4. Effect of Dissolution or Appointment of Receiver. In the absence of a statute a foreign corporation cannot commence or continue an action after it has been dissolved by expiration of its charter or otherwise in the state of its creation.[53] The appointment of a receiver pendente lite in a circuit court of the United States in another state does not disable a foreign corporation from suing in its own name in a court of the state of New York, provided the other conditions exist which enable it so to sue.[54] But if a receiver over a corporation has been appointed in the state wherein it was created, with an injunction upon its officers from continuing its business or using its corporate name for any purpose, then an officer of the corporation will not be allowed to prosecute a writ of error in the name and behalf of the corporation against the objection of the receiver so appointed.[55]

B. Actions Against Foreign Corporations[56]— 1. Early Doctrine That They Could Not Be Sued In Personam — a. Statement of This Doctrine. The early juridical conception was that a corporation could not migrate, but must dwell in the place of its creation;[57] from which premise the conclusion logically followed that it could not get over the boundaries of the state creating it, into another state, in such a sense as to be there served with a summons in a civil action; in other words, that an action in personam prosecuted by a summons would not lie against a foreign corporation.[58] The gross injustice of this doctrine led to the rule that business corporations can migrate and can acquire domiciles in states or countries other than those of their origin, in which domiciles they are suable both in respect to their contracts and their torts.[59] As already seen, the rule that foreign corporations cannot be sued in personam has been generally rooted up by statutes imposing upon them, as a condition precedent of their right to do business within the state, the necessity of establishing a permanent agent in the state, and of empowering him to receive service of process in actions therein.[60]

b. Express Legislative Sanction Necessary. Where this doctrine has a foothold, it logically follows that, in order to sustain such an action, there must be a statute authorizing it.[61] That it is within the power of the legislature of a state to enact such a statute in respect of foreign corporations coming within the limits of the state to do business has been affirmed,[62] and has never been seriously doubted; although the effect of such a judgment as evidence in the courts of other jurisdictions rests upon a different footing. Indeed, an assumption of jurisdiction in this respect has taken place in most of the states, generally through affirmative legislative action, extending the process of the state over foreign corporations coming within its limits.[63]

2. Modern Doctrine as to Residence of Corporations For Purposes of Jurisdiction — a. In General. It is also clear that, within the limits of the state which grants the charter, a corporation may have a special constructive residence in more places than one, so as to be charged with taxes and dues, and be subjected to the local jurisdiction where its officers and agencies are actually present in the exercise of its franchises and in carrying on its business; and the local residence of a corporation is not necessarily confined to the locality of its principal office or place of business. It depends on the official exhibition of legal and local existence, and its place of residence may be wherever its corporate business is done.[64] This doctrine is said to be in general confined to the territorial limits of the state from which the corporation derives its charter; but it is also said that the effect of particular statutes may be such as to make a corporation, although chartered abroad, a resident of the state, not only for the purpose of suing and being sued by ordinary process or by attachment, but for all the purposes of ownership of personal property and of taxation, if the same be actually situated within the prescribed limits.[65]

b. Illustration in Case of Railroad Companies. One of the simplest and probably the best established illustrations of this principle is found in the case where a railroad company, created under the laws of one state, enters another state, and builds a part of its railroad there by permission or recognition of the legislature of the latter state, in which case, whether such permission or recognition is held to have the effect of making it a domestic corporation in the latter state, or of leaving it a foreign corporation, merely licensed in the latter state, it is perfectly well settled that it is subject to be sued in the latter state by residents thereof upon any cause of action arising therein. The license granted to the corporation, expressly or impliedly, to enter the other state and to exercise what have sometimes been called prerogative franchises therein, has justly been

The very stress of justice has operated to change this rule in that country. Under statutory authorization, the judges in that country have made a rule to the effect that if a foreign corporation carries on business in a definite way in England, then it is suable there, and can be served there, if service can be affected upon any person who sufficiently answers the description of a "head officer" in charge of its business within the jurisdiction (Order IX, rule 8); and another rule that a foreign corporation can, in certain cases, be served out of the jurisdiction with the writ, or notice of the writ, in the same way as a natural person. The English court of appeal finally decided, in two notable cases, that whenever a foreign corporation comes into England, and establishes a permanent branch or agency there for the purpose of carrying on its business, it may be sued in the courts of England by a process served upon the manager of that branch or agency, in like manner as though it were a domestic corporation. held to carry with it, by necessary implication, a liability to be so sued by residents of the latter state.[66]

3. Cannot Be Sued In Personam in a State Where Not Found. The principle of jurisprudence remains that a corporation cannot, any more than a natural person, be sued in an action in personam in a state within whose limits it has never been found.[67] In such a case if a court assumes jurisdiction and a personal judgment is rendered against the corporation, it is void for want of jurisdiction,

Co. v. Gallahue, supra), and in the District of Columbia, for an injury happening to a passenger upon its railroad in the state of Virginia, without reference to the question of the residence of plaintiff, the court holding that the company was an inhabitant of the District of Columbia, and that it was found within that District, when the writ was served upon it. and the corporation, when sued upon such judgment in the state of its creation or elsewhere, is not prevented from attacking it on this ground by the constitutional provision and act of congress requiring that full faith and credit shall be given in each state to the duly authenticated records and judicial proceedings of other states.[68]

4. Exceptions to This Rule — a. In General. But from what has preceded and from what will follow, it will be seen that there are three leading exceptions to the above rule, and that a corporation can be sued in another state or country in the following cases:

b. Migrating Into State of Forum and Establishing Agency There — (I) In General. It may be so sued when it has established an agency for the prosecution of its business in such other state or country, and in many instances, by force of statute, as hereafter seen, by service on subordinate agents. In other words, a corporation, like a natural person, is suable in personam in any state into which it migrates and settles, and in which service of process can be lawfully had upon it under the governing statutes.[69] In short, the modern doctrine both in England and America is believed to be that which was clearly enunciated and reasoned by Lord St. Leonards,[70] that a trading corporation is personally present for the purpose of jurisdiction wherever it has established a place of trade.[71] In such cases a judgment against it in personam will have the same conclusive effect, and will be evidence against it in the courts of every other state or country.[72]

(II) Distinction Between Migrating Into State and Having Officer or Agent Accidentally There. The distinction is clearly this: If the foreign corporation confines its operations to the state within which it was created, it cannot be sued in a state where it has no office and transacts no business, by serving process on its president or other officer or agent when accidentally present within such state. Such officer or agent does not represent the corporation, or carry with him his official or representative character into a state where the corporation has done no business and has not established any office.[73] But when a foreign corporation sends its officers and agents into another state, and does business there, it is liable to be brought into the courts of such state by a service of process upon such officers, so acting for it, and a judgment founded upon such service will be good everywhere.[74]

(III) MUST DO BUSINESS WITHIN THE STATE AND BE SERVED BY AN APPROPRIATE AGENT. This conducts us very nearly to the governing principle — a principle which has been thrown into the clearest light by an opinion of the supreme court of the United States written by Mr. Justice Field. That principle is twofold: (1) That the foreign corporation must have entered the domestic state for the purpose of carrying on its business there; and (2) that process must have been served upon an agent sustaining such a relation to it that notice to the agent might well be deemed notice to the principal, without a violation of the principles of natural justice.[75]

(iv) Jurisdiction as Depending Upon Amount or Kind of Business Within the State. It has been held that a foreign corporation which has done no business within the domestic state beyond negotiating a mortgage on its property, and having the bonds thereby secured listed upon a stock exchange, is not engaged in business within the state in such a sense that jurisdiction over it is acquired by service of summons upon its president while temporarily within the state for those purposes;[76] and on the other hand,[77] that service may be made on a corporation having an office in the same state where a substantial portion of its business is transacted, by a person designated as its agent in charge of a particular department of its business, by serving process upon such agent.[78]

such suits and service of process, if the corporation has gone into the state and engaged in the transaction of business there.[80]

d. Agreement With Opposite Party to Contract That It May Be Sued There. So also when a corporation has agreed with the opposite party to the contract that an action may be brought against it to enforce the contract in a state or country other than that of its particular domicile, it may be sued in such other state or country.[81] In such cases it creates by contract, and for the purposes of the particular contract, an artificial domicile different from that ascribed by the law, under the operation of the principle modus et conventio vincunt legem.[82] The opinion has been recognized,[83] and acted upon, that a foreign corporation may, by a stipulation in a contract with a private person, subject itself to the jurisdiction of the courts of England for the purpose of an action to enforce the contract.[84]

5. Proceedings In Rem. The fact that a foreign corporation is not found within a state so that it cannot be served with process therein for the purpose of recovering a judgment in personam against it does not prevent proceedings in rem affecting property in the state which it may own or in which it may be interested, and such a proceeding may be maintained and service of process had upon the corporation by publication or by notice given to it without the state.[85] This

The Tharsis Company instituted an action against the Société in respect of a matter arising out of the contract, and effected service upon the firm in Threadneedle street in the manner so provided by the contract. It was held by Lord Coleridge and Mr. Justice Field that the service was good.

E. 318, holding that letters patent belonging to a foreign corporation, with a usual place of business in Massachusetts, and duly served with process, might be reached in equity by a creditor who was an inhabitant of Massachusetts and whose debt was the result of a contract made and to be performed there.

"Property within the state."— If a domestic corporation wrongfully obtains possession of the property of a foreign corporation and subsequently transfers it to a non-resident in furtherance of a scheme of fraud, the right of action of the owners to recover damages as we shall presently see at some length, is true of attachment or garnishment proceedings.[86]

6. Remedies Available Against Foreign Corporations — a. Same as Against Domestic Corporations. When the statutes of the domestic state impose upon foreign corporations coming within the state and having usual places of business therein, the general statutes relating to domestic corporations, the same remedies which are available to domestic citizens against domestic corporations are available against them, and they may be sued in the domestic state in like manner as domestic corporations may.[87]

b. Discovery of Evidence and Production of Books. A foreign corporation, if thus within reach of process, may be ordered to produce its books on a bill of discovery, even though such books are abroad.[88]

c. Specific Performance of Contracts. Where jurisdiction in personam has been obtained over a foreign corporation by process duly served, the court has power, if the pleadings and evidence warrant it, to proceed against it by a decree for specific performance.[89]

d. Attachment and Garnishment — (i) Attachment — (a) In General. The legislature of a state may constitutionally either subject foreign corporations to attachment when they have property in the state,[90] or exempt them from attachment, as has sometimes been done.[91] In some jurisdictions the statute in express terms subjects them to attachment;[92] and even when this is not the case they are generally held, in the absence of express restriction or exemption,[93] to be within the statutes authorizing attachment against non-residents.[94] They are subject to

of a foreign corporation at the suit of a non-resident individual or corporation,[1] unless there is some statutory provision or restriction to the contrary.[2]

(c) Property Subject to Attachment.[3] As a general rule an attachment may reach any property of a foreign corporation which is within the state of the forum;[4] but it cannot reach or affect property that is not within the state.[5] A creditor of a foreign corporation may attach a debt due to it from a resident corporation or individual,[6] and the rule extends to unpaid balances due from resident subscribers to the stock of a foreign corporation.[7] As a rule a debt due by a foreign corporation to a non-resident or another foreign corporation has no situs in the state and cannot be reached by a creditor of the latter;[8] even though the debtor foreign corporation has an office and is doing business in the domestic state;[9] but the rule does not apply where the debtor foreign corporation not only has an office and is doing business in the domestic state but the debt was incurred in the course of its business within the state.[10] Although the general rule is that money in custodia legis is not the subject of an attachment,[11] it does not apply where money is deposited by a foreign corporation under an order of court to meet the debt which the attachment represents.[12] Bonds of a foreign corporation doing business in the state, deposited with the state treasurer as required by statute, are held in trust and cannot be attached, even after the corporation has ceased to do business in the state, but they must be delivered to the corporation.[13]

(d) Insolvency, Injunction, Appointment of Receiver, Etc. The fact that a foreign corporation has been declared insolvent and restrained from further business by the courts of its domicile will not preclude the right to an attachment against it.[14] A statute requiring a general assignment for the benefit of creditors

by an insolvent to be made for the benefit of all his creditors, or the execution of such an assignment, does not preclude a citizen, and a fortiori it does not preclude a non-resident, from attaching the property of a corporation of the state either in the state or in another state.[15] And the appointment of a receiver for an insolvent corporation in the state of its domicile does not prevent attachment of property of the corporation in other states,[16] although, by comity, the courts of the foreign state will sometimes recognize the rights and title of the receiver as against an attachment.[17]

(E) Lien.[18] The lien of the attachment is not affected by the subsequent appointment of a receiver or trustee for the corporation either in the state of its domicile, or in the domestic state,[19] or by subsequent relinquishment of its rights in the attached property by the corporation.[20]

(F) Procedure. The procedure in attachment proceedings against foreign corporations is governed by the statutes in the various states relating to attachment generally, and in some jurisdictions by special provisions relating to attachment against foreign corporations and corporations generally.[21] The complaint and affidavit or other moving papers in the proceedings must show, as required by the statute, that defendant is a foreign corporation,[22] and they must show all other facts necessary to entitle plaintiff to an attachment.[23] It is also essential that the writ and other process shall be served in the manner prescribed by the statute.[24]

(G) Attachment in Federal Courts. Federal courts have jurisdiction under act of congress [25] to issue attachment according to the form and manner of procedure of the state where the court sits, provided defendant is found within the district, so that jurisdiction of the person can be obtained by service of process, or voluntarily appears, but not otherwise; and this law governs attachment in the federal courts against foreign corporations.[26] The property of foreign corporations when found within their local jurisdiction is subject to attachment in the district courts of the United States acting as courts of admiralty.[27]

(II) GARNISHMENT — (A) In General. A foreign corporation cannot be summoned as garnishee or trustee in the absence of a statute, even though it may be doing business in the state.[28] It may be so summoned and held under statutes, however, if the court can and does acquire personal jurisdiction over it, and if it also has jurisdiction of the res — the property or debt garnished [29] — but not otherwise, jurisdiction in both respects being essential.[30] It follows that a foreign corporation cannot be summoned as garnishee or trustee under any circumstances, where it is not doing business in the state in such manner that it may be personally served with process under the statute, the mere casual presence of an officer or agent in the state being insufficient.[31] Nor can it be so summoned or held, arose within the state, etc., or the attachment will be invalid, and will be quashed on motion. Coolidge v. American Realty Co., 91 N. Y. App. Div. 14, 86 N. Y. Laws (1896), p. 856, c. 908 (Tax Law, § 181), requiring foreign corporations to pay a license tax, does not prohibit the maintenance of an action by the assignee of a foreign corporation, and therefore an application for attachment by such assignee need not allege such compliance. contrary.[37] This question of situs, which relates to non-resident garnishees generally, will be elsewhere treated at length.[38] The fact that a foreign corporation is exempt from process of garnishment under the laws of its home state will not exempt it from such process when doing business in another state.[39] Where foreign corporations of different states are consolidated under the statutes of those states, or where a corporation or corporations are created by concurrent legislation in several states, they are regarded, as we have seen, as having a residence in each state, and they are therefore liable to be summoned as domestic corporations as garnishees in either state.[40] And so it has been held of a corporation created by the federal government.[41]

(B) Procedure. In garnishment proceedings jurisdiction must appear upon the papers themselves or the proceedings will be a nullity.[42] The writ and notice must be served upon the corporation and the principal defendant in the manner prescribed by the statutes.[43] When the principal defendant is a non-resident notice of the proceedings may be served upon him by publication.[44] Disclosure or answer by the garnishee may be made by its general agent within the state.[45]

(III) ATTACHMENT OR GARNISHMENT OF SHARES OF STOCK. It has generally been held that for the purpose of attachment or garnishment of shares of stock in a corporation, their situs is the domicile of the corporation, and they cannot be reached by such process in another state, even though the debtor shareholder is a resident of such other state and the certificates of stock are found therein; and even though the corporation may be doing business and be subject to process in such other state.[46] In some cases, however, the contrary has been held where the certificates were in the state,[47] or where the corporation had become domesticated under the laws of the state.[48]

7. SUABLE UPON WHAT CAUSES OF ACTION — a. Causes of Action Arising Within Jurisdiction of Forum. The general rule, where it is not changed by statute, is believed to be that foreign corporations are suable in the domestic tribunals upon any cause of action arising within the domestic jurisdiction;[49] and this is so, although the foreign corporation may have been unlawfully transacting business within the state, since it cannot set up its own wrong in order to defeat the action.[50] It has been held that a provision in a contract made by a corporation in another state than that of its creation, with a resident thereof, that all actions against the corporation shall be brought in the state of its creation, is void as opposed to the policy of the domestic state as indicated by a statute requiring such corporations to consent to actions and service of process therein against them.[51]

b. Not Upon Causes of Action Arising Upon Foreign Contracts. The courts of some of the states restrain the right of action in personam by residents of the state against foreign corporations, even where the cause of action arises ex contractu, to cases where the contract was made within the state by an agent of the corporation there doing business, conceding at the same time that if the foreign corporation has property situated within the domestic jurisdiction, against which its creditor is entitled to proceed, a road will be open to him in the form of a proceeding in rem as by attachment or garnishment.[52]

c. Statute Permitting Suit "For Any Cause of Action." But where, as in the state of New York, there is a statute providing that foreign corporations may be sued by residents "for any cause of action," then, so far as mere jurisdiction — the mere power to proceed to judgment — is concerned, a foreign corporation may be sued by a resident whenever it is domiciled or found within the domestic jurisdiction in such a manner that process may be lawfully served upon it in an action in personam.[53]

d. Actions For Torts — (I) TORTS COMMITTED WITHIN STATE OF FORUM. A foreign corporation is suable for torts committed in the domestic state, either in the state or the federal courts, if found within the state in such a sense that process may lawfully be served upon it under the laws of the state,[54] but not otherwise.[55]

(II) TORTS COMMITTED IN FOREIGN STATES. Although judicial opinion upon this question has not been uniform, yet the weight of authority, in the absence of statutes enlarging in this respect the jurisdiction of the domestic tribunals, is that a foreign corporation cannot be sued in the domestic tribunals, even though it may be doing business and may have appointed an agent in the state to receive service of process, for torts committed in a foreign state.[56] Nor does this rule

For instance, under such a statute, a suit may be brought by a resident executor upon a policy issued by a corporation existing in another state, upon the life of his testator, who died in the foreign state, where letters testamentary were issued in such state and also in the domestic state. By a statute of Maryland, which is a transcript of the former statute of New York, suits against foreign corporations exercising franchises in that state may be brought in any of the courts of that state, "by a resident of this State for any cause of action; and by a plaintiff, not a resident of this State, when the cause of action has arisen, or the subject of the action shall be situated in this State." Md. Act (1868), c. 471, § 211. It has been decided that, to bring a case within the first clause of this statute, the liability sought to be enforced must be a direct liability of the corporation to the resident plaintiff, and that a resident plaintiff in an attachment against a non-resident debtor, cannot, under the second clause, subject the corporation to the process of garnishment in a Maryland court, to attach a debt due by the corporation to the non-resident debtor, on a contract which is made, and the subject-matter of which is situated in another state. appear to deny to the citizens of another state the privileges and immunities of citizens of the several states, within the meaning of the constitution of the United States.[57] The rule that the courts of one state will not maintain an action against a foreign corporation on a cause of action for a tort arising in the state in which it was incorporated, the laws of which with reference to such cause of action are materially different from those of the forum, does not apply where such foreign corporation is so associated with a domestic corporation as to make both jointly liable.[58]

8. Actions by Non-Residents and Other Foreign Corporations — a. In General. There is no principle of constitutional law which obliges the courts of a state to open their doors to actions brought by non-residents against foreign corporations.[59] A constitutional provision reciting that "all courts shall be public, and every person, for any injury that he may receive in his lands, goods, person, or reputation, shall have remedy by due course of law and justice" does not give a right of action to non-residents against foreign corporations, but is intended to secure to residents of the state access to its courts for the redress of injuries.[60] The provisions of a statute,[61] making discriminations, in respect of the right of action against foreign corporations, between domestic persons and corporations and non-resident persons and corporations, is not unconstitutional as denying to the citizens of each state all the privileges and immunities of citizens of the several states, because the statute makes no discrimination between citizens, but only between residents and non-residents.[62]

b. Cannot Sue Foreign Corporations Upon Foreign Contracts — (I) In General. In the absence of statutes otherwise providing, many of the courts have held that actions cannot be maintained by non-resident persons or corporations against foreign corporations upon contracts made and to be performed outside of the state of the forum, although the foreign corporation has an agent within the state, upon whom process may be served in actions in personam.[63] Statutes which prescribe the terms upon which foreign corporations may be permitted to do business within the domestic state, and which, among other conditions, make them amenable to the judicial process of the state, and require them to empower an agent within the state to receive service of process, are not construed as authorizing such actions, unless they say so in terms.[64] The question of jurisdic-

Nor does a statutory provision that process may be served on the agent of a foreign corporation "with like effect as if the company existed in this state," accompanied by the stipulation that such service "shall be of the same force and validity as if served on said company," operate to transfer to the tribunals of the domestic state any power which would not be acquired by the mere fact of actual service, or waiver of service, upon defendant; nor obliterate the fact, nor change the consequences which result from the fact, of the non-resident character of defendant, so as to give the domestic tribution in such a case relates not merely to jurisdiction over the person of defendant, but also jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the suit; and it is for the reason that the domestic tribunals have no jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the suit in such a case that plaintiff is repelled.[65]

(II) CONTRARY VIEW. Contrary to the foregoing, there are holdings to the effect that when a corporation comes within the state for the purpose of doing business, and appoints an attorney or agent on whom process against it may be served with like effect as if it existed in the state, it may be sued by non-residents upon contracts made outside of the state, in like manner as a natural person may be sued.[66]

c. Rule Under Particular Statutes — (I) NEW YORK. By section 427 of the former code of procedure of New York, an action against a foreign corporation might be brought in the courts of that state: (1) By a resident of that state for any cause of action; (2) by a plaintiff, not a resident of that state, when the cause of action arose, or when the subject of the action was situated within that state.[67] The present code of civil procedure of New York provides that a foreign corporation may be sued by a resident of the state or by a domestic corporation for any cause of action, and that it may be sued by a foreign corporation or by a non-resident: "(1) Where the action is brought to recover damages for the breach of a contract made within the state, or relating to property situated within the state, at the time of the making thereof; (2) where it is brought to recover real property situated within the state, or a chattel which is replevied within the state; (3) where the cause of action arose within the state, except when the object of the action is to affect the title to real property situated without the state."[68] The construction of this statute is that it excludes jurisdiction in actions by non-residents against foreign corporations which do not fall within its terms.[69] A non-resident plaintiff cannot therefore maintain an action in the courts of New York against a foreign corporation for a cause of action arising outside the limits of that state.[70] The right of action must be local nals jurisdiction over causes of action against it. Smith v. New York Mut. L. Ins. Co., 14 Allen (Mass.) 336. Contra, Johnston v. Trade Ins. Co., 132 Mass. 432.

67. Under this statute the courts of New York would not entertain jurisdiction of an action respecting lands situated in another state, between two corporations, both chartered in such other state. Cumberland Coal, etc., Co. v. Hoffman Steam Coal Co., 30 Barb. (N. Y.) 159. Nor would they entertain an action claiming equitable relief on behalf of a foreign corporation brought in the name of its shareholders against another foreign corporation, joining as defendant a corporation formed under the laws of New York, and several individuals who did not appear to be residents of New York, so as to entitle them to maintain an action against a foreign corporation for any cause under the first clause of the statute — it not appearing that the cause of action arose, or that the subject of it was situated within the state of New York. House v. Cooper, 30 Barb. (N. Y.) 157.

68. N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 1780.

Time of making motion to dismiss.—Where the complaint in an action against a foreign corporation alleges that plaintiff is a resident, and the answer denies it, and defendant proves that plaintiff is a non-resident, a motion at the close of plaintiff's case to dismiss for want of jurisdiction is made in time. with reference to the state; hence a judgment recovered by one foreign corporation against another in the state of their domicile cannot be regarded, when sued upon within the state, as a cause of action arising therein.[71] Other decisions under this statute are given below.[72]

Presumption.— A contract made by one foreign corporation with another must be presumed, in the absence of anything to show the contrary, to have been made in the domicile of one or the other, and not in New York, so as to confer jurisdiction on the courts of that state of an action for a breach thereof. 72. Under the statute the right of action depends upon residence, and not upon citizenship. Adams v. Penn Bank, 35 Hun (N. Y.) 393. A cause of action against a foreign corporation selling agricultural implements within the domestic state upon a guaranty made by such corporation is, it seems, a cause of action arising within the state, within the meaning of the statute. Childs v. Harris Mfg. Co., 104 N. Y. 477, 11 N. E. 50. According to decisions of some of the subordinate courts of New York actions do not lie under this statute by non-residents against corporations, in the following cases: To recover for the use of teams hired without the state, although they were used within the state (Perry v. Erie Transfer Co., 19 N. Y. Suppl. 239); upon a contract made in New Jersey to furnish a New Jersey corporation with teams and horses for trucking to be done in New York (Perry v. Erie Transfer Co., 1 Misc. (N. Y.) 208, 20 N. Y. Suppl. 891); for an injury by a maritime collision by the joint owners of a vessel, part of whom are non-residents, against a foreign corporation (Brooks v. Mexican Constr. Co., 49 N. Y. Super. Ct. 234, 50 N. Y. Super. Ct. 281); to recover damages for personal injuries received without the state (Crowley v. Royal Exch. Shipping Co., 2 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 174). The courts have held, on the other hand, that actions lie under this statute against foreign corporations in respect of business transacted within the state (Bradley Fertilizer Co. v. South Pub. Co., 1 Misc. (N. Y.) 512, 21 N. Y. Suppl. 472); upon an insurance policy issued by a foreign corporation to a resident who died within the state (Griesa v. Massachusetts Ben. Assoc., 15 N. Y. Suppl. 71); between two foreign corporations to recover shares of stock on the ground of the validity of a transfer made within the domestic state (Toronto Gen. Trust Co. v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 32 Hun (N. Y.) 190); for breach of a contract between a non-resident and a foreign corporation occurring within the state, no matter where the contract was made (Rosenblatt v. Jersey Novelty Co., 45 Misc. (N. Y.) 59, 90 N. Y. Suppl. 816); for breach of a contract by which one foreign corporation deposited money with another foreign corporation within the state, and the latter promised to return it, with interest, on demand (Munger Vehicle Tire Co. v. Rubber Goods Mfg. Co., 39 Misc. (N. Y.) 817, 81 N. Y. Suppl. 302). Where two foreign corporations entered into an agreement, by one clause of which in case of differences between them, they were to appoint an arbitrator in New York, the supreme court of New York had jurisdiction of an action by one of them to restrain a proceeding for arbitration thereunder. Direct U. S. Cable Co. v. Dominion Tel. Co., 84 N. Y. 153 [reversing 22 Hun 568]. Where some of the plaintiffs were residents, and others non-residents, it was held that the action might be dismissed as to the non-residents, and proceed as to the residents. Ervin v. Oregon R., etc., Co., 28 Hun (N. Y.) 269 [affirming 62 How. Pr. 490]. Where a national bank, organized in Louisiana, purchased a draft drawn on bankers in the city of New York, payable to the order of such national bank, which draft was duly presented in New York, and payment refused, and was protested for non-payment, and due notice given thereof, it was held that the cause of action arose within the state of New York for the purpose of sustaining the jurisdiction of a court of that state, of an action by the national bank to attach the funds in New York belonging to the bank drawing the draft. Hibernia Nat. Bank v. Lacombe, 84 N. Y. 367, 38 Am. Rep. 518. In a case recently decided a contract between a non-resident and a foreign corporation, to act as superintendent of agencies with headquarters within the state of New York, and to receive payment for his services in commissions, was held to create a cause of action for such commissions which "arose within the state," within the meaning of the statute. Strawn v. Edward J. Brandt-Dent Co., 71 N. Y. App. Div. 234, 75 N. Y. Suppl. 698 [affirmed in 175 N. Y. 463, 67 N. E. 1090].

which is a transcript of that of the former code of New York, an action can be brought against a foreign corporation by a resident of the state for any cause of action, but by a non-resident only when the cause of action shall have arisen within the state, or when the subject of it is situated within the state.[73] Such a statute, or a similar one, also exists in other states.[74]

9. Statutes Creating or Extending Right of Action Against Foreign Corporations — a. In General. The progress of statutory changes creating or extending the right of action against foreign corporations may be traced in the legislation of many jurisdictions as follows.[75]

b. Massachusetts. The operation of such statutes is clearly exhibited by a case in Massachusetts, in which state, as we have seen,[76] the early conception was that an action in personam could not be prosecuted against a foreign corporation. Here, under the operation of a statute requiring such a corporation, in order to be entitled to do business within the commonwealth, to appoint, in writing, the commissioner of corporations as its attorney, upon whom process against it might be served, jurisdiction in personam against it may be acquired, and a personal judgment may be rendered against it, valid in other jurisdictions as well as in Massachusetts.[77]

c. Missouri. Under decisions of the supreme court of that state, a foreign corporation was regarded as having been domesticated where it had its chief office or place of business within the state, and was suable there by service of summons on its ordinary agent, in like manner as a domestic corporation. Where, however, its chief office or place of business was not in Missouri, then it was necessary to proceed against it as a non-resident by attachment;[78] and if its chief place of business was not in Missouri, and it was nevertheless proceeded against by summons only, the action would be dismissed for want of jurisdiction.[79] But in the general statutory revision which took place in that state in 1879, the law was so changed as to allow service of summons on foreign corporations having no office or place of business within that state, upon any officer, agent, or

73. Central R., etc., Co. v. Georgia Constr., etc., Co., 32 S. C. 319, 11 S. E. 192. In that state an attachment is merely a provisional remedy in aid of an action, and can only issue where an action has been commenced. Therefore, where an action fails for want of jurisdiction, an attachment issued in aid of it fails with it. See supra, V, B, 6, d, (I), (B). But where the cause of action arose partly within the state of South Carolina, and partly within another state, consisting of work done upon a railroad situated partly within that state and partly within another state, it was held that the cause of action arose within the state, for the purpose of satisfying the statute and sustaining an attachment. Central R., etc., Co. v. Georgia Constr., etc., Co., supra. The above statute does not conflict with a constitutional provision (S. C. Const. art. 1, § 15), that all courts shall be public, and that any person, for any injury that he may receive in his lands, goods, person, etc., shall have remedy by due process of law. Central R., etc., Co. v. Georgia Constr., etc., Co., supra. Nor does it violate that provision of the constitution of the United States (art. 4, § 2) securing to the citizens of each state all the privileges and immunities of citizens of the several states; nor does it impair the obligation of contracts within the meaning of the same instrument (art. 1, § 10). Central R., etc., Co. v. Georgia Constr., etc., Co., supra.

74. It is so, for example, in Maryland. Fidelity Mut. L. Assoc. v. Ficklin, 74 Md. 172, 21 Atl. 680, 23 Atl. 197 (holding that under such a statute an action could be maintained in Maryland on a policy of life insurance issued by a Pennsylvania company to a resident of Virginia, where the application for the insurance, the examination of the applicant, and the delivery of the policy all took place in Maryland, and at the time and place of the delivery the payment necessary to give it validity was made to the agent of the company authorized to receive it); Cromwell v. Royal Canadian Ins. Co., 49 Md. 366; Myer v. Liverpool, etc., Ins. Co., 40 Md. 595. So in North Carolina. See Bryan v. Western Union Tel. Co., 133 N. C. 603, 45 S. E. 938.

employee, in any county where such service might be obtained.[80] The general construction of these statutes is that service of summons upon a non-resident corporation, having an office or doing business in Missouri in the manner therein provided, has the effect of personal service, and gives the court jurisdiction to enter a general judgment.[81]

d. New York. The statutes of this state have changed the original doctrine that an action in personam would not lie against a foreign corporation, by enacting that an action against a foreign corporation may be maintained by a resident of the state for any cause of action,[82] and by a non-resident in certain cases;[83] and by describing particularly how process shall be served.[84]

e. Texas. So in Texas the statute expressly provides for actions against foreign corporations and provides for service of process upon the president, vice-president, secretary, treasurer, or general manager, or upon any local agent within the state.[85]

f. Other States. Statutes providing for actions against foreign corporations doing business or found within the state and prescribing the mode of acquiring jurisdiction have also been enacted in most of the other states of the Union.[86]

W. 1069; Strain v. Chicago Portrait Co., 126 Fed. 831. The effect of this statute has been practically to domesticate non-resident corporations which have an office or agent within the state, so far as legal procedure is concerned. Such a corporation may therefore be proceeded against by garnishment, although such might not have been the case prior to the change of the statute. When so proceeded against before a justice of the peace, the non-resident corporation must take an appeal within ten days of the judgment, as required by the statute, or its appeal will be dismissed, although if it could be regarded as a non-resident it would have twenty days within which to appeal. 82. N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 1781. Upon this statutory ground, the courts of that state have jurisdiction, considered as rightful power, to proceed in an action brought by domestic shareholders of a foreign corporation to enjoin threatened breaches of trust on the part of the directors (Ives v. Smith, 3 N. Y. Suppl. 645); although it will not be proper or expedient to exercise such jurisdiction in all cases, owing to the difficulty of doing complete justice. It has been held in that state that, to enable a shareholder, suing as such, to maintain an action against a foreign corporation, it is not necessary that his stock should be registered. 10. Actions by Shareholders to Redress Grievances in Corporate Management — a. General Doctrine. This question has already been considered to some extent.[88] As a general rule, actions brought by shareholders, generally in equity, to restrain or redress frauds or breaches of trust committed by the directors or officers of the corporation, or by a majority of its shareholders in the management of its business and property,[89] can only be brought in the courts of the state under whose laws the corporation was created.[90]

b. Exceptions to Rule — (I) Where All Officers of Corporation Reside in State of Forum and All Its Property Is There. Exceptions to this rule have been declared as follows: In the first place, where all the officers of a foreign corporation reside in the state of the forum, and all its property is situated in such state, the shareholders may maintain an action there to enjoin the officers from embarking the funds and property of the corporation in a business which is ultra vires, and they are not confined to their remedy, through the action of the attorney-general in the courts of the state under whose laws the corporation was created; and the directors of such foreign corporation, residing within the state of the forum, may be required in such action to account for corporate property which they have wrongfully appropriated; although the management of the internal affairs of a foreign corporation will be usually left to the courts of the state of its incorporation.[91]

(II) Injunctions and Auxiliary Process. Another exception is that injunctions and auxiliary process may be had in courts of other states than that in which the corporation has been created.[92]

(III) Redress of Wrongful Transfer of Shares Within State of Forum. Another exception is to the effect that where an unlawful transfer of the shares of stock of a foreign corporation is made within the domestic state, through an agency there maintained by the corporation for the transfer of its shares, the wrongful act is committed within the domestic state, so that it may be redressed, under the statutory provision in relation to actions against foreign corporations by non-residents elsewhere considered,[93] giving the courts of the domestic state jurisdiction of actions by non-residents against foreign corpora-

This rule rests partly on the consideration that it is impossible to conduct proceedings of this nature without making the corporation defendant and to this end it is necessary to have service of process on the corporation (Wilkins v. Thorne, 60 Md. 253; supra, V, B, 3; and Corporations, 10 Cyc. 995); although other considerations of policy and expediency have been brought forward in support of it.

tions, where the transaction which is the subject of the action happened within the state.[94]

(IV) Specific Performance of Contract to Issue Shares or Bonds. Still another exception has been declared, to the effect that an action by a resident shareholder of a foreign corporation to obtain a specific performance of a contract of another foreign corporation, to issue stock to the former corporation or its shareholders, pursuant to an agreement for the consolidation of the two corporations, is within the jurisdiction of the courts of the domestic state.[95] On the contrary, it has been held that a foreign corporation cannot maintain a suit in equity in Massachusetts against a foreign corporation and a citizen of that commonwealth, to enforce specific performance of a covenant in a contract for the delivery of bonds and certificates of stock in payment of work to be performed by plaintiff corporation in a foreign state, and to restrain by injunction the citizen of Massachusetts from disposing, in that state, of shares of stock and bonds of the foreign corporation alleged to have been delivered to him in violation of plaintiff's rights, although the foreign corporation has an office in Massachusetts for the transfer of shares of its capital stock, and has appeared by attorney in the suit.[96]

(V) Restraining Transfer of Property Within the State to Monopolistic Trust. A bill in equity has been maintained in Illinois, by a resident shareholder of a foreign corporation, to enjoin it from transferring its real estate situated in Illinois to a corporation organized for the purpose of procuring possession of competing manufacturing plants, under an agreement that the seller will not engage in the business carried on by the corporation for a term of years, thus creating a monopoly contrary to the laws of Illinois; it appearing that the result of carrying out such an agreement would be to reduce the value of the shares owned by the complainant and to create such a monopoly as would be ground for prohibiting the foreign corporation from doing business in the state under its statute relating to monopolistic trusts.[97]

11. Actions Against Foreign Corporations Which Have Withdrawn From State of Forum or Revoked Agent's Authority. A foreign corporation which has gone into another state and done business and incurred liabilities there, cannot, by withdrawing from such state, or by returning to the state of its own domicile, escape responsibility for the obligations thus incurred; but it may be sued to enforce such obligations in a court of the state where they were incurred, provided service of process can be had upon it in the mode prescribed by statute.[98] Under some statutes it is held that where a foreign corporation comes into a state and does business, complying with the law by appointing an agent for the service of process or agreeing, expressly or impliedly, that in actions against it arising out of its business in the state process may be served on the public officer designated by statute, it cannot prevent actions against it arising out of its business in the state by withdrawing therefrom and attempting to revoke the authority to receive service of process conferred upon such agent or public officer; the appointment of the agent, for such purpose being irrevocable.[99] Under other statutes there are

12. Actions Against Foreign Corporations After Their License Has Been Revoked. The cancellation by a public officer under statutory authority, of the license to do business within the state granted to a foreign corporation after it has consented, as required by statute, that service of process upon a particular officer of the state in any action brought in the state should be a valid service upon the company, does not render such service, after the cancellation, insufficient to bring the company into a court of the state as a party defendant to a suit brought by a citizen upon a cause of action which arose out of transactions between the parties while the corporation was carrying on business in the state under the license.[3]

13. Actions Against Corporations Created by Concurrent Legislation of Several States. Such corporations are suable as domestic corporations within each of the states by whose legislation their corporate existence within that state has been created;[4] but for the purposes of federal jurisdiction it remains a citizen of the state by which it was originally created, notwithstanding it may have been also incorporated in other states.[5]

14. Local Venue of Actions Against Foreign Corporations. This is almost entirely the subject of statutory regulation, and the manifest tendency is discovered in the statutes to facilitate such actions.[6] Under statutes of Ohio a life-insurance company is suable in the county of the death of the insured and summons is properly served on an agent in another county.[7] In Idaho foreign corporations are, for the purposes of jurisdiction, non-residents of the state, and may be sued in the district court in any county in the state designated in plaintiff's complaint.[8] In West Virginia a foreign corporation doing business in the state, having no principal office or chief officer residing therein, may be sued in any county wherein it does business, where the cause of action arose out of the state, if process can be legally served in such county.[9] In Texas a corporation waives its plea of privilege under the statute to be sued in the county where it has an agent, by appearing and moving to quash the citation and agreeing on a continuance.[10]

15. Pleadings in Actions Against Foreign Corporations. It seems that, in an action against a foreign corporation, it is necessary to allege under the laws of what state defendant is incorporated;[11] although the contrary has been held in one state.[12] If the charter powers or franchises of a corporation are made the foundation of the action against it, the same must be specially pleaded in the petition or complaint; and the name of the state by which, and the substantial terms in which the charter powers or franchises were granted, should be made to appear in the petition or complaint.[13] If the complaint alleges that defendant is a foreign corporation, giving its name, and if this allegation is expressly admitted by the answer, and if the answer is signed by counsel as "defendant's attorney," and if the verification of the answer is made by an affiant, as "an officer of defendant corporation," this sufficiently establishes the identity of the corporation to dispense with proof of the same.[14] Other cases relating to the question of pleading in actions against foreign corporations are referred to in the note below.[15]

16. Actions For Dissolution and Winding Up of Foreign Corporations. These must in general be prosecuted in the state of the incorporation, and under the laws of such state; and creditors and shareholders of such a corporation, without regard to their residence, impliedly agree that such shall be the jurisdiction.[16] The local creditors, after obtaining satisfaction out of any fund deposited by the foreign corporation within the state for their security, can only participate in the general distribution of the assets of the corporation, to the extent of the unpaid balances of their claims.[17] And they are only entitled to participate in the general distribution of the corporate assets to the extent of equalizing their dividends with those of domestic creditors, and are not entitled to share in such distribution if the dividend received from the foreign state exceeds the dividend paid on the general distribution.[18]

15. Complaint, declaration, petition, or bill. — The complaint in an action against a foreign corporation must allege the facts necessary to show jurisdiction, as, under the New York statute (see supra, V, B, 8, c, (I)), that plaintiff is a resident, or, if a nonresident, that the cause of action arose within the state, etc. Coolidge v. American Realty Co., 91 N. St. Rep. 768, 2 L. R. A. 405. In an action against a foreign corporation on a contract made by it while doing business in the state, it is not necessary that the complaint shall allege compliance on the part of defendant with the local statutes, so as to be entitled to do business in the state, particularly where the corporation cannot set up its noncompliance as a defense. A petition in an action against a foreign corporation, averring that defendant is a corporation doing business in the state, and has a local agent representing it in the county where the suit is filed, is sufficient to confer jurisdiction over it, although it is not alleged that such corporation has obtained a permit to do business in the state. Home Forum Ben. Order v. Jones, 20 Tex. Civ. App. 68, 48 S. W. 219. In an action on a policy of insurance issued by a foreign company, it is not necessary to state in the declaration how it was incorporated, or that it had power to enter into the contract, or to sue and be sued. Gerow v. Providence Washington Ins. Co., 26 N. Brunsw. 142. An allegation in a special plea to the jurisdiction, or to the venue, that defendant corporation had a local agent in another county than the one in which it is sued sufficiently shows that it is doing business within the state, within the meaning of a statute relating to jurisdiction of actions against foreign corporations. 17. Effect of Dissolution of Foreign Corporation on Actions Against It. In the absence of a statute an action cannot be commenced or continued against a foreign corporation after it has been dissolved by expiration of its charter, judgment of a competent court of its domicile, or otherwise;[19] but this rule has been changed in some states by statute.[20] In some cases it has been held that a statute of the state of the forum continuing the existence of dissolved corporations for a prescribed period from the date of their dissolution, for the purpose of prosecuting or defending suits, etc., has no application to foreign corporations.[21] And it has been held that a statute of the state of the domicile of a corporation, making its directors and managers trustees for the purpose of winding up its affairs, is not operative outside such state for the purpose of continuing actions against it; since the mode of continuing actions against foreign corporations is a matter of practice governed by the law of the forum.[22]

And where, pending an action against a foreign corporation, it ceases to exist by reason of a judgment of a competent court in the state of its domicile, plaintiff in such action cannot take supplementary proceedings on a judgment subsequently recovered against it in the state, and examine a third party as to property of the corporation alleged to be in his hands. FORFEIT.[50] As a noun, that which is forfeited or lost by neglect of duty;[51] something lost by the commission of a crime; something paid for the expiation of the crime;[52] or in other words, a fine,[53] a mulct;[54] a penalty;[55] a forfeiture;[56] that which is or may be taken from one in requital of a misdeed committed — that which is lost, or the right to which is alienated by a crime, offence, neglect of duty, or breach of contract;[57] not merely that which is actually taken from a man by reason of some breach of condition, but also that which becomes liable to be so taken.[58] As an adjective, in its usual and common meaning, lost, by omission or negligence or misconduct;[59] liable to penal seizure; alienated by a crime, lost either as to right or possession by breach of conditions.[60] As a verb, to lose, and this is also its legal meaning;[61] to lose by some breach of condition, to lose by some offense;[62] to do away or lose, to do or put away a property or right, to alienate or lose (by misdeed or transgression);[63] and the term is frequently construed as meaning "to pay."[64] (See, generally, FORFEITURES.)

50. Derivation.—"From the French 'fors,' 'out of,' 'faire,' 'to do, or cause to be out of,' away from, and consequently 'transgredi,' to transgress or do amiss, misdo, and also 'rem suam amittere,' (sc. ex delicto) to do away or lose his property (sc. for some crime)." Commercial Bank v. Cotton, 17 U. C. C. P. 447, 455 [quoting Johnson Dict.].

The meaning of the word, has to be determined by the connection in which it is used. —When used in civil proceedings and in connection with the enforcement of civil rights, it contemplates an ordinary civil judgment, which need not even be penal in its character. But, when used in a criminal law to denote a punishment for a statutory crime, the meaning of the word is equivalent to fine. Ex p. Alexander, 39 Mo. I. DEFINITION.

Forfeiture, as the term is used in this article, is the divestiture of specific property without compensation in consequence of some default or act forbidden by law.[1]

II. COMMON-LAW AND STATUTORY IN REM FORFEITURES.[2]

A. Distinguished and Compared. In many cases of forfeiture for a felony committed at common law, forfeiture did not strictly speaking attach in rem; but it was a part or at least a consequence of the judgment or conviction, and

1. See Union Glass Co. v. New Castle First Nat. Bank, 10 Pa. Co. Ct. 565, 572.

2. Vesting of title under common-law and statutory forfeiture see infra, VII.

Distinguished from "escheat" see 2 Blackstone Comm. 251. See also ESCHEAT, 16 Cyc. 549, note 1, where it is said escheat is to the lord, but forfeiture is to the crown.

therefore no right to the goods and chattels of a felon could be acquired by the crown from the mere commission of the offense, but the right attached only by the conviction of the offender. In the contemplation of the common law the offender's right was not divested until the conviction.[3] But this doctrine never was applied to seizures and forfeitures created by statute in rem, cognizable on the revenue side of the exchequer. The thing was there primarily considered as the offender, or rather the offense was attached primarily to the thing, and this, whether the offense be malum prohibitum or malum in se.[4]

B. Owner's Knowledge or Consent. It therefore follows that when the thing is inculpated under an in rem statutory provision it may be forfeited, although the act which caused the forfeiture was not done by or with the consent or knowledge of the owner.[5] There are circumstances, however, where the thing may be inculpated according to the letter of the statute, but where the courts refuse to enforce a forfeiture, as being contrary to the spirit and meaning of the statute.[6]

III. GROUNDS OF AND PROPERTY SUBJECT TO FORFEITURE.

By the early law[7] lands and tenements were forfeited to the crown for treason. For petit treason and felony all personal estates and real property and the profits of freehold estates during life were forfeited absolutely, and after death all the offender's lands and tenements in fee simple (but not those in fee tail[8]) were forfeited for a short period of time. Goods and chattels were also forfeited for the higher kinds of offenses, as high treason, or misprision of treason, petit treason, felonies of all sorts, etc.[9] Lands were forfeited only upon attainder but goods and chattels were forfeited by conviction.[10] In some of the American colonies a forfeiture of land might be had upon conviction of a felony,[11] and during the American Revolution statutes were passed by the colonies by which persons loyal to the king forfeited their estates, real and personal.[12]

IV. EXTENT.

A person cannot forfeit a greater estate or right in property inculpated than he himself had.[13]

V. STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

A statute imposing a forfeiture should be construed strictly and in a manner as favorable to the person whose property is to be seized as is consistent with the fair principles of interpretation.[14] An act of congress which provides for a forfeiture, and a joint resolution of the same date explaining the act and defining its operation, must be construed together.[15] It is an established rule that where an action for the recovery of a penalty or a proceeding to enforce a forfeiture prescribed in a legislative act is pending at the time of the repeal of the act or is instituted after the repeal, such repeal is a bar to the action or proceeding, in the absence of a saving clause in the repealing act.[16] A statute which prescribes

Under the act of July 17, 1862, by which congress authorized the confiscation of property of those who had taken part in the Civil war against the federal government, and under the joint resolution of the same date, all that could be forfeited was a life-interest in the property of the person for whose offense it had been seized. Bigelow v. Forrest, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 339, 19 L. ed. 696. See also Szymanski v. Zunts, 20 Fed. 361, where the court said that the effect of the statute as modified by the joint resolution of the same date was to take from the offender and owner by a decree of condemnation all his estate, leaving him only the naked capacity to transmit to his heirs, devisees, or legatees; or in other words property condemned under the statute ceased by the decree to belong to the estate of the offender, save for the single purpose of designating in whom it may vest upon his death.

14. Trueman v. 403 Quarter Casks Gunpowder, Thach Cr. Cas. (Mass.) 14. Furthermore the courts will always give such a construction to statutes providing for forfeitures as will be consistent with justice and the dictates of natural reason, although contrary to the strict letter of the law; and therefore the strict letter of the law will not be enforced against persons who could not possibly be informed of its enactment, although there be no proviso in the statute to that effect. Ham v. McClaws, 1 Bay (S. C.) 93. A statute which provides that "if any penalty, forfeiture or punishment be mitigated by any provision of the new law, such provision may, with the consent of the party affected, be applied to any judgment pronounced after the new law takes effect" applies to a forfeiture in a civil as well as in a criminal case. Mosby v. St. Louis Mut. Ins. Co., 31 Gratt. (Va.) 629, 634, where the court said: "The language used is general enough to embrace both civil and criminal cases. If it had been the intention of the legislature to confine the provision to criminal cases alone, it would not have used the words 'the party affected' thereby, but the word 'accused,' or some similar word indicating a criminal offence."

A statute which makes any discrimination by a railroad in its charges for freight a penal offense and provides, without any other penalty for the first offense, for the forfeiture of all its franchises for any wilful violation of the act, is opposed to the spirit of a constitutional provision that all penalties shall be proportioned to the nature of the offense, and is a violation of the spirit of the very clause of the constitution under which the act is formed and which requires the legislature to pass laws to prevent unjust discrimination and extortion by railroad corporations and enforce such laws by adequate penalties, to the extent, if necessary for that purpose, of forfeiture of their property and franchises. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. People, 67 Ill. 11, 27, 16 Am. Rep. 99, where the court said: "Would it not be better to enforce the law by a series of considerable and increasing fines, before imposing the final penalty of forfeiture? A law admitting of but one penalty, and that of the harshest possible character, will necessarily be subjected by the courts to close criticism and a strict construction."

Under a constitutional provision that no conviction of a crime shall work a "forfeiture of estate," no man's property can be forfeited as a punishment for crime, and no man can be deprived of the use of his property unless it be necessary in order to abate an existing nuisance. Miller v. State, 3 Ohio St. 475.

Under a statute providing for the forfeiture of gunpowder under certain conditions and for the regulation by the fire-wards of the transportation and receipt of gunpowder within a city, the fire-wards have no authority to create a cause of forfeiture not authorized by the act. Trueman v. 403 Quarter Casks Gunpowder, Thach. Cr. Cas. (Mass.) 14.

Under a statute which makes void conveyances and imposes forfeitures upon him who buys and upon him who sells land when the seller is ousted of the possession, a person or corporation is not ousted of possession within the meaning of the statute when its lessee is in possession. Emerson v. Goodwin, 9 Conn. 422.

But by the express provision of U. S. Rev. St. § 13, the repeal of a statute does not release any penalty, forfeiture, or liability incurred unless the repealing act so provides.

generally as to the forfeiture of the property is not void because it omits to provide for the mode of disposal of the property after its forfeiture.[17]

VI. ENFORCEMENT.

A. Necessity of Judicial Determination. There can be no forfeiture of property unless the forfeiture be judicially determined.[18] A statute or ordinance which allows the seizure and confiscation of a person's property by ministerial officers without inquiry before a court or an opportunity of being heard in his own defense is a violation of the elementary principles of law and the constitution.[19]

B. Seizure[20] — 1. RIGHT OF. To justify an officer in making a seizure, there must be reasonable ground to believe that some offense has been committed.[21]

2. BY WHOM MADE. It is a general rule that any person may seize any property forfeited to the use of the government, either by the municipal law, or by the law of prize, for the purpose of enforcing the forfeiture.[22]

C. Action — 1. JURISDICTION.[23] To institute and perfect a proceeding in rem in the United States courts to enforce a forfeiture, it is necessary that the thing inculpated should be actually[24] or constructively within the reach of the court.[25] A seizure is necessary,[26] for it is the preliminary seizure of the property that brings it within the reach of legal process.[27] The place of seizure when made determines as to what court takes jurisdiction.[28]

2. FORM OF ACTION AND METHOD OF PROCEDURE.[29] It has been said that, if no form of prosecution or of action to enforce a forfeiture imposed by statute has been prescribed, debt will lie when the action is brought by an individual;[30] or if the government should be the party plaintiff, an information will lie, upon common-law principles.[31]

3. DEFENSES. If a person sets up the defense of vis major, he must make out the vis major so as to leave no doubt of his innocence.[32] If defendant seeks to avail himself of a defense granted him by a law passed subsequent to the incurring of the forfeiture, he must take it subject to such terms and conditions as the legislature, at the time when it passed this beneficial law, or at any future time, might please to prescribe.[33]

4. PARTIES. In an action by an informer to recover damages and forfeitures for collecting false claims from the United States treasury, the informer represents the United States both in the suit itself and in all suits and proceedings in aid of execution or to enforce judgment and is entitled to control the same.[34] In admiralty in prize cases it is irregular for an informer to blend in the libel the right of the United States and of the informer in the manner of a qui tam action at common law.[35]

5. PLEADING — a. The Libel or Information.[36] There are no substantial distinctions between the proper structure of and rules governing libels of information and informations for municipal forfeitures.[37] A libel or information must contain a substantial statement of the offense,[38] pleaded without vagueness or uncertainty.[39] Technical nicety and precision such as are required in an indictment are not necessary to a libel[40] or to an information,[41] yet the allegations must be sufficiently specific to enable the claimant to traverse them and to let the court

36. An "information" in forfeiture proceedings in a correct and technical use is a proceeding against property liable to seizure and condemnation where the seizure was on land and the proceedings fell on the exchequer side of the court. As in a declaration the causes of action are set out in a distinct count, subject to all the rules which govern such rules of pleading. U. S. v. Twenty-five Barrels Alcohol, 28 Fed. Cas. see that if proved a violation of the law exists.[42] In general it is sufficient if the offense be described or charged in the words of the statute defining the offense.[43] It is not essential to aver the manner or agency by which the property was arrested, unless it be in prize cases.[44] An information need not show that the case was not within the exemption of a proviso of the statute, for this is matter of defense.[45] In the federal courts a libel must allege that the property has been seized, for the seizure is necessary to give the court jurisdiction, and therefore the objection to a libel on this ground may be made after the filing of a plea.[46] An information for a statutory forfeiture should conclude "against the form of the statute," or at least refer to some subsisting statute authorizing the forfeiture.[47]

b. Defendant's Pleadings. No form of general issue[48] is allowable to a libel, information, or libel of information, under the rules of the federal courts; but each article therein should be specially met by a distinct article in the answer, admitting or controverting its allegations, or admitting part, and controverting part, as the case may be.[49] A plea of no forfeiture is like a plea of not guilty to an indictment and puts in issue all the material allegations of the libel of information.[50] If an information in rem be on the exchequer side of the court, a demurrer, not a motion to quash, is the proper mode of reaching technical or substantial defects.[51] If a libel in admiralty fails to state the grounds of forfeiture relied upon in distinct allegations, as required by admiralty rules,[52] the remedy of the claimant is by motion to make it more definite.[53] The conclusion in the answer to a libel, information, or libel of information should not be to the country, but a simple prayer for restitution.[54]

6. Issues, Proof, and Variance. Substantial defects in the allegations are not cured by proof of facts which ought to have been alleged, for the decree must be according to the allegations as well as proof.[55]

A general verdict for the condemnation of goods mentioned in the information is supported, if any one of several counts is good,

7. Verdict. In informations on penal statutes for forfeitures against several charged with malfeasance, on not guilty pleaded, the jury may convict some of defendants of the whole or of part of the offense charged and may acquit others.[56]

8. Judgment, Execution, and Disposition of Proceeds.[57] In a prosecution for an offense against a statute which enacts a fine, and also a forfeiture of the utensils by which the offense is committed, on conviction, the judgment ought to be for the utensils, not for their value.[58] The fact that a good defense existed against a decree of condemnation, but which was not pleaded before decree, will not avoid the decree.[59] Before execution can be awarded on a judgment of forfeiture, when scire facias has sued out, there must be service, or a return of two nihils, unless defendant voluntarily appears.[60] If there be a change of venue in a criminal case from one county to another and a forfeiture be adjudicated, it belongs to the county where the offense was committed and the indictment found.[61]

VII. Operation and Effect.

When forfeiture accrues at common law, nothing vests in the government until some legal step shall be taken for the assertion of the rights, and then for many purposes the doctrine of relation[62] vests the title as of the time of the commission of the offense.[63] If, however, a forfeiture is provided for by statute, it is said that the rule of the common law does not apply, and the thing forfeited may vest either immediately or on performance of some particular act, as shall be the will of the legislature.[64] If the forfeiture is declared by statute in absolute terms, not in the alternative,[65] it is held by the great weight of authority that the forfeiture takes place at the time the prohibited act is committed and the owner is divested of title eo instanti, the forfeiture operating as a statutory transfer of title to the government.[66] In spite of these authorities it seems that the rule as above expressed is not strictly correct; in the vast number of instances the statute does not operate suo motu, but on the contrary becomes inoperative, and the title of the wrong-doer remains unaffected unless the government chooses to enforce the forfeiture; when, however, the government has once consummated its title by taking the proper steps, the title vests absolutely and for all purposes by relation to the time of the commission of the prohibited act, and the wrong-doer's title is divested from that time;[67] and the usual rule that the doctrine of relation, being a mere fiction of law, will be resorted to only for the purposes of justice, never where it will work an injustice, does not apply, for a purchaser who bona fide buys the thing after the commission of the forbidden act gets no title or right as against the government.[68] A warranty given by the offender after the commission of the forbidden act has no effect upon the thing if it is subsequently decreed to be forfeited.[69] If the statute which provides for the forfeiture authorizes the proper officer to seize the thing named,[70] or if a

If goods thus bought are mixed bona fide with other property, free from forfeiture, so that they can no longer be identified, the courts in enforcing the forfeiture cannot make any division of the aggregate between the claimant and the government; and if this by reason of the admixture necessitates the delivery of the other the unfortunate purchaser must bear the loss. right to sue for the violation of the statute be given to any one,[71] title does not vest ipso facto by the prohibited act being done, but relates only to the time of seizure[72] or to adjudging of the forfeiture in a suit begun,[73] unless it be specially provided by statute that the forfeiture be instantaneous upon the commission of the forbidden act.[74] A satisfaction of a judgment in forfeiture is not a bar to an action for a penalty for a breach of the law by means of the same piece of property, and the forfeiture and the penalty may be claimed by the same person where the causes and circumstances giving rise to the forfeiture and to the penalty are independent.[75] A decree condemning as forfeited an estate for the life of the owner does not immediately cast the entire beneficial estate in the property upon his children, so as to make them, while he is still living, his heirs.[76] The fact that all of a person's property was forfeited to the state and confiscated for its benefit does not relieve a prior owner from liability for his antecedent contracts with citizens of the state.[77]

VIII. TITLE OF PURCHASER AT SALE UNDER DECREE.

Whoever sets up title under a condemnation is bound to show that the court had jurisdiction of the cause; and that the sentence has been rightly pronounced, upon the application of parties competent to ask it.[78]

IX. RIGHTS AND REMEDIES OF INFORMERS.[79]

The information given must not be based upon mere suspicions or rumors,[80] but must be of such a nature as to conduce to a condemnation.[81] It is not necessary that the information should be so full as to result, independently of other evidence, in condemnation,[82] or so full as the evidence in the case would authorize. It is sufficient if it induces a prosecution.[83] The right of the informer to his share in the proceeds of a forfeiture is determined by the laws and regulations in force at the time his right vests,[84] and cannot be affected by subsequent regulations.[85] Neither the consent of the informer that the thing seized should be sent from the district of the seizure to another district,[86] nor his disavowal of having instituted suit,[87] nor even his misconduct in conniving with the person informed against to defraud the government of the fund of the seizure,[88] constitutes a waiver of or will defeat the informer's right to his share of the forfeiture.

It is not necessary that an informer should make his claim to part of the forfeiture at the time of giving the information,[89] or that he should afterward take part in the prosecution.[90] Officers of a revenue cutter who furnished information were allowed to join in an action of assumpsit against the collector for their share of a forfeiture under the Non-Intercourse Act of 1809.[91] An informer's share in the registry of the court should be decreed to be paid directly to the persons beneficially interested and entitled to hold it.[92] If the proceeds of a condemnation are brought into an admiralty court, the court may decree an informer his proportion, before it is paid over to the collector.[93]

X. REMISSION.

The officer's[94] power of remission is limited by the law which gives him the power.[95] If the officer remits the forfeiture pursuant to his statutory authority the cause of forfeiture is released.[96] At common law the crown could not remit a forfeiture so as to affect legal rights properly vested in third persons.[97] At the present time, if the rights of individuals in the thing forfeited have not vested, an officer of the government to whom is given by statute the general power to remit forfeitures may, when he exercises power, remit the individuals' interests

I. DEFINITION.

Forgery is the false making or materially altering, with intent to defraud, of any writing which, if genuine, might apparently be of legal efficacy, or the foundation of a legal liability.[1]

II. STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

A. Effect on Common Law. The offense of forgery is now defined in many states by statute. In such case the statute does not repeal the common law,[2] but

Other definitions are: "The false making of an instrument, which purports on the face of it to be good and valid for the purposes for which it was created, with a design to defraud any person or persons." Jones' Case, 2 East P. C. 991, 1 Leach C. C. 36.

False pretenses distinguished.— Where the false pretense made use of to obtain money or property is a written instrument, the resulting crime is sometimes forgery or the uttering of a forged instrument, and sometimes obtaining property by false pretense. If the instrument used is false in itself and is one which if genuine would create some right or liability, obtaining property on the faith of it is forgery or the uttering of a forged instrument as the case may be (People v. Peacock, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 72; Mathews v. State, 33 Tex. 102; Witherspoon v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1896) 37 S. W. 433; Hirschfield v. State, 11 Tex. merely prescribes a different punishment, in the cases enumerated in it, from that provided by the common law.[3]

B. Construction. In some cases the statute is very broad in its terms, and covers any writing which can be used to defraud;[4] but where the language of the statute is less comprehensive it is essential to a conviction thereunder that the instrument be of the character designated by the statute,[5] although such language section,[8] unless the wording of the statute is so broad as to indicate that the rule of ejusdem generis does not apply.[9] Where the sections of a statute are conflicting, the one prescribing the lightest punishment is at least valid;[10] and where a statute is passed between the time of forging an instrument and the uttering of it, a conviction may be had for the latter, if within the statute, although not for the former.[11] Where a statute contains typographical errors the court will give effect to the statute according to its true meaning if this be apparent from the context.[12]

III. ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE.

A. In General. To constitute the crime of forgery it is essential that three things should exist: (1) There must be a false making or other alteration of some instrument in writing;[13] (2) there must be a fraudulent intent;[14] and (3) the instrument must be apparently capable of effecting a fraud.[15]

B. Making or Alteration of Instrument — 1. In General. The first element[16] of the offense of forgery is the false making or alteration of some instrument in writing.[17] The forgery may consist in making the entire instrument,[18] or in altering an existing one.[19]

2. Making Entire Instrument — a. Writing Over a Genuine Signature. Where a person procures the signature of another upon a blank paper, and, without authority from the latter, writes a promissory note or other apparently valid instrument above it, he is guilty of forgery.[20] And the rule is the same where an agent, having the genuine signature of his principal with instructions to write an instrument in a certain way, disobeys his instructions.[21] Nor does it make any difference that the signature is printed, if the instrument, when completed, possesses an apparent validity.[22]

b. Improper Exercise of Authority. Although a person is authorized to sign the name of another to certain documents, yet if he signs such name to a false document it is forgery.[23] An officer, public or private, who is authorized to issue certain instruments in his official capacity is guilty of forgery if he issues a false document, although signed with his own name.[24] But one who executes an instrument purporting on its face to be executed by him as agent of a principal therein named, when in fact he has no authority from such principal to execute said instrument, is not guilty of forgery, as the instrument is nothing different from what it purports to be, the act being a false pretense.[25]

c. Use of Maker's Own Name. If a person signs his own name, or an assumed name which he has been accustomed to use, and represents that it is the signature of another person bearing the same name he is guilty of forgery.[26]

d. Obtaining Signature by Fraud. Forging may be committed by deceitfully and fraudulently obtaining the signature of a party to an instrument which he has no intention to sign.[27]

3. Alteration of Existing Instrument — a. In General. Alteration of an existing instrument with intent to defraud is forgery;[28] and this is so, although the one making the alteration is jointly liable upon the instrument.[29] Nor is it requisite that the instrument should be a valid one, as it is forgery to alter a document which the party himself has previously forged.[30] Alteration may be accomplished by adding something to the instrument, by removing something therefrom, or by a combination of these two.[31]

The making of any part of a genuine note, which may give it a greater currency, is forgery; therefore, if a note is made payable at a country banker's or at his banker's in London, who fails, it is forgery to alter the name of that London banker to the name of another London banker, with whom the maker makes his other notes payable after the failure of the first. Rex v. Treble, 2 Taunt. 328, R. & R. 164.

Transposing stamps.— It was the duty of a clerk in the stamp office to cut off the corners of parchments which bore the blue paper stamps allowed for as spoiled by the commissioners of stamps and to put the blue paper stamps and the small pieces of parchment so cut off, and which were glued to them, into the fire, without separating them. Instead of doing this, he separated a blue paper stamp from the small piece of parchment to which it had been glued and glued it to a new skin of parchment in which the words "This indenture" had been written. The jury found that he had no fraudulent intent when he cut the stamp from the skin of parchment, but that he had when he separated the blue paper stamp from the small piece of parchment; and that he then intended to apply the stamp to a parchment intended to be used as an indenture. It was held that this was forgery. Rex v. Smith, 5 C. & P. 107, 1 Moody C. C. 314, 24 E. C. L. 476.

b. By Addition. Any addition to an instrument so as to give it a different meaning is forgery.[32] Likewise adding the name of another without authority to an instrument which bears genuine signatures,[33] the addition of an address to the name of a party with intent to make him appear to be a different existing person,[34] or affixing a seal to a genuine signature to a document which is invalid without a seal is forgery.[35]

c. By Subtraction. Erasing words from an instrument[36] or severing a portion thereof[37] so that its effect is changed is forgery.

d. By Substitution. Any change made in the name of a place,[38] in the date,[39] amount,[40] the name of a party to,[41] or in the subject-matter[42] of, an instrument with intent to prejudice the rights of another is sufficient to constitute the offense.

e. Immaterial Alterations. In order that an alteration may constitute forgery it is essential that it be material.[43] Adding the name of a witness which is not required and which does not affect the validity of the instrument,[44] the addition of a figure in the margin, the body remaining unchanged,[45] or a change

C. Intent to Defraud — 1. In General. The second essential element[47] in the crime of forgery is that the act must have been committed with fraudulent intent;[48] hence a person who in good faith[49] or in ignorance of the effect of his act[50] makes or alters an instrument is not guilty of the offense. An interlineation of words in a document to make it conform to the understanding of the parties at the time of its execution[51] is not forgery; nor is making or altering an instrument with the honest belief in authority to do so.[52] A fortiori one who possesses authority, express or implied, cannot be guilty,[53] although the person giving the authority knows nothing about the execution of the instrument.[54] The intent to defraud is not limited to obtaining money or property; it is sufficient if the wrongfully inserted between the dollar mark and the figures "70" in the upper margin of a check, making it appear to be for $3.70 instead of $.70. This was regarded as a material alteration, although the body of the check was unaltered. It was in a prominent part, and the written amount required closer observation.

forged instrument is to the prejudice of the rights of some person.[55] Nor is it requisite that the expected advantage should accrue to the guilty person.[56] The intent to defraud cannot be overcome by the fact that the forgery was not successful, and that no one has been prejudiced;[57] nor by the fact that the person committing the forgery intended to take up the forged instrument,[58] or has actually paid it.[59] It is no defense that the person apparently made liable upon the forged instrument is indebted to the person who committed the forgery, and that the latter intended to devote the money obtained by means of the instrument to the payment of the debt;[60] nor that the person committing the forgery has given guaranties to the person to whom he has passed the instrument.[61] Likewise criminal intent in forging an instrument to be used as evidence cannot be negatived by proof that the claim to be supported by such evidence is a just one.[62] It is no defense that the person committing the forgery was actuated by a laudable purpose;[63] nor that he expected that the person whose name he used would pay the instrument rather than there should be a criminal prosecution;[64] nor that the consideration for the instrument was illegal.[65] The intent to defraud is not absent because defendant requested the person to whom the forged instruments were passed to place them in his safe.[66] So it has been held that the intent to defraud is not absent merely because defendant said at the time the instruments were passed that the person whose name was signed had not actually

2. PERSON DEFRAUDED. While an intent to defraud is essential, it is not necessary that there should be an intent to defraud any particular person,[68] but there must at all events be a possibility of some person being defrauded.[69] A corporation,[70] a state,[71] the United States,[72] and the estate of a decedent[73] are each regarded as a person; and where the forged instrument is passed to a servant acting as such, the master is the person defrauded.[74] Where a society is the person defrauded, it is no objection that defendant is a member thereof.[75]

3. WHEN INTENT TO DEFRAUD INSUFFICIENT. While there can be no forgery without a fraudulent intent, it does not follow that every intent to defraud, although coupled with a written instrument, is forgery.[76] Procuring the execution,[77] or the acceptance[78] of a document by a misrepresentation as to its contents, or the ratification of an alteration in an instrument by a misstatement of facts,[79] is not forgery. ment, which results in the issuance to him of an order, it is not forgery;[80] nor is the indorsement in his own name of a check received by one as the result of his false pretenses.[81] So making or procuring to be made a writing genuine in itself, but containing false statements, is not within a statute providing a punishment for falsely making or procuring to be falsely made a writing, etc.[82] The receipt and collection of an order for a larger amount than the payee knows to be due him is not forgery;[83] nor is the fraudulent indorsement of genuine negotiable instruments, in which the interest of the holder has ceased;[84] nor the uttering of a bill with a genuine indorsement under the pretense of being the indorser.[85] Likewise the indorsement by a person in his own name of an order payable to one bearing a similar name, and the payment to him of such order without noticing the difference in names, does not constitute forgery;[86] nor does a false assertion of authority to receive a debt.[87] Drawing a bill for the purpose of fraud, by one who knows that it will be dishonored,[88] although accepted,[89] is no forgery, even if the name signed be fictitious, credit being given entirely to the party signing.[90] If a mortgagor at the time of making a mortgage owns the property mentioned therein, and intends it to be covered thereby, he is not guilty of forgery, whatever steps he may subsequently take in regard to such property.[91]

Alteration before signature.— An alteration made in an instrument after it has been signed by one party, but before it has been one which if genuine might injure another. This proposition is so obvious that the mere statement thereof proves it.[95]

IV. WHAT WRITINGS ARE SUBJECTS OF FORGERY.

A. In General — 1. Introductory Statement. Forgery may be committed of any writing which if genuine would operate as the foundation of another man's liability,[96] or the evidence of his right.[97] It is sufficient if the instrument forged, supposing it to be genuine, might have been prejudicial.[98] There need not be an exact resemblance between a false instrument and the instrument for which it is intended to pass;[99] nor is it requisite that the writing should bear any resemblance to that of the person whose writing it purports to be.[1] And it is no defense that there was no attempt at concealment, and that only a careless person could have been deceived.[2]

2. Void Instruments. As already shown it is an element of the offense of forgery that the writing alleged to be forged shall possess some apparent legal efficacy.[3] Consequently an instrument void on its face,[4] because meaningless,[5] indefinite,[6] or expressing no consideration,[7] or lacking a payee,[8] a signature,[9] a signed by all, is not forgery. Gaertner v. Heyl, 179 Pa. St. 391, 36 Atl. 146; Johnson v. State, 40 Tex. Cr. 605, 51 S. W. 382, 76 Am. St. Rep. 742.

seal,[10] or sufficient witnesses[11] cannot be the subject of forgery. So forgery cannot be predicated of an unacknowledged deed,[12] unless the deed possesses a validity without such acknowledgment;[13] nor of the acknowledgment itself if invalid;[14] nor of an instrument which should be proven under oath, but which is not.[15] Instruments issued by a public officer which are not properly signed,[16] or upon which a pecuniary obligation cannot be based, are not the subjects of forgery.[17] However, an instrument which is valid in part may be the subject of forgery.[18]

3. Non-Enforceable Contracts. Contracts which upon their face are voidable only, or to which the defense would be personal merely, are subjects of forgery. Such are usurious notes,[19] instruments purporting to have been made on Sunday,[20] or notes barred by limitation.[21] So a contract prohibited by law may be the subject of forgery,[22] and this it has been held is true whether the contract is merely voidable,[23] or is absolutely void.[24]

4. Instruments No Longer in Force. An instrument which has accomplished its purpose, and has been returned to the party who originally issued it, is in legal acceptation no instrument, and an alteration therein is not forgery.[25]

5. Instruments Not Conforming to Statutes. An instrument which is not executed in strict conformity with the requirements of a statute may be the subject of forgery.[26] Likewise it is no defense that the amount called for in the false writing is in excess of that which is legally allowable,[27] nor that the instrument does not bear a revenue stamp.[28] Process of court, although irregularly issued,[29] or a nullity,[30] is the subject of forgery.

6. Instruments Invalid From Extrinsic Facts. An instrument cannot be said to be incapable of effecting fraud because by extraneous evidence it can be shown to be of no validity. Such instruments are nevertheless subjects of forgery.[31] Hence it is immaterial that the name signed is that of a person under legal disability,[32] or dead,[33] or that the name is fictitious.[34] It is also immaterial that the purported grantor in a false deed had no interest in the land described

Instances.— Where a false warrant or order is not signed in the customary manner, it is sufficient if, under the statute, either method would be legal (Claiborne v. State, 51 Ark. 88, 9 S. W. 851; Crain v. State, 45 Ark. 450; Langdale v. People, 100 Ill. 263); and in making a certificate, it is enough if the statute is substantially complied with (People v. Filkin, 83 N. Y. App. Div. 589, 82 N. Y. Suppl. 15). The fact that a certificate was uttered after the repeal of a law, but purporting to have been issued for a bounty earned while the law was in force, does not deprive it of validity on its face so as to prevent it from being the subject of forgery. To be the subject of forgery it is not necessary that an instrument be perfect;[37] it is sufficient if it is in accordance with the accustomed dealings between the parties.[38] The omission of the date,[39] of the name of the payee[40] or the name of a drawee,[41] of the amount,[42] or of the dollar mark[43] does not invalidate the instrument, these facts being shown by extrinsic evidence. The signature is not required to be at the end;[44] and it may be given by initials.[45] The omission of the mark, where the signature purports to be by mark, is not fatal.[46] Nor is an incomplete description in a deed, where there is enough to identify the land.[47] A paper is not invalid on its face because certain steps have to be taken to give it complete legal effect, and those successive steps have not been taken;[48] nor is it any defense, where the instrument forms one of a chain of false instruments, that the connected parts, taken together, show such a discrepancy as would cause a failure of the fraudulent purpose.[49]

An instrument is not unmeaning because ungrammatical,[50] or because of a transposition of words therein.[51] The misspelling of words[52] or names,[53] or the signing of a wrong christian name,[54] or by mark,[55] is no defense to a prosecution for forgery.

B. Particular Instruments — 1. NOTES, CHECKS, BONDS, OR RECEIPTS. Instruments showing a legal liability on the part of the party whose name is purported to be signed thereto to pay a sum of money are subjects of forgery;[56] but it is otherwise as to an instrument not payable in money, nor to the bearer on demand, and which the maker only promised to take in payment.[57] Where a promissory note is, after being indorsed by the payee, altered by the maker and discounted by him, it is a forgery of the note, and not of the indorsement.[58] Checks are subjects of forgery,[59] although post-dated.[60] So a receipt is the subject of forgery,[61] provided it would operate as the foundation of another's lia-entry[77] in a public record with intent to deceive is forgery; and it is no defense that it is done to make it correspond with the facts as they ought to be, but which are apparently otherwise.[78] Likewise making a false entry[79] in or an alteration[80] of the private accounts of another, although by the one who made the original entries, is forgery.[81] But it is otherwise as to an alteration by a man of his own account-book[82] unless such account has been settled and signed.[83]

VI. UTTERING OF FORGED INSTRUMENT.

A. In General. Uttering is offering a forged instrument, knowing it to be such, whether such offer is accepted or not, with a representation, by words or actions, that it is genuine, and with an intent to defraud;[13] and it is a public offense.[14] While the making of a forged instrument and the uttering it by the same person as one transaction constitute but one offense,[15] one may be guilty of uttering an instrument forged by another,[16] but to constitute the offense it is essential that the person uttering the forged instrument have actual knowledge of its falsity.[17] It is not sufficient that a person uttering an instrument has reasonable cause to believe it was forged.[18] So there must be an intent to defraud.[19] The uttering of an instrument which is not a forgery is not within the definition;[20] yet the uttering of a false instrument, with intent to defraud, is an offense, although there was lack of evil intent in the person who fabricated

Forgery in third and fourth degree.— In Alabama any forgery which does not amount to forgery in the first or second degree is in the third degree. Murphy v. State, 118 Ala. 137, 23 So. 719. In Missouri making a promissory note for one hundred and twenty-five dollars, and signing it with a fictitious name, is forgery in the third degree. State v. Jackson, 90 Mo. 156, 2 S. W. 128. it;[21] uttering, like forgery,[22] may be through an innocent agent;[23] but mere delivery to an agent, whether innocent or not, with intent to have a forged instrument passed as genuine, is not an uttering so long as the agent has not parted with the possession.[24]

B. Specific Instances of Uttering. Passing an instrument, although not indorsed, is an uttering;[25] and so is presenting an instrument for payment,[26] or pledging it.[27] Collecting money on a forged instrument is an uttering whether or not it is produced at the time payments are received.[28] Exhibiting to the county treasurer a forged license to teach as evidence of a right to receive compensation is an uttering.[29] Presenting a forged document for record,[30] or taking any step in a judicial proceeding thereon,[31] is an uttering; obtaining credit by means of false receipts is an uttering, although the person exhibiting them refuses to part with the possession thereof out of his hand.[32] So also is a representation that a party to a genuine instrument is some other person.[33] Showing an instrument with an intent of raising a false idea of the substance of the person exhibiting it is not an uttering,[34] nor is leaving a forged instrument sealed up, with the person to whom it has been shown, that he might take charge of it, as being too valuable to be carried about.[35] Where a son makes notes payable to his father, and forges his father's indorsement thereon, and both the holder and the father subsequently acquire knowledge of the forgery, the placing by the holder of such notes in the bank where they are payable, with directions to present for payment and give notice of protest, which is done, is not uttering with intent to defraud, the object of the holder being to compel the father to save his son.[36]

VII. POSSESSION OF FORGED INSTRUMENT.

A person may be convicted of forgery by having possession of a forged instrument with intent to defraud, although never uttered by him.[37]

VIII. DISPOSING OF AND PUTTING AWAY FORGED BANK-NOTES.

The intent to defraud a bank constitutes the offense of feloniously disposing of and putting away forged bank-notes.[38] Giving to a confederate a forged bank-note that he may utter it is a disposing and putting away thereof.[39]

IX. PERSONS LIABLE.

To render one liable for forgery it is not essential that the instrument on which the prosecution is based should have been made or altered by defendant himself. He will be guilty of the offense if with fraudulent intent he procures this to be done by another,[40] or after procuring it to be done utters or publishes it;[41] and it is immaterial that the person making or altering the instrument is innocent of any fraudulent intent.[42] It is necessary, however, to constitute the offense that the writing should have been done in defendant's presence.[43] So one who procures another to utter a forged instrument is as culpable as if he had perpetrated the act himself.[44] And one is also guilty of forgery where he procures another to sign the latter's own name, which the former thereafter represents to be that of a third person.[45] It is an elementary proposition of law that all who act together with a common design are principals.[46] The degree of aid or assistance given in the forgery of papers with the intent to defraud has been held to be unimportant.[47]

X. JURISDICTION.[48]

Where defendant is prosecuted under the laws of the United States he must be tried in the district where the offense was committed,[49] but where certain acts constitute forgery under the laws of the state the jurisdiction of the state courts thereof is not ousted by the fact that the same acts are also an offense under the laws of the United States.[50]

XI. VENUE.[51]

If a forgery is completed in one county defendant may be prosecuted in that county, and it is immaterial where the first step may have been taken.[52] Jurisdiction is in the county in which defendant utters a forged instrument notwithstanding he may have forged the instrument in another county,[53] and where an instrument is caused to be set in circulation abroad with intent to have it presented where the forger resides, he can be convicted of uttering it at the latter place.[54] The weight of authority[55] is to the effect that the offense is not complete until the instrument comes to the hands of the person to whom it is sent and that the proper place of trial is the county to which it is sent.[56] Where a writing is forged, presented to, and paid by an agent of the person apparently liable

48. Jurisdiction of local courts.— Although the offense charged consists in bringing suit on a forged instrument in the county and circuit courts, yet when both courts are within the limits of the city and defendant lives there, the city court of the city may try the offense, since it is committed within its jurisdiction. And under a statute providing that indictments for land forgeries may be presented by the grand jury of Travis county or in the county where the offense was committed an indictment presented to the district court of Travis county charging an offense committed in another county gives jurisdiction to such court notwithstanding the laws which in general control the venue in criminal actions. thereon, the offense is consummated, although the agent sends the instrument to another state and obtains credit from his principal there, he having authority to make payments, and not acting as agent for defendant.[57]

XII. PRELIMINARY PROCEEDINGS.[58]

A mere clerical error in a warrant will not vitiate it;[59] nor need it aver an intent to defraud.[60] Where the offense charged is uttering a forged promissory note, and the warrant imports knowledge of the forged character of the paper, the warrant is not void.[61] If a person is examined and committed for trial for forgery and the indictment contains counts for uttering and publishing, the court should quash such counts;[62] and a person cannot be convicted on an information for forgery when the complaint on which he was examined only charged him with uttering the forgery.[63] If the examining court thinks the prisoner guilty, it should remand him without discriminating as to the grade of the offense, or designating the mode in which it had been committed.[64]

material.[70] Ordinarily it is apprehended the indictment should allege the time of the commission of the offense,[71] unless this is made unnecessary by statute.[72] An allegation that the offense is contra formam statuti may be rejected as surplusage where there is nothing in the indictment to show that the offense was against any statute.[73] If the separate parts of an indictment are insufficient no additional strength is gained by taking them as a whole.[74]

b. Charging Statutory Offenses. It is a general rule that if an indictment is based upon a statute, it is sufficient if it follows the wording thereof.[75] The rule, however, is subject to the qualification that unless the words of the statute of themselves fully, directly, and expressly, without any uncertainty or ambiguity, set forth all the elements necessary to constitute the offense intended to be punished, an indictment charging the offense in the language of the statute will be insufficient,[76] and the fact that the statute in question read in the light of the common law and of other statutes on the like matter enables the court to infer the intent of the legislature does not dispense with the necessity of alleging in the indictment all the facts necessary to bring the case within that intent.[77] An indictment based upon a statute in order to be sufficient must set forth all the facts which are by the statute made ingredients of the offense.[78] Words of a statute which are descriptive of an offense, a part of the statutory definition, cannot be omitted from any indictment based thereon without fatally vitiating such indictment,[79] although it is otherwise as to the omission of general words describing, not the offense, but the writings of which forgery may be committed.[80] So if one word is substituted for another the indictment is bad,[81] unless such word has a meaning similar to the one used in the statute.[82] Where a statute uses words in the alternative, it is not necessary that such words should be used in the conjunctive form in the indictment.[83] An indictment which has been based upon, but is defective under, one statute, may be good under another statute.[84]

c. Particular Averments — (I) As to Making. The making of the false instrument is sufficiently averred by charging that it was "forged."[85] The word "forged" implies false making to the full extent as if it were expressed,[86] and it is not necessary to set out the particular acts of which it consisted.[87] If defendant has altered a genuine instrument, he may be charged with the forgery of the entire instrument;[88] and if he has procured another to do the act,[89] or has aided therein,[90] he may be charged with doing the act himself. If he is charged with procuring[91] or aiding[92] the forgery, it is not necessary to set forth whom he procured or aided. An indictment is insufficient which only charges an intention to forge,[93] or which does not charge that the making or alteration was without authority.[94]

(II) As to Alteration — (A) In General. Where the alteration of a genuine instrument is charged, the indictment must clearly set forth the alteration alleged,[95] with the proper averments showing the alteration of a material part thereof;[96] and if the instrument is one given by defendant, the alteration must be charged to have been made after such instrument was circulated;[97] and the instrument as altered must then be set out in words and figures.[98] If the alteration consists in the insertion of words, their position must be distinctly set forth,[99] otherwise they will be presumed to have been placed after the signature, in which case they could deceive no one.[1] If the indictment relates to more than one instrument, only one of which is alleged to have been altered, the particular instrument altered must be designated.[2] An allegation of the substitution of three letters in a word is supported by evidence of the substitution of only two of them.[3] If the forgery consists of an erasure, the technical term "forge or counterfeit" must be used.[4]

(B) Of Records. Indictments for making false entries in records are sufficient if the offense is plainly and substantially set forth.[5] The particular entries altered or falsely made must be set out,[6] although a copy of the record need not be given, nor is it necessary to state that the record was in the custody of defendant.[7]

(III) As to Intent to Defraud — (A) In General. An indictment must allege an intent to defraud,[8] unless the necessity of making the allegation is obviated by statute,[9] and where both forgery and uttering are charged, but the uttering only is alleged to have been with intent to defraud, the omission of such an allegation as to the forgery is fatal.[10] It is unnecessary, however, to mention the manner in which the fraud was effected, or was intended to be effected,[11] or to allege that the instrument was presented as genuine.[12]

(B) Designation of Person Defrauded. Where the rule is not affected by statute an indictment which fails to charge the name of the person intended to be defrauded, or that the name is unknown to the grand jury, is bad,[13] and the Allegation held sufficient.— A count which states that the prisoner did forge a promissory note on which was an indorsement, setting it out, with intent to defraud a person named, sufficiently charges that the note and not the indorsement was that by which the prisoner intended to defraud. The words "with intent" apply to the verb of which christian name must be given, or an allegation made that it is unknown;[14] but such charge may be made indirectly,[15] and a description to a common intent, of the person intended to be defrauded, is sufficient.[16] If the indictment charges a statutory offense, and follows the language of the statute, an allegation of an intent to defraud any particular person is unnecessary.[17] In some states, by statute, an allegation to this effect is no longer necessary in any case,[18] although if made the indictment is nevertheless valid.[19] There are usually two persons who may be defrauded, the one whose name is forged and the one to whom the forged instrument is uttered, and the intent may be laid to defraud either of them,[20] or both of them, either in separate counts[21] or in one count.[22] An intent to defraud the principal may be alleged where the instrument names the agent as such;[23] but if an intent is alleged to defraud one described as "agent" merely, it is error to charge that defendant might be found guilty if he forged the order with intent to defraud the principal, who was disclosed on the trial.[24] Where a forged request for delivery of goods was addressed to a woman in her maiden name, who prior to the date of it had married, an intent to defraud the husband may be charged.[25] An averment that a note was forged with intent to defraud the United States is necessary to withdraw the case from the jurisdiction of state courts.[26] An intent to defraud a person named is supported by proof that as treasurer it would be his duty to pay genuine instruments in the form of the false one;[27] and in cases of forgery of certificates or vouchers calling for payment out of public funds, an intent to defraud the public corporation, from whose funds such instrument if genuine would be payable, is properly alleged.[28] An allegation of an intent to defraud one person is supported by proof of an intent to defraud a firm of which he is a partner.[29]

(IV) Description of Instrument — (A) In General. The description of the forged instrument is sufficient if it would sustain an indictment for stealing it, although not the subject of larceny,[30] and if described as it was at the time of the forgery, it is admissible, although it bears indorsements made afterward.[31] A charge of forging an indorsement on a bill of exchange need not allege the amount of such bill.[32]

(B) Tenor or Copy of Instrument. The tenor of an instrument means an exact copy thereof in words and figures,[33] and, unless the rule is abrogated by statute,[34] the indictment should set forth the tenor of the instrument alleged to be forged and purport to do so.[35] A videlicet clause likewise imports an exact copy.[36] Where from difficulty in ascertaining a particular word a facsimile is attempted it is sufficient.[37] If changes by or with the consent of defendant are made on the instrument after it is uttered its tenor may be set forth in its changed form;[38] or if an erasure has been subsequently made, but the words erased are decipherable, they can be set forth.[39] If the instrument is set out in full other description is unnecessary,[40] and it is not necessary to allege facts which appear thereon.[41] So there is no variance if from any part of the instrument an allegation can be shown to be true.[42]

(c) Purport of Instrument. Purport means the substance of an instrument as it appears on the face of it,[43] and where an instrument is set forth according to its tenor it is not necessary to set it forth according to its purport also;[44] but it has been held that if the pleader assumes to set forth an instrument both according to its tenor and purport a variance between the tenor and purport clause will be fatal.[45] By virtue of express statutory provisions in many jurisdictions it is no longer necessary to set out the alleged forged instrument according to its tenor,[46] but it will be sufficient to set it forth according to its purport.[47] Statutes of this character, however, do not dispense with such certainty of description as will clearly identify the offense.[48] It is not requisite that the date[49] or the amount of the instrument,[50] the name of the drawee,[51] or the place of payment[52] should be alleged; and the omission from a promissory note of a power of attorney to confess judgment is not material.[53] Where a signature is forged, an indictment is bad which states that the instrument is signed by a certain person named, instead of stating that it purported to be so signed;[54] likewise if it includes in the purport something not apparent on the face of the instrument.[55] Notwithstanding a statute permits the instrument alleged to be forged to be set forth according to its purport, it may nevertheless be set forth according to its tenor.[56]

(D) Translations. If the instrument be written in a foreign language, an indictment setting it out in such language with a translation thereof is good;[57] but if there is no translation,[58] or if it is described wholly in English,[59] it is not sufficient, unless the rule has been changed by statute;[60] and the translation of it must include everything that is material.[61] Where the signature alone is forged, and is the same name in the foreign language as in English, it is not necessary to set it out in the foreign characters.[62]

(E) Instruments Lost, Destroyed, or Withheld. If the forged instrument has been lost or destroyed, or defendant refuses to yield possession thereof, the tenor need not be set forth;[63] but this will not excuse a full statement of the substance of the instrument,[64] so that the court may see that it was such an instrument that the forgery of it would constitute a crime.[65] So in the event of a partial destruction while in defendant's possession, it is sufficient to state the substance of the paper, although parol evidence could supply the missing part.[66] An indictment which describes the missing instrument and alleges the reason for not being able to give a more particular description is sufficient.[67] An allegation that an instrument is lost is not equivalent to an allegation that it has been withheld or destroyed by the acts of defendant.[68]

(F) Repugnancy or Ambiguity. Repugnant or uncertain allegations,[69] or those which are inconsistent with a copy of the instrument as set out, render an indictment bad,[70] although it was not necessary to set out the instrument.[71] An error in names,[72] such as incorrect spelling,[73] or the use of initials,[74] unless the names are idem sonans,[75] is fatal, although the omission of the middle initial is not.[76] So if the purport clause alleges the instrument to be the act of one person, and the tenor clause to be the act of more, it is fatal.[77] Likewise if the purport clause sets forth that the instrument was the act of a corporation, while the tenor clause sets out an instrument signed by the officers of the corporation.[78] A statement that a signature was made by defendant as agent[79] or partner[80] is not a variance, although the copy does not so indicate; nor is there any ambiguity if an inartificial instrument is set out according to its legal effect.[81]

a note,[87] or notice of protest of a note,[88] or a clause showing that the instrument bore interest,[89] or a number on a check,[90] or a figure essential to an understanding of the instrument,[91] or a date stamp on the back of a railroad ticket,[92] or words material in the consideration of the apparent legality or validity of the instrument[93] are omitted, there is a material variance. So there is a material variance where there is an incorrect statement of the date of an instrument,[94] of the amount,[95] of the number of makers,[96] of the names,[97] or if the middle initial is omitted[98] or is incorrectly given.[99] So an error in the christian name is fatal.[1] If an instrument is alleged to be a joint obligation, when it is not,[2] or vice versa,[3] it is material. And the same is the case if an indictment alleges a signature to be in an official capacity when it is otherwise.[4] So an indictment which alleges forgery of a promissory note without a seal is not supported by evidence that defendant had committed forgery of a note under seal.[5] A demurrer on account of a variance cannot be considered unless oyer of the instrument is craved.[6]

(2) IMMATERIAL VARIANCES. An immaterial variance between the indictment and the paper alleged to be forged will not prevent the latter from being received in evidence.[7] Thus, it is held that mere clerical errors, such as the misspelling of words[8] or of proper names,[9] or the use of capital letters for small ones,[10] are immaterial variances. letter, incorrectly given,[25] or the omission of a clause,[26] where the identity of the instrument is not affected, may be treated as immaterial. So there is no variance where the names in the indictments and those in the instruments offered in evidence are idem sonans,[27] nor does the addition of "Jr." after a name constitute a variance.[28] Where the forged instrument is difficult to decipher and the framer of the indictment has transcribed it according to his reading of the characters a doubtful variance in the name forged will not be fatal.[29] A variance as to a name in an indictment has been held not fatal if it is not the name averred to be forged;[30] nor where the jury are instructed to acquit if they find a variance and the proof showed that the name was fictitious in any event.[31] And where a check is charged to have been addressed to the cashier of a bank and the envelope in which it was inclosed is so addressed, there is no variance, although there is no direction inside the letter.[32] An instrument may be alleged to have been drawn upon or be the act of a corporation, although addressed to,[33] or signed by,[34] an officer thereof, and vice versa,[35] and there will be no variance. By statute a variance may be made material, which would not otherwise be so.[36]

(v) Designation of Instrument. In some states, by statute, it is sufficient to designate an instrument by name, without setting out its tenor;[37] and if a copy of the instrument is set out in the indictment, the omission of the designation,[38] or a misnomer,[39] constitutes no good ground for quashing the indictment. The same rules of construction prevail in the ascertainment of the legal import of the instrument as would prevail in a civil action founded thereon;[40] and indictments have been sustained where the instrument has been designated as a bill of

of the whole;[55] thus, if a certificate be forged, the forgery of the document to which it is appended may be alleged;[56] and within the rule stated a jurat is part of an affidavit[57] and the certification of a check is a part of the check;[58] but an indorsement[59] or acceptance[60] is not a part of the instrument upon which it is placed. An instrument may be given two designations if it properly belongs to each class;[61] and if joint and several it may be described as being the act of one.[62] Where the false writing has been correctly designated, a subsequent erroneous description is immaterial.[63] An incorrect[64] designation, or one too indefinite,[65] renders the indictment bad; but where an indictment, based upon one section of a statute, is insufficient because of an erroneous designation, a conviction may be had under another section which because of its comprehensive language includes the instrument as designated.[66]

(VI) AVERMENTS OF EXTRINSIC FACTS—(A) In General. It is not necessary to set out matters which are extrinsic to the instrument, although referred to therein;[67] nor to allege the value of the property sought to be obtained by the forgery.[68] An indictment for forging an undated order addressed to no one need not state facts explanatory of those defects.[69]

(B) Lack of Authority to Make or Alter. An indictment which fails to allege that the making or alteration of the instrument was without authority is insufficient;[70] but it need not aver that the act was done without the knowledge of the person apparently made liable.[71]

(C) Showing How Instrument Might Defraud. Where the instrument alleged to be forged appears on its face to be valid and of legal efficacy, the indictment need not allege extrinsic facts to show how it might be used to defraud.[72] If it does not appear on the face of the instrument forged or uttered

Sufficiency of indictment alleging extrinsic facts.— Although the instrument is of such a character as not to import a legal liability on its face, an indictment alleging facts and circumstances which, when taken in connection with the instrument itself, invest it with apparent legal efficacy, and enable the court judicially to see that the instrument has a capacity to defraud, is good. (D) Authority of Apparent Parties to Instrument. Where an instrument purports to have been executed in an official capacity, there must be an allegation that the person whose name is signed had authority to so act;[99] and where agency appears, the authority of the agent must be alleged.[1] However, if the signer would be liable individually, the fact that the signature is in an official capacity is immaterial;[2] nor need there be an allegation of facts to show the relation of the signer of a certificate of deposit with the bank in which the certificate recites the money has been deposited;[3] nor that the teller of a bank had authority to accept a check thereon.[4] The general rule may be changed by statutory provisions.[5] Where an indictment charges the uttering of an instrument which as set out was signed in an official capacity, and the name signed was the same as defendant's, and it is not charged that the person whose name

(E) Explanation of Meaning of Instrument. If the words of an instrument do not import that it would possess any validity if genuine, apt explanatory averments must be made as to their meaning;[7] and ambiguous words and those so badly misspelled as to be doubtful must be explained,[8] but if the meaning of a word is plain, notwithstanding the fact that it is misspelled, explanatory averments are unnecessary.[9] So the meaning of initials must be averred,[10] and the value of sums of money set forth in foreign denominations.[11] If parties referred to are not clearly indicated, the indictment should state who they are.[12] But expressions,[13] or facts,[14] the meaning of which are clearly apparent from the context, require no explanation. Where a dollar mark does not appear before numerals it may be implied,[15] and the meaning of words well known in law need not be explained.[16] An indictment containing the necessary explanatory averments is sufficient.[17]

2. IN PROSECUTIONS FOR UTTERING FORGED INSTRUMENTS.[24] Indictments setting forth the essential elements of the offense are sufficient.[25] If based upon a statute, it is in general sufficient if it follows the wording of the statute;[26] but a variance from the language of the statute which does not change its meaning is not material.[27] The indictment must state that the instrument was forged.[28] It is not necessary to state when, where, how, or by whom it was forged, nor the intent of the maker.[29] It should state the facts constituting the uttering and not charge defendant with uttering merely.[30] It must allege that defendant had knowledge of the falsity of the paper,[31] although it is not necessary to charge that he possessed this knowledge at the time he uttered it.[32] It should allege an intent to defraud.[33] And it is also indispensable that the indictment state the name of the person to whom the instrument was uttered, or else that such person is to the jurors unknown,[34] unless this averment is dispensed with by statute.[35] Where prejudice would arise only from uttering by the accused in an official capacity, a failure to charge the uttering in such capacity is fatal.[36] If the first part of an instrument charging the making sufficiently alleges the non-existence of the pretended signer such allegations need not be repeated in the second part charging the uttering.[37] Under an indictment charging forgery only, no conviction can be had for uttering a forged instrument;[38] and charging an absolute sale of a forged instrument is not supported by evidence showing only an offer to sell.[39]

3. In Prosecutions For Possession of Forged Instruments. An indictment for having in possession forged paper with intent to utter or pass it is sufficient if drafted in conformity with the statute on which it is based and need not allege that there was an intent to cheat or defraud any particular person,[40] nor that defendant intended to utter it for a consideration;[41] and there may be a conviction of a separate offense for each one of such instruments he keeps in possession.[42] An allegation that defendant had in his possession, on a certain day specified, ten false instruments is not equivalent to an allegation that he had possession of all at the same time.[43]

4. In Prosecutions For Feloniously Disposing of and Putting Away Forged Bank-Notes. In indictments for this offense, it is not necessary to allege to whom the note was disposed of.[44]

B. Joinder of Offenses. Where the making and uttering of a fictitious instrument is one continuous transaction, they may be properly charged in one count as a single offense;[45] and although an indictment charges in separate counts the forgery of an instrument and the uttering of the same, a conviction cannot be had for both offenses, separate indictments being necessary for this purpose.[46] Although several drafts may be uttered as one indivisible act, the forgery of each is a separate offense.[47] Where a clause in an information alleges the possession of a false instrument, setting up a copy, which is followed by a clause charging the selling thereof, the latter clause should not be considered a separate count.[48] If there are two counts, in each of which a copy of the instrument is set out, and the copies are alike, it will not be presumed that each is a copy of the same original instrument, without an allegation to that effect in the second count.[49]

C. Election of Offense on Which to Base Prosecution. A person may be indicted for forgery, although he might upon the same transaction be indicted for another offense.[50]

XIV. DEFENSES.[51]

If a person use the name of another without authority, it is no defense that he thought the latter would pay rather than there should be a criminal prosecution;[52] or that he believed the latter would ratify his act;[53] or even that there has been ratification.[54] Likewise it is no defense that the purported drawer would have been willing, at the time of the forgery, to have indorsed paper for defendant to the same amount.[55] So if defendant afterward refunds the money, it does not constitute a defense.[56] Where the offense charged is the injury of a public record, the fact that a piece torn out has been pasted in, and the record is as legible as before, is insufficient to discharge defendant.[57]

XV. EVIDENCE.[58]

A. Burden of Proof — 1. IN GENERAL. The burden is on the prosecution to prove all the elements constituting the offense.[59] It is essential to prove the identity or non-existence of the person whose name is charged to be forged,[60] and an intent to defraud some person.[61] The prosecution must show that the signature is not that of the person it purports to be,[62] and that it was made by defendant,[63] without authority,[64] but if circumstances show guilty knowledge in uttering a forged check lack of authority need not be proved.[65] Slight evidence that a name is fictitious is sufficient to shift the burden of proof upon defendant.[66] Where it is shown that the purported maker of a note does not live at a particular place, and is not engaged in the business as represented by defendant, the burden is not shifted by proof by defendant of the existence of a person by the same name engaged in a different line of business.[67] On a trial for forging a check, the burden of showing guilty knowledge by defendant as to other forged checks is on the state;[68] but possession of such checks under suspicious circumstances must be explained by defendant.[69]

2. DESCRIPTIVE ALLEGATIONS. All descriptive allegations in the indictment must be proved,[70] although unnecessarily made,[71] unless they can be rejected as surplusage.[72] Where a corporation is alleged to have been defrauded, the organization of the corporation must be proved;[73] likewise it must be shown that the persons alleged to be defrauded composed the firm, the forgery of whose name is charged.[74]

3. PRODUCTION OF FORGED INSTRUMENT. The instrument alleged to be forged must be produced at the trial, or its absence satisfactorily accounted for before evidence is taken to prove the forgery.[75] If the instrument is in the hands of the accused sufficient notice must be given to him to produce it;[76] if this is done, and the instrument is not produced, secondary evidence of its contents is admissible.[77] The rule is the same if the instrument is beyond the jurisdiction of the court.[78] If the instrument has been destroyed by the prisoner,[79] or by someone without his privity,[80] its tenor may be proved by parol evidence after proof of such destruction or loss has been adduced,[81] even though the indictment does not count on a lost instrument.[82] A mutilated instrument is governed by the same rule.[83]

B. Presumptions. Possession of forged paper by defendant, with a claim of title thereunder, if unexplained, raises a conclusive presumption that he forged it, or procured it to be forged;[84] and this is so, although the instrument is payable to defendant or bearer.[85] Nevertheless proof that defendant uttered a genuine instrument, with a forged indorsement in blank by the payee thereof, raises no such presumption.[86] If forged paper be uttered by defendant as true, the law will presume knowledge on his part of its character.[87] If the facts show that a forged instrument was made to be used as good an intention to defraud will be implied,[88] although mere proof of possession is insufficient;[89] and an intent to defraud the person whose name has been forged may be inferred, even though defendant in fact intended to defraud another.[90] The place of date is not prima facie the place of forgery;[91] but proof that defendant uttered or attempted to utter the instrument in the county where the prosecution is laid is presumptive evidence that he committed the forgery there,[92] although he resided in another county.[93] Where an instrument bears a forged indorsement, it will be presumed that the signatures necessary to give it validity were thereon at the time such indorsement was made.[94]

C. Admissibility—1. In General. Testimony is admissible to prove the innuendos and explanations as alleged in the indictment[95] and to show that a name partially obliterated by wear and tear was at the time of the execution of a note plainly written upon it.[96] Written testimony, on oath, given by defendant in prior proceedings, is admissible against him.[97] A requirement that instruments, to be admitted in evidence, must be filed before trial does not apply to forged instruments.[98] Parol evidence cannot be given to show that a document is a warrant for the payment of money if its form shows it to be otherwise;[99] and where a record in a suit before a justice of the peace on the forged instrument has been introduced in evidence, a juror in that suit cannot be asked if the genuineness of the signature was in issue.[1] A statute providing that a document shall not be introduced in evidence in any court without the proper internal revenue stamps thereon does not require a forged check to be so stamped before it is admissible in evidence in a criminal prosecution therefor.[2]

2. Falsity of Instrument — a. In General. On a trial for the forgery of a deed, testimony of qualified experts that such instrument was executed by defendant is competent proof that it was not executed by the person whose name was signed thereto.[3] So if the forgery of a deed is charged, proof that the certificate of acknowledgment is forged is allowable.[4] Evidence of the falsity of the seal to a certificate purporting to be under the seal of a court of record is relevant to the issue of the forgery of such a certificate, as the falsity of the seal raises a strong presumption that the signature to the certificate is also false; and proof of the seal by comparison is competent.[5] Upon the question whether a person signed his name as an indorsement of a draft or not, postal cards afterward written by such person to defendant, asking if such a draft had been received by defendant for such person, are admissible.[6] Where defendant admits the signing of some notes, and denies the execution of others, his declaration is inadmissible unless it is shown that the notes he admitted signing were a part of those claimed to be forgeries.[7] On a trial for forgery of a deed, it is competent to receive in evidence the original deed to the parties whose signatures are forged, with evidence that such owners did not sign or authorize the signing of the deed in question, that there were no other persons of the same names in the county, and that a person whose name was signed by mark in the forged deed is educated and able to write.[8] So the persons whose names appear as acknowledging officer and witnesses may testify that they did not sign.[9] In a prosecution for forging a will, the declarations of the decedent shortly before and after its date are admissible to show the truth or falsity of the recitals therein.[10] The death of an apparent party to an instrument prior to its date may be proved by repute and circumstantial evidence.[11] Testimony which is a mere expression of opinion is not admissible.[12]

b. Fictitious Parties to Instruments. Evidence as to the result of inquiries made for persons whose names appear on an instrument is admissible to show their non-existence,[13] although the person making the inquiries may have been unacquainted with the place,[14] or the search may not have been extensive.[15] Likewise evidence is admissible as to the result of an inspection of the assessment rolls of the town where such persons were alleged to live.[16] In the case of a check it may be shown that the drawer had no account with the bank on which it was drawn,[17] or that no one of that name lived at that place who was likely to keep an account with a banker.[18] But a letter from a cashier of a bank to whom a note was sent for collection is not evidence, nor is the protest of a notary.[19] Defendant has the right to offer testimony to show that the persons who could not be found had departed from the community on account of a threat of the prosecuting officer to prosecute them for perjury.[20]

3. Making of False Instrument. The crime of forgery is hard to prove, and hence is often made out partially by positive evidence, and partially by circumstantial evidence.[21] As in other cases the best evidence possible is required.[22] Evidence of false statements made by defendant in connection with the instrument is admissible,[23] as is evidence of all transactions connected with the forgery

33. Where defendant in order to secure advances promised to transfer as security mortgages which he said he had, and among the mortgages afterward transferred was the one alleged to be forged, which bore a date subsequent to his promise, these facts may be shown. Curtis v. State, 118 Ala. 125, 24 So. 111. Where defendant had a memorandum book in his possession when arrested, and the forged instrument had been written on a leaf torn therefrom, and the dates in the book were in his handwriting, the dates and that part of the book from which the leaf had been torn were admissible. Koch v. State, 115 Ala. 99, 22 So. 471. Where a due-bill has been signed "Mr. Daniel Threet," it is competent for Daniel Thweat, who lives in the locality, to testify that many of his acquaintances pronounce his name as if spelled "Threet." Gooden v. State, 55 Ala. 178. Evidence that defendant had worked for the drawer of the forged check is competent. People v. Walker, 140 Cal. 153, 73 Pac. 831. It is not prejudicial error to admit testimony that defendant could not be found when it was desired to verify his orders, one of which was the one in question. State v. Prins, 117 Iowa 505, 91 N. W. 758. Evidence is admissible that defendant was in possession of the instrument on the day of its date and presented it in payment of goods. State v. Outs, 30 La. Ann. 1155. On trial for forgery of a check given in payment of property purchased, testimony by the complaining witness that he registered in a book kept for that purpose a name given by defendant at the time was admissible. Randolph v. State, 65 Nebr. 520, 91 N. W. 356. It may be shown that defendant claimed title to land through a different instrument from the one forged, before the uttering of it, and was informed that no such document was in existence. West v. State, 22 N. J. L. 212. It is competent evidence that defendant, meeting the maker of a note which he held, informed the maker that he needed money, and would sell the maker the note, which offer was accepted, and later a forged note was delivered. State v. Hastings, 86 N. C. 596. Evidence is competent that defendant, when notified to produce the instrument, remarked that he would not be fool enough to give it up. Grooms v. State, 40 Tex. Cr. 319, 50 S. W. 370. An original entry in a record book in the general land-office showing that the land-agency firm of which defendant was a member applied for a copy of the original title granted to the person whose name was subsequently forged to a deed is admissible. Rogers v. State, 11 Tex. App. 608.

34. The question asked the prosecuting witness on cross-examination as to whether defendant and other negroes in the neighborhood called him by his given name is properly excluded. Wright v. State, 138 Ala. 69, 34 So. 1009. The record of a mortgage may show in his defense any matters which are relevant,[35] but immaterial facts will be excluded.[36]

4. INTENT TO DEFRAUD. Evidence of such of the surrounding circumstances as have a bearing upon the question of fraud is pertinent, and the proofs of fraud may be substantially the same in criminal and civil cases.[37] Acts of deception, declarations, and misstatements in connection with the false instrument are admissible,[38] as is also evidence of a scheme to defraud.[39] The benefit obtained by defendant,[40] of part of the land covered by the discharged mortgage, and executed after the filing of the discharge, is inadmissible, without proof connecting it in some way with the transaction in question, as the jury might infer that an abstract similar to the one in evidence was given, or be prejudiced against the defendant as having wronged the mortgagee. People v. Swetland, 77 Mich. 53, 43 N. W. 779. Where defendant was charged with altering an assignment of a mortgage, evidence is incompetent that he had applied for a loan on the land covered by such mortgage, which was declined until an examination could be made of the record with respect to the title. State v. Clark, 23 N. H. 429. Testimony as to transactions relating to certain debts of defendant, to secure which the notes were given, and as to dealings between defendant and her husband, requiring the execution of the note, is inadmissible. 35. The state having shown that defendant had filled out a note after it was indorsed in blank for a larger sum than he promised, an affidavit filed by the indorser in a civil action against him stating his defense is admissible in behalf of defendant. State v. Pratt, 3 Pennew. (Del.) 264, 51 Atl. 604. Where on a trial for forging auditor's warrants besides proof of the handwriting of the prisoner, there was no positive proof of the forged warrant having been seen in the possession of or uttered by the prisoner, and the state proved that he was the clerk of the auditor, had custody of his books, free access at all times to the registry, and that the forged warrants in all material respects corresponded with the genuine ones in the register, the prisoner should be permitted to offer testimony that the registry was not always or generally in his custody, but was carelessly thrown about the office, accessible to all who might casually enter, and often with the office in the care of a single servant for a considerable time. Pagaud v. State, 5 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 491. Where the person whose name was signed to a note dated April 16 was at that time confined to his bed, having given up hopes of recovery on April 13, and having died on April 20, it is competent for the prisoner to prove that on April 18 he stated that he had signed the note. People v. Blakeley, 4 Park. Cr. (N. Y.) 176. In a prosecution for forging a note payable in lumber, given for the price of an organ, by changing the provision specifying the width of the lumber to be delivered, it is competent for defendant to show the usual price of the kind of organ sold, and the value of the lumber delivered. State v. Donovan, 75 Vt. 308, 55 Atl. 611.

36. State v. Olds, 106 Iowa 110, 76 N. W. 644. Where the supposed maker of a forged promissory note testified that he had never given any one his name in blank, testimony is not admissible that witness once saw a blank paper filled up, having such maker's name indorsed upon it, unless such indorsement is first proved to have been genuine. Com. v. Miller, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 243. Where the state has introduced evidence showing that defendant had forged the note and given it to an accomplice, it is not proper matter of defense to show that such accomplice frequently met another person at defendant's house. Devere v. State, 5 Ohio Cir. Ct. 509, 3 Ohio Cir. Dec. 249. Where defendant represented to the person to whom he uttered a forged instrument that the maker lived at Cross Roads, it was not error to exclude testimony to show that a letter addressed to such maker was received at Red Lion, a post-office three miles from Cross Roads, where defendant did not offer to show that the letter was actually received, or that the maker was ever seen there. Com. v. Norris, 9 Montg. Co. Rep. (Pa.) 143. or the injury occasioned to the party to whom the instrument was passed,[41] may be shown. Evidence of the making, uttering, or possession of other instruments is admissible to show guilty intent,[42] but they must be produced,[43] and shown to have been forgeries.[44] The uttering of the note charged to be forged is admissible to show the intent with which it was written;[45] and the prisoner's indorsement of fictitious paper is also admissible to show his intent to defraud by means of such writing, although the indorsement is not set forth in the indictment.[46] Evidence of other criminal acts by defendant, not immediately connected with the forgery, cannot be given;[47] and defendant should be allowed to offer evidence explaining and rebutting the facts which evidence his apparent fraudulent intent.[48]

5. Efficacy of Instrument to Defraud. In order to show that an apparent grantor had title to the land, it is proper to admit evidence of the record of a deed of the land to him, and the testimony of the register of deeds showing that a careful examination of the records fails to show any subsequent transfer except the alleged forged instrument;[49] but, with a view of showing that an auditor's warrant is a bill of credit, and therefore illegal, proof is inadmissible that when such warrant was issued there was no money in the treasury to take it up, that such warrants were not being redeemed, were under par, and circulated as money.[50]

6. Authority of Defendant to Make Instrument. Defendant should be permitted to offer testimony showing authority to make a signature;[51] but evidence of his hope that the person whose name was indorsed would ratify such use of his name is inadmissible.[52]

7. Financial Condition of Accused or Party Apparently Liable. Evidence as to the financial condition of defendant at the time of forgery is not admissible.[53] There is a conflict of authority as to the admissibility of evidence to show the financial condition of the party apparently liable.[54]

8. Corporate Existence of Party Defrauded. Evidence of the corporate existence of a company charged to have been defrauded is admissible, although the incorporation is not alleged in the indictment.[55] It is not necessary to produce a certified copy of its charter,[56] but parol testimony of the most general character may be given,[57] such as reputation,[58] or that the witness had seen the articles of incorporation, and had seen business being transacted by such corporation at its place of business.[59]

9. Copy of Forged Instrument. If a copy of the forged instrument is offered in evidence it must be shown to be a true one,[60] and it is shown to be such where the person making it testifies that it is a correct copy, which was compared by first reading the original to one holding the copy, and then by reading the copy to such person holding the original.[61]

10. Proof of Handwriting[62] — a. In General. Evidence that the alleged forged instrument is in the handwriting of defendant is competent,[63] and a witness who is familiar with such handwriting may state his opinion whether the signature of a fictitious person was made by defendant.[64] So it may be shown that the signature and body of an instrument were written by different persons.[65] Testimony of an engraver who has examined an alleged forged will with a mirror is admissible to show the existence of pencil marks which had been apparently written over with ink and then erased.[66]

b. By Comparison. On the question of the genuineness of a signature, it is the practice to allow it to be compared with others that are genuine,[67] where such genuineness is either admitted[68] or clearly proved.[69] However, writing made by defendant on request is inadmissible;[70] nor can the writing of parties whose names are forged be admitted,[71] unless made before the time of the forgery.[72] In some states the only writings which can be admitted for comparison are those forming a part of the files in the case or already in evidence,[73] and defendant is estopped from denying the genuineness of his signature to such papers.[74] Under the old common-law rule the testimony of experts was inadmissible,[75] but modern practice allows it.[76] Writings for comparison should have been made about the time of the alleged forged instrument,[77] and the condition of a party, whether drunk or sober, at the time he signed any paper properly in evidence in a forgery case, and which is sought to be used for the purpose of a comparison of handwriting, is competent evidence.[78]

11. ALTERATION OF EXISTING INSTRUMENT. On a prosecution for fraudulently altering an instrument a conversation had with defendant about the time it was charged that the alteration was made, in which defendant stated that he was then under arrest on account of some transaction in which he was short a certain amount of money for which settlement had been demanded, is admissible.[79] Likewise the chemical effect of a powder in the possession of defendant is admissible where the alteration is by erasure.[80] Evidence of matters explaining his motive in making an alteration is admissible.[81] Where an alteration of a settled book-account has been made by including a claim which accrued afterward, the existence of such a claim may be shown, although no entry thereof has been made.[82] Where a note, alleged to have been raised, was paid by the maker, he may show that he thought it was another note he was paying, and that defendant had no claim against him for the larger amount.[83] A copy of a chattel mortgage certified by the city clerk has no probative force as to the issue whether a clause was a part of the instrument when executed;[84] and the testimony of a witness who was not near enough to have seen what took place at the time of the execution of the instrument is properly excluded.[85]

12. UTTERING OF INSTRUMENT. Conversations, assertions, and statements of defendant tending to prove uttering are admissible,[86] also matters which show a motive;[87] and the record of a suit upon the forged instrument is admissible.[88] To prove the uttering of a forged receipt, the note which purports to have been paid by money for which such receipt was given, and a deposition by defendant in a chancery suit as to the genuineness of such receipt is competent evidence.[89] Redemption and destruction of the forged instrument by defendant, after he was accused of its forgery,[90] and contradictory statements in regard to a forged instrument, formerly seen in his possession,[91] are admissible. Other instruments in his possession or passed by him are admissible upon proof that they also are forged.[92] If the witnesses are not able to positively identify defendant as the person who presented a forged check, still their evidence is sufficient to go to the jury.[93] However, the fact that defendant was much interested in an account of a forgery by another person is not significant,[94] nor is the record of a suit to enjoin the escheating of land sold to satisfy a judgment obtained on a forged note.[95] Where the maker of notes has testified that all notes prior to the date of the forged one had been entered by his clerk, and defendant had testified that there were other notes relating to confidential transactions which had not been so entered, the maker may introduce evidence to show that all of these latter notes have been paid.[96]

13. KNOWLEDGE OF FALSITY OF INSTRUMENT. Evidence of false statements made by defendant is admissible to show knowledge of the falsity of the instrument uttered by him.[97] So the forgery, uttering, or possession of other instruments may be given in evidence,[98] upon proof that they were forged,[99] and upon their production or upon a due accounting for their non-production.[1] It is impracticable to lay down any general rule as to the time within which such other utterings must have taken place,[2] but evidence of an uttering subsequent to the one charged is not admissible unless the latter is in some way a part of a connected scheme to defraud.[3] Another instrument passed by defendant may be shown to be a forgery, although he has been acquitted on an indictment for uttering it.[4] If a second uttering is made the subject of a distinct indictment, it cannot be given in evidence to show a guilty knowledge in a former uttering.[5] It may also be shown that the prisoner endeavored to procure counterfeit money, and his declarations that he intended to cultivate the acquaintance of a counterfeiter and move near to the latter's residence are admissible.[6] Where a false discharge of a mortgage has been recorded, it may be shown that defendant afterward mortgaged the land to another, furnishing an abstract showing such discharge, but the receipt of interest by the former mortgagee after such release is not relevant, unless it is shown that such interest came from the mortgagor;[7] nor is the fact that defendant may have purchased land at a sale to satisfy a judgment obtained by him upon a forged note relevant.[8]

14. Possession of False Instrument. Possession, by the wife of defendant, of bank-notes apparently cut for the purpose of making alterations similar to those made in a note found on defendant is not, without evidence of concert between them, competent evidence against defendant on an indictment for having such altered note with intent to pass it.[9]

15. Disposing of and Putting Away Forged Bank-Notes. On an indictment for disposing of and putting away a forged bank-note, knowing it to be forged, the prosecutor may show that other forged notes have been uttered by defendant, in order to prove his knowledge of the forgery.[10]

Corroboration in Canada.— By statute, in Canada, the evidence of any person supposed to be interested in respect of any instrument or other matter given in evidence on a trial for forgery must be corroborated (Reg. v. Rhodes, 22 Ont. 480; Reg. v. Selby, 16 Ont. 255; Reg. v. McDonald, 31 U. C. Q. B. 337); and evidence is not sufficient in the absence of such corroboration (Reg. v. McBride, 26 Ont. 639; Reg. v. Giles, 6 U. C. C. P. 84). The evidence of a person who is not interested at the time of the trial needs no corroboration, although he may have previously possessed some interest. Reg. v. Hagerman, 15 Ont. 598. forged,[14] or that some of the signatures are not genuine,[15] although the entire instrument has been alleged to be forged. Such falsity is shown by evidence that the person whose name is signed did not make or authorize the signature;[16] that such person could not write,[17] or that he was absent[18] or dead[19] at the date of the execution of the instrument. If there be more than one person bearing the name signed, and all but one testify that they do not know defendant, and that one testifies that he knows defendant, but never signed or authorized his signature to the instrument, it is sufficient.[20] That the instrument is forged is sufficiently shown by evidence contradicting its statements,[21] by the fact that a blank used was not in existence at its date,[22] that the signature had been traced from another,[23] and that defendant, after confessing to the forgery, had in his possession at the time of his arrest all the material for making such an instrument.[24] Where it is shown that a deed was actually executed twenty-seven years before, and the certificates of acknowledgment and authentication of the one offered in evidence are admitted to be genuine, evidence that a witness had signed by mark, which did not appear on the deed offered, is not sufficient to prove that it is a forgery;[25] nor is the probate of a will conclusive evidence of its validity.[26] A claim by defendant that he did not know who signed the maker's name to a note is not a concession that it is a forgery.[27]

b. Fictitious Parties to Instrument. Proof that no person bearing the name signed to a check has any right to draw on the party to whom it is directed is prima facie evidence that the name is fictitious;[28] and testimony by a person largely acquainted in the locality where defendant represents the maker of the instrument to live that he knows of no such person sustains a conviction, defendant offering no proof of the existence of such person;[29] so where a bill of exchange was addressed to a certain person, living at a designated town, and had been apparently accepted by him, and a person of the name and place designated testifies that the acceptance is not his, and that he has made personal inquiries and consulted a directory without being able to discover any other person of that name in the place designated, this is evidence for the jury that the name in the acceptance is fictitious.[30]

3. Making of False Instrument. That defendant made the instrument alleged to be forged need not be proved by eye-witnesses, but may be inferred from facts and circumstances.[31] The person whose signature is forged is not an indispensable witness;[32] nor need the subscribing witnesses be produced.[33] Neither is it necessary in order to identify an instrument to produce all the persons through whose hands it has passed.[34] It is not indispensable to show that defendant was at some time in possession of the paper,[35] or that it is in his handwriting.[36] However, the guilt of defendant is established if the signature is proved to be in his handwriting.[37] The fact that defendant had received the fruits of a forged instrument, while not itself sufficient proof that the instrument was forged by defendant,[38] may when taken in conjunction with other circumstances in evidence be sufficient to warrant a conviction of defendant for forgery.[39] Possession of a forged instrument by defendant is strong evidence that he forged it or caused it to be forged.[40] Where defendant has represented himself as being the person whose signature is forged, his conviction of forgery is warranted;[41] so, where he has made other misstatements, and his actions in connection with the forged instrument are suspicious[42] or he has endeavored to afterward destroy it.[43] His admissions with reference to the forgery may show his connection therewith,[44] and where he is charged with

Admission insufficient to connect defendant with forgery.— In the admission by defendant made long after the crime that he knew who committed the forgery in question and was informed as to some of the plans and devices used by the accomplice to deceive the bank, and that money had been produced from the bank on a forged draft, there is no fact confessed from which it could be fairly inferred that defendant did any act connected with the transaction or that he having forged a check made payable to his order and there is evidence that the name of the drawer was that of a fictitious person the jury are authorized to infer that he forged it.[45] On the other hand the circumstance that articles of merchandise or coin similar to those obtained by means of the forgery were found several months later in the possession of one charged with the forgery is not sufficient to sustain a verdict of guilty.[46]

4. Intent to Defraud — a. In General. Evidence that the advantage which the instrument if genuine would have given has been obtained,[47] or that the injury which such an instrument could inflict has been accomplished,[48] sufficiently shows an intent to defraud. So evidence that defendant believed he could procure by means of his act that which he could not otherwise procure is ample.[49] Signing a fictitious name,[50] or the impersonation of another,[51] shows guilty intent and justifies a conviction.

b. A Particular Person. If the indictment charges an intent to defraud a particular person it must be proved;[52] but if an intent to defraud generally is charged, it is sufficient to show an intent to defraud any one.[53] An averment of an intent to defraud one person is sustained by proof of an intent to defraud a firm of which he is a member;[54] and a charge of an intent to defraud several is sustained by proof of an intent to cheat any one of them.[55] In order to find the intent to defraud a particular person it is not necessary that there should be evidence to show that the accused had that particular person in contemplation at the time of the forgery, if its effect would be to defraud him.[56] As everything which is the natural consequence of the act must be taken to be the intention of the prisoner, it is a consequence that he intended to defraud the person to whom he uttered,[57] or attempted to utter,[58] the instrument, and also the person whose name is used,[59] although there was no probability of his act being successful.[60] Where the name used is fictitious, the intent to defraud the person to whom the instrument was uttered can be inferred.[61] The oath of the person to whom the instrument was uttered that he believed the prisoner had no intent to defraud him will not repel the presumption.[62] The person to whom an instrument is passed by means of a forged indorsement cannot be said not to be defrauded because his agent saw defendant write the indorsement, and the agent knew that defendant had no interest in it, if the agent did not know whose names were written upon it.[63] On a prosecution for the forgery of a will, the indictment charging an intent to defraud a person or persons unknown, such intent is not made out where the prosecution fails to show that there is any person in existence who might be defrauded.[64]

5. Efficacy of Instrument to Defraud. The instrument must appear to be a valid one, and if the evidence upon this point is vague it is not sufficient.[65] A register of a corporation is sufficient evidence that a person whose name is forged is a shareholder;[66] the muster-book of the navy office is good evidence to prove the identity of a supposed testator;[67] and an admission by defendant that he taught school in a certain year, which was prior to the expiration of a teacher's certificate, sufficiently discloses that the alteration of the certificate was made while it was in force.[68]

6. Authority of Defendant to Make Instrument. Authority to sign the name of another is sufficiently shown where such other person was informed at the time and did not repudiate the act;[69] or when on previous occasions the party whose name was used had paid the instrument without remonstrance.[70] Evidence that the party whose name is used does not recollect whether or not he gave authority will not support a conviction;[71] but if such party positively denies authority a verdict of guilty will not be set aside,[72] unless it is against the clear weight of evidence.[73] Authority in defendant is not shown by a belief that the person whose name is used will ratify the act,[74] nor by evidence showing the amount of attention given by defendant as agent to his principal's affairs,[75] nor by proving authority to have been given to others to make similar instruments,[76] nor by evidence that when defendant had previously made a similar alteration in a note other than the one alleged to be forged the party liable thereon had caused the note to be withdrawn as soon as he discovered the alteration and had paid no attention to notice of protest.[77] So evidence of agency for some purposes does not show authority to sign the principal's name to notes.[78] Nor does the evidence that an agent is entitled to compensation for his services, which his principal directs be obtained from a bank, show authority in such agent to sign his principal's name to a note;[79] nor does it avail defendant to show authority from one person, where he signed the names of two persons, and there is no question as to lack of authority from the other.[80]

7. Corporate Existence of Party Defrauded. It is not necessary to show that a corporation is one de jure; it is sufficient if it appears to be acting as such.[81] Where the forgery consisted in the alteration of the findings in a civil suit, the pleadings in which assumed that the adverse party was a corporation, and the trial proceeded upon that theory, defendant, on the trial for forgery, cannot complain that the evidence failed to show the existence of any person, partnership, or corporation capable of being defrauded.[82]

8. ALTERATION OF EXISTING INSTRUMENT. Evidence that the instrument went into defendant's hands in its original condition and left his hands in its changed form is sufficient to show that he either altered it or caused it to be done;[83] but if it is not shown that it was altered when it left his hands evidence that he participated in the benefits derived from such alteration is sufficient to connect him with it.[84] So where defendant admits that all the writing is his own, evidence that a clause was not in the instrument when executed will justify a verdict;[85] but a verdict will be set aside which is against the preponderance of evidence.[86]

9. UTTERING FALSE INSTRUMENT — a. In General. Proof that defendant committed any of the acts which constitute uttering is sufficient,[87] especially if he has made false statements in regard to the instrument;[88] but proof merely that the prisoner had received the benefits derived from the uttering is not sufficient proof that he uttered it,[89] even though it be shown that he forged it.[90]

b. Knowledge of Falsity of Instrument. Misrepresentations made by defendant in uttering the instrument is sufficient evidence of his knowledge of its falsity;[91] but a conviction cannot be sustained where such knowledge is not shown.[92]

10. POSSESSION OF FALSE INSTRUMENT. On a prosecution for having in one's possession a forged writing with intent to fraudulently utter the same a conviction is unauthorized in the absence of evidence identifying the writing set out in the writing with the one found in defendant's possession,[93] and it must also be shown that defendant knew it to be a forged instrument.[94]

11. VENUE. Evidence of venue need not exclude every reasonable doubt, but it is sufficient if it can reasonably be inferred that the offense was committed within the jurisdiction alleged.[95] If the instrument purports to have been executed in a certain county, and defendant was there at that time, it is sufficient evidence of its execution therein;[96] and possession of a forged instrument in the county where the forgery is charged to have been committed is prima facie evidence that the forgery was committed in that county.[97] So in the absence of other proof, evidence that the instrument was uttered in a certain county is strong proof that it was forged there.[98] If a genuine instrument has been altered, the place where it is first known to be altered, is prima facie the place where such alteration was made, although it was originally issued elsewhere;[99] and if the uttering was by mail the postmark is evidence of the place of uttering.[1]

XVI. TRIAL.

A. Conduct in General. Where three are jointly charged with procuring others to utter a forged will, the only evidence being of separate acts, at separate times and places, and one pleads guilty at the end of the evidence, the other two may notwithstanding be convicted.[2] Where several counts charge the forging and uttering of the same indorsement, which is set out in each count, it is proper to refuse to require the prosecutor to elect on which count he will proceed;[3] and on a count for uttering several forged receipts, the court will not put the prosecutor to his election on which receipt to proceed if all were uttered at one time.[4] If election be made to proceed on an indictment for a lesser offense, which is proved, it is not merged into a larger offense for which an indictment had also been found, although facts sufficient to support it were made out.[5] In any event the prosecutor will not be pressed to elect what particular fact he means to rely upon as an uttering, till the case for the prosecution is closed.[6]

B. Questions of Law and Fact. What is or what is not a false making is a question of law;[7] so is the interpretation of the writing.[8] The jury must determine whether there has been a forgery,[9] an alteration,[10] or an uttering,[11] or an intent to defraud;[12] likewise they must decide to whom the instrument has been passed;[13] whether it was so imperfect as not to deceive a man of ordinary prudence;[14] and whether an alteration was made with authority.[15] In case of uncertainty as to whether the paper offered in evidence is the one described in the indictment it may be submitted to the jury.[16] It is also for the jury to say whether the whole instrument was produced by the same hand that wrote the signature;[17] whether a signature was intended as an approval of an account as alleged;[18] whom defendant intended to represent by a signature;[19] whether words added to a receipt altered its effect;[20] whether an instrument was used to draw money;[21] and whether defendant tendered handwriting as his own or another's.[22]

C. Instructions — 1. In General. An instruction embodying a general statement of the facts necessary to constitute the offense is proper.[23] Where there are counts for forging, uttering, and having in possession, the court may submit the first count in his charge, omitting the remaining ones;[24] or if there is but one count for forgery of an instrument, which adds that defendant uttered it, he is not prejudiced by the alternative form of an instruction to find him guilty if it was believed that he forged "or uttered" it, where the evidence is sufficient to support a conviction for forgery, and the punishment for the separate offenses of uttering and forging are the same.[25] If the second count charges the uttering, and the third, possession with intent to pass, giving an instruction that if the jury find that defendant had possession with intent to pass they should find him guilty under the second count is reversible error.[26]

2. Defining the Offense. A definition of the crime of forgery in the language of the statute is correct;[27] and unless defendant asks a specific instruction it is not error to refer the jury to the indictment for a description of the crime alleged,[28] or give the ingredients of the offense applicable to the testimony.[29] Legal expressions must be explained,[30] but it is unnecessary to define words which are used in their ordinary sense.[31]

3. Explaining Meaning of the Instrument. Where words in the instrument charged to have been forged are awkwardly, unskilfully, or designedly inserted, it is the duty of the court to instruct the jury how it should be read;[32] but if it is ambiguous, it is proper to charge that if the instrument is other than that set forth in the indictment the jury must acquit.[33]

4. As to Making or Assisting in Making of False Instrument. If forgery and uttering are charged in a single count, an instruction that defendant could be convicted regardless of who made the instrument is erroneous;[34] so is an instruction that if defendant believed the instrument to be genuine he was not guilty if he is charged with the forgery and not with uttering it.[35] However, it is not improper to charge that defendant is guilty if he forged any part of the instrument;[36] nor is an instruction improper which permits the jury to consider another forgery in determining whether the instrument in question was also forged.[37] Where the time of the forgery becomes important, a charge on that point should be given.[38] An instruction that the jury must acquit unless they find that defendant forged the instrument, but ignoring the principle that he is alike guilty if he aids or abets in committing the act, is properly refused;[39] but an erroneous instruction upon this point may be cured by other instructions.[40]

5. As to Intent to Defraud. An instruction is erroneous which omits the qualification that the instrument must have been made with intent to defraud,[41] although not requested by defendant;[42] but if the jury is once informed on this point it is not necessary to repeat it in every part of the charge.[43] An instruction which presents the issue is sufficient.[44] Where other forged documents are admitted to show intent, the jury should be instructed as to the purpose of their admission;[45] but lack of evidence upon a certain point precludes giving an instruction in regard to it.[46] A charge that the word "another" includes all persons is not erroneous in not expressly excluding the alleged forger.[47]

6. As to Authority to Make Instrument. If there is any evidence to show that defendant was authorized to make an instrument alleged to have been forged by the person in whose name it was made, it is the imperative duty of the court to charge that the jury should acquit if they believe that defendant had such authority or if they entertain a reasonable doubt of such authority,[48] and it is error to charge the jury that the mere making of the forged instrument is sufficient without proving that there was no lawful authority.[49]

7. As to Uttering of False Instrument. Instructions asked by defendant, on points which are covered by those already given,[50] or upon which there is no evidence,[51] are properly refused; and error in rulings on a question whether the forgery was executed by defendant or by a third person is harmless where the conviction was for uttering and not for forgery.[52] It is error for the court to omit from its charge the question of scienter;[53] or if the instruction gives an impression that the burden of showing lack of knowledge was on defendant;[54] but where the offense charged could not have been committed without such knowledge, an express instruction upon this point is not necessary.[55] If defendant is charged with uttering the instrument by different acts, it is error to restrict knowledge of its falsity to only one of such acts.[56]

8. As to Possession of False Instrument. On a trial for unlawfully having in possession, with intent to pass, a forged check purporting to be signed by a fictitious person, an instruction that the state must show that the signature is fictitious is properly refused, where the instruction as given charged that the Harmless error.— Under Pen. Code, art. 723, as amended by Laws (1897), p. 17, providing that no conviction shall be reversed unless the error was prejudicial to defendant, an instruction that it is sufficient to constitute forgery that some person might be injured or defrauded thereby is harmless error, where it is proved that defendant raised a check with the evident intent to defraud the bank or the drawer. Charging special statutory provision.— If there is any evidence that defendant believed that he was acting under authority in making the alleged forged instrument the court should charge the statute which provides that when the person making or altering the instrument acts under authority which he has good reason to believe and does believe would be sufficient he is not guilty of forgery, although the authority be in fact insufficient or void. jury must find beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant knew it to be forged;[57] but an instruction which ignores knowledge of the falsity of the instrument is insufficient.[58]

D. Verdict. If defendant is charged with forgery and uttering, he may be convicted for the whole, or for but one of such acts,[59] but it is not proper to base a separate conviction on each count;[60] and if a verdict finds the accused guilty as to some of the counts, it is equivalent to a verdict of not guilty as to the others.[61] If one count is defective a verdict based upon a count which is good will be sustained,[62] but it will be set aside if it is impossible to say whether or not it is based upon a part of the indictment which is defective,[63] or if it is based upon a count for which no testimony was offered.[64] However, a judgment of conviction will not be reversed because the instructions and verdict erroneously designated the offense as forgery, if the indictment charged and the proof showed uttering, and defendant has not been prejudiced.[65] If the second count charges forgery, a verdict "on the second count" of uttering is invalid;[66] but if uttering is, by statute, made forgery, a verdict finding defendant guilty of uttering is sufficient to sustain a conviction for forgery.[67] The verdict should find that defendant, if charged with possession of a forged instrument, had knowledge that it was forged;[68] also that defendant passed it with intent to defraud,[69] although it need not specify the person intended to be defrauded;[70] nor need it recite that defendant acted knowingly, wilfully, and fraudulently;[71] nor that the instrument was apparently valid;[72] nor specify the degree, if he is found guilty as charged in the indictment;[73] nor, if the offense is specified, is it necessary to add, "as charged in the indictment";[74] likewise, it is not necessary to find that defendant received the instrument in good faith and for a valuable consideration, although essential elements of the offense charged.[75]

E. Sentence and Punishment. At common law one convicted of forgery was subject to corporal punishment;[76] but imprisonment is now very generally substituted by statute.[77] Making or altering an instrument not named in the statute is a misdemeanor at common law, but not punishable by confinement in the state prison.[78] If an indictment concludes contra formam statuti, it is proper to sentence the prisoner in accordance with the statutory punishment;[79] but if the offense is not punishable under the statute, but is at common law, the conclusion, "against the statute," may be rejected as surplusage.[80] If there are two counts, one charging forgery, and the other uttering, and a verdict of guilty is rendered on each, and it appears that both charges relate to the same instrument, a separate sentence on each is erroneous.[81] If forgery and uttering are by statute made distinct offenses, the punishment designated for one cannot be inflicted by the other;[82] but if defendant is convicted for each offense the court may apply the sentence for one.[83]

Defects which might have been cured at the trial will not be considered on appeal;[84] but the reviewing court will correct an error so as to make the sentence conform with the conviction,[85] or modify a sentence so that no more punishment will be imposed than is allowable.[86] If the punishment imposed by the sentence is not an abuse of the court's discretion, it will not be reviewed.[87] Nor will the appellate court interfere with the discretion of the trial court in imposing a sentence where all the evidence which was before the trial court is not before the appellate court.[88]

I. DEFINITION.

Fornication is voluntary unlawful sexual intercourse between persons of the opposite sex, under circumstances not constituting adultery,[1] and therefore varies as does the definition of adultery.[2] By the canon law it was the unlawful sexual intercourse of a single person with another of the opposite sex, whether married or not,[3] while by the common law it was such intercourse between a man, whether married or single, and an unmarried woman.[4] The statutes defining or recognizing the offense vary in the different jurisdictions.[5]

the ecclesiastical law,[6] is not punishable as a common-law offense unless accompanied by such circumstances as to render it a public nuisance.[7]

B. By Statute — 1. In General. In most of the states, however, statutes have been enacted punishing the offense of fornication, although not accompanied by circumstances constituting a public nuisance.[8] These statutes and the decisions thereunder do not agree as to what constitutes the offense. Under some of the statutes the canon-law definition is followed,[9] while under others the common-law definition is followed,[10] and under others the definition of the offense varies from both.[11] Where the statute does not define the offense, but merely prescribes a penalty therefor, the common-law definition is usually followed.[12] Birth of spurious offspring is required under some of the statutes.[13]

3. Void Marriage. Under some statutes parties cohabiting under a void marriage are guilty of fornication,[15] or fornication and adultery.[16] It is no defense in such cases that defendant had received legal advice before entering into the marriage that it would be lawful.[17]

III. Indictment or Information.[18]

A. In General. As fornication is indictable only under statutory provisions, an indictment or information therefor should as a general rule follow the language of the statute so as to aver all the elements of the offense;[19] but it need not employ the precise words of the statute, if language of like import and equivalent meaning is used.[20]

B. Particular Averments — 1. As to Marriage. If terms negativing the marriage relation are used in the indictment, the fact that the parties were not married to each other, or to others, need not be expressly averred;[21] but it is otherwise if there is nothing else in the indictment negativing the marriage relation ;[22] and it has been held in those jurisdictions where fornication is punished only when committed with a single woman, that the fact that the woman is not married must be alleged.[23]

2. As to Time of Offense. Although the indictment or information must allege the day upon which the offense was committed, it is sufficient if the evidence shows it to have been committed on any day within the statute of limitations.[24] The fact that the time laid in an information does not correspond with the time stated in the affidavit upon which the information is based does not make the information defective.[25]

C. Description of Parties. An indictment or information for fornication should so describe the parties as to bring them within the statute.[26] It has been held that describing a married woman as a "spinster" in an indictment under a statute for fornication and adultery is no ground for arrest of judgment.[27]

D. Joinder of Parties. As a general rule the participants may be indicted either jointly or severally,[28] although in some jurisdictions the statute is such as to require them to be indicted severally.[29] If jointly indicted it is within the discretion of the court whether they shall be tried jointly or separately.[30]

E. Joinder of Counts.[31] It has been held that a count for fornication may be joined with a count for rape,[32] or for adultery.[33]

F. Amendment. An information insufficiently charging the offense may be amended by making the necessary insertion.[34]

IV. EVIDENCE.

A. Competency of Witnesses. The general rules governing the competency of witnesses in criminal cases are applicable of course in prosecutions for fornication.[35] Thus the rule that a husband or wife cannot be a witness for or against each other in criminal cases applies in prosecutions for fornication.[36] A divorced husband is incompetent to testify against his wife and one jointly tried with her as to the adulterous intercourse or any other fact which occurred while the marriage subsisted.[37] But a husband may testify as to his wife's marriage to him,[38] or against the male defendant when tried separately.[39] A married woman is a competent witness to prove the criminal connection with her; but not the non-access of her husband.[40]

B. Presumptions and Burden of Proof — 1. In General. It is incumbent upon the state, in a prosecution for fornication, to prove affirmatively all the material elements of the offense as alleged in the indictment;[41] and the proof must make out a case within the statute defining or prescribing the penalty for the offense.[42]

2. Criminal Intent — a. In General. The general rule that to constitute a crime a criminal intent must be shown applies to prosecutions for fornication.[43] But where the acts constituting the offense are knowingly and intentionally committed, criminal intent will be presumed;[44] and the burden of showing any extenuating circumstances is on defendant.[45]

b. Unlawful Marriage. This intent will be inferred from marrying and cohabiting with one who at the time has a living spouse by a former marriage,[46] except where it is shown that the cohabitation followed a prima facie valid marriage; the burden in such case being on the state to prove guilty knowledge.[47]

c. Joint Intent. In a prosecution for fornication and adultery under the North Carolina statute, although the joint act must be shown, it is not necessary to charge or prove a joint intent. The absence of criminal intent may be shown in defense by either party, but when so shown it does not inure to the other's benefit.[48]

3. As to Death of Absent Spouse. The burden of proving the death of an absent husband in those jurisdictions in which the woman must be unmarried is on the prosecution.[49]

4. As to Marriage. In the absence of proof of marriage, it is generally presumed that the parties are single and unmarried, and the burden is on them to rebut that presumption.[50]

5. As to Continuance of Intercourse. Criminal intercourse, once shown, is presumed to continue, where the conditions remain the same.[51]

C. Admissibility of Evidence — 1. In General. The general rules governing the admissibility of evidence in criminal cases apply of course in prosecutions for fornication.[52] Defendant's or the other party's prior reputation for chastity is irrelevant.[53]

2. Admissions and Confessions — a. Of Defendant. Voluntary admissions or confessions of guilt by defendant may be received in evidence as proof of the offense.[54]

b. Of Co-Defendant. The admissions or declarations of one defendant are not admissible in evidence against the other.[55] Such admissions, however, may be admitted on a joint trial, if the jury are instructed that they can only be considered in determining the guilt of the person making them.[56]

3. As to Intercourse. Since the nature of the offense is such that it can very rarely be directly proved, circumstantial evidence, such as the acts and conduct of the parties toward each other, is always admissible to prove their guilt.[57]

4. Other Offenses[58] — a. In General. Evidence tending to show defendant's commission of a similar but distinct offense with the same person is admissible for the purpose of raising an inference or presumption that he committed the particular act with which he is charged.[59] But evidence that the woman has had carnal intercourse with other men is immaterial,[60] except in rebuttal of her testimony.[61] Evidence admissible to prove the offense on general grounds is not inadmissible because it discloses another distinct offense.[62]

b. Prior Acts of Familiarity. Evidence of prior acts of familiarity between the same parties may be introduced as tending to show the probability of the Testimony on former trial.— Evidence as to what the prosecutrix testified before the justice in a trial for bastardy is properly rejected, unless the proper foundation is laid to impeach her by asking her whether she did so testify, as it is proposed to prove. The evidence for any other purpose would be hearsay. Hollis v. State, 77 Ga. 74.

Evidence of divorce.— Evidence that defendant, prior to a second marriage, obtained a decree of divorce from his first wife by a court having no jurisdiction of either the parties or the action is inadmissible. Hood v. State, 56 Ind. 263, 26 Am. Rep. 21.

offense charged, and as corroborative of evidence indicating the commission of the alleged offense,[63] provided the prior acts were committed within the period prescribed by statute before the presentment of the indictment.[64]

c. Subsequent Acts of Familiarity. Evidence of acts that transpired since the finding of the indictment may be admitted as tending to show an illicit continuation of the conduct of the parties,[65] if such acts are not too remote in point of time to afford a reasonable inference of guilt.[66]

D. Weight and Sufficiency of Evidence — 1. In General. The evidence to sustain a conviction must be sufficient to support the charge alleged in the indictment beyond a reasonable doubt,[67] although it may be under oath of but one credible witness.[68] The weight to be given to the evidence is for the jury to decide, taking into consideration all the circumstances of the case.[69] It has been said that less evidence may justify a jury in finding either a single or married man guilty of fornication with another man's wife, than in finding a single man guilty of fornication with a single woman.[70]

2. Accomplice Testimony. The testimony of an accomplice may be sufficient to convict,[71] although as a general rule it must be supported by other evidence

3. As to Carnal Knowledge. Carnal intercourse must in most cases be inferred from circumstances.[73] The circumstances, to warrant a conviction, must be such as to produce a belief or conviction that the parties have been cohabiting or have had sexual intercourse.[74]

V. INSTRUCTIONS.

A. In General. The court may properly instruct that a conviction for fornication may be had on circumstantial evidence, showing guilt beyond a reasonable doubt,[76] and that the jury cannot convict upon evidence alone of previous lascivious conduct, but shall consider it only as a circumstance in the case, where the state relies for conviction upon only one of a number of like offenses.[77] But it cannot properly give an instruction upon the weight of the evidence,[78] or an instruction expressing an opinion on a question of fact.[79] Nor can the court instruct for a conviction on proof of acts not alleged in the indictment or information.[80] Where corroboration of an accomplice is necessary,[81] a charge on Dec. 465).

75. State v. Summers, 98 N. C. 702, 4 S. E. 120, holding, however, that on an indictment for fornication and adultery, where the offense is proved, it is no bar to a conviction that the evidence also showed the accused to have been guilty of rape.

Time of offense.— Where the indictment does not aver the day on which the offense was committed, if the evidence shows it to have been committed within the statutory period there is no variance. Com. v. Burk, 3 Lanc. L. Rev. (Pa.) 138.

Arrest of judgment.— Where an indictment in one count charges fornication and bastardy, and in a second count incestuous fornication and bastardy, it is no ground for arresting the judgment after verdict of guilty that the evidence showed that the indictment should have been for adultery. 76. State v. Dukes, 119 N. C. 782, 25 S. E. 786. And see Buchanan v. State, 55 Ala. 154.

Suspicious facts.— But a charge to the jury that they may convict unless they can reconcile all the suspicious facts proved, and make them harmonize with defendant's innocence, is erroneous. Buchanan v. State, 55 Ala. 154.

78. Ledbetter v. State, 21 Tex. App. 344, 17 S. W. 427. An instruction that certain circumstances are conclusive of guilt is erroneous. Ellis v. State, 20 Ga. 438.

79. Com. v. Betz, 2 Woodw. (Pa.) 210, holding that an instruction in a prosecution for fornication and bastardy that, if the jury find that declarations of the woman were made after the pains of labor had begun they would be justified in finding that they were made in the "extremity of labor" specified in the statute, was improper.

80. Powell v. State, 12 Tex. App. 238, holding that where one of the modes of committing the offense is charged, it is radical error to instruct for conviction if the other mode has been proved.

accomplice testimony should instruct the jury that defendant can be convicted only where it appears that such testimony was corroborated by other testimony and define the nature of the required corroborative testimony.[82] The court in defining the offense must define it as alleged in the indictment or information.[83]

B. Directing Verdict. The court may direct a verdict of acquittal where the evidence is not reasonably sufficient to warrant an inference of guilt.[84]

VI. VERDICT AND JUDGMENT.

A. In General. Parties tried jointly on a joint indictment for fornication must be jointly acquitted or jointly convicted.[85] But this does not prevent them from being tried separately, although jointly indicted, and one convicted and punished or acquitted before the other is tried and convicted or acquitted.[86] A trial and conviction for fornication bars a subsequent trial for a larger offense with which it was joined,[87] and an acquittal or conviction on an indictment for another offense bars a subsequent indictment for fornication on the same acts.[88]

B. On Indictment For Another Offense. A conviction for fornication may be had under an indictment for any offense of which it is an element, if there are proper allegations in the indictment to include it;[89] but a conviction cannot be

82. Mitchell v. State, 38 Tex. Cr. 325, 42 S. W. 989, holding also that a charge merely that defendant could not be convicted upon the unsupported testimony of the accomplice was insufficient.

83. Mitchell v. State, 38 Tex. Cr. 325, 42 S. W. 989. But where living together as man and wife is not an element of the offense, it is not necessary to instruct the jury that they must find this fact. State v. Berry, 24 Mo. App. 466.

84. State v. Waller, 80 N. C. 401. But direction to acquit of the bastardy charge in a prosecution under an indictment charging fornication and bastardy in one count, and adultery in another, is properly refused, if the jury may find the fact of intercourse both before and after defendant's marriage to another person, and both intercourses were within the period of gestation so that either may have resulted in begetting the child. Com. v. Burk, 3 Lanc. L. Rev. (Pa.) 138.

85. State v. Bain, 112 Ind. 335, 14 N. E. 232; State v. Rinehart, 106 N. C. 787, 11 S. E. 512. But see State v. Cutshall, 109 N. C. 764, 14 S. E. 107, 26 Am. St. Rep. 599 [overruling State v. Mainor, 28 N. C. 340] (holding that, on a prosecution for fornication and adultery, one defendant may be convicted and the other acquitted, as the offense is joint in the physical acts only, and there is no necessity to prove a joint criminal intent); Ledbetter v. State, 21 Tex. App. 344, 17 S. W. 427.

Incestuous fornication is not a joint offense, and one person may be convicted thereof. Powers v. State, 44 Ga. 209.

Lewd and lascivious cohabitation is a joint offense of which both parties must be guilty or neither. Delany v. People, 10 Mich. 241. See, generally, LEWDNESS.

87. Com. v. Arner, 149 Pa. St. 35, 24 Atl. 83, holding that a trial and conviction for fornication and bastardy bars a subsequent trial for statutory rape charged in the same indictment. And see CRIMINAL LAW, 12 Cyc. 276.

88. Dinkey v. Com., 17 Pa. St. 126, 55 Am. Dec. 542, holding that a party indicted and acquitted of seduction may plead such acquittal in bar of a subsequent indictment for fornication and bastardy founded on the same act.

89. State v. Shear, 51 Wis. 460, 8 N. W. 287. See, generally, INDICTMENTS AND INFORMATIONS. "Whether the charge be fornication and bastardy, adultery or seduction, the essential fact which constitutes the crime is fornication," and is necessarily embraced in them all. Gorman v. Com., 124 Pa. St. 536, 542, 17 Atl. 26.

A conviction for fornication may be had under an indictment for fornication and adultery (State v. Hinton, 6 Ala. 864; State v. Cowell, 26 N. C. 231), or under an indictment for seduction by promise of marriage, although it is not alleged that defendant is a single man (Hopper v. State, 54 Ga. 389; Dinkey v. Com., 17 Pa. St. 126, 55 Am. Dec. 542), or under an indictment for adultery (Respublica v. Roberts, 1 Yeates (Pa.) 6, 2 Dall. (Pa.) 124, 1 L. ed. 316; Crosgrove v. State, 37 Tex. Cr. 248, 39 S. W. 367, 66 Am. St. Rep. 802; Kelly v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. 579, 25 S. W. 425. But see Smitherman v. State, 27 Ala. 23), or although the indictment shows on its face facts increasing the crime of fornication to statutory rape (Com. v. Davidheiser, 20 Pa. Co. Ct. 200. But compare infra, note 90); but one cannot be convicted of adultery on an indictment for fornication, because marriage is not an element of the latter, while it is essential to the former offense (Kelly v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. 579, 25 S. W. 425).

had under an indictment for an offense to which the crime of fornication is not related or in which it is not included.[90]

C. Correction or Modification of Judgment. The rule that the court has power during the term to correct or modify an unexecuted judgment in criminal cases applies to judgments for fornication.[91]

VII. PUNISHMENT.

The punishment for fornication is always prescribed by statute, and is usually fine or imprisonment or both.[92]

FORSTELLARIUS EST PAUPERUM DEPRESSOR, ET TOTIUS COMMUNITATIS ET PATRIÆ PUBLICUS INIMICUS. A maxim meaning "A forestaller is an oppressor of the poor, and a public enemy to the whole community and the country."[1]

FORSWEARING. See PERJURY.

FORT. A fortification or a place protected from attack by some such means as a moat, wall, or parapet.[2]

FORTH. Out to view.[3]

FOR THAT. In pleading, words used to introduce the allegations of a declaration.[4] (See, generally, PLEADING.)

FOR THAT WHEREAS. In pleading, formal words introducing the statement of the plaintiff's case, by way of recital, in his declaration, in all actions except trespass.[5] (See, generally, PLEADING.)

FORTHCOMING BOND. A bond given for the security of the sheriff, conditioned to produce the property levied on when required.[6] (See, generally, ATTACHMENT; DETINUE; EXECUTION; GARNISHMENT; REPLEVIN; SHERIFFS AND CONSTABLES; TAXATION.)

FORTHWITH. In its ordinary signification, immediately;[7] as soon as by One may be convicted of fornication, although, being a married man, he was also guilty of adultery. State v. Summers, 98 N. C. 702, 4 S. E. 120; Com. v. Kammerdiner, 165 Pa. St. 222, 30 Atl. 929; Com. v. Salman, 1 Leg. Chron. (Pa.) 320.

Question of allegation.— In Crosgrove v. State, 37 Tex. Cr. 249, 256, 39 S. W. 367, 66 Am. St. Rep. 802, the court says: "The question is not whether one offense includes another. It is a question of allegation. . . . In other words, all the elements of the offense must be charged, to support the conviction."

90. Thus it has been held that a conviction for fornication cannot be had under an information for rape. State v. Shear, 51 Wis. 460, 8 N. W. 287. See also Com. v. Murphy, 2 Allen (Mass.) 163.

II. PARTICULAR FRANCHISES CONSIDERED.

Franchises are of various kinds,[14] and may include the right to establish or charge tolls for the use of public ferries,[15] public bridges,[16] wharves,[17] turnpikes and toll roads,[18] railroads,[19] the right to collect tolls upon logs put into a public river,[20] the right to construct and maintain waterworks,[21] gas-works,[22] electric lighting plants,[23] public markets,[24] and the power to exercise the right of eminent

Maestri v. Board of Assessors, 110 La. 517, 34 So. 658. On the other hand it has been held that the right to maintain a market-house or to carry on the business of a market is not a right derived from the commonwealth, but is a right belonging to all citizens alike, and that a private company incorporated for that business is a private corporation and exercises no franchise except domain.[25] So it has been held that the term "franchise" includes the power of appointment to public office,[26] an exclusive right of fishing in a public river,[27] patent rights,[28] although it has been held not to embrace trade-marks[29] or mere licenses.[30] Corporations or bodies politic, or the privileges conferred thereon, are the most usual franchises,[31] and such franchises are as varied as the purposes for which corporations are created.[32] The right to exist as a corporation is itself a

General and special franchises distinguished. —"There is a marked distinction between a franchise which is essential to the creation and continued existence of a corporation — a right to exist as an artificial being — a right conferred by the sovereignty of the state — and those rights subsidiary in their nature by which the corporation obtains privileges of more or less value, to the enjoyment of which corporate existence is not a prerequisite." State v. Topeka Water Co., 61 Kan. 547, 558, 60 Pac. 337. In People v. State Bd. Tax Com'rs, 174 N. Y. 417, 435, 67 N. E. 69, it is said: "The general franchise of a corporation is its right to live and do business by the exercise of the corporate powers granted by the state. The general franchise of a street railroad company, for instance, is the special privilege conferred by the state upon a certain number of persons known as the corporators to become a street railroad corporation and to construct and operate a street railroad upon certain conditions. Such a franchise, however, gives the corporation no right to do anything in the public highways without special authority from the state, or some municipal officer or body acting under its authority. When a right of way over a public street is granted to such a corporation, with leave to construct and operate a street railway thereon, the privilege is known as a special franchise, or the right to do something in the public highway, which, except for the grant, would be a trespass."

The word "franchise" is generic, covering all the rights granted a corporation by the legislature, and it is too narrow a definition of the word to hold that it means only the right to be a corporation. Franchises acquired subsequent to organization of corporation.— In State v. Portage City Water Co., 107 Wis. 441, 446, 83 N. 36. As applied to railroad corporations the term "franchises" employed in a mortgage by the railroad company has been held not to be synonymous with "rights, privileges and franchises," "rights, powers and privileges," and the like, but to signify rights or privileges which are essential to the operation of the corporation, and without which its roads and works would be of little value,— such as the franchise to run cars, to take toll, to appropriate earth and gravel for the bed of its road, or water for its engines, and the like. corporation.[37] While franchises are usually conferred on corporations, they are not essentially corporate.[38]

III. CREATION AND SOURCE.

A. Necessity of Government Grant. It is essential to the character of a franchise that it should be a grant from a sovereign power.[39] A franchise may, however, in some cases, be held by prescription which presupposes a grant.[40]

B. Construction of Grant. The grant of a franchise, in so far as it is ambiguous, is to be strictly construed against the grantee and in favor of the public, and nothing will pass unless it is granted in clear and explicit terms.[41]

C. Delegation of Power to Grant Franchises — 1. In General. It has been said to be doubtful whether the legislative department can grant to any other body or authority the power to grant franchises.[42]

2. Grant by Municipality. Accordingly some of the authorities lay down the rule that a municipal corporation cannot confer a franchise,[43] grants of privileges by municipalities being regarded by some of the courts as mere licenses[44] or contracts.[45] On the other hand it is held in some cases that the state may indirectly grant franchises, acting through the agency of a municipality.[46]

D. Certainty of Grantee. Like every other kind of property, a franchise must have a certain owner; it can exist only by grant, and a certain grantee is essential to a grant.[47]

IV. NATURE AND INCIDENTS.

A. In General. A franchise has the legal character of property or an estate, and is usually classed as an incorporeal hereditament.[48] But the pro-

Whether a franchise is subject to partition. — In Rohn v. Harris, 130 Ill. 525, 22 N. But in Donelly v. Vandenbergh, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 27, the power of proprietors of a stage road to partition the privilege or franchise, or to divide the road among themselves so as to give exclusive

B. Exclusiveness. The doctrine has been laid down that every franchise granted is in its nature, and in the absence of express provision to the contrary, exclusive,[61] except as against the government.[62] Moreover the term "franchise" is sometimes used to mean an exclusive right in the sense that the same right cannot be granted to another, without an invasion of the franchise of the first grantee.[63] But it may be stated as a general rule that while a franchise may be a monopoly,[64] a monopoly is not an essential feature of a franchise.[65]
