(B) Signed in Blank. If the application is signed in blank by the insured and filled out by the agent from his own knowledge, the insurer is estopped to assert a misrepresentation therein,[33] particularly if the insured never saw the completed application,[34] but if the insured reads the application and without any fraud or deceit on the part of the agent signs the same, the insurer may set up the falsehood of statements in the application.[35]

(VII) MALA FIDES OF INSURED — (A) In General. Want of good faith on the part of the insured qualifies the application of the general rule; and the statements foregoing can be said to be true only so long as the insured would, if no waiver resulted, occupy the position of the injured party.[36]

(B) Collusion Between Agent and Insured. If there is collusion between the agent and the insured, although the erroneous statements are inserted by the agent, the representations are those of the insured and he cannot recover on the policy.[37] Likewise when a policy has become void by breach of a condition, if the agent by collusion renews or reëstablishes the same the insurer is not bound by his acts.[38]

(C) Knowledge of Misstatements. The result is the same if the insured is aware of the misstatement inserted by the agent and does not correct the same or notify the insurer thereof.[39]

2. Must Be Insurer's Agent. Again the foregoing rules have of course no application if the agent who erroneously or wilfully inserts misstatements is in fact the agent of the insured and not of the insurer.[40] But it is the settled policy of the law to treat local agents who are authorized to procure and forward applications for insurance, for the purposes herein considered, as agents of the insurer and not of the insured.[41] The attempt of the insurer to constitute its agent in fact the agent of the insured in such matters by a statement to that effect in the policy has in general failed of accomplishment, the courts on varying grounds refusing to regard the true status as thus overturned.[42]

XV. RISKS AND CAUSES OF LOSS.

A. Fire as Proximate Cause — 1. Loss by Fire. To constitute a "direct loss or damage by fire," within the usual terms of a fire policy, there must be a fire in the proper sense of that term, from which the loss or damage results.[43]

2. Losses as a Consequence of Fire — a. Fire as Proximate Cause. The frequent controversy as to whether or not a given loss is a loss caused by fire usually depends, however, on the question whether or not a conceded fire is the proximate cause of such loss; and as a general proposition it may be safely stated

App. 447), but even this holding is generally denied (German Ins. Co. v. Horan, 15 Ky. L. Rep. 208). Injury to insured property by heat, although the heat is caused by combustion, if it does not result from fire outside of its usual limits, that is, from a fire such as is contemplated by an insurance contract as distinguished from a fire in general, is not covered by the policy. This rule has been applied: To scorching of sugar in a refinery due to overheating the pans used in drying. Austin v. Drew, 4 Campb. 360, Holt 126, 3 E. C. L. 58, 2 Marsh. 130, 6 Taunt. 436, 1 E. J. 274, distinguishing a "friendly" and a "hostile" fire).

But where a fire in a chimney caused by the accidental ignition of soot damaged the insured property, it was held that the loss was a loss by fire within the terms of the policy. Way v. Abington Mut. F. Ins. Co., 166 Mass. 67, 43 N. E. 1032, 32 L. R. A. 608.

So where the oil in a coal-oil stove took fire, damaging with smoke and soot the furniture covered by the fire policy, it was held to be for the jury to say whether the fire was outside of the place where it was intended to burn, so as to constitute a fire by the terms of the policy. Collins v. Delaware Ins. Co., 9 Pa. Super. Ct. 576, 7 Del. Co. 365.

The ignition of any explosive, such as gunpowder or illuminating gas, by accidental means no doubt constitutes a fire the results of which may be considered a loss by fire under the general terms of a policy. that the policy will cover only the direct and immediate and not the remote losses from fire.[44]

b. Damage by Removal. Where the removal of goods is necessitated by a fire, whether in the insured building or in another building, which causes peril to goods, loss or damage resulting from such removal is covered by a fire policy on the goods, the fire being regarded as the proximate cause.[45]

c. Damage by Water. Under a fire policy damage by water used to extinguish the fire is covered.[46]

d. Loss by Theft.[47] Loss of goods stolen during or as the result of the fire, or during the removal of the goods to save them from loss by fire, is covered by a fire policy.[48]

e. Fall or Blowing Up of Building.[49] Fall of a building due to its partial destruction by fire is of course a part of the loss by fire; and even if the fire results only after the fall of the building and as a consequence of such fall, nevertheless the damage, so far as it is attributable to the fire and not merely to the falling of the building, is a loss by fire.[50] And if to prevent the spread of a fire, and in the exercise of a reasonable judgment, a building is torn down and removed, the damage will be covered by a fire policy.[51]

f. Explosion.[52] In the absence of any limitation in the policy, damage from an explosion which is the direct result of a fire is a loss by fire,[53] but an explosion due to the ignition by a match or spark of an explosive substance, no fire resulting, is not within the terms of an ordinary fire policy.[54]

B. Limitations as to Causes of Loss — 1. Invasion, Insurrection, Mob Violence, Military Power, Etc. A clause is usually inserted in the standard policies[55] exempting the company from liability for loss "caused directly or indirectly by invasion, insurrection, riot, civil commotion, military, or usurped power, or by order of any civil authority."

2. Theft.[56] An exception exempting the company from liability for loss caused by theft, which is now found in standard policies,[57] relieves the company from the liability which would otherwise rest upon it[58] to pay for property stolen during

Invasions — Military power.— A loss resulting from acts of the lawful military authorities of the United States in resisting an attack by the Confederate forces was held to be within the exception so far as it applied to invasion and military power, these being the proximate causes of the loss. the progress of a fire, or during the process of the removal of the property necessitated by fire.[59]

3. EXPLOSION[60]— a. In General. The usual exception of loss by explosion of any kind exempts the company from liability for an explosion, no matter how caused;[61] and perhaps under such an exemption without qualification, there would be no liability for fire resulting from an explosion;[62] but under the further provision that the exemption does not extend to loss by fire resulting from explosion, although the risk is limited to the damage by fire, the company is liable for the fire loss, whatever it may be.[63]

b. Of Boiler. With a like effect policies sometimes exempt the company from liability for fire due to the explosion of steam boilers.[64]

4. LIGHTNING, STORMS, ETC. An exception of liability from lightning, unless fire ensues, excludes a recovery against the company under the policy for damage due to lightning and not to burning;[65] but it is usual to add a lightning clause by which the company is rendered liable for loss caused by lightning as well

5. Falling of Building.[67] For the purpose of excluding any question as to measure of damage by fire, when fire results after a building has fallen, it is usual to provide that, on the falling of a building except as the result of fire, all insurance by the policy on such building or its contents shall immediately cease.[68]

6. Negligence or Misconduct — a. Of Insured or His Servants. In the absence of fraud or design on the part of the insured, or some stipulation in the policy,[69] the insurer is not relieved from liability by mere negligence or carelessness of the insured or his servants, although directly causing or contributing to the loss;[70] but on the other hand even in the absence of stipulation in the policy, the failure of the insured to take reasonable care to avoid loss, or the doing of

XVI. EXTENT OF LOSS AND LIABILITY.

A. Extent of Loss — 1. TOTAL LOSS — a. In General. A total loss, that is, a loss which renders the company liable for the entire value of the property up to the limit of the insurance under the terms of the contract, does not necessarily amount to a complete destruction and obliteration of the property; but to constitute such loss it is sufficient that the property be so destroyed by fire as that it is deprived of the character in which it was insured and rendered useless for that purpose.[80] Thus there is a total loss of a building where the building is substantially destroyed, although some of the walls remain standing.[81] But there is not a total loss of a building where the remnant left standing is reasonably adapted and of value as a basis upon which to restore the building to the condition in which it was before the fire.[82]

b. Under Statutes. In states where the statutes provide that in case of total loss the company shall be liable for the full amount of the insurance, and shall not be allowed to show that the property destroyed was of less value than the insurance which they carried upon it,[83] there is a total loss when the remnant of the property remaining undestroyed is inconsiderable as compared with the part destroyed, and does not constitute a sufficient basis for restoration.[84]

c. Municipal Building Regulations. If by reason of municipal regulations as to the rebuilding of buildings destroyed by fire, such rebuilding is prohibited, then the loss is total, although some portion of the building remains which might otherwise have been available in rebuilding.[85] If by the fire the insured building is so injured as to be unsafe and is condemned by the municipal authorities the loss is total.[86]

2. Partial Loss. In case of partial loss the company is liable only for the amount of the loss, not exceeding the amount of the insurance.[87]

B. Extent of Liability — 1. In General — a. Cash Value at Time of Loss. The general rule is that in case of total loss the insured is entitled to recover the fair cash value of the property at the time and place of the fire.[88]

F. Ins. Co., 99 Iowa 193, 68 N. W. 600; Davis v. Anchor Mut. F. Ins. Co., 96 Iowa 70, 64 N. W. 687; Martin v. Capital Ins. Co., 85 Iowa 643, 52 N. W. 534; Hagan v. Merchants', etc., Ins. W. 237; Martin v. Capital Ins. Co., supra; Joy v. Security F. Ins. Co., 83 Iowa 12, 48 N. W. 1049.

In Kentucky under such a provision it is held that a stipulation in the policy limiting the right of recovery to the cost of replacing the building is invalid (Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Bourbon County Ct., 115 Ky. 109, 72 S. W. 739, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 1850), and there can be no deduction on account of depreciation (Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Bourbon County Ct., supra). Where the policy covered building and machinery and there was a total loss of the building, it was held that the full amount of the insurance on the building could be recovered, although the loss to the machinery was only partial. Ætna Ins. Co. v. Glasgow Electric Light, etc., Co., 107 Ky. 77, 52 S. W. 975, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 726.

In Ohio the amount to be recovered is in such cases a matter of public policy and cannot be waived or arbitrated. Pennsylvania F. Ins. Co. v. Drackett, 63 Ohio St. 41, 57 N. E. 962, 81 Am. St. Rep. 608; Eureka F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Gray, 24 Ohio Cir. Ct. 268.

Insured must therefore prove the value of the property. Hanover F. Ins. Co. v. Lewis, 23 Fla. 193, 1 So. 863.

Buildings.— The ordinary measure of damage for the loss of an insured building is the value of the building as it stood upon the ground on the day it was destroyed, as compared with a new building of the same kind and dimensions, and not the original cost of the building or a sum sufficient to erect a new one, or the difference between the value of the lot and the building upon it and its value with the building destroyed, or the marketable value of the building to be removed from the premises. Ætna Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 11 Bush (Ky.) 587, 21 Am. Rep. 223. It is not the value of a building for a special purpose nor its value to the owner

b. Cost of Replacement. If the policy, however, limits the amount of recovery to the cost of restoring or replacing the property, then the measure is not the cash value of the damage or loss but the cost of such restoration or replacement.[89]

c. Agreed Valuation. The amount stated in the application or policy as the value of the property is not even prima facie evidence of the value at the time of loss;[90] but there may be a valuation of the property in the policy in the nature of a contract for liquidated damages which will be binding on the parties and preclude inquiry as to the actual value.[91]

2. Under Valued-Policy Statutes.[92] Fire policies are ordinarily open and not valued policies;[93] but in many states there are statutory provisions which give to fire policies, to some extent, the effect of valued policies, that is, making the amount of the insurance named in the policy payable absolutely in the event of a total loss without further evidence as to the actual loss,[94] and any stipulation as affected by the fact that it stands on leased ground and must soon be removed, but its value as a building which can be recovered. Washington Mills Emery Mfg. Co. v. Weymouth, etc., Mut. F. Ins. Manufactures.— The cash value of the manufactured product and not merely what it will cost to reproduce the goods destroyed is the amount recoverable. Mitchell v. St. Paul German F. Ins. Co., 92 Mich. 594, 52 N. W. 1017; Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Cannon, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 305, 46 S. W. 851.

Sale pending settlement.— Where the insured, against the protest of the company, pending an arbitration to determine the damage of goods by fire, sold the goods at auction, it was held that the company was not concluded as to the value of the salvage by the amount realized. Reading Ins. Co. v. Egelhoff, 115 Fed. 393. Nor is the company entitled to have the owner restrained from disposing of the property saved until the value can be ascertained. New York F. Ins. Co. v. Delavan, 8 Paige (N. Y.) 419.

98. If the limitation in the charter is simply that the company is not authorized to insure property at a larger proportion of its value than that stated, the question is as to the validity of the policy and not the measure of liability, and the company must pay in case of total loss the total amount of the insurance providing the policy is valid. 5. Limitation to Interest of Insured — a. In General. Where the insurance is on the property and not specifically on the interest of the insured in the property, the insured, if he has an insurable interest, recovers the full amount of the loss as provided by the policy regardless of the nature or extent of his peculiar interest;[1] but if the insurance is on the interest of the insured in the property the recovery is limited to the value of such interests.[2]

b. Of Mortgagee. A mortgagee may insure his own interest, but in the absence of some stipulation in the policy, he has no right to recover under a policy issued to the mortgagor.[3] But if a policy is made payable to the mortgagee as his interest may appear, his recovery is to the extent of his interest, not exceeding the liability of the company to the mortgagor.[4] The mortgagee's right to recover under an insurance covering his interest, or payable to him as his interest may appear, is not reduced or lessened by the fact that he has other security for the indemnity to any one or more of his policies in the absence of any stipulation for pro-rating.[8]

2. Pro-Rating Liability — a. General Rule. It is usual, however, where concurrent insurance is contemplated, to provide in the policy that the company shall not be liable for more than its pro-rata share of the loss.[9]

b. Other Insurance Invalid. A general provision for pro-rating applies only where there is other valid and enforceable insurance.[10] To obviate the difficulty arising out of a determination as to the validity of other insurance, it is usual also to insert a stipulation by which the company is liable only for its pro-rata share, whether the other insurance is valid or not.[11]

c. What Insurance Is Concurrent. To constitute concurrent insurance the policies must be on the same property,[12] on the same interest[13] in the property, against the same risks, and in favor of the same party.[14] Thus separate policies on the interest of mortgagor and mortgagee are not concurrent, and the policy on the interest of the mortgagee is not entitled to pro-rate with a policy on the interest of the mortgagor.[15] The policies may be so drawn that they will pro-rate, if they relate to the same risk, although they are issued on distinct interests.[16]

d. Specific and General Policies. By stipulation[17] a general or componnd policy may be excluded from pro-rata liability with a specific policy on a particular portion of the property covered by the general policy, and in such case the general policy will be held with reference to the property covered by the specific policy only to the extent to which the specific policy fails to satisfy the loss.[18]

D. Duty of Insured to Preserve Property After Loss. It is usually provided in the policy that where the loss is partial the insured shall use all reasonable and proper means for the security and preservation of any property covered by the policy and not destroyed,[19] and failure to comply with such conditions will preclude a recovery for any increase of the loss due to such non-compliance.[20]

E. Deductions and Offsets. There is no rule in fire insurance as there is in marine insurance,[21] by which the company is entitled to deduct some proportion of the estimated cost of replacing a lost building, with another building, on account of the assumed greater value of a new building;[22] nor is there any rule as to salvage, that is, estimated value of materials saved from destruction.[23] The insured is entitled to indemnity for the loss whatever it may be, that is, the value of the property at the time of the loss, or the cost of replacing as the policy may provide.[24] But of course any salvage is to be deducted to the extent of its real value from the total of the value of the property insured in determining the amount of the loss.[25] Where goods are subject to the payment of a tax, the amount of such tax due and unpaid is not to be deducted from the value of the goods in determining the loss.[26] Under provisions in the policy the company is usually entitled to deduct any amount of premium remaining due.[27]

after loss has occurred must be complied with to entitle the insured to recover.[28] But the provisions in the policy in this respect as in others are to be liberally construed in favor of the insured.[29]

2. By Whom Given. The usual stipulation in the policy is that the notice and proofs shall be given and furnished by the insured,[30] but notice sent by the local agent of the company on information furnished by the insured is sufficient;[31] and notice by the local agent has generally been held sufficient, although given on his own motion without any request from the insured.[32] Under the proper circumstances notice and proof of loss may be furnished by the legal representative

Mailing.— Under a policy providing for the mailing of notice, proof of such mailing is sufficient, although the notice never reaches the company. Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co. v. Burget, 17 Ohio Cir. Ct. 619, 9 Ohio Cir. Dec. 369. The question whether in fact the insured mailed the notice is for the jury. Peabody v. Satterlee, 36 N. Y. App. Div. 426, 55 N. Y. Suppl. 363. Proof of deposit of the notice in the mail properly addressed is prima facie but not conclusive proof of its receipt by the company. Munson v. German-American F. Ins. Co., 55 W. Va. 423, 47 S. E. 160. And see Evidence, 16 Cyc. 1065.

54. O'Conner v. Hartford F. Ins. Co., 31 Wis. 160.

But if the requirement is that notice be given in writing, notice by parol is not sufficient. Patrick v. Farmers' Ins. Co., 43 N. H. 621, 80 Am. Dec. 197.

55. Misrecitals as to immaterial matters will not render the notice insufficient. Walker v. Metropolitan Ins. Co., 56 Me. 371; Barnes v. Union Mut. F. Ins. Co., 45 N. H. 21.

Under statutes providing what notice shall be given, it is sufficient to show compliance with the statute, although the policy requires a different notice. Westenhaver v. German-American Ins. Co., 113 Iowa 726, 84 N. W. 717; Russell v. Fidelity F. Ins. Co., 84 Iowa 93, 50 N. W. 546. provisions are sufficient, although they do not comply with the requirements of the policy.[59]

c. Certainty. If the proofs are reasonably certain, it will be sufficient.[60]

d. Mistake. That the insured by oversight or mistake, and not with intent to perpetrate a fraud, makes misstatements will not defeat his right to recover.[61]

e. Prepared by Agent of Insurer. Where the proofs are prepared by defendant's agent, or on forms furnished for the purpose, the company cannot complain that they are not sufficient as to matters not called for.[62]

f. As to Particular Matters — (I) Description and Valuation — (A) In General. Requirements of the policy as to description and valuation of the items of property for which claim is made must be substantially complied with.[63]

(B) In Case of Total Loss. In the case of a total loss, however, such a description and valuation does not seem to be necessary.[64]

Cash value and cost price.— If the policy requires that the proofs state the cash value of each item, the company cannot demand that the cost price be given. McManus v. Western Assur. Co., 43 N. Y. App. Div. 550, 48 N. Y. Suppl. 820, 60 N. Y. Suppl. 1143. And on the other hand it is not sufficient to give the cost price, where the property destroyed has been in use for an indefinite period. Germier v. Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co., 109 La. 341, 33 So. 361.

64. See cases cited infra, this note.

(II) INTEREST OF INSURED. Although the statement shows a total loss, nevertheless the requirement as to stating the nature and value of the interest of insured must be complied with.[65]

(III) OTHER INSURANCE AND ENCUMBRANCES. It is usual to require the insured to state any other insurance on the property, but a substantial compliance with this requirement is sufficient.[66] The insured may also be required to state whether there were encumbrances on the property.[67]

(IV) CAUSES OF LOSS. The requirement that the insured state the facts as to how the loss occurred,[68] so far as they are within his knowledge, is sufficiently complied with by stating that the cause of loss is not known to the insured,[69] and that it happened without any fraud or breach of the conditions of the policy.[70]

3. PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS. In case of insurance on a stock of goods, it is usual to require that the insured produce his books of account, duplicate invoices, and other vouchers which may assist the company in determining the extent and value of the stock; and such requirement must be complied with.[71] But com-

Amount of property saved or value of the débris need not be stated where the building is totally destroyed. Thomas v. Western Ins. Co., 5 Pa. Super. Ct. 383.

Cost and quantity of goods damaged.— If the requirement is that the insured make a statement of the quantity and cost of the goods damaged, no such statement is necessary in case of total loss. McManus v. Western Assur. Co., 43 N. Y. App. Div. 550, 48 N. Y. Suppl. 820, 60 N. Y. Suppl. 1143.

In case of a total loss of a single article, no schedule need be furnished. Smith v. Commonwealth Ins. Co., 49 Wis. 322, 5 N. W. 804.

Where the loss includes several articles, a failure of the insured to give a particular account of the items and values is fatal to recovery. Gottlieb v. Dutchess County Mut. Ins. Co., 89 Hun (N. Y.) 36, 35 N. Y. Suppl. 71; Beatty v. Lycoming County Mut. Ins. Co., 66 Pa. St. 9, 5 Am. Rep. 318; Lindsay v. Lancashire F. Ins. Co., 34 U. C. Q. B. 440.

Change of interest.—It is not a valid ground of objection where the insurance is effected by one for the benefit of himself and others that the preliminary proof does not state changes in the respective interests of such owners. Walsh v. Washington Mar. Ins. Co., 32 N. Y. 427. Nor is it necessary that changes of interest after the loss be stated. Jones v. Howard Ins. Co., 117 N. Y. 103, 22 N. E. 578.

unreasonable;[81] but a substantial compliance is sufficient.[82] And the contract in this respect, as in others, is to be liberally construed in favor of the insured.[83]

b. Statutory Provisions. It is sufficient to comply with the statutory provisions on this subject, notwithstanding the provisions of the policy.[84]

6. Examination of Insured. A condition providing for the examination of the insured[85] on oath, touching his loss, if required by the company, is reasonable; and a refusal to comply with such requirement will forfeit recovery if so provided in the policy.[86] A reasonable compliance with such requirement is

A notary is not a magistrate within the meaning of a policy requiring a magistrate's certificate. Cayon v. Dwelling-House Ins. Co., 68 Wis. 510, 32 N. W. 540.

Disqualification.— Under a policy requiring a certificate by a magistrate "not concerned in the loss as a creditor," it was held that a magistrate who was a general creditor only of the insured was not disqualified. Dolliver v. St. Joseph F. & M. Ins. Co., 131 Mass. 39. And see Ganong v. Ætna Ins. Co., 11 N. Brunsw. 75. Under the requirement that the certificate of loss be under seal of the magistrate or notary nearest the fire and not concerned in the loss, it was held that, the object being to secure an impartial statement, a magistrate was disqualified whose house was destroyed by fire communicated from the property of the insured, and before whom complaint had been entered, charging him with setting the fire. sufficient.[87] Failure to comply may be excused by showing inability to do so.[88] And in a proper case the insured may be entitled to the assistance of an attorney if he desires it.[89]

7. Amendment of Proofs. Any mistake or innocent misstatement made by the insured in his statements or proofs may be corrected by amendment.[90]

C. Effect of Statements and Proofs — 1. In General. If the insurer has been misled by, or has changed its position in reliance on, the statements or proofs furnished by the insured, the latter will of course be estopped from questioning their truthfulness.[91] But, as the proofs are primarily intended for the purpose of securing an adjustment between the insured and the company, the statement as to the amount and circumstances of the loss will not be binding on the insured so as to preclude his recovery of the real amount of the loss, unless there has been a violation of some provision of the policy.[92] Especially is it true that the state-

although under oath, if not intentionally false and made with the purpose to defraud, does not constitute such fraud or false swearing as to defeat recovery.[96]

b. By Another. However, a fraud or false statement on the part of another will not prevent recovery by the insured;[97] although a false statement made by the person whose duty it is to make proofs[98] or to whom the loss is payable[99] may defeat recovery.

3. Overvaluation. Under the usual provision[1] by which recovery under the policy is defeated by any fraud or attempted fraud or false swearing, a fraudulent overvaluation in the proofs or statements of loss will defeat recovery under the policy;[2] but it is only fraud or false swearing that avoids the policy, and if any item included in the claim of loss will forfeit the policy. Dolloff v. Phœnix Ins. Co., 82 Me. 266, 19 Atl. 396, 17 Am. St. Rep. 482.

D. Waiver or Estoppel[4] as to Notice or Proofs — 1. In General. When the company with knowledge that notice and proofs have not been given and furnished as required by the policy so acts in relation to the matter as to lead the assured to reasonably believe that the policy is still in force and binding, there is a waiver of objection to the manner or time of notice and proofs, and accordingly the company cannot take advantage of the default.[5]

Necessity of estoppel or consideration.— While it has been said that a condition of the policy as to notice or proofs can be waived only by agreement supported by a consideration or by an estoppel which involves some act of the insured to his detriment in reliance on the conduct of the company (McDermott v. Lycoming F. Ins. Co., 44 N. Y. Super. Ct. 221), the general rule as has been stated (see supra, XIV, A, 2) is that a waiver may be effectual, although there is neither estoppel (Fink v. Lancashire Ins. Co., 60 Mo. App. 673) nor a consideration (Dobson v. Hartford F. Ins. Co., 86 N. Y. App. Div. 115, 83 N. Y. Suppl. 456).

Necessity of writing.— It is not necessary that waiver of notice or proofs be in writing. It is sufficient that the company has acted in such a manner as to authorize a person of ordinary prudence to believe that the requirements of the policy have been waived. National F. Ins. Co. v. U. S. Building, etc., Assoc., 54 S. W. 714, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 1207; American F. Ins. Co. v. Bland, 40 S. W. 670, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 287. Requirement that waiver by agent must be in writing see infra, XVII, D, 4, d, (II).

so that breach of such condition cannot be relied on as a defense to recovery under the policy.[6]

b. Dependent Upon Time of Waiver. A waiver of conditions as to notice or proofs of loss will be effectual, although the act or conduct of the company relied upon to constitute such waiver is subsequent to the time when, by the terms of the policy, such notice or proofs should have been furnished.[7]

c. Partial Waiver. There may be a waiver as to preliminary notice which does not amount to a waiver of formal notice and proofs as to the particulars of the loss.[8]

3. Waiver by Officers.[9] Any officer of the company having authority to bind it in the conduct of its business may waive the conditions of the policy as to notice and proofs.[10]

4. Waiver by Agents[11]— a. With Limited Authority. Neither mere soliciting agents having no authority to bind the company by contract of insurance[12] nor agents having only authority to countersign and deliver policies issued by the company[13] can waive the requirements in such policies as to notice and proofs.

It has been suggested that the waiver should have become effectual before the expiration of the time limited (Bolan v. Philadelphia Fire Assoc., 58 Mo. App. 225; Gale v. Des Moines State Ins. Co., 33 Mo. App. 664; Brown v. London Assur Corp., 40 Hun (N. Y.) 101), and that at any rate the waiver should have taken place before the bringing of action (Smith v. State Ins. Co., 64 Iowa 716, 21 N. W. 145; Westchester F. Ins. Co. v. Coverdale, 9 Kan. App. 651, 58 Pac. 1029), unless the subsequent action or conduct of the company is such as to work an estoppel (Bolan v. Philadelphia Fire Assoc., 58 Mo. App. 225). d. Limitation on Power of Agent — (I) By Statute. A statutory provision that no agent shall have power to waive any conditions of the policy in writing indorsed thereon is valid, and a verbal waiver of proofs by an agent is not binding on the company.[17]

(II) In Policy. However, an agent having power to bind the company by a contract of insurance may waive the condition in a policy that no waiver of such conditions shall be valid unless in writing indorsed on the policy,[18] and therefore may, notwithstanding such limitation of authority, waive conditions as to notice and proofs of loss.[19] In some cases this conclusion is supported on the theory that the stipulation against varying the terms of the contract except by writing indorsed, etc., has reference to the conditions affecting the validity of the contract and not to provisions as to the liability to the company for a loss, to which notice and proofs of loss necessarily relate.[20]

5. What Constitutes a Waiver — a. In General — (I) Express Waiver. Any direction or assurance by a competent officer or agent that notice or proofs need not be given or will not be insisted upon will constitute an express waiver of the requirements in the policy that such notice or proofs be furnished.[21]

(II) Implied Waiver. Notice or proofs may also be waived by acts or conduct of authorized officers or agents inconsistent[22] with the requirement that notice or proofs be furnished as required by the conditions or stipulations in the policy.[23]

b. Failure to Demand Proofs. The mere silence of the company, even with notice of the loss and failure to require the insured to comply with the conditions as to proofs, will not constitute a waiver thereof.[24]

c. Assistance in Furnishing Proofs. Where the company furnishes to the insured blanks for proofs or assists him in making such proofs it cannot afterward complain that they are not in proper form if such requirements are com-for the insured having attempted to comply with the policy should be advised in what respect he has failed to comply, in order that the objection may be cured.[28] If the company intends to insist on defects, it should point out what defects it intends to rely upon in order that they may be obviated;[29] a mere indefinite objection is not sufficient,[30] but an objection that the insured has failed entirely to comply with the conditions of the policy as to proofs is sufficient.[31] So if it refuses to return the proofs for correction it waives its objection.[32] objection is a waiver of a failure to file the proofs in time,[34] and the requirement that the insured furnish proofs uncalled for by the policy is a waiver of all proofs.[35]

f. Timely Objection. If the objection is one which might be cured if made when the proofs are presented, it should be urged promptly so that the insured shall have opportunity to obviate it within the proper time,[36] and if not made within a reasonable time the objection will be deemed waived.[37] The requirement already stated that specific objection must be made or the retention of the proofs will be deemed a waiver of objection thereto, leads to the result that objections not made before commencement of action are deemed waived and cannot for the first time be interposed in the way of defense to an action on the policy.[38]

g. Proof Delayed by Insurer. So far as objection might be made on the ground that the notice or proofs are not furnished within the time specified by the policy, any conduct on the part of the company or its authorized agents which has induced or necessitated delay in giving notice or furnishing proofs so that they cannot reasonably be given or furnished within the required time will constitute a waiver of the delay.[39]

i. Appraisement or Arbitration. The demand by the company of an appraisement to determine the amount of the loss as provided for by the policy will be a waiver of proofs,[43] and the demand for arbitration has the same effect.[44] A final submission to arbitration as to the amount of the loss is a recognition of liability waiving defect or want of proofs.[45] Reliance on an award as a defense,[46] or on the demand for an award as a condition precedent to bringing action,[47] or an offer to pay the award,[48] will constitute a waiver of proofs.

j. Recognition of Liability. A recognition of the liability of the company for the loss will constitute a waiver of proofs.[49] Thus an offer to pay is a waiver,[50] but an offer of settlement on a basis which is rejected is not a waiver.[51]

k. Denial of Liability — (i) In General. If the company upon being advised of a claim against it for a loss and within the time for filing proofs

But an offer by the insured to arbitrate will not affect a waiver on the part of the company (Cowan v. Phenix Ins. Co., 78 Cal. 181, 20 Pac. 408); and it is said that a proposal to arbitrate, made after the time for filing proofs has expired, which proposal is never carried out, will not be a waiver of failure to make proofs (Niagara Dist. Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Lewis, 12 U. C. C. P. 123).

liability on the ground of failure to furnish proofs may be coupled with denial of liability on other grounds without any waiver of failure or defect of notice or proofs.[56]

(II) PARTIAL OR QUALIFIED DENIAL. A partial or qualified denial of liability does not waive proofs.[57]

(III) DENIAL TO THIRD PERSON. Declarations in behalf of the company denying liability under the policy will not constitute a waiver as to the insured,[58] unless such denial is within the period prescribed for making proofs and comes to the knowledge of the insured.[59]

(IV) BY WHOM MADE. Denial of liability in order to constitute a waiver of proofs must be by an authorized agent, not merely by a third person, even though within the hearing of the agent.[60]

6. WAIVER OF WAIVER; NON-WAIVER CLAUSE. After waiver by the company the subsequent action of the insured in attempting to furnish proofs will not defeat such waiver.[61] It may be stipulated after the loss that proceedings for adjustment of the loss shall not constitute waiver of notice and proofs;[62] but such a stipulation does not prevent a waiver by the company based on subsequent statements of its adjuster.[63]

7. Withdrawal of Waiver. The company cannot after a waiver has become effectual to relieve the insured from furnishing notice and proofs withdraw such waiver and require them to be furnished.[64]

XVIII. Adjustment of Loss.

A. Adjustment and Settlement — 1. Authority to Adjust. Any officer or agent generally or specially authorized by the company to act for it in the matter may bind the company by adjusting with the insured the amount to be paid for the loss under the terms of the policy.[65]

2. Effect of Adjustment — a. As to Subject-Matter. An adjustment made on an investigation of the facts is binding on the company,[66] and in many jurisdictions when fully completed and agreed to by both parties a new contract arises to pay the amount agreed upon as the result of the adjustment.[67] In some cases it is held, however, that the adjustment does not give rise to a new obligation on the part of the company.[68]

b. As to Parties. Where more than one is interested in the insurance an adjustment with one is not necessarily binding upon the others.[69]

3. Compromise or Settlement.[70] A full compromise or settlement of the claim under the policy is binding in the absence of fraud or mistake.[71]

4. Fraud or Mistake. Fraud or mistake on the part of the insured misleading the company will avoid the adjustment or settlement of the loss as to the company.[72] So fraud on the part of the insurer or its representative in procuring an adjustment or settlement will render it void as to the insured.[73]

B. Appraisal and Arbitration[74] — 1. Validity of Provisions — a. In General. A clause in the policy requiring submission to arbitration of any disagreement as to the amount of the loss, before action can be brought on the policy, thus in effect making arbitration a condition precedent to recovery, is generally held to be valid;[75] but some courts have held that a general arbitration clause

As against a subsequent agreement for settlement by which the company undertakes to pay a larger amount the adjustment will not be conclusive. Revere F. Ins. Co. v. Chamberlin, 56 Iowa 508, 8 N. W. 338, 9 N. W. 386.

In an action against a mutual company, the report of an adjusting committee is not conclusive as to the amount of the loss. Sinking Springs Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Rupp, 29 Pa. St. 526.

Limitation of action.— On the theory that the express or implied promise to pay the amount found due on an adjustment is a new undertaking, the limitation in the policy as to the time of bringing action thereon is not applicable to an action brought on the adjustment. Illinois Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Archdeacon, 82 Ill. 236, 25 Am. Rep. 313; Amesbury v. Bowditch Mut. F. Ins. Co., 6 Gray (Mass.) 596; McCallum v. National Credit Ins. Co., 84 Minn. 134, 86 N. While such an adjustment is an accord, it is said that it is not a satisfaction; and therefore it is no defense to an action on the policy. Vining v. Franklin F. Ins. Co., 89 Mo. App. 311.

69. See cases cited infra, this note.

Likewise an adjustment with the assignor or the assignee is not binding on the other where the insurance has been assigned as security or otherwise. Grange Mill Co. v. Western Assur. Co., 17 Ill. App. 299; German Ins. Co. v. Curry, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 237; Summers v. Home Ins. Co., 56 Mo. App. 653; London Fire Assoc. v. Blum, 63 Tex. 282.

Where a mortgagor and a mortgagee are both interested in the insurance, their respective rights having attached at the time of loss or prior thereto, an adjustment with one is not binding on the other. requiring submission to arbitrators of the liability of the company before action can be brought on the policy is invalid as an agreement ousting the courts of their jurisdiction.[76]

b. As to Amount of Damage. voluntary agreement submit the amount of loss to determination by arbitrators or appraisers.[79]

c. As to Total Loss. A stipulation for appraisal or arbitration is applicable to cases of total as well as of partial loss, and the arbitrators or appraisers may determine whether the loss is total.[80] But under valued-policy statutes which provide that in case of total loss the company shall pay the amount of the insurance, a stipulation in the policy for appraisal or arbitration is not applicable in case of total loss, as it is contrary to the provisions of such statute.[81]

2. Necessity of Disagreement. The provisions in policies for appraisement or arbitration are usually conditioned on failure or inability of the parties to agree as to the amount of the loss;[82] and if there is no such disagreement, but total denial of liability on the part of the company, arbitration is not required.[83]

3. Proceedings — a. In General. The proceedings for appraisement and arbitration must reasonably comply with the statutory provisions and the provisions in the policy relating thereto.[84]

b. Demand — (i) Necessity. Under the provisions usually found in policies, arbitration or appraisal is not a condition precedent to action on the policy unless there has been a demand for such a proceeding on the part of the company.[85] But the requirement of the policy may be such that the provision as to arbitration is mandatory on both parties.[86]

(ii) Sufficiency. A demand made in accordance with the provisions of the policy is sufficiently definite.[87] But the company cannot require a submission otherwise than as provided in the policy.[88] It is essential that the demand be made in good faith with the intention to secure the arbitration or appraisal provided for.[89]

the company in its general business of soliciting insurance, collecting premiums, and issuing policies is sufficient.[91]

c. Appointment of Appraisers or Arbitrators. While the usual provisions in a policy for appraisement or arbitration require the appointment of one appraiser or arbitrator by each party and the selection of an umpire by the two in the event that they cannot agree, nevertheless it is contemplated that the persons appointed by the parties be impartial and disinterested.[92] It is sometimes provided by statute that the arbitrators shall be residents of the county in which the loss occurred.[93]

d. Appointment of Umpire. While the appointment of an umpire is usually provided for only in the event of the disagreement[94] of the two appraisers or arbitrators, the fact that he is chosen beforehand will not affect the validity of the appraisement.[95] A fair, impartial, and convenient person should be chosen as umpire.[96]

e. Notice. The parties should have notice of the proceedings of the appraisers or arbitrators.[97]

f. Joint Action. The appraisers or arbitrators and the umpire, when one has been selected, should act together, and a finding as the result of a proceeding in

To be disinterested, the appraiser should not only be without pecuniary interest in the result, but also without bias or prejudice (Bradshaw v. Agricultural Ins. Co., 137 N. Y. 137, 32 N. which one has not acted will not be valid;[98] but one appraiser or arbitrator cannot by refusing to act prevent further proceedings.[99]

g. Basis of Finding. The appraisers or arbitrators should receive evidence on which to base their findings.[1] They may call in the aid of third persons skilled in determining the particular kind of damage involved;[2] or if they are themselves experts they may make use of their expert knowledge without calling in the assistance of others.[3] The finding should be in detail and not in gross;[4] and if it is as to a part of the loss only it is not binding.[5] The arbitrators, however, need not reveal their conclusions as to particular questions arising before them until the award is made.[6]

h. Compensation. The compensation to be paid the referees or arbitrators is to be determined by the parties appointing them.[7]

has been such as to substantially affect their decision it will be set aside or disregarded.[9]

b. Fraud — (I) In General. Fraud in the selection of appraisers[10] or fraud in presenting the case to the arbitrators[11] will vitiate the award.

(II) Rescission. A party to the arbitration desiring to rescind on account of fraud in the award must tender back whatever advantage has been received under such award.[12]

c. Inadequacy. Inadequacy of the award will not be sufficient ground for setting it aside,[13] unless it is such as to show fraud.[14]

d. Misconduct of Arbitrators. The award should be disregarded if the arbitrators are guilty of misconduct substantially affecting the result.[15]

e. Effect on Recovery Under Policy. Where submission to appraisement or arbitration has been made, the appraisal or arbitration is conclusive as to the amount of the loss for which the company is liable under the policy;[16] but if the award is invalid suit may be maintained on the policy, without regard to such award.[17]

f. Persons Bound. An appraisal or award will not be binding on those who are not parties to it.[18]

5. Failure or Refusal to Arbitrate.[19] If the insurer refuses to arbitrate in accordance with the provisions of the policy, the insured may maintain action without regard to such provision.[20] And likewise if through the fault of the company the arbitration fails, the insured need make no further efforts to secure an arbitration, and may maintain his action.[21] If on the other hand the insured by his fault or refusal defeats an arbitration his action on the policy is defeated.[22]

6. Failure of Arbitrators to Agree. In the event of the failure of appraisers or arbitrators properly appointed and acting in good faith to agree as to the result of the appraisement or arbitration, the parties should under the usual requirement proceed by the appointment of other arbitrators or appraisers to carry out the conditions of the policy.[23]

7. Waiver of Appraisement or Arbitration[24] — a. In General. Any action of either party inconsistent with reliance on the provisions of the policy as to appraisement or arbitration constitutes a waiver thereof.[25]

b. Failure to Demand or Accept.[26] Where the policy provides for or contemplates that an appraisal or arbitration shall be due on the demand of either party, a failure to make such demand or take the necessary steps toward securing an appraisement or arbitration will be a waiver of the provisions of the policy in that respect.[27] And a refusal to comply with a proper request is also a waiver.[28] However, a demand for arbitration, if made in bad faith and without intention has complied with the condition of the policy when he has appointed an arbitrator, and that, irrespective of the result of the arbitration, he may thereupon maintain his action. Western Assur. Co. v. Decker, 98 Fed. 381, 39 C. C. A. 383; Harrison v. German-American F. Ins. Co., 67 Fed. 577. that it shall be accepted and acted upon, is not sufficient to require a submission to arbitration.[29]

c. Delay in Demanding or Accepting. Mere delay in demanding or accepting appraisal or arbitration will not alone constitute waiver thereof;[30] but if by such delay the other party is prejudiced and put in such a position that he cannot enforce his rights the delay will constitute a waiver.[31]

d. Denial of Liability.[32] An unqualified denial of any liability under the policy is a waiver of provisions relating to appraisement or arbitration of the amount of the loss.[33] So a denial of liability on other grounds is a waiver of the requirement for appraisal or arbitration.[34]

C. Independent Action to Enforce or Set Aside Arbitration or Settlement. An independent action may be brought on a settlement or arbitration of the loss.[35] On the other hand an action in equity may be maintained to set aside

XIX. RIGHT TO PROCEEDS.

A. Under Provisions of Policy — 1. In General. As the policy is a personal contract between the insurer and the insured and not a contract which in any sense runs with the property,[37] the insurance money is generally payable to the insured without regard to the nature and extent of his interest in the property, provided he had an insurable interest at the time of making the contract and also at the time of the loss.[38] And where different persons have different interests in the same property, the insurance taken by one in his own right and on his own interest does not in any way inure to the benefit of another.[39]

2. Tenants in Common. On the principle mentioned in the preceding section an insurance on his own interest taken by one tenant in common does not inure to the benefit of his cotenant,[40] especially if the insured has used the money in restoring was taken without his direction or knowledge, ratification of the act of the holder of the property insuring it for the benefit of others being sufficient.[59] However if the insurance is really for the benefit of the insured, although the policy is payable to others as their interests may appear, the insured is entitled to the entire proceeds.[60]

8. Legal Representatives. Where the policy runs to the insured and his "legal representatives," and the loss occurs after the death of the insured, any person natural or artificial who by operation of law stands in the place of and represents the insured is entitled to recover under the policy.[61] But the legal representative holds the proceeds in the same right and interest as he would hold the property.[62]

B. Right of Lien-Holder. One who has a lien only on the insured property has no claim to the insurance money realized by the insured in the event of a loss of the property, for a claim on the insurance money can arise only out of contract.[63]

C. Right of Creditor — 1. In General. A general creditor of the owner of the property has no insurable interest therein,[64] and accordingly he has no claim on the proceeds of a policy of insurance thereon taken out by the owner thereof.[65]

2. Effect of Assignment — a. In General. An equitable assignment of the insurance is good as against creditors.[66]

b. By Way of Collateral Security. However, an assignment of the insurance to a creditor by way of collateral security gives to such creditor a prior claim on the proceeds of the insurance.[67]

3. Attaching Creditor. On the other hand an attaching creditor who has himself obtained insurance on the property is not bound to apply the proceeds of such insurance to the benefit of the debtor.[68]

Impossibility.— If by reason of building ordinances it is made unlawful to repair or restore the building the company must pay the insurance money. Brady v. Northwestern Ins. L. 853. And if the building is incapable of being put in option must be exercised within the time prescribed by the policy.[70] In the absence of any provision in the contract authorizing it, the company has no option of repairing or restoring but must pay the amount of the loss.[71] And statutory provisions requiring that the company in case of total loss[72] shall pay the full amount of the insurance are inconsistent with and nullify any stipulation of the policy as to right to replace or repair.[73]

2. Waiver — a. In General. If the company has by waiving its right to replace the property elected to pay the loss, such election becomes irrevocable and fixes the rights and duties of the respective parties.[74] Thereafter the insured cannot waive the obligation of the company to pay as against a mortgagee;[75] nor can a judgment creditor insist that the company shall replace or repair for the benefit of such creditor.[76]

b. Assent to Assignment. The assent of the insurer to an assignment after loss does not waive the option to replace the property.[77]

c. Election to Arbitrate. An election to arbitrate or to submit to appraisers the amount of the loss is a waiver of the right to rebuild or repair.[78]

3. Effect of Exercise. After an insurance company has elected to restore or repair the insured property its liability is for breach of the obligation[79] to restore the same condition in which it was before the loss the company will be liable under its obligation to pay. Northwestern Nat. Ins. Co. v. Woodward, 18 Tex. Civ. App. 496, 45 S. W. 185. See supra, XVI, A, 1, c.

or repair, and not under the obligation to pay the insurance, and the rights and remedies of the insured are governed accordingly.[80]

B. Payment of Loss — 1. Time and Place. Under usual provisions in policies the company has a specified time, sixty days for instance, in which to pay after notice and proofs of loss;[81] but such a stipulation has reference to the preliminary proofs and not to subsequent duplicate bills or other instruments or certificates which the insured may be required to furnish.[82] Where no place is stipulated for payment of loss it will be regarded as payable in the state,[83] and at the head office of the insurer.[84]

2. To Whom Made. Payment to the person who by the terms of the policy is entitled to receive payment for loss will as a general rule relieve the company.[85] Valid payment may be made, however, to one who under the circumstances is authorized to receive the money for the insured.[86]

3. Method of Making.[87] Payment may be made in any method by which a debt may be discharged.[88]

By draft.— Acceptance of a draft constitutes payment. Kern Brewing Co. v. Royal Ins. Co., 127 Mich. 39, 86 N. W. 388. But if the insurance company repudiates the settlement and refuses to pay the draft, the insured may bring suit on the policy. Insurance Co. of North America v. Osborn, 26 Ind. App. 88, 59 N. E. 181. On the other hand in a suit on the draft, the insurance company may set up as a defense that it was procured by false and fraudulent proofs. Miller v. Iron City Mut. F. Ins. Co., 4 Pa. Super. Ct. 605.

Conditional payment.— Where the money was paid to the insured under an agreement that he was to hold it as a loan until it was determined by a suit whether he or a third person was responsible for the loss, it was held as to him that the receipt of the money constituted payment. Deming v. Merchants' Cotton-Press, etc., Co., 90 Tenn. 306, 17 S. W. 89, 13 L. R. A. 518; Lancaster Mills v. Merchants' Cotton-Press Co., 89 Tenn. 1, 14 S. W. 317, 24 Am. St. Rep. 586.

Mutual companies; assessments.— If by its terms a policy in a mutual company is an absolute promise to pay, in event of loss, judgment may be rendered against the company, and insured is not limited to enforcing an assessment. Byrnes v. American Mut. F. Ins. Co., 114 Iowa 738, 87 N. W. 699. But if the business of the company is divided into classes, and only the funds derived from a particular class of business are to be used to pay losses in that class, an execution can be enforced only as to funds of the class to which the loss pertains. Naill v. Kansas Mut. F. Ins. Co., 47 Kan. 223, 27 Pac. 854, 45 Kan. 74, 25 Pac. 211; Kansas Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Amick, 45 Kan. 738, 26 Pac. 944; Judkins v. Union Mut. F. Ins. Co., 39 N. H. 172. If the policy provides that in event of loss the member shall be entitled only to the proceeds of an assessment he may by mandamus compel such assessment for his benefit. Perry v. Farmers Mut. F. Ins. Assoc., 132 N. C. 283, 43 S. E. 837. In the distribution of the proceeds of an assessment made to pay losses, all accrued losses should be paid pro rata without reference to prior indemnity. Richards v. New Hampshire Ins. Co., 43 N. On the other hand the wrong-doer has no right to the benefits of the insurance and cannot rely either in full or pro tanto as a defense on the insurance money received by the owner of the property from his insurance. General release in terms.— Where the object of a release executed by insured and indorsed on the back of the policy on settling the same with the insurer was merely to secure the discharge of the debt mentioned in the release and the surrender and cancellation of the policy creating it, the fact that the release recited that the money was received "in full satisfaction of all loss or damage by fire which occurred on" a certain date would not extend the release to claims against the same company on account of the same fire arising under other policies. Post v. Ætna Ins. Co., 43 Barb. (N. Y.) 351.

Discharge of the company as to a part of the loss will not relieve it from liability for the remainder. Redfield v. Holland Purchase Ins. Co., 56 N. Y. 354, 15 Am. Rep. 424.

If the liability of different companies is pro rata, a release of one will not relieve another from payment of its share (Good v. Buckeye Mut. F. Ins. Co., 43 Ohio St. 394, 2 N. E. 420), and overpayment by one will not relieve another from its share of the liability (Fitzsimmons v. New Haven City F. Ins. Co., 18 Wis. 234, 86 Am. Dec. 761).

Receipt of a portion of the amount of the loss from one company furnishes no consid-insurer by reason of fraud or false representations on the part of the insured,[93] or under the mistaken belief that the policy was valid, whereas it was in fact void by reason of some act by the insured,[94] may be recovered back. Joint action against the insured and his creditor as assignee will not lie to recover a payment although by joint check to them.[95] A bill in equity will not lie to recover back payment made by reason of fraud or mistake.[96]

E. Contribution[97] Against Other Insurers. As the insured is entitled only to indemnity, if he recovers his full loss from one company he thereby releases any other company which may be liable for the same loss;[98] but the company which is thus compelled to pay more than its proportionate share of the loss, for which both companies are liable may have contribution from the other company so as to make the loss fall upon them equitably in proportion to the insurance carried, under the same principle by which contribution is allowed as among cosureties.[99] eration for the discharge of another company. Western Massachusetts Ins. Co. v. Duffey, 2 Kan. 347.

Indemnity paid by subsequent insurance.— If by stipulation in the policy the insurance company is liable only for the amount of the loss remaining unsatisfied by prior insurance, but is not to be entitled to contribution from subsequent insurance, the company cannot have the advantage of an indemnity paid by subsequent insurance. Palmer v. Great Western Ins. Co., 10 Misc. (N. Y.) 167, 30 N. Y. Suppl. 1044.

The insurer is not entitled to the advantage of insurance money paid by another company under a policy which was not valid. Knapp v. North Wales Mut. Live Stock Ins. Co., 11 Montg. Co. Rep. (Pa.) 119.

Where a policy was issued to three persons, and a loss having occurred the insurer proposed to two of the insured that it would pay them a given sum if they would release the entire policy, or a less sum if they would release their proportionate interest in the insurance money, and they accepted the latter proposition and signed a paper which the insurer represented to be a release of only their two-thirds interest, when in fact by its terms it was a release of the entire policy, the release did not discharge the obligation on the policy as to the insured person who did not join in the release, he having had no knowledge of its execution. Affirmative fraud on the part of the insured must be shown. Hartford Live Stock Ins. Co. v. Matthews, 102 Mass. 221.

Recovery of excess.— If the fraud consists in obtaining payment in excess of the amount of actual loss, the company can only recover the excess. Western Assur. Co. v. Towle, 65 Wis. 247, 26 N. W. 104. Where through a fraudulent adjustment the company acknowledged its liability to the insured for a claim for which it was not in fact liable, and afterward by the direction of the insured paid the amount of the claim to a creditor, it was held that the company could not recover from the creditor the amount so paid, not exceeding the amount of his claim against the insured. Merchants' Ins. Co. v. Abbott, 131 Mass. 397.

94. Columbus Ins. Co. v. Walsh, 18 Mo. 229. One who effects a settlement with an insurance company under a policy conditioned to be void in case other insurance on the property is taken, knowing that the company is ignorant of the breach of the condition, is deemed to have conspired to defraud the company and may be compelled to refund the amount paid. F. Subrogation[1] — 1. As Against Person Bound to Indemnify — a. In General. The rule as heretofore stated[2] in respect to satisfaction from a third party results in its just application in the further rule that if the loss is not satisfied by the third person thus legally bound for its satisfaction, and the insurance company is compelled to pay the loss, it is entitled to equitable subrogation to the claim of the insured against such third person to the extent to which the company has been compelled to pay for a loss which should have been paid by such third person;[3]

Where buildings are destroyed by the municipal authorities under such circumstances as to render the city liable to the owner, the insurance company on paying the loss is entitled to subrogation against the city. Pentz v. Ætna F. Ins. Co., 3 Edw. (N. Y.) 341.

After the company has paid the loss the insured cannot recover from the third person, whose wrong has caused it, as the right of action passes to the insurance company. Al-

but the recovery by the company is under the right of the insured, and if the insured has no right of action against the third person sought to be held liable, no such right will be acquired by the company.[4]

b. Assignment of Claim Against Third Person. To entitle the insurance company to assert its right by way of subrogation, no assignment of the claim against the third party liable to the insured is necessary.[5]

c. Invalidity of Claim Against Insurer. The third person liable for the loss cannot question the right of the insurance company on the ground that the claim of the insured against the company was not valid.[6]

d. Nature of Claim Against Third Person. The right of subrogation is not limited to cases where the liability of the third person is founded in tort. Any right of the insured to indemnity will pass to the insurer on payment of the loss.[7]

e. Release of Third Person by Insured. Recognition of the right of the company to subrogation leads to the further result that any release by the insured of a claim for indemnity from a third person liable to him for the loss will to that extent relieve the insurance company from liability under its policy.[8]

The effect of the rule stated in the text is that as the wrong-doer is not entitled to the benefit of the insurance held by the owner of the property, the owner cannot throw the loss on the insurance company to the advantage of the wrong-doer. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Home Ins. Co., 59 Kan. 432, 53 Pac. 459.

Partial liability of third person.— If the third person is liable only for a portion of the loss covered by the policy, a release will operate to the benefit of the insurance company only to the extent to which the third person might have been held for the loss for which the company is also liable. Svea Assur. Co. v. Packham, 92 Md. 464, 48 Atl. 359, 52 L. R. A. 95; Insurance Co. of North America v. Fidelity Title, etc., Co., 123 Pa. St. 523, 16 Atl. 791, 10 Am. St. Rep. 546, 2 L. R. Another application of the same rule is that after the loss has been paid by the company, the wrong-doer, having knowledge of the fact, cannot make settlement with the insured for the loss, his liability being to the company to the extent of the insurance paid.[9]

f. Recovery of Insurance Money Paid. If after receiving insurance money the property-owner secures from a third person compensation for such loss, the insurance company may recover from the insured the insurance money paid, or so much thereof as is not in excess of the amount necessary to indemnify the insured for his actual loss, after deducting the amount received from the third person liable.[10]

2. As Against Mortgagor. If insurance is taken by a mortgagor for his own benefit, or for the benefit of the mortgagee, or by the mortgagee in the mortgagor's interest, and at his expense, payment of insurance money to the mortgagee goes to the benefit of the mortgagor in satisfaction pro tanto of the mortgage debt;[11] but where the insurance is for the mortgagee's sole protection and the mortgagor has not procured it, or has lost the right to rely upon it, the company, on paying to the mortgagee the insurance money, becomes entitled to equitable subrogation pro tanto to the security held by the mortgagee;[12] and this

Exhausting remedy against third person.— If the insured has recourse under contract against the third person for the loss, he cannot look to the insurance company without having exhausted his remedy against such person. Kennedy v. Iowa State Ins. Co., 119 Iowa 29, 91 N. W. 831.

Conclusiveness of adjudication against third person.— An adjudication against a third person liable for the loss is conclusive against insured as to the amount thereof, and he cannot recover an additional amount from the company. Pentz v. Ætna F. Ins. Co., 3 Edw. (N. Y.) 341.

right of subrogation is usually made a contract right, by a provision in the policy that on payment of the loss under the policy the mortgagee shall assign his mortgage security to the company in full or pro tanto as the case may be.[13] Where the company is entitled to subrogation, a release or satisfaction of the mortgage will relieve it correspondingly from liability under its policy.[14]

3. As Against Carrier. The equitable doctrine of subrogation is also applicable in favor of an insurance company paying a loss under a policy in favor of the owner[15] of goods destroyed while in the hands of a common carrier, and for which the carrier is responsible.[16]

Assignment of security.— The company is not entitled to an assignment of the mortgagee's security until payment of the loss (Morrison v. Tennessee M. & F. Ins. Co., 18 Mo. 262, 59 Am. Stipulations in mortgage against subrogation.— It has been held that a stipulation in the mortgage contract under which the mortgagor agrees that the mortgagee may insure at his expense, and that the insurance money shall be applied to the satisfaction of the debt, is not valid against the stipulations in a subsequent policy of insurance that the insurance company shall be subrogated to the mortgagee's lien. 4. Actions to Enforce Rights Under — a. In General. In actions by an insurance company to enforce rights gained by subrogation, the pleadings,[17] evidence,[18] instructions, etc.,[19] are governed by the same rules that control these matters in general.

b. Parties.[20] The equitable right of subrogation only entitles the insurance company to bring action against a third person liable for the loss in the name of the insured.[21]

c. Joinder and Splitting.[22] At any rate the insurance company which has paid only a part of the loss cannot maintain an action against the third party, as this would result in a splitting up of the cause of action.[23] But under statutory provisions it is usually possible by joinder to maintain a single action by which the rights of all shall be determined.[24] third person liable, the insurance company which has paid the loss may intervene for the protection of its rights.[25]

XXI. ACTIONS.

A. Right of Action — 1. Nature and Form. The action against the company for an amount claimed to be due for loss of the insured property, whether it be on the policy or on an executory contract evidenced by binding receipt or otherwise,[26] is simply for breach of contract, and in jurisdictions in which forms of action have been abolished a discussion of the nature and form of action is unnecessary, but in jurisdictions where the common-law forms of action are preserved the action is properly by assumpsit.[27] But if the policy is under seal an action of debt may be brought.[28] An action of assumpsit may likewise be maintained on a contract of renewal of the policy made by a renewal receipt.[29] If there is an equitable ground of relief, the action on the policy may be in equity,[30] and the court in the same action may render judgment on the policy.[31] However where there is an adequate remedy at law a suit in equity will not lie.[32]

2. Joinder of Causes of Action. Persons having separate interests in property covered by the same policy cannot join in an action thereon.[33] But if several interests have vested in one person he may join all his claims in one action.[34]

3. Conditions Precedent — a. In General. The happening of the event on which the loss becomes payable as specified by the policy gives rise to a cause of action, unless there are by the terms of the contract some conditions precedent to be performed by the insured before he is entitled to maintain an action.[35]

b. Demand. No demand of payment need be made before bringing action.[36]

c. Notice and Proofs of Loss. It is usual to provide in the policy that the company is not liable until after notice of the loss is given and proofs thereof are made.[37] Under such stipulation a compliance with the requirement as to notice and proofs of loss is a condition precedent to maintaining action on the policy.[38]

35. Conditions precedent generally see ACTIONS, 1 Cyc. 692 et seq.

Right to rebuild.—While the exercise by the company of its option to rebuild or repair would bar an action for damages under the policy (see supra, XVI, B, 1, b), yet if the option to rebuild is not exercised in accordance with the terms of the policy the action for the amount of the loss may be maintained. Milwaukee Mechanics' Ins. Co. v. Russell, 65 Ohio St. 230, 62 N. E. 338, 56 L. R. A. 159.

Examination of insured.— It is said that a provision that in case of loss the insured shall submit to an examination under oath is not a condition precedent to an action on the policy. Scottish Union, etc., Ins. Co. v. Strain, 70 S. W. 274, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 958. But see supra, page 853 note 86.

Actions on Lloyd's policy.— It is usually provided in the so-called Lloyd's policies, which are issued by unincorporated associations of underwriters, that the insured must have recourse to the fund of the association provided for the payment of losses before maintaining action against the individual underwriters, and an action against a trustee of the fund to enforce payment must therefore be resorted to before suing the underwriters or any of them separately or collectively. But a waiver of notice and proofs will relieve insured from compliance with such conditions.[39]

d. Appraisal or Arbitration. It is a usual provision in policies that no action shall be maintained thereon until after the amount of the loss has been determined by appraisal or arbitration, and under such a stipulation appraisal or arbitration as required is a condition precedent to maintaining an action on the policy.[40] Such a stipulation is generally sustained.[41] But if in effect the award is also made final and conclusive it is held in some jurisdictions that the stipulation is invalid as an attempt to oust the courts of their jurisdiction.[42] A mere agreement, however, to ascertain the amount of the loss by arbitration does not make arbitration a condition precedent.[43] And in such cases the agreement is regarded Sufficiency of compliance.— Insured is not generally required to comply with technical strictness either as to time or manner, with provisions making proofs of loss a condition precedent to his right of action. Northwestern Ins. Co. v. Atkins, 3 Bush (Ky.) 328, 96 Am. Dec. 239. some states precluded by statute.[48] For misconduct of an appraiser, but not for mere inadequacy of estimate, an appraisal may be set aside and recovery may then be had on the policy.[49]

B. Place of Bringing Suit — 1. Jurisdiction. The courts of the state in which the company has its home office or of a state in which it is authorized to do business and allowed to be sued may entertain jurisdiction of an action against the company whether the cause of action has arisen in that state or in another state,[50] for an action on a policy is transitory and may be brought wherever service can be had on the company.[51]

2. Venue. In many states there are statutory provisions as to the court or county in which an action on a policy of insurance may be brought.[52] But in the absence of such statute the venue of the action is as provided by the ordinary

Where equitable action to set aside an award was instituted before the expiration of sixty days from the time of the award, and it was provided in the policy that no action should be brought within that time, it was held that the court of equity having found no ground to set aside the award could not proceed in the same action to render judgment for the amount of the award, the action with reference to such purpose being prematurely brought. Bellinger v. German Ins. Co., construed,[56] and may be waived by the company.[57] Absolute denial of liability under the policy constitutes such a waiver and action may be brought at once on such denial.[58] So if the company waives proofs of loss the right of action at once accrues.[59]

But if proofs are furnished, although defective, the company by waiving the requirement of further proofs does not waive time

2. Limitation of Time For Bringing Action — a. Validity of Stipulations. It is usual to provide in policies of insurance that action thereon must be brought within a specified period shorter than that prescribed by the statute of limitations applicable to such an action; and if the action is not brought within the specified period it cannot be maintained, in the absence of some valid excuse or waiver.[60] The limitation thus imposed by contract on the prosecution of the right of action on the policy is generally held to be valid,[61] provided that the time prescribed is

Four months.— A limitation contained in a by-law of a mutual company that if the insured shall not acquiesce in the determination by the directors of the amount of loss, action for the loss must be brought within four months after such determination has been sustained. Amesbury v. Bowditch Mut. F. Ins. Co., 6 Gray (Mass.) 596.

Unreasonable limitation.— But a provision limiting the right of action to six months or a year after the loss, while at the same time it is provided that action shall not be commenced until a specified period after the amount of the loss has been determined by arbitration, has been held unreasonable, as delay in the arbitration might result in entirely defeating the right of action. which to maintain an action.[63] Thus if the policy gives to the company a specified time after proofs of loss are furnished or the amount of the loss has been determined by arbitration to make payment before action can be brought, and then limits the time for bringing action to six months or a year after the loss, so that it might happen that an unreasonably short time or no period whatever would intervene between the time when action might be brought and the time after which by the strict language of the policy an action would be barred, the short period of limitation named in the policy will be construed as commencing from the time when action might first have been brought under its provisions and not from the time of the loss.[64]

Waiver of proofs of loss.— Even under the rule that the specified period of limitation is to be computed from the time the loss becomes payable it was held that where the company waived proofs of loss the right of action accrued at once and the limitation should be computed from that time. Northwestern Mut. Ins. Co. v. Campbell, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 762.

e. Excuses For Delay. The contractual limitation, unlike a statutory limitation in this respect, may be avoided by showing the impossibility of bringing the action within the time limited, as for instance on account of impossibility of securing service on defendant,[65] or some legal obstacle,[66] or disability of plaintiff to sue,[67] or legal prohibition.[68] But mere ignorance or mistake on the part of the insured as to the limitation will not be a sufficient excuse.[69]

d. Waiver by Company. The company by introducing negotiations with insured and inducing him to believe that a settlement or adjustment will be effected without suit waives the contract limitation.[70] But the insured will not be justified in postponing the bringing of suit until after the expiration of the Many courts have, however, refused to give an equitable construction to conditions in policies limiting the right of action to a specified period after the loss and have enforced the limitation as written.

may waive the limitation.[74] But a mere local agent having no such authority cannot waive.[75]

e. Commencement of Action — Second Action. What will constitute the bringing of an action under the terms of a contract limitation depends largely upon the rules of procedure in the various states.[76] But even if a timely action is brought, a second action commenced after the contract bar has become completed cannot be maintained, although the first has been terminated by dismissal or nonsuit so that no trial has been had on the merits of the case.[77] And it seems

St. Rep. 499), and that waiver must be supported by an agreement founded on a valuable consideration or consist of an act sufficient to constitute an estoppel (Ripley v. Ætna Ins. Co., 30 N. d. Mortgagor and Mortgagee. If the policy is taken by the mortgagor in his own interest, although the insurance is payable to the mortgagee, the action may properly be maintained in the name of the mortgagor, for he is not only the party with whom the contract is made, but the person for whose ultimate benefit the insurance is to be paid.[89] If the policy is taken by the mortgagee in his own interest and for his own benefit he is the proper plaintiff.[90] Likewise, if there has been an assignment by the consent of the company to the mortgagee of a policy taken by the mortgagor under such stipulations as to create practically a new contract of insurance between the company and the mortgagee, the action on the policy should properly be by the mortgagee.[91] And it is generally held that even where the policy taken by the mortgagor is made payable to the mortgagee, as his interest may appear, the mortgagee may recover thereon in his own name to the extent of his interest[92] or the mortgagor and the mortgagee may sue jointly.[93] If the mortgagee's interest exceeds the insurance, the entire right of recovery is in him.[94] But if the mortgagee's interest is less than the full amount

3. DEFENDANTS. If there are two or more policies in different companies covering the same loss, the insured may bring action on any one of them, or separate actions on any number of them, recovering to the extent of the insurance under each policy, until his loss is fully satisfied, leaving the companies to settle their respective liabilities between themselves by contribution;[6] unless by the provisions of the policies the liability of the companies is limited to their pro-rata share of the loss.[7] Insurers who have become jointly or severally liable under the same policy may be joined as defendants in an action thereon; and if they are severally liable, separate judgments may be had against them.[8] A necessary party united in interest with plaintiff who refuses to join with the latter may be made a defendant.[9]

Civ. Proc. 217. If the underwriters act as an association, using a common name, the action may be brought against them as an association (Toronto Bank v. Manufacturers', etc., Fire Assoc., 63 N. J. L. 5, 42 Atl. 761) under statutory provisions in some jurisdictions (see ASSOCIATIONS, 4 Cyc. 313, 314); but it is usually provided in such policies that action shall only be brought against the manager or attorney in fact representing the individual underwriters, and such a provision is valid (Enterprise Lumber Co. v. Mundy, 62 N. J. L. 16, 42 Atl. 1063; Leiter v. Beecher, 2 N. Y. App. Div. 577, 37 N. Y. Suppl. 1114; Gilchrist v. Perrysburg, etc., Transp. Co., 21 Ohio Cir. Ct. 19, 11 Ohio Cir. Dec. 350), especially if the manager or attorney thus named is one of the underwriters (Ralli v. White, 21 Misc. (N. Y.) 285, 47 N. Y. Suppl. 197, 4 N. Y. Annot. Cas. 357; Perrysburg, etc., Transp. Co. v. Gilchrist, 24 Ohio Cir. Ct. 165). But if the attorney named is not one of the underwriters, it seems that the action should be brought against one of the parties liable under the policy. Toronto Bank v. Manufacturers', etc., Fire Assoc., 63 N. J. L. 5, 42 Atl. 761; Ralli v. White, 21 Misc. (N. Y.) 285, 47 N. Y. Suppl. 197, 4 N. Y. Annot. Cas. 357. At any rate if the attorney or manager named has ceased to represent the association, the action should be brought against the underwriters, or some one of them. Ralli v. White, 20 Misc. (N. Y.) 635, 46 N. Y. Suppl. 376; American Lucol Co. v. Lowe, 41 N. Y. App. Div. 500, 58 N. Y. Suppl. 687; Perrysburg, etc., Transp. Co. v. Gilchrist, 24 Ohio Cir. Ct. 165; Gilchrist v. Perrysburg, etc., Transp. Co., 21 Ohio Cir. Ct. 19, 11 Ohio Cir. Dec. 350. So if for any other reason the action cannot be maintained against the attorney suit may be brought against the underwriters (American Lucol Co. v. Blanchard, 26 Misc. (N. Y.) 315, 57 N. Y. Suppl. 14) and the recovery of judgment against the attorney will not bar a subsequent action against the underwriters (Enterprise Lumber Co. v. Mundy, 62 N. J. L. 16, 42 Atl. 1063).

Action based on foreign business.— It seems that a foreign company consenting as required by statute that it may be served by process directed to an agent designated for that purpose in the state may be so served in an action arising out of business transacted in another state. Mooney v. Buford, etc., Mfg. Co., 72 Fed. 32, 18 C. C. A. 421 [distinguishing Rehm v. German Ins., etc., Inst., 125 Ind. 135, 25 N. E. 173]. contract, the loss or damage without his fault to the property during the term of the insurance, and the non-payment of the amount thus becoming due.[14] Compliance with conditions qualifying the contract of the insurer,[15] as distinguished from distinct and collateral provisions in the nature of defeasances,[16] must be alleged by plaintiff. Where the declaration follows a statutory short form it is the better practice to allege a loss by fire and compliance with conditions precedent or a waiver thereof even if the form does not contain those averments.[17]

b. Setting Out the Policy. As in any other action on a written contract[18] the policy itself or so much thereof as pertains to the obligation the breach of which is complained of should be set out in the pleadings or by way of exhibit in an action brought thereon.[19] But if the action is on an agreement to insure, although the terms of the agreement are to be ascertained from the terms of the policy which the company should have issued,[20] yet it is not necessary to set out such a policy, nor allege the specific terms thereof, inasmuch as the action is not on the policy, but on the agreement.[21] Nor is it necessary to set out any collateral agree-

General allegation.— It is said, however, that under a statute authorizing plaintiff to plead generally the performance of the conditions of a contract on his part, it is sufficient in this respect to make such general allegation with reference to the conditions of the policy. McGannon v. Millers' Nat. Ins. Co., 171 Mo. 143, 71 S. W. 160, 94 Am. St. Rep. 778. See CONTRACTS, 9 Cyc. 722.

allegations as to assignment as will entitle him to bring the action.[30] And if he claims as the person for whose benefit the policy was taken, he should allege his interest in such way as to bring himself within the conditions of the policy.[31]

f. Ownership and Insurable Interest. Insurable interest on the part of the insured in the property is essential, not only at the time of the loss, but also at the time of the making of the contract.[32] Therefore it is essential for plaintiff in stating his cause of action under the policy to allege such interest as existing at the time the policy was executed, and also at the time of the loss.[33] As the insurable interest is usually that of owner, it is commonly said in the cases that plaintiff must allege ownership of the property.[34] But such allegation may be made in general terms or inferentially; and indeed it has been repeatedly held that it considered sufficient in this respect that the pleading contains a general allegation of the performance of the conditions as to notice and proofs.[43]

i. Waiver or Estoppel. If plaintiff relies on waiver or estoppel as to any defense which would otherwise be available to defendant under the facts stated in the complaint or petition, the facts constituting such waiver or estoppel may be pleaded in the first instance.[44] Plaintiff cannot, either generally or specifically, allege performance of conditions of the contract, and support such allegation by proof of waiver,[45] unless at least he alleges waiver in reply to defendant's aver-

k. Damages. For the purpose of showing the amount of damage suffered, for which plaintiff is entitled to recover up to the amount of the insurance, the value of the property destroyed, or the extent of the damage thereto, should be alleged.[52] If the policy provides for pro-rata liability only, then plaintiff should allege the amount of other insurance.[53]

l. Adjustment and Non-Payment. If submission to arbitration or appraisal is made a condition of liability for the amount of the loss, performance of such condition should be at least generally alleged;[54] but as the policies are usually drawn, the refusal to submit to appraisal or arbitration on demand is to be interposed by way of defense if relied upon.[55] Plaintiff should allege also that the amount claimed on account of the loss is due and payable and has not been paid.[56]

2. DEMURRER. In code pleading mere indefiniteness in averments is not ordinarily a ground for demurrer.[57] Where the declaration follows a statutory short form, omission to allege loss by fire is a ground for special demurrer, not for motion to dismiss.[58] A complaint by a mortgagee is not demurrable on the ground that the mortgagor is not joined as plaintiff if the complaint does not show that Assessments in mutual companies.— In an action on a policy in a mutual company which entitles insured only to an assessment, his remedy is to proceed by mandamus, or otherwise, to compel the making of an assessment to pay his claim (Harl v. Pottawattamie County Mut. F. Ins. Co., 74 Iowa 39, 36 N. W. 880); but if the contract is for payment on the part of the company, it is unnecessary for plaintiff to allege a demand for an assessment and refusal, nor that the company has assets out of which payment could be made (Brookshier v. Chillicothe Town Mut. F. Ins. Co., 91 Mo. App. 599).

the latter is interested.[59] A demurrer to a complaint cannot be aided by facts in the record but not appearing on the face of the complaint.[60] Validity of an award by appraisers cannot be disputed under a demurrer to a complaint alleging the facts concerning the award and disclosing no irregularity therein.[61]

3. Plea or Answer — a. In Abatement. Objection that the action is prematurely brought,[62] that defendant refused to submit to an examination,[63] or that an action on a Lloyd's policy should have been brought against the attorney in fact instead of the underwriters,[64] should be raised by plea in abatement.

b. General Issue or General Denial. Defendant may disprove, under a general denial, anything which it is necessary for plaintiff to establish.[65] As it is necessary for plaintiff to allege compliance with conditions or warranties in the policy,[66] it has been decided in some jurisdictions that under the general issue defendant may prove breaches of warranties or violations of the conditions contained in the policy without having specifically pleaded such violations or breaches.[67] Limitation of liability by reason of additional insurance according to stipulations in the policy need not be specially pleaded.[68]

c. Special Defenses. But by the great weight of authority the rule is established that a defendant cannot show breach of warranty or violation of conditions, even where plaintiff has alleged fulfilment or compliance, without specially pleading the facts constituting the breach or violation relied on, whether constituting a breach of condition precedent or a violation of a promissory or subsequent condition.[69] In general defendant relying on breach of warranties or condition must allege the warranty or condition relied on as having been violated and the Under statutory rules allowing plaintiff to make a general allegation of performance of condition precedent and requiring defendant in his answer to controvert such allegations specifically if he relies on nonperformance (see supra, XXI, F, 1, g) it seems that specific allegations by plaintiff as to the facts relied on as constituting performance relieve defendant of the necessity of making a specific denial and under a general denial he may controvert performance. Allegation of fraud or false swearing without averment of specific facts is insufficient. Phœnix Ins. Co. v. McAtee, (Ind. App. 1904) 70 N. E. 947.

In West Virginia the statute which provides for the filing of a statement by defendant specifying the particular clause, condition, or warranty not complied with does within the conditions or warranty relied on.[71] Wilful or fraudulent destruction of the property by the insured must be specially pleaded.[72] The defense that plaintiff's insurable interest was less than the amount of his policy should be pleaded.[73] Where plaintiff alleges performance of conditions generally, an answer sufficiently alleges a breach by setting out a condition and alleging nonperformance thereof.[74] In some jurisdictions execution of the policy need not be proved by plaintiff unless defendant denies it by plea verified by affidavit.[75] A plea setting up a misrepresentation which does not constitute a warranty should allege not only its falsity but its materiality.[76] An answer alleging that prohibited articles were kept by plaintiff need not specify the articles.[77]

d. Denial of Knowledge or Information, Etc. In code pleading plaintiff's allegations may be put in issue by denial of knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief where the facts are not presumptively within defendant's knowledge,[78] and plaintiff's allegation of ownership of the property at the time of the fire may be answered in that form where defendant is a foreign corporation.[79]

4. Replication or Reply — a. In General. Where defendant pleads that it did not execute the policy and that the agent issuing it had no authority in that behalf, a replication alleging ratification by the company is not a departure.[80] And where the answer pleads want of insurable interest by reason of a conveyance by plaintiff, a replication alleging that the deed was not delivered is not a departure from the complaint.[81] In code practice an averment in the answer not require further specification or the legal certainty of formal pleading. Rosenthal Clothing, etc., Co. v. Scottish Union, etc., Ins. Co., 55 W. Va. 238, 46 S. E. 1021. But see Petit v. German Ins. Co., 98 Fed. 800, holding that such statements are pleadings and subject to demurrer.

that plaintiff concealed facts material to the risk is an affirmative defense which plaintiff may disprove without a replication.[82] A reply alleging a parol contemporaneous stipulation in contravention of the terms of the policy set forth in the complaint, but not alleging fraud or mistake, is demurrable.[83] But if defendant pleads an award no reply is necessary to enable plaintiff to have it annulled for fraud.[84] To a plea alleging breach of the iron-safe clause and non-production of books and inventories a replication is sufficient which alleges compliance with the clause and destruction of the books and inventories in the fire.[85] Where a plea alleges that no proofs of loss were furnished in compliance with the terms of the policy a replication alleging that proofs were furnished on blanks supplied by the company is insufficient.[86] A replication pleading facts in bar of defenses alleged in the answer cannot be deemed a plea of non est factum so as to require verification.[87]

b. Waiver or Estoppel. pleading[90] or has therein alleged performance of conditions.[91] No issue of waiver is tendered by a reply consisting only of a general denial,[92] nor, it has been held, by a replication pleading waiver accompanied by a general denial.[93] Nor can a replication only by general traverse be amended so as to allege a waiver where amendments are governed by common-law rules.[94] A replication relying upon waiver by an agent should expressly aver the agency[95] or state facts which constitute agency as a conclusion of law.[96] Where waiver is pleaded by reply in general terms a motion requiring plaintiff to specify whether the waiver was oral or written and to identify the officer or agent making the alleged waiver should be granted.[97] After trial on the merits allegations of waiver in a replication will be liberally construed in favor of the pleader;[98] and formal defects may be waived by failure to object therefor.[99]

3. It is otherwise if the amendment intro-time limited in the policy for bringing an original action has expired.[4] An amendment alleging waiver of a condition in the policy is not objectionable as stating a new cause of action.[5] The complaint may be amended to obviate a variance between the policy described therein and the policy offered in evidence[6] or so as to allege more explicitly the performance of a condition precedent.[7] Plaintiff's omission of averment of insurable interest may be supplied by amendment even after motion for nonsuit on account of the omission.[8] In an action on the policy the complaint may be amended to support recovery on proof of an independent agreement after the loss to pay a stated amount.[9] The amount of damages claimed may be increased by amendment.[10] Plaintiff having sued for a partial loss may be allowed to amend by alleging a total loss caused by a subsequent fire under the same policy.[11] A declaration by an assignee may be amended by adding the name of the assignor.[12] Where the action is brought in the name of the insured for the use of the real party in interest the name of the former may be struck out by amendment.[13] Where the action is brought on a renewed policy, plaintiff cannot amend by declaring on a refusal to renew.[14] And where the action is brought on a policy an amendment declaring on an oral contract to deliver a policy cannot be allowed.[15] Where plaintiff in an action against underwriters of a Lloyd's policy alleged recovery of judgment against their attorney, but the judgment was vacated and a new one rendered after the cause was at issue in the first mentioned action, it was held that he should be allowed to file a supplemental complaint setting up the final judgment.[16]

b. Plea or Answer. Defendant should be allowed to amend after report of a commissioner when necessary to make available a defense arising out of facts found in the report.[17] It is prima facie an abuse of discretion to refuse leave to file a plea in apt time setting up a legally sufficient defense in addition to defenses already pleaded.[18] Ordinarily defendant will not be allowed to amend on the trial so as to introduce a new issue to the surprise of plaintiff.[19] And it duces a new cause of action. Grier v. Northern Assur Co., 183 Pa. St. 334, 39 Atl. 10, same rule applied as in case of such amendments barred by the statute of limitations, and as to these latter see, generally, PLEADING.

7. BILL OF PARTICULARS. Where plaintiff in response to an order files a bill of particulars giving no additional information whatsoever evidence offered by him should be excluded on objection.[21]

8. ISSUES, PROOF, AND VARIANCE — a. Issues and Proof in General. No evidence should be heard to defeat a recovery which the issues of fact made by the pleadings do not require.[22] Plaintiff alleging compliance with all conditions and setting out the policy as an exhibit cannot prove by parol evidence that he never agreed to the iron-safe clause in the policy.[23] An averment that defendant undertook and promised to pay plaintiff may be sustained by proof of promise by an authorized agent.[24] Generally where plaintiff alleges performance of conditions evidence of waiver thereof is inadmissible.[25] Performance of a condition need not be proved by plaintiff where defendant's answer properly construed admits it.[26] Where plaintiff's complaint specifies the property destroyed in the same language that is used in the policy, but describes it as real property, he is not limited to real property in his proof or recovery.[27] Plaintiff cannot prove misdescription of the property by mistake in the absence of allegation thereof or of estoppel.[28] Notice and proofs of loss need not be introduced in evidence where copies are attached to the complaint and defendant admits that the papers were received,[29] or where the answer admits that defective proofs were furnished and retained without objection.[30] Mistake in proofs of loss alleged to have been furnished may be shown without an allegation of mistake.[31] Plaintiff may prove the value of the property under an allegation that it was totally destroyed and a prayer for judgment for the amount of the insurance.[32] If the evidence does not enable the jury to fix the value of property destroyed there can be no finding for plaintiff as to such property.[33] Under a denial that it ever insured plaintiff, defendant cannot prove facts showing a right to avoid the policy.[34] Non-payment of premiums not set up as a defense cannot be proved where by statute the policy imports a consideration.[35] Defendant cannot prove that the premises were erroneously described in the policy where the fact is not alleged in his answer.[36] Defendant who pleads that additional insurance was taken out need not prove it if plaintiff's replication merely pleads notice thereof.[37] Change of use of the insured premises after issuance of the policy cannot be proved under an answer alleging only that the use to which the proof is directed was at the date of the policy and in contravention of a warranty therein.[38] Evidence to prove the condition of an entire building immediately before the fire is not admissible under an answer alleging that the roof was defective.[39] Evidence of an independent agreement to arbitrate is inadmissible under an answer relying solely on a provision in the policy relating to arbitration.[40]

b. Variance — (1) In General. In code practice variances are to be disregarded if the party objecting does not show that he has been misled.[41] Plaintiff's allegation of sole ownership is not sustained by proof that he was part owner.[42] An interest insured jointly by two cannot be given in evidence under an averment of interest solely in one.[43] An averment of insurance of a joint interest will not authorize recovery for a joint loss on proof of insurance to one joint owner alone.[44] But a proper allegation of plaintiff's title to the property may be sustained by proof of assignment to him by the party to whom the policy issued, since it is immaterial how plaintiff acquired title.[45] For the same reason plaintiff may prove title by deed under an averment of title by will, and vice versa.[46] Plaintiff suing as owner of the property and holder of a policy issued to himself cannot recover on proof of assignment with consent of defendant and reassignment to himself.[47] Under an averment of ownership proof only of an insurable interest suffices if the contract of insurance requires no more.[48] Variance between the date of the fire as alleged and the date proved is not necessarily material.[49] Where variance between an averment of waiver and evidence thereof is slight the pleading may be considered as amended to conform to the facts proved.[50] An allegation of waiver in a particular manner will admit proof of waiver in a different manner.[51] An averment that proofs of loss were furnished by plaintiffs is not satisfied by proof that they were furnished by one of the plaintiffs and a third person.[52] Under an averment that proofs of loss were forwarded to a specified address evidence of proofs sent to another place is inadmissible.[53] But evidence of notice given at an earlier date than the date alleged by plaintiff under a videlicet may be admitted.[54] Total waiver of proofs of loss cannot be proved under an averment of waiver of defect in proofs furnished.[55] Recovery may be had for a partial loss under an averment of total loss.[56] Where defendant's answer specifies prohibited articles kept by plaintiff evidence as to other prohibited articles should not be considered.[57] Variance between alleged contents of a writing and proof thereof cannot be deduced by doing violence to the language used.[58]

(II) Between Pleading and Contract. Recovery cannot be had on an alleged oral contract of insurance where the proof shows a materially different contract.[59] An oral agreement for a renewal of an existing policy will support an allegation of an oral agreement to insure.[60] Plaintiff suing as owner cannot recover on a policy issued to him as attorney for an undisclosed principal.[61] An action on the policy alone cannot be sustained by evidence of an agreement to insure.[62] There is no fatal variance where plaintiff's complaint demands judgment for a smaller amount than is specified in a binding slip upon which the action is brought.[63] A policy attached to the complaint as an exhibit is admissible, although it contains clauses affecting liability which are not mentioned in the pleading.[64] Material misdescription of the amount of insurance and its apportionment on the properties is fatal.[65] A policy providing that loss is not payable until sixty days after proofs furnished is not variant from an averment of a contract to pay at that time,[66] but it is otherwise where the promise to pay is alleged without limitation as to time;[67] there is no variance between plaintiff's allegation that he was insured for a specified amount and a policy insuring him for loss not to exceed that amount.[68] Variance between the date of the policy as alleged and the date as given in evidence has been held fatal.[69] Courts are disinclined, however, to entertain objections for slight variances not tending to surprise.[70] Variance between conditions subsequent in the policy and the contract alleged in plaintiff's declaration is immaterial.[71] A policy is inadmissible under a declaration thereon not alleging conditions precedent.[72] A policy containing conditional or modifying clauses incorporated in the general clause of the contract is inadmissible under a pleading which states the contract without the conditions or qualifications,[73] or with materially different conditions.[74] Plaintiff may declare as upon a contract with himself alone on a renewal to him of a policy originally to him and another.[75] Material discrepancy between the period of the insurance as specified in the policy and the period stated in the pleading is a fatal variance.[76] A policy bearing an assignment to a third person is inadmissible under a pleading describing the assignment as made to plaintiff.[77]

G. Evidence — 1. Presumptions and Burden of Proof — a. In General. In the absence of any admission by defendant plaintiff is bound to establish by a preponderance of evidence:[78] (1) The execution of the contract or policy of insurance sued on; (2) the destruction, total or partial, of the property insured; (3) the amount of the loss, or, in other words, the value of the insured property destroyed; and (4) that such notice and preliminary proof of loss as the policy requires has been given.[79]

b. As to the Contract. By raising an issue as to the essential averments of plaintiff's declaration, complaint, or petition,[80] defendant throws the burden upon plaintiff to establish ownership or other insurable interest,[81] the making of the contract,[82] and the payment of premiums.[83] Defendant alleging cancellation of the policy has the burden of proving it,[84] and must prove compliance with conditions precedent to the right to cancel.[85]

c. As to Avoidance or Forfeiture in General. While plaintiff is required to allege performance of conditions precedent,[86] and therefore may logically be said to have the burden of proving such performance,[87] yet under the rule now generally recognized that defendant to raise an issue on general allegation of performance must particularly allege the breach relied on, it is almost uniformly held that without regard to whether the breach complained of is that of a condition precedent or a promissory warranty or condition subsequent defendant has the burden of proving the facts constituting such a breach.[88] Thus defendant must prove breach of warranty against alienation,[89] encumbrance in violation of the conditions of the policy,[90] that the premises were vacant or unoccupied in violation of provisions on that subject,[91] or the existence of other or additional insurance.[92] While the burden of proving notice and proofs of loss is usually upon plain-plaintiff's testimony that he did not understand and assent to certain provisions in the policy is not admissible.[22] If cancellation of the policy is relied on as a defense evidence of notice of cancellation given to an alleged agent of plaintiff should be admitted where other evidence sustains an inference of the agent's authority in the premises.[23]

b. Identification of Property. Except under some of the codes or practice acts, and then only with proper allegations as a basis therefor,[24] it is incompetent in an action at law on the policy to introduce evidence that the intention of the parties was to insure other property than that described.[25] But evidence is admissible to connect the description with the property intended to be covered,[26] and plaintiff's admissions as to his intention not to have the particular property covered by the policy are admissible against him,[27] but his statements of intention to a person not an agent of defendant are not admissible in his favor.[28] Declarations in the report of defendant's surveyor of which plaintiff was not cognizant cannot be used against the latter.[29] Evidence of destruction of property essentially different from the description in plaintiff's pleading is inadmissible.[30]

c. Ownership — Insurable Interest. The issuance of a policy to the insured by the company on the property is prima facie evidence of the title of the insured to such property.[31] A prima facie case as to ownership is also made by proof of possession.[32] But the insured may testify as to the fact of his ownership,[33] and so may his manager of the property,[34] and evidence of statements of his authorized agent as to his ownership is admissible against him.[35] Plaintiff's claim of title to the insured property by purchase being in issue his bank-book showing deposits at the time of the alleged purchase is admissible to show that he had means of purchasing.[36] To show want of insurable interest plaintiff's admissions that he had none are competent evidence against him.[37] Plaintiff may introduce a record of judicial proceedings where his equitable title to the property was established.[38] A plaintiff to whom the loss is payable "as his interest may appear" may introduce his contract with the owner to show the extent of his interest.[39] Plaintiff may prove by parol that an absolnte deed to him was fraudulently altered after execution and delivery so as to express only a qualified interest.[40] Extrajudicial admissions by plaintiff that he had no insurable interest may outweigh his testimony to the contrary.[41] Defendant may show that a deed under which plaintiff claims was delivered in escrow upon a condition not performed.[42] Parol evidence is not admissible to prove that plaintiff did not read an application signed by him and that no question was asked him as to encumbrances on the property.[43]

d. Misrepresentation or Concealment of Facts. Representations for insurance which was declined are not admissible in an action on a policy subsequently issued on new representations.[44] Latent ambiguity in a statement of the location of property may be explained by testimony.[45] Evidence of usage is admissible on the question of substantial compliance with a representation as to precautions against fire where there is a latent ambiguity in the stipulation.[46] On the issue of intentional concealment of facts the insured may testify to the absence of fraudulent intent.[47] When the defense is fraudulent concealment of material facts evidence of statements made to defendant prior to and not connected with the application for the policy is not admissible on behalf of plaintiff.[48] Overvaluation cannot be proved by plaintiff's oral statements preceding a written application where the valuation was left in blank,[49] nor by expressed opinions of others as to the value not assented to by plaintiff as correct.[50] Plaintiff's good faith in his statement of value cannot be shown by evidence of offers made to him for the property after the insurance was effected.[51] To repel the imputation of intentional overvaluation plaintiff may show that his statement was made under the supervision of one of defendant's agents who had personally inspected the property.[52] Whether premises were or were not unoccupied by plaintiff may depend largely upon his intention to be gathered from the circumstances of the case.[53] That a house was a brothel, instead of a dwelling-house as represented, cannot be proved by reputation.[54] Testimony that the premises were partly burned prior to the application may constitute evidence, although slight, of an apprehension of incendiarism.[55]

e. Matters Affecting Risk — (1) Increase of Hazard in General. It may be a matter for expert testimony whether certain changes of condition in the property increase the risk in violation of a condition in the policy.[56] And experts in the insurance business may testify as to the rates for different classes of risks for the purpose of showing that the change of condition rendered the risk one for which a higher rate would have been charged on the ground that it was more hazardous.[57] But where the question involves matters of common knowledge or observation it is for the jury, and expert evidence is not admissible.[58] If the increase of risk relied upon is one arising out of breach of warranty or condition evidence is not admissible to show that as a matter of fact the risk was not increased,[59] or that the fire was not caused thereby;[60] and on the other hand the fact of increase of risk is irrelevant if in the particular case it constitutes no breach of warranty or condition.[61] Evidence as to the bad character of persons frequenting an insured house is not admissible where it is not claimed that plaintiff conducted the house so as to avoid the policy.[62] Unlawful use of adjoining premises is irrelevant where a condition forbids such use only of the premises in which the insured property is located.[63] To show that cessation of operations in a mill was merely temporary evidence that other mills in the vicinity temporarily suspended for the same reason is admissible.[64] As tending to rebut implication of plaintiff's consent to objectionable erections on his adjacent land his lease of the land antedating the policy is admissible.[65] Evidence that an addition to a building brought it nearer to objectionable premises is too indefinite to prove increase of risk without evidence of the distance between the premises.[66] Parol evidence is admissible to prove the company's consent to the use of a prohibited article which its agent forgot to indorse on the policy.[67] An admission by one not a party to the suit is not competent evidence against plaintiff if no relation of agency or privity between them is shown or no assent by plaintiff.[68] Evidence showing merely an increase of risk of money loss in case of fire is not admissible to show increase of hazard of fire.[69] Proof that the company's agent had casually heard of an increase of risk is not "notice" thereof as required by the policy.[70]

(II) Other or Additional Insurance. Where the existence of other or additional insurance on the property is set up as a defense[71] the facts from which a forfeiture results must be strictly proved.[72] The fact and the amount of insurance in other companies may be proved by parol evidence.[73] Admissions of a third person are not competent evidence against a party without proof of agency or relationship so as to make them chargeable to the party.[74] Where plaintiff introduces his proofs of loss which disclose the existence of other insurance it dispenses with further proof thereof against him.[75] Contents of a letter notifying defendant of additional insurance cannot be proved without sufficient preliminary evidence of its receipt.[76] Testimony by plaintiff that he obtained other insurance because he was advised that the first was invalid is irrelevant.[77] Plaintiff may show that the further insurance was not authorized by him, and to that end may testify to his conversation with the insurance agent who obtained the policy.[78] Conversation between plaintiff and defendant's agent is admissible to show knowledge by the latter of other insurance, although the conversation related to a prior surrendered policy.[79] Testimony of defendant's agent that when he issued the policy he had forgotten that he had placed other insurance on the property does not conclusively prove his want of knowledge.[80] Failure of the insured to testify positively that he gave notice of additional insurance may require a finding that he did not give notice.[81]

(III) Change of Title or Interest. Plaintiff may prove by parol evidence that notwithstanding a conveyance by him the real ownership of the property remained unchanged.[82] It may be proved by parol evidence that an encumbrance of record has been paid.[83] An absolute deed may be shown by parol to be a mortgage, and thus not within a condition forbidding a "transfer," although a statute requires defeasances to be in writing.[84] A finding that a mortgage has been paid may be sustained by plaintiff's testimony on cross-examination that the mortgage was executed but afterward paid.[85] An abstract of judgment is not sufficient proof of a judgment lien on property.[86] Foreclosure proceedings to which plaintiff, a prior mortgagee, was a party are admissible to show his knowledge of a change of title effected thereby.[87] In an action by a mortgagee to whom the loss was made payable admissions made by the insured after the loss concerning alleged change of title are not competent evidence against plaintiff.[88]

f. Loss and Damage — (I) Extent of Loss. Evidence of the actual extent of the injury by fire is admissible.[89] Evidence of the basis on which another company carrying insurance on the same property had settled for the loss is not competent.[90] The amount of goods on hand in a store at the time of the fire may be shown by the last previous invoice and the goods bought, and amounts received on sales in the meantime,[91] by books of account kept in the usual course of business and duly verified or authenticated,[92] or by an inventory taken shortly before the fire by a third person who then owned the goods.[93] An invoice taken by a sheriff on attachment process after the fire is admissible to show the amount of goods then on hand.[94] Evidence of a custom of a limited number of persons in a similar business is not admissible to discredit plaintiff's testimony as to the amount of stock on hand.[95]

(II) Value of Property — Amount of Damage. If the policy provides a specific way in which the value shall be settled before suit, evidence of value is inadmissible.[96] Where no arbitration was had pursuant to a provision in the policy, evidence of the amount of loss is admissible.[97] In arriving at the value of the property at the time of destruction, the original cost with the cost of handling and freight charges[98] and the depreciation between the time of purchase or construction and the time of loss[99] may be shown. among insurance adjusters as to the method of estimating loss on retail stocks of goods where there is no inventory and no books of account is admissible.[11] It is said that as plaintiff has a better knowledge of the quantity and value of his goods than any one else his estimate of value is entitled to much consideration.[12] Plaintiff's detailed testimony as to value should control his testimony as to cost price for a larger amount.[13] The jury are at liberty to adopt the highest of estimates made by several expert witnesses.[14] Evidence of expenses incurred for repairs after the fire, although not controlling, is admissible as to the extent of the damage.[15] An ex parte appraisement by the insured is not competent evidence of the amount of loss.[16] An appraisal made in accordance with a provision in the policy is admissible.[17]

(III) Proofs of Loss. The requirement of the policy that the insured shall make proofs of loss does not render such proofs competent evidence as to the amount of the loss or the value of the property.[18] But such proofs are admissible to refresh the memory of the witness as to the cost of various items.[19]

g. Notice and Proofs of Loss. Proof that notice of loss was duly mailed supports a finding that the notice was received.[22] Plaintiff's positive testimony that persons to whom he gave notice of loss were agents of defendant sufficiently establishes the fact of agency.[23] Notice of loss is conclusively shown by proof that defendant sent an adjuster to the scene of the fire.[24] Plaintiff's testimony that he delivered proofs of loss to defendant's agent suffices to establish the fact as against the agent's testimony that he has no recollection thereof.[25] A letter of the secretary of the company acknowledging receipt of proofs of loss is competent evidence that the company received them.[26] Proofs of loss are admissible to show compliance or attempted compliance with the terms of the policy.[27] It is no objection to admission of proofs of loss that they contain untrue statements.[28] The fact that notice and proofs of loss were furnished may be proved by parol evidence,[29] but the contents of the papers must be proved by production of the originals or by secondary evidence after a proper foundation is laid therefor.[30] A proof of loss offered by plaintiff which shows on its face that defendant is not liable may properly be excluded.[31] Slight evidence is prima facie sufficient to show that the magistrate who certified to a loss was the magistrate most contiguous to the insured premises destroyed by the fire.[32] Parol evidence is inadmissible to supplement and validate an insufficient proof of loss.[33] Evidence that proofs of loss were furnished is unnecessary where defendant admits

h. Fraud or Wilful Wrong of Insured — (1) Fraud or False Swearing. Although the fraud or false swearing which will defeat recovery by the insured may constitute a crime, nevertheless it is sufficient for the company to make out such defense by a preponderance of evidence.[35] Plaintiff's admissions as to cost of property destroyed are competent evidence against him on the question of bona fides of his claim for a greater amount in his proofs of loss.[36] His offer to sell is admissible for the same purpose,[37] and is of great force on the question of fraud.[38] Relevant declarations or admissions against interest made by the assignor of the policy are admissible against his assignee.[39] Defendant may prove plaintiff's attempt to conceal the origin and prevent the discovery of the fire in violation of a fraud clause, although incendiarism be not alleged.[40] Fraudulent overestimate of the value of buildings may be considered in determining whether misstatements of the value of personal property were fraudulent.[41] Mere discrepancy, although large, between the sworn statement by the insured as to his loss and the amount of the loss as shown on the trial will not in itself constitute sufficient evidence to establish such fraud or false swearing,[42] but may in connection with other evidence require reversal of a judgment in his favor.[43] Plaintiff's own declarations may be admissible on his behalf to show that his erroneous statement of title to the property was not wilfully false.[44] Fraudulent representation of sole ownership by plaintiff is not established by proof of his statement easily susceptible of a different construction.[45] A trial balance taken by a bookkeeper shortly before the fire and delivered to the insured, who based his proofs of loss thereon, is admissible to rebut the charge of furnishing wilfully false proofs.[46] The fact that plaintiff was doing a losing business has no tendency to prove falsity in his statement of the amount of goods on hand at the time of the fire.[47] Plaintiff's drunkenness and idleness after the fire is too remote as evidence of falsity of his statement of the amount of goods saved from the fire.[48]

(11) INCENDIARISM. As the wilful destruction of insured property is usually criminal,[49] the question has arisen whether such an act relied on by the company as a defense in a suit on the policy may be established by a preponderance of the evidence or whether it must be proven beyond a reasonable doubt. agent[61] of the insured wilfully burned the property is irrelevant. Great latitude is allowed in cross-examination of plaintiff where defendant charges that he burned the property.[62] Evidence, although not perfectly clear and explicit, may be sufficient to sustain a verdict for plaintiff especially where credibility of witnesses is involved.[63]

i. Waiver or Estoppel. Waiver of a condition in the policy may be established by a preponderance of evidence; the clear and convincing proof required in order to reform a written instrument[64] is not demanded.[65] Waiver may be proved indirectly by circumstances as well as by direct testimony.[66] Waiver cannot be established by evidence of doubtful constructive knowledge of the facts.[67] Testimony to oral declarations alleged to constitute a waiver is unsatisfactory evidence if considerable time has elapsed, and it is important to know what was the exact language used.[68] Such testimony is seriously weakened where the veracity of the witness in regard to other matters is doubtful,[69] but the fact that the witness is disinterested is a favorable circumstance.[70] In determining whether defendant's agent waived payment of the premium previous dealings with him in this respect may be considered.[71] Admissions by an authorized agent of defendant are competent evidence that defects in notice and proofs of loss were waived.[72] Correspondence between plaintiff and defendant may be admissible to show waiver of defects in proofs of loss.[73] Defendant's denial of liability and refusal to pay will sustain a finding of waiver of requirement of proofs of loss.[74] Statements of defendant's adjuster may be admissible to establish a tacit waiver of proofs of loss.[75] Usage and custom of other companies as to waiver of proofs of loss is inadmissible.[76] Waiver of notice and proofs of loss may be shown by letters to the company from its authorized agent,[77] or by conversations between him and plaintiff.[78] Defendant's knowledge that plaintiff's books and papers were destroyed would tend to corroborate other evidence that strict proofs of loss were waived.[79] Slight circumstances have been held sufficient to show intent on the part of defendant to waive forfeiture for breach of condition as to occupancy after knowledge thereof.[80] Declarations of defendant's agent made dum fervet opus in the course of his employment may be proved as tending to establish waiver.[81] Uncorroborated testimony of plaintiff contradicted by his testimony on a former trial and by his admission is insufficient to prove a waiver.[82] Testimony of defendant's agent that at the time of the insurance he had no recollection of certain information given him before he became agent must be believed in the absence of evidence to the contrary, where it cannot be presumed that he would have remembered the information.[83] On an issue of waiver if it becomes a material question whether plaintiff was aware of a particular provision in the policy he may testify that he did not read the instrument.[84] An unimpeached witness' denial of waiver cannot be corroborated by his testimony to his habitual refusal to waive in such cases.[85] Where a claim of waiver is predicated upon alleged denial of liability, defendant is entitled to show all the circumstances under which the denial was made.[86] Defendant's knowledge of a hazardous use of premises may be implied from the fact that an extra rate was charged for the insurance.[87] A non-waiver contract signed by plaintiff after the fire is admissible to rebut inference of waiver from subsequent conduct of defendant's adjuster.[88] Authority of one assuming to act as agent for the company cannot be proved by his own declarations.[89] Authority of an adjuster to waive performance of conditions may be shown by defendant's admissions.[90] An offer of settlement by defendant has been held admissible on the question of waiver.[91] Where defendant's agent consented to storage of the property in another place plaintiff may show that he informed the agent of all the facts affecting the new risk.[92]

H. Trial[93] — 1. Course and Conduct — a. In General. The course and conduct of the trial in an action on a fire-insurance policy are governed by the same rules that apply in civil actions generally.[94]

b. Reception of Evidence. The reception of evidence in an action on a fire-insurance policy is governed by the rules that apply in civil actions generally.[95]

93. See, generally, Trial. See also Insurance.

94. See, generally, Trial. See also Insurance.

Order of trial of issues.— Under Wis. Rev. St. § 2844, providing that where in any action there shall arise issues triable by a jury and by the court, the court shall in its discretion order the trial of either to be first had, and "when both" shall be found render judgment, it is error in an action on an insurance policy, where a claim is made by the contractor of the building insured against the owner, and the policy is sought by such contractor to be reformed so as to include his interest in the building as builder, to order the reformation of the contract on the trial of such equitable issue before the other issues have been tried. St. Clara Female Academy v. Delaware Ins. Co., 93 Wis. 57, 66 N. W. 1140. Where the answer was that the policy contained a condition avoiding it in case the interest of the assured in the property were other than the sole and unconditional ownership for his own benefit, and that fact was not represented to the insurer and expressed in the written part of the policy; that the property was held in trust by plaintiff for others, and he did not disclose the fact to defendant when he applied for insurance; and that he did not, in his proofs of loss, disclose such trust, or the names of the persons beneficially interested, as required by the terms of the policy, this was essentially a plea in bar, and not merely one in abatement, and there was no error in refusing defendant's motion to try first the question whether plaintiff had failed to make due proofs of loss. Smith v. Commonwealth Ins. Co., 49 Wis. 322, 5 N. W. 804. Where a fire policy provides that the loss shall not be payable until the expiration of a specified time after proofs have been furnished, an averment in an answer in a suit on the policy that such proofs were not furnished for the specified length of time before the action was brought does not create an issue in abatement which must be tried before the other issues in bar. Harriman v. Queen Ins. Co., 49 Wis. 71, 5 N. W. 12.

Remarks of court.— Where the insurer was trying to show that certain photographs destroyed were those of plaintiff's family, and therefore had no value, a remark of the court in the presence of the jury, "You don't expect to insure property for value, and refuse to pay for it simply because it is a picture of a man's father or mother," is not error; the court leaving the jury to determine the question as to the value of the photograph. German-American Ins. Co. v. Paul, 2 Indian Terr. 625, 630, 53 S. W. 442.

Right to close argument.— Where defendant in an action on a policy which provided that "if the building, or any part thereof falls, except as a result of fire, all insurance under this policy on it or its contents shall immediately cease and determine," admitted the insurance, destruction of the goods, and amount of loss, but alleged that the building had fallen before the contents caught fire, it was held that under Ky. Code Civ. Proc. § 526, providing that the burden of proof is on the party who would be defeated if no evidence were given, and section 317, subsection 6, providing that "in the argument the party having the burden of proof shall have the conclusion," defendant should conclude the argument. Royal Ins. Co. v. Schwing, 87 Ky. 410, 9 S. W. 242, 10 Ky. L. Rep. 380.

95. See, generally, Trial. See also Insurance.

Error cured.— Where a policy contained a clause of forfeiture in case of additional insurance not assented to, error in admitting evidence that additional insurance was obtained because insured understood that the original policy was invalid was cured by an instruction that the policy was avoided by the additional insurance unless the breach of condition had been waived. Pennsylvania F. Ins. Co. v. Kittle, 39 Mich. 51.

Necessity of showing relevancy.— Where defendant called a police officer and asked what kind of persons frequented the insured premises, the evidence was properly excluded, there being no offer to show that the house was occupied in any manner in violation of the policy, or that the mode or purpose for which it was kept contributed to the fire. Russell v. Metropolitan Ins. Co., 51 N. Y. 650. Evidence as to the amount of furniture in plaintiff's house six months before it was burned, and as to the furniture in plaintiff's new house after the fire, is inadmissible where it is not shown that further evidence will make it relevant. Deitz v. Providence Washington Ins. Co., 33 W. Va. 526, 11 S. E. 50, 25 Am. St. Rep. 908.

Offering part of document.— Where plaintiff offers the policy in evidence, he cannot be compelled to read subsequent indorsements thereon showing a cancellation as alleged in the answer. McCartney v. State Ins. Co., 45 Mo. App. 373. It is sufficient for plaintiff to read in evidence only those clauses of the policy bearing on the defense set up. Travis v. Continental Ins. Co., 32 Mo. App. 198, holding that defendant should offer the remainder if he deems it material.

Rebuttal.— Where defendant introduces evidence as to the value of the building, plaintiff may introduce evidence in rebuttal on the same point, since under Iowa Acts 18 Gen. Assem. c. 211, § 3, making the policy prima facie proof of the insurable value of the building, plaintiff is not obliged to offer

c. Reference.[96] The rules applicable to references in civil actions in general usually apply to references in actions on policies of fire insurance.[97]

2. Questions For Court and For Jury — a. General Rules. Questions of law are ordinarily to be determined by the court, and it is error to submit them to the jury.[98] Issues of fact, on the other hand, are ordinarily to be determined by the jury under proper instructions from the court.[99] Consequently if there is any evidence on that subject in the first instance. Martin v. Capital Ins. Co., 85 Iowa 643, 52 N. W. 534. Although the court, with the consent of counsel, arranges to submit to the jury only the questions whether plaintiff voluntarily caused the fire, and whether the use of the property was changed after issuance of the policy so as to avoid it, it is within the court's discretion to allow plaintiff to rebut evidence that in her proofs of loss she concealed the use made of the premises, by testimony that she told defendant's agent before the issuance of the policy that she intended so to use them. Bullman v. North British, etc., Ins. Co., 159 Mass. 118, 34 N. E. 169.

Waiver of objections.— Objection to the irrelevancy of preliminary proofs of loss offered in evidence is waived, objection being merely that they did not comply with the requirements of the policy as to proofs of loss. Sutton v. American F. Ins. Co., 188 Pa. St. 380, 41 Atl. 537.

96. See, generally, References.

97. See cases cited infra, this note. See also supra, note 20.

Propriety of reference.— There may be a reference to an auditor in an action on an insurance policy of the standard form requird to be used in Massachusetts, notwithstanding the clause providing for a reference to arbitrators without suit. Clement v. British American Assur. Co., 141 Mass. 298, 5 N. E. 847. Where defendants admit their liability, and the controversy relates solely to items of account and the amount of loss sustained by plaintiff, the court will refer the matter to referees for adjustment. Pechner v. Phœnix Ins. Co., 6 Lans. (N. Y.) 411. Where the pleadings and proofs of loss submitted by the insured show one hundred and forty-five items of goods consumed by fire, of the alleged aggregate value of eleven thousand one hundred and twenty-seven dollars and twenty-four cents, and forty-nine items of goods saved from the fire, but damaged to the extent of two hundred and sixty-three dollars, a reference of the account on motion is properly granted; the account being a "long account," within the meaning of N. Y. Code, § 271, authorizing the reference of long accounts. Batchelor v. Albany City Ins. Co., 1 Sweeny (N. Y.) 346, 37 How. Pr. 399. Where fraud of insured is raised as a defense, a motion for a reference should be denied; the question of fraud being for the jury. McLean v. East River Ins. Co., 8 Bosw. (N. Waiver of objections.— Where matters of defense, such as insurance in other companies, overinsurance, fraudulent concealment, compromise, payment, etc., were not pleaded to the action prior to a reference thereof to arbitrators, and were not directly put in issue and insisted upon before the arbitrators, they cannot be urged as exceptions to the award. Virginia Home Ins. Co. v. Gray, 61 Ga. 515.

Decision of referee see Chase v. Hamilton Mut. Ins. Co., 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 527. Where in an action on a policy which was to be avoided in case of its assignment without the consent of the company, the answer alleged that plaintiff had duly assigned the policy to one A before the action was brought and no longer had a claim under it against defendant, and the referee for trial found that "no sufficient assignment under the terms and conditions prescribed by said policy was ever made and delivered to said" A, the finding was defective, not determining the issue made. the question from them by nonsuit, dismissal, direction of a verdict, or instruction,[3] and all this is so where the evidence is in conflict.[4] If, however, there is no evidence on an issue of fact, or if the evidence of its existence or its non-existence, as the case may be, is so slight that a finding of its existence or its non-existence would not be sustained, or if the evidence is conclusive of its existence or its non-existence, as the case may be, then the question becomes one of law for the court and should not be submitted to the jury.[5] And if a fact is not in dispute, the court should not submit to the jury the question of its existence.[6]

b. Particular Questions — (i) As to Agency For Insurer. The question whether a certain person was in fact the agent of the insurer is generally one for the jury.[7] So too the question of the actual extent of an insurance agent's authority[8] has repeatedly been held to be one of fact for the determination of the jury. And the same has been held to be true with respect to questions concerning agency for the insured.[9]

(II) As to Appraisal or Arbitration. Questions of fact relating to appraisal or arbitration are generally for the jury to determine.[10] Thus the question whether plaintiff was to blame for failure of an arbitration so that his suit was prematurely brought,[11] even where it depends on inferences to be drawn from written correspondence,[12] is for the determination of the jury;[13] and the same is of course true of the question whether it was the fault of defendant that an arbitration failed.[14]

(III) As to Conditions and Warranties. Questions of fact concerning conditions and warranties and the breach or waiver thereof are generally for the determination of the jury;[15] but as warranties are made material as a matter of Occupancy of premises.— It has been held that the question whether a house was vacant within the meaning of an insurance policy is for the court. Schuermann v. Dwelling-House Ins. Co., 161 Ill. 437, 43 N. E. 1093, 52 Am. St. Rep. 377. See, however, Stone v. Granite State F. Ins. Co., 69 N. H. 438, 45 Atl. 235, holding that where the occupant of a dwelling is temporarily absent, the question whether it is "vacant by the removal" of the occupant, within a vacancy condition in a policy, is for the determination of the jury. Whether premises were or were not occupied in fact is a question for the jury. Home Ins. Co. v. Wood, 47 Kan. 521, 28 Pac. 167; Percival v. Maine M. M. Ins. Co., 33 Me. 242; Hampton v. Hartford F. Ins. Co., 65 N. J. L. 265, 47 Atl. 433, 52 L. R. A. 344; Vanderhoef v. Agricultural Ins. Co., 46 Hun (N. Y.) 328; Appleby v. Firemen's Fund Ins. The question of notice is ordinarily for the jury. Martin v. Fidelity Ins. Co., 119 Iowa 570, 93 N. W. 562; Alamo F. Ins. Co. v. Davis, 25 Tex. Civ. App. 342, 60 S. W. 802.

law by the contract itself, it is for the court, interpreting the language of the contract to determine its meaning, to say whether under conceded states of fact there has been a violation of a condition or warranty.[16]

(IV) As to Extent of Loss. Whether the loss is total or partial is usually a question for the jury to determine;[17] as are also questions as to the value of the property[18] and the amount of the loss.[19]

Thus the question whether defendant's agent was notified of additional insurance is for the jury where the evidence is conflicting. Magoun v. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co., 86 Minn. 486, 91 N. W. 5, 91 Am. St. Rep. 370; Bowman v. Mutual F. Ins. Co., 203 Pa. St. 150, 52 Atl. 87; Wilson v. Montgomery County Mut. F. Ins. Co., 174 Pa. St. 554, 34 Atl. 122. (v) As to Falsity and Materiality of Representations or Concealment. It is only where the facts are undisputed that the materiality and intentional falsity of the representations made by the insured in procuring the policy can be passed on by the court;[20] usually such questions are for the jury.[21] So the materiality and fraudulent character of an alleged concealment of facts are for the jury.[22]

(vi) As to Fraud and False Swearing. While it may be for the court to pass upon the question whether false statements are as to a material matter,[23] yet as fraud or false swearing which will avoid the policy under usual provisions must be wilful and with intent to defraud, the issue raised by such a defense is always one for the jury.[24] It is not for the court to say whether fraud is to be

(VII) As to Identification of Property Insured. Whether or not the property destroyed was the property covered by the policy is a question of fact for the jury where its determination depends on other evidence than the policy alone.[27]

(VIII) As to Incendiarism. The defense that plaintiff feloniously caused the fire raises a question of fact for the jury.[28]

(IX) As to Increase of Hazard. If the policy specifies certain acts as constituting an increase of hazard or risk, such as to avoid the policy, and the facts are not in dispute there is no question for the jury;[29] but generally the question whether there has been an increase of the hazard in violation of a provision that such increase avoids the policy is for the jury.[30]

Refined distinctions.— An instruction which draws a distinction between an agent's knowledge "in his individual capacity" of the ownership of property insured by him and such knowledge in his capacity as agent is properly refused, such distinction being too refined for the comprehension of the average juryman. Deitz v. Providence Washington Ins. Co., 33 W. Va. 526, 11 S. E. 50, 25 Am. St. Rep. 908.

Undue emphasis.— Where insurer claims that insured caused the fire an instruction using insured's name to illustrate the meaning of "direct evidence" is not so unwarrantable as to mislead the jury by attracting undue attention to insured's alleged criminality. Instructions as to amount of recovery see East Texas F. Ins. Co. v. Brown, 82 Tex. 631, 18 S. W. 713; Hibernia Ins. Co. v. Starr, (Tex. Sup. 1890) 13 S. W. 1017. Where the court let in proof of the loss of property not included in the contract, an instruction that plaintiff could not recover anything for the loss thereof was proper. Manchester F. Assur. Co. v. Feibelman, 118 Ala. 308, 23 So. 759. There is no inconsistency in giving an instruction stating what might be recovered if facts be found showing a valid award, and one stating what might be recovered if the facts show that there was no valid award; the evidence being conflicting as to validity of award. Caledonian F. Ins. Co. v. Traub, 86 Md. 86, 37 Atl. 782. An instruction that insured must prove that the property covered by the policy was destroyed is erroneous as excluding damages to goods not destroyed. Boston Mar. Ins. Co. v. Scales, 101 Tenn. 628, 49 S. W. 743. It is not error to instruct the jury to assess damages according to the "fair cash value" (Birmingham F. Ins. Co. v. Pulver, 126 Ill. 329, 18 N. E. 804, 9 Am. Rep. 598) or the "fair market value" (Manchester F. Ins. Co. v. Simmons, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 607, 35 S. W. 722) of the property destroyed, although the policy requires the estimate to be according to "the actual cash value." So an instruction that if the insured items were each "worth" the amount of the insurance thereon the verdict should be so and so is equivalent to stating that if the jury believe the "cash value" of the property at the time of the loss equaled the amount of the insurance their verdict should be as directed. Sappington v. St. Joseph Town Mut. F. Ins. Co., 77 Mo. App. 270.

Instructions as to burden of proof.— On an issue of arson a charge that "fraud is never presumed but must be clearly proved" is not error. Bannon v. Insurance Co. of North America, 115 Wis. 250, 91 N. W. 666. But an instruction that when an insurance company relies on a forfeiture as a defense it is held to strict proof, and no presumption will be indulged in to support the forfeiture, but the insured is entitled to the benefit of all reasonable presumption in his favor, is inaccurate; for while forfeitures as defenses to suits on policies are not favored in law, there is no presumption of fact either in favor of or against them. Denver Tp. Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Resor, 95 Ill. App. 197. Where an insurer who is sued as trustee of the insured after a loss pleads that the loss was occasioned through the design or gross carelessness of the insured, and the insurer's counsel admits that the burden of proof upon him is the same as in criminal cases, and that there is no different rule as to the strength of evidence necessary to establish the gross carelessness from that necessary to establish the alleged design, and the evidence introduced at the trial is not such as to require any difference, it is proper to instruct the jury that the "matter relied on in defense" must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt. or misstate the evidence or its effect;[44] but it may instruct the jury by what rules they are governed in arriving at a verdict and give them proper cautions in regard thereto.[45] The instructions are to be construed as a whole, and the fact that one portion considered separately might be open to objection does not constitute error if the charge is correct in the entirety.[46] An instruction that covers the case generally is ordinarily sufficient in the absence of a request for further Taking case from jury.— If there is no evidence or if the evidence is insufficient in law to justify the jury in finding a fact, the court may so instruct. Packham v. German F. Ins. Co., 91 Md. 515, 46 Atl. 1066, 80 Am. St. Rep. 461, 50 L. R. A. 828; Spring Garden Mut. Ins. Co. v. Evans, 9 Md. 1, 66 Am. Dec. 30. So it is not error to instruct on a special issue whether plaintiff was the owner of insured property, that if the jury believed the evidence they should answer in the affirmative, where plaintiff's possession under deeds duly executed and recorded was shown, and there is no evidence impeaching his title. Nelson v. Atlanta Home Ins. Co., 120 N. C. 302, 27 S. E. 38.

Where two witnesses contradict each other as to whether one of them had given notice to another, who was agent of defendant insurance company, of subsequent insurance, as required by the policy, it is not error to charge the jury that the one could not have sworn he gave the notice unless he recollected giving it, and that if he did not recollect, he had committed perjury. Oral and written evidence.— Where the evidence on the question of a waiver by an insurance company of a condition of a policy requiring an appraisal of the amount of loss consisted partly of letters between the parties, such letters should be submitted to the jury with the other evidence, without instruction as to their legal effect standing alone. Ins. Co., 33 Mo. App. 348 (holding that an instruction that the jury are not bound to adopt the opinion of any witness, but that it is for them to determine in the light of all the circumstances what weight should be given to any opinion, theory, or conclusion stated by any witness is correct); Pennsylvania F. Ins. Co. v. Carnahan, 19 Ohio Cir. Ct. 97, 108, 10 Ohio Cir. Dec. 225 (holding that it is not error for the judge to charge the jury that "the attorneys engaged in the trial of this case may call your attention to the evidence; they may present it in such a way as to best suit their respective sides; and they can comment upon the testimony, but they have no right to tell you what disputed point has been proven or disproven").

Instructions as to arson.— The court may instruct the jury on the defense of arson that they should take into consideration the serious nature of the charge. Pennsylvania F. Ins. Co. v. Carnahan, 19 Ohio Cir. Ct. 97, 10 Ohio Cir. Dec. 225. Contra, Rothschild v. American Cent. Ins. Co., 62 Mo. 356. So instructing the jury to consider the improbability that one will commit such an act does not invade the province of the jury. Portland First Nat. Bank v. Commercial Assur. Co., 33 Oreg. 43, 52 Pac. 1050. And where insurer claims that insured caused the fire, instructions that there is no question whether a crime has been committed and that a verdict for insurer could not be used in a criminal prosecution of insured are not erroneous, if it is apparent that the court intended merely to caution the jury against allowing the criminal phase of the case to influence their verdict. Portland First Nat. Bank v. Philadelphia Fire Assoc., 33 Oreg. 172, 50 Pac. 568, 53 Pac. 8. Where defendant charged that the fire was intentionally caused by plaintiff, and, while bringing no direct evidence to that effect, showed various circumstances tending to prove it, it was error to refuse a charge that fraudulent acts are generally concealed, and the direct proofs rest wholly in the breasts of the guilty parties; that the usual proofs of such acts are the facts and circumstances surrounding the transaction, which, in order to establish fraud in any case, must be such as will convince an ordinarily prudent person and as are not susceptible of any reasonable explanation consistent with the honesty of the person charged. See, however, Pioneer Mfg. Co. v. Phœnix Assur. Co., 106 N. C. 28, 10 S. E. 1057, where the error was held not to have been cured.

50. Germania F. Ins. Co. v. Boykin, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 433, 20 L. ed. 442, holding that where four companies join in one policy, agreeing to become liable for one fourth each of the amount insured, and all are made defendants in a suit on the policy, a verdict finding that defendants did assume in manner and form as in the declaration alleged and assessing the whole damage at the face of the policy is a good verdict.

51. See cases cited infra, this note.

Special findings must be consistent with the general verdict (American Cent. Ins. Co. v. Hathaway, 43 Kan. 399, 23 Pac. 428. For cases held unobjectionable in this respect see Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Rowe, 117 Ind. 202, 20 N. E. 122; Ohio Farmers' Ins. Co. v. Scowman, 16 Ind. App. 205, 44 N. E. 558, 940), and with each other (Stache v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co., 49 Wis. 89, 5 N. W. 36, 35 Am. Rep. 772, holding, however, that the findings in question were not objectionable in this respect). Where the defense in an action on a policy is based on the application, both instruments will be resorted to in determining whether the general verdict is consistent with the special findings. Gilbert v. American Ins. Co., 30 Mich. 400.

Construction.—A special verdict which finds that defendant insured plaintiff against loss on her one and two story dwelling-house is a sufficient finding that she owned the property at the time it was insured. Insurance Co. of North America v. Coombs, 19 Ind. App. 331, 49 N. E. 471. Where defendant set up breach of conditions of the policy by the use of a naphtha torch to remove old paint from the building previous to repainting it, a finding that the method used was "the method ordinarily pursued to remove paint on the outside of a building preparatory to scraping it off, to paint it," was not equivalent to an affirmative finding that the change of conditions occurred through the making of ordinary repairs in a reasonable and proper way. Rockland First Cong. Church v. Holyoke Mut. F. Ins. Co., 158 Mass. 475, 33 N. E. 572, 35 Am. St. Rep. 508, 19 L. R. A. 587. In a verdict finding that the loss of plaintiff was three thousand and sixty-two dollars, of which the sum of four hundred and sixty-two dollars is the value of the store, and two thousand six hundred dollars the value of the stock on hand, the word "value" should be read as meaning the damage on account of the destruction of the store and goods. Wynne v. Liverpools, etc., Ins. Co., 71 N. C. 121. A finding that the goods destroyed were at the time of the fire worth a certain amount is equivalent to a finding that such amount was their actual cash value. German Ins. Co. v. Norris, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 250, 32 S. W. 727.

Necessity of findings on particular facts.— A judgment in favor of plaintiff, rendered on a special verdict which does not find that plaintiff was the owner at the time of the fire, will be reversed, but a finding that plaintiff was owner of the property when it was insured is sufficiently implied in a finding that defendant insured plaintiff against loss on the property. Insurance Co. of North America Co. v. Coombs, 19 Ind. App. 331, 49 N. E. 471. The failure to find that notice of loss under the policy of insurance declared upon was given within a reasonable time is not supplied by a finding that defendant received from plaintiff "proof of loss." German F. Ins. Co. v. Columbia Encaustic Tile Co., 11 Ind. App. 385, 39 N. E. 304. It is not necessary that a special verdict finding the facts should find the conditions and provisions of the policy, where such policy is set out in, and made part of, the complaint. Evans v. Queen Ins. Co., 5 Ind. App. 198, 31 N. E. 843. A special verdict that plaintiffs owned the lumber insured, that the quantity was greater in value than the insurance sought to be recovered, that the lumber was not piled three hundred feet from the mill, and that the fire was caused by a general forest conflagration, is defective for failure to state the terms of the policy, and that any lumber was destroyed by fire, and should be set aside. McCormick v. Royal Ins. Co., 163 Pa. St. 184, dicts and findings by the court[52] in actions on fire-insurance policies are the same as those that apply in civil actions generally.[53]

I. New Trial. New trials of actions on fire-insurance policies are governed by the same rules that apply in civil actions generally.[54]

J. Judgment[55] — 1. General Rules — a. In General. If the policy stipulates that the loss shall be payable to a mortgagee of the insured premises, and he is a party plaintiff, judgment for the amount recovered should be awarded to him.[56] In a proper case judgment may be rendered for defendant notwithstanding a general verdict against it.[57]

b. Conformity to Pleadings, Evidence, and Verdict. Following the rules relating to judgments in general the judgment must conform to the pleadings[58]

29 Atl. 747. A special verdict must find all the material facts even if the evidence be undisputed. Bartow v. Northern Assur. Co., 10 S. D. 132, 72 N. W. 86. Where there is evidence pro and con on the issue whether insurer waived a provision avoiding the policy in suit, the special verdict should state whether the provision was waived. McFetridge v. American F. Ins. Co., 90 Wis. 138, 62 N. W. 938.

Propriety of special interrogatories.—Where fraudulent overvaluation of plaintiff's stock was claimed as a defense to an action on a policy of fire insurance, and it appeared that the stock had been shipped from one town to another on removal by plaintiff, a special interrogatory which sought to have the jury find whether all the goods claimed to have been destroyed by plaintiff were placed in his stock at the place to which he removed is not objectionable as being equivalent to a general finding for plaintiff or defendant on the issue; and interrogatories having no direct bearing on the facts in issue should not be submitted to the jury. Goldstein v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co., 124 Iowa 143, 99 N. W. 696. Since a special verdict should find ultimate facts special interrogatories calling for the method or elements considered in reaching such facts are improper. Read v. State Ins. Co., 103 Iowa 307, 72 N. W. 665, 64 Am. St. Rep. 180. Where the account-books of insured are admitted without objection to show the amount and value of the goods at the time of the fire, and evidence is also admitted to explain alterations in the account, but no request is made by the defendant to exclude the books as evidence on account of presumptions raised against them by the fact of such alterations, it is not error to submit the question, "Have the account books of plaintiff been falsely or fraudulently altered?" Kelly v. Indemnity F. Ins. Co., 38 N. Y. 322. Special interrogatories relating to matters not in dispute should not be submitted. Runkle v. Hartford Ins. Co., 99 Iowa 414, 68 N. Setting aside findings.— If the evidence of the value of the goods destroyed is conflicting, the trial court is not justified in setting aside the jury's findings of value, and awarding plaintiff the full amount of the policy. Thorne v. Ætna Ins. Co., 102 Wis. 593, 78 N. W. 920.

52. Hegard v. California Ins. Co., (Cal. 1886) 11 Pac. 594 (holding that where a policy provides that in no case shall the recovery be greater than the actual damage or cash value of the property, a finding that the loss sustained on account of the destruction of a building by fire was a certain sum, the amount insured for, is sufficient, and the court need not state the evidential fact that the cash value of the property when destroyed was a certain sum); Milwaukee F. Ins. Co. v. Todd, 32 Ind. App. 214, 67 N. E. 697 (holding that the court should state in its special finding that insured owned the property at the time of loss, and the absence of such a statement in the special finding is to be treated as indicating that the court did not find such to be the fact).

Judgment on award in action on policy.— In code practice judgment may be rendered against defendant on an award where plaintiff seeks to set aside the award and recover on the policy and fails as to the former relief. Maher v. Home Ins. Co., 75 N. Y. App. Div. 226, 78 N. Y. Suppl. 44.

and the evidence.[59] And similarly the judgment, to be valid and regular, must conform to the verdict or findings.[60]

c. Amount of Recovery.[61] In case of a total loss the amount of the recovery is the amount of the policy,[62] less any depreciation in value from the date of the policy to the time of the loss,[63] in the absence of other provisions to the contrary.[64] In the case of a partial loss, in the absence of different provisions in the policy, the measure of recovery is the difference between the value of the property whole and its value as damaged within the amount of the policy.[65]

d. Motion in Arrest. The objection that the action was prematurely brought may be taken by motion in arrest of judgment.[66]

Suing on one theory and recovering on another.— Where plaintiff sought to recover on a fire policy as assignee, and alleged performance of the conditions precedent by the assignor, and the jury found that such conditions had not been performed by the assignor, but found facts which would warrant a recovery by plaintiff as subrogated to the rights of a mortgagee, judgment for plaintiff was erroneous. Action on policy as one "for the recovery of money only."— An action on an insurance policy is "for the recovery of money only," although the damages demanded are unliquidated, within Wis. Rev. St. § 2891, subd. 1, providing that the clerk after default may enter judgment for the amount demanded without proof. Schobacher v. Germantown Farmers' Mut. Ins. Co., 59 Wis. 86, 17 N. W. 969.

Action on policy as "founded on an instrument in writing ascertaining the plaintiff's demand."— An action on a fire-insurance policy not being "founded on an instrument in writing ascertaining the plaintiff's demand," within the meaning of Ala. Code, § 2740, judgment cannot be rendered without the intervention of a jury to ascertain the amount of plaintiff's damage. North Alabama Home Protection v. Caldwell, 85 Ala. 607, 5 So. 338; Manhattan F. Ins. Co. v. Fowler, 76 Ala. 372.

Action on policy as founded on "writing for the payment of money."— A policy of fire insurance containing a provision that if there be other insurance on the property the loss, if any, shall be adjusted among the several insurers, is not a "writing for the payment of money," within Va. Code, § 3285, dispensing with an inquiry of damages in an action on such writing in case of judgment by default. Commercial Union Assur. Co. v. Everhart, 88 Va. 952, 14 S. E. 836. To the contrary see Lycoming F. Ins. Co. v. Dickinson, 4 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 271, holding that a policy of fire insurance is an instrument of writing for the payment of money within the rule of the common pleas allowing judgments to be entered in suits upon such instruments for want of an affidavit of defense.

Where loss has been ascertained as provided by policy.— Where plaintiff files his declaration together with the policy, and makes affidavit showing the amount claimed to be due, and it appears by the terms of the policy that the method of ascertaining the amount due in case of loss is prescribed therein, and that plaintiff has ascertained such loss according to its terms, and made oath thereto, he is entitled to a judgment by default under Md. Acts (1864), c. 6, § 6, regulating practice in certain cases in Baltimore city, for the want of a sworn plea filed to the rule day by defendants; and that the data necessary to enable the amount due to be ascertained appears in the policy, and justifies plaintiff in verifying the same by his oath. Orient Mut. Ins. Co. v. Andrews, 66 Md. 371, 7 Atl. 693.

Where promise to pay is contingent.— Where a policy contained only a contingent promise to pay, and was therefore not within the affidavit of defense law, a judgment by default for want of an affidavit of defense was properly stricken from the record. In some states there are statutory provisions for allowing attorney's fees to the successful plaintiff in an action on a fire-insurance policy where it appears that the company has in bad faith or without reasonable ground refused or unreasonably delayed payment of the amount of the loss.[73] Such provisions are not unconstitutional.[74] To recover the fees the complaint should specifically demand them;[75] but a demand in writing when the judgment is rendered may be treated as a proper amendment of the complaint.[76] What is a "reason-

St. 467, 26 Atl. 658 (holding that, although plaintiff failed to tell defendant at the time certain insurance was applied for that he believed an attempt had been made by unknown parties to fire his house, yet if his subsequent explanation of such neglect was fairly submitted to the jury, court affirming or reversing the judgment of the trial court on the facts, when there is any evidence to support the finding of the intermediate court.[83] A party cannot complain of error in his favor.[84] Presumptions are indulged or not on appeals in actions on fire-insurance policies the same as on appeals in other civil actions.[85]

b. Conclusiveness of Verdict and Findings.[86] The verdict of a jury,[87] or the finding of the trial court sitting as a jury,[88] is as a rule conclusive on all questions of fact, provided that there is any evidence to support the verdict or findings.[89] whether their findings were justified was for the trial court to determine on a motion for a new trial). And see, generally, APPEAL AND ERROR, 3 Cyc. 345 et seq.

83. Home Ins. Co. v. Bethel, 142 Ill. 537, 32 N. E. 510 [affirming 42 Ill. App. 475] (issue of waiver of proofs of loss); North British, etc., Ins. Co. v. Steiger, 124 Ill. 81, 16 N. E. 95 (issue of whether risk was increased). And see, generally, APPEAL AND ERROR, 3 Cyc. 394 et seq.

84. Iowa.— Read v. State Ins. Co., 103 Iowa 307, 72 N. W. 665, 64 Am. St. Rep. 180.

Kentucky.— German-American Ins. Co. v. Norris, 100 Ky. 29, 37 S. W. 267, 18 Ky. L. Rep. 537, 66 Am. St. Rep. 324.

New York.— Wolf v. Goodhue F. Ins. Co., 43 Barb. 400; Unger v. People's F. Ins. Co., 4 Daly 96, in both of which cases a verdict was sustained as to the amount of recovery.

Pennsylvania.— Home Ins. Co. v. Davis, 98 Pa. St. 280.

Wisconsin.— Agnew v. Farmers' Mut. Protective F. Ins. Co., 95 Wis. 445, 70 N. W. 554.

85. Western Home Ins. Co. v. Thorp, 48 Kan. 239, 127 Pac. 991 (holding that all the evidence not being brought up, the court cannot presume that there was evidence that defendant waived the provision requiring proof of loss, where such evidence would have been inadmissible under the pleadings); Planters' Mut. Ins. Co. v. Rowland, 66 Md. 236, 7 Atl. 257 (holding that in an action on a policy of insurance on a flour mill, where the policy provides that it shall be of no effect if the mill should be so altered or used for carrying on therein any business which, "according to the class of hazards thereto annexed," would increase the risks, etc., the appellate court will not, where the class of hazards annexed to the policy is not to be found in the record, assume as matter of fact that the mere change in the machinery of the mill from the burr to the roller process was such an alteration as would, according to the class of hazards annexed to the policy, increase the risk). And see, generally, APPEAL AND ERROR, 3 Cyc. 266 et seq.

Missouri.— Arnold v. Hartford F. Ins. Co., 55 Mo. App. 149 (issue of waiver of proofs of loss); St. Louis Gaslight Co. v. American F. Ins. Co., 33 Mo. App. 348 (issue as to cause of loss).

New York.— Jones v. Howard Ins. Co., 117 N. Y. 103, 22 N. E. 578 (issue of whether insured made diligent effort to save his property); Robertson v. New Hampshire Ins. Co., 16 N. Y. Suppl. 842 [affirmed in 137 N. Y. 530, 33 N. E. 336] (issue whether defendant waived its right under the policy to call for an examination of plaintiff and of her books, and for the appraisal of the property by appraisers selected by the parties); Storm v. Phenix Ins. Co., 15 N. Y. Suppl. 281 [affirmed in 133 N. Y. 656, 31 N. E. 625] (issue of whether insured fraudulently caused the fire).

Wisconsin.— Beyer v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co., 112 Wis. 138, 88 N. W. 57 (issue as to false swearing); Wright v. Hartford F. Ins. Co., 36 Wis. 522 (issue of ownership of property).

See 28 Cent. Dig. tit. "Insurance," § 1801. And see, generally, APPEAL AND ERROR, 3 Cyc. 348 et seq.

Mistake or bias.— A verdict will not be set aside as against the weight of evidence unless it is so clearly unsupported as to indicate misapprehension, mistake, or bias on the part of the jury. Pennsylvania F. Ins. Co. v. Carnahan, 19 Ohio Cir. Ct. 114, 10 Ohio Cir. Dec. 186, where a verdict against the company on an issue of incendiarism was sustained.

88. Niagara F. Ins. Co. v. Scammon, 100 Ill. 644 (issue of whether notice of loss was given in due time); Alamo F. Ins. Co. v. Heidemann Mfg. Co., (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 28 S. W. 910 (holding that, although the judgment as to the amount is supported by plaintiff's evidence only, it will not be disturbed, even though he, in an affidavit used in making settlement with another company, stated the amount of the loss to be much less than found by the court). And see, generally, APPEAL AND ERROR, 3 Cyc. 357 et seq.

89. Cody v. Commercial F. Ins. Co., 13 Ill. App. 110; Guinn v. Phœnix Ins. Co., 80 Iowa 346, 45 N. W. 880; Long Island Ins. Co. v. Great Western Mfg. Co., 2 Kan. App. 377, 42 Pac. 738; Epstein v. State Ins. Co., 21 Oreg.

Consequently, following the general rule in such cases, if the evidence is conflicting the case will not be disturbed on appeal.[90]

c. Harmless Error. A judgment will not be reversed for error in a trial which resulted in no prejudice to the party seeking to take advantage of it.[91]

I. CRIMINAL LIABILITY.[1]

A. Wilful Burning — 1. NATURE AND ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE — a. Of Another's Property. The act of wilfully[2] or unlawfully burning another's property, other than buildings and similar structures and their contents, such as stacks of hay or grain, grasses, fences, woods, and the like, is punishable as a misdemeanor, both at common law,[3] and under most of the statutes,[4] although in some jurisdictions and under some circumstances the offense constitutes a penitentiary offense.[5] Under some statutes some of these offenses are treated as arson.[6]

b. Of One's Own Property. In some jurisdictions it is made a misdemeanor to set fire to one's own property, such as woods or prairie, with the intent of thereby setting fire to another's grasses, fences, etc.;[7] or without giving proper notice thereof to the owners of adjoining lands;[8] or to set fire to prairie or timber land, and to allow the fire to escape from his control.[9]

2. INDICTMENT OR INFORMATION[10] — a. In General. The indictment or information should charge all the elements of the offense with particularity and clearness;[11] but it need not pursue strictly the language of the statute, if words of equivalent import are employed.[12]

A cultivated field is not prairie or timber land within the meaning of such statute. Brunell v. Hopkins, 42 Iowa 429.

10. See, generally, INDICTMENTS AND INFORMATIONS.

11. State v. Simpson, 9 N. C. 460, holding that an indictment charging that defendant unlawfully, wickedly, maliciously, and mischievously did set fire to, burn, etc., certain barrels of tar, and concluding at common law, is sufficient.

b. Charging Grade of Offense. It should not charge the offense as of a grade other than that made by the statute.[13]

c. Particular Averments — (I) Description of Property. The property should be described in the language of the statute; and except where such language is general the species of property should be specified.[14] The ownership of the property should also be averred.[15]

(II) Time and Place of Offense. Where time is an element of the offense it should be averred with sufficient certainty.[16] And although as a general rule the place of the offense should be particularly averred, a mistake in the name of the place is immaterial, where the burning is of property which has no particular locality.[17]

3. Evidence — a. Sufficiency. In order to warrant a conviction of the offense of setting fire, under the statutes, or under particular circumstances, the evidence must be sufficient to show beyond a reasonable doubt, as in other criminal cases, all the elements constituting the offense alleged, or in the statutes.[18] It should be shown that the burning was done wilfully or maliciously.[19]

b. Variance. The proof must correspond with all material allegations in the indictment or information; otherwise there can be no conviction.[20]

4. Defenses. Under statutes requiring notice of the burning to be given to adjoining landowners, waiver of such notice by such owners is no defense to an indictment for the misdemeanor.[21]

5. Judgment. In jurisdictions making the offense a misdemeanor only, a valid judgment cannot be pronounced on an indictment and verdict charging and finding it as a felony.[22]

B. Refusing Aid in Extinguishing Fire. It is sometimes made a misdemeanor to refuse aid in extinguishing fires.[23]

Com., 9 Leigh (Va.) 671; Rex v. Swatkins, 4 C. & P. 548, 19 E. C. L. 643.

Not averring that stacks burned were "out of doors" does not make the indictment insufficient, as it is a matter of common knowledge that stacks of oats, etc., are out of doors. State v. Huskins, 126 N. C. 1070, 35 S. E. 608.

13. Black v. State, 2 Md. 376, holding that a valid judgment cannot be pronounced on an indictment charging the burning of a stack of hay as a felony, under a statute making it a misdemeanor only.

14. Rex v. Woodward, 1 Moody C. C. 323. Thus charging a party with setting fire to a "stack of barley" is sufficient under a statute creating the offense for burning "any stack of corn or grain." Rex v. Swatkins, 4 C. & P. 548, 19 E. C. L. 643.

15. Rex v. Swatkins, 4 C. & P. 548, 19 E. C. L. 643.

16. State v. White, 41 Tex. 64, holding that under a statute prescribing a penalty for wilfully burning or causing to be burned any woodland or prairie "between the 1st of July and the 15th of February succeeding," an indictment charging the burning of a prairie on the first day of December is sufficient, without an allegation that this was between July and February, as prohibited by statute.

17. Rex v. Woodward, 1 Moody C. C. 323.

18. State v. White, 41 Tex. 64, holding that where the statutory offense, as burning woodland or prairie, may be committed only between certain periods of time, proof that it was done at any time between those periods, and not so remote as to be barred by limitation, would warrant a conviction.

Insufficient evidence.—Under an indictment charging defendant with instigating his minor sons to wilfully burn another's fence rails, evidence showing that the fire was started by the sons on their father's land, but that the father made earnest, but unsuccessful, effort to prevent the spreading of the fire and to save the fence is insufficient. Pipe v. State, 3 Tex. App. 56.

19. See Galvin v. Gualala Mill Co., 98 Cal. 268, 33 Pac. 93, holding that mere proof of setting fire on his own land, which spreads to another's land, without proof of evil intent or negligence, does not show an unlawful act.

20. Denbow v. State, 18 Ohio 11 (holding that evidence of burning shocks of wheat does not support an indictment for burning stacks of wheat); Reg. v. Satchwell, L. R. 2 C. C. 21, 12 Cox C. C. 449, 42 L. J. M. C. 63, 28 L. T. Rep. N. S. 569, 21 Wkly. Rep. 642 (holding that proof of setting fire to a quantity of straw on a lorry will not sustain a conviction under an indictment for setting fire to a stack of wheat); Rex v. Tottenham, 7 C. & P. 237, 32 E. II. LIABILITY FOR PENALTY.[24]

A. In General. By statute in some jurisdictions setting fire to another's woods, prairie, etc., or to one's own woods, prairie, etc., without giving proper notice thereof to adjoining landowners, and without taking effectual care to extinguish such fire before it shall reach near or adjoining lands, renders the wrong-doer liable to a penalty at the suit of any one;[25] but this rule as to requiring notice does not apply to fires from necessity, as by seeking to subdue a fire by firing against it.[26] It is also provided that the penalty shall not be exacted where a person is burning up anything on his own farm and the fire accidentally escapes to an adjoining farm or woods.[27]

B. Defenses. It is no defense to this action that the land on which the fire was set out belonged to defendant;[28] or that an adjoining landowner waived the required notice.[29]

III. LIABILITY FOR DAMAGES.

A. For Wilful or Criminal Burning or Setting Fire — 1. In General. Aside from the punishment of these offenses[30] or the imposition of penalties[31] as already shown, the wrong-doer is also civilly liable to the party injured for any damage caused by setting fire wilfully, or in violation of the statute,[32] unless it was done lawfully and the damage was caused without any fault on his part.[33]

24. Penalties generally see PENALTIES.

25. Averitt v. Murrell, 49 N. C. 322 (holding that setting fire to heaps of timber cut in part of his woods from which fire escapes to his woodland and thence to his neighbor's land is not a setting on fire of his own woods as contemplated in Rev. Code, c. 16); Tyson v. Rasberry, 8 N. C. 60; Wright v. Yarborough, 4 N. C. 687.

An old field, which has been "turned out" without fencing around it, and which had grown up under broom sedge and pine bushes surrounded by forest land, is woods, and one setting fire thereto is liable to the penalty imposed. Hall v. Cranford, 50 N. C. 3.

But a field grown up in broom sedge and wild grass, surrounded by an old fence, is not woods within the meaning of such statute; and the owner burning off the same is not liable to the penalty imposed for the act on an alleged injury to an adjoining proprietor. Achenbach v. Johnston, 84 N. C. 264 [distinguishing Hall v. Cranford, 50 N. C. 3]. See Okla. St. (1893) § 2903.

The word "farms" as used in such statute is not confined to inclosures. Finley v. Langston, 12 Mo. 120.

Woods, within the meaning of such statute, means forest lands in their actual state, and is used in contradistinction to lands cleared and inclosed for cultivation. Averitt v. Murrell, 49 N. C. 322.

North Carolina.— Lamb v. Sloan, 94 N. C. 534. Under Code, §§ 52, 53, an action for damages by fire cannot be maintained by one damaged by fire, started on land not adjacent to plaintiff's; but where the complaint alleges that defendant wilfully permitted the fire to spread over and burn plaintiff's fences, etc., it may be treated as a common-law action for negligence. Roberson v. Morgan, 118 N. C. 991, 24 S. E. 667.

See 23 Cent. Dig. tit. "Fires," § 5. See also Okla. St. (1893) §§ 2902–2909.

Prairie fires.— Parties setting fire to prairies otherwise than in consequence of unavoidable accident, which could not be prevented by proper care, are liable for all property destroyed thereby. Bizzell v. Booker, 16 Ark. 308.

33. Arkansas.— Bizzell v. Booker, 16 Ark. 308.

California.— Garnier v. Porter, 90 Cal. 105, 27 Pac. 55, burning stubble on one's own land.

Under some statutes this liability for an unlawful burning is absolute, irrespective of the question of diligence used to prevent its spreading.[34]

2. Remedies — a. In General. The aggrieved party may seek his remedy either under the statutes or, if in respect to property not within the statute, under the common-law rule, and probably both at the same time in the same action.[35]

b. In Whose Name Action Should Be Brought. An action for the damages sustained must be brought by, or in the name of, the owner of the property damaged,[36] although he need not be the owner of the freehold.[37]

3. Defenses — a. In General. It is no defense to an action for the damages sustained by the fire that defendant had been indicted for the misdemeanor;[38] that plaintiff had already recovered the penalty imposed by the statute;[39] that the property had been insured[40] and plaintiff had been paid his loss by the insurers;[41] or that he had agreed to sue for their benefit, after being indemnified.[42]

b. Under Statutes Requiring Notice of Burning. In actions for damages under statutes requiring notice of the burning, as the failure to give the required notice and damage done confer the right of action, it is no defense that defendant used reasonable care to prevent the spread of the fire.[43] But it is a good defense that the burning was done from necessity;[44] or that plaintiff waived[45] or had the required notice;[46] and it is immaterial so far as plaintiff is concerned that such notice was not given to others.[47]

Iowa.— Brunell v. Hopkins, 42 Iowa 429, kindling fire on a cultivated field.

Missouri.— Russell v. Reagan, 34 Mo. App. 242, holding that under Rev. St. (1879) § 2129, providing that if any person shall "wilfully" set on fire any woods, marshes, or prairies, whether his own or not, so as thereby to occasion any damage to any other person, such person shall be liable in double damages to the party injured, to be recovered in civil action, there is no cause of action against one who in good faith starts a fire on his own land to facilitate the cutting of the timber for making charcoal, because the fire accidentally escapes to another's property.

See 23 Cent. Dig. tit. "Fires," § 5. And see, generally, Negligence.

A fire arising from negligence is not a fire "accidentally begun," within the meaning of 6 Anne, c. 31, § 67, as amended by 14 Geo. III, c. 78, § 76, providing for exemption of liability for fires accidentally begun. Webb v. Rome, etc., R. Co., 49 N. Y. 420, 10 Am. Rep. 389 [affirming 3 Lans. 453].

Fire by servant.— When stubble is fired by a hired servant without his master's knowledge, and neighboring property is thereby injured, neither the servant nor his master, to whom no neglect is imputed in employing him, comes within the terms of a statute making any one convicted of such an offense liable in double damages to the party injured. Boyd v. Rice, 38 Mich. 599.

Unforeseen result.— Mo. Rev. St. § 2129, providing that any person wilfully setting on fire any woods, etc., whether his own or not, shall be liable in double damages to the party injured, has no application where the fire was the unforeseen result of an attempt to burn up log heaps resulting from the clearance of timber land. Kahle v. Hobein, 30 Mo. App. 472.

34. Thus setting fire to prairie land, except between certain dates, renders the one so doing absolutely liable for damages caused by its escape on to the premises of another, regardless of the diligence used to control it. Thoburn v. Campbell, 80 Iowa 338, 45 N. W. 759; Conn v. May, 36 Iowa 241; Dunleavy v. Stockwell, 45 Ill. App. 230.

c. Matters of Justification. Matters of excuse or justification cannot be set up on a general denial; they must be specially pleaded.[48]

4. Evidence[49] — a. Burden of Proof — (I) In General. Plaintiff must prove every material fact necessary to constitute the offense and to connect it with the loss sustained; proving the loss alone is not sufficient.[50] Under some statutes he need only prove that defendant set out the fire causing the injury;[51] and if the latter has any excuse or justification for the act he must prove its existence.[52]

(II) Of Evil Intent. At common law, and, under some statutes, there can be no recovery on a civil action for damages caused by these offenses unless they are shown to have been done wilfully and maliciously, or negligently;[53] but under other statutes the injured party may recover the damages sustained by the burning, irrespective of the wrong-doer's motive.[54]

b. Admissibility of Evidence — (I) In General. The general rules governing the admissibility of evidence in civil cases apply in actions for damages caused by wilfully or maliciously setting fires, etc.[55] Evidence tending to show the malice or intent of defendant is always admissible.[56]

(II) Under Statutes Requiring Notice of Burning. Evidence as to the giving of the statutory notice to persons other than plaintiff is immaterial where the latter has received such notice, and may not be admitted.[57]

c. Sufficiency of Evidence. In order that plaintiff may recover damages sustained, the evidence produced by him must be sufficient to show the offense alleged and the damages sustained thereby.[58]

5. Questions For Jury. Whether defendant did or did not start the fire[59] or whether the land on which the fire was set out still retains the character required by the statute[60] are questions for the jury.

6. Damages[61] — a. In General. As a general rule the measure of damages is the loss which has been actually sustained by plaintiff by reason of the fire,[62]

although under some statutes the recovery of exemplary damages is also provided for.[63]

b. Elements of Damages. The damages recoverable generally include only such as plaintiff by reasonable endeavors and expense could not prevent.[64] But an attorney's fees are not an element of the damages in such cases;[65] nor are voluntary services rendered by plaintiff in putting out the fire.[66]

c. Questions For Jury. Whether defendant has used reasonable endeavors to prevent loss is a question for the jury to determine.[67]

I. NATURE AND PROPERTY IN GENERAL.

A. Meaning of Terms. The term "game" has been defined as birds and beasts of a wild nature obtained by fowling and hunting.[1] Within the meaning of the game laws, however, it refers primarily to game fit for food,[2] although under some statutes it applies also to animals valuable for their fur or otherwise.[3] Within these laws the term "fish" is included in the term "game,"[4] and in itself includes oysters, clams, and other shell-fish.[5]

B. Property in Fish and Game. Fish and game being wild animals, their ownership, so far as they are capable of ownership, is in the state for the benefit of all its people in common, and a private person cannot acquire an exclusive property therein except by taking and reducing them to actual possession,[6] or by a grant from the government.[7] Property in fish, as well swimming as shell-fish, is in the public, until they are taken and reduced to actual possession, in which case absolute property is acquired by the individual so taking them and continues as long as he retains such possession,[8] but subject to be divested if the fish escape or are returned to other waters.[9]

II. RIGHTS OF HUNTING AND FISHING.

But where the change is gradual and by accretion the rights of fishery of the riparian owners on opposite sides of the stream remain the same — that is to the center of the new channel.

This right, however, is subject to regulations by the legislature for the good of the public in general,[24] and is also subject to the qualification that the right of fishery be so used as not to injure other proprietors above and below on the same stream,[25] and subject to an easement in the public to use the stream as a public highway for purposes of transportation and commercial intercourse.[26] He must not by means of dams or other artificial obstructions prevent the passage of fish up and down the stream,[27] nor can a prescriptive right to maintain such obstructions be acquired.[28]

B. On Public Lands and Waters — 1. In General. The right of hunting or fishing on public lands and waters belongs in common to all the members of the public, except in so far as an exclusive right to hunt or fish on a portion of such lands or waters may have been acquired by a private person by grant or prescription.[29]

2. Fishing in Public Waters — a. In General. By the common law all persons have a common and general right of fishing in the sea, and in all other navigable or tidal waters; and no one can maintain an exclusive privilege to any part of such waters unless he has acquired it by grant or prescription,[30] notwithstand-

(II) By Prescription. A prescriptive right of several fishery in navigable or public waters may be acquired by the long, exclusive, and uninterrupted enjoyment of such right.[40] But as this right is based upon the supposition that a previous grant has been made, every presumption is against it and it must be clearly proved.[41] It cannot be presumed where a prior grant could not have been made;[42] nor can it be presumed from the mere uninterrupted use and enjoyment of such right in common with others; but it must appear that all others have been kept out by the claimant and his grantors from fishing in the particular place in any manner.[43]

The designation of a natural oyster bed is void and cannot affect the right of the public to take oysters on such grounds (Cook v. Raymond, 66 Conn. 285, 33 Atl. 1006), and the fact that the ground designated was at the time of designation a natural oyster bed may be proved by parol (Cook v. Raymond, supra; Averill v. Hull, 37 Conn. 320).

Unoccupied ground is open to location to him who first applies for it in the manner provided by statute (Coleman v. Claytor, 93 Va. 20, 24 S. E. 463); and the mere fact that other parties had previously rented the ground under a former statute gives them no superior claim thereto over other applicants who have complied with the statute (Coleman v. Claytor, 93 Va. 20, 24 S. E. 463; Abrams v. Johnson, 10 N. Y. St. 371; Housman v. Weir, 15 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Evidence of natural oyster bed.— That oysters grow naturally at a certain place and have existed there beyond memory in great abundance and have been openly and constantly taken by the public is very high, if not conclusive, evidence that the place is a natural oyster bed. Allotment by town committee, selectmen, etc. State v. Bassett, 64 Conn. 217, 29 Atl. 471; Abrams v. Johnson, 10 N. Y. St. 371. It is not necessary that the members of a committee appointed by a town for staking out oyster grounds should be notified to meet, or should meet together, before acting. Gallup v. Tracy, 25 Conn. 10. Where a committee appointed by a town to stake out oyster grounds consists of four members, and one of them, with the consent of two others, staked out ground and planted oysters thereon for himself, such proceeding was valid, since the committee might act by a majority of those qualified to act in a given instance. Negligently dumping a scow load of mud on an oyster bed is ground for an action of trespass, and evidence that defendant obeyed a dumping inspector's direction is immaterial. Palmer v. Hartford Dredging Co., 73 Conn. 182, 47 Atl. 125, holding also that the measure of damages in such case may be the value per bushel of the oysters killed.

Injury incident to navigation.— A lawful digging or dredging for the purpose of improving the channel does not give rise to an action of trespass for consequential damages to an oyster bed. Lane v. Smith, 71 Conn. 65, 41 Atl. 18. See Richardson v. U. S., 100 Fed. 714.

interference with his oyster beds,[82] even though the interference or obstruction amounts to a public nuisance or other misdemeanor.[83] But an injunction will not issue to restrain interference with the public right of fishery, unless plaintiff shows special injuries to himself.[84] The attorney-general may proceed without the intervention of a private relator to enjoin the unlawful destruction of fish.[85]

3. Other Remedies. A bill to quiet possession may be maintained by one who has been in possession of a fishery for a considerable length of time and claims a sole right to it, although he has not established his right at law;[86] but ejectment will not lie to recover a right of fishery.[87] An action of unlawful detainer may be maintained against a party who enters upon and holds oyster beds allotted to and staked off by another.[88]

E. Whale Fisheries. A whale not being the product of human care or labor does not of itself purport to be property,[89] but, by usage peculiar to whale fishery, property in a whale generally belongs to the ship from which the first iron is placed, whether attached to the boat or not,[90] although the actual killing is by the crew of another vessel or they take part therein.[91] Any one taking such whale while it still has marks of appropriation on it is guilty of conversion,[92] and liable to the owner thereof for full indemnity.[93] A usage in the whaling business

Fast and loose rule.— By the custom of the Greenland whale fishery a whale does not become appropriated by merely being harpooned. It is necessary that the line should remain attached to the boat and that the whale should be fastened or entangled therein. If the line gets detached, the whale becomes a loose fish and is the lawful prey of any one who captures and secures it, unless the whale's becoming loose was caused by the interference of the second captor. F. Town Fisheries. In the absence of statute, the right of fishery in navigable waters within the limits of a municipal corporation belongs to the public, and the corporation as such can exercise no control over it;[95] and where two towns adjoin a navigable river, the citizens of each may take the fish swimming therein.[96] But power to regulate and control fisheries within its limits has generally been given to such towns by patent or grant,[97] or by an act of the legislature.[98] Under such grants or acts the right of fishing in waters within the limits

The measure of damages for the conversion of a whale at sea is the value of the oil and bone at the home port, less the expense of cutting and boiling, freight, and insurance, with interest. State v. Hoofman, 9 Md. 28.

Construction of compact of 1783 between New Jersey and Pennsylvania see Bennett v. Boggs, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1,319, Baldw. 60. The right of fishing in the Delaware river, by that compact, belongs to riparian owners on such river, subject to rights of navigation. Atty.-Gen. v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., 27 N. J. Eq. 1.

3. See Roberts v. Fullerton, 117 Wis. 222, 93 N. W. 1111, 65 L. R. A. 953, holding that the term "concurrent jurisdiction on the water," in the acts of congress admitting the states of Minnesota and Wisconsin to the Union, and referring to the Mississippi river, must be restrained to the ordinary meaning thereof at the time the term came into use in the legislative enactments of the country, and does not empower one state to regulate the individual enjoyment by people of another state, within its boundaries, of property held in trust by such other state for the people within its limits, such as the public water and the fish and the game that inhabit the same.

The states of Oregon and Washington own the bed of the Columbia river from their respective sides to the middle of the channel, and the citizens of each state within such boundary have a common right of fishing, so long as the navigation in the river does not obstruct it. This right is not a mere privilege or immunity of citizenship but a right of citizenship and property combined which each state may make exclusive in its citizens, and which is not subject to control or regulation by the other, unless there is a mutual agreement to that end. In re Mattson, 69 Fed. 535.

2. Seal and Other Fur Fisheries. Seal and other fur fisheries in waters within the Alaskan territory are regulated by the treaty of arbitration between the United States and Great Britain, and by statutes enacted to give effect thereto,[6] under which it is unlawful to kill fur seals anywhere within certain boundaries, and vessels, their cargoes, implements, etc., found within such boundaries engaged in that business are subject to seizure and condemnation as forfeited to the United States.[7] Under such acts the United States has leased sealing privileges in the Alaskan waters.[8] But by the award of arbitrators under the Treaty of Arbitration between the United States and Great Britain, the jurisdiction of the United States in waters of the Alaskan territory does not extend outside of the ordinary three-mile limit; and therefore acts of congress which forbid the killing of fur-bearing animals in Alaska and waters thereof must be construed to mean the waters within three miles of the shores of Alaska.[9]

III. Protection and Regulation.

A. Power to Protect and Regulate. It is well established that by reason of the state's control over fish and game within its limits, it is within the police power of the state legislature, subject to constitutional restrictions, to enact such general or special laws as may be reasonably necessary for the protection and regulation of the public's right in such fish and game, even to the extent of

Ct. 271] (holding an American vessel guilty of illegal fishing within the meaning of the treaty of 1818, and Imperial Act 59 Geo. III, and also under Can. Rev. St. c. 94); The Grace, 4 Can. Forfeitures under Act of April 6, 1894, do not depend upon the intent of the owners of the vessel nor her equipage, and therefore the instruments forming part of her equipage, although belonging to others than her owners, are forfeited. The James G. Swan, 77 Fed. 473. On such forfeiture the crew are not entitled to share in the proceeds of a sale to the extent of their wages (The James G. Swan, supra); nor are sealskins, forming a part of the cargo which were taken outside of the prohibited limits and before any violation of the act, subject to forfeiture (The James G. Swan, supra).

Presumption of violation.— If a vessel equipped for sealing is found within the prohibited zone, it is presumed that she and her equipment were being used in violation of the act, until otherwise proved; and the fact that such a vessel is near the prohibited zone would put her master upon the alert to keep a full and accurate record of his positions, courses, etc., that he may not pass the line and that by his records and charts he may be able if called upon to demonstrate clearly that he was not within the prohibited area. Exch. 1; Reg. v. The Ship Minnie, 4 Can. Exch. 151 [affirmed in 23 Can. Sup. Ct. 478].

Wrongful arrest.— Where a vessel so seized is found to be innocent of any offense against the Bering Sea Award Act (1894), it has been held that the courts may award damages for the wrongful seizure and detention together with interest upon ascertaining the amount of such damages. Reg. v. The Ship Beatrice, 5 Can. Exch. 160. But where the circumstances under which the arrest was made created sufficient suspicion to warrant the arrest no costs will be given against the government in dismissing the petition. B. Specific Regulations and Offenses — 1. In General. Statutes may be enacted regulating the time and manner of taking fish or game, and making it an offense to violate these regulations,[12] including fishing in the sea,[13] although the national government also has jurisdiction over such waters.[14] The state may grant the exclusive right of hunting or fishing in certain places so far as it does not impair vested rights,[15] or confer an exclusive right of fishing or hunting upon its citizens to the exclusion of non-residents,[16] and may impose greater restrictions and higher penalties on non-residents who violate its game laws than on residents.[17] It may also exempt certain waters from the operation of its fish laws.[18]

Suppl. 195 (construing Laws (1901), c. 91, § 30, providing a close-season for certain birds).

Rhode Island.—State v. Stone, 20 R. I. 269, 38 Atl. 654, construing Gen. Laws, c. 112, § 4, making it an offense for any person to have in his possession any ruffled grouse between certain dates.

Texas.— Dickinson v. State, 38 Tex. Cr. 472, 41 S. W. 759, 43 S. W. 520, construing the act of 1893, amending previous statutes in respect to the killing of deer.

A contract for the cold storage of game during the close-season to be withdrawn during the open season when the game could be lawfully disposed of is void, under a statute making it a misdemeanor to have such game in possession during the close-season. Haggerty v. St. Louis Ice Mfg., etc., Co., 143 Mo. 238, 44 S. W. 1114, 65 Am. St. Rep. 647, 40 L. R. A. 151.

Eels are included in the words "every kind of fish known as river fish" in a statute. Woodhouse v. Etheridge, L. R. 6 C. P. 570, 24 L. T. Rep. N. S. 709.

Class legislation.— An act regulating the catching of fish in the waters of the state is not void as class legislation because the close-season is shorter in the waters adjoining a particular county than elsewhere. Osborn v. Charlevoix Cir. Judge, 114 Mich. 655, 72 N. W. 982.

Protection of property.— A statute prohibiting the destruction of certain fur-bearing animals is not applicable to cases in which such destruction is necessary for the protecyears,[20] and as to some game, at any time,[21] without a license.[22] Statutes have also been enacted and held constitutional in some jurisdictions making it an offense to sell, offer for sale, or to have in possession for sale certain fish and game during the close-season,[23] or as to some game at any time;[24] and these statutes have been held to apply, although such fish and game were acquired tion of property. Aldrich v. Wright, 53 N. H. 398, 16 Am. Rep. 339.

Following a moose in a forest until it becomes snow-bound and then capturing it during close-time is a violation of a statute prohibiting hunting, killing, or destroying a moose during that time. James v. Wood, 82 Me. 173, 19 Atl. 160, 8 L. R. A. 448.

A common carrier having prohibited game in packages in its possession, not knowing or having reason to know that the packages contained prohibited game, is not liable to a penalty ordinarily attaching to one having possession of such game during the close-season. Private parks.— The posted notices required by N. Y. Laws (1892), c. 488, §§ 212, 213, 214, of a person desiring to devote lands or lands and water to the propagation of fish or game, must contain not simply a notice warning all persons from trespassing upon the land, but must also state that the premises will he used as a private park for the purpose of propagating and protecting fish, birds, and game, and that trespassing is forbidden. People v. Hall, 8 N. Y. App. Div. 15, 40 N. Y. Suppl. 183. Evidence that a pond had been stocked with carp about five years before, but specifying no quantity, is insufficient to show that certain lands and water were devoted to such purposes. People v. Hall, supra.

Pleading and proof.— An action for such trespass may be brought by the owner of the land, although the land is occupied by a tenant (Parmenter v. Caswell, 53 Vt. 6); or by the owner of the right to shoot, although not the owner of the fee (Payne v. Sheets, 75 Vt. 335, 55 Atl. 656). A complaint for such a trespass need not be brought at the request of the owner of the land (State v. Turner, 60 Conn. 222, 22 Atl. 542); nor does it affect the case that the persons described in the complaint as owners of land had leased the right of fishing in the stream to certain parties; nor that certain facts made it doubtful to defendant whether certain signs forbidding fishing were placed along the stream in good faith by parties who have a right to fish there (State v. Turner, supra).

Knowledge by defendant that his act was unlawful is immaterial, and evidence thereof will be excluded. State v. Turner, 60 Conn. 222, 22 Atl. 542.

C. Repeal of Statutes. Whether or not a particular statute regulating fish and game is repealed by a later statute is of course governed by the general rules regulating the repeal of statutes in other cases.[67]

D. Licenses.[68] It is an offense under some statutes for any person excepting an owner of land[69] to hunt particular game or by particular methods, as by blinds or traps,[70] or to fish in certain waters,[71] by particular methods such as by nets, traps, etc.,[72] without obtaining a license therefor from the proper authorities.

Some statutes also require the licensee to perform certain acts in pursuance of his license before he can claim an exclusive right to hunt or fish at a particular spot, such as locating in the prescribed manner his place of fishing[73] or hunting.[74] It is also unlawful to deal in fish or game without a license under some statutes.[75] Persons engaged in packing or canning oysters may be required to take out a license and to pay a tax based upon the amount of oysters packed.[76]

E. Fish and Game Wardens and Other Officers. Most fish and game laws provide for the appointment of special commissioners, committees, wardens,

A license to fish with "a rod and line" is not a general license, enabling the holder to fish with more than one rod and line at the same time (Combridge v. Harrison, 59 J. P. 198, 64 L. J. M. C. 175, 15 Reports 327, 72 L. T. Rep. N. S. 592); nor does it include a night line (Williams v. Long, 57 J. P. 217).

A set-net license, under the Washington statute, is lost by substituting for it a location under an expired pound-net license, even though the owner did not know that the latter had expired. Gerhard v. Worrell, 20 Wash. 492, 55 Pac. 625.

Roving license.— A license to fish granted under Wash. Laws (1893), p. 15, constitutes a roving license to fish anywhere in the specified waters, with the limitation that the licensee shall keep a certain distance from other appliances. Walker v. Stone, 17 Wash. 578, 60 Pac. 488; Morris v. Graham, 16 Wash. 343, 47 Pac. 752, 58 Am. St. Rep. 33; State v. Crawford, 14 Wash. 373, 44 Pac. 876. An applicant under such statute is entitled to a license for one year from the date of his application. State v. Crawford, 14 Wash. 373, 44 Pac. 876.

A license to a corporation, a majority of the capital stock of which is held by nonresidents of the state, is not in violation of the constitutional provision forbidding the acquisition of lands in the state of a foreign corporation. Hastings v. Anacortes Packing Co., 29 Wash. 224, 69 Pac. 776.

Assignment of license.— Under Wash. Laws (1897), p. 215, § 3, making it a misdemeanor to assign a fishing license without notice to the fish commissioner, a transfer without giving such notice confers no right on the assignee. Gerhard v. Worrell, 20 Wash. 492, 55 Pac. 625.

73. Fidalgo Island Canning Co. v. Womer, 29 Wash. 503, 69 Pac. 1121 (construing Laws (1899), pp. 194–197, § 4); Point Roberts Fishing Co. v. George, etc., Co., 28 Wash. 200, 68 Pac. 438; Elwood v. Dickinson, 26 Wash. 631, 67 Pac. 370 (construing Laws (1899), p. 203, § 9); Legoe v. Chicago Fishing Co., 24 Wash. 175, 64 Pac. 141.

Under the Washington statutes a valid fishing location cannot be made on ground already occupied by another under a valid location, and if such a location is invalid at the time it was attempted to be made, because of a prior location, it will not ripen into a valid location at the expiration of a prior license, nor by its abandonment (White Crest Canning Co. v. Sims, 30 Wash. 374, 70 Pac. 1003; Womer v. O'Brien, (Wash. 1905) 79 Pac. 474); but where a fishing location is abandoned the same territory is open to location by others (White Crest Canning Co. v. Sims, 30 Wash. 374, 70 Pac. 1003). The failure of a locator to construct his appliance during the fishing season covered by his license constitutes an abandonment (Legoe v. Chicago Fishing Co., 24 Wash. 175, 64 Pac. 141; Womer v. O'Brien, (Wash. 1905) 79 Pac. 474, holding, however, that a fishery location cannot be held to have been abandoned at any time prior to the expiration of the season merely because of the locator's failure to construct his appliances up to the time when the abandonment is claimed); but this does not disqualify him from relocating the same site a following season (De Mers v. Sandy Spit Fish Co., 24 Wash. 582, 64 Pac. 799; Legoe v. Chicago Fishing Co., supra). One licensee may enjoin a subsequent licensee from constructing his nets too near the former's appliances in violation of such statutes. Fidalgo Island Canning Co. v. Womer, 29 Wash. 503, 69 Pac. 1121; Walker v. Stone, 17 Wash. 578, 50 Pac. 488.

In a controversy over a fishing site alleged to have been located by both parties under the law forbidding any one person from operating more than three of such sites, an allegation that defendant operated more than three sites was insufficient to authorize the admission of evidence to show that any particular site was being unlawfully operated; an allegation of the particular location claimed to be unlawful being necessary to raise such issue. F. Penalties — 1. In General. Penalties imposed for violations of the fish and game laws are regulated by such laws,[88] which must not violate constitutional provisions against excessive fines and punishment.[89] These statutes usually provide for a specified fine or imprisonment or both;[90] or for the seizure and sale of vessels or appliances used in violation of such laws.[91] Before a penalty can be recovered there must be a strict compliance with all the duties enjoined upon those claiming it.[92]

2. Who May Recover Penalties. Under some statutes an action or prosecution to recover a penalty for a violation of the fish and game laws may be brought by any common informer in his own name,[93] or by the district attorney at the instance of the fish and game warden or other officer or committee;[94] but under other statutes it can be instituted only by such officer or committee.[95] A violation which is merely a matter between the state and the guilty parties can be prosecuted by the state alone.[96]

3. DEFENSES. It is no defense to an action to recover a penalty under the fish and game laws that searches and seizures of forfeited property under such laws were not made in the manner prescribed thereby,[97] that defendant acted bona fide as gamekeeper under a person having no authority to appoint him,[98] or that there has been a criminal prosecution for the same offense.[99] But one penalty, however, can be recovered for the same offense,[1] and where several join in committing it a recovery and satisfaction against one of the offenders is a good bar to an action brought against the other;[2] but if they were acting severally, each on his own account, they would be severally liable for the penalty.[3]

4. REMEDIES.[4] The proper remedy for recovering penalties under the various fish and game laws is a qui tam action at the instance of an informer,[5] an action of debt,[6] a summary proceeding,[7] and in some jurisdictions by indictment[8] or complaint.[9]

The declaration or complaint should charge the offense substantially in the terms of the statute imposing the penalty.[10] It must also show that the person seeking to maintain the action is clearly within the provision of the statute,[11] and must comply with the rules against duplicity.[12] But it need not allege to whom the penalty is to go.[13]

6. Evidence. Plaintiff or prosecutor must show every fact necessary to constitute the offense,[14] and which has been alleged.[15] But where possession of prohibited fish and game during the close-season is once shown, it is, under some statutes, prima facie proof of a violation of the statute, and casts upon the possessor the burden of showing that his possession is lawful.[16]

7. Verdict and Judgment. The verdict must be in accordance with the evidence[17] and allegations.[18] Under some statutes costs in favor of defendant in such actions must be awarded against the state.[19] The judgment for such penalty can be enforced by execution against the person of defendant.[20]

8. Disposition of Proceeds. It is usually provided that the penalties recovered shall be paid over to certain commissioners or officers,[21] and the proceeds thereof

Ct. 206), or who improperly seizes a quantity of fish illegally caught (O'Brien v. Miller, 29 N. Brunsw. 114).

Liberating game unlawfully taken by an officer without a proper warrant interferes

A vessel engaged in illegal fishing may be searched and after proper proceedings be declared forfeited and destroyed or sold,[26] at any time after the illegal transaction,[27] although the owner is not implicated in the offense, and the vessel is so employed without his knowledge or consent.[28]

H. Criminal Prosecutions — 1. In General. Prosecutions for violation of fish and game laws must be in accord with the statutes prescribing the offenses.[29] The person or officer indicated by these statutes must institute the proceedings.[30] Where not indictable these offenses are usually triable before a magistrate as other misdemeanors,[31] and are sometimes rendered indictable by a refusal to pay the penalty assessed by him.[32] Parties concurring in a violation of statute may be prosecuted together.[33]

2. Indictment, Information, or Complaint.[34] A complaint or indictment in the Allegations that an act was unlawful, the statute making it so, are unnecessary (State v. Skolfield, 86 Me. 149, 29 Atl. 922), espe-

direct,[40] and not in the alternative.[41] The time and place of the offense must be laid with the certainty necessary in other offenses,[42] and where the offense is of local character it must be proved as laid, although the description as to place is unnecessarily minute.[43] A specific allegation of the manner of commission of the offense[44] or of ownership[45] must be proved as laid. Separate offenses in the statute are properly alleged in separate counts.[46] A complaint or indictment is not duplicitous where the acts charged constitute but one offense,[47] or where acts tending to charge a separate offense may be rejected as surplusage.[48] Where the statute makes various acts enumerated in the alternative punishable, they may be charged conjunctively.[49]

"Maliciously" is not an essential averment where malice is not made an element of the offense by the statute. State v. Tibbetts, 86 Me. 189, 29 Atl. 979.

40. Underwood v. State, 19 Ala. 532; Ex p. Peterson, 119 Cal. 578, 51 Pac. 859 (holding bad a complaint which, while alleging use of a gun of prohibited caliber, did not allege its use for killing game); State v. Dunning, 83 Me. 178, 22 Atl. 109 (holding an averment that defendant had in his possession certain lobsters "being less than ten and one-half inches long" was sufficient, although in a participial form, and holding also that an averment that he "did catch" certain lobsters showed they were alive when caught); State v. Trefethen, (1887) 8 Atl. 547; State v. Bennett, 79 Me. 55, 7 Atl. 903. But see People v. Haagen, 139 Cal. 115, 72 Pac. 836, holding the omission of the word "did" in a charge of having possession of salmon immaterial. Compare People v. Hannah, 92 Hun (N. Y.) 476, 37 N. Y. Suppl. 702, holding an averment of belief that certain undescribed offenses had been committed insufficient to confer jurisdiction, so that a witness could not be charged with contempt on refusal to testify.

41. Venturio v. State, 37 Tex. Cr. 653, 40 S. W. 974, holding that an information charging the catching of fish or terrapin or both fish and terrapin in a drag-seine or set net is fatally defective.

42. Kansas.— State v. Stunkle, 41 Kan. 456, 21 Pac. 675, holding sufficient a description of a dam as located at a certain mill in a certain county and state.

Maine.— State v. Cottle, 70 Me. 198, holding an averment of an attempt to take fish "in the Penobscot river between the Bucksport R. R. Bridge and the waterworks dam" insufficient to show that the act was in an unlawful place.

Michigan.—People v. Van Maren, 126 Mich. 103, 85 N. W. 240, holding that, although venue was laid in a certain township, the offense might be shown to have been committed anywhere in the county.

Mississippi.— Conrad v. State, 80 Miss. 229, 31 So. 709, holding it unnecessary to locate by headlands or otherwise the specified place of oyster dredging.

New Jersey.— State v. Nelson, 65 N. J. L. 500, 47 Atl. 500, holding that where a line was located as a matter of fact, it was not material that it was alleged to have been located by statute.

See 24 Cent. Dig. tit. "Game," § 28.

Reference to a preceding count may suffice as an averment of time and place. Jones v. State, 68 Md. 613, 13 Atl. 381.

44. Gill v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1903) 76 S. W. 575, holding that where it was specifically charged that the offense was committed by exploding dynamite in the water, a conviction cannot be sustained in the absence of definite evidence that the substance exploded was dynamite.

48. State v. Thomas, 90 Me. 223, 38 Atl. 144; State v. Adams, 78 Me. 486, 7 Atl. 267.

The complaint may be sustained for the offense adequately charged. Com. v. Bell, 30 S. W. 997, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 277. And see State v. Whitten, 90 Me. 53, 37 Atl. 331, holding that an averment that a trout weighed "four and one-half" was not sufficient to aver any weight and that a fine would be imposed without any additional penalty to be assessed according to weight.

49. Keoun v. State, 64 Ark. 231, 41 S. W. 808, holding that under a statute making it unlawful for any person with intent to kill or paralyze any fish to deposit in any water any explosive material or stupefying liquid, or to take from any water any fish so stupefied or killed, an indictment is not bad for duplicity which charges that defendant put dynamite in a certain lake with intent to kill fish therein, and took from said waters fish that had been so killed.

4. TRIAL — a. Instructions.[52] The necessity and propriety of instructions are governed by the same rules as in other criminal prosecutions.[53]

b. Verdict and Findings.[54] In the absence of a necessity for special find-

N. W. 647 (holding that in a prosecution for having possession of wild ducks with intent to sell them, contrary to statute, where it appeared that a number of ducks were found in the possession of defendant while he was hauling them from a certain ice-house to a railway station, evidence that on a preceding evening he had driven a team to an adjacent lake, and there loaded a vehicle with a number of sacks, which were filled and tied up, and afterward taken to the ice-house in question and unloaded there, was competent); People v. Decker, 10 N. Y. Suppl. 676 (holding that the admission of expert testimony to show that defendant's rakes were such as would disturb planted oysters was not prejudicial to defendant when he himself admitted that his rakes, if overboard when he was sailing over the bed, would have disturbed the oysters).

Burden of proof.— The state in a prosecution for selling "a wild deer" during the prohibited season must show affirmatively that the animal was "wild." Crosby v. State, 121 Ga. 198, 48 S. E. 913. The burden is on the accused to show that his possession of a game bird out of season is consistent with a lawful taking. State v. Stone, 20 R. I. 559, 40 Atl. 499. But see State v. Lynch, 89 Me. 209, 36 Atl. 69, holding that possession of but one moose during the whole of one open season is not sufficient evidence of its illegal capture to throw the burden of explaining such possession on defendant.

Public statutes.— In a defense to a criminal prosecution for taking oysters from a place which has been designated to private parties, the only evidence that such place is a natural oyster bed, a grant of which would be invalid, is that it is embraced in the locations and descriptions contained in the statute enumerating the natural oyster beds under the jurisdiction of the state. State v. Nash, 62 Conn. 47, 25 Atl. 451.

Sufficiency of evidence.— See the following cases in which the sufficiency of evidence to establish particular offenses is considered.

Maine.— State v. Murray, 84 Me. 135, 24 Atl. 789, holding that evidence that a seine was large enough to take in six hundred or seven hundred barrels of fish at one haul is sufficient proof that it was of more than one hundred meshes, under an indictment for taking fish with such a net.

Massachusetts.— Com. v. Eliot, 146 Mass. 5, 15 N. E. 81 (abandonment of leased pond); Com. v. Pease, 137 Mass. 576 (seining for bluefish).

Minnesota.— State v. Poole, 93 Minn. 148, 100 N. W. 647.

New York.— People v. Tanner, 128 N. Y. 416, 28 N. E. 364 [affirming 14 N. Y. Suppl. 334] (holding that testimony by a number of witnesses that they had frequently fished in a designated creek for a long series of years, and that they had never caught any bass, or seen any that were caught therein, is sufficient to support a finding by the jury that such creek was not inhabited by bass, although a witness for the state testified that he had on one occasion caught black or Oswego bass in the creek); People v. Decker, 57 Hun 591, 10 N. Y. Suppl. 676 (unlawful disturbance of oysters of another); People v. Lowndes, 55 Hun 469, 8 N. Y. Suppl. 908 (holding that several grants from the state to a town and the testimony of witnesses that a bay was within the description of the grants was sufficient proof of the title of the town to such bay in an indictment for illegal planting of oysters therein).

England.— Hall v. Knox, 4 B. & S. 515, 33 L. J. M. C. 1, 9 L. T. Rep. N. S. 380, 12 Wkly. Rep. 103, 116 E. C. L. 515; Evans v. Botterill, 3 B. & S. 787, 10 Jur. N. S. 311, 33 L. J. M. C. 50, 8 L. T. Rep. N. S. 272, 11 Wkly. Rep. 621 (unlawfully going on land in pursuit of game); Brown v. Turner, 13 C. B. N. S. 485, 9 Jur. N. S. 850, 32 L. J. M. C. 106, 7 L. T. Rep. N. S. 681, 11 Wkly. Rep. 290 (unlawful possession of game); Vance v. Frost, 58 J. P. 398 (using fixed engine for catching salmon); Lawley v. Mericks, 51 J. P. 502 (aiding persons unknown, who unlawfully went on land in pursuit of game); Jones v. Dicker, 22 L. T. Rep. N. S. 95 (obtaining game by unlawfully going on land in search thereof); Rex v. Davis, 6 T. R. 177 (killing game with gun).

52. Instructions generally see CRIMINAL LAW, 12 Cyc. 611.

53. Com. v. Young, 165 Mass. 396, 43 N. E. 118 (holding that on trial of one for having in his possession lobsters less than ten and one-half inches in length, in violation of statute, it was proper to refuse to instruct that the possession of the lobsters showed no more than temporary custody of another's property, where the agreed facts would support a finding that they were in defendant's possession as owner); State v. Lee, 70 N. J. L. 368, 57 Atl. 142 [affirmed in (Err. & App. 1905) 59 Atl. 1118] (holding that when a defendant is on trial for doing certain physical acts with a certain purpose, and the acts charged point indubitably to that purpose, it is not reversible error for the trial judge, in charging the jury, to refer to proof of the acts as sufficient proof of guilt, without expressly referring to the purpose, there being no request or suggestion on behalf of defendant that the purpose should be more particularly mentioned).

Questions of fact, such as whether a defendant was in the business of guiding, must be left to the jury. State v. Snowman, 94 Me. 99, 46 Atl. 815, 80 Am. St. Rep. 380, 50 L. R. A. 544.

54. Verdict in general see CRIMINAL LAW, 12 Cyc. 686.

ings the verdict may be general.[55] Special findings are not conclusive unless responsive.[56]

5. PUNISHMENT. The punishment of violations of fish and game laws is prescribed by the statutes creating the offenses, although defendant may be committed until payment of a fine as in other prosecutions.[57]

6. REVIEW.[58] An appeal usually lies as from other summary convictions.[59] On an appeal from a conviction of unlawful possession of game it will not be determined whether a seizure of such game was lawful.[60]

FISHING-BANKS. A fishing ground of comparatively shoal water in the sea.[1]

FISHING BILL. A bill in which plaintiff shows no cause of action, and endeavors to compel defendant to disclose one in plaintiff's favor.[2] (See, generally, DISCOVERY; EQUITY.)

FISHING-PLACE. As defined by statute, the place or places where seines or nets have been usually thrown into the water to the place or places where they have been usually taken out, or from the place or places where they may be hereafter thrown into the water to the place or places where they may be taken out.[3]

FISSURE. A narrow opening made by the parting of any substance; a cleft.[4] (See DIP; and, generally, MINES AND MINERALS.)

FISSURE VEIN. In mining parlance, a longitudinal opening with a foreign substance in it.[5] (See, generally, MINES AND MINERALS.)

55. Dean v. State, 98 Md. 80, 56 Atl. 481, holding that under the oyster law providing that a fine of twenty-five dollars shall be imposed for having in possession unmerchantable oysters, and in addition to that the sum of six cents per bushel for each additional one per cent of unmerchantable oysters, it is not necessary, in a prosecution under the law, for the jury to find the quantity of cargo nor the percentage of unmerchantable oysters it contains, a verdict of guilty being sufficiently certain.

56. State v. Gilmore, 141 Mo. 506, 42 S. W. 817, holding that for failure to construct fish chutes in a mill-dam, an answer by the jury to an interrogatory as to whether passage of fish was obstructed that there was "no injury to fish of passage," was not responsive and hence not conclusive on the question of obstruction.

57. Dean v. State, 98 Md. 80, 56 Atl. 481, holding that, although the oyster law provides merely for a fine for having in possession unmerchantable oysters, nevertheless, under Code Pub. Gen. Laws, art. 38, § 1, declaring that whenever any fine or penalty is imposed by any act of assembly for doing any forbidden act, the person shall be sentenced to the fine or penalty and costs, and in default of payment be committed to jail, etc., the court is authorized to sentence a person convicted of a violation of the oyster law to stand committed until the fine imposed is paid.

Payment and enforcement of fine see FINES, ante, p. 543.

I. INTRODUCTION AND DEFINITION.

Tangible property is either real or personal.[1] The former is land; the latter is all other tangible property. The law of fixtures deals with property whose status as realty or personalty is indeterminate until the proof of certain facts and the application of certain rules of law. When the status is thus determined, tangible property must be either real or personal.[2] Fixtures then may be defined as tangible property whose status as realty or personalty is indeterminate. According as certain facts shall appear its status will become determinate and it will fall into one or the other category.[3]

The term is used with various significations, but it is always applied to articles of a personal nature which have been affixed to land. Ferard Fixt. (2d Am. ed.) 1; Grady Fixt. 1. "The name of fixtures is also sometimes applied to things expressly to denote that they cannot legally be removed; as where they have been annexed to a house, etc., and the party who has affixed them is not at liberty afterwards to sever and take them away. There is, however, another sense in which the term fixtures is very frequently used, and which it is thought expedient to adopt in the following treatise, viz: as denoting those personal chattels which have been annexed to land, and which may be afterwards severed and removed by the party who has annexed them, or his personal representative, against the will of the owner of the freehold." Ferard Fixt. (2d Am. ed.) 1, 2.

The status of personal chattels which have been annexed to the freehold but which are removable at the will of the person who annexed them is, after annexation, realty, the title to which is in the owner of the realty, and in place of his former interest in the chattel as a chattel the former owner has the right to remove, to effect which he has a license irrevocable until determined by different events. Thus in speaking of fixtures as between landlord and tenant, it has been said: "The right between landlord and tenant does not altogether depend upon this principle, that the articles continue in the state of chattels; many of these articles, though originally goods and chattels, yet when affixed by a tenant to the freehold, cease to be goods and chattels by becoming part of the freehold; and though it is in his power to reduce them to the state of goods and chattels again by severing them during his term, yet until they are severed, they are a part of the freehold. . . . And unless the lessee uses during the term his continuing privilege to sever them, he cannot afterwards do it." Lee v. Risdon, 2 Marsh. 495, 7 Taunt. 188, 191, 17 Rev. Rep. 484, 2 E. C. II. ANNEXATION.

A. Tests in General. It is an ancient maxim of the common law that what is affixed to land becomes part of the land.[4] In the matter of "fixtures," so called, it is difficult to say with precision what degree of annexation is sufficient to work the change from personalty to realty. In some cases the courts have said as a matter of law that certain articles, although fastened to the realty, are not part of it,[5] while on the other hand articles may be so incorporated with the realty that the courts will say as a matter of law that they are fixtures;[6] but as physical annexation of a chattel alone is not always necessary to its becoming part of the realty, and as physical annexation alone does not necessarily make a chattel realty, but in either case other circumstances may combine to prevent the one or the other, it is believed that the true rule is that articles not otherwise attached to realty than by their own weight are prima facie personalty, and articles affixed to land in fact, although only slightly, are prima facie realty, and that the burden of proof is on the one contending that the former is realty or that the latter is personalty.[7] This principle has been extended in a few cases violence and injury to the freehold; and, if it be so annexed, it is a fixture, whether the annexation be for use, for ornament or from mere caprice." Providence Gas Co. v. Thurber, 2 R. I. 15, 22, 55 Am. Dec. 621, per Greene, C. J.

"Tenants' fixtures" in its strict legal definition signifies those things which are fixed to the freehold of the demised premises, but which nevertheless the tenant is allowed to disannex and take away, provided that he seasonably exerts his right to do so. so far as to include buildings erected on the land of another. Even in this case these additions have been held to be only prima facie part of the realty, the presumption being rebuttable by evidence of an agreement that they were to remain personalty.[8] The early theory was that physical annexation was essential to constitute a fixture.[9] This was the test and the sole test in the earlier cases, because in those cases the question was as to whether the fixture could be taken by distraint or whether severance had constituted waste.[10] Other and later authorities held that use or purpose or adaptability was the test, and that constructive annexation followed as a consequence. In these cases generally the question was not as to severability or as to waste, but whether the fixture passed with the land.[11] In a leading American case the conclusion was reached that there is no one test, but that whether a chattel has become part of the freehold requires the united application of the following elements: (1) Actual annexation to the realty, or something appurtenant thereto. (2) Appropriation to the use or purpose of that part of the realty with which it is connected. (3) The intention of the party making the annexation to make the article a permanent accession to the freehold — this intention being inferred from the nature of the article affixed, the relation and situation of the party making the annexation, the structure and mode of annexation, and the purpose or use for which the annexation has been made;[12] and this doctrine has been repeatedly accepted by succeeding authorities.[13] Still another view is that the manner and extent of physical annexation is an uncertain and unsatisfactory criterion, and that special prominence should be given to the intention of the party making the annexation.[14] In referring to the elements of the test of what is a fixture some courts say that all should be united, that they should not be alternative but concurrent.[15] Again, alone or in connection with tests already referred to, we find the more general proposition affirmed that whether an article is a fixture or part of the realty is a question of fact to be determined from a consideration of all the facts and circumstances.[16] It is a mixed question of law and fact whether a chattel has become part of the realty.[17] It is submitted that from a consideration of the cases no more specific formula is possible. It is the effort to compress the tests of whether there has been such annexation as will change the status of the thing in question into a compact and specific formula that has rendered inevitable the contradictions in the decisions.[18] In view of the difficulties of discovering a general test of what is such an annexation as will change a chattel into realty, the simplest plan is to start with the proposition that whatever is attached to realty only by weight or juxtaposition is presumed to be personalty, and that whatever is attached to the realty in fact, although only slightly, is presumed to be realty,[19] and to inquire what facts may be shown to rebut these presumptions. These facts relate to two principal matters, viz., the act of annexation, and the parties concerned. The former concerns the degree of annexation,[20] the adaptability of the article to the realty,[21] and the intention with which the annexation was done.[22] The latter concerns the relation of the interested parties to the realty and to the chattel.[23]

18. The efforts to formulate the test of what shall constitute annexation generally take the form given in Teaff v. Hewitt, 1 Ohio St. 511, 59 Am. Dec. 634, or a variation

B. Kinds — 1. In General. Annexation may be by the use of some material or device the effect of which is to secure the article immovably,[24] or if movable, to restrict motion within definite limits.[25] Such annexation is called actual, and may be by any material external to, or independent of, the article itself, as nails, cement, or chains, or by some device which is a substitute for such material.[26] The civil law allows movable property to be made immovable by destination.[27] Corresponding to this is the annexation by intention of the recent common law. Where such annexation is allowed it is sufficient that the owner intends to make the chattel a part of the realty. It is not necessary to use force; it is enough to exercise the will; if this is duly manifested the article is dedicated to the realty, and its status as personalty has ceased. These two methods of annexation are sometimes called actual and constructive annexation. The former is accomplished by some physical act, the latter by the mind alone; but it is obvious that in either case the article is annexed to the realty by the will of the owner; in the one case his will being manifested by the physical act, in the other by his power of restraint. The earlier common law dealt only with such physical act of annexation as was readily cognizable; such act must have so affixed the chattel that severance would impair it and the freehold.[28] It is not easy to draw the line between on that form in which the elements are (1) actual annexation, (2) adaptability to the uses of the realty, and (3) intention to annex permanently, as in Hayford v. Wentworth, 97 Me. 347, 54 Atl. 940. Sometimes a test is found in (1) the nature and character of the act by which the fixture is put in place, (2) the policy of the law, (3) the intention of those concerned, as in Justice v. Nesquehoning Valley R. Co., 87 Pa. St. 28. In the leading English case it is said that what constitutes an annexation sufficient to make the chattel part of the realty must depend on the circumstances of each case, and mainly on two circumstances as indicating the intention, viz, the degree of annexation and the object of annexation. Holland v. Hodgson, L. R. 7 C. P. 328, 41 L. J. C. P. 146, 26 L. T. Rep. N. S. 709, 20 Wkly. Rep. 990. This was somewhat qualified in Norton v. Dashwood, [1896] 2 Ch. 497, 65 L. J. Ch. 737, 75 L. T. Rep. N. S. 205, 44 Wkly. Rep. 680, where the elements were said to be (1) mode and extent of annexation, (2) whether for temporary or permanent improvement, and (3) effect of removal upon the freehold. This element of injury to the freehold on severance is included in McFarlane v. Foley, 27 Ind. App. 484, 60 N. E. 357; Cook v. Condon, 6 Kan. App. 574, 51 Pac. 587; Weathersby v. Sleeper, 42 Miss. 732; Richardson v. Borden, 42 Miss. 71, 2 Am. Rep. 595; Andrews v. Powers, 66 N. Y. App. Div. 216, 72 N. Y. Suppl. 597. In some of the foregoing cases these elements are said to show the intention with which the annexation is made and not to be tests of annexation itself.

actual and constructive annexation, but at their extremes the former is chiefly physical, the latter is chiefly mental.[29]

2. ACTUAL ANNEXATION — a. How Far Degree Is Important. To answer the test of actual annexation alone the degree of annexation is not important.[30] The importance of the degree of annexation is the light it throws on other facts in the case, all which are to be regarded in determining whether the status of the fixture is realty or personalty.[31] However, actual annexation may be carried to such an extent that the article may become so far incorporated with the realty as to be incapable of severance as a matter of law.[32]

b. Annexation by Weight. Mere weight is not sufficient to make a chattel part of the realty, although resting on a surface prepared for it;[33] but weight, together with the fact that the structure was erected or added by the owner, may result in annexation where it would not if erected by a tenant or a stranger.[34]

c. Annexation to Gain Steadiness. A machine may be annexed to realty merely to keep it steady, as a mechanical necessity, if it is to be used at all, and not with reference to the realty. It is possible in such case that there is no intention on the part of the owner; the setting up of the machine in one way or another being due to the opinion of the expert employed. The English courts hold that annexing merely to keep a machine steady will make it subject to a mortgage of the realty.[35] Before the law was finally settled in England, the case of Hellawell v. Eastwood[36] was thought to sustain the view that annexation merely to steady a machine did not make it part of the realty. This case had some influence on American authorities, and as a general rule they agree that such annexation is not sufficient to make the article affixed a part of the realty, although the machine is connected with shafting by belts, if otherwise it is readily removable.[37]

d. Inclosing. The weight of authority seems to be that merely inclosing a chattel in a building, through the entrance to which the chattel can be removed only in pieces, or which will have to be destroyed, or in which an opening must be made before the chattel can be removed from the premises, or inclosing an article, as an iron safe, in brick or iron, does not necessarily amount to annexation, even between vendor and purchaser or mortgagor and mortgagee.[38]

e. Connection With Motive Power. That a machine is connected with the motive power by a belt does not of itself constitute annexation.[39]

f. Adaptability of Chattel to Realty. A chattel is adapted to the realty when it is fitted to promote the ends for which the realty is used.[40] Adaptability does not imply immovability. It is consistent with movability or immovability. It only requires localization in use.[41] The common law required actual attachment to work a change in status, although the article was adapted to the realty. adaptability without actual annexation is sufficient to occasion constructive annexation.[43] Adaptability with other circumstances may cause annexation; it is one of the circumstances to be regarded in determining whether what seems to be personalty is realty or vice versa.[44] Adaptability may be divided into general and special adaptability. The former applies to articles fitted for use on all realty devoted to like purposes. They usually can be bought in the market and are adapted to general use. The latter applies to articles specially designed and created for the realty where they are to be used. Some cases emphasize this distinction, according little or no weight to general adaptability, and much weight to special adaptability.[45]

3. Constructive Annexation — a. How Accomplished. Constructive annexation occurs: (1) Wherever actual annexation has ceased; (2) in some cases before actual annexation is made but is in fact intended; and (3) where no actual annexation is intended, but there is an intention to devote the chattel to the uses of the realty, and the chattel is indispensable to promote those uses.[46]

43. Farrar v. Stackpole, 6 Me. 154, 19 Am. Dec. 201, the leading case. This was a case of trover for a mill chain, dogs and bars, claimed under a deed conveying a sawmill with the privileges and appurtenances. The chain was in its appropriate place when the deed was delivered, and was attached by a hook to a piece of draft chain attached to the machinery. It was decided that the chain was an essential part of the sawmill and passed by the deed as part of the described premises. Succeeding cases added the idea of constructive annexation taken from Liford's Case, 11 Coke 46*b*, 50*b*. "And it is resolved in 14 Hen. 8, 25*b*, in Wistow's Case of Gray's Inn, that if a man has a horse-mill, and the miller takes the millstone out of the mill, to the intent to pick it to grind the better, although it is actually severed from the mill, yet it remains parcel of the mill, as if it had always been lying upon the other stone, and by consequence by the lease or conveyance of the mill it shall pass with it; so of doors, windows, rings, &c. The same law of keys; although they are distinct things." This was notably so in Pennsylvania. Pyle v. Pennock, 2 Watts & S. 390, 37 Am. Dec. 517; Voorhis v. Freeman, 2 Watts & S. 116, 37 Am. Dec. 490. It may be said of Farrar v. Stackpole, supra, that the chain would have passed by the deed irrespective of annexation, being within the contemplation of the parties, and that the millstone in Wistow's Case, supra, was realty temporarily severed, and that it has no application to the case of personalty not yet affixed. But the Pennsylvania decisions, supra, rest on the theory of annexation where a chattel is fitted for use on realty, and deny the necessity of physical annexation, if it is indispensable to completing the realty for the purpose for which it is used. removed to be repicked was still part of the realty. The owner of the realty has severed part of it, and having the option to determine the status of the part severed, it remains realty until he has exercised the option. In such case the burden of proof should be on the one claiming that the thing severed is personalty. Probably the proper use of the term "constructive annexation" is confined to this class of cases.[48] This kind of annexation is illustrated in several cases.[49]

c. Before Annexation in Fact. Following the analogy of constructive annexation after severance, but it is believed on a wrong theory, it has been held that the intention to devote a chattel to the uses of realty, accompanied with the act of bringing it on the realty, amounts to annexation.[50]

d. Parts of a Whole — (I) Indispensable Parts. Where realty is devoted to some purpose, articles placed upon it, when ready for use, if indispensable to effect that purpose, are part of the realty, although not physically attached.[51]

C. Intention — 1. In General. where there are conflicting claims thereto,[56] the intention with which it was put in place is of importance. Indeed it is sometimes said that the intent of the party annexing an article to the freehold is the most important criterion of its character as a fixture, and other circumstances or facts are valuable chiefly as evidence of such intention.[57] This controlling intention is not the initial intention at the time of procuring the article in question,[58] nor that which exists while it is in transit to the realty on which it is to be placed,[59] nor the secret intention with which it is affixed,[60] but the intention which the law deduces from all the circumstances of the annexation.[61] The intention is said to be immaterial where the annexation is such as to incorporate the chattel with the realty,[62] where severance will work an injury to the realty,[63] or where the fixtures are essential to the needs of the realty.[64] Intention is also said to be immaterial where the annexation is according to the usual practice of experts in such cases,[65] where actual annexation is required and constructive annexation is not recognized,[66] where there is a controlling agreement,[67] or where there is an estoppel.[68] The question of the intention with which the annexation is made is said to be one of fact or of mixed law and fact.[69]

2. With Relation to Permanency. If the annexation is not intended to be permanent the chattel will not be deemed a fixture. As it is sometimes expressed "it must be for the benefit of the inheritance."[70] The degree and mode of annexation may be looked at, and whether it is to make the chattel or the land more useful. Permanence does not imply that the annexation must be perpetual,[71] but that the article shall, if actually affixed, remain where fastened until worn out, or until the purposes of the realty are accomplished.[72] If a structure is made for a residence it generally is deemed part of the realty, although it has the appearance of being temporary and may be easily removed without injury to the freehold.[73] Where, however, the structure is affixed to the premises by a tem-

B. After Annexation. After annexation which results in the article becoming part of the realty in fact, it is sometimes held that a parol agreement that the article shall remain or shall become personalty is not effective,[79] but there are also cases sustaining such subsequent parol agreements.[80]

C. Rights of Strangers — 1. In General. While as between parties to the agreement there seems to be no restriction on their power to control the status of personalty after annexation, provided that the degree of annexation does not go to the extent of complete incorporation with the realty, or result in loss of identity of the chattel,[81] it remains to consider how far these agreements may affect the rights of strangers, who, having interests in the realty, which admittedly are not affected thereby, claim the fixtures as part of the realty, and also as unaffected by the agreement. A number of elements may be involved in the determination of such controversies.[82]

82. A typical occasion for controversy arises when the maker of a machine sells it on condition that the title shall not pass until the price is paid. It is attached by the conditional vendee to his realty, which is or becomes subject to a mortgage. It is admitted that this transaction, as between the parties, will prevent the machine becoming part of the realty, or at least preserve its status as personalty. The question is how far the mortgagee is affected. Similar questions occur when any one having interests in a chattel suffers it to be affixed to land of another, in which land a third party has or acquires interests, and the landowner having failed in some duty to the others they claim rights in the fixture which are antagonistic and must be adjusted. In this connection, as mortgagees of realty are frequently claimants of fixtures, reference should be made to the effect of a mortgage on the legal title to the realty. In some jurisdictions the legal title is in the mortgagee; in others the legal title is in the mortgagor, and the mortgagee has a mortgagee's lien to secure his loan (Union College v. Wheeler, 61 N. Y. 88; Farnsworth v. Western Union Tel. Co., 6 N. Y. Suppl. 735), and in others the mortgagee has the legal title so far as is necessary for him to enforce his right of possession (see Jones Real Mortg. c. 1). According as the mortgagor does or does not have the legal title, annexations made by him are to another's or to his own land, and the presumption that annexations to one's own land are permanent and become part of the realty will or will not arise. Again attention should be called to the effect of mortgages in which there is a stipulation that they shall include subsequent additions to the realty, and to the doctrine that such additions may be treated as additional security. Thus, as illustrating the effect of some of these features, where the legal title vests in the mortgagee, the mortgagor in possession is in most respects in the position of a tenant at will, but as to permanent improvements he is to be treated more like an owner, and such improvements inure to the benefit of the mortgagee (Butler v. Page, 7 Metc. (Mass.) 40; Winslow v. Merchants' Ins. Co., 4 Metc. (Mass.) 306, 38 Am. Dec. 368), and a subsequent agreement that the article annexed shall be treated as personalty will not affect the title of a purchaser without notice from the mortgagee (Smith Paper Co. v. Servin, 130 Mass. 511). On the other hand where title does not pass to the mortgagee the mortgagor may, without the concurrence of the mortgagee, make an effective agreement with a third person whereby chattels placed upon the realty remain personalty, even as against the mortgagee. Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Stanton, 55 Minn. 211, 56 N. W. 821, 43 Am. St. Rep. 491; Farnsworth v. Western Union Tel. Co., 6 N. Y. Suppl. 735. See also Campbell v. Roddy, 44 N. J. Eq. 244, 14 Atl. 279, 6 Am. St. Rep. 889, holding that the vendor of machinery retains his lien for the purchase-money as against the mortgagee of realty whereon the machinery was placed. So, where title remains in the mortgagor, he may grant a right of way to a railroad company, and the rails and other property of the railroad thereafter placed thereon will not become subject to a prior mortgage on the land. Skinner v. Ft. Wayne, etc., R. Co., 99 Fed. 465.

2. Where Stranger Assents to Agreement. It is agreed that, subject to exceptions to be stated later, if all parties interested in the chattel and land assent to the agreement, it will be given effect and the status of the chattel will be preserved.[83] Acts by the mortgagee or other claimant of the realty which induce the owner of the chattel to allow it to be annexed will amount to assent to the agreement or estop him from denying its effect.[84] Under some circumstances, in England, a mortgagee will be held to have licensed agreements of third parties, and in this case they will be given effect as if he had been a party, so long as the license is unrevoked.[85]

3. Purchasers With Notice. It is generally held that a vendee or mortgagee of the realty with notice of the agreement or the rights of third parties in the fixture takes subject thereto.[86]

4. Prior Mortgagees. If the mortgage of the realty is prior to the annexation, having parted with nothing on the faith of the fixture, the mortgagee is not a purchaser for value as regards it, and generally his rights are subject to those having interests in the fixture other than the mortgagor.[87] Contrary to the foregoing statement it is held in some states that it is not in the power of the mortgagor, by any agreement made with a third person after the execution of the mortgage, to diminish the rights of the prior mortgagee in accessions to the realty. Such accessions are subject to the mortgage to the same extent that the realty is.[88]

5. Purchasers and Mortgagees Without Notice. In this case the owner of the chattel has allowed it to be annexed to the land of another, and a third party has acquired rights therein. We have seen that if he acquires these rights with notice he takes subject to the agreement.[89] It remains to inquire what are his rights if he acquires without notice. To answer this question it is essential to look at the initial transaction between the one claiming an interest in the chattel and the one annexing it to the land. Independent of any connection with the land, it is admitted that if A gives B the possession of a chattel, B cannot transfer A's legal rights, or extinguish them by a transfer of the possession, to C with or without notice, unless by some act or omission A is estopped from setting up his legal title. It also is true if B have a chattel in which A has only equitable rights, that, by a transfer of it to C for value without notice, A's equities will be extinguished. Unless there is something peculiar in the fact that the chattel is annexed to land, if B have two chattels of A's, one of which he sells to C, and the other of which he annexes to land which he sells to C, there is no reason why C should have greater rights in the former than in the latter. It is submitted that it is not because it is annexed to land, but because of the nature of A's rights that C takes the legal title or not, or subject to A's rights or not. If the agreement between A and B create legal rights in A, annexation does not destroy them between A and B, nor does a conveyance of the land to which the chattel is affixed destroy them. If A, however, has done or omitted to do something as to the chattel whereby C has been led to alter his position to his loss, because of A's act or omission, then A may be estopped from setting up his legal title. Where A has a legal title notice is immaterial, but estoppel is the important factor. On the other hand if the effect of the agreement is to give A only equitable rights after annexation then a conveyance of the land to one without notice will extinguish them. In other words legal rights in this case are extinguished by estoppel, and equitable by want of notice. The cases in general bear out these principles.[90] The rights

Where the statute requires separate records of chattel and real mortgages, a mortgage of land and fixtures which are a unit in purpose recorded as a real-estate mortgage is valid as to creditors claiming the fixtures (In re Goldville Mfg. Co., 118 Fed. 892, 122 Fed. 569, 59 C. C. A. 73; Brodrick v. Kilpatrick, 82 Fed. 138. And see Webb Rec. Tit. § 252) and as against a subsequent mortgage recorded as a real and a chattel mortgage (Atlantic Safe Deposit, etc., Co. v. Atlantic City Laundry Co., 64 N. J. Eq. 140, 53 Atl. 212).

A mortgage of realty has priority over a chattel mortgage on fixtures annexed subsequently, and record of the chattel mortgage does not affect the purchaser at foreclosure sale under the real mortgage. Adams v. Beadle, 47 Iowa 439, 29 Am. Rep. 487.

To be effective against creditors a real mortgage including in its description loose rights therein is sufficient notice to put a subsequent grantee or mortgagee upon his inquiry.[93] Sometimes the character of a fixture and manner of annexation is sufficient to put a purchaser on inquiry.[94]

IV. CUSTOM.

Custom or usage is sometimes appealed to as evidence of the intention with which a chattel has been affixed, or as affording a rule for regulating the right to sever a fixture. There are few cases from which any general principles can be deduced. Evidence of custom is not admissible to control the operation of law.[95] Where a lease is silent a custom for a tenant to remove fixtures will govern the parties,[96] or may be evidence from which to infer assent that a fixture shall be personalty.[97]

V. PARTIES.

A. Owner and Stranger — 1. DISSEIZORS AND TRESPASSERS. The general rule of law is that annexations in fact to realty are presumed to be the property of the owner of the realty, but that this presumption may be rebutted.[98] This is so when the erection is by one person on the land of another, with the latter's permission.[99] But where additions are made by one person on the land of another without previous permission, express or implied, in some cases it seems either that it is the property of the landowner by a rule of law or that the builder's actual intention is not allowed to prevail over that which the law deduces from articles should be recorded as a chattel mortgage. Hillebrand v. Nelson, 1 Nebr. (Unoff.) 783, 95 N. W. 1068; Knickerbocker Trust Co. v. Penn Cordage Co., 62 N. J. Eq. 624, 50 Atl. 459; Potts v. New Jersey Arms, etc., Co., 17 N. J. Eq. 395.

99. "The defendant contends that when one person erects a building on the lands of another, by the mere permission of the landowner, nothing further appearing, the building thereby becomes realty by presumption of law. But we think no such presumption arises. The case presented by these circumstances would be one for an inference of fact, not a conclusion of law." Pope v. Skinkle, 45 N. J. L. 39, 41.

the facts.[1] Thus the material affixed seems to belong to the owner of the land if the annexation is by a disseizor[2] or a trespasser[3] or by one under mistake.[4] The wrong-doer cannot set up his own wrong to overcome the presumption arising from annexation. The same rule applies where a tenant in common annexes chattels to the realty owned in common, if the annexation is without the consent of his cotenant,[5] and also in a few cases to annexations by a mortgagor to land subject to a mortgage.[6] Annexations made by railroad corporations without permission seem to be exceptions to the general rule.[7]

2. Licensees. Annexations made with the consent of the owner of the realty by a bare licensee or by one having mere consent are generally held to be removable or to remain the property of the one annexing. Permission to remove or an agreement that the title shall remain in the builder will be implied in the absence of any other facts tending to show a contrary intention;[8] but not if the Unity of title rule.— In Michigan by what is called the unity of title rule, a chattel cannot become part of the realty unless it is annexed by one having ownership of both, or like interests in each. Thus A cannot affix B's chattel to A's land so as to make it realty, nor can A owning a chattel in severalty make it by annexation part of the realty in which he has an undivided interest, nor can a husband make his chattel part of realty owned by him and his wife. Inasmuch as cases involving the rights of heir and executor are among the most ancient as well as most modern in the law of fixtures, and as it is admitted that what is a fixture to-day would not necessarily have been one in early days, owing to changes in taste and habits, it is probably true that the contradictions in the decisions are due more to changes in standards than in the law.

C. Grantor and Grantee — 1. In General. In controversies between the heir and the administrator, or the devisee and the executor, no rights of a purchaser for value present themselves and the decedent's intention may well control, or the heir or devisee may claim annexations unless proof be made against him. But in the case of grants the intention of the grantor is less material.[15] The intention now is to be sought in the terms of the deed, and the claimant of the fixture being a purchaser for value may rely upon the general rule that deeds are construed more favorably to the grantee, and the burden would seem to be upon the grantor to show that articles annexed to the premises conveyed did not pass by words of general description, unless expressly excepted. This seems to be the general principle, but in the interpretation of what is annexed there is no fixed standard. Articles annexed by the grantor for trade purposes are not removable by him according to the rule as to trade fixtures between landlord and tenant.[16] A deed or mortgage of realty, in the absence of a contrary intention, will carry all annexations, although not expressly referred to.[17] Slight or constructive annexation seems to be sufficient as between grantor and grantee.[18] The

3. TREES IN A NURSERY. Trees in a nursery are part of the realty and pass by a deed or a mortgage thereof.[22]

D. Contract Vendor and Contract Vendee. One who enters on land under an agreement to purchase it and annexes fixtures is presumed to do so with the intention to make them permanent and part of the realty.[23] As a consequence such annexations belong to the owner of the realty if the contract vendee does not perform his contract, and must be left when he gives up possession of the premises;[24] but not if the contract vendor has given his consent to removal, or if he is himself in default in performing the contract to convey.[25] The rules between mortgagor and mortgagee, and not those between landlord and tenant, are applied to contract vendor and contract vendee.[26]

fixtures substantially the same rules are said to prevail between mortgagor and mortgagee as between grantor and grantee,[28] and not the rule between landlord and tenant.[29] It would seem that this general rule, which is based on the theory of a mortgage conveying the absolute title subject to being defeated, should be qualified in jurisdictions where the interest of the mortgagee is that of one having only a lien or security for his title.[30] With this limitation it may be said that annexations to the realty become subject to the real mortgagee's rights in the realty,[31] whether affixed before the execution of the mortgage[32] or after.[33] This rule applies to equitable mortgages[34] and to mortgages of a term by a leaseholder.[35] The test of the intention with which annexations by a mortgagor are made to realty should be the same as between grantor and grantee,[36] excepting that if the annexations are made after the giving of the mortgage, either in accordance with an understanding that the money loaned was to be applied to fixtures, or where the operation of the fixtures will impair the realty, intention would seem to be of paramount importance.[37] The mortgage need not mention the fixtures; they will be included in the general words of description of the freehold.[38] The mortgage of a "mill," "machine shop," "factory," or other structure by a term showing the purpose of the premises conveyed and not to describe or localize it seems to include what is necessary to a complete thing of the kind named.[39]

2. Partnership Interests. If the real mortgage is made by one who is or becomes a member of a firm which occupies the mortgaged premises and annexes chattels of the firm these are subject to the mortgage.[40]

3. Mortgages by Lessor. A tenant, whose lease is subsequent to a mortgage, has in general no greater right as against the mortgagee than would his lessor have if he had annexed the fixtures.[41] One who takes a mortgage subsequent to the lease stands in the same position as the lessor, and is not entitled to tenant's fixtures which the lessor could not claim.[42] These rules are modified where the rights of the tenant are fixed by agreement between him and his lessor.[43]

4. Mortgages by Lessee. A tenant may mortgage the leasehold and the mortgage will carry the tenant's interest in fixtures attached before or after the execution of the mortgage.[44] The mortgagee's interest is limited to the term, and does not entitle the mortgagee to remove fixtures unless given the power expressly,[45] otherwise his interest ceases with the term and he has no right to the proceeds of the fixtures.[46] A mortgage by the tenant of the fixtures apart from the leasehold may have the effect of giving them the status of personalty.[47]

F. Remainder-Man or Reversioner and Life-Tenant. After the death of a tenant for life who has annexed fixtures, or whose assignee or tenant has annexed fixtures, there arise questions as to the right to them by his personal representative, his legatee, and the reversioner or remainder-man. The decisions are not numerous, but as regards permanent improvements the life-tenant is treated as owner of the land; as regards trade fixtures and articles of convenience or ornament, as a tenant for years. The former go to the one entitled to the next estate in possession,[48] the latter to the personal representative or legatee of the tenant for life.[49]

Articles of ornament, although firmly affixed but removable without structural injury. Leigh v. Taylor, [1902] A. C. 157, 71

An assignee or subtenant has the same rights to remove fixtures that the life-tenant has,[50] but the life-tenant by lease or agreement cannot bind the remainder-man as to the additions which, in the absence of contract, would not be removable.[51]

G. Landlord and Tenant — 1. In General. In this connection a tenant is one having a less interest in land than freehold. He usually is a tenant for years or from year to year. He may be a tenant at will, and there is no distinction between tenancies created by deed, writing, or parol.[52] Annexations by such a tenant are generally within the ancient rule that fixtures belong to the owner of the realty; in this case the reversioner or landlord.[53] There are four exceptions to this rule: Additions made by the tenant in aid of his trade, called "trade fixtures;"[54] additions for ornament or more convenient use of the premises;[55] additions made in pursuance of a contract with the landlord securing to the tenant the right to remove the fixtures;[56] and additions removable by statute.[57]

2. Trade Fixtures — a. What Are Trade Fixtures. There is no precise definition of a "trade fixture." In England it does not include additions by a farmer in aid of agriculture,[58] but this distinction does not exist in the United States.[59] Where additions to the realty are to the pecuniary advantage of the tenant they are probably "trade fixtures."[60]

b. Grounds of Tenant's Right to Remove. Besides being removable on grounds of public policy trade fixtures are also removable because, from the temporary nature of the tenure, they are not presumed to have been annexed with the intention to make them permanent additions to the realty.[61]

c. Limitations on Right to Remove. Apart from contract there are certain limitations on the right to remove a trade fixture, occasioned by the nature of the fixture, the degree of annexation, the effect of removal upon the freehold, whether it was added as a substitute for fixtures belonging to the landlord, or as compensation for the use of the premises, and finally, the time within which it must be removed.[62] Where the annexation must be broken up to remove it, so that it is taken away as crude material rather than as pieces capable of being reassembled and used elsewhere, there seems to be a limitation on the right to remove trade fixtures.[63] Where the fixture is so incorporated with the realty as to show an intention to make it a permanent addition, or where to remove it will seriously injure the realty, it has been held that there is no right to remove trade fixtures.[64] Trade fixtures that are in substitution for essential parts of the leased premises and not additions thereto are not removable but are presumed to be permanent additions.[65] Trade fixtures annexed as a consideration for the lease or in lieu of rent are not removable by the tenant.[66]

The rule seems to depend upon the distinction between removal of materials and pieces and to be based upon the idea that if the material was added brick by brick it became part of the realty by loss of identity and that the method of annexation shows an intention to make the fixture permanent. Where the identity is preserved and this intention is negatived there is a willingness to allow material and articles firmly incorporated to be removed if trade fixtures or if by agreement they remain personalty.

3. Useful and Ornamental Fixtures. Articles added to the premises by the tenant for the more convenient use of the premises, or for its ornamentation, are removable as in the case of trade fixtures.[67]

4. Removal of Fixtures — a. Time of Removal in General. During a term having a definite period a tenant may remove his furniture or his removable fixtures. After the term is ended he may remove his furniture, although he may commit a trespass in so doing.[68] With regard to fixtures the title to which is absolute in him, whether by agreement with others which is effective against the landlord, or whether by the landlord's agreement, it would seem that he has a like right, and that so long as he has the title to the fixtures he has the right to repossess himself of them until barred by the statute of limitations.[69] With regard to other fixtures as to which the title is in the owner of the realty with a right in the tenant to sever, or a title in the lessee to vest in the landlord if not severed, there are numerous decisions and dicta that the fixture must be removed before the expiration of the term.[70] According to the English courts "the rule to be collected from the several cases decided on this subject, seems to be this, that the tenant's right to remove fixtures continues during his original term, and during such further period of possession by him, as he holds the premises under a right still to consider himself as tenant."[71] This rule has been adopted in some of the American courts.[72] Where the term is for a definite period, but is terminated before its regular ending, without fault of the lessee, or if for an indefinite period, as at will, the tenant usually has a reasonable time thereafter in which to remove his fixtures.[73] If the tenant forfeits the lease for his own default, usually he loses the right to remove his fixtures;[74] but it has been held that the forfeiture vests the landlord with the premises but not with fixtures that remain personal in their nature and belong to the tenant, and that the tenant has a reasonable time in which to remove those.[75] If the tenant surrenders[76] or abandons the premises and the landlord takes possession[77] it bars the tenant's right to remove fixtures. But a surrender cannot prejudice the rights of innocent third parties.[78]

tenancy. As the termination of a lease in general closes the tenant's right to remove fixtures[79] the question arises as to the effect of a new lease of the premises with the fixtures, which it is admitted the tenant cannot remove now unless the new lease continues the right to remove them. On principle his right does not continue. The new lease includes the premises and fixtures, the latter having become the property of the landlord, because his former conditional title has by the tenant's act become absolute, and because the tenant is estopped to deny his landlord's title.[80]

The same result follows if at the expiration of a lease the tenant continues to occupy in a character inconsistent with that of tenant, as under an agreement to buy (Merritt v. Judd, 14 Cal. 59), or where a subtenant accepts a new lease of his lessor's landlord (McIver v. Estabrook, 134 Mass. 550).

Contrary rule.— In the following cases a contrary rule is adopted or by some modification of it the lessee is given the right to remove the fixtures: Where the new lease is in effect merely a continuation of the former tenancy (Royce v. Latshaw, 15 Colo. App. 420, 62 Pac. 627; Ross v. Campbell, 9 Colo. App. 38, 47 Pac. 465); where a firm being a lessee, and a member of the firm withdraws, and the new lease is to the remaining member and for the balance of the old term (Baker v. McClung, 198 Ill. 28, 64 N. E. 701, 92 Am. St. Rep. 261, 59 L. R. A. 131 [affirming 96 Ill. App. 165]); where the effect of the old and new lease is to work a constructive severance of the fixtures, and the new lease is of the premises without the fixtures, although possession is continuous (McCarthy v. Trumacher, 108 Iowa 284, 78 N. W. 1104; Keefe v. Furlong, 96 Wis. 219, 70 N. W. 1110); and where the landlord, before the new lease, sold the tenant the fixtures (O'Brien v. Mueller, 96 Md. 134, 53 Atl. 663). Taking a new lease is only prima facie evidence of a surrender of the title to the fixtures, and that this presumption may be rebutted by circumstances showing a contrary intention. Bernheimer v. Adams, 70 N. Y. App. Div. 114, 75 N. Y. Suppl. 93. The rule does not apply to ordinary movable fixtures that are more nearly furniture than realty and not useful to the next tenant unless in the same trade (Smusch v. Kohn, 22 Misc. (N. Y.) 344, 49 N. Y. Suppl. 176). In Texas the rule was doubted, but the question determined in favor of the tenant by construction of the language of the leases involved. Wright v. Macdonnell, 88 Tex. 140, 30 S. W. 907 [reversing (Civ. App. 1894) 27 S. W. 1024]. For cases directly repudiating the rule see Kerr v. Kingsbury, give it prima facie the character of personalty, and that it does not necessarily follow that because separated it is personalty as a matter of law. Merely thinking that a fixture is personalty, or intending at some time in the future to separate it from the realty and restore it to the status of personalty, is not enough.[81] And as a secret intention not to affix a chattel will not prevail over the intention which the law deduces from acts,[82] so the intention as to severing a chattel is not a secret purpose, but an intention disclosed by "acts, words, and circumstances."[83] And as an intention to annex must in general relate to the time of annexation and not be an after-thought, so the intention to sever must relate to the time of actual or constructive disannexing.[84] Severing fixtures with the intent to restore them to the character of personalty may be actual or constructive. Actual severing to effect a change in status would seem to require intention coupled with physical separation. Thus moving soil from one place to another on the owner's land would not change its legal nature unless with such intention.[85]

B. Accidental Severance. Where the separation is caused by fire, wind, water, or other natural causes, the article severed remains realty until the owner has elected to treat it as personalty, although it is impossible to restore it to its former condition.[86]

C. Tortious Severance. When fixtures are wrongfully severed from the realty they become the personal property of the owner of the realty.[87]

D. Constructive Severance. After property has become realty it is said that it may become personalty by force of agreement of the parties in interest. The cases on the subject are not numerous. It is said that the mere giving of a chattel mortgage on a fixture works constructive severance and makes it personal

Thus, to support a charge of maliciously injuring an engine described as the personal property of A, but which was a fixture, it is not enough to show by A "that he had in mind the removal of the engine." 86. "What then is the criterion by which we are to determine whether that which was once a part of the realty has become personalty on being detached? Not capability of restoration to the former connexion with the freehold, as is contended, for the tree prostrated by the tempest is incapable of reannexation to the soil, and yet remains realty. 87. Leonard v. Stickney, 131 Mass. 541 (a grantor in possession of premises, after giving a deed that had vested title in the grantee, wrongfully removed fixtures; this was held to give the grantee an immediate right of action, although the time during which the grantor might occupy had not elapsed); Morgan v. Varick, 8 Wend. property.[88] It has also been held that fixtures may constructively be severed, provided the sale be in writing with the formalities of a conveyance of realty.[89] It has even been held that where a purchaser of realty, knowing that the owner considered window and door screens to be personal property, entered into a separate agreement for their purchase, they became stamped with that character.[90] The theory of the nature of real property would, however, seem to require actual severance before realty can become personalty.

E. Removal Within What Time. When one other than a tenant[91] has annexed fixtures under such circumstances that the title remains in him, he seems generally to have the same time for removal that any owner of property left on the premises of another under like circumstances would have. The presumption of a voluntary surrender applicable to a tenant who has quit does not seem to apply.[92]

F. Damage and Repair. Whether or not a fixture can be severed without damage to the freehold is an important circumstance bearing on the right to remove.[93] A remainder-man is entitled to damages for injuries to the walls in removing tapestries, but not to compensation for redecorating the walls.[94] A mortgagee of the realty is entitled to damages for severing fixtures subject to a chattel mortgage, or which a conditional vendor may retake.[95] A tenant is liable for damages to the freehold occasioned by removing fixtures.[96]

VII. SALE OF FIXTURES.

Whether a sale transfers a fixture or only a right to sever it depends upon the interest of the seller in the fixture and the intention of the parties. If the sale is by a lessee and the title to the fixture is in the lessor subject to a right to sever, the vendee acquires only this right, and not the title until after it is severed. In England it is decided that such a sale is not within the statute of frauds, not being a sale of any interest in land or a sale of goods, and must take the form of a bargain and sale of them as fixtures.[97] It is generally held in America that a parol sale of fixtures, part of the realty, by the owner of the fixture, is within the statute and void, and that to be valid it must be with the formalities prescribed for the sale of real estate.[98] If by deed land is sold on which there is a fixture part thereof, a parol exception of the fixture is invalid. To be effective the exception must be according to the form requisite for the exception of other real estate.[99]

B. Intervention. Parties in interest where there is litigation as to fixtures are allowed to intervene in jurisdictions where intervention is recognized. Thus a mortgagee of realty may intervene where a vendor of a chattel is asking that fixtures may be sold to pay his claim,[3] or a conditional vendor of a chattel, where a purchaser of realty claims a fixture against the owner of the realty,[4] or a chattel mortgagee, where one claims under a mechanic's lien as against a mortgagee of the realty.[5]

C. Interpleader. Where there are adverse claimants of a fixture that has been severed and it or its proceeds are in the hands of a defendant who is uncertain to whom to account he may ask the claimants to interplead.[6]

D. Replevin. Fixtures, actually connected with the realty, and not personalty by agreement or the like, are not repleviable;[7] but if not part of the realty, although attached to it, may be replevied.[8] Fixtures that by agreement of parties retain the status of personalty, although seemingly realty, are repleviable.[9]

Replevin being an action to recover personal property, it is necessary to allege such facts that if proven will negative a presumption that the property claimed is realty.[10] Replevin for fixtures will not lie if the action would be made the means of litigating the title to realty.[11]

E. Trover. As in the case of replevin trover does not lie for a fixture, being part of realty, although a trade fixture.[12] But such an action will lie if the fixture be severed in fact,[13] or if by agreement or the nature of the annexation it still retains the status of personalty.[14] Whatever would constitute conversion of personal property in general will be conversion of a fixture after it is severed. A sale of the realty to which is a fixture belonging to a tenant is a conversion of it for which trover will lie.[15] Wrongfully excluding a person from a building in which are his fixtures, or excluding him rightfully and refusing him access to remove after demand, constitutes conversion.[16] Cutting down telegraph poles and leaving them and the wire beside the road is not conversion.[17] It is conversion for a landlord to threaten to get an injunction to restrain his tenant from moving his fixtures, and to forbid him to remove them, when they lawfully belong to the tenant.[18]

F. Trespass Quare Clausum Fregit. Trespass quare clausum lies by a grantee of real estate against a grantor for removing fixtures, although the fixtures are only in the constructive possession of the grantee.[19] It also lies by one cotenant against another for the wrongful removal and destruction or appropriathat for purposes of the suit the property might be regarded as severed.

by agreement or otherwise,[31] may be taken on execution. If the tenant had no right to remove the fixtures or has forfeited his right they may not be taken on execution. The right of the landlord is paramount.[32]

K. Legal Actions by Mortgagees. As legal remedies, such as trespass, trover, replevin, and the like, are founded upon possession and in a sense upon the legal title, it follows that whether the mortgagee can maintain such remedies depends upon the effect of the mortgage upon the legal title, and upon whether at the time of the injury he was in possession or had the right of possession. In those states where the legal title is in the mortgagee it generally is held that he may maintain legal actions for injuries to fixtures.[33] In those states where the mortgagee of real estate has only a lien thereon, until foreclosure of the mortgage he has not such a legal interest in the land and fixtures as will enable him to maintain legal actions for injuries to or for severing fixtures.[34]

X. CRIMINAL PROSECUTIONS.

Under some circumstances fixtures may be the subject of larceny,[35] and an indictment will sometimes lie for their malicious injury.[36]

XI. STATUTES.

A. In General. Legislation in the United States concerning fixtures is direct and indirect. Such legislation as expressly classifies and defines property, including fixtures, may be called direct. It is found in Louisiana, California, and other so-called code states,[37] and a few fragmentary enactments exist elsewhere.[38] A few states have special legislation for the purpose of taxation, as Rhode Island.[39] In a few there is a provision defining the right of tenants to remove fixtures.[40] A provision making the stealing or malicious injury of fixtures a crime is usual.[41] Such legislation as provides for recording conditional sales, leases, and mortgages of personal property may be called indirect. Originally intended to protect improvident buyers on the instalment plan, these statutes affect the rights of buyers of machinery and other articles to be affixed to realty and the real mortgagees. Unless these conditional sales are recorded they are not effective as against mortgagees or vendees of the realty in the absence of actual notice. These statutes resemble each other and it has seemed convenient to give a representative sample of one, with references to states having a like statute.[42]

B. Conditional Sales of Goods and Chattels. "Except as otherwise provided in this article, all conditions and reservations in a contract for the conditional sale of goods and chattels, accompanied by immediate delivery and continued possession of the thing contracted to be sold, to the effect that the ownership of such goods and chattels is to remain in the conditional vendor or in a person other than the conditional vendee, until they are paid for, or until the occurrence of a future event or contingency shall be void as against subsequent purchasers, pledgees, or mortgagees in good faith, and as to them the sale shall be deemed absolute, unless such contract of sale, containing such conditions and reservations, or a true copy thereof be filed as directed in this article." [43]

C. Tenants' Fixtures. "A tenant may remove from the demised premises at any time during the continuance of his term, anything affixed thereto for the purpose of trade, manufacture, ornament or domestic use, if the removal can be effected without injury to the premises, unless the thing done has, by the manner in which it is affixed, become an integral part of the premises." [44]

D. Attachment of Fixtures by Judicial Process. In a few states provision is made for the attachment of fixtures by judicial process by filing a description of the property attached in a specified office.[45]

It implies, therefore, that it must be a place more or less under water. It is frequently used by nautical men to distinguish it from the channel of a river or harbor, and in this sense, while it includes the idea of being under water, it is used as descriptive of a place not navigable with safety by ordinary vessels, on account of the shallowness of the water."

8. In State v. Addington, 77 Mo. 110, 117, the court said: "We may make the broad concession that a state cannot, under the disguise of the police power, overthrow the rights which the constitution guarantees; but notwithstanding this, it cannot be gainsaid that the legislature may do many things in the legitimate exercise of that and other powers, which, however unwise or injudicious they may be, are not obnoxious to the objection of being beyond the scope of legislative authority. It would be exceedingly difficult, if not impossible, to state, beforehand, what, in a number of cases, should be regarded as an assumption by the legislature of powers not warranted by the constitution. Each case, to a certain extent, must be determined by its own circumstances, the court, in every instance, regarding the act to be investigated as prima facie constitutional."

prohibiting the sale of substances imitative of food articles, although they may not be positively injurious to health.[10] The central idea of these statutes is the prevention of facilities for the manufacture and sale of spurious and unwholesome articles in imitation of genuine and pure articles of food whereby purchasers are deceived into buying that which they would not buy but for the deception. To this end such laws are sustained by the courts as being safely within the police power of the state.[11] Although it has been held that a statute Patented article.— The fact that an article of food or drink is prepared by a process which is or has been protected by letters patent of the United States does not prevent it from coming within the operation of laws passed by a state in the exercise of its police powers. Arbuckle v. Blackburn, 113 Fed. 616, 51 C. C. A. 122, 65 L. R. A. 864.

Conflict of state and federal authority.— Where oleomargarine was furnished by the federal government to be served as food to the inmates of a national home for federal soldiers, the governor of such institution is not amenable to the laws of the state in which it is located, regulating the use and sale thereof, since the legislature of the state has no constitutional power to interfere with the internal management of federal institutions located within its limits. People v. Biesecker, 33 Misc. (N. Y.) 35, 68 N. Y. Suppl. 134 [affirmed in 58 N. Y. App. Div. 391, 68 N. Y. Suppl. 1067]. Minn. Laws (1899), c. 257, entitled "An act to prevent the use of chemical agents, as preservatives in milk, cream, cheese and butter," prohibited such use in these four articles and also in any other dairy products. Laws (1901), c. 348, amended such act by the title, and provided that such chapter 257 should be amended to read, "An act to prevent the use of chemical agents as preservatives in milk, cream, cheese and butter, or food products of any nature whatever." Section 1 of chapter 257 was amended to punish any person selling "any milk, cream or food products of any nature whatever, butter, cheese or any other dairy products," to which any preservative had been added. These several sections have been held to cover only such articles of food as might be made from cream and milk, and not to prohibit the use of preservatives in meats. Question of monopoly.—Md. Code Pub. Gen. Laws, art 27, §§ 88-91 (Acts (1888), c. 312), forbidding the sale of butter substitutes do not violate the Declaration of Rights, art. 41, declaring against monopolies, since they prohibit all sales, and hence there is no monopoly. Nor do they violate Md. Const. art. 4, § 2, nor Const. In discussing the leading cases on this point, Judge Dillon says: "We cannot refrain from expressing our full concurrence in the views and conclusions of the Court of Appeals of New York in People v. Marx, supra. It will not escape observation that the Court of Appeals of New York and the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania reached opposite conclusions on a question relating so vitally to the natural, inalienable, and primordial rights of the citizen. The judgment of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania sustaining the Act of 1885, was affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States; and on like grounds, if the New York statute (which was in judgment in the case of People v. Marx, supra) had been before the Supreme Court of the United States, its validity would have been upheld, unless the Supreme Court had followed the judgment of the Court of Appeals. We have, at all events, that which is regarded as a fundamental right in New York considered not to be such in Pennsylvania. The Pennsylvania Act of 1885, under which Powell was convicted, makes the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine, though open and unconcealed, a crime. We cannot but express our regret that the Constitution of any of the States, or that of the United States, admits of a construction that it is competent for a State legislature to suppress (instead of regulating) under fine and imprisonment the business of manufacturing and selling a harmless, and even wholesome, article, if the legislature chooses to affirm, contrary to the fact, that the public health or public policy requires such suppression. The record of the conviction of Powell for selling without any deception a healthful and nutritious article of food makes one's blood tingle." 1 Dillon Mun. Corp. § 141.

N. Y. Laws (1893), c. 338, §§ 27, 37, as amended by Laws (1899), c. 435, and Laws (1900), c. 534, prohibiting the sale of any butter or other dairy product containing a preservative, except salt in butter and cheese, and spirituous liquors in cheese, and sugar in condensed milk, and prohibiting the sale of any preservative substances to be used in violation thereof, and providing a penalty ple that there is no interference with any inherent right or privilege of the people to engage in the manufacture or sale of any wholesome product or compound, where there is no imitation, and the true character is openly designated.[13] A federal statute providing for the taxation of persons engaged in the manufacture or sale of designated articles does not authorize such manufacture or sale in a state where either is prohibited by law, or authorize any person to disregard regulations which a state may lawfully prescribe in reference to such articles.[14]

B. As to Inspection.[15] Laws for the inspection of food have been provided by statute in many states,[16] and the right of inspection thus provided is a very peremptory one, with which the inspector is invested for the purpose of enforcing the law.[17] In such cases the statute usually provides that a sample of the unwholesome food shall be reserved for evidence.[18] So too it is within the province of congress to provide for the sanitary inspection and the marking and branding of articles of food at the place of manufacture to the end that nothing shall be shipped from the factory which can in any way be injurious to the health of the consumer.[19]

C. As to Condemnation. It is within the police power of the state to condemn and destroy articles endangering the health of the community.[20] legitimate exercise of the police power of the state,[21] and an ordinance which requires the vendors of dairy products in a city to submit their dairies and dairy herds outside the city limits to inspection is not open to the objection that it is extraterritorial in its operation.[22] So too cities generally have power under their charters to license all lawful occupations carried on within their limits, but a city cannot by license authorize an unlawful traffic in food products or even a lawful traffic to be carried on in an unlawful manner.[23]

IV. VIOLATIONS OF STATUTES OR ORDINANCES.

A. Illegal Manufacture or Sale — 1. What Constitutes — a. In General. While there is some doubt[24] as to whether the manufacture or sale of articles of food which are not injurious to health is illegal under statutes prohibiting such manufacture or sale,[25] it is nevertheless firmly established that the sale of such articles so produced as to work a fraud on the public is illegal under statutes forbidding such sales.[26] Where a party is charged with the illegal sale of unwholesome food either through himself or his agent,[27] the question of guilt is to be determined by the terms of the statute under which he is indicted,[28] or the 23. See Haines v. People, 7 Colo. App. 467, 43 Pac. 1047, holding that where a statute provides that before any person can sell oleomargarine he shall mark the packages in two conspicuous places in bold-faced English letters and prescribes a punishment for violation of the act, a city has no power to authorize the sale of oleomargarine in unmarked packages.

24. This doubt is due to the diversity of opinion as to whether such statutes constitute a legitimate exercise of the police power of the state. See supra, II, A, 5.

25. In People v. Marx, 99 N. Y. 377, 2 N. E. 29, 52 Am. Rep. 34, it was held that a statute prohibiting the manufacture and sale as an article of food of any substitute for butter or cheese produced from pure unadulterated milk or cream, inasmuch as the prohibition was not limited to unwholesome or simulated substitutes but applied as well to the manufacture and sale of such as are wholesome and valuable, and were fairly and openly avowed in public, was unconstitutional and void, and that a conviction thereunder for the sale of oleomargarine, a wholesome substitute for butter, where it appeared that the true character of the article was avowed, was error. evidence of guilty knowledge and intent as proved at the trial in cases where these constitute an essential ingredient of the offense.[29]

b. Imitations of Staple Articles. Where the statute provides against the manufacture of compounds in imitation of well known articles of food, the gist of the offense consists in the imitation,[30] and the statutory prohibition is aimed at a designed and intentional imitation[31] and not at a mere resemblance of qualities inherent in the articles themselves and common to both.[32] It is not unlawful for a party to manufacture substances and sell them for what they purport to be;[33] and in order to convict it must be established that he intended to sell such substances for the natural product.[34]

c. Guilty Knowledge. Where the statute makes knowledge of the unwholesomeness or adulteration of the food an essential ingredient of the offense, it is necessary that such knowledge should appear,[35] and the court should so charge the jury.[36] On the other hand under some statutes a guilty knowledge is not the gist of the offense, and the seller takes upon himself the risk of knowing that the article offered is unwholesome or adulterated.[37]

The phrase "yellow butter," as used in Mich. Acts (1901), No. 22, making it an offense to sell or offer for sale oleomargarine colored in imitation of "yellow butter" made from pure milk or cream of the same, means any butter produced from pure milk or cream thereof having a "perceptible shade" of yellow. e. Purpose of Sale. Since the entire object of the statutes prohibiting the sale of unwholesome and adulterated food stuffs is to protect the health of the public, it must generally appear that such article was sold as food;[41] and the mere possession of an adulterated article which is not exposed or offered for sale does not constitute an offense.[42] Nor is it an offense to sell a quantity of an article of adulterated food as a sample for the purpose of analysis upon demand made for that purpose by the proper officer.[43]

f. Sale by Agent. The question has frequently arisen whether a sale by an agent will constitute a violation of the statute on the part of the principal. The doctrine is clear and well established that where a contract is made in a manner prohibited by a statute passed for the protection of a buyer, no action can be maintained upon it; and that, where the statute directs the mode in which the contract shall be made, not following the direction is equivalent to disobeying a prohibition. b. Indictment, Information,[64] or Complaint[65]— (I) In General. Prosecutions for the illegal exposure or sale of unwholesome foods are usually begun by an indictment,[66] an information,[67] or a complaint in the nature of an indictment[68] for a criminal offense.

(II) Allegations— (A) In General. The allegations of the indictment or complaint in such cases are dependent not only upon the terms of the statute and the exact nature of the offense charged,[69] but also upon the nature of the proceeding under which a conviction is sought.[70]

(B) Following Language of Statute. In prosecutions for this offense, as in

Under the Indiana Pure Food Law affixing a penalty for the sale or having for sale adulterated foods, and providing that it shall be the duty of the state board of health to enforce the law of the state governing food and drug adulterations, it was held that such provisions did not exclude individuals from making complaint against one for the violation of the statute. 69. Wilkins v. U. S., 96 Fed. 837, 37 C. C. A. 588. An affidavit charging a person with selling and delivering oleomargarine which when sold contained coloring matter, to wit, butter yellow, sufficiently charges a violation of the law, although it contains descriptive words which partially bring the substance sold within the statutory definition of oleomargarine. State v. Arata, 69 Ohio St. 211, 68 N. E. 1046.

Under Md. Code, art. 27, § 90, providing that any person who sells oleomargarine to a person who asks for butter shall be guilty of a fraud, an indictment charging such an offense need not allege that the oleomargarine was fraudulently sold. Fox v. State, 94 Md. 143, 50 Atl. 700, 89 Am. St. Rep. 419.

Under a statute requiring oleomargarine to be packed in packages "marked and branded as the commissioner of internal revenue shall prescribe," and imposing a penalty for packing the same "in any manner contrary to law," an indictment has been held good which charges defendant with packing oleomargarine "in packages not marked in accordance with the regulations of the commissioner," without regard to the kind of package used. U. S. v. Dougherty, 101 Fed. 439.

An affidavit for refusing to furnish, on demand, for analysis, "an article of food" included in the provisions of a certain act is bad for not saying what article of food was demanded, and should distinctly set forth what statute is violated. It is not enough to say that defendant refused to furnish for analysis a sample contrary to an act passed on a certain day. Margolius v. State, 4 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 354, 1 Ohio N. P. 264.

Special complaint.— Under the New Jersey statute, punishing the sale of milk under a certain standard, the complaint should be special, and not in the form of a complaint for selling milk which has been adulterated. State v. Newton, 45 N. J. L. 469.

Under the New York Agricultural Law, subjecting to a penalty persons selling as natural butter, produced from unadulterated milk or cream, any oleomargarine or other substance made in imitation of butter from animal fats or animal or vegetable oils not the product of the dairy, a complaint for the recovery of such penalty must show that the oleaginous substance sold was made from animal fats or animal or vegetable oils not the product of the dairy. People v. Laning, 40 N. Y. App. Div. 227, 57 N. Y. Suppl. 1057.

all others, an indictment which substantially follows the language of the statute will be held sufficient.[71]

(c) Description of Accused. Where the statute makes punishable a certain class of persons, such as dealers in a particular article, the indictment should allege that defendant was a dealer.[72]

(d) Description of Purchaser. The name of the person or persons to whom the food was sold, if such person or persons are known, should be alleged.[73]

(e) Description of Article Sold. It is unnecessary to set forth what rendered the food unwholesome.[74]

Laws (1884), c. 202, punishing any persons selling, supplying, or bringing to be manufactured to any butter or cheese factory any milk diluted with water, it was held that an indictment alleging that defendant brought to a certain cheese factory, for the purpose of being manufactured into cheese and butter, a large quantity of milk diluted with water, and that such milk was delivered to a firm named, for the purpose and intent of cheating and defrauding the firm, sufficiently charged a crime, under the statute. People v. Harris, 54 Hun (N. Y.) 638, 7 N. Y. Suppl. 773.

An information charging that vanilla extract was colored to conceal its inferiority, and to make it appear of greater value than it really was, is sufficient to warrant the submission to the jury of the question whether the extract was inferior. People v. Hinshaw, 135 Mich. 378, 97 N. W. 758.

No precise form of words necessary.— An indictment for selling unwholesome provisions must charge that the article was sold for consumption as food for men; but this need not be charged in any precise form of words, and the allegation that the accused "sold to divers citizens five hundred pounds, of beef as good and wholesome beef and food" is sufficient. Goodrich v. People, 19 N. Y. 574 [affirming 3 Park. Cr. 622].

A complaint under Mass. Gen. St. c. 49, § 151, punishing dealers in milk who, being recorded in the books of the milk inspector as dealers, knowingly sell adulterated milk, made by "F, inspector of milk in the city of Boston," and alleging that defendant, being a dealer, and being recorded as such "in the books of said F," sold, etc., does not sufficiently allege that he was recorded in the books of the inspector as a dealer in milk, the words, "inspector of milk in the city of Boston," being merely descriptio personæ. Com. v. McCarron, 2 Allen (Mass.) 157.

Sale by agent.— A complaint under Ohio Rev. St. § 7468-13, providing a punishment for whoever, by himself or his servant or agent, or as servant or agent of any other person, sells milk from which the cream has been removed, charging a principal with an improper sale, is insufficient where the sale, if made at all, was made by an agent. Heider v. State, 4 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 227. See supra, IV, A, 1, f. A complaint for the violation of Mass. St. (1886) c. 317, § 1, requiring that in the sale at retail of any compound in imitation of butter "the seller or his agents" shall attach to each package a label of a specified character describing the article, need not allege that the sale with which defendant is charged was actually made by his agent, in order to let in proof of that fact. Com. v. Gray, 150 Mass. 327, 23 N. E. 47.

73. People v. Burns, 53 Hun (N. Y.) 274, 6 N. Y. Suppl. 611.

Unknown persons.— Where an indictment for selling unwholesome provisions sets forth sales to persons to the jurors unknown the vendees need not be named. Goodrich v. People, 3 Park. Cr. (N. Y.) 622. An allegation in an indictment for the sale of diseased meat that the meat was sold to persons unknown to the grand jury is not authorized, unless the grand jury have made a careful investigation to learn the names of the purchasers. Marxen v. State, 44 Tex. Cr. 41, 68 S. W. 277. Since a prosecution for the sale of oleomargarine without notice to the purchasers, as required by 1 N. J. St. p. 1164, § 4, made triable, by section 10, before a justice of the peace, is a summary proceeding, a complaint failing to state the name of the purchaser or that he was unknown, or not ascertainable, is insufficient to support a conviction. Feigen v. McGuire, 64 N. J. L. 152, 44 Atl. 972.

Refusal to sell for analysis.— An affidavit that defendant refused to sell an article of food for analysis, which fails to state the name of the article, or of the party demanding its sale, and does not designate the act violated except by its date, is fatally defective. Margolius v. State, 4 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 354, 1 Ohio N. P. 264.

74. Isenhour v. State, 157 Ind. 517, 62 N. E. 40, 87 Am. St. Rep. 228; Goodrich v. People, 3 Park. Cr. (N. Y.) 622.

Under Ala. Acts (1894-1895), p. 777, § 1, it has been held that an indictment is not open to the objections of insufficient description, or that it does not charge an offense, where it charges a sale of the "article, product, or compound," and avers that it was made wholly or partly out of fat, oil, or oleaginous substance, or compound thereof," that it was not produced directly

(F) Intent — (1) In General. Whenever the intention of a party is necessary to constitute the offense, such intent must be alleged in every material part of the description where it so constitutes it.[75] The allegation of guilty knowledge in an indictment of this description depends upon the language and intention of the statute under which it is drawn.[76]

(2) For Food. It should be alleged that the deleterious article in question was sold as an article of food.[77]

(3) To Injure Health. An indictment for selling unwholesome food as good and wholesome food need not allege that defendant intended to injure the health of the persons who ate it or that it did injure their health.[78]

(III) Duplicity. The act of selling or exposing for sale are considered in law one offense,[79] and the mere fact that the offense is thus alleged in the indictment will not render it defective on the ground of duplicity.[80]

c. Evidence. The question of evidence in this class of cases usually arises upon the intent of defendant,[81] and his guilty knowledge at the time of the and at the time of manufacture from unadulterated milk or cream from the same; and that such article, product, or compound was in imitation of yellow butter, produced from pure, unadulterated milk or cream from the same. Cook v. State, 110 Ala. 40, 20 So. 360.

75. Com. v. Boynton, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 499.

76. Thus where the mere fact of possession or sale is an offense no allegation of guilty knowledge is required. Lansing v. State, (Nebr. 1905) 102 N. W. 254. On the other hand, where guilty knowledge is one of the elements of the offense there must not only be an allegation to such effect (Moeschke v. State, 14 Ind. App. 393, 42 N. E. 1029), and such allegation must cover each element of the offense mentioned in the statute (Com. v. Boynton, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 499; State v. Falk, 38 Mo. App. 554).

Surplusage.— An averment in an indictment under Mass. St. (1864) c. 122, § 4, punishing the selling of adulterated milk, that defendant had knowledge that the milk was adulterated will be rejected as surplusage. Com. v. Farren, 9 Allen (Mass.) 489.

Under Mass. St. (1866) c. 253, § 1, which punishes knowingly selling or having in possession with intent to sell the meat of a calf killed when less than four weeks old, it was held that an indictment charging that defendant killed a calf, intending to sell its meat, "well knowing that said calf was less than four weeks old," was a sufficient allegation of defendant's knowledge. Com. v. Raymond, 97 Mass. 567.

Where an indictment charges the sale of unwholesome articles, it should not only charge that the sale was made knowingly, but should also aver that defendant knew at the time of the sale the corrupt and unwholesome condition of the article sold. Com. v. Boynton, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 499.

77. Lansing v. State, (Nebr. 1905) 102 N. W. 254, holding that the allegation that defendant sold milk "as and for pure milk, an article of food" is a sufficient allegation that it was sold as an article of food.

St. (1864) c. 122, § 4, punishing the selling, keeping, or offering for sale of adulterated milk, an indictment which charges that defendant sold a certain quantity of "adulterated milk, to which a large quantity, — that is to say, four quarts, — of water had been added" is not bad for duplicity. Com. v. Farren, 9 Allen (Mass.) 489.

Under N. Y. Laws (1884), c. 202, punishing any persons selling, supplying, or bringing to be manufactured to any butter or cheese manufactory any milk diluted with water, it was held that an indictment alleging that defendant, on the third and fourth of August, brought to a certain factory a large quantity of milk diluted with water, to be manufactured, etc., alleges but a single transaction, and charges but one offense, although two days are assigned for its commission. E. 360, which were criminal prosecutions for having in possession, with intent to sell, oleomargarine in a tub not marked as required by Mass. St. (1886) c. 317, § 1, it appeared that on the date of the alleged offense the tub was not exposed for sale, nor so situated that it could be seen by defendant's customers; that it was at the bottom of a large refrigerator in the basement of his store; that he purchased it in another state, and had not seen it since the date of its arrival; that he bought it with the intent to sell the oleomargarine at retail in his store, but that he did not intend to sell it or expose it for sale till the marks had been examined, and that if it was not marked in accordance with the law he intended to have it marked sale.[82] The mere testimony of the accused that he had endeavored to comply with the law will not avail;[83] the evidence of intention is to be gathered from the acts performed.[84] While the ordinary rules of evidence and presumptions control as in other criminal prosecutions,[85] yet each case is to be decided by the particular facts as presented.[86]

Presumption arising from sale.— Upon an indictment for selling diseased meat without making it known to the buyer, it is sufficient for the state to prove that defendant knowingly sold such meat; the presumption arising from such proof being that the sale was unlawful, and it is incumbent upon the defendant to prove that he disclosed to the buyer the fact that the meat was unsound. Seibright v. State, 2 W. Va. 591.

85. See, generally, CRIMINAL LAW; EVIDENCE. Where, in a prosecution under the Pennsylvania act of July 7, 1885, punishing the sale of adulterated milk, defendant's witness and employee admitted that he had skimmed milk by defendant's direction and sold it from unmarked cans in violation of the act, the jury had the right to infer that the employee watered the milk by the same authority so as to constitute an adulteration within the meaning of the statute. Com. v. Hough, 1 Pa. Dist. 51.

Presumptive evidence of guilt under a statute punishing the sale of oleomargarine, etc., by any person representing the articles to be butter, and providing that the sale and representation shall be presumptive evidence of guilt, it was held that the presumption was not met by showing the absence of knowledge of the adulteration and of an intent to deceive, but only by controverting the prosecution's evidence showing the sale and false representation. People v. Mahaney, 41 Hun (N. Y.) 26.

Sample illegally obtained.— On the trial of a complaint for exposing for sale oleomargarine in imitation of butter, the fact that a sample of the oleomargarine was obtained from defendant in an illegal manner does not render such sample inadmissible as evidence. Laws (1884), c. 202, § 1, which makes it a misdemeanor to sell or expose for sale any impure, unhealthy, or adulterated milk, defined by section 13 to be milk containing more than eighty-eight per cent of water, except (Laws (1885), c. 183) skimmed milk for use in the county in which it is produced, the evidence showed that defendant had several milk-cans in his store containing cream, pure milk, and skimmed milk, respectively. When the inspectors called on defendant he told them to step back where the milk was kept and help themselves. It did not appear from which can the milk analyzed by the inspectors was taken, or that defendant exposed for sale the milk analyzed as pure milk, or otherwise than as skimmed milk. Under such circumstances it was held that the evidence was not sufficient to sustain a conviction. People v. Thompson, 14 N. Y. Suppl. 819.

Meat partly diseased.— Where there is no evidence in a prosecution for the sale of diseased meat that the meat of a certain animal was diseased, and certain purchasers testify that it was good, the mere fact that the leg of the animal was broken, and a portion of the leg swollen when killed, which parts are not sold, is not sufficient to sustain conviction. Marxen v. State, 44 Tex. Cr. 41, 68 S. W. 277. Nor was it a sufficient hearing, upon the owner's appearance in response to such citation, that, on the owner's admitting that the ice came from a certain lake, that he sold it to his customers, and that it was the same ice that the city bacteriologist had examined and found dangerous to health, a judgment of seizure was entered, since the burden of proof was upon the party making the charge of impurity to establish his claim.

FOOTMAN. A pedestrian or person walking on the sidewalk.[7]

FOOTPRINT. See CRIMINAL LAW.[8]

FOOT-RACE. A race run by a person on foot.[9] The term may refer to one person running alone against time.[10]

FOOTWAY. A term used merely to distinguish an ordinary passageway from a horse or carriage way.[11]

FOR.[12] As a conjunction, sometimes used as meaning "because."[13] As a preposition, the part of speech in which it most commonly appears, frequently used as meaning "as agent of," "in behalf of," or "in place of";[14] "by";[15] "designed to be or serve as";[16] "in consideration of";[17] "in favor of";[18] "in lieu of";[19] "on";[20] "on account of," "by reason of," or "because of";[21]

Compared with and distinguished from "of."— While the word is sometimes used as synonymous with the word "of" (Slymer v. State, 62 Md. 237, 242; Snell v. Scott, 2 Mich. N. P. 108, 110), it has a broader meaning (Snell v. Scott, 2 Mich. N. P. 108, 110). The variation between the word "for" and the word "of" seems at first slight, but in the connection with which they are used in signatures of this kind the difference is substantial. Tucker Mfg. I. DEFINITIONS.

A forcible entry or detainer consists in violently taking or keeping possession of lands or tenements, by means of threats, force, or arms, and without authority of law.[1]

II. FORCIBLE ENTRY, FORCIBLE DETAINER, AND UNLAWFUL DETAINER DISTINGUISHED.

While it is usual to treat forcible entry and detainer as one offense or ground of liability, yet it is recognized by the early English statutes,[2] and by many of those of the present time,[3] that forcible entry and forcible detainer are separate and distinct; a forcible entry being generally an entry upon another's possession by force or violence,[4] and a forcible detainer being generally a wrongful or unlawful entry, although without force, which has been followed by a detention with force and a strong hand.[5] Unlawful detainer is distinguished from forcible detainer in that the element of force is wanting. III. CRIMINAL LIABILITY.

A. Origin and Development — 1. At Common Law. A forcible entry was an indictable offense at common law,[10] and this common-law liability is not abrogated or affected by statutes making the offense indictable,[11] or providing the injured party a remedy by a civil action or proceeding.[12] But since they furnish the injured party a more speedy and efficient remedy, they have caused the criminal proceeding to fall into disuse in many jurisdictions.[13] There is some conflict of authority as to whether a forcible detainer was indictable at common law.[14] that there should be no entry except where an entry was given by law, and even then not with strong hand or multitude of people, and made the offense indictable.[16] This statute abrogated the old rule of the common law that a person entitled to possession might recover and maintain his possession by force if he used no more than was actually necessary for that purpose,[17] but is said to have had no further effect.[18] The second statute[19] provided for a summary conviction of offenders by magistrates on view.[20] The third statute[21] extended the remedy to cases where there was both a forcible entry and detainer and where there was peaceful entry followed by a forcible detainer,[22] and was the first legislation relating to forcible detainer.[23] This and two later statutes[24] provided also for a restitution of possession to the injured party.[25]

3. IN THE UNITED STATES. The English statutes making forcible entry and detainer indictable are in force in some of the states, either as a part of the common law of those states,[26] or by virtue of statutory provisions adopting certain portions of the English statute law,[27] while in others the original English statute has been substantially reënacted,[28] or there are other special statutes of similar character making the offense indictable.[29] The offense, however, is recognized as indictable as a common-law offense.[30]

In New Hampshire both the common law and the English statutes, which as modified by the statutes of that state were formerly in force (State v. Pearson, 2 N. H. 550. See also State v. Sawyer, 5 N. H. 398) were repealed by the act of 1842, and a forcible entry and detainer is not as such an indictable offense in that state (State v. Morgan, 59 N. H. 322).

31. State v. Brinkerhoff, 44 Mo. App. 169; State v. Jacobs, 94 N. C. 950.
Forcible entry differs from forcible trespass in that the latter strictly speaking applies to incorporeal right, such as an easement which is not in possession and for which a writ of entry could not be maintained.[32]

2. Actual Entry Necessary. To constitute the offense of forcible entry an actual entry is necessary. An unsuccessful attempt to enter is not sufficient.[33]

3. Possession of Prosecutor. It is an essential element of the offense of forcible entry that at the time of the offense the premises shall be in the actual possession of him whose possession is charged to have been interfered with.[34] To constitute actual possession it is not necessary that the party be personally present on the premises at the time of the offense if he is in actual exercise of authority and control over the same.[35] He will be deemed to be present and in possession, although temporarily absent, if represented by a member of his family,[36] or by a tenant.[37] The possession must also be peaceable as distinguished from a mere scrambling possession.[38] An actual peaceable possession, however, is all that is essential to maintain the action.[39] It is immaterial whether or not such a possession is also rightful,[40] and it is not necessary that the prosecutor should have any legal title in the property.[41]

4. Force. To constitute a forcible entry there must be more force than amounts to a mere trespass.[42] The entry must be accompanied with some circum-

personal property, and the former to lands and tenements (State v. Lawson, 123 N. C. 740, 31 S. E. 667, 68 Am. St. Rep. 844; State v. Davis, 109 N. C. 809, 13 S. W. 883, 14 L. R. A. 206; State v. Jacobs, 94 N. C. 950) but the distinction is not always observed (State v. Lawson, supra).

What constitutes a possession.— Where the land is inclosed and in actual cultivation and the prosecutor resides near it and is in the habit of going to it daily he is in possession (State v. Bennett, 1 Harp. (S. C.) 503, 18 Am. Dec. 663); and where a man in any manner circumscribes a reasonable amount of land, settles on a part of it, and uses the residue as other men do he is in possession of the whole so as to maintain a prosecution for forcible entry on any part of it (Com. v. Robinson, Add. (Pa.) 14); but merely surveying the land and building cabins thereon and leaving them unfinished and empty is not such a possession as will support a prosecution for forcible entry and detainer (Com. v. Lemmon, Add. (Pa.) 315).

A bare custody as distinguished from a possession is not sufficient. State v. Curtis, 20 N. C. 363; Com. v. Prison Keeper, 1 Ashm. (Pa.) 140.

A peaceable entry, although unlawful, if no force or violence is used in taking or maintaining the same, is a mere trespass (People

stances of violence either actual or threatened;[43] something amounting to a breach of the peace.[44] But it is not necessary that there be any act of great public violence or terror,[45] or an actual personal injury to the person in possession.[46] It is sufficient if the entry is accompanied with such a display of force or circumstances of violence or terror as to give the party in possession reasonable ground to believe that he must yield in order to avoid a personal injury,[47] or breach of the peace,[48] or that any resistance would be useless.[49] This terror may be caused by the party carrying with him such an unusual number of attendants or by arming himself in such a manner as plainly to intimate his design to back his pretensions by force; by actually threatening to kill, maim, or beat those who continue in possession; or by making use of expressions plainly implying a purpose of using force against those who make resistance;[50] and in such cases it is not necessary that the party in possession should make an actual forcible resistance.[51] The same circumstances of force, violence, or terror are essential to a forcible detainer as to a forcible entry.[52] There may be a forcible detainer, although the entry is peaceable;[53] but whoever retains a wrongful possession by keeping an unusual number of people or unusual weapons or threatening to do some bodily hurt to the former possessor if he dares to return is guilty of a forcible detainer, although no attempt is made to reënter.[54]

54. People v. Rickert, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 226; 1 Hawkins P. C. c. 64, § 30.

5. Number of Persons Making Entry. The number of persons making the entry is of itself immaterial.[55] It is not necessary that the entry should be made by a multitude of people,[56] as a single person may commit the offense;[57] while on the other hand a large number of persons may actually enter upon land in possession of another under such circumstances that the entry will be no more than a simple trespass.[58]

6. Entry Under Judicial Process. The force involved in the offense of forcible entry is private force unlawfully exerted, and the public force of the state lawfully exercised cannot be the means of a wrongful entry.[59] An entry made with a lawful warrant executed in a lawful way by a lawful officer is not a forcible entry, although the affidavit on which the warrant was issued is false;[60] nor is a person guilty of forcible detainer for forcibly retaining possession of property which has been delivered to him and taken in good faith by virtue of a writ regular on its face and issued upon the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction, although the writ may have been wrongfully issued;[61] but where a justice acting without any jurisdiction assists a person in forcibly ejecting another who is in possession it is a forcible entry on the part of both the justice and the person so entering.[62]

7. Breaking Into Buildings. It has been held that breaking into a dwelling-house is a forcible entry, although there is at the time no person in the house or on the premises;[63] but on the contrary it has been held that such an entry, if accompanied with no more violence than is incident to effecting the entry, is a mere trespass.[64] In the absence of circumstances amounting to a public breach of the peace it is not a forcible entry to break into an unoccupied dwelling or vacant premises.[65] So it is not a forcible entry to break into an outhouse,[66] or merely to take off the lock of a house and substitute another,[67] or after being admitted into a house to break open the door of a locked room.[68]

C. Who May Be Liable. Where a husband and wife are living apart from each other the wife may be prosecuted for forcibly entering upon the lands of the husband,[69] or the husband for forcibly entering upon the lands of the wife.[70] A landlord will be liable for entering in a forcible manner upon a tenant who holds over,[71] and a joint tenant or tenant in common will be liable for forcibly ejecting his cotenant.[72] Where the trustees of a church have in a regular meeting decided to close a building belonging to the church it is a forcible entry for any trustee who did not assent to such action,[73] or for the members of the congregation[74] to afterward forcibly break into such building; but a man who breaks into his own dwelling which is forcibly detained from him by one who has the bare custody of it is not liable for a forcible entry.[75] So it has been settled from an early period that all persons who accompany another for the purpose of making a forcible entry are jointly liable whether they actually enter upon the premises or not.[76]

D. Prosecution and Punishment — 1. SUMMARY PROCEEDINGS. The second of the early English statutes[77] provided for a summary conviction for a forcible entry by a justice of the peace on view, the justice being authorized to go upon the premises, remove the force, and convict, fine, and imprison the wrong-doer.[78] This statute has been held to be in force in a few jurisdictions in this country,[79] but in most of the states it seems that the proceeding is unknown.[80] In proceedings under this statute there could be no award of restitution.[81]

2. PROCEEDINGS BY INDICTMENT — a. The Indictment[82] — (I) IN GENERAL. The indictment must allege sufficient facts to show upon its face the commission of an indictable offense,[83] and so must set out with clearness and certainty all the facts essential to constitute the offense charged.[84] It is sufficient if the offense is stated with such clearness that the jury may readily understand its nature, and defendant prepare his defense, and the court pronounce judgment according to the rights of the case.[85] If the indictment is under a statute it is sufficient if it follows the language of the statute,[86] unless the statute fails to define or set out the facts which constitute the offense.[87]

(II) ALLEGATIONS AS TO FORCE. The allegations of the indictment must be sufficient to show the use of that degree of force or violence which is essential to constitute the offense charged,[88] but no particular or technical form of words is necessary.[89] To allege that defendant entered with force and arms is insufficient,[90] that being the technical term employed to designate the force which the law ascribes to every common trespass,[91] but if other words are added which import actual violence the indictment is good.[92] Alleging the entry to have been unlawful and with strong hand is sufficient.[93] The words "with strong hand" mean something more than a mere trespass and are technically appropriate to designate the degree of force necessary to constitute the offense.[94] It is not necessary to

The words "with strong hand" should not set out the particular facts constituting the force or violence used.[95] The same allegations as to force are necessary in an indictment for a forcible detainer as for a forcible entry,[96] but where the indictment charges a forcible detainer only, it is not necessary to allege whether the original entry was forcible or peaceable.[97]

(III) ALLEGATIONS AS TO POSSESSION. An indictment for a forcible entry must charge that the prosecutor was in the actual and peaceable possession of the premises at the time of the alleged offense,[98] but need not state that he was personally present.[99] Such possession, however, is all that need be alleged,[1] it being unnecessary to allege any title in prosecutor[2] or lack of title in defendant,[3] or to state who was the owner of the premises,[4] unless the indictment is brought under those statutes providing for restitution which require the prosecutor to have a certain estate or interest in the premises, in which case the indictment must allege such an estate or interest as to bring him within the provisions of the statute.[5] In forcible detainer the indictment must allege the prior possession of the prosecutor.[6]

(IV) DESCRIPTION OF PREMISES. The indictment must describe the premises where the alleged offense was committed with certainty[7] such as will inform defendant of the specific charge which he is to meet and enable the justice or be omitted. Com. v. Brown, 138 Pa. St. 447, 21 Atl. 17.

sheriff to restore the injured party to possession;[8] but certainty to a reasonable extent is all that is necessary;[9] and it seems that some less degree of certainty may be permitted in cases where the prosecution is merely to punish defendant than where the prosecutor is also seeking to be restored to possession.[10] A material variance between description of the property as laid in the indictment and the evidence is fatal.[11]

(v) Conclusion. In jurisdictions where statutes making forcible entry and detainer indictable are in force, it is proper that the indictment should conclude against the form of the statute.[12] An indictment concluding against the form of the statute may be sustained if the facts charged constitute an offense either by statute or at common law,[13] and even where there is no statute these words may be regarded as surplusage and the indictment sustained if it is otherwise good as a common-law indictment.[14]

(vi) Joinder of Offenses. Both forcible entry and forcible detainer, although they may constitute different offenses, may be charged together in a single count of the indictment.[15] If the indictment contains charges that are distinct and grow out of different transactions the court will compel the state to elect or will quash,[16] but where it appears that the charges in the several counts relate to the same transaction, varied and modified merely to meet the probable proofs, the court cannot either quash or compel an election,[17] and if either count is good the indictment should be sustained as to that count.[18]

b. Evidence[19] — (i) Admissibility — (a) In General. Evidence of an assault upon the person of the party in possession is admissible to show the character of the entry,[20] and evidence that the party making the entry remained in possession is admissible to show that he made his entry complete, although he is not charged with a forcible detainer.[21] Tax receipts, while not alone evidence of actual possession, are admissible to strengthen other evidence of actual possession.[22]

Evidence that a civil action for the same offense is pending is irrevelant and inadmissible.[23]

(B) Evidence of Title. As the title to the premises is not in issue and cannot be tried, evidence of title is inadmissible,[24] and cannot be introduced either to justify the force[25] or to avoid restitution.[26]

(II) Weight and Sufficiency. To authorize a conviction for a forcible entry or a forcible detainer the evidence must establish each and every essential element of the offense charged,[27] and must establish the offense as alleged in the indictment.[28] The evidence must be sufficient to establish defendant's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt.[29]

c. Trial[30] — (I) Questions of Law and Fact. The question of possession is a mixed one of law and fact.[31] Whether, if there be evidence of possession, that evidence is true, is a question of fact for the jury; but whether, admitting the evidence to be true, the possession shown is of such a character as will be protected against a forcible entry is a question of law for the court.[32] In a prosecution for forcible detainer based upon alleged threats of violence, it is a question for the jury whether such was the import of the language used.[33]

(II) Title Not Involved. A prosecution for forcible entry and detainer does not involve any question of title,[34] and cannot be maintained or used as a means of trying title to the premises where the alleged force was committed,[35] or as a means of collateral attack upon proceedings in a civil action concerning the same.[36]

(III) Plea of Former Acquittal. A former acquittal may be pleaded in bar of a prosecution for forcible entry and detainer where it appears that it was the same transaction, but the plea is not available to one jointly indicted for the same offense in the second indictment who was not a party to the former prosecution.[37]

(IV) Verdict. Where both forcible entry and forcible detainer are charged in the same indictment, defendant may be acquitted of one and convicted of the other.[38] Where both offenses are charged in the same indictment if one be defectively set out but the other properly, defendant may be convicted of the one offense which is properly charged,[39] and in such cases a general verdict of guilty will be sustained as given on the good count.[40] Where both counts are properly charged a general verdict of guilty is a verdict of guilty on both counts unless defendant demands a separate verdict on each count,[41] but if the evidence supports only one of such counts a general verdict of guilty cannot be sustained.[42]

d. Fine.[43] Where, on an appeal from proceedings before a justice, the case is tried de novo in a higher court, that court may impose any fine within the limits of the statute, although greater in amount than the justice had jurisdiction to impose.[44]

e. Damages and Costs. It is provided by the English statute[45] that if defendant pleads three years' possession in bar of restitution and the plea is decided against him he shall pay such costs and damages as the judges or justices shall assess,[46] but in no other case can damages be awarded in a criminal proceeding.[47] Where defendant is acquitted on the merits, costs cannot be taxed against the prosecutor unless the prosecution was frivolous or malicious.[48]

f. Restitution — (I) RIGHT TO RESTITUTION. In the absence of statute there can be no restitution of possession in a criminal proceeding for forcible entry and detainer,[49] and the early English statutes of 5 and 15 Rich. II contained no such provision.[50] This was remedied by two later statutes[51] which provided that the injured party might be restored to possession.[52] These statutes were construed as providing for a restitution only where the prosecutor was seized of an estate of freehold,[53] but by a later statute[54] the right was extended to tenants of lesser estates.[55] These statutes are in effect in some of the states.[56]

(II) PROCEEDINGS TO PROCURE RESTITUTION. Under the statutes authorizing an award of restitution a justice cannot proceed summarily, but only by way of an inquest and with the intervention of a jury,[57] and defendant must be given notice of the inquest and an opportunity to be heard.[58] Defendant may traverse the force found by the jury, and if he does so restitution cannot be awarded until the traverse is tried and found against him by another jury.[59] On an indictment there can be no award of restitution after conviction unless there was an allegation in the indictment as to the prosecutor's estate or interest in the premises,[60] and where the proceedings are before a justice there must be a finding in the inquest as to such estate or interest.[61] Under a writ of restitution the sheriff is only authorized to dispossess defendant against whom there has been judgment and sentence and those claiming under him, and cannot dispossess persons against whom an indictment is still pending.[62] An appeal from a conviction of forcible entry and detainer does not suspend the right of restitution.[63]

(III) EFFECT OF THREE YEARS' POSSESSION. The statutes providing for restitution excepted from their operation cases where defendant had been in quiet possession for three years prior to the indictment.[64] Where such possession is pleaded there can be no award of restitution until this question is tried.[65] The plea, however, is available only in bar of the award of restitution and not in bar of the prosecution.[66]

g. Re-Restitution. Where on appeal or certiorari an inquest or indictment is quashed the court may award a re-restitution to the party dispossessed by the prior proceedings,[67] but re-restitution cannot be demanded as a matter of right, and the court will not grant it unless it appears that the party asking it has a right to the possession.[68]

IV. CIVIL LIABILITY.

A. Nature and Elements — 1. IN GENERAL. While forcible entry and detainer as a civil proceeding is based upon and has by modern legislation been evolved from the English forcible entry and detainer which was a criminal proceeding merely,[69] yet the present statutes often contain such modification and additions[70] as to make it impossible to state any rules or principles which are always applicable. Generally speaking forcible entry and detainer is a remedy for the protection of the actual possession of realty, whether rightful or wrongful, against forcible invasion, its object being to prevent disturbances of the public peace, and to forbid any person righting himself by his own hand and by violence; and therefore ordinarily the only matters involved are the possession of plaintiff and the use of force by defendant.[71] Except in the very few instances Distinguished from trespass.— Forcible entry may be maintained where trespass cannot; as for instance, against the owner of the land; who may defend himself against an action of trespass by the plea of liberum tenementum. The owner of the land, having the right of entry, will not commit a trespass by entering, although with force, unless he also commits a breach of the peace. The law will not give damages against him in an action of trespass quare clausum fregit, but will compel him to restore the possession in an action of forcible entry. Olinger v. Shepherd, 12 Gratt. (Va.) 462.

Not a matter of contract.—"An action of forcible entry and detainer, in no sense of the term, can be said to be a matter of contract. The idea of a contract, so far from entering into, or forming any part of, the action, is expressly excluded by the form and substance of the action. The party's right to recover is based upon the ground of wrong and injury done or accompanied with violence or force. It is an unlawful seizure, on the part of the defendant, of the possession of the freehold, or a wrongful detention of that possession." McLain v. Taylor, 4 Ark. 147, 149.

Motive for expulsion immaterial.— One in peaceable possession, if forcibly expelled from in which there is special statutory authority for adjudicating title,[72] title is not involved and cannot be inquired into,[73] and generally the right to possession as realty, may maintain forcible entry, and the motives of the party causing the expulsion are immaterial. Baker v. Hays, 28 Ill. 387.

Good faith of defendant not involved.— It has been decided that under the statutes of California and Washington regulating forcible entry and detainer the question of good or bad faith on the part of defendant in making an entry on another's possession is not to be inquired into as it does not affect his liability (Kerr v. O'Keefe, 138 Cal. 415, 71 Pac. 447; Lasserot v. Gamble, (Cal. 1896) 46 Pac. 917; Giddings v. '76 Land, etc., Co., 83 Cal. 96, 23 Pac. 196; Voll v. Hollis, 60 Cal. 569; Gore v. Altice, 33 Wash. 335, 74 Pac. 556. Compare Carteri v. Roberts, 140 Cal. 164, 73 Pac. 818), but under an earlier California statute it was held otherwise (Phenix Mill, etc., Co. v. Lawrence, 55 Cal. 143; Dennis v. Wood, 48 Cal. 361; Powell v. Lane, 45 Cal. 677; Townsend v. Little, 45 Cal. 673; Conroy v. Duane, 45 Cal. 597; Shelby v. Houston, 38 Cal. 410; Thompson v. Smith, 28 Cal. 521).

Effect of allegations as to title.— The question of title is not brought into such an action merely by an allegation that it is involved. Whether it is or not depends in the first instance upon the facts pleaded, and ultimately upon the evidence. Hamill v. Clear Creek County Bank, 22 Colo. 384, 45 Pac. 411.

In Illinois, although the rule that title to land cannot be tried in an action of forcible detainer is recognized, yet to recover in such an action, under the act of Feb. 20, 1861, against one who remains in possession after his rights have been divested by judicial sale, plaintiff must show a valid judgment, execution, and deed. right is foreign thereto,[75] and therefore, although one may have the title to realty and be justly entitled to the immediate possession thereof, yet if he enters by violence upon the actual possession of another who has no title or right whatever, he is liable to an action of forcible entry and detainer.[76] The right to possession may, however, be inquired into under the provisions of some of the statutes as to forcible entry and detainer and kindred actions.[77]

2. Possession — a. Necessity. An action of forcible entry and detainer is strictly possessory in its nature, and, unless otherwise expressly provided by statute, a person who has never been in possession of land cannot maintain the action to obtain possession. If he has any interest in the land, he must seek to establish it in some other form of action.[78] Generally speaking plaintiff in order to maintain this form of action must allege and prove that he was in peaceful and exclusive possession of the premises in controversy, and that he has been forcibly ousted or that possession was peaceably obtained and forcibly withheld by defendant.[79]

b. Sufficiency — (i) Actual or Constructive Possession. Plaintiff must show that he was in actual peaceable possession of the premises prior to and at the time of defendant's alleged forcible entry. Mere constructive possession such as the law in many cases imputes to the owner of the legal title is not sufficient.[80] In some cases it is intimated and in others it is expressly declared that constructive possession may be sufficient; but an examination of these cases reveals that there was actual pedis possessio of some part of the premises in controversy under claim and color of title to the whole, which strictly and technically speaking is actual possession of the whole whether inclosed or not, or so much thereof at least as is not in the actual adverse possession of another.[81] But where the occupant is a mere intruder or trespasser, his possession for the purposes of this action must be confined to the land actually occupied. Facts constituting actual or constructive possession.— Where plaintiff, in an action of forcible entry for the front of a town lot, proved that he had a small house in the rear of it, it was held to be sufficient to warrant the jury in finding an actual possession of the whole lot. O'Callaghan v. Booth, 6 Cal. 63. An entry on a tract of land, with an intention to take possession of the whole, by a person having a legal right thus to enter, will give a constructive possession of at least so much of the entire tract as was not actually inclosed by the person on whose possession the entry was made. Stith v. Jones, 7 Dana (Ky.) 433. An entry upon a tract of land while it is vacant, but designated by a marked boundary by a party who claims and intends to take possession of the tract, gives him a constructive possession in fact of the whole tract. Stith v. Jones, 7 Dana (Ky.) 433. Where one purchases and has his lines run, and takes possession only to the lines, although an error is made in not running the

to give him any standing at all in court, and no constructive advantage should be given him.[82]

(II) ACTUAL RESIDENCE ON PREMISES NOT NECESSARY. Actual pedis possessio or residence on the premises at the time of the forcible entry complained of is not essential to the maintenance of the action.[83] The possession to which this summary remedy applies is not confined to the pedis possessio or actual inclosure of the occupant. It applies to any possession which is sufficient to sustain an action of trespass,[84] and may apply in a case where trespass will not lie, as against the owner of land who may defend against an action of trespass by the plea of liberum tenementum.[85] The owner is not bound to be continually on his land either in person or by agent, or to station his servants there to keep intruders away. An entry coupled with such acts of ownership as clearly indicate his intention to take and hold permanent possession will be sufficient to enable him to maintain this form of action to repel an unlawful intrusion.[86]

(III) INCLOSURE AND OTHER ACTS OF DOMINION. A sufficient inclosure is of lines far enough to include the quantity conveyed, he cannot, without a subsequent entry, maintain forcible entry against one who enters between the lines. Hoskins v. Cox, 2 B. Mon. (Ky.) 306.

Interference of grants.— A person claiming under a junior grant, interfering with an elder grant, cannot, by settling or entering upon his land outside of the interference, gain the possession of that which is included within the elder grant. Pogue v. McKee, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 127. Where grants of land interfere, the entry of a party under the elder grant, with intent of taking possession of the whole grant, will give him a constructive possession of any land covered by the junior grant not in actual adverse possession. Wilson v. Stivers, 4 Dana (Ky.) 634. If one having the elder legal title enters upon land with the intention of taking possession to the boundary of his deed, he is in possession to that extent, although one be in possession outside of the interference. Grughler v. Wheeler, 12 B. Mon. (Ky.) 183.

Where a tract of land lies in two counties, there must be an entry in each county to give a possession of the whole. Consequently an entry upon land in one county and the occasional use of timber from the same survey extending into another county will not give such possession as to authorize the maintaining of a writ of forcible entry and detainer. itself a means of taking and holding actual possession of land without residence, cultivation, or other acts of dominion over it.[87] But fences are not the only means of taking possession. There may be an actual possession without fences or inclosures of any kind.[88] Such acts of ownership as are usually exercised by owners over land on which they do not reside are sufficient to warrant a finding of actual possession.[89]

Possession a mere sham.— The fact that plaintiff's possession was not taken in good faith for the purpose of occupation, but was a mere sham and pretense, will defeat an action of forcible entry. De Graw v. Prior, 60 Mo. 56; Buck v. Endicott, 103 Mo. App. 248, 77 S. W. 85.

A natural barrier, such as a deep stream, a precipitous cliff, the shore of the ocean, and the like, will serve as a portion of an inclosure of land and render a fence unnecessary in order to constitute possession. Conroy v. Duane, 45 Cal. 597. To the same effect see Hammond v. Doty, 184 Ill. 246, 56 N. E. 371 [affirming 84 Ill. App. 19].

Removal of fence soon after erection.— On or about the day defendant began to use lots that had been vacant a long time as a stone yard, plaintiffs erected about them a fence, which was within forty-eight hours removed and another fence built by defendants. It was held that the building of the fence by plaintiffs was not such a possession as would support an action for forcible entry and detainer. Dyer v. Reitz, 14 Mo. App. 45.

Rep. 537; Howard v. Whitaker, 61 S. W. 355, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 1775. To constitute the peaceable and actual possession of agricultural land, it is not absolutely necessary that the land be inclosed, but if not inclosed, it must appear that plaintiff has exercised exclusive dominion and control over that portion of land of which defendant took possession. McCormick v. Sheridan, supra. Plaintiff may show an actual possession without the lot's being inclosed with a fence, as if another person by his permission was using the ground at the time of the alleged unlawful entry in piling wood and lumber on it in such a manner as would naturally apprise the public that he was in the actual clear and visible possession thereof, this would be the possession of plaintiff and would entitle him to maintain the action. Hassett v. Johnson, supra. It does not require actual pedis possessio in all cases to support the action of forcible entry and detainer. The actual possession may exist by proof of something short of an actual residence on the land or inclosing it by a fence, as in case of a wood lot uninclosed but used as an adjunct to a farm from which the latter is supplied with timber, wood, and rails. Pearson v. Herr, 53 Ill. 144.

A common inclosure of a number of fields owned by different parties and pastured in common will not destroy such an actual possession of either field as to defeat the action. Wylie v. Waddell, 52 Mo. App. 266.

Illustrations of rule.— The possession by plaintiff of a lot immediately adjoining the lot on which he lived, and cultivated by him, and occupied by his stable, was held to be sufficient to enable him to maintain an action of forcible entry and detainer, although the exterior lines of the lot were not substantially fenced. Valencia v. Couch, 32 Cal. 339, 91 Am. Dec. 589. Where the land is used in the same manner that owners of lands of a like character in the neighborhood commonly use them, the fact that it is not inclosed is immaterial. Giddings v. '76 Land, etc., Co., 83 Cal. 96, 23 Pac. 196. One in the possession of land using it for pasture is entitled to protection against intruders the same as though he resided upon the land, and any entry in his absence and against his will is regarded as forcible and in violation of the statute. Hammond v. Doty, 184 Ill. 246, 56 N. E. 371 [affirming 84 Ill. App. 19]. One who has gone into peaceable occupancy of land as a tenant, repaired fences, plowed, sown a crop, and nailed up doors and windows of the house, thereby exercising the usual acts of dominion and control, is in actual possession and may maintain unlawful detainer against an intruder, although he lives on an adjoining tract of land. Scott v. Allenbaugh, 50 Mo. App. 130. A survey by a claimant of a lot of land, the staking off of the corners and putting up of boards with the inscription "keep out" and piling lumber upon it, and the grading of it for building purposes, is such a possession of it as will enable him to maintain an action of forcible entry and detainer against an adverse claimant who suddenly interrupts the possession. St. Louis Agricultural, etc., Assoc. v. Reinecke, 21 Mo. App. 478.

Payment of taxes.— Mere payment of taxes does not show actual possession of the premises taxed. McCartney v. McMullen, 38 Ill. 237; Miller v. Northup, 49 Mo. 397. See also McCartney v. Alderson, 45 Mo. 35.

Cutting timber.— The mere entry upon land and cutting timber is not of itself sufficient possession to sustain the action of forcible

(IV) POSSESSION WITHOUT RIGHT. A bare possession without right, if unlawfully invaded by force, will be protected and restored,[90] even against the owner or lessee of the premises who is legally entitled to possession, if plaintiff was in actual possession at the time of the forcible ouster,[91] and it is no defense that his own possession originated in force.[92] Any peaceable possession is a legal possesssion as against a wrong-doer who forcibly ejects the occupant.[93]

(V) SCRAMBLING OR INTERRUPTED POSSESSION. The action for forcible entry and detainer cannot be maintained on a mere scrambling or interrupted possession. Plaintiff's prior possession must have been actual, peaceable, and exclusive.[94] It is very well settled that a mere trespasser upon land cannot entry and detainer (Wilson v. Stivers, 4 Dana (Ky.) 634; Humphrey v. Jones, 3 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 261; Powell v. Davis, 54 Mo. 215; Bell v. Cowan, 34 Mo. 251. See also Chessen v. Harrelson, 119 Ala. 435, 24 So. 716); but in connection with other circumstances, it may form a very material length in the chain of evidence (Powell v. Davis, supra).

Stock ranging over uninclosed lands is not evidence of such a possession of any specific portion of such lands in the owner of the stock as will enable him to maintain this action. Buel v. Frazier, 38 Cal. 693.

Plowing small portion of land.— In an action of forcible entry and detainer, proof that plaintiff entered upon the land and plowed a few furrows across a portion of it does not make out such a case of actual possession on his part as to warrant a verdict in his favor. Something more is necessary showing an intention to possess, accompanied by acts indicative of that purpose. Edwards v. Cary, 60 Mo. 572.

maintain this action, although he may have been forcibly removed from the premises.[95]

(VI) POSSESSION BY AGENT OR SERVANT. One in possession of property by an agent or servant may maintain an action of forcible entry and detainer in his own name.[96] An agent in custody of property cannot, however, maintain the action in his own name, his possession being that of his principal.[97] But it has been held that where the owner of land permits another to occupy it and take care of it without any lease or agreement to pay rent, the occupant is a tenant at will and has such possession and interest as will enable him to maintain forcible entry and detainer in his own name.[98]

c. Abandonment. It is a good defense that plaintiff voluntarily abandoned the possession of the premises in controversy before the entry complained of. This, however, is a question of intention and not a question of time, except so far as the jury are entitled to consider lapse of time in connection with all the other facts and circumstances tending to show claim or non-claim on the part of plaintiff. It must be made to appear that he relinquished possession without any intention of returning or making further use of the premises.[99]

Where two parties are struggling for possession of unimproved lands, neither can maintain an action of forcible entry and detainer against the other, until he has acquired an actual possession which has ripened into peaceable occupation. Voll v. Butler, 49 Cal. 74.

Possession contested in court.— In order to maintain an action of forcible entry and detainer, actual and peaceable possession by plaintiff at the time of the entry complained of, although contested in court, is sufficient. This is not a scrambling possession, that being a struggle for possession on the land itself. Spiers v. Duane, 54 Cal. 176.

Illustration.— Where a defendant was in the quiet and peaceful possession by his tenants of an estate and plaintiff had by force and in violation of the rights of those in possession gained a temporary foothold therein during the night from which he was ejected upon the arrival of the tenants in the morning, he had acquired no possession for the disturbance of which he was entitled to maintain the process of forcible entry. Hodgkins v. Price, 132 Mass. 196.

Reason for rule.— If those who are ejected by force may maintain this process to restore themselves to the possession of which they were wrongfully deprived, it would be absurd that those who have forcibly ejected them should when they are themselves ejected be able to use this process to restore themselves to a possession which they had wrongfully and forcibly gained. having gained possession peaceably, he may resist forcibly an attempt by the former occupant to retake possession.[3]

(II) EXCEPTIONS TO RULE. In some jurisdictions the rule is that to maintain forcible entry and detainer it is not necessary that actual force or violence be used in taking possession of the premises, but that any entry which is against the will of the occupant is a forcible entry;[4] in others, one is liable to an action of forcible entry and detainer who enters upon another's possession of realty, by fraud, strategy, or stealth,[5] or in the night-time, or during the temporary absence of the occupant.[6] So in one state it is sufficient to sustain the charge of forcible detainer that the person unlawfully in possession refused to vacate the premises on lawful notice so to do.[7]

b. Sufficiency of Force — (I) IN GENERAL. What constitutes force or personal violence sufficient to sustain this action must necessarily depend upon the terms of the statute under which a case is brought, and therefore the decisions are not entirely harmonious,[8] but the following are the general rules on the sub-

Peaceable entry and subsequent violence. — If a person who has a legal right of entry upon land which is in possession of a wrongdoer is allowed to enter peaceably through the outer door of a house upon such land, it is still illegal for him to turn out the wrongdoer with violence. Edwick v. Hawkes, 18 Ch. D. 199, 50 L. J. Ch. 577, 45 L. T. Rep. N. S. 168, 29 Wkly. Rep. 914.

Kentucky.— In this state the rule is that one who enters upon land in the actual possession of another, without his consent, commits a forcible entry (Young v. Milward, 109 Ky. 123, 58 S. W. 592, 593, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 615, 627; Tucker v. Phillips, 2 Metc. 416; Davis v. Lee, 2 B. Mon. 300; Swartzwelder v. U. S. Bank, 1 J. J. K. Marsh. 296).

Tennessee.— In this state it has been held that actual force is not necessary to support an action of forcible entry and detainer, but that the law implies force in every unauthorized entry upon premises of which another is in peaceable possession, and likewise in every unauthorized obstruction of peaceable possession. ject. Acts which constitute a mere trespass upon property will not support such an action.[9] To render an entry forcible it must be accompanied either by actual violence, or by circumstances tending to excite terror in the owner or other persons in possession, and to prevent them from maintaining their rights. There must be at least apparent violence or some unusual weapons, or the attendance of an unusual number of people; some menaces or other acts giving reasonable cause to fear that the person making the forcible entry will do some bodily harm to those in possession, if they do not give up the same.[10] The same circumstances

Illustrations.— A person accompanied by several others went upon land in the possession of another, and against his remonstrances proceeded to build a fence; and when the occupant placed himself over the post-holes, with intent to prevent the construction of the fence, laid violent hands upon him and forcibly removed him, it was held that this was a forcible entry. Valencia v. Couch, 32 Cal. 339, 91 Am. Dec. 989. One who with armed men enters upon land inclosed with a fence and in the possession of another, and commences the erection of a house, and refuses to deliver up peaceable possession on demand, but makes a show of force to retain it, is guilty of forcible entry and detainer. Watson v. Whitney, 23 Cal. 375.

Breaking into a dwelling or other building. — "The breaking into a dwelling house occupied by a person or a family, being of itself calculated to excite terror or the fear of personal violence, may" constitute a forcible entry (Shaw v. Hoffman, 25 Mich. 162. See also Scarlett v. Lamarque, 5 Cal. 63); but, unless by reason of special statutory provisions (Mallon v. Moog, 121 Ala. 303, 25 So. 583; Brawley v. Risdon Iron Works, 38 Cal. 676; Mason v. Powell, 38 N. J. L. 576; Davidson v. Phillips, 9 Yerg. (Tenn.) 93, 30 Am. Dec. 393), it seems that one who breaks and enters into a dwelling-house which is even temporarily unoccupied is not liable (Griffin v. Griffin, 116 Ga. 754, 42 S. E. 1005. See also Smith v. Reeder, 21 Oreg. 541, 28 Pac. 890, 15 L. R. A. 172; Mussey v. Scott, 32 Vt. 82. But see Ainsworth v. Barry, 35 Wis. 136). The breaking the door of a barn or outhouse, or the tearing it down and removing it, and the taking and remaining in possession does not of itself, unaccompanied with any force toward any person, actual or threatened, or without creating in any way an apprehension of personal violence, constitute forcible entry or forcible detainer. of force or violence that amount to a forcible entry will also amount to a forcible detainer.[11]

(II) THREATS. When threats which might have reasonably induced a fear of personal violence are shown to have been made the action may be maintained.[12]

(III) BREACH OF THE PEACE. An entry made with such force or under such circumstances as tend to produce a breach of the peace will support this action,[13] and it has been held that there should be proof of such acts of violence as amount to a breach of the peace.[14]

(IV) ASSAULT AND BATTERY. To constitute a forcible entry and detainer, it is not necessary that the intruder should do such acts as would constitute an assault and battery.[15]

4. ABSENCE OF LEGAL AUTHORITY. The entry for which the law affords a redress is an entry by a person of his own wrong and by his own mere act without Willard v. Warren, supra), or through an open door or window, or through a hole in the floor (Pike v. Witt, supra), is not a forcible entry.

The use of rough and vulgar language without force or acts calculated to put the occupant in fear does not constitute a forcible entry. Brooks v. Warren, 5 Utah 118, 13 Pac. 175.

Such a show of force as to make resistance useless is sufficient. Minor v. Duncan, 54 Ga. 516.

The mere surmise of a person that if he attempts to retain possession force will be used to prevent it is not enough to show a forcible detainer, but an attempt must be made to regain possession, and either force, or threats of force, used to resist it. Hodgkins v. Jordan, 29 Cal. 577.

authority of law, and therefore this action cannot be maintained when one is put in possession by an officer of the law under and by the command of a court of competent jurisdiction.[16] Neither is the officer guilty of forcible entry if he acts in good faith under a writ of restitution.[17] But if the writ be void, one who enters under it is a mere intruder or trespasser.[18] In order to justify an entry under authority of a writ, the party claiming its protection must show a judgment as well as an execution.[19] If a person is dispossessed under and by virtue of a writ of possession issued on a judgment to which he is neither a party,[20] nor a privy,[21] or under a writ of restitution for different premises,[22] or where one is put in possession under a writ of possession against the execution of which an injunction has been granted, the party thus unlawfully dispossessed may maintain forcible entry and detainer to regain possession,[23] or, having regained possession, may show in defense that he was a stranger to the proceedings under which he was turned out.[24] For a person in peaceable possession before and at the time of the commencement of a suit to which he is not a party is not affected by the decree or subject to be dispossessed under a writ of assistance.[25]

Franchises are incorporeal hereditaments of an intangible nature, and are not embraced within the meaning of the term "lands or tenements," in statutes as to forcible entry and detainer. Gibbs v. Drew, 16 Fla. 147, 26 Am. Rep. 700. See also Rees v. Lawless, Litt. Sel. Cas. (Ky.) 184, 12 Am. Dec. 295.

Easements are not lands or tenements, and therefore not recoverable. Nelson v. Nelson, him whose peaceable and exclusive possession of the premises in controversy has been forcibly disturbed.[27]

b. Purchasers. The matter is purely statutory, but as a rule where there has been a forcible or unlawful entry upon land the right to maintain an action of forcible entry and detainer therefor vests at once in the one whose possession is invaded, and this right must be exercised during his life in his own name and does not pass to his assignee or vendee.[28] Where this is the rule the words in the statute concerning forcible entry and detainer which give a right of action to the person entitled to the possession apply to cases brought for forcible detainer simply and not to those for forcible entry and detainer.[29] Where plaintiff conveys property pendente lite his recovery inures to the benefit of the vendee.[30]

c. Heirs, Devisees, and Personal Representatives. Where the possession of the ancestor was such that he might have maintained forcible entry and detainer, the action may be maintained by the heirs, for the title and right of the ancestor at once descend to and vest in them.[31] They have, however, no greater right than the ancestor if living would have had.[32] So too a devisee may maintain the action, for the will when probated relates back to the death of the testator and vests his possessory rights in the devisee.[33] By statute in some jurisdictions the personal representative may maintain the action where the right to possession and control of the decedent's real estate passes to him as an incident of administration,[34] but it has been held that he cannot maintain the action without statutory authority therefor.[35]

d. Licensees. A mere licensee cannot be deemed an occupant of real property in such a sense as to render a trespass upon his occupation, however violent, a forcible entry upon land.[36]

e. Owners of Easements. As a general rule an action of ejectment or of forcible entry and detainer will not lie to recover the possession of an easement or to be let into the use or occupation of a servitude.[37] But the reason which underlies this is that the party complaining has only a right in common with the public, or with some other person or persons to the use or occupation claimed.

Accordingly, where it is made to appear that the party complaining has the exclusive right to the enjoyment of an easement, forcible entry and detainer may be maintained.[38]

f. Lessees. The action of forcible entry and detainer is for the benefit of him whose possession is invaded. Consequently, where a wrongful entry has been made upon the premises in the possession of a tenant, he and not his landlord is the proper person to institute and maintain the action.[39] Thus a mere tenant at will may maintain the action.[40] But a lessee who has never been in possession of the premises cannot maintain the action,[41] and the abandonment of the premises by a tenant is a restoration of the occupancy of the landlord and places him in a position to maintain summary proceedings against a disseizor.[42]

g. Married Women. The wife, although she occupies premises jointly with her husband, is as a rule not a necessary party plaintiff to vindicate the possession,[43] even though she may have the legal title to the premises invaded.[44] It has been held, however, that an action brought by a wife for a forcible invasion of property in her possession should not be dismissed solely on the ground that the husband is the proper party to bring the action because she might hold possession

A toll-road company which was organized for the purpose of maintaining a road over which persons were permitted to ride or drive for toll, and at which a gate was kept for the protection of said company against intruders, and to prevent any one from going on the road without first paying the toll required, can maintain an action of forcible entry and detainer to recover possession of a part of its road which has been unlawfully inclosed and is unlawfully detained by defendant, and this is true even though the only interest which plaintiff has in the premises sued for is an easement. of the land with her husband's consent.[45] And under some of the modern statutes, the wife may maintain this proceeding in her own name to recover possession of land belonging to her statutory separate estate.[46] So under a statute which empowers a wife who has been deserted by her husband to prosecute or defend actions in his name she may after such desertion maintain forcible entry and detainer in her husband's name against an intruder who ousts her from possession.[47] And a woman who together with her husband has received a deed of release from her coheirs for a tract of land in which they held a joint estate may maintain a warrant of forcible detainer without joining her children after her husband's death.[48]

h. Successful Claimant of Homestead Entry. Where adverse claimants reside on a tract of land which each claims as a homestead, the party held entitled to the homestead entry by the land-office may bring forcible entry and detainer against the unsuccessful claimant to obtain possession.[49] But until the contest is finally closed before the interior department and the land awarded to one or the other, an action of unlawful detainer will not lie in behalf of either.[50]

i. Municipal Corporations. Where a municipal corporation owns land of which it is in possession, it may maintain an action of forcible entry and detainer against any one who unlawfully intrudes thereon.[51]

j. Tenants in Common. There can be no doubt but that tenants in common of the whole estate may join in summary proceedings to recover its possession.[52] And it has repeatedly been held that one tenant in common may maintain the action against a stranger without joining his cotenants as plaintiffs.[53] And the same is true of a coparcener or joint tenant, because the possession of one is the possession of all, and as against a stranger to the title each is entitled to possession of the whole estate.[54] A joint tenant or tenant in common may maintain this action against a cotenant who has forcibly ejected him.[55] But in such case plaintiff cannot recover the exclusive possession of the premises. His right is to be reinstated in the common possession.[56]

him and that too, although he may be entitled to the immediate right to possession.[57] It is the person who makes the forcible entry who is liable in proceedings of this character.[58] An action of forcible entry and detainer may be maintained only against one in possession at the commencement of the action, not against one who does not in fact hold the land.[59] If it appears that plaintiff was in possession when the action was brought, defendant is entitled to judgment.[60] One who takes possession peaceably in good faith and in violation of no law is not liable to be turned out by summary proceedings,[61] especially where he entered under a bona fide claim of title,[62] even though his grantor may previously have entered by force.[63] But where one trespasser succeeds another in the possession of property and continues and consummates the original trespass without any claim of new title, he is liable in summary proceedings to recover possession.[64] A change of possession pending the suit does not affect plaintiff's right of recovery.[65]

b. Persons Procuring Forcible Entry. A person may be guilty of forcible entry who is not actually present and does not actively assist therein if it is done by one who acted at the time under his direction and procurement.[66] And one who is present and participates in forcible entry and continues to support and assist the party entering in remaining on the premises may properly be joined as a party defendant in forcible entry and detainer.[67]

c. Persons Occupying in Severalty. The courts of law will not take cognizance of several causes of action against different parties in the same suit. Accordingly two or more persons who hold in severalty different parts of the premises in controversy cannot be joined as co-defendants in an action of forcible entry and detainer.[68] However by special statute in some jurisdictions it is provided in certain cases that where the action is joint in its inception, and the tenancy is afterward severed all may be joined in one suit but the verdict and judgment should be several.[69]

d. Married Women. In case of a joint occupancy of premises by husband and wife, the husband is as a general rule the only proper party defendant. The wife, although she is a joint occupant, is not in legal contemplation in joint possession with her husband.[70] But a wife cannot be ousted from her own property in an action of forcible entry and detainer against her husband alone.[71] And where forcible entry and detainer is the joint act of both husband and wife, both are proper parties to an action to recover possession.[72]

e. Corporations. Forcible entry and detainer will lie against a private corporation, unless the act complained of was a voluntary wilful trespass on the part of its officers or servants.[73] So an action of unlawful detainer will lie against a municipal corporation.[74]

D. Notice to Quit and Demand For Possession — 1. Necessity. The necessity of a notice to quit or demand for possession as a condition precedent to an action for a forcible or unlawful detainer is ordinarily regulated by statutory provisions which vary in the different jurisdictions and also under the different statutes of the same jurisdiction.[75] Under some of the statutes it seems that a notice or demand is necessary in all cases of forcible detainer.[76] Under others it has been decided that it is not necessary where the relation of landlord and tenant does not exist between the parties,[77] or where the original entry was forcible[78] or wrongful.[79] Under the statutes relating merely to unlawful detainer a notice or demand is ordinarily necessary,[80] some of the statutes making a failure or refusal to deliver possession after demand a constituent element of the offense.[81] Notice is also ordinarily required in cases where the relation of landlord and tenant exists between the parties,[82] or where the action is brought for the recovery of possession by a purchaser at an execution[83] or foreclosure sale.[84] Under the Tennessee statute no notice is necessary other than the warrant in the action.[85]

2. Form and Contents. Under some of the statutes the notice or demand must be in writing,[86] but unless so required a written notice is not necessary.[87] As to the form and contents of the notice or demand a substantial compliance with the statute is sufficient.[88] It must contain a description of the property sought to be recovered,[89] but it is only necessary that the description should be sufficient to identify the premises.[90] It must also appear who claims the premises and makes the demand therefor,[91] but this may be shown from the signature at the end and need not appear in the body of the notice or demand.[92] The demand need not specify any date at which the property must be given up.[93] The notice or demand may be signed by plaintiff's agent or attorney,[94] but must be signed in his representative capacity.[95] The name and address of defendant need not appear on the demand.[96] Errors in the statements of the demand or notice are not ground for reversal where defendant was not misled or prejudiced thereby.[97]

3. SERVICE. Where the statute specifically describes the manner in which the notice or demand shall be served its requirements must be strictly observed.[98] Under some of the statutes service must be made by leaving the copy with defendant,[99] or if he be absent, with some person over a certain age upon the premises;[1] and under such statutes it is not sufficient to read a copy to defendant[2] or to send a copy by mail.[3] The demand must be made upon the party who is in possession and detaining the possession,[4] but may be delivered by an agent or attorney instead of by plaintiff personally.[5] Under some of the statutes the notice or demand must be served a certain number of days before suit is instituted,[6] but the fact that a longer notice is given is immaterial and does not affect the jurisdiction of the court,[7] provided the action is commenced within a reasonable time thereafter.[8] When not so provided by statute, the time of the notice or demand is immaterial,[9] provided it be given before the suit is instituted[10] and after the particular entry complained of.[11]

E. Defenses, Set-Off, and Counter-Claim. Equitable defenses are not available in actions brought under the forcible entry and detainer statutes,[12] nor is matter in abatement only available as a defense.[13] So it is not a defense that the entry by defendant was made in good faith,[14] that plaintiff had leased the premises to one with whose right defendant does not connect himself,[15] that the premises had been leased for an immoral purpose,[16] that defendant has become bankrupt during the pendency of an appeal by him,[17] that plaintiff regained possession of the premises pending an appeal by defendant,[18] that a corporation plaintiff has so conducted its affairs as to subject it to a quo warranto by the state,[19] that defendant did not refuse to quit possession, if it appears that he holds over an unreasonable length of time after demand,[20] that defendant in committing the acts complained of was acting in the capacity of agent and not in his own right,[21] or that plaintiff has been guilty of the same wrong toward defendant.[22] So under a statute making a year's possession immediately preceding the filing of the complaint a defense unless the estate in the premises be ended, an answer alleging that defendant had been in the quiet possession of the premises for more than a year before the filing of the complaint but which fails to allege that the estate therein is not ended presents no defense.[23] And the pendency of an action to quiet title by one who had merely been granted an equity of redemption and hence could not maintain the action cannot be pleaded in abatement of an action of unlawful detainer.[24] The pendency of a prior action is a defense in an action of forcible entry and detainer to the same extent as in any other action.[25] Under the statutes of some jurisdictions, defendant cannot in this class of actions file a set-off or counter-claim of any character.[26] And under some statutes no counter-claim can be pleaded in a justice's court except as a set-off for rent or damages in cases where judgment for rent or damages is claimed.[27]

Jury trial.— Under an early Pennsylvania statute which substantially reënacted previous statutes on the subject, it was held that a justice or justices might, upon a view of the force, make a record of the forcible holding, and fine and commit the offender, but he or they could not meddle with the ers,[30] or probate courts,[31] county courts,[32] or municipal courts within the territorial limits of their respective municipalities;[33] and where this is so their powers and duties are defined by the particular statute respecting forcible entries and detainers and not by the statute defining and limiting the jurisdiction of such courts generally.[34] In some states this original jurisdiction of justices of the peace and like courts is exclusive.[35] But in others courts of general original jurisdiction have also original jurisdiction of these summary proceedings.[36] Thus it will be seen that in some localities these courts have both appellate and concurrent original jurisdiction in this class of cases.[37]

b. Necessity For Strict Compliance With Statute. The action of forcible entry and detainer or forcible detainer, being a special statutory proceeding, summary in its nature, and in derogation of the common law, it follows that the statute conferring jurisdiction must be strictly pursued in the method of procedure prescribed by it, or the jurisdiction will fail to attach, and the proceeding will be coram non judice and void.[38] So where jurisdiction to hear and determine forcible entry and detainer cases is conferred on courts of superior jurisdiction, they exercise a special, statutory, and extraordinary power and stand upon the same footing and are governed by the same rules as courts of limited and inferior jurisdiction. There is no presumption in favor of the record. It must appear that the statutory remedy was strictly pursued and the facts which give jurisdiction must appear affirmatively on the face of the record; otherwise the proceedings will be, not merely voidable, but absolutely void, as being coram non judice.[39]

e. Jurisdiction as Affected by Value of Property in Controversy. The jurisdiction of an action of forcible entry and detainer or of unlawful detainer is not affected by the value of the property, the possession of which is sought to be recovered.[40] And it has been held that in an action for forcible entry and detainer the jurisdiction of justices in the matter of damages is not limited to the amount specified as the limit of their jurisdiction in civil actions generally.[41]

d. Jurisdiction as Affected by Improper Allegations as to Title. Improper and unnecessary allegations as to title, whether made by plaintiff or defendant, do not deprive the court in which an action is properly brought of jurisdiction.[42]

2. VENUE. Where the territorial jurisdiction of a justice is coextensive with the county, he may try a case of forcible entry and detainer in any township in the county.[43]

G. Time to Sue and Limitations. Ordinarily the forcible entry and detainer statutes prescribe the time within which actions based on such statutes must be brought.[44] In actions of forcible entry and detainer an entry on unimproved land with intent to clear and fit it for cultivation is sufficient to put the statute of limitations in operation. An inclosure is unnecessary.[45] If a statute

45. Humphrey v. Jones, 3 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 261.

Under the Oklahoma statute the right of action in a forcible entry and detainer case between adverse claimants of a homestead provides that peaceable and uninterrupted possession with plaintiff's knowledge for a designated time shall be a bar, defendant cannot rely upon it unless plaintiff had knowledge of the adverse possession.[46] In unlawful detainer the statute commences to run not from the time of taking possession but from the time the possession becomes adverse.[47]

H. Process. The form and sufficiency of a summons or other process in an action for forcible entry and detainer depends largely upon statutory provisions, and as to these matters it has been decided that a summons is only required "to be sufficient on its face to show what is intended thereby";[48] that the complaint made and verified by plaintiff under oath may be looked to in aid of a warrant;[49] that if the summons contains the substance of the complaint so as to apprise defendant of the nature and extent of the claim, it is sufficient without reciting the complaint fully;[50] that a summons is not rendered defective by its omission to state that the place at which defendant is to appear is the usual place of holding the justice's court in the district;[51] and that a process is not bad because plaintiffs in describing their possession stated that they were possessed as executors.[52] A summons should describe the land in controversy with convenient certainty so as to enable the officer to deliver possession, but the description need not be so certain as in itself and alone to enable him to do so; if it can be rendered certain by extrinsic evidence it is sufficient.[53] Process must be made returnable within the time,[54] and to the term of court[55] provided by statute; and it must be served within the time,[56] and in the manner[57] prescribed by statute. Under a statute providing that when a summons in unlawful detainer is served accrues when the contest is finally adjudicated in the land-office. Cope v. Braden, 11 Okla. 291, 67 Pac. 475.

Action by judgment creditor.— Three years is the statutory limitation of an action for the unlawful detainer of lands; yet when the action is brought by a judgment creditor or other person having a statutory right to redeem, whose offer to redeem has been refused, quiet possession for three years after the sale is not necessarily a bar, since the statute does not begin to run until the accrual of the plaintiff's cause of action by the tender and refusal. Rep. 1260, under a statute authorizing substituted service of process by leaving a copy with a member of defendant's family over sixteen years of age, a notice of a writ of forcible entry is properly served by leaving a copy with defendant's wife who is at the time a member of his family, over sixteen years of age, defendant being absent and not found.

by a person other than the sheriff, it must be returned with an affidavit of service by such person, it is not necessary that it should appear that the party making the service did so at the request of plaintiff or his attorney.[58] Although the action of forcible entry and detainer may be confined by statute to the county in which the land is situated, yet process may issue to and be served in the county where defendant resides, although different from that where the land is located.[59] Where process issues against several persons charged with forcible entry and detainer, it is no legal objection to the service that it was not served on all of them,[60] and plaintiff may proceed against those upon whom process has been served.[61] When a defendant in an action for forcible entry and detainer appeals from a justice's court to a superior court, he is fully apprised of the nature of the action he is called upon to defend and cannot raise the question of the regularity of the citation on appeal.[62]

I. Pleadings — 1. Complaint — a. Necessity of Written Complaint. Unless dispensed with by statute a written complaint is necessary, although the proceedings are commenced before a justice of the peace.[63] A mere verbal complaint is insufficient,[64] and if no written complaint is filed the circuit court acquires no jurisdiction on appeal from the justice.[65]

b. Allegations — (i) In General. In suits brought under the statutes relating to forcible entry and detainer instituted in justices' courts great strictness in the complaint or affidavit is not required.[66] Nevertheless to give the court jurisdiction it is necessary that the complaint should embody such a statement of facts as brings the party clearly within some one of the class of cases for which the statutes provide a remedy,[67] as these proceedings are summary and contrary to the course of the common law.[68] The complaint must show enough on its face to give the court jurisdiction without resort to parol testimony.[69] It must show where the premises are situated,[70] and that they are within the territorial jurisdiction of the court in which the suit is instituted.[71] If action is instituted before a justice of the peace, the complaint must show that the premises were situated in the county in which he sits,[72] and in his precinct,[73] or that there is no justice in the precinct where the premises are situated.[74] A clerical mistake such as the omission of defendant's name in the complaint is not a jurisdictional defect and is not material where there is enough in the rest of the complaint to correct it.[75] The declaration or complaint need not deny the existence of possession by defendant for such a time as would bar the action.[76]

(II) AVERMENTS IN COMPLIANCE WITH STATUTORY REQUIREMENTS. A complaint which contains all the allegations required by a statute prescribing what it shall allege[77] or which follows a form prescribed by statute[78] is sufficient, and a complaint will be sufficient which follows a precedent furnished by a state form book notwithstanding it may appear defective if treated as a technical pleading, where it has long been adopted in practice and has received the sanction of the courts.[79] Notwithstanding the sufficiency of a complaint drawn in accordance with the statutory provisions, the complainant is not bound to avail himself of the benefits of those statutes, but is still at liberty to set out in full the particular facts to bring his case within the statutes. If, however, he elects to do this, he can omit no fact which is essential to his case or which is necessarily included in or implied by the general form of complaint indicated by statute.[80]

(III) POSSESSION OF PLAINTIFF AT TIME OF ACTS COMPLAINED OF. The general rule is that in an action for forcible entry and detainer the complaint must allege that plaintiff was in actual possession of the premises at the time of the alleged forcible entry.[81] In the case of public lands, it must be alleged that the entry was upon the constructive possession of plaintiff;[82] and under the statutes of one jurisdiction where the complaint is based on a forcible holding out of the premises it must allege that the premises were in the constructive possession of plaintiff at the time of the holding out.[83] The general allegation that plaintiff was in the actual peaceable possession of the premises at the time of the entry is a sufficient averment of actual possession. The evidentiary facts by which such allegations are to be proved need not be set out,[84] nor is it necessary to allege in terms that the possession was actual, if this fact sufficiently appears from other averments in the complaint.[85] On the other hand it is not sufficient to allege that plaintiff was lawfully entitled to possession,[86] that he was "seized" of the premises[87] or the owner thereof,[88] or was lawfully and peaceably possessed of a leasehold interest,[89] that plaintiff purchased the premises from the state "as an occupant,"[90] or that plaintiff was in possession on a particular day and that defendant at a subsequent day forcibly entered.[91] So inconsistent averments as to possession render the complaint bad.[92] The complaint need not state the precise time when plaintiff was possessed of the premises and if stated it may be rejected as surplusage.[93]

(IV) RIGHT OF POSSESSION. In actions of forcible entry and detainer no allegation as to plaintiff's right of possession is ordinarily necessary unless McHose v. South St. Louis F. Ins. Co., 4 Mo. App. 514.

Averment of ownership.— If the complaint is sufficient on its face, the fact that it alleged that plaintiff is the owner of the premises will be treated as merely descriptive of his right of possession and not as raising the question of title which cannot be determined in such action. App. 222, 55 Pac. 489, holding that a complaint which alleges that complainant is the owner and in possession of certain described premises and that defendant forcibly entered and detains a portion of said premises is defective because of the contradictory statements as to possession.

Averments as to possession held not contradictory.— A complaint alleging that on a certain day plaintiff was in possession of the land and that on that day "defendant wrongfully and without force by disseizin obtained possession of said premises, and has ever since held and continues to hold possession thereof wrongfully" is not objectionable as showing possession of plaintiff and defendant at the same time. required by some special statutory provision. There are, however, statutes making such an allegation necessary.[94] Under some of these statutes it will be sufficient to allege generally that plaintiff is entitled to possession,[95] while others require the facts showing the right to possession to be set out,[96] and even in jurisdictions where it is unnecessary to set out the facts if the pleader assumes to do so they must be set forth fully and with precision.[97] In actions where plaintiff has only constructive possession it has been held that he must allege his right of possession and the facts on which this right is based.[98]

(v) TITLE OF ESTATE. Where the entry is with force and a strong hand, the complaint need not, in the absence of some statute requiring it, allege the title or estate of plaintiff in the premises.[99] Nevertheless if required by statute, the complaint must set out plaintiff's title,[1] and the nature of his estate in the premises.[2] In alleging plaintiff's estate the precise quantity thereof need not be stated.[3] The following allegations as to plaintiff's estate have been held sufficient: That plaintiff claims by virtue of a fee simple,[4] or has a "freehold in fee simple"[5] or an unexpired term of years,[6] or had "lawful and peaceable possession of the premises for the space of five years."[7] It has been held sufficient to allege that plaintiff was possessed as tenant for years of a leasehold estate not yet

The provisions of the decree should have been set forth sufficiently for the court to judge of plaintiff's rights under it. Laffey v. Chapman, 9 Colo. 304, 12 Pac. 152.

ended,[8] or is a tenant at will.[9] On the other hand a statement that complainant had a legal right and estate to the premises is bad as amounting to a conclusion of law;[10] and an allegation that complainants were "tenants for years or lessors" of the premises is bad for uncertainty.[11] An allegation that petitioner "became entitled" and went into possession of the premises "by virtue of a certain arrangement with the lessee thereof,"[12] or that he was in the peaceable possession and occupancy of the premises and lawfully entitled to remain and continue in possession,[13] does not satisfy a statutory requirement that "the interest" of plaintiff in the premises shall be described.

(VI) DESCRIPTION OF PREMISES — (A) Necessity of Description. In all actions of forcible entry or detainer the complaint must contain a description of the premises[14] and no premises not described in the complaint can be recovered.[15]

(B) Sufficiency of Description. Any description by which the premises can be readily identified and located will be sufficient.[16] Reasonable and not absolute certainty of description is required.[17] Such certainty in description as apprises defendant of the premises which he is charged with entering and will guide in executing the writ of restitution is all that is requisite,[18] but at least this degree of certainty is necessary.[19] The premises must be described with reasonable certainty.[20] Description of property located in a city by the number of the lot, its location and the manner in which it is used, is sufficient.[21] So a description of the premises by metes and bonnds is sufficient,[22] and it is not necessary in addition thereto to specify the land by statutory demarcation of section, township, and range.[23] It is not necessary, however, that the premises be described by metes and bounds if otherwise described with sufficient certainty.[24] A description of the land by section and subdivisions thereof, township, and range, the state and county being given, will be sufficient;[25] otherwise where the state and county are not designated.[26] If the property is otherwise distinctly described error in describing it by section, township, etc., will not vitiate the complaint.[27] Erroneous statements in the description may be rejected as surplusage if the remaining statements sufficiently identify the property.[28] It is not necessary to state the amount of land if it is otherwise described with reasonable certainty.[29] And an erroneous statement of the quantity of land may be rejected as surplusage where the description is otherwise accurate and complete.[30] When the other parts of the description are not sufficiently certain the quantity becomes essential in determining the identity of the land, although as an element in the description of land the statement of the quantity is the least reliable.[31] The premises may be described by reference in the complaint to an exhibit containing a description.[32] A description of the premises as part of a tract designated without specifying the part meant is insufficient.[33] Unnecessary prolixity of description does not vitiate the complaint, if the property can be readily identified therefrom.[34] And if the complaint states one cause of action in several counts the description of the premises in one count will be sufficient.[35]

(VII) ENTRY AND DETAINER. In actions for forcible entry and detainer, an allegation of entry by defendant on the premises in question is necessary.[36] It seems, however, that no such allegation is necessary where the action is based on a forcible detainer only.[37] According to some decisions, the allegation of time of entry by defendant is material and must be proved as laid, but the probable weight of authority is against this view.[38] In all actions brought under the forcible entry and detainer statutes it is necessary to allege a detention of the premises,[39] at the time of the institution of the action,[40] for in the absence of such detention the acts complained of would amount to no more than a trespass.[41] A complaint showing that defendant has been in possession of the property for over a year, but which does not show such possession to have been quiet, is not bad as showing a defense under a statute making quiet possession for a year by defendant a defense.[42]

(VIII) FORCE. Whether the cause of action is a forcible entry and detainer or a forcible detainer, an averment of force in the commission of the acts complained of is necessary;[43] and if the words of the statute descriptive of the acts are "unlawfully and by force" the omission of the word "unlawfully" in the complaint vitiates it.[44] It is not necessary to set out in the complaint the par-

Rule in Missouri.— Rev. St. (1889) § 5089, makes him guilty of unlawful detainer who wrongfully and without force by disseizin shall obtain and keep possession of realty and shall fail to quit after written demand by the person having the legal right of possession. It was held that a complaint was sufficient which alleged that defendant unlawfully and without force by disseizin obtained possession and kept it after demand made in writing for its delivery. Determination of character of action.— When a complaint charges forcible entry "with a multitude of people" and a forcible and unlawful detainer in one count the forcible entry is the gist of the action; the averment of forcible detainer not being as an independent ground of relief but as a mere continuation or consequence of the first act. ticular facts constituting a forcible entry or detainer.[45] It is in all cases sufficient to follow the language of the statute on which the complaint is based.[46]

(IX) DAMAGES. The complaint need not claim a specific sum as damages.[47] If it does neither the court nor the jury can find a sum in excess thereof.[48] If no demand for rent is set up in the complaint rent is not recoverable.[49] If the complaint contains proper averments as to damages sustained it need not ask for the treble damages authorized by statute. The court will on a recovery by plaintiff treble the damages, although treble damages were not asked.[50]

(X) ALLEGATIONS WITH RESPECT TO PERSONALTY. The complaint in forcible entry and detainer should not contain allegations respecting defendant's appropriation of personal property.[51]

(XI) NOTICE TO QUIT AND DEMAND FOR POSSESSION. The complaint must allege notice to quit and demand for possession when necessary to the cause of action,[52] or it will be fatally defective.[53] It need not be alleged that the notice to quit was in writing, although on the trial it must be proved to be so.[54] Nor

Sufficient averments illustrated.— In actions of forcible entry and detainer the following averments have been held sufficient: That defendant entered with force and strong hand (Ward v. Lewis, 1 Stew. (Ala.) 26); that defendant forcibly entered and forcibly detained the premises (McAlpin v. Purse, 82 Ga. 271, 12 S. E. 412); that defendant "forcibly and unlawfully entered upon" and forcibly and unlawfully refuses to quit the premises (Townsend v. Van Aspen, 38 Ala. 572); and that "defendants unlawfully entered upon such land, and turned this plaintiff out of the possession thereof, by threats and menacing conduct, and ever since that time, said defendants have and still do hold the possession thereof, by threats of violence against this plaintiff" (Holland v. Green, 62 Cal. 67). In actions of forcible detainer, the following allegations have been held sufficient: That defendant "forcibly and unlawfully detains and keeps possession of the premises;" detaining and holding the same by such words, circumstances or actings as have a natural tendency to excite fear and apprehension of danger" (Matlock v. Thompson, 18 Ala. 600); that defendant "unlawfully and forcibly detained, and still doth detain from the undersigned, possession, etc., of the premises" (Brown v. Burdick, 25 Ohio St. 260); and under a special statute providing that every person is guilty of a forcible detainer who by force during the absence of the occupant of any real property unlawfully enters thereon and who after demand refuses for the period of three days to surrender possession to such former occupant a complaint alleging that plaintiff was in possession and that defendants during his absence entered on the premises, broke open the inclosures, and broke open the door of the dwelling-house, and entered therein and by force continued to occupy the premises and refused to peaceably surrender the possession thereof to plaintiff after due notice given is sufficient (Gore v. Altice, 33 Wash. 235, 74 Pac. 556).

is it necessary to allege the exact date at which the notice was given. It is sufficient to allege that subsequent to the unlawful entry while defendants were in possession and prior to the commencement of the action, the notice to surrender was given, and refused for a designated period after the notice was given.[55] It is also unnecessary to expressly state that the demand was made "by the plaintiff."[56] If no demand for possession is necessary the complaint need not allege a demand,[57] but an allegation of a demand when a demand is unnecessary will not vitiate the complaint.[58]

c. Joinder of Causes of Action. An action of forcible entry and detainer brought before a justice of the peace cannot be joined with a claim for damages growing out of the same transactions.[59] According to the weight of authority a cause of action based on a forcible entry and detainer and one based on an unlawful detainer cannot be joined in the same complaint,[60] the view being taken that these causes of action are wholly inconsistent with each other.[61] Where it appears on the face of a complaint setting up these two causes of action that the premises sought to be recovered are the same, a demurrer will lie.[62] When authorized by statute, causes of action for forcible entry and forcible detainer may be united in the same complaint,[63] but being distinct causes of action they must be separately stated in separate courts,[64] or the complaint will be bad on demurrer.[65] A statute requiring that in an action to recover distinct parcels of land the complaint shall allege separately the distinct causes of action as to each parcel does not make it necessary that the claims for damages for the wrongful entry and possession be separately stated, as such damages are not an independent cause of action.[66]

d. Amendments.[67] Amendments which do not change substantially the cause of action will ordinarily be permitted,[68] and when offered in time should be allowed as of course and without the imposition of terms.[69] The following have been held to be permissible amendments: Aiding the description of the property,[70] changing the date on which the forcible entry was alleged to be committed,[71] increasing the amount of damages,[72] showing that the land was situated in

e. Verification. Where the statutes require verification of the complaint, a non-compliance therewith renders the complaint fatally defective.[78] The verification must be made by the complainant in the absence of some special statutory provision authorizing verification by some other person.[79] A verification reciting that the complaint is "true in substance" is insufficient,[80] and so is a complaint verified by an agent "to the best of his knowledge, information, and belief."[81]

Under special statutory provisions.— Verification by an agent setting forth that the facts are within his knowledge brings the case within a statute providing that when the pleading is verified by the attorney or any other person except a party he must set forth the reasons why it is not made by a party and is a proper verification. Newman v. Bird, 60 Cal. 372. By the statutes of Maine, if the complaint shows that the complainant lives in the county in which the estate lies it cannot be signed and sworn to by his agent and attorney unless it shows that "complainant is out of the state or sick" or for other reasons unable to appear in person before the court. Treat v. Bent, 51 Me. 478. 82. Minute of time of exhibition.— Under the Vermont statutes it is not necessary in a civil action for forcible entry and detainer that the magistrate issuing the process should enter on the complaint a minute of the time of its exhibition. Allen v. Ormsby, 1 Tyler (Vt.) 345.

Time of filing.— Under the North Dakota statutes, jurisdiction in forcible entry and detainer does not depend on the filing of a verified complaint before issuance of summons, but it is sufficient if the complaint is filed at or before the time defendant is required by the summons to appear and answer. Browne v. Haseltine, 9 S. D. 524, 70 N. W. 648.

With whom filed.— Filing a complaint in a proceeding for forcible entry and detainer with the clerk of the district court and the issuing of a warrant under his hand and the seal of that court is not a compliance with a statute requiring the complaint to be delivered to a court commissioner or a judge of the district court or a judge of probate and the proceedings are void. Summary proceedings to be valid must strictly follow the law which creates them. Tweed v. Guild, 2 Ariz. 207, 11 Pac. 753.

Entry on justice's docket.— Under a statute requiring the complaint, summons, and return and all proceedings to be entered on the justice's docket, the complaint need not be entered before the summons issues. It is sufficient if regarded merely after its filing. O'Hagan v. Crossman, 50 N. J. L. 516, 14 Atl. 752.

2. Plea or Answer — a. Necessity For and Right to Answer. Statutes in some jurisdictions dispense with the necessity of written pleadings on the part of defendant in some instances,[83] and where this is the case the sustaining of a demurrer to an answer is harmless error.[84] In the absence of statutory provisions of this character, a plea or answer is necessary, and unless filed it is error to swear the jury to try the matter in difference between the parties because there is no issue.[85] So where a complaint is amended after demurrer has been sustained thereto, and an amended complaint is filed, defendant must plead to the complaint as amended.[86] Under a statute providing that defendant shall file with the clerk his written answer, demurrer, or demurrer and answer, defendant does not waive his right to answer by demurring without answer at the same time.[87]

b. Sufficiency. If the answer in forcible entry and detainer does not deny the material allegations of the complaint and no material new matter is set up, no issue is raised and plaintiff is entitled to judgment on the pleadings.[88] The plea of not guilty is a proper plea in an action of forcible entry and detainer,[89] and is sufficient to put plaintiff upon proof of every material allegation set up in his petition.[90] But new matter by way of excuse, justification, or avoidance, must be specially pleaded unless the necessity therefor is dispensed with by statute.[91] By the express provisions of some statutes, however, a general denial will be sufficient in all cases,[92] even in respect of matter of excuse, justification, or avoidance,[93] and where this is so error if any in striking out a valid special defense is harmless.[94] Where an entry by fraud and stealth is alleged an answer alleging an entry with plaintiff's consent is good.[95] A denial that defendant entered unlawfully admits the entry and tenders issue only on its unlawfulness.[96] An allegation in the answer of actual possession raises no question of title and an allegation of right to possession is a conclusion of law.[97] Where an abstract of title is set up in a paragraph of the complaint in compliance with a statutory requirement, defendant's failure to deny this paragraph does not admit its truth

Answer held to deny title.— Defendant's answer denied that plaintiff was the owner of the lands or entitled to the possession thereof and admitted that one of the parties through whom plaintiff claimed had received a patent for the lands from the United States but alleged the patent to be void and claimed the lands by virtue of a homestead entry and occupation. It was held that the answer was not one of confession and avoidance but a denial of plaintiff's title which placed upon plaintiff the burden of proving such title by competent proof. Roberts v. Center, 26 Wash. 435, 67 Pac. 151.

where the answer denies plaintiff's title or right to possession.[98] If the allegations in the complaint are stated conjunctively, an answer which denies them in that form does not raise an issue,[99] and any defense distinctly and separately stated must be an answer to the whole cause of action.[1] If plaintiff regains possession of the premises pending an appeal by defendant to a court of record this fact can only be taken advantage of by a plea puis darrein continuance.[2]

3. Reply. By virtue of statutory provisions in some jurisdictions it is not necessary in an action for unlawful detainer to reply to affirmative matter contained in the answer.[3]

4. Method of Raising Objections and Waiver. Objections for defects in the complaint should, it is apprehended, be taken advantage of by the methods ordinarily employed in reaching defects in complaints in any civil action.[4] All objections based on defects of form in a complaint are cured by going to trial without objection,[5] and by verdict,[6] and cannot be raised on appeal or error[7] or on return of the certiorari to the court to which the case is removed.[8] If the description of the premises is insufficient, the objection may be raised by demurrer.[9] Such objection is waived by going to trial.[10] Any defect in the description is cured by verdict,[11] and an objection based thereon cannot be raised for the first time on appeal.[12] Answering and going to trial on the merits waives an objection that the complaint is defective in failing to state where the premises are situated.[13] Where actual possession in plaintiff is defectively alleged the objection is sufficiently taken advantage of by special demurrer on the ground of uncertainty.[14] Objections based on defects of this character cannot be raised after verdict.[15] A defect in alleging the time of entry is waived by appearance and trial on the merits.[16] Informality in alleging a withholding of the premises by defendant at the commencement of the action is cured by verdict.[17] And so is an objection that the complaint contains no prayer for a judgment of ouster.[18] Objections for failure to describe plaintiff's interest in the premises is waived by general appearance and answer, and consent to a postponement of the case.[19] Objection

19. Crane v. Van Derveer, 45 N. Y. App. Div. 139, 60 N. Y. Suppl. 1040.

Failure to renew objections on removal by certiorari.—A complaint in forcible entry and detainer, defective for failure to set out complainant's title or interest in the property, where such objection is made before the county judge and overruled but is not re-or want of a jurat is waived by going to trial,[20] and objections for insufficient verification cannot be raised for the first time on appeal.[21] Such is also the rule with respect to objections based on the allowance of amendments.[22] Objections based on improper joinder of causes of action should be raised by demurrer[23] or by motion to strike or to amend the pleading. Improper joinder is not a ground for motion to dismiss the complaint.[24] Where a complaint is for an unlawful entry and forcible and unlawful detainer, and the summons is to answer for a forcible entry and detainer, the variance is cured by plea to the merits.[25] Where a cause goes to trial without any plea and defendant makes a full defense, he cannot set up the want of plea and issue thereon in the appellate court.[26] Where, in a forcible detainer suit, a counter-claim is interposed, no damages or rent being claimed, the right to object to the introduction of any evidence in support of such counter-claim is not waived by replying instead of demurring to the counter-claim.[27]

5. PLEADING AND PROOF. As in other actions, plaintiff in his evidence is confined to proof of the facts alleged in his complaint.[28] If the complaint alleges forcible entry only, there can be no recovery on proof making out a case of forcible detainer only.[29] And where there is no proof to sustain an allegation of actual possession by plaintiff, a judgment for defendant is proper.[30] As respects possession by defendant of the premises in controversy evidence that plaintiff was in possession of a very small portion will be deemed an immaterial variance.[31] Under a complaint charging defendant with obtaining possession by collusion with plaintiff's tenant, evidence negativing the averment of collusion is competent.[32] According to some decisions the allegation of time of the entry is material and the date must be proved as alleged.[33] But according to the weight of authority it is not necessary to prove the time of entry exactly as alleged.[34] So long as the proof shows an entry before filing complaint,[35] and that the entry was made within the period in which suits for forcible entry and detainer must be brought to avoid the bar of the statute of limitation, a variance between the time alleged and that proved is immaterial.[36] A variance in the pleading and proof as to the amount of land charged to be detained has been held immaterial and a recovery allowed of newed in the general term where the case is brought by certiorari before traversing the inquisition, is cured by a verdict for the relator where the facts proven on the trial are such as to entitle him to protection under the statute. People v. Fields, 1 Lans. (N. Y.) 222.

so much as the jury found was detained.[37] A complaint charging that plaintiff was in possession of certain premises is not sustained by evidence that he was in possession of only a portion thereof, and a recovery is not authorized.[38] If the answer admits refusal to deliver possession pursuant to plaintiff's demand, plaintiff need not prove this fact.[39] Under a plea of not guilty, plaintiff must prove every fact necessary to entitle him to recover.[40] Under such plea defendant may show that he made a peaceable reëntry.[41] And under the code defendant may give in evidence all matters of excuse, justification, or avoidance, under the plea.[42] If suit is brought against defendants jointly, testimony is admissible to show that they occupied the tract in severalty.[43]

J. Evidence — 1. BURDEN OF PROOF AND PRESUMPTIONS. In order to sustain a recovery in behalf of plaintiff he must show that he had at the time of the alleged entry the actual possession of the premises described.[44] A mere constructive possession such as a fee-simple title draws to it is not sufficient,[45] but to prove actual possession it is not necessary to show that plaintiff resided on the premises.[46] Plaintiff must also show that defendant was in possession at the date of commencing the suit,[47] and that he (plaintiff) is entitled to possession.[48] He cannot rely on lack of right of possession in defendant,[49] but where right of possession at the time of suit brought is shown by plaintiff, he has made a prima facie case entitling him to recover and thereby casts on defendant the burden of disproving it,[50] the presumption being that one who is in the actual and peaceable possession of land is rightfully in possession.[51] In forcible entry and detainer plaintiff must show an entry[52] and a detention of the premises.[53] Wherever a demand for surrender of the premises is necessary, plaintiff must prove that a demand was made,[54] and that defendant refused to or neglected to surrender possession, and the latter fact is not to be presumed from the fact of defendant's possession before the demand.[55] If defendant seeks to justify his possession under the authority of some other person than plaintiff the burden is on him to prove the title of such person.[56]

2. ADMISSIBILITY — a. Title. Inasmuch as the question of title cannot be adjudicated in actions based on the statutes relating to forcible entry and detainer the general rule subject to some exceptions which will be hereafter considered[57] is that evidence of title either in plaintiff or defendant is not admissible.[58] The special object of the summary remedy of forcible entry and detainer is to keep the peace, not to determine rights of property.[59]

b. Possession. In forcible entry actions, evidence concerning the possession of the locus in quo must, to be relevant, be such as to connect the party asserting the same with the actual possession at the time of the alleged forcible entry.[60] On the question of plaintiff's possession of the premises at the time of the acts complained of it is competent to show that a third person had left personal property on the premises with plaintiff's permission,[61] that plaintiff had instructed his agent to take possession of the premises on the removal of his tenant,[62] and that plaintiff had entered upon the land and cut timber on it.[63] It is also competent to show a written agreement of a party to deliver peaceable possession to plaintiff,[64] the execution of a lease by plaintiff to a third person,[65] a preliminary injunction against defendant issued in a former suit between the same parties concerning the same property,[66] and a recovery in trespass by plaintiff for injuries to the land in controversy.[67] So declarations of a person in possession of land showing that he held in his own right and not as tenant or agent of another are admissible as evidence on the principle of res gestæ.[68] There is some conflict of authority

And see Fearn v. Beirne, 129 Ala. 435, 29 So. 558, holding that, in an action of forcible entry and detainer, proceedings before a justice of the peace between the same parties in an action of forcible entry and detainer, and ejectment proceedings in the circuit court by one of defendants as executrix of a deceased purchaser of the property against tenants of plaintiff were properly admitted in evidence to show plaintiff's prior actual possession of the premises.

68. Turnley v. Hanna, 82 Ala. 139, 2 So. 483. Compare McMullen v. Mayo, 8 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 298, holding that, in an action of forcible entry and detainer, it is not error to exclude the answer of a witness giving the statements of plaintiff when claiming to be in possession of the premises in controversy, as to whether a deed of the premises to plaintiff is admissible to show possession of plaintiff.[69] To show the character of the possession relied on by plaintiff defendant may show that he had held prior possession and that plaintiff had taken possession by force during defendant's absence and sought to maintain it by force.[70] To show that plaintiff was not in possession at the time of the alleged injury defendant may introduce in evidence an agreement of plaintiff to quit possession.[71] He cannot, however, for the purpose of showing that plaintiff had only a scrambling possession, introduce evidence to show that during the whole period of plaintiff's possession third persons with whom defendant was not in privity were stopping near the demised premises awaiting an opportunity to take possession when they could do so without force.[72] To show possession by defendant at the time of the injury complained of he may introduce evidence that he had been in possession for two years under a lease at the time of the alleged forcible entry; that he had not surrendered possession but had leased the premises for the succeeding year,[73] or, to show a record of a judgment in defendant's favor in an action of trespass for injuries to the premises in question.[74] So the declaration of a person (since deceased) made at the time of such occupation that he held the house under defendant as a tenant is admissible,[75] and a witness may testify that he controlled the lands in controversy for defendant while he was absent during the war.[76] For the purpose of showing possession in himself, defendant may show that a former owner of the land in question under which he claimed title had been in undisputed possession at one time during his ownership and within a designated time before the commission of the acts complained of.[77] On the other hand a writ of possession issued in a former action between the same parties for the same lands awarding defendant possession of a portion of the premises is not admissible where the possession of such portion is not questioned.[78] So proof of payment of taxes on the property by defendant,[79] or payment of rent to the person from whom he claims to derive his claim of possession,[80] or that defendant had for two years past been in actual possession of a large tract of land which originally included the land in controversy, none of the tract mentioned being shown to be contiguous to the land in question,[81] is not admissible to show possession on the part of defendant. On an issue whether defendants forcibly entered a disputed strip of land between them and adjoining proprietors, evidence that an entry had been made prior to the alleged entry mentioned in the complaint, under an agreement to establish the line by a survey, is admissible on the question of who was in possession at the time of the alleged entry.[82]

c. Character or Extent of Possession. While the validity of titles cannot be tried in proceedings of the character under consideration, deeds or other evidences of title are admissible to show the character or extent of possession claimed.[83]

And evidence of staking the claim is admissible to show the extent of plaintiff's possession in the same manner as a deed would be.[84]

d. Right of Possession. Although the question of title is not involved, plaintiff may introduce evidence of title in order to show his right of possession to the premises in controversy;[85] and it has also been held that the rule prohibiting any inquiry as to title does not prevent a defendant from showing the source of his claim and right to the possession of the premises.[86] In an action of forcible detainer by one claiming possession under a deed, defendant may show that the grantor was non compos mentis.[87] So a writ of possession in favor of defendant from a court of competent jurisdiction is admissible proof of the lawfulness of his possession without producing the whole record.[88]

e. Location of Premises. In unlawful entry and detainer the complaint on which the original writ was issued by the justice may be looked to by the court, in aid of the description of the premises contained in the writ.[89] An objection to Admissions by plaintiff that he leased the premises to defendant are admissible in an action of forcible entry and detainer. Cummings v. Winters, 19 Nebr. 719, 28 N. W. 302.

In forcible entry against a married woman, where the record of a judgment obtained against her husband and her expulsion from the premises thereunder was admitted over her objection, it was not error to admit testimony tending to show that she was in possession under a homestead right as widow of a former husband and independent of the right of the husband who was defendant in ejectment. the introduction of any evidence in an action of forcible detainer which seeks to challenge the sufficiency of the description of the property sought to be recovered is properly overruled if the description as to a portion of the property is correct.[90]

f. Entry. In an action for forcible entry, evidence that defendant remained in possession of the premises is admissible to show that he made his entry complete, although he may not be charged with forcible detainer.[91] It is competent to show that plaintiff was arrested at defendant's instance for the purpose of getting him away from the premises so that defendant might enter and take possession.[92] Evidence to show good faith in an entry is not admissible, the question of good or bad faith not affecting the right of recovery.[93] Evidence that defendants had expended large sums of money in improvements upon the premises is not admissible on the issue whether there had been an unlawful entry.[94]

g. Force. Declarations of defendant's agent while taking possession are competent on the question of force,[95] and so are threats of bodily harm and the character of defendant for violence.[96] In actions for forcible entry evidence of force employed to maintain possession is not admissible to characterize by relation acts otherwise peaceable by which possession was previously obtained.[97] Records of other suits between other parties with respect to the property are prima facie irrelevant on the question of forcible entry.[98] Evidence that plaintiff's lessor had forcibly evicted defendant from the premises five days previous to defendant's forcible entry is not admissible in justification of the latter.[99]

h. Notice of Demand. By the weight of authority where the delivery of a written notice of demand is essential to maintain the action parol proof thereof is inadmissible without a prior notice to defendant to produce the original.[1] Service cannot be proved by an indorsement on the original paper either by an officer or by a private person whether sworn or not, but must be proved by a witness.[2] Where evidence of threats by defendant warning plaintiff to keep off the premises was admitted to show that defendant was holding by force and defendant had admitted that he had threatened plaintiff with a prosecution for trespass if he entered the premises such evidence was admissible as dispensing with other further proof of plaintiff of a demand for possession before bringing suit.[3]

i. Damages. Although evidence of injury committed by the disseizor to the freehold such as waste, etc., is incompetent as indicating plaintiff's damages, in an action of forcible entry and detainer, yet if such evidence be permitted to go to the jury, without objection or without a distinct motion, made during the progress of the trial, to exclude it from the jury it is not ground for an assignment of error.[4] So it has been held admissible to look to the title in view of the question of damages or rents to be recovered in an action brought by a mere intruder against the wrongful owner of the land or where the claimant by fraud induces another to take a lease or to enter under him upon a false representation as to his title. In such cases the title may be looked to upon the question whether the case made out constitutes in law a wrongful entry or detainer.[5]

j. Miscellaneous. Evidence that plaintiff had conveyed an interest in land to which he makes no claim is not admissible,[6] nor is evidence as to how the parties held and occupied other lands claimed by plaintiff in the neighborhood.[7] Where the right to recover is established outside of the complaint it is not reversible error to allow the complaint to be read in evidence as proof of plaintiff's right to recover.[8] Where the defense is that the entry was made after plaintiff's abandonment of the premises, evidence that it was originally taken by plaintiff's agent and so held is not admissible.[9] If one sues the owner of an adjoining lot for forcible entry and detainer of a narrow strip of ground between their lots, the title to which was in dispute, evidence as to the use of a fence erected thereon many years before is immaterial.[10] If a corporation brings an action of unlawful detainer against an ex-officer thereof for possession of a house allowed him as residence while in office, the books of the corporation are admissible to show the arrangement made between the parties.[11] The proceeding in forcible entry and detainer is merely possessory and the judgment thereon is not evidence in a subsequent action of trespass or ejectment.[12]

3. Weight and Sufficiency. Rules relating to the weight and sufficiency of evidence in actions based on the forcible entry and detainer statutes are the same as those in other civil actions.[13]

K. Damages. The right to recover damages in actions for forcible entry and detainer and kindred actions is, in many jurisdictions, expressly conferred by statutes containing various provisions as to the elements and amount thereof.[14] of some statutory provision expressly authorizing it, damages cannot be recovered.[15]

L. Trial[16] — 1. In General. Some of the statutes relating to trials for forcible entry and detainer before justices require that the justice shall enter upon his docket the evidence rejected or admitted over objection,[17] his reasons for admitting or rejected such evidence,[18] and the return of the sheriff to the venire.[19] In trials before a justice either party may demand a jury at any time before trial,[20] and may purge the jury as in a trial in the superior court.[21] The jury must be sworn, which must affirmatively appear from the record, and where the statute prescribes the form of oath to be administered the verdict cannot be sustained unless the jury was sworn as the statute directs.[22] The question of granting separate trials to several defendants is within the discretion of the trial judge.[23]

2. Questions of Law and Fact. What acts or circumstances will constitute possession is a question of law for the court,[24] but whether these circumstances exist and plaintiff was in actual possession at the time of the entry complained of is a question of fact for the jury.[25] It is also for the jury to decide whether a forcible entry was in fact made and who made it,[26] whether the person making it acted in his own behalf or as the representative of another,[27] and what degree of force or violence was used.[28] Where the only question is whether defendant's conceded prior possession had been abandoned before plaintiff's entry the question of the abandonment is one of fact for the jury.[29] Whether the notice or demand required by statute was given is a question of fact for the jury.[30]

3. INSTRUCTIONS[31]— a. In General. In actions for forcible entry and detainer the court should be careful in giving instructions to see that the propositions are expressed in such terms and with such qualifications as not to be liable to mislead the jury.[32] The court may instruct the jury hypothetically or upon a contingent state of facts in case they shall so find from the evidence,[33] but the instruction must not be so worded as to assume as established any facts which the jury must determine from the evidence,[34] or so as to cut off from the consideration of the jury any matter of defense set up by defendant in support of which evidence has been introduced.[35] An instruction is erroneous which puts the right of recovery upon the basis of a different act than the one charged,[36] or which in setting out what must be established to authorize a recovery omits any essential element of the offense.[37] Instructions as to a certain issue should be founded upon all the testimony on that issue and it is error to pick out a single fact and instruct the jury as to its probative force.[38] The different instructions must be consistent with each other, and instructions given on behalf of the respective parties should be made to harmonize by the court before they are given to the jury.[39] It is not error to refuse to give requested instructions which are covered by the general charge,[40] or which assume as undisputed a material question in issue,[41] or which relate to matters not to be determined by the jury;[42] but an entire failure to instruct upon any material point in issue if requested to do so is reversible error.[43]

b. Directing Verdict.[44] If the evidence is clear and without conflict, the court may instruct the jury peremptorily to find for plaintiff or defendant,[45] but not where the evidence is conflicting as to any material point in issue.[46]

4. VERDICT AND FINDINGS.[47] The verdict must be responsive to the issue,[48] and must find upon every issue necessary to a recovery,[49] and must be sufficiently definite and certain to authorize the entry of judgment.[50] The verdict need not be in the exact words of the issue, but is sufficient if it contains the substance of the issue,[51] and merely formal defects may be corrected by the court,[52] or the court may permit the jury to amend the verdict in this respect.[53] The verdict may be either general or special,[54] and a general verdict in effect finds every essential fact necessary to authorize it.[55] If the verdict responds fully to the issue as made up, it is not necessary that it should find expressly as to any other fact.[56] A general verdict of "guilty"[57] or "not guilty"[58] or "guilty as alleged in the complaint"[59] is sufficient if responsive to the issue; but a verdict will be upheld, although in form neither "guilty" nor "not guilty," where it is full and intelligible so as to support the judgment.[60] Where the form of the verdict is prescribed by statute a substantial compliance with the statute is sufficient.[61] The verdict need not describe the premises other than by reference to the complaint,[62] and need not be signed by the jury,[63] except where the statute so provides.[64] In trials by the court without a jury special findings of fact are necessary under some of the statutes.[65] The court must find upon each material issue,[66] but is not authorized to make findings as to any matters not in issue.[67] The failure to find upon an immaterial issue is not ground for reversal.[68]

M. Judgment — 1. Form and Sufficiency — a. In General. A judgment will not be set aside or reversed because it is informal or slightly irregular, or because of mere surplusage in its recitals.[69] An entry made by a justice that "the court renders judgment according to the verdict" found by the jury by whom the case was tried is not such a judgment as the law requires.[70] A judgment which is materially variant from the verdict will not stand.[71]

b. Description of Land. The land should be described with certainty[72] sufficient to enable an officer with a writ to find it without resort to extraneous aid to the description.[73] A judgment is sufficient, if it is for the restitution of the property described in the complaint, where the complaint is for a specifically described portion of land.[74] A judgment which so describes the land that it cannot be identified as the land mentioned in the complaint is fatally defective for uncertainty.[75]

2. Judgment by Default or on Confession. It has been decided that under some of the statutes as to forcible entry and detainer a judgment by default[76] or on confession[77] is not authorized.

3. Extent of Award or Relief. In an action for forcible entry and detainer, when the finding is in favor of plaintiff, judgment should be for restitution of the premises sued for,[78] and for damages if they are expressly provided for by statute, but not otherwise.[79] A judgment for possession at some time in the future is void, and a threatened enforcement of such judgment may be restrained by injunction.[80] The judgment should be confined to the land in controversy.[81] If plaintiff proves a right to a part only of the land, he is entitled to a verdict and judgment pro tanto.[82] Where plaintiff elects to give a bond and dispossess defendant at the commencement of the action, as he may do under some statutes,[83] if the action abates[84] or is dismissed[85] defendant is entitled to a judgment of restitution. A defendant in forcible entry, against whom judgment is rendered, which is afterward reversed, but who does not lose possession of the property under or through the judgment, is not entitled to be restored to possession as against third parties who have ousted him during the pendency of the action.[86]

4. Operation and Effect. A judgment in an action for forcible entry and detainer is conclusive as between the parties as to the matters put in issue, unless such judgment is reversed or modified by proceedings in error;[87] but such a judgment in no wise affects the title of the parties to the land in controversy,[88] and is therefore no bar to an action in relation to the title to the premises.[89] A judg-

Release of land improperly included in verdict.— Where the verdict of a jury in an action of unlawful detainer gave to plaintiff the land claimed in the summons, and judgment had been rendered accordingly, it was proper for the court, after plaintiff's counsel had released certain land included in the verdict which did not belong to plaintiff, to set aside the first judgment, and enter a second judgment for the land included in the verdict, less the part released. In a subsequent action of ejectment, a judgment of restitution in forcible entry and detainer for part of a tract of land, the whole of which defendant claims under the same title, is conclusive of the right of possession, ment in an action of forcible entry and detainer against the husband is sufficient authority to put out any member of his family.[90]

5. Execution and Enforcement — a. In General. Although a form of writ of restitution is specially provided by statute, it must be modified to suit the appropriate judgment, where the claimant and defendant are cotenants or entitled to joint possession.[91] Where the names of the parties are properly set out in the complaint and bond, but wholly omitted from the writ pending a motion to quash the writ, its amendment should be permitted.[92] Statutes as to the time, manner, and other matters relating to the issuance and service of writs of restitution must be complied with.[93] In order to constitute a full execution of a writ, both defendant and his personal property must have been removed from the premises, and the real estate given to plaintiff, unless the removal of the personal property was in some way waived by defendant.[94] Where a plaintiff, in an action for forcible entry and detainer, recovers a judgment, and afterward obtains possession peaceably and without the aid of a writ of restitution, it is a complete satisfaction of the judgment, except the costs, and he cannot have a writ of restitution under it afterward.[95] Under a statute providing for an execution for restitution and for damages, rents, and costs, an execution may properly issue for rents and costs after restitution of the premises.[96]

b. Who May Be Dispossessed. A writ of restitution in proceedings for forcible entry and detainer will not authorize the officer to dispossess one who was not privy to defendant's forcible entry and detainer, and who is a stranger to the parties and the record. It only authorizes him to dispossess defendant and his privies.[97] A writ of restitution in an action of forcible entry and detainer will not necessarily be unavailing because the persons who were living upon the land at the institution of the suit were not made defendants. If they were the servants of the person who was made defendant they can be dispossessed under the writ; and the fact that defendant does not live in the county where the land lies does not alter the case.[98]

c. Void Judgment or Void or Voidable Writ. Where a justice of the peace issues a writ of restitution on a judgment in an action of forcible entry and detainer, which is void because based on a default, he and plaintiff who ordered it to be issued are liable for the damages arising from its execution.[99] Where a writ of restitution, issued upon a judgment in forcible detainer, describes the land as a part of a certain tract, but fails to state what part of it, it is void for uncertainty, and will not protect an officer in evicting another under it. And where a valid writ is executed in such manner as to show a wilful abuse of it, the officer and his assistants will be trespassers ab initio;[1] but a writ of restitution, voidable by reason of having been issued while a motion for a new trial in forcible entry and detainer was pending, constitutes absolute justification to the officer and plaintiff in the writ.[2] at the date of such entry, as to the whole tract. Bradley v. West, 68 Mo. 69.

injunction to restrain a plaintiff who has obtained judgment on a writ of forcible entry and detainer from having restitution of the possession, notwithstanding he is insolvent, and defendant holds the undisputed legal title to the land;[3] but when a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace against defendant in an action of unlawful detainer is void, and the title to the land of which restitution is ordered is in litigation between the parties to the action, there is ground for equitable interference by injunction; and equity when it thus interferes will enjoin the enforcement of the judgment not only as to the land, but also as to the recovery of monthly rents and damages.[4] A successful plaintiff in forcible entry should not be restrained from having restitution because defendant has recovered judgment in ejectment for the premises.[5]

N. Review[6] — 1. Appeal or Error — a. Right of Review. A writ of error, it is held, will lie to a judgment of a justice in forcible entry and detainer cases, in jurisdictions where all courts are courts of record.[7] The right of appeal is strictly of constitutional or statutory origin, and unless conferred by a provision of this character does not exist.[8] This right is sometimes conferred in actions based on the forcible entry and detainer statutes by statutes relating to appeals generally or by statutes relating specially to appeals in this class of actions.[9] This right, it has been held, is conferred by a general statute providing that any party to a judgment or decree may appeal therefrom,[10] but not by a constitutional provision giving the right of appeal "in all civil cases."[11] If the statute giving the right of appeal excepts from its operation judgments by default a party against whom there is a judgment by default is not entitled to an appeal, although he first moves to set aside the judgment and the motion is overruled.[12] Under the statutes of some states defendant in actions of forcible entry and detainer may on taking the prescribed oath appeal as a poor person.[13]

b. Appellate Jurisdiction. The courts to which causes originating in justices' courts may be removed by appeal or writ of error are designated by statute.[14]

9. In Illinois the statutes relating to forcible entry and detainer allow an appeal to any party aggrieved by the decision of the court to be taken to the same courts in the same manner and to be tried in the same way as appeals are taken and tried in other cases. Fay v. Seator, 88 Ill. App. 419.

In Michigan appeals in forcible entry and detainer are allowable in the same manner as on judgments rendered by justices of the peace. Bearse v. Aldrich, 40 Mich. 529.

In Maryland an appeal did not formerly lie in cases of forcible entry and detainer (Isaac v. Clarke, 9 Gill & J. 107); but at the present time the appropriate remedy of parties aggrieved by a judgment of a justice of the peace upon a proper complaint for forcible entry and detainer is by appeal to the circuit court (Roth v. State, 89 Md. 524, 43 Atl. 769).

In Nebraska no appeal would lie to the district court from a judgment in the justice's or county court in proceedings in forcible entry and detainer prior to Laws (1901), p. 484, c. 85 (Babby v. Musser, 64 Nebr. 175, 89 N. 14. In Colorado appeals lie to the county court. Reynolds v. Larkins, 10 Colo. 126, 14 Pac. 114.

Where the justice had no jurisdiction, the court to which the case is removed acquires none,[15] and evidence cannot supply the defect.[16] So jurisdiction cannot be conferred by amendment and the appearance of the parties where the justice's jurisdiction does not appear.[17] Jurisdiction on appeal cannot be given by consent of the parties.[18] Statutes in a number of jurisdictions give the supreme court appellate jurisdiction in proceedings brought under the forcible entry and detainer statutes.[19] Thus in some jurisdictions an appeal lies from the judgment of the circuit court on an appeal from the judgment of a justice's court.[20] In others a writ of error lies,[21] and in others either an appeal or writ of error lies.[22] In some jurisdictions error[23] or appeal[24] lies to the court of appeals.[25] If the court to which the writ of error is sued out has no jurisdiction the supreme court acquires no jurisdiction to review the alleged error.[26]

c. What Judgments or Orders May Be Reviewed. Under the statutes of a number of jurisdictions an appeal lies only from a final judgment,[27] and under some statutes a judgment for less than a designated sum is not appealable.[28] An order of the circuit court setting aside a judgment of the justice for failure of appellant to appear at the trial is not appealable under a statute providing for an appeal on the granting of a motion for a new trial.[29] Under a statute providing that in proceedings to review the judgment or final order of the justice in forcible detainer proceedings a petition in error can be filed in the court of common pleas only by leave of such court, a refusal by the court of common pleas to allow a petition in error to be filed in such court is not reviewable on error, such refusal not being a judgment in the case pending in such court.[30]

d. Requisites of and Proceedings For Transfer of Cause.[31] It is not a prerequisite to an appeal that the losing party should ask for a new trial.[32] And in any event the appeal must be taken from the judgment and not from an order overruling a motion for a new trial.[33] The time for taking appeals from a justice's court to an intermediate court, or from an intermediate court to a court of last resort is a matter solely of statutory regulation, and the investigator should in each case consult the statutes of his own jurisdiction.[34] If an affidavit is required as a basis for the allowance of an appeal, it must be filed within the time required by statute.[35] If the statute requires the justice's fees to be paid before he is required to send up the papers the fees must be tendered unconditionally.[36] It is the duty of appellant to cause the transcript of the justice's proceedings to be filed in the circuit court within the time required by statute.[37] And notice of the appeal should be speedily given after perfection of the appeal.[38] Under the statutes of one state, in the absence of a certificate of importance, no appeal can be entertained by the supreme court from the judgment of the appellate court where less than a designated amount is involved.[39]

e. Presentation and Reservation in Lower Court of Grounds For Review. The general rule that questions not raised in the trial court will not be noticed on appeal or error [40] applies as well in actions brought under the forcible entry and detainer statutes as in other actions.[41]

34. In Missouri an appeal from a judgment of a justice in unlawful detainer must be taken within six days if the court is in session. Hastings v. Hennessey, 52 Mo. App. 172; Carter v. Tindall, 28 Mo. App. 316; Hobart v. McNamara, 13 Mo. App. 578. An appeal taken six days after an order overruling a motion for new trial but more than six days after the rendition of the judgment will be dismissed. Hobart v. McNamara, 13 Mo. App. 578.

In Illinois the five days' clause as to appeals in forcible detainer cases only applies to appeals from a justice of the peace, and cases originally begun in a court of record and not to appeals from a court of record, where the case is tried in such court on appeal from a justice of the peace. Ehlert v. Security Deposit Co., 72 Ill. App. 59.

Premature appeal.— An appeal from an interlocutory order of the circuit court granting a writ of possession in a case of forcible entry and detainer before final judgment is entered is premature and will be dismissed. Carney v. Murphy, 2 Baxt. (Tenn.) 340.

Extending time of appeal.— The circuit court has power to hear an application to extend the time for appeal when the judge is satisfied that the party has been deprived of his appeal by causes beyond his control. The fact that a party is prevented by severe sickness from taking an appeal is sufficient cause to confer jurisdiction on the judge to exercise the power. Bearse v. Aldrich, 40 Mich. 529.

35. Robinson v. Walker, 45 Mo. 117.

Under the Missouri statutes the affidavit on appeal need not conform to the general provisions relating to affidavits for appeal from justices' courts, but is sufficient if it conforms to the statute specially relating to actions under the forcible entry and detainer statutes. St. (1899) § 3370, providing that unlawful detainer appeals shall be returnable if the judgment is rendered in vacation of the circuit court to the first day of the next term thereof, but if rendered during term, within "six" days after rendition is not incompatible with section 4074, providing for "ten" days' notice of appeal from a justice's judgment; since section 3384 provides that if the transcript is filed in term-time the cause shall be set for some day during the term and thus the cause may be set ahead for trial so as to allow ten days' notice, if the appellee demands it. f. Amendments. On appeal from a justice's court to a court of intermediate jurisdiction, amendments if allowable are within the discretion of the court.[42] If the complaint was such that the justice acquired no jurisdiction, the court to which an appeal is taken acquires no jurisdiction and cannot permit an amendment.[43] Amendments which are equivalent to bringing a new action [44] or which materially change the issues will not be permitted.[45] Amendments as to description of the land in suit,[46] or increasing the amount of damages,[47] or showing that the land was situated in the county where suit was brought,[48] have been permitted. So it has been held that defendant has a right to file an amended answer, where the case is removed to an intermediate court.[49] Where the supreme court reverses a judgment because it was not shown that defendant was in possession of all the land described the circuit court on a remand of the cause may permit an amendment of the complaint so as to include only a part of the land therein described,[50] and may impose as a condition thereof payment of two thirds of the costs.[51]

g. Hearing and Determination of Case — (i) In Intermediate Court. Where a suit is removed from a justice's court by writ of error the case must be tried upon the record without a declaration or jury, and the justice has no right to enter upon his minutes other evidence than such as is made ground of exceptions.[52] It is not a material error that the record does not show that the issue was formed on the plea of not guilty entered by the court.[53] On appeal from a judgment of the justice his jurisdiction of the case will not be presumed where the transcript fails to show jurisdictional facts.[54] A review of his findings as being against the weight of the evidence is not permissible in the absence of some statute authorizing it.[55] If the appellant fails to appear, the judgment of affirmance authorized by statute is the only one which can be properly rendered.[56] In case the judgment is not in proper form for failure to describe the land it will be affirmed on the merits, but the cause will be remanded so that a proper judgment may be entered nunc pro tunc.[57] It is good ground for dismissal that the cause was dismissed by the justice for want of jurisdiction,[58] that the appeal was not taken within the time required by statute,[59] that there was undue delay in the prosecution of the appeal,[60] that it does not appear that a complaint was filed in the justice's court, and that such complaint is not brought into the court to which the appeal is taken or its loss accounted for.[61] On the other hand the fact that there is a defect in the summons is not a ground to dismiss such appeal,[62] and neither is the fact that only one of two defendants or one of two plaintiffs have appealed.[63] On affirmance the cause may be remanded to enable the justice to issue a writ of restitution,[64] and the court on dismissal of an appeal by defendant may award restitution.[65] In one jurisdiction it has been held that, on reversing the judgment on defendant's appeal, the court has power to order restitution to him of the premises,[66] and in another it has been held that on such appeal it is within the discretion of the court on reversing the judgment to grant or not to grant restitution to defendant.[67]

(II) IN COURT OF LAST RESORT. Where a case is tried and determined on a certain theory it must be so treated on appeal.[68] Where by statute the circuit court on reversing the judgment of the justice tries the case de novo it is permissible on appeal to the supreme court to assign errors in the record arising previous to the judgment.[69] The admission of evidence which could not have prejudiced appellant is no ground for reversal.[70] In the absence of a bill of exceptions the court will presume that the evidence authorized an assessment of special damages.[71] So if there is no bill of exceptions objections to the form of notice to quit cannot be considered on appeal.[72] Findings of fact on conflicting proofs will not be set aside on appeal,[73] and the judgment will not be disturbed on the ground that the property is not sufficiently described unless it affirmatively appears that the description will not serve to identify the property.[74] Error in rendering judgment for "damages" instead of "the value of the rent of the premises pending the appeal" is perhaps subject to correction in the court of last resort,[75] and it has been held that an erroneous entry of judgment for possession and damages where the verdict is for possession only may be corrected.[76] Where plaintiff obtains judgment and is put in possession and defendant on appeal or error succeeds in reversing the judgment he is entitled to be restored to possession,[77] and that too although plaintiff has rented the premises.[78]

judgment of a justice in an action based on the statutes relating to forcible entry and detainer the trial is de novo.[79] On such trial no error made by the justice before whom the cause was originally tried can be taken advantage of.[80] The court should not inquire into irregularities of the proceedings before the justice.[81] Defendant cannot set up an equitable defense,[82] such as estoppel.[83] The jurisdiction of the court so trying the cause is appellate and only such questions as are within the jurisdiction of the justice can be determined.[84] Under some statutes it is not necessary to file new pleadings.[85] On trial in the district court on appeal from a justice where the question of title is in issue, and the action in effect one of ejectment, it is error to refuse defendant's offer to prove prior possession and title and to strike out similar evidence.[86]

2. CERTIORARI.[87] Certiorari lies to review proceedings in actions brought under the forcible entry and detainer statutes when authorized by statutory[88] or constitutional provisions,[89] and also where no other remedy is provided by statute, in which case it is the only remedy.[90] So under the statutes of some jurisdictions the remedy by certiorari is concurrent with that of appeal,[91] although the general rule is that certiorari is not an appropriate remedy if efficient relief can be obtained by resort to other available modes of redress or review.[92] An action of forcible entry and detainer may be removed to the proper court by certiorari notwithstanding there have been several mistrials before the justice before whom the cause is pending.[93] Where the remedy is appropriate, either party is entitled to a writ of certiorari,[94] in the absence of laches, but where a party has a remedy by appeal which he loses through his own neglect he will not be entitled to the writ.[95] Want of jurisdiction in the justice trying the case is a proper ground for allowance of a writ of certiorari,[96] as is also a refusal of the justice to grant an appeal and supersedeas upon tender of the statutory bond.[97] Questions relating to the court or judge having power to issue writs of certiorari are largely a matter of statutory regulation.[98] To authorize the issuance of the writ, it has been held sufficient for the petition to state the merits alone,[99] unless it is filed after the time allowed by statute has elapsed. In this case it must also show a sufficient cause for the delay and such as would entitle the petitioner to relief under the general rules of removal relating to such writs.[1] And ordinarily it is apprehended the petition should show some reason for not resorting to some other remedy if another remedy is available.[2] If a petition by defendant does not assert any right of possession to the premises a certiorari should not be granted.[3] If the petition for certiorari shows on its face that the judgment was for the right party the court will refuse the writ[4] and dismiss the petition, although the proceedings before the justices were informal and defective.[5] In cases of forcible entry and detainer brought up by certiorari the general rule is that errors must be assigned and the trial had on the record alone,[6] and only such errors can be reviewed as are called to the attention of the court by an assignment of error.[7] Under some statutes the only question which can be considered is whether the lower court had jurisdiction.[8] If there is any evidence on which the verdict could be based the court on certiorari will not interfere with it.[9] It is not an available objection that the process was issued by one justice and the case tried by another, their powers being coextensive.[10] In one jurisdiction it has been held that where judgment was ordered for plaintiff for the property alleged to be detained and was reversed on certiorari and judgment rendered against plaintiff for costs and the complaint substantially conformed to the statute the judgment should not merely have been reversed but should have been remanded for further proceedings.[11] In another it has been held that the act concerning forcible entries and detainers, providing for a removal by certiorari of proceedings under the act from the justice's court to the circuit court, does not enable the circuit court to remand the proceedings to the justice's court after setting them aside for irregularities.[12] So in one jurisdiction it has been held that on a writ of certiorari issued by an appellate court to review a judgment of a justice's court in an action of forcible entry and detainer the appellate court on reversing the judgment cannot grant a writ of restitution.[13] If a statute provides that on dismissal of certiorari the court shall enter judgment for the amount recovered in the inferior court with interest and costs the court has no power to render judgment for the damages assessed.[14]

3. Bonds on Appeal, Error, or Certiorari — a. Necessity. The statutes usually require the giving of bonds on appeal from[15] or certiorari to[16] the court in which an action under the forcible entry and detainer statutes is brought and in case of a non-compliance with the statute the appeal will be dismissed.[17] So if a defendant desires to have the appeal operate as a stay a supersedeas bond is also necessary,[18] unless as is the case in a number of jurisdictions the appeal-bond itself contains the requirements of a supersedeas bond and has the effect thereof.[19] If a statute provides that an appeal from a justice shall not be effectual unless a bond is given to secure payment of costs of appeal and such bond is not given the fact that another bond required by statute to authorize a stay of proceedings is given will not render the appeal effectual.[20] On an appeal from the circuit court to the supreme court an appeal-bond in a sum sufficient to cover the rent of the premises pending the litigation is not necessary where there is no statute requiring it.[21]

b. Requisites and Sufficiency. The bond must be in substantial compliance with the requirements of the statute under which it is given;[22] such a bond, however, will be sufficient.[23] A slight variance between the language of the bond and the language of the statute will not invalidate it,[24] although it is said to be the better practice in all cases for the undertaking to comply strictly with the language of the statute.[25] If the bond contains conditions not enumerated in the statute it will be void.[26] The bond should describe the action and the amount or substance of the recovery.[27] It need not designate any specific sum as a penalty unless the statute so requires;[28] but where the statute requires the bond to be sufficient to secure rent, damages, and costs "fixed by the court," an appeal cannot be perfected by defendant by filing a bond without first having the amount thereof fixed by the justice.[29] If the bond is a supersedeas bond, or an appeal-bond which by force of the statutes operates as a stay, it is a usual requirement that it shall be conditioned on payment by defendant of all rents "adjudged against him;"[30] or of all rents accruing during the appeal,[31] or all rents becoming due, if any, from the commencement of the suit until the final termination thereof,[32] according as the statutes may provide; so the statutes also ordinarily require that the bond shall be conditioned for payment of costs and damages,[33] and a bond will be insufficient which omits a condition required by statute "that the appellant will not suffer waste to be committed."[34] An appeal-bond in an action of forcible entry and detainer must be executed by the party appealing. It cannot be executed by another person, although he is the landlord of plaintiff.[35]

c. Time of Filing. An appeal-bond must be filed within the time required by statute and the court has no power to extend the time therefor,[36] unless specially authorized by statute.[37] Under a statute providing that if the appeal-bond in a forcible entry and detainer suit is insufficient a new bond may be filed within such time as shall not delay the trial, the refusal to continue on the filing of a new appeal-bond is not erroneous.[38]

d. Approval of and Fixing Amount of Bond. The court in which the action is tried and not the appellate court is the proper court to approve the bond.[39] If an appeal-bond when presented to the justice is in proper form it is his duty to approve it,[40] but he should not approve a bond which is not in com-

To what appeal statute applicable.— A statute providing that in cases of appeal the bond must be filed within five days after judgment applies only to appeals from judgments in the court in which the action is brought whether in the justice's or the circuit court, and not to appeals from judgments of the circuit court rendered on appeals from justices' courts. pliance with the statutes.[41] The court in which the action is brought must fix the amount of the bond if this is required by statute, and not the court[42] or clerk of the court[43] to which the appeal is taken.

e. Amended and New Bonds. In the absence of some statute authorizing the amendment of appeal-bonds in actions based on the forcible entry and detainer statutes, a motion to amend an appeal-bond is addressed to the sound discretion of the court and its decision is not reviewable.[44] If the bond is void no amendment will be permitted,[45] and it has been held that a bond invalid for failure to comply with a statutory requirement that the amount of the bond be fixed by the justice has also been held not amendable.[46] If no motion is made to amend a defective appeal-bond when objected to the appeal will be dismissed.[47] The circuit court is not concluded by the amount of the appeal-bond fixed by the justice, but may require a bond in a larger sum to be filed and in default of compliance may dismiss the appeal.[48] The court cannot, however, exercise the power to require a new bond before commencement of the term to which the appeal is taken.[49] If the amount is fixed by statute and the amount of the bond required by the justice is less than that so fixed the court to which an appeal is taken may require defendant to increase his bond to that amount but no more,[50] and where the court requires a new bond which is excessive in amount and dismisses the appeal on failure to give it the judgment will be reversed.[51] Whether or not the new bond shall operate to supersede the original bond depends upon the character of the order.[52]

f. Operation and Effect of Supersedeas Bond. A supersedeas bond stays all proceedings in the action pending the appeal, preserves all rights of the parties, and if defendant is appellant secures to him the right to remain in possession of the premises pending the appeal.[53] After the necessary bond has been given the court has no further control over the matter and cannot withdraw its direction or discharge the order after it has been complied with and the appeal and stay have been perfected.[54]

g. Liability on Bonds and Enforcement. The sureties on appeal and supersedeas bonds are liable to the extent of the penalties therein provided for, but no further.[55] It has been held, however, that an entry of judgment against defendant and his sureties for damages not included in the bond can be objected to only by the sureties where such a judgment against defendant is expressly authorized by statute.[56] Sureties are liable on such bonds even though the parties giving

Thus if the bond contains no clause for payment of rent, no recovery of rent can be had in a suit on the bond (Pitt v. Swearingen, 76 Ill. 250), and where a bond is given for rent that should accrue pending a writ of error brought by defendant the surety is not liable beyond the penalty of the bond, although the rent amounts to more (Kelly v. Nichols, 2 Ohio Dec. them are under disability and the liability of the latter on the bond questionable.[57] Failure to prosecute an appeal,[58] or the dismissal of certiorari proceedings,[59] constitutes a breach of the bond. And a judgment against a petitioner for certiorari is also a breach of a condition to prosecute with effect.[60] So it has been held that an appeal from a judgment of restitution before a justice is not prosecuted with effect within the meaning of an appeal-bond where the judgment of the justice is in effect affirmed.[61] Where defendant appeals from a judgment of restitution in the justice's court and files an appeal-bond and on an affirmance appeals to the supreme court and files a supersedeas bond and the judgment is affirmed in the supreme court, the liability of the sureties on the appeal-bond does not terminate until the restitution of the property.[62] Summary judgment cannot be rendered against sureties on supersedeas bonds or appeal-bonds containing the usual conditions of supersedeas bonds,[63] unless there is special statutory authorization therefor as is the case in some jurisdictions.[64] An action for the breach may be brought by the personal representative,[65] but not by an heir.[66] It is a good defense to an action on a supersedeas bond that plaintiff immediately after being put in possession was dispossessed under a writ against her in favor of others.[67] It is proper to show the value of the use and occupation of the property during the time it was withheld in order to ascertain plaintiff's loss and damage, where the bond is conditioned to pay all damages and loss sustained by plaintiff by reason of the withholding of the premises.[68] So it has been held that evidence as to the rental value of the premises is admissible notwithstanding the absence from the declaration of an averment of detention by defendant, the same being supplied by the plea of payment on his part, and the evidence showing his possession at the time in question.[69] Where, in an action on a bond given by defendant on appeal from a judgment for plaintiff before a justice in forcible entry, it appeared that plaintiff had recovered judgment against the sureties on the supersedeas bond given by defendant on appeal from the judgment of the district court affirming the judgment of the justice, the amount of such judgment which had been paid should be deducted from the amount of the recovery on the appeal-bond.[70]

O. Costs. As a general rule a successful plaintiff in an action for forcible entry and detainer is entitled to costs;[71] and where defendant prevails costs should be awarded in his favor.[72] It seems that in suit for unlawful detainer if, on demand by suit where there has been no previous demand, defendant offers to give up possession when served with process, on filing his plea, he will be entitled to costs.[73] A defendant in forcible entry and detainer is not liable for costs where it appears that the only possession had by plaintiff of the land in question consisted of placing some lumber on it, which was removed by defendant.[74] The amount and items which are allowable as costs depend upon statutory provisions.[75] When the statute requires a bond for costs to be given when the action is brought, it will be dismissed for the want of such bond.[76] An undertaking for staying proceedings under a judgment in an action of forcible entry and detainer, and allowing defendant to retain possession of the property during the pendency of the appeal, is not such an undertaking as is required of the appellant as security for the payment of costs on appeal.[77]

P. Proceedings by Inquisition — 1. In General. Under the English statutes and similar statutes in force in some of the states, trials for forcible entry and detainer may be had by way of an inquisition before a justice.[78] The proceeding is purely statutory[79] and of a summary character,[80] and the provisions of the statutes must be strictly followed.[81]

2. Petition or Complaint. The proceedings are instituted by presenting to the justice a petition or complaint which must be in writing and on oath,[82] and must contain a description of the premises[83] and state the interest of the petitioner therein.[84]

3. Warrant. The justice upon receipt of the petition or complaint issues a warrant,[85] the object of which is to notify the accused of the charge to be inquired into.[86] The warrant states the cause of complaint,[87] and the scope of the inquiry is limited strictly by its allegations.[88] The warrant must show such a right or interest in complainant as to entitle him to maintain the proceeding under the statute,[89] and must allege that he was in the peaceable possession of the premises at the time of the entry[90] and that the entry or detainer complained of was forcible.[91] The description of the property in the warrant need be only a general description such as is sufficient to apprise defendant of the claim set up against him.[92]

The county in which the land is situated should be stated in the warrant (Parker v. Ozment, 8 Ky. L. Rep. 525), but this is

It need not be stated in the warrant that the complaint upon which it was issued was made under oath.[93] Both forcible entry and forcible detainer may be charged in the same warrant,[94] or the accused may be charged in the alternative with forcible entry or detainer.[95] Where the form of the warrant is prescribed by statute it need not be strictly pursued, but a substantial compliance therewith is sufficient.[96] A defective warrant may be amended before trial by the justice,[97] or it may be amended in the circuit court upon the trial of the traverse, provided the amendment in no way changes the case as tried before the justice;[98] but no amendment will be allowed which introduces a new cause of action.[99] The warrant must be issued by the magistrate before whom the complaint was made,[1] and must be served in the manner[2] and within the time prescribed by statute.[3]

4. Conduct of Inquisition. Where the statute does not require that the inquisition shall be held upon the premises the justice may in his discretion hold it elsewhere.[4] The jury on the inquisition must be sworn, which must appear from the record.[5] Whether plaintiff was in actual possession and whether that possession was forcibly disturbed by the entry or detainer complained of are the only questions before the jury,[6] and they cannot try questions of title[7] or plaintiff's right of entry.[8] In a warrant for a forcible entry and detainer defendant may be convicted of either,[9] but if only one offense is charged he can be convicted only of that offense.[10] The finding of the jury must contain a definite description of the premises,[11] and must be signed by them if the statute so directs;[12] but verdicts on inquisitions are liberally construed; a technical precision and regularity is not required.[13] Before the justice can render judgment on the verdict defendant must be given notice of the finding and an opportunity to file a traverse,[14] and this must be shown by the record.[15] If after notice he declines to traverse,[16] or only to show the jurisdiction of the justice and the omission does not render the description defective (Rowe v. Powell, 4 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 153; Bush v. Coomer, 69 S. W. 793, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 702).

neglects to do so within the time prescribed by statute,[17] the justice must render judgment on the verdict. The justice has no power to grant a new trial,[18] or to disturb the judgment after it has been entered.[19] It is not necessary that the justice should sign the inquisition.[20]

5. TRAVERSE AND PROCEEDINGS THEREON — a. In General. If the finding of the inquisition is against defendant he has a right to file a traverse,[21] which is in effect an appeal, differing from other appeals only in that it merely calls in question the finding of the jury and not a judgment.[22] Where the form of the traverse is prescribed by statute it is only necessary that the substance of the form given should be pursued.[23] And it is not necessary that the traverser should sign the traverse.[24] If defendant traverses the inquisition the justice must then summon another jury to try the traverse before him,[25] or must certify the proceedings to the circuit court.[26] In Kentucky the statute expressly requires that after a traverse is filed and bond given the proceedings must be transferred to the circuit court for the trial of the traverse.[27] The circuit court has no jurisdiction to retry the truth of an inquisition unless a traverse was filed,[28] which must have been filed before the justice,[29] and within the time limited by the statute.[30] On this traverse the traversee is required to join issue in the circuit court,[31] which he does by appearing in that court and stating to the jury that the finding of the jury on the inquisition is true.[32] The truth of the inquisition is there tried de novo,[33] and the trial is conducted in the same manner as the trial of any other issue in that court.[34] The only issue in the circuit court is the truth of the inquisition,[35] and no evidence is admissible except such as is relevant to this issue.[36] On a traverse by defendant he is not required to prove his innocence but the burden of proof remains with plaintiff.[37] If the traverser fails on the calling of the case for trial to appear either by himself or counsel, the court may render judgment by default in favor of the traversee.[38]

b. Bond. The statutes in some cases provide that the party traversing the inquisition must give a bond,[39] which must be for the costs of the proceeding and all damages that may be caused to the traversee by the traverse in case it shall not be prosecuted with effect.[40] The bond must be taken by the justice and not by the judge of the circuit court before whom the traverse is tried.[41] If the bond is defective the traverser should be allowed to execute a new and sufficient bond within a reasonable time to be fixed by the court,[42] and if it misrecites the date of the inquisition the proceedings should not be dismissed but the traverser should be permitted to introduce evidence to identify the inquisition and reacknowledge the bond.[43] Upon filing the traverse bond the justice must stay all further proceedings on the inquisition and return the papers and proceedings or a transcript thereof to the circuit court.[44] The traverse bond reciting that the traverse has been filed estops the traverser to deny that he traversed the inquisition.[45] The circuit court cannot release a surety on the traverse bond for the purpose of making him a witness and take another bond.[46]

c. Waiver of Defects and Irregularities. The filing of the traverse puts in issue the truth of the inquisition and is a waiver of all defects and irregularities in the form of the inquisition[47] or in the warrant;[48] but it is not a waiver of defects of substance[49] such as affect the jurisdiction of the court,[50] or where the inquisition is so defective that no judgment could be rendered thereon by the justice.[51]

6. RESTITUTION. Restitution cannot be awarded unless the proceeding is brought under a statute expressly authorizing it,[52] but the statutes usually provide that the justice who holds the inquisition may restore the injured party to possession.[53] To authorize a judgment of restitution the verdict on the inquisition must find such an estate or interest in plaintiff as to bring him within the provisions of the statute.[54] If the inquisition is traversed, restitution cannot be awarded until the traverse is tried and determined against defendant by another jury.[55] Technical irregularities in the form of judgment for restitution entered on the trial of the traverse will not invalidate it if it conforms substantially to the statute,[56] and a clerical error in failing to provide for restitution in entering up the judgment may be corrected by the court at a subsequent term.[57]

7. APPEAL AND CERTIORARI.[58] In the absence of statute, summary proceedings before justices for forcible entry and detainer cannot be reviewed by appeal,[59] but may be reviewed by certiorari.[60] Certiorari will not lie until after the finding of the inquisition,[61] but the proceedings may be removed at any time thereafter.[62] The certiorari merely brings up the record for inspection and the facts found by the jury cannot be tried anew.[63] In a few jurisdictions an appeal from the inquisition is allowed by statute,[64] and where an appeal can be taken and on that appeal jurisdictional questions as well as those arising on the merits can be fully disposed of, a certiorari should not be allowed unless circumstances exist which show that failure of justice will result from denying it.[65] An appeal can be taken only after the entry of the judgment or final order of the justice.[66] An appeal will not lie from a judgment on a traverse in the superior court where the judgment is merely for damages and costs and there is no judgment for restitution,[67] and an order granting a new trial on a traverse is not appealable.[68]

V. SPECIAL PROCEEDINGS AGAINST INTRUDERS AND TRESPASSERS.

In Georgia and South Carolina there are special statutory proceedings for the ejection of intruders[69] or trespassers.[70] In Georgia, where the parties have made the required affidavits, the issue to be determined is not title but defendant's good faith in claiming the right to go upon the land. He need not show a title paramount to that of plaintiff,[71] although title has been held admissible as evidence of the right of possession.[72] Plaintiff's affidavit must be sufficiently certain in describing the land to enable the sheriff to identify the premises.[73] When made, defendant must at once tender the sheriff the counter affidavit required by statute, or he will be turned out,[74] but it is not necessary for the counter affidavit to follow the statute literally.[75] In South Carolina it has been held that the proceeding may be instituted by the owner's agent and manager.[76] An affidavit showing that the land is situated in a certain county and in possession of a trespasser will give a magistrate of that county jurisdiction to serve notice on the trespasser to quit.[77] This notice need not designate the time within which a trespasser must quit, and if after the time limited by statute he refuses to quit, the magistrate shall then issue his warrant to a sheriff or constable requiring him to forthwith eject such trespasser.[78]

I. STATUS AND POWERS IN GENERAL.

A. Definition and Status in General — 1. DEFINITION. The term "foreign corporation" is used indiscriminately in American books of the law to designate either a corporation created by or under the laws of another state of the American Union or a corporation created by or under the laws of a foreign country.[1]

It would perhaps have been better if the profession had fallen into the habit of designating the former as extra-state corporations and the latter as foreign corporations, or as alien corporations.

2. Status Determined by Place of Origin. Speaking generally, the status of a joint-stock corporation, whether extra-state, foreign, or domestic, is determined by the place of its origin, without reference to the residence of its shareholders.[2]

3. Foreign Corporations Made Domestic Corporations Quoad Hoc — a. Domestication For Purposes of Jurisdiction Over Them — (i) In General. A state may, by its legislation, impose upon foreign corporations, which seek to come within its limits to conduct their business, the conditions that they shall be subjected to the duties and obligations of domestic corporations, in short, that they shall be, when so acting within the territorial limits of the state, domestic corporations for the purposes of jurisdiction.[3]

Creation of new state.— Where a banking corporation created by the legislature of Virginia before the separation of West Virginia from Virginia had branches in West Virginia, it was held, after the separation, that the corporation was a domestic corporation of West Virginia, as well as of Virginia. lature of a state has adopted and domesticated a corporation created by another state is in every case purely a question of legislative intent, to be determined upon the construction of the statutes of the state to which such act of adoption and domestication is sought to be imputed.[4]

(III) To Be Determined by What Canons of Interpretation. Upon the question of the canons of interpretation to be applied in such a case, it has been observed with reference to a railroad company: "To make such a company a corporation of another State, the language used must imply creation or adoption in such form as to confer the power usually exercised over corporations by the State, or by the legislature, and such allegiance as a State corporation owes to its creator. The mere grant of privileges or powers to it as an existing corporation, without more, does not do this, and does not make it a citizen of the State conferring such powers."[5]

b. When Deemed to Have Been Made a Domestic Corporation — (I) In General. Although there will be, in many cases, great difficulty in determining whether a foreign corporation has been adopted and domesticated by the legislation of a state, yet certain conclusions stand out clearly.

(II) Corporations of Different States Consolidated. One is that where a corporation, for instance, a railroad company, created under the laws of a foreign state, or of different foreign states, consolidates with a corporation created under the laws of the domestic state, and the consolidation takes place under the domestic law, the domestic tribunals will treat the united company as a domestic corporation, and they become a domestic corporation in each state.[6]

(III) Corporations Chartered by Concurrent Action of Two or More States. Another is that a corporation chartered by the concurrent action of two or more states, with substantially the same powers, is regarded as a domestic corporation in each of those states, for the purposes of local jurisdiction, and the application of local police regulations.[7]

That the ultra vires acts of a foreign corporation, which is a creature of the laws of two different states, are not made valid by a confirmatory statute, enacted by the legislature in one only of such states see Fisk v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 4 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 378. There is also a theory to the effect that such corporation

(IV) COMPLYING WITH STATUTE WHICH IN TERMS MAKES FOREIGN CORPORATION A DOMESTIC ONE. Another is that a foreign corporation created in one state, by complying with a statute of another state which in terms makes it, by the fact of such compliance, a domestic corporation of such other state, becomes a domestic corporation of such state and not a mere licensee to do business therein.[8]

(V) INSTANCE OF DOMESTICATION OF FOREIGN INSURANCE COMPANY. An insurance corporation created in Alabama obtained an act from the legislature of Mississippi, authorizing it to establish one or more departments under the same name in that state, but not until citizens of that state had subscribed for one hundred thousand dollars' worth of capital stock, when it should be regarded as a home company, and have all the privileges of such companies. It was held that this act was not a mere license for the original corporation to do business in Mississippi, but created a new corporation.[9]

c. When Not Deemed to Have Been Made a Domestic Corporation — (I) NOT BY MERE REGISTRATION OR APPOINTMENT OF AGENT, ETC., UNDER DOMESTIC STATUTE. A foreign corporation is not necessarily domesticated by complying with a domestic statute requiring foreign corporations to register and to pay certain taxes, or to appoint a resident agent, or to submit to other prescribed conditions;[10] but it may have this effect if the domestic statute says so in terms.[11]

(II) NOR BY RECEIVING GRANT OF SPECIAL OR PARTICULAR POWERS. The mere fact of conferring special or particular powers, not amounting to general corporate powers, upon a foreign corporation, does not make it a domestic corporation, as, for instance, where a statute confers upon a society incorporated in another state the power of taking by gift, etc., and of holding and conveying any real and personal property for all the purposes of its incorporation.[12]

(III) NOR BY BEING LICENSED TO DO PARTICULAR THINGS. Nor does the mere licensing of a foreign corporation to do a particular thing within the domestic state or country, as to carry on its business therein upon complying with certain conditions,[13] or to own and use therein so much real and personal is at once a domestic and a foreign corporation within each of the states creating it, a domestic corporation to the extent of its action under the government of the domestic state, and a foreign corporation as regards the other sources of its existence. property as may be necessary for carrying on its corporate business,[14] make it a domestic corporation. So a grant to a foreign corporation of a license to construct a railroad within the domestic state does not necessarily make it a domestic corporation,[15] although the state may at its election treat it as such for the purpose of imposing upon it reasonable police regulations.[16] Moreover, a foreign railroad corporation, by merely leasing and operating a domestic railroad, does not become a domestic corporation,[17] whether it operates it under a license from the domestic state, or by its mere tacit consent.[18] Instances where such adoption and domestication of railway companies have taken place may be discovered in the cases cited in the note.[19] property and business lies in another state;[20] nor gain a residence in such other state by the mere fact of purchasing and using property therein.[21]

(B) Exception in Case of Corporations Nominally Created in Other States. An exception to this rule has been declared in the case of what have been called "tramp" corporations,[22] that is to say, in case of corporations nominally created under the laws of another state, but whose offices and principal business are in the domestic state.[23] But it has been held that a corporation created for the purpose of owning, buying, leasing, selling, and operating railroad stock is not a foreign institution maintaining within the state a mere nominal existence, where its property is all maintained, used, and controlled within the state, and it has an office called its principal office within the state, where a considerable portion of its business is transacted, although its shareholders, directors, and officers are non-residents of the state.[24]

4. Corporations Created by Congress. A subdivision has been devoted to the consideration of this subject;[25] but attention may be called to a class of decisions which sustained the power of congress to create the former bank of the United States.[26] A corporation created by an act of congress with powers coextensive with the Union, assuming of course that in creating it congress acts within the scope of its powers, is not a foreign corporation within any state of the Union, any more than an act of congress is a foreign law within any state of the Union.[27] But where the corporation, which has been created by the act of congress, has been created in pursuance of the power exercised by congress as the legislature of a particular district or territory, as, for instance, the District of Columbia, and the corporation is not engaged in interstate commerce, but, we will suppose, is engaged in the business of insurance, which is not commerce,[28] then it may well be treated as a foreign corporation by one of the states, within which congress would have no power to create such a corporation, and make it a domestic corporation. For instance, under the statutes of Indiana, defining a foreign corporation to be a "corporation created by or under the laws of any other state, government, or country," or "one not incorporated or organized in this state," an insurance company chartered by congress within the District of Columbia is a foreign corporation in Indiana, and subject to the laws of that state regulating

21. Crowley v. Panama R. Co., 30 Barb. (N. Y.) 99; International L. Assur. Co. v. Sweetland, 14 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 240. Thus it has been held that a foreign incorporation will not be held void as an evasion of the laws of the state in which all the corporators reside and in which is the principal place of business of the company, where there was no fraud or evasion of the law of the state of incorporation, and the certificate of incorporation was granted by the secretary of state with knowledge of the facts. 23. Thus, a mutual benefit society organized according to the provisions of a law of New Hampshire requiring that its location should be in a city of that state, but that an office should be established in Boston, Massachusetts, has its actual home in Massachusetts, where it is regarded as a corporation or an unincorporated association, where it has no assets, place of business, or officers resident in New Hampshire, and its only place of business, as well as its officers and members except the members of some subordinate lodges, are in Massachusetts; so that its funds held for the benefit of certificate holders should be distributed in the latter state, so far as possible, in an action to wind up its affairs. 27. foreign insurance companies.[29] A national banking association created under the act of congress is a domestic corporation in the state in which it is located and a foreign corporation in every other state.[30]

5. Territorial Corporations. A corporation created by or under an act of a territorial legislature is not a federal corporation but a corporation of the territory, and it has the status of a foreign corporation in every other state and territory.[31]

6. When Foreign Corporations Are Deemed "Persons." The rule that the word "person" in a statute or constitutional provision is to be construed as including a corporation when the provision can be applied as well to a corporation as to a natural person has been extended to foreign corporations.[32] They are "persons outside of this state," within the meaning of a statute of limitations which excepts from its operation cases where, at the time the cause of action accrues against any "person," he is outside of the state.[33] They are also "persons" within the meaning of a statute relating to taxation, unless a different intent is indicated in the statute.[34]

7. When the Word "Corporation" in Statutes Applies to Foreign Corporations. The answer to this must depend largely upon the subject-matter of the statute, its policy, and the context in which the word "corporation" is employed therein. Where the word "corporation" in a statute can be beneficially applied to a foreign as well as to a domestic corporation, there is no good reason why it

35. Thus by statute in Massachusetts (St. (1870) c. 194) the word "corporation," when employed in the general statutes, includes corporations established under the laws of other states, and having a usual place of business within that commonwealth, from which the implication was drawn that service of process might be had upon them in the manner provided in the case of domestic persons and corporations. omissions affording ground for legal proceedings to vacate its charter, will not ipso facto abrogate or annul its charter, so as to permit a defendant, sued by the corporation in another jurisdiction, to successfully contend that the corporation has no legal existence.[45]

5. Estoppel to Deny Corporate Existence. So also foreign corporations are within the general doctrine established in most states as applicable to domestic corporations,[46] that persons dealing and contracting with a body as a corporation on the one hand, and persons assuming to act as a corporation and contracting as such on the other hand, are estopped, in an action by or against the corporation to enforce contracts so entered into, to deny its corporate existence,[47] except where the corporation is such that its recognition would be contrary to the laws or public policy of the state.[48]

6. Limitation of Powers by Charter and General Laws of Domicile — a. In General. It is a settled principle that wherever a corporation goes for business it carries its charter with it, as that is the law of its existence, and the charter is the same abroad as at home. Whatever disabilities are thereby placed upon the corporation at home it retains abroad, and whatever legislative control it is subjected to at home must be recognized and submitted to by those who deal with it elsewhere.[49] A result of this principle is that, subject to the doctrine of estoppel hereafter referred to,[50] a corporation cannot exercise a particular power in another state or country than that of its creation, unless such power is expressly or impliedly conferred upon it by its charter or governing statute.[51] And the principle applies to provisions in the charter of a corporation prescribing the

Winding up of insolvent corporation.— A statute of the state of a corporation's domicile providing for the winding up of insolvent corporations and distribution of their

b. Exceptions to the General Rule. To the general rule above stated there are exceptions in the case of charter or statutory restrictions in the state of the corporation's domicile which are not intended as restrictions on the powers of the corporation generally, but merely as a prohibition of particular acts or contracts within the state of domicile,[54] such, according to the weight of authority, as general laws prohibiting the taking of a greater rate of interest than the rate thereby prescribed,[55] or even a charter prohibition to this effect,[56] statutes regulating or prohibiting assignments for the benefit of creditors or preferences in contemplation of insolvency,[57] and the statute of wills.[58]

c. Imputing Notice of Charter and Laws of Domicile. Where a corporation goes into another state or country than that of its domicile and does business or makes contracts, persons there dealing with it are chargeable with notice of its charter and of restrictions thereby imposed upon it.[59] But it has been held that they are not chargeable with notice of restrictions upon its powers imposed by general laws of the state of domicile, and not imposed by its charter or governing statute, unless actual notice is proved.[60]

d. Effect of Ultra Vires and Illegal Acts or Contracts — (I) In General. In determining whether a particular contract of a foreign corporation is ultra vires, or illegal because of prohibition, and if so, its effect, the same principles and rules govern as in the case of domestic corporations.[61] Executory ultra vires contracts of a foreign corporation, and in some jurisdictions contracts executed on one side, cannot be enforced either by or against the corporation,[62] except in the case of negotiable paper in the hands of a bona fide holder, and in certain other exceptional cases.[63] Where a foreign corporation has, under its charter, general power to enter into a particular contract, and enters into such a contract without observing certain formalities prescribed by its charter or a general law, or for a purpose not authorized, the contract is enforceable against it, where the other party acts in good faith and without knowledge of the violation of its charter.[64]

(II) Estoppel to Deny Corporate Powers. So also foreign corporations, equally with domestic ones, are within the doctrine established in most jurisdictions that, subject to certain qualifications elsewhere shown,[65] both the corporation itself on the one hand, and the party contracting with it on the other hand, are estopped by their own contract or conduct from setting up, as a defense to an action to enforce the contract, that it was beyond the power of the corporation to make it, particularly while retaining the fruits or the benefits of the contract.[66]

(III) INJUNCTION. Where a foreign corporation, in exercising powers not within its charter, as by laying gas mains in the streets of a city, although with the implied license of the public authorities, creates a public nuisance which will result in special and irreparable injury to a private party, such party may invoke its want of charter power as a ground for relief in equity by injunction.[67]

e. Contracts Presumed to Be Within Their Charters. Where the validity of a contract, made by a corporation in a state other than the state of its creation, is drawn in question, it will not be presumed, in the absence of proof, that there is any restriction in its charter, or in the laws of the state of its creation, prohibiting it from making such contracts in a foreign jurisdiction.[68] But it will be presumed that it acts under a general and not under a limited authority.[69]

C. Disabilities in Absence of Constitutional Protection — 1. CANNOT MIGRATE, BUT MUST DWELL IN PLACE OF CREATION. The following propositions are believed to be settled law: (1) That a corporation can exist only by force of the statute or other law of the state or country in which it is created; (2) that the laws of one state or country can, by their own vigor, have no extraterritorial force in another state or country, but are allowed to operate there only on the principle of comity; (3) that, as a corporation is a creature of the law of the state or country creating it, it cannot migrate into another state or country, establish its residence there, and exercise its franchises there, without the consent of the legislature of that other state or country, express or implied. This doctrine was conceded in a leading case, in the following language in the opinion of the court by Chief Justice Taney: "It is very true that a corporation can have no legal existence out of the boundaries of the sovereignty by which it is created. It exists only in contemplation of law, and by force of the law; and where that law ceases to operate, and is no longer obligatory, the corporation can have no existence. It must dwell in the place of its creation, and cannot migrate to another sovereignty."[70] One result of this doctrine that a corporation cannot migrate, but must dwell in the place of its creation, is that a corporation, in so far as it can be regarded as a "citizen," "resident," or "inhabitant," as it may be for the purpose of jurisdiction of the federal courts and for many other purposes, is a citizen, resident, and inhabitant of the state or country by or under the laws of which it was created, and of that state or country only,[71] even though it may be doing business in another state or country and may have part or all of its property there.[72] As has been seen, however, this principle does not prevent a corporation from acting in another state or country with its express or implied consent.[73]

2. ALL RIGHTS WHEN ACTING OUTSIDE JURISDICTION OF CREATION SUBJECT TO DOMESTIC LAW. Except so far as varied by recent judicial innovations, the doctrine declared in a leading case on the status of foreign corporations remains a principle of American constitutional law. Chief Justice Taney, in giving the opinion of the court, said: "Every power, however, of the description of which we are speaking, which a corporation exercises in another State, depends for its validity upon the laws of the sovereignty in which it is exercised; and a corporation can make no valid contract without their sanction, express or implied."[74] Beyond that, as he further pointed out, everything rests upon the mere comity of states and nations.[75] A corporation can claim no right to do business in another state except subject to the conditions imposed by its laws.[76] It has been well said that "a corporation which seeks, by its agents, to establish a domicile of business in a state other than that of its creation must take that domicile, as individuals are always understood to do, subject to the responsibilities and burdens imposed by the laws which it finds in force there."[77] It becomes amenable to the laws of the latter state and to the process of its courts, upon the same principle, and to the Laws against "trusts" and other combinations in restraint of trade apply to foreign corporations doing business in the state as well as to domestic corporations and citizens. A. 657 (prosecution of agents of foreign insurance companies which have combined to control and increase the rates of insurance on property in the state, in violation of the anti-trust law); State v. Standard Oil Co., 61 Nebr. 28, 84 N. W. 413, 87 Am. St. Rep. 449 (ouster by quo warranto or injunction for violation of anti-trust law, in accordance with express statutory provision).

Contracts of insurance made by a foreign insurance company in a state in which it is permitted to do business are governed by the laws of such state on the subject, anything in the policies to the contrary notwithstanding. And see, generally, INSURANCE; LIFE INSURANCE, and like special titles.

Contracts of building and loan associations made in another state than that of their creation, but in which they are doing business, are governed by the laws of such state. Foreign mutual benefit associations are subject to the same rule. McDermott v. Modern Woodmen of America, 97 Mo. App. 636, 71 S. W. 833; Brassfield v. K. of M. of W., 92 Mo. App. 102. See, generally, MUTUAL BENEFIT INSURANCE.

Usury laws.— The statutes of the domestic state against usury generally apply to foreign corporations, although under their charter and the laws of the state of their creation they may be permitted to take a greater rate of interest than is allowed in the domestic state. that particular laws of the domestic state, even though in terms applicable to "corporations," are not to be construed as applicable to foreign corporations.[79]

3. Cannot Set Up Charters in Defense to Liability For Torts. If a foreign corporation is, through its agents or servants, guilty of a trespass or other wrong within the state where it has acquired a domicile for the purpose of carrying on business, it cannot escape the consequences of its illegal act by setting up its charter and existence under the foreign state or government.[80]

4. Cannot Exercise Corporate Franchises or Powers Except by Comity — a. In General. From the foregoing principles it must follow that a corporation created under the laws of one state or country cannot exercise any of the franchises or powers conferred upon it by its charter within the limits of another state or country, except by the comity of that other state or country, which comity is generally expressed by its legislature in statutes relating to the subject of foreign corporations.[81] The doctrine applies to the territories of the United

St. Rep. 123, holding that a contract made in Illinois by a foreign building and loan association, which it was authorized to make by the statute under which it was organized, was not usurious, where it would not have been so if made by Illinois building and loan associations, which are exempted from the operation of the usury laws, since in Illinois a foreign corporation is subjected by the statutes to the same penalties and restrictions only as domestic corporations of like character. See also Building and Loan Societies, 6 Cyc. 150; and, generally, Usury.

A stipulation in a contract by a foreign corporation doing business in another state than that of its domicile that the contract shall be governed by the laws of the state of its domicile is ineffectual to prevent the application to the contract of the laws of the state in which the corporation is doing business and in which the contract is made. Insolvency, assignment for creditors, and preferences.— In some states it is held that the insolvency laws regulating insolvent corporations and prohibiting assignments for the benefit of creditors or preference of creditors in contemplation of insolvency apply to and prohibit such assignments or preferences by foreign corporations. Fowler v. Bell, 90 Tex. 150, 37 S. W. 1058, 59 Am. St. Rep. 788, 39 L. R. A. 254. In other cases such statutes have been held not to be intended to apply to foreign corporations. See supra, I, A, 7 note 37.

Effect of discharge in insolvency as against foreign corporation creditor.— In Massachusetts it has been held that a corporation of another state, having its main establishment in such other state, is not affected by a discharge in Massachusetts of a Massachusetts debtor, although the corporation has a place of business in the state and a license under Pub. St. c. 100, § 10, and has appointed the commissioner of corporations its agent or attorney for the service of process under St. (1884) c. 330, § 1, since this does not make the corporation a resident of the state, and the insolvency law does not make a discharge effective as against a non-resident of the state, even though he may be doing business therein. States as well as to the states,[82] and to the District of Columbia, in and for which congress is the sole legislative power.[83]

b. This Comity Determined and Defined by Legislation. This comity, it has been well reasoned, is the comity of states, and not the comity of courts. In other words the power of determining whether, how far, with what modification, or on what conditions the laws of one state, or any rights dependent upon them, shall be recognized in another state, is a legislative power. This conclusion then is that the judiciary must be gnided in determining the question by the practice and policy adopted by the legislature.[84]

c. Extent of This Comity. This comity will generally be extended so as to allow the foreign corporation to exercise, within the domestic state, any powers with which it may be endowed by its own charter, unless repugnant to the policy of the domestic state or injurious to its citizens;[85] but when to allow its exercise would be contrary to the laws or good policy or prejudicial to the interests of the state, the rule of comity ceases to be obligatory.[86] As a rule foreign corporations are by comity permitted to exercise the same powers as domestic corporations of like character.[87] Without attempting to enumerate in a single section all the cases to which this comity does not extend, it may be observed in the first place that it does not extend so far as to concede to foreign corporations the powers which their own charters do not permit them to exercise.[88] Nor so far as to per-

A state policy may be as thoroughly established in this way as by positive enactment. If the Legislature does not see fit to prohibit a foreign corporation from carrying its business here, when it is not repugnant to common-law principles, it, in effect, declares the public policy of the state to be favorable to its engaging in business here. The presumption of legislative intention, founded upon the doctrine of comity, affords ample evidence in support of that conclusion."

residence, it is no objection to the validity of corporate acts that they are done in another state, or authorized at a meeting of directors held in another state, where the acts so done or authorized are not repugnant to the laws or policy of the other state within which they are done or authorized.[92] Thus the directors of a railroad corporation chartered in Vermont have power to vote at a meeting held out of the state to confer authority upon an agent to transfer its real estate.[93] And we have seen that meetings for the election of directors,[94] and for the performance of other constituent acts,[95] may under some theories be held outside of the limits of the state creating the corporation. Nor is there any objection to the validity of the ordinary contracts of a corporation, grounded on the place where they are entered into,[96] and the directors of a railroad company accordingly may make contracts out of the state of its incorporation, although the corporation itself cannot migrate.[97] However, meeting of and action by directors beyond the limits of the state of the corporation's creation may be expressly prohibited by its charter or the general laws of such state, and such a prohibition will be recognized and given effect in other states.[98]

D. Constitutional Protection — 1. Not Entitled to Privileges and Immunities of Citizens of the Several States. From what has preceded it must be concluded that a corporation is not a "citizen," within the meaning of that clause of the federal constitution which declares that the citizens of each state shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of citizens in the several states, or the clause in the fourteenth amendment providing that no state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States.[99] Therefore these clauses do not affect the rule that a corporation created by one state can exercise none of the functions or privileges conferred by its charter in any other state of the Union, except by the comity and consent of the latter.[1] A contrary construction of the constitutional provision under consideration often would, it has been pointed out, operate to confer upon citizens of other states combining themselves into corporations greater privileges than are enjoyed by the citizens of the domestic state, and deprive the state of all control over the extent of corporate franchises, proper to be granted, within its limits.

2. Whether Entitled to "Equal Protection of the Laws" of States Within Which They Are Permitted to Do Business. The fourteenth amendment to the constitution of the United States provides that no state shall "deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." The present judicial construction of the clause under consideration is that it does not prohibit a state from imposing such conditions upon foreign corporations as it may choose, as a prerequisite to their admission within its limits.[2] It may for instance impose upon foreign insurance companies doing business within the state a tax of two dollars upon every one hundred dollars of premiums received by such companies, although no such tax is imposed on domestic companies; nor is this a violation of the principle that taxation must be uniform.[3] So it may impose a tax on the Right to contest constitutionality of statute.— Since a foreign corporation is entitled to do business in a state only by comity and under such terms and conditions as the state may see fit to enforce, it is not entitled to contest the constitutionality of a state statute imposing terms upon which it may do business within the state; and therefore whether a statute prohibiting insurance companies from combining to establish rates, etc., and providing for the revocation of the license of a foreign company failing to comply therewith is unconstitutional as to domestic corporations, and therefore void in toto, cannot be determined in a suit by a foreign company to enjoin the state authorities from enforcing its provisions. Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Perkins, 125 Fed. 502. But it has been held that while foreign insurance companies can enter a state to do business only by permission of the state, and subject to such regulations and conditions as it may see fit to impose, yet, where they have complied with all such conditions, and under license from the state have expended money in establishing agencies and in advertising and building up a business, they have the right to challenge the validity of statutes subsequently enacted which affect their business and interests equally with those of domestic companies. Niagara F. Ins. Co. v. Cornell, 110 Fed. 816.

But while a state may prescribe the terms on which foreign corporations may enter to do business, when such a corporation is permitted to enter the validity of its contracts with citizens of the state must be determined by the rules which apply to the same contracts between citizens and domestic corporations. Security Sav., etc., Assoc. v. Elbert, 153 Ind. 198, 54 N. E. 753.

3. Ducat v. Chicago, 48 Ill. 172, 95 Am. Dec. 529. And see infra, III, B, 1. A decision of the supreme court of California goes to the length of holding that after a foreign corporation has been admitted to do business in that state, it is incompetent for the legislature to impose a tax upon it, which is not imposed upon domestic corporations of a like character. The court regard it as violative of a provision of the constitution of amount of capital employed by a foreign manufacturing corporation within the state which sends its goods into the state for sale, although domestic corporations which are wholly engaged in manufacturing similar goods within the state are exempt from taxation, where the statute creating the exemption from taxation makes no discrimination between foreign and domestic corporations.[4] But a corporation not created by or under the laws of a state, or not doing business in that state under conditions that subject it to process from the courts of that state, is within the meaning of the constitutional provision that no state shall "deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."[5]

3. Protection When Engaged in Interstate or Foreign Commerce[6]— a. Statement of Federal Doctrine. The constitution of the United States provides that "the congress shall have power . . . to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several states and with the Indian tribes."[7] The present construction of this provision is that the power thus conferred upon congress is exclusive to the extent that, by conferring it upon congress, the constitution prohibits it to the states, in so far as the power relates to matters of general or national concern, such as require uniformity of regulation; but that, in so far as it relates to matters of local concern, the states may impose regulations, so long as congress declines to act.[8] It is also the settled construction of this provision that interstate commerce carried on by corporations is entitled to the same protection against state exactions as when carried on by individuals.[9] Although congress has exercised the power in a very few instances, this construction involves the further conclusion that the non-exercise by congress of the power is tantamount to the declaration that, in any given particular, except in matters of local concern only, commerce among the several states shall be free.[10]

b. What State Restrictions Are Invalid. Under the operation of this doctrine a ferry-boat plying between two states cannot be compelled to procure a certificate from the secretary of one of such states and to pay a license-tax for the privilege of so navigating, nor be subjected to a statute of one of such states, providing that no foreign corporation shall maintain any action in the state without obtaining a receipt for such license-fee, so as to bar an action on a policy of fire insurance on the boat; since the license-fees imposed by such statutes cannot be imposed upon the transportation of persons or property over interstate the state. San Francisco v. Liverpool, etc., Ins. Co., 74 Cal. 113, 15 Pac. 380, 5 Am. St. Rep. 425. However this may be, it is clear that it violates no principle of the federal constitution, as the supreme court of California seems to suppose.

waters without interfering with the exclusive constitutional right of congress to regulate interstate commerce.[11] A corporation which has no domicile within the state of the forum, but which is entirely non-resident, cannot, for the same reason, be disabled from enforcing contracts for the sale of its goods made with citizens of the domestic state and shipped across the interstate boundary.[12] It may not be compelled to file a copy of its articles of incorporation with the secretary of the domestic state in order to maintain an action for the price of goods which it has sold within such state, either through its traveling salesmen or otherwise, where it has established no place of business within such state.[13] Many other illustrations might be given.[14]

c. What Is Interstate or Foreign Commerce — (i) Transporation. In the first place it is to be observed that interstate or foreign transportation is interstate or foreign commerce, within the meaning of the commerce clause of the federal constitution.[15] Interstate or foreign transportation, within the meaning of this principle, takes place whenever freight is taken up within the limits of a state and set down within the limits of another state or foreign country; or whenever freight is taken up within the limits of another state or foreign country and set down within the limits of the domestic state.[16] Transportation, however, which is wholly within the limits of a state is not interstate commerce, and such business by a foreign corporation may be taxed, prohibited, or regulated, notwithstanding the corporation is also engaged in interstate or foreign commerce.[17]

(ii) Telegraphic and Telephonic Communication. Telegraphic and telephonic communications between different states or between a state and a foreign country are interstate commerce within the same principle, and as such are directly within the power of regulation conferred upon congress, and free from the control of state regulations, except such as are strictly of a police character.[18]

Therefore the act of congress of July 24, 1866, in so far as it declares that the erection of telegraphic lines shall, as against state interference, be free to all who accept its terms and conditions, and that a telegraphic company of one state shall not, after accepting them, be excluded by another state from prosecuting its business within her jurisdiction, is a legitimate regulation by congress of commercial intercourse among the states, and is also appropriate

But this is not true of telegraphic or telephonic communication wholly within the limits of a state, and this may be taxed, prohibited, or regulated, notwithstanding the corporations affected are also engaged in interstate or foreign commerce.[19]

(III) SALES AND SHIPMENTS OF GOODS. Sales of goods by a corporation situated without a state, to a resident of the state, even though made through traveling salesmen or agents sent into the state, to be shipped to him into the state, belong to the operations of interstate commerce, and are consequently not subject to a prohibition of the state constitution or statute against foreign corporations doing business within the state without having an agent or place of business therein, or otherwise subject to prohibition or regulation by the state.[20] The Contract with a corporation to canvass other states for the sale of its goods.— So does a contract by which a resident of a state agrees with a foreign corporation to canvass certain territory within the state for the sale of its manufactured productions, the corporation agreeing to sell the same to him on credit, and taking a bond from him to secure payment for such sales. Such a contract is therefore unaffected by a state statute prohibiting business within the state by foreign corporations which have not complied with certain regulations, such as filing a certificate and designating an agent upon whom process may be served. same is true of purchases of goods within a state by a foreign corporation, where the goods are to be shipped to the corporation in another state.[21] The interstate commerce clause, however, has no application to business done wholly within a state, or where a foreign corporation maintains a resident agent in the state to solicit orders for the purchase of goods and to deliver goods to purchasers.[22]

(IV) Insurance. The business of insurance, as ordinarily conducted, is not commerce; and an insurance company of one state, having an agency by which it conducts the insurance business in another state, is not engaged in commerce between the states; so that restrictions imposed in the state to which it has migrated with respect to its admission into such state, or the manner of conducting its business therein, or even with respect to the kind of contracts of insurance which it may make therein, are not inhibited by that clause of the federal constitution which confers upon congress power to regulate commerce among the states.[23]

(V) Loans and Mortgages. The lending of money by a foreign corporation to a citizen or a domestic corporation and taking of a mortgage to secure the loan is not interstate commerce, and such business may be taxed, prohibited, or regulated by the state.[24]

4. Obligation of Contracts and Vested Rights. The prohibition in the constitution of the United States against state laws impairing the obligation of contracts does not prevent a state, after it has merely licensed or permitted a foreign corporation to do business within its limits, from either revoking the license and excluding the corporation altogether, or imposing new conditions or restrictions upon its right to continue business, for the mere license is not a contract between the state and the corporation, within the meaning of the constitution.[25] Nor is a statute excluding or imposing conditions upon a foreign corporation necessarily unconstitutional as impairing the obligation of contracts between the corporation and shareholders or third persons.[26] And clearly a state may forfeit a license which it has granted to a foreign corporation because of its violation of the statute under which the license was granted and which expressly provides for such forfeiture.[27] But where a foreign corporation has been expressly or impliedly licensed to do business and make contracts or acquire property in a state, the state cannot afterward prevent enforcement of the contracts so made, either by or against the corporation, or otherwise impair the obligation thereof, or deprive the corporation of its vested rights in the property so acquired.[28] And if there is not merely a license, but a grant or contract between a state and a foreign corporation, on the faith of which the corporation has expended money and begun operations, such contract cannot be impaired by subsequent legislation.[29]

5. Corporations in Employ of United States Government. Where a railroad, telegraph, or other corporation is in the employ of the federal government, although it may be a state corporation, a state cannot altogether exclude it or impose conditions upon its doing business, and thus interfere with its operations as the agent of the government;[30] but this doctrine does not prevent a state from taxing property which such a corporation has within its limits.[31] statutes, without the intention of carrying on any business — we will say, to state the strongest case — in the state of their own residence. This practice has become so odious that the corporations thus created have been designated by the use of an odious term, that of "tramp" corporations.

2. Such Corporations "Citizens" of State Creating Them. The interpretation of the federal constitution and judiciary act has resulted in the doctrine that such corporations are conclusively presumed to be citizens of the state within whose limits they are created, although not one of their members may have ever been within that state, and although no exertion has been made by them to become citizens of that state other than to pay a fee to a lawyer in that state for drawing up articles of incorporation and procuring them to be filed and recorded,[32] thus enabling the federal courts to seize jurisdiction of ordinary actions between citizens of the same state contrary to the intent and meaning of the constitution and the federal judiciary act, and to defraud the state courts out of a portion of their rightful jurisdiction over their own citizens.

3. Recognition of Such Corporations by State Courts. The hospitality of the courts of some of the states has been such that they have recognized as valid the existence of corporations formed by the act of their own citizens in going into another state and procuring themselves to be incorporated there for the purpose of doing business as a corporation within the state of their residence or elsewhere.[33] But such corporations have not always been recognized in the states of the residence of their members.[34]

34. Thus in a notable case in Massachusetts it appeared that a citizen of Massachusetts who had formerly been engaged in business in that state went to New Hampshire, and there, with the nominal coöperation of four "dummies," reorganized his business as a New Hampshire corporation. He went through certain forms prescribed by the New Hampshire statutes, and, as he supposed, did everything necessary and proper to establish, in a legal manner, a corporation called the "Forbes Woolen Mills." All the stock was issued to George Forbes, who paid fifty per cent of the capital stock in cash and supplies, and he was elected president and treasurer. No manufacturing was done in New Hampshire, nor was any business done there except under the laws of their own state for the purpose of doing business exclusively within another state.[35] Here the mere fact that it was not intended by the corporators that the corporation should do any business within the state under whose laws it was organized will not of itself be a sufficient ground for expelling it from the state into which it migrates, or for holding its members liable in that state as partners, there being no actual intent to evade the laws of the state within which it settles.[36]

b. Decisions Denouncing Such Corporations. But other courts have taken the view that, irrespective of the residence or citizenship of its members, the organization under the law of one state, of a corporation for the purpose of doing business exclusively in another state, is a fraud upon the laws of the latter state, and that such persons will not be deemed possessed of any of the immunities of a corporation in the latter state, but will be liable for their undertakings as partners.[37] The supreme court of Kansas has held, on the soundest grounds, that where a company was incorporated under the laws of Pennsylvania with the power of doing business anywhere "except in the state of Pennsylvania," it could not do business in Kansas; since there was no rule of comity which would allow one state to spawn corporations, and send them forth into other states to do business there which it would not permit them to do within its own boundaries.[38]

the holding of corporate meetings, and possibly the sale, now and then, of a bill of goods in the ordinary course of business, the principal place of business being at East Brookfield, in Massachusetts, where woolen goods were manufactured and sent to commission houses in New York. In an action against Forbes individually, for a debt contracted in such business, after a finding by the jury that there had been no intention to carry on the actual business of the pretended corporation in New Hampshire, and that Forbes did not in good faith intend to organize a corporation, although he believed that the organization was technically valid in law, the trial judge ruled that Forbes was personally liable, and this judgment was affirmed in the supreme judicial court. The court, among other things, said: "Here there was no corporation. It was just the same as if the defendant had done nothing at all in the way of establishing a corporation, but had conducted his business under the name of the Forbes Woolen Mills, calling it a corporation. The business was his personal business, which he transacted under that name. Montgomery v. Forbes, 148 Mass. 249, 253, 19 N. E. 342. See also Taylor v. Branham, 35 Fla. 297, 17 So. 552, 48 Am. 35. Of this an example is the Southern Pacific Company chartered by the legislature of Kentucky with the power of owning and operating railroads wherever it may choose except in the state of Kentucky. It has no property in the state of Kentucky, and merely keeps up the form of maintaining an office and a clerk within that state, by which device it is enabled, under the unfaithful interpretation of the federal constitution and judiciary act already referred to, to litigate every controversy where the value exceeds two thousand dollars, between itself and the inhabitants of the states through which its roads run, in the courts of the United States.

Somewhat analogous is a decision of the supreme court of New Jersey to the effect that a fire-insurance company cannot be established in Jersey City under a charter of such a company located in Trenton; that such an organization in Jersey City is a fraud upon the statute, is outside of the charter, and creates no corporation de jure or de facto; so that, if such an organization assumes to write policies, its directors are personally liable thereon. Wonderly v. Booth, 36 N. J. L. 250. Similarly, it was early held in Michigan that where a bank is located in one county by its charter, and it assumes to establish an agency in another county, where it receives deposits and buys and sells exchange, it thereby violates its charter. People v. Oakland County Bank, 1 Dougl. (Mich.) 282. But the decision was rendered at a time when the business of banking was an exclusive privilege, jealously guarded by the mistaken policy of the law; and it is doubtful whether it expresses the law as understood in our day.
