I. DEFINITION.

An "explosive" may be defined as any substance by whose decomposition or combustion gas is generated with such rapidity that it can be used for blasting or in firearms.[1]

1. Century Dict. And see Washburn v. Miami Valley Ins. Co., 2 Fed. 633, 2 Flipp. 664. See also Hobbs v. Northern Assur. Co., 8 Ont. 343, 346.

As defined by statute, the term "explosive" shall be understood to include guncotton, nitroglycerine or any compound thereof, and any fulminate, or any substance intended to be used, by exploding or igniting the same, to produce a force to propel missiles or to rend apart substances, except gunpowder (1 Mass. Rev. Laws (1902), p. 880, c. 102, § 105), gunpowder, nitroglycerine, dynamite, guncotton, blasting powders, fulminate of mercury, or of other metals, colored fires, and every other substance, whether similar to those described herein or not, used or manufactured with a view to produce a practical effect by explosion or a pyrotechnic effect; and the term includes fog-signals, fireworks, fuses, rockets, percussion caps, detonators, cartridges, ammunition of all descriptions, and every adaptation or preparation of an explosive as defined herein (38 Vict. c. 17, § 3, subs. 1).

Fog-signals are included in "explosive preparation or composition" within the meaning of 23 & 24 Vict. c. 139.

"Explosive compound," as defined by statute, includes guncotton, nitroglycerine, or any other compound of the same; any fulminate, or, generally, any substance intended to be used, by exploding or igniting the same, to produce a force to propel missiles or to rend apart substances, except gunpowder. S. C. Civ. Code (1902), § 2156.

II. STATUTORY AND MUNICIPAL REGULATIONS.

In many jurisdictions the manufacture, keeping, or sale of explosives or dangerously inflammable materials has been greatly restricted or otherwise regulated either by direct statutory provisions or by municipal ordinances.[2]

III. CRIMINAL PROSECUTIONS.[3]

A. In General. Whether an offense growing out of the illegal manufacture, sale, etc., of an explosive constitutes a misdemeanor[4] or a felony[5] depends upon the particular statute or ordinance.

B. Sale of Oil Below Test. Where one is charged with selling oil in violation of a statute, the illegal intent need not be alleged or proved, but will be presumed upon proof of sale;[6] nor will ignorance of the law excuse defendant charged with this offense;[7] and each sale is a distinct offense, and a convic-

An "explosive substance," as defined by statute, includes any materials for making any explosive substance; also any apparatus, machine, implement, or materials used, or intended to be used, or adapted for causing, or aiding in causing, any explosion in or with any explosive substance; also any part of any such apparatus, machine, or implement. 46 Vict. c. 3, § 9.

A manufacturer of soda water in the basement of a tenement-house used carbonic acid gas in the process. Such gas is a compressed gas, but there was no evidence that it was manufactured on the premises, and none to show that soda water is an explosive, or that its manufacture was dangerous. It was held not to support a conviction under N. Y. Pen. Code, § 389, before the amendment by Laws (1902), c. 486, prohibiting the manufacture of compressed gases or of any explosive articles. IV. CIVIL LIABILITY.

A. For Injuries From Accidental Explosions — 1. In General. Accidental explosions incidental to the negligent or illegal handling, storage, or use of explosives often result in injuries for which a civil liability arises.[9]

2. Illegal or Negligent Manufacture. Liability for injuries resulting from the explosion of explosives manufactured in a negligent manner or manufactured in violation of some statute or ordinance rests upon the same principles as liability for such injuries where explosives are illegally or negligently stored or kept.[10] Thus the manufacture of an explosive under such circumstances or in such places as to constitute a public nuisance will authorize a recovery by any one injured by an explosion of such explosives without proof of negligence on the part of the manufacturer;[11] but in the absence of the creation of such a nuisance negligence on the part of the manufacturer must be shown in order to warrant a recovery.[12]

3. Illegal or Negligent Storage or Keeping — a. Temporary Storage. A regulation prohibiting the storage of explosives beyond a certain amount has been held to be violated, even though the storage was only temporary or in due course of transportation,[13] and although no damage resulted therefrom.[14]

b. Permanent Storage. If the erection of powder-houses or magazines, or the keeping of more than a certain amount of explosives in a certain locality, be in violation of an ordinance, the courts usually declare their existence to be a nuisance;[15] but where their maintenance is not in violation of some law, whether or not they will be declared nuisances depends upon their structure, proximity to other property, and other attending circumstances.[16]

c. Negligence in Keeping. When the keeping of an explosive becomes unlawful and per se a nuisance, one is liable for the injuries occasioned by an explosion thereby, regardless of the degree of care exercised in the keeping thereof;[17] but when the attending circumstances are such that the keeping cannot be said to be per se unlawful, it is necessary, in order to authorize a recovery for injuries caused by their explosion, to show some negligence or want of due care, upon the part of the party keeping them.[18]

4. Illegal or Negligent Transportation[19] — a. Notice of Dangerous Character. It is the duty of one, in transporting or shipping explosives, to give notice of their dangerous character to the carrier; and the failure to perform such duty renders him liable for injuries caused by a resulting explosion.[20] It is not incum-

It is said that the same degree of care is required of those transporting explosives or combustible oils as is exercised by merchants and those handling them,[22] which means only that considering the risk run as many precautions must be taken as would be taken by men of ordinary prudence.[23] But if a carrier be uninformed as to the dangerous character of an explosive package, it is not negligence to handle it as similar looking packages are handled.[24]

5. Illegal or Negligent Sale — a. Notice of Dangerous Character. There is an implied duty on the part of one who sells explosives to give notice of their dangerous character,[25] which duty is sometimes expressly enjoined by statute.[26]

b. Liability to Subsequent Vendees. Where one sells oil in violation of a statute, his liability is not confined to the immediate vendee, but extends to subsequent purchasers.[27]

c. Selling to Infant. If one sells gunpowder or other explosives to children, or to others whom he knows to be incapable of taking proper care of them, he is liable for injuries resulting from their improper use by such persons.[28]

6. Illegal or Negligent Use. One whose business requires the use of explosives must use such care and caution in handling or guarding them as prudent and careful persons whose business requires the use of such explosives ordinarily exercise.[29]

B. For Injuries From Blasting — 1. General Rule of Liability. It may be said to be the rule that one who in blasting upon his premises casts rocks or other débris upon the land of another is liable for such invasion, regardless of the degree of care or skill used in doing the work.[30]

2. Limitations of Rule[31] — a. Injuries by Vibrations. The courts in some cases recognize a distinction between an injury caused by blasting débris directly upon the property of another, and by injuring it from vibrations in the air or from him is chargeable, as a matter of law, with knowledge that naphtha is highly explosive, in such sense as to relieve the original seller from liability. Wellington v. Downer Kerosene Oil Co., 104 Mass. 64.

W. 488, holding, however, that the care required of persons whose business requires the use of dynamite is greater than that required with respect to the use of less dangerous explosives. Compare Makins v. Piggott, 29 Can. Supreme Ct. 188, where the explosive was negligently left within the reach of a child who in handling it was injured by its explosion.

Illustration.— A defendant, sued for having accidentally exploded a blast of dynamite by hammering on an adjacent rock, is not chargeable with negligence in not having first examined the ledge of rock to see whether another blast, which had exploded six feet away, scattering débris, had not produced a fissure in the rock leading into the hole drilled for the unexploded blast, and also loosened the rock adjacent thereto, so as to make his hammering the possible occasion of the second explosion. But compare Klepsch v. Donald, 4 Wash. 436, 30 Pac. 991, 31 Am. St. Rep. 936, where, although this doctrine was not repudiated, the circumstances of the case took it without the rule.

Reason for rule.— In Hay v. Cohoes Co., 2 N. Y. 159, 161, 15 Am. Dec. 279, the court, per Gardiner, J., said: "It is better that one man should surrender a particular use of his land, than that another should be deprived of the beneficial use of his property altogether, which might be the consequence if the privilege of the former should be wholly unrestricted. . . . If the defendants in excavating their canal, in itself a lawful use of their land, could, in the manner mentioned by the witnesses, demolish the stoop of the plaintiff with impunity, they might, for the same purpose, on the exercise of reasonable care, demolish his house, and thus deprive him of all use of his property." In G. B. & L. R. Co. v. Eagles, 9 Colo. 544, 546, 13 Pac. 696, the court said: "In general, if a voluntary act, lawful in itself, may naturally result in the injury of another, or the violation of his legal rights, the actor must at his peril see to it that such injury or such violation does not follow, or he must expect to respond in damages therefor; and this is true regardless of the motive or the degree of care with which the act is performed."

While a contractor may lawfully blast rocks in a right of way, he cannot throw the rocks on persons rightfully occupying or using neighboring property. Cary v. Morrison, 129 Fed. 177, 63 C. C. A. 267, 65 L. R. A. 659.

earth, caused by the blast, holding that in the latter case it is necessary, to recover for the injury, to show that the work was done negligently or carelessly.[32]

b. Blasting in Mine. One cannot, while lawfully blasting in a mine, in the absence of negligence, be held liable for injuries to property upon the surface, so long as the land in its natural state be not disturbed.[33]

3. Blasting in Cities. Where one, in doing certain blasting within the limits of a city, injures property of another, the fact that the former has fully complied with the regulations of the city authorities as to the manner in which the blasting should be done will not relieve him of liability if the blasting was done without due care.[34]

4. Blasting Near Highways. It has been held that where one is injured by falling stones or other débris, caused by blasting, while traveling upon the highway, the persons conducting the work are liable therefor, regardless of the care used in its prosecution and a recovery cannot be defeated by the fact that there was no negligence in the prosecution of the work;[35] in some jurisdictions, how-

Suppl. 22, where it is said that blasting with an explosive so powerful as to injure the property of adjoining owners by atmospheric concussions creates a nuisance, and liability attaches therefor.

Reason for limitation.— The maxim "Sic utero tuo ut alienum non lædas" does not prevent an owner of property from making proper use thereof, although such use may inflict damages upon his neighbor; the real meaning of the rule is that a person may not use his own property to the injury of any legal right of another. Newell v. Woolfolk, 91 Hun (N. Y.) 211, 36 N. Y. Suppl. 327. In Benner v. Atlantic Dredging Co., 134 N. Y. 156, 162, 31 N. E. 328, 30 Am. St. Rep. 649, 17 L. R. A. 220, the court said: "One cannot confine the vibration of the earth or air within inclosed limits, and hence it must follow that if in any given case they are rightfully caused, their extension to their ultimate and natural limits cannot be unlawful, and the consequential injury, if any, must be remediless." While in Booth v. Rome, etc., R. Co., 140 N. Y. 267, 278, 35 N. E. 592, 37 Am. St. Rep. 552, 24 L. R. A. 105, the court reason thus: "May the man who has first built a store or warehouse or dwelling on his lot and has blasted the rock for a basement or cellar, prevent his neighbor from doing the same thing when he comes to build on bis lot adjoining, on the ground that by so doing his own structure will be injured? Such a rule would enable the first occupant to control the uses of the adjoining property, to the serious injury of the owner, and prevent or tend to prevent the improvement of property."

Suppl. 73], where plaintiff sued to recover for injuries to a vault of a building constructed under a sidewalk, alleged to have been caused by negligence of defendant in blasting while constructing a trench in front of the building under a municipal contract providing that blasting should be conducted in conformity with the city ordinances. There was no evidence showing negligence, or that the injury to the building did not naturally result from the blasting in connection with some weakness in the construction of the building. It was held that a nonsuit was properly granted.

A subcontractor engaged in excavating for the rapid transit subway in New York city drilled holes for blasting within a foot of a water-pipe, and nearer to the pipe than the rules of the water department permitted, and exploded in the holes a quantity of dynamite, without turning off the water or protecting the pipe in any way. The rock which was blasted could have been removed by breaking it with a hammer without injury to the pipe. It was held that he was guilty of negligence making him liable for the damages sustained by reason of the breaking of the pipe, thereby permitting water to escape therefrom and to flow on to the premises of another. Reason.— In Sullivan v. Dunham, 161 N. Y.

ever, the person engaged in blasting is liable only for injuries resulting from negligence.[36]

5. Blasting by Independent Contractor.[37] The liability of a principal for the negligence of an independent contractor cannot be said to be settled. By the weight of authority it seems that he is not liable, although the work to be done is intrinsically dangerous, so long as no negligence can be imputed to him in employing such contractor, and the work itself be lawful, and will not necessarily result in injury to another.[38] In some jurisdictions where the work is done as contemplated he is liable as a joint wrong-doer;[39] so also is he liable if he contracts with one whom he knows to be in the habit of blasting in violation of an ordinance.[40]

6. Observance of Precautions — a. Covering of Blast. It is a duty of those blasting in dangerous places to restrict within safe limits the flight of blasted rocks by properly covering the blast;[41] and in some jurisdictions this duty is expressly imposed by ordinance,[42] a failure to comply with which is evidence of negligence.[43]

290, 300, 55 N. E. 923, 76 Am. St. Rep. 274, 47 L. R. A. 715, plaintiff's intestate, while walking along the highway, was killed by a falling stump, as the result of a blast in an adjoining field. The court, in holding defendant liable regardless of negligence, said: "[This doctrine] rests upon the principle, founded in public policy, that the safety of property generally is superior in right to a particular use of a single piece of property by its owner. . . . It makes human life safer by tending to prevent a landowner from casting, either with or without negligence, a part of his land upon the person of one who is where he has a right to be. . . . The public travel must not be endangered to accommodate the private rights of individuals."

b. Warning Previous to Blast. It is incumbent upon those who are engaged in blasting to give timely notice of each blast, that one may have sufficient time to escape the danger.[44] A failure to give such notice is in some jurisdictions made negligence per se by statute,[45] while in others the question of negligence from such omission is for the jury.[46] Whether or not a certain warning was sufficient has also been held to be a question of fact for the jury.[47]

c. Effect of Previous Warning. Giving fair and timely warning of an impending blast is held to discharge one from liability if the injured party fails to heed such warning.[48]

E. 642, 16 L. R. A. 395, where a distinction is made between a voluntary spectator and a traveler.

50. Liability for acts of third person.— Defendant owned and managed a park for public amusement for an admission fee. Plaintiff paid the admission fee and entered the park to witness an exhibition of fireworks as advertised by defendant. During the exhibition a rocket was discharged which struck plaintiff and injured her. A third must use the care and prudence exercised by an ordinarily prudent and intelligent man to protect not only his guests and patrons[51] but all others[52] from unnecessary risks from the discharge or attempted discharge of such fireworks.

3. Liability of Municipality For Acts of Its Servants. In many jurisdictions the manner, place, and time of using fireworks is expressly regulated by statute or ordinance.[53] But it has been held that in the gratuitous provision of such amusement for the public a city would not be liable for an injury sustained by one through the negligence of its servants;[54] and especially would this be true if the ordinance authorizing the display be not regularly passed,[55] or the display be in violation of the ordinance.[56] On the other hand where the mayor was authorized by ordinance to permit displays in certain public squares and he issued a permit for a display in a street, the city was held liable for resulting damage.[57]

4. Liability For Acts of Infants. Where a parent through lack of care or watchfulness permits an infant of tender age to discharge fireworks he is liable for injuries resulting from a negligent use of them.[58] And the rule has been held to apply to a schoolmaster, should he permit their use by small pupils under his care.[59]

D. Who May Sue and Persons Liable.[60] In an action to recover for damages to property caused by an explosion the title is not involved; proof of actual and peaceable possession by the tenant is sufficient to maintain the action.[61] A person whose business was that of exhibitor of fireworks did all the work in connection with the sending off fireworks, under a contract with defendant to give the exhibition, and defendant had no control over the details of the work nor over the men who performed it. It was held that defendant was not liable, although the third person was negligent. Deyo v. Kingston Consol. R. Co., 94 N. Y. App. Div. 578, 88 N. Y. Suppl. 487.

One who merely permits the display of fireworks upon his private grounds and who did not procure or explode them is not liable for an injury caused by them to one who complains only of their quality and the manner in which they are handled. Waixel v. Harrison, 37 Ill. App. 323.

Proper care.— If defendant by its amusement committee, who were not experts, exercised due care to employ a competent and skilful person to manufacture, produce, and discharge the fireworks, and exercised proper precautions to protect spectators by keeping them at a reasonable distance from the place of discharge, it was not guilty of negligence. Sebeck v. Plattdeutsche Volksfest Verein, 124 Fed. 11, 59 C. C. A. 531.

52. It is negligence for a corporation, giving a fireworks exhibition on its own grounds, to use dynamite bombs and other explosives, which are so improperly prepared and manufactured that they will not explode while in the air, and fire or propel them into the air at such an angle that they will fall outside of its grounds upon public or private premises, and permit them to remain where children and persons unacquainted with their dangerous nature can pick them up, handle them, and thus cause them to explode, to their injury and damage. company and its employee,[62] a principal and an independent contractor,[63] or two manufacturers[64] may under certain circumstances be jointly liable for damages caused by an explosion. And all those concerned in the maintenance of a powder-house or magazine are liable for the damage from its explosion should it be declared a nuisance.[65] The general rules of liability incidental to the relation of master and servant obtain with regard to the handling of dangerous or explosive materials;[66] and so too with respect to the non-liability for injuries caused by a fellow servant.[67]

E. Defenses — 1. In General. Limit of risk.— One assumes the risk of personal injury in blasting with the ordinary appliances used for that purpose, but not those risks attendant upon the use of an unusual, untested, and exceedingly dangerous article, which could not be tamped without inevitable explosion, the dangerous quality of which was unknown to him. given by the landowner to blast rocks over land,[72] the conduct of the business in the usual and customary manner,[73] nor the unprofitableness of the business if otherwise conducted[74] would constitute a valid defense.

2. CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE[75] — a. In General. The established doctrine of contributory negligence as a defense applies in this class of actions.[76] But one cannot be said to be guilty of contributory negligence who is merely present and observing a display of fireworks;[77] nor is it per se contributory negligence for one to go upon premises where a fire is likely to cause an explosion, if he does so in good faith, intending to save life or property.[78]

b. Disregard of Warning. Where one has been properly warned of the danger, and disregards the same, he cannot recover.[79]

74. It is no defense in an action for damages from negligent blasting that the use of proper care or a change in the manner of doing the work would have decreased the profit thereof, or rendered it unprofitable altogether. 79. Mills v. Wilmington City R. Co., 1 Marv. (Del.) 269, 40 Atl. 1114. It is the duty of one lawfully using property near to that on which another is legally engaged in blasting, and who is warned of a coming explosion, to use reasonable diligence to escape danger on account of it, and a failure to exercise such care constitutes contributory negligence, fatal to his action for damages for any injury. Cary v. Morrison, 129 Fed. 177, 63 C. C. A. 267, 65 L. R. A. 659. See also supra, IV, B, 6, c.

Attending circumstances may excuse a failure to heed such warning. Clarkin v. Biwabik-Bessemer Co., 65 Minn. 483, 67 N. W. 1020. In this case plaintiffs were remaining in possession of a boarding camp as bare licensees, and defendant stored a quantity of dynamite in a building near by, and notified plaintiffs that if they remained in the camp they would do so at their own risk. It was held that the severity of the weather, sickness of a member of the family, and financial embarrassment could all be considered by the jury in determining whether they had reasonable opportunity to remove before the explosion, which occurred three weeks after the warning.

Sufficiency of notice of danger.— An oil company, sending its wagon to a repairing firm for repairs, notified the agent in charge of the shop, who in turn notified one of the partners, that the tank ought to be washed out before work was commenced. Such partner failed to notify his copartner, who did the work and was injured by the explosion of vaporized oil from the tank. It was held that the injured partner had notice of the dangerous condition of the tank, and that the proximate cause was the negligence in undertaking the repairs, which precludes a recovery. King v. National Oil Co., 81 Mo. App. 155. In Bertha Zinc Co. v. Martin, 93 Va. 791, 22 S. E. 869, it is held not to be

c. Proximity to Dangerous Property. One is not guilty of contributory negligence in living in his home near a magazine, although he has knowledge of its dangerous character;[80] nor in continuing to carry on business near by after an explosion has occurred.[81] Neither is it a defense that plaintiff has leased or sold a portion of his property to another for the purpose of manufacturing powder.[82] Nor would the fact that the injured property was not adjacent in itself defeat a recovery.[83]

F. Action to Recover Damages — 1. Form of Action. Case is the proper action to recover damages for injuries caused by an explosion.[84]

2. Jurisdiction.[85] Where one is injured by negligent blasting, the cause of action accrues in the jurisdiction where the injury occurred, although the work is conducted within another jurisdiction.[86]

3. Pleading[87] — a. In General. If the complaint sets out facts which would render the keeping of explosives a nuisance, negligence need not be alleged;[88] but when negligence becomes material and defendant is sought to be held for the negligent performance of certain acts recovery can be had for those acts only where the negligence is charged in the declaration.[89] But a complaint which charges negligence in general terms is good on demurrer,[90] a motion to make more specific being the proper remedy. So also must the duty be alleged if one is sought to be held for a negligent breach thereof.[91]

b. Where Special Damages Are Sought. Where special damages are sought to be recovered, as for suffering and anxiety of mind,[92] or for loss of time,[93] there must be a special allegation as to such damages.

c. Variance. The general rule that it is necessary for the proof to substantially correspond with the allegation applies in this class of actions.[94]

4. Evidence[95]— a. Presumptions and Burden of Proof. The usual rules as to presumptions[96] and burden of proof govern.[97] Thus it has been held that a presumption of negligence may arise from the fact of the explosion itself[98] or the injury resulting therefrom,[99] especially in connection with other circumstances, such as the nature of the explosive or the manner of its use,[1] although as a rule the question of negligence is purely one of fact which should be submitted to the jury.[2] The burden of proof to establish negligence in the handling of explosives rests of course upon plaintiff.[3]

seven-degree gasoline, the most dangerous on the market, and that defendant did not notify plaintiff's employer of its dangerous qualities, a demurrer to the petition, on the ground that one selling merchandise is not responsible for damages to an employee of the purchaser resulting therefrom, was properly overruled, since the gasoline sold was a substance inherently dangerous to human life, which it was defendant's duty to have warned purchasers against. Negl. § 60], holding that in the absence of any explanation of the real cause, an explosion of nitroglycerine, or dynamite in process of manufacture raises a presumption of negligence. In this case numerous authorities in analogous cases are reviewed and the rule of the text upheld.

99. It is sometimes held that the fact of an injury caused by a blast raises a presumption of negligence on the part of those conducting it. Ulrich v. McCabe, 1 Hilt. (N. Y.) 251; Klepsch v. Donald, 8 Wash. 162, 35 Pac. 621.

b. Admissibility — (I) In General. The competency, relevancy, or materiality of evidence is controlled by the general rules governing the admissibility of evidence.[4] These rules have been applied to the admissibility of declarations of persons injured [5] or killed [6] in actions for personal injuries or for death caused by explosions; of evidence as to the effect of other injuries [7] or other explosions;[8] of evidence as to the financial condition of the parties;[9] of evidence as to the quantum of damages;[10] and of evidence as to general custom and usage in regard to keeping explosives,[11] as well as to the admissibility of positive and negative testimony.[12]

(II) To Show Intent. Where the exercise of proper care constitutes a valid defense full opportunity should be given defendant to show acts of caution and good faith on his part;[13] but where the exercise of care would not be a defense evidence of such care is inadmissible when no claim is made for exemplary damages.[14] On the trial of one for the unlawful manufacture of an explosive the nature of the substance itself, the concealment of it, and the fact that it is unnecessary in his lawful business, and contemporancous declarations, may all be considered in determining his unlawful intent.[15]

7. Munro v. Pacific Coast Dredging, etc., Co., 84 Cal. 515, 24 Pac. 303, 18 Am. St. Rep. 248, holding that in an action for an injury from negligent blasting evidence is admissible showing the effect of the explosion upon adjoining property.

8. Fillo v. Jones, 2 Abb. Dec. (N. Y.) 121, holding that, where one is injured by an explosion of fireworks alleged to have been wrongfully kept, it is not permissible to show that other fires caused by fireworks had occurred at other times on the premises of other persons; at least without proof that the fireworks and the conditions of ignition were similar.

9. Myers v. Malcolm, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 292, 41 Am. Dec. 744 (evidence of defendant's wealth not admissible in action for nuisance); Simmons v. McConnell, 86 Va. 494, 10 S. E. 838 (evidence of plaintiff's financial condition admissible).

12. Beauchamp v. Saginaw Min. Co., 50 Mich. 163, 5 N. W. 65, 45 Am. Rep. 30, holding that, where there was positive testimony that proper warning had been given, it is not clearly error to allow witnesses to testify that they heard no warning. In Wright v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 27 Ill. App. 200, where a violation of a city ordinance in the storage of oil was complained of, it was held an error not to permit plaintiff to prove the condition of defendant's warehouse, and that the floor thereof was soaked with oil.

13. Furth v. Foster, 7 Rob. (N. Y.) 484, holding that, in an action against defendant for an injury resulting from the alleged negligently carrying of gunpowder through the streets, evidence that he submitted the powder for examination to persons familiar with its use in blasting and was told by them that it was harmless is admissible.

a magazine, it has been held,[16] and likewise denied,[17] that evidence of the manner of construction of other magazines is admissible.

c. Weight and Sufficiency. In like manner the general rules as to the weight and sufficiency of evidence control.[18] Thus a written notice of an intention to blast rock at a certain place,[19] or giving orders and superintending the blasting, is prima facie evidence that the parties are themselves the actors.[20] So evidence of a failure to comply with an ordinance regarding blasting is sufficient evidence of negligence to go to the jury.[21] It is sufficient to show that the rocket was set in motion by defendant's negligence without pointing out the particular negligent act that caused the injury.[22]

5. TRIAL[23] — a. Questions of Law and Fact. Under the usual rule with respect to questions of law and fact[24] defendant's negligence,[25] plaintiff's contributory negligence,[26] the sufficiency of notice of the dangerous character of an explosive given to a carrier,[27] and whether the keeping or storage of explosives is or is not a nuisance per se,[28] have been very properly held to be questions which

b. Instructions. The instructions of the court must comply with the rules governing instructions in civil actions generally.[29] Thus while instructions should not ignore matters in evidence and material to the issue,[30] they must be based upon some evidence[31] and must be consistent.[32]

c. Judgment.[33] It is error to enter a judgment for damages caused by unlawful blasting, in excess of the verdict, and such error will be modified on appeal.[34]

30. See Hill v. Meyer Bros. Drug Co., 140 Mo. 433, 31 S. Not material to the issue.— Where a blacksmith was injured by a kick from a horse which was frightened by an explosion in the vicinity of the shop, it was error, in an action against the excavators who caused the explosion, to permit a recovery upon the ground that the charge of dynamite was excessive, or that it was not properly covered, when the only ground of negligence set up in the declaration was the failure of defendants to give notice of the blast. execution,[7] or extendi facias;[8] a writ, issuing from the exchequer, by which the body, goods, and lands of the debtor may all be taken at once to satisfy the judgment;[9] an execution writ in the nature of a final process.[10] (See, generally, EXECUTIONS.)

EXTENUATE. To lessen; to palliate; to mitigate.[11]

EXTERNAL.[12] A term used in contradistinction to "internal."[13] It can only apply to something which has an outside and an inside,[14] and as applied to a house,

'extent' is sometimes used to express duration; but it is never so used in a professional sense or in common parlance. . . . No definition signifying duration is given to the word 'extent,' by the best lexicographers." Wilson v. Rousseau, 30 Fed. Cas. No. 17,832, 1 Blatchf. 3, 107.

7. Kimball v. Russell, 56 N. H. 488, 493; Webster Dict. [quoted in Wilson v. Rousseau, 30 Fed. Cas. No. 17,832, 1 Blatchf. 3].

8. Hence the definition of "extendi facias" which is, literally, "That you cause to be appraised at their full or extended value." Wharton L. Lex.

"In England, an extent, or extendi facias, is the peculiar remedy to recover debts of record due to the crown. It differs from an ordinary execution at the suit of a subject, in that under it, the body, lands and goods of the debtor may all be taken at once, to compel payment of the debt. There are two kinds of extents there, in chief and in aid. An extent in chief issues from the Court of Exchequer, and directs the sheriff to take an inquisition or inquest of office on the oath of lawful men, to ascertain the lands, etc., of the debtor, and seize them into the Queen's hands. The writ is usually preceded by a scire facias, that the debtor may have opportunity to appear and show cause against it; but when the debt is in danger of being lost, it will issue immediately on an affidavit of debt and danger and a fiat, in which case, after the writ is returned, the debtor, if he disputes the debt, may enter an appearance and plead thereto. There is also an extent in chief in the second degree, which is a hostile proceeding by the crown against the debtor, of a crown-debtor, against whom also an extent in chief has issued." Hackett v. Amsden, 56 Vt. 201, 206.

"Under our statute an extent may be likened to an extent in chief in England. It is so to speak, prerogative process, affording a summary remedy for recovering public revenue from public officers who have committed a breach of public duty, and in case of state taxes for recovery from the inhabitants of the town as well. No notice is given to show cause against the State Treasurer's extent." Hackett v. Amsden, 56 Vt. 201, 206 [citing Waldron v. Lee, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 328, and quoted in Mt. Holly v. French, 75 Vt. 1, 4, 52 Atl. 1038].

"An extent in aid issues, not at the suit of the crown, like an extent in chief, but at the suit or instance of a crown-debtor against a person indebted to himself; and it is grounded on the Statute of Extent, 33 Hen. IV. c. 39, and on the principle that the crown is entitled to the debts due to the debtor. But when a crown-debtor ceases to be liable to the crown, he ceases to be entitled to crown process. Extents in chief have priority over extents in aid, and both have priority over subject creditors. By the treaty of Union, extents were introduced into Scotland in revenue matters." Hackett v. Amsden, 56 Vt. 201, 207.

"The writ seems to have taken its name from the fact that the sheriff is to cause the lands to be appraised at their full extended value before he delivers them to the plaintiff." Mt. Holly v. French, 75 Vt. 1, 3, 52 Atl. 1038 [citing Bouvier L. Dict.].

Blackstone says: "Upon some prosecutions given by statute; as in the case of recognizances for debts acknowledged on statutes merchant, or statutes staple . . . upon forfeiture of these, the body, land and goods may all be taken at once in execution, to compel the payment of the debt. The process thereon is usually called an extent, or extendi facias, because the sheriff is to cause the lands, &c., to be appraised to their full extended value, before he delivers them to the plaintiff, that it may be certainly known how soon the debt will be satisfied." 3 Blackstone Comm. 420.

Distinguished from "execution."— While this process is in the nature of an execution, as is also a warrant for the collection of taxes, it is very unlike the process commonly called an execution, which is issued on judgments recovered in suits inter partes. Extent proceedings are not inter partes, but rather in the nature of criminal proceedings. EXTINGUISH.[22] The words "extinguish," "extinguished," "extinguishment" when used in their exact sense express the idea of a complete wiping out, destruction, or annihilation,[23] and not a mere suspension;[24] a termination.[25] It is in this sense that the terms are properly applied to contracts,[26] rights, titles, interests,[27] or a debt;[28] or other obligation;[29] whether the effect produced is by the act of God, by operation of law,[30] or by an act of a person.[31] The meaning of these terms as frequently used, varies with the subject-matter to which they are applied. The words, "merger," "suspension" and "abatement," would, in many instances where "extinguishment" is used, much more accurately and felicitously express the idea intended to be conveyed.[32] (Extinguishment: Of Debt, see Payment; Novation. I. DEFINITION.

Extortion is the unlawful taking, by any officer, by color of his office, of any money or thing of value that is not due him, or more than is due, or before it is due.[1]

II. NATURE AND ELEMENTS.

A. In General. Extortion is a misdemeanor at common law.[2] In many jurisdictions the offense is defined and the punishment regulated by express statutory provisions.[3]

B. By Whom Committed. Any person, upon whom the mantle of office has fallen, or who acts as an officer and has assumed an officer's duties, or a quasi-official position, may commit this offense.[4] Hence officers of a municipal corporation[5] or of the customs,[6] constables,[7] or school directors[8] may render themselves liable. The offense may be committed jointly.[9] or oppressive exaction. But the word has acquired a technical meaning in the common law, and, in this sense, may be defined to be the corrupt and unlawful taking by any officer of the law, under color of his office, of any money, or thing of value, that is not due to him, or the corrupt or unlawful taking of any money or thing of value, under color of his office, in excess of what is due to him, or before it is due to him." State v. Logan, 104 La. 760, 762, 29 So. 336.

Compared with and distinguished from robbery see People v. Barondess, 61 Hun (N. Y.) 571, 576, 16 N. Y. Suppl. 436, where it is said: "Robbery is the unlawful taking against the will by means of force or violence or fear of injury, immediate or future, to one's person or property, while extortion is the obtaining with consent by similar means." It was robbery at common law to extort money under the threat of charging one with an unnatural crime. Rex v. Jones, 1 Leach C. C. 164. See, generally, ROBBERY.

Distinguished from bribery see 5 Cyc. 1039 note 1. See also People v. McLaughlin, 2 N. Y. App. Div. 419, 37 N. Y. Suppl. 1005, 11 N. Y. Cr. 97; and, generally, BRIBERY.

Extortion is regarded as a very odious crime, and when made out should be punished by the courts with rigor. Williams v. State, 2 Sneed (Tenn.) 160.

Whether misdemeanor or felony.— As defined by the statutes of United States it is the same as at common law (U. S. v. Deaver, 14 Fed. 595), while in New York (People v. Hughes, 137 N. Y. 29, 32 N. E. 1105), Arizona (Ariz. Rev. St. (1887) § 808), and perhaps a few other states, it is made a felony.

Oppression.— N. Y. Pen. Code, § 556, provides that a public officer, or a person pretending to be such who, unlawfully and maliciously, under pretense or color of official authority, "1. Arrests another, or detains him against his will; or, 2. Seizes or levies upon another's property; or, 3. Dispossesses another of any lands or tenements; or, 4. Does any other act whereby another person is injured in his person, property or rights; Commits oppression, and is guilty of a misdemeanor." Under this section a police captain and three patrolmen who came into a person's shop, did not exhibit any warrant, and remained there during business hours for eleven days and refused to leave and thereby injured the business of the proprietor are guilty of oppression. People v. Summers, 40 Misc. (N. Y.) 384, 82 N. Y. Suppl. 297, 17 N. Y. Cr. 321, construing section 315 of the city charter making it the duty of the police "at all times of the day and night" to "carefully observe and inspect all places of public amusement," etc.

Under modern statutory provisions private individuals may be guilty of extortion. Mont. Pen. Code, § 910; N. Y. Pen. Code, § 552. See also THREATS.

Where one is neither a de jure nor de facto officer (Herrington v. State, 103 Ga. 318, 39 S. E. 931, 68 Am. St. Rep. 95), as where he is the incumbent of an office which an unconstitutional statute purported to create (Kirby v. State, 57 N. J. L. 320, 31 Atl. 213), he cannot be guilty of extortion.

C. Existence of Evil Intent. An evil intent or unlawful design was a necessary element of this offense at common law,[10] and is usually held to be a requisite to a criminal prosecution under statutory provisions.[11] It is not enough that the officer act carelessly or inadvertently, from which a criminal intent might be presumed. He must act knowingly or designedly.[12] Whether the accused did or did not have an evil intent in the taking of illegal fees is a question for the jury.[13]

D. The Taking — 1. Must Be by Officer. It is essential in the perpetration of this offense that the taking be by an officer, although he need not be an officer de jure.[14] It may be committed by a de facto officer,[15] but some official character or authority is essential.[16]

2. By Color of Office. To constitute extortion it is also essential that the taking be under color of office. In other words the one taking the fees must have acted in his official capacity, not as a private individual,[17] and for his own benefit.[18]

3. Before Due. It was a principle of the common law,[19] which has, it is believed, received universal recognition and sanction in the United States that the thing must not be demanded or taken before it is due.[20] It follows that if a

12. Cleaveland v. State, 34 Ala. 254. In U. S. v. Highleyman, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,361, it is said: "By the use of the word 'knowingly' something more is meant than what is implied, in the legal presumption that every man must know the law. In order to find the defendant guilty of demanding or receiving greater sums than he was entitled to under the law, you should be satisfied that he knew he was violating the law, and the fact that he demanded or received the several amounts charged in the indictment, is not of itself sufficient to sustain the indictment."

De facto or de jure.— In Brackenridge v. State, 27 Tex. App. 513, 11 S. W. 630, 4 L. R. A. 360, defendant, who was county judge, was reëlected on November 6. The offense charged was committed on November 15, and he did not qualify under his reëlection until the 21st day of November. It was held that defendant might be held liable either as de facto or de jure.

Estoppel.— "The officer need not possess a legal title to the office whose functions he executes. A person who serves as an officer and claims to be one is estopped to deny his official appointment." Kirby v. State, 57 N. J. L. 320, 321, 31 Atl. 213.

Failure to take oath of office.— It will not avail the defendant if, although duly elected, he has not at the time of the offense taken the oath of office. State v. Cansler, 75 N. C. 442.

What constitutes "color of office."— If an officer arrests a man on a warrant which he knows to be forged and thereby extorts money from him, he takes it under color of his office, and so commits this offense. Reg. v. Tracy, 6 Mod. 30.

18. White v. State, 56 Ga. 385; Ferkel v. People, 16 Ill. App. 310. But see People v. Whaley, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 661, where it is said to be sufficient if the extorting was by color of office.

Private gain.— In White v. State, 56 Ga. 385, it is said that if the money be used in good faith to settle a dispute, and not for the officer's own use, he is not liable. Compare also Rex v. Dobson, 7 East 218, 3 Smith K. B. 213.

county treasurer exacts a fee from a taxpayer for a distress and sale of his goods when none has been made,[21] or a justice refuses to take a recognizance and grant an appeal unless the fees for granting be first paid[22] or denies an adjournment because a defendant refuses to pay his fees for drawing a bond,[23] he is guilty of extortion.

4. For Services Not Rendered. Constructive costs cannot be charged, and when an officer claims costs for official services he must be able to show that the services charged for have been actually rendered.[24] Therefore if defendant in execution pay the amount due thereon to plaintiff in person, the officer can demand nothing as fees for collecting.[25]

5. Thing Taken — a. Must Be of Value. While in the perpetration of this offense money is usually taken, yet in the absence of statutory provisions it need not be that alone,[26] but it is essential that it be something of real value.[27]

b. Note or Promise Insufficient. Therefore a mere promise[28] or a note[29] will not be sufficient, at least while in the hands of the promisee.[30]

III. Criminal Prosecution.[31]

A. In General. Extortion being a public wrong at common law was punished by an indictment and prosecution at the instance of the king;[32] and under

No fees are due until the service is rendered. It is extortion in any officer to take any money by color of his office, where he has not done the particular service for which the fee is allowed. Williams v. State, 2 Sneed (Tenn.) 160.

25. Cross v. State, 1 Yerg. (Tenn.) 261. In Brackenridge v. State, 27 Tex. App. 513, 528, 11 S. W. 630, 4 L. R. It was held that a criminal action dismissed was not a criminal action "tried and finally disposed of." The court saying: "It is a final disposition of that particular case, but not a trial of it," and a presentation of an account for such amounts to a demand, and renders the party liable by the statute.

Reason.— It was a doctrine of the common law, founded in public policy, that an officer shall be confined to the compensation or fee prescribed, and therefore a promise to pay money for doing that which the law did not suffer him to take anything for, or to pay more than was allowed by law, was void, however freely and voluntarily made. the statutes, with but few exceptions,[33] this offense is similarly punishable at the instance of the commonwealth.[34]

B. Indictment[35]— 1. Form. While at common law certain words seem to have been necessary in the indictment for this offense,[36] yet it seems that no fixed form has ever been required, even by statute.[37]

2. Description of Offense. The indictment, as upon any criminal charge, must be laid with certainty.[38] It must contain a definite description of the crime charged, and a statement of the facts which constitute it,[39] specifically setting forth the merits of the complaint.[40]

3. Intent. An evil intent being a necessary element of the act,[41] an indictment must allege the existence of such intent.[42] For this purpose it is sufficient to allege that defendant took the money "extorsively"[43] or "wilfully and knowingly."[44] It has been held, however, that in charging this intent it is not necessary, in the absence of some special statutory requirement to that effect, to allege that the act was committed by defendant "knowingly"[45] or that it

In State v. Packard, 4 Oreg. 157, 160, the court said: "An indictment cannot be said to describe the offense in the words of the statute, or in any words, unless it charges the acts which constitute the offense, and when an act is not criminal, unless done under particular circumstances referred to in the statute, the indictment does not follow the statute, or describe the offense in the words of the statute unless it is direct and certain as to those particular circumstances mentioned in the statute." An indictment for extortion charging a constable with having collected more than was due on an execution should set out the recital in the execution showing the judgment on which the execution was issued, and the names of both parties to the execution should be alleged. Seany v. State, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 403.

Effect of failure to describe.— The judgment will be arrested upon the findings of a jury on an indictment against a constable for extortion in "that he oppressively sued out an execution," unless the facts which constituted the oppression are set forth in the indictment and found by the jury. State v. Fields, Mart. & Y. (Tenn.) 137.

If a statute specifies the thing forbidden to be taken, the indictment to be good thereunder must specify the particular thing and it must be proved. Garner v. State, 5 Yerg. (Tenn.) 160.

Conspiracy to extort — alleging taking of money.— An indictment against school directors for conspiracy to commit extortion by taking fees and rewards for procuring the election of persons to the position of school-teacher is not bad because it does not allege that any money was taken from the persons appointed school-teachers as a fee for official services. E. 50, it is said: "In indictments for both bribery and extortion, it is essential to allege, and, upon the trial, to prove, that the act charged was done with a wilful and corrupt intent. It is also necessary, in an indictment for extortion, to charge, and, upon the trial, to prove, that the unlawful fees were demanded 'under color of office.'" was committed by him "corruptly," [46] an allegation of the evil intent being sufficient.

4. Color of Office and Official Capacity. As extortion can be committed by one only under color of his office,[47] it is necessary to allege an official capacity, and that the act was done under color thereof,[48] and a failure so to do constitutes ground for an arrest of judgment.[49]

5. Time and Place of Commission. Time and place of commission are material averments and must be alleged and proved.[50]

6. Services For Which Fees Were Exacted. It is also necessary that the indictment should designate the services for which the illegal fees were charged.[51]

7. When No Fees Are Allowed. If the prosecution is for taking fees for services for which no compensation is by law given, the indictment should allege that no fees were allowed by law.[52]

8. When Excessive Fees Are Taken. If the prosecution is for the taking of fees in excess of those allowed by law, the indictment must show the excess and the legal charge.[53]

Following the language of the statute will not, it seems, be sufficient. Oliveira v. State, 45 Ga. 555. See also cases cited supra, this note.

In New Jersey and Oregon it has been held that where the lawful fee is certain, and unchangeable by circumstances, in order to show the amount of the overcharge it is only necessary for the indictment to aver the amount actually demanded and received. Where, however, the law does not thus fix the legal fee, but establishes a rate of lawful charge to be applied to varying circumstances, as a rate per folio, applicable to the number of folios written, it would plainly be necessary, in order to show the unlawful excess taken for the indictment, to aver the amount of that which might lawfully be taken, or at least the facts by which it could

9. Reference to Statute Violated. The indictment need not specify the section of the statute violated. It is good if the offense falls within any section.[54]

C. Defenses[55] — 1. Ignorance or Mistake of Fact. One is not guilty of this offense if in acting under an honest mistake of fact he does that which would otherwise be extortion.[56]

2. Ignorance or Mistake of Law. The general rule that ignorance or mistake of law excuses no one is, it is believed by the weight of authority, held to apply to this offense.[57] But in New Jersey it is held that, inasmuch as a guilty intent is a necessary constituent of the particular offense, the rule would be misapplied;[58] and the same view is taken in Arkansas.[59]

3. Thing Taken of No Value. That the thing taken was not of sufficient value to constitute the offense constitutes a good defense.[60]

4. Irregularity of Qualification. If one is elected to an office and assumes the duties thereof, it is no defense that he has not taken the oath of office.[61]

5. Non-Existence of Office. That the office never had a legal existence has been held to be a good defense to a criminal prosecution under a statute.[62]

D. Evidence[63] — 1. Admissibility — a. As to Intent. In order to throw light upon the question of guilty intention the officer's experience and acquaintance with his duties may be shown.[64] Likewise, for the same purpose, a prior indictment against one for a like offense has been held admissible.[65]

The indictment was good, although the offense fell under another section, the indorsements being regarded as mere surplusage.

b. Memorandum. A memorandum, to be admissible as independent evidence of the payment of an illegal fee, must be free from ambiguity or uncertainty.[66]

c. Return Upon Process. The return which an officer makes upon an execution of process is not conclusive evidence of its truth, but may be contradicted by extrinsic evidence.[67]

2. Burden of Proof. Defendant has the right on a trial for extortion to show that the fees were taken through a mistake, and the burden of proof is on him to show the same.[68]

3. Involuntary Payment. It has been held that a failure to offer evidence that the payment was involuntary was fatal.[69]

4. Variance. In the prosecutions for this offense the rules against variance apply, it being necessary that the allegations and proof correspond.[70] But it has been held that the exact sum alleged need not be proven.[71]

E. Motion in Arrest of Judgment. Where the indictment fails to contain any essential allegation,[72] as where it fails to state the time, to properly set forth the facts of the offense, or to state that the accused was an officer, these being defects of substance, a motion in arrest of judgment will be sustained.[73]

F. Appeal.[74] The recognizance on appeal must recite the offense contained in the indictment.[75] committed.[76] In the United States the punishment is generally regulated by statute, although in some instances modifying the common law but little.[77]

IV. ACTION TO RECOVER PENALTIES.[78]

A. Statutory Provisions — 1. NATURE AND OBJECT. While extortion in its larger sense signifies any oppression under color of right, yet technically it is an official misdemeanor.[79] Statutes have been passed, both in England[80] and the United States,[81] imposing a penalty upon officers who under certain circumstances take illegal or excessive fees. Owing to the construction or interpretation of these statutes one may be guilty of extortion at common law, although not subject to the penalty.[82] As the offense consists in the oppressive misuse of the exceptional power with which the incumbent of an office is by law invested, the object of the statute is a punishment for the abuse of such official power, not improper conduct or fraud.[83]

2. CONSTITUTIONALITY. In some jurisdictions questions have arisen concerning the constitutionality of these statutes, but they have been uniformly upheld.[84]

3. EFFECT UPON COMMON-LAW LIABILITY. It is generally held that the statutes imposing a penalty are merely enabling, and do not repeal the common law.[85]

4. HOW CONSTRUED. These statutes being penal in their nature[86] are usually subjected to a strict construction by the courts.[87]

B. Requisites to Liability — 1. CERTAINTY OF AMOUNT. It is generally necessary before one incurs the penalties prescribed by statute for the taking of illegal fees that they be fixed and provided for by law.[88] It has consequently been held that if no compensation is fixed for one's services, nor any provision

H. 238, a sheriff demanded and received of defendant three dollars over and above the ordinary fees on account of extra trouble and expense in executing the writ. The statute of New Hampshire did not prescribe any compensation for such services, nor deny the sheriff the right to receive it. It was held that the sheriff was not liable for the penalty. But see Martin v. Bell, 6 M. & S. 220, 1 Stark. 413, 18 Rev. Rep. 354, 2 E. C. L. 160.

Does not vitiate transaction.— If a sheriff in making an extent of an execution upon land charges illegal fees and deducts them from the sum at which the lands are appraised and applies the residue to the satisfaction of the execution, he incurs the penalty prescribed for taking illegal fees, and may be compelled by an action to refund the amount, but the validity of the extent is not affected by the illegal fees. As to voluntary payment.— In Illinois (People v. Rainey, 89 Ill. 34), it was held by a divided court that to render one liable for the penalty the payment must not have been voluntary. But in Montana (Leggatt v. Prideaux, 16 Mont. 205, 40 Pac. 377, 50 Am. St. Rep. 498) and in Pennsylvania (Evans v. Harney, 17 Pa. St. 460) the rule is laid down as otherwise.

What constitutes a rendition of services.— In Jackson v. Siglin, 10 Oreg. 93, F obtained a judgment in the circuit court for a large sum, and upon execution sold property to the amount of forty-one thousand dollars. A, as agent of F, bid off the property, but no money was paid to the sheriff except his fees, the credit being indorsed on the execution and thus returned. J, the county clerk, considered this return as equivalent to the return of the money made on execution, and claimed the legal commissions " for receiving, keeping, and disbursing " the amount. It was held that, inasmuch as no money was actually received or disbursed, he was not so entitled, and a promise to pay him such commissions was void.

94. Garber v. Conner, 98 Pa. St. 551. In Ferkel v. People, 16 Ill. App. 310, the averment was that defendant was a " town marshal or police officer." It was held insufficient, as the term " police officer " did not designate any one authorized by law to charge any fee.

Need not be convicted criminally.—It is not necessary in a civil suit to recover the penalty for the taking of illegal fees that the officer be first convicted in a criminal action. Ming v. Truett, 1 Mont. 322.

Services not rendered.— Whether or not an officer would be liable to the penalty for taking fees for services in no way performed depends upon the statutes. See Shattuck v. Woods, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 171; Dean v. Todd, 49 S. C. 461, 27 S. E. 471.

7. Liability of Sureties on Bond. The liability of the sureties on an officer's bond for a penalty depends upon statutory provisions.[97] Such liability is, however, never extended by implication.[98]

C. The Action — 1. Form.[99] At common law debt was the action to recover the penalty prescribed by a statute.[1]

2. By Whom Brought.[2] The statutes generally require that the action for the penalty be instituted by the party injured,[3] although in some jurisdictions such does not seem to be the case,[4] and it is sometimes difficult to determine who constitutes the injured party within the meaning of the particular statute.[5]

3. Declaration[6] — a. Statement of Services. In an action to recover the

"As to the sheriff's liability to answer civiliter, and not criminaliter for the acts of his officers, the books mean that the sheriff is not liable to an indictment."

Must be in ordinary line of duty.— The sheriff is answerable civiliter for all acts of his deputy done "virtute officii," but he cannot be rendered liable on a contract between plaintiff and deputy by which the latter binds himself to acts or omissions not authorized or required by law. He is not answerable for the acts of his deputy unless they are performed in the ordinary line of his official duty. Gorham v. Gale, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 739, 17 Am. Dec. 549.

Both not liable.— The sheriff and the bailiff are not both answerable in an action for a penalty for the same act, and actions having been brought against both, and a verdict obtained in each, the court stayed the proceedings on payment of one penalty and one costs in one action. penalty for the taking of illegal fees, the declaration must set out the service for which the fees were taken.[7]

b. Allegations of Legal Fee and Excess. Since to render one liable for the penalty it is generally held that the fees must be fixed by law,[8] it has been held to be sufficient to allege that a certain sum higher than allowed by law was exacted,[9] although the contrary has also been maintained;[10] nor need the declaration set forth the entire transaction.[11]

c. Fee Received by Whom. A declaration which omitted to state who received the illegal fee has been held to be fatally defective.[12]

4. VARIANCE. It is not necessary to prove the exact sum as alleged in the declaration,[13] but the evidence and allegations must correspond respecting the parties.[14]

D. Defenses — 1. GUILTY KNOWLEDGE. In some jurisdictions the statutes by express provision make it a necessary element of liability that the act shall have been "wilfully" or "knowingly" done.[15] It such case the lack of an evil intent is of course a defense. But when the statute provides that if any officer or other person shall take any fee greater than allowed by law they shall forfeit to the party aggrieved, etc. (omitting the words "wilfully or knowingly"), the courts are divided as to whether or not a good and honest intent would be a defense. By the weight of authority it seems it would not,[16] although in several states it has been held to the contrary.[17]

Reason for this view.— In New Hampshire, the statute was: "If any person shall demand and take," etc., it is said: "It would be against the policy of the law to subject judicial officers, acting in their judicial capacity, to any responsibilities on account of their judicial action beyond such as may attach upon proper proceedings against them for corruption in office. A magistrate may, indeed, make himself liable for the penalty on account of an illegal fee included in his judgment for costs; but it can be only when the demand for the fee can be considered as made by him, independent of his judicial act in rendering the judgment." Fox v. Whitney, 33 N. H. 516, 519. In Vermont, where the statute was, "if any officer, or other person, shall receive any greater fees," etc., it is said: "If a sheriff serving process charge and receive fees for services not enumerated in the statute, in good faith and with no intent to vio-

2. Usage or Custom.[18] In an action to recover a penalty for taking illegal fees one cannot rely on usage or custom as a defense,[19] except in those jurisdictions where an evil intent is held necessary.[20]

3. Confusion of Fees. An officer cannot evade the penalty by so commingling together legal and illegal fees or charges that they cannot be readily separated. And the rule applies also in criminal prosecutions.[21]

4. Failure to Receive Fee. If an officer makes a charge of illegal fees, he is liable for the penalty, although collected by his deputy and not paid over to him.[22]

5. Omission of Lawful Fees or Tender. It is no defense in an action of this kind to set up that lawful fees were omitted from the bill which on the whole was not so large as permitted by law to be charged.[23] Nor would a tender to plaintiff of any amount less than the statutory penalty avail defendant.[24]

6. Expiration of Term of Office. Neither would it be a defense that one's term of office had expired when the alleged extortion was committed.[25]

E. Jurisdiction. If the sum of the charges against an officer for the taking of illegal fees amounts to enough to give a certain court jurisdiction, the demand may be sued for in that court.[26] If the court wrongfully refuses to exercise its jurisdiction it may be compelled so to do by mandamus.[27]

I. DEFINITION.

International extradition is the surrender by one nation to another, for trial and punishment, of a person accused or convicted of an offense within the jurisdiction of the latter.[1]

II. DUTY OF EXTRADITION.

A. No Obligation Under International Law. There is no obligation upon a government, under the law of nations, to surrender fugitive criminals to a foreign power.[2]

B. No Authority in United States to Extradite, Independently of Statute or Treaty. In the United States, it is well settled that, independently

Another definition is "the surrender to another country of one accused of an offense against its laws, there to be tried, and, if found guilty, punished." Fong Yue Ting v. U. S., 149 U. S. 698, 709, 13 S. Ct. 1016, 37 L. ed. 905, distinguishing "extradition" from "deportation."

of statutory or treaty provision, no authority exists in any branch of the government to surrender a fugitive criminal to a foreign government.[3] And it is the present doctrine in England and Canada that the extradition of a fugitive criminal cannot be granted in the absence of specific legal authority.[4]

C. Extradition Not Requested From Foreign Government in Absence of Treaty. As the United States does not surrender fugitive criminals in the absence of treaty stipulation, its practice is to decline to request extradition from a foreign government with which this government has no treaty providing for surrender.[5]

D. Extradition Granted or Requested Only For Treaty Offense. As no authority exists in any branch of this government to surrender a fugitive criminal in the absence of a treaty stipulation, it results that, where a treaty exists, extradition can be granted only for an offense enumerated in the treaty. And this government, where there is a treaty, will request extradition from a foreign government, only for an offense included in the treaty.[6]

E. Provision For Extradition May Be Made by Statute as Well as by Treaty. It is within the power of congress to provide by statute for the extradition of fugitives from the justice of a foreign country without regard to any reciprocal treaty obligation.[7]

III. TREATIES.

A. With United States. International extradition in the United States, as stated,[8] is based on treaty stipulation. The United States has treaties of extradition with thirty-six governments.[9]

3. Terlinden v. Ames, 184 U. S. 270, 22 S. Ct. 484, 46 L. ed. 534; Ex p. McCabe, 46 Fed. 363, 12 L. ed. 589; Ex p. Dos Santos, 7 Fed. Cas. No. 4,016, 2 Brock. 493; U. S. v. Davis, 25 Fed. The only case in which a fugitive criminal has been surrendered by the United States to a foreign government in the absence of an extradition treaty was that of Arguelles. Arguelles was lieutenant-governor of a district in Cuba, where a cargo of African slaves had been landed and set free by the authorities. Arguelles reported to the government that one hundred and forty-one of them had died of smallpox; but it was discovered that he had sold them into slavery, with the aid of forged papers, and had fled to New York. There was then (1864) no treaty of extradition between the United States and Spain, but the Cuban authorities requested Arguelles' surrender as an act of comity. Mr. Seward, with the sanction of President Lincoln, directed the arrest of Arguelles upon his arrival in New York, as a purely executive act, and he was delivered up to the agent appointed by the Cuban authorities and taken to Cuba. Mr. Seward's action was strongly criticized, although a condemnatory resolution offered in the house of representatives was rejected. See Wheaton Int. L. (Dana ed.) 183 note.

4. Clarke Extrad. (4th ed.) 93, 126, 128.

5. 6 Op. Atty.-Gen. 85. There are isolated cases in which this government has requested of foreign governments the surrender of fugitive criminals as an act of comity, but in these cases the request has been accompanied by the statement that under our law reciprocity cannot be granted.

6. 6 Op. Atty.-Gen. 85. In Ex p. Foss, 102 Cal. 347, 36 Pac. 669, 41 Am. St. Rep. 182, 25 L. R. A. 593, however, it was held that the existence of an extradition treaty between the United States and the Hawaiian Islands did not prohibit the surrender by either government of a person charged with a crime not enumerated in the treaty.

B. Power to Make Extradition Treaties. A treaty stipulation, on the part of the government of the United States, to surrender fugitives from justice, is a lawful stipulation, and within the authority of the treaty-making power.[10] A treaty is of equal force with an act of congress, and the provisions of a treaty of extradition are binding on the courts.[11] Such treaties are obligatory upon the tribunals of the several states as well as those of the federal government.[12] A statute of a state providing for the surrender of fugitives from the justice of foreign countries is unconstitutional and void.[13]

C. Retroactive Effect. A treaty of extradition operates retroactively unless it contains a provision expressly declaring that its stipulations shall not apply to crimes committed prior to the conclusion of the treaty.[14] A person who has committed a crime abroad and come to the United States before the conclusion of a treaty of extradition authorizing surrender for such a crime does not thereby acquire a right of asylum.[15] Nor is a treaty, construed as covering a crime committed before the conclusion of the treaty, obnoxious to the objection that it is an ex post facto law.[16]

A violation of a law of the German empire against crime, such as forgery, is an offense extraditable under the treaty of the United States with Prussia, when such offense is committed in Prussia, and such law is recognized and enforced in that kingdom as its law on that subject. Article 3 of the treaty of 1874 with Belgium provided that the stipulations of the treaty should not apply to any crime committed prior to the date of the treaty, and article 8 provided that the treaty should take effect twenty days after the day of the date of the exchange of ratifications. It was decided that the treaty was applicable to a crime committed the day after the date of the exchange of ratifications, the court holding that "the reference in article 3 was to the date of the treaty, which was either the date of the signing, or the date of the exchange of ratifications, and not the time of its taking effect." In re Vandervelpen, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,844, 14 Blatchf. 137.

D. Offenses — 1. In General. The first treaty stipulation providing for the extradition of criminals, to which the United States was a party,[17] included only the crimes of murder and forgery. In our earlier treaties crimes of violence predominated, such as murder, robbery, arson, etc. Later these were supplemented by crimes of fraud, as embezzlement, breach of trust, obtaining money by false pretenses, etc. The latest offense included in our extradition treaties is bribery. The list of offenses embraced in our various extradition treaties numbers more than thirty.[18]

17. Treaty with Great Britain (1794), art. 27.

18. Abduction, abortion, arson, assault with intent to murder, bigamy, bribery, burglary, child stealing, conspiracy to revolt on the high seas, counterfeiting, destruction of a vessel at sea, destruction or obstruction of railroads endangering human life, embezzlement by persons hired or salaried, to the detriment of their employers, embezzlement of funds of a bank or trust company, embezzlement of public moneys, forgery or utterance of forged papers, fraud or breach of trust, housebreaking, kidnapping, larceny, manslaughter, mayhem, murder, obtaining money, etc., by false pretenses, perjury or subornation of perjury, piracy, rape, receiving money, etc., known to have been stolen or fraudulently obtained, revolt on ship at sea, robbery, shop-breaking, sinking a ship at sea, slave-trading. See Compilation Treat. 1904.

Child stealing.— Canada.— Where the prisoner and his wife were absolutely divorced in the United States, the decree awarding the custody of their child to the wife, with permission to the father to take it out in the daytime, returning it each day, and the prisoner having thus obtained the child carried it away to Canada, this was held to be "child stealing" under the extradition treaty between the United States and Great Britain, and sufficient to warrant the extradition of the father. Rex v. Watts, 3 Ont. L. Rep. 368.

Embezzlement.—Where defendant subscribed for one share of the stock of a French corporation, and agreed with the other subscribers to devote his entire time to the management of the corporation's affairs, and in consideration of his services receive forty per cent of the profits, he was a person "hired or salaried" by the corporation, within the French extradition treaty, authorizing extradition for embezzlement by any person or persons, hired or salaried, to the detriment of their employers. In re Balensi, 120 Fed. 864.

Embezzlement of public moneys.— The embezzlement of the funds of a savings bank established, maintained, and owned by a city in Germany, by a cashier who is a public official appointed by the city, is an embezzlement of public moneys, within the treaty of 1852 between Prussia and the other states of the Germanic confederation and the United States. In re Reiner, 122 Fed. 109. The funds of a private corporation are not "public moneys" within the meaning of the extradition treaty between Mexico and the United States, providing for extradition for the offense of embezzling public moneys. Blandford v. State, 10 Tex. App. 627.

Falsely certifying invoices.— Under Cuba Pen. Code, art. 401, which makes it a crime for a public employee to take public funds of which he has charge by virtue of his office, a public officer who, by falsely certifying the invoices in which certain coupons are inclosed, obtains possession of money paid out by the Spanish bank, which could not pass from the bank's possession to his own except as a consequence of his official act, is guilty of an extraditable offense under the treaty between the United States and Spain. In re Cortes, 42 Fed. 47 [affirmed in 136 U. S. 330, 10 S. Ct. 1031, 34 L. ed. 464].

Forgery.— False entries made in the usual books of account, or memoranda on slips directing such entries by others, made by an official or employee of a bank for the purpose of concealing his embezzlements, do not constitute forgery, as defined and recognized by the courts of England. In re Tully, 20 Fed. 812; Reg. v. Blackstone, 4 Manitoba 296. A clerk in a city controller's office, whose duty it was to make proper entries of moneys received from taxes in the official books provided for that purpose, having received a sum of money for taxes, at first entered the correct amount and then erased the true figures and inserted a less sum, with intent to benefit himself by the abstraction of the difference between the two. This was held to be forgery at common law and extraditable under the Ashburton treaty. In re Hall, 8 Ont. App. 31, 2 Can. L. T. 592. See also In re Phipps, 8 Ont. App. 77; In re Murphy, 2 Can. Cr. Cas. 562.

Larceny — Canada.— The abandonment of the term "larceny" in Canadian jurisprudence does not affect the liability to extradition of a person charged with what was larceny at common law and is by the Canadian criminal code still an offense in Canada under the name of "theft" or "stealing." In re Gross, 2 Can. Cr. Cas. 67.

Robbery.— The treaty between the United States and Salvador defines robbery as "the act of feloniously and forcibly taking from the person of another goods or money by violence, or putting him in fear." Taking money or goods from the presence or view of the party robbed, by violence, or by putting him in fear, is robbery, within the meaning of such treaty. In re Ezeta, 62 Fed. 972.

2. Political Offenses. While it is a well recognized principle, irrespective of treaty stipulation, that governments do not deliver up fugitives for political crimes,[19] most of the extradition treaties to which the United States is a party expressly declare that their provisions shall not apply to crimes or offenses of a political character.[20] It is the duty of the committing magistrate to determine whether the offense charged is of a political character.[21] Several of the treaties of the United States provide that an attempt against the head of a foreign government or member of his family, when such act comprises the act of murder, assassination, or poisoning, shall not be considered a political offense.[22]

E. Citizens — 1. General Exemption by Treaty. Nearly all of the extradition treaties of the United States contain a provision declaring that neither of the contracting parties shall be bound to surrender its own citizens.[23] In Great Brit-it appeared that the accused presented to a young woman a false letter of introduction, with the intent that she should believe and act upon it as genuine to her prejudice, and she, believing the letter to be a genuine recommendation of the accused to her favor from the vice-president of the company by which she was employed, allowed the accused to pay his addresses to her and became engaged to marry him under the false name given him in that letter, although he had a wife living, it was held that the facts constituted a prima facie case of utterance of forged paper under the criminal code of Canada, and that the offense was extraditable under the treaty with the United States. Re Abeel, 7 Ont. L. Rep. 327. See also In re Murphy, 2 Can. Cr. Cas. 552.

19. What constitutes an offense of a political character has not yet been determined by judicial authority. In re Ezeta, 62 Fed. 972. It depends upon the particular circumstances of each case. The decision of the question whether or not an offense is political is by express provision of several of the treaties of the United States declared to rest with the authorities of the government upon which the demand for surrender is made. But in the absence of such a conventional provision the right to determine the question undoubtedly inheres in the government of which the extradition is requested.

20. The British law expressly provides that a fugitive criminal shall not be surrendered if the offense in respect to which his surrender is demanded is one of a political character. St. 33 & 34 Vict. c. 52, § 3. To bring an offense within the meaning of the words "of a political character" in this act, it must be incidental to and form part of political disturbances. In re Meunier, [1894] 2 Q. B. 415, 18 Cox C. C. 15, 63 L. J. M. C. 198, 71 L. T. Rep. N. S. 403, 10 Reports 400, 42 Wkly. Rep. 637; In re Castioni, [1891] 1 Q. B. 149, 17 Cox C. C. 225, 55 J. P. 328, 60 L. J. M. C. 22, 64 L. T. Rep. N. S. 344, 39 Wkly. Rep. 202.

21. In re Ezeta, 62 Fed. 972. In this case the testimony showed that the hanging of four persons by officers of President Ezeta, the killing of another person by President Ezeta and the other defendants, his officers, the robbery of a bank by President Ezeta, and the killing of a sixth person by President Ezeta and his officer were all committed during the existence of a state of siege in the republic of Salvador, and the progress of actual hostilities between the contending forces, wherein Ezeta and his companions were seeking to maintain the authority of the then existing government against a revolutionary uprising; that such acts were associated with the actual conflict of such armed forces; that the four persons were hung because they did not assist in defending the government; that the fifth was killed because he was considered a spy; that the robbery of the bank was for the purpose of paying Ezeta's soldiers; and that the killing of the sixth person was the result of a report that he had gone over to the enemy. It was decided that such offenses were of a political character, and not subject to extradition. In the case of Ornelas v. Ruiz, 161 U. S. 502, 16 S. Ct. 689, 40 L. ed. 787, a band of over one hundred men crossed from Texas into Mexico and attacked about forty Mexican soldiers, killing and wounding some of them, burning their barracks, and taking away their horses and equipments. The same band violently assaulted private citizens, taking their horses, and burning houses, extorted small sums of money from the women, and appropriated clothes and provisions. The members of the band, who were without uniform or flag, but had red bands on their hats, remained in Mexico about six hours, and then recrossed. There was evidence, on the other side, that there had been on that border a revolutionary movement directed against the Mexican government the year before, and that the aim and purpose of the expedition in question was the same. It was held that the magistrate was justified in finding that the offense was not "of a purely political character" within the meaning of the extradition treaty with Mexico.

22. See supra, note 9.

23. See supra, note 9. Where a treaty provides that neither of the contracting parties shall be bound to surrender its own citizens under the stipulations of the treaty, this government cannot surrender a citizen of the United States. Ex p. McCabe, 46 Fed. 363, 12 L. R. A. 589.

ain, unless there is an express treaty stipulation to the contrary, subjects of the British government may be surrendered.[24]

2. Executive Discretion by Special Treaty Provision. Some treaties contain a provision that neither of the contracting parties shall be bound to deliver up its own citizens or subjects under the stipulations of this convention, but they shall have the power to deliver them up if in their discretion it be deemed proper to do so.[25]

F. Requisitions — 1. In General. Extradition treaties usually provide for the presentation to the executive of the government of which the surrender of a fugitive criminal is sought, of a requisition therefor, by the chief diplomatic or consular officer of the demanding government.[26]

2. Previous Indictment Not Necessary. It is not necessary, under the extradition treaty between the United States and Great Britain of 1842, that an application for extradition shall have been preceded by an indictment in the country requesting the surrender.[27]

3. In Extradition to United States — a. Form. The manner in which requisitions and the accompanying papers, in the case of applications for the extradition from foreign countries of fugitives from the justice of the United States, should be prepared, is shown in the subjoined note.[28]

Rep. N. S. 756, 44 Wkly. Rep. 313, arising under the treaty between England and Belgium of 1887, suppressing the exception contained in article 1 of the treaty of 1876, and providing that the contracting parties shall not be bound to surrender their own subjects, it was held that the surrender of a British subject to Belgium under the extradition act of 1870 rests in the discretion of the secretary of state. Where a treaty provided that the contracting parties should reciprocally surrender any persons, who being accused of any of certain specified crimes committed within the jurisdiction of the requesting party should be found in the territories of the other party, and further provided that neither party should be bound to deliver up its own subjects, it was held that the provisions of the treaty were not confined to persons who are subjects of the state requesting jurisdiction, but applied to all persons who had committed any of the specified crimes within the jurisdiction of such state, of whatever nationality they might be, except subjects of the state from which extradition was requested. Between the United States and Canada.— Under the practice between the United States and Great Britain, a request for extradition from the Dominion of Canada is made by the secretary of state upon the British ambassador at Washington.

Between the United States and Mexico.— By stipulation of treaty between the United States and Mexico, in the case of crimes committed in the frontier states or territories, requisitions may be made through the chief civil authority of the respective border state or territory. 31 U. S. St. at L. 1824.

Between the United States and the Netherlands.— By the treaty between the United States and the Netherlands of 1904, it is provided that requisitions for extradition between the island possessions and colonies of the respective governments may be made directly to the respective chief insular or colonial authority. 33 U. S. St. at L. 2257.

27. Muller's Case, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 9,913, 5 Phila. (Pa.) 289; In re Sheazle, 21 Fed. Cas. No. 12,734, 1 Woodb. & M. 66. In In re Metzger, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 9,511, 5 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 83, it was held that a person against whom a complaint has been made and accepted before a judge of instruction in France is a person accused, within the meaning of the treaty of extradition, although no indictment has been found against him. In State v. Rowe, 104 Iowa 323, 73 N. W. 833, under the treaty of the United States with Mexico providing for the surrender of persons "to justice . . . who being accused of the crimes enumerated," etc., it was held that such provision means that they are to be accused in due form of law; and that it applies to one who is accused on information, as well as one charged by indictment, since an information is one of the forms prescribed by statute.

28. Address.— All applications for requisitions should be addressed to the secretary of state. When extradition is sought for an offense within the jurisdiction of the state or territorial courts, the application must come from the governor of the state or territory.

b. Agent. The act of March 3, 1869, authorizes the president to appoint an agent to receive from a foreign government and convey to this country for trial a fugitive whose extradition has been requested, and clothes such agent with the powers of a marshal of the United States, in the districts through which it may

When the offense is against the United States, the application should come from the attorney-general. Mem. Dept. State.

Offense and place of commission.— In every application for a requisition it must be made to appear that one of the offenses enumerated in the extradition treaty between the United States and the government from which extradition is sought has been committed within the jurisdiction of the United States, or of some one of the states or territories, and that the person charged therewith is believed to have sought an asylum or has been found within the dominions of such foreign government. Mem. Dept. State.

Evidence of criminality.— The extradition treaties of the United States ordinarily provide that the surrender of a fugitive shall be granted only upon such evidence of criminality as, according to the laws of the place where the fugitive or person so charged shall be found, would justify his or her commitment for trial if the crime or offense had been there committed. If the person whose extradition is desired has been convicted of a crime or offense and escaped thereafter, a duly authenticated copy of the record of conviction and sentence of the court is ordinarily sufficient. If the fugitive has not been convicted, but is merely charged with crime, a duly authenticated copy of the indictment or information, if any, and of the warrant of arrest and return thereto, accompanied by a copy of the evidence upon which the indictment was found, or the warrant of arrest issued, or by original depositions setting forth as fully as possible the circumstances of the crime, are usually necessary. Many of our treaties require the production of a duly authenticated copy of the warrant of arrest in this country; but an indictment, information, or warrant of arrest alone, without the accompanying proofs, is not ordinarily sufficient. It is desirable to make out as strong a case as possible, in order to meet the contingencies of the local requirements at the place of arrest. If the extradition of the fugitive is sought for several offenses, copies of the several convictions, indictments, or informations and of the documents in support of each should be furnished. Mem. Dept. State.

Designation of fugitive, of offense, and of person to receive prisoner.— Application for the extradition of a fugitive should state his full name, if known, and his alias, if any, the offense or offenses in the language of the treaty upon which his extradition is desired, and the full name of the person proposed for designation by the president to receive and convey the prisoner to the United States. Mem. Dept. State.

Certification and authentication of papers. — Copies of the record of conviction, or of the indictment, or information, and of the warrant of arrest, and the other papers and documents going to make up the evidence are required by the department of state in the first instance, as a basis for requesting the surrender of the fugitive, but chiefly in order that they may be duly authenticated under the seal of that department, so as to make them receivable as evidence where the fugitive is arrested upon the question of his surrender. Copies of all papers going to make up the evidence, including the record of conviction, or the indictment, or information, and the warrant of arrest, must be duly certified and then authenticated under the great seal of the state making the application or the seal of the department of justice, as the case may be; and the department of state will authenticate the seal of the state or of the department of justice. For example, if a deposition is made before a justice of the peace, the official character of the justice and his authority to administer oaths should be attested by the county clerk or other superior certifying officer; the certificate of the county clerk should be authenticated by the governor or secretary of state under the seal of the state, and the latter will be authenticated by the state department. If there is but one authentication, it should plainly cover all the papers attached. Mem. Dept. State.

Transmission of papers in duplicate or in triplicate.— All of the papers required in the way of evidence must be transmitted in duplicate, one copy to be retained in the files of the department of state, and the other, duly authenticated by the secretary of state, will be returned with the president's warrant, for the use of the agent who may be designated to receive the fugitive. As the governor of the state or the department of justice also ordinarily requires a copy prosecuting attorneys should have all papers made in triplicate. Mem. Dept. State.

Agent's declaration under oath as to truth of copies of papers.— By the practice of some of the countries with which the United States has treaties, in order to entitle copies of depositions to be received in evidence the party producing them is required to declare under oath that they are true copies of the original depositions. It is desirable therefore that such agent, either from a comparison of the copies with the originals or from having been present at the attestations of the copies, should be prepared to make such declaration. When the original depositions are forwarded such declaration is not required. Mem. Dept. State.

Applications by telegraph or letter.— Applications by telegraph or letter are frequently made to obtain the provisional arrest and detention of fugitives in foreign coun-be necessary for him to pass, so far as such power is requisite for the safe-keeping of the prisoner.[29]

G. Preliminary Mandate — 1. Not Necessary Where Not Required by Treaty. In the United States it is established by judicial decisions and executive practice that, in cases where the treaty does not require a previous executive mandate, the issuing of such a mandate is not essential as a prerequisite to the entertaining of proceedings and the issuing of a warrant of arrest by a magistrate.[30] The secretary of state does not now issue mandates except where provision is made therefor by treaty.[31] tries in advance of the presentation of the formal proofs upon which a demand for their extradition may be based. Such applications should state specifically the name of the fugitive, the offense with which he is charged, the circumstances of the crime as fully as possible, and a description and identification of the accused. It is always helpful to show that an indictment has been found or a warrant of arrest has been issued for the apprehension of the accused. In Great Britain the practice makes it essential that it shall appear that a warrant of arrest has been issued in this country. Mem. Dept. State.

Compliance with provisions of treaty.— Care should be taken to observe the provisions of the particular treaty under which extradition is sought, and to comply with any special provisions contained therein. The extradition treaties of the United States may be found in the several volumes of the statutes at large, in the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the District of Columbia and post roads, together with public treaties in force on the 1st day of December, 1873, and in the volume of Public Treaties (1887). Mem. Dept. State.

Delivery of prisoner to what authorities.— If the offense charged be a violation of a law of a state or territory, the agent authorized by the president to receive the fugitive will be required to deliver him to the authorities of such state or territory. If the offense charged be a violation of a law of the United States, the agent will be required to deliver the fugitive to the proper authorities of the United States for the judicial district having jurisdiction of the offense. Mem. Dept. State.

30. In re Thomas, 23 Fed. Cas. No. 13,887, 12 Blatchf. 370.

Prior to 1852 (the time when the case of In re Kaine, 14 How. (U. S.) 103, 14 L. ed. 345, arose in the supreme court of the United States), it was the practice of extradition magistrates generally to entertain complaints in cases of extradition without the prior presentation of a mandate. The majority of the court did not agree in this case as to the interpretation to be given to the treaty and law, and the case came before Mr. Justice Nelson at chambers (Ex p. Kaine, 14 Fed. Cas. No. 7,597, 3 Blatchf. 1) who held that the previous authority of the executive should have been obtained to warrant the interposition of the judiciary. In In re Henrich, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 6,369, 5 Blatchf. 414, 425, it was stated that "it would seem indispensable that a demand for the surrender of the fugitive should be first made upon the Executive authorities of the Government, and a mandate of the President be obtained, before the Judiciary is called upon to act." The same view was expressed in In re Farez, 8 Fed. Cas. No. 4,644, 7 Blatchf. 34. In Ex p. Ross, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 12,069, 2 Bond 252 [followed in In re Dugau, 7 Fed. Cas. No. 4,120, 2 Lowell 367; In re Kelley, 14 Fed. Cas. No. 7,655, 2 Lowell 339; In re Thomas, 23 Fed. Cas. No. 13,887, 12 Blatchf. 370], however, it was held that prior authorization of the executive was not necessary to enable the magistrate to act. In In re Thomas, supra, Blatchford, J., said: "So far as my own action is concerned, it is not, for the purposes of the present case, or of future like cases, (that is, cases where the treaty does not require a previous mandate,) to be regarded as the law, that the issuing of an executive mandate, in a case of extradition, is a prerequisite to the entertaining of proceedings, and the issuing of a warrant of arrest by a magistrate." The same view was taken in In re Orpen, 86 Fed. 760; In re Herres, 33 Fed. 165; Castro v. De Uriarte, 16 Fed. 93.

31. A few of our treaties contain a provision declaring that it shall be lawful for any competent judicial authority of the United States upon production of a certificate issued by the secretary of state that request has been made by the foreign government for the provisional arrest of a person accused of a crime extraditable under the treaty, and, upon legal complaint that such crime has been committed, to issue his warrant for the apprehension of such person. In a case arising under the former treaty of 1877 with Spain, which contained a similar provision, no preliminary mandate was obtained, and it was held that the language of the treaty was permissive and not necessarily obligatory, and that U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 5270 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 3591], provided other means for obtaining a judicial investigation. Castro v. De Uriarte, 16 Fed. 93, 97, where the court said: "The procedure indicated by section 5270, . . . is in substance identical with that contemplated by the treaty with Spain, except that it dispenses with any preliminary executive warrant. Had there been no law of congress upon the subject, such an executive warrant would have been necessary in order to authorize the magistrates to proceed; but, inasmuch as the law of this country

2. By Whom Issued. The mandate may be issued under the hand of the secretary of state and the seal of the department of state.[32]

3. Form. There is no special form prescribed by law. It is sufficient if the offense is described in the terms of the treaty.[33]

4. How Long Operative. A mandate issued by the executive remains operative until recalled by the executive or until he signifies in some way that its functions are exhausted.[34]

H. "Jurisdiction" and "Territory" — 1. Construction of Terms. Treaties of extradition provide for the surrender of persons charged with crimes committed within the "jurisdiction" of one of the contracting parties, who may be found within the "territory" of the other. These words, as construed by this government, mean "territorial jurisdiction."[35] One accused of poisoning, resulting in death in Canada, may be extradited, although it appears that the poison, if administered at all, was given in this country.[36]

2. Vessels. Vessels upon the high seas and ships of war everywhere are within the jurisdiction of the nations to which they belong.[37] A British subject expressly authorizes the magistrates to proceed, 'whenever there is a treaty or convention for extradition,' without reference to any preliminary executive warrant, such a warrant seems to me clearly unnecessary, if the demanding government chooses to avail itself of the law existing outside of the treaty, and proceed without the preliminary mandate."

32. The executive authority of the United States, particularly in its intercourse with foreign powers and in matters which concern foreign relations, acts through the medium of the secretary of state and the seal of that department. In re Farez, 8 Fed. Cas. No. 4,644, 7 Blatchf. 34; Ex p. Van Hoven, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,858, 4 Dill. 411.

Carl Vogt, a Prussian subject, charged with crimes committed in Belgium, fled to the United States, from whence his extradition was demanded by the German government, for trial and punishment in Germany, under the treaty between the United States and Prussia which provides for extradition for crimes "committed within the jurisdiction" of either party. Vogt having been arrested brought habeas corpus proceedings before Justice Blatchford of the United States circuit court for the southern district of New York. The court held that Vogt was subject under Prussian law to punishment in Prussia for the crimes committed by him in Belgium, and that there was nothing in the language of our treaty with Prussia, or of other treaties containing like language, or in the rules of interpretation laid down in decisions on the subject, to prevent giving to the word "jurisdiction" an enlarged meaning, equivalent to the words "authority, cognizance, or power of the courts." He accordingly committed the prisoner for extradition. In re Stupp, 23 Fed. Cas. No. 13,562, 11 Blatchf. 124. When the case came before the executive, he referred the question to the attorney-general, who decided that the words "committed within the jurisdiction," as used in the treaty, do not refer to the personal liabilities of the criminal, but to locality; and that the place where the crime is committed must be within the jurisdiction of the party demanding the fugitive — in other words, within the territorial jurisdiction. 14 Op. Atty.-Gen. 281. The executive refused to grant a warrant for Vogt's surrender. See In re Stupp, 23 Fed. Cas. No. 13,563, 12 Blatchf. 501.

In Great Britain.—One who sent from England letters containing alleged false pretenses to persons carrying on business in Germany, thereby inducing them to part with certain goods and deliver them to his order in Hamburg, and who also sent to the same persons certain alleged forged checks in payment, is a fugitive criminal within the act of 33 & 34 Vict. c. 52, § 26, and was rightly committed by the police magistrate to await the warrant of the secretary of state for his extradition. Reg. v. Nillins, 53 L. J. M. C. 157. And in Reg. v. Jacobi, 46 L. T. Rep. N. S. 595 note, where the accused were charged with conspiring in Holland to obtain by false pretenses property to be sent to them in Germany, and they obtained the property and sent it to England, whither the accused soon after went, it was decided that their extradition was due upon demand of Germany as for a crime committed in German jurisdiction.

37. 14 Op. Atty.-Gen. 281.

A murder committed on board a British vessel of war on the high seas is committed within the jurisdiction of Great Britain, within the meaning of the extradition treaty between the United States and Great Britain of 1794. U. S. v. Cooper, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14,865; U. S. v. Robins, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16,175, Bee 266.

In Great Britain.— A crime committed by a Chinese subject on a French ship at sea is an offense committed within French jurison a British merchant vessel within the territorial waters of the United States is within the territory of the United States, and he may be arrested upon a warrant issued by an extradition magistrate in pursuance of proceedings for his extradition.[38]

3. PLACE MUST HAVE BEEN WITHIN JURISDICTION WHEN CRIME WAS COMMITTED. The treaty of 1889 between Great Britain and the United States providing for the extradition of persons charged with offenses "committed within the jurisdiction of" either party does not authorize the extradition of a person charged with the commission of an offense in a place or country which was not at the time within the jurisdiction of the country seeking the extradition, although it has since been brought within such jurisdiction.[39]

IV. STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

A. In General — 1. IN THE UNITED STATES. Until 1848 there was no legislation in the United States on the subject of extradition. Extradition was granted under the provisions of the treaties with Great Britain and France, although there was some difference of opinion upon the question whether a fugitive could be legally surrendered in the absence of an act of congress passed to carry out the provisions of the treaty.[40] The question ceased to be a practical one, however, with the passage of the act of Aug. 12, 1848,[41] which provided the machinery for a judicial examination in every case arising under any extradition treaty then in force or which might in the future be entered into by this government. It is not in conflict with the treaty of 1842 with Great Britain, but supplements that treaty.[42] This statute was supplemented by the act of Aug. 3, 1882.[43]

2. IN GREAT BRITAIN. An act of parliament is essential to carry an extradition treaty into effect. The act of parliament of 1870, which repeals acts passed to carry prior treaties into operation, contains a provision which keeps those treaties in full force.[44]

B. Extradition to Country Occupied by United States. The act of June diction, and the accused cannot be surrendered to the Chinese government on the ground that Chinese law provides for the punishment of a Chinese subject for a crime committed on a foreigner within foreign territory. Atty.-Gen. v. Kwok-A-Sing, L. R. 5 P. C. 179, 12 Cox C. C. 565, 42 L. J. P. C. 64, 29 L. T. Rep. N. S. 114, 21 Wkly. Rep. 825.

38. In re Newman, 79 Fed. 622.

39. In re Taylor, 118 Fed. 196, holding that the territory of the South African republic was not a part of the dominions of Great Britain, in an ordinary or unqualified sense, prior to the proclamation of Lord Roberts of 1900, making it a British colony, nor in such sense as to bring it within the purview of the extradition treaty of 1889 between Great Britain and the United States; and under that treaty Great Britain cannot require from the United States the extradition of a person for an offense alleged in the complaint to have been committed at Johanneshurg prior to the date of such proclamation.

40. In In re Metzger, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 248, 1 Park. Cr. (N. Y.) 108, it was held that the treaty with France in relation to the extradition of fugitive criminals could not be executed without an act of congress. But in the case of In re Sheazle, 21 Fed. Cas. No. 12,734, 1 Woodb. & M. 66, arising under the treaty of 1842 with Great Britain, it was decided that fugitives in the United States charged with crimes committed within British jurisdiction could be arrested and surrendered without special legislation to carry the treaty into execution. See also to the same effect Re Metzger, 5 How. (U. S.) 176, 12 L. ed. 104; In re Kaine, 14 Fed. Cas. No. 7,598, 10 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 257; U. S. v. Robins, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16,175, Bee 266. In Muller's Case, 5 Phila. (Pa.) 289, it was held that the application for extradition under the treaty with Great Britain may be sustained under a law of the state enacted after the date of the treaty, but in force at the time the offense was committed and at the time of the hearing under the application.

6, 1903, provides for extradition from the United States to a foreign country or territory occupied by or under control of the United States.[45]

C. In the Philippines. And the act of Feb. 6, 1905, provides the necessary machinery for the execution in the Philippine Islands of the extradition treaties of the United States applicable thereto.[46]

D. Magistrates — 1. Who Are Competent — a. In the United States. The statute confers power and jurisdiction to act in extradition cases upon the justices of the supreme, circuit, and district courts of the United States, judges of courts of record of general jurisdiction of the states, and commissioners authorized by any of the courts of the United States.[47] A United States commissioner appointed by the federal circuit court is a "magistrate" within the treaty with Great Britain of Aug. 9, 1842, regulating the arrest and commitment of fugitives.[48] Only judges of courts of the United States are empowered to act in proceedings for extradition to a foreign country or territory under control of the United States.[49] Commissioners possessing general power to arrest and commit for offenses against the United States, who have not been specially authorized by courts of the United States to perform that duty, are not empowered to act in extradition cases. A commissioner competent to act in the matter must be specially appointed or authorized by the federal courts for that purpose.[50] A commissioner authorized by a district court to discharge all the duties and exercise all the powers which may be performed by a justice of the supreme court, or a circuit or district judge, under the statute,[51] is a magistrate specially empowered

45. 31 U. S. St. at L. 656 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 3591]. In In re Neely, 103 Fed. 626, it was contended that this statute was unconstitutional, as applied to Cuba, on the ground that since its inhabitants are free and independent the United States could not occupy or exercise control over the island; but the court held that the act is constitutional and that the United States, which was in military occupation of the island as enemy's territory at the time it compelled Spain to relinquish her sovereignty over it, might constitutionally continue its occupancy until the political branch of the government should determine that it was no longer necessary. And in Neely v. Henkel, 180 U. S. 109, it was decided that Cuba was foreign territory, within this statute, notwithstanding the fact that the island was at that time under a military government appointed by and representing the president of the United States in assisting the inhabitants of the islands to establish a government.

A complaint for forgery made by a Mexican consul against a fugitive from that country may be heard by a United States circuit court commissioner, and, if he deems the evidence sufficient to sustain the charge, to commit the accused until a warrant for his surrender be issued, as forgery is one of the crimes enumerated in the extradition treaty with Mexico. However, the view was taken in the case of In re Mineau, 45 Fed. 188, that a commissioner, under the general authority given by statute to hold for security of the peace and good behavior, may issue a warrant for the arrest of a person, in a proceeding under an extradition treaty. See also Re Kaine, 14 How. (U. S.) 103, 14 L. ed. 345. In In re Grin, 112 Fed. 790, it was held that an oath taken before a United States commissioner to a complaint made under U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 5270 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 3591] for the arrest of one who has committed a crime in a foreign country is sufficient, such officer being authorized to administer oaths by 29 U. S. St. at L. 184 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 652].

The power to appoint extradition commissioners is vested in the courts by congress in Rev. St. (1878) § 5270 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 3591], under the authority of U. S. Const. art. 2, § 2, par. 2. Rice v. Ames, 180 U. S. 371, 21 S. Ct. 406, 45 L. ed. 577. Until June 30, 1897, these extradition commissioners were appointed by the circuit courts, but the act of May 28, 1896 (29 U. S. St. at L. 184), provided that the office of circuit court commissioner should cease to exist on June 30, 1897, vested the appointment of United States commissioners in the district courts, and declared that such United States commissioners shall have the same powers and perform the same duties as were then imposed upon commissioners of the circuit courts.

to act in extradition cases.[52] The jurisdiction of a United States commissioner to hear and consider the evidence, and certify the proceedings to the secretary of state, is not dependent upon the fact that he issued the warrant of arrest.[53] An extradition magistrate has jurisdiction, and it is his duty, to determine whether an offense charged is political within the meaning of the treaty provision.[54]

b. In Great Britain. Police magistrates and justices of the peace are authorized to act in extradition cases.[55]

c. In Canada. Judges of the superior and county courts of any province, and all commissioners appointed for the purpose in any province by the governor in council under the great seal, are authorized to act judicially in extradition matters.[56]

2. HEARINGS. The act of 1882 provides that hearings in extradition proceedings shall be held publicly, and in a room or office easily accessible to the public.[57] The hearing must be had within the state, district, or territory where the accused is found.[58]

3. ADJOURNMENTS. The magistrate may in the exercise of a just and reasonable discretion grant adjournments.[59] On an examination on a warrant of arrest of an alleged fugitive from justice of a foreign state, an adjournment to enable the prisoner to obtain evidence from abroad[60] to be used on the examination is properly refused if the affidavits in support of the motion do not show that there is any evidence on the part of the prisoner that exists or is accessible or is likely to be obtained.[61]

4. PROVISIONAL DETENTION. In most treaties of extradition express provision is

Where a commissioner has been appointed under the great seal of Canada, and his appointment as such commissioner has appeared in the official Gazette, and he is thereby "authorized to act judicially in extradition matters under the Extradition Act, within the province," and he describes himself in a warrant of commitment, as "a judge under the Extradition Act," his jurisdiction is sufficiently disclosed. In re Debaum, 4 Montreal Q. B. 145, 16 Rev. Leg. 612.

The jurisdiction of an extradition magistrate extends over the whole province for which he has been appointed; he may therefore order a prisoner to be brought before him from any part of the province in which he has been arrested. In re Greene, 22 Quebec Super. Ct. 91.

The jurisdiction of a county judge under the Extradition Act is limited only by the bounds of the province and not by those of his county. In re Parker, 10 Can. L. T. 373.

Second arrest.— In Ex p. Seitz, 8 Quebec Q. B. 392, it was held that a prisoner who has been discharged on habeas corpus because the extradition commissioner had no jurisdiction in the province in which the prisoner was arrested may subsequently be arrested in the province of such commissioner, and tried before him, if the prior arrest has not been fraudulently made for the purpose of getting him within the jurisdiction.

The continuation of proceedings before an extradition commissioner for a longer period than an examining magistrate is authorized to continue a case under the state laws does not invalidate proceedings for extradition under the treaty with Great Britain, which provides that extradition shall be carried out "in conformity with the laws regulating extradition for the time being in force in the surrendering States," as the laws contemplated therein are those of the United States, and not the laws of the particular state within which the proceedings are taken. Rice v. Ames, 180 U. S. 371, 21 S. Ct. 406, 45 L. ed. 577.

Abuse of discretion.— A prisoner is not entitled to discharge on habeas corpus on the ground that an adjournment of the hearing by a commissioner is unreasonable unless it is shown that the commissioner has abused his discretion. In re Ludwig, 32 Fed. 774.

60. To procure depositions.— Refusal of a commissioner to grant an adjournment to enable the accused to procure depositions from a foreign country to show an alibi is a legitimate exercise of discretion. In re Wadge, 16 Fed. 332, 21 Blatchf. 300.

made for the provisional arrest and detention of a criminal fugitive, in advance of the presentation of a formal requisition with proofs. Such stipulation is usually accompanied by a proviso that unless the formal requisition and proofs are presented within a limited period after the arrest of the accused the prisoner shall be discharged from custody.[62]

5. TRANSLATION OF DOCUMENTS. Accurate and verified translations of documents in foreign languages should be furnished in extradition proceedings.[63]

6. RECORD OF PROCEEDINGS. The commissioner should keep a record of all the oral evidence taken before him, together with the objections made to the admissibility of the evidence.[64]

7. BAIL. There is no statutory provision for the admission of a criminal fugitive to bail in international extradition proceedings in the United States, and it is the practice not to admit to bail in such cases.[65]

8. COMMITMENT FOR EXTRADITION. The statute[66] directs the magistrate, if he deems the evidence sufficient to sustain the charge, to "issue his warrant for the commitment of the person so charged to the proper jail, there to remain until such surrender shall be made."[67] In a subsequent section of the statute it is further

In Great Britain.— In a case arising under the treaty of 1872 between Great Britain and Germany which contains a stipulation providing that "if sufficient evidence for the extradition be not produced within two months from the date of the apprehension of the fugitive, he shall be set at liberty," a prisoner is not entitled to his release where in the magistrate's opinion sufficient evidence for extradition upon one charge has been produced within two months; and in such a case it is competent to the magistrate, after the expiration of two months, to take evidence in other cases against the prisoner and commit him for extradition upon all of them. In re Bluhm, [1901] 1 K. B. 764, 70 L. J. K. B. 472, 49 Wkly. Rep. 464.

63. In re Henrich, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 6,369, 5 Blatchf. 414, holding that parties seeking the extradition of the fugitive should be required by the commissioner to furnish an accurate translation of every document offered in evidence which is in a foreign language, accompanied by an affidavit of the translator, made before such commissioner or some other magistrate authorized to act in extradition cases, that the translation is correct.

64. In re Henrich, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 6,369, 5 Blatchf. 414, holding, however, that he should exclude from the record the arguments and disputes of counsel.

65. In In re Carrier, 57 Fed. 578, the United States circuit court for the district of Colorado on habeas corpus upheld the refusal of the extradition commissioner to admit the prisoner to bail during a continuance of a hearing to secure further evidence, the court holding that the matter was dependent upon statute, and, as there was no express statutory authority for bail in such cases, it could not be granted. The same view was taken by the circuit court for the southern district of New York, in the case of In re Wright, 123 Fed. 463, the court stating that applications to admit to bail in international proceedings had on several occasions been made to it, and had been uniformly denied; and, upon appeal in this case to the United States supreme court, it was held that no error was committed in refusing to admit to bail, but the court added that while bail should not ordinarily be granted in cases of foreign extradition, we are unwilling to hold that the circuit courts possess no power in respect of admitting to bail, other than as specifically vested by statute, or that those courts may not in any case, and whatever the special circumstances, extend that relief. Wright v. Henkel, 190 U. S. 40, 63, 23 S. Ct. 781, 47 L. ed. 948.

66. U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 5270 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 3591].

67. When complaint is made on oath the magistrate is to examine the evidence of criminality, and, if he deems it sufficient to sustain the charge, to certify the same to the secretary of state. The magistrate has nothing to do with the question whether the government of the foreign country has duly authorized an application for the extradition. In re Dugau, 7 Fed. Cas. No. 4,120, 2 Lowell 367.

In Canada.—A warrant of commitment under the extradition treaty, which omits to state that the accused was brought before the magistrate, or that the witnesses against him were examined in his presence, is bad upon the face of it, and must be set aside. Ex p. Brown, 2 L. C. L. J. 23. A warrant of commitment for extradition should in its terms conform to the requirements of 31 Vict. c. 94, § 1, in directing the person accused to be committed until surrendered on the requisition of the proper authority or duly discharged according to law. Ex p. Zink, 6 Montreal Q. B. 260, where it is held that the judge is required to decide whether he deems the evidence adduced before him sufficient to justify the apprehension and commitment for trial of the person accused if the crime had been committed in Canada; that if he finds in the affirmative, he should so state it in his com-provided[68] that if the prisoner is not delivered up and conveyed out of the United States within two calendar months after such commitment, over and above the time actually required to convey him from the jail to which he was committed, by the readiest way, it shall be lawful for any judge of the United States, or of any state, upon application made to him by or on behalf of the prisoner, and upon proof that reasonable notice of the intention to make such application has been given to the secretary of state, to order the prisoner to be discharged, unless sufficient cause is shown to such judge why such discharge ought not be be ordered.[69]

9. Certificate to Secretary of State. Where the magistrate deems the evidence sufficient to sustain the charge, the statute provides that "he shall certify the same, together with a copy of all the testimony taken before him, to the Secretary of State."[70]

E. Complaint — 1. By Whom Made. The statute[71] provides that proceedings before extradition magistrates shall be begun "upon complaint made under oath." This complaint must be made by someone acting under the authority or sanction of the executive of the foreign government.[72] Ordinarily complaints of this character are made through the consul[73] of the foreign government, or directly upon papers sworn to by the foreign officers representing the executive.[74] It is not necessary that the complaint should be made by officers of the executive department of the foreign government. Any person authorized by the executive department to act is a proper person to appear and file a complaint.[75] It is sufficient if it be shown at any time while the proceedings are pending before the commissioner that the person who initiated the proceedings was acting under the authority of the foreign government.[76]

2. Oath. The complaint must be made "under oath."[77] It is not necessary that the oath to the complaint be taken before a commissioner authorized to act in extradition proceedings, or even before the judge or commissioner who issues the warrant of arrest.[78]

mitment, and certify the fact to the proper executive authority; and that his functions do not extend to determining whether the accused should be extradited, as that rests with the governor-general after the evidence has been reported to him; and further that if the judge fails to state in the commitment that he deems the evidence sufficient the commitment will be defective and insufficient.

Where a fugitive had been committed and detained in jail for more than two months, his application for discharge under the provisions of the above statute was granted, although it appeared at the time of the application that an agent from the government requesting the extradition was on his way to remove the prisoner, there being no sufficient cause shown why the coming of the officer had been so long delayed. In re Dawson, 101 Fed. 253. 3. Essentials — a. Authority of Commissioner and Knowledge of Complainant. The complaint should show the authority of the commissioner to act in the proceedings,[79] and should also sufficiently set forth the knowledge of complainant on which he makes the complaint.[80]

b. Charge of Offense. The complaint need not set forth the crime with the particularity of an indictment. It is sufficient if it fairly apprises the party of the crime with which he is charged.[81] It should set forth clearly, but briefly, the substance of the offense charged, so that the court can see that one or more of the particular crimes enumerated in the treaty is alleged to have been committed.[82] A complaint charging an offense at common law is sufficient, notwithstanding it concludes "against the form of the statute."[83]

was sworn to before a United States commissioner, the warrant of arrest was issued by a district judge, and made returnable to the commissioner, the latter having been specially authorized to act in extradition cases subsequently to the date of the oath but on the same day the warrant was issued. In In re Heilbronn, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 6,323, under the treaty between the United States and Great Britain of 1842, it was held that it was not essential that the complaint under oath should be made directly to a magistrate in the country to which the fugitive has fled, but that it is sufficient if made in the country where the crime was committed, to a magistrate having power to administer oaths and investigate the charge made, and the same or a duly certified copy thereof transmitted to the government where the fugitive has fled.

Charging assault with intent to commit murder.— A complaint charging "assault with intent to kill and murder" brings the case within the terms of an extradition treaty providing for surrender for "assault with intent to commit murder." U. S. v. Piaza, 133 Fed. 998.

Charging embezzlement.— The accused in extradition proceedings, while in Russia, received money from his employer to deliver to a certain company. Instead he appropriated the money to his own use and fled to the state of California, where he was arrested, charged with embezzlement. Under Cal. Pen. Code, §§ 503, 508, defining "embezzlement" as "the fraudulent appropriation of property by a person to whom it has been intrusted," or who received it "by virtue of his employment," it was held that the omission of the word "fraudulently" from the complaint did not render such complaint defective, where it alleges that the accused "wrongfully, unlawfully, and feloniously" appropriated the property; and that the complaint did not insufficiently charge the crime of embezzlement, because it alleged that the money embezzled was intrusted to and received by the accused "in his capacity as clerk," instead of charging, in the language of that section, that such money came into his control or care "by virtue of his employment as such clerk." Grin v. Shine, 187 U. S. 181, 23 S. Ct. 98, 47 L. ed. 130 [affirming 112 Fed. 790].

Charging forgery.— In a case of forgery, it is not enough to charge in the complaint the crime of forgery generally, but time and place and the nature of the forgery and of the forged instrument must be sufficiently specified. In re Farez, 8 Fed. Cas. No. 4,644, 7 Blatchf. 34. A complaint in extradition proceedings for forgery, which sets forth the note alleged to be forged, its amount, date, and names of the parties, and the bank which discounted it, is sufficient in substance and form. In re Charleston, 34 Fed. 531. Where the crime is forgery, the complaint may charge more than one forgery. In re Henrich, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 6,369, 5 Blatchf. 414.

c. Reference to Mandate. A few of the treaties of the United States provide for the issuance by the executive of a preliminary mandate or certificate that requisition has been made by the foreign government for extradition.[84] It is not necessary that the complaint should state that a mandate has been issued by the executive.[85] A variance between the mandate and the complaint, the former referring to the accused as "George Macdonell," and the latter as "George Macdonell, otherwise Macdonnell," was held not to be fatal.[86]

d. Allegation That Warrant Has Issued in a Foreign Country. It is not a necessary preliminary to an investigation, under an extradition treaty, that a warrant shall have been issued abroad, and it is not essential that the complaint should make such an averment.[87] Where the treaty requires as a prerequisite to a requisition for the surrender of a fugitive criminal that a warrant of arrest shall have issued in the foreign country, the judicial department will presume, from the mandate of the secretary of state, that such a warrant was issued.[88] A complaint on oath by a duly authorized officer, alleging that the accused had been charged before a justice of the peace in the foreign country with murder there committed, and a warrant issued for her arrest, the original warrant being

No preliminary requisition from the demanding government is essential to the jurisdiction of a United States commissioner, under U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 5270 [U. S. Comp. Nor is a requisition from the foreign government and mandate from this government necessary, under the statute, to initiate proceedings in extradition before a committing magistrate. In re Orpen, 86 Fed. 760. The judges and commissioners, on whom the act of 1848 confers authority over proceedings for the extradition of persons charged with crimes in a foreign country have jurisdiction of a complaint made for that purpose, by a consul of Great Britain, without a previous requisition by his government upon the president of the United States. In re Kaine, 14 How. An order by a magistrate in Russia, stating that he had investigated the preliminary examination in regard to the offense for which the extradition of the accused was sought, and found certain facts, and directed the arrest of the accused pursuant to law; and a second order, which, after reciting the same preliminary statement, found that the accused was arraigned pursuant to law for the offense for which he was examined, ordered his arrest, contain all the essentials of a warrant of arrest or other judicial document issued by a judge or magistrate, as required by treaty. In re Grin, 112 Fed. 790.

The production of a certified copy of an order purporting to be signed and sealed by a Russian examining magistrate, which, although not in the form of a warrant of arrest as used in the United States, was evidently designed to secure the apprehension of the accused and his production before an examining magistrate, satisfies the requirement of the extradition treaty with Russia that applications for extradition shall be accompanied by an authenticated copy of the warrant of arrest, or of some other equivalent judicial document issued by a judge or magistrate duly authorized to do so. Grin v. Shine, 187 U. S. 181, 23 S. Ct. 98, 47 L. ed. 130.

Congress has dispensed with the requirement of the extradition treaty with Russia with respect to the production of a copy of a warrant of arrest, or other equivalent document issued by a magistrate of the Russian empire, by Rev. St. (1878) § 5270 [U. S.

attached to the complaint, and that the officer believes the charge as stated in the warrant to be true, is sufficient to give the commissioner jurisdiction to issue a warrant of arrest.[89]

e. Averment That Offense Is Subject to Infamous Punishment. Where a treaty provides for the surrender of persons charged with the crimes therein specified, "when these crimes are subject to infamous punishment," it is regarded as doubtful whether it is necessary to aver in the complaint that the offense for which the extradition is sought is subject to infamous punishment.[90]

f. Amendment. An extradition commissioner is not authorized to amend a complaint after the conclusion of the proceedings before him, by interlining the word "extradition" before the word "commissioner," in the description of the magistrate, in the complaint.[91]

F. Warrant of Arrest — 1. In General. The law authorizes the magistrate upon compliance with the prescribed conditions to "issue his warrant for the apprehension of the person charged, that he may be brought before such justice, judge, or commissioner, to the end that the evidence of criminality may be heard and considered.[92]

2. Must Be Based on Sufficient Complaint. A warrant issued without a sufficient complaint on oath is invalid.[93]

3. Must Show Authority of Commissioner. A warrant which does not show on its face that the commissioner issuing it is a commissioner authorized to act in extradition cases is void.[94]

4. Should Recite Issuance of Mandate, if Any. Where a mandate has been issued by the executive the warrant of arrest should recite that fact.[95] out a previous application having been made to the executive for a preliminary mandate.[96]

6. Charge of Offense. The warrant need not state with particularity the offense with which defendant is charged. It is sufficient if it follow the terms of the statute or treaty.[97]

7. How Far Operative. A commissioner authorized by a court of the United States to act in extradition cases has no power to issue a warrant upon which a marshal of a district in another state may arrest a fugitive and return him for examination to the court of the commissioner who issued the warrant.[98]

8. Rearrest. Where an alleged fugitive has been discharged, a new complaint may be made, and a new warrant issued for his arrest, with a view to a reëxamination of the case.[99] Where an extradition commissioner has committed the accused for extradition and the commitment has been set aside on habeas corpus for errors on the examination, the accused is not necessarily released, but may be held under the warrant of arrest with a view to a new examination before the commissioner.[1] Where the first warrant of arrest is of questionable regularity, and no order is entered upon the first complaint and warrant, under the statute,[2] a second warrant may be issued.[3] Where the accused has been arrested with a view to extradition, a second warrant for his arrest cannot be executed while habeas corpus proceedings are pending.[4]

G. Evidence — 1. Authentication — a. Under Act of 1848 and Revised Statutes of 1874. The Revised Statutes of the United States[5] provide that in every case of complaint [as aforesaid], and of a hearing upon the return of the warrant of arrest, copies of the depositions upon which an original warrant in any [such] foreign country may have been granted, certified under the hand of the person [or persons] issuing such warrant, and attested upon the oath of the party producing them to be true copies of the original depositions, may be received in evidence of the criminality of the person so apprehended,[6] "if they are authenticated in such manner as would entitle them to be received for similar purposes by the tribunals of the foreign country from which the accused party escaped. The certificate of the principal diplomatic or consular officer of the United States resident in such foreign country shall be proof that any paper or other document so offered is authenticated in the manner required by this section."[7] The act of Aug. 12, 1848, authorizing a copy of the original deposition to be used in extradition proceedings before a magistrate is not in conflict with the treaty of Great Britain.[8]

b. Under Acts of 1860 and 1882. The act of Aug. 3, 1882,[9] provides that in all cases where any depositions, warrants, or other papers, or copies thereof,[10] shall be offered in evidence upon the hearing of [any extradition case under title foreign country, in support of the charge of crime.[19] Copies of depositions from abroad, taken subsequently to the date of the original warrant of arrest issued abroad, may be admissible in evidence under the act of 1860, as constituting, with oral evidence taken before the commissioner, legal testimony tending to prove the criminality of the accused, and material for a decision of the commissioner on the question of fact, as to the criminality of the accused.[20] Forged papers produced to and deposed to by witnesses giving depositions abroad, where the charge is forgery, need not be produced here before the commissioner.[21] It is not necessary, otherwise than by the certificate of the consul, to prove that the law of the foreign country would allow copies of depositions taken before a magistrate to be received as proof of criminality.[22] An authentication in the very language of the statute is sufficient.[23] Where the authentication recites that the papers "are properly and legally authenticated, so as to entitle them to be received in evidence for similar purposes" in the foreign country, this is sufficient.[24] Under the act of 1882, where the authentication of the diplomatic or consular officer does not comply with the requirements of the statute, other proof may be resorted to to assist the certificate.[25]

2. AMOUNT OF EVIDENCE. The statute contains no specification of the amount of evidence necessary to warrant the commitment of a fugitive for extradition.[28] The following provision, however, substantially appears in most of the extradition treaties of the United States, after the stipulation that extradition shall be granted in accordance with the provisions of the treaty: "Provided, that this shall only be done upon such evidence of criminality as according to the laws of the place where the fugitive or person so charged, shall be found, would justify his apprehension and commitment for trial if the crime or offense had been there committed."[29] It is now[30] well settled that in the proceeding before the extradition magistrate, to warrant holding the prisoner for extradition, it is only necessary to adduce such evidence as would be deemed sufficient to justify holding him for trial if the offense had been committed in this country.[31] It is enough if it appears that there was legal evidence on which the commissioner might properly conclude that the accused had committed an offense within the treaty as charged.[32]

27. This section, as thus amended, provides for two classes of documentary evidence: (1) Original depositions, original warrants, and original other papers; (2) copies of "any such depositions, warrants or other papers." In re Fowler, 4 Fed. 303, 18 Blatchf. 430.

Where the accused is found and arrested in a state in which indictment is not required, it is not necessary to produce the indictment, although it appears by the record that one was found in the country in which the crime was committed.[33] The old doctrine that proceedings for the extradition of an alien are to be conducted with extreme technicality has been abandoned. The proceedings before the commissioner are not to be treated as if it were a trial before a petit jury.[34]

3. EVIDENCE FOR THE ACCUSED. Section three of the act of 1882 provides that "on the hearing of any case under a claim of extradition by any foreign government, upon affidavit being filed by the person charged setting forth that there are witnesses whose evidence is material to his defense, that he cannot safely go to trial without them, what he expects to prove by each of them, and that he is not possessed of sufficient means, and is actually unable to pay the fees of such witnesses, the judge or commissioner before whom such claim for extradition is heard may order that such witnesses be subpœnaed; and in such cases the costs incurred by the process, and the fees of witnesses shall be paid in the same manner that similar fees are paid in the case of witnesses subpœnaed in behalf of the United States."[35] The accused has a right to be examined as a witness in his own behalf on an investigation before a commissioner,[36] and to examine witnesses in his own behalf.[37] While the statutes contemplate the production and examination of defendant's witnesses before the extradition magistrate, there is no warrant in the law or practice for receiving testimony by commission, or by the depositions of witnesses taken abroad.[38] Section five of the act of 1882[39] applies only to documentary evidence submitted by the prosecution to establish the criminality of the accused and not to papers offered on the part of the accused.[40]

4. Proof of Offense. The usual treaty provision is that the alleged criminal shall be arrested and delivered up on such evidence of criminality as, according to the laws of the place where he is found, would justify his apprehension and commitment for trial if the crime or offense had been there committed.[41] Under this provision it is uniformly held that the laws of the state or place where the criminal is found furnish the rule as to what evidence is necessary to authorize his arrest and commitment.[42] Where the treaty provides for extradition for certain acts "made criminal by the laws of both countries," extradition is not limited to persons charged with acts made criminal by the laws of the United States. An act made criminal by the law of the foreign country and the law of the state of the Union in which the fugitive is found is extraditable.[43]

We have no common-law crimes in the United States. The penal code enacted by congress is very limited. The great bulk of the crimes that are defined by statutes are found in the penal codes of the states alone; and so if an accused person is found in a particular state of the Union, and his return to a foreign country is demanded, the right of extradition depends upon whether or not the offense with which he is charged is an offense against the laws of the state in which he is found. But compare In re Adutt, 55 Fed. 376, where it was held in a case arising under the treaty between the United States and Austria-Hungary, that "forgery" should have, so far as this government is concerned, its common-law definition.

Where an extradition treaty uses general names, such as "murder" or "arson," in defining the classes of crimes for which extradition may be granted thereunder, such names are not necessarily confined to their meaning at common law, but the question whether a given offense comes within the treaty must be determined by the law as it exists in the two countries at the time the extradition is applied for. In Canada a commitment under extradition proceedings is valid where the crime committed is shown by expert evidence to be one demanding extradition under the law of the foreign country, and the extradition commissioner is aware from his own knowledge that the same facts established a crime in his country for which extradition may be allowed, although it bears a different name. Ex p. Seitz, 3 Can. under commitment by an extradition commissioner for surrender under a treaty of extradition writs of habeas corpus and certiorari may both be issued.[45]

B. Office of the Writ — 1. In the United States — a. Cannot Perform the Office of a Writ of Error. A writ of habeas corpus cannot perform the office of a writ of error. If the committing magistrate, in extradition proceedings, has jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the accused, and the offense charged is within the terms of the treaty, and the magistrate has before him competent legal evidence on which to exercise his judgment, such decision cannot be reviewed on habeas corpus.[46] But where an alleged criminal who has been committed by an extradition commissioner for surrender but has been discharged upon the determination of the executive that the evidence of criminality is insufficient is again arrested and committed for the same offense and it should be apparent that the magistrate had no clearer or more convincing testimony than was presented on the first examination, the court on habeas corpus has power to review the testimony and correct the error.[47] Extradition proceedings should not be conducted in a technical spirit with a view to prevent extradition.[48]

Unsatisfactory evidence.— When an officer authorized to entertain proceedings for extradition has before him evidence which, although not satisfactory, and far from convincing, authorizes conflicting presumptions and probabilities as to the guilt of the accused, such evidence, being sufficient to call for the exercise of his judgment upon the facts, gives him jurisdiction of the subject-matter, and his determination cannot be reviewed. Under the treaty with Mexico a person arrested on complaint of a consular agent for the crime of forgery alleged to have been committed in Mexico is not entitled to be discharged on habeas corpus where the undisputed evidence shows that petitioner, knowing of the future engagement of a theatrical company in the city of Mexico, falsely represented himself to be its agent, printed and sold tickets of admittance, and then escaped with the money, as the treaty with Mexico provides for the surrender of fugitives if the evidence would justify committal for trial if the crime had been committed in the country where the fugitive was apprehended, and forgery may be committed by printing as well as writing instruments purporting to be the act of another. b. Inquiry as to Legality of Detention — (i) In General. The legality of the detention of a prisoner may be examined on habeas corpus after the issuance of a warrant for his surrender by the executive.[49] And the proceedings may be reviewed to see that no extradition is consummated upon a mere pretext or to subserve private malice.[50]

(ii) Irregularity in Issuance of Warrant. Under the extradition treaty of 1874 with Belgium it is no ground of discharge of the alleged fugitive on habeas corpus that the warrant of arrest was issued by the proper judicial officer instead of by the president.[51] The objection that the judge issuing the warrant of arrest in extradition proceedings made the warrant returnable before a United States commissioner specially designated, as required by statute,[52] to act in such cases, is not available when first made on habeas corpus, even though such section seems technically to require the warrant to be made returnable before the magistrate issuing it.[53]

c. Pendency of Proceedings on Second Complaint of Demanding Government. The dismissal of an appeal from an order of a United States circuit court dismissing writs of habeas corpus to inquire into a detention under a warrant of arrest issued in extradition proceedings is not required because of the pendency of proceedings on a second complaint by the demanding government, which reiterates the original charge with some amplification, and charges an additional offense.[54]

d. Prisoner Held Under Several Commitments. Where a prisoner brought up on habeas corpus is held under several commitments, one under state authority for an offense against the state, and the other under United States authority by virtue of a treaty of extradition with a foreign nation, the United States court will dismiss the habeas corpus, that portion which relates to offenses against the state, for want of jurisdiction, and the other portion because the commitments and warrant of extradition comply substantially with the treaty and the act of congress.[55]

e. Effect of Rehearing on Habeas Corpus Proceedings. Where a warrant of surrender had been issued, after the circuit court had dismissed a writ of habeas corpus, sued out by the prisoner, the secretary of state, upon being notified that the habeas corpus proceedings would be reheard by a justice of the supreme court of the United States, refused an application on behalf of the prisoner to recall the warrant.[56]

f. Jurisdiction of State Court Over Prisoner in Custody of United States Marshal. Where a person is in custody of a United States marshal for the purpose of determining whether or not he should be extradited under the treaty between the United States and Great Britain, the state court has no jurisdiction to compel the production of the prisoner before it to enable it to review the proceedings of the federal tribunal.[57] proceedings to see that no extradition is consummated upon a mere pretext, or to subserve private malice, yet, if it appears that a crime has been committed, and probable that the accused has fled to this country for refuge, then a spirit of fairness, expecting that the foreign country will treat extradition proceedings from this country in the same spirit, requires that we act reasonably and justly, having reference more to the substance than to the form of the proceedings."

g. Arrest in Civil Action Before Return to Place of Extradition. An extradited person arrested in a civil action before he has had time, after his acquittal of the offense for which he was extradited, to return to the place from which he was brought, is "in custody in violation of the constitution or of a law or treaty of the United States," within the meaning of the statutes,[58] relating to writs of habeas corpus in the federal courts, although the prisoner is held under process from a state court.[59]

2. In Great Britain — a. In General. Upon an application for a habeas corpus in the case of a fugitive criminal committed by a police magistrate under the Extradition Act, the court has no power to review the decision of the magistrate on the ground that it was against the weight of the evidence laid before him, there being sufficient evidence before him to give him jurisdiction in the matter.[60]

b. Offenses of a Political Character. The decision of a magistrate who commits a prisoner for extradition that the offense charged is not of a political character is subject to review by the court on an application for habeas corpus.[61] Where a prisoner has been committed for extradition in respect to crimes prima facie divested of any political character, and there is no evidence that they are of political character, or that his extradition is demanded in order to punish him for an offense of a political character, but only a suggestion of that effect, the court will grant no habeas corpus.[62]

3. In Canada. Upon habeas corpus the court should see that the facts alleged by the prosecution constitute an extraditable offense, and the court should examine the evidence so far as to see that there is such proof as would warrant a grand jury in finding a true bill, or a justice of the peace in committing for trial.[63] An alleged irregularity in the proceedings for his arrest cannot, on an application for habeas corpus, avail a prisoner committed for extradition. It is sufficient that, being under arrest before proper authority, a case has been made out against him to justify his commitment.[64]

VI. SURRENDER.

A. By Whom Made. The Revised Statutes of the United States[65] authorize the secretary of state under his hand and seal of office to order the person committed by an extradition magistrate pursuant to the statute[66] to be delivered to such person as shall be authorized, in the name and on behalf of such foreign government, to be tried for the crime of which such person shall be so accused, and such person shall be delivered up accordingly.

B. Duty Not Ministerial. It was at first held that this duty of the executive was merely ministerial.[67] It is now well established, however, that the executive has power to revise the opinion of the extradition magistrate.[68]

C. Grounds For Refusal. This authority has on numerous occasions been exercised by the executive, generally upon the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to establish the charge under the treaty.[69]

VII. EXPENSES.

A. Borne by Demanding Government. Every treaty of extradition to which the United States is a party contains a provision that the expenses of extradition shall be borne by the demanding government,[70] and it is the practice for the demanding government to defray the expenses of the proceedings whether the fugitive is eventually surrendered or not.[71] of the habeas corpus, is not restricted to examination of the warrant of arrest in order to ascertain whether the commissioner had jurisdiction, but may go behind it and examine the grounds upon which it issued. But upon an appeal on behalf of the United States, the demanding government, to the British privy council, this judgment was reversed and it was declared that where a prisoner is brought before a competent tribunal, and is charged with an extradition offense and remanded for the purpose of affording the prosecution the opportunity of bringing forward the evidence by which the accusation is to be supported, a court upon habeas corpus cannot treat the remand warrant as a nullity and adjudicate upon the case as though the whole evidence were before it. Op. Privy Council in U. S. v. Gaynor, Feb. 8, 1905. B. By Whom Paid in Extradition to United States. In the United States the expenses incurred in securing the extradition from foreign countries of offenders against the federal laws are borne by the government of the United States, an annual appropriation being made, "for actual expenses incurred in bringing home from foreign countries persons charged with crime." Where the offense is against the law of a state or territory the expenses are paid by the state or territory.[72]

VIII. PROPERTY FOUND ON FUGITIVE.

A provision common to extradition treaties[73] is that all articles found in the possession of the accused, whether being the proceeds of the crime charged, or material as evidence in making proof of the crime, shall so far as practicable and in conformity with law be given up when the extradition takes place. A proviso is generally inserted that the rights of third parties to such articles shall nevertheless be respected.[74] in ordinary criminal proceedings. See supra, note 9. As indicated supra, IV, G, 3, in certain cases under section 3 of the act of 1882 the costs and fees incurred in obtaining witnesses for the accused in extradition proceeding are borne by this government. Section 4 of this act requires the magistrate to certify witness' fees and costs of every nature, including his own fees, to the secretary of state, who is authorized to allow payment thereof out of the appropriation to defray the expenses of the judiciary, and to obtain reimbursement of the amount thereof from the foreign government by whom the proceedings may have been instituted.

72. In article 10 of the treaty of 1842 between the United States and Great Britain, providing that on extradition the expense of apprehension and delivery shall be borne by the "party who makes the requisition, and receives the fugitive," the word "party" refers to the contracting parties to the treaty, and has no reference to any question which may arise between the government which receives the fugitive and its officers or citizens. 74. In Great Britain.— At the hearing of an application for the extradition of a person charged with a theft committed abroad certain articles forming part of the stolen property were produced under a subpœna duces tecum by a witness who claimed the property in them under a bona fide purchase from the prisoner in England. The magistrate committed the prisoner for extradition, and gave a verbal direction that the articles produced by the witness should be detained by the police for the purposes of the prosecution abroad. On an application by such witness under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 44, § 5, for an order to the magistrate to direct the delivery up of the articles, it was held: (1) That the magistrate was functus officio the moment he made the committal for extradition; (2) that the verbal direction for the detention of the articles being given without jurisdiction, the court had no power under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 44, § 8 (which deals solely with acts relating to the duties of magistrates), to make the order asked; (3) that even if the court had power the applicant would require to establish his title to the articles; and (4) that the applicant's possessory title to the articles had been lawfully divested by their production under the subpœna duces tecum. IX. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF ACCUSED AFTER SURRENDER.

A. Criminal Prosecutions For Other Offenses — 1. IN ABSENCE OF TREATY — a. In the United States. A person who has been brought within the jurisdiction of the court by virtue of proceedings under an extradition treaty can only be tried for one of the offenses described in that treaty, and for the offense with which he is charged in the proceedings for his extradition, until a reasonable time and opportunity have been given him, after his release or trial upon such charge, to return to the country from whose asylum he has been taken.[75] The immunity from trial for any other offense than that for which extradition has been granted cannot be waived by the accused.[76]

b. In Great Britain. In Great Britain it is expressly provided by law that a person whose extradition has been granted to that government for one crime cannot be tried for another.[77]

c. In Canada. In Canada, however, in the absence of treaty stipulation preventing it, an extradited person may be tried for an offense other than that for which his surrender is granted.[78]

The treaties of the United States almost uniformly contain express provisions prohibiting the trial or punishment of an extradited criminal for any offense committed prior to his extradition other than that for which his extradition is granted.[79] Under a treaty which contained a provision

79. See supra, note 9. Several of the treaties qualify the restriction by this proviso: "Until he shall have had an opportunity of returning to the country from which he was surrendered." Some of the treaties stipulate for exemption from prosecution during a period of thirty days after final release upon the charge for which the accused was extradited. Our treaties with Chile, Denmark, Norway, Servia, Sweden, and Switzerland make prosecution and punishment for another offense dependent upon the consent of the fugitive; while our treaty with Peru requires the consent of the surrendering government. Our treaties with Belgium, Brazil, Guatemala, Luxemburg, and Mexico authorize trial and punishment for any other offense included in those treaties, upon notice with specification of the offense charged and production of documentary evidence of the charge, if required.

Charge of forgery.— Where a warrant of extradition recites that the party was accused of the crime of forgery, and had been committed for extradition thereon, without saying what forgery, resort may be had to the proceedings before the committing magistrate and his report on which the warrant issued to ascertain what and how many forgeries the extradition was intended to apply to or include. Ex p. Hibbs, 26 Fed. 421.

Charge of vol qualifie.— A commitment by a United States commissioner, and a warrant of extradition by the secretary of state, charging an individual with "having committed, within the jurisdiction of France, the crime of vol qualifie . . . one of the crimes enumerated and provided for in the treaty of

Charge of burning a "house."— Where defendant was extradited from Canada for setting fire to and burning a certain brick "house," occupied and inhabited as a retail shoe store, and was indicted for setting fire to a certain store "building" then and there occupied as a store, the objection that the crimes charged in the information and in the indictment were not the same was without merit. Misnomer.— T was received into custody from the Swedish police in Stockholm, where he was in prison, having been arrested under the name of D under which name he was extradited. X. RIGHTS OF PERSONS ILLEGALLY BROUGHT WITHIN THE JURISDICTION.

A person brought from a foreign country by force, without reference to the treaty of extradition between that country and the United States, cannot allege that irregularity to defeat his trial for an offense with which he is charged in a regular indictment in the United States.[86] Nor can a party claim immunity on the ground that he was enticed from a foreign country into the United States by stratagem.[87] For the injury done to a fugitive from justice brought back to the United States against his will and without reference to an extradition treaty, he has a remedy against the wrong-doers by a civil suit.[88]

But in the case of Moesz v. Hermann, 8 N. Y. Suppl. 667, it was held that an Austrian subject, who is arrested in New Jersey, on a warrant obtained by the Austrian consul from a United States commissioner, for embezzlement, brought to New York, given a hearing, and discharged, can be arrested in a civil action by another person against him for conversion. See also ARREST, 3 Cyc. 921 note 24.

In Great Britain.—An attachment issued by the high court of justice for disobedience of an order of the court in a civil action is not an offense within the meaning of the nineteenth section of the Extradition Act of 1870. And where a party to an action in the chancery division was arrested in Paris for a crime committed under the Extradition Act, and while in prison in England was served with an attachment for disobedience to an order in the action, it was held that the attachment was valid and that the prisoner was not entitled to his discharge until he had cleared his contempt, although he had been acquitted of the criminal charge. International Extradition, see EXTRADITION (INTERNATIONAL).

I. FOUNDATION AND NATURE OF RIGHT.

The right of a state to demand the extradition or rendition by another state of persons who have committed offenses against its laws and have thereafter fled to the other state is founded upon the constitution of the United States.[1] It is not dependent on interstate comity, curtesy, or contract.[2] As the constitution, however, applies only to fugitives from justice[3] a state may in the exercise of its reserved sovereign power provide for the surrender of persons indictable for crime in another state, but who have never fled from it.[4]

II. LEGISLATION.

A. Federal Statutes. The provisions of the constitution are general only, and congress has passed statutes which state the course of action to be pursued in taking advantage of the constitutional power.[5]

B. State Statutes. Although the United States constitution and the acts of congress are part of the law of each state[6] states may pass laws in aid of the federal statutes and not inconsistent therewith. Such acts are not unconstitutional because congress has already acted in the matter.[7]

III. EXTRADITION TO OR FROM TERRITORIES.

The constitution is silent as to extradition from territories.[8] However, there is a statutory provision[9] for the extradition of fugitives from justice to a territory as well as to a state, and this part of the statute has been declared to be constitutional.[10]

1. "A person charged in any State with Treason, Felony, or other Crime, who shall flee from Justice, and be found in another State, shall on Demand of the executive Authority of the State from which he fled, be delivered up to be removed to the State having Jurisdiction of the Crime." U. S. Const. art. 4, § 2.

IV. OFFENSES WHICH ARE GROUND FOR EXTRADITION.

The words of the constitution "treason, felony or other crime" include every offense made punishable by the law of the state in which it was committed, from the highest to the lowest in the grade of offenses,[11] including misdemeanors[12] and statutory crimes.[13] It must, however, be a definite and specific offense.[14]

V. PERSONS SUBJECT TO EXTRADITION.

A. Persons Charged With Crime. No person is subject to extradition until a criminal charge is pending against him by regular judicial proceedings in the state which demands jurisdiction of him.[15]

B. Fugitives From Justice — 1. IN GENERAL. To be a fugitive from justice, in the sense of the act of congress, it is not necessary that the person charged should have left the state in which the crime is alleged to have been committed, for the purpose of avoiding a prosecution anticipated or begun, but simply that,

Conversely a requisition may be made under U. S. Rev. St. (1874) § 5278, on a governor of a territory by a governor of a state. Ex p. Reggel, 114 U. S. 642, 5 S. Ct. 1148, 29 L. ed. 250.

District of Columbia.— A federal statute has provided for the extradition of fugitives from the District of Columbia (U. S. Rev. St. (1874) § 843 [U. S. Comp. St. (1901) p. 646]); and the chief justice of the District of Columbia has the same power to act within the District in extradition proceedings as has the governor of a state within his state (Hayes v. Palmer, 21 App. Cas. (D. C.) 450).

Indian Territory.— By act of congress passed May 2, 1890 (Indian Terr. Annot. St. (1899) p. 13, § 41), the judge of Indian Territory was given the same powers in extradition proceedings as the governor of Arkansas had in that state. This power is shared by new judges on their appointment. Ex p. Dickson, (Indian Terr. 1902) 69 S. W. 943.

Indian tribes.— An Indian tribe is not a territory within the meaning of the statute, and the chief of such a tribe may not authorize or demand the extradition of a fugitive from justice. Ex p. Morgan, 20 Fed. 298.

having within a state committed a crime against its laws, when he is sought to be subjected to its criminal process to answer for his offense, he has left its jurisdiction, and is found within the territory of another state.[16] Thus he is a fugitive, although he left the state on legitimate business[17] or was returning to his home in another state.[18] If the accused was only "constructively" in a state, committing a crime against it, although not personally within its borders, he has not fled from it and is not a fugitive from justice.[19] The fact that since the date of the alleged crime he has been in the state and then left it does not make him a fugitive.[20] But if a crime consists of several acts or parts, and the accused commits within the state any one of them but departs before the happening of other acts authorized or contemplated by him, he is a fugitive from the justice of that a crime is prima facie proof of charge of crime. Tullis v. Fleming, supra.

It seems to be the law of Massachusetts that consciousness of guilt may be a necessary element in proving the accused to be a fugitive. "The material point is the nature of the crime alleged to have been committed. The theory that a person is a fugitive if he commits a crime in one state and is found in another is true when the crime charged is a crime known to the entire world, as murder and the vast majority of crimes. The theory that conscious fleeing from the justice of a state may be an essential element to constitute one a fugitive is true of a certain class of crimes known to a single locality (not general, or even usual)." We think the plain meaning of the act requires such presence, and that it was not intended to include, as a fugitive from the justice of a State, one who had not been in the State at the time when, if ever, the offence was committed, and who had not, therefore in fact, fled therefrom."

state.[21] A convicted prisoner who escapes is a fugitive from justice,[22] even though out of prison on parole.[23]

2. PROOF OF FLIGHT.[24] That the accused is a fugitive from justice is a fact of which the governor who receives a requisition must satisfy himself by evidence.[25] It should be shown by competent evidence making a prima facie case.[26] A statement in the affidavit annexed to the requisition that the accused is a fugitive is sufficient prima facie evidence,[27] but if this statement is rebutted there must be sufficient supplementary evidence to overcome the evidence introduced by the defense.[28]

VI. AUTHORITY TO DEMAND EXTRADITION OF A FUGITIVE.

The authority to demand the extradition of fugitives from justice is vested in the governor or chief executive of the state from which the accused has fled.[29]

25. The accused is entitled to insist upon proof that he was within the demanding state at the time he was alleged to have committed the crime charged and subsequently withdrew, so that he could not be reached by her criminal process. Upon the executive rests the responsibility in some legal mode to determine whether he is a fugitive. Ex p. Reggel, 114 U. S. 642, 5 S. Ct. 1148, 29 L. ed. 250. By N. H. Pub. St. (1901) c. 263, §§ 7, 8, the governor must be satisfied by proof before issuing the warrant. Evidence before him need not be legal evidence. State v. Clough, 72 N. H. 178, 55 Atl. 554, 67 L. R. A. 946.

The issuance of his warrant is sufficient evidence that the governor is satisfied that the accused is in fact a fugitive. Katyuga v. Cosgrove, 67 N. J. L. 213, 50 Atl. 679.

C. 74, the court said that an allegation of flight need not be a part of the affidavit if the fact of flight sufficiently appeared from the other papers in the case. To the same effect see Hibler v. State, 43 Tex. 197; In re Leary, 15 Fed. Cas. No. 8,162, 10 Ben. 179. But in Hartman v. Aveline, 63 Ind. 344, 30 Am. Rep. 217, it was said that there must be some better foundation for arrest than recitals in the governor's requisition. Flight is commonly shown by an affidavit.

Weight of evidence.— That the alleged crimes were committed six years previous to the requisition is not necessarily sufficient evidence to rebut a prima facie case contained in the affidavit that accused is a fugitive. State v. Clough, 71 N. H. 594, 53 Atl. 1036, 67 L. R. A. 946.

VII. REQUISITION.

A. Form.[30] To procure the extradition of a criminal the chief executive of the state from which the accused has fled must send a written demand to the chief executive of the state where the criminal is alleged to be, demanding him as a fugitive from justice.[31] This demand or requisition must show on its face that the accused was in the demanding state at the time when the offense charged was committed[32] and that prosecution has been begun in the demanding state before some court or magistrate.[33]

B. Necessity of Indictment or Affidavit. The requisition must be accompanied by a copy of an indictment found or an affidavit made before a magistrate charging the person demanded with having committed a crime, which shall be duly certified by the governor or chief magistrate of the state or territory from which the person has fled.[34] A requisition unaccompanied by such a paper is no justification for the arrest of a fugitive.[35] Whether a complaint or an information is an affidavit within the meaning of the statute, the courts of different states do not agree.[36]

C. Sufficiency of Indictment or Affidavit — 1. INDICTMENT.[37] The indictment, a copy of which accompanies the requisition must set out the substance of a crime against the law of the demanding state.[38] If it states clearly the facts which constitute the crime the requisition does not become invalid because the indictment has technical faults which could be taken advantage of on a trial for the crime.[39] If a crime is apparently set out in the indictment, it need not be

39. An indictment is sufficient for extradition purposes, although there are objections not apparent on its face which could be shown by evidence at a trial (Roberts v. Reilly, 116 U. S. 80, 6 S. Ct. 291, 29 L. ed. 544); although it is faulty in criminal pleading as not accurately setting out the time of accompanied by the statutes of the demanding state, the presumption being that the acts charged constitute an offense against the laws of the demanding state.[40]

2. AFFIDAVIT. The affidavit must set out the alleged crime with sufficient explicitness to apprise the governor who receives it of the facts which constitute the offense.[41] It is not insufficient, however, merely because it is defective in form[42] or has not the technical exactness of an indictment.[43] It must be a statement of facts, the existence of which is sworn to; a statement "on information" or "on belief" is insufficient to support a requisition.[44] The offense alleged must be a crime by the law of the demanding state, not necessarily of the state to which the fugitive has fled.[45] An affidavit must show on its face that it was taken before a magistrate who is authorized to issue process for arresting persons charged with crime,[46] and also that the person demanded is a fugitive from justice.[47] It is not necessary to forward the original affidavit with the requisition; a copy is sufficient.[48]

VIII. POWERS AND DUTIES OF EXECUTIVE TO WHOM REQUISITION IS ADDRESSED.

Necessity of authentication.— The evidence to be produced that the party demanded is charged with crime and the mode of proof is particularly prescribed and limited by the act. It must be by copy of an indictment or affidavit certified by the governor of the state making the demand as authentic. Under the statute clearly no other evidence is sufficient or can be received by the governor on whom the demand is made as sufficient in proof of fact that such indictment or affidavit exists as the basis of the charge of crime. No other authentication is necessary. In re Leary, 15 Fed. Cas. No. 8,162, 10 Ben. 197.

Governor's authority exclusive.— A fugitive may not be arrested and delivered up by private persons. Botts v. Williams, 17 B. Mon. (Ky.) 687. The warrant is properly issued by the governor alone without the consent of the council. Com. v. Hall, 9 Gray (Mass.) 262, 69 Am. Dec. 285. His authority is one which cannot be delegated (In re Payne, 7 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 288, 2 Cinc. L. Bul. 76; In re Tod, 12 S. D. 386, 81 N. W. 637, 76 Am. St. Rep. 616, 47 L. R. A. 566), although a warrant is not invalid because the governor signs it in blank and it is filled out by his secretary (Ex p. Camp, 8 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 681, 7 Ohio N. P. 614).

By statute in Ohio the court is given the power of examination of the requisition. Its due form the governor has no authority to determine whether the charge is well founded.[54] His authority to act is derived from the constitution and laws of the United States and is not dependent on the existence of any state statute,[55] and as it is to the requisition a governor looks for authority to issue his warrant[56] no copy of the laws of the demanding state need be submitted to him to prove that the requisition is properly founded.[57] The duty to issue his warrant, however, is a moral one and there is no force which can compel him to do so.[58] As his duty is absolute, he may not, because of facts which do not appear on the face of the requisition, use his discretion whether to obey it or not.[59] If the requisition appears on its face to be defective, an executive has no authority to cause the arrest of the accused.[60] If a prisoner escapes from arrest before being taken from the state, the governor may issue a second warrant without waiting for a new requisition.[61]

IX. WARRANT FOR ARREST.

A. Requisites and Sufficiency — 1. In General. The warrant of the executive who surrenders a fugitive must show that the requirements of the laws have been complied with, viz., that the person to be surrendered has been charged with crime and is demanded as a fugitive from justice, and that the requisition was accompanied by a copy of an indictment or of an affidavit made before a magistrate and certified to be authentic.[62]

2. That Accused Is Charged With Crime. A warrant need not show on its face that the act charged as a crime in the requisition is in fact a crime by the law or jurisdiction is limited to the duties which the executive ordinarily has. Ex p. Van Vleck, 6 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 636, 3 Cinc. L. Bul. 763, 7 Am. L. Rec. 275, although the papers examined by the court need not be the originals sent to the governor.

Presence of accused.— Accused has no right to be heard before the governor in his determination in the first instance whether he is a fugitive. State v. Clough, 72 N. H. 178, 55 Atl. 554, 67 L. R. A. 946.

59. When a requisition comes to the governor which shows on its face that all requirements of the acts of congress have been complied with, it is the duty of the proper authorities of this state to recognize the statements of fact made therein as true, and to surrender to the agent of the state making the demand the person demanded, in the fullest confidence that he will receive ample justice at the hands of the authorities of such state. Ex p. Swearingen, 13 S. Thus if the requisition and accompanying papers are good on their face the governor cannot refuse to issue his warrant because of defects in the indictment of which the accused might take advantage at a trial. People v. Byrnes, 33 Hun (N. Y.) 98.

State statutes authorizing a governor to use his discretion in issuing a warrant have been held to be constitutional. Kimpton Case [cited in Moore Extrad. 993]; In re Perry, 2 Cr. L. Mag. 84.

In Ohio evidence is admissible in habeas corpus to show that the requisition, although on its face valid, was issued in order that jurisdiction of the accused may be obtained for illegal purposes, and there is then no duty to extradite him. In re Hampton, 2 Ohio S. & C. It is only necessary as a condition precedent to the issuing of the warrant to establish two propositions, first that the appellant was substantially charged with crime, second statntes of the demanding state.[63] But it must specify the offense alleged to have been committed by the accused.[64]

3. That Accused Is a Fugitive From Justice.[65] Although it was once apparently required that the warrant show that in the opinion of the executive issuing it the accused was a fugitive from justice,[66] it is now generally settled that it need show only that the accused is demanded as a fugitive.[67]

4. That Copies of Indictment or Requisition Accompany It. If a warrant shows on its face that a copy of an indictment or of an affidavit accompanied the requisition, the copy need not be set out in the warrant.[68] Analogously the facts on which the indictment was based need not be set out in the warrant.[69] So if it appears that an affidavit did accompany the requisition it need not set out the form of the affidavit,[70] but it must appear to be a true affidavit and not a mere complaint.[71] There is moreover no method of forcing an executive to produce for the benefit of the accused the papers which accompanied the requisition if he does not desire so to do.[72]

5. Language of Warrant. There is no form fixed or language prescribed for the warrant issued by the executive for the arrest of a fugitive,[73] and the warrant will not be invalid because it has technical faults which do not materially affect its clearness or purport.[74]

6. Issuance of Warrant. The statute does not name the officer to whom the warrant shall be directed. This is left to the discretion of the governor issuing it.[75]

B. Conclusiveness of Warrant For Arrest. The executive who issues a warrant for the arrest of a fugitive must have passed upon two questions: (1) Is the accused charged with crime in the demanding state; and (2) is he a fugitive from justice from the demanding state.[76] Whether he is "charged with crime" is a question of law and the opinion of the executive may be reviewed by the court under a writ of habeas corpus.[77] In such a proceeding the court may examine the affidavit or indictment on which the charge is based.[78] Whether he is a "fugitive from justice" is a question of fact upon which the opinion of the governor expressed in the warrant itself is prima facie evidence; which, however, may be rebutted under a writ of habeas corpus by admissions or other conclusive evidence.[79] A statute, however, may provide that the governor's decision shall be final,[80] in which case the warrant issued by him will constitute conclusive evidence of the right to arrest and remove the fugitive to the state from which he fled.

C. Revocation of Warrant For Arrest. If a warrant has been issued in a case in which it should not have been issued, the governor may revoke it whether it was issued by himself or his predecessor.[81]

X. EXTRADITION OF PERSONS ALREADY IN CUSTODY IN THE STATE TO WHICH THEY HAVE FLED.

A. On Criminal Charge. If at the time of the demand the accused is held on a criminal charge in the state where he is a fugitive, he need not be surrendered until after the judgment of that state is satisfied.[82] But the executive of that state may waive its jurisdiction and relinquish the prisoner.[83] Even if custody of the prisoner has been obtained by requisition he may be extradited to another state on the receipt of a requisition from that state.[84]

B. On Civil Charge. That the accused is already in custody on a civil charge in the state to which he has fled is no excuse for a refusal by the executive of that state to comply with the requisition of the governor of another state.[85]

XI. DETENTION OF FUGITIVES PENDING DEMAND FOR EXTRADITION.

might reasonably arrive.[87] If the fugitive happens to be an escaping felon he may be arrested by a private citizen without a warrant and afterward detained by order of court.[88] This right of detention is now generally dealt with by statute.[89] Although bail may not be given for a prisoner held under a requisition, a statute may provide for bail of the accused pending the arrival of a requisition.[90]

XII. BAIL.[91]

A person who is arrested as a fugitive from justice on the warrant of the executive must be securely held. He is therefore not entitled to bail.[92] If while on bail for another offense he is given up on extradition proceedings to the agent of another state his bail is discharged,[93] but if while on bail for a crime he goes to another state and is there arrested on extradition proceedings from a third state his bail is forfeited.[94]

XIV. AGENTS TO RECEIVE PERSONS SURRENDERED.

The United States statute infers that the agent to receive a fugitive should be appointed by the governor of the demanding state,[98] and in practice he is so appointed. Although his authority is derived from the laws of the United States, he is an officer of the state whose governor appoints him.[99] Thus the right by which he holds a fugitive may be inquired into by a state court.[1] But he is subject to federal courts if he exceeds the authority given him by United States statutes.[2] His duty is to conduct the fugitive to the governor of the demanding state, and if he does this without unreasonable delay he is not liable to an action for false imprisonment,[3] even if his feelings toward the prisoner are in fact malicious.[4]

XV. COSTS AND EXPENSES.[5]

All costs incurred in apprehending, securing, and transmitting a fugitive by the terms of the statute must be paid by the demanding state.[6]

XVI. IMMUNITY OF PERSONS SURRENDERED FROM PROSECUTION FOR ANOTHER OFFENSE.

Although there has long been a conflict in the decisions of courts of the several states, it is now generally accepted that a fugitive from justice, surrendered by one state upon the demand of another, is not protected from prosecution for offenses other than that for which he was surrendered but may be tried for any crimes committed in the demanding state either before or after extradition.[7]

Therefore, although he be tried for a different offense against his objection, no right, privilege, or immunity secured to him by the laws and constitution of the United States is thereby denied.[8] But in those states which will not permit a fugitive to be held on civil process when jurisdiction of his person is gained through extradition proceedings, the offense for which he is held must be an indictable one.[9] If a fugitive is surrendered, tried, and convicted, he may be extradited to a third state without an opportunity to leave after serving his sentence.[10]

service in a civil suit obtained by the surrender of the fugitive was void.[12] If the requisition was issued in order to obtain jurisdiction of the accused in a civil suit process procured by the fraud would be void.[13] Of course, if it were known before his surrender that the requisition was issued in order to subject him to a civil suit, the governor who received it would have no authority to issue a warrant for his arrest.[14]

XVIII. RIGHTS OF PERSONS ILLEGALLY BROUGHT INTO JURISDICTION.

It is not a cause for exemption from prosecution for a crime that the accused was illegally arrested in another state and unlawfully brought within the jurisdiction of the state against which he offended.[15] He is not protected from prosecution even if he is kidnapped in the other state and brought into the state without a semblance of right.[16] It follows therefore that he is not wronged by being subjected to its jurisdiction, although the requisition proceedings were not strictly legal.[17] As the state to which a person has been illegally brought may hold him to answer for his offenses against it, it may arrest and surrender him on extradition proceedings to answer for his offenses against another state.[18] The state from which he was wrongfully taken has no redress except to demand the extradition of the abductors that they in turn may be prosecuted by it.[19]

XIX. EXAMINATION AND REVIEW OF PROCEEDINGS BY COURTS.

A. In General — 1. Federal Courts. A fugitive arrested on extradition proceedings is held under authority derived from the constitution and laws of the United States. He is therefore entitled by a writ of habeas corpus to demand the judgment of the United States courts on the lawfulness of his arrest and imprisonment.[20] The court should be clearly satisfied that an error has been committed by the executive who has caused the fugitive's arrest before setting his act aside,[21] exercising its power to interfere with the utmost caution and only in cases of emergency.[22] A court has no jurisdiction to pass upon the question whether the accused is guilty of the crime of which he is charged, or go into disputed questions of fact.[23] The court may not consider therefore whether the statute under which he is indicted in the demanding state is constitutional.[24]

Effect of judgment of state court.— He is not deprived of its protection even if a state court has acted on this federal ques-

2. State Courts. Although a fugitive is restrained under authority derived from the constitution of the United States, he is not in the custody of or under restraint by an officer of the United States and therefore state courts have concurrent jurisdiction with federal courts to determine by writ of habeas corpus the validity of his imprisonment.[25] State courts have repeatedly declared that they have this concurrent jurisdiction.[26] Some states have by statute delegated the duties of the executive in determining the validity of a requisition to the state courts,[27] and in such a case that state court may not consider the guilt or innocence of the accused.[28] State courts like federal courts, although they may look into the papers before the governor and determine whether upon their face a crime was charged, cannot go further and determine the question of the accused's guilt.[29]

I. FACTORS.*

A. General Nature of Agency — 1. DEFINITION. A factor is generally defined to be an agent who as a business sells goods or merchandise consigned and delivered to him by or for his principal for a compensation commonly called factorage or commission.[1]

See 23 Cent. Dig. tit. "Factors," § 1.

As defined by statute "a factor is an agent who, in the pursuit of an independent calling, is employed by another to sell property for him, and is vested by the latter with the possession or control of the property, or authorized to receive payment therefor from the purchaser." Cal. Civ. Code, § 2026 [cited in Lehmann v. Schmidt, (Cal. 1889) 22 Pac. 973, 24 Pac. 120].

2. Possession of Goods. A factor must be in actual or constructive possession of the property which he sells for his principal.[2]

3. Fiduciary Relation. The usual rule that an agent cannot make a profit out of his position applies of course to a factor who is entitled only to his commission and must strictly account to his principal for all profits made.[3] He cannot place himself in any position which is antagonistic to his relation as agent for his principal.[4]

4. Distinguished From Broker. The features which mainly distinguish a factor from a broker are: The former is intrusted with the possession, disposal, and control of the property and may sell it in his own name and bind the principal; the broker usually does not have possession, disposal, and control, and should sell in the name of his principal.[5] The broker is strictly speaking a middleman or intermediate negotiator between the parties,[6] and is not in the fiduciary relation of an agent to his principal, but must favor neither the one nor the other of the parties between whom he effects a transaction.[7]

A commission merchant, within the meaning of the revenue law, has been defined to be: "One who buys and sells on commission, and may sell any personal property which is left with or consigned to him for sale, except such as is expressly excepted by the act." White v. Com., 78 Va. 484, 485. The mere agent to sell the goods of others for a commission. Alabama Fertilizer Co. v. Reynolds, 79 Ala. 497, 502.

An agent employed to sell or to purchase and sell personal property intrusted to his possession for commission is a factor. Beardsley v. Schmidt, 120 Wis. 405, 98 N. W. 235 [citing Reinhard Agen. § 449].

to engage in the business of factor or commission merchant are often required to obtain a license for conducting such a business.[10] Statutes which require merchants who sell farm produce upon commission to obtain a license and execute a bond for the faithful performance of their contract are held constitutional in some states,[11] but in others such a provision is held unconstitutional as an unjustifiable interference with the right of citizens to carry on a legitimate business.[12] Statutory regulations of the duties of a factor which impose upon him penalties for failure to comply with the regulations provided for are subject to the usual rule of strict construction.[13] A statute declaring any commission merchant who fails on demand to deliver to the consignor the proceeds of a sale of goods guilty of misdemeanor makes an actual demand for the proceeds a necessary prerequisite to a conviction.[14] Under a statute which provides a penalty for the embezzlement of proceeds of a sale of merchandise by consignees and factors, horses are merchandise, and the factor who embezzles the proceeds of the sale of a horse is subject to the prescribed penalty.[15]

C. Revocation or Termination of Agency — 1. In General. In the absence of any time fixed for the continuation of the factor's employment it may be terminated at any time,[16] and the principal may repossess himself of the goods at any time before sale on payment of his indebtedness to the factor.[17] In case of an agreement as to the continuation of employment, a default in his obligations by the factor may of course release the principal.[18]

2. By Death of Either Party or by Insolvency of Factor.[19] The factor's power of sale to reimburse himself for advances made or expenses incurred is not revoked by the death of the principal.[20] But the death of the factor necessarily Arbitrary discrimination.—A statute which requires commission merchants in cities of population of a certain size to be licensed is not unconstitutional as an arbitrary discrimination, because it excepts from its operation dealers of grain, live stock, and dressed meats where other laws sufficiently provide for the inspection of grain, live stock, and dressed meats. Lasher v. People, 183 Ill. 226, 55 N. E. 663, 75 Am. St. Rep. 103, 47 L. R. A. 802.

When license unnecessary.— Such a statute does not render it necessary for one who may gratuitously assume the duties of a commission merchant or who may in one or more instances incidentally discharge such duties to obtain a license; it is only the person who intends to engage in the business of a factor or commission merchant as a source of profit who is subject to the statute. Conviction as prerequisite to recovery of penalty.— Under a statute which provides that a factor who fails on demand to pay to his principal the proceeds of a sale shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and be liable to double the value of the property sold, a factor is not liable for the double value until he has been convicted. 16. Outerbridge v. Campbell, 87 N. Y. App. Div. 597, 84 N. Y. Suppl. 537.

What does not amount to revocation.— A delivery of goods to a factor who has advanced money on them on a contract that they should be consigned to him for sale is not revoked by the fact that the consignor pays the charges of forwarding. Brown v. Wiggin, 16 N. H. 312.

17. Gragard v. Metropolitan Bank, 106 La. 298, 30 So. 885; Pam v. Vilmar, 54 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 235.

If the withdrawal from the factor of his power to sell was made before he took any steps to execute the power or acquire any interest in the goods, before he incurred any expense or liability, and before the possession of the goods was transferred to him, he is not entitled to commissions. Roberts v. Andrews, 15 Pa. Super. Ct. 311.

terminates the agency, and payment for goods sold previous to death cannot be received by his administrator.[21] The insolvency of the factor terminates his authority over goods consigned to him,[22] and the property remaining in his hands and the proceeds of such as has been sold are, with the exception of the value of the factor's lien which he may have, the property of the consignor and subject to his order.[23]

D. Powers and Authority, and Duties and Liabilities to Principal — 1. General Rules. Emergencies may arise in which a factor may from the necessities of the case be justified in assuming extraordinary powers and his acts fairly done under such circumstances bind the principal.[24] A factor after completing a sale cannot bind his principal by submitting to arbitration the claim for damages for a breach of implied warranty of the property sold.[25] It has been held that consignors are bound by stipulations made by their factors that perishable goods would keep good and marketable during a certain period of time.[26] Factors may transact their business in accordance with definite and notorious usages of trade unless the usages or customs be in contravention of a rule at law.[27] A factor must if he accept a consignment comply with the conditions imposed by the consignor.[28] If the factor has notice that the principal has drawn on him in anticipation of the avails of the consignment the factor becomes bound by accepting the consignment to pay the bill and in case of non-payment he is bound to refund to the drawer the damages and costs which he may have been compelled to pay by reason of his bill having been protested.[29] If factors are employed to sell goods in a foreign market they are not liable to the principal for the negligence and delay of the carrier, provided they exercise reasonable skill and ordinary diligence in selecting the carrier and attending to the shipping of the goods.[30] A factor employed by the general agent of a corporation to sell the goods manufactured and to purchase stock has power to buy on credit, but not to give the note of the corporation.[31]

2. Skill and Care Required. A factor is held only to reasonable care and diligence in his employment;[32] that is, the same degree of care and diligence which a prudent man would exercise in the management of his own business.[33] If he fails to employ this degree of care and diligence he may be held liable in damages.[34] Thus a factor will be liable if he does not employ faithful and diligent efforts to ascertain and procure the highest market value of the property consigned;[35] but if he be diligent, a mistake in judgment made in good faith will not render him liable.[36]

3. Following Instructions. If a consignee accept a consignment, he accepts on the terms prescribed by the shipper and cannot after acceptance refuse a compliance with the orders which accompanied it;[37] and if he disobeys the instructions of his principal he is liable for the loss which accrues from his acts.[38] Not only must he obey orders but he must strictly adhere to his orders and generally must at his peril pursue them literally.[39] If he follows instructions any loss which may occur falls on the principal.[40] A factor, however, is bound to obey only such instructions as are definite.[41] Whether a factor has followed instructions is a question for the jury.[42]

4. Delegation of Authority. A factor's power and authority are subject to the maxim potestas delegata non delegari potest.[43] At least a factor cannot delegate his authority or employment beyond the usual course of business.[44] If a factor attempts to delegate his employment to another, he cannot raise any privity between that other and his principal.[45] If a factor employs a subagent without the authority of his principal, the factor is responsible for the subagent.[46]

5. RIGHTS IN AND TITLE TO GOODS. A factor's right in goods consigned to him is a limited one. It is sometimes called a special property and is never regarded as a general ownership.[47] He acquires no right of property whatever until the delivery thereof or of the bill of lading therefor.[48] It is sometimes difficult to determine whether the transaction has been a sale or a mere consignment.[49] If it appears that the depositor of the goods reserves a right to take them back, the transaction is considered a consignment and the consignee a factor;[50] but if there is no right reserved by the depositor to take back the goods the transaction is a sale.[51] If a consignee is at liberty according to the contract between him and the consignor to sell at any price he likes and to receive payment at any time he likes, but is to be bound if he sells the goods to pay the consignor for them at a fixed price and at a fixed time, the transaction is a contract of purchase for the consigned goods to his consignor for sale. Cameron v. Crouse, 11 N. Y. App. Div. 391, 42 N. Y. Suppl. 58. See also Terry v. Bamberger, 23 Fed. Cas. No. 13,837, 14 Blatchf. 244, 44 Conn. 558.

His rights are those of a bailee and his possession constitutes an exception to the rule that a necessary element of the contract of bailment is that the bailee is under obligation to restore the specific things deposited; for, although the factor in performing his duties to his principal may and usually does pay over the price for which he has sold the goods in his keeping instead of returning the goods themselves, the transaction is not one of sale to the factor. purpose of reselling, and the relation of principal and factor does not exist.[52] The fact that goods are consigned for sale with the provision that the factor may retain on a sale of the property all the money in excess of the invoice price does not destroy the relation of factor and principal and render the transaction a conditional sale.[53] A person to whom property is consigned for sale is none the less a factor because he bestows labor upon it before it is ready for sale, although the character of the property is thereby entirely changed.[54] Where there is no question as to whether the goods have been sold to the consignee, but an ordinary consignment for sale is admitted, the consignor ordinarily does not part with his title by the consignment; he continues to be the true owner until the goods are sold by the consignee,[55] and the rule is the same whether the consignee is a del credere factor,[56] is under advances for the principal,[57] or is simply an agent for sale.[58] If in pursuance of an agreement goods are shipped to a factor in satisfaction of antecedent advances and are thus set apart and specifically appropriated

But see Hall v. Hinks, 21 Md. 406, where it was held that consignees who bona fide advance money on the credit of consignments made to them by bills of lading acquire an interest in the property, and are purchasers for value; there being, however, no evidence that the consignees were factors.

for this particular purpose the title to the goods vests in the factor upon the receiving thereof by the carrier.[59] The fact that the consignor retains the bill of lading or takes it in his own name does not prevent the title from vesting in the consignee;[60] but it must appear that the delivery to the carrier was made with the intent to transfer the property.[61]

6. Care and Custody of Goods.[62] A factor is required to exercise only ordinary care of the goods which have been consigned to him,[63] ordinary care being due diligence under the circumstances of the case;[64] that is, such care as a reasonably prudent man would take of his own property in a similar situation.[65] He is not liable if the goods are taken from his possession by a vis major.[66] A factor is at liberty to incur all such expenses for the benefit of the goods as a prudent man would find necessary in the discreet management of his own affairs.[67] He may follow the usage or custom of trade in his care of the goods consigned unless instructed to the contrary.[68] The custom, however, must be a reasonable one,[69] must have the quality of certainty,[70] and must be consistent with the law.[71] He is bound to follow the instructions of his principal as to the place to which the goods are to be shipped.[72] If with due diligence he is unable to ship the goods to the place designated by his principal, it is his duty to retain them, and, in case the consignor should fail at a reasonable time after request to pay advances, the factor may sell the goods.[73]

7. Insurance of Goods. It is not the duty of a factor to insure the goods of his principal unless instructed so to do, unless a usage of trade makes it his duty so to do,[74] unless some understanding exists between the principal and the factor that the goods in question shall be insured,[75] or unless it is a custom of the factor himself to insure, which custom is brought to the notice of the principal.[76] If a factor is instructed to insure[77] or if he has agreed to insure as a part of his contract as agent,[78] he will be liable for any loss for failure to carry out the instructions or agreement. An agreement to insure is presumed to mean full insurance[79] — at least in the absence of evidence of what the custom of merchants is in such cases and in the absence of any showing that there is a difficulty in obtaining full insurance.[80] A factor who has on his own responsibility effected insurance on goods may be held liable for the amount of insurance effected,[81] or in some instances as himself the insurer of the property.[82]

character as factor.[85] The rule appears to rest on the doctrine of special agency.[86] To pledge the goods of the principal is beyond the scope of the factor's power, and every attempt to do it under color of the sale is tortious and void.[87] The rule does not allow him to pledge by the indorsement and delivery of the bill of lading[88] or other symbol of title[89] any more than by the delivery of the goods themselves. Although a factor cannot pledge the goods of his principal as his own, yet he may deliver them to a third person as security with notice of his lien and as his agent to keep possession for him in order to preserve the lien.[90] Thus where he has made advances he may pledge the goods to the amount of the advances for his own use.[91] So too it has been held that a factor may pledge

9. As to Sale of Goods — a. General Rules. If a factor neglects to give his principal the necessary information concerning a sale to enable the principal to protect himself when the sale was not consummated the factor is liable to account to the principal at the price for which the sale was made.[93] A factor cannot sell or transfer his principal's goods in discharge of his own debt or obligation; such an act confers no title on the transferee.[94] If no advances have been made or liabilities incurred by the consignee the consignor has an undoubted right to direct and control the sale;[95] but if one consigns goods to a person whose sole business is to sell goods of that nature, the presumption is that the consignment was made for sale, no instructions having been given; and if the goods are sold in good faith and the proceeds remitted to the sender and apparent owner the consignee has performed his duty in the premises.[96] A factor who has effected a sale and delivered the goods and remitted the proceeds to his principal has no power to rescind the contract of sale.[97] A factor is not responsible to his principal by reason of the established grades of grain being different in the market where he is to sell from the grades at other places.[98]

b. Effect of Instructions by Principal. A factor who has made no advances on the goods or incurred no liability therefor is bound to follow the instructions of his principal as to their sale or he will be liable for any resulting loss.[99] Thus it has been properly held that the factor is liable for not following the instructions of his principal as to the terms of the sale[1] and as to the time of making the

Where goods are consigned, in pursuance of a previous understanding, to be sold on joint speculation, the consignee is not bound by the directions of the consignor as to the sale.[2] Neither a custom of the trade[3] nor the intention of benefiting his principal by violating the instructions[4] is a good defense. But if it is impossible for the factor to follow instructions it is no defense to his action to recover excess advances that he had violated instructions.[5] Where instructions as to a sale have been many and conflicting it is a question for the jury whether the sale made was against orders or not.[6]

c. Effect of Advances. Although the general rule is that a factor is bound by the instructions of his principal, yet it is held by a line of authorities under the leadership of Justice Story[7] that a factor who has made advances on the credit of goods consigned to him for sale has the right to sell enough of the goods to reimburse himself for his advances, unless restrained by some agreement with the consignor;[8] and that after the advancements are made the factor is not bound to obey the subsequent instructions of his principal as to the sale of the goods; his right of sale is not suspended by any subsequent order of his principal,[9] except as to the surplus not necessary to reimbursement.[10] Of course if the factor is under agreement not to sell,[11] or if at the time of the consignment certain instructions are given before any advances are made, which instructions are expressly or impliedly assented to by the factor,[12] he will be liable for violating the agreement or disobeying the instructions in case any loss results; and as in other cases an existence of a usage to sell to pay advances will not control an express contract between the parties as to the sale of the goods.[13] Other authorities do not give a factor who has made advances such an unqualified power of sale, but hold that he cannot sell the goods of his principal contrary to instructions, unless the principal after reasonable notice fails to repay the advances.[14] If the principal refuses or neglects to comply with the factor's demands to repay or secure him for the advances the factor may, after a reasonable notice to his principal, sell enough of the property of his principal to reimburse himself, although he thereby violates the instructions of his principal.[15] In some jurisdictions, which may or may not recognize the unqualified rule that

Right to notice affected by contract.— A consignee advanced money under an agreement that if the consignor failed to pay him a stipulated sum in case of a decline in the price of the goods he should be at liberty to sell the goods "at public or private sale or otherwise." It was held that this was more than a mere pledge; that the consignor having failed to comply with his stipulation could not require notice of the time and place of sale; and that the consignee must give notice of the decline in price and demand the deposit of the margin, but such demand might be made of the consignor's clerk, who in fact negotiated the consignment. Thus if the goods have been consigned to be sold at a certain limited price and the consignor has failed to indemnify the factor after a reasonable notice, the factor may, in the exercise of a sound discretion, sell so much of the consignment as is necessary for his protection at the current rates, even though that rate be lower than the rate previously fixed by the principal. a factor may sell to reimburse himself for his advances, it is held that he cannot refuse to obey the instructions of his principal to sell, that his having advanced money on the goods does not give him a discretion to hold them off the market.[16] In other courts it has been said that a factor should follow the instructions of his principal to sell as soon as the goods may be made to realize sufficient to reimburse him.[17] The fact that a factor has been garnished does not deprive him of his right of selling to reimburse himself for advances; the creditor is by the process only subrogated to the rights of the debtor.[18]

d. Place, Time, and Manner of Sale. Neither under the common law[19] nor under the factors acts[20] can a factor barter his principal's goods for other goods. By the general rule a principal who ships goods to a particular place is held as intending that the sale of the goods are to be conducted by his factor according to the general usages and customs of the place.[21] If a factor be authorized to direct the destination of the goods with a view to the best market, he must make all necessary inquiries to find the best market;[22] but if the consignment be general he is not bound to look for any other market than that to which the goods are consigned;[23] indeed it is held positively that under a general consignment he cannot ship goods to another market,[24] and if he does so he will be liable for the loss incurred from selling at a less price than he could have obtained in the market where he had authority to sell.[25] A factor under general instructions is liable for ordinary diligence as to the time and manner of the sale of the goods.[26] If no

Dunbar v. Gregg, 44 Ill. App. 527.

Loss by fire.— Where a price is agreed upon for certain cotton, which is neither weighed nor delivered on Saturday, the day of the sale, and on the night of Tuesday the cotton is consumed by fire without any other fault or neglect of factor but the alleged fault of failing to deliver, he is not liable to the con-

time within which the goods should be sold is stipulated between the parties, the law implies that they should be sold within a reasonable time,[27] and if the factor fails so to do he is liable for any loss that occurs as a direct result of his conduct.[28] A person who has not possession of the goods of another cannot, as factor, bind that other as principal by a contract providing for the delivery of a certain amount of goods within a certain time at an agreed price, for a factor can sell only property in his possession or under his control.[29] Under the factors acts a contract of sale by a factor intrusted with goods for the purpose of sale is valid, although no money or obligation is given at the time of the contract, if an obligation is sufficiently entered into on the faith of the contract at any time while it remains unrescinded.[30]

e. Price. If goods are consigned without any instructions[31] as to the prices to be obtained, the factor may sell them whenever, in the exercise of a sound discretion, he deems it best to sell.[32] Under such circumstances it is his duty to sell for the highest price obtainable and to use reasonable and diligent efforts to that end.[33] He is, however, liable only for ordinary care and diligence in obtaining a price for the goods.[34] He is not bound to anticipate an extraordinary rise in the price of the article which might subsequently occur.[35] The instructions of his principal as to the price to be obtained for the goods consigned is binding on the factor and if he sells for less than the price limited he will be liable for the loss,[36] especially where he has made no advances.[37] But if the consignor directs his goods to be sold at a price which will pay advances, freight, and commissions and the factor sells for less than that amount, the consignor has no right of action against his factor, for he has sustained no loss by the violation of his instructions.[38] The true meaning of the principal's instructions or of the correspondence between the parties is often a matter of dispute.[39]

f. Giving Credit — (1) In General. By the general rule[40] a factor without special instructions to sell for cash and not on credit may sell on credit according to the general usage of the trade in the market where the goods are sold; and if he sells in conformity with the usage and uses due diligence to ascertain the solvency of the purchaser he is not responsible if the purchaser subsequently becomes insolvent.[41] If therefore a factor sells goods on credit and has exercised due prudence both in making the sale and in attempting to collect the money due for the goods, he is not responsible to his principal until the money is actually received.[42] Although a factor is not a guarantor of the responsibility of persons with whom he deals, he must exercise all reasonable diligence to ascertain quently sold for very much less than the price obtained by the factor.

Y.) 121 (holding that where goods are consigned not to be sold for less than the price obtained for goods made by a third person at the proper time for selling them, the fair meaning of the language employed is that the market price of the third person's goods is to be the minimum price of the consignor); Dusar v. Perit, 4 Binn. (Pa.) 361 (holding that where a factor was instructed to sell a vessel only at a certain sum, free from all charges whatsoever, the charges referred to must be considered as belonging to the voyage rather than the ship, and that the factor was not required to sell free from all charges on account of the previous voyage such as seamen's wages, provisions, etc.). A very high degree of vigilance in learning the pecuniary ability of the purchaser has been held necessary where a factor in Chicago makes a sale on 'change for his principal. To protect himself, in case of a loss growing out of the insolvency or failure of the purchaser to pay for the goods sold, he must resort to all available sources of information that are accessible, and inattention or carelessness in this respect will render him liable for any loss sustained thereby; but he will not be held as a guarantor of such a sale. To affect the factor with the imputation of negligence it is not necessary that he should absolutely know that the purchaser was discredited. It is sufficient if he had notice of facts which ought to put a person of ordinary prudence on his guard. shall be deemed as sold to the factor, a substantial compliance with the contract is all that is necessary.[57]

10. Del Credere Agency.[58] A factor with a del credere commission or agency is one who in consideration of a higher compensation expressly engages to pay to his principal the price of all goods sold by himself if the purchaser fails so to do.[59] There is, however, no covenant of guaranty, but a rate of commission is fixed for selling and guaranteeing, in the ordinary course of commission business, the price for which goods are to be sold less agreed commissions; but no security is given to make this guaranty good.[60] The obligation under a del credere commission always arises under an express contract and is not implied by law.[61] Both the obligation of the factor and his right to del credere commissions can arise only where sales are made upon credit, never when a sale is made for cash, for in such case the factor has incurred no personal liability of payment to his principal and the del credere contract was without consideration as to such cash payments.[62] The liability of a factor with a del credere commission for goods sold is said to be that of a surety, the purchaser being the primary debtor.[63] But a demand

58. Del credere agent distinguished from vendee.— Where a contract provides for the sale of goods on commission at prices fixed by the consignor and requires the terms at stated periods, the consignee guaranteeing payment, the relation created is that of agency on a del credere commission and not that of vendor and vendee (National Cordage Co. v. Sims, 44 Nebr. 148, 62 N. W. 514, holding that there was not a sale within the statute requiring registration of conditional sales); but where the consignee gives the acceptance for the value of the goods and agrees to account for the whole price, guaranteeing the sales, and is to receive a commission, the transaction is a consignment on sale as distinguished from a consignment on a del credere commission (Ex p. Flannagans, 9 Fed. Cas. No. 4,855, 2 Hughes 264 [citing Story Agen. § 215]).

59. Wittkowski v. Harris, 64 Fed. 712. See Morris v. Cleasby, 4 M. & S. 566, 574, 14 Rev. Rep. 531, where the court said: "In correct language a commission del credere is the premium or price given by the principal to the factor for a guarantee, it presupposes a guarantee. . . . This term, however, commonly, although incorrectly, is used to express the guarantee itself. But whatever term is used, the obligation of the factor is the same; it arises on the guarantee." In Grove v. Dubois, 1 T. R. 112, 115, Lord Mansfield says that a commission del credere is "an absolute engagement to the principal from the broker, and makes him liable in the first instance." In Leverick v. Meigs, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 645, 663, it is said that the legal effect of a del credere agreement is that "a factor," for an additional premium beyond the usual commission, when he sells the goods of his principal, becomes bound to pay the price at all events."

That the factor at times remitted for goods sold by him before the price became due from the purchaser does not show such a course of dealing between him and his principal as will alter the original relation and render the agent primarily liable for goods sold by him, where the principal instructs him to make no more remittances before maturity. Gindre v. Kean, 7 Misc. (N. Y.) 582, 28 N. Y. Suppl. 4, 31 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 100. But see Heubach v. Rother, 2 Duer (N. Y.) 227, where the court said that when the goods were sold on long credit and on the very day of the sale the factor charged himself with their price and it was for the purpose of satisfying the balance which, deducting interest and commission, was thus created in favor of the principal that the factor purchased and remitted the bills, the remittance was not made by him in his capacity as agent or covered by his supposed instructions, but was a remittance which was made in discharge of his own debt.

What is the exact liability of a del credere agent has been the subject of much contro-upon the purchaser is not a necessary prerequisite to holding the factor liable, if the purchase-money be due.[64] When the factor and principal have treated a sale as complete and binding, the factor will not be permitted to say that the sale is incomplete.[65] The guaranty of sales under a del credere agency does not extend to the remittance of funds in the hands of the factor;[66] but if by agreement of the parties the factor is authorized to charge a commission for the guaranty of bills of exchange remitted his omission to charge the commission does not absolve him from his liability as guarantor of the remittance.[67] A factor who agrees to indorse all notes taken from customers is not bound to indorse a note taken for goods sold by a general agent of his principal against the factor's protest and after his statement that he would not indorse the note.[68] If the goods consigned are not in accordance with the contract, the del credere agent is not bound, for the purpose of putting his principal in a better position, to insist on the buyer's accepting the goods.[69] Nor can he be charged with the price of the goods which he had sold but afterward received back from the buyers, pursuant to authority given by his principal to settle a dispute as to the quality of the goods in question.[70] And he is not liable for the price of goods recovered from buyers who had fraudulently procured a sale to themselves.[71] If the factor guarantees a sale at a fixed profit, he is liable for that profit irrespective of the market value of the goods.[72]

11. Keeping and Rendering Accounts.[73] The factor must account to his principal for goods sold;[74] he cannot refuse to account for sales on the ground that in making the sale of the goods he violated the law;[75] and he must, when reasonably requested, present to his principal a full, complete,[76] and specific[77] account of his dealings between themselves and between the factor and the purchasers. It is held that it is the factor's duty to be prompt in rendering an account of his sales whether requested to do so or not,[78] and that a failure to render an account for an unreasonable time will render him liable[79] — especially where a demand is impracticable or highly inconvenient.[80] That he may render a satisfactory account, it is his duty to keep books in which are entered correct accounts of his transactions,[81] and the books should be subject to the principal's inspection,[82] and the principal is entitled to a correct copy of the entries in the books including all memoranda connected therewith.[83] Accounts current are necessarily provisional until settled and even after settlement may be rectified for errors or omissions, subject to which every settlement is made;[84] but if the factor renders his account in good faith and the principal makes no objection to it, the principal's assent to it as correct is presumed;[85] and unless objection is made within a reasonable time[86] his principal will be bound by the accounting rendered.[87] The account rendered may be conclusive against the factor himself in the matter of his charges for commissions, but if it is challenged by the principal it is then open for correction by the factor.[88]

It is not an unreasonable refusal to account when after a person drew an order directing his factor to deposit the proceeds of certain lumber to the credit of another, he next day demanded an account of the proceeds from his factor, who replied that he had nothing to do with the demandant and referred him to the other person. Factors destroyed their books before an examination of them was finished. The examination disclosed that the factors had reported sales at less than the actual price received and the factors maintained that they were entitled to the amount of shortage found as reimbursement for allowances made to customers and for bad debts. It was held that the court was justified in disregarding the explanation and in finding a wrongful misappropriation; that the factors having admitted pursuing the same course as to the balance of goods shipped to and sold by them, the shortage as to such balance may properly be estimated by taking as a basis the rate of shortage found to exist as to the rest of the goods. By accepting a general account of all transactions, including the commission of the factor, in which are expressed what accounts have been and what remain to be collected, the principal discharges the factor and the agency from that moment is at an end and the principal cannot call for payment of any item which he complains that the factor neglected to collect. 12. Collection of Money — a. In General. A factor intrusted with the possession of property or other indicia of authority to transfer it has implied power to receive for the vendee the purchase-money.[89] A factor must exercise due diligence in collecting the money due for the sale of his principal's goods or he will be held liable for the resulting loss.[90] If a factor intermingles his principal's goods with his own and consigns the whole cargo to a third person to be sold, it is incumbent on the factor to show that the proceeds of sale of his principal's goods were not paid by remittances made on the cargo.[91] A factor cannot discharge a debt due his principal by agreeing to take in payment that which is worthless and void.[92]

b. Medium of Payment.[93] In the absence of the authorization of the principal the factor cannot receive in payment anything but legal currency.[94] This rule has been modified in extraordinary circumstances.[95] A factor with a del credere commission must account for the goods sold by him at the full specie value, although there was a suspension of specie payments in the state.[96]

13. Assumption of Liability For Price. If the consignee sells some of the goods on credit and settles with the consignor and pays him the full amount for the purpose of closing the account between the parties, he thereby assumes the outstanding debts due the principal on the consignment, and cannot afterward claim reimbursement for any part on the ground of a bad debt made in the sale.[97]

14. Proceeds in Hand. The factor is liable to the principal for the proceeds of the goods,[98] although the sale as between the principal and the purchaser be illegal,[99] and although the consignor obtained the goods under an illegal contract.[1] A factor cannot justify his detention of the proceeds of a sale by setting up outstanding equities between the principal and a third person, in which he has no concern.[2] He has a right to pay to the owner the proceeds of property sold, although he may know that the owner has promised them to his creditors.[3] A factor who pays the proceeds to a third person without instructions from his principal so to do acts at his peril;[4] and so does a factor who pays over money of the estate of a deceased principal to a person who has not qualified as administrator.[5] By usage of trade the consignor has the right to draw on the effects placed in the hands of the factor and the factor must pay the bill if the shipper places the funds in his hands.[6] A factor in accepting a consignment is bound to comply with the conditions imposed upon him by his principal in relation to the appropriation of the proceeds.[7] When a

Advances on a duplicate bill of lading deposited with a third person — No authority from principal.— The principal consigned goods and took from the carrier both an original and a duplicate bill of lading wherein he was named as consignor and the factor as consignee and indorsed both in blank, mailing the original to the factor without any accompanying letter and depositing the duplicate with his banker without any authority given to the banker to sell or part with it. The banker without the consignor's knowledge or consent indorsed and sent the duplicate to the factor, assuming to control the consignment as his own, advising the factor as to the shipment, etc. Under these circumstances the factor paid the banker's drafts drawn, not specifically against the consignment, but generally, to an amount exceeding the value of the consignment, believing it to be the property of the banker and having received no instructions whatever from the consignor. It was held upon insolvency of the banker that the factor was liable to the principal for the proceeds and that he had obtained no right to withhold the proceeds to repay himself for the advances made to the banker. Order of payment of several drafts.—Where a factor brought suit on drafts accepted by him in favor of his principal, some of which were due and some of which had not matured, and thereafter funds of his principal came into his hands by reason of the sale of goods belonging to him as the principal's factor, such funds should be first applied in payment of the drafts which were due, they being the oldest claims; and the factor had no right to apply them to drafts not yet matured in order to keep alive the debt on which suit was brought. Parks v. Ingram, 22 N. H. 283, 55 Am. Dec. 153. A factor, with the proceeds of the goods of his principal in his hands, cannot apply such proceeds to the payment of the bills of his principal alone, drawn against the proceeds, in preference to bills drawn by his principal and a surety, which surety was obtained on the credit of the goods in the factor's hands. draft is drawn in favor of a third person on proceeds of a specific consignment, of which draft the factor has notice, this constitutes an appropriation of the proceeds to the third person which is binding on the factor.[8] If the consignment is made without instructions, the factor may apply the proceeds to the payment of a debt due him from the consignor.[9] A factor who deposits in his own name the consignor's funds without notice to the consignor has been held liable for loss due to the insolvency of the bank[10] or to the depreciation of the currency deposited.[11] It has been held that a factor is liable for not following instructions as to the investment of proceeds of goods sold in a foreign market;[12] and that a factor in a foreign country is liable for a rightful seizure of goods for breach by him of a revenue law unless he can show special instructions to act as he did or that he could not obey his instructions in any other way a fact which his principal knew.[13] A factor's duties as to the proceeds may of course be modified or controlled by a special contract between the parties.[14]

15. Remitting. If a factor has a portion of the proceeds in hand, it is his

Cotton factors and commission merchants of cotton are not agents in the extended sense in which factors and commission merchants are usually understood to be, but their agency is limited to cotton; and an order on such factors to purchase gold and remit it to Canada for one of their customers, whose money they have in their hands arising from the sale of cotton, does not render them responsible for a failure to carry out the instructions, unless they agreed to do so. duty to transmit it promptly and not to wait until the remainder is collected.[15] If the factor innocently makes a remittance to a person of the same name as the true owner he acts without authority and will be liable to the true owner if the remittance be lost by the carrier.[16] If a factor fails to remit the proceeds in his hands from the sale of a portion of goods sold according to the terms of his contract[17] he cannot hold his principal liable for failure to consign the balance, although the factor was obliged to buy at an advanced price to fulfil the contract of the purchaser, and although he should be considered as the principal's agent in making the contract of sale.[18] If a factor remits by specie, his shipment and transmission of the specie must be made with proper care or he will be liable for its loss.[19] If he is instructed to remit by bill of exchange he is not obliged to indorse or guarantee the bills remitted unless the principal can show that custom or usage requires an indorsement or guaranty.[20] If he remits by the purchase of a draft on a house in good credit he cannot be held liable if the draft is protested.[21] The factor is liable for a bill drawn by the bank in which he has deposited the proceeds to his own credit[22] and for a bill which he has not purchased but has received in payment of a debt to himself,[23] if such bills are not paid. If without any consideration the factor indorses the bill which he remits, this fact does not make him responsible to the principal in case the bill is protested.[24] In the absence of instructions from his principal the factor may remit according to the business custom.[25] And it has been held that a factor of goods

16. Liability For Interest. In the absence of any contract or usage which may be evidence of contract, a factor is not liable for interest unless he is in some default,[27] and as a general rule a factor is held to be in no default before demand is made upon him by the principal for the proceeds of sales made.[28] If the factor makes a tortious sale and is sued for the proceeds in assumpsit he is still liable for interest upon the amount from the time of receiving the proceeds of the sale.[29]

17. Liabilities to True Owner. The true owner of goods in a factor's hands may require an account of the factor, although the true owner was previously unknown to the factor.[30] A factor cannot apply the proceeds of goods to the debt of the person in whose name they were consigned, if the goods were not the property of such person.[31] If a factor sells goods in the innocent belief that they are the property of a person who is not in fact the true owner, he may be held liable upon the refusal to deliver the proceeds to the true owner in an action for conversion.[32] That the factor acted in good faith is no defense;[33] nor is it any defense that he did not have the custody of the goods at the time the suit was instituted but had previously in good faith without notice of the title of the true owner sold them in due course of trade.[34] But in some jurisdictions a

If a factor omits to render an account of sales made when reasonably required be is presumed to have received the money and is accountable therefor, and in all cases of unreasonable delay he will generally be charged with interest, whether he has made interest or not. See Brown v. Clayton, 12 Ga. 564 [citing Story Agen. § 204], holding that where a factor has rendered an account of the sale of goods with expenses and disbursements thereon, etc., and has paid the amount reported due, and his principal brings suit for a balance of the proceeds of the goods alleged to be due, there is no ground for charging the factor with interest upon the score of negligence under the common law or upon the ground of illegal charges of expenses and commissions or of a false rendition of the account of sale or of any other ground of like character which involves an undetermined and uncertain issue.

Where a tutor ships cotton belonging to a minor to be sold on commission, the proceeds can be recovered from the merchant, less the expenses incurred, even though the merchant showed that the cotton was shipped in the individual name of the tutor, and that the tutor was indebted to him on his own account in an amount above the proceeds of the sale. public warehouseman who receives and sells goods and accounts for the proceeds to the consignors without notice that the goods belonged to another cannot be held liable.[35] If a factor has been misled through the act of the owner[36] or of his agent[37] he cannot be held liable. A factor with notice that the property belongs to another than the consignor is of course liable in any event.[38]

18. Liabilities to Several Principals. The sale by a factor of several lots of goods belonging to several principals respectively and taking from the vendee one note for the whole, payable to himself, will not per se render him liable to his principals;[39] for this manner of doing business is in accordance with the general usage.[40] A factor who knows that orders given him by a broker are made in behalf of various customers cannot apply the profits of one of the customers in offsetting the losses of the others.[41] And where the goods of different shippers are covered by the same bill of lading he has no right to hold the goods of one shipper for charges on the goods of the other.[42]

19. Conversion by Factor.[43] If a factor pledges goods of his principal for his own debt he is liable for conversion.[44] He may render himself liable for conversion by disobeying the instructions of the factor as to the sale of the goods.[45] A sale by the factor before notice of revocation of his authority does not render him liable for conversion.[46] In the absence of a lien by a factor the principal has the right to retake possession of his unsold goods whenever he sees fit, and if the factor refuses to deliver on demand he is guilty of conversion.[47] If

46. Jones v. Hodgkins, 61 Me. 480.

47. Anker v. Smith, 87 N. Y. Suppl. 479, holding that in an action for conversion against the factor failure to allege as a defense that he had sold property unaccounted for raised a presumption that he did not sell it but concealed it with a view to appropriating it to his own use.

Sufficiency of demand and refusal.— Where a factor sold part of the goods consigned to a factor has possession of goods with the right to a lien for advances[48] or for a general balance beyond the charges against the goods,[49] it requires a tender and demand on the part of the principal as well as a refusal on the part of the factor to constitute a conversion. If the factor disposes of the goods by a delegation of his authority to a third person without the sanction of his principal or of a usage of trade he is guilty of a conversion of the goods.[50] The placing of grain in a warehouse and taking a receipt therefor, whereby the property in the grain is parted with by its loss of identity, does not amount to a conversion, although the factor becomes thereby a debtor instead of a bailee.[51] The mere statement of account sent by a factor in which the principal is credited with the goods consigned at a certain valuation is not sufficient evidence of their conversion.[52] Acquiescence in the action of a factor when it is brought to the principal's notice precludes the principal from holding the factor liable in conversion for his action.[53] The old rule that an action for conversion cannot be maintained against a person who receives money in a fiduciary capacity unless he is bound to return the identical money has been held applicable to a factor;[54] but under the New York code, defining the causes of action upon which are given the right of arrest[55] and the right to a body execution,[56] an action to recover from the factor the proceeds of a sale wrongfully detained by him is an action in tort.

20. Ratification or Repudiation of Acts of Factor.[57] If a factor buys the goods of his principal, the latter may elect whether he will ratify or repudiate the sale.[58] A principal may ratify the factor's disobedience of instructions or his other wrongful act either by actual approval[59] or by failure to disapprove within a reasonable time after notice.[60] The principal may be considered as having rati-him, and while in possession of the remainder, and with a right to sell them, sued his principal for commissions, a demand for such goods, contained in a letter delivered to him, the contents of which he did not know until the person delivering it had departed, and when the goods, with the knowledge of the principal, were three thousand miles away, did not render the factor guilty of conversion of the unsold goods. rendered an account within a reasonable time after sale he may be liable for an action to account without a previous demand.[68] If goods are in the hands of the factor and unsold, a demand and a refusal must be made before the owner can maintain an action for them.[69] A total rescission of a compromise and settlement between a principal and the factor at the termination of the agency is not always necessary to give the principal a right of action to reclaim goods, where in the compromise and settlement the factor has been guilty of fraud.[70] If a factor who had instructions to remit the proceeds of a sale of the goods forwards no account of the sale, the right of action of the principal accrues for the purpose of limitation, only on his knowledge of the sale and of the receipt of the proceeds by the factor.[71]

The principal thereafter discovered other unsold goods in the possession or under the control of the factor of less value than the balance of the shortage in excess of the amount represented by the note and mortgage and subsequently enforced the mortgage, but did no other act in ratification of the settlement. cases by goods sold and delivered.[80] Where all but two portions of a consignment were sold and the proceeds paid to the principal, an action in assumpsit for goods sold and delivered or for money had and received will not lie if there is no evidence of a sale or of failure to deliver the goods upon request.[81] The principal may sometimes have a remedy by setting off his damages in a suit by the factor to recover for advances,[82] or by an adjustment of his claim in a settlement of account without being driven to a cross action.[83] He may have an injunction and a receiver against his factor in case of misconduct or insolvency, whereby the property is endangered, although the consignment be to sell on a del credere commission.[84]

c. Defenses — (i) In General. A factor may set up the consignor's want of title to the goods consigned as a defense to an action for the price received by him.[85] In an action to recover insurance money collected by the factor on a consignment of goods the factor cannot show that the goods were not in fact damaged.[86] Where factors inform their principal that there is a balance due him for goods sold by them and he draws for it and his bill is protested, they may show in defense to his suit for the balance that they were mistaken as to there being a balance due and that they had sold the goods on credit and had not yet been paid for them.[87] A factor cannot set up his own fraud to shield him from responsibility for the proceeds of a sale.[88] It is no defense to a suit for an accounting by a factor that there is pending against him a suit by the government to recover as a penalty the value of part of the goods consigned to him because they had been undervalued by the principal in fraud of the revenue law.[89] That the proceeds of a sale have been seized on an attachment against a third person or that they have been paid over in pursuance of an order in supplementary proceedings against the same person is no defense where either the seizure under the attachment or the payment under the order was without authority of law.[90]

(II) Counter-Claim.[91] A factor who refuses on demand to surrender the proceeds of a sale cannot in an action of conversion defeat a recovery by purchasing a claim of a third person against the principal and interposing it as a counter-claim, because the principal's action is in tort,[92] and because defendant by such purchase assumes a position incompatible with his duty as an agent and in direct conflict with his principal's interest.[93] But a factor may counter-claim for expenses incurred by him upon the consignments the proceeds of which are being sued for.[94]

d. Pleading.[95] In actions by the principal against the factor the usual rules of pleading govern.[96] Thus the complaint need not anticipate defenses;[97] and a declaration which is curable by amendment cannot be objected to after verdict.[98] In an action to recover for negligence or other breach of duty the declaration or complaint must sufficiently state the breach of duty.[99] Where the purchaser refused to accept the goods upon their arrival and the factor resold for a less amount but refused to tell his principal the name of the original purchaser, thus depriving him of resort against such purchaser, it need not be alleged in an action for the difference between the two prices that the original purchasers were financially responsible.[1] When goods are received to be sold at certain prices or returned on demand and they are sold and the money received, no special demand need be alleged in an action for the money.[2] If a factor defends on the ground that the goods of plaintiff were destroyed by fire without defendant's fault, an allegation that he had used proper diligence to sell the goods and had failed is necessary.[3] In an action for goods sold and delivered by a factor to

Defendant may set up as a counter-claim "return commissions" on goods taken away by plaintiff before sale where there was a custom of allowing return commissions, as plaintiff knew. Botany Worsted Works v. Wendt, 22 Misc. (N. Y.) 156, 48 N. Y. Suppl. 1024, holding that the phrase "return commissions" means "that on goods taken away by a consignor before sale the consignee receives the equitable allowance to cover the expenses of handling, insuring and storing the goods while in his charge."

99. Sufficient allegations.— If the gravamen of the action is the alleged negligence of defendant, it is sufficient if the complaint aver facts out of which the duty to act springs and that defendant negligently failed to do and to perform; it is not necessary to define the quo modo or the particular acts of diligence defendant should have employed. Leach v. Bush, 57 Ala. 145. A complaint which sets forth that defendants as factors received from plaintiff certain described goods for sale for a reward, under instructions not to sell them for less than a specified price, which they promised to observe, but that they did afterward sell the said goods for less than that amount, to wit, the sum of —— dollars, etc., is in case, and sufficiently states a breach of duty. Beavers v. Hardie, 48 Ala. 95.

Insufficient allegations.— A declaration alleging that defendant received plaintiff's goods for sale, and agreed to render, as the amount brought by said goods, five hundred dollars, and assigning as a breach of the agreement a neglect to render an account or pay the sum of five hundred dollars is bad for want of an averment of the sale of the goods. Wolfe v. Luyster, 1 Hall (N. Y.) 146.

Special assumpsit.— Under the rule that where the promise or agreement is not for the payment of money but for the doing of some other matter or thing the remedy is by special assumpsit, the declaration in assumpsit against the factor for negligence for breach of duty must be special. Darlington v. Fredenhagen, 18 Ill. App. 273. See Young v. Woodward, 44 N. H. 250, holding that in general, in declaring in assumpsit upon a consignment of goods for the purpose of sale, there should be a special count, which should set out the promise and undertaking of defendant, the consideration upon which it was founded, the breach of that contract by defendant, or his neglect or carelessness, and the loss caused to plaintiff thereby. himself disbursements for storage prior to the sale must be pleaded affirmatively in set-off.[4]

e. Issues, Proof, and Variance. The mere form in which the issues are presented will not prevent plaintiff from recovering a balance due him.[5] The proof must be confined to the issues,[6] and, although a material variance will be fatal,[7] an immaterial variance will be disregarded.[8]

f. Burden of Proof and Presumptions. If the market for goods is composed of a single buyer, factors who have made advances on the goods cannot be charged with negligence for not selling unless it is shown that this buyer made them a reasonable offer for the goods, sufficient to cover their advances thereon, and that they refused it.[9] The mere fact that one sells products as a factor does not impose upon him the burden of proving due diligence in the sale.[10] He will not be presumed to have negligently and fraudulently violated his duty, without proof.[11]

g. Evidence.[12] In an action for a negligent sale shortly before a sudden rise in the market price, evidence of the original cost of the article is inadmissible;[13] and proof of the holding of other consignments by other persons for a better market is not relevant in regard to the propriety of the sale in controversy;[14] neither is an expression by defendant to plaintiff, after the sale in question, of hopes to do better with another cargo which plaintiff had consigned at about the same time, nor evidence of the times and prices at which the second cargo is sold.[15] Evidence of a long delay in selling in a constantly falling market is admissible on the question of good faith and reasonable diligence of the factor.[16] Proof of the market value at the place of sale under the contract is proper for the purpose of showing that the factor obtained the best price; but evidence of its value at the place of shipment is inadmissible.[17] In an action for damages for selling below the invoice price defendant may show in reduction of damages that the goods at the time of sale and down to the time of trial were worth no more than the price at which they were sold.[18] Where a consignor who had made advances to a crop raiser brings an action against the factor for the proceeds of a crop shipped by him in his own name with instructions accompanying the bill of lading to sell for his account, a prior agreement between the factor and the raiser of the crop as to forwarding the crop and making advances thereon is inadmissible.[19] In an action against a factor for fraudulently selling goods on credit to an insolvent person, evidence of the pecuniary circumstances of the buyer of the goods and of his acts and conduct in respect to the goods after the purchase is admissible in connection with other evidence showing fraud in the sale, although it might be inadmissible if standing alone.[20] In an action for the value of goods destroyed by fire, where the factor defends on the ground that he was instructed not to insure consignments until further notice, evidence as to the settlement and discontinuance of business between the parties after the instruction and before the consignment in question is admissible.[21] Where the principal seeks by way of counter-claim to recover damages for plaintiff-factor's breach of contract to ship and sell fruit on his account, the fact that plaintiff inspected the fruit before entering into the contract does not preclude him from showing for the purpose of reducing damages that the fruit was of inferior quality.[22] In an action against a factor to recover the proceeds of a sale of merchandise alleged to have been sent him under an agreement for a del credere commission, documentary and real evidence which have a definite bearing upon the terms and conditions of the agency are admissible.[23]

Obtaining price.— In the absence of special directions as to price, a factor is to sell for the fair value or market price; and if the factor acts in utter disregard of his duty as factor by selling at an under price he will be compelled to account for the goods at their value or market price. Bigelow v. Walker, 24 Vt. 149, 58 Am. Dec. 156.

If a consignment has been lost through the factor's negligence, the measure of damages in the absence of proof of a partial loss is the entire value of the goods or the proceeds of the sale. Brown v. Arrott, 6 Watts & S. (Pa.) 402, where the court said that the burden of showing the amount of the loss was upon the factor.

If a factor returns goods damaged through his negligence, the consignor may recover the difference between the value of the articles as returned and their value undamaged; and their value as returned is determined by the amount they would bring at a fair sale in the usual course of trade. Ives v. Freisinger, 70 N. J. L. 257, 57 Atl. 401, holding that the jury were not bound by the price the damaged articles brought at auction.

Neglect to require margin of vendee.—Where a factor under instructions from his principal sold grain upon a time contract and negligently failed to require a margin in accordance with the rules of the board of trade or to notify his principal to demand a margin, and where he also neglected to notify his principal that the grain had been sold to persons operating a corner, which to be successful would have to be maintained thirty-

that they shall not be sold until a certain time, a factor is liable for damages resulting from the sale of the goods before the time designated or agreed upon, and the measure of damages is the difference between the price at the sale and the price at the time a sale was authorized.[27]

(II) For Conversion.[28] By some authorities, particularly the earlier ones, it is held that, where a factor converts goods of his principal to his own use, the measure of damages is the value of the goods at the time of the conversion;[29] but by the better rule the measure of damages is in most instances the highest price of the goods within a reasonable time after the conversion.[30] These different rules are of course applied to the various acts of conversion by the factor.[31]

(La.) 256, 5 Am. Dec. 729, where a consignee unable to sell goods at the price limited returned them without orders, and they were sold for his account by the consignor, and the consignee was held liable for the difference between the price the goods brought and the highest price they might have brought up to the time of the suit and for the return freight. In some of the New York cases, supra, it was held that the highest price up to the time of bringing suit is the proper measure of damages provided the action is brought within a reasonable time.

Average market price.—See Winters v. January, Litt. Sel. Cas. (Ky.) 13, where the factor in answer to a bill against him stated that he sold the property consigned to him according to the instructions of the consignor's agent, but he omitted to file the instructions, although he prayed that they might be taken as a part of the advances, and the court held that it ought to be presumed that the instructions were not observed by the factor.

31. Thus where goods consigned to a factor to be sold at a fixed price are disposed of at a less price, it is held in some jurisdictions that the factor is responsible to his principal for the price fixed by the latter, notwithstanding it may be above the market price. Switzer v. Connett, 11 Mo. 88, where a factor had made no advances. See also Union Hardware Co. v. Plume, etc., Mfg. Co., 58 Conn. 219, 20 Atl. 455. No. 12,809, 1 Brock. 103. And by the better rule this damage is properly measured by the difference between the amount actually received for the goods and the highest market price obtainable within a reasonable time after the sale. Matthews v. Coe, 49 N. Y. 57 [reversing 56 Barb. 430] (holding that where the

(III) SALE AT IMPROPER PLACE AS MARKET. If a factor reships goods, without instructions from his principal, to another place to be sold there, he is liable for any loss which may occur, and the measure of damages is the difference between the market value at the original market and the price for which the goods were sold.[32] A factor, who in disobedience of instructions sells his principal's goods and when subsequently directed to ship to another place[33] does not inform his principal of the sale but buys other goods and ships them to the place designated, is liable for the difference in price for which the goods were sold at the place designated and the price obtained for the original consignment.[34]

E. Compensation, Reimbursement of Factor, and Security Therefor — 1. COMPENSATION — a. In General. A factor's right to compensation for his conduct of his agency rests only upon a contract express or implied,[35] and usually takes the form of commissions upon the goods sold or upon incidental services rendered in the course of his agency.[36] So long as he acts in good faith and exercises reasonable skill and diligence the principal is liable to him for proper com-evidence showed that it was the intent of the principal and the agreement between the parties to have the property sold when it reached a certain price, and it also appeared that it would have been difficult if not impossible to have preserved the property until the time when the price was fixed, an allowance by this rule in damages of a price greater than that agreed upon is erroneous); Blot v. Boiceau, 3 N. Y. 78, 51 Am. Dec. 345 (holding that where the factor sells below the price named by his principal, to cover his advances, without having called on his principal for repayment, and the consignment is of articles which have no market value, such as antique paintings, statues, or vases, the principal may recover according to the invoiced prices).

Where a factor sells cotton under a specified price, the measure of damages is not the price limited but the price at which it might have been sold during the season. Austill v. Crawford, 7 Ala. 335; Porter v. Heath, 2 Tex, App. Civ. Cas. § 124.

See Wallace v. Bradshaw, 6 Dana (Ky.) 382, where an instruction that if a factor ships goods without orders he would be liable in the absence of any proof of a custom allowing him so to do for the amount for which the goods might have been sold at the original market was held unobjectionable.

In estimating this difference between the two markets, the highest value which the goods could have been sold for at the original market within a reasonable time after the conversion should be taken. Scott v. Rogers, 31 N. Y. 676; Wilson v Mathews, 24 Barb. (N. Y.) 295.

That evidence of a custom to reship to another place, where the factor has made advances, is admissible see Wallace v. Bradshaw, 6 Dana (Ky.) 382.

33. Inability to ship as instructed.— If a factor be ordered to ship a consignment upon which he has made advances to a place other than his residence for sale and in the exercise of due diligence he is unable to ship to the designated place and ships to another place where the goods are sold, the measure of damages is not the difference between the price obtainable at the place designated and the place of sale but the difference between the price which might have been obtained at his residence and the price at the place of sale. See Bessent v. Harris, 63 N. C. 542, the court pointing out that this is the proper rule of damages because under such circumstances it was the duty of the factor in the absence of other instructions to have retained the goods at his place of residence, and in case the principal failed within a reasonable time after request to repay the advance the factor might have sold it at his place of residence.

missions;[37] but as a general rule he is entitled to commissions as such only on the amount of goods actually sold,[38] unless by special contract or under special circumstances the principal's liability is extended to cover goods not sold.[39] Of course if the factor does not fulfil his part of a special contract he cannot expect to be paid commissions.[40] If the principal has received advances on a consignment he cannot at his mere pleasure withdraw the sale of his goods from the factor on the repayment of advances and interest. The factor has an interest in making the sales and earning his commissions which in general forms the effective consideration of his advances and it does not rest in the power of the principal to deprive him of his advantage without showing some substantial reason for so doing;[41] and therefore, in the absence of substantial reason, the factor is entitled to receive the same commissions as if the sale had been effected.[42] The factor's compensation is payable and is estimated in money, not in the goods of his principal.[43]

b. For Services — (i) Contract Rate and Amount. Where a factor has charged his commissions and deducted them from the gross proceeds of the sales and his accounts have been regularly rendered from time to time and no objection thereto made by the consignor, an agreement for commissions at the rate charged in the accounts rendered may be inferred.[44] A contract by which the factor is to receive a certain per cent commission on the sale of his principal's crop does not justify the factor in charging commissions on the amount of bounty paid by the government to the planter of the crop.[45] A contract by which the factor is to be sole agent of his principal in a certain territory for the sale of manufactured tobacco to be manufactured in a particular manner does not entitle the factor to commissions on stemmed-leaf tobacco put up in small packages consigned to another person in the same territory, there to be manufactured by the purchasers into cigars and cigarettes.[46]

(II) Customary Rate and Quantum Meruit. In the absence of an express agreement the rate usually charged for like services must be paid,[47] provided the customary rate be just and reasonable.[48] If the customary rate does not appear the factor should receive such compensation as his services are reasonably worth.[49] This may be the rule of compensation, although the rate of compensation was fixed by a previous contract, if it is no longer operative owing to the resignation of the factor.[50]

(III) Subagent and Cumulative Commissions. It is improper for the factor without special authority to deliver the goods to another factor to be sold and charge for both his own and the other factor's commission.[51]

c. For Advances. In addition to commissions for services rendered factors are generally entitled to commissions for funds advanced for the principal's benefit in the course of the business;[52] but not for disbursements of the principal's money,[53] for payment of the factor's debt to the principal,[54] or for the balance against the principal in their mutual accounts.[55]

d. Del Credere Commission. Factors may by express contract, in consideration of a greater commission, become liable for the price of goods sold by them if not paid for by the buyer.[56] The factor's right to a del credere commission rests only on the terms of the contract and extends only to sales on credit.[57] A del credere commission is earned when the guaranty is made, not when the account is collected, where the factor agrees to sell and guarantees prompt payment by the purchaser or purchasers.[58]

e. Payment. A factor who has received his commission out of the proceeds has no further claim on his principal.[59]

f. Forfeiture. The factor's right to a commission is forfeited by fraud or gross negligence in the conduct of the business,[60] by rendering a false account with fraudulent intent,[61] by failure to account,[62] by selling below the guaranteed price,[63] and in accordance with the general law of agency by accepting a commission from the buyer without the knowledge and approval of his principal.[64]

Failure to remit.— Goods were consigned under an agreement that the factor was to receive his commissions on sales within a certain time after receipt of bills for the same. The factor on his part agreed to keep all entries as to such sales in separate books, to collect and remit the accounts upon respective dates of maturity by check, the remittances to be made daily, if collections reached one thousand dollars, and payments made before maturity to be remitted, less discount, for anticipation of payment. False packing.— When a factor to whom cotton was consigned, after it has been sold and the account between him and the consignors settled by draft, is compelled to refund to the purchaser on account of the false packing of some of the cotton, he can recover therefor from the consignors, if reclamation be made according to the custom of the business and within such reasonable time as would enable defendants to reclaim from the parties from whom they purchased. Unmerchantable goods — Waiver.— In an action for the value of machines delivered to defendant as a factor for sale, it appeared that many of the machines proved unmerchantable, resulting in the loss of many sales made by defendant; that subsequently defendant consented, at plaintiff's request, to do the best he could with the machines; that thereupon the prices were reduced, and defendant endeavored to make the loss to both parties as little as possible, agreeing to account for what he could realize out of the defective machines. principal's drafts drawn on him[77] or indorsed by him;[78] and this is sometimes extended to acceptances not yet paid[79] and to money paid in the principal's behalf.[80] A settlement in full between a factor who has sold goods on credit and his principal in the absence of fraud or mistake bars any claim thereafter for advances.[81]

(III) INTEREST. The factor is in general further entitled to interest on advances made by him[82] over and above his proper commissions for the advances,[83] but not upon his own charges and commissions.[84] If a factor by breach of the contract of agency causes loss to the principal, he forfeits his right to interest on his advances.[85]

b. Forfeiture of Right to Be Reimbursed. Breach of his contract or of his principal's orders will make the factor responsible for the resulting damage,[86] and his claim for reimbursement may also be forfeited by tort.[87]

3. Security of Factor — a. Joint Liability of the Fund and of the Principal Personally. A factor in the absence of a special agreement to the contrary has the personal security of his principal as well as a lien on the goods for his advances,[88] but an agent under a del credere commission, after selling the goods, cannot sue his principal for advances covered by the selling price which he has guaranteed.[89] Either security[90] may be waived,[91] although the factor is sometimes required to exhaust the fund in his hands before enforcing the personal liability of the principal.[92]

bursements in respect to any specific consignment.[13] And under no circumstances can the lien for a general balance exist in opposition to the terms of a special contract under which the goods are received;[14] nor can there be a lien for a general balance where the relation of principal and factor does not exist,[15] as where there was a single transaction between the parties.[16] After the principal's death, the factor's lien for a general balance then accrued does not attach to property coming into the factor's possession thereafter by order of the principal's representative.[17] The doctrine of a factor's lien for a general balance of account never went so far as to embrace the price of goods sold by a factor to his principal, the transaction not being connected with the general purposes of their relations of principal and agent.[18]

(III) Facts Necessary to Existence — (A) Principal's Ownership or Title. As the lien is derived from the contract, it cannot exist unless the consignor is the lawful owner of the goods, especially if the factor has notice of any defect in the title,[19] and if the principal, after shipping the goods, parts with the title

Notice — Shipping receipt.— A planter consigned cotton to a factor, taking from the railroad company both an original and a duplicate receipt, naming him as the consignor and the factor as consignee. He indorsed both receipts in blank, forwarded the original by mail to the factor without any accompanying letter, and deposited the duplicate in the hands of his own banker, without any authority to him to sell or part with it. The banker, without the consignor's knowledge or consent, indorsed and sent the duplicate to the factor, assuming to control the cotton as his own, advising him relative to the shipment, etc. Under these circumstances the factor paid the banker's drafts to an amount exceeding the value of the cotton, believing it to be the property of the banker, and having received no instructions whatever from the consignor. The banker became insolvent. It was held that the factor obtained no lien on the cotton for his advances. Tison v. Howard, 57 Ga. 410. See also Solly v. Rathbone, 2 M. & S. 298.

possession has ceased,[25] and such possession must be lawful and not obtained by bad faith.[26]

(2) What Constitutes. What constitutes possession within the meaning of this rule depends on the circumstances of the case. In general the property must be so appropriated to the factor as to be under his control.[27] The mere acceptance by the factor of bills drawn against the goods gives no lien in the absence of other evidence of actual or constructive possession.[28] A mere agreement to ship goods in satisfaction of antecedent advances will not in general give the factor a lien upon them until they come into his actual possession; but if there is a specific pledge or appropriation of ascertained goods with the intention that they shall be a security for the advances, and they are deposited with a common carrier and the consignee notified, the latter has constructive possession and the lien is complete.[29] The case is somewhat strengthened if a shipper's receipt or bill of lading is assigned to the consignee,[30] but even this is sometimes held to be inconclusive.[31]

(iv) Subject-Matter. The lien is available against the goods,[32] and against the proceeds of the goods in the factor's hands,[33] and, it has been held, against the debt of the purchaser for goods sold on credit,[34] as well as against securities in the factor's possession.[35] The lien is restricted to no more than enough to secure the claim.[36]

(v) Priorities. The factor's lien once acquired is subordinate only to an outstanding legal title or to a paramount equity of which he has notice.[37] It is preferred to the claim of the principal's vendor, who has not received the price of his goods;[38] to the claim of the principal's vendee or assignee when the sale or assignment takes place after the lien has attached, especially if the purchaser has notice of the factor's claim;[39] to the claim of a subsequent bona fide holder of the

A delivery of property to a carrier by the owner, to be shipped to another point not the place of business of the factor, and the taking by the owner from the carrier of a bill of lading in the name of such factor and forwarding it to him are not conclusive on the question of the intent of the owner to deliver possession to the factor, so as to entitle the latter to a lien on the property, where there are other facts in the case tending to show that it was not the purpose of the owner to surrender possession to the factor, but that the object of shipping in the name of the factor was to obtain the benefit of a through rate. (VIII) ENFORCEMENT.[58] The lien may be enforced by the factor's holding the goods, proceeds, or securities until paid[59] and by suit to regain possession of them when he has been wrongfully deprived thereof,[60] or to recover their value.[61]

4. ACTION FOR COMPENSATION AND REIMBURSEMENT[62] — a. Right of Action. As a general rule[63] the factor must look first to the goods for his reimbursement for advances made; he cannot charge the consignor personally without having first shown the fund to be insufficient.[64] Advancements on account beyond the amount agreed upon between the parties constitute a present legal debt giving a present legal right of action;[65] and in some jurisdictions it is held that in the absence of an agreement or other sufficient circumstance a factor's right of action accrues immediately upon making advances of any amount.[66] In any jurisdiction it would seem that the factor could not maintain an action for his advances without accounting for or showing what has become of the principal's goods or funds intrusted to the factor's care.[67] Where goods have been consigned to be sold at a price limited, a factor may after a reasonable time, if the price cannot be obtained, call for payment or further security and may sue for the amount due.[68] Inasmuch as a factor has both the security of his lien on the goods and the personal security of the principal for advances made[69] he may waive his lien without affecting his personal remedy against the principal.[70]

b. Defenses. Res judicata is a good defense as in other cases.[71] In an action by a factor for his advances, the principal may show in bar of or in reduction of the claim of the factor want of diligence in selling to a buyer of doubtful solvency.[72] After the factor has rendered his monthly statements for a long period of time, which statements have been admitted to be correct, it is too late to plead usury in defense of an action for a balance due the factor.[73] In an action by a factor against his principal for commissions on sales made by the principal in violation of an agreement that the factor should be sole agent of the principal's goods, a breach of a subsequent promise of the factor to be the principal's surety upon a contract obtained by defendant of the United States government for a sale of goods thereto is no defense, since the factor had the right to recede from the promise and since the promise could have no effect upon the contract between the principal and the factor.[74] Where a factor took a note in his own name from a purchaser who subsequently failed and made an assignment by an indenture which contained a release of all debts due the creditors who executed the same, among whom was the factor, the principal may in an action by the factor for advances avail himself of the factor's release of the purchaser.[75]

c. Pleading.[76] The ordinary rules of pleading relating to amendments[77] and to aider by verdict[78] have been applied in actions of this character. An averment that defendants promised to pay plaintiffs their "reasonable costs, charges and commissions" relating to the contract is insufficient without a statement of what the services were reasonably worth, as in the quantum meruit counts.[79] To a declaration by a factor to recover the balance of an account principally for advances a plea which sets up a violation of an agreement to sell the goods at a certain price whereby defendant was damaged to a greater amount than the sum sued for is insufficient if it does not state at what time the agreement was made.[80]

d. Evidence[81] — (I) In General. With respect to the burden of proof,[82] the indulgence of presumptions,[83] the admissibility of evidence,[84] and the weight and sufficiency of evidence[85] the usual rules of evidence govern.

(II) Custom or Usage. Evidence may be given to show the customs of merchants so far as they concern the transactions between the parties and the questions at issue between them.[86] The usual rule that the custom must be so generally long established and notorious that the party against whom it is to operate will be presumed to have knowledge of it is applied.[87] So also is the rule

Variance see Mixer v. Williams, 17 Vt. 457.

That factor was negligent.— Where in an action to recover for overdrafts defendant raises the issue that the goods had been sold for less than their value through the negligence and mismanagement of plaintiff, the burden of proof is upon defendant. Govan v. Cushing, 111 N. C. 458, 16 S. E. 619.

The burden of adducing evidence is not shifted on the ground that the market price is peculiarly within plaintiff's knowledge, for this is a matter susceptible of easy proof, although the market be in a foreign country, the communications with that country and the means of obtaining proofs being attended with less trouble than they would be in many parts of the United States. Govan v. Cushing, 111 N. C. 458, 461, 16 S. E. 619. See Evidence, 16 Cyc. 936, 937.

That items of account are correct.— In an action by a factor on an account current for a part of which balance in favor of the factor a promissory note had been given by defendant, an answer containing a general denial and a special averment that at the time defendant signed the promissory note he had not examined the accounts of plaintiff against him imposes upon plaintiff the burden of proof as to the correctness of the items of the account under consideration. Byrne v. Grayson, 15 La. Ann. 457.

That advancement was for advantage of principal.— Where a factor voluntarily pays the amount of a reclamation made upon him for overdrafts on those who sold the goods and sues to recover the amount from his principal he must make proof of the state of the account in order to show that the money advanced by plaintiffs was paid for the advantage of defendants. Blakely v. Frazier, 11 S. C. 122.

Where a factor claims a privilege under La. Code, art. 3214, for advances he must show affirmatively that the property was at his disposal or that he had received a bill of lading or letter of advice previous to seizure by a creditor of his consignor. Hyde v. Smith, 12 La. 144.

Defendants in replevin, claiming a factor's lien on property of which they obtained possession by trespass must prove that the work and labor were done, and the care bestowed, on the property, under a contract, express or implied, with the owner, that he should render compensation therefor. An account of sales rendered not in accordance with the contract between the principal and factor is inadmissible in evidence. Coe v. Nash, 28 Mich. 259.

Best and secondary evidence.—General rule applied see Myers v. Brice, 2 Pennyp. (Pa.) 382, where in an action by a factor for advances the defense was that the transaction was a sale, and defendant offered in evidence the books of original entry showing the charges of the goods of plaintiff at the time of the transaction, and the hooks were rejected on the ground that defendant could testify as to the nature of the transaction. See Evidence, 17 Cyc. 480.

Immateriality.— Plaintiff having given evidence by his agent, who contracted with defendant, that the contract was one of consignment on advances, a question by defendant, whose theory of the case was that the transaction had been a sale, whether the witness had not said to plaintiff that he had orders for goods of the kind at certain prices and that the prices were guaranteed was properly rejected as not being proper or material on cross-examination. Myers v. Brice, 2 Pennyp. (Pa.) 382.

In an action for advances over and above what the consignment realized, evidence of a proposition made by plaintiff to a third person to purchase her goods at a certain sum has no bearing on the question as to what he had sold defendant's goods for. Mason v. Bradley, 74 Wis. 189, 42 N. W. 229.

85. Ract v. Duviard-Dime, 4 N. Y. Suppl. 157.

Proof as to real consignor.— In an action to recover for advances, proof that the cashier of a bank, guaranteeing advancements to be made by a factor to a shipper of goods, stipulated that all remittances should be made through the guarantor's bank was not sufficient to prove that the shipper was an agent of the bank, and that the latter was the real consignor. Hogan v. Mississippi Valley Bank, 28 La. Ann. 550.

86. Brown v. Harrison, 17 Ala. 774; Holmes v. Gayle, 1 Ala. 517; Thompson v. Packwood, 2 La. Ann. 624.

87. Earl Fruit Co. v. Thurston Cold-Storage, etc., Co., 60 Minn. 351, 62 N. W. 439, where in pleading and proofs the factor relied on a custom of commission merchants to receive reimbursement where a deficit is caused by the excess of expenses incurred by that a custom is not admissible which is in contravention of a settled rule of law.[88]

(III) Receipts. Where the defense to an action for advances is that the transaction was a sale and not a consignment, receipts signed by the bookkeeper of defendant, who was his "business man" and to whom the advances were paid, the receipts being to the effect that money had been received from plaintiff, for advances from consignments, are admissible without proof of express authority of the bookkeeper to sign receipts in this form,[89] and it is not competent for defendant to prove by the bookkeeper that he executed the receipts in this form without authority.[90]

e. Trial.[91] The court cannot charge the jury on evidence not given on the issue.[92] An instruction which authorizes the jury in a suit for advances over and above the realization of consignments to find for plaintiff on a certain hypothesis without regard to whether plaintiff exercised due care and diligence is erroneous.[93] Whether commissions contracted for were a mere cover for usury under the contract is a question for the jury.[94]

f. Judgment[95] and Recovery.[96] Judgment cannot be given for a greater amount than that to which plaintiff shows he is entitled.[97] Where defendant failed to ship goods as agreed, to be sold on commission by plaintiff, who sold on report, plaintiff cannot recover from defendant damages for which he might be liable to the person to whom he sold, before payment of said damages voluntarily or involuntarily.[98]

F. Rights, Liabilities, and Protection of Third Persons[99] — 1. Generally — a. General Rules. As against the principal, all who deal with the factor are chargeable with notice of the limits fixed by law to his powers.[1] In the absence of special authority the factor cannot bind his principal in the disposition he makes of a consignment except within the ordinary and accustomed modes of transacting business.[2] Thus the barter by a factor of his principal's goods for land or other goods,[3] or a promise by a factor that he would write to his principal the factor in handling the goods over the receipts from their sale.

98. Otter Creek Lumber Co. v. McElwee, 37 Ill. App. 285.

Costs.— Plaintiffs received goods on commission from defendant, and made advances thereon, for which the latter gave receipts, stating that the goods were to be sold without limit as to time and price. In an action to recover the difference between what the goods realized and the advances, defendant claimed that plaintiffs guaranteed a stipulated price, and counter-claimed therefor. The court ignored the counter-claim but found for defendant without costs. This was error; for, if defendant's testimony was to be believed at all, he was entitled to both his counter-claim and costs. Wise v. Rosenblatt, 9 N. Y. Suppl. 500. See, generally, Costs.

to get insurance done,[4] does not bind the principal. A factor who has advanced generally on the goods in his hands cannot, in the absence of special authority, sell a debt existing in open account arising from the sale of a portion of the consignment so as to transfer a good title to the claim, especially when the debt has not yet matured and when the principal is not in default and has not been called upon to repay the advances.[5] Where on attachment factors of defendant certify that they have no goods belonging to him, this does not affect the rights of other creditors who before the certificate was given had acquired an equitable right to have any such goods applied to pay acceptances of defendant held by them; and this, even though the factor be deemed to have lost his lien by making the certificate.[6] A consignee cannot, in discharge of the freight, abandon to the master of the carrier vessel goods which have greatly deteriorated on the voyage;[7] nor can he, after receiving the goods, withhold a part of the freight for a partial damage and thereby to that extent discharge the freight. If he receives the goods he becomes with his principal liable for the freight thereon.[8] The rule that an agent for an undisclosed principal may be treated as principal is of course applicable to a factor and is not affected by the fact that the factor is known to be a commission merchant.[9] A factor, by settling with his principal, cannot avoid a previously admitted liability to a third person for expenses incurred in forwarding goods, without the consent of the third person.[10] If the factor is notified that a consignment has been drawn against in favor of a third person who advanced the purchase-price to the consignor, the proceeds cannot be applied on a debt due the factor from the consignor on drafts drawn against other shipments which he has paid at the consignor's request.[11]

of a principal domiciled in another state of the Union as the interests of trade do not require it.[13] When a written contract is made and expressed to be with a foreign principal and not with the agent, the latter is not liable, although the contract be signed by him for and on account of the foreign principal.[14] Under the more modern decisions this distinction between a foreign and domestic factor is being obliterated.[15]

c. Pledge of Goods by Factor. A pledge of the principal's goods by a factor for his own use passes as against the principal no title or right under the common law to the innocent pledgee.[16] A pledgee may be held liable to account to the principal for the goods,[17] or he may be held liable in conversion.[18] But the innocent pledgee is generally held to have the right to recoup by the sum due from the principal to the factor for advances, expenses, commissions, etc.[19] The factor himself is estopped from setting up his own tortious act.[20] If after pledging the goods the factor sells them, the purchaser gets a good title and can enforce his rights against the pledgee.[21] And it has been held that a lien created by the

them, to the exoneration of their employers. Still, however, this presumption is liable to be rebutted by proofs that credit was given to both principal and agent or to the principal only." Story Agen. §§ 265, 268 [quoted in Kirkpatrick v. Stainer, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 244, 254].

The reason of this rule according to Justice Story is founded on "the presumption, that the party dealing with the agent intends to trust one who is known to him, and resides in the same country, and subject to the same law as himself, rather than one, who if known, cannot from his residence in a foreign country, be made amenable to those laws, and whose liability may be affected by local institutions, and local exemptions, which may put at hazard both his rights and his remedies." d. Rights and Liabilities Arising From Sale[23] by Factor — (i) GENERALLY. A factor with a general authority to sell goods intrusted to him or a factor held out to the world by his principal as possessing that authority may pass a good title to an innocent purchaser, although he sells in violation of his duty and of the secret instructions of his principal.[24] But the mere possession of goods by a factor is not evidence to the world that he has an unlimited authority to sell them so as to preclude the owner from impeaching a sale made by him by showing that goods were intrusted to him for a wholly different purpose, such as transportation to another place or temporary custody.[25] A bona fide sale by a factor of the goods of his principal for a valuable consideration by assigning over the bill of lading is valid as against the principal if the factor has the bill of lading in his possession;[26] and this is true, although the goods had not at the time of the transfer of the bill of lading come into the factor's hands.[27] But if the authority of a factor to sell has not yet been exercised the owner may countermand the consignment and sell the goods in transitu, and the purchaser's title will be valid.[28] If, however, the factor sells and delivers the property before notice of the revocation of his authority, the purchaser who has bought bona fide acquires a good title as against a prior purchaser from the consignor without delivery.[29] If the factor sells in his own name as owner and does not disclose his principal and acts ostensibly as the real and sole owner, the purchaser in an action by the principal upon the contract will be entitled, if he bona fide dealt with the factor as owner, to set off any claim he may have against the factor in answer to the demand of the principal.[30] But if the purchaser knew that the factor was

The delivery by the factor of goods in payment of an antecedent debt due to a person who knew that the goods belonged to another passes no title as against the true owner, to whom the deliveree may be made liable. Scriber v. Masten, 11 Cal. 303. But it has been held that where the principal allows his goods to be so managed by the factor as to indicate to third persons that the factor is the owner, the factor may make a valid sale in discharge of a previous debt to one who has no notice, actual or constructive. selling the goods as agent he has no right to set off in an action by the principal for the price of the goods a debt due to him from the factor, although the purchaser did not at the time of the purchase know or have the means of knowing who was the principal.[31] The mere fact that the vendor is a factor does not in the absence of other facts tend to show that he is not the real principal.[32] A factor with actual or constructive notice of a lien of a third person upon his principal's goods is liable to the owner of the lien for the loss thereof occurring through a sale made by the factor and his subsequent action.[33] A factor who innocently sells a consignment of goods which were stolen is liable to the purchaser to whom he sells if the goods are subsequently recovered by the true owner.[34] Where a factor makes a contract of sale for the benefit of his principal of goods to arrive within a certain period, the factor may, as against one who discounted drafts drawn on the goods consigned and to whom the bills of lading were delivered, substitute other goods of the same character in fulfilment of the contract.[35]

(II) Warranty by Factor. A factor, in the absence of authority from his principal or a custom or usage of trade, cannot give a warranty of the goods of his principal which he sells, so as to bind the principal.[36] But if the factor gives a warranty without designating that he acted as agent[37] or even if without authority he gives a warranty and the purchasers knew that he was acting as agent only,[38] he may be held personally liable on the warranty. The mere fact that the purchaser knew the name of the real owner of the goods does not preclude his right of holding the factor liable, where the purchaser intended to give credit to the factor.[39] That the factor was dealing with the property of a third person does not affect the right of the purchaser to retain the goods and seek his remedy founded upon a breach of warranty instead of returning the goods.[40]

(III) PROCEEDS OF SALE.[41] Factors have a right to receive payment from the purchaser of the principal's goods and to give receipts for payment, and a payment to the factor discharges pro tanto the claim of the principal unless notice is given to pay to the principal.[42] When payment is not made at the time of the purchase, a sale by a factor creates a contract between his principal and the purchaser,[43] and the latter has a right to pay the owner in spite of the objection of the factor,[44] and after notice of the claim of his principal the purchaser is bound to pay the proceeds to the principal.[45] In a suit against a factor, the buyer is not subject to garnishment for the debt due to the principal, whether the factor acts under a del credere commission or not.[46] A factor is liable to the true owner of goods for their proceeds unless he has actually and without notice of their true ownership paid over the proceeds to his principal or done something equivalent.[47] A mere entry on the factor's books to the credit of the principal is no answer to the claim of the true owner if the factor has not parted with anything of value.[48] If a bill of exchange is drawn against a consignment an indorser cannot claim that the factor is bound to apply the proceeds of the consignment to the payment of the bill, unless a letter of advice accompanying the consignment expressly directs a specific application of the proceeds of the consignment to the payment of the bill.[49] And even though a specific appropriation has been made, an indorser who had no notice of it and who did not negotiate and indorse the bill on the faith that the proceeds would be applied to its payment, has no other rights than those of an ordinary indorser.[50] Where a shipper assigns a bill of lading to a bank which discounts the draft drawn on a particular consignment, and the consignee has notice, he cannot apply the proceeds of the consignment to the payment of a draft of the consignor to himself, for the title to the consignment and the proceeds thereof belong to the bank to the extent of the draft discounted on the security thereof.[51] But if a bank discounts a draft and obtains no property in ized by the principal and not within the ordinary modes of transacting business, the principal may follow and reclaim the property whether the person dealing with the factor knew him to be such or not.[58] But if the principal has by any act of his own induced a third person to believe he has given the factor authority to dispose of the goods the principal cannot reclaim them.[59] The principal may recover goods[60] or the proceeds of a consignment[61] of a person to whom they were turned over in the payment of an antecedent debt due from the factor. If goods are wrongfully taken from the possession of a factor by an officer the owner may recover them back.[62]

(II) Factor Insolvent—(A) In General. If a consignor can trace his property into the hands of his factor, whether it be the identical article which came into the hands of the factor or other property purchased for the principal by the factor with the proceeds, he may follow it either into the hands of his factor or the factor's receiver or assignee for the benefit of the creditors.[63] A receiver or assignee of a factor who has become insolvent merely succeeds to his rights, and is under the same obligation to restore to the consignor the proceeds of his goods, which are distinguishable, as the factor himself.[64] All that the factor can transfer to the assignee is his lien on the goods for advances or commissions.[65]

f. Ratification by Principal of Agent's Acts. After sale made by a factor by sample contrary to instructions, the acknowledgment of liability by the principal, on the failure of the goods to comply with the sample, is a ratification of the sale.[68] As in other cases the act of ratification must be with knowledge.[69]

2. Under the Factors Acts — a. The Relieving Statutes. Owing to the hardship imposed by the common law upon third persons who entered into contracts without notice of the true ownership of the goods in the custody or control of factors, statutes have been passed for the protection of such persons.[70] The object of this remedial legislation was to protect innocent persons who dealt in reliance upon the apparent ownership of the factor resting upon the possession either of the merchandise itself[71] or the documentary evidence[72] of ownership.[73] It is said that the factors acts, being in derogation of the common law, should be strictly construed.[74]

b. Factor's Possession of Goods[75] — (i) In General. It has been held that the word "possession" as used in that portion of the Factors Act which provides "that a factor intrusted with the possession of any merchandise for the purpose of sale," etc., shall be deemed the true owner thereof" means actual possession as distinguished from constructive possession.[76] But the word is said to mean such control of or dominion over merchandise as to enable a factor rightfully to take possession of it without the aid of any new authority or document furnished by the owner.[77] Goods in a warehouse subject to be withdrawn at pleasure by a factor on discharging the lien of the government for duties may be regarded as in his possession so as to support a pledge thereof made by him independent of the provisions of the act in regard to documentary evidences of title.[78] The

70. The first act was passed in the fourth year of George IV. Russell Fact. 122 [quoted in Price v. Wisconsin M. & F. Ins. Co., 43 Wis. 267]. This act was followed by several enlarging and amendatory acts, viz., 6 Geo. IV, c. 94; 5 & 6 Vict. c. 39; 40 & 41 Vict. c. 39; and finally the entire preceding legislation was amended and consolidated by 52 & 53 Vict. c. 45, entitled the Factors Act (1889). L. R. 26 St. 186. St. 6 Geo. IV, c. 94 was followed more or less closely by several states in this country, New York having enacted a Factors Act by Laws (1830), c. 179. The New York statute has been copied more or less closely in a number of states. Price v. Wisconsin M. & F. Ins. Co., supra. And with the exception of the repeal of three of the less important sections (N. Y. Laws (1897), c. 418, repealing sections 1 and 2; N. Y. Laws (1886), c. 593, repealing section 7), it constitutes at the present time in its original form a part of the statutory law of the state of New York (2 Birdseye Rev. St. (3d ed. 1901) p. 1). In England the different amendments just enumerated were necessary because the courts refused to relax the rules of the common law any further than they were absolutely required to do by a very narrow and literal construction of the statutes in question. See Russell Fact. 140 [quoted in Price v. Wisconsin M. & F. Ins. Co., supra. that "nothing contained in this act shall authorize a common carrier, warehouse-keeper or other person to whom merchandise or other property may be committed for transportation or storage only, to sell or hypothecate the same" comprehends a factor intrusted with the possession for transportation or storage only.[81] Under 5 & 6 Vict. an agent in possession of goods but whose authority to sell has been revoked and who wrongfully retained them after a demand for them by the principal is not deemed in possession for the purposes of sale or pledge, although the pledgee knew nothing of the revocation of authority;[82] but at the present time any sale, pledge, or other disposition of the goods by an agent in possession is valid, although his authority has been revoked, provided that the person who claims the protection of the statute had no notice that the authority had been determined.[83]

(II) UNDER CONDITIONAL SALE OR SIMILAR TRANSACTION. Where a person who is in possession of goods under a conditional sale sells and delivers them before all the rent has been paid to one who receives them in good faith and without notice of the rights of the conditional vendor, the sale and delivery are within the provisions of the English Factors Act of 1889, section 9,[84] and the second vendee gets a good title;[85] but a person who has agreed to hire goods on condition that he may terminate the contract at any time by returning them to the owner but that upon the payment of certain instalments they shall become his property is not a person who has "agreed to buy goods" within said act,[86] and consequently a pledge by him to a third person without notice of the rights attaching to the goods is invalid as against the owner.[87] Where a debtor makes an assignment for the benefit of

It seems to us plain, that it is the special purpose for which merchandise or other property is committed, and not the special character or business of the person to whom it is committed, that takes from him the authority to sell that he might otherwise be held to possess. We are therefore convinced that no court of justice has the right to say that the words, 'or other person,' &c., are not just as applicable to commission merchants and factors, to whom goods are entrusted for transportation or storage only, as to any other class or description of persons whatever." c. Factor's Possession of Documents of Title[89]—(I) In General. Under the New York statute it is unnecessary that the principal should have intrusted the factor with the identical evidence of title on the faith of which he procures a lien. Intrusting him with the primary document is equivalent to intrusting him with all others which in ordinary usage of trade grow out of it.[90] The English courts construed 6 Geo. IV, c. 94, to mean that the identical document must have been intrusted by the owner to the factor.[91] Immediately upon these decisions parliament passed an act for the purpose of preventing their force, so that whether the document in question was derived immediately from the owner of the goods or obtained by reason of the factor having been intrusted with other documents the factor was deemed to have been intrusted with the derivative document.[92] To entitle a person to the protection of the statute, it is necessary that the relation of principal and factor should exist.[93] Thus it was held in England before 40 & 41 Vict.[94] that a vendor who retained the documents of title was not a person intrusted therewith within the meaning of the statute.[95]

This defect in the law was remedied.[96] The document must be actually transferred, at the time the advance is made, to the person advancing the money, and the transfer must vest in the transferee either a title to the goods or the exclusive means or right of obtaining actual possession.[97] The provisions of the statute that a factor intrusted with the possession of the document of title shall be deemed the true owner thereof so far as to give validity to his contracts made with third persons for money advanced or written obligations given by them "on the faith thereof" intend to refer merely to such evidences of title as that alone on the faith of which such advances are made.[98] The protection of persons dealing with any agent intrusted with the possession of a document of title does not apply where the possession was obtained without the owner's consent.[99] The fact that a person to whom documentary evidence of title is intrusted is called a trustee in a secret agreement under which he is intrusted with the document does not make him a trustee as to third persons having no notice of the agreement.[1]

(II) As to What Are Such Documents. By the New York statute, the documents of title, the possession of which entitles a person dealing with the factor to treat him as owner, are: (1) "A bill of lading;" (2) "a custom-house permit;[2]" and (3) "a warehouse-keeper's receipt[3] for the delivery of any such merchandise;" that is, the merchandise described in the first and second sections as shipped from some other port, foreign or domestic.[4] Under an arrangement whereby delivery should be made to persons producing cash receipts from the cashiers and holders of a bill of lading the receipts were held not to be documents of title within the meaning of 40 & 41 Vict. c. 39.[5] A delivery was allowed to remain entered in the books of the dock company in the name of the vendor.

3. The term "warehouse-keeper's receipt" means the receipt of a keeper of a private warehouse in which the person named in the receipt has deposited goods for safe-keeping which by its terms binds the warehouse-keeper upon the surrender of the receipt to deliver the goods to the bearer of it or to the holder of it if duly indorsed to him. It does not include the receipt of a keeper of a government bonded warehouse. Bonito v. Mosquera, 2 Bosw. (N. order is not equivalent to a bill of lading within the meaning of 6 Geo. IV, c. 94, § 2.[6]

d. Rights Derived From Person in Whose Name Goods Have Been Shipped. One of the provisions of the Factors Act is that every person in whose name merchandise shall be shipped shall be deemed to be the true owner thereof so far as to entitle the consignee to a lien thereon for money advanced or negotiable security given by such consignee to or for the use of the person in whose name the shipments shall have been made or for any money or negotiable security received by the persons in whose name such shipments shall have been made to one for the use of such consignee. This provision applies only where the owner consents to have the shipments in the name of a third person.[7] It does not apply where such shipment has been made without his consent,[8] as where goods have been stolen,[9] or where the property has been intrusted to an agent to ship in the owner's name and the agent shipped it in his own name and obtained advances thereon.[10] Nor does the provision apply to or include one who discounts a draft drawn by the consignor on the consignee but not accepted, since the act is designed only to protect factors, agents, and consignees appearing to be such on the bill of lading and who are induced by the bill to pay money or incur liabilities.[11] This particular part of the Factors Act has been repealed in New York.[12]

e. Pledge by Factor of Goods or Documents of Title. By the general rule the Factors Act protects the pledgees, whether the pledge has been made of the goods themselves[13] or of documentary evidences of title.[14] But a pledgee is not protected where the factor-pledgor obtained the goods from the owner by fraudulent representations and on forged conditional contracts of sale.[15] And it has been said that the Factors Act was framed for the regulation of the conduct of factors within the jurisdiction where the act was passed and for the protection of those who dealt with them there and not for the determination of questions arising upon the pledge by a factor in a foreign country, although the delivery of the goods in pursuance of the contract made in the foreign country may have been consummated by the agents of the parties in the jurisdiction of the forum.[16] In England the statute validating a pledge by a mercantile agent refers to a person of a class ordinarily carrying on that description of business or a person held out to the world as belonging to that class.[17] The statute does not apply to pledges for antecedent liabilities,[18] except to the extent defined therein.[19]

Where a factor makes an agreement with a warehouse owner that negotiable receipts shall be made out without bale marks, so that other goods equal in kind and quality may be substituted for those in storage, the substitution of other goods than those receipted for subsequent to the pledge of the receipts does not operate as a pledge for an antecedent debt.[20] In such case the release of the older bales of goods constitutes a valuable consideration for subjecting the new bale as deposited to the same lien.[21]

f. Consideration For the Transfer, Pledge, Etc. Under 6 Geo. IV, c. 94, § 3,[22] the deposit or pledge of a document of title must be for money or a negotiable instrument.[23] In Wisconsin it is held that the act does not apply to a barter by the factor for his own use of his principal's goods in his possession.[24] But in England the consideration necessary for the validity of a sale, pledge, or other disposition of goods may be any valuable consideration; but where the goods are pledged by the factor, the pledgee acquires no right or interest in the goods so pledged in excess of the value of whatever is transferred in exchange.[25]

g. Notice of Agency. It is held that the statute gives no protection to one who makes advances with notice that the factor has possession only as agent of his principal the intent being to protect only innocent purchasers.[26] To render valid a contract made on the faith of the document of title, the language thereof must not be inconsistent with the supposition that the factor owns the goods.[27] In the pledgee for an antecedent debt shall not acquire or enforce any right or interest in or to the merchandise or documents pledged other than was possessed or might have been enforced by the agent at the time of the pledge. Sufficiency of notice.— It is said that inasmuch as the factor has by the statute both the power of sale and of pledge and that a contract can be invalidated only by the nonexistence of both of these powers, since either is sufficient, it must be shown, to disprove reliance on the factor's possession as evidence of proper authority, that the purchaser had knowledge of such entire want of statutory authority on the part of the factor or of circumstances sufficient to put him upon inquiry and naturally leading to its discovery. The mere knowledge of the factor's employment in a particular case is not enough to put the purchaser or pledgee on inquiry as to the exact nature of the factor's authority. England[28] a contract with a factor for the pledge of goods is held valid as against the principal, although the person dealing with the factor knows him to be only an agent, if the person so dealing with the factor acts bona fide and without notice that the factor is acting mala fide and beyond his authority.[29] The provision of 6 Geo. IV, c. 94, § 5, authorizing the agent or factor to pledge the goods of his principal to the extent of the factor's lien to persons who are aware of his fiduciary character and of the want of authority from the principal to pledge the goods was not preserved in the New York statute[30] or in the English Factors Act of 1889.[31]

3. Actions By and Against Principals and Factors — a. Right of Action and Parties.[32] Factors in possession of goods may maintain an action in their own name for any damage done to the goods,[33] particularly where they have a lien for advances and for their guaranty;[34] and they may maintain an action against the carrier of the goods for injuries thereto during transportation[35] or an action to enforce a contract made by them for the storage of the goods,[36] or to recover goods which have been wrongfully taken from the place where they had stored them;[37] and where goods are delivered to a carrier to be transported to meet advances and in pursuance of a special agreement for that purpose invoices for the goods are sent to the factor by the consignor, a vested interest passes to the factor entitling him to maintain replevin against the sheriff who levies, subsequent to the delivery to the carrier, on the goods on execution against the consignor.[38] Factors compelled to pay an illegal exaction to a government officer for permission to ship goods in their possession may maintain a suit to recover the amount of the exaction in cases where the owner might do so.[39] A factor has a special property in goods consigned to him and in the proceeds of a sale thereof, and he has a right to sue in his own name for the recovery of the purchase-price of the goods.[40] A factor who makes a contract of sale for his principal is a trustee of an express trust within the meaning of the code or statutory provision that a trustee of an express trust may sue without joining with him a person for whose benefit the action is prosecuted.[41] The principal may sue for the recovery of the purchase-price whether at the time of the sale the vendee knew that the factor was acting as agent,[42] or whether the agency was undisclosed.[43] And where the factor sues in his own name, the principal may control the litigation, saving the rights of the factor, unless the latter's legitimate charges against the subject of the action exceed the amount recoverable.[44] The principal may maintain an action against the sheriff for taking goods from the possession of the factor[45] or for taking the proceeds of the sale of the goods upon an attachment against the factor.[46] A foreign principal may sue in his own name for goods sold by his agent in the jurisdiction of the forum, although no agency was disclosed at the time of the sale, unless it is made affirmatively to appear that exclusive credit was given to the agent by proof other than the mere fact that the principal resided in another state or country;[47] and if the purchaser of a consignment becomes insolvent, the non-resident consignor is not affected by the discharge of the insolvent but can sue to recover the price for which the goods were sold.[48]

notice of the factor's lien, the principal may have replevin or trover against the pledgee without a previous demand for the goods.[49] A creditor of the consignor cannot, by foreign attachment, arrest a sale of the goods by the factor without first tendering him the amount of his advances.[50]

c. Form of Action. If a factor pledges goods of his principal the principal may bring trover against both the factor and his pledgee or either of them,[51] or he may replevy the goods from the pledgee.[52] A factor who has advanced money on goods has sufficient interest in them to support an action of replevin.[53]

d. Defenses. The lien of a factor is a personal privilege and cannot be set up by any other person in defense to an action by the principal.[54] It is no defense to an action by the factor for the price of goods sold that the sale was made by the factor's agent without authority from the principal, as such objection can be raised only by the principal.[55]

e. Pleading.[56] Where a factor claims to have paid a balance due his principal by notes of the principal, in a bill by the principal's assignee against the factor for an account the latter must answer particularly interrogatories as to how he came into possession of the notes and upon what terms.[57]

f. Evidence.[58] The general rules of evidence control the burden of proof[59] as well as the presumptions[60] which arise in such actions; and the same is true with respect to the admissibility of evidence,[61] as well as its weight and suf-

59. Kauffman v. Beasley, 54 Tex. 563, holding that where the owner of goods brings in question the transaction by which a third person obtains the goods from the factor, the burden of proving the factor's authority to transfer the goods in the manner questioned is upon the transferee.

60. Where the principal claims goods seized for his factor's debt and it is in evidence that some of the consignments of which the goods in question formed a part had been sold by the factor and that part of the consignment had been paid for by the factor, the presumption is that the factor had paid only to the extent of the goods he had sold. Powell v. Brunner, 86 Ga. 531, 12 S. E. 744, where plaintiff insisted that it was incumbent upon the claimant to prove the amount paid, as it was within his power to do so by his books or otherwise, and that as he failed to produce the evidence the presumption would arise not only that the goods sold by the factor had been paid for but also the whole or a part of that which remained unsold; and where the court held that, inasmuch as the factor's contract was to pay for the goods when and as he sold it, plaintiff's contention could not be sustained.

61. See cases cited infra, this note.

Telegram.— Where goods in the hands of the factor have been seized for his debts, a telegram from the factor to his principal informing him that he, the factor, had failed and that the sheriff was moving "your goods" was not admissible, upon a claim by the principal, to show title in the principal; but since it shows that it was sent after levy was made it must be considered as a mere declaration on the factor's part recognizing title in the claimant principal after the factor had virtually lost possession of the property and after the matter in controversy between plaintiff and claimant had arisen. But the error in admitting the telegram in evidence is not sufficient to reverse the judgment where evidence of title in the claimant was shown to be ample and uncontradicted. Powell v. Brunner, 86 Ga. 531, 12 S. E. 744.

Usages of the trade.— In an action by a factor for insurance money covering goods consigned to him which he had insured without express direction from his principal, evidence that it was the usage of the trade to effect insurance on consignments without exficiency.[62] In an action by a shipper against a railroad for damages to the goods shipped, evidence as to the condition of the account between plaintiff and the factor to whom the goods were consigned is irrelevant, since the factor is not the owner of the goods, although he may have advanced money equal to or even exceeding their value.[63]

g. Trial.[64] Whether the possession of the factor is fraudulent is a question for the jury.[65] In an action for the proceeds of goods sold by a factor who claimed a lien for advances, where the issue is whether a certain transaction between the consignor and plaintiffs, who were third persons, constituted a sale, the question is for the jury.[66]

B. Regulation of Business[68] — 1. License-Tax — a. In General. In some states by constitution,[69] and in others by statute,[70] the occupation of brokerage is subject to taxation as a privilege. The imposition of a license-tax is a valid exercise of the police power of the state,[71] and the power to tax may lawfully be delegated to a municipality.[72]

b. Persons Liable to Tax. Any person who acts as middleman or negotiates commercial transactions in behalf of clients is ordinarily deemed a broker within the meaning of a statute or ordinance imposing a license-tax on brokers.[73] The

"It is entirely clear that in these transactions [purchases on long account on margin] the party employed, though he belongs to a class commonly called 'brokers,' does not act as broker merely. In such business they are more than brokers, according to the legal signification of that term; and all arguments, imputing to them a mere agency so far as they rest upon the facts, that they are called 'brokers,' are unsound and fallacious. A broker, is a mere intermediate agent, negotiating between buyer and seller. As broker, he is not entitled to the possession of the property, which is the subject of sale or purchase; nor does he, in the character of broker, receive or pay the price, nor is he authorized to do so. It is his office to negotiate contracts between others, which they carry into execution, by performance (Higgins v. Moore, 34 N. Y. 417; and cases cited). The business we are considering is of a widely different character, to which the whole responsibility of the broker (so called), is committed. In some of its analogies his relation to the transaction is far more like that of a factor holding goods for sale, under a del credere commission, and under advances to his principal. In another and similar view, his office and duty is in the nature of a trust, to be executed for the profit or loss of his principal, conditioned on the performance by the principal, of his duty to keep the marginal security good; and is determinable at the option of either party." An officer of a company formed to carry on stock-broking who in the course of business bought stock for a customer and signed the bought-and-sold notes, the principals not seeing one another and no one else acting as broker in the transaction, is liable to the penalty imposed on persons acting as brokers without a license. Scott v. Cousins, L. R. 4 C. P. 177, 38 L. J. C. P. 156, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 32, 17 Wkly. Rep. 324.

A person not engaged in regular brokerage business need not take out a license. Johnson v. Williams, 8 Ind. App. 677, 36 N. E. 167.

One who, at public sale, disposes of tax-receivable coupons detached from state bonds, but not taken from bonds belonging to the seller, is not a stock-broker under Va. St. (Acts Gen. Assembly 1883–1884) § 65, requiring stock-brokers to take out a license, although the seller received compensation for making the sale. Com. v. Lucas, 84 Va. 303, 4 S. E. 695.

Evidence of brokerage.— Testimony that witness took S to an office used by defendant, that on that occasion four memoranda were made by defendant, each of the sale by S of £1,000 stock to a person whose name did not transpire, that nothing was handed over at the time, and that witness did not see any money pass, is evidence of an acting by defendant as a broker. Scott v. North, L. R. 2 C. P. 270, 15 L. T. Rep. N. S. 508.

75. Little Rock v. Barton, 33 Ark. 436; Buckley v. Humason, 50 Minn. 195, 52 N. W. 385, 36 Am. St. Rep. 637, 16 L. R. A. 423 (so holding, although the property in question is situated in another state); Pittsburgh v. Coyle, 24 Pittsb. Leg. J. (Pa.) 352 (holding that persons engaged in sale of real estate and loans on mortgages and renting houses are real-estate brokers); Blackford v. State, 8 Heisk. (Tenn.) 538.

A person who negotiates a lease for another is not within an ordinance which provides that "it shall not be lawful for any person to exercise within the city the business of . . . selling of or negotiating sales of real estate belonging to others . . . without a license." Hamilton v. Harvey, 33 Ill. App. 499, 503.

One employed to buy a piece of real estate does not thereby become a real-estate broker, so as to come within the act requiring such brokers to be licensed; and therefore a contract to pay him for his services cannot be repudiated as unlawful. Chadwick v. Collins, 26 Pa. St. 138.

One who, while engaged in other business, sells land for another under a special contract, may recover his commission, although he has not taken out a license, as required for real-estate agents. O'Neill v. Sinclair, 153 Ill. 525, 39 N. E. 124 [affirming 54 Ill. App. 298]; Pope v. Beals, 108 Mass. 561; Black v. Snook, 204 Pa. St. 119, 58 Atl. 648; Shepler v. Scott, 85 Pa. St. 329; Raeder v. Butler, 19 Pa. Super. Ct. 604.

Single or occasional sales.— One who makes a single (Jackson v. Hough, 38 W. Va. 236, 18 S. E. 575) or occasional (Yedinskey v. Strouse, 6 Pa. Super. Ct. 587) sale of real property is not a broker.

Residence of broker.— The fact that a man living outside of the city of Chicago was interested with a real-estate firm there in transactions in Chicago real estate, that he made frequent trips to Indiana at their instance, and made their office his headquarters while they were putting trades through, does not make him a real-estate broker, within a Chicago ordinance requiring such brokers to take out a license, where he had no desk, sign, card, or letter-head indicating that he was engaged in the real-estate business in Chicago. Spear v. Bull, 49 Ill. App. 348.

76. Stratford v. Montgomery, 110 Ala. 619, 20 So. 127 (holding that a person engaged in selling on commission in a city merchandise by sample for his several principals, having an office where his samples are exhibited, is a local commercial broker, al-

it is to negotiate purchases or sales of stocks, exchange, bullion, coined money, bank-notes, promissory notes, or other securities, for himself or for others.[77]

2. OFFENSES BY BROKERS.[78] It is competent for the legislature to define and punish offenses peculiar to brokerage,[79] such for instance as transacting business without a license.[80] Brokers, as other persons, may be guilty of other though he makes special arrangements in advance with those by whom he is employed, and is their sole representative in his city); Harby v. Hot Springs, (Ark. 1889) 11 S. W. 694 (holding that one who negotiates sales of goods of which he has not the possession or control by wholesale to retail dealers for commission is a "commercial broker" within an ordinance requiring such persons to procure licenses); Stockard v. Morgan, 105 Tenn. 412, 58 S. One confining himself to the sale of goods as an agent is a merchandise broker. Spears v. Loague, 6 Coldw. (Tenn.) 420.

77. Warren v. Shook, 91 U. S. 704, 23 L. ed. 421.

Buyers as brokers.— Commercial brokers who act wholly as buyers (other parties acting as sellers, and they, and not the brokers, receiving the purchase-money) do not make "sales" as commercial brokers, within the internal revenue act of 1866 (14 St. 134). Collector v. Doswell, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 156, 21 L. ed. 350. A person who buys stocks in his own name for his customers for a commission, and advances the purchase-money on the security of a percentage of such price deposited with him as security against loss, and sells the stocks for another commission, and settles the account according to the resulting balance to the credit of the customer, but who has no interest except his commissions and interest on his advances, the whole being at the risk and for the account of the customer as to profit and loss, does business as a broker within the internal revenue act of June 30, 1864, section 99 (13 St. 273). Northrup v. Shook, 18 Fed. Cas. No. 10,329, 10 Blatchf. 243. A person who purchases in his own name stocks, bonds, etc., for others, and advances his own money, and takes the transfers in his own name, and holds the stocks, bonds, etc., as security for the repayment of the money, and on its repayment delivers the securities according to agreement, or in default of repayment sells them to reimburse himself, and who also purchases and sells stocks, bonds, etc., for others, under certain stipulations as to risks, losses, and profits, is doing the business of a broker, within the internal revenue act of June 30, 1864 (13 St. 251). Clark v. Gilbert, 5 Fed. Cas. No. 2,822, 5 Blatchf. 330.

Sellers as brokers.— Under the internal revenue act of June 30, 1864 (13 U. S. St. at L. 218), as amended by the act of March 3, 1865, providing (section 99) that all brokers shall be subject to pay certain duties on sales of specified articles, and (section 79, par. 9) that every person whose business it is as a broker to negotiate purchases or sales of stocks, exchange, promissory notes, or other securities for themselves or others shall be regarded as a broker, the sales of stocks, bonds, and securities made by brokers for themselves are subject to the same duties as those made by them for others. U. S. v. Cutting, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 441, 18 L. ed. 241. See also Northrup v. Shook, 18 Fed. Cas. No. 10,329, 10 Blatchf. 243.

Bankers doing business as brokers were subject to taxation as brokers under the internal revenue act of June 30, 1864 (13 St. 251). Warren v. Shook, 91 U. S. 704, 23 L. ed. 421; Clark v. Gilbert, 5 Fed. Cas. No. 2,822, 5 Blatchf. 330. They were liable for the tax on all sales made by them, whether of property of their own or of others, on an ordinary brokerage contract or on a margin contract. Northrup v. Shook, 18 Fed. Cas. No. 10,329, 10 Blatchf. 243. See, however, U. S. v. Fisk, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 445, 18 L. ed. 243; Clark v. Gilbert, 5 Fed. Cas. No. 2,822, 5 Blatchf. 330.

80. Com. v. Manley, 2 Phila. (Pa.) 173 (holding that where a broker carries on his business without having obtained his commission, the penalty is not waived by the subsequent acceptance of the license-tax by the county treasurer); Com. v. Lucas, 84 Va. 303, 4 S. E. 695 (holding that the offense described in Va. Acts (1883–1884), § 65, of conducting the business of a tax-receivable coupon broker without a license, is a distinct offense from that described in sections 58 and 60 of the same act, for doing business as a stock-broker without a license).

Exclusiveness of penalty.—Unless it clearly appears that the legislature intended more, it will be held that the penalty imposed by W. Va. Code (1899), c. 32, on a real-estate agent selling property on commission without a license excludes all others. Ober v. Stephens, 54 W. Va. 354, 46 S. E. 195.

offenses also in the transaction of their brokerage business, such as larceny[81] or criminal conversion.[82]

C. Employment and Authority[83] — 1. Nature of Relation. The relation existing between a broker and his customer is ordinarily a special agency.[84]

2. Appointment or Employment[85] — a. In General. To create the relation of broker and principal there must be a contract of employment, express or implied.[86]

82. Boyd v. Barrett, 16 Phila. (Pa.) 653, holding that where stock-brokers bought scrip on the order of plaintiff, and received payments on account which they appropriated to their own use, they were guilty of a breach of trust.

Brokers as agents.— The term "agent," as used in Mich. Comp. Laws, § 11,572, providing that whenever money shall be delivered to any person as agent with written instructions as to the use to which it shall be applied, and such person shall intentionally appropriate the money in any other manner than directed, he shall be guilty of a felony, includes a broker, and justifies his conviction for misapplying money deposited with him to be used in the purchase of stock. People v. Karste, 132 Mich. 455, 93 N. W. 1081.

Questions for jury.—Where prosecutor sent money to defendant, with which to purchase certain stock as soon as it could be purchased at the price named, and defendant replied that the money had been placed to prosecutor's credit, whether the intention of the parties was to create the relation of debtor and creditor, or to constitute the fund a special deposit, so as to render defendant liable for its misapplication in violation of Mich. Comp. Laws, § 11,572, was a question for the jury. People v. Karste, 132 Mich. 455, 93 N. W. 1081.

Debtor and creditor.— Where a person receives from another certain notes for the purpose of negotiating their sale, which he does, charging a commission, he is a mere broker, and no relation of debtor and creditor exists between them. American Valley Co. v. Wyman, 92 Mo. App. 294.

Partnership.— Where a real-estate agent has a written contract with the owner of land to put upon the market, advertise, and sell the same, having for his interest a share in the profits from the sale of the land, the contract is one of agency, and not of partnership. Durkee v. Gunn, 41 Kan. 496, 21 Pac. 637, 13 Am. St. Rep. 300, 41 Kan. 503, 21 Pac. 1054.

Special contract.— Where, to the ordinary business of broker, some special employment and undertaking is superadded by express contract, the liability of the broker results from such contract, and not simply from his character of broker. Deady v. Goodenough, 5 U. C. C. P. 163.

See 8 Cent. Dig. tit. "Brokers," § 5.

Signature of contract of agency.— A written proposition to employ one as agent to sell land, signed by the proposer and accepted by the agent, although not signed by him, makes a binding contract of agency, enforceable against both. Rowan v. Hull, (W. Va. 1904) 47 S. E. 92.

Implied appointment.—Where a broker asks and obtains from the owner of land the price at which he is willing to sell it, this of itself does not establish the relation of principal and agent between them. Castner v. Richardson, 18 Colo. 496, 33 Pac. 163. See also Mainwaring v. Crane, 22 Quebec Super. Ct.

b. Necessity of Written Authority. In the absence of statute to the contrary,[87] a contract for the employment of a broker need not be in writing.[88]

c. Identity of Principal.[89] A broker acting strictly as middleman to effect a purchase and sale of property is the common agent of both buyer and seller;[90] otherwise he is the agent of the party originally employing him.[91]

Evidence of agency.— In an action for deceit arising out of an exchange of property through a broker, evidence that defendant stated that his broker had made a mean trade for him warrants a finding that such broker was acting for defendant in effecting the exchange. Arnold v. Teel, 182 Mass. 1, 64 N. E. 413. Any evidence is ordinarily admissible which has a direct bearing on the question of agency. Bassett v. Rogers, 162 Mass. 47, 37 N. E. 772; Horwitz v. Pepper, 128 Mich. 688, 87 N. W. 1034.

Validity of contract of employment.— Where the abbreviations used in a broker's authorization to sell land were such that parties familiar with land descriptions could understand them easily, their use did not render the authorization void for uncertainty. Melone v. Ruffino, 129 Cal. 514, 62 Pac. 93, 79 Am. St. Rep. 127. So a contract to pay commissions for procuring customers from a certain county for real estate, and for all customers in a certain town in such county, is not invalid because there is no limit as to time. Consideration.— Where one employs another as agent to sell land for remuneration on performance, the contract is based on a sufficient consideration. Albany Land Co. v. Rickel, 162 Ind. 222, 70 N. E. 158; Rowan v. Hull, (W. Va. 1904) 47 S. E. 92.

Assignment of contract of agency.— Where the contract of a firm to act as a real-estate agent for a corporation was assigned to one member of the firm, who proceeded with the business, selling lots and rendering monthly reports in his own name, and the corporation accepted the reports and proceeds of the sales, and executed checks and other papers to the assignee in his own name, it constituted a ratification of the assignment. A merchandise broker is, for the purpose of signing the memorandum of sale, the agent of both parties to the contract which he makes; but in other respects he is the agent only of the party originally employing him. Schlesinger v. Texas, etc., R. Co., 87 Mo. 146 [affirming 13 Mo. App. 471].

91. Schlesinger v. Texas, etc., R. Co., 87 Mo. 146 [affirming 13 Mo. App. 471]. See also Moorehead v. Gilmore, 77 Pa. St. 118, 18 Am. Rep. 435, holding that where a partner in a firm drew a note in favor of another firm of which also he was a member, and, after it was indorsed by the payees, he indorsed the name of the former firm without authority, and the note was held by a known bill broker, the broker was the agent of the payees and not of the buyer.

A merchandise broker is the agent of him who employs him originally, and only becomes the agent of the other party when the bargain between the principals is definitely settled. Woods v. Rocchi, 32 La. Ann. 210. So where a cotton broker, by permission of the owner, takes samples of a cargo of cotton and exhibits them to one who, relying on the samples, purchases a portion of the cargo, and the owner delivers the cotton and pays the brokerage, the broker is the agent of the owner. Boorman v. Jenkins, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 566, 27 Am. Dec. 158.

Loan brokers.— Where a person makes application for a loan from a real-estate broker, the broker is the agent of the borrower and not of the lender. Henken v. Schwicker, 67 N. Y. App. Div. 196, 73 N. Y. Suppl. 656. So a company which is to receive a commission from a borrower for procuring a loan, and which makes out all the papers without knowing from whom the loan is to be obtained and before submitting them to the lender, is the

d. Authority to Employ Subagent or Broker. An agent to sell property cannot ordinarily, without special authority, bind the principal by the employment of a broker to effect the sale.[92]

3. Duration and Termination of Agency.[93] In the absence of a contract fixing the duration of a broker's agency,[94] either of the parties may terminate it at will[95] by giving notice,[96] subject only to the ordinary requirements of good agent of the borrower in procuring the loan. Hamil v. American Freehold Land Mortg. Co., 127 Ala. 90, 28 So. 558; Land Mortg. Invest. Agency Co. of America v. Preston, 119 Ala. 290, 24 So. 707. The fact that a lender of money deposits in bank a fund subject to the check of a loan broker for the amount of a loan, if the lender after examination should approve the same, does not render the broker the agent of the lender for the purpose of making loans. Barksdale v. Security Invest. Co., 120 Ga. 388, 47 S. E. 943. So the fact that a loan agent who is in the habit of sending applications to, and obtaining loans from, an insurance company, as well as other parties, is the agent of said company for the purpose of procuring insurance, does not constitute him their agent in respect of loans obtained by him from them. Massachusetts Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Boggs, 121 Ill. 119, 13 N. E. 550. And where the maker of a note payable to the order of another applied to a broker to negotiate a loan on the note, and the broker applied to one who agreed to lend money if the security was all right and requested the broker to make inquiries and report the particulars, and the broker procured the payee's indorsement on the note, the broker was not the agent of the lender in procuring the indorsement. Burlingame v. Foster, 128 Mass. 125.

Real-estate brokers.— A broker employed to sell real estate is the agent of the vendor. Gough v. Loomis, 123 Iowa 642, 99 N. W. 295; Dubois v. Dubois, 54 Iowa 216, 6 N. W. 261; Earp v. Cummins, 54 Pa. St. 394, 93 Am. Dec. 718. However, the broker may become the agent of the purchaser in paying for the land, if money be placed by the purchaser in his hands for that purpose. Small v. Collins, 6 Houst. (Del.) 273. A broker employed to purchase real estate is the agent of the purchaser, although he afterward acts or assumes to act for the vendor. Marsh v. Buchan, 46 N. J. Eq. 595, 22 Atl. 128.

92. Bonwell v. Howes, 15 Daly (N. Y.) 43, 2 N. Y. Suppl. 717 [reversing 1 N. Y. Suppl. 435] (so holding, although the customary method of selling land in the city where the transaction occurred was through brokers); Carroll v. Tucker, 2 Misc. (N. Y.) 397, 21 N. Y. Suppl. 952 (holding that authority given an agent "to take any steps necessary to sell" property does not empower him to employ another broker to make a sale); Insurance Co. of North America v. East Tennessee, etc., R. Co., 97 Tenn. 326, 37 S. W. 225. Where, however, an agent having authority to sell land, exercising his discretion as to price, examines the land and fixes the price and terms, he may employ a real-estate agent to find a purchaser, and a sale by him will be enforced, if he was required to obtain his commission in addition to the price agreed upon, although the agent may have been requested by his principal not to employ a subagent. Renwick v. Bancroft, 56 Iowa 527, 9 N. W. 367. And where a non-resident owner of land employs an agent, also a non-resident, to sell the same, it will be presumed that the agent has authority to appoint a subagent. Eastland v. Maney, (Tex. Civ. App. 1904) 81 S. W. 574. See, generally, PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

Husband and wife.— A wife may authorize her husband to employ a broker for the sale of her property. Simes v. Rockwell, 156 Mass. 372, 31 N. E. 484; Esmond v. Kingsley, 3 N. Y. Suppl. 696. Signature of contract.— A contract giving a broker a certain time within which to make sales may be valid from the time its terms are agreed on, although it is never signed. Green v. Cole, 103 Mo. 70, 15 S. W. 317.

Necessity of notice.— The owner must, if he wishes to rescind the contract of agency with a broker on account of the incompetency of the agent, notify the agent to that effect. Jones v. Berry, 37 Mo. App. 125. See, however, White v. Benton, 121 Iowa 354, 96 N. W. 876.

Communication of revocation.— Authority to sell land is not revoked by a letter mailed to the brokers, but never received by them. Sayre v. Wilson, 86 Ala. 151, 5 So. 157. A letter written by a principal to a broker, terminating his agency to sell property, and addressed to his place of residence, where it was delivered at his office, took effect from the date of such delivery, although by reason of the broker's absence, which was unknown to the principal, he did not personally receive it until some weeks later, he having in the meantime taken no action in the matter of the agency. The principal cannot revoke the agency after the broker has procured a purchaser able, ready, and willing to buy. Blumenthal v. Goodall, 89 Cal. 251, 26 Pac. 906.

Revocation before sale.— A merchant who agrees to allow a broker, as commission for producing a sale of merchandise, all that he could sell the goods for above a certain price, may revoke the agreement at any time before the broker has consummated a contract of sale. May v. Schuyler, 43 N. Y. Super. Ct. 95. So the interest of a real-estate broker in commissions to be earned will not prevent a revocation of his agency at any time prior to a sale. Neal v. Lehman, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 461, 34 S. W. 153.

What constitutes revocation.— Where the owner of real estate, after employing an agent to collect the rents, make improvements, keep the property insured, etc., took the property out of the hands of the agent, and demanded and received of him the papers relating to the property, including the agreement appointing him agent, the authority of the agent was revoked. Hunn v. Ashton, 121 Iowa 265, 96 N. W. 745. An agency created for the sale of land is terminated by the withdrawal by the principal of the land from the market. 1. Simpson v. Carson, 11 Oreg. 361, 8 Pac. 325 (holding by implication that a written agreement, not under seal, giving a real-estate broker "the exclusive sale of land" at a certain price, and to pay him all over that sum as commissions, may not be rescinded if a consideration or actual indebtedness is shown); McLane v. Maurer, 28 Tex. Civ. App. 75, 66 S. W. 693, 1108 (holding that where a contract authorized brokers to sell defendant's lands within a certain period, provided that defendant might sell all or any part of the land, the proviso did not authorize defendant to revoke the authority of the brokers before the time expired, where they had excited an active demand, and were rapidly selling).

Agency coupled with interest.— Where plaintiff was employed to negotiate a trade of lands for defendant, and afterward employed to sell the lands received by her in the trade, the services rendered by him in making the trade being in part the consideration for the second employment, the agency was coupled with an interest and could not be revoked at the mere pleasure of defendant. Bird v. Phillips, 115 Iowa 703, 87 N. W. 414. However, mere commissions to be earned by an agent in executing an agency for the sale of realty do not make the agency one coupled with an interest. Stock transactions.— A broker who sells stock short for a customer, borrowing it for delivery, may continue the transaction after his customer's death until the appointment of an executor on whom notice can be served in order to close the transaction. Hess v. Rau, 95 N. Y. 359 [affirming 49 N. Y. Super. Ct. 324]. Notice of the sale is not necessary in order to terminate the agency. Wallace v. Figone, 107 Mo. App. 362, 81 S. W. 492.

Option to buy.— Whether an agency to sell real estate for the owner is terminated by an option to buy subsequently given to the agent depends upon the conduct of the parties. Lipscomb v. Cole, 81 Mo. App. 53. However, a contract of agency for the sale of land is revoked by notice of the exercise of an option to purchase subsequently given. See infra, II, E, 1, m, (IX), as to exclusiveness of agency), a landowner, by employing an agent to effect a sale of property, does not preclude himself from selling it himself, provided that in making the sale he acts in good faith (Cook v. Forst, 116 Ala. 395, 22 So. 540; Kelly v. Brennan, 55 N. Damages.— Where the principal refuses to convey to a customer found by the broker, the measure of damages in an action by the latter for a breach of contract is the amount the broker would have received as commissions if the bargain had been completed. Atkinson v. Pack, 114 N. C. 597, 19 S. E. 628; Roberts v. Barnard, 1 Cab. & E. 336. In an action for breach of contract plaintiffs are entitled to recover for only such loss of profits as proximately resulted from the breach, excluding all uncertain and conjectural profits. Emerson v. Pacific Coast, etc., Packing Co., 92 Minn. 523, 100 N. W. 365. The expenses incurred by a broker in advertising and selling a client's land are not an element of damages in an action to recover commissions lost by his client's refusal to convey to purchasers whom he had obtained; and exemplary damages are not recoverable by a broker for breach of a contract appointing him agent to sell lands, in the absence of special circumstances. Burnett v. Edling, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 711, 48 S. W. 775. Rate or amount of compensation see infra, II, E, 1, j.

Sufficiency of evidence of breach.— Where an owner employed a broker to sell land on an agreement that he might have as his compensation all the price over a certain sum, the fact that the owner afterward sold the property for that sum to a purchaser found by the broker does not show a breach of contract entitling the latter to damages, since it is not inconsistent with an effort on the owner's part to obtain the higher price asked of the purchaser by the broker. Ames v. Lamont, 107 Wis. 531, 83 N. W. 780.

7. Keswick v. Rafter, 35 N. Y. App. Div. 508, 54 N. Y. Suppl. 850 [affirmed in 165 N. Y. 653, 59 N. E. 1124], holding that where property, as the case may be, or otherwise breaks the contract of employment, he is liable in damages to the broker; and the same rule applies where one who has employed a broker to obtain a loan refuses to accept it.[8] So if the principal revokes the broker's authority in breach of the contract of employment he is liable in damages.[9] If a broker violates his contract he may be held in damages.[10]

5. Authority Conferred[11] — a. General Rule. A broker is a special agent for a single object, and he cannot bind the principal beyond the limits of his authority.[12] His power is limited by and ceases with his instructions.[13]

b. Live Stock and Merchandise Brokers.[14] A broker employed to buy or to sell live stock or merchandise is confined to the terms of his instructions.[15] He agents of a buyer were instructed to purchase tea in China and ship it to him at New York, he could not refuse it because it was sent in two lots, one after the other.

Tender of inferior goods by broker.—Where a broker employed to buy cotton, before the expiration of the time for delivery tendered marks of cotton not in accordance with the contract of employment, but on the principal's rejecting the same and before the expiration of the time for delivery tendered marks of cotton in accordance with the contract, he had not, by the first delivery, broken the contract, so as to justify the principal in refusing to accept the cotton subsequently tendered. 8. Finck v. Menke, 31 Misc. (N. Y.) 748, 64 N. Y. Suppl. 38, holding, however, that one breaking a contract to pay a broker a certain sum for obtaining a loan, including expenses to be incurred in the performance thereof, is not liable for the full amount of such sum, where the expenses have not been incurred.

Damages.— In an action for damages for revocation of authority to sell land, nothing more than nominal damages can be recovered where the agent fails to show that he could have made a sale on the principal's terms. Milligan v. Owen, 123 Iowa 285, 98 N. W. 792.

Assignment for creditors as breach of contract.— Where a broker employed to purchase stocks makes an assignment for the benefit of his creditors, it does not necessarily constitute a breach of his contract, but may be treated by both parties as only a temporary expedient to tide over his difficulties. In re Swift, 112 Fed. 315, 50 C. C. A. 264 [affirming 105 Fed. 493].

Breach of contract of agency for sale of land.— Where a firm of two members contracted to manage and sell lots of a corporation in a town other than that in which the partners resided, the fact that the business was carried on in the town where the lots were located by only one of the partners was not a breach of the contract. Albany Land Co. v. Rickel, 162 Ind. 222, 70 N. E. 158.

Demand and tender.— Where a broker employed to purchase stocks makes a general assignment or is adjudged a bankrupt, a demand and tender on the part of the customer are not necessary to enable him to assert a breach of the broker's contract. In re Swift, 112 Fed. 315, 50 C. Modification or rescission of contract of sale.— Sales agents with limited powers, having procured purchasers satisfactory to their principal, have no power to alter the terms of the contract without consent of the principal. Andrews v. Himrod, 37 Ill. App. 124; White v. Benekendorff, 29 L. T. Rep. N. S. 475. So authority of a broker to make a sale of goods for another does not include the power to rescind the sale without the knowledge or consent of the principal, in the absence of any such commercial usage. Kelly v. Kauffman Milling Co., 92 Ga. 105, 18 S. E. 363; Saladin v. Mitchell, 45 Ill. 79. Where the terms are agreed on, the broker should reduce them to writing in the form of bought and sold notes. Waiver and disobedience of instructions.— Where tea was ordered by a buyer in New York to be shipped from China via Suez Canal, and it was sent via San Francisco, if the deviation was ground for refusal to accept the tea, it was waived by the buyer's failure to object when notified of the deviation, and by objecting to the tea when it arrived solely on the ground that it was not up to grade. 18. Ward v. Lawrence, 79 Ill. 295 (holding that a real-estate broker authorized to sell a tract of land has no authority to sell it by any other description than that by which it was purchased by the owner); Raeder v. Butler, 19 Pa. Super. Ct. 604 (holding that the expression "placed in the hands of —— to be sold," used in a contract by which one person agrees to sell the land of another for a commission, does not confer on the agent a right to possession of the land); Kilham v. Wilson, 112 Fed. 565, 50 C. C. A. 454 (holding that the owner alone has the right to determine the consideration for which he will sell and the details governing the payment of it); Adams v. Fraser, 82 Fed. 211, 27 C. C. A. 108 (holding that a broker authorized to negotiate a sale of property has no implied authority to collect the price).

Authority to negotiate.— A contract placing property in the hands of real-estate agents for sale or exchange, the owner reserving the option as to whether it shall be sold or exchanged and expressly agreeing to give the agents all the assistance in his power in the transaction, confers upon such agents the authority to negotiate, and does not constitute them mere middlemen to bring the parties together. Scribner v. Collar, 40 Mich. 375, 29 Am. Rep. 541.

Authority to modify land contract.—Where a contract for the sale of land is executed by the owner and left with his broker for delivery to the purchaser, the broker has no authority to alter the instrument by substituting the name of another person and changing both the consideration and the rate of interest. Ballou v. Bergsvendson, 9 N. D. 285, 83 N. W. 10. So a broker or agent authorized to negotiate the sale of property, who concludes a contract for the vendor which is to be performed at a future time by the delivery of the property or the title deeds to it and the simultaneous payment of the price, but who is not intrusted with the property or the conveyances thereof, has no implied authority to extend the time of payment or otherwise modify the concluded contract between the vendor and purchaser. Virginia.— Davis v. Gordon, 87 Va. 559, 13 S. E. 35, holding that the fact that a proposed auction sale of lots was advertised in several newspapers by the real-estate agents, and that the bill for such advertising was paid by the owner, did not convert a special agency into a general agency, with authority in the agents, seven months later, to effect a private sale of the lots in a manner and at a price wholly different from what was arranged for the contemplated auction sale.

See 8 Cent. Dig. tit. "Brokers," § 13.

Change of owner's terms.— A real-estate broker has no authority, in procuring the purchaser, to change any of the terms imposed on him by his principal, such for instance as the price, the time of payment, or the rate of interest. Field v. Small, 17 Colo. 386, 30 Pac. 1034; Monson v. Jacques, 144 Ill. 651, 33 N. E. 757; Monson v. Kill, 144 Ill. 248, 33 N. E. 43 [affirming 44 Ill. Discretion of broker.— Where the owner of land orally authorizes a broker to sell it at a certain price, payable partly in cash and partly on time, a sale with more than one third of the price payable in cash, and the residue in three and five years, with six per cent interest, secured by mortgage on the land, is within the reasonable discretion given the broker. Smith v. Keeler, 151 Ill. 518, 38 N. E. 250 [affirming 51 Ill. App. 267].

Sale for cash.— A written authority to a broker to sell land at a net price per acre does not conclusively imply that the sale is to be for cash; and the facts that the amount is large, and most of the land is held on option, go to show that the point was left open for negotiation. Discretion as to selling.— Where, in dealings between a client and brokers who had been in the habit of purchasing stock on a margin furnished by him, their authority to sell his stock is discretionary, the client fixing no limit as to time, trusting to their judgment to sell within a reasonable time, the law will prescribe what is a reasonable time within which to make the sale. Davis v. Gwynne, 57 N. Y. 676. Where the broker has authority to sell at discretion, the owner cannot hold him liable for sales at a lower price than the stock was worth at other times, no fraud appearing. Wronkow v. Clews, 52 N. Y. Super. Ct. 176.

Refusal to sell for principal in default.— Where a speculator in stocks is in debt to his broker for advances, and is in poor credit, the broker may refuse to obey an order to sell and convert the proceeds into other stocks thought by him less safe, and even though such stocks go up afterward, the broker is not liable to his principal for refusing to obey his order. Jones v. Gallagher, 3 Utah 54, 1 Pac. 15.

Right to await further instructions.— Where during the Civil war plaintiff requested a broker who had funds in his hands belonging to plaintiff to invest in certain bonds, and a small amount was invested, when the bonds began to advance in price with great rapidity, and the broker did not invest the balance, but wrote to plaintiff frequently, asking instructions, receiving no reply, and the money, which was Confederate notes, remained in the broker's hands until it became worthless, he was not liable to plaintiff for the loss. Authority to buy less than the amount ordered.— An ordinary broker's contract for the purchase of mining stock, each share of which has an independent value, is not an entire contract, and the broker may purchase a smaller quantity than that ordered. Marye v. Strouse, 5 Fed. 483, 6 Sawy. 204.

Mode of sale.— Where a customer gave his broker a stop order to sell government bonds which contained no directions as to the manner of sale, and the bonds were sold between the calls at the stock exchange at private sale, and were sold as high as, and some higher than, the market price, and in the a question for the court.[28] A broker cannot, as against his principal, cancel an original contract for the future delivery of a commodity without the substitution of another person in the place of the party released, as provided by the rules of the board of trade.[29] If a broker acts through a correspondent, the latter is the agent of the broker and not of the principal, although he takes orders directly from the principal.[30]

e. Custom and Usage.[31] In the absence of a special contract, the authority and duty of a broker depends upon the course of dealing in the particular community.[32] A customer in giving authority to a broker to negotiate a transaction in a certain market is presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, to have authorized the broker to transact the business in question in accordance with the rules, customs, and usages prevailing in that exchange;[33] and this is so manner in which government bonds are sold generally, it was held that, in the absence of evidence to impeach the fairness of the sale, the manner in which it was made was not a ground of objection. Porter v. Wormser, 94 N. Y. 431.

Purchase by broker himself.— An order to a broker to buy stock "on sixty days buyer's option" does not authorize the broker to buy the stock himself and hold it on his principal's account for sixty days. Pickering v. Demerritt, 100 Mass. 416. However, a broker may be authorized from a previous course of dealing between himself and his principal, on an approval of a purchase by the latter, to make out a contract note in his own name, without inserting that of his principal. Kemble v. Atkins, Holt N. P. 427, 3 E. C. L. 171, 1 Moore C. P. 6, 7 Taunt. 260, 2 E. C. L. 354, 17 Rev. Rep. 658.

Stop orders.— The meaning of a stop order to a broker is to await a certain figure, and, whenever that figure is reached, to stop the transaction. Campbell v. Wright, 8 N. Y. St. 471. A stop order to a broker to sell United States bonds "ex July coupons" means to sell the same reserving from the sale the July coupons. Porter v. Wormser, 94 N. Y. 431. A commission to sell stock "when the funds should be at eighty-five per cent, or above that price," is a particular commission under which an agent is bound to sell when the funds reach eighty-five, and he has not a general authority to act for his employer, so that he may defer selling till the funds should reach a higher price. Bertram v. Godfray, 1 Knapp 381, 12 Eng. Reprint 364.

To make a broker responsible it should appear that he has exceeded his orders or has not acted in conformity with them or has in some way violated the duty which he owes to the principal. The fact that a broker whom an owner of stock employs to effect a sale has the stock transferred to his own name from that of the customer, being in accordance with the usual course of business, does not justify a jury in charging the broker with the value of the stock, where the owner has not demanded it back and the broker has not refused to account for the proceeds of what he has sold. The usage of a stock exchange to disregard a statute which requires the number of bank shares to be specified in a sale is unreasonable, and knowledge of it is not to be imputed to the client merely from his instructing the broker to buy shares on the stock exchange. Presumption of knowledge.— The fact that a builder was largely engaged in buying and selling real estate, and at times through real-estate brokers, is alone insufficient to raise a presumption in an action to recover commissions, that he had knowledge of a custom existing among brokers regulating the payment of commissions. D. Duties and Liability to Principal[46] — 1. General Rules. A broker is bound to act in compliance with his principal's instructions,[47] in accordance with the customs and usages prevailing in the market where he deals;[48] and he must act as promptly as the nature of the case demands. Where for example a broker is ordered to purchase certain stocks, it is his duty to purchase promptly, report the transaction to the purchaser, receive the stock, and have the certificates ready for delivery whenever the purchaser shall pay for them.[49] The broker must account to the principal for unexpended funds received from the latter and for all profits made in transactions entered into in the principal's behalf.[50] If a broker employed to sell goods disposes of them for a bill, and draws on the buyer for the amount, he is answerable on the bill to the principal.[51] If a broker innocently buys goods for the principal which are not in existence, and the price is paid, the principal cannot recover back the money from the broker, but must proceed against the seller.[52] So a broker employed to buy stock does not necessarily guarantee its genuineness.[53] An undertaking by a broker to indemnify his princi-

See, however, Ingraham v. Taylor, 58 Conn. 503, 20 Atl. 601, 18 Am. St. Rep. 291, holding that by an agreement to purchase and carry stock for a client on a margin account a broker does not bind himself to make an immediate purchase of the stock, but only to deliver it on demand at the price of the day of the contract; and a part of the stock having been sold at a loss at the client's request and the rest delivered on his order, he cannot recover back the margins and commissions on the ground that no stock was in fact purchased until long after the orders were given.

Proceeds of sale of illegal bonds.— Where a broker sells bonds belonging to the principal which turn out to be invalid and uses the proceeds to purchase valid bonds for delivery to the buyer, the principal cannot recover the amount of the proceeds from the broker as money had and received to the principal's use. Application of funds to another's account. —Where a husband having an account with brokers, being about to transfer a certain sum to a new account to be opened with them in the name of his wife, stipulated orally that notwithstanding the transfer the new account should to the extent of the sum so transferred be at all times used by the brokers to make good his account with them, the authority so conferred was not destroyed by the fact that when the transfer was made the wife gave the brokers written authority to execute orders on her account given by her husband. pal from any loss on a resale of goods bought for him is discharged when the principal has a fair opportunity of selling to advantage and neglects it.[54] The broker is responsible to the principal for the default of a subbroker employed by him.[55] If a subbroker violates his instructions he is responsible to the broker who employed him.[56]

2. Measure of Care Required — a. General Rule. Brokers are bound to exercise reasonable care and diligence in carrying out the agency.[57] Beyond this they are not bound. If they exercise the same degree of care and diligence that a prudent man would exercise in like business they are entitled to compensation and are not liable for losses resulting to the principal.[58]

b. Sufficiency of Security or Solvency of Purchaser.[59] A broker to whom money is intrusted for investment is bound to exercise reasonable skill and care,[60] but not the greatest degree of care that an ordinarily prudent person would exercise under like circumstances.[61] So a broker for the sale or letting of property must exercise reasonable care in passing on the sufficiency of security taken for the price, if he has accepted that responsibility;[62] but ordinarily a broker is not

Cas. 504, 5 Atl. 50; Murrah v. Brichta, (Tex. Sup. 1888) 9 S. W. 185 (where a loan broker's ignorance of the law was held to be no defense).

Release of liability.— Where a broker, through negligence, loaned on second-mortgage security money which, for compensation, he had undertaken to loan on first-mortgage security, but before the loan became due the lender, with other creditors of the borrower, signed a composition releasing him from personal liability beyond the lien of the mortgage, this released the broker from his contingent liability to the lender. L. 296 (holding that where an agent is employed to let a house and charges a commission on letting it, it is a question for the jury whether he undertakes to use reasonable care to ascertain that the person to whom he lets it is solvent).

Failure to record mortgage.— To an action against a broker, employed to sell a dairy, for damages sustained by plaintiff through the broker's failure to record, in accordance with his undertaking, a mortgage taken by him from a purchaser of the dairy, securing the latter's notes, which were assumed by a subsequent purchaser of the dairy from him, who afterward conveyed it, and who, as well answerable to his principal for the solvency of one to whom he sells property on credit.[63]

3. Fraud[64] — a. In General. If in dealing with his principal a broker is guilty of fraud he is liable in damages.[65] Thus if a broker employed to invest money on good security falsely and fraudulently represents that a proposed security is ample, he is liable to the principal for the resulting damage.[66] So if a broker employed to sell property understates to the principal the best price obtainable, the principal may recover from him the difference between that obtained and that which might have been obtained.[67] And a broker employed to purchase property must inform the principal of the lowest price at which it may be bought.[68]

E. 1040 (holding that where plaintiff was induced by the fraudulent representations of a stock-broker to cancel an order to sell certain stock and to retain it until it depreciated in value, the broker was liable, although the depreciation was caused by the embezzlement of an officer of the corporation, which was not contemplated by the broker); Wright v. Self, 1 F. & F. 704 (holding that an agent employed by seller and purchaser may be liable to the purchaser for false representations as to value).

Burden of proof.— Where, after the confirmation of a sale of land by a broker, the owner pays to him the commission agreed on, and afterward discovers that the title to the land he has received in exchange is defective, and the representations made as to the situation and value are false, before he can recover from the broker the commissions so paid he must further show that the broker acted in bad faith, and concealed from him information possessed by the broker in regard to the title, situation, and value of the land. Lockwood v. Halsey, 41 Kan. 166, 21 Pac. 98.

Failure to disclose identity of purchaser.— A broker authorized to sell property to any purchaser is not ordinarily guilty of fraud in failing to disclose the identity of a prospective purchaser to the principal. Rank v. Garvey, 66 Nebr. 767, 92 N. W. 1025, 99 N. W. 666. Eq. (S. C.) 14 (holding that a broker who undertook to invest money upon a safe bond well secured by mortgage, and who falsely represented to the lender that the mortgage security was ample, and received a remuneration from the borrower for negotiating the loan, was bound to make good the loss arising from the insufficiency of the security).

See, however, Dickinson v. Updike, (N. J. Err. & App. 1901) 49 Atl. 712 (holding that if the broker did not learn of the better terms until after the transaction was closed he is not liable); Black v. Barr, 14 Pa. Super. Ct. 98 (holding that where a broker found a purchaser at the price named by the principal, a tenant in common, and was then referred by the principal to the other tenants in common, with whom he subsequently made terms at a higher price as to a two-eighths' interest owned by them, it was not incumbent upon him to inform his principal of the higher price).

Submission of lower offers.— It is not a breach of duty on the part of a broker to submit offers to his principal to purchase at a price less than that at which he has been authorized to sell. Bickart v. Hoffmann, 19 N. Y. Suppl. 472.

b. Individual Interest of Broker.[69] Unless the principal is fully advised of the facts,[70] a broker employed to buy property cannot as a rule sell property in which he has an individual interest;[71] nor may a broker employed to sell property become the buyer thereof.[72] If a broker employed to sell property under-

Burden of proving knowledge.— In an action against a broker by his principal to recover the amount retained by the former from the proceeds of the sale of land which the broker purchased for his own benefit, the burden of proving knowledge and acquiescence on the part of the principal, so as to render the transaction valid, is on defendant. Interest of broker in corporation buyer.— A sale in the open market by a brokerage company of its client's stock to pay margins to a corporation, some of whose officers were officers of the selling company, is not invalid, in the absence of a showing that prejudice resulted to the client from the fact that the two corporations were thus related. Van Dusen-Harrington Co. v. Jungeblut, 75 Minn. 298, 77 N. W. 970, 74 Am. St. Rep. 463.

Option to buy.— The fact that a broker whom one wishing to purchase certain real estate employed to negotiate with the owner therefor has an option to purchase the land at a fixed price does not incapacitate him from acting for the purchaser, as he might abandon the option without violating any duty to the owner; nor is the broker bound in good faith to disclose to his principal that he has such option. Carpenter v. Fisher, 175 Mass. 9, 55 N. E. 479.

Partial invalidity.— Where a client directed his brokers to sell five hundred shares of stock held for his account, and they

states the price received by him and keeps the difference he must account to the principal therefor;[73] and his fraudulent conduct may subject him also to an action for breach of contract[74] or an action of tort.[75] So if a broker employed to buy property overstates the price at which it may be bought, and obtains the difference, the principal may recover the excess from him.[76] If a broker employed to purchase an estate buys it for himself, he is considered a trustee for the principal.[77] In all these cases the agency of the broker must be proved in order to invalidate the transaction and render him liable to account.[78]

c. Acting For Persons Adversely Interested.[79] A broker cannot ordinarily without notice to the principal represent persons adversely interested in the transaction in question.[80] through another broker sold them in five separate lots of one hundred shares each, the subbroker selling one of them to himself, and the client, when the sales were reported to him, made no objection to their having been sold in one-hundred-share lots, the purchase of the one hundred shares by the subbroker will avoid the sale only as to such one hundred shares. Necessity of demand.— A broker is, without demand, liable to his principal for a concealed excess received on a sale of land above the sum fixed for the price. Love v. Hoss, 62 Ind. 255.

Instructions.— In assumpsit by a principal against real-estate brokers for money had and received, an instruction that if the brokers sold the principal's farm for eleven thousand dollars, but accounted to him for only ten thousand, the principal is entitled to recover one thousand dollars is erroneous, where there is evidence that the purchaser with the principal's knowledge bought from one who had a prior option on the land, and there is no evidence that defendants ever received the one thousand dollars. d. Fictitious Transactions. It is a fraud for a broker to make only fictitious purchases and sales and report them to the principal as genuine, and in case he does so the principal may recover back any deposits he may have made with the broker.[81]

D. 394, both holding that a commission received by an agent of a purchaser from the vendor or the vendor's broker without the knowledge of the principal is a bribe which the principal has a right to extract from the agent.

See 8 Cent. Dig. tit. "Brokers," § 25.

Ignorance of double agency.— A contract by an agent for a dual agency is not void per se, but only so when the fact that the agent represented both parties was not known to each. Red Cypress Lumber Co. v. Perry, 118 Ga. 870, 45 S. E. 674; Lincoln v. Levi Cotton Mills Co., 128 Fed. 865, 63 C. C. A. 333.

Notice to principal.— The mere signing of a contract of sale by a broker as agent for one of the purchasers does not operate as a disclosure to the vendor of his agency for the purchasers during the negotiations and when the terms were verbally agreed on. Marsh v. Buchan, 46 N. J. Eq. 595, 22 Atl. 128.

Evidence of double agency.— A statement by one party to an exchange of real estate that he had offered to pay the broker employed by the other party a commission does not show that the broker accepted employment by both parties, where he admits the offer but states that he did not accept it. Lebowits v. Colligan, 18 N. Y. App. Div. 624, 45 N. Y. Suppl. 373.

Recovery by principal of secret profits.— Although the conduct of a seller's stock-broker in undertaking to act as agent of the purchaser without informing him as to his agency for the seller and its terms is a fraud which might avoid the entire transaction at the option of the purchaser, still it will not entitle him to recover as principal from the broker profits secretly received by him. Ilingworth v. De Mott, 59 N. J. Eq. 8, 45 Atl. 272. See, however, cases cited supra, this note.

Burden of proof.— In an action to recover money paid a broker for the purchase of stock on a margin, plaintiff claiming that no purchases had been made, and defendant that all the money had been expended in buying shares, which were sold at a loss, the burden is on defendant to show that the transactions testified to were real. Lonergan v. Peck, 136 Mass. 361.

Sufficiency of evidence of fictitious character of transaction see Prout v. Chisolm, 21 N. Y. App. Div. 54, 47 N. Y. Suppl. 376.

Transfer of shares on company books.— An actual purchase of shares for the client is shown where it appears that the broker, from the time of the purchase until a subsequent sale, always had on hand the number of shares of that particular stock ready to deliver on payment of the price, it not being necessary that the shares should have been actually transferred on the books of the company to the client or the broker. 4. Estoppel.[83] Either the principal[84] or the broker[85] may be estopped by his representations or conduct from repudiating a given transaction between the parties.

5. Title to Property Purchased or Held by Broker — a. In General. A broker has no title to the proceeds of a bill of exchange placed in his hands with which to purchase property for a client;[86] nor has he any title to property placed with him for sale.[87]

b. Stocks. A broker who has advanced the purchase-money to a client desiring him to buy stock has the right to take the title in his own name,[88] and if a broker sells stock to a client for cash, and the client through fraud secures possession of it without payment, the title remains in the broker.[89] Ordinarily, however, the title to stock bought by a broker for a client on margin[90] or otherwise[91] vests in the client, subject, however, to the payment of advances and commissions due the broker, he being regarded as a pledgee of the stock.[92] Consequently if the broker subsequently goes into insolvency, the client may redeem the stock from the assignee or receiver.[93]

See also Andrews v. Clark, 72 Md. 396, 20 Atl. 429, where it was urged that the principal was negligent in dealing with the broker's clerk so as to estop him from charging the broker with a loss occurring through the clerk's fraud. See, however, Porter v. Wormser, 94 N. Y. 431, holding that the fact that the heading of notices of sales sent by a broker to his principal shows the purchases to have been made by the broker does not estop the broker from showing, in an action for an accounting, that the sales were in fact made to a third person, and were therefore valid.

In Massachusetts, however, the usual relations between a broker and a customer for whom he has purchased stock on a margin are not those of pledgee and pledgor, but of parties to an executory contract for the sale and purchase of the stock, under which the broker is bound to deliver the stock purchased on demand and payment of the amount due thereon, and is entitled to claim payment on a tender of the stock after reasonable notice to the purchaser. 6. Delivery of Property Purchased by Broker. Where brokers buy stocks for a client, it is their duty to deliver the same to him on demand on payment of the sum due them thereon.[94] Their obligation is to keep at all times on hand or under their control ready for delivery to the client on his paying them the sum due them therefor either the particular shares purchased or an equal amount of other shares of the same kind.[95] They are not bound to keep the identical shares bought for the client separate from the mass of their stock, but it is sufficient if they keep on hand an equal number of the same kind,[96] and this rule applies to purchases of gold on margin.[97]

7. Pledge of Property Purchased by Broker.[98] A broker who has bought stock for another with money advanced by himself and who holds it in his own name may, so long as he has not been paid or tendered the amount of his advances, pledge it as security for his own debt to a third person without being guilty of conversion or breach of contract.[99] The receiver of a broker who has

Waiver of delivery.— Where a broker buys stock for his principal, and the principal, before receiving it, orders the broker to sell it again on the principal's account, it amounts to a waiver of any delivery or tender of the stock by the broker to the principal. Cahill v. Hirschman, 6 Nev. 57.

Right of customer to other stocks in substitution.— Customers of a broker who has bought stocks for them, and thereafter pledged them to secure loans to himself, are not entitled to other stocks owned by the broker. Chamberlain v. Greenleaf, 4 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 178.

Priorities.— The burden of discharging a pledge of stocks belonging to different persons, made by brokers with implied authority from their customers, from whom the brokers themselves hold the stock in pledge while carrying it on margin, is to be averpledged his client's stocks has no right to redeem them for the benefit of the client at the risk of loss to the general creditors; nor is it his duty to redeem upon tender by the client of the price.[1]

8. Rights of Broker as to Collateral Security.[2] A broker may repledge collateral deposited with him to secure advances on margin transactions,[3] but he may use the collateral only so that he can at any time promptly return it to the client when the latter pays his debt.[4] Consequently a sale of the collateral is invalid.[5] The principal is not entitled, when sued by the broker for the balance of an account, to have the value of the collateral deducted, but the broker is entitled to hold it until the debt is in fact paid.[6] In order to recover on an accommodation note payable to the principal and deposited by him as collateral, the burden of proof is on the broker to show that a debt is due.[7]

9. Transactions on Margin.[8] Where a broker agrees for a commission and upon a deposit of a stipulated margin to make a short sale for a client, he is bound to carry the stock for a reasonable time so long as the margin remains intact.[9] So a broker undertaking to buy on margin has no right to sell without the client's authority while he has sufficient margin in his hands.[10] If a broker agrees to carry an account for a certain time or until a certain event without further margins, he is liable in damages for closing the transaction before that time.[11] A broker who agrees to make a short sale for a client on margin

See Harris v. Pryor, 18 N. Y. Suppl. 128, holding that a finding was warranted that there was no agreement to hold the stocks in question.

Consideration for agreement.— Where defendants, stock-brokers, were carrying a "short" sale of stock for plaintiff, and the may, if the margin is not kept good, upon demand and notice, close the transaction by buying to cover the sale.[12] So a broker who makes a purchase on long account for a client on margin may sell the stock upon the client's failure to make the necessary advances on demand.[13] After a client has refused to put up margins, the broker is under no obligation to prevent loss either by making advances[14] or by closing the transaction by a purchase or a sale according to the nature of the transaction.[15] Nor is a broker who has borrowed stock to cover stock began to rise, whereupon plaintiff wished to cover his sale and go "long" on the stock, which defendants advised him not to do, the fact that plaintiff, to his pecuniary loss, refrained from doing as he wished, was sufficient consideration for defendants' promise to carry the stock without additional margin until plaintiff could get out without loss. Rogers v. Wiley, 131 N. Y. 527, 30 N. E. 582 [affirming 14 N. Y. Suppl. 622].

Construction of agreement.— An agreement by a broker through whom "July wheat" is purchased on margin that he will carry the wheat until July 1 without further margin, and that the deal shall not be closed until so ordered by the purchaser, means that the deal shall not be closed before July 1, unless so ordered. Amsden v. Jacobs, 75 Hun (N. Y.) 311, 26 N. Y. Suppl. 1000.

Tender of performance by customer.— Where brokers, after demanding additional margin from their client to protect them on stock purchased for him, agree to wait till a specified time for him to comply with the demand, and sell the stock before the time specified, the client, in order to put the brokers in default, must tender performance at the specified time. Kanady v. Burk, 18 Mich. 278.

The deposit of a note by a customer with a broker as "temporary collateral" for the amount of the margins required does not of itself constitute a deposit of the margin, nor operate to extend the time for depositing margins until the note should mature. Gould v. Trask, 10 N. Y. Suppl. 619.

12. White v. Smith, 54 N. Y. 522 [affirming 6 Lans. 5]; Sterling v. Jaudon, 48 Barb. (N. Y.) 459, gold transaction.

To support the purchase as made on the client's account, it is essential for the broker to show that there was occasion to call upon the client to make a further deposit, and that he failed to do so after having reasonable notice prior to the purchase. Lazare v. Allen, 20 N. Y. App. Div. 616, 47 N. Y. Suppl. 340.

Buying in stock to repay loan of stock.— Where, by the usages of a stock exchange, a broker instructed by a client to sell stock, in case the client does not furnish the stock, is authorized to borrow the same for delivery to the person to whom it is sold, being protected against loss in the transaction by security or margins deposited by the client, he may demand additional margins when unwilling longer to stand bound to repay the borrowed stock without further protection; and unless the same is furnished within a reasonable time after notice to the client, he has the right to take such fair and reasonable steps for the purchase of stock to repay that borrowed as may be necessary to prevent loss to himself, and to charge the cost thereof to the client's account, being liable only for a failure to exercise reasonable care and skill in the matter of making such purchase. Boyle v. Henning, 121 Fed. 376.

United States.— Lehman v. Feld, 37 Fed. 852. See, however, Blakemore v. Heyman, 23 Fed. 648, holding that in the absence of a special agreement or proof of knowledge of a custom of the cotton exchange of New York, a broker in that city who sells cotton before maturity of the contract, because of a failure on the part of his principal to advance margins, cannot recover from the principal the amount of loss sustained by reason of the sale.

England.— See Lacey v. Hill, L. R. 8 Ch. 921, 42 L. J. Ch. 657, 109 L. T. Rep. N. S. 281, 21 Wkly. Rep. 857, holding that brokers who have with their own money purchased stock for a principal, are, in the event of the death, bankruptcy, or insolvency of the principal, justified in immediately selling it.

No. 3,566, 6 Biss. 405 (holding that a broker who has bought and holds stocks on margin is bound to take notice of the buyer's bankruptcy, and if he continues to hold them for an unreasonable length of time after that event, and then sells them without notice or application to the court, he must sustain the loss); In re Overweg, [1900] 1 Ch. 209, 69 L. J. Ch. 255, 81 L. T. Rep. N. S. 776 (holding that a carrying over or a continuation on the stock exchange is in form and in law both a sale and a repurchase, or a purchase and resale, as the case may be; and therefore if a broker, when under an obligation to close an account by selling his client's shares, prefers to carry over, he does so at his own risk, and is not entitled as against his client to treat the continuation as one transaction, but is responsible to his client as if there had been a short sale bound to require the lender to put up margins to secure the seller against a decline of the stock so loaned.[16] To justify a broker in closing out the transaction upon depletion of the margins it is incumbent upon him first to make demand of the client for further margins;[17] and if a broker waives a default in complying with such a demand, he cannot close the transaction until a new demand is made.[18] In New York, if a broker buys on long account on margin, he cannot sell the stock without notice, even though he has demanded additional margins and the client has failed to comply therewith,[19] in the absence of a special agreement[20] or a usage[21] authorizing the sale. In other jurisdictions a contrary view is taken, and notice of sale in addition to a demand for further security is not necessary.[22] In addition to demand for additional margins and notice of an intent to sell, a broker who buys stocks on long account on margin cannot sell them out upon depletion of the margin without tender of the certificates and demand of payment of the balance due, in the absence of a waiver by the client of some one of these requisites.[23] A broker desiring to close out a transaction for short account on margin need not give notice to the client of an immediate sale at the price named); Morris v. Brault, 23 Quebec Super. Ct. 190 (holding that as a broker who has received from his customer a sum of money as margin against the rise or fall of the market may close the operation as soon as the amount deposited is exhausted by the change of prices on the market, and if he continues the operations he does so at his own risk).

Reasonable notice to furnish further margins is necessary. Denton v. Jackson, 106 Ill. 433; Stewart v. Drake, 46 N. Y. 449 (holding two days' notice sufficient); Lazare v. Allen, 20 N. Y. App. Div. 616, 47 N. Y. Suppl. 340 (holding that one hour's notice is not ordinarily reasonable); Harris v. Pryor, 18 N. Y. Suppl. 128 (holding that a finding was justified that one day's notice was sufficient). In other words a client is entitled to a reasonable time within which to comply with the demand. Boyle v. Henning, 121 Fed. 376.

Sufficiency of demand.— All demands by a stock-broker upon his client for margins must be specific, definite, and certain; and no demand is specific unless it mentions a particular sum of money, or unless it states facts from which a particular amount of money may be certainly ascertained. Boyle v. Henning, 121 Fed. 376. A demand in the alternative which contemplates an answer is not sufficient. Esser v. Linderman, 71 Pa. St. 76.

Estoppel as to demand.— After refusal to put up margins to meet losses on sales for future delivery, the principal is precluded, in an action by the broker for such margins, from objecting to the demand as indefinite or excessive. Perin v. Parker, 126 Ill. 201, 18 N. E. 747, 9 Am. St. Rep. 571, 2 L. R. A. 336 [affirming 25 Ill. App. 465].

Agreement to draw for margins.— Under an agreement by a broker to draw on his principal if more margin is required, the broker has no right to close the contract without drawing, although the principal is out of the state and has made no provision to honor a draft, as the broker knows. Foote v. Smith, 136 Mass. 92.

What constitutes waiver.— Where successive demands are made of a principal by the broker for margins due on a sale of grain for future delivery, the last demand, which is unreasonable, is not a waiver of the former ones, although each is greater than the last, owing to the continued advance in the grain. Perin v. Parker, 126 Ill. 201, 18 N. E. 747, 9 Am. St. Rep. 571, 2 L. R. A. 336 [affirming 25 Ill. App. 465].

St. 726], holding that where it is not the custom of brokers to sell without notice, and no call for margins is made or notice to sell given, the sale by the broker constitutes a conversion of the stock.

the time and place at which he will buy to cover the account, such notice being required only where stocks are pledged for the payment of a debt.[24]

10. Procedure[25] — a. Election and Form of Action. The form of action to be adopted by a principal against the broker depends upon the nature of the breach of duty on the part of the latter.[26] In some cases the principal has his election whether he will sue ex contractu or ex delicto.[27]

b. Damages.[28] The measure of damages in an action against a broker for selling his principal's stocks in violation of his orders is their market value at the time of sale or their highest value between the time of sale and a reasonable time after the owner has received notice of it so as to enable him to replace the stocks.[29] The measure of damages in an action by a principal against a broker

J. Err. & App. 1901) 49 Atl. 712 (holding that where defendants, who were employed by plaintiff to find a purchaser for a lot, after finding a purchaser and receiving part of the price and before the deed was delivered learned that the purchaser had sold at an advance, but did not inform plaintiff, his claim, if any, against them is for damages, for which an action at law and not a bill in equity is the appropriate remedy); Boorman v. Brown, 3 Q. 27. Shreeve v. Adams, 6 Phila. (Pa.) 260, holding that an action on the case will lie for neglect of duty as a broker, the principal having his election to sue either ex contractu or ex delicto. Where, however, plaintiff claimed the right to recover from his brokers by reason of their failure to require margins of a lender of stock borrowed by them to cover a short sale for him, the breach of duty, if any, was a breach of contract, and not a tort which plaintiff could waive and sue on the common counts in assumpsit. Unauthorized sales of stock.— If a broker makes an unauthorized sale of the principal's stock, the principal may either adopt the sale and charge the broker with the profits, or he may sue in trover for damages for the conversion. Reasonable time.— Where the market price of stock had become fairly settled again within twenty-nine days after the sale, and ample opportunity was afforded within that time to the client to repurchase the stock, twenty-nine days will be deemed a reasonable time, within the rule that a client may recover as damages for an unauthorized sale of stock of a fluctuating value the difference between the price at which the stock was sold and the highest market price attained within a reasonable time thereafter. Burhorn v. Lockwood, 71 N. Y. App. Div. 301, 75 N. Y. Suppl. 828.

Waiver of conversion and suit in assumpsit.— Where a broker carrying stock for a principal sells it without authority, and the

who fails to act promptly in executing an order for the sale of the former's stocks at a certain price is the difference between the price named in the order and that for which the stock is finally sold.[30] If a broker fails to execute an order for the purchase of stocks, the measure of the principal's damages is the amount of money advanced, with interest,[31] where it does not appear that the broker was to carry the stocks for a rise in the price.[32] The measure of damages for the failure of a broker to buy stocks to cover a short sale is the difference between the market value at the time of the instruction to buy and the price at which the broker finally bought.[33] Where a broker who has bought stocks for a client makes an assignment for the benefit of creditors, which both parties unite in regarding merely as a temporary expedient to tide over the broker's difficulties, and subsequently the broker is adjudicated a bankrupt, the value of the stocks is determinable as of the date of the petition in bankruptcy.[34] Where a broker employed to effect an exchange of property understates an offer to his principal, which is accepted, and the broker keeps part of the property which was intended to go to the principal, the value of the part so kept is the measure of the damages which the principal is entitled to recover for the fraud.[35] Where a broker employed by a vendor of real estate secures the agreed compensation, but takes a different security for deferred payments than that specified by the principal, the measure of the principal's damages is the difference in value between the security contracted for and that taken, not exceeding the amount of the deferred payments.[36] A broker receiving money and not applying it to the purpose specified in the contract of employment within a reasonable time is chargeable with interest.[37] Money may in a proper case be valued as a commodity independently of its face value.[38] If a broker employed to sell bonds in his discretion at the latter waives the conversion and sues in assumpsit, the measure of damages is the market value of the stock at the time of the conversion and not the highest price which it would have commanded at any time before trial. Wagner v. Peterson, 83 Pa. St. 238.

Agreement to carry for definite time.— Where defendant by agreement with plaintiff purchased with his own money stocks and bonds for the former on a specified commission, and agreed to hold them until a day named and then sell for plaintiff, and plaintiff deposited certain money as security against loss, and agreed to give further security if necessary, and defendant sold the stocks and bonds before such date, the measure of damages is the market value of such stocks and bonds on the last day of the period during which he had agreed to hold them. Andrews v. Clerke, 3 Bosw. (N. Y.) 585. In Michael v. Hart, [1901] 2 K. B. 867, 70 L. J. K. B. 1000, 85 L. T. Rep. N. S. 548, 50 Wkly. Rep. 154, it was held, however, that where a broker on the London stock exchange who, in breach of his agreement to keep his client's account open till the settlement at the end of the month, wrongfully closed it, the measure of damages is the highest price the stocks would have realized between the date he so wrongfully closed the account and the date to which he agreed to carry it over.

31. Larrabee v. Badger, 45 Ill. 440.

32. Gurley v. MacLennan, 17 App. Cas. (D. C.) 170, holding that where brokers accepted an order to purchase, and failed to execute it, but there was nothing to indicate that they were to carry the stock for a rise, the measure of damages is not the difference between the market value of the stock on the date when it was to have been purchased and the market value within such reasonable time after the principal had knowledge that the brokers had not purchased as would have enabled him to purchase.

Confederate notes.— In an action against a real-estate broker for failing to pay over the purchase-money (Confederate treasury notes) of land sold for plaintiff, the measure of damages is the value of the currency at the time it was received by defendant, with in-best market price refuses to disclose the time of sale or the amount realized, the evidence as to value should be strictly construed against him.[39]

c Pleading.[40] The rules of pleading applicable to civil actions in general govern the sufficiency of a complaint in an action against a real-estate broker for failure to examine the title to land purchased by him for plaintiff,[41] or for selling the property of plaintiff on terms not authorized;[42] in a suit against a broker for loaning plaintiff's money on insufficient security;[43] and in an action against a stock-broker for wrongfully selling stock purchased by him for plaintiff,[44] or for failing to execute an order for the purchase and sale of stock,[45] or for wrongfully appropriating a deposit for security;[46] and the construction of an answer in an action by a vendor against a real-estate broker for wrongfully detaining moneys collected on the sale is likewise governed.[47] Questions of pleading and proof are also governed by the general rules of pleading.[48]

43. Bronnenburg v. Rinker, 2 Ind. App. 391, 28 N. E. 568, holding that the complaint need not allege that defendant agreed to be personally responsible for the loan, as the gist of the action is the negligence of defendant in making the loan as the agent of plaintiff; that it need not allege that the note evidencing the loan was unpaid, where it alleges that the loan was made to an insolvent person, and that it is utterly worthless; that where the complaint avers that the borrower of the money so deposited was and is entirely insolvent, and that the note is utterly worthless, it need not aver a demand of the money either from the maker of the note or from defendant; that where the complaint alleges that defendant falsely represented that the loan was secured by a mortgage, it need not allege that defendant knew such representation to be false, especially where it appears that the loan was made without any security; and that failure to allege that plaintiff was injured by defendant's negligence is of no consequence where it is alleged that the loan was made to an insolvent person, and that the note is utterly worthless.

45. Ryder v. Sistare, 15 Daly (N. Y.) 90, 2 N. Y. Suppl. 715, holding that a complaint containing no allegation that plaintiff provided the means of payment or that defendant agreed to advance the same or that plaintiff placed the stock to be sold within defendant's reach or that he agreed to sell stocks that plaintiff did not possess or furnish for delivery, does not show a cause of action.

46. Cowen v. Voyer, 79 N. Y. App. Div. 638, 80 N. Y. Suppl. 29, holding a complaint to be demurrable where it does not show that defendants were not entitled to mingle the margin with their own funds, or that they were in any way in default.

47. 48. Kratt v. Hopkins, 77 N. Y. App. Div. 634, 78 N. Y. Suppl. 1012, holding that a complaint against a stock-broker alleging that he held a balance in the client's favor, and that afterward he reported to the client an alleged purchase and sale of stock on which a loss occurred greater than the entire balance, but that "no authority was ever given by this plaintiff for the purchase or sale of the aforesaid shares, and plaintiff upon notice of the purchase thereof duly and at first opportunity repudiated the same," assumes

d. Evidence.[49] Evidence of any fact which has a bearing on the issues involved is ordinarily admissible in an action by a principal against a broker for breach of duty.[50] A "bought note"[51] or a "sold note"[52] is not a contract within the rule excluding parol evidence to contradict or vary written instruments.[53]

E. Compensation — 1. Right to Compensation — a. As Affected by Contract of Employment[54] — (I) Necessity of Contract. To entitle a broker to compensation, he must have been employed to negotiate the transaction in connection with which his services were rendered.[55] that the purchase and sale were in fact made, and hence no proof thereof was required.

Variance.— A complaint alleged that plaintiff employed defendants as brokers to purchase on credit certain shares of stock, and delivered to them other stock as security for their indemnity, and that they afterward rendered him an account of such purchase, and of a subsequent sale, after notice, both of which transactions were not real, but fictitious, and that a charge in such account for negotiating a loan on the stock was also fictitious, and prayed that defendants be adjudged to return to plaintiff the stock. On the trial it was proved that defendants did make the purchase according to their employment, and advanced the money therefor, and in order to hold the stock for the period contemplated by plaintiff, negotiated a loan thereon, and that defendants had sold the stock for a greater price than that for which they accounted to plaintiff. It was held that the variance was fatal to a recovery by plaintiff. Saltus v. Genin, 3 Bosw. (N. Y.) 250.

50. Emmons v. Alvord, 177 Mass. 466, 59 N. E. 126 (holding that where a principal brings action against his broker for procuring a conveyance by understating an offer of exchange, and it is shown that the fraud was perpetrated by having the purchaser convey the property exchanged to a third person, who conveyed only a portion thereof to plaintiff, the purchaser may testify that he intended all the property to go to plaintiff, and that he had no idea that the person to whom he conveyed it was a bona fide purchaser; and the purchaser's lawyer may testify that he did not know that a portion of the property was not going to plaintiff till after the property was conveyed; and that where the action is brought against the broker and his accomplices, one of whom was the broker of his purchaser, evidence is admissible to show that one of the conspirators paid money to the purchaser's broker as a part of the scheme, without the knowledge of the purchaser); Hopkins v. Clark, 158 N. Y. 299, 53 N. E. 27 [affirming 7 N. Y. App. Div. 207, 40 N. Y. Y.) 66, 2 N. Y. Suppl. 707 (holding that in an action against stock-brokers, where defendants concede that a profit resulted from operations for plaintiff down to a given date, but set up that after that time other ventures were made on plaintiff's account which left him in debt to them, and it is admitted that they did not follow the usual custom of sending notices during the later transactions, evidence of the method of business between them and plaintiff during the time of the undisputed dealings, and the ordinary custom of trade as to sending notices, is admissible as bearing on the question whether the later transactions were for plaintiff).

Declarations.— In an action by a customer for a balance claimed to be due from his broker, evidence of a conversation between the broker and his confidential clerk, held during plaintiff's absence, is inadmissible in the broker's behalf, but evidence of a conversation between plaintiff and the clerk is admissible in plaintiff's favor. A broker employed to sell one thing is not entitled to a commission for selling another. Wulff v. Lindsay, (Ariz. 1903) 71 Pac. 963; Samuels v. Luckenbach, 205 Pa. St. 428, 54 Atl. 109; Burnett v. Edling, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 711, 48 S. W. 775. See, however, Miller v. Stevens, 23 Ind. App. 265, 55 N. E. 262.

Usage.— The fact that it is the custom of the seller to pay commissions to the real-estate agent who sells his property does not impose a liability for commissions on the seller when the circumstances indicate that the agent was working in the interests of the purchaser. Downing v. Buck, (Mich. 1904) 98 N. W. 388.

The principal is estopped, in an action for compensation for finding a purchaser to whom he refused to convey, to deny plaintiff's employment, where before suit brought he based his refusal to convey solely on another ground. Sandefur v. Hines, 69 Kan. 168, 76 Pac. 444.

A promise to pay for past services voluntarily rendered by a broker is not binding unless based upon a present consideration. Myers v. Dean, 132 N. Y. 65, 30 N. E. 259 [reversing 16 Daly 251, 10 N. Y. Suppl. 532].

W. 1099; Nolan v. Swift, 111 Mich. 56, 69 N. W. 96; Hart v. Maloney, 80 N. Y. App. Div. 265, 80 N. Y. Suppl. 293. However, a letter by a real-estate agent to the owner inquiring the price of a farm, and an answer that the owner would take a certain sum net, does not authorize the agent to find a purchaser or make a sale on such terms. Johnson v. Whalen, 13 Okla. 320, 74 Pac. 503.

Offer and acceptance.— Evidence that plaintiff continued from time to time to make efforts to sell defendant's land after defendant offered him a commission for making the sale is sufficient to sustain a finding that he accepted the offer. Veale v. Green, 105 Mo. App. 182, 79 S. W. 731. Where a broker who receives a proposition to sell defendant's land does not accept it until after the expiration of the time designated in the offer for its acceptance, however, he is not entitled to a commission on making the sale. Short v. Willing, 1 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 460.

Form of contract.— Where an owner of lands writes a letter to another requesting him to make a sale at a specified price, and the latter, without formally accepting the offer, effects a sale upon terms which are accepted by the vendor, the agent thereby becomes entitled to the commission. It is not necessary that such a letter should contain apt words of contract; any language from which the terms may reasonably be implied is sufficient. Fisk v. Henarie, 13 Oreg. 156, 9 Pac. 322.

Consideration.— The contract of employment must be based on a sufficient consideration. Murray v. Beard, 102 N. Y. 505, 7 N. E. 553; Wolff v. Denbosky, 36 Misc. (N. Y.) 643, 74 N. Y. Suppl. 465. Although an agreement signed by a real-estate owner to pay an agent a certain commission in the event that he himself should make a sale is a unilateral contract and invalid on its face, yet where the agent thereunder advertises the property and lists it, although he does nothing more, it is a sufficient partial performance to render the contract enforceable. Lapham v. Flint, 86 Minn. 376, 90 N. W. 780. So a contract to pay a broker a commission on any acceptable sale procured by him will support a recovery for effecting a sale, although it does not bind the broker to make any effort to sell. Brooks v. Leathers, 112 Mich. 463, 70 N. W. 1099. The lower price for which defendants secured real estate is sufficient consideration to support an agreement to pay plaintiffs a certain sum as commission, stances.[57] The fact that an owner of property consents to the rendition of services by a broker which result in a sale of the property does not create an implied contract of employment and so entitle the broker to a commission, where the services were unsolicited.[58] Much less is the owner bound to pay a commission where he had no knowledge that the broker was acting as such before the sale was consummated,[59] or where he had previously refused to employ the broker.[60] Nor is a broker entitled to a commission for performing a service which it is the local custom to render gratuitously.[61]

(III) Necessity and Sufficiency of Writing.[62] At common law a contract employing a broker for the purchase or sale of lands need not be in writing, and he may accordingly recover compensation for services rendered under an oral contract;[63] but this rule has been changed by statute in some states.[64] If in order to obtain the property at the price for which the owner was willing to sell it, provided he was relieved of the commission, the owner not being willing to sell unless he was so relieved. Deitch v. Feder, 86 N. Y. Suppl. 802.

Description of property.—In a contract with a real-estate broker for the sale of certain property the description "My property, 48 Eldridge court," is sufficiently definite to enable the broker to recover commissions, the contract being dated at Chicago, where there is a No. 48 Eldridge court, of which the principal is part owner. Weaver v. Snow, 60 Ill. App. 624. Moreover the contract need not describe the land specifically, if the terms of the employment can be made definite without it. Maze v. Gordon, 96 Cal. 61, 30 Pac. 962. A real-estate broker's right to a commission upon a sale is not defeated by a mutual mistake whereby the property is misdescribed in the contract of employment. Tyler v. Justice, 120 Ga. 879, 48 S. E. 328.

57. Steidl v. McClymonds, 90 Minn. 205, 95 N. W. 906 (holding that if a broker is encouraged by a property-owner to aid in a sale, and led to believe that he will receive compensation, the owner cannot accept the benefit of his services and deny him compensation); Kinder v. Pope, 106 Mo. App. 536, 80 S. W. 315. However, the fact that the owner of land at the request of a broker gave him a list of his lands with their net price per acre does not make the broker his agent so as to entitle him to commission on a sale of the land afterward made by the owner to one with whom he had begun to negotiate a sale before he listed the land with the broker. Constitutionality of statute.— A statute making a broker guilty of a misdemeanor if he offers real property for sale without the written authority of the owner has been held to be unconstitutional as being an arbitrary interference with private business and as imposing unusual and unnecessary restrictions thereon. Grossman v. Caminez, 79 N. Y. App. Div. 15, 79 N. Y. Suppl. 900 [approved in Cody v. Dempsey, 86 N. Y. App. Div. 335, 83 N. Y. Suppl. 899]. Contra, see New York cases cited supra, this note.

If the sale is consummated by the parties the statute does not prevent the broker from recovering a commission, although he was orally employed. Cody v. Dempsey, 86 N. Y. App. Div. 335, 83 N. Y. Suppl. 899. Contra, see New York cases cited supra, this note.

Modification of contract.— A contract created by letters may be changed by parol agreement as to those provisions not required to be in writing. Bradley v. Bower, (Nebr. 1904) 99 N. W. 490.

Sufficiency of writing.— A contract for the sale of land between the owner and a broker must be signed by the owner and broker, and contain a description of the land, and set forth the amount of the compensation. Danielson v. Goebel, (Nebr. 1904) 98 N. W. 819. See also Mendenhall v. Rose, (Cal. 1893) 33 Pac. 884. A pencil memorandum written out and signed by the owner's son, by direction of his father, "Property 76 Mangin Street; $9,006.00, no less," is not a compliance with the statute. Cohen v. Boccuzzi, 42 Misc. (N. Y.) 544, 86 N. Y. Suppl. 187. Where an owner by letter authorized an agent to sell certain land, and offered a specified commission, and the agent by letter notified the owner that he was attempting to sell the land, and named a prospective purchaser to whom the land was finally sold, it is a sufficient contract in writing. Bradley v. Bower, (Nebr. 1904) 99 N. W. 490. See also Longstreth v. Korb, 64 N. J. L. 112, 44 Atl. 934. A paper signed by the attorney in fact of the owner of property which recited, "They will take 86 st subject to 1st and 2nd mortgages. We to take 26th ward lots subject to taxes . . . not to exceed $6,500," and which was delivered to a real-estate broker with the intention of authorizing him to negotiate the transfer, sufficiently authorized the broker in writing to negotiate the transfer, within the statute. Cody v. Dempsey, 86 N. Y. App. Div. 335, 83 N. Y. Suppl. 899.

Waiver of writing.—Under N. Y. Pen. Code, § 640*d*, making it a misdemeanor to attempt to earn commissions for the sale of real estate without written authority, plaintiff, who had no written authority, cannot raise the question of waiver of the written authority, in an action to recover commissions therefor. Kronenberger v. Quinn, 86 N. Y. Suppl. 139.

Promise to pay for past services.— In the absence of a written contract for the sale of real estate there is an absence of right to compensation for services, and a subsequent express promise to pay is void as being without consideration. Evidence of ratification.— In an action by a broker to recover commissions for making a sale, defendant's acquiescence in plaintiff's statement that plaintiff had secured a loan for the prospective purchasers does not justify the conclusion that defendant ratified the agency claimed by plaintiff, as no claim of agency was suggested by plaintiff's statement. See also Gaty v. Sack, 19 Mo. App. 470.

Notice to subagent.— An owner of real estate employed a real-estate agent to find a purchaser for it. The latter, within the scope of his authority, but without the owner's knowledge, employed a broker for the same purpose. The owner revoked the authority given to the agent. The broker, without notice of the revocation, found a purchaser. It was held that he could recover pay for services of which he takes the benefit.[81] If for example he terminates the agency after the broker has found a person ready, willing, and able to buy the property or to lend on the terms suggested by the principal, the broker is entitled to compensation.[82] This is especially true where the principal eventually sells his property to such person.[83] If the contract of agency gives the broker a certain time within which to effect a sale the principal cannot defeat his right to compensation by revoking the agency before the expiration of the time specified.[84] If before a selling broker has found a customer the principal sells the property himself or through another agent, it constitutes a revocation of the broker's authority.[85] The fact that a client's account with a stock-broker has been balanced for a few days does not of itself show a revocation of the broker's authority to make further trades in accordance with the previous course of dealing between the parties.[86]

Disclosing highest price principal will pay. — An intimation by a real-estate broker of the highest price his employer is willing to pay for land, made to the owner in good faith to obtain a reduction in the price, is not an act of disloyalty to his employer which will defeat his recovery for services. Equality of means of knowledge.— It is immaterial to a real-estate agent's right to commissions for effecting the execution of a contract for the exchange of lands that he misrepresented the amount of taxes in arrear on the land to be received by his principal, where the latter had the tax-bills before him. purchaser's name and puts forward a fictitious purchaser, it constitutes fraud in law, and he cannot recover.[98] Nor does the mere failure to disclose to the principal that the nominal purchaser is not the real purchaser defeat the broker's right to a commission where he acts solely in the interest of his principal and it does not appear that a disclosure would have influenced the principal's decision.[99] The rule that a broker is entitled to a commission when he produces a customer who is able, ready, and willing to enter into a contract with the principal on the latter's terms is enforced only where the broker acts in good faith.[1] The broker's right to compensation is not affected by fraudulent representations made to the principal by third persons,[2] unless they are in privity with the broker.[3] Although the principal may rescind the contract of employment if the broker is not acting in good faith, yet he must give notice of the rescission before performance by the broker in order to avoid liability for a commission.[4] A broker who has bought stock for his principal and wrongfully pledges it may nevertheless recover his commission.[5]

(II) Representing Adverse Interest.[6] A broker who acts for both parties to an exchange or purchase and sale or lease of property is guilty of fraud which deprives him of the right to recover compensation from either,[7] unless the prin-

A broker is entitled to a commission, however, where a principal placed lands in his hands for sale at a certain price, and as a proposed purchaser did not want the entire tract the broker induced his employee to purchase the remaining portion, and the principal to escape paying commissions conveyed the whole tract to the employee, who conveyed to the proposed purchaser his portion of the land, the latter assuming a proportionate amount of the purchase-money. Bogart v. McWilliams, (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 31 S. W. 434. So a broker who engages for a commission to find a purchaser of land at such price as may be agreed upon between the purchaser and the vendor, and then becomes himself the purchaser in whole or in part, the vendor accepting him as such, may recover the commission; and the fact that in effecting the sale the broker has acted in fraud of his co-purchaser will not affect his right to the commission as against the vendor. Grant v. Hardy, 33 Wis. 668. And where a principal, after employing a broker by parol to sell land at a certain price, gave him a certain written option to purchase for himself, and the broker procured a purchaser at the price named, but the principal refused to convey to him, and the broker, exercising his option, took a conveyance to himself, and then conveyed to the purchaser, the broker was entitled to the commission specified in the parol contract of employment. Riemer v. Rice, 88 Wis. 16, 59 N. W. 450.

Burden of proof.— If an agent employed to sell property buys it in himself the burden of proving that the principal expressly or impliedly consented thereto rests on the agent, in an action for compensation. App. 682; Armstrong v. O'Brien, 83 Tex. 635, 19 S. W. 268. See also Shepard v. Hill, 6 Wash. 605, 34 Pac. 159. Contra, Alvord v. Cook, 174 Mass. 120, 54 N. E. 499.

If the principals know of the arrangement and acquiesce therein, the agreement for lessee does not defeat his right to a commission for making the sale or effecting the lease.[14]

e. As Affected by Negligence. Although a broker finds a person who is willing to buy on the terms imposed by the principal, yet he is not entitled to a commission if the trade fails through his negligence.[15] So a broker who is guilty of negligence in selling or exchanging property, as a result of which the principal is injured, cannot recover compensation.[16]

f. Right to Compensation Other Than Commission[17] — (I) In General. A broker may be entitled to compensation other than a commission. Thus a broker employed to find a purchaser may be entitled to the reasonable[18] or agreed[19] value of services rendered under the contract of employment, although he does not effect a sale himself, and even though no sale is effected.[20]

(II) Reimbursemeet of Advances, Expenses, or Losses.[21] A broker who in executing his orders pays out or advances moneys on his client's account is ordinarily entitled to reimbursement.[22] If the principal fails to deliver property division of commissions is valid. Dearing v. Sears, 3 N. Y. Suppl. 31.

Duty to make separate contracts for principals.— Where a person instructs a broker to buy and sell stocks for him with the intention that he shall only receive or pay differences, and authorizes the broker to pay losses for him, the broker is entitled to recover any sums that he has paid for the principal, even though he has not entered into separate contracts in his behalf, but has appropriated to him parts of larger amounts of stocks which the broker has bought as a principal with a view to dividing them among different clients for whom he has been instructed to buy. Ex p. Rogers, 15 Ch. If forged certificates of stock are sold by a broker and the principal receives the price, the broker, on refunding the price to the purchaser, is entitled to recover therefor from the principal, but he is not entitled to a further sum which he was obliged to pay the purchaser by a resolution of the stock exchange, since the principal by placing the stock in the broker's hands did not guarantee its genuineness, and he was not bound by the resolution. Authority to make advances.— Statements sent by a broker to his customer contained a printed notice reserving the right to close transactions when the margins were exhausted without giving notice. The customer sent an order to buy wheat, but inclosed no money. After the purchase the customer sent his check, and subsequently, when his margin had been exhausted, voluntarily sent another check, without inquiry as to whether the broker had sold or closed out the deal. Nothing was then heard from the customer for some three months. It was held that the customer was liable for further margins paid by the broker, since his acts constituted an implied authority to advance margins and to continue the deal. Van Dusen-Harrington Co. v. Jungeblut, 75 Minn. 298, 77 N. W. 970, 74 Am. St. Rep. 463.

Transactions in broker's own name.—Where a broker purchases property on 'change without disclosing the name of his principal, he becomes liable personally for the price, and on payment of the same can collect it from his principal, unless the latter shows payment to the seller or a release from the broker. Knapp v. Simon, 96 N. Y. 284 [reversing 49 N. Y. Super. Ct. 17]; Knapp v. Simon, 86 N. Y. 311 [reversing 46 N. Y. Super. Ct. 225].

Measure of recovery.— Where brokers, having been ordered by a person to buy stock for him, buy and pay for it, take the certificate in their own name, offer to transfer the certificate to him, and demand payment, and he neglects to pay, they may recover from him the price paid by them, and not merely the difference between that price and the market value of the stock on the day of their demand. Gildings v. Sears, 103 Mass. 311.

Tender of property and demand of price.— A broker may recover of his principal for money advanced in purchasing stock without tendering it to him (Esser v. Linderman, 71 Pa. St. 76), unless the broker buys it in his own name, in which case he must show a demand of payment and a transfer or an offer to transfer the stock (Merwin v. Hamilton, 6 Duer (N. Y.) 244).

Estoppel to claim advance.— Defendant, a share-broker, bought stock for plaintiff, also a share-broker, and sent to him an account debiting him with only the premium and not the deposit, although defendant had paid both. Afterward defendant sold the same shares for plaintiff, and sent him an account, crediting him with a sum made up of both premium and deposit. Plaintiff bought and sold these shares for his own principal, and debited and credited them at the prices charged as above to himself on the purchase and sale by defendant. It was held that defendant was not precluded from charging plaintiff with the deposit on the first transaction. Dails v. Lloyd, 12 Q. B. 531, 12 Jur. 827, 17 L. J. Q. B. 247, 5 R. & Can. Cas. 283 (the last three cases so holding, although the broker bought in his own name).

Elements of right to recover.— Where a broker fills an order for the purchase of stocks, and his principal makes default, and he thereupon resells at a loss, it is necessary for him, in order that he may recover the amount of the loss from his principal, to show that the stock was actually purchased by himself or by an agent under his direction at its fair market price on the day of the purchase, and that he actually paid the purchase-money therefor; that he notified the principal of the purchase and requested him to receive the stock and pay the price paid for it; that at the time of this notice he was in a condition to deliver the stock, by having the stock or other proper indicia of title actually in hand or in the hands of his agent; that on the failure of the principal to receive the stock he, after a reasonable time and notice to that effect to the principal, directed it to be sold; and that it was sold by his agent, either at public sale in market overt or at a sale publicly and fairly made at the stock exchange or a stock board or a board of brokers where such stocks are usually sold, at a fair market value, on the day of sale. Rosenstock v. Tormey, 32 Md. 169, 3 Am. Rep. 125.

Notice of the resale must be given to the principal. Rosenstock v. Tormey, 32 Md. 169, 3 Am. Rep. 125. The notice of sale is not insufficient for failing to state the place of sale, where such stock was for sale only at the New York stock board, and the principal had knowledge of the fact. And where the notice of sale was given by letter, handed to the postmaster at the broker's post-office, money for his principal in a settlement of differences in a transaction on a stock or produce exchange, he is entitled to reimbursement therefor.[27] If the principal fails or refuses to put up margins on demand, the broker may close out the transaction by buying or selling to fulfil the principal's contracts and hold the latter for any resulting loss.[28] So the broker may close out the transaction on the principal's becoming insolvent.[29] The amount of the broker's recovery is not limited to the margins in his hands, but he may recover the full loss resulting from the operation;[30] nor is it limited to what he has actually paid in the principal's behalf, but he may recover the amount for which he is legally liable.[31] A broker is not entitled to reimbursement for losses sustained through his failing to follow the principal's instructions,[32] or for expenses incurred by him beyond the limits of his authority,[33] in the absence of ratification[34] or estoppel.[35] A principal not in default is not liable for a loss resulting from the transaction's being closed out before the settling day upon the broker's becoming a defaulter on the exchange,[36] unless he ratifies the closing of the account before the settling day.[37] The broker cannot claim reimbursement, however, where the transaction in question was fictitious, and no actual purchase or sale was effected.[38] So if a broker, who inclosed it to the postmaster at the post-office of his customer, stating that the writer requested that he would note its delivery to the person addressed, it was binding on the customer, although not received by him by reason of his failure to call at the post-office until after the day of sale. A broker must give his principal reasonable notice to furnish the requisite margins before he can close out the latter's account for lack of margins and hold him liable for the loss (Perin v. Parker, 17 Ill. App. 169; Minor v. Beveridge, 67 Hun (N. Y.) 1, 21 N. Y. Suppl. 691), in the absence of a stipulation waiving notice (Robinson v. Crawford, 31 N. Y. App. Div. 228, 52 N. Y. Suppl. 560).

Consideration of contract.— Where defendant employed brokers to sell her land, and in consideration of their services agreed to pay them a commission if the sale should be made by them or by defendant herself while the contract was in force, and the land was sold by defendant before their authority was withdrawn and after they had spent time and money in attempts to procure a purchaser, they were entitled to their commission, although the purchaser was found by defendant, the time and money spent by them in attempting to procure a purchaser being a sufficient consideration to support defendant's promise to pay the commission. Kimmell v. Skelly, 130 Cal. 555, 62 Pac. 1067. And where a principal contracts to pay a broker a certain sum if he sells his farm, and one half the amount if he sells it without the influence of the broker, the principal, if he sells independently of the broker, cannot, on the ground that the contract is without consideration, avoid liability for the amount agreed to be paid the broker. Hoskins v. Fogg, 60 N. H. 402. The introduction to an owner by a broker of one who afterward buys the property is a sufficient consideration for a promise by the owner that if the agents will abstain from further efforts he will, when the sale is effected, pay them half commissions. Gibson v. Gray, 17 Tex. Civ. App. 646, 43 S. W. 922.

h. Commission on Forfeited Deposit. A real-estate broker acting for the vendor is entitled to a commission on a deposit made by the prospective purchaser and forfeited by him.[45]

i. Commission From Both Parties. If a broker merely brings together the parties to an exchange or purchase and sale of property, and his employment then terminates, and the parties themselves settle the terms of the transaction, he acts as a mere middleman, and he may accordingly recover a commission from each party if each has agreed to pay him.[46] If, however, the broker is employed as the agent of either party, so that that party relies on him to secure the best bargain possible, then the general rule forbidding a secret double employment applies, and the broker cannot recover commissions from both parties to the transaction,[47] cent of the price stipulated therein is penal in character, and must be strictly construed. Tracy v. Abney, 122 Iowa 306, 98 N. W. 121. A qualification of a broker's right to commissions for the sale of property that "if sold to a party sent by Mr. Repp, of this week, then no commission to be paid; also, A. Ozias," limits the time within which a sale to such persons may be made without payment of commissions to "this week." Gaty v. Clark, 28 Mo. App. 332.

What constitutes a sale.— A lease by defendant for five years with the exclusive privilege to the lessee of purchasing at a fixed price at any time before the expiration of the term is a sale, within the meaning of a contract running for one year and providing that if plaintiff should effect a sale of defendant's property he should receive a certain commission, and in case a sale should be made without his aid, or the property be withdrawn from sale, one half such commission. Rucker v. Hall, 105 Cal. 425, 38 Pac. 962. So where an owner agreed to pay a broker a certain sum in case either should "sell" certain premises, a bargain made by the owner, unaided by the broker, to sell the land at a certain sum, and take pay in cash and another parcel of land, and a conveyance accordingly by himself and wife, was a sale within the meaning of the contract. Goward v. Waters, 98 Mass. 596. However, one who agrees to allow a real-estate broker commissions on sales of land made by himself is not liable for commissions upon making a conveyance absolute on its face but in fact a mortgage. Subsequent payment of commission by adverse party.— The fact that after the transaction is closed to the principal's satisfaction the adverse party pays the broker an additional commission does not deprive him of the right to a commission from his principal, in the absence of a previous double employment or bad faith. Campbell v. Yager, 32 Nebr. 266, 49 N. W. 181; Minster v. Benoliel, 32 Misc. (N. Y.) 630, 66 N. Y. Suppl. 493 [reversed on another point in 33 Misc. 586, 67 N. Y. Recovering back commission.— Where an agent, in effecting a sale of property for his principal, has taken a secret commission from the purchaser, the principal, notwithstanding that he has recovered from the agent the amount of the secret commission, is further entitled to recover back the commission which he himself has paid to the agent. Andrews v. Ramsay, [1903] 2 K. B. 635, 72 L. J. K. B. 865, 89 L. T. Rep. N. S. 450, 52 Wkly. Rep. 126.

Loan broker.— A broker employed by the owner of lands to procure a sale thereof to one who shall agree to take from the owner a loan and improve the property cannot, after recovering compensation from the owner of the property for effecting the sale, recover compensation from the purchaser for procuring the loan to him. Pro rata commission.— Where an owner authorizes a sale of his property at the minimum price per acre, and agrees to give the broker a certain per cent commission, the broker is entitled to the same commission for a higher price obtained by him. Brackenridge v. Claridge, (Tex. Civ. App. 1897) 42 S. W. 1005. So where a real-estate broker procures a purchaser at the agreed price, and the owner sells to him for a less sum on discovering that the land does not contain the supposed number of acres, the broker is entitled to his commission at the agreed rate on the latter sum. Hoefling v. Hambleton, 84 Tex. 517, 19 S. W. 689. And where the terms of sale are fixed by the vendor, in accordance with which the broker undertakes to produce a purchaser, and upon the procurement of a purchaser the vendor voluntarily reduces the price of the property, or the quantity, or otherwise changes the terms of sale as proposed to the broker, so that a sale is consummated, or terms or conditions are offered which the proposed buyer is ready and willing to accept, the broker will be entitled to his commission at the rate specified in his agreement with his principal. Stewart v. Mather, 32 Wis. 344. See also Raeder v. Butler, 19 Pa. Super. Ct. 604. It has been held, however, that where a real-estate broker is entitled to a commission of one third of the excess above a certain amount realized on the sale of four houses, he is not entitled to a proportionate amount on the sale of only one house (Mayor v. Haaren, 57 N. Y. Super. Ct. 574, 5 N. Y. Suppl. 436); and that a contract to pay a certain commission on the sale of lots at a fixed price out of a body of land does not entitle the agent to a commission at the same rate for a large body of the land (Louisville Bldg. Assoc. v. Hegan, 49 S. W. 796, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1629).

Right of broker to excess over price named by vendor.— A real-estate agent employed to sell land for a certain price is not entitled to any excess over such price that he may obtain for the land (Snow v. Mcfarlane, 51 Ill. App. 448; Turnley v. Michael, (Tex. App. 1891) 15 S. W. 912), in the absence of agreement therefor (Blakeslee v. Ervin, 40 Nebr. 130, 58 N. W. 850). Agreement for sale at net price see also infra, note 78.

Evidence of agreed amount.— Where plaintiff testified that he told defendant what the commission would be for the lease of his property, but was silent as to what the commission was, and defendant says that the first claim plaintiff made was three hundred and fifty dollars, plaintiff cannot recover a larger amount. Duncan v. Borden, 13 Colo. App. 481, 59 Pac. 60. The fact that a merchant had settled with another dealer, who furnished a part of the merchandise sold by a broker, on the basis of a representation made by him that the broker was to receive as his commission all that the merchandise sold for above a certain price does not conclusively establish, in an action by the broker against the merchant for such commission, that he is entitled thereto. May v. Schuyler, 43 N. Y. Super. Ct. 95. However, in the absence of a special agreement, evidence that the broker was willing to accept a specified sum does not show that he was not entitled to the entire amount of brokerage. Donohue v. Flanagan, 9 N. Y. Suppl. 273.

Evidence of value of property.— A judgment for brokerage measured on the value of the property at the time of sale on the exchange is not sustained, where there is no proof of a positive nature showing such value. McCormick v. McCaffrey, 32 Misc. (N. Y.) 727, 66 N. Y. Suppl. 390.

Compensation for getting option.— One not employed to purchase property but simply to procure an option and whose employer does not avail himself of the services rendered to make the purchase is entitled only to reasonable compensation and not to the same compensation to which he would have been entitled had he been employed to purchase the property. Boardman v. Hanks, 185 Mass. 555, 70 N. E. 1012.

Compensation for negotiating lease see Schultz v. Goldman, (Ariz. 1901) 64 Pac. 425; Daube v. Nessler, 50 Ill. App. 166, holding that the value of the services of a real-estate broker for negotiating a lease cannot be measured by the value of the fee, regardless of the terms of the lease.

Compensation less than commission.— If a broker employed to effect a sale at a certain commission merely procures a customer who subsequently purchases of the owner directly, a judgment awarding the broker a less sum than the commission on a completed sale will upon the amount allowed by custom or usage locally prevailing among the particular class of brokers in question.[52] In estimating the commission upon an exchange of real estate the actual and not the trade value of the property should be taken as the basis.[53] If several properties are sold without a separate valuation, a broker who was promised a certain percentage of the proceeds of the sale of part of the properties is entitled to that percentage of the proceeds of all.[54] A broker who agrees to take real estate as compensation is entitled to recover a commission in cash upon the principal's refusal to convey the realty.[55] In some cases the amount of compensation is governed by statute.[56]

New York.— Robinson v. Norris, 51 How. Pr. 442 (holding that one who employs stock-brokers to purchase, carry, and sell stocks on his account cannot dispute, as too high, the rates of commissions charged against him for raising money to carry his stocks in a stringent money market, where he is informed of their custom in that respect at the beginning of their dealings, and is kept informed at short intervals of the daily state of his accounts with them, and makes no objection thereto until a settlement is demanded); Hull v. Cardwell, 2 N. Y. City Ct. 76 (holding that since, in the absence of any express agreement, the custom is to allow percentage on the actual rental, a broker who procures a tenant for premises for six months at the rate of one thousand dollars a year is entitled to brokerage on five hundred dollars only).

See, however, Harrell v. Zimpleman, 66 Tex. 292, 17 S. W. 478 (holding that, where property is placed in the hands of a real-estate agent for sale, he is entitled to reasonable compensation for his services, regardless of custom, in the absence of a contract making the right to compensation dependent on the sale of the property by him); Hinton v. Coleman, 45 Wis. 165 (holding that evidence that the customary commission on sales on real estate is three per cent of the price is not sufficient evidence of the value of the services rendered in making such a sale to sustain a recovery upon a quantum meruit therefor).

The custom must be certain, uniform, and generally understood else it is not binding on the principal. Inslee v. Jones, Brightly (Pa.) 76; Pratt v. Bank, 12 Phila. (Pa.) 378. See also Calland v. Trapet, 70 Ill. App. 228; Potts v. Aechternacht, 93 Pa. St. 138.

Extra charges in stock transaction.— A broker carrying stock in the New York stock market for a principal at an agreed rate has no right to make extra charges in a time of panic, even though he paid a New York broker as high as one per cent a day, and the acceptance by the principal upon a sale of the stock of the balance due on the statement rendered, in which such charges were included, is no more than competent evidence of an agreement authorizing them. Effect of statute on contract for greater compensation.— A statute which forbids any person to charge more than one half of one per cent brokerage for procuring a loan, but does not prescribe any penalty for its violation, does not render void a contract for a greater brokerage, but the broker can recover only the statutory amount. Buchanan v. Tilden, 18 N. Y. App. Div. 123, 45 N. Y. Suppl. 417.

Operation of statute.— 1 N. Y. Rev. St. p. 709, restricting brokers' fees for negotiating loans to one half of one per cent on the amount loaned, applies to a contract for a loan procured while the statute was in force, although not sought to be enforced until after the statute was changed. Anderson v. Dwyer, 61 N. Y. Suppl. 1114 [affirmed in 30 Misc. 793, 63 N. Y. Suppl. 201].

k. Persons Entitled to Compensation[57] — (I) In General. The broker who effects a sale is ordinarily the one who is entitled to the commission.[58]

(II) Subagents.[59] A real-estate broker and his subagent stand in practically the same relative position inter se with reference to the right to compensation as do the principal and the broker.[60] Ordinarily the principal is not liable to compensate a subagent employed by the broker.[61]

(III) Agreements For Division of Commission. A broker who has been employed to negotiate a transaction frequently calls in the aid of another broker, with whom he agrees to divide the commission. The rights and liabilities of the parties under these arrangements depend upon their particular terms, and if valid[62] they are construed and enforced the same as other contracts.[63] A broker with whom the commission for selling land is to be divided must deal fairly by the other,[64] and if he transacts business directly with the owner and finds a purchaser and collects the commission he is liable to the other for his share of it,[65] without any request on the part of the principal to deliver it to that other.[66] If the broker with whom the commission for selling land is to be divided himself

App. 456 (holding that one real-estate agent cannot recover from another commissions for a sale of property which was in fact made by another firm of agents, and not induced by anything said or done by plaintiff, although plaintiff was the first to disclose to defendant the name of the purchaser); Yarborough v. Creager, (Tex. Civ. App. 1903) 77 S. W. 645 (holding that, if a broker was the procuring cause of the sale, his right to a commission does not depend upon any contract the principal may have made with other brokers relative to the sale); Arnold v. Garner, 11 Jur. 339, 16 L. J. Ch. 339, 2 Phil. 231, 22 Eng. Ch. 231, 41 Eng. App. Div. 257, 38 N. Y. Suppl. 400.

Executors and administrators.— A promise by a person to a broker to compensate him on a sale of land, followed by a sale made by such person as administrator, constitutes a personal contract, unconnected with the ownership of the land, upon which compensation is recoverable. Moore v. Daiber, 92 Mich. 402, 52 N. W. 742. An admission by defendant executor, in an action for commission for procuring a purchaser of testator's land, that he was an executor and trustee under the will, is not sufficient to show him authorized to sell the land, so as to render him officially liable. Guthmann v. Meuer, 31 Misc. (N. Y.) 810, 63 N. Y. Suppl. 971.

Guardians.— Where, in employing plaintiff as a real-estate broker to effect a sale of lands, defendant acted as guardian of the changed by contract between the parties interested.[73] One who employs a broker to find a purchaser is usually liable for compensation regardless of the nature of his interest in the property,[74] and of whether or not he has any interest in it whatsoever.[75] A real-estate broker representing one party only cannot recover commissions from the other.[76]

m. Sufficiency of Services of Broker — (i) In General. A broker is not entitled to compensation until he has performed the undertaking assumed by him.[77] The right to compensation depends upon a performance of the stipula-owner, and had no personal or private interest in the property, all of which was known to plaintiff, defendant cannot be charged individually for a commission. Hudson v. Scott, 125 Ala. 172, 28 So. 91.

Officers of corporation.— Where defendant in his negotiations with the broker did not purport to bind himself individually, but purported to bind a corporation of which he was president, no recovery can be had against him for commissions. Groeltz v. Armstrong, (Iowa 1904) 99 N. W. 128.

Partners.— Where a customer of stockbrokers had a speculative account with them standing in his own name but in which he and two other parties, one of them an agent of the brokers, were interested, the brokers were entitled to regard all three as partners in the transaction, and the customer was therefore individually liable for the entire balance due to the brokers on the account. Consideration of contract.—A contract by a person having no interest in the transaction to pay the commission if a sale is effected is void unless based on a sufficient consideration. Smyth v. Mack, 19 N. Y. Suppl. 347. There is a sufficient consideration for a promise to pay a commission, however, where a broker requested by an owner to find a purchaser at a certain price showed it to defendant, who told the broker that he (defendant) could do better by negotiating personally with the owner, and that if the broker would keep out of the way he would pay him a commission when he bought the land. Execution and delivery of contract.—Where a memorandum was made by an owner of real estate specifying the terms and conditions on which it would be sold and delivered to an intending purchaser but not signed by him, the question whether the parties intended the writing to be a contract between them was one of fact, and a mere delivery thereof was not conclusive that the parties intended it to be the final contract between them, so as to entitle a broker negotiating the sale to his commission, the customer having refused to complete the purchase. Rutherford v. Selover, 87 Minn. 495, 92 N. W. 413. Where, however, a contract is signed by buyer and seller which contains stipulations by each in favor of the other of nearly equal value, the broker who brought them together is the proper custodian thereof, in the absence of other arrangement; and a delivery to him by each after signing amounts to a delivery to the other so as to entitle the broker to his commission for finding a purchaser. Greene v. Hollingshead, 40 Ill. App. 195.

Authority to make contract.— If the contract is executed by the owner's agent, the broker must prove the agent's authority to make it. Stinde v. Scharff, 36 Mo. App. 15.

Evidence of contract.— The contract of sale may be established by circumstantial evidence. Chapin v. Bridges, 116 Mass. 105.

Alteration of contract.— If, after a contract of sale is signed by the vendor, the purchaser materially alters it and then signs it, and the vendor refuses to reëxecute it, the broker is not entitled to a commission. Bruce v. Hurlbutt, 54 N. Y. App. Div. 616, 66 N. Y. Suppl. 1127 [affirming 47 N. Y. App. 163, 62 N. Y. Suppl. 217].

Uncertainty of contract.— If the minds of the vendor and the purchaser have met on a contract to sell real estate, the broker is entitled to his commission, notwithstanding any vagueness in the terms of the agreement. Folinsbee v. Sawyer, 15 Misc. (N. Y.) 293, 36 N. Y. Suppl. 405 [affirming 8 Misc. 370, 28 N. Y. Suppl. 698]; Schultz v. Griffin, 8 N. Y. St. 332. See, however, Montgomery v. Knickerbacker, 27 N. Y. App. Div. 117, 50 N. Y. Suppl. 128.

Variance between contract and broker's instructions.— Where a broker is employed to sell land, part of the price to be paid by the purchaser's assuming a mortgage held by a certain bank, the fact that a contract procured by the broker recites that the mortgage is held by another bank is not such a variance as to release the owner from his obligation to pay the broker a commission. Schultz v. Griffin, 5 Misc. (N. Y.) 499, 26 N. Y. Suppl. 713.

Fraud and mistake.— A real-estate broker who produces one ready and willing to purchase, but able to do so only by perpetrating a fraud on a third person, is not entitled to a commission, although an executory contract of sale is entered into between his principal and the proposed purchaser, where the principal refuses to consummate the contract because of the proposed fraud. Zittle v. Schlesinger, 46 Nebr. 244, 65 N. W. 892. So where an order for goods given by a broker was accepted by the seller in the mistaken belief that the broker was purchasing for himself, the seller may, on learning the facts, impose, as a condition of filling the order, that the sale shall be approved by a third person, and the broker cannot recover a commission on the sale unless the condition is performed. White v. Molloy, 9 N. Y. App. Div. 101, 41 N. Y. Suppl. 162. And where a broker is instructed by his principal to ascertain the actual rentals of a property sought in exchange, and the agent procures an erroneous statement thereof, although believing it to be true, which the principal relies on, ance of the contract or the happening of some other event.[87] In many cases, however, his right to a commission depends upon the final consummation of the transaction which he was employed to negotiate.[88] Thus a broker employed to buy, sell, or exchange property may be engaged upon such terms that he is not entitled to compensation until a contract of purchase or sale or exchange is and he contracts to exchange the property, but rescinds the contract after learning the facts, the broker is not entitled to compensation. Marcus v. Bloomingdale, 63 N. Y. App. Div. 227, 71 N. Y. Suppl. 374.

Effect of non-performance of contract.— The broker is entitled to a commission where the customer found by him and the principal enter into a valid contract of purchase or sale, although one or both of the parties refused to comply with the contract, provided that the non-performance was not occasioned by the broker's fault. See 8 Cent. Dig. tit. "Brokers," § 73.

See, however, Smith v. Schiele, 93 Cal. 144, 28 Pac. 857 (holding that a contract with certain brokers "solely, to sell" the principal's land on a commission did not make the right to the commission contingent on the consummation of a sale); Alvord v. Cook, 174 Mass. 120, 54 N. E. 499 (holding that a broker who procures an agreement for an exchange is entitled to a commission, although the contract of employment provides that the commission is to be paid only when the exchange is carried into effect and the exchange is not effected, where the principal did not attempt to enforce the agreement for exchange).

If the right to a commission is dependent on payment of the price by the purchaser, the broker must show payment (Burnett v. Edling, (Tex. Civ. App. 1898) 48 S. W. 775) or tender (Fiske v. Soule, 87 Cal. 313, 25 Pac. 430) thereof, else he is not entitled to the commission. See, however, Frank v. Bonnevie, (Colo. App. 1904) 77 Pac. 363 (holding that under a contract providing for payment of a commission "at the date of the payment of the purchase-price or in instalments according to payment by said purchaser," the broker was entitled to a commission on a partial payment of the price, although the principal, a part owner, received no part of the payment); Finch v. Guardian Trust Co., 92 Mo. App. 263 (holding that a stipulation that the broker's commission shall be payable out of the first cash payment is not a condition precedent to the broker's right to recover his commissions, and does not mean that unless there is a cash payment there is to be no commission). So where land is sold for a price payable in instalments and the commission is to be paid as each instalment is received, if the purchaser defaults after making certain payments, and the land is sold at a judicial sale and bought in by the principal in full satisfaction of the price, the broker is entitled to a full commission. Crane v. Eddy, 191 Ill. 645, 61 N. E. 431, 85 Am. St. Rep. 284 [affirming 93 Ill. App. 569]. Sufficiency of acceptance of offer.— Mailing a letter accepting a proposition to purchase land constitutes a sufficient acceptance thereof, so as to entitle the broker securing the purchaser to a commission, even though the sender intercepts the letter and secures its return to him before delivery to the addressee. Ability to make cash payment.— If the contract of sale requires the price to be paid in cash, the purchaser must have the cash in hand. Neiderlander v. Starr, 50 Kan. 766, 32 Pac. 359. It is not sufficient that he has property out of which the price might be realized by suit. Dent v. Powell, 93 Iowa 711, 61 N. W. 1043.

Ability to make final payment.—Where the proposed purchaser was at the time of the signing of the contract of sale ready to make the payment then due, the broker is not required to show that the purchaser had sufficient funds on hand at that time to make the final payment. Levy v. Ruff, 4 Misc. (N. Y.) 180, 23 N. Y. Suppl. 1002 [affirming 3 Misc. 147, 22 N. Y. Suppl. 744, 30 Abb. N. Cas. 291].

Insolvency of purchaser.— The fact that the purchaser is insolvent does not defeat the broker's right to a commission, where a cash payment is not required, and the contract of sale contemplates that the vendor is to be secured by bond and deed of trust, which the purchaser is prepared to deliver. Ross v. Fickling, 11 App. Cas. (D. C.) 442.

Evidence of ability.— Where the proposed purchaser admits that he had not the ability to pay the price fixed, his testimony that he was acting in behalf of a syndicate, and that he would have been prepared, when the time arrived to complete the purchase, to find the money required, does not satisfactorily show his ability to buy. Mattingly v. Pennie, 105 Cal. 514, 39 Pac. 200, 45 Am. St. Rep. 87. A contract procured by a real-estate broker, signed by the purchaser, furnishes no evidence of his ability to perform its conditions. Flynn v. Jordal, 124 Iowa 457, 100 N. W. 326. Evidence held to show purchaser's inability see Harmon v. Enright, 107 Mo. App. 560, 81 S. W. 1180; Butler v. Baker, 17 R. I. 582, 23 Atl. 1019, 33 Am. St. Rep. 897.

Estoppel to deny purchaser's ability.— One who employs a broker to negotiate a sale cannot, in an action for the commission, avail himself of the objection that the customer is not able to pay for the premises, if he has accepted the customer as satisfactory and has conveyed the premises to him. Travis v. Graham, 23 N. Y. App. Div. 214, 48 N. Y. Suppl. 736.

Evidence of readiness and willingness.— A contract of sale signed by the purchaser, although unilateral when tendered to the vendor, is prima facie evidence of the purchaser's readiness and willingness to buy. Flynn v. Jordal, 124 Iowa 457, 100 N. W. 326.

A prospective purchaser is entitled to demand possession within a reasonable time, and hence the fact that he makes such a demand does not show him unwilling to effect the purchase. Beach v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 73 Conn. 118, 46 Atl. 867.

Purchaser acting for another.— The fact that the purchaser procured by a real-estate person the broker becomes entitled to a commission whether or not a sale is consummated.[94] The principal cannot defeat the broker's right to compensation by refusing to enter into a contract with the customer thus procured;[95] nor is the agent was acting in behalf of another does not affect the agent's right to commissions, if he was able, ready, and willing to buy on the principal's terms. Gelatt v. Ridge, 117 Mo. 553, 23 S. W. 882, 38 Am. St. Rep. 683.

Purchase by corporation or syndicate.— A broker who is promised a commission for selling street-car lines to a certain syndicate, or to a corporation organized by such syndicate, is entitled to the commission on effecting such sale to a railroad company organized by the syndicate, although such company was not duly incorporated. Smith v. Mayfield, 60 Ill. App. 266. Where, however, a broker furnished the names of the members of a purchasing syndicate to the owner, but the syndicate was not fully formed, and all the purchasers were not then known, and it did not appear what proportion of the price each was to pay, and the owner sold to others before the syndicate was fully formed, the broker cannot recover a commission, as he did not produce a person ready and willing to purchase. Gerding v. Haskin, 141 N. Y. 514, 36 N. E. 601.

Tender of performance.— The broker is not obliged to cause the party willing to purchase to tender to the seller a written agreement to that effect. Cook v. Kroemeke, 4 Daly (N. Y.) 268. So where a contract of sale has been repudiated by a vendor, proof of a tender of performance by the vendee is not necessary, in an action by a broker against the vendor for his commissions on the sale. Although the owner reserves the right to sell the property himself, the mere fact that he has given a prospective purchaser an option on the property, subject to revocation by either party at any time, does not relieve him of liability for a commission, if the broker has found a customer able, ready, and willing to buy on the owner's terms. (c) Conclusion of Contract Differing From That Which Broker Was Authorized to Negotiate — (1) GENERAL RULE. If a broker has brought the parties together and as a result they conclude a contract, he is not deprived of his right to a commission by the fact that the contract so concluded differs in terms from the one which he was authorized to negotiate.[2] Where for example the principal to recover commissions for negotiating a loan which the proposed borrower failed to accept and give security for as agreed, they need not prove a tender of the money, as it is the client's duty, on notice of the money being procured, to give the proposed security and take the money. Telford v. Brinkerhoff, 45 Ill. App. 586.

Estoppel of borrower.— Where a principal refused to accept a loan on the ground that the broker's charge for his services in obtaining it was excessive, he could not resist payment for the services because the lender incorporated a new condition in the application requiring the principal to comply with its rules and accept the loan within ten days. Hotchkiss v. Kuchler, 86 N. Y. App. Div. 265, 83 N. Y. Suppl. 710.

Change in subject-matter.— Where an owner employs a broker to bring about an exchange of realty, and the broker brings him and another together, he may recover his commission on an exchange, although the property received was not under discussion when the broker last appeared in the negotiations. French v. McKay, 181 Mass. 485, 63 N. E. 1068. Nor can the vendor escape liability for commissions to a broker employed to negotiate a sale of land, on completing himself a sale to the purchaser with whom the broker has been negotiating, by including in the sale other lands in addition to those the broker was employed to sell. Ranson v. Weston, 110 Mich. 240, 68 N. W. 152. See also Alexander v. Wakefield, (Civ. App. 1902) 69 S. W. 77, holding that in a suit on a contract providing for payment for services for promoting a sale of a street railway on the conclusion of "any trade" with the prospective vendee, it is immaterial that the trade finally consummated was not the one pending at the time the contract was made. However, a broker who has been offered a commission for sellconsummates a sale to a purchaser found by the broker, he is liable for the commission, although the sale is made at a smaller price than that originally proposed by him to the broker,[3] unless the right to a commission is made conditional upon a sale at the price mentioned in the broker's authorization.[4] To entitle a broker ing a described electrical plant to a person named by him is not entitled to a commission where on his failure to make a sale the principal sells a smaller and cheaper plant to the same person. Starr v. Royal Electric Co., 30 Can. Supreme Ct. 384.

Sale on better terms.— Where one employs a broker to sell land at a stipulated price, and the broker finds a purchaser, and the employer then refuses to sell, but soon afterward sells privately or through another agent on more advantageous terms to the same purchaser, the broker is entitled to his commission on the sale the same as if it had been made by him. Lestrade v. Perrera, 6 La. Ann. 398; Steidl v. McClymonds, 90 Minn. 205, 95 N. W. 906. See also Van Sicien v. Herbst, 30 N. Y. App. Div. 255, 51 N. Y. Suppl. 968. So where a principal was induced to commence negotiations for the purchase of property through a broker's agency, the fact that he raised the price from what the broker was authorized to sell cannot deprive the broker of his right to a commission on the sale made. Crone v. Mississippi Valley Trust Co., 85 Mo. App. 601.

The fact that a purchaser pays more than he authorized his broker to offer does not deprive the latter of his right to a commission for effecting the purchase (Carson v. Baker, 2 Colo. App. 248, 29 Pac. 1134), in the absence of agreement to the contrary (Lestrade v. Vanzini, 6 La. Ann. 399).

to a commission where the contract concluded differs from that which the broker was authorized to negotiate, however, the negotiations commenced by the broker must have continued uninterruptedly and he must have been actively instrumental throughout in causing the parties to consummate the transaction.[5] So if the principal and the customer introduced by the broker cannot agree upon the terms of a sale, and the broker or his customer drops the negotiations, or the principal withdraws his authorization, the broker is not entitled to a commission upon a sale being subsequently made by the principal, acting either independently or through another broker, to the same customer on different terms;[6] and this is especially true where the principal, at the time of concluding the transaction, had no notice of the previous negotiations between the broker and the purchaser.[7] This rule applies also to brokers employed to secure leases.[8]

(2) Conclusion of Preliminary, Conditional, or Optional Contract. To entitle a broker to a commission the customer produced by him and the principal must come to a final agreement on the terms of the transaction. Consequently the conclusion of a preliminary or tentative agreement which is not binding on the parties and which is not carried into effect does not give a right to compensation.[9] Nor is a broker entitled to a commission where he procures a contract between the parties subject to a condition not authorized by the terms of his

Sale by rival broker.— If a broker fails to secure a purchaser who will take the property on the terms proposed by the principal, and another broker intervenes and sells the property on different terms, although to the former's customer, the former is not entitled to a commission. Carlson v. Nathan, 43 Ill. App. 364; Livezy v. Miller, 61 Md. 336; Crowninshield v. Foster, 169 Mass. 237, 47 N. E. 879; Chandler v. Sutton, 5 Daly (N. employment.[10] So if a broker employed to effect a transaction merely secures from a customer a contract by which the latter becomes entitled to enter into the transaction at his option, the broker is not entitled to a commission.[11] Thus a broker employed to sell property is not entitled to compensation for procuring a customer who takes an option on the property,[12] as where the customer enters into a contract by the terms of which he may at his option either accept the property or forfeit the earnest money or such partial payments as he may have made up to the time of his election;[13] and the rule is the same where the contract pro-

(N. Y.) 797, 54 N. Y. Suppl. 1103 [affirming 21 Misc. 519, 47 N. Y. Suppl. 711] (holding that where a broker brings parties together, but a contract made by them is by its terms conditional upon the subsequent approval of the attorney of one of them, who fails to approve, and the contract is accordingly inoperative and is never carried out, the broker is not entitled to a commission); Hammond v. Crawford, 66 Fed. 425, 14 C. Condition for rescission.— A mere arrangement for a sale, with no cash paid down, but on condition that if, at the end of six months, all the cash has not been paid, the vendors may rescind the contract, is not a fulfilment of an authority to sell for, among other things one million dollars in cash. Rand v. Cronkrite, 64 Ill. App. 208. So a broker who negotiates a contract conditioned that the purchaser may at his option rescind the sale and receive back the price with interest does not give the broker a right to the commission as for effecting a sale, the purchaser having rescinded. See, however, Rimmer v. Knowles, 30 L. T. Rep. N. S. 496, 22 Wkly. Rep. 574, holding that a broker employed to find a purchaser of land for £3,000 introduced a person who took a lease for one thousand years at £150 a year, with the option of purchasing for £3,000 within twenty years, he had practically found a purchaser, and was entitled to his commission.

Condition that contract shall be void on purchaser's default.— A broker employed to effect a sale does not earn a commission by procuring one who enters into a contract with the principal which provides that the contract shall be void if the first instalment of the price is not paid as provided therein. Ramsey v. West, 31 Mo. App. 676; Jones v. Eilenfeldt, 28 Wash. 687, 69 Pac. 368. It is otherwise where the contract merely gives the vendor the right to declare a forfeiture on default in payment of any instalment. See cases cited infra, note 16.

Estoppel of principal.— A broker employed to sell land, having effected a contract not binding on the purchaser because of a condition that it should be void and cease to bind "either party" on default in payment of the first instalment, the owner is not, by having joined in and accepted the contract, estopped from asserting that it is not such a sale as entitles the broker to his commission. vides that in case either one party or the other shall default in carrying out the contract he shall pay a stipulated sum as liquidated damages.[14] The broker is entitled to a commission, however, where the customer exercises his option by purchasing the property;[15] and if the purchaser agrees absolutely to buy the property, the fact that the price is payable in instalments, and that the vendor is given the right to declare a forfeiture on default in payment of any instalment, does not defeat the broker's right to a commission.[16]

(D) Modification or Cancellation of Contract Concluded by Principal. The right to a commission is not affected by the fact that the principal and the customer, after concluding a contract, subsequently enter into an agreement modifying its terms;[17] nor can a broker be deprived of his commission by any agreement of cancellation or release made by the principal and the customer,[18]

A broker is not injured by the cancellation without his consent of a contract of purchase, where he had agreed with the vendor that he should not be entitled to a commission until the purchaser completed the transaction, and the purchaser defaulted in making the first payment, as a result of which the vendor be-unless the agreement is entered into at his request or with his consent in which case he is bound thereby.[19]

(III) TIME WITHIN WHICH TRANSACTION MUST BE NEGOTIATED.[20] Where the parties stipulate that an agency to sell property is limited to a definite period, it terminates at the expiration of that time, unless the broker has found a purchaser able, ready, and willing to buy the property within the time specified.[21] The owner is under no obligation to extend the time in favor of a prospective purchaser found by the broker.[22] The broker is not entitled to a commission upon a subsequent sale by the owner,[23] in the absence of fraud,[24] even though the sale is made to one with whom the broker was negotiating before the time expired.[25] There are cases, however, holding that if the negotiations between came entitled under the contract of purchase to declare a forfeiture. Seymour v. St. Luke's Hospital, 28 N. Y. App. Div. 119, 50 N. Y. Suppl. 989.

Notice of finding of purchaser.— Where a broker is employed to sell land, and when the negotiation is about finished the owner limits the time within which the sale must be made and notice be sent to him, and the agent makes the sale without delay, and sends notice to the principal within the time limited, the miscarriage of the notice does not deprive the agent of his commission. Gibbons v. Sherwin, 28 Nebr. 146, 44 N. W. 99.

Completion of transaction.— Where the authority conferred on a broker to sell lands is limited in time, and within that time he procures a purchaser with whom his principal enters into a contract, he is entitled to his commission, although the conveyance is not made until after such time has elapsed. S. E. Crowley Co. v. Myers, 69 N. J. L. 245, 55 Atl. 305. See also Cody v. Dempsey, 86 N. Y. App. Div. 335, 83 N. Y. Suppl. 899.

Extension of time.— Where an owner of land employed a broker to procure, within thirty days, a purchaser of the same, and after the expiration of thirty days he wrote to the broker making inquiry as to the prospects, and directed him to sell within the next thirty days if he could get a certain sum net, the contract of employment was extended. Johnson v. Wright, 124 Iowa 61, 99 N. W. 103. Where, however, before the time limited for selling property expired, the broker requested an extension of time, which the principal refused, the fact that at the same time he stated that he hoped that the broker would sell the property and that he would be glad to assist him does not show an authority to sell the property after the expiration of the time limited. (IV) Duty of Broker to Procure Binding Contract.[28] To entitle him to a commission where no sale is actually consummated, a broker employed to find a purchaser must either produce to the owner a customer who is able, ready, and willing to buy on the terms prescribed by the owner, or else take from the customer a binding contract of purchase.[29] If a broker employed to find a purchaser brings to the owner a person who is able, ready, and willing to purchase on the owner's terms, he is entitled to compensation, although he does not make or negotiate a binding contract with the purchaser.[30] Consequently the fact that

Executed contract.— Where a principal in the exchange of property actually receives a good title to the property conveyed to him, he cannot defeat an action by his broker for commissions on the ground that his contract of sale was invalid. (VI) Broker as Procuring Cause of Transaction Negotiated[36]— (A) General Rules. The fact that the transaction which the broker was authorized to negotiate is finally consummated does not of itself entitle the broker to a commission; he must have been the procuring cause of the transaction,[37] in the absence of some agreement between him and the principal to the contrary,[38] else no compensation is due. This is true, although the broker had negotiated with the person with whom the principal finally contracted; the fact that a broker finds a customer with whom the principal closes a contract without the broker's further aid does not give him a right to a commission, unless he was the procuring cause of the transaction.[39] If, however, the transaction which the

What constitutes ratification.— Grain brokers employed by a dealer to buy and sell wheat for future delivery cannot recover commissions and advances where they write the dealer that a contract which he has for May may be changed to June delivery, to which letter the dealer makes no reply, although he is in a position to do so, and the brokers then change the contract; and the fact that the dealer receives and retains a statement sent him by the brokers, showing such change, does not show a ratification of the brokers' act in making the change. St. 726, holding that, although stock purchased by a broker for another is not of the kind ordered, an acceptance by the principal of an account presented by the broker after the stock has been sold and a promise to pay the balance indicated by the account constitute a ratification of the purchase. Where a principal directs his broker to purchase certain goods, and the broker purchases the goods individually and not on account of the principal, the receipt of a portion of the goods by the principal after he learns the facts prevents him from resisting payment therefor at the suit of the broker because there is no valid contract to purchase of the broker. Repudiation.— The fact that the principal had refused to make the sale negotiated by a stock-broker, on being handed a letter from the broker informing him that the broker had sold the stock in London at the price agreed on, is not sufficient to show a repudiation by the principal of the contract, which made the price payable in San Francisco, and not in London. Where this is done, and a sale results, the broker becomes entitled to a commission, although he is not present during the negotiations following the introduction.[44]

Necessity of personal introduction by broker.— A broker employed to procure a purchaser is entitled to his commissions, where an employee of his subagent procures a purchaser, although the broker himself did not himself introduce the purchaser to the owner. Procuring purchaser by advertisement.— Where the owner of real property lists it with a broker, and the broker advertises the property, and a purchaser thus derives his information that the property is for sale, and afterward negotiates directly with the owner and purchases the property, the broker is entitled to his commissions. If the principal knowingly interferes with the negotiations going on between the broker and the customer and concludes the transaction himself, he cannot defeat the broker's right to a commission because the broker has not introduced the customer to him. Sufficiency of notice.— Where a broker employed to effect a sale has found a purchaser willing to buy upon the terms named and of sufficient responsibility, he is entitled to a commission, although in the telegram announcing the sale he did not name the purchaser. Duclos v. Cunningham, 102 N. Y. 678, 6 N. E. 790. So the fact that the broker reported to his principal that an offer of sixteen thousand dollars for the land had been made instead of fifteen thousand dollars does not affect his right to a commission, where as a result of his negotiation a sale for the smaller sum was made. Peckham v. Ashhurst, 18 R. I. 376, 28 Atl. 337. Sale through joint efforts of rival brokers.— Where several brokers have each endeavored to bring about a sale which is finally consummated, and each has contributed something toward the result, that one only is entitled to a commission, in the absence of contract, whose services were the effective means, or the predominating efficient cause, of bringing about the sale. Effect of principal's disabling himself to consummate transaction.— The principal cannot relieve himself from liability for a commission by any voluntary act disabling him from performance. Nesbitt v. Helser, 49 Mo. 383; Bailey v. Chapman, 41 Mo. 536.

Fault of broker.— To entitle a broker to a refusal.[72] The principal must have substantial grounds for refusing to complete the transaction in order to defeat the broker's right to a commission.[73] Thus if commission, the transaction must not have failed of consummation through his own fault. Hersher v. Wells, 103 Ill. App. 418; Harwood v. Diemer, 41 Mo. App. 48; Thompson v. Sea Isle City, 27 Misc. (N. Y.) 834, 58 N. Y. Suppl. 203; Scott v. Gage, 16 S. D. 285, 92 N. W. 37, where the contract of sale was written by the broker and contained a mistaken description, and included land which the vendor did not own without his knowledge and consent.

Waiver of right to commission.— A broker who has procured a purchaser for real estate on the terms given by his employer waives no rights by accompanying the seller to the place where the contract of sale was to be closed, and being present at the presentation for signature of a contract containing a forfeiture clause, he having previously objected to the insertion of such a clause, and the purchaser refusing to accede thereto. Beebe v. Ranger, 35 N. Y. Super. Ct. 452. If a broker has become entitled to a commission under his contract of employment, a subsequent agreement by him to wait for his commission until the happening of a certain event does not bind him, where there is no consideration therefor. Fitch v. Cunningham, 27 N. Y. Wkly. Dig. 198.

72. Peabody v. Dewey, 51 Ill. App. 260 [affirmed in 153 Ill. 657, 39 N. E. 977, 27 L. R. A. 322] (holding that where a party agreed to pay a commission to brokers for procuring a loan, notes, mortgages, etc., to be in the usual form, and the usual form of mortgage and notes used by the brokers until a few months before the transaction contained no "gold clause," and the principal was familiar with that form, and did not know of the change to a form containing the clause, on his refusal to execute the notes and mortgages containing that clause the broker cannot recover his commission); Hayden v. Grillo, 35 Mo. App. 647 (holding that where brokers employed to sell land, having procured a purchaser, informed their principal of the fact, but did not inform him to whom they had bargained the property, and no contract for the sale was executed, and the principal refused to complete the sale because he supposed the brokers were themselves the purchasers and were speculating on his property, he was not liable for a commission); Finck v. Menke, 33 Misc. (N. Y.) 769, 67 N. Y. Suppl. 954 (holding that a broker who agrees to procure a loan is not entitled to a commission where it is not made because of the principal's refusal to furnish abstracts not mentioned in the contract of employment); Kirwan v. Barney, 29 Misc. (N. Y.) 614, 61 N. Y. Suppl. 122 [affirming 27 Misc. 181, 57 N. Y. Suppl. 812] (holding that where the customer procured by the broker is a corporation the principal may refuse to deal with one who represents himself to be an officer of the company unless he produces his authority to contract).

Waiver by principal of grounds for refusal. —Even though the principal has good grounds for refusing to consummate the transaction, yet if he does not specify them at the time of his refusal he cannot urge them when sued for a commission. Fiske v. Soule, 87 Cal. 313, 25 Pac. 430; Crouse v. Rhodes, 50 Ill. App. 120; Johnson v. Wright, 124 Iowa 61, 99 N. W. 103. Thus where one who has employed a broker to procure a sale for him of certain premises at a specified price refuses absolutely to complete the transaction, he cannot, at the trial of the broker's action for commissions, set up a defect in the title which if expressed at the time might have been obviated. Auten v. Jacobus, 21 Misc. (N. Y.) 632, 47 N. Y. Suppl. 1119 [affirming 20 Misc. 669, 46 N. Y. Suppl. 681].

Subsequent dissatisfaction of the principal with the terms on which the broker was authorized to sell property, or with the terms agreed on with the purchaser found by the broker, does not justify the principal in refusing to complete the transaction. Fenn v. Ware, 100 Ga. 563, 28 S. E. 238; Miller v. Barth, 35 Misc. (N. Y.) 372, 71 N. Y. Suppl. 989.

The refusal of the principal's wife to join in a deed of conveyance does not excuse him from failing to carry out the sale so as to defeat the broker's right to a commission for finding a purchaser. Hamlin v. Schulte, 34 Minn. 534, 27 N. W. 301; Goldberg v. Gelles, 33 Misc. (N. Y.) 797, 68 N. Y. Suppl. 400; Clapp v. Hughes, 1 Phila. (Pa.) 382.

Defect in customer's title.— Ordinarily a broker who supplies a person willing to exchange lands with his principal must show, before he can claim his commissions, that the customer is able to make the exchange. Hersher v. Wells, 103 Ill. App. 418; Moskowitz v. Hornberger, 15 Misc. (N. Y.) 645, 38 N. Y. Suppl. 114. If, however, the parties have entered into a valid contract for the exchange then, and not otherwise (Freedman v. Gordon, 4 Colo. App. 343, 35 Pac. 879; Rockwell v. Newton, 44 Conn. 333), the broker is entitled to his commission, although the cus-

the trade falls through, because the principal insists upon a change in the terms upon which he authorized the broker to negotiate, the commission is due.[74] To entitle a broker to a commission for negotiating a transaction which failed of consummation, however, the failure must be due to the refusal or default of the principal.[75]

(2) Defect in Principal's Title. A broker employed to effect a sale[76] or tomer's title is defective, and although he has no title (Jenkins v. Hollingsworth, 83 Ill. App. 139; Carnes v. Howard, 180 Mass. 569, 63 N. E. 122; Roche v. Smith, 176 Mass. 595, 58 N. E. 152, 79 Am. St. Rep. 345, 51 L. R. A. 510; Knapp v. Wallace, 41 N Y. 477). See also Baumann v. Nevins, 52 N. Y. App. Div. 290, 65 N. Y. Suppl. 84 (holding the fact that the customer does not own the property offered by him is no ground for the principal's refusal to make the exchange, where the customer has a contract for the purchase of the property); Mason v. Hinds, 19 N. Y. Suppl. 996 (holding that the fact that the land was conveyed to the customer in fraud of his grantor's creditors is no ground for the principal's refusal to complete the exchange, where the creditors have not impeached the conveyance). Contra, Barber v. Hildebrand, 42 Nebr. 400, 60 N. W. 594; Siemssen v. Homan, 35 Nebr. 892, 53 N. W. 1012 (where the property was encumbered); Norman v. Reuther, 25 Misc. (N. Y.) 161, 54 N. Y. Suppl. 152; Moskowitz v. Hornberger, 20 Misc. (N. Y.) 558, 46 N. Y. Suppl. 462 [modifying 19 Misc. 429, 43 N. Y. Suppl. 1130]. To entitle the broker to a commission where the exchange fails of consummation because of a defect in the customer's title, the broker must have acted in good faith. Carnes v. Howard, supra; Roche v. Smith, supra. So a broker employed to carry out an exchange of lands does not earn his commission where he brings to his employer a person who assumes to contract as owner, although he is not, which fact the broker knows, and within the few days allowed for performance proves unable to perform his contract, and irresponsible. Burnham v. Upton, 174 Mass. 408, 54 N. E. 873. See also Norman v. Reuther, supra. The ability of one whom the broker procures to make an exchange of land with his principal does not depend upon his general financial responsibility, but upon his being the owner of the land he proposes to deed in exchange. Hersher v. Wells, supra. However, proof that a party has executed a formal contract to convey certain property in exchange for other is sufficient prima facie evidence of his title thereto, in an action by a broker for commissions on effecting the exchange. Moskowitz v. Hornberger, supra. But see Hersher v. Wells, supra, holding that the customer's ability is not proved by the mere production of deeds on his part, without some showing that he also had title to the properties he was willing to deed.

74. Buckingham v. Harris, 10 Colo. 455, 15 Pac. 817 (where the reason the owner would not sell was that the commission asked by the broker, being the same provided by his contract, was more than he wished to pay, and he had concluded to hold for a higher price); Smith v. Fairchild, 7 Colo. 510, 4 Pac. 757 (where the reason the owner would not sell was that the property had enhanced in value); Finley v. Dyer, 79 Mo. Canada.— Brydges v. Clement, 14 Manitoba 588; McKenzie v. Champion, 4 Manitoba 158; Wolf v. Tait, 4 Manitoba 59, all holding that, where the sale failed because of a defect in the principal's title, the broker was entitled to be paid a compensation for finding a purchaser, not necessarily the amount agreed on as a commission, but a compensation as on a quantum meruit or by way of damages, and that under the circumstances it was competent to award compensation equivalent to the amount of the commission agreed upon had the sale gone through.

See 8 Cent. Dig. tit. "Brokers," § 92.

It is especially true that the broker is entitled to a commission where the purchase fails because of a defect in the principal's title, where the contract of employment expressly requires the principal to furnish a good title (Phelps v. Prusch, 83 Cal. 626, 23 Pac. 1111; Attix v. Pelan, 5 Iowa 336; Bruce v. Wolfe, 102 Mo. App. 384, 76 S. W. 723) or where the owner has represented that the title is good (Davis v. Lawrence, 52 Kan. 383, 34 Pac. 1051; Fullerton v. Carpenter, 97 Mo. App. 197, 71 S. W. 98. See, however, Crockett v. Grayson, 98 Va. 354, 36 S. E. 477, holding that a broker is not entitled to a commission where the purchaser refuses to carry out a contract of purchase on discovering the falsity of representations of the principal concerning the amount of encumbrances on his title, if it appears that the contract of purchase would not have been entered into but for the misrepresentations, since the broker is not legally damaged. This case is contrary to all authority. It seems to proceed upon the theory that the broker was suing for fraud, whereas in fact he was suing on the contract of employment. It is unquestionably the law that the broker is entitled to his commission, if the sale fails because of a defect in the principal's title, although the principal has made no representations concerning it, and yet this case, without denying that proposition, holds that if the principal is guilty of misrepresentations, the broker cannot recover. It seems to put a distinct premium upon fraud.

The fact that the principal does not own the property which he employs the broker to sell does not defeat the broker's right to compensation on procuring a purchaser. Smith v. Schiele, 93 Cal. 144, 28 Pac. 857 (where, at the time the contract of brokerage was made, the principal had only an option on the land); Monk v. Parker, 180 Mass. 246, 63 N. E. 793. See also supra, II. E. 1, l.

Inability to give immediate possession.— Where a broker employed to bring about a sale of real estate brought to the owner a responsible purchaser willing to take the premises on the terms outlined by the owner, the broker was entitled to his commissions, although the sale fell through because the owner could not give immediate possession as he had agreed to do. Putter v. Berger, 95 N. Y. App. Div. 62, 88 N. Y. Suppl. 462.

Deficiency in quantity.— Where the sale falls through because of a deficiency in the quantity of the property, the broker is not entitled to his commission, although the principal misrepresented the dimensions of the property, there being no fraud. Hausman v. Herdtfelder, 81 N. Y. App. Div. 46, 80 N. Y. Suppl. 1039; Diamond v. Hartley, 38 N. Y. App. Div. 87, 55 N. Y. Suppl. 994, 47 N. Y. App. Div. 1, 61 N. Y. Suppl. 1022. Contra, Cohen v. Farley, 28 Misc. (N. Y.) 168, 58 N. Y. Suppl. 1102. At any rate this is true where the purchaser knew the dimensions of the lot before he agreed to purchase it. Sloman v. Bodwell, 24 Nebr. 790, 40 N. W. 321.

The principal is not entitled to a reasonable time within which to perfect his title. Bruce v. Wolfe, 102 Mo. App. 384, 76 S. W. 723.

Commission on sale of invalid bonds.— A broker employed to sell bonds has a right to presume that they are valid, and if he finds a purchaser and the sale fails because of their invalidity he is entitled to a commission. Berg v. San Antonio St. R. Co., 17 Tex. Civ. App. 291, 42 S. W. 647, 43 S. W. 929.

Agreement to purchase when defect is cured.— Where a broker procured a purchaser ready and willing to buy the property, but the sale was not consummated by reason of a defect in the vendor's title, although the purchaser agreed to take the property as soon as the defect was cured, the broker was entitled to his commissions. Cusack v. Aikman, 93 N. Y. App. Div. 579, 87 N. Y. Suppl. 940.

Offer to cure defect.— The fact that the owner offered the prospective purchaser to perfect his title by suit at law is no defense to an action for commissions. Bruce v. Wolfe, 102 Mo. App. 384, 70 S. W. 723.

Subsequent curing of defect.— It is immaterial that the principal, after the time for performing the contract of sale has expired, procures the defect to be cured within a reasonable time, with the knowledge and consent of the agent and proposed purchaser, and the latter still refuses to take and pay for the bonds. Berg v. San Antonio St. R. Co., 17 Tex. Civ. App. 291, 42 S. W. 647, 43 S. W. 929.

A broker may return a deposit left with him by the purchaser and still recover his commission, where the purchaser refuses to complete the transaction because of a defect in the principal's title. Phelps v. Prusch, 83 Cal. 626, 23 Pac. 1111.

Previous sale by owner as defeating right to commission see supra, II, E, 1, m, (II), (B).

77. Washburn v. Bradley, 169 Mass. 86, 47 N. E. 512, holding that where the principal estate,[78] is entitled to a commission, although the transaction fails of consummation because of a defect in the principal's title, provided that the broker himself is not at fault,[79] and that he does not know of the defect at the time of finding the customer.[80] Consequently if the principal pays the broker his commission before the purchaser withdraws from the transaction it cannot be recovered back.[81] The broker is not entitled to a commission under these circumstances, however, where the defect in the title is not real and substantial,[82] unless he has procured agreed to give a broker commission for renting premises, and the broker secured a contract wherein a third person agreed to take the premises at a price satisfactory to all parties, but by reason of misrepresentations made by the principal in regard to the duration of certain subleases, he failed to become a lessee, the principal was liable for the commission.

This is especially true where the principal agrees to furnish a good title. Finck v. Bauer, 40 Misc. (N. Y.) 218, 81 N. Y. Suppl. 625.

Want of authority to transfer title.— Where an executor, representing that he has authority to mortgage certain property, offers an agent a certain commission to secure a loan, and the agent produces a person able and willing to make the loan but who afterward declines to make it solely on the ground of the executor's want of authority to execute the mortgage the agent has earned his commission. Fullerton v. Carpenter, 97 Mo. App. 197, 71 S. W. 98.

Subsequent curing of defect.— The fact that the principal subsequently cures the defect in his title and that the customer then refuses to make the loan does not deprive the broker of his right to a commission, where the principal gave no notice that the defect was cured till six months after the customer was procured, and the customer then refused to make the loan because of changed financial conditions. Mere expressions of opinion by a broker to a vendee of land as to the strength of the title, not based on his personal knowledge, will not affect the broker's right to commissions on a resale of the land made by him for the vendee, but which the purchaser refused to take on account of the defective title of the vendee. See 8 Cent. Dig. tit. "Brokers," § 93.

Sufficiency of knowledge.— A broker's knowledge of the facts invalidating bonds which he is negotiating for sale carries with it knowledge of the legal effect of such facts. Berg v. San Antonio St. R. Co., (Tex. Civ. App. 1898) 49 S. W. 921. However, the fact that a broker, in negotiating a sale, signs a contract with the purchaser providing that the title shall be satisfactory to the purchaser's attorneys is not a recognition of a defect in the principal's title which will defeat a recovery for his commission, where the sale falls through on account of such defect. Berg v. San Antonio St. R. Co., 17 Tex. Civ. App. 291, 42 S. W. 647, 43 S. W. 929.

If there is an apparent defect in the paper title, and the sale failed on that account, the broker is entitled to his commission, although the title is good in fact, where the principal failed to remove the defect or to produce to the purchaser evidence that the defect did not exist in fact. Contract to pay commission on consummation of transaction.— Where the contract of employment makes the right to a commission dependent upon the consummation of the transaction which the broker is employed to negotiate, the broker cannot recover unless the transaction is finally consummated. Cremer v. Miller, 56 Minn. 52, 57 N. W. 318; West v. Stoeckel, 6 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 1083, 10 Am. L. Rec. 308 (where a lessor having the privilege of purchasing the fee employed a broker to procure a loan with which to make the purchase, and the loan failed of consummation because the owner of the fee refused to give the lessee a deed); Seattle Land Co. v. Day, 2 Wash. 451, 27 Pac. 74 (holding that where a broker agrees to sell land upon the condition that the owner shall first make five hundred dollars out of the sale, the broker to have the rest of the profit as his commission, he is not entitled to a commission for merely finding a purchaser, if the sale falls through on account of a defect in the title). See, however, Fitzpatrick v. Gilson, 176 Mass. 477, 57 N. E. 1000 (holding that a stipulation that the principal is to pay his broker a certain commission for negotiating a loan does not make the right to a commission dependent on the making of a loan); Gauthier v. West, 45 Minn. 192, 47 N. W. 656 (holding that where it is agreed between the owner of real property and the brokers in whose hands he has placed it for sale that in case of a sale no commissions shall be paid until the delivery of the deed, there is an implied contract that the owner can confer upon a purchaser a perfect title to the property, and the brokers are entitled to commissions upon producing a customer able to purchase and ready and willing to do so, but for a defect in the title).

Contract to pay commissions out of proceeds of sale or loan.— If a sale of bonds fails because of their invalidity, the broker is entitled to his commission, although by his contract he was to be paid only in case the sale was effected and the price paid. Berg v. San Antonio St. R. Co., 17 Tex. Civ. App. 291, 42 S. W. 647, 43 S. W. 929. Contra, Owen v. Ramsey, 23 Ind. App. 285, 55 N. E. 247. So a broker's right to a commission for finding a purchaser of land is not defeated by the fact that the commission was under the contract of employment to be paid out of the proceeds of the sale, and that the sale was not consummated because of a failure of title. Cheatham v. Yarbrough, 90 Tenn. 77, 15 S. W. 1076. Contra, Bull v. Price, 7 Bing. 237, 9 L. J. C. P. O. S. 78, 5 M. & P. 2, 20 E. C. L. 112. It has been held, however, that a different rule applies to loan brokers, and consequently that an agreement to accept a loan on property and to pay the broker a commission to be deducted from the proceeds of the loan on the day of closing does not render the principal liable for the commission where his title to the property is rejected by the lender and the loan is refused. Refusal of customer to complete loan.— It has been held that a different rule applies to loan brokers, and accordingly a broker employed to procure a loan does not earn a commission merely by securing a competent person who offers to make the loan but who after acceptance by the client refuses to consummate the transaction. Ashfield v. Case, 93 N. Y. App. Div. 452, 87 N. Y. Suppl. 649; Crasto v. White, 52 Hun (N. Y.) 473, 5 N. Y. Suppl. 718.

Pecuniary responsibility of purchaser.— If the principal enters into a contract with a purchaser furnished by the broker, the commission is due, although the purchaser proves financially irresponsible. A broker may by agreement waive his right to a commission in case the purchaser defaults in carrying out the contract. Seymour v. St. Luke's Hospital, 28 N. Y. App. Div. 119, 50 N. Y. Suppl. 989; Colwell v. Springfield Iron Co., 24 Fed. 631. Where, however, a purchaser obtained by a broker refuses to carry out the contract of sale entered into with the vendor, the broker does not waive his right to a commission by the fact that on such refusal he procures another customer and states that he expects no commission on the first sale. this rule by embodying a stipulation to the contrary in the contract of employment.[89]

2. Actions For Compensation[90] — a. In General. If the principal fails to perform his contract with the broker, the latter may recover in assumpsit on the common money counts.[91] If a sale by an owner who has placed lands in the hands of a broker for sale works a breach of contract with the broker, an action by him should be based on the breach and not on a performance of the contract.[92] If a principal, in order to defraud the broker of his right to a commission, conveys the property to a third person for the benefit of a customer found by the broker, the broker may sue for the commission and is not compelled to bring an action for fraud.[93] If a broker releases his right to a commission in consideration of the principal's promise to give him further business, the princi-

Civ. App. 1895) 30 S. C. A. 512.

Stipulation to pay commission when price is received by principal.— If the principal agrees to pay the broker a commission only upon receipt of the price of the property sold, then the broker is entitled to nothing until the purchaser pays the price. McPhail v. Buell, 87 Cal. 115, 25 Pac. 266; Ormsby v. Graham, 123 Iowa 202, 98 N. W. 724. However, a promise to pay a broker for selling land, a commission "on the price I may accept . . . if sold through your agency," means a commission on the price agreed to be paid for the property, and not only on the amount actually paid. Condict v. Cowdrey, 57 N. Y. Super. Ct. 66, 5 N. Y. Suppl. 187.

Stipulation to pay commission when sale is completed.— Where commissions are to be paid a real-estate broker, if a sale negotiated by him "goes through," the broker cannot recover such commissions where the purchaser verbally agrees to buy, and afterward, without any legal reason, refuses to do so. Parmly v. Head, 33 Ill. App. 134. Contract to pay commission when property is conveyed see also supra, II, E, 1, m, (II), (A).

Waiver of stipulation by principal.—Where a note given for brokers' services in selling the makers' land provided that it should be void if the sale should "fall through" within sixty days after the first instalment of purchase-money became due, and the vendee refused to pay such instalment within said time, claiming that she was unable to pay it, but the vendors elected to treat the sale as effectual, paid an instalment due on said note, and enforced their rights against the vendee by foreclosure, the sale did not "fall through," so as to entitle the makers to enjoin collection of the note. pal's failure to keep his promise does not entitle the broker to recover the commission; his remedy, if any, is on the promise.[94] A bill for a discovery and accounting will lie in a proper case in favor of a broker against the principal.[95] If a broker, being the owner of an entire demand for commissions, assigns an item of it and then recovers on the residue, his recovery does not preclude the assignee from recovering on the item assigned.[96] An action to recover a commission for negotiating a contract, the commission being computable on the amount to become due the principal thereunder, may be commenced before the contract has been fully performed.[97] A demand upon the principal for payment of a commission for selling land is not ordinarily a condition precedent to the right of action therefor,[98] but a broker who has advanced margins for the purchase of stocks cannot recover the amount thereof before calling upon the client to take up the stock.[99] A broker employed to sell realty cannot enforce a stipulation in the contract of sale by which the purchaser agrees to pay the commission.[1]

b. Defenses[2] — (i) In General. The fact that the purchaser of a lot puts it to a use which is objectionable to the principal as the owner of remaining lots which adjoin it does not relieve the principal from the obligation to pay a commission to the broker who procured the purchaser.[3] Partial failure of consideration is no defense to an action on a note given for a commission.[4]

(ii) Illegality of Transaction.[5] If the transaction negotiated by a broker is illegal,[6] and he participates in the illegality[7] or has knowledge thereof,[8] he is not entitled to compensation. So if the services rendered by a broker are tainted with illegality he is not entitled to a commission.[9] The failure to comply with a stat-

By rule 50 every bargain must be fulfilled by the members in accordance with the rules and usages of the exchange. c. Pleading[11] — (I) Complaint — (A) In General. A complaint by a broker for a commission for effecting a sale or exchange of property must allege a contract of employment.[12] If it does this and states facts showing performance by plaintiff, as a result of which defendant and the customer secured by plaintiff consummated the transaction which he was authorized to negotiate, and alleges a refusal by defendant to pay, it is sufficient.[13] So a complaint for a commission is sufficient if it alleges a contract by which plaintiff was employed to find a purchaser,[14] and a performance on his part, and a refusal by defendant to consummate the transaction with the customer so procured.[15] A complaint for a commission by a broker employed to sell land must allege either that there was a sale to the customer introduced by him to the principal, or that the customer was able, ready, and willing to purchase on the terms proposed by the principal.[16] fact that a broker employed to effect a sale is a director in the corporation which he procures to buy the property does not preclude him from recovering a commission where the person who practically owns the stock of the corporation consents to the transaction.

Identity of purchaser.— A petition to recover damages for the refusal of defendant to execute deeds to purchasers, which allege a contract of sale to various persons who were ready and able to buy the lands on the terms agreed on between plaintiff and defendant, is defective for failing to allege the names of the purchasers, the quantity of land agreed to be sold for each of them, and the prices. If the complaint alleges that defendant refused to consummate the sale, it must also allege that the customer was able, ready, and willing to buy the property on the terms proposed by the principal. Where a complaint by a broker employed to find a purchaser or a lender does not allege that the transaction was consummated, it must allege that plaintiff notified defendant that a customer was found.[17] A complaint for a commission for finding a purchaser for land need not describe the land.[18] Nor need a broker's complaint allege that defendant knew of the existence of a custom on which the action is founded.[19] A complaint for a commission is not demurrable because it has no bill of particulars as a part of it where it is based on one item only.[20]

(B) Variance Between Complaint and Proof, Findings, Verdict, or Judgment. Plaintiff must plead the ultimate facts upon which he relies for a recovery, else he cannot prove them.[21] To entitle him to recover on a particular contract of employment he must plead it;[22] and his proof must in all material respects conform to the allegations of the complaint; evidence at substantial variance was able, ready, and willing to consummate the transaction); Wilson v. Clark, (Tex. Civ. App. 1904) 79 S. 21. Burnett v. Edling, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 711, 48 S. W. 775, holding that in an action by a real-estate broker to recover damages for refusal of the owner to execute deeds to purchasers, it was error to admit, over objection, evidence to prove contracts of sales of land to persons whose names and residences were not given in the petition or otherwise identified.

22. Shanklin v. Hall, 100 Cal. 26, 34 Pac. 636; Ayer v. Mead, 13 Ill. App. 625 (holding that an order by defendant to plaintiff, who was a broker: "Buy me 5,000 year wheat; if you cannot buy soon after the opening then buy October," does not sustain the allegations of the declaration, in an action by the broker, that defendant authorized plaintiff to sell the wheat, in case defendant failed to furnish margins, according to the customs of the board of trade, nor justify the admission of proof as to what were the customs of the board of trade); Armstrong v. O'Brien, 83 Tex. 635, 19 S. W. 268; Ames v. Lamont, 107 Wis. 531, 83 N. W. 780 (holding that where the complaint alleged that plaintiffs were employed to sell defendant's land; that they were to have all they could obtain for it over a certain sum, and that they offered it to one who purchased it of defendant for that sum, they could not recover for breach of an agreement that defendant would ask of any customer the price named to him by plaintiffs). See, however, Armstrong v. Cleveland, 32 Tex. Civ. App. 482, 74 S. W. 789, holding that, although plaintiff declares on an express contract to pay him all he should sell a tract of land for over a certain sum, he may recover on a promise of defendant to pay a certain percentage commission.

Recovery on contract substituted for that declared on.— Plaintiff cannot recover on proof of a contract which has by agreement been substituted for that declared on. W. 965, holding that if plaintiff declares on a written contract, and the proof shows that it had been revoked prior to the sale, which was made under a subsequent oral contract, plaintiff cannot recover, although the oral contract was "under the terms" of the written one.

Recovery on quantum meruit where express contract is declared on.— If plaintiff declares on an express contract he cannot ordinarily failing to prove it recover on a quantum meruit. Suppl. 966 (holding that where plaintiff was to receive one thousand five hundred dollars for furnishing a twenty-five-thousand-dollar cash-purchaser, and furnished one who purchased at twenty thousand dollars cash, he cannot recover proportionate commissions on the lesser sum, or what his services were reasonably worth, if he does not declare on a quantum meruit); King v. Hammond, 84 N. Y. Suppl. 121 (holding that plaintiff in an action on an express contract to pay a certain commission for procuring a certain sale may not recover, failing to prove the contract, on proof of a custom to pay such a commission to persons procuring such a sale); Edwards v. Goldsmith, 16 Pa. St. 43; Thornton v. Stevenson, (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 31 S. W. 232; Oliver v. Morawetz, 95 Wis. 1, 69 N. W. 977. See also Hammers v. Merrick, 42 Kan. 32, 21 Pac. 783; Green v. Mules, 30 L. J. therewith is inadmissible, and if admitted does not justify a recovery.[23] In order

See, however, Armstrong v. Cleveland, 32 Tex. Civ. App. 482, 74 S. W. 789; Wheeler v. Buck, 23 Wash. 679, 63 Pac. 566, holding that where plaintiff alleged a contract for commissions and sales made thereunder, and defendant denied the contract, but admitted some of the sales and that he was indebted to plaintiff in a reasonable sum for commissions thereon, an instruction that if the jury did not find that there was a contract then they should award plaintiff reasonable commissions was proper, such issue being raised by defendant. It has been held, however, that under a complaint to recover an alleged agreed compensation for services as broker, a recovery may be had on proof of the reasonable value of the services. Veatch v. Norman, 95 Mo. App. 500, 69 S. W. 472; Sussdorff v. Schmidt, 55 N. Y. 319, holding that the variance may be disregarded unless it appears that defendant was misled.

23. Moses v. Beverly, 137 Ala. 473, 34 So. 825 (where the contract declared on a contemplated sale of turpentine rights in fifty thousand acres of timber and the proof showed a sale of only thirty-five thousand acres, and the variance was held fatal); Daley v. Russ, 86 Cal. 114, 24 Pac. 867; Norman v. Reuther, 25 Misc. (N. Y.) 161, 54 N. Y. Suppl. 152 (holding that in an action for compensation in procuring an exchange of property for defendant the burden is on plaintiff to show that he procured a valid contract for exchange, where he so alleges); Yarborough v. Creager, (Tex. Civ. App. 1903) 77 S. W. 645 (holding that where a real-estate broker suing for commissions alleges that through his efforts the land was sold, an instruction that if the jury believe plaintiff was trying to sell the land, etc., they should find for him is not warranted by the pleading). See, however, Clark v. Allen, 125 Cal. 276, 57 Pac. 985 (holding that an allegation that a broker employed to effect a sale found a purchaser is satisfied by evidence that a person was found with whom the principal exchanged lands); Rogers v. Duff, 97 Cal. 66, 31 Pac. 836 (holding that a complaint alleging that defendants were indebted to plaintiff for "commissions" on the purchase by him for them of various articles of produce justifies a finding that defendants were indebted to plaintiff "for labor performed for them at their request"); Williams v. Clowes, 75 Conn. 155, 52 Atl. 820 (holding, in an action to recover commission for procuring a loan, that there is no variance between an allegation that plaintiff procured a loan for defendant, and evidence that, at defendant's request and on his promise to pay a commission, plaintiff procured a loan to be made to a corporation formed by defendant; also that the common count that plaintiff performed work for defendant of the price and value of a certain sum authorizes a finding that defendant promised to pay plaintiff the reasonable value of his services); Hightower v. Kitchens, 118 Ga. 277, 45 S. E. 267 (holding that where suit is brought for a named sum alleged to be due under a contract for a sale on a commission of twelve and one half per cent, evidence that plaintiff was to receive eleven and one fourth per cent commission does not constitute a fatal variance, but authorizes a verdict for the latter amount); Clifford v. Meyer, 6 Ind. App. 633, 34 N. E. 23 (holding, in an action for brokers' commissions on a sale of land, that where the complaint alleges that the land was conveyed to two persons, and the finding is that it was conveyed to one of them, the variance is not a material one); Martin v. Fegan, 95 N. Y. App. Div. 154, 88 N. Y. Suppl. 472; Hoefling v. Hambleton, 84 Tex. 517, 19 S. W. 689.

Variance between allegation of sale by broker and proof of sale by owner or another. — In an action by a real-estate broker for commissions, under an allegation that he made the sale, evidence is admissible that the sale was brought about through his exertions or agency, although the final negotiations were conducted by the owner without his knowledge. Stinde v. Blesch, 42 Mo. App. 578. However, a judgment for plaintiff on a declaration for commissions in effecting a sale of real estate at defendant's request is not sustained by evidence that he entered into negotiations for a sale, and that before it was effected defendant made a new agreement to pay him a commission if a sale was effected by any one, and that a sale was thereafter made by another. Jones v. Pendleton, 134 Mich. 460, 96 N. W. 574. See Gregg v. Loomis, 22 Nebr. 174, 34 N. W. 355.

Variance between allegation of performance by broker and proof of default of principal. — Where plaintiff alleged performance of a contract by which he was to procure a loan for defendant, to be secured by a mortgage on its property, he was not entitled to prove failure to complete performance by reason of defects in defendant's title to the property. Gatling v. Central Spar Verein, 67 N. Y. App. Div. 50, 73 N. Y. Suppl. 496. So a broker cannot declare on a contract and seek to recover as for a performance thereof by effecting a sale, and then recover damages for defendant's breach of contract in refusing to accept a purchaser procured by plaintiff. Variance between allegation of services as broker and proof of services as middleman. — Under a complaint alleging defendant's employment of plaintiff as a broker, and that plaintiff rendered services as such in effecting a sale of property for defendant, plaintiff cannot recover for such services as those of a mere middleman. Knauss v. Gottfried to take advantage of a variance between the complaint and the proof, defendant must make a timely and appropriate objection thereto.[24]

(II) ANSWER—(A) In General. The construction[25] and sufficiency of an answer in an action by a broker for a commission which presents a defense of fraud[26] or neglect of duty[27] on the part of the broker, or his failure to take out a brokerage license,[28] or the inability of the customer procured by him to consummate the transaction which he was authorized to negotiate,[29] are governed by the rules of pleading applicable in actions ex contractu generally. The court has no power to strike out as sham an answer consisting of a general denial of the material allegations of the complaint.[30]

(B) Necessity of Pleading Defense. An affirmative defense which is not pleaded cannot be proved,[31] even though defendant has interposed a general denial.[32]

29. Fairly v. Wappoo Mills, 44 S. C. 227, 22 S. E. 108, 29 L. R. A. 215, holding that an allegation that the purchaser furnished by a broker had requested an extension of time on the draft drawn against the first shipment of the goods sold, because he was "not able to pay it at the time" was not equivalent to an allegation that he was insolvent, or that the broker had not furnished a purchaser who was able to pay for the goods according to the contract.

This defense, however, may be proved under an answer denying all the allegations of the complaint except that plaintiff was a broker (Wolff v. Denboskey, 36 Misc. (N. Y.) 643, 74 N. Y. Suppl. 465), or denying merely the performance of services by him (Norman v. Reuther, 25 Misc. (N. Y.) 161, 54 N. Y. Suppl. 152).

See, however, Winn v. Gilmer, 81 Tex. 345, 16 S. W. 1058, holding that in an action by a broker for a commission for selling land under an alleged contract providing for a specified sum as commission, defendant may, under plea of general denial, show that plaintiff agreed to charge no commission unless the land was sold for more than a stated price.

33. Jamison v. Hyde, 141 Cal. 109, 74 Pac. 695 (holding that where the answer alleged that the contract of employment was oral and "barred and invalid by" a statute declaring that contracts for the employment of an agent to sell real estate for commissions are invalid unless in writing, subscribed by the party to be charged, and plaintiff's evidence failed to show a written contract of employment, it was not error to permit defendant to amend his answer by changing the admission of the contract of employment into a denial of the same); Stewart v. Van Horne, 91 Mo. App. 647 (holding that where a petition in an action for commissions alleged to be due for making the sale of a farm pursuant to a written contract declared on the contract as it would have read if no alteration had been made in the printed form, an amended petition declaring on the contract, after its production pursuant to the court's order, according to its actual contents, does not substantially change the cause of action, so as to constitute a departure); Schlesinger v. Jud, 61 N. Y. App. Div. 453, 70 N. Y. Suppl. 616 (holding that where the court voluntarily permits a broker suing for commissions to amend his complaint to show an assignment to him of a claim for commissions by A, it is error to refuse to allow him to amend for the purpose of showing an assignment of a portion of the claim from B, although the fact of such assignment appears in plaintiff's bill of particulars).

Acceptance of principal's offer.— In an action for services by a broker who had undertaken to procure a loan for defendants from a corporation on their agreement to compensate him therefor "when notified that their application had been accepted," plaintiff cannot recover by merely showing an acceptance of the application by the corporation, without also showing that the acceptance was on the same terms as to the time of payment and rate of interest as were specified in defendants' application. Peet v. Sherwood, 47 Minn. 347, 50 N. W. 241, 929.

Refusal to accept principal's title.— Where a broker procured one who was willing to purchase the land of his principal but for a defect in the title, the burden is on him, in an action to recover his commissions, to show that such defect existed, no binding contract to purchase having been made, since otherwise he does not show that his customer was willing to buy. 51. Alabama.— Sayre v. Wilson, 86 Ala. 151, 5 So. 157, holding that, where the correspondence by which plaintiffs were employed to sell land does not cover the question of compensation, a prior oral agreement as to the commission may be shown, but that where the contract specifies the prices and terms of sale, evidence of a prior oral agreement that the sale should be made subject to defendant's approval and that the deed should contain certain conditions is not admissible.

Minnesota.— Buxton v. Beal, 49 Minn. 230, 51 N. W. 918, holding, in an action for a commission for procuring a contract for lease, that defendant might show by parol that the contract was merely provisional, and did not express all the terms of the lease to be entered into by the parties, and that a lease was never consummated because the parties never came to terms.

New York.— Condict v. Cowdrey, 123 N. Y. 463, 25 N. E. 946 [reversing 57 N. Y. Super. Ct. 66, 5 N. Y. Suppl. 187] (holding that an agreement which was collateral to that sued on and which did not purport to contain the entire contract may be supplemented by parol evidence that it was a condition of the contract that the purchasers need not complete the purchase unless they were satisfied with the title); Bab v. Hirschbein, 12 N. Y. Suppl. 730 (holding that a contract by which a prospective purchaser agreed to pay a commission arising by reason of a sale of certain property may be supplemented by parol evidence that he agreed to pay the commission only if the title was good).

Texas.— Yarborough v. Creager, (Civ. App. 1903) 77 S. W. 645, holding that a broker suing for commissions may testify that he advertised the land in a certain newspaper, no effort being made to prove in this manner the terms or contents of the advertisement.

England.— Whitfield v. Brand, 16 L. J. Exch. 103, 16 M. & W. 282, holding that the fact that a party has agreed to sell goods on commission may be proved by oral evidence, although the terms as to its payment have been reduced to writing.

Canada.— Dunsmuir v. Loewenberg, 30 Can. Supreme Ct. 334, holding that parol evidence was admissible to show that written instructions to the broker did not constitute the whole of the terms of the contract, and that there was a collateral oral agreement in respect to expenses.

See 8 Cent. Dig. tit. "Brokers," § 110.

Competency of oral evidence.— Sales and purchases of stock for private speculation on the account of a principal are "commercial matters" within Quebec Civ. Code, art. 1233, which declares that proof may be made by testimony of all facts concerning commercial matters, and that in all other matters proof must be made by writing or by the oath of the adverse party. Commencement of proof in writing.— The admission of defendant in his deposition that he employed plaintiffs as his stock-brokers, and that they bought and sold for him, is a sufficient commencement of proof in writing, under Quebec Civ. Code, art. 1233, which provides that proof may be made by testimony in all cases in which there is a commencement of proof in writing, and that in all other matters it must be made by writing or by the oath of the adverse party. W. 882, 38 Am. St. Rep. 683 (holding that a deed executed by the principal to the purchaser after the commencement of the suit is admissible to show the principal's ratification of the broker's contract of sale).

Contract of sale executed by agent without authority.— In an action by real-estate brokers for commissions, the written contract of sale executed by plaintiffs as defendant's agents is admissible to show that a sale was made, although the agents had no written authority to make it. Monroe v. Snow, 131 Ill. 126, 23 N. E. 401 (so holding, although it was afterward repudiated by defendant); Grosse v. Cooley, 43 Minn. 188, 45 N. W. 15.

Missouri.— Veale v. Green, 105 Mo. App. 182, 79 S. W. 731, where correspondence between the parties leading up to a letter in which defendant offered a commission for making the sale was admitted.

Montana.— Courtney v. Continental Land, etc., Co., 17 Mont. 394, 43 Pac. 185, where a letter written by plaintiff to defendant after the consummation of the contract, stating that he was legally acting as agent for both defendant and the vendee, was admitted as bearing on the good faith of plaintiff.

New York.—Carroll v. Pettit, 67 Hun 418, 22 N. Y. Suppl. 250, holding that in an action by a broker for commissions, based on the ground that defendant surreptitiously concluded a sale procured by the broker, a letter written by the latter to the purchaser's agent is admissible to prove his efforts to make a sale; and that it is not incompetent because it incidentally corroborates his testimony as to the date of an interview between himself and defendant, at which the latter obtained the purchaser's name.

See 8 Cent. Dig. tit. "Brokers," § 112.

Evidence of non-receipt.— Testimony of one of two brokers in partnership in business that the firm never received a letter revoking their authority is competent to show that neither he nor his partner received it. Sayre v. Wilson, 86 Ala. 151, 5 So. 157.

Maine.— Veazie v. Parker, 72 Me. 443, holding that conversations between buyer and seller before and after the making of the contract are not admissible to affect the broker's right to compensation.

Michigan.— Huff v. Cole, 127 Mich. 351, 86 N. W. 835 (holding that conversations between plaintiff and the person with whom defendant afterward exchanged lands in reference to such exchange were admissible, where the statements therein were thereafter communicated to defendant); McDonald v. Ortman, 98 Mich. 40, 56 N. W. 1055 (where a conversation between the broker and the purchaser after the sale was held to be inadmissible).

Minnesota.— White v. Collins, 90 Minn. 165, 95 N. W. 765 (where a conversation in April was held to be admissible, although the contract under which the commission was alleged to have been earned was not entered into till September following, to show the relation of the parties with reference to the land); Rutherford v. Selover, 87 Minn. 495, 92 N. W. 413 (holding that conversations between plaintiff and the proposed purchaser in the absence of defendant are incompetent).

New York.—Woolley v. Lowenstein, 83 Hun 155, 31 N. Y. Suppl. 570 (holding that in an action by a broker for commissions for procuring a purchaser able and willing to perform, a statement made by the proposed purchaser at the time of accepting the offer is admissible, and that the broker is not concluded by such purchaser's testimony on the trial); Shipman v. Frech, 15 Daly 151, 3 N. Y. Suppl. 932 [reversing 1 N. Y. Suppl. 67] (holding that where another broker claiming the same commissions is substituted for the original defendant, the commissions having been paid into court by him, the declarations of the principal after the sale that plaintiff was entitled to the commissions and that he would pay him but for the claim of the other broker are not admissible); Brumfield v. Potter, etc., Mfg. Co., 4 Misc. 194, 23 N. Y. Suppl. 1025 [reversing 1 Misc. 92, 20 N. Y. Suppl. 615] (holding that, in an action for a commission for effecting a lease, conversations between third persons were competent to prove that another effected the lease); Shipman v. Frech, 1 N. Y. Suppl. 67 [reversed on another ground in 15 Daly 151, 3 N. Y. Suppl. 932] (holding that where a commission for effecting a sale of property is claimed by different brokers, a statement made by the principal to one broker in the absence of the other that he had not authorized the latter to sell with a builder's loan is inadmissible).

Wisconsin.— Richardson v. Babcock, 119 Wis. 141, 96 N. W. 554, where a conversation between plaintiff and defendant after the sale was held to be admissible.

Employment by agent of principal.—Where plaintiff claims to have been employed as broker by an agent of defendant, any competent evidence is admissible which tends to show that the agent had authority to employ a broker in behalf of defendant. Eichberg v. Ware, 92 Ga. 508, 17 S. E. 770; Hall v. Grace, 179 Mass. 400, 60 N. E. 932; Darling v. Howe, 14 N. Y. Suppl. 561.

(2) Broker as Procuring Cause of Transaction — (a) In General. In an action by a broker for compensation any competent evidence is admissible in behalf of plaintiff or defendant, as the case may be, which tends to prove or to disprove that plaintiff was the procuring cause of the transaction into which defendant and the customer entered.[58]

(b) Sale by Third Person. In an action for compensation for effecting a sale defendant may show by any competent evidence that the sale was effected not by plaintiff but by another broker.[59]

(3) Ability, Readiness, and Willingness of Customer. If a principal rejects a customer procured by his broker, any evidence is admissible in an action for compensation in behalf of plaintiff or defendant, as the case may be, which tends to prove or to disprove that the customer was able, ready, and willing to effect the purchase on the terms proposed by the principal.[60]

(4) Rules, Customs, and Usages.[61] Customs and usages relating to the brokerage business may be proved, in actions by brokers for compensation, when relevant and material to the issues.[62]

Incapacity to make contract of employment.— If, in an action by a broker employed to effect a purchase, which the principal rejected, the defense is want of mental capacity to enter into a contract of employment, evidence of the value of the property is competent only as showing that the price which defendant authorized the broker to offer was so high as to be inconsistent with good faith on the part of the broker in accepting the employment. App. 295 (holding that on an issue of which one of several rival brokers effected a sale so as to entitle him to a commission, it is proper to show by the purchaser his state of mind regarding the purchase after he had left the broker claiming the commission); Hunn v. Ashton, 121 Iowa 265, 96 N. W. 745; Sawyer v. Bowman, 91 Iowa 717, 59 N. W. 27; Newton v. Ritchie, 75 Iowa 91, 39 N. W. 209; Goldsmith v. Cook, 14 N. Y. Suppl. 878 [reversing 13 N. Y. Suppl. 578].

Such evidence must be relevant and material. Adams v. McLaughlin, 159 Ind. 23, 64 N. E. 462; Creager v. Johnson, 114 Iowa 249, 86 N. W. 275; Gregor v. McKee, 18 Misc. (N. Y.) 613, 43 N. Y. 62. Maryland.— Rosenstock v. Tormey, 32 Md. 169, 3 Am. Rep. 125, holding that usage or custom of the particular business of buying and selling stocks on orders may be introduced in evidence in an action by a broker to recover from his principal the difference between the sum paid for stock and that received for it, for the purpose of showing the manner in which an order received may be performed, but not to imply an authority to execute it in a mode which the law would regard as unreasonable.

Massachusetts.— Walker v. Osgood, 98 Mass. 348, 93 Am. Dec. 168; Rupp v. Sampson, 16 Gray 398, 77 Am. Dec. 416, both holding, however, that proof of usage among brokers as to the time when a commission is to be considered as earned is inadmissible in an action on an agreement made by a seller to pay a commission to plaintiff on a contract made with a buyer in the making of which plaintiff took no part as agent of either party but acted merely as a middleman in bringing the parties together.

New York.— De Cordova v. Barnum, 130 N. Y. 615, 29 N. E. 1099, 27 Am. St. Rep. 538, holding, however, that evidence of the custom of brokers, when collateral security is put up as a margin and the account becomes reduced sufficiently to jeopardize it, to advertise and sell the collateral and charge the customers with the balance, is properly excluded, in an action against a principal, where the broker sells his customer's stocks

(5) VALUE OF SERVICES. If the contract of employment does not specify the compensation to be paid to the broker, any evidence is admissible in an action for compensation which tends to show the reasonable value of the services.[63]

(III) WEIGHT AND SUFFICIENCY.[64] The general rules governing the weight and sufficiency of evidence in civil actions apply in actions by brokers for compensation.[65] Thus plaintiff in an action for compensation must prove his cause by a preponderance of the evidence.[66] So an attempt by a party in an action for compensation to suppress testimony casts discredit upon his case.[67] The weight and sufficiency of evidence to establish particular facts are considered in other connections in this article.

e. Trial[68] — (I) IN GENERAL. A broker may refuse to allow the principal to inspect his books,[69] but he may be compelled by order of court to produce them for inspection in the trial.[70] An objection to the admissibility of evidence must be made when the evidence is offered else it is waived.[71] So an objection that the evidence is insufficient to support an instruction must be made at the trial.[72] The court may receive evidence after a motion has been made to dismiss the complaint for failure of proof.[73]

(II) INSTRUCTIONS.[74] Instructions to the jury in actions by brokers for on the latter's express order, and not to protect himself from a shrinking margin.

Texas.— Bender v. Peyton, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 57, 23 S. W. 222, holding that, where a lumber broker claimed that defendants were unable and failed to fill his orders, it was proper to admit evidence to show the amount and different classes of lumber which should be carried in stock by a mill to enable it to fill the usual run of orders.

United States.— Hansen v. Boyd, 161 U. S. 397, 16 S. Ct. 571, 40 L. ed. 746, holding that in an action by brokers for advances made by them on account of one who employed them to sell grain futures for him, evidence having been introduced that the agreement was that the transactions should be conducted under the rules of the board of trade at Chicago, and that such rules were explained to defendant, such rules are admissible, as well as testimony by plaintiff to explain the purport of the rules and the transactions thereunder.

See 8 Cent. Dig. tit. "Brokers," § 113.

Usage as to amount of compensation.— In an action for commissions, established and customary charges for like services in the community are competent evidence to prove what is a fair and reasonable charge (Sayre v. Wilson, 86 Ala. 151, 5 So. 157; Glover v. Henderson, 120 Mo. 367, 25 S. W. 175, 41 Am. St. Rep. 695; Hurt v. Jones, 105 Mo. App. 106, 79 S. W. 486; Ashby v. Holmes, 68 Mo. App. 23. See also Murray v. Curry, 7 C. & P. 584, 32 E. C. compensation are governed by the same rules that apply in civil actions generally.[75]

(III) Province of Court and of Jury.[76] Questions of law in actions by brokers for compensation, as in other civil actions, are for the determination of the court, and it is error to submit them to the jury.[77] Issues of fact, on the other hand, are for the jury, and must be submitted to them for determination.

Instructions on questions which should be left to jury see infra, II, E, 2, e, (III).

Objections to instructions see supra, II, E, 2, e, (I).

75. See cases cited infra, this note.

Instructions must not assume matters in dispute. Swigart v. Hawley, 140 Ill. 186, 29 N. E. 883 [reversing 40 Ill. App. 610]; Casady v. Carraher, 119 Iowa 500, 93 N. W. 386; Richardson v. Hoyt, 60 Iowa 68, 14 N. W. 122; Benedict v. Pell, 70 N. Y. App. Div. 40, 74 N. Y. Suppl. 1085; Gerding v. Haskin, 2 Misc. (N. Y.) 172, 21 N. Y. Suppl. 636. See, however, Miller v. Early, 58 S. W. 789, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 825.

Instructions must be applicable to the evidence. Leech v. Clemons, 14 Colo. App. 45, 59 Pac. 230; Davis v. Morgan, 96 Ga. 518, 23 S. E. 417; Hughes v. McCullough, 39 Oreg. 372, 65 Pac. 85; Taylor v. Cox, (Tex. Sup. 1891) 16 S. W. 1063; Lawson v. Thompson, 10 Utah 462, 37 Pac. 732. However, an instruction may, as against plaintiff, assume that he acted as a broker where he so alleged and testified. Carpenter v. Fisher, 175 Mass. 9, 55 N. E. 479.

Instructions must not be inconsistent or misleading. Bowser v. Mick, 29 Ind. App. 49, 62 N. E. 513; Flynn v. Jordal, 124 Iowa 457, 100 N. W. 326; Bruce v. Hurlbut, 81 N. Y. App. Div. 311, 81 N. Y. Suppl. 54; Baird v. Gleckler, 11 S. D. 233, 76 N. W. 931. See, however, Blake v. Stump, 73 Md. 160, 20 Atl. 788, 10 L. R. A. 103; McMurtry v. Madison, 18 Nebr. 291, 25 N. W. 85, both holding the instructions in question not open to either objection.

The instructions should cover the issues. Thus an instruction that a broker must have been the procuring cause of the sale in order to entitle him to a commission should be given on request where that point is in issue. Hinds v. McIntire, 89 Ill. App. 611. And where no instruction defining a broker's duty is given, it is error to refuse an instruction that the duty of the broker is to bring the buyer and seller together, and effect a purchase of the property according to the terms agreed on by the seller and the broker, and that the latter is not entitled to a commission for an unsuccessful effort to effect a sale. West v. Demme, 128 Mich. 11, 87 N. W. 95.

If the instructions cover the case generally, the failure to instruct concerning particular details is not error, in the absence of a request therefor. Bickart v. Hoffmann, 19 N. Y. Suppl. 472; Keyser v. Reilly, 191 Pa. St. 271, 43 Atl. 317.

If a request for an instruction is already covered by those given, it may properly be refused. Ellsmore v. Gamble, 62 Mich. 543, 29 N. W. 97; Stillman v. Mitchell, 2 Rob. (N. Y.) 523; Gerding v. Haskins, 2 Misc. (N. Y.) 172, 41 N. Y. Suppl. 636.

The court is not bound to use the identical language of a request to which a party is entitled; it is sufficient if the instruction given is substantially the same as that requested. Walker v. Rogers, 24 Md. 237. So where defendants agreed to pay commissions for sales of land to customers "procured" by plaintiffs, an instruction that defendants were liable if plaintiffs "furnished" customers is not a departure from the issues made. Boyd v. Watson, 101 Iowa 214, 70 N. W. 120.

If the evidence on a given fact is undisputed the court should so instruct. O'Callaghan v. Boeing, 72 Mich. 669, 40 N. W. 843.

Instructions are to be construed as a whole, and if so construed they are correct and sufficient defects in isolated parts are not necessarily fatal. Blake v. Stump, 73 Md. 160, 20 Atl. 788, 10 L. R. A. 103; French v. McKay, 181 Mass. 485, 63 N. E. 1068; Walton v. Chesebrough, 167 N. Y. 606, 60 N. E. 1121 [affirming 39 N. Y. App. Div. 665, 57 N. Y. Suppl. 687]; Bickart v. Hoffmann, 19 N. Y. Suppl. 472; Wilson v. Weber, (Tex. Civ. App. 1902) 68 S. W. 800.

It is proper to instruct as to who bears the burden of proving a particular fact in issue. Buckingham v. Harris, 10 Colo. 455, 15 Pac. 817; Harrison v. Pusteoska, 97 Iowa 166, 66 N. W. 93. See also Holmes v. Montauk Steamboat Co., 93 Fed. 731, 35 C. C. A. 556. It is error, however, to charge that the burden is on a party to prove a fact which his opponent does not deny. Anderson v. Bradford, 102 Mo. App. 433, 76 S. W. 726. And where there is a counter-claim as well as a complaint and answer, an instruction respecting the burden of proof in its terms applicable to the whole case may be refused, if it is correct with respect to the issue presented by the complaint and answer only. Grover v. Henderson, 120 Mo. 367, 25 S. W. 175, 41 Am. St. Rep. 695.

76. See, generally, Dismissal and Nonsuit; Trial.

77. Goodson v. Embleton, 106 Mo. App. 77, 80 S. W. 22, holding that it is error to leave to the jury to determine whether plaintiff complied with his contract, so as to entitle him to recover commissions. However, a judicial construction will not be placed on correspondence alone, where some of the letters refer to conversations between the parties affecting the same subject-matter the purport of which is in dispute. Beach v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 73 Conn. 118, 46 Atl. 867.

What constitutes a reasonable time is a question for the court. Beach v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 73 Conn. 118, 46 Atl. 867, time to be

Consequently if a party, whether plaintiff or defendant, adduces evidence on which the jury would be justified in finding in his favor, it is error to take the case from the jury by granting a nonsuit, dismissing his complaint or counterclaim, sustaining a demurrer to his evidence, or directing a verdict against him. He is entitled to go to the jury under these circumstances, even though his evidence be contradicted.[78] Thus it generally falls within the province of the jury to decide whether plaintiff was in fact employed as broker and authorized to perform the acts upon which he bases his right to compensation,[79] and whether he allowed a vendor to deliver possession to the purchaser. Contra, Dent v. Powell, 80 Iowa 456, 45 N. W. 772, time to be allowed a vendor to perfect his title. See also Minor v. Beveridge, 141 N. Y. 399, 36 N. E. 404, 38 Am. St. Rep. 804.

Mixed questions of law and fact.— In an action for commissions on a sale of land, it is proper to refuse to submit to the jury the question whether the parties entered into a contract whereby defendant employed and agreed to pay plaintiff for the sale of the land, since whether the contract was entered into is a mixed question of law and fact, and questions of law cannot be submitted to the jury. (IV) FINDINGS AND JUDGMENT.[81] The sufficiency of findings in actions by brokers for compensation is governed by the rules applicable to findings in civil actions in general.[82] Where a broker effects a sale by the terms of which the price is payable in instalments, and his commissions are to be deducted from each instalment as paid, he is not entitled to a judgment for the full amount of his commissions until the purchaser has paid all the instalments.[83] If several coöwners employ a broker to sell property, their liability cannot be apportioned in an action for compensation so as to permit a recovery against one and a discharge of the others.[84] The judgment must conform to the pleadings and proof.[85]

(II) Setting Aside Verdict as Against the Evidence. A verdict on conflicting evidence in an action by a broker for compensation will not ordinarily be set aside on appeal or writ of error.[88] To justify the court of review in setting aside a verdict it must be palpably against the weight of the evidence.[89]

91. Barry v. Boninger, 46 Md. 59. Thus a broker is entitled to a lien for commissions on a note and mortgage left in his possession for sale on commission. Peterson v. Hall, 61 Minn. 268, 63 N. W. 733. So where a broker, for a commission, negotiated exchange for a house in New York, and bought bills on Europe for them, and to raise funds for that purpose drew and sold bills upon the New York firm, some of which were accepted and others protested, he had, after the failure of the principal, a lien on any funds or securities which came into his hands for his principal, for the purpose of securing himself against outstanding liabilities arising through such bills, although he may not have paid any of them. State Bank v. Levy, 1 McMull. (S. C.) 431. And where a broker was employed to surrender stock and interest scrip, and to procure bonds for them, and in so doing expended time and money, it was held that if the property and interest were not the same before and after the change, but the transaction was to be considered a sale or exchange, he had the ordinary factor's lien, and that, if the property and interest were to be considered the same before and after the change, he had a lien on the ground that his labor had given it additional value, for it will be presumed from his employment that the bonds were more valuable than the stock. Chappell v. Cady, 10 Wis. 111.

92. Vinton v. Baldwin, 95 Ind. 433. So where a borrower assigns to the broker who procured the loan a certain sum to become due the borrower under a contract with a third person, the broker has an equitable lien on the fund. Goad v. Hart, 128 Cal. 197, 60 Pac. 761, 964. However, the fact that a lender permits securities for the loan to remain in the hands of the borrower's broker does not entitle the broker to appropriate the proceeds of the securities to the payment of a debt due to him from the borrower. James' Appeal, 89 Pa. St. 54.

93. Pultney v. Keymer, 3 Esp. 182, holding that if a broker advances money and gives his acceptances on the credit of goods the goods come into his possession and remain there.[94] Ordinarily, however, no right of lien on the proceeds of goods sold exists in favor of the selling broker.[95] It has been held that, in the absence of a contract to the contrary,[96] a real-estate broker has no lien on funds or securities belonging to the principal;[97] but there are cases to the contrary.[98] At any rate any lien he may have exists only so long as he has possession of the property and his debt remains unbarred by limitations.[99] A stock-broker has, in the absence of a special agreement to the contrary, a general lien on securities of the principal which come into his hands in the course of business.[1]

G. Rights and Liabilities of Principal and Broker as to Third Persons — 1. Rights of Principal Against Third Persons — a. In General. If a member of a firm of brokers who receives money with which to purchase land passes it lodged in his hands, the owner cannot demand them without a full indemnity; and that giving his counter aeceptances, or those of any other person, to the amount of those given by the broker and becoming payable at the same time is not a sufficient indemnity.

96. Tinsley v. Durfey, 99 Ill. App. 239, holding that where the owner ot real estate executed a contraet which was recorded in the office of the recorder of deeds and by which he agreed to give his brokers the exclusive control of the sale of the land and to pay them out of the proceeds, the brokers acquired an equitable lien on the proceeds; and that where the contraet reserved to the owner the right to fix the price, and he refused to fix it and eneumbered the property with mortgages, the debt became due and the lien attached. However, the mere assumption by the grantee of the amount due from the grantor as commission to the broker who negotiated the sale ereates no lien on the land or interest in it in favor of the broker in the nature of a resulting trust or otherwise. 98. Richards v. Gaskill, 39 Kan. 428, 18 Pac. 494, holding that the broker has a lien on the specific deed delivered to him by his principal for his work thereon and for the eommission earned by him, as also for the money paid by him at the request of his principal to procure the possession of the deed, when the deed is prepared or procured by him, or delivered to him by his principal, or at the request of his principal, on aceount of his special agency or employment. See also Carpenter v. Momsen, 92 Wis. 449, 65 N. W. 1027, 66 N. b. Rights Against Other Party to Contract Negotiated by Broker — (i) General Rules. The principal is entitled to enforce a contract negotiated by his broker with a third person,[3] and this is so even though the contract be made in the broker's name[4] and the principal is undisclosed.[5] Having made a contract for his principal, the broker cannot rescind it so as to defeat the principal's right to enforce it.[6] A tender of stock by a broker in behalf of his principal for whom he has made a sale is not invalidated by the fact that the principal did not own the stock, where the broker himself owned it.[7] Notice to the broker is ordinarily imputed to the principal, and accordingly if the broker has notice of facts affecting the principal's right of action, the principal himself is bound thereby.[8]

(ii) Validity of Contract. To entitle a principal to enforce a contract negotiated by the broker with a third person the contract must be complete and valid.[9] Thus if the broker in negotiating it is guilty of fraud as to the other

Privity of contract.— The existence of contracts by a broker for different principals for the sale of stock on an exchange by the rules of which a purchaser of the same amount of stock from a different party may be made a substituted purchaser from such broker does not prevent a privity of contract between such substituted purchaser and the principal of the broker. Privity of contract.— By the custom of the London stock exchange shares are to be transferred not later than the tenth day after the settling day fixed by the parties, and the vendee's contract is to "pass" (i. e. to give) to the vendor within that time the name of a person who will take a transfer of the shares; and the person whose name is so passed has a similar right within the time to pass the name of another person; and so on until the name of an actual purchaser of shares is passed to the vendor. This custom

(B) Liability of Stock-Jobber. The contract or liability of a jobber on the stock exchange who has purchased shares for the next approaching settling day is that on that day he will either take the shares himself and be bound himself to accept and register a transfer and to indemnify the vendor, or to give the names of one or more transferees to whom no reasonable objection exists and who will accept and pay for the shares. If he gives such a name he is not liable as principal; otherwise he is bound to take the shares himself.[15] Accordingly if the jobber fails within the time allowed by the rules and usages of the stock exchange[16] to pass to the seller or his broker the name of a bona fide purchaser[17] who has ordered the shares to be bought for him,[18] and who is competent to enter into a contract of purchase[19] and is acceptable to the seller,[20] and in consequence thereof the seller is subjected to calls as a shareholder, the jobber is bound to indemnify the seller.

Accordingly the other contracting party may maintain an action against the principal on the contract[23] or for a breach is a legal one, and when the proposed name has been given and the transfer executed and paid for, privity of contract between the original seller and the ultimate purchaser is completely established, and the vendor is entitled to proceed in equity against the ultimate purchaser, and to an indemnity against calls on the shares sold, to have the contract completed by having the transfers registered. Conditional acceptance.— A vendor may, if he is doubtful of a proposed vendee's ability thereof,[24] unless he has elected to look to the broker alone,[25] and he is entitled in a proper case to enforce specific performance.[26] So if the principal has paid money to the other party pursuant to the terms of the contract, it cannot be recovered back.[27] This right of the other party to hold the principal to the contract negotiated for him by the broker is not defeated by any custom whereby the broker is regarded as the person liable in the first instance on the contract,[28] and it exists although the principal is not disclosed by the broker when he negotiates the contract.[29]

(II) Validity of Contract. To entitle the other party to a transaction negotiated by a broker in behalf of a principal to rely thereon, there must be a valid contract.[30] So if the broker, in negotiating the contract, practises fraud on his principal, and the other party is privy thereto or has knowledge thereof, the principal is not bound thereby.[31]

Stock transactions.— Where a person buys shares on the stock exchange through his broker from a jobber, and has them carried over to a future settling day, and in the meantime his broker has been declared a defaulter on the stock exchange, a relationship of buyer and seller is established between him and the jobber; and where such a buyer on his broker's default refuses the shares at the "hammer" price and repudiates the transaction, the jobbers are entitled to sell out the shares and recover from him the whole difference between the price realized and the price at which they were carried over, and are not restricted to the difference between that price and the "hammer" price. Privity of contract.— It has been held that where a stock-broker who is instructed by a client to carry over for him a specified number of shares for a particular account purchases in his own name from a jobber a larger number of shares, appropriating in his books the specified number to the client and the remainder to another person, no such contractual relation is established between the seller of the shares and the broker's client as will entitle the former, upon the failure of the broker, to maintain an action against the client for damages for refusing to accept the shares so appropriated to him. Beckhuson v. Hamblet, [1900] 2 Q. B. 18, 5 Com. Cas. 217, 69 L. J. Q. B. 431, 82 L. T. Rep. N. S. 459. See, however, Anderson v. Beard, [1900] 2 Q. B. 260, 5 Com. Cas. 261, 69 L. J. Q. Double satisfactions.— An agreement between two brokers, each acting for an undisclosed principal, does not give rise to two distinct contracts, one between the brokers and the other between the principals, but to one contract only, and separate satisfactions cannot be obtained from both broker and principal for a cause of action arising out of such contract. (III) Authority of Broker to Negotiate Contract—(A) In General. If, in negotiating a transaction in behalf of a principal, a broker acts within the terms of the authority which has been conferred on him either expressly or by implication, the principal is bound thereby and the other party may hold him to the bargain.[32] Beyond this the principal is not bound,[33] in the absence of ratification[34] or estoppel.[35]

(B) Authority to Execute Contract of Sale. A real-estate broker employed

N. Y. Suppl. 413 (where the principal was allowed to recover back his land from the other party to the transaction); Ferguson v. Gooch, 94 Va. 1, 27 S. E. 397, 40 L. R. A. 234 (holding that where the purchaser's agent without his knowledge acts also as the agent of the vendor, the transaction is not binding on the purchaser, irrespective of actual fraud). See, however, Glover v. Layton, 145 Ill. 92, 34 N. E. 53 (holding that the fact that the broker of a vendor procured a conveyance to be made to a third person for the benefit of the real purchaser, whom he did not disclose to the vendor, and that afterward the conveyance was made to the real purchaser, and he agreed to give the broker part of the profits arising from a resale of the land, did not constitute a fraud on the vendor); Dyas v. Cruise, 8 Ir. Eq. 407, 2 J. & L. 460 (holding that while a broker to let lands is bound to let them to the best advantage, yet a bona fide letting may not be avoided by the principal on the ground of undervalue).

Even though the other party has no knowledge of the fraud, yet the court may refuse to compel specific performance in his favor. Thus if a broker authorized to sell land at a given price, three years after, when the value has greatly advanced and is rapidly rising, sells the same at the price named, and at a great sacrifice, without informing his principal of the rise in value, it is such a fraud on the principal that a court of equity will refuse to enforce a conveyance to the purchaser. W. 961 (holding that brokers authorized to make a contract for the sale of oil have implied authority to stipulate the quantity which the seller is bound to put into the buyer's tank cars in which the oil is to be delivered); Campbell v. Hicks, 28 L. J. Exch. 70 (where a letter from defendant's broker announcing to his principals a purchase on their account on certain terms was held to be evidence of a preceding authority to purchase, not merely on precisely the terms stated, but upon terms not unusual nor unreasonable and in substance the same).

If a contract informally made by a broker is within his authority, the fact that the other party subsequently sends a formal contract differing from the actual contract does not invalidate the latter. to find a purchaser has no inherent authority to execute a contract of sale in behalf of his principal.[36] His authority is limited to the power of finding a purchaser satisfactory to the principal, in the absence of a stipulation, express or implied, to the contrary.[37] A broker employed to sell goods, however, has inherent power to enter into a contract for their sale and delivery.[38]

(C) Authority to Sell on Credit. A broker employed to sell real or personal property has no authority to sell on total or partial credit.[39]

(D) Authority to Give Warranty. A broker employed to sell real or personal property has ordinarily no power to effect a sale with warranty.[40]

Sale by sample.— Where a cotton broker, with the permission of the owner, takes samples of a cargo of cotton and exhibits them to one who, relying on the samples, purchases a portion of the cargo, the owner is responsible for a breach of warranty, if the bulk of the cotton does not correspond with the samples. Boorman v. Jenkins, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 566, 27 Am. Dec. 158. bound by a contract of purchase entered into by his broker, although it omits a stipulation contained in the authorization, where the stipulation is such that it is annexed by custom to the contract.[42]

(F) Ratification and Repudiation — (1) NECESSITY OF RATIFICATION. If a contract negotiated by a broker is made subject to confirmation by the principal, it is not binding on the latter until he ratifies it.[43] So if a broker assumes to act for another without authority, or if a broker having a special authority acts in violation of his instructions or beyond the terms thereof, there must ordinarily be a ratification by the principal, else he is not bound thereby.[44]

(2) EFFECT OF RATIFICATION. A transaction negotiated by a broker who assumes without authority to act for another becomes binding upon the latter ab initio if he ratifies it.[45] So a principal is bound if he ratifies acts done by his broker in violation of his instructions or beyond the terms of his authority.[46]

(3) WHAT CONSTITUTES RATIFICATION. It constitutes a ratification of the broker's unauthorized acts, where the principal, with full knowledge of the facts,[47] does any positive act indicating an intention to abide by the transaction as negotiated by the broker.[48] Thus if the principal accepts and retains property bought for him by the broker without authority,[49] or if he conveys or tenders a conveyance of property sold for him by the broker without authority,[50] or

A custom cannot prevail against the express terms of a contract. Thus a custom that purchasers of land need not pay cash, although the terms of sale are for cash payment, will not sustain a contract of sale made by a real-estate agent who violated an instruction to sell for "one-third cash." accepts and retains the price of property so sold,[51] he is ordinarily bound by the transaction.

(4) Repudiation. If a principal repudiates a contract made for him by his broker subject to his confirmation he is not bound thereby.[52] A principal for whom personal property has been purchased on terms not authorized by him must repudiate the transaction within a reasonable time, however, else he becomes bound as by ratification.[53]

(G) Estoppel. A person may be estopped to deny the agency of a broker who has acted for him in negotiating a contract.[54] So if the principal holds out the broker as having a certain authority, he cannot, as against one who deals with the broker on the faith thereof, deny that such authority was in fact given; secret instructions to the contrary are of no avail.[55]

b. Rights Independent of Contract Negotiated by Broker or Collateral Thereto[56]—(I) In General. A principal who employs a broker to buy property is not liable to repay money borrowed of a third person by the broker to pay for it.[57] However, if a principal employs a broker to charter a boat, he is liable to the ship-owner for damages resulting to the vessel from his (the principal's) refusal to accept the cargo.[58] So the owner of a building who employs a broker to obtain tenants is liable for negligence on his (the principal's) part resulting in injuries to a prospective tenant while examining the building in company with the broker.[59] A broker employed to make sales has no implied authority to bind the principal by the submission of an incidental controversy to arbitration.[60]

(II) Authority of Broker to Dispose of Principal's Property— (A) In General. If a broker intrusted with money pays it away in the ordinary course of business for value, the principal cannot recover it from the recipient, unless the latter knew or should have known that the money was being misapplied.[61] However, a broker authorized to deliver a bill of lading only on payment of a draft attached thereto cannot bind the principal by a delivery made without such payment.[62] Nor can a broker ordinarily bind the principal by a sale of property of the latter in the broker's possession,[63] unless he has been authorized so to do.[64] So if a broker obtains possession of goods by falsely representing to the owner that he has a purchaser for them, and then sells them to another, the owner may recover them or their value from the buyer.[65]

(B) Pledges.[66] Since the possession of the principal's personal property by a broker gives him an apparent ownership, a transfer thereof by the broker to a bona fide pledgee for value without notice is ordinarily valid as against the principal.[67]

Knowledge of agency.— A broker who has reason to know that another broker of whom he buys stock sells it merely as the agent of an unnamed principal has no right to presume that such principal has authorized the agent to pledge the stock for his own debt, and cannot hold the stock by virtue of such a pledge, unauthorized or unratified by the principal. Fisher v. Brown, 104 Mass. 259, 6 Am. Rep. 235.

Measure of damages see Stollenwerck v. Thacher, 115 Mass. 224; Davis v. Funk, 39 Pa. St. 243, 80 Am. Dec. 519, holding that where a note left by the owner with a broker to be sold was pledged by the latter for a loan to himself, and on default of payment was sold by the pledgee for much less than its face, without notice, the owner, having tendered the advance made by the pledgee, may recover from him the difference between that sum and the face of the note.

Priorities.— As to stock deposited by plaintiff with brokers subsequently becoming insolvent as security for the advances which they might make in execution of plaintiff's orders, and which had also been pledged by them, plaintiff is entitled to a preference over other customers, whose stock was purchased on a margin, since they and plaintiff are not similarly situated. Accordingly, where one of plaintiff's certificates of stock so deposited as security by him and pledged by the brokers with other stock purchased by them on margins for other customers was sold by the pledgee, with a portion of the other stock, and the balance of the pledged stock was subsequently sold by the assignee of the brokers, to whom it had been turned over by the pledgee, plaintiff had the right to follow the proceeds of the sales, and was entitled to priority in payment over the other customers. But the mere fact that the brokers had in their possession a certificate of stock for the same number of shares in the same corporation as a certificate belonging to plaintiff, which had been sold by them and the money converted to their own use, does not make plaintiff the equitable owner of the other certificate, so as to entitle him to follow it into the hands of the pledgee. Payment after termination of broker's authority.— Where land is intrusted to real-estate agents to sell and collect the purchase-money, the purchaser is entitled to credit for payment to an agent of the real-estate agents, although made after he was discharged; he having been held out as authorized to receive payments due on contracts, and notice of withdrawal of his authority not having been given to the purchaser. 3. Rights of Broker Against Third Persons — a. In General. If a broker sells stock for a price payable at a future day, and a third person, for the accommodation of the principal, accepts a bill drawn by the latter in favor of the broker upon the broker's agreement to apply the price, when received, in payment of the bill, the broker cannot, as against the accepter, deduct from the price a sum due the broker from the principal on a previous transaction.[78] An exchange broker may recover on a bill bought by him, although he has not taken out a license as required by statute.[79] However, the promise of a prospective purchaser to convey part of the land to the owner's broker if he would introduce the purchaser to the owner is contrary to public policy, and cannot be enforced by the broker.[80]

b. Right of Lien. If a broker employed to buy goods pays the price, he may under some circumstances, as against third persons claiming under the buyer, be entitled to the benefit of a vendor's lien.[81] So if a person in possession of securities owned by another fraudulently deposits them with his broker to secure particular advances, the broker has a general lien thereon even as against the true owner.[82] However, a broker who holds securities given by his principal to secure a loan procured for the latter cannot, as against the lender, appropriate the proceeds of the securities to the payment of a debt due the broker from the principal.[83]

c. Rights Based on Contract Negotiated by Broker. As a rule a contract negotiated by a broker in behalf of a principal cannot found a right of action in favor of the broker against the other contracting party.[84]

A. 486, holding that a broker employed to find a purchaser may, after the conclusion of the contract of sale, lawfully become the agent of the purchaser to pass on the title, pay the price, and receive the deed, if the purchaser has knowledge of his former relation to the vendor; and hence that knowledge acquired by the broker after the contract of sale was closed that an outstanding mortgage executed by the vendor was intended by the parties thereto to cover the land embraced in the contract of sale, but that through a mistake of the scrivener a different tract was described therein, was chargeable to the purchaser and precluded him from disputing the mortgagee's right to have the mortgage reformed so as to make it embrace the land purchased. A. 491 (holding that a broker who takes an option for the purchase of property in his own name but in reality for the benefit of a customer, to whom he demands its conveyance, having himself no interest in the contract beyond a contingent commission in case a sale is made, cannot maintain a suit for specific enforcement of the contract). See also Paine v. Loeb, 96 Fed. 164, 37 C. C. A. 434, where brokers entered into a contract for the purchase of bonds from defendant, claiming to act for an undisclosed principal, and stipulating that they should in no manner be held liable on the contract, which, as they had reason to believe, was made by defendant under a misapprehension as to the value of the bonds, while in fact they were acting for themselves, and it was held that

4. Rights of Third Persons Against Broker[85] — a. In General. A broker who has accepted property from one who has no title or authority to sell, and disposed of it pursuant to his principal's instructions, is liable in damages to the true owner, although he acted in good faith and in the regular course of business.[86] One to whom a buyer has pledged bought notes may, on the buyer's rescinding the contract for fraud of the broker, recover from the broker deposits made with him by the buyer in part payment of the price.[87]

b. Rights of Other Party to Contract Negotiated by Broker — (I) Rights Based on Contract — (A) Where Broker Contracts For Himself. If a broker enters into a contract in his own behalf, his liabilities under the contract are those of a principal and ordinarily the same as if he were not a broker.[88]

(B) Where Broker Contracts For Disclosed Principal. If a broker, at the time of negotiating a contract, discloses his principal, the principal only, and not the broker, is liable thereon.[89]

they could not maintain an action on the contract — not as agents for an undisclosed principal, because no such principal existed, nor as principals, because, by their fraudulent misrepresentations, they had secured immunity from liability on the contract as such, and estopped themselves from claiming rights which were correlative with such liability.

Action for breach of contract. — Ordinarily a broker cannot sue the other contracting party for breach of a contract made in behalf of his principal (Fairlie v. Fenton, L. R. 5 Exch. 169, 39 L. J. Exch. 107, 22 L. T. Rep. N. S. 373, 28 Wkly. Rep. 700. See, however, Short v. Spackman, 2 B. & Ad. 962, 22 E. C. L. 402), and this is so although the principal is undisclosed (Sharman v. Brandt, L. R. 6 Q. B. 720, 40 L. J. Q. B. 312, 19 Wkly. Rep. 936). It has been held, however, that a real-estate broker may sue a purchaser who has refused to carry out his contract with the vendor, whereby the broker has lost his right to a commission, and this although he had agreed to look to the vendor for it. Livermore v. Crane, 26 Wash. 529, 67 Pac. 221, 57 L. R. A. 401. But see Cohen v. Hershfield, 16 Daly (N. Y.) 96, 9 N. Y. Suppl. 512, holding that where a vendee fraudulently conceals the fact that she purchased through a broker employed by the vendor, and represents that a third person was the procuring cause of the sale, whereby the vendor is induced to pay the commissions to such third person, the broker cannot sue the purchaser for lost commissions, as the vendor's liability to him is not affected by such payment to the third person.

Action for price. — An ordinary merchandise broker cannot maintain an action in his own name for the price of the goods sold by him. White v. Chouteau, 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 202. Contra, Hearshy v. Hichox, 12 Ark. 125, holding that a broker interested in the performance of the contract to the extent of his commission may sue for the price in his own name. If, however, the broker has guaranteed the sale (White v. Chouteau, supra) or advanced money upon the goods sold (White v. Chouteau, supra; White v. Chouteau, 1 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 493), he may sue for the price in his own name.

Liability of buyer's broker for price.— A broker who effects a purchase in behalf of a principal is not liable for the price. Simmons v. More, 100 N. Y. 140, 2 N. E. 640; Southwell v. Bowditch, 1 C. P. D. 374, 45 L. J. C. P. 630, 35 L. T. Rep. N. S. 196, 24 Wkly. Rep. 838, so holding in the absence of a usage to the contrary.

Liability of seller's broker to return deposit on price.— If a purchaser makes a deposit on the price with the vendor's broker, and the money is remitted to the vendor, the broker is not liable to the purchaser in an action to recover the deposit on the vendor's refusal to convey (Bogart v. Crosby, 80 Cal. 195, 22 Pac. 84. See also Fowler v. Quall, 36 Kan. 507, 13 Pac. 784, holding that a real-estate agent who received a part payment of purchase-money on a sale, conditioned that the offer be accepted by the owner on the terms and conditions specified or the money be returned, is not liable, in an action by the purchaser for the money, if the offer was accepted by the owner and the money paid to him, and if at the time of acceptance the owner and purchaser by agreement varied the terms and conditions on which the agent sold), unless by stipulation with the purchaser he makes himself personally liable for a return of the deposit in case the sale falls through (Mead v. Altgeld, 136 Ill. 298, 26 N. E. 388 [affirming 33 Ill. App. 373]). The rule is otherwise if, on the vendor's refusal to convey, he delivers the money to the broker for the purchaser. Liability for price.— A broker who purchases property without disclosing the name of his principal becomes personally liable for the price. Knapp v. Simon, 86 N. Y. 311 [reversing 46 N. Y. Super. Ct. 225], 96 N. Y. 284, 6 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 1 [reversing 49 N. Y. Super. Ct. 17]; Darlington Iron Co. v. Foote, 16 Fed. 646.

Liability for breach of contract.— If a broker sells property for an undisclosed principal he is liable for the seller's refusal to deliver the goods (McKown v. Gettys, 80 S. W. 169, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 2070; Magee v. Atkinson, 6 L. J. Exch. 115, 2 M. & W. 440) or for the seller's breach of warranty (Nott v. Papet, 15 La. 306; Waring v. Mason, 18 Wend. (N. Y.) 425).

Liability to refund price.— If a broker, without disclosing a principal, sells securities which turn out to be void, he is liable to the buyer for the amount of the price which the latter has paid. Pugh v. Moore, 44 La. Ann. 209, 10 So. 710; Sêré v. Faurès, 15 La. Ann. 189; Merriam v. Wolcott, 3 Allen (Mass.) 258, 80 Am. Dec. 69, holding that where a broker sells a forged note without disclosing the name of his principal, the fact that he paid over the money to his principal before it was demanded by the purchaser does not relieve the broker from liability if there was no unreasonable delay in notifying him after the discovery of the forgery.

Liability to indemnify seller of stock against calls.— A broker who buys stock for an undisclosed principal is liable to the seller for assessments on the stock which were collected of him because of the buyer's failure to register the transfer on the corporation's books. Lichten v. Verner, 8 Pa. Dist. 218; Boulthee v. Gzowski, 29 Can. Supreme Ct. 54. See also supra, II, G, 1, b, (III).

Sufficiency of disclosure of principal.— To relieve a note broker from liability on an implied warranty of the genuineness of a note sold by him, which afterward proved to be forged, the transaction must have been such that the purchaser understood, or ought as a man of reasonable intelligence to have understood, that he was dealing with the principal. Worthington v. Cowles, 112 Mass. 30. The mere fact that a broker employed to sell a note stated that a certain person (his undisclosed principal) said that he would sell goods for the paper does not amount to a disclosure of his principal. Baxter v. Duren, 29 Me. 434, 50 Am. Dec. 602. So the words "rediscounts, First National Bank, Fairmont, Neb.," in a letter by a broker offering commercial paper for sale, do not notify any one purchasing the same that the broker is acting as the agent of the bank. Hamlin v. Abell, 120 Mo. 188, 25 S. W. 516. The fact that a broker in making a purchase stated to the seller that the commodity purchased was for the "Blissville Distillery" does not show a sufficient disclosure of his principal to relieve the broker from liability, it appearing that the distillery named was not a corporation, that the seller did not know its proprietors, and that the broker directed that the charge be made to him. Cobb v. Knapp, 71 N. Y. 348, 27 Am. Rep. 51 [affirming 42 N. Y. Super. Ct. 91]. Howpal's name, he elects to proceed against him in preference to the broker.[91] If the broker contracts in his own name, it is not sufficient to relieve him of liability as principal that the other party knows that he is a broker;[92] nor is it sufficient to relieve him of liability that he discloses the fact that he is acting in behalf of another, where he does not in addition disclose the principal's name.[93]

(11) Rights Independent of Contract or Collateral Thereto — (A) In General. If a purchaser makes an overpayment of the price to the seller's broker he may recover the excess of the broker.[94] So long as the purchase stands, however, a purchaser who has paid the vendor's broker a commission as part consideration cannot recover it back because of a mutual mistake as to the dimensions of the property.[95] If the vendor's broker has agreed to divide the commissions with the purchaser, the latter is entitled to his share as against the broker.[96]

ever, a sold note reciting, "We have this day sold to you on account of James Morand & Co., Valencia," etc., shows an intention to make the foreign principals, and not the brokers, liable. Gadd v. Houghton, 1 Ex. D. 357, 46 L. J. Exch. 71, 35 L. T. Rep. N. S. 222, 24 Wkly. Rep. 975.

Necessity of written disclosure.— In the rice trade a custom exists that where a broker does not disclose in the contract note the name of the principal dealt with, although he may mention it orally, he is liable on the contract as principal. Bacmeister v. Fenton, 1 Cab. & E. 121.

91. Cobb v. Knapp, 71 N. Y. 348, 27 Am. Rep. 51, holding, however, that the commencement of an action against the principal after a disclosure of him by the broker is not conclusive of an election to hold the principal alone liable.

It is the custom in many lines of trade that a broker contracting for another without disclosing his principal is personally liable, although the fact of his agency is disclosed. Fleet v. Murton, L. R. 7 Q. B. 126, 41 L. J. Q. B. 49, 26 L. T. Rep. N. S. 181, 20 Wkly. Rep. 97; Imperial Bank v. London, etc., Docks Co., 5 Ch. D. 195, 46 L. J. Ch. 335, 36 L. T. Rep. N. S. 233; Marten v. Gibbon, 33 L. T. Rep. N. S. 561, 24 Wkly. Rep. 87. Such a custom is not in contravention of a contract evidenced by a sold note reciting that the goods are sold "for and on account of owner." Pike v. Ongley, 18 Q. B. D. 708, 56 L. J. Q. B. 373, 35 Wkly. Rep. 534. It is inconsistent, however, with a clause in a contract of sale which provides that if any dispute shall arise under the contract, it "shall be settled by the selling brokers, whose decision in writing shall be final and binding on both buyers and sellers," since if the custom were incorporated it would make the brokers judges of their own cause. Barrow v. Dyster, 13 Q. B. D. 635, 51 L. T. Rep. N. S. 573, 33 Wkly. Rep. 199.

Liability on sale of forged securities.— A broker who sells forged securities in behalf of an undisclosed principal is liable to the buyer even though he gives notice that he is acting for another. (Reprint) 511, 3 Cinc. L. Bul. 575.

94. Newall v. Tomlinson, L. R. 6 C. P. 405, 25 L. T. Rep. N. S. 382, holding that the fact that the broker gave credit to his undisclosed principal for the sum which he had received, the principal being largely in his debt, did not bring the case within the rule by which an agent is relieved from responsibility where he has paid over moneys received by him on account of his principal.

95. Emerson v. Coddington, 55 N. Y. Super. Ct. 336, 14 N. Y. St. 721.

96. Forst v. Farmer, 21 Misc. (N. Y.) 64, 46 N. Y. Suppl. 903, holding that neither a purchaser's failure to give notice to the vendors when the contract was made, that by agreement with the broker he was entitled to half the commissions, nor his payment of the deposit on the contract of purchase without attempting to deduct his share of the commissions, is a circumstance rendering improbable his testimony, contradicted by the broker, that the broker agreed to make such division with him.

(B) Breach of Warranty of Authority. A broker who assumes to negotiate a contract in behalf of a principal is liable to the other contracting party for damages resulting from a breach of the warranty of authority.[97]

(C) Fraud. If, in negotiating a contract in behalf of a principal, the broker is guilty of fraud as to the other contracting party, he is liable to him therefor in damages.[98]

See, however, Bogart v. Crosby, 80 Cal. 195, 22 Pac. 84 (holding that the broker is not thus liable because his authorization is verbal while the statute requires it to be in writing); Hopkins v. Everly, 150 Pa. St. 117, 24 Atl. 624 (holding that if the vendor makes the purchaser an allowance for his failure to perform a stipulation included in the contract of sale without authority, the purchaser cannot recover of the broker); McReavy v. Eshelman, 4 Wash. 757, 31 Pac. 35 (holding that a broker who represents that he has "authority to sell" certain land is not liable to a customer for the consequences of their mutual mistake of law in thinking that such authority carries with it the right to make a contract of sale); Warr v. Jones, 24 Wkly. Rep. 695 (holding that where a person assumes without authority to act as agent for the sale of real estate, and the contract is merely verbal, the person injured by relying on his representations has no remedy in equity against him for damages on the ground of part performance).

Measure of damages.— A real-estate agent who agrees to sell realty of his principal merely undertakes to bind the interest of his principal in such realty without warranty of title, and where he acts without authority in writing from his principal, who refuses to execute the contract made by him, the measure of damages in an action by the purchaser against the agent is the excess of the market value of the principal's title, whether good or bad, over the contract price. Gestring v. Fisher, 46 Mo. App. 603. A principal authorized his broker to apply for shares in one company, but by mistake he applied for shares in another company, which refused to cancel the allotment and a few months afterward was ordered to be wound up. The principal having succeeded in removing his name from the list of contributories because he had never authorized his agent to apply for the shares, and the liquidator having sued the broker for a breach of his warranty of authority, it was held that the measure of damages was the full nominal value of the shares. In re National Coffee Palace Co., 24 Ch. Ann. 385 (holding that while a mere broker, whose office is limited to bringing buyer and seller into communication, leaving them to negotiate a sale as they please, is not responsible for a fraud practised by one of them on the other, yet a mandatory, or one who assumes to conduct and urge the negotiation, may be liable to the buyer for a deceit practised on him in the sale); Hardacre v. Stewart, 5 Esp. 103 (holding that if a broker has notice that what he is about to sell is not his principal's, and he yet continues to sell, he is personally liable to the buyer for the amount of the price paid to the broker). See, however, Baker v. Brown, 82 Cal. 64, 22 Pac. 879; Kice v. Porter, 53 S. W. 285, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 871 (holding that the failure of a broker to inform a purchaser that he had bought the property from one for whom the purchaser supposed he was acting as agent in making the sale does not render him liable in an action of deceit); People's Bank v. Bogart, 16 Hun (N. Y.) 270 [affirmed in 81 N. Y. 101, 37 Am. Rep. 481]; Tibbs v. Zirkle, (W. Va. 1904) 46 S. E. 701 (holding that an agent under power to sell is not bound by an unauthorized option given by a co-agent, and hence if he purchases the land for himself he cannot be held as trustee for the claimant under the option).

Fraud as to encumbrances.— If a broker employed to sell property which is subject to encumbrances misrepresents or conceals the fact that the property is encumbered, he is liable to the purchaser in damages. Griffing v. Diller, 21 N. Y. Suppl. 407.

Ratification of sale by purchaser.— Where a purchaser of stocks ratifies the sale, he cannot recover from the seller's broker profits made by him, although part of such profits were made by tampering with the purchaser's broker. Illingsworth v. De Mott, 59 N. J. Eq. 8, 45 Atl. 272.

Measure of damages.— Where plaintiff purchased property from defendant, a broker, for seven thousand dollars, upon his representation that the owner would not sell it for less than that price, when the fact was that the owner had consented to sell it for six thousand five hundred dollars and the broker's commission, plaintiff can recover in an action of deceit only five hundred dollars, less a reasonable commission to defendant. Kice v. Porter, 53 S. W. 285, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 871, 61 S. W. 266, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 1704. In an action against an agent for fraudulent representations as to the location of real estate sold by him to plaintiff, after a disaffirmance of the contract, the measure of damages is the actual loss sustained, and not the difference between the actual value of the property conveyed and the price. Roberts v. Holliday, 10 S. D. 576, 74 N. W. 1034.

99. Right of set-off or counter-claim see Recoupment, Set-Off, and Counter-Claim.

1. Winston v. Tufts, 10 La. Ann. 23 (holding that where a person sells through a broker a note drawn and indorsed by a person whom he knows to be insolvent, but whom he causes the broker to represent to be solvent, the buyer's remedy is in an action to avoid the contract of sale); Joseph v. Holroyd, 22 Wkly. Rep. 614 (holding that a statute providing that "the Court of Chancery shall adjust the rights of contributories amongst themselves, and distribute any surplus that may remain among the parties thereto" does not prevent a transferrer of shares from suing a transferee in a court of law, on a contract of indemnity, for calls made upon him by the liquidator during winding up). See, generally, Actions, 1 Cyc. 634 et seq.

2. Harrison v. Pryse, Barn. 324, holding that where a principal causes stock belonging to another person to be transferred into his own name and then into the name of a broker for sale, and the stock is accordingly sold, the broker is not a necessary party to a bill by the buyer against the principal and the corporation for satisfaction. See, generally, Parties.

3. Anderson v. Creston Land Co., 96 Va. 257, 31 S. E. 82 (holding that a land contract entered into by the purchaser's agent cannot be avoided by the purchaser, in a suit to enforce the purchase-money notes, because the agent also represented the vendor, where that fact was not presented in the pleadings); Drakeford v. Piercy, 7 B. & S. 515, 14 L. T. Rep. N. S. 403 (holding, in an action for goods sold through a broker, that a plea of payment to the broker without knowledge that he was acting in behalf of a principal is bad, in the absence of an allegation that the broker had possession of the goods or that he had real or apparent authority to sell in his own name). See, generally, Pleading.

4. Erringer v. Miller, 3 Phila. (Pa.) 344, holding that, in an action for breach of a note broker's warranty that all the names on a note sold by him were genuine, proof that the indorsers' names are forged while the makers' names are genuine, enables plaintiff to recover in case, although the declaration alleges that both the makers' and indorsers' signatures are forgeries. See, generally, Pleading.

5. Redlon v. Churchill, 73 Me. 146, 40 Am. Rep. 345 (holding that where a member of a firm made his individual note payable to his own order, and indorsed thereon his own name and that of his firm, and appropriated the proceeds thereof to his own use, the fact that the note was purchased from a broker furnishes no presumption that the broker was the agent of the maker); Baxter v. Duren, 29 Me. 434, 50 Am. Dec. 602 (holding that any one dealing with a person whom he knows to be a broker may be presumed to know, from the nature of a broker's business, that he is acting as agent for some third person); Western R. Co. v. Roberts, 4 Phila. (Pa.) 110 (holding that a broker vested with a mere authority to sell, without possession and authority to deliver, will not be presumed to be also authorized to receive the purchase-money); Edwards v. Davidson, (Tex. Civ. App. 1904) 79 S. W. 48 (holding that a vendee suing a landowner to recover money paid his agent on an unauthorized contract of sale made by the latter has the burden of proving ratification by the landowner). See, generally, Evidence, 16 Cyc. 926 et seq., 1050 et seq.

6. Wilkinson v. Churchill, 114 Mass. 184 (holding that, on a bill for specific performance of a contract to convey in which the defense is that the broker who made the sale did so without authority of defendant, evidence that the land in one year doubled in value is inadmissible); Coddington v. Goddard, 16 Gray (Mass.) 436 (holding that in an action to enforce a contract for the sale of copper, made through a broker, who innocently misled the seller as to the arrival of news of an advance in the price of copper in Europe, evidence is not admissible to show that sellers in general anticipated news from Europe, by the next steamer, of an advance); Bassett v. Lederer, 3 Thomps. & C. (N. Y.) 671 (holding that in an action for the price of goods sold through a broker, where defendant claims to have purchased the goods of the broker as principal and to have paid him for them, evidence that the broker's character for fair dealing is good is inadmissible); Waring v. Mason, 18 Wend. (N. Y.) 425 (holding that parol evidence of a sale by sample is admissible in an action for breach of warranty, although the broker who instructions,[7] and questions for the jury,[8] when they arise in actions between a principal or his broker and third persons, are governed by the rules applicable in civil actions in general.

FACTORY. See MANUFACTURERS.

FACTORY PRICES. The prices at which goods may be bought at factories, as distinguished from the prices of those bought in the market, after they have passed into the hands of third parties or shopkeepers.[1] (See COST PRICE.)

FACTUM. A FACT, q. v.; fact, as distinguished from law.[2] In old English law, a deed; [a thing done in writing;] a conveyance or other written instrument, under seal, formerly otherwise termed charta, and by the civilians literarum obligatio.[3] In testamentary law, the execution or due execution of a will.[4]

FACTUM A JUDICE QUOD AD EJUS OFFICIUM NON SPECTAT, NON RATUM EST. A maxim meaning "An act of a judge which does not pertain to his office is of no force."[5]

FACTUM CUIQUE SUUM, NON ADVERSARIO, NOCERE DEBET. A maxim meaning "A man's actions should injure himself, not his adversary."[6]

FACTUM INFECTUM FIERI NEQUIT. A maxim meaning "What is done cannot be undone."[7]

FACTUM NEGANTIS NULLA PROBATIO. A maxim meaning "No proof is incumbent on him who denies a fact."[8]

FACTUM NON DICITUR QUOD NON PERSEVERAT. A maxim meaning "That is not said to be done which does not last."[9] effected the sale made an entry thereof in his books without mentioning that it was a sale by sample, the entry not having been signed by the broker, and a bought and sold note not having been delivered by him to either of the parties); Jesson v. Texas Land, etc., Co., 3 Tex. Civ. App. 25, 21 S. W. 624 (holding that, on an issue whether a loan broker was the agent of defendant in negotiating a loan for him or the agent of plaintiff company, which made the loan, correspondence between the broker and plaintiff's manager relative to defendant's loan and a requested extension thereof, and concerning other loans made by plaintiff through the broker, is admissible in evidence). See, generally, EVIDENCE, 16 Cyc. 821 et seq.

The declarations of a broker who negotiates a contract for a principal are not ordinarily admissible against the other contracting party. Burlingame v. Foster, 128 Mass. 125. Nor may a broker's authority be enlarged by his own declarations so as to bind his principal. Stollenwerck v. Thacher, 115 Mass. 224.

Evidence of custom is admissible to explain the meaning of a contract. McKown v. Gettys, 80 S. W. 169, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 2070; Fleet v. Murton, L. R. 7 Q. B. 126, 41 L. Q. B. 49, 26 L. T. Rep. N. S. 181, 20 Wkly. Rep. 97 (holding also that evidence of an analogous usage in the colonial trade is properly admitted to prove the usage of the domestic trade); Field v. Lelean, 6 H. & N. 617, 7 Jur. N. S. 918, 30 L. J. Exch. 168, 4 L. T. Rep. N. S. 121, 9 Wkly. Rep. 387.

8. Jessom v. Texas Land, etc., Co., 3 Tex. Civ. App. 25, 21 S. W. 624 (holding that the question whether a loan broker was the agent of the borrower or of the lender is one for the jury); Catterall v. Hindle, L. R. 2 C. P. 368 [reversing 1 H. & R. 267, 12 Jur. N. S. 488, 35 L. J. C. P. 161, 14 L. T. Rep. N. S. 102, 14 Wkly. Rep. 371] (holding that it is a question for the jury whether payment to a broker in advance is a good payment as against the principal, depending on the custom of the trade). See, generally, TRIAL.

FACTUM UNIUS ALTERI NOCERI NON DEBET. A maxim meaning "The deed of one should not hurt another." [10]

FACULTAS PROBATIONUM NON EST ANGUSTANDA. A maxim meaning "The facility of proofs is not to be narrowed." [11]

FACULTIES. See COURT OF FACULTIES.

FACULTY. In American colleges, the body of instructors.[12] In ecclesiastical affairs, properly speaking, a license issued by the ordinary through his Consistorial Court, to effect certain alterations of a grave character in a parish church.[13] In Scotch law, a power founded on consent, as distinguished from a power founded on property.[14]

FAIL.[15] To leave unperformed; to omit; to neglect, as distinguished from refuse, which latter involves an act of the will, while the former may be an act of inevitable necessity;[16] although the word is sometimes used in the sense of refuse.[17] In commercial law, to become unable to pay one's notes or other obligations.[18] (See FAILURE; and, generally, BANKRUPTCY; INSOLVENCY.)

FAILURE.[20] When used in connection with any enterprise, in its ordinary and obvious sense, abandonment or defeat;[21] the result of action which predicates earnest effort, and not mere inaction and refusal to do.[22] Sometimes the term is used in the sense of nonperformance of a duty — that is, as the equivalent of

Place of amusement.— Although the chief idea in the word is that of buying and selling, it includes the idea of a place of amusements naturally sought by a large concourse of people attendant at a fair. Collins v. Cooper, 17 Cox C. C. 647, 654, 57 J. P. 248, 68 L. T. Rep. N. S. 450, 5 Reports 256, where Bruce, J., said: "In modern times the commercial importance of fairs has greatly diminished, and the amusements which accompany the holding of fairs often excite much more attention than the buying and selling. But it seems to me that this circumstance does not alter the meaning of the word fair . . . I cannot find any authority for the use of the word fair as applied to a wake, or a show, or an exhibition. A cattle fair still means a fair where cattle are sold, a fancy fair where fancy articles are sold. There are many occasions where shows and exhibitions are gathered together — for instance, at horse-race meetings, at boat races, at great football matches, and other outdoor meetings: yet I think such gatherings cannot properly be spoken of as fairs. It is said that there are such things as pleasure fairs. I am not sure that there is any such phrase in common use. But if there is it can, I think, only mean a fair at which toys, trinkets, and such like articles are sold. The fair mentioned in the old song to which the young man went to buy blue ribbon for his sweetheart may have been a pleasure fair, but it was a fair at which blue ribbon was sold, and I suppose other like commodities."

Exhibition of industrial products.— At the present time the term is very generally used to designate an exposition where the industrial products of a people are exhibited as a display of the success, workmanship, and art of the exhibitors, and to obtain such premiums as may be paid by the owners of the fair as a reward of excellence. 43. "Fairly" is the adverb of "fair." Warnock v. Thomas, 48 Ala. 463, 465 [citing Webster Dict.; Worcester Dict.].

Distinguished from "truly."— "The word 'truly' has been substituted in the oath for 'fairly.' The words are not synonymous. They have widely different shades of meaning, and convey entirely distinct ideas. Every day's experience teaches us that language may be truly, yet most unfairly repeated. The answer of the witness may be truly written down, yet it may convey a meaning quite different from that which the witness intended to convey, and did convey to the person that heard him speak. On the other hand, language may be fairly reported, yet not in accordance with strict truth." Lawrence v. Finch, 17 N. J. Eq. 234, 239 [citing Den v. Thompson, 16 N. J. L. 72].

In connection with other words the word "fairly" has often received judicial interpretation; as for example as used in the following phrases: "Fairly and equitably" (see Hutton v. West Orange, 39 N. J. L. 453, 455); "fairly and impartially" (see Den v. Thompson, 16 N. J. L. 72, 74); "fairly compensate him" (see Knoxville v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 83 Iowa 636, 644, 50 N. W. 61, 32 Am. FALSA ORTHOGRAPHIA SIVE FALSA GRAMMATICA NON VITIAT CONCESSIONEM. A maxim meaning "False spelling or false grammar does not vitiate a grant."[75]

FALSE.[76] Erroneous, untrue;[77] the opposite of correct, or true;[78] and often the term, as used, does not necessarily involve turpitude of mind.[79] In the more important uses in jurisprudence,[80] and even in its popular application,[81] the word implies something more than a mere untruth; it is an untruth coupled with a lying intent,[82] or an intent to deceive or to perpetrate some treachery or fraud.[83] The true meaning of the term must, as in other instances, often be determined by the context.[84] (See FALSELY.)

I mean not only that which is untrue, but I mean that which is malicious, wilful, which is criminal, which is false in an odious sense, and to the man's knowledge. And therefore the construction which, after a great deal of consideration, I should put upon this part of the clause certainly is, that it refers to a wilful fraud, a wilful misstatement."

I. DEFINITION.

False imprisonment is the unlawful and total restraint of the liberty of the person. The imprisonment is false in the sense of being unlawful.[1]

II. NATURE OF RIGHT INFRINGED.

A. Primary Character. The right violated by this tort is "freedom of locomotion."[2] It belongs historically to the class of rights known as simple or primary rights (inaccurately called absolute rights), as distinguished from secondary rights, or rights not to be harmed. It is a right in rem; it is available against the community at large. The theory of the law is that one interferes with the freedom of locomotion of another at his peril.[3]

B. Mental Attitude of Wrong-Doer. The right invaded by false imprisonment is of such a character that the liability of the wrong-doer does not depend primarily upon his mental attitude.[4] All of the authorities declare that neither

III. DISTINGUISHED FROM MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.

The distinction between false imprisonment and malicious prosecution is fundamental. They are made up of different elements, enforced by different forms of action, are governed by different rules of pleading, evidence, and damages, and are subject to different defenses.[15]

Shupp, 94 Md. 55, 50 Atl. 430; Hackett v. King, 6 Allen (Mass.) 58; Kessler v. Hoffman, 9 Pa. Dist. 365; Garvin v. Blocker, 2 Brev. (S. C.) 157), and the cases first above cited are to be regarded as local aberrations (Beebe v. De Baun, 8 Ark. 510; Gourgues v. Howard, 27 La. Ann. 339) or as depending on their own peculiar circumstances (Gifford v. Wiggins, 50 Minn. 401, 52 N. W. 904, 18 L. R. A. 356; Loomis v. Bender, 41 Hun (N. Y.) 268; Comfort v. Fulton, 39 Barb. (N. Y.) 56; Lamar v. Dana, 14 Fed. Cas. No. 8,006; Neal v. Minifie, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 10,070, 2 Cranch C. C. 16, justice not liable for warrant unless maliciously issued; Moore v. Guardner, 16 M. & W. 595, proof of express malice essential in prolonging imprisonment. See also Fellows v. Goodman, 49 Mo. 62, "sham" proceedings), or governed by some peculiarity of practice in a particular jurisdiction or by statutory changes in the common law.

Confusion of kindred causes of action.—The actions of false imprisonment, malicious prosecution (Page v. Miller, 13 Ohio Cir. Ct. 663, 6 Ohio Cir. Dec. 676. And see, generally, MALICIOUS PROSECUTION), and malicious abuse of process (Hazard v. Harding, 63 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 326), and similar forms of action are so intimately related in legal nature and so frequently joined, and have been so identified by changes in legal practice, that the distinctions between them have not always been clearly or consistently observed (Wilson v. King, 39 N. Y. Super. Ct. 384).

15. Carl v. Ayers, 53 N. Y. 14; Brown v. Chadsey, 39 Barb. (N. Y.) 253; Hobbs v. Ray, 18 R. I. 84, 25 Atl. 694; Herzog v. Graham, 9 Lea (Tenn.) 152; Whitten v. Bennett, 86 Fed. 405, 30 C. C. A. 140; Castro v. De Uriarte, 12 Fed. 250. Compare Platt v. Niles, 1 Edm. Sel. Cas. (N. Y.) 230. And see, generally, MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.

Probable cause.—In false imprisonment the onus lies on defendant to plead and prove affirmatively the existence of reasonable cause as his justification, whereas in an action for malicious prosecution plaintiff must allege and prove affirmatively its non-existence. Hicks v. Faulkner, 8 Q. B. D. 167, 51 L. J. Q. B. 268, 30 Wkly. Rep. 545 [affirmed in 46 J. P. 420, 46 L. T. Rep. N. S. 127].

It takes less to constitute false imprisonment than malicious prosecution. McCaskey v. Garrett, 91 Mo. App. 354.

Malice.— A cause of action in false imprisonment does not primarily and apart from justification depend upon mental attitude (see supra, II, B); malice or want of probable cause is of the gist of malicious prosecution. Boaz v. Tate, 43 Ind. 60; Colter v. Lower, 35 Ind. 285, 9 Am. Rep. 735.

Justification by legal authority.—False imprisonment lies only for an interference with personal liberty without legal authority (Haskins v. Ralston, 69 Mich. 63, 37 N. W. 45, 13 Am. St. Rep. 376; McCaskey v. Garrett, 91 Mo. App. 354; Brown v. Crowl, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 298); but if a valid or apparently valid power to arrest is enforced without probable cause and with malice the remedy is by malicious prosecution (Colter v. Lower, 35 Ind. 285, 9 Am. Rep. 735; Boaz v. Tate, 43 Ind. 60; Wiel v. Israel, 42 La. Ann. 955, 8 So. 826; Morrow v. Wheeler, etc., Mfg. Co., 165 Mass. 349, 43 N. E. 105; Cassier v. Fales, 139 Mass. 461, 1 N. E. 922, holding that if an infant be arrested on a warrant, valid on its face, his infancy does not make the writ an illegal process, but that his remedy is in malicious prosecution; Dunlevey v. Wolferman, 106 Mo. 46, 79 S. W. 1165; Broadway, etc., Stage Co. v. American Soc., etc., 15 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 51; Calderone v. Kiernan, 23 R. I. 578, 51 Atl. 215; Lisabelle v. Hubert, 23 R. I. 456, 50 Atl. 837; Hobbs v. Ray, 18 R. I. 84, 25 Atl. 694; Herzog v. Graham, 9 Lea (Tenn.) 152; Murphy v. Marton, 58 Wis. 276, 16 N. W. 603; Whitten v. Bennett, 86 Fed. 405, 30 C. C. A. 140 [affirming 77 Fed. 271]; Castro v. De Uriarte, 12 Fed. 250, malicious prosecution proper where a court has no jurisdiction). See, generally, MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.

Legal advice of an attorney (Philadelphia F. Assoc. v. Fleming, 78 Ga. 733, 3 S. E. 420; Burbanks v. Lepovsky, 134 Mich. 384, 96 N. W. 456; Josselyn v. McAllister, 22 Mich. 300; Ackroyd v. Ackroyd, 3 Daly (N. Y.) 38; Frazier v. Turner, 76 Wis. 562, 45 N. W. 411), especially if given only after arrest (Filer v. Smith, 96 Mich. 347, 55 N. W. 999, 35 Am. St. Rep. 603), or the advice of a police officer (Barth v. Heider, 6 D. C. 312), or of a magistrate (Frederick v. Minehart, 34 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 305) is not a good defense in false imprisonment, in jurisdictions governed by the common law, but otherwise in Louisiana as to legal advice (Weil v. Israel, 42 La. Ann. 955, 8 So. 826; Block v. Meyers, 33 La. Ann. 776; Mortimer v. Thomas, 23 La. Ann. 165); although legal advice may serve to make out a plea of non fecit when there was no participation (Teal v. Fissel, 28 Fed. 351), but not when there was (Frazier v. Turner, 76 Wis. 562, 45 N. W. 411), and may operate to mitigate damages (Philadelphia F. Assoc. v. Fleming, 78 Ga. 733, 3 S. E. 420; Mortimer v. Thomas, 23 La. Ann. 165; Frazier v. Turner, 76 Wis. 562, 45 N. W. 411). But

IV. ELEMENTS OF THE TORT.

A. Unlawfulness. The mere fact of voluntary detention does not constitute false imprisonment; the person complained of must have done wrong in a legal sense.[16] Questions as to illegality of conduct are usually raised by way of defense.[17]

B. Detention or Restraint — 1. SUBSTANCE. The right of freedom of locomotion is violated when one is wrongfully detained against his will or is in any way deprived of, as distinguished from obstructed[18] or subjected to inconvenience,[19] in his right[20] to come or go or stay when and where he wishes. Some conduct imposing detention or restraint is essential;[21] but any conduct resulting therein is sufficient.[22] It is the unlawful interference with the wish or desire of plaintiff which the law seeks to compensate.[23] Free egress must therefore be impossible; the restraint must be total.[24]

2. MANNER — a. In General. The conduct violating plaintiff's right must be that of the person sought to be charged[25] or conduct chargeable to him[26] showing legal or actual intent[27] to interfere with, and resulting in, the violation of freedom of locomotion of the person seeking damages. The manner in which in malicious prosecution legal advice may be a complete defense. Lange v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 107 La. 687, 31 So. 1003. See, generally, MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.

16. Baker v. Barton, 1 Colo. App. 183, 28 Pac. 88; Gammage v. Mahaffey, 110 La. 1008, 35 So. 266. In an action for false imprisonment defendants are not liable unless the arrest was unlawful, however malicious their motives may have been. Bennett v. Lewis, 66 S. W. 523, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 2037; Crowell v. Gleason, 10 Me. 325; Warren v. Dennett, 13 Misc. (N. Y.) 329, 34 N. Y. Suppl. 462; Hindman v. Hutchinson, 30 Pittsb. Leg. J. (Pa.) 422; Murphy v. Martin, 58 Wis. 276, 16 N. W. 603. Liability may attach when the original arrest was unlawful (Ruffner v. Williams, 3 W. Va. 243) or where the original arrest was justified but subsequent conduct was wrongful (Tobin v. Bell, 73 N. Y. App. Div. 41, 76 N. Y. Suppl. 425), and generally whenever the detention was not authorized at all by law (Low v. Evans, 16 Ind. 486). See also supra, I.

19. Rigney v. Monette, 47 La. Ann. 648, 17 So. 211. Refusal of officer to go with arrested person to seek bail is not sufficient. Calderone v. Kiernan, 23 R. I. 578, 51 Atl. 215.

20. False imprisonment may consist in preventing a person from going in any direction he sees proper, without detaining him in any particular spot. Harkins v. State, 6 Tex. App. 452; Johnson r. Tompkins, 13 Fed. Cas. No. 7,416, Baldw. 571.

Thus shadowing by a detective before an examination as to robbery so as to show that, if necessary, force would be used to detain, may constitute an unjustifiable deprivation of liberty. Fotheringham v. Adams Express Co., 36 Fed. 252, 1 L. R. A. 474.

The use of improper means to decoy into a given jurisdiction under certain circumstances may be sufficient. Wanzer v. Bright, 52 Ill. 35; Ahern v. Collins, 39 Mo. 145.

21. Arrest is not essential (Garnier v. Squires, 62 Kan. 321, 62 Pac. 1005; Burk v. Howley, 18 Pa. Co. Ct. 303; Mayer v. Vaughan, 11 Quebec Q. B. 340), but arrest is sufficient notwithstanding immediate release (Harness v. Steele, 159 Ind. 286, 64 N. E. 875).

Merely giving in charge to a peace officer, where the officer never takes the person of defendant into custody, is not an imprisonment which will support an action. Simpson v. Hill, 1 Esp. 431.

Misrepresentations or threats of a criminal prosecution and payment of money, whereby plaintiff was induced to go to another place and remain in concealment for a time, is not sufficient. Payson v. Macomber 3 Allen (Mass.) 69.

Voluntarily remaining in custody is insufficient. Kirk v. Garrett, 84 Md. 383, 35 Atl. 1089.

22. Searls v. Viets, 2 Thomps. & C. (N. Y.) 224.

23. See infra, XIII.

24. If plaintiff is free to go where he wants to he cannot sustain an action of false imprisonment; if he is prevented from going where he may have a right to go, a mere partial obstruction to his will may be the basis of some other form of action, but not of the one here under consideration. Bird v. Jones, 7 Q. B. 742, 9 Jur. 870, 15 L. J. Q. B. 82, 53 E. C. L. 742. See also Stevens v. O'Neill, 51 N. Y. App. Div. 364, 64 N. Y. Suppl. 663 (liberty to go); Wright v. Wilson, 1 Ld. 27. Thus where the contest is for possession of personal property and there is no

the wrong is done is not material; it may be accomplished by actual force,[28] by a submission to reasonably apprehended force,[29] or by submission to legal authority.[30] Other facts or circumstances affect only the extent and not the right of recovery.[31]

b. Actual Physical Force. Unlawful detention by actual physical force is unquestionably sufficient to make out a cause of action.[32] Unnecessary violence in an otherwise justifiable arrest may give rise to it.[33] Actual physical contact with the person of plaintiff is not, however, essential. Battery often accompanies arrest; but this is incidental only.[34] Force is essential only in the sense of imposing restraint.[35]

c. Apprehension of Force. The essence of personal coercion is the effect of the alleged wrongful conduct on the will of plaintiff.[36] There is no legal wrong unless the detention was involuntary.[37] False imprisonment may be committed by words alone, or by acts alone, or by both; it is not necessary that the individual be actually confined or assaulted or even that he should be touched.[38] intent to detain the person, false imprisonment is not made out. McClure v. State, 26 Tex. App. 102, 9 S. W. 353. Where by an accident an injured person with a crushed foot was removed to a house and thence to a hospital, it was held that there was no actionable imprisonment. Ollet v. Pittsburg, etc., R. Co., 201 Pa. St. 361, 50 Atl. 1011. On the other hand actual detention without intent to arrest but to forcibly compel return of lost money is sufficient. Garnier v. Squires, 62 Kan. 321, 62 Pac. 1005. Ordinarily, however, the intent or motive of the person causing the detention or restraint is immaterial. See supra, II, B.

But there must be personal coercion of some sort exercised by defendant over plaintiff in order to subject the former to liability.[39]

d. Submission to Legal Authority. Submission to legal authority to arrest may make one a prisoner.[40] That the arrested person reasonably supposed apparent authority was compulsory authority does not constitute consent to an arrest.[41] Express or implied submission to arrest, however, is inconsistent with involuntary constraint.[42]

3. Place and Time. The wrong may be committed at any place.[43] The Compare Genner v. Sparks, 6 Mod. 173, 1 Salk. 79, can be no arrest without touching of person.

39. A demonstration tending to an arrest which to all appearances can only be avoided by submission operates as effectually if submitted to as force. Brushaber v. Stegemann, 22 Mich. 266. One is not obliged to incur the risk of personal violence and insult by resisting until actual violence is used. There need be no formal declaration of arrest. Pike v. Hanson, 9 N. H. 491. It is sufficient, if there was reasonable ground to apprehend that compulsory measures would be used, if plaintiff did not yield. Ahern v. Collins, 39 Mo. 145. Reasonable fear of personal difficulty is sufficient. Smith v. State, 7 Humphr. (Tenn.) 43. 43. Hawk v. Ridgway, 33 Ill. 473; Smith v. State, 7 Humphr. (Tenn.) 43. Detention in a prison or jail (Weser v. Welty, 18 Ind. App. 664, 47 N. E. 639; Cobbett v. Gray, 4 Exch. 729, 19 L. J. Exch. 137) or in any other penal institution, as in an industrial school (Scott v. Flowers, 60 Nebr. 675, 84 N. W. 81) or a workhouse (St. Louis v. Karr, 85 Mo. App. 608) is sufficient, even if the purpose be not for criminal arrest. The actionable restraint may also be committed on public streets (Floyd v. State, 12 Ark. 43, 54 Am. Dec. 250; Hight v. Naylor, 86 Ill. App. 508; Dunlevy v. Wolferman, 106 Mo. App. 46, 79 S. W. 1165), in any inclosure, as within railway gates until fare is paid (Lynch v. Metropolitan El. R. Co., 90 N. Y. 77, 43 Am. Rep. 141), in a corn-crib (McNay v. Stratton, 9 Ill. App. 215), or in a field (People v. Wheeler, 73 Cal. 252, 14 Pac. 796); in an insane asylum (Oakes v. Oakes, 55 N. Y. App. Div. 576, 67 N. Y. Suppl. 427; Hindman v. Hutchinson, 30 Pittsb. Leg. J. (Pa.) 422), a store (Rich v. McInerny, 103 Ala. 345, 15 So. 653, 49 Am. St. Rep. 32; Virchatka v. Rothschild, 100 Ill. App. 268), a shop (Timothy v. Simpson, 1 C. M. & R. 757, 6 C. & P. 499, 4 L. J. Exch. 81, 5 Tyrw. 244, 25 E. C. L. 544; Cohen v. Huskisson, 6 L. length of time of the constraint primarily affects the extent of recovery.[44] Whenever it appears that the person complaining was actually restrained without legal authority for an appreciable time, however short, a case of false imprisonment is made out.[45] Detention for a longer time than is authorized, although the arrest was originally lawful, may be the basis of the action.[46]

V. PERSONS RESPONSIBLE.

A. Persons Causing — 1. CONNECTION AS CAUSE. The person sought to be charged for false imprisonment can be held only when it is shown that he was the legal cause of a wrongful detention,[47] and only so far as his connection as cause can be traced.[48] An alleged wrong-doer may be a legal cause in at least Sorenson v. Dundas, 50 Wis. 335, 7 N. W. 259, plaintiff's own house); in any kind of a room (Prentiss v. Shaw, 56 Me. 427, 96 Am. Dec. 475; Williams v. Powell, 101 Mass. 467, 3 Am. Rep. 396; Warner v. Riddiford, 4 C. B. N. S. 180, 93 E. C. L. 180, plaintiff's own room; Williams v. Jones, Cas. t. Hardw. 298), or in an attorney's office (Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Parker, 29 Tex. Civ. App. 264, 68 S. W. 831). As to a hospital see Ollet v. Pittsburg, etc., R. Co., 201 Pa. St. 361, 50 Atl. 1011.

Locking the door of a bank at a usual and known hour may be sufficient wrongful detention. Woodword v. Washburn, 3 Den. (N. Y.) 369.

To touch a person suspected of theft illegally on the shoulder and to request his return to a store, which request is complied with, does not constitute an arrest. Hershey v. O'Neill, 36 Fed. 168.

44. See infra, XIII, D.

45. A few minutes (Callahan v. Searles, 78 Hun (N. Y.) 238, 28 N. Y. Suppl. 904; Smith v. State, 7 Humphr. (Tenn.) 43), a few hours (Efroymson v. Smith, 29 Ind. App. 451, 63 N. E. 328; Prentiss v. Shaw, 56 Me. 427, 96 Am. Dec. 475; Martin v. Golden, 180 Mass. 549, 62 N. E. 977; Burk v. Howley, 179 Pa. St. 359, 36 Atl. 327, 67 Am. St. Rep. 607), or a night (Miller v. Ashcraft, 98 Ky. 314, 32 S. W. 1085, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 894; Pastor v. Regan, 9 Misc. (N. Y.) 547, 30 N. Y. Suppl. 657, trespass ab initio) may be sufficient.

46. Torbert v. Lynch, 67 Ind. 474 (where defendant was illegally compelled to work out on the streets an imposed fine); St. Louis v. Karr, 85 Mo. App. 608. See also Smith v. Peabody, 106 Mass. 262, where, however, illegality of the continued detention of a pauper was not established by proper evidence.

Removal to another county.— Liability may attach by the taking of an arrested person into another county (Potter v. Swindle, 77 Ga. 419, 3 S. E. 94, where plaintiff was also handcuffed and incarcerated for days; Wolf v. Perryman, 82 Tex. 112, 17 S. W. 772, where the question of identity could as well have been investigated in the original as another county to which plaintiff was removed, unless removal was justified by circumstances of excitement and danger; Wiggins v. Norton, 83 Ga. 148, 9 S. E. 607) or was made at plaintiff's request (Ellis v. Cleveland, 54 Vt. 437, to jail in a different county).

Refusal to accept bail.— Liability for unlawfully prolonged detention may attach because of attendant circumstances, like refusal to accept any reasonable bail (Manning v. Mitchell, 73 Ga. 660; Gibbs v. Randlett, 58 N. H. 407, without reference to malice; Leger v. Warren, 62 Ohio St. 500, 57 N. E. 506, 78 Am. St. Rep. 738, 51 L. R. A. 193), but not for refusal of officer to go with prisoner to find bail (Calderone v. Kiernan, 23 R. I. 578, 51 Atl. 215).

Substitution of valid for void process.— A person who wrongfully arrested another without process or on void process cannot without liability detain him on a subsequent valid process until after he has been set at liberty. Mandeville v. Guernsey, 51 Barb. (N. Y.) 99.

As to detention on alias execution see Barnes v. Viall, 6 Fed. 661.

one or more of three ways, viz.: (1) Where he commits the wrong singly or jointly with others;[49] (2) where he in a legal sense commands others to commit it or ratifies their conduct;[50] and (3) where he stands in such relation to the person actually doing wrong, or to the person suffering it, as to be responsible for it and its consequences.[51]

2. PERSONAL COMMISSION — a. General Rule. The liability may attach by a direct personal commission of the unlawful detention.[52]

b. Joint Tort-Feasors. All persons who directly procure, aid, abet, or assist in an unlawful imprisonment are liable as principals.[53] In order to make parties defendant joint tort-feasors there must be some participation[54] or concert of action,[55]

Giving mere advice or information to the officer who makes an arrest is not sufficient. Thus a party is not liable to an action for false imprisonment who, seeing a man in custody of a constable for a supposed offense, points out another as the real criminal, and does not direct the constable to take the party into custody. even though unconscious, in the unlawful conduct.[56] All or any number of joint defendants may be responsible.[57] Damages should be assessed not with reference to conduct or motive of the most guilty or most innocent party but according to the whole injury.[58]

3. COMMAND AND RATIFICATION. One who causes an unlawful detention through another is as responsible in law to the person injured as though he personally committed the wrong.[59] It is not now, on general principles,[60] material whether the authority be conferred before or after the commission of the wrong, so far as concerns the fact that liability may attach, however strict the rules of proof as to ratification may be.[61]

4. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT, ETC. — a. In General — (I) ACTUAL AUTHORITY. It is now[62] well settled that liability for false imprisonment may arise from the relationship of principal and agent, master and servant, or employer and See 23 Cent. tit. "False Imprisonment," §§ 62, 66.

A railroad company whose station agent requested a policeman to arrest a disturber in a depot is not liable for the act of the officer in detaining the person arrested for an unreasonable time. Pratt v. Brown, 80 Tex. 608, 16 S. W. 443.

A servant has an implied authority to give a person into custody only when it is necessary to take such a step to protect his master's property. If a servant gives a person into custody, when no such danger exists, the master will not be liable. Abrahams v. Deakin, [1891] 1 Q. B. 516, 60 L. J. Q. B. 238, 55 J. P. 212, 63 L. T. Rep. N. S. 690, 39 Wkly. Rep. 183; Stevens v. Hinshelwood, 53 J. P. 341.

The burden is on plaintiff to prove the employer's express authority to the employee to cause the detention. Mere proof of relationship (Goff v. Great Northern R. Co., 3 E. & E. 672, 7 Jur. N. S. 286, 30 L. J. Q. B. 148, 3 L. T. Rep. N. S. 850, 107 E. C. L. 672), or of agency (Travis v. Standard L., etc., Ins. Co., 86 Mich. 288, 49 N. W.

Others are in harmony with the larger rule of liability generally laid down by recent decisions on other branches of the same general subject,[68] which hold the employer responsible for acts done by an employee in the course of his employment[69] and to a wider interpretation of implied authority.[70] In many of these cases the liability of the employer arises in large measure from his relationship to the person detained.[71]

b. Attorney and Client. An attorney is not responsible for a wrongful arrest, if he is not the legal cause, although he may have been in some way connected with it.[72] The client, apart from participation, can be held accountable for only what is done by his attorney within the line of the latter's duty.[73] Both attorney and client may because of wrongful conduct become joint tort-feasors.[74] Neither is responsible for causing a justifiable arrest.[75]

B. Liability of Persons Complaining — 1. Exoneration on Justified Complaint. The law recognizes no distinct privilege on the part of persons who procure the arrest of others; but in the interest of the administration of justice it does not treat the mere giving of information[76] or the executing or filing of a complaint[77] concerning an offense justifying arrest or punishable by imprison-140), or a clerkship (Flora v. Russell, 138 Ind. 153, 37 N. E. 593; Hawkins v. Manston, 57 Minn. 323, 59 N. W. 309; Hershey v. O'Neill, 36 Fed. 168) is not sufficient.

In case of conductor and passenger, the rule on this point is liberal to the latter. Duggan v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 159 Pa. St. 248, 28 Atl. 182, 39 Am. St. Rep. 672. The decisions grade from one extreme to the other without clear demarcation as to facts or theory or nomenclature. A conclusion can be properly reached in individual cases only by consideration of the larger questions involved. Liability may attach because of his participation if he becomes the instrument of his client in causing an arrest known to be unjustifiable (Burnap v. Marsh, 13 Ill. 539), or if he interposes in directing the arrest (Hunter v. Burtis, 10 Wend. ment[78] as causing an unlawful detention so as to impose responsibility in false imprisonment.[79]

2. Exoneration on Lawful Arrest. A complainant is within the general rule for justification[80] by legal authority[81] and for arrest without warrant.[82]

3. Exoneration From Official Conduct. What magistrates[83] and officers of the law generally[84] may do, acting on their own judgment, responsibility, and initiation,[85] is not to be charged to the complainant,[86] in the absence of con-

B. Judicial Officers — 1. Within Their Jurisdiction. The general rule[7] that all judicial officers are protected by their official character from liability in tort because of public conduct, including their imposition of punishment for contempt,[8] clearly within the pale of their authority, although involving demonstrable legal error,[9] even if malicious and corrupt, is enforced in actions of false imprisonment.[10] The exemption applies to justices of the supreme court,[11] judges of courts of record generally,[12] city magistrates,[13] justices of the peace,[14] and to other judicial

VII. PERSONS IMPRISONED.

A. Persons Non Compotes Mentis. Private persons[37] and officers of the law[38] having reason to believe that another person is so far disordered in his mind as to be dangerous to himself or to others,[39] although not guilty of a crime,[40] are justified in filing an information for his detention[41] or in imposing reasonable restraint upon him,[42] where they act conscientiously, although mistakenly, but not where they are guilty of malice or gross negligence.[43] Valid but not void judicial process is protection for the arrest of a lunatic.[44] In the absence of such justification persons participating in his wrongful detention are liable in damages.[45]

B. Persons Privileged From Arrest. At common law an action for false imprisonment does not lie for the arrest of a privileged person,[46] even where the

A statute authorizing an action in such a case "against the officer or person making the arrest" imposes no liability upon a party or his attorney, at least where they did not suggest or contemplate the arrest of the witness while protected by his privilege; and moreover an action will be treated as one at common law unless it is properly shown in the pleadings or proceedings that plaintiff counts upon the statute. Suitor attending in or returning from court. — Cameron v. Lightfoot, 2 Wm. Bl. 1190. In a qui tam action on a statute forbidding the arrest of a suitor attending in court or while going to or returning from court, it was held that a party who procured a capias to be issued and delivered to a constable with a general direction to arrest was not liable for arrest in violation of the statute when he did not know or have good reason to know that defendant in the capias was at the time privilege from arrest is conferred by statute.[47] His remedy is by motion for his discharge or by habeas corpus.[48]

VIII. DEFENSES.

A. Conventional — 1. Waiver and Estoppel. A plaintiff in an action for false imprisonment may be unable to recover damages because of his own conduct by waiving his rights, or by so conducting himself as to be estopped from seeking judgment for an unlawful detention.[49] There can be no recovery of damages by any person who in any way causes[50] or consents to his own arrest[51] or who acquiesces in its irregularities.[52] The party arrested cannot complain of the con-

a suitor and so privileged from arrest. Sewell v. Lane, Smith (Ind.) 167.

Cases of liability.— Where a statute abolished imprisonment for debt, persons causing another to be arrested on execution were held liable. Bracket v. Eastman, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 32. In Percival v. Jones, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 49, it was held that a plaintiff who should procure an execution or a justice who should issue it without request would be liable for the arrest under it of a person having a family and who was not a freeholder. Where a statute expressly forbade the arrest of a person already under prior arrest, it was held not to be a case of personal privilege, and the party causing a second arrest and the officer making the arrest were liable for false imprisonment. Love v. Humphrey, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 204.

48. Smith v. Jones, 76 Me. 138, 49 Am. Rep. 598; Chase v. Fish, 16 Me. 132.

49. As to waiver of all but compensatory damages see Holmes v. Blyler, 80 Iowa 365, 45 N. W. 756. Motive of plaintiff in committing the wrongful act for which he was unlawfully arrested is, however, immaterial. Fuller v. Redding, 16 Misc. (N. Y.) 634, 39 N. Y. Suppl. 109. And provocation by plaintiff is no defense. Grace v. Dempsey, 75 Wis. 313, 43 N. W. 1127. Return of money coerced from plaintiff by his illegal arrest does not preclude him from recovering damages. Catlin v. Pond, 6 N. Y. St. 762.

Rep. 396 (officer's own fault in not removing books attached, resulting in his being locked in attorney's office); Edmundson v. Frean, 2 Hill (S. C.) 410 (if a warrant, alleged to be illegal, was placed in the hands of an officer at the request of a person against whom it was issued it is no imprisonment); Ellis v. Cleveland, 54 Vt. 437 (wrong place of confinement at prisoner's request). See also supra, IV, B, 2, c.

51. As by giving bail in case of arrest on voidable process instead of moving to set aside the process (Neimitz v. Conrad, 22 Oreg. 164, 29 Pac. 548), by voluntarily remaining in custody, even under a mistaken view of legal conclusions (Warne v. Constant, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 32. See also Moses v. Dubois, Dudley (S. C.) 209; Kibling v. Clark, 53 Vt. 379), by submitting to examination by a magistrate (Carleton v. Akron Sewer Pipe Co., 129 Mass. 40), by paying a penalty rather than standing trial (Twilley v. Perkins, 77 Md. 252, 26 Atl. 286, 39 Am. St. Rep. 408, 19 L. R. A. 632), or by request for discharge, where the ground of complaint is that plaintiff was not taken before a court (Joyce v. Parkhurst, 150 Mass. 243, 22 N. E. 899). Acceptance of discharge may operate as a waiver (Mulherry v. Fuellhart, 203 Pa. St. 573, 53 Atl. 504), but not invariably (Stewart v. Feeley, 118 Iowa 524, 92 N. W. 670). But to constitute consent to arrest there must be more than a forced appearance before the court (Church v. Pearne, 75 Conn. 350, 53 Atl. 955; Buzzell v. Emmerton, 161 Mass. 176, 36 N. E. 796), or pleading not guilty (Palmer v. Maine Cent. R. Co., 92 Me. 399, 42 Atl. 800, 69 Am. St. Rep. 513, 44 L. R. A. 673; Kendall v. Powers, 4 Metc. (Mass.) 553; Blythe v. Tompkins, 2 Abh. Pr. (N. Y.) 468; Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Parker, 29 Tex. Civ. App. 264, 68 S. W. 831. But see Jones v. Foster, 43 N. Y. App. Div. 33, 59 N. Y. Suppl. 738), or pleading guilty (McCullough v. Greenfield, 133 Mich. 463, 95 N. W. 532, 62 L. R. A. 906), or his attorney's stipulation for postponement (Arteaga v. Conner, 46 N. Y. Super. Ct. 91).

52. As by appearing and failing to plead misnomer in execution (Griswold v. Sedgwick, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 456), or to object to want of affidavit or warrant (Williamson v. Wilcox, 63 Miss. 335. And see Joyce v. Parkhurst, 150 Mass. 243, 22 N. E. 899; Caffrey v. Drugan, 144 Mass. 294, 11 N. E. 96), or by voluntary appearance and plea (Jones v. Foster, 43 N. Y. App. Div. 33, 59 N. Y. Suppl. 738. And see Neimitz v. Continuance of a lawful detention occasioned by his own neglect[53] or his incapacity on account of drunkenness or by his own conduct generally.[54]

2. Satisfaction. That the party complaining has been paid in full[55] or that his conduct amounted to a settlement[56] is a full defense to an action for false imprisonment.

3. Statute of Limitations. The time within which an action for false imprisonment may be brought is governed by the statutes of limitation of the several states.[57] It begins to run as soon as the imprisonment ceases,[58] not from the date of imprisonment.[59] The action is barred at the expiration of the period prescribed by the statute, although the proceedings in which the arrest took place be continued within the prescribed time.[60]

B. Judicial Authority — 1. Valid Authority — a. Justification by. An action for false imprisonment does not lie for an imprisonment in due course on regular proceedings of a court having jurisdiction of the offense.[61] If the order or process be valid, the person wrongfully detained must seek his remedy in some other form of action.[62] It is the proper commandment of judicial authority which justifies; the form in which the sanctioning power of the law is manifested is not material.[63] A legally correct and sufficient order of a superior having Richardson v. Dybebahl, 14 S. D. 126, 84 N. W. 486, as to the magistrate before whom he is taken. If an officer gives an arrested person the alternative of paying a certain sum as a penalty or of going to jail instead of taking him to a committing magistrate the officer is liable to the extent of the custody, but if the arrested person pays the penalty prescribed rather than stand trial he cannot complain. Twilley v. Perkins, 77 Md. 252, 26 Atl. 286, 39 Am. St. Rep. 408, 19 L. R. A. 632. But refusal to surrender an infant (Monjo v. Monjo, 53 Hun (N. Y.) 145, 6 N. Y. Suppl. 132) or to answer questions (Rutherford v. Holmes, 66 N. Y. 368 [affirming 5 Hun 317]) is not an estoppel.

Failure to prosecute does not convert an arrest into a trespass ab initio where the prisoner consents to his discharge and the termination of the proceedings. Mulberry v. Fuellhart, 203 Pa. St. 573, 50 Atl. 504.

55. Stone v. Dickinson, 7 Allen (Mass.) 26. See Accord and Satisfaction, 1 Cyc. 305; and, generally, Release. But a release obtained by fraud is no defense. Harris v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 35 Fed. 116.

56. Caffrey v. Drugan, 144 Mass. 294, 11 N. E. 96; Phillips v. Fadden, 125 Mass. 198. Although the party has been discharged on the condition of bringing no action for trespass that does not preclude an action on the case. Macfarlane v. Ellis, 1 F. & F. 288.

Trask v. Wadsworth, 78 Me. 336, 5 Atl. 182; Sibley v. Estabrook, 4 Gray (Mass.) 295.

58. The cause of action is complete when a prisoner is released from actual custody, as by giving bond, and limitations run from that time (Dusenbury v. Keiley, 8 Daly (N. Y.) 537, 58 How. Pr. 286 [affirmed in 85 N. Y. 383, 61 How. Pr. 408]), or where a person arrested gives certain notes payable at different times, and upon the execution of the notes is released, the statute of limitations runs from time of release, not from time of payment of the last note (Pratt v. Page, 18 Wis. 337).

When no justification.—Legal process is no justification to a person not therein authorized to arrest. American Express Co. v. Patterson, 73 Ind. 430 (warrant to any constable does not justify a special constable); Wells v. Jackson, 3 Munf. (Va.) 458 (a person not named in warrant and not a sworn officer). And only de jure officers are protected. Pooler v. Reed, 73 Me. 129.

"A person who has arrested a party without process, or on void process, wrongfully, cannot detain him on valid process, until he has restored such party to the condition he was in at time of his arrest, at least to his liberty." Mandeville v. Guernsey, 51 Barb. (N. Y.) 99, 102, per Smith, J.

81. An officer is liable for arresting the person of a judgment debtor when he has property openly and visibly in possession subject to levy. Blakely v. Weaver, 10 N. Y. St. 793.

82. An officer is not justified in forcibly breaking an outer door of plaintiff's dwelling in order to arrest him on civil process. Stedman v. Crane, 11 Metc. (Mass.) 295.

Bail arresting his principal is liable for false imprisonment if guilty of unnecessary violence. Pease v. Burt, 3 Day (Conn.) 485.

Evidence of violence of a mob committed in parts adjacent, although out of view of plaintiff in his home, if they appeared to be connected with the same purpose as actuated those about the house, was held to be admissible to show the danger and difficulty of executing a warrant by force against plaintiff in his own house, and thus to justify the amount of force used in the lawful execution of the warrant. Burdett v. Colman, 14 East 163, 12 Rev. Rep. 478.

83. Dehm v. Heinman, 56 Conn. 320, 15 Atl. 741, 1 L. R. A. 374; Hann v. Lloyd, 50 N. J. L. 1, 11 Atl. 346. Refusal to show the warrant to an arrested person may destroy its effect as justification. Frost v. Thomas, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 418. But refusal of an arresting officer to go with the person ar-therein[84] within the jurisdiction,[85] by taking him before a magistrate therein named,[86] or by confining him in the proper place[87] and for the time[88] fixed by law.

(II) Arrest of Wrong Person. If the wrong person be arrested, although he was the person against whom the process was intended to be issued,[89] unless because of his own fault,[90] prima facie the officer making the arrest is liable, notwithstanding an innocent mistake.[91] The liability of him who started the law in motion depends primarily upon his participation in the arrest. If because of mistaken resemblance he personally directs the arrest of the wrong person he is liable for false imprisonment.[92]

(III) Rearrest. The unauthorized discharge,[93] or the escape,[94] or voluntary rested to see parties to go on his bail is not illegal. Calderone v. Kiernan, 23 R. I. 578, 51 Atl. 215.

84. Hubbard v. Garfield, 102 Mass. 72. Arrest of a director of a corporation on an execution against the corporation is not justified. Nichols v. Thomas, 4 Mass. 232. But see Richmond v. Willis, 13 Gray (Mass.) 182. Justification has been extended to an officer who according to his precept arrests a person privileged from arrest. Chase v. Fish, 16 Me. 132 (a state senator); Carle v. Delesdernier, 13 Me. 363, 29 Am. Dec. 508; Tarlton v. Fisher, Dougl. (3d ed.) 671. See also supra, VII, B.

85. An arrest in one county under a warrant issued by a justice of the peace in another county is unjustified. Krug v. Ward, 77 Ill. 603; Francisco v. State, 24 N. J. L. 30; Green v. Rumsey, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 611. Unless the party arrested has fled from the proper county both the officer and the person procuring the writ are liable. Krug v. Ward, supra, a case of a criminal warrant. Warrant is no justification for arrest in an intermediate county of a person being taken from one place to another place under legal process. Love v. Humphrey, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 204.

86. Stetson v. Packer, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 562.

87. Commitment in a different county (Clayton v. Scott, 45 Vt. 386, mandate to commit in another county no defense; Green v. Rumsey, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 611), or removal to a state other than the one in which the crime was committed (Burlingham v. Wylee, 2 Root (Conn.) 152. See also Mandeville v. Guernsey, 51 Barb. (N. Y.) 99) in the absence of a common-law justification, as for purposes of examining into identity (Wolf v. Perryman, 82 Tex. 112, 17 S. W. 772. Compare Green v. Rumsey, supra) or at prisoner's own request (Ellis v. Cleveland, 54 Vt. 437) or under a statute authorizing the removal (Barclay v. Goodale, 2 Fed. Cas. No. 972) creates liability. As to proper place of confinement of prisoners by United States marshals see Clinton v. Nelson, 2 Utah 284.

88. When the time of detention is fixed by statute, detention for a longer time creates responsibility for false imprisonment. Barclay v. Goodale, 2 Fed. Cas. No. 972. The rule is the same in case of arrest of the wrong person having the same name as the person whose arrest is authorized, and a fortiori this is the rule where the person arrested wrongfully is taken into another county. Wolf v. Perryman, 82 Tex. 112, 17 S. W. 772. A sheriff arresting the wrong person on description furnished by the sheriff of another county having a warrant is liable. Filer v. Smith, 96 Mich. 347, 55 N. W. 999, 35 Am. St. Rep. 603.

92. Maliniemi v. Gronlund, 92 Mich. 222, 52 N. W. 627, 31 Am. St. Rep. 576. But he is not responsible for the mistake of the clerk of his attorney, who procured the writ, in identifying the person arrested (Gearon v. Savings Bank, 50 N. Y. Super. Ct. 264, 6 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 207), nor for error of the arresting officer in failing to arrest only "vile and improper persons" as directed by the court (Briggs v. Berls, 2 N. Y. City Ct. 171), nor for the error of a justice in issuing a writ against the body of the wrong person who was discharged on complainant's motion (Taylor v. Trask, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 249).

Assisting a known officer, upon request, may, however, justify even if the officer mistakes the person to be arrested. McMahan v. Green, 34 Vt. 69, 80 Am. Dec. 665.

93. Letcher v. Crandell, 18 Tex. Civ. App. 62, 44 S. W. 197. Compare Gaines v. Newbrough, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 466, 34 S. W. 1048; Karner v. Stump, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 460, 34 S. W. 656.

94. Strong v. Ives, 1 Root (Conn.) 388, warrant. Even if effected without the restrictions imposed on his original arrest, as where, although the original writ was civil release by the officer[95] of the person in custody does not prevent justification upon rearrest while the legal authority is still in force. When the original authority has been legally terminated a second imprisonment is justified only[96] by subsequent valid process.[97]

2. Void Process. Written authority to detain resulting from any judicial proceeding void on its face[98] is no protection to the justice issuing it,[99] to the officer executing it,[1] to persons instrumental in procuring its issuance,[2] or to persons assisting officers in its execution[3] or participating therein.[4] process the rearrest was on Sunday (Anonymous, 6 Mod. 231), or by breaking an outer door in fresh pursuit (Genner v. Sparks, 6 Mod. 173, 1 Salk. 79, Foster C. C. 320), or where the person was privileged from original arrest (Ex p. Lyne, 3 Stark. 132, 3 E. C. L. 624). And the same rule applies where bail arrests his principal. Anonymous, supra (on Sunday); Ex p. Lyne, 3 Stark. 132, 3 E. C. L. 624 (witness taken by bail on returning from court).

Before actual default by sureties a rearrest by the sheriff was held to be without justification. Arteaga v. Conner, 46 N. Y. Super. Ct. 91.

95. Langdon v. Chittington, 2 Root (Conn.) 133 (final process); Aldrich v. Weeks, 62 Vt. 89, 19 Atl. 115 (mesne process). After arrest on mesne process and voluntary escape rearrest is justified. See Arrest, 3 Cyc. 974. The authorities are in conflict as to whether the same rule applies to final process. See Executions, 17 Cyc. 1569, 1570. Allowance of reasonable liberty does not constitute a voluntary escape. Butler v. Washburn, 25 N. H. 251. See also Stevens v. Manson, 87 Me. 436, 32 Atl. 1002.

96. Where a prisoner arrested on a warrant has been discharged he cannot be rearrested on the same warrant. Doyle v. Russell, 30 Barb. (N. Y.) 300; Bagnall v. Ableman, 4 Wis. 163, discharge on habeas corpus.

97. An alias precept protects (Barnes v. Viall, 6 Fed. 661; Nason v. Sewall, Brayt. (Vt.) 119. But see Pierson v. Gale, 8 Vt. 509, 30 Am. Dec. 487) and another capias ad satisfaciendum (Pickard v. Bills, Wright (Ohio) 344).

98. The rule applies to judicial proceedings before any committing magistrate (Vredenburgh v. Hendricks, 17 Barb. (N. Y.) 179), to proceedings to collect taxes (Jacques v. Parks, 96 Me. 268, 52 Atl. 763), to equitable cases (Scoggin v. Taylor, 13 Ark. 380, writ of ne exeat issued by a master in chancery without legal authority), to orders generally (Kilbourn v. Thompson, 103 U. S. 168, 26 L. ed. 377, void order of federal house of representatives committing witness for contempt no protection to sergeant at arms executing it), and to proceedings to collect debts (Webber v. Kenny, 1 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 345; Escurix v. Daboval, 7 La. 575, a creditor liable for the arrest of his debtor on process illegally issued or executed; Winslow v. Hathaway, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 211; Vredenburgh v. Hendricks, 17 Barb. (N. Y.) 179; Pierson v. Gale, 8 Vt. 509, 30 Am. Dec. 487; Barnes v. Viall, 6 Fed. 661, unauthorized arrest after discharge).

Warrant negativing crime.— A warrant of arrest for obtaining goods on false pretenses which states that the relator well knew the falsity of such pretenses is bad upon its face, and the officer serving it is liable for false imprisonment. Lueck v. Heisler, 87 Wis. 644, 58 N. W. 1101.

99. A warrant void on its face and issued in good faith is no protection, although the justice had before him sufficient evidence upon which to issue a valid warrant. Blythe v. Tompkins, 2 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 468.

1. Ministerial officers generally must see that the process executed by them is valid on its face or they will be liable for their acts thereunder. Gorton v. Frizzell, 20 Ill. 291 (a sheriff); Elsemore v. Longfellow, 76 Me. 128; Vinton v. Weaver, 41 Me. 430; Blythe v. Tompkins, 2 Abb. Pr. (N. 3. Voidable Process — a. Within Jurisdiction. An officer is protected in the service of process, issued by a court having jurisdiction and appearing upon its face to be regular and valid, even if it is fraudulently and irregularly issued[5] or if the preliminary proceedings on which it is based are insufficient or irregular,[6] or if in some cases[7] he know[8] or be advised[9] of facts which render it void, in the absence of conscious participation in its wrongful procurement.[10] A voidable judgment[11] and execution[12] have also been held sufficient to justify.[13]

b. Want of Jurisdiction. Legal process, issued by courts of general or of limited jurisdiction[14] which is regular on its face justifies its proper enforcement, although void in fact for want of jurisdiction,[15] at least in the absence of notice.[16]

4. Invalid Enactments. As to liability for imprisonment for violation of an unconstitutional statute or ordinance the authorities are in conflict, while it has been held that a court can derive no jurisdiction to act in such a case,[17] and that the magistrate issuing process for arrest,[18] and a fortiori officers executing process or persons otherwise participating in the proceeding[19] are liable, the weight of authority is that the court has jurisdiction to determine the question of constitutionality and therefore that the person making complaint to a magistrate,[20] the magistrate issuing a warrant,[21] or an officer serving process fair on its face[22] is not liable. Nor does a municipal corporation incur liability on account of the enforcement by officers or magistrates of an unconstitutional ordinance.[23]

5. Validity of Process — a. Form. In the absence of statutory prescription as to form, a warrant good at common law justifies.[24] Where, however, a statute applies, the process must conform to its essential requirements.[25] It should be reasonably full and specific.[26] The protection from liability which is afforded by process is not destroyed by any mere irregularity[27] or by informality in the process itself.[28]

b. Contents — (i) NAME OF PERSON ARRESTED. At common law,[29] and in some instances also by statutory or constitutional provision,[30] warrants of arrest both in civil[31] and in criminal cases[32] must specifically and correctly name or describe the person to be arrested, and if they fail so to do they afford no justification for making the arrest. If a warrant omits the christian name of defendant,[33] or if it directs the arrest of a person under a fictitious name or the arrest of persons "unknown,"[34] it affords no protection,[35] unless, as is sometimes the case,[36] a statute authorizes warrants in that form.

(ii) CAUSE OF COMMITMENT. A warrant must sufficiently set forth[37] the no protection. Grumon v. Raymond, 1 Conn. 40, 6 Am. Dec. 200. Where if illegal allegations were expunged little but blank paper would be left the warrant affords no protection. Elsemore v. Longfellow, 76 Me. 128. As to the sufficiency of warrants generally see CRIMINAL LAW, 12 Cyc. 299 et seq.

A mere verbal authority for arrest ordinarily affords the person obeying it no protection. Odell v. Schroeder, 58 Ill. 353; Donovan v. Jones, 36 N. H. 246. But it may be otherwise under construction of particular statutes. Forrist v. Leavitt, 52 N. H. 481.

32. See cases cited in CRIMINAL LAW, 12 Cyc. 300 notes 35, 36.

A misnomer in the warrant of the person to be arrested ordinarily destroys its efficacy as a justification. Cooter v. Bronson, 67 Barb. (N. Y.) 444 (arrest of "C. C." is not justified by warrant demanding arrest of "M. C."); Miller v. Foley, 28 Barb. (N. Y.) 630 (arrest of "John R." under warrant, reciting complaint against "John R.," but directing the arrest of "William" is not a justification); Scott v. Ely, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 555; Ryburn v. Moore, 72 Tex. 85, 10 S. W. 393 (capias for arrest of "Charley" did not justify arrest of "Charles F." who insisted upon innocence); Formwalt v. Hylton, 66 Tex. 288, 1 S. W. 376; Barnette v. Hicks, 6 Tex. 352; Landrum v. Wells, 7 Tex. Civ. App. 625, 26 S. W. 1001; West v. Cabell, 153 U. S. 78, 14 S. Ct. 752, 38 L. ed. 643 (warrant to arrest "James" does not justify arrest of "V. M." or "Vandy" who was never known as "James," although he was the person in mind when the warrant was issued). But it may be otherwise where the person arrested was known by the one name as well as by the other. Griswold v. Sedgwick, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 126; Mead v. Haws, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 332.

33. Prell v. McDonald, 7 Kan. 426, 12 Am. Rep. 423. 37. A warrant of arrest for larceny is void where both complaint and warrant fail to state that the article stolen had any value, cause of commitment[38] or the nature of[39] a public offense for which an arrest is properly commanded[40] and the substance of the offense charged,[41] and show the magistrate's authority to order such arrest.[42]

(III) COMMAND TO ARREST. A criminal warrant is more than a mere license or permit; it must contain a command or requirement in the nature thereof to the person to whom it is directed to make the arrest.[43]

c. Return. The warrant, to justify, must be regularly returned.[44] The propriety of the return actually made is to be considered in the light of consent to it by the arrested person.[45]

C. Public Authority Without Process — 1. JUSTIFICATION IN GENERAL. When an arrest is made without warrant[46] justification can of course be made out only[47] by showing facts and circumstances[48] which constitute legal authority under common-law rules[49] or statutory enactments,[50] authorizing the arrest, in the degree of punishment depending on the value. Frazier v. Turner, 76 Wis. 562, 45 N. W. 411. But compare Payne v. Barnes, 5 Barb. (N. Y.) 465.

arresting,[57] or where there is reasonable ground for apprehending that the arrested person is about to commit a breach of the peace,[58] or a well founded apprehension of its continuance[59] or of its renewal.[60]

b. For Felony. To justify a private individual in making an arrest for felony, he must sufficiently plead and prove: (1) That a felony had been committed,[61] and (2) that there was reasonable ground for believing of his own knowledge that the person arrested was guilty thereof,[62] or that the felony was committed in his presence.[63]

c. Authorizing Arrest. A private person will be protected in giving another in charge of an officer without process, only within the limits of the law which would justify the arrest by such person himself;[64] but his responsibility is confined to his connection as cause of the wrong.[65]

Mistaken identity.—It is doubtful whether, in an action for false imprisonment, mere personal resemblance between plaintiff and the person who had committed the felony can afford reasonable ground of suspicion, justifying an arrest without a warrant. But at all events the plea will fail unless either defendant himself saw the felony committed, or unless the person who saw it and on whose information he acted spoke positively to the identity. d. Assisting Officer. A person who assists an officer in the performance of his legal duty, although without process,[66] is justified at least,[67] whenever the officer would be justified. It cannot be unlawful to take part in a lawful act.[68] But if the justification of the arrest itself fails, the officer and those who aid or abet him may also be liable.[69] The justification extends to assistance rendered the officer at his request, although that officer by subsequent conduct becomes a trespasser.[70] Justification exists only in respect of a known peace officer, authorized to arrest; persons are bound to know his authority, and if he is a trespasser for want of it persons assisting him are liable.[71]

3. Arrest by Peace Officer — a. For Felony. A peace officer is justified in arrests made without warrant in cases of felony,[72] alike whether he acts on his own knowledge or upon sufficient information derived from others,[73] if it be shown that the person arrested was reasonably suspected of guilt.[74] He may so be justified also where a felony has been actually, or is being, or is about to be, made,[93] the condition of the person arrested,[94] and the extent of possible inquiry, as to facts and circumstances.[95]

(11) DISCHARGE OR CONVICTION. Voluntary dismissal of proceedings on which plaintiff was arrested,[96] or his discharge from arrest,[97] or his acquittal after trial or examination[98] is presumptive evidence of want of probable cause for his arrest, but is not invariably fatal to justification by probable cause.[99] A final conviction on the charge for which the arrest was made[1] sufficiently shows probable cause.[2]

Miscellaneous facts.— But an unverified rumor charging crime to an innocent person (Somerville v. Richards, 37 Mich. 299), a letter written by the chief of police in another city (Malcomson v. Scott, 56 Mich. 459, 23 N. W. 166), a claim of commission of crime in another state (Wells v. Johnston, 52 La. Ann. 713, 27 So. 185), or the advice of a police officer (Barth v. Heider, 6 D. C. 312. See also McCarthy v. De Armit, 99 Pa. St. 63) may not alone constitute justification. The information that will justify the making of a criminal complaint and relieve the party from liability for false imprisonment must be of such character and obtained from such sources that business men generally, of ordinary care, prudence, and discretion, would act upon it under similar circumstances. specific order, the usual rules as to justification by probable cause and as to mitigation of damages apply.[31]

3. Maritime Authority. The right of maritime officials to arrest private persons may be derived from authority: (1) To enforce discipline aboard ship,[32] within reasonable limits;[33] (2) to capture and arrest jure belli or quasi jure belli;[34] and (3) to enforce generally process in prescribed form.[35]

4. Direction of Superior. The mere direction of a superior officer does not necessarily impose a legal duty; where it fails to do so it does not exonerate.[36]

IX. ACCRUAL OF RIGHT OF ACTION.

An action for false imprisonment is prematurely brought unless the suit in which the writ issued has terminated.[37] It may lie, however, irrespective of such a termination,[38] whereas malicious prosecution necessarily presupposes a previous judicial proceeding and its termination favorably to defendant therein.[39]

X. FORM OF ACTION AND JOINDER OF ACTIONS.

A. Form of Action. The form of action in which damages for a false imprisonment are recovered at common law and ordinarily under statutory modification is a distinctive personal trespass;[40] it is neither trespass vi et armis for assault and battery,[41] nor trespass quare clausum fregit,[42] nor trespass on the case for any form of malicious wrong.[43] before a magistrate and there discharged, false imprisonment lies for detention until discharge; thereafter malicious prosecution. Austin v. Dowling, L. R. 5 C. P. 534, 39 L. J. C. P. 260, 22 L. T. By statute in Michigan (Howell St. § 7759) an action on the case lies for false imprisonment (Moore v. Thompson, 92 Mich. 498, 52 N. W. 1000), and also in Virginia (Parsons v. Harper, 16 Gratt. 64).

41. False imprisonment will often lie upon circumstances which include also an assault and battery. People v. Wheeler, 73 Cal. 252, 14 Pac. 796; Pease v. Burt, 3 Day (Conn.) 485; McNay v. Stratton, 9 Ill. App. 215; Rauma v. Lamont, 82 Minn. 477, 85 N. W. 236. C. 483, 5 Tyrw. 481, 25 E. C. L. 640). Allegations that defendants entered plaintiff's house and arrested her and another, and that they forcibly removed her therefrom and took her to jail, constitute only one cause of action. Exner v. Exner, 2 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 108.

42. False imprisonment being a wrong to the person as distinguished from property, trespass quare clausum fregit is not the proper form of action. Sawyer v. Ryan, 13 Metc. (Mass.) 144, where plaintiff's allegation that defendants broke and entered his dwelling and imprisoned him was held to make out a case only of trespass to land.

43. The damage being immediate, direct, and presumed by law from the mere fact of violation of a right without affirmative proof of actual harm, the form of action was not trespass on the case.

Distinguished from other malicious wrongs. — False imprisonment is correspondingly different from malicious wrongs other than malicious prosecution. As to malicious abuse of criminal process see Wood v. Graves, 144 Mass. 365, 11 N. E. 567, 59 Am. Rep. 95. As to action for malicious arrest see Stanfield v. Phillips, 78 Pa. Primarily the distinction is because the substance of false imprisonment is unlawful de-

B. Joinder With Malicious Prosecution. The same set of facts may give rise to two distinct causes of action, the one in false imprisonment, the other in malicious prosecution, in which case the wrong-doer may be liable in separate actions[44] or to one action in which there may be two counts, one in false imprisonment and one in malicious prosecution as originally pleaded, or on amendment before the statute of limitations, bars the right to amend.[45]

XI. PLEADING.

A. Declaration or Complaint — 1. Sufficiency in General. A declaration or complaint in false imprisonment is sufficient[46] in law only when in compliance with common-law rules[47] substantially reënacted by practice statutes[48] it alleges facts[49] as distinguished from conclusions[50] concisely,[51] sufficiently setting forth the detention[52] of the party endeavoring to recover by the person sought to be tention in fact (see supra, II, A; IV, A) so far as the right to recover is concerned (see supra, XIII); whereas malice is of the essence of the other wrongs (see infra, VIII, C, 4) and also because of the requirement in the latter of a previous legal proceeding terminating favorably to the person seeking damages, as in malicious arrest. Murson v. Austin, 2 Phila. (Pa.) 116.

A complaint alleging intent to injure, detention for an hour without reasonable cause, or authority against the will of plaintiff is not demurrable. Bonnet v. Wanamaker, 34 Misc. (N. Y.) 591, 70 N. Y. Suppl. 372.

50. Mere use of words like "wrongful," "unlawfully," or "maliciously" does not sufficiently plead facts. Going v. Dinwiddie, 86 Cal. 633, 25 Pac. 129; Harness v. Steele, 159 Ind. 286, 64 N. E. 875 (that plaintiff was unlawfully imprisoned); Efroymson v. Smith, 29 Ind. App. 451, 63 N. Ct. 282, 17 N. Y. Suppl. 372 (both holding that arrest was maliciously procured).

Want of probable cause.— Considerable liberality has been permitted in allegations of want of probable cause. Woodall v. McMillan, 38 Ala. 622; Akin v. Newell, 32 Ark. 605; Nixon v. Reeves, 65 Minn. 159, 67 N. W. 989, 33 L. R. A. 506.

charged as a legal cause,[53] against his will[54] and illegally,[55] in the absence of allegations of fact giving rise to a presumption of lawfulness of the imprisonment.[56] It has been held that if plaintiff alleges malice and want of probable cause, although unnecessary, he must prove those elements.[57]

2. Denial of Legal Authority. When a complaint in false imprisonment does not show on its face an arrest made under color of legal authority it need not anticipate a defense by denial of power to arrest nor allege that the imprisonment was malicious or without probable cause;[58] but when its own allegations involve an assertion of such power, not appearing to be void,[59] it is demurrable in the absence of allegations of fact showing a liability notwithstanding.[60]

53. Barfield v. Turner, 101 N. C. 357, 8 S. E. 115.

Sufficient and insufficient allegations.— For a sufficient allegation of cause in the alternative (see West v. Tyler, 2 Coldw. (Tenn.) 96); for an insufficient one (see Force v. Probasco, 43 N. J. L. 539). For a sufficient allegation of conspiracy see Exner v. Exner, 2 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 108. For a sufficient allegation against the proprietor of a store for the arrest of a customer see Fogarty v. Wanamaker, 60 N. Y. App. Div. 433, 69 N. Y. Suppl. 883; Bingham v. Lipman, 40 Oreg. 363, 67 Pac. 98, not bad for duplicity.

55. Warren v. Dennett, 17 Misc. (N. Y.) 86, 39 N. Y. Suppl. 830, unnecessary to allege conclusions.

56. Barker v. Anderson, 81 Mich. 508. 45 N. W. 1108. But in the absence of such allegations imprisonment is prima facie presumed to be unlawful. People v. McGrew, 77 Cal. 570, 20 Pac. 92; Burch v. Franklin, 7 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 519; Kirbie v. State, 5 Tex. App. 60.

Rep. 735; Parsons v. Harper, 16 Gratt. (Va.) 64. But the presence of such allegations does not necessarily convert the complaint into one for malicious prosecution or in the nature thereof (Davis v. Sanders, 133 Ala. 275, 32 So. 499; Ragsdale v. Bowles, 16 Ala. 62; Reynolds v. Price, 56 S. Suppl. 59; Bonnet v. Wanamaker, 34 Misc. (N. Y.) 591, 70 N. Y. Suppl. 372). Where the gist of the action on fair interpretation of the whole pleading is false imprisonment, an allegation of probable cause is immaterial. Johnson v. Von Kettler, 84 Ill. 315. But where the complaint sets forth an arrest maliciously and without probable cause, imprisonment, and acquittal, and does not allege absence of a warrant or irregularity or illegality in a warrant it shows that malicious prosecution and not false imprisonment lies. Haskins v. Ralston, 69 Mich. 63, 37 N. W. 45, 13 Am. St. Rep. 376. justify detention for a time prima facie unreasonable,[73] so as to identify the arrest justified with the arrest complained of[74] in sufficient and appropriate terms,[75] and without duplicity.[76] It must show as many distinct occasions of justification as there are charges of trespass in the counts of the declaration.[77]

3. MITIGATION OF DAMAGES. Defendant may properly plead facts in mitigation of damages in his answer,[78] even if the complaint states facts entitling plaintiff to exemplary damages.[79] But the plea of general issue has been held sufficient to admit proof of such matters.[80]

C. Replication. A replication to a plea of judicial authority to make the arrest[81] is demurrable if it fails sufficiently to allege facts destroying the validity of such authority,[82] or if it merely avers an abuse of process for which an action on the case might lie.[83] The replication may cure a defect in the answer.[84]

A. Burden of Proof. The burden rests on plaintiff to establish affirmatively

As to justification of arrest for felony by officer see Gambill v. Schmuck, 131 Ala. 321, 31 So. 604; Edger v. Burke, 96 Md. 715, 54 Atl. 986. If the arrest be pursuant to information the plea must allege that the informant stated the facts by which he knew or believed plaintiff to be guilty. Wasson v. Canfield, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 406. If the informant be defendant the answer to a complaint alleging arrest with malice and without probable cause, pleading arrest by an officer for reasonable cause, is insufficient unless it denies that the arrest was made at defendant's request without justifiable belief of guilt. legality[91] and of exoneration of defendant from responsibility for the alleged imprisonment.[92]

B. Admissibility — 1. In General. When any evidence is admissible in an action of false imprisonment[93] its reception is governed by usual rules as to competency[94] and materiality.[95]

2. Malice and Want of Probable Cause. In an action for false imprisonment the party asking damages need not ordinarily prove want of probable cause or malice on the part of the party sought to be charged to entitle him to recover;[96] nor can he when a justification is made out by defendant.[97] But when justification is in issue, or when such justification is not made out, or the justification is qualified, malice or want of probable cause on the part of defendant[98] may be

Y.) 555) or for any other reason failed of justification, as that he was not guilty of the contempt for which he was committed (Miller v. Adams, 7 Lans. (N. Y.) 131 [affirmed in 52 N. Y. 409]) or that he was privileged from arrest (Brown v. Robertson, 1 Fed. Cas. No. 2,027, 1 Hayw. & H. 134), or that plaintiff had property subject to execution and constable had notice (Barhydt v. Valk, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 145, 27 Am. Dec. 124). As to inability to overcome protection by process valid on its face see Williams v. Ivey, 37 Ala. 244. False imprisonment is sufficiently shown, although plaintiff had the same name as a person named in an indictment for murder, for killing a negro, although he had stated that he had killed a negro where he proved that he had never been in the county. Wolf v. Perryman, 82 Tex. 112, 17 S. W. 772. A plaintiff is not bound to show notice of bail in a suit for an arrest in a bailable proceeding. Chapman v. Dyett, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 31, 25 Am. Dec. 598.

93. See infra, XII, B, 5.

94. See Evidence, 16 Cyc. 821. Defendant may show conversations of third party to show that the latter did not induce defendant to arrest plaintiff, to rebut plaintiff's evidence that he did. Livingston v. Burroughs, 33 Mich. 511. Parol evidence is admissible where order of arrest is lost. Teagarden v. Graham, 31 Ind. 422. The fact of imprisonment may be shown by proof of circumstances (Frost v. De Lury, 54 N. Y. Super. Ct. 113), not by opinions, or conclusions (Cant v. Parsons, 6 C. & P. 504, 25 E. C. L. 547). But defendant has been allowed to rebut malice by showing that his detective never before accused wrongly of theft. Woodward v. Ragland, 5 App. Cas. (D. C.) 220.

95. Testimony which is not shown to be material (Bennett v. Eddy, 120 Mich. 300, 79 N. W. 481; Witt v. Haun, 1 Heisk. (Tenn.) 160), as communication between defendant and plaintiff's attorneys in another case (Marks v. Sullivan, 9 Utah 12, 33 Pac. 224), or that plaintiff had sufficient funds to pay a small fine and avoid confinement (Barker v. Anderson, 81 Mich. 508, 45 N. W. 1108), or that defendant has license to keep a boarding-house or right to retain a trunk for attempt to take which plaintiff was arrested (Isaacs v. Flahive, 14 Misc. (N. Y.) 249, 35 N. Y. Suppl. 716), or that defendant properly endeavored to enforce an ordinance (Fuller v. Redding, 13 N. Y. App. Div. 61, 43 N. Y. Suppl. 96), or that defendant kept a bawdy-house and after arrest assaulted defendant (Neal v. Peevey, 39 Ark. 337), or that defendant committed a similar offense at another place (Bell v. Day, 9 Kan. App. 111, 57 Pac. 1054), or a settlement between plaintiff and defendant of a prosecution for felony (Van Voorhes v. Leonard, 1 Thomps. & C. (N. Y.) 148), or evidence not limited to the period involved (Bennett v. Eddy, 120 Mich. 300, 79 N. W. 481), or which concerns collateral issues, as of defendant's innocence of a crime charged by plaintiff's letter (Grace v. Dempsey, 75 Wis. 313, 43 N. W. 1127), or recovery, on an insurance policy issued to insured by the person arrested for arson (Philadelphia F. Assoc. v. Fleming, 78 Ga. 733, 3 S. E. 420), or excessive bond for release given by parties defendant unless shown to have been concerned in fixing the penalty (Montgomery v. Sutton, 58 Iowa 697, 12 N. W. 719; Bennett v. Eddy, 120 Mich. 300, 79 N. W. 481), or irrelevant circumstances (Golibart v. Sullivan, 30 Ind. App. 428, 66 N. E. 188; Wait v. Green, 5 Park. Cr. (N. Y.) 185; Holz v. Rediske, 116 Wis. 353, 92 N. W. 1105) is not admissible.

98. Defendant may not show conduct of prisoner as evidence of malice on his part. Josselyn v. McAllister, 22 Mich. 300. Defendant cannot disprove his malice by showing conduct of plaintiff of which he had no proved and disproved[99] by facts and circumstances,[1] but not by mere conclusions or opinions.[2]

3. Character of Plaintiff. The character of the person seeking damages in false imprisonment is not ordinarily in issue so far as mere right to recover is concerned,[3] but may be made the subject of controversy and the basis of testimony where general reputation for truth and veracity is attacked;[4] where the extent of recovery of damages involves its consideration;[5] and where an attempted justification of arrest without express legal authority is sought to be proved by reasonable grounds for suspicion of plaintiff's guilt.[6]

4. Acts and Admissions. Plaintiff may prove that defendant is responsible for knowledge or information when he made the affidavit on which the arrest was based; or facts having no bearing on the facts stated in affidavit; nor matters ex post facto. Josselyn v. McAllister, 25 Mich. 45.

the wrong by the acts, declarations, and admissions of defendant[7] or of one coöperating with him,[8] or of his employee[9] fairly bearing upon the tortious conduct.[10] Defendant may similarly disprove his connection with the alleged wrong[11] and may prove the acts and admissions of plaintiff to show justification other than process[12] or to mitigate damages.[13]

5. RECORD AND PROCEEDINGS. The duly authenticated record of the proceeding involving the alleged imprisonment[14] is competent evidence either for plaintiff[15] or for defendant justifying by legal process.[16] The defense of justification by warrant may be proved on the trial by the warrant itself.[17] The return of a

A plaintiff turned over to an officer having a legal warrant for his arrest can recover from the time of illegal detention to the time of such delivery. Cabell v. Arnold, (Tex. Civ. App. 1893) 22 S. W. 62. See also McCullough v. Greenfield, 133 Mich. 463, 95 N. W. 532, 62 L. R. A. 906. There can be no recovery for time while remaining in prison limits (Allen v. Shed, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 375) or within the county in accordance with the terms of a bail-bond (Fuller v. Bowker, 11 Mich. 204). Abuse of authority may, however, make the wrong-doer a trespasser ab initio and create a responsibility for part of the conduct which but for such abuse would have been justified. Kirby v. Denby, 2 Gale 31, 5 L. J. Ex. 162, 1 M. & W. 336, 1 Tyrw. & G. 688. Defendant is answerable for all ordinary acts of a policeman including more severity than the occasion required (Edgell v. Francis, 4 Jur. 366, 9 L. J. C. P. 233, 1 M. & G. 222, 1 Scott N. R. 118, 39 E. C. L. 729) but only for the time of illegal detention (Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Parker, 29 Tex. Civ. App. 264, 68 S. W. 831).

2. Character and Condition of Parties. The law considers, in its endeavor to compensate justly for wrong done, when the pleadings lay sufficient foundation therefor,[33] injury to character and reputation,[34] having due reference to the circumstances and condition of the party wronged[35] and of the wrong-doer.[36]

3. Attorneys' Fees and Expenses. Expenses, counsel fees, and costs necessarily incurred because of the false imprisonment may be considered in the jury's estimate, even though no bad faith, litigious conduct, or unnecessary trouble be shown.[37]

C. Mitigated Damages. It is sometimes laid down as a rule that vindictive damages may, but that actual damages may not, be mitigated by proof of the wrong-doer's good faith and absence of malice,[38] by his personal courtesy,[39] or by proof of plaintiff's own misconduct.[40] The extent of the sufferer's compensation, 33. Only when specially pleaded. Bergeron v. Peyton, 106 Wis. 377, 82 N. W. 291, 80 Am. St. Rep. 33.

Bad character of plaintiff cannot be shown merely to mitigate damages (Winebiddle v. Porterfield, 9 Pa. St. 137; Russell v. Shuster, 8 Watts & S. (Pa.) 308; Ryburn v. Moore, 72 Tex. 85, 10 S. W. 393. Compare Wasson v. Canfield, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 406), where plaintiff disclaims any damages for injury to his character (Smith v. Hyndman, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 554).

35. Thus the injured party may be entitled to have considered his physical condition (Ahern v. Collins, 39 Mo. 145) and his own situation in life and the manner in which he was traveling when arrested (Dougherty v. Gilbert, Tapp. (Ohio) 38), but not that he had a family (Bergeron v. Peyton, 106 Wis. 377, 82 N. Provocation may mitigate exemplary damages (Petit v. Colmery, 4 Pennew. (Del.) 266, 55 Atl. 344), as refusal to sign name on mileage book of passenger (Palmer v. Maine Cent.

however, according to many authorities, is to be determined in the light of mitigating circumstances negativing malice and showing reasonable ground for the wrong done,[41] and showing that the person sought to be charged acted in good faith on purported but insufficient legal authority,[42] or that the person seeking recovery was guilty of misconduct,[43] or that he was guilty of the offense for which he was legally arrested, where the ground of action is detention for an unreasonable time.[44] Plaintiff's general bad reputation may serve to mitigate damages.[45]

D. Aggravated Damages. Damages may be aggravated [46] by the circumstances of arrest,[47] trial,[48] or commitment,[49] or by publication of newspaper accounts.[50]

(Ky.) 687, evidence of the declarations of plaintiff that he had committed a felony or evidence which tended to show that defendant in making the arrest was prompted by honest motives and no ill-will to plaintiff is admissible. In false imprisonment as in slander honest intent and mistake will constitute mitigation. Dunlevy v. Wolferman, 106 Mo. App. 46, 79 S. W. 1165. Thus where a private person makes an arrest under circumstances which do not justify him, but would justify an officer, he should be held to pay reasonable and fair damages, according to the circumstances, mitigated by the reasonable or probable cause that induced it. That defendant was illegally arrested and detained through a mistake of law or miscalculation of time which was shared by all the parties is a fact which goes far in reduction of damages. Barnes v. Viall, 6 Fed. 661. In actions against an individual for giving plaintiff into custody on a charge of felony, reasonable and probable cause of suspicion is good evidence in mitigation of damages. E. Exemplary Damages — 1. Malicious Detention. Exemplary damages in false imprisonment are allowed[51] in the reasonable[52] but not arbitrary discretion of the jury[53] only[54] when it appears that the unlawful detention was committed with actual malice,[55] or its legal equivalent,[56] although not amounting to personal ill-will.[57]

2. Supposed Right or Duty. When the arrest of plaintiff was made in the course of what the parties sought to be charged supposed to be their right and duty as public officers,[58] or as private persons,[59] without malice in fact or in law,[60] compensatory and not vindictive damages will be awarded.

F. Inadequate and Excessive Damages. The assessment of damages under proper instructions is for the jury;[61] but it is for the court to determine whether the damages assessed are inadequate[62] or excessive.[63] It will disturb the verdict on the ground of inadequacy only where the damages awarded are clearly shown to be entirely too small to compensate for the injury;[64] and on the ground of excess only when it appears that there is a plain or flagrant abuse of discretion by the jury,[65] or that the jury was actuated by passion or prejudice.[66] No sum is excessive that is not per se evidence of prejudice or corruption,[67] especially where there is no attempt at justification.[68]

G. Amount to Be Awarded. In fixing the amount of damages a jury is justified in exercising a liberal discretion[69] with due reference to the place of plaintiff's detention,[70] as well as duration of the detention,[71] and the oppressive or

See also Wegner v. Risch, 114 Wis. 270, 90 N. W. 168, where a verdict for six cents was sustained. Plaintiff in an action for false imprisonment testified as to the discomforts of prison; that when arrested he was employed at thirty-five dollars a month and board; that he suffered both "bodily and in mind, and felt degraded, shamed, and humiliated at being put in jail;" that the employment that he lost was worth two hundred and fifty dollars. He did not state that he could not have gotten equally good employment after he was discharged, nor that he had not lost his employment before he was arrested. The court refused to set aside a verdict for fifty dollars as inadequate. Taylor v. Davis, (Tex. Sup. 1890) 13 S. W. 642.

XIV. JURISDICTION AND VENUE.

False imprisonment is a transitory, not a local action, and must be brought in the judicial district[73] and before a court having jurisdiction of such causes.[74]

XV. TRIAL.

A. Questions For Court or Jury — 1. In General. Ordinarily the jury determines questions of fact arising on the evidence concerning the involuntary detention itself,[75] the commission of the wrong by defendant,[76] the relationship or authority to bind defendant,[77] the elements,[78] and the extent of recovery.[79] A court takes a case from the jury[80] only when a liability on the part of defendant is conclusively shown[81] or when a legal defense is fully established.[82] Whether

The jury should determine whether the imprisonment was against the will of plaintiff (Floyd v. State, 12 Ark. 43, 54 Am. Dec. 250) or whether plaintiff was detained an unreasonable time (Harris v. Atlanta, 62 Ga. 290) and what was the intent of plaintiff in the use of language charged to constitute his misdemeanor in unlawfully intimidating a public officer in the discharge of his duty (Smith v. Botens, 13 N. a warrant sufficiently describes defendant to protect the officer is a question for the court where the facts are undisputed.[83]

2. MALICE OR PROBABLE CAUSE. The question of probable cause is a mixed proposition of law and fact; whether the circumstances alleged are true or not is a question of fact for the jury; whether they amount to probable cause is a question of law for the court.[84] In clear cases, where there is no question of fact to be determined,[85] and no question whether the facts bring the case within the rule,[86] the court should direct the jury as a matter of law.[87] Except in such clear cases[88] malice[89] and probable cause[90] must be submitted to the jury under proper definition by the court.

B. Instructions. When any instruction is proper other than a direction of verdict, the language employed must substantially and clearly[91] formulate the rules of law[92] applicable to the issues,[93] and the evidence[94] subject to the construction of the charge as a whole.[95] Requests to charge not conforming to this standard should be rejected[96] or correctly modified.[97]

XVI. VERDICT.

Where each of several defendants is liable for the same wrong a verdict may properly be found against each of them and against all of them jointly.[98] And in a case where both of two defendants were liable if either was liable, but a verdict was found in favor of one and against the other, it was held that the latter had no standing to object on account of the inconsistency.[99]

XVII. CRIMINAL RESPONSIBILITY.

A. Nature of Offense. False imprisonment was indictable as a specific crime at common law.[1] Statutes of many states have substantially reënacted the common-law rules.[2] The gist of the offense is the actual [3] and unlawful restraint or detention of one person against his will by another.[4]

B. Sufficiency of Indictment or Information. The indictment or information should follow the statute in every essential particular.[5] But an information charging the offense under the common law may be sufficient under the statute.[6]

C. Liability and Justification. The persons liable to an indictment for false imprisonment[7] and the justification which may be shown under plea of not

3. The mere fact that a person considers himself under arrest is not sufficient. McClure v. State, 26 Tex. App. 102, 9 S. W. 353.

4. People v. Wheeler, 73 Cal. 252, 14 Pac. 796; State v. Lunsford, 81 N. C. 528. Where defendant arrested plaintiff on a charge of passing upon him a counterfeit note, and took her into his house and detained her there for three-fourths of an hour, offering to release her if she would pay him for the note, he was liable to a prosecution for false imprisonment. People v. McArdle, 1 Wheel. Cr. (N. Y.) 101. But where three young men, in order to perpetrate a practical joke, induced a man nearly seventy years old, by promising to pay him, to ride behind one of them on a horse in the night a quarter of a mile in search of a pretended horse-thief, this fraud did not impress the transaction with the character of a criminal act. State v. Lunsford, 81 N. C. 528.

Violation of invalid ordinance.— Arrest by a police officer without warrant for violation of an invalid municipal ordinance makes him guilty of the offense of false imprisonment. State v. Hunter, 106 N. C. 796, 11 S. E. 366, 8 L. R. A. 529.

Lawful arrest, but prolonged detention.— The arrest may be legal in its inception, but made illegal by detention beyond a reasonable time before taking before a magistrate, and subject the person so arresting to a prosecution for false imprisonment. Lavina v. State, 63 Ga. 513.

In a prosecution for false imprisonment by a threat, a charge that the threat must have been calculated to operate on the person threatened, and inspire fear of injury, and that the jury should consider the age, sex, condition, disposition, or health of the person threatened in determining whether the threat was sufficient to intimidate and prevent him from moving beyond the bounds in which he was detained is correct. Meyer v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1899) 49 S. W. 600.

5. Ross v. State, 15 Fla. 55. It should allege the mode in which the detention was effected, but need not further particularize it. Maner v. State, 8 Tex. App. 361. It must state that it was without lawful authority; if the indictment failed to state that it was without "lawful authority" it did not allege an offense under the statute or at common law. Waterman v. State, 13 Fla. 683; Barber v. State, 13 Fla. 675. In an indictment for false imprisonment, the charge that the defendant "was unlawfully and feloniously imprisoned" implies that the act was done without sufficient legal authority, and is good without the latter allegation. U. S. v. Lapoint, Morr. (Iowa) 146. But a general allegation contra formam statuti is not sufficient. Redfield v. State, 24 Tex. 133.

6. Divies v. State, 72 Wis. 54, 38 N. W. 722, as to form. A justice of the peace indicted for false imprisonment under color of legal process is not entitled to the right of appearance and being heard before the grand jury when the indictment is found. Campbell v. State, 48 Ga. 353.

7. Persons committing (see supra, V, A, 2, a, b) and all persons participating in the unlawful arrest or detention may be found guilty. People v. Wheeler, 73 Cal. 252, 14 Pac. 796. It is not necessary that defendant be present at the time of arrest, if it was done under his procurement. Floyd v. State, 12 Ark. 43, 54 Am. Dec. 250. So also a person rendering aid to an officer in the safekeeping of a prisoner does so at his peril. He is bound to know whether the officer acts under legal and valid process. Mitchell v. State, 12 Ark. 50, 54 Am. Dec. 253. But the mere observation of what is going on and the fact that he did nothing to prevent the commission of the offense is not sufficient. Walker v. State, 25 Tex. App. 443, 8 S. W. 647.

Conspiracy.— The officer, prosecutor, and all other persons concerned may be indicted for conspiracy to procure criminal process for an improper purpose. Slomer v. People, 25 Ill. 70, 76 Am. Dec. 786; Com. v. Blodgett, 12 Metc. (Mass.) 56.

D. Evidence. On an indictment for false imprisonment, the prosecution is required to prove only the imprisonment or detention[10] set forth therein[11] and in the county named therein[12] which will be presumed to be unlawful.[13] Confinement or detention having been shown by the prosecution, it then devolves upon the accused to prove its lawfulness[14] or its justification.[15] A conviction for false imprisonment will be set aside and a new trial granted for insufficiency of evidence as in other criminal cases.[16]

FALSELY. The adverb of FALSE, q. v., and otherwise used in exactly the same sense; that is, erroneously, the opposite of truly;[1] erroneously, untruly, with intent.[2]

FALSELY MAKE. To make something in the resemblance or similitude of another.[3] An expression usually adopted to describe the crime of forgery.[4] (See, generally, FORGERY.)

8. On the trial of a prosecution for false imprisonment of certain free negroes, the record of a recovery, in writs of ravishment of a ward, establishing their freedom, was held admissible to rebut the presumption of slavery arising from color, both under 7 U. S. St. at L. 397, and the general rule of evidence as to pedigree, etc. State v. Hill, 2 Speers (S. C.) 150.

If the justification be by warrant, defendant must show that it was legally issued and was legal on its face. Floyd v. State, 12 Ark. 43, 54 Am. Dec. 250; Slomer v. People, 25 Ill. 70, 76 Am. Dec. 786, holding that if the officer is shown to have been a party to a conspiracy to obtain criminal process for an improper purpose the writ will afford him no protection. He must show that the warrant was regularly returned. Slomer v. People, supra.

If the justification be that he was aiding an officer in an arrest defendant must show that the arrest was made under a legal and valid process. Mitchell v. State, 12 Ark. 50, 54 Am. Dec. 253.

If the arrest was made without warrant, defendant must show by what authority the imprisonment was made. Mosley v. State, 23 Tex. App. 409, 4 S. W. 907 and Beville v. State, 16 Tex. App. 70, that the person was drunk and committing a breach of the peace in violation of an ordinance. Where a sergeant on duty in a garrison adjoining a city arrested a citizen while he was outside the garrison for using insulting language, as the sergeant was charged by the law of the United States with the good order of the fort, he was justified in going out of the fort to remove the citizen, and abate the nuisance caused by his abusive language, and was not liable in a prosecution for false imprisonment. Oglesby v. State, 39 Tex. 53. It has been held that a prosecutor who has reasonable ground to believe that a crime has been committed and that accused committed it would be protected in making the arrest. Slomer v. People, 25 Ill. 70, 76 Am. Dec. 786. But see Begley v. Com., 60 S. W. 847, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 1546; Kirbie v. State, 5 Tex. App. 60, where it is held that the guilt or innocence of the person arrested is immaterial in a prosecution for false imprisonment.

Evidence insufficient as a justification may be introduced to show that there was good reason for believing that a crime had been committed in mitigation of the penalty. Staples v. State, 14 Tex. App. 136.

I. DEFINITION.

False personation is the offense of falsely representing some other person and acting in the character thus unlawfully assumed, in order to deceive others and thereby gain some profit or advantage, or in order to enjoy some right or privilege belonging to the one so personated or subject him to some expense, charge, or liability.[1]

II. NATURE AND ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE.

A. At Common Law. The bare fact of personating another, although for the purpose of fraud, can in no instance amount to more than a cheat or misdemeanor at common law, and is only punishable as such.[2]

B. By Statute — 1. IN GENERAL. Now, by statute, in England and in most of the United States false personation is made a felony or a misdemeanor, the various statutes differing widely, however, as to what constitutes the offense. Thus there are statutes making it punishable, either as a felony or as a misdemeanor, to falsely personate another and in such assumed character receive any goods, etc.,[3] to falsely personate another and authenticate a conveyance for registration,[4] to falsely personate another and in such assumed character sign the assumed name to any instrument which, if genuine, would create or discharge a pecuniary obligation,[5] to falsely personate an officer or particular class of officers,[6] to falsely personate another in any legal proceeding whereby the latter's rights or interests are affected,[7] to falsely personate another, and in such assumed character to either become bail or surety for any party.[8] There are also statutes making it a felony or misdemeanor to falsely personate another and in such assumed character to marry or pretend to marry, or to sustain the married relation toward another, with or without the connivance of the latter;[9] to falsely personate a proprietor of public stocks;[10] to falsely personate a voter at any valid election;[11] to falsely personate or assume the name or character of any officer, seaman, or other person entitled or supposed to be entitled to any wages, pay, or other allowance of money or prize money,[12] or to acknowledge or procure to be acknowledged any fine, recovery, deed enrolled, statute, recognizance, bail, or judgment, in the name or names of any other person or persons not privy or consenting to the same.[13]

2. Essential Elements — a. Personation. To constitute this offense there must be a personation and it must be false,[14] and according to most of the statutes the personation must be of some particular person and not merely of one of a class of persons.[15] In some jurisdictions, however, statutes have made it an offense for a person to falsely impersonate certain classes of public officers, such as a police officer,[16] or a judge, justice of the peace, sheriff, or other judicial or ministerial officer, and to take it upon himself to act as such an officer.[17] There cannot be a "personating" of a supposititious individual who never existed,[18] but there can be a personating of one who has lived and is dead.[19]

b. Fraudulent Intent. Another essential element of the statutory offense of false personation is that such personation must be made with intent to defraud.[20]

22. See Rex v. Parr, 2 Leach C. C. 487, holding that where a person falsely personated a proprietor of public stocks and obtained a dividend warrant in the name of the real owner, but was apprehended before he had taken any subsequent steps toward the actual payment of the money, he was nevertheless guilty of a felony under a statute punishing the personating a stock-holder and thereby endeavoring to receive a dividend. The offense of personating or inducing another to personate a voter at an election (22 Vict. c. 35, § 9) is complete when the personator tenders his voting paper, although on being asked if he is the person whose name is signed to the paper he answers "no," and the vote is accordingly rejected.

I. HISTORY OF THE CRIME.

The crime of cheating by certain false pretenses, such as the fraudulent assumption of a false name, the selling of the same thing to two different persons, and the use of false measures, was regarded as a crime in the Roman law analogous to the "crimen falsi."[1] In England cheating was a common-law offense,[2] but it was of such narrow compass that it was found necessary to enlarge its boundaries. This was accomplished by the statute of 33 Hen. VIII, c. 1. This statute, however, bringing within the law of cheats, as it did, merely a class of frauds perpetrated by a particular described means,[3] it was found necessary later to extend again the limits of the crime. This was done in 1757 by the statute of 30 Geo. II, c. 24. Under this statute for the first time the crime ceased to depend on the particular kind of pretense used, the statute being couched in terms broad enough to include the use of any false pretense whatever, although, as will appear later, the judges, in construing the statute, excepted certain classes of pretenses from it. It was this statute that created the crime now commonly known as obtaining goods under false pretenses. Several statutes have been enacted in England since the statute of 30 Geo. II to supply defects found therein,[4] but its general provisions, in so far as they define the crime, remain unchanged. In the United States, in those jurisdictions where the common law is in force,[5] the common-law crime of cheating prevails, and with the same limitations as in England.[6] Most of the United States have copied with minor differences the statute of 30 Geo. II, and the English cases interpreting that statute are freely cited by the American courts in interpreting their own. And in this country, as in England, other statutes have been enacted which, while not usually designated as statutes against false pretenses, are yet auxiliary to such statutes.[7]

II. CHEATS AT COMMON LAW.

A. Elements of Offense in General. The crime of cheating was not very clearly defined in the early common law, the term "cheating" being applied to the defrauding, and even to the attempt to defraud, by means of any artful device whatever.[8] Subsequently cheats were divided into two classes: First, those affecting the government, and second, those affecting individuals. In the former class of cases the use of any fraudulent device was sufficient to constitute the crime.[9] In the latter class of cases a false token was necessary.[10] In modern times cases belonging to the first of these classes, while still indictable, have ceased to be denominated cheats, and that term is now restricted to cheats by false

B. The False Token. In order to constitute the crime of cheating at common law the token used to defraud must be of such a character as, when not false, is commonly accepted by the public for what it purports to represent.[13] A measure is such a token; therefore to sell a commodity by a false measure is an indictable cheat.[14] General trade-marks having a definite meaning in the trade are also such tokens, and the use of a false trade-mark to defraud a buyer

"A fraud wrought by some false symbol or token, of a nature against which common prudence cannot guard, to the injury of one in any pecuniary interest." 2 Bishop Cr. L. (8th ed.) § 143.

Necessity that fraud be such that ordinary care cannot guard against it.— The common description of a cheat, that it is a fraud accomplished by such means as that ordinary care and prudence could not guard against the imposition (Wright v. People, 1 Ill. 102), is indefinite, and feeling this, the judges have invariably sought to render it more definite by accompanying illustrations, such as cheating by false weights and measures. See cases cited passim, II. The phrase "against which care and prudence cannot guard" was later imported into the law of false pretense from the definition of cheats, and has caused no end of trouble to the courts. See infra, IV, C, 5; VII, C.

Necessity that public be affected.— The description of a cheat appearing in many of the cases cited supra, this note, and usually adopted by text writers, that a cheat to be indictable must be "such as affects the public" (Wright v. People, 1 Ill. 102; Rex v. Wheatly, 2 Burr. 1125, 1 W. Bl. 273) is unhappy, since all acts must affect the public to be indictable; and it is no more necessary that more than one person be defrauded by a cheat than by a larceny (see cases cited passim, II).

It is not an indictable fraud to separate the condition from the penalty of a bond. Wright v. People, 1 Ill. 102.

13. See cases cited supra, note 12, and infra, this note and note 14 et seq.

Illustrations.— A false judgment bond is not a false token (Com. v. Gallagher, 2 Pa. L. J. Rep. 297, 4 Pa. L. J. 58); nor is a false surveyor's plat (State v. Burrows, 33 N. C. 477); nor is a private letter (Com. v. Woodrun, 4 Pa. L. J. Rep. 207, 7 Pa. L. J. 362; U. S. v. Hale, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,279, 4 Cranch C. C. 83). A person is not such a token as one may use to accomplish a common-law cheat. See State v. Renick, 33 Oreg. 584, 56 Pac. 275, 72 Am. St. Rep. 758, 44 L. R. A. 266. Since color was not a universal badge of slavery, selling a free negro as a slave is not the use of a false token. State v. Wilson, Mill. (S. C.) 135.

A thing is none the less a public token because it had no existence at common law. State v. Patillo, 11 N. C. 348, where a banknote was held to be a public token.

14. Rex v. Wheatly, 2 Burr. 1125, 1 W. Bl. 273; Rex v. Driffield, Say. 146.

If no false measure is used, the mere selling and delivery of goods of a less weight or fineness than they are represented to be is not a cheat. Rex v. Wheatly, 2 Burr. 1125, 1 W. Bl. 273; Reg. v. Eagleton, 3 C. L. R. 1145, 6 Cox C. C. 559; Dears. C. C. 515, 1 Jur. N. S. 940, 24 L. J. M. C. 158, 4 Wkly. Rep. 17; Rex v. Lewis [cited in Rex v. Bower, Cowp. 323, 324]. Thus it is not cheating for one to expose to sale and to sell wrought gold under the sterling alloy as and for gold of the true standard weight (Rex v. Bower, supra); nor for one to deliver less oats than the quantity contracted for as the due quantity (Rex v. Dunnage, 2 Burr. 1130).

False statements.— Where no such false token is used, the fraud is not indictable at common law, even though accompanied by a false statement to give it efficacy. Rex v. Wilders, 2 East P. C. 819 (indictment for selling a sack of corn, defendant affirming it to be a Winchester bushel); Pinkney's Case, 2 East P. C. 818, 1 N. Sess. Cas. 198. But see Hill v. State, 1 Yerg. (Tenn.) 76, 24 Am. Dec. 441.

is indictable.[15] Since bank-notes pass current, the passing of a false bank-note is a cheat;[16] but the passing of a false promissory note of an individual is not, whether it purports to be the note of the person passing it or of another.[17] Since no mere words amount to a token,[18] drawing a check on a bank in which one has no funds, this being but a written promise or statement, is not a cheat at common law.[19]

C. The Property Obtained. The obtaining of such property only as is the subject of larceny will render a person indictable for a cheat.[20]

D. The Necessity For Injury. It is essential to a cheat that someone be actually defrauded.[21]

III. CHEATS UNDER THE STATUTE OF 33 HEN. VIII.

A. In General. By 33 Hen. VIII, c. 1, it was made a penal offense for any person falsely and deceitfully to obtain money or goods in another man's name by color and means of a counterfeit letter or false privy token.[22] This statute is a part of the common law of those of the United States that have adopted the common law of England;[23] but since most of the states early adopted broader statutes against frauds by false pretenses, there are few decisions on the English statute.[24]

B. The False Token. Under 33 Hen. VIII, c. 1, and similar statutes a false[25] token of some kind was still necessary to constitute cheating,[26] and a

Marks merely indicating the quantity or weight of goods, used and affixed by the seller, were not supposed to be currently accepted for what they purported to represent, and hence were not ordinarily regarded as tokens, and accordingly the use of false marks of that nature was not cheating. Rex v. Wilders, 2 East P. C. 819. See, however, Respublica v. Powell, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 47, 1 L. ed. 31, where a baker employed by the United States army was convicted for a cheat in selling barrels of bread marked as containing eighty-eight pounds, whereas they contained only sixty-eight pounds. The court seemed to regard the marks as false tokens, "since it was the custom to take the barrels of bread at the marked weight, without weighing them again."

Imitation of painter's name.— It is cheating at common law to sell as an original a copy of a picture with the painter's name imitated on it. Reg. v. Closs, 7 Cox C. C. 404, Dears. & B. 460, 3 Jur. N. S. 1309, 27 L. J. M. C. 54, 6 Wkly. Rep. 109.

IV. OBTAINING PROPERTY BY FALSE PRETENSE.

A. Statutes Creating the Crime — 1. In General. The statute of 30 Geo. II, c. 24, § 1, created the crime of obtaining property by false pretenses. It provided that all persons who knowingly and designedly by false pretenses should obtain from any person money or goods with intent to cheat or defraud any person of the same should be deemed offenders against law, etc. Its provisions were extended so as to include the obtaining of choses in action as well as other property by the statute of 52 Geo. III, c. 64, § 1.[28] Most of the American statutes are modeled on these two English statutes.[29] However, the legislatures of many states have added provisions or enacted additional statutes extending the crime to many analogous frauds of various kinds.[30] In a few states, on the other hand, Illustrations.— A false written order for the payment of money is a token (Wagoner v. State, 90 Ind. 504), and so is a printed business card falsely purporting to be that of a firm (Jones v. State, 50 Ind. 473); but a person cannot himself be a token (State v. Renick, (Oreg. 1899) 56 Pac. 275). A sale of four barrels of crude turpentine upon the representation that "they are all right, just as good at bottom as at top," when the chief contents are chips, constitutes the offense, under Battle Rev. N. C. c. 32, § 66, of cheating by false tokens. State v. Jones, 70 N. C. 75.

27. Com. v. Warren, 6 Mass. 72; State v. Delyon, 1 Bay (S. C.) 353; Rex v. Munez, 2 East P. C. 827, 7 Mod. 315, 2 Str. 1127; Reg. v. Grantham, 11 Mod. 222; Reg. v. Jones, 1 Salk. 379, Mikell Cas. Cr. L. 845; Rex v. Bryan, 2 Str. 866.

28. These two statutes were repealed by 7 & 8 Geo. IV, c. 27, making the crime a misdemeanor, and further providing that if in the trial of any person for this offense it should be proven that he obtained the property in such manner as to amount to larceny, he should not by reason thereof be acquitted of the misdemeanor. The present statute in England is 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, § 88. This statute reënacts the provisions of 7 & 8 Geo. IV, c. 27, and adds certain provisions as to the form of the indictment and the proof necessary to convict.

Common law.— St. 30 Geo. II, c. 24, is not in force in Massachusetts as part of the common law. Com. v. Warren, 6 Mass. 72.

29. See cases cited infra, this note et seq.

In New York, 30 Geo. II, c. 24, was transcribed into the criminal code (1 Rev. L. 410). People v. Stone, 9 Wend. 182; People v. Johnson, 12 Johns. 292. In a revision of 1830 (2 Rev. St. 677, 702, § 30) the means by which criminal cheats and frauds can be perpetrated are described, "by color of any false token or writing or by any other false pretense," and the offense was raised to the grade of a felony. The next act was Laws (1853), 219, "to punish gross frauds and to suppress mock actions." This act makes it a felony to obtain money or property not only by that particular instrumentality but by "any other gross fraud or cheat at common law," but it does not make anything a false pretense that was not so under the act of 1830, except mock actions. Ranney v. People, 22 N. Y. 413; People v. Stone, 9 Wend. 182.

Conversion of trust funds by a guardian is made swindling by the penal code of Texas. It was held that this was within the power of the legislature. Walls v. State, (Tex. Civ. App. 1903) 77 S. W. 8.

False marking of casks, etc., as to quantity or quality of the goods contained therein, is an offense in Iowa. State v. Burge, 7 Iowa 255.

Obtaining advances on misrepresentations of ownership of property and promises to apply the same to the payment of the debt is indictable in North Carolina. See State v. Torrence, 127 N. C. 550, 37 S. E. 268.

Obtaining credit.— The English Debtor's Act of 1869 provides that in certain cases it is a misdemeanor if a person in incurring any debt or liability obtains credit under false pretense or by means of any other fraud. It was held that a person entering a restaurant and ordering a meal, intending not to pay for it, is guilty under the statute. Reg. v. Jones, [1898] 1 Q. B. 119, 67 L. J. Q. B. 41, 77 L. T. Rep. N. S. 503, 46 Wkly. Rep. 191, Mikell Cas. Cr. L. 853. Obtaining credit as an undischarged bankrupt see Reg. v. Dyson, [1894] 2 Q. B. 176, 58 J. P. 528, 63 L. J. M. C. 124, 70 L. T. Rep. N. Obtaining materials to be used in one building and using them in another.— In Missouri a contractor who purchases materials on credit on the representation that they are to be used in a certain building and uses them in another building without the written consent of the seller and with intent to defraud him is punishable. State v. Gregory, 170 Mo. 598, 71 S. W. 170.

Obtaining money by aid of a check, knowing that the drawer or maker is not entitled to draw on the drawee for the sum specified, is a crime in some states. Du Bois v. People, 200 Ill. 157, 65 N. E. 658, 93 Am. St. Rep.

the legislatures have adopted statutes more restricted than the English statutes in 183; People v. Whiteman, 72 N. Y. App. Div. 90, 76 N. Y. Suppl. 211, Mikell Cas. Cr. L. 876, holding, however, that the evidence was insufficient to warrant a conviction.

Obtaining money by false pay-rolls.— The statute of Ohio provides against presenting for payment to the accounting officer of a municipal corporation a fraudulent pay-roll. Under this statute it is immaterial that the auditor has no authority to allow the claim as presented. State v. Voute, 68 Ohio St. 274, 67 N. E. 484. The board of infirmary directors is an "accounting" officer within the statute. Hauck v. State, 45 Ohio St. 439, 14 N. E. 92.

Obtaining money by games and tricks.— In many jurisdictions it is a crime to obtain money by means of certain games, sleight of hand, tricks with cards, etc.

California.— People v. Frigerio, 107 Cal. 151, 40 Pac. 107.

Illinois.— Du Bois v. People, 200 Ill. 157, 65 N. E. 658, 93 Am. St. Rep. 183; Maxwell v. People, 158 Ill. 248, 41 N. E. 995; Pierce v. People, 81 Ill. 98.

See 23 Cent. Dig. tit. "False Pretenses," §§ 20, 21.

Obtaining property by misrepresentations as to financial ability, respectability, wealth, or mercantile correspondence, is an offense in some states. These statutes are construed to include representations as to the financial ability of the firm of which accused is a member. Berkenfield v. People, 92 Ill. App. 400 [affirmed in 191 Ill. 272, 61 N. E. 96]. See also IV, C, 2, i.

Obtaining property on a contract to perform services is an offense in some states. To convict, it must be shown that defendant entered into the contract with intent to defraud the employer, and that he refused to perform the service with intent to injure or defraud the employer, and without just cause, and without refunding the money. Dorsey v. State, 111 Ala. 40, 20 So. 629. Mere failure to perform is not a violation of the statute. Copeland v. State, 97 Ala. 30, 12 So. 181. Nor is one within the statute who contracts to purchase an article and to pay a certain sum therefor, and agrees that if the price is not paid at the time stipulated labor to the value of the price will be performed. Calhoun v. State, 119 Ga. 312, 46 S. E. 428.

Obtaining property under false color of carrying on business is an offense in Massachusetts. See Com. v. Drew, 153 Mass. 588, 27 N. E. 593.

Obtaining property with intent to defraud. — A statute in Canada has even done away with the necessity of any false pretense whatever, making it a misdemeanor to obtain any property with intent to defraud. See Reg. v. Dessauer, 21 U. C. Q. B. 231.

Obtaining signature.— Many states extend the crime to the fraudulent obtaining of the signature of any person to any writing.

Arkansas.— See McKenzie v. State, 11 Ark. 594.

Maryland.— State v. Blizzard, 70 Md. 385, 17 Atl. 270, 14 Am. St. Rep. 366, holding that the offense referred to in Code (1888), art. 27, § 82, is the obtaining of a subsisting security by false pretense and not merely the obtaining of a signature to an instrument.

Michigan.— Crane v. Snow, 111 Mich. 496, 69 N. W. 721.

New York.— People v. Chapman, 4 Park. Cr. 56, holding that an indorsement of a negotiable promissory note is a signature to a written instrument within the statute.

Ohio.— Ellars v. State, 25 Ohio St. 385, holding that the statute making it an offense to procure by any false pretense the signature of a person to a promissory note "as the maker thereof" makes the capacity in which the signature of a person is procured a material ingredient of the offense.

See 23 Cent. Dig. tit. "False Pretenses," § 17.

Selling land twice is made an offense in some states. To convict it must be shown that there had been a sale and conveyance of the land, and a second sale and conveyance to another party for a valuable consideration, and that the second sale was made with intent to defraud the purchasers by means of false pretenses, misrepresentations, or suppression of facts. People v. Garnett, 35 Cal. 470, 95 Am. Dec. 125. And see Clement v. Major, 8 Colo. App. 86, 44 Pac. 776. The second sale, to constitute the offense of selling land twice, is not fraudulent if made at the request of the grantee after being fully informed by the grantor of the tenor and fact of the first deed. People v. Garnett, supra. The giving of a mortgage on land by a party who has already conveyed his title to another by deed is not disposing of the land within the meaning of the statute. People v. Cox, 45 Cal. 342. And see Harral v. Leverty, 50 Conn. 46, 47 Am. Rep. 608; Leonard v. Bosworth, 4 Conn. 421.

Selling merchandise containing foreign substance.— In some states it is an indictable offense to sell certain kinds of merchandise containing a foreign substance with intent to defraud the purchaser. Daniel v. State, 61 Ala. 4 (holding that it is not essential to the offense of false packing of cotton that the foreign substance be concealed or be inserted in packing); Hogue v. State, 23 Ohio Cir. Ct. 567; State v. Holman, 3 McCord (S. C.) 306 (holding that the statute imposing a penalty on him who wilfully puts into any bale of cotton any "stone, wood," etc., or "any matter or thing whatsoever," embraces the putting in of an undue quantity their operation,[31] and some have abolished the crime eo nomine and assimilated the offense to the crime of larceny,[32] while others have included it under the broader offense of swindling.[33] of water); Lidtke v. State, 27 Tex. App. 500, 11 S. W. 629 (construing Tex. Pen. Code, art. 470, which prescribes a punishment for putting into any hogshead, cask, bale, etc., containing merchandise usually sold by weight, any article of less value than that with which it is apparently filled, and also for selling or offering for sale such falsely packed bale, and article 471, which makes it an offense to conceal in a cask, bale, etc., any merchandise of inferior quality to that with which it is apparently filled, or of less value); Jones v. State, 22 Tex. App. 680, 3 S. W. 478 (holding that in a trial for false packing by putting sand in a bale of cotton with intent to defraud the purchaser, it is no defense that the sand was put in before ginning, and that the process of ginning removed some of it but not all, if the intent is proved).

Selling pretended title.— In some states there are statutes against selling a pretended title with intent to defraud the purchaser. Kerr v. State, 36 Ohio St. 614, holding that the statute is not invalid because it makes it an offense to "convey" lands where the party has no title; and also that the statute applies to instruments purporting to convey lands situated beyond the territorial limits of the state. A mortgage is not a conveyance or alienation within the meaning of the statute against selling pretended titles. Harral v. Leverty, 50 Conn. 46, 47 Am. Rep. 608; Leonard v. Bosworth, 4 Conn. 421. See also People v. Cox, 45 Cal. 342.

Selling property without disclosing encumbrance.— In some states it is made an offense fraudulently to sell property without disclosing an encumbrance thereon. State v. Johnson, 20 S. C. 387 (holding that the offense consists in selling, without regard to the number of liens, and also that a judgment lien is within the statute); State v. Hunkins, 90 Wis. 264, 62 N. W. 1047, 63 N. W. 167 (holding that a person is guilty who conveys land through the medium of an innocent person in whom the legal title has been placed and who executes the deed under such person's direction).

Selling or secreting property purchased.— In Missouri every person who shall contract with another for the purchase of goods to be paid for on delivery with intent to cheat and defraud the seller, and in pursuance of such intent shall sell the property after obtaining possession, or secrete the same before paying the owner, shall be punished as for feloniously stealing the property. See State v. Rosenberg, 162 Mo. 358, 62 S. W. 435, 982. See also Martin v. Chrystal, 4 La. Ann. 344.

Writing instrument to defraud.— Ohio Rev. St. § 7088, makes it an offense to write or print, either in whole or in part, any letter, telegram, or other instrument with intent to fraudulently obtain anything of value. State v. Hoffman, 2 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 206, 1 Ohio N. P. 290.

Questions arising under these statutes are treated in this article with analogous questions arising under the general statutes of obtaining property by false pretenses.

Analogous offenses by public officers see OFFICERS.

31. See the statutes of the several states.

In California, Pen. Code, § 1110, provides that "defendant cannot be convicted if the false pretense was expressed in language unaccompanied by a false token or writing, unless the pretense, or some note or memorandum thereof, be in writing, subscribed by or in the handwriting of the defendant, or unless the pretense be proved by the testimony of two witnesses, or that of one witness and corroborating circumstances." A promissory note is not a token within this statute (People v. Gibbs, 98 Cal. 661, 33 Pac. 630), but a bank-check is (People v. Donaldson, 70 Cal. 116, 11 Pac. 681).

In Indiana, Rev. St. (1881) § 2204, provides that whoever, with intent to defraud another, designedly, by color of any false token or writing, obtains from any person anything of value, shall be imprisoned, etc., and omits the words, "or any false pretense," contained in the act of June 10, 1852, section 27, on the same subject. It was held that the quoted words were repealed by section 2204. Wagoner v. State, 90 Ind. 504. This omission has been supplied by the act of 1883, section 2204.

In Oregon the statute requires, in addition to a false pretense, the use of a false token or writing. See State v. Lurch, 12 Oreg. 95, 6 Pac. 405. Where a married man pretended under a fictitious name to an unmarried woman that he was single, and by this means, together with his promise to marry her, obtained money from her, he was not a false token, and hence was not guilty of obtaining money by false pretenses by means of a false token, the court holding that if he was a token, he was a private token. State v. Renick, 33 Oreg. 584, 56 Pac. 275, 72 Am. St. Rep. 758, 44 L. R. A. 266.

32. People v. Jeffery, 60 Hun (N. Y.) 581, 14 N. Y. Suppl. 837; Dull v. Com., 25 Gratt. (Va.) 965; Anable v. Com., 24 Gratt. (Va.) 563; Leftwich v. Com., 20 Gratt. (Va.) 716; State v. Hurst, 11 W. Va. 54.

The same act may constitute both crimes under the statutes of some states. People v. Frigerio, 107 Cal. 151, 40 Pac. 107; State v. Smith, 82 Minn. 342, 85 N. W. 12.

Larceny distinguished see LARCENY.

33. See Tex. Pen. Code, c. 17, art. 943 (790), where swindling is defined as the acquisition of any personal or movable property, money, or instrument of writing conveying or securing a valuable right, by means of some false or deceitful pretense or device or fraudulent representation, with intent to appropriate the same to the use of the party

2. Construction. Like all penal statutes, the statutes of false pretenses are to be strictly construed in favor of defendant.[34]

B. Elements in General and Degree — 1. In General. To constitute the crime of obtaining property by false pretense there must be: (1) A false pretense,[35] (2) by defendant or someone instigated by him;[36] (3) knowledge of defendant of its falsity;[37] (4) a reliance on the pretense by the person defrauded;[38] (5) an obtaining of the property by defendant or someone in his behalf;[39] (6) an intent in defendant to defraud;[40] and (7) an actual defrauding.[41] so acquiring, or of destroying or impairing the rights of the party justly entitled to the same.

Georgia.— Calhoun v. State, 119 Ga. 312, 46 S. E. 428.

Indiana.— Shaffer v. State, 82 Ind. 221.

New Jersey.— State v. Crowley, 39 N. J. L. 264. The rule of construction announced in later cases in New Jersey is neither to restrain the interpretation of the statute within too narrow limits, nor to explain it away to the encouragement of fraud. Robinson v. State, 53 N. J. L. 41, 20 Atl. 753; State v. Tomlin, 29 N. J. L. 13; State v. Vanderbilt, 27 N. J. L. 328.

Vermont.— State v. Sumner, 10 Vt. 587, 33 Am. Dec. 219.

Ejusdem generis.— Where a statute enumerates certain kinds of false pretenses and adds "or by any other false pretenses," the "other" pretenses intended by the statute are only those of a kindred nature to those which are enumerated. State v. Sumner, 10 Vt. 587, 33 Am. Dec. 219. See, however, State v. Quinn, 47 Iowa 368; State v. Dixon, 101 N. C. 741, 7 S. E. 870. But this rule has no application where the pretenses enumerated are only general, as "false tokens, false writing," etc. Higler v. People, 44 Mich. 299, 6 N. W. 664, 38 Am. Rep. 267. Where the words "by color of any false token or writing, or by any other false pretense," are used in a statute, the "or by any other false pretense" is a distinctive method in which the fraud may be perpetrated; not "by color of any other false pretense," but "by any other false pretense." State v. Chunn, 19 Mo. 233.

The word "person" in the statutory clause, "obtain from any person," includes banks (Com. v. Swinney, 1 Va. Cas. 146, 5 Am. Dec. 512), corporations (Norris v. State, 25 Ohio St. 217, 18 Am. Rep. 291), and counties (State v. White, 4 Pennew. (Del.) 4, 54 Atl. 956); and person or corporation includes a board of county commissioners (State v. Wilkerson, 98 N. C. 696, 3 S. E. 683).

The word "writing" or "written" as used in the statutes of false pretenses includes printing, lithographing, or other modes of representing words and letters. Jones v. State, 50 Ind. 473. It means some letter or instrument purporting to be the act of some person, and so framed as to have more weight and influence in effecting the fraud than the mere assertion of the party defrauded. People v. Gates, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 311, 321, where the court in construing the term as used in a statute said: "Writing, as used in a statute, must mean some instrument, or at least letter — something in writing, purporting to be the act of another, or certainly of some person." See also Shaffer v. State, 82 Ind. 221.

2. Necessity of False Token. To constitute the offense under the usual form of the statute, there need be no false token or writing used.[42]

3. Degree. In some jurisdictions the offense is a misdemeanor;[43] in others it is a felony;[44] in yet others its degree depends on the character or value of the property obtained and the method of obtaining.[45]

C. Requisites of Pretense — 1. Falsity. The pretense must be false.[46] If it is not false the crime is not committed, even though the accused believed it to be false at the time he made it.[47] If the representation is true when made, it is not within the statute, although it is no longer true when the property is obtained,[48] unless defendant has in the meantime either expressly or impliedly reaffirmed its truth.[49] Since the crime consists not only in making a false representation but in obtaining property thereby, it follows that, although the pretense is false when made, yet if it becomes true before the property is obtained the crime is not committed.[50]

2. Representation as to Existing Facts and Past or Future Events — a. General Rule. The pretense must be a representation as to an existing fact or past event, and not a representation as to something to take place in the future;[51]

b. Simple Promise. A mere promise to do something, relating as it does to a future event, is not within the statute.[53]

Georgia.— Thomas v. State, 90 Ga. 437, 16 S. E. 94, holding that where the false pretense was that defendant had sold a horse, it was none the less a representation of a past event, although he did not pretend that the sale was completed by delivery.

Kentucky.— Com. v. Scroggin, 60 S. W. 528, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 1338, holding that the representation of defendant, who obtained the signature of another to a note for merchandise by stating that he had a contract with certain persons by which they were obligated to sell goods in retail quantities at wholesale prices to all members of a certain association of which he professed to be the president, was a representation as to an existing fact, and not a representation that the goods could be purchased in the future.

Massachusetts.— Com. v. Drew, 153 Mass. 588, 27 N. Representations held to be promises see the following cases:

Florida.— Scarlett v. State, 25 Fla. 717, 6 So. 767, where defendant obtained property by promising to give prosecutor a check on a certain bank.

Kentucky.— Com. v. Warren, 94 Ky. 615, 23 S. W. 193, 15 Ky. L. Rep. 249, holding that an allegation that defendant pretended that a note he persuaded prosecutor to sign "was a renewal note of the former notes"

c. Promise Combined With Representation of Fact. While the crime is not committed by a mere false promise without a false statement of fact, a false statement of fact may become effective only by being coupled with a false promise. When this is the case the statement of fact and the promise may be considered as together constituting the false pretense and a conviction may follow, or, if the statement of fact and the promise can be separated and prosecutor relied in part on the former, the promise may be disregarded and defendant be convicted on the statement of fact.[54] The earlier cases held that if a warranty was added to charges only a promise to use it as a renewal note.

Massachusetts.— Com. v. Stevenson, 127 Mass. 446, where defendant falsely represented to A that he had then and there in his possession a check for the payment of money drawn by him in favor of A, from the proceeds of which he intended to pay certain bills due from A to other persons.

North Carolina.— State v. Whidbee, 124 N. C. 796, 32 S. E. 318, holding that where defendant certified in writing in July, 1897, that he had received "twenty-four dollars in merchandise, the amount of my check for the quarter ending October 30, 1897, which check I hereby pledge in payment of same," and failed to apply the proceeds of the check according to his agreement, it was a mere promise to apply, and hence no false pretense.

Pennsylvania.— Com. v. Moore, 99 Pa. St. 570 (where defendant procured prosecutor's indorsement of a note on a representation that he would use the note to take up and cancel another note of the same amount, then about maturing, on which prosecutor was liable as indorser); Com. v. Garver, 16 Phila. 468 (holding that a representation that a draft is good, in the sense that it will be paid at maturity, is a mere promise).

England.— Reg. v. Lee, 9 Cox C. C. 304, L. & C. 309, 8 L. T. Rep. N. S. 437, 11 Wkly. Rep. 761, Mikell Cas. Cr. L. 851 (where prosecutor lent money to defendant on his false pretense that he was going to pay his rent with it); Reg. v. Johnston, 2 Moody C. C. 254 (holding that to obtain money on the mere promise to marry is not within the statute. Compare Reg. v. Copeland, C. & M. 516, 41 E. C. W. 561, 773 (holding that a representation by defendant that his brother was soon to arrive and bring with him money for defendant, coupled with a representation that defendant would use it to pay a sum advanced by prosecutor, amounted to a pretense that he had the money, and was indictable); Reg. v. Gemmell, 26 U. C. Q. B. 312 (a statement that defendant could change a bill).

The addition of the words "false statement" to the words "false pretense," usually appearing, does not widen the scope of the statute so as to include false statements as to the future or promises. State v. Tull, 42 Mo. App. 324.

Cheating or defrauding.— Under Mo. Rev. St. (1879) § 1561, making it a crime to obtain money by means of a trick, cheat, fraud, or deception, a person is guilty who advertises to give an exhibition, rents a hall, and at appointed hours stands in the ticket office, sells tickets of admission, and collects money for them until the hour for the exhibition to begin, and then absconds. a false pretense the offense was not committed;[55] but a warranty being in effect a promise to indemnify, its addition to the false pretense ought to have no more effect in excusing defendant than the addition of any other promise, and this view is taken by the later cases, which hold that if prosecutor relied on the pretense and not on the warranty, the case is within the statute.[56]

d. Statement of Intention. Some courts have held that a state of mind is a fact, and that therefore a false statement as to the intention of the accused is a false pretense as to an existing fact.[57] Other courts have held that a representation as to intention is not within the statute.[58]

Illustrations.— One who falsely represents himself to be a pension agent, and that he will obtain a pension for prosecutrix, and thereby obtains money from her, is liable to conviction. Pearce v. State, 115 Ala. 115, 22 So. 502. Where money was obtained by the prisoner from an unmarried woman on the false representation that he was a single man, and that he would furnish a house with the money, and would then marry her, the false representation of an existing fact (that he was a single man) was sufficient to support a conviction for false pretenses, although the money was obtained by that representation united with the promise to furnish a house and then marry. Reg. v. Jennison, 9 Cox C. C. 158, 8 Jur. N. S. 442, L. & C. 157, 31 L. J. M. C. 146, 6 L. T. Rep. N. S. 256, 10 Wkly. Rep. 488.

The case of Rex v. Codrington, 1 C. & P. 661, 12 E. C. L. 375, is usually cited as holding that where the prisoner with false pretense in selling gives a warranty, it is not within the statute, and the remarks of Littledale, J., arguendo, are to that effect, but in his charge he seems to direct an acquittal on the ground that prosecutor relied on the warranty, not on the false pretense.

56. Jackson v. People, 18 Ill. App. 508; State v. Dorr, 33 Me. 498; Watson v. People, 87 N. Y. 561, 41 Am. Rep. 397.

57. State v. Nichols, Houst. Cr. Cas. (Del.) 114; State v. Dowe, 27 Iowa 273, 1 Am. Rep. 271 (this case at first sight seems to show something more than a statement of intention; indeed the court says it was "the act of coming to the prosecutor, proclaiming his intention" that is the false pretense. But when analyzed the pretense used in so far as it was false was nothing more than a statement of intention. The court makes the pretense the act of coming, combined with the statement of intention. But the coming was not false, nor was the representation that he had come; the only representation that was untrue was the "intention" with which he had come. The court cites in support of the decision the doctrine that a false pretense may be by acts as well as words. This is true, but the acts in such case must be equivalent to a representation of an existing or past fact, while here the act of coming singly or combined with the statement was only of a future, immediate future but none the less future, event); State v. Cowdin, 28 Kan. 269 [citing State v. Dowe, supra]; Reg. v. Gordon, 23 Q. B. D. 354, 16 Cox C. C. 622, 53 J. P. 807, 58 L. J. M. C. 117, 60 L. T. Rep. N. S. 872 (where Wills, J., intimated that a statement of intention is a statement of an existing fact); Reg. v. Jones, 6 Cox C. C. 467, 469 (where defendant, a supposed dentist, agreed to make a palate for two pounds, receiving thirteen shillings, and Coleridge, J., told the jury, "If that had been a bonâ fide agreement, although not performed, the defendant could not be indicted for the breach of it. But the supposition put forward on the part of the prosecution is, that the defendant never intended to make the new palate at all. That was a question for the jury to determine").

The logical application of this doctrine, seemingly not recognized by the courts that have adopted it, is to bring within the statute all promises as to future conduct, for since it is a generally recognized principle that the character of the pretense is to be tested, not by the very words used by defendant in making the representation, but by the impression his words convey, as a promise to do a thing always implies an intention to do it, the promise as such may be ignored and defendant convicted on the implied statement of intention. This very thing has been done by some courts where the representation has been as to the power of defendant to do a thing. See infra, IV, C, 2, h.

h. Statement of Power or Ability. A false pretense of having ability, power, or authority to do an act is within the statute, and to obtain property by such means is indictable.[63]

j. Puffing Statements. Certain latitude of statement by the owner in regard to goods he would sell has always been allowed by the courts under the name of "puffing."[65] Such statements frequently take the form of false representations as to the value or worth of the thing given in exchange for the property of the prosecutor, and where they do they are regarded as legitimate, and not within the statute.[66] Where the false representations are as to the weight of articles sold,

Necessity of written representation.— A false representation that a certificate of stock is good is not a representation as to the ability of the person making it to repay money obtained thereby, within Mass. Gen. St. c. 161, § 54, requiring such a representation to be in writing. Com. v. Coe, 115 Mass. 481. However, a false representation of a purchaser, made to induce merchants to sell cloth to his firm, that the firm had an order from a responsible party for the goods when manufactured, relates to the purchaser's "means or ability to pay," within N. Y. Pen. Code, § 544, requiring such a representation to be made in writing. People v. Rothschild, 42 Misc. (N. Y.) 123, 85 N. Y. Suppl. 1076.

65. People v. Morphy, 100 Cal. 84, 34 Pac. 623, holding that a prosecution for obtaining money under false pretenses cannot be maintained by reason of representations by a traveling salesman to a customer as to the importance of the house he represented, and the cheapness of its prices compared with others, where the goods sold are as represented, and are sold for a fair price. However, the rule as to puffing does not apply to representations made to a person to enter into the confidential relation of partner. Com. v. Brown, 167 Mass. 144, 45 N. E. 1.

Puffing and cheapening.— Several judges compare the puffing by the seller to the cheapening by the buyer, and intimate a fear that to hold the former indictable would make the latter a crime. The obvious distinction is that the puffing is calculated to defraud the buyer, since he rarely knows the character of the goods he is buying as well as does the seller who owns the goods; whereas the cheapening can rarely have any effect on the seller, and therefore the goods would not be obtained by means of such depreciatory words.

whether they are indictable is still an unsettled question; if made in demanding the price, and after the articles have been delivered, and especially if some token or some artifice is used to throw the buyer off his guard, they are within the statute;[67] but if made during the course of the negotiation of sale,[68] or in selling an article for a lump sum and made for the purpose of inducing the purchaser to complete the bargain,[69] there is authority for saying that they are not within the statute. Where the representations are as to the quality of the goods sold they are not within the statute,[70] unless they amount to statements of specific facts in regard to the goods,[71] or unless they are as to the identity or species of the articles sold,[72] in which case they are within the statute.

A mere misnaming of property offered in exchange, its value in no wise depending on its name, is not a false pretense. State v. Dyer, 41 Tex. 520. In this case defendant represented that a promissory note was a draft. The true reason for the decision would seem to be that prosecutor did not rely on the pretense.

Representations as to animals.— One who in selling or exchanging a cow falsely and with fraudulent intent represents her as having certain milk-yielding capacity (Parks v. State, 94 Ga. 601, 20 S. E. 430), or who falsely represents a horse to be sound (State v. Patty, 97 Iowa 373, 66 N. W. 727; State v. Stanley, 64 Me. 157; Com. v. Jackson, 132 Mass. 16; Watson v. People, 87 N. C. 663. Contra, State v. Heffner, 84 N. C. 751; State v. Holmes, 82 N. C. 607) is within the statute.

k. Nature of Fact Represented. If the representation be of a past or existing fact, the nature of the fact is generally immaterial. Other elements of the crime appearing, one who represents himself to be another, or assumes a fictitious name,[73] or represents that he has performed services that he has not performed,[74] or submits false proofs of loss of property,[75] or a false claim for personal injuries,[76] or misreads a deed to an illiterate person,[77] or falsely pretends to own property,[78] or falsely represents that property he owns is unencumbered,[79] or makes false representations as to his business,[80] makes a sufficient pretense to render him criminally liable. However, a false representation as to an act done or omitted by prosecutor himself,[81] or of the advisability of prosecutor's doing an act,[82] has been held not to be within the statute.

3. Form — a. In General. A false pretense may be made either expressly[83] or by implication.[84] So the form of words in which the pretense is couched is immaterial; if they are intended to create and do create the impression that defendant is making a representation as to a present or past fact, the pretense is within the statute.[85]

b. Acts. A false pretense or representation may be made by act as well as by word.[86] Passing off a worthless check or draft, or a check which accused has no reason to suppose will be honored, comes within the above rule, for it is tantamount to a representation that accused has credit with the drawee to the amount of the paper[87] And the same principle applies to the presentation of false war-doctrine to an extent that would seem to abolish the distinction between representations of fact and statements as to future events.

However, one who presents his own check to a bank in which he has an account is not within the statute, since the act implies only a request to pay. Com. v. Drew, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 179. The passing of a check is not a representation that the person passing it has at the time money to the amount of its face in the bank on which it is drawn, since he may have authority from the bank to overdraw. defendant, even though such disclosure would deter prosecutor from parting with his property, is not a false pretense.[93]

4. To Whom Pretense Must Be Made.[94] It is not necessary that the false pretense be made directly to the person from whom the property is obtained.[95] If it is made in his presence,[96] or to an agent with power to part with the title to the property,[97] or to a third person and by him communicated to the owner,[98] or even to the public generally by an advertisement,[99] it is sufficient to bring the case within the statute.

5. Tendency to Deceive. The language of the statute "by any false pretense" is broad enough to include every misrepresentation, however absurd or irrational, or however easily detected; but in the construction of the statute the courts have in a greater or less degree narrowed its scope by excluding certain kinds of representations from its operation.[1] Some courts hold that the pretense to be indictable must be such as is calculated to impose upon a person of ordinary prudence and caution.[2] Other courts express it in the more general form that a naked lie is not indictable,[3] an expression which in its application seems to mean much the same thing. Other courts, while not laying down any rule as to the character of the pretense, deny that it need be such as to deceive a prudent person.[4] Other courts, while refusing to adopt the rule that the pretense must be one that common care and prudence cannot guard against, or having once adopted the rule and later discarded it, nevertheless have found it necessary to limit the general words of the statute to some extent, and hold that if the pretense is irrational or absurd,[5] or if, at the time it is made, prosecutor has and knows that he has at hand the means to detect the imposition,[6] the pretense is not within the statute, unless some device is used to prevent his using the means he has;[7] but that in all other cases it is for the jury to say whether the pretense was calculated to deceive, not a prudent person but the person to whom it was made.[8] Some

Ignorance of law.— Where the representation is as to a matter of law, some courts, adopting the exploded presumption that "every one is presumed to know the law," hold that as prosecutor under the presumption must have known the representation to be false, he could not have been induced by it to part with his property. investigation,[13] the crime has not been committed. For the same reason an accused cannot be convicted where the pretense was made after the property was obtained.[14]

b. Other Inducements Operating. Although the pretense must be an inducing cause of the owner's parting with his property, it need not be the sole inducing cause; it is sufficient if it had a material influence in inducing the owner to part with his property, although he was also influenced in part by other causes.[15]

c. Remoteness of Pretense. It is held in many cases where the property is not obtained directly by means of the false pretense, but the effect of the pretense is merely to bring about a contract between the parties, or a condition making some further act or agreement of the parties necessary to the passage of title to the property, that the pretense is too remote to be indictable.[16] On principle, the remoteness of the pretense is immaterial; the real question is, Was the pretense the inducing cause in the transfer of the property? If it was, it is sufficient, although other causes also may have operated. The application of this rule will serve to reconcile most of the cases that otherwise are irreconcilable.[17]

d. Continuing Pretense. The same principle governs in the so-called cases of continuing pretense; if the pretense is the inducing cause, it is immaterial that there has been a lapse of time between the pretense and the obtaining,[18] and the fiction of a continuing pretense would seem to be unnecessary.

D. The Obtaining — 1. In General. sion of the property at the time, this intent alone will be sufficient;[20] but when defendant is not already in possession of the goods, he must, in addition to acquiring title, obtain actual possession of the goods, either by himself or by his agent.[21]

2. By Whom Obtained. The property need not be obtained by defendant himself; it is sufficient if it is obtained by another on his account.[22]

3. For Whom Obtained. The property need not be obtained by defendant for himself; it is sufficient if, induced by his false representations, it is delivered to another, either for the benefit of that other or for defendant's benefit.[23]

If defendant obtains a voidable title for a moment only it is sufficient. Reg. v. Corey, 22 N. Brunsw. 543.
