the bill.[45] Nor can the decree rest entirely upon the prayer.[46] On the other hand a prayer for special relief is not conclusive if the cause for relief in equity is made out by the bill or pleading under the code, whether the mistake be in asking for an accounting when the bill or complaint justifies other relief only,[47] or in demanding legal relief under the code when the complaint shows plaintiff to be entitled to equitable relief.[48]

(xi) Amendment. The bill may be amended when it appears that complainant is entitled to a more extensive accounting than the facts originally alleged will justify.[49] And where the parties have had joint transactions which are unsettled, so that either might ask for an accounting, an amendment of the pleadings may be allowed when such amendment will not substantially change the claim.[50] Where plaintiff seeks an accounting in his own right, but it appears that he is entitled in right of a representative of an estate, and the judgment directs payment to plaintiff in that capacity, the complaint may be considered as amended to conform with the proof on the trial.[51]

(xii) Supplemental Bill. Where the account is sought upon obligations set forth in the bill, and the answer denies these and sets up and admits other obligations, in order to have an accounting upon the obligations set up in the answer complainant should file a supplemental bill alleging them in the alternative.[52]

b. Plea or Answer — (i) Responsiveness of Answer — (a) In General. To so much of a bill as is necessary for defendant to answer he must answer directly, pursuant to the general rule of equity pleading.[53] If not sufficiently responsive it will not justify the dismissal of the bill, but an account will be ordered.[54] On a general bill for account, an answer setting up disbursements is not evidence,

Failure to prove grounds for particular accounting sought.—In a suit against an agent, not seeking a general account, but for a recovery of several specified sums of money which are alleged to have been received and misapplied by the agent, it was held that, the allegation of misapplication of the funds having been found in defendant's favor, there was no case for an accounting. Under the code a prayer for relief is not conclusive, nor will it render the complaint demurrable. Kayser v. Maugham, 8 Colo. 232, 6 Pac. 803; Teasley v. Bradley, 110 Ga. 497, 35 S. because such disbursements are not responsive,[55] and on a bill requiring a general accounting and calling for an answer as to whether defendant had received particular sums, defendant is bound to answer specifically to each charge.[56] But where a particular designated asset is made an issue by the bill, an answer showing that the particular item was not in fact an asset is responsive.[57] When a trustee submits his readiness to account he should file his account with his answer.[58] It is not sufficient to refer to books in which accounts are entered, instead of setting them out by schedule,[59] though he is bound to set them forth only as well as he is able,[60] and where the documents are numerous it is not necessary to specify each of them, but they may be described so as to enable plaintiff to move for them.[61]

(B) Matter in Avoidance. Where the answer admits the prima facie case made by the bill, but sets up matter in avoidance, the latter is not responsive[62] and will not prevent a decree for an accounting.[63]

(C) Answer as Evidence. Where the bill calls for discovery as to the state of accounts between the parties, a responsive answer is prima facie evidence of the matters therein contained,[64] against as well as for the defendant.[65] But where the answer sets up matter not responsive to the bill, as matter in avoidance, the burden of proving such matter rests upon him, and the answer is not evidence thereof,[66] though it may still be evidence of matters contained therein which are responsive to the bill.[67]

contract, defendant may have the account of receipts by complainant without filing the cross-bill.[69]

(2) Improper Counterclaim. A defendant cannot aver a counterclaim not connected with the transactions upon which the accounting is sought,[70] nor can he set up a claim for unliquidated damages,[71] though in the latter case the decree should be suspended until defendant has had an opportunity to establish his claim at law.[72]

(c) Items for Consideration on Reference. The particulars of an account which are the proper matters for consideration on the reference should not be set up in the answer[73] and will not be considered on the hearing as to the mere right to an account.[74] But it has been held that where the bill acknowledges certain credits due to defendant, and the latter, in his answer, avers no other credits due to him than those so admitted, he can avail himself of no others.[75]

(III) Failure to Answer. In a suit for an accounting no decree can be entered upon defendant's default other than for an accounting, and a judgment for a specific sum is not proper.[76]

(IV) Expression of Willingness to Account — Effect upon Limitation. Where the statute of limitations has run against a suit for an accounting in chancery, a mere expression, in the answer, of defendant's readiness and willingness to account, especially when accompanied by the assertion that the balance upon the accounting would be in defendant's favor, will not operate to remove the bar.[77]

(V) Necessity for Discovery When Defendant Answers. Whether a defendant to a bill for an accounting who by his answer denies complainant's right to an accounting is nevertheless required to give the account called for, the decisions are conflicting. On the one hand it has been considered that defendant may refuse to give an account in such case,[78] while, on the other, the rule is applied that where defendant can protect himself from giving account by plea or demurrer, but submits to answer, he must answer fully.[79] The result of the authorities would seem to indicate that, while the matter is one of judicial discretion,[80] the real distinction between the discovery which complainant is entitled to demand where his title to relief is denied, and the discovery which he is not entitled to in such a case, may be gathered from the rule that the right to discovery is confined to the question to come on for trial.[81] Where defendant in his answer asserts that there are no such accounts as those mentioned in the bill and that none can be given, no case is presented for the application of the rule that if a defendant assumes to answer he must answer fully.[82]

(VI) Answer under Code. An answer under the code denying the receipt of money as alleged in the complaint raises a distinct issue as to plaintiff's right to demand an accounting.[83] But under an answer admitting the agreement upon which plaintiff seeks an accounting he is entitled to a bill of particulars.[84]

(VII) Stated or Settled Account[85] — (A) In General. A stated or settled account is a good bar to a suit for an accounting, except so far as it is impeached for fraud or mistake,[86] and, being matter in avoidance, must be

80. French v. Rainey, 2 Tenn. Ch. 640. In Phillips v. Prevost, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 205, the chancellor's view was that it must depend upon the reason and convenience of the case whether the general rule will be enforced that when defendant submits to answer he must answer fully, and was of opinion that exception to the rule was where defendant objected to the discovery because plaintiff had no title. In Great Western Colliery Co. v. Tucker, L. R. 9 Ch. 376, the court refused to require defendant to give a discovery of account called for by the bill, saying that the circumstances were just such as those referred to in Elmer v. Creasy, L. R. 9 Ch. 69, supra, note 79, under which the court may be trusted to exercise the proper control over any attempt on plaintiff's part to press for discovery which would be unreasonable or vexatious.

In Pace v. Bartles, 45 N. J. Eq. 371, 17 Atl. 636, it was held that where the bill is filed for an account and the account does not appear by the allegations and charges of the bill to be useful in establishing complainant's right to it, but appears merely as that which must ultimately be rendered in fulfillment of the obligation an enforcement of which is sought, defendant need not set out the account in his answer in case it is necessary to resort to the answer rather than to plead or demur in resisting complainant's right. But if the right to relief may be resisted by plea or demurrer, and defendant nevertheless submits to answer, he must answer fully.

Answer not frivolous.—In an action against a corporation alleging that plaintiffs delivered goods to defendant under an agreement whereby defendant was to hold them as trustee, with power to sell, and to deliver the proceeds to plaintiffs, an answer denying the allegations of the complaint, but admitting the receipt of certain goods similar to those mentioned in the complaint, and admitting that it had sold a part and received the proceeds of a part of such goods, but not admitting the agreement set up in the complaint nor the receipt of the goods specified in the complaint, is not frivolous. The denials were held not to be affected by these admissions, and the denial of the receipt of the goods specified in the complaint still stood, as there was no admission, direct or indirect, of the agreement referred to, nor of the receipt of the goods specified. proved by the party pleading it.[87] In order to be made available it should be pleaded.[88]

(B) In Bar of Relief and Discovery. A stated account may be pleaded in bar to discovery and relief,[89] or may be set up by answer,[90] and this will bar further accounting unless upon a bill charging error or fraud,[91] though an answer in support of the plea may be necessary.[92]

(C) Sufficiency of Plea. Though, as hereinbefore shown, assent to the correctness of a balance may be presumed from long acquiescence,[93] and in the absence of fraud or mistake the account which thus acquires the character of a stated account will not be opened on an accounting,[94] it is held that a plea of stated account should allege that complainants and defendant made up, stated, and settled the account in writing after an examination and approval of the account,[95] showing the balance due and that it was fair and just.[96] But on the other hand it is held that a plea is not necessarily incomplete because such examination and approval are not alleged.[97] Where the account stated is pleaded it is not necessary to set out the account when the bill does not impeach it.[98]

c. Disclaimer. A party cannot disclaim all interest in the account and thus avoid the necessity of accounting.[99]

which follows the order or decree leading to the accounting,[1] unless it appears more expeditious to order the accounting in the first instance.[2]

(II) Disposition of Issues. Where there are issues of fact raised by the pleadings they should be tried before ordering an account,[3] and if a plea in bar is interposed it must be disposed of before the accounting or decree,[4] although defendant admits the necessity of an account of transactions subsequent to a settlement pleaded.[5] But where the right to an account is admitted in terms or in effect the court may order it at once without waiting to try the issues of fact raised by the pleadings.[6]

(III) Hearing Confined to Liability to Account. Upon an application for an account the only question to be considered is whether the account shall be taken,— plaintiff's right to the accounting and defendant's liability to render the account,— and therefore the only evidence necessary upon the hearing at this stage is that which shows the particular right and liability.[7] Therefore matters which are properly for consideration as to the state of the accounts will not be inquired into.[8] On the other hand the right to an accounting and the liability to account should be contested at a primary stage of the cause when the application for an accounting is made, as a decree to account will generally conclude such questions.[9]

b. Decree to Account[10]— (i) In General. The decree to account is not of course, and unless by consent,[11] or on admission of the allegations of the bill which show a right to the accounting,[12] should not be directed except upon a hearing. The facts should not only be put in issue, but there should be evidence to show the probability of the facts and the equity proper.[13] And if the answer called for is given,[14] or the right to the accounting is not admitted or is put in issue, and is not proven, the bill will be dismissed.[15] Where the defense is anticipated, but defendant nevertheless pleads it and avoids the fraud charged, this does not shift the burden of proof from plaintiff.[16] But if defendant sets up matter subsequent to the contract under which the account is sought, in avoidance of liability to account, the burden is on him to prove such matter.[17]

(ii) Right to Part of Relief Sought. If complainant is entitled to the relief sought only to a partial extent, the bill will not be dismissed though he may not be entitled to all he claims.[18]

(iii) Matters Subsequent to Bill. A bill against a trustee praying an account may be retained in order to effect an accounting between the parties, including matters subsequent to the filing of the bill, notwithstanding plaintiff failed to establish the allegations of his bill.[19]

(iv) Consistency with Pleadings. The decree to account cannot require an accounting of a different character from that sought by the bill,[20] and where one is a party, not as an accountant, but only for the purpose of participating in the distribution, the decree should not order him to account.[21]

(v) Contingent Liability. Where a contingent liability has been decreed against a party he may be compelled to account with a view to such liability upon the happening of the contingency.[22]

(VI) NATURE OF DECREE TO ACCOUNT. The decree to account on a bill seeking to bring to an accounting one upon whom that duty rests is interlocutory.[23] But where the decree to account is incidental to a final decree granting other and main relief (as upon a decree to stay waste under a bill for that purpose), defendant may appeal from the whole decree;[24] and where a motion to amend such a decree made at a former term is denied, the decree will have the force of a final decree at the final hearing.[25] On the other hand it is held that when defendant pleads in bar to a suit for an accounting, and the issue is found against him, the order is appealable.[26] Where the accounts are settled by the court, if plaintiff does not appeal from a decree holding him liable for a certain share of the expense of keeping partnership property, such decree will be the basis for the accounting on appeal by defendant.[27]

(VII) DECREE TO ACCOUNT BEFORE FINAL DECREE. Until it is determined that defendant should account, the cause is not ripe for a final decree.[28] And even when defendant fails to answer, the proper course would seem to require a reference to state the account on the decree pro confesso, and a final decree on the hearing of the decree pro confesso on the proofs and report, and a decree on the merits in the first instance, would not be regular.[29] But a final decree may be entered under some circumstances without stating the account, upon determining the right and the amount appearing,[30] and where there is a direct admission in the answer of a specific sum due to plaintiff, and the pleadings do not admit of further contest as to other matters, a judgment for the amount admitted is proper.[31] So, in a case admitting of such a course, the court may order the rendition of an account when a reference may be saved thereby.[32]

And in Calvit v. Markham, 3 How. (Miss.) 343, where an agent was appointed to settle accounts and the settlement was sufficient to establish complainant's right to sue for the sum named, it was held that a final decree could be entered without taking an account under an interlocutory order. c. Findings by Court. Under the practice requiring the issues to be found by the court and the findings announced and filed before entry of judgment, the findings upon which the right to an account is denied must be something more than a mere legal inference.[33]

d. Evidence. A decree in a suit for an accounting cannot be made in the absence of any evidence showing something due.[34] Where defendant is an accounting party, as one occupying a fiduciary relation, the burden is on him to show the performance of his trust,[35] and one who is liable to render an account has the burden of proving allowances or credits which he may claim.[36] But in other cases, as where there is no relation which imposes upon defendant the duty to keep and render accounts, the burden of accounting is not exclusively on defendant.[37]

e. Final Decree — (1) In General. In a suit for an accounting the decree must be consistent with the relief sought by the pleadings,[38] as well as with the case made, and if defendant is liable upon a contingency only, or complainant is entitled to have his interest declared, an unqualified judgment for a specific sum of money is improper.[39] The accounting should be considered as furnishing the proper foundation for the decree.[40] But where, after a decree for an account and that defendant pay the amount found due, an order for an execution is entered upon the report of the accounting, the decree and order will be taken together as account showing the gross profits realized and also the deductions which defendant might claim should be made in order to show the net profit, and that complainant should within a fixed time notify defendant's solicitor whether he was satisfied with the account, and, if not, to state the particulars of his objections, and that thereupon either party might within a fixed time apply to the court for direction as to how the objections to the account should be tried and determined.

Filing account.— In Louisiana, in a suit to compel defendant to render an account, defendant may file his account at any time before judgment by default is made final. Ledoux v. Murray, 14 La. Ann. 613.

33. Kahn v. Central Smelting Co., 102 U. S. 641, 26 L. ed. 266, holding that a finding by the court that there was no such cotenancy between the parties in the mine in controversy as to entitle plaintiff to an accounting is a mere legal inference, and not a sufficient finding of fact upon which to base a decree.

38. Black v. Merrill, 65 Cal. 90, 3 Pac. 113; Passyunk Bldg. Assoc.'s Appeal, 83 Pa. St. 441, holding that on a bill by a stockholder against a building association and its president, who was alleged to have in his hands funds of the association, a prayer for an accounting between the president and the association and between the association and plaintiff, and that the amount due complainant as a withdrawing stockholder be decreed to him, would not support a decree against the president for a certain sum of money. But on the other hand it is held that where a complainant has properly brought an action in equity for an accounting in regard to partnership property, and on such accounting it appears that there is no property to which he has a claim, but that he is entitled to a personal judgment against defendants as partners, he may be given such judgment by the chancery court. McLean v. McLean, 109 Mich. 258, 67 N. W. 118.

39. Stark v. Pierce City Real Estate Co., 97 Mo. 449, 10 S. W. 877, which was a suit for an accounting of profits of land in which plaintiff owned an undivided interest. It was held that plaintiff was not entitled to a judgment for money to the amount of his interest where the purchase-money was represented by notes taken in good faith and complainant claimed the benefit of the sale, but that the judgment should determine his interest in the notes and direct its payment when collected.

Provision for future share.— Where the share of a widow in funds arising from the rental of a mine under a lease made by the guardian of her children is declared, the decree may provide for the product mined during the continuance of the lease. Neel's Appeal, 3 Pennyp. (Pa.) 66.

40. Bullock v. Governor, 2 Port. (Ala.) 484; Farley v. Ward, 1 Tex. 646.

Where property is found, undisposed of, in the hands of defendant, on a partnership accounting, it is error to render judgment for money only before a complete settlement of the account and distribution. McGillvray v. Moser, 43 Kan. 219, 23 Pac. 96.

a sufficient adjudication that the amount reported is due complainant.[41] Where the real parties entitled to the fund to be accounted for are joined as defendants with the accounting party, the court may direct the cause to proceed for their benefit and make a final decree in their favor for the fund.[42]

(II) Settlement of Accounts between All Parties. Where the bill is for an accounting and settlement of accounts between all parties interested, as in the case of part owners[43] or partners, the decree should settle the rights of all.[44] But where the bill is filed by one of several persons interested in certain profits, and the several defendants unite in resisting complainant's claim without professing any inability to settle among themselves, the decree need not declare the share of each of the defendants in the fund involved.[45]

f. Review. A decree will not be reversed for an improper charge contained therein if it appears that the amount found against appellant would be increased upon a proper settlement,[46] but if correct except for items certain and ascertainable it will be affirmed with modification as to such particular items.[47] If a charge complained of is stricken out, credits so connected with the charge as to require adjustment with it must likewise be considered and rejected.[48]

g. Costs. As in other cases in equity, costs are largely discretionary with the court.[49] In the absence of circumstances which should impose the burden on a particular party the court may make an equitable disposition of them, between the parties or out of the fund.[50] But where complainant is entitled to a decree to account over defendant's refusal, or the conduct of the latter has made the suit necessary, the former will be entitled to costs.[51] Conversely, where complainant fails to establish his right to an account, the bill will be dismissed with costs.[52] But where the demand to account was too broad the partial relief to which plaintiff may be entitled will not subject defendant to costs.[53]

F. Venue — Location of Property. Location of the land or property an accounting of the profits or avails of which is sought, though such property is beyond the territorial jurisdiction of the court, will not affect the question of jurisdiction when the parties are subject to the process of the court.[54] On the

G. Effect and Impeachment of Stated or Settled Account — 1. EFFECT OF STATED ACCOUNT IN GENERAL. An account stated operates as a confession that there is a fixed and definite sum due from one person to another at the date of the accounting.[56] All intricacies of the account, or doubt as to which side the balance may fall, are thereby disposed of,[57] and the acquiescence and promise to pay sufficiently admit the performance of conditions which would be in the nature of jurisdictional requirements for the enforcement of the original liability.[58]

2. STATED ACCOUNT TO BE TAKEN AS ENTIRETY. Where an account is stated and a balance is struck it should be taken as an entirety; the debits are not admissible without the credits,[59] and judgment should not be given for a larger amount than the balance, or for the charges without the credits.[60]

3. CHANGE OF CAUSE OF ACTION BY STATEMENT OF ACCOUNT — a. Effect in General. In one sense, relating to the necessity to look to the original items, an account stated alters the character of the original indebtedness and is itself in the nature of a new promise or undertaking.[61] It is not, however, strictly speaking, the creation of a new debt, but merely a statement and acknowledgment of an old debt, from which the law implies a sufficient promise to support an action;[62] it merely reduces a preëxisting liability to a certainty.[63] Therefore an action upon an account stated is not founded upon the original items or debt, but upon the balance ascertained and fixed by the mutual consent of the parties, without regard to the original debt or items.[64] The action may be maintained on

Waiver of laches.— Where the drawee of a bill of exchange had refused payment, and thereafter the amount was admitted to be due and the drawee promised to pay it, it was held that a recovery could be had under a count on an account stated, and that any laches with regard to the bill was waived. the stated account notwithstanding the acknowledgment of indebtedness is in writing.[65]

b. Effect with Respect to Bill of Particulars. As the statement of an account is in the nature of a new promise, in an action upon an account stated a bill of particulars of the items of the original debt need not be furnished and cannot be required.[66] But it is held that defendant may be entitled to a copy of the stated account, although the original items of the open account upon which the account was stated need not be furnished.[67] If, however, plaintiff furnishes a more detailed statement than is necessary, there can be no objection on this ground.[68]

c. Effect with Respect to Statute of Limitations. Where an account is stated and a balance struck by the parties, the balance becomes the new principal, and the admission of a precise debt is sufficient to defeat a plea of the statute of limitations.[69] And on the other hand, when an account has become stated the creditor cannot change the character thereof to an open account and maintain a suit upon the original items for the purpose of evading the statute of limitations.[70]

d. Effect upon Fiduciary Character. Where a debt is created in a fiduciary capacity, and such debts are excepted by the insolvent law from the operation of a discharge in insolvency, the fact that the account is stated will not change the fiduciary capacity of defendant so that the debt may be barred by his discharge in insolvency.[71]

4. Conclusive and Prima Facie Effect — a. In General. Formerly the stating of an account was considered so deliberate an act as to preclude an examination into the items,[72] but since an early day greater latitude has prevailed, and it may Suppl. 877, holding that the statute in New York requiring copies of accounts would include an account stated which contains items, but that in the case in hand the account involved was not such an account, but consisted in data or evidence upon which the parties reached their agreement. But in Sanchez v. Dickinson, 19 N. Y. Suppl. 733, 47 N. Y. St. 203, defendant in an action to recover a balance pleaded an account stated, and upon a demand for copies of the accounts and a refusal to furnish them he was precluded from giving evidence of any such accounts or the items thereof, upon the ground that it was as necessary for plaintiff to know what the account contained, where it is claimed that the account is a stated account, as in the case of an account upon which a balance is claimed.

68. In Massachusetts the statute required a bill of particulars to be filed under all the common counts, including the insimul computassent, and it was held that while it might be true that the bill of particulars under that count would not necessarily give the items of indebtedness, and that such items need not be shown in proof on the trial, there could be no objection to a bill of particulars stating all the items of the indebtedness, and showing the basis of the alleged indebtedness on the insimul computassent, if plaintiff should elect to file such a bill. now be said to be the rule that an account stated does not create an estoppel,[73] and that neither a stated nor a settled account is conclusive, but simply affords strong presumptive evidence which may be rebutted by showing fraud or mistake.[74] And while the practice of opening accounts which the parties have themselves adjusted is considered dangerous, yet a settlement must be so far considered as made upon absolute mistake or imposition, if palpable errors are shown, as not to be obligatory upon the injured party.[75] The presumption is one relating to the evidence.[76]

b. As to Finality and Completeness — (I) In General. An account stated or settled is prima facie to be taken as a settlement of all valid items of debit and credit existing between the parties at the time of its statement.[77] But this presumption does not extend to a cause of action which had not accrued at the time of the statement of the account.[78] Nor will the parties be concluded by such presumption as to matters which were not contemplated by them or which were not in fact included in the statement or settlement, though they existed at the time, but the presumption will be destroyed when the details of the settlement show that the matter in controversy was not included.[79] Either party may show that the balance found was struck upon a partial, and not a general accounting, and either party may thereafter avail himself of a matter outside of the settlement by showing that it was not included therein.[80]

(II) Party Rendering Account. While, as has been shown, a mere rendition of an account, though not necessarily resulting in an account stated, may be pertinent evidence of an admission on the part of the person rendering it,[81] such conduct is capable of explanation, and if any accidental omission or mistake has been made the items so omitted may be proved or the mistake corrected.[82]

Breach of warranty.— Where one renders an account under a mistake of facts, it is held that the account will not bind him as an account stated, and when sued for the balance thereby shown he may set up a mistake which consists in ignorance on his part of the bad order of the goods delivered, which was a breach of warranty under the contract

c. Qualification of Rule. Rather as a qualifying clause of the rule itself than as an exception thereto, it should be added that the right to correct an account notwithstanding it has become an account stated is confined to cases in which no element of estoppel has intervened,[83] or where there is an obligatory agreement between the parties, as upon a settlement and mutual compromises.[84]

d. Time for Objection Limited by Agreement. If, on the settlement of accounts, the parties agree to limit the time within which the correction of mistakes or omissions shall be made, evidence of such mistakes may be excluded unless it is shown that the claim for its allowance was made within the time agreed upon by the parties.[85]

e. Assignee. Where an account has been settled between the parties, the right to impeach it for a mistake therein, after acquiescence by the original parties, cannot be assigned.[86] On the other hand it is held that where a claim is not stale or based upon an account stated the assignee may impeach it for a mutual mistake.[87]

f. Conclusiveness Except for Fraud or Mistake — (1) In General. But while an account stated or settlement does not operate as an estoppel, it is nevertheless the rule that a settled or stated account is conclusive in the absence of fraud, mistake, or error, and the burden to impeach it by clear and convincing testimony rests upon him who on such grounds would escape its binding force.[88]

Application of estoppel.— Where several employees of the same employer, engaged for the purpose of soliciting shipments, were to settle among themselves what shipments each was to be credited with, and an account showing the amount due to one of them for commissions was delivered to him, and he accepted and retained it for five years without objection, it was held that such acquiescence should be considered as conclusive evidence of the correctness of the account when any other effect given to it would be to the prejudice of the employer, who might have settled upon a proper basis with the other agents if timely objection to the account had been made. Phelps v. Plum, (Ky. 1895) 32 S. W. 753. So where an agent attempted to use his position to extort money from his principal, it was held that he could not complain of a recovery against him of the amount shown to be due the principal by an account rendered by the agent, notwithstanding a portion of the money shown by the account rendered to have come into the agent's hands for the principal had not in fact been received by the agent. Where a settlement of accounts is deliberately made with no intention to defraud the creditor, such creditor will not be in a position to have the settlement set aside, except upon the clearest proof of fraud between the parties thereto.[89]

(II) Assimilated to Right of Recovery Back. In determining whether an account stated can be impeached, the case is put upon the same footing as if the money had been paid. Such payment would be conclusive subject to the right to recover it back on a failure of consideration, and so, on the statement of an account, if the case is one in which a payment, if made, could have been recovered back, the facts which show the failure of consideration may be proved.[90]

(III) Application and Extent of Rule—(A) In General. The presumption of conclusiveness which attaches to an account stated is one of evidence, and the extent of the application of the foregoing principles cannot be resolved into the statement of an unalterable rule which will cover all cases. Thus mere acquiescence after the rendition of an account may be sufficient to bind one as upon an account stated,[91] and while this species of proof is said to be far from conclusive, though sufficient in the absence of contradictory evidence,[92] yet the question is one merely of evidence, and at most an express admission is but stronger proof of correctness requiring stronger proof of mistake,[93] and payment of the balance ascertained is but stronger proof than these requiring perhaps still stronger proof in rebuttal.[94] In neither case, however, would the parties be precluded from giving evidence to impeach the account in the absence of an intervening estoppel or obligatory agreement, the force of the admission and the strength of the evidence necessary to overcome it always depending upon the circumstances of each case.[95]

(B) Character of Mistake or Error—(1) In General. In many of the cases the general rule as to the effect of an account stated seems to be applied merely to the extent of dispensing with other proof of the correctness of the items of the account, shifting the burden upon the other party if he wishes to show that it is incorrect,[96] though by the mere statement of the rule thus broadly it is not always intended that it should have such unqualified effect.[97] This seems to be the spirit of the rule, however, where the assent is to be implied from silence after the rendition of an account,[98] though it has been intimated that the rule is to be applied alike, whether the admission is express or implied.[99] On the other hand it is held that the defense in an action on a stated account must relate to the account stated, and not to matters of anterior liability, except in so far as such matters may be the foundation for the substantial defense impeaching the settlement for fraud or mistake.[1] Instances of the application of this rule are given in the notes, attention being called, however, to the statement hereinbefore made, that so far as the strength of the particular evidence is concerned each case must depend upon its own circumstances.[2]

Character of mistake illustrated.— Under a contract to furnish a specified number of barrel-headings, to be counted by a man to be furnished by one of the parties as they were piled on his land from time to time, in order to obtain an approximate estimate of the quantity piled and the amount of advances to the other party under the contract, an inspection and final count to be made by another person at another place to which the headings were to be shipped, and the property in the headings to pass under the first delivery on the party's land, in an action to recover a balance alleged to be due on account of the price of these headings, the count of the inspector is subject to impeachment for fraud or mistake, the mistake being not a mere alleged error of judgment, but one of fact which prevented the proper exercise of his judgment. Standard Oil Co. v. Van Etten, 107 U. S. 325, 1 S. Ct. 178, 27 L. ed. 319.

2. Failure of consideration by breach of warranty.— Matters of contract growing out of a sale are merged in a stated account, and where deceit is not shown the question of failure of consideration by reason of a breach

(2) Error by Accident or Design. It does not matter whether the error in the accounting occurred by accident or design in order that it may be available as against the conclusiveness of the account stated.[3]

(3) Mistake Mutual or on One Side. In order to impeach an account stated for errors or mistake, it is not necessary that they should be mutual.[4]

(4) Error Not Affecting Result. A stated account or settlement will not be opened for an error which does not affect the result.[5]

(c) Ratification of Acts of Agent. As between principal and agent, as where accounts of sales are rendered by a commission-merchant to his principal, acquiescence in the rendition of accounts may amount to a ratification of acts of implied warranty cannot be considered in an action on a stated account. Gem Chemical Co. v. Youngblood, (S. C. 1900) 36 S. E. 437.

Assent with full knowledge of facts.— Where a statement of sales is sent by a factor to his principal, in which the gross price received on sales is not set out, but only the net price after deducting charges of cartage, demurrage, and commissions, and the principal accepted such statement with knowledge of the manner in which it was made, he is bound thereby and cannot afterward claim anything because of the form in which the account was made out. Everingham v. Halsey, 108 Iowa 709, 78 N. W. 220. Where a bank-book is balanced several times after an objectionable item appeared in a former balance, and the bank has full knowledge of the facts when such subsequent balances are made, it will be bound. Harley v. Eleventh Ward Bank, 76 N. Y. 618. Where a customer of a bank receives his pass-book with full knowledge that charges for interest are made therein, and no objection is raised to such charges, they cannot be impeached any more than if they had been paid and an action had been brought to recover them. Schoonover v. Osborne, 108 Iowa 453, 79 N. W. 263. Where full opportunity is given to a party to satisfy himself as to the correctness of an account, and he has full knowledge of any objectionable features therein, he will not afterward be heard to impeach the account for those objections which were so known to him. Where there is a settlement for work done in full knowledge of all the facts, it is binding except for fraud or mistake. Linville v. State, 130 Ind. 210, 29 N. E. 1129. Where defendant had contracted to purchase hides from plaintiff, to pay him the highest market price therefor and to give him an extra price for hides prepared in a certain way, both parties being possessed of the same knowledge and the same means of informing themselves of the prices, which defendant, by his statements, asserted to be the highest market prices, plaintiff could not rely on the assumption that defendant was paying him the highest market price without examining his weekly statement, and afterward, on the ground of mutual mistake, claim that the statements were incorrect. Stern v. Ladew, 47 N. Y. App. Div. 331, 62 N. Y. Suppl. 267. And so, where the balance is paid under the circumstances last mentioned, defendant cannot afterward claim any allowance on the ground that the quantity of produce furnished to him was less than that charged in the account. Execution of note with full knowledge.— Where a debtor executes a note for the balance ascertained to be due, having full knowledge of all the facts, he will be concluded as to the propriety of the original items. Where, after the completion of a building, the owner, upon an accounting, executed his note for the balance shown to be due without claiming damages for delay, he cannot afterward set up damages resulting from delay. Pickel v. St. Louis Chamber of Commerce Assoc., 80 Mo. 65. Where an employer gave to an employee credit for his salary during his illness, and upon a subsequent settlement executed a note for a part of the balance shown by the employer's account to be due, including credits for the salary during the sickness of the employee, which note was subsequently paid, and some time thereafter the employee was discharged, in an action thereafter on a promissory note executed by the employer, brought by one claiming through the employee, who was the payee in the note, the maker of the note cannot claim a set-off for the time of the employee's illness included in the settlement. Clerical error.— Jaques v. Hulit, 16 N. J. L. 38, holding that a clerical error in footing up an account or striking a balance does not change its legal effect as an account stated, but the real balance is ascertainable by a correct addition and subtraction.

done in violation of instructions, under which circumstances the principal will be precluded from recovery for any alleged violations of instructions in transactions covered by such accounts of sales.[6]

(D) Forged Checks in Bank-Book Balance. The writing up of a bank pass-book with a return of vouchers or a statement of account is not conclusive upon the parties so as to preclude an ascertainment of the true state of the account in a case where checks are included in the balance which are subsequently discovered to have been forged.[7] But where the depositor is under a duty, from the usages of business or otherwise, to examine the account within a reasonable time and to give timely notice of any objections he may have, an omission to perform this duty and leaving the bank to rely upon the presumption that the account is acquiesced in, whereby it is misled to its prejudice, will operate to make the account conclusive.[8]

(E) Illegality. Where an account stated is based on illegal transactions it may be impeached by showing such illegality,[9] and a debtor is not estopped from showing illegality in particular items of an account stated or by reason of his having retained the account rendered without objection.[10] Therefore it is held that an action upon a stated account will fall if one of several claims of indefinite amount included in it must be omitted for illegality.[11] The burden of proof is upon the party alleging such illegality.[12]

(F) Where Existence of Account Stated Is in Issue. Facts may be shown which tend to prove the non-existence of a stated account.[13]

(G) Settlement and Payment. It has been held that where, upon the statement of an account, there is an actual settlement or payment of the balance shown, it cannot be avoided for mistakes in the items of the account.[14] Many of the cases, however, which support the rule permitting the impeachment of a stated account for fraud or mistake do not recognize this unqualified restriction,[15] in August v. New York Fourth Nat. Bank, 1 N. Y. Suppl. 139. The presumption that the account as balanced is correct may be rebutted by showing error or fraud which was not discoverable by the exercise of reasonable care, or that the circumstances were not such as to excite suspicion. addition to which it is not consonant with the principle upon which money may be recovered back upon facts showing a failure of consideration,[16] and should perhaps be referred to and controlled by other principles, such as those which govern in the case of an accord and satisfaction or a compromise and settlement.[17] But on the other hand, where parties, instead of predicating their settlement upon a direct examination and an exact statement of all the items between them, intend rather to adopt a basis which they believe will be just and right, and to waive and release all errors, a settlement fairly and deliberately made will be held binding upon the parties and all others fully advised of the facts, and will be upheld notwithstanding immaterial error.[18]

5. Opening, Surcharging, and Falsifying — a. Terms Distinguished. To surcharge means to show the omission for which credit ought to be given, and to falsify means to show the insertion of a wrong charge. This is the distinction between surcharging and falsifying,[19] and these are both distinguished from the opening of an account or a general accounting in that upon a general accounting the whole of the account may be unraveled, while upon permission to surcharge or falsify the account stands as prima facie correct, and the party alleging mistakes must prove them.[20]

b. At Law or Collateral Impeachment — (I) In General. While a suit to open, surcharge, or falsify an account is one proper for equitable jurisdiction,[21] defendant can reduce the amount of a stated account showing that plaintiff was then indebted to him upon a subsisting account which, though due, was not liquidated at the time,[22] and the rule seems to be established that a stated account need not necessarily be impeached by a direct suit brought for that purpose. It may be impeached either at law or in equity whenever it is brought forward as a defense or cause of action, for fraud or mistake,[23] unless upon an accounting an

In Connecticut it was held that where an article was omitted by mistake in a settle-or items paid by mistake or fraud.[29] But accounts will not be opened in an action to recover back, in the absence of clear and convincing evidence of mistake and after so long a lapse of time that acquiescence will be presumed.[30]

(III) Voluntary Payment. Where charges are made and voluntarily paid in a statement and settlement of an account with knowledge of the facts, they cannot be recovered back.[31]

(IV) Direct Impeachment by Complaint. The impeachment of an account stated is sometimes sought by an action directly to impeach and set it aside and for a recovery of the proper balance or items omitted,[32] partaking of the nature of a bill in equity to open, surcharge, and falsify an account or settlement.[33]

(V) Pleading—(A) In General. Where a plaintiff in an action involving an account does not allege a settlement, but denies that there was a settlement as alleged by defendant, the only issue is whether there was a final settlement, and specific frauds, errors, etc., need not be alleged.[34] And so, where a creditor by mistake accepts a note in settlement for a smaller balance than is actually due, it is held that he may sue on the original account, and may show, under a general

ment of accounts it could not be subsequently recovered in an action of book-debt. Punderson v. Shaw, Kirby (Conn.) 150; Remington v. Noble, 19 Conn. 383. But in Sage v. Hawley, 16 Conn. 106, 41 Am. Dec. 128, it was held that an action of general indebitatus assumpsit would be sustained to recover for an item omitted by mistake in such a settlement, and that the declaration need not specifically point out such mistake. In Remington v. Noble, 19 Conn. 383, it was held that it was not the intention of the court in Sage v. Hawley, 16 Conn. 106, 41 Am. Dec. 128, supra, to supersede in such cases the action of assumpsit, but only to render the pleadings in assumpsit simple and concise.

Receipt.— A receipt does not necessarily preclude parol testimony that a greater sum was due, which remains unpaid. The general rule is that where a court of equity would set aside the contract as for fraud or mistake, such matter may be shown to destroy the effect of the receipt. Fuller v. Crittenden, 9 Conn. 401, 23 Am. Dec. 364; Clark v. Marbourg, 33 Kan. 471, 6 Pac. 548; Gibson v. Hanna, 12 Mo. 162; Harden v. Gordon, 2 Mason 541, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 6,047. See, generally, EVIDENCE.

Items barred.— But where the mutual accounts are itemized and a balance is struck and paid, the items can no longer be regarded as unsettled within the meaning of the statute of limitations, although one item was omitted by mistake; and if after the statute of limitations has barred such item, and, upon discovering the omission, action is brought on the entire account to recover the real balance, the recovery will be barred. Lancey v. Maine Cent. R. Co., 72 Me. 34.

29. Hanson v. Jones, 20 Mo. App. 595. Where, in an action by an employee to recover money which plaintiffs claimed they overpaid him in refunding his traveling expenses upon reports presented by him, which plaintiffs alleged to have been false, the admission by defendant of items of debit in a bill of particulars filed by plaintiff, which admission is that such items had gone into an account stated, is not sufficient to justify a recovery by plaintiff where there was no legal evidence of fraud. Linn v. Gilman, 46 Mich. 628, 10 N. W. 46.

Memoranda used on settlement.— In an action to recover an amount on account of a mistake in the accounting and settlement between the parties, the accounts or memorandums thereof used by the parties as a basis for a settlement are admissible as a part of the res gestæ. 33. Thus in New York it was held that an action upon an account stated, wherein the complaint alleged various errors and omissions and asked for a correction thereof, was properly adapted in form to correct the account in the respects of which specific objections were taken. Young v. Hill, 67 N. Y. 162, 23 Am. Rep. 99.

Summons for specific sum.—In an equitable action to open a settled account and to correct the same, and for a recovery of an omitted item, the judgment should not be reversed because the summons was for a specific sum instead of for relief, for where defendant answers a complaint under such circumstances the court can grant only the relief which is consistent with the case made. McDougall v. Cooper, 31 N. Y. 498.

denial to the defense of the account stated, that there has been no settlement of the items of account between him and the debtor.[35] On the other hand, where there has been an account actually stated, objections thereto should be pointed out either by the complaint or in a reply when the account stated is set up as a defense.[36]

(B) Where Issue Is an Estoppel. Where the issue raised by the pleadings is whether an estoppel is created by reason of defendant's failure to act with promptness, as in the examination of a balance in a bank-book containing as items alleged forgeries, it seems that the determination of this issue does not involve a settlement in the sense that the balance cannot be impeached without express allegations in the pleading.[37]

(C) Under General Issue or General Denial. The authorities are divided upon the question whether, in an action on an account stated, defendant may impeach it under the general issue or general denial. On the one hand it is held that, the allegation in the declaration being that defendant was indebted, he could not admit the indebtedness and at the same time avoid it,[38] and that any errors may therefore be shown under the general issue,[39] and fraud or mistake may be shown under a general denial.[40] On the other hand it is held that under the general issue defendant cannot enter into a reëxamination of accounts which have been settled,[41] and that fraud, mistake, or misrepresentation[42] cannot be shown under a mere general denial, or under the general issue without notice of

App. 385, 55 Pac. 606 (holding that such a replication is not an attempted statement of a cause of action for opening an account settled and the taking of a new account, because a stated account is only prima facie evidence of its correctness, and it may be impeached, whenever brought forward as a cause of action or defense, without first bringing an original suit for that purpose); Hutchinson v. Market Bank, 48 Barb. (N. Y.) 302 (wherein it is said the matter should be set up in the complaint or by permission in a reply).

Confined to grounds pleaded.— When the replication attacks an account stated pleaded in an answer only upon particular grounds, the account stated cannot be impeached upon other grounds where there is a failure upon the ground alleged. Barker v. Hoff, 52 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 382.

Waiver of objection.— In an action for wages and for money expended, defendant answered setting up a counterclaim, to which plaintiff replied a general denial. Under this state of the pleadings, where no objection is made at the trial to evidence surcharging and falsifying items of what was claimed to be a stated account, no objection could be raised for the first time on appeal. special matter,[43] and that such errors should be specifically pointed out.[44] But when errors are once shown, others may be shown though the latter are not specifically pleaded.[45]

c. In Equity — (I) Jurisdiction in General. While an account stated or settled will bar discovery and relief if the balance ascertained is not correct or the settlement is infected with mistake or fraud or brought about by undue advantage, equity will entertain jurisdiction for the purpose of opening it either for restatement or for correction in part.[46] The accounts which, when stated, the court will open, must be such as fall within the jurisdiction of the chancery court. The court will not have jurisdiction to open and examine a stated account when the account, before it was stated, did not pertain to the jurisdiction of that tribunal.[47]

(II) Power Exercised with Caution — (A) Rule Stated. The power to open accounts which have been settled, especially to the extent of requiring a general accounting, is exercised with much caution and with due regard to the security of business transactions between the parties sui juris when no confidential relations exist.[48] It will be done only upon clear and convincing proof of the

43. Dunlap v. Miles, 4 Yeates (Pa.) 366, holding that under a plea of non assumpsit without notice of special matter defendant could not show that he entered into an agreement with a third person, trusting to the accuracy of the books kept by plaintiff, without giving notice of the special matters under the practice allowing a defendant to bring forward all his equities under such a method of pleading.

44. Threlkeld v. Dobbins, 45 Ga. 144.

Facts showing mistake.— To a count upon a stated account a plea is good which shows that if any promise to pay was made it was made upon a mistake of law and fact, followed by a statement of facts which, if true, brings the defense within the principle that a promise to pay a claim which is without merit and not based upon colorable right, and where the promisee surrenders nothing and is not injured, cannot support an action at law or in equity, though if the plea had stopped short of this statement of facts it would have been subject to criticism. Particular court — Equitable action.—A suit to open, surcharge, and falsify an account is only for equitable jurisdiction, and where a particular court has jurisdiction of a complaint presenting a case for equitable jurisdiction, it is proper to bring an action to surcharge and falsify an account in that court. Houston v. Dalton, 70 N. C. 662.

47. Dickinson v. Lewis, 34 Ala. 638, which was an account for clothes furnished to complainant by defendant, there being no mutuality of accounts and nothing on complainant's side except a claim of credits for payments, and it was held that the court was without jurisdiction to open the account after it had been stated by the parties, as it would have been without jurisdiction to have stated the account in the first instance upon the application of either party. See supra, II. E, 1, f, (II), (B).

Fraud and complicated accounts.— Where the accounts between the parties are complicated, this of itself is reason for going into equity; and when to this is added the charge of fraud in settlement between the parties, the jurisdiction is undoubted. grounds justifying it,[49] especially in the absence of fraud and where the ground of relief is mistake,[50] and after the lapse of time,[51] or after renewals of notes and securities.[52] The general rule as to the burden of proof upon the impeachment of a stated or settled account has already been stated.[53] The cases there cited are applicable here. The party impeaching must start with the burden of the presumption that the accounts are correct.[54] And where defendant denies the errors complained of, and the stated account was for a long time in the possession of plaintiff, the latter must produce the account or prove its loss, its contents, and the errors complained of.[55] And, as on a bill for an accounting the right to an account is to be determined before an account is ordered,[56] where a bill is filed to set aside a previous accounting, it is proper to dismiss it without a reference when it appears that complainant is not entitled to open the account.[57]

Difficulty does not dispense with proof.— Where a bill seeks to open a settlement for alleged fraud and mistake, though the evidence shows that the settlement was of the whole items in a lump, it is said that, notwithstanding in such a settlement it is difficult to show a mistake, difficulty does not dispense with all proof. Not enough to raise a mere suspicion.— It is not sufficient for plaintiff to raise a suspicion that indefinite credits at uncertain times have been omitted. Evidence to sustain credit for a large amount of cotton, in the form of estimates of witnesses as to the yield of the plantation for each year involved, based upon the acreage and general character of the crops as good, fair, or bad, is too indefinite to falsify balances as shown by a merchant's books. Application of rule.— In settling an account between an agent and the representatives of his deceased principal, certain items which at the time were of little or no value were omitted, but with full means of knowledge as to the facts on the part of both parties, and it was held that no fraud was shown by such facts. Farnam v. Brooks, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 212. Proof which at most excites only slight suspicion that defendant did not disclose to complainant at the settlement expectations which he, defendant, had of obtaining from the state an extra allowance on a contract involved in the settlement, the facts upon which such expectations rested being known to both parties, is not sufficient. Fowler v. Piatt, Wright (Ohio) 206.

been held that an account will not be opened for frauds alleged, which, however, appeared upon the face of the account or which could have been detected by slight examination.[59] But where the party complaining was so situated at the time of the settlement as not to have had a fair opportunity of fully scrutinizing the account which was prepared and extended by the other party, slighter evidence may be sufficient to impeach any particular item of the account than if the settlement had been made with full knowledge of the facts.[60]

(c) Where Parties Stand in Confidential Relations or on Unequal Terms. Where the parties stand in confidential relations or on unequal terms, equity will much more freely interpose than where such conditions do not exist, and will open accounts upon much slighter grounds.[61] But on the other hand it is held that there is no reason why accounts which have been settled in a case of stewardship or agency should be opened merely because at the time of the settlement the agent possessed the confidence of his principal,[62] and where parties deal with each other at arms' length a court of equity will not interfere on the ground of impaired health and depressed spirits on the part of one of them, in the absence of proof of mental unsoundness.[63]

(d) Where Vouchers Are Surrendered. The reason for the strictness of the rule requiring allegation and proof of the matters relied upon to impeach a settlement is stronger when the vouchers used in the settlement are given up to the complaining party.[64]

(e) Where Security Taken upon Settlement. The rule that deliberate settlements will be opened with great caution is particularly applicable where an account has been signed and security taken on the foot of it.[65] But where

Family settlement.— Although courts of equity uphold family settlements with a strong hand, where complainant was incapable of examining accounts upon which a settlement was based, examination of which was necessary to their full understanding, the court will permit him to surcharge and falsify to the extent of the errors pointed out in his bill, notwithstanding the settlement may be regarded as a family settlement. Application of rule.— In the case of guardian and ward, trustee and cestui que trust, attorney and client, etc., the law presumes, from the relation of the parties, that their situation is unequal, and throws the burden upon the one having the advantageous position of showing the fairness of his dealings. This doctrine may be extended to many other relations of trust, confidence, or inequality, but in any case the question whether the parties are so situated is one of fact depending upon the circumstances. Smith v. Ogilvie, 5 N. Y. Suppl. 382. To the same effect, Cowee v. Cornell, 75 N. Y. 91, 31 Am. Rep. 428; Piddock v. Brown, 3 P. Wms. 289.

Difference between surcharging and falsifying.— Where an executor was also the guardian of a minor, his settlements in the probate office will not be regarded as accounts stated, and upon a bill to open his settlement the onus will be upon him to sustain the items thereof which are falsified by the bill, but as to the items of surcharge it was held that the complainant must assume the burden of proof. The security becomes prima facie a debt according to its terms, and it cannot be overturned on doubtful or probable testimony bonds or other securities are given for a balance found due on a settlement, and it is found that such settlement was infected with mistake, oppression, and unfair advantage, the securities will be set aside and the whole account reopened.[66]

(F) Where Release Executed. If an account is impeached, a release the only consideration for which is a settlement will not prevent the court from looking into the account. The release is entitled to no greater force in a court of equity than the settlement of the account upon which it was given.[67] On the other hand the evidence must be clear and convincing to justify the reversal of a finding against the claim of fraud or mistake on the bill to open the settlement,[68] and where an accounting party makes a settlement whereby the rights of third parties are acknowledged, and upon the faith of the settlement moneys are paid to such third persons, the settlement will not be overturned without the fullest proof of ignorance of fact, fraud, or imposition, and a release may operate as an estoppel in pais.[69] So, in order to justify relief against a covenant to pay a sum certain under a settlement and mutual releases, there must be fraud or palpable and gross mistake,[70] though where a settlement is not a compromise or speculation it is held that a clear mistake is sufficient ground for opening mutual releases, even if the mistake is one of law.[71]

(III) To What Extent Opened — (A) Where Opened Entirely — (1) In General. In the absence of allegation and proof of fraud or undue advantage which taints the entire account, the court will not open and unravel it as if no accounting had been made.[72]

(2) Fraud or Mistake Tainting Whole Account. Where accounts are opened as fraudulent, the relief will not be limited to the right to surcharge and falsify,[73] and where accounts which are impeached as erroneous are shown to conthat error intervened in the accounts which were settled, without imparting to all business transactions insecurity and uncertainty. Kilpatrick v. Henson, 81 Ala. 464, 1 So. 188.

Collusion or circumstances showing injustice.— A settlement is good for nothing if, either from the collusion of the parties or from the circumstances under which it takes place, it is apparent to a court of equity that the transaction was not so fully and fairly understood between the parties as it ought to have been, and that injustice has been done on either side. Peteet v. Crawford, 51 Miss. 43.

tain errors of considerable extent in number and amount, or which extend over a long period of years, the accounts will be opened whether the errors were caused by mistake or by fraud, and the parties will not merely be confined to surcharge and falsify.[74] But the errors must be shown to be so numerous that justice cannot be done without restating the account.[75]

(B) Party Confined to Surcharging or Falsifying. While it has been held that when an account has been surcharged or falsified in one particular the complainant may have liberty to surcharge or falsify it at large,[76] this rule has been confined to errors or mistakes which cast suspicion of nefariousness upon the whole account,[77] and it is generally held that when only errors and mistakes are alleged and proved in respect to particular items, or the fraud or imposition does not affect the whole settlement or account, the court will give the party complaining permission to surcharge and falsify the account, and will limit the authority to a correction of the errors or mistakes pointed out, leaving the balance of the account to stand unimpaired.[78] And if complainant seeks to open an account on the ground of undue influence, as well as for specific errors alleged in a former settlement, and the cause is referred by consent to take the accounts on the basis of the former accounts, with liberty to surcharge and falsify, he is held to waive the ground of undue influence.[79]

(C) Under Agreement as to Correction. Where written agreements upon a statement of accounts show how far such accounts should be binding and for what cause they may be varied, the accounts will be varied, in the absence of fraud or coercion, only so far as is consistent with the terms of the agreement.[80]

(D) Correction on Both Sides. Consistently with the maxim that he who asks equity must do equity, it is not improper, upon plaintiff's application to open a settlement for his benefit and for the purpose of correcting an error against him, to decree that the settlement should be opened upon condition that errors upon both sides shall be corrected.[81]

tled, one complaining thereof must not be guilty of laches in seeking relief, for the caution with which courts approach such applications is emphasized when they are made after a long lapse of time,[82] and it is said that equity will not correct mistakes in a settlement for the purpose of relieving the person whose mistake was the result of his own gross negligence.[83] On the one hand, from the lapse of time and a failure to object sooner, the party may be considered to have acquiesced in any errors or inaccuracies of which he may complain.[84] On the other hand, as lapse of time necessarily obstructs the truth and destroys the evidence of past transactions,[85] equity will not open accounts after the lapse of such a time as that the evidence and means of arriving at a just conclusion may be impaired, especially where the death of parties has intervened[86] and the matters were within the knowledge of both parties.[87] These are merely applications of the general rule that a court of equity will not entertain stale or antiquated demands which would encourage laches or negligence.[88]

(B) Permission to Surcharge and Falsify. But upon a bill impeaching accounts after the lapse of a number of years, the court may permit the party to surcharge and falsify, though it will refuse to open up the accounts generally.[89]

As affecting answer.— A general charge of concealment of accounts and fraudulent charges in an account which has been settled is not a sufficient averment to require an inquiry into the details, and the bill is no better which makes only general charges of fraud as to particular branches of an account. French v. Rainey, 2 Tenn. Ch. 640.

Bill held to be for accounting only.—Where a bill seeking an account alleged that complainant was induced by defendant's fraudulent representations to accept a smaller sum than was due, and that the statement rendered by defendant to plaintiff was not correct in other respects, it was held to be merely a bill for an accounting, and the particulars mentioned are merely a reason why complainant should have an account. Harrison v. Farrington, 36 N. J. Answer as evidence.— Where complainant relies on a settlement of certain matters embraced therein, an answer relating to such matters will not be evidence for defendant under the rule that until the settlement is impeached and set aside it is conclusive on the parties. Roberts v. Totten, 13 Ark. 609.

tled, it is held that the bill for an accounting, in order that it may be sufficient for the correction of such accounts, should not only specify the errors to be corrected, but should aver a balance due to plaintiff.[97] But it has been held that where the grounds alleged in the bill are not sustained by the proof and are denied in the answer, the bill may be amended so as to allege the matter shown by the evidence, or the court may dispense with the formal amendment.[98]

(D) After Great Lapse of Time — Excuse for Delay. Where a complainant seeks to open accounts after a great lapse of time, he must distinctly state in his bill the particular act of fraud, misrepresentation, or concealment, and if a mistake is alleged it must be stated with precision.[99] And especially should there be distinct averments as to the time when the fraud or mistake was discovered, so that the court may see whether, by the exercise of ordinary diligence, the discovery might not have been made before.[1]

(E) Offer to Do Equity. It has been held that where complainant is unable to restore the benefit he has received, the maxim that he who seeks equity must do equity will be applied upon his application to open accounts. The bill in such a case should offer to do equity.[2]

In Iowa, under the code provision making a variance between pleading and proof immaterial unless the opposite party is misled to his prejudice, and permitting the court to direct the facts to be found according to the evidence and to order an amendment where the variance is immaterial, it is held that in an action for an accounting, after the plea of full settlement and evidence tending to show mistake or fraud warranting a finding that there had been no settlement, the court may permit plaintiff, after a verdict, to file an amended reply setting up such fraud. (I) General Prayer. On a bill for an account of fraudulent dealings, a prayer for general relief is sufficient, and it is not necessary to pray specifically that every instrument taken by defendant without consideration should be set aside.[10]

(VI) Plea or Answer. As hereinbefore stated, a plea of an account stated is good in bar of relief and discovery to a bill for an accounting.[11] This has been confined, however, to cases where the bill does not directly impeach the accounts,[12] and where such a defense is set up in the answer as a bar to relief and discovery, under the latter circumstances, complainant cannot by an amendment compel a discovery after the plea has been ordered to stand for answer.[13] But even where a former settlement is attacked directly by the bill, defendant may still plead a stated account, with proper averments denying the fraud.[14] The plea of "stated account" should set out the account in such a case[15] unless the bill waives an answer under oath,[16] and must be supported by an answer,[17] and both the plea and the answer must traverse the matters alleged in impeachment.[18]

Where charge in bill insufficient.— Where a bill contains only a general charge of concealment and fraud in the settlement of an account, it will not be a sufficient averment to require inquiry into details. This was on consideration of the sufficiency of the answer, and it was held that if plaintiff should show himself entitled to a discovery on the hearing he would then be in the position of a complainant to whose bill a false plea had been put in; that is, he could have an order to examine defendant on interrogatories. French v. Rainey, 2 Tenn. Ch. 640. See also Discovery; Equity.

13. Plea ordered to stand for answer.— Where a plea is ordered to stand for an answer without leave given to accept, this, in effect, adjudges the plea to be sufficient as an answer as to so much of the bill as it covers, and protects the defendant from further discovery. Charge that plaintiff has no counterpart.— Where a bill seeks to impeach a stated and settled account and charges that complainant has no counterpart of the account, and prays that the same may be set forth, defendant must set out or annex the account by way of schedule to his answer or plea, although he pleads or sets up as a defense the stated account. The reason of this is that without a discovery of the account itself complainant cannot point out the errors upon the face of it, provided any exist. Weed v. Smull, 7 Paige (N. 2. In Connection with Particular Purposes — a. In General. But this is an inartificial view, and what are or are not proper subjects of account must be determined with a due regard to the particular connection in which the question arises. In general terms the matter is presented in two aspects: (1) upon the admissibility of particular evidence, as book-entries, to prove matters ordinarily the subject of such entries; and (2) upon the remedy, as well as upon the manner of establishing a cause of action in a suit on an account.[20]

b. As to Evidence. As just stated, the first aspect refers to the admissibility of, and manner of proving, books of entry,[21] and under it the account contemplated is such an one as is kept in the ordinary course of business, where the goods are sold and delivered,— a registry of sale and delivery actually made of the things therein contained at the time of their being so entered,[22] — as under an affidavit-of-defense law requiring an affidavit of defense to prevent a judgment upon an account without further proof than the book-entries or copy,[23] or a statute under which such account may be proved by the plaintiff's own oath.[24]

c. As to Remedy. Matters of account usually include personal property sold and delivered, services performed, materials found and provided, and the use of such property hired and returned,[25] or those matters which are usually the subject of a count in indebitatus assumpsit.[26] And this head (the second aspect

20. To illustrate, while matters may not be the proper subject of book-account so that they may be proved by book-entries, they may be the subject of an action on an account under provisions regulating the manner of pleading. Thus, while a charge for rent cannot be supported by the books and oath of the party, as charges in an account annexed generally may be, because abundant other testimony of use and occupation must exist, it does not follow that the charge is improper in an account annexed, but the subject-matter, though not technically the subject of book-account, may be included in an account annexed, and the declaration may be as good as if the matter were set out therein. Money had and received distinguished.— Gray v. Farmer, 55 Me. 487, holding that where the evidence does not show any sale by plaintiff to defendant, nor any fact from which the law will raise an implied promise on the part of defendant to pay for the property in question, there is nothing on which a count in indebitatus assumpsit on an account annexed can stand; distinguishing this ac-

above referred to) has reference to the various statutory provisions for the recovery on accounts, regulating the manner of pleading and making the accounts or copies of items of the plaintiff's demand prima facie evidence of the cause of action when not denied under oath.[27]

3. By Agreement. Whether a particular item is recoverable in an action upon an account should not be determined upon a motion in arrest, but is to be settled by the evidence, and, if by agreement the items have become the subject-matter of an account between the parties in their mutual dealings, it is proper matter of book-charge.[28]

4. Necessity for Actual Entry of Items on Account. It has been held that the rule relating to book-entries as evidence contemplates the actual making of the entries at the time of the transaction.[29] Conversely, it does not matter that items are actually entered in a book if they are not the proper subjects of book-account.[30] On the other hand the practice prescribed for a convenient method of declaring on such a claim is held not to require the items to have been actually entered in an account,[31] even when the items must be the subject-matter of book-entry,[32] if in such case the matters are in fact proper items of a book-account.[33]

5. Action In Tort or Ex Contractu. It is not every claim which plaintiff may sue upon as an account. It must be founded in contract, and one cannot, by merely tabulating his claim, convert an action in tort into an action on an account.[34]

tion from a count for money had and received, because the latter may be sustained without an express promise and even against defendant's denial of liability, whenever it appears that he has received money which in equity belongs to plaintiff. So in Georgia it is held that an action on an open account is not proper to recover for money had and received, the court saying that it is by no means an easy matter to define in precise and accurate terms what constitutes an action upon "open account." A claim for attorney's fees and disbursements made in payment of witnesses and the like is as much an action on an account as an action by a merchant for goods sold and delivered. Eaton v. Peavy, 75 Iowa 740, 38 N. W. 423.

Matters of book-entry.—The statutory provision controls, however, and sometimes it refers to the remedy in connection only with matters which are technically the subject of book-entry, in the sense of making such book-entries evidence. This, for example, was the construction of the provision in Ohio for declaring in short form on book-accounts. Horning v. Poyer, 18 Ohio Cir. Ct. 732; McKemy v. Goodall, 1 Ohio Cir. Ct. 23. Work and labor is such an item, and, if items which are the proper subject of the book-account, and other items, as cash, not ordinarily subjects of such an account, are mingled, this will not defeat the action. 6. Special Contract. Upon the question of evidence, special contracts are not the subject-matter of book-accounts and cannot be proved thereby.[35] As a rule relating to the remedy where the demand is based solely upon a breach of contract, the remedy should be confined to that,[36] but, following the rule applying to the action of assumpsit generally,— that upon the full performance of a special contract, so that the obligation to pay money is all that remains, a declaration on the common counts is sufficient,[37]— an action upon an account (or an open account) may be maintained if plaintiff has fully performed his part of the contract and nothing remains to be done but the payment of money.[38] Plaintiff is restricted to the special contract and cannot recover on a general count only when the contract is open and in full force.[39] In one state, however, it has been held that under the statutory provision making a verified open account sufficient prima facie evidence of plaintiff's claim, the term "account" applies only to transactions in which by sale and purchase the title to personal property is passed, and the relation of debtor and creditor created, and not to isolated transactions founded upon special contract.[40]

B. Illegal Items. If some of the items of an account are illegal, plaintiff may strike them out and recover for the others which are legal.[41]

C. When Due — Demand. An account which neither party considers due immediately is due on demand, or on the expiration of a reasonable time, or at the time the creditor understood it to be due.[42] No demand is necessary, however, before bringing an action for the recovery of the price of articles sold and delivered, where the contract itself does not impose that condition. Such a debt is due when the transaction is complete.[43]

D. Account as an Entirety. Where any item of an account delivered by one party to another is sought to be made available against the former, the account must be taken as an entirety. A party cannot claim the benefit of credits without also submitting to the debits shown by the account.[44] But it is held that this principle does not apply when the persons furnishing the accounts are bound by law to furnish them, as agents, etc.[45]

App. Civ. Cas. § 107. So a claim for board of laborers and for services rendered by plaintiff as a section foreman were held not to come within the meaning of the statute. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Schwartz, 2 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 758.

A claim for professional services is an isolated transaction based upon special contract, and does not come within the meaning of the statute. Garwood v. Schlichenmaier, (Tex. Civ. App. 1901) 60 S. W. 573; De Long v. Miller, (Tex. Civ. App. 1896) 37 S. W. 191. But see Gulick v. Fortson, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 425, and Schutze v. Von Boeckmann, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 112, 53 S. W. 836. In the last case, in a suit before a justice of the peace, the citation described the demand as an action of debt for professional services of an attorney; and in arriving at the conclusion that a sworn plea was not necessary in attacking the consideration, as in a suit on a written instrument, the court decided that the action was not on the contract under which the services were rendered.

An account for goods delivered to an agent to be sold by him and accounted for is held not to be such an open account. Coleman v. Anheuser-Busch Brewing Assoc., (Tex. Civ. App. 1897) 39 S. W. 1088. But an account for goods sold and delivered in accordance with the terms of a special contract between the buyer and seller is an open account under the statute. Calling for account to disprove it.— Where defendant alleges that plaintiff's account, which from ignorance or mistake he did not object to originally, is erroneous, and calls for it expressly to disprove some of the items and gives evidence to this effect, the fact of his calling for the account is not evidence of its correctness. Gracy v. Bailee, 16 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 126.

Suit upon two separate accounts.— Where plaintiff sues upon two accounts exhibited, but no evidence is offered upon one, and all the evidence introduced applies solely to the other, the admission of payments or the credits upon the account upon which no evidence is introduced cannot be held to apply to that upon which plaintiff relies. E. Pleading — 1. Declaration or Complaint — a. In General. A claim founded upon an account is the subject of an action of assumpsit under the common counts.[46]

b. Sufficiency — (I) In General. In an action on an account the material facts upon which the liability of defendant depends should be distinctly alleged.[47] Under the statutory practice requiring the complaint to state facts which constitute the cause of action, but which permits a more general method of pleading when the account is incorporated in or attached to the complaint, a complaint is bad which fails to give the items of the account or the nature of the demand.[48] In other words, where the complaint itself attempts to set up the cause of action, it must state the subject-matter or consideration of the account.[49]

(II) Demand. In an action on an account an allegation that defendant had refused to pay for the services rendered sufficiently shows that demand was made, if such demand is necessary.[50]

(III) Recovery Confined to Matters Pleaded. A recovery cannot be had for a different cause of action than that pleaded.[51]

(IV) Balance of Account. Sometimes it is material that a proper distinction be made between declaring on an account generally and declaring for the balance.[52] Where plaintiff attempts to recover a general balance of account and alleges a payment on the account generally and the balance remaining due, such payment cannot be applied to any particular item of the account.[53]

46. Bliss Code Pl. § 298.

Form of declaration or complaint, in full, in part, or in substance, under the subdivisions of this section, may be found in the following cases:

Alabama.— Lunsford v. Butler, 102 Ala. 403, 15 So. 239, complaint on verified account with averment of verification instead of indorsement thereof; Eslava v. Ames Plow Co., 47 Ala. 384.

Georgia.— Talbotton R. Co. v. Gibson, 106 Ga. 229, 32 S. E. 151, petition on an account annexed.

Indiana.— Mayes v. Goldsmith, 58 Ind. 94 (complaint before justice of the peace, annexing bill of particulars as exhibit); Sherrod v. Shirley, 57 Ind. 13 (complaint before justice of the peace); Johnson v. Kilgore, 39 Ind. 147 (complaint in form of general count upon account annexed).

Maine.— Cape Elizabeth v. Lombard, 70 Me. 396, count in assumpsit upon an account annexed under statute.

Massachusetts.— Stearns v. Washburn, 7 Gray (Mass.) 187, statutory form of count on account annexed.

Missouri.— Robinson v. Hope Bldg., etc., Co., 72 Mo. App. 522, before justice of the peace by filing itemized account for work and labor, materials furnished, etc.

Ohio.— Ralston v. Kohl, 30 Ohio St. 92 (petition for balance of account, annexing copy); Horning v. Poyer, 18 Ohio Cir. Ct. 732 (petition in short form on account annexed).

Rhode Island.— Hawkins v. McNeal, 16 R. I. 386, 17 Atl. 172, special count on annexed account under statute.

South Carolina.— General Electric Co. v. Blacksburg Land, etc., Co., 46 S. C. 75, 24 S. E. 43, complaint annexing copy as part thereof.

47. Sale and delivery are the material facts in an action on an account for goods and wares sold and delivered, but the legal inference or conclusion of defendant's liability and promise to pay, arising from these facts, need not be alleged, and, if alleged, may be regarded as surplusage. 48. Gise v. Cook, 152 Ind. 75, 52 N. E. 454; Bay v. Saulspaugh, 74 Ind. 397.

49. Bradfield v. Patterson, 106 Ala. 397, 398, 17 So. 536, holding, however, that a complaint which seeks to recover a particular amount due from defendant "by account on, to-wit, April 11, 1890, with interest from that date," is too uncertain, but, in the absence of objection, is sufficient to support a judgment after verdict.

50. Ryors v. Prior, 31 Mo. App. 555.

51. See infra, III, F, 2, c; III, H, 2.

52. Burford v. Earl, (Ark. 1900) 60 S. W. 234, wherein the trial court refused to declare the law to be that plaintiff could not recover on the account for the year sued for if it had been paid, but declared that the suit was for a general balance of account and not for any particular year; but this was held to be erroneous because the pleading showed that the action was brought for an account for goods sold in one year, and in such a case a payment of that account was a complete bar, and a recovery could not be had on an account for goods sold in a prior year.

53. Huffstater v. Hayes, 64 Barb. (N. Y.) 573.

(v) Certainty as to Nature of Claim — (a) Furnishing Items — (1) In General. The common counts in assumpsit gave scant notice of the exact nature of the demand, but this uncertainty has been remedied by various statutory provisions requiring the filing of a bill of particulars in all actions of assumpsit, or the setting out in or filing with the pleading a copy of the items of account sued on.[54] Under these provisions the items of the account need not be set forth in the complaint,[55] but defendant is entitled to notice of these matters, at least if he demands it, and under some statutes, if the pleading is so general as to give no notice of the items, he may demand to be served with a copy of the account sued on. Such statutes are to the effect that plaintiff need not plead the items, but must, upon demand, serve a copy thereof,[56] or certainty is attained by requiring a copy of the account sued on to be filed with or attached to the pleading,[57] or by requiring a copy of the account to be incorporated in the pleading, or, in the alternative, to be filed therewith.[58]

(2) Short Forms on Items Annexed. Under provisions of this character the pleading on behalf of plaintiff often assumes a very concise and inartificial form, the certainty necessary to apprise defendant of the cause of action being embraced in the particulars thus furnished, as that, in effect, plaintiff claims of defendant a certain amount due, as shown by the account annexed or set out.[59]

54. For the practice relating to bills of particulars and exhibits see Pleading.

The manifest object of such provisions is to simplify the form of pleading and yet to furnish the adversary with the particulars of the claim which he is called upon to meet. B. F. Coombs, etc., Commission Co. v. Block, 130 Mo. 668, 32 S. W. 1139; McKemy v. Goodall, 1 Ohio Cir. Ct. 23. The account, when in the writ, is to be read as its words would naturally be interpreted when out of the writ. Therefore by usage it has always been understood and allowed that an item "for merchandise" shall mean "merchandise sold and delivered;" "for work and materials"

(3) Compliance with Statute — (a) Want of Compliance Not Jurisdictional. A failure to file or annex an account or bill of particulars does not go to the jurisdiction of the court.[60]

(b) Effect of Want of Compliance upon Pleading or as to Evidence. The effect of a failure to set out, attach, or serve a copy of the items of an account depends upon the character of the requirements in this regard. While such particulars are always considered as for the purpose of giving notice of the items, sometimes they are for this purpose exclusively and are not in any sense a part of the pleading,[61] and, while defendant may move for the particulars of the demand,[62] the effect of a failure to comply with the statute, whether in the first instance or only after demand, is to preclude proof of such items.[63] In some of these cases shall mean "done and expended for defendant at the defendant's request;" "for cash" shall mean "money lent;" and "for money paid" shall mean "money paid at the special instance and request of the defendant." Cape Elizabeth v. Lombard, 70 Me. 396. But a charge "for rent" is too general; it should be stated "for use and occupation of messuage or tenement," as in a declaration. Plummer v. Bowie, 76 Me. 496. See also Hilton v. Burley, 2 N. H. 193. "For balance due" discloses no items as required by the statute. Turgeon v. Cote, 88 Me. 108, 33 Atl. 787.

Oregon.— Flanders v. Ish, 2 Oreg. 320.

Sworn copy attached as evidence.— But where a sworn account is attached to a petition only as a matter of evidence to relieve plaintiff of making other prima facie proof, it is held that this will not relieve the pleader from making all necessary allegations of delivery and price under the contract of which the exhibit might be the evidence. Suit in justice's court.— Where the statute provides that in a suit founded on an account a bill of items of such account shall be filed with the justice before any process shall be issued in the suit, it is held that, a justice's court being one of special limited jurisdiction, the proceedings therein must show such facts as constitute a case within its jurisdiction, and if the account which is the foundation of the action is not filed before the issuance of the writ, all proceedings thereafter are coram non judice. Pendleton v. Fowler, 6 Ark. 41.

Y.) 329; Gebhard v. Squier, 13 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 43; Schulhoff v. Co-operative Dress Assoc., 3 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 412. If one pleads an account stated, but his pleadings are not inconsistent with the theory that he relies also upon the original account, he must comply with the statute requiring a copy of the account to be furnished, or he will be deemed to have elected to rely upon the stated account alone and will be precluded from giving evidence of the original account upon the trial. Goings v. Patten, 1 Daly (N. Y.) 168.

Oregon.— Flanders v. Ish, 2 Oreg. 320, under a statute requiring plaintiff to set forth the items of the account or to file a copy thereof with his pleadings, verified by his own oath, or, upon failure to do either, to deliver such verified copy to the adverse party upon demand.

Virginia.— Upon failure to file the account sued on with the declaration in indebitatus assumpsit. Minor v. Minor, 8 Gratt. (Va.) 1; Fitch v. Leitch, 11 Leigh (Va.) 471.

United States.— Albion Phosphate Min. Co. v. Wyllie, 77 Fed. 541, 42 U. S. App. 214, 23 C. C. A. 276, under the South Carolina code, not evidence if the account is not set out in the pleading or furnished on demand.

the account filed is regarded as a part of the pleading,[64] as is also the construction under code provisions requiring a copy of the account to be set out or attached, thus dispensing with a more particular statement in the pleading itself,[65] as well as under a statute providing for a short form of pleading in assumpsit by annexing an account. In these instances a failure to comply with the statute may be taken advantage of by demurrer.[66] In such cases as the last, defendant may move for a bill of particulars if he chooses, but the privilege of doing so will not preclude him from demurring.[67]

(c) Pleading Dispensing with Copy. If the declaration is sufficiently plain and particular to give defendant notice of the account sued on, this is a sufficient compliance with the statute requiring a copy of the account to be filed with the declaration in assumpsit,[68] and the form of pleading prescribed by the code, whereby plaintiff may set out a copy of an account sued on and state that there is due him a certain sum thereon, has been held to be permissive merely and not to exclude a full statement of plaintiff's cause of action.[69] But a pleading which neither attaches the account as it purports to do, nor states the facts which show the nature of the indebtedness, is bad.[70]

(d) Short Form. When the statute permits a short method of pleading, as by alleging that the cause of action is based upon an account set out or annexed, the pleading must be in compliance with the statute.[71] But it is held that this Substantial compliance.— If the statute is substantially complied with it is sufficient, and if defendant desires greater certainty he should move to make the petition more definite and certain. Meyer v. Chambers, 68 Mo. 626. If one of the items is too general, and there are other specific items for which judgment may be rendered on an account annexed, the demurrer should be special, calling attention to the particular defect, and not general, drawing the whole declaration in question. In New York it was held that where the action was for money advanced, laid out, and expended for defendant's use, and the complaint specified the facts and circumstances under which and the manner in which it was done, the cause of action was based upon the original indebtedness, and not within the section of the code which precluded plaintiff from giving evidence of the account mentioned in the complaint, unless a copy thereof was furnished upon demand; that under this section it was only in cases in which the pleading was based upon the specific account that this rule applied. Moore v. Belloni, 42 N. Y. Super. Ct. 184. But in Barkley v. Rensselaer, etc., R. Co., 27 Hun (N. Y.) 515, it was held that there was no necessity for giving a limited construction to the word "account" as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 531. See also Derringer v. Pugh, 7 Ohio Cir. Ct. 158.

Contra.— Winters v. Page County, 70 Iowa 300, 30 N. W. 576, holding that under § 2648 of the code, providing that where an action is brought upon an open account, and no copy is incorporated into or attached to the petition, defendant may demur, the necessity for setting out a copy of the account sued on, where the claim is simply and fully stated, does not clearly appear, yet, as the statute requires it to be done, a strict compliance is necessary. But see O'Brien v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 64 Iowa 411, 20 N. W. 738, wherein, on a petition for the recovery on an account for work and labor, it was held, upon a demurrer based upon the objection that the petition showed on its face that the cause of action was brought on an account, and the items thereof were not set forth in the petition or attached thereto, that the cause of action did not necessarily embrace separate items of account, and that under the petition it was competent for plaintiff to prove that he did the work for defendant at the latter's request; that he could establish the allegations of the petition without proof of separate items and by proving the value of the work as a whole.

71. McClendon v. Hernando Phosphate Co., 100 Ga. 219, 28 S. E. 152 (holding that a declaration which alleges that defendant is indebted to plaintiff upon an account, without stating what plaintiff claims to be due form is not exclusive, and that plaintiff may use the common count, which may be made more definite and certain by requiring him to furnish a bill of particulars.[72]

(B) Use of General Counts under Code Practice. The use of the general counts in assumpsit has been held to be wholly inconsistent with the theory of code pleading.[73] But where a bill of particulars is attached, as required by the statute, it is held that a complaint in the nature of a common count will be sufficient.[74] In some of the code states, however, it is held that the requirement that the complaint shall contain a plain and concise statement of the facts constituting the cause of action does not change the rule of pleading, but facts and not evidence of facts must be pleaded, and that a complaint containing the essential elements of a count in indebitatus assumpsit is sufficient, leaving the defendant to demand a bill of particulars or to move to make the pleading more definite and certain.[75]

(VI) ALLEGATION AS TO ACCOUNT ANNEXED. Under the statute relating to a copy of a book-account as evidence when sued upon as such, it is held that the copy must not only be a correct copy, but that this should be made to appear upon its face or by categorical averment.[76] So, under a statute relating to verified upon the account, is not sufficient, notwithstanding it alleges that plaintiff sues for the amount which appears upon the face of a bill of particulars annexed); Beck v. Ball, 1 Clev. L. Rep. (Ohio) 147, 4 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 233; Archer v. Moore Combination Desk Co., 11 Cinc. L. Bull. 224, 9 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 225 (wherein it is held that a petition under such statute must allege that there "is due" on the account a certain amount, and that to say defendant is indebted is not sufficient).

Matters not proper for book-account.— So, if a petition in short form, provided for the recovery of matters properly chargeable in book-account, embraces items which are not properly so charged, defendant should demur to the particular items or move to strike them out, and if he proceeds to trial without objection he cannot move in arrest of judgment. Horning v. Poyer, 18 Ohio Cir. Ct. 732; McKemy v. Goodall, 1 Ohio Cir. Ct. 23. In New Jersey it was held that where a part of plaintiff's demand was "due on contract on exchange of horses, as difference thirty dollars," that part of the demand should not be stated as a matter of book-account, as it was there, but should be specifically set forth; that the defect was not cured by its being mingled with an aggregate charge on the book-account. Good as common count.— Where such petition was amended by alleging that defendant was indebted to plaintiff in a certain sum for money loaned and had and received, etc., "a statement of said claim is hereto attached, marked exhibit A," which statement is a substantial copy of that attached to the original petition, it was held that the amended petition was not intended as a petition in short form under the statute, but was in the nature of a claim for recovery on the common count with a bill of particulars. Statutory foundation.—The particular statute said to be the only warrant for these decisions is that which provides that it shall not be necessary to set forth in the pleading the items of the account, but that the pleader shall deliver to the adverse party, within a certain time after demand, a copy of the account, etc. Bliss Code Pl. § 298, where it is also pointed out that in those states where this provision does not exist the rule would not apply.

accounts, it is held that the petition should contain an allegation of the correctness of the account,[77] and under a statute making a sworn account, when coming from another state or county, conclusive unless denied under oath, it is held that the action is upon the sworn account and the declaration should allege that the account is such as the statute provides for.[78]

(VII) ASSIGNED ACCOUNT. If the action is on an account of which plaintiff is the assignee, the assignment should be shown[79] and the claim identified.[80]

c. Joinder. Different items of an account may be joined in one paragraph or count as one cause of action,[81] and an action on a contract performed may be united with an action on an account, both items being included in one account.[82] The assignee of an account may bring an action thereon, and join therein a

Before a justice of the peace the fact that the suit is based on an account coming from another state and sworn to should be stated in the warrant or otherwise made to appear. It is enough if the account is attached to the warrant. Wilkhorn v. Gillespie, 6 Heisk. (Tenn.) 329.

Waiver.— Where defendant fails to deny under oath an account from another state proven and authenticated as required by statute, and admitted in evidence under such proof and authentication, this is a waiver of a failure to make profert of the account in the declaration. App v. Tieman, 10 Heisk. (Tenn.) 44. If defendant had denied the justice of the account and had objected to its introduction in evidence, it would have been error to have permitted the account to go to the jury. In this the case is distinguished from Hunter v. Anderson, 1 Heisk. (Tenn.) 1.

Suit not on verified account.— In Alabama, under the statute making an itemized statement of a verified account competent evidence of the correctness of the account, if plaintiff, at the time of bringing suit, indorses on the summons and complaint or other original process the fact that the account is verified by affidavit, etc., it is held that it is not within the purview of the statute that the suit should be brought upon the verified account; that the suit is upon the account, which, when verified, is evidence, and that if the fact of verification is noted in the complaint instead of indorsing it thereon, such averment is not descriptive of the cause of action. Sullivan Timber Co. v. Brushagel, 111 Ala. 114, 20 So. 498; Lunsford v. Butler, 102 Ala. 403, 15 So. 239; Elyton Land Co. v. Morgan, 88 Ala. 434, 7 So. 249.

79. Jones v. Dronberger, 15 Ind. 443, holding that if the suit is by an assignee of an account the complaint should be accompanied by a copy of the assignment, or, if the assignment was by parol, should aver this fact. But in Union Bank v. Tillard, 26 Md. 446, assumpsit to recover the amount of an account brought by an assignee, it was held that while, according to the common-law rules of pleading, an omission to aver that the assignment was in writing would have been fatal on demurrer, the form provided by the code in such a case did not require such an averment, and therefore it was not necessary.

Against debtor and assignor as guarantor. — A petition by the assignee of an open account, alleging that the account had been assigned to plaintiff, that its payment had been guaranteed by the assignor, and that, though often demanded, the debt had not been paid by the debtors on the account or the assignment, is sufficient to fix liability on both parties. Short form — Account annexed.— See McKemy v. Goodall, 1 Ohio Cir. Ct. 23, holding that the reason for the law which allows a short form of pleading on an account is that if each item of the debit side of a running account is to be made the subject of a separate cause of action it would be too expensive and burdensome to be borne. The statute therefore allows the account to be pleaded as if all the matters embraced in it were under a single arrangement. And see also Lovell v. Earle, 127 Mass. 546, holding that goods sold and work and labor done, either at their reasonable worth, or at a stipulated price, or under a special contract fully performed by plaintiff, may be sued for under the common counts, and therefore may be joined in a count on an account annexed.

cause of action against the assignor on his guaranty of the payment of the account.[83]

d. Amendment. Failure to file or annex an account is an amendable defect.[84] So, also, a declaration or complaint may be amended by setting out additional items of account,[85] or by inserting words to identify the account sued on.[86] An amendment may be allowed by adding a count on a promissory note which has been pleaded in payment.[87]

2. Plea or Answer — a. Denial of Items. The denial of specific items of an account is proper matter to be pleaded in defense.[88]

b. Denial of Indebtedness — Nil Debet. A plea merely denying indebtedness to plaintiff, or which amounts to the general issue, nil debet, is not a sufficient denial of the averments plainly and distinctly made in the complaint, and raises no issue as to the correctness of the account sued on,[89] and in an action for goods sold and delivered an answer which does no more than deny all indebtedness and set up a counter-claim operates as an admission of plaintiff's claim as set forth in the complaint subject to defendant's counter-claim, and plaintiff must recover unless the counter-claim is established.[90]

Enlargement of claim.— Plaintiff's claim cannot be enlarged by such an amendment. Butler v. Millett, 47 Me. 492.

85. Wise v. Wakefield, 118 Cal. 107, 50 Pac. 310, holding that if the court orders that plaintiff have leave to amend on condition that a previous offer by defendant to allow judgment in a certain sum shall be deemed increased to correspond with the increased demand of plaintiff, and plaintiff does not act on this suggestion, he cannot complain of the denial of his application.

Transfer of items from another action.— But where two parties have commenced separate actions against the same defendant on accounts annexed to their writs, for different and distinct items, the court is not authorized to permit the items of the account embraced in one action to be transferred and added to the account in the other by way of amendment. This would not be an amendment to cure an imperfection or mistake in the manner of stating plaintiff's cause, but would be to substitute a different cause. Merrill v. Russell, 12 N. H. 74.

86. Hawkins v. McNeal, 16 R. I. 386, 17 Atl. 172, permitting an amendment by inserting the words "balance due" so as to make the action one for a balance due on a book-account.

Identification of account reduced by credits. — In a suit on an open account alleged to be due from defendant to plaintiff's assignor under an assignment for the benefit of creditors, the account appeared in the schedule of the various debts assigned, and the account attached to the petition was for a larger amount. Plaintiff alleged, in an amended petition, that the account had been reduced by credits to the amount stated in the assignment. Defendant objected that it was not stated in the assignment to be the balance of the account, but an open account, and therefore contended that the debt sued for was not the one assigned, but it was held that as the object of the assignment was to set over the amount due on an open account from the debtor for the benefit of the creditors, that object would be defeated by mere inadvertency in calling it the balance of an account, and that plaintiff could show that the amount sued for was the balance after credits claimed by defendant for the purpose of identifying the account sued on pursuant to the allegations in the amended petition. W. 667, under the code requiring a specific denial of each allegation of the petition controverted by defendant, holding that the answer must be precise and certain as to the special items intended to be controverted; Cincinnati v. Cameron, 33 Ohio St. 336. But under a petition on an account in the short form permitted by the code in Ohio it was held that a defendant could answer by simply denying the amount due; that in such a case defendant does not deny any items of the account or admit them, but simply denies the amount due and avers specially that it is not as much as the plaintiff claims. Wheeler, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Haas, 6 Ohio N. P. 451.

Before a justice of the peace, under Tex. Rev. Stat. arts. 1603, 1604, it is not necessary for defendant in an action on an open account to plead in writing that the account is not due, as such defense may be made orally and under the general denial. But defendant should be confined to any plea he may make, either in writing or orally, and if he pleads that a certain number of items are incorrect he should not be allowed to dispute other items. 90. Skinker v. Clute, 9 Nev. 342.

c. Admission by Failure to Deny. In an action on an account, a failure to answer and controvert the account operates as an admission of defendant's demand, and no other proof is necessary.[91]

d. Want of Information or Knowledge. As to the correctness of particular items an answer averring that defendant has no knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief, and therefore denying the same, is good under the code,[92] but if defendant desires to defend upon the ground that plaintiff had assigned his claim he must allege the fact.[93]

e. Payment. A plea of payment admits a sale and delivery of the items, and raises no issue as to whether the goods were wrongfully obtained.[94]

f. Several Defenses. Defendant may plead several defenses when the truth of one does not show the falsity of the other.[95]

g. Answer by Way of Set-Off or Counter-Claim. If an answer is based upon an account it should be filed with the pleading, as in the case of a complaint when this is necessary under the statute.[96]

3. Affidavit of Defense — Book-Debt. In several states statutory provisions have existed in substance requiring a defendant sued on a book-account to file an affidavit of defense, and, upon his failure to file a sufficient affidavit, permitting judgment to be entered on the account for the amount thereof.[97] Where the matter is not the proper subject of book-account so that it may be proved by the book, such affidavit is not required in order to prevent judgment,[98] and the account should show a prima facie case.[99] The affidavit of defense must be direct and Payment and denial of value.— Collins v. Fenley, (Ky. 1899) 53 S. W. 667, wherein a denial of the value of the services sued for was held not to be inconsistent with the special plea of payment.

Payment and a denial of the account are inconsistent defenses. Gervin v. Beaird, 26 La. Ann. 630.

Items are not necessary in other cases, and evidence to defeat any item of the account sued on, or to show that the amount is not correct, does not tend to show a set-off or counter-claim, and does not require a defendant to file an itemized pleading. Name of creditor.— In assumpsit a copy of an account filed need not contain the name of the plaintiff from whom the goods were bought, in order to be such a copy that judg-certain,[1] and if it is sufficient a rule for judgment will be discharged, and plaintiff will have the burden of establishing his account.[2]

F. Evidence — 1. Burden of Proof. In an action on an account, plaintiff's account is not in its nature self-proving. Until some testimony is produced tending to prove its correctness, plaintiff shows no right to a recovery, and it is not necessary for defendant to offer any evidence in defense.[3] So plaintiff must prove every other allegation in his pleading essential to his cause of action.[4]

2. Sufficiency — a. In General. Without entering into the question of the admissibility of plaintiff's books as evidence,[5] where this kind of evidence is not resorted to, plaintiff must prove his account by direct and positive testimony,[6] and, conceding the admissibility of such books, they constitute no higher evidence of sale and delivery than the positive testimony of witnesses who swear to the fact.[7]

Open and stated account distinguished.— In an action on an open account the burden of proof is on plaintiff to show the correctness of the account, and not on defendant to show mistakes or credits. In this the rule is different from that in an action on a stated account, in which case the onus is on defendant to impeach its correctness. Secondary evidence — Waiver of objection. Where secondary evidence is introduced to prove an account, and no objection is made thereto, it is as good as if the account had been proved by the best evidence. Smith v. Mather, (Tex. Civ. App. 1899) 49 S. W. 257.

7. Godbold v. Blair, 27 Ala. 592. Where plaintiff introduces evidence from books of original entry for a part of the account, and substantiates the entire account by oral evidence and by the admissions of defendant, it is sufficient, and more cannot be required to establish the account. Plummer v. Struby-Estabrooke Mercantile Co., 23 Colo. 190, 47 Pac. 294.

The proof must go to the items[8] unless an implied or express assent to the correctness of the account can be shown.[9]

b. Proof of Items Dispensed with — (I) In General. But it is not necessary to prove the correctness of specific items of an account if the correctness of the account as a whole can be otherwise established.[10]

(II) Admission — Stated Account. An account may be supported without proof as to the particular items by proving that defendant had admitted the account to be correct.[11] In other words, evidence of a stated account is sufficient proof to support plaintiff's cause of action on an open account,[12] and therefore it may be supported by an implied as well as an express admission, as by the assent which is presumed from acquiescence in an account rendered.[13] But a mere admission of indebtedness without reference to the account in suit may not be sufficient, because the admission must be of such character as to bar a subsequent recovery of the items of the particular account.[14]

c. Recovery Confined to Amount Proved. The plaintiff cannot recover, as a Entries as admissions against interest.— Entries in the ledger kept by defendant are admissible in behalf of plaintiff as admissions against interest. Plummer v. Struby-Estabrooke Mercantile Co., 23 Colo. 190, 47 Pac. 294. See also Evidence.

Execution of note.— In a suit by a merchant on an account current, the fact that plaintiff was defendant's factor and that the latter had executed his promissory note in part payment of the balance of the account, does not prove such balance where defendant's answer contains a general denial and a special averment that at the time he signed the note he had not examined the accounts, and such an answer imposes upon plaintiff the burden of proving the accounts under consideration. Byrne v. Grayson, 15 La. Ann. 457.

Receipt for part payment executed by plaintiff.— In a suit on an account for a balance brought against an administrator of the debtor, a receipt by plaintiff to the decedent for a payment on the account, reciting the balance due, which was found in a pocket-book belonging to decedent after his death, is not such evidence as will require a verdict for plaintiff for such balance. It is doubtful if such evidence alone would support a verdict, but where the verdict was found for defendant the evidence is certainly not such as will require a reversal. Chastain v. Worrill, 69 Ga. 288.

Admission of account in evidence.— After an account is proved to have been stated between the parties, it is admissible in evidence (Rice v. Schloss, 90 Ala. 416, 7 So. 802); and it is competent for a witness to identify a copy of a paper which he himself had made from a book of accounts, and to show what defendant said in relation to it (Hirschfelder v. Levy, 69 Ala. 351; Holmes v. Gayle, 1 Ala. 517).

Effect of counter-affidavit.— While the proper verification of an account under the statute authorizes the admission of the account in evidence, unless met by a counter-affidavit denying the correctness of the account, such counter-affidavit destroys the admissibility of the account only by virtue of the provisions of the statute and has no influence to exclude the account which is shown to have been rendered to defendant and acquiesced in by him. Hirschfelder v. Levy, 69 Ala. 351.

balance of an account, a larger amount than that proved.[15] But he is not bound to prove all he claims, and may recover for any sum within that claimed which is established by evidence.[16]

d. Balance. Plaintiff is only to show the correctness of the debits with the credits to which the account is entitled, and the difference will make the balance to be recovered unless the account is falsified by proof of other credits, etc.[17] But where the action is for the recovery of a general balance of an account upon which a payment is admitted, the full balance cannot be recovered without proof of all the items of debt, because there is no authority in such a case to apply the payments to any particular items of the account.[18]

e. Evidence Tending to Show Truth of Items. The truth of the items being the point in issue, any evidence which tends to show this is proper.[19]

f. Special Contract. As has been shown, an action on an account may be maintained notwithstanding the subject-matter relates to a special contract which has been fully performed,[20] from which it logically follows that plaintiff may prove his action as laid, though the writing itself would be admissible in evidence whether mentioned in the pleading or not.[21]

15. Jesse v. Davis, 34 Mo. App. 351; Chandler v. Meckling, 22 Tex. 36.

Erroneous instruction.— It is erroneous to instruct the jury that positive proof of the correctness of most of the items of the account is sufficient to justify them in presuming that all the items are correct. Moore v. Joyce, 23 Miss. 584.

Accounts carelessly kept.—Where plaintiff, whose duty it is to keep and render accounts, has copied his accounts and given receipts so carelessly as to render it impossible to ascertain with certainty the amount due him, in a suit instituted by him to recover the balance of the account a judgment giving him less than he claims will not be disturbed. It is his duty to keep his accounts in such manner as to furnish such evidence as will enable the court to fix with certainty the exact amount due to him. Moreau v. Blanchard, 6 La. Ann. 101.

Verdict for one item of running account.— Though an indebtedness may be the result of a running account, it is not necessary, in an action for money had and received, to produce the account to prove all the items thereof, but plaintiff may prove any isolated receipt of money and claim a verdict for the amount. Planters' Bank v. Farmers, etc., Bank, 8 Gill & J. (Md.) 449.

17. Hooper v. Hartwell, 12 Colo. App. 161, 54 Pac. 864. In Hunt v. Mewis, 17 Nebr. 422, 23 N. W. 10, defendant, in an action for the recovery of a balance due for goods sold and delivered, pleaded a set-off, and judgment was rendered in his favor. An itemized bill was attached to the deposition of one of the witnesses, and the fact of the purchase was not seriously questioned, but it was claimed that the goods were received at a particular store of the plaintiff. The action did not purport to be brought on an account with that store, but for a general balance, and, admissions being shown to have been made by defendant that he owed plaintiff a balance, it was held that the judgment for defendant could not be sustained.

19. Graham v. Harmon, 84 Cal. 181, 23 Pac. 1097, wherein the account furnished contained charges and credits by mistake which offset each other and it was held that plaintiff might be allowed to explain such items and to show that they grew out of an attempt to blend the distinct accounts into one by mistake, such testimony tending to show the true state of the account.

The fact that the amount proved to be due was under a special contract and was less than the sum of the items included in plaintiff's account will not, as a matter of law, prevent the recovery of the amount actually due. Lovell v. Earle, 127 Mass. 546.

Assumpsit on account annexed.— But in assumpsit on an account annexed it is held that a sufficient declaration must contain all the allegations necessary to make out plaintiff's case without reference to a paper not attached; that an account annexed is a part of the declaration; and that as each item is or may be a separate contract in itself, no proof in regard to such contract is admissible if not relied upon in the declaration. This was in reference to an account annexed containing but one lumped item without notice of the several items of which it consisted. Bennett v. Davis, 62 Me. 544.

Amendment.— Plaintiff may amend his declaration, not for the purpose of counting upon the contract as a distinct cause of ac-

g. Evidence against Existence or Correctness of Claim. Any evidence which legitimately tends to combat the correctness[22] or existence of plaintiff's claim is admissible.[23] But testimony which cannot control the issues legally made is inadmissible,[24] and if such evidence is prejudicial its admission will be reversible error.[25]

3. Proof by Oath of Plaintiff. By statute in some states, especially at an early day, the oath of plaintiff has been made competent and sufficient evidence of an account,[26] referring to particular kinds of demands, as those which are properly chargeable on book, in connection with the introduction of such book in evidence,[27] or upon other conditions prescribed.[28] Where the admissibility of such proof is made to depend upon defendant's failure to controvert the truth of the facts sworn to by plaintiff, the latter's oath is deprived of all effect as testimony if it is met by defendant's oath as prescribed.[29]

22. Glenn v. Salter, 50 Ga. 170, evidence of a credit to which defendant was entitled and which had not been discovered until testimony introduced on a former trial.

Evidence of former trial.— Where plaintiff brought two suits on an open account it was held proper to admit, on the trial of the second, evidence of payments which was introduced on the trial of the first, if the jury are cautioned that defendant cannot be allowed twice for the same payments, where, on account of the confused condition of the facts, it is apparent that complete justice cannot be done unless all the evidence on the first trial is admitted on the second, so that a true balance may be arrived at, and where no injury can result from such course. Hazard Powder Co. v. Viergutz, 6 Kan. 471.

23. Previous assignment not including debt claimed.— Evidence that plaintiff had previously made an assignment for the benefit of his creditors without including the account sued on in his list of assets is competent to show that such claim was not, at the time of the assignment, considered a legal one. Pawtucket Steam, etc., Pipe Co. v. Briggs, 21 R. I. 457, 44 Atl. 595.

Goods furnished to third persons.— Evidence that plaintiff agreed to take payment in goods to be furnished to third persons is admissible to defeat plaintiff's cause of action. Price v. Combs, 12 N. J. L. 216.

24. Low v. Griffin, (Tex. Civ. App. 1897) 41 S. W. 73, holding that, in an action on an open account for the price of lumber sold, evidence of a custom to allow builders a reasonable time to check bills is inadmissible, because, in the absence of an agreement, such items are due when the lumber is delivered.

25. Wolff v. Matthews, 39 Mo. App. 376, holding that as, in an action on an account brought by an assignee, an individual debt cannot be set off against a partnership debt, testimony by defendant that one of the members of the assignor firm was largely indebted to defendant at the time of the trial is irrelevant and prejudicial when introduced for the purpose of creating the inference that the assignment of the account had been made to defraud the creditors of the assignor.

Deposition.— The deposition of plaintiff under such statute may be taken under circumstances which will authorize the taking of the deposition of any other witness. Moore v. Hatfield, 3 Ala. 442.

On appeal.— On appeal from a justice's court to the circuit court where the trial is de novo, plaintiff may prove his claim by his own oath where it is under the amount prescribed by the statute. Murfs v. Harding, 6 Port. (Ala.) 121.

28. Time of standing of account.— Alexander v. Smoot, 35 N. C. 461. An account originating several years before action, which contains a series of charges the last of which is within a year of the time of the commencement of the action, is an account within the statute providing that the court or justice may examine the parties under oath in actions on book-accounts of no more than eighteen months' standing. Marshall v. Bond, Tappan (Ohio) 99.

Restriction as to amount.—Jordan v. Owen, 27 Ala. 152. See Moore v. Hatfield, 3 Ala. 442; Murfs v. Harding, 6 Port. (Ala.) 121; McWilliams v. Cosby, 26 N. C. 110. The plaintiff may prove his account by his own oath when the balance is within the amount limited by statute, although the account produced appears to have been for more than that amount originally, but is reduced by credits to an amount within that prescribed by the statute. Grant v. Cole, 9 Ala. 366; McWilliams v. Cosby, 26 N. C. 110. And if an account carries interest on appeal from a justice's court, plaintiff may release the interest and thus bring his claim within the amount prescribed, so as to be entitled to prove it by his own oath. Murfs v. Harding, 6 Port. (Ala.) 121.

Strict construction.— The restriction upon the right to prove an account in reference to the articles sold and delivered cannot be made to confer any additional right by construction. Alexander v. Smoot, 35 N. C. 461.

4. Verified Accounts — a. Nature and Effect — (1) In General. In many of the states, statutory provisions have been enacted which in effect make a verified account in an action on an account prima facie evidence of its correctness unless such affidavit is controverted or the correctness of the account is denied by defendant under oath.[30] Under these provisions, if the account is verified and Plaintiff restricted.— Plaintiff cannot, under such a provision, shape the facts which he proposes to prove by his own oath so as to deprive defendant of the right to prove by his oath that the demand has been paid. Jordan v. Owen, 27 Ala. 152.

Defendant restricted.— Defendant is confined to a denial of the whole or a portion of plaintiff's statements (Yarborough v. Hood, 13 Ala. 176), and the statement of additional facts will not weaken the first denial (Jones v. McLuskey, 10 Ala. 27). Where plaintiff has proved the correctness of his account by his own oath, defendant cannot bring out new facts on cross-examination and then contradict them upon his own oath. West v. Brunn, 35 Ala. 263.

Defendant not a witness generally.—Under such a statute defendant is not made a competent witness to be sworn generally to give evidence to the jury, but his only privilege is to deny on oath the truth of plaintiff's testimony and thus exclude it from the jury. Hayden v. Boyd, 8 Ala. 323. The statute cannot be construed to permit a defendant to prove an offset arising out of an account, the privilege being accorded to plaintiff because he must necessarily give notice to defendant for what the latter is sued, and defendant will always be prepared to rebut oath with oath; but if the same privilege were extended to defendant the same conditions would not exist unless it be admitted that a plaintiff is bound to attend the progress of his suit in person. Bennett v. Armstead, 3 Ala. 507.

Positive oath.— Under the statute making plaintiff competent to establish the correctness of his demand by his own oath unless defendant in open court "denies upon oath the truth of the facts proposed to be sworn to by plaintiff," it is contemplated that the denial of defendant, as well as the statement of plaintiff, shall be positive, as of one who speaks from actual knowledge and not merely upon information and belief. This was held to be clearly indicated by the fact that by another section of the code the legislature enacted that the above provision should not apply in cases in which parties occupying fiduciary relations were defendants, since they are not personally cognizant of the facts. Stat. § 7525, which provided for the service of a declaration with the account and affidavit showing its correctness and making the account, when so served, prima facie evidence unless defendant filed with his plea an affidavit denying its correctness.

Mississippi.— Ware v. McQuillan, 54 Miss. 703; Reinhardt v. Carter, 49 Miss. 315.

Texas.— Olive v. Hester, 63 Tex. 190; Moore v. Powers, 16 Tex. Civ. App. 436, 41 S. W. 707; Shuford v. Chinski, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 26 S. W. 141, holding that in an action on a verified account plaintiff must prove only such items as are not denied on oath; Cahn v. Salinas, 2 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 104; Carder v. Wilder, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 14.

Exception — Administrators.— Such account is not evidence against an administrator on an account against his intestate. Another article of the revised statute controls, which provides that in an action by or against an administrator neither party shall be allowed to testify against the other as to transactions with or statements by the intestate. Leverett v. Wherry, (Tex. App. 1890) 15 S. W. 121.

Account stated.— Where a complaint contains two counts, one declaring on an account stated and the other for goods, wares, and merchandise sold by plaintiff to defendant, and plaintiff, at the time of bringing suit, indorses on the summons and complaint the fact that the account sued on is verified by affidavit, both counts are held to be on an account within the statute, and there is no variance between the allegations and the proof made by the verified account. Clements v. Mayfield Woolen Mills, (Ala. 1900) 29 So. 10.

A set-off is in effect a cross-action, and an account constituting it may be proved under a statute of this character. Heer Dry Goods Co. v. Shaffer, 51 Ark. 368, 11 S. W. 517.

Supplying lost account.— A verified itemized account is merely an instrument of evidence, and, if lost or mislaid after the suit is begun and before trial, may be supplied by a new account. But in order to prove the contents of the verified account it must be shown that the account was verified by an officer authorized to take affidavits, as well as when the account accrued, when it became due, and what was the substance of the verification. Alexander v. Moore, 111 Ala. 410, 20 So. 339.

defendant fails to file a counter-affidavit as prescribed, the evidence furnished by the account and affidavit of plaintiff is sufficient to entitle him to a recovery, and defendant cannot dispute the correctness of the account. But if the account is denied under oath the prima facie effect of plaintiff's affidavit is utterly destroyed.[31] If, however, plaintiff does not verify his account, he must establish his cause as in other cases, and defendant will be at liberty to contest the correctness of the account without denying its correctness under oath.[32]

(II) Issue Raised without Counter-Affidavit. The statute prescribes a rule of evidence and not of pleading, and if an appropriate plea is filed it cannot be treated as a nullity, because the correctness of the account is not denied under oath, but the issue thus formed must be submitted to the jury.[33]

(III) Evidence Confined to Correctness of Account — (A) In General. An account verified in the mode prescribed will not establish more than that of which the statute makes it evidence,— that is to say, the existence and justness of the demand,— and it will not establish the character in which defendant is sued or other material allegations of the declaration.[34]

(B) Defenses Available without Counter-Affidavit. Consistently with the rule last stated, if the matter which defendant sets up is not an attack upon the account, he may show such matter in defense without a denial under oath of plaintiff's verified account. That the account is not due,[35] payment,[36] set-off or recoupment,[37] counter-claim,[38] and the statute of limitations, have been held to be of this character.[39]

(IV) Effect of Introducing Other Evidence. Where proof of the Account from another state or county.— In Tennessee a statutory provision such as mentioned in the text is confined to accounts coming from another state or county. See Briggs v. Montgomery, 3 Heisk. (Tenn.) 673; Hunter v. Anderson, 1 Heisk. (Tenn.) 1; Brien v. Peterman, 3 Head (Tenn.) 498. This statute is not to be construed in pari materia with another statute commonly called the book-debt law, and the proven account need not be limited to the sum which plaintiff may prove by virtue of the said book-debt law. Cave v. Baskett, 3 Humphr. (Tenn.) 340.

31. Except in Texas the text is fully supported by the cases last above cited. In this state, under the act of 1874, it was held that defendant was not precluded from rebutting the prima facie case made by plaintiff's affidavit without a counter-affidavit. English v. Miltenberger, 51 Tex. 296. But under Tex. Rev. Stat. art. 2266, it is held that a verified account cannot be denied except by regular denial under oath. Cahn v. Salinas, 2 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 104; Rives v. Habermacher, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 747.

Effect of supplemental pleading.— In a suit upon an open account verified by affidavit the denial of the correctness of the account under oath destroys the prima facie effect of plaintiff's affidavit. This result cannot be obviated by a supplemental petition under oath reiterating the original pleading as to the justice of the account. Olive v. Hester, 63 Tex. 190.

Introduction in evidence.— But it is held that, as a statute of this character merely makes the account prima facie evidence, like other evidence it must be introduced before defendant is called upon to make objections. Gordon v. Sibley, 59 Mich. 250, 26 N. W. 485, holding that the mere filing of an account with a justice before trial is not a sufficient introduction, and that when a case is submitted under such circumstances without any other evidence, plaintiff cannot have a judgment.

32. Cook v. Burnham, 3 Kan. App. 27, 44 Pac. 447; Smith v. Mather, (Tex. Civ. App. 1899) 49 S. W. 257.

On appeal from justice's judgment.— The introduction of the affidavit in evidence to the jury on the trial of an appeal taken by defendant from a judgment of a justice of the peace is conclusive upon plaintiff's right to recover unless defendant has filed his written affidavit denying the justness of the whole or some part of the account. Rockmore v. Cullen, 94 Ga. 648, 21 S. E. 845.

account is made by other evidence, defendant is in no manner injured by the admission in evidence of a verified account under the statute.[40]

(v) Examination of Parties as Witnesses. But the statute does not contemplate that either party shall be examined on oath as a witness in the usual form, but intends that the affidavit required from one party shall be met by an affidavit from the other.[41] Nor does it apply where plaintiff appears in open court to prove his account.[42]

b. Compliance with Statute — (i) In General. It is only by force of the statute that an itemized statement of an account verified by affidavit is legal evidence. The account must be one which comes within the terms of the statute,[43] and such conditions as it prescribes must be complied with.[44] Where the statute requires a verified account to be served with the pleading it cannot be made prima facie evidence unless it is so served.[45]

(ii) Sufficiency of Affidavit — (a) In General. The affidavit to an account must comply with the statute, else the account should be excluded upon objection.[46] But if the affidavit contains all that the statute requires, stated in substantial compliance with the statute, it will be sufficient.[47]

(b) Time of Making. At what time the affidavit should be made in order to make the account prima facie evidence on the trial depends upon the statute. Thus, under the statutes already referred to, making it necessary for a plaintiff to furnish a statement of his items upon demand, or, upon failure to do so, excluding evidence thereof,[48] or requiring such items to be annexed to the pleading under

42. Dowdle v. Stenson, Ga. Dec. pt. II, 150, holding that where plaintiff proves his account on the trial the affidavit of defendant is not admissible to rebut the original affidavit of plaintiff, as both affidavits are inadmissible in such a case.

43. Items due.— Where the statute required the affidavit to the account to state that the account was due, it was held that all the items of the account must have matured at the date of the affidavit in order to give it the effect intended. Shaunnessey v. Le Gierse, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 379.

Other matters must be proved otherwise. Forsee v. Matlock, 7 Heisk. (Tenn.) 421.

44. Indorsement of fact of verification.— Where the statute prescribes, as a condition of the competency of such evidence, that plaintiff at the time of bringing his suit shall indorse on the summons and complaint or other original process the fact that the account is verified by affidavit, the account cannot be admitted in evidence by virtue of the statute unless the indorsement is made. Gainer v. Pollock, 96 Ala. 554, 11 So. 539. See supra, III, E, 1, b, (vi). One way of noting the fact of verification is to aver it in the complaint, and this is taken as a sufficient compliance with the statute. 47. Hershy v. MacGreevy, 46 Ark. 498; McGowan v. Lamb, 66 Mich. 615, 618, 33 N. W. 881, holding that an affidavit that the "annexed account is just, due, and unpaid" is a substantial compliance with the requirement that the affidavit shall state the account to be "justly owing and due," as, to be just, due, and unpaid, the account must necessarily be justly owing and due.

Verified pleading.—It is not necessary that the affidavit should be attached to the account, but the spirit of the statute is complied with if the complaint to which the account is attached, and in which reference is made to it, is verified. Hershy v. MacGreevy, 46 Ark. 498.

the same penalty, the account must be sworn to at the time it is so furnished or annexed.[49] The statute must be considered as intending that the oath shall be made at least substantially contemporaneous with the institution of the suit.[50]

(c) By Whom Made. The affidavit must be made by the person contemplated by the statute, as by one who is competent to testify to the facts, being the party himself or his qualified agent.[51] Where two defendants are jointly interested, the oath of one of them is sufficient if it goes to the justice of the entire account,[52] and if an affiant has sufficient interest at the time of making the affidavit it is immaterial that his interest was acquired after the transactions to which he swears.[53]

(d) Before Whom Made. The affidavit should be made before an officer having authority to administer the oath.[54]

(iii) Sufficiency of Denial. The sworn denial must be in compliance with the statute in order to deprive plaintiff's affidavit of its force as evidence.[55] A verified plea is held to be a sufficient verified denial,[56] but an unsworn plea will not suffice as a substitute for the affidavit required.[57] Where the statute does not require the affidavit to be filed with the pleading,[58] a denial at any time before trial has been held to be sufficient,[59] and the denial may be made for the first time on appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace.[60]

(iv) Objection — Waiver. Objection to plaintiff's affidavit should be raised when the account is offered in evidence, as the defect goes to the evidence and not to the pleading and is not available on demurrer,[61] and if defendant appears and permits an account and affidavit to be introduced in evidence without objec-

50. McHugh v. Butler, 39 Mich. 185, in which case the affidavit was made seven days before the suit was brought, and it was held that plaintiff could not insist, as a matter of right, on going back and making the proof necessary to substantiate his account after defendant had closed his case, though the court, in its discretion, may permit him to do so.

Statutes construed in pari materia.— A general statute authorizing certain officers outside of the state to administer oaths and affidavits to be used in the state will be construed in pari materia with a statute relating to affidavits to accounts to be used as prima facie evidence, so that an affidavit taken before such officer outside the state will be admissible. Reinhardt v. Carter, 49 Miss. 315.

55. Ford v. Cornish, 2 MacArthur (D. tion he waives his right to object for the first time after the proof is closed.[62] In like manner, if a defendant pleads without making the required affidavit, and issue is joined and the parties go to trial without objection, plaintiff is held to waive the benefit of the statute.[63]

G. Instructions — 1. In General. The court may properly instruct as to the true rule for the deduction of credits in the adjustment of a balance,[64] but should not declare to the jury a mere presumption of fact.[65] And an instruction upon the burden of proof which fails to observe the proper distinction between actions upon open and stated accounts, in a case calling for such distinction, is erroneous.[66]

2. As to Items Which May Be Stricken Out. If any of the items of an account sued on are such as may be stricken out, they need not be actually expunged, but the jury may be directed to disregard them.[67]

H. Verdict and Judgment — 1. In General. Where an issue is made by the pleadings a judgment nil dicit cannot be entered.[68] The judgment should be based upon the verdict of the jury, and a general verdict without ascertaining the amount due will not support a judgment for the sum demanded.[69]

2. Confined to Items Pleaded. Plaintiff's recovery will be confined to the items which he has pleaded as his cause of action,[70] but he is entitled to a judgment for that part of his account which is shown to be due, though the evidence is uncertain as to the remainder.[71]

3. Balance of Account. In an action upon an open and mutual account current the balance of the account is the subject of the recovery, and a verdict for such balance should be returned, though defendant fails to plead a set-off.[72]

Instruction covering general principles.— If any of the items of the account are not proved by competent testimony, defendant may move to have them excluded, or for an instruction that there is no evidence before the jury as to such items; but the court should not be asked to instruct that one clerk cannot testify as to entries made by another unless he knew them to be correct of his own knowledge, or to give an instruction covering general principles as to the admissibility of evidence. Ward v. Wheeler, 18 Tex. 249.

68. Clements v. Mayfield Woolen Mills, (Ala. 1900) 29 So. 10, wherein the evidence without conflict sustained plaintiff's cause of action on an account, and it was held error to enter judgment nil dicit with award of a writ of inquiry, as defendant had pleaded non assumpsit and was entitled to have the jury pass upon the credibility of the evidence.

Judgment correct as to amount, but erroneous as to items.— If the judgment is erroneous as to particular items allowed or disallowed, but is correct as to the amount, the error is not prejudicial. Clark County v. Kerstan, 60 Ark. 508, 30 S. W. 1046.

Remitting excess.— In an action on an account annexed to the writ the verdict should not be for a larger amount than that claimed in the writ, but the plaintiff may remit the excess. Butler v. Millett, 47 Me. 492.

4. Illegal Items. Where the verdict includes no part of an illegal item, but is based only on those items of the account which are legal, it is good.[73]

5. Default or Admission. For those items of an account which defendant admits to be due, plaintiff is entitled to a verdict and judgment in any event.[74] Such admission also refers to the failure of defendant to deny particular items, and to default judgments rendered upon pleadings conforming to the statutory provisions relating to the setting out or attachment of accounts sued on and the failure to deny verified accounts.[75]

Ohio.— Dallas v. Ferneau, 25 Ohio St. 635.

South Carolina.— Roberts v. Pawley, 50 S. C. 491, 27 S. E. 913, holding that under the code provisions authorizing a judgment without verdict when the itemized account is duly verified and served with the summons and complaint, where the account is not so verified a default judgment will be vacated on motion; and that where the record shows that the account was not so verified it is immaterial that there is found unexplained in the judgment-roll a separate and unattached paper purporting to be an itemized account. See also Locke v. Farley, 41 Mich. 405, 1 N. W. 955.

77. Bouvier L. Dict. See also supra, I, K; and infra, III, A, 2.

Book-account should not be extended beyond the necessity which gave birth to it. Terrill v. Beecher, 9 Conn. 344; Keeler v. Mathews, 17 Vt. 125; Hall v. Eaton, 12 Vt. 510; Case v. Berry, 3 Vt. 332. In Bradley v. Goodyear, 1 Day (Conn.) 104, 106, the court said: "The action of book-debt is peculiar to Connecticut. The allowing a party to support a claim by his own testimony is repugnant to general common-law principles, and though the action was originally dictated by a supposed necessity it ought not to be extended beyond the objects of its institution." In Wilkins v. Stevens, 8 Vt. 214, 217, Redfield, J., says: "Formerly great diversity of opinion among the profession, and not a little upon the bench, prevailed in relation to the policy of restricting or extending the boundaries of this action. And the mode of trial which obtains by statute in that action is so different from proceedings in trials at common law that there is very just grounds for such contrariety of opinion. Some, indeed, of eminent attainments in judicial science and learning, prefer extending the same mode of trial to all action; while others, of no less pretensions, would wish to abolish the action entirely."

Thus book-account will not lie to aid one in recovering money paid which in equity and good conscience the party ought not to recover in any other form of action, especially where, at the time of its payment and receipt, it was never expected to form a subject of a claim on book. Hall v. Eaton. 12 Vt. 510. So, where a party is engaged in an illicit transaction, the court will not sustain an action of book-account to aid him in such transaction. Lockwood v. Knap, 1 Root (Conn.) 153. Subscriptions for capital stock of a railroad company are not proper items of book-charge and should not be so charged in the absence of an agreement to that effect. Gleason v. Vermont Cent. R. Co., 25 Vt. 37.

Beyond its original limits the action has been extended so that it will lie now "where from the course of dealing between the parties it might be presumed to have been their intention that the subject should be so adjusted." Hall v. Eaton, 12 Vt. 510, 512 [citing Fassett v. Vincent, 8 Vt. 73; Farrand v. Gage, 3 Vt. 326; Case v. Berry, 3 Vt. 332]. Thus where plaintiff, a railroad corporation, agreed to pay a reasonable compensation for passing over defendant's land, and the auditor reported that it was the mutual expectation of the parties that these damages would be embraced in the adjustment of their book-accounts, it was held proper to include such an item. Chamberlain v. Farr, 23 Vt. 265.

2. When Action Lies — a. Rule Stated. Where the articles or services are such as are usually charged on book, and are themselves proper subjects of book-charge, the action of book-account, in jurisdictions where such action exists, may be maintained if at common law assumpsit will lie to recover the same claim.[78] It is well settled that book-account will not lie except where at common law assumpsit will lie;[79] but while book-account can only lie where at common law assumpsit will lie, it is nevertheless true that assumpsit may be maintained in many cases where book-account will not be allowed.[80] Like assumpsit, book-account requires a contract or promise, express or implied, to support it,[81] and in

It will also now lie "where plaintiff has been induced to accept that in payment which is no payment, and that by the misrepresentation of defendant." Hall v. Eaton, 12 Vt. 510, 512 [citing Gilman v. Peck, 11 Vt. 516, 34 Am. Dec. 702].

Distinguished from action of account.— Book-debt is distinguished from action of account at common law in Bowers v. Dunn, 2 Root (Conn.) 59; Woodward v. Harlow, 28 Vt. 338; Wetherell v. Evarts, 17 Vt. 219. See also supra, II. In Woodward v. Harlow, 28 Vt. 338, it is said that when notes go into the hands of a bailiff or receiver under a contract he may be called to an account in the common-law action of account, or under the Vermont statute he may be sued in book-account. But account on book and action of account at common law are not always concurrent remedies. Hall v. Peck, 10 Vt. 474, In Huxley v. Carman, 46 Vt. 462, it was said to be foreign to the letter and spirit of the Vermont statute to allow a party whose principal matter of controversy properly belongs to the action of account, but who has a few items of book-account disconnected with it, or incidentally connected with it, to bring in and adjust such matter in an action of book-account. "Little can be said in favor of the action of account over the action on book-account." Herrick v. Richardson, 17 Vt. 375, 379.

Distinguished from assumpsit.— See infra, III, A, 2, a.

Distinguished from covenant.—Where remedy by covenant upon a contract under seal may be maintained, it seems that plaintiff cannot waive the right to sue in covenant and sue in book-account or assumpsit. Myrick v. Slason, 19 Vt. 121. To the same effect see Proctor v. Wiley, 55 Vt. 344.

Its analogy to action of debt.— Book-account is more analogous to the action of debt on simple contract than to the action of account. Matthews v. Tower, 39 Vt. 433.

78. Humphrey v. Oviatt, 8 Conn. 413; Hodges v. Fox, 36 Vt. 74; Pangborn v. Saxton, 11 Vt. 79; Case v. Berry, 3 Vt. 332; Newton v. Higgins, 2 Vt. 366; Stevens v. Richards, 2 Aik. (Vt.) 81.

79. Kidder v. Sowles, 44 Vt. 303; Hodges v. Fox, 36 Vt. 74; Case v. Berry, 3 Vt. 332; Barlow v. Read, 1 Vt. 97; Read v. Barlow, 1 Aik. (Vt.) 145.

In Wilkins v. Stevens, 8 Vt. 214, 219, the court says: "In every case when, in the action on book, the parties claim to recover for goods sold and delivered, or labor, etc., if they are the ordinary subjects of book-charge and might have been recovered under the general indebitatus counts in assumpsit they will be permitted to recover. . . . But whenever the contract is so expressed that the party must go, not for a fixed price named in currency, not for the value of his alternative of the obligation, but for the value of defendant's promise, then neither this action nor general indebitatus assumpsit will lie."

Collateral liability.— Book-account cannot be sustained to enforce defendant's liability where the liability is only collateral to that of another person. Smith v. Hyde, 19 Vt. 54.

"So far as convenience is concerned, the book action is preferable to assumpsit, and the remedy is as ample." Herrick v. Richardson. 17 Vt. 375, 379.

80. Case v. Berry, 3 Vt. 332; Boardman v. Keeler, 2 Vt. 65, 66, wherein it is said: "There is frequently some difficulty in drawing the line where book-debt shall end and assumpsit commence."

By statute in Connecticut, however, it is said that book-debt has been made coextensive with general assumpsit. Lockwood v. Lockwood, 22 Conn. 425; Finch v. Finch, 22 Conn. 411. See also Wetherell v. Evarts, 17 Vt. 219, 222, wherein it is said that "book-account has to a great extent become a concurrent remedy with the action of assumpsit for the collection of debts."

81. Finch v. Finch, 22 Conn. 411; Lockwood v. Lockwood, 22 Conn. 425; Phenix v. Prindle, Kirby (Conn.) 207; Hodges v. Fox, 36 Vt. 74; Jones v. Wood, 30 Vt. 268; Gleason v. Briggs, 28 Vt. 135; Chase v. Spencer, 27 Vt. 412; Stearns v. Dillingham, 22 Vt. 624, 54 Am. Dec. 88; Hassam v. Hassam, 22 Vt. 516; Eaton v. Whitcomb, 17 Vt. 641; Bailey v. Bailey, 16 Vt. 656; Peach v. Mills, 14 Vt. 371; Barlow v. Read, 1 Vt. 97; Read v. Barlow, 1 Aik. (Vt.) 145.

Authentication of contract.—"The question whether the party may bring this action depends upon other considerations than the mode of authenticating the contract." Wilkins v. Stevens, 8 Vt. 214, 218.

Implied promise.— In Wolcott v. Wolcott, 19 Vt. 37, plaintiff was allowed to recover in book-account against the town where it appeared that the overseers of the poor requested him to take care of a transient boarder in his house, there being an implied promise to reimburse him for his expenses.

Privity of contract is necessary to sustain the action, and the law may raise such a privity from the circumstances of the transaction. Waterman v. Stimpson, 24 Vt. 508.

the absence of such a promise the action of book-account can no more be maintained than can the action of assumpsit at common law.[82]

b. Charges on Book for Which Action Will Lie — (I) Right to Charge — (A) Generally. The right to make a charge on book must exist at the time of delivering the articles[83] or at the time of rendering the services;[84] and must arise in consequence of such delivery or rendition.[85]

(B) Existence of Relation of Debtor and Creditor. The right to make a charge on book may exist, although the party charged is not absolutely the debtor in relation to the subject.[86]

(C) Special Agreements. Special agreements as to the amount, or as to the time and manner of payment, it seems, will not defeat plaintiff's right to make a book-charge of items of a kind usually so charged.[87] On the other hand an

Subsequent promise.— Where one undertook to sell certain articles on commission and was unsuccessful, a subsequent promise to pay all expenses incurred for a relinquishment of his right constitutes such a promise to pay as will support an action of book-account. Perry v. Buckman, 33 Vt. 7.

82. Jones v. Moore, 50 Vt. 53, wherein it was held that the value of certain goods which had been attached by plaintiff and lost in the officer's hands after the attachment had been abandoned could not be recovered in book-account.

Repairs on borrowed property.— In Scott v. Brigham, 27 Vt. 561, the expenses of repairing a borrowed article which was broken while used by the borrower could not be recovered in book-account in the absence of a contract to that effect, express or implied, on the part of the borrower. But see infra, note 2, p. 499, as to repairs on hired property.

Torts.— Since the right of action must depend upon a promise, express or implied, book-account will not lie for a tort. Green v. Pratt, 11 Conn. 205; Stow v. Black, 37 Vt. 25; Drury v. Douglas, 35 Vt. 474; Winn v. Sprague, 35 Vt. 243; Jones v. Wood, 30 Vt. 268; Smalley v. Soragen, 30 Vt. 2; Soule v. Dougherty, 24 Vt. 92; Hassam v. Hassam, 22 Vt. 516; Scott v. Lance, 21 Vt. 507; McCrillis v. Banks, 19 Vt. 442; Peach v. Mills, 14 Vt. 371; Fry v. Slyfield, 3 Vt. 246; Miller v. French, 1 Aik. (Vt.) 99. Thus, neither money lost by the negligence of a servant (Chase v. Spencer, 27 Vt. 412), nor the value of goods which have been intermixed with those of defendant, are proper subjects of book-charge (Pratt v. Bryant, 20 Vt. 333); but by special agreement damages for a tort may, it seems, be made a proper subject of book-charge. Stow v. Black, 37 Vt. 25; Winn v. Sprague, 35 Vt. 243; Chamberlain v. Farr, 23 Vt. 265; Hassam v. Hassam, 22 Vt. 516.

Tort cannot be waived so as to recover for the claim in book-account. Drury v. Douglas, 35 Vt. 474; Stearns v. Dillingham, 22 Vt. 624, 54 Am. Dec. 88; Hassam v. Hassam, 22 Vt. 516; Scott v. Lance, 21 Vt. 507; McCrillis v. Banks, 19 Vt. 442; Peach v. Mills, 14 Vt. 371.

Facts which occur subsequent to the delivery of the article will not, as a rule, confer the right to charge on book. Bradley v. Goodyear, 1 Day (Conn.) 104. The right to charge the items to defendant must arise at the time at which they were incurred, by the terms of a contract then existing, or the contract must contemplate the happening of an event that would confer the right. Perry v. Buckman, 33 Vt. 7.

Knowledge of right to charge is not necessary, provided the facts establishing the right exist. Loomis v. Wainwright, 21 Vt. 520.

Right under subsequent supervening contract.— Right to charge may not exist under the original contract, yet it may become perfected under a new contract supervening which changes the status of affairs. Perry v. Buckman, 33 Vt. 7; Starr v. Huntley, 12 Vt. 13.

Waiver of right to object that items are not proper subjects of book-charge, see Fassett v. Vincent, 8 Vt. 73.

84. Slasson v. Davis, 1 Aik. (Vt.) 73.

85. Terrill v. Beecher, 9 Conn. 344 [following Bradley v. Goodyear, 1 Day (Conn.) 104; Brewster v. Norwich, 1 Root (Conn.) 146]; Slasson v. Davis, 1 Aik. (Vt.) 73.

86. Hall v. Peck, 10 Vt. 474.

Accountability as a test.— "Whenever property is delivered, to be accounted for upon a future adjustment of book-accounts, it may properly be charged, although no right of action may exist at the time, but it may be charged upon the ground of accountability alone." Hall v. Peck, 10 Vt. 474, 478. A right to make the charge does not require that there should be an immediate and present right of action upon it. It is sufficient, in any case, if an obligation to account for the money or property received results directly from the transaction between the parties (Jackman v. Partridge, 21 Vt. 558); but articles delivered with no contemplation of creating a debt, or any obligation to pay for them, cannot be charged on book or recovered in this form of action (Bailey v. Bailey, 16 Vt. 656). [Compare, however, cases cited supra, note 83.]

agreement to that effect, express or implied, may render subject to charge on book matters which are not strictly so chargeable.[88]

(II) Manner of Charging. Provided the subject-matter forms an appropriate item for charge on book, the right of action will not be affected by the fact that the entry was loosely made[89] or that the book or paper containing the account may have been lost.[90] It has been held that a book comprising charges regularly made is not indispensable to plaintiff's right of recovery.[91]

(III) Time of Charging. A charge on book need not necessarily have been made at the time when the right to charge accrued.[92]

36 Vt. 705; Waterman v. Stimpson, 24 Vt. 508; Porter v. Munger, 22 Vt. 191; Eddy v. Stafford, 18 Vt. 235; Eaton v. Whitcomb, 17 Vt. 641; Weller v. McCarty, 16 Vt. 98; Austin v. Wheeler, 16 Vt. 95; Stearns v. Haven, 16 Vt. 87; Wilkins v. Stevens, 8 Vt. 214; Blish v. Granger, 6 Vt. 340; Whiting v. Corwin, 5 Vt. 451; Fry v. Slyfield, 3 Vt. 246; Newton v. Higgins, 2 Vt. 366; Boardman v. Keeler, 2 Vt. 65. Contra, Stocking v. Sage, 1 Conn. 75; Harris v. Baker, 1 Root (Conn.) 220; Whelpley v. Higley, Brayt. (Vt.) 39.

See Johnson v. Gunn, 2 Root (Conn.) 130, wherein it was held that plaintiff "might not be admitted to prove, by his own testimony, any special agreement or promise in virtue of which he would entitle himself to recover." To the same effect see Peck v. Jones, Kirby (Conn.) 289. The reason assigned for the holding in these cases was that such special agreement could not be sworn to by the parties, and hence could not be enforced in this form of action.

Contract for payment in specific articles when the term of credit has expired has been held not to defeat plaintiff's right to make a book-charge provided the contract was expressed in dollars. Wilkins v. Stevens, 8 Vt. 214.

That the contract is in writing does not defeat plaintiff's right to make a book-charge. Wilkins v. Stevens, 8 Vt. 214.

For facts insufficient to show an agreement allowing charges on book of items not in themselves proper subjects of charge on books see Winn v. Sprague, 35 Vt. 243.

89. Hodge v. Manley, 25 Vt. 210, 60 Am. Dec. 253; Porter v. Munger, 22 Vt. 191; Tobias v. Blin, 21 Vt. 544; Scott v. Lance, 21 Vt. 507.

Form of the charge on book does not affect the right to recover in book-account. Scott v. Lance, 21 Vt. 507; Gassett v. Andover, 21 Vt. 342; Stone v. Pulsipher, 16 Vt. 428.

Charging article instead of its use.— In Stone v. Pulsipher, 16 Vt. 428, the fact that the charge was made for the thing itself instead of for the use thereof was held unobjectionable where the facts showed a right of recovery.

Charging in gross.— In Newel v. Keith, 11 Vt. 214, it was held no legal objection to a charge that it was made in gross, but that such matter was for the consideration of the auditor.

Erasures and alterations in the book-account do not destroy its character as an original. Sargeant v. Pettibone, 1 Aik. (Vt.) 355.

Joint charge in account.— It is no objection to plaintiff's right of recovery for goods sold that he first charged the goods to defendant and another person whom he considered jointly liable, and it appears that the defendant is liable individually. Porter v. Munger, 22 Vt. 191. But items due from plaintiffs severally cannot be allowed in a joint action of book-account against defendant. Gleason v. Vermont Cent. R. Co., 25 Vt. 37.

Mistaken charge.— In Goodrich v. Drew, 10 Vt. 137, it was held that though charges were made on book to one person they might be recovered in an action against another if it appeared that the first charge was a mistake and defendant was in truth the debtor.

Single item may be charged on book and constitute the account. Loomis v. Wainwright, 21 Vt. 520; Kingsland v. Adams, 10 Vt. 201. Contra, however, see Ames v. Fisher, Brayt. (Vt.) 39, where the charge was a single item, "the domestic spinning-jenny."

Where the charges were made on slips of paper filed, according to plaintiff's custom in his business, they were held sufficient to sustain the action. Bell v. McLeran, 3 Vt. 185.

90. Reed v. Talford, 10 Vt. 568, wherein it was held that the failure to produce part of the account which had originally been written on a slip of paper and lost would not defeat the action.

92. Kingsland v. Adams, 10 Vt. 201; Whiting v. Corwin, 5 Vt. 451. See also supra, III, A, 2, b, (II).

Charging in advance items on book to await their subsequent application has been upheld in some cases, as where there has been a conditional sale of property to be paid for in services rendered from time to time. Martin v. Eames, 26 Vt. 476; Stone v. Pulsipher, 16 Vt. 428.

Charging subsequently to the accrual of the right has been upheld where plaintiff failed to make the charge by reason of deception practised upon him by defendant. Loomis v. Wainwright, 21 Vt. 520 [distinguishing Nason v. Crocker, 11 Vt. 463].

Even in court an account may be made up for the first time. Bell v. McLeran, 3 Vt. 185. See also Palmer v. Green, 6 Conn. 14, cited supra, note 91.

Items omitted in the first book-account may

(IV) Subjects of Charge—(A) Rule Stated. The general rule is that the subjects of charge on book to support an action of book-account within the scope of such action, as above explained, must be confined to transactions between the parties, where, in the usual course of their business, they make such charges on book.[93]

(B) Applications of Rule—(1) In General. Within the rule just stated, with respect to what may be charged on book, among the items which have been considered to be the proper subjects of charge on book so as to support an action of book-account may be enumerated the following: goods sold and delivered;[94] be subsequently charged and recovered in a second book-account, if the reasons for the omission are sufficient. Stevens v. Damon, 29 Vt. 521. But compare cases cited infra, note 96.

93. Field v. Sawyer, Brayt. (Vt.) 39 [citing Swift Ev. 83].

Difficulty of stating rule.—In Bradley v. Goodyear, 1 Day (Conn.) 104, 106, the court said: "It would be difficult, perhaps, to lay down any general principle which would determine, in all cases, what articles may and what may not be charged on book."

General usage and practice of the country are important in determining what is a proper subject of charge on book. Hall v. Peck, 10 Vt. 474.

It is too late to raise the question as to whether an item was a proper charge on book after pleading payment in the hearing before the auditor. Peck v. Soragan, 27 Vt. 92.

94. Terrill v. Beecher, 9 Conn. 344; Victor Sewing Mach. Co. v. Weeks, 49 Vt. 342; Smith v. Foster, 36 Vt. 705; Waterman v. Stimpson, 24 Vt. 508; Porter v. Munger, 22 Vt. 191; Dwyer v. Hall, 22 Vt. 142; Loomis v. Wainwright, 21 Vt. 520; Wolcott v. Wolcott, 19 Vt. 37; McNeal v. Strong, 16 Vt. 640; McLeran v. Stevens, 16 Vt. 616; Tyson v. Doe, 15 Vt. 571; Rogers v. Miller, 15 Vt. 431; Brooks v. Jewell, 14 Vt. 470; Mattison v. Wescott, 13 Vt. 258; Starr v. Huntley, 12 Vt. 13; Hall v. Peck, 10 Vt. 474; Strong v. McConnell, 10 Vt. 231; Kingsland v. Adams, 10 Vt. 201; Blish v. Granger, 6 Vt. 340; Whiting v. Corwin, 5 Vt. 451; Austin v. Berry, 3 Vt. 58; Fry v. Slyfield, 3 Vt. 246; Field v. Sawyer, Brayt. (Vt.) 39.

Applying the rule stated in the text, book-account has been held to be the proper action to recover for board and lodging (Wolcott v. Wolcott, 19 Vt. 37), foal of mare sold under agreement to pay therefor if the mare proved to be with foal (Dwyer v. Hall, 22 Vt. 142), lottery tickets regularly issued and authorized by law (May v. Brownell, 3 Vt. 463), manufactured articles (Wilkins v. Stevens, 8 Vt. 214), necessaries advanced by guardian to ward (Mills v. St. John, 2 Root (Conn.) 188; Stanton v. Willson, 3 Day (Conn.) 37, 3 Am. Dec. 255), standing trees sold to be cut down and taken away by the purchaser, which are actually severed and removed by him (McLeran v. Stevens, 16 Vt. 616), subscription to a newspaper (Ward v. Powell, 3 Harr. (Del.) 379), and for wool (Leach v. Shepard, 5 Vt. 363).

Board and clothing furnished to an infant employed under a special contract, who left his employment contrary to the terms of the contract, have been held not to be proper subjects of book-charge. Terrill v. Beecher, 9 Conn. 344.

Goods sold may be charged as returnable in kind, and upon failure so to make return the plaintiff may recover for their value. Hall v. Ives, 11 Conn. 469; Cass v. McDonald, 39 Vt. 65; Way v. Wakefield, 7 Vt. 223. In Vermont it has been repeatedly and uniformly held that "where goods are sold or services performed under a special contract for payment in other goods or in services, and the time of payment has elapsed, and payment not made according to the contract, . . . such special agreement is no obstacle to a recovery in general assumpsit or by an action on book-account." Kent v. Bowker, 38 Vt. 148, 152 [citing Waterman v. Stimpson, 24 Vt. 508; Porter v. Munger, 22 Vt. 191; Mattocks v. Lyman, 16 Vt. 113; Stearns v. Haven, 16 Vt. 87; Way v. Wakefield, 7 Vt. 223].

Goods originally received under a contract of agency which was afterward abandoned, under an agreement that the agent should become the purchaser, may be charged to him on book. Starr v. Huntley, 12 Vt. 13.

Perfected contract, such as will pass title in the property to the person sought to be charged, seems to be necessary to entitle plaintiff to recover. Hodges v. Fox, 36 Vt. 74 [following Barlow v. Read, 1 Vt. 97]; Read v. Barlow, 1 Aik. (Vt.) 145 [criticising Mattison v. Wescott, 13 Vt. 258]. Thus it is ordinarily necessary that there shall have been an actual delivery and acceptance of the goods. Tyson v. Doe, 15 Vt. 571 [following Starr v. Huntley, 12 Vt. 13; Pangborn v. Saxton, 11 Vt. 79]; Read v. Barlow, 1 Aik. (Vt.) 145; Barlow v. Read, 1 Vt. 97. But it should appear that the delivery was in contemplation of and under an obligation to pay. Bailey v. Bailey, 16 Vt. 656. In Terrill v. Beecher, 9 Conn. 344, 349, the court said: "Perhaps it is safe to affirm that no action of debt by book can be sustained unless it be for articles the sale and delivery of which may be proved by the testimony of the parties."

Tender of goods which are not accepted will not support the action. Wilkins v. Stevens, 8 Vt. 214 [following Read v. Barlow, 1 Aik. (Vt.) 145].

Where a contract is made for manufacture of article to be delivered at a future day, the property does not pass until delivery and acceptance and hence cannot properly be charged in account. Hodges v. Fox, 36 Vt. 74 [distinguishing Carpenter v. Dole, 13 Vt. 578; Blish v. Granger, 6 Vt. 340].

On the other hand it has been held that in interest;[95] money found to be due on account stated;[96] money had and received to plaintiff's use;[97] money lent to defendant;[98] money paid for the use of another;[99] proceeds of goods sold which were left in defendant's hands to be sold the case of manufactured goods recovery may be had where the right of property has passed to the vendee, notwithstanding there has been no actual delivery. Mattison v. Wescott, 13 Vt. 258 [criticised in Hodges v. Fox, 36 Vt. 74, 80, wherein the court says: "The mistake arose from treating a contract for the purchase of a thing not in existence, but to be manufactured thereafter, the same as the present sale of an existing article," etc.].

95. Interest may be recovered where there is an express or implied contract to pay the same (Phenix v. Prindle, Kirby (Conn.) 20; Blin v. Pierce, 20 Vt. 25); but a special contract for interest, not in writing, cannot be enforced by book-debt three years after the contract was made, as it is barred by the statute against frauds and perjuries (Smith v. Purdy, 1 Root (Conn.) 129).

96. Eaton v. Whitcomb, 17 Vt. 641, 645, wherein it is said that "in Spear v. Peck, 15 Vt. 566, it was held that an account stated might be charged on book, although the account out of which the balance was ascertained was beyond the jurisdiction of the court to which the action was brought."

Balance found due on a settlement may be charged over on a new account and recovered in this form of action. Warren v. Bishop, 22 Vt. 607; Spear v. Peck, 15 Vt. 566,— in analogy, perhaps, to an insimul computassent for a balance so found to be due.

But items omitted by mistake in a prior account stated between the parties cannot, in Connecticut, be recovered in book-account (Remington v. Noble, 19 Conn. 383; Rogers v. Moor, 2 Root (Conn.) 58; Punderson v. Shaw, Kirby (Conn.) 150), assumpsit being the remedy; although in Vermont such items may be recovered in book-account (Stevens v. Damon, 29 Vt. 521; Wood v. Johnson, 13 Vt. 191 [following Austin v. Berry, 3 Vt. 58]).

97. Brown v. Talcott, 1 Root (Conn.) 85; Smalley v. Soragen, 30 Vt. 2; Stone v. Foster, 16 Vt. 546; Vermont Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Cummings, 11 Vt. 503; Boutwell v. Tyler, 11 Vt. 487.

Distinguished from deposit.— The question whether the money received becomes a debt so as to warrant a charge on book, or a mere deposit, depends upon the nature of the transaction and the course of the dealings between the parties. Vermont Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Cummings, 11 Vt. 503. In no case, however, can an action be maintained against a mere depositary of money unless his situation has been changed to that of debtor either by a wrongful refusal to pay over the money on proper request or by a wrongful appropriation of it. Jackman v. Partridge, 21 Vt. 558.

Money collected by an attorney cannot ordinarily be recovered in this form of action, but if the parties agree that the money thus received shall be charged upon book, the objection will be obviated, and such agreement may also be implied from the course of dealing between the parties. Scott v. Lance, 21 Vt. 507.

Money in hands of sheriff cannot be recovered in book-account unless he has agreed that it shall be charged or has promised to pay. Gleason v. Briggs, 28 Vt. 135.

Money paid to an agent who converts the same to his own use is a proper subject of book-charge. Brown v. Talcott, 1 Root (Conn.) 85; Whiting v. Corwin, 5 Vt. 451.

Money paid to defendant in excess of the amount of indebtedness intended to be paid may be recovered. Northrop v. Sanborn, 22 Vt. 433, 54 Am. Dec. 83.

Taking receipt in writing for the money has been held to constitute no objection to a charge on book for money received to be accounted for. Boutwell v. Tyler, 11 Vt. 487.

98. Clark v. Savage, 20 Conn. 258; Plimpton v. Gleason, 57 Vt. 604; Keeler v. Mathews, 17 Vt. 125.

Acceptance of memorandum note has been held not to preclude a recovery for money lent. Clark v. Savage, 20 Conn. 258.

When nothing has actually been paid, however, no recovery can be had, as in the case of mere indorsements. Flint v. Eureka Marble Co., 53 Vt. 669.

99. Chellis v. Woods, 11 Vt. 466 [citing Warden v. Johnson, 11 Vt. 455]. To the same effect see Walker v. Barrington, 28 Vt. 781.

The rule stated in the text has been applied to sustain book-account:

For expenses incurred in making improvements upon real estate at the request of proposed vendor, made by the proposed vendee upon failure of the former to fulfil his contract of sale. Minor v. Erving, Kirby (Conn.) 158.

For one half of certain expenditures laid out in making repairs on a vessel for the benefit of plaintiff and defendant, who were joint owners of the vessel. Bowers v. Dunn, 2 Root (Conn.) 59.

For postage paid by postmaster for another person. Sargeant v. Pettibone, 1 Aik. (Vt.) 355.

For the purchase-price of personal property bought by plaintiff at the request of and for defendant, notwithstanding the article was not accepted by defendant. Paddock v. Ames, 14 Vt. 515.

Previous agreement to give security by mortgage on the part of the person for whom the money is paid will not preclude a recovery notwithstanding the security has never been demanded. Weller v. McCarty, 16 Vt. 98.

Taxes paid by one for another may by agreement be charged on book. Noyes v. Hall, 28 Vt. 645.

and accounted for;[1] use of property hired;[2] and work and labor done and performed or materials furnished.[3] No action, however, will lie to recover money or goods which have been delivered or received in payment of an existing debt, where the party receiving refuses or neglects to make the application.[4]

1. Hickok v. Stevens, 18 Vt. 111; Hall v. Peck, 10 Vt. 474.

Book-account has been extended beyond its original limits so that it will now lie "where the articles charged were delivered originally to be accounted for in a particular manner, and where they might well have been expected to be charged at the time of delivery. Hall v. Eaton, 12 Vt. 510, 512 [citing Hall v. Peck, 10 Vt. 474; Whiting v. Corwin, 5 Vt. 451].

Goods assigned to be disposed of in a certain manner cannot, it seems, be recovered in this action. So held in Allen v. Thrall, 10 Vt. 255.

Goods which are not sold, under a bailment for sale, and which are refused to be delivered to plaintiffs on demand, cannot be considered subjects of charge on book. Kidder v. Sowles, 44 Vt. 303.

2. Woodward v. Cutter, 33 Vt. 49.

Expense of repairs.— In Woodward v. Cutter, 33 Vt. 49, it was held that in addition to recovering for the use of the property hired, plaintiff might further recover the expense of repairing the injuries caused by the use. But see supra, note 82, as to repairs of article injured in hands of borrower.

3. Smith v. Gilbert, 4 Day (Conn.) 105; Minor v. Erving, Kirby (Conn.) 158; Proctor v. Wiley, 55 Vt. 344; Parker v. Bryant, 40 Vt. 291; Walker v. Norton, 29 Vt. 226; Barber v. Britton, 26 Vt. 112; Sargeant v. Sunderland, 21 Vt. 284; Wolcott v. Wolcott, 19 Vt. 37; Austin v. Wheeler, 16 Vt. 95; Stearns v. Haven, 16 Vt. 87; Paige v. Ripley, 12 Vt. 289; Newel v. Keith, 11 Vt. 214; Phelps v. Wood, 9 Vt. 399; Dunning v. Chamberlin, 6 Vt. 127; Fry v. Slyfield, 3 Vt. 246; Keyes v. Carpenter, 3 Vt. 209.

Application of the rule stated in the text has been made to the recovery of compensation for services rendered by:

Attorney. Territt v. Woodruff, 19 Vt. 182; Strong v. McConnel, 5 Vt. 338; Bell v. McLeran, 3 Vt. 185.

Blacksmith. Wait v. Johnson, 24 Vt. 112.

Carrier of goods. Boardman v. Keeler, 2 Vt. 65.

Justice of the peace. Miller v. French, 1 Aik. (Vt.) 99.

Physician. Smith v. Watson, 14 Vt. 332.

Plaintiff's minor son hired to defendant. Hennessy v. Stewart, 31 Vt. 486.

Probate judge. Sargeant v. Sunderland, 21 Vt. 284.

Previous stipulated value for services is not necessary to render them a proper subject of charge on book. Myers v. Baptist Soc., 38 Vt. 614.

Services rendered in part payment under a conditional sale of property may be charged on book to await their subsequent application, and in case the property sold is received back by the vendor, the purchaser may recover for the services in book-account. Martin v. Eames, 26 Vt. 476; Stone v. Pulsipher, 16 Vt. 428.

Strict performance waived by acquiescence in contract.— A party may recover in this form of action for work and labor performed, where he has acquiesced in the contract and accepted the work, even though it may not have been performed within the strict terms of the contract as originally made (Austin v. Wheeler, 16 Vt. 95); and this may be true even where the special contract is under seal (Myrick v. Slason, 19 Vt. 121).

4. Bradley v. Goodyear, 1 Day (Conn.) 104; Beeman v. Webster, 15 Vt. 141; Downer v. Frizzle, 10 Vt. 541; Stevens v. Tuttle, 3 Vt. 519; Slasson v. Davis, 1 Aik. (Vt.) 73. Thus, where F delivered notes to G, a constable, to apply the proceeds thereof upon executions against F, in G's hands for collection, and the notes were paid to G, but the proceeds not applied upon the executions, it was held that these notes were not the proper subjects of a book-charge by F against G. Farrand v. Gage, 3 Vt. 326.

Extent and limits of rule.— But "the general rule that money paid to be applied on a particular demand cannot be made the ground of action . . . can only apply to those cases where the payment in itself operates pro tanto to extinguish so much of the demand upon which the money is paid, and not to cases where, by the agreement of parties, the money paid is kept on foot as a subsisting claim, but subject to a future appropriation." Chellis v. Woods, 11 Vt. 466, 468 [following Strong v. McConnel, 10 Vt. 231, and followed in Hickok v. Ridley, 15 Vt. 42].

Thus in Cobleigh v. Stone, 29 Vt. 525, where it appeared that defendant took possession of personalty belonging to plaintiff, to hold as security for a debt, and afterward he sold the same for more than sufficient to pay the debt, but did not account for the balance, it was held that plaintiff could recover in book-account for the balance of the proceeds of the sale. So, too, it has been held that promissory notes given by plaintiff to defendant to be accounted for by the latter after using them as security for a debt due him from plaintiff may be recovered in book-account, it appearing that no such debt existed. Woodward v. Harlow, 28 Vt. 338.

Money paid on note, but not applied, is not a subject of charge on book. Bradley v. Goodyear, 1 Day (Conn.) 104; Miller v. French, 1 Aik. (Vt.) 99. Contra, see Prentice v. Phillips, 1 Root (Conn.) 103; Hurd v. Fleming, 1 Root (Conn.) 132; Brown v. Talcott, 1 Root (Conn.) 85; McNeal v. Strong, 16 Vt. 640, wherein it was held that if articles of personal property are delivered to a firm under a contract that they will apply their value to the payment of a note, which application is afterward refused, the special under-

(2) Promissory Notes. It seems that promissory notes are not proper subjects of charge on books as between original parties,[5] but that they may become so after they have been assigned.[6]

(3) Unliquidated Damages. A claim for unliquidated damages is not the subject of book-charge, and cannot be recovered in that form of action.[7]

(4) Use and Occupation of Realty. As a general rule an action of book-account will not lie for the use and occupation of real estate, especially where there has been no agreement to charge.[8] taking is converted into an obligation to pay money, and a recovery may be had in an action of book-account.

Remedy in such case.— In such case the party aggrieved must wait until the obligation is sought to be enforced, when he may compel the proper application. Downer v. Frizzle, 10 Vt. 541; Stevens v. Tuttle, 3 Vt. 519.

5. Farrand v. Gage, 3 Vt. 326. But see Barlow v. Butler, 1 Vt. 146, wherein it was held that a charge on book, by a party to a suit, of his own note, is proper if done at the time of a credit which made such charge necessary.

Balance due on promissory note which one party holds against the other is not recoverable in book-account. Stevens v. Damon, 29 Vt. 521.

By agreement, however, executions and notes may become proper subjects of charge on book. Gleason v. Briggs, 28 Vt. 135.

Orders drawn by plaintiff on a third person, for value received, in favor of defendant and delivered to him, may be charged on book. Stores v. Stores, 1 Root (Conn.) 139, wherein it is said: "There is a wide difference between an action brought upon an order or bill of exchange, and an action brought for an order or bill of exchange." An order upon a third person drawn by a debtor in favor of his creditor for the amount of debt due for property sold, it being understood that the order was for convenience only, not as an ordinary business transaction, and that the drawee had no funds of the drawer in his hands and was under no obligation to accept the order, will not preclude the creditor from recovering his debt in book-account. Heald v. Warren, 22 Vt. 409.

6. A due-bill assigned is a proper subject of book-charge. Hunt v. Pierpont, 27 Conn. 301.

"Money, bills of exchange, orders, bank checks, and promissory notes, when assigned, are, says Judge Swift (1 Dig. 582), charged on book in the regular course of business." Hunt v. Pierpont, 27 Conn. 301, 305.

7. Green v. Pratt, 11 Conn. 205; Smalley v. Soragen, 30 Vt. 2; Scott v. Lance, 21 Vt. 507; Bailey v. Bailey, 16 Vt. 656; Blanchard v. Butterfield, 12 Vt. 451; Fry v. Slyfield, 3 Vt. 246.

By agreement unliquidated damages may be made a subject of book-charge. Chamberlain v. Farr, 23 Vt. 265.

Breach of contract cannot be charged on book. Green v. Pratt, 11 Conn. 205; Weeks v. Boynton, 37 Vt. 297; Smalley v. Soragen, 30 Vt. 2; Hiller v. French, 1 Aik. (Vt.) 99. "Value of plaintiff's part of the performance" of the contract is a proper subject of a charge on book for which book-account may lie, not the "breach of defendant's promise." Wilkins v. Stevens, 8 Vt. 214.

Breach of duty as bailee.— "This action will never lie for damages sustained by reason of any breach of duty as a bailee, whatever be the character of the bailment." Pratt v. Bryant, 20 Vt. 333, 337.

Breach of special agreement cannot be charged on book. Terrill v. Beecher, 9 Conn. 344; Pierce v. Smith, 16 Vt. 166.

Damages for violation of an executory contract cannot be the ground of claim to be adjudicated in an action of book-account. Pierce v. Smith, 16 Vt. 166. Hence costs and expenses of arbitration in which submission was revoked by the opposite party before an award was made do not constitute a proper claim to be adjusted in book-account. Bryant v. Clifford, 27 Vt. 664.

Special damages for breach of a special contract are not proper subjects of book-charge. Scott v. Lance, 21 Vt. 507; Bailey v. Bailey, 16 Vt. 656; Pierce v. Smith, 16 Vt. 166; Smith v. Smith, 14 Vt. 440; Blanchard v. Butterfield, 12 Vt. 451. Expenses incurred in defending a suit against which plaintiff was specially indemnified by defendant are not proper subjects of book-charge. The remedy must be a suit upon the special contract. Stocking v. Sage, 1 Conn. 75.

8. Beach v. Mills, 5 Conn. 493; Stearns v. Dillingham, 22 Vt. 624, 54 Am. Dec. 88; Scott v. Lance, 21 Vt. 507; Nichols v. Packard, 16 Vt. 91; Gunnison v. Bancroft, 11 Vt. 490; Case v. Berry, 3 Vt. 332; Miller v. French, 1 Aik. (Vt.) 99; Hitchcock v. Smith, Brayt. (Vt.) 39. Compare Lockwood v. Lockwood, 22 Conn. 425, where it was held, under a statute making an action of book-debt coextensive with general assumpsit, that a recovery for actual use and occupation could be had under this form of action.

Rent is not a proper subject of charge on book. Miller v. French, 1 Aik. (Vt.) 99.

Where there are mutual accounts, however, for articles or services rendered or delivered and intended to be applied in payment of rent, the accounts may be adjusted in this form of action. Gunnison v. Bancroft, 11 Vt. 490; Case v. Berry, 3 Vt. 332, 333, wherein the court said: "We do not mean to say, however, that rent or the use of land can under no circumstances be an admissible charge on book. The course of dealings between the parties may shew that it was intended to be a matter of account between

3. Accrual of Right of Action. Book-account cannot be commenced until plaintiff's cause of action has accrued;[9] hence it cannot be sustained where no portion of plaintiff's account against defendant had become due at the commencement of the action[10] or where the contract relied upon to support it is executory and unrescinded.[11]

4. Who May Maintain Action. Mutual actions of book-account may be maintained,[12] and it has been held that a corporation may maintain an action of book-account.[13] As a general rule, however, the action will not lie as between joint owners[14] or partners,[15] the remedy in such cases being by action of account.[16]

5. Necessity of Demanding Payment.[17] In a case where the action of book-account would otherwise be appropriate, the necessity of demanding payment before suit is no valid objection to the form of action.[18]

6. Pleadings[19] — a. Complaint or Declaration. Usually the proceedings are commenced by a declaration or complaint, as in an ordinary action,[20] the

them, and to be entered and adjusted on book; as where there are mutual dealings and accounts, and on one side charges are made of articles or services delivered or rendered and intended to apply in payment of rent charged on the other."

11. Bailey v. Bailey, 16 Vt. 656.

Promissory note not due.— Where goods were sold upon a promissory note payable at a future day, upon failure to deliver over the note by the vendee the vendor cannot maintain book-account until the note has become due. Eddy v. Stafford, 18 Vt. 235.

That contract is partly executed does not change the operation of the rule. Smith v. Smith, 14 Vt. 440.

12. Gale v. Cooper, 11 Vt. 597, 598, wherein it appears that, immediately after plaintiff brought an action of book-account against defendant, the latter brought a similar action against plaintiff. Williams, C. J., announcing the rule, said: "It has been settled that mutual actions on book may be maintained, and that each is independent of the other, though I think a different rule and practice would have better comported with the statute."

13. Vermont Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Cummings, 11 Vt. 503.

14. Formerly, in Vermont, one of two tenants in common of personal property could not recover of the other, in an action on book-account, for having used more than his share of the common property (McCrillis v. Banks, 19 Vt. 442 [following Albee v. Fairbanks, 10 Vt. 314]); even though the latter appropriated the amount with the consent of his cotenant and under an agreement to account therefor (Briggs v. Brewster, 23 Vt. 100; Scott v. Lance, 21 Vt. 507). This rule, however, has been changed by statute. Vt. Stat. (1894) § 1445; Gates v. Lockwood, 27 Vt. 286.

15. Green v. Chapman, 27 Vt. 236.

Extent and limits of the rule.— A party may recover for articles that have arisen from partnership dealings, when the suit does not draw the partnership balance in controversy. Sawyer v. Proctor, 2 Vt. 580. But the courts have no authority to settle complicated partnership matters in an action of book-account. Hydeville Co. v. Barnes, 37 Vt. 588. The Vermont act of Nov. 18, 1852, relating to actions of book-account, does not extend to partnership dealings. Duryea v. Whitcomb, 31 Vt. 395 [citing and following Green v. Chapman, 27 Vt. 236].

Where two parties performed a contract of labor for defendant and afterward agreed to divide the amount to be received between them, defendant agreeing to pay plaintiff his share, it was held, in the absence of a finding that they were partners, that plaintiff might recover his share in an action of book-account. Parker v. Bryant, 40 Vt. 291.

16. Green v. Chapman, 27 Vt. 236; Briggs v. Brewster, 23 Vt. 100; Albee v. Fairbanks, 10 Vt. 314.

Recovery of excess.— In Briggs v. Brewster, 23 Vt. 100, it was held that where several parties owned property and jointly agreed that each might use what he wished and account for any excess, such excess could be recovered only by action of account.

17. As to the necessity for demand see Actions.

18. Jackman v. Partridge, 21 Vt. 558 [citing Hall v. Peck, 10 Vt. 474].

To enable a tenant in common to recover of his cotenant for having received more than his share of the property in which they have a common interest, a demand must be shown; but where the claim constitutes but one of several items in the account and the whole action does not depend upon it, a demand after commencement of suit, but before the time of auditing, will be sufficient. Gates v. Lockwood, 27 Vt. 286.

19. As to matters of pleading, generally, see Pleading.

20. King v. Lacey, 8 Conn. 499. In McKoy v. Brown, 13 Vt. 593, it was held that a motion in arrest of judgment would not be sustained because the declaration was not drawn agreeably to the form of declarations on book-account before the county court, but according to the form used before justices of the peace.

By pleading statute of limitations before the auditor, defendant waives the right pleadings being somewhat analogous to the action of debt on simple contract.[21]

b. Answer or Plea. In an action of book-account defendant may plead, by way of set-off, any claim he has which may reduce the plaintiff's account,[22] but it has long been settled that in this form of action no defense can be specially pleaded which depends for its effect upon plaintiff's account.[23] All such defenses must be introduced before the auditor and cannot be raised before a jury.[24]

7. Evidence and Proof[25] — a. Burden of Proof. The burden of proof in such cases is, as usual, on plaintiff,[26] unless defendant claims to have paid the account, in which case the burden of proof is upon defendant.[27]

b. Admissibility and Competency[28] — (I) In General. The usual rules of evidence are adhered to in trials before an auditor in book-account.[29]

(II) Parties as Witnesses. Both parties are made witnesses by statute, and each has a right to testify and demand the testimony of the other.[30] Both parties are competent witnesses as to payment,[31] and their testimony may be extended to all circumstances connected with the account as stated in the declaration.[32]

(III) Documentary Evidence. Books of account containing original entries are not indispensable,[33] but when properly identified they may be introduced in evidence in support of plaintiff's claim,[34] but when admitted they must be of the character contemplated by the statute.[35] thereafter to object that the action should not have been in book-debt, but in some other form. Bliss v. Allard, 49 Vt. 350.

21. The rules of pleading adapted to the action of account are inapplicable to the action of book-account. This was evidently seen by the legislature; for in prescribing the form of the declaration in the action of book-account they adopted, so far as it goes, the form of an action of debt on simple contract, but leaving it more indefinite and uncertain. Matthews v. Tower, 39 Vt. 433.

22. The time within which a plea of offset shall be filed in the county court rests solely within the discretion of that court, and its determination cannot be revised in the appellate court. Ainsworth v. Drew, 14 Vt. 563. See also, generally, Recoupment, Set-off, and Counter-claim.

23. Matthews v. Tower, 39 Vt. 433; Porter v. Smith, 20 Vt. 344; Delaware v. Staunton, 8 Vt. 48, 52, wherein the court said: "As a general rule, any matter which admits defendant to have been once accountable or chargeable, although it goes in discharge, must be plead before auditors and not in bar."

24. Matthews v. Tower, 39 Vt. 433; Porter v. Smith, 20 Vt. 344.

Partnership.— In Porter v. Smith, 20 Vt. 344, defendants pleaded that they were not partners. The court, while holding that there might be a recovery upon proof of a joint indebtedness without proof of the partnership, put the decision on the still broader ground that the question of a joint relation could be tried only before the auditor.

c. Sufficiency. In order to recover in this form of action for goods sold, plaintiff must prove an executed and perfected contract of sale, completed by delivery.[36]

8. Preliminary Judgment.[37] There must be a judgment to account and a reference to an auditor as a matter of course.[38] This judgment is always rendered without reference to the actual dealings between the parties, or whether any have ever existed or not,[39] and concludes nothing, it being only matter of form.[40]

ACCOUNT STATED. See Accounts and Accounting.

ACCOUPLE. To marry.[1]

ACCREDIT. In international law, to acknowledge the authority of a diplomatic agent of another country.[2]

ACCREDULITARE or ACCREDITULARE. To purge an offense by an oath.[3]

Province of court and auditor.— "It is said in some of the cases that the court are judges of the action, and the auditors are judges of the account; that is, the court will judge whether upon the facts the action will lie, and the auditors must find the facts. The court will not go into a preliminary inquiry into the facts, either by court or jury, as in the action of account, but only decide the law of the case upon such facts as may be found and reported by the auditor." Rep. 47, where the condition of a policy contained the clause, "nor unless such suit or action shall be commenced within twelve months next after the loss shall occur," and it was urged that the word "occur" was used in the sense of "accrue" and that such sense required the court to apply it to the suit or action. The court said: "The word 'occur' means 'to happen,' in its general and most popular sense, whilst the word 'accrue' is to be added or attached to something else, in its generally received sense; but if we were to substitute the word 'accrue,' then, in its grammatical connection, it would mean that the loss had attached to appellants, and that was when the fire destroyed the property, and would not change the obvious meaning from what it is as written. It would not be construction to say, the condition means a suit or action might be commenced within twelve months after an action had accrued. It would not only be to change the grammatical structure of the clause, but it would be to make a new and different contract for the parties."

"Accrue" distinguished from "sustain."— The word "sustain" and the word "accrue" are not only different terms, but terms of different import. The word "sustain" implies a loss, but the word "accrue" implies a gain tense the word "accrued" is used in the sense of due and payable;[11] vested;[12] and existed.[13]

ACCRUER, CLAUSE OF. An express clause frequently occurring in the case of gifts by deed or will to persons as tenants in common, providing that, upon the death of one or more of the beneficiaries, his or their shares shall go to the survivors or survivor.[14]

ACCUMULATED SURPLUS. The fund which a corporation has in excess of its capital stock after payment of its debts.[15]

ACCUMULATION. The putting by of dividends, rents, or other income and converting it into principal by investing it and again capitalizing the income arising from the new principal, and so on. The capital and accrued interest is called the accumulations.[16] (Accumulation, Rule Limiting, see PERPETUITIES.)

ACCUMULATIVE. That accumulates or is heaped up.[17] Said of several things heaped together, or of one thing added to another.[18]

ACCUSARE. To ACCUSE,[19] q. v.

ACCUSARE NEMO SE DEBET NISI CORAM DEO. A maxim meaning "no one is bound to accuse himself except before God."[20]

ACCUSE. To make an imputation against, as of a crime.[24] (Accuse, Threats to, see THREATS.)

ACCUSED. One who is charged with a crime.[25]

or acquisition. Adams v. Brown, 4 Litt. (Ky.) 7, holding that where the declaration recited as a condition of the bond that complainant should pay all costs and damages which defendant should sustain, and the condition as set out on oyer was for the payment of all costs and damages which might accrue, there was a material variance.

"Accruing" distinguished from "owing."— When the words "accruing or owing" are used to designate two classes of debts, they can receive each a distinct meaning only by taking one as denoting debts which are not yet payable and the other as denoting those which are. Dresser v. Johns, 6 C. B. N. S. 429, 98 E. C. L. 429. See also Gross v. Partenheimer, 159 Pa. I. DEFINITION.

Acknowledgment is a proceeding provided by statute whereby a person who has executed an instrument may, by going before a competent officer or court and declaring it to be his act and deed, entitle it to be recorded, or to be received in evidence without further proof of execution, or both.[1] The term is also used to designate the certificate of the officer or court showing the performance of such act.[2]

II. NECESSITY FOR.

A. In Instruments by Persons Other Than Married Women — 1. To RENDER INSTRUMENT EFFECTIVE — a. In General. Except in the case of conveyances by married women,[3] or where the statute expressly makes the acknowledgment essential to the validity of the instrument,[4] it is universally held that the acknowledgment is no part of the contract between the parties,[5] and the instrument is valid without it.[6] Ordinarily the offices of an acknowledgment are merely to entitle the instrument to registration[7] and to authorize its admission in evidence

1. See Century Dict. As to the effect of a valid acknowledgment see infra, IV.

Proof by witnesses equivalent to acknowledgment.— Under the statutes of some states proof of execution made before the officer or court by the subscribing witnesses is given the same effect as an acknowledgment by the grantor. Van Cortlandt v. Tozer, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 338, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 423; Whittle v. Vanderbilt Min., etc., Co., 83 Fed. 48. See also Maxwell v. Chapman, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 579; McIntyre v. Kamm, 12 Oreg. 253, 7 Pac. 27. Where, under such a statute, the instrument is acknowledged by the grantor, it need not also be proved by the subscribing witness. Shaffer v. Hahn, 111 N. C. 1, 15 S. E. 1033.

Georgia — Attestation.— The system in vogue in Georgia, of attesting deeds and other instruments requiring record, is the equivalent of an acknowledgment of the execution of such instruments made by the maker as required by the common law and practised in most of the states. Under the Georgia statute an attestation by one of the officers named, together with another witness, dispenses with the necessity of acknowledgment, and acknowledgment in the presence of a proper officer dispenses with the attestation of its execution by an officer. Ballard v. Orr, 105 Ga. 191, 31 S. E. 554.

2. Includes both act and certificate thereof. — The acknowledgment of a deed includes both the act of acknowledging and the written evidence thereof made by the officer. Rogers v. Pell, 154 N. Y. 518, 49 N. E. 75.

b. Where Acknowledgment Essential to Validity — (I) In What Cases. Sometimes the acknowledgment is by statute made an essential part of the instrument, and where this is the case an unacknowledged instrument is inoperative and incapable of enforcement. Such statutes exist or have existed in some jurisdictions in relation to assignments for the benefit of creditors,[9] sheriff's deeds,[10] tax deeds,[11] conveyances of the homestead,[12] plats of dedicated land,[13] and in a few other cases.[14]

(II) Constitutionality of Statutes. A statute declaring an instrument void unless acknowledged is not unconstitutional as impairing the obligation of contracts, it being within the power of the legislature to enact as to future contracts that the same shall not be binding or effective in any way without an acknowledgment of a specific kind. Such a statute simply prescribes what shall be the essentials to constitute a valid contract.[15]

c. Validity of Unacknowledged Instrument — (I) As Between the Parties. In the absence of any statutory provision making the acknowledgment an essential part of the instrument,[16] the title passes immediately upon the execution and delivery of the instrument; and as against the grantor, his heirs and devisees, such instrument is as valid without an acknowledgment as with one. Mississippi — Conveyance from husband to wife.— Under Miss. Code, § 2294, declaring that conveyances between husband and wife shall not be valid as against third persons unless acknowledged and recorded, an unacknowledged deed from a husband to his wife passes no title as against an attachment creditor of the husband, though such creditor saw the instrument on record and had actual knowledge of the conveyance before the attachment. either acknowledged or attested in order to be effective against a purchaser or encumbrancer, a purchaser may attack an unacknowledged and unattested deed without showing that he purchased in good faith and without notice.[23]

(III) As to Third Persons Without Actual Notice—(A) Subsequent Creditors and Purchasers for Value. A conveyance which was not acknowledged or proved for record is invalid as against subsequent creditors and purchasers for value without notice.[24]

(B) Trespassers and Strangers to Title. As against mere trespassers and strangers to the title a conveyance is valid without being acknowledged or recorded.[25]

(C) Where Instrument Not Within Meaning of Statute. It is only by virtue of statute that the registration of a conveyance is required in order for it to have priority over subsequent conveyances and encumbrances, and an instrument not falling within the purview of the statute need not be acknowledged to preserve its validity as against subsequent purchasers and creditors.[26]

(IV) Where Instrument Also Unattested. In the absence of any statute to the contrary, a deed, though neither acknowledged nor attested, is valid as between the parties thereto and their privies, and as to third persons having actual notice.[27] But in some states there are statutory provisions making one or

2. To Entitle Instrument to Registration — a. In General. As has been stated heretofore, one of the principal objects of acknowledgment is to entitle the instrument to registration.[30] In most jurisdictions the statutes prescribe that before any deed or other instrument can be recorded it must be acknowledged or proved and certified in the proper manner.[31]

b. B. In Instruments by Married Women — 1. Origin of Doctrine. Originally at common law a married woman had no power to contract or convey.[44] To escape from the inconvenience arising from such a restraint on alienation, resort was had to the indirect proceedings known as fines and common recoveries, which long remained the only modes by which a married woman could convey her property.[45] Finally, however, they were abolished by statute, and simpler methods of conveyance by deed were substituted in their stead.[46] From this it will be seen that the right of a married woman to convey or contract is derived wholly from statute, and consequently her conveyance or contract, to be valid, must be executed in the manner prescribed by the statute.[47]

2. Where Acknowledgment Required by Statute — a. In General. Therefore, where the statute in force at the time a conveyance is executed by a married woman prescribes an acknowledgment by her separate and apart from her husband, her title does not, as in the case of other persons, pass upon delivery, but only when she acknowledges the instrument in the prescribed manner, and without such acknowledgment the instrument is absolutely void and inoperative as to her and her heirs.[48] The object of such statutes is to protect the wife against

But see Womack v. Womack, 8 Tex. 397, 58 Am. Dec. 119 [criticised in Fitzgerald v. Turner, 43 Tex. 79], wherein it was held that the statute prescribing the mode of conveying a married woman's property did not declare absolutely void any other mode of conveyance, its only object being to secure freedom of will and action on her part; and that if she were free to act and so declared, and further declared that she did not wish to retract, all the circumstances concurred which were made necessary by law to pass her title to the property, and her conveyance would be sustained, notwithstanding the want of a privy examination under the statute, particularly in a case where the party dealing with her could not be restored to his former position.

absence of an acknowledgment the law presumes that the conveyance was obtained by fraud and coercion.[50]

b. In What Instruments Required — (I) In General. As to what instruments must be acknowledged by the wife, to be valid, is of course a question depending upon the statutes authorizing her to execute such instrument.[51] In general, acknowledgment is required in any instrument conveying real property or an interest in real property, such as a release of dower,[52] a power of attorney to convey her property,[53] a conveyance or lease of her land,[54] or a conveyance of the homestead, whether by deed of bargain and sale or by mortgage.[55]

Admissible in evidence to show signing by wife.— In ejectment, where the question at issue is the execution of a deed by a man and his wife, the original contract of sale, though not acknowledged as required by law, if signed by the man and his wife, is admissible in evidence for the purpose of showing that the wife really did sign the deed. Of course the original contract unacknowledged by the wife would not have been admissible to prove itself. Carr v. H. C. Frick Coke Co., 170 Pa. St. 62, 32 Atl. 656.

Deed made in pursuance of decree of equity court.— It is not essential to the validity of the deed made by a married woman in pursuance of a decree of a court of equity that she should make the statutory acknowledgment necessary to convey property in her own right or to bar dower in her husband's land. In fact it is not necessary that she should make any conveyance at all, for the decree for conveyance executes itself under the statute. The strength of complainant's title does not rest in any deed of conveyance executed by such married woman, but in the declaration and decree of the equity court establishing his right in equity. Y. Rev. Stat. p. 758, § 10, which provides that no "estate" of a married woman shall pass by a conveyance not acknowledged by her "apart from her husband." Bradley v. Walker, 138 N. Y. 291, 33 N. (III) Conveyance of Personalty. Usually a conveyance of personal property belonging to the wife must be acknowledged.[58]

c. Operation as Estoppel. Where a married woman's land is conveyed by an unacknowledged deed she will not be estopped from asserting a claim to such land, even though she has received the consideration for the transfer [59] or has knowingly allowed improvements to be made thereon.[60] But where she herself has acquired land under a contract void as to her for lack of acknowledgment she cannot keep the land without paying for it.[61]

d. How Contract Ratified. If an instrument be void, it cannot be ratified by the wife except by due acknowledgment as required by the statute,[62] and when so acknowledged the instrument takes effect only from the time of acknowledgment.[63] band's interest in the wife's land should be valid unless by deed executed by the wife jointly with her husband, and acknowledged in the manner provided for the conveyance by husband and wife of the real estate of the wife, it was held that a deed acknowledged by neither of them did not operate to convey the husband's interest.[65] But ordinarily the husband's right passes upon delivery, and his acknowledgment is necessary only to entitle the instrument to registration or to be admitted in evidence;[66] and if an acknowledgment is not expressly required by the statute an instrument executed by him in conjunction with his wife is sufficient to pass his interest without any acknowledgment by him,[67] even though it be void as to the wife.[68]

3. Where No Acknowledgment Required by Statute — a. In General. The necessity for acknowledgment being a matter of statutory regulation it naturally follows that, where the statute does not require an acknowledgment in any particular instrument, such instrument is valid without it.[69] Thus, in some states, Acknowledgment after wife's death.— Under the Ohio and Virginia statutes a deed by husband and wife, made in either state, conveying the wife's land, was inoperative to pass her title unless the husband, she having duly acknowledged the deed, had, in her lifetime and by an acknowledgment in the form prescribed by law, signified his consent to such conveyance; and an acknowledgment made by him after her death was held to be of no effect. 69. In Texas, prior to the act of 1841, no separate acknowledgment of the wife was necessary to a conveyance of land. Groesbeck v. Bodman, 73 Tex. 287, 11 S. W. 322.

Minnesota — Executory contract for sale of land.— Under Minn. Pub. Stat. c. 35, § 30, providing that the word "conveyance," as used in that chapter, shall not include executory contracts for the sale of lands, it was held that section 12 of the same act, requiring an acknowledgment, separate and apart from the husband, of a conveyance by a married woman, did not apply to a contract by her for the sale of her lands, and that no acknowledgment was necessary to the validity of such contract. Kingsley v. Gilman, 15 Minn. 59.

Georgia — Conveyance of husband's land to secure debt.— Under the Georgia code no acknowledgment is required of a wife to a conveyance of her husband's realty made to secure a debt. It is sufficient if she sign a consent in writing with no more formality than is necessary under the code in ordinary contracts relating to land. Wynn v. Ficklen, 54 Ga. 529.

Montana — Declaration under Sole Trader's Act.— A declaration by a married woman that she intends to carry on business in her own name under the Montana Sole Traders' Act need not be acknowledged. Shed v. Blakely, 6 Mont. 247, 11 Pac. 639.

North Carolina — Sale by husband of kitchen furniture.— N. C. Acts (1891), c. 91, § 1, providing that wherever household or kitchen furniture is conveyed by chattel mortgage or otherwise, as allowed by law in North Carolina, the privy examination of married women shall be taken as is now prescribed in the wife's personal property may be conveyed without acknowledgment.[70] And in some jurisdictions it has been held that the equitable estate of a married woman under a grant or devise creating in her a separate estate without restraint upon her power of disposition may be conveyed or charged without acknowledgment.[71]

b. Statutes Enabling Wife to Convey as Feme Sole. By statutes in some jurisdictions married women are now empowered to convey and encumber their property in the same manner as if they were unmarried, and where this is the case the acknowledgment is not essential to the validity of the instrument[72] and is controlled by the same rules that apply to acknowledgments made by other persons.[73] In Pennsylvania a feme sole trader may contract for the sale of her land without a separate acknowledgment,[74] and the specific performance of such contract may be enforced in equity.[75]

III. EFFECT OF DEFECTIVE ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

A. In Instruments by Persons Other Than Married Women — 1. VALIDITY OF INSTRUMENT — a. In General. As has been stated heretofore acknowledgment is not ordinarily essential to the validity of an instrument.[76] Consequently an the conveyance of land, does not apply to an absolute sale, by the husband, of such property; and in such case no acknowledgment by the wife is essential to pass title. Kelly v. Fleming, 113 N. C. 133, 18 S. E. 81.

Canada — Release of dower.—Under 2 Vict. c. 6, § 3, a married woman may release her dower in her husband's land without acknowledgment. Hill v. Greenwood, 23 U. C. Q. B. 404; McNally v. Church, 27 U. C. Q. B. 103; Heward v. Scott, 2 Ch. Chamb. (Ont.) 274.

70. Texas — Personalty may be conveyed by parol.— In Texas a married woman may transfer her personal property by parol, and consequently no acknowledgment is required where the conveyance is in that mode (Ballard v. Carmichael, 83 Tex. 355, 18 S. W. 734; Wilkinson v. Rowland, 3 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 11), but if in writing, the conveyance must be acknowledged (McDaniel v. Garrett, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 57, 31 S. W. 721). An unlocated "land certificate" is personal property and consequently may be conveyed by parol without acknowledgment (Ikard v. Thompson, 81 Tex. 285, 16 S. W. 1019; Arnold v. Attaway, (Tex. Civ. App. 1896) 35 S. W. 482; Bennett v. Virginia Ranch, etc., Co., 1 Tex. Civ. App. 321, 21 S. W. 126), but where such certificate has been located and surveyed, the rights thereunder can be conveyed only as real property by a duly acknowledged instrument (Ballard v. Carmichael, (Tex. 1891) 17 S. W. 393; Groesbeck v. Bodman, 73 Tex. 287, 11 S. W. 322).

Pennsylvania — Assignment of choses in action.— In Pennsylvania, a married woman, in conjunction with her husband, may assign her choses in action without acknowledgment. Powell's Appeal, 98 Pa. St. 403; Bond v. Bunting, 78 Pa. St. 210.

71. Small v. Field, 102 Mo. 104, 14 S. W. 815; Peterson v. Richman, 93 Tenn. 71, 23 S. W. 53; Warren v. Freeman, 85 Tenn. 513, 3 S. W. 513; Menees v. Johnson, 12 Lea (Tenn.) 561.

For a discussion of the powers of the wife over her equitable separate estate see HUSBAND AND WIFE.

New York.— Under the New York act of 1848 allowing a married woman to control her separate property as a feme sole, it was held that her conveyance thereof was valid though not acknowledged. 73. See supra, II, A.

Unnecessary acknowledgment not operative as estoppel.— Under the Alabama act of 1850 allowing a married woman's separate estate to be conveyed without a private examination apart from the husband, it was held that, the taking of her acknowledgment to such a deed on a private examination being unnecessary, such acknowledgment would not estop her from afterward avoiding the deed for duress. instrument properly executed in other respects but defectively acknowledged is good against everybody except subsequent creditors and purchasers without notice.[77] No one else can take advantage of the defect.[78]

b. Where Acknowledgment Essential to Validity. Where, by statute, the acknowledgment is made an essential part of the instrument,[79] a defective acknowledgment will render it void.[80]

c. As between the Parties. The fact that an instrument is defectively acknowledged will not affect its operative force as against the grantor and his heirs.[81]

d. As to Third Persons With Actual Notice. Except in cases where it is expressly provided otherwise by statute,[82] a defectively acknowledged instrument is valid as against all persons having actual knowledge of its existence.[83]

Ancient deed.— Where a deed has been recorded for forty years, during which time transactions of great importance have been based on it, and no title hostile to that derived through such deed has been asserted, the fact that the acknowledgment of the deed is defective does not constitute a defect in the title. Bucklen v. Hasterlik, 155 Ill. 423, 40 N. E. 561.

e. As to Third Persons Without Actual Notice. A defectively acknowledged instrument has no validity as against a subsequent purchaser for value and without notice.[84]

f. Raising Objections — (I) When to Be Taken. An objection to the acknowledgment of an instrument must be raised in the trial court, and is not available for the first time on appeal.[85]

(II) Who May Take. A defectively acknowledged instrument being usually valid as against every one except a subsequent creditor or purchaser without notice, it follows that such creditor or purchaser is the only one who can object to the acknowledgment.[86]

(III) Sufficiency of. An objection to the introduction in evidence of an instrument, on the ground that it is not properly acknowledged, must point out the specific ground of the objection, else it will be deemed to be waived.[87]

2. Effect of Registration — a. In General. Where, by statute, acknowledgment is required as a prerequisite to the registration of the instrument,[88] a defectively acknowledged instrument is not entitled to be recorded,[89] and the recording

Instrument not under seal.— An instrument which was in all respects a deed conveying land, except that it was not under seal, and which was acknowledged before the probate judge and recorded, was offered in evidence, with the certificate of the acknowledgment of its execution and recordation. It was held that the instrument was inadmissible, because, considering it as a mere contract,— the probate judge having no authority to take an acknowledgment of an instrument not under seal,— there was no proof of its execution. Alexander v. Polk, 39 Miss. 737.

Acknowledgment taken in wrong county.— Where the statute specifies in what county an acknowledgment shall be taken, a deed acknowledged in another county is not admissible in evidence without proof of execution. Gittings v. Hall, 1 Harr. & J. (Md.) 14, 2 Am. Dec. 502.

without proof of execution constitutes reversible error;[97] but it may be admitted for secondary purposes,[98] such as to show color of title.[99]

b. Admissibility of Record Copies. A record copy of a defectively acknowledged instrument is not admissible as evidence of title except upon proof of the execution of the original and the truth of the copy,[1] nor can such copy be proved in the common-law form by the testimony of the attesting witnesses: for that purpose the original must be produced.[2] But copies will sometimes be admitted for other purposes than as evidence of title.[3]

c. Right to Prove Execution by Other Modes. The sufficiency of the acknowledgment is material only where it is relied on as the sole proof of execution, and the instrument is admissible if otherwise proven by competent evidence.[4]

4. Operation as Attestation. In Alabama it is held that a defective certificate of acknowledgment signed by the officer is equivalent to the attestation of one witness.[5] But in New York the contrary has been held.[6]

Harmless error in admission.— Where the record of a mortgage acknowledged in another state was erroneously admitted in evidence, although bearing no certificate of authenticity, it was held that since it was shown that the subsequent purchaser had actual notice of the mortgage the judgment would not be reversed on that account. Irwin v. Welch, 10 Nebr. 479, 6 N. W. 753. Where a deed is insufficient for want of a proper acknowledgment it is not reversible error to receive it in evidence where the deed is pleaded in the complaint and not denied in the answer, and defendant acquired the interest in the land which he claimed before the deed was executed and was not affected by any want of notice of the deed or by any defect in its acknowledgment. Equity will protect wife's rights.— Where a mortgage by husband and wife is defectively acknowledged a court of equity will protect the wife in a suit to foreclose such mortgage, although she make no defense against it. Conner v. Abbott, 35 Ark. 365.

Mortgage of both real and personal property.— Where husband and wife execute a mortgage conveying both real and personal property, an acknowledgment by the wife that she has relinquished her right of dower in the land is not sufficient to make the mortgage a valid encumbrance on her interest in the personalty as to third persons. Carle v. Wall, (Ark. 1891) 16 S. W. 293.

Where defect immaterial.— Where a married woman intervened in an action of trespass to try title against her husband, expressly admitting the execution of a deed from herself and husband to plaintiff, but alleging that it was in fact a mortgage, it was held that plaintiff need not introduce the deed, and the fact that the certificate to the wife's separate acknowledgment thereof was defective was immaterial. Urquhart v. Womack, 53 Tex. 616.

statutory authority to the contrary a court of equity will not compel her to perform specifically a defectively acknowledged agreement to convey,[9] and a subsequent conveyance by her of the same property will be valid.[10] Nor will the recording of the defective instrument give it any validity.[11]

b. Operation as Estoppel. It seems to be the general rule that a married woman will not be estopped to deny a defectively acknowledged contract or conveyance, even though she may have enjoyed the benefits.[12] But sometimes courts of equity will apply the doctrine of estoppel in such cases to avoid gross injustice.[13]

c. How Contract Ratified. Where a married woman's deed is void because defectively acknowledged it cannot be ratified during the coverture except by reacknowledgment,[14] in which case the instrument takes effect only from the time when properly acknowledged.[15] After the death of her husband it seems that she

Where instrument incapable of ratification. — Where, six weeks after the husband had signed or procured someone to sign the name of his wife to a mortgage on the homestead, and had procured a notary to certify to the acknowledgment of the same by the wife, when in truth no such acknowledgment had been made, the wife, in the absence of her husband and at the solicitation and upon representations of the notary, signed and acknowledged before another notary an instrument attempting to ratify the mortgage, it was held that the act of the husband in signing his wife's name to the mortgage, or in procuring someone to do so, and the act of the notary certifying to its acknowledgment when in fact no such acknowledgment had been made, were criminal acts incapable of ratification. Instrument not curing defective acknowledgment.— A husband and wife executed a deed of trust reciting their inability to pay a mechanic's lien on their homestead, that the lien was duly executed and recorded, and that the deed was given in consideration of an extension of the debt. It was held that such instrument did not cure a defect in the acknowledgment to the mechanic's lien, since it was not executed for that purpose. Starnes v. Beitel, 20 Tex. Civ. App. 524, 50 S. may ratify and confirm the deed by redelivery.[16] But it has been held that a mere parol adoption is not sufficient, the statute of frauds requiring a writing.[17]

d. Effect as to Husband. A conveyance by husband and wife which is void as to the wife by reason of a defect in the acknowledgment may yet be sufficient as a transfer of the husband's interest,[18] and a grantee may elect to take such interest in full satisfaction of the contract.[19] But the wife will not be prevented thereby from proceeding to enforce her own rights even against an innocent purchaser from the husband.[20]

2. Where No Acknowledgment Required by Statute. Under the statutes of some states a married woman is now empowered to transfer and encumber her property as if she were unmarried, and where this is the case a defective acknowledgment will not render the instrument void, but will have the same effect as in the case of instruments executed by other persons.[21]

Tacit ratification.— Where an acknowledgment by a married woman was defective in substance, but she lived several years after her husband's death and never contradicted the deed, but received under it and did not assert her right of dower, she ratified the deed. Conklin v. Bush, 8 Pa. St. 514.

Insufficient ratification.— Where a married woman conveys her interest in certain lands, and the conveyance is void because of a defective acknowledgment, and after her husband's death she states that she has a life-estate in the premises and conveys the same, these recitals do not validate the former deed, though by it she retains a life-interest. Sutton v. Casselleggi, 5 Mo. App. 111.

Defect cured by pleading in subsequent suit.— Where a married woman's acknowledgment was taken and certified by a deputy in his own name, it was held that the insufficiency of the certificate was cured by the subsequent averment of the married woman, in a suit brought by her when discovert and sui juris, that she united in the conveyance and acknowledged it before the regular deputy who was authorized to take her acknowledgment. Where wife's joinder unnecessary.— The fact that an instrument bears an invalid acknowledgment by the wife will not prevent it from being admitted in evidence if there were no necessity for the wife to have joined in such instrument and it is properly acknowledged by the husband. Bassett v. Martin, 83 Tex. 339, 18 S. W. 587.

When statute of limitations begins to run. — Where a deed by husband and wife of a wife's land was not acknowledged and certified so as to pass the wife's right, it was held that she had no cause of action during the husband's life, and therefore the statute of limitations did not begin to run against her until his death. Gill v. Fauntleroy, 8 B. Mon. (Ky.) 177.

Where instrument valid as to another grantor.— The fact that a deed was not admissible to show a conveyance of the interest of one of the grantors, a married woman, because of its failure to show a proper acknowledgment on her part, is no ground for excluding it as a conveyance of the interest of another grantor therein whose acknowledgment was in proper form. IV. Effect of Valid Acknowledgment.

A. To Entitle Instrument to Registration — 1. In General. As has been stated heretofore, the statutes usually require that an instrument shall be acknowledged or proved before it can be properly recorded.[22] Where the statute has been complied with in this respect the instrument is of course entitled to registration[23] and will operate as constructive notice[24] from the date of its deposit with the recording officer.[25]

2. Acknowledgment by One of Several Grantors. Under the statutes in several jurisdictions it has been held that an instrument executed by several grantors, even where they are husband and wife, may be recorded so as to give constructive notice on an acknowledgment by one of them alone.[26]

3. Acknowledgment Taken Outside the State. Provision is usually made by statute for taking acknowledgments outside the state, and an acknowledgment taken and certified in accordance with the laws of the state where the land lies will entitle the instrument to be recorded in that state.[27]

Married woman's acknowledgment.—Where a married woman's acknowledgment is duly and regularly taken, the deed so acknowledged is an assurance of record like a fine at common law. Paul v. Carpenter, 70 N. C. 502.

Where recording required within prescribed time.—Where the statute requires the instrument to be recorded within a prescribed time after the acknowledgment, registration after the expiration of such period is ineffectual (Butler v. Wheeler, 82 Ky. 475; Williams v. Wilson, 4 Dana (Ky.) 507; Anderson v. Turner, 2 Litt. (Ky.) 237); but a subsequent acknowledgment amounts to a reëxecution, and the instrument may be recorded within the prescribed time thereafter (Roanes v. Archer, 4 Leigh (Va.) 550).

Where mode of acknowledgment changed by statute.— Where an instrument is properly acknowledged under the existing statute, but before it is offered for record the mode of acknowledgment is altered by a new statute, the instrument is nevertheless entitled to be recorded without reacknowledgment under the later statute. Attachment before making of certificate.— Where a deed of real estate was acknowledged before the register of deeds and handed to him to be recorded, but no certificate of the acknowledgment was made, and at the same instant a creditor of the grantor attached the estate, it was held that the attachment had priority, as the deed was not entitled to registration until the certificate was made. Husband and wife — Defective execution by husband.— Where a deed from two grantors is properly acknowledged as to one only, the record of such deed is evidence of its execution only as to the one by whom it has been properly executed, and so, where a deed by husband and wife was properly executed and acknowledged by the wife, but was imperfectly executed by the husband, it was held that the recording was not proof of the existence of such deed. 4. Acknowledgment Taken in Another County. Usually an acknowledgment properly taken and certified in a county other than that in which the land lies entitles the instrument to record in the latter county.[28]

5. Refusal of Grantor to Acknowledge. By statute in some states, where the grantor refuses to acknowledge his deed, it may be recorded without acknowledgment upon proof by a subscribing witness.[29]

B. To Render Instrument Admissible in Evidence — 1. In General. Usually it is provided by statute that an instrument duly acknowledged or proved before a proper officer by the subscribing witnesses[30] may be received in evidence without further proof of its execution,[31] even though the execution thereof be Wisconsin — Where grantor dead.— Wis. Rev. Stat. c. 86, 31, authorizing to be read in evidence a deed executed, witnessed, and acknowledged with all the formalities essential to entitle it to record, applies though the grantor be dead. Hinchliff v. Hinman, 18 Wis. 130.

Texas — Filing and three days' notice required.— The fact that the acknowledgment of a deed by the grantor is sufficient to entitle it to record does not render it admissible in evidence without filing and three days' notice to the opposite party as required by statute. Wiggins v. Fleishel, 50 Tex. 57.

Unnecessary acknowledgment.— Where an assignee in bankruptcy conveyed land belonging to a bankrupt estate by an order of the bankruptcy court, and the certificate of acknowledgment of the officer taking the same showed that the assignee personally appeared before the said officer, that his signature was subscribed to the said conveyance, and that he acknowledged the same to be his act and deed, it was held not error to admit the said deed in evidence without further proof, although no acknowledgment was necessary. Mixer v. Bennett, 70 Iowa 329, 30 N. W. 587.

New York — Assignment for benefit of creditors.— An assignment of property in trust for the benefit of creditors, a bill of sale, and an agreement may be admitted in evidence without further proof if duly acknowledged as required by law. Sheldon v. Stryker, 42 Barb. (N. Y.) 284.

Assignment of patent.—Under the statutes of New York an assignment of a patent, duly acknowledged before a notary public, is sufficiently proved, and it is not incumbent upon complainant in an action for infringement to prove the signature of the assignor. New York Pharmical Assoc. v. Tilden, 21 Blatchf. (U. S.) 190, 14 Fed. 740.

Power of attorney to transfer stock.— Under the act of 1833 relative to proceedings in suits and authorizing the acknowledging of written instruments, a power of attorney duly acknowledged by a subscribing witness, giving authority to transfer stock, and an assignment thereunder, is competent evidence of the transfer. California — Statute retrospective.— The California conveyance act authorizing the admission in evidence of instruments proved in the manner prescribed is not limited to instruments executed after its passage, but applies to those previously executed. Clark v. Troy, 20 Cal. 219.

Tax deed.— A properly acknowledged tax deed is admissible in evidence without further proof. Wetherbee v. Dunn, 32 Cal. 106.

Alabama — Deed by foreign corporation.— Ala. Code, § 1798, providing for the admission in evidence of conveyances acknowledged and recorded within twelve months, without further proof, applies to a deed by a foreign corporation, bearing the corporate seal, signed by its officers and acknowledged by them before a United States consul. Jinwright v. Nelson, 105 Ala. 399, 17 So. 91.

any statute authorizing it the instrument cannot be admitted by virtue of the acknowledgment, but must be duly proved.[35] Thus, where the only purpose of the statute is to authorize the registration of the instrument, the acknowledgment has no probative effect.[36]

3. Necessity for Registration. Under some statutes an instrument must be recorded as well as acknowledged, to be admissible without proof of execution.[37] But under others the acknowledgment alone renders it admissible regardless of registration.[38]

Minnesota — Indemnity bond.— An official certificate of acknowledgment of the execution of an indemnity bond constitutes prima facie proof of its execution. Romer v. Conter, 53 Minn. 171, 54 N. W. 1052.

Idaho — Bill of sale.— A bill of sale made and executed June 23, 1890, cannot be introduced in evidence unless it complies with the Idaho act of Feb. 7, 1889 (15 Sess. Laws, p. 49), in that it must be acknowledged before a notary public, or other officer authorized to take acknowledgments, and must be recorded in the office of the county recorder in the same manner as a deed. A will is not a conveyance, within the act relating to conveyances, so that it can be read in evidence on the certificate of proof or of acknowledgment by a notary. Carpentier v. Gardiner, 29 Cal. 160.

Deed conveying equitable interest.— The ordinance of 1787 for the government of the Northwestern Territory, providing that real estate may be conveyed by an instrument signed, sealed, and delivered, and proved by two witnesses, provided it be acknowledged, refers only to legal conveyances, and a deed purporting to convey an equitable interest in land is not proved by an acknowledgment. Lewis v. Baird, 3 McLean (U. S.) 56, 15 Fed. Cas. No. 8,316.

Power of attorney not affecting land.— In some states a power of attorney which does not affect real estate is not required to be recorded, and the fact of such instrument being acknowledged and recorded does not authorize it to be read in evidence without proof of execution. Stevens v. Irwin, 12 Cal. 306; Oppenheimer v. Giershofer, 54 Ill. App. 38.

Power of attorney by partnership.— The execution of a power of attorney by a partnership cannot be proven by a notary's acknowledgment alone, since, under Cal. Civ. Code, § 1185, the notary is not required to know or to certify who are included as members in the partnership, but only that the person making the acknowledgment is the one he claims to be; and outside evidence is therefore necessary in order to show the existence of the partnership and that the person mentioned is a partner. Alabama — Trust deeds.— Under the Alabama act of 1838 directing that trust deeds which are not recorded within the time limited shall be void as to creditors and subsequent purchasers without notice, it was held that the acknowledgment and registration have effect only as to notice and did not entitle the instrument to admission in evidence without further proof, there being no provision in the statute to that effect, as there is in the case of deeds of real estate. Ravisies v. Alston, 5 Ala. 297; Bradford v. Dawson, 2 Ala. 203.

Texas — Chattel mortgages.— Under the Texas act of April 22, 1879, permitting the registration of chattel mortgages without acknowledgment, such mortgage, though registered, is not in any case admissible in evidence except upon proof as at common law. Record failing to show acknowledgment.— An original deed bearing a proper certificate of acknowledgment is admissible in evidence without further proof, notwithstanding the record thereof fails to show any acknowledgment. Gardner v. Port Blakely Mill Co., 8 Wash. 1, 35 Pac. 402.

4. Instruments Acknowledged Outside the State. A deed acknowledged in another state according to the laws of the state where the land lies is entitled to be received in evidence without further proof of execution;[39] and this is usually true although the instrument be not recorded.[40] Under some statutes the instrument is admissible in evidence if the acknowledgment conforms to the laws of the place where taken,[41] and where this is the case it is incumbent upon the party seeking to introduce the instrument to show conformity with such laws.[42]

5. Acknowledgment after Commencement of Suit. In the case of persons other than married women an instrument may be admitted in evidence, though not acknowledged or proved before the commencement of the suit; it is sufficient if the acknowledgment is made at any time before the instrument is actually offered in evidence.[43] But since, in the case of a married woman's deed, no title passes until it is duly acknowledged, such a deed is not admissible on an acknowledgment made after suit was brought, for plaintiff cannot avail himself of a title which did not subsist in him until after he commenced his suit.[44]

6. Admissibility of Record Copies. As a general principle in the law of evidence a party offering to prove a fact by a deed must produce the deed and prove its existence.[45] But by virtue of statute in most states a record copy of a duly acknowledged instrument is admissible as original evidence without proof of the execution of the instrument.[46] And where a deed is acknowledged in another

In Maine, under a rule of court, an office copy of a deed is made admissible as evidence without proof, where the realty is the subject-matter of the suit. Hutchinson v. Chadbourne, 35 Me. 189. But it is admissible state in accordance with the laws of the state where the land lies, and is recorded in the latter state, a record copy is admissible in evidence.[47]

C. As Raising Presumption of Due Execution — 1. In General. The acknowledgment of an instrument raises a presumption of its due execution,[48] and is a fact entitled to consideration in determining whether there has been a delivery,[49] though it will not be taken as conclusive evidence of delivery.[50]

2. Adoption of Signature. Where a grantor in a deed acknowledges the same he thereby adopts the signature as his own, although his name may have been signed by another without his authority.[51] And so, under a statute not requiring only where the original has been lost, and it is not sufficient to show that the original is in the hands of defendant's attorney. Bird v. Bird, 40 Me. 392.

Missouri — Military bounty land.— Where deeds conveying military bounty land in Missouri are executed in other states and acknowledged in accordance with the laws of such states, but not in accordance with the laws of Missouri, certified copies thereof can be read in evidence on proof of the loss of the original (Barton v. Murrain, 27 Mo. 235, 72 Am. Dec. 259); but if duly acknowledged according to the laws of Missouri a certified copy is to be received on the same terms as deeds with valid acknowledgment (Tully v. Canfield, 60 Mo. 99 [overruling Totten v. James, 55 Mo. 494]; Wright v. Taylor, 2 Dill. As secondary evidence.— Where a statute which provides for the recording of a deed upon proof by the witness contains no provision regarding the admission of such deed or a record copy thereof in evidence, a certified copy may be read, if not as primary, at least as secondary evidence to show that the original is lost or not within the control of the party. Where no acceptance by grantee.— Where an agreement was made for the sale of land at a certain sum per rod, and a deed was made out, but not acknowledged and delivered, because the land had not been measured, and the owner afterward acknowledged the deed and sent it to the registry without the knowledge of the grantee, the grantee had no title as against a creditor of the grantor who had attached the land before the grantee had accepted the deed, and had afterward levied an execution upon it. Samson v. Thornton, 3 Metc. (Mass.) 275, 37 Am. Dec. 135.

Deed found in grantor's possession.—Where a deed shows upon its face that it was signed and acknowledged, but does not show that it was ever delivered, and it is found in the possession of the grantor at the time of his death, the presumption is that the deed was never delivered, and it is upon the party claiming that it was delivered to prove that such was a fact. Signature misspelled.— The facts that "Charles Y. Rogers" was named as grantor in the deed and in the certificate of acknowledgment, and that for many years afterward he asserted no claim to the land, warranted a finding against his denial that he executed the deed, though the signature of the grantor as recorded was "Charles F. Roggers." Rogers v. Manley, 46 Minn. 403, 49 N. W. 194. Compare Boothroyd v. Engles, 23 Mich. 19, in which a deed signed by "Harmon S." was acknowledged by "Hiram S."

Finding of due acknowledgment.— On an issue as to the execution of an instrument the officer who certified the acknowledgment testified that he took it at his office and that he was not certain that the person who acknowledged the instrument was the grantor therein. The signature was not in the latter's handwriting, and it appeared almost certain that when the acknowledgment was taken such grantor was too ill to leave the house, and there was some evidence that she was unable to execute the papers at her home. There was, however, evidence that on that date the grantor acknowledged another writing before the same officer, and her phy-

a deed to be subscribed at the end by the grantor, it was held that a deed wholly written by another, at the request of the grantor, wherein the grantor's name appeared only in the granting clause, was valid and operative when acknowledged by him before the proper officer.[52]

3. Where Instrument Void When Acknowledged. Where a deed is void when acknowledged, the acknowledgment will not render it effective.[53]

D. As Dispensing with Witnesses. Usually, where the statute requires attesting witnesses to a deed, a proper acknowledgment will operate as a substitute for such attestation.[54]

E. In Deeds by Married Women. A married woman's deed properly acknowledged in the mode prescribed by the statute is as effectual to convey her interest as if she were unmarried.[55] But if, at the time of acknowledgment, the instrument be incomplete by reason of blanks therein, it will not be binding on her when afterward filled up.[56] And so a proper acknowledgment by the wife will not render valid an instrument which is void for other reasons,[57] as, for sician testified that she was then able to execute papers. It was held that a finding by a referee that the paper was duly acknowledged was supported by the evidence. Albany County Sav. Bank v. McCarty, 71 Hun (N. Y.) 227, 24 N. Y. Suppl. 991.

Illinois — Chattel mortgage.— Ill. Stat. (1856), p. 136, provides that chattel mortgages shall be invalid against third persons when the possession is not delivered to and does not remain with the mortgagee, unless made, acknowledged, and recorded as provided; that in such case the mortgage must be acknowledged before a justice of the peace of the district in which the mortgagor resides; that the justice shall enter in his docket a memorandum of his acknowledgment, containing a description of the mortgaged property; and that the mortgage shall be recorded in the county recorder's office. It was held that the fact that a chattel mortgage on a stock of goods was so acknowledged and recorded did not validate it as to third persons, where it permitted the mortgagor not only to retain possession but to sell the same in the usual course of trade. Davis v. Ransom, 18 Ill. 396.

Pennsylvania — Sheriff's deed.— The acknowledgment, by a sheriff, of a deed of lands sold by him under execution, will cure irregularities in the sale (McFee v. Harris, 25 Pa. St. 102; Shields v. Miltenberger, 14 Pa. St. 76); but it will not cure a want of authority on his part to make the sale (St. Bartholomew's Church v. Wood, 61 Pa. Operates only to convey wife's interest.— Where husband and wife execute a deed of the husband's land with covenants, the acknowledgment of the wife operates only to convey her interest; and therefore she should not be joined as a co-defendant with her husband in an action for breach of the covenants. Fraudulent delivery by husband.—Where a husband who joins his wife in a deed in which the grantee's name is left blank fraudulently delivers the same to a purchaser for a smaller sum than that specified therein, which the wife agreed to take when she acknowledged the instrument, no title passes. Cole v. Bammel, 62 Tex. 108.

Where a husband and wife signed and acknowledged a blank mortgage, and authorized a third person to fill up the blanks by making it payable to one C for a certain amount, and he afterward filled it up in the absence and without the knowledge of the wife, so as to make it payable to A in a larger amount, it was not the mortgage of the wife. Unsigned deed.— A notary public annexed a formal acknowledgment to an unsigned deed in his possession, and took it to the purported grantors, wife and husband, for their signatures. The property described was the instance, an attempted conveyance by husband and wife which is properly acknowledged by her, but in which she has not joined as a grantor.[58]

V. Who May Acknowledge.

A. In General. No one can acknowledge a deed except the grantor or some one duly authorized to act for him.[59] Under some statutes the acknowledgment of an instrument by one of several grantors is sufficient to entitle it to registration[60] and to render it admissible in evidence as against the one who acknowledges.[61]

B. Attorney or Agent — 1. In General. Generally authority given to an attorney or agent to execute an instrument includes by implication the power to make the acknowledgment,[62] and it has been held that the power under which he acts need not be proved.[63]

2. For Married Woman. In the absence of statutory authority a married woman cannot authorize an attorney to make for her the acknowledgment required by statute: she must acknowledge her deed in person.[64]

wife's statutory estate, and the deed was invalid unless signed by the husband as required by Code, § 2348. The wife signed the deed, but the husband would not. Without correcting the acknowledgment the notary delivered the deed to the grantee, who some days afterward prevailed on the husband to sign it, but no acknowledgment was made. It was held, that the acknowledgment was void for lack of jurisdiction. Cheney v. Nathan, 110 Ala. 254, 20 So. 99, 55 Am. St. Rep. 26.

Mortgage to non-existent corporation.— A husband and wife gave a bond and mortgage to secure a subscription for certain bank stock, payable to the president of the bank. It was held that, as there was no such corporation as the bank at the time of the execution of the mortgage, the bond and mortgage, though valid as to the husband upon a delivery subsequent to organization, were invalid as to the wife, no new acknowledgment as to her being shown. Relinquishment of dower.— Though a married woman set forth in her acknowledgment that she had relinquished dower, if the deed itself contain no relinquishment a purchaser will not be required to accept the deed. Beavers v. Baucum, 33 Ark. 722; Witter v. Biscoe, 13 Ark. 422.

Acknowledgment by guardian.— Where a deed was executed and acknowledged "W. M. D., guardian for M. B.," and was acknowledged by the guardian "to be his act and deed as guardian aforesaid, and thereby the act and deed of the said M.," it was held a sufficient acknowledgment. Van Ness v. U. S. Bank, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 17, 10 L. ed. 38.

Alabama — Trust deed.— The act of 1828 (Aikin's Dig. p. 208, § 5) provides that all trust deeds shall be void against creditors and subsequent purchasers without notice unless recorded within thirty days in the office of the county where the estate may be situated. Section 7 provides that such deeds are to be proved or acknowledged as deeds and conveyances of real estate. The act of 1812 provides a form of the certificate of acknowledgment, which is that the grantor acknowledges, before the proper officer, that he signed, sealed, and delivered the deed, on the day and year therein mentioned, to the grantee. It was held that a trust deed acknowledged by the grantor need not be acknowledged also by the trustee or cestui. Bradford v. Dawson, 2 Ala. 203; Williams v. Jones, 2 Ala. 314.

Acknowledged as act of principal.— Where a deed is executed by three attorneys in fact, the acknowledgment should be made by all of the attorneys as an act of their principal, not of their own. Peters v. Condron, 2 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 80.

Plats of dedicated land.—The owner of the land sought to be made part of a city must himself acknowledge the map or plat of such land (Armstrong v. Topeka, 36 Kan. 432, 13 Pac. 843), and, in the absence of statutory authority, an acknowledgment under a power of attorney is not sufficient (Gosselin v. Chicago, 103 Ill. 623). C. Infant Married Woman. Where a married woman is also a minor the disability arising from her infancy remains, though she execute and acknowledge a deed in the form prescribed by statute for married women. Such instrument will be governed by the same rules that apply to other deeds by infants, and the statutory acknowledgment gives it no additional force.[65]

D. Deputy. Where an official deed is executed by a deputy he is the proper person to make the acknowledgment;[66] but as a general rule the deputy must act in the name of his principal.[67]

E. Officer Whose Authority Has Expired. Since the acknowledgment of a deed for most purposes relates back to the time of its execution, a deed executed by an officer in his official capacity may properly be acknowledged by him after his term of office has expired or his authority has been revoked.[68]

F. Corporation. An acknowledgment of a deed or other instrument in behalf of a corporation can be made only by an officer or representative authorized by the corporation to execute such instrument,[69] which authority is generally required to be shown.[70] An acknowledgment by individuals in such cases is

Person appointed to execute sheriff's deed. — An officer appointed, under Mo. Rev. a nullity.[71] Usually the person authorized by the corporation to affix its corporate seal is the proper one to make the acknowledgment.[72] Thus deeds have been held sufficient where acknowledged in behalf of the corporation by its president,[73] president and secretary,[74] vice-president,[75] secretary,[76] or cashier.[77] Where the seal has not been confided to any particular officer, a deed executed and acknowledged by the board of directors is sufficient.[78]

G. Partnership. In the absence of any statute to the contrary an acknowledgment may be made in behalf of a partnership by one of the partners describing himself as such[79] and with a proper showing of his authority to act in behalf of the firm.[80] But where it is necessary for all the partners to join in the execution of the instrument the acknowledgment should be made by all.[81]

VI. Who May Take Acknowledgments.

A. What Persons Qualified — 1. Officers Designated by Statute — a. In General. An acknowledgment can be taken by no one except a person authorized by statute for that purpose, and if taken by any other is of no effect.[82] But was held that N. Y. Rev. Laws (1813), p. 369, § 1, did not require that a person before whom a corporate deed was acknowledged should take evidence that the corporate seal was affixed by due authority, or as to the title of the officer executing it.

c. Acknowledgments of Particular Instruments. Where a statute providing for the acknowledgment of any particular instrument designates the person or officer who may take such acknowledgment, it must be taken before such person or officer and no other.[93] But where the statute fails to specify the persons who may take the acknowledgment it may be taken by one who has the power in other cases.[94]

2. Officers De Facto. The acts of officers de facto are as valid and effectual, when they concern the public or the rights of third persons, as though they were performed by officers de jure,[95] and therefore an acknowledgment taken by a de facto officer is not invalid on that account[96] and will not render the instrument

Under the Illinois statute a mayor of a "town" in the state cannot take an acknowledgment, though the mayor of a "city" may. Dundy v. Chambers, 23 Ill. 369.

93. Certificate of incorporation.— In Ohio an acknowledgment of a certificate of incorporation before a notary public, instead of before a justice of the peace as required by statute, was held to be invalid. State v. Lee, 21 Ohio St. 662.

Certificate of incorporation of religious society.— In New York the certificate of incorporation of a religious society is properly acknowledged before a commissioner of deeds. Second M. E. Plats of dedicated lands.— Under Ill. Rev. Stat. (1845), c. 25, § 20, which provides that plats shall be acknowledged before "a justice of the supreme court, judge of a circuit court, or a justice of the peace," an acknowledgment of a plat before a notary in 1855 was held to be a nullity. Gould v. Howe, 131 Ill. 490, 23 N. E. 602.

Power of attorney to confess judgment.— Since the authority of a notary public to take acknowledgments (Ill. Rev. Stat. c. 30, § 20) relates only to acknowledgments of instruments relating to realty, an acknowledgment, before a notary, to a power of attorney to enter judgment by confession on a note, is of no probative force to prove the validity of the power. Oppenheimer v. Giershofer, 54 Ill. App. 38.

Railroad preëmption claims.— Under the provisions of the Missouri act of March 5, 1859, for the assignment of railroad preëmption claims, such claims must be acknowledged before a justice of the peace, and could not, in 1870, be acknowledged before a notary public. Cravens v. Moore, 61 Mo. 178.

Officer whose commission has expired.— An acknowledgment taken before one who had acted as justice of the peace for many years, but whose last commission had in fact expired, he himself being in ignorance of this, continuing to act as justice in perfect good faith, is nevertheless good, as made before an officer de facto. Brown v. Lunt, 37 Me. 423. And see Kottman v. Ayer, 3 Strobh. (S. C.) 92, wherein the officer had neglected to take the oath of office on his reappointment.

Acknowledgment taken in another county.— A chattel mortgage was acknowledged before one duly commissioned as a police magistrate of a village situated partly in one county and partly in another. He lived in one county in such village, and his office was in the other county, where the acknowledgment was taken. The grantor resided outside the village, but in the township the office was in. Such officer had the reputation of being, and was believed to be, a police magistrate of the village. It was held that he was an officer de facto and that the acknowledgment was valid. 3. Deputies — a. In General. It is generally held that wherever an officer who is authorized by statute to take acknowledgments has the power of appointing a deputy, his deputy may also take acknowledgments, although not specifically designated in the statute;[99] though it would seem that in those jurisdictions where the act is deemed judicial[1] a deputy can have no such power, in the absence of express statutory authority.[2] yet an alien who has been duly commissioned as such is a de facto notary and has authority to take acknowledgments. Wilson v. Kimmel, 109 Mo. 260, 19 S. W. 24.

Officer living in another state.— One J was duly appointed and qualified as a justice of the peace for the county of S. in New Hampshire, and acted as such for several years. He then removed his family to Maine, but he had an office and continued in business in said county of S., and acted as justice of the peace for said county occasionally during the term for which he was originally appointed, and, as one of those acts, took the acknowledgment of the deed under which defendant claimed title. It was held that as between third persons having an interest therein his acts could not be inquired into. Prescott v. Hayes, 42 N. H. 56.

98. One who has not been appointed and sworn in as deputy, but who, as the clerk's brother, attended office for him in his absence with his assent, has no authority to certify the probate of an instrument as deputy clerk. Suddereth v. Smyth, 35 N. C. 452.

Where commission had long expired.— Where a mortgage was acknowledged before a person who acted as a notary public, it appearing that such person's commission had expired nearly two years before, it was held that such person could not be regarded a notary de facto, it not being shown that he attempted to act as a notary public, after his commission expired, until the probate of such mortgage. Hughes v. Long, 119 N. C. 52, 25 S. E. 743.

Officer appointed by non-existent government.— An acknowledgment of a deed taken before one appointed as clerk of a county by the "provisional government of Kentucky" in 1862, was held to be invalid, such provisional government having never been recognized as an existing de facto government by the political power of either the United States or the state of Kentucky. b. Acknowledgment Taken in Another State. Where an instrument has been acknowledged in another state before the deputy of an officer authorized to take such acknowledgment, the deputy signing himself as such and affixing the seal of office, it will be presumed, in support of the certificate, that the officer had authority to appoint a deputy.[3]

c. In Whose Name Taken. It has been held that the deputy should act in the name of his principal,[4] and that course would seem to be proper in any event.[5] But it has been directly held in several cases that an acknowledgment taken by a deputy in his own name is sufficient;[6] and where by statute the deputy is an independent officer, clothed with certain powers and duties separate and distinct from his principal, he may, of course, act in his own name.[7]

4. Acknowledgments Taken Outside the State — a. In Other States — (I) In General. An acknowledgment taken in another state is effective in the state where the land lies only when taken before a person authorized by the laws of the latter state to take acknowledgments.[8] The most usual officers designated by the statutes for this purpose are courts[9] or the individual judges thereof,[10] justices

Deputy signing only principal's name.— Where a deputy clerk who took an acknowledgment omitted, after signing his principal's name, to add "by" himself, "D. C.," it was held that the certificate was not invalid on that account, since by the same proof which showed that the clerk did not sign the same it was also shown that it was signed by the deputy, who was authorized to do so. Talbott v. Hooser, 12 Bush (Ky.) 408.

Signing as "special deputy."— Where an acknowledgment was properly taken by a deputy clerk who had authority to take it, it was held that his signing the certificate as "special deputy" (no such office being provided for by law) would not invalidate the certificate, such words being treated as surplusage. An "alderman" of a city who is clothed with the authority of a justice of the peace falls within a statute allowing acknowledgments to be taken by a "magistrate" (Gordon v. Hobart, 2 Sumn. (U. S.) 401, 10 Fed. Cas. No. 5,609), and, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, it will be presumed that an alderman is a justice of the peace when he undertakes to act as such (Welles v. Cole, 6 Gratt. (Va.) 645).

Mayor or other chief magistrate.— Under a statute requiring acknowledgments to be taken before the mayor or other chief magistrate or officer of the place where taken, an acknowledgment taken before a justice is not valid unless it appears that he is the chief magistrate (Cassell v. Cooke, 8 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 268, 11 Am. Dec. 610); and where such statute provides that, in case there be no city or town in the county of the grantor's residence, the acknowledgment may be taken by two magistrates of the county, an acknowledgment taken by such magistrates is not sufficient if it appears that there is in fact a city or town in the county (Miller v. Henshaw, 4 Dana (Ky.) 325). But where it was shown that there was no mayor or chief magistrate in the place it was held that an acknowledgment taken by two justices was valid, although the statute did not provide for such a contingency. North Carolina — Residence of grantor immaterial.— Under N. C. Commissioner for another state.— Where a deed was acknowledged in Pennsylvania before a commissioner of deeds appointed and acting under the laws of New York it was held that a certificate by a prothonotary that the acknowledgment was in accordance with the laws of Pennsylvania was insufficient to make the acknowledgment valid under the Illinois conveyance act, which provides that the certificate of the clerk of any court of record, under the seal of such court, that such deed was acknowledged or proved in dependent entirely upon the language of the statutes, a more detailed discussion would serve no useful purpose.[16]

(11) Where Laws of Other State Govern. By statute in some states it is provided that an acknowledgment taken in another state by an officer authorized by the laws of the latter state to take acknowledgments is sufficient.[17] Where this is the case it must be shown that the officer was so authorized.[18]

b. In Foreign Countries. For an acknowledgment taken in a foreign country to be effective in one of the United States it must have been taken before a person authorized by the laws of the latter state to take acknowledgments.[19] It is not enough that an acknowledgment was made before someone who assumed some official capacity to take it; his authority cannot be presumed without proof.[20] Ordinarily such authority is given by statute to notaries public,[21] conformity with the laws of such state, shall be sufficient proof of that fact. Lyon v. Kain, 36 Ill. 362.

Lack of authority fatal to validity.—Where a deed was recorded purporting to have been acknowledged before the commissioner of a county in another state, who did not appear to have been authorized to take acknowledgments for the state where the land lay, the defect was fatal. Uhler v. Hutchinson, 29 Pa. St. 110.

How long authority continues.— An acknowledgment before a commissioner of deeds appointed by the governor to take acknowledgments in another state is not impaired by the fact that the governor had gone out of office at the time the acknowledgment was taken. Acknowledgment not valid in either state. — The Connecticut act of 1855 validating all "deeds and other conveyances of real estate in this state which have been executed and acknowledged in any other state or territory in conformity with the laws of such state or territory relative to the conveyance of lands therein situated" does not validate a deed executed in New York, purporting to convey land in Connecticut and acknowledged in New York before a commissioner for Connecticut, but defective under the laws of Connecticut, although such acknowledgment, if made before a proper officer, would be sufficient to convey land situated in New York; because a commissioner of Connecticut has no power, under the laws of New York, to take acknowledgments of deeds of land situated in the latter state, and consequently any deed there acknowledged before him would not be acknowledged "in conformity with the laws" of New York "relative to the conveyance of lands therein situated." B. Disqualification by Interest — 1. Persons Financially or Beneficially Interested — a. In General. Because of the probative force accorded to the certificate, as well as the usually important consequences of the instrument itself, public policy forbids that the act of taking and certifying the acknowledgment should be exercised by a person financially or beneficially interested in the transaction.[32] And it has been held that the fact that an officer disqualified by interest is the only person authorized to take such acknowledgment will not render it more effective.[33] It is the general rule that an acknowledgment taken before an interested person is void for all purposes[34] and cannot be reformed or corrected;[35] but it has been held that where the disqualifying interest is not apparent on the face of the certificate the registration of the instrument will operate as constructive notice.[36] The amount of interest which would disqualify an officer is a question which must be largely determined by the facts and circumstances of the case in which it is presented rather than by any hard and fast rule.[37]

Provost-marshal of Confederate city.—Under N. C. Rev. Code, c. 37, providing that an acknowledgment by a husband and wife residing in a foreign country might be taken by the mayor or other chief officer of any state or town, it was held that an acknowledgment taken by the provost-marshal of a Confederate city while in possession of the United States military authorities during the war of secession was good; the provost-marshal being the chief officer of the town under the military rule, and such town being deemed a foreign country. Where trustee has not accepted trust.— The acknowledgment of a deed of trust taken before the trustee is void, though the latter has not accepted the trust; for since the deed is for his benefit his acceptance will be presumed until his dissent is shown, and such dissent will not be implied from the fact of his taking the acknowledgment. Missouri — Sheriff's deed.— It is no objection to a sheriff's deed that the judge of the court, before whom it was acknowledged, is the grantee therein. Such deed must be acknowledged in open court, and of necessity has to be acknowledged in the court whence the execution issued, there being no statute authorizing the judge of an adjoining circuit to be called in to sit and hold court for the mere purpose of taking acknowledgment of a sheriff's deed. Therefore the rule ordinarily applicable where an acknowledgment is taken before the grantee does not apply to such a case. Lewis v. Curry, 74 Mo. 49.

Deed treated as if executed to each separately.— While the grantee in a deed cannot take and certify the acknowledgment of his grantor, yet where there are several grantees named in a deed, each receiving a separate and defined interest, and the grantor's achim by a reacknowledgment before a duly qualified officer,[45] or by other proof of the instrument.[46]

d. Stockholder in Corporation. The acknowledgment of an instrument in which a corporation is financially interested cannot be taken by a stockholder in such corporation.[47]

2. Agent or Attorney of Party in Interest — a. In General. Ordinarily an agent or attorney of a party beneficially interested is not disqualified to take the acknowledgment if he himself have no interest in the transfer.[48] But it has been held that one who identifies himself with the transaction by placing his name on the face of the instrument as agent of one of the parties is disqualified to take the acknowledgment.[49]

b. Officer or Agent of Corporation. An officer or agent of a corporation who is not a stockholder therein or beneficially interested in the transaction is not disqualified from taking the acknowledgment of an instrument to which the corporation is a party,[50] and in the absence of any evidence to show that an officer of knowledgment is taken by one of them, the deed must be treated as if executed separately to each of such grantees and good as to each of them except the one taking the acknowledgment. Murray v. Tulare Irrigation Co., 120 Cal. 311, 49 Pac. 563, 52 Pac. 586.

a corporation is a stockholder therein it will not be presumed, as a matter of law, that such is the case.[51]

c. Deputy of Officer Interested in Instrument. Where a deputy is authorized to take acknowledgments[52] it is held that he is not disqualified by reason of the fact that his principal is a party to the instrument.[53] On the other hand an instrument executed by an under-sheriff may be acknowledged before the sheriff, acting as a notary public.[54]

3. Person Related to Party in Interest. Where the taking of an acknowledgment is deemed a ministerial act, an officer who is not beneficially interested in the conveyance will not be disqualified by reason of relationship to one of the parties therein.[55] Thus the husband of the grantee may take the acknowledgment[56] unless he have a beneficial interest in the conveyance.[57] But it has been held that while such acknowledgment is not per se void, yet it is open to attack, and the court will lend a ready ear to evidence of undue advantage, fraud, or oppression arising out of such relationship.[58]

C. Territorial Extent of Officer's Jurisdiction — 1. Outside the State. It is the general rule that in the absence of special statutory authority an officer empowered to take acknowledgments cannot exercise that power outside his own state.[59] But in Ohio it has been held that an acknowledgment affecting lands situated within the territory over which the officer has jurisdiction may be taken by him anywhere in the United States.[60]

2. Outside County or District. Usually an officer is not authorized to take acknowledgments outside the county or district over which he exercises jurisdiction.[61] But in some jurisdictions justices of the peace and notaries are empowered to perform such acts in any county of the state.[62]

VII. Nature of Officer's Act — Judicial or Ministerial.

In some jurisdictions it is held that the act of the officer in taking and certifying an acknowledgment is judicial, or, as it is sometimes called, quasi-judicial, in its nature.[63] This holding is based on the theory that the determination by the officer whether the person appearing before him really is the grantor, or a person authorized to act for him, and whether such person does actually and truly acknowledge before him that he executed the instrument, is the exercise of a judicial function.[64] But as a rule the courts are not inclined to give so great force to an act which is usually performed by officers of an inferior grade with but little formality or solemnity, and the weight of authority holds the act to be ministerial only.[65] Where this latter doctrine obtains, the act of a clerk or other

The North Carolina doctrine in this regard is rather difficult of ascertainment. The act was held to be judicial in Paul v. Carpenter, 70 N. C. 502, and Wright v. Player, 72 N. C. 94. But the doctrine stated in those cases officer in certifying to the official character of the officer who took the acknowledgment, and to the genuineness of the signature, is also regarded as ministerial.[66]

VIII. PLACE OF TAKING.

A. In General. The question as to where an acknowledgment may be taken is dependent almost entirely upon statute.[67] Generally an officer authorized to take acknowledgments in a certain county or district may exercise such power in any part of his county or district.[68] Sometimes the acknowledgment is required to be taken in the county in which the grantor resides.[69]

B. County or District in Which Land Lies. Sometimes the statute empowering an officer to take acknowledgments of deeds confines his authority to cases where the land conveyed lies in the county or district over which he has jurisdiction, and where this is the case an acknowledgment before such officer of a conveyance of land lying in another county or district is of no effect.[70] But was distinctly disapproved in Jones v. Cohen, 82 N. C. 75. See also Ware v. Nesbit, 94 N. C. 664. Then in the later case of Piland v. Taylor, 113 N. C. 1, 3, 18 S. E. 70, the court said: "Such an act has been decided in this state to be judicial in its character;" and a ruling practically to the same effect is found in Nimocks v. McIntyre, 120 N. C. 325, 26 S. E. 922. But the recent case of McAllister v. Purcell, 124 N. C. 262, 32 S. E. 715, is at least persuasive authority to the effect that the act is ministerial.

Where land lay or grantor resided.—Under an early Maryland statute a deed was required to be acknowledged before two justices of the peace in the county where the land lay or the grantor resided (Gittings v. Hall, 1 Harr. & J. (Md.) 14, 2 Am. Dec. 502; Johns v. Reardon, 3 Md. Ch. 57); and registration in the proper county would not cure the defect if the acknowledgment was taken before justices of another county (Johns v. Reardon, 3 Md. Ch. 57).

Temporary residence.—Under a statute requiring an acknowledgment to be taken in the county of the acknowledgor's residence it was held that one who permanently resided in one county, but spent certain seasons of the year at his country residence in another county, might acknowledge a deed of lands lying in a third county while temporarily sojourning at his country residence. Hall v. Gittings, 2 Harr. & J. (Md.) 380.

Proof by subscribing witness.— By N. C. Code, § 1246, a subscribing witness to a deed, who does not reside in the county in which the land is, must prove it in the county where he resides. An attestation clause stated that the deed was signed, sealed, and delivered in the witness's presence, and the certificate of probate, taken in a county other than that in which the land was, stated that "the execution of the annexed deed was . . . proven before me by . . . S, the subscribing witness thereto, who says that the deed was signed and delivered in his presence," etc. It was held, that the fair inference, and the presumption from the duty of the officer, were that the witness resided in the county in which the proof was taken. usually a deed conveying lands situated in one county or district of the state may properly be acknowledged before an officer of another county or district.[71]

C. Acknowledgment Taken in Other States. It is generally provided by statute that an acknowledgment taken in one state of a conveyance of land lying in another state shall be valid if acknowledged according to the laws of the latter.[72] Under some statutes such acknowledgment is valid only where the grantor is a resident of the state wherein it is taken,[73] and sometimes the acknowledgment must be taken in the county of his residence.[74]

IX. TIME OF TAKING.

A. In General. Ordinarily an acknowledgment is not required to be taken at any specified time, and if taken at any time subsequent to the execution of the instrument it is effective from the time of taking.[75] But where the statute requires the instrument to be recorded within a specified time after its execution, an acknowledgment and registration of the instrument after the expiration of such period will not affect rights which have vested in the meantime.[76]

B. When Instrument Incomplete. It has been held that if a deed and its acknowledgment are regular on their face the effect of the record will not be impaired by the fact that the acknowledgment was in fact taken before the deed was completed, as where the name of the grantee was left blank.[77] But a married woman's deed will derive no validity from being acknowledged while in such condition.[78]

C. From What Time Instrument Takes Effect — 1. Instruments by Persons Other Than Married Women. Instruments executed by persons other than married women being usually binding between the parties without acknowledgment, it follows that an acknowledgment subsequently made will relate back to the time of execution,[79] except in cases where the rights of third persons have intervened.[80] But where the acknowledgment is made essential to the operative force of the instrument it seems that such instrument will take effect, not from the time of execution, but from the time of acknowledgment.[81]

2. Instruments by Married Women. Where the acknowledgment of the wife is absolutely necessary to the effective force of the instrument executed by her, it would seem that such instrument would take effect only from the time of the acknowledgment,[82] and such is certainly the case where rights of third parties have intervened between the execution and the acknowledgment.[83] But in some cases where no rights have intervened a subsequent acknowledgment by the wife has been held to relate back to the date of the original delivery of the instrument.[84]

instrument will be presumed to have been delivered on the day it bears date, notwithstanding the acknowledgment bears a later date.[85] Thus, where two deeds bearing different dates were acknowledged at the same time, it was presumed, in the absence of proof to the contrary, that they were delivered on their respective dates, and not that both were delivered at the time of acknowledgment.[86] But sometimes it has been held that the date of the subsequent acknowledgment should be presumed to be the date of delivery,[87] and where the instrument bears date subsequent to that of the acknowledgment the date of the acknowledgment may be taken as the time of delivery.[88] Such presumptions as to the time of delivery may always be overcome by evidence to the contrary.[89]

E. Relative Time of Acknowledgment by Husband and Wife — 1. In General. It is not usually necessary that an instrument executed jointly by husband and wife should be acknowledged by both of them at the same time and place, and the fact that the wife's acknowledgment is taken a considerable time after the execution and acknowledgment of the deed by the husband will not invalidate it in the absence of any intervening rights of third persons.[90] husband, the wife properly acknowledges an instrument executed during the coverture, it operates as a reëxecution, and is sufficient to pass her interest from that time.[91]

X. MODE OF TAKING.

A. Of Persons Other Than Married Women — 1. PRIVATE PERSONS — a. In General. The authentication of documents by acknowledgment being of statutory origin, it naturally follows that an acknowledgment must be taken in the mode prescribed by the statute existing at the time of its taking.[92] A substantial compliance with the statutory provisions is all that is usually required;[93] and where a statute providing for the acknowledgment of a particular instrument does not point out the mode in which it is to be taken, an acknowledgment according to the mode prescribed for other cases is sufficient.[94] Under some statutes an acknowledgment, to be valid, must be made in open court.[95]

b. Ascertainment of Grantor's Identity. The statutes generally require that the officer taking the acknowledgment shall know, or have satisfactory evidence, that the person acknowledging the instrument is the grantor mentioned therein,[96]

Code, § 2508, providing that no conveyance of a homestead by a married man shall be valid unless separately acknowledged by the wife, if she failed to acknowledge it at the time of its execution or subsequently during the husband's life her acknowledgment after his death could not affect the title of the decedent's heirs.

Repeal of former statute.—The Illinois act of 1853 in regard to the acknowledgment of deeds repealed so much of the act of 1847 as conflicted with its provisions; and after the passage of the act of 1853 an acknowledgment, to be good, must be in accordance with its terms rather than with those of the earlier statute. Lyon v. Kain, 36 Ill. 362.

Statutes providing different modes.—While the Oklahoma statute regarding conveyances and that relating to transfers provide different modes of acknowledgment, they are each, when conformed to, effective and sufficient. Inasmuch as these statutes relate to the same subject-matter they should be construed together, and effect should be given to each, especially as they were both enacted at the same legislative session. The identity of the grantor, and not that of the person who merely signs the deed, is a fact the officer must know before he is authorized to grant his certificate. Lyon v. Kain, 36 Ill. 362.

Fact of acknowledgment.—The person who and a failure to comply with such requirement renders the acknowledgment defective.[97] The grantor's identity may be established by the oath of a subscribing witness[98] or other person known to the officer,[99] and it has been held that an introduction by a common friend is sufficient.[1] But it seems that the identification cannot properly be made by a person interested in sustaining the instrument.[2]

c. Explanation of Instrument to Grantor. It is the duty of the officer to ascertain that the grantor understands the nature of the instrument he is executing, and where the grantor is ignorant or illiterate the officer must read or make known its contents to him,[3] or use other means to enable him to comprehend the character and effect of his act.[4]

d. Where Instrument Proved by Witness. Where an instrument is proved for record by a subscribing witness it is generally required that such witness shall testify that he was present and saw the instrument executed.[5] executes the deed must in fact acknowledge it to the officer to be his deed, either by the use of that word or by some other equivalent word or expression (Short v. Conlee, 28 Ill. 219), and a mere statement by the grantee, in the absence of the grantor, that the latter executed the deed, is not sufficient to warrant the officer in certifying the acknowledgment (Mays v. Hedges, 79 Ind. 288).

97. Several grantors — Some unknown to officer.— An acknowledgment by several persons, some of whom are unknown to the officer, is defective, even though the others are well known to him. Treadwell v. Sackett, 50 Barb. (N. Y.) 440.

Sufficient if officer's conscience satisfied.— An introduction by a common friend is sufficient to satisfy a statutory requirement that the officer taking an acknowledgment shall know or have satisfactory evidence that the person making such acknowledgment is the individual described in and who executed the instrument, if such introduction satisfies the conscience of the officer as to the identity of the party. As to the necessity for the certificate to recite that the instrument was explained to the acknowledgor see infra, XII, G, 1, a, (II), (C).

Where mere reading insufficient.— Where the grantor is old, decrepit, and ignorant, it is the duty of the officer authenticating the execution of the deed to make known to him its contents by such means as will enable him to comprehend the nature and effect of his act. A simple, formal reading of the instrument is insufficient. Lyons v. Van Riper, 26 N. J. Eq. 337.

Transfer procured under suspicious circumstances.— Where the officer, when summoned to attest a transfer of property procured by the transferee under suspicious circumstances, neglects to investigate carefully the condition of things in the beneficiary's absence, his testimony that the donor seemed to be in full possession of his faculties is less satisfactory than if he had taken such precautions. Duncombe v. Richards, 46 Mich. 166, 9 N. W. 149.

4. Grantor deaf and dumb.— The deed of an uneducated deaf and dumb man, acknowledged before a justice and recorded, will be sustained on proof that the deed was explained to him by signs and that he was believed to understand it, there being no evidence of fraud on the part of the grantee. Morrison v. Morrison, 27 Gratt. (Va.) 190.

Grantor ignorant of English language.— A notary's certificate of acknowledgment is of little force when the person purporting to make the acknowledgment does not understand English, and the notary has not explained the effect of the act in such person's own language and has not seen to it himself that it was understood. Harrison v. Oakman, 56 Mich, 390, 23 N. W. 164.

Right to employ interpreter.— In the absence of statutory authority, an officer who is ignorant of the grantor's vernacular language cannot take the acknowledgment through a sworn interpreter. Dewey v. Campau, 4 Mich. 565.

Instrument signed in presence of witness.— Under Tex. Rev. Stat. art. 4314, a declaration by the subscribing witness that the grantor signed the instrument in his presence is equivalent to a declaration that the witness saw the grantor sign it. and it is not necessary that the witness should further declare that he signed the instrument at the request of the grantor. 2. Corporations. Ordinarily the manner of taking an acknowledgment by a corporation is not different from that provided in a case of an individual grantor,[6] except that such acknowledgment must be made by some person or persons authorized to act in behalf of the corporation.[7] Where a special mode of acknowledgment is provided by statute, such mode must of course be pursued.[8]

3. Acknowledgments Taken Outside the State — a. Must Conform to Laws of State Where Land Lies. Where a conveyance is acknowledged in a state other than that in which the land lies, the acknowledgment must be taken in accordance with the laws of the latter state.[9]

Ascertaining identity of grantor.— The requirement that the officer must be satisfied that the person executing and acknowledging the deed is the grantor mentioned therein, when applied to the deed of a corporation, means that he must be satisfied that the person making the acknowledgment is in the eye of the law the grantor mentioned in it; that is, authorized to represent the corporation in executing and acknowledging the conveyance. Being so satisfied, he accepts the acknowledgment of the representative as that of the grantor itself. Hopper v. Lovejoy, 47 N. J. Eq. 573, 21 Atl. 298, 12 L. R. A. 588.

8. Sufficient acknowledgments.— Where the president of a corporation affixes the corporate seal and signs his name as president to a mortgage, and acknowledges the execution thereof, testifying that the seal is the common seal of the corporation and attached by him to the mortgage under the authority of the corporation, the acknowledgment is sufficient to entitle the mortgage to record. Lovett v. Steam Saw Mill Assoc., 6 Paige (N. Y.) 54. Under the Missouri statutes prior to the act of April 2, 1883, a deed signed with the corporate name by the secretary and treasurer and with the name of the president, acknowledged before a notary public with the recital that the corporation, by its president and secretary, personally came before the officer, was held to be a properly acknowledged deed of the corporation. Missouri Fire Clay Works v. Ellison, 30 Mo. App. 67.

California — Articles of incorporation.—Cal. Civ. Code, § 292, provides that articles of incorporation must be subscribed by five or more persons and acknowledged by each. Where the articles of incorporation were signed by five persons, but acknowledged by four only, it was held that the defect was fatal to the existence of the corporation in a proceeding against it by quo warranto. b. Adoption of Laws of Other State. In some jurisdictions the statutes provide that an acknowledgment in conformity with the laws of the state where taken shall be sufficient,[10] and where this is the case it is usually necessary to show that such laws have been complied with.[11] But the provisions of the statute of the state in which the land lies cannot be so combined with those of the state in which the conveyance was acknowledged that, by their joint operation, such acknowledgment, though defective under the provisions of either statute, will be sufficient under the combination.[12]

B. Of Married Women — 1. Where Acknowledgment Made Essential by Statute — a. Necessary Compliance with Statute. As has been stated heretofore, where a statute authorizing a married woman to convey her property requires her to acknowledge the instrument, such acknowledgment is absolutely essential to the validity of the conveyance even as between parties.[13] Hence it follows that the acknowledgment must be taken in compliance with the provisions of the existing statute,[14] else it will be of no force.[15] But it seems that a substan-Mortgage on separate estate.—A mortgage given by a married woman on her separate estate is an "instrument" and a "conveyance" within the meaning of Cal. Civ. Code, §§ 1186, 1189, and, to be valid, must be acknowledged with the formalities therein prescribed. Tolman v. Smith, 74 Cal. 345, 16 Pac. 189.

The former practice in North Carolina was to require an acknowledgment by husband and wife in open court (Barfield v. Combs, 15 N. C. 514; Burgess v. Wilson, 13 N. C. 306; Fenner v. Jasper, 18 N. C. 34), unless tial compliance is sufficient.[16] If the statute requiring an acknowledgment of a particular instrument prescribes no form, such acknowledgment may be taken in the manner prescribed for other cases.[17]

b. Ascertainment of Grantor's Identity. The officer taking a married woman's acknowledgment must know personally or from satisfactory proof that the woman making the acknowledgment is the grantor who executed the instrument.[18]

c. Voluntary Nature of Act. In the absence of any statute allowing a married woman to convey her property as if sole, an acknowledgment, to be binding on her, must be made on her declaration that she has freely and voluntarily executed the instrument.[19] Before the officer can lawfully certify the acknowledgment, it is his duty to ascertain from the wife personally that she is acting of her own free will and not under coercion or compulsion,[20] and if she state that she is the wife were unable to travel to court, in which case a commission was issued to two commissioners to take her acknowledgment (Malloy v. Bruden, 88 N. C. 305; Pierce v. Wanett, 51 N. Scott v. Simons, 70 Ala. 352.

Where unnecessary to follow other statutes.— The Rhode Island statute prescribing the mode of barring estates tail by acknowledgment in open court provides no different form of acknowledgment for a married woman. It was held that in proceeding under this statute it was unnecessary to follow the formula required by another statute in taking the acknowledgments of married women. Lippitt v. Huston, 8 R. Sufficient acknowledgment of execution.— A statement by a married woman to the notary who took her acknowledgment, that the signature to the deed was hers, was held to be sufficient evidence of the execution to justify the notary in making his certificate, and such facts may be proved by the officer. Jansen v. McCahill, 22 Cal. 563, 83 Am. Dec. 84.

As to recitals in the certificate touching the voluntary nature of the act see infra, XII, G, 1, b, (II), (D).

Meaning of word "freely."— The word "freely," as used in a statute regulating acknowledgments by married women, does not import that the married woman shall execute the deed without a motive, or as a mere act of generosity and without any hope of present or future benefit; but that she shall execute it without constraint or coercion or fear of injury from her husband. Meriam v. Harsen, 2 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 232.

20. Fisher v. Meister, 24 Mich. 447; Wannell v. Kem, 57 Mo. 478. In McCaskill v. McKinnon, 121 N. C. 214, 28 S. E. 343, where there was no evidence that defendant, a married woman, had assented to the examination or expressed her voluntary assent in any other way than by verbal statement, it was held not error to charge that if defendant "did not state" to the examining magistrate that she voluntarily signed a mortgage sued upon, the jury should find that she did not voluntarily execute it and was not examined separately touching her voluntary execution thereof.

Need not use the words of the statute.— It is not necessary that an officer taking the acknowledgment of a married woman should ask, in the words of the statute, whether "she wished to retract it." It is sufficient if he elicits from her that it was her present purpose willingly to execute the instrument. Adams v. Pardue, (Tex. Civ. App. 1896) 36 S. W. 1015.

Assent implied from silence.— Where the wife making the acknowledgment made no reply to the questions put to her by the officer as to her free execution of the deed, her not willing to convey, the officer has of course no right to certify that she assented to the conveyance.[21]

d. Explanation of Instrument — (I) In General. It is a usual statutory requirement that the officer taking a married woman's acknowledgment shall make her acquainted with the contents of the instrument, and where this is the case such requirement must be observed in order for the acknowledgment to be effective.[22] The explanation by the officer must be sufficiently full and accurate to give the woman an understanding of the nature of her act,[23] but he is not obliged to go into a detailed explanation of collateral matters.[24]

(II) Where Wife Already Acquainted with Contents. The primary object of such statutory directions is that the woman shall understand the nature of her act and its consequences, and if that object is accomplished a failure to comply literally with the statute is not material. Therefore it is generally held that where a wife already understands the contents and effect of the instrument, and so informs the officer, no further explanation on his part is necessary.[25] But assent might be implied from her silence. Rexford v. Rexford, 7 Lans. (N. Y.) 6.

Not applicable to deed by widow.— The statutory requirement that a deed executed by a married woman must be read and explained to her by the officer who takes her acknowledgment does not apply to a deed executed by a widow. Beville v. Jones, 74 Tex. 148, 11 S. W. 1128.

Explanation through interpreter.— Where the instrument is explained through the medium of an interpreter to a married woman who does not understand English, it is the proper practice for the interpreter to be sworn. Waltee v. Weaver, 57 Tex. 569.

23. What not a "full explanation."— Where a deed of a married woman on its face conveys an absolute title in fee, an explanation by the acknowledging officer that such instrument conveys only a life-estate is not a "full explanation" of its legal effect within the meaning of the statute relating to the acknowledgment of deeds by married women. Norton v. Davis, 83 Tex. 32, 18 S. W. 430.

Unsound mental condition.— Where a married woman's mental condition was such that her privy examination could not properly be made it was held that the deed was void. Garth v. Fort, 15 Lea (Tenn.) 683.

24. Morrison v. McKee, 11 Mo. App. 594.

Collateral instrument executed same day.— Where a notary, in taking a married woman's acknowledgment to a deed, complete in itself, conveying the husband's homestead, explained the effect of the act as passing the fee, it was not necessary for him also to explain to her another instrument executed on the same day, as part of the same transaction, by her husband and the grantee, whereby the grantee agreed to reconvey at a certain price within three years and the husband agreed to pay a certain rent during such time. Andrews v. Bonham, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 179, 46 S. W. 902.

Nature and extent of title.— Wag. Stat. Mo. p. 275, § 13, requiring the officer taking the acknowledgment of a married woman to a deed "to make her acquainted with the contents" of the instrument, does not require the officer to inform her of the nature and extent of her title, unless by special covenant made a part of the deed. Knowledge of instrument sufficiently shown. — A debt of a husband, for which the wife's property was bound by a mortgage, was being pressed, and arrangements were made to discharge it by means of a new mortgage to plaintiff. The parties, with their counsel, met and discussed the matter, the wife taking an active part, and she signed the mortgage only after each item had been fully discussed and after she had been advised by her counsel. It was held that the mortgage was valid although the notary taking her acknowledgment failed to inform her as to the contents of the paper. Kaufmann v. Rowan, 189 Pa. St. 121, 42 Atl. 25.

the officer must be satisfied that she really understands it,[26] and it seems that her mere statement that she knows its contents is not sufficient.[27]

e. Privy Examination — (I) In General. Where a statute authorizing a married woman to alien her property provides that the instrument shall be acknowledged by her on a private examination separate and apart from her husband, such provision must be considered as mandatory, and unless she be so examined her acknowledgment will be of no effect;[28] and the fact that the officer was ignorant

As to recitals in the certificate regarding the privy examination see infra, XII, G, 1, b, (II), (C).

Release of equitable right.— A wife cannot release her equitable right in land, without privy examination of her, any more than she can a legal title. Countz v. Geiger, 1 Call (Va.) 190.

Where executed before marriage.— A deed, when executed by an unmarried woman, may be acknowledged by her as feme sole after she marries. King v. Davis, 13 Pa. Co. Ct. 657. In Darden v. Neuse, etc., Steamboat Co., 107 N. C. 437, 12 S. E. 46, it was held that an executrix who while sole entered into an agreement to lease land belonging to the estate was competent to acknowledge the lease for registration after her marriage, without being privily examined. But see Johnson v. Walton, 1 Sneed (Tenn.) 258, wherein it was held that an acknowledgment of a marriage contract, taken after the marriage without the privy examination of the wife, was a nullity, though the contract were executed before the marriage.

In North Carolina the privy examination of the necessity to examine her privately will not prevent the acknowledgment from being invalid.[29]

(II) What Privacy Required. The object of the private examination is to discover whether the wife is acting of her own volition,[30] and therefore it should properly be taken so far out of the presence of the husband that he cannot communicate with her by word, look, or motion, or see or hear any intimation of unwillingness on her part, for otherwise she has no opportunity to escape coercion.[31] Where it appears that the husband was present during the examination, the presumption that the wife did not act freely and without constraint arises as a matter of law.[32]

f. Acknowledgment Taken Outside the State. The general rule that an acknowledgment taken outside the state where the land lies must conform to the laws of that state applies to acknowledgments by married women.[33]

2. Where Separate Acknowledgment Not Required — a. Statutory Authority to Convey as Feme Sole. Where, by statute, a married woman is authorized to

of the wife is required to be taken after the instrument has been acknowledged in open court by both husband and wife. Barrett v. Barrett, 126 N. C. 127, 26 S. E. 691, 36 L. R. A. 226; Southerland v. Hunter, 93 N. C. 310; Ferguson v. Kinsland, 93 N. C. 337; McGlennery v. Miller, 90 N. C. 215; Jones v. Lewis, 30 N. C. 70, 47 Am. Dec. 338; Gilchrist v. Buie, 21 N. 29. Stevenson v. Brasher, 90 Ky. 23, 13 S. W. 242.

30. In Garth v. Fort, 15 Lea (Tenn.) 683, 687, the court said: "The guard thrown around the married woman by the law requiring the privy examination is intended to furnish her the means of information necessary to a perfect understanding of the act she is called on to perform, and to protect her against her own ignorance of what may be the legal effect of her act as well as against the superior knowledge, cunning, and undue influences of others."

31. Belo v. Mayes, 79 Mo. 67; McCandless v. Engle, 51 Pa. St. 309.

Presence of third person.— A separate acknowledgment of a married woman is not invalidated by the fact that a third person was present with her and the magistrate after the husband had withdrawn. Jones v. Maffet, 5 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 523.

32. Moorman v. Board, 11 Bush (Ky.) 135; Woodhead v. Foulds, 7 Bush (Ky.) 222; Allen v. Shortridge, 1 Duv. (Ky.) 34; Fisher v. Meister, 24 Mich. 447. But see Norton v. Nichols, 35 Mich. 148, wherein it was held that the wife, by her deliberate conduct, had estopped herself from taking advantage of the technicality.

Coercive presence.— Where a married woman objected to signing a deed of real property, and was thereupon addressed by her husband in harsh, threatening, and abusive language (though not in the presence of the acknowledging officer), and immediately thereafter in the presence of her husband she acknowledged the same to be her voluntary act, etc., it was held that the presence of the husband was a coercive presence and that the acknowledgment was not taken "separately apart" from him in the spirit and meaning of the statute, and therefore the instrument was ineffectual to pass her interest in the land. Edgerton v. Jones, 10 Minn. 427.

Sufficient privacy.— Where the wife's examination was taken on a porch outside the room in which the husband was lying down with his head toward her, it was held that she was examined separate and apart from him as required by law. Webb v. Webb, 87 Mo. 540.

Where presence in room immaterial.— In the separate acknowledgment of a deed by a married woman it is not necessary to the validity of her examination that her husband should go out of the room if he goes far enough away from her to leave her free to express to the clerk her desire with respect to the deed. Hall v. Castleberry, 101 N. C. 153, 7 S. E. 706.

33. McDaniel v. Grace, 15 Ark. 465; Woods v. Polhemus, 8 Ind. 60; Dalton v. Murphy, 30 Miss. 59; Harmon v. Taft, 1 Tyler (Vt.) 6.

For other matters regarding acknowledgments taken outside the state see supra, X, A, 3.

Privy examination.— The deed of a married woman, proved in a court of another state without privy examination, is insufficient to convey lands lying in Kentucky. Steele v. Lewis, 1 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 48.

Instrument effective where acknowledged. — A deed made in Massachusetts in 1805 by a husband and wife, and acknowledged by the wife only, passes the wife's interest in land in Ohio because it has that effect in Massachusetts. Foster v. Dennison, 9 Ohio 121. But a deed of lands in Missouri, executed by a husband and wife in Illinois, and acknowledged before a notary, though not in compliance with the statute regulating conveyances then in force in Illinois, is of no validity as against the wife. Reaume v. Chambers, 22 Mo. 36.

New York — May acknowledge as feme sole.— Under the New York statutes the acknowledgment of deeds by married women living out of the state may be made as if they were sole. Andrews v. Shaffer, 12 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 441. See also Platt v. Brown, 30 Conn. 336, construing the New York statute.

convey as a feme sole, the acknowledgment ceases to be essential to the validity of the instrument[34] and may be taken and certified in the same manner as one by any other person under no legal disability.[35] Consequently, where such statutes exist, a privy examination of the wife separate and apart from her husband is no longer requisite[36] nor is a disclaimer of coercion or compulsion essential to the validity of her acknowledgment.[37]

b. Wife Living Apart from Husband. Sometimes the statutory separate acknowledgment is not required in the case of a married woman abandoned by her husband[38] or living apart from him under a decree of separation.[39] Thus in California it has been held that a married woman living under her maiden name, apart from her husband, and representing herself to be a single woman, could not avoid a deed acknowledged by her as a feme sole.[40]

California — Declaration of homestead.— A wife may acknowledge a declaration of homestead, selected by her alone, in the manner provided by law for the acknowledgment of conveyances of real property by persons other than married women. It need not be acknowledged in the manner required by law in the case of the conveyance by a married woman of her separate real property. Clements v. Stanton, 47 Cal. 60.

South Carolina — Separate property.—S. C. Gen. Stat. c. 100, § 2, giving a married woman power to execute deeds, etc., in the same manner as if sole, relates only to the separate property of married women. Townsend v. Brown, 16 S. C. 91.

Wisconsin.— Hayes v. Frey, 54 Wis. 503, 11 N. W. 695.

Alabama — Conveyance of wife's separate estate.— The statute which makes the private examination of a wife apart from her husband essential to the validity of a conveyance by her has no application to conveyance of her separate estate under the Alabama act of 1850, which makes no distinction in the mode of acknowledgment by the husband and wife in such case. Fisk v. Stubbs, 30 Ala. 335; Dawson v. Burrus, 73 Ala. 111 (a conveyance of the homestead which was the wife's separate property).

Georgia — Property owned by wife.— Ga. Code, § 2706*a*, providing that when a feme covert has any right in lands to be conveyed, and consents to join her husband in a deed, she must be examined separately in regard to her free consent and make a separate acknowledgment, applies only to her interest in land of her husband by virtue of the marital relation, and not to a conveyance of property owned by the wife severally or jointly, in which the husband joins. Haines v. Fort, 93 Ga. 24, 18 S. E. 994.

Minnesota — Wife's real estate.— Minn. Rev. Stat. (1851), c. 46, § 12, requiring the acknowledgment by the wife of a deed, executed jointly, to be separate and apart from her husband, does not apply to a deed (under c. 71, § 105) of her own real estate, which he consents to. In such case it is sufficient if she simply acknowledges it to be her voluntary act and deed. Merrill v. Nelson, 18 Minn. 366.

Texas — Release of interest in father's estate.— An instrument executed by a married woman, releasing her interest in her father's estate, is not "a deed or other writing purporting to be a conveyance" within the Texas statute requiring a married woman to be privily examined apart from her husband when acknowledging such a writing. French v. Strumberg, 52 Tex. 92.

Equitable separate estate.— In some states a married woman may convey her equitable separate estate, where there is no restraint on the powers of alienation, without an acknowledgment or privy examination separate and apart from her husband. Rep. 5, wherein a married woman had lived for twenty years apart from her husband, who had never been in the country, and a part of the time had lived under her maiden name, it was held that a deed, executed by her as an unmarried woman, to certain of her separate property acquired in the United States could not be avoided by her. But see Danglarde v. Elias, 80 Cal. 65, 22 Pac. 69, wherein a conveyance by a married woman, separated from her husband, was held to be void because not ac-

XI. Compelling Acknowledgment.

Sometimes, where a grantor, not a married woman, after executing and delivering a deed, refuses to acknowledge it, the court will compel him to do so.[41]

XII. Certificate of Acknowledgment or Proof of Execution.

A. Writing Out the Certificate — 1. When to Be Written. While it is the proper course for the officer to write out his certificate immediately after taking an acknowledgment, yet it seems that a certificate made at any time thereafter will be sufficient, provided no rights of innocent third parties have intervened.[42]

2. Position of Certificate with Relation to Instrument. In the absence of express statutory regulations the position of the certificate in relation to the instrument acknowledged is not material,[43] and it may be written on a separate piece of paper and appended to the instrument,[44] unless it be expressly required to be written on the same sheet with the instrument.[45] Where two contracts, both part of the same transaction, were written on the same sheet of paper, it was held that a certificate at the end of the sheet reciting an acknowledgment of "the foregoing instrument" was sufficient.[46] But in a conveyance by husband and wife the contrary has been held.[47]

3. Acknowledgment before Deputy — Certificate by Principal. In Kentucky, if a deputy clerk takes an acknowledgment and indorses a memorandum on the instrument, but fails to write out and sign the certificate, his principal may do so, knowledged in accordance with the statute regulating married women's conveyances.

41. As to registration on refusal to acknowledge see supra, IV, A, 5.

Arrest and imprisonment.— Under R. I. Pub. Stat. c. 173, §§ 6, 7, a grantor may be compelled by arrest and imprisonment to acknowledge his deed. Sullivar. v. Chambers, 18 R. I. 799, 31 Atl. 167.

Deed decreed by court.— A feme covert trustee by descent will be compelled to acknowledge a deed decreed by the court as conveying title to her successor in the trust. Dundas v. Biddle, 2 Pa. St. 160.

When acknowledgment not compelled.— Equity will not compel a widow to acknowledge a deed made by herself and husband, where it appears that the sale was made without her consent and that she received no part of the purchase-money. Providence v. Manchester, 5 Mason (U. S.) 59, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11,450. Where it appeared that land had been sold on execution, but it did not appear that the purchase-money had ever been paid or the sale had been perfected, the court refused to direct a deed to be acknowledged after a lapse of twenty years and after the land had gone into the hands of purchasers for value without notice. Richards v. Dutot, 7 Pa. St. 431.

42. Grant v. Oliver, 91 Cal. 158, 27 Pac. 596, 861; Harmon v. Magee, 57 Miss. 410; Stevens v. Martin, 18 Pa. St. 101. See also Hutchinson v. Kelly, 10 Ark. 178. But compare the cases cited infra, XII, H, 1, a.

43. An acknowledgment in the body of the instrument, signed by the grantor, the notary, and two witnesses, will admit to record. Snowden v. Rush, 69 Tex. 593, 6 S. W. 767.

Certificate in margin of instrument.— It is no objection that the certificate of acknowledgment is written in the margin on the face of the instrument. Simpson v. Hartman, 27 U. C. Q. B. 460.

44. Thurman v. Cameron, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 87; Schramm v. Gentry, 63 Tex. 583.

45. Winkler v. Higgins, 9 Ohio St. 599, wherein a certificate on a separate strip of paper attached to the deed by a wafer was held to be insufficient. To the same effect see Poor v. Scanlan, 7 Cinc. L. Bul. (Ohio) 15, 8 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 275.

Where instrument on two sheets.—A mortgage deed, otherwise valid, written on two sheets of paper attached one to the other, the latter of which contains the signature and certificate of the officer taking the acknowledgment, is not invalid under the Ohio act of Feb. 22, 1831, requiring the certificate of the officer to be on the same sheet on which the deed is written or printed. Norman v. Shepherd, 38 Ohio St. 320.

46. Bosley v. Pease, (Tex. Civ. App. 1893) 22 S. W. 516.

47. Certificate applying to but one conveyance.— Where the deed of a husband and wife, and a relinquishment of dower by the wife, were written on the same sheet of paper, and the officer's certificate of the wife's acknowledgment was written under the relinquishment, it was held that the certificate applied only to the conveyance immediately preceding it and could not be made to apply to the other by a court of equity on the ground of mistake. McBryde v. Wilkinson, 29 Ala. 662; Doe v. Wilkinson, 21 Ala. 296.

setting forth the facts and the deputy's indorsement.[48] To be sufficient, such certificate must include the deputy's indorsement.[49]

B. Date. Where a certificate of acknowledgment is sufficient in other respects, it will not be invalidated by a mistake as to the date,[50] nor by the entire want of a date,[51] for the true date of the acknowledgment may be shown by parol.[52] It is sufficient that such date appears by evidence within the instrument itself,[53] and in the absence of proof to the contrary it will be presumed that the acknowledgment was taken on the date of the execution of the instrument,[54] or at least before the recording thereof.[55]

C. Venue — 1. Necessity to Show. To be valid, a certificate of acknowledgment should show, either of itself or in connection with the instrument, in what state and county the acknowledgment was taken.[56] But it has been held in some

48. Ky. Gen. Stat. c. 24, § 38.

May be written by another deputy.—Where one deputy clerk of a county court takes an acknowledgment of a deed, indorsing on it a memorandum thereof, another deputy may write out and sign the certificate, setting forth the facts including the indorsement, as provided in Ky. Gen. Stat. c. 24, § 38. Drye v. Cook, 14 Bush (Ky.) 459.

49. Waters v. Davis, (Ky. 1887) 2 S. W. 695; McCormack v. Woods, 14 Bush (Ky.) 78; Franklin v. Becker, 11 Bush (Ky.) 595.

Where memorandum amounts to certificate. — Where the deputy's indorsement was as follows: "Acknowledged by ——, this May 5, 1873, ——, D. C. M. C. C.," it was held that this memorandum amounted to a certificate, and it was not necessary for the clerk to set forth the indorsement in his certificate. Woods v. James, 87 Ky. 511, 9 S. W. 513.

Validity of certificate not affected by memorandum.— The fact that the deputy clerk noted on a mortgage, executed by a husband and wife, a memorandum of the acknowledgment which did not state that the parties were husband and wife, did not affect the validity of a certificate in due form, written by the deputy on the same day, and signed by the clerk. Hawkins v. Pugh, (Ky. 1891) 16 S. W. 277.

50. Durfee v. Grinnell, 69 Ill. 371; Fisher v. Butcher, 19 Ohio 406, 53 Am. Dec. 436; Yorty v. Paine, 62 Wis. 154, 22 N. W. 137.

As to the time of taking acknowledgment see supra, IX.

Certificate reciting different dates.—Where the certificate to the wife's acknowledgment recited that she appeared and acknowledged the deed on a specified date (the same as the date of her husband's acknowledgment), and then affirmed that the certificate was made on a previous date, the date in the body of the certificate is the true one, the second date being clearly a mistake. Homer v. Schonfeld, 84 Ala. 313, 4 So. 105.

51. Irving v. Brownell, 11 Ill. 402; Webb v. Huff, 61 Tex. 677.

Recording prior to opposing title.— A deed is admissible in evidence, though there be no date to the acknowledgment, where the recording of the deed with the acknowledgment is prior to the opposing title. Galusha v. Sinclear, 3 Vt. 394.

Where date material.—A deed dated March 15, 1786, and acknowledged without date before one styling himself "justice of the common pleas for B county," for land lying in the county, which was formerly B county, afterward H, and finally C county, is not admissible in evidence, since the acknowledgment does not show that the officer who took it was at the time authorized to do so. 52. Jordan v. Mead, 12 Ala. 247; Merrill v. Sypert, 65 Ark. 51, 44 S. W. 462; Hoit v. Russell, 56 N. H. 559; Gest v. Flock, 2 N. J. Eq. 108. But see Greene v. Godfrey, 44 Me. 25.

As to the admissibility of parol evidence in aid of the certificate see infra, XIV.

53. Reference to date of instrument.— A recital that the acknowledgment was made on the day of which the instrument bears date is sufficient. Abney v. De Loach, 84 Ala. 393, 4 So. 757; Carter v. Doe, 21 Ala. 72.

Registration on date of execution.— Where a deed was received for record on the day it bore date, it was held that the time of the acknowledgment appeared with sufficient certainty. Kelly v. Rosenstock, 45 Md. 389; Dahlem's Estate, 175 Pa. St. 454, 34 Atl. 807, 52 Am. St. Rep. 848.

Obvious mistake.— Where the officer wrote the year 1868 instead of 1867, but the certificate stated that the acknowledgment was of the above deed and was appended to the deed itself, it clearly showed the mistake. Attaway v. Carter, 1 Tex. Unrep. Cas. 73.

Clerical error in recording.— The record of a mortgage acknowledged February 6 was dated January 6. It was held that the lien was not affected by the clerical error in recording. Brooke's Appeal, 64 Pa. St. 127.

cases that a failure of the certificate to show where the acknowledgment was taken may be supplied by evidence aliunde.[57]

2. SUFFICIENCY OF SHOWING — a. In General. The place where the acknowledgment was taken need not be recited in the body of the instrument; the recital of the venue in the caption is sufficient,[58] and an omission of the names of the county or state from the caption is not a fatal defect where such name is sufficiently shown by the seal attached to the certificate.[59] A variance in regard to the county as stated in the certificate and in the suffix to the officer's signature will not invalidate the certificate.[60]

b. Appearing from Inspection of Whole Instrument. Where it can be ascertained with sufficient certainty from an inspection of the whole instrument at what place the acknowledgment was made, it is not material that such fact does not fully appear in the certificate itself.[61]

But see Briggs v. McBride, 17 N. Brunsw. 663.

As to where an acknowledgment should be taken see supra, VIII.

Name of state omitted.— A certificate of an acknowledgment taken outside the state, entitled simply "County of New York" without giving the state, is not sufficient to entitle the instrument to record in Illinois. Hardin v. Osborne, 60 Ill. 93; Hardin v. Kirk, 49 Ill. 153, 95 Am. Dec. 579. But in Robidoux v. Cassilegi, 10 Mo. App. 516, it was held that a certificate of acknowledgment to a deed of land lying in the state, beginning "County of St. Louis ss.," was not rendered insufficient by the fact that it did not show that the county of St. Louis was in the state of Missouri. See also Ross's Appeal, 106 Pa. St. 82, in which it was held that where the acknowledgment of a mortgage of land in the state recited that it was taken before a justice of the peace, but did not state in what county he was a justice, the presumption was that he was in some county in the state, and, in absence of proof to the contrary, the acknowledgment was good.

Georgia — Presumption as to place of taking.— An acknowledgment failing to state where it was taken will not be fatally defective on that account, as, in the absence of proof to the contrary, the court will presume it to have been taken in the county where the deed purports to have been made. Doe v. Roe, 1 Ga. 3.

To show acknowledgment in different county.— The acknowledgment, by a justice of C county, of a land mortgage recorded in that county, was: "Erie County ss. Before the subscriber, a justice of the peace of said county." It was held that parol evidence was admissible to show that it had been acknowledged in C county. Angier v. Schieffelin, 72 Pa. St. 106, 13 Am. Rep. 659.

Wrong county stated in caption.— The county laid in the caption of the certificate of acknowledgment of a deed which recited that the notary public was a notary of "said county" was a different one from that for which the notary was appointed. The signature of the notary was followed by words describing him as a notary of the county of his appointment, and a seal with the name of the latter county was attached. It was held that the certificate was sufficient to admit the deed to record. Alexander v. Houghton, 86 Tex. 702, 26 S. W. 937.

But see Emeric v. Alvarado, 90 Cal. 444, 27 Pac. 356, wherein the caption recited one county while the official seal showed another in which the officer was authorized to act. It was held that the certificate was fatally defective [Beatty, C. J., dissenting].

Name of state omitted from certificate.— The acknowledgment of a deed to lands lying in Vermont, the certificate to which is merely headed "Providence." is sufficient where it reasonably appears, from an inspection of the whole instrument, that such acknowledgment was taken in Providence, R. I. Ives v. Allyn, 12 Vt. 589.

Venue given in certificate of authenticity.— Where a certificate of acknowledgment taken in another state was defective because it did not give the name of the state, it was held that the defect was cured by the certificate of authenticity reciting city, county, and state for which the officer was commis-

c. Officer Presumed to Act within Jurisdictional Limits. Where an instrument appears to have been acknowledged before an officer authorized to take acknowledgments within the limits of his jurisdiction, it will be presumed that an acknowledgment was actually taken within such limits without an averment to that effect in the certificate.[62] And where the certificate shows that the acknowledgment was taken in a certain county it need not appear that the officer was authorized to act in that county, such fact being presumed.[63] The court will take judicial notice of who are officers authorized to take acknowledgments in the county in which it sits.[64]

D. Official Character of Officer — 1. Necessity to Show. Where the statute does not require the certificate to show the official character of the person who took the acknowledgment, such fact need not appear,[65] and it is held that evidence aliunde may be admitted to prove his authority.[66] But under most statutes it is necessary that the certificate should show in some way that the acknowledgment was taken by a person authorized to do so.[67]

As to the power of an officer to take acknowledgments outside the territorial limits of his jurisdiction see supra, VI, C.

Acknowledgment taken outside the state. — It is a sufficient statement of venue in the certificate of an acknowledgment taken in a foreign state to recite merely the name of the state, where the certifying officer is one whose authority is limited in territorial extent, as a presumption arises that he performed the duties of his office within the limits for which he was commissioned. Carpenter v. Dexter, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 513, 19 L. ed. 426. See also Morrison v. White, 16 La. Ann. 100.

Authority extending over whole state.— Where an officer has authority to take acknowledgments anywhere in the state, the addition, in the venue, to the certificate, of a wrong county or a county which does not exist, will not affect its validity. Roussain v. Norton, 53 Minn. 560, 55 N. W. 747.

Sufficient showing of officer's county.— Where a certificate began, "State of Missouri, Schuyler County, ss.: Be it remembered that before the undersigned, circuit clerk, comes" etc., it was held that it sufficiently appeared that the person who took the acknowledgment was the clerk of the circuit court of Schuyler county. Sidwell v. Birney, 69 Mo. 144.

64. Irving v. Brownell, 11 Ill. 402. In Watson v. Hay, 5 N. Brunsw. 559, the certificate was subscribed "G. D. L.," without any description of his official character either in the body of the certificate or following his signature. It was held that the court would take judicial notice that a person named G. D. L. was chief justice of the province in which the court sat at the time the deed appeared to have been executed, and that it was competent for the registrar of deeds to recognize the certificate as an authentic act of the chief justice.

Judicial notice of county.— Where the caption of an acknowledgment omits the name of the county, but the officer signs himself as justice of the peace for a certain incorporated town, it is a valid acknowledgment, since the court will take notice of the county in which the town is located and that the officer is a justice in that county. 2. Sufficiency of Showing — a. In General. Strict technical accuracy is not required, and if the certificate fairly shows that the acknowledgment was taken by a person authorized to take it, it is sufficient.[68] And though the certificate, standing alone, does not disclose the official character of the person taking the acknowledgment, yet where that fact appears from an inspection of the whole instrument it is enough.[69]

b. Appearing Either in Body or Subscription. Where the official character of the officer is stated in the body of the certificate it need not appear in the subscription thereto,[70] and on the other hand it is sufficient if the title of the officer be suffixed to the signature, though his official character be not given in the body of the certificate.[71]

Official character nowhere shown.— A bond for title, the certificate of which is subscribed by the officer's name alone, without any addition denoting his official character, and that character being nowhere shown in the body of the certificate, is inadmissible in evidence without proof of its execution, as at common law, whether the bond be of record or not. Coffey v. Hendricks, 66 Tex. 676, 2 S. W. 47.

Authority in special cases.— Under a statute providing, as a general rule, that the acknowledgments of deeds and conveyances shall be taken before a magistrate, but excepting certain cases in which proof may be taken before a judge, the certificate must, where the proof is taken before the judge, state the existence of those facts which take the case out of the general rule and bring it within the statutory exception. Pearl v. Howard, 1 D. Chipm. (Vt.) 173.

Presumption from lapse of time.— A registry copy of a deed, recorded more than one hundred years before, being produced in evidence, it appeared that the deed purported to have been acknowledged before a justice of the peace of another state. It was held that in the absence of evidence to the contrary the presumption was that the register who recorded the deed had sufficient evidence, at the time of record, of the official character of the magistrate. Forsaith v. Clark, 21 N. H. 409.

68. As to recitals regarding the territorial jurisdiction of the officer who took the acknowledgment see supra, XII, C.

An acknowledgment before "a" clerk of the county court within and for a certain county is sufficient to authorize the presumption that the acknowledgment was taken before "the" clerk, as there was but one clerk of that court. Walker v. Owens, 25 Mo. App. 587.

Acknowledgment before judge instead of "court."— An acknowledgment of a deed by a sheriff, certified to by a clerk of court, and stated by him to have been taken before the "judge of the court," instead of before "the court," as required by Wag. Stat. Mo. p. 612, §§ 55, 56, is not invalid. McClure v. McClurg, 53 Mo. 173.

Judge of court of record.— Under the Missouri act of Feb. 14, 1825, requiring a married woman, in acknowledging a deed conveying her real estate, to appear before some court of record, a certificate of an acknowledgment taken before the judge of a court having no clerk, stating that "before me, M. P. L., judge of said court, personally appeared M. G., wife, etc.," was held sufficient. Garnier v. Barry, 28 Mo. 438, 439.

Florida — Seal sufficient evidence.— The Florida act of Feb. 24, 1873 (McClellan's Dig. pp. 218, 219), in relation to the acknowledgment of deeds, does not require other evidence of the official character of an officer taking an acknowledgment when he affixes his official seal to such acknowledgment. Suffix controlling recital in body of certificate.— Where the title of office stated in the body of the certificate of acknowledgment is one which the law did not authorize to take the acknowledgment, and the suffix to the signature, read in connection with the deed, indicates an office having such authority, the suffix will control. understood, written after the signature of the officer, are sufficient to show his official capacity,[72] especially where the signification of the abbreviation appears from an inspection of the body of the certificate in connection with the statute and the purpose of the official act.[73]

d. Person Holding Two Offices. Where the certifying officer describes himself as holding two offices, if by virtue of one of them he is authorized to take acknowledgments the title of the other may be rejected as surplusage.[74]

e. Acknowledgments Taken Outside State. Where the certificate of an acknowledgment taken outside the state clearly shows that such acknowledgment was taken before a person authorized to take the same, it is sufficient notwithstanding slight informalities.[75] But it has been held that, under a statute requir-

"J. of Peace."— Where there was no statement in the body of the certificate as to the official character of the officer, but it was signed "Josephus Moore, J. of Peace," this was held to be a sufficient showing as to the official character. Robinson v. Wilson, 5 N. Brunsw. 301.

73. Summer v. Mitchell, 29 Fla. 179, 10 So. 562, 30 Am. St. Rep. 106, 14 L. R. A. 815; McDonald v. Morgan, 27 Tex. 503, wherein the initials "R. L. C.," following the officer's certification, were held to show sufficiently that the acknowledgment was made before the recorder of Liberty county.

74. Justice of the peace and notary public. — Where the certificate shows that the person who took the acknowledgment was both a justice of the peace and a notary public, the description of him in the latter capacity may be rejected as surplusage, where he is authorized to take such acknowledgment as a justice of the peace and not as a notary public. Buntyn v. Shippers' Compress Co., 63 Miss. 94.

Clerk also ex officio recorder.— By Mo. Rev. Stat. (1835) (3d ed.) p. 525, § 2, the clerk of the circuit court was ex officio recorder of deeds, and p. 120, § 8, authorized the clerk, as clerk, but not as recorder, to take acknowledgments. A certificate of acknowledgment signed by J, "Recorder," recited: "I have hereunto set my hand and the seal of said court," in testimony that there "appeared in open court" B, "who is personally known to the court." It was held that the acknowledgment would be considered to have been taken before him as clerk, the word "recorder" being treated as mere description. Owen v. Baker, 101 Mo. 407, 409, 14 S. W. 175, 20 Am. St. Rep. 618.

75. As to the sufficiency of a further certificate of authenticity of an acknowledgment taken outside the state see infra, XIII, A, 3.

And for other matters relating to acknowledgments taken outside the state see supra, X, A, 3.

Clerical error.— Where it is clear that it was by a clerical error that the officer taking the acknowledgment of a deed in another state is made to appear to have had no commission at the time, the deed will not be deemed defectively acknowledged. Quimby v. Boyd, 8 Colo. 194, 6 Pac. 462.

Aldermen presumed to be justices of the peace.— A deed acknowledged before "aldermen" in the city of New York was held to have been properly admitted to record in Virginia under a statute specifying "two justices of the peace" as the proper persons to take acknowledgments, though their certificates did not describe them as justices of the peace. The court held it to be a warrantable presumption that aldermen of a city in the United States are justices of the peace when they undertake to act as such. Welles v. Cole, 6 Gratt. (Va.) 645.

Sufficient showing of authority.— A power of attorney to convey lands, sufficient in form, acknowledged before one who subscribed himself as "Sovereign of Carlo, Ireland," and attested by the seal of the town, the certificate setting forth his official character to be "a magistrate in the chief office of said town of Carlo, in the county of Carlo, Ireland," is sufficiently acknowledged under the statute allowing such acknowledgments to be taken by the chief magistrate of the place where taken. Bowser v. Cravener, 56 Pa. St. 132. A commissioner of deeds in a certificate of acknowledgment described himself as "a commissioner in the state of Michigan, within and for said county." It was signed "Com. for the State of Michigan in New York." The official seal attached was full and clear in the same respect, but the impression only showed the commissioner's first name. It was held sufficient to entitle the deed to which it was attached to be received in evidence. Sparrow v. Hovey, 41 Mich. 708, 3 N. W. 198.

Georgia — How authority may be shown.— Where a deed acknowledged in another state is offered in evidence it must be shown that the court presided over by the judge before whom the deed was executed as an attesting witness is a court of record; and this fact may be shown either by a statement to that effect in the clerk's certificate or by other proof. Wood v. Bewick Lumber Co., 103 Ga. 235, 29 S. E. 820.

Person holding two offices.— Under Ala. Code, §§ 1800, 1801, providing that powers of attorney may be acknowledged in other states before notaries public, a power of attorney purporting to have been acknowledged in another state before one who signs the certificate as "J. P. and ex officio notary

ing such acknowledgments to be taken before a court of record, a failure to show that the court was one of record rendered the certificate defective.[76]

3. Certificate Prima Facie Evidence of Authority. The statement in the certificate of the officer's official character is prima facie evidence of that fact,[77] and it is not necessary for him to state in addition that he is an officer authorized to take acknowledgments.[78]

E. Signature of Officer. Where it is provided by statute that a certificate of acknowledgment shall be subscribed by the officer who took the acknowledgment, a certificate not so subscribed is of no force,[79] and the defect will not be remedied by the fact that the officer's name appears in the body of the certificate[80] or that his seal is attached thereto.[81] But a substantial compliance with the statute is all that is required of the certificate,[82] and it will not be invalidated by public," which is impressed with his notarial seal and gives the name of the state, county, and office as required by the statute, is prima facie valid and is admissible in evidence. Goree v. Wadsworth, 91 Ala. 416, 8 So. 712.

76. Fogg v. Holcomb, 64 Iowa 621, 21 N. W. 111. But see Pierce v. Hakes, 23 Pa. St. 231, wherein it was held that under the Pennsylvania act of April 10, 1849, allowing an acknowledgment taken in another state to be taken before the judge of a court of record if the laws of the state in which the acknowledgment was taken showed that the court was a court of record, the omission of the judge to certify that fact would not invalidate the certificate. See also Hurst v. Leckie, 97 Va. 550, 34 S. E. 464, holding that, under a statute authorizing commissioners in chancery of courts of record to take acknowledgments, a failure to state that the court was one of record was not material, where there were no commissioners in chancery except for courts of record.

Acknowledgment made during civil war.— Where a certificate of acknowledgment purported to be made in B county, Ala., Jan. 9, 1864, before H, justice of the peace, it will be presumed that he was elected before the war and held over, and not that he was an officer of the rebel government then existing, in the absence of proof as to his official character. Holleman v. De Nyse, 51 Ala. 95.

New Jersey — Acknowledgment in other state.— Under the New Jersey statute allowing an acknowledgment of a deed for lands lying in that state to be taken in another state only where the grantor resided in such state, it was held that where the residence of the grantor appeared, either on the face of the deed or in the certificate of acknowledgment, it was sufficient prima facie evidence of the jurisdiction of the officer taking the acknowledgment. California — Ex officio clerk of several courts.— In California, acknowledgments must be taken before the clerk of a court having a seal. By statute the county clerk is made ex officio clerk of all courts having a seal except the supreme court. Where a certificate of acknowledgment taken by a county clerk is attested by him in his official capacity, with the seal of the court affixed, it is immaterial that he does not state in which of the courts he was acting in his ex officio capacity. 82. Sufficient signing.— A certificate of acknowledgment to a deed made by a commissioner of deeds, closing with the words "before me, Benjamin Pinney, Commissioner of Deeds for the State of Illinois," is sufficiently signed. Fisk v. Hopping, 169 Ill. 105, 107, 48 N. E. 323. A certificate of acknowledgment in the probate court, which recites that the grantor, naming him, acknowledged the deed, and concluding, "In testimony whereof I" (with name of grantor inserted), "Judge of said court, have hereunto set my hand," and signed with the judge's true name, is sufficient. Agan v. Shannon, 103 Mo. 661, 667, 15 S. W. 757, Barclay, J., dissenting [overruling Lincoln v. Thompson, 75 Mo. 613].

such a discrepancy as the use by the officer of the initials of his christian name instead of writing such name in full.[83] And where the name is subscribed to the certificate it need not appear in the body thereof unless the statute so requires.[84]

F. Seal — 1. Necessity for. Where the statute in force at the time an acknowledgment is taken does not expressly require the certificate to be under seal, none is necessary.[85] But where the officer is required by statute to authenticate his certificate with his official seal a failure to affix such seal will render the acknowledgment fatally defective.[86]

Signature of different officer.—An acknowledgment to a deed purporting to have been taken before the mayor of Liverpool, and to be his official certificate, and which bears the corporate seal, is sufficient, although not signed by the mayor, but by the town clerk. The corporate seal must be regarded as imparting the requisite authenticity, and is proof that his character is truly stated in the instrument itself. Sessions v. Reynolds, 7 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 130.

One signature to two certificates.— Attached to a deed were two acknowledgments, one that of the grantor and the other that of the grantor's wife. The acknowledgments were executed in due form, except that the signature of the justice appeared only under the second certificate, which followed immediately after the first and did not state the county for which he was justice. Each certificate contained the caption of the state and county. It was held that, the certificates of acknowledgment being in effect one certificate, the single signature was sufficient. 2. SUFFICIENCY OF — a. In General. The question as to what seal is sufficient is one depending largely upon the statutes.[87] It is no objection that the seal precedes instead of following the signature of the officer.[88]

b. Right to Use Private Seal. Where the officer is provided with an official seal, and the statute requires it to be used in certifying an acknowledgment, if the officer substitutes therefor his private seal or a scroll it will render the acknowledgment defective.[89] But it has been held in some cases that, where no official (U. S.) 160, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,467; Richards v. Randolph, 5 Mason (U. S.) 115, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11,772.

Two certificates on same page.—An assignment for the benefit of creditors had indorsed on it a notary's certificate of its acknowledgment, signed by the notary, but with no notarial seal attached to it. Following this certificate and on the same page was the same notary's certificate of the assignee's acknowledgment of the execution of the acceptance of the trust. Attached to this certificate was the notary's seal. It was held that the first certificate was void for want of a seal, and the seal on the second certificate did not cure the defect. De Graw v. King, 28 Minn. 118, 9 N. W. 636.

Party objecting must show absence of seal. — A party objecting to the introduction of a deed in evidence, on the ground that the certificate of acknowledgment is not sealed, must, if the objection be overruled, make it appear by the record on appeal not only that it bore no seal when exhibited, but that it was not sealed when executed; for a seal may have been placed on it, but become detached. Clark v. Sawyer, 48 Cal. 133.

87. Arkansas — Statute directory.— Notwithstanding Gantt's Ark. Dig. § 4302, providing that a notarial seal shall be engraved so as to present certain specified emblems, the absence of them from the seal does not invalidate the certificate of acknowledgment. The statute is regarded as directory only. Sonfield v. Thompson, 42 Ark. 46, 48 Am. Rep. 49.

Nebraska — Need not bear notary's initials.— Under Nebr. Comp. Stat. c. 61, § 5, the seal to the notary's certificate of acknowledgment need not contain his name or initials. Weeping Water v. Reed, 21 Nebr. 261, 31 N. W. 797.

Office not indicated by usual characters.— When the record of a deed is offered in evidence, and the notary who took the acknowledgment declares in his certificate that he has affixed his seal thereto, it is to be presumed that his seal was properly attached, although his office is not indicated by the characters ordinarily used for that purpose. Coffey v. Hendricks, 66 Tex. 676, 2 S. W. 47.

Impression on paper sufficient.— A certificate of the acknowledgment of a deed before the clerk of a court is sufficiently authenticated by an impression of the seal of the court upon the paper, without any wax, wafer, or other tenacious substance. Pillow v. Roberts, 13 How. (U. S.) 472, 14 L. ed. 228.

Seal obliterated — Question for jury.— Attached to a notary's certificate, in the place where the notary's seal is usually found, was a circle defined by a reddish discoloration of the paper with a few particles of wax adhering to it, but the paper did not show the impression of a notary's seal. There was testimony tending to show that at the time the deed was executed the notary used a seal which would leave no impression on paper, though it would on wax; but there was also evidence that he used a seal that would leave an impression on paper. It was held error to charge, under this state of facts, that acts purporting to have been done by public officers in their official capacity and within the scope of their duty will be presumed regular, as this amounted to a statement that the instrument was prima facie evidence that the officer affixed to his certificate the seal required by law, and was therefore an instruction on the weight of the evidence. Stooksbury v. Swan, 85 Tex. 563, 22 S. W. 963 [affirming (Tex. Civ. App. 1893) 21 S. W. 694].

88. Gilbreath v. Dilday, 152 Ill. 207, 38 N. E. 572.

Seal on opposite side of paper.— Where a certificate of acknowledgment is duly signed by a notary public, and his notarial seal is impressed upon the same paper, though "on the opposite side and end thereof," and there is but one certificate to which the seal could be made applicable, there is a sufficient authentication. Evans v. Smith, 43 Minn. 59, 44 N. W. 880.

89. Moore v. Titman, 33 Ill. 358.

Florida — Private seal sufficient.— The acknowledgment of deeds and other writings before a commissioner appointed to take acknowledgments, etc., in other states need not be certified by such commissioner under an official seal, his private seal only being required by the statute. Tuten v. Gazan, 18 Fla. 751.

Notary's duty to procure official seal.— A notary cannot use a scrawl or private seal for the purpose of authenticating a certificate of acknowledgment The provision of law permitting certain officers to use their private seals until they shall be provided with public seals had no application to a notary. He has to provide himself with an official seal. Mason v. Brock, 12 Ill. 273, 52 Am. Dec. 490.

Notary using county court seal.— In order for a notarial act to be valid, the notarial seal must be affixed, and the notary's use of the seal of a county court vitiates his act. Therefore, where the certificate of a married woman's acknowledgment, taken before a notary, bore the seal of the county court instead of the notarial seal, although regular in other respects, it was held to be a nullity. McKellar v. Peck, 39 Tex. 381.

Seal presumed to be official.— Where the seal has been provided, the use of a private seal by the officer who takes the acknowledgment will not render it invalid.[90]

3. Recitals as to Seal. A statement that the certificate is given under the officer's hand and seal, without stating that it is his "official" seal, is sufficient where the official seal is in fact affixed.[91] And it has been held that the mere affixing of the seal after the officer's signature is sufficient proof that the certificate was executed under his hand and seal without any recital to that effect.[92]

4. Showing of Record as to Seal. Ordinarily the provisions of recording acts do not contemplate that the recorder shall copy official seals in his record.[93] Hence, where a certificate of acknowledgment as recorded indicates by its language that the official seal was properly affixed, the absence from the record of the seal, or of anything to represent it, will not overcome the presumption that the original was duly sealed by the officer;[94] and a record copy of the instrument is admissible in evidence though containing no copy of the seal, nor any locus sigilli or scroll.[95] In any event a literal transcription of the seal is not required, and it is notary who took the acknowledgment signed it "Geo. Theo. Sommer," but the name on the seal was "Theo. Sommer," it was held that it would be presumed that the seal was the notary's official seal. Deans v. Pate, 114 N. C. 194, 19 S. E. 146.

Sufficient showing that seal official.—Where the certificate of an acknowledgment taken before the mayor of the town of S, in England, bore a seal having the words "S. Villa" inscribed around what appeared to be the city arms, it was held that it imported to be the corporate seal of S, and not the private seal of the mayor, and therefore the acknowledgment was sufficient. Deveber v. Britain, 9 N. Brunsw. 330.

90. Fogarty v. Sawyer, 23 Cal. 570, wherein the notary stated in his certificate that he had no public official seal; Stark v. Barrett, 15 Cal. 361; Collins v. Boyd, 5 Dana (Ky.) 316; Creigh v. Beelin, 1 Watts & S. (Pa.) 83; Morgan v. Cox, 27 Fed. 36. But see Geary v. Kansas City, 61 Mo. 378, wherein, under a city charter giving the mayor authority to take acknowledgments "and certify the same under the seal of the city," it was held that a certificate by him concluding with the words "Given under my hand and private seal, there being no official seal of office provided," was insufficient, although the scroll would have been sufficient if he had stated in his certificate that it was under the "seal of the city."

91. Moore v. Titman, 33 Ill. 358; Doe v. Vandewater, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 6; Monroe v. Arledge, 23 Tex. 478. But see Wetmore v. Laird, 5 Biss. (U. S.) 160, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,467, wherein it was held that as nothing is to be presumed in favor of a notary's certificate of acknowledgment it must be stated therein that he has affixed his notarial official seal, else the certificate is insufficient.

Surplusage.— A justice's certificate of acknowledgment is not invalidated by the use of the word "notarial" before the word "seal," such former word being treated as surplusage. Foster v. Latham, 21 Ill. App. 165.

Omission of word "seal."— Where a certificate recited that it was given under the officer's "hand and of office," it was held that the omission of the word "seal" before "of office" was manifestly a clerical error and would not vitiate the certificate. Nichols v. Stewart, 15 Tex. 226.

But see Buckmaster v. Job, 15 Ill. 328, wherein it was held that where the record of an instrument acknowledged in another state failed to show that any seal was affixed to the certificate, no presumption would be indulged that a seal was annexed, although the certificate recited that it was made under seal.

Seal appearing on original instrument.— Where the record of a deed showed no evidence of a notarial seal having been affixed to its acknowledgment, but the deed itself bore such seal, and it was shown that the seal was not added subsequently to the execution of the deed, it was held that the deed was admissible in evidence. W. 93, where the parties had been in possession for forty years under a sheriff's deed, it was presumed that a seal had been attached, the certificate reciting that it was given under the officer's hand and seal.

Where no evidence that seal ever attached. — The existence of a tax deed is not proved enough if there be anything to represent it,[96] such as a scroll inclosing the word "seal,"[97] or the letters "L. S."[98]

G. Contents and Sufficiency — 1. Of Certificate of Acknowledgment — a. Acknowledgments by Persons Other Than Married Women — (I) Substantial Compliance with Statute — (A) Necessity for — (1) In General. A certificate of acknowledgment must conform substantially to the requirements of the statute under which it is drawn,[99] and if the language of the statute is not followed, words of the same force and import must be employed.[1] It is not sufficient to state mere legal conclusions,[2] but the officer must set out enough to show a valid official act on his part.[3] The omission of material words or recitals cannot be

by a supposed record copy of the same, found in the office of the register of deeds, purporting to show that the deed was acknowledged before a probate judge, where it does not show that such judge ever attached the seal of his office to the acknowledgment, and there is no evidence that such seal was ever attached. Kelley v. McBlain, 42 Kan. 764, 22 Pac. 994.

96. "No seal."— Where, in a certified copy of a deed, the acknowledgment bore, in the place where the seal is usually found, the words "[no seal]" but in the body of the acknowledgment itself there was a statement that the official seal had been affixed, it was held that the words "[no seal]" instead of implying that no seal was affixed, was merely a note, by the recorder, of the place of the notarial seal which he probably had no means of copying. Jones v. Martin, 16 Cal. 165. To same effect see Equitable Mortg. Co. v. Kempner, 84 Tex. 102, 19 S. W. 358.

Need not recite that seal was affixed.— Where the record of a deed shows that the notarial seal was affixed to the notary's certificate by an "[L. S.]," it is not necessary that the testimonium clause should show that the seal was affixed, or that it should be stated in the body of the certificate that it was executed under the seal of the notary. Alabama — Insufficient compliance.—A certificate reciting that the grantors, being personally known to the officer, appeared before him on the day of the certificate's date "and thereupon acknowledged the signing and sealing thereof to be their voluntary act and deed, for the uses and purposes therein stated," was held not to be a substantial compliance with the form prescribed in Ala. Rev. Code, § 1548, as follows: "I, (name and style of the officer) hereby certify that ——, whose name is signed to the foregoing conveyance, and who is known to me, acknowledged before me on this day that, being informed of the contents of the conveyance, he executed the same voluntarily, on the day the same bears date." Necessary recitals.— In Iowa the certificate of acknowledgment should show the following acts of the grantor: (1) that he personally appeared before the officer: (2) that he acknowledged the signing of the deed; (3) that it was his voluntary act. It should also show the following conclusions of the officer: (1) that the party who thus appeared is personally known to him; (2) that he is the same party who signed the deed as the grantor; (3) that he acknowledged the signing to be his voluntary act. Bell v. Evans, 10 Iowa 353.

In South Dakota the following essential facts must substantially appear in the certificate of acknowledgment: (1) that the person making the acknowledgment personally appeared before the officer who makes the certificate; (2) that there was an acknowl-supplied by intendment,[4] nor can such deficiencies usually be aided by parol proof.[5]

(2) Where No Form Prescribed. Where the statute merely requires an instrument to be acknowledged, without prescribing any form of certificate or providing what it shall contain, a certificate is sufficient which fairly shows that the grantor personally appeared before the officer and acknowledged the instrument to be his act and deed.[6]

(B) Sufficiency of — (1) In General. It is a rule of universal application that a literal compliance with the statute is not to be required of a certificate of acknowledgment, and that, if it substantially conforms to the statutory provisions as to the material facts to be embodied therein, it is sufficient.[7] Acknowledgments

As to the sufficiency of a substantial compliance in the case of particular recitals see the following subdivisions:

Statutory form not mandatory.— Where the statute provides a form for the certificate such provision is usually regarded as permissive and not mandatory. Cone v. Nimocks, 78 Minn. 249, 80 N. W. 1056; Huse v. Ames, 104 Mo. 91, 15 S. W. 965. But see Chicago First Nat. Bank v. Baker, 62 Ill. App. 154, 158, wherein it was held that under Ill. Rev. Stat. c. 95, § 2, providing that "the certificate of acknowledgment may be in the following form;" etc., the word "may" as used in the statute was imperative and not directory.

Certificate in form of jurat.— The certificate of an officer authorized to take the acknowledgment of deeds, that the grantor made oath that he signed, sealed, and delivered the deed as his proper act, though in the form of a jurat, is not thereby deprived of the character of an acknowledgment. Ingraham v. Grigg, 13 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 22; Starke v. Etheridge, 71 N. C. 240.

Sufficient forms.— For forms of certificates are of necessity frequently made before, and certified by, inexperienced or illiterate persons, and it would be far from subserving the purposes of justice to determine the validity of such certificates by the application of critical or technical rules. Therefore it is the policy of the law to construe them liberally, and not to allow a conveyance to be defeated by unsubstantial objections to the certificate of acknowledgment.[8] If words of equivalent import to those of the statute are employed it is sufficient,[9] and the certificate will not be vitiated by unsubstantial clerical errors,[10]

Sheriff's deed — Missouri.— A certificate of acknowledgment to a sheriff's deed, in which the clerk of court certified that the sheriff "appeared in open court . . . and acknowledged the execution of the foregoing deed, which was duly entered of record," is sufficient. Bray v. Marshall, 75 Mo. 327, 328. See also Huxley v. Harrold, 62 Mo. 516.

Legality inferred after great lapse of time. — Where enough is stated in the certificate to show that a witness was sworn or the deed was acknowledged by the bargainor, the court will, after great length of time, infer the legality of the probate, however informally the certificate be expressed. After a great lapse of time, evidence of the due execution of the instrument being difficult to obtain, every reasonable presumption should be indulged in favor of the old probate. Cox v. Bowman, 2 Yerg. (Tenn.) 108.

Acknowledgments taken in other states.— For certificates of acknowledgments taken in other states held to be in compliance with the laws of the state in which the land lay see Lockwood v. Mills, 39 Ill. 602; Commonwealth Bank v. Portman, 9 Dana (Ky.) 112; Robinson v. Nolan, 152 Mo. 560, 54 S. Need not conform to laws of place where made.— Where the statute regarding acknowledgments executed out of the state did not prescribe a form for the certificate or require it to be made in accordance with the laws of the place where it was made, it was held that a certificate executed outside of the state wherein the land lay, in substantial compliance with the laws of that state, was sufficient notwithstanding it did not conform to the laws of the place where made. Use of "I" instead of "before me."— Under Tex. Rev. Stat. art. 4312, providing that the certificate of acknowledgment "must be substantially as follows: Before me, ——, known to me," a certificate using "I" instead of the words, "before me," is good. Belbaze v. Ratto, 69 Tex. 636, 7 S. W. 501.

Sufficient form.— A certificate that one "whose name appears signed to the within deed came this day before me, ——, acting justice for said county, and acknowledged the same to be his act and deed, and desired me to certify the same to the clerk of the county court of said county, that it may be duly recorded," is a substantial compliance with Va. Code 1860, c. 121, § 3, requiring such certificate to be to the following effect: "I, ——, a justice of the peace in the county aforesaid, in the state of ——, do certify that ——, whose name is signed to the writing above (or hereto annexed), bearing date on the —— day of ——, has acknowledged the same before me, in my county aforesaid." and is sufficient. nor by the omission of words not essential to an intelligent understanding of its meaning.[11]

(2) Surplusage. Where the certificate of acknowledgment contains everything required by the statute to be included therein, it will not be vitiated by the insertion of unnecessary words, but such words may be rejected as surplusage.[12]

(3) Certificate Construed in Connection with Instrument. In determining the validity of a certificate, reference may be had to the instrument itself, or to any part of it, and if the two together show a substantial compliance with the statute it is sufficient.[13]

cate of acknowledgment will be disregarded. Frostburg Mut. Bldg. Assoc. v. Brace, 51 Md. 508, wherein an acknowledgment by a corporation was certified as being "his," instead of "its," act and deed; Nelson v. Graff, 44 Mich. 433, 6 N. W. 872.

Omission of the word "appeared."—Where, in an acknowledgment of a mortgage, the word "appeared" was omitted after the phrase "before me personally," it was held that the omission was not fatal to the validity of the mortgage. Scharfenburg v. Bishop, 35 Iowa 60.

Immaterial recital.—Where the form of the certificate given in a statute recited that the party desired the justices "to certify the acknowledgment to the clerk of the county or corporation court of ——, in order that the same may be recorded," it was held that a failure to express this desire of the grantor in the certificate would not invalidate the recordation of the deed if it were made in the proper county; the only object in expressing such desire being to show the county or corporation in which the law required the deed to be recorded. Shanks v. Lancaster, 5 Gratt. (Va.) 110, 117, 50 Am. Dec. 108.

Illinois — Chattel mortgage.— In Illinois a certificate of the acknowledgment of a chattel mortgage, correct in everything except that it omits the words "and entered by me," is not insufficient on that account. If the justice has in fact made the entry on his docket as required by statute it is sufficient, and that fact may be shown by the docket itself. Clerical error.— Where the certificate of acknowledgment of a deed to J. C. Caskey recited that the grantor "acknowledged that he had executed the same J. C. for Caskey all the uses, purposes, and considerations therein set forth," it was held that the certificate was substantially sufficient, as the name "J. C. Caskey" might be treated as surplusage, and the writing of the word "for" in the connection shown was due to a clerical error. Gray v. Kauffman, 82 Tex. 65, 17 S. W. 513.

Misdescription of grantor.— A testator devised land to his wife, but the will named no executor, and no administrator was appointed. The devisee in a conveyance of the land described herself as executrix and devisee of the will, but signed only as an individual. The certificate recited that she acknowledged the deed as executrix "for the purposes therein mentioned." It was held that the words "as such executrix" might be disregarded as surplusage, and, the certificate being otherwise correct, the conveyance was sufficient to pass her title. Certificate referring to instrument.—Where the certificate of acknowledgment or proof of the execution of a deed refers to the instrument itself in such manner as to connect the two, they may be considered together in determining the sufficiency of the proof of execution. Cleland v. Long, 34 Fla. 353, 16 So. 272.

Place of taking acknowledgment.— It is not indispensable that the place of taking the acknowledgment of a deed should appear from the certificate of acknowledgment, if it appear with sufficient certainty from an inspection of the whole instrument. Fuhrman v. Loudon, 13 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 386, 15 Am. Dec. 608; Brooks v. Chaplin, 3 Vt. 281, 23 Am. Dec. 209.

Chandler v. Spear, 22 Vt. 388.

Instrument "proved or acknowledged."— A clerk's certificate attached to a deed, reciting that it was executed and "proved or

(II) Particular Recitals — (A) Naming or Describing Acknowledgor — (1) Ackowledgment by Private Person — (a) In General. The certificate should show that the person who appeared before the officer and acknowledged the instrument was the one who executed it.[14] The certificate will not be very strictly construed in this respect, and if it is shown with reasonable certainty that the grantor made the acknowledgment it will be sufficient.[15]

(b) Omission of Name. A certificate which omits the name of the person making the acknowledgment, without otherwise showing that such person was the grantor therein, is usually regarded as fatally defective.[16] But the omission of the acknowledgor's name is not material where it sufficiently appears that the grantor and no one else appeared and acknowledged the instrument.[17]

(c) Variance as to Name. A material variance between the name of the grantor as given in the instrument and as given in the certificate will render the certificate invalid, where it does not otherwise appear that the two names apply to the acknowledged" according to the laws of the state, will be held to be a certificate that it was properly acknowledged, a reference to the deed showing a certificate of acknowledgment but no certificate of proof. Nelson v. Graff, 44 Mich. 433, 6 N. W. 872.

Where more than one grantor.— A certificate stating that more than one person appeared before the officer to acknowledge the instrument, and that "he" acknowledged that he executed it, does not entitle the instrument to record. Threadgill v. Bickerstaff, 7 Tex. Civ. App. 406, 26 S. W. 739.

The acknowledgment of a deed by a trustee, who signed the instrument as trustee, is not void because the certificate describes him simply by his individual name without adding his title. Dail v. Moore, 51 Mo. 589.

Acknowledgment by deputy clerk.— Where a tax deed is executed by the deputy county clerk, an acknowledgment reciting that such deputy county clerk appeared before the acknowledging officer, and that he acknowledged the execution of the deed by him "as such county clerk," is sufficient; the words, "as such county clerk" meaning "as such deputy county clerk." Ward v. Walters, 63 Wis. 39, 22 N. W. 844.

Acknowledgment of instrument "as a party thereto."— A certificate of acknowledgment of a sheriff's deed, stating that the sheriff, "to me personally known to be the same person described in, and whose name is subscribed to, the above instrument, appeared before me and acknowledged that he executed the same as sheriff aforesaid;" sufficiently shows that the person who subscribed the deed subscribed and acknowledged it "as a party thereto." Cavender v. Smith, 5 Iowa 157.

Sufficient statement of identity.— A certificate which shows that "on the 29th day of September, 1862, personally appeared before me, D., of Fall City," is a sufficient statement of the identity of the grantor in a deed by the town. Burbank v. Ellis, 7 Nebr. 156.

Colorado — Construction of statute.— Colo. Rev. Stat. c. 14, § 2, provides that the justice, taking the acknowledgment of a chattel mortgage, "shall certify the same in substance as follows: This mortgage was acknowledged before me by A. B., (the mortgagor) this —— day of ——." It was held that a certificate which omitted the words "the mortgagor," but gave the name of the party, was sufficient, as the words given in parentheses in the statute were merely intended to indicate the name to be inserted. Chapin v. Whitsett, 3 Colo. 315, 316.

16. Hayden v. Westcott, 11 Conn. 129; Hiss v. McCabe, 45 Md. 77; Smith v. Hunt, 13 Ohio 260, 42 Am. Dec. 201. But see Philips v. Ruble, Litt. Sel. Cas. (Ky.) 221 (acknowledgment made in open court presumed to have been made by the grantor); Den v. Bryan, 6 N. C. 178, 5 Am. Dec. 526 (presumption that the officer did his duty in the absence of any showing to the contrary).

17. Magness v. Arnold, 31 Ark. 103; Milner v. Nelson, 86 Iowa 452, 53 N. W. 405, 41 Am. St. Rep. 506, 19 L. R. A. 279; Wilcoxon v. Osborn, 77 Mo. 621; Wise v. Postlewait, 3 W. Va. 452.

Sufficient certificate.— A certificate of acknowledgment, "Personally appeared ——, signer and sealer of the foregoing instrument, and acknowledged the same to be his free act and deed, before me," was held to show sufficiently that it was the grantor who appeared. Sanford v. Bulkley, 30 Conn. 344.

Sheriff's deed.— In the certificate of an acknowledgment of a deed from a sheriff taken by a probate clerk, the clerk inadvertently omitted the name of the sheriff from the acknowledgment, which read as follows: "Personally appeared before me, G. C., clerk of the probate court in and for said county, whose name is subscribed to the within deed, as such, who acknowledged that he signed, sealed, and delivered the same," etc., being perfectly regular in other respects. It was held that as it was clearly apparent from the certificate that the sheriff was the person who made the acknowledgment, the omission of his name did not vitiate it. Pickett v. Doe, 5 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 470, 472, 43 Am. Dec. 523.

same person.[18] But where, from an inspection of the whole instrument, it appears with reasonable certainty that the person who acknowledged was the one who executed it, the clerical error in stating the name of the grantor will not invalidate the instrument.[19] And where the grantor signs the instrument using only the initial of his christian name, the fact that in the certificate such name is spelled out in full will not constitute a defect.[20]

(2) Acknowledgment by Agent or Attorney. Where an instrument is acknowledged by an agent or attorney, no particular set of words is necessary, in the absence of express statutory requirement, to show that he made the acknowledgment in his representative and not his private capacity. If that fact can be gathered from a consideration of the certificate in connection with the deed it is enough.[21] Thus, where an instrument by husband and wife is acknowledged by the husband in his own behalf and as attorney in fact for the wife, the certificate is sufficient if it clearly shows that the husband acknowledged in both his individual and representative capacities, and that in the latter capacity he acknowledged the deed in behalf of his principal named in the certificate.[22]

19. Cheek v. Herndon, 82 Tex. 146, 17 S. W. 763; Chandler v. Spear, 22 Vt. 388.

Presumed that variance due to clerical error.— Where the certificate of acknowledgment of a deed identifies the party as known to the officer to be the person who executed the same, the fact that the name of such party appears in the certificate as "Strieber," whereas the name signed to the deed is "Schrieber," will be presumed to be the result of a clerical error merely and will not vitiate the acknowledgment. Rodes v. St. Anthony, etc., El. Co., 49 Minn. 370, 52 N. W. 27.

Sufficient showing that both names belong to same person.— Where one of the grantors was described in the body of the deed as Robert P. McC. but the deed was signed R. Parker McC., it was held that a statement in the certificate of acknowledgment that the deed was acknowledged by Robert P. McC. was sufficient to show that he and R. Parker McC. were one and the same person. Grand Tower Min., etc., Co. v. Gill, 111 Ill. 541.

Sufficient certificate.— A certificate of acknowledgment to a mortgage, executed by a husband for himself and as attorney in fact for his wife, which, after the usual acknowledgment by him, continues, "And I do further certify that personally appeared A. B., per-

(3) Acknowledgment by Corporation. The certificate of an acknowledgment by a corporation must contain enough to show that the acknowledgment was the act of the corporation and not of the individuals who made it.[23] Thus the certificate should state that the officer knew the acknowledgor or had satisfactory evidence of his identity,[24] and should show, when read in connection with the deed, that such person was authorized to act in behalf of the corporation.[25] Where the conveyance purports to have been executed and acknowledged by persons duly authorized to act in behalf of the corporation, and the certificate recites that they were such, a presumption arises in favor of their authority,[26] though sonally known to me to be the same person whose name is subscribed to the within instrument as the attorney in fact of C. D., his wife, and the said A. B. duly acknowledged to me that he subscribed the name of C. D., thereto as principal, and his own name as attorney in fact," sufficiently shows his acknowledgment in behalf of his wife as well as in his own behalf. Richmond v. Voorhees, 10 Wash. 316, 38 Pac. 1014.

Defective certificate.— Where the grantor in a chattel mortgage was a corporation, and the certificate stated that the acknowledgment was made by "J. B. R., secretary, and F. W. C., president, the mortgagors therein named," it was held to be fatally defective. Chicago First Nat. Bank v. Baker, 62 Ill. App. 154.

"Act of the corporation."— Under Tex. Rev. Stat. art. 600, requiring that an officer of a corporation executing a deed in behalf of such corporation shall acknowledge such instrument to be "the act of the corporation," an acknowledgment by the officer stating that he executed the deed for the purpose therein expressed is a sufficient compliance with the statute. Ballard v. Carmichael, 83 Tex. 355, 18 S. W. 734; Muller v. Boone, 63 Tex. 91.

Officer "satisfied."— A certificate of acknowledgment reciting the appearance of R., "who is, I am satisfied, the president of the R. M. Company," was held to show sufficiently that the officer knew the acknowledgor or had satisfactory evidence of his identity. Rogers v. Pell, 47 N. Y. App. Div. 240, 62 N. Y. Suppl. 92.

Clerical error.— Where a certificate recited that the acknowledgment was made by "H. G. R., known to me to the president," it was held that the omission of the word "be" was a mere clerical error which would not invalidate the certificate. Johnson v. Badger Mill, etc., Co., 13 Nev. 351.

Rosser, Pres.," where the conveyance was signed by the "Minneapolis Improvement Company, by Thomas L. Rosser, President." Banner v. Rosser, 96 Va. 238, 31 S. E. 67.

Acknowledged as "their voluntary act and deed."—A certificate of acknowledgment stating that M. C., president, and A. M., cashier, of a corporation, "acknowledged that they executed and delivered the same as their voluntary act and deed," etc., is sufficient to show an acknowledgment by the corporation. Descombes v. Wood, 91 Mo. 196, 4 S. W. 82, 60 Am. Rep. 239 [affirming Eppright v. Nickerson, 78 Mo. 482]. To the same effect see Zimpleman v. Stamps, 21 Tex. Civ. App. 129, 51 S. W. 341.

The certificate of the acknowledgment of a corporate deed in these words, "Personally appeared W. W., agent of the Flower Brook Mfg. Co., signer and sealer of the above written instrument, and acknowledged the same to be his free act and deed," was held to show sufficiently that the acknowledgment was made by him on the part and behalf of the corporation. McDaniels v. Flower Brook Mfg. Co., 22 Vt. 274.

Certificate not stating official character.— An acknowledgment on a deed signed by F., as president, and C., as treasurer, of a corporation, and acknowledged, "Personally appearing, F. and C. acknowledge the foregoing instrument to be their free act and deed," is sufficient as a deed of the corporation. Tenney v. East Warren Lumber Co., 43 N. H. 343. But see Klemme v. McLay, 68 Iowa 158, 26 N. W. 53, wherein the certificate was held invalid because not stating the official character of the acknowledgors, although they are so designated in the instrument.

Mayor pro tem. of city.— Where a city charter authorizes the appointment of a mayor pro tempore, a certificate of acknowledgment purporting to have been executed by such an officer, wherein it is stated that the person executing the deed for a corporation was personally known to the officer as the identical person whose name was affixed to the deed as president pro tempore of the city council and acting mayor of the city, and that he acknowledged the instrument to be his voluntary act and deed as such president and acting mayor, etc., was held to show sufficiently the official character of the acknowledging party. this may be overcome by proof to the contrary.[27] It has been held that where no special form is prescribed by statute [28] a certificate is sufficient which identifies the subscriber, specifies the writing subscribed, states the capacity in which he executes, and certifies his acknowledgment thereof.[29]

(4) Acknowledgment by Partnership. A certificate of an acknowledgment by a partnership, to be effectual, must identify the person or persons who made the acknowledgment.[30] In the absence of any special form prescribed by statute [31] it is usually sufficient if the certificate recites that the person acknowledging the instrument is a member of the firm,[32] without stating that such person was authorized by the other members to acknowledge in behalf of the partnership.[33]

(b) Knowledge of Acknowledgor's Identity — (1) Necessity for. Usually the statutes require the officer to certify that the person making the acknowledgment was to him personally known, or proved on satisfactory evidence, to be the individual who executed the instrument. Under such a statute a certificate which fails to show in some way that the acknowledgor was known to the officer is fatally defective.[34] But where the statute in force at the time the acknowledg-

Failure to comply with statute.— A certificate of acknowledgment of a deed conveying real estate by a corporation, which fails to show that the officer or agent executing it was sworn, and deposed to the facts contained in the certificate, as required by W. Va. Code, c. 73, § 5, is fatally defective and does not entitle such deed to be recorded. Abney v. Ohio Lumber, etc., Co., 45 W. Va. 446, 32 S. E. 256.

Substantial compliance with statute.— An instrument executed by a corporation was signed by the vice-president, attested by the secretary, and the corporate seal attached. Both officers acknowledged the execution of the instrument by them as the act and deed of the corporation, and the secretary made affidavit that he was such officer and that the seal was the corporate seal and was affixed by order of the board of directors. This was held to be a substantial compliance with Minn. Laws (1883), c. 99, as amended Laws (1889), c. 118. Bowers v. Hechtman, 45 Minn. 238, 47 N. W. 792.

Sufficient certificate.— Where the certificate of acknowledgment of a deed under which plaintiff claimed title stated that a specified firm personally appeared before the notary "by S. B., partner of said firm, known to me to be the person whose name is subscribed to the foregoing instrument, and acknowledged to me that he executed the same," it was held to be sufficient; it appearing on the face of the deed that S. (2) Sufficiency of — (a) In General. In certifying his knowledge of the acknowledgor's identity it is not necessary that the officer should follow the words of the statute literally, and if he uses language substantially complying therewith it is sufficient.[36] Thus a recital merely that the acknowledgor was known to the officer has been held sufficient, though the certificate did not set forth in the terms of the statute that he was known to the officer to be the person described in and who executed the instrument.[37] And a recital that the officer is "satisfied" that

Colorado — Articles of incorporation.— In Colorado it is not necessary that the acknowledgment of articles of incorporation should show that the persons acknowledging were personally known to the officer to be the persons who executed the articles, the statute providing for such acknowledgment containing no requirement in that regard. Grammatical error.— A deed of land is not invalidated by a recital in the certificate of acknowledgment that the three grantors "is personally known to me as the same person whose name are subscribed," etc. Cairo, etc., R. Co. v. Parrott, 92 Ill. 194, 195.

Surplusage.— Under Tex. Stat. (1879) art. 4309, it was held that a certificate in the precise form of the statute, reciting "Personally appeared before me J. A. and N. A., his wife, both known to me (or proven to me on oath of ——) to be the persons whose names are subscribed," etc., was sufficient, as it was evident that the officer intended to certify that the parties to the deed were known to him, and the parenthetical clause could be rejected as surplusage. Adams v. Pardue, (Tex. Civ. App. 1896) 36 S. W. 1015.

Identification by introduction.— An acknowledgment of a deed reciting that the grantor is known to the officer taking the acknowledgment by introduction sufficiently complies with the statute requiring a statement that the grantor is known to such officer; the words "by introduction" being regarded as surplusage. Lindley v. Lindley, (Tex. Civ. App. 1899) 50 S. W. 159.

the person making the acknowledgment is the grantor in the instrument has been held sufficient to show that he was acquainted with the grantor's identity.[38] But while the certificate is liberally construed in this regard, yet, to be sufficient, it must contain enough to show that the acknowledgor was actually known to the officer.[39]

(b) Omission of Word "Personally." Where the officer recites that the acknowledgor was known to him, the omission of the word "personally" will not render the certificate defective, personal knowledge being necessarily implied in the absence of anything to show that such knowledge came from information.[40]

(c) Identification by Proof. It is usually provided by statute that where the officer is not personally acquainted with the acknowledgor he must state in the certificate the proof by which the identity of such person was made known to him.[41]

(c) Informing Grantor of Contents. Where the statute requires the certificate to recite that the grantor was informed of the contents of the conveyance, the omission of such recital renders the certificate fatally defective.[42] But the

Known as person described in deed.—A certificate of acknowledgment stating that the parties acknowledging were known to the officer as the persons described in the deed, but not stating that they were known to him as the persons who executed the deed, was held sufficient under 1 N. Sufficient showing of personal knowledge. — A recital in a certificate of acknowledgment of a deed that "personally came" the grantors, naming them, "known to me to be the persons who executed the foregoing instrument," satisfies the requirement of Ill. Rev. Stat. (1845), p. 107, § 20, that the certificate shall state that the person making the acknowledgment was personally known to the officer to be the real person executing the deed. Schley v. Pullman's Palace Car Co., 120 U. S. 575, 7 S. Ct. 730, 30 L. ed. 789.

41. See the statutes.

In California, where the certificate states that the acknowledging party was proven to the officer to be the person who executed the instrument, it must also state that such proof was by the sworn testimony of a credible witness, giving the name of the witness. Kimball v. Semple, 25 Cal. 440.

In New York, under 1 Rev. Stat., p. 758, § 9, it was held that a certificate stating that the identity of the acknowledgor was proved to the officer by a witness named, and that such witness, on being sworn, stated his place of residence and that he knew the acknowledgor to be the grantor described in the deed, was sufficient although it did not state specifically that the officer had satisfactory evidence of the acknowledgor's identity. Ritter v. Worth, 58 N. Y. 627 [affirming 1 Thomps. & C. (N. Y.) 406]. And in that state it has been held that the certificate need not state the name of the identifying witness (Jackson v. Phillips, 9 Cow. (N. certificate will be liberally construed in this regard and a substantial compliance with the language of the statute is sufficient.[43]

(D) Execution of Instrument — (1) In General. To be valid, the certificate must recite that the grantor acknowledged executing the instrument,[44] but the exact language of the statute need not be used, and any recital is sufficient which clearly shows an acknowledgment of execution.[45] The omission of the personal pronoun in reciting the fact of execution will not ordinarily vitiate the certificate if it appears from the context that it was the grantor who acknowledged such execution.[46]

(2) Delivery. It has been held that a certificate is defective which fails to show that the grantor "delivered" as well as "signed" the instrument,[47] but it

Acknowledgment proof of knowledge.— An acknowledgment according to the statute, before an officer designated by law, is equivalent to proof that the grantor had knowledge of the contents, if it contains the certificate that the officer made known the contents before the acknowledgment was taken. Hyer v. Little, 20 N. J. Eq. 443.

43. "Explained" equivalent to "fully explained."— A recital that the deed was "explained" is sufficient under a statute requiring it to be "fully explained." Johnson v. Thompson, (Tex. Civ. App. 1898) 50 S. W. 1055.

Sufficient compliance with statutory form. — A recital that the acknowledgor, "being informed of the contents," acknowledged that "he executed the same voluntarily on the day the same bears date," sufficiently conforms to a statutory form reading that the signer acknowledged that, being informed of the contents of the conveyance, he executed the same voluntarily. Abney v. De Loach, 84 Ala. 393, 4 So. 757.

45. Davar v. Cardwell, 27 Ind. 478.

"Signed, sealed, and delivered."— Instead of certifying that the party had executed the deed, the words "signed, sealed, and delivered the same" may be used. Hobson v. Kissam, 8 Ala. 357; Jacoway v. Gault, 20 Ark. 190, 73 Am. Dec. 494.

Acknowledgment as grantor's "act and deed."—A statute requiring a recital that the grantor "acknowledged that he signed, sealed, and delivered the foregoing deed" is satisfied by a recital that the maker "acknowledged the foregoing instrument to be his act and deed." Hall v. Thompson, 1 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 443, 444; Den v. Hamilton, 12 N. J. L. 126; Brown v. Farran, 3 Ohio 140.

46. Omission of personal pronoun.— A certificate by the officer that the grantors "acknowledged to me that —— signed and executed the within deed" was held not to be defective on that account, it being evident that the omission of the word "they" was a clerical mistake. Musgrove v. Bonser, 5 Oreg. 313, 315, 20 Am. Rep. 737; Tew v. Henderson, 116 Ala. 545, 23 So. 128. But see, contra, Buell v. Irwin, 24 Mich. 145; Huff v. Webb, 64 Tex. 284,— in which cases a recital that the grantor appeared and "acknowledged that —— executed the deed" was held to be insufficient.

Omission of word "their."— Where the acknowledgment to a mortgage was regular in all respects except that it provided as follows: "And each for themselves acknowledge the execution thereof to be —— free and voluntary act for the purposes named," it was held that the omission of the word "their" did not make the acknowledgment void. Garton v. Hudson-Kimberly Pub. Co., 8 Okla. 631, 58 Pac. 946.

"The" instead of "he."— Though in a certificate of acknowledgment by the grantor of land the word "the" was used where it should appear that "he" executed the same, yet where, from the certificate as a whole, it appeared that the officer intended to write "he" and that the omission was a clerical mistake, the certificate was held to be admissible in evidence. Durst v. Daugherty, 81 Tex. 650, 17 S. W. 388. To the same effect see Montgomery v. Hornberger, 16 Tex. Civ. App. 28, 40 S. W. 628, wherein "the" was written by mistake for "they."

47. Shelton v. Armor, 13 Ala. 647; Buntyn v. Shippers' Compress Co., 63 Miss. 94.

Recital of delivery to wrong person.— Where the acknowledgment of a trust deed for the benefit of creditors was of the delivery of the deed to the cestui que trust, and not to the trustee, who was the grantee named in the deed, it was a substantial compliance with the statute relating to acknowledgments of such instruments. Stewart v. Fowler, 3 Ala. 629.

Need not fix date of delivery.— As it is not necessary that the acknowledgment of a deed should fix the date of delivery, the failure to add in the acknowledgment of a deed, follow-would seem that the acknowledgment of signing, taken in connection with other circumstances, might be sufficient to show delivery.[48]

(3) Designation of Instrument. Where it clearly appears to what instrument the certificate is intended to apply, it is sufficient, although there be no specific reference to such instrument,[49] and it has been held that a certificate reciting that the party acknowledged the execution of "the same," instead of "the within instrument" or other equivalent expression, was not invalid on that account, where the surrounding circumstances sufficiently showed what instrument was meant.[50]

(E) Fact of Acknowledgment. The certificate, to be valid, must recite the fact that the instrument was acknowledged by the grantor,[51] and the omission of such recital cannot be supplied by intendment,[52] nor will the lapse of time raise any presumption of acknowledgment so as to render the record of the deed legal.[53] But it is not essential that the word "acknowledged" be used, provided an equivalent expression be substituted therefor.[54]

(F) Voluntary Nature of Act. Where the statute requires a recital that the grantor voluntarily executed the instrument, a certificate which fails to state that

ing the statement of delivery, the words, "on the day and year therein mentioned," is not a material defect affecting the validity of the instrument. Caruthers v. McLaran, 56 Miss. 371; Garth v. Fort, 15 Lea (Tenn.) 683.

48. Johnson v. Thompson, (Tex. Civ. App. 1898) 50 S. W. 1055.

Registration includes delivery.— An omission to state, in the certificate of an acknowledgment, that the deed was delivered, is not essential, for the fact that it was registered on the acknowledgment of the grantor necessarily included delivery. Robinson v. Mauldin, 11 Ala. 977.

Delivery appearing from attestation.— An acknowledgment, made by the maker of a chattel mortgage, of "the foregoing instrument, by them signed, to be their free act," such instrument also appearing upon its face, by the attestation clause, to have been "delivered," is a sufficient acknowledgment of both the signing and delivering to entitle such instrument to be recorded. Einstein v. Shouse, 24 Fla. 490, 5 So. 380. See also L'Engle v. Reed, 27 Fla. 345, 9 So. 213.

49. Samuels v. Shelton, 48 Mo. 444.

"The within indenture."— In a certificate of acknowledgment to a deed, a reference thereto as "the within indenture" is sufficient to identify it as the deed acknowledged, without giving its date and stating that the grantor signed it, when those facts are shown by the deed itself. Adams v. Medsker, 25 W. Va. 127.

Insufficient certificate.— A certificate of acknowledgment as follows: "Personally appeared A. B. signer of the above instrument —— to be his free act and deed, before me, C. D., Justice of Peace," was held to be fatally defective, as there was nothing to show that the grantor acknowledged the instrument. Stanton v. Button, 2 Conn. 527.

For a certificate sufficiently showing that the grantor acknowledged the instrument see Blair v. Valliant, 4 Harr. & M. (Md.) 62.

Acknowledgment by two.— A certificate that "personally appeared A. P. and N. P., acknowledged," etc., sufficiently shows that the acknowledgment was by both. Brown v. Corbin, 121 Ind. 455, 23 N. E. 276.

Personal appearance of grantor.— The certificate must show that the grantor personally appeared before the officer. East Tennessee, etc., R. Co. v. Davis, 91 Ala. 615, 8 So. 349. But see Zimmerman v. Willard, 114 Ill. 364, 2 N. E. 70.

52. Stanton v. Button, 2 Conn. 527; Short v. Conlee, 28 Ill. 219. But see Basshor v. Stewart, 54 Md. 376, wherein the words "and acknowledged the said mortgage" were omitted. It was held that, the omitted words being supplied with positive certainty by the context, the certificate was not insufficient on that account.

53. Heintz v. O'Donnell, 17 Tex. Civ. App. 21, 42 S. W. 797. But see Jackson v. Gilchrist, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 89.

54. Equivalent expression.— Under N. Y. Laws (1848), c. 40, relating to the increase of stock of manufacturing corporations, and providing for a certificate stating certain facts to be acknowledged by the chairman of the meeting, the acknowledgment in the words "subscribed and sworn to before me" is sufficient, though the word "acknowledged" does not appear therein. Cuykendall v. Douglas, 19 Hun (N. Y.) 577. In Chouteau v. Allen, 70 Mo. 290, a certificate of an acknowledgment by the president of a corporation, reciting that, being duly sworn, he "deposes and says" that he, by authority of the board, did subscribe, and that the seal was affixed by authority, was held sufficient although the word "acknowledge" was not used.

fact in some way is defective.[55] It is not necessary, however, to follow the exact words of the statute; a substantial compliance therewith is sufficient.[56]

(G) Purpose or Consideration. Sometimes, where the statute requires a recital that the grantor acknowledged the execution of the instrument "for the consideration and purposes therein set forth," such recital is regarded as essential to the validity of the certificate,[57] though the language of the statute need not be literally followed.[58] In Texas, however, it is held that the omission of such statement is not a fatal defect.[59]

b. Acknowledgments by Married Women — (I) Substantial Compliance with Statute — (A) Necessity for — (1) In General. As has been stated heretofore, where a statute allowing a married woman to alien or encumber her property prescribes that the instrument shall be acknowledged, an acknowledgment in the mode pointed out by the statute is absolutely essential to the validity of the instrument.[60] Under such statutes it has been very generally held that the officer's certificate must show affirmatively that all the statutory requirements have been substantially complied with, else the instrument will be invalid.[61] A certifi-

Correction by recorder.— Where the certificate of acknowledgment is defective by reason of omitting the word "voluntary" or any equivalent, the fact that the recorder corrects such omission in the recorded copy will not cure the defect. Newman v. Samuels, 17 Iowa 528.

56. Dickerson v. Davis, 12 Iowa 353.

Need not use word "voluntarily."— A certificate of acknowledgment need not state that the grantors executed the deed "voluntarily," if it contains words giving an equivalent meaning. Den v. Geiger, 9 N. J. L. 281.

Omission of words "and deed."— A certificate of acknowledgment showing that the grantors appeared and acknowledged the instrument to be "their voluntary act," omitting the words "and deed," is a substantial compliance with the statute. Spitznagle v. Vanhessch, 13 Nebr. 338, 14 N. W. 417.

Omission of word "purposes."— An acknowledgment which does not show that the mortgage was executed for the "purposes" expressed therein will not entitle it to be admitted to record. Ford v. Burks, 37 Ark. 91.

The omission of the word "consideration" renders the certificate fatally defective. Griesler v. McKennon, 44 Ark. 517; Johnson v. Godden, 33 Ark. 600.

"Uses" not equivalent to "consideration." — Under a statute requiring the certificate to state that the instrument was executed for the "consideration" and purposes therein specified, it was held that a recital that it was executed for the "uses" therein specified was not sufficient, the word "uses" not being the same or of similar import as the word "consideration." Martin v. O'Bannon, 35 Ark. 62.

58. Equivalent phrases.— Where a certificate of acknowledgment, pursued the statutory form except that, instead of the statutory words, "who acknowledged that he executed the within instrument for the purpose therein contained," the words "who acknowledged his signature to the annexed deed for all the purposes therein expressed" were substituted, the two phrases are equivalent in meaning. Where wife living apart from husband.—A certificate of acknowledgment of a deed for real estate, made by a married woman alone as one living separate and apart from her husband, must state that it has been proven to the satisfaction of the officer that the real estate is the sole and separate property of the woman, and that she was at the date of the deed, and still is at the date of the certificate, living separate and apart from her husband, otherwise the deed is void. Bennett v. Pierce, 45 W. Va. 654, 31 S. E. 972.

Relinquishment of dower.— A certificate of acknowledgment of a wife to a deed is fatally defective as to her right of dower where it does not state that she relinquished her dower, such recital being matter of substance. Russell v. Rumsey, 35 Ill. 362; Owen v. Robbins, 19 Ill. 545; Thomas v. Meier, 18 Mo. 573. But see Byrne v. Taylor, 46 Miss. 95, wherein it was held unnecessary to incorporate in the body of the deed or acknowledgment a recital that the wife united in the conveyance for the purpose of alienating her right of dower; that being presumed.

Conveyance of wife's land.— Where different forms of acknowledgment were provided for a release of dower by a married woman, and for a transfer by her of her estates of inheritance, it was held that where a married woman was the owner of real estate in fee, and executed a deed with her husband purporting to convey the estate, and the acknowledgment to the deed was in substance a mere relinquishment of the dower, the deed did not convey the estate of the wife. Lane v. Dolick, 6 McLean (U. S.) 200, 14 Fed. Cas. No. 8,049.

Mortgage of both real and personal property.— Where the certificate of the wife's acknowledgment to a mortgage by a husband and wife, conveying both real and personal property, recited merely that she relinquished her dower in the land, it was held not to be sufficient to make the mortgage a valid encumbrance on her interest in the personalty as to third persons. Carle v. Wall, (Ark. 1891) 16 S. W. 293.

Failure to show acknowledgment with husband.— A certificate of acknowledgment by husband and wife recited that the husband "acknowledged the signing and sealing," and that the wife, being examined apart from her husband, declared "that she did voluntarily sign, seal, and acknowledge the same," is insufficient in that it does not show that she acknowledged it separately or jointly with her husband. Moorman v. Schwein, 5 Cinc. L. Bul. 353, 8 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 55, 56.

South Carolina — Relinquishment of inheritance.— In South Carolina a certificate of a married woman's release of her inheritance stating that she relinquished "all her interest and estate," omitting to use the word "inheritance," was held insufficient. Williams v. Cudd, 26 S. C. 213, 2 S. E. 14, 4 Am. St. Rep. 714; Wingo v. Parker, 19 S. C. 9.

North Carolina — Transfer of wife's land to husband.—Where, under N. C. Code, § 1835, a married woman conveys her land to her husband, the officer's certificate of acknowledgment must state that he considered the conveyance to be not unreasonable or injurious to her; and the omission of such recital renders the deed void. taken did not expressly require the certificate to show affirmatively the particular facts, it has been held that the simple recital that she acknowledged having voluntarily executed the deed was sufficient; it being presumed that the officer properly performed his duty in taking the acknowledgment.[65]

(B) Sufficiency of — (1) In General. A literal adherence to the language of the statute is not exacted of such certificates. It is the policy of the law to construe them liberally, and where a substantial compliance appears clearly and affirmatively the certificate will be held sufficient, no matter what the language employed.[66] It will not be vitiated by a slight informality incapable of misleading,[67] such as a grammatical inaccuracy,[68] or the obviously mistaken use of one word for another,[69] or the omission of a word not affecting the meaning.[70] Where the statute requires an acknowledgment, by the wife, of a particular instrument, but prescribes no form, a certificate in the form provided for ordinary conveyances is sufficient.[71]

(2) SURPLUSAGE. Where a certificate of a married woman's acknowledgment contains everything essential to its validity, the insertion of unnecessary words will not vitiate it, but such words will be rejected as surplusage.[72] Thus a certificate of an acknowledgment, by the wife, of a conveyance of land owned by her in fee, if sufficient in other respects, will not be vitiated by a recital that she relinquished her dower in the premises, the recital being regarded as surplusage.[73]

(II) PARTICULAR RECITALS— (A) Naming or Describing Acknowledgor. The certificate of a married woman's acknowledgment must contain enough to show that it was the wife who made the acknowledgment.[74] But where it is perfectly clear who acknowledged, the certificate will not be vitiated by mistakes as to the wife's name,[75] nor by the fact that a space for the insertion of such name is left blank.[76]

72. La Société Française, etc. v. Beard, 54 Cal. 480.

Defective recital of unnecessary matter.— As a wife who joins in a mortgage of her husband's land, not a part of the homestead, need not be examined separate and apart from him, as required by Ala. Code, § 2508, in case of homesteads, a defective recital of a separate examination in the acknowledgment may be rejected as surplusage, without affecting the sufficiency of the remainder, where that complies with the form prescribed by § 1802. Recital applicable to part of lands conveyed.— A certificate of a married woman's acknowledgment reciting that she relinquished "her dower in the lands and tenements" conveyed is not invalid because of the fact that she is owner in fee of one of the parcels conveyed, if she has only a dower right in another of the parcels, the release of dower being applied to the latter parcel only. Hughes v. Lane, 11 Ill. 123, 133, 50 Am. Dec. 436; Barker v. Circle, 60 Mo. 258.

74. Failure to show who acknowledged.— A certificate of acknowledgment which described plaintiff's husband and plaintiff, "his wife," as having personally appeared before the notary and being to him known to be "the person described in and who executed the same as his free act and deed" was held to be insufficient as not showing that the wife acknowledged the instrument. Sarazin v. Union R. Co., 153 Mo. 479, 55 S. W. 92.

Name left blank.—A certificate of acknowledgment stated that the grantors, naming them, personally appeared and acknowledged the deed, and then proceeded: "And the said ——, wife of the said ——, having been by me examined," "acknowledged that she freely executed the deed and relinquished her dower, etc., without the compulsion of her said husband." It was held that the deed could not be read in evidence, because the certificate did not show who, as wife, acknowledged. Merritt v. Yates, 71 Ill. 636, 22 Am. Rep. 128.

75. Mistake as to wife's name.— A wife having signed a mortgage of a homestead as S. E. S., and the officer's certificate of acknowledgment in due form stating that S. E. S., whose name was signed to the mortgage, and who acknowledged its execution, was "known to me to be the wife of" the mortgagor, the mortgage is valid though the true name of the wife is L. E. S. Shelton v. Aultman, etc., Co., 82 Ala. 315, 318, 8 So. 232.

Wrong name rejected as surplusage.— A and wife made a deed and duly acknowledged the same. The deed was recorded, but the certificate was not, and a blank was left in the record immediately after the record of the deed. The certificate of privy examination had inserted in it the name of Sarah Going instead of Sarah Rich, the wife of the grantor. It was held that as the certificate was sufficient without the word "Going," and as it was evidently a mistake, this word should be rejected and the certificate might still be recorded in the blank space left in record. Gedges v. Western Baptist Theological Institute, 13 B. Mon. (Ky.) 530.

76. Sufficient description of acknowledgor. — A certificate of acknowledgment by husband and wife recited that before the officer "personally appeared T. B. M. and H. A. M., his wife, grantors in the foregoing deed of conveyance, to me well known, who acknowledge that he had executed the same for the consideration and purposes mentioned. And on this day voluntarily appeared before me ——, to me well known as the person whose name appears upon the within and foregoing deed, and in the absence —— said husband declared that —— had of her own free will executed," etc. It was held that the blanks

(B) Knowledge of Acknowledgor's Identity. Where the statute provides that the certificate of a married woman's acknowledgment shall recite that she was personally known to the officer, or that her identity was proved to him by satisfactory evidence, the omission of such recital will render the instrument fatally defective.[77] But under the Tennessee statute it has been held that the certificate need not contain such recital.[78]

(C) Privy Examination — (1) NECESSITY FOR. Where the statute provides that the wife's acknowledgment shall be taken on privy examination separate and apart from the husband,[79] a recital showing that such provision has been complied with is usually held to be absolutely essential.[80] In the absence of such a could not vitiate the certificate, as it was perfectly clear who made the acknowledgment. Donahue v. Mills, 41 Ark. 421.

Husband's name left blank.— A justice's certificate of acknowledgment of husband and wife to a mortgage, reciting: "Came before me the within named A. E. F., known to me to be the wife of the within named ——," was followed by an acknowledgment of husband and wife, regular in all respects except the words "and his wife" were employed instead of the name of the wife. This was held to be a substantial compliance with the statute. Frederick v. Wilcox, 119 Ala. 355, 357, 24 So. 582, 72 Am. St. Rep. 925.

As to the necessity for such recital generally, see supra, XII, G, 1, a, (II), (B).

As to the necessity for the officer to ascertain the grantor's identity see supra, X, B, 1, c.

Insufficient certificate.— The requirement that a certificate of acknowledgment should state that the person making it was known to the notary is not satisfied in a certificate of acknowledgment by a married woman stating that she appeared in person, that she was the same party who signed the instrument, and that she was the wife of the one who signed with her. Beitel v. Wagner, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 365, 32 S. W. 366.

Sufficient certificate.— A certificate of acknowledgment, "On this day personally appeared Mrs. S. F., wife of E. F., known to me [proved to me on the oath of ——] to be the person," was held sufficient, a pen-stroke through the blank showing that the words within brackets, all of which were printed, were not intended to be part of the certificate. Farrell v. Palestine Loan Assoc., (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 30 S. W. 814.

Immaterial omission.— In a certificate stating that the grantor and his wife personally appeared before the officer, and that such persons "who —— personally known to me to be," etc., acknowledged the instrument, it was held that the omission of "are" after "who" would not impair the deed, as "who" might be disregarded as surplusage, and the certificate would then be correct. 83. Kentucky.— Under Ky. Gen. Stat. c. 24, § 2, providing that the certificate of an officer to the acknowledgment of a deed by a married woman "shall be evidence that she had been examined separate and apart from her husband," it has been held that the provisions of the statute must be considered as a part of the officer's certificate, and that he need not certify that the wife was actually examined separate and apart from her husband. Dowell v. Mitchell, 82 Ky. 47; Ford v. Teal, 7 Bush (Ky.) 156.

Presumption that officer did his duty.— In Indiana it has been held that a failure to recite that the wife was examined separate and apart from her husband would not invalidate the certificate, it being presumed, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, that the officer did his duty. presence,"[87] or "out of the hearing of her husband."[88] And so it has been held that a certificate is sufficient though not reciting that the examination was "separate" as well as "apart" from her husband.[89] But enough must be stated to show that the wife's examination was in fact conducted as directed by the statute,[90] and where the private examination is required to precede the acknowledgment a certificate is defective which does not show that the examination came first in point of time.[91]

(D) Voluntary Nature of Act — (1) NECESSITY FOR. As has been stated hitherto, for a married woman's acknowledgment to be binding on her it must be made on her declaration that she executed the instrument voluntarily, without coercion or compulsion.[92] Therefore it is essential to the validity of the certificate that it shall show on its face the voluntary nature of the act.[93]

Thus, where the language used in the certificate expresses an equivalent import, it will not be vitiated by the omission of such statutory words as "voluntarily," [95] "freely," [96] or "willingly," [97] and clerical errors will not invalidate where the meaning is clear.[98] But it is essential that there shall be at least a substantial compliance with the statute,[99] and the omission from the certificate of material statutory words or expressions, without substituting therefor others of the same signification, will render it fatally defective.[1]

A certificate that she "acknowledged the instrument to be her act and deed, and declared that she had willingly signed, sealed, and delivered the same, and that she wished not to retract it," is fatally defective under a statute requiring an execution by her "freely, voluntarily, without compulsion, constraint, or coercion by her husband." Henderson v. Rice, 1 Coldw. (Tenn.) 223.

(3) Absence of Desire to Retract. As a rule the certificate must recite, either in the words of the statute or in equivalent language,[2] that the wife declared she did not wish to retract her deed.[3] But in Illinois it is held that such a recital is not material to the validity of the certificate.[4]

(E) Explanation of Instrument — (1) Necessity for. Usually the statutes in reference to acknowledgments by married women provide that the instrument shall be explained to her by the officer who takes the acknowledgment.[5] Under such statutes it has been held in a few jurisdictions that a certificate need not recite that such explanation was made, it being presumed that the officer did his duty in that respect;[6] but in a very great majority of states such recital is required, and its omission renders the certificate fatally defective.[7]

Defect not curable by evidence aliunde.— As a general rule evidence is not admissible to show that the wife in fact knew the contents of the instrument where the certificate fails to state that fact. Barnet v. Barnet, 15 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 72, 16 Am. Dec. 516. But see Norton v. Davis, 83 Tex. 32, 18 S. W. 430.

As to the admissibility of evidence in aid of the certificate see infra, XIV.

Where recital not required by statute.— Where the statute specifying what shall be included in a certificate requires no mention of the explanation of the instrument to the wife, the certificate need not contain a recital in that regard. Tod v. Baylor, 4 Leigh (Va.) 498.

Equivalent expressions.—A recital that the wife "was made acquainted with the contents" is equivalent to one that the contents "were made known and explained to her." Hughes v. Lane, 11 Ill. 123, 50 Am. Dec. 436. A recital, "the contents of said deed being fully made known to her," etc., is sufficient under a statute requiring the officer to certify that the contents "and effect" of the deed were "explained" to her. Martin v. Davidson, 3 Bush (Ky.) 572. A recital that the contents were "fully made known to her" is equivalent to one that the contents were "made known and explained to her." Lane v. Dolick, 6 McLean (U. S.) 200, 14 Fed. Cas. No. 8,049.

(2) Sufficiency of. No more than a substantial compliance with the statute is required, and it is sufficient if words of equivalent meaning to the statutory language be employed.[8] A statement that the wife was fully acquainted with the contents of the instrument at the time she acknowledged it is usually sufficient, though it be not stated that such information was imparted to her by the certifying officer.[9] Clerical errors or omissions will not vitiate the certificate where its meaning is clear.[10] But while a strict compliance with the statute is not exacted, yet the certificate must show clearly in some way that the wife understood the contents of the instrument, else it will be insufficient;[11] and where the statute

Deed subject to another instrument.— A deed is duly acknowledged by a married woman when the notary certifies, in accordance with Cal. Civ. Code, § 119, that he "made her acquainted with the contents of the instrument," though the deed shows that it is subject to conditions contained in another instrument not signed by her, and not then executed, the contents of which were unknown to the notary. But see Langton v. Marshall, 59 Tex. 296, wherein it was held that, under a statute requiring that a deed shall be fully explained to the wife by the officer taking her acknowledgment, it was not enough that the certificate recited that the wife, "being examined by me privily and apart from her husband, declared that she fully understood the contents of said deed," etc. Langton v. Marshall, 59 Tex. 296.

Surplusage.— Where the certificate recited that the wife "having been by me first made acquainted with the contents of such instrument," duly acknowledged, etc.; it was held that the words "by me" might be discarded as surplusage. La Société Française, etc. v. Beard, 54 Cal. 480, 483.

"Fully understanding the contents."— A statement in a certificate of a married woman's acknowledgment that she executed the deed freely and without compulsion from any one, "fully understanding the contents" of it, is equivalent to a statement that she was informed of its contents. Schley v. Pullman's Palace Car Co., 120 U. S. 575, 7 S. Ct. 730, 30 L. ed. 789.

Explanation through interpreter.— Where a certificate of acknowledgment to a deed by a married woman stated that she was made acquainted with the contents of the conveyance through a sworn interpreter, it was held that it was not necessary to show that the contents were made known to her by the officer himself, such information being imparted by the interpreter in the officer's presence and by his direction. Norton v. Meader, 4 Sawy. (U. S.) 603, 18 Fed. Cas. No. 10,351.

Explanation to deaf and dumb woman.— Where the commissioners certified "that, the said S. H. being deaf and dumb, the nature, purport, and contents of the said deed, previously to her acknowledgment thereof, were fully explained to her in our presence by W. W., being a person accustomed to, and competent to, hold conversation by signs with the said S. H.; and from such explanation and the interpretation thereof to us by the said W. W. we further certify that the said S. H. freely and voluntarily consented to the same," this was held to show that the explanation had been properly communicated. Matter of Harper, 6 M. & G. 732, 733, 7 Scott N. R. 431.

10. Word "husband" used instead of "deed."— Where the certificate of a married woman's acknowledgment was formal in all respects except that it recited that "the contents and meaning of said husband were fully explained and made known to her" instead of using the word "deed" in place of the word "husband," it was held that the meaning of the certificate was clear, notwithstanding the clerical mistake, and that it was sufficient. Calumet, etc., Canal, etc., Co. v. Russell, 68 Ill. 426.

Omission of word "known."— In a certificate of acknowledgment by a married woman, a recital, "the contents of said indenture being first made fully to her," is not rendered fatally defective by omission of the word "known." Hornbeck v. Mutual Bldg., etc., Assoc., 88 Pa. St. 64.

Omission of word "effect."— Under a statute requiring an explanation to the wife of "the contents, meaning the effect," of the instrument, a certificate reciting that "the contents and meaning" were "made known and fully explained to her" was held to be sufficient notwithstanding the omission of the word "effect," that idea being necessarily included in the recital. Nippel v. Hammond, 4 Colo. 211. To same effect see Martin v. Davidson, 3 Bush (Ky.) 572.

Texas — "Fully explained."—Under a statute requiring the instrument to be "fully explained" to the wife, the omission of the word "fully" will not vitiate the certificate. Johnson v. Thompson, (Tex. Civ. App. 1898) 50 S. W. 1055. But a recital, "the said instrument having been fully to her," etc., omitting the word "explained," is fatally defective. Moores v. Linney, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 293, 21 S. W. 709.

No presumption of knowledge.— No presumption arises that the wife knew the contents of the instrument from the fact of her executing it. Pease v. Barbiers, 10 Cal. 436.

requires the explanation to be made on privy examination, a certificate reciting that such explanation was made before the privy examination is insufficient.[12]

(F) Execution of Instrument. It is generally essential to the validity of a certificate of a married woman's acknowledgment that it should recite that she acknowledged the execution of the instrument.[13] But a certificate need not follow the exact language of the statute; a substantial compliance therewith is all that is necessary.[14] Thus a recital that a wife acknowledged "signing" the instrument is usually regarded as a sufficient showing that she acknowledged "executing" it.[15] And so it has been held that the word "executed" is equivalent to the statutory expression "signed, sealed, and delivered."[16]

What not "full explanation."— A statement in the officer's certificate of acknowledgment of a deed by a married woman, that "she was examined and interrogated by me touching the same," is not sufficient under a statute requiring the certificate to state that a "full explanation" of the deed was made to her. Runge v. Sabin, (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 30 S. W. 568.

"Read" instead of "fully explained."— A certificate of acknowledgment of a married woman to a deed, reciting that the deed was "read to her," instead of that it was "fully explained" to her, as required by statute, is fatally defective, rendering the deed void as to her. Watson v. Michael, 21 W. Va. 568.

12. Bollinger v. Manning, 79 Cal. 7, 21 Pac. 375; Beck v. Soward, 76 Cal. 527, 18 Pac. 650; Watson v. Michael, 21 W. Va. 568.

13. Lewis v. Waters, 3 Harr. & M. (Md.) 430; Davis v. McCartney, 64 Tex. 584; Smith v. Elliott, 39 Tex. 201. But see Tod v. Baylor, 4 Leigh (Va.) 498, wherein it was held that where the wife had in fact signed the deed the certificate was not defective because not expressly reciting that fact.

Insufficient recital.—A recital that the wife acknowledged "that she freely and voluntarily relinquished her right of dower" is not sufficient. Sutton v. Pollard, (Ky. 1891) 16 S. W. 126; Miller v. Shackleford, 3 Dana (Ky.) 289.

Kentucky — Subscribed in presence of justices.— In Kentucky, where the acknowledgment is taken in a county other than that in which the land lies, the certificate must show that the instrument was subscribed as well as acknowledged in the presence of the justices. Smith v. White, 1 B. Mon. (Ky.) 16; Taylor v. Bush, 5 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 84; Kay v. Jones, 7 J. J. Marsh (Ky.) 38.

South Carolina — Renunciation of inheritance.— In South Carolina, where the certificate of a married woman's renunciation of inheritance, though regular in other respects, omitted the declaration required by statute "that she did at least seven days before such examination actually join her husband in executing such release," it was held that such omission was fatal. Wingo v. Parker, 19 S. C. 9, 10; McLaurin v. Wilson, 16 S. C. 402; Kottman v. Ayer, 1 Strobh. (S. C.) 552.

"Acknowledged" equivalent to "executed." —In Pickens v. Knisely, 29 W. Va. 1, 11 S. E. 932, 6 Am. St. Rep. 622, it was held that the phrase "willingly acknowledged the same" was a sufficient substitute for "willingly executed the same." Contra, Hayden v. Moffatt, 74 Tex. 647, 12 S. W. 820, 15 Am. St. Rep. 866.

"Seal and acknowledge" equivalent to "seal and deliver."— A recital, in a certificate of a married woman's acknowledgment, that she "did voluntarily, of her own free will and accord, seal and acknowledge" the instrument, instead of "seal and deliver," is sufficient. Jamison v. Jamison, 3 Whart. (Pa.) 457, 31 Am. Dec. 536.

"Sign, seal, and acknowledge."— Under a statute requiring the officer to certify that the wife "declared that she did freely and voluntarily execute and deliver the same to be her act and deed, and consented that the same may be recorded," a recital that she "declared that she did voluntarily sign, seal, and acknowledge the same, and that she is still satisfied therewith," is a substantial compliance. Martin v. Davidson, 3 Bush (Ky.) 572.

Immaterial omissions.— Where a certificate was in proper form except that the word "she" was omitted from the phrase "declared that —— executed the same freely," it was held that the omission did not invalidate the certificate. Johnson v. Thompson, (Tex. Civ. App. 1898) 50 S. W. 1055. See also Rork v. Shields, 16 Tex. Civ. App. 640, 42 S. W. 1032. A certificate reciting that the wife "acknowledged said instrument to be —— act and deed" is not vitiated by the omission of the word "her." Gray v. Kauffman, 82 Tex. 65, 17 S. W. 513.

"Stated" not equivalent to "acknowledged."— Where the statute requires the certificate of a married woman's acknowledgment to recite that she "acknowledged," etc., a substitution of the word "stated" renders the certificate defective, such word not being equivalent to "acknowledged." Dewey v. Campau, 4 Mich. 565.

But in Mississippi it is held that a certificate merely to the effect that she "signed" the deed is defective, and cannot be aided by reference to the words "sealed and delivered" in the husband's acknowledgment. Robinson v Noel, 49 Miss. 253; Toulmin v. Heidelberg, 32 Miss. 268.

16. Smith v. Williams, 38 Miss. 48. But see, contra, Stuart v. Dutton, 39 Ill. 91, in

(G) Purpose or Consideration. Where the statute requires the wife to acknowledge that she executed the instrument for the purpose and consideration therein set forth, it is essential to the validity of the certificate that it should show a substantial compliance with the statute in this respect.[17]

2. Of Certificate of Proof of Execution — a. Substantial Compliance with Statute. Where an instrument is proved for record by a subscribing witness it is not sufficient for the officer to certify in general terms that it was proved. He must state facts sufficient to show that the statute was substantially complied with.[18] But no more is necessary than a substantial compliance with the statutory requirements,[19] and where the meaning is otherwise clear the certificate will not be vitiated by surplusage [20] or mere clerical errors.[21]

b. Recitals as to Identity — (I) Officer's Knowledge of Witness's Identity. Where the execution of an instrument is proved by the testimony of a subscribing witness, the certificate is usually required to show that such witness was personally known to the officer or that his identity was satisfactorily proved to him.[22] which it is held that delivery is subsequent to, and not a part of, the execution of the instrument.

"Signed and sealed" equivalent to "signed, sealed, and delivered."— In the certificate of a married woman's acknowledgment the words "signed and sealed" constitute an equivalent expression for "signed, sealed, and delivered," or "executed." Tubbs v. Gatewood, 26 Ark. 128.

Sufficient acknowledgment.— Where a wife joined in a mortgage with her husband, an acknowledgment by her, as provided by statute, that she executed it "for the purpose of conveying and mortgaging all of my estate in esse and in futuro" in the lands therein described, was held to bar her dower interest. Omission of material matter.— Where the clerk of a court of record certifies the manner in which an instrument was proved, and omits a material circumstance required by law, the certificate is invalid because showing on its face that the instrument was not in fact duly proved. Sufficient showing of official character.— Where a deed executed in another state was attested by two witnesses, one of whom was a commissioner of deeds for the state of Georgia, the fact that he did not describe himself as such when he subscribed his name as a witness is not material, where his official character is set forth in his certificate attached to the deed. Baird v. Evans, 58 Ga. 350.

Sufficient showing of date.— Though the certificate of probate of a deed did not recite that the witness swore that the grantor acknowledged it on the day of its date, yet, as the deed itself bore the date, and the certificate recited that the grantor acknowledged it for the purposes therein contained, the probate was sufficient, under the Tennessee registry act of 1846. Lea v. Polk County Copper Co., 21 How. (U. S.) 493, 16 L. ed. 203.

Vermont — Refusal of grantor to acknowledge.— Vt. Comp. Laws (1824), p. 168, § 7, provides that, in case a grantor refuses to acknowledge an instrument, proof may be made by a subscribing witness before a justice of the peace, upon notice to the grantor. It was held that a certificate of the magistrate stating that proof of execution had been made by a subscribing witness, and that the grantor had appeared by attorney at the examination, is sufficient to entitle the deed to be recorded, without certifying also that the grantor had refused to acknowledge the same. Catlin v. Washburn, 3 Vt. 25.

Erroneous description of witness.— Under the Illinois Conveyance Act, § 20, a certificate of proof of the execution of a deed referred to a certain person as a subscribing witness to the deed, but it appeared that he was not in fact a subscribing witness, but was one of the witnesses by whom the handwriting of the grantors and of the subscribing witnesses was proved. It was held that this was a mere clerical error which would not vitiate the certificate. Skinner v. Fulton, 39 Ill. 484.

But under some statutes such a recital is not necessary. Johnson v. Prewitt, 32 Mo. 553; Hunt v. Johnson, 19 N. Y. 279; Maxwell v. Chapman, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 579; Bradstreet v. Clarke, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 602; Jackson v. Harrow, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 434.

Sufficient certificate.— Under a statute requiring that the officer taking proof of the

But the certificate will be liberally construed and no more than a substantial compliance with the statute is necessary.[23]

(II) Witness's Knowledge of Maker's Identity. Generally there must be a recital that the witness testified that he knew the maker of the instrument.[24]

c. Showing Who Made Proof — (I) Subscribing Witness. It should appear that the person who proved the deed was a subscribing witness;[25] and it has been held that the fact that the name of such person is identical with one appearing in the attestation clause is not sufficient in the absence of a recital that such person was a subscribing witness.[26]

(II) When Subscribing Witness Not Obtainable. Some statutes provide that where the subscribing witnesses are dead or cannot be had, the instrument may be proved by testimony as to the handwriting of such witnesses.[27] execution of a deed shall know or have satisfactory evidence that the person making such proof is a subscribing witness to such deed, conveyance, or writing and that such witness knows the person who executed the same, it was held that a certificate reciting the appearance before the officer of "M. H. S., to me known to be the subscribing witness to the foregoing deed, and who, being by me duly sworn, deposes that he knows J. G., the person described in and who has executed the said deed, and that he saw the said J. G. execute the same," was sufficient. Canandarqua Academy v. McKechnie, 90 N. Y. 618, 621.

Insufficient recital.— Under a statute prescribing that the officer shall ascertain that the person who offers to prove the instrument is a subscribing witness, either from his own knowledge or from the testimony of a credible witness, a bare recital that such person was "known" to the officer is insufficient. Job v. Tebbetts, 9 Ill. 143.

Identity of witness proved by third party. — A commissioner's certificate of the proof of a deed by one of the subscribing witnesses, reciting that said witness appeared before him, "proved to his satisfaction by the oath of J. K. to be the same person," is sufficient to authorize the deed to be read in evidence, though it be not stated that the officer knew J. K. Jackson v. Vickory, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 406, 19 Am. Dec. 522.

An omission to state the residence of the subscribing witness is not material where it sufficiently appears that such witness was known to the officer and knew the person who executed the instrument. Irving v. Campbell, 56 N. Y. Super. Ct. 224, 4 N. Y. Suppl. 103.

23. Sheldon v. Stryker, 27 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 387, 42 Barb. (N. Y.) 284.

Sufficient compliance with statute.—Where a deed showed that the officer taking the certificate was one of the subscribing witnesses, and the certificate of probate recited that the other, to the officer known, came before him, and, being sworn, said that he saw the grantor execute and acknowledge the deed, there is a substantial compliance with the requirements of a statute that the officer certified that he knew affiant to be one of the subscribing witnesses. Carpenter v. Dexter, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 513, 19 L. ed. 426.

24. Jackson v. Gould, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 364; Jackson v. Osborn, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 555, 20 Am. Dec. 649; Harrison v. Wade, 3 Coldw. (Tenn.) 505; Brogan v. Savage, 5 Sneed (Tenn.) 689.

But in New York, prior to 1801, such a recital was not necessary. Hunt v. Johnson, 19 N. Y. 279; Bradstreet v. Clarke, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 602.

Sufficient certificate.— The proof of a deed before a master in chancery, made by the oath of a subscribing witness, who stated that he saw the grantor execute the deed and sincerely believed he was the same person named in the deed, on which the master certified that he was satisfied of the due execution of the deed, was held sufficient to allow the deed, which had been recorded, to be read in evidence. Jackson v. Livingston, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 149.

25. Trammell v. Thurmond, 17 Ark. 203; Harker v. Gustin, 12 N. J. L. 49.

Affidavit signed by different person.— Where, in an affidavit for the probate of a power of attorney before a United States consul, the consul described an individual, naming him, as being the one whose signature was affixed to the annexed deed as a witness, and who was present at the time of execution, but the affidavit was signed by another and different person from the one mentioned therein, it was held to be insufficient to entitle the instrument to record in Georgia. Dodge v. American Freehold Land Mortg. Co., 109 Ga. 394, 34 S. E. 672.

26. Gillett v. Stanley, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 121. Contra, Luffborough v. Parker, 12 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 48.

27. Sufficient showing that witness "cannot be had."—Where a certificate recited that one of the subscribing witnesses had gone to a specified place about forty years before that time and had not since been heard from, it was held sufficient to show that such subscribing witness "could not be had." Skinner v. Fulton, 39 Ill. 484.

Showing acquaintance with subscribing witness.— A statement, in the certificate of proof of an instrument by testimony as to the handwriting of the subscribing witness thereto, that the witness called to prove such handwriting "was well acquainted with" such subscribing witness, is substantially in compliance with the statutory declaration that he "personally knew" him. Delaunay v. Burnett, 9 Ill. 454.

Need not state that witness "competent and credible."— Where a deed is proved by testimony as to the handwriting of the sub-

d. Showing That Witness Was Sworn. A certificate of proof by a subscribing witness should show that such witness was duly sworn.[28]

e. Showing Execution of Instrument. The certificate should show that the witness testified that the party whose name appeared in the instrument signed it, or executed it, or acknowledged that he had done so, or some such language showing that the execution of the instrument was proved by the testimony of the witness in substantial compliance with the statute.[29] Under some statutes the certificate is required to show that the witnesses testified that they subscribed the instrument in the presence of the maker and of each other.[30]

H. Curing Defective Certificate — 1. Correction or Amendment — a. By Officer or Court before Whom Taken. In the absence of statutory authority to the contrary it is held by the weight of authority that where the officer has certified the Insufficient statement.— Under the Illinois act of Feb. 19, 1819, a mere statement that the subscribing witnesses appeared before the officer and acknowledged that the grantor executed the deed in their presence was held to be insufficient. Choteau v. Jones, 11 Ill. 300, 50 Am. Dec. 460.

29. Trammell v. Thurmond, 17 Ark. 203.

In Alabama, the certificate is required to show that the witnesses declared on oath that they saw the grantor sign, seal, and deliver the same to the grantee, and that they subscribed their names, as witnesses thereto, in the presence of the grantor. Hines v. Chancey, 47 Ala. 637; McCaskle v. Amarine, 12 Ala. 17.

Delivery as well as signing.— The affidavit of a subscribing witness, in order to entitle a deed to record, must show that the witness saw the grantor deliver as well as sign it. Doe v. Lewis, 29 Ga. 45.

Error as to maker of instrument.— Where a deed purported to be executed by one M as attorney in fact for G, but the certificate of proof stated that the subscribing witness swore he saw G sign as attorney in fact for M, it was held that the certificate was defective. Cavit v. Archer, 52 Tex. 166.

Attestation and affidavit construed together. — By the attestation clause of a deed it appeared that the same was "signed, sealed, and delivered" in the presence of two witnesses. One of the subscribing witnesses, making affidavit for the purpose of having the deed admitted to record, swore merely that the grantor signed the same and "acknowledged that he did so for the purpose therein mentioned," and that affiant and the other subscribing witness "signed the same as witnesses." Construing this affidavit together with the attestation, it was held that the execution of the deed was sufficiently proved to admit it to record. Jackson v. Haisley, 35 Fla. 587, 17 So. 631.

Tennessee — Substantial compliance with statute.—Under Mill. & V. Tenn. Code, § 2873, requiring the county clerk, on probating a deed, to certify that the subscribing witnesses deposed that the grantor "acknowledged the same in their presence to be his act and deed," a certificate reciting that they "saw" the grantor "sign and acknowledge that he executed" the deed is sufficient. McGuire v. Gallagher, 95 Tenn. 349, 32 S. W. 209.

Texas — Signing at request of grantor.— A recital in a certificate of proof, under the Texas act of 1846, that the witness stated that he saw the person who executed the instrument subscribe the same, is sufficient without a further statement that he signed the same as a witness at the request of such person. The latter recital is necessary only where the witness was not present at the execution of the instrument. Deen v. Wills, 21 Tex. 642; Dorn v. Best, 15 Tex. 62.

Statement in alternative.— Where a certificate recited that the subscribing witness testified that either he saw the grantor execute the instrument, or the grantor requested him to witness the same after its execution, it was held insufficient because in the alternative. Harvey v. Cummings, 68 Tex. 599, 5 S. W. 513; Riley v. Pool, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 346, 24 S. W. 85.

30. Hines v. Chancey, 47 Ala. 637; Dolin v. Gardner, 15 Ala. 758; Brock v. Headen, 13 Ala. 370; Fipps v. McGehee, 5 Port. (Ala.) 413, wherein a certificate was held insufficient which merely recited testimony by the subscribing witness that he saw the instrument signed, sealed, and delivered, for the purposes therein mentioned, and that B and H signed the same, at the time said deed was executed, as witnesses. But in Illinois it is not necessary to state in the certificate of proof of a deed by a subscribing witness that he subscribed his name, as such, in the presence and at the request of the grantor. The proof made by the witness, which is required to be stated in the certificate, has reference to the execution of the deed by the grantor, and not to the subscription of the name of the subscribing witness thereto, as such. Job v. Tebbetts, 9 Ill. 143.

Sufficient showing of presence of witness.— The affidavit of one of two witnesses was that he saw the execution and "saw the other witness sign as witness, that he signed as a witness, and that they signed in the presence of each other." It was held that it sufficiently appeared that the other witness was present at the execution. Green v. Glass, 29 Ga. 246.

acknowledgment, and the instrument has passed from his custody, his powers are exhausted and he cannot thereafter correct the certificate or make a new one without a reacknowledgment by the grantor.[31] But in quite a number of jurisdictions the doctrine obtains that where the acknowledgment has in fact been properly taken a defective certificate thereof may be corrected by the officer at any time while he remains in office.[32] By statute in Tennessee the officer may correct his certificate to conform to the facts,[33] even after he has gone out of office,[34] and the amendment relates back to the execution of the instrument except as against intervening rights of purchasers and creditors.[35]

b. By Judicial Proceeding — (1) Jurisdiction in Equity. A court of equity will not, under pretext of correcting a mistake, make a valid conveyance of a void instrument. And so, in cases where a proper acknowledgment is absolutely essential to the validity of an instrument, equity has no jurisdiction to correct a defective certificate of acknowledgment so as to make it conform to the facts.[36] But where the acknowledgment is not essential to the operative force of the instrument it seems that equity may correct a mistake in the certificate.[37]

(II) Jurisdiction by Statute. Under the statutes of some states, where an acknowledgment has been properly taken but defectively certified, the certificate may be reformed in a proceeding brought for that purpose so as to make it state the facts correctly.[38] But such statutes apply only to cases where the act of taking the acknowledgment has been properly performed and the only defect lies in the certificate.[39] A denial of the allegation that the acknowledgment was properly taken puts upon the party alleging such fact the burden of proving it,[40] and unless it is shown by a preponderance of the evidence the certificate will not be reformed.[41]

Insufficient defense.—Where a bill is brought to review the acknowledgment of a deed, as provided by the Pennsylvania act of May 25, 1878, it is not a sufficient defense that the part of the acknowledgment which is in proper form, and which would not be affected by the proposed correction, is not true in fact. It was not the intention of the act to allow the defendant in such suit to assail that part of his certificate which was good on its face. Cressona Sav. Fund, etc., Assoc. v. Sowers, 134 Pa. Pennsylvania — Suits begun before passage of act.— The Pennsylvania act of May 25, 1878, authorizes the courts to reform defective acknowledgments to deeds, and provides that it shall not apply where "suits have already been commenced" to recover the real estate conveyed by the instrument to which the defective acknowledgment is attached. It was held that the proviso referred to suits begun before the passage of the act, and that a bill for reformation of an acknowledgment to a lease was within the act, though ejectment was brought for the leased property before the filing of the bill but after the passage of the act. b. By Wife after Death of Husband. An instrument executed by husband and wife, which is invalid as to the wife because improperly acknowledged, will, on a reacknowledgment by her after her husband's death, become valid from the time of such reacknowledgment.[46]

3. Curative Statutes — a. In General. From time to time statutes have been passed in various states validating defective acknowledgments[47] and making them operative as prima facie evidence of the due execution of the instrument[48] and as constructive notice to subsequent creditors and purchasers.[49] Under such a statute it has been held that where no rights of third persons have vested in the meantime the instrument is to be regarded as having been properly acknowledged originally.[50] was acknowledged by husband and wife in 1815, but the acknowledgment was defective as to the wife. California — All recorded instruments.— The California act of April 30, 1860, applied to all instruments in writing recorded in the proper books of the proper county, and was not limited to such as, by reason of noncompliance with some provision of the registry act, failed to impart notice. Wallace v. Moody, 26 Cal. 387.

Iowa — Instruments "duly recorded."—The phrase "duly recorded," as used in Iowa Laws (1858), c. 30, § 2, applies to all deeds defectively acknowledged and actually recorded, and is not restricted to those lawfully recorded. b. Constitutionality of Statutes — (I) In General. In the absence of any constitutional prohibition[51] the legislature of a state has the power, by retroactive legislation, to cure defective acknowledgments of instruments so as to make them valid as against the grantors and those claiming under them with no greater equities.[52] Such a statute creates no new title and affects no rights except such as equitably flow from the grantor, but merely provides a new rule of evidence whereby the intention of the parties may be effectuated.[53]

(II) As Regards Vested Rights of Third Persons. Such a statute cannot operate retrospectively so as to interfere with rights of third persons vested at the time of its taking effect.[54] Thus it will not be allowed to affect rights acquired under a judgment or decree rendered before the passage of such act.[55]

(III) Acknowledgments by Married Women. In some states it has been held that a statute attempting to cure a material defect in the acknowledgment of a married woman is unconstitutional, because, a proper acknowledgment being absolutely essential to the operative force of her deed, the effect of such statute, instead of merely establishing a new rule of evidence, is to divest a title

Ohio — Certificate of incorporation.— The Ohio act of March 10, 1859, provides for curing defects in the mode of organizing building associations and correcting defects in the acknowledgment of the certificate of incorporation. Where such instrument was acknowledged before an improper officer, but subsequently the mistake was corrected under this act, it was held that the effect of the correction was to make the association a corporation de jure from the date of its organization, not only as against persons dealing directly with the association, but as against all others. Spinning v. Home Bldg., etc., Assoc., 26 Ohio St. 483.

Two deeds recorded at same instant.— Where two deeds were both recorded on acknowledgments so defective as not to entitle them to record, it was held that a curative statute enacted thereafter had the effect to record both deeds at the same instant of time, and left the operation of the deeds as at common law; and that the first executed passed a title to the land described in it. out of one person and vest it in another.[56] But the weight of authority, if not of reason, is to the effect that defects in acknowledgments of married women may properly be cured by statute, such holding being based on the ground that the statute gives to the acts of the parties merely the effect which they intended, but which, from mistake or accident, was not effected.[57]

c. How Construed. Statutes curing defective acknowledgments, being remedial in their nature, should be liberally construed so as to extend to all cases falling plainly within their spirit and policy.[58]

d. To What Instruments Applicable — (I) Acknowledgments Prior to Passage of Act. While these curative statutes are sometimes not retroactive in their operation,[59] yet as a rule they are intended to apply only to acknowledgments taken prior to their enactment and do not affect those taken thereafter.[60]

(II) Instruments Involved in Pending Suits. Unless it is expressly provided that the statute shall not apply to pending suits[61] it will be held to operate on an instrument involved in a suit which has been commenced, but in which judgment has not been rendered prior to the taking effect of the act.[62]

Dower cannot be divested by statute.—The Illinois act of Feb. 11, 1853, was designed to dispense with the requirements in reference to the statement, in a certificate of acknowledgment by husband and wife, that the wife had relinquished her dower in a conveyance, made after its passage, as well as to bar all claim of dower, where the statement had been omitted in certificates already made before the passage of the act. It was held that while the statute was competent to accomplish the former purpose, yet the latter was not within the legislative power to declare, the right of dower being a vested right of which the wife cannot be divested by legislative enactment, but only by her own voluntary act in the prescribed manner. 61. Second action brought by unsuccessful party.— The Pennsylvania act of May 12, 1891, curing defective acknowledgments of married women, provided "that this act shall not apply to suits now pending." It was held that the statute applied to a second action of ejectment brought under a rule by the unsuccessful party to a former ejectment, which was undetermined at the passage of the act. e. What Defects Cured — (I) In General. As to what defects are cured by such statute is of course a question depending upon the language of the statute.[63] Among those which have been held to be cured by particular statutes may be mentioned a lack of authority in the officer who took the acknowledgment,[64] the absence of a seal,[65] a failure to show the official character of the officer[66] or that the grantor was known to him to be the person executing the instrument.[67] As a rule these statutes will only cure defects in the acknowledgment, and will not supply an entire lack of acknowledgment[68] or remedy defects in the instrument itself.[69] And so, where the acknowledgment is made an essential part of the instrument,[70] it has been held that a curative statute will not remedy a material defect in such acknowledgment.[71]

(II) Acknowledgments Taken Outside State. By many of the curative statutes, defects in acknowledgments taken outside the state are cured.[72] Thus such statutes have been held to remedy a lack of authority on the part of the

63. Omission of matter of substance.—The Illinois act of 1853 was designed to apply to acknowledgments wherein the particulars were defectively set forth, not to those from which a matter of substance was entirely omitted. Tenn. Acts (1846), c. 78, providing that the omission of words from a certificate did not vitiate it provided "the substance of the probate" were contained therein, did not cure a certificate which omitted to state that the officer personally knew the acknowledgor, such statement being of the substance. Fall v. Roper, 3 Head (Tenn.) 485.

Certificate not showing who executed instrument.—The Michigan curative act of 1861 cures defects in the certificate only when it sufficiently appears by the certificate that the person making the same was legally authorized and that the grantor was personally known to him and acknowledged such deed to be his free act, and it will not cure a certificate which lacks a seal and does not show who executed the instrument. Buell v. Irwin, 24 Mich. 145.

Kentucky — Failure of clerk to set forth facts.— The Kentucky act of May 10, 1884, cured a certificate defective because of a failure on the part of the clerk to set forth the facts and include the indorsement made on the instrument by the deputy. Ralston v. Moore, 83 Ky. 571.

Acknowledgment by one only of two attorneys.— The acts of Congress of April 20, 1838, and March 3, 1865, cured an acknowledgment defective because executed by only one of two persons who were given a power of attorney to make such acknowledgment. Hevner v. Matthews, 4 App. Cas. (D. C.) 380.

officer who took the acknowledgment,[73] or the absence of a seal,[74] or of a further certificate of authenticity.[75] But a curative act passed in the state in which the acknowledgment is taken cannot operate to cure defects therein so as to make it valid in the state wherein the land lies.[76]

XIII. Further Certificate of Authenticity and Conformity.

A. Where Acknowledgment Taken Outside State — 1. Necessity for. Under statutes providing for the acknowledgment of instruments in other states it is usually necessary that the authority of the officer who took the acknowledgment be shown,[77] and where the statute recognizes the validity of acknowledgments conforming to the laws of the state in which taken, it must be shown that the officer was authorized by such laws to take the acknowledgment,[78] and that it was taken in accordance therewith.[79] To show these facts, provision is usually made for a further certificate by some specified person authenticating the signature and official character of the officer who took the acknowledgment and the manner in which it was taken; and where this is prescribed, an acknowledgment not so authenticated is of no effect.[80] But where the statute contains no provision requiring such a certificate none is necessary,[81] and the statement of the officer's official character in the certificate of acknowledgment will constitute prima facie evidence of that fact.[82]

2. Who May Make. No one can make such certificate except an officer authorized to do so by the laws of the state in which the land lies.[83] Authority to a clerk of court to make the certificate extends to his deputy where the act is considered as ministerial.[84]

3. Sufficiency of — a. In General. The certificate must show on its face, and without the aid of extrinsic proof, all the material matters required by the statute.[85] But no more than a substantial compliance with the statute is required, and technical or unsubstantial objections will not be allowed to defeat it.[86]

b. Necessity for Seal. Usually such certificate is required to be under seal,[87] and it has been held that the use of a scroll or private seal instead of the official seal will render the certificate defective.[88]

c. Showing Authority of Officer to Make Certificate. The certificate of authenticity should show on its face that the person who made it was authorized by law to do so.[89]

"Chief of the Cherokee Nation."— The certificate of the "Chief of the Cherokee Nation," under its great seal, that the judge before whom the acknowledgment was made was the officer he described himself to be, complies with Battle's Rev. N. C., c. 35, § 8, requiring the certificate of authenticity to be made by the "governor of the state or territory." Whitsett v. Forehand, 79 N. C. 230.

Indiana — Secretary of state not authorized. — Where a deed for land lying in Indiana was executed out of the state and acknowledged before a justice of the peace, it was held that under the Indiana statute the clerk of the county, and not the secretary of state, should certify as to the authority of the justice. Presumption that authentication in usual manner.— Where a Virginia deed bore a certificate of acknowledgment signed by two justices of a Pennsylvania court, accompanied by the certificate of a prothonotary that the signers of the first certificate were in fact such justices and entitled to full credit as such, the fact that the prothonotary's certificate was under his seal as such was sufficient to raise a presumption that the certification was "in the manner such acts are usually authenticated by them," as required by the Virginia statute. Failure to show that court one "of record." — Under a statute providing that the certificate of authentication may be made by "any clerk of a court of record within such state," and that it should be under the seal of such court, a certificate purporting to be by the "clerk of the county," and attested by the

d. Showing Authority of Officer Who Took Acknowledgment. The certificate is usually required to show that the officer before whom the acknowledgment was taken was duly authorized to take it.[90] Thus it is not sufficient to state that the acknowledgment was taken before a notary public duly commissioned and sworn, there being no presumption that a notary has the power to take acknowledgments under the laws of another state.[91] And it must appear that the authority of the officer existed at the time the acknowledgment was taken.[92]

e. Showing Genuineness of Signature. The statutes usually require the certificate to state that the person making it is acquainted with the handwriting of the officer who took the acknowledgment[93] and believes his signature to be genuine.[94]

"seal of the county," is not in compliance with the statute. Shephard v. Carriel, 19 Ill. 313, 319. But in Grand Tower Min., etc., Co. v. Gill, 111 Ill. 541, it was held that under a statute requiring the certificate to be made by "the proper clerk" it was not necessary for the clerk to show that he was the clerk of a court of record.

Judicial notice that court one of record.— In Michigan it is held that judicial notice may be taken of the fact that a court of a sister state is one of record, so as to sustain a certificate of authenticity by the clerk of such court which fails to show that it is a court of record. Morse v. Hewett, 28 Mich. 481; Shotwell v. Harrison, 22 Mich. 410.

Commissioner for another state.— Where a deed to lands lying in Illinois was acknowledged in Pennsylvania, and the certificate of authenticity showed that the acknowledgment was taken before a commissioner of deeds for New York, it was held that the instrument was not entitled to record in Illinois. Lyon v. Kain, 36 Ill. 362.

Georgia — Judge of court of record.—Under the section of the code requiring a deed executed in another state to be attested by, inter alios, a judge of a court of record, with a certificate of the clerk as to the genuineness of the judge's signature, the clerk's certificate must show that the judge is a judge of a court of record. MacKenzie v. Jackson, 82 Ga. 80, 8 S. E. 77.

Pennsylvania — Chief officer of place where taken.— Under a statute authorizing the taking of acknowledgments by the chief magistrate or officer of the place where taken, a certificate of authenticity to an instrument acknowledged before a justice of the peace is insufficient which fails to show that such justice was the chief officer of the place. Cassell v. Cooke, 8 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 268, 11 Am. Dec. 610; Rhoades v. Selin, 4 Wash. (U. S.) 715, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11,740. But a certificate stating that the persons who took the acknowledgment were justices of the peace, and that there were no magistrates superior to them in the county, was held to be sufficient. McIntire v. Ward, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 296, 6 Am. Dec. 417.

Sufficient showing of authority.— A certificate of acknowledgment of a deed headed "State of Maryland to wit," recited that the grantor personally appeared "before us, two justices of the peace of the State of Maryland for Washington County." The clerk of the county court certified, under the heading, "State of Maryland, Washington County, ss:." that the persons "whose names are signed to the above acknowledgment were, at the time of signing thereof, and still are, justices of the peace for the county aforesaid, duly commissioned and qualified, and to all their acts as such full faith and credit is and ought to be given, as well in courts of justice as thereout." It was held that the two certificates, taken together, sufficiently showed that the justices had been sworn into office and were justices of the county for which they took the acknowledgment. Deery v. Cray, 5 Wall. (U. S.) 795, 800, 18 L. ed. 653.

91. Brown v. Stilwell, 1 N. Y. St. 132.

App. 465, wherein it was held that a certificate of a clerk of court that a certain person "is" a commissioner duly authorized to take proof and acknowledgment of deeds was not sufficient to show that he was such commissioner on the day preceding, when the acknowledgment was taken.

Sufficient recital.— A certificate that the justices "before whom the annexed acknowledgment was made, and who have thereto subscribed their names, were, at the time of so doing," justices duly commissioned and sworn, was held to be sufficient, the words "were at the time of so doing" relating as well to the act of acknowledgment as to the signing of the certificate by the justices. Warner v. Hardy, 6 Md. 525.

93. Irwin v. Welch, 10 Nebr. 479, 6 N. W. 753; Brown v. Stilwell, 1 N. Y. St. 132. But in Wells v. Atkinson, 24 Minn. 161, 165, where the certificate by the clerk stated that "the signature attached to the annexed instrument is genuine," it was held that this necessarily implied the clerk's knowledge of the handwriting of the officer and his belief in its genuineness.

94. Irwin v. Welch, 10 Nebr. 479, 6 N. W. 753.

In Georgia he must certify positively that the signature is genuine, and it is not sufficient to state that he "believes" it to be so. MacKenzie v. Jackson, 82 Ga. 80, 8 S. E. 77.

f. Showing Conformity with Laws of State Where Taken. Where the statutes of the state in which the land lies allow the acknowledgment to be in accordance with the laws of the state where taken, the certificate must state that such laws were complied with in taking the acknowledgment.[95] A certificate proper in this regard is conclusive of any question as to the form of the acknowledgment.[96]

B. Where Acknowledgment Taken in Other County — 1. Necessity for. Under some statutes, where an acknowledgment is taken in a county other than that in which the land lies, a further certificate of authenticity is required in order to entitle the instrument to registration in the latter county.[97] The registration of an instrument without such certificate is of no effect and becomes operative only from the time the certificate is filed.[98]

2. Sufficiency of. A substantial compliance with the statute is sufficient, and the certificate will not be vitiated by technical defects.[99]

XIV. Admissibility of Evidence in Aid of Certificate.

A. To Remedy Material Defects. It is the general rule that the official certificate is the only competent evidence of the fact of acknowledgment; and where such certificate is defective in a matter of substance, evidence aliunde is not admissible to show that the statute was in fact complied with, and that the officer, through mistake, failed to certify the acknowledgment correctly.[1] If such "Existing" law of the state.— Where the certificate of authenticity was made and attached several years after the acknowledgment of the instrument, and in it the officer certified that the instrument was executed and acknowledged according to the "existing" law of the state, it was held that this would be taken to mean the law existing at the time of the acknowledgment, and the certificate would be upheld. Under the New York Act of 1830 an instrument acknowledged before a county court judge not of the degree of counselor at law in the supreme court, or before any commissioner of deeds or notary public, could not be recorded or read in evidence in another county without a further certificate of authenticity by the clerk of his county. Wood v. Weiant, 1 N. Y. 77; Campbell v. Hoyt, 23 Barb. (N. Y.) 555; Utica, etc., R. Co. v. Stewart, 33 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 312; Smith v. Smeltzer, 4 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 469, 1 Hilt. (N. Y.) 287. But an acknowledgment taken by a county judge of the degree of counselor at law in the supreme court did not require such authentication. People v. Hurlbutt, 44 Barb. (N. Y.) 126; Jackson v. Phillips, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 94; Jackson v. Chapin, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 485. The statute was held not to affect an acknowledgment taken prior to its enactment. Hunt v. Johnson, 19 N. Y. 279.

Indiana — Acknowledgment taken by notary.— Under Ind. Rev. Stat. 1838, pp. 420, 421, a notary's certificate and seal required no support by the attestation and seal of the clerk of the circuit court where he had taken an acknowledgment of a conveyance of lands lying without his county. Omission to state name and official character of officer.— The omission of the county clerk's certificate to state the name and official character of the officer who took the acknowledgment may be supplied from the certificate of acknowledgment. Thorn v. Mayer, 12 Misc. (N. Y.) 487, 33 N. Y. Suppl. 664.

The absence of a date from the clerk's certificate of authenticity does not vitiate it where there is no statute requiring a date. Thorn v. Mayer, 12 Misc. (N. Y.) 487, 33 N. Y. Suppl. 664.

Absence of seal from record.— The mere absence, from the record of a deed, of the seal of the county clerk to his certificate of authenticity does not vitiate it, notwithstanding the statute requires the certificate to be under seal as a condition of allowing the record of such deed to be admitted in evidence; the presumption that the clerk performed his duty, with a recital in the certificate that the seal was attached, being sufficient evidence thereof. evidence were allowed to supply a material part of the certificate, then logically it would be admissible to supply an entire certificate, and the acknowledgment might therefore rest in parol.[2] Thus it has been held that parol evidence is not admissible to show who made the acknowledgment[3] or to remedy an omission to state that the acknowledgor was known to the officer.[4] And so it cannot be shown by parol in support of a defective certificate of a married woman's acknowledgment that she was in fact privately examined as required by the statute,[5] or that the instrument was explained to her,[6] or that she acknowledged having executed it voluntarily.[7]

B. To Remedy Unsubstantial Objections. But parol evidence is admissible to supply matters not deemed to be of the substance of the certificate,[8] and in cases where it is not admissible to validate the acknowledgment such evidence will sometimes be admitted for other purposes.[9]

C. To Show Officer's Authority. The admissibility of extrinsic evidence to show the official character of the person who took the acknowledgment depends upon whether or not the statute requires such fact to be shown by the certificate.[10] If there is such a requirement, evidence cannot be admitted to supply the omission;[11] but where the official character is not required to appear from the certificate, the officer's authority to take acknowledgments may be shown by parol.[12]

The court attempted to distinguish the foregoing cases.

California — Release from liability for breach of promise.— The certificate of acknowledgment or proof of a receipt and release from liability for breach of promise of marriage, taken before a notary public, is, under Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 1948, only prima facie evidence of the execution of the writing; and plaintiff in an action for such breach may, by her own testimony, controvert the facts therein contained, under Code Civ. Fraud or mistake.— Under Ky. Gen. Stat. c. 81, § 17, a certificate is, except in a direct proceeding against the officer or his sureties, impeachable only for fraud infecting the party benefited or mistake on the part of the officer. Keith v. Silberberg, (Ky. 1895) 29 S. W. 316; Shaw v. Shaw, (Ky. 1894) 24 S. W. 630; Davis v. Jenkins, 93 Ky. 353, 20 S. W. 283, 40 Am. St. Rep. 197; Razor v. Dowan, (Ky. 1890) 13 S. Under an earlier statute, however, the certificate was merely prima facie evidence, and extraadmissible the pleading must contain allegations showing such fraud or imposition.[16] Thus, where the certificate of a married woman's acknowledgment is in the form prescribed by statute, it is not sufficient, in order to impeach it, to allege that she was not privately examined, or that the instrument was not explained to her, or that she did not release her homestead right: there must be some allegation of fraud or imposition practised upon her, some fraudulent combination between the parties interested and the officer who took the acknowledgment.[17]

(III) Impeachment for Fraud or Imposition—(A) As to Persons With Notice. As between the immediate parties to a conveyance, evidence is admissible to impeach the certificate for fraud, duress, or imposition in which the grantee participated or of which he had notice before parting with his money.[18] Where neous evidence was admissible to show that its recitals were untrue. Hughes v. Coleman, 10 Bush (Ky.) 246; Woodhead v. Foulds, 7 Bush (Ky.) 222; Ford v. Teal, 7 Bush (Ky.) 156.

What constitutes "mistake."— That the officer did not in fact take the acknowledgment in the manner certified does not constitute a "mistake" within the meaning of Ky. Gen. Stat. c. 81, § 17, being a mere failure of the officer to do his duty. Tichenor v. Yankey, 89 Ky. 508, 12 S. W. 947; Cox v. Gill, 83 Ky. 669.

Acknowledgment taken through telephone. — Evidence that a married woman's acknowledgment was taken by a notary through a telephone when she was three miles distant is not admissible to dispute the official certificate of the notary in due form, in the absence of any allegations of fraud, duress, or mistake. Banning v. Banning, 80 Cal. 271, 22 Pac. 210, 13 Am. St. Rep. 156.

Acknowledgment taken by interpreter.— Where the deed was explained to the married woman through the medium of an interpreter selected by herself, it was held that she could not be heard to impeach the certificate on the ground that such interpreter was incompetent or corrupt or had failed to interpret correctly. Acknowledgment in open court by county treasurer.— Parol evidence is not admissible to contradict the record of an acknowledgment made in open court by a county treasurer. Duff v. Wynkoop, 74 Pa. St. 300.

Acknowledgment of sheriff's deed.— Parol evidence is not admissible to show that the sheriff's acknowledgment of a deed had been fraudulently altered by the prothonotary's clerk. Hoffman v. Coster, 2 Whart. (Pa.) 453.

When not a question for jury.— In the absence of evidence tending to impeach the genuineness of the certificate it should not be left to the jury to determine whether the instrument was executed and acknowledged in the manner certified. Hultz v. Ackley, 63 Pa. St. 142. The sufficiency of the acknowledgment is a question for the court. Bullock v. Narrott, 49 Ill. 62.

Objection to admission must be taken at trial.— The objection that parol testimony was inadmissible to impeach a certificate of acknowledgment cannot be raised for the first time on appeal. Le Mesnager v. Hamilton, 101 Cal. 532, 35 Pac. 1054, 40 Am. St. Rep. 81.

Where no innocent purchasers have intervened.— The certificate of a magistrate to the acknowledgment of a deed to her separate estate by a married woman to her husband will not avail, where innocent purchasers have not intervened, to prevent her heir from avoiding the deed on the ground of undue influence on the part of the husband. Darlington's Appeal, 86 Pa. St. 512, 27 Am. Rep. 726.

Where the agent of the mortgagee conspired with the husband to coerce the wife the grantee has knowledge of circumstances such as would put an honest man on inquiry as to the manner in which the acknowledgment was obtained, but wilfully shuts his eyes so that he may not see any fraudulent element in the transaction, he will be affected with notice of the fraud as much as if he had joined in it.[19]

(B) As to Persons Without Notice. As against an innocent party who, relying on the certificate, has in good faith parted with an adequate consideration, without knowing or having any reason to believe that such certificate is false, parol evidence is not admissible even to show fraud, duress, or imposition in the procurement of the acknowledgment.[20] A purchaser is not obliged to see that the officer does his duty in taking the grantor's acknowledgment: he is required only to act fairly in the transaction and not to take advantage knowingly of the fraudulent conduct of others.[21] And so, where a purchaser has in good faith relied on a certificate of a married woman's acknowledgment, regular on its face, into executing a mortgage on her separate estate it was held that evidence of such facts was admissible to impeach the certificate. Wiley v. Prince, 21 Tex. 637.

Husband as agent of mortgagee.— A married woman's right to avoid a mortgage because of duress is not impaired, nor is the mortgagee's right to set the mortgage up as valid strengthened, because the mortgagee personally took no part in procuring its execution, but its execution was obtained by the husband to secure his debt to the mortgagee; the husband being deemed the agent of the mortgagee. Missouri — Limitation of doctrine.— In Springfield Engine, etc., Co. v. Donovan, 147 Mo. 622, 49 S. W. 500, it was held that a married woman who, at the time her acknowledgment was taken, declared to the officer that she was acting freely and voluntarily, could not show, as against an innocent purchaser for value, that she was coerced by her husband into executing the deed. This case would seem to modify the rule established by a long line of decisions in Missouri to the effect that a certificate is only prima facie evidence of the facts recited. See cases cited supra, XV, A, 1, a, (I).

21. Pierce v. Fort, 60 Tex. 464.

Adequacy of consideration.— Unless the consideration for the conveyance is so grossly inadequate and unreasonable as to excite suspicion of unfairness and undue influence and put the purchaser on inquiry, the certificate cannot be impeached for fraud of which the purchaser has no notice. Webb v. Burney, 70 Tex. 322, 7 S. W. 841.

she cannot avoid her deed by showing fraud or coercion on the part of her husband,[22] or misconduct on the part of the officer who took the acknowledgment.[23]

(IV) Impeachment for Lack of Jurisdiction. An acknowledgment taken by an officer outside his jurisdiction is usually held to be void,[24] and where this is the case the lack of jurisdiction may be shown by parol even against an innocent purchaser, though it appears on the face of the certificate that such acknowledgment was taken inside the officer's jurisdictional limits.[25]

b. As to Facts Which Officer Not Required to Certify — (I) In General. A certificate of acknowledgment is not conclusive as to matters regarding which the officer is not required by law to certify.[26]

(II) Mental Incapacity of Grantor. Therefore it may be shown by parol that the grantor was mentally incapable of contracting at the time the acknowledgment was made.[27]

(III) Infancy of Grantor. And so it has been held that a statement, in the certificate of a married woman's acknowledgment, that she was of full age when the acknowledgment was taken, may be impeached by evidence showing that in fact she was a minor.[28]

2. Where No Acknowledgment Ever Made. Where, in fact, the grantor has never appeared before the officer and acknowledged the instrument, evidence to show that the certificate, though regular on its face, is a forgery or an entire fabrication of the officer, is admissible even as against an innocent purchaser for value and without notice.[29] A simple denial that the alleged grantor ever made

certificate cannot be overcome by loose and inconclusive evidence merely creating a doubt as to the truth of the certificate[34] or contradicting it by implication only,[35] and where the evidence is conflicting the certificate will be upheld.[36]

b. Testimony of Interested Witnesses — (1) In General. The testimony of parties to the suit, while carefully scrutinized, is admissible to impeach the certificate and is entitled to the same weight as that of any other interested witness.[37] But the testimony of interested witnesses unsupported by other positive and credible evidence will usually not be allowed to overcome the certificate.[38] Thus it has been held that the certificate of a married woman's acknowledgment, regular in form, will be sustained against the testimony of the husband,[39] up that crying, and go write your name," unaccompanied by threats or personal violence or any attempt to exercise it, does not show duress so as to render an acknowledgment of a mortgage on the homestead thus obtained invalid, as procured by threats of personal violence in the presence of the mortgagee. Gabbey v. Forgeus, 38 Kan. 62, 15 Pac. 866.

The testimony of one witness is not sufficient to overcome the presumption, arising from the certificate of an official, that a mortgage was properly acknowledged by the mortgagor's wife. Warrick v. Hull, 102 Ill. 280.

Self-contradicting testimony of one witness.— Where the only evidence of fraud in the procurement of a mortgage eight years before, to secure a debt of the mortgagor's son, is the testimony of the mortgagor's grandson, then eight years old, which testimony is self-contradicting, as to whether the mortgagor understood what she was about to sign, it is insufficient to overcome the notary's certificate of acknowledgment. Lewars v. Weaver, 121 Pa. St. 268, 15 Atl. 514.

Testimony as to grantor's signature.— Testimony that the signature to the instrument is not in the grantor's handwriting is not sufficient to overcome the certificate. Kerr v. Russell, 69 Ill. 666, 18 Am. Rep. 634; Tunison v. Chamblin, 88 Ill. 378.

As to the adoption of the signature by acknowledging the instrument see supra, IV, C, 2.

Cross-examination of grantor.— Where a married woman testifies, in contradiction to the certificate of her acknowledgment, as to what occurred before the officer, she may properly be cross-examined in reference to all that occurred at that time. Drew v. Arnold, 85 Mo. 128.

Testimony as to who accompanied officer. — In an action to enjoin the sale of property under a trust deed the validity of which is attacked on the ground that it was not acknowledged by the wife, testimony as to who accompanied the notary who certified to the acknowledgment at the time it was taken is competent. Inability of grantor and officer to recollect transaction.— A certificate of acknowledgment containing all the statutory requirements cannot be affected by the fact that neither the grantor nor the officer has any recollection of the transaction. Tooker v. Sloan, 30 N. J. Eq. 394.

35. Bird v. Adams, 56 Iowa 292, 9 N. W. 224, wherein the evidence tended to show that the grantor was not in the county on the date given in the certificate.

36. Young v. Duvall, 109 U. S. 573, 3 S. Ct. 414, 27 L. ed. 1036.

Conflict as to presence of grantor.— Where the evidence to show that a person signing a mortgage was not at a certain place at the time the acknowledgment purports to have been made is about balanced by evidence that she was at such place at the particular time, and such person and her husband testify that she did not acknowledge the instrument, while two disinterested witnesses testify that she did, the evidence is insufficient to impeach the certificate of acknowledgment. Phillips v. Bishop, 35 Nebr. 487, 53 N. W. 375 [reversing 31 Nebr. 853, 48 N. W. 1106].

37. Barnett v. Proskauer, 62 Ala. 486.

38. Rogers v. Pell, 154 N. Y. 518, 49 N. E. 75. In Pierce v. Feagans, 39 Fed. 587, the testimony of a disinterested witness, corroborating that of the interested parties, but positively contradicted by the officer who took the acknowledgment, was held to be insufficient to overcome the certificate.

Where supported by officer's testimony.— A jury have a right to believe a certificate that a married woman had properly acknowledged a deed, against the evidence of both the woman and the notary, given eight years after the acknowledgment, and a finding in favor of the certificate in such case will not be set aside on appeal. Riecke v. Westenhoff, 10 Mo. App. 358.

Question for jury.—Where both the grantor and the officer testified that the certificate was false, a decision by the trial judge that this was conclusive against the validity of the acknowledgment was held to be erroneous, the question being one for the jury. Heeter v. Glasgow, 79 Pa. St. 79, 21 Am. Rep. 46.

39. Huffnagle v. Etter, 2 Pearson (Pa.) 350. Shell v. Holston Nat. Bldg., etc., Assoc., (Tenn. Ch. 1899) 52 S. W. 909, wherein testimony of the husband that he used every means known to him to procure his wife's acknowledgment was held to be too general to show duress.

Supported by testimony of two interested witnesses.— The certificate of a married woman's acknowledgment is not overcome by the testimony of the husband, on recollection, thirty-two years thereafter, that she was not or of both husband and wife,[40] especially where such testimony is contradicted by other evidence.[41]

(II) Unsupported Testimony of Grantor. It is very generally held that the testimony of the grantor unsupported and uncorroborated is not sufficient to overcome a certificate regular on its face,[42] especially where the certificate is sup-present when the deed was executed by him, and testimony of two interested persons that the signature did not resemble her handwriting. Sassenberg v. Huseman, 182 Ill. 341, 55 N. E. 346.

40. Grotenkemper v. Carver, 9 Lea (Tenn.) 280.

Testimony of doubtful credibility.— After twenty-four years the certificate of two justices of the peace, who have since died, to the acknowledgment of a deed by a husband and wife, should prevail over the wife's doubtfully made assertion that she never heard of the deed, and the husband's testimony that he signed his wife's name and that they never acknowledged the instrument, he being of doubtful credibility. Hammond v. Hopkins, 143 U. S. 224, 12 S. Ct. 418, 36 L. ed. 134.

Corroborated by one other witness.— The testimony of a wife that she neither signed nor acknowledged the instrument in question, corroborated only by evidence from one witness, acquainted with her signature, to the effect that it was forged, and from her husband that he does not know whether she acknowledged it or not, is insufficient to overcome the presumption that the officer's certificate is true. Blackman v. Hawks, 89 Ill. 512. In an action in which the issue was whether the wife was separately examined by the notary who took her acknowledgment she and her husband testified that they were both in the room together; that the notary asked the husband if the wife understood the instrument, and, on his reply that she did, made her sign the deed by her mark. A neighbor testified that she went with the husband and wife to the notary's office and stopped at the door; that the husband and wife went into the office together, and the wife came out first; and that the husband was in the office when the wife was. She did not identify the deed in question and testified that she did not know whether the notary was in the office or not, and also that she thought she heard a man they called the notary ask the husband if the wife understood the matter. It was held that this was insufficient to impeach the certificate made nearly three years before the trial, and regular in form. Thompson v. Southern Bldg., etc., Assoc., (Tenn. Ch. 1896) 37 S. W. 704.

41. Smith v. McGuire, 67 Ala. 34.

Contradicted by testimony of officer.—The testimony of a husband and wife that the latter, who was unable to read or write, affixed her mark to a mortgage of land, the title to which was in her name, in ignorance of its contents, and that the wife was not privily examined, is insufficient to entitle her to have it canceled, where she practically admits its execution by her husband and it appears that it was prepared by a justice of the peace and commissioner of deeds, in whose hands a debt owed by the husband was placed to be collected or secured, while they were at his office, and the officer testifies that he either read the mortgage to the wife or explained it to her, and that she acknowledged it while her husband was absent from the room. Where grantor admits signing instrument. — Public policy requires a certificate of acknowledgment, if in proper form, to prevail over the unsupported evidence of the grantor, and especially is this true where the grantor admits signing the instrument. Gray v. Law, (Ida. 1899) 57 Pac. 435.

Where officer dead.— Where a magistrate who certified to an acknowledgment is dead, and he was of good character, the certificate cannot be impeached, a quarter of a century

ported by the testimony of the officer who took the acknowledgment,[43] or by other competent evidence.[44]

c. Testimony of Officer. The testimony of the officer who took an acknowledgment is admissible in support of his certificate when its truth is attacked.[45] But it has been held in several jurisdictions that the officer is not a competent witness to contradict or impeach his certificate.[46] In other jurisdictions, however, such testimony is held admissible,[47] and in a case where the officer was a bene-thereafter, by the grantor alone, who testified that the conveyance was not explained to her by the magistrate. Earle v. Chace, 12 R. I. 374.

Mere want of recollection of signing and acknowledging the execution of a deed should have but little weight against the certificate of the officer that such execution was duly acknowledged. Morris v. Sargent, 18 Iowa 90.

44. Proof of signatures.— Where, after the death of an alleged mortgagee, the signature was denied by the alleged mortgagor, but the subscribing witnesses identified their signatures, and the signature of the notary was established by several witnesses, it was held that the genuineness of the mortgage was not disproved. Cameron v. Culkins, 44 Mich. 531, 7 N. W. 157.

Evidence of grantor's connection with transaction.— A mortgage purported to be signed by the wife by making her mark, and the certificate of acknowledgment was in due form; but she denied the execution and testified that the justice, with whom she was well acquainted, called at her house and signed her name to the mortgage, and executed the certificate in her presence, but without addressing her or asking her consent. There was evidence that she had taken part in the negotiation for the loan, and she admitted being present with her husband when the money was obtained. It was held that the evidence was not sufficient to impeach the execution of the mortgage. Mather v. Jarel, 33 Fed. 366.

Showing grantor's knowledge of instrument.— A widower, who was about to marry again, conveyed to his three children, in consideration of love and affection, land worth $10,000 subject to a life-estate in himself and the payment of $1,000 to his intended wife on his death. He afterward duly acknowledged the deed, and a certified copy of it was sent to his intended wife. In a suit brought by him to set aside the deed on the ground of fraud, he testified that he signed and acknowledged the deed supposing it to be a will. The three children and one other witness swore that he read the deed and knew what it was when he signed it. It was held that the evidence did not warrant a decree for the complainant. Oliphant v. Liversidge, 142 Ill. 160, 30 N. E. 334.

Where original deed lost.—A widow brought an action for dower, denying that she ever joined with her husband in acknowledging the deed of trust under which defendant held. Defendant, after showing that diligent search had been made for the original deed and that it could not be found, the record having been burned, introduced an abstract of title showing that the deed as recorded had her name to it; also testimony that the form of deed used was one which had the statutory acknowledgment for both husband and wife. The trustee testified that he would not have made the sale unless the deed had been acknowledged in the usual mode, and it was shown that he was familiar with such business. It was held that, twenty-eight years having elapsed, such evidence was sufficient to overcome the denial of the plaintiff that she ever acknowledged the deed. Berdel v. Egan, 125 Ill. 298, 17 N. Harmless error in admitting testimony.— Where the officer's testimony tended as much to sustain as to impeach his certificate it was held that the error in admitting the testimony was harmless. Shapleigh v. Hull, 21 Colo. 419, 41 Pac. 1108.

To show that acknowledgment not taken by him.— In New York, etc., Land Co. v. Weidner, 169 Pa. St. 359, 32 Atl. 557, the deposition of the officer was held to be inadmissible to show that he did not take the acknowledgment.

Oral declarations of officer.— Oral declarations out of court, by the officer who took the acknowledgment, are not admissible to impeach his certificate (Allen v. Lenoir, 53 Miss. 321), but they may be admitted to impeach his testimony where he has testified in support of his certificate (Kranichfelt v. Slattery, 12 Misc. (N. Y.) 96, 33 N. Y. Suppl. 27).

47. McCurley v. Pitner, 65 Ill. App. 17; Mays v. Pryce, 95 Mo. 603, 8 S. W. 731; Garth v. Fort, 15 Lea (Tenn.) 683.

As between parties or their privies.— As between the parties to a deed or their privies, public policy does not make the justice who took the acknowledgment incompetent to impeach his certificate by showing that he knew a tract was fraudulently included in the deed, and that he took the acknowledgment without saying anything to the parties defrauded. Davis v. Monroe, 187 Pa. St. 212, 41 Atl. 44.

ficiary under the instrument he was allowed to testify that through ignorance on his part the acknowledgment was defectively taken, on the ground that such testimony was against his own interest.[48] But the officer's testimony in contradiction of his certificate is not ordinarily entitled to much weight,[49] and a mere inability to remember incidents connected with the transaction is not sufficient to overcome the recitals of the certificate.[50]

d. When Certificate Overcome. Where, after making all proper allowances for the official knowledge and fidelity of the officer, and giving proper effect to the legal presumption that he did his duty, it appears from a clear and decided preponderance of the evidence that the certificate is false or fraudulent, it will be declared invalid.[51]

XVI. Declaring on Instrument.

A. Necessity to Allege Acknowledgment. Where the acknowledgment is not an essential part of an instrument, a pleading which declares on such instrument, alleging its due execution, is not insufficient on demurrer because failing to allege that it was acknowledged.[52] But where, as in the case of a

To prove legal incapacity of grantor.— A magistrate who certifies that the grantor in a deed acknowledged the same to be his voluntary act is not precluded from testifying to the legal incapacity of the grantor. Truman v. Lore, 14 Ohio St. 144.

As to surrounding circumstances.—An officer who certifies that the grantors in a deed personally appeared before him and acknowledged the execution thereof is a competent witness to testify to the circumstances surrounding such execution and acknowledgment, notwithstanding the testimony may tend to show that the execution of the deed was obtained by duress or undue influence. Denial that seal was affixed.— A mortgage bore the notarial seal and signature of S. S., but S. S. testified that, to the best of his recollection, he never affixed his seal to it, and that he believed himself to have been the only S. S., notary, in Cincinnati. It was held that the seal prima facie proved itself, and that the presumption in favor of the deed was not rebutted. Wright v. Bundy, 11 Ind. 398.

50. Morris v. Sargent, 18 Iowa 90.

Uncertainty as to identity of grantor.— Where the officer testified that he was not certain that the person in whose name a deed was executed was the same whose acknowledgment he took, and that he thought acknowledgor was a smaller person, it was held not to be sufficient to overcome his certificate made at the time, especially where possession had been immediately afterward delivered to the grantee without objection. Sisters of Loretto v. Catholic Bishop, 86 Ill. 171.

No recollection of married woman's examination.—Where, after the death of one of the justices who took a married woman's acknowledgment, the other, an old man of seventy-three, gave evidence that he did not recollect and did not believe that the wife was examined as the certificate stated, the court gave credit to the certificate notwithstanding the evidence. Wiley v. Prince, 21 Tex. 637, wherein it was shown that a married woman was induced to execute a mortgage by the threats and violence of the husband, the agent of the grantor conspiring with the husband.

Testimony corroborated by three witnesses. — Testimony of a married woman that she never acknowledged a certain trust deed, that she was not able to read, that her husband brought her a paper and she then made her mark, and that no one asked her anything about it, was sufficient to overcome the certificate of acknowledgment, where it was fully corroborated by the testimony of her husband and three disinterested witnesses. Lowell v. Wren, 80 Ill. 238.

Evidence of five witnesses, two of whom were physicians, that on the day an acknowledgment to a deed is alleged to have been taken the grantor was sick in bed and was subjected to a surgical operation, is sufficient to contradict the certificate of acknowledgment. Paxton v. Marshall, 18 Fed. 361.

Showing lack of authority in officer.— Where a deed purported to be acknowledged before a justice of the peace in the city of New York in 1835, it was held that proof made by a party claiming adversely to such deed, that by the laws of New York, in 1828, justices of the peace had no authority to take acknowledgments of deeds, and that in 1840 the legislature of that state conferred such authority upon such officers, created a presumption that they did not possess it in 1835 sufficient to overcome the certificate. Eaton v. Woydt, 32 Wis. 277.

52. Munger v. Baldridge, 41 Kan. 236, 21 Pac. 159, 13 Am. St. Rep. 273; Laurent v. Lanning, 32 Oreg. 11, 51 Pac. 80.

married woman's deed, the acknowledgment is made essential to the operative force of the instrument, a pleading is bad on demurrer which sets up such instrument without alleging that the grantor made the required acknowledgment.[53]

B. Sufficiency of Allegation. An allegation that the instrument was "duly acknowledged" is sufficient to show that it was acknowledged in the manner prescribed by law, and the particulars of the acknowledgment need not be set out.[54]

XVII. LIABILITY OF OFFICER FOR MAKING FALSE CERTIFICATE.

A. In General. If the officer who takes an acknowledgment makes a false certificate, an action on his official bond for the damages sustained by reason thereof will lie against him[55] or his sureties,[56] though it seems that such recovery may be had only where the damages sustained are the proximate result of the false certificate.[57]

Want of acknowledgment matter of defense.— In an action to foreclose a mortgage, failure of the complaint — alleging that the mortgage had been duly executed and recorded, and setting out a copy thereof, which did not show any certificate of acknowledgment — to allege that it had been acknowledged, does not render it bad on demurrer. The want of acknowledgment, if any, should be set up affirmatively as a defense. Sturgeon v. Daviess County, 65 Ind. 302.

After judgment on a mortgage, its execution in due form of law is a matter adjudicated, and it is not necessary to recite the acknowledgment in a scire facias. Miner v. Graham, 24 Pa. St. 491.

53. Tuthill v. Townley, 1 N. J. L. 242; Cross v. Everts, 28 Tex. 523; Nichols v. Gordon, 25 Tex. Suppl. 109. But see Banbury v. Arnold, 91 Cal. 606, 27 Pac. 934, wherein it was held that the fact that a married woman's contract for the sale of land, as set out in her complaint in an action for its enforcement, contained no certificate of acknowledgment, did not make it appear to have been unacknowledged, and control allegations that she "entered into a contract with defendant," whereby she "agreed to sell to defendant," and "said defendant agreed to purchase."

54. Livingston v. Jones, Harr. (Mich.) 165; Roy v. Bremond, 22 Tex. 626.

Demurrer — Failure to append copy of instrument.—Where, in a suit against husband and wife to foreclose a mortgage, the bill averred that defendants made, executed, acknowledged, and delivered the mortgage to the complainant, but no copy of the mortgage was attached to the bill, it was held that a demurrer to the bill did not raise objections to the sufficiency of the certificate of acknowledgment appended to the mortgage. Mills v. Angela, 1 Colo. 334.

Legality of registration not raised by demurrer.— Where a petition to enforce the lien of a recorded deed to "Fayette Mauzy," as trustee, showed that the deed was acknowledged before "F. Mauzy, clerk," the question whether the deed was illegally admitted to record because of the identity of the trustee and the clerk was not raised by demurrer since it was not to be assumed that the officer was guilty of improper conduct. Bell v. Wood, 94 Va. 677, 27 S. E. 504.

For a full discussion of the liability of public officers on their official bonds see OFFICERS.

Omission to state material fact.— In California a notary who omits to state in his certificate that the party acknowledging was known to him or identified is guilty of gross and culpable negligence, and is liable on his official bond to the party injured for all damages resulting from such negligence. Fogarty v. Finlay, 10 Cal. 239, 70 Am. Dec. 714.

Where loss merely nominal.— A notary will not be held liable for neglect in taking the acknowledgment to a mortgage where the property intended to be conveyed as security by such mortgage is totally valueless. McAllister v. Clement, 75 Cal. 182, 16 Pac. 775.

Where damages might have been reduced. — A notary's liability on his bond for falsely certifying to the acknowledgment of a mortgage cannot be affected by the fact that the mortgagee might have redeemed a prior mortgage and thus reduced the damages. People v. Colby, 39 Mich. 456.

Pleading must set out false statement.— In a penal action against a clerk for falsely certifying an acknowledgment, the particular part of the certificate or the particular fact therein stated which it is claimed the clerk knew to be false should be particularly set out in the declaration. People v. Bartels, 38 Ill. App. 428.

56. People v. Bartels, 138 Ill. 322, 27 N. E. 1091; People v. Butler, 74 Mich. 643, 42 N. W. 273.

57. Wyllis v. Haun, 47 Iowa 614; Oakland Sav. Bank v. Murfey, 68 Cal. 455, 9 Pac. 843 (party's own negligence the proximate cause of his loss).

Injured party instrumental in causing loss. — Where a person executing a mortgage has been introduced to a notary by the mortgagee's agent, and the notary sees the person so introduced execute the mortgage by signing it with the name given him by the mortgagee's agent, who witnesses the signature, the mortgagee cannot, on discovery that the mortgage was not executed by the owner of

B. Who May Recover. In the absence of any statute to the contrary the right of action extends only to the person taking directly under the conveyance and does not pass to a subsequent grantee.[58] But under some statutes the officer is liable to all persons damaged by reason of such false certificate.[59]

C. What Necessary to Recovery. Where the taking of an acknowledgment is considered a ministerial act, the absence of any wrongful intent on the part of the officer will not prevent a recovery against him.[60] But where the act is regarded as judicial in nature it must be shown, in order to a recovery, that the officer was guilty of an intentional dereliction of duty.[61] And under some statutes a recovery is permissible only in case the officer "knowingly misstates some material fact."[62]

ACLEA. In old English law, a field or place where oaks grew.[1]

62. Browne v. Dolan, 68 Iowa 645, 27 N. W. 795, wherein it was held that the mere fact that the person who signed a mortgage was not the owner of the land would not authorize a recovery in the absence of any showing that the officer knowingly misstated the facts.

Failure of proof.— An action was brought on the official bond of a notary because of an alleged false certificate of acknowledgment wherein the notary recited that the person who acknowledged the instrument was personally known to him to be R. H. S., and the same R. H. S. who executed the instrument. There was evidence to show that the land described in the instrument did belong to one R. H. S., but he was not the same R. H. S. who executed the instrument. There was no direct evidence or circumstances tending to show that the name of the person who signed the mortgage was not R. H. S. It was held that there was a failure of proof which would prevent plaintiff from recovering. State v. Ryland, 72 Mo. App. 468.

Insufficient averment.— An averment that a notary "falsely executed and issued his certificate" is not sufficient to accuse him of having acted in bad faith, under a statute providing that an officer who "knowingly misstates a material fact" in his certificate shall be liable for damages. Scotten v. Fegan, 62 Iowa 236, 17 N. W. 491.

Distinguished from mere knowledge.— In Wyllis v. Haun, 47 Iowa 614, 621, the court said: "Acquaintance is familiar knowledge, a state of being acquainted, or of having intimate, or more than slight or superficial knowledge, as, I know the man, but have no acquaintance with him." And in Chauvin v. Wagner, 18 Mo. 531, 544, it was said: "'Acquainted' means 'familiarly known.'" But to be "personally acquainted with" and "to know personally" have been held to be equivalent phrases. Delaunay v. Burnett, 9 Ill. 454, 489; Kelly v. Calhoun, 95 U. S. 710, 24 L. ed. 544.

Distinguished from "intimate acquaintance."— The phrase "intimate acquaintance" cannot include all acquaintances. Worcester, under the word "acquaintance," has the following: "Acquaintance expresses less than familiarity; familiarity less than intimacy. Acquaintance springs from occasional intercourse; familiarity from daily intercourse;

Failure to interfere.— Scott v. Jackson, 89 Cal. 258, 262, 26 Pac. 898 [citing Rapalje & L. L. Dict.] defines the term thus: "'Acquiescence' is where a person who knows that he is entitled to impeach a transaction or enforce a right neglects to do so for such a length of time that under the circumstances of the case the other party may fairly infer that he has waived or abandoned his right." And in Leeds v. Amherst, 2 Phil. 117, 16 L. J. Ch. 5, 10 Jur. 956 [approved in De Bussche v. Alt, 8 Ch. Div. 286, 47 L. J. Ch. 381, 38 L. T. Rep. N. S. 370], the court said: "If a party, having a right, stands by and sees another dealing with a property in a manner which he ought not, and does not interfere, that may be called acquiescence."

In Kent v. Quicksilver Min. Co., 78 N. Y. 159, 187, and Rabe v. Dunlap, 51 N. J. Eq. 40, 48, 25 Atl. 959, the court, speaking of acquiescence to ultra vires acts, said: "We suppose 'acquiescence' or 'tacit assent' to mean the neglect to promptly and actively condemn the unauthorized act, and to seek judicial redress, after knowledge of the committal of it, whereby innocent third parties have been led to put themselves in a position from which they cannot be taken without loss."

Distinguished from "laches."—"While the words 'laches' and 'acquiescence' are often used as similar in meaning, the distinction in their import is both great and important. Laches import a merely passive, while acquiescence implies active, assent." Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 255, 270, 10 Pac. 674 [citing Wood Limitations, § 62].

10. Pence v. Langdon, 99 U. S. 578, 581, 25 L. ed. 420, where it is said: "Acquiescence and waiver are always questions of fact. There can be neither without knowledge. The terms import this foundation for such action. One cannot waive or acquiesce in a wrong while ignorant that it has been committed. There must be knowledge of facts which will enable the party to take effectual action. Nothing short of this will do. But he may not wilfully shut his eyes to what he might readily and ought to have known." Life Assoc. of Scotland v. Siddal, 3 De G. F. & J. 58, 74, where the following language is used: "Acquiescence, as I conceive, imports knowledge; for I do not see how a man can be said to have acquiesced in what he did not know, and in cases of this sort I think that acquiescence imports full knowledge."

This word had the peculiar meaning of a discharge by a jury from a very early period. Burrill L. Dict.

16. Burrill L. Dict.; Matter of Miller, 2 Lea (Tenn.) 54, 60, holding that the word "acquired" was used in the broad sense, so as to cover lands which might come to the intestate in any other way than "by gift, devise, or descent from the parent or ancestor of the parent."

Includes taking by devise.— In Santa Clara Female Academy v. Sullivan, 116 Ill. 375, 390, 6 N. E. 183, 56 Am. Rep. 776, the point being made that the word "acquire" is not ACQUISITION. The act of procuring property,[17] and also the thing in which the property is secured.[18]

ACQUISITUM. In old English law, a purchase.[19]

ACQUISSER. To receive; to gather.[20]

ACQUITTAL. A judicial deliverance from an accusation of guilt; a deliverance or setting free from a criminal charge by the process of a trial at law and the verdict of a jury pronouncing the party not guilty.[21] (Acquittal: Operation and Effect as Adjudication, see JUDGMENTS. Plea of Former, see CRIMINAL LAW. Verdict and Judgment of, see CRIMINAL LAW.)

ACQUITTAL CONTRACT. A discharge from an obligation, either by deed, prescription, or tenure.[22]

ACQUITTANCE. A discharge in writing of a sum of money or debt due.[23] (Acquittance: As Evidence of Payment or Release, see PAYMENT; RELEASE. Forgery of, see FORGERY.)

ACQUITTED. Set free or judicially discharged from an accusation; released from a debt, duty, obligation, charge, or suspicion of guilt.[24] The word has reference to both civil and criminal prosecutions[25] but must be understood in a technical sense as importing an acquittal on a trial before a jury.[26]

ACRA. In old English law, an ACRE,[27] q. v.

ACRE. A quantity of land containing one hundred and sixty square rods of land in whatever shape.[28] (See also ACRE FIGHT.)

ACRE FIGHT or ACRE. An old sort of duel fought, with sword and lance, by single combatants, English and Scotch, between the frontiers of their kingdoms.[29] broad enough to include a taking by devise,—that the word implies some element of effort on the part of the one who acquires,—it was said that "in judicial opinions, and by law writers, the term is not infrequently used otherwise, and as coming to property by devise or descent, as well as in any other mode."

"The word 'acquittal' is verbum æquivocum. It is generally said that a party is acquitted by the jury, but, in fact, the acquittal is by the judgment of the court." Burgess v. Boetefeur, 7 M. & G. 481, 49 E. C. L. 481.

Not necessarily on merits.—In Junction City v. Keeffe, 40 Kan. 275, 278, 19 Pac. 735, the court said: "Ordinarily in criminal jurisprudence it means a discharge after a trial, or an attempt to have one, upon its merits; but has 'acquittal' as used in our statute no other or different signification than a judgment for defendant on a trial on the facts and merits of the action? . . . The wording of § 298 [Comp. Laws (1879), c. 31, § 298] fairly implies that acquittal is not confined in its meaning to a judgment in favor of defendant after a trial on the merits and facts of a case, but may also, and as there used does have the broader signification of a discharge by a judgment rendered for other reasons."

Distinguished from "pardon."—"To the prisoner a pardon is not equal to an acquittal. . . . His reputation and character are much more affected by the one than the other. A pardon discharges from punishment; an acquittal from guilt. Pardon may rescue him from the penitentiary or a halter, but it cannot redeem him from the infamy of conviction." ACROSS. The word "across" imports from side to side,[30] and, unless qualified by some prefix as "diagonally" or "obliquely," there is attached to the word in ordinary use but one meaning, and that is directly opposite to length.[31] In some cases, however, the word may mean "over." [32]

ACT. In a general sense, something done; the exercise of power, or an effect produced thereby.[33] In a more special sense the word is used to denote the result of a public deliberation, the decision of a prince, of a legislative body, of a council, court of justice, or magistrate. Also a decree, edict, law, judgment, resolve, award, determination.[34] In speaking of a legislative act, while the word in its ordinary acceptation would include the entire statute, it is not so definite in its meaning that it may not be applied to a complete and independent section if found in connection with it.[35]

ACTA EXTERIORA INDICANT INTERIORA SECRETA. A maxim meaning "acts indicate the intention." [37]

ACTA IN UNO JUDICIO NON PROBANT IN ALIO NISI INTER EASDEM PERSONAS. A maxim meaning "things done in one action cannot be taken as evidence in another unless it be between the same parties." [38]

I. CAUSE OF ACTION.

A. Definition. The term "cause of action," in law, is generally understood as meaning the whole cause of action; that is, every fact which it is necessary to establish in order to support the right to judicial relief.[1] As otherwise defined it

1. Read v. Brown, 22 Q. B. D. 128; Cooke v. Gill, L. R. 8 C. P. 107; Borthwick v. Walton, 15 C. B. 501; Buckley v. Hann, 5 Exch. 43; Connolly v. Brannen, 1 Quebec 204; Wurtele v. Lenghan, 1 Quebec 61; Rousseau v. Hughes, 8 L. C. Rep. 187; Warren v. Kay, 6 L. C. Rep. 492.

"Cause of action" has been held from the earliest time to mean every fact which is material to be proved to entitle the plaintiff to succeed — every fact that the defendant would have a right to traverse. Cooke v. Gill, L. R. 8 C. P. 107. The term does not comprise every piece of evidence which is necessary to consists in a right in the plaintiff, a correlative duty or obligation resting on the defendant, and some act or omission done by the latter in violation of the right.[2]

B. Terminology — 1. Compared with Other Legal Terms — a. "Right of Action" — "Chose in Action." The words "right of action" are sometimes used interchangeably and as synonymous with "cause of action."[3] In other cases the words "right of action" are held to refer only to the right to remedial relief, the right to sue, which arises upon the cause of action being complete.[4]

But see Clark v. Eddy, 22 Cinc. L. Bul. 63, 10 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 539 [criticising Pomeroy Rem. and Rem. Rights, § 452 et seq., and holding that the wrong of defendant — in other words, the breach only — is the cause of action].

For titles in which questions relating to the requisites of a cause of action frequently arise see Courts; Limitations of Actions; Recoupment, Set-Off, and Counter-Claim; Venue.

Threatened wrong.— A cause of action may be a wrong either committed or threatened. Miller v. Hallock, 9 Colo. 551, 13 Pac. 541; Clark v. Eddy, 22 Cinc. L. Bul. 63, 10 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 539.

When arising or originating.— As to contracts it has been held that the cause of action arises or originates in the contract itself, and not merely in a breach of the obligation which it creates. Alderton v. Archer, 14 Q. B. D. 1; Wurtele v. Lenghan, 1 Quebec 61; Jackson v. Coxworthy, 12 L. C. Rep. 416. Contra, Patterson v. Patterson, 59 N. Y. 574, 17 Am. Rep. 384 [approved in Taylor v. New York, 82 N. Y. 10]; Clark v. Eddy, 22 Cinc. L. Bul. 63, 10 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 539 [citing Howell v. Young, 5 B. & C. 259, 266, wherein it was held that, "whatever be the form of action, the breach of duty is substantially the cause of action;" this was said, however, with respect to the time when "the cause of action accrued," under a statute of limitations making use of that word]. In the sense of "action," only, which is defined as "the right of suing in a court of justice for that to which one is entitled," can it be said that a plaintiff has no cause or right of action against a defendant on a contract until the breach of the contract sued on. Wurtele v. Lenghan, 1 Quebec 61.

Statutory definition.— In Georgia the doctrine stated in the text has been declared by statute. Stafford v. Maddox, 87 Ga. 537, 13 S. E. 559.

So "a cause of action" has been said to be a right to prosecute an action with effect (Patterson v. Patterson, 59 N. Y. 574, 17 Am. Rep. 384 [cited in Taylor v. New York, 82 N. Y. 10]; Douglas v. Forrest, 4 Bing. 686); and under the code to be the right which a party has to institute and carry through such a proceeding as falls within the definition of an action given by the code (Meyer v. Van Collem, 7 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 222). The expression droit d'action is more generally used in French than cause d'action and has the same meaning in law. Wurtele v. Lenghan, 1 Quebec 61.

Chose in action.— "'Chose in action,' taken in its broadest latitude, comprehends not only a demand arising on contract, but also a wrong or injury to the property or person." Cowen, J., in People v. Tioga C. P., 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 73, 75. It is "any right to damages, whether arising from the commission of a tort, the omission of a duty, or the breach of a contract," in the language of Goldthwaite, J., in Magee v. Toland, 8 Port. (Ala.) 36, 40. "It includes all rights to personal property not in possession which may be enforced by action." Bronson, C. J., in Gillet v. Fairchild, 4 Den. (N. Y.) 80, 82. And see 2 Bl. Comm. 288, 396. "'Cause of action' I do not think, is, now at least, synonymous with 'chose in action,' for the latter phrase, as now used, includes debts, etc., not due, and indeed stocks." Hand, J., in Bank of Commerce v. Rutland, etc., R., 10 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 1, 9. It is probable, too, that "chose in action" is used exclusively in relation to personal property.

4. Pomeroy Rem. and Rem. Rights, § 452, et seq. [approved in Hayes v. Clinkscales, 9 S. C. 441; Rodgers v. Mutual Endowment Assessment Assoc., 17 S. C. 406; Taylor v. New York, 82 N. Y. 10. In the last-named case the court said: "The phrases 'cause of action' and 'right of action' are used, because ordinarily, and in the absence of some especial circumstance, when a debt is mature it may be demanded and sued upon, and payment of right and by its terms be then exacted; because, in general, the phrases 'to be mature' and 'to be suable' both express the same fact as to the debt. It is the condition or state of the demand at the time that is looked at. . . There is a cause of action, and there is a remedy by action. They are different rights"].

b. "Subject of Action." "Cause of action," in legal terminology, is not the same as "subject of action."[5]

c. Remedy and Its Terminology. Nor is the term "cause of action" to be confounded with the terminology relating to the remedy, such as "suit," "action," "cause," and the like. The cause of action is the right to be enforced or the injury to be redressed; the action or remedy is the means which the law has provided whereby such enforcement or redress may be effected.[6]

2. Disregard of Technical Meaning and Use. As with most legal terms, it often becomes necessary, acting upon the well-settled rules of construction, to depart from the technical meaning and use of the words "cause of action," when contained in statutes and agreements, in order to carry out the intention of the legislature or of the parties.[7]

5. "Subject of action" is a code term used in the stead of what was formerly known as "subject-matter of the action," and describes the physical facts, the things real or personal, the money, land, chattels, and the like, in relation to which the suit is prosecuted. Pomeroy Rem. and Rem. Rights, § 475 [approved in Rodgers v. Mutual Endowment Assessment Assoc., 17 S. C. 406].

6. Pomeroy Rem. and Rem. Rights, § 519; Wildman v. Wildman, 70 Conn. 700, 41 Atl. 1; Clark v. Eddy, 22 Cinc. L. Bul. 63, 10 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 539; Rodgers v. Mutual Endowment Assessment Assoc., 17 S. C. 406; Hayes v. Clinkscales, 9 S. C. 441.

Every action is brought in order to obtain some particular result, which is termed the "remedy." This final result is not the "cause of action;" it is rather the "object of the action." Wildman v. Wildman, 70 Conn. 700, 41 Atl. 1. A suit is a formal method of preserving a right, not the right itself. Page v. Brewster, 58 N. H. 126. A case consists of a right and a wrong. The law creates not the wrong; but it does create a right and prescribes a remedy. Magill v. Parsons, 4 Conn. 317. Something broader than form of action seems to be meant by "nature of the action," even when used in a statute. This is a larger classification, referring to the character of relief sought rather than to the method of reaching it. The nature of the action may be, for example, the recovery of a thing taken or the recovery of damages for the taking. The appropriate form of action would be replevin or trover. "The form in which the suit is brought, and the subject-matter, or its cause of action, nature of its case, are totally distinct subjects." Truax v. Parvis, 7 Houst. (Del.) 330, 334, 32 Atl. 227. Between the substantive law and the law of remedy there is this important distinction: the former, proprio vigore, operates upon all persons within its field, while the latter may truly be said to operate only upon occasion,—when something is threatened, or has been done, in violation of a legal right. The right common to all then becomes the right of action of the party injured. Clark v. Eddy, 22 Cinc. L. Bul. 63, 10 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 539. Compare Hunter's Will, 6 Ohio 499, where the court draws a distinction between the words "action" and "suit," defining an action as an abstract legal right in one person to prosecute another in a court of justice, and a suit as the actual prosecution of such right in a court of justice. The remedy for duties imposed by contract is not the contract itself, but the suit to enforce its obligations. State v. Poulterer, 16 Cal. 514; State v. Young, 29 Minn. 474, 9 N. W. 737; U. S. v. Lyman, 1 Mason (U. S.) 482, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,647. The remedy by action on the case provided by the Statute of Westminster II, c. 24, creates no new liability, but merely gives a remedy. Heeney v. Sprague, 11 R. I. 456, 23 Am. Rep. 502, 12 Am. L. Rev. 189.

Security — Not remedy.—"Remedy" is not to be confounded with "security." A mechanic's lien is a statutory security to which the term "remedy" would be as misapplied as it would be in respect to a mortgage. Atkins v. Little, 17 Minn. 342. To same effect is Municipal Council v. Wilmot Tp., 17 U. C. Q. B. 82.

7. Jurisdiction and venue laws.— Under an English statute relating to jurisdiction, which provided that a non-resident British subject might be sued in a superior court upon "a cause of action which arose within the jurisdiction, or in respect of the breach of a contract made within the jurisdiction," it has been held in some courts that the meaning of the words "cause of action," as there used, was their usual meaning, that is, the whole cause of action (Cherry v. Thompson, L. R. 7 Q. B. 573, 575; Allhusen v. Malgareio, L. R. 3 Q. B. 340; Sichel v. Borch, 2 H. & C. 954); while other courts have construed it in its popular meaning as the act on the part of defendant which gives plaintiff his right to sue (Durham v. Spence, L. R. 6 Exch. 46; Jackson v. Spittall, L. R. 5 C. P. 542; Fife v. Round, 6 Wkly. Rep. 282, 283, in which it was said: "The cases in which the construction has been placed on the words 'cause of action,' making them mean the whole cause of action, are not applicable"). And this may be regarded, since 1874, as the construction finally adopted. Vaughan v. Weldon, L. R. 10 C. P. 47; Hibernia Nat. Bank v. Lacombe, 84 N. Y. 367, 38 Am. Rep. 518 [citing Durham v. Spence, L. R. 6 Exch. 46, and construing N. Y. Code Proc. § 427].

Statute of limitations.— In Ohio also this construction has been sanctioned generally.

C. Parties — 1. Generally. To constitute a "cause of action" there must also be a party entitled to institute process and a party who can be subjected to such process.[8] The existence of a cause of action is not, however, dependent on the availability of means for its enforcement. It may exist between parties who cannot be reached by a common jurisdiction.

2. Same Party Both Plaintiff and Defendant. In this connection it has been frequently held at law that a person may not sue himself; even though on one side or the other he is not the sole party or appears in an official, representative, or other capacity.[9] This rule, however, is technical rather than substantial, and without regard to the reason upon which the English courts proceeded; namely, that it was required by the language of the statutory provision construed as a whole. Clark v. Eddy, 22 Cinc. L. Bul. 63, 10 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 539.

Laws removing disqualification of parties as witnesses.— Thus a statute as to disqualification of parties as witnesses in cases "where one of the parties to such action has deceased" was held to intend parties to the cause of action, and to refer, not to the executor or administrator, who is technically the party to the action; but to the deceased, who was the party to the cause of action. Kimball v. Baxter, 27 Vt. 628, 631, the court saying that "in common parlance it is no uncommon thing for us to speak of the action when in strictness we mean the cause of action." And in a statute of the same sort in West Virginia it has been held that the words "civil action, suit, or proceeding" are to be taken as synonymous with "controversy," and not merely as designating the particular mode in which the controversy may be presented to the court by "action" (at law), "suit" (in equity), or "other proceeding." Anderson v. Snyder, 21 W. Va. 632, 645.

"Cause of action" implies a right to bring an action, and someone who has a right to sue, and some who may be lawfully sued. Patterson v. Patterson, 59 N. Y. 574, 17 Am. Rep. 384.

Non-existent person or thing.— A right is a relation of a person or persons to some thing or persons, and from its very nature it cannot arise or exist in advance of the persons or the things related, and of which it expresses the relation. Thus an act granting to a corporation the right to connect with other railways "hereafter to be constructed" gives no cause of action as to tracks of another company afterward laid under a subsequent grant made to it. North Branch Pass. R. Co. v. City Pass. R. Co., 38 Pa. St. 361.

Illustrations of rule.— A party can have no right of action against himself, either as debtor or tort-feasor. First Soc. of M. E. Church v. Stewart, 27 Barb. (N. Y.) 553. The rule applies where the action, though brought in the name of a third person, as the state, is for the use and benefit of the same person who is sued. Sweetland v. Porter, 43 W. Va. 189, 27 S. E. 352. But see Blanchard v. Ely, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 342, 34 Am. Dec. 250.

Exceptions to rule.— In an action at law between a corporation and individuals composing it this identity does not exist and the rule has no application (Pearson v. Nesbit, 12 N. C. 315, 17 Am. Dec. 569); nor does it apply to an action upon a promissory note where the maker and the payee are the same person, if the action is brought by the indorsee (Moore v. Denslow, 14 Conn. 235). An action may be brought by the payee against the maker of a note, although both payee and maker are members of a commercial partnership and the note is in fact given for its use, where the note is not given to the firm, but to an individual member. Van Ness v. Forrest, 8 Cranch (U. S.) 30, 3 L. ed. 478.

Sometimes the question takes the form of whether the cause of action previously existing has not been extinguished; as where one who owes a debt to a decedent is made his executor. See Williams v. Moseley, 2 Fla. 304 [citing Stevens v. Gaylord, 11 Mass. 256; Wankford v. Wankford, 1 Salk. 299]. See also Executors and Administrators.

does not negative the existence of a cause of action except in the case of those rights which are not enforceable in equity.[10]

D. Damage Without Wrong — 1. General Rule. For a cause of action there must be a legal injury, an invasion of some positive right; an injury that, at some period of time, legislatures or courts have decreed to be a proper subject for judicial redress.[11] The refusal or discontinuance of a mere favor,[12] or the voluntary conferring of a benefit,[13] gives no right of action; and there is a large class of moral rights and duties, sometimes called imperfect rights and obligations, which the law does not attempt to enforce or protect.[14]

10. Stone v. Brooks, 6 How. (Miss.) 373; Cooper v. Nelson, 38 Iowa 440, wherein it was held that while it is well settled at common law that a party cannot bring an action at law against a partnership or a board of trustees, or other board, of which he is a member, the reason assigned is technical, and has no foundation in the essential character of judicial proceedings; as is apparent from the fact that such person could always obtain relief in equity. See, generally, where the same person acts in distinct capacities and interests, Executors and Administrators; Partnership; Trusts.

Mandamus.— Under code provisions relating to mandamus which make the private party aggrieved the proper plaintiff instead of the state or some public official, the proceeding to be conducted as an ordinary action, it is held that since a party cannot resort to a court of equity for a mandamus the technical rule at law should not be applied to the action, as that would amount to a denial of justice; and that therefore an injured party might sue himself in such a proceeding, in his official capacity. Cooper v. Nelson, 38 Iowa 440.

Nudum pactum.— If one trust to the mere gratuitous promise of favor from another, as a gratuitous promise by a mortgagor not to act on the power of sale contained in the mortgage, and is disappointed, the law will not protect him from the consequences of his undue confidence, nor encourage carelessness or want of prudence in affairs by giving him a right of action for its infringement. Randall v. Hazelton, 12 Allen (Mass.) 412. And in general, there is no right of action in one party when there is no legal obligation on the other party.

13. It is a familiar rule of law that one man cannot make another his debtor by paying even the latter's just debt to a third person voluntarily and without his request. Edgeworth Co. v. Wetherbee, 6 Gray (Mass.) 166. Gratuitous advice given by one person to another as to the management of his business, without consideration, and when the person giving it is under no legal obligation by contract, express or implied, relating to the subject-matter of the advice, will not create legal liability. McCausland v. Cresap, 3 Greene (Iowa) 161. See also Contracts.

14. Randall v. Hazelton, 12 Allen (Mass.) 412; Pasley v. Freeman, 3 T. R. 44; Haycraft v. Creasy, 2 East 92; Allen v. Flood [1898] A. C. 1, 120, per Lord Herschell, who said: "The law certainly does not profess to treat as a legal wrong every act which may be disapproved of in point of morality."

In an action the court has nothing to do with the question whether moral right or merits be on the side of defendant or not. Clifford v. Hoare, 22 Wkly. Rep. 828.

Human tribunals administer justice imperfectly; even when they do their best, the results obtained, as a general rule, are only approximate to perfect justice. There are wrongs and misfortunes arising from casualties and the imperfections of human institutions against which no human law can give protection. Cook v. Chapman, 41 N. J. Eq. 152, 2 Atl. 286.

Illustrations.— Courts of justice sit to enforce civil obligations only; they never attempt to coerce the performance of spiritual ones. Roman Catholic Church v. Martin, 4 Rob. (La.) 62 [approved in St. Louis Church v. Blanc, 8 Rob. (La.) 51]. The motive or intent of a party in exercising a perfectly legal right is immaterial; and although his motives are wicked, and he is thus violating the moral law, an injury resulting from such acts cannot be the subject of an action. Payne v. Western, etc., R. Co., 13 Lea (Tenn.) 507, 49 Am. Rep. 666. See also infra, I, G. Where an employer, after honoring the order of an employee in favor of a creditor for some months, refuses longer to do so, not being prompted thereto by the employee, no action will lie by the creditor against the latter as for a tort for taking and using the money. He has not misapplied any money or other valuable thing of the plaintiff's, and so the element of fraud is lacking. McGuire v. Kiveland, 56 Vt. 62. "If I know that a villain intends to defraud or in any way to injure my neighbor, it is doubtless my duty as a good citizen and as a Christian man to put him on his guard; but there is no rule of law which renders me liable for his loss in case of my neglect of this duty; it is a moral duty simply, not recognized by law." Ohio, etc., R. Co. v. Kasson, 37 N. Y. 218, 224. To same effect is Haycraft v. Creasy, 2 East 92, per Kenyon, C. J.

So a railway conductor is under no legal duty to detain a passenger suspected of having stolen property which he has brought on the train with him, and is not liable for the dam-

2. By Exercise of Private Rights — a. In General. A person may suffer special and considerable damage by reason of the acts or omissions of another, but if none of his legal rights are invaded he will have no cause of action. It is a loss without a wrong, the damnum absque injuria of the common law. In every complicated society the most careful exercise by each member of his particular rights, or the discharge by each member of his particular duties, can hardly fail to be detrimental at times to others; but such detriment is not actionable.[15] This is still more plain if the loss suffered is that of the gain or advantage expected from the loser's own wrongful act[16] or to be derived from a contract having no legal validity.[17]

A necessary law of society.— Damnum absque injuria is not a legal novelty. It does not necessarily follow that because plaintiff may have sustained a serious injury to his property, consequent upon the voluntary acts of defendant, that therefore he has a right to recover damages for that injury. Some acts may be justified by an express provision of law; or the damage may have arisen as the consequence of those acts which others might lawfully do in the enjoyment and exercise of their own rights and the management of their own business; or it may have resulted from the application of those principles by which the general good is to be consulted and promoted, though in many respects operating unfavorably to the interests of individuals in society. Such is and must be the law of society. Spring v. Russell, 7 Me. 273. It is universally understood to be one of the implied and necessary conditions upon which men enter into society and form governments that sacrifices must sometimes be required of individuals for the general benefit of the community, for which they have no rightful claim to specific compensation. Bradley v. New York, etc., R. Co., 21 Conn. 294.

The line which separates this class of acts from those which are the subjects of legal redress is often shadowy and indistinct. It rests frequently on the grounds of public policy, or upon the mere force of authority, rather than upon any clear or well-defined principle. McGuire v. Grant, 25 N. J. L. 356, 67 Am. Dec. 49.

Illustrations.— A railroad has a right to alter the number or character of trains running over its route, providing it continues to furnish the public sufficient accommodation for freight and passengers; and all damages resulting from that cause alone are damnum absque injuria. Kinealy v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 69 Mo. 658. No action will lie against one for demolishing a house built by another, without right or title, upon the land of defendant. Anselm v. Brashear, 2 La. Ann. 403. No cause of action exists against one who changes the name of his residence and calls it by the same name by which that of his neighbor has been known from time immemorial, although it may cause much inconvenience and annoyance, unless a sufficient case for slander of title is made out. The law relative to trade-marks has no application. Day v. Brownrigg, 10 Ch. D. 294.

16. Preventing a person from doing or continuing to do an unlawful and unauthorized act does not constitute a good cause of action, although damage may have ensued; for example, preventing a railroad corporation from laying a branch track across a public highway without lawful authority (Bangor, etc., R. Co. v. Smith, 49 Me. 9, 77 Am. Dec. 246), or closing a pipe whereby a party has unlawfully tapped a canal to obtain water for irrigation purposes (Beekman v. Jones, 42 N. Y. App. Div. 328, 59 N. Y. Suppl. 138). To give information to a proper officer of any breach of law, whereby the violator has been compelled to pay a statutory penalty, cannot be recognized by a court as a wrongful act for which damages may be recovered. Thompson v. Williams, Tapp. (Ohio) 34.

17. No action will lie to recover damages for a failure to perform an unlawful agreement. It is a settled principle that the law will not aid a party to enforce such a contract

b. In Use of Property — (1) Reasonable Use. That one should so use his own as not to injure another is an approved maxim of the common law.[18] The very idea of property, however, involves the common principle of the property itself being used and enjoyed in the manner most advantageous to its possessor,[19] and the maxim is construed to mean that damage resulting from reasonable and ordinary use alone will not constitute a legal injury.[20] or compensate him for its breach. Dwight v. Brewster, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 50, 11 Am. Dec. 133; Jenkins v. Fowler, 24 Pa. St. 308, 28 Pa. St. 176. So of a contract void by the statute of frauds. Wade v. Newbern, 77 N. C. 460. See also, infra, I, I; CONTRACTS.

A fundamental principle.— A man may use his property as he chooses, seeing to it that such use invades not the paramount right of others to the undisturbed possession and enjoyment of their property. The principle lies at the foundation of a wisely regulated social organization. Farrand v. Marshall, 21 Barb. (N. Y.) 409.

Legal rights must not be violated.— "I know it is a rule of law that I must occupy my own so as to do no harm to others; but it is their legal rights only that I am bound not to disturb. Subject to this qualification I may occupy or use my own as I please." Per Gibbs, J., in Deane v. Clayton, 7 Taunt. 490, 529.

Landed property.— The cases have decided that where the maxim sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas is applied to landed property it is subject to a certain modification, it being necessary for plaintiff to show not only that he has sustained damage, but that defendant has caused it by doing that which is unnecessary in order to enable him to have the natural use of his own land. If plaintiff only shows that his own land is damaged by defendant using his land in the natural manner he cannot succeed. West Cumberland Iron, etc., Co. v. Kenyon, 11 Ch. D. 782 [reversing 6 Ch. D. 773].

To whom the principle applies.— The principle that one may not be subjected to an action for damage resulting from the ordinary and reasonable use of property applies not only to private owners, but to the state and to municipal corporations, also to persons, other than the owner, who have obtained from him any right or title therein.

(II) Unreasonable Use. There are, however, limitations upon the use which one can make of his own; and damage caused by that which the law has established to be an unreasonable use is within the common-law maxim, sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas, and constitutes a legal injury for which an action will lie.[21]

(III) Negligence. Although the use is one which the law deems reasonable, if the damage is not caused by the exercise of the legal right with due care and skill, but by negligent conduct, there is also a legal injury of which the law will take cognizance.[22]

c. In Pursuit of Legal Remedies — (I) General Rule. No cause of action exists for the recovery of costs or other expense or damage, occasioned by successful and bona fide legal process, however much it may have operated to the prejudice of another.[23] More than that, if the remedy is invoked in good faith, no legal

N. Brunsw. 523] per Earle, J., who said: "A party may damage the property of another where the law permits; and he may not where the law prohibits; so that the maxim can never be applied till the law is ascertained; and when it is, the maxim is superfluous." Again it has been said that while the maxim "may be a very good moral precept it is utterly useless as a legal maxim; it determines no right; it defines no obligation." Auburn, etc., Plank-road Co. v. Douglass, 9 N. Y. 444, 445 [reversing 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 553].

But where a use of property is such a use as has been legally established to be unreasonable, the prohibition of the law has been said not to be uselessly or imperfectly expressed by this maxim. Per Campbell, C. J., and Coleridge, J., in Bonomi v. Backhouse, E. B. & E. 622 [reversed on other grounds in 9 H. L. Cas. 503]; Payne v. Western, etc., R. Co., 13 Lea (Tenn.) 507, 527, 49 Am. Rep. 666, where the court said: "The maxim sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas, . . . as commonly translated, 'So use your own as not to injure another's,' . . . is doubtless an orthodox moral precept; and in the law, too, it finds frequent application to the use of surface and running water, and indeed generally to easements and servitudes. But strictly even then it can mean only: 'So use your own that you do no legal damage to another's.' . . . This maxim also assumes that the injury results from an unlawful act, and, paraphrased, means no more than: 'Thou shalt not interfere with the legal rights of another by the commission of an unlawful act;' or, 'Injury from an unlawful act is actionable.'"

By courts in argument.— That one party refuses to let another get water at his spring or make a road across his farm; or locks his pump or gate against him; or builds a fence upon his own land across such other's path; or builds a store, or shop, or high fence on his own land in such close proximity to the other's windows as to exclude light and view; or digs on his lot below the foundation of the other's house so as to endanger it,— will not give rise to any cause of action; since he is only exercising his undoubted right to use his own for himself and deny another all privilege in it. Damnum absque injuria.—"Every litigation requires more or less time and trouble. The law makes it the duty of the litigants to be diligent and vigilant, but it has never been understood that a successful litigant was entitled, as against his adversary, to compensation for the time and attention which were necessary for him to bestow upon the litigation. Time and attention thus bestowed the law has always regarded as having been given by the litigant to his own business, and if he has sustained loss in consequence thereof it must be esteemed damnum absque injuria." Cook v. Chapman, 41 N. J. Eq. 152, 161, 2 Atl. 286 [cited with approval in McHale v. Heman, 28 Mo. App. 193]. To same effect see Davies v. Jenkins, 11 M. & W. 745, 1 D. & L. 321. "Every man is entitled to come into a court of justice, and claim what he deems to be his right; if he fails, he shall be amerced (according to the old principle) for his false claim; and the defendant is entitled to his costs; and with these he must be content." Woodmansie v. Logan, 2 N. J. L. 86, 87.

Applicable to the right to defend and to sue, alike.— "The law not only gives [a party] the right to make defense, but allows him to exercise it in his own way. It is a right that courts have no authority to abridge. It could not be abridged without seriously endangering the safe administration of justice. What is true of the right to make defense is equally so of the right to maintain a suit. They are both free and unrestricted." Cook v. Chapman, 41 N. J. Eq. 152, 161, 2 Atl. 286.

Wrong party sued.— Where a wrong party, who has the same name as the debtor, has been sued by mistake, he has a good defense to the action and will be entitled to costs; but he has no further remedy for the inconvenience and trouble to which he has been put. Davies v. Jenkins, 11 M. & W. 745, 1 D. & L. 321.

Attachments.— Damages resulting from the suing out of an attachment, unless the attachment was brought with a view to oppress defendant and without probable cause, will not give a right of action although plaintiff in the first action should fail to recover. Williams v. Hunter, 10 N. C. 545, 14 Am. Dec. 597. See, generally, ATTACHMENT.

Loss caused by unfounded injunction.—The law secures to every citizen the right to resort bona fide to the courts of justice to invoke their aid in protecting him in the enjoyment of his property. Thus the mere fact that a temporary injunction has been obtained by a party to a contract will not raise a cause of action in favor of the other parties thereto, although it has had the effect of preventing them from reaping its benefits. If there has been a breach of the injunction bond a suit might be brought thereon; if there has been malice an action on the case will lie. McLaren v. Bradford, 26 Ala. 616. See, generally, INJUNCTIONS.

Suing in the name of third person.— In England it has been held that no action will lie by the defendant in the original suit against one who puts the process of the law in motion in the name of a third person, unless it is alleged and proved to have been done maliciously and without reasonable or probable cause. Cotterell v. Jones, 11 C. B. 713, per Williams, J. In cases in this country, however, in which the original action was brought, without authority from such third person to use his name, an action to recover the actual damages sustained by the defendant in the original suit, in loss of time and money paid to defend against it, was sustained. The court held that under such circumstances the gist of the action was not a want of probable cause or malice, for there might be a good cause of action; but the improper liberty of using the name of another person. Bond v. Chapin, 8 Metc. (Mass.) 31 [approved in Smith v. Hyndman, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 554; followed in Moulton v. Lowe, 32 Me. 466]. See, generally, PROCESS.

Expenses of plaintiff.— A plaintiff cannot recover for counsel fees or other disbursements in his suit unless he recovers them in the suit itself as taxable costs, though the necessity for the litigation was occasioned by the wrongful act of defendant, as by a theft of plaintiff's goods. If his action is civil, his right to costs must depend upon the law which governs the process; and if it is criminal process which he made instrumental to serve his purpose defendant is only liable for costs on account of it to the state, unless there is some special statute to the contrary; and if there is such a statute it would not be necessary to make the claim in a separate suit. Whether he is entitled to costs for the first proceeding must depend upon the laws which govern that proceeding; and it does not alter the case that the proceeding was in another state. Harris v. Eldred, 42 Vt. 39. To same effect see McHale v. Heman, 28 Mo. App. 193. Where an action was brought by another in the name of plaintiff, but without his authority or consent, an

(II) Malicious Prosecution. It is now well established by judicial decision that immunity for an injury caused by invoking legal remedies to redress an unfounded grievance does not extend to protect one who unsuccessfully brings an action, if the process was sued out maliciously and without probable cause.[25]

d. Damage to Business or Profession — (I) In General. Damage to a man in his trade, occupation, or profession, which results from a fair competition, is not actionable unless some superior right, by contract or otherwise, is interfered with.[26] The same is also true of loss caused to a man's business or occupation by any other act or omission which does not amount to a legal wrong.[27]

Costs and expenses as incidental element of damage.— While such damage will not give a cause of action, it is a proper element of damage in an action for a legal wrong, if it is a natural and proximate result of the wrongful act. fruits and advantages of his own enterprise, industry, skill, and credit free from the merely wanton and malicious acts of others, which are not done in justifiable competition or the service of any interest or lawful purpose, yet fall short of common-law torts; in other words, that motive or intent will sometimes give a cause of action for damage where the act that caused it was not in itself a legal wrong.[28] But this amounts to making the state of mind, and not the act, the basis of the cause of action, and is contrary to the meaning of malice in law and the rules relating thereto,[29] and on both authority and principle would seem to be erroneous in the absence of legislation on the subject.[30]

Illustration.— A manufacturer has a cause of action against a third person who, maliciously and with the unlawful purpose of injuring him in his business, wilfully induces many of his employees to leave his employment, and persuades other persons not to hire out to him, whereby he suffers loss; although those already in his employ had the right to leave when they did, not being bound by contract to serve for any particular time. Walker v. Cronin, 107 Mass. 555.

30. Decisions supporting this view.— No action will lie against a railroad company for damages which result from its having notified its employees, maliciously and with the wicked and wanton intent of injuring plaintiff in his business and character, that they would be discharged should they thereafter trade with plaintiff. A party has a legal right to employ or discharge persons at his own pleasure, subject only to the contractual rights existing between him and such persons; and motive and intent alone will not constitute a cause of action. Payne v. Western, etc., R. Co., 13 Lea (Tenn.) 507, 49 Am. Rep. 666, two judges dissenting. A landlord, whose tenant leaves because forced by a third person to do so or be discharged from the employment of the latter, has no cause of action against the employer for the coercion, although his motives were malicious, if the tenant broke no contract of rental. Heywood v. Tillson, 75 Me. 225, 46 Am. Rep. 373. Where the terms under which iron-workers are employed allow them to withdraw from the employment at the close of any day, no action will lie at the suit of the employers against third persons who induce or coerce them thus to withdraw; and an evil motive or intent, apart from legal malice, does not enter into the case. Allen v. Flood, [1898] A. C. 1 [reversing [1895] 2 Q. B. 21], Lord Halsbury, L. C., and Lords Ashbourne and Morris, dissenting. In Allen v. Flood, [1898] A. C. 1 [reviewing early decisions, overruling Carrington v. Taylor, 11 East 571, and distinguishing Keeble v. Hickeringill, 11 East 574 note, and Garret v. Taylor, Cro. Jac. 567] this question was discussed at length. The conclusion reached in the ruling opinions is that malice in this connection must be given its usual legal meaning; and that to induce or coerce men to do or abstain from doing acts which do not violate any legal right in third persons is not actionable, whatever may be the motive or intent, unless the means used amount in themselves to legal wrongs, as where there is violence, threats of violence sufficient to put parties in fear of great personal injury, or false statements, which in the sight of the law are actionable torts. Of the result of a legal recognition of malice in the ordinary meaning of the word it is said by Lord Herschell (p. 118): "I can imagine no greater danger to the community than that a jury should be at liberty to impose the penalty of paying damages for acts which are otherwise lawful, because they choose, without any legal definition of the term, to say that they are malicious. No one would know what his rights were. The result would be to put all our actions at the mercy of a particular tribunal whose view of their propriety might differ from our own. However malice be defined, if motive be an ingredient of it, my sense of danger would not be diminished." An instance of an injury to trade which was held to be an actionable wrong and not fair competition was where the master of one of two vessels lying near each other, and engaged in the same kind of adventure, fired a cannon loaded with powder and shot against a canoe manned by natives who desired to trade with the other, and killed one of the crew, occasioning such a panic among the native tribes that the season's trade was lost to the latter vessel. Tarleton v. McGawley, Peake N. P. 270 [approved in Allen v. Flood, [1898] A. C. 1, 105, per Lord Watson, who said: "The case was just the same as if some person had persisted in firing bullets at all and sundry [people] who were about to enter a particular shop, with the effect of driving away its customers and ruining the shopkeeper's business"]. An act is not lawful on the narrow basis that the law sanctions acts which are done in the furtherance of trade competition; but whether it will constitute a legal wrong or not will depend upon whether the act by which the competition is pursued is a lawful act or a legal wrong. Allen v. Flood, [1898] A. C. 1, per Lord Herschell.

Distinguished from procuring breach of contract.— The reason for the distinction between the act of a third person who induces

e. Assent or Procurement of Party Injured. It is a rule of the common law that no one can maintain an action for an injury where he has consented to or procured the act which occasioned the loss.[31]

f. Unavoidable Accident. Where one is engaged in a lawful act, an act not mischievous, rash, reckless, or foolish, or naturally liable to result in injury to others, he is not responsible for damages due to unavoidable accident or casualty.[32] another to break a contract, and that which only induces him to abstain from entering into a contract, is this: that in the one case the act procured is the violation of a legal right, for which the person doing the act can be sued as well as the person who procured it; while in the other case no legal right is violated by the person who did the act from which plaintiff suffered, and to hold the person who induced him to do the act liable to an action would be an entirely new departure. Per Lord Herschell in Allen v. Flood, [1898] A. C. 1.

Conspiracy.—As to whether inducing a person to quit his employment, or to do or abstain from doing any other act, where neither the act nor the means used to procure it are lawful, can be the foundation of an action for a conspiracy, it is said in Allen v. Flood, [1898] A. C. 1, per Lord Davey (p. 172): "This, I will remind your lordships, is not a case of conspiracy. I do not say whether, if it were, it would or would not make an essential difference:" and per Lord Herschell (p. 124): "I put aside the case of a conspiracy, which is anomalous in more than one respect." See State v. Glidden, 55 Conn. 46, 8 Atl. 890, 3 Am. St. Rep. 23; Plant v. Woods, 176 Mass. 492, 57 N. E. 1011; and also CONSPIRACY. If the acts themselves amount to an unlawful conspiracy, of course such action will lie. Temperton v. Russell, [1893] 1 Q. B. 715 [approved in Allen v. Flood, [1898] A. C. 1, per Lord Watson]. "The vice of that form of terrorism commonly known by the name of 'boycotting,' and other forms of oppressive combination, seems to me to depend on considerations which are, I think, in the present case, conspicuously absent." Per Lord Macnaghten in Allen v. Flood, [1898] A. C. 1, 153.

g. Law of Necessity — (1) In General. A loss to individuals occasioned by the use or destruction of their property to preserve life or other property is sometimes justifiable and does not constitute legal damage. It is the exercise of the natural right of every individual, authorized by an overruling necessity; not conferred by law, but tacitly accepted by all human codes.[33] This is analogous to the the sufferer and lays no foundation for legal liability. Harvey v. Dunlop, Lalor (N. Y.) 193.

Limits of this immunity from suit.— To prevent an abuse of this protection, a person is accounted negligent or careless, and blame is imputed to him, if he does not use an extraordinary degree of circumspection and prudence, greater than is commonly practised, and if he might have prevented the accident. Vincent v. Stinehour, 7 Vt. 62, 29 Am. Dec. 145.

Acts of trespass.— In some of the early cases the limits of this protection are very closely drawn in the case of acts having the character of trespasses. Thus it has been held that if an injury be done by the act of the party himself at the time, or he be the immediate cause of it, though it happen accidentally or by misfortune, yet he is answerable. Leame v. Bray, 3 East 593 [citing a case from Y. B. 21 H. 7, where one shooting at butts with a bow and arrow, in itself a lawful act, and with no unlawful purpose in view, yet, by reason of the arrow glancing from the mark, having accidentally wounded a man, was holden in trespass]. In another early case a like accidental injury was held actionable, the court holding that no man shall be excused of a trespass except it may be judged utterly without fault. As if a man by force take my hand and strike you, or if one run across a piece while it is discharging, so that it had been inevitable, and defendant had committed no negligence to give occasion to the hurt. Weaver v. Ward, Hob. 134. See also Winsmore v. Greenbank, Willes 577, 581, wherein it was said: "By injuria is meant a tortious act; it need not be wilful and malicious, for though it be accidental, if it be tortious, an action will lie." Compare Vincent v. Stinehour, 7 Vt. 62, 29 Am. Established by dicta of early cases.— The common-law doctrine of necessity is one that is now too firmly established to be drawn in question, and yet, perhaps, necessarily from its very character, it seems somewhat undefined as to its application and extent. It may be remarked that it is not less unquestionable as an established doctrine, because its origin, as far as regards a justification at the common law, is only to be found in the illustrations and arguments of the older authorities, and not in any direct adjudication. American Print Works v. Lawrence, 23 N. J. L. 590, 57 Am. Dec. 420.

Common-law maxims.— Necessitas inducit privilegium quoad jura privata,— with respect to private rights necessity privileges a person acting under its influence. Broom Leg. Max. (7th ed.) 11; Surocco v. Geary, 3 Cal. 69, 58 Am. Dec. 385; American Print Works v. Lawrence, 21 N. J. L. 248, 1 Code Rep. (N. Y.) 14 [reversed on other grounds in 21 N. J. L. 714, 47 Am. Dec. 190]. "Necessity, says Lord Coke, makes that lawful which would be otherwise unlawful. Whitlock's Case, 8 Coke 69*b*. It is the law of a particular time and place. Hale P. C. 54. It overcomes the law (Blackford v. Alkin, Hob. 144), and it defends what it compels (Hale, P. C. 54). In these brief maxims is written the whole reason of the law that justifies the destruction of private property for the public good." Harrison v. Wisdom, 7 Heisk. (Tenn.) 99, 116. It is one of those cases to which the maxim applies, salus populi suprema est lex. Taylor v. Plymouth, 8 Metc. (Mass.) 462; American Print Works v. Lawrence, 23 N. J. L. 590, 57 Am. Case of King's Prerogative in Saltpetre, 12 Coke 12. The maxim of the law is that "a private mischief is to be endured rather than a public inconvenience." Conwell v. Emrie, 2 Ind. 35; Field v. Des Moines, 39 Iowa 575, 18 Am. Rep. 46; Respublica v. Sparhawk, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 357. Lord Hale calls it lex temporis et loci, and one of the counsel has aptly termed it the lex instantis,— lawless, but not responsible. Hale v. Lawrence, 21 N. J. L. 714, 47 Am. Dec. 190 [reversing on other grounds 21 N. J. L. 248, 1 Code Rep. (N. Y.) 14].

Scope of doctrine.— The principle applies as well to personal as to real estate; to goods as to houses; to life as to property; in solitude as in a crowded city; in a state of nature as in a civil society. American Print Works v. Lawrence, 21 N. J. L. 248, 1 Code Rep. (N. Y.) 14 [reversed on other grounds in 21 N. J. L. 714, 47 Am. Dec. 190]. Such necessity is difficult of definition except in very general terms, and each case must depend upon its own facts. An unsubstantial panic is not such a necessity. Such a state of facts must be shown as to leave no doubt of an impending, imminent peril, or that reasonable cause existed for the apprehension of such a peril. Otherwise those who caused the damage will be liable therefor. Field v. Des Moines, 39 Iowa 575, 18 Am. Rep. 46; American Print Works v. Lawrence, 23 N. J. L. 590, 57 Am. rule of the criminal law which sometimes excuses an act, on the ground of self-preservation, which would otherwise amount to a crime.[34]

(II) For the Public Safety. The instance most frequently alluded to in the books is the right to destroy private property to prevent the spread of a conflagration. Other common instances where the right may be lawfully exercised occur when a use or destruction is necessary to prevent the advance of a hostile army, the ravages of a pestilence, or any other great public calamity.[35]

Question of fact for jury.— Whether an imminent and absolute necessity exists to destroy property for the public good is a question that is to be determined by the jury on the facts of each particular case. Hale v. Lawrence, 21 N. J. L. 714, 47 Am. Dec. 190 [reversing on other grounds 21 N. J. L. 248, 1 Code Rep. (N. Y.) 14]; Harrison v. Wisdom, 7 Heisk. (Tenn.) 99.

By whom exercised.— The right to take or destroy private property, if it can be esteemed a legal right at all, does not appertain to sovereignty, but to individuals considered as individuals. It may be exercised by a single individual for his own personal safety or security or for the preservation of his own property, or by a community of individuals in defense of their common safety or in the protection of their common rights. It is essentially a private and not a public right. Hale v. Lawrence, 21 N. J. L. 714, 47 Am. Dec. 190 [reversing 21 N. J. L. 248, 1 Code Rep. (N. There is no such limitation of the common-law right of necessity as that the destruction must be done only to protect the property of him who causes it, and not the property of others alone. If it were so, and such should be announced to be the rule of law, there would be an end to all efficient efforts to arrest the progress of any conflagration. Noy's Max. pp. 25, 22. The taking of viands to satisfy urgent hunger, the necessity being made to appear, this is no felony or larceny. So a jail being on fire by casualty, and the prisoners enabled to get out, this is no escape nor breaking of the prison. 15 Vin. Abr. 534."

Advance of hostile army.— The destruction of a bridge or a boat, to check the advance of an army, or the explosion of a magazine of powder, or the destruction of munitions of war or military supplies or any article of contraband of war, is but the exercise of a recognized and belligerent right; and where an army is known to be uncontrolled and licentious, whose occupation of captured places in lines of march is accompanied by acts of besotted vandalism, the destruction of such private property as is calculated to increase the public peril, as intoxicating liquors, would be justifiable upon the grounds of public necessity. Harrison v. Wisdom, 7 Heisk. (Tenn.) 99.

(III) To Preserve Life or Property. Again, a use or destruction by one person of the property of another, where necessary to preserve life or even, in some cases, to preserve property, may be justified under this law. In such case the party injured has no legal redress.[36]

(IV) Distinguished from Law of Eminent Domain. This right to destroy property in cases of emergency is not the exercise of the right of eminent domain — the taking of property for public use within a statutory or constitutional provision requiring compensation.[37]

Field v. Des Moines, 39 Iowa 575, 18 Am. Rep. 46].

Pulling down dangerous ruins.—In analogy to the doctrine of nuisances and the case of captains of ships throwing overboard the cargo to save the lives of the crews, firemen may pull down chimneys left in a ruined and dangerous state by a fire, to prevent their remaining to endanger lives, and will not be liable for damage caused by their falling. Dewey v. White, M. & M. 56.

A memorable instance of folly in refusing to act upon this law is recorded in the third volume of Clarendon's history. It is there mentioned that the lord mayor of London, in 1666, when that city was on fire, would not give directions for, or consent to, the pulling down of forty wooden houses, or to the removal of the personalty belonging to the lawyers of the Temple, then on circuit, for fear he would be answerable for a trespass, and in consequence of this conduct half of that great city was burned. 36. To preserve life.— A right of self-defense, of self-protection, without regard to the lives or property of others, exists by necessity in every individual placed in certain situations at sea or on land, in the country or in a city. Per Randolph, J., in American Print Works v. Lawrence, 23 N. J. L. 590, 57 Am. Dec. 420. Thus no action will lie for trespassing on the land of another, where such use of the property was necessary in order to escape death from an enemy. American Print Works v. Lawrence, 21 N. J. L. 248, 1 Code Rep. (N. Y.) 14 [reversed on other grounds in 21 N. J. L. 714, 47 Am. Dec. 190]; Respublica v. Sparhawk, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 357. Where, for the safety of his boat and passengers in a great tempest, the ferryman and passengers throw overboard property being transported, the damage accruing only by the act of God, as by tempest, no default being in the ferryman, everyone ought to bear his loss for the safeguard and life of a man; so if a tempest arises in the sea, levandi navis causa, and for the salvation of the lives of men, it is lawful for passengers to cast over the merchandises. Mouse's Case, 12 Coke 63.

To preserve property.— The court will not sustain an action against anyone who appropriates or destroys the property of another with bona fide intention of preventing injury to himself or others. Spalding v. Preston, 21 Vt. 9, 50 Am. Dec. 68. And a man may in some cases justify the destroying of his neighbor's property where such a course is necessary for the preservation of his own. So people of a neighborhood may justify a trespass on the premises of another for the purpose of destroying noxious animals. Hale v. Lawrence, 21 N. J. L. 714, 47 Am. Dec. 190 [reversing on other grounds 21 N. J. L. 248, 1 Code Rep. (N. Y.) 14]; Respublica v. Sparhawk, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 357. Familiar examples cited in the English books are, that when plaintiff's dog is killed in the act of pursuing defendant's deer in his park, or rabbits in his warren, or poultry within his own grounds, this will justify the killing without proof of any higher necessity. Harrison v. Wisdom, 7 Heisk. (Tenn.) 99.

37. Individuals are not liable to compensate persons thus damaged; nor are municipal corporations responsible for property destroyed by public officials to prevent the spread of a fire, both because such destruction is not an exercise of the right of eminent domain, and on the general ground that such corporations are not liable, in the absence of express statute, for damages caused by acts of their officers.

Contra, see Bishop v. Macon, 7 Ga. 200, 50 Am. Dec. 400, discussed in Dunbar v. San Francisco, 1 Cal. 355. In New Jersey it was held that the destruction of property by the officials of a municipal corporation to prevent the spread of a fire, under authority conferred by a statute, is the exercise of the power of eminent domain, unless the destruction is justified under the overruling law of necessity. Hale v. Lawrence, 21 N. J. L. 714, 47 Am. Dec. 190 [reversing on other grounds 21 N. J. L. 248, 1 Code Rep. (N. Y.) 14]; American Print Works v. Lawrence, 23 N. J. L. 9, 590, 57 Am. Dec. 420.

Powers of eminent domain and police.— In their leading features the powers of eminent

(v) Statutory Powers and Liability. In many states, statutes have been passed conferring authority upon certain officials of municipal corporations to destroy property to prevent the spread of a fire; some of these statutes affect the corporation with a limited liability.[38]

3. By Exercise of Public Rights or Powers — a. General Governmental Powers. It is necessary to the very existence of civilized communities that the state and those who exercise its powers should have a large measure of protection from liability for damage to individuals which must often result from official acts; and courts have repeatedly declared such an immunity from suit to be an established common-law principle.[39] As regards the state or other domain and police are plainly different, the latter reaching even to destruction of property, as in tearing down a house to prevent the spread of a conflagration, or to removal at the expense of the owner, as in the case of a nuisance tending to breed disease. In the first instance the community proceeds on the ground of overwhelming calamity, and in the second because of the fault of the owner of the thing; in either case compensation is not a condition of the exercise of the power. The same general principle attends its exercise in other directions, and it is generally based upon disaster, fault, or inevitable necessity. On the other hand the power of eminent domain is conditioned generally upon compensation to the owner, and for the most part is founded, not in calamity or fault, but in public utility. These distinctions clearly mark the cases distant from the border-line between the two powers, but in or near to it they begin to fade into each other, and it is difficult to say when compensation becomes a duty and when not. Per Agnew, C. J., in Philadelphia v. Scott, 81 Pa. St. 80, 22 Am. Rep. 738. See also similar discussions in American Print Works v. Lawrence, 23 N. J. L. 590, 57 Am. Dec. 420; Keller v. Corpus Christi, 50 Tex. 614, 32 Am. Rep. 613.

38. See Municipal Corporations.

A police power.— It has been said that such statutes are mere regulations of the law of necessity, appointing a municipal agent to judge of the emergency, and do not sanction any destruction which could not be justified independently of them. Wynehamer v. People, 13 N. Y. 378, 12 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 238, per Comstock and Selden, JJ. [citing Russell v. New York, 2 Den. (N. Y.) 461, opinion of Sherman, Senator]; Hale v. Lawrence, 21 N. J. L. 714, 47 Am. Dec. 190 [reversing on other grounds 21 N. J. L. 248, 1 Code Rep. (N. Y.) 14]. By the better authority, however, the statutes are valid police regulations, and loss occasioned by a proper exercise of the power must be borne by the party injured, except in so far as the statutes may require compensation, even though no overruling necessity did in fact exist. Philadelphia v. Scott, 81 Pa. St. 80, 22 Am. Rep. 738; White v. Charleston, 2 Hill (S. C.) 571; Keller v. Corpus Christi, 50 Tex. 614, 32 Am. Rep. 613; Bowditch v. Boston, 101 U. S. 16, 25 L. ed. 980. Thus, where a statute fixes a liability on the corporation, the party injured must bring his case within the terms of the provision, or he has no cause of action. Liability of officials.— Officers of the corporation, upon whom the authority is conferred, will be liable if they exceed their powers (Parsons v. Pettingell, 11 Allen (Mass.) 507); but if they act within their jurisdiction and without negligence the statutes afford a complete protection (Bishop v. Macon, 7 Ga. 200, 50 Am. Dec. 400; American Print Works v. Lawrence, 23 N. J. L. 590, 57 Am. Dec. 420, 23 N. J. L. 9; White v. Charleston, 2 Hill (S. C.) 571).

Effect of statutes on natural right.— Such statutes do not deprive any citizen of his natural right to destroy buildings to prevent the spread of fire. He may still exercise that right at the peril of being held responsible, as in other cases, for an error of judgment as to the existence of the necessity. American Print Works v. Lawrence, 21 N. J. L. 248, 1 Code Rep. (N. Y.) 14 [reversed on other grounds in 21 N. J. L. 714, 47 Am. Dec. 190]. See also Parsons v. Pettingell, 11 Allen (Mass.) 507, where the point was not decided because not raised below.

39. An interesting exposition of this immunity from suit, which is a necessary attribute of every civilized government, having reference particularly to police powers, is that by Redfield, J., in an early Vermont case, Spalding v. Preston, 21 Vt. 9, 50 Am. Dec. 68. See also Blair v. Forehand, 100 Mass. 136, 1 Am. Rep. 94, and cases cited; Wynehamer v. People, 13 N. Y. 378, 12 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 238 [affirming 20 Barb. (N. Service of criminal process.— The maxim of the law that a man's house is his castle is applicable only to civil suits and has not effect to restrain an officer of the law from breaking into and entering a dwelling for the purpose of serving criminal process upon the occupant. Barnard v. Bartlett, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 501, 57 Am. Dec. 123. See also Maleverer v. Spinke, 1 Dyer 35*b*; and, generally, Process; Sheriffs and Constables; Trespass.

sovereignty this privilege is absolute in the absence of consent or permission to subject it to liability by suit,[40] while judicial, ministerial, and like public officials are protected sufficiently to prevent the government from being impeded in the exercise of its functions, but not to permit damage to individuals by the flagrant misuse of power.[41]

Officers acting judicially — Generally.— Judges are not responsible to private parties in civil actions for judicial acts, however injurious may be those acts and however much they may deserve condemnation, unless, perhaps, when the acts are palpably in excess of the jurisdiction of the judge and are done maliciously and corruptly. Randall v. Brigham, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 523, 19 L. ed. 285. For various other statements of the protection extended to judicial acts see:

Alabama.— Craig v. Burnett, 32 Ala. 728.

Motives of judge.— If the authority and jurisdiction of a court is once admitted in any case, it were a preposterous proposition to offer evidence to a jury as to its motives. Chaos would come again if the judgment of the court could be impeached and its validity tried before a jury in a collateral action on the issue as to the motives of the judge in entering the judgment. Bradley v. Fisher, 7 D. C. 32 [affirmed in 13 Wall. (U. S.) 335, 20 L. ed. 646]. To the same effect see Bailey v. Wiggins, 1 Houst. (Del.) 299.

Even jurors, who are judges of fact, are always exempted from prosecution by action or indictment for what they did in their judicial character. Yates v. Lansing, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 282, 293, wherein it was said: "It did not escape the discernment of the early sages of the law that the principle requisite to secure a free, vigorous, and independent administration of justice, applied to render jurors, as well as judges, inviolable;" Floyd v. Barker, 12 Coke 23 [cited in Taaffe v. Downes, 3 Moore P. C. 36, note a].

Ministerial officers — General rule.— A ministerial officer is protected while acting within legal authority (Thames Mfg. Co. v. Lathrop, 7 Conn. 550; Rogers v. Dutt, 13 Moore P. C. 209) and with due skill and caution (American Print Works v. Lawrence, 21 N. J. L. 248). Where, however, a ministerial officer does anything against the duty of his office, an action lies. Rogers v. Brewster, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 125.

Negligent acts.— It is frequently stated as a general rule that ministerial officers charged with certain duties, their office being voluntary, and compensation being received for their services, are liable at the suit of the person injured for all damage caused by the negligent performance of their public duty.

England.— Pickering v. James, L. R. 8 C. P. 489; Ferguson v. Kinnoull, 9 Cl. & F. 251.

This proposition, like many other general rules, is not of universal application, it being confined to those cases in which the duty is charged for the benefit of individual members of the community, not extending to those which are due the public as an entirety. Williams v. Adams, 3 Allen (Mass.) 171, wherein it was held that no action would lie against the keeper of a house of correction for mere negligence in not furnishing sufficient food and warmth of room, whereby an inmate was injured in his health, no express malice being shown, nor any such gross negligence as to authorize the inference of implied malice and intention to do bodily injury; that the effect of entertaining such an action would be to transfer to the supervision of the courts of law questions as to the proper management of such places, and to require the judiciary to pass upon all alleged abuses arising from neglect. The court distinguished actions against sheriffs and their deputies for misfeasance and non-feasance in serving processes as being cases of direct personal responsibility to the individuals affected thereby, citing as authority for this distinction Spear v. Cummings, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 224, 34 Am. Dec. 53, and Russell v. Devon, 2 T. R. 667, 673. In the latter case, an action brought against a county for neglect of duty, Ashhurst, J., said: "It has been said that there is a principle of law on which this action might be maintained, namely, that where an individual sustains an injury by the neglect or default of another, the law gives him a remedy. But there is another general principle of law which is more applicable to this case, that it is better that an individual should sustain an injury than that the public should suffer an inconvenience." See also BRIDGES; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS; STREETS AND HIGHWAYS.

b. Statutory Powers — (I) General Rule. Individuals may also suffer damage by the exercise, with due skill and caution, of powers conferred by statute for the general benefit of the public; but such damage can never be redressed in judicial proceedings, whatever consequences may follow,[42] unless positive law has decreed that compensation shall be made.[43]

(II) Applications of Rule. Thus, apart from the law requiring compensation, no cause of action exists for damage resulting from the proper exercise of powers conferred by statute to construct and maintain necessary public improvements, whether the damage is merely consequential or results directly from the taking of private property for the improvement under the power of eminent domain.[44]

42. See, generally, the cases cited infra, this note, and note 43 et seq.

Scope of doctrine.— To those who are exercising such power with due care and skill the statute affords a complete indemnity, notwithstanding the injury complained of is such as would be an invasion of a common-law legal right. Rigney v. Chicago, 102 Ill. 64. The damages held to be excusable must be "necessarily attendant on the operation" of the thing authorized (Beseman v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 50 N. J. L. 235, 13 Atl. 164 [affirmed in 52 N. J. L. 221, 20 Atl. 169, and followed in Thompson v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 51 N. J. L. 42, 15 Atl. 833]; and not such as are "essentially a direct invasion of private property" (Costigan v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 54 N. J. L. 233, 240, 23 Atl. 810). In the case last cited, in the language of Depue, J., "the distinction between those injuries incidentally and unavoidably arising in the course of the exercise of franchises conferred for those purposes, which are denominated public uses, with the consequent immunity from actions therefor, and injuries occasioned by the direct invasion of private property under color of such franchises, which are actionable wrongs, has been adopted by the supreme court of the United States, as will be made apparent upon a comparison of the opinions in Pumpelly v. Green Bay, etc., Canal Co., 13 Wall. (U. S.) 166, 20 L. ed. 537; Northern Transp. Co. v. Chicago, 99 U. S. 635, 25 L. ed. 336; and Baltimore, etc., Potomac R. Co. v. Fifth Baptist Church, 108 U. S. 317, 2 S. Ct. 719, 27 L. ed. 739."

43. Compensation by positive law.—To obviate the hardship and injustice caused by this well-settled principle of law it is provided in most of the states of the Union, either by the constitution or by statute law, that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation. Rigney v. Chicago, 102 Ill. 64; Stevens v. Middlesex Canal, 12 Mass. 466; Householder v. Kansas City, 83 Mo. 488; Ward v. Peck, 49 N. J. L. 42, 6 Atl. 805; Miller v. Morristown, 47 N. J. Eq. 62, 20 Atl. 61. See, generally, EMINENT DOMAIN.

Such laws preserve rather than create rights.— Laws which require compensation preserve rights which, but for the grant of power to take or damage private property for a public use, would be legal, rather than create new causes of action; and therefore only such damage can be recovered as would have been actionable had the parties who caused it not been acting under legislative authority. Hall v. Bristol, L. R. 2 C. P. 322 [citing Caledonian R. Co. v. Ogilvy, 2 Macq. 229]. See also Tyler v. Western Union Tel. Co., 54 Fed. 634.

Nominal damages.— Where compensation is thus required, an injury cannot be said to be damnum absque injuria, although no present or special damage can be proved; but nominal damages at least may be recovered, as in the case of the invasion of other legal rights. See Dorman v. Ames, 12 Minn. 451; Paris Mountain Water Co. v. Greenville, 53 S. C. 82, 30 S. E. 699; and infra, I, E.

If an action would be maintainable, it must be assumpsit, founded upon an implied promise.

(III) Exceptions to Rule. If, however, the damage is caused by unlawful acts which exceed the statutory powers conferred,[45] or from negligent conduct or

But surely the law would not imply a promise in them to pay for that from which they derive no benefit, and which the legislature authorized them to take." See also Bailey v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., 4 Harr. (Del.) 389, 44 Am. Dec. 593. When exercised by private individuals or corporations, see McLauchlin v. Charlotte, etc., R. Co., 5 Rich. (S. C.) 583; McKinney v. Monongahela Nav. Co., 14 Pa. St. 65, 66, 53 Am. Dec. 517, wherein it is said: "As an action lies not against the state for direct or consequential damage, it lies not against her locum tenens, clothed with her power and protected by her shield. She is not always in a condition to execute her works of public improvement with her own hand, and her prerogative would be useless did it not extend to the instrument with which she is compelled to work."

Remedy by petition.—Compensation for the loss where property is taken is the measure of redress to which natural justice entitles the injured individual, but for any obligation devolving upon the state therefor it must be appealed to by petition to the sovereign or legislature, not by action. McLauchlin v. Charlotte, etc., R. Co., 5 Rich. (S. C.) 583.

Contrary views.— In some states it has been held that the right to compensation where private property is taken for public purposes by the right of eminent domain is inherent in positive as well as in natural justice, and must be made even in the absence of any statutory or constitutional requirement. Brewer v. Bowman, 9 Ga. 37; Young v. McKenzie, 3 Ga. 31; Doe v. Georgia R., etc., Co., 1 Ga. 524; Johnston v. Rankin, 70 N. C. 550; Cornelius v. Glen, 52 N. C. 512; State v. Glen, 52 N. C. 321 [approving dictum in Raleigh, etc., R. Co. v. Davis, 19 N. C. 451].

In other states the immunity from liability for either direct or consequential damage is denied where the power is exercised by an individual or a corporation, for the promotion of private interests. Bradley v. New York, etc., R. Co., 21 Conn. 294; Trenton Water Power Co. v. Raff, 36 N. J. L. 335; Tinsman v. Belvidere Delaware R. Co., 26 N. J. L. 148, 69 Am. A. 105 [citing Cogswell v. New York, etc., R. Co., 103 N. Y. 10, 8 N. E. 537]. In New York it is held on general grounds which would seem to make it applicable whether the work was being prosecuted by the state directly, or by private individuals or corporations, that adjacent landowners have a cause of action for consequential damage in all cases where their legal rights have been violated, although such violation was absolutely necessary to the proper exercise of the statutory powers. As, for example, a cause of action exists for an invasion of the right of property by throwing quantities of earth, gravel, and the like upon the adjacent land in blasting, irrespective of the question of negligence and want of skill in doing the work. St. Peter v. Denison, 58 N. Y. 416, 17 Am. Rep. 258; Hay v. Cohoes Co., 2 N. Y. 159, 51 Am. Dec. 279 [affirming 3 Barb. (N. Y.) 42]; Selden v. Delaware, etc., Canal Co., 24 Barb. (N. Nuisances.— For damage resulting from the operation of a public improvement with due skill and caution no cause of action arises. If a nuisance is legalized by statute no action is maintainable in the absence of a statute providing compensation therefor. Thus, none will lie for damage caused by smoke, dust, vibration, and the like, in the proper use of a railroad. Burroughs v. Housatonic R. Co., 15 Conn. 124, 38 Am. Dec. 64; Thompson v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 51 N. J. L. 42, 15 Atl. 833; Morris, etc., R. Co. v. Newark, 10 N. J. Eq. 352; Hammersmith, etc., R. Co. v. Brand, L. R. 4 H. L. 171; Glasgow Union R. Co. v. Hunter, L. R. 2 H. L. Sc. 78; Rex v. Pease, 4 B. & Ad. 30. The owner of real estate adjoining public land or water highways holds it subject to the right of the legislature to use the highway at will, and if, in the use of it, indirect injuries arise to such property, it is an inconvenience to which he must submit unless the state makes compensation as a mere gratuity. It is damnum absque injuria, a damage not merely without a remedy, but without right to a remedy. Bailey v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., 4 Harr. (Del.) 389, 44 Am. Dec. 593.

45. Statutory powers exceeded.—Where the erection and maintenance of a public work are not conformable to the provisions and conditions of the statute authorizing it, an action will lie. This results from the plain principles of law founded on the maxim sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas. Winkley v. Salisbury Mfg. Co., 14 Gray (Mass.) 443; Hill v. Sayles, 12 Metc. (Mass.) 142; Newark Plank Road, etc., Co. v. Elmer, 9 N. J. Eq. 754. See, generally, cases cited infra, I, E, 2. Where, by statute, a public work is authorized, like construction of a railroad, if in the course of such construction a river is obstructed without there being any real necessity therefor, but only because the engineers thought it the best mode, the easiest, and perhaps the cheapest, and injury is caused by such obstruction, it may be remedied by the appropriate common-law action, and the party injured need not conform to the statutory unskilfulness in their exercise,[46] it will constitute a legal injury which may result in damage which may be redressed by an action.

E. Wrong Without Loss or Damage — 1. General Rule. Every injury to a legal right imports damage, and entitles an injured party to his action, and a recovery of nominal damages if none other are proved.[47]

2. Application of Rule — a. In General. Invasions of rights of this character, which import damage redressible by action, are breaches of contract,[48] remedy. Estabrooks v. Peterborough, etc., R. Co., 12 Cush. (Mass.) 224.

46. Negligent exercise.— Where damage is not necessarily incident to the erection and maintenance of a public improvement authorized by statute, but results from an improper or negligent manner of doing it, it constitutes legal injury which may be redressed by action.

Intentional failure to prove special damage. — The rule stated in the text is equally so whether the absence of proof on the subject arises from design or inadvertence on the part of plaintiff. Searles v. Cronk, 38 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 320.

Acts beneficial to plaintiff.—The legal right of plaintiff having been invaded, he is entitled to maintain his action although the act of defendant has conferred upon him a benefit rather than an injury. Reasons for rule.—"There are some cases in which the award of merely nominal damages is perfectly consistent with this rule [that neglect of duty where no loss occurs is incapable of giving a right of action] either because the party has other substantial redress, or because the nominal damages cover all that are suffered and answer as a preventive by way of warning against further injury. An example of the first class is where a plaintiff in replevin, after obtaining his property and establishing his title, obtains only nominal damages. Examples of the second class are had in cases of technical trespass . . . where the award of costs has its effect by way of warning, and the judgment itself may establish a right before in dispute." Per Cooley, J., in Post v. Campau, 42 Mich. 90, 96, 3 N. W. 272.

Scope of doctrine.— It was said in a Vermont case that "the English courts have recently gone far toward breaking up the whole system of giving verdicts, when no actual injury has been done, unless there be some right in question which it is important to the plaintiff to establish." Y.) 548, 551, wherein it was said: "The law administered in this state at present does not rest upon mere technical rules, but upon the broader basis of right, and, in the investigation of claims, upon the whole law of the land, legal and equitable."

direct positive injuries to the person,[49] and violations of the right of property, real or personal.[50]

b. Rights of Property. Where a property right is invaded it is often imperative that it should be vindicated by action, irrespective of present damage, to prevent a continuance or repetition of the wrong from becoming the foundation of an adverse right;[51] as, for instance, the abridgment or misuse of an ease-utterly vain thing. It subjects no man to damages for not doing an act perfectly nugatory."

In Georgia this is declared by the code, which provides that for every breach of contract by one of the parties thereto, a right of action results to the other party. Richmond, etc., R. Co. v. Bedell, 88 Ga. 590, 15 S. E. 676.

Covenants, guaranty and indemnity contracts.— Extreme illustrations of the operation of this doctrine sometimes arise out of breaches of covenants in deeds and guaranty and indemnity contracts, where actions are sustained and nominal damages recovered although plaintiff has not yet been damnified and may never be. See Poling v. Maddox, 41 W. Va. 779, 24 S. E. 999; also COVENANTS; GUARANTY; INDEMNITY. As to covenants, it has been vigorously assailed in Michigan by Cooley, J. After stating the general principles relating to causes of action and the reason why actions are sometimes sustained although no present damage has resulted, he said in part: "To give an action for nominal damages upon a covenant which was intended to accomplish a substantial protection is to confuse all sound ideas of legal remedy. It gives no substantial redress; it establishes no right for future protection; it cannot operate by way of warning; and it taxes the public, and taxes the time and attention of courts in enforcing an injury which as yet exists only in imagination and may never ripen into substantial wrong. It is idle to call that a remedy which redresses nothing, but leaves the real injury in existence as before, threatening to inflict the same damage and in the same way. . . . When technical rules only result in injustice it is well to consider whether others, equally consistent with certainty in the law, and more consonant to equity, may not be recognized." Post v. Campau, 42 Mich. 90, 96, 3 N. W. 272.

49. Illustrations given by courts arguendo. — If a man gives another a cuff on the ear, though it cost him nothing, yet he shall have his action, for it is a personal injury. Ashby v. White, 2 Ld. Raym. 938, 1 Salk. 19, 1 Bro. P. C. 62. The law does not upon every occasion require distinct proof that an inconvenience has been sustained. For example, if the hand of A touched the person of B, who shall declare that pain has or has not ensued? The only mode to render B secure is to infer that inconvenience has actually resulted. Seneca Road Co. v. Auburn, etc., R. Co., 5 Hill (N. Y.) 170 [quoting from Hamm N. P. (Am. ed. 1823) 39].

50. Trespass on land.— A person may sustain an action of trespass for an unauthorized entry upon his land, although he shows no specific damage to have thereby accrued to him. Parker v. Griswold, 17 Conn. 288, 42 Am. Dec. 739; Dudley v. Tilton, 14 La. Ann. 283; Ashby v. White, 2 Ld. Raym. 938, 1 Salk. 19, 1 Bro. P. C. 62; Marzetti v. Williams, 1 B. & Ad. 415. By the laws of England every invasion of private property, be it ever so minute, is a trespass. No man can set his foot upon my ground without my license, but he is liable to an action though the damage be nothing. Entick v. Carrington, 19 How. St. Tr. 1030, 2 Wils. C. P. 275.

Personal property.— Nominal damages are frequently proper in actions of replevin, where no actual damage has been caused by the wrongful act. Per Cooley, J., in Post v. Campau, 42 Mich. 90, 3 N. W. 272; Coe v. Peacock, 14 Ohio St. 187. See, generally, REPLEVIN; and for other decisions relative to causes of action for violation of personal property rights see infra, I, H.

Right of common.— It is sufficient to sustain an action for an injury to a right of common that the plaintiff prove his right, and that the defendant put upon it cattle, or (if he be another commoner) more cattle than he ought to; and he need not prove any specific injury. Mellor v. Spateman, 1 Saund. 343, 346*a* note; Wells v. Watling, 2 W. Bl. 1233 [disapproving Marys' Case, 9 Coke 111, (cited in Marzetti v. Williams, 1 B. & Ad. 415)]; Hobson v. Todd, 4 T. R. 71; Pindar v. Wadsworth, 2 East 154.

Injuries caused by dams.— Where land belonging to one party has been overflowed by a dam erected by another, the former is entitled to at least nominal damages (Stafford v. Maddox, 87 Ga. 537, 13 S. E. 559; Ellington v. Bennett, 59 Ga. 286; Dorman v. Ames, 12 Minn. 451); even though it is occasioned by throwing back the water within the natural channel of the stream, whereby it is merely raised to a slightly greater height upon the banks (Hendrick v. Cook, 4 Ga. 241; Omelvany v. Jaggers, 2 Hill (S. C.) 634, 27 Am. Dec. 417). Contra, Chalk v. McAlily, 11 Rich. (S. C.) 153; Garrett v. McKie, 1 Rich. (S. C.) 444.

Act prohibited by statute.— Where a statute gives an action for a particular act, as the making, without right, of a machine for which another has a patent, the doing of the act imports a damage, and no actual damage is necessary to support the suit. Per Story, J., in Whittemore v. Cutter, 1 Gall. (U. S.) 429, 1 Robb Pat. Cas. 40, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,601.

Indirect injuries.— The doctrine is not limited to immediate and forcible injuries, but the same reason applies to those which are indirect and committed without violence. The difficulty lies in the form of the action, and not in the substance of the remedy. Greenleaf v. Ludington, 15 Wis. 558, 82 Am. Dec. 698.

An act which constitutes an abridgment of an easement must be an injury and a cause of action to the party entitled to the easement without proof of actual damage sustained (Plumb v. McGannon, 32 U. C. Q. B. 8); and if the party having an easement in land put it to a use other than that falling within his right, the party injured may maintain an action and recover nominal damages in order to vindicate that right (Appleton v. Fullerton, 1 Gray (Mass.) 186). See, generally, and for what is an unreasonable use, MILLS; NAVIGABLE WATERS; WATERS.

Reasonable use.— The right to the benefit and advantage of water flowing past land in a natural stream is not an absolute and exclusive right to the flow of all the water in its natural state; and it is only for an unreasonable and unauthorized use of the common benefit that an action will lie. Chatfield v. Wilson, 28 Vt. 49; Embrey v. Owen, 6 Exch. 353, 15 Jur. 633. Thus there may be a diminution in the quantity, or a retardation or an acceleration of the natural current, which is indispensable for a general valuable use of the water and perfectly consistent with the existence of the common right. The diminution, retardation, or acceleration, not positively and sensibly injurious, by diminishing the value of the common right, is an implied element in the right of using a stream at all. Dorman v. Ames, 12 Minn. 451 [citing Palmer v. Mulligan, 3 Cai. (N. Y.) 307, 2 Am. Dec. 270]; Tyler v. Wilkinson, 4 Mason (U. S.) 397, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,312. It is very difficult — indeed impossible — to define precisely the limits which separate the reasonable from the wrongful application. It is only a question of degree, and whether the use is unreasonable and actionable must depend on the facts in the case and the state of the law of the particular jurisdiction applicable thereto. On the one hand it could not be permitted that the owner of many thousands of acres of porous soil abutting on one part of the stream could be permitted to irrigate continually by canals and drains, and so cause a serious diminution of the quantity of water, though the loss to the natural stream arose only from the natural absorption and natural evaporation in such use; on the other hand one's common sense would be shocked that a riparian owner could not dip a watering-pot into the stream to water his garden or allow his cattle or family to drink. In America a very liberal use of the stream for the purposes of irrigation and for carrying on manufactories is permitted. So in France, where everyone may use it "en bon père de famille et pour son plus grand avantage" (Code Civil, art. 640 (a), by Palliett). In England a user to that extent would hardly be permitted. Embrey v. Owen, 6 Exch. 353, 15 Jur. 633 [citing Kent Comm.; Wood v. Waud, 3 Exch. 748, 13 Jur. 472].

Underground streams.— Rights may be acquired in subterranean waters flowing in well-defined watercourses, and violations thereof vindicated by action, where the circumstances are such as would enable plaintiff to recover if the stream was wholly above ground. Delhi v. Youmans, 50 Barb. (N. Y.) 316.

Other illustrations.— A deposit of sawdust in the bed of a stream or in a mill-pond is an injury to the right of one entitled to the use of the water. Delaware, etc., Canal Co. v. Torrey, 33 Pa. St. 143 [approving Jones v. Crow, 32 Pa. St. 398]; Mitchell v. Barry, 26 U. C. Q. B. 416. A person having a customary right to a continuous flow of water for domestic purposes from a spout supplied from the water of a stream has a right of action against another who, by abstracting the water from the stream in quantities, does not leave enough to meet the exigencies of him who has such right. Harrop v. Hirst, L. R. 4 Exch. 43. That sufficient water still continues to flow in the stream for defendant's use if he would erect a dam and open a raceway will not destroy a cause of action for an unreasonable diversion. The right of one party cannot be taken away for the sake of the convenience of another, even under such circumstances. Crooker v. Bragg, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 260, 25 Am. Dec. 555.

to a contract, with rights acquired thereby, is actionable.[54] If the act of interference whereby the breach of contract is caused is itself a legal wrong, as where there is fraud, libel, slander, violence, or actionable threats, it is not doubted but that an action lies for the resulting damage against the party guilty of the tort.[55] An action also lies, by virtue of statute, regardless of the character of the act of interference, where the relation of master and servant, in its strict sense, is thereby interrupted.[56]

(II) Motive or Intent. Where the elements of legal or statutory wrong are both wanting, it is held by some courts that no right whatever is violated, and the loss is damnum absque injuria, however malicious may have been the motive, or evil the intent, of the party interfering;[57] by others that a right is violated if the act by which the breach is induced is coupled with malice or other evil intent, stress being laid on the state of mind as the essential requisite of the cause of action.[58] Neither of these views, it is submitted, is in accord with the undisputed principles which govern malice in its legal aspect,[59] and it has been so argued in well-considered cases. These hold that a right existing by contract is a positive legal right, for an invasion of which he who causes it, although not a party, is affected with legal liability for the resulting damage. The act being wrongful, evil motive, apart from legal malice, is unimportant, as in the case of other violations of legal rights.[60] Direct decisions supporting this view are few in Motive.— If to procure another to break his contract with a third person is not a legal wrong, and the means used to procure the breach are lawful, the motive cannot make it a wrong any more than a good motive would justify fraud, deceit, slander, or violence to effect the same purpose. But two classes of exceptions.— "With this rule there can be safely and consistently made but two classes of exceptions. One such exception was made by the English 'Statute of Laborers' to apply where apprentices, menial servants, and others, whose sole means of living was manual labor, were enticed to leave their employment, and may be applied in this state by virtue of, and as regulated by, our own statutes. The other arises where a person has been procured against his will, or contrary to his purpose, by coercion or deception of another, to break his contract." Chambers v. Baldwin, 91 Ky. 121, 15 S. have sprung from the English "Statute of Laborers," is rather founded upon the legal right which the master derives on the contract, and not merely upon the relation of master and servant; and it applies to all contracts of employment if not to contracts of other descriptions); Jones v. Stanly, 76 N. C. 355; Haskins v. Royster, 70 N. C. 601, 16 Am. Rep. 780. In Allen v. Flood, [1898] A. C. 1, decided in the English House of Lords [reversing Flood v. Jackson, [1895] 2 Q. B. 21], this view is taken after an exhaustive discussion of every phase of the subject, and held applicable to all contracts irrespective of their nature. The leading cases of Lumley v. Gye, 2 E. & B. 216, and Bowen v. Hall, 6 Q. B. D. 333, and the case of Temperton v. Russell, [1893] 1 Q. B. 715, are approved on the ground that a legal right acquired by contract had been invaded, and the act therefore constituted a legal wrong; but those portions of the opinions of the judges in those cases which held that malice and evil intent was the gist of the cause of action were disapproved as erroneous dicta. It is there said by Lord Watson (p. 106): "Mr. Justice Erle [in Lumley v. Gye, 2 E. & B. 216] . . . said: 'The authorities are numerous and uniform that an action will lie against a person who procures that a servant shall unlawfully leave his service. The principle involved in these cases comprises the present, for there the right of action in the master arises from the wrongful act of the defendant in procuring that the person hired should break his contract by putting an end to the relation of employer and employed, and the present case is the same.' The learned judge went on to say: . . . 'It is clear that the procurement of the violation of a right is a cause of action in all cases where the violation is an actionable wrong.' These statements embody an intelligible and a salutary principle, and they contain a full explanation of the law upon which the case was decided. He who wilfully induces another to do an unlawful act which, but for his persuasion, would or might never have been committed, is rightly held to be responsible for the wrong which he procured."

Injury to contract right through negligence. — It was held in an English case that the neglect of a waterworks company to keep in repair a water-pipe imbedded in a turnpike embankment gave no cause of action to one who had contracted to cut through the embankment for the owner of adjoining land, for an injury to his contract-right by loss of time and expense caused by the escaping water; that malicious intention was the gist of such cause of action and did not appear from the facts. Cattle v. Stockton Waterworks Co., L. R. 10 Q. B. 453 [following Lumley v. Gye, 2 E. & B. 216]. Of this case it was said in Allen v. Flood, [1898] A. C. 1, 154, per Lord Macnaghten: "I should be disposed to hold that if a right has been knowingly violated, an allegation of malice is superfluous, and that if there has been no violation of any right, malice by itself is not a cause of action."

It is no answer to say that there is a remedy against the contractor, and that the party relies on the contract; for, besides that reason also applying to the case of master and servant, the action on the contract and the action against the malicious wrong-doer may be for a different matter; and the damages occasioned by such malicious injury might be calculated on a very different principle from the amount of the debt which might be the only sum recoverable on the contract. Per Crompton, J., in Lumley v. Gye, 2 E. & B. 216. Where the proposition to be deduced from the case of Ashby v. White, 2 Ld. Raym. 938, Smith Lead. Cas. (7th Am. ed.) 343, is satisfied,— that is, wherever a man does an act which in law and in fact is a wrongful act, and such an act as may, as a natural and probable consequence of it, produce injury to another, and which in the particular case does produce such injury,— an action lies; and the action does not the less lie because the natural and probable consequence of the act complained of is an act done by a third person; or because such act so done by the third person is a breach of duty or contract by him, or an act illegal on his part, or an act otherwise imposing an actionable liability on him. Per Brett, L. J., in Bowen v. Hall, 6 Q. B. D. 333.

Lack of precedent no answer.— The fact that there is no precedent is not conclusive against the right to maintain the action. It is the function of the courts to apply well-established legal principles to the changing circumstances and conditions of human life. But the motive of injuring one's neighbor, or of benefiting one's self at his expense, is as old as human nature. It must for centuries have moved men in countless instances to persuade others to do, or to refrain from doing, particular acts. Per Lord Herschell in Allen v. Flood, [1898] A. C. 1.

61. The breach of the contract being an invasion of a positive legal right, the fact that the party interfering had no knowledge of the existence of a contract would not affect his liability except as it might bear on the quantum of damages. See infra, I, G. Again, the action would perhaps be sustained and the plaintiff entitled to a judgment for nominal damages at all events, even if no present or actual damage had resulted. See supra, I, E, 2, c, (1); 2 Harv. L. Rev. 21; Haskins v. Royster, 70 N. C. 601, 16 Am. Rep. 780, Reade, J., dissenting. Another question is suggested in an article in 2 Harv. L. Rev. p. 21, note 1, in the following language: "One effect of the decision in Lumley v. Gye, 2 E. & B. 216, is to give the plaintiff two causes of action, one in tort and the other in contract, for what may be substantially the same damage. As the causes of action are distinct and consistent, the plaintiff is not obliged to elect, and a recovery upon one cannot be a bar to an action upon the other; but the plaintiff is not en-

3. Actions Ex Delicto for Negligence. Where a duty imposed by contract is negligently performed, resulting in a breach of the agreement, an action will lie, and nominal damages are recoverable, although the action is brought in form ex delicto for the negligence instead of ex contractu for the breach.[62] So, where a duty is imposed by law for the benefit of individuals, it has been held that a party injured by neglect to perform it is entitled to his action although he has not suffered any special damage.[63]

F. Wrong With Loss or Damage — 1. In General. Where legal rights have titled to double compensation; and it would seem, in the absence of direct authority, that an actual recovery of damages in one action ought to be admissible in evidence to reduce damages in the other. But see Bird v. Randall, 1 W. Bl. 373, 387; Thompson v. Howard, 31 Mich. 309."

Laudable motive.— Since the act of interference is itself illegal, as in the case of other invasions of a positive legal right, the fact that the wrong-doer was actuated by motives of self-interest, in business, or by motives wholly laudable, is immaterial. He must be regarded as a malicious intermeddler, using the word "malicious" in its legal sense. Walker v. Cronin, 107 Mass. 555; Haskins v. Royster, 70 N. C. 601, 16 Am. Rep. 780 [followed in Jones v. Stanly, 76 N. C. 355].

Injury disconnected from existing contract. — If the gist of the cause of action should not be the invasion of a positive legal right, but the fact that the persuasion was used for the indirect purpose of injuring plaintiff or of benefiting defendant at the expense of plaintiff, as was held by some of the judges in Bowen v. Hall, 6 Q. B. D. 333, and Lumley v. Gye, 2 E. & B. 216, it would follow as a result that any person who persuades another not to enter into a contract with a third person may be sued by that third person if the object were to benefit himself at the expense of such third person. There would be a cause of action where a trader induces a person not to contract with a third with whom he is in negotiations, but to make a contract with himself instead, a proceeding which occurs every day and the legitimacy of which no one will question. Per Lord Herschell in Allen v. Flood, [1898] A. C. 1.

62. Breaches of contract.— The action being one substantially founded on a contract, it can make no difference whether it is in the form of tort or assumpsit. There is no authority for any such distinction, but, it being admitted that where there is a breach of an express contract nominal damages may be recovered, the only difference between suing on the express and on the implied contract is as to the mode of proof. The consequences resulting from the breach of it must be the same; and one is that wherever there is a breach of contract, or any injury to the right arising out of the contract, nominal damages are recoverable. Marzetti v. Williams, 1 B. & Ad. 415. One who employs another to present a bill for acceptance is entitled to recover nominal damages for neglect in failing to present it, although such neglect has occasioned no real damage whatever. Van Wart v. Woolley, M. & M. 520.

An extreme case may be put where a party who has sustained no inconvenience brings the action. Nevertheless he is entitled to his suit, and the remedy for such useless litigation would be to deprive him of his costs. Marzetti v. Williams, 1 B. & Ad. 415.

63. Duty imposed by law.— It is said that no action lies for negligence unless plaintiff shows special damage. But that proposition is wider than the law warrants; for, in an action of tort arising out of a breach of contract or neglect of the duty which the law imposes, nominal damages are sufficient to entitle plaintiff to judgment. This is a rule of law, and it has recently been recognized and acted upon. Godefroy v. Jay, 7 Bing. 413 [approving Marzetti v. Williams, 1 B. & Ad. 415].

Neglect of official duty.— Where an officer neglects to return an execution until after the return-day, nominal damages are recoverable if there is no present or actual damage. Laflin v. Willard, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 64, 26 Am. Dec. 629. See, generally, Damages; Sheriffs and Constables. Contra, McAllister v. Clement, 75 Cal. 182, 184, 16 Pac. 775, in which it was held of a code provision: "For the official misconduct or neglect of a notary public, he and his sureties on his official bond are liable to the parties injured thereby for all the damages sustained,"— that it did not justify the contention that the action can be sustained for nominal damages, or at any rate the case was one where the maxim de minimis non curat lex applied.

Action for wrongful death.— Under a statute creating a liability against an individual or corporation for causing the death of another through neglect or other wrongful act or omission, every violation of the statute will sustain a suit and calls for nominal damages if none other are proved. Quin v. Moore, 15 N. Y. 432; McIntyre v. New York Cent. R. Co., 43 Barb. (N. Y.) 532. Contra, Boulter v. Webster, 11 L. T. Rep. N. S. 598. See also Death.

Act affecting public, prohibited.— "Where a statute prohibits the doing of a particular act affecting the public, as the construction of a railway between certain points before the building of a designated branch line, no person has a right of action against another merely because he has done the prohibited act. It is incumbent on the party complaining to show that the doing of the act prohibited has caused him some special damage, some peculiar injury beyond that which he may be supposed to sustain in common with the rest of the Queen's subjects by an infringement of the law." Chamberlaine v. Chester, etc., R. Co., 1 Exch. 870.

been violated it matters not that the acts or omissions of the wrong-doer are unaccompanied by negligence. Negligence is not at all the gravamen of the cause of action,[64] but individuals in the exercise of their legal rights are in duty bound to conduct themselves in a careful and prudent manner, and to act in good faith toward those with whom they have contracts or other reciprocal obligations or duties, under the penalty of being liable for all damage which is the result of negligence or mala fides.[65] Neither negligence, however,[66] nor fraud,[67] nor other

65. The only grounds for a recovery in actions for tort are damages resulting from an unlawful act on the part of defendant, or from negligence or failure in the performance of a lawful act. Phares v. Stewart, 9 Port. (Ala.) 336, 33 Am. Dec. 317; Wright v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 7 Ill. App. 438. To same effect see Bizzell v. Booker, 16 Ark. 308; Vandenburgh v. Truax, 4 Denio (N. Y.) 464, 47 Am. Dec. 268.

Lawful acts may be performed in such a manner, so carelessly, negligently, and with so little regard to the rights of others, that he who in performing them injures another must be responsible for resulting damage. Burroughs v. Housatonic R. Co., 15 Conn. 124, 38 Am. Dec. 64.

Where the act is lawful, liability can only arise upon and for the manner of doing it, and not for the act itself. McMillin v. Staples, 36 Iowa 532; Slatten v. Des Moines Valley R. Co., 29 Iowa 148, 4 Am. Rep. 205.

66. Negligence without damage not actionable.— A neglect of duty where no loss occurs cannot give a right of action. Post v. Campau, 42 Mich. 90, 3 N. W. 272; McCurdy v. Swift, 17 U. C. C. P. 126. In civil proceedings, acts — including omissions — apart from their consequences are indifferent. It is only when an act occasions injury to another that the person doing the act becomes liable in damages to the person injured by it. Pitkin v. New York, etc., R. Co., 64 Conn. 482, 30 Atl. 772. See, generally, NEGLIGENCE.

Consistent with rule as to nominal damages.— This principle of law is perfectly consistent with that which sustains the suit and gives nominal damages where no present or special damage can be proved, in certain cases where an unquestioned legal right is invaded. Per Cooley, J., in Post v. Campau, 42 Mich. 90, 3 N. W. 272. See, generally, supra, I, E.

Act may be wrongful although not actionable.— No action will lie for negligence unless damage results from the act complained of. It is the act or omission of the party that is wrongful, and is always so described, without regard to the consequences which flow, or may flow, from them. These results or consequences may, or may not, end in a liability to sue. That depends upon whether damage or injury has ensued; but although there can be no recovery and there is no damage in the act, there may nevertheless be a wrongful act. McCurdy v. Swift, 17 U. C. C. P. 126.

67. Fraud without damage not actionable. — In the leading case, frequently quoted from, in support of this proposition, it was said by Croke, J.: "Damage without fraud gives no cause of action; but where these two do concur and meet together, there an action lieth." See, generally, FRAUD.

Illustrations.— Where plaintiff sued for $6,000 for false representations in the sale of a farm on which he still owed defendant $10,000 of the purchase-price, secured by mortgage, it was held that an action would not lie for the reason that he had not been damaged; since he could resist a suit brought to foreclose, to the extent of his just claim. Ranney v. Warren, 17 Hun (N. Y.) 111. A purchaser of real estate is not damnified by encumbrances existing against it, although the debts which they were given to secure are false and fraudulent, where the amount of such encumbrances was deducted from the purchase-price. Magwire v. Hall, 27 Mo. 146. No cause of action exists in favor of the grantee of land against the grantor for a subsequent conveyance of the same premises to a third party, which has obtained priority of record, where the second purchaser is not a bona fide purchaser for value; since his conveyance is void and plaintiff cannot be damaged thereby. Marshall v. Robert, 22 Minn. 49. Wrongful and fraudulent acts by the trustee in a trust deed, whereby the premises involved were sold for less than they would otherwise have brought, are not actionable where the sale is wholly illegal and void; since in such a case wrong or immoral conduct or intent,[68] will give rise to a cause of action unless it has resulted in legal damage.

2. Conspiracy. An action will not lie for the greatest conspiracy if nothing is put into execution; but if it is carried into effect and the party damaged the action will lie.[69]

3. False and Fraudulent Representations. A mere naked falsehood gives no right of action; but if it be a falsehood told with the intention that it shall be no damage can have resulted to any party. Thornburg v. Jones, 36 Mo. 514. Although parties to a deed may have entered into it with the purpose and intent to defraud, yet, unless the rights of complainant are affected thereby he could not be heard to complain. Illustrations — Generally.— No action for damage will lie against a bank for defacing a note, as by writing on the face thereof the words "Payment stopped." Destroying or defacing a written contract does not affect the liability of the parties to it. Had the note even been destroyed, the remedy of the holder would not have been affected in the slightest degree. McKinley v. American Exch. Bank, 7 Rob. (N. Y.) 663. To same effect of a judgment record, see Platt v. Potts, 35 N. C. 455. An action will not lie against one for assisting the mortgagor of chattels to remove them from the state where, if the chattels thus mortgaged should be sold under execution, the proceeds would have to be applied to prior liens which would more than consume them. Kemp v. Nichols, 4 La. Ann. 174. An invalid sale on execution, which disturbed neither the owner of the property in his possession nor his control over the title, cannot be the foundation of an action against the judgment creditor; even for twenty-five dollars which was paid to have the execution quashed, no such expense being necessary. The claim of the judgment creditor to own the judgment debtor's interest under the farcical sale was vox et præterea nihil. Minter v. Swain, 52 Miss. 174 [cited in Ely v. Stannard, 46 Conn. 124]. v. Legh, 3 B. & Ald. 470. "If a man forge a bond in my name I can have no action upon the case yet, but if I am sued I may for the wrong and damage, though I may avoid it by plea; but if it were a recognizance or fine I shall have a deceit presently before execution." Waterer v. Freeman, Hob. 266, 267 [cited in Ely v. Stannard, 46 Conn. 124]. Where a party learns that a debt due from him to another is about to be attached, although by somewhat questionable and improper means, and because of such knowledge pays the debt and thereby prevents plaintiff from obtaining the attachment, to his loss in the whole amount of his own debt, no action lies. Simpson v. Dall, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 460, 18 L. ed. 265.

Threats.— A threat to commit an injury is not, as a general rule, an actionable private wrong. It is only the promise of doing something which in the future may be injurious. It may never be carried into effect. It cannot be foreknown that it will be. Heywood v. Tillson, 75 Me. 225, 46 Am. Rep. 373 [citing Cooley Torts 29]. See also Threats.

Unreasonable use of land.—Although a person uses his land otherwise than in a way which the law has determined to be natural and ordinary, no action will lie unless the unreasonable use has caused a damage to plaintiff. West Cumberland Iron, etc., Co. v. Kenyon, 11 Ch. D. 787 [reversing 6 Ch. D. 773]. See, generally, Conspiracy.

Legal damage must result.— No action will lie for compelling plaintiff to resort to law in order not to be deprived of his just rights, although conspiracy and wrongful acts on defendant's part are charged. The mere expenditure of money in maintaining or defending an action does not constitute legal damage. Cotterell v. Jones, 11 C. B. 713, per Talfourd, J.; McHale v. Heman, 28 Mo. App. 193, 197, wherein the court said that if the fact that a party has unlawfully withheld or denied rights of another, and thus driven him into the expenses and inconveniences of litigation, "may constitute the basis of an action, then every plaintiff who sues and recovers for a wrong done may follow up the proceeding with another suit, to compensate him for the trouble and expense of maintaining the first. He may then begin another action for indemnity on account of the last effort to vindicate his rights, and so on ad infinitum." See, generally, supra, I, D, 2, c.

Where object of combined effort is lawful. — A conspiracy is an agreement between two or more persons to do an unlawful act. If the act to be done is not unlawful, then the agreement or combination is not a conspiracy, and injury caused thereby is not actionable. Payne v. Western, etc., R. Co., 13 Lea (Tenn.) 507, 49 Am. Rep. 666.

acted upon by the party injured, and that act must produce damage to him, and does, an action lies.[70]

4. Direct or Proximate Damage. Damages which may be recovered by action are only those which are the natural or proximate result of the wrongful act or omission of defendant.[71]

G. Motive or Intent — 1. In General. The state of mind with which a person exercises his own legal rights or invades those of another, as determining or affecting legal liability, has given rise to much discussion and some difference of opinion. There are, however, certain well-established legal principles in this connection, courts differing somewhat in their application.[72]

"There are certain duties the non-performance of which the jurisprudence of this country has made the subject of a civil action. It is laid down by Lord, Ch. B., Comyn Dig. tit. Action on the Case for Deceit, A, 1, that 'an action on the case for a deceit lies when a man does any deceit to the damage of another.'" Pasley v. Freeman, 3 T. R. 51, 64.

Instance.— A purchaser of land at a foreclosure sale under a mortgage given by one who had no title to the premises has all that any one with whom he dealt could give him. Therefore he suffers no damage, for which he can have legal redress, by the act of another in obtaining a conveyance to himself, of the property, from the owner of the genuine title; although on fraudulent representations that the conveyance was for the benefit of the judicial sale purchaser and the grantor so intended it. Waterman v. Seeley, 28 Mich. 77.

Fraud and damage.— It is an ancient and well-established legal principle that fraud without damage or damage without fraud gives no cause of action; yet when the two concur, there an action lies. This proposition cannot safely be applied as a test by which to determine whether the facts in any case constitute an actionable wrong, beyond keeping in mind the meaning which the law, by a series of judicial decisions, has attached to the terms used. It is well settled that every falsehood is not necessarily a legal fraud or false representation. It is said that a false representation is an affirmation of that which the party knows to be false, or does not know to be true, to another's loss or his own gain. So, in reference to the term "damage," the law is that it means a loss, brought upon the party complaining, by the violation of some legal right, or it will be considered as merely damnun absque injuria. Randall v. Hazelton, 12 Allen (Mass.) 412.

Expenses of investigating representations. — An action cannot be maintained against one for expenses incurred in investigating representations made by him, which investigation discloses that they are false and fraudulent. It is the damage which results from acting upon false representations as if they were true, and not the expense of detecting their falsity, which a plaintiff is entitled to recover. Enfield v. Colburn, 63 N. H. 218.

False and fraudulent suit.— Were it otherwise, a plaintiff who makes and institutes a suit upon a false and fraudulent claim and is beaten not only must satisfy the judgment against him for costs, but is also liable for an action on the case; but such is not the law. Enfield v. Colburn, 63 N. H. 218. See supra, I, D, 2, c.

71. See, generally, Damages, and particular titles in which such questions commonly arise, as Contracts; Fraud; Negligence.

It is a fundamental principle of law, applicable alike to breaches of contract, such as those of indemnity, and to torts, that in order to found a right of action there must be a wrongful act done and a loss resulting from that wrongful act; the wrongful act must be the act of defendant; and the injury suffered by plaintiff must be a natural and not merely a remote consequence of the act. Warwick v. Hutchinson, 45 N. J. L. 61.

In an action of deceit it must appear judicially to the court that the fraud and the damage sustain to each other the relation of cause and effect, or, at least, that the one might have resulted directly from the other. Byard v. Holmes, 34 N. J. L. 296.

Negligence constitutes no cause of action unless it proves to be a breach of some duty. Ewing v. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co., 147 Pa. St. 40, 29 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 248, 23 Atl. 340, 30 Am. St. Rep. 709, 14 L. R. A. 666 [citing Addison Torts, § 1338].

Intervening agencies.— The rule as found in the text-books is that he who does an illegal or wrongful act is answerable for all the consequences in the ordinary and natural course of events, though these consequences be directly brought about by the intervening agency of others, providing the intervening agents were set in motion by the primary wrong-doer and the acts causing the damage were the necessary or legal and natural consequences of the original wrongful act. Philpot v. Taylor, 75 Ill. 309, 20 Am. Rep. 241.

72. See supra, I, D, 2, d; I, E, 2, c.

2. Definition of Malice. While "malice," in common acceptation, means ill will against a person, in its legal sense it means a wrongful act done intentionally without just cause or excuse.[73]

3. Exercise of Legal Rights. Where damage results from the exercise, with care and skill, of perfectly legal rights, no cause of action exists therefor, no matter how malicious or wicked may be the motives or intentions of the person thus engaged toward him who is damaged.[74] Thus loss which results from the pursuit

73. Allen v. Flood, [1898] A. C. 1; Mogul Steamship Co. v. McGregor, 23 Q. B. D. 598; Bromage v. Prosser, 4 B. & C. 247.

"The root of the principle is that in any legal question malice depends, not upon the evil motive which influenced the mind of the actor, but upon the illegal character of the act which he contemplated and committed." Per Lord Watson in Allen v. Flood, [1898] A. C. 1, 94.

Malice "in fact" and "in law."— "I am not sure that I quite understand what is meant by saying that it [a malicious act] is 'in fact' a wrong act, as distinguished from its being so 'in law,' and that because so wrong it is therefore wrongful. I can only understand it as meaning that it is an act morally wrong. The law certainly does not profess to treat as a legal wrong every act which may be disapproved of in point of morality." Per Lord Herschell in Allen v. Flood, [1898] A. C. 1, 120.

"We were invited by the plaintiffs' counsel to accept the position from which their argument started, that an action will lie if a man maliciously and wrongfully conducts himself so as to injure another in that other's trade. Obscurity resides in the language used to state this proposition. The terms 'maliciously,' 'wrongfully,' and 'injure' are words all of which have accurate meanings, well known to the law, but which also have a popular and less precise signification into which it is necessary to see that the argument does not imperceptibly slide. An intent to 'injure' in strictness means more than an intent to harm. It connotes an intent to do wrongful harm. 'Maliciously,' in like manner, means and implies an intention to do an act which is wrongful, to the detriment of another. The term 'wrongful' imports in its turn the infringement of some right." Per Lord Bowen in Mogul Steamship Co. v. McGregor, 23 Q. B. D. 598, 612 [quoted with approval by Lord Watson in Allen v. Flood, [1898] A. C. 1].

It is a truism of the law that an act which does not amount to a legal injury cannot be actionable because it is done with a bad motive: that which one has a right to do another cannot complain of. Boyson v. Thorn, 98 Cal. 578, 33 Pac. 492, 21 L. R. A. 233.

Common-law maxims.— Where there is a legal right to do a certain act the motive which induces the exercise of the right is of no importance. Nullus videtur dolo facere, qui suo jure utitur,— no man is considered a wrong-doer who avails himself of his own right. Fisher v. Fielding, 67 Conn. 91, 34 Atl. 714, 52 Am. St. Rep. 270, 32 L. R. A. 236. The maxim is true, actus non facit reum, nisi mens sit rea,— an act does not make a man guilty unless his intentions are so: but it does not follow that the purpose to damage makes an act, otherwise lawful, injurious in a legal sense. Thornton v. Thornton, 63 N. C. 211.

A moral rather than a legal question.— Actions of this sort belong to the province of morals rather than to the province of law. Against spite and malice the best safeguard is to be found in self-interest and public opinion. Much more harm than good would be done by encouraging or permitting inquiries into mo-of his legal remedies by one having a good cause of action,[75] or from the exercise of any other right which the law recognizes as legal,[76] cannot be judicially redressed, although accompanied by malice or evil design.

tives when the immediate act alleged to have caused the loss for which redress is sought is in itself innocent or neutral in character, and one which any one may do or leave undone without fear of legal consequence. Such an inquisition would, I think, be intolerable, to say nothing of the possibility of injustice being done by juries in a class of cases in which there would be ample room for speculation and a wide scope for prejudice. Per Lord Macnaghten in Allen v. Flood, [1898] A. C. 1.

The rule applicable to every kind of legal right.— In the case of Bradford v. Pickles, [1895] A. C. 587, 594, it was held that acts done by defendant upon his own land were not actionable when they were within his legal rights, even though his motive was to prejudice his neighbor. It was there said by Lord Halsbury, L. C.: "This is not a case in which the state of mind of the person doing the act can affect the right to do it. If it was a lawful act, however ill the motive might be, he had a right to do it. If it was an unlawful act, however good his motive might be, he would have no right to do it." In a late case decided in the house of lords, discussing this statement, it was held to apply not only to the rights of property, but to the exercise by an individual of his other rights. Per Lord Herschell in Allen v. Flood, [1898] A. C. 1.

Fraud cannot be predicated upon acts which the party charged has a right by law to do, nor upon the non-performance of acts which by law he is not bound to do, whatever may be his motive, design, or purpose either in doing or not doing the acts complained of. Franklin Ins. Co. v. Humphrey, 65 Ind. 549, 32 Am. Rep. 78.

Omissions.— Where no duty is imposed by law upon a person, an omission to do an act, whatever be the motive, will not subject him to an action. Vail v. Lewis, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 450, 4 Am. Dec. 400.

The motive of a suitor cannot be inquired into. Were it otherwise nearly every suit would degenerate into a wrangle over motives and feelings. Macey v. Childress, 2 Tenn. Ch. 438.

A creditor may purpose to oppress and break up his debtor; nevertheless he is entitled to recover his debt, and such damage is not actionable. Thornton v. Thornton, 63 N. C. 211.

The principle is involved and strongly illustrated from the case for malicious prosecution in which plaintiff cannot recover, however virulent the malice, if probable cause for prosecution existed. Wakefield v. Fairman, 41 Vt. 339; South Royalton Bank v. Suffolk Bank, 27 Vt. 505.

Sufficiency of cause of action the only test. — The court, when the sufficiency of the cause of action is questioned, can only determine whether the party has a right which the law will enforce. His ulterior motives or purposes in bringing suit cannot be taken into account. Ramsey v. Gould, 57 Barb. (N. Y.) 398.

76. Calling on a bank to redeem its bills.— One who obtains possession of promises to pay in specie, issued by a bank, has a right to call upon it to redeem them whenever he sees fit; and the fact that he does so at a particular time with bad motives is immaterial. South Royalton Bank v. Suffolk Bank, 27 Vt. 505.

Contract rights — Breach of unlawful contract.— The law will not inquire into the motives of the party in the exercise of a right, conferred by a valid contract, in the manner provided by its terms, although unfriendly and selfish. Randall v. Hazelton, 12 Allen (Mass.) 412. On the other hand, an injury resulting from the violation of an agreement to do an unlawful act, as to commit a nuisance, is not an actionable breach, and is not made so by the fact that defendant acted from motives of malice or with wicked and wanton intent to do plaintiff an injury. Jenkins v. Fowler, 24 Pa. St. 308, 28 Pa. St. 176.

Driving off trespassing stock.— That a person, in rightfully driving from his premises stock trespassing thereon, does not start them off in the direction least likely to cause loss to the owner, namely, toward the premises of the latter, is not the least evidence of a conversion. It is merely testimony bearing on the motive; and, the act being lawful, the motive is immaterial. Humphrey v. Douglass, 11 Vt. 22, 34 Am. Dec. 668.

Trade-marks.— The law does not permit exclusive use, as a trade-mark, of the name of a town: and therefore its use by one in connection with the manufacture of a certain kind of goods does not give him a cause of action

4. Invasion of Legal Rights. On the other hand a wrongful or malicious motive or intent is not a necessary element in a cause of action for the invasion of a legal right. One who is thus injured is entitled to redress though the wrong-doer intended no violation and was even actuated by good motives.[77] In such cases, against another making the same use of it, even though the motives of the latter may be malicious. Glendon Iron Co. v. Uhler, 75 Pa. St. 467, 15 Am. Rep. 599.

Use of property.— Whatever may be the motives of a person in the use to which he puts his own property while acting within his legal rights, injury caused thereby to another raises no cause of action. Walker v. Cronin, 107 Mass. 555; Mahan v. Brown, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 261, 28 Am. Dec. 461; Bradford v. Pickles, [1895] A. C. 587 [cited in Allen v. Flood, [1898] A. C. 1]. Bad motives in doing an act which violates no legal right of another cannot make that act a ground of action. Such a principle would be highly dangerous to the security and enjoyment of real property. Pickard v. Collins, 23 Barb. (N. Y.) 444. The common-law maxim sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas — that one should so use his own as not to injure another — does not require an action for such a cause. Fisher v. Clark, 41 Barb. (N. Y.) 329. A valid disposition of his property by a debtor cannot be interfered with by a court, although it was made with a fraudulent motive or intent. Bancroft v. Blizzard, 13 Ohio 30.

Breach of agreements invalid by statute of frauds.— No action will lie for breach of a promise which is invalid because not in writing as required by the statute of frauds, or of a promise to reduce the matters agreed upon to writing; although what defendant did was with the intention of falsely, fraudulently, and deceitfully obtaining an advantage over plaintiff. Gallager v. Brunel, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 347; Smith v. Bowler, 2 Disn. (Ohio) 153; Trammell v. Trammell, 11 Rich. (S. C.) 471.

Exercise of discretionary power.— No action will lie against a physician appointed by a beneficial association for unlawfully, maliciously, and wrongfully refusing to certify, in accordance with the by-laws of the association, the bill of another physician who had attended a member during an illness, so as to enable him to receive from the association certain sick benefits. The remedy is against the association, which wrongfully refused to pay. Gleavy v. Walker, (R. I. 1900) 46 Atl. 180.

Ultra vires act of corporation.— Where a corporation is acting within the scope of its authority, the intent with which it acts is immaterial and will not, in and of itself, give a cause of action. But there is no principle in law that will allow a corporation chartered and organized for specific purposes to purchase or lease property having no connection with its legitimate business, for the sole purpose of commencing and prosecuting a suit and harassing another under the forms of law. In determining the latter question the use it intends to make of it, and did make of it, is material. The intentions and purposes of the corporation not only qualified the character of the act, but entered into and became a part of the act itself. Occum Co. v. A. & W. Sprague Mfg. Although no mischief of any kind may be intended, yet if a man do an act which is dangerous to the person and property of others, and which evinces a reckless disregard of the consequences, he will be answerable civilly, and in many cases criminally, for the injuries which may follow. Vandenburgh v. Truax, 4 Den. (N. Y.) 464, 47 Am. Dec. 268 [approved in Bizzell v. Booker, 16 Ark. 308].

Any invasion of the civil rights of another person is in itself a legal wrong, carrying with it liabilities to repair the necessary or natural consequences in so far as these are injurious to the person whose right is infringed, whether the motive which prompted it be good, bad, or indifferent. Per Lord Watson in Allen v. Flood, [1898] A. C. 1.

Distinction between answering civilly and criminally.— There is a distinction between answering civiliter et criminaliter for acts injurious to others; in the latter case the maxim applies, actus non facit reum nisi mens sit rea; but it is otherwise in civil actions, where the intention is immaterial if the action is injurious to another. Haycraft v. Creasy, 2 East 92. To same effect see Hussey v. Peebles, 53 Ala. 432; Piscataqua Bank v. Turnley, 1 Miles (Pa.) 312; Weaver v. Ward, Hob. 134; Allen v. Flood, [1898] A. C. 1, per Lord Watson.

Damage through negligence.— A wrongful or malicious intent is not an essential element of a tort out of negligence. If a man will set about acts attended with risks to

however, the motive, intent, or design sometimes becomes material in determining the quantum of damage. The absence of evil intent may limit the recovery to the amount of actual loss, while its presence may justify punitive damages.[78]

5. Libel, Slander, and Malicious Prosecution. There are some actions in which malice is a very important factor, such as libel, slander, and malicious prosecution, which are sometimes referred to as evidencing that a bad motive may be an element in the composition of a civil wrong. But even in these the wrong must have its root in an act which the law regards as illegal, but excuses in certain exceptional circumstances, from considerations of public policy.[79]

H. Trivial Causes of Action — 1. In General. It is sometimes held that there is no cause of action because the law does not concern itself about trifles.[80]

2. At Law. So far, however, as this rule relates to causes of action at law, its operation is not extensive. It has reference to the character of the injury and not to the resulting damage,[81] and, as has been shown heretofore, there is always an actionable cause whenever a legal right has been invaded, although little or no others, the law casts on him the duty of care and competence. Hoehle v. Allegheny Heating Co., 5 Pa. Super. Ct. 21 [citing Pollock Torts, 433]; Chambers v. Baldwin, 91 Ky. 121, 15 S. W. 57, 34 Am. St. Rep. 165, 11 L. R. A. 545. See, generally, Negligence.

Trespass.—Pecuniary redress is exacted for a trespass, whether committed through inadvertence or not, or whether actuated by bad motives or not. Amick v. O'Hara, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 258; Mhoon v. Greenfield, 52 Miss. 434; Rogers v. Dutt, 13 Moore P. C. 209, 236, wherein it was said: "In the case of damage occasioned by a wrongful act, that is, an act which the law esteems an injury, malice is not a necessary ingredient to the maintenance of the action: an imprisonment of the person, a battery, a trespass on land, are instances, and only instances, in which the act may be quite innocent, even laudable, as to the intention of the doer, and yet if any damage, even in legal contemplation, be the consequence, an action will lie." It is upon this principle that a lunatic is liable civiliter for an injury to the person or property of another. Hussey v. Peebles, 53 Ala. 432; Amick v. O'Hara, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 258; Bullock v. Babcock, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 391; Weaver v. Ward, Hob. 134. See, generally, Insane Persons.

Trover and conversion.— It is no protection to one who has received property and disposed of it in the usual course of trade that he did so in good faith and in the belief that the person from whom he took it was the owner, if in fact the possession of such person was tortious. West Jersey R. Co. v. Trenton Car Works Co., 32 N. J. L. 517; Donahue v. Shippee, 15 R. I. 453, 8 Atl. 541. See, generally, Trover and Conversion.

Pennsylvania.— Jenkins v. Fowler, 24 Pa. St. 308, 310, wherein it was said: "Malicious motives make a bad act worse; but they cannot make that wrong which in its own essence is lawful."

79. Allen v. Flood, [1898] A. C. 1, per Lords Watson, Herschell, and Davey. This late case, decided in the English house of lords, contains an exhaustive and learned discussion of malice in law. While some of the argument, including that on the subject of libel, slander, and malicious prosecution, may perhaps be obiter, it is valuable as showing, by logical deduction from the general rules of law which govern intent and motive as an element in a cause of action, the proper solution of certain applications of those rules over which courts are still having much difficulty. In a note appended to this case (p. 181) by Sir Frederick Pollock he says: "The discussion of malicious prosecution and similar causes of action seems independent of the actual ratio decidendi, but points, it is submitted, to the conclusion that in such cases evil motive is material because the defendant's act is in itself of a wrongful nature, and is privileged when done and only when done in good faith."

Privileged from public policy.— In some of the early opinions statements may be found supporting this view. Thus, "this is an action for bringing a suit at law, and courts will be cautious how they discourage men from suing" (Goslin v. Wilcock, 2 Wils. C. P. 302); legal process "repels all presumption of wrong, and is itself a shield to those who use it until malice and want of probable cause are shown" (Henry v. Edson, 2 Vt. 499).

80. Maxim de minimis non curat lex.— Broom Leg. Max. (7th ed.) 142, and, generally, cases cited in this subdivision; French Guiana, 2 Dods. 151, 163, in which it was said by Sir William Scott: "Has this court no prudence to discourage suits about mere trifles, de minimis non curat lex? The law will discourage such attempts, and the parties making them would be recommended to try other modes of application. The remedy might otherwise be worse than the disease."

81. Fullam v. Stearns, 30 Vt. 443, holding that the maxim de minimis non curat lex, whenever it is applied correctly to take away a right of recovery, has reference to the injury and not to the resulting damage.

actual damage is occasioned by the act or omission.[82] Therefore its application in actions at law amounts rather to a denial of the existence of a cause of action than to a determination that a legal injury is so trifling as to be beneath the dignity of the court.[83]

3. In Equity. A court of equity, on the other hand, seems to have inherent

82. See supra, I, E, and the cases there cited. The maxim de minimis non curat lex is never applied to the positive and wrongful violation of another's legal right, although little if any actual damage is occasioned thereby. Kenyon v. Western Union Tel. Co., 100 Cal. 454, 35 Pac. 75; Wartman v. Swindell, 54 N. J. L. 589, 25 Atl. 356, 18 L. R. A. 44; Seneca Road Co. v. Auburn, etc., R. Co., 5 Hill (N. Y.) 170; Clifford v. Hoare, 22 Wkly. Rep. 828. The maxim that the law does not concern itself about trifles is not a bar to an action brought for the vindication of a violated legal right. Per Doe, C. J., in Boody v. Watson, 64 N. H. 162, 9 Atl. 794.

Invasion of personal property rights.— An action will lie for a taking and carrying away by defendant of the reins from a harness belonging to plaintiff; and it is an error for the trial court to rule that if defendant will make a tender of the reins it will dismiss the case upon the ground de minimis non curat lex. Plaintiff is entitled to at least nominal damages. Wartman v. Swindell, 54 N. J. L. 589, 25 Atl. 356, 18 L. R. A. 44. Where the maker of a promissory note not yet due induces a person other than the owner, in whose possession it has been temporarily placed, to receive as payment in full the face of the note with interest to the date of such payment, the owner of the note may bring trover for it. He is entitled to interest until maturity, however small the amount may be, and the possession of the maker is unlawful. Kingman v. Pierce, 17 Mass. 247. In a Vermont case it was held that an action against a constable who had used a pitchfork belonging to plaintiff, in removing from the premises of the latter property belonging to him which had been attached by the constable, the fork having been left where it was found and not injured, was for too trifling a cause to be sustained. The court said: "It is believed that no case can be found where damages have been given for a trespass to personal property when no unlawful intent or disturbance of a right or possession is shown, and when not only all probable but all possible damage is expressly disproved." Paul v. Slason, 22 Vt. 231, 238, 54 Am. Dec. 75 [but see this case distinguished in Fullam v. Stearns, 30 Vt. 443, the court saying of it that the property had been attached and must be removed at the expense of the owner, and in one sense the fork was used in plaintiff's business and for his benefit; that both the injury and the damage were too insignificant to be made the ground of an action]. In the case of Fullum v. Stearns, 30 Vt. 443, it was held that damage done to property by cutting thongs which laced or fastened together machinery bands, though the thongs were "considerably worn and of small value," could be estimated, and an action lay for the injury. Of the operation of the maxim de minimis non curat lex the court held it was at least safe to say that it should never be applied to a positive and wrongful invasion of another's property, where the positive and wrongful act causes damages which can be fairly valued.

Excusing depredation.— Where defendant relied, as excusing a slight invasion of another's right, on a right to believe that the latter would accept the act as a joke, the parties being in the habit of perpetrating practical jokes upon each other, such defense is a question for the jury; and it cannot be legally taken away from them by the court because of the trifling nature of the wrongful act. Wartman v. Swindell, 54 N. J. L. 589, 25 Atl., 356, 18 L. R. A. 44.

83. Illustrations.— At common law, when actions growing out of wagers were frequently permitted, it was sometimes held that a particular wager was too trivial, and the dispute growing out of it too idle, to amount to a cause of action; that if courts should occupy themselves in determining such matters, parties having large debts due them and questions of great magnitude to try would be grievously and wrongfully delayed. Hussey v. Crickitt, 3 Campb. N. P. 168; Eltham v. Kingsman, 1 B. & Ald. 683; Henkin v. Guerss, 12 East 247. See also Contracts. No cause of action exists against a person of whom the law requires tithes for grain harvested, for small quantities involuntarily left in the process of gathering it; otherwise if there be any particular fraud or intention to deprive the person of his full right. Glanvill v. Stacey, 6 B. & C. 543.

Exceptions.— Superior courts at common law exercised the power to stay proceedings for the recovery of debts where the amount involved was under forty shillings (Stutton v. Bament, 3 Exch. 831; Kennard v. Jones, 4 T. R. 496; Wellington v. Arter, 5 T. R. 65), but only where the debt was one which might be recovered in an inferior court. If there was no remedy except in the superior court an action would lie therein, the smallness of the sum being no reason why plaintiff should lose his claim. Harwood v. Lester, 3 B. & P. 617; Tubb v. Woodward, 6 T. R. 175; Eames v. Williams, 1 D. & R. 359. Where the sum claimed by plaintiff is large enough to be worthy of the attention of the court, that the amount really due is trifling will not be determined on affidavit, but he has a right to a trial. Beckitt v. Bilbrough, 8 Hare 188; Branker v. Massey, 2 Price 8; Lowe v. Lowe, 1 Bing. 270; Oulton v. Perry, 3 Burr. 1592. At the present day the jurisdiction of the superior courts is usually withheld, where the amount of debt is small, by statutes conferring upon inferior courts exclusive jurisdiction to try small causes. See Courts.

power to refuse to entertain an equitable cause of action of small moment, as being beneath its dignity;[84] and the maxim that the law does not concern itself about trifles has been said to be an equitable and not a legal maxim in this connection.[85] In most jurisdictions, however, such power has been conferred and regulated by statute or rule of court from a very early day.[86]

I. Illegal Acts or Agreements — 1. General Rule — Ex Proprio Dolo. It is a maxim of the law that no man shall be allowed to found any claim upon his own iniquity.[87] There is, however, another firmly established principle embodied

C.) 339, 340 [citing Story Eq. Pl., § 500], wherein it was said: "One of Lord Bacon's orders concludes with these words, 'and all suits under the value of ten pounds are regularly to be dismissed.' Mr. Justice Story assigns to the rule a still earlier date; he adds that a similar rule appears to prevail in the courts of equity in the United States, or at least in those which have been called upon to express any opinion upon the subject."

An objection which may be taken is that the value of the subject of the suit is too trivial to justify the court in taking cognizance of it; or, as the phrase usually is, that the suit is unworthy of the dignity of the court. Courts of equity sit to administer justice in matters of grave interest to the parties, and not to gratify their passions, or their curiosity, or their spirit of vexatious litigation. Reynolds v. Coppin, 19 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 627 [quoting from Story Eq. Pl. § 500 et seq.]; Westbrooke v. Browett, 17 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 339; Swedish Evangelical Lutheran Church v. Shivers, 16 N. J. Eq. 453.

Exceptions.— A bill which, although the sum sought to be recovered is trifling, seeks to establish a right of permanent and valuable nature, falls within recognized exceptions to the rule. Swedish Evangelical Lutheran Church v. Shivers, 16 N. J. Eq. 453; Hoskins v. Holland, 23 Wkly. Rep. 477. A bill will be retained, although the amount involved is a mere trifle, where there is no adequate remedy at law for its recovery, and it is provided by a section of the judicature act that "the superior courts in the several counties shall exercise the powers of a court of equity in all cases where a common-law remedy is not adequate." Smith v. Ashcraft, 25 Ga. 132, 133, 71 Am. Dec. 163. A bill to recover money for the benefit of a charity or of the poor of a town will be retained, though the sum sought to be recovered is under forty shillings per annum. Parrot v. Pawlet, Cary (ed. 1872) 147.

85. An equitable maxim.— "De minimis non curat prætor. The prætor does not concern himself about trifles; or (as the maxim may be interpreted) the prætor does not apply his equitable remedy in matters of small moment. This maxim, so long as it is retained in the form here given, is not likely to lead either to error or misapprehension; but latterly in England it has been common to read the maxim as de minimis non curat lex, which is certainly calculated, at least in its literal meaning, to mislead. It is not correct to say that the law does not concern itself about matters of small amount, or of comparatively trivial importance, either in its civil or criminal courts. In the latter, for example, theft is theft, whether it concerns the felonious abstraction of a loaf of bread or a thousand pounds; while, in the former, every legal wrong, however slight, has its appropriate remedy, and every right, no matter of what value or extent, may be enforced. . . . But while it is erroneous to say that the 'law does not concern itself about matters of small moment,' the maxim in its proper reading expresses a rule which was acted upon in the law of Rome and is now observed in the law of Scotland. The prætor represented what may be termed remedial equity, but his equitable remedies were only resorted to in cases where the common law afforded no remedy and where the importance of the occasion rendered it fitting and proper that such remedies should be applied." Trayner Latin Max. 139.

in several legal maxims,[88] modifying this general rule on grounds of public policy; and that is that there can be no right or duty predicated on illegal acts or relations which will give rise to a cause of action as between those who are parties thereto. To enforce an obligation to virtue by refusing encouragement to wrong, the law leaves the parties to such transactions where it finds them, entertaining no action or suit by either, even though defendant has acquired an advantage over plaintiff which he is thereby enabled to retain.[89] wherein it was said: "When the plaintiff is blameless, and the contract on which he stands is legal and moral, no court has ever permitted a defendant to escape responsibility because of his own misconduct. Maxims.— The principal maxim relied upon by courts in this connection is in pari delicto potior est conditio possidentis (defendentis),— in cases of equal or mutual fault (between two parties) the condition of the party in possession (or defending) is the better one. Kinney L. Dict. 376; Miller v. Marckle, 21 Ill. 152, and, generally, cases cited in this subdivision. As the Romans applied it the maxim is a mere logical rule that where the judgment of the law is balanced on the evidence the suit must fall. Then, quære non potentior sit qui teneat quam qui persequitur? Dig. 45, 1, 91, 3; Mohney v. Cook, 26 Pa. St. 342, 67 Am. Dec. 419.

Other maxims are:

Ex turpi causa non oritur actio,— out of a base (illegal or immoral) consideration an action does (can) not arise. Kinney L. Dict. 294; and the following cases:

Connecticut.— Funk v. Gallivan, 49 Conn. 124, 128, 44 Am. Dec. 210, where the court said: "The law could not take any other position than that it will not lend its aid to either of the parties to an immoral or illegal transaction, but will leave them as it finds them; but to be consistent with this position it is necessary to give to either party the right to plead or prove the true nature of the transaction in bar to an action founded upon it."

The object of all law is to repress vice, preserve the peace, and promote the general welfare of the state and of society, and no individual has any right to its assistance in enforcing a demand originating in a violation on his part of its principles or enactments. Treat v. Jones, 28 Conn. 334.

2. Scope of Rule. The rule has a more extensive operation in actions growing out of contracts which are contrary to law, and hence illegal and void, than in any other branch of jurisdiction;[90] but the contract relation is not absolutely essential.[91] It is not confined to causes of action at law, but applies to suits in chancery as well,[92] though no doubt included in the more comprehensive equitable maxim that he who comes into equity must come with clean hands.[93]

3. Illegality Unconnected With Transaction. Though a party is unable to assert or maintain any rights or remedies founded on an unlawful thing done or intended to be done, a general depravity or the commission of some wrong or transgression unconnected with the particular cause of action does not forfeit his right to legal protection and thus permit others to practise frauds and machinations against him with impunity.[94]

Duress.— A party is not particeps criminis where he acts under compulsion and not from choice. Thus a plaintiff cannot be said to be in pari delicto with defendants, county commissioners, where they unlawfully compelled him to donate to the county a sum of money to prevent an illegal grant of a ferry license which would infringe on a legal grant formerly made to him; and he may recover back the money so paid. La Salle County v. Simmons, 10 Ill. 513.

That no right of action can spring out of an illegal contract is a wise and salutary rule founded on honesty and good morals. Atwood v. Lester, 20 R. I. 660, 40 Atl. 866.

Transactions not inherently bad.—As a general proposition the rule applies as well where the illegal agreement or other transaction is malum prohibitum merely as where it is malum in se.

91. Illustration.— The communication of a venereal disease during illicit sexual intercourse is not an actionable wrong; and consent to the intercourse is not violated by the fact that it has been induced through wilful concealment of the disease. On the principle ex turpi causa non oritur actio such an action is unsustainable. Hegarty v. Shine, 4 L. R. Ir. 288 [affirming 2 L. R. Ir. 273], wherein it was said, per Palles, C. B., to be neither logical nor consistent to hold that the maxim applies to cases of contracts only, and that an act of such character as to vitiate, as immoral, a contract in reference to it, can itself be capable of sustaining an action. That incapacity to obtain support or audience in a court of justice which it communicates to every contract of which it is the subject-matter or the purpose is necessarily inherent in itself.

Contracts void by statute of frauds.— Although a contract is void at law by reason of the statute of frauds, equity sometimes entertains a cause of action based upon partial performance, to prevent a fraud. Y. 415, wherein it is also held that the complainant is confined to his equitable cause of action, and cannot recover incidentally, and as a part of his relief, damages for the breach of the void contract. 4. Test Applied. If a claim connected with an illegal transaction can be supported without proving, or opening to defendant to prove, the transaction, the rule has no application.[95] The test is whether plaintiff is under the necessity of show-cause of action based on a written contract, although in a former suit he had unsuccessfully and by false representation tried to recover as upon one not in writing. Sullivan v. Ross, 113 Mich. 311, 76 N. W. 309 [reversing on rehearing 71 N. W. 634], Grant, C. J., dissenting. Perjury on the part of a plaintiff, whereby he had recovered damages against defendant in a former action, is no ground for preventing a recovery in a subsequent suit based on another and sufficient cause of action. Post v. Hartford St. R. Co., 72 Conn. 362, 44 Atl. 547.

While the law will imply no promise to pay for services rendered or money furnished by one person to another for expense incurred in the furtherance and for the continuance of illicit relations (Brown v. Tuttle, 80 Me. 162, 13 Atl. 583), a suit for a share of the property which is the result of the combined capital, industry, labor, and economy of persons thus living together may be maintained (Malady v. Malady, 25 La. Rule does not apply to subsequent new and independent transactions founded on new considerations apart from the original one, although between the same parties and having relation to the same property. Frost v. Plumb, 40 Conn. 111, 16 Am. Rep. 18; Phalen v. Clark, 19 Conn. 421, 50 Am. Dec. 253; Armstrong v. Toler, 11 Wheat. (U. S.) 258, 6 L. ed. 468. Thus, where an illegal contract is voluntarily rescinded, the rescission is a new and independent agreement unaffected by the illegality of the original transaction, and will be enforced by the court. Lea v. Cassen, 61 Ala. 312.

The illegal intention must be accompanied by an act which is immoral or prohibited by law, in order to make the transaction illegal. Thus, where one has induced a party to pay him money to be paid to third persons, whom he falsely represents to be about to begin a criminal prosecution, for the purpose of obtaining their forbearance, an action will lie to recover it back. Smith v. Blachley, 188 Pa. St. 550, 43 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 201, 41 Atl. 619, 68 Am. St. Rep. 887; McCullough v. Blachley, 188 Pa. St. 556, 41 Atl. 1119. On the other hand an innocent member of a firm, established for the conducting of a lawful business, can call upon a partner for a share of the profits made in the partnership, and it is no defense that the partner sued realized the profits by cheating the customers of the firm. Pennington v. Todd, 47 N. J. Eq. 569, 21 Atl. 297, 11 L. R. A. 589. See Partnership.

The policy of the law that wrong-doers cannot have redress or contribution against each other has no application where the act is not ing the illegal transaction, or depending in any degree upon it, in making out his case.[96]

5. Statutory Exceptions. The public interest demands, however, that relief be granted against certain illegal transactions and agreements, and they have been withdrawn by statute from the operation of the general principle so far as to give a cause of action or a defense to one of the parties thereto.[97]

J. Criminal and Penal Acts or Agreements — 1. General Rule. As a general principle, where the commission of an offense against the criminal laws of the state causes an injury to a person, peculiar to him in his individual capacity and not simply as a member of the community, the damage constitutes a civil cause of action in his favor.[98] Many crimes and misdemeanors, indeed, manifestly illegal in itself, but was done bona fide and without knowledge, either actual or implied by law, that it was illegal. Moore v. Appleton, 26 Ala. 633; Myers v. Gilbert, 18 Ala. 467; Adamson v. Jarvis, 4 Bing. 66. See also, generally, Contribution.

Effect of pardon.— A pardon granted to some of the parties engaged in a violation of the public law, although it wipes out the offense against the government, cannot give a civil cause of action to those who have received its benefit, against the others, for injuries received in the joint commission of the wrong. Martin v. Wallace, 40 Ga. 52.

96. Frost v. Plumb, 40 Conn. 111, 16 Am. Rep. 18; Phalen v. Clark, 19 Conn. 421, 50 Am. Dec. 253; Halloran v. Halloran, 137 Ill. 100, 27 N. E. 82; Welch v. Wesson, 6 Gray (Mass.) 505; Gregg v. Wyman, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 322; Fivaz v. Nicholls, 2 C. B. 501; Simpson v. Bloss, 7 Taunt. 246.

97. Thus one who borrows money at usurious rates, or sustains losses in a gaming-resort, is frequently looked upon as the victim of his own necessity or infirmity and less culpable than the lender or winner, and is granted statutory relief. 98. Smith v. Lockwood, 13 Barb. (N. Y.) 209; Foster v. Com., 8 Watts & S. (Pa.) 77, 79, per Gibson, J., who said: "It is written on the hornbook of the law that the public and a party particularly aggrieved may each have a distinct but concurrent remedy for an act which happens to be both a public and a private wrong. Thus a person beaten may prosecute an action for the battery, while the commonwealth prosecutes an indictment for the breach of the peace; or a nuisance may be visited by indictment as a public wrong, while it is visited by action as a private injury; and, for reasons equally good, a libeler may be punished as a disturber of the peace, while he is made to respond in damages by the person libeled, as a defamer of his character." See also, generally, cases cited in this subdivision.

Where one draws and deposits upon a highway loads of stone, earth, and rubbish, and thereby causes an injury to a person having a contract with the town to keep the highway in repair, he is liable for such damage. McNary v. Chamberlain, 34 Conn. 384, 91 Am. Dec. 732. It is most difficult to draw a line showing what kind of injury can be fairly treated as a particular injury, and what is such an injury only as should be looked upon as the individual's share of the public inconvenience, involve a direct invasion of private rights of person or property and necessarily include a civil injury.[99]

2. Statutory Offenses — a. New Rights or Duties Created — (1) Penal Statutes. Two apparently inconsistent rules have been enunciated by the courts in deciding whether damage caused to an individual by the violation of a penal statute creating a new right or duty constitutes a civil cause of action in his favor, or whether the penal cause of action is exclusive.[1] On the one hand it has been held that, as a general rule, the wrong-doer is liable in damages to a party injured by the violation of the statutory duty, notwithstanding he may be subject to the penalty for the public wrong;[2] on the other, that the offense against the state is for which the remedy must be sought by a public prosecution. Hamilton, etc., Road Co. v. Great Western R. Co., 17 U. C. Q. B. 567.

Covinous recoveries in actions for penalties partake in some degree of the nature of compounding actions on penal statutes, and constitute misdemeanors. Admitting that such a recovery is a bar to another action at law, a party who might, but for the recovery, have sued in a popular action for the penalty, has not suffered any special damage by reason of the misdeameanor, since a popular action may be brought by any member of the public, and the only remedy is to the public for the common wrong. Authority for this view.— The case of Aldrich v. Howard, 7 R. I. 199 [cited in Adams v. Union R. Co., 21 R. I. 134, 42 Atl. 515, and explained in Grant v. Slater Mill, etc., Co., 14 R. I. 380, and in Heeney v. Sprague, 11 R. I. 456, 23 Am. Rep. 502, 12 Am. L. Rev. 189], was decided on the equity of the early English Statute of Westminster II. c. 50, quoted in a note to the last-mentioned case as follows: "Concerning the statutes provided where the law faileth, and for remedies, lest suitors coming to the king's court shall depart from thence without remedy, they shall have writs provided in their cases." The case of Heeney v. Sprague, supra, 11 R. I. 456, 23 Am. Rep. 502, 12 Am. L. Rev. 189, held that the chapter did not relate to municipal ordinances or to statutes generally, and certainly not to those subsequently enacted. It could affect such statutes, if at all, only by construction or as declaratory of the common law. The Statute of Westminster II, c. 50, is not in force in Maryland. Flynn v. Canton Co., 40 Md. 312, 17 Am. Rep. 603.

Scope of rule.— Some cases announce the proper test to be whether the penalties are given by the statute to the party aggrieved by its violation, or confer the right to sue and recover them upon a common informer; that in the former case only is the penal action exclusive. Aldrich v. Howard, 7 R. I. 199; Couch v. Steel, 3 E. & B. 402. But this is confounding the distinction between penal actions, which are remedies given for public offenses, and civil actions or suits for private injuries. See Atkinson v. Newcastle, etc., Waterworks Co., 2 Ex. D. 441 [reversing L. R. 6 Exch. 404].

Rule declared by statute.— In at least two states it has been declared by express enactment that any person injured by the violation of any statute may recover from the offender such damage as he may sustain by reason of the violation, although a penalty or a forfeiture for such violation be thereby imposed, unless the same be expressly mentioned to be in lieu of such damages. Norfolk, etc., R. Co. v. Irvine, 84 Va. 553, 5 S. E. 532; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Reynolds, 77 Va. 173, 46 Am. Rep. 715; Mapel v. John, 42 W. Va. 30, 24 S. E. 608, 57 Am. St. Rep. 839, 32 L. R. A. 800; Tyler v. Western Union Tel. Co., 54 Fed. 634. The penalty prescribed by the penal statute is not the measure of damages in such action: but the measure of damages must be the same as that applied in actions where the cause of action existed at common law. Norfolk, etc., R. Co. v. Irvine, 84 Va. 553, 5 S. E. 532. Contra, Mapel v. John, 42 W. Va. 30, 24 S. E. 608, 57 Am. St. Rep. 839, 32 L. R. A. 800, in which case the court said that such action might be in form debt, assumpsit, trespass, or case, as the particular nature of the wrong or injury might require; and that the damages need not be ascertained by a jury, but must be in the amount of the penalty provided by the statute. The provision does not create any new cause of action. Thus no damages the only cause of action, and the penal suit in expiation thereof an exclusive remedy.[3] By the better authority the true test for determining whether or not such penal statutes confer a cause of action for private injuries resulting from the breach seems to be whether the intention of the law is to confer a right upon individuals in addition to creating a new public offense.[4] can be recovered for disappointment and mental suffering only, any more than they could before its enactment. Tyler v. Western Union Tel. Co., 54 Fed. 634.

Dennis v. Larkin, 19 Iowa 434, Cole, J., dissenting.

Statutory construction.— Where a statute creates a new duty and provides a penalty for the violation thereof, such remedy is exclusive, and no action for damages will lie where other state statutes of similar character show that when the legislature has imposed a new duty and intended that there shall be a remedy by action for damages, in addition to the penalties imposed, it has usually, if not uniformly, said so in plain terms. Ordinances.—This test as to whether a civil as well as a penal or criminal cause of action is given by the law has been applied by some cases where the question arose upon an ordinance of a city or town. Thus it has been held that ordinances which require a lot-owner to provide a suitable and safe passageway for foot-passengers on the side of the public street, as by keeping a walk free from snow and ice or other nuisance, contemplate public duties only, and cannot be construed as going further and giving individual causes of action for a neglect of the duty imposed. Flynn v. Canton Co., 40 Md. 312, 17 Am. Rep. 603; Taylor v. Lake Shore, etc., R. Co., 45 Mich. 74, 7 N. W. 728, 40 Am. Rep. 457. Some decisions wholly deny that a civil cause of action for a private injury can arise out of an ordinance creating a new right or duty. Heeney v. Sprague, 11 R. I. 456, 23 Am. Rep. 502, 12 Am. L. Rev. 189; Vandyke v. Cincinnati, 1 Disn. (Ohio) 532, 535, wherein it was said that the effect of any such rule of law "would be to invest a municipal corporation with the highest attribute of sovereignty,— that of creating, limiting, and directing the most important rights and interests of individuals in the community, and directing their relations to each other; a power that no legislature, under our constitution, can depute to or confer upon another." See ORDINANCES; STREETS AND HIGHWAYS.

Action for penalty usually a public remedy. — In cases where the public have an interest in the faithful discharge of an official duty, the penalty for neglect, unless the contrary appears, is for the protection of that interest rather than to secure private rights; and in many cases the forfeiture is entirely inaderights or duties is no doubt true as well of statutes which make the act or omission a crime or misdemeanor.[5]

b. New Remedy Created. A statute which merely makes that a crime, misdemeanor, or offense, punishable by a penalty or forfeiture, which before its passage was already a legal wrong to individuals injured thereby, redressible by civil action or suit, does not take away the preëxisting cause of action unless it is so declared, expressly or by necessary implication.[6]

3. Merger and Suspension — a. Felonies — (I) In General. Although most, if not all, criminal acts that are mala in se include a trespass or other private injury,[7] various legal principles have been judicially suggested which either wholly obstructed or much hampered the right to private redress.[8]

(II) Merger of Cause of Action. It was first considered that the private wrong and injury were merged and drowned in the public wrong where a felony had been committed, and therefore no cause of action ever arose or could arise. This principle, however, was short-lived and rests rather on remarks of judges not necessary to the point decided than on reason and actual precedent.[9] Like the rule of law that no civil cause of action can be predicated on the death of a free person, though caused by a felonious or negligent act,[10] it is probably a survival of very early English social and political conditions.[11]

quate for the latter purpose, and is not even certainly available to the injured party. Hayes v. Porter, 22 Me. 371.

Injury not contemplated by statute.— Under an act of parliament which provides that any ship bringing stock into the ports of Great Britain from foreign ports shall dispose of them on board in a certain way, in order that no contagious or infectious diseases shall be introduced into the kingdom, no action will lie to recover damages for stock washed overboard although the loss is due to the fact that the statutory duty was not performed. The precautions directed may be useful and advantageous in preventing animals from being washed overboard, yet they were never intended for that purpose. Gorris v. Scott, L. R. 9 Exch. 125.

5. Public remedy not exclusive.— "Where a thing that is an injury to a particular person is prohibited by act of parliament, the party may have his action, but yet 't is indictable also." Per Holt, C. J., in Rex v. Hummings, Comb. 374. To the same effect see State v. Poulterer, 16 Cal. 514; New York, etc., R. Co. v. Lambright, 5 Ohio Cir. 11. Origin of principle.— The doctrine of merger is probably a survival of a time in the

(III) Suspension of Cause of Action—(A) In General. Later it came to be held, except in cases of homicide,[12] that there was no actual merger, but, on grounds of public policy, that the remedy for the private wrong and injury would not lie until public justice had been vindicated by the conviction or acquittal of the wrong-doer in a criminal prosecution.[13] This principle, as well as that of merger, history of English law when actions for damages were unknown, and other actions were in a very rudimentary state, and practically every legal wrong to person or property was a crime against the king's peace and a felony. See 2 Pollock & M. Hist. Eng. L. 488, 489. There was no way of obtaining civil redress, therefore, except as it might be obtained through the criminal prosecution. At the common law, if the wrong-doer was proceeded against by appeal of felony, such redress could be had where a conviction was secured, at least in cases of theft; and this was extended by 21 Hen. VIII, c. 11, which allowed restitution of stolen property on conviction by indictment on the testimony of the true owner, or on other evidence procured by him. 1 Stephen Hist. Crim. L. 247; Foxley's Case, 5 Coke, 109*a*; Beazley v. Mitchell, 9 Ala. 780; Boody v. Keating, 4 Me. 164; Boston, etc., R. St. 275; Cannon v. Burris, 1 Hill (S. C.) 372; Ex p. Bolland, Mont. & M. 315, 396. This statute, 21 Hen. VIII, c. 11, "is part of the common law brought with them by the American colonists. . . . Statutes on the same topic have been enacted in several of the United States." Wharton Crim. L. (10th ed.) § 981, and cases cited. For an instance of such a state statute see 1 Brightly Purd. Dig. L. Pa. 562, § 76. On conviction of felony, also, all the property of the wrong-doer, both land and chattels, was confiscated by the crown, nothing remaining out of which damages might be obtained; and many cases in the United States have suggested this as the basis of the principle. Williams v. Dickenson, 28 Fla. 90, 9 So. 847; Shields v. Yonge, 15 Ga. 349, 60 Am. Dec. 698; Adams v. Barrett, 5 Ga. 404; Robinson v. Skipworth, 23 Ind. 311; Boston, etc., R. But this would not account for the fact that the rule applied as well where the wrong-doer was acquitted as where he was convicted, and is not authorized by the English decisions which established the principle. See, generally, the English cases cited in this subdivision, and Hyatt v. Adams, 16 Mich. 180, 186, wherein it was said: "Forfeiture does not seem to have been assigned in England as the reason of the merger, . . . at least by any of the decisions which established and settled the rule. But this idea seems to have grown up in this country only because it was thought it would have furnished a better ground for the rule denying the action than the naked ground of merger."

Capital crimes.— Another ground, open to similar criticism to that of forfeiture, given by some cases, and confining the doctrine of merger to capital crimes, is that if the felon should be convicted he would be executed; and as all felonies include a trespass the action dies with him under the common-law maxim actio personalis moritur cum persona. Cross v. Guthery, 2 Root (Conn.) 90, 1 Am. first prosecute, upon which the rule of the suspension of the cause of action is based, can have no application to a case in which the sovereign is a party. Reg. v. Reiffenstein, 5 Ont. Pr. 175.

Applies to every felony.— The principle that the remedy is suspended applies to every felony, not only a common-law felony, but also one created by statute. Ex p. Bolland, Mont. & M. 315 [approved in Ex p. Elliott, 3 Mont. & A. 110]; Marsh v. Keating, 2 Cl. & F. 250, 1 Bing. The civil action is not suspended where the felony is committed without the state in which the action is brought. To thus make the rule the means of enforcing the criminal law of another state or country would, in effect, make the civil courts of the commonwealth police agents for the world. Piscataqua Bank v. Turnley, 1 Miles (Pa.) 312.

Applies to all forms of proceedings.— No distinction exists, in the application of the doctrine that the remedy is suspended, between actions in tort and those ex contractu; for example, an action in debt to recover money embezzled by defendant. Ex p. Elliott, 3 Mont. & A. 110 [criticising remarks of Buller, J., in Masters v. Miller, 4 T. R. 320]. Compare Ga. Code (1873) § 3054, which provides that, if a tort amounts to a crime, the person injured may agree upon and receive compensation for the personal injury, under which an action will lie on a promissory note given by the felon in liquidation of the damage caused by the crime, although no prosecution has been instituted and terminated; and Dodson v. McCauley, 62 Ga. 130. See also Allison v. Farmers' Bank, 6 Rand. (Va.) 204, per Green, J., who held that the doctrines of merger and suspension never had been applied in actions upon contracts. It applies to suits in chancery as well as to actions at law (Cox v. Paxton, 17 Ves. Jr. 329 [cited in Ocean Ins. Co. v. Fields, 2 Story (U. S.) 59, 18 Fed. Cas. A defense to an action on a policy of insurance on a vessel, that the insurer intentionally caused the loss, a felonious act, raised by bill in equity for an injunction against the law judgment, is not within the mischief of the common-law rule. A person can have no cause of action founded upon his own wrong. Ocean Ins. Co. v. Fields, 2 Story (U. S.) 59, 18 Fed. Cas. No. 10,406.

Evidence of felony.— Where there is no reasonable or probable cause, on the evidence, for believing defendant's act to be felonious, the case should be submitted to the jury in the ordinary way, as if no evidence of a felonious act was given. To hold that, upon allegation of felony, plaintiff's remedy should be suspended, would be to force upon him the institution of a prosecution which might in itself be a wrongful act and render him responsible in damages. Origin of rule.— It has been said that the qualified right given by 21 Hen. VIII, c. 11, to the owner of goods stolen, to have restitution after a conviction of the felon upon indictment, obtained by his evidence or by the evidence of other witnesses procured by him, may have suggested the rule which suspends the remedy in all cases of felony until the termination of the criminal prosecution. Boardman v. Gore, 15 Mass. 331; Piscataqua Bank v. Turnley, 1 Miles (Pa.) 312; Ex p. Bolland, Mont. & M. 315. It has also been placed on the ground that public prosecutions for crimes are, in England, left to be instituted and conducted by the parties injured at their own risks as to costs; and not to public prosecutors legally bound to bring offenders to justice and see that gross crimes do not go unpunished. Williams v. Dickenson, 28 Fla. 90, 9 So. 847; Boston, etc., R. Corp. v. Dana, 1 Gray (Mass.) 83; Hyatt v. Adams, 16 Mich. 180; Allison v. Farmers' Bank, 6 Rand. 15. Parties — Plaintiffs.— The principle of the suspension of the right to sue applies only to the party directly injured by the felonious act. It has no application when the action is brought by one who has sustained consequential damages, as, for example, a loss of services. Appleby v. Franklin, 17 Q. B. D. 93; Osborn v. Gillett, L. R. 8 Exch. 88, opinion of Bramwell, B. Contra, Walsh v. Nattrass, 19 U. C. C. P. 453 [citing Vincent v. Sprague, 3 U. C. Q. B. 283], in which it was said: "The rule depends, not upon any consideration for the plaintiff or for the defendant, but upon the exigencies of public policy." Gordon v. Fluskey, Arm. Mac. & O. 155; Hayes v. Smith, Smith & Bat. 378; Quinlan v. Barber, Batty 47. Although a creditor might not be able to bring a civil action for the debt arising out of the commission of a felony, no such doctrine can be applied where the claim is brought by the assignee in bankruptcy, who represents, not the creditor, but the creditors. Ex p. Ball, 10 Ch. D. 667, 674, 14 Cox C. C. 237, Baggalay, L. J., dissenting from this ground for the decision, and saying: "Neither the executors nor administrators of the person injured by the felony, nor his trustee in bankruptcy, can be in any better position than he himself was in at the date of his death or at the commencement of his bankruptcy." Where bankers agree to allow a person to draw upon them, upon his depositing some bills of exchange as security for the loan, the rule is inapplicable to a claim for the money thus drawn, although the bills deposited were forged, unknown to the bankers at the time. The loan was an ordinary loan, and the contract for it was not destroyed or affected by anything which subsequently occurred. Ex p. Leslie, 20 Ch. D. 131, 15 Cox C. C. 125. An action to recover back money paid to a thief as purchase-money for a stolen horse which had been recovered from the purchaser by the owner is not within the rule that a civil action for damages caused by a felony cannot be begun until the felon has been prosecuted. Barton v. Faherty, 3 Greene (Iowa) 327, 54 Am. Dec. 503.

(B) Statutory Changes — (1) In General. In some of the courts of this country the rule that the remedy was suspended until the termination of the criminal prosecution was adopted as part of the common law; others refused to follow it, as inapplicable to conditions here existing. These decisions are now of little practical value,[16] since the rule itself has been abrogated by general statutory provisions in most of the states in which it had been recognized as binding.[17]

Parties — Defendants.— Nor has it any application where the action is not brought against the felon, and he is not a necessary party thereto; as where it is brought against a person other than the thief, to recover stolen property.

Prosecution by injured party.— Unlike the remedy under 21 Hen. VIII, c. 11, redress is not conditional on conviction being secured on the testimony of the party aggrieved, or other evidence obtained by him. The law is indifferent as to who procured the prosecution of the felon, and the prosecution, having terminated the suspension of the civil action, is at an end. Chowne v. Baylis, 31 Beav. 351; Ex p. Ball, 10 Ch. D. 667, 14 Cox C. C. 237.

"No bill."— If a person prefer an accusation in good faith, although the bill should be rejected by the grand jury, he has done as much as he can toward prosecuting and has satisfied the policy of the rule. Various other exceptions.— Where public policy ceases to operate, the rule ceases also. Thus it does not apply where the felon dies (Wickham v. Gatrill, 2 Smale & G. 353; Ex p. Ball, 10 Ch. D. 667, 14 Cox C. C. 237), or is executed for another offense (Stone v. Marsh, 6 B. & C. 551; Ex. p. Bolland, Mont. & M. 315); or when a sufficient number of indictments growing out of the same transaction have been returned to satisfy public justice (Ex p. Jones, 2 Mont. & A. 193, 3 Deac. & C. 525; Dudley, etc., Banking Co. v. Spittle, 1 Johns. & H. 14), or the felon has fled the country before he could be apprehended (In re Herdson, 2 N. Special statutory changes.— A statutory

(2) Rhode Island. In this state the common-law rule in a modified form is enacted by statute.[18]

(c) Pleading and Practice — (1) Under the Early Law. Under the common law, which held the criminal prosecution to be a strict condition precedent to the invoking of the civil remedy, its institution and termination must have been alleged and proved by plaintiff or complainant as a part of his cause of action,[19] and a failure to do so might be taken advantage of by defendant at any stage in the proceeding.[20]

(2) As Modified by Judicial Decision. While the principle that the remedy is suspended is still recognized as law in some jurisdictions, it has been so modified by judicial decision that there is no merger of the cause of action, nor is the criminal prosecution a strict condition precedent thereto;[21] but the prin-provision that, when the death of a person is caused by the wrongful act or omission of another, the personal representative of the former may maintain an action against the latter at any time within one year after death, abrogates the common-law principle that the civil remedy is suspended in cases of felony; since, if such representative should be required to prosecute the offender to conviction or acquittal before bringing suit, his cause of action would in most instances be barred before it accrued. Lankford v. Barrett, 29 Ala. 700. Where a statute which makes certain acts of malicious mischief a public offense, and at the same time provides that the wrongdoer shall be liable to the party injured in treble damages, the civil cause of action is not suspended. Thayer v. Boyle, 30 Me. 475.

Pleading and practice.— For matters of pleading and practice under this statutory rule see infra, I, J, 3, a, (III), (C) (3).

19. Morton v. Bradley, 27 Ala. 640; Nelson v. Bondurant, 26 Ala. 341; Middleton v. Holmes, 3 Port. (Ala.) 424; Livingstone v. Massey, 23 U. C. Q. B. 156, which held that if plaintiff's evidence shows that the alleged loss of goods, the value of which he sues to recover, was caused by a felonious act committed by defendant, it is in truth a failure on plaintiff's part to prove the cause of action. It is not an answer set up by defendant to a cause of action prima facie proved.

20. Lack of proper averments.— Where it appears from plaintiff's pleadings that the cause of action is based upon a felonious act, and it is not alleged therein that a criminal prosecution has been instituted and terminated, a demurrer will lie (Cox v. Paxton, 17 Ves. Jr. 329) or, after verdict, a motion in arrest of judgment (Proctor v. Bury, Barnes Notes Cas. 450, where on such motion the judgment was directed to be stayed until further order). Contra, Nash v. Primm, 1 Mo. 178 [approved in Mann v. Trabue, 1 Mo. 709, overruling a motion for judgment non obstante veredicto].

Failure of proof.— Although the pleadings do not raise any question as to plaintiff's right being suspended because he has not done all in his power, or anything, to prosecute for the offense against public justice, the question may properly be raised at the trial. Macdonald v. Ketchum, 7 U. C. C. P. 484; Livingstone v. Massey, 23 U. C. Q. B. 156. Where plaintiff has failed to prove the institution and termination of a criminal prosecution, it has been held that he may be compelled to accept a nonsuit to prevent a verdict being directed for defendant (Talbot v. Fredrickson, Yelv. 99*a* note; Pease v. McAloon, 3 N. Brunsw. 111; Livingstone v. Massey, 23 U. C. Q. B. 156; Wellock v. Constantine, 2 H. & C. 146; Gimson v. Woodfull, 2 C. & P. 41; Gordon v. Fluskey, Arm. Mac. & O. 155; Quinlan v. Barber, Batty 47); or the jury may be instructed that if they find a felony has been committed they should return a verdict for defendant, otherwise for plaintiff (Prosser v. Rowe, 2 C. & P. 421; Hayes v. Smith, Smith & Bat. 378).

21. Suspension of cause of action.— Although the policy of the law requires that before the party injured by any felonious act can seek civil redress for it the matter should be heard and disposed of before a criminal tribunal, it becomes a different matter when we have to consider how the principle is to be enforced. Wells v. Abrahams, L. R. 7 Q. B. 554, per Cockburn, C. J. [cited in Taylor v. McCullough, 8 Ont. 309]; S. v. S., 16 Cox C. C. 566, sub nom. A. v. B., 24 L. R. Ir. 235. If the principle suspends the cause of action instead of merely staying the civil proceedings until the prosecution has been instituted and conducted to a termination, it must follow either (1) that the cause of action does not arise until the prosecution, or (2) that it arises on the happening of the injury, but is suspended until the prosecution. The first proposition would make the cause of action the act of the felon plus the prosecution, and no such theory has ever been suggested. The second is also attended with difficulties. The suspension of the cause of action is a thing nearly unknown to the law. To allow it to be raised by a plea would be contrary to the maxim nemo allegans suam turpitudinem est audiendus; and it would be absurd to suppose that the wrong-doer himself ever would so plead and face the consequences. Ex p. Ball, 10 Ch. D. 667, 14 Cox C. C. 237, per Bramwell, L. J. To same effect, Midland Ins. Co. v. Smith, 6 Q. B. D. 561, per Williams, J. Since, therefore, the principle does not affect the ciple can be enforced, if at all, only when public justice is likely to suffer if the party aggrieved is first allowed to obtain private redress. In such event the court probably has power, after the civil action or suit has been instituted, to summarily suspend or stay its further progress until a prosecution has been instituted and terminated.[22]

(3) In Rhode Island. In Rhode Island, where the principle that the remedy is suspended is declared in a modified form by statute,[23] compliance with the statutory conditions is a condition precedent to the right to sue, as under the early law, and therefore a part of plaintiff's case.[24]

cause of action, it cannot, contrary to the early decisions, be raised by demurrer to the declaration or bill, plea, or motion in arrest of judgment; nor can the court at the trial compel plaintiff to take a nonsuit under penalty of having verdict directed against him, or, in doubtful cases, leave it to the jury to affirm or negative the felony and render a verdict accordingly. Appleby v. Franklin, 17 Q. B. D. 93; Roope v. D'Avigdor, 10 Q. B. D. 412; Midland Ins. Co. v. Smith, 6 Q. B. D. 561; Ex p. Ball, 10 Ch. D. 667, 14 Cox C. C. 237; S. v. S., 16 Cox C. C. 566, sub nom. A. v. B., 24 L. R. Ir. 235; Wells v. Abrahams, L. R. 7 Q. B. 554 [Quain, J., contra, that if it appears on the face of the declaration that a felony was laid as a ground of the action, that might be a case for demurrer or for a motion in arrest]; Stone v. Marsh, 6 B. & C. 551; Lutterell v. Reynell, 1 Mod. 282; Williams v. Robinson, 20 U. C. C. P. 255; Walsh v. Nattrass, 19 U. C. C. P. 453; Taylor v. McCullough, 8 Ont. 309.

Exception — Plea.— No objection exists to a plea that plaintiff has caused a prosecution for a felony to be commenced upon the same facts as were involved in the civil suit. Defendant does not thereby admit that he is a felon; he merely puts upon the record the fact that plaintiff has commenced a prosecution against him as such. Taylor v. McCullough, 8 Ont. 309.

Special statutory abrogation.— An act of the legislature which provides that an innkeeper, or persons in his employ, shall be liable to an action for damages for selling liquor to an intoxicated person, although his death was caused thereby under such circumstances as amount in law to a felony, abrogates the common-law principle. McCurdy v. Swift, 17 U. C. C. P. 126.

22. Roope v. D'Avigdor, 10 Q. B. D. 412; S. v. S., 16 Cox C. C. 566, sub nom. A. v. B., 24 L. R. Ir. 235; Wells v. Abrahams, L. R. 7 Q. B. 554 [discussed in Ex p. Ball, 10 Ch. D. 667, 14 Cox C. C. 237]; Midland Ins. Co. v. Smith, 6 Q. B. D. 561; Taylor v. McCullough, 8 Ont. 309; Williams v. Robinson, 20 U. C. C. P. 255; Walsh v. Nattrass, 19 U. C. C. P. 453; Vincent v. Sprague, 3 U. C. Q. B. 283, per Macauley, J.; Hayle v. Hayle, 3 U. C. Q. B. O. S. 295; In re Herdson, 2 N. Zeal. Jur. N. S. 221 [cited in 28 Am. Rep. 49].

Origin and scope of this view.— This solution of the early principle was first suggested by Cockburn, C. J., and Blackburn, J., in Wells v. Abrahams, L. R. 7 Q. B. 554 [two justices contra]. Ex p. Ball, 10 Ch. D. 667, 14 Cox C. C. 237, per Bramwell, L. J. Where the criminal prosecution is not pending, and defendant makes no application for the stay of the civil proceedings, it has been held that there is no power in the court to enter such order on its own motion; that, apart from any right which the plaintiff may possess, defendant might be seriously prejudiced by the trial of the action being prevented. S. v. S., 16 Cox C. C. 566, 570, sub nom. A. v. B., 24 L. R. Ir. 235, O'Brien, J., dissenting and saying: "In my opinion it results from the very nature of the action of the court, and from the necessity of the case, because defendant may have very strong interest not to stir in the matter, and the crown, of course, does not appear, that the court will exercise that authority of their own motion and independently of any application from any party."

Amendment of declaration.— In a proceeding in rem against a ship, in which the statement of claim set up a cause of action with the word "fraudulently" therein contained, such word was ordered to be stricken out in answer to an objection by defendant that it made the act which gave rise to the cause of action a felony. The Princess Royal, L. R. 3 A. & E. 41.

Erroneous order of court.— Where an order of a judge staying the proceedings is erroneous, no doubt plaintiff has a right to have the order reviewed (Walsh v. Nattrass, 19 U. C. C. P. 453); but for error in refusing to stay, defendant has no right to have a verdict against him set aside or reviewed on appeal. It is only the public policy of the law which requires a judge to intervene in the interest of the state, and his failure to do so does not give defendant any right to move (Williams v. Robinson, 20 U. C. C. P. 255 [approved in Taylor v. McCullough, 8 Ont. 309]; Walsh v. Nattrass, 19 U. C. C. P. 453 [explaining Brown v. Dalby, 7 U. C. Q. B. 160]). See also Quinlan v. Barber, Batty 47.

Pennsylvania.— In this state it is provided by statute that the civil cause of action shall not be merged or in any way affected by the fact that it arose out of the commission of a felony (1 Brightly Purd. Dig. L. 388, § 4; 563, § 78); but it has been intimated in a case decided since this enactment that, where such a course is necessary for the sake of public justice, defendant may pray that the parol may demur, that is, that the civil action may be stayed or suspended until the criminal prosecution is terminated (Keyser v. Rodgers, 50 Pa. St. 275. See also Hutchinson v. Merchants', etc., Bank, 41 Pa. St. 42, 80 Am. Dec. 596).

b. Other Public Offenses. The common-law doctrine of the merger or suspension of the civil cause of action never had any application to misdemeanors, or other offenses differently qualified than felonies; and the civil remedy will lie exclusive of the criminal prosecution, or in conjunction with it.[25]

4. Perjury and Subornation of Perjury — a. General Rule. Perjury seems not to have been looked upon as a punishable offense under the early common law.[26] But, however this may be, false swearing by a party to litigation, or other witnesses, will not as a rule constitute a cause of action, either at law or in chancery, no matter how great the damage occasioned thereby to adverse parties. Otherwise there would be no end to litigation, or stability in the solemn adjudications of courts.[27]

sary in order to enable defendant to take advantage of plaintiff's omission to complain of the crime or offense before bringing suit for damages. A declaration for an injury occasioned by the commission of a crime or offense, under the Rhode Island statute, must allege the making of the complaint and the issuing of process thereon before the commencement of civil action, or it will be demurrable. Arnold v. Gaylord, 16 R. I. 573, 18 Atl. 177; Royce v. Oakes, 20 R. I. 252, 38 Atl. 371, 20 R. I. 418, 39 Atl. 758, 39 L. R. A. 845. 26. b. Exceptions to Rule. A court of chancery, however, it has been said, may very appropriately grant relief against a judgment at law where the perjury is established by written documents or by the conviction of the guilty party;[28] and if valid legal or equitable grounds for relief exist, aside from the perjury, an action or suit would, of course, be entertained.[29]

K. Arising Out of Public Contracts. Where corporations or natural persons agree with the state to perform certain duties toward individual members of the public, an action lies by the latter against the promisors for damage resulting from a breach of the contract.[30] Otherwise where the contractual duties are for the benefit of the public generally.[31]

L. Death by Wrongful Act — 1. Actions for the Personal Injury. The authorities all agree that no action for damages for an injury to a freeman, which results in his death, will lie, except by force of statute, on the well-settled principle that a personal cause of action dies with the person.[32]

"Endless litigation, in which nothing was ever finally determined, would be worse than occasional miscarriages of justice; and so the rule is that a final judgment cannot be annulled merely because it can be shown to have been based on perjured testimony; for if this could be done once it could be done again and again, ad infinitum." Dec. 445. Compare Winterbottom v. Wright, 10 M. & W. 109, wherein it was said by Rolfe, B.: "This is one of those unfortunate cases in which there certainly has been damnum, but it is damnum absque injuria; it is no doubt a hardship upon the plaintiff to be without a remedy, but by that consideration we ought not to be influenced. Hard cases, it has been frequently observed, are apt to introduce bad law." In this case it was held that no action would lie against an individual who contracted with the postmaster-general to provide and keep in repair a public mail-coach, by the driver thereof, hired by a third person who had contracted to carry the mail, for a personal injury caused by the breaking down of the coach through latent defects in its construction.

31. Thus a contract entered into by a corporation with a city, whereby the former agrees to provide adequate means for the extinguishing of conflagrations, does not give a cause of action to an individual member of the public whose property has been destroyed by fire owing to the failure of the contractors to perform as promised. It is not true that for every failure to perform a public duty an action will lie in favor of any person who may suffer injury by reason thereof. If the duty is purely a public duty, then the individual will have no cause of action; but it must appear that the object and purpose of imposing the duty was to confer a benefit upon individual members of the public. The obligation or duty of the contractors was to the city, and not to the individual citizen, looking to the nature of the duty and the benefits to be accomplished by the performance of the contract. 2. Actions for Loss of Services — a. General Rule. By the weight of authority it is also established that no action will lie at common law for a cause of action lying outside the principle of the abatement of personal actions; such as an injury to a third person, due to the loss of services which the death occasions.[33] The effect of these decisions is that no cause of action arises for such a wrongful act; and not merely that there is a cause of action which is extinguished or abated by other recognized legal principles. It is generally admitted that this is not in accord with the fundamental rules of law which determine what constitutes a legal injury;[34] and in at least one case, holding that the doctrine is not sufficiently supported by precedent in the United States to be stare decisis, it has been denied in toto.[35]

Hubgh v. New Orleans, etc., R. Co., 6 La. Ann. 495. 54 Am. Dec. 565 [cited in Castille v. Caffery Cent. Refinery, etc., Co., 48 La. Ann. 392, 19 So. 332].

34. See, generally, cases cited supra, note 33.

Such a principle cannot be vindicated on considerations of reason, justice, or policy. There exists the damage and pecuniary injury which, on general principles, give a right to compensation. If such right does not exist it is upon the wrong-doer to show why. Per Dillon, Cir. J., in Sullivan v. Union Pac. R. Co., 3 Dill. (U. S.) 334, 23 Fed. Cas. No. 13,599, 1 Centr. L. J. 595, 9 Am. L. Rev. 365; Osborn v. Gillett, L. R. 8 Exch. 88, 97, opinion of Bramwell, B., who further said: "In my judgment the exception is not upon any established principle of the common law; it is not applied in any adjudged case in the English books; it is not stated in any elementary treatise." In Baker v. Bolton, 1 Campb. 493, it was assumed to be the law by all parties and the court.

The reason for the common-law doctrine that an act causing the death of a human being was a felony, and the civil cause of action for the trespass was merged in the crime, no longer prevails; and it would seem that, under the legal principle that for every wrong there shall be a remedy, the unwritten law, expanding into new application on artificial restraint or obstruction imposed by public policy being removed, would allow the action. Cutting v. Seabury, 1 Sprague (U. S.) 522, 6 Fed. Cas. No. 3,521.

35. "The authentic evidence of what the common law is must be found in the judicial reports. It will be seen that all the cases, English and American, on this subject, rest upon the nisi prius decision, in 1808, of Lord Ellenborough in Baker v. Bolton, 1 Campb. 493. Considering that it is not reasoned and cites no authorities, and the time when it was made, and that the rule it declares is without any reason to support it, my opinion is that

b. Reason of Rule. Various reasons have been assigned in support of the rule,[36] but it is probably a survival of ancient English law which had no very well defined notion of a private injury apart from a public wrong.[37]

it ought not to be followed in a state where the subject is entirely open for settlement. It would be different if the rule had been settled in England by a long course of decisions made prior to the settlement of this country, as in that event the courts here would find it more difficult to reject it." Per Dillon, Cir. J., in Sullivan v. Union Pac. R. Co., 3 Dill. (U. S.) 334, 23 Fed. Cas. No. 13,599, 1 Centr. L. J. 595, 9 Am. L. Rev. 365.

Other decisions contra.— Some cases have held, without giving any particular reasons therefor, and as if it was an unquestioned legal principle, that a husband or father had at common law a right to recover of a wrongdoer, whose tortious act had resulted in the death of wife or child, the damage he had sustained thereby owing to loss of services. McDowell v. Georgia R. Co., 60 Ga. 320; Chick v. Southwestern R. Co., 57 Ga. 357; Allen v. Atlanta St. R. Co., 54 Ga. 503; Shields v. Yonge, 15 Ga. 349, 60 Am. Dec. 698; Ford v. Monroe, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 210; Lynch v. Davis, 12 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 323. See also Plummer v. Webb, 1 Ware (U. S.) 69, 19 Fed. Cas. No. 11,234.

36. Inestimable value of human life.— "The reason of the rule is to be found in that natural and almost universal, repugnance, among enlightened nations to setting a price upon human life, or any attempt to estimate its value by a pecuniary standard, a repugnance which seems to have been strong and prevalent among nations in proportion as they have been or become more enlightened and refined." Hyatt v. Adams, 16 Mich. 180, 190. See also, generally, cases cited in this subdivision.

Contra.— The reason for the rule just stated that a civil action for damages cannot be brought for the death of a human being because of the inappreciable value of human life will not bear a close examination, "inasmuch as the same may be said of reputation, sanctity of the marital relation, and the like, where the law, nevertheless, gives a remedy." Wyatt v. Williams, 43 N. H. 102. In Anglo-Saxon times also there was no such thing as the inappreciable value of human life. "The notion of compensation runs through the whole criminal law of the Anglo-Saxons, who allowed a sum of money as a recompense for every kind of crime. Every man's life had a value, called a ware, or capitis estimatio." Wise v. Teerpenning, 8 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 153, 156. To same effect, Wyatt v. Williams, 43 N. H. 102; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. McCloskey, 23 Pa. St. 526; Pollock & M. Hist. Eng. L. 449, 457–58, wherein it is said: "The most marvelous revolution, however, is that which occurs in the law of homicide, for not only does wilful homicide become a capital crime — this we might have expected to happen sooner or later — but the kinsfolk of the slain lose their right to a wer and to compensation of any sort or kind. A modern statute was required to give the parentes occisi a claim for damages in an English court. (Lord Campbell's Act, 9 & 10 Vict. c. 93.) Yet in many parts of Western Europe at a comparatively recent time men have sued for a ware, nor only so, they have lawfully prosecuted the blood feud."

Precedent.— The law has been so understood up to the present time, and if it is to be changed it rests with the legislature, and not with the courts, to make the change. It is admitted that no case can be found in the books where such an action as the present has been maintained, although similar facts must have been a matter of very frequent occurrence. This alone is strong to show what the general understanding was. Osborn v. Gillett, L. R. 8 Exch. 88, Bramwell, B., dissenting; Green v. Hudson River R. Co., 2 Keyes (N. Y.) 294, 2 Abb. Dec. (N. Y.) 277, per Leonard, J., who also said: "It is of no practical utility to search for the reason of the rule. It remains somewhat obscure. Whether it arose from the sentimental reason that the destruction of life by negligence was an injury that could not be compensated in damages, . . . or from the policy of the law to secure a greater safety to life and limbs by merging the right to damages by a civil action in the felony resulting from the killing of a human being by the negligent act of another, thus ensuring the coöperation of the next of kin, as may be supposed, in a vigorous prosecution of the criminal, and preventing the composition or settlement of such offenses, as I am inclined to believe,— it is now of little consequence to inquire."

Merger of cause of action.— Another reason frequently assigned is that an act which causes death was a felony at common law, and the civil cause of action was merged in the criminal offense. For the cases discussing this proposition see the next note.

37. Origin and history of rule.— "The most primitive laws that have reached us seem to point to a time when a man was responsible not only for all harm done by his own acts, but also for that done by the acts of his slaves, his beasts, or — for even this we must add — the inanimate things that belonged to him. . . . The man who commits homicide by misadventure or in self-defense deserves but needs a pardon. Bracton cannot conceal this from us, and it is plain from multitudinous records of Henry III's reign. If the justices have before them a man who, as a verdict declares, has done a deed of this kind, they do not acquit him, nor can they pardon him; they bid him hope for the king's mercy. . . . In cases of the latter sort we never hear of 'negligence' or of any similar standard of liability." 2 Pollock & M. Hist. Eng. L. 470, 477, 482. Such being the law, every homicide was a felony, and the civil cause of action was held to be merged or

3. Statutory Cause of Action. In most states the common law has been abrogated, to a greater or less extent, by statutes which create a cause of action; not, as a rule, for every injury, but only for the damage resulting to the family of the deceased.[38]

M. Statutory Enactments and Changes. In some jurisdictions certain of these fundamental principles of law have taken the form of statute law;[39] and drowned in the criminal offense; and, unlike acts attended by less serious consequences, the doctrine of merger was never superseded by that of the mere suspension of the remedy until public justice had been satisfied; but the rule remained after the law came to distinguish between wilful, and accidental or negligent killing, and to a great extent exploded both the doctrine of merger and that of suspension.

38. Statutory cause of action.— Such an action was first given in England by a statute known as Lord Campbell's Act, 9 & 10 Vict. c. 93. This statute has been, with various modifications, incorporated into the legislation of nearly all the American states. Stoeckman v. Terre Haute, etc., R. Co., 15 Mo. App. 503. See also Death; Negligence; Railroads.

Scope of statutes — Illustrations.— The language found in the preamble to Lord Campbell's Act, 9 & 10 Vict. c. 93, is not confined to cases to which the maxim actio personalis moritur cum persona applies, but is perfectly general: "Whereas no action at law is now maintainable against a person who, by his wrongful act, neglect, or default may have caused the death of another person, and it is oftentimes right and expedient that the wrongdoer in such cases shall be answerable in damages for the injury so caused by him." Per Pigott, B., in Osborn v. Gillett, L. R. 8 Exch. 88. Construed as a whole, however, it was for the purpose of abrogating the common-law rule that the cause of action did not survive, and that therefore no right of recovery for the damages resulting from the death existed in favor of deceased's personal representatives or next of kin, that Lord Campbell's Act was passed. This is manifest both from its recital and from its provisions. It did not provide for the case of masters, and their rights were not touched by it. Sullivan v. Union Pac. R. Co., 3 Dill. (U. S.) 334, 23 Fed. Cas. No. 13,599, 1 Centr. L. J. 598, 9 Am. L. Rev. 365.

In Georgia, § 2971 of the code gives the right of action to the persons therein named to recover for the homicide of a husband or parent, and that is all that it does declare in relation to a recovery for the homicide of anybody. The homicide of a husband or parent is made by the statute a special cause of action in favor of the persons therein named, and is limited to them. Chick v. Southwestern R. Co., 57 Ga. 357 [citing Georgia R., etc., Co. v. Wynn, 42 Ga. 331].

In Louisiana the statute reads that "the right of this action shall survive in cases of death in favor of the minor children and widow of the deceased, or either of them, and in default of these, in favor of the father and mother, or either of them, for the space of one year from death." Castille v. Caffery Cent. Refinery, etc., Co., 48 La. Ann. 322, 329, 19 So. 332.

Statutes do not merely transfer a preëxisting cause of action.— In an English case Mr. Justice Coleridge, delivering the opinion of the court, after referring to the argument of plaintiff's counsel, that if deceased had recovered he would have been entitled to a solatium, and that therefore his representatives ought to be allowed it, said: "But it will be evident that this act does not transfer this right of action to his representative, but gives to the representative a totally new right of action on different principles. . . . The measure of damage is not the loss or suffering of the deceased, but the injury resulting from his death to his family." Blake v. Midland R. Co., 18 Q. B. 93, 110, 10 Eng. L. & Eq. 443 [approved in Whitford v. Panama R. Co., 23 N. Y. 465, and Safford v. Drew, 3 Duer (N. Y.) 627]. To same effect see Quin v. Moore, 15 N. Y. 432.

39. Georgia.— In this state the rule of law, that every invasion of a positive legal right imports damage, and that an action may be sustained although no personal or actual damage is suffered, is recognized by the code, which provides that "general damages are such as the law presumes to flow from any tortious act, and may be recovered without proof of any amount." Ellington v. Bennett, 59 Ga. 286.

Louisiana.— The civil code of Louisiana, incorporating a provision of the Code Napoleon, provides that "every act whatever of man which causes damage to another obliges him by whose fault it happened, to repair it;" and that every person is responsible for the damage which he occasions not merely by his act, but by his negligence, his imprudence, or his want of skill. Castille v. Caffrey Cent. Refinery, etc., Co. 48 La. Ann. 322, 328, 19 So. 332; the legislature has ample power, not infrequently exercised, to create a remedy for many wrongs which, by virtue of them, do not give a right of action at common law.[40]

N. Conditions Precedent — 1. In General. Conditions precedent of various kinds are frequently imposed by express provision of contract, or are specifically required by law;[41] and they are also sometimes implied out of the relations between individuals.[42] They constitute a part of the cause of action, and strictly, therefore, must be performed before it will accrue and the remedial right arise.[43]

Donovan v. New Orleans, 11 La. Ann. 711; Cade v. Yocum, 8 La. Ann. 477; Hubgh v. New Orleans, etc., R. Co., 6 La. Ann. 495, 54 Am. Dec. 565; McGary v. Lafayette, 4 La. Ann. 440; St. Louis Church v. Blanc, 8 Rob. (La.) 51, 83; U. S. v. New Orleans, 17 Fed. 483. These provisions are not to be understood in a literal sense, as applicable indiscriminately to all cases whatever, but only to such acts as violate rights which the law undertakes to redress as being legal. St. Louis Church v. Blanc, 8 Rob. (La.) 51. Under these provisions the reparation made must equal the injury inflicted, with the exception made by the Civil Code, art. 1928, in relation to damages resulting from offenses, quasi-offenses, and quasi-contracts. In those cases much discretion must be left to the judge and jury. McGary v. Lafayette, 4 La. Ann. 440. The wrong done by one human being to another, or to his estate, creates an obligation by virtue of these provisions of law; that is, brings at once into existence the relation of debtor and creditor between the wrong-doer and the injured party. U. S. v. New Orleans, 17 Fed. 483.

40. Illustrations, generally.— All rights of property are held subject to such reasonable control and regulation in the mode of keeping and use as the legislature, under the police power vested in them by the constitution, may think necessary for the preventing of injuries to the rights of others and the security of the public health and welfare. Blair v. Forehand, 100 Mass. 136, 97 Am. Dec. 82, 1 Am. Rep. 94 [approved in Barker v. Barnard, 135 Mass. 116, 46 Am. Rep. 450]. Thus a statute imposing a penalty on an owner or tenant of any land containing coal who shall mine on such land within five feet of the land dividing it from that belonging to other persons, without the consent in writing of all persons interested in or having title to such adjoining lands, is a constitutional exercise of police power to preserve the natural boundary wall intact. Mapel v. John, 42 W. Va. 30, 24 S. E. 608, 57 Am. St. Rep. 839, 32 L. R. A. 800. Although at common law no cause of action can arise out of illegal transactions as between the parties thereto, the common law may be changed by statute; and for the interest of the public one of the parties to such a transaction may be given a remedy against the other. Thus a party who has been bribed to cast his vote in a certain way may be empowered to recover a penal sum from the one who instigated him to commit the wrong. State v. Schoonover, 135 Ind. 526, 35 N. E. 119, 21 L. R. A. 767 [followed in State v. Schoonover, 135 Ind. 701, 35 N. E. 121]. See also the preceding pages of this article for various other illustrations discussed in connection with the principles of law changed by them.

"Spite fences."— An apt illustration of an exception to these fundamental principles is furnished by statutes enacted in many states, which make malicious motive in the erection of high fences on one's own land a cause of action to one who suffers an inconvenience therefrom. See Adjoining Landowners.

41. Contract conditions.— For express conditions precedent imposed by contracts see Contracts.

Statutory conditions.— For notice as a condition precedent in an action for personal injuries see Meisenheimer v. Kellogg, 106 Wis. 30, 81 N. W. 1033; Municipal Corporations. Demand or notice in actions on contracts are sometimes required by statute. Thus Tenn. Laws (1807), c. 95, § 1, provides that no action can be maintained on a contract to pay money in specific articles, where no time or place is mentioned, until notice has been given or demand made at the usual residence of the payor, if he shall reside within the county where the contract was made. Hopkins v. Rogers, 3 Yerg. (Tenn.) 456; Grimes v. Bartee, 1 Yerg. (Tenn.) 204. For statutes imposing upon persons suing the taking of an oath of allegiance and loyalty, or the filing of an affidavit that all taxes chargeable by law upon debts or contracts sued upon have been paid, owing their origin to conditions existing as the result of the civil war, and short-lived, see 1 Cent. Dig. tit. "Action," § 44 et seq.

Conditions required by unwritten law.—For the requirement of the early common law that before a civil cause of action arising out of a felony can be legally redressed a criminal prosecution must have been instituted and conducted to a termination see supra, I, J, 3; for the necessity for obtaining leave to sue from the court appointing a receiver in actions by or against such receiver see Receivers.

42. See infra, I, N, 2, 3; Whitton v. Whitton, 38 N. H. 127, 137, 75 Am. Dec. 163, wherein it was said: "In many cases . . . the law implies, from the nature of the contract itself, that certain things must be done by him before the condition is broken, because it would otherwise be out of the power of the other party to perform it; and in such cases the effect of a neglect to do anything thus implied is the same as if it was expressed."

43. Weeks v. O'Brien, 141 N. Y. 199, 36 N. E. 185 [approving Oakley v. Morton, 11 N. Y. 25, 62 Am. Dec. 49]; Hatch v. Peet, 23

This is always so of conditions precedent contained in a statute creating a right or duty unknown to the common law.[44] But with other such conditions, whether express or implied by law, performance is often excused by the conduct of the adverse party, and the cause of action accrues without it.[45]

2. Notice. No one is entitled to notice before suit brought for a failure to perform that which he stipulates with another, unless he expressly contracts for it, or lacks and cannot obtain through sources other than the adverse party himself the information necessary to enable him to fulfil the duty he has undertaken.[46]

Barb. (N. Y.) 575; Midland Ins. Co. v. Smith, 6 Q. B. D. 561; Freeman v. Jeffries, L. R. 4 Exch. 189, 201, wherein it was said: "It is contended that no demand is necessary where there is already a cause of action. But this is begging the question; for the contention on the other side is that there can be no cause of action till demand, and the case of Wilkinson v. Godefroy, 9 A. & E. 536, is an authority in favor of that position." See, generally, Contracts. Thus, when notice is necessary, either by the terms or nature of the contract, it is of the gist of the action. Watson v. Walker, 23 N. H. 471.

In equity.— In the case of a condition precedent there must be a compliance therewith, or an excuse for non-compliance shown, as well in equity as at law. Barney v. Giles, 120 Ill. 154, 11 N. E. 206 [citing Downey v. O'Donnell, 86 Ill. 49]. Compare, contra, of implied demand before suit for specific performance, Bruce v. Tilson, 25 N. Y. 194, 202, wherein it was said per Smith, J.: "In equity the court has a discretion in respect to costs, and if an action is brought to enforce an equitable right unnecessarily and unreasonably, and without giving the defendant a fair opportunity, upon request or otherwise, to allow and to satisfy the plaintiff's claim without suit, the relief may be, and ordinarily will be, granted without costs, and the court, if it thinks proper, may make the plaintiff pay the defendant's costs. But the objection that a suit is brought without a technical demand is not available to bar an action in equity if the plaintiff has otherwise a good cause of action." 45. New York v. Butler, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 325, 337, wherein it is said: "No party can insist upon a condition precedent when its non-performance has been caused by himself. Such non-performance would not prevent the vesting of an estate, nor can it prevent the accruing of a right, or its enforcement by an action. It in effect amounts to a waiver." To same effect, Doll v. Noble, 116 N. Y. 230, 22 N. E. 406, 15 Am. St. Rep. 398; Clarke v. Crandall, 27 Barb. (N. Y.) 73; Fleming v. Gilbert, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 528.

Notice and demand.— A condition in a contract requiring written notice before suit can be brought for a default in the performance of its conditions is waived by an absolute and total refusal to carry out the agreement in whole or in part. Robinson v. Frank, 107 N. Y. 655, 14 N. E. 413 [citing Shaw v. Republic L. Ins. Co., 69 N. Y. 286]. To same effect, McQueen v. Smith, 118 N. C. 569, 24 S. E. 412. "There is another class of cases where the principle is well settled that wherever a right of action by one party depends upon his demanding performance of some act, or the execution of some instrument, by the other party, a demand or an offer or a tender of the thing to be done is unnecessary if the party has disabled himself from performance or gives notice that he will not perform." Clarke v. Crandall, 27 Barb. (N. Y.) 73, 77. See also Contracts, and for notice and demand by implication of law, infra, I, N, 2, 3.

Condition superadded to preexisting cause.— A statutory requirement that leave shall be obtained of the court before bringing an action on a judgment may be waived. It is no part of the cause of action which exists independently of the leave to sue. Lane v. Salter, 4 Rob. (N. Y.) 239; Dean v. Eldridge, 29 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 218. See also Judgments.

Inability to perform no excuse.— "Where a right of action depends upon the performance of a condition precedent, performance cannot be excused unless it is dispensed with or prevented by the opposite party, although it has become impossible without any default on the part of the plaintiff, or even by the act of God. . . . But the rule is different where the impossibility of performance is set up as matter of defense." Carpenter v. Stevens, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 589, 590; Moakley v. Riggs, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 69, 10 Am. Guaranty.— Where a party absolutely and unconditionally guarantees payment of money or other performance by a third person, no notice is required to be given by the promisee to the promisor in the event of the failure of such person. On the other hand the law implies that notice shall be given, by the party entitled to the benefit of the performance, of every fact necessary for the other party to know to enable him to perform, and of every material circumstance connected with it which is within his peculiar and personal knowledge[47] or which depends upon his choice.[48]

3. Demand — a. Necessity[49] — (I) In General — (A) Rule Stated. When a demand is an integral part of a cause of action, as when the date to pay or to deliver property or to do some act does not arise until after demand, then, as a general rule, a demand must be made; but when the date has come for doing the act, and it is the duty of defendant to do it unconditionally, then no demand, other than the suit itself, is necessary.[50] tract to pay money as soon as the promisee performed certain work and labor, it is not necessary to notify the promisor of the completion of the work before bringing suit to recover. The means of ascertaining whether or not the work is performed is open to him. Peck v. McMurtry, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 358. Contra, Vannoy v. Duprez, 72 Ind. 26; Shepherd v. Hubbard, 1 Bibb (Ky.) 494. See also Contracts; Work and Labor. Where an act is to be done by a third person, as the making out of a certificate for the amount of work done under a contract, on which payment therefor is to be made, each party is bound to take notice of the performance of the act, and no notice need be given the party liable before suit to recover the amount due. A distinction has always been taken between those cases where the promise is made, or the undertaking is implied, in consequence of a precedent debt or duty, and those cases where, by the expressed or implied promise of the contract, the obligation to pay or perform is to arise only by request. The former class of cases embraces all actions for goods sold and delivered, money lent, and work and labor performed; creates, eo instanti, the duty and liability to pay; and implies the undertaking to

(B) Debts Due and Payable Immediately. It may be stated as a general rule that where money is due and payable immediately, or where an action is for a precedent debt or duty, no demand is necessary.[51]

(C) Required by Contract. Where the contract itself provides that it is to be executed upon demand, or within a specified time after demand, a demand is usually essential to a right of action.[52]

(D) Required by Statute. Where a demand is required by statute, such demand made in the form provided is an essential prerequisite to an action.[53]

(II) Against Wrong-Doers. It is universally held, even in those jurisdictions where demand is required under other circumstances, that as against wrong-doers no demand is necessary as a prerequisite to action.[54] This rule does not apply, do so sufficiently to maintain an action; and the writ is a demand. In the case of a bill or note payable on demand the same reason applies. The instrument imports a consideration, a precedent debt, as in Capp v. Lancaster, Cro. Eliz. 548, 549: "A duty maintenant, and therefore, there needs not any demand, as in the other cases, for there the plaintiff had not any cause of action until a precedent act done by him." But in the other class of cases it is otherwise. Where the action is for a collateral sum, to be paid on request, where, by the terms of the contract, the plaintiff is to request a performance or payment, the request becomes part of the agreement; it performs a condition precedent. West v. Murph, 3 Hill (S. C.) 284.

Public duties distinguished from private duties.— As to the necessity of a demand in any case, a distinction is to be made between duties of a public nature and those of a more private character which affect private individuals only. In the case of a public duty, which is strictly of a public nature, not affecting individual interest, where no one is especially empowered to demand its performance, there is no necessity for a demand or a refusal. Where the duty is required to be performed by law and is of a public nature, the law is a sufficient demand, and an omission to perform is a refusal. however, where the owner waives the tort and sues for money had and received on the strength of the contract implied by law between the parties.[55]

b. Sufficiency — (I) In General. Although a demand and a refusal be requisite to a right of action, yet the law does not require any particular form of words for either. Any words will suffice, provided they are understood by the parties to be a claim to money or property on the one side, and a refusal to pay or to deliver on the other.[56]

(IV) Where to Be Made. The place where a demand is to be made, when necessary, is largely dependent upon circumstances, and no fixed rule can be laid down on the subject beyond the general statement that the demand must be reasonable as to place as well as in other respects.[59]

(V) Effect of Excessive Demand. As a general rule the mere fact that a party embraces in his demand more than he has a right to will not justify defendant in refusing or neglecting to pay or deliver within a reasonable time so much as plaintiff is justly entitled to,[60] but it is otherwise where the failure to pay that which is due would occasion a forfeiture.[61]

(VI) Effect of Repeated Demand. Where a cause of action has accrued by reason of a proper demand made and refused, if plaintiff subsequently makes another demand he waives his right of action on that first made and is bound to accept a fulfilment if offered.[62]

c. Object of Demand. The object of demand is to afford defendant an opportunity to perform his contract, or to restore the property demanded to the rightful owner, without being put to the expense and inconvenience of litigation.[63]

After writ, but before service.— It has been held that a demand is sufficiently made as to time, although made after a writ has been sued out or a bill in equity filed, where plaintiff has instructed the officer in charge of the writ or summons not to make service until after demand upon defendant, and refusal by him. Causes which determine the place of delivery have no relevancy to the place of demand; for the demand need not of necessity be made at the place where the goods and chattels must be received. Higgins v. Emmons, 5 Conn. 76, 13 Am. Dec. 41. See also Bragdon v. Poland, 51 Me. 323. Compare Hamilton v. Calhoun, 2 Watts (Pa.) 139.

Under contract to pay money the place of payment is not material; the money is supposed to be with the debtor wherever he may be, and therefore, when a demand of money is necessary, it may be made at any place. Hamilton v. Calhoun, 2 Watts (Pa.) 139. And see particular titles referred to supra, note 49.

Under contract to pay merchandise at the place of business of the promisor a personal demand elsewhere than at the place of business is good unless met by the offer to pay there. Widner v. Walsh, 3 Colo. 418. Compare Vance v. Bloomer, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 196.

Written demand left at the house of an absent defendant is sometimes sufficient. Hunter v. Spurlock, 3 La. Ann. 97, 22 Am. Dec. 165; White v. Demary, 2 N. H. 546. But ordinarily such a notice is insufficient. Phelps v. Gilchrist, 28 N. H. 266.

Refusal to accept proper amount.— A demand, where necessary, must be of a character to enable the promisor to perform according to the terms of his contract. Thus, where plaintiff demands more than is his due, and refuses what the facts in the case show was offered him by defendants, and rightfully offered under the contract, such facts are fatal to his cause of action. Russell v. Ormsbee, 10 Vt. 274. Where a party, in demanding property, informs defendant that he was instructed by plaintiff not to accept any of the property less than the whole that he has demanded, and that he should follow his instructions, defendant is relieved, under the circumstances, from the duty of presenting and tendering that portion of the property demanded which the plaintiff was entitled to, in the case where plaintiff was not entitled to the whole. The legal principle that a party is not bound to do a nugatory act is applicable. Gragg v. Hull, 41 Vt. 217.

d. Time for Compliance. A defendant must be allowed a reasonable time in which to comply with a demand, taking into consideration all the circumstances of the case, unless he has absolutely refused to so comply, in which case a suit may be brought immediately.[64]

e. What Will Excuse Failure to Make — (I) In General. Whenever a demand would be but a useless ceremony, as by reason of defendant's inability or refusal to perform his obligation or his denial of plaintiff's right, the law will relieve plaintiff of the necessity of a special demand before bringing his action.[65]

(II) Refusal of Defendant. Where a defendant absolutely and unconditionally refuses to pay over money due to, or deliver up property belonging to plaintiff, he not only waives any objection to the form in which a demand may have been made, but also releases plaintiff from all obligation to make any demand whatever.[66]

Equity and law distinguished.—The rule in chancery seems to be that if defendant in his answer denies plaintiff's right, he cannot also insist in his defense that there is no legal demand. But at law it is otherwise to this extent, that if defendant does not, by his declarations and conduct, furnish any evidence from which the jury can infer a waiver, or if the circumstances of the case do not clearly show that a demand could not have been complied with, defendant may, on the trial, insist upon proof of a demand, although he also denies plaintiff's right. Heard v. Lodge, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 53, 32 Am. Dec. 197.

money or do a collateral thing, and no time is specified therefor, the law implies that it shall be done in a reasonable time. Hence, when a reasonable time has elapsed, plaintiff has the right to maintain an action without previous demand.[68]

II. REMEDY.

A. Meaning of Term. The word "remedy," in a comprehensive sense, is the means employed to enforce a right or redress an injury, including not only applications to courts, but any other lawful mode of obtaining satisfaction.[69] As here used, however, and as generally defined in law, it refers to those means of redress only which are judicial.[70]

B. No Wrong Without a Remedy — 1. IN GENERAL. It has been an unquestioned principle of jurisprudence from very early times that there can be no wrong without a remedy;[71] that where the law recognizes a right it gives a remedy to enforce it or redress its violation.[72] Right and remedy are reciprocal,

The remedy is "the action or means given by the law for the recovery of a right." Andrews v. Herriot, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 508 [citing Cunningham L. Dict.; Jacob L. Dict.].

Illustrations.— One of the remedies by act of the parties aggrieved, enumerated by Blackstone, bk. 2, c. 1, is that of distress for rent which existed at the common law and was regulated by statute, by which the landlord might seize and sell the tenant's property to enforce payment of the rent. Another non-judicial remedy is the right of a pledgee to sell the property pledged for payment of the debt for which it is pledged. Another is the power of sale contained in mortgages or trust deeds, where they are permitted by the law of the state. In general it may be said that any means in the hands of the party aggrieved, or any other person, though not a court, for enforcing performance of a contract,— any mode of enforcing it agreed on by the parties, if recognized and permitted by the law,— is a legal remedy; and where the power of administering a remedy is lodged by law with any person or body, especially if the duty to administer it is also imposed, that constitutes a legal remedy. This would include the legislative power and duty to provide means to pay state or municipal debts. State v. Young, 29 Minn. 474, 9 N. W. 737.

70. Various definitions.— A remedy is the judicial means of enforcing a right or redressing a wrong. Abbott L. Dict.; Stratton v. European, etc., R. Co., 74 Me. 422. The word "remedy" pertains more properly to those modes of procedure in pleading which lead up to and end in the judgment. Johnson v. Fletcher, 54 Miss. 628, 28 Am. Rep. 388. The remedy for every species of wrong is, as Judge Blackstone says, the being put in possession of that right whereof the party injured is deprived. The instruments whereby this remedy is obtained are a diversity of suits and actions. Cohens v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 264, 5 L. ed. 257. In its more comprehensive sense the law of remedy includes all lawful modes of redressing the violation of legal rights. But as more commonly used it covers only the forms of redress which may be had through the agency of courts of justice. Clark v. Eddy, 22 Cinc. L. Bul. 63, 10 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 539.

Under the codes.— The code has furnished no definition of remedy except so far as one can be drawn from its distribution of all remedies into actions and special proceedings. It seems to regard every original application to a court of justice for a judgment or order as a remedy. Belknap v. Waters, 11 N. Y. 477 [approved Matter of Cooper, 22 N. Y. 67]. The first section of the code shows what was intended by the word "remedy." It is limited to actions and special proceedings. Linden v. Hepburn, 3 Sandf. (N. Y.) 668. An application to a court for admission to the bar is judicial in its nature, and clearly a remedy under the code. Matter of Cooper, 22 N. Y. 67.

2. Scope of Rule. This principle, that there is no wrong without a remedy, must be understood, however, with reference only to those rights or wrongs which the law recognizes as legal, having no application to those which do not, within legal principles, constitute causes of action.[74] Where cases are new in principle it is necessary to have recourse to legislative interposition in order to remedy the grievance;[75] but where they are only new in instance, and the sole question is upon the application of a principle recognized in the law, there must be a suitable remedy.[76]

It is a legal paradox to say that one has a legal right to something, and yet that to deprive him of it is not a legal wrong. When the law thus declines to interfere between the claimant and his disturber, and stands, as it were, neutral between them, it is manifest that, in respect to the matter involved, no claim to legal rights can be advanced"); Moore v. Luce, 29 Pa. Statutory right.— It makes no difference in this respect whether the right exists at common law or by statute. Stearns v. Atlantic, etc., R. Co., 46 Me. 95.

Effect of statute prescribing forms.— It is not to be supposed that the legislature, in prescribing the forms of writs in certain cases, intended to deny all remedy except such as may be under, or agreeable to, writs in such forms. Webster v. Edson, Smith (N. H.) 370.

Illustrations.— The maxim that there is no wrong without a remedy is a legal maxim and must be taken in a legal sense. It does not give a right of action merely for malicious motives in the doing of an act which a party has a legal right to do. "Courts administering civil law cannot punish sin or wickedness unless it be committed in violation of the civil law, which is the measure of their jurisdiction." Payne v. Western, etc., R. Co., 13 Lea. (Tenn.) 507, 527, 49 Am. Rep. 666. Every defendant against whom an action is unsuccessfully brought must inevitably experience some injury or inconvenience for which he receives no declared compensation. Yet in such cases the party injured is left without any remedy, and the maxim ubi jus ibi remedium has no application. Donovan v. New Orleans, 11 La. Ann. 711. The maxim does not apply where there is no one against whom the remedy can be enforced, as where a corporation liable for fires caused by engines operated on its railroad is no longer in existence and the road is operated, when the damage occurs, by trustees whom the law says shall not be liable. Stratton v. European, etc., R. Co., 74 Me. 422.

Multiplicity of suits no objection.— Where a plaintiff is obstructed of his right, he shall have his action. And it is no objection to say that it will occasion multiplicity of actions; for if men will multiply injuries, actions must be multiplied too, for every man that is injured ought to have his recompense. Per Holt, C. J., in Ashby v. White, 2 Ld. Raym. 938.

Doctrine essential to the growth of law.— "When you find a breach of the common law producing an injury to third persons, and

3. Framing New Remedies — a. In General. That there may not be a wrong without a remedy, new writs will be framed to redress or enforce new rights arising under established legal principles, if none appropriate to the case can be found;[77] but this power is one to be cautiously exercised, and never where justice can be reached by way of remedies already known to the law.[78] During the formative period of the common-law actions these new writs were issued out of chancery and directed to the law courts;[79] but this practice seems to have fallen into disuse after chancery had obtained recognition as a distinct judicial department of the state, and, whether the power thus to act had theretofore been possessed by the common-law courts or not,[80] it has since been upheld and exercised by them as a necessary and indisputable appurtenant to their jurisdiction;[81]

there is a principle, resting on reason and justice, in harmony with the principles of that law, and conflicting with none of its established rules, the application of which will furnish a remedy, you may take it that the common law adopts that principle and makes it a part of its own code. So it is, unquestionably, a fact that a great part of the common law has been gradually built up, and you can find no other foundation for it. In every instance of such accretions, if I may so call them, there must have been a first decision without any judicial precedent or statutory authority. On this principle, so guarded, it is really of the greatest practical importance to let no doubt or discredit be thrown. If you disparage it you not only sap the foundation of much that is now established on satisfactory grounds, but you deprive the common law of an expansive power to which it owes, more, perhaps, than to anything else, its high character and great utility; a power which may in some degree be its set-off against the more enlarged range and scientific divisions of the Roman law." Per Coleridge, J., in Gosling v. Veley, 4 H. L. Cas. 679, 768. "Where the principle is precisely the same, that all the mischiefs flowing from the one inevitably flow from the other, — where they vary in degree but not in kind,— I think the case no more requires legislative interference than one half of the cases every day occurring in Westminster Hall, where the old principle is applied to new combinations of circumstances, in order to circumvent the machinations of those who ingeniously are endeavoring by slight alterations to defeat or to evade the decisions of the courts." Per Park, J., in Fletcher v. Sondes, 3 Bing. 501, 550.

Absence of precedent.— That no precedent can be discovered in which a particular cause of action has been adjudged legal is not a decisive ground of objection if on reason and principle it is maintainable. Exercise by courts of this power entirely legal.— "As there was a time when there were no common-law precedents, everything that can be done with them could be done without them. And as nearly all our procedure, including initial, intermediate, and final process, pleading, trial, and judgment, at law and in equity, is of common-law judicial origin, and has been a subject of much common-law judicial alteration, the question arises whether this work is legally done by a court. It must be admitted that, in early times, the distinction between judicial and legislative power was very imperfectly developed, and that consequently there was much judicial legislation which is not evidence of the common law, and has no weight as common-law authority. But the great mass of the precedents of common-law procedure were made, or approved and allowed, from time to time, in the rightful exercise of judicial power. Each of them is presumed

b. Action on the Case. A notable instance of a new writ framed under the early common law to reinforce the other more technical forms of common-law actions, and which more easily adapts itself to changing conditions, is that of the action of trespass on the case.[83] to have been introduced because it was deemed reasonably necessary for the convenient ascertainment or vindication of some legal right. And the introduction of each was a precedent for introducing as many more as, at any subsequent time, should be found reasonably necessary for the same purpose. The non-production of a necessary one is an innovation — a departure from an immemorial usage that is founded on an elementary principle." Per Doe, C. J., in Metcalf v. Gilmore, 59 N. H. 417, 433, 47 Am. Rep. 217. To same effect, Boody v. Watson, 64 N. H. 162, 9 Atl. 794, per Doe, C. J. The efficient operation of the maxim that every right, when withheld, must have a remedy, and every injury its proper redress, "does not depend upon such forms as happened to be invented for particular cases, by clerks 'too much attached to ancient precedents,' or by chancellors engaged in enlarging their own jurisdiction upon 'a strained interpretation' and 'false and fictitious suggestions.' If the common law had imposed the duty of framing its remedies upon nobody but a chancellor deriving equity power chiefly from the inadequacy of those remedies, the chancery writ of subpœna, indefinitely expanded, must have kept the work of juries and jury courts within narrow bounds. Employing common-law judges and practitioners, as well as chancellors and chancery clerks, in the service of devising measures of judicial administration, the remedial branch of immemorial custom has not been extinguished or exhausted by its own inventions; and it does not confine the duty of maintaining rights to ways and means that are defective. The permanent necessity of adequate remedy continues to sanction the best inventible procedure and to make the form and substance of relief at law more ample, specific, and equitable." Per Doe, C. J., in Owen v. Weston, 63 N. H. 599, 601, 4 Atl. 801, 56 Am. Rep. 547.

Effect on forms of actions.— "The distinction between substantive rights and their common-law remedies recovered its original importance when rights were liberated from the oppressive yoke of remedial form, which materially confounded the distinction and inculcated false ideas of law. The question of form of action is not considered when it is of no practical consequence, and time spent upon it would be wasted." Per Doe, C. J., in Boody v. Watson, 64 N. H. 162, 172, 9 Atl. 794. "Our forms of action are not mere rubrics nor dead categories; they are not the outcome of the classificatory process that has been applied to preëxisting materials. They are institutes of the law; they are — we say it without scruple — living things. Each of them lives its own life, has its own adventures, enjoys a longer or shorter day of vigor, usefulness, and popularity, and then sinks perhaps into a decrepit and friendless old age. A few are still-born, some are sterile, others live to see their children and children's children in high places. The struggle for life is keen among them, and only the fittest survive." Pollock & M. Hist. Eng. L. 559.

Statutes conferring power on courts.— Statutes authorizing the court to establish rules and orders of practice, and prescribe forms of proceedings, and a bill of rights which declares that every citizen shall be entitled to a remedy for all injuries he may receive in his person, property, or character, are mere confirmations and reënactments of the common law. Boody v. Watson, 64 N. H. 162, 9 Atl. 794; Owen v. Weston, 63 N. H. 599, 4 Atl. 801, 56 Am. Rep. 547; Metcalf v. Gilmore, 59 N. H. 417, 434, 47 Am. Rep. 217, wherein it was said per Doe, C. J.: "The legislature can no more delegate to the court the power of legislation than the court can delegate the power of deciding the judicial questions of law raised in this case. The history of common-law procedure is a history of precedents, suggested, invented, or sanctioned by the court because the court regarded them as convenient in fact; altered and improved because the court regarded their improvement as convenient in fact; or laid aside and abandoned because experience, or changed conditions of property, business, and society, called for new ones more convenient in fact than the old." In Georgia it is provided by the code that for every right there shall be a remedy, and every court having jurisdiction of the one may, if necessary, frame the other. 82. Metcalf v. Gilmore, 59 N. H. 417, 435, 47 Am. Rep. 217, per Doe, C. J., who said: "The judicial duty of allowing a convenient procedure as a necessary incident of the administration of the law of rights has not been and cannot be repealed by the court: and so far as it has not been changed by statute it is now what it was at first, and what in the nature of things it must be. We have no more authority to refuse to allow methods of pleading and practice, consistent with the statute, and necessary for expeditious and economical litigation, than the primitive courts had to defeat justice by allowing no methods whatever."

c. Equitable and Extraordinary Remedies. To this principle of the law may also be referred the origin and expansive growth of equitable remedies,[84] and the high prerogative and judicial writs, mandamus, prohibition, and quo warranto, the writ of habeas corpus, and perhaps other remedies of early origin.[85]

4. Form of Proceedings — a. Actions at Common Law. Where the right or duty is legal in its nature the action must be one of law,[86] adapted to the nature of the case and molded according to the forms of the common law.[87]

b. Suits in Equity. But the remedy for a new right created by statute is not necessarily at law; the question must depend upon the nature of the statutory right, and if it is equitable the remedy is by suit in equity.[88]

See also other cases cited infra, this note.

Equity jurisdiction "never would have swelled to that enormous bulk we now see, if the judges of the courts of common law had been anciently as liberal as they have been in later times. I have always thought that formerly there was too confined a way of thinking in the judges of the common-law courts, and that courts of equity have risen by the judges not properly applying the principles of the common law, but being too narrowly governed by old cases and maxims, which have too much prevented the public from having the benefit of the common law." Per Lord Chief Justice Wilmot in Collins v. Blantern, 2 Wils. C. P. 341, 350.

Rise of equity jurisprudence.— "In early times the chief judicial employment of the chancellors must have been in devising new writs directed to the courts of the common law to give remedy in cases where none was before administered. But when uses of land, totally discountenanced by the courts of common law, were introduced, the chancellor, by a strained interpretation of the Statute of Westminster II, c. 24, which authorized a greater liberality in the framing of new writs, devised the writ of subpœna, returnable in a court of chancery only, to make the feoffee to use accountable to his cestui que use; which process was afterward extended to other matters wholly determinable at the common law, upon false and fictitious suggestions." Federal courts.— Where a state statute confers a new right without prescribing the form of a remedy except that which shall be by action, which under the state code includes both actions at law and suits in equity, if the right is equitable it will be enforced by the federal courts in the same manner as they enforce other equitable rights. c. Under Code Procedure. Every action or suit under the code is in the nature of a special action on the case[89] in which plaintiff, unhampered by technical forms, states the facts which constitute his cause of action; and there can be little difficulty as to the remedy.[90] Provision is generally made, however, for a resort to other known remedies in case it should become necessary to prevent a failure of justice.[91]

C. Change and Modification of Remedy. The rule is well settled that no one has a vested right in any particular remedy, and that remedies can be modified and changed by the legislature at its pleasure, subject, however, to the qualification — imposed by the organic law of the United States and most of the states of the country — that no law shall impair the obligation of contracts or encroach upon or violate other vested rights. In this respect there is an important distinction between statutes creating rights and those which afford remedies.[92]

They are not in all cases specifically pointed out, nor do we have any mode for devising or framing writs, but we have a general provision in our law preserving a remedy for every wrong a court of justice has power to redress."

Framing remedies in equity.— The Georgia code provision that "for every right there shall be a remedy, and every court having jurisdiction of the one may, if necessary, frame the other," applies to all courts; and the principle that equity will afford relief when the law gives a right, but legal forms afford no remedy, or no adequate remedy, is said to have been thereby enlarged. No such power in courts.—If it be admitted that there is a natural and necessary impropriety in attempting to determine the legal and equitable rights of parties in the same action, the courts are without power to offer a remedy for the evil. Holmes v. Campbell, 12 Minn. 221.

Such law not retrospective.— A law changing the mode of enforcing rights will govern as to proceedings instituted after it goes into effect, no matter when the rights sought to be enforced accrued. Hughes v. Russell, 43 Ill. App. 430; Rich v. Flanders, 39 N. H. 304.

Pending actions.— The statute can make the remedy applicable to pending suits as well as to those subsequently brought, unless the legislature is prohibited from doing so by some provision of the organic law. Campbell v. Iron-Silver Min. Co., 83 Fed. 643, 55 U. S. App. 150, 27 C. C. A. 646. To same effect, Krause v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 4 Pa. Co. Ct. 60.

A judgment is not a remedy.— Otherwise no judgment would have any force beyond the territory where rendered. Statutes pertaining to the remedy are merely such as relate to the course and form of proceeding, but do not affect the substance of a judgment when pronounced. Morton v. Valentine, 15 La. Ann. 150 [cited in Johnson v. Fletcher, 54 Miss. 628, 28 Am. Rep. 388].

Instance of unconstitutional law.— The means provided after judgment for making it effective are a part of the remedy and subject to modification; but the withdrawal of property from the operation of a judgment on a contract debt, as by an exemption law, strikes directly at the right and impairs the obligation of the contract. Johnson v. Fletcher, 54 Miss. 628, 28 Am. Rep. 388. See Exemptions; Homesteads.

Distinguished from lex loci contractus.— "The distinction between the obligation of contracts and the mode of applying remedies thereto is well established. The former is universally recognized according to the law of the place where the contract is made; the latter is bounded by the territorial limits and is not of efficiency elsewhere." Titus v. Hobart, 5 Mason (U. S.) 378, 23 Fed. Cas. No. 14,063. See also Contracts.

State and federal courts.— In the absence of clear expressions of the legislative law to that effect it is not to be inferred, waiving the question of power, that a state statute was intended to furnish remedies to suitors of the federal courts, the powers of which are derived wholly from the constitution and laws of the United States. Majors v. Cowell, 54 Cal. 478. There is no clause in the constitution which restrains the right of each state to legislate upon the remedy by which judgments of other states shall be put in suit, exclusive of all interference with their merits. General statutory remedy may be resorted to.— Where no remedy is given by the statute which creates a new right, the party injured may resort to the means of redress given by the common law or any general statute providing a remedy in similar cases. Smith v. Lockwood, 13 Barb. (N. Y.) 209.

Statutory right as absolute as common-law right.— In the absence of any authority to the contrary it is not perceived why a legal right to compensation for actual damages sustained, even though such right depend wholly upon a statute, is not as worthy of protection in a court of law as any common-law right. The common law is said to be, in fact, nothing but the expression of ancient statutes; but, whether this be so or not, the injury for a violation of a statute right is as real as are injuries which exist only by the common law. "It is in the general true that if an affirmative statute which is introductive of a new law direct a thing to be done in a certain manner, that [a] thing shall not, even although [if] there are no negative words, be done in any other manner." Bac. Abr., "Statute," G, cited in Kennedy v. Reames, 15 S. C. 548.

It is only where a new right is given, which the party would not be entitled to but for the statute, that the remedy afforded by the statute is exclusive. Jordan, etc., Plankroad Co. v. Morley, 23 N. Y. 552. "There are instances, indeed, in which a court of equity gives remedy where the law gives none; but where a particular remedy is given by law, and that remedy is bounded and circumscribed by particular rules, it would be very improper for this court to take it up where the law leaves it, and extend it further than the law allows." Heard v. Stanford, Cas. t. Talb. 173 [approved in 1 Story Eq. Jur. § 61, and Janney v. Buell, 55 Ala. 408].

Defective remedies.— The rule is applied although the remedy provided by the statute is so far defective that the right cannot be properly enforced; and neither a court of law nor one of equity can supplement it and go beyond the remedy afforded by the statute. The maxims that every right has a remedy, and that where a law does not give redress equity will afford relief, however just in theory, are subordinate to positive institutions and cannot be applied either to subvert established rules of law or to give a court a jurisdiction hitherto unknown. Chandler v. Hanna, 73 Ala. 390 [distinguishing Montandon v. Deas, 14 Ala. 33, 48 Am. Dec. 84]; Phillips v. Ash, 63 Ala. 414; Janney v. Buell, 55 Ala. 408; Dudley v. Mayhew, 3 N. If fraud intervenes or some other impediment or difficulty is interposed, obstructing the enforcement of the statutory remedy and rendering such remedy inadequate, perhaps a court of equity could take jurisdiction to enforce it as in other cases where legal remedies are not complete or appropriate. Chandler v. Hanna, 73 Ala. 390.

96. View in some respects contra.— The rules as to exclusive and cumulative remedies in civil cases seem to be applications of early common-law principles laid down in actions for penalties and prosecutions for crimes and other public offenses. Hartford, etc., R. Co. v. Kennedy, 12 Conn. 499; Jordan, etc., Plank-road Co. v. Morley, 23 N. Y. 552; McKinney v. Monongahela Nav. Co., 14 Pa. St. 65, 66, 53 Am. Dec. 517, wherein the court said: "They were predicated of remedies for public wrongs; but there is nothing peculiar in the subject-matter of them to show that they are not equally predicable of remedies for private injuries;" O'Connor v. Pittsburgh, 18 Pa. St. 187; Brattleboro v. Wait, 44 Vt. 459. In Hartford, etc., R. Co. v. Kennedy, 12 Conn. 499, discussing the application of these principles in civil cases, it was held that remedial statutes, unlike criminal and penal laws, should be liberally construed; that the rule that where a statute creates an offense known to the common law, and in the enacting or prohibiting clause points out the mode of proceeding under it, that mode alone can be pursued, should not be held applicable to beneficial statutes where there is a suitable remedy already in existence,— for example, assumpsit, to recover the amount of a stock subscription. It may be noted, however, that this was held of a statutory power and mode of execution given to a corporation, whereby it might forfeit and sell the shares of stock of delinquent subscribers,— a non-judicial remedy. See infra, II, E, 4, c. As in the case of penal statutes, so likewise of beneficial statutes: where a new right is created, if there exists an appropriate common-law remedy it may be pursued, although the statute creating the right also gives a remedy, where such remedy is contained in a distinct substantive clause. Hartford, etc., R. Co. v. Kennedy, 12 Conn. 499. For these principles of the law of public wrongs see CRIMINAL LAW; PENALTIES. A statute giving a cause of action, unknown at the common law, for acts or omissions which occasion death, may be enforced in admiralty by its own processes, although a particular remedy is pre-

3. New Remedy for Preëxisting Right. Where the right or duty is not created by the statute, but the statute is remedial only, providing a new remedy for that which had been previously established by law to be a proper subject for legal redress, the statutory remedy is merely cumulative, unless preëxisting remedies are taken away either expressly or by necessary implication; and the party injured may resort to either at his election.[97]

4. Scope of Rules — a. In General. Statutes will not be construed in accordance with these general legal principles for determining whether a remedy is exclusive, or cumulative merely, if from the whole act it is apparent that it was otherwise intended.[98]

Cumulative statutory remedies.— In like manner a statutory remedy for a right established and legally enforceable under prior statutes is cumulative merely. Chapman v. Weaver, 19 Ala. 626; Lowell v. Wyman, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 273; Burnham v. Onderdonk, 41 N. Y. 425; Vinton v. Cattaraugus County, 50 Hun (N. Y.) 600, 2 N. Y. Suppl. 367; Crane v. Sawyer, 5 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 372. A statute which provides that "when any pecuniary forfeiture or fine, imposed by law, is made recoverable by bill, plaint, or information, it may nevertheless be sued for and recovered in an action of debt, or an action of trespass on the case," relates to penal and criminal laws only; and where a remedial statute gives a new right and prescribes a remedy this provision of law will not have the effect of increasing the remedies by which the right may be pursued. Wiley v. Yale, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 553, 554.

Early statement of law.—"If a statute gives a remedy in the affirmative (without a negative expressed or implied), for a matter which was actionable by the common law, the party may sue at the common law as well as upon the statute, for this does not take away the common law." Comyn Dig. tit. Action upon Statute, C; Doe v. Georgia R., etc., Co., 1 Ga. 524; Barden v. Crocker, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 383; Crittenden v. Wilson, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 165, 15 Am. Dec. 462; Almy v. Harris, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 175.

In admiralty law.— This rule of construction is as applicable to the remedies of the maritime law as it is to those of the common law. The Waverly, 7 Biss. (U. S.) 465, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,301; The M. W. Wright, Brown Adm. (U. S.) 290, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 9,983.

Equitable remedy.— As a rule, a remedy given by statute is considered as a legal remedy in contradistinction to an equitable remedy. But a remedy given by statute may sometimes be an equitable remedy, and when it is, it does not supersede some other previously existing equitable remedy unless it has been expressly so enacted, but the second remedy is merely cumulative and the two remedies are in effect concurrent. Board of Education v. Scoville, 13 Kan. 17.

Character of remedy not considered.— Although a new remedy provided by statute is much to be preferred to one already existing, yet parties are not restricted to it, if the statute contains no prohibition. Dean v. Eldridge, 29 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 218.

98. How statutes construed.— In all cases of statutes creating new rights, if no pro-

b. Remedy Coextensive With Right. The rule that a remedy for a newly created right is exclusive is not of universal application. It applies only when the remedy is coextensive with the right, and when, from the character and provisions of the act and the nature of the right and remedy, it is to be understood that the remedy is designed to be exclusive.[99]

c. Non-Judicial Remedies. To be exclusive the remedy must also be judicial.[1]

d. As Declared by Statute. In Pennsylvania, by a general law, a statutory visions exist in such statutes to indicate that the remedy is intended as cumulative, it is held to be exclusive, because in all such cases the powers, rights, and remedies given are matters stricti juris; but if it is to be gathered from the provisions of the statutes that the means prescribed for executing it, or the remedy given as a redress for injury which its execution occasioned to the rights of others, are not intended to be exclusive, but cumulative, then the rule does not apply. Fletcher v. State Capital Bank, 37 N. H. 369. Statutes giving particular remedies for rights already established as legal are not to be construed as taking away the existing remedies unless the intention is manifest. Repeals by implication, especially of remedies, are not favored in the law. Cumberland, etc., Canal R. Corp. v. Hitchings, 59 Me. 206; Goodrich v. Milwaukee, 24 Wis. 422. "The court has no more authority to make a rule of construction that defeats a legislative purpose shown by the evidence than to defeat that purpose without a rule. The rule in favor of a cumulation of remedy is subject to qualifications and exceptions; and, taken with them, it signifies that, in the absence of satisfactory evidence of a legislative purpose to make a new remedy a substitute for an old one, the latter is not repealed. The statute is not held to mean what the evidence does not show the legislature meant. It is not a repeal when it does not appear that the legislature designed a repeal." Per Doe, C. J., in Edes v. Boardman, 58 N. H. 580, 592.

New right or remedy substituted.— When, from some public consideration, a new right or remedy is substituted for a preëxisting one, the statutory remedy is exclusive and not cumulative. Chesley v. Smith, 1 N. H. 20; Raymond v. Andrews, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 265; Williams v. Hingham, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 341. Where it is apparent that the whole matter of freight charges has been made the subject of statutory law, it must follow, under the general rules relating to statutory construction, that the statute was intended to be a revision of, or a substitute for, the common law, and a remedy for exacting excessive charges is exclusive. Young v. Kansas City, etc., R. Co., 33 Mo. App. 509.

6. Criminal and Penal Statutes. Public remedies given by criminal and penal statutes which create new public offenses are sometimes discussed as exclusive of, or cumulative with, civil remedies for private injuries caused by a violation of the duty imposed; but this has to do rather with the cause of action than with the remedy, and will be found treated under that head herein.[6]

Law of necessity.— At common law, property might be destroyed by a party acting under the overruling law of necessity, without any liability for resulting damage; and if a statute requires compensation for the injury and provides a remedy whereby the damage may be ascertained and recovered, such remedy is exclusive. Russell v. New York, 2 Den. (N. Y.) 461; New York v. Lord, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 285 [affirmed in 18 Wend. (N. Y.) 126]; Keller v. Corpus Christi, 50 Tex. 614, 32 Am. Rep. 613.

Liability to support parent.— The common law imposes no liability upon a child to support his parent; and where such duty is created by a statute which also provides a remedy, the statutory remedy is the only one which can be invoked. Remedy against state.— Since no action or suit can be maintained against a state without its consent, when a statute giving consent prescribes a particular mode of proceeding the statutory remedy must be pursued. Right to enforce debt of decedent against real estate.— A court of chancery, in the absence of a statute, has no power to reach the real estate of a decedent unless the creditor has an equity in the form of a charge or encumbrance; and where a statute gives a right to have a simple-contract debt paid out of the proceeds of a sale of lands, with a mode of procedure clearly defined, that remedy only can be pursued. Hargrove v. Baskin, 50 Miss. 194.

Remedies for public wrongs.— For the application of the rules of law governing exclusive and cumulative remedies to statutes creating new offenses punishable as crimes and misdemeanors or by penalties or forfeitures, or giving new remedies for acts already criminal, see Criminal Law; Penalties.

Criminal and penal statutes giving civil remedy.— An act making a party who obtains possession of money or property by false representations, or who wilfully withholds or misapplies money, liable on summary conviction to a penalty, and which further provides that he may be ordered to deliver up all such property or to repay the money improperly applied under penalty of being imprisoned for failure to obey such order, is merely cumulative of the appropriate common-law remedy to recover it back; or, more correctly speaking, an alternative remedy, because, if a party chooses to take the statutory remedy and gets judgment for repayment he cannot afterward, according to ordinary principles, bring an action for the same debt. Vernon v. Watson, [1891] 2 Q. B. 288, 64 L. T. Rep. N. S. 728, 39 Wkly. Rep. 519. Where a statute makes it a

F. Instruments of Remedy — 1. In General. The instruments whereby judicial remedy is obtained are a diversity of suits and actions.[7]

2. Definitions and Terminology— a. "Action." Many definitions of "action" have been given by law-writers and courts. Definitions drawn from the civil law by early common-law authorities, and approved by numerous decisions since, are: an action is nothing less than the right to pursue to judgment that which is one's due;[8] and, an action is the lawful demand of one's right.[9] With these definitions crime for a person charged with the safe-keeping and disbursement of public moneys to convert the same or to invest or loan it, or for a person to advise, aid, or participate in such wrong-doing, and at the same time provides a fine in double the amount of money or property embezzled, which shall operate as a judgment for the use of the injured party, such statutory remedy is exclusive as to the person assisting or advising, as there was no preëxisting cause of action. As to the public officer, however, he would be liable for the embezzlement independent of the statute, and the remedy is cumulative. Hancock County v. Findley First Nat. Bank, 32 Ohio St. 194. Contra, that the remedy against the officer is also exclusive, Wayne County v. Bressler, 32 Nebr. 818, 49 N. W. 782. Where a penal statute imposes a new duty, as that certain stories of all buildings shall be provided with suitable fire-escapes, and that these shall not be encumbered in any way, and at the same time provides a civil remedy by injunction to restrain any violation of the act, such remedy is exclusive, and no other action or suit can be brought by a party aggrieved by breach of the statute. Norman-French equivalent.— Lord Coke (Coke Litt. 284*b*, 285*a*, and Reports pt. 8, 151*a*), adopts Bracton's definition of an "action:" "Actio nihil aliud est quam jus prosequendi in judicio quod alicui debetur;" also giving (in the former of those places) its equivalent in Norman-French: "Action n'est auter chose que loyall demande de son droit." Bradlaugh v. Clarke, 8 App. Cas. 354.

Scope of definition.— Action is here defined rather as the right to sue than as the formal means whereby a party makes his demand in court (Bouvier L. Dict.; Webster v. County Com'rs, 63 Me. 27); but it is now generally held to refer to the suit or process itself. Thus it is said that the popular meaning of the word "action," as expressed in the language of Justinian, jus prosequendi in judicio quod alicui debetur, is precisely the same as defined by Webster; namely, that an action is "a suit or process by which a demand is made of a right in a court of justice; a claim made before a tribunal." Jacoby v. Shafer, 105 Pa. St. 610, 615. To same effect, Bouvier L. Dict.; Badger v. Gilmore, 37 N. H. 457.

as a basis, others varying more or less in unimportant detail have been framed from time to time.[10]

b. "Suit." The common-law definitions of "action" just given[11] are applied indiscriminately to the term "suit,"[12] and the various other ways in which it is defined bring in no new elements.[13]

J., who said: "To commence a suit is to demand something by the institution of process in a court of justice; and to prosecute the suit is, according to the common acceptation of language, to continue that demand."

Origin of term.— The word "suit" was undoubtedly derived originally from secta, or suit of witnesses, which every plaintiff was required to produce, or offer to produce, when he preferred his claim in court. Inde producit sectam — thereupon he brings suit — a form of words still continued. Ulshafer v. Stewart, 71 Pa. St. 170 [citing 3 Bl. Comm. 295]. Bouvier gives the origin of the word "suit" thus: Latin secta; from Latin sequi, to follow. Kennedy v. Thompson, 3 Ohio Cir. Ct. 446; Clafflin v. Robbins, 1 Flipp. (U. S.) 603, 5 Fed. Cas. No. 2,776.

14. "Cause."—Ex p. Milligan, 4 Wall. (U. Than "cause" a term more comprehensive could not readily be selected. Bridgton v. Bennett, 23 Me. 420.

d. Essential Elements — (I) In General. It results from the rules of law governing legal rights and remedies, hereinbefore discussed, that to every judicial action is necessary a cause of action, and a remedy whereby it can be enforced or redressed.[15]

(II) Parties and Judge. It is sometimes said to be also necessary that there be a plaintiff, a defendant, and a judge to every action or judgment.[16] But invoking the exercise of judicial power, and consisting as well of the parties as of their rights. Piqua Branch Bank v. Knoup, 6 Ohio St. 342. To come within the description of a case in law or equity a question must assume a legal form for forensic litigation and judicial proceeding. Kendall v. U. S., 12 Pet. (U. S.) 524, 9 L. ed. 1181. To same effect, Osborn v. U. S. Bank, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 738, 6 L. ed. 204 See also, generally, Constitutional Law; Courts; Removal of Causes.

Term "special cases," in a constitutional provision that "the county court shall have jurisdiction in cases arising in justices' courts and in special cases as the legislature may prescribe, but shall have no original civil jurisdiction except in such special cases," has been held in New York to mean all cases which the legislature shall specify, whether common-law actions, suits in equity, or special proceedings. Arnold v. Rees, 18 N. Y. 57, 7 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 328, 17 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 35 [overruling in effect Kundolf v. Thalheimer, 12 N. Y. 593 (reversing 17 Barb. (N. Y.) 506); Hall v. Nelson, 23 Barb. (N. Y.) 88; disapproving dicta in Doubleday v. Heath, 16 N. Y. 80].

Contra, in California, however, where "special cases" have been held to refer only to special proceedings, or those not known to the general framework of courts of common law and equity. Dec. 76; Brock v. Bruce, 5 Cal. 279. See, generally, Courts.

Although the code has narrowed the definition of "action" so as to exclude a special proceeding, the later is a "case" within a statutory provision governing allowances in special cases. Carpenter v. Jones, 121 Cal. 362, 53 Pac. 842.

Generic sense of these terms — Cause of action and not remedy.—The primary meaning of the word "case," according to lexicographers, is "cause." When applied to legal proceedings it imports a state of facts which furnish occasion for the exercise of the jurisdiction of a court of justice. In this, its generic sense, the word includes all cases, special or otherwise. Kundolf v. Thalheimer, 12 N. Y. 593 [cited in Benson v. Cromwell, 6 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 83]; Beecher v. Allen, 5 Barb. (N. Y.) 169.

Suits by statute process.—The term "cause" is sufficiently comprehensive to include suits by statute process. Bridgton v. Bennett, 23 Me. 420.

The term "civil matters," used in a statute, must be as broad in meaning as "civil cases," and if so it includes both actions and special proceedings. College of Physicians, etc. v. Guilbert, 100 Iowa 213, 61 N. W. 453.

15. Every judicial action has in it certain necessary elements: A primary right belonging to plaintiff, and a corresponding primary duty devolving upon defendant; a delict or wrong done by defendant, which consists in a breach of such primary right and duty; a remedial right in favor of plaintiff, and a remedial duty vesting on defendant springing out of this delict; and finally the remedy or relief itself. Every action, however simple, must contain these essential elements, and, however complicated, it has no more. Wildman v. Wildman, 70 Conn. 700, 41 Atl. 1 [citing Pomeroy Rem. and Rem. Rights, § 453]. To same effect see Clark v. Eddy, 22 Cinc. L. Bul. 63, 10 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 539; Hayes v. Clinkscales, 9 S. 16. Parties and judge as elements.— The actor, reus, and judex of the early writers. Bouvier L. Dict.; Heath v. Bates, 70 Ga. 633; Hundley v. Lincoln Park Com'rs, 67 Ill. 559; Johnston v. Com., 1 Bibb (Ky.) 598 [citing Coke Litt. 39*a*]; Piat v. Allaway, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 554; Taylor v. Com., 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 401; Bruce v. Fox, 1 Dana (Ky.) 447; People v. Colborne, 20 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 378, 380, wherein it was said by Potter, J.: "Bracton, I think, embodies the whole idea of an action much better in the Latin expression trinus actus trium personarum, which seems to include not only the act of a plaintiff, who makes a lawful demand, and the act of a defendant, in opposition; but also the act of a court in passing judgment between the parties. This is full and comprehensive, and, I think, best expresses our notion of a legal action in the ordinary understanding of the term. This would include the less comprehensive and less perspicuous definition of an action given in the code (§ 2), to wit: 'An action is an ordinary proceeding in a court of justice, by which a party prosecutes another party for the enforcement or protection of a right, the redress or prevention of a wrong, or the punishment of a public offense,' as well as the more apt conclusion of Justice Harris in People v. Rensselaer County Judge, 13 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 398, 400, in which he says: 'Any judicial proceeding which, if conducted to a termination, will result in a judgment, is an action.'"

The term "action" is sometimes defined on the basis that these elements are necessary.

while this is true enough when "action" is used in the sense of meaning only ordinary actions or suits, it does not accurately define it in its comprehensive and usual sense. As "the lawful demand of one's right" it also includes original judicial proceedings on ex parte applications and in other lawful modes different from the ordinary.[17]

3. What Proceedings Are Actions or Suits — a. In General. The words "action" and "suit," where there is nothing in the particular connection compelling a different construction, are sometimes distinguished. In a narrow sense "action" has been held to refer only to the ordinary common-law civil actions, "suit" only to bills in equity.[18] Again, "suit" is frequently held to have a more comprehensive use than "action," including all civil proceedings, "action" having reference only to the ordinary forms of proceedings at law,[19] and to them only until judgment.[20] As a general rule, however, the terms "suit" and "action"

Thus, it is "the legal and formal demand of one's right from another person or party, made and insisted on in a court of justice." Black L. Dict.; Bouvier L. Dict. To same effect:

Instances of proceedings held not to be actions on this ground are: the removal of a guardian by a county court, which may act upon its own knowledge, or even suspicion, without the intervention of a actor or plaintiff, and according to its own discretion uncontrolled by any settled rules of law (Piat v. Allaway, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 554); a proceeding for contempt, there being no actor whose right or demand is to be affirmed or concluded by the decision thereon (Johnston v. Com., 1 Bibb (Ky.) 598); an order of a county court declaring the office of the clerk of said court vacant, and appointing another to fill the supposed vacancy (Taylor v. Com., 3 J. Marion v. Ganby, 68 Iowa 142, 26 N. W. 40. Manner of commencement immaterial.— Whether the suit or action be commenced by scire facias, capias ad respondendum, or summons, a complaint cannot vary in its essential character. If it be a lawful demand of one's right, made in court, it must be an action. People v. Clarke, 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 120. A proceeding commenced by attachment is as much an action, in the full and legal sense of the word, as are ordinary proceedings commenced by summons. Harris v. Phœnix Ins. Co., 35 Conn. 310; Jacoby v. Shafer, 105 Pa. St. 610. It cannot be objected that the issue of an execution, which is final process, cannot be the commencement of an action, whose initiatory step is the original process; and the broad signification of the term "action" includes a statutory summary proceeding whereby execution may be sued out against sureties upon a judgment against a principal. Farnam v. Brooks, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 212.

Replevin is as much an action as any other whatsoever; proceeding in the same manner, and between a plaintiff and a defendant, or avowant, according to the nature of the defense, as other actions. Pearson v. Roberts, Willes 668.

To ordinary proceedings both at law and in equity.— The word "actions," contained in a constitutional provision that all pending actions shall continue as if no change had taken place in the government, is used in its largest sense, and includes all civil actions pending in court at the time, whether they are actions at law or in equity. Scott v. Smart, 1 Mich. 295. Use of the term "action," in a law which provides for allowing a deduction for usury in actions upon a usurious contract, is not confined to actions at law, but includes also suits in equity. Coatsworth v. Barr, 11 Mich. 199. Where a statute of limitations was enacted long before there was any remedy by suit in equity to open an account settled, and afterward an equitable remedy is sanctioned, the statute applies to such suits although it refers in terms only to actions. It cannot be supposed that the legislature intended virtually to repeal the limitations act, and thus to open the door of litigation on subjects which had slept quietly for years upon that statute. Farnam v. Brooks, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 212. See LIMITATIONS OF ACTIONS. The word "suit," used in an agreement of parties as to the facts stated in an agreed case, to which they agreed "for the purpose of this suit," means the same as "action." The two words are synonymous. Page v. Brewster, 58 N. H. 126. The word "action," as used in the act of congress establishing copyright, means an action either at law or in equity. Thompson v. Hubbard, 131 U. S. 123, 9 S. Ct. 710, 33 L. ed. 76.

23. The word "action" will not admit of an interpretation which will limit it to civil actions in which the proceedings were according to the course of the common law. An action is but the legal demand of a right without regard to the form of the proceedings by which that right may be enforced. Bridgton v. Bennett, 23 Me. 420. To same effect, Taylor v. Kelly, 80 Pa. St. 95. See, generally, cases cited supra, note 22; infra, this note.

Illustrations.— The term "action" includes a complaint under Me. Rev. Stat. c. 32, for the purpose of compelling a son to support his father, an alleged pauper. Bridgton v. Bennett, 23 Me. 420. A proceeding to establish a claim against the estate of a decedent, whether before commissioners ap-these terms include criminal prosecutions, as indictments, informations, and convictions by a magistrate.[24]

b. As Affected by Rules of Construction. The words denoting the instruments of judicial remedy, when contained in statutes and agreements, should ordinarily be given their usual legal use and meaning.[25] But this is often precluded by the rules of construction, which require expressions used in laws and contracts to be interpreted to conform to the intention of the legislature or of the parties, respectively, where possible.[26] pointed by the court or before the court itself, is a lawful demand of one's right in a court of justice, and an action or suit. St. 95]; Calderwood v. Calderwood, 38 Vt. 171. A statutory proceeding to assess damage caused by the flowage of land by a mill-dam is a lawful demand of one's right in a form given by law, and therefore an action. Hall v. Decker, 48 Me. 255. Statutory summary proceedings for the recovery of a debt are included within the definition of an action. For example: a proceeding by execution issued against sureties upon a judgment against the principal (Farnam v. Brooks, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 212; Banks v. Brown, 4 Yerg. (Tenn.) 198); a proceeding before a justice of the peace, wherein he appoints commissioners to determine the rights of parties as to a partition fence, and if the amount found due from any party is not paid within ten days thereafter, enters up judgment, and issues execution for the same (Lightfoot v. Grove, 5 Heisk. (Tenn.) 473). A proceeding for the probate of a will is within the broad signification of the word "action." Jackman Will Case, 27 Wis. 409. Contra, Hunter's Will, 6 Ohio 499; and see also WILLS. A proceeding before the court of a justice of the peace in pursuance of the mechanic's lien law is an action. People v. Rensselaer County Judge, 13 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 398. A statutory proceeding by motion and notice in a circuit court, to collect from employees, lessees, assignees, or receivers of a railroad a judgment for injuries to animals, rendered by a justice of the peace against the railway corporation, is a civil action. A code proceeding for the foreclosure of a mortgage on real estate, providing a simple and cheap substitute for a bill in equity for that purpose, is a judicial means of enforcing a right and constitutes a suit or action. George v. Gardner, 49 Ga. 441. A proceeding for a divorce, which, although provided by statute, is based on the preëxisting remedies which the law afforded for that purpose, is for the redressing of a supposed wrong, or the establishment of an alleged right, and constitutes a suit or action. McPike v. McPike, 10 Ill. App. 332. For titles in which questions such as these frequently arise see APPEAL AND ERROR; COURTS; LIMITATIONS OF ACTIONS; REMOVAL OF CAUSES; VENUE.

Dict.]; State v. Carr, 6 Oreg. 133; State v. Schomber, (Wash. 1900) 63 Pac. 221 [citing Bouvier L. Dict.], wherein it was said that both "civil and criminal actions are included within the definition [by Bouvier] of the term 'action.' In one instance the demand is made to the court by an individual for the infringement of a private right. In the other the demand is made to the court by the sovereign for the redress of a public injury." Contra, that an action is the legal demand of a civil right, Overseers of Poor v. Beedle, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 11; Cannon v. Phillips, 2 Sneed (Tenn.) 185.

The words "action at law," taken in their ordinary signification, do not mean "civil actions at law." A proceeding by indictment is an action at law, and is included within an act which provides that "all fines and forfeitures under the provisions of this act shall be recovered by an action at law to be brought in the name of the state of Oregon." State v. Carr, 6 Oreg. 133.

Classification of actions.— A common instance of this use of the terms "action" and "suit" appears in one of the classifications of actions which has obtained from very early times, and is incorporated into the codes and practice acts of several of the states,— that of civil and criminal. Comyn Dig., Action, D, 1 [cited in Atty.-Gen. v. Bradlaugh, 14 Q. B. D. 667]; Bacon Abr., Actions in General, (A); Jacob L. Dict.

For the code and practice act classification see infra, II, F, 3, c, (II).

In Iowa every proceeding is an action, and is civil, special, or criminal. Iowa Code (1897), § 3424; College of Physicians, etc. v. Guilbert, 100 Iowa 213, 61 N. W. 453.

"Special proceeding."— Many of the codes and practice acts divide remedies into actions and special proceedings. Under these the term "special proceeding" has a fixed legal meaning, and when used in different statutes it is presumed that it is intended to convey that meaning, unless there is something in the statute itself which decrees otherwise. c. As Changed by Statute — (1) In General. The ordinary legal use of the words "action," "suit," and synonymous terms is also sometimes narrowed by statutes having a more direct bearing thereon than that which results from the rules of construction.[27]

Washington.— State v. Schomber, (Wash. 1900) 63 Pac. 221.

England.— Atty.-Gen. v. Bradlaugh, 14 Q. B. D. 667; Guthrie v. Fisk, 5 D. & R. 24.

Illustrations — "Action" or "suit."—Where it was the intention of a statute, in using the word "action," to include only the ordinary common-law actions, it will not include special statutory proceedings, such as bastardy cases, the assessment of damages under mill acts, or statutes providing for the laying out of highways. Valentine v. Boston, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 201. The words "actions and suits," contained in an act which empowers a society to commence and prosecute "all actions and suits" in the name of their secretary, are by no means to be extended so far as to include the suing out of a commission of bankruptcy against a debtor of the society. Guthrie v. Fisk, 5 D. & R. 24. While the word "action" is comprehensive enough to include both criminal and civil actions, it should not be given that construction, when contained in a statute, if a consideration of the scope of the civil and criminal law requires that it be confined in its use to one kind only. Thus a statute permitting certain persons to intervene in actions has no application to a quasi-criminal proceeding (People v. Green, 1 Ida. 235), and a statute that "all actions commenced before a justice of the peace shall be brought in the justice's court of the precinct in which one or more of the defendants reside" should be limited to include only civil actions (State v. Schomber, (Wash. 1900) 63 Pac. 221, wherein the court said: "Where the language of the statute is free from ambiguity, and conveys a definite and sensible meaning, the courts should not hesitate to give it a literal interpretation. But where different statutes bear upon each other, and they would be rendered inconsistent, or absurd, or not constitutional by such literal interpretation, a departure from the obvious meaning of the words is justifiable"). Under an act of parliament establishing a penalty to be recovered by action, the word "action" is not to be construed as including indictments or criminal informations unless it is apparent that they were intended to be included. Atty.-Gen. v. Bradlaugh, 14 Q. B. D. 667. See also Penalties.

"Case."— Where the word "case," used in a law conferring appellate jurisdiction, refers more properly to actions at law and suits in chancery, it is not to be construed as including statutory proceedings, such as that for canvassing votes cast at an election. Kreitz v. Behrensmeyer, 125 Ill. 141, 17 N. E. 232, 8 Am. St. Rep. 349; People v. Smith, 51 Ill. 177; Moore v. Mayfield, 47 Ill. 167; French v. Lighty, 9 Ind. 475. While the expression "civil cases" is broad enough to include equity cases, it will be held not to include them if excluded by the necessary construction of the constitutional or statutory provision in which the expression is found. Gilbert v. Thomas, 3 Ga. 575 [explaining Grimball v. Ross, T. U. P. Charlt. (Ga.) 175, which latter case is approved in Isaacs v. Tinley, 58 Ga. 457].

"Special proceedings."— A remedy which, under the code classification, is more properly a special proceeding than an action, must nevertheless be held to be a civil action under many of the statutes affecting proceedings in civil actions; as, for example, laws relating to the venue (Lester v. Lester, 70 Ind. 201; Whitney v. Atlantic Southern R. Co., 53 Iowa 651, 6 N. W. 32; State v. Clark, 46 Iowa 155), or a constitutional provision prohibiting imprisonment for debt in civil actions. (Ex p. Smith, 53 Cal. 204).

27. Illustrations.— Filing a statement and entering a judgment by confession do not constitute an action or suit under a code provision that "a judgment by confession is one entered without action." Therefore a clause contained in a note thus put in judgment, that there shall be paid, as part of the amount due, "a reasonable attorney's fee if sued," is not operative. Dullard v. Phelan, 83 Iowa 471, 50 N. W. 204. A statutory provision that "all civil actions except scire facias and other special writs shall be commenced by original writs" confines the term "action" to those brought in a court of law in the usual forms, and does not include statutory proceedings not thus commenced; as, for example, petitions before a board of county commissioners for the location of highways, or proceedings in insolvency. Belfast v. Fogler, 71 Me. 403; Webster v. County Com'rs, 63 Me. 27.

Use of qualifying words.— The terms "action" and "case," when qualified by the words "at law" or "at common law," in constitutional provisions preserving inviolable the right of trial by jury, refer to suits in which legal rights are ascertained and determined, in contradistinction to those where equitable rights alone are recognized and equitable remedies administered; or where, as in admiralty, a mixture of public law and maritime law and equity are often found in the same suit; or where the remedy is a special proceeding for the enforcement of a new right or one of the extraordinary remedies. (II) Codes and Practice Acts — (A) Actions. Actions, as classified and defined in several of the codes and practice acts, include criminal prosecutions and ordinary civil proceedings, but not special proceedings. An action is defined to be an ordinary proceeding in a court of justice, by which one party prosecutes another for the enforcement or protection of a right, the redress or prevention of a wrong, or the punishment of an offense.[23]

(B) Special Proceedings — (1) In General. After thus treating of actions these statutes declare every other remedy to be a special proceeding, without stitutional Law. "Action" or "case" are frequently qualified by the use of the word "civil" when they include only proceedings, public or private, in which civil rights are enforced, or civil wrongs redressed, in contradistinction to prosecutions for public offenses. Mitchell v. Georgia R. Co., 68 Ga. 644; Grimball v. Ross, T. U. P. Charlt. (Ga.) 175; Fenstermacher v. State, 19 Oreg. 504, 25 Pac. 142; State v. One Bottle of Brandy, etc., 43 Vt. 297; State v. Schomber, (Wash. 1900) 63 Pac. 221; Rison v. Cribbs, 1 Dill. (U. S.) 181, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11,860. The first section of the act of 1875 relating to the removal of causes uses the expressions, "suits of a civil nature," "civil action," and "civil suit," as synonymous. The second section of that act uses the expressions "suits of a civil nature" and "said suit" in the same sense. The third section of that act uses the expressions "suit," "such suit," "the case," and "action" in the same sense. The same is true of the same words, and also of the word "case," when used in the subsequent sections of the act. Clarkson v. Manson, 18 Blatchf. (U. S.) 443, 4 Fed. 257. See also Removal of Causes. When there is an intention to limit the comprehensive signification of the word "action," and apply it only to include common-law civil suits, it becomes necessary to use some other word with it for that purpose, such as personal, real, or mixed. Bridgton v. Bennett, 23 Me. 420. The phrase "civil cases at law," contained in a statute relating to appeals, distinguishes a class of remedies from suits in equity and the criminal and quasi-criminal modes of procedure, and comprehends all civil cases at law, whether the action be begun by statute or existed at common law. Mack v. Bonner, 3 Ohio St. 366 [approving Knoup v. Piqua Branch Bank, 1 Ohio St. 603, and distinguishing Hoy v. Hites, 11 Ohio 254]. See, generally, Appeal and Error. Where it was evidently the intention of the legislature, in statutes relating to the disqualification of persons as witnesses by reason of interest in the event of the proceedings, to give persons the right to testify in all proceedings at law, the words "suit," "action," and "proceeding at law" must be held to be used with reference to the same subject-matter, and substantially held to be synonymous terms, including all proceedings at law. Calderwood v. Calderwood, 38 Vt. 171.

The English Judicature Act of 1873, § 100, defines an action as "a civil proceeding commenced by writ, or in such other manner as may be prescribed by the rules of court." Hamlyn v. Betteley, 6 Q. B. D. 63. See also In re Wallis' Trusts, 23 L. R. Ir. 7.

28. See the statutory provisions and cases cited infra, note 29.

Definition construed.— That part of this statutory definition of "action" which relates to civil actions has been construed in one case to mean an action wherein an issue is presented for trial, formed by the averments of the complaint and the denials of the answer, or the replication to new matter, and the trial takes place by the introduction of legal evidence to support the allegation of the pleadings, and a judgment in such an action is conclusive upon the rights of the parties, and could be pleaded in bar. Deer Lodge County v. Kohrs, 2 Mont. 66 [cited in Evans v. Evans, 105 Ind. 204, 5 N. E. 24, 768].

Includes both legal and equitable suits.— Under these codes and practice acts, and others by which the distinction between actions at law and suits in equity has been abolished and a single form of civil action prescribed (see infra, II, J), the term "action" includes all proceedings, as well equitable as legal, which under the preëxisting law were brought in the ordinary or regular forms, and not in some special or anomalous mode.

The word "action," used in the chapter of the code relating to attachment, must be deemed to include all civil actions; and, there being nothing in that chapter limiting the remedy of attachment to certain civil actions, the court cannot so limit it by reason of any previously recognized distinction between actions at law and suits in equity. otherwise defining the term;[29] and it is often a difficult matter to determine whether a particular statutory remedy is an action or a special proceeding.[30]

(2) Distinguished from Actions. The criterion must be whether the proceeding is commenced as the code declares an action shall be commenced — for instance, by summons or warrant, issued in a form, if any, therein provided, or by voluntary appearance — and is between parties, with issues presented by the pleadings which the code requires in actions. If it is of such a character the

An "ordinary" or "regular" proceeding.— The word "ordinary," in the code definition of an action, or "regular," as the early New York code had it, was used by the legislature as opposed to "special," to distinguish actions from special proceedings. Hyatt v. Seeley, 11 N. Y. 52; Myers v. Rasback, 4 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 83.

30. Tate v. Powe, 64 N. C. 644, 646, wherein it was said: "It might have been expected that . . . the code commissioners would have marked the dividing line between civil actions and special proceedings. But it is not so, for the reason, as may be presumed, it was a perplexing subject, fit to be left to judicial legislation. The questions occur every day. The mode of procedure is one of instant, pressing necessity, and this court must assume the task."

Comments on definitions — Law previous to the code.—This classification of judicial remedies into actions or special proceedings, and the code definitions of each, are held in one case not to be remarkable for their perspicuity or distinctness. People v. Rensselaer County Judge, 13 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 398. On the other hand they have been said to be "clear and apt," and it is undoubtedly true that they are entirely consistent with the understanding of the distinction between an ordinary or usual action and a special proceeding, under the law previous to the code, and not an entirely new departure. Matter of King, 42 Hun (N. Y.) 607; Holstein v. Rice, 15 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 307; Arnold v. Rees, 18 N. Y. 57, 7 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 328, 17 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 35, wherein it was held that there is and always has been a known distinction between "cases" at law or in equity, and "proceedings" of a special character which do not take on the form of an ordinary action; but are instituted and carried on in some peculiar and anomalous mode.

"Action" and "special proceeding" not synonymous terms.— Nearly all, if not all, special proceedings are civil in their nature, but it is manifestly the intention of the code to keep clear and definite the distinction between actions and special proceedings, as judicial remedies. To hold the terms interchangeable and synonymous would be inconsistent with the code classification of remedies into actions and special proceedings; and this division of remedies must not be confounded with the definition of "actions," which are all either civil or criminal, while special proceedings are not defined at all. Matter of Joseph, 118 Cal. 660, 50 Pac. 768.

Proceedings out of court.— It was held in early New York cases that to be a special proceeding in the sense of the code there must be a litigation in a court of justice, placing this construction upon the provision that "remedies in courts of justice are divided into actions and special proceedings." Matter of Dodd, 27 N. Y. 629, per Denio, J.; People v. Heath, 20 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 304, Davis, J., dissenting; Matter of Extension of Bowery, 12 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 97, 99, wherein it was said: "These remedies [special proceedings] . . . are such as are incident to the powers of a court of general jurisdiction, such as mandamus, prohibition, habeas corpus, and the like." This construction, however, is too narrow and would exclude proceedings instituted before a judicial officer out of court, or before persons appointed by a court and exercising judicial functions, such as commissioners to lay out a highway, and the like: and it has been virtually overruled. People v. Boardman, 4 Keyes (N. Y.) 59; Pinckney's Case, 18 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 356; Matter of Barnett, 52 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 73; People v. Highway Com'rs, 27 How. Pr. (N. proceeding is an action; if not, and yet a remedy and not a mere proceeding in an action, it is a special proceeding.[31]

(3) Of Various Remedies — Illustrations — (a) Statutory Remedies. The greater portion of the remedies which are special under the code provisions here discussed are statutory remedies. Wherever a statute gives a remedy which must be instituted or conducted in a manner different from that prescribed for actions. it is a special proceeding.[32]

(b) Remedies Antedating Code. But there are some anomalous remedies which antedated the code and have survived the changes made by it, and these are also special proceedings.[33]

An action is commenced by the service of a summons in some one of the modes prescribed by law, and it is plain that no proceeding can be an action unless it be such that it can be commenced by the service of summons on the opposite party; and pleadings — that is, the allegations of the cause of action on the one side, and, unless there be default, of the defense upon the other — are incidents of every action. Statutory designation.— The fact that a remedy is designated as a special proceeding, or otherwise treated as if it were not an action, by the statute prescribing it, does not necessarily make it a special proceeding; and the question is whether it is such under the general principles which distinguish special proceedings from actions. 33. By petition in equity.— An important remedy to which the statement made in the text is applicable is that by petition in equity in certain matters of equitable cognizance, where a more summary proceeding than a bill is deemed necessary and proper; as, for example, matters connected with trusts, guardian and ward, insane persons, and the like. Matter of Livingston, 34 N. Y. 555 [cited in Riggs v. Pursell, 74 N. Y. 370]; Wilcox v. Wilcox, 14 N. Y. 575; Matter of King, 42 Hun (N. (4) How Instituted and Conducted. It was the object of the code to provide an entirely new system of practice only in civil actions. d. Prerogative and Judicial Writs — (1) As Actions or Suits. The common-law remedies by prerogative and judicial writs, especially in the forms which they finally assumed by virtue of statutory or other changes, are actions or suits within the usual meaning of those terms in law.[35] is not brought for the protection or enforcement of any right of the petitioner, or to redress any wrong sustained by him, but to inform the court of the existence of certain facts upon which the exercise of its parental authority has been invoked, and is a special proceeding. Matter of King, 42 Hun (N. Y.) 607.

Statutory changes in old remedies.— Long prior to the advent of the code, remedies more summary than the ordinary or usual ones were given for some rights; as, for example, a proceeding by petition to set apart dower or to obtain a partition of lands. It is most generally held, however, that the civil action of the code is applicable for these purposes in the absence of any express provision of statute by which the statutory remedies were retained. Watson v. Sutro, 86 Cal. 500, 24 Pac. 172, 25 Pac. 64; Arnold v. Rees, 18 N. Y. 57, 7 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 328, 17 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 35; Beecher v. Allen, 5 Barb. (N. C. 644, in which case the line between actions and special proceedings was drawn as follows: "Any proceeding that, under the old mode, was commenced by capias ad respondendum, including ejectment, or a bill in equity for a relief, is a 'civil action;' any proceeding that, under the old mode, may be commenced by petition, or motion upon notice, is a 'special proceeding.'" See, generally, Dower; Partition. In some of the early cases it is held that as, under the former system, proceedings for partition could be commenced either by bill or petition, and as the bill has been abolished and the civil action substituted, it follows that the remedies now remaining are the civil action of the code and the old petition. Row v. Row, 4 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 133; Myers v. Rasback, 4 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 83. But see Backus v. Stilwell, 3 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 318; Watson v. Brigham, 3 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 290. Statutory changes before the code, affecting the old actions, but which did not make sweeping changes in the remedy, as modifications of the old remedy of ejectione firmæ, or of replevin, extensions of the remedies of ejectment or partition to other cases than those to which they formerly had application, do not prevent their being "ordinary proceedings" within the code definition of actions. Arnold v. Rees, 18 N. Y. 57, 7 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 328, 17 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 35; Beecher v. Allen, 5 Barb. (N. Y.) 169; Myers v. Rasback, 4 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 83; Woodley v. Gilliam, 64 N. C. 649; Tate v. Powe, 64 N. C. 644. Divorce cases, having been suits of equitable cognizance under the old system of procedure, are clearly "civil actions" under the code in such a sense at least that the rules of pleading and practice therein provided will apply to them, except to the extent that a different procedure may be provided in a divorce act, and to the extent that it may be apparent that the legislature intended otherwise. Powell v. Powell, 104 Ind. 18, 3 N. E. 639 [explaining Ewing v. Ewing, 24 Ind. 468, and Musselman v. Musselman, 44 Ind. 106; approved in Evans v. Evans, 105 Ind. 204, 5 N. E. 24, 768].

Names of parties.— The names "plaintiff" and "defendant" are by the code given to the parties to a civil action; but there is nothing which prohibits the calling of the complaining party in a special proceeding by the name of "plaintiff," or the adverse party by that of "defendant." Davis v. Turner, 4 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 190.

Application of provisions relating to actions.— Some of the codes expressly provide that the provisions thereof which concern the prosecution of civil actions shall apply in special proceedings not otherwise regulated, so far as applicable. See, for instances, Whitney v. Atlantic Southern R. Co., 53 Iowa 651, 6 N. W. 32; State v. Clark, 46 Iowa 155; Forney v. Ralls, 30 Iowa 559. In Indiana, although no such express direction is given by statute, the mode of procedure and rules of practice prescribed for civil actions are held to be applicable to special statutory proceedings for the enforcement of private rights, except where the statute authorizing the special proceeding, expressly or by fair implication, prescribes a different course of procedure or a new practice. (II) As Actions or Special Proceedings. In jurisdictions where remedies are defined and classified as actions and special proceedings, the prerogative and judicial writs, or remedies substituted in their stead, will be one or the other according as they are to be instituted or conducted as code actions or in some special and anomalous manner.[36] party making the application. Ex p. Milligan, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 2, 12, 18 L. ed. 281. To same effect, Holmes v. Jennison, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 540, 10 L. ed. 579 [cited in State v. Newell, 13 Mont. 302, 34 Pac. 28]. See, generally, HABEAS CORPUS.

Remedy by writ of mandamus, especially in those jurisdictions where the early law that the only remedy for a false return is a separate action on the case is abrogated by statute, which allows the return to be pleaded to and the case proceeded with as an ordinary suit, is an action or a suit brought in a court of justice asserting a right, and prosecuted according to the forms of judicial proceeding. Dement v. Rokker, 126 Ill. 174, 19 N. E. 33 [citing People v. Glann, 70 Ill. 232]; Commercial Bank v. Canal Com'rs, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 25; People v. Albright, 23 How. Pr. (N. J., and two justices dissenting, the former saying: "The general court had authority to issue the writ of mandamus, not because the proceeding was a case or suit at law, but because no case or suit at law would afford a remedy to the party." Contra, People v. Sage, 3 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 56. See, generally, MANDAMUS.

Scire facias.— For the writ of scire facias see infra, II, F, 3, e; II, F, 3, e, (III).

Writ of prohibition is a suit. The question between the parties is precisely the same as it would have been in a writ of replevin or in an action of trespass. Thus the constitutionality of an ordinance is contested; the party aggrieved by it applies to a court, and at his suggestion a writ of prohibition, the appropriate remedy, is issued. Weston v. Charleston, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 449, 7 L. ed. 481. The writ of prohibition is not a part or continuation of the prohibited proceeding by removing it from one court to another for the purpose of adjudication in the latter. It is wholly collateral to that proceeding, and is intended to arrest it and prevent its being further prosecuted in a court having no jurisdiction of the subject. Mayo v. James, 12 Gratt. (Va.) 17. To same effect, Planters' Ins. Co. v. Cramer, 47 Miss. 200; State v. Evans, 88 Wis. 255, 60 N. W. 433. See also, generally, PROHIBITION.

Statutory construction.— Whether a writ of mandamus is technically an "action at law" or not, it is such within Conn. Gen. Stat. tit. 1, § 372, which provides that "whenever any action at law shall be tried by the superior court without a jury, said court shall find, upon the motion of either party, the facts upon which the judgment of said court is founded, and cause such finding to become a part of the record." State v. New Haven, etc., Co., 41 Conn. 134, 137. The words "civil cases," contained in an act which provides that "the supreme court shall have no original jurisdiction in civil cases," in their greatest possible extent might comprehend mandamus, for it is an original writ applied as a remedy in a civil case. As there used, however, they must be understood to include only the ordinary or usual civil actions; otherwise, there being no power in inferior courts to issue the writ, there would be a defect of justice on important occasions. Com. v. Lancaster County, 6 Binn. (Pa.) 5 [cited in State v. Jennings, 56 Wis. 113, 14 N. W. 28].

36. Mandamus.— Under many of the codes and practice acts a proceeding by mandamus, whether made a civil action by statute or brought and conducted in the manner described in the preceding note, has been treated as a civil action.

Although prosecuted in the name of the state, the state is only a nominal party, and mandamus is in substance a civil remedy for the citizen deprived of a clear legal right. State v. Jennings, 56 Wis. 113, 14 N. W. 28. To same effect, People v. Ransom, 2 N. Y. 490.

A proceeding by mandamus under the Iowa code, brought against a county to compel it to levy a tax for the payment of a judgment obtained in the circuit court of the United States, and brought in that court, is not an action or suit. When so employed it is neither a prerogative writ nor a new suit in a judicial sense. On the contrary it is a proceeding ancillary to a judgment which gives the jurisdic-

e. Applications and Motions — (I) In General. An application in an action, special proceeding, or other remedy connected with and dependent upon the principal remedy is not itself a remedy. It is merely for the purpose of obtaining incidental relief in the progress of the action or proceeding in which it is made, and generally relates to matters of procedure, although it may be used to secure some right in consequence of the determination of the principal remedy.[37]

(II) Distinguished from Special Proceedings. Whether an application is merely one step in an action or other remedy, or is a special proceeding and therefore a remedy, is frequently a difficult matter to determine, and some difference of opinion exists as to the character of various summary proceedings.[38]

tion, and, when issued, becomes a substitute for the ordinary process of execution. Riggs v. Johnson County, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 166, 18 L. ed. 768; Miller, J., Chase, C. Habeas corpus.— A habeas corpus proceeding for the most part retains the distinctive features of the old writ, and is a special proceeding under the codes and practice acts. Matter of Bresee, 82 Iowa 573, 48 N. W. 991; State v. Newell, 13 Mont. 302, 34 Pac. 28; Matter of Barnett, 52 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 73. See also HABEAS CORPUS.

United States.— Ames v. Kansas, 111 U. S. 449, 4 S. Ct. 437, 28 L. ed. 482.

In California either quo warranto or a regular action may be brought. People v. Sutter St. R. Co., 117 Cal. 604, 49 Pac. 736, holding that the special grant of jurisdiction to the superior courts to issue writs of quo warranto, made by the constitution of 1879, is not exclusive. The proceeding may be in the form of a quo warranto, but there is no reason why it may not be by regular action. In fact there is now so little difference that it is hardly worthy of discussion. See, generally, QUO WARRANTO.

For the test by which to determine whether a particular remedy is an action or special proceeding under codes and practice acts which make a distinction between these remedies see supra, II, F, 3, c; II, F, 3, c, (II).

37. Thus of ordinary motions.— Matter of Jetter, 78 N. Y. 601; Matter of Lima, etc., R. Co., 68 Hun (N. Y.) 252, 22 N. Y. Suppl. 967. See also PLEADING. Mere motions or summary proceedings based upon other matters before the court clearly do not belong to the class of remedies by original suit or action designed to be comprehended by the expression "civil cases at law" in a statute relating to appeals. Mack v. Bonner, 3 Ohio St. 366, 367.

Attachment.— Under the code an attachment is a form of process incident to an action against certain persons. As an incident of an action it is not to be regarded as a special proceeding; such proceedings being in their nature independent remedies that cannot be taken by an action. Allen v. Partlow, 3 S. C. 417 [citing Campbell v. Home Ins. Co., 1 S. C. 158]. See also ATTACHMENT.

Bill of revivor.— The death of either party pending a suit in equity does not, where the cause of action survives, amount to a determination of the suit; and a bill of revivor is not the commencement of a new suit, but the mere continuation of the old one. Clarke v. Mathewson, 12 Pet. (U. S.) 164, 9 L. ed. 1041. See also ABATEMENT AND REVIVAL.

Double damages against legal representative.— A cause of action against an administrator for double damages for waste, given by a statute, must be enforced by a civil action and cannot be disposed of summarily as a proceeding before a court of probate in the course of the administration of the estate. Deer Lodge County v. Kohrs, 2 Mont. 66.

Interpleader.— Under a code definition that an action is a "civil proceeding commenced by writ, or in such other manner as may be prescribed by rules of court," an interpleader is not an action, where it is not commenced in any manner thus designated, but a mere proceeding in an action. Hamlyn v. Betteley, 6 Q. B. D. 63. See INTERPLEADER.

A motion for a new trial, by unsuccessful defendants, is only a continuation of the action, and not the institution of a new proceeding. The defendants are merely pressing their defense originally interposed. Clarke v. Tunnicliff, 38 N. Y. 58 [cited in Willey v. Shaver, 1 Thomps. & C. (N. Y.) 324]. See also NEW TRIAL.

38. Applications in proceedings, and special proceedings, distinguished.— A motion is an application in a proceeding — by action or otherwise — already pending, or about to be commenced, upon which it depends for jurisdiction; whereas a special proceeding is an independent prosecution of a remedy in which jurisdiction is obtained by original process.

(III) Scire Facias. A writ of scire facias, although in most instances a judicial writ or writ of execution, can be pleaded to and otherwise proceeded in

The code definition of a special proceeding — namely, that it is every proceeding in a court of justice other than an action as therein defined — indicates that a special proceeding is the prosecution of a remedy by original process and independently of any other proceeding, and is opposed to the definition of a motion. Matter of Lima, etc., R. Co., 68 Hun (N. Y.) 252, 22 N. Y. Suppl. 967. If a proceeding is one in an action it is not a special proceeding as such are designated in the code. A special proceeding there referred to is a proceeding other than in actions. It is a remedy begun to enforce or protect a right without action, and not in aid of or a part of the proceedings in actions. Seeley v. Black, 35 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 369.

Set-off and counter-claim.— Though a set-off and counter-claim is in the nature of a cross-action, and in the place and stead of a cross-action, it is not an action. Indeed the statute of set-offs was enacted to prevent the necessity of cross-actions; and under the code it is a mere proceeding in an action, treated as a defense, under the head of answer. Warfield v. Gardner, 79 Ky. 583; Millet v. Watkins, 4 Bush (Ky.) 642; Taylor v. New York, 82 N. Y. 10 [citing Francis v. Dodsworth, 4 C. B. 202]. A statute requiring leave of court before an action can be brought upon a judgment does not apply where the judgment is set up, in an action against a judgment creditor by the judgment debtor, by way of set-off. Wells v. Henshaw, 3 Bosw. (N. Y.) 625. Set-off is not an action within Va. Rev. Code, c. 85, § 23, p. 320, which provides that "no action shall be had or maintained for clerk's or surveyor's fees unless the sheriff or sergeant shall return that the person owing or chargeable with such fees has not sufficient within his bailiwick;" and no such return is necessary before the claim can be made the subject of a set-off. Craigen v. Lobb, 12 Leigh (Va.) 627. A statute which provides that no attorney or solicitor shall commence or maintain any action or suit for the recovery of any fees at law or in equity until the expiration of one month after he shall have delivered to the debtor a bill of such fees has no application where the claim of the attorney is pleaded as a set-off in an action brought against him. Martin v. Winder, 1 Dougl. 199 note [cited in Craigen v. Lobb, 12 Leigh (Va.) 627]; Bulman v. Birkett, 1 Esp. 449. See also Recoupment, Set-Off, and Counter-Claim. Contra, construing the acts of congress relating to the removal of causes, it has been held that a counter-claim or set-off is the affirmation of a cause of action against plaintiff, in the nature of a cross-action, upon which defendant may have affirmative judgment; and is an action or suit of a civil nature to which those acts apply. Clarkson v. Manson, 18 Blatchf. (U. S.) 443, 4 Fed. 257. See also Removal of Causes.

Proceeding for contempt.—A proceeding instituted against a party to punish him for a contempt in refusing to perform an order of the court is itself a special proceeding, original in its character, and fully independent of the action or other remedy in which the contempt arose. Erie R. Co. v. Ramsey, 45 N. Y. 637; Gibbs v. Prindle, 11 N. Y. App. Div. 470, 42 N. Y. Suppl. 329; People v. Warner, 51 Hun (N. Y.) 53, 3 N. Y. Suppl. 768; Sudlow v. Knox, 7 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 411. Contra, that it is a mere proceeding in an action. Pitt v. Davison, 37 N. Y. 235; People v. Bergen, 9 Hun (N. Y.) 202; Seeley v. Black, 35 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 369; Dresser v. Van Pelt, 15 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 19, 6 Duer (N. Y.) 687. See also, generally, Contempt; Creditors' Suits.

Proceedings supplementary to execution are civil actions, or, in those states where the term "action" is limited by the code definitions and classifications, special proceedings, and not mere proceedings in the original action. Hutchinson v. Trauerman, 112 Ind. 21, 13 N. E. 412; Burkett v. Holman, 104 Ind. 6, 3 N. E. 406; Burkett v. Bowen, 104 Ind. 184, 3 N. E. 768; Underwood v. Sutcliffe, 10 Hun (N. Y.) 453; Milliken v. Thomson, 12 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 168; Holstein v. Rice, 15 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 307; Davis v. Turner, 4 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 190; Meyer v. Van Collem, 7 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 222, 224, wherein it was said: "After judgment and execution the plaintiffs will have new rights, any obstruction of which may call for or authorize these or other additional remedies for the collection of the same debt; and although for the collection of the same debt they may be in a new or another action, because the same wrong is not to be redressed; but the plaintiffs, as judgment and execution creditors, are deprived of newly acquired rights." Contra, Wright v. Nostrand, 94 N. Y. 31; Wegman v. Childs, 41 N. Y. 159; Ross v. Clussman, 3 Sandf. (N. Y.) 676; Seeley v. Black, 35 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 369; Gould v. Torrance, 19 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 560; Dresser v. Van Pelt, 15 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 19. This difference of opinion as to the nature of supplementary proceedings has been settled in New York by an express statutory provision that such remedies shall be special proceedings. N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 2433. See, generally, Creditors' Suits.

Applications to vacate or modify judgments.— When all that is invoked in a proceeding under the code to break into an action after judgment and obtain further relief therein is the power given by the codes to courts to vacate or modify their own judgments, such proceeding cannot be regarded as a remedy, but as merely a proceeding in the action. Where, however, a proceeding seeks relief against a judgment, but only incidentally to equitable relief, which cannot be obtained in the original action, it is a remedy and not a mere proceeding in the action to vacate or modify the judgment. Coates v. Chillicothe Branch Bank, 23 Ohio St. 415; Taylor v. Fitch, 12 Ohio St. 169.

Parties to a proceeding other than original as if an action, and for most purposes it is held to be one.[39] Under some circumstances, however, it is merely a proceeding in, and continuation of, the original suit.[40]

(IV) Appeal and Error Proceedings— (A) General Rule. Applications

parties.— Although a proceeding is a summary one in an action, it may nevertheless be a special proceeding if one of the parties to it is a third person and not a party to the original suit: for example, a motion for leave to issue execution, contested by a third party claiming to be the owner of the judgment by assignment (Ithaca Agricultural Works v. Eggleston, 107 N. Y. 272, 14 N. E. 312); a proceeding by the attorneys for plaintiff in the original suit, against the judgment defendant, to have vacated a satisfaction of the judgment and an order enforcing their lien for services against it (Peri v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 152 N. Y. 521, 46 N. E. 849 [affirming 12 N. Y. App. Div. 625, 43 N. Y. Suppl. 1162]); an application made by a creditor of the judgment defendant, not a party to the action, to set aside a judgment by confession entered therein (Belnap v. Waters, 1 N. Y. 477).

Opposition to probate of will.— Filing of grounds of opposition to the probate of a will, or the filing of a petition to contest the probate after the will has been proved, is not a new and distinct proceeding, either action or special proceeding, but merely a part of the proceeding to obtain probate. Matter of Joseph, 118 Cal. 660, 50 Pac. 768.

The reason for it is unanswerable; the defendant has the power to plead to it. Pulteney v. Townson, 2 W. Bl. 1227.

A scire facias is included in a statute of limitations barring "all actions" not brought within a certain time. Gibbons v. Goodrich, 3 Ill. App. 590; People v. Clarke, 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 120. A statute authorizing special matter in bar to be given in evidence under a notice filed with the general issue is as applicable to the proceeding by scire facias as to one of the common-law actions. Smyth v. Ripley, 33 Conn. 306. Where the common-law rule that a married woman cannot sue her husband has not been changed by statute, a wife may not have a scire facias to enforce a decree for alimony. Chestnut v. Chestnut, 77 Ill. 346. A change of attorney on suing out a scire facias does not require a rule and notice. The scire facias is a new action and requires a new warrant of attorney. Gonnigal v. Smith, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 106. A scire facias brought on a judgment obtained by a judge of probate on a probate bond, for a further sum for the benefit of a person not a party to the original suit, is a new suit. Although based upon the former judgment it is not brought for the benefit of the same party or for the same claim. Potter v. Titcomb, 13 Me. 36.

40. Illustrations.— A proceeding by scire facias to revive a judgment is but a continuation of the original suit, and not an action, within a statute providing for the removal of actions by certiorari. People v. Corey, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 633. A scire facias to make parties, the only purpose of which is to continue the action in which it is sued out and prevent it from abating by the death of any or all of the parties, can be considered only as a continuation of the original action; and the pendency of another scire facias for the same purpose cannot be pleaded in abatement. Heath v. Bates, 70 Ga. 633 [citing Bouvier L. Dict.]. A scire facias is not the commencement of a suit within the meaning of the provision of the practice act which prohibits suits being brought outside of the county where defendants reside, but a judicial writ to have execution issued out of the court where the record is. Challenor v. Niles, 78 Ill. 78; Crisman v. People, 8 Ill. 351. Where a testator has agreed that no writ of error shall be brought on a judgment against him, no writ of error can be taken by his executor from a scire facias to revive the judgment, but the writ will be considered as merely a continuation of the old action. Wright v. Nutt, 1 T. R. 388.

for purposes of review, whether by informal statutory proceedings,[41] or by writ of error coram nobis at common law, or bill of review in chancery,[42] are rather continuations of the original proceedings — applications for new trials in causes once heard and determined — than actions or suits.[43]

(B) Exceptions to Rule. Appeal and error proceedings may, however, be actions or suits within the meaning of statutory provisions which use those words in such sense as expressly or impliedly to include them;[44] and a writ of error, when anything may be recovered or taken by way of restitution under or in consequence of it, has been declared to be a lawful demand of one's right, and therefore an action.[45]

But those writs are abolished, and the action is continued from court to court by notice of appeal."

A proceeding in error is not properly an action within the meaning of the code relating to the revivor of "actions"; but it is proper that these provisions should also be applied to proceedings in error. Black v. Hill, 29 Ohio St. 86. A supersedeas, while in one sense a continuation of the original suit, is yet regarded as a new suit by § 4 of the act of Feb. 28, 1865, which requires a suitor's oath by a person suing out an execution, writ of scire facias, or supersedeas. Nadenbousch v. Sharer, 2 W. Va. 285. An appeal by a defendant in an action, or by a respondent or party proceeded against in a special proceeding, although it may be regarded and treated as a new action or special proceeding for some purposes,— as entitling the party to appear by a new attorney and to charge a retaining fee, under the fee bill before the code,— is in fact but a step taken in continuation of the existing action or proceeding, as a defense thereto. Brockway v. Jewett, 16 Barb. (N. Y.) 590. Appeals from decrees of probate courts are actions within the meaning of a statute that, if either party to an action die, his executor or administrator may enter and prosecute or defend. Stiles' Appeal, 41 Conn. 329, where the court declared that whether a particular proceeding comes within the word "actions" contained in statutory regulations, in the absence of precedent and practical exposition, depends upon whether a technical construction is given to the word.

St. 170; Spurgin v. Spurgin, 3 Head (Tenn.) 23; Mowry v. Davenport, 6 Lea (Tenn.) 80; Altham's Case, 8 Coke 150*b*; Coke Litt. 288*b*, 289*a*; Bacon Abr. Error, (L.); Release (I), 2; and other cases cited infra, this note.

Authority for, and scope of, rule.— The authority upon which this rule proceeds is an early statement of the law that a release of all actions is a good bar to a writ of error. The rule applies, however, only when the writ, if successfully pursued, would restore the party who obtains it to the possession of something which is withheld from him, and not when its operation is entirely defensive.

(c) Certiorari. A proceeding by certiorari is not a mere application in an action or other remedy, but a remedy itself. Under the codes which limit the use of the term "action" by definition, it is a special proceeding;[46] elsewhere an action or suit.[47]

f. Proceedings by State or Sovereign. The word "action" is a generic term, inclusive, in its proper legal sense, of suits by the crown.[48]

Altham's Case, 8 Coke 150*b*, Coke Litt. 288*b*, 289*a*; Cohens v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 264, 410, 5 L. ed. 257, [approved in Nations v. Johnson, 24 How. (U. S.) 195, 16 L. ed. 628], per Marshall, C. J., who said: "Where, then, a state obtains a judgment against an individual, and the court rendering such judgment overrules a defense set up under the constitution or laws of the United States, the transfer of this record into the supreme court, for the sole purpose of inquiring whether the judgment violates the constitution or laws of the United States, can with no propriety, we think, be denominated a suit commenced or prosecuted against the state whose judgment is so far reëxamined. Nothing is demanded from the state. No claim against it of any description is asserted or prosecuted. The party is not to be restored to the possession of anything. Essentially it is an appeal on a single point, and the defendant who appeals from a judgment rendered against him is never said to commence or prosecute a suit against the plaintiff who has obtained the judgment. The writ of error is given rather than an appeal because it is the more usual mode of removing suits at common law. . . . The mode of removal is form, and not substance." In strictness, "action" or "cause of action" is never identified with "writ of error." That a release of all actions includes a writ of error proceeds rather upon an equitable, and therefore extended, construction of the words in the release beyond their strict meaning; for they generally reach the original matter out of which the error arose, that being the direct subject of an action if the matter be thrown open by writ of error. The original matter being released, therefore, the words are very properly construed as reaching indirectly, and in liberal construction, to the writ of error itself, because that depends upon the original matter. Moore v. Cooley, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 412. By statute in some states, on a judgment being rendered, the aggrieved party may by new process review the case once as a matter of right. Such a provision was enacted by the New Hampshire assembly as early as 1701 (N. H. Prov. Laws, 27), and a similar provision formerly existed in Massachusetts (Charters, etc., 93; Plymouth Colony Laws, 254). Knox v. Knox, 12 N. H. 352, 358, where the effect of these provisions is discussed as follows: "The purpose and effect of the review are different where the writ of review is instituted by the plaintiff in the original action who has failed to sustain his suit, from its object and operation when it is brought by a defendant against whom the original plaintiff has obtained judgment. In the first instance it is in effect a continuation of the original suit, the plaintiff in review still seeking to recover the debt or damages for which he originally commenced his action. In the other, although the review rises out of and is dependent upon the original suit, . . . it is in effect a new action."

Illustrations.—A writ of error is a new suit, and hence falls within a statute of limitations limiting the time within which actions may be brought. Schroeder v. Merchants, etc., Ins. Co., 104 Ill. 71; International Bank v. Jenkins, 107 Ill. 291; Burnap v. Wight, 14 Ill. 303. A writ of error, like a scire facias, is considered as a new action, and is therefore within the act requiring security for costs in certain cases "in all cases in law or equity." Roberts v. Fahs, 32 Ill. 474; Smith v. Robinson, 11 Ill. 119; Hickman v. Haines, 10 Ill. 20; Ripley v. Morris, 7 Ill. 381.

Special proceeding.—Under the codes which define and classify remedies as actions and special proceedings, a writ of error is not a "suit" or "action," but a "special proceeding," and is not included within a statute which provides for the substitution, in actions or suits by or against public officers, of the names of their successors as parties. Overseers of Poor v. Beedle, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 11 [cited in People v. Oswego County Ct. of Sess., 2 Thomps. & C. (N. Y.) 431].

Statutory construction.—It was held in People v. Oswego County Ct. of Sess., 2 Thomps. & C. (N. Y.) 431, 433, on the ground of precedent only [following Overseers of Poor v. Beedle, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 11], that the words "suit" or "action," contained in a statute relating to abatement or discontinuance of suits commenced by or against public officers, do not include a writ of certiorari, since it is a special proceeding; the court saying that the proceeding of certiorari might be held to be embraced in the words "suit" or "action," as used in the section of the statute in question, without doing violence to the intention of the legislature.

g. Non-Judicial Proceedings. The ministerial acts of judicial officers and courts,[49] and proceedings by parties to enforce non-judicial remedies,[50] are not actions or suits.

G. Actions In Rem and Actions In Personam — 1. Under the Civil Law. The distinction between actions in rem and in personam, as it came to us from the civil law, is now hardly known to our practice. The civil-law action in rem was purely impersonal, although not always an action against a thing.[51] On the other hand our action in rem always turns in personam for damages and costs, when the thing proves insufficient and the person comes within reach.[52]

2. Under the Common Law. This mode of classifying actions was unknown to the common law. The only English or American courts whose proceedings readily admit of this classification are those which administer their remedies according to the principles of the civil law, such as the ecclesiastical courts, the prize courts, the courts of admiralty, and the courts which have succeeded to the jurisdiction formerly exercised by them. In our modern practice the action against the thing is almost, if not quite, always connected with an obligation of a personal character, which seeks, but may not attain, enforcement in the same proceeding. Of this character are the summary proceedings for the enforcement of common-law or statutory liens,— such as those of an attorney, banker, carrier, innkeeper, warehouseman, landlord, mechanic, etc.,— as well as the actions at law or in equity provided for the enforcement of such liens,[53] and of rights to the thing[54] or to a lien upon it[55] arising out of contract, tort, or equities between the parties,[56] or out of torts connected with the thing damage feasant,[57] or by forfeiture under statutory penalties[58] or laws of war.[59] By an apparent oversight as to the radical distinction between the nature of the proceeding and the form or character of the Code actions.— Besides classifying actions as civil and criminal, some of the codes further divide them into public and private. Ketchum v. Buffalo, 14 N. Y. 356.

49. Thus an order of a county court declaring vacant the office of the clerk of said court, and appointing another to fill the supposed vacancy, is not an action, being an executive and not a judicial act. Taylor v. Com., 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 401. The power to incorporate governments is not a special case contemplated by the constitution in conferring jurisdiction upon the county court. The words "special cases" refer to suits or controversies at law, and not to proceedings of this character. People v. Nevada, 6 Cal. 143.

50. Illustrations.— A proceeding to foreclose a mortgage by advertisement is not a suit. Such a proceeding is merely the act of the mortgagee executing the power of sale given him by the contract. All the definitions of the word "suit" require it to be a proceeding in some court. Hall v. Bartlett, 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 297. It has been held that a statutory proceeding to contest an election is clearly not an action or suit; that the duties therein performed by the court are not strictly judicial, but rather of the nature of executive or legislative duties, pertaining to one of these latter departments in governmental affairs. Patterson v. Murray, 53 N. C. 278. But see Elections. See also, in connection with the statement made in the text, supra, II, A. Compare one of the several definitions of the word "suit" given by Bouvier, L. Dict., ad verbum: "A petition to a king, or a great person, or a court" [cited in State v. Jennings, 56 Wis. 113, 120, 14 N. W. 28].

process or procedure used, it has sometimes been suggested that the form of the latter made the action itself in rem.[60] While it is true that, in the absence of a defendant, the thing seized may limit the relief obtainable by present execution, it is still a personal action. So even the limit of jurisdiction itself to the thing attached leaves the action a personal action, which may result in a general judgment against defendant when afterward brought more fully within the jurisdiction of the court by voluntary appearance or otherwise.[61]

H. Real, Personal, and Mixed Actions. The remedies administered by the English courts of common law were formerly either actions real, actions personal,[62] or mixed actions, depending upon the things to be recovered and upon the nature of the relief afforded by the actions.[63]

"Real actions" were those brought for the specific recovery of lands, tenements, and hereditaments. The essential and distinguishing feature of a real action was that it sought to recover specifically the land and its possession.[64]

"Personal actions" were those brought for the specific recovery of goods and chattels, or for damages or other redress for breach of contract and other injuries of every description, excepting only the specific recovery of title or possession of lands, tenements, and hereditaments.[65]

"Mixed actions" were such as appertained in some degree to both the former classes, being brought both for the specific recovery of lands, tenements, and hereditaments and for damages for injury sustained in respect to such property.[66]

All real and mixed actions were abolished in England by statute 3 & 4 Wm. IV, cc. 27, 36, except actions for dower, quare impedit, and ejectment, and a new proceeding in ejectment was substituted for that form of action by the common-law procedure act of 1852. The few real actions have been abolished or ceased to exist in most of the states. One or two of the mixed actions, such as ejectment and waste, survive in modified form.[67]

60. As in the case of an execution sale of chattels (Woodruff v. Taylor, 20 Vt. 65), or a statutory attachment suit (McCord, etc., Mercantile Co. v. Bettles, 58 Mo. App. 384; Green v. Hill, 4 Tex. 465; Houston v. McCluney, 8 W. Va. 135 [the judges disagreed as to this point in Bray v. McClury, 55 Mo. 128]). See also Stanley v. Stanley, 35 S. C. 94, 14 S. Hayden v. Vreeland, 37 N. J. L. 372, 18 Am. Rep. 723. An action for wrongfully taking and converting a horse, where a judgment is demanded besides costs, is an action for damages, and not to recover specific property. Seymour v. Van Curen, 18 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 94. A proceeding to obtain a judgment on a bond and warrant of attorney is a "personal action." The whole proceedings assume the shape and form of a suit. "There is a plaintiff and defendant — a record of proceedings to judgment. Costs are taxed, consisting of the attorney's fees in a suit at law — a judgment is rendered for debt and costs, as in any other suit in action, execution shown in the usual form." Farrington v. Freeman, 2 Edw. (N. Y.) 572.

Damage for flooding land can be recovered only in the mode prescribed by statute. Such damage is not the subject of a personal action at law or of a suit in equity, but of a particular statutory mode of redress which must be pursued. Henderson v. Adams, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 610.

I. Criminal and Civil Actions — 1. Definitions. Actions, in respect to the nature of the wrongs which they are brought to punish or redress, are either criminal or civil.

A "criminal action" is one instituted by the sovereign power of the state against one or more individuals for the purpose of punishing or preventing a criminal offense.[68]

A "civil action" is one which has for its object the recovery of private or civil rights, or of compensation for their infraction.[69] Under the code such an action comprehends suits in equity under the old practice.[70]

2. Penal Actions — a. In General. A "penal action" is one brought either by the state or by an individual under permission of a statute to enforce a penalty imposed by law for the commission of a prohibited act.[71] Where a penal statute provides that on conviction the party guilty of violating the statute shall be fined or imprisoned, or both, at the discretion of the court, it contemplates a criminal action only;[72] but where the statute merely subjects the guilty party to liability in a penal sum, such sum may be recovered in a civil action,[73] and in such case

The fact that an undertaking, the breach of which has given rise to a cause of action, was given to secure the appearance of a party to answer a criminal charge, does not make the proper form of action a criminal one or in the nature of such an one. Recovery of a penalty, if that is the only consequence, does not make the prohibited act a crime. If it did, then that distinction which has been well known and established in law for many years between a penal statute and a criminal enactment would fall to the ground, for every penal statute would involve a crime and would be a criminal enactment. Atty.-Gen. v. Bradlaugh, 14 Q. B. D. 667, 687.

The phrase "civil actions," used in the statute removing the common-law disabilities of parties as witnesses to testify, includes actions at law, suits in chancery, and proceedings in admiralty, and all other judicial controversies in which rights of property are involved, whether between private parties, or such parties and the government. It is used in counter-distinction to prosecution for crime. U. S. v. Ten Thousand Cigars, Woolw. (U. S.) 123, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,451 [citing The Poland, 19 Fed. Cas. No. 11,242, 2 Mich. Recovery of money paid for liquor sold in violation of law.— An action brought under a statute to recover money or property paid for

b. Remedial and Penal Statutes Distinguished. Whether a statute is to be considered remedial or penal depends upon the inquiry whether or not the party seeking to recover under it is required to prove that he has been actually injured by defendant. If the party recovering is not obliged to prove this, the action is a penal one, whether brought by a common informer or by a party who has been injured by the breach of the statute.[75] But if the plaintiff, to recover, must prove an injury to himself, the statute allowing the action is a remedial one, although it may give cumulative damages.[76]

75. A statute providing that every one of the parties to a fraudulent and deceitful conveyance shall forfeit the full value of the property conveyed gives an action that is highly penal, as it inflicts upon each of the parties offending a forfeiture of the full value of the property conveyed, besides making the conveyance void. Although the forfeiture is recovered by the person to be injured, yet it does not appear as an extinguishment of either right or debt. Brooks v. Clayes, 10 Vt. 37. A statute which provided that any person summoned as trustee, who shall be adjudged guilty of perjury on examination, shall be liable to pay to plaintiff, or his legal representative, the full amount of the judgment obtained against defendant, or such part of it as may remain due, with interest and double costs, is a penal statute, and an action founded thereon is a penal action. A remedy for a breach of the remedial statute is by an action for damages sustained from such a breach, at the suit of the party injured. A penal statute imposes a penalty upon the commission of a prohibited offense, which is recovered by an action of debt, in the name of the informer, for his own use or qui tam. The statute fixes the amount of the penalty, and hence an action of debt is appropriate, while in actions under remedial statutes the party injured recovers the amount of injury he has sustained by the breach of the statute, and case is the appropriate remedy where a statute merely prohibits the act and does not require any other form of action to be brought. Mount v. Hunter, 58 Ill. 246; Baylies v. Curry, 30 Ill. App. 105.

3. Civil Actions Criminal in Form — a. In General. There are a few actions of an anomalous character which, though civil in object, have for certain purposes been made criminal in form.[77]

b. Quo Warranto. The original common-law writ of quo warranto was a civil writ at the suit of the crown, being in the nature of a writ of right against one who usurped or claimed franchises or liberties, to inquire by what right he claimed them.[78] This writ, however, fell into disuse and was superseded by an information in the nature of a quo warranto, which in its origin was "a criminal method of prosecution as well to punish the usurper by a fine for the usurpation of the franchise as to oust him or seize it for the crown."[79] It subsequently lost its character as a criminal proceeding in everything except form, the fine imposed being nominal only,[80] and such was its nature when it was introduced as a common-law action into the United States.[81] The incidents of a criminal action clung to it so far as jurisdiction and pleading were concerned,[82] but, in many of the states, statutes were subsequently passed investing it with all the incidents of a civil action,[83] and such is its character under the code.

J. Forms of Actions — 1. At Common Law. At common law the distinction between the different forms of actions is strictly guarded and enforced.[84]

An action under the Illinois statute of 1865 for injury to animals from a contagious disease, being remedial and not penal, should be in case and not in debt, and the declaration need not conclude "against the form of the statute." Mount v. Hunter, 58 Ill. 246.

A statute may be partly remedial and partly penal: remedial as to the party suing to recover back the money, and penal as to the right given to any other person to sue for it on his neglect. Where a statute gives an action to a stranger to recover a forfeiture, he is a common informer, and the action is a penal action; though it is otherwise where a statute gives damages, either single or cumulative, as compensation to the party aggrieved. Moore v. Jones, 23 Vt. 739; White v. Comstock, 6 Vt. 405; Hubbell v. Gale, 3 Vt. 226 [approved in Burnett v. Ward, 42 Vt. 80].

77. Death by wrongful act.— Of such a nature is a proceeding by indictment to recover for negligence in causing the death of a person. Though criminal in form, it is, in some respects and for some material purposes, a civil suit. The object of the law authorizing the proceeding is not the punishment of a crime, but the compensation of the widow and children or heirs of the person whose life is lost through the negligence of the defendants. Yet in its method of institution, the form of complaint, and perhaps in other respects, it is a criminal action. State v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 58 Me. 176, 4 Am. Rep. 258; State v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 58 N. H. 198; State v. Manchester, etc., R. Co., 52 N. H. 528. See also Death.

Bastardy proceeding.—A remedy of a somewhat similar nature is a bastardy proceeding. In some of the states it is classed as a criminal action; in others it is a civil one; but it is perhaps strictly neither, but in form and object partakes of many of the incidents of both. Most of the forms of the proceeding are borrowed from the criminal law, but these are simply with the view of giving a more summary and stringent character to the process. The object of the law is to redress a civil injury by compelling the putative father to aid the mother in the support of the child, and to indemnify the town chargeable with its support against expenses which may be incurred thereby, and the proceeding is substantially a civil suit. See, generally, Bastards.

2. As Modified by Statute. By statute in many states all distinctions between actions at law and suits in equity, and the forms of such actions and suits, are abolished.[85] defendant, in the event of a judgment recovered against him in the action, to unqualified and unconditional relief against it.[94]

c. Necessity of Interposing. The question of the necessity of interposing an equitable defense in an action at law would seem to depend on the statute of the particular state. Thus in some states it has been held that the defendant who has an equitable defense which can be set up must do so, or he will be concluded by the judgment.[95] In other states it has been held that defendant is not obliged to set up such a defense; but he may let judgment go at law and then file his bill in equity for relief.[96]

d. Mode of Establishing. It has been held that an equitable defense set up in an action at law is triable upon the same principles that would apply upon an original bill in equity brought for the same purpose.[97]

e. Burden of Proof. The burden of proving an equitable defense is upon the defendant by whom it is set up.[98]

An equitable defense, when set up in an action at law, must be such a one as may be proved by witnesses competent to testify in such actions. Thus, where a party to a suit at law is disqualified from giving the evidence necessary to support the plea, for the reason that he is a party to the suit, the issues raised by the plea cannot be tried. 5. In California and Minnesota, by statute, an action on a note secured by mortgage is not maintainable until the mortgage security is first exhausted. Bartlett v. Cottle, 63 Cal. 366; Johnson v. Lewis, 13 Minn. 364; Swift v. Fletcher, 6 Minn. 550. But such a statute does not apply where the security is worthless. Schalck v. Harmon, 6 Minn. 265.

Agreement that execution shall not issue. — In Kennion v. Kelsey, 10 Iowa 443, it appeared that a note and a mortgage to secure its payment were executed at the same time, the mortgage containing a stipulation that "general execution shall not issue herein." It was held that the mortgagee could not recover a general judgment on the note, his remedy being limited to the mortgaged property alone.

Burden of proof.— In assumpsit for the price of goods it appeared that suit was brought six days after the goods were sold, and that at the time of the sale nothing was said about the terms; but there was evidence that previous bills had been sold on thirty days' time. It was held that the burden of proof rested on plaintiff to show that the demand had matured at the institution of the suit. Kahn v. Cook, 22 Ill. App. 559.

Insolvency.— In Kleinwort v. Klingender, 14 La. Ann. 96, it was held that mere insolvency is not sufficient to render a debt due which by its terms is payable at a future day.

It was held that this was a promise to give such note immediately or within a reasonable time, and that a right of action accrued immediately upon defendant's refusal to give it. And see Kronenberger v. Binz, 56 Mo. 121, wherein it was held that the amount ascertained by a settlement becomes due from the date thereof, and where, by the terms of the settlement, the debtor stipulates to give his note payable at a day certain for the amount found to be has also been held that where a buyer has obtained goods upon a credit by means of fraudulent representations the contract may be repudiated and a new one implied to pay at once for the goods.[9]

e. Expiration of Time of Performance. It is a general rule that an action commenced upon a contract before the expiration of the time fixed for performance is premature and cannot be maintained.[10] But if a party disables himself from performing his contract he may be sued as for a breach thereof before the day for performance arrives.[11] And if, before the time for performing the contract arrives, the promisor expressly renounces his contract, the promisee may treat this as a breach of the contract and may at once bring his action for it.[12] due, but fails to do so, the debt accrues immediately.

Mere failure to give note.— But where goods are agreed to be sold on credit, and the buyer is to give his note for the price, if the goods are delivered without the note or any request for it, the stipulation for the note is waived, and no action can be maintained for the price of the goods until the agreed term of credit has expired. Dodge v. Waterman, 36 N. H. 186. To same effect, Russell v. Englehardt, 24 Mo. App. 36. Compare Hartman v. Proudfit, 6 Bosw. (N. Y.) 191.

10. Alabama.— Thompson v. Gordon, 72 Ala. 455, wherein it was held that where an agreement for the sale of lands provides for a conveyance on payment of the price, and gives the vendee three years to pay, a bill filed by the vendee within three years, for the specific performance of the contract, is premature.

Georgia.— Hall v. Page, 4 Ga. 428, 48 Am. Dec. 235, wherein it was held that where an agent was to have ninety days within which to account for the sale of the articles consigned to him the principal has no right of action until the expiration of the ninety days.

Maine.—Hamlin v. Otis, 36 Me. 381, wherein it was held that where commissioners are appointed by the court to partition lands, and an agreement is made by all concerned that the commissioners shall apportion among all the parties all expenses under the commission, the commissioners cannot recover for their services until the apportionment is made.

New York.— Childs v. Smith, 38 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 328, wherein it was held that where an agreement is made that one person shall pay another a certain sum on the organization of a certain company, and all the formalities of the organization are completed except the filing of the certificate required by the act, an action brought to recover such sum is premature.

Tennessee.— Arnold v. Elliott, 7 Humphr. (Tenn.) 354, wherein it was held that where a debtor promised to pay a debt discharged in bankruptcy after a certain time no suit could be maintained on such debt until such time had elapsed.

Wisconsin.— Smith v. Malbon, 4 Wis. 300, wherein it appeared that the claimant of an interest in a steamboat entered into an agreement with one S, who had taken the boat in the character of an agent or trustee to sell her, that when the boat should be sold, and the debts subsisting against her paid, the claimant should "receive his share of any equitable claim which he may have against said boat, either as stock or otherwise." It was held that no cause of action against S accrued to the claimant till the boat was sold and the debts paid.

Ability to pay.— In Denney v. Wheelwright, 60 Miss. 733, it was held that the liability created by a promise to pay a certain debt when or if the promisor becomes able becomes absolute immediately upon his becoming able to pay it, and the right of action thereby accruing is not lost by his subsequent insolvency or inability to pay the debt.

Delivery of deposit.— In Ripley v. Wardell, 1 Cai. (N. Y.) 175, it was held that if a security be deposited, on the return of which the depositary will be entitled to something in lieu, on tendering the deposit an action may at once be brought for the substitute.

Lease of building when completed.— In Friedman v. McAdory, 85 Ala. 61, 4 So. 835, it was held that a bill to enforce a contract to lease a building when completed cannot be maintained while the building is in course of construction.

Satisfaction of judgment.— In Tobin v. McCann, 17 Mo. App. 481, it was held that there can be no recovery where the right of action is dependent on the satisfaction of a judgment which is not satisfied until after the action is brought.

"When balance of purchase-money is paid." — In Green v. Robertson, 64 Cal. 75, 28 Pac. 446, it was held that where a person contracts to pay his agent a certain commission when the balance of purchase-money is paid on the principal's ranch, the right of action for such commission accrues at the instant the balance of the purchase-money is paid.

2. Accrual of Cause Subsequent to Commencement. A plaintiff cannot supply the want of a valid claim at the commencement of the action by the acquisition or accrual of one during the pendency of the action.[15] Nor can plaintiff recover in a pending action on a cause of action which accrued after the institution of such action, even though such cause of action relate to the subject-matter of the pending action.[16]

But see Burns v. True, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 74, 24 S. W. 338, wherein it was held that the fact that a cause of action had not accrued when the original petition was filed is immaterial, where it had accrued when the amended petition was filed. And see Warfield v. Oliver, 23 La. Ann. 612, wherein it was held that if a suit is commenced before the entire obligations sued on are due, but some obligations become due before judgment, the court may, in its discretion, allow an amendment of the pleadings so as to cover the whole demand.

3. Premature Commencement[17]— a. Parts of Causes Premature. A suit prematurely brought as to parts of the causes of action stated therein will be dismissed only as to such causes.[18]

b. Objections to Premature Commencement — (i) Necessity. It has been held that an objection that an action was brought before the cause thereof accrued must be pleaded or in some way urged at the trial. Advantage cannot be taken of it for the first time on appeal or error.[19]

(ii) Manner of Raising. If a suit is brought before the cause of action accrues, the objection may be pleaded in abatement;[20] or it may be raised by demurrer where it appears on the face of the declaration or complaint;[21] or it may be taken on the trial under the general issue or general denial;[22] or it may be made the basis of a motion for a nonsuit.[23]

(III) Waiver—(A) In General. It has been held that where defendant is sued on a demand before it is due, and pleads in chief, it is too late afterward to make objection that the action is premature.[24]

(B) Confession of Judgment. Error in bringing an action before the cause of action accrues is cured by a confession of judgment;[25] but not by a judgment by default.[26]

Tennessee.— Robinson v. Grubb, 8 Baxt. (Tenn.) 19 [disapproving Carter v. Turner, 2 Head (Tenn.) 51, so far as the latter holds that the objection that an action is prematurely brought can be taken advantage of only by plea in abatement].

Wisconsin.— Millett v. Hayford, 1 Wis. 401.

Error, how reviewed.— A judgment rendered by a justice of the peace upon a note not due at the time of rendering the judgment, cannot be quashed by the circuit court, as a void judgment, upon a proceeding by writs of certiorari and supersedeas instituted by defendant for that purpose. The proper mode of bringing the question before the court is by appeal. Simmons v. Harris, 7 Baxt. (Tenn.) 325.

24. Crygier v. Long, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 393. See also Lawrence v. Bowne, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 225, which held that where an action is commenced before the debt is due, and an inquest is taken by default, the court will not set aside the verdict if defendant admits the debt to be due at the time of making application to set aside the verdict.

As to waiver by failure to urge objection see supra, III, A, b, (I).

Agreement that libel should be commenced. — Where a libel was filed against a cargo to recover a balance due under a charter-party, a previous agreement by claimant that such a libel should be commenced, and his assisting the officer in arresting the goods and afterward obtaining them by giving stipulation, without objection, is a waiver of any right which he had to object to the time of instituting the suit as premature. The Salem's Cargo, 1 Sprague (U. S.) 389, 21 Fed. Cas. No. 12,248.

Agreement to waive errors.— Where suit is brought before the sum is due, and afterward an agreement of record is entered into, by which the defendant agrees to try the case upon its merits and "waives all errors," it was held that the commencement of the suit before the sum was due was an error, but that it was released or waived by the agreement and could not be insisted on by defendant. Ward v. Crenshaw, 4 Yerg. (Tenn.) 197.

Tender of part of demand.— A tender in court of a part of the demand in suit admits that the amount tendered was due at the date of the suit and is therefore inconsistent with a claim that the suit was prematurely brought. Giboney v. German Ins. Co., 48 Mo. App. 185.

Trial of exception with merits.— In Louisiana an exception that the action is prematurely brought is not waived or merged in the answer by a consent to have the same referred to be tried with the merits. Murray v. Spencer, 46 La. Ann. 452, 15 So. 25.

25. Bush v. Hanson, 70 Ill. 480. See also Lanier v. Blount, (Tex. Civ. App. 1898) 45 S. W. 202, which held that errror in rendering judgment on an unmatured vendor's lien note is waived where defendant consents thereto.

26. Winston v. Miller, 12 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 550, the reason being that the defect goes to the right of action.

4. Delay in Commencing. An action for money which defendant agreed, but failed, to loan plaintiff, will not lie after the expiration of the time within which plaintiff was to repay it.[27]

5. Proceedings Constituting Commencement[28] — a. Actions at Law — (I) Issue of Writ or Summons — (A) In General. It is a general rule, except where it has been otherwise provided by statute, that an action is deemed commenced, so far as the parties to it are concerned, from the time that the writ or summons is sued out.[29]

27. Stanley v. Nye, 51 Mich. 232, 16 N. W. 387, the reason being that an action would immediately lie by defendant to recover it back.

As to limitation of action see Limitations of Actions.

Waiver of delay.— Defendant may waive his right to take advantage of plaintiff's unreasonable delay in asserting his rights, by basing his defense upon the ground of the insufficiency of plaintiff's proofs. Moore v. Greene County, 87 N. C. 209.

(B) Provisional Issue. But when it is said that the suing out of the writ or summons is the commencement of the suit it is not intended that the mere filling up of the process, or the mere sending of it to an officer, or the placing of it in his hands, is such commencement. These acts, to constitute the commencement of the suit, must be accompanied with a bona fide, absolute, and unequivocal intention to have the writ or summons served. Accordingly, where a writ or summons is made provisionally and delivered to an officer with instructions that it is not to be used until after a certain time or the happening of a certain event, the action cannot be considered as commenced until the arrival of the time or the happening of the event.[30]

(C) Alteration of Writ. It has been held that where there is a substantial alteration of a writ after it is made, and before service, the suit will be deemed to be commenced at the time the alterations are made.[31]

(D) Alias Writ or Summons. But an alias writ or summons regularly issued is the continuation of an original valid process, and not the inception of a new suit.[32]

See, generally, PROCESS.

Failure to issue alias at return term.— Where a writ is issued, returnable at a certain term of court, and no alias issues from such return term, but a writ is issued from the next term, the latter writ is the commencement of the action. Hanna v. Ingram, 53 N. C. 55; Fulbright v. Tritt, 19 N. C. 491.

Original process void.— Where a summons is made returnable on the fourth day of a term instead of the first day as required by statute, it is void, but an alias summons awarded thereon, though erroneously granted, may be considered as the commencement of a new suit. Rattan v. Stone, 4 Ill. 540.

Supplementary complaint.— Where an order is made for the service of summons by publication, and a summons is issued, and a supplementary complaint is afterward filed and a summons issued thereon, the original action becomes merged in the action as supplemented, and the court will not acquire jurisdiction of the persons of absent defendants by publication of the original summons, but the summons issued on the supplementary complaint must be served by publication. (B) Service by Publication. The authorities are not in accord as to when an action is commenced in case of service by publication. In some states the action is considered as pending from the time of the first publication.[35] In other states the action is not commenced until the expiration of the time for publication.[36]

b. Suits in Equity. Filing a bill and taking out a subpœna and making a bona fide attempt to serve it have been deemed to be the commencement of a suit in equity as between the parties to it.[37] There are cases, however, which hold that a suit in equity is commenced at the date of filing the bill.[38]

c. Amendment of Pleadings — (I) In General. It is well settled that an amended declaration or complaint which does not introduce a new cause of action relates back to the commencement of the suit.[39] It has been held, however, that if the declaration or complaint is amended so as to state a new cause of action, the action is not commenced as to the new cause until the amended declaration or complaint is filed.[40]

(II) As to Parties. Where a person is made a party after the institution of the suit, the suit is pending as to such party only from the time he became such.[41]

Mississippi.— Brown v. Goolsby, 34 Miss. 437.

d. Suit by Defendant against Co-Defendant. If defendants seek to enforce their demands against a co-defendant by answer or cross-bill, as to such demands the suit will be deemed commenced as of the time when their answers, setting up such demands, are filed.[42]

e. Special Proceedings — (I) In General. In New York the presentation of a petition is deemed the commencement of a special proceeding.[43]

(II) Summary Proceedings. In Tennessee, in summary proceedings against an officer, the motion, and not the notice, is the commencement of the suit.[44]

6. Evidence of Commencement. In jurisdictions in which the issue of the writ is the commencement of the action, the date of the writ is prima facie evidence of the time of the commencement of the action.[45]

B. Stay of Proceedings[46] — 1. Definition. A stay of proceedings imports an order of court made in a cause, and, as a part of its course, suspending further action in it.[47]

But see Willingham v. Long, 47 Ga. 540, which held that where, in ejectment, a third person goes into possession after suit is brought, and is made defendant, the date of the commencement of the original suit is the date of the commencement of the suit against such new party.

Defendant sued by fictitious name.— A defendant sued by a fictitious name is a party to the action from its commencement, and an amendment to the complaint by inserting his true name does not change the cause of action. Farris v. Merritt, 63 Cal. 118.

Substitution of party.—Where a mortgagee is the administrator of the estate of the mortgagor, and a suit is begun for his benefit by one to whom he assigns the mortgage while he is such administrator, and after he ceases to be administrator he is substituted as plaintiff therein, the suit will not be considered as begun until such substitution. Brown v. Mann, 71 Cal. 192, 12 Pac. 51.

Suits in equity.— The date of the commencement of a suit in chancery as to a defendant made a party by amendment to the original bill is the time of the filing of the amendment. Brown v. Goolsby, 34 Miss. 437.

Vermont.— Day v. Lamb, 7 Vt. 426.

Judicial notice.— If there is a question whether the cause of action had accrued when suit was begun, the court must take judicial notice of the date shown by the file-mark on the petition, and charge the jury that suit was begun on that date. Chapman v. Currie, 51 Mo. App. 40.

The original indorsement on a writ, and not the entry in the sheriff's books, is the best evidence to prove when an action was commenced. Reid v. Colcock, 1 Nott & M. (S. C.) 592, 9 Am. Dec. 729.

Presumption of time of commencement.— Where the complaint alleges that an act was done on a certain day it will be presumed that the action was commenced after that day. Prentice v. Ashland County, 56 Wis. 345, 14 N. W. 297; Clarke v. Lincoln County, 54 Wis. 578, 12 N. W. 20.

47. Abbott L. Dict.

Other definitions.— "The suspension of an action." Bouvier L. Dict.; Cochrane L. Lex.; Rapalje and L. L. Dict. "A stopping of the regular proceedings in a cause." English L. Dict. "The act of stopping or arresting a judicial proceeding by the order of a court or judge." Burrill L. Dict.

Distinguished from injunction and prohibition.— A stay of proceedings is distinguishable from injunction to restrain proceedings at law, which is in the nature of an equitable decree in another court that the party stayed shall proceed no farther because his action is deemed contrary to equity; and from prohibition, which is a mandate of a superior court to an inferior one commanding it to refrain from proceedings because they are deemed in excess of its jurisdiction. Abbott L. Dict.

2. Nature of Right to Stay. A motion for a stay of proceedings is not grantable as of course, but is addressed to the discretion of the court.[48]

3. Grounds of Stay — a. Action in Name of Dead Person. Where plaintiff was dead when his bill was filed, on notice thereof, all subsequent proceedings by defendant, except to ask for costs, will be stayed.[50]

b. Action Instituted Without Authority. If a person institutes a suit in the name of another without his consent and without any legal or equitable right to do so, the person in whose name the suit is thus instituted is entitled to have the proceedings stayed upon application to the appropriate tribunal.[51]

c. Another Action Pending — (1) In General. Where two actions are pending between the same parties, involving the same state of facts, and aiming to accomplish substantially the same result, the court may stay proceedings in the later action until the other shall have been heard and decided.[53]

51. Matter of Merritt, 5 Paige (N. Y.) 125. See also Whitney v. Merchants Nat. Bank, 40 N. J. L. 481, wherein it was held that if plaintiff's attorney, on demand by defendant, refuses to declare plaintiff's abode, or whether a writ was issued by his authority, or omits so to do so long that his failure amounts to a refusal, plaintiff can proceed no farther in the action without leave of court. But see Delhi v. Graham, 6 Thomps. & C. (N. Y.) 49, which was a motion by defendant to stay proceedings on the ground that the action was brought without plaintiff's authority. It was held that such relief should be limited to cases of actual fraud on the court and cases in which an attorney was using plaintiff's name without his knowledge or consent, and that it should seldom be granted on application of defendant, and probably never if plaintiff were a natural person and not a corporation.

Action on judgment pending proceedings to vacate.— In an action upon a judgment the court may grant a stay of proceedings until the determination of a suit, brought by the judgment defendants in the court where such judgment was rendered, to have the same set aside. Parmalee v. Wheeler, 32 Wis. 429; Christie v. Richardson, 3 T. R. 78.

Second action pending appeal in prior action.— An action may be stayed pending the determination of an appeal in a prior action between the same parties.

Missouri.— Sharkey v. Kiernan, 97 Mo. 102, 10 S. W. 886.

New York.— Dederick v. Fisk, 59 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 73.

United States.— Friedman v. Harrington, 56 Fed. 860. So an action against an indorser should be stayed on motion of defendant until the termination of a pending appeal in an action against the maker, where it appears that

(II) Identity of Subject-Matter and Relief. But to authorize a stay of proceedings on account of the pendency of a prior suit, the two suits must involve the same subject-matter and be for the same relief.[54]

(III) Actions in Different States. An action brought in one state pending an action in another state between the same parties for the same cause will be stayed where the stay will not endanger any opportunity of plaintiff to obtain satisfaction of his claim.[55] The rule is otherwise, however, where it appears that the action was begun in the other state to forestall the action within the state.[56]

(IV) Actions in Federal and State Courts. An action in a state court may be stayed where a prior action between the same parties, seeking the same relief, is pending in a federal court.[57] And the same rule obtains in the case the maker had obtained judgment on account of want of consideration for the note, and that notice of that action had been given to the indorser. Scott v. Herald, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 129. Proceedings against bail may be stayed pending error by the principal. Myer v. Arthur, 1 Str. 419. So the trial of an action may be stayed in order to obtain the benefit of a decision at general term of a similar case pending there. Brady v. New York, 57 N. Y. Super. Ct. 571, 5 N. Y. Suppl. 181. But a stay for an indefinite time to await the result of an appeal in another action, because of a hope that the judgment may be reversed in whole or in part, is not within the power of the court. Waring v. Yale, 1 Hun (N. Y.) 492. And a continuance will not be granted because an appeal is pending in another state between one of the parties and third persons, which it is alleged will determine the questions arising in the suit in which the continuance is asked. Cates v. Mayes, (Tex. 1889) 12 S. W. 51.

Stay of first action.— The action first brought will be stayed where the suit subsequently commenced was delayed by the act of defendant in evading service and the issue in that suit had been framed so as to be tried in advance of the first suit. Flanagan v. Flanagan, 13 N. Y. St. 432.

Thus a suit in equity cannot be delayed until the determination of a suit in law brought for a different object. Carlisle v. Cooper, 18 N. J. Eq. 241.

Joint and several actions.— An action against a defendant sued jointly with others as drawers is no ground for staying an action against him as acceptor. Wise v. Prowse, 9 Price 393. So a suit against one defendant will not be stayed because another suit for the same cause of action against him and another jointly is pending. Sowter v. Dunston, 1 M. & R. 508.

C.) 33, wherein it was held that the pendency of a suit in another state is no reason, of itself, for the delay of a cause in the state. But when it is clear to the court that its decision will affect rights to be ascertained by the determination of such suit, and where such rights are involved in the case within the state, it will grant a reasonable time to obtain such determination. Compare Howard v. Wilmington, etc., R. Co., 2 Harr. (Del.) 471. See, further, Wood v. Lake, 13 Wis. 84, wherein it was held that where an action has been brought by a creditor against his debtor, and a garnishee proceeding against the debtor for the same cause of action is subsequently commenced in a court of a different state, the action will not be stayed in the court whose jurisdiction first attached.

Action on judgment pending proceedings to vacate.— Pending an action in another state to set aside a judgment obtained there, the court should stay proceedings in an action on the judgment brought in the state. Parmalee v. Wheeler, 32 Wis. 429.

Actions for separation and divorce.— A wife commenced an action in New York for separation, and procured an order for the payment of alimony. Afterward she commenced an action in Connecticut for an absolute divorce. She then procured an order in the action in New York requiring defendant to pay the alimony awarded by the prior order, she having received only a small portion thereof. It was held that the order by the New York court granting alimony should be vacated, and all proceedings therein be stayed until the action in Connecticut was disposed of. Nichols v. Nichols, 12 Hun (N. Y.) 428.

(v) Action In Personam and In Rem. The pendency of proceedings in personam is not a ground for a stay of proceedings in rem in admiralty.[59]

(vi) Creditors' Suits. Where a bill is brought by one creditor on behalf of himself and of other creditors for the satisfaction of their debts, and a similar one is brought by another creditor before a decree is rendered in the first suit, either suit will be stayed as soon as a decree for the benefit of all creditors is obtained in the other suit.[60]

(vii) Suits at Law and in Equity. It has been held that where defendant in a pending action at law commences a suit for equitable relief against plaintiff, the court may order the prosecution of the suit at law to be stayed until the determination of the equitable suit.[61]

d. Determination of Rights of Third Persons. It is within the discretion of the court to stay an action pending the determination of the right of third persons to the property in controversy.[62]

e. Irregularities in Proceedings. But proceedings in a civil action will not be stayed for irregularity unless the defect be so substantial as to make the proceedings null and void.[63]

f. Malicious or Vexatious Action. The prosecution of an action will not be perpetually stayed on defendant's motion, on the ground that it is vexatious or malicious, unless it plainly appears that plaintiff has no meritorious cause of action or is estopped from prosecuting it.[64]

menced a suit in a court of the United States to avoid the legacy. It was held that this was no ground for refusing or delaying to carry into effect the decree in the state court. And see Avery v. Contra Costa County, 57 Cal. 247, wherein it was held that the pendency of a suit in a federal court, brought by the United States to cancel a patent under which plaintiff claimed title, is no ground for a stay of proceedings in an action to recover the mesne profits of the land after plaintiff had recovered judgment in ejectment against defendant. Compare Pomeroy v. Chandler, (N. 4. Application — a. Necessity. A court will not stay proceedings because of the pendency of a prior action in the absence of an application therefor.[65]

b. Manner of Making. An application for a stay of proceedings may be made by motion.[66]

c. Requisites and Sufficiency. An application to stay proceedings because of the pendency on appeal of a cross-action between the same parties involving the same subject-matter should state facts affirmatively showing a defense, that such defense is properly pleaded and presented in the other action, and that the other action is prosecuted in good faith and with reasonable prospect of success.[67]

d. To What Court Made. Application for a stay should be made in the suit in which the proceedings are to be stayed.[68] One court has no authority, by an order made in an action pending therein, to stay proceedings in another court.[69]

e. Notice. The plaintiff is entitled to notice of a motion to stay proceedings.[70]

f. Time of Making. It has been held that an application for a stay of proceedings because of the pendency of a prior action should be made before answering or going to trial. It is too late after verdict.[71]

6. Vacation or Modification of Order. The court may vacate or modify its order staying proceedings whenever, in the exercise of a sound discretion, it deems it proper.[73]

7. Appeal. An order granting or refusing a motion to stay proceedings is not appealable.[74]

8. Effect of Stay. The effect of a stay granted to await the determination of another action is simply to restrain further proceedings until the other action is determined.[75]

C. Abandonment — 1. In General. Acts inconsistent with the further prosecution of a pending suit may be deemed an abandonment of the suit.[76]

The effect of a stipulation that judgment should be entered in two actions, but that they should abide the determination of an appeal in another action between the same parties, and that the evidence and exceptions in the action appealed should apply to the others, is to stay proceedings, including executions in the two other actions. Murphy v. Keyes, 2 Hun (N. Y.) 375.

Violation of stay.— It is a contempt for an attorney to move a case for trial, after an order staying proceedings in the action had been served on him, without first applying ex parte to the judge who granted the stay, or to the court, on notice, to vacate it. 76. Seeley v. Mitchell, 85 Ky. 508, 4 S. W. 190, where a mortgagee, having instituted a foreclosure suit and obtained judgment for the sale of the mortgaged land, assigned the judgment to another, and the assignee set up his claim to the property by cross-petition in a separate action between other parties to which he was a defendant, and undertook to litigate it with them, they claiming liens on it adverse to him. It was held that he could not, while the latter suit was pending, proceed in the foreclosure suit, have the order of sale executed, buy in the property, take the commissioner's deed, and thereby perfect his title, as his act in voluntarily introducing his claim into the other suit, and litigating it with the lienholders, who were not parties to the foreclosure suit, was an abandonment of his right to pursue further the foreclosure suit. See also Bowman v. Purtell, 47 N. Y. Super. Ct. 403, wherein plaintiff's complaint stated inconsistent claims in contract and in tort. The case was tried as an action of tort, and was dismissed because the evidence did not sustain the allegations of tort. It was held that the claim in contract must be deemed to have been abandoned, and that the case was properly dismissed.

Of action before justice.— Where a justice of the peace has improperly dismissed an action under an erroneous view of what constitutes a plea of title, and plaintiff submits to the decision and files his complaint in the supreme court, he must be regarded as voluntarily abandoning the suit before the justice, and the action is to be treated as originally commenced in the supreme court. La Rue v. Smith, 153 N. Y. 428, 47 N. E. 796.

Waiver of defense of abandonment.— A defense of abandonment based on laches in prosecution of suit can be made only by motion to dismiss or appropriate plea, and is waived by answer to the merits. The failure of plaintiff to take any steps toward maturing a cause against defendant, beyond the entrance of a common order, for eleven years, there not being, during that period, even an order of continuance, and no appearance, for some years, of the case upon the docket of the court, is a discontinuance of said cause. It was held that he did not thereby lose his right to resort to the supreme court to have the pleadings and parties settled according to law.

Dec. 131, where it is said that "it is, perhaps, not practicable to define accurately the sort of accident that comes under the denomination of the act of God."

"The earliest use of the term 'act of God,' that we can find in our law books is by Sir Edward Coke, 1 Coke 97*b*, in 1581, in Shelley's Case, speaking of the death of a man, and he seems to have been fond of it, for he uses it often afterwards; Blumfield's Case, 5 Coke 86*b*, 87*a*, 22*a*, 1 Inst. 206*a*, also meaning death, and Keighley's Case, 10 Coke 139*a*, 139*b*, where it is applied to a sudden tempest breaking down sea-walls, and refers to the statute where the term is 'inevitable dangers or necessity, without any fault of him who is bound to repair.' Moreover, Coke used the phrase, 'the act of God excuses,' as equivalent to impotentia excusat legem, and also as equivalent to an accident which is 'so inevitable that, by no providence or industry of him who is bound, it can be prevented,' or, as in Shelley's Case, 1 Coke 97*b*, 'which no industry could avoid nor policy prevent.' Again, he uses the phrase in 1601, as applicable to a sudden storm: 1 Bulst. 280; Le Case de Gravesend Barge, 1 Rolle 79; and certainly that is one of the many kinds of inevitable accidents that may be so described. The phrase 'act of God,' is used by other judges in 1629, Williams v. Lloyd, W. Jones 179, Williams v. Hide, Palmer 548, as applicable to the death of a horse, in deciding that the death of a borrowed horse excuses the return of him; and again, in 1718, it means a tempest: Amies v. Stevens, 1 Str. 128. It is used also by the judges in Coggs v. Bernard, 2 Ld. Raym. 909, in 1704; but they do not define their meaning in using it, and the case did not require it, and they give no indication that they attached to it any other than what had been its usual meaning." Synonym of "along."— The word "adjoining" is sometimes used as synonymous with "along." Walton v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 67 Mo. 56.

Synonym of "fronting."— In a statute relating to the assessment of lands for the construction of sidewalks, the word "adjoining" was held equivalent to "fronting" in Scott County v. Hinds, 50 Minn. 204, 52 N. W. 523.

Use as synonym of "adjacent."— While the word "adjoining" implies a closer relation than "adjacent" (Yard v. Ocean Beach Assoc., 49 N. J. Eq. 306, 312, 24 Atl. 729), it is sometimes used as a synonym therefor. State v. Downs, 59 N. H. 320; Doe v. Pitt, 6 N. Brunsw. 385, 389, where the court, per Chipman, C. J., said: "We do not see any ground for the distinction urged by the defendant's counsel between the meaning of the terms 'adjacent' and 'adjoining' used in the deed."

Distinguished from "appertaining."—"The words 'adjoining' and 'appertaining' are not synonymous. As descriptive words in a deed, 'adjoining' usually imports contiguity; 'appertaining,' use, occupancy. One thing may appertain to another without adjoining or touching it. Proof that pieces of land adjoin would not be proof that one appertained to the other. Neither in literal meaning, nor as used in deeds, are they equivalent." Miller v. Mann, 55 Vt. 475, 479. But see Com. v. Curley, 101 Mass. 24, where it was held that an inclosed yard of a house of correction, though divided by a public street against which it is suitably fenced and protected, must be regarded as adjoining or appurtenant.

I. IN GENERAL.

A. Reasonable Use of Property. The mutual rights, duties, and liabilities of adjoining landowners are dependent on the principle expressed by the maxim sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas, which requires one to enjoy his property in such a manner as not to injure that of another, but the application of this principle is to be limited so as not to restrain an owner of property from reasonable and prudent use and enjoyment of it. It is therefore a general rule of law that every owner of land has absolute dominion over it and may make any legitimate use of it he sees fit, and if injuries result to adjoining land by such use it is damnum absque injuria.[1]

B. Unskilful or Negligent Use of Property — 1. Action for Damages — a. Right of Action — (I) In General. The general rule of law just stated is subject, however, to the qualification that if a landowner himself, or another by his procurement or permission, in doing a lawful act on his own land, which involves danger to the adjoining property, does it so unskilfully or negligently as to occasion damage thereto, he will be answerable to the owner of such property,[2] or

See also Graves v. Mattison, 67 Vt. 630, 32 Atl. 498, holding that injunction will not lie to restrain a landowner from erecting a wall on his ground because the foundation thereof is higher than plaintiff's adjoining building and there is danger that, if plaintiff removes his wall to rebuild, defendant's wall may fall.

The test as to permissible use of, or action upon, one's own land is not whether the use causes injury to a neighbor's property, or that the injury was the natural consequence, or that the act is in the nature of a nuisance, but is as to whether the act or use is a reasonable exercise of the dominion which the owner, by virtue of his ownership, has over his property, having regard to all the interests affected, his own and his neighbor's, and also having in view public policy. to the occupant thereof, for all damage occasioned by such unskilful or negligent use of his property.[3]

(II) Work Done by Third Persons. An owner who has employed others to excavate by blasting is not responsible for injuries resulting from the negligence of the contractor where he has no control over the work and has not interfered therewith, and where the work is lawful and necessary for the enjoyment of his property, is not a public nuisance, and there is no statute binding him to perform it efficiently.[4] If, however, when contracting for the work, he is aware of a custom of the contractors to perform their work in a dangerous manner and in violation of law, he will be charged with all damage caused by their wrongdoing, though he retains no control over the work;[5] or he may be liable if the work is necessarily injurious.[6]

Negligence from bare performance of acts. — From the opinions in the decisions just cited it seems that some acts done by the owner or by his authority on his own premises, which result in damage to the adjoining owner, are actionable, although they may be performed with the utmost care. In this class of cases the negligence consists in the mere doing of the act. The test is, whether the act done is a reasonable exercise of the right of property at the time, in the place, and under the circumstances surrounding the property. If so, the doing of it is neither a nuisance nor negligence; otherwise, it is actionable. Much depends upon the circumstances of the particular case. An act resulting in damage to an adjoining proprietor might be actionable under one set of circumstances, when the same or a like act with a similar result under a different state of facts would not be. There is a seeming conflict in some of the decided cases upon the point arising out of the varying circumstances of the cases. All the well-considered ones, however, may be reconciled by applying to them the test above stated. Whether what is done in a given case is a reasonable exercise of the right of property under all the circumstances is always a question of fact; but if all reasonable minds would draw the same conclusion the fact may properly be declared by the court, otherwise it must be submitted to the jury. Again, an act which might be considered a reasonable use of property, and therefore lawful, might be negligently performed and thereby rendered unlawful and actionable, if damage is caused by the negligence. There is often a choice in the modes of performing the same act, one of which might be harmful and the other harmless to the adjoining property. If the former mode should be adopted, and damage should result, it would be actionable unless it would be unreasonable to require the act to be done in the other mode.

building injured has been condemned by municipal authority will not preclude the owner from recovering for injury thereto by an adjoining owner.[7]

(II) Due Care. It is no defense to an action for injuries caused by blasting that proper precautions were taken to prevent the resultant injuries if the stone or other material blasted falls upon the premises of the adjoining owner.[8]

2. Action to Enjoin. A landowner may enjoin his neighbor from blasting rock for purposes of improvement, unless he proceeds with the usual safeguards which prudent men adopt to prevent injury to adjacent owners,[9] but not if the neighbor has contracted to have the work done and has no control over the mode of its performance, but he would be entitled to an injunction against the contractor under such circumstances.[10]

C. Wrongful Use of Property — 1. Action at Law — a. Right of Action — (I) In General. The rule is subject to the further exception that one adjoining landowner cannot do any wrongful act to the injury of the other, or inflict on him any injury which can reasonably be avoided, or unnecessarily sacrifice his rights, and for such acts the wrongdoer will be held liable,[11] provided the injury is real and not fancied or possible.[12] An act which in many cases is in itself lawful becomes unlawful when damage has accrued thereby to the property of another.[13]

11. The wrongdoer has been held liable for injuries resulting from construction of an embankment so as to force earth upon adjoining land (Costigan v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 54 N. J. L. 233, 23 Atl. 810, holding that the railroad could not justify on the ground that its charter authorized it to construct its railroad, and that the embankment was constructed with reasonable care and prudence, since the injury is not of the class of incidental injuries, unavoidable in the operation of a railroad, which are deemed damnum absque injuria, but is a direct invasion of private property); displaying wares so as to interfere with light, air, and access (Lavery v. Hannigan, 52 N. Y. Super. Ct. 463); establishment of a brothel (Givens v. Van Studdiford, 4 Mo. App. 498); grading so as to injure improvements on lands of adjoining owner or render enjoyment thereof less convenient (Price v. Knott, 8 Oreg. 438); obstructing ingress and egress to and from adjoining property by construction of stoop or porch (Rutter v. Fidler, 11 Pa. St. 181); piling material against adjoining wall (Barnes v. Masterson, 38 N. Y. App. Div. 612, 56 N. Y. Suppl. 939; Davis v. Evans, 59 Hun (N. Y.) 618, 13 N. Y. Suppl. 437); throwing earth against a building while grading (Hutchinson v. Schimmelfeder, 40 Pa. St. 396, 80 Am. Dec. 582); and turning waste water from tank on adjoining land in freezing weather (Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Hoag, 90 Ill. 339).

Injury partly due to natural cause.—In an action for allowing waste water from a tank to flow on plaintiff's land it appeared that some of the water which caused the injury was surface water which flowed down from a hillside, and it was held that a requested instruction that if the jury could not determine what part of the damages was caused by the water from the tank they could in no event find for the plaintiff more than nominal damages was properly refused because liable to mislead the jury to believe that unless they could determine to a certainty the extent of damage from each source there could be no recovery. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Hoag, 90 Ill. 339.

12. Sikes v. Miller, 54 Ark. 533, 16 S. W. 570, wherein it was held that an action would not lie by lot-owners against other owners of lots on the same block, for the failure, in constructing buildings, to follow the lot plan shown on a map or plat, and in laying out an alley which it was alleged would become a nuisance, but which had not become so in fact.

Nominal damages may be recovered, however, where defendant, in filling his lot up to grade, throws earth on plaintiff's adjoining lot, for covering up plaintiff's land between his line and the wall of his house, though no injury was done to the wall. 13. Colton v. Onderdonk, 69 Cal. 155, 10 Pac. 395, 58 Am. Rep. 556, holding that the use by one owner of a violent and dangerous explosive, gunpowder, to blast out rocks upon his own lot, contiguous to the lot of another person, situate in a large city, must be taken as an unreasonable, unusual, and unnatural use of his own property which no care or skill in so doing can excuse him from being responsible for the damages actually done to the adjoining premises as the natural and proximate result of his blasting.

right of action against one who has erected an adjoining building in violation of a statute regulating building within certain limits, if he shows special damage sustained by him in consequence of such erection.[14]

b. Form of Action. Where a recovery is sought for injury to a wall by the piling of material against it by an adjoining owner, it is immaterial that the form of the action is case for negligence, and not trespass, or case for nuisance.[15]

c. Amount Recoverable. Where the wrongful act will continue to cause injury, damages resulting before and after the action may be estimated and recovered.[16] The amount recoverable may be affected by evidence as to the extent of plaintiff's ownership.[17]

2. Action to Enjoin. One adjoining owner may enjoin another who, by a wrongful display of goods on the sidewalk, deprives plaintiff to some extent of light, air, and access to his building.[18]

II. Encroachments.

A. What Constitutes. An encroachment is an unlawful gaining upon the rights or possessions of another.[19]

B. Right of Adjoining Owner — 1. In General. Before an encroachment has ripened into a right by adverse possession or user the owner of the land encroached upon may use his land in the same manner that he might have used it if the encroachment did not exist,[20] and it has been held that the owner of the land encroached upon by a wall may use it, and that it will not thereby necessarily become a party-wall.[21]

2. To Abate Encroachment. An encroachment is deemed a private nuisance which an adjoining owner, who is thereby deprived of the complete enjoyment of his land, may abate; but in removing the encroachment care must be taken to remove no more than actually encroaches, and to refrain from causing unnecessary damage.[22]

3. To Maintain Action — a. For Equitable Relief. An adjoining owner may invoke the aid of a court of equity and enjoin the maintenance of the encroachment, or compel its removal or the restoration of plaintiff's premises to their original condition as near as may be,[23] even though no actual damage is sustained.[24] But if the encroachment is slight, and the cost of removal will be great, and the corresponding benefit to the adjoining owner small, or compensation in damages can be had, the court will decline to compel the removal and will leave the party complaining to his remedy at law.[25] The relief will not be denied, however, because of laches or because the complainant declines to sell the land on which the encroachment exists;[26] nor is complainant estopped to compel removal by permitting the construction to proceed, if not aware that it encroached.[27]

b. In Ejectment and Trespass. Whether or not ejectment is an appropriate remedy has been the subject of some discussion, and while on the one hand it has been held to be maintainable[28] there are decisions which affirm that case for a nuisance or trespass, and not ejectment, is the proper form of relief, especially where there is no actual physical occupation of the soil.[29]

c. To Recover Damages — (1) Right of Action. The owner encroached upon may, in addition to other relief or by a separate action, recover such damages from the wrongdoer as he may show himself entitled to.[30]

Unintentional encroachment — Ejectment enjoined.— Where adjoining owners agreed on a division line which by mutual mistake was different from the true line, and one erected a building on his lot to the agreed line, and the other brought actions of trespass and ejectment, the actions were enjoined so long as the building remained standing. (II) Defenses. The fact that a building the wall of which settled and injured the adjoining building was in possession of a tenant when the injury was done will not relieve the owner, where it does not appear that the wall has become dangerous or out of repair during the tenancy or that the encroachment was caused by the tenant or his omission to make repairs.[31]

(III) Evidence — (A) Burden of Proof. Where injury to a building by an encroachment of an adjoining wall by settling is shown, it devolves on the encroaching owner to show that the injury was not the result of any cause which he was bound to remedy or over which he had control.[32]

(B) Admissibility of Evidence of Custom. In an action for an encroachment by erecting a bay-window extending over plaintiff's line, evidence of a custom to erect bay-windows in that manner is not admissible.[33]

(IV) Measure of Damages. The measure of damages for an overhanging wall is the difference between the value of the use of plaintiff's lot with and without the encroachment prior to the bringing of the action.[34]

III. Failure to Repair.

A landowner is liable for injuries caused by his failure to keep his own premises in proper condition and repair, if by reason of his neglect the adjoining premises are damaged;[35] but there is no implied obligation between owners of distinct parts of a building, which will enable either to maintain an action against the other for mere refusal and neglect to repair his tenement, whereby the plaintiff's part is injured.[36]

IV. Keeping Dangerous Thing on Premises.

A. In General. It is the duty of an owner upon whose land something exists which is dangerous in itself, or which has become dangerous from any cause, to take precaution that no injury shall befall the adjoining property because of his failure to take proper measures to prevent threatened injury; and if he neglects this duty and injury results, he is liable.[37]

B. Water. In England the earlier cases held that an adjoining owner who brought on his land or collected and kept there water which was likely to do mischief if not properly controlled kept it there at his peril and was prima facie answerable for all damages which were the natural consequences of its escape,[38] but subsequently this rule was qualified by absolving the adjoining owner from liability where the injury was caused by some agency beyond his control, as vis major or an act of God, in the sense that the injury resulted from something which it was practically, though not physically, impossible to resist.[39] The English rule has been followed to some extent in this country,[40] but in general the American courts base the liability on negligence, either in the original construction of the reservoir or other receptacle, in subsequently allowing it to become defective, or in failing properly to provide against all such contingent damages as might reasonably be anticipated.[41]

V. LATERAL SUPPORT.

A. Right to Support — 1. In General — a. Land in Natural Condition — (I) Nature of Right. At common law an owner of land is entitled to have it supported and protected in its natural condition by the land of the adjoining proprietor;[42] but the right does not extend to support by subterranean ous ignition occurred which destroyed an adjoining cottage.

Instruction as to liability.— In an action to recover for injuries sustained by the falling of a wall which had been rendered unsafe by a fire, evidence that after a fire the city marshal told the owner of the building that he would take charge of the walls and have them taken down if necessary will not justify an instruction that the owner would not be liable if the city marshal took charge of the premises, preventing any persons from going near the ruins until after the walls fell. (II) How Lost. This right, or the right to restrain interference therewith or to recover damages for the deprivation thereof, may be lost by a grant or reservation affecting the adjoining land which is inconsistent with its continuance.[47]

b. Land with Buildings Added — (I) In General. The right to lateral support does not extend to land burdened with buildings or structures which increase the lateral pressure, unless the right has been gained by grant or prescription[48] or is conferred by statute, for one adjoining owner cannot deprive the other of the right to use and enjoy his land to the same extent as he might have enjoyed it if such burdens had not been added;[49] and even where a prescriptive right to the support of an existing structure has been acquired, if the weight of such structure is increased by substantial additions thereto the rights of the parties are the same as if such prescriptive right had not existed.[50]

(II) When Buildings Do Not Contribute to Injury. The right to lateral support for the soil in its natural state will not be lost, however, by the mere placing of structures upon the land,[51] where the structure is of such a character as not materially to increase the weight and pressure,[52] or where the building, even though of a substantial character, did not in fact contribute to the injury.[53]

2. From Non-Adjoining Land. The right to lateral support is confined to adjoining premises, and no recovery can be had for injury caused by operations on other land[54] except where the adjoining and non-adjoining lands were owned by the same person.[55]

B. Right to Excavate — 1. Land in Natural Condition — a. In General. A landowner has the undoubted right to excavate on his own land and close to the line of the adjoining owner, but he must take reasonable precaution to prevent his neighbor's soil from falling, and if, by depriving the adjoining land of its natural support, he causes it to crumble, sink, or fall away, he will be liable for all damages sustained.[56]

The lower house was torn down, which caused the middle house to sag, with the result that the upper house, being deprived of support, fell, and it was held that there was no cause of action for injury sustained because of the deprivation of support. But see White v. Tebo, 43 N. Y. App. Div. 418, 60 N. Y. Suppl. 231, wherein the owner of a wharf was permitted to recover for injury thereto by excavation to an unusual depth on non-adjoining land under water, but in which the fact that the land did not join does not appear to have been considered.

Character of soil.— This doctrine has been applied to the loss of support by draining an excavation and thereby withdrawing wet sand or running silt from beneath the adjoining land (Jordeson v. Sutton, etc., Gas Co., [1899] 2 Ch. 217), and to the withdrawal of asphalt which formed the main ingredient of the adjoining land (Trinidad Asphalt Co. v. Ambard, [1899] A. C. 594), but not to the withdrawal of subterranean water which furnished support (Popplewell v. Hodkinson, L. R. 4 Exch. 248).

In Walters v. Hamilton, 75 Mo. App. 237, it is said that if the character of the adjoining soil is such that it will and does sustain its own weight and the natural pressure thereon by its own coherence, without the support of the surrounding soil, the adjoin-

b. Effect of Negligence. As the removal of lateral support is a violation of a right incident to the ownership of the adjoining property, it is actionable whether or not precaution against injury was taken or the excavation was conducted negligently,[57] unless by agreement the excavation is to be conducted in a particular manner.[58]

c. Statutory Provisions. The common-law doctrine of lateral support has been considerably qualified by statutes, the evident object of which is to relieve owners of adjoining lots in cities and villages of the inconvenience of a strict adherence to the rule of the common law. This legislation regulates and limits the extent of grading or excavation which may be done without liability, and usually requires notice of and an opportunity to protect against the intended changes.[59]

2. Land with Buildings Added — a. In General. An owner of land adjoining land upon which there are buildings or other structures may lawfully excavate on his own land and to the line, although he endanger such structures and erections, and, in the absence of statutory provisions on the subject or of a contractual or prescriptive right of lateral support, will not be liable for the injury sustained by the adjoining owner, provided that no injury would have been caused to the soil had no building been thereon,[60] and provided the excavation was not made with an improper motive.[61]

Taking down retaining wall.— A retaining wall two or three feet from the line of a higher lot may be demolished by the owner of the lot on which it stands, and the earth removed to the line, in the absence of any right, prescriptive or otherwise, to have the wall remain. 58. Casselberry v. Ames, 13 Mo. App. 575, where it was held that where plaintiff had agreed that excavation on an adjoining lot might be made by blasting he could not recover for injury to his soil caused by such blasting, unless negligently done.

59. Thus Cal. Civ. Code, § 832, is merely declaratory of the common law, except as to the requirement of notice of an intention to excavate. Sullivan v. Zeiner, 98 Cal. 346, 33 Pac. 209, 20 L. R. A. 730; Aston v. Nolan, 63 Cal. 269. And the Ohio statute of 1873 (66 Ohio L. 232, § 494) prescribed a liability for damages caused by excavating more than nine feet below the surface of adjoining lots. Burkhardt v. Hanley, 23 Ohio St. 558, in which case it was held that where the grade had been changed the statute referred to the existing and not to the original surface.

So far as concerns cities and villages in Ohio the common-law doctrine has been abrogated by statute (91 Ohio L. 210), so that landowners therein may, upon notice, conform the grade of their lots to that of the street without liability except for negligence. Hall v. Kleeman, 6 Ohio Dec. 323, 4 Ohio N. P. 201.

Lots on one street.— In Taylor v. Day, 6 Ohio N. P. 447, it is said that the statutory restriction as to the depth to which an adjoining owner may dig evidently applies to lots abutting on the same street.

Where lots extend from higher to lower street the depth to which excavation is permissible is to be calculated from a line drawn from the curb of one street to that of the other. Elshoff v. Deremo, 3 Ohio N. P. 273.

b. Duties of Respective Parties — (I) Of Excavating Owner — (A) In General. The general right to excavate, however, does not relieve an owner from taking reasonable precaution against injuring adjoining land upon which there are buildings, and it is his duty to proceed with excavations in an ordinarily skilful and careful way, though if he does so and injury result it is damnum absque injuria.[62] The obligation to use ordinary care is not affected by the fact that the adjoining building was illy constructed,[63] that it encroached on the excavator's land,[64] or that the statute prescribed a liability when an excavation exceeded a certain depth and the excavation was within the limit.[65]

(B) To Notify Adjoining Owner — (1) In General. The duty of a landowner who intends to excavate on his own land, to proceed with due care, ordinarily requires that he should notify the adjoining landowner of his intention and thus afford the latter an opportunity of protecting his buildings and structures from apprehended injury. The obligation is not imperative, but seems, like that of exercising due care, to rest upon the proposition expressed by the maxim sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas,[66] and, where notice is not required by statute, failure to give notice will not of itself render an excavator liable for the injury caused by his acts, if otherwise he did everything which ordinary care and prudence required of him, and it is a question of fact under all the circumstances whether the failure to give notice is negligence in any given case.[67]

(2) Under Statute. If the requirement of notice is statutory,[68] prudence requires that it should be given, yet the object of statutory notice is attained when the adjoining owner has knowledge in fact,[69] although ordinarily the knowledge which will absolve an excavating owner must be of a character which will fully inform the adjoining owner of the nature and extent of the proposed work.[70]

(3) Effect of Non-Action by Owner Notified — (a) In General. If, after notice, the owner of the adjoining land neglects to take adequate precaution for the protection of his building, the owner who has given notice is still bound to prosecute the excavation and attendant work in a reasonably careful and prudent manner, and, if he is negligent, will become liable.[71]

(b) Right of Excavator to Protect Building at Owner's Expense. It has been held that the neglect or refusal of the owner receiving notice will authorize the owner intending to excavate to enter upon the land of the former and take needed precautions for the safety of the building or buildings thereon, and charge such owner with the expense thereby incurred.[72]

(c) To Protect Adjoining Buildings — (1) At Common Law. At common law there is no obligation on the part of an excavating owner to protect the walls and buildings of an adjoining owner, by shoring, underpinning, or the like,[73] recovery on the ground that defendant had failed to give notice where that omission was not alleged to have been a cause of the injury.

Imperfect duty.— The duty of giving notice of an intention to excavate or pull down seems to be one of those duties of imperfect obligation which are not enforced by the law. Parke, B., in Chadwick v. Trower, 6 Bing. N. Cas. 1, wherein it was held that the mere circumstance of juxtaposition does not require notice of an intention to take down a wall, where there is no knowledge of the existence of an underground adjoining wall; nor is extraordinary caution required in such a case.

though conditions may exist which will necessitate protection of some kind because of the duty of exercising reasonable care.[74]

(2) Under Statute — (a) In General. In some states statutes regulate the depth to which excavations may be made in designated localities[75] and require persons making excavations on their land beyond the prescribed depth to protect walls and buildings of adjoining owners from injury.[76] This duty does not end with the completion of the excavation.[77] But as to one excavating within the prescribed limits the rule of the common law applies, and there is no duty to furnish protection.[78]

(b) License to Enter Adjoining Lands. It is also provided in one state[79] that no obligation to furnish such protection exists unless the person excavating is afforded the necessary license to enter on the adjoining land, which license must be explicit and sufficient to enable the excavator to furnish the protection.[80] It is unnecessary that the owner of the land which contains the buildings entitled to protection should tender a license[81] or that he should grant it until a request is made therefor.[82] The necessary license will be deemed to be afforded when such acts are authorized as may be necessary to enable the licensee to perform the duty which the statute creates in such a contingency.[83]

(II) Of Adjoining Owner—(A) In General. It is the duty of the owner of land burdened with buildings to protect himself from injury which may be anticipated as the result of excavations made on adjoining land by the owner thereof, and to that end to take all precautions which from the circumstances appear to be necessary. If he neglects this duty and the adjoining owner has exercised due care, the latter is not liable for resultant injury.[84] Circumstances may arise, however, under which a failure of the owner of buildings to take measures for the protection thereof will not preclude a recovery, as where the

75. Thus N. Y. Laws (1855), c. 6, prescribed such a limit. Dorrity v. Rapp, 72 N. Y. 307, wherein it was held that an owner who has contracted for excavation beyond the prescribed limit is the person "causing the excavation to be made." And N. Y. Laws (1882), c. 410, requires persons excavating to a greater depth than ten feet to protect adjoining walls. Cohen v. Simmons, 21 N. Y. Suppl. 385, holding that the owner of a leasehold may recover for a violation of this law. An Ohio statute (66 Ohio Laws 232), authorizes an excavation to the full depth of the foundation on adjoining land, and, if there be an established grade of the street, to the depth of nine feet. Burkhardt v. Hanley, 23 Ohio St. 558, holding that this means nine feet below the existing or artificial and not the original or natural surface of the land.

76. Stoop wholly on adjoining land.— A statutory requirement as to protection of walls standing upon or near the boundary line does not oblige an excavating owner to protect a stoop standing wholly on the adjoining land. Berry v. Todd, 14 Daly (N. Y.) 450.

Laws (1887), c. 566, applies to adjoining owners only, and not to street excavations under municipal authority. Jencks v. Kenny, 28 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 154, 19 N. Y. Suppl. 243.

person excavating has promised to furnish protection,[85] or, commencing to excavate in a manner which is not dangerous, he changes the mode of excavating to a dangerous one without affording the adjoining owner an opportunity to protect his building,[86] or where injury is the inevitable result of the wilful removal of the soil.[87]

(B) After Notice of Intended Excavation. Where the landowner intending to make excavations gives proper notice of his intention to the owner of adjoining land, it becomes the duty of the latter to take all necessary measures to protect his land and buildings from the probable consequences of the excavation.[88]

3. LIABILITY OF EXCAVATOR — a. Land in Natural Condition. Not only the owner of the land[89] upon which the excavation is made, but also one with whom he has contracted for the work,[90] or who excavates under a license from the owner,[91] may be held for the resultant damage.

b. Land with Buildings Added — (I) IN GENERAL. If, in excavating, a landowner, or others under his direction and control, fail to prosecute the work skilfully or to take proper care to avoid injury to the structures on adjoining land, and damage is sustained by the adjoining landowner, the excavator will be liable for all damages resulting from his negligent or wrongful conduct.[92]

the owner of the adjoining land to protect the building thereon against the effects of the excavation, he is liable for injuries caused by his negligence.[93]

(III) For Acts or Omissions of Contractor. Where the owner of the land upon which an excavation is negligently and carelessly done by a contractor controls and directs it he will be liable,[94] even though the contractor undertook to protect adjoining buildings under a contract requiring such undertaking.[95] The contractor is liable only for injuries due to his negligent or wanton acts not necessarily incident to the plan or contract of work.[96]

4. Action for Damages — a. Accrual of Right of Action. The right of action accrues when injury actually results, and not when the support is removed.[97]

b. Who May Sue. The remedy for injury and damage resulting from the negligence or wrongful act of an adjoining owner in removing lateral support is not confined to the owner of the injured land and buildings, but his tenant or lessee has such an interest as will entitle him to recover for damage sustained,[98] even against his landlord who has excavated on adjoining land.[99]

c. Defenses — (I) Acts of Non-Adjoining Owners. The fact that injury would not have occurred but for the acts of persons other than plaintiff in erecting buildings upon their own land is no defense.[1]

(II) Consent. Consent to the injury complained of will bar a recovery.[2]

(III) Contributory Negligence. There can be no recovery for the injury if the damage would not have resulted but for the act of the adjoining owner.[3]

(IV) Defect in Building. The fact that a building was in such a condition that its fall could not have been avoided by timely precaution will not of itself bar a right of recovery,[4] nor will the fact that the building was so infirm that it could have stood but for a few months in any event,[5] but these facts may be considered upon the question of whether there was negligence or not, and in mitigation of damages if the verdict be against the defendant.

d. Requisites of Complaint or Declaration — (I) Alleging Right to Support. The plaintiff's right to lateral support should be alleged.[6]

Exch. 182, where it was held that allegations that defendant wrongfully excavated on adjoining land without protecting plaintiff's buildings, whereby, being deprived of support, they sank, etc., states a cause of action, although there is no allegation of a right to support or that defendant was the owner of the adjoining premises, for he will be taken to have been a stranger and a wrongdoer.

An allegation that plaintiff was possessed of a messuage belonging to and supporting which there were certain foundations which it had enjoyed and ought to enjoy, etc., is supported by evidence that plaintiff was entitled to an easement in an adjoining foundation wall. Brown v. Windsor, 1 Cr. & J. 20.

(II) Alleging Want of Notice. A complaint good in other respects is not rendered defective by a failure to allege that plaintiff had no notice of the intention to excavate.[7]

(III) Alleging Removal. The complaint or declaration should allege that the defendant removed the lateral support.[8]

(IV) Alleging Special Damages. To authorize a recovery therefor in addition to a recovery for injury to the land, the special damages sustained must be specifically alleged.[9]

e. Trial — (I) Evidence — (A) Burden of Proof. It is incumbent on a landowner who seeks to recover for injury to his land in its natural condition to show that the erections thereon did not contribute to the injury.[10]

(B) Judicial Notice of Effect of Excavation. The court will take judicial notice of the probable consequences of an excavation.[11]

(C) Admissibility — (1) In General. The evidence must be material to the issues.[12]

(2) Cost of Preservation. Evidence of the cost of preservation is admissible.[13]

(3) Custom in Making Excavations. For the purpose of determining the question of negligence the usual custom of making excavations by skilled persons under like circumstances may be shown;[14] but not where no omission of duty in that respect is charged.[15]

(4) Subsequent Market Value of Land. Evidence of the value of the land, subsequent to the injury, is not prejudicial where it appears that there has been no change in the market value.[16]

(D) Sufficiency. Evidence that the excavation was without notice to or knowledge by the adjoining owner is sufficient to show a want of care,[17] but there is no presumption of negligence from the fact that defendant excavated and that plaintiff's building on adjoining land sustained injury.[18]

(II) Instructions. Upon request the court may refuse to charge erroneous propositions of law,[19] but the failure to point out, in a proper case, the degree of care required of a person excavating on his own land,[20] or a direction to find in favor of a party who according to the evidence may be liable,[21] is prejudicial error.

(III) Province of Jury. In determining the responsibility for the injury the jury may take into consideration all the evidence bearing on the degree of care required under the facts of the particular case and that exercised by defendant for the purpose of ascertaining whether he was or was not negligent;[22] also the connection between his acts and the injury charged,[23] whether or not there was increased pressure which contributed to the injury;[24] and on the question of damages they may consider the faulty construction of the damaged building and its condition immediately prior to the injury, resulting from age, decay, or other cause.[25]

(IV) Verdict. A verdict for an amount less than the difference between the damage to the building and the diminution in value of the premises as proved is warranted by proof of damage in excess of the damage to the building plus the amount of the verdict, and is not contrary to an instruction that damages for injury to the building could not be awarded.[26]

f. Measure of Damages. While there are decisions holding that the measure of damages for injury by the removal of lateral support is the actual damage to the soil[27] or the cost of restoring the property to its former condition with as good means of lateral support,[28] the weight of authority is to the effect that the true measure of damages is the diminution of the value of the land as the natural result of its loss of lateral support.[29] Whether there can be a recovery for injuries to structures which do not increase the lateral pressure on the adjacent land, the authorities are not agreed.[30] The rule in England is that if the buildings or improvements have not increased the lateral pressure there may be a recovery, not only for the injury to the soil, but also for injury to the structures thereon;[31] but this rule, though it has been recognized in this country,[32] has not been followed generally.[33]

ing so as to deprive the land in question of its natural support;[34] but this relief will be denied where no serious injury is apprehended, and there is nothing peculiar which requires equitable interference,[35] or where land is held subject to the reservation of such use of the adjoining land as will necessarily remove the lateral support.[36] In England, moreover, if there is a right either implied or prescriptive to have a building supported, threatened action on the part of the adjoining owner by which the building may sustain injury may be restrained,[37] although there is no actual damage[38] or the anticipated damage will be small.[39]

VI. LIGHT AND AIR.[40]

A. Right to Access of — 1. ENGLISH DOCTRINE. The early English cases established the doctrine that where the owner of a parcel of land conveyed a portion thereof with a building having windows or openings thereon overlooking the land reserved, an implied grant of a free passage of light and air over the land was reserved, unless the privilege was excluded by the express terms of the conveyance. These cases do not clearly indicate the principle upon which they were decided, but by subsequent decisions the doctrine has been firmly established and appears to be based on the idea that the grantee is entitled to the same beneficial rights as were possessed by the grantor, who can do nothing in derogation of his grant.[41] For the same reason there is no implication of a reservation of the right to light and air where the unimproved portion of the parcel is conveyed and the portion built upon retained.[42]

The treatment, in this section, of the right of adjoining landowners to the access of light and air over each other's land will be confined to questions concerning the acquisition thereof by implication through a grant of that portion of a larger parcel which has thereon a building containing windows overlooking the land reserved, and also of the general right of adjoining owners to obstruct windows or openings on the adjoining land, together with matters incident thereto. The doctrine of ancient lights and of rights to light and air which rest in prescription involve a different principle and will be treated under EASEMENTS.

Interference with light by land reserved.— Where the owner of two contiguous buildings sold one by a conveyance which designated correctly the ground site of the house conveyed, and one of the rooms of the first floor of the house retained projected over the site and was supported by the other house, it was held that the vertical column of air over so much of the room as overhung the site conveyed belonged to the grantee. 42. Russell v. Watts, L. R. 10 A. C. 590.

or adopted the English doctrine,[43] these cases have been generally overruled by subsequent decisions and are no longer recognized as of any force or effect. It may be considered, therefore, as established in the United States by the great weight of authority that a grant of the right to light and air over the land reserved will not be presumed from a conveyance under the circumstances stated, but that such a right can be conferred only by express grant of an interest in, or a covenant relating to, the land over which it is claimed, and that in the absence of such a grant or covenant neither the grantor nor one claiming under him is precluded from improving the land reserved, although the consequence of such improvement is to darken the windows of the building on the land first conveyed and to exclude light and air therefrom.[44]

b. Necessary Light and Air. The American courts have adopted, however, a modification of the general doctrine, to the effect that if particular windows permitting the access of light and air across adjoining land are necessary for the reasonable enjoyment of the premises of the party claiming the right, a grant of necessary light and air will be presumed; but this doctrine will not be carried to the extent of conceding such a right as a mere convenience,[45] and if the existing windows or openings are not a real necessity, or others can be constructed at a reasonable cost, so that there may be a reasonably useful enjoyment of light and air, the implication of a grant will be denied and rejected.[46]

B. Obstruction of — 1. In General. The making of openings or windows in a house or wall abutting on or overlooking adjoining land confers no right to the access of light and air over the adjoining land which the owner thereof is bound to respect. The doctrine of the common law is that an adjoining owner may deprive his neighbor of the light coming laterally over his land by the erection of a wall or other structure thereon, within the period of prescription, though he does so for the purpose of darkening the windows and obstructing the passage of light and air; and except where this rule has been changed by statute there is no legal injury by such an obstruction.[47]

46. Turner v. Thompson, 58 Ga. 268, 24 Am. Rep. 497; Rennyson's Appeal, 94 Pa. St. 147, 39 Am. Rep. 777; Powell v. Sims, 5 W. Va. 1, 13 Am. Rep. 629.

This doctrine has been well stated in a recent case (Robinson v. Clapp, 65 Conn. 365, 32 Atl. 939, 29 L. R. A. 582, 67 Conn. 538, 35 Atl. 504, 52 Am. St. Rep. 298) which holds that a grantee of a part of a tract of land has no implied grant or easement of light or air as against a subsequent bona fide purchaser of the remaining portion unless the alleged easement is so evidently necessary to the reasonable enjoyment of his premises, so continuous in its nature, so plain, visible, and open, and so manifest from the situation of the two parts, as fairly and clearly to indicate to the prospective purchaser of the remaining portion that it was the intention of the parties to the sale of the first portion to create and continue such an easement, and to charge him with knowledge that law and equity forbid him, in case of this purchase, so to occupy his part as to interfere with such easement.

Light and air from square.— Unless by express grant the owner of a lot opposite a square and separated from it by a street has no right to light and air which will give him any redress for its appropriation to new uses. Greene v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 12 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 124, 65 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 154.

2. Motive of Obstruction — a. In General. If an erection which deprives the adjoining owner of light and air is lawful, it is not per se a nuisance, and the law will not inquire into the motive with which the erection was made.[48] It has been held, however, that obstruction by one owner with intent to injure his neighbor and without any advantage to himself is unlawful.[49]

b. Under Statute. By statute in some states, fences or like structures are declared a private nuisance if they exceed a prescribed height and are unnecessarily or maliciously erected or maintained to spite or annoy the owners or occupants of the adjoining land. In cases arising under these statutes, to compel removal or for damages, it is held that the purpose to annoy must be the controlling motive and must amount to actual malevolence as distinguished from technical malice.[50] But it has been held that a fence which is wholly on the land of one owner is not within an act regulating the height of division fences, and that its maintenance cannot be enjoined merely because it obstructs the passage of light and air.[51]

3. Action — a. Parties. An adjoining owner not in occupation may maintain an action for obstruction of access of light and air,[52] and proof that one defendant resided on the premises upon which an objectionable fence was maintained, and that the other, who owned an undivided interest in the property, had manifested his approval of the obstruction, is sufficient to render both liable.[53]

b. Pleading and Proof. On the theory of an implied grant, an action to recover for the obstruction of or interference with light and air may be maintained at any time after the right is interfered with, and hence, in such a case, it is unnecessary to allege or prove a right by prescription.[54] An allegation of a right to light and air is sustained by proof of a right by prescription or by grant,[55] and a mere allegation that the windows obstructed were "ancient" will not restrict the plaintiff to proof of prescription, but he may show that the right was acquired by grant.[56]

W. 838, which, by a divided court, affirmed a decision that a fence erected maliciously and for the express purpose of depriving the adjoining owner of light and air is a nuisance. VII. Permitting Offensive Matter or Water to Pass upon Adjoining Land.

One owner may be liable for allowing things in themselves offensive to go upon a neighbor's property, or for causing, by artificial means, things in themselves inoffensive to pass upon his land, so as substantially to interfere with the enjoyment to which he is entitled or to cause him injury,[57] and the motive is immaterial.[58] He is not liable, however, where the act is caused by a stranger.[59]

VIII. Subjacent Support.

Where parts of a building are owned by different persons, each owner is entitled to have the others so use their portions that he shall not be prejudiced, and if he is the owner of an upper story he has a right to the support of the walls below, which right he may enforce in such manner as the circumstances justify.[60]

IX. Trees.

A. On Land of One Adjoining Owner — 1. Ownership — a. In General. In spite of some confusion among the older authorities as to the ownership of a tree standing wholly on the land of one owner, when its roots extended into the land of another,[61] it is now the generally adopted view, both in this country and Increased injury by freezing.— One who turns waste water from a tank upon the premises of another in freezing weather cannot claim exemption from liability on the ground that the freezing was an act of nature. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Hoag, 90 Ill. 339.

Where a complaint averred damages because of the wrongful construction of an embankment whereby large quantities of water flowed on plaintiff's land and caused injury, and the plea averred the construction and maintenance of the embankment by act of parliament, it was held that a replication which admitted the facts stated by the plea and averred that the damage resulted from wrongful, negligent, and improper construction of the embankment and its wrongful continuance was not a departure from the declaration. 59. Brown v. McAllister, 39 Cal. 573, holding that where the owner of a lot on a declivity had no control over property lying above his on the same declivity, or over the persons occupying it, and foul and offensive water was, without any fault of his, thrown upon the upper lot, which flowed naturally across his premises onto the lot below, he was not responsible to the owner of the lower lot for the damage resulting therefrom.

See also Doe v. Morrell, Smith (N. H.) 255, wherein it was held that where each of two persons owns one half of a dwelling-house, and the part owned by one is not worth repairing, the latter will be liable in trespass if he takes down his part, thereby impairing the other's enjoyment of his half, though the work was done so as to do as slight injury as possible to the habitable portion. In Keilw. 98, it was held that the owner of the lower rooms in a house is bound to repair the foundation, but this was doubted in Tenant v. Goldwin, 6 Mod. 311, although the court said: "There is indeed a writ in Fitzherbert Nat. Brev. 127 to a mayor to command him that has the lower rooms to repair the foundation, and him that has a garret to repair the roof."

Special damage unnecessary.— The removal of the lower division walls is an infringement of the right of the owner of the upper stories for which he can sustain an action without showing any special damage. McConnel v. Kibbe, 33 Ill. 175.

61. Branches follow root.— In Waterman v. Soper, 1 Ld. Raym. 737, it was said: "If A plants a tree on the extremest limits of his land, and the tree growing extend its root into the land of B next adjoining, A and B are tenants in common of this tree. But if all the root grows into the land of A, though the boughs overshadow the land of B, yet the branches follow the root, and the property of the whole is in A." See, however, Lyman v. Hale, 11 Conn. 177, 27 Am. Dec. 728, which points out that the tree in this case, though planted on the extremest limits of A's land, when grown must have stood in the dividing line, and that therefore the case in England, that the ownership of a tree under such circumstances is in him in whose land the tree stands.[62]

b. Of Fruit on Overhanging Branches. Where the trunk of the tree stands wholly on the land of one owner, the growing fruit thereon is his property, including that upon branches overhanging the adjoining land;[63] and the adjoining owner is liable in an action for conversion if he takes fruit from the branches,[64] and for assault if he attempts by violence to prevent the owner of the tree, while on his own land, from gathering such fruit.[65]

2. Remedy for Injuries Resulting from — a. In General — (I) Abatement and Damages. It seems that if trees on the land of another are injurious to the adjoining owner, even though they are not noxious, the latter may have an action to abate them as a nuisance and for damages under a provision of the code of California defining a nuisance.[66]

(II) Right to Destroy. One adjoining owner has no right to cut or destroy the trunk of a tree which is entirely on the land of another, even though it cause him personal inconvenience, discomfort, or injury.[67]

b. Intrusion of Roots or Branches — (I) Of Harmless Trees. One adjoining owner cannot maintain an action against another for the intrusion of roots or branches of a tree which is not poisonous or noxious in its nature;[68] his remedy in such case is to clip or lop off the branches or cut the roots.[69] is not authority for the proposition that adjoining owners become tenants in common merely because the roots extend into their lands.

Branches follow trunk.— In Masters v. Pollie, 2 Rolle 141, it was held that if a tree grows in the close of A it is his property even though its roots extend into the close of B, because its body is in A's soil.

Belong to land where first planted.— In Holder v. Coates, M. & M. 112, it is said: "If a tree grows near the confines of the land of two parties, so that the roots extend into the soil of each, the property in the tree belongs to the owner of that land in which the tree was first sown or planted."

Removal of trees on own side of line.— One who, with the coöperation of the adjoining owner, his grantor, sets a division fence and plants trees on his own side thereof, may remove them against the consent of successors to the title to the adjoining land, whether or not the action of himself and his grantor respecting the location of the fence and planting of the trees would have amounted to an estoppel. Boundary trees are not a nuisance per se, nor merely because the adjoining land is rendered unfit for a purpose for which the owner never wished or attempted to use it, for in such a case it cannot be said that the land is injuriously affected or the owner's personal enjoyment lessened. Grandona v. Lovdal, 78 Cal. 611, 21 Pac. 366, 12 Am. St. Rep. 121.

An allegation in a complaint to compel the removal of trees on or near a boundary, and for damages, which states that the trunks have so grown as to break the division fence and let in animals which have destroyed plaintiff's crops, does not constitute a separate cause of action and may be rejected as surplusage, where there is no averment that any part of the trunks of the trees are on plaintiff's land. (II) Of Noxious Trees. Where intruding branches cause actual injury to an adjoining owner because of the noxious or poisonous nature of the tree, he may recover from the owner of the tree for the injury sustained.[70]

c. Threatened Planting. It has been held that one owner may enjoin the adjoining owner from planting trees near the boundary line, where such a planting would be injurious to the former's land.[71]

d. Trimmings. If one owner so trims his trees as to allow the trimmings or clippings to fall upon a neighbor's land to his damage, he is liable to the latter;[72] but it is said that if a tree grow in a hedge, and the fruit fall onto another man's land, the owner may fetch it therefrom.[73]

B. On Boundary Line — 1. Ownership. If the trunk of a tree is wholly or in part upon the line dividing the land of adjoining owners, it is the common property of both, whether marked as a boundary or not,[74] and it has been held in a very recent case that the property interest of each owner is identical as to extent with that portion of the tree which is upon his land.[75]

2. Injury to or Destruction of — a. In General. Where a tree is thus owned in common, each owner may require that the owner of the other portion shall so use his part as not unreasonably to injure or destroy the whole, and neither may cut or otherwise injure it without the consent of the other,[76] and the fact

Must allege trimming by plaintiff.— In Wilson v. Newberry, L. R. 7 Q. B. 31, the declaration charged that defendant, being possessed of certain yew-trees on his land, the clippings of which are poisonous, it became and was his duty "to take due and proper care to prevent the said clippings off the said yew-trees from being put or placed in and upon land other than land of defendant, or in his occupation, where the horses and cattle of his neighbors and others might be enabled to eat them," and this was held bad because of failure to allege that defendant clipped the yew-trees, or that he knew that they were clipped, or that he had anything to do with the escape of the clippings on his neighbor's land. The court said that it would be quite consistent with the averment that the cutting had been done by a stranger without defendant's knowledge.

J. 226], wherein it is said that "where a tree stands partly on the lands of each of two adjoining proprietors, the possession of each must be always confined to that portion of the tree which is on his side of the boundary line, in view of the greater dignity and permanence of real-estate tenure as compared with the temporary and changing nature of growing timber."

that one owner has cut a few trees will not authorize the other owner to cut the remainder.[77]

b. Action for Damages. For injury to or the destruction of a tree standing on the boundary line of adjoining landowners either may maintain an action of trespass against the one who has caused its injury or destruction without the consent of the other,[78] whether his interest is several or in common with the wrongdoer.[79]

c. Enjoining Threatened Destruction. Where one adjoining owner threatens to remove or destroy a tree standing on the boundary line, and no sufficient reason therefor appears, an injunction may be granted at the instance of the other owner to restrain the commission of such act.[80] Whether such destruction is reasonable or otherwise is a matter of discretion with the trial court.[81]

Extent of relief.— Where a portion of a trunk of a tree is on the land of one owner who threatens to cut or remove it, the injunction should extend no further than to restrain him from cutting any portion of the trunk, or any portion of the branches or roots than he might have cut had the tree stood wholly on the other owner's land, but reaching to the boundary line. If the tree divides itself, as it extends upward, into two or more parts of similar size with more of a perpendicular than horizontal extension, each of those parts should be regarded as a portion of the trunk. They have so employed the word 'adjudged' in the act respecting lotteries. . . . 'All lotteries shall be and are hereby adjudged to be common and public nuisances.'" See also Blaufus v. People, 69 N. Y. 107, 111, 25 Am. Rep. 148, where the court said: "The learned counsel for the plaintiff in error contends that there is no difference in meaning between the words 'deemed' and 'adjudged,' used in the penal enactments of the Revised Statutes, and urges that the word 'adjudged,' in the section under consideration, should be read as if written 'deemed.' It is, perhaps, enough to say that it, in fact, reads 'adjudged,' and that whatever difference there is between the two terms, is in favor of our interpretation of the statute. Moreover, the phrase 'deemed,' is not in its meaning, when used in legislative expression, so much more favorable to the plaintiff in error, as to turn us from our view of the question. To 'damn' or 'condemn,' is 'to deem, think or judge any one, to be guilty, to be criminal — to give judgment, or sentence, or doom of guilt; to adjudge, or declare the penalty or punishment' (Rich. Dict., in voce, damn); and 'judge not, that ye be not judged,' of our New Testament, is 'Nyle ye deme, that ghe be not demed,' of Wicliffe."

I. DEFINITION.

Admiralty is that branch or department of jurisprudence which relates to and regulates maritime property, affairs, and transactions, whether civil or criminal.[1] In a more limited sense it is the tribunal exercising jurisdiction over maritime causes and administering the maritime law by a procedure peculiar to itself and distinct from that followed by either courts of equity or of common law.[2]

II. ORIGIN AND GROWTH.

A. Early History under the Civil Law. Admiralty courts owe their origin and procedure largely to the civil law,[3] which prevailed in Italy and along the north coast of the Mediterranean, where naval commerce was originally most active, and where, after the fall of the Western Empire, the merchants and traders by sea brought about the establishment of a court of consuls in each of the principal maritime cities to hear causes arising out of maritime commerce and property.[4] The judges of these consular courts were chosen on Christmas of each year by the chief merchants,[5] and they enforced and applied to controversies the customs of the sea, whose origin is long anterior to the civil law itself.[6] These courts gradually developed and extended their jurisdiction, as maritime commerce became more profitable and important, until ultimately, in most states, they were merged into, and became known as, courts of admiralty.[7]

B. In England. In England admiralty courts were established about the same time, and originally had about the same jurisdiction, as in the other states of Europe;[8] but owing to the hostility which, from historic causes, gradually developed in England against the civil law, the jurisdiction of admiralty was there greatly restricted and limited, both by statute[9] and by decisions of the common-law courts interpreting the same.[10] A reaction in favor of the admiralty courts has now taken place, however, and by acts of parliament they have regained much of their lost jurisdiction,[11] and have acquired jurisdiction over all claims for damages done by any ship, whether on land or water.[12]

C. In the United States. In the United States it has been finally determined that the admiralty jurisdiction is not to be limited by either the restraining statutes or the judicial prohibitions of England, but is to be interpreted by a more enlarged view of its essential nature and object, and with reference to analogous jurisdiction in other countries constituting the maritime commercial world, as well as that of England.[13]

III. Courts.

A. Constitutional Authority. The United States constitution provides that "the judicial power shall extend . . . to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction."[14]

B. Distribution of Power — 1. District Courts. Under this provision congress, by the judiciary act of 1789, vested in the district courts exclusive jurisdiction of all admiralty and maritime causes of a civil nature, excepting particular cases over which the circuit court was given jurisdiction, but including all seizures under the laws of impost, navigation, or trade of the United States, made on waters navigable from the sea by vessels of ten or more tons burden, within their respective districts, as well as upon the high seas; but saving to suitors in all cases the right of a common-law remedy where the common law was competent to give it.[15]

the sea are the following: Consolato del Mare, contained in the collection of maritime laws of Pardessus; Le Guidon, edited by Cleirac; Laws of Oleron, Laws of Wisbuy, and Ordonnance de la Marine, of Louis XIV, published in 1681, all three of which are contained in the appendixes to Peters' Admiralty Reports, from which they are reprinted in 30 Fed. Cas. p. 1171 et seq. Valin's Commentary upon the last named is an admirable work, and Cleirac's volume Us et Coustumes de la Mer, published in France in 1647, is also an excellent compilation and commentary upon nearly all of the foregoing codes, and, in addition, contains various ordinances of France, Spain, and the Netherlands concerning admiralty jurisdiction. A more original treatise is that of Roccus, a Neapolitan jurisconsult, published in 1655, a condensation of which was issued in Amsterdam in 1708, under the title De Navibus et Naulo, which sets forth in systematic arrangement the whole law merchant of that day as it was then practised. The Discursus Legale of Casaregis, an Italian lawyer of the eighteenth century, covers the commercial and maritime law, and includes an edition of the Consolato del Mare, with a complete commentary thereon. The works of Pothier also treat of maritime and commercial law with great ability.

2. Circuit Courts. Certain prize and seizure cases were also placed within the concurrent jurisdiction of the circuit courts,[16] and in case of the disability of the district judge all admiralty cases pending in the district court may, on application to the circuit justice by the district attorney or marshal, be certified into the circuit court for trial and disposition.[17] The circuit court has original jurisdiction also in certain cases described in the next paragraph,[18] but has no longer any appellate jurisdiction over the district court.[19]

3. Court of Claims. The court of claims, in 1887, was given jurisdiction of maritime and other suits against the government, in cases not sounding in tort, concurrent with the district court, for amounts not exceeding $1,000, and with the circuit court for amounts above that sum;[20] but this does not extend to proceedings in rem against government vessels, it being against public policy to permit the possession of government property to be disturbed.[21]

4. Circuit Courts of Appeals. By the act establishing circuit courts of appeals,[22] jurisdiction of appeals in admiralty cases, irrespective of the amount involved, was vested in the circuit court of appeals, and its decisions were made final except that at any time it may certify to the supreme court any question or proposition of law concerning which it desires the instructions of that court for its proper decision; and the supreme court may also require, by certiorari or otherwise, any case to be certified to it by the circuit court of appeals, for review and determination, in the same manner as if it had been carried by error or appeal to the supreme court.[23]

5. Supreme Court. In addition to the appellate jurisdiction by certiorari and over questions certified to it by the circuit court of appeals,[24] the supreme court was given, by the act of March 3, 1891,[25] exclusive jurisdiction by appeal or writ of error direct from the district courts or from the existing circuit courts in certain cases, regardless of the amount involved,[26] and in all cases not made final in

U. S. Rev. Stat. (Suppl. 1891), p. 903, § 5.

As to crimes, however, the appellate jurisdiction of the supreme court direct from the district court was transferred to the circuit the circuit court of appeals where the amount in controversy exceeds $1,000 exclusive of costs, provided the appeal be taken or the writ be sued out within one year after the entry of the order, judgment, or decree sought to be reviewed.[27]

6. Territorial Courts. It is competent for congress to vest admiralty jurisdiction in the courts of the territories, and such jurisdiction has generally been conferred upon them.[28]

IV. Jurisdiction.

A. In General — 1. Nature and Scope. The jurisdiction of admiralty courts in the United States includes only maritime causes, or such as arise out of commerce and navigation upon the high seas or the navigable waters of the United States.[29] The test of such jurisdiction is the nature of the claim on which the suit is founded,[30] and not the form of remedy resorted to.[31] The jurisdiction is complete in its nature, extending to the person as well as to the res.[32]

2. By What Law Governed — a. In General. While the admiralty courts of the United States are governed in general by the same principles of maritime law as the courts of the maritime nations of continental Europe,[33] their jurisdiction does court of appeals by the act of Jan. 20, 1897 (U. S. Rev. Stat. (Suppl. 1897), p. 541, c. 68) except on conviction for a capital offense.

Concerning the original admiralty jurisdiction, Story, J., in De Lovio v. Boit, 2 Gall. (U. S.) 398, 400, 7 Fed. Cas. No. 3,776, said: "What was originally the nature and extent of the jurisdiction of the Admiralty cannot now with absolute certainty be known. It is involved in the same obscurity, which rests on the original jurisdiction of the Courts of common law. It seems, however, that, at a very early period, the Admiralty had cognizance of all questions of prize; of torts and offenses, as well in ports within the ebb and flow of the tide, as upon the high seas; of maritime contracts and navigation; and also the peculiar custody of the rights, prerogatives, and authorities of the crown, in the British seas. The forms of its proceedings were borrowed from the civil law; and the not extend to all cases which would fall within the jurisdiction of such courts, and the exact nature and extent thereof must be determined by the laws of congress and the decisions of the United States supreme court[34] and by the usages prevailing in the courts of the states at the time the federal constitution was adopted.[35]

b. English Common-Law Decisions. The jurisdiction of the federal courts is not limited to the particular subjects over which the admiralty courts of England exercised jurisdiction when the federal constitution was adopted,[36] and the decisions of the English common-law courts upon the jurisdiction of the admiralty are not binding on the courts of this country.[37]

c. Federal Statutes. The jurisdiction of the federal courts in admiralty rests solely upon the constitution of the United States, and such jurisdiction is not dependent upon and cannot be enlarged or abridged by congress under its power to regulate commerce between the states and foreign nations.[38]

d. State Statutes. The states of the union have no power to enlarge the admiralty jurisdiction of the federal courts by statute.[39]

rules by which it was governed, were, as is every where avowed, the ancient laws, customs and usages of the seas. In fact, there can scarcely be the slightest doubt, that the Admiralty of England, and the maritime Courts of all the other powers of Europe, were formed upon one and the same common model; and that their jurisdiction included the same subjects, as the consular courts of the Mediterranean. These courts are described in the Consolato del Mare, as having jurisdiction of 'all controversies respecting freight; of damages to goods shipped; of the wages of mariners; of the partition of ships by public sale; of jettison; of commissions or bailments to masters and mariners; of debts contracted by the master for the use and necessities of his ship; of agreements made by the master with merchants, or by merchants with the master; of goods found on the high seas or on the shore; of the armament or equipment of ships, galleys or other vessels; and generally of all other contracts declared in the customs of the sea.'"

Effect of adoption of state laws by congress.—The jurisdiction of the district courts in admiralty and maritime cases is not ousted by the adoption of state laws by act of congress. Such acts only give concurrent jurisdiction to the state courts, and limit the recovery in the United States courts to the sum to which the party is entitled by the state law so adopted. Hobart v. Drogan, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 108, 9 L. ed. 363.

3. Effect of Concurrent Remedy at Common Law. The fact that courts of common law have concurrent jurisdiction in a case with the admiralty does not take away the admiralty jurisdiction.[40]

4. Effect of Removal of Res. Jurisdiction once acquired by possession of the res is not lost by its subsequent removal beyond the territorial jurisdiction of the court.[41]

5. Saving of Common-Law Remedy — a. In General. Whenever the federal courts have original cognizance of admiralty causes, that cognizance is exclusive, and no other court, state or national, can exercise it;[42] but the grant of admiralty jurisdiction was not intended to deprive suitors of any remedies afforded by the common law, either in state or federal courts, and, to make this clear, congress inserted in the judiciary act of 1789 a clause "saving to suitors in all cases the right of a common-law remedy, where the common law is competent to give it."[43]

b. Meaning of "Common-Law Remedy" — (I) In General. The clause saving to suitors a common-law remedy where the common law is competent to give it is intended to save the remedy or right of action in those courts which proceed according to the course of the common law as distinguished from admiralty proceedings,[44] and the words "common-law remedy" do not necessarily imply an action or remedy obtainable in a common-law court, but are equivalent to "the means employed to enforce a right or redress an injury,"[45] nor are they limited to such causes of action as were known to the common law at the time of the passage of the judiciary act.[46]

(II) Personal Actions — (A) Generally. Where no process is served upon, nor any remedy is sought against, the vessel, but only a personal judgment against the owners is prayed, the case is not within the exclusive jurisdiction of the federal courts, but, whether the action be one of contract[47]

True test or rule.— In Knapp, etc., Co. v. McCaffrey, 177 U. S. 638, 20 S. Ct. 824, 44 L. ed. 921, the court said: "The true distinction between such proceedings as are and such as are not invasions of the exclusive admiralty jurisdiction is this: If the cause of action be one cognizable in admiralty, and the suit be in rem against the thing itself, though a monition be also issued to the owner, the proceeding is essentially one in admiralty. If, upon the other hand, the cause of action be not one of which a court of admiralty has jurisdiction, or if the suit be in personam against an individual defendant, with an auxiliary attachment against a particular thing, or against the property of the defendant in general, it is essentially a proceeding according to the course of the common law, and within the saving clause of the statute [U. S. Rev. Stat. (1878), § 563] of a common-law remedy."

See also Merritt v. Peabody, 40 Ga. 177, holding that a suit by the officers, etc., of a steamboat, against the owners and the boat, to recover for wages due and supplies furnished, is not, when judgment is recovered in personam against the owners, such a proceeding to enforce a maritime lien as falls within the exclusive jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, although judgment is also recovered in rem against the boat.

time torts, saved to the state courts, is not limited, restricted, or qualified by the act "to limit the liability of ship-owners," unless appropriate proceedings are taken under said statute by a party interested to avail himself of the benefit thereof.[56]

6. Conflict of Jurisdiction as to Res[57] — a. In General. It is a rule of general application that where property is in the actual possession of one court of competent jurisdiction, such possession cannot be disturbed by process out of another court,[58] but to render this rule applicable there must be actual [59] and lawful [60] possession.

Property in custody of state officer.— It follows from the rule stated in the text that where, at the time a libel is filed against a vessel in admiralty, the vessel is in the custody of a state court, the libellant cannot deprive the state officers of their custody (The Red Wing, 5 McCrary (U. S.) 122, 14 Fed. 869), whether the res be in the custody of a sheriff (Taylor v. Carryl, 20 How. (U. S.) 583, 15 L. ed. 1028 [affirming 24 Pa. St. 259]; The Oliver Jordan, 2 Curt. (U. No. 2,559) or receiver (The E. L. Cain, 45 Fed. 367).

Forcible dispossession of marshal.— Where a vessel is in the possession of the marshal under attachment, and, in the absence of the ship-keeper, persons having knowledge of the attachment forcibly seize and take the vessel into another state and there cause her to be attached in the state court, the marshal has the right to follow and retake her. The Joseph Gorham, 13 Fed. Cas. No. 7,537, 7 Law Rep. 135, 2 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 388.

Vessel in employ of receiver.— Where a vessel owned by an insolvent corporation is employed by a receiver under authority of the court in transporting merchandise and passengers in connection with the usual business of the corporation, the vessel is not exempt by comity nor by the fact that it is in custodia legis from maritime liens for liabilities incurred in the course of such employment, nor from seizure for enforcement of such lien upon libels in a federal district court in another state, without leave of the court appointing the receiver. The Willamette Valley, 62 Fed. 293. See also Van Valkenburg v. Kingsbury, 14 Ohio St. 353, holding that the seizure of a water-craft under a state law, and her subsequent delivery to the owner upon bond and security, do not impair the capacity of the craft to incur liabilities described in the statute, or those arising under the admiralty of the United States in the course of her employment by the owner after such discharge.

In proceedings to limit liability of ship-owner, the vessel will be sold where it appears that, if she is compelled to remain in custody until the termination of the litigation, her value will be greatly impaired, if not substantially destroyed, though attachment proceedings are pending against her in the state court. The Mendota, 14 Fed. 358.

59. Subsequent possession will not relate back.— In proceedings in a state court to wind up a corporation, such court has no power to restrain proceedings in a federal court on libels to enforce maritime liens against vessels of the corporation, where the receiver of the corporation never took possession of such vessels, and they were seized by the marshal under the libels before the receiver qualified, though he was appointed before the libels were filed, for the doctrine of relation has no application in such a case. Moran v. Sturges, 154 U. S. 256, 14 S. Ct. 1019, 38 L. ed. 981.

Garnishment proceedings.— It is no defense to a petition that freight be brought into the admiralty courts to answer the exigencies of suits for mariners' wages, which are a charge thereon, that the consignee, before the libels were filed, was summoned as a trustee or garnishee of the ship-owner in a common-law court. The Caroline, 1 Lowell (U. S.) 173, 5 Fed. Cas. No. 2,419.

Service of monition by the marshal for seamen's wages upon parties owing freight moneys does not place the fund beyond the reach of an attachment subsequently issued from the state court to the sheriff of the county in an action brought by another against the ship-owner. The Olivia A. Carrigan, 7 Fed. 507.

60. The Ferryboats Roslyn and Midland, 9 Ben. (U. S.) 119, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 12,068, holding that the tortious presence of a sheriff on board of a vessel is not of itself sufficient to oust the jurisdiction of the admiralty to seize the vessel in a proceeding in rem taken to enforce a maritime lien. See also The J. W. French, 13 Fed. 916, holding that where the sheriff has taken possession of a vessel under an order of condemnation and sale from a state court, made without jurisdic-

b. Effect of Sale under Process of State Court. A state court, having no jurisdiction to adjudicate maritime liens, cannot order a sale of a vessel divested thereof, and a vessel which has been sold under process of a state court may be subsequently seized and sold by order of the admiralty.[61]

c. State Officer How Protected. Where a conflict arises between a sheriff acting under process of a state court, and a marshal who has made a subsequent levy on the same property, the sheriff must either apply to the state court to be protected or petition the federal court to order its officer to withdraw.[62]

B. Waters and Voyages within Jurisdiction — 1. Waters — a. Tidal Waters. By the early decisions admiralty jurisdiction was confined to waters within the ebb and flow of the tide, and in England[63] and some of the early American decisions[64] tide-waters within the body of a county were not included. By the later decisions of this country, however, such waters are included, whether the cause of action be one of contract[65] or tort.[66]

Distribution of proceeds of vessel.— Where a vessel has been sold in admiralty, a mortgagee is entitled to file a petition against the proceeds and have the same paid to him, as against a receiver, appointed after default was made on the mortgage, who is seeking to transfer litigation concerning the mortgage to the state court. The Advance, 63 Fed. 704.

Where a vessel has been sold under a libel, and the claims of the libellants have been satisfied, a state court will appoint a receiver for the purpose of obtaining from the federal court, with its consent, any surplus proceeds remaining in its custody, in order to distribute the same in the state court where litigation is pending between various mortgagees of the vessel and other creditors claiming liens thereon by judgment, execution, or attachment. b. Non-Tidal but Navigable Waters — (1) In General — (A) Lakes and Rivers. The ebb and flow of the tide continued to be the test of admiralty jurisdiction down to the year 1851,[67] since which date the admiralty jurisdiction has been held to cover the entire navigable waters of the United States.[68]

Waters in foreign territory.— As the admiralty jurisdiction of the federal courts extends to collisions occurring on the great lakes, the circumstance that a portion of those waters lies within the limits of Canada constitutes no objection to the exercise of such jurisdiction, though the collision occurred within the limits of Canada, the laws of which give no lien or any action or any right in rem against the wrong-doing vessel. Contract performed on canal and tide-waters.— In The Canal Boat E. M. McChesney, 8 Ben. (U. S.) 150, 49 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 178, 8 Fed. Cas. No. 4,463, it was doubted if admiralty had jurisdiction of a contract for the carriage of goods exclusively upon a canal, but held that it did have jurisdiction of a contract for carriage into navigable waters beyond the canal. This had been denied, however, in the earlier cases of Wallis v. Chesney, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,110, 4 Am. L. Reg. 307;

(II) Test of Navigability. Waters are navigable waters of the United States, in contradistinction from navigable waters of the states, when they form in their ordinary condition by themselves, or by uniting with other waters, a continuous highway over which commerce is or may be carried on with other states or foreign countries in the customary modes in which commerce is conducted by water.[70]

2. Voyages — a. Wholly within State. If a voyage is made upon public navigable waters, the fact that it is made for the purpose of carrying on merely local or internal commerce between ports of the same state does not prevent admiralty from taking jurisdiction,[71] although at one time a contrary rule prevailed,[72] even where the ultimate destination of the vessel was a port in another state.[73]

b. Length of No Effect. The length of a voyage is no criterion by which to determine the question of admiralty jurisdiction.[74]

3. Extent — a. In General. The process of admiralty courts cannot be executed by the seizure of vessels outside their districts,[75] nor can a vessel be consid-

b. Confined to Boundary Lines of State. The territorial limits of the district and of the court's jurisdiction are confined to the boundary lines of a state, and its process does not run to the three-mile limit or frontier of water recognized by the law of nations as under the control of the United States for the purposes of revenue and defense,[78] although the colonial courts of common law had jurisdiction over the bays and arms of the sea, and over the coasts to the extent of a marine league.[79]

No grounds for denying jurisdiction.— Libellant, an American citizen, sued as assignee of the owners of the British ship A for damages caused by a collision in the English Channel between the A and the German steamer B. The B had never been in the United States, none of her witnesses were there, and her owner asked the court to decline to entertain jurisdiction of the action. The owner of the German steamer had been requested, and refused, to appear in an action instituted against him in a British court. It was held, assuming, but not deciding, that it is competent for a court of admiralty, in its discretion, to decline to entertain jurisdiction of a cause of collision on the high seas where all the parties are foreigners, that this case presented no grounds on which the court should so decline jurisdiction. D. Property within Jurisdiction — 1. Bridges. A bridge is not the subject of a maritime lien and is not within the jurisdiction of admiralty.[9]

2. Flotsam, Jetsam, and Ligan. If goods of the description of flotsam, jetsam, and ligan are taken up at sea and brought on shore, the court of admiralty has jurisdiction, but not if they are cast on the land by the sea.[10]

3. Vessels — a. Private Vessels — (I) In General. With the exception of government vessels,[11] the jurisdiction of admiralty extends to all vessels in navigable waters.[12]

(II) Term "Vessel" Defined. The word "vessel" includes every description of water-craft or other artificial contrivance used, or capable of being used, as a means of transportation on water;[13] and if the business or employment of a vessel appertain to travel or trade and commerce on the water[14] it is subject to the admiralty jurisdiction whatever may be its size,[15] form, capacity, or means of propulsion.[16]

Dry-dock.— A claim for salvage of a dry-dock is not within the admiralty jurisdiction of the courts of the United States. Cope v. Vallette Dry Dock Co., 119 U. S. 625, 7 S. Ct. 336, 30 L. ed. 501 [affirming 10 Fed. 142]; Salvor Wrecking Co. v. Sectional Dock Co., 21 Fed. Cas. No. 12,273, 3 Centr. L. J. 640, 12 Pac. L. Rep. 74. And see Snyder v. A Floating Dry-Dock, 22 Fed. 685, wherein it was held that a suit to recover the possession and delivery of a floating dry-dock with a floating pump, which is not a vessel, or constructed or used in navigation or commerce, cannot be maintained in admiralty.

A marine pump, to rest on piles, but capable of floating, and which is used for sucking mud from beneath the water or from scows, and forcing it onto the adjacent land, is not a subject of admiralty jurisdiction. The Big Jim, 61 Fed. 503.

A pile-driver furnished with a wheel by which it is propelled about the harbor, but not fitted for transportation, is not a subject of admiralty jurisdiction. Pile Driver E. O. A., 69 Fed. 1005.

Steamboat used as hotel.— A steamboat dismantled and stripped of her motive power, and fitted and used as a hotel, is not liable in rem for services to her in the nature of salvage, where she went ashore while being towed to another place. The Steamboat Hendrick Hudson, 3 Ben. (U. S.) 419, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 6,355.

Barges.— The jurisdiction of admiralty is not affected by the fact that the vessel is a mere barge, not fitted with any means of propulsion, but dependent on towing. Ex p. Easton, 95 U. S. 68, 24 L. ed. 373; Wood v. Canal Boat Wilmington, 5 Hughes (U. b. Government Vessels. A public vessel of war of a foreign nation at peace with the United States, coming into her ports and demeaning herself in a friendly Coal Boat D. C. Salisbury, Olc. Adm. 71, 7 Fed. Cas. No. 3,694. But see Jones v. The Coal Barges, 3 Wall. Jr. C. C. (U. S.) 53, 13 Fed. Cas. No. 7,458 (holding that flatboats and coal-barges used to transport merchandise down stream, and broken up and sold for lumber at the end of their voyage, are not subject to admiralty jurisdiction) and Leddo v. Hughes, 15 Ill. 41 (to the effect that flatboats and their pilots or navigators do not come under maritime law). See also Wood v. Two Barges, 46 Fed. 204, wherein it was held that coal-barges, which are rough, square-cornered boxes, from 165 to 180 feet long, about 26 feet wide, and 8 to 10 feet deep, and have no motive or propelling power, no master or crew, no tackle, apparel, or furniture, and no name, being generally designated by number, and which are not permitted to be enrolled or licensed under any law of the United States, and have no license, are not "ships," within the language of Admiralty Rule 20, and cannot be made the subject of a possessory suit therein provided for.

Bath-houses.—A bath-house built on boats, and designed for transportation, is within admiralty jurisdiction. The Public Bath No. 13, 61 Fed. 692; The Steam-Tug M. R. Brazos, 10 Ben. (U. S.) 435, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 9,898.

Canal-boats.— A suit in admiralty may be maintained for the non-performance of a contract for the transportation of merchandise from the city of Albany to the city of New York, on the Hudson river, in a canal-boat designed for the navigation of the Erie canal, and without motive power of its own (Van Santwood v. The John B. Cole, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,875, 4 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 373. Contra, The Ann Arbor, 1 Fed. Cas. No. 407), or to enforce a claim for towage (Ryan v. Hook, 34 Hun (N. Y.) 185) or for repairs (The Robert Morris, 1 Wall. Jr. C. C. (U. S.) 33, 16 Fed. Cas. No. 8,896). But see Boon v. The Hornet, Crabbe (U. S.) 426, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1,640, to the effect that a canal-boat built and used for service in the interior canals of the state is not liable in admiralty for a claim for repairs made upon it upon a navigable river.

"Chuncker."— A "chuncker" is a vessel within the admiralty jurisdiction, and a claim for furnishing an air-pump to such a vessel will be enforced in the district court in admiralty. Winslow v. A Floating Steam Pump, 30 Fed. Cas. No. 17,880, 2 N. J. L. J. 124.

Dredges.— A dredge and her scows are one concern, and are subject to libel in admiralty for wages. The Starbuck, 61 Fed. 502; The Atlantic, 53 Fed. 607; Aitcheson v. The Endless Chain Dredge, 40 Fed. 253; The Pioneer, 30 Fed. 206; The Alabama, 22 Fed. 449 [following The Floating Elevator Hezekiah Baldwin, 8 Ben. (U. S.) 556, 12 Fed. Cas. No. 6,449].

Ferry-boats.— A steam ferry-boat is a vessel within the jurisdiction of admiralty, though she merely crosses and recrosses a river (U. S. v. Burlington, etc., Ferry Co., 21 Fed. 331; Murray v. The Ferry-Boat F. B. Nimick, 2 Fed. 86; The Steamboat Cheeseman v. Two Ferry-boats, 2 Bond (U. S.) 363, 5 Fed. Cas. No. 2,633) and is owned by a company owning a ferry franchise (The Gate City, 5 Biss. (U. S.) 200, 10 Fed. Cas. No. 5,267) or operated in connection with a railroad (The St. Louis, 48 Fed. 312).

A floating elevator, used in the harbor of New York, though without motive power or capacity for cargo, is a vessel subject to a maritime lien. The Floating Elevator Hezekiah Baldwin, 8 Ben. (U. S.) 556, 12 Fed. Cas. No. 6,449.

Lighters.— Admiralty jurisdiction extends to lighters employed in carrying lumber out to vessels lying in deep water, and the fact that such lighters are not enrolled or licensed does not affect the question of jurisdiction. The General Cass, Brown Adm. 334, 10 Fed. Cas. No. 5,307.

Rafts.— Admiralty has jurisdiction of a libel for injuries by (Seabrook v. Raft of Railroad Cross-Ties, 40 Fed. 596) or to (The F. & P. M. No. 2, 33 Fed. 511) a raft and in matters of salvage (A Raft of Timber, 4 Woods (U. S.) 197, 15 Fed. 555; Fifty Thousand Feet of Timber, 2 Lowell (U. S.) 64, 9 Fed. Cas. No. 4,783; A Raft of Spars, Abb. Adm. 485, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11,529. Contra, A Raft of Cypress Logs, 1 Flipp. (U. S.) 543, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11,527; Tome v. Four Cribs of Lumber, Taney (U. S.) 533, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,083), but has not jurisdiction to try the question of title to logs which have been incorporated into a raft and floated down a public navigable river (Gastrel v. A Cypress Raft, 2 Woods (U. S.) 213, 10 Fed. Cas. No. 5,266).

Scows.— A contract for the repair of a scow used in carrying ballast to or from vessels, and propelled by steam-tugs, and having neither steam power, nor sails, nor rudder, is maritime. Endner v. Greco, 3 Fed. 411. See also Woodruff v. One Covered Scow, 30 Fed. 269, to the effect that a structure consisting of a float made of timbers, 11 feet wide and 23 feet long, constructed to float in the water, and to support above the surface of the water a floor and a house nearly the size of the float, one use of which is to store within the house the oars and sails of small boats landing at the float, and to afford persons a means of egress from small boats coming to the slip to an adjoining wharf, to which it is attached by lines, and thence to the shore, is subject to a lien, enforceable in admiralty, arising out of an implied contract of wharfage, although never used in the transportation of passengers or freight from place to place.

Tugboats.— A tug of less than five tons burden, whose chief occupation is the towing of canal-boats and other small craft about the harbor of Buffalo and adjacent waters, occasionally running out upon Lake Erie and the Niagara river, is engaged in aiding commerce upon navigable waters of the United manner, is not amenable to process of our courts,[17] and government vessels owned or employed by the United States[18] or by a state or municipality[19] are exempt from seizure on grounds of public policy.

E. Subject-Matter of Jurisdiction — 1. In General. While admiralty courts act as courts of equity so far as their powers go,[20] they have no general jurisdiction to administer relief as courts of equity,[21] their powers being limited States, and within the admiralty jurisdiction. The Ella B., 24 Fed. 508.

Vessel dismantled for repairs.— Services rendered a dismantled steamboat moored on a navigable river, and undergoing alteration and repairs for the purpose of being fitted for use as a wharf-boat, are maritime in their nature. The Old Natchez, 9 Fed. 476.

To same effect in England see The Constitution, 4 P. D. 39.

Letters of marque.— Seamen on board letters of marque may sue for their wages in the admiralty courts of neutral nations. Ellison v. Ship Bellona, Bee Adm. 112, 8 Fed. Cas. No. 4,407.

Action against foreign privateer for unlawful capture.— A French admiralty court having declared that the capture of an American vessel by a French privateer was unlawful, an admiralty court of the United States will entertain jurisdiction of a libel in rem against the French vessel to recover damages for an unlawful seizure. McGrath v. Sloop Candalero, Bee Adm. 60, 16 Fed. Cas. No. 8,809.

Enforcing seizures by foreign public vessels.— In the case of a libel qui tam against a vessel seized by an English cruiser as having been engaged in the slave-trade, process in rem will not be denied libellant because he is a foreigner, but will be granted on condition that he enter into a stipulation with sureties to abide by all decrees of the court, interlocutory or otherwise. Mortgages.—Admiralty has no jurisdiction of a petition to foreclose (Bogart v. The Steamboat John Jay, 17 How. (U. S.) 399, 15 L. ed. 95 [affirming The John Jay, 3 Blatchf. (U. S.) 67, 13 Fed. No. 7,247) or to enforce the surrender or cancellation of a mortgage (Dean v. Bates, 2 Woodb. & M. (U. S.) 87, 7 Fed. Cas. No.

to maritime employment or transactions and matters concerning or relating to navigation and commerce upon navigable waters.[22]

2. Contracts — a. In General. Admiralty has jurisdiction over all maritime contracts,[23] wheresoever the same may be executed [24] and whatever may be the form of the stipulations.[25]

b. Test of Jurisdiction — (1) Rule Stated. With respect to admiralty jurisdiction over contracts, the true criterion is the nature and subject-matter

3,704), but it has been held that admiralty has jurisdiction of a suit by the mortgagee of a vessel, after condition broken, to reclaim possession from a purchaser at a sheriff's sale under a judgment against a mortgagor (The J. B. Lunt, 13 Fed. Cas. No. 7,246, 11 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 137).

Where a bill of sale of a vessel is given as collateral security for the repayment of a loan or as indemnity against loss on a contingent payment of obligations assumed for the vendor, the contract will be treated as a mortgage, and admiralty will not assume jurisdiction. The Ella J. Slaymaker, 28 Fed. 767.

Injunction.— A court of admiralty has no power to grant an injunction preventing defendants from enforcing a claim against a cargo. Paterson v. Dakin, 31 Fed. 682.

Partition suit.—An equitable action by one part-owner of a boat against another part-owner, for a partition of the boat by a sale and for an accounting, is not a civil cause of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction within U. S. Rev. Stat. (1878), § 563, giving the district court of the United States exclusive jurisdiction thereof. Swain v. Knapp, 32 Minn. 429, 21 N. W. 414; Andrews v. Betts, 8 Hun (N. Y.) 322.

Reformation of instrument.—An admiralty court has no jurisdiction of an action to reform a contract. Meyer v. Pacific Mail Steamship Co., 58 Fed. 923; Williams v. Providence Washington Ins. Co., 56 Fed. 159; Andrews v. Essex F. & M. Ins. Co., 3 Mason (U. S.) 6, 1 Fed. Cas. No. 374.

Specific performance.— Admiralty has no jurisdiction to enforce the specific performance of a contract. The Steamer Eclipse, 135 U. S. 599, 10 S. Ct. 873, 34 L. ed. 269 [affirming Rea v. Steamboat Eclipse, 4 Dak. 218, 30 N. No. 374; Montgomery v. Henry, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 49, 1 Am. Dec. 223.

Trusts.— Admiralty has no direct jurisdiction over trusts, although they may relate to maritime affairs. The Steamer Eclipse, 135 U. S. 599, 10 S. Ct. 873, 34 L. ed. 269 [affirming Rea v. Steamboat Eclipse, 4 Dak. 218, 30 N. W. 159]; Davis v. Child, 2 Ware (U. S.) 78, 7 Fed. Cas. No. 3,628.

Enforcing award or common-law judgment. — An award of arbitrators for damages cannot be enforced in admiralty though the libellant alleges that he was induced by misrepresentation to sign the agreement for arbitration and had no notice of the hearing (The Union, 20 Fed. 539), nor can a judgment against the master of a vessel, recovered in an action for wages in a common-law court, be enforced against either the vessel or its owner in admiralty (Assign v. The G. B. Lamar, 2 Fed. Cas. No. 593*a*).

Taxes.— Admiralty has no jurisdiction of a claim for state and county taxes assessed against a steamboat. The Bradich Johnson, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1,770, 10 Chic. Leg. N. 353.

Contract made on land.— If the subject-matter of a contract relates to navigation of the sea, though it be made on land, admiralty has jurisdiction. Zane v. The Brig President, 4 Wash. (U. S.) 453, 30 Fed. Cas. No. 18,201. But see Pritchard v. Schooner Lady Horatia, Bee Adm. 167, 19 Fed. Cas. No. 11,438, to the effect that admiralty has no jurisdiction of a contract for repairs to a vessel made on land, where the owners were represented on the spot by a consignee who had funds.

But see Bains v. The Schooner James and Catharine, Baldw. (U. S.) 544, 2 Fed. Cas. No. 756, to the effect that article 7 of the amendments to the constitution, providing that the right of trial by jury shall be preserved, and that no fact tried by a jury shall be otherwise examined in any court of the United States than according to the rules of the common law, excludes the jurisdiction of admiralty over contracts regulated by the common law. Suits upon such contracts are appropriately suits at common law within the terms of the amendment, and are cognizable only in courts of common law.

thereof.[26] To come within the jurisdiction, the contract must concern transportation by sea, relate to navigation or maritime employment, or be one of navigation and commerce on navigable waters,[27] but it is not essential that it be attended by a lien.[28] A mere preliminary contract, however, though of a character

A lease of a wharf is not a maritime contract, but is a contract relating to realty, and is not therefore cognizable in a court of admiralty. Upper Steamboat Co. v. Blake, 2 App. Cas. (D. C.) 51. But see Clifford v. U. S., 34 Ct. Cl. 223, to the effect that a wharf, though standing on the land, comes within admiralty jurisdiction.

Collection of freights.— A contract by which respondent, as a ship-broker, agreed to collect certain freights earned by a vessel, and to divide the same with libellant, in consideration that the latter would not contest a claim filed by respondent against the vessel in pending proceedings in which she was libeled, is not maritime, and a suit for its enforcement cannot be maintained in a court of admiralty. Skinner v. Harris, 98 Fed. 442.

Constituting person general agent.—A contract constituting a person general passenger and freight agent of a steamship, and giving him entire control of her passenger and freight business, is not a maritime contract, and a suit in rem in admiralty will not lie for a breach of such contract. The Humboldt, 86 Fed. 351.

Contract between passenger and master.— A contract between a passenger and the master of a vessel is a personal contract not cognizable in admiralty. Brackett v. The Hercules, Gilp. (U. S.) 184, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1,762.

Contract to care for minor son.—Admiralty has no jurisdiction of a libel in personam for breach of a contract whereby defendant agreed that libellant's minor son should go on a sea voyage, and render services without receiving compensation therefor, but have careful and tender usage, the libel alleging that by reason of defendant's misconduct and ill treatment libellant's son died, and that libellant thereby lost the services, comfort, and society of his son. Plummer v. Webb, 4 Mason (U. S.) 380, 19 Fed. Cas. No. 11,233.

Money advanced for railroad charges.—An agreement to reimburse libellant for money advanced to pay railroad charges is not a maritime contract and cannot be enforced in admiralty. Pacific Coast Steamship Co. v. Ferguson, 76 Fed. 993, 44 U. S. App. 708, 22 C. C. A. 671; Pacific Coast Steamship Co. v. Moore, 70 Fed. 870.

Money advanced to pay crew.— A contract made with the owners of a vessel used in navigating the waters of the state, whereby money was advanced to them and used in paying the wages of the boat's crew, is not such a maritime contract as will give the United States district court exclusive jurisdiction thereof and oust the jurisdiction of the state courts. Cavender v. Steamboat Fanny Barker, 40 Mo. 235. But where seamen for a yacht are procured by shipping-agents at the master's request, sign articles, and at the master's request are supplied with board until the master may call for them, but are afterward discharged, the shipping-agent's services and supplies are maritime and within the jurisdiction of a court of admiralty. Haveron v. Goelet, 88 Fed. 301.

Personal contract of agent of ship.—Where a libel was filed in personam against the agents of a foreign ship in New York, who had personally promised the libellants to pay for a previous loss through the breach of a charter-party, the agents not being owners or personally liable for the damage aside from the new promise, it was held, upon exceptions to the libel, that the agent's personal contract was not a maritime contract of which the admiralty had jurisdiction. Fox v. Patton, 22 Fed. 746.

Purchasing vessel and traveling with her. — A claim against the owner of a vessel for services in purchasing her and in traveling on her, looking after the owner's interests, but having no control over or concern in the navigation of the vessel, and for advances to the master and vessel as the owner's agent, is not within the jurisdiction of admiralty. Doolittle v. Knobeloch, 39 Fed. 40.

Sale of cargo on shore.— Where a master was instructed, in his home port, to sell a cargo at the port of destination according to his judgment, and he landed the cargo there and proceeded to dispose of it on shore, this was not a maritime contract cognizable in an admiralty court. Waterbury v. Myrick, Blatchf. & H. Adm. 34, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,253.

Storage.— The storage of sails when stripped from the vessel is not a service pertaining to her navigation, and a claim for such storage is not a subject of admiralty jurisdiction, either by proceedings in rem or in personam (Hubbard v. Roach, 9 Biss. (U. S.) 375, 2 Fed. 393) nor is a contract for the storage of cargo at the end of the voyage (The Richard Winslow, 71 Fed. 426, 34 U. S. App. 542, 18 C. C. A. 344 [affirming 67 Fed. 259]; The Pulaski, 33 Fed. 383).

eventually leading to a maritime contract, is not within the jurisdiction of the admiralty.[29]

(II) Contract Partly Non-Maritime. Where a maritime contract is so inseparably connected with a contract over which the court has no jurisdiction that one cannot be decided without disposing of the other, admiralty has no jurisdiction,[30] but the jurisdiction is not defeated by the fact that some incidental matters are to be performed on land.[31]

c. Executory Agreements. While maritime contracts remain executory no liens arise thereunder against the vessel or cargo for breach thereof,[32] but admiralty will entertain jurisdiction of actions in personam for such breach.[33] Where, however, the contract has been partly executed, a lien arises and will be enforced by proceedings in rem for failure to perform the remainder of the contract.[34]

d. Particular Contracts — (I) Bottomry and Hypothecation. Bottomry bonds, or bonds executed as a hypothecation of a vessel and her cargo, are cognizable in admiralty, whether given by the master in a foreign port under circumstances of necessity and when he is unable to communicate with the owners and raise money on their credit,[35] or by the owners themselves in the home or a foreign port, where there is an express pledge as security and the money is used and intended to be used for the safety of the ship or the purposes of a voyage.[36]

Contract to purchase cargo.— Admiralty will not take cognizance of a libel for a breach of a contract to purchase a cargo for a vessel with her funds, although such contract is contained in a charter-party stipulating for the carriage of the cargo. Peck v. Laughlin, 14 Phila. (Pa.) 531, 37 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 18, 19 Fed. Cas. No. 10,890, 21 Alb. L. J. 94, 8 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 188.

Implied hypothecation.— Admiralty has jurisdiction of a claim by the owner of goods

(II) Building Contracts—(A) In General. Admiralty jurisdiction does not extend to contracts for building a ship or supplying materials for her construction,[37] even when the work is performed or the materials are supplied after she is launched.[38] Where, however, a vessel is altered and fitted up for a different trade from that for which she was originally designed, work done and materials furnished therefor will be taken as having been furnished for repairs and not for construction, even where the expenditure is large as compared with the value of the vessel, and admiralty will take jurisdiction of a claim therefor.[39]

(B) State Statutory Lien. In respect to such contracts it is competent for the states to create such liens as their legislatures may deem just and expedient, not amounting to a regulation of commerce, and to enact reasonable rules and regulations, prescribing the mode of their enforcement, not inconsistent with the exclusive jurisdiction of the admiralty courts;[40] but such a lien created sold by the master in a foreign port to obtain means of repairing damages to the vessel suffered on the high seas. Bulgin v. Sloop Rainbow, Bee Adm. 116, 4 Fed. Cas. No. 2,116.

Necessity for loan.—Admiralty jurisdiction in cases of bottomry is not affected by the fact that the bond was given by the owner for an object not indispensable. It is not the absolute necessity of the loan that gives jurisdiction. The Sloop Mary, 1 Paine (U. S.) 671, 16 Fed. Cas. No. 9,187. Bond to secure performance.— Where a steamboat was hired by written contract for a year for the purpose of carrying passengers and freight, the charterer to navigate, man, and control her, bear all expenses of navigation, supplies, insurance, and repairs, keep her free from liens, and pay the owner a fixed sum monthly for her use, and, in case of loss, the gross sum of $8,000, and the charterer secured performance of his engagement by giving a bond with sureties for $8,000, it was held that admiralty would entertain jurisdiction of a suit on the bond although the contract differed in phraseology and form from agreements usual in shipping transactions, it being, nevertheless, a maritime contract. Haller v. Fox, 51 Fed. 298.

Charter of vessel not in existence.— The letting by charter of a vessel not in existence, but "to be built," is a maritime contract as respects the voyages to be made under it and the guaranties it contains as to speed and draft; and a court of admiralty has jurisdiction of a libel for the breach of such warranties after the vessel is built and delivered. The Baracoa, 44 Fed. 102.

Stipulation not embraced in charter-party.— A libel in rem cannot be maintained by charterers against a vessel for a cause of action founded upon a stipulation or condition of the hiring not embraced in the charter-party, or for misrepresentations or concealment of facts in respect to the tonnage or capacity of the vessel by the master or owners, leading to the charter-party. See 1 Cent. Dig. tit. "Admiralty," § 156 et seq.

Damages occurring on wharf.— On a libel for the value of goods which were to be shipped on claimant's vessel, but were destroyed on the pier before lading, the contract of affreightment, the basis of the ship's liability, being a maritime contract, an additional stipulation for insurance while the goods were on the wharf cannot oust the jurisdiction of the admiralty. Rosenthal v. The Louisiana, 37 Fed. 264. See also Vose v. Allen, 3 Blatchf. (U. S.) 289, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 17,006, where the consignee of a cargo of iron shipped on freight refused to have anything to do with its delivery at the wharf where the master was delivering it, and the master overloaded the wharf so that it broke down, and a portion of the iron was lost, and the ship-owner was held responsible for the loss to the consignee, who had made advances on the consignment.

Deviation.— A libel in rem may be maintained for damages to a cargo of grain caused by deviation in violation of a condition that no other cargo should be taken and that the vessel should proceed directly to its destination. Knox v. The Schooner Ninetta, Crabbe (U. S.) 534, 14 Fed. Cas. No. 7,912.

Unseaworthiness of vessel.— A shipper, after discovering that the vessel upon which the cargo was laden is unseaworthy, may maintain a libel in rem for the non-performance of the contract, and to recover the cargo where it is wrongfully withheld (The Director, 26 Fed. 708) or for damages to the cargo (The New York, 93 Fed. 495).

Libel for freight.— An action for the recovery of freight lies in admiralty in favor of the master of a ship, against the consignee of cargo, equally in personam and in rem.

(2) In Part on Land. Admiralty has jurisdiction in case of loss, in the course of water transit, of goods shipped to inland points under a contract for through transportation,[44] but not unless the transportation on land is expressly contracted for in the shipping contract.[45]

(3) Supplemental Contracts. Where, in a contract for the transportation of goods, the vessel agrees to collect the price, advances, and freight charges on the goods from the consignee and repay them to the shipper, admiralty has jurisdiction of such supplemental contract;[46] but where the owner and master of a vessel contracts to carry the cargo to its destination, and there sell it and return the proceeds to the consignor less the freight, the vessel cannot be libeled for the proceeds of such sale, and a court of admiralty has no jurisdiction to enforce the contract.[47]

(B) Of Passengers. Contracts for the transportation by water of passengers and their baggage, and all injuries thereto, are within the admiralty jurisdiction.[48]

(IV) Demurrage. Admiralty jurisdiction extends to claims for demurrage or compensation for the wrongful detention of a vessel.[49]

(V) Dockage. Contracts for dockage are of a maritime character, and are within the jurisdiction of admiralty.[50]

(VI) Lockage and Tolls. A claim for lockage in a public navigable river,[51] or for tolls imposed by a state statute in favor of corporations organized for the improvement of rivers and harbors,[52] is cognizable in admiralty.

Courts of admiralty have full jurisdiction also, as incidental to proceedings in rem, to decree freight to the ship-owner in proper cases. The Ship Nathaniel Hooper, 3 Sumn. (U. S.) 542, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 10,032.

Implied contract to receipt for goods.— Where a dispute arose between the captain of a schooner and the libellant's agent respecting the quantity of wire delivered to such schooner, in consequence of which a clean receipt therefor was refused and the schooner sailed away with the wire on board, it was held that the implied obligation of the schooner to give such receipt is a maritime obligation within the jurisdiction of the admiralty. The W. A. Morrell, 27 Fed. 570.

44. Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Erie, etc., Transp. Co., 10 Biss. (U. S.) 18, 19 Fed. Cas. No. 11,112.

See 1 Cent. Dig. tit. "Admiralty," § 159.

49. Brown v. Certain Tons of Coal, 34 Fed. 913; Sheppard v. Philadelphia Butchers' Ice Co., 21 Fed. Cas. No. 12,757, 3 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 565.

50. The Vidal Sala, 12 Fed. 207; Wortman v. Griffith, 3 Blatchf. (U. S.) 528, 30 Fed. Cas. No. 18,057. But see Ransom v. Mayo, 3 Blatchf. (U. S.) 70, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11,571, to the effect that an action in personam will not lie to recover damages for injury to a vessel through the negligence of a ship-builder in hauling her up on the ways, when the contract for repairs is made on land, to be performed in a ship-yard.

Work done in dry-dock preliminary to repairs.— Work done upon a vessel in the dry-dock, in scraping her bottom preparatory to coppering her, is not of a maritime character, and compensation for such labor cannot be recovered in admiralty. Bradley v. Bolles, Abb. Adm. 569, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1,773.

51. Monongahela Nav. Co. v. The Steam Tug Bob Connell, 1 Fed. 218.

(VIII) Novation. A new contract or promise made by novation as a substitute for and in consideration of a former contract or liability which was maritime in character is not on that account sufficient to give a court of admiralty jurisdiction thereof;[55] but the mere acceptance of notes in liquidation of a maritime claim or as collateral security therefor, when not taken as payment thereof, does not so change the debt as to take it out of the admiralty jurisdiction, and the original cause of action may therefore be enforced in the admiralty court.[56]

(IX) Partnership. Admiralty has no jurisdiction of a contract of partnership to engage in maritime commerce.[57]

(X) Pilotage and Consortship. Admiralty has jurisdiction of suits for pilotage fees, including claims for half pilotage,[58] and over an action for breach of

53. New England Mut. Mar. Ins. Co. v. Dunham, 11 Wall. (U. S.) 1, 20 L. ed. 90; The Guiding Star, 9 Fed. 521; De Lovio v. Boit, 2 Gall. (U. S.) 398, 7 Fed. Cas. No. 3,776.

Suit based on fraudulent negotiations.— A suit brought upon a policy of marine insurance, where the loss occurred outside of the express limits of the policy and the complaint is based upon alleged false and fraudulent negotiations leading up to the making of the policy, is not within the jurisdiction of a court of admiralty. Williams v. Providence Washington Ins. Co., 56 Fed. 159.

54. Cutler v. Rae, 7 How. (U. S.) 729, 12 L. ed. 890; National Board of Mar. Underwriters v. Melchers, 45 Fed. 643; Coast Wrecking Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co., 20 Blatchf. (U. 56. Sheafe v. Kimball, 21 Fed. Cas. No. 12,729*a*.

Note amounting to payment.— Whether a note taken for a maritime claim is a bar to the admiralty jurisdiction depends upon the effect which the note has upon the original contract by the laws of the place where it is made. If it discharges it, it puts an end to the admiralty jurisdiction, and the surrender of the note cannot renew the original debt for the purpose of restoring the admiralty jurisdiction over it. Reppert v. Robinson, Taney (U. S.) 492, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11,703. And see Ramsay v. Allegre, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 611, 6 L. ed. 746 (to the effect that where the owner of a ship has given a negotiable note for supplies furnished in her home port, a suit in personam in the admiralty cannot be maintained against him by the materialman if the local law gives no specific lien on the ship, especially if such note be not given up or offered to be given up) and Marshall v. Bazin, 16 Fed. Cas. No. 9,125, 7 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 342 (to the effect that taking personal security for a demand against a passenger by promissory note or bill of exchange will be regarded as a waiver of the remedy in admiralty and bar proceedings while such security remains outstanding).

But see The Harriet, 1 Sprague (U. S.) 33, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 6,098 (wherein it was held that a seaman taking the note of the master, not negotiable, and giving a receipt for his wages, and putting the note in suit, is not thereby precluded from proceeding by libel against the vessel for his wages), and The Gate City, 5 Biss. (U. S.) 200, 10 Fed. Cas. No. 5,267 (holding that a seaman's lien is not waived by receiving notes on settling attachment proceedings under state law, where they afterward become worthless).

57. Ward v. Thompson, 22 How. (U. S.) 330, 16 L. ed. 249 [reversing Newb. Adm. 95, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,162]; Turner v. Beacham, Taney (U. S.) 583, 24 Fed. Cas. But where the libellant was master and also a co-owner of a whaling-vessel, it was held that after the voyage had been made up and the amount due for his lay ascertained, and the proceeds of the voyage were in the hands of the other owners, the libellant was entitled to recover, in admiralty, the amount due him as master, notwithstanding his co-ownership. Dexter v. Munroe, 2 Sprague (U. S.) 39, 7 Fed. Cas. No. 3,863.

58. Ex p. Hagar, 104 U. S. 520, 26 L. ed. 816; Hobart v. Drogan, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 108, 9 L. ed. 363; The Bark Alaska, 3 Ben. (U. S.) 391, 1 Fed. Cas. No. 129; The Brig America, I Lowell (U. (Pa.) 369, 32 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 420.

Claim for half pilotage.— Where the pilot law provides that an offer of pilot service, if refused, shall entitle the pilot to half pilotage, such offer and refusal, in law, create an obligation or contract to pay such half pilotage, which may be enforced in the admiralty against the owner or vessel. The Glenearne, 7 Sawy. (U. S.) 200, 7 Fed. 604; The Schooner Kalmar, 10 Ben. (U. S.) 242, 14 Fed. Cas. No. 7,601; Banta v. McNeil, 5 Ben. (U. S.) 74, 2 Fed. Cas. No. 966; The California, 1 Sawy. an agreement of consortship between the masters of two vessels engaged in the business of wrecking.[59]

(XI) Proctor's Costs and Fees. A proctor may maintain a suit in admiralty for his costs or fees.[60]

(XII) Services On or About Vessel or Cargo—(A) By Seamen. Admiralty has jurisdiction over contracts for the services of seamen,[61] but to justify a person employed on a vessel in suing in admiralty the services rendered must be essentially maritime.[62]

Statute making consignee liable.— A state statute which provides that in a certain contingency the consignee shall also be liable for pilotage does not affect the jurisdiction in admiralty, but only gives an additional remedy against a third person. The George S. Wright, Deady (U. S.) 591, 10 Fed. Cas. No. 5,340.

59. Andrews v. Wall, 3 How. (U. S.) 568, 11 L. ed. 729.

No. 6,001; Abbott v. The Baltimore, etc., Steam Packet Co., 1 Md. Ch. 542.

A father may sue in admiralty for the wages of his minor son earned on a maritime voyage. Plummer v. Webb, 4 Mason (U. S.) 380, 19 Fed. Cas. No. 11,233.

Claim by seaman for expenses during sickness.— Admiralty has jurisdiction to enforce the payment of expenses for curing a sick seaman in the course of a voyage. Harden v. Gordon, 2 Mason (U. S.) 541, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 6,047.

Contract for particular purpose.— A contract by the master employing another as nominal master for a particular purpose may be sued on in admiralty as to the wages stipulated, but not as to a further stipulation for an additional sum in case the voyage should be altered or discontinued. L'Arina v. Manwaring, Bee Adm. 199, 14 Fed. Cas. No. 8,089.

Services rendered on wrecked vessel for the purpose of fitting her up and making her ready for further use in navigation are maritime. Gilchrist v. Godman, 79 Fed. 970; The Progresso, 46 Fed. 292; The Old Natchez, 9 Fed. 476. But see The Steamer Propeller M. M. Caleb, 9 Ben. (U. S.) 152, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 9,682 (to the effect that admiralty has no jurisdiction of a claim for wages of a seaman for the time he was engaged in repairing a vessel which had been sunk in port and raised again), and Sturgis v. The Oregon, 23 Fed. Cas. Nos. 13,577, 13,576*b* (holding that admiralty has no jurisdiction of a claim for services rendered in the port of New York to a vessel on the rocks, and materials furnished in aid thereof under employment by the owners in charge to assist them, where the vessel was owned in New York, and regularly employed as a passenger boat between that state and Connecticut, the libellants having no possession thereof as salvors and not undertaking the work on the footing of salvage services).

Share of earnings of fishing voyage.— Suits may be maintained either at law or in admiralty for shares or proportions of earnings in fishing-voyages, such shares being the measure of the amount of wages. Duryee v. Elkins, Abb. Adm. 529, 8 Fed. Cas. No. 4,197; Macomber v. Thompson, 1 Sumn. (U. S.) 384, 16 Fed. Cas. No. 8,919.

Admiralty also has jurisdiction to decree the bounty allowed to persons employed in the cod-fishery, and a claim therefor may be united with a claim for an account of the fish taken. The Lucy Anne, 3 Ware (U. S.) 253, 15 Fed. Cas. No. 8,596.

62. The Steam-Boat Thomas Jefferson, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 428, 6 L. ed. 358; Thackarey v. The Farmer of Salem, Gilp. (U. S.) 524, 23 Fed. Cas. No. 13,852.

What services are maritime.— To be a maritime contract, it is not enough that the service is to be done on the sea; it must be connected with the reparation or betterment of the vessel, or be rendered in aid of her navigation directly by labor on the vessel, or in sustenance and relief of those who conduct her operations at sea. Gurney v. Crockett, Abb. Adm. 490, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 5,874; The Ship Harriet, Olc. Adm. 229, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 6,097; The Coal Boat D. C. Salisbury, Olc. Adm. 71, 7 Fed. Cas. No. 3,694; Thackarey v. The Farmer of Salem, Gilp. (U. S.) 524, 23 Fed. Cas. No. 13,852; Trainer v. The Boat Superior, Gilp. (U. S.) 514, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,136. Neither the extent of the voyage, nor the nature of the business or trade carried on by the vessel, provided it be of a maritime character, will prevent seamen from resorting to admiralty to recover their wages where their services are of the character above indicated. The Atlantic, 53 Fed. 607; The W. F. Brown, 46 Fed. 290; Disbrow v. The Walsh Brothers, 36 Fed. 607; Hart v. The Enterprise, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 6,151. 3 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 172; Lee v. Guardian L. Ins. Co., 15 Fed. Cas. No. 8,190, 5 Big. Ins. Cas. 18, 2 Centr. L. J. 495, 5 Ins. L. J. 26; The Steamer May Queen, 1 Sprague

(B) By Ship-Keeper or Watchman. Admiralty will not entertain jurisdiction of claims for services by a ship-keeper, or watchman, while the vessel is in her home port, where his sole duty is to remain aboard, or to visit the vessel at anchorage from time to time and see to her safety;[63] but where it is a part of his duty to get the vessel under way and navigate her from place to place as circumstances from time to time demand, his services are maritime and are within the jurisdiction of admiralty.[64]

(C) By Stevedore. The services of stevedores in loading or unloading a vessel are maritime in character, and claims therefor are within the admiralty jurisdiction,[65] although the contrary has been held in many cases.[66]

(XIII) Supplies and Repairs—(A) In General. Contracts for furnishing supplies to or making repairs on vessels engaged in commerce or navigation, or loans of money for such purposes, are within the jurisdiction of admiralty, whether furnished in a foreign port[67] or in the vessel's home port.[68]

(U. S.) 588, 16 Fed. Cas. No. 9,360; The Sloop Canton, 1 Sprague (U. S.) 437, 5 Fed. Cas. No. 2,388.

Master's services as factor.—No suit for services performed by the master as a factor, or in any other character except that of master, is cognizable in the admiralty. Willard v. Dorr, 3 Mason (U. S.) 161, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,680.

Musicians on board of a vessel, who are hired and employed as such, cannot enforce the payment of their wages by a suit in rem in admiralty. Trainer v. The Boat Superior, Gilp. (U. S.) 514, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,136.

Performers in a show given on a float at points on the Mississippi river cannot recover for their services in an admiralty court. The W. F. Brown, 46 Fed. 290.

Services in procuring crew.—Admiralty has no jurisdiction of a suit by shipping-masters to recover for services in procuring a crew to navigate a vessel from one port to another in the same state. Scott v. The Morning Glory, Hoffm. Op. 448, 21 Fed. Cas. No. 12,542.

Services rendered in port.—A contract to work at a certain rate per day in port, in putting in machinery in a vessel, is not a maritime contract and will not support an action in rem in admiralty (Walter v. The Kamchatker, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,119), and services rendered by a fireman on board a British ship while at the dock at Liverpool do not give to the demand for wages a maritime character of which admiralty can take cognizance (Graham v. Hoskins, Olc. Adm. 224, 10 Fed. Cas. No. 5,669).

63. Gurney v. Crockett, Abb. Adm. 490, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 5,874; Russell v. Barkman, 21 Fed. Cas. No. 12,151; The Ship Harriet, Olc. Adm. 229, 11 Fed. Cas. Bain, 20 Fed. 389; The Canada, 7 Sawy. (U. S.) 173, 7 Fed. 119; The Senator, 21 Fed. 191; The George T. Kemp, 2 Lowell (U. S.) 477, 10 Fed. Cas. No. 5,341.

Preparations for loading or delivering.—The services of a cooper in preparing a cargo for delivery (The Bark Onore, 6 Ben. (U. S.) 564, 18 Fed. Cas. No. 10,538) or of a compress company in compressing cotton and putting it on board (The Wivanhoe, 26 Fed. 927. Contra, United Hydraulic Cotton-Press Co. v. The Alexander McNeil, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,404, 20 Int. Rev. Rec. 175; The Bark Joseph Cunard, Olc. Adm. 120, 13 Fed. Cas. No. 7,535), the weighing, inspecting, and measuring of a cargo (Constantine v. The Schooner River Queen, 2 Fed. 731), and the removal of ballast for the purpose of putting a vessel in condition to receive a cargo (Roberts v. The Bark Windermere, 2 Fed. 722), are all maritime services and are within the admiralty jurisdiction.

66. Danace v. The Magnolia, 37 Fed. 367; Paul v. The Bark Ilex, 2 Woods (U. S.) 229, 18 Fed. Cas. No. 10,842; Coyne v. The Alexander McNeil, 6 Fed. Cas. No. 3,312*a*, 20 Int. Rev. Distinction between ports.—So far as the remedy in admiralty for repairs and supplies is concerned, there is no distinction between a port in this country other than the home port and the port of a foreign country. Whitlock v. The Barque Thales, 20 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 447, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,578.

(B) General Contract for Supplies. A contract with the owners to supply their vessels for the period of a year with all the provisions they might require while in the port where the supplies are to be furnished is not a maritime contract, and a court of admiralty has no jurisdiction of a suit for damages for its breach by the ship-owners.[69]

(XIV) TOWAGE. A contract for towage is a maritime contract which may be sued in admiralty.[70]

(XV) VESSEL-HIRE. Admiralty has jurisdiction of contracts for the employment of vessels upon navigable waters.[71]

(XVI) WHARFAGE. A claim for wharfage of a sea-going vessel is of maritime cognizance.[72]

3. LIENS — a. In General. Admiralty has a general jurisdiction to enforce maritime liens.[73]

b. Lien Created by State Statute. Although a state statute cannot confer jurisdiction on a federal court, it may give a right to which, other things permitting, such a court may give effect,[74] and in many cases, therefore, admiralty will Breach as to quality of supplies.— A contract for supplies to a vessel being a maritime contract, a court of admiralty has jurisdiction to give damages for a breach of the contract as to the quality of the supplies furnished, or for misrepresentations, or for other breaches in the performance of it. The Electron, 48 Fed. 689.

Manner of vessel's employment immaterial. — The jurisdiction in admiralty over a contract for repairs or supplies to a vessel depends upon her character, and not upon the manner in which she is actually employed. Reppert v. Robinson, Taney (U. S.) 492, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11,703.

recorded in the parish where the property to be affected is situated, the failure to record a privilege claimed under a state statute for repairs and supplies furnished at the home port will prevent the enforcement of the lien, even if the federal court otherwise had jurisdiction. The Lottawanna, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 558, 22 L. ed. 654.

Lien dependent upon seizure.— Where the local law provides for proceedings in rem against domestic vessels, but gives no lien before seizure, admiralty has no jurisdiction, under Admiralty Rule 12, which provides that proceedings in rem may be had in the admiralty courts against domestic ships " when by the local law a lien is given." Wick v. The Schooner Samuel Strong, 6 McLean (U. S.) 587, Newb. Adm. 187, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,607. And see Price v. Frankel, 1 Wash. Terr. 33, to the effect that admiralty had no jurisdiction under the California statute in force in 1857, relating to enforcing liabilities against vessels for supplies and materials furnished in the state, which gave no lien until the institution of the proceeding authorized created the lien.

Lien divested by state law.— A materialman whose only lien is given by a state law, and has by that law been divested, is not entitled to sue in the United States courts. The Whistler, 30 Fed. 199; Ashbrook v. The Steamer Golden Gate, Newb. Adm. 296, 2 Fed. Cas. No. 574. But see The Barque Chusan, 2 Story (U. S.) 455, 5 Fed. Cas. No. 2,717, holding that in a proceeding against a foreign vessel for materials furnished, that clause in the New York statute (relative to liens on any vessel within the state) providing that the lien thereby given shall cease when the ship has left the state cannot be invoked, as the federal courts, in the exercise of admiralty jurisdiction, are governed solely by the legislation of congress.

An unconstitutional power to state courts to proceed in rem to enforce the lien will not affect the right of the admiralty court to enforce it. The Illinois, 2 Flipp. (U. S.) 383, 12 Fed. Cas. No. 7,005; The John Farron, 14 Blatchf. (U. S.) 24, 13 Fed. Cas. No. 7,341.

Not bound by priority.— A lien given by the local law for supplies furnished by materialmen in the home port will be enforced in admiralty, but the admiralty court is not bound by the priority given it. Schuchardt v. The Angelique, 21 Fed. Cas. No. 12,483*b*.

Power to order sale of vessel.—Though the New York act of May 8, 1869, providing for the enforcement of the liens of mechanics, workmen, etc., by the sale of the chattel, does not authorize a state court to order the sale of a vessel to enforce a shipwright's lien, admiralty may give effect to the statute by causing the vessel to be sold. The B. F. Woolsey, 7 Fed. 108.

Prior to May 1, 1859, Admiralty Rule 12 authorized a procedure in rem to enforce a lien given by the local law upon a vessel for supplies or repairs in a domestic port (The Steamer St. Lawrence, 1 Black (U. S.) 522, 17 L. ed. 180), but on that date the rule was changed so as to provide for proceedings in rem or in personam to enforce liens for supplies and repairs to foreign ships, and " proceedings in personam, but not in rem," for supplies, etc., to domestic ships. In 1872, however, the rule was changed again, so as to provide that in all suits for supplies the libellant may proceed against the ship in rem, or against the master, etc., in personam. The Lottawanna, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 558, 22 L. ed. 654. Between the first and last mentioned dates a proceeding in rem could not be maintained to enforce a local lien for supplies and repairs to a ship in a domestic port. The Lottawanna, 21 Wall. (U. c. Lien Given by Law of Foreign Nation. The courts of admiralty may enforce a lien given by the maritime law of a foreign jurisdiction, notwithstanding the parties are foreigners.[77]

4. Penalties and Forfeitures — a. In General. Under various acts of congress for the regulation of shipping and navigation and the protection of the revenue, imposing penalties and forfeitures for their violation, the courts of admiralty have been given exclusive jurisdiction to enforce such penalties and forfeitures by seizure of the offending vessels and cargoes.[78] They have no jurisdiction, however, of libels in personam against the owner or master of a vessel for the recovery of penalties incurred by a violation of shipping regulations as to passengers[79] or inspection of vessels,[80] although a libel in rem may be maintained therefor.[81]

b. Necessity for Seizure — (1) In General. Under the judiciary act of 1789 the admiralty jurisdiction in cases of seizures for forfeitures does not attach until after the seizure is made, and the seizure must subsist when the libel is filed.[82]

S.) 315, 11 Fed. 171, to the effect that the jurisdiction of a court of admiralty to enforce a lien for the penalty, on failure of the master to notify of its arrival or enter the manifest required by law, does not depend upon seizure of the vessel before libel brought.

Waiver of seizure by executing delivery bond.— The execution of a delivery bond by the owner of a vessel, in a proceeding in rem for a penalty or forfeiture, is a waiver of objection to the want of a prior seizure.

(II) Revenue Cases. In revenue cases the admiralty has jurisdiction[83] although the property seized may never have come into the possession of its officers.[84]

c. Place of Seizure — (I) In General. Admiralty has jurisdiction of cases of seizure and forfeiture without the limits of any district,[85] but the jurisdiction does not extend to seizures on land,[86] although, where part of the cargo seized has been landed, jurisdiction will be taken thereof as well as of the vessel and the remainder of the cargo.[87]

(II) Of Foreign Vessel. Foreign vessels cannot be seized by the officers of another country for the breach of a municipal regulation thereof beyond the limits of its territorial jurisdiction, except upon the high seas, and a seizure made within the territory of another nation cannot give jurisdiction to courts of admiralty.[88]

(III) Jurisdiction Depends On. The admiralty court sitting in the district where the seizure is made,[89] or into which the vessel is brought after seizure,[90] and not that in which the offense was committed, has jurisdiction of proceedings in rem for the alleged forfeiture.

d. Legality of Seizure. The question as to whether a seizure for a forfeiture under the laws of the United States is rightful or not must be decided exclusively by the admiralty courts, and their decrees thereon are final.[91]

e. Reseizure. A vessel which is seized under a libel of forfeiture for violation of the revenue laws, and is released on bond, is subject to reseizure in a different district under a libel alleging other violations committed during the same period and before the previous seizure.[92]

No jurisdiction to enforce payment of duties.— A lien for duties cannot be enforced by a libel in admiralty, as the revenue jurisdiction of district courts proceeding in rem is confined to seizures for forfeitures under the laws of impost. Suits for property seized by customs officers.— The owner of a vessel or property wrongfully seized by a collector of customs may maintain a suit for possession thereof and for damages against him notwithstanding that U. S. Rev. Stat. (1878), § 934, provides that all property seized under authority of any revenue law of the United States shall be irrepleviable, and shall be deemed to be in the custody of the law and subject only to the orders and decrees of the courts of the United States having jurisdiction thereof. In re Fassett, 142 U. 5. Prize Cases — a. In General. In England the admiralty court has no jurisdiction in prize cases except by special commission, which is always issued at the outbreak of a war and continues in force until the close thereof,[93] but in the United States the jurisdiction of the admiralty courts in such cases is permanent and exclusive, being conferred by the judiciary act of 1789 under the constitutional grant of admiralty jurisdiction.[94]

b. Damages for Unlawful Capture. Where the court of the captor nation has declared the capture to be unlawful, the admiralty court of the nation to which the captured vessel belonged will entertain jurisdiction of a libel in rem against the capturing vessel to recover damages for the unlawful seizure.[95]

c. Distribution of Prize-Money. Admiralty has jurisdiction in cases of claims made by seamen to shares of prizes.[96]

d. Ransom Bills. Admiralty has exclusive jurisdiction to entertain suits on ransom bills.[97]

e. Locality of Capture — (I) What Court Has Jurisdiction. According to the law of nations the capture of a hostile vessel can lawfully be made only upon navigable waters and within the territorial jurisdiction of the belligerents, or upon the high seas, and admiralty courts of the capturing power have exclusive jurisdiction over vessels thus captured, and of all questions incident thereto.[98] Neither of the belligerents can establish prize courts in a neutral country, nor can their home courts exercise jurisdiction therein except in pursuance of treaties,[99] though they may hold their courts in the country of an ally,[1] nor will the courts of a neutral nation assume jurisdiction of prize matters of foreign nations occurring upon high seas.[2]

(II) Within Jurisdiction of Neutral Nation. Where a vessel is captured in violation of the laws of neutrality and is brought within the territory of a neutral nation, its courts will restore the prize to the original owner and without assessing damages against the captors, aside from the costs and expenses of the trial.[3]

f. Control of Property Not Essential. It is not necessary to the jurisdiction of a prize court that the property captured should be within its actual control.[4]

6. Proceedings to Limit Liability — a. In General. Admiralty has exclusive jurisdiction of a proceeding by ship-owners to limit their liability.[5]

b. Possession of Vessel Unnecessary. The possession of the vessel by the marshal or trustee is unnecessary for the purposes of limited-liability proceedings.[6]

7. Rights of Ownership and Possession — a. Circuit courts have no jurisdiction to enforce proceedings for limiting the liability of ship-owners, such jurisdiction being in the district courts. Elwell v. Geibei, 33 Fed. 71; The Mary Lord, 31 Fed. 416.

Jurisdiction not dependent on power to regulate commerce.— The act of congress limiting the liability of ship-owners in certain cases is not referable to that clause in the constitution giving power to regulate interstate commerce, but is a rule of admiralty procedure enacted under the clause granting admiralty jurisdiction, and therefore the district court has jurisdiction of a proceeding to limit the liability, for a maritime tort, of the owners of a ship customarily employed within the navigable waters of a state. The Tolchester, 42 Fed. 180; The Garden City, 26 Fed. 766 [following In re Long Island North Shore Pass., etc., Transp. Co., 5 Fed. 599]

Extent of jurisdiction.— The powers of an admiralty court in proceedings instituted by ship-owners to limit their liability are as extensive, and its remedies are as effective, as are those of a court of chancery, where its jurisdiction is invoked in an equitable proceeding. Possessory action by sheriff.— Where a sheriff has attached a vessel, which is afterward taken out of his custody and removed into another state, he can sue in admiralty to recover possession in the district court of the district into which the vessel has been removed. The Bonnie Doon, 36 Fed. 770.

Recovery on land of goods taken at sea.— Goods taken by pirates and sold upon land may be recovered from the purchaser by suit in admiralty. Davison v. Seal-skins, 2 Paine (U. S.) 324, 7 Fed. Cas. No. 3,661.

a time jurisdiction of petitory suits was abandoned, the same is now true of the English admiralty.[9]

(II) Equitable Rights Not Enforceable. The admiralty courts will enforce only the legal title or possession, however, and will not undertake to determine equitable rights or titles in such actions.[10]

b. Proceeds of Vessel or Cargo. Admiralty courts will entertain suits or petitions by the owners for the recovery of the proceeds of a vessel or her cargo sold under legal proceedings, when the same have been paid over without lawful authority[11] or are still in the custody of the court or its officers.[12]

c. Disagreement as to Employment of Vessel. Where equal part-owners of a vessel cannot agree concerning her employment, admiralty has jurisdiction, upon the application of either party, to compel a sale of the same and divide the proceeds between them,[13] but has not such jurisdiction at the instance of a minority interest,[14] although in the latter case it may require of the majority owners a stipulation for the safe return of the vessel.[15]

Offense against United States by foreign power.— Though the capture of an English vessel by a French vessel within the coast-line jurisdiction of the United States during the existence of hostilities between France and England is an offense against the United States as a neutral power, yet, as it is not necessary to bring the captured vessel within the territory of the captors in order to vest the right of property in the captors, admiralty will not entertain jurisdiction of a libel filed by the British owners of the captured vessel for the restoration thereof, as redress of the offense against the United States should be left in the first instance to the executive department of the government. Moxon v. The Brigantine Fanny, 2 Pet. Adm. 309, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 9,895.

Possessory action will not lie merely for the refusal of a collector of customs to issue papers to a vessel, though such vessel may have been temporarily prevented from navigating as the result of the collector's nonaction. Brent v. Thornton, 91 Fed. 546, 33 C. C. A. 666.

Suits between foreigners.—The English admiralty courts are averse to entertaining jurisdiction in suits between foreigners involving the title or possession of vessels, because to do so might result in depriving the parties of rights to which they are entitled by the laws of their own country as modified by statute or administered by their own courts (The Johann and Siegmund, Edw. Adm. 242; The Martin of Norfolk, 4 C. Rob. 293; The See Reuter, 1 Dods. 22), but where the courts are authorities of the home country and have passed upon the rights of parties under similar circumstances, the English courts will take jurisdiction (The See Reuter, 1 Dods. 22; The Martin of Norfolk, 4 C. Rob. 293; The Evangelistria, 2 P. D. 241).

8. Salvage. Admiralty courts exercise jurisdiction over salvage causes and causes in the nature of salvage, whether based on contract,[16] or arising independently thereof,[17] and whether the services were rendered in American waters or not.[18]

9. Torts — a. In General. The court of admiralty has jurisdiction in cases of maritime torts in personam as well as in rem,[19] without reference to the nationality of the vessel on board of which the tort may have been committed, or that of the parties to it,[20] and whether the wrong was committed by direct force or suffered in consequence of negligence or malfeasance where the remedy at common law is by an action on the case.[21]

Claim for use or destruction during voyage. — Admiralty jurisdiction does not extend to a claim by a part-owner dissenting from a voyage, for the use or destruction, during the voyage, of his share of the outfit. The remedy is in equity. The Marengo, 1 Lowell (U. S.) 52, 16 Fed. Cas. No. 9,065.

b. Test of Jurisdiction — (I) Rule Stated. In all cases of maritime torts the locality of the act is the test of admiralty cognizance; and whether the court has jurisdiction in any case depends upon whether the wrong and injury complained of was committed on the high seas or navigable waters.[22]

(II) Tort Originating on Land Consummated on Water. Where the active cause of the injury originates upon land, or is a structure or agency thereon, and the tort is consummated upon navigable water or upon a vessel thereon, admiralty has jurisdiction thereof.[23]

allowed by her permit, and fails to carry the required number of life-preservers, she is guilty of a marine tort, and a United States district court has jurisdiction of a libel in personam against her owners and master to recover the penalty prescribed by § 4500. Negligent towage or pilotage.—Damage resulting from negligent towage (The Steamboat Brooklyn, 2 Ben. (U. S.) 547, 4 Fed. Cas. No. 1,938) or pilotage (Sideracudi v. Mapes, 3 Fed. 873) is within the jurisdiction of admiralty.

Refusal to furnish accommodations to passenger.— The refusal of the officers of a vessel on the high seas to furnish a passenger with the accommodations to which he was entitled is a marine tort, for which such passenger may proceed in admiralty against the vessel without regard to any question of the jurisdiction of admiralty over a contract for land and water transportation, under which he has been taken on board. The Willamette Valley, 71 Fed. 712.

Refusal to give bill of lading.—The refusal of a master of a vessel in navigable waters to issue a bill of lading to vendors in whose name the goods were shipped, even though he had previously issued a bill of lading to the vendee, who absconded, is a maritime tort for which an action may be brought in the district court. The Markee, 14 Fed. 112 [affirming The Ferreri, 9 Fed. 468].

Seizure of vessel.— The seizure and detention of a vessel by force without legal authority is a maritime tort. Jervey v. The Carolina, 66 Fed. 1013; The Sloop Martha Anne, Olc. Adm. 18, 16 Fed. Cas. No. 9,146; American Ins. Co. v. Johnson, Blatchf. & H. Adm. 9, 1 Fed. Cas. No. 303. And so where the master of a vessel, without authority, took a lighter and neglected to return it, it was held that admiralty had jurisdiction in rem for the tort. The Florence, 2 Flipp. (U. S.) 56, 9 Fed. Cas. No. 4,880. But where the claimant had negotiated with the libellant for the purchase of certain coal-barges, and, being informed of the location and price and that he could have them if suitable, took possession at once, without advising the libellant, and the latter subsequently sold them to a third party and seeks by action to recover possession so as to carry out that contract, there is no such fraudulent taking by the claimant as will enable the libellant to maintain an action for a marine tort, and the action must be regarded as a possessory action only. Wood v. Two Barges, 46 Fed. 204.

Shaving the head of a stowaway for the mere purpose of putting a mark upon him is a maritime tort. Turbett v. Dunlevy, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,241.

S.) 150, 12 Fed. Cas. No. 6,477; Thomas v. Lane, 2 Sumn. (U. S.) 1, 23 Fed. Cas. No. 13,902. But see The Propeller Commerce, 1 Black (U. S.) 574, 17 L. ed. 107, to the effect that the admiralty jurisdiction in cases of marine torts depends on the place where service can be made in personam or in rem, and not upon the place where the tort was committed.

Arresting seamen on shore.— The wrongful arrest on shore of deserting seamen, by the procurement of the master, does not constitute a maritime tort. Bain v. Sandusky Transp. Co., 60 Fed. 912.

Obstruction of stream by bridge.— Admiralty has no jurisdiction of the offense of obstructing a navigable stream by a bridge. U. S. v. New Bedford Bridge, 1 Woodb. & M. (U. S.) 401, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 15,867.

23. Hermann v. Port Blakely Mill Co., 69 Fed. 646; The Normannia, 62 Fed. 469; Greenwood v. Westport, 60 Fed. 560; Oregon City Transp. Bridges.—Damage done to a vessel on navigable water by a bridge improperly constructed may be recovered by libel in admiralty. Oregon City Transp. Co. v. Columbia St. Bridge Co., 53 Fed. 549; Boston v. Crowley, 38 Fed. 202.

Careless loading of vessel.—Admiralty has jurisdiction of a libel to recover damages for personal injuries to a laborer working in the hold of a vessel, who was struck by lumber sent without warning through a chute by one working on the pier. Hermann v. Port Blakely Mill Co., 69 Fed. 646.

Defective wharf.— A claim against a wharf-owner for injury sustained by a vessel or cargo by reason of an alleged defect in the wharf is within the jurisdiction of admiralty. Ball v. Trenholm, 45 Fed. 588; The City of Lincoln, 25 Fed. 835; Leonard v. Decker, 22 Fed. 741. So, where a steamship is given the quay-berth in a wharf previously occupied by another, and the latter is moored outside, with no means of communication with the wharf other than across the deck of the inner vessel, negligence in permitting the deck of the inner vessel to be in a condition unsafe for passing over it to the outside vessel is a marine tort within the jurisdiction of the admiralty courts. Anderson v. The E. B. Ward, Jr., 38 Fed. 44.

Drawbridge.— An injury to a vessel from negligence in operating a drawbridge is a maritime tort, and a court of admiralty will entertain an action therefor. Greenwood v. Westport, 60 Fed. 560, 53 Fed. 824; Hill v. Board of Chosen Freeholders, 45 Fed. 260; Assante v. Charleston Bridge Co., 40 Fed. 765; Etheridge v. City of Philadelphia, 26 Fed. 43.

False representations.— An action based on false representations in regard to a voyage is within the jurisdiction of the admiralty, though such representations were made on land after the contract of carriage was entered into, when they were made with reference to the contract of carriage and the damages alleged to have arisen from them occurred on the sea. The Normannia, 62 Fed. 469.

The forcible deportation of a citizen to a foreign country in an American ship commanded by an American master, in pursuance or execution of a sentence of banishment of an illegal and self-constituted body of men, is a marine tort. Gallagher v. The Yankee, Hoffm. Op. 456, 9 Fed. Cas. No. 5,196; Barque Yankee v. Gallagher, McAll. (U. S.) 467, 30 Fed. Cas. No. 18,124.

Kidnapping.— A parent may maintain a libel in admiralty for the kidnapping of his child and carrying him beyond the sea. Tillmore v. Moore, 5 Hughes (U. S.) 217, 4 Fed. 231; Steele v. Thacher, 1 Ware (U. S.) 85, 22 Fed. Cas. No. 13,348; Plummer v. Webb, 4 Mason (U. S.) 380, 19 Fed. Cas. No. 11,233.

Leaving piles in the bed of a tidal river so that a ship is thereby injured is a tort cognizable in admiralty. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co. v. Philadelphia, etc., Steam Towboat Co., 23 How. (U. S.) 209, 16 L. ed. 433. And so the United States admiralty courts have jurisdiction of a libel in personam against an American corporation for injuries received by a foreign vessel in a foreign port, by a concealed obstruction at a dock owned by such corporation. Panama R. Co. v. Napier Shipping Co., 166 U. S. 280, 17 S. Ct. 572, 41 L. ed. 1004.

Piers.— Admiralty has jurisdiction of an action for injuries to a vessel by collision with a pier erected, without legal authority, within the navigable channel of a river. Northwestern Union Packet Co. v. Atlee, 2 Dill. (U. S.) 479, 18 Fed. Cas. No. 10,341.

There is a clear distinction between torts arising from the collision of boats with structures placed in the navigable bed of a river, and torts resulting from collisions of boats and vessels with structures on land, whether immediately along the shore or not. Torts of the former class are within the admiralty jurisdiction, and torts of the latter class are of common-law cognizance; and whether the structures are solid or floating, realty or personalty, firmly fixed to the bed of the river or otherwise, does not affect such jurisdiction. The Arkansas, 5 McCrary (U. S.) 364, 17 Fed. 383.

Bridges.— Admiralty has no jurisdiction of an action for an injury to a bridge by collision with a vessel. The John C. Sweeney, 55 Fed. 540; Milwaukee v. The Curtis, 37 Fed. 705; The Neil Cochran, Brown Adm. 162, 14 Fed. Cas. No. 7,996; The Savannah, 21 Fed. Cas. No. 12,384; Chicago v. Schooner Queen City, 17 Ill. App. 203.

Buildings.— The cause of action for injuries to a building on land by a vessel is not a maritime tort of which the federal courts have jurisdiction. Johnson v. Chicago, etc., Elevator Co., 119 U. S. 388, 7 S. Ct. 254, 30 L. ed. 447 [affirming 105 Ill. 462]; The Plymouth, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 20, 18 L. ed. 125; The Arkansas, 5 McCrary (U. S.) 364, 17 Fed. 383.

Derrick.— Admiralty cannot take jurisdiction of a libel against a vessel for damages to a derrick sustained by a collision, where the derrick, engaged in the construction of a lighthouse, was supported by the land at a place surrounded and covered by waters. The Schooner Maud Webster, 8 Ben. (U. S.) 547, 16 Fed. Cas. No. 9,302.

Log-boom.— A boom constructed to detain logs passing down a navigable river is a structure pertaining to the adjacent land as much as a wharf or building erected thereon; and assuming that it extends no farther out than the landowner, with due regard to navigation, might properly extend it, a wrongful injury to it is not a marine injury, and cannot be redressed in a court of admiralty. The Brig City of Erie v. Canfield, 27 Mich. 479.

Marine railway.— An action for injuries to a marine railway, the upper end of which is securely fastened to the land, does not lie in the admiralty courts, although the ways run down below the ebb and flow of the tide, to facilitate the transfer of vessels from the water to the shore. The Professor Morse, 23 Fed. 803.

Personal injuries received on shore, although caused by negligence originating on a

c. Particular Torts — (I) Personal Injuries. The admiralty courts have jurisdiction of actions for personal injuries to seamen, passengers, and others lawfully on board vessels upon navigable waters, whether the result of direct force or consequential injury,[25] but such actions will not be entertained for merely nominal damages in cases not involving any subject-matter beyond the claim for damages.[26]

(II) Death by Wrongful Act. It is well settled that, independent of statute, no action arises either at common law or under the general maritime law for wrongfully causing the death of another,[27] but a right of action has been created therefor by statute in nearly all of the states of the Union, and within the territory covered by such statutes the admiralty courts take jurisdiction of such causes,[28] ship, are not within the jurisdiction of admiralty. Price v. The Belle of the Coast, 66 Fed. 62; The Mary Garrett, 63 Fed. 1009; The H. S. Pickands, 42 Fed. 239; The Mary Stewart, 5 Hughes (U. C. A. 375] holding that where the libellant, a workman on a vessel lying at a dock, attempted to leave the ship by means of a ladder, which by reason of the master's negligence was not secured properly to the ship's rail, and therefore fell, the libellant being thrown to the dock and injured, it was inferable that the master's breach of duty took effect upon the libellant while he was upon the ship; and, although his physical injury was completed by his fall upon the dock, a court of admiralty had jurisdiction.

Wharves.— Admiralty has no jurisdiction of a suit against either the vessel or her owner for damage to a wharf or pier by a vessel. The Hoxby, 95 Fed. 170, 94 Fed. 1016; Homer Ramsdell Transp. Co. v. Compagnie Générale Transatlantique, 63 Fed. 845; The C. Accame, 20 Fed. 642; The Ottawa, Brown Adm. 356, 18 Fed. Cas. No. 10,616. But see New York City v. Hichland, 6 Ben. (U. S.) 289, 18 Fed. Cas. No. 10,196, wherein it was held that a libel for damage to a pier, averring that the pier was within navigable waters, and not showing that it was a part of the land, stated a case of admiralty jurisdiction.

But see Murray v. Donnelly, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 9,958, 3 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 41, to the effect that admiralty will not take jurisdiction of a libel in personam for assault committed against a mariner by the officers of the vessel, if the case is of doubtful merits, and must be established by unquestionable proofs, but will remit libellant to his remedy at common law.

Injuries to minor son.— A libel may be maintained by the father in the admiralty for the consequential damages resulting from an assault and battery of his minor child on the high seas. But, to support the action, he must show either actual damage or that which is held to be such by intendment of law. Plummer v. Webb, 1 Ware (U. S.) 69, 19 Fed. Cas. No. 11,234.

In some of the earlier cases, however, it was held that admiralty would entertain actions for causing death under the civil law and independent of statute. Holmes v. Oregon, etc., R. Co., 6 Sawy. (U. S.) 262, 5 Fed. 75; Hollyday v. The Steamer David Reeves, 5 Hughes (U. S.) 89, 12 Fed. Cas. No. 6,625; The Steamboat Charles Morgan, 2 Flipp. (U. S.) 274, 5 Fed. Cas. And see The Garland, 5 Fed. 924, to the effect that although by the common law, and apparently also by the civil law, no action will lie to recover for the death of a human being, it seems that in admiralty a libel by a father to recover for the loss of the services of his minor son, killed in a collision, will be sustained.

and where the local law creates a lien therefor a libel in rem will lie against the vessel.[29]

F. Raising Question and Waiver of Jurisdiction. Admiralty will entertain a libel where there is an apparent jurisdiction on the face of it and no opposition;[30] but at any stage of a proceeding in admiralty, until final hearing, the question of jurisdiction is open.[31] A demurrer is the proper remedy where it appears from the libel that the court has no jurisdiction of the case.[32] Where the want of jurisdiction does not so appear, the question of jurisdiction should not be disposed of on motion, but on hearing.[33]

In England it is held that courts of admiralty have jurisdiction of such cases in personam (The Corsair, 145 U. S. 335, 12 S. Ct. 949, 36 L. ed. 727; Ex p. Gordon, 104 U. S. 515, 26 L. ed. 814; The Orwell, 13 P. D. 80; The Gertrude, 12 P. D. 204; The Bernina, 12 P. D. 58, 11 P. D. 31, 13 App. Cas. 1) but not in rem (The Corsair, 145 U. S. 335, 12 S. Ct. 949, 36 L. ed. 727; The Vera Cruz, 9 P. D. 88, 96, 10 App. Cas. 59 [overruling The Franconia, 2 P. D. 163]; Smith v. Brown, L. R. 6 Q. B. 729; The Explorer, L. R. 3 A. & E. 289; The Sylph, L. R. 2 A. & E. 24; The Guldfaxe, L. R. 2 A. & E. 325; The Steamship Beta v. Rollando, L. R. 2 P. C. 447).

In Canada the jurisdiction is in doubt, but will probably be maintained. Robinson v. Detroit, etc., Steam Nav. Co., 73 Fed. 883, 43 U. S. App. 190, 20 C. C. A. 86; Monaghan v. Horn, 7 Can. Supreme Ct. 409.

Death on high seas.— It follows from the rule stated in the text that a right created by the legislature of a state can have no extra-territorial force so far as their actions are concerned, and that neither the courts of admiralty nor those of common law will entertain jurisdiction of an action for damages for wrongfully causing death upon the high seas, although it may occur upon the vessel of a nation whose law creates a right of action in such cases. The Alaska, 130 U. S. 201, 9 S. Ct. 461, 32 L. ed. 923; Rundell v. La Campagnie Generale Transatlantique, 100 Fed. 655, 40 C. C. A. 625; The E. B. Ward, Jr., 16 Fed. 255; Armstrong v. Beadle, 5 Sawy. (U. S.) 484, 1 Fed. Cas. No. 541. But see The E. B. Ward, Jr., 17 Fed. 456, holding that where the statute of a state gives a right of action for wrongfully causing death, admiralty will entertain jurisdiction of the tort of the vessel upon the high seas resulting in death, where her owners reside in that state and the home port of the vessel is therein, the vessel thereby being a part of its territory.

Effect of state statute of limitations.— A state statute limiting the time for which the action causing death may be brought conditions the right, and controls in the admiralty court. The Harrisburg, 119 U. S. 199, 7 S. Ct. 140, 30 L. ed. 358; Laidlaw v. Oregon, R., etc., Co., 81 Fed. 876, 26 C. C. A. 665.

This rule applies in its full extent, however, only where the want of jurisdiction springs from the subject-matter of the action (Benedict Adm. (3d ed.) § 368). Thus a plea to the merits waives any irregularity existing on account of filing the libel at a time when the vessel is not within the district (St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. v. The Lake Superior, 21 Fed. Cas. No. 12,244, 7 Chic. Leg. N. 259, 5 Ins. L. J. 73), or, in case of seizure, an exception based on the place of seizure (The Sloop Abby, 1 Mason (U. S.) 360, 1 Fed. Cas. No. 14) or, on a libel for wages, an exception on the ground that the wages were earned by a foreign seaman on a foreign vessel (The Brucklay Castle, 13 Sawy. (U. S.) 521, 36 Fed. 923) and so, too, after joining issue upon a libel in admiralty in rem, and filing a cross-bill asking for affirmative relief against the libellants in personam, an exception or plea of the want of an admiralty lien comes too late (The Fifeshire, 11 Fed. 743).

Effect of filing stipulation.— A stipulation filed to obtain the release of a vessel is not a waiver of the question as to its original liability to seizure in admiralty. The Fidelity, 16 Blatchf. V. PROCEDURE AND PRACTICE.

A. By What Governed — 1. In General. The procedure and practice of the admiralty courts in the United States does not conform to the laws of the state where the court is held, but, like the equity practice, it is uniform throughout the United States and conforms in general to the admiralty practice in other nations.[34] The process and methods of procedure in such courts are even more free from technical rules than is the case with courts of equity.[35]

2. Rules of Court. The procedure in the admiralty courts is largely governed and regulated by rules made therefor by the supreme court in pursuance of congressional authority;[36] and in cases not provided for by the statutes or the rules laid down by the supreme court the inferior courts also have power to make rules for the regulation of their practice.[37]

B. Kinds and Nature of Remedies — 1. In General. There are two kinds of actions in admiralty, which are known as suits in personam and suits in rem.[38]

2. Suits In Personam. Suits in personam are those brought directly against persons as defendants to enforce a personal liability, wherein the relief sought is against the individual without reference to any particular property or thing;[39] courts exercise jurisdiction should be raised by a petition by the marshal, and not by a plea to the jurisdiction by a party in whose favor the marshal held process. The Steamer Circassian, 1 Ben. (U. S.) 128, 5 Fed. Cas. No. 2,721.

Causes arising abroad.— Suits brought in admiralty for causes arising abroad should be tried according to the practice and principles of the courts of admiralty of this country wholly irrespective of any local law. The Eagle, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 15, 19 L. ed. 365.

Right to submit to arbitration.— There is nothing in the nature of the admiralty jurisdiction which prevents parties in an admiralty court from submitting their case by rule of the court to arbitration. An award under such arbitration is to be construed and its effect determined by the same general principles which would govern it in a court of common law or of equity. U. S. v. Farragut, 22 Wall. (U. S.) 406, 22 L. ed. 879.
